The prospectus should present full and fair disclosure about the registrant in factual terms. This sort of presentation often conflicts with the desire of the issuer and the underwriters to present the issuer in the most favorable light possible in order to sell the securities. The most persuasive response to this type of pressure is to remind the client that the Securities Act imposes stringent civil liabilities upon the company, directors, underwriters, accountants and certain other persons for any untrue statement of a material fact or omission of a material fact. n10 A sales-oriented document may distort material facts and may result in exposure to these liabilities. The answer that such sales statements constitute mere "puffing" may be no answer. As Franklin D. Roosevelt stated in the part of his message of March 29, 1933 dealing with the Securities Act: "This proposal adds to the ancient rule of caveat emptor, the further doctrine 'let the seller also beware.' It puts the burden of telling the whole truth on the seller." n11 On that same point, the Commission stated:

The concept of 'puffing' is derived from the doctrine of caveat emptor and arises primarily in the sale of tangibles where it appears that examination by the purchaser may offset exaggerated statements and expressions of opinion by the salesman. It can have little application to the merchandising of securities. Particularly [this is] true under the anti-fraud provisions of the securities laws, which were designed to protect against sharp and inequitable practices whether or not they meet the requisites of common law fraud. Indeed, a basic purpose of this remedial legislation was to supplement the doctrine of caveat emptor with high standards of responsibility for sellers of securities. n12

There is a fairly common misconception that supplying the information called for by the registration form satisfies all disclosure obligations. This is definitely not the case. In short, the prospective investor is entitled to all material information that will permit an informed judgment, whether or not that information is called for by the registration form. n13 The investor is entitled to full and fair disclosure.

Moreover, the literal correctness of a statement is unimportant if the general effect of the statement is to present a misleading impression. By way of illustration, suppose that the portion of a new oil company's prospectus dealing with management and background states that, prior to his association with the company, "Mr. Jones was associated with the JSD Refining Company." Suppose further that Mr. Jones was associated with the JSD Refining Company in the capacity of a service station attendant. It is obvious that the statement that "Mr. Jones was associated with the JSD Refining Company," standing alone, conveys the misleading impression that he was associated with JSD in an executive capacity. n14 Similarly, presentation of the material in the prospectus in a way that facts bearing upon the same subject matter are segregated to conceal their relevance is less than full and fair disclosure. n15

Troublesome questions may arise with respect to the use in the prospectus of estimates of earning power, dividend prospects, projections and appraisals of physical property because of the difficulty of fully and fairly disclosing underlying assumptions and conditions. Generally speaking, however, statements with respect to future earning power and dividend prospects and subsequent reaffirmations of those statements will not be deemed false or misleading if the statements were made or reaffirmed with a reasonable basis and in good faith. n16 Notwithstanding the provisions of this rule, however, many issuers are reluctant to volunteer forward-looking information.

The prospectus should contain clear language. Technical or complicated legal descriptions are not appropriate. As the Commission has observed, "The prospectus is designed to be read by people making business judgments. Meticulousness, which lawyers use in such documents as corporate indentures, is out of place in a prospectus. The resulting verbiage is without meaning except to those skilled in legalistic language." n17 Similarly, "meaningless, high-sounding, pseudo-scientific phrases designed principally to impress the uninformed" may be misleading. n18 In sum, the purpose of the prospectus is to inform investors. Hence, the information set forth in the prospectus should be presented in clear, concise, understandable fashion. Avoid unnecessary and irrelevant details, repetition or the unnecessary use of technical language. The complex nature of the prospectus frequently makes it an ineffective communication tool for the average investor. Too often, its principal value is as a communication line between the issuer and the underwriter; it is a prospectus for the Commission, not the public. The Commission, acutely aware of this problem for many years, issued a release in 1970 encouraging the use of brevity and conciseness without sacrificing adequate disclosure for investors. n19 In the same release, the Commission issued a public invitation to lawyers, accountants, analysts, broker-dealers and other persons to offer comments and suggestions. The determination to make the prospectus a more readable and understandable document culminated in the Commission's major revision of prospectus content and presentation in 1973.

The Commission, continuing to seek greater clarity in the drafting of prospectuses, implemented "plain English" requirements in 1998 for the introduction to the prospectus. n20 Though the plain English rules apply only to the cover page, summary and risk factors section of the prospectus, registrants must prepare the entire prospectus using the following standards:

- Present information in clear, concise sections, paragraphs and sentences, and wherever possible, use short, explanatory sentences and bullet lists;
- Use descriptive headings and subheadings; and
- Avoid frequent reliance on glossaries or defined terms as the primary means of explaining information. Registrants should use defined terms only if the meaning is unclear from the context, and a glossary only if it facilitates understanding of the disclosure. n21

Registrants should avoid the following:

- Legalistic or overly complex presentations that make the substance of the disclosure difficult to understand;
- Vague "boilerplate" explanations that are imprecise and readily subject to different interpretations;
- Complex information copied directly from legal documents without any clear and concise explanation of the provision; and
- Disclosure repeated in different sections of the document that increases the size of the document but does not readily enhance the quality of the information. n22

On the cover page and the summary and risk factors sections of the prospectus, registrants must use:

- Short sentences;
- Definite, concrete, everyday language;
- Active voice;
- Tabular presentation of complex information;
- No legal or business jargon; and
- No multiple negatives. n23

Registrants must also design these sections to make them inviting to the reader. Registrants may use pictures, logos, charts, graphs or other design elements so long as the design is not misleading and the required information is clear. Registrants are encouraged to use tables, schedules, charts and graphic illustrations (drawn to scale) of the results of operations, balance sheet or other financial data that present the data in an understandable manner. Any presentation must be consistent with the financial statements and non-financial information in the prospectus. The intent of the plain English rules is not to reduce or offset the substantive disclosure requirements. Rather, it is to ensure that the required full and fair disclosure is in a form easily understood by the average investor. In addition to these general drafting guidelines, the Commission made several specific amendments to Regulations S-K and S-B to improve the readability of the forms. n24

[a] Guides for Preparation and Filing of Registration Statements. In 1968, the Commission published "Guides for Preparation and Filing of Registration Statements" (hereinafter, "the Guides") n25 which were based upon, and closely followed, proposals outlined in two previous releases. n26 In adopting these guides, the Commission observed that they represented "policies and practices followed by the Commission's Division of Corporation Finance," but that they were "subject to review and modification from time to time" and did not "purport to furnish complete criteria for the preparation of registration statements." n27

In 1972-73, the Commission issued releases containing major revisions to prospectus content and presentation. n28 These revisions were "designed to result in disclosure of more meaningful information concerning all registrants and to communicate more effectively to the investing public the economic realities concerning new registrants." Prior to 1980, the Guides had never been the subject of an overall review. Consistent with the Commission's sunset review of existing rules and regulations under the Securities Act and the recommendation of the Advisory Committee on Corporate Disclosure, n29 the Commission undertook a sunset review of the Guides. The review, part of the Commission's integrated disclosure program, was undertaken in three stages. In 1979, the Commission issued a concept release, soliciting comments to assist in reevaluating the Guides. n30 In response to comments, the Commission proposed the deletion of certain Guides and the centralization of others into the rules and regulations under the Securities Act. n31 In 1981, the Commission published the final integration proposals concerning the Guides. n32

In 1982, the Commission, in conclusion of its sunset review of the Guides and reorganization of Regulation S-K as the repository for content requirements for disclosure documents filed with the Commission under the Securities Act and the Exchange Act:

- (1) rescinded all but five of the Guides;
- (2) incorporated the substance of the Guides relating to disclosure requirements into Regulation S-K;

(3) incorporated the Guides relating to procedural matters into Regulation C and the General Rules under the Securities and Exchange Acts, particularly Regulation 12B under the Exchange Act; and

(4) relocated the remaining Guides concerning disclosure by registrants in particular industries in a new section of Regulation S-K under the heading "List of Industry Guides." n33

[3] Integrated Disclosure

In 1982, the Commission, pursuant to its integrated disclosure program under the Securities Act and the Exchange Act, adopted: n34

(1) new Forms S-1, S-2 and S-3, which constitute the basic framework for registration statements under the Securities Act; n35

(2) an expanded and reorganized Regulation S-K providing for the uniform disclosure requirements for documents filed with the Commission under the Securities Act and the Exchange Act; n36

(3) revised procedural requirements under Regulation C and Exchange Act Regulation 12B, which update and coordinate procedures for filing registration statements and reports with the Commission under the Securities Act and the Exchange Act, respectively; n37

(4) Rule 415 governing the registration of securities to be sold in a continuous or delayed offering ("shelf" registration); n38

(5) Rule 176 identifying circumstances affecting the determination of what constitutes reasonable investigation and reasonable grounds for belief under Section 11 of the Securities Act; n39

(6) Rule 436(g) permitting disclosure of security ratings in registration statements; n40

(7) revisions of Forms S-8, S-11, S-14 [replaced by Form S-4] and S-15 [replaced by Form S-4] and Rules 135, 138, 175 and 412 conforming the forms and rules with Regulation S-K; n41 and

(8) technical amendments to Securities Act and Exchange Act rules, forms, and schedules rescinding obsolete forms. n42

With the 2005 Rules, the Commission continued the evolution of the integrated disclosure program under the Securities Act and the Exchange Act by adopting, among other things:

(1) Rule 430B which implements liberalized prospectus requirements for shelf registration statements for registered securities offerings other than those in connection with business combination transactions and exchange offers;

(2) Rule 430C which implements similar liberalized prospectus requirements for offerings not covered by Rule 430B;

(3) amendments to Rule 415 concerning the limitation on the amount of securities that can be registered, permitting immediate takedowns off of shelf registration statements and "at-the-market" offerings of equity securities;

- (4) revisions to issuer undertakings pursuant to Item 512 of Regulation S-K;
- (5) "automatic shelf registration" for offerings on Form S-3 and F-3 for securities offerings of certain issuers who meet eligibility conditions, other than those in connection with business combination transactions and exchange offers; and
- (6) Rule 172, which sets up an "access equals delivery" model for delivery of a final prospectus. n43

In approaching the integrated disclosure system for guidance as to the applicable requirements for registration of securities or the preparation of registration statements or reports, the registrant must look first to the registration and report forms to determine the proper form to be used. After identifying the proper form, the registrant is directed by the form to the relevant portions of Regulation S-K for the specific disclosure requirements for each form. After identifying the disclosure requirements, the registrant must look to Regulation C for the procedures to be followed in preparing and filing the particular registration statement.

[a] Regulation S-K. Regulation S-K is the principal source of content requirements for registration statements and reports filed with the Commission under the Securities Act and the Exchange Act. n44 It contains ten major sections: (1) General; (2) Business; (3) Securities of the Registrant; (4) Financial Information; (5) Management and Certain Security Holders; (6) Registration Statement and Prospectus Provisions; (7) Exhibits; (8) Miscellaneous; (9) List of Industry Guides; and (10) Roll-Up Transactions.

Regulation S-K is not self-executing. The reporting of the information specified in Regulation S-K is required only to the extent a form or schedule governing a document specifically directs inclusion of the information prescribed by an item of Regulation S-K. There are two exceptions to this general rule:

- (1) the Commission's policies on projections n45 and security ratings n46 apply to all disclosure documents regardless of whether there is a direct reference in a form or schedule to the specific provision of Regulation S-K setting forth the policies and whether the form or schedule incorporates any item of Regulation S-K; and
- (2) the industry Guides apply to the disclosure documents indicated in the Guides regardless of whether the applicable form or schedule refers to Regulation S-K or to an industry Guide. n47

Registrants, therefore, must report the information called for by the Commission's policies on projections and security ratings and by the industry Guides whenever appropriate, even if the applicable form or schedule does not specifically provide that the information be reported.

Regulation C is organized to locate rules specifically relating to registration statements for investment companies and business development companies under separate headings. n49

[c] Commission Policy on Projections. n50 Paragraph (b) of the general section of Regulation S-K (17 C.F.R. § 229.10) contains the Commission's policy on disclosure of projections. Under this policy, the Commission encourages the use in documents specified in Rule 175 of management's good faith projections of future economic performance that have a reasonable basis and are presented in an appropriate format. n51

In determining the appropriate format for projections, the financial items to be projected, the period to be covered and the manner of presentation to be used must be considered. The projections should also be accompanied by disclosures that facilitate investor understanding of the bases for, and the limitations of, the projections, including the assumptions that, in management's opinion, are most significant to the projections or are the key factors upon which the financial results of the enterprise depend. Because of the practical difficulties and the potential liability associated with fully and fairly disclosing all material assumptions, contingencies and conditions, most issuers are reluctant to furnish this type of forward-looking information in a prospectus or in other SEC-filed documents.

The provision of projections and other forward-looking statements was intended to be facilitated by the Private Securities Litigation Reform Act of 1995 (the "Act"), adopted as Section 27A of the Securities Act. The Act creates a safe harbor for certain forward-looking statements made by, or on behalf of, companies subject to the reporting requirements of the Exchange Act; forward-looking statements made in initial public offering documents, however, are expressly excluded from the safe harbor protection of the Act. Under the Act, a forward-looking statement means:

- (1) a statement containing a projection of revenues, income (including income loss), earnings (including earnings loss) per share, capital expenditures, dividends, capital structure or other financial items;
- (2) a statement of the plans and objectives of management for future operations, including plans or objectives relating to the products or services of the issuer;
- (3) a statement of future economic performance, including any such statement contained in a discussion and analysis of financial condition or in the results of operations;
- (4) any statement of the assumptions underlying any of the foregoing;
- (5) any report issued by an outside reviewer, to the extent that the report assesses a forward-looking statement made by the registrant; or
- (6) a statement containing a projection or estimate of such other items as may be specified by rule or regulation of the Commission. n52

Generally, the Act provides that an entity will not be liable with respect to a forward-looking statement to the extent that (1) a forward-looking statement is identified as a forward-looking statement and is accompanied by meaningful cautionary statements identifying substantive factors that could cause actual results to differ materially from those projected, or (2) the executive officers did not have actual knowledge that the forward-looking statement was materially false or misleading. n53

If the forward-looking statement was made orally, no liability will attach if the statement is accompanied by a cautionary statement representing that it is forward-looking and that the actual results could differ materially from those projected, or it is accompanied by an oral statement that additional information concerning factors that could cause actual results to differ materially from those made in the oral forward looking statement is contained in a readily available written document, and the information in such written document is a cautionary statement that satisfies the conditions set forth in (1) or (2) above. n54

The Act's safe harbor provisions do not apply to statements in:

- Financial statements prepared in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles;
- Investment company registration statements;
- Connection with a tender offer;

- Connection with an initial public offering;
- Connection with an offering by, or relating to the operations of, a partnership, limited liability company or a direct participation investment program; or
- A Schedule 13D filing under the Exchange Act. n55

[d] Commission Policy on Security Ratings n56 Paragraph (c) of the general section of Regulation S-K contains the Commission's policy on disclosure of security ratings, which permits registrants to disclose, on a voluntary basis, ratings assigned by:

- (1) rating organizations to classes of debt securities, convertible debt securities and preferred stock, in registration statements and periodic reports; and
- (2) nationally recognized statistical rating organizations, n57 in a communication deemed not to be a prospectus (e.g., a "tombstone advertisement") pursuant to Rule 134. n58

Rule 436(g) states that a rating assigned to debt and convertible debt securities and preferred stock by a rating organization is not part of a registration statement for purposes of Sections 7 and 11. n59

Registrants should consider disclosing in an amendment or additional filing with the Commission any material change in a security rating included in a registration statement or report.

[4] EDGAR

All domestic companies are required to file certain documents, including registration statements and prospectuses, n60 with the Commission electronically via EDGAR. n61

Exhibits to these documents that have not been previously filed with the Commission, as well as any amendments to these documents must also be filed in an electronic format. If an issuer cannot comply with the electronic filing requirements without undue burden or expense, the issuer may apply for a continuing hardship exemption with the Commission, which may be granted in the Commission's discretion. n62 A temporary hardship exemption is available if an issuer experiences unanticipated technical difficulties that prevent the timely preparation and submission of an electronic filing. n63 If a company fails to file a required document electronically and cannot rely on a hardship exemption, the issuer will become ineligible to use Forms S-3, S-8, F-2 and F-3, will have its ability to incorporate paper documents by reference restricted and will not be able to toll certain time periods associated with tender offers and Rule 14e-1(e) under the Exchange Act. n64 The Commission has published an EDGAR Filer Manual which sets forth the manner in which an issuer should make electronic submissions. n65

Documents that must be submitted in paper format and may not be filed electronically, include:

- Confidential treatment requests and the information with respect to which confidential treatment is requested;
- Preliminary proxy materials and information statements with respect to a matter specified in Item 14 of Schedule 14A for which confidential treatment has been requested in the manner prescribed by Rule 14a-6(e)(2) or Rule 14c-5(d)(2);
- Supplemental information, if the submitter requests that the information be protected from public disclosure under the Freedom of Information Act pursuant to a request for confidential treatment under Rule 83 or if the submitter requests that the information be returned after staff review and the information is of the type typically returned by the staff pursuant to Rule 418(b) or Rule 12b-4 of Regulation 12B;

- Shareholder proposals and all related correspondence submitted pursuant to Rule 14a-8 of the Exchange Act; and
- No-action and interpretive letter requests. n66

(n2)Footnote 2. Section 5 of the Securities Act. The Securities Act is reprinted in the Securities Primary Law Sourcebook, Volume A, Section B (Matthew Bender).

Section 5 provides that, prior to the effective date of a registration statement, no person may, directly or indirectly, use any means or instruments of interstate commerce:

- (1) to sell any security through the use of a prospectus or otherwise; or
- (2) to carry or cause to be carried any security for the purpose of sale or delivery after sale.

Section 5(a).

After the filing of the registration statement, it is unlawful to carry or transmit in interstate commerce any prospectus relating to any security unless the prospectus meets the requirements of Section 10 of the Securities Act. Similarly, it is unlawful, after filing the registration statement, to carry or cause to be carried in interstate commerce any security for the purpose of sale or delivery after sale, unless the security is accompanied or preceded by a prospectus meeting the Section 10(a) requirements. Section 5(b).

Section 5(c) makes unlawful the use of the mails or any instrumentality of interstate commerce to offer to sell or buy any security through the use or medium of a prospectus or otherwise unless a registration statement for the security has been filed, or while the registration is the subject of a refusal order, stop order or (prior to the effective date of registration) any public proceeding under Section 8 of the Securities Act.

Private civil liability for violations of Section 5 is provided for in Section 12(1), discussed in § 9.03 infra. See Russo v. Bache Halsey Stuart Shields, Inc., 554 F. Supp. 613, 621 (N.D. Ill. 1981) .

(n7)Footnote 7. Section 2(8) of the Securities Act defines the term "registration statement" as meaning "the statement provided for in section 6, and includes any amendment thereto and any report, document or memorandum filed as part of such statement or incorporated therein by reference."

Rule 404(a) provides that a "registration statement shall consist of the facing sheet of the applicable form; a prospectus containing the information called for by Part I ... ; the information, list of exhibits, undertakings and signatures required to be set forth in Part II ... ; financial statements and schedules; exhibits; any other information or documents filed as part of the registration statement; and all documents or information incorporated by reference in the foregoing (whether or not required to be filed)." The prospectus must contain the information called for by all of the items of Part I of the applicable form. No reference is necessary for inapplicable items, and negative answers to any item in Part I may be omitted. Rule 404(c). The Securities Act also provides for the contents of the prospectus. See Section 10(a). The Commission is empowered to prescribe such other information as it "may by rules or regulations require[d] as being necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors." Section 10(c).

(n8)Footnote 8. "A copy of the prospectus may be filed as a part of the registration statement in lieu of furnishing the information in item-and-answer form." Rule 404(c). "The information required in a prospectus need not follow the order of the items or other requirements in the form." Rule 421(a).

Furthermore, Section 8(d) empowers the Commission to suspend the effectiveness of the registration statement upon a finding that it contains material misstatements or omissions.

TSC Industries, Inc. v. Northway, 426 U.S. 438, 449 ; see also Basic Inc. v. Levinson, 485 U.S. 224 (1988) (definition of "material" set forth in TSC Industries adopted for purposes of Section 10(b) of the Exchange Act).

"The registration forms promulgated by us are guides intended to assist registrants in discharging their statutory duty of full disclosure. They are not and cannot possibly be exhaustive enumerations of each and every item material to investors in the particular circumstances relevant to a specific offering. The kaleidoscopic variety of economic life precludes any attempt at such an enumeration. The preparation of a registration statement is not satisfied, as registrant's position suggests, by a mechanical process of responding narrowly to the specific items of the applicable registration form. On the contrary, Rule 408 under the Securities Act makes clear to prospective registrants that: 'In addition to the information expressly required to be included in a registration statement, there shall be added such further material information, if any, as may be necessary to make the required statements, in the light of the circumstances under which they were made, not misleading.' The Division of Corporate Finance and the Office of the Chief Accountant have expressed the view that exclusive reliance on quantitative benchmarks to assess materiality in preparing financial statements is inappropriate; misstatements are not immaterial simply because they fall beneath a quantitative benchmark. Many prospectuses are lengthy and complex and while they may be accurate and complete, and useful for financial analysts and sophisticated investors, they may be unintelligible to the average investor. In such cases, such documents fail to achieve their statutory purpose of providing full and fair disclosure to investors.

Similarly, the Commission stated:

In order to make prospectuses more readable and understandable, and therefore more useful, registrants should limit their length and complexity by careful organization of the material, appropriate arrangement and subordination of information, use of tables and the avoidance of prolix or technical language and unnecessary detail.

In addition, Items 201, 202, 301, 302, 303, 402, 503, and 512 of Regulation S-K, discussed in § 7.03[2], [3] infra, were revised to reflect the adoption of an integrated disclosure system for foreign private issuers. See § 7.07 infra. (n49)Footnote 49. Rules 445, 446 and 447, which governed registration statements filed in connection with securities offered through competitive bidding, were eliminated by the Commission on July 15, 1996 as part of the Commission's disclosure simplification process. The Commission stated that these rules are no longer needed because issuers may use Rule 430A to satisfy filing obligations when they engage in competitive bidding.

(n56)Footnote 56. In July 2008 the SEC began seeking comments on whether to require disclosure of security ratings assigned by credit rating agencies to classes of debt securities, convertible debt securities and preferred stock. Until any final amendments are adopted, the current Commission policy on security ratings remains in effect. Security Ratings, Securities Act Release No. 8940, Securities Exchange Act Release No. 58071 (July 1, 2008).

(n57)Footnote 57. The phrase "nationally recognized statistical rating organization" (NRSRO) is stated in Rules 436 and 134 to have the same meaning as in the Commission's uniform net capital rule (Exchange Act Rule 15c3-1(c)(2)(vi)(F)), discussed in Federal Securities Exchange Act of 1934, A.A. Sommer, Jr., General Editor, § 3.08 (Matthew Bender). In connection with the adoption of Rules 436 and 134, some commentators objected that the net capital rule does not contain a specific definition of NRSRO. The Commission, as an alternative to a definition of an NRSRO, determined that the following entities are acceptable to the Commission and its staff as NRSROs under the net capital rule:

(1) Standard & Poor's Corporation;

(2) Moody's Investors Services, Inc.;

(3) Fitch Investors Services, Inc.; and

(4) Duff and Phelps, Inc. Sec. Act Rel. No. 33-6383 n.54, ASR 306, Fed. Sec. L. Rep. (CCH) P 72,328 (1982).

(n58)Footnote 58. Rule 134(a)(13)(i) permits disclosure of security ratings assigned by nationally recognized rating organizations to debt, convertible debt securities and preferred stock in a communication deemed not to be a prospectus (e.g., a "tombstone advertisement") if the disclosure is consistent with disclosure of security ratings in registration statements.

In July 2008, the SEC proposed amendments to revise Rule 134 to permit a registrant to disclose the security rating of any credit rating agency, but require a registrant to provide a statement as to whether the entity issuing the rating is an NRSRO if it elects to include a security rating in a communication under Rule 134. Security Ratings, Securities Act Release No. 8940, Securities Exchange Act Release No. 58071 (July 1, 2008).

(n59)Footnote 59. Rule 436(g) was adopted in 1982 and is designed to eliminate the previous requirement to file the consent of rating organizations for any registration statement disclosing the security rating and thus exempt the rating organizations, which are already subject to the antifraud provisions of the federal securities laws, from Section 11 liability.

In July 2008, the SEC proposed amendments that would amend Rule 436(g) and related rules to expand the relief from the consent requirements currently provided to NRSROs to other credit rating agencies that are not NRSROs. Security Ratings, Securities Act Release No. 8940, Securities Exchange Act Release No. 58071 (July 1, 2008).

For a discussion of Section 11 liability, see § 9.02 infra.

The applicability of Rules 134 and 436(g) and the Commission's policy on security ratings are limited to disclosure of security ratings and do not extend to disclosure of policy holder ratings assigned to insurance companies. Sec. Act Rel. No. 33-6383 n.52, ASR 306, Fed. Sec. L. Rep. (CCH) P 72,328 (1982).

(n60)Footnote 60. Item 101(a)(i), Regulation S-T. The other documents that must be filed electronically are:

(a) statements and applications filed with the Commission pursuant to the Trust Indenture Act other than applications for exemptive relief filed pursuant to Section 304(c) on Form T-4 and Section 310(b)(1)(ii);

(b) statements, reports and schedules filed with the Commission pursuant to Sections 13, 14 or 15(d) of the Exchange Act, except Form 13F, information for which confidential treatment is requested

(c) documents filed with the Commission pursuant to Sections 8, 17, 20, 23(c), 24(e), 24(f) and 30 of the Investment Company Act, provided, however, that in no event shall any submissions under Section 6(c) or 17(g) of the Act or documents related to applications for exemptive relief under any section of the Act be made in electronic format; and

(d) documents filed with the Commission pursuant to the Public Utility Act.

(n61)Footnote 61. Effective as of November 4, 2002, foreign private issuers and foreign governments are required to file registration statements electronically via EDGAR.

See §§ 7.07[1][b] and [2][b] infra for a discussion of the electronic filing requirements of Forms F-1 and F-3.

(n62)Footnote 62. Item 202, Regulation S-T. The application must be made ten business days prior to the due date of the filing and must contain the information set forth in Item 202, including setting forth the reasons the necessary hardware and software is not available without unreasonable burden and expense, the burden and expense involved to employ alternative means to make the electronic submission, or the reasons for not submitting electronically the document or group of documents, as well as justification for the time period of a requested temporary exemption.

CHAPTER 7 Registration Forms

1-7 Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 7.03

AUTHOR: Cristopher Greer Melinda I. Wang Jeffery C. Fang Amanda M. Burke Andrew R. Meyerson

§ 7.03 Form S-1--Registration of Securities of Issuers For Whom No Other Form is Authorized

Form S-1 is available for use by registrants for whom no other form is prescribed. It is generally used by registrants who have never filed, or who have been filing reports under the Exchange Act for less than one year, such as new issuers engaged in an initial public offering. n1

Form S-1 is also available for the registration of securities issued in an exchange offer for securities of another issuer. n2 It may not be used, however, for the registration of securities of foreign governments or political subdivisions of those governments. n3

Smaller reporting companies that desire to use Form S-1 must check the "smaller reporting company" box n4 Such smaller reporting companies are able to choose, on an item-by-item basis, to comply with either the scaled disclosure and financial reporting requirements made available in Regulation S-K for smaller reporting companies or the requirements for other companies in Regulation S-K.

Form S-1 contains two major parts. Part I (Items 1-12) covers information required to be included in the prospectus and requires full disclosure of all material information about the offering and the registrant. Part II (Items 13-17) covers information not required to be presented in the prospectus and requires disclosure of expenses of issuance and distribution, the SEC policy regarding indemnification of directors and officers, recent sales of unregistered securities, exhibits and financial statement schedules and certain undertakings of the issuer. The nonfinancial substantive disclosure provisions of Form S-1 rely entirely on the provisions of Regulation S-K n5 and include essentially the same information about the registrant as that required to be reported in an annual report to the Commission filed on Exchange Act Form 10-K. A reporting issuer that has filed at least one annual report and that is current in its reporting obligation under the Exchange Act may incorporate such information by reference to previous reports filed under the Exchange Act, pursuant to amendments to Form S-1 adopted as part of the 2005 Rules. Successor registrants can incorporate by reference if their predecessors were eligible. The following issuers will not be able to incorporate by reference into a Form S-1 or Form F-1:

- (1) reporting issuers who are not current in their Exchange Act reports; and

(2) issuers who are, or were or any of whose predecessors were during the past three years:

- blank check issuers;
- shell companies (other than business combination related shell companies); or
- issuers for offerings of penny stock.

In addition, to enhance the availability to investors of incorporated information, the ability to incorporate by reference is conditioned on the issuer making its incorporated Exchange Act reports and other materials readily accessible on a website maintained by or for the issuer. n6 Regulation S-X governs the specific content of the financial statements required in Form S-1. In addition to the information expressly required to be included in the Form S-1 prospectus, the registrant must add any further material information "as may be necessary to make the required information, in the light of the circumstances ... , not misleading." n7

If any information required to be furnished by the registrant is unknown and not reasonably available, that information may be omitted, if:

- (1) obtaining the information would involve unreasonable effort or expense and the registrant includes a statement to that effect; or
- (2) the information rests peculiarly within the knowledge of another person not affiliated with the registrant and the registrant includes a statement indicating the absence of any affiliation and the result of a request made to the other person for the information; and
- (3) in the case of either of the above, the registrant gives as much of the required information (together with the sources of that information) as it possesses or can acquire without unreasonable effort or expense. n8

The General Instructions to Form S-1 direct the registrant's attention to the general rules and regulations under the Securities Act, particularly the provisions of Regulation C that contain the general requirements for the preparation and filing of registration statements. n9 The General Instructions also direct the registrant's attention to Regulation S-K and provide that where Form S-1 requires a registrant to furnish information required by an item of Regulation S-K, the information need only be furnished to the extent appropriate. n10

[1] Facing Page

The facing page of Form S-1 must set forth (i) the exact name of the registrant as specified in its charter, n11 (ii) the state or other jurisdiction of incorporation or organization, (iii) the registrant's primary standard industrial classification code and I.R.S. employer identification numbers and (iv) the address and telephone number of the registrant's principal executive offices.

The approximate date of commencement of the proposed sale to the public must also be included on the facing page of Form S-1, and, where appropriate, the delaying amendment legend set forth in Rule 473 must be included. n12 Since the effective date, the first date on which the securities may be sold to the public, cannot be known at the time of filing, it is customary to state: "as soon as practicable after the effective date of this registration statement."

The facing page must also set forth the name and address of an "agent for service," the person authorized in the registration statement to receive notices and communications from the Commission. n13 Additionally, agents for service are given powers with respect to the registration statement, including the power of amendment and withdrawal. n14 It is a common practice to name the counsel for the registrant as an agent for service or to receive copies of all notices sent to the agent.

The registrant must also indicate, by checking a box on the facing sheet, (i) whether any of the securities being registered on Form S-1 are to be offered on a delayed or continuous basis ("shelf registration") pursuant to Rule 415, n15 (ii) whether the registrant is registering additional securities for an offering pursuant to Rule 462(b), (iii) whether the filing is a post-effective amendment pursuant to Rule 462(c), (iv) whether the filing is a post-effective amendment pursuant to Rule 462(d) or (v) whether the registrant is a large accelerated filer, an accelerated filer, a non-accelerated filer or a smaller reporting company as defined in Rule 12b-2 of the Exchange Act. n16

- (1) title of each class to be registered;
- (2) amount to be registered;
- (3) proposed maximum offering price per unit;
- (4) proposed maximum aggregate offering price; and
- (5) amount of registration fee.

Effective December 21, 2009, the registration fee for an offering of securities is $71.30 per $1,000,000 of the maximum aggregate price at which the securities are proposed to be offered. This rate must also be applied pro rata to amounts less than $1,000,000. Thus, the fee should be calculated by multiplying the maximum offering amount by .0000713. n18 If the filing fee is based on a bona fide estimate of the maximum aggregate offering price and has been paid, no additional filing fee is required if there is a change in the offering price. n19 If, however, the number of shares or other units of securities, or the principal amount of debt securities, to be offered is increased, and this can only be done by an amendment filed before the effective date of the registration statement, the registrant must pay an additional fee based upon the offering price of the additional securities. n20 In the event that the number of shares to be offered is decreased by amendment no refund is available. n21 If a portion of the securities offered under a registration statement remain unsold after the completion of an offering, or after termination or withdrawal of the registration statement, the total dollar amount of the filing fee associated with the unsold securities may be offset against the filing fee due for a subsequent registration statement or registration statements. n22

The filing of a registration statement is not deemed to have taken place unless it is accompanied by a United States postal money order or a certified bank check or cash for the amount of the fee via wire transfer. n23 Fees for EDGAR filings must be paid to the U.S. Treasury-designated lockbox not later than the time of the filing of the registration statement. Failure to pay an insignificant amount of the required fee at the time of filing as the result of a bona fide error, however, will not affect the date of filing. n24

Rule 457 contains provisions for estimating or determining the registration fee to be paid for different types of offerings. For example, it contains provisions for computing fees for the registration of securities to be offered: in exchange for other securities for which there is no public market, subsection (f)(2); pursuant to warrants, subsection (g); pursuant to an employee benefit plan, subsection (h)(1); and in connection with convertible securities, subsection (i).

[2] The Prospectus

Part I of Form S-1, "Information required in prospectus," requires the registrant to furnish, in response to 12 items, disclosure about the issuer and the offering of the securities. The information required to be presented need not follow the order of the items in Form S-1 but cannot be presented in a manner likely to obscure any of the required information or any information necessary to keep the required information from being incomplete or misleading. n25 Unless otherwise specified, the registrant need not refer to any items that are inapplicable and may omit negative answers to any items. n26

If an item of Form S-1 requires the information to be presented in the prospectus in tabular form, the information must be furnished in substantially the tabular form specified in the item. n27 Except for financial statements and information required in tabular form, the information set forth in the prospectus may be expressed in condensed or summarized form. n28 Instead of repeating information in notes to financial statements, references may be made to other parts of the prospectus containing that information. n29

Item 501 of Regulation S-K, "Forepart of registration statement and outside front cover page of prospectus," has two parts: facing page and outside front cover page of prospectus. The disclosure required by Item 501 of Regulation S-K must be drafted in plain English. n31

Item 501(a) of Regulation S-K, "Facing page," requires the facing page of Form S-1 to indicate the approximate date of the proposed sale to the public and, where appropriate, to include the delaying amendment legend pursuant to Rule 473 of Regulation C. n32

Item 501(b) of Regulation S-K, "Outside front cover page of prospectus," requires the registrant to provide information on the outside front cover page of the prospectus with cross references to more detailed discussion elsewhere in the prospectus. The outside front cover page must be limited to one page. n33 The required information includes the name of the registrant n34 and the title, amount and a brief description of the securities being offered, unless the description is not necessary to indicate the material terms of the securities, e.g., an issue of common stock with full voting rights and the dividend and liquidation rights usually associated with common stock. n35 The issuer must also state whether the securities are to be offered for the account of security holders. n36 If so offered, other parts of the prospectus should name each security holder, state the amount of securities owned by such security holder, the amount to be offered for such security holder's account and the amount to be owned by such security holders after the offering.

If there are factors in the offering which make it speculative or high risk, the registrant, on the prospectus' outside front cover, must cross-reference the discussion (required by Item 503 of Regulation S-K) of the material risks associated with a purchase of the securities being offered including the page number where the discussion appears. Such cross-reference must be printed in prominent type. n37

The registrant must also include a statement that the Commission has neither approved nor disapproved the securities. This statement may be combined with any legend or statement required by the law of any state in which the securities are to be offered. n38 The legend required by the Commission should indicate that neither the Securities and Exchange Commission nor any state securities commission has approved or disapproved of the securities or passed upon the accuracy or adequacy of the disclosures in the prospectus and that any contrary representation is a criminal offense. Registrants may use one of the following or other clear, plain language:

- Example A: Neither the Securities and Exchange Commission nor any state securities commission has approved or disapproved of these securities or passed upon the adequacy or accuracy of this prospectus. Any representation to the contrary is a criminal offense.

- Example B: Neither the Securities and Exchange Commission nor any state securities commission has approved or disapproved of these securities or determined if this prospectus is truthful or complete. Any representation to the contrary is a criminal offense. n39

The registrant must indicate whether any national securities exchange or the Nasdaq Stock Market will list the securities offered, naming the particular market(s) and identifying the trading symbol(s) for those securities. n40

If the securities are to be offered for cash, the registrant should state the price to the public of the securities, the underwriters' discounts and commissions, the net proceeds to be received by the registrant and any selling security holder's net proceeds. The registrant should present this information on both a per share or unit basis and for the total amount of the offering. If the registrant makes the offering on a minimum/maximum basis, it should show this information based on the total minimum and total maximum amount of the offering. The registrant may present this pricing information in a table, term sheet format or other clear presentation that fits the design of the cover page so long as the information can be easily read and is not misleading. n41

If the price to the public cannot be readily stated, the registrant must explain the method to be used in determining that price. If the securities are to be offered at the market, or if the offering price is to be determined by a formula related to market prices, the registrant must identify the market and indicate the market price as of the latest practicable date. n42

Item 16 of Schedule A provides that where it is proposed to offer any portion of the securities to any persons other than the underwriters at any variation from the proposed public offering price, such variation must be disclosed and such persons named. n43 Similarly, when there is an exchange offer, the prospective investor must be fully apprised of all unfavorable as well as favorable factors of the exchange so that such investor can make an informed judgment whether to accept or reject the offer. If any of the above situations exist, proper reference should be made to them on the cover page and they should be fully disclosed in the body of the prospectus.

Item 501(b)(3) also calls for information relative to "the underwriter's discounts and commissions." n44

Warrants to purchase a block of the company's shares at a price related to the public offering price are sometimes granted to the underwriters.

The registrant should state the name(s) of the lead or managing underwriter(s) and identify the nature of the underwriting arrangements. If the offering is not made on a firm commitment basis, the registrant should provide a brief description of the underwriting arrangements. The registrant may use any clear, concise and accurate description of the underwriting arrangements, such as:

- Example A: (best efforts offering): The underwriters are not required to sell any specific number or dollar amount of securities but will use their best efforts to sell the securities offered.
- Example B: (best efforts, minimum-maximum offering): The underwriters must sell the minimum number of securities offered (insert number) if any are sold. The underwriters are required to use only their best efforts to sell the maximum number of securities offered (insert number).

If the registrant is offering the securities on a best efforts or best efforts minimum-maximum basis, it should state the date the offering will end, any minimum purchase requirements and any arrangements to place the funds in an escrow, trust or similar account. If the registrant has not made any of these arrangements, it should state this fact and describe the effect on investors. n45

The date of the prospectus must be set forth. n46 A preliminary prospectus circulated by a registrant that is not subject to the reporting requirements of the Exchange Act must include a bona fide estimate of the range of the maximum offering price and the maximum number of shares or the principal amount of debt securities to be offered. A preliminary prospectus must also indicate that it is "subject to completion" and must state the date of its issuance. n47

Rule 430A, adopted in 1987 along with other related changes, is designed to prevent disruptions in taking an offering to the market which had sometimes occurred as a result of the need for the Staff to review the final pricing amendment before a registration could be declared effective. A temporary delay sometimes resulted which could cause the underwriting syndicate to miss a market opportunity and adversely affect the offering. Rule 430A permits a registration statement that omits certain pricing information to be declared effective so long as the securities to be registered are offered for cash, the registrant furnishes the undertakings required by Item 512(i) of Regulation S-K (a prospectus required by Section 10(a)(3) of the Securities Act to prevent stale information) and the registrant files a form of prospectus providing the information that was originally omitted.

Item 502 of Regulation S-K, "Inside Front and Outside Back Cover Pages of Prospectus," requires two categories of information to be disclosed. The disclosure required by Item 502 of Regulation S-K must be drafted in plain English. n48

Item 502(a) of Regulation S-K, "Table of contents," requires the registrant to include a reasonably detailed table of contents showing the subject matter of the sections and subdivisions of the prospectus, including any risk factors section set forth in the prospectus pursuant to Item 503(c) of Regulation S-K, and the page number on which the sections and subdivisions begin. n49

Item 502(b) of Regulation S-K, "Dealer prospectus delivery obligation," requires the registrant to apprise all dealers effecting transactions in the registered securities, whether or not participating in the distribution, that they may be required to deliver a prospectus. A statement to that effect should be set forth on the outside back cover page of the prospectus indicating the expiration date of the period prescribed by Section 4(3) of the Securities Act and Rule 174 thereunder, for dealers to deliver the prospectuses. n50

[c] Item 3. Summary Information, Risk Factors and Ratio of Earnings to Fixed Charges.

This item requires the registrant to furnish, in accordance with Item 503 of Regulation S-K, a summary of the information contained in the prospectus, a discussion of the principal factors that make the offering speculative or one of high risk and the ratio of earnings to fixed charges. The disclosure required by Item 503 of Regulation S-K must be drafted in plain English. n51

[i] Summary of Prospectus Information. Item 503(a) of Regulation S-K, "Prospectus Summary," requires the registrant to include a summary of the prospectus information where the length or complexity of the prospectus warrants a summary. The summary should be brief and should not contain, and is required not to contain, all of the detailed information in the prospectus. If the registrant provides summary business or financial information, even if not captioned as a summary, it must provide that information in plain English. n52

The summary should not merely repeat the text of the prospectus but should provide a brief overview of the key aspects of the offering. The registrant should carefully consider and identify those aspects of the offering that are the most significant and determine how best to highlight those points in plain English. n53

[ii] Address and Telephone Number. Item 503(b) of Regulation S-K, "Address and telephone number," requires the registrant to include the mailing address, including zip code and the telephone number, including area code, of the registrant's principal executive offices. It has also become customary to include an issuer's website, although issuers typically provide that neither the website nor the information contained on the website are incorporated by reference into the prospectus and that neither should be considered part of the prospectus.

[iii] Risk Factors. Item 503(c) of Regulation S-K, "Risk factors," requires the registrant to include, where appropriate, a risk factor discussion which must be set forth under the caption "Risk Factors" on the page immediately following the summary, or if no summary section is included, immediately following the cover page of the prospectus or, if included, a pricing information section that immediately follows the cover page. n54 This discussion must be concise and organized logically. The registrant should not present risks that could apply to any issuer or any offering. The registrant should explain how the risk affects the issuer or the securities being offered. The registrant should set forth each risk factor under a subcaption that adequately describes the risk.

This item requires a discussion of the principal factors that make the offering speculative or one of high risk, including among others:

- (1) the absence of an operating history of the registrant;
- (2) the absence of profitable operations in recent periods;
- (3) the financial position of the registrant;
- (4) the nature of the registrant's business; or
- (5) if common equity or securities convertible into or exercisable for common equity are being offered, the absence of a previous market for the registrant's common equity. n55

[iv] Ratio of Earnings to Fixed Charges. Item 503(d) of Regulation S-K, "Ratio of earnings to fixed charges," n56 requires either the ratio of earnings to fixed charges or the ratio of combined fixed charges and preference dividends to earnings (the "ratio") to be disclosed pursuant to the following rules and definitions:

- (1) the registrant should furnish:
 - (a) the ratio of earnings n57 to fixed charges, n58 if debt securities are being registered; or
 - (b) the ratio of combined fixed charges and preference dividends to earnings, if preference equity securities are being registered.

Disclosure of both ratios, however, is permitted in registration statements relating to debt securities or preferred stock and the registrant may choose to disclose one or both ratios in other filings. n59

- (2) the ratio should be disclosed for each of the last five fiscal years of the registrant (or for the life of the registrant and its predecessors, if less than five years), and for the latest interim period for which financial statements are presented.

Item 503(d) requires a pro forma ratio to be presented in the prospectus if the registration statement is being filed to register debt securities or preferred stock to be used in a refinancing and if the effect of the refinancing changes the historical ratio by at least ten percent. n60 To calculate the pro forma ratio, the registrant should use the net change in interest or dividends from the refinancing. n61 The pro forma ratio may be presented for only the most recent fiscal year and for the latest interim period. n62

The ratios should also be placed in the Summary section, if the registrant includes one in its prospectus. n63 The calculation of the ratios should be included as an exhibit to the registration statement. n64 A registrant that qualifies as a smaller reporting company need not include a ratio of earnings to fixed charges. n65

[d] Item 4. Use of Proceeds. This item requires the registrant to furnish the information specified in Item 504 of Regulation S-K.

Item 504 of Regulation S-K, "Use of proceeds," requires the registrant to state the principal purposes for which the net proceeds from the offering are intended to be used and the approximate amount for each such purpose. If the registrant has no specific plans for the proceeds or a significant portion of the proceeds, it must make a statement to that effect and discuss the principal reasons for the offering. If material amounts of other funds are required to accomplish a specified purpose, the amounts and sources of those funds should be disclosed. n66 The management of the registrant may reserve the right to change the use of the proceeds if all contingencies are adequately disclosed. n67

If less than all the securities offered may be sold and the proceeds may be used for more than one purpose, the registrant's plans, if substantially less than the maximum proceeds are realized, and the order of priority of such purposes should be discussed. n68 This discussion need not be included, however, if underwriting arrangements for the offering indicate that the actual proceeds will not be substantially less than the aggregate proceeds shown pursuant to Item 501 of Regulation S-K. n69 Details of proposed expenditures need not be given (i.e., a brief outline of any program of construction or additional equipment is sufficient), but the registrant should consider discussing matters specifically addressed in the management's discussion and analysis of financial condition and results of operations, such as liquidity and capital expenditures. n70

If the proceeds to the registrant are to be used to acquire assets other than in the ordinary course of business, the assets should be briefly described and the cost of the assets stated. If the assets are to be acquired from affiliates of the registrant or their associates, the names of persons from whom the assets are to be acquired and the principles followed to determine the cost of the assets to the registrant should be set forth. n71

Where the proceeds to the registrant are to be used to finance acquisitions of other business, the identity of the business, or if not known, the nature of the business to be sought, the status of any negotiations with respect to the acquisition and a brief description of those businesses should be included. If, however, pro forma financial statements reflecting the acquisition of another business are not required by Regulation S-X (including Rule 8-05 of Regulation S-X for smaller reporting companies) to be included in the registration statement, no disclosure need be made of the possible terms of any transaction, the identity of parties to the transaction or the nature of the business being sought, to the extent the registrant reasonably determines that public disclosure of that information would jeopardize the acquisition. n72 If, on the other hand, Regulation S-X (including Rule 8-05 of Regulation S-X for smaller reporting companies) requires financial statements of the business sought to be acquired to be included in the registration statement, the registrant should give a detailed description of the business to be acquired. n73

If existing indebtedness is to be repaid with a material part of the proceeds, the registrant should state the interest rate and maturity of the indebtedness to be repaid. If the indebtedness to be repaid was incurred within one year of the filing of the registration statement, the registrant should describe the use of the proceeds of the indebtedness if the indebtedness was other than short-term borrowing used for working capital. n74

In many respects, this section of the prospectus is the most important from the standpoint of the potential investor, and should be placed near the beginning of the narrative portion of the prospectus. The investor is entitled to a full and clear statement of the uses to which the company intends to apply his funds. Thus, general statements such as "the development and completion to a marketable state of the aircraft, automobile, and other patents" owned by the registrant

[e] Item 5. Determination of Offering Price.

This item requires the registrant to furnish the information specified by Item 505 of Regulation S-K concerning those factors used by the registrant to determine the offering price of common equity, warrants, rights or convertible securities being offered.

[i] Common Equity. Item 505(a) of Regulation S-K requires the registrant to state the factors considered in determining the offering price for common equity being registered

(1) for which no established public trading market exists for the purposes of Item 201(a) of Regulation S-K, n76 or

(2) where there is a material disparity between the offering price of the common equity and the market price of outstanding shares of the same class.

[ii] Warrants, Rights and Convertible Securities. Where warrants, rights or convertible securities exercisable for common equity securities for which there is no market for purposes of Item 201(a) of Regulation S-K are being registered, the registrant should describe the factors considered in determining their exercise or conversion price. n77

[f] Item 6. Dilution. This item requires the registrant to furnish the disclosure called for by Item 506 of Regulation S-K.

Item 506 of Regulation S-K, "Dilution," n78 provides that where common equity securities are being registered and there is a substantial disparity between the public offering price and the effective cash cost to insiders (officers, directors, promoters and affiliated persons) of common equity acquired by them in transactions during the past five years, or which they have the right to acquire, and the registrant is not subject to the reporting requirements of Sections 13(a) or 15(d) of the Exchange Act immediately prior to the filing of the registration statement, the registrant should include a comparison of the public contribution under the proposed public offering and the effective cash contribution of the insiders.

In the above situation and where common equity securities are being registered by a reporting or nonreporting registrant that has suffered losses in each of the last three fiscal years and where there has been a material dilution of the purchasers' equity interest, the registrant should also disclose:

(1) the net tangible book value per share before and after the distribution;

(2) the amount of increase in the net tangible book value per share attributable to all cash payments made by purchasers of the shares being offered; and

(3) the amount of the immediate dilution from the public offering price that will be absorbed by the purchasers in the offering. n79

[g] Item 7. Selling Security Holders. This item requires the registrant to furnish the information required by Item 507 of Regulation S-K.

Item 507 of Regulation S-K, "Selling security holders," provides that if the securities are to be offered for the account of security holders, the registrant should:

(1) name each selling security holder; n80

(2) state the position, office or other material relationship the selling security holder has held or had within the past three years with the registrant, its predecessor, n81 or its affiliates; n82 and

(3) state the amount of securities of the class being sold owned by the security holder prior to the offering, the amount to be offered for the security holder's account and the amount and percentage (if one percent or more) of the class to be owned by the security holder after completion of the offering.

[h] Item 8. Plan of Distribution.

This item requires the registrant to furnish the information required by Item 508 of Regulation S-K. Item 508 of Regulation S-K, "Plan of distribution," contains twelve parts.

[i] Underwriters and Underwriting Obligation. Item 508(a) of Regulation S-K, "Underwriters and underwriting obligation," provides that if the securities are to be offered through underwriters, the registrant should:

(1) name the principal underwriters; n83

(2) state the amounts underwritten by each of the principal underwriters;

(3) identify each principal underwriter that has a material n84 relationship with the registrant and describe the nature of the relationship; and

(4) briefly describe the nature of the underwriter's obligation to take the securities including:

(a) whether the underwriter is committed to take and pay for all of the securities if any securities are taken, or

(b) whether the obligation is merely an agency or a "best efforts" arrangement permitting the underwriter to take and pay for only the securities it may sell to the public. n85

Conditions precedent to the underwriter's taking of the securities, including "market-outs," should be described in response to Item 508(a) only in the case of an agency or "best efforts" arrangement. n86

[ii] New Underwriters. Item 508(b) of Regulation S-K, "New underwriters," provides that where securities of a previously nonreporting registrant under Section 13(a) or 15(d) of the Exchange Act are being registered or where a prospectus is required pursuant to Item 501 of Regulation S-K to include notice of risk factors on its cover page, and at least one of the managing underwriters (or a majority of the principal underwriters, if there are no managing underwriters) has been organized, reactivated or first registered as a broker-dealer within the past three years, the registrant must disclose in the prospectus:

(1) the information concerning the underwriter's experience; and

(2) where applicable (a) that the principal business function of the underwriter will be to sell the securities to be registered, or (b) that the promoters have a material relationship with the underwriter.

The information required by Item 508(b) should be given in sufficient detail to permit a full appreciation of the underwriter's experience and its relationship with the registrant, promoters and their controlling persons. n87

[iii] Other Distributions. Item 508(c) of Regulation S-K, "Other distributions," requires a brief discussion of the plan of distribution of securities to be registered that are to be offered other than through underwriters.

If the securities are to be offered pursuant to dividend or interest reinvestment plans n88 the terms of which provide for the purchase of securities on the market, the registrant must disclose whether the issuer or the participant pays fees, commissions and expenses incurred in connection with the plan. The registrant must disclose the anticipated cost to plan participants by transaction or other convenient reference if the fees, commissions or expenses will be paid by the participant.

If the securities are to be offered through the selling efforts of brokers or dealers, the registrant should describe the plan of distribution and the terms of any agreement, arrangement or understanding made with the broker or dealer before the effective date of the registration statement, including volume limitations on sales, parties to the agreement, conditions for terminating the agreement, and, if known, the identity of the broker or dealer that will participate in the offering and the respective amount of securities to be offered through each broker or dealer.

If any of the securities being registered are to be offered other than for cash, the registrant should state briefly the general purpose of the distribution, the basis upon which the securities are to be offered, the amount of compensation and other expenses of distribution and by whom the expenses are to be borne. n89 If the distribution is to be made pursuant to a plan of acquisition, reorganization, readjustment or succession, the registrant should describe briefly the general effect and operative date of the plan. If any material amount of assets are to be acquired under the plan, the registrant should disclose information similar to that required by Instruction 5 to Item 504 of Regulation S-K, regarding the cost of assets acquired from a material part of the proceeds, and including the names of affiliates and associates, if any, from whom the assets are to be acquired, and the principle followed in determining the cost to the registrant. n90

[iv] Offerings on Exchange. Item 508(d) of Regulation S-K, "Offerings on exchange," provides that if the securities are to be offered on an exchange, the exchange should be identified. If the registered securities are to be offered in connection with the writing of exchange-traded call options, the registrant should briefly describe the transactions.

[v] Underwriter's Compensation. Item 508(e) of Regulation S-K, "Underwriter's compensation," requires the registrant to provide a table that sets out the nature of the compensation and the amount of discounts and commissions n91 to be paid to the underwriter for each security and in total. The table must show the separate amounts to be paid by the company and any selling shareholders. In addition, the table should include all other items considered by the National Association of Securities Dealers ("NASD") n92 to be underwriting compensation for purposes of the NASD's Rules of Fair Practice.

The registrant should show separately in the table the cash commissions paid by the registrant and selling security holders, and should show in the table commissions paid by other persons. The registrant should also disclose any finder's fee or similar payments in the table. n93

In this section, the registrant should also disclose the offering expenses specified in Item 511 of Regulation S-K. n94

If the underwriter has any arrangement with the issuer, such as an over-allotment option, under which the underwriter may purchase additional shares in connection with the offering, the registrant should indicate that this arrangement exists and state the amount of additional shares that the underwriter may purchase under the arrangement. Where the underwriter has such an arrangement, the registrant should present maximum-minimum information in a separate column to the table, based on the purchase of all or none of the shares subject to the arrangement. The registrant should describe the key terms of the arrangement in the narrative. n95

[vi] Underwriter's Representative on Board of Directors. Item 508(f) of Regulation S-K, "Underwriter's representative on board of directors," requires the registrant to:

(1) describe any arrangement granting the underwriter the right to designate or nominate one or more of the members of the registrant's board of directors;

(2) identify any director so chosen by the underwriter; and

(3) state whether the designated or nominated director is or may be an officer, director, partner, employee or affiliate of the underwriter.

[vii] Indemnification of Underwriters. Item 508(g) of Regulation S-K, "Indemnification of underwriters," requires the registrant to briefly describe the provisions for indemnifying the underwriter or its controlling persons against liability arising under the Securities Act.

[viii] Dealers' Compensation. Item 508(h) of Regulation S-K, "Dealers' compensation," requires the registrant to state briefly the discounts and commissions allowable or payable to a dealer, including all cash, securities, contracts or other consideration to be received by the dealer in connection with the sale of the securities. n96 If the dealer acts as a sub-underwriter in connection with the sale of the securities and is paid an additional discount or commission, the registrant should make a general statement to that effect without reporting the additional amounts of securities to be sold.

[ix] Finders. Item 508(i) of Regulation S-K, "Finders," requires the registrant to identify any finder and, if applicable, describe the nature of any material relationship between the finder and the registrant, its officers, directors, principal stockholders, other finders, promoters, n97 principal underwriters or managing underwriters, including, in each case, any affiliates or associates n98 of these persons.

[x] Discretionary Accounts. Item 508(j) of Regulation S-K, "Discretionary accounts," provides that if the registrant was not subject to the reporting requirements of Sections 13(a) or 15(d) of the Exchange Act immediately prior to the filing of the registration statement, the registrant should disclose whether any principal underwriter intends to sell to its discretionary accounts and an estimate of the amount of securities so intended to be sold. The information required by Item 508(j) should be contained in a pre-effective amendment to the prospectus, which should be circulated if the information is not available when the registration statement is filed. n99

[xi] Passive Market Making. Item 508(k) of Regulation S-K, "Passive market making," provides that if the underwriters or any selling group members intend to engage in passive market making transactions as permitted by Rule 103 of Regulation M, the registrant must disclose such intention and briefly describe passive market making.

[xii] Stabilization and Other Transactions. Item 508(l), "Stabilization and other transactions," requires the registrant to briefly describe any transaction that the underwriter intends to conduct during the offering that stabilizes, maintains or otherwise affects the market price of the offered securities. Information on stabilizing transactions, syndicate short covering transactions, penalty bids or any other transaction that affects the offered security's price should be included. The registrant should describe the nature of the transactions clearly, explain how the transactions affect the offered security's price and identify the exchange or other market on which these transactions may occur. If true, it should be disclosed that the underwriter may discontinue these transactions at any time.

If the stabilizing began before the effective date of the registration statement, the registrant should disclose the amount of securities bought, the prices at which they were bought and the period within which they were bought. If the registrant used Rule 430A (relating to delayed pricing), the prospectus filed under Rule 424(b) or a post-effective amendment must contain information on the stabilizing transactions that took place before the determination of the public offering price.

If the registrant is making an offering of warrants or rights offering of securities to existing security holders and any securities not purchased by existing security holders are to be reoffered to the public, the following should be disclosed in a supplement to the prospectus or in the prospectus used in connection with the reoffering:

- (1) the amount of securities bought in stabilization activities during the offering period and the price or range of prices at which the securities were bought;
- (2) the amount of the offered securities subscribed for during the offering period;
- (3) the amount of the offered securities subscribed for by the underwriter during the offering period;
- (4) the amount of the offered securities sold during the offering period by the underwriter and the price or price ranges at which the securities were sold; and
- (5) the amount of the offered securities that will be reoffered to the public and the public offering price.

[i] Item 9. Description of Securities to be Registered.

This item requires the registrant to furnish the information specified by Item 202 of Regulation S-K.

The introductory Note to Item 202 of Regulation S-K permits the registrant to identify any exchange that has accepted the securities for listing. In doing so, however, the registrant should not convey the impression that it can apply successfully for listing of the securities on a particular exchange or that, in the case of an underwritten offering, the underwriters may request the registrant to apply for exchange listing, unless there is reasonable assurance that the securities to be offered will be acceptable to a securities exchange for listing.

[i] Capital Stock. Item 202(a) of Regulation S-K, "Capital stock," provides that if capital stock is being registered, the registrant should state the title of the class of securities being registered. n100

Wherever the title of securities is required to be stated, the registrant should furnish information that will indicate the type and general character of the securities, including:

- (1) the par or stated value, if any;
- (2) the rate of dividends, if fixed, and whether cumulative or noncumulative and a brief description of the preference, if any; and
- (3) if convertible or redeemable, a statement to that effect. n101

The registrant should also describe each of the following requirements as are relevant to the security: n102

- (1) dividend rights;
- (2) terms of conversion; n103
- (3) sinking fund provisions;
- (4) redemption provisions;
- (5) voting rights, including any provisions specifying the vote required by security holders to take action; n104

- (6) any classification of the board of directors, and the effect of the classification where cumulative voting is permitted or required;
- (7) liquidation rights;
- (8) preemption rights;
- (9) liability to further calls or to assessment by the registrant and liability of the registrant imposed on its stockholders by state law (e.g., to laborers, servants or employees of the registrant), unless the disclosure would be immaterial because the financial resources of the registrant or other factors make it improbable that liability under the state laws would be imposed;
- (10) restrictions on alienability of the securities to be registered; and
- (11) any provision discriminating against any existing or prospective holder of the securities as a result of the security holder owning a substantial amount of securities. n105

In addition, the registrant should describe, to the extent relevant:

- (1) whether the rights of holders of capital stock being registered may be modified other than by a vote of a majority or more of the shares outstanding voting as a class; n106
- (2) if preferred stock is being registered, whether there are restrictions on the repurchase or redemption of shares by the registrant while there are arrearages in the payment of dividends or sinking fund installments; n107
- (3) information regarding the rights of any authorized class of securities that do, or may materially limit or qualify the rights evidenced by, or amounts payable with respect to the rights evidenced by, or amounts payable with respect to the shares being registered. The information must permit investors to understand those limitations or qualifications and no information need be given for any class of securities to be retired, provided appropriate steps to ensure the retirement will be completed prior to or upon delivery by the registrant of the shares; n108 and
- (4) the effect on the control of the registrant (e.g., a delay, deferment or prevention of a change of control) of any of the registrant's charter or by-law provisions applicable only in the case of an extraordinary corporate transaction involving the registrant or its subsidiaries, such as a merger, reorganization, tender offer, sale or transfer of substantially all of its assets or liquidation. n109 This disclosure is required only for the provisions or arrangements created by the registrant and not those provisions required by law. n110

In describing the securities being offered, care should be exercised in the choice of terminology used in connection with debt securities as distinguished from equity securities. The situation is intensified when the securities involved are "hybrids," possessing characteristics common to both debt and equity securities. In this connection, problems have arisen concerning the use of the words "bond," "bond feature," and "guarantee," and the placing of a fixed dollar amount on the face of the security as its maturity value. n111

[iii] Debt Securities. Item 202(b) of Regulation S-K, "Debt securities," calls for a brief description of the debt securities being registered including:

- (1) the title of the securities;

1-7 Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 7.03

(2) the principal amount being registered; and

(3) if a series of securities is being offered, the total amount authorized, and the total amount outstanding as of the most recent practicable date. n112

In providing the title of securities being registered, the type and general character of the securities should be indicated, including:

(1) the rate of interest;

(2) the date of maturity, or, if the issue matures serially, a brief indication of the serial maturities; n113

(3) if the payment of principal or interest is contingent, an appropriate indication of the contingency;

(4) a brief indication of the priority of the issue; and

(5) if the security is convertible or callable, a statement to that effect. n114

In addition, the registrant should outline, as appropriate:

(1) provisions with respect to interest, conversion, maturity, redemption, amortization, sinking fund or retirement;

(2) provisions with respect to the kind and priority of any lien securing the issue, together with a brief identification of the principal properties subject to that lien.

(3) provisions with respect to the subordination of the rights of holders of the securities to other security holders or creditors of the registrant; n115

(4) provisions restricting the declaration of dividends or requiring the maintenance of any ratio of assets or the creation or maintenance of reserves;

(5) provisions restricting the issuance of additional securities or the incurring of additional debt; n116

(6) the general type of event that constitutes a default and whether or not any periodic evidence is required to be furnished as to the absence of default or as to compliance with the terms of the indenture;

(7) provisions relating to modification of the terms of the security or the rights of security holders;

(8) provisions similar to those described in Item 202(a)(4) of Regulation S-K n117 concerning material limitations or qualifications on rights evidenced by the securities being registered;

(9) if the debt securities are offered at a price deemed to be an "original issue discount" as defined under Section 1273 of the Internal Revenue Code n118 or if sold in a package with another security and the allocation of the offering price between the two securities may have the effect of offering the debt security at an original issue discount, the tax effects of the original issue discount under Sections 1271-1278 of the Internal Revenue Code; and

(10) the name of the trustees and the nature of any material relationship with the registrant or any of its affiliates, the percentage of securities of the class necessary to require the trustee to take action and what indemnification the trustee may require before proceeding to enforce the lien. n119

[iii] Warrants and Rights. Item 202(c) of Regulation S-K, "Warrants and rights," provides that if the securities are offered pursuant to warrants or rights, the registrant must state:

- (1) the amount of securities called for by the warrants or rights;
- (2) the period during which and the price at which the warrants or rights are exercisable;
- (3) the amount of warrants or rights outstanding;
- (4) provisions for changes to or adjustments in the exercise price; and
- (5) any other material terms of the warrants or rights. n120

[iv] Other Securities. Item 202(d) of Regulation S-K, "Other securities," provides that if securities other than capital stock, debt securities, warrants or rights are being registered, the registrant should include a brief description of the rights evidenced thereby comparable to the description required by Items 202(a), (b) and (c) of Regulation S-K. n121

[v] Market Information for Securities Other Than Common Equity. Item 202(e) of Regulation S-K, "Market information for securities other than common equity," requires disclosure of market information for non-equity securities comparable to that required by Item 201 (a) of Regulation S-K n122 such as the reported high and low bid prices for each full quarterly period during the last two fiscal years and the subsequent interim period during the last two fiscal years and the subsequent interim period for which financial information must be filed pursuant to Article 3 of Regulation S-X in cases where there is an established public trading market for the securities being registered (other than common equity).

If the registrant is a foreign registrant, the description of the securities in response to Item 202 of Regulation S-K should include briefly, to the extent not otherwise disclosed, the following:

- (1) a brief description of any limitations imposed by foreign law or by the registrant's charter or other constituent documents on the right of nonresident or foreign owners to hold or vote the securities and if no such limitations are applicable, it should be so stated;
- (2) a brief description of any governmental laws, decrees or regulations in the registrant's country of organization that affect the remittance of dividends, interest and other payments to nonresident holders of the securities being registered;
- (3) an outline of all taxes, including withholding provisions, to which United States security holders are subject; and
- (4) a brief description of pertinent provisions of any reciprocal tax treaty between the foreign country and the United States regarding withholding, and if there is no treaty, it should be so stated. n123

[vi] American Depositary Receipts. Item 202(f) of Regulation S-K, "American Depositary Receipts," requires disclosure of the following information if Depositary Shares represented by American Depositary Receipts are being registered:

- (1) the name of the depositary and the address of its principal executive office;

(2) the title of the American Depositary Receipts, an identification of the deposited security and a brief description of the terms of the deposit; n124

and

(3) a description of all fees and charges which may be imposed directly or indirectly against the holder of the American Depositary Receipts, indicating the type of service, the amount of fee or charges and to whom paid. n125

[j] Item 10. Interests of Named Experts and Counsel. This item requires the registrant to furnish the information specified in Item 509 of Regulation S-K.

Item 509 of Regulation S-K, "Interests of named experts and counsel," provides that if

(1) any expert n126 named in the registration statement as having prepared or certified any part of the registration statement or a report, or valuation to be used in connection with the registration statement; or

(2) counsel n127 for the registrant, underwriters or selling security holders named in the prospectus as having given an opinion on the validity of the securities being registered or on other legal matters in connection with the registration or the offering;

(a) was employed for that purpose on a contingency basis; or

(b) at the time of preparation, certification or opinion or any time thereafter through the date of effectiveness of the registration statement or that part of the registration statement to which the preparation, certification or opinion relates, had, or is to receive in connection with the offering, a substantial interest, direct or indirect, in the registrant, its parents or subsidiaries; or

(c) was connected with the registrant or any of its parents or subsidiaries as a promoter, managing underwriter or principal underwriter (if there are no managing underwriters), voting trustee, director, officer or employee, then a brief statement of the nature of the contingent basis, interest or connection should be furnished by the registrant.

If the interest of an expert (other than an accountant) n128 or counsel, including the fair market value of all securities of the registrant owned, received or to be received, or subject to options, warrants or rights received or to be received by the expert or counsel, does not exceed $50,000, the interest will not be deemed to be substantial and need not be disclosed. n129

Failure to disclose matters concerning the interests of experts or counsel named in the registration statement constitutes a material deficiency in the registration statement. n130

[k] Item 11. Information With Respect to the Registrant.

This item requires the registrant to furnish basic information about the registrant that is required to be furnished in annual reports to the Commission on Exchange Act Form 10-K, n131 regarding information relating to:

(1) the registrant's business;

- (2) property;
- (3) material pending legal proceedings;
- (4) common equity securities;
- (5) financial statements;
- (6) selected financial data;
- (7) supplementary financial information;
- (8) management's discussion and analysis of financial condition and results of operations;
- (9) disagreements with accountants on accounting and financial disclosure;
- (10) quantitative and qualitative disclosures about market risk caused by use of market risk sensitive instruments such as derivative financial instruments;
- (11) directors and executive officers;
- (12) executive compensation;
- (13) security ownership of certain beneficial owners and management; and
- (14) certain relationships, related transactions and corporate governance.

[i] Business.

The information relating to the registrant's business is governed by Item 101 of Regulation S-K.

The description of the registrant's business and its development must be both accurate and adequate. "Investors are protected under the Securities Act of 1933 ... against having to guess on the basis of ambiguous language as to what ... is the nature of the business to be performed." n132 If the nature of the business actually done or to be done is misstated, n133 if previous operating losses are concealed, n134 or if past activities of the registrant are not disclosed, n135 liability may result.

The Commission, upon written request of the registrant and where consistent with the protection of investors, may permit the omission of the information required by Item 101 or the furnishing of appropriate information of comparable character in substitution for that information. n136

Item 101 of Regulation S-K, "Description of business," contains seven major parts:

- (1) general development of business;
- (2) financial information about industry segments;
- (3) narrative description of business;

- (4) financial information about geographic areas;
- (5) available information;
- (6) reports to security holders; and
- (7) enforceability of civil liabilities against foreign persons.

The Commission amended the disclosure requirements of Item 101 to conform to current generally accepted accounting standards. Item 101 now requires disclosure about an issuer's "operating segments." The Commission also incorporated the SFAS No. 131 instructions governing how to present information relating to operating segments. n137

Effective February 2008, the Commission has amended Item 101 to provide for scaled disclosure of the registrant's business if it qualifies as a "smaller reporting company." n138

[A] General Development of Business. Item 101(a) of Regulation S-K, "General development of business," requires a description of the general development of the business of the registrant, its subsidiaries, n139 and any predecessors n140 during the past five years, or for such shorter period as the registrant has been engaged in business, and, if material to an understanding of the general development of the registrant's business, information should be disclosed for earlier periods. In describing the development of the business, the registrant should state:

- (1) the year in which the registrant was organized and the registrant's form of organization;
- (2) the nature and results of any bankruptcy, receivership or similar proceedings involving the registrant or any of its significant subsidiaries; n141
- (3) the nature and results of any material reclassification, merger or consolidation of the registrant or any of its significant subsidiaries;
- (4) the acquisition or disposition of any material amount of assets not in the ordinary course of business; and
- (5) any material changes in the mode of conducting the business. n142

If the registrant is not subject to the reporting requirements of Sections 13(a) or 15(d) of the Exchange Act immediately prior to the filing of the registration statement and the registrant (including predecessors) has not had operating revenues for each of the last three fiscal years, it should also describe its future plan of operation, n143 including a narrative statement of the registrant's opinion as to the period of time that the proceeds from the offering will satisfy cash requirements and whether in the next six months it will be necessary to raise additional funds to meet operating expenses of the registrant. Specific reasons for this opinion should be stated and categories of expenditures and sources of cash resources should be identified, although amounts of expenditures and cash resources need not be provided. If the narrative statement is based on a cash budget, the budget should be furnished to the Commission as supplemental information, rather than as part of the registration statement.

The description of the registrant's future plan of operation should also include:

- (1) an explanation of material product research and development to be performed;
- (2) anticipated material acquisitions and capacity of plant and equipment;

(3) anticipated material changes in the number of employees in the various departments of the registrant such as research and development, production, sales or administration; and

(4) other material areas that may be peculiar to the registrant's business.

[B] Financial Information About Segments. Item 101(b) of Regulation S-K, "Financial information about segments," requires the registrant to disclose the amounts of revenue (with sales to unaffiliated customers and sales or transfers to other segments of the registrant shown separately), n144 operating profit or loss and identifiable assets attributable to each of the registrant's segments. The disclosure is required for each of the registrant's last three fiscal years, or for each fiscal year the registrant has been engaged in business, whichever period is shorter. To the extent that financial information about segments complies with generally accepted accounting principles, the registrant may include in its financial statements a cross reference to Item 101(b) in lieu of presenting duplicate information about its segments in the financial statements, or, the registrant may cross refer to the financial statements, instead of including the information in response to Item 101(b).

The registrant must restate the corresponding information for prior periods, including interim periods, unless impracticable to do so, if it changes the structure of its internal organization in a manner that causes the composition of its reporting segments to change. The registrant must disclose whether it has restated the items for the prior periods following a change in composition of its reportable segments. If it has not restated the items, the registrant must disclose in the year in which the change occurs segment information for the current period under both the old basis and the new basis of information, unless it is impracticable to do so. n145

The prior period information should be restated retroactively, unless not material, with appropriate disclosure of the nature and effect of the restatement:

(1) when the financial statements of the registrant as a whole are restated retroactively; or

(2) when there is a change in the way the registrant's products or services are grouped into segments that affects the reportable segment information. n146

The registrant need not restate the prior period information if its reportable segments change solely because of a change in the nature of the registrant's operations or as a result of the segment's loss of or gain in significance.

If the registrant includes (or is required by Article 3 of Regulation S-X, General Instructions as to Financial Statements, to include) interim financial statements, the registrant should discuss any facts and shall include to the extent necessary, comparative financial information, relating to the performance of any of the segments that, in the opinion of management, show that the three-year segment financial data may not be indicative of current or future operations of the segment. n147

[C] Narrative Description of Business. Item 101(c) of Regulation S-K, "Narrative description of business," requires a description of the business done and intended to be done by the registrant and its subsidiaries, focusing primarily upon the registrant's dominant industry segment or each of the reportable industry segments about which financial information is presented in the financial statements.

The following information required by paragraphs (1) through (11) need only be reported for each segment to the extent it is material to an understanding of the registrant's business as a whole. The following information specified in paragraphs (12) through (14) must be reported as to the business in general and, only where material, the segments to which these matters are significant must be identified:

- (1) the principal products produced and services rendered by the registrant in the industry segment and the principal markets for, and methods of distribution of, the segment's principal products and services;
- (2) the amount or percentage of total revenue contributed by any class of similar products or services, stated for each of the last three fiscal years, that accounted for ten percent or more of consolidated revenue in any of the last three fiscal years or fifteen percent or more of consolidated revenue if the registrant's total revenue did not exceed $50,000,000 during any of the last three fiscal years;
- (3) the status of a new product or industry segment (e.g., whether the product or segment is in the planning stage, whether prototypes exist, the degree to which product design has progressed or whether further engineering is necessary) that would require the investment of a material amount of assets of the registrant or is otherwise material; n148
- (4) the sources and availability of raw materials;
- (5) the importance to the industry segment and the duration and effect of all patents, trademarks, licenses, franchises and concessions held;
- (6) the extent to which the business of the industry segment is or may be seasonal;
- (7) the practices of the registrant and the industry relating to working capital items; n149
- (8) the dependence of the segment on a single or few customers, the loss of any one or more of which would have a material adverse effect on the segment; n150
- (9) the dollar amount of backlog orders believed to be firm, as of a recent date and as of a comparable date in the preceding fiscal year, and an indication of the portion of the orders not reasonably expected to be filled within the current fiscal year together with seasonal or other material aspects of the backlog; n151
- (10) a description of any material portion of the business subject to renegotiation of profits or termination of contracts or subcontracts at the election of the Government;
- (11) competitive conditions in the business; n152
- (12) if material, the estimated dollar amount spent during each of the last three fiscal years on company-sponsored research and development activities and customer-sponsored related research activities relating to the development or improvement of products, services or techniques;
- (13) the material effects of compliance with federal, state and local laws regarding the discharge of materials into the environment, or otherwise relating to the protection of the environment on the capital expenditures, earnings and competitive position of the registrant and its subsidiaries; n153 and
- (14) the number of persons employed by the registrant.

In determining the materiality of the information, the registrant should consider both quantitative and qualitative factors, n154 such as:

- (1) the significance of the matter to the registrant (e.g., whether a matter with a relatively minor effect on the company's business is represented by management to be important to its future profitability);

(2) the pervasiveness of the matter (e.g., whether the matter affects or may affect numerous items in the segment information); and

(3) the real effect of the matter (e.g., whether it distorts the trends reflected in the segment information).

Situations may arise when information should be disclosed about a segment, although the information in quantitative terms may not appear significant to the registrant's business taken as a whole.

[D] Financial Information About Geographic Areas. Item 101(d) of Regulation S-K, "Financial information about geographic areas," requires the registrant to disclose the amounts of revenue from unaffiliated customers attributed to, and long lived assets (other than financial instruments, long-term customer relationships of a financial institution, mortgage and other servicing rights, deferred policy acquisition costs and deferred tax assets) located in: (i) the registrant's country of domicile; (ii) all foreign countries in total from which the registrant derives revenues and holds assets; and, if material, (iii) any individual foreign country. n155 The disclosure is required for each of the registrant's last three fiscal years or for each fiscal year the registrant has been engaged in business, whichever period is shorter. A registrant must disclose the amounts based on the financial information it uses to produce the general-purpose financial statements. If it is impracticable to provide the geographic information, the registrant must disclose that fact. The registrant may also provide subtotals of geographic information about groups of countries. n156

Item 101(d) permits cross-reference to financial information included in the registrant's financial statements. The disclosure requirements for prior period information that should be restated retroactively pursuant to Item 101(d) are similar to the provisions under Item 101(b), n157 except that Item 101(d) looks to a grouping of geographic areas rather than to industry segments. Item 101(d) requires additional disclosure of any risks attendant to foreign operations and any dependence of one or more of the registrant's industry segments upon those foreign operations. n158 If the registrant includes interim financial statements, it must discuss any facts relating to the information that in the opinion of management indicate that the three-year financial information may not be indicative of current or future operations. If necessary, comparative information should be provided. n159

The registrant should evaluate period comparability to determine whether information about segments is required for a particular fiscal year. For example, period comparability may require the registrant to report segment information that was significant in the immediately preceding period and is expected to be significant in the future although the segment may not be material under the criteria for reportability of SFAS No. 131 in the current fiscal year. n160

[E] Available Information. Item 101(e) of Regulation S-K, "Available information," requires the registrant to disclose the following:

(1) whether it files reports with the Commission and, if so, the reports and other information it files;

(2) that the public may read and copy any materials it files with the Commission at the Commission's Public Reference Room at 100 F Street, NE, Washington, DC 20549. The registrant should state that the public may obtain information on the operation of the Public Reference Room by calling the Commission at 1-800-SEC-0330. If the registrant is an electronic filer, it should state that the Commission maintains an Internet site that contains reports, proxy and information statements and other information regarding issuers that file electronically with the Commission and state the address of that site (<http://www.sec.gov>).

(3) its Internet address, if the registrant is an accelerated filer (it is encouraged to give its Internet address, if available, even if it is not an accelerated filer);

(4) whether it makes available free of charge on or through its Internet website its annual report on Form 10-K, quarterly reports on Form 10-Q, current reports on Form 8-K and amendments to those reports filed or furnished pursuant to Section 13(a) or 15(d) of the Exchange Act as soon as reasonably practicable after filing or furnishing such material with the Commission. If it does not make its filings available in this manner, the registrant must state the reasons it does not do so (including, where applicable, that it does not have an Internet website) and whether it voluntarily will provide electronic or paper copies of the filings free of charge upon request.

[F] Reports to Security Holders. Item 101(f), "Reports to Security Holders," requires the registrant to disclose the following information:

(1) If the Commission's proxy rules or regulations, or stock exchange requirements, do not require the registrant to send an annual report to security holders or to holders of American depository receipts, the registrant should describe briefly the nature and frequency of reports that it will give to security holders. It should specify whether the reports that it gives will contain financial information that has been examined and reported on, with an opinion expressed "by" an independent public or certified public accountant.

(2) For a foreign private issuer, if the reports will not contain financial information prepared in accordance with U.S. generally accepted accounting principles, the registrant must state whether the reports will include a reconciliation of this information with U.S. generally accepted accounting principles.

[G] Enforceability of Civil Liabilities Against Foreign Persons. Item 101(g), "Enforceability of Civil Liabilities Against Foreign Persons," requires the registrant to disclose the following if it is a foreign private issuer:

(1) whether or not investors may bring actions under the civil liability provisions of the U.S. federal securities laws against the foreign private issuer, any of its officers and directors who are residents of a foreign country and any underwriters or experts named in the registration statement that are residents of a foreign country, and whether investors may enforce these civil liability provisions when the assets of the issuer or these other persons are located outside of the United States. The disclosure must address the following matters:

- the investor's ability to effect service of process within the United States on the foreign private issuer or any of those persons;
- the investor's ability to enforce judgments obtained in U.S. courts based upon the civil liability provisions of the U.S. federal securities laws;
- the investor's ability to enforce, in an appropriate foreign court, judgments of U.S. courts based upon the civil liability provisions of the U.S. federal securities laws; and
- the investor's ability to bring an original action in an appropriate foreign court to enforce liabilities based upon the U.S. federal securities laws.

(2) if the registrant provides this disclosure based on an opinion of counsel, it should name counsel in the prospectus and file as an exhibit to the registration statement a signed consent of counsel to the use of its name and opinion.

[H] Smaller Reporting Companies. A registrant that qualifies as a smaller reporting company may satisfy its obligation under Item 101 of Regulation S-K by describing the development of its business during the last three years, n161 including:

- (1) form and year of organization;
- (2) any bankruptcy, receivership or similar proceeding;
- (3) any material reclassification, merger or consolidation;
- (4) any purchase or sale of a significant amount of assets not in the ordinary course of business;
- (5) the principal products or services and their markets;
- (6) distribution methods;
- (7) status of any publicly announced new product or service;
- (8) competitive business conditions;
- (9) sources and availability of raw materials and the names of principal suppliers;
- (10) dependence on one or a few major customers;
- (11) patents, trademarks, licenses, franchises, concessions, royalty agreements or labor contracts, including duration;
- (12) the need for any government approval, and the status of any such approval not yet received;
- (13) the effect of existing or probable government regulation;
- (14) the approximate amount spent on research and development during the past two years (and the extent to which such amount is borne by customers);
- (15) the cost and effect of compliance with environmental laws; and
- (16) the number of full-time employees. n162

The smaller reporting company's registration statement must also include a statement:

- whether it will voluntarily deliver an annual report if it is not required to do so, and whether such report will include audited financial statements;
- whether it files reports with the Commission. If the company is a reporting company, it must identify the reports it files with the Commission; and
- that the public may read and copy any materials the company files with the Commission at the Commission's Public Reference Room at 100 F Street, NE, Washington, DC 20549. The registrant should also state that the public may obtain information on the operation of the Public Reference Room by calling the Commission at 1-800-SEC-0330. If the registrant is an electronic filer, it should state that the Commission maintains an Internet site (<http://www.sec.gov>) that contains reports, proxy and information statements and other information. n163

The smaller reporting company is encouraged, but not required, to disclose its Internet address. n164 Foreign issuers that qualify as a smaller reporting company must provide the information required by Item 101(g) of Regulation S-K. n165

[iii] Property.

The information relating to the registrant's property is governed by Item 102 of Regulation S-K.

Item 102 of Regulation S-K, "Description of Property," requires a brief description of the location and general character of the principal plants, mines and other materially important physical properties of the registrant and its subsidiaries, with identification of the industry segments that use the properties described. n166 Item 102 also requires the registrant to state whether any of the described property is not held in fee or is held subject to any major encumbrance, and, if so, to briefly describe how the property is held.

[A] Extractive Enterprises and Estimates of Reserves. For each extractive enterprise not involved in oil and gas producing activities, the registrant should give material information about:

- (1) production;
- (2) reserves;
- (3) locations;
- (4) development; and
- (5) the nature of the registrant's interest. n167

If individual properties are of major significance to any industry segment, more detailed information about these matters should be furnished, including maps that disclose the location of significant properties. n168

In the case of extractive enterprises other than oil and gas reserves, estimates other than proven or probable reserves (and any estimated values of such reserves) should not be disclosed in any document publicly filed with the Commission unless such information is required to be disclosed in the document by foreign or state law; however, where such estimates have previously been provided to a person (or any of its affiliates) that is offering to acquire, merge or consolidate with the registrant, or otherwise to acquire the registrant's securities, such estimates may be included in documents relating to such acquisition. n169

Registrants engaged in significant mining operations should disclose the information called for in Guide 7. Registrants engaged in real estate activities should disclose the information called for in Industry Guide 5. Registrants engaged in oil and gas producing activities should disclose the information called for in Securities Act Industry Guide 4. n170

Effective January 1, 2010, a registrant engaged in oil and gas producing activities that are material to the registrant's or its' subsidiaries' business operations or financial position should also disclose the information required by Subpart 1200 of Regulation S-K. n171 Limited partnerships and joint ventures that conduct, operate, manage or report upon oil and gas drilling or income programs, or acquire properties for drilling and production or for the production of oil, gas or geothermal purposes need not include the information required by Subpart 1200. n172

[B] Oil and Gas Producing Activities

[aa] Disclosures and Estimates of Reserves

A registrant engaged in relevant oil and gas producing activities must provide a tabular summary of oil, natural gas, synthetic oil, synthetic gas and sale products of other non-renewable natural resources that are intended to be upgraded into synthetic oil and gas at fiscal year end. n173 The disclosures must be expressed in an oil-barrel-equivalent basis, in the aggregate and by geographic area for each country containing 15% or more of the registrant's proven reserves, using prices and costs under existing economic conditions. n174 The disclosure must contain individual estimates for proved developed reserves, proved undeveloped reserves and total proved reserves, and these disclosures must be updated at the close of each fiscal year. n175 The disclosure may, but need not, contain individual estimates for probable developed reserves, probable undeveloped reserves, possible developed reserves and possible undeveloped reserves. n176 If probable or possible reserves are disclosed, the registrant must also discuss the uncertainty related to such reserve estimates. n177

If the registrant has not previously disclosed reserves estimates in a filing with the Commission or is disclosing material additions to such reserves estimates, the registrant shall discuss the technologies used to establish the appropriate level of certainty for reserves estimates from material properties included in the total reserves disclosed. n178

The registrant must also disclose and describe the internal controls used in its reserves estimation effort and the qualifications of the technical person primarily responsible for overseeing the preparation of the reserves estimates. n179 If the registrant represents that a third party prepared or conducted a reserves audit of the registrant's reserves estimates or any estimated valuation thereof, or conducted a process review, the registrant must file a report of the third party as an exhibit to the relevant registration statement or other Commission filing. n180 If the report relates to the preparation of or reserves audit of the registrant's reserves estimates, it must disclose the following, if applicable to the type of filing:

- (i) The purpose for which the report was prepared and for whom it was prepared;
- (ii) The effective date of the report and the date on which the report was completed;
- (iii) The proportion of the registrant's total reserves covered by the report and the geographic area in which the covered reserves are located;
- (iv) The assumptions, data, methods and procedures used, including the percentage of the registrant's total reserves reviewed in connection with the preparation of the report, and a statement that such assumptions, data, methods and procedures are appropriate for the purpose served by the report;
- (v) A discussion of primary economic assumptions;
- (vi) A discussion of the possible effects of regulation on the ability of the registrant to recover the estimated reserves;
- (vii) A discussion regarding the inherent uncertainties of reserves estimates;
- (viii) A statement that the third party has used all methods and procedures as it considered necessary under the circumstances to prepare the report;
- (ix) A brief summary of the third party's conclusions with respect to the reserves estimates and
- (x) The signature of the third party. n181

The registrant may, but is not required to, disclose an estimate of reserves for each product type based on different price and cost criteria, such as a range of prices and costs that may reasonably be achieved, including standardized futures prices or management's own forecasts, as long as the registrant also discloses the price and cost schedules and assumptions on which the disclosed values are based. n182

Estimates of oil or gas resources other than reserves, and any estimated values of such resources, shall not be disclosed in any document publicly filed with the Commission unless such information is required to be disclosed by foreign or state law; however, where such estimates previously have been provided to a person (or any of its affiliates) that is offering to acquire, merge or consolidate with the registrant or otherwise to acquire the registrant's securities, such estimate may be included in documents related to such acquisition. n183

Each registrant must disclose production, by final product sold, of oil, gas and other products for each of the last three fiscal years, unless prohibited by the country in which the reserves are located. n184 The disclosures must be by geographic area for each country containing 15% or more of the registrant's total proved reserves and expressed on an oil-equivalent-barrels basis. n185 The average sales price (including transfers) per unit of oil, gas and other products produced and the average production cost, not including ad valorem and severance taxes, per unit of production and by geographic area, must also be disclosed for each of the last three fiscal years. n186

Each registrant must also disclose the number of net productive and dry exploratory wells drilled; and the number of net productive and dry development wells drilled for each of the last three fiscal years, by geographical area. n187 The disclosure should include any other exploratory or development activities conducted, including implementation of mining methods for purposes of oil and gas producing activities. n188

Further, the registrant must disclose, by geographical area, its present activities, including the number of wells in the process of being drilled (including wells temporarily suspended), waterfloods in process of being installed, pressure maintenance operations and any other related activities of material importance. n189 The disclosure must also include a description of present activities as of a date at the end of the most recent fiscal year or as close to the date that the registrant files the document as reasonably possible. n190

If the registrant is committed to provide a fixed and determinable quantity of oil or gas in the near future under existing contracts or agreements, the registrant must disclose material information concerning the estimated availability of oil and gas from any principal sources, including:

- (1) The principal sources of oil and gas that the registrant will rely upon and the total amounts that the registrant expects to receive from each principal source and from all sources combined;
- (2) The total quantities of oil and gas that are subject to delivery commitments and
- (3) The steps that the registrant has taken to ensure that available reserves and supplies are sufficient to meet such commitments for the next one to three years. n191

If the registrant has been unable to meet any significant delivery commitments in the last three years, it must describe the circumstances concerning such events and their impact on the registrant. n192

[cc] Properties, Wells, Operations and Acreage

The registrant must disclose, by geographic area and as of a reasonably current date or as of the end of the fiscal year, the total gross and net productive wells, with oil and gas expressed separately and the total gross and net developed acreage. n193

In addition, the registrant should include, as of a reasonably current date or as of the end of the fiscal year, the amount of undeveloped acreage, both leases and concessions, if any, expressed in both gross and net acres by geographic area, together with an indication of acreage concentrations, and, if material, the minimum remaining terms of leases and concessions. n194

[iii] Legal Proceedings. The information relating to material pending legal proceedings is governed by Item 103 of Regulation S-K.

Item 103 of Regulation S-K, "Legal Proceedings," requires a brief description of any material n195 pending legal proceedings, other than ordinary routine litigation incidental to the business, to which the registrant or any of its subsidiaries is a party or of which any of its or their property is the subject. n196 The name of the court or agency in which the proceedings are pending, the date instituted, the principal parties thereto, the alleged factual basis underlying the proceeding and the relief sought must be included. There must also be described similar information as to any such proceeding known to be contemplated by governmental authorities. No actions for negligence or other claims need be described if the business ordinarily results in such actions or claims, unless the action or claim departs from the normal. n197 There must also be described any material pending legal proceedings to which any director, officer or affiliate of the registrant, record or beneficial owner of more than five percent of any class of voting securities, or any associate of the foregoing persons, is a party or has a material interest adverse to the registrant or any of its subsidiaries. n198

Notwithstanding the foregoing, administrative or judicial proceedings arising under federal, state or local environmental laws must be described, if:

- (1) the proceeding is material to the business or financial condition of the registrant;
- (2) the proceeding involves primarily a claim for damages or involves potential monetary sanctions, capital expenditures, deferred charges or charges to income and if the amount sought, exclusive of interest and costs, is in excess of ten percent of the current assets of the registrant and its subsidiaries on a consolidated basis; or
- (3) the action is a governmental proceeding involving potential monetary sanctions, unless the registrant reasonably believes that the proceeding will result in monetary sanctions, exclusive of interest and costs, of less than $100,000; provided, however, that such proceedings that are similar in nature may be grouped together and described generically. n199

Although the registrant has no actual knowledge of pending litigation at the time of the filing of the registration statement, if the state of the registrant's knowledge changes before the effective date, the registration statement must reflect that change. n200 The fact that the registrant considers a pending suit to have no merit is no excuse for not disclosing it. n201

[iv] Common Equity.

Where common equity securities are being offered, the registrant must disclose this information pursuant to Item 201 of Regulation S-K.

Item 201 of Regulation S-K, "Market Price of and Dividends on the Registrant's Common Equity and Related Stockholder Matters," was amended in 2002 and again in 2006. As amended, it contains five parts: market information; holders; dividends; securities authorized for issuance under equity compensation plans; and a performance graph. However, a registration statement does not have to include the information required to be disclosed with respect to the securities authorized for issuance under equity compensation plans, unless the information is part of a document that is incorporated by reference into a prospectus. n202 Additionally, registration statements filed under the Securities Act need not include a performance graph. n203

[A] Market Information. Item 201(a) of Regulation S-K, "Market information," requires the registrant to:

- (1) identify the principal United States market for each class of the registrant's common equity securities that is traded; n204
- (2) state, if the principal United States market for the registrant's common equity security is an exchange, the high and low sales prices for the security as reported in the consolidated transaction reporting system n205 (or, if not so reported, on the principal exchange market for the security), for each full quarterly period during the past two fiscal years and any subsequent interim period for which financial statements must be filed pursuant to Article 3-01 through 3-04 of Regulation S-X, or Article 8-02 through 8-03 of Regulation S-X in the case of smaller reporting companies; n206
- (3) state, if the principal United States market is not an exchange, the range of high and low bid information for the security as regularly quoted in the automated quotation system of a registered securities association; n207 or if not so quoted, the range of reported high and low bid quotations and the source of these quotations, for each full quarterly period during the past two fiscal years and any subsequent interim period for which financial statements must be filed pursuant to Article 3 of Regulation S-X; n208
- (4) state, where a foreign registrant has identified a principal established foreign public trading market pursuant to paragraph (1) above, market price information comparable, to the extent practicable, to that required for the principal United States market and the source of the information; n209 and
- (5) include price information as of the latest practicable date and, in the case of securities to be issued in connection with an acquisition, business combination or other reorganization, as of the date immediately prior to the public announcement of the transaction. n210

Market prices reported pursuant to Item 201 of Regulation S-K should be adjusted to give retroactive effect to material changes resulting from stock dividends, stock splits and reverse stock splits. n211 If the market information is being presented in connection with a class of common equity securities for which at the time of filing there is no established United States public trading market, the registrant should indicate the amounts of common equity securities that:

- (1) are issuable pursuant to outstanding options or warrants to purchase, or are securities convertible into, common equity of the registrant;
- (2) could be sold pursuant to Rule 144 n212 under the Securities Act or that the registrant has agreed to register under the Securities Act for sale by security holders; or
- (3) are publicly proposed to be publicly offered by the registrant (unless the common equity securities are being offered pursuant to an employee benefit plan or dividend reinvestment plan), where the offering could have a material effect on the market price of the registrant's common equity securities. n213

[B] Holders. Item 201(b) of Regulation S-K, "Holders," requires the registrant to state the approximate number of holders of each class of its common equity securities as of the latest practicable date. n214 The registrant must indicate the effect of the offering on the amount and percentage of present holdings of the registrant's common equity securities by:

- (1) the beneficial owners of more than five percent of any class of the securities;
- (2) each director and director-nominee; and
- (3) all directors and officers as a group. n215

[C] Dividends. Item 201(c) of Regulation S-K, "Dividends," requires the registrant to state the frequency and amount of any cash dividends declared on each class of its common equity securities for the two most recent fiscal years and any subsequent interim period for which financial statements are presented pursuant to Article 3 of Regulation S-X. n216 A brief description of any restriction on the registrant's current or future ability to pay cash dividends and any restriction on the ability of the registrant's subsidiaries to transfer funds to the registrant in the form of cash dividends, loans or advances should be given. This information may be provided by cross-reference to descriptions of material dividend limitations in the management's discussion and analysis of financial condition and operating results pursuant to Item 303 of Regulation S-K n217 and the financial statements pursuant to Regulation S-X. n218

If the registrant has a record of paying no cash dividends although its earnings indicate that it has the ability to do so, the registrant is encouraged to consider the question of its intention to pay cash dividends in the foreseeable future. n219 If the registrant has no intention to pay cash dividends, it should so state. A registrant that has a history of paying cash dividends is encouraged to indicate whether it intends to pay comparable cash dividends in the future and, if not, to indicate the nature of the change in the amount or rate of cash dividend payments.

If the registrant is a foreign issuer, it should briefly describe any governmental laws, decrees or regulations in the country in which the registrant is organized relating to:

- (1) restrictions on the export or import of capital, foreign exchange controls, remittance of dividends or other payments to nonresident holders of the registrant's common equity securities; and
- (2) taxes, including withholding provisions, to which United States common equity holders are subject. n220

[v] Financial Statements. Financial statements that meet the requirements of Regulation S-X n221 (schedules required under Regulation S-X should be filed as "Financial Statement Schedules" pursuant to Item 16 of Form S-1) n222 and financial information required by Rule 3-05, "Financial Statements of Businesses Acquired or to be Acquired," and Article 11, "Pro Forma Financial Information," of Regulation S-X should be included in response to Item 11 of Form S-1. n223 A smaller reporting company may provide the information in Rules 8-04 and 8-05 of Regulation S-X in lieu of the financial information required by Rule 3-05 and Article 11 of Regulation S-X. n224

[vi] Selected Financial Data. The selected financial data required to be furnished is governed by Item 301 of Regulation S-K. A registrant that qualifies as a smaller reporting company is not required to provide the selected financial data required by Item 301. n225

Item 301 of Regulation S-K, "Selected Financial Data," requires the registrant to furnish, in comparative columnar form, the selected financial data for the registrant for each of the last five fiscal years of the registrant (or for the life of the registrant and its predecessors, if less than five fiscal years) and for any additional fiscal year necessary to keep the information from being misleading. n226 The items included in the table of selected financial data are:

- (1) net sales or operating revenues;

- (2) income (loss) from continuing operations;
- (3) income (loss) from continuing operations per common share;
- (4) total assets;
- (5) long-term obligations and redeemable preferred stock (including long-term debt, capital leases and redeemable preferred stock as defined in Rule 5-02.28(a) of Regulation S-X); and
- (6) cash dividends declared per common share. n227

The registrant should briefly discuss (or cross-reference to a discussion elsewhere of) factors such as accounting changes, business combinations or dispositions of business operations, that materially affect the comparability of the five-year information as well as certain contingencies reflected in the selected financial data. A discussion of (or cross-reference to a discussion elsewhere of) any material uncertainties should also be included where such matters may cause the financial data presented not to be indicative of the registrant's future financial condition or results of operations. n228

If interim period financial statements are included in the table of selected financial data pursuant to Article 3 of Regulation S-X, the registrant should consider updating, on a comparative basis, the selected financial data for the interim period to reflect any material changes in the trends indicated in its financial condition and results of operations. n229

A foreign private issuer must also disclose the following information in all filings containing financial statements:

- (1) In the forepart of the document and as of the latest practicable date, the exchange rate into U.S. currency of the foreign currency in which the financial statements are denominated;
- (2) A history of exchange rates for the five most recent years and any subsequent interim period for which financial statements are presented setting forth the rates for period end, the average rates and the range of high and low rates for each year; and
- (3) If equity securities are being registered, a five year summary of dividends per share stated in both the currency in which the financial statements are denominated and United States currency based on the exchange rates at each respective payment date. n230

[vii] Supplementary Financial Information.

The supplementary financial information required is governed by Item 302 of Regulation S-K.

Item 302 of Regulation S-K, "Supplementary Financial Information," requires the registrant to make disclosures in two areas: selected quarterly financial data and information about oil and gas producing activities. Additionally, a registrant that qualifies as a smaller reporting company is not required to provide the information required by Item 302. n231

[A] Selected Quarterly Financial Data. Item 302(a) of Regulation S-K, "Selected quarterly financial data," requires certain registrants to disclose:

- (1) net sales;
- (2) gross profit; n232

(3) income (loss) before extraordinary items and cumulative effect of a change in accounting;

(4) per share data based upon income (loss) before extraordinary items and cumulative effect of a change in accounting; and

(5) per share data based upon such income (loss) and net income (loss). n233

The information required in paragraphs (1) through (5) should be given for each full quarter within the last two fiscal years and any subsequent interim period for which financial statements are included pursuant to Article 3 of Regulation S-X. n234

The registrant should describe the effect of any disposals of segments of a business and extraordinary, unusual or infrequently occurring items recognized in each full fiscal quarter within the two most recent years and for any subsequent interim period for which financial statements are included pursuant to Article 3 of Regulation S-X. The registrant should also discuss the aggregate effect and nature of any year-end or other adjustments that are material to the results of that quarter. n235

Item 302(a) of Regulation S-K applies to any registrant (except foreign private issuers) that has securities registered under either Section 12(b) or 12(g) of the Exchange Act. n236

[B] Information About Oil and Gas Producing Activities. Item 302(b) of Regulations S-K, "Information about oil and gas producing activities," requires registrants engaged in oil and gas producing activities to provide specified information about those activities required by Statement of Financial Accounting Standards ("SFAS") No. 69, "Disclosures about Oil and Gas Producing Activities," if the activities are deemed significant under SFAS No. 69. n237

[viii] Management's Discussion and Analysis of Financial Condition and Results of Operations.

The management's discussion and analysis of financial condition and operating results is governed by Item 303 of Regulation S-K.

Item 303 of Regulation S-K, "Management's Discussion and Analysis of Financial Condition and Results of Operations," requires the registrant to make disclosures covering two distinct periods: full fiscal years and interim periods. n238

[A] Full Fiscal Years. Item 303(a), "Full fiscal years," requires the registrant to discuss and analyze its financial condition, changes in financial condition and results of operations, based on the financial statements and any other statistical data that the registrant believes will enhance a reader's understanding of these factors. n239 The purpose of the discussion and analysis is to provide information relevant from management's perspective to an assessment of the registrant's financial condition and results of its operations by evaluating the amounts and certainty of cash flows from operations and outside sources. n240 The registrant should specifically focus on material events and uncertainties that would cause reported financial information not to be necessarily indicative of future financial condition or operating results, e.g., matters that have not had an effect on operations in the past but may in the future or matters that have had an effect on reported operations and are not expected to have an effect on operations in the future. n241 If, in the registrant's judgment, a discussion of segment information or of other subdivisions of the registrant's business would be appropriate to an understanding of the business, the discussion should also focus on each relevant, reportable segment or other subdivision of the business and on the registrant as a whole. n242 The discussion of financial condition and results of operations should generally cover the three-year period covered by the financial statements and should use year-to-year comparisons or any other formats that in the registrant's judgment enhance a reader's understanding of financial conditions and results of operations. n243 A registrant that qualifies as a smaller reporting company need only cover the two-year period required in Article 8 of Regulation S-X and should also use year-to-year comparisons or any other formats that enhance a reader's understanding. n244

The registrant also should provide the following information pursuant to Item 303(a):

(1) Liquidity. n245 The registrant must identify any known trends or demands, commitments, events or uncertainties reasonably likely to result in a material increase or decrease in the registrant's liquidity. n246

Liquidity should be discussed on both a long-term and short-term basis and in the context of the registrant's own business. n247 The registrant should also indicate those balance sheet conditions or income or cash flow items that it believes may be indicators of its liquidity condition. n248 The course of action that the registrant has taken or proposes to take to remedy any material deficiency in liquidity must be identified. n249 In addition, the registrant must identify and separately describe internal and external sources of liquidity and must briefly discuss any material unused sources of liquid assets. n250

(2) Capital Resources. n251 The registrant is required to describe its material commitments for capital expenditures as of the end of the latest fiscal periods, the general purpose of those commitments and the anticipated source of funds to meet those commitments. n252 The registrant is also required to describe any known material trends in its capital resources and any expected material changes in the mix and relative cost of those resources. n253 The discussion of capital resources should include consideration of changes between equity, debt and any off-balance sheet financing arrangements. n254

(3) Results of Operations. The registrant is required to describe:

1. any unusual or infrequent events or transactions or any significant economic changes that materially affected reported income from continuing operations and the extent to which reported income was affected;
2. any significant components of revenues or expenses that in the registrant's judgment should be described to understand its results of operations;
3. any known trends or uncertainties that have had or that the registrant reasonably expects will have a material effect on net sales or revenues or income from continuing operations;
4. any known event that will cause a material change in the relationship between costs and revenues, e.g., future increases in costs of labor or materials;
5. by narrative discussion, the extent to which any material increases in net sales or revenues disclosed in the financial statements are attributable to:
 - a. increases in prices,
 - b. increases in volume or amount of goods or services being sold or
 - c. the introduction of new products or services; and
6. the effect of inflation and changing prices on the registrant's net sales and revenues and on income from continuing operations, for:
 - a. the three most recent fiscal years (a smaller reporting company need only provide such information for the last two most recent fiscal years), or

b. the fiscal years in which the registrant has been engaged in business, whichever period is shortest. n255

Any forward-looking information supplied is expressly covered by the safe harbor rule for projections. n256

In addition, the registrant should provide any other information that the registrant believes to be necessary to an understanding of its financial condition, changes in financial conditions and results of operations. n257

(4) Off-Balance Sheet Arrangements. In a separately captioned section, the registrant must discuss its off-balance sheet arrangements n258 that have or are reasonably likely to have a current or future effect, material to investors, on (i) the registrant's financial condition, (ii) changes in financial condition, (iii) revenues or expenses, (iv) results of operations, (v) liquidity, (vi) capital expenditures or (vii) capital resources. To the extent necessary to an understanding of the off-balance sheet arrangements, the items below are to be included in the disclosure, as well as other information that the registrant believes is necessary for an understanding of such arrangements. n259

1. The nature and business purpose to the registrant of such off-balance sheet arrangements;
2. The importance of such off-balance sheet arrangements to the registrant, with respect to its liquidity, capital resources, market risk support, credit risk support or other benefits;
3. The amounts of revenues, expenses and cash flows of the registrant arising from such arrangements; the nature and amounts of any interests retained, securities issued and other indebtedness incurred by the registrant in connection with such arrangements; and the nature and amounts of any other obligations or liabilities (including contingent obligations or liabilities) of the registrant arising from such arrangements that are or are reasonably likely to become material and the triggering events or circumstances that could cause them to arise; and
4. Any known event, demand, commitment, trend or uncertainty that will result in or is reasonably likely to result in the termination, or material reduction in availability to the registrant, of its off-balance sheet arrangements that provide material benefits to it, and the course of action that the registrant has taken or proposes to take in response to any such circumstances.

The registrant has no obligation under Item 303(a)(4) to make disclosure of an off-balance sheet arrangement until a definitive agreement that is unconditionally binding (or subject only to customary closing conditions) exists or, if there is no such agreement, when settlement of the transaction occurs. n260 The discussion of off-balance sheet arrangements need not repeat information provided in the footnotes to the financial statements, provided that the discussion clearly cross-references to specific information in the relevant footnotes and integrates the substance of the footnotes in a manner designed to inform readers of the significance of the information that is not included within the body of such discussion. n261

(5) Tabular Disclosure of Contractual Obligations. The registrant is required to provide the information as of the latest fiscal year end balance sheet date, with respect to the registrant's known contractual obligations, in tabular format for the periods set forth in Item 303(a)(5). Amounts must be provided, aggregated by type of contractual obligation, though the registrant may disaggregate the specified categories of contractual obligations using other categories suitable to its business. The presentation as whole must include all of the obligations of the registrant that fall within the specified categories. A presentation covering at least the periods specified must be included. The tabular presentation may be accompanied by footnotes to describe provisions that create, increase or accelerate obligations, or other pertinent data to the extent necessary for an understanding of the timing and amount of the registrant's specified contractual obligations.

n262 A registrant that qualifies as a smaller reporting company is not required to provide the tabular disclosure required by Item 303(a)(5). n263

1. Long-Term Debt Obligations. Payment obligations under long-term borrowings referenced in FASB Statement of Financial Accounting Standards No. 47, "Disclosure of Long-Term Obligations" (March 1981).

2. Capital Lease Obligation. Payment obligations under a lease classified as a capital lease pursuant to FASB Statement of Financial Accounting Standards No. 13, "Accounting for Leases" (November 1976).

4. Purchase Obligations. Agreements to purchase goods or services that are enforceable and legally binding on the registrant that specify all significant terms, including: fixed or minimum quantities to be purchased; fixed, minimum or variable price provisions; and the approximate timing of the transaction.

[B] Interim Periods. Item 303(b), "Interim periods," requires a registrant to provide a management's discussion and analysis of financial conditions and results of operations, providing the same information as required under Item 303(a) with the exception of the effect of inflation and changing prices on operations, with respect to any interim period for which financial statements are included or are required to be included by Article 3 of Regulation S-X. n264

The registrant is required to discuss any material changes in its financial condition, including any seasonal aspects of the registrant's business that may have had a material effect upon its financial condition n265 from the end of the preceding fiscal year to the date of the most recent interim balance sheet provided. n266 If the interim financial statements include an interim balance sheet as of the corresponding interim date of the preceding fiscal year, any material changes in financial condition from that date to the date of the most recent interim balance sheet provided should also be discussed. n267

The registrant is also required to discuss any material changes in its results of operations, including any significant elements of the registrant's income or loss from continuing operations that do not arise from or are not necessarily representative of the registrant's ongoing business, n268 for the most recent fiscal year-to-date period for which an income statement is provided and the corresponding year-to-date period of the preceding fiscal year. n269 If the registrant is required to provide, or has provided, an income statement for the most recent fiscal quarter, the discussion should also cover material changes in results of operations for that fiscal quarter and the corresponding fiscal quarter in the preceding fiscal year. n270 In addition, if the registrant has provided an income statement for the twelve-month period ended as of the date of the most recent interim balance sheet provided, the discussion should cover material changes for that twelve-month period and the twelve-month period ended as of the corresponding interim balance sheet date of the preceding fiscal year. n271

[C] Safe Harbor. Forward-looking information provided under Item 303(a)(4) and 303(a)(5) is protected by the safe harbor provided in Section 27A of the Securities Act and Section 21E of the Exchange Act ("statutory safe harbors"), provided that the disclosure is made by:

- (1) an issuer;
- (2) a person acting on behalf of the issuer;
- (3) an outside reviewer retained by the issuer making a statement on behalf of the issuer; or
- (4) an underwriter, with respect to information provided by or derived from information provided by the issuer. n272

Any forward-looking information supplied is expressly covered by the safe harbor protections of Rule 175 under the Securities Act. n273

[ix] Changes in and Disagreements with Accountants on Accounting and Financial Disclosure. Item 304 of Regulation S-K, "Changes in and Disagreements with Accountants on Accounting and Financial Disclosure," requires that if, during the registrant's two most recent fiscal years or any subsequent interim period, an independent accountant who was previously engaged as the principal accountant to audit the registrant's financial statements, or an independent accountant who was previously engaged to audit a significant subsidiary and on whom the principal accountant expressed reliance in its report, either resigned, indicated an intention not to stand for re-election after completion of the current audit, or was dismissed, the registrant must provide information with respect to:

- (1) whether the former accountant resigned, declined to stand for re-election or was dismissed and the date of whichever of the foregoing events is applicable;
- (2) whether the principal accountant's report on the financial statements for either of the past two years contained an adverse opinion, a disclaimer of opinion or was modified or qualified as to uncertainty, audit scope or accounting principles and the nature of any such adverse opinion, disclaimer of opinion, modification or qualification;
- (3) whether the decision to change accountants was recommended or approved by any audit or similar committee of the board of directors if the registrant has such a committee or by the board of directors the registrant does not have such a committee; and
- (4) whether, during the registrant's two most recent fiscal years and any subsequent interim period preceding such resignation, declination or dismissal, there were any disagreements with the former

accountant on any matter of accounting principles or practices, financial statement disclosure or auditing scope or procedure, which disagreement(s), if not resolved to the satisfaction of the former accountant, would have caused the accountant to make a reference to the subject matter of the disagreement(s) in connection with its report. n274

The registrant must also provide all of the information required by paragraph (4) above with respect to any of the events described below, of which the former accountant advised the registrant within the registrant's two most recent fiscal years and any subsequent interim period which preceded the former accountant's resignation, declination to stand for re-election, or dismissal, even though the registrant and the former accountant did not express a difference of opinion regarding the event ("reportable events"): n275

- (1) that the internal controls necessary for the registrant to develop reliable financial statements do not exist;
- (2) that information had come to the accountant's attention that led the accountant to conclude that it can no longer rely on management's representations or that it is unwilling to continue to be associated with the financial statements prepared by management;
- (3) that the scope of the audit needed to be expanded significantly, not acted upon because of the accountant's resignation or dismissal or for any other reason, or advice that information had come to the attention of the accountant during the two preceding fiscal years and any subsequent interim period which, although not further investigated due to the accountant's resignation or dismissal or for any other reason, could, if further investigated:
 - (a) materially impact the fairness or reliability of either a previously issued audit report or the underlying financial statements, or the financial statements issued or to be issued covering the fiscal period(s) subsequent to the date of the most recent financial statements covered by an audit report (including information that may prevent the accountants from rendering an unqualified audit report on those financial statements), or
 - (b) cause the accountant to be unwilling to rely on management's representations or be associated with the registrant's financial statements; or
- (4) that information has come to the accountant's attention which creates an issue which was not resolved to the accountant's satisfaction prior to the accountant's resignation, dismissal or declination to stand for re-election because the accountant has concluded that the information materially impacts the fairness or reliability of either
 - (a) a previously issued audit report or the underlying financial statements, or
 - (b) the financial statements issued or to be issued covering the fiscal period(s) subsequent to the date of the most recent financial statements covered by an audit report (including information that, unless resolved to the accountant's satisfaction, would prevent the accountant from rendering an unqualified audit report on the subject financial statements).

If the "reportable event" led to a disagreement or difference of opinion, then the event should be reported as a disagreement under paragraph (a)(1)(iv) of Item 304 and need not be reported under paragraph (a)(1)(v). n277

If, during the registrant's two most recent fiscal years or any subsequent interim period, a new independent accountant has been engaged as either the principal accountant to audit the registrant's financial statements or as an independent accountant to audit a significant subsidiary and on whom the principal accountant is expected to express reliance in its report, the registrant shall identify the newly engaged accountant and indicate the date of engagement. If, during the same time period, the registrant or someone on the registrant's behalf consulted the newly engaged accountant regarding:

- (a) the application of accounting principles to a specified transaction, either completed or proposed, or the type of audit opinion that might be rendered on the registrant's financial statements and there was provided to the registrant by such newly engaged accountant either a written report or oral advice which the new accountant concluded was an important factor considered by the registrant in reaching a decision as to the accounting, auditing or financial reporting issue; or
- (b) any matter that was either the subject of a "disagreement" as defined in Item 304(a)(1)(iv) and the related instructions to Item 304 or a "reportable event" as described in Item 304(a)(1)(v), then the registrant shall:

- (1) so state and identify the issues that were the subject of the consultations;
- (2) briefly describe the views of the newly engaged accountant as expressed orally or in writing to the registrant on each such issue and, if written views were received by the registrant, file them as an exhibit to the subject report or registration statement;
- (3) state whether the former accountant was consulted by the registrant regarding any such issues, and, if so, provide a summary of the former accountant's views; and
- (4) request the newly engaged accountant to review the disclosure required by Item 304(a) before it is filed with the Commission and provide the new accountant the opportunity to furnish the registrant with a letter addressed to the Commission containing any new information, clarification of the registrant's expression of its views, or the respects in which the new accountant does not agree with the statements made by the registrant. n278

The registrant shall file any such letter as an exhibit to the report or registration statement containing the disclosure required by Item 304. n279 The registrant shall request the former accountant to furnish the registrant with a letter addressed to the Commission stating whether the accountant agrees with the statements made by the registrant in response to Item 304(a) and, if not, stating the respects in which it does not agree. The registrant shall file the former accountant's letter as an exhibit to the report or registration statement containing the disclosure. If the former accountant's letter is not available at the time of filing, it shall be filed by amendment within ten days thereafter. n280

If in connection with a change in accountants subject to paragraph (a) of Item 304, there was any "disagreement" of the type described in paragraph (a)(1)(iv) or any "reportable event" as described in paragraph (a)(1)(v) of Item 304 and during the fiscal year in which the change of accountants took place or during the subsequent fiscal year there have been transactions or events similar to those which involved the disagreement or reportable event, and such transactions or events were material and were accounted for or disclosed in a manner different from that which the former accountants apparently would have concluded was required, then the registrant shall state:

- (1) the existence and nature of the disagreement or reportable event; and
- (2) the effect on the financial statements if the method had been followed which the former accountants apparently would have concluded was required. n281

[x] Quantitative and Qualitative Disclosures About Market Risk.

The information concerning market risk caused by use of market risk sensitive instruments such as derivative financial instruments is governed by Item 305 of Regulation S-K. n282 A registrant that qualifies as a smaller reporting company is not required to provide the information required by Item 305.

Item 305 of Regulation S-K, "Quantitative and qualitative disclosures about market risk," requires the registrant to provide information on market risk sensitive instruments. The Commission recognized the value of market risk sensitive instruments as effective tools for managing exposures to market risk, but noted the significant, and sometimes unexpected, losses resulting from changes in interest rates, foreign currency exchange rates and commodity prices, among other things. n283

The disclosures called for by Item 305 are intended to clarify the registrant's exposures to market risk associated with activities in "derivative financial instruments," "other financial instruments" and "derivative commodity instruments". n284

These terms are defined as follows:

- "Derivative financial instruments" has the same meaning as defined by U.S. GAAP and includes futures, forwards, swaps, options and other financial instruments with similar characteristics; n285
- "Other financial instruments" means all financial instruments as defined by generally accepted accounting principles for which fair value disclosures are required, except for derivative financial instruments; n286 and
- "Derivative commodity instruments" includes (to the extent such instruments are not derivative financial instruments) commodity futures, commodity forwards, commodity swaps, commodity options and other commodity instruments with similar characteristics that are permitted by contract or business custom to be settled in cash or with another financial instrument. Settlement in cash includes settlement in cash of the net change in value of the derivative commodity instrument (e.g., net cash settlement based on changes in the price of the underlying commodity). n287

In addition to these instruments, registrants are encouraged to include other market risk sensitive instruments, positions and transactions within these disclosures. n288 Such instruments, positions and transactions might include commodity positions, derivative commodity instruments that are not permitted by contract or business custom to be settled in cash or with another financial instrument, cash flows from anticipated transactions n289 and financial instruments excluded from the definition of "other financial instruments." n290 If a registrant elects to include voluntarily a particular type of instrument, position or transaction in their quantitative disclosures about market risk, that registrant should include all, rather than some, of those instruments, positions or transactions within those disclosures. n291

Registrants should present the information required by Item 305 outside of, and not incorporate the information into, the financial statements (including the footnotes to the financial statements). In addition, registrants are encouraged to provide the required information in one location. However, alternative presentation, such as inclusion of all or part of the information in Management's Discussion and Analysis, may be used at the discretion of the registrant. If information is disclosed in more than one location, registrants should provide cross-references to the locations of the related disclosures. n292

[A] Quantitative Information About Market Risk. Item 305(a), "Quantitative information about market risk," requires the registrant to provide, in its reporting currency, quantitative information about market risk. This information should be presented in one of three alternative disclosure formats, tabular presentation, sensitivity analysis and value at risk, each of which is discussed in detail below. Under any of these three disclosure alternatives, registrants should characterize market risk sensitive instruments into instruments entered into (i) for trading purposes, n293 or (ii) for other purposes. Within each of these portfolios, separate quantitative information shall be presented, to the extent material, for each market risk exposure category (i.e., interest rate risk, foreign currency exchange rate risk, commodity price risk and other relevant market risks, such as equity price risk). n294

A registrant may use one of the three disclosure alternatives for all of the required quantitative disclosures about market risk. A registrant may also choose, from among the three alternatives, one disclosure alternative for market risk sensitive instruments entered into for trading purposes, and another disclosure alternative for market risk sensitive instruments entered into for other than trading purposes. Alternatively, a registrant may choose any disclosure alternative, from among the three alternatives, for each risk exposure category within the trading and other than trading portfolios. n295

The first alternative disclosure format is tabular presentation of information related to market risk sensitive instruments. n296 This presentation should include fair values of the market risk sensitive instruments and contract terms sufficient to determine future cash flows from those instruments, categorized by expected maturity dates. n297 Tabular information relating to contract terms should allow readers of the table to determine expected cash flows from the market risk sensitive instruments for each of the next five years. Comparable tabular information for any remaining years should be displayed as an aggregate amount. n298

Within each risk exposure category, the market risk sensitive instruments should be grouped based on common characteristics, within the foreign currency exchange rate risk category, by functional currency, and within the commodity price risk category, by type of commodity. n299

When grouping based on common characteristics, instruments should be categorized, at a minimum, by the following characteristics, when material:

- Fixed rate or variable rate assets or liabilities;
- Long or short forwards and futures;
- Written or purchased put or call options with similar strike prices;
- Receive fixed and pay variable swaps, receive variable and pay fixed swaps and receive variable and pay variable swaps;
- The currency in which the instruments' cash flows are denominated;
- Financial instruments for which foreign currency transaction gains and losses are reported in the same manner as translation adjustments under generally accepted accounting principles; and
- Derivatives used to manage risks inherent in anticipated transactions. n300

Registrants may aggregate information regarding functional currencies that are economically related, managed together for internal risk management purposes, and have statistical correlations of greater than 75% over each of the past three years. n301

Market risk sensitive instruments that are exposed to rate or price changes in more than one market risk exposure category should be presented within the tabular information for each of the risk exposure categories to which those instruments are exposed. n302

If a currency swap eliminates all foreign currency exposures in the cash flows of a foreign currency denominated debt instrument, neither the currency swap nor the foreign currency denominated debt instrument are required to be disclosed in the foreign currency risk exposure category. However, both the currency swap and the foreign currency denominated debt instrument should be disclosed in the interest rate risk exposure category. n303

The contents of the table and related assumptions that should be described include, but are not limited to:

- The different amounts reported in the table for various categories of the market risk sensitive instruments (e.g., principal amounts for debt, notional amounts for swaps and contract amounts for options and futures);
- The different types of reported market rates or prices (e.g. contractual rates or prices, spot rates or prices, forward rates or prices); and
- Key prepayment or reinvestment assumptions relating to the timing of reported amounts. n304

The second alternative disclosure format is sensitivity analysis disclosure that expresses the potential loss in future earnings, fair values or cash flows of market risk sensitive instruments resulting from one or more selected hypothetical changes in interest rates, foreign currency exchange rates, commodity prices and other relevant market rates or prices over a selected period of time. n305 The magnitude of selected hypothetical changes in rates or prices may differ among and within market risk exposure categories. Registrants should provide a description of the contents of the table and any related assumptions necessary to understand these disclosures. n306

Registrants should select hypothetical changes in market rates or prices that are expected to reflect reasonably possible near-term changes in those rates and prices. In this regard, absent economic justification for the selection of a different amount, registrants should use changes that are not less than 10% of end of period market rates or prices. n307

Market risk sensitive instruments that are exposed to rate or price changes in more than one market risk exposure category should be included in the sensitivity analysis disclosures for each market risk category to which those instruments are exposed. n308

Registrants with multiple foreign currency exchange rate exposures should prepare foreign currency sensitivity analysis disclosures that measure the aggregate sensitivity to changes in all foreign currency exchange rate exposures, including the effects of changes in both transactional currency/functional currency exchange rate exposures and functional currency/reporting currency exchange rate exposures. n309

Models, assumptions and parameters that should be described include, but are not limited to, how loss is defined by the model (e.g., loss in earnings, fair values or cash flows), a general description of the modeling technique (e.g., duration modeling, modeling that measures the change in net present values arising from selected hypothetical changes in market rates or prices and a description as to how optionality is addressed by the model), the types of instruments covered by the model (e.g., derivative financial instruments, other financial instruments, derivative commodity instruments and whether other instruments are included voluntarily, such as certain commodity instruments and positions, cash flows from anticipated transactions and financial instruments excluded from the definition of "other financial instruments," and other relevant information about the model's assumptions and parameters (e.g., the magnitude and timing of selected hypothetical changes in market rates or prices used, the method by which discount rates are determined and key prepayment or reinvestment assumptions). n310

The third alternative disclosure format is value at risk disclosure that express the potential loss in future earnings, fair values or cash flows of market risk sensitive instruments over a selected period of time, with a selected likelihood of occurrence, from changes in interest rates, foreign currency exchange rates, commodity prices and other relevant market rates or prices. n311 For each category for which value at risk disclosures are required, the registrant should provide either:

- The average, high and low amounts, or the distribution of the value at risk amounts for the reporting period;
- The average, high and low amounts, or the distribution of actual changes in fair values, earnings or cash flows from the market risk sensitive instruments occurring during the reporting period; or
- The percentage or number of times the actual changes in fair values, earnings or cash flows from the market risk sensitive instruments exceeded the value at risk amounts during the reporting period. n312

Registrants should provide a description of the model, assumptions and parameters which are necessary to understand these disclosures. n313

The confidence intervals selected should reflect reasonably possible near-term changes in market rates and prices. In this regard, absent economic justification for the selection of different confidence intervals, registrants should use intervals that are 95% or higher. n314

Registrants with multiple foreign currency exchange rate exposures should prepare foreign currency value at risk analysis disclosures that measure the aggregate sensitivity to changes in all foreign currency rate exposures, including the aggregate effects of changes in both transactional currency/functional currency exchange rate exposures and functional currency/reporting currency exchange rate exposures. n315

Model, assumptions and parameters that should be described include, but are not limited to, how loss is defined by the model (e.g., loss in earnings, fair values or cash flows), the type of model used (e.g. variance/covariance, historical simulation or Monte Carlo simulation and a description as to how optionality is addressed by the model), the types of instruments covered by the model (e.g., derivative financial instruments, other financial instruments, derivative commodity instruments, and whether other instruments are included voluntarily, such as certain commodity instruments and positions, cash flows from anticipated transactions and financial instruments excluded from the definition of "other financial instruments," and other relevant information about the model's assumptions and parameters (e.g., holding periods, confidence intervals and, when appropriate, the methods used for aggregating value at risk amounts across market risk exposure categories, such as by assuming perfect positive correlation, independence or actual observed correlation). n316

Registrants that voluntarily include other market risk sensitive instruments, positions and transactions within their quantitative disclosures about market risk under the sensitivity analysis or value at risk disclosure alternatives are not required to provide separate market risk disclosures for any voluntarily selected instruments, positions or transactions. Instead, registrants seeking the sensitivity analysis and value at risk disclosure alternatives are permitted to present comprehensive market risk disclosures, which reflect the combined market risk exposures inherent in both the required and any voluntarily selected instruments, positions or transactions. Registrants that choose the tabular presentation disclosure alternative should present voluntarily selected instruments, positions or transactions in a manner consistent with the requirements in Item 305(a) for market risk sensitive instruments. n317

A materiality assessment should be made for each market risk exposure category within the trading and other than trading portfolios. Registrants should evaluate both:

- The materiality of the fair values of derivative financial instruments, other financial instruments and derivative commodity instruments outstanding as of the end of the latest fiscal year n318; and

- The materiality of potential, near-term losses in future earnings, fair values and/or cash flows from reasonably possible near-term changes in market rates or prices. n319

If either of these items are material, the registrant should disclose quantitative and qualitative information about market risk, if such market risk for the particular market risk exposure category is material. n320

Registrants should discuss material limitations that cause this information not to fully reflect the net market risk exposures of the entity. This discussion should include summarized descriptions of instruments, positions and transactions omitted from the quantitative market risk disclosure information or the features of instruments, positions and transactions that are included, but not fully reflected in the quantitative market risk disclosure information. n321 Limitations that should be considered include, but are not limited to:

- The exclusion of certain market risk sensitive instruments, positions and transactions from the disclosures required under Item 305(a)(1) (e.g., derivative commodity instruments not permitted by contract or business custom to be settled in cash or with another financial instrument, commodity positions, cash flows from anticipated transactions and financial instruments excluded from the definition of "other financial instruments." Failure to include such instruments, positions and transactions in preparing the disclosures under Item 305(a)(1) may be a limitation because the resulting disclosures may not fully reflect the net market risk of a registrant; and
- The ability of disclosures required under Item 305(a)(1) to reflect fully the market risk that may be inherent in instruments with leverage, option or prepayment features (e.g., options, including written options, structured notes, collateralized mortgage obligations, leveraged swaps and options embedded in swaps). n322

Registrants should present summarized market risk information for the preceding fiscal year. In addition, registrants should discuss the reasons for material quantitative changes in market risk exposures between the current and preceding fiscal years. This information is not required if disclosure is not required for the current fiscal year, and is also not required for the first fiscal year in which a registrant must present Item 305 information. n323

If registrants change disclosure alternatives or key model characteristics, assumptions and parameters used in providing quantitative information about market risk (e.g. changing from tabular presentation to value at risk, changing the scope of instruments included in the model or changing the definition of loss from fair values to earnings), and if the effects of any such change is material, the registrant should:

- Explain the reasons for the change; and
- Either provide summarized comparable information, under the new disclosure method, for the preceding year or, in addition to providing disclosure for the current year under the new method, provide disclosures for the current year and preceding year under the method used in the preceding year. n324

[B] Qualitative Information About Market Risk. Item 305(b), "Qualitative information about market risk," requires the registrant to describe, to the extent material:

- (1) the registrant's primary market risk exposures; n325
- (2) how those exposures are managed. Such descriptions shall include, but not be limited to, a discussion of the objectives, general strategies and instruments, if any, used to manage those exposures; and

(3) changes in either the registrant's primary market risk exposures or how those exposures are managed, when compared to what was in effect during the most recently completed fiscal year and what is known or expected to be in effect in future reporting periods. n326

Qualitative information about market risk should be presented separately for market risk sensitive instruments entered into for trading purpose and those entered into for purposes other than trading. n327

[C] Interim Periods. Item 305(c), "Interim periods," provides that if interim period financial statements are included or are required to be included by Article 3 of Regulation S-X, discussion should be provided so as to enable the reader to assess the sources and effects of material changes in information that would be provided under Item 305 of Regulation S-K from the end of the preceding fiscal year to the date of the most recent interim balance sheet. n328

[D] Safe Harbor. Item 305(d), "Safe harbor," provides that the statutory safe harbor provided under the Securities Act for forward-looking information applies to certain information provided under Item 305, n329 provided that the disclosure is made by:

- (1) an issuer;
- (2) a person acting on behalf of the issuer;
- (3) an outside reviewer retained by the issuer making a statement on behalf of the issuer; or
- (4) an underwriter, with respect to information provided by the issuer or information derived from information provided by the issuer. n330

[xi] Directors, Executive Officers, Promoters and Control Persons.

The information concerning the identities, family relationships, business experience and involvement in legal proceedings of the registrant's directors, executive officers and certain significant employees is governed by Item 401 of Regulation S-K.

From the standpoint of the prospective investor, this section of the prospectus may be of importance because in many instances the investor may base his or her judgment on whether to purchase upon the character and reputation of those persons associated with the registrant in policy-making capacities. Thus, the listing of a person as a director who has never acted in that capacity or who has resigned from a previous directorship, n331 overstating a director's qualifications as an expert, n332 or exaggerating a director's success in past operations, n333 are false or misleading practices. Similarly, it is misleading to create the impression in the prospectus that a group of well-known and highly successful persons is giving its time and effort to building up the registrant's business when in fact the names of such persons are being used merely as "window dressing." n334 In the same vein, failure to disclose relevant criminal records constitutes a material omission. n335

[A] Identification of Directors. Item 401(a), "Identification of directors," requires the registrant to list the names and ages of all directors of the registrant, and all persons nominated or chosen to become directors n336 and to disclose as to each such person:

- (1) all positions and offices held with the registrant;
- (2) the term of office as director and any periods during which the person served as such; and

(3) any arrangement or understanding between the director and any other persons, including the name of such other persons, pursuant to which the director was or is to be selected as a director or nominee. n337

[B] Identification of Executive Officers. Item 401(b), "Identification of executive officers," requires the registrant to disclose the same information concerning its executive officers n338 as is required concerning its directors. n339

[C] Identification of Certain Significant Employees. Item 401(c), "Identification of certain significant employees," requires that if the registrant employs persons such as production managers, sales managers or research scientists who are not executive officers but who are expected to make significant contributions to the business of the registrant, those persons must be identified and their backgrounds disclosed to the same extent as for executive officers. This information, however, is not required if the registrant, immediately prior to the filing of the Form S-1 was:

(1) subject to the reporting requirements of Section 13(a) or 15(d) of the Exchange Act; or

(2) an insurance company whose securities are exempt from the reporting requirements of Section 13(a) of the Exchange Act by Section 12(g)(2)(G). n340

[D] Family Relationships. Item 401(d), "Family relationships," requires the registrant to state the nature of any family relationship n341 between any director, executive officer or person nominated or chosen by the registrant to become a director or executive officer.

[E] Business Experience. New rules affecting the required disclosure under Item 401(e) are effective February 28, 2010. n342 Item 401(e), "Business experience," requires a brief account of the business experience during the past five years of each person identified by the registrant as a director, executive officer or chosen or nominated to become a director or executive officer and each significant employee, including principal occupations and employment, the name and principal business of the organization in which the occupation or employment was carried on and whether the corporation or organization in which the person was previously employed was a parent, subsidiary or other affiliate of the registrant. n343 In addition, for each director or person nominated or chosen to become a director, there must be a brief discussion of the specific experience, qualifications, attributes or skills that led to the conclusion that the person should serve as a director for the registrant at the time that the disclosure is made, in light of the registrant's business and In addition, for each director or person nominated or chosen to become a director, there must be a brief discussion of the specific experience, qualifications, attributes or skills that led to the conclusion that the person should serve as a director for the registrant at the time that the disclosure is made, in light of the registrant's business and structure. n344 Directorships held by each director or person nominated or chosen to become a director in a company:

(1) with a class of securities registered under Section 12 of the Exchange Act,

(2) subject to the reporting requirements of Section 15(d) of the Exchange Act, or

(3) registered as an investment company under the Investment Company Act of 1940, must be indicated, and the company in which the directorship was held stated. n345 If any person identified by the registrant as an executive officer or significant employee has been employed by the registrant or any of the registrant's subsidiaries for less than five years, the registrant must also include a brief explanation of the nature of the responsibility undertaken by the person in principal occupations and employment in the past five years. n346

[F] Involvement in Certain Legal Proceedings. New rules affecting the required disclosure under Item 401(f) are effective February 28, 2010. n347 Item 401(f), "Involvement in certain legal proceedings," requires the registrant to describe any of the following legal proceedings that occurred during the preceding five years n348 and that are material n349 to an evaluation of the ability or integrity of a person who is a director, director nominee or executive officer of the registrant:

(1) a petition under federal bankruptcy or state insolvency laws n350 that was filed by or against, or the appointment of a receiver or similar officer by a court for, the business or property of

(a) the person,

(b) any partnership in which the person was a general partner at, or within two years before, the time of the filing, or

(c) any corporation or business association of which the person was an executive officer at, or within two years before, the time of the filing; n351

(2) a criminal proceeding in which the person was convicted, or a pending criminal proceeding of which the person is a named subject, excluding traffic violations and other minor offenses; n352

(3) an order, judgment or decree, not subsequently reversed, suspended or vacated, of a court of competent jurisdiction, of which the person was the subject, permanently or temporarily enjoining the person from, or otherwise limiting, the following activities

(a) acting as a futures commission merchant, introducing broker, commodity trading advisor, commodity pool operator, floor broker, leverage transaction merchant, any other person regulated by the Commodity Futures Trading Commission or an associated person of any of the foregoing, or an investment adviser, underwriter, broker or dealer in securities, or as an affiliated person, director or employee of any investment company, bank, savings and loan association or insurance company, or engaging in or continuing any conduct or practice in connection with the activity,

(b) engaging in any type of business practice or

(c) engaging in any activity in connection with the purchase or sale of any security or commodity or in connection with any violation of federal or state securities law or federal commodities law; n353

(4) an order, judgment or decree, not subsequently reversed, suspended or vacated, of any federal or state authority, of which the person was the subject, barring, suspending or otherwise limiting for more than sixty days the right of the person to engage in any activity described in paragraph 3(a) above, or to be associated with persons engaged in such activity; n354

(5) a finding by a court of competent jurisdiction in a civil action or by the Commission that the person violated any federal or state securities law, and the judgment in the civil action or the finding by the Commission was not subsequently reversed, suspended or vacated; n355

(6) a finding by a court of competent jurisdiction in a civil action or by the Commodities Futures Trading Commission that the person violated any federal commodities law, and the judgment in the civil action or the finding by the CFTC was not subsequently reversed, suspended or vacated; n356

(7) a Federal or State judicial or administrative order, judgment, decree or finding, not subsequently reversed, suspended or vacated, relating to an alleged violation of

(a) any Federal or State securities or commodities law or regulation,

(b) any law or regulation respecting financial institutions or insurance companies including, but not limited to, a temporary or permanent injunction, order of disgorgement or restitution, civil money penalty or temporary or permanent cease-and-desist order or removal or prohibition order,

(c) any law or regulation prohibiting mail or wire fraud or fraud in connection with any business entity, or n357

(8) a sanction or order, not subsequently reversed, suspended or vacated, of any self-regulatory organization (as defined in Section 3(a)(26) of the Exchange Act), any registered entity (as defined in Section 1(a)(29) of the Commodity Exchange Act) or any equivalent exchange, association, entity or organization that has disciplinary authority over its members or persons associated with a member. n358

The registrant may also explain any mitigating circumstances associated with the legal proceedings. n359

[G] Promoters and Control Persons. Item 401(g), "Promoters and control persons," requires that registrants not subject to the periodic reporting requirements of the Exchange Act for the twelve months preceding a filing of the registration statements must make the disclosures called for by Item 401(f) as to material events within the preceding five years involving (1) any control person, and (2) if the registrant was organized within the preceding five years, any promoter. n360

[H] Audit Committee Financial Expert. Item 401(h), "Audit committee financial expert," calls for disclosure that the board of directors of the registrant has determined that the registrant either (A) has at least one audit committee financial expert serving on its audit committee or (B) does not have an audit committee financial expert serving on its audit committee. The registrant must then disclose the name of the audit committee financial expert and whether that person is independent. n361 If the registrant does not have an audit committee financial expert, it must explain why.

A person with the following attributes qualifies as an audit committee financial expert:

- (1) an understanding of generally accepted accounting principles and financial statements;
- (2) the ability to assess the general application of such principles in connection with the accounting for estimates, accruals and reserves;
- (3) experience preparing, auditing, analyzing or evaluating financial statements that present a breadth and level of complexity of accounting issues that are generally comparable to the breadth and complexity of issues that can reasonably be expected to be raised by the registrant's financial statements, or experience actively supervising one or more persons engaged in such activities;
- (4) an understanding of internal control over financial reporting; and
- (5) an understanding of audit committee functions.

These attributes must have been acquired through (i) education and experience as a principal financial officer, principal accounting officer, controller, public accountant or auditor or experience in one or more positions that involve the performance of similar functions, (ii) experience actively supervising a principal financial officer, principal accounting officer, controller, public accountant, auditor or person performing similar functions, (iii) experience overseeing or assessing the performance of companies or public accountants with respect to the preparation, auditing or evaluation of financial statements or (iv) other relevant experience (which shall be briefly described).

A person who is determined to be an audit committee financial expert will not be deemed an expert for the purposes of section 11 of the Securities Act as a result of being designated or identified as an audit committee financial expert pursuant to Item 401, nor does it impose on that person any duties, obligations or liability that are greater than the duties, obligations and liability imposed on a member of the audit committee and board of directors in the absence of the designation or identification. The duties, obligations or liability of any other member of the audit committee or board of directors are not affected by designating a person an audit committee financial expert.

[xii] Executive Compensation.

Item 402 of Regulation S-K, "Executive Compensation," requires disclosure of the compensation of officers and directors in clear concise and understandable terms. n362

The framework of Item 402 generally divides the executive compensation discussion into five categories:

- Compensation discussion and analysis of material factors underlying compensation policies and decisions reflected in the data presented in the tables required by Item 402; n363
- Compensation with respect to the last fiscal year (and the two preceding fiscal years), as reflected in a summary compensation table that presents compensation paid currently or deferred (including options, restricted stock and similar grants) and compensation consisting of current earnings or awards that are part of a plan, and as supplemented by a table providing backup information for certain data in the summary compensation table;
- Holdings of equity-related interests that relate to compensation or are potential sources of future gains, with a focus on compensation-related equity interests that were awarded in prior years and are "at risk," whether or not these interests are in-the-money, as well as recent realization on these interests, such as through vesting or restricted stock or the exercise of options and similar instruments;
- Retirement and other post-employment compensation, including retirement and deferred compensation plans, other retirement benefits and other post-employment benefits, such as those payable in the event of a change in control; and
- Director compensation, as reflected in a summary table.

[A] General. Paragraph (a) of Item 402 contains general provisions stating that Item 402 requires clear, concise and understandable disclosure of all plan n364 and non-plan compensation awarded to, earned by, or paid to the "named executive officers" and directors of the registrant by any person for all services rendered in all capacities to the registrant and its subsidiaries. n365 The "named executive officers" as to whom disclosure under Item 402 is required are:

- (1) all individuals serving as the registrant's principal executive officer or acting in a similar capacity during the last completed fiscal year (the "PEO"), regardless of compensation level;
- (2) all individuals serving as the registrant's principal financial officer or acting in a similar capacity during the last completed fiscal year (the "PFO"), regardless of compensation level;
- (3) the registrant's three most highly compensated executive officers other than the PEO and PFO who were serving as executive officers at the end of the last completed fiscal year; and

(4) up to two additional individuals for whom disclosure would have been provided pursuant to paragraph (3) above, except that the individual was not serving as an executive officer n366 of the registrant at the end of the last completed fiscal year. n367

If the named executive of the registrant served in such capacity during any part of a fiscal year with respect to which information is required, Item 402(a)(4) provides that such information should be provided as to all of his or her compensation for the full fiscal year.

The general provisions of Item 402 also provide that any table or column called for by Item 402 may be omitted if there has been no compensation awarded to, earned by or paid to any of the named executives or directors required to be reported in that table or column in any fiscal year covered by that table.

[B] Compensation Discussion and Analysis. Item 402(b), "Compensation discussion and analysis," requires an overview of the material factors underlying compensation policies and decisions regarding the named executive officers. n368 The Compensation Discussion and Analysis should address the information contained in the tables required by Item 402. n369

Item 402(b)(1) requires the registrant to discuss the compensation awarded to, earned by, or paid to the named executive officers. The discussion must explain all material elements of the compensation, and must describe the following:

- the objectives of the registrant's compensation programs;
- what the compensation program is designed to reward;
- each element of compensation;
- why the registrant chooses to pay each element;
- how the registrant determines the amount (and, where applicable, the formula) for each element to pay; and
- how each compensation element and the registrant's decisions regarding that element fit into the registrant's overall compensation objectives and affect decisions regarding other elements. n370

Examples of the material information to be disclosed as part of the Compensation Discussion and Analysis may include: n371

- (1) the policies for allocating between long-term and currently paid out compensation;
- (2) the policies for allocating between cash and non-cash compensation, and among different forms of non-cash compensation;
- (3) for long-term compensation, the basis for allocating compensation to each different form of award (such as relationship of the award to the achievement of the registrant's long-term goals, management's exposure to downside equity performance risk, correlation between cost to registrant and expected benefits to the registrant);
- (4) how the determination is made as to when awards are granted, including awards of equity-based compensation such as options;

- (5) what specific items of corporate performance are taken into account in setting compensation policies and making compensation decisions;
- (6) how specific forms of compensation are structured and implemented to reflect these items of the registrant's performance, including whether discretion can be or has been exercised (either to award compensation absent attainment of the relevant performance goals or to reduce or increase the size of any award or payout), identifying any particular exercise of discretion, and stating whether it applied to one or more named executive officers or to all compensation subject to the relevant performance goals;
- (7) how specific forms of compensation are structured and implemented to reflect the named executive officer's individual performance and/or individual contribution to these items of the registrant's performance, describing the elements of individual performance and/or contribution that are taken into account;
- (8) registrant policies and decisions regarding the adjustment or recovery of awards or payments if the relevant registrant performance measures upon which they are based are restated or otherwise adjusted in a manner that would reduce the size of a payment;
- (9) the factors considered in decisions to increase or decrease compensation materially;
- (10) how compensation or amounts realizable from prior compensation are considered in setting other elements of compensation (e.g., how gains from prior option or stock awards are considered in setting retirement benefits);
- (11) with respect to any contract, agreement, plan or arrangement, whether written or unwritten, that provides for payments in connection with any termination or change-in-control, the basis for selecting particular events as triggering payment (e.g., the rationale for providing a single trigger for payment in the event of a change-in-control);
- (12) the impact of the accounting and tax treatments of the particular form of compensation;
- (13) the registrant's equity or other security ownership requirements or guidelines (specifying applicable amounts and forms of ownership), and any registrant policies regarding hedging the economic risk of such ownership;
- (14) whether the registrant engaged in any benchmarking n372 of total compensation, or any material element of compensation, identifying the benchmark and, if applicable, its components (including component companies); and
- (15) the role of executive officers in determining executive compensation. n373

As part of the Compensation Discussion and Analysis, a registrant is not required to disclose target levels with respect to specific quantitative or qualitative performance-related factors considered by the board of directors or compensation committee. n374 Likewise, the registrant need not disclose any other factors or criteria involving confidential trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information where such disclosure would result in competitive harm for the registrant. n375 If the registrant does disclose target levels and they are non-U.S. GAAP financial measures, such disclosure will not be subject to Regulation G and Item 10(e) of Regulation S-K. n376

[C] Summary Compensation Table. New rules affecting the required disclosure under Item 402(c) are effective

February 28, 2010. n377 Item 402(c), "Summary compensation table," requires the following information regarding compensation of the named executive officers for each of the registrant's last three completed fiscal years, n378 to be set forth in tabular form:

- (1) the name and principal position of the named executive officer (column (a));
- (2) the fiscal year covered (column (b));
- (3) the dollar value of base salary (cash and non-cash) earned by the named executive officer during the fiscal year covered (column (c)); n379
- (4) the dollar value of bonus (cash and non-cash) earned by the named executive officer during the fiscal year covered (column (d)); n380
- (5) for awards of stock, n381 the aggregate grant date fair value computed in accordance with FASB ASC Topic 718 (column (e));
- (6) for awards of options, n382 with or without tandem SARs, including awards that have subsequently been transferred, the aggregate grant date fair value computed in accordance with FASB ASC Topic 718 (column (f)); n383
- (7) the dollar value of all earnings for services performed during the fiscal year pursuant to awards under non-equity incentive plans, n384 and all earnings on any outstanding awards (column (g)); n385
- (8) the sum of the following amounts (column (h)): n386
 - (A) the aggregate change in the actuarial present value of the named executive officer's accumulated benefit under all defined benefit and actuarial pension plans (including supplemental plans) from the pension plan measurement date used for financial statement reporting purposes with respect to the registrant's audited financial statements for the prior completed fiscal year to the pension plan measurement date used for financial statement reporting purposes with respect to the registrant's audited financial statements for the covered fiscal year; n387 and
 - (B) above-market or preferential earnings on compensation that is deferred on a basis that is not tax-qualified, including such earnings on nonqualified defined contribution plans; n388
- (9) all other compensation for the covered fiscal year that the registrant could not properly report in any other column of the Summary Compensation Table (column (i)). n389 Such compensation must include, but is not limited to:
 - (A) perquisites and other personal benefits or property, unless the aggregate amount of such compensation is less than $10,000; n390
 - (B) all "gross-ups" or other amounts reimbursed during the fiscal year for the payment of taxes; n391
 - (C) the compensation cost, if any (computed in accordance with FAS 123R), for any security of the registrant or its subsidiaries purchased from the registrant or its subsidiaries (through deferral of salary or bonus, or otherwise) at a discount from the market price of such security at the date of purchase, unless that discount is available generally, either to all security holders or to all salaried employees of the registrant;

(D) the amount paid or accrued n392 to any named executive officer pursuant to a plan or arrangement in connection with:

(i) any termination, including without limitation through retirement, resignation, severance or constructive termination (including a change in responsibilities) of such executive officer's employment with the registrant and its subsidiaries; or

(ii) a change in control of the registrant;

(E) registrant contributions or other allocations to vested and unvested defined contribution plans;

(F) the dollar value of any life insurance premiums paid by, or on behalf of, the registrant during the covered fiscal year for the benefit of a named executive officer; and

(G) the dollar value of any dividends or other earnings paid on stock or option awards, when those amounts were not factored into the grant date n393 fair value required to be reported for the stock or option award in column (e) or (f) and

(10) the dollar value of total compensation for the covered fiscal year (column (j)). With respect to each named executive officer, disclose the sum of all amounts reported in columns (c) through (i). n394

All compensation should be disclosed in U.S. dollars and rounded to the nearest dollar. Where a named executive officer received compensation paid in a different currency, a footnote must be provided to identify such currency and describe the rate and methodology used to convert such payment amounts into dollars. n395 Finally, if a named executive officer is also a director who receives compensation for his or her services as a director, such compensation should be reflected in the Summary Compensation Table and a footnote should be included to identify and itemize such compensation and amounts. n396

[D] Grants of Plan-Based Awards Table. New rules affecting the required disclosure under 402(d) are effective February 28, 2010. n397 Item 402(d), "Grants of plan-based awards table," requires the following information concerning each grant of an award made to a named executive officer in the last completed fiscal year under any plan, including awards that subsequently have been transferred, in tabular format:

(1) the name of the named executive officer (column (a));

(2) the grant date for equity-based awards reported in the table (column (b)); n398

(3) the dollar value of the estimated future payout upon satisfaction of the conditions in question under non-equity incentive plan awards granted in the fiscal year, or the applicable range of estimated payouts denominated in dollars (threshold, target and maximum amount n399) (columns (c) through (e)); n400

(4) the number of shares of stock, or the number of shares underlying options to be paid out or vested upon satisfaction of the conditions in question under equity incentive plan awards granted in the fiscal year, or the applicable range of estimated payouts denominated in the number of shares of stock, or the number of shares underlying options under the award (threshold, target and maximum amount) (columns (f) through (h));

- (5) the number of shares of stock granted in the fiscal year that are not required to be disclosed in columns (f) through (h) (column (i));
- (6) the number of securities underlying options granted in the fiscal year that are not required to be disclosed in columns (f) through (h) (column (j));
- (7) the per-share exercise or base price of the options granted in the fiscal year (column (k)); n401 and
- (8) the grant date fair value of each equity award computed in accordance with FAS 123R (column (l)).

For each grant of an award made to a named executive officer during the fiscal year, disclosure on a separate line must be provided in the Grants of Plan-Based Awards Table. n403 If grants of awards were made to a named executive officer during the fiscal year under more than one plan, the registrant should identify the particular plan under which each such grant was made. n404 A tandem grant of two instruments, only one of which is granted under an incentive plan, need be reported only in column (i) or (j), as applicable. n405 For instance, an option granted in tandem with a performance share would be reported only as an option grant in column (j), with the tandem feature noted either by a footnote or accompanying textual narrative.

If the named executive officer paid any consideration for the award, the dollar amount of such payment should be disclosed in a footnote to the appropriate column. n406 Options, SARs and similar option-like instruments granted in connection with a repricing transaction or other material modification must be reported in the Grants of Plan-Based Awards Table. n407 For any equity awards that are subject to performance conditions, report in column (l) the value at the grant date based upon the probable outcome of such conditions. n408 However, the disclosure required by the table does not apply to any repricing that occurs through a preexisting formula or mechanism in the plan or award that results in the periodic adjustment of the option or SAR exercise or base price, an antidilution provision in a plan or award, or a recapitalization or similar transaction equally affecting all holders of the class of securities underlying the options or SARs. n409

[E] Narrative Disclosure to Summary Compensation Table and Grants of Plan-Based Awards Table. Item 402(e), "Narrative disclosure to summary compensation table and grants of plan-based awards table," requires the registrant to provide a narrative description of any material factors necessary to understand the information disclosed in the tables required by Item 402(c) and Item 402(d). n410 Such factors may include:

- (1) the material terms of each named executive officer's employment agreement or arrangement, whether written or unwritten;

- (3) the material terms of any award reported in the Grants of Plan-Based Awards Table under Item 402(d), including a general description of the formula or criteria to be applied in determining the amounts payable, and the vesting schedule. n413 The registrant should also describe any performance-based conditions, n414 and any other material conditions, that are applicable to the award; and
- (4) an explanation of the amount of salary and bonus in proportion to total compensation.

[F] Outstanding Equity Awards at Fiscal Year-End Table. Item 402(f), "Outstanding equity awards at fiscal year-end table," requires disclosure of information concerning unexercised options, stock that has not yet vested and equity incentive plan awards for each named executive officer outstanding as of the end of the registrant's last completed fiscal year. The Outstanding Equity Awards at Fiscal Year-End Table (the "Outstanding Equity Awards Table") must include:

- (1) the name of the named executive officer (column (a));

- (4) on an award-by-award basis, the total number of shares underlying unexercised options awarded under any equity incentive plan that have not been earned (column (d));
- (5) for each instrument reported in columns (b), (c) and (d) of the Outstanding Equity Awards Table, as applicable, the exercise or base price (column (e));
- (6) for each instrument reported in columns (b), (c) and (d) of the Outstanding Equity Awards Table, as applicable, the expiration date (column (f));
- (7) the total number of shares of stock that have not vested and that are not reported in column (i) of the Outstanding Equity Awards Table (column (g));
- (8) the aggregate market value of shares of stock that have not vested and that are not reported in column (j) of the Outstanding Equity Awards Table (column (h));
- (9) the total number of shares of stock, units or other rights awarded under any equity incentive plan that have not vested and that have not been earned, and, if applicable, the number of shares underlying any such unit or right (column (i)); and
- (10) the aggregate market or payout value of shares of stock, units or other rights awarded under any equity incentive plan that have not vested and that have not been earned (column (j)). n415

If any award has been transferred (other than for value), a footnote should be included identifying and disclosing the nature of such transfer. n416 The registrant should also disclose the vesting dates of options, shares of stock and equity incentive plan awards held at fiscal year-end in a footnote to the applicable column. n417 When preparing the Outstanding Equity Awards Table, where the expiration date and the exercise and/or base price of the instruments are identical, multiple awards may be aggregated. n418 Options or stock awarded under an equity incentive plan should be reported in columns (d) or (i) and (j), respectively, until the relevant performance condition has been satisfied. n419 Once the relevant performance condition has been satisfied, even if the option or stock award is subject to forfeiture conditions, (1) options should be reported in column (b) or (c), as appropriate, until they are exercised or expire, and (2) stock should be reported in columns (g) and (h) until it vests. n420

[G] Option Exercises and Stock Vested Table. Item 402(g), "Option exercises and stock vested table," requires the registrant to provide the information concerning each exercise of stock options, SARs and similar instruments, as well as each vesting of stock, including restricted stock, restricted stock units and similar instruments, during the last completed fiscal year for each of the named executive officers on an aggregated basis. The information should be presented in a table, which must include:

- (1) the name of the executive officer (column (a));
- (2) the number of securities for which the options were exercised (column (b));
- (3) the aggregate dollar value realized upon exercise of options, or upon the transfer of an award for value (column (c)); n421

[H] Pension Benefits. Item 402(h), "Pension benefits," requires the registrant to disclose information with respect to each plan that provides for payments or other benefits at, following, or in connection with retirement. n423 Such information should be presented in a table, with a separate row for each plan in which the named executive officer participates, n424 followed by a brief narrative description necessary to understand each plan covered in the table. n425 The table must include the following information:

- (1) the name of the executive officer (column (a));
- (2) the name of the plan (column (b));

- (5) the dollar amount of any payments and benefits paid to the named executive officer during the registrant's last completed fiscal year (column (e)).

Following the Pension Benefits Table, the registrant must provide a succinct narrative description of material factors necessary to understand each pension benefits plan disclosed. n428 Examples of such factors may include:

- (1) the material terms and conditions of payments and benefits available under the plan, including the plan's normal retirement payment and benefit formula and eligibility standards, and the effect of the form of benefit elected on the amount of annual benefits; n429
- (2) if any named executive officer is currently eligible for early retirement under any plan, the registrant should identify that named executive officer and the plan, and describe the plan's early retirement payment and benefit formula and eligibility standards; n430
- (3) the specific elements of compensation (e.g., salary, bonus, etc.) included in applying the payment and benefit formula, identifying each such element;

(4) with respect to named executive officers' participation in multiple plans, the different purposes for each plan; and

(5) the registrant's policies with regard to such matters as granting extra years of credited service.

[I] Nonqualified Defined Contribution and Other Nonqualified Deferred Compensation Plans. Item 402(i), "Nonqualified defined contribution and other nonqualified deferred compensation plans," requires the registrant to provide information in a table regarding each defined contribution plan or other plan that provides for the deferral of compensation on a basis that is not tax-qualified. The table must be followed by a brief narrative description of any material factors necessary to understand each plan disclosed. n431 The Nonqualified Deferred Compensation Table must include the following:

(1) the name of the executive officer (column (a));

(2) the measures for calculating interest or other plan earnings (including whether the measures are selected by the executive or the registrant and the frequency and manner in which selections may be changed), quantifying interest rates and other earnings measures applicable during the registrant's last fiscal year; and

(3) material terms with respect to payouts, withdrawals and other distributions. n434

[J] Potential Payments Upon Termination or Change-in-Control. Item 402(j), "Potential payments upon termination or change-in-control," requires narrative disclosure regarding each contract, agreement, plan or arrangement, whether written or unwritten, that provides for payments to a named executive officer at, following, or in connection with any termination n435 or a change in control of the registrant or a change in the named executive officer's responsibilities. n436 With respect to each named executive officer, the registrant must:

- (1) describe and explain the specific circumstances that would trigger payments or the provision of other benefits, including perquisites and health care benefits; n437
- (2) describe and quantify the estimated payments and benefits that would be provided in each covered circumstance, whether they would or could be lump sum, or annual, disclosing the duration, and by whom they would be provided;
- (3) describe and explain how the appropriate payment and benefit levels are determined under the various circumstances that trigger payments or provision of benefits;
- (4) describe and explain any material conditions or obligations applicable to the receipt of payments or benefits; n438 and

The registrant should provide quantitative disclosure under Item 402(j), assuming that the triggering event took place on the last business day of the registrant's last completed fiscal year, and that the price per share of the registrant's securities is the closing market price as of that date. n439 In the event that uncertainties exist as to the provision of payments and benefits or the amounts involved, the registrant must make a reasonable estimate (or a reasonable estimated range of amounts) applicable to the payment or benefit and disclose the material assumptions underlying such estimates. n440 The registrant need not provide disclosure on contracts, agreements, plans or arrangements to the extent they are generally available to all salaried employees and do not discriminate in scope, terms or operation in favor of executive officers. n441

[K] Compensation of Directors. New rules affecting the required disclosure under 402(k) are effective February 28, 2010. n442 Item 402(k), "Compensation of directors," requires disclosure concerning the compensation of directors in the registrant's last completed fiscal year in tabular format, followed by a narrative description of material factors necessary to understand the compensation disclosed in the table. Two or more directors may be grouped in a single row in the table if all elements of their compensation are identical. n443 The Director Compensation Table must include:

(B) above-market or preferential earnings on compensation that is deferred on a basis that is not tax-qualified, including such earnings on nonqualified defined contribution plans;

(7) all other compensation, regardless of the amount, for the covered fiscal year that the registrant could not properly report in any other column of the Director Compensation Table (column (g)). Such compensation must include, but is not limited to:

(B) all "gross-ups" or other amounts reimbursed during the fiscal year for the payment of taxes; n447

(C) the compensation cost (computed in accordance with FAS 123R), if any, for any security of the registrant or its subsidiaries purchased from the registrant or its subsidiaries (through deferral of salary or bonus, or otherwise) at a discount from the market price of such security at the date of purchase, unless that discount is available generally, either to all security holders or to all salaried employees of the registrant;

Following the Director Compensation Table, the registrant must provide a narrative description of any material factors necessary to understand the director compensation disclosed in the table. n450 Such factors may include:

[L] Smaller Reporting Companies. Item 402(l) provides that a registrant that qualifies as a "smaller reporting company" n453 may provide scaled disclosure with respect to executive compensation as set forth in paragraphs (m) through (r) of Item 402 of Regulation S-K. Consequently, smaller reporting companies may forgo the disclosure required by paragraphs (a) through (k) of Item 402. Under the scaled disclosure, in contrast with larger companies, smaller reporting companies will:

- provide executive compensation disclosure for only three named executive officers (specifically including the PEO, but not the PFO), rather than the five required of larger companies;
- provide the Summary Compensation Table disclosure for only two years, rather than the three years required of larger companies;
- not be required to provide a Compensation Discussion and Analysis;
- provide only three of the seven tables required of larger companies; n454
- provide alternative narrative disclosures; and
- not be required to include footnote disclosure of grant date fair value of equity awards in the Director Compensation Table. n455

[M] Smaller Reporting Companies--General. Item 402(m) contains general provisions stating that smaller reporting companies must provide clear, concise and understandable disclosure of all plan n456 and non-plan compensation awarded to, earned by, or paid to the "named executive officers" and directors of the registrant by any person for all services rendered in all capacities to the registrant and its subsidiaries. n457 The "named executive officers" of the smaller reporting company as to whom disclosure is required are:

- (1) all individuals serving as the smaller reporting company's principal executive officer or acting in a similar capacity during the last completed fiscal year ("PEO"), regardless of compensation level;
- (2) the smaller reporting company's two most highly compensated executive officers other than the PEO who were serving as executive officers at the end of the last completed fiscal year; and
- (3) up to two additional individuals for whom disclosure would have been provided pursuant to paragraph (2) above, except that the individual was not serving as an executive officer of the smaller reporting company at the end of the last completed fiscal year. n458

If the named executive served in such capacity during any part of the fiscal year with respect to which information is required, such information should be provided as to all of his or her compensation for the full fiscal year. n459 The general provisions of Item 402(m) also provide that any table or column called for by Item 402 may be omitted if there has been no compensation awarded to, earned by or paid to any of the named executive officers or directors required to be reported in that table or column in any fiscal year covered by that table. n460

[N] Smaller Reporting Companies--Summary Compensation Table. New rules affecting the required disclosure under 402(n) are effective February 28, 2010. n461 Item 402(n), "Smaller reporting companies--Summary compensation table," requires the following information regarding compensation of the named executive officers for each of the smaller reporting company's last two completed fiscal years n462 to be set forth in tabular form:

- (8) above-market or preferential earnings on compensation that is deferred on a basis that is not tax-qualified, including such earnings on nonqualified defined contribution plans (column (h)); n470

(10) the dollar value of total compensation for the covered fiscal year (column (j)). With respect to each named executive officer, disclose the sum of all amounts reported in columns (c) through (i). n476

All compensation should be disclosed in U.S. dollars and rounded to the nearest dollar. Where a named executive officer received compensation paid in a different currency, a footnote must be provided to identify such currency and describe the rate and methodology used to convert such payment amounts into dollars. n477 Finally, if a named executive officer is also a director who receives compensation for his or her services as a director, such compensation should be reflected in the Summary Compensation Table and a footnote should be included to identify and itemize such compensation and amounts. n478

Item 402(o) of Regulation S-K, "Smaller reporting companies--Narrative disclosure to summary compensation table," requires the smaller reporting company to provide a narrative description of any material factors necessary to understand the information disclosed in the Summary Compensation Table. n479 Examples of such factors may include:

[P] Smaller Reporting Companies--Outstanding Equity Awards at Fiscal Year-End Table. Item 402(p) of Regulation S-K, "Smaller reporting companies--Outstanding equity awards at fiscal year-end table," requires the smaller reporting company to provide information for each named executive officer, in tabular format, regarding unexercised options, stock that has not vested, and equity incentive plan awards outstanding as of the end of the smaller reporting company's last completed fiscal year. The Outstanding Equity Awards at Fiscal Year-End Table (the "Outstanding Equity Awards Table") must include:

If an award has been transferred other than for value, the smaller reporting company should identify and disclose the nature of such transfer in a footnote. n485 The smaller reporting company should also disclose the vesting dates of options, shares of stock and equity incentive plan awards held at fiscal year-end in a footnote to the applicable column. n486 When preparing the Outstanding Equity Awards Table, where the expiration date and the exercise and/or base price of the instruments are identical, multiple awards may be aggregated. n487 Options or stock awarded under an equity incentive plan should be reported in columns (d) or (i) and (j), respectively, until the relevant performance condition has been satisfied. n488 Once the relevant performance condition has been satisfied, even if the option or stock award is subject to forfeiture conditions, (1) options should be reported in column (b) or (c), as appropriate, until they are exercised or expire, and (2) stock should be reported in columns (g) and (h) until it vests. n489

 - (a) sole voting power,

- (b) shared voting power,
- (c) sole investment power and
- (d) shared investment power (column 3); and [xiv] Certain Relationships and Related Transactions and Corporate Governance.

The information regarding relationships and related transactions is governed by Item 404 of Regulation S-K. Item 11(n) of Form S-1 also requires the information required under Item 407(a) of Regulation S-K with respect to director independence. n510

Item 404 of Regulation S-K, "Transactions With Related Persons, Promoters and Certain Control Persons," contains four parts: "Transactions with related persons," "Review, approval or ratification of transactions with related persons," "Promoters and certain control persons" and "Smaller reporting companies." n511

[A] Transactions With Related Persons. Item 404(a), "Transactions with related persons," requires the registrant to describe any transactions n512 since the beginning of the registrant's last fiscal year or any currently proposed transactions, in which the amount involved exceeds $120,000, to which the registrant or any of its subsidiaries was or is to be a party and in which any of the following "related persons" had or will have a direct or indirect n513 material interest:

- (1) any director or executive officer of the registrant;

- (3) any security holder known to the registrant to own of record or beneficially more than five percent of any class of the registrant's voting securities; and

The registrant is required to provide the following information concerning the related person specified above:

- (1) the name of the person;

- (3) the nature of the person's interest in the transaction;
- (4) the amount of the transaction; n516 and
- (5) the amount of the person's interest in the transaction. n517

The registrant need not provide information concerning a transaction if:

- (1) the interest of the person arises solely from the ownership individually and in the aggregate of less than ten percent of any class of equity securities of another corporation furnishing the services to the registrant or its subsidiaries;
- (2) the rates or charges for the transaction are determined by competitive bids;
- (3) the transaction involves the rendering of services as a common or contract carrier or public utility at rates or charges fixed in conformity with law or governmental authority;
- (4) the transaction involves services as a bank depository of funds, transfer agent, registrar, trustee under a trust indenture or similar services;
- (5) the interest of the person arises solely from the ownership of the registrant's securities and the person receives no extra or special benefit not shared on a pro rata basis, n518
- (6) the interest arises solely from compensation paid with respect to an employment relationship transaction with an executive officer and:
 - (a) such compensation is reported pursuant to the executive compensation disclosure requirements of Item 402 of Regulation S-K; or
 - (b) the executive officer is not an "immediate family member" of any related person, and such compensation (i) would have been reported under Item 402 of Regulation S-K if such person was a "named executive officer" under Item 402(a)(3), and (ii) was approved or recommended to the board of directors of the registrant; n519 or

(7) the interest arises from compensation of a director, if such compensation is reported pursuant to the executive compensation disclosure requirements of Item 402(k) of Regulation S-K. n520

[B] Review, Approval or Ratification of Transactions with Related Person. Item 404(b), "Review, approval or ratification of transactions with related persons," requires the registrant to describe its policies and procedures for the review, approval or ratification of any transactions with related persons disclosed under Item 404(a). - (2) the standards to be applied;
- (3) the persons or groups of persons on the board of directors or otherwise who are responsible for applying such policies and procedures; and
- (4) a statement of whether such policies and procedures are in writing and, if not, how such policies and procedures are evidenced. n521

The registrant need not provide disclosure regarding transactions that occurred prior to the time the related person became a "related person" under Item 404(a). n522 However, the registrant must identify any transactions with related persons disclosed under Item 404(a) where the policies and procedures did not require review, approval or ratification, or where such policies and procedures were not followed. n523

[C] Promoters and Certain Control Persons. Item 404(c), "Promoters and certain control persons," requires certain disclosure from registrants that (i) are filing a registration statement on Form S-1 and (ii) had a promoter at any time during the past five fiscal years. Registrants must disclose the following information with respect to promoters and control persons: n524

Disclosure is not required on the policies and procedures for the review, approval or ratification of transactions with related persons. Accordingly, smaller reporting companies need only provide the following information to comply with Item 404:

- (1) the disclosure of transactions with related persons required by Item 404(a), n527 but only with respect to such transactions where the amount involved exceeds the lesser of $120,000 or one percent of the smaller reporting company's average total assets at year end for the last two completed fiscal years; n528
- (2) the disclosure with respect to promoters and certain control persons required by Item 404(c); and
- (3) a list of all parents of the smaller reporting company showing the basis of control and, as to each parent, the percentage of voting securities owned or other basis of control by its immediate parent, if any. n529

In determining whether a director is independent (whether as a member of the board of directors or as a member of a committee of such board), a registrant filing a registration statement on Form S-1 should use the definitions of independence applicable to directors and committee members as provided by the national securities exchange or inter-dealer quotation system n533 where the registrant has applied for listing. n534 If the registrant has relied upon an available exemption to such independence standards, it must disclose the exemption relied upon and explain the basis for the conclusion that such exemption is applicable. n535

For each director that is identified as independent, the registrant must describe any transactions, relationships or arrangements that were not disclosed under Item 404(a) (regarding transactions with related persons). n536 The disclosure should fully describe in detail the nature of the transaction, relationship or arrangement. n537

An Interactive Data File is machine-readable computer code that presents information in eXtensible Business Reporting Language (XBRL). n587

The Interactive Data File must be submitted to the Commission and posted on the registrant's corporate website, if any, as provided by Rule 405 of Regulation S-T if the registrant's registration statement under the Securities Act contains a price or price range and the registrant does not prepare its financial statements in accordance with Article 6 of Regulation S-X (17 CFR 210.6-01 et. seq.) and is described in paragraph (A), (B) or (C):

(A) A large accelerated filer that had an aggregate worldwide market value of the voting and non-voting common equity held by non-affiliates of more than $5 billion as of the last business day of the second fiscal quarter of its most recently completed fiscal year that prepares its financial statements in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles as used in the United States and the filing contains financial statements of the registrant for a fiscal period that ends on or after June 15, 2009;

accordance with Article 6 of Regulation S-X (17 CFR 210.6-01 et. seq.). n590

[ii] Financial Statements. The registrant must furnish the financial statement schedules required by Regulation S-X and Item 11(e) of Regulation S-K. n591

If securities are being registered pursuant to Rule 415, the registrant must also undertake:

- (1) that, for the purpose of determining any liability under the Securities Act, each post-effective amendment will be deemed to be a new registration statement relating to the securities offered therein, and the offering of the securities at the time of the post-effective amendment will be deemed the initial bona fide offering of the securities; n595
- (2) to remove from registration by a post-effective amendment any securities remaining unsold at the termination of the offering; n596
- (3) if the registrant is a foreign private issuer, to file a post-effective amendment to the registration statement to include any financial statements required by 3-19 of Regulation S-X at the start of any delayed offering or throughout a continuous offering; and n597
- (4) that, for purposes of determining liability of the registrant under the Securities Act to any purchaser in the initial distribution of the securities, that in a primary offering of securities pursuant to the registration statement (regardless of the underwriting method used to sell the securities), if the securities are offered or sold by means of certain communications, the registrant is a seller to the purchaser and is considered to offer or sell the securities to the purchaser. n598

If the registrant is relying on Rule 430B n599 with regard to information that may be omitted from a base prospectus in a Rule 415 offering, the registrant must undertake that for purposes of determining liability under the Securities Act to any purchaser:

- (1) each prospectus filed pursuant to Rule 424(b)(3) will be deemed to be part of the registration statement as of the date the filed prospectus was deemed part of and included in the registration statement; and

(2) each prospectus required to be filed pursuant to Rule 424(b)(2), (b)(5) or (b)(7) as part of a registration statement in reliance on Rule 430B, for the purpose of providing the information required by Section 10(a) of the Securities Act, will be deemed to be part of and included in the registration statement as of the date such form of prospectus is first used after effectiveness or the date of the first contract of sale of securities in the offering, n600 and for liability purposes of the issuer and any underwriter that date will be deemed to be a new effective date of the registration statement (provided that no statement made will supersede or modify any statement that was made in the registration statement in place immediately prior to the new effective date).

If the registrant is subject to Rule 430C, n601 the registrant must undertake that, for purposes of determining liability under the Securities Act, each prospectus filed pursuant to Rule 424(b), other than those filed as part of registration statements relying on Rule 430B or prospectuses filed in reliance on Rule 430A, will be deemed to be part of the registration statement as of the date it is first used after effectiveness (provided that no statement made will supersede or modify any statement that was made in the registration statement in place immediately prior to the new effective date). n602

[iii] Warrants and Rights Offerings. Item 512(c) of Regulation S-K, "Warrants and rights offerings," requires the registrant, if the securities are to be offered to existing security holders pursuant to warrants or rights, and any securities not taken by security holders are to be reoffered to the public, with appropriate modifications to suit the particular case, to undertake to supplement the prospectus after the expiration of the subscription period to set forth:

- (1) the results of the subscription offer;
- (2) the transactions by the underwriters during the subscription period;
- (3) the amount of unsubscribed securities to be purchased by the underwriters; and
- (4) the terms of any subsequent reoffering of the securities pursuant to the warrants or rights.

The registrant must also undertake that if any public offering by the underwriters is to be made on terms differing from conditions set forth on the cover page of the prospectus, the registrant will file a post-effective amendment setting forth the terms of the public offering.

[iii] Competitive Bids. Item 512(d) of Regulation S-K, "Competitive bids," requires the registrant, if the securities being registered are to be offered at competitive bidding, to undertake:

- (1) to use its best efforts to distribute prior to the opening of bids to prospective bidders, underwriters and dealers, a reasonable number of copies of a prospectus meeting the requirements of Section 10(a) and relating to the securities offered at competitive bidding, as are contained in the registration statement (together with any supplements thereto); and
- (2) to file an amendment to the registration statement reflecting the results of bidding, the terms of the reoffering and applicable related matters not later than the first use of a prospectus relating to the securities offered at competitive bidding that was authorized by the registrant after the opening of bids, unless no further public offering by the registrant and no reoffering by the purchasers are proposed to be made.

[iv] Equity Offerings of Nonreporting Registrants. Item 512(f) of Regulation S-K, "Equity offerings of nonreporting registrants," provides that if equity securities of a nonreporting registrant are being registered for sale in an underwritten offering, the registrant must undertake to provide the underwriter at the time of closing specified in the underwriting agreement, certificates in those denominations and registered in those names as required by the underwriter to permit prompt delivery to each purchaser.

[v] Acceleration of Effective Date. Item 512(h) of Regulation S-K, "Request for acceleration of effective date or filing of registration statement becoming effective upon filing," provides that if an acceleration of the effective date of the registration statement is requested pursuant to Rule 461 n603 and:

- (1) any provision or arrangement exists for the registrant to indemnify any director, officer or controlling person of the registrant against liabilities arising under the Securities Act; or
- (2) the underwriting agreement requires the registrant to indemnify the underwriter or controlling persons of the underwriter against Securities Act liabilities, and a director, officer or controlling person of the registrant is an underwriter, a controlling person thereof or a member of a firm that is the underwriter; and
- (3) the benefits of indemnification are not waived by persons named in subparagraphs (1) and (2) above, a statement must be included that in the opinion of the Commission the indemnification is against public policy as expressed in the Securities Act and is, therefore, unenforceable. Pursuant to the underwriting, if a claim for indemnification against Securities Act liabilities, other than the payment by the registrant of expenses incurred by a director, officer or controlling person of the registrant arising from the successful defense of any action, suit or proceeding, is asserted by such director, officer or controlling person in connection with the securities being registered, the registrant must, unless in the opinion of its counsel the matter has been settled by controlling precedent, submit to a court of appropriate jurisdiction, the question of whether the indemnification is against public policy as expressed in the Securities Act. The registrant would be governed by the final adjudication of the issue.

[vi] Rule 430A. Item 512(i) of Regulation S-K provides that the registrant must undertake in any registration statement permitted by Rule 430A that for purposes of determining Securities Act liability:

- (1) the information omitted from the form of prospectus filed as part of the registration statement in reliance upon Rule 430A and contained in a prospectus filed pursuant to Rule 424 (b)(1) or (4) or Rule 497(h) shall be deemed to be part of the registration statement at the time it was declared effective; and
- (2) each post-effective amendment that contains a form of prospectus shall be deemed to be a new registration statement relating to the securities offered therein, and the offering of such securities at that time shall be deemed to be the initial bona fide offering thereof.

[vii] Qualification of Trust Indentures for Delayed Offerings. Item 512(j) of Regulation S-K, "Qualification of trust indentures under the Trust Indenture Act of 1939 for delayed offerings," requires that, if the registrant intends to rely on Section 305(b)(2) of the Trust Indenture Act of 1939 for determining the eligibility of the trustee under indentures for securities to be issued, offered or sold on a delayed basis by or on behalf of the registrant, the registrant must undertake to file an application for the purpose of determining the eligibility of the trustee to act under section 310(a) of the Trust Indenture Act in accordance with the rules and regulations prescribed under Section 305(b)(2) thereof.

[f] Signatures. The registration statement must be signed by the registrant, its principal executive officer or officers, its principal financial officer, its controller or principal accounting officer, and by at least a majority of its board of directors or persons performing similar functions. If the registrant is a foreign person, the registration statement must also be signed by its duly authorized representative in the United States. In the case of a registrant that is a limited partnership, the registration statement must be signed by a majority of the board of directors of any corporate general partner signing the registration statement. n604

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. The Commission proposed replacing Form S-1 with Form A in its "Aircraft Carrier" release. Sec. Act Rel. No. 33-7606 (1998). See § 7.01 supra for a general discussion of "Aircraft Carrier." In the 2004 Proposals, the Commission proposed amending Form S-1 and Form F-1 to expand the use of incorporation by reference to allow the inclusion of information from previously filed Exchange Act reports and documents.

(n2)Footnote 2. Although Form S-1 may be used for registration of an exchange offer of securities, the Commission has adopted Form S-4 for the registration of securities issued in certain business combination transactions; including exchange offers. Form S-4 is discussed in § 7.06[1] infra. The forms under the Securities Act are reprinted in the Securities Primary Law Sourcebook, Volume A, Section D (Matthew Bender).

(n6)Footnote 6. General Instruction VII, Form S-1. This was previously the case for Form S-2, which was eliminated by the 2005 Rules. For specific eligibility requirements, see the text of General Instruction VII. Note that a registrant may satisfy this requirement by including, on the website maintained by or for the registrant, hyperlinks directly to the registrant's reports or other materials filed on EDGAR or the registrant's EDGAR filing page; however, linking to the Commission's EDGAR system generally, or to a page where an investor would be required to select the registrant or input the registrant's name, does not satisfy this requirement. (n11)Footnote 11. The use of a particular name by a registrant may be misleading if that name is so similar to one already associated with another enterprise as to cause confusion in the public mind. Gold Hunter Extension, Inc., 3 SEC 891, 892 (1938) (use of name of "Gold Hunter Extension, Inc.," on facing page held likely to lead to confusion between registrant's properties and better known "Gold Hunter Mine" nearby). See also National Educators Mut. Ass'n, Inc., 1 SEC 208, 212-213 (1935) (use of the name "National Educators Mutual Association, Inc.," held misleading in that it tended to create in the minds of the public the erroneous impression that the registrant was connected with the National Education Association).

See also Communications Satellite Corp. v. Comcet, Inc., 429 F.2d 1245, 1249 (1970) .

The facing page of the prospectus of U.S. Land Development Corporation [Registration No. 2-14300, filed Aug. 18, 1958], for example, was amended prior to the effective date to include the qualifying statement immediately below the name of the company: "Not affiliated with the United States Government of any agency thereof."

Similarly, a name may be misleading if it tends to convey a false impression of the nature of the registrant's business. In re National Education Mut. Ass'n. Inc., 1 S.E.C. 208 at 213 (inclusion of the word "mutual" in the name of a stock corporation organized solely for profit held misleading).

If confusion between the registrant and another well known company could result due to registrant's name, or if registrant's name indicates a line of business in which registrant is not engaged or is only peripherally engaged, and the situation is not one in which the registrant has changed the general character of its business gradually over a period of years and the investing public is generally aware of that change and of the nature of the registrant's current business, then the registrant may have to include a statement to prevent confusion or to remove any misleading inference. Item 501(b)(1), Regulation S-K. If such a statement is not sufficient to avoid the confusion, the registrant may have to change its name. Id.

Rule 457(g) provides the calculation of the registration fee where securities are to be offered pursuant to warrants or other rights to purchase those securities and the holders of the warrants or rights may be deemed to be underwriters. Commissions include all cash, securities, contracts or anything else of value, paid, to be set aside, disposed of, or understandings with or for the benefit of any other persons in which any underwriter is interested, made in connection with the sale of such security. A commission paid or to be paid in connection with the sale of such security by a person in which the issuer has an interest or which is controlled or directed by, or under common control with, the issuer shall be deemed to have been paid by the issuer. Where any such commission is paid, the amount of such commission paid to each underwriter shall be stated.

(n50)Footnote 50. Item 502(b) allows the registrant to use the following or other plain English:

Dealer Prospectus Delivery Obligation: Until (insert date), all dealers that effect transactions in these securities, whether or not participating in this offering, may be required to deliver a prospectus. This is in addition to the dealers' obligation to deliver a prospectus when acting as underwriters and with respect to their unsold allotments or subscriptions.

The statement need not be included if, pursuant to Rule 174, dealers are not required to deliver a prospectus, or if the exemption provided by Section 4(3) is not available because of the provisions of Section 24(d) of the Investment Company Act of 1940. (Section 24(d) makes Section 4(3) inapplicable to any transaction in a security issued by a face-amount certificate company or in a redeemable security issued by an open-end management company or unit investment trust if any other security of the same class is currently being offered or sold by the issuer or by or through an underwriter in a distribution not exempt from Section 5.)

Section 4(3) and Rule 174, are discussed in § 4.06 supra.

If the expiration date for delivering the prospectus is not known on the effective date of the registration statement, the date must be included in the prospectus, copies of which are required to be filed with the Commission pursuant to Rule 424(b). Rule 424(b) is discussed in § 7A.06 infra.

(n57)Footnote 57. The term "earnings" is the amount resulting from adding and subtracting the following items.

Add the following:

- Pretax income from continuing operations before adjustment for income or loss from "equity investees" (investments accounted for using the equity method of accounting);

- Fixed charges;
- Amortization of capitalized interest;
- Distributed income of equity investees; and
- The registrant's share of pre-tax losses of equity investees for which charges arising from guarantees are included in fixed charges. From the total of the added items, subtract the following:
- Interest capitalized;
- "Preference security dividend" requirements of consolidated subsidiaries; and
- The noncontrolling interest in pre-tax income of subsidiaries that have not incurred fixed charges.

Rate regulated public utilities should not add amortization of capitalized interest in determining earnings, nor reduce fixed charges by any allowance for funds used during construction.

The term "preference security dividend" is the amount of pre-tax earnings that is required to pay the dividends on outstanding preference securities. The dividend requirement must be computed as the amount of the dividend divided by (1 minus the effective income tax rate applicable to continuing operations). Instruction 1(B)-(C), Item 503(d), Regulation S-K.

The term "fixed charges" means the sum of the following:

- Interest expensed and capitalized;
- Amortized premiums, discounts and capitalized expenses related to indebtedness;
- An estimate of the interest within rental expense; and
- Preference security dividend requirements of consolidated subsidiaries. Instruction 1(A), Item 503(d), Regulation S-K.

If either ratio computation indicates a less than one-to-one coverage, the registrant should disclose the dollar amount of the coverage deficiency. Instruction 2(A), Item 503(d), Regulation S-K.

(n78)Footnote 78. Item 506 disclosure is limited to instances in which purchasers of the registrant's common equity may be subject to material dilution of their equity interests, either immediately or in the future, as a result of a material amount of outstanding options, rights or convertible securities. Item 506 distinguishes between previously nonreporting registrants and reporting registrants and requires less disclosure in the case of reporting registrants. Item 506 minimizes those circumstances under which dilution is required to be disclosed by more seasoned companies whose securities are selling on the basis of earnings, and where dilution of book value is generally not material to the investor. The Commission considers this minimization appropriate because the more detailed transactional information required of nonreporting registrants is otherwise generally included in (the Exchange Act) reports and proxy and information statements required to be filed by reporting companies. See Act Rel. No. 33-6332, Fed. Sec. L. Rep. (CCH) No. 926, Part II (1981).

(n83)Footnote 83. "The term 'principal underwriter' means an underwriter in privity of contract with the issuer of the securities as to which he is underwriter, the term 'issuer' having the meaning given in Sections 2(4) and 2(11) of the Act." Rule 405. For a detailed discussion of the meaning of the term "underwriter," see § 4.02[2] supra.

The term "managing underwriter" generally means an underwriter (or underwriters) who, by contract or otherwise,

- (1) deals with the registrant;
- (2) organizes the selling effort;
- (3) receives some benefit directly or indirectly in which all other underwriters similarly situated do not share in proportion to their respective interests in the underwriting; or
- (4) represents any other underwriters in such matters as maintaining the records of the distributions, arranging the allotments of securities offered, or arranging for appropriate stabilization activities, if any.

(n84)Footnote 84. "The term 'material,' when used to qualify a requirement for the furnishing of information as to any subject, limits the information required to those matters to which there is a substantial likelihood that a reasonable investor would attach importance in determining whether to purchase the security registered."

(n85)Footnote 85. Instruction, Item 508(a), Regulation S-K.

Use of the words "take down" is misleading when the underwriting is on a "best efforts basis." Livingston Mining Co., 2 SEC 141, 149 (1937) . Disclosure of a best efforts arrangement might be worded as follows:

There is no firm commitment for the purchase of any of the securities comprising the public offering, and therefore, no representation is made that the Company will receive the proceeds of the sale of the entire offering.

If the underwriting arrangements are an "all or none" or "part or none" basis, the following type of wording would be appropriate:

The Company has entered into an escrow agreement with the Underwriter which provides that proceeds from the sale of the Company's stock shall be paid over to _____ Bank, named as escrow agent by the Company and the Underwriter. As soon as the bank has received full payment for _____% of the shares offered, i.e., $_____, in payment for _____ shares sold, it shall in its capacity of Registrar and Transfer Agent record and issue the shares in the names in which the stock certificates are to be issued and disburse to the Company and the Underwriter the net amounts due under the terms of the Underwriting Agreement, namely, $_____ to the Company, $_____ to the Underwriter. If, upon expiration of the Underwriting Agreement, _____% of the Company's securities have not been sold, then the escrow agent shall refund amounts paid, including the Underwriter's commission, to purchasers.

With respect to liability for failure to accurately describe the method of underwriting ("all or none") as violating the antifraud provisions of 1933 Act, see A.J. White & Co. v. SEC, 556 F.2d 619, 622, (1st Cir.), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 969 (1977) .

(n86)Footnote 86. Instruction, Item 508(a), Regulation S-K.

(n87)Footnote 87. "The term 'control' (including the terms 'controlling,' 'controlled by,' and 'under common control with') means the possession, direct or indirect, of the power to direct or cause the direction of the management and policies of a person, whether through the ownership of voting securities, by contract, or otherwise."

For a further discussion of "control," see § 4.02 supra.

(n88)Footnote 88. "The phrase 'dividend or interest reinvestment plan' means a plan which is offered solely to the existing security holders of the registrant, which allows those security holders to reinvest dividends or interest paid to them on securities issued by the registrant, and that also may allow additional cash amounts to be contributed by the participants in the plan, provided the securities to be registered are newly issued, or are purchased for the account of plan participants at prices not in excess of current market prices at the time of purchases or at prices not in excess of an amount determined in accordance with a pricing formula specified in the plan and based upon average or current market prices at the time of purchase."

Rule 405.

(n89)Footnote 89. Item 508(c)(3), Regulation S-K. This requirement comes into play in the case of exchange offers and similar situations where the proceeds do not consist of cash.

(n90)Footnote 90. For discussion of Instruction 5 to Item 504 of Regulation S-K, see § 7.03[2][d] supra.

(n91)Footnote 91. The term "commissions" is defined in Item 17 of Schedule A.

(n92)Footnote 92. The NASD is currently known as the Financial Industry Regulatory Authority ("FINRA"). Because Regulation S-K still refers to the organization as the NASD, the references herein will also remain the same.

(n94)Footnote 94. Instruction 2, Item 508(e), Regulation S-K.

Item 511 of Regulation S-K requires the registrant to furnish a reasonably itemized statement of all expenses in connection with the issuance and distribution of the securities to be registered, other than underwriting discounts and commissions. If any of the securities to be registered are to be offered for the account of security holders, the registrant should indicate the portion of such expenses to be borne by such security holder.

While Item 508(e) does not require disclosure of material currency conversion profits (see former Securities Act Guide 14 [deleted as unnecessary] concerning underwriter's compensation from conversion of funds into foreign currency), if the conversion profits are intended to constitute, or are negotiated as a part of the underwriter's compensation, the conversion profits may, in certain circumstances, be deemed by the NASD to be "other items of value accruing to the underwriter" and would, therefore, be disclosable. Sec. Act Rel. No. 33-6332, Fed. Sec. L. Rep. (CCH) No. 926, Part II (1981).

Certain disclosures should be made in the prospectus if a material amount of options has been or is to be issued to promoters, underwriters, officers or directors. These additional disclosures ordinarily include the following: that for the life of the options the option holders are given at nominal cost the opportunity to profit from a rise in the market price of the capital stock of the issuer with a resulting dilution in the interest of security holders; that for the life of the options the issuer might be deprived of favorable opportunities to procure additional equity capital, if it should be needed for the purpose of the business; and that the holders of such options might be expected to exercise them at a time when the issuer would, in all likelihood, be able to obtain equity capital, if it needed capital then, by sale of a new offering on terms more favorable than those provided for by the options.

Additionally, options and stock to be issued by the issuer or some other person which are issued to underwriters in connection with a registered public offering are required to be registered along with the securities to be offered to the public, even if such options have been acquired for investment. The same procedure should be followed with respect to stock sold to underwriters in connection with an underwriting, and an appropriate undertaking included in the registration statement, as follows:

The registrant undertakes with respect to ... shares issued (or to be issued) to underwriters, that (1) any prospectus revised to show the terms of offering of such shares (other than a transaction on a national securities exchange), and (2) any prospectus revised to comply with the requirements of Section 10(a)(3) of the Securities Act will be filed as a post-effective amendment to the registration statement prior to any offering thereof; and that the effective date of each such amendment shall be deemed the effective date of the registration statement with respect to securities sold after such amendment shall have become effective.

(n96)Footnote 96. Item 508(h), Regulation S-K.

A commission paid or to be paid in connection with the sale of such security by a person in which the issuer has an interest or which is controlled or directed by, or under common control with, the issuer, is deemed to have been paid by the issuer and must be reported. Item 17, Schedule A.

(n97)Footnote 97. The term "promoter" includes:

(1) any person who, acting alone or in conjunction with one or more other persons, directly or indirectly, takes initiative in founding and organizing the business or enterprise of an issuer; or

(2) any person who, in connection with the founding and organizing of the business or enterprise of an issuer, directly or indirectly receives in consideration for services or property, or both services and property, at least ten percent of any class of securities of the issuer or at least ten percent of the proceeds from the sale of any class of the issuer's securities.

Rule 405.

A person who receives those securities or proceeds either solely as underwriting commissions or solely in consideration of property is not deemed a promoter within the meaning of Rule 405 if that person does not otherwise take part in the founding and organizing of the enterprise. Id.

All persons coming within the definition of promoter as described above may be referred to as "founders" or "organizers" or by any other appropriate term provided that such term is reasonably descriptive of those persons' activities for the issuer. Id.

(n98)Footnote 98. The term "associate," when used to indicate a relationship with any person, means:

(1) a corporation or organization (other than the registrant or a majority-owned subsidiary of the registrant) of which that person is an officer or partner or is, directly or indirectly, the beneficial owner of ten percent or more of any class of equity securities;

(2) any trust or other estate in which that person has a substantial beneficial interest or as to which that person serves as trustee or in a similar capacity; and

(3) any relative or spouse of that person, or any relative of that spouse, who has the same home as the person or who is a director or officer of the registrant or any of its parents or subsidiaries.

Rather, what is called for is a brief summary of the provisions that are pertinent from an investment standpoint.

There is no doubt that in many instances prospectuses have been so long and cumbersome as partially to destroy their usefulness. The technical description of securities has often contributed to this undue length. Sec. Act Rel. No. 33-1503 (1937). See also Sec. Act Rel. No.33-1580 (1937).

(n103)Footnote 103. If convertible securities or stock purchase warrants are being registered and are subject to redemption or call, the description of the conversion terms of the securities or material terms of the warrants should disclose:

- (1) whether the right to convert or purchase the securities will be forfeited unless the right is exercised before the date specified in a notice of redemption or call;
- (2) the expiration or termination date of the warrants;
- (3) the kinds, frequency and timing of notice of the redemption or call, including the cities or newspapers in which notice will be published and whether the securities provide for a class of newspapers or group of cities in which the publication may be made at the discretion of the registrant; and
- (4) in the case of bearer securities, that investors are responsible for making arrangements to prevent loss of the right to convert or purchase in the event of redemption or call (e.g., by reading newspapers in which the notice of redemption or call may be published).

The use of these terms was held to be misleading since there was no obligation to pay a fixed sum of money with stated interest. Id. at 228

In National Educators Mut. Ass'n, Inc., 1 S.E.C. 208 (1935) , the face of the bond contained the figure $1,000 prominently displayed and accompanied by the statement that the company "will pay the Sum of One Thousand Dollars"; but underneath, in much smaller type, a parenthetical statement appeared, as follows: "(Consisting of $750 cash and $250 stock)." This was held to be misleading. Id. at 211 .

Item 202(b)(3), Regulation S-K.

(n116)Footnote 116. In the case of secured debt, there should be stated:

- (1) whether the securities being registered are to be issued on the basis of unbounded bondable property, the deposit of cash or otherwise;
- (2) the approximate amount of unbounded bondable property available for use against the issuance of bonds, as of the most recent practicable date;
- (3) provisions permitting the withdrawal of cash deposited as a basis for the issuance of bonds; and
- (4) provisions permitting the release or substitution of assets securing the issue. Item 202(b)(5), Regulation S-K.

Provisions permitting the release of assets upon the deposit of equivalent funds or the pledge of equivalent property, the release of property no longer required in the business, obsolete property or property taken by eminent domain or the application of insurance funds and other similar provisions need not be described. The term "stated redemption price at maturity" means the amount fixed by the last modification of the purchase agreement and includes interest and other amounts payable at that time. Id. § 1273(a)(2).

(n141)Footnote 141. The phrase "significant subsidiary" means a subsidiary, including subsidiaries of the subsidiary, which meets any of the following conditions:

- (1) the investments of the registrant and its other subsidiaries in, and advances to the subsidiary exceed ten percent of the total assets of the registrant and its subsidiaries consolidated as of the end of the most recently completed fiscal year. For a proposed combination between entities under common control, this condition is also met when the number of common shares exchanged by the registrant exceeds ten percent of its total common shares outstanding at the date the combination is initiated.);
- (2) the registrant's and its other subsidiaries' proportionate share of the total assets (after intercompany eliminations) of the subsidiary exceeds ten percent of the total assets of the registrant and its subsidiaries consolidated as of the end of the most recently completed fiscal year; or
- (3) the equity of the registrant and its other subsidiaries in the income from continuing operations before income taxes, extraordinary items, and cumulative effect of a change in accounting principle of the subsidiary exceeds ten percent of the income of the registrant and its subsidiaries consolidated for the most recently completed fiscal year.

Rule 405.

For purposes of making the prescribed income test, the following guidelines should be applied:

- (1) when a loss exclusive of amounts attributable to any noncontrolling interests is incurred by either the parent and its subsidiaries consolidated or the tested subsidiary exclusive of amounts attributable to any noncontrolling interests, but not both, the equity in the income or loss of the tested subsidiary should be excluded from the income of the registrant and its subsidiaries consolidated for purposes of the computation;
- (2) if income of the registrant and its subsidiaries consolidated exclusive of amounts attributable to any noncontrolling interests for the most recent fiscal year is at least ten percent lower than the average of the income for the last five fiscal years, that average income should be substituted for purposes of the computation. Any loss years should be omitted for purposes of computing average income.

Rule 418(a)(5) permits the Commission or its staff, where appropriate, to request supplemental information on new products or new industry segments that require the investment of a material amount of the assets of the registrant or that is otherwise material. This information includes copies of any studies prepared for the registrant by outside persons or any internal studies or reports that were material to the decision to develop the product or to do business in the new segment.

(n149)Footnote 149. The registrant should disclose, for example, that the registrant is required to carry significant amounts of inventory to meet rapid delivery requirements of customers or to assure itself of a continuous allotment of goods from suppliers, that the registrant provides the right to return merchandise, or that the registrant has provided extended payment terms to customers. Item 101(c)(1)(vi), Regulation S-K.

(n150)Footnote 150. The name of any customer and its relationship, if any, with the registrant or its subsidiaries should be disclosed if the aggregate amount of sales to the customer by one or more industry segments equals 10% or more of the registrant's consolidated revenues and the loss of that customer would have a material adverse effect on the registrant and its subsidiaries taken as a whole.

The names of other customers may be included, unless the effect of including the names would be misleading. Item 101(c)(1)(vii), Regulation S-K. A group of customers that are affiliates of each other or that are under common control, should be regarded as a single customer. Id.

If no substantial part of the registrant's business stems from a single customer or a few customers, a simple statement to that effect is in order. However, special problems may arise in this area. For example, suppose that the company is expanding, but at the present time lacks adequate facilities to serve a large number of customers simultaneously. One such situation was treated as follows in this portion of the prospectus:

The Company has had some customers which each year have accounted for between 30% and 42% of its sales. For the last fiscal year divisions of General Foods Corporation, constituting the Company's largest single customer during the last fiscal year, accounted for approximately 42% of the Company's sales. This is due to the fact that the Company has lacked adequate capital, facilities and personnel to service more than a limited number of customers at one time. It is the intention of the Company to expand its business to service a greater number of customers at one time. See 'Application of Proceeds.'

(n151)Footnote 151. Government orders that are firm but not yet funded and government contracts awarded but not yet signed may be included as firm orders, provided an appropriate explanation of the nature and amount of the orders is given. The portion of orders already included in sales or operating revenues on the basis of percentage of completion or program accounting should be excluded. Item 101(c)(1)(viii), Regulation S-K.

Language such as the following relating to backlog is suggested:

The amount of the Company's backlog as of February 7, 19____ was approximately $1,413,000 compared to approximately $1,127,000 as of February 7, 19____. It is management's estimate that approximately 75% of the current backlog will be filled during the current fiscal year.

(n152)Footnote 152. The description of competitive conditions should include, where material, the identity of the particular markets in which the registrant competes, an estimate of the number of competitors, and the registrant's competitive position, if known or reasonably available to the registrant. Separate consideration should be given to each of the principal products or services, or classes of products or services of the segment, if any. Generally, the names of competitors need not be disclosed, and should not be disclosed if the disclosure would be misleading. If, however, the registrant knows or has reason to know that one or a small number of competitors is dominant in the industry, these competitors should be identified. Item 101(c)(x), Regulation S-K.

In the past, many prospectuses contained phrases in general terms that all but precluded an intelligent appraisal of the issuer's real position in the industry. The Commission first proposed in former Guide 5 the requirement that issuers "would have to include, where available, more meaningful information measuring the performance of companies in the same line of business." Sec. Act Rel. No. 33-5276, Fed. Sec. L. Rep. (CCH) No. 434, Special Edition (1972). Guide 5 stated that stock phrases or "boiler plate" relating to subjects such as the company's chances of success or competition often do not provide meaningful disclosure. See Act Rel. No. 5396, Fed. Sec. L. Rep. (CCH) P 79,384 (1973). Former Guide 5 read in part, "Stock phrases such as 'A substantial number of companies that are engaged in the same business as the registrant have greater financial resources, experience and are better known to the public than registrant,' may not provide meaningful disclosure unless accompanied by a brief explanation of the basis for such statements or the effect such conditions may have on the registrant."

The principal methods of competition (e.g., price, service, warranty or product performance) should be identified and the positive and negative factors pertaining to the competitive position of the registrant, to the extent that they exist, should be explained if known or reasonably available to the registrant. Item 101(c)(1)(x), Regulation S-K.

Where the issuer has special knowledge of forthcoming events that will affect the industry or the issuer's position in the industry, a more definitive disclosure must be made. One Branch Chief in the Division of Corporation Finance gave this example: An issuer who manufactures Citizen's Band radios as its principal product learns through reliable industry channels that General Motors is seriously considering entering the C-B manufacturing business; the portent is something more than mere speculation and should be discussed under the "Competition" section. For a variety of reasons the issuer may be reluctant to make the effort of researching such information as the size of the industry, the major companies in that industry, the issuer's relative position, and any announcements or developments materially affecting the industry for inclusion in the prospectus. In this connection, counsel might suggest that the issuer examine current trade journals and materials available from such bodies as trade associations and governmental agencies.

Statements on the conservative side are in order in this section, for, generally speaking, the competition in nearly all industries is keen. Failure to disclose acute competition may form the basis of a stop order, see, e.g., American Kid Co., 1 SEC 694, 699-700 (1936) (registrant's statement that glazed kid industry is not affected by problems which confront independent tanner of cowhides, sheep leathers, and calfskins held misleading).

(n153)Footnote 153. The registrant should disclose any material estimated capital expenditures for environmental control facilities for the remainder of its current fiscal year and its succeeding fiscal year and for such further periods as the registrant may deem material. Item 101(c)(1)(xii), Regulation S-K. In 2010, the Commission issued guidance directing filers to consider addressing possible domestic and international climate change regulation, as well as the potential business impact of climate change, under Item 503(c). If "net before royalty" production figures are furnished, the change from the usage of "net production" should be noted. Instruction 1, Item 1204(b), Regulation S-K.

Production of natural gas should include only marketable production of natural gas on an "as sold" basis, including dry, residue, wet, and synthetic gas, depending on whether liquids have been extracted before the registrant transfers title; flared gas, injected gas, and gas consumed in operations should not be included, and recovered gas-lift gas and reproduced gas should not be included until sold. The transfer price of oil and gas (natural and synthetic) and the average production cost, not including ad valorem and severance taxes, per unit of production, should be determined in accordance with SFAS 69. A "dry well" is an exploratory, development, or extension well that proves to be incapable of producing either oil or gas in sufficient quantities to justify installation of permanent equipment for production as an oil or gas well; whereas a "productive well" is an exploratory, development, or extension well that is not a dry well. The "number of wells drilled" refers to the number of wells completed at any time during the fiscal year, regardless of when drilling was initiated. Item 1205(b), Regulation S-K.

(n190)Footnote 190. Item 1206(b), Regulation S-K.

(n191)Footnote 191. Item 1207(a), Regulation S-K. The information must be disclosed in a form understandable to investors and include, as based on the particular faces and circumstances: (i) disclosure by geographic area; (ii) significant supplies dedicated to the registrant; (iii) any significant reserves or supplies subject to priorities or curtailments which may affect quantities delivered to certain classes of customers, such as customers receiving services under low priority and interruptible contracts; (iv) any priority allocations or price limitations imposed by Federal or State regulatory agencies, as well as other factors beyond the registrant's control that may affect the registrant's ability to meet its contractual obligations (the registrant need not provide detailed discussions of price regulation); (v) any other factors beyond the registrant's control, such as other party control over drilling new wells, competition, and the availability of foreign reserves and supplies and (vi) any impact on the registrant's earnings and financing needs resulting from an inability to meet short-term or long-term contractual obligations. Item 1207(b). See Items 303 and 1209 of Regulation S-K (§§ 229.303 and 229.1209).

"Available reserves" are estimates of the amounts of oil and gas the registrant can produce from current proved developed reserves using presently installed equipment under existing economic and operating conditions and an estimate of amounts that others can deliver to the registrant under long-term contracts or agreements on a per-day, per-month, or per-year basis. Item 1207(d), Regulation S-K.

(n193)Footnote 193. "Net developed acreage" means acreage assignable to productive wells. Item 1208(a), Regulation S-K. A "gross" well or acre means a well or acre in which the registrant owns a working interest. The number of gross wells is the total number of wells in which the registrant owns a working interest. One or more completions in the same bore hole count as one well. The number of wells with multiple completions should be discussed in a footnote. If one of the multiple completions in a well is an oil completion, the well should be classified as an oil well. Item 1208(c)(1), Regulation S-K.

A "net" well or acre is deemed to exist when the sum of fractional ownership working interests in gross wells or acres equals one. The number of net wells or acres is the sum of the fractional working interests owned in gross wells or acres expressed as whole numbers and fractions of whole numbers. Item 1208(c)(2), Regulation S-K.

"Productive" wells include producing wells and wells mechanically capable of production. Item 1208(c)(3), Regulation S-K.

(n194)Footnote 194. Item 1208(b), Regulation S-K. "Undeveloped acreage" means those leased acres on which wells have not been drilled or completed to a point that would permit the production of economic quantities of oil or gas regardless of whether such acreage contains proved reserves. Undeveloped acreage is not un-drilled acreage held by production under the terms of the lease. Item 1208(c)(4), Regulation S-K.

(n199)Footnote 199. Instruction 5(A)-(C), Item 103, Regulation S-K. In 2010, the Commission issued guidance directing filers to consider addressing possible domestic and international change regulation, as well as the potential business impact of climate change, under Item 503(c). Sec. Act. Rel. Nos. 33-9106, 34-61469 (Feb. 2, 2010).

Instruction 5(C) to Item 103 does not require that the potential fines in similar proceedings be aggregated to determine whether the $100,000 threshold has been met. Since Instruction 5(C) concerns proceedings involving potential monetary sanctions, permits proceedings and requests for waivers and variances need not be disclosed.

For an interpretive release on the Commission's views regarding the scope of the definition of the term "proceeding," see Sec. Act Rel. No. 33-6130, Fed. Sec. L. Rep. (CCH) P 23,507B (1979).

Since its inception, the Commission has considered one of its basic tasks to be to require public disclosure of all financial information having a material bearing on an investor's decision to buy or sell securities. In the 1970's, however, there was increased public concentration on environmental and social matters. It was only natural, then, that the question would arise whether the Commission should broaden its disclosure requirements to include such matters in registration statements, reports, and other documents filed or furnished to investors pursuant to the federal securities laws. A 1971 release constituted the first official Commission statement dealing with these matters. See Sec. Act Rel. No. 33-5170, Fed. Sec. L. Rep. (CCH) P 78,150 (1971).

In proposing amendments to former Item 5 of Regulation S-K (current Item 103 of Regulation S-K), the Commission issued its views as to the quality and utility of disclosure of environmental proceedings reflecting its experience in administering its prior disclosure policies. Sec. Act Rel. No. 33-6315, Fed. Sec. L. Rep. (CCH) P 82,867 (1981).

(n202)Footnote 202. Instruction 9, Item 201(d), Regulation S-K. Essentially, the new disclosure relates to compensation plans (including individual compensation arrangements) under which equity securities are authorized for issuance. For purposes of Item 201(d), Regulation S-K, an "individual compensation arrangement" includes, but is not limited to, the following: a written compensation contract within the meaning of "employee benefit plan" under § 230.405 and a plan (whether or not set forth in any formal document) applicable to one person as provided under Item 402(a)(6)(ii) of Regulation S-K. See Instruction 2, Item 201(d), Regulation S-K.

Item 201 requires the registrant to disclose the following information in tabular format for both equity compensation plans previously approved by security holders and those not previously approved by security holders: (i) the number of securities to be issued upon the exercise of outstanding options, warrants and rights (column (a)); (ii) the weighted-average exercise price of the outstanding options, warrants and rights (column (b)); and (iii) the number of remaining securities available for issuance under the plans, other than those securities to be issued upon the exercise of the outstanding options, warrants and rights offered (column (c)). To the extent that the number disclosed in column (c) includes securities available for issuance under any compensation plan or individual compensation arrangement other than upon the exercise of an option, warrant or right, then the registrant should disclose, in a footnote to the table, the number of securities and type of plan separately for each such plan. See Instruction 6, Item 201(d), Regulation S-K.

If an equity compensation plan contains a formula for calculating the number of securities available for issuance under the plan, including without limitation, a formula that automatically increases the number of securities available for issuance by a percentage of the number of outstanding securities of the registrant, the registrant must disclose a description of this formula in a footnote to the table. See Instruction 8, Item 201(d), Regulation S-K.

The registrant must disclose the information for each category of equity compensation plan described. See Item 201(d)(1)-(2), Regulation S-K. The registrant must provide this disclosure with respect to any compensation plan and individual compensation arrangement of the registrant (or parent, subsidiary or affiliate of the registrant) under which equity securities of the registrant are authorized for issuance to employees or non-employees (such as directors, consultants, advisors, vendors, customers, suppliers or lenders) in exchange for consideration in the form of goods or services as described in Statement of Financial Accounting Standards No. 123, Accounting for Stock-Based Compensation, or any successor standard. However, the registrant does not have to provide any disclosure with respect to: (a) any plan, contract or arrangement for the issuance of warrants or rights to all security holders of the registrant as such on a pro rata basis (such as a stock rights offering) or (b) any employee benefit plan that is intended to meet the qualification requirements of § 401(a) of the Internal Revenue Code (26 U.S.C. 401(a)). See Instruction 1, Item 201(d), Regulation S-K.

If more than one class of equity securities is being issued under the plan, then the plan information should be aggregated for each class of securities. See Instruction 3, Item 201(d), Regulation S-K. The registrant may, but is not required to, aggregate the following information with the disclosure required with respect to the plan information noted above: (i) individual compensation arrangements; and (ii) compensation plans assumed in connection with a merger, consolidation or other acquisition transaction pursuant to which the registrant may make subsequent grants or awards of its equity securities. However, with respect to any individual options, warrants or rights assumed in connection with a merger, consolidation or other acquisition transaction, the registrant must disclose in a footnote to the table, the number of securities to be issued upon the exercise of the outstanding options, warrants and rights as well as the weighted average exercise price of the outstanding options, warrants and rights. See Instructions 4-5, Item 201(d), Regulation S-K.

The registrant must also briefly describe, in narrative form, the material features of each compensation plan that was adopted without the approval of security holders. See Item 201(d)(3), Regulation S-K. However, if the financial statements contains the disclosure required in the preceding sentence, then the registrant may satisfy its requirements under Item 201 by providing a cross-reference to the financial statements. See Instruction 7, Item 201(d), Regulation S-K.

(n203)Footnote 203. Instruction 7, Item 201(e), Regulation S-K. The performance graph is only required in certain annual report filings under the Exchange Act and therefore is not discussed in detail herein. Id. The performance graph provides information on the yearly percentage change in a registrant's cumulative total shareholder return on a class of common stock registered under Section 12 of the Exchange Act. Item 201(e)(1), Regulation S-K. A registrant that qualifies as a smaller reporting company is not required to provide the performance graph. Instruction 6, Item 201(e), Regulation S-K. Incidentally, prior to the enactment of the 2006 Executive Compensation Rules, the performance graph was required as part of the executive compensation disclosure under Item 402 of Regulation S-K. However, the Commission intended the disclosure under the Compensation Discussion and Analysis of Item 402(b) to encourage broader discussion than just the relationship of executive compensation to the performance of the company's stock price. Accordingly, the Commission removed the performance graph from the disclosure requirements under the executive compensation section and moved such requirement to Item 201(e). See Sec. Act Rel. No. 33-8732..

(n204)Footnote 204. Where there is no established public trading market for a class of common equity securities, the registrant should so state. The existence of limited or sporadic quotations should not of itself be deemed to constitute an "established public trading market." Item 201(a)(1)(i), Regulation S-K.

In the case of foreign registrants, there should also be disclosed, in addition to the name of the principal United States market, the identity of the principal established foreign public trading market, if any, for each class of the registrant's common equity securities. Id.

If the common equity of a registrant is listed for trading on more than one registered securities exchange, the registrant should identify each exchange. Instruction 1, Item 201, Regulation S-K.

If the common equity securities of a registrant are listed for trading on more than one registered securities exchange, the registrant should only report one set of price quotations. The method of computation that is chosen should be indicated. Instruction 3, Item 201, Regulation S-K.

Item 201(b) of Regulation S-K reflects the provision for disclosure of stockholder information under former Item 9 of Regulation S-K except that Item 201(b)(2) requires disclosure of the effect of an acquisition, business combination, or other reorganization on the status of current holdings of the registrants' common equity securities and on the registrants' ability to issue shares of common equity securities.

Exchange Act of 1934, A.A. Sommer, Jr., General Editor, § 4.02[2] (Matthew Bender), filed for any quarter, as would be the case when a pooling of interests occurs or where an error is corrected, the registrant should reconcile the amounts given in response to Item 302(a)(1) of Regulation S-K with those previously reported on the Exchange Act' Form 10-Q or Form 10-QSB, giving the reason for the difference. (n237)Footnote 237. Item 302(b), Regulation S-K.

SFAS No. 69 disclosures that relate to annual periods shall be presented for each annual period for which an income statement is required. SFAS No. 69 disclosures required as of the end of an annual period shall be presented as of the date of each audited balance sheet required. SFAS No. 69 disclosures required as of the beginning of an annual period shall be presented as of the beginning of each annual period for which an income statement is required. See Instruction 1, Item 302, Regulation S-K.

This paragraph, together with Rule 4-10 of Regulation S-X, prescribes financial reporting standards for the preparation of accounts by persons engaged, in whole or in part, in the production of crude oil or natural gas in the United States, pursuant to Section 503 of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act of 1975 ("EPCA") and Section 11(c) of the Energy Supply and Environmental Coordination Act of 1974 ("ESECA") as amended by Section 506 of EPCA. The application of the paragraph to those oil and gas producing operations of companies regulated for ratemaking purposes on an individual company cost-of-service basis may, however, give appropriate recognition to differences arising because of the effect of the ratemaking process. See Instruction 2, Item 302, Regulation S-K.

Any person exempted by the Department of Energy from any record-keeping or reporting requirements pursuant to Section 11(c) of ESECA, as amended, is similarly exempted from the related provisions of this paragraph in the preparation of accounts pursuant to EPCA. This exemption does not affect the applicability of this paragraph to filings pursuant to the federal securities laws. See Instruction 3, Item 302, Regulation S-K.

(n238)Footnote 238. The Commission has issued several interpretive releases regarding the disclosure required by Item 303 of Regulation S-K. See, e.g., Sec. Act Rel. Nos. 33-8350 (Dec. 19, 2003) , 33-8182 (Jan. 28, 2003), 33-8056 (Jan. 22, 2002), 33-7558 (July 29, 1998), and 33-6835 (May 18, 1989). The flexible nature of Item 303 requires disclosures that keep pace with the evolving nature of business trends. For example, in 2010, the Commission issued guidance directing filers to consider addressing possible domestic and international climate change regulation, as well as the potential business impact of climate change, under Item 303. Sec. Act. Rel. Nos. 33-9106, 34-61469 (Feb. 2, 2010).

If, however, trend information is relevant, the registrant may be required to refer to the five-year selected financial data presented pursuant to Item 301 of Regulation S-K, discussed in § 7.03[2][k][vi] supra.

The causes for any material changes from year to year in any line items of the consolidated financial statements should be described to the extent necessary to an understanding of the registrant's businesses as a whole. If the causes for a change in one line item also relate to other line items, however, no repetition is required and a line-by-line analysis of the financial statements as a whole is not required. Registrants do not need to recite the amounts of changes from year to year which are readily computable from the financial statements, and the discussion should not merely repeat numerical data contained in the consolidated financial statements. Registrants are only required to discuss the effects of inflation and other changes in prices when considered material. The discussion may be made in any appropriate manner. All that is required is a brief textual presentation of management's views. Specific numerical data need not be presented except as required by Rule 3-20(c) of Regulation S-X. However, registrants may elect to voluntarily disclose supplemental information on the effects of changing prices either as provided for in SFAS No. 89 or through other supplemental disclosures. The Commission encourages experimentation with such disclosures in order to provide meaningful presentation in financial statements of the impact of price changes. Instruction 8 to Item 303(a) of Regulation S-K.

Registrants that elect to disclose supplementary information on the effects of changing prices as specified by SFAS No. 89, "Financial Reporting and Changing Prices," may combine those explanations with the discussion and analysis required by Item 302(a) of Regulation S-K, or may supply such information separately with appropriate cross reference. Instruction 9, Item 303(a), Regulation S-K.

Foreign private registrants also shall discuss briefly any pertinent governmental economic, fiscal, monetary, or political policies or factors that have materially affected or could materially affect, directly or indirectly, their operations or investments by United States nationals. See Instruction 11, Item 303(a), Regulation S-K.

Foreign private issuers must also focus on the primary financial statements presented in the registration statement or report. There shall be a reference to the reconciliation to U.S. GAAP, and a discussion of any aspects of the difference between foreign and U.S. GAAP, not discussed in the reconciliation, that the registrant believes is necessary for an understanding of the financial statements as a whole. See Instruction 12, Item 303(a), Regulation S-K.

(n258)Footnote 258. The term "off-balance sheet arrangement" is defined as any transaction, agreement or other contractual arrangement to which an entity unconsolidated with the registrant is a party and under which the registrant has:

- (a) any obligation under a guarantee contract that has any of the characteristics identified in paragraph 3 of FASB Interpretation No. 45, "Guarantor's Accounting and Disclosure Requirements for Guarantees, Including Indirect Guarantees of Indebtedness of Others" (November 2002);
- (b) a retained or contingent interest in assets transferred to an unconsolidated entity or similar arrangement that serves as credit, liquidity or market risk support for such assets;
- (c) any obligation, including a contingent obligation, under a contract that would be accounted for as a derivative instrument, except that it is both indexed to the registrant's own stock and classified in stockholders' equity in the registrant's statement of financial position, and therefore excluded from the scope of FASB Statement of Financial Accounting Standards No. 133, "Accounting for Derivative Instruments and Hedging Activities" (June 1998); or
- (d) any obligation, including a contingent obligation, arising out of a variable interest (as referenced in FASB Interpretation No. 46, "Consolidation of Variable Interest Entities" (January 2003), as may be modified or supplemented) in an unconsolidated entity that is held by, and is material to, the registrant, where such entity provides financing, liquidity, market risk or credit risk support to the registrant, or engages in leasing, hedging or research and development services with the registrant.

Item 303(a)(4)(ii). For purposes of Item 303(a)(4), contingent liabilities arising out of litigation, arbitration or regulatory actions are not considered to be off-balance sheet arrangements. Instruction 3, Item 303(a)(4), Regulation

S-K.

(n259)Footnote 259. The registrant should aggregate off-balance sheet arrangements in groups or categories that provide material information in an efficient and understandable manner and should avoid repetition and disclosure of immaterial information. The registrant must analyze in the aggregate effects that are common to or similar between a number of off-balance sheet arrangements, to the extent the aggregation increases understanding. To the extent material, distinctions in arrangements and their effects must be discussed, but the discussion should avoid repetition and disclosure of immaterial information. Instruction 2, Item 303(a)(4), Regulation S-K.

The Commission has undertaken enforcement activities against registrants who do not comply with the disclosure requirements of Item 303 of S-K. See, e.g., In the Matter of Caterpillar, Inc., Exch. Act Rel. No. 34-30532 (March 31, 1992). In Caterpillar, the Commission pursued an administrative proceeding to enforce deficiencies in Caterpillar's disclosure in public filings required under the Exchange Act of known uncertainties under Item 303 of Regulation S-K. Id. The action was settled by Caterpillar and the Commission ordered Caterpillar to cease and desist from committing or causing any violation or future violation of Section 13(a) of the Exchange Act and Rules 13a-1 and 13a-13 promulgated under the Exchange Act and ordered Caterpillar to implement and maintain procedures to ensure compliance with Item 303 of Regulation S-K.

(n274)Footnote 274. Item 304(a)(1)(i)-(iv), Regulation S-K. In the event that there has been a disagreement of the kind referred to in paragraph (4), the registrant must:

- (1) describe each such disagreement;
- (2) state whether any audit or similar committee of the board of directors, or the board of directors, discussed the subject matter of any of such disagreements with the former accountant; and
- (3) state whether the registrant has authorized the former accountant to respond fully to the inquiries of the successor accountant concerning the subject matter of any of such disagreements and, if not, the nature of and reason for any limitation on such authorization. Item 304(a)(1)(iv). Regulation S-K.

Disagreements required to be reported in response to Item 304(a)(1)(iv) of Regulation S-K include both those resolved to the former accountant's satisfaction and those not so resolved and mean those that occur at the decision-making level, i.e. between personnel of the registrant responsible for presentation of the financial statements and personnel of the accounting firm responsible for rendering the report. Id.

The term "disagreement" as used in Item 304 of Regulation S-K is to be interpreted broadly so as to include any difference of opinion concerning any matter of accounting principles or practices, financial statement disclosure, or auditing scope or procedure which, if not resolved to the satisfaction of the former accountant, would have caused such accountant to make reference to the subject matter of the disagreement in connection with the report. Accordingly, it is not necessary for there to have been an argument or formal disagreement; merely a difference of opinion requires disclosure. Instruction 4, Item 304, Regulation S-K. Disclosure is not required, however, of initial differences of opinion based on incomplete facts or preliminary information which were later resolved to the former accountant's satisfaction by obtaining additional relevant facts or information, provided that the registrant and the accountant did not continue to have a difference of opinion with respect to the matter resolved. Id. In determining whether any "disagreement" or "reportable event" (as those terms are used in Item 304(a)(1)(iv) and (v)) has occurred, an oral communication from the engagement partner or another person responsible for rendering the accounting firm's opinion (including their designee) will generally suffice as an indication that the accountant has advised the registrant of a "reportable event" or that there has been a "disagreement" at the "decision-making level" as those terms are used in Item 304. Instruction 5, Item 304, Regulation S-K.

(n280)Footnote 280. Item 304(a)(3), Regulation S-K.

The disclosure called for by Item 304(a) of Regulation S-K need not be provided if it has previously been reported in or filed with a statement under Section 12, a report under Section 13 or 15(d), or a definitive proxy or information statement under Section 14 of the Exchange Act, or a registration statement under the Securities Act. The disclosure must be provided, however, notwithstanding prior disclosure, if required pursuant to Item 9 of Schedule 14A. Instruction 1, Item 304, Regulation S-K.

When disclosure is required by Item 304(a) of Regulation S-K in an annual report to security holders pursuant to Rule 14a-3 or Rule 14c-3 or in a proxy or information statement filed pursuant to the requirements of Schedule 14A or 14C under the Exchange Act, then instead of the letters from the newly engaged accountant and the former accountant which are required by paragraphs (a)(2)(D) and (a)(3) of Item 304, the registrant shall furnish, prior to filing with or furnishing such material to the Commission, the disclosure required by Item 304(a) to any former accountant engaged by the registrant during the two preceding fiscal years and any subsequent interim period as well as to the newly engaged accountant. If any such accountant believes that the statements made by the registrant in response to the provisions of Item 304(a) are incorrect or incomplete, it may present its views in a brief statement, ordinarily not expected to exceed 200 words, to be included in the annual report or proxy or information statement. The accountant's statement must be submitted to the registrant within ten business days of the date that the accountant receives the registrant's disclosure. Instruction 2, Item 304, Regulation S-K.

Unless the written views of the newly engaged accountant required to be filed as an exhibit by paragraph (a)(2)(B) of Item 304 have been previously filed with the Commission, the registrant shall file a Form 8-K concurrently with the annual report or proxy or information statement for the purpose of filing such written views as an exhibit to such Form 8-K. Id.

The information required by Item 304(a) need not be provided for a company being acquired by the registrant if such company is not subject to the filing requirements of either Section 13(a) or 15(d) of the Exchange Act, or which, because of Section 12(i) of the Exchange Act, has not filed an annual report to security holders pursuant to Rule 14a-3 or Rule 14c-3 for its latest fiscal year. Instruction 3, Item 304, Regulation S-K.

For a discussion of the periodic reporting requirements and the requirements relating to the filing of proxy and information statements, see generally Federal Securities Exchange Act of 1934, A.A. Sommer, Jr., General Editor, chs. 4 and 7 (Matthew Bender).

(n281)Footnote 281. Item 304(b), Regulation S-K. These disclosures need not be made if the method asserted by the former accountants ceases to be generally accepted because of authoritative standards or interpretations subsequently issued. Id. the disclosure called for by of Item 304(b) must be furnished, where required, notwithstanding any prior disclosure about accountant changes or disagreements. Instruction 1, Item 304, Regulation S-K.

"Other financial instruments" excludes employer and plan obligations for pension and other post-retirement benefits, substantively extinguished debt, insurance contracts, lease contracts, warranty obligations and rights, unconditional purchase obligations, investments accounted for under the equity method, noncontrolling interests in consolidated enterprises and equity instruments issued by the registrant and classified in stockholders' equity in the statement of financial position. (2) for orders, judgments, or decrees, the date

(n361)Footnote 361. "Independent" has the same meaning as in Item 7(d)(3)(iv) of Schedule 14A under the Exchange Act. If the registrant has more than one audit committee financial expert serving on its audit committee, the registrant has the option of disclosing the names of those additional persons. If it does, the registrant must indicate whether they are independent. Instructions, Item 401(h)(1), Regulation S-K.

(n363)Footnote 363. The compensation discussion and analysis is considered "filed" with the Commission and will therefore be subject to Regulations 14A and 14C under the Exchange Act and to potential liability under Section 18 of the Exchange Act. 15 U.S.C. 78r. In addition, to the extent that the compensation discussion and analysis or any other disclosure regarding executive compensation is included or incorporated by reference into a periodic report, the disclosure will be subject to the certifications that CEOs and CFOs are required to make under the Sarbanes-Oxley Act of 2002.

(n365)Footnote 365. Unless specifically excluded from disclosure by Item 402, all such compensation shall be reported pursuant to this item, even if also called for by another requirement, including transactions between the registrant and a third party where the primary purpose of the transaction is to furnish compensation to any named executive officer or director. In addition, no item reported as compensation for one fiscal year need be reported as compensation for a subsequent fiscal year. Item 402(a)(2), Regulation S-K.

A foreign private issuer will be deemed to comply with Item 402 if it provides the information required by Items 6.B and 6.E.2 of Form 20-F, with more detailed information provided if otherwise made publicly available. Item 402(a)(1), Regulation S-K.

A registrant's reimbursement to an officer of legal expenses with respect to a lawsuit in which the officer was named as a defendant in her capacity as an officer is not disclosable pursuant to Item 402 of Regulation S-K. 217.10, Interpretive Responses Regarding Particular Situations.

(n366)Footnote 366. The term "executive officer" includes the registrant's president, any vice president in charge of a principal business unit, division or function, any other officer who performs a policy-making function or any other person who performs similar policy-making functions. Executive officers of subsidiaries may be deemed executive officers of the parent company if they perform such policy-making functions. See Rule 405. Therefore, a "named executive officer" for compensation disclosure purposes may be an executive officer of a subsidiary or an employee of a subsidiary who performs such policy-making functions for the company.

It may be appropriate in certain circumstances for a registrant to include an executive officer of a subsidiary in the disclosure required by Item 402. Instruction 2, Item 402(a)(3). See also Exchange Act Rule 3b-7. It may be appropriate in limited circumstances for a registrant not to include in the disclosure required by Item 402 an individual (other than its PEO or PFO) who is one of the registrant's most highly compensated executive officers due to the payment of amounts of cash compensation relating to overseas assignments attributed predominantly to such assignments. Instruction 3, Item 402(a)(3), Regulation S-K.

(n369)Footnote 369. Instruction 2, Item 402(b), Regulation S-K. The overview should also cover actions regarding executive compensation that were taken after the end of the registrant's last fiscal year. Actions that should be addressed may include, for instance, the adoption or implementation of new or modified programs and policies or specific decisions that were made that could affect a fair understanding of the named executive officer's compensation for the last fiscal year. In order to give context to the disclosure provided, it may be necessary to discuss prior years. Instruction 2, Item 402(b), Regulation S-K.

(n370)Footnote 370. Item 402(b)(1), Regulation S-K. The overview should focus on the most important factors relevant to the analysis of the registrant's material compensation policies. The discussion should reflect the individual circumstances of the registrant and should avoid boilerplate language and repetition of the more detailed information set forth in the tables and related narrative disclosures required by Item 402. Instruction 3, Item 402(b), Regulation S-K.

(n372)Footnote 372. Benchmarking generally entails using compensation data about other companies as a reference point on which--either wholly or in part--to base, justify or provide a framework for a compensation decision. It would not include a situation in which a company reviews or considers a broad-based third-party survey for a more general purpose, such as to obtain a general understanding of current compensation practices. (n375)Footnote 375. Instruction 4, Item 402(b), Regulation S-K. The standard to use when determining whether disclosure would cause competitive harm is the same standard that would apply when the registrant requests confidential treatment pursuant to Rule 406 of the Securities Act and Rule 12b-2 of the Exchange Act. A registrant is not required to seek confidential treatment if it determines that the disclosure would cause competitive harm in reliance on Instruction 4; however, in such case, the registrant must discuss how difficult it will be for the executive or how likely it will be for the registrant to achieve the undisclosed target level or other factors. Instruction 4, Item 402(b), Regulation S-K.

(n376)Footnote 376. Instruction 5, Item 402(b), Regulation S-K. However, disclosure must be provided as to how the number is calculated from the registrant's audited financial statements. Instruction 4, Item 402(b), Regulation S-K.

(n377)Footnote 377. But note, a reporting issuer with a 2009 fiscal year that ends before December 20, 2009 will not be required to comply with the new rules until the filing of its Form 10-K for fiscal year 2010. As a result, any Securities Act or Exchange Act registration statements for such registrant filed before the 2010 Form 10-K is required to be filed would not be subject to the new rules. Question 3, Proxy Disclosure Enhancements Transition.

Note also, if a new registrant first files its registration statement on or after December 20, 2009, compliance with the Regulation S-K amendments is required in order for such registration statement to be declared effective on or after February 28, 2010. Question 4, Proxy Disclosure Enhancements Transition.

(n378)Footnote 378. Information with respect to fiscal years prior to the last completed fiscal year is not required if the registrant was not a reporting company pursuant to Section 13(a) or 15(d) of the Exchange Act at any time during the year, unless such information was previously required in response to a filing requirement of the Commission. Instruction 1, Item 402(c), Regulation S-K.

Compensation information generally needs to be disclosed only for the fiscal year(s) the person was a named executive officer; however, where a person was a named executive officer in years 1 and 3, compensation information for all three fiscal years must be disclosed. Questions 119.01 and 119.18, Questions and Answers of General Applicability, Securities Act Forms.

(n379)Footnote 379. Any amounts deferred, whether pursuant to a plan established under Section 401(k) of the Internal Revenue Code (26 U.S.C. 401(k)), or otherwise, are required to be included in the salary or bonus column, as appropriate, for the fiscal year in which they are earned. Instruction 4, Item 402(c), Regulation S-K.

(n380)Footnote 380. If the amount of salary or bonus earned in a given fiscal year is not calculable through the latest practicable date, a footnote must be included disclosing that fact and providing the date on which the amount of salary or bonus is expected to be determined, and such amount must then be disclosed in a filing under Item 5.02(f) of Form 8-K. Instruction 1, Item 402(c)(2)(iii) and (iv), Regulation S-K. The salary column (column (c)) or bonus column (column (d)) need not include any amount of salary or bonus forgone at the election of a named executive officer under which stock, equity-based or other forms of non-cash compensation instead have been received. Instruction 2, Item 402(c)(2)(iii) and (iv), Regulation S-K. However, the receipt of any such form of non-cash compensation must be disclosed in a footnote added to the salary or bonus column and, where applicable, referring to the Grants of Plan-Based Awards Table (required by paragraph (d) of Item 402) where the stock, option or non-equity incentive plan award elected by the named executive officer is reported. Instruction 4, Item 402(c), Regulation S-K.

(n382)Footnote 382. The term "option" means instruments such as stock options, stock appreciation rights and similar instruments with option-like features. The term "stock appreciation rights" ("SARs") refers to SARs payable in cash or stock, including SARs payable in cash or stock at the election of the registrant or a named executive officer. The term "equity" is used to refer generally to stock and/or options. Item 402(a)(6)(i), Regulation S-K.

(n383)Footnote 383. For awards reported in columns (e) and (f), include a footnote disclosing all assumptions made in the valuation by reference to a discussion of those assumptions in the registrant's financial statements, footnotes to the financial statements or discussion in the Management's Discussion and Analysis. The sections so referenced are deemed part of the disclosure provided pursuant to Item 402. Instruction 1, Item 402(c)(2)(v) and (vi), Regulation S-K.

If at any time during the last completed fiscal year, the registrant has adjusted or amended the exercise price of options or SARs previously awarded to a named executive officer, whether through amendment, cancellation or replacement grants or any other means, or otherwise has materially modified such awards, the registrant shall include, as awards required to be reported in column (f), the incremental fair value, computed as of the repricing or modification date in accordance with FASB ASC Topic 718, with respect to that repriced or modified award. Instruction 2, Item 402(c)(2)(v) and (vi), Regulation S-K.

For any awards that are subject to performance conditions, report the value at the grant date based upon the probable outcome of such conditions. This amount should be consistent with the estimate of aggregate compensation cost to be recognized over the service period determined as of the grant date under FASB ASC Topic 718, excluding the effect of estimated forfeitures. In a footnote to the table, disclose the value of the award at the grant date assuming that the highest level of performance conditions will be achieved in an amount less than the maximum was included in the table. Instruction 3, Item 402(c)(2)(v) and (vi), Regulation S-K.

(n384)Footnote 384. The term "incentive plan" means any plan providing compensation intended to serve as incentive for performance to occur over a specified period, whether such performance is measured by reference to financial performance of the registrant or an affiliate, the registrant's stock price, or any other performance measure. Item 402(a)(6)(iii), Regulation S-K. An "equity incentive plan" is an incentive plan or portion of an incentive plan under which awards are granted that fall within the scope of Financial Accounting Standards Board Statement of Financial Accounting Standards No. 123 (revised 2004), Share-Based Payment, as modified or supplemented ("FAS 123R"). A "non-equity incentive plan" is an incentive plan or portion of an incentive plan that is not an equity incentive plan. The term "incentive plan award" means an award provided under an incentive plan. Item 402(a)(6)(iii), Regulation S-K.

(n385)Footnote 385. If the relevant performance measure is satisfied during the fiscal year (including for a single year in a plan with a multi-year performance measure), the earnings are reportable for that fiscal year, even if not payable until a later date, and are not reportable again in the fiscal year when amounts are paid to the named executive officer. Instruction 1, Item 402(c)(2)(vii), Regulation S-K. All earnings on non-equity incentive plan compensation must be identified and quantified in a footnote to column (g), whether the earnings were paid during the fiscal year, payable during the period but deferred at the election of the named executive officer, or payable by their terms at a later date. Instruction 2, Item 402(c)(2)(vii), Regulation S-K.

(n387)Footnote 387. The disclosure required under column (h)(A) applies to each plan that provides for the payment of retirement benefits, or benefits that will be paid primarily following retirement, including but not limited to tax-qualified defined benefit plans and supplemental executive retirement plans, but excluding tax-qualified defined contribution plans and nonqualified defined contribution plans. Instruction 1, Item 402(c)(2)(viii), Regulation S-K. For purposes of this disclosure, the registrant should use the same amounts required to be disclosed pursuant to Item 402(h)(2)(iv) (disclosure of Pension Benefits) for the covered fiscal year and the amounts that were or would have been required to be reported for the executive officer pursuant to Item 402(h)(2)(iv) for the prior completed fiscal year.

Where such amount under this paragraph (A) is negative, it should not be reflected in the sum of column (h), but rather disclosed in a footnote. Instruction 3, Item 402(c)(2)(viii), Regulation S-K.

(n388)Footnote 388. For disclosure under column (h)(B), interest on deferred compensation is above-market only if the rate of interest exceeds 120% of the applicable federal long-term rate, with compounding (as prescribed under Section 1274(d) of the Internal Revenue Code, (26 U.S.C. 1274(d))) at the rate that corresponds most closely to the rate under the registrant's plan at the time the interest rate or formula is set. Instruction 2, Item 402(c)(2)(viii), Regulation S-K. In the event of a discretionary reset of the interest rate, the requisite calculation must be made on the basis of the interest rate at the time of such reset, rather than when originally established. Only the above-market portion of the interest must be included. If the applicable interest rates vary depending upon conditions such as a minimum period of continued service, the reported amount should be calculated assuming satisfaction of all conditions to receiving interest at the highest rate. Dividends (and dividend equivalents) on deferred compensation denominated in the registrant's stock ("deferred stock") are preferential only if earned at a rate higher than dividends on the registrant's common stock, and only the preferential portion of the dividends or equivalents must be included. The registrant may provide footnote or narrative disclosure to explain the criteria for determining any portion considered to be above-market. Instruction 2, Item 402(c)(2)(viii), Regulation S-K.

(n389)Footnote 389. Each compensation item that is not properly reportable in columns (c)-(h), regardless of the amount, must be included in column (i). Item 402(c)(2)(ix), Regulation S-K. Benefits paid pursuant to defined benefit and actuarial plans are not reportable as All Other Compensation in column (i) unless accelerated pursuant to a change in control; information concerning these plans is reportable pursuant to column (h) of the Summary Compensation Table (Item 402(c)(2)(viii)(A)) and Item 402(h). Instruction 2, Item 402(c)(2)(ix), Regulation S-K.

(n390)Footnote 390. If the total value of all perquisites and personal benefits is $10,000 or more for any named executive officer, then each perquisite or personal benefit, regardless of its amount, must be identified by type. Instruction 4, Item 402(c)(2)(ix), Regulation S-K. If perquisites and personal benefits are required to be reported, then each perquisite or personal benefit that exceeds the greater of $25,000 or 10% of the total amount of perquisites and personal benefits for that officer must be quantified and disclosed in a footnote. The requirements for identification and quantification apply only to compensation for the last fiscal year. Perquisites and other personal benefits should be valued on the basis of the aggregate incremental cost to the registrant. With respect to the perquisite or other personal benefit for which footnote quantification is required, the registrant should describe its methodology for computing the aggregate incremental cost in the footnote. Instruction 4, Item 402(c)(2)(ix), Regulation S-K.

Any item reported for a named executive officer pursuant to column (i) that is not a perquisite or personal benefit and whose value exceeds $10,000 must be identified and quantified in a footnote to column (i). This requirement applies only to compensation for the last fiscal year. Instruction 3, Item 402(c)(2)(ix), Regulation S-K.

(n391)Footnote 391. Reimbursements of taxes owed with respect to perquisites or other personal benefits must be included in column (i) and are subject to separate quantification and identification as tax reimbursements even if the associated perquisites or other personal benefits are not required to be included because the total amount of all perquisites or personal benefits for a named executive officer is less than $10,000 or are required to be identified but are not required to be separately quantified. Instruction 4, Item 402(c)(2)(ix), Regulation S-K.

(n393)Footnote 393. The terms "date of grant" or "grant date" refer to the grant date determined for purposes of financial statement reporting under FAS 123R. Item 402(a)(6)(iv), Regulation S-K.

(n394)Footnote 394. See Item 402(c)(i)-(ix), Regulation S-K.

(n395)Footnote 395. Instruction 2, Item 402(c), Regulation S-K.

(n396)Footnote 396. For such disclosure, the registrant should utilize the categories in the Director Compensation Table required under Item 402(k) of Regulation S-K. Instruction 3, Item 402(c), Regulation S-K.

(n397)Footnote 397. But note, a reporting issuer with a 2009 fiscal year that ends before December 20, 2009 will not be required to comply with the new rules until the filing of its Form 10-K for fiscal year 2010. As a result, any Securities Act or Exchange Act registration statements for such registrant filed before the 2010 Form 10-K is required to be filed would not be subject to the new rules. Question 3, Proxy Disclosure Enhancements Transition.

Note also, if a new registrant first files its registration statement on or after December 20, 2009, compliance with the Regulation S-K amendments is required in order for such registration statement to be declared effective on or after February 28, 2010. Question 4, Proxy Disclosure Enhancements Transition.

(n398)Footnote 398. If such grant date is different than the date on which the compensation committee (or a committee of the board of directors performing a similar function or the full board of directors) takes action or is deemed to take action to grant such awards, a separate, adjoining column must be added between columns (b) and (c) showing such date. Item 402(d)(2)(ii), Regulation S-K.

(n399)Footnote 399. As used in Item 402(d), the term "threshold" refers to the minimum amount payable for a certain level of performance under the plan. Instruction 2, Item 402(d), Regulation S-K. The term "target" refers to the amount payable if the specified performance targets are reached. The term "maximum" refers to the maximum payout possible under the plan. If the award provides only for a single estimated payout, that amount must be reported as the target. When calculating the target, registrants must provide a representative amount based on the previous fiscal year's performance if the target amount is not determinable. Instruction 2, Item 402(d), Regulation S-K.

(n400)Footnote 400. If non-equity incentive plan awards are denominated in units or other rights, a separate, adjoining column between columns (b) and (c) must be added quantifying the units or other rights awarded. Instruction 6, Item 402(d), Regulation S-K.

(n401)Footnote 401. If such exercise or base price is less than the closing market price of the underlying security on the date of the grant, a separate, adjoining column showing the closing market price on the date of the grant shall be added after column (k). Item 402(d)(2)(vii), Regulation S-K. In determining if the exercise or base price of an option is less than the closing market price of the underlying security on the date of the grant, the registrant may use either the closing market price (i.e., the price at which the registrant's security was last sold in the principal United States market for such security), or if no market exists, any other formula prescribed for the security. Instruction 3, Item 402(d), Regulation S-K; see also Item 402(a)(6)(v). Whenever the exercise or base price reported in column (k) is not the closing market price, the registrant should describe the methodology for determining the exercise or base price either by a footnote or accompanying textual narrative. Instruction 3, Item 402(d), Regulation S-K.

(n402)Footnote 402. If at any time during the last completed fiscal year, the registrant has adjusted or amended the exercise or base price of options, SARs or similar option-like instruments previously awarded to a named executive officer, whether through amendment, cancellation or replacement grants, or any other means ("repriced"), or otherwise has materially modified such awards, the incremental fair value, computed as of the repricing or modification date in accordance with FAS 123R, with respect to that repriced or modified award, shall be reported. Item 402(d)(2)(viii), Regulation S-K.

(n407)Footnote 407. Instruction 7, Item 402(d), Regulation S-K.

(n408)Footnote 408. Instruction 8, Item 402(d), Regulation S-K. This amount should be consistent with the estimate of aggregate compensation cost to be recognized over the service period determined as of the grant date under FASB ASC Topic 718, excluding the effect of estimated forfeitures.

(n411)Footnote 411. For example, modification by extension of exercise periods, the change of vesting or forfeiture conditions, the change or elimination of applicable performance criteria, or the change of the bases upon which returns are determined. Item 402(e)(1)(ii), Regulation S-K.

(n412)Footnote 412. Such disclosure requirement does not apply to any repricing that occurs through a preexisting formula or mechanism in the plan or award that results in the periodic adjustment of the option or SAR exercise or base price, an antidilution provision in a plan or award, or a recapitalization or similar transaction equally affecting all holders of the class of securities underlying the options or SARs. Instruction 1, Item 402(e)(1), Regulation S-K.

(n413)Footnote 413. For example, the registrant should state where applicable that dividends will be paid on stock, and if so, the applicable dividend rate and whether that rate is preferential. Item 402(e)(1)(iii), Regulation S-K.

(n414)Footnote 414. For purposes of the Grants of Plan-Based Awards Table required under Item 402(d) and the narrative disclosure required by Item 402(e), performance-based conditions include both performance conditions and market conditions, as those terms are defined in FAS 123R.

(n415)Footnote 415. The "market value" of stock reported under column (h) and of equity incentive plan awards of stock reported under column (j) is computed by multiplying the closing market price of the registrant's stock at the end of the last completed fiscal year by the number of shares or units of stock or the amount of equity incentive plan awards, respectively. Instruction 3, Item 402(f)(2), Regulation S-K. The number of shares or units reported in columns (d) or (i), and the payout value reported in column (j), must be based on achieving threshold performance goals, except that if the previous fiscal year's performance has exceeded the threshold, the disclosure should be based on the next higher performance measure (target or maximum) that exceeds the previous fiscal year's performance. If the award provides only for a single estimated payout, that amount should be reported. If the target amount is not determinable, registrants must provide a representative amount based on the previous fiscal year's performance. Instruction 3, Item 402(f)(2), Regulation S-K.

For this purpose, the "previous fiscal year" means the same year as the "last completed fiscal year." Question 120.04, Questions and Answers of General Applicability, Securities Act Forms.

(n421)Footnote 421. The dollar amount realized upon exercise is calculated by determining the difference between the market price of the underlying securities at exercise and the exercise or base price of the options. Instruction, Item 402(g)(2), Regulation S-K. The registrant should not include the value of any related payment or other consideration provided (or to be provided) by the registrant to or on behalf of a named executive officer, whether in payment of the exercise price or related taxes (any such payment or other consideration is required to be disclosed in column (i) of the Summary Compensation Table under Item 402(c)(2)(ix)).

(n423)Footnote 423. See Item 402(h)(1), Regulation S-K. The required disclosure includes but is not limited to tax-qualified defined benefit plans and supplemental executive retirement plans, but excludes tax-qualified defined contribution plans and nonqualified defined contribution plans. Instruction 1, Item 402(h)(2), Regulation S-K. For purposes of allocating the current accrued benefit between tax-qualified defined benefit plans and related supplemental plans, the registrant should apply the limitations applicable to tax-qualified defined benefit plans established by the Internal Revenue Code and the regulations thereunder that applied as of the pension plan measurement date. Instruction 3, Item 402(h)(2), Regulation S-K.

(n426)Footnote 426. If a named executive officer's number of years of credited service with respect to any plan is different from such officer's number of actual years of service with the registrant, a footnote should be provided quantifying the difference and any resulting benefit augmentation. Instruction 4, Item 402(h)(2), Regulation S-K; see also Item 402(h)(3)(v), Regulation S-K.

(n427)Footnote 427. In column (d), the registrant must use the same assumptions used for financial reporting purposes under generally accepted accounting principles, except that retirement age must be assumed to be the normal retirement age as defined in the plan, or if not so defined, the earliest time at which a participant may retire under the plan without any benefit reduction due to age. Instruction 2, Item 402(h)(2), Regulation S-K. Furthermore, in the accompanying textual narrative on pension benefits, the registrant must disclose the valuation method and all material assumptions applied in quantifying the present value of the current accrued benefit. A benefit specified in the plan document or the executive's contract itself is not an assumption. All or part of this disclosure may be satisfied by reference to a discussion of such assumptions in the registrant's financial statements and related footnotes, or discussion in the Management's Discussion and Analysis. Instruction 2, Item 402(h)(2), Regulation S-K.

(n429)Footnote 429. For this purpose, normal retirement means retirement at the normal retirement age as defined in the plan, or if not so defined, the earliest time at which a participant may retire under the plan without any benefit reduction due to age. Item 402(h)(3)(i), Regulation S-K.

(n430)Footnote 430. For this purpose, early retirement means retirement at the early retirement age as defined in the plan, or otherwise available to the executive under the plan. Item 402(h)(3)(ii), Regulation S-K.

(n431)Footnote 431. Item 402(i)(3), Regulation S-K.

(n432)Footnote 432. See Item 402(i)(2), Regulation S-K. A footnote should be provided quantifying the extent to which amounts reported in the contributions and earnings columns are reported as compensation for the last completed fiscal year in the registrant's Summary Compensation Table. Additionally, the footnote should quantify the extent to which amounts reported in the aggregate balance at last fiscal year end (column (f)) previously were reported as compensation to the named executive officer in the registrant's Summary Compensation Table for previous years. Instruction, Item 402(i)(2), Regulation S-K.

(n435)Footnote 435. As used in Item 402(j), termination includes resignation, severance, retirement or a constructive termination of a named executive officer. Item 402(j), Regulation S-K.

(n436)Footnote 436. If the form and amount of any payment or benefit that would be provided in connection with any termination or change-in-control is fully disclosed under Item 402(h) or Item 402(i), reference may be made to such disclosure. Instruction 3, Item 402(j), Regulation S-K. However, to the extent that the form or amount of any such payment or benefit would be enhanced or its vesting or other provisions accelerated in connection with any triggering event, such enhancement or acceleration must be disclosed under Item 402(j). Instruction 3, Item 402(j), Regulation S-K.

(n437)Footnote 437. Perquisites and other personal benefits or property may be excluded if the aggregate amount of such compensation will be less than $10,000. Instruction 2, Item 402(j), Regulation S-K. For purposes of quantifying health care benefits, the registrant must use the assumptions used for financial reporting purposes under generally accepted accounting principles. If a triggering event has actually occurred for a named executive officer and such individual was not serving as a named executive officer at the end of the last completed fiscal year, the disclosure for that named executive officer shall apply only to that triggering event. Instruction 4, Item 402(j), Regulation S-K.

(n439)Footnote 439. Instruction 1, Item 402(j), Regulation S-K. The term "closing market price" means the price at which the registrant's security was last sold in the principal United States market for such security as of the date for which the closing market price is determined. Item 402(a)(6)(v), Regulation S-K.

(n442)Footnote 442. But note, a reporting issuer with a 2009 fiscal year that ends before December 20, 2009 will not be required to comply with the new rules until the filing of its Form 10-K for fiscal year 2010. As a result, any Securities Act or Exchange Act registration statements for such registrant filed before the 2010 Form 10-K is required to be filed would not be subject to the new rules. Question 3, Proxy Disclosure Enhancements Transition.

Note also, if a new registrant first files its registration statement on or after December 20, 2009, compliance with the Regulation S-K amendments is required in order for such registration statement to be declared effective on or after February 28, 2010. Question 4, Proxy Disclosure Enhancements Transition.

(n443)Footnote 443. Instruction, Item 402(k)(2), Regulation S-K.

(n444)Footnote 444. Each director must be included in the Director Compensation Table, unless such director is also a "named executive officer" under Item 402(a) and his or her compensation for service as a director is fully reflected in the Summary Compensation Table under Item 402(c) and otherwise as required pursuant to paragraphs (d) through (j) of Item 402. Item 402(k)(2)(i), Regulation S-K.

(n445)Footnote 445. The following apply equally to Item 402(k): Instructions 2 and 4 to Item 402(c); Instructions to Item (c)(2)(iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii) and (viii) and Instructions 1 and 5 to Item 402 (c)(2)(ix). These Instructions apply to the columns in the Director Compensation Table that are analogous to the columns in the Summary Compensation Table to which they refer and to disclosures under paragraph (k) of this Item that correspond to analogous disclosures provided for in paragraph (c) of this Item to which they refer. Instruction to Item 402(k).

(n446)Footnote 446. However, if the total value of all perquisites and personal benefits is $10,000 or more for any director, then each perquisite or personal benefit, regardless of its amount, must be identified by type. Instruction 3, Item 402(k)(2)(vii), Regulation S-K. Furthermore, if perquisites and personal benefits are required to be reported under column (g), then each perquisite or personal benefit that exceeds the greater of $25,000 or 10 percent of the total amount of perquisites and personal benefits for that director must be quantified and disclosed in a footnote. Perquisites and other personal benefits shall be valued on the basis of the aggregate incremental cost to the registrant, and the required footnotes should describe the methodology for computing such cost. Instruction 3, Item 402(k)(2)(vii), Regulation S-K.

Any item of compensation that is not a perquisite or personal benefit and whose value exceeds $10,000 must be identified and quantified in a footnote to column (g). Instruction 2, Item 402(k)(2)(vii), Regulation S-K.

(n447)Footnote 447. This includes reimbursements of taxes owed with respect to perquisites or other personal benefits, even if such benefits are not required to be included in column (g) because the total amount of such benefits for an individual director is less than $10,000. Instruction 3, Item 402(k)(2)(vii), Regulation S-K.

(n448)Footnote 448. This includes programs under which the registrant agrees to make donations to a charitable institution in a director's name; for instance, upon the retirement of the director. Instruction 1, Item 402(k)(2)(vii), Regulation S-K. In such scenarios, a footnote should be added disclosing the total dollar amount payable and other material terms under the program. Instruction 1, Item 402(k)(2)(vii), Regulation S-K.

(n451)Footnote 451. Item 402(k)(3), Regulation S-K.

(n452)Footnote 452. Such instructions applicable to the columns in the Director Compensation Table include: Instructions 2 and 4 of Item 402(c) concerning disclosure in U.S. dollars and disclosure of amounts deferred under 401(k) plans or otherwise; Instructions to Item 402(c)(2)(iii) and (iv) concerning calculation of amounts and forgone salary and bonus amounts; Instructions to Item 402(c)(2)(v) and (vi) concerning forfeitures related to service-based vesting conditions; Instructions to Item 402(c)(2)(vii) regarding awards under non-equity incentive plans; Instructions to Item 402(c)(2)(viii) regarding above-market or preferential earnings; and Instructions 1 and 5 of Item 402(c)(2)(ix) regarding other compensation. See Instruction, Item 402(k); see generally § 7.03[2][k][xii][C] supra (discussing the requirements for the Summary Compensation Table and related instructions under Item 402(c)).

(n453)Footnote 453. See § 7.05 infra for discussion on criteria necessary to qualify as a smaller reporting company.

(n455)Footnote 455. See Sec. Act Rel. No. 33-8876.

(n457)Footnote 457. As with larger companies, unless specifically excluded from disclosure under Item 402, all such compensation must be reported, including transactions between the smaller reporting company and a third party where a purpose of the transaction is to furnish compensation to any such named executive officer or director. In addition, no item reported as compensation for one fiscal year need be reported as compensation for a subsequent fiscal year. Item 402(m)(1), Regulation S-K.

It may be appropriate for a smaller reporting company to include an executive officer of a subsidiary in the disclosure required by Item 402(m). Instruction 2, Item 402(m)(2), Regulation S-K; see also Exchange Act Rule 3b-7. It may be appropriate in limited circumstances for a smaller reporting company not to include in the disclosure required by Item 402 an individual who is one of the smaller reporting company's most highly compensated executive officers due to the payment of amounts of cash compensation related to overseas assignments attributed predominantly to such assignments. Instruction 3, Item 402(m)(2), Regulation S-K.

As a result, any Securities Act or Exchange Act registration statements for such registrant filed before the 2010 Form 10-K is required to be filed would not be subject to the new rules. Question 3, Proxy Disclosure Enhancements Transition.

Note also, if a new registrant first files its registration statement on or after December 20, 2009, compliance with the Regulation S-K amendments is required in order for such registration statement to be declared effective on or after February 28, 2010. Question 4, Proxy Disclosure Enhancements Transition.

(n462)Footnote 462. Information with respect to the fiscal year prior to the last completed fiscal year is not required if the registrant was not a reporting company pursuant to Section 13(a) or 15(d) of the Exchange Act at any time during the year, unless such information was previously required in response to a filing requirement of the Commission. Instruction 1, Item 402(n), Regulation S-K.

(n464)Footnote 464. If the amount of salary or bonus earned in a given fiscal year is not calculable through the latest practicable date, a footnote must be included disclosing that fact and providing the date that the amount of salary or bonus is expected to be determined, and such amount must then be disclosed in a filing under Item 5.02(f) of Form 8-K. Instruction 1, Item 402(n)(2)(iii) and (iv), Regulation S-K. The salary column (column (c)) or bonus column (column (d)) should include any amount of salary or bonus forgone at the election of a named executive officer under which stock, equity-based or other forms of non-cash compensation instead have been received. Instruction 2, Item 402(n)(2)(iii) and (iv), Regulation S-K. However, the receipt of any such form of non-cash compensation must be disclosed in a footnote added to the salary or bonus column and, where applicable, referring to the narrative disclosure required by paragraph (o) of Item 402 where the stock, option or non-equity incentive plan award elected by the named executive officer is reported. Instruction 2, Item 402(n)(2)(iii) and (iv), Regulation S-K.

(n465)Footnote 465. The meaning of the term "stock" is discussed supra in § 7.03[2][k][xii]C and the accompanying footnotes.

(n466)Footnote 466. The meaning of the terms "option," "SARs" and "equity" are discussed supra in § 7.03[2][k][xii]C and the accompanying footnote.

(n469)Footnote 469. The directions for disclosure under column (g) are identical to those of larger companies. See § 7.03[2][k][xii]C supra and accompanying footnotes.

(n471)Footnote 471. Each compensation item that is not properly reportable in columns (c)-(h), regardless of the amount, must be included in column (i). Item 402(n)(2)(ix), Regulation S-K. Benefits paid pursuant to defined benefit and actuarial plans are not reportable as All Other Compensation in column (i) unless accelerated pursuant to a change in control; information concerning these plans is reportable pursuant to the Additional Narrative Disclosure for smaller reporting companies required under Item 402(q)(1) of Regulation S-K. Instruction 2, Item 402(n)(2)(ix), Regulation S-K.

(n473)Footnote 473. Reimbursements of taxes owed with respect to perquisites or other personal benefits must be included in column (i) even if the associated perquisites or other personal benefits are not required to be included because the aggregate amount of such compensation is less than $10,000. Instruction 3, Item 402(n)(2)(ix), Regulation S-K.

(n474)Footnote 474. For purposes of column (i), an accrued amount is an amount for which payment has become due. Instruction 5, Item 402(n)(2)(ix), Regulation S-K.

(n475)Footnote 475. Other non-equity incentive plan awards and earnings along with earnings paid on stock or options need not be disclosed under column (i), but must be reported, as applicable, under the Narrative Disclosure to Summary Compensation Table (Item 402(o)) and Outstanding Equity Awards at Fiscal Year-End Table (Item 402(p)). Instruction, Item 402(n)(2)(ix), Regulation S-K.

Such disclosure requirement does not apply to any repricing that occurs through a preexisting formula or mechanism in the plan or award that results in the periodic adjustment of the option or SAR exercise or base price, an antidilution provision in a plan or award, or a recapitalization or similar transaction equally affecting all holders of the class of securities underlying the options or SARs. Instruction, Item 402(o), Regulation S-K.

(n482)Footnote 482. This would include a general description of the formula or criteria to be applied in determining the amounts payable and the vesting schedule. Item 402(o)(5), Regulation S-K.

(n483)Footnote 483. An item is not considered "material" if it does not exceed the greater of $25,000 or 10% of all items included in the specified category in question under column (i) of the Summary Compensation Table. However, all items of compensation are required to be included in the Summary Compensation Table without regard to whether such items are required to be identified under Item 402(o). Item 402(o)(7), Regulation S-K.

(n492)Footnote 492. But note, a reporting issuer with a 2009 fiscal year that ends before December 20, 2009 will not be required to comply with the new rules until the filing of its Form 10-K for fiscal year 2010. As a result, any Securities Act or Exchange Act registration statements for such registrant filed before the 2010 Form 10-K is required to be filed would not be subject to the new rules. Question 3, Proxy Disclosure Enhancements Transition.

Note also, if a new registrant first files its registration statement on or after December 20, 2009, compliance with the Regulation S-K amendments is required in order for such registration statement to be declared effective on or after February 28, 2010. Question 4, Proxy Disclosure Enhancements Transition.

(n494)Footnote 494. Each director must be included in the Director Compensation Table, unless such director is also a "named executive officer" under Item 402(m) and his or her compensation for service as a director is fully reflected in the Summary Compensation Table under Item 402(n) and otherwise as required pursuant to paragraphs (o) through (q) of Item 402. Item 402(r)(2)(i), Regulation S-K.

(n496)Footnote 496. Each compensation item that is not properly reportable in columns (b) through (f), regardless of the amount, must be included in column (g) and must be identified and quantified in a footnote if it is deemed material. Item 402(r)(2)(vii), Regulation S-K. An item is not considered "material" if it does not exceed the greater of $25,000 or 10% of all items included in the specified category in question under column (g) of the Director Compensation Table. Item 402(o)(7), Regulation S-K.

(n501)Footnote 501. Item 402(s), Regulation S-K. The purpose of the disclosure is to provide investors material information concerning how the registrant compensates and incentivizes its employees that may create risks that are reasonably likely to have a material adverse effect on the registrant.

(n502)Footnote 502. Item 402(s), Regulation S-K. While the information to be disclosed will vary depending upon the nature of the registrant's business and the compensation approach, the following are examples of the issues that the registrant may need to address for the business units or employees discussed:

(1) the general philosophy of the registrant's compensation policies and practices for employees whose behavior would be most affected by the incentives established by the policies and practices, as such policies and practices relate to or affect risk taking by employees on behalf of the registrant, and the manner of their implementation;

(2) the registrant's risk assessment or incentive considerations, if any, in structuring the compensation policies and practices or in awarding and paying compensation;

(3) how the registrant's compensation policies and practices relate to the realization of risks resulting from the actions of employees in both the short term and the long term, such as through policies requiring claw backs or imposing holding periods;

(4) the registrant's policies regarding adjustments to its compensation policies and practice to address changes in its risk profile;

(5) material adjustments the registrant has made to its compensation policies and practices as a result of changes in its risk profile and

(6) the extent to which the registrant monitors its compensation policies and practices to determine whether its risk management objectives are being met with respect to incentivizing its employees.

(n503)Footnote 503. Such instructions applicable to the columns in the Director Compensation Table include: Instructions 2 and 4 of Item 402(n) concerning disclosure in U.S. dollars and disclosure of amounts deferred under 401(k) plans or otherwise; Instructions to Item 402(n)(2)(iii) and (iv) concerning calculation of amounts and forgone salary and bonus amounts; Instructions to Item 402(n)(2)(v) and (vi) concerning forfeitures related to service-based vesting conditions; Instructions to Item 402(n)(2)(vii) regarding awards under non-equity incentive plans; Instruction to Item 402(n)(2)(viii) regarding above-market or preferential earnings; Instructions to Item 402(n)(2)(ix) regarding other compensation and paragraph 402(o)(7) regarding materiality. See Instruction, Item 402(r); see generally § 7.03[2][xii][N] supra (discussing the requirements for a smaller reporting company's Summary Compensation Table and related instructions under Item 402(n)).

(n506)Footnote 506. If more than one beneficial owner is known to the registrant to be listed for the same securities, appropriate disclosure should be made to avoid confusion. Instruction 5, Item 403, Regulation S-K. The registrant should not count shares more than once when computing pursuant to Item 403(b) the aggregate number of shares owned by directors and officers as a groups. Instruction 5, Item 403, Regulation S-K.

The beneficial ownership disclosure requirement of Section 13(d) of the Exchange Act and the rules adopted there-under are discussed in Federal Securities Exchange Act of 1934, A.A. Sommer, Jr., General Editor, § 7A.02 (Matthew Bender).

(n507)Footnote 507. The percentages are to be calculated on the basis of the amount of outstanding securities, excluding securities held by or for the account of the registrant or its subsidiaries, plus securities deemed outstanding under Exchange Act Rule 13d-3(d)(1), i.e., securities subject to options, warrants, rights, or conversion privileges that can be exercised or converted within 60 days. Instruction 1, Item 403, Regulation S-K. The registrant may omit precise ownership percentages when the percentage for a director or nominee for election as director, or all officers and directors as a group, represents less than one percent of the class of securities, provided that the registrant discloses by footnote or similar means that the ownership figure is less than one percent. Instruction 1, Item 403, Regulation S-K.

The registrant is deemed to know the contents of any statements filed with the Commission pursuant to Section 13(d) or 13(g) of the Exchange Act, which require persons who acquire more than five percent of a class of an issuer's equity securities to file reports with the Commission. The registrant may rely upon information in those statements unless the registrant knows or has reason to believe that the information is incomplete or inaccurate or that a statement or amendment should have been filed and was not. Instruction 3, Item 403, Regulation S-K.

(n511)Footnote 511. The information called for by Item 404 should be given for both the periods specified in the Item and for the two fiscal years preceding the registrant's last fiscal year. Instruction 1, Item 404, Regulation S-K. A foreign private issue will be deemed to comply with Item 404 if it provides the information required by Item 7.B of Form 20-F, with more detailed information provided if otherwise made publicly available or required to be disclosed by the issuer's home jurisdiction or market in which its securities are listed or traded. Instruction 2, Item 404, Regulation S-K.

(n512)Footnote 512. The term "transaction" includes, but is not limited to, any financial transaction, arrangement or relationship (including indebtedness or guarantee of indebtedness) or any series of the same. Instruction 2, Item 404(a), Regulation S-K.

Items of indebtedness may be excluded and need not be disclosed if they are amounts due from the related person for (x) purchases of goods and services subject to usual terms, (y) ordinary business travel and expense payments, and (z) other transactions in the ordinary course of business. Instruction 4, Item 404(a), Regulation S-K. Moreover, if the lender is a bank, savings and loan association, or broker-dealer extending credit under Federal Reserve Regulation T and the loans are not disclosed as nonaccrual, past due, restructured or potential problems, the disclosure under Item 404(a) may consist of a statement that the loans to such persons: (x) were made in the ordinary course of business; (y) were made on substantially the same terms, including interest rates and collateral, as those prevailing at the time for comparable loans with persons not related to the lender; and (z) did not involve more than the normal risk of collectibility or present other unfavorable features.

The term "persons not related to the lender" means persons with no relationship at all with the lender other than the lending relationship, such as regular customers. Employees are considered related to the lender by virtue of their employment relationship. Question 130.05, Questions and Answers of General Applicability, Securities Act Forms.

(n513)Footnote 513. A person who has a position or relationship with a firm, corporation, or other entity that engages in a transaction with the registrant or its subsidiaries may have an indirect interest in the transaction because of that position or relationship. That person, however, will not be deemed to have a material interest in the transaction if the interest arises only from:

(a) the person's position as a director of another corporation that is a party to the transaction;

(b) the direct or indirect ownership by that person and all other related persons specified in Instruction 1 of Item 404(a), in the aggregate, of less than a ten percent equity interest in another person, other than a partnership, that is a party to the transaction; or

(c) both the foregoing position and ownership; or

(2) the person's position as a limited partner in a partnership in which the person and all other related persons specified in Instruction 1 of Item 404(a) have an interest of less than ten percent, and the person is not a general partner of and does not hold another position in the partnership.

Instruction 6, Item 404(a), Regulation S-K.

(n514)Footnote 514. Information related to such nominee for director need only be included when presented in a proxy or information statement related to the election of such nominee. Instruction 1, Item 404(a), Regulation S-K. Therefore, disclosure related to such nominee need not be included in Form S-1.

(n515)Footnote 515. Instruction 1, Item 404(a), Regulation S-K.

(n516)Footnote 516. The dollar value of the amount involved in the transaction in question must include:

(a) in the case of any lease or other transaction providing for periodic payments or installments, the aggregate amount of all periodic payments or installments due on or after the beginning of the registrant's last fiscal year, including any required or optional payments due during or at the conclusion of the lease or other transaction providing for periodic payments or installments; and

(b) in the case of indebtedness, the largest aggregate amount of all indebtedness outstanding at any time since the beginning of the registrant's last fiscal year and all amounts of interest payable on it during the last fiscal year.

Instruction 3, Item 404(a), Regulation S-K.

In the case of indebtedness, the registrant must also disclose the amount of indebtedness outstanding as of the latest practicable date, the amounts of principal and interest paid during the disclosure period, and the rate of interest payable on such indebtedness. Item 404(a)(5), Regulation S-K.

(n517)Footnote 517. The amount of the person's interest should be calculated without taking into consideration the amount of the profit or loss involved in the transaction. Item 404(a)(4), Regulation S-K.

Item 404(c)(2), Regulation S-K. The term "shell company" means a company that has no or nominal operations and that has either (i) no or nominal assets, (ii) assets consisting solely of cash or cash equivalents, or (iii) assets consisting of any amount of cash and cash equivalents and nominal other assets. Rule 405.

(n526)Footnote 526. The registrant should also disclose the relationship to the registrant of such persons involved in determining the amount of such assets. If the assets were acquired by the promoter within two years prior to their transfer to the registrant, the registrant must disclose the cost of such assets to the promoter. Item 404(c)(ii), Regulation S-K.

(n527)Footnote 527. A smaller reporting company needs to provide information on such transactions as of the beginning of its last fiscal year (or any currently proposed transaction), and, in addition, for the fiscal year preceding the company's last fiscal year. (n532)Footnote 532. Instruction 2, Item 407(a), Regulation S-K. However, if the registrant is not subject to the reporting requirements of Section 13(a) or 15(d) of the Exchange Act, no information needs to be disclosed regarding any director who is no longer a director at the time of effectiveness of the registration statement.

If the registrant has not adopted the independence standards provided by the securities exchange or quotation system, it must disclose the independence standards it uses. Additionally, when using its own independence standards, the registrant must disclose whether such standards and definitions are available on its website. If information is not available on the registrant's website, it must include a copy of such standards and definitions in an appendix to its proxy statement or information statement that is provided to security holders at least once every three fiscal years. (n558)Footnote 558. Instruction, Item 511, Regulation S-K.

The Instruction to Item 511 of Regulation S-K requires separate disclosure of insurance policy premiums only for policies covering the offering of securities to be registered. Current umbrella insurance policies that include federal securities law liability coverage and premium increases on current policy arising from the offering need not be disclosed. Sec. Act Rel. No. 33-6332, Fed. Sec. L. Rep. (CCH) No. 926, Part II (1981).

The blue sky laws of several states provide for a ceiling on expenses in connection with the offering of securities in their respective jurisdictions. Normally, the computation of the ceiling includes underwriting commissions and discounts and all other expenses in connection with the offering. Therefore, the statutes of the states in which the securities are to be offered should be checked carefully to ascertain whether the ceiling is exceeded.

(n561)Footnote 561. In addition to registrants, underwriters may indemnify directors and officers against liability arising under the Securities Act.

The Commission has taken the position that indemnification by registrants of directors, officers, or controlling persons against liabilities arising under the Securities Act is against public policy and unenforceable. See § 7.03[2][n] supra. The same position is taken in the event the registrant agrees to indemnify the underwriter or controlling persons of the underwriter where a director, officer, or controlling person of the registrant is such an underwriter or controlling person thereof or a member of any firm that is such an underwriter. See Item 510, Regulation S-K, discussed at § 7.03[2][n] supra.

(n562)Footnote 562. If the sales were made in a series of transactions, the information may be given by such totals and periods as will reasonably convey the information required. Instruction 2, Item 701, Regulation S-K.

(n563)Footnote 563. Item 701(a)-(d), Regulation S-K. Unless some exemption was available, the registrant is exposed to a contingent liability under Section 12, discussed in § 9.03 infra, and that must be disclosed.

(n564)Footnote 564. Rule 411(c) provides that any document, or part of any document, filed with the Commission may be incorporated by reference, subject to Item 10(d) of Regulation S-K as an exhibit to any registration statement. If any modification has occurred in the text of any document incorporated by reference since the filing of the document, the registrant must file a statement containing the text of the modification and the date of the modification with the reference.

Item 10(d) Regulation S-K, "Incorporation by Reference," allows a document to be incorporated by reference to the specific document and to the prior filing or submission in which such document was physically filed or submitted if the rules, regulations or instructions to the forms of the Commission permit incorporation by reference. Item 10(d) prohibits incorporation by reference to be made to any document that incorporates another document by reference if the pertinent portion of the document containing the information to be incorporated by reference includes an incorporation by reference to another document, except where a registrant is expressly required to incorporate such document by reference. Item 10(d) also prohibits any document on file with the Commission for more than five years to be incorporated by reference. The five year rule does not apply to:

- documents contained in registration statements, which may be incorporated by reference as long as the registrant has a reporting requirement with the Commission; and

- documents that the registrant specifically identifies by physical location by Commission file number reference, provided that those materials have not been disposed of pursuant to the Commission's Records Control Schedule, 17 C.F.R. § 200.80f.

(n565)Footnote 565. If the registration statement is filed electronically and an exhibit is filed in paper pursuant to a hardship exemption, the letter "P" shall be placed next to the exhibit required by Item 601(a)(2). Whenever an electronic confirming copy of an exhibit is filed pursuant to a grant of a temporary hardship exemption, the exhibit index shall specify where the confirming electronic copy can be located and the designation "CE" (confirming electronic) must be placed next to the listed exhibit in the exhibit index. Instruction 4, Item 601, Regulation S-K. Item 601(a)(2), Regulation S-K.

(n569)Footnote 569. The registrant must include a copy of each underwriting contract with a principal underwriter pursuant to which the securities being registered are to be distributed. If the terms of the underwriting contract have not been determined, the proposed form of the document should be furnished. The final form of the agreement may be filed as an exhibit to a report on Form 8-K which is incorporated by reference into a registration statement subsequent to its effectiveness. Item 601(b)(1), Regulation S-K.

(n571)Footnote 571. These documents include the registrant's articles of incorporation and bylaws, or instruments corresponding thereto as currently in effect, and any amendments thereto. If amendments to the articles or by-laws are filed, the registrant must also file a complete copy of the articles or by-laws as amended. Item 601(b)(3), Regulation S-K. If it is impracticable for the registrant to file a charter amendment authorizing new securities with the appropriate state authority prior to the effective date of the registration statement, the proposed form of the amendment to be filed with the state authority may be filed as an exhibit to the registration statement. If material changes are made in the charter after the copy is filed, the registrant must also file the changed copy. Id.

(n572)Footnote 572. These documents include all instruments defining the rights of holders of equity or debt securities being registered, including, where applicable, the relevant portion of the articles of incorporation or by-laws of the registrant, and all instruments defining the rights of holders of long-term debt of the registrant, its consolidated subsidiaries, and any unconsolidated subsidiaries for which financial statements are required to be filed. Item 601(b)(4), Regulation S-K. However, for those instruments defining the rights of holders of long-term debt, there need not be filed:

- (1) any instrument representing a long-term debt not being registered if the total amount of securities authorized by the instrument does not exceed 10% of the total assets of the registrant and its subsidiaries on a consolidated basis and if the registrant has filed an agreement to furnish to the Commission a copy of the agreement upon request;
- (2) any instrument representing any class of securities if appropriate steps will be taken to assure the redemption or retirement of that class, prior to or upon delivery by the registrant of the securities being registered; or
- (3) copies of instruments evidencing scrip certificates for fractions of shares.

Item 601(b)(4)(iii)(A)-(C), Regulation S-K.

If any of the securities being registered are or will be issued under an indenture to be qualified under the Trust Indenture Act, the copy of the indenture filed as an exhibit should include or be accompanied by:

- (1) a reasonably itemized and informative table of contents; and
- (2) a cross-reference sheet showing the location in the indenture of the provisions inserted pursuant to Sections 310 through 318(a) inclusive of the Trust Indenture Act. Item 601(b)(4)(iv), Regulation S-K.

The registrant is not required to file any instrument which defines the rights of participants (not as security holders) pursuant to an employee benefit plan. Instruction 1, Item 601(b)(4), Regulation S-K.

If two or more indentures, contracts, franchises, or other documents required to be filed as exhibits are substantially identical in all material respects except as to parties thereto, the dates of execution, or other details, the registrant should file a copy of only one of the documents, with a schedule identifying the omitted documents and setting forth the material details in which the omitted documents differ from the document a copy of which was filed. Instruction 2, Item 601, Regulation S-K. The Commission may at any time require filing of copies of any document so omitted. Id.

(n573)Footnote 573. The registrant must file an opinion of counsel regarding the legality of securities being registered, indicating whether the securities will, when sold, be legally issued, fully paid, and nonassessable, and, if debt securities, whether they will be binding obligations of the registrant. Item 601(b)(5)(i), Regulation S-K. The signed opinion covering the specific securities sold in a particular offering must be filed as part of the registration statement or incorporated by reference into the registration statement no later than the closing date of the offering of such securities. Question 118.02, Questions and Answers of General Applicability, Securities Act Forms. The registrant must also file either an opinion of counsel or an Internal Revenue Service determination letter regarding the legality of securities issued pursuant to a plan subject to the Employment Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 ("ERISA") (29 U.S.C. § 1001 et seq.), both when the plan is originally adopted and when it is subsequently amended. Items 601(b)(5)(ii)(A)-(B) and 601(b)(5)(iii)(A)-(B), Regulation S-K.

(n574)Footnote 574. If Industry Guide 5, "Preparation of registration statements relating to interests in real estate limited partnerships," applies, the registrant must include an opinion of counsel, an opinion of an independent public or certified accountant, or an Internal Revenue Service ruling supporting the tax matters and the tax consequences to shareholders as described in the filing when those tax matters are material to the transaction for which the registration statement is being filed. Item 601(b)(8), Regulation S-K. Otherwise, an opinion of counsel as to tax matters must be filed only where the tax consequences under Guide 5 are material to an investor and a representation as to tax consequences is set forth in the filing. Id. This requirement may be satisfied, however, by the inclusion of the full opinion in the registration statement. Id. The tax opinion may be conditioned or qualified if the conditions and qualifications are fully described in the filing. Id.

(n575)Footnote 575. These documents include any voting trust agreement and amendments thereto. Item 601(b)(9), Regulation S-K.

(n576)Footnote 576. The registrant must include every contract not made in the ordinary course of business that is:

- (1) material to the registrant; and
- (2) to be performed in whole or in part at or after the filing of the registration statement; or
- (3) entered into not more than two years before the filing of the registration statement.

The registrant, however, need file only those contracts to which it or its subsidiary is a party, or has succeeded to a party by assumption or assignment, or in which the registrant or its subsidiary has a beneficial interest. Item 601(b)(10)(i), Regulation S-K.

Except where immaterial in amount or significance, a contract made in the ordinary course of business need not be filed unless:

- (1) it is a contract to which directors, officers, promoters, voting trustees, security holders named in the registration statement or report, or underwriters are parties, except for contracts involving only the purchase or sale of current assets having a determinable market price, at that price;
- (2) it is a contract upon which the registrant's business is substantially dependent (e.g. continuing contracts to sell the major part of the registrant's products or services or to purchase the major part of the registrant's requirements of goods, services, or raw materials or any franchise, license or other agreement to use a patent, formula, trade secret, process, or trade name upon which the registrant's business depends to a material extent);
- (3) it is a contract calling for the acquisition or sale of any property, plant, or equipment for a consideration exceeding 15% of such fixed assets of the registrant on a consolidated basis; or
- (4) it is a material lease under which a part of the property described in the registration statement is held by the registrant. Id. Item 601(b)(10)(ii)(A)-(D), Regulation S-K.

Certain contracts in which any director or any of the five most highly compensated executive officers of the registrant participates will be deemed material and must be filed (if not set forth in a formal document, a written description is required to be filed) including any management contract or any remunerative plan, contract, or arrangement, including (but not limited to) plans relating to options, warrants or rights, pension, retirement or deferred compensation, or bonus, incentive, or profit sharing. Those contracts, plans, or arrangements in which any other executive officer of the registrant participates must also be filed unless immaterial in amount or significance.

Management contracts or compensatory plans, contracts or arrangements need not be filed, however, if they are:

- (1) ordinary purchase and sales agency agreements;

- (2) agreements with managers of stores in a chain or similar organization;
- (3) contracts providing for labor or salesperson's bonuses or payments to a class of security holders as such;
- (4) a compensatory plan, contract, or arrangement that pursuant to its terms is available to employees, officers, or directors generally and that in operation provides for the same method of allocation of benefits between management and nonmanagement participants; or
- (5) a compensatory plan, contract, or arrangement of a foreign private issuer that furnishes compensation information on an aggregate basis pursuant to General Instruction 1 to Item 402 of Regulation S-K, discussed in § 7.03[3][k][xii][A] supra, or by Item 11 of Form 20-F; or Items 601(b)(10) (iii)(A), 601(b)(10)(iii)(C)(1)-(5), Regulation S-K.

With the exception of management contracts, registrants need only file copies of the various remunerative plans and need not file each individual director's or executive officer's personal agreement under the plans unless there are particular provisions in such personal agreements whose disclosure as an exhibit necessary to an investor's understanding of that individual's compensation under the plan. Instruction, Item 601(b)(10)(iii), Regulation S-K.

(n577)Footnote 577. The registrant must include a statement showing in reasonable detail the computation of per-share earnings, unless that computation can be clearly determined from the material contained in the registration statement. Item 601(b)(11), Regulation S-K.

(n578)Footnote 578. A company that qualifies as a smaller reporting company need not provide such disclosure required by Item 601(b)(12). Item 601(c), Regulation S-K. All registrants, other than smaller reporting companies, must set forth in reasonable detail the computation of any ratio of earnings to fixed charges, ratio of earnings to combined fixed charges and preferred stock dividends, or other ratios that appear in the registration statement. Item 601(b)(12), Regulation S-K.

See Item 503(d) of Regulation S-K, "Ratio of earnings to fixed charges," discussed in § 7.03[2][c][iv] supra.

(n579)Footnote 579. The registrant must file, where applicable, a letter from an independent accountant that acknowledges the accountant's awareness of the use in the registration statement of a report on unaudited interim financial information that pursuant to Rule 436(c) is not considered a part of a registration statement prepared or certified by an accountant or a report prepared or certified by an accountant within the meaning of Sections 7 and 11 of the Securities Act. Item 601(b)(15), Regulation S-K. The letter may be filed with the registration statement, an amendment thereto or a report on Form 10-Q which is incorporated by reference into the registration statement. Id.

The phrase "report on unaudited interim financial information" means a report consisting of:

- (1) a statement that the review of interim financial information was made in accordance with established professional standards for such reviews;
- (2) an identification of the interim financial information reviewed;
- (3) a description of the procedures for a review of interim financial information;
- (4) a statement that a review of interim financial information is substantially less in scope than an examination in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards, the objective of which is an expression of opinion regarding the financial statements taken as a whole and, accordingly, no such opinion is expressed; and

(5) a statement whether the accountant is aware of any material modifications that should be made to conform the accompanying financial information with generally accepted accounting principles. Rule 436(d)(1)-(5).

(n581)Footnote 581. A list of the registrant's subsidiaries, the state or other jurisdiction of incorporation or organization of each, and the names under which those subsidiaries do business, must be included. The names of particular subsidiaries may be omitted, however, if as of the end of the year covered by the report, the unnamed subsidiaries considered in the aggregate as a single subsidiary would not constitute a significant subsidiary, as defined in Rule 1-02(v) of Regulation S-X. The names of consolidated, wholly owned, multiple subsidiaries carrying on the same line of business, such as chain stores or small loan companies, may be omitted, provided the name of the immediate parent, the line of business, the number of omitted subsidiaries operating in the United States, and the number operating in foreign countries are given. This instruction shall not apply, however, to banks, insurance companies, savings and loan associations, or to any subsidiary subject to regulation by another federal agency. The registrant may incorporate by reference its list of subsidiaries from any document previously filed with the Commission that contains an accurate and complete list of the subsidiaries. Item 601(b)(21)(i), (ii), Regulation S-K.

(n582)Footnote 582. The registrant must file dated and manually signed copies of all written consents required to be filed under the Securities Act. Consents may be included in the report of the expert or opinion of counsel filed with the registration statement or in the registration statement itself, so long as a reference is made in the exhibit index to the report, the part of the document or registration statement or opinion containing the consent. Item 601(b)(23)(i), Regulation S-K.

(n584)Footnote 584. The registrant must file a statement of eligibility and qualification of each person designated a trustee under an indenture to be qualified under the Trust Indenture Act of 1939. The statement of eligibility must be separately bound from the other exhibits, unless the registration statement is submitted in electronic format, in which event the statement of eligibility should be submitted in the same electronic submission as the registration statement to which it relates or an amendment thereto. Electronic filers that rely on Section 305(b)(2) of the Trust Indenture Act for determining the eligibility of the trustee under indentures for securities to be issued, offered or sold on a delayed basis by or on behalf of the registrant shall file statements of eligibility separately in the manner prescribed by Rules 5b-1 through 5b-3 under the Trust Indenture Act (17 C.F.R. §§ 260.5b-1-260.5b-3) and by the EDGAR Filer Manual.

(n585)Footnote 585. The registrant must file any form of communication that is an invitation for competitive bidding being sent or given to any person, if the registration statement covers securities to be offered through competitive bidding. Item 601(b)(26), Regulation S-K.

(n586)Footnote 586. These documents include any document (except for an exhibit) or part of a document which is incorporated by reference in the filing that is not otherwise required to be filed by Item 601 of Regulation S-K. Regulation S-K or is not a Commission filed document incorporated by reference in a Securities Act registration statement. Item 601(b)(99)(ii), Regulation S-K. Any additional exhibits that the registrant may wish to file must be clearly marked to indicate the subject matter to which they refer. Item 601(b)(99)(i), Regulation S-K.

(n591)Footnote 591. For a discussion of Item 11(e) of Regulation S-K, see § 7.03[2][k][v] supra.

(n593)Footnote 593. Any increase or decrease in volume of securities offered (if the total dollar value of securities offered would not exceed that which was registered) and any deviation from the low or high end of the estimated maximum offering range may be reflected in the form of prospectus filed with the Commission pursuant to Rule 424(b) if, in the aggregate, the changes in volume and price represent no more than a 20% change in the maximum aggregate offering price set forth in the "Calculation of Registration Fee" table in the effective registration statement.

(n595)Footnote 595. Item 512(a)(2), Regulation S-K. (n601)Footnote 601. Rule 430C was a new rule adopted as part of the 2005 Rules that has provisions similar to Rule 430B regarding the treatment of prospectus supplements and which applies to offerings not covered by Rule 430B and prospectuses not covered by Rule 430A.

[1] Form S-3--Registration of Securities of Reporting Issuers Considered to be Widely Followed by Professional Securities Analysts

Form S-3 is available to corporate issuers that, because of the broad dissemination of corporate information, are widely followed by professional securities analysts. n1 Form S-3 is a reflection of the "efficient market theory." n2 The central thesis of the theory is that available information will percolate down to the marketplace and therefore, need not be reported in every registration statement. n3

Form S-3 relies on incorporation by reference of Exchange Act reports with disclosure in the prospectus being limited to information concerning the offering and material facts not previously disclosed. The documents required to be incorporated by reference are listed in Item 12(a) of Form S-3 infra. Subsequently filed Exchange Act reports prior to the termination of the offering must be incorporated by reference into Form S-3. n4

Form S-3 contains two parts: Part I (Items 1-13), concerning information required in the prospectus, and Part II (Item 14-17), concerning information not required to be presented in the prospectus. n5

[a] Eligibility Standards.

The eligibility requirements for use of Form S-3 fall into two categories: "registrant requirements" and "transaction requirements." A registrant must first meet the registrant requirements and then meet one of the transaction requirements before using Form S-3.

[i] Registrant Requirements.

[A] Domestic Corporations. All registrants must meet the following conditions before they may use Form S-3 to register securities offered in any transaction meeting the Form's transaction requirements:

- (1) the registrant must be a United States corporation having its principal business operation in the U.S. or its territories;

(2) the registrant must have a class of securities registered under Exchange Act Section 12(b), n6 a class of equity securities registered under Exchange Act Section 12(g), n7 or must file reports under Exchange Act Section 15(d); n8

(a) the registrant must have been subject to the requirements of the Securities Exchange Act Section 12 or 15(d) and have filed all material required to be filed under Exchange Act Section 13, n9 14, n10 or 15(d) n11 for at least 12 calendar months n12 immediately preceding the filing of the registration statement on Form S-3; n13 and

(b) the registrant must have timely filed all reports required to be filed during the 12 calendar months and any portion of a month immediately preceding the filing of the registration statement; if the registrant has used Rule 12(b)-25(b) concerning any Exchange Act report or portion of a report, n14 the report or portion thereof must have been actually filed within the time period prescribed by Rule 12b-25(b); and

(4) the registrant and its consolidated or unconsolidated subsidiaries n15 must have, since the end of the last fiscal year for which certified financial statements of the registrant and its consolidated subsidiaries were included in a filing under Exchange Act Section 13(a) or 14(d), not defaulted to any material extent (i.e., the default in the aggregate is material to the financial position of the registrant and its consolidated and unconsolidated subsidiaries, taken as a whole):

(a) on any dividend or sinking fund installment on preferred stock; or

(b) on any installment on indebtedness for borrowed money or on any rental on one or more long term leases. n16

[B] Successors. A registrant that is a successor will be deemed to have met conditions (1) through (4) above if:

(1) (a) the registrant and its predecessor, taken together, meet the Form S-3 registrant eligibility requirements;

(b) the succession was primarily for the purposes of changing the state of incorporation of the predecessor or to form of holding company; and

(c) the assets and liabilities of the successor at the time of succession were substantially the same as the assets and liabilities of the predecessor; or

(2) all predecessors met the Form S-3 registrant eligibility requirements at the time of the succession and the registrant has continued to meet the requirements since the succession. n17

[C] Foreign Private Issuers. A foreign private issuer satisfying Form S-3 registrant eligibility requirements (A)(2), A(3) and A(4) above for domestic corporations will be deemed to have met the registrant conditions for the use of Form S-3 if the foreign private issuer files the same reports with the commission under Exchange Act Section 13(a) or 15(d) as a domestic corporate registrant does under requirement (A)(3) above. n18

[D] Electronic Filings. If a registrant is subject to the electronic filing requirements of Rule 101 of Regulation S-T, the registrant must have (a) filed with the Commission all required electronic filings, including confirming electronic copies of documents submitted in paper pursuant to a temporary hardship exemption, and (b) submitted electronically to the Commission and posted on its corporate website, if any, all Interactive Data Files required to be submitted and posted pursuant to Rule 405 of Regulation S-T during the twelve calendar months and any portion of a month immediately preceding the filing of the registration statement on this Form (or for such shorter period of time that registrant was required to submit and post such files). n19

If a registrant meets the registrant eligibility requirements, the registrant may use Form S-3 for an offering of securities satisfying any of the following transaction requirements:

[A] Primary and Secondary Offerings By Certain Registrants. A qualified registrant, i.e., one that has met the registrant eligibility requirements, must have a minimum of $75 million as the aggregate market value of voting and non-voting common equity held by nonaffiliates (the "float") if securities, including securities acquired by standby underwriters in connection with call or redemption by the registrant of warrants or a class of convertible securities, are being offered:

- (1) for cash by or on behalf of a registrant; or
 - (2) in the case of outstanding securities, for cash for the account of any person other than the registrant.
- n20

The "float" is computed by using:

- (1) the price at which the stock was last sold; or
- (2) the average of the bid and asked priced of the stock as of a date within sixty days prior to the date of filing the Form S-3.

For registrants that do not meet the $75 million float requirement, see § 7.04[1][a][ii][F] infra for a discussion of limited primary offerings available under certain limited circumstances.

[B] Primary Offerings of Non-convertible Preferred Securities. A qualified registrant may register non-convertible securities to be offered for cash by or on behalf of the registrant of form S-3 provided the securities are investment grade securities. n21

[C] Transactions Involving Secondary Offerings. A qualified registrant may use Form S-3 for the registration of secondary offerings of securities (outstanding securities offered for the account of any person other than the issuer) if securities of the same class are listed and registered on an exchange or quoted on NASDAQ, n22 including securities acquired by standby underwriters in connection with the call or redemption by the registrant of warrants or a class of convertible securities. n23 In addition, an affiliate n24 may use Form S-3 to register securities for resale, when a Form S-8 prospectus is unavailable for reoffers or resales of securities acquired by affiliates pursuant to a Form S-8 offering of securities to employees pursuant to employee benefit plans, if the conditions specified in General Instruction C to Form S-8 are met. n25

[D] Rights Offerings, Dividend or Interest Reinvestment Plans and Conversions or Warrants. A qualified registrant may use Form S-3 to register securities to be offered:

- (1) upon the exercise of outstanding rights granted by the issuer to be offered on a pro rata basis to all security holders of the class of securities to which the rights attach;

(2) pursuant to a dividend or interest reinvestment plan; n26

(3) upon the conversion of outstanding convertible securities or the exercise of outstanding transferable warrants issued by the issuer or an affiliate. n27

The registrant must send to all plan participants or to all record holders of the rights, convertible securities or transferable warrants, documents containing information required by Exchange Act Rule 14a-3(b) n28 and Items 401 (Director, Executive Officers), 402 (Executive Compensation) and 403 (Security Ownership of Certain Beneficial Owners and Management) of Regulation S-K, n29 within the twelve months immediately preceding the filing of the registration statement. n30 The information required by Items 401, 402 and 403 of Regulation S-K need only be given to holders of rights exercisable for common stock, holders of securities convertible into common stock and participants in plans that may invest in common stock or in securities convertible into common or in warrants exercisable for common stock, respectively. n31

[E] Offerings of Investment Grade Asset-backed Securities. A qualified registrant may use Form S-3 to register asset-backed securities n32 to be offered for cash, provided the securities are investment grade securities. n33

[F] Limited Primary Offerings by Certain Other Registrants. Effective January 2008, the Commission adopted amendments to allow companies with less than $75 million in public float to register primary offerings of their securities on Form S-3. n34 A qualified registrant may offer securities for cash provided it:

(1) has a class of common equity securities that is listed and registered on a national securities exchange; n35

(2) has not sold, including the current sale, more than the equivalent of one-third of its public float in primary offerings under General Instruction I.B.6 of Form S-3 over the previous 12 calendar months; n36 and

(3) is not a shell company and has not been a shell company for at least 12 calendar months before filing the registration statement. n37

Registrants who use this option to register securities on Form S-3 must set forth on the outside front cover of the prospectus:

(1) the calculation of its public float; and

(2) the amount of all securities offered pursuant to General Instruction I.B.6 during the prior 12 calendar month period that ends on, and includes, the date of the prospectus. n38

[iii] Majority-Owned Subsidiaries. A registrant that is a majority-owned subsidiary n39 may register a security offering on Form S-3 if:

(1) the registrant-subsiary itself meets the registrant requirements and the applicable transaction requirement; n40

(2) the parent of the registrant-subsiary meets the registrant requirements and the securities are investment grade n41 non-convertible debt or preferred stock to be offered in a primary offering for cash by or on behalf of the registrant;

(3) the parent meets both the registrant requirements and the applicable transaction requirement and provides a full and unconditional guarantee, as defined in Rule 3-10 of Regulation S-X, of the payment obligations of the securities being registered, and the securities being registered are non-convertible securities, other than common equity; n42

(4) the parent meets the registrant requirements and the applicable transaction requirement, and the securities of the registrant-subsidary being registered are full and unconditional guarantees, as defined in Rule 3-10 of Regulation S-X, of the payment obligations on the non-convertible securities of the parent being registered, other than common equity; or

(5) the parent meets the registrant requirements and the applicable transaction requirement, and the securities of the registrant-subsidary being registered are guarantees of the payment obligations on non-convertible securities, other than common equity, which are being registered by another majority-owned subsidiary of the parent and of which the parent provides a full and unconditional guarantee as defined in Rule 3-10 of Regulation S-X.

[iv] Automatic Shelf Offerings by Well-Known Seasoned Issuers. A registrant that is a well-known seasoned issuer (a "WKSI") n43 may use Form S-3 to register securities offerings. In addition, a WKSI may use a process known as "automatic shelf registration." n44 Automatic shelf registration statements become effective immediately upon filing and are deemed to be filed on the proper form. n45 An issuer offering securities pursuant to an automatic shelf registration statement can elect to defer payment of the fees until the time of the securities offering (known as "pay-as-you-go"), with no fees required at the time of the initial filing of the registration statement. n46 A WKSI may use Form S-3 according to the following:

(1) The securities to be offered must be:

(a) Securities offered in a shelf offering pursuant to Rule 415, Rule 430A or Rule 430B, if by:

(i) a WKSI by reason of having $700 million of worldwide common equity market capitalization held by non-affiliates; or

(ii) a WKSI only by reason of having issued $1 billion aggregate amount of non-convertible securities, other than common equity, in registered primary offerings for cash (not in registered exchange offers) during the past three years and that is eligible to register a primary offering of its securities on Form S-3;

(b) Non-convertible securities, other than common equity, if offered in a shelf offering pursuant to Rule 415, Rule 430A or Rule 430B by a WKSI only by having issued $1 billion aggregate amount of non-convertible securities, other than common equity, in registered primary offerings for cash (not in registered exchange offers) during the past three years and that is not eligible to register a primary offering of its securities on Form S-3;

(c) Securities of majority-owned subsidiaries of the parent-registrant offered in a shelf offering pursuant to Rule 415, Rule 430A or Rule 430B, if the parent-registrant is a WKSI and the securities of the majority-owned subsidiary are:

(i) securities of a majority-owned subsidiary that is a WKSI at the time it becomes a registrant (but not if it is a WKSI by reason of its being a majority-owned subsidiary of a parent that is a WKSI and that has provided a full and unconditional guarantee, as defined in Rule 3-10 of Regulation S-X, of the payment obligations of the subsidiary's securities, and the securities are non-convertible securities other than common equity);

(ii) securities of a majority-owned subsidiary that are non-convertible securities, other than common equity, of whose payment obligations the parent registrant has provided a full and unconditional guarantee, as defined in Rule 3-10 of Regulation S-X;

(iii) securities of a majority-owned subsidiary that are a guarantee of:

(A) non-convertible securities, other than common equity, of the parent registrant;

(B) non-convertible securities, other than common equity, of another majority-owned subsidiary, of whose payment obligations the parent-registrant has provided a full and unconditional guarantee, as defined in Rule 3-10 of Regulation S-X; or

(iv) securities of a majority-owned subsidiary that are investment grade non-convertible debt or preferred stock to be offered in a primary offering for cash by or on behalf of the majority-owned subsidiary.

(d) Securities of "selling security holders," provided that the registration statement and the prospectus are not required to separately identify the selling security holders or the securities to be sold by such persons until certain required filings are made. n47

(2) The registrant must pay the registration fee;

(3) If the registrant is a majority-owned subsidiary, it must be one that is required to file and has filed Exchange Act reports and either satisfies the requirements with regard to incorporation by reference or information about it is included in the registration statement (or a post-effective amendment to the registration statement);

(4) The registrant may register additional securities or classes of its or its majority-owned subsidiaries' securities on a post-effective amendment;

(5) An automatic shelf registration statement and post-effective amendment become effective immediately upon filing. All filings made on or in connection with automatic shelf registration statements on Form S-3 become effective immediately without Commission staff review.

[b] Dividend or Interest Reinvestment Plans: Filing and Effectiveness of Registration Statement; Requests for Confidential Treatment. Registration statements on Form S-3 relating solely to securities offered pursuant to dividend or interest reinvestment plans, and post-effective amendments to such registration statements, will become effective automatically upon the date of filing of the form.

For other types of securities, the Commission has not set a minimum time period between the filing and effectiveness of Form S-3 registration statements but will use its administrative discretion to grant requests for acceleration. n48

All filings made on or relating to Form S-3 become public upon filing with the Commission. Consequently, requests for confidential treatment made in accordance with Rule 406 must be processed with the Commission staff prior to the filing of Form S-3. n49

Three copies of the complete registration statement, including exhibits and all papers and documents filed as part of the registration statement required by Rule 402, and three complete, unmarked copies of every amendment, including exhibits and all other papers and documents filed as part of the amendment, required by Rule 472; must be filed with the Commission. n50 The number of additional copies referred to in Rule 402(b) may be reduced from ten to three and the number of additional copies referred to in Rule 472(a) may be reduced from eight to three, one of which must be marked clearly and precisely to indicate changes. n51

- (1) whether the only securities being registered are being offered pursuant to dividend or interest reinvestment plans;
- (2) whether any of the securities being registered are to be offered on a delayed or continuous basis pursuant to Rule 415, other than securities offered pursuant to dividend or interest reinvestment plans;
- (3) whether the Form S-3 is filed to register additional securities for an offering, pursuant to Rule 462(b), and the registration statement number of the earlier effective registration statement for the offering;
- (4) whether the Form S-3 is filed to register additional securities for an offering, pursuant to Rule 462(c), and the registration statement number of the earlier effective registration statement for the offering;
- (5) whether the Form S-3 is an automatic shelf registration statement or a post-effective amendment thereto that will become effective upon filing pursuant to Rule 462(e); and
- (6) whether the Form S-3 is a post-effective amendment to an automatic shelf registration statement filed to register additional securities or additional classes of securities pursuant to Rule 413(b).

[d] Registration of Additional Securities and Additional Classes of Securities. A registrant can register additional securities for an offering on Form S-3 according to the following:

(1) Registration of Additional Securities Pursuant to Rule 462(b). A registrant can register additional securities for an offering through a registration statement under certain conditions set forth in Rule 462(b). That registration statement may consist only of the following: the facing page; a statement that the contents of the earlier registration statement, identified by file number, are incorporated by reference; required opinions and consents; the signature page; and any price-related information omitted from the earlier registration statement (in reliance on Rule 430A) that the registrant chooses to include in the new registration statement. The information contained in such a registration statement is deemed to be a part of the earlier registration statement as of the date of effectiveness of the later registration statement. Any opinion or consent required in the later registration statement may be incorporated by reference from the earlier registration statement with respect to the offering, if: (i) such opinion or consent expressly provides for such incorporation; and (ii) such opinion relates to securities registered pursuant to Rule 462(b). n52

(2) Registration of Additional Securities or Classes of Securities or Additional Registrants After Effectiveness of Automatic Shelf Registration. A registrant which qualifies as a WKSI may register additional securities or classes of securities by filing a post-effective amendment to the effective registration statement. n53 The post-effective amendment must consist of the facing page; the disclosure updating the registration statement to reflect the additional securities, additional classes of securities or additional registrants; any required opinions and consents; and the signature page. Required information, consents or opinions may be included in the prospectus and the registration statement through a post-effective amendment or may be provided through a document incorporated or deemed incorporated by reference into the registration statement (and the prospectus that is part of the registration statement). Alternatively, the information required to update the registration statement may be contained in a prospectus filed pursuant to Rule 424(b), and it will be deemed part of the registration statement and prospectus. n54 The post-effective amendment is effective immediately. n55

[e] The Prospectus.

Part I of Form S-3 is the prospectus and contains Items 1 through 13. No table of contents or cross reference sheet need be included in the Form S-3 prospectus or registration statement. n56 In addition to the information expressly required to be included in the Form S-3, the registrant may provide any other information it deems appropriate. n57 As with disclosure in Form S-1, a registrant that qualifies as a smaller reporting company that is eligible to use Form S-3 need only provide the scaled disclosure items in Regulation S-K. n58

Since information about the registrant is incorporated by reference in Form S-3 from Exchange Act reports, the prospectus does not require presentation of any information about the registrant except when:

- (1) there has been a material change in the registrant's affairs not reported in an Exchange Act filing; or
- (2) the Exchange Act reports incorporated by reference do not reflect restated financial statements or other financial information. n59

Form S-3 cannot be used to register securities issued in an exchange offer for securities of another person; instead, Form S-4 must be used.

[i] Item 1. Forepart of the Registration Statement and Outside Front Cover Page of Prospectus. This item requires the same information required by Item 501 of Regulation S-K to be furnished in response to Item 1 of Form S-1.

Additionally, registrants who use General Instruction I.B.6 to register securities on Form S-3 must set forth on the outside front cover of the prospectus:

- (1) the calculation of its public float; and
- (2) the amount of all securities offered pursuant to General Instruction I.B.6 during the prior 12 calendar month period that ends on, and includes, the date of the prospectus. n60

[ii] Item 2. Inside Front and Outside Back Cover Pages of Prospectus. This item calls for the same information required by Item 502 of Regulation S-K to be furnished in response to Item 2 of Form S-1.

[iii] Items 3. Summary Information, 4. Use of Proceeds and 5. Determination of Offering Price. Items 3 (Summary Information, Risk Factors and Ratio of Earnings to Fixed Charges), 4 (Use of Proceeds) and 5 (Determination of Offering Price) of Form S-3 require identical information as Items 3, 4 and 5 of Form S-1. n61

[iv] Item 6. Dilution. Where common equity securities are being registered by a registrant that has had losses in each of its last three fiscal years and there is a material dilution of the purchasers' equity interest, this item requires the registrant to disclose the following information in accordance with Item 506 of Regulation S-K:

- (1) the net tangible book value per share before and after the distribution;
- (2) the amount of the increase in the net tangible book value per share attributable to the cash payments made by purchasers of shares being offered; and

(3) the amount of the immediate dilution from the public offering price that will be absorbed by the purchasers. n62

The requirement to discuss dilution where the registrant has not been subject to the Exchange Act reporting requirement contained in the first sentence of Item 506 of Regulation S-K, is not applicable to Form S-3. n63

[v] Item 7. Selling Security Holders. This item requires information about selling security holders that is identical to the information required by Item 507 of Regulation S-K to be given in response to Item 7 of Form S-1. n64

[vi] Item 8. Plan of Distribution. This item requires identical information required by Item 508 of Regulation S-K to be given in response to Item 8 of Form S-1 with two exceptions:

(1) The requirement for disclosure, required by Item 508(b) of Regulation S-K, of the new underwriter's experience and of their relationship with the registrant, promoters and their controlling persons where the securities being registered are securities of nonreporting registrants, does not apply to Form S-3; and n65

(2) The requirement for disclosure pursuant to Item 508(j) of Regulation S-K of any principal underwriter's intention to sell its discretionary accounts, applies only where the registrant has not been subject to the Exchange Act reporting requirements and does not apply to Form S-3. n66

[vii] Items 9. Description of Securities to be Registered and 10. Interests of Named Experts and Counsel.

Items 9 and 10 of Form S-3 require information that is identical to the information required by Items 9 and 10 of Form S-1, n67 except that in response to Item 9 of Form S-3, no description of the registrant's securities to be registered need be made pursuant to Item 202 of Regulation S-K if capital stock is being registered and securities of the same class are registered under Exchange Act Section 12. n68

[viii] Item 11. Material Changes. This item requires the registrant to describe material changes in the registrant's affairs since the end of the latest fiscal year for which certified financial statements were included in the latest annual report to security holders and that were not described in a filed report on Exchange Act Form 10-Q or Form 8-K. n69

The registrant must include the following in the prospectus if not incorporated by reference therein from Exchange Act reports as specified by Item 12(a) of Form S-3, n70 or in proxy or information statements n71 filed pursuant to Section 14 of the Exchange Act, or a prospectus previously filed under Rule 424(b) or (c) under the Securities Act, or where no prospectus was required to be filed pursuant to 424(b).

(1) information required by Rules 3-05, "Financial Statements of Businesses Acquired or to be Acquired," and Article 11, "Pro Forma Financial Information," of Regulation S-X where the registrant has effected or will effect a transaction for which the information is required;

(2) restated financial statements prepared according to Regulation S-X if there has been:

(a) a change in accounting principles or a correction of an error, and the change or correction requires a material retroactive restatement of financial statements; or

(b) a combination of entities under common control consummated subsequent to the most recent fiscal year and the transferred businesses considered in the aggregate meet the test of a significant subsidiary; n72 or

(3) any financial information required because of a material disposition of assets outside the normal course of business. n73

A registrant that qualifies as a smaller reporting company need only provide the financial information called for by Article 8 of Regulation S-X in lieu of the financial information called for by Item 11 of Form S-3. n74

[ix] Item 12. Incorporation of Certain Information by Reference. Item 12(a)(1) and Item 12(a)(2) of Form S-3 require the registrant to incorporate by reference, by a statement in the prospectus, the registrant's latest annual report to the Commission on Form 10-K that contains certified financial statements for the registrant's latest fiscal year for which a Form 10-K was required to have been filed and all periodic or quarterly reports filed since the end of that fiscal year. n75

Item 12(a)(3) of Form S-3 provides that, if capital stock is being registered and securities of the same class are registered under Section 12 of the Exchange Act, the registrant must incorporate into the prospectus the description of the class of securities contained in the registration statement filed under the Exchange Act including any amendment or reports filed that update the description. The documents incorporated by reference are incorporated by a statement to the effect in the prospectus listing all documents incorporated by reference. n76

The registrant must also state in the prospectus that all documents subsequently filed by the registrant pursuant to Sections 13(a), 13(c), 14 or 15(d), of the Exchange Act prior to the termination of the offering, shall be deemed incorporated by reference. n77

The registrant must state (i) that it will provide to each person, including any beneficial owner, to whom a prospectus is delivered, a copy of any or all of the information that has been incorporated by reference in the prospectus but not delivered with the prospectus; (ii) that it will provide this information upon written or oral request; (iii) that it will provide this information at no cost to the requester; and (iv) the name, address and telephone number to which the request for this information should be sent. n78

The registrant must identify the reports and other information that it files with the Commission and state that the public may read and copy any materials it files with the Commission at its Public Reference Room at 100 F Street, N.E., Washington, D.C. 20549. The registrant must state that the public may obtain information on the operation of the Public Reference Room by calling the Commission at 1-800-SEC-0330. If the registrant is an electronic filer, it must state that the Commission maintains an Internet site that contains reports, proxy and information statements and other information regarding electronic filers (www.sec.gov). The registrant is encouraged to give its Internet address, if available. n79

Any of the information required by Item 3 through Item 11 of Form S-3 n80 may be included in the prospectus through documents filed under the Exchange Act that are incorporated or deemed incorporated by reference into the prospectus that is part of the registration statement. n81

[x] Item 13. Disclosure of Commission Position on Indemnification for Securities Act Liabilities. This item requires information identical to the information required by Item 12A of Form S-1. n82

[f] Information Included in the Registration Statement But Not Required in Prospectus.

Part II of Form S-3, concerning information not required to be presented in the prospectus contains Items 14 through 17.

[i] Items 14. Other Expenses of Issuance and Distribution; and 15 Indemnification of Directors and Officers. Items 14 and 15 of Form S-3 require information identical to the information required to be furnished by Items 13 and 14 of Form S-1. n83

[iii] Item 16. Exhibits. The following documents are required by Item 601 of Regulation S-K to be filed as exhibits to Form S-3:

1. (1) n84 underwriting agreement; n85

2. (2) plan of acquisition, reorganization, arrangement, liquidation or succession; n86
3. (4) instruments defining the rights of security holders, including indentures; n87
4. (5) opinion regarding legality; n88
5. (8) opinion regarding tax matters; n89
6. (12) statement regarding computation of ratios; n90
7. (15) letter regarding unaudited interim financial information; n91
8. (23) consents of experts and counsel; n92
9. (24) powers of attorney; n93
10. (25) statement of eligibility of trustee; n94
11. (26) invitations for competitive bids; n95 and
12. (99) additional exhibits. n96

[iii] Item 17. Undertakings.

[A] Rule 415 Offering. The same undertakings concerning securities being registered pursuant to Rule 415 for the registration of securities on a delayed or continuous basis ("shelf" registration, both "automatic" and "non-automatic") as called for by Item 512(a) of Regulation S-K to be furnished in Form S-1 must be furnished in Form S-3. The undertakings called for by Items 512(a)(1)(i), (ii) and (iii) of Regulation S-K are not required to be furnished in Form S-3 if the information that must be included in a post-effective amendment pursuant to those items is contained in reports filed with the Commission by the registrant under Section 13 or Section 15(d) of the Exchange Act (that are incorporated by reference in the registration statement), or is contained in a form of prospectus filed pursuant to Rule 424(b) (that is part of the registration statement). n97

[B] Filings Incorporating Subsequent Exchange Act Documents by Reference. Since Form S-3 incorporates by reference Exchange Act documents filed subsequent to the effective date of the registration statement, the registrant must undertake that, for purposes of determining Securities Act liability, each filing of an annual report under Section 13(a) or 15(d) of the Exchange Act and, where applicable, each filing of an employee benefit plan's annual report under Section 15(d) of the Exchange Act, that is incorporated by reference in the registration statement will be deemed to be a new registration statement relating to the securities offered in the statement, and the offering of the securities at that time will be deemed the initial bona fide offering of the securities. n98

[C] Warrants and Rights Offerings and Competitive Bids. The same undertaking concerning warrants and rights offerings and competitive bids as called for by Item 512(c) and (d) of Regulation S-K to be furnished in Form S-1 must be furnished in Form S-3. n99

[D] Incorporated Annual and Quarterly Reports. The undertaking required by Item 512(e) of Regulation S-K concerning incorporated annual and quarterly reports must be furnished in Form S-3.

Item 512(e) of Regulation S-K provides that if the registration statement specifically incorporates by reference (other than by indirect incorporation through an Exchange Act Form 10-K report) in the prospectus all or part of the annual report to security holders meeting the Exchange Act Rule 14a-3 (information to be furnished security holders if proxies are solicited) or Rule 14c-3 (annual report to be furnished security holders when proxies are not solicited) requirements, the registrant must include an undertaking:

(1) to deliver or cause to be delivered with the prospectus, to each person to whom the prospectus is sent or given, the latest annual report to security holders incorporated by reference in the prospectus and furnished pursuant to and meeting the requirements of Rule 14a-3 or Rule 14c-3 under the Exchange Act requirements; and

(2) if interim financial information required by Article 3 or Regulation S-X is not set forth in the prospectus, to deliver, to deliver or cause to be delivered, to each person to whom the prospectus is sent or given, the latest quarterly report specifically incorporated by reference in the prospectus to provide the interim financial information.

[E] Acceleration of Effectiveness. The same information required by Item 512(h) of Regulation S-K, as required to be furnished in Form S-1 concerning the Commission's position on indemnification if an acceleration of the effective date of the registration statement pursuant to Rule 461 is requested is also required to be furnished in Form S-3. n100

[F] Rule 430A. The same undertaking called for by Item 512(i) of Regulation S-K concerning offerings using Rule 430A that must be furnished in Form S-1 must also be furnished in Form S-3. n101

[iv] Signatures. The signature requirements of Form S-3 are the same as the signature requirements of Form S-1 with two exceptions:

(1) Form S-3 also requires the registrant to certify that "it has reasonable grounds to believe" that it meets all the requirements for filing on Form S-3; and n102

(2) Form S-3 contains an Instruction 3 to the signature requirements, not found in Form S-1, that provides that where eligibility for the use of Form S-3 is based on the assignment of a security rating to an investment grade security, n103 the registrant may elect to sign the registration statement although the security rating has not been assigned by the filing date of the registration statement. In such a case, a statement will be required indicating that the registrant reasonably believes that the security rating requirement will be satisfied by the time of sale.

(n21)Footnote 21. General Instruction I(B)(2), Form S-3.

An investment grade security is defined as a non-convertible security that, at the time of sale, has been rated by at least one nationally recognized statistical rating organization in one of its generic rating categories that signifies investment grade. Id. The four highest rating categories (within which there may be gradations, such as pluses or minuses, to indicate relative standing) signify investment grade. Id.

The phrase "nationally recognized statistical rating organization" (NRSRO) has the same meaning as the definition given to the phrase in Exchange Act Rule 15c3-1(c)(2)(vi)(F).

Some commentators objected that the net capital rule does not contain any specific definition of a rating organization and that a rating organization that is not an NRSRO has insufficient guidance on how to qualify as an NRSRO. The Commission did not provide a definition for an NRSRO but determined that the Commission and its staff will accept the following entities as NRSROs for net capital rule purposes:

- (1) Standard & Poor's Corporation;
- (2) Moody's Investors Services, Inc.;
- (3) Fitch Investors Services, Inc.; and

(4) Duff and Phelps, Inc.

Sec. Act Rel. No. 33-6383 n.54, Fed. Sec. L. Rep. (CCH) P 72,328 (1982).

When two or more classes of securities being registered on Form S-3 pursuant to General Instruction I.B.1 or I.B.2 are to be offered on a delayed or continuous basis pursuant to Rule 415(a)(1)(x), Rule 457(o) under the Securities Act permits the registration fee to be calculated on the basis of the maximum offering price of all the securities listed in the "Calculation of Fee" table on the facing page of Form S-3. In this event, the Fee Table need specify only the classes being registered and the aggregate proceeds to be raised, but not the amount of each class to be registered, the proposed maximum offering price per unit, or the proposed maximum aggregate offering price. General Instruction II(D), Form S-3.

In July 2008 the SEC proposed amendments that would no longer make NRSRO ratings a transaction requirement to permit registrants to register primary offerings of non-convertible securities for cash. Instead, primary offerings of non-convertible securities would be eligible under Form S-3 only if the issuer has issued, as of a date 60 days prior to the filing of the registration statement, more than $1 billion in non-convertible securities for cash, other than common equity, through registered primary offerings over the prior three years. (n22)Footnote 22. NASDAQ is discussed in Federal Securities Exchange Act of 1934, A.A. Sommer, Jr., General Editor, § 2.01 (Matthew Bender).

(n23)Footnote 23. General Instruction I(B)(3), Form S-3.

Because of comments received on proposed Form S-3 concerning secondary offerings of securities, the Commission further analyzed the secondary offering transaction registered on former Form S-16 and concluded that most secondary offerings are more in the nature of ordinary market transaction than primary offerings by registrants and that Exchange Act reports provide reliable marketplace information needed regarding registrants. Thus, the Commission determined that where the registrant meets the exchange Act reporting and other registrant requirements, Form S-3 will be available for registering secondary offerings of securities listed an exchange or quoted on NASDAQ. Since this Commission determination reflects only a difference as to actual delivery of the securities being registered (the Exchange Act reports would be incorporated by reference into the registration statement), the selling security holder has the statutory responsibility for the accuracy of the entire registration statement. Sec. Act Rel. No. 33-6383 n.23, Fed. Sec. L. Rep. (CCH) P 72,328 (1982).

(n25)Footnote 25. General Instruction I(B)(3), Form S-3. Form S-3 is available to affiliates on the resale of securities they acquire under Form S-8.

General Instruction C of Form S-8, permits an affiliate of an issuer to resell securities acquired in a registered offering on Form S-8, pursuant to shelf registration Rule 415 and with a Form S-3 prospectus that is filed with the Form S-8 if:

(1) the registrant, at the time of filing the prospectus, satisfies the registrant requirement for use of Form S-3; or

(2) the amount of securities proposed to be reoffered or resold with the prospectus, by each affiliate of the registrant and any other person with whom the affiliate is acting in concert to sell the issuer's securities does not exceed, during any three-month period, the amount specified in Rule 144(e)

(discussed in § 4.02[1][c] supra), calculated as of the date of filing the prospectus.

(n27)Footnote 27. General Instruction I(B)(4), Form S-3.

(n28)Footnote 28. Exchange Act Rule 14a-3(b), requires that for any solicitation by management for an annual meeting at which directors are to be elected, the proxy statement furnished to security holders must be accompanied or preceded by an annual report to security holders containing the financial and other information specified in Rule 14a-3(b).

(n31)Footnote 31. Id.

(n32)Footnote 32. The term "asset-backed security" means a security that is primarily serviced by the cashflows of a discrete pool of receivables or other financial assets, either fixed or revolving, that by their terms convert into cash within a finite time period plus any rights or other assets designed to assure the servicing or timely distribution of proceeds to the security holders. General Instruction I(B)(5), Form S-3.

(n33)Footnote 33. Id.

(n34)Footnote 34. See Sec. Act Rel. No. 33-8878. The amendments, added as new General Instruction I.B.6 to Form S-3, are intended to allow more companies to benefit from the greater flexibility and efficiency in accessing the public securities markets afforded by Form S-3. It is important to note that eligibility under General Instruction I.B.6 applies only to a registrant's ability to conduct a limited primary offering on Form S-3. Instruction 6 to General Instruction I(B)(6), Form S-3. That is, a registrant's eligibility to use Form S-3 under General Instruction I.B.6 does not mean that the registrant meets the requirements of Form S-3 for purposes of any other rule or regulation of the Commission, except for Rule 415(a)(1)(x) concerning shelf registration. Sec. Act Rel. No. 33-8878.

(n35)Footnote 35. General Instruction I(B)(6)(c), Form S-3. A "national securities exchange" is a securities exchange that has registered with the Commission under Section 6 of the Exchange Act. Instruction 8 to General Instruction I(B)(6), Form S-3.

(n36)Footnote 36. That is, the aggregate market value of securities sold by or on behalf of the registrant pursuant to General Instruction I.B.6 during the prior 12 months (including the current sale) may not equal more than one-third of its public float, i.e., the aggregate market value of the registrant's outstanding voting and non-voting common equity held by non-affiliates of the registrant as determined by the price at which the common equity was last sold (or the average bid or asked prices) in the principal market for such common equity as of a date within 60 days prior to the date of sale. General Instruction I(B)(6)(a), Form S-3. When computing the aggregate market value of securities sold, the registrant should aggregate the proceeds of such sales. Instruction 2 to General Instruction I(B)(6)(b), Form S-3. However, in the case of the sale of derivative securities convertible into or exercisable for shares of common equity, the registrant should calculate the aggregate market value of any underlying equity shares instead of the market value of the derivative securities. The aggregate market value of the underlying equity should be calculated by multiplying (x) the maximum number of common equity shares into which the derivative securities are convertible, by (y) the per share market price at which the common equity was last sold (or the average bid and asked price), in each case in the principal market of such common equity as of a date within 60 days prior to the date of sale. If such derivative securities have been converted or exercised, multiply (x) the actual number of shares into which the securities were converted (or received upon exercise), by (y) the market price on the date of conversion/exercise. Instruction 2 to General Instruction

If the registrant's public float equals or exceeds $75 million subsequent to the effective date of the registration statement, then the one-third limitation will not apply to additional sales made pursuant to the registration statement on or subsequent to such date. Instruction 3 to General Instruction I(B)(6), Form S-3. In that case, the registration statement will be considered filed pursuant to General Instruction I.B.1. See also § 7.04[1][a][ii][A] infra.

(n37)Footnote 37. General Instruction I(B)(6)(b), Form S-3. If the registrant was a shell company at any time previously, it must have filed current Form 10 information with the Commission at least 12 calendar months previously reflecting its status as a non-shell company. Form 10 information refers to information required by Form 10 or Form 20-F, as applicable to the registrant, to register under the Exchange Act each class of securities being registered on Form S-3. Instruction 4 to General Instruction I(B)(6), Form S-3.

(n39)Footnote 39. The term "majority-owned subsidiary" means a subsidiary where greater than 50% of the outstanding securities representing the right to vote for the election of directors at such subsidiary (other than as affected by events of default) is owned by the subsidiary's parent and/or one or more of the parent's other majority-owned subsidiaries. Rule 405.

(n40)Footnote 40. A spun-off subsidiary would need to independently meet all other requirements for WKSII status, but may rely on the parent's pre-spin-off reporting history for purposes of evaluating whether the subsidiary is a WKSII and eligible to file a Form S-3 for automatic shelf registration. (n41)Footnote 41. "Investment grade security" is defined in § 7.04[1][a][ii][B] supra.

With regard to (3), (4) and (5) above, when the parent guarantees the securities, the parent-guarantor is the issuer of a separate security consisting of the guarantee that must be concurrently registered with, but may be registered on the same registration statement as, the guaranteed securities. Note, General Instruction I(C), Form S-3.

(n43)Footnote 43. The definition of a WKSII is set forth in Rule 405. A WKSII is defined as an issuer that:

- is required to file reports pursuant to Section 13(a) or Section 15(d) of the Exchange Act;
- meets the registrant requirements of Form S-3 or Form F-3;
- either (1) has at least $700 million of worldwide common equity market capitalization held by non-affiliates or (2) has issued $1 billion aggregate amount of non-convertible securities, other than common equity, in registered primary offerings for cash (not in registered exchange offers) during the past three years; and
- is not an "ineligible issuer."

Rule 405, Regulation C.

Ineligible issuers and offerings include the following:

1-7 Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 7.04

- reporting issuers that are not current in their Exchange Act reports;
- issuers that are (or were in the past three years) blank check issuers;
- issuers that are (or were in the past three years) shell companies;
- issuers that are (or were in the past three years) penny stock issuers;
- issuers that are limited partnerships offering and selling their securities other than in a firm commitment underwriting;
- issuers that have filed for bankruptcy or insolvency during the past three years;
- issuers that have been or are the subject of refusal or stop orders under the Securities Act during the past three years;
- issuers that have been found to have violated the federal securities laws, have been the subject of a judicial or administrative order prohibiting certain conduct or activities regarding the federal securities laws during the past three years, or have entered into a settlement ("settlement" includes settlements in which the issuer neither admits nor denies violating the federal securities laws) with any government agency involving violations of federal securities laws after the effective date of the rules;.
- offerings by registered investment companies or business development companies; and
- offerings that are exchange offers or business combination transactions that are subject to Regulation M-A.

Rule 405, Regulation C.

Paragraph (2) of the definition of WKSII in Rule 405 specifies the determination date as to whether an issuer is a WKSII. Generally, the determination date is the time of filing of the relevant registration statement and thereafter at the time of the annual update of that registration statement upon the filing of the issuer's annual report on Form 10-K or 20-F. Issuers' non-affiliate equity market capitalization and the aggregate amount of their non-convertible securities issuances are measured using the 60-day window period used in Form S-3 and F-3.

(n47)Footnote 47. Until a prospectus, prospectus supplement, posteffective amendment to the registration statement or Exchange Act report incorporated by reference, identifying the selling security holders and the amount of securities to be sold by each of them (and, if included in a periodic or current report, a prospectus or prospectus supplement) is filed, as required by Rule 430B, pursuant to Rule 424(b)(7). (n49)Footnote 49. General Instruction III, Form S-3.

Rule 406(a) provides that the procedure set forth in Rule 406 "Contracts in General" for requests for confidential treatment of material contract provisions does not apply to requests made on or with filings on Form S-3 relating to a dividend or interest reinvestment plan.

When two or more classes of securities being registered on Form S-3 pursuant to General Instruction I.B.1 or I.B.2 are to be offered on a delayed or continuous basis pursuant to Rule 415(a)(1)(x), Rule 457(o) under the Securities Act permits the registration fee to be calculated on the basis of the maximum offering price of all the securities listed in the "Calculation of Fee" Table on the facing page of Form S-3. In this event, the Fee Table need specify only the classes being registered and the aggregate proceeds to be raised, but not the amount of each class to be registered, the proposed maximum offering price per unit, or the proposed maximum aggregate offering price. (n73)Footnote 73. Item 11(b)(i)-(iv), Form S-3.

The additional financial information required by Item 11(b) need be presented in the prospectus only if not disclosed in reports on Exchange Act Forms 10-K, 8-K or 10-Q, in proxy statements, or in previous Securities Act prospectuses incorporated by reference into the registration statement. Sec. Act Rel. No. 33-6383, Fed. Sec. L. Rep. (CCH) P 72,328 (1982). Commentators expressed concern that outdated financial statements from the latest Exchange Act Form 10-K may be incorporated by reference when restated financial statements are included in the prospectus or are incorporated by reference because of an accounting change or pooling subsequent to the most recent fiscal year end. Additionally, concern was expressed that the Commission staff may require an accountant's consent for the outdated financial statements. In the Commission's view, Rule 412 will operate to make the restated financial statements supersede the Form 10-K financial statements and to render the superseded items not a part of the registration statement or the prospectus for purposes of the Securities Act. Therefore, no consent will be required for the superseded financial statements. Id.

Rule 412 provides that statements in a document incorporated by reference will be deemed to be modified or superseded for purposes of the registration statement or prospectus to the extent that a statement in a prospectus or a subsequently filed document that is incorporated by reference modifies or replaces the original statement. Rule 412(a). The modifying or superseding statement need not state that it has modified or superseded a prior statement. The marking of a modifying or superseding statement is not deemed to be an admission that the modified or superseded statement constituted a violation of the federal securities laws or the rules and regulations thereunder when made. Rule 412(b). Any statement modified or superseded under Rule 412 is not deemed in its original form to constitute a part of the registration statement or the prospectus for purposes of Rule 412(c).

If a written consent to the use of material in connection with a registration statement must be filed, the consent must be filed as an exhibit to the registration statement although the material is incorporated by reference in the registration statement. Rule 439, Regulation C.

Any required consent may be incorporated by reference into a registration statement filed pursuant to Rule 462(b) or a post-effective amendment filed pursuant to Rule 462(e) from a previously filed registration statement relating to that offering, however, if the consent contained in the previously filed registration statement expressly provides for incorporation by reference. CHAPTER 7 Registration Forms

AUTHOR: Cristopher Greer Melinda I. Wang Jeffery C. Fang Amanda M. Burke Andrew R. Meyerson

§ 7.05 Registration of Securities of Smaller Reporting Companies

[1] New Category of "Smaller Reporting Companies"

Effective February 2008, the Commission adopted amendments that changed the registration mechanics for a company that qualifies as a "smaller reporting company" under Item 10(f) of Regulation S-K. The amendments generally consolidate now-eliminated Regulation S-B's disclosure requirements into Regulation S-K and financial statement requirements into Regulation S-X.

Smaller reporting companies can choose, on an item-by-item (or "a la carte") basis, to comply with either the scaled disclosure and financial reporting requirements made available in Regulation S-K for smaller reporting companies or the requirements for larger companies in Regulation S-K. n1 In addition, foreign companies may qualify as "smaller reporting companies" if they otherwise qualify and choose to file on domestic company forms and provide financial statements prepared in accordance with U.S. GAAP.

[2] Qualifications of a Smaller Reporting Company

To qualify as a "smaller reporting company," the issuer may not be an investment company an asset backed issuer or a majority-owned subsidiary of a parent that is not a smaller reporting company. n2 Additionally, to qualify, an issuer must have had:

- (1) a public float of less than $75 million as of the last business day of its most recently completed second fiscal quarter; n3 or
- (2) in the case of an initial registration statement under the Securities Act, a public float of less than $75 million as of a date within 30 days of the date of the filing of the registration statement; n4 or
- (3) in the case of an issuer whose public float was zero (as calculated under (1) or (2) above), annual revenues of less than $50 million during the most recently completed fiscal year for which audited financial statements are available. n5

The determination of whether or not an issuer is a smaller reporting company must be determined on an annual basis. n6 If making a determination based on an initial Securities Act registration statement under paragraph (2) above, (a) the registrant must reflect such determination in the registration statement and on the cover page of the filing, n7 and (b) a registrant that was not determined to be a smaller reporting company has the option to redetermine its status at the conclusion of the offering covered by the registration statement based on the actual offering price and number of shares sold. n8

[3] Scaled Disclosure Requirements Applicable to Smaller Reporting Companies under Regulation S-K

The following Items of Regulation S-K contain scaled disclosure requirements for registrants that qualify as a smaller reporting company: n9

[a] Item 101. Description of Business. Paragraph (h) of Item 101 of Regulation S-K sets forth alternative disclosure standards for smaller reporting companies. Generally, the different requirements involve providing a less detailed description of the registrant's business. For instance, smaller reporting companies need not provide financial information about segments. n10 In addition, smaller reporting companies need only disclose business development activities for the past three years, as opposed to the general requirement of five years. n11 For a full description of the scaled disclosure requirements of Item 101 of Regulation S-K, see § 7.03[2][k][i][G] supra.

[b] Item 201. Market Price of and Dividends on Registrant's Common Equity and Related Stockholder Matters. Instruction 6 to paragraph (e) of Item 201 of Regulation S-K provides that smaller reporting companies are not required to provide a performance graph. n12

[c] Item 301. Selected Financial Data. Paragraph (c) of Item 301 of Regulation S-K provides that smaller reporting companies need not present the selected financial data required under Item 301. n13

[d] Item 302. Supplementary Financial Information. Paragraph (c) of Item 302 of Regulation S-K provides that smaller reporting companies need not present the supplementary financial information required under Item 302. n14

[e] Item 303. Management's Discussion and Analysis of Financial Condition and Results of Operations. Paragraph (d) of Item 303 of Regulation S-K provides scaled disclosure for smaller reporting companies, including that smaller reporting companies:

(1) need only provide two years for analysis if the company is presenting only two years of financial statements, instead of the three years of analysis required of larger companies that must provide three years of financial statements; and

(2) are not required to provide tabular disclosure of contractual obligations. n15

[f] Item 305. Quantitative and Qualitative Disclosures About Market Risk. Paragraph (e) of Item 305 of Regulation S-K provides that smaller reporting companies need not disclose the information required by Item 305. n16

[g] Item 402. Executive Compensation. Paragraphs (l) through (r) set forth the alternative disclosure requirements for smaller reporting companies with respect to compensation of executives and directors. n17 Smaller reporting companies will:

(1) provide executive compensation disclosure for only three named executive officers, rather than the five required of larger companies;

(2) provide disclosure of only two years in the Summary Compensation Table, as opposed to the three years required of larger companies;

- (3) not need to provide a Compensation Discussion and Analysis;
- (4) provide only three of the seven tables required of larger companies--that is, the Summary Compensation Table, the Outstanding Equity Awards at Fiscal Year End Table and the Director Compensation Table;
- (5) provide alternative narrative disclosure; and
- (6) not be required to include footnote disclosure of the grant date fair value of equity awards in the Director Compensation Table.

For a complete discussion of the scaled executive compensation disclosure applicable to smaller reporting companies under Item 402, see § 7.03[2][k][xii] supra.

[h] Item 404. Transactions with Related Persons, Promoters and Certain Control Persons. Under paragraph (d) of Item 404, smaller reporting companies will:

- (1) not be required to disclose policies and procedures with respect to reviewing related person transactions;
- (2) be required to provide disclosure with respect to transactions where the amount exceeds the lesser of 1% of a smaller company's total assets or $120,000;
- (3) be required to provide additional information regarding underwriting discounts and commissions, as well as information related to corporate parents; and
- (4) be required to provide disclosure regarding promoters and certain control persons.

For a full discussion of the scaled disclosure requirements of smaller reporting companies under Item 404 of Regulation S-K, see § 7.03[2][k][xiv][D] supra.

[i] Item 503. Prospectus Summary, Risk Factors and Ratio of Earnings to Fixed Charges. Pursuant to paragraph (e) of Item 503 of Regulation S-K, smaller reporting companies are not required to provide information regarding:

- (1) the ratio of earnings to fixed charges when a registrant issues debt; or
- (2) the ratio of combined fixed charges and preference dividends to earnings when a registrant issues preference equity securities. n18

[j] Item 504. Use of Proceeds. When determining whether financial statements of businesses proposed to be acquired must be included in the filings of smaller reporting companies, Article 8 of Regulation S-X, rather than the other articles of Regulation S-X, will govern. n19

[k] Item 601. Exhibits. Smaller reporting companies need not provide the disclosure required by Exhibit 12 (Statements re Computation of Ratios). n20

For the remaining items of Regulation S-K, smaller reporting companies must follow the same requirements as larger companies. n21

CHAPTER 7 Registration Forms

1-7 Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 7.06

AUTHOR: Cristopher Greer Melinda I. Wang Jeffery C. Fang Amanda M. Burke Andrew R. Meyerson

§ 7.06 Registration of Certain Business Combinations

[1] Form S-4 Registration of Securities Issued in Business Combination Transactions

Form S-4 is the form for the registration of securities in connection with certain business combinations. n1 The form may be used in:

- (1) transactions under Rule 145(a); n2
- (2) mergers in which the applicable state law would not require the solicitation of the votes or consents of all the security holders of the company being acquired; n3
- (3) exchange offers for securities of the issuer or another entity; n4
- (4) public reoffers or resales of any such securities acquired pursuant to Form S-4; n5 or
- (5) more than one of the above types of transactions registered on one registration statement. n6

Form S-4 extends to registration of securities issued in business combinations the principles of integrated disclosure previously adopted by the Commission for primary offerings. The manner of preparation of Form S-4 depends on whether the registrant is a Form S-1 or Form S-3 company. Whether information may be incorporated by reference or must be included in the prospectus depends on which form the company could use in making a primary offering of securities not involving a business combination.

If the registrant is subject to the Commission's proxy rules, those rules apply to Form S-4, except that the Form S-4 prospectus may serve as the proxy or information statement for the transaction and may contain information required by Form S-4 in lieu of that required by Exchange Act Schedules 14A and 14C. n7

Form S-4 contains two parts, Part I, Information Required in the Prospectus and Part II, Information Not Required in the Prospectus.

If the securities to be registered on the Form S-4 will be issued in a roll-up transaction the registrant must, in addition to the requirements of the Form, comply with the disclosure provisions of Section 900 of Regulation S-K. A roll-up transaction is defined as a transaction involving the combination or reorganization of one or more partnerships, directly or indirectly, in which some or all of the investors in any of such partnerships will receive new securities, or securities in another entity. n8

[a] Facing Page. The facing page of Form S-4 requires a statement of the approximate date of commencement of the proposed sale of the securities to the public, the registrant's exact name as set forth in its charter, state or other jurisdiction of incorporation or organization, primary industrial classification, code number, I.R.S. employer identification number and the address, including zip code and telephone number, including area code, of the registrant's principal executive offices. n9 The facing page must also state the name, address and telephone number of the registrant's agent for service of process. In addition, the facing sheet of Form S-4 requires the registrant to calculate, in tabular form, the registration fee, setting forth the title of each class of securities to be registered, amount to be registered, proposed maximum offering price per unit, proposed maximum aggregate offering price and amount of registration fee. n10

[b] The Prospectus.

Part I of Form S-4, "Information Required in the Prospectus," requires the registrant to furnish in response to 19 items disclosure about (1) the transaction (Items 1-9), (2) the registrant (Items 10-14), (3) the company being acquired (Items 15-17) and (4) voting and management (Items 18 and 19).

[i] Information About the Transaction.

Form S-4 requires information about the transaction to appear in the prospectus. This information may not be incorporated by reference. If the registration statement on Form S-4 relates to offerings of securities under Rule 415(a)(1)(viii) ("shelf registration"), required information about the transaction only need be furnished as of the initial effectiveness of the registration statement to the extent practicable. The required information about the specific transaction must be included in the prospectus by means of a post-effective amendment. Where the transaction would qualify for an exemption, absent other similar transactions, a prospectus supplement may be used to furnish information about the transaction. n11

[C] Item 3. Risk Factors, Ratio of Earnings to Fixed Charges and Other Information. Item 3 requires the registrant to furnish in the forepart of the prospectus:

(1) a summary of the information required by Item 503 of Regulation S-K; n14

(2) the name, address and telephone number of the principal executive offices of the registrant and the company being acquired; n15

(3) a brief description of the business conducted by the parties; n16

(4) a brief description of the transaction; n17

(5) with respect to the registrant and the company being acquired, a brief statement comparing the percentage of outstanding voting shares held by directors, executive officers and their affiliates, and the vote required for approval of the transaction; n18

(6) a statement as to whether any federal or state regulatory requirements must be complied with or approval must be obtained in connection with the transaction, and if so, the status of such compliance or approvals; n19

(7) a statement about whether or not dissenters' rights of appraisal exist; n20 and

(8) a brief statement about the tax consequences of the transaction. n21

Item 3 requires as well that the registrant furnish selected financial data pursuant to Item 301 of Regulation S-K for (1) the registrant, (2) the company being acquired and (3) if material, for the registrant, on a pro forma basis, giving effect to the transaction. n22

In addition, Item 3(f) of Form S-4 requires, in comparative columnar form, historical and pro forma per share data of the registrant and historical and equivalent pro forma per share data of the company being acquired regarding book value, cash dividends and income (loss) from continuing operations. n23

Item 3(g) requires the furnishing in comparative columnar form of the market value of securities of the company being acquired (on an historical and equivalent per share basis) and the registrant (on a historical basis) as of the date preceding public announcement of the transaction or, if no such public announcement was made, as of the day preceding the day agreement on the transaction was reached.

[D] Item 4. Terms of the Transaction. Under Item 4 of Form S-4 registrant must provide:

(1) a brief summary of the terms of the acquisition agreement; n24

(2) the reasons of the registrant and of the company being acquired for engaging in the transaction; n25

(3) the information required by Item 202 of Regulation S-K, i.e., a description of the registrant's securities; n26

(4) an explanation of any material differences between the rights of security holders of the company being acquired and the rights of holders of the securities being offered; n27

(5) a brief statement as to the accounting treatment of the transaction; and n28

(6) the federal income tax consequences of the transaction. n29

If the registrant or the company being acquired has obtained a report, opinion or appraisal relating to the transaction from an outside party and such report has been referred to in the prospectus, the registrant must provide the information required by Item 1015(b) of Regulation M-A. n30

Finally, Item 4 requires that the acquisition agreement be incorporated by reference in the prospectus by means of a statement to that effect. n31

[E] Item 5. Pro Forma Financial Information. Item 5 requires the registrant to furnish the pro forma financial information for the transaction required by Article 11 of Regulation S-X. n32 A smaller reporting company instead need only provide the information in Rule 8-05 of Regulation S-X.

[F] Item 6. Material Contracts with the Company Being Acquired. Item 6 calls for information relating to any past, present or proposed material contracts, arrangements, negotiations, transactions or similar contracts between the registrant or its affiliates and the company being acquired or its affiliates during periods for which financial statements are presented or incorporated by reference. n33 Item 6 is designed to elicit information about possible conflicts of interest and pre-takeover transactions such as purchases by the registrant of large blocks of securities of the company being acquired.

[G] Item 7. Additional Information Required for Reoffering by Persons and Parties Deemed to be Underwriters. Item 7 provides that if any of the securities being registered are to be reoffered to the public by an underwriter, the prospectus must include:

- (1) the information required by Item 507 of Regulation S-K; n34
- (2) information about the consummation of the transaction in which the securities were acquired; and
- (3) any material change in the registrant's affairs subsequent to the transaction. n35

[H] Item 8. Interests of Named Experts and Counsel. This item requires the registrant to furnish the information specified in Item 509 of Regulation S-K. n36

[I] Item 9. Disclosure of Commission Position on Indemnification for Securities Act Liabilities. Item 9 requires the registrant to furnish the information required by Item 510 of Regulation S-K. n37

[ii] Information About the Registrant.

Form S-4, in specifying the means of delivering information about the registrant, adopts the two-tier Forms S-1 and S-3 approach in effect for primary offerings. Thus, if a registrant is subject to either Section 13(a) or 15(d) of the Exchange Act, it must furnish the same information about itself in the Form S-4 prospectus as would be required by Form S-1 or S-3 n38 if it were making a primary offering of securities not involving a business combination. A registrant eligible to use S-3 is not required to furnish information at the most streamlined level available, but may elect instead to comply with the items of Form S-4 by providing greater prospectus presentation. A nonreporting company must present company information at the level prescribed by Form S-1. n39

Items 10 through 14 of Form S-4 prescribe the registrant-related information. For purposes of furnishing the registrant-related information, these items have been divided into three alternative categories and availability of each alternative depends upon whether the registrant uses S-1 or S-3 level of disclosure. Information about the registrant may be provided in accordance with Items 10 and 11 of Form S-4 if the registrant elects this alternative and meets prescribed requirements for use of Form S-3. n40

Items 12 and 13 of Form S-4 may be used at the election of any registrant meeting the requirements of Form S-3; n41 and Item 14 must be used by registrants not eligible to use Form S-3. n42

Special disclosure provisions apply to business combination transactions of a registrant which is a real estate entity described in General Instruction A of Form S-11. n43 Such registrant must furnish information prescribed by Items 12 through 16 of Form S-11, including:

- (1) discussion of the registrant's policies regarding certain activities (Item 12);
- (2) discussion of certain investment policies (Item 13);
- (3) description of real estate (Item 14);
- (4) disclosure of certain operating data (Item 15); and
- (5) discussion of the tax treatment of the registrant and its security holders regarding certain distributions (Item 16). n44

[A] Item 10. Information With Respect to S-3 Registrants. A Form S-3 registrant electing to provide information under Item 10 of Form S-4 must furnish in the prospectus: (1) a description of material changes in its affairs since the end of the latest fiscal year for which audited financial statements appeared in its latest annual report to security holders (changes described in the registrant's reports on Form 10-Q or Form 8-K under the Exchange Act need not be included in the prospectus); n45 and (2) if not incorporated by reference from certain previously filed reports:

- (1) financial information required by Rule 3-05 and Article 11 of Regulation S-X with respect to transactions other than that pursuant to which the securities being registered are to be issued;
- (2) restated financial statements pursuant to Regulation S-X, if there has been a change in accounting principles or a material retroactive restatement as a result of an error;
- (3) restated financial statements prepared in accordance with Regulation S-X where a combination of entities under common control has been consummated since the end of the registrant's most recent fiscal year, and the transferred businesses, in the aggregate, are "significant" pursuant to Rule 11-01(b) of Regulation S-X; and
- (4) any financial information required as a result of a disposition of assets outside the normal course of business. n46

[B] Item 11. Incorporation of Certain Information by Reference. If the registrant meets Form S-3 requirements and elects to furnish information pursuant to Item 10 of Form S-4, it may incorporate certain information into the prospectus by reference by a statement to that effect listing all documents so incorporated. n47

Such Registrant may incorporate by reference its latest annual report on Form 10-K and Form 10-KSB which contains financial statements for the registrant's latest fiscal year for which it was required to file Form 10-K or Form 10-KSB, as the case may be, and all other reports filed under Section 13(a) or 15(d) of the Exchange Act since the end of the fiscal year to which that Form 10-K and Form 10-KSB applies.

If the registrant is registering capital stock of a class which is being registered under Section 12 of the Exchange Act and traded on a national securities exchange or quoted by NASDAQ, the registrant may incorporate a description of those securities from any Exchange Act registration statement filed. n48

The registrant must identify the reports and other information that it files with the Commission and state that the public may read and copy any material it files at the Commission's Public Reference Room at 100 F Street, N.E., Washington, D.C. 20549. The registrant must state that the public may obtain information on the operation of the Public Reference

Room by calling the Commission at 1-800-SEC-0330. Electronic filers must state that the Commission maintains an Internet site that contains reports, proxy and information statements and other information regarding issuers that file electronically with the Commission (www.sec.gov). Registrants are encouraged to give their Internet address, if available. n49

[C] Item 12. Information with Respect to S-3 Registrants. Item 12 of Form S-4 requires a Form S-3 registrant which elects to comply with the item to provide the information required by either paragraph (a) or (b) of Item 12 of Form S-4. n50

Paragraph (a) of Item 12 requires a registrant who elects to deliver the prospectus together with its latest Form 10-K, Form 10-KSB, or its latest annual report to security holders:

(2) to provide the financial and other information about the Registrant required by Part I of Form 10-Q under the Exchange Act n51 as of the end of the most recent fiscal quarter that ended after the end of the last fiscal year for which certified financial statements were included in the registrant's Form 10-K or report to security holders, and more than 45 days prior to the effective date of the Form S-4, or a more recent date. The financial information must be delivered either by including it in the prospectus, or by providing, without charge, to each person to whom a prospectus is delivered, a copy of the registrant's latest Form 10-Q or its latest quarterly report to security holders that contains the financial information required. n52

A registrant using Item 12(a) of Form S-4 must also provide the information required by Rule 3-05 and Article 11 of Regulation S-X with respect to transactions other than that pursuant to which the securities being registered are to be issued, if such information was not included in the registrant's latest Form 10-K or its latest annual report to security holders, and must describe any material changes in the registrant's affairs since the end of latest full year for which audited financial statements appeared in its latest Form 10-K or its latest annual report to security holders, and which were not described in a subsequent Form 10-Q or quarterly report delivered with the prospectus. n53

If a registrant elects to deliver the documents specified in Item 12(a) of Form S-4 with a preliminary prospectus, such documents are not required to be redelivered with the final prospectus. n54

Item 12(b) of Form S-4 requires a registrant electing not to deliver its latest Form 10-K, Form 10-KSB, or its latest annual report with the Form S-4 prospectus to provide:

(1) a brief description of the business conducted by the registrant and its subsidiaries during the most recent fiscal year as required by Exchange Act Rule 14a-3 to be included in an annual report to security holders, taking the account changes in its business that have occurred between the end of the latest fiscal year and the effective date of the registration statement;

(4) if the registrant elects to provide a copy of its latest quarterly report which was delivered to security holders, pursuant to Item 12(a)(2)(iii) of Form S-4, financial information equivalent to that required to be presented in Part I of Form 10-Q. n63

The registrant may, where appropriate, clearly indicate that certain portions of its annual or quarterly report to security holders, other than those portions required to be incorporated by reference, are not part of the registration statement. n64

Electronic filers electing to deliver and incorporate by reference all or any portion of the quarterly or annual report to security holders pursuant to Item 13 of Form S-4 must file such report or the portion thereof that is incorporated by reference as an exhibit in electronic format. n65

The registrant must identify the reports and other information that it files with the Commission and state that the public may read and copy any material it files at the Commission's Public Reference Room at 100 F Street, N.E., Washington, D.C. 20549. - (3) Item 103 of Regulation S-K, "Legal proceedings"; n69 and
- (4) the same information required by paragraph (3) of Item 13 above. n70

In addition, the registrant must provide the financial statements required by Regulation S-X (with schedules filed pursuant to Item 21 of Form S-4), n71 and the financial information required by Rule 3-05 and Article 11 of Regulation S-X with respect to transactions other than those pursuant to which the securities being registered are to be issued. n72

[iii] Information About the Company Being Acquired.

Form S-4 generally provides for the same prospectus presentation about a reporting company being acquired that would be required by Form S-1 or S-3 were such company making a primary offering of securities not involving a business combination. Thus, registrants must furnish information about a reporting company being acquired as if that company were the registrant. n73 On the other hand, information about a non-reporting company being acquired must be reported at the Form S-1 level. For purposes of Form S-4, a company is considered "non-reporting" if, among other things, it is not subject to the reporting requirements of Section 13(a) or 15(d) of the Exchange Act, or if because of Section 12(i) of the Exchange Act, n74 it has not furnished an annual report to security holders pursuant to Exchange Act Rule 14a-3 or 14c-3 for its latest fiscal year.

Information about the company being acquired (including by means of an exchange offer of securities of the registrant for securities of such company), must be provided in accordance with one of the following items of Form S-4:

- (1) Item 15 of Form S-4, if the company being acquired is eligible to use Form S-3, and the registrant elects to use Item 15 in providing information about that company; n75
- (2) Item 16, if information is being provided about a company being acquired that is eligible to use Form S-3; and n76
- (3) Item 17, if the company being acquired is not eligible to use Form S-3. n77

[A] Item 15. Information With Respect to S-3 Companies. Item 15 provides that if the company being acquired is eligible to use Form S-3 and there is an election to use Item 15, the registrant must furnish the same information about the company being acquired that would be required by Items 10 n78 and 11 n79 of Form S-4 if securities of that company were being registered.

[B] Item 16. Information With Respect to S-3 Companies. Under Item 16, if the company being acquired is eligible to use Form S-3 and there is an election to use Item 16, the registrant must furnish the same information about the company being acquired that would be required by Items 12 n80 and 13 n81 of Form S-4 if securities of that company were being registered. In addition, electronic filers electing to deliver and incorporate by reference all or any portion of the quarterly or annual report to security holders pursuant to Item 16 of Form S-4 must file such report or the portion thereof that is incorporated by reference as an exhibit in electronic format. n82

[C] Item 17. Information With Respect to Companies Other Than S-3 Companies. Item 17 allows the registrant to elect to provide information required by paragraph (a) or (b) of the Item if the company being acquired is not eligible to use Form S-3 or if compliance with Item 17 is elected in lieu of Item 15 or 16 of Form S-4. Paragraph (a) of Item 17 provides that if a reporting company is being acquired or paragraph (a) is selected in lieu of paragraph (b) of Item 17, the registrant must provide the information that would be required by Item 14 of Form S-4 n83 if securities of that company were being registered, and only the schedules required by Rules 12-15 (summary of investments-other than investments in related parties), 12-28 (real estate and accumulated depreciation) and 12-29 (mortgage loans and real estate) of Regulation S-X for the company being acquired.

If the company being acquired is not a reporting company, or has not furnished an annual report to security holders for its latest fiscal year, the prospectus must include:

- (1) a brief description of the general nature and scope of its business;
- (2) the information specified by Items 201, 301, 302, 303, 304(b) and 305 of Regulation S-K;
- (3) three-year financial statements which would have been required to appear in an annual report to security holders under Exchange Act Rules 14a-3(b)(1) and (b)(2) n84 or Rules 14c-3(a)(1) and (a)(2); n85
- (4) quarterly financial and other information pursuant to Part I of Form 10-Q n86 for the most recent fiscal quarter; and
- (5) schedules required by Rules 12-15, 12-28 and 12-29 of Regulation S-X. n87

[iv] Voting and Management Information.

Form S-4 requires that all voting information be presented in the prospectus, while the amount of prospectus presentation for management information, like company information, depends on which form (S-1, S-2 or S-3) could be used in a primary offering not involving a business combination.

[A] Item 18. Information if Proxies, Consents or Authorizations are to be Solicited. Item 18 requires that if proxies, consents n88 or authorizations are being solicited, the registrant must furnish, except as provided in paragraph (b) of the item:

- (1) the information required by Items 1, 2, 3 and 4 of Exchange Act Schedule 14A; n89
- (2) with respect to both the registrant and the company being acquired, the information required by Items 5 n90 and 6 n91 of Exchange Act Schedule 14A; and
- (3) with respect to each person who will serve as a director or executive officer of the surviving or acquiring company, the information required by Items 401, n92 402 n93 and 404 n94 of Regulation S-K. n95

Item 18 also calls for the information required by Item 21 n96 of Schedule 14A.

Paragraph (b) of Item 18 of Form S-4 provides that if the registrant or the company being acquired is eligible to use Form S-3, the information required by Item 5 of Exchange Act Schedule 14A concerning voting securities and principal holders thereof and information concerning each person who will serve as a director or executive officer of the surviving or acquiring company may be incorporated by reference from the registrant's latest annual report on Form 10-K.

[B] Item 19. Information if Proxies, Consents or Authorizations Are Not to be Solicited or in an Exchange Offer. Item 19 provides that if the transaction is an exchange offer or if proxies, consents or authorizations are not being solicited, the registrant must furnish, except as provided in paragraph (c) of the item,

- (1) the information required by Item 2 of Exchange Act Schedule 14C n97 and Item 3 of Exchange Act Schedule 14A n98 be furnished with respect to the registrant;
- (2) the date, time and place of the meeting of the security holders unless such information is otherwise disclosed in material furnished to security holders with the prospectus;
- (3) with respect to both the registrant and the company being acquired, a brief description of any material interest, direct or indirect, by security holdings or otherwise, in the transaction by affiliates of the parties; n99 and
- (4) the same information required by Item 18 of Form S-4 with respect to each person who will serve as a director or an executive officer of the surviving or acquiring company.

As in Item 18 of Form S-4, Item 19 requires the furnishing of the information required by Item 6 and 21 of Schedule 14A with respect to both the registrant and the company being acquired.

Paragraph (c) of Item 19 of Form S-4 permits registrants eligible to use Form S-3 to incorporate by reference from their latest annual report on Form 10-K any information required by paragraphs (a)(5) and (a)(7) of Item 19.

[c] Information Included in the Registration Statement But Not Required in Prospectus.

Part II of Form S-4, "Information Not Required in Prospectus," contains the following three items.

[i] Item 20. Indemnification of Officers and Directors. Under Item 20, the registrant must furnish the information required by Item 702 of Regulation S-K n100 concerning the indemnification of directors and officers of the registrant.

[ii] Item 21. Exhibits and Financial Statements Schedules. Item 21 requires the registrant to furnish the exhibits required by Item 601 of Regulation S-K, n101 and the financial statement schedules required by Regulation S-X and Items 14(e), n102 17(a) n103 and 17(b)(9) n104 of Form S-4. Paragraph (c) of Item 21 provides that if the registrant furnished information pursuant to Item 4(b) of Form S-4, it must provide the reports, opinions or appraisals as exhibits hereto if they were not included in the prospectus.

[iii] Item 22. Undertakings. Under Item 22, the registrant must furnish the undertakings required by Item 512 of Regulation S-K. n105

In addition, the registrant must undertake to respond to requests for information incorporated by reference pursuant to Items 4, 10(b), 11 or 13 of Form S-4 within one business day, and to send the incorporated documents by first class mail or its equivalent. n106

The registrant must also undertake to provide, by means of a post-effective amendment, all information about the transaction and the company being acquired not included in Form S-4 registration statement when it became effective. n107

[d] Roll-Up Transactions.

If the securities to be registered on the Form S-4 will be issued in a roll-up transaction, then the registrant must also comply with the disclosure provisions of Section 900 of Regulation S-K. n108 In general, Section 900 requires the registrant to include additional information concerning the roll-up transaction in the registration statement on Form S-4 and to prepare supplements for each entity included in the roll-up transaction. In addition, the prospectus must be distributed to security holders no later than the lesser of 60 calendar days prior to the date on which action in the roll-up transaction is to be taken or the maximum number of days permitted for giving notice under applicable state law. n109 Section 900 has fourteen items. Item 902 concerns the information that must be included in the separate supplements. The remaining thirteen items involve additional disclosure concerning the roll-up transaction that must be included in the registration statement on Form S-4.

[i] Item 902. Individual Partnership Supplements. If two or more entities are proposed to be included in the roll-up transaction, this item requires a separate supplement to the disclosure document for each entity n110 which must be filed as part of the registration statement and must be delivered with the prospectus to investors in the partnership covered by the supplement. n111 The supplement must contain the following information:

- (1) Statements in the forepart of the supplement to the effect that supplements have been prepared for each partnership; that the effects of the roll-up transaction may be different for investors in the various partnerships; and that a copy of any supplement will be transmitted promptly, without charge, upon written request by an investor. n112
- (2) A brief description of each material risk and effect of the roll-up transaction, including, but not limited to, federal income tax consequences for investors in the partnership, with cross references to the discussion of the risks, effects and tax consequences of the roll-up transaction required in the Form S-4 pursuant to Items 904 and 915 of Regulation S-K. This discussion must address the effect of the roll-up transaction on the partnership's financial condition and results of operations. n113
- (3) A statement concerning whether the general partner reasonably believes that the roll-up transaction is fair or unfair to investors in the partnership and a brief discussion of the bases for such belief, with appropriate cross reference to the discussion of the fairness of the roll-up transaction required in the Form S-4 by Item 910 of Regulation S-K. The registrant must also include a brief description of any material differences between the fairness analysis for the partnership described in the supplement and other partnerships. n114
- (4) A brief, narrative description of the method of calculating the value of the partnership and allocating interests in the successor to the partnership, and a table showing such calculation and allocation. The table must include the following information (or other information of a comparable character necessary to a thorough understanding of the calculation and allocation): n115
 - (a) the appraised value of each separately appraised significant asset held by the partnership, or if appraisals have not been obtained for each significant asset, the value assigned for purposes of the valuation of the partnership to each significant asset for which an appraisal has not been obtained; n116
 - (b) the dollar amount of any mortgages or other similar liabilities to which such asset is subject; n117
 - (c) cash and cash equivalent assets held by the partnership; n118

(h) the aggregate number of interests in the successor to be allocated to the partnership and the percentage of the total interests of the successor; n123

(i) the number of interests in the successor to be allocated to investors in the partnership for each interest held by such investors (on an equivalent interest basis, such as per $1,000 original investment); n124 and

(j) the value assigned to the general partner's interest in the partnership, and the number of interests in the successor or otherwise as compensation for reimbursement for claims against or interests in the partnership, such as foregone fees, unearned fees and for fees to be earned on the sale or refinancing of an asset. n125

(5) The amounts of compensation paid, and cash distributions made, to the general partner and its affiliates by the partnership for the last three fiscal years and the most recently completed interim period and the amounts that would have been paid if the compensation and distribution structure to be in effect after the roll-up transaction had been in effect during such period. A description of any changes, and their effects on the compensation and distributions to be paid by the successor, if any proposed change in the business or operations of the successor after the roll-up transaction would materially change the compensation and distributions that would have been paid by the successor (for example if properties will be sold or purchased after the roll-up transaction and no properties were sold or purchased during the period covered by the table). n126

(6) Cash distributions made to investors during each of the last five fiscal years and most recently completed interim period, identifying any such distributions which represent a return of capital. n127

(7) An appropriate cross-reference to selected financial information concerning the partnership and the pro-forma financial statements included in the Form S-4 in response to Item 914(b)(2) of Regulation S-K. n128

[ii] Item 903. Summary. This item requires the registrant to provide a clear concise and comprehensible summary of the roll-up transaction in the forepart of the S-4. n129 This summary must include any material terms or consequences of the roll-up transaction necessary to an understanding of such transaction, including:

(1) Each material risk and effect on investors, including, but not limited to:

[iii] Item 904. Risk Factors and Other Considerations. This item requires the registrant to include in the registration statement on Form S-4, immediately following the summary required by Item 903, information concerning the risks of the roll-up transaction. Item 904(a) requires a description, in reasonable detail, of each material risk and effect of the roll-up transaction, including, but not limited to:

- (1) the potential risks, adverse effects and benefits of the roll-up transaction for investors and for the general partner, including those which result from each matter described in response to Item 905 of Regulation S-K with appropriate cross reference to the comparative information required by Item 905;
- (2) the material risks arising from an investment in the successor; and
- (3) the likelihood that securities of the successor received by investors in the roll-up transaction will trade in the securities markets at a price substantially below the value assigned to such securities in the roll-up transaction and/or the value of the assets of the successor, and the effects on investors of such a trading market discount.

Item 904(b) requires the registrant to quantify each risk or effect to the extent practicable, including the amount of cost savings and a comparison of such amount to the costs of the roll-up transaction, if a cost savings resulting from combined administration is identified as a potential benefit of the roll-up transaction and if there may be a material conflict of interest of the sponsor or general partner arising from its receipt of payments or other consideration as a result of the roll-up transaction, the amount of such payments and other consideration to be obtained in the roll-up transaction and a comparison of such amounts to which the sponsor or general partner would be entitled without the roll-up transaction. n137

Finally, Item 904(c) requires the registrant to state whether any of the risks or effects identified in this section may be different for investors in any partnership and, if so, identify such partnerships and describe such differences.

[iv] Item 905. Comparative Information. This item requires a description of certain information which should be illustrated in tables or other readily understandable formats, set forth in appropriate separate sections of the Form S-4.

n138 The registrant must describe the following information:

(1) The voting and other rights of investors in the successor under the successor's governing instruments and under applicable law, comparing such rights to the voting and other rights of investors in each partnership subject to the transaction under the partnerships' governing instruments and under applicable law and describing the effects of any changes in such rights. n139

(2) The duties owed by the general partner of the successor to investors in the successor under the successor's governing instruments and under applicable law, comparing such duties to the duties owed by the general partner of each partnership to investors in the partnership under the partnership's governing instruments and under applicable law, with a description of the effects of any changes in such duties. n140

(3) Each item of compensation (including reimbursement of expenses) payable by the successor after the roll-up transactions to the general partner and its affiliates or to any affiliate of the successor and compare such compensation to the compensation currently payable to the general partner and its affiliates by each partnership with a description of the effects of the changes in compensation arrangements. n141

(4) Each instance in which cash or other distributions may be made by the successor to the general partner and its affiliates or to any affiliate of the successor, comparing such distributions to the distributions currently paid or payable to the general partner and its affiliates by each partnership, describing the effects of any changes in distribution arrangements and if distributions similar to those currently paid or payable by any partnership to the general partner or its affiliates will not be made by the successor, state whether or not other compensation arrangements with the successor, such as incentive fees payable upon sale of a property) will, in effect, replace such distributions. n142

(5) If any proposed changes in the business or operations of the successor after the roll-up transaction would change materially the compensation and distributions that would have been paid by the successor from that shown in the table required, a description of such changes and any effects on the compensation and distributions to be paid by the successor is required. n143

(6) The material conflicts that may arise between the interests of the sponsor or general partner and the interests of investors in the successor as a result of the compensation and distribution arrangements described in C and D above and describe any steps that will be taken to resolve such conflicts. n144

Item 905 (c) requires the registrant to describe any provisions in the governing instruments of the successor and any policies of the general partner of the successor relating to distributions to investors of cash from operations, proceeds from the sale, financing or refinancing of assets and any other distributions, compare such provisions and policies to those of each of the partnerships and describe the effects of any changes in such provisions or policies.

Item 905(d) requires the registrant to describe each material investment policy of the successor, including policies with respect to borrowings by the successor, comparing such investment policies to the investment policies of each of the partnerships and describing the effects of any changes in such policies. It also requires a description of any plans of the general partner, sponsor or of any person who will be an affiliate of the successor with respect to a sale of any material assets of the partnerships, a purchase of any material assets and borrowings.

The registrant must also describe any other similar terms or policies of the successor that are material to an investment in the successor, comparing any such terms or policies to those of each of the partnerships and describing the effects of any changes in any such terms or policies in Item 905(e).

The registrant must also state whether or not specific assets have been identified for sale, financing, refinancing or purchase following the roll-up transaction. If specific assets have been identified, the registrant must describe the assets and the proposed transaction. n145

[v] Item 906. Allocation of Roll-Up Consideration. This item requires the registrant to provide information concerning the consideration received in the roll-up transaction. Item 906(a) requires the registrant to describe, in reasonable detail, the method used to allocate interests in the successor to investors in the partnerships and the reasons why such method was used.

Item 906(b) states that the registrant must provide a table showing the calculation of the valuation of each partnership and the allocation of interests in the successor to investors, including for each partnership:

- (1) the value assigned to each significant category of assets of the partnership and the total value assigned to the partnership;
- (2) the total value assigned to all partnerships;
- (3) the aggregate amount of interests in the successor to be allocated to each partnership and the percentage of the total amount of all such interests represented thereby; and
- (4) the amount of interests of the successor to be issued to investors per interest held in each partnership (on an equivalent interest basis, such as per $1,000 invested). n146

If interests in the successor will be allocated to the general partner in exchange for its general partner interest or otherwise or if the general partner will receive other consideration in connection with the roll-up transaction, Item 906(c) requires the registrant to describe, in reasonable detail, the method used to allocate interests in the successor to the general partner or to determine the amount of consideration payable to the general partner, and the reasons such methods were used and identify the consideration paid by the general partner for interests in the partnerships that will be changed in the roll-up transaction.

[vi] Item 907. Background of the Roll-Up Transaction. This item requires the registrant to furnish a summary of the background of the transaction, including, but not limited to, a description of any contracts, negotiations or transactions concerning a merger, consolidation or combination of any of the partnerships, an acquisition of any of the partnerships of a material amount of any of their assets, a tender offer for or other acquisition of securities of any class issued by any of the partnerships, or a change in control of any of the partnerships. This summary must cover the period beginning with each partnership's second full fiscal year before the date of the filing of the roll-up transaction, include contracts, negotiations or transactions between the general partner or its affiliates and any person who would have a direct interest in any of the transactions referred to in the preceding sentence, and identify the person who initiated such contacts, negotiations or transactions. n147

Item 907(b) requires the registrant to briefly describe the background of each partnership, including, but not limited to the amount of capital raised from investors, the extent to which net proceeds from the original offering of interests have been invested, the extent to which funds have been invested as planned and the amount not yet invested, and the partnership's investment objectives and the extent to which the partnership has achieved its investment objectives. n148

Finally, Item 907(c) requires the registrant to discuss whether the general partner, including any affiliated person materially dependent upon the general partner's compensation arrangement with the partnership, or any partnership has experienced any material adverse financial developments since the commencement of the most recently completed fiscal year or is likely to experience any material adverse financial developments, with a description of such developments and the effects of the transaction on such matters. n149

[vii] Item 908. Reasons for and Alternatives to the Roll-Up Transaction. This item requires the registrant to describe the reasons for the roll-up transaction n150 and whether the general partner recommends the roll-up transaction, with a brief description of the reasons for such recommendation. n151 If the general partner or sponsor considered alternatives to the roll-up transaction being proposed, Item 908(b) requires the registrant to describe such alternatives and states reasons for their rejection. n152

The registrant must also describe, in reasonable detail, the following potential alternatives:

- (1) continuing the partnerships in accordance with their existing business plans, including the effects of such continuation and the material risks and benefits that likely would arise in connection therewith, and, if applicable, the general partner's reasons for considering such alternative; n153 and
- (2) liquidating the partnerships, the procedures required to accomplish liquidation, the effects of liquidation, the material risks and benefits that likely would arise in connection with liquidation, and, if applicable, the general partner's reasons for not considering such alternative. n154

Items 908(c) and (d) require the registrant to state the reasons for the structure of the roll-up transaction, the reasons for undertaking such transaction at this time, whether the general partner initiated the roll-up transaction and, if not, whether the general partner participated in the structuring of the transaction.

[viii] Item 909. Conflicts of Interest. This item requires the registrant to provide information concerning any conflict of interest the general partner may have with the investors. Item 909(a) requires a brief description of the general partner's fiduciary duties to each partnership subject to the roll-up transaction and each actual or potential material conflict of interest between the general partner and the investors relating to the roll-up transaction.

The registrant must also state whether or not the general partner has retained an unaffiliated representative to act on behalf of investors for purposes of negotiating the terms of the roll-up transaction in response to Item 909(b). If such a representative has not been retained, the registrant must describe the reasons therefore and the risks arising from the absence of separate representation. n155

If an unaffiliated representative has been retained to represent investors, the registrant must:

- (1) identify such unaffiliated representative; n156
- (2) briefly describe the representative's qualifications, including a brief description of any other transaction similar to the roll-up transaction in which the representative has served in a similar capacity within the past five years; n157
- (3) describe the method of selection of such representative, including a statement as to whether or not any investors were consulted in the selection of the representative and, if so, the names of such investors; n158
- (4) describe the scope and terms of the engagement of the representative, including, but not limited to who is responsible for paying the representative's fees and whether such fees are contingent upon the outcome of the roll-up transaction; n159

(5) describe any material relationship which existed during the past two years or is mutually understood to be contemplated and any compensation received or to be received as a result of such relationship between the representative or its affiliates and the general partner, sponsor, any affiliate of the general partner or sponsor, or any other person having a material interest in the roll-up transaction; n160

(6) describe in reasonable detail the actions taken by the representative on behalf of investors; n161 and

(7) describe the fiduciary duties or other legal obligations of the representative to investors in each of the partnerships. n162

[ix] Item 910. Fairness of the Transaction. This item requires the registrant to state whether the general partner reasonably believes that the roll-up transaction is fair or unfair to investors and the reasons for such belief, addressing the fairness of the roll-up transaction to investors in each of the partnerships and the transaction as a whole. If the roll-up transaction may be completed with a combination of partnerships consisting of less than all partnerships or with portions of partnerships, the belief stated as to the fairness or unfairness of the transaction must address each possible combination.

Item 910(b) requires the registrant to discuss, in reasonable detail, the material factors upon which such belief of fairness or unfairness is based and, to the extent practicable, the weight assigned to each such factor. n163 The discussion concerning fairness should specifically address material terms of the transaction including whether the consideration offered to investors constitutes fair value in relation to: the form and amount of consideration to be received by investors and the sponsor in the roll-up transaction; the methods used to determine such consideration; and the compensation to be paid to the sponsor in the future. n164

This discussion also must compare the value of the consideration to be received in the roll-up transaction to the value of the consideration that would be received pursuant to each of the alternatives to the roll-up transaction discussed in response to Item 908(b), and describe any material differences among the partnerships, such as different types of assets or different investment objectives, relating to the fairness of the transaction.

The factors that are important in determining the fairness of a roll-up transaction to investors and the weight which should be given to such factors in a particular context will vary. Such factors will usually include whether an unaffiliated representative has been retained to act on behalf of the investors and whether the consideration offered to investors constitutes fair value in relation to:

(1) current market prices, if any;

(2) historic market prices, if any;

(3) net book value;

(4) going concern value;

(5) liquidation value;

(6) purchases of limited partnership interests by the general partner or sponsor or their affiliates since the commencement of the partnership's second full fiscal year preceding the date of filing of the disclosure document for the roll-up transaction;

(7) any report, opinion or appraisal discussed in Item 911 of Regulation S-K; and

(8) offers n165 of which the general partner or sponsor is made aware during the preceding 18 months for a merger, consolidation or combination of any of the partnerships, an acquisition of any of the partnerships or a material amount of their assets, a tender offer for or other acquisition of securities of any class issued by any of the partnerships, or a change in control of any of the partnerships. n166

The registrant must also describe any factors known to the general partner that may materially affect the value of the consideration to be received by investors in the roll-up transaction, the values assigned to the partnerships for purposes of the comparisons to alternatives required by the preceding paragraph and the fairness of the transaction to investors in response to Item 910(d). Finally, the registrant must state whether the general partner's statements in response to the preceding two paragraphs are based, in whole or in part on any report, opinion or appraisal described in response to Item 911 and to describe any material uncertainties known to the general partner that relate to the conclusions in any such report, opinion or appraisal including, but not limited to, developments or trends that have affected or are reasonably likely to affect materially such conclusions. In responding to the requirements of this section, the registrant may not use conclusive statements or state that the general partner has no reasonable belief as to the fairness of the roll-up transaction to investors. n167

[x] Item 911. Reports, Opinions and Appraisals. This item requires the registrant to state whether or not the general partner or sponsor has received any report, opinion (other than an opinion of counsel) or appraisal which is material related to the roll-up transaction, n168 including, but not limited to, any such report, opinion or appraisal relating to the consideration or the fairness of the consideration to be offered to investors in connection with the roll-up transaction or the fairness of such transaction to the general partner or investors n169 and attach all such reports, opinions or appraisals to the registration statement. n170 With respect to each such report, opinion or appraisal, the registrant must:

- (1) identify such outside party, n171 briefly describing the qualifications of such outside party and the method of selecting such outside party;
- (2) describe any material relationship between the outside party or its affiliates and the general partner, the sponsor, the successor or any of their affiliates which existed during the past two years or is mutually understood to be contemplated and any compensation received or to be received as a result of such relationship;
- (3) state, if such report, opinion or appraisal relates to the fairness of the consideration, whether the general partner, sponsor or affiliate determined the amount of consideration to be paid or whether the outside party recommended the amount of consideration to be paid;
- (4) furnish a summary concerning such report, opinion or appraisal which must include, but is not limited to, the procedures followed, the findings and recommendations, the bases for and methods of arriving at such findings and recommendations, instructions received from the general partner, sponsor or affiliate on the scope of the investigation and if applicable, state the reasons for placing any limitations on the scope of the investigation, such as access to its personnel, premises or relevant books and records, by the general partner, sponsor or affiliate; and
- (5) state whether any compensation paid to such an outside party is contingent on the approval or completion of the roll-up transaction and, if so, the reasons for compensating such parties on a contingent basis.

The registrant must also describe any contacts in connection with the roll-up transaction between the sponsor or the general partner and any outside party with respect to the preparation by such party of any opinion concerning the fairness of the roll-up transaction, a valuation of a partnership or its assets or any other report with respect to the roll-up transaction, except that this description is not required of contacts with respect to reports, opinions or appraisals files as exhibits to the registration statement. The description of such contacts with any outside party must include the identity of each party, the nature of the contact, the actions taken by such party, any views, preliminary or final, expressed on the proposed subject matter of the report, opinion or appraisal and any reasons such party did not provide a report, opinion or appraisal. n172

The registrant is also required to make a statement in the prospectus to the effect that upon written request by an investor or his representative who has been designated as such in writing, a copy of any such report opinion or appraisal will be transmitted promptly, without charge, by the general partner or sponsor and include the name and address of the person to whom investors or their representative should make their request. n173 If any report, opinion or appraisal relates to the fairness of the roll-up transaction to investors in the partnerships, Item 911(b) requires the registrant to state whether or not the report, opinion or appraisal addresses the fairness of the roll-up transaction as a whole and to investors in each partnership, and all possible combinations of partnerships (including portions of partnerships if the transaction is structured to permit portions of partnerships to participate). If all possible combinations are not addressed, the registrant must identify the combinations that are addressed, identify the persons that determined which combinations would be addressed and state the reasons for the selection of the combinations and state that if the roll-up transaction is completed with a combination of partnerships not addressed, no report, opinion or appraisal concerning the fairness of the roll-up transaction will have been obtained. If the sponsor or the general partner has not obtained any opinion on the fairness of the proposed roll-up transaction to investors in each of the affected partnerships, state the sponsor's or general partner's reasons for concluding that such an opinion is not necessary in order to permit the limited partners of shareholders to make an informed decision on the proposed transaction. n174

If the report, opinion or appraisal consists of an appraisal of the assets of the partnerships, the registrant must provide a clear concise summary description of the appraisal n175 containing:

- (1) a description of the purposes for which the appraisals were obtained and their use in connection with the roll-up transaction;
- (2) a description of which assets are covered by the appraisals, stating the aggregate appraised value of the assets covered by the appraisals (including such value net of associated indebtedness) and stating whether any events have occurred or conditions have changed since the date of the appraisals that may have caused a material change in the value of the assets; and
- (3) an appendix to the prospectus containing one or more tables setting forth the appraised value of any separately appraised asset that is significant n176 to the partnership holding such asset, and if the appraiser considered different valuation approaches in preparing the appraisals of such significant assets, the value of each such asset under each valuation approach considered by the appraiser, identifying the valuation approach used by the appraiser in determining the appraised value and the reason such approach was chosen, setting forth all material assumptions used by the appraiser in appraising the significant assets and if the appraiser used different assumptions for any of such assets, the reasons the different assumptions were chosen. n177

[xi] Item 912. Source and Amount of Funds and Transaction Expenses. Item 912(a) requires the registrant to state the source and total amount of funds or other consideration to be used in the roll-up transaction. The registrant must also furnish a reasonably itemized statement of all expenses incurred or estimated to be incurred in connection with the roll-up transaction including, but not limited to, filing fees, legal, financial advisory, accounting and appraisal fees, solicitation expenses and printing costs and identify the persons responsible for paying any or all of such expenses, stating whether or not any partnership subject to the roll-up transaction will be directly or indirectly responsible for any or all of the expenses of the transaction, the amount and sources of capital used to finance such amount by each partnership.

If all or any part of the consideration to be used by the sponsor or successor in the roll-up transaction is expected to be, directly or indirectly, provided by any partnership, Item 912(c) requires the registrant to state the amount to be provided by each partnership and the sources of capital to finance such amount. If all or any part of the funds or other consideration is, or is expected to be, directly or indirectly, borrowed by the sponsor or successor for the purpose of the roll-up transaction, the registrant must provide a summary of each such loan agreement containing the identity of the parties, the term, the collateral, the stated and effective interest rates and other material terms or conditions and briefly describe any plans or arrangements to finance or repay such borrowing or if no plans or arrangements have been made, make a statement to that effect. n178

[xii] Item 913. Other Provisions of the Transaction. This item requires the registrant to state whether or not appraisal rights are provided under applicable state law, under the partnership's governing instruments or will be voluntarily accorded by the successor, the general partner or the sponsor (or any of their affiliates) in connection with the roll-up transaction and summarize such rights, if available. n179 If appraisal rights will not be available to investors who object to the transaction, the registrant must briefly outline the rights which may be available to such investors under such law. The registrant is also required to describe any provision that has been made to allow investors to obtain access to the books and records of the partnership or to obtain counsel or appraisal services at the expense of the successor, the general partner, the partnership, the sponsor (or any of their affiliates). n180 Finally, the registrant must discuss the investors' rights under federal and state law to obtain a partnership's list of investors. n181

[xiii] Item 914. Pro Forma Financial Statements; Selected Financial Data. In addition to the information required by Item 301 of Regulation S-K and Item 302 of Regulation S-K, Item 914(a) requires the registrant to provide, for each partnership proposed to be included in a roll-up transaction:

- (1) a ratio of earnings to fixed charges, cash and cash equivalents, total assets at book value, total assets at the value assigned for purposes of the roll-up transaction (if applicable), total liabilities, general and limited partners' equity, net increase (decrease) in cash and cash equivalents, net cash provided by operating activities, distributions; and
- (2) per unit data for net income (loss), book value, value assigned for purposes of the roll-up transaction (if applicable) and distributions (separately identifying distributions that represent a return of capital).

This information should be provided for the same periods for which Selected Financial Data and Supplementary Financial Data are required to be provided in the registration statement.

The registrant is also required to provide pro forma financial information (including oil and gas reserves and cash flow disclosure, if appropriate), assuming that all partnerships participate in the roll-up transaction and participation in a roll-up transaction of those partnerships that on a combined basis have the lowest combined net cash provided by operating activities for the last fiscal year of such partnerships, provided that participation by such partnerships satisfies any conditions to consummation of the roll-up transaction. If the combination of all partnerships proposed to be included in the roll-up transaction results in such lowest combined net cash provided by operating activities, the registrant must so note and is not required to provide separate pro forma financial statements.

If pro forma financial statements are required, they must disclose the effect of the roll-up transaction on the successor's:

- (1) balance sheet as of the later of the end of the most recent fiscal year or the latest interim period;
- (2) statement of income (with separate line items to reflect income (loss) excluding and including the roll-up expenses and payments), earnings per share amounts and ratio of earnings to fixed charges for the most recent fiscal year and the latest interim period;

(3) statement of cash flows for the most recent fiscal year and the latest interim period; and

(4) book value per share as of the later of the end of the most recent fiscal year and the latest interim period.

If the roll-up transaction is structured to permit participation by portions of partnerships, the registrant should give consideration to the effect of such participation in preparing the pro forma financial statements reflecting a partial roll-up. n182 The registrant may, however, omit any or all of the pro forma information that is not material for the exercise of prudent judgment in regard to the matter to be acted upon. n183

[xiv] Item 915. Federal Income Tax Consequences. The registrant is required to provide, under Item 915(a), a brief, clear and understandable summary of the material federal income tax consequences of the roll-up transaction and an investment in the successor. If a tax opinion has been provided, the registrant must briefly summarize the substance of such opinion, including an identification of the material consequences upon which counsel has not been asked, or is unable to opine. The registrant must also describe any differences if any of the material federal income tax consequences are not expected to be the same of investors in all partnerships.

Item 915(b) requires the registrant to state whether or not the opinion of counsel is included as an appendix to the prospectus. If the opinion is filed as an exhibit to the registration statement and not included as an appendix to the prospectus, the registrant must include a statement to the effect that, upon receipt of a written request by an investor or his representative who has been designated as such in writing, a copy of the opinion of counsel will be transmitted promptly, without charge, by the general partner or sponsor and include the name and address of the person to whom investors should make their request.

(n1)Footnote 1. Sec. Act Rel. No. 33-6578, Fed. Sec. L. Rep. (CCH) P 72,418 (1985). Form S-4 replaced Forms S-14 and S-15 for use in connection with certain business combinations.

In 1985 the Commission rescinded Form S-14 and adopted Form N-14 for registration of securities issued by management investment companies and business development companies in business combination transactions. Sec. Act Rel. No. 33-6611, Fed. Sec. L. Rep. (CCH) P 83,938 (1985).

In Sec. Act Rel. No. 33-6579, Fed. Sec. L. Rep. (CCH) P 72,419 (1985), the Commission adopted Form F-4 as the counterpart to Form S-4, for use by foreign issuers to register securities issued in certain business combinations.

The forms under the Securities Act are reprinted in the Securities Primary Law Sourcebook, Volume A, Section D (Matthew Bender).

In Service Corporation International, 17 B.N.A. Sec. Reg. & L. Rep. 2167 (Div. Corp. Fin. 1985), the staff, in response to an issuer's request for guidance on the conversion from the use of Form S-1 for shelf registration to Form S-4, took the position that it will not object if a registrant that otherwise qualifies to use of Forms S-4 uses that form for shelf registration of transactions to acquire privately owned businesses even when the transactions differ in certain technical respects from Rules 145(a) transaction described in the General Instructions to the form.

Among the mergers in which Form S-4 can be used are certain "short form mergers" under state laws (e.g. Delaware Corporation Law, § 253) pursuant to which a parent corporation can merge certain subsidiaries into the parent without any action by shareholders, or statutes similar to Delaware Corporation Law, § 258, which permit corporate action to be taken without a meeting, upon the written consent of the holders of outstanding stock having not less than the minimum number of votes necessary to authorize such action at a meeting. Prior to the adoption of Form S-4, exchange offers could be registered only on Form S-1. In permitting exchange offers to be registered on Form S-4, thus narrowing the distinction between cash offers and exchange offers, the Commission followed Recommendation 11 of the Advisory Committee on Tender Offers Report and Recommendations (July 1983). That Committee was appointed to examine the tender offer process and to make recommendations on any legislative or regulatory changes it considered necessary or appropriate. See Sec. Exch. Act Rel. (n8)Footnote 8. The following transactions are not considered to be roll-up transactions: (a) the interests of all of the investors in each of the partnerships are repurchased, recalled or exchanged in accordance with the terms of a preexisting partnership agreement for securities in an operating company specifically identified at the time of formation of the original partnership; (b) the securities to be issued or exchanged in the transaction are not required to be and are not registered under the Securities Act; (c) only issuers that are not required to register or report under Section 12 of the Exchange Act, both before and after the transaction, are involved in the transaction; (d) the transaction involves the combination or reorganization of one or more partnerships in which a non-affiliated party succeeds to the interests of a general partner or sponsor, if (i) such action is approved by at least 66 2/3% of the outstanding units of each of the participating partnerships, and (ii) as a result of the transaction, the only compensation that the existing general partners will receive is compensation to which they are entitled as expressly provided for in the preexisting partnership agreements; (e) the securities offered to investors in the transaction are securities of another entity that are reported under a transaction reporting plan declared effective before December 17, 1993 by the Commission under Section 11A of the Exchange Act if (i) the other entity was formed, and the class of securities was reported and regularly traded (minimum closing price of $2 or more for majority of the business days during the preceding three months and a six-month minimum average daily trading volume of 1,000 shares) not less than 12 months before the date on which soliciting material is mailed to investors, and (ii) the securities of that entity issued to investors in the transaction do not exceed 20% of the total outstanding securities of the entity, exclusive of any securities of such class held by or for the account of the entity or its subsidiary; (f) all of the investors' partnership securities are reported under a transaction reporting plan declared effective before December 17, 1993 by the Commission under Section 11A of the Exchange Act and such investors receive new securities or securities in another entity that are reported under a transaction reporting plan declared effective before December 17, 1993 by the Commission under Section 11A of the Exchange Act, except that securities listed on the American Stock Exchange's Emerging Company Marketplace are not included; (g) all investors are provided an option to receive or retain a security under substantially the same terms and conditions as the original issue; or (h) the Commission exempts the security, transaction or persons, in whole or in part from the definition of a roll-up transaction. (n10)Footnote 10. When two or more classes of securities are registered on Form S-4 pursuant to General Instruction H, discussed in § 7.06[1][b][i] infra, Rule 457(o) permits the registration fee to be calculated on the basis of the maximum offering price of all the securities listed. In this event, the registrant need not specify by each class information as to the amount to be registered, proposed maximum offering price by unit, and proposed maximum aggregate offering price. (n87)Footnote 87. Item 17(b)(1)-(10), Form S-4.

Financial statements submitted under Item 17(b)(7) need only be audited to the extent practicable. The balance sheets for the fiscal year before the company's most recent full fiscal year and income statements for the two years preceding the company's last full fiscal year need not be audited if they have not been previously audited. If Form S-4 is used for resales to the public by any person who is deemed to be an underwriter under Rule 145(c) regarding the securities being re-offered, the financial statements of such companies must be audited for the periods required to be presented pursuant to Rule 3-05.

If the financial statements are prepared on the basis of a comprehensive body of accounting principles other than U.S. GAAP or International Financial Reporting Standards as issued by the International Accounting Standards Board, a reconciliation to U.S. GAAP must be provided in accordance with Item 17 of Form 20-F unless a reconciliation is unavailable or not obtainable without unreasonable cost or expense. At a minimum, registrant must provide a narrative description of all material variations in accounting principles, practices and methods used in preparing the non-U.S. GAAP financial statements from those accepted in the U.S. when the financial statements are prepared on a basis other than U.S. GAAP. (n88)Footnote 88. In a consent solicitation, the registrant is required to send the prospectus to security holders 20 business days in advance of the date on which the consents may be used to effect the transaction, rather than 20 days in advance of the date on which the requisite consents may be received by the soliciting party. This procedure considers the possibility of revocation of consents and establishes a fixed date for calculation of the 20 business day period in this context. Sec. Act Rel. No. 33-6578 n.61, Fed. CHAPTER 7 Registration Forms

AUTHOR: Cristopher Greer Melinda I. Wang Jeffery C. Fang Amanda M. Burke Andrew R. Meyerson

§ 7.07 Foreign Registration Forms

[1] Form F-1--Registration of Securities of Foreign Private Issuers For Whom No Other Form is Authorized

Form F-1 contains two parts: Part I (Items 1-5), concerning information required in the prospectus, and Part II (Items 6-9), concerning information not required to be presented in the prospectus.

[a] Eligibility Standards. Form F-1 must be used for registration of securities of all foreign issuers. n1 If the registrant is a majority-owned subsidiary which does not itself meet the conditions of these eligibility requirements, it will still be deemed to have met these conditions if its parent meets the conditions and if the parent fully guarantees the securities being registered as to principal and interest. n2 Form F-1 is not to be used for an offering of asset-backed securities. General Instruction I(A), Form F-1.

A reporting issuer that has filed at least one annual report and that is current in its reporting obligation under the Exchange Act may now incorporate such information by reference to previous reports filed under the Exchange Act, pursuant to amendments to Form F-1 adopted as part of the 2005 Rules. Successor registrants can incorporate by reference if their predecessors were eligible. The following issuers will not be able to incorporate by reference into a Form F-1: and

- 1) reporting issuers who are not current in their Exchange Act reports;
- 2) issuers who are, or were or any of whose predecessors were during the past three years:
 - blank check issuers;
 - shell companies (other than business combination related shell companies); or
 - issuers for offerings of penny stock.

In addition, to enhance the availability to investors of incorporated information, the ability to incorporate by reference is conditioned on the issuer making its incorporated Exchange Act reports and other materials readily accessible on a website maintained by or for the issuer. n3

[b] Application of General Rules and Regulations. Effective as of November 4, 2002, all foreign private issuers and foreign governments are required to file registration statements electronically through EDGAR. By mandating the electronic filing of foreign issuers' securities, the Commission wants to realize the same investor benefits and efficiencies in information transmission, documentation, retrieval and analysis achieved by domestic issuers since the Commission mandated electronic filings for domestic issuers in 1993. n4 Accordingly, a foreign registrant must file the Form F-1 registration statement in electronic format via EDGAR in accordance with the rules set forth in Regulation S-T. However, those registrants that have obtained a hardship exception under Rule 201 or 202 of Regulation S-T may file the registration statement in paper. n5

The Form F-1 registration statement generally must be in the English language, as required by Rule 306 of Regulation S-T for electronic filings and Rule 403(c) of the Securities Act, generally. If the registration statement requires the inclusion of a document (as an exhibit or attachment) and that document is in a foreign language, then the registrant must provide instead either an English translation or an English summary in accordance with Rule 403(c) of the Securities Act for electronic and paper filings. The registrant may also submit a copy of the unabridged foreign language document in accordance with Rule 306(b) of Regulation S-T for electronic filings or Rule 403(c)(4) of the Securities Act for paper filings. n6

[c] Exchange Offers. If any of the securities being registered are to be offered in exchange for securities of any other issuer, the prospectus must also include the information which would be required by Item 4 of Form F-1 (Information with Respect to the Registrant and the Offering) if the securities of such other issuer were registered on Form F-1. If the other issuer is not eligible to use Form F-1, then the prospectus must include the information which would be required by Item 11 of Form S-1 (Information with Respect to the Registrant) if the securities of such other issuer were being registered on Form S-1. It must also include the information concerning the securities of the other issuer which would be called for by Item 10(A) of Form 20-F (Share Capital) and Item 10(B) of Form 20-F (Memorandum and Articles of Association) n7 or Item 12 of Form 20-F (Description of Securities Other Than Equity Securities), if such securities were being registered. n8

[d] Roll-up Transactions. If the securities being registered on Form F-1 will be issued in a roll-up transaction, the registrant should follow those requirements of S-4 that are applicable to roll-up transactions. n9

[e] Registration of Additional Securities. With respect to the registration of additional securities for an offering pursuant to Rule 462(b) under the Securities Act, the registrant may file a registration statement consisting only of the following: the facing page; a statement that the contents of the earlier registration statement, identified by file number, are incorporated by reference; required opinions and consents; the signature page; and any price-related information omitted from the earlier registration statement in reliance on Rule 430A under the Securities Act that the registrant chooses to include in the new registration statement. The information contained in a Rule 462(b) registration statement shall be deemed to be a part of the earlier registration statement as of the date of effectiveness of the Rule 462(b) registration statement. Any opinion or consent required in the Rule 462(b) registration statement may be incorporated by reference from the earlier registration statement with respect to the offering if: (i) such opinion or consent expressly provides for such incorporation; and (ii) such opinion relates to the securities registered pursuant to Rule 462(b). n10

Part I of Form F-1, concerning information required to be presented in the prospectus, contains Items 1-4.

[i] Items 1-3. Items 1-3 of Part I of Form F-1 require identical disclosure as Items 1-3 of Form S-1 except that as part of Item 1, the foreign private issuer must provide an English translation of its name on the outside front cover page of the prospectus. n11

[ii] Item 4. Information with Respect to the Registrant and the Offering.

The registrant must furnish the following information:

- (1) information required by Part I of Form 20-F;
- (2) information required by Item 18 of Form 20-F, n12 as well as any information required by Rule 3-05 and Article 11 of Regulation S-X; and
- (3) information required by Item 16F of Form 20-F for the registrant's fiscal years ending on or after December 15, 2009.

Part I of Form 20-F requires a discussion of the following subject areas:

[A] Identity of Directors, Senior Management and Advisors. This item requires the registrant to identify, to the extent applicable, the representatives and other individuals involved in the registrant's listing or registration. The registrant must provide the: (a) names, business addresses and functions of its directors and senior management; (b) names and addresses of its principal bankers and legal advisers (to the extent that the registrant has a continuing relationship with such persons), the sponsor for listing (where required by the host country regulations) and the legal advisers to the issue; and (c) names and addresses of the registrant's auditors for the preceding three years (together with their membership in a professional body). n13

[B] Offer Statistics and Expected Timetable. This item requires the registrant to provide key information regarding the conduct of any offering and the identification of important dates relating to the offering. The registrant must provide the total expected amount of the issue, including the expected issue price or the method of determining the price, and the number of securities expected to be issued. The registrant must also state, for all offerings, and separately for each group of targeted potential investors, the following information, to the extent applicable to each offering procedure:

- (1) The time period during which the offer will be open and where and to whom the purchase or subscription applications must be addressed. The registrant must describe whether the purchase period may be extended or shortened and the duration of any possible extension or early closure or shortening of such purchase period. The registrant must describe the manner in which the extension or shortening of the period would be made public. If the exact dates are unknown when the document is first filed or distributed to the public, the registrant must describe the arrangements for announcing the final or definitive date or period.
- (2) The method and time limits for paying securities and, where the payment is partial, the manner and dates on which amounts are to be paid.
- (3) The method and time limits for the delivery of equity securities (including provisional certificates, if applicable) to subscribers or purchasers.
- (4) In the case of pre-emptive purchase rights, the procedure for the exercise of any right of pre-emption, the negotiability of subscription rights and the treatment of subscription rights not exercised. n14
- (5) A full description of the manner in which results of the distribution of securities are to be made public, and when appropriate, the manner for refunding excess amounts paid by applicants (including whether interest will be paid). n15

[C] Key Information. This item requires the registrant to summarize key information about the registrant's financial condition, capitalization and risk factors. If the financial statements included in the document are restated to reflect material changes in the registrant's group structure or accounting policies, the selected financial data also must be restated.

(1) Selected financial data. The registrant must provide selected financial data for the five most recent financial years (or such shorter period that the registrant has been in operation), in the same currency as the financial statements. Selected financial data for either or both of the earliest two years of the five-year period may be omitted, however, if the registrant represents that such information cannot be provided, or cannot be provided on a restated basis, without unreasonable effort or expense. If interim period financial statements are included, the selected financial data should be updated for that interim period, which may be unaudited, provided that fact is stated. If selected financial data for interim periods is provided, comparative data from the same period in the prior financial year must also be provided, except if the registrant presents the year end balance sheet information.

The selected financial data must include items generally corresponding to the following, except that the specific line items presented should be expressed in the same manner as the corresponding line items in the registrant's financial statements. Such data must include, at a minimum: net sales or operating revenues; income (loss) from operations; income (loss) from continuing operations; net income (loss); net income (loss) from operations per share; income (loss) from continuing operations per share; total assets; net assets; capital stock (excluding long term debt and redeemable preferred stock); number of shares as adjusted to reflect changes in capital; dividends declared per share in both the currency of the financial statements and the host country currency, including the formula used for any adjustments to dividends declared; and diluted net income per share. Per share amounts must be determined in accordance with the body of accounting principles used in preparing the financial statements.

Where the financial statements provided in response to Item 8 (Financial Information) are prepared in a currency other than the currency of the host country, disclosure of the exchange rate between the financial reporting currency and the currency of the host country should be provided, using the exchange rate designated by the host country for this purpose, if any: (a) at the latest practicable date; (b) the high and low exchange rates for each month during the previous six months; and (c) for the five most recent financial years and any subsequent interim period for which financial statements are presented, the average rates for each period, calculated by using the average of the exchange rates on the last day of each month during the period. n16

(2) Capitalization and indebtedness. The registrant must provide a statement of capitalization and indebtedness, as of a date no earlier than 60 days prior to the date of the document. The statement must illustrate the registrant's capitalization on an actual basis and, if applicable, should be adjusted to reflect the sale of newly issued securities and the intended application of the net proceeds therefrom. The statement must distinguish between guaranteed and unguaranteed indebtedness as well as secured and unsecured indebtedness and must include indirect and contingent indebtedness. n17

(3) Reasons for the offer and use of proceeds. The registrant must disclose the estimated net amount of the proceeds broken down into each principal intended use thereof. If the anticipated proceeds will not be sufficient to fund all of the proposed purposes, the order of priority of such purposes should be given, as well as the amount and sources of other funds needed. If the registrant has no specific plans for the proceeds, it should discuss the principal reasons for the offering.

If the proceeds are being used directly or indirectly to acquire assets, other than in the ordinary course of business, the registrant must briefly describe the assets and their cost. If the assets will be acquired from affiliates of the registrant or their associates, the registrant must disclose the persons from whom they will be acquired and how the cost to the registrant will be determined. If the proceeds may or will be used to finance acquisitions of other businesses, the registrant must give a brief description of such businesses and information on the status of the acquisitions. If any material part of the proceeds is to be used to discharge, reduce or retire indebtedness, the registrant must describe the interest rate and maturity of such indebtedness and, for indebtedness incurred within the past year, the uses to which the proceeds of such indebtedness were put. n18

(4) Risk factors. Under a section entitled "Risk Factors," the registrant must prominently disclose risk factors that are specific to it or its industry and which make an offering speculative or one of high risk. The risk factors should be concise and clearly explain how each risk affects the issuer or the securities. n19

Registrants are encouraged, but not required, to list the risk factors in the order of their priority to the registrant. Among other things, such factors may include: the nature of the business in which it is engaged or proposes to engage; factors relating to the countries in which it operates; the absence of profitable operations in recent periods; the financial position of the registrant; the possible absence of a liquid trading market for the registrant's securities; reliance on the expertise of management; potential dilution; unusual competitive conditions; pending expiration of material patents, trademarks or contracts; or dependence on a limited number of customers or suppliers. The Risk Factors section is intended to be a summary of more detailed discussions contained elsewhere in the document. n20

It requires the registrant to provide information regarding transactions that it has entered into with affiliated persons and whether the terms of such transactions are fair to the registrant. This may require disclosure of related party transactions not required to be disclosed under the body of accounting principles used in preparing the financial statements. This item is not intended to address the thresholds at which shareholders are required, on a continuing basis, to disclose their beneficial ownership of securities.

(1) Major shareholders. To the extent that the information in this subsection is known to the registrant or can be ascertained from public filings, it should be provided as of the most recent practicable date, with references to the number of shares held (including shares beneficially owned).

(a) With respect to such major shareholders, n37 the registrant should:

(b) The registrant must disclose information as to the portion of each class of securities held in the host country and the number of record holders in the host country.

(c) To the extent known to the registrant, it must state whether it is directly or indirectly owned or controlled by another corporation(s), by any foreign government or by any other natural or legal person(s) severally or jointly, and, if so, it must give the name(s) of such controlling corporation(s), governments or other person(s) and briefly describe the nature of such control, including the amount and proportion of capital held giving a right to vote.

(d) The registrant must describe any known arrangements, the operation of which may at a subsequent date result in a change of control. n38

(2) Related party transactions. The registrant must provide the information required below for the period since the beginning of its preceding three financial years up to the date of the document, with respect to transactions or loans between it and (a) enterprises that directly or indirectly through one or more intermediaries, control or are controlled by, or are under common control with, the registrant; (b) associates n39; (c) individuals owning, directly or indirectly, an interest in the voting power of the registrant that gives them significant influence over the registrant n40 and close members of any such individual's family n41; (d) key management personnel, that is, those persons having authority and responsibility for planning, directing and controlling the activities of the registrant, including directors and senior management and close members of such individual's families; and (e) enterprises in which a substantial interest in the voting power is owned, directly or indirectly, by any person described in (c) or (d) or over which such a person is able to exercise significant influence. The information given should include the largest amount outstanding during the period covered, the amount outstanding as of the latest practicable date, the nature of the loan and the transaction in which it was incurred and the interest rate on the loan. n42

(3) Interests of experts and counsel. If any of the named experts or counselors was employed on a contingent basis, owns an amount of shares in the registrant or its subsidiaries which is material to that person, or has a material, direct or indirect economic interest in the registrant or that depends on the success of the offering, provide a brief description of the nature and terms of such contingency or interest. n43

[H] Financial Information. The purpose of this item is to specify which financial statements must be included in the document, as well as the period to be covered, the age of the financial statements and other information of a financial nature. n44

(1) Consolidated statements and other financial information. The document must contain consolidated financial statements, audited by an independent auditor and accompanied by an audit report, comprised of: (a) a balance sheet; (b) an income statement; (c) a statement showing either (i) changes in equity other than those arising from capital transactions with owners and distributions to owners or (ii) all changes in equity (including a subtotal of all non-owner items recognized directly in equity); n45 (d) a cash flow statement; (e) related notes and schedules required by the comprehensive body of accounting standards pursuant to which the financial statements are prepared; and (f) if not included in the primary financial statements, a note analyzing the changes in each caption of shareholders' equity presented in the balance sheet. n46

The document should include comparative financial statements that cover the latest three financial years, audited in accordance with a comprehensive body of auditing standards. n47

The audit report(s) must cover each of the periods for which these international disclosure standards require audited financial statements. If the auditors have refused to provide a report on the annual accounts or if the report(s) contain qualifications or disclaimers, such refusal or such qualifications or disclaimers shall be reproduced in full and the reasons given, so the host country securities regulator can determine whether or not to accept the financial statements. Include an indication of any other information in the document which has been audited by the auditors. n48

The last year of audited financial statements may not be older than 15 months at the time of the offering or listing; provided, however, that in the case of the registrant's initial public offering, the audited financial statements also shall be as of a date not older than 12 months at the time the document is filed. In such cases, the audited financial statements may cover a period of less than a full year. n49

If the document is dated more than nine months after the end of the last audited financial year, it should contain consolidated interim financial statements, which may be unaudited (in which case that fact should be stated), covering at least the first six months of the financial year. The interim financial statements should include a balance sheet, income statement, cash flow statement and a statement showing either (i) changes in equity other than those arising from capital transactions with owners and distributions to owners or (ii) all changes in equity (including a subtotal of all non-owner items recognized directly in equity). Each of these statements may be in condensed form as long as it contains the major line items from the latest audited financial statements and includes the major components of assets, liabilities and equity (in the case of the balance sheet); income and expenses (in the case of the income statement); and the major subtotals of cash flows (in the case of cash flow statements). The interim financial statements should include comparative statements for the same period in the prior financial year, except that the requirement for comparative balance sheet information may be satisfied by presenting the year end balance sheet. n50 If not included in the primary financial statements, a note should be provided analyzing the changes in each caption of shareholders' equity presented in the balance sheet. The interim financial statements should include selected note disclosures that will provide an explanation of events and changes that are significant to an understanding of the changes in financial position and performance of the enterprise since the last annual reporting date. n51 If, at the date of the document, the registrant has published interim financial information that covers a more current period than those otherwise required by this standard, the more current interim financial information must be included in the document. Companies are encouraged, but not required, to have any interim financial statements in the document reviewed by an independent auditor. If such a review has been performed and is referred to in the document, a copy of the auditor's interim review report must be provided in the document. n52

If the amount of export sales constitutes a significant portion of the company's total sales volume, the registrant must provide the total amount of export sales and the percent and amount of export sales in the total amount of sales volume. n53

The registrant must provide information on any legal or arbitration proceedings, including those relating to bankruptcy, receivership or similar proceedings and those involving any third party, which may have, or have had in the recent past, significant effects on the registrant's financial position or profitability. This includes governmental proceedings pending or known to be contemplated. n54

The registrant must describe its policy on dividend distributions. n55

(2) Significant changes. The registrant must disclose whether or not any significant change has occurred since the date of the annual financial statements, and/or since the date of the most recent interim financial statements, if any, included in the document.

[I] The Offer and Listing. This item requires the registrant to provide information regarding the offer or listing of securities, the plan for distribution of the securities and related matters.

(1) Offer and listing details.

(a) The registrant must indicate the expected price at which the securities will be offered or the method of determining the price and the amount of any expenses specifically charged to the subscriber or purchaser.

(b) If there is not an established market for the securities, the registrant must disclose information regarding the manner of determination of the offering price as well as of the exercise price of warrants and the conversion price of convertible securities, including who established the price or who is formally responsible for the determination of the price, the various factors considered in such determination and the parameters or elements used as a basis for establishing the price.

(c) If the registrant's shareholders have pre-emptive purchase rights and where the exercise of the right of pre-emption of shareholders is restricted or withdrawn, the registrant shall indicate the basis for the issue price if the issue is for cash, together with the reasons for such restriction or withdrawal and the beneficiaries of such restriction or withdrawal if intended to benefit specific persons.

(d) Information regarding the price history of the stock to be offered or listed must be disclosed as follows:

(i) the annual high and low market prices for the five most recent full financial years;

(ii) the high and low market prices for each full financial quarter for the two most recent full financial years and any subsequent period;

(iii) the high and low market prices for each month for the most recent six months; and

(iv) for pre-emptive issues, the market prices for the first trading day in the most recent six months, for the last trading day before the announcement of the offering and (if different) for the latest practicable date prior to publication of the document.

Information must be given with respect to the market price in the host market and the principal trading market outside the host market. If significant trading suspensions occurred in the prior three years, they shall be disclosed. If the securities are not regularly traded in an organized market, information must be given about any lack of liquidity.

(e) The registrant must state the type and class of the securities being offered or listed, whether the shares are registered shares or bearer shares, the number of shares to be issued and to be made available to the market for each kind of share, the nominal par or equivalent value on a per share basis and, where applicable, a statement of the minimum offer price. Any coupons attached must be disclosed. The registrant must also disclose the arrangements for transfer and any restrictions on the free transferability of the shares.

(f) If the rights evidenced by the securities being offered or listed are or may be materially limited or qualified by the rights evidenced by any other class of securities or by the provisions of any contract or other documents, the registrant must include information regarding such limitation or qualification and its effect on the rights evidenced by the securities to be listed or offered.

(g) With respect to securities other than common or ordinary shares to be listed or offered, the registrant must outline briefly the rights evidenced thereby.

(i) If subscription warrants or rights are to be listed or offered, the registrant must state: the title and amount of securities called for; the amount of warrants or rights outstanding; provisions for changes to or adjustments in the exercise price; the period during which and the price at which the warrants or rights are exercisable; and any other material terms of such warrants or rights.

(ii) Where convertible securities or stock purchase warrants to be listed or offered are subject to redemption or call, the description of the conversion terms of the securities or material terms of the warrants shall include whether the right to convert or purchase the securities will be forfeited unless it is exercised before the date specified in the notice of redemption or call; the expiration or termination date of the warrants; the kind, frequency and timing of notice of the redemption or call, including where the notice will be published; and, in the case of bearer securities, that investors are responsible for making arrangements to prevent loss of the right to convert or purchase in the event of redemption or call. n56

(2) Plan of distribution. The registrant must:

(a) List the names and addresses of the entities underwriting or guaranteeing the offering. n57

(b) To the extent known, indicate whether major shareholders, directors or members of its management, supervisory or administrative bodies intend to subscribe in the offering, or whether any person intends to subscribe for more than 5% of the offering.

(c) Identify any group of targeted potential investors to whom the securities are offered. If the offering is being made simultaneously in the markets of two or more countries and if a tranche has been or is being reserved for certain of these, the registrant must indicate any such tranche.

(d) If securities are reserved for allocation to any group of targeted investors, including, for example, offerings to existing shareholders, directors, or employees and past employees of the company or its subsidiaries, provide details of these and any other preferential allocation arrangements.

(e) Indicate whether the amount of the offering could be increased, as by the exercise of an underwriter's over-allotment option or "green-shoe," and by how much.

(f) Indicate the amount, and outline briefly the plan of distribution, of any securities that are to be offered otherwise than through underwriters. If the securities are to be offered through the selling efforts of brokers or dealers, the registrant must describe the plan of distribution and the terms of any agreement or understanding with such entities. If known, the registrant must identify the broker(s) or dealer(s) that will participate in the offering and state the amount to be offered through each.

(g) If the securities are to be offered in connection with the writing of exchange-traded call options, the registrant must describe briefly such transactions.

(h) If simultaneously or almost simultaneously with the creation of shares for which admission to official listing is being sought, shares of the same class are described for or placed privately or if shares of other classes are created for public or private placing, detail the nature of such operations and of the number and characteristics of the shares to which they relate.

(i) Unless otherwise described under Item 10(c) of Form 20-F (Material contracts), describe the features of the underwriting relationship together with the amount of securities being underwritten by each underwriter in privity of contract with the registrant or selling shareholders. The foregoing information should include a statement as to whether the underwriters are or will be committed to take and to pay for all of the securities if any are taken, or whether it is an agency or the type of "best efforts" arrangement under which the underwriters are required to take and to pay for only such securities as they may sell to the public.

(j) If any underwriter or other financial adviser has a material relationship with the registrant, it must describe the nature and terms of such relationship. n58

(3) Markets. The registrant must disclose all stock exchanges and other regulated markets on which the securities to be offered or listed are traded. When an application for admission to any exchange and/or regulated market is being or will be sought, this must be mentioned without creating the impression that the listing necessarily will be approved. If known, the dates on which the shares will be listed and dealt in should be given. n59

(4) Selling shareholders. The registrant must provide the following information:

(a) The name and address of the person or entity offering to sell the shares and the nature of any position, office or other material relationship that the selling shareholder has had within the past three years with the registrant or any of its predecessors or affiliates.

(b) The number and class of securities being offered by each of the selling shareholders and the percentage of the existing equity capital. The information contained in such a registration statement is deemed to be a part of the earlier registration statement as of the date of effectiveness of the later registration statement. Any opinion or consent required in the later registration statement may be incorporated by reference from the earlier registration statement with respect to the offering, if: (i) such opinion or consent expressly provides for such incorporation; and (ii) such opinion relates to securities registered pursuant to Rule 462(b). n109

(2) Registration of Additional Securities or Classes of Securities or Additional Registrants After Effectiveness in Automatic Shelf Registration. A registrant who qualifies as a WSKI may register additional securities or classes of securities by filing a post-effective amendment to the effective registration statement. n110 The post-effective amendment must consist of the facing page; the disclosure updating the registration statement to reflect the additional securities, additional classes of securities or additional registrants; any required opinions and consents; and the signature page. Required information, consents or opinions may be included in the prospectus and the registration statement through a post-effective amendment or may be provided through a document incorporated or deemed incorporated by reference into the registration statement (and the prospectus that is part of the registration statement). Alternatively, the information required to update the registration statement may be contained in a prospectus filed pursuant to Rule 424(b), and it will be deemed part of the registration statement and prospectus. n111 The post-effective amendment is effective immediately. n112

[g] The Prospectus.

Part I of Form F-3, concerning information required to be presented in the prospectus, contains Items 1-7.

[i] Items 1-3. Items 1-3 of Part I of Form F-2 require identical disclosure as Items 1-3 of Form F-1.

[ii] Item 4. Information About the Offering. The registrant is required only to furnish the same information from Part I of Form 20-F as required by Item 4(a) of Form F-1:

(1) Item 2 (Offer Statistics and Exposed Timetable); n114 Item 3(B) (Capitalization and Indebtedness); n115

(2) Item 3(C) (Reasons for the Offer and Use of Proceeds); n116 Item 7(C) (Interests of Experts and Counsel); n117

(3) Item 9 (The Offer and Listing); n118

(4) Item 10 (Additional Information); n119 and Item 12 (Description of Securities Other Than Equity Securities). n120

The registrant does not have to repeat in the prospectus any information called for by these items if the same information is contained in a report being incorporated by reference into the registration statement. n121

[iii] Item 5. Material Changes. The registrant must describe any and all material changes in the registrant's affairs that have occurred since the end of the latest fiscal year for which certified financial statements are included in the Form F-3 in accordance with Item 6 and that have not been described in a report on Form 6-K, Form 10-Q or Form 8-K filed under the Exchange Act and incorporated by reference pursuant to Item 6. n122

The registrant must include in the prospectus, if not included in documents incorporated by reference or a prospectus previously filed pursuant to Rule 424(b) or (c) under the Securities Act or, where no prospectus was required to be filed pursuant to Rule 424(b), the prospectus included in the registration statement at effectiveness, or a Form 6-K filed during either of the two preceding years: (i) information required by Rule 3-05 and Article 11 of Regulation S-X where the registrant has effected or is about to effect a transaction for which such information is required; (ii) restated financial statements if there has been a change in accounting principles or a correction of an error where such change or correction requires a material retroactive restatement of financial statements; (iii) restated financial statements where one or more business combinations of entities under common control have been consummated subsequent to the most recent fiscal year and the acquired business, considered in the aggregate, are significant under Rule 11-01(b); or (iv) any financial information required because of a material disposition of assets outside the normal course of business.

If the financial statements included in this registration statement in accordance with Item 6 are not sufficiently current to comply with the requirements of Item 8(A) of Form 20-F, financial statements necessary to comply with that Item shall be presented directly in the prospectus, through incorporation by reference of a Form 6-K identified in the prospectus as containing such financial statements, or through incorporation by reference of an amended Form 20-F, Form 40-F or Form 10-K, in which case the prospectus shall disclose that the Form 20-F, Form 40-F or Form 10-K has been so amended. n123

[iv] Item 6. Incorporation of Certain Information by Reference. The registrant must when registering securities pursuant to Form F-3, incorporate by reference its latest filed Form 20-F, Form 40-F or Form 10-K and any report on Form 10-Q or Form 8-K filed since the end of the fiscal year covered by such annual report. The prospectus must state that the Form 20-F, Form 40-F or Form 10-K is amended if the registrant's latest filing on Form 20-F, Form 40-F or Form 10-K is amended to include the information specified in Item 18 of Form 20-F. n124 If capital stock is to be registered and securities of the same class are registered under Section 12 of the Exchange Act, the description of the class of securities which is contained in a registration statement filed under the Exchange Act must also be incorporated by reference. n125

An Interactive Data File is required for a periodic report on Form 10-Q, Form 20-F or Form 40-F; a registration statement under the Securities Act, if the registration statement contains a price or price range and a Form 8-K where the Form 8-K contains audited annual financial statements that are a revised version of financial statements previously filed with the Commission and have been revised pursuant to applicable accounting standards to reflect the effects of certain subsequent events, including a discontinued operation, a change in reportable segments or a change in accounting principle, and, in such case, the Interactive Data File would be required only as to such revised financial statements regardless whether the Form 8-K contains other financial statements. n126

The prospectus must also state that all subsequent filings on Form 20-F, 40-F, 10-K, 10-Q or 8-K, prior to the termination of the offering, shall be deemed to be incorporated by reference into the prospectus.

The registrant may incorporate by reference any Form 6-K meeting the requirements of Form F-3. If the registrant intends to incorporate any Form 6-K subsequently submitted to the SEC, the prospectus must state that the registrant may incorporate such Form 6-K by identifying in such form that they are being incorporated by reference into the Form F-3.

The registrant must state that it will provide to each person, including any beneficial owner, to whom a prospectus is delivered, a copy of any or all of the information that has been incorporated by reference in the prospectus but not delivered with the prospectus, that the registrant will provide this information upon written or oral request, that the registrant will provide this information at no cost to the requester and the name, address and telephone number to which the request for this information must be made. n127

If the registrant sends any information that is incorporated by reference in the prospectus to security holders, it must also send any exhibits that are specifically incorporated by reference in that information. n128 The registrant must identify the reports and other information that it will file with the Commission and state that the public may read and copy any material filed with the Commission at the Commission's Public Reference Room, located at 100 F Street, N.E., Washington, D.C. 20549, and that information concerning the public reading room may be obtained by calling the Commission at 1-800-SEC-0330. Electronic filers must state that the Commission maintains an Internet site at www.sec.gov, which contains reports, proxy and other information statements, and other information regarding electronic filers. Registrants are encouraged to give their Internet address, if available.

Any information required in the prospectus in response to Item 3 through Item 5 may be included by the registrant through documents filed pursuant to the Exchange Act that are incorporated or deemed incorporated by reference into the prospectus that is part of the registration statement.

[v] Item 7. Disclosure of Commission Position on Indemnification for Securities Act Liabilities. This item requires the registrant to furnish information identical to that required by Item 13 of Form S-3. n129

[h] Information Included in the Registration Statement but Not Required in the Prospectus.

Part II of Form F-3, concerning information not required to be presented in the prospectus, contains Items 8-10.

[i] Items 8-10. These items require the registrant to furnish information identical to that required by Items 15-17 of Form S-3, n130 except that:

(1) Item 9 of Form F-3 does not require the registrant to provide a statement setting forth in reasonable detail the computation of any ratio of earnings to fixed charges, any ratio of earnings to combined fixed charges and preferred stock dividends or any other ratios which appear in the registration statement or report; and n131

(2) Item 10 of Form F-3 requires the registration statement to contain undertakings by the registrant (i) to deliver or cause to be delivered with the prospectus, to each person to which the prospectus is sent, the registrant's latest filing on Form 20-F, Form 40-F or Form 10-K, and any filing on Form 10-Q, Form 8-K or Form 6-K incorporated by reference into the prospectus; and (ii) if the securities are being registered pursuant to Rule 415 under the Securities Act, to file a post-effective amendment to the registration statement to include any financial statements required by Item 8(A) of Form 20-F at the start of any delayed offering or throughout a continuous offering. However, financial statements and information otherwise required by Section 10(a)(3) of the Securities Act do not have to be furnished, provided that the registrant includes in the prospectus by means of a post-effective amendment, financial statements required by Item 8(A) of Form 20-F and any other information necessary to ensure that all other information in the prospectus is at least as current as the date of those financial statements. Moreover, with respect to registration statements on Form F-3, a post-effective amendment need not be filed to include financial statements and information required by Section 10(a)(3) of the Securities Act or Article 3-19 of Regulation S-X if such financial statements and information are contained in periodic reports filed with or furnished to the SEC by the registrant pursuant to Section 13 or Section 15(d) of the Exchange Act that are incorporated by reference into the Form F-3. n132

The same undertakings concerning securities being registered pursuant to Rule 415 for the registration of securities on a delayed or continuous basis ("shelf" registration, both "automatic" and "non-automatic") as called for by Item 512(a) of Regulation S-K to be furnished in Form S-3 must also be furnished in Form F-3. n133

[i] Signatures. The requirements as to signatures on Form F-3 and Instructions (1) and (2) thereto are similar to the signature requirements of Form S-3, n134 except that the registration statement must be signed by the registrant's authorized representative in the United States. n135

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Rule 405 under the Securities Act defines a "foreign private issuer" as any foreign issuer other than a foreign government except an issuer meeting the following conditions: (i) more than 50% of the outstanding voting securities of such issuer are directly or indirectly owned of record by residents of the United States; and (ii) any of the following (a) a majority of the executive officers or directors are United States residents or citizens, (b) more than 50% of the issuer's assets are located in the United States or (c) the business of the issuer is administered principally in the United States. For a new registrant with the Commission, the determination of whether "foreign private issuer" status applies must be made within 30 days prior to the issuer's filing of an initial registration statement. Once an issuer qualifies as a "foreign private issuer" it will maintain this status until it fails to qualify at the end of its most recently completed second fiscal quarter. A "foreign issuer" is defined as any issuer which is a foreign government, a national of any foreign country or a corporation or other organization incorporated or organized under the laws of any foreign country. Rule 405, Regulation C. The rules under the Securities Act are reprinted in the Securities Primary Law Sourcebook, Volume A, Section C (Matthew Bender).

The ownership test for purposes of Rule 405 is based on the method of calculation used in Rule 12g3-2(a) under the Exchange Act. That rule follows the definition of "securities held of record" in Rule 12g5-1, but requires the issuer to "look through" the record ownership of brokers, dealers, banks or nominees holding securities for the accounts of their customers to determine the residency of those customers. To alleviate the burden of investigation on foreign issuers, the Commission permits them to limit their inquiry to brokers, dealers, banks or nominees located in the United States, the jurisdiction of incorporation of the issuer and the jurisdiction that is the primary trading market for the issuer's voting securities, if different from the jurisdiction of incorporation.

(n2)Footnote 2. General Instruction I(B), Form F-1. In such an instance the parent-guarantor is the issuer of a separate security consisting of the guarantee which must be concurrently registered but may be registered on the same registration statement as are the guaranteed securities. Both the parent-guarantor and the subsidiary shall each disclose the information required by Form F-1 as if each were the only registrant, except that if the subsidiary will not be eligible to file annual reports on Form 20-F after the effective date of the registration statement, then it shall disclose the information specified in Form S-1. See Rule 3-10 of Regulation S-T, 17 C.F.R. § 210.3-10, for the required financial statements. Id. The forms under the Securities Act are reprinted in the Securities Primary Law Sourcebook, Volume A, Section D (Matthew Bender).

(n3)Footnote 3. General Instruction VI, Form F-1. This was previously the case for Form F-2, which was eliminated by the 2005 Rules. For specific eligibility requirements, see the text of General Instruction VI.

(n5)Footnote 5. The Commission expects to grant such exemptions infrequently. Id.

(n6)Footnote 6. General Instruction II(D). Regulation C, 17 C.F.R. § 230.400 et seq., contains the general requirements regarding the preparation and filing of registration statements. General Instruction II(A), Form F-1. The registrant is also directed to Regulation S-K and Form 20-F, which govern the requirements applicable to the content of registration statements under the Securities Act. Where Form F-1 directs the registrant to furnish information required by Regulation S-K or Form 20-F and the item so provides, information need only be furnished to the extent appropriate. General Instruction II(B), Form F-1.

(n7)Footnote 7. Form 20-F is the annual report required to be filed under the Exchange Act by foreign private issuers.

(n9)Footnote 9. General Instruction IV, Form F-1.

(n11)Footnote 11. Item 501(b)(1) of Regulation S-K. See § 7.03[2][a]-[c] supra.

(n12)Footnote 12. For the registrant's fiscal years ending before December 15, 2011, the information required by Item 17 of Form 20-F may be furnished in lieu of the information specified by Item 18 thereof if the securities being registered are non-convertible securities that are "investment grade securities," or the only securities to be registered are to be offered: (a) upon the exercise of outstanding rights granted by the issuer of the securities to be offered, if such rights are granted on a pro rata basis to all existing security holders of the class of securities to which the rights attach and there is no standby underwriting in the United States or similar arrangement; (b) pursuant to a dividend or interest reinvestment plan; or (c) upon the conversion of outstanding convertible securities or upon the exercise of outstanding transferable warrants issued by the issuer of the securities to be offered, or by an affiliate of such issuer. Items 17 and 18 each deal with the furnishing of financial statements. Form 20-F, Part III.

A non-convertible security is an investment grade security if, at the time of sale, at least one nationally recognized statistical rating organization (as that term is used in Rule 15c3-1(c)(2)(vi)(F) under the Exchange Act) has rated the security in one of its generic rating categories (within which there may be sub-categories or gradations indicating relative standing) that signify investment grade.

In July 2008, the SEC proposed amendments that would permit foreign private issuers to comply under Item 17 of Form 20-F in a registration statement or private offering document if the issuer has issued, as of a date 60 days prior to the filing of the registration statement, for cash more than $1 billion in non-convertible securities, other than common equity, through registered primary offerings over the prior three years. Security Ratings, Securities Act Release No. 8940, Securities Exchange Act Release No. 58071 (July 1, 2008).

(n13)Footnote 13. Item 1(A)-(C), Form 20-F. The registrant has to provide the information in subsection (b) if it is required to disclose the information in a jurisdiction outside the United States. These persons will not be considered "experts" or "sellers" under the Securities Act solely due to the fact that they are named in response to subsection (b). Instructions, Item 1(B), Form 20-F.

(n15)Footnote 15. Item 2(A)-(B), Form 20-F.

(n16)Footnote 16. Item 3(A), Form 20-F. Throughout Form 20-F, the terms "financial year" and "fiscal year" have the same meaning. The term "fiscal year" is defined in Rule 405 under the Securities Act and Rule 12b-2 under the Exchange Act. Instruction 2, Item 3, Form 20-F. Selected financial data for a predecessor may be required. See the definition of "predecessor," as defined under Rule 12b-2 under the Exchange Act and Rule 405 under the Securities Act. Instruction 1, Item 3(A), Form 20-F.

The registrant may present the selected financial data on the basis of the accounting principles used in its primary financial statements. If, however, the registrant uses a basis of accounting other than International Financial Reporting Standards ("IFRS") as issued by the International Accounting Standards Board (the "IASB"), the registrant must also reconcile the data to U.S. GAAP and Regulation S-X, pursuant to Items 17 or 18 of Form 20-F. In that case, the registrant need only reconcile the information to U.S. GAAP for (i) those periods for which it was required to reconcile the primary annual financial statements in a filing under the Securities Act or the Exchange Act and (ii) any interim periods. Instruction 2, Item 3(A), Form 20-F.

If the registrant is unable to provide selected financial data for the earliest two years of the five-year period, it must submit the required representation before or at the time of filing. The registrant must also disclose that such data has been omitted and provide an explanation for the omission. Id.

(n17)Footnote 17. Item 3(B), Form 20-F. If the registrant is including the capitalization table in a prospectus supplement for a shelf offering registered on Form F-3, the amounts shown in the table may be as of the date of the most recent balance sheet filed as part of the registration statement, if the information in the table is updated to reflect securities issued up to 60 days prior to the date of the supplement. Instruction 1, Item 3(B), Form 20-F.

If the registrant is not selling new securities in a firm commitment underwritten offering or an "all or none" best efforts offering, it must reflect the capitalization "as adjusted" for the net proceeds of the offering in the following ways:

(i) In a best efforts "minimum/maximum" offering, the registrant must reflect both the minimum and maximum proceeds; and

(ii) In a rights offering or an offering of securities upon the exercise of outstanding warrants, the registrant must reflect the proceeds only to the extent the exercise of the rights or outstanding warrants is likely in view of the current market price. Instruction 2, Item 3(B), Form 20-F.

(n18)Footnote 18. Item 3(C), Form 20-F.

(n19)Footnote 19. Instruction, Item 3(D), Form 20-F.

(n21)Footnote 21. Item 4(A), Form 20-F.

(n22)Footnote 22. Item 4(B), Form 20-F. The reference in this subsection to "the body of accounting principles used in preparing the financial statements" means the accounting principles used in preparing the primary financial statements, not the accounting principles used only to prepare the U.S. GAAP reconciliation. Instruction 1, Item 4(B), Form 20-F.

(n24)Footnote 24. Item 4(C), Form 20-F.

(n25)Footnote 25. Item 4(D), Form 20-F. If oil and gas operations are material to the registrant of the registrant's subsidiaries' business operations or financial position, the registrant must provide the information specified in Subpart 1200 of Regulation S-K. Instruction 2, Item 4, Form 20-F. In the case of an extractive enterprise other than an oil and gas producing operation the registrant must provide material information about production, reserves, locations, developments and the nature of its interest. If individual properties are of major significance, it must provide more detailed information about those properties and use maps to disclose information about their location. Instruction 1(a), Item 4(D), Form 20-F.

If the registrant is giving reserve estimates, it must consult the staff of the Office of International Corporate Finance of the Division of Corporation Finance. That office may request that the registrant provide a copy of the full report of the engineer or other expert who estimated the reserves. See Rule 418 of Regulation C, 17 C.F.R. § 230.418, and Rule 12b-4 of Regulation 12B, 17 C.F.R. § 240.12b-4, for information about submitting supplemental information to the Commission and requesting its return. In publicly filed documents, the registrant must not disclose the estimates of reserves unless the reserves are proved or provable. The registrant is not permitted to give estimated values of those reserves, unless mandated by foreign law. If these types of estimates have already been provided to any person that is offering to acquire the registrant, however, the estimates may be included in documents relating to the acquisition. If the registrant is representing that the estimates of reserves, or any estimated valuation of those reserves, are based on estimates prepared or reviewed by independent consultants, it must name the consultants. Instruction 1(b), Item 4(D), Form 20-F.

If oil and gas operations are material to the registrant's or one of its subsidiaries' business operations or financial position, it must provide the information specified in Subpart 1200 of Regulation S-K and Appendix A to Item 4(D), attached to the end of Form 20-F. Instruction 1(c), Item 4(D), Form 20-F.

The Company is also required to furnish the information specified in any industry guide listed in subpart 229.800 of Regulation S-K that applies to it. Instruction, Item 4, Form 20-F. The industry guides applicable to registration statements include: (a) Guide 2: "Disclosure of Oil and Gas Operations"; and (b) Guide 7: "Description of Property by Issuers Engaged or to be Engaged in Significant Mining Operations." 17 C.F.R. § 229.802; Exchange Act Industry Guides 1-7.

However, if the registrant furnishes the information in Appendix A to Item 4(D), then it does not have to provide the information in Guide 2. Instruction, Item 4, Form 20-F. Appendix A to Item 4(D) requires the registrant to furnish the following information under appropriate captions (in tabular form if practicable, and with cross references, where applicable, to related information disclosed in the financial statements):

(a) As of the end of each of the last three fiscal years (but not for fiscal years ending prior to December 31, 1979), estimated net quantities of: (i) proved oil and gas reserves; (ii) proved developed oil and gas reserves; and (iii) oil and gas reserves applicable to long-term supply or similar agreements with foreign governments or authorities in which the registrant acts as producer; and

(b) Net quantities of oil (including condensate and natural gas liquids) and of gas produced for each of the last three fiscal years (but not for fiscal years ending prior to December 31, 1979) and the net quantities of each received during each of these years applicable to long-term supply or similar agreements with foreign governments or authorities in which the registrant acts as producer by areas no larger than the geographic areas used for estimated reserves in paragraph (a) above.

(n26)Footnote 26. Item 5, Form 20-F. The registrant should refer to the Commission's interpretive release, Sec. Act Rel. No. 33-6835 (May 18, 1989), for guidance in preparing this discussion and analysis of the registrant's financial condition and results of operations. Instruction 1, Item 5, Form 20-F.

The discussion should focus on the primary financial statements presented in the document. The registrant should refer to the reconciliation to U.S. GAAP, if any, and discuss any aspects of the differences between foreign and U.S. GAAP that are not otherwise discussed in the reconciliation and that are necessary for an understanding of the financial statements as a whole. Instruction 2, Item 5, Form 20-F.

The registrant is encouraged, but not required, to supply forward-looking information, which is covered expressly by the safe harbor provisions of Section 27A of the Securities Act and Section 27A of the Exchange Act, but which differs from presently known data, which will have an impact on future operating results, such as known future increases in costs of labor or materials. If material, presently known data must be disclosed. Instruction 3, Item 5, Form 20-F.

(n27)Footnote 27. The registrant must provide the information required with respect to hyperinflation if hyperinflation has occurred in any of the periods for which it is required to provide audited financial statements or unaudited interim financial statements. See Rule 3-20(c) of Regulation S-X for a discussion of cumulative inflation rates that trigger this requirement.

(n29)Footnote 29. Item 5(B), Form 20-F.

(n31)Footnote 31. Item 6(A), Form 20-F.

(n32)Footnote 32. The term "plan" is used very broadly and includes any type of arrangement for compensation, even if the terms of the plan are not contained in a formal document. Instruction, Item 6(C), Form 20-F.

(n33)Footnote 33. Item 6(B), Form 20-F.

(n34)Footnote 34. Item 6(C), Form 20-F.

(n35)Footnote 35. If any of the listed persons beneficially owns less than one percent of the class of shares and that person's individual share ownership previously has not been disclosed to shareholders or otherwise made public, the registrant may indicate by an asterisk and explanatory footnote or similar means, that the person beneficially owns less than one percent of the class. The registrant may provide such explanation instead of providing that person's individual share ownership. Instruction, Item 6(E), Form 20-F.

(n36)Footnote 36. Item 6(E), Form 20-F.

(n37)Footnote 37. The major shareholders of a company are those shareholders that are the beneficial owners of 5% or more of each class of the voting securities (unless the registrant is required to disclose a lesser percentage in its home country, in which case that lesser percentage applies).

(n38)Footnote 38. Item 7(A), Form 20-F.

(n39)Footnote 39. An associate is an unconsolidated enterprise in which the registrant has a significant influence or which has significant influence over the registrant.

(n40)Footnote 40. Significant influence over an enterprise is the power to participate in the financial and operating policy decisions of the enterprise but is less than control over those policies. Shareholders beneficially owning a 10% interest in the voting power of the registrant are presumed to have a significant influence on the registrant.

(n41)Footnote 41. Close members of an individual's family are those who may be expected to influence, or be influenced by, that person in their dealings with the registrant.

(n42)Footnote 42. Item 7(B), Form 20-F. If the lender is a bank, savings and loan association or broker dealer extending credit under Federal Reserve Regulation T, and the loans are not disclosed as nonaccrual, past due, restructured or potential problems under Exchange Act Industry Guide 3, the registrant's response may consist of a statement, if true, that the loans in question (A) were made in the ordinary course of business, (B) were made on substantially the same terms, including interest rates and collateral, as those prevailing at the time for comparable transactions with other persons, and (C) did not involve more than the normal risk of collectibility or present other unfavorable features. Instruction 2, Item 7(B), Form 20-F.

(n43)Footnote 43. Accountants who provide a report on financial statements that are presented or incorporated by reference in a registration statement should note Article 2 of Regulation S-X. That Article contains the Commission's requirements for qualifications and reports of accountants. Instruction, Item 7(C), Form 20-F.

(n44)Footnote 44. This item refers to the registrant, but note that under Rules 3-05, 3-09, 3-10, 3-14 and 3-16 of Regulation S-X the registrant also may have to provide financial statements or financial information for entities other than the issuer. In some cases, the registrant may have to provide financial statements for a predecessor. See the definition of "predecessor" in Exchange Act Rule 12b-2 and Securities Act Rule 405. Instruction 1, Item 8, Form 20-F.

(n45)Footnote 45. The consolidated financial statements must report the net income attributable to the parent (or controlling interest) and the net income attributable to the noncontrolling interest. Item 5(b)(1)(iii), Regulation S-K.

(n46)Footnote 46. Item 8(A)(1), Form 20-F.

(n47)Footnote 47. Item 8(A)(2), Form 20-F. The registrant does not have to provide a balance sheet for the earliest of the specified three-year period if that balance sheet is not required by a jurisdiction outside the United States. The financial statements must be audited in accordance with U.S. GAAP, and the auditor must comply with the United States and Commission standards for auditor independence. See Article 2 of Regulation S-X with respect to the requirements for qualifications and reports of accountants.

In initial registration statements, if the presented financial statements are prepared in accordance with U.S. GAAP, the earliest of the three years may be omitted if that information has not previously been included in a filing made under the Securities Act or the Exchange Act. Selected financial data presented pursuant to Item 3(A) of Form 20-F for the full five fiscal years is still required. Instructions 1-3, Item 8(A)(2), Form 20-F.

(n48)Footnote 48. Item 8(A)(3), Form 20-F. The circumstances in which the Commission would accept an audit report containing a disclaimer or qualification are extremely limited. If this type of report is intended to be submitted, the Commission recommends that the registrant contact the staff of the Office of Chief Accountant in the Division of Corporation Finance in advance of filing the document. Instruction, Item 8(A)(3), Form 20-F.

(n49)Footnote 49. Item 8(A)(4), Form 20-F. For offerings of securities (a) upon the exercise of outstanding rights granted by the issuer of the securities to be offered, if the rights are granted pro rata to all existing security holders of the class of securities to which the rights attach; (b) pursuant to a dividend or interest reinvestment plan; or (c) upon the conversion of outstanding convertible securities or upon the exercise of outstanding transferable warrants issued by the issuer of the securities to be offered, or by an affiliate of that issuer, the 15-month period referred to above is extended to 18 months. The provisions of this paragraph are not applicable if securities are to be offered or sold in a standby underwriting in the United States or similar arrangement. Instruction 2, Item 8, Form 20-F.

In calculating the 15-month requirement for the age of financial statements, the registrant must determine the age based on the period of time that has elapsed between the date of the balance sheet and "the time of the offering or listing," which means the time the registration statement is declared effective. Instruction 1, Item 8(A)(4), Form 20-F.

The additional requirement that financial statements be no older than 12 months at the date of filing applies only in those limited cases where a nonpublic company is registering its initial public offering of securities. The Commission will waive this requirement in cases where the registrant is able to represent that it is not required to comply with this requirement and that compliance is impracticable or involves undue hardship. This representation must be filed as an exhibit to the registration statement. If the 12-month requirement is waived, the registrant must comply with the specified 15-month requirement in this item. Instruction 2, Item 8(A)(4), Form 20-F.

(n50)Footnote 50. This sentence explains that the required interim financial statements may be in condensed form using major line items from the latest audited financial statements. To determine which major line items must be included in condensed interim information, see Rules 10-01(a)(1) through (7). Instruction 2, Item 8(A)(5), Form 20-F. Additionally, a registrant that files interim period financial statements under this item is not required to comply with Article 10 of Regulation S-X so long as the registrant: (a) prepares its annual financial statements in accordance with IFRS as issued by the IASB, (b) prepares its interim period financial statements in compliance with IAS 34 "Interim Financial Reporting," and (c) explicitly states its compliance with IAS 34 in the notes to the interim financial statements. Instruction 4, Item 8(A)(5), Form 20-F.

(n51)Footnote 51. This sentence requires the registrant to include interim financial information that has been published, if that information covers a more current period than the statements otherwise required by this Item 8 (Financial Information). The requirement covers any publication of financial information that includes, at a minimum, revenue and income information, even if that information is not published as part of a complete set of financial statements. Whenever more current interim financial information is provided in response to this requirement, the registrant must:

(a) Describe any ways in which the accounting principles, practices and methods used in preparing that interim financial information vary materially from the principles, practices and methods accepted in the United States, and

(b) Quantify any material variations, unless they already are quantified because they occur in other financial statements included in the document. Instruction 3, Item 8(A)(5), Form 20-F. A registrant is not required to provide the information described in (a) and (b) in this footnote if it files financial information and prepares its annual financial statements in accordance with IFRS as issued by the IASB.

(n52)Footnote 52. Item 8(A)(5), Form 20-F. For offerings of securities (a) upon the exercise of outstanding rights granted by the issuer of the securities to be offered, if the rights are granted pro rata to all existing security holders of the class of securities to which the rights attach; (b) pursuant to a dividend or interest reinvestment plan; or (c) upon the conversion of outstanding convertible securities or upon the exercise of outstanding transferable warrants issued by the issuer of the securities to be offered, or by an affiliate of that issuer, the interim financial statements must be as of a date within 12 months of the date of the document. The provisions of this paragraph are not applicable if securities are to be offered or sold in a standby underwriting in the United States or similar arrangement. Instruction 2, Item 8, Form 20-F.

(n53)Footnote 53. Item 8(A)(6), Form 20-F.

(n54)Footnote 54. Item 8(A)(7), Form 20-F. This item also requires disclosure of any material proceeding in which any director, any member of senior management or any affiliate is either a party adverse to the registrant or its subsidiaries or has a material interest adverse to the registrant or its subsidiaries. Instruction 1, Item 8(A)(7), Form 20-F.

(n55)Footnote 55. Item 8(A)(8), Form 20-F.

(n56)Footnote 56. Item 9(A), Form 20-F. When required to state the title of the securities, the title must indicate the type and general character of the securities, such as whether they are callable, convertible or redeemable and whether there is any preference or fixed rate of dividends. Instruction, Item 9(A), Form 20-F.

(n57)Footnote 57. This may be satisfied by providing the address of the lead underwriters for the offering. Instruction, Item 9(B), Form 20-F.

(n58)Footnote 58. Item 9(B), Form 20-F. If the registrant previously has not been required to file reports under Section 13(a) or 15(d) of the Exchange Act and any of the managing underwriters (or a majority of the principal underwriters) has been organized, reactivated or first registered as a broker-dealer within the past three years, it must disclose that fact. If true, it must also disclose that the principal business function of this underwriter will be to sell the securities being registered or that the promoters or founders have a material relationship with this underwriter. The registrant must give enough details to provide a clear picture of the underwriters' experience and its relationship with the registrant, the promoters or founders and their controlling persons. Instructions 2-3, Item 9(B), Form 20-F.

(n80)Footnote 80. Item 4A(a), Form F-1. Periodic reports include Form 6-K, Form 10-Q and Form 8-K filed under the Exchange Act.

For the registrant's fiscal years ending before December 15, 2011, financial statements or information required to be furnished by Item 4A shall be reconciled pursuant to either Item 17 or Item 18 of Form 20-F, whichever is applicable to the primary financial statements. For the registrant's fiscal years ending on or after December 15, 2011, financial statements or information required to be furnished by Item 4A shall be reconciled pursuant to Item 18 of Form 20-F. Instruction, Item 4A, Form F-1.

The conditions for incorporating by reference any required consents are set forth in Rule 439. Note to Item 5(a), Form F-1.

(n82)Footnote 82. Item 5(b), Form F-1.

If it sends to security holders any of the information that is incorporated by reference in the prospectus, the registrant must send along with it any exhibits that are specifically incorporated by reference in that information. Note to Item 5(b)(1), Form F-1.

(n88)Footnote 88. Instruction 1, Signatures, Form F-1.

(n89)Footnote 89. Form F-2 was rescinded under the 2005 Rules. The Commission proposed replacing Form F-3 with Forms A and B in its "Aircraft Carrier" release, thus eliminating the foreign/domestic distinction for registration forms. Sec. Act Re. No. 33-7606 (1998). Whether issuers filing on Form F-3 would use Form A or Form B would have depended upon the issuer meeting eligibility standards for Form B. See § 7.01 supra for a general discussion of the "Aircraft Carrier."

(n93)Footnote 93. General Instruction I(A)(3), Form F-3. To be material the default in the aggregate must be material to the financial position of the registrant and its consolidated and unconsolidated subsidiaries, taken as a whole. See General Instruction I(A)(3), Form F-3.

(n95)Footnote 95. General Instructions I(B), Form F-3.

(n96)Footnote 96. The aggregate market value of the registrant's outstanding voting stock is computed by using the price at which the stock was last sold, or the average of the bid and asked prices of such stock, in the principal market for such stock as of a date within 60 days prior to the date of filing. Instruction, General Instructions I(B)(1).

(n97)Footnote 97. See Part I, Form 20-F. Item 18 deals with the requirements of disclosure of financial statements.

(n98)Footnote 98. A non-convertible security is an investment grade security if, at the time of sale, at least one nationally recognized rating organization, as defined by Exchange Act Rule 15c3-1(C)(2)(vi)(F), has rated the security in one of its generic rating categories that signify investment grade.

For the registrant's fiscal years ending before December 15, 2011, the financial statements included on Form F-3 may comply with Item 17 or Item 18 of Form 20-F. For the registrant's fiscal years ending on or after December 15, 2011, the financial statements included on Form F-3 must comply with Item 18 of Form 20-F.

In July 2008, the SEC proposed amendments that would no longer make NRSRO ratings a transaction requirement to permit registrants to register primary offerings of non-convertible debt securities for cash. Instead, primary offerings of non-convertible securities would be eligible under Form F-3 only if the register has issued, as of a date 60 days prior to the filing of the registration statement, more than $1 billion in non-convertible securities for cash, other than common equity, through registered primary offerings over the prior three years. Security Ratings, Securities Act Release No. 8940, Securities Exchange Act Release No. 58071 (July 1, 2008).

(n99)Footnote 99. Transaction Requirement (3) of Form S-3 is discussed at § 7.04[1][a][ii][C] supra. In the case of such securities, the financial statements included on Form F-3 must comply with Item 17 or Item 18 of Form 20-F for a registrant's fiscal years ending before December 15, 2011; and for the registrant's fiscal years ending on or after December 15, 2011, the financial statements included on Form F-3 must comply with Item 18 of Form 20-F.

(n100)Footnote 100. Additionally, an affiliate may use Form F-3 to register securities for resale pursuant to the conditions specified in General Instruction C to Form S-8 if the registrant's financial statements in the Form F-3 comply with Item 18 of Form 20-F.

(n101)Footnote 101. Transaction Requirement (4) of Form S-3 is discussed at § 7.04[1][a][ii][D] supra.

(n102)Footnote 102. Transaction Requirement (6) of Form S-3 is discussed at § 7.04[1][a][ii][F] supra. Effective January 2008, the Commission adopted amendments to allow foreign private issuers with less than $75 million in public float to register primary offerings of their securities on Form F-3. See Sec. Act Rel. No. 33-8878. As was noted with respect to registrant's using Form S-3, eligibility under General Instruction I(B)(5) of Form F-3 applies only to such registrant's ability to conduct a limited primary offering on Form F-3. Instruction 6 to General Instruction I(B)(5), Form F-3. That is, a registrant's eligibility to use Form F-3 under General Instruction I(B)(5) does not mean that the registrant meets the requirements of Form F-3 for purposes of any other rule or regulation of the Commission, except for Rule 415(a)(1)(x) concerning shelf registration. Sec. Act Rel. No. 33-8878.

(n103)Footnote 103. The definition of a WKSII is set forth in Rule 405. See § 7.04[1][a] supra for a discussion of this definition.

(n104)Footnote 104. An automatic shelf registration statement can be used for all primary and secondary offerings securities of eligible WKSIs, other than those in connection with mortgage related securities, business combination transactions or exchange offers. See § 7.04[1][a][iv] supra.

(n106)Footnote 106. Until a prospectus, prospectus supplement, posteffective amendment to the registration statement or Exchange Act report incorporated by reference, identifying the selling security holders and the amount of securities to be sold by each of them (and, if included in a periodic or current report, a prospectus or prospectus supplement) is filed, as required by Rule 430B, pursuant to Rule 424(b)(7). (n123)Footnote 123. For a registrant's fiscal years ending before December 15, 2011, financial statements or information required to be furnished by this Item shall be reconciled pursuant to either Item 17 or Item 18 of Form 20-F, whichever is applicable to the primary financial statements. (n125)Footnote 125. If the Registrant's latest filing on Form 20-F, Form 40-F or Form 10-K is amended to include the information specified in Item 18 of Form 20-F, the prospectus must state that the form has been so amended.

(n135)Footnote 135. Instructions, Signatures, Form F-3.

The term "authorized U.S. representative" generally refers to an individual who is an employee of the registrant or an affiliate, or the registrant's counsel or underwriter in the United States for the offering. The Commission generally has refused to accept the appointment of a newly formed or shell corporation in the United States as the authorized representative. In the case of registrants with dual governing boards, the registration statement should be signed by whichever board has the authority to bind the registrant and performs functions most similar to those of a U.S. registrant's board of directors. In some cases, this may require the signatures of the members of both governing boards. Question 102.01, Questions and Answers of General Applicability, Securities Act Forms.

2-7A Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 7A.01

AUTHOR: Peter J. Romeo

[1] Overview

The Securities Act of 1933 ("Securities Act") is based on the premise that investors are fully capable of evaluating the merits of a securities offering if they are furnished with accurate and complete information regarding the issuer of the securities and the offering itself. Disclosure is the purpose of the statute, and registration of securities with respect to an offering is the principal tool used to achieve that purpose. n1

The focal point of registration is the registration statement, n2 which is filed with the SEC and consists of two parts: a prospectus that is used to offer the securities to the investing public and a separate segment containing supplemental information that is not furnished to investors. n3 The prospectus contains both narrative and financial information about the issuer and the offering, n4 and is intended to provide prospective investors with a balanced picture of all relevant material information.

The process of registration begins with the preparation of the registration statement by a team typically consisting of members of the issuer's management, investment bankers representing the underwriters for the offering, lawyers for the issuer and the underwriters, and representatives of the auditor for the issuer. During the period the registration statement is being drafted, the responsible parties conduct a due diligence review of the issuer in an effort to ensure that the information in the registration statement satisfies the requirements of the Securities Act. A properly conducted due diligence review will provide these persons (other than the issuer) with a defense against liability that may arise from claims by investors in the offering that they suffered losses because the disclosures in the registration statement were materially deficient.

When the registration statement is deemed by the responsible parties to be accurate and complete, it is filed with the SEC. Some types of registration statements become effective automatically upon filing, but the others typically are examined by the SEC staff soon after filing to determine whether a detailed review of some or all of the registration statement should be conducted. Where a registration statement is selected for review (and virtually all registration statements for initial public offerings are so selected), the staff will examine it closely and issue a "comment letter" describing disclosure deficiencies or other issues identified by it. The issuer will address the staff's concerns in amendments to the registration statement and informal letters or other communications. When the staff believes that its concerns have been satisfactorily addressed, it will make the registration statement effective upon request by the issuer. At that point, the issuer can complete the selling process by confirming sales to investors and taking the other steps necessary to complete the offering.

[2] Liability

The liability provisions of the Securities Act are essential to the successful application of the Act to registered offerings. n5 Without these provisions, which expose the principal parties involved in an offering to severe sanctions for violations of the Act, there would be little incentive to comply with the Act's requirements. Liability for a deficient registered offering can arise under the following provisions of the Act: n6

- Section 11 permits purchasers to sue the parties responsible for the preparation of the registration statement (i.e., the issuer, directors, officers who signed the registration statement, underwriters, and auditors and other experts) for losses sustained as a result of material misstatements or omissions in the registration statement; n7

- Section 12(a)(2) entitles purchasers to rescind the purchase (or sue for damages if they have already sold the security) if the offer or sale was made by means of a prospectus or oral communication containing material misstatements or omissions; n8

- Section 17(a)(2) prohibits the use of material misstatements or omissions to obtain money or property by any person involved in the offer or sale of a security. n9

Liability under Sections 12(a)(2) and 17(a)(2) is determined at the time of the contract of sale, rather than at a later date after the commitment to invest has been made. n10 In contrast, liability under Section 11 is determined at the time the registration statement becomes effective. n11 The statute of limitations for violations of Section 11 or 12(a)(2) of the Securities Act is one year from date of discovery or three years from the date of the violation. n12

The sanctions for violations of the Act can be substantial. They include civil and criminal money penalties, imprisonment, cease-and-desist orders, and injunctions against future violations. n13 The severity of these sanctions provides considerable motivation to the parties involved in a registered offering to take all of the steps necessary to ensure that the registration statement is accurate and complete and that the offering is conducted in a non-fraudulent manner.

[3] Important Developments

There have been two developments this past decade that have had a major impact on the registration process. The most significant development was the SEC's adoption in 2005 of the most encompassing changes to the registration requirements since the enactment of the Securities Act in 1933. Of lesser significance, but still of considerable importance, was the enactment in 2002 of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act by Congress.

[a] SEC Reforms. On December 1, 2005, the SEC implemented major changes to the requirements for registered public offerings. n14 These revisions, which are discussed as appropriate in the remainder of this chapter, generally have reduced the burdens of the registration process and increased the timeliness of information furnished to prospective investors. Among other things, the revisions:

- Liberalized offering communications; n15
- Improved shelf registration and other offering procedures; n16

- Limited the circumstances under which physical delivery of prospectuses is required; n17 and
- Clarified the timing of liability for information delivered to investors. n18

[b] Sarbanes-Oxley Act. Congress enacted the Sarbanes-Oxley Act in response to numerous corporate scandals resulting from false financial reports. Sarbanes-Oxley was not directed at the registration process, but nonetheless has a significant impact on it. Companies that are public are required by Sarbanes-Oxley, among other things, to conform to applicable corporate governance standards regarding the independence of their audit committee, n19 maintain sound internal controls, n20 and have their CEO and CFO certify to the accuracy of periodic reports containing company financial statements n21

(n1)Footnote 1. Relatively few offerings actually are registered, due to the availability of a variety of exemptions from registration provided by the Securities Act.

(n2)Footnote 2. See Chapter 7 for information regarding the various registration forms that are available to register securities and the conditions for using them. Form S-1 (or for foreign private issuers, Form F-1) is utilized when no other form is authorized or prescribed for a securities offering. Form S-1 commonly is used for initial public offerings and for offerings by issuers who do not qualify for Form S-3 (an abbreviated form) or any of the registration forms directed to specified types of offerings (such as Form S-8 for offerings under employee benefit plans). See also K&L Gates, Securities Practice Guide § 5.02, Choosing The Right Registration Form--Form S-1, S-3, (2009 Edition).

(n3)Footnote 3. Both the prospectus and the supplemental information are available to the public upon filing with the SEC. See Rule 120 under the Securities Act, which indicates that registration statements filed electronically can be accessed through the SEC's web site (<http://www.sec.gov>).

(n4)Footnote 4. The information required to be disclosed in the prospectus portion of a registration statement is specified in the applicable registration form. Each registration form contains a series of "items" and related instructions that typically refer to the disclosure requirements contained in Regulation S-K, 17 C.F.R. § 229, and to the financial statement requirements contained in Regulation S-X, 17 C.F.R. § 210. In addition, Industry Guides set forth at 17 C.F.R. § 229.800 may apply to issuers in selected industries.

(n6)Footnote 6. In addition to the liability provisions of the Securities Act, liability for the CEO and CFO of an issuer in a registered public offering also can arise under Sections 302 and 906 of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act of 2002 ("Sarbanes-Oxley Act") where the CEO and CFO issue certifications of deficient periodic reports filed under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 ("Exchange Act") that are incorporated by reference into the registration statement under the Securities Act.

(n7)Footnote 7. The Supreme Court, in Dura Pharmaceuticals, Inc. v. Broudo, 544 U.S. 336 (2005), made it more difficult for plaintiffs to plead and prove losses in registered offerings due to fraud (i.e., material misstatements or omissions) by requiring the plaintiff to allege that the loss suffered by the purchaser in the aftermarket was the direct result of the fraud becoming known in the marketplace.

(n8)Footnote 8. The defendant, however, may avoid liability under Section 12(a)(2) by proving that the misstatements or omissions did not cause the loss. See Section 12(b) of the Securities Act.

(n9)Footnote 9. The SEC has indicated that Sections 12(a)(2) and 17(a)(2) "do not require that oral statements or the prospectus or other communications contain all information called for under our line-item disclosure rules or otherwise contain all material information." Sec. Act Rel. No. 33-8591, § IV.A.1. at n.393 (2005).

(n10)Footnote 10. See Rule 159, which was adopted by the SEC as part of major Securities Act registration reforms that became effective on December 1, 2005. As a result of Rule 159 and Rule 430B(g), any information (whether written or oral) that might mitigate liability but is conveyed to the purchaser after the time of sale, including subsequently provided information deemed part of and included in or incorporated by reference into the registration statement or prospectus, is disregarded for purposes of determining liability. According to the report, the decline in the U.S. competitive position is evidenced in the U.S. share of "global IPOs (i.e., initial public offerings done outside a company's home country). The U S. share of these IPOs declined in value from 50 percent in 2000 to five percent in 2005, and in number from 37 percent in 2000 to 10 percent in 2005. CHAPTER 7A The Registration Process

§ 7A.02 Key Players

The parties involved in the registration process fall into three major categories. The first consists of the persons responsible for the preparation and filing of the registration statement. The second is composed of the regulatory authorities which administer the numerous legal requirements applicable to registered public offerings. And the third includes parties which provide various ancillary services necessary to complete the public offering process.

[1] Parties Responsible for the Registration Statement

Section 11(a) of the Securities Act states that in the event of a material misstatement or omission in a registration statement, an investor may sue:

- Every person (including the issuer) who signed the registration statement; n1
- Every person who was a director, or person performing similar functions, of, or partner in, the issuer at the time of the filing of the part of the registration statement with respect to which liability is asserted;
- Every person who, with the person's consent is named in the registration statement as being or about to become a director or person performing similar functions, or partner;
- Every accountant, engineer, or appraiser, or any person whose profession gives authority to a statement made by him, who has with the person's consent been named as having prepared or certified any part of the registration statement, or as having prepared or certified any report or valuation which is used in connection with the registration statement, with respect to the statement in the registration statement, report, or valuation which purports to have been prepared or certified by the person; and
- Every underwriter with respect to the security that was offered and sold. n2

In addition, Section 15 of the Securities Act exposes to liability any person who controls a party liable under Section 11.

[a] Issuer. Only the issuer can register securities. n3 It may do so on its own behalf (a "primary offering") or on behalf of selling security holders (a "secondary offering"). n4 The term "issuer" is broadly defined in Section 2(a)(4) of the Securities Act and includes "every person who issues or proposes to issue any security." n5

The issuer is the most important party involved in the registration process. In addition to offering its securities to the public, the issuer participates (through its management) in practically all activities necessary to complete the process. These include selection of a managing underwriter (in the case of an underwritten offering), the conduct of due diligence, preparation of the registration statement, compliance with regulatory demands, marketing of the offering, and pricing and closing of the offering.

Every issuer in a registered offering n6 is required by Section 6(a) of the Securities Act to sign the registration statement and is absolutely liable under Section 11(a) of the Act for material misstatements or omissions in the registration statement, regardless of good faith. n7

[b] Directors, Officers and Controlling Persons. Under Section 6(a) of the Securities Act, a majority of the issuer's board of directors, as well as its principal executive officer or officers, principal financial officer, and its comptroller or principal accounting officer, must sign the registration statement, along with the issuer. The entire board of directors (including any person named with his or her consent in the registration statement as about to become a director), n8 as well as the above-named officers, are subject to potential civil liability under Section 11(a) of the Act for material misstatements or omissions in the registration statement. n9 Further, any person who controls the issuer or any other party subject to liability under either Section 11 or Section 12 of the Act can be held liable to the same extent as the controlled person. n10

Unlike the issuer, directors, officers, and controlling persons can avoid liability by relying on the defense of "due diligence," which is available to persons who can demonstrate that after a reasonable investigation they had a reasonable basis for their belief that the registration statement was accurate and adequate. n11

[c] Sellers. Section 12(a)(1) of the Securities Act imposes absolute liability on any person who offers or sells a security in violation of the registration requirements of Section 5. n12 In the case of a registered offering, a seller can be held liable under Section 12(a)(2) of the Act for any material misstatements or omissions in the registration statement. Thus, Section 12(a)(2) can impose liability on selling stockholders who participate in a registered secondary offering of securities. Such persons, however, may rely on the due diligence defense if it is available. n13

[d] Underwriters. The principal role of the underwriters for a registered offering is to sell the securities at a price considered reasonable by the issuer and to foster a liquid aftermarket in the securities. n14 Ordinarily, there will be a lead underwriter who will manage the offering for the underwriting syndicate (if one is formed). Often, there will be co-managers who will be involved to varying degrees. Generally, the lead underwriter (with assistance from the co-managers) will lead the due diligence effort, participate in the prospectus drafting sessions, and oversee all aspects of the marketing process.

Every underwriter involved in a registered securities offering is subject to Section 11 liability for material misstatements or omissions in the registration statement, n15 absent an ability to rely on the due diligence defense. The term "underwriter" is broadly defined in Section 2(a)(11) of the Securities Act to encompass not only professional underwriting firms being paid to bring an issue to market, but also individuals and other parties who are conduits for a distribution to the public. n16

[e] Auditors and Other Experts. Section 11(a)(4) of the Securities Act subjects "experts" to potential liability for material misstatements or omissions in any part of a registration statement purporting to be based on their authority as experts. While the term "expert" is not formally defined in the Securities Act, it is intended by virtue of Sections 7 and 11 of the Act to refer to "any accountant, engineer or appraiser, or any person whose profession gives authority to a statement made by him." n17 Generally, in most underwritten offerings (other than those of oil and gas and similar natural resource companies) the only expert involved is the independent registered public accounting firm that has audited the financial statements. Other experts, however, may be consulted while the prospectus is being prepared to provide independent verification of important matters.

The accountants assume a critical role in the offering process. In addition to auditing the year-end financial statements and conducting a limited review of any interim financial statements included in the prospectus, the accountants will perform several other important functions. These include (i) participating in the due diligence process relating to the financial statements, pro forma financial information (if any) and "Management's Discussion and Analysis"; (ii) furnishing to the underwriters one or more "comfort letters" relating to various accounting and financial data included in the prospectus; and (iii) helping identify significant accounting issues that may warrant a pre-filing conference or other consultation with the SEC staff.

Due in large part to the substantial number of accounting scandals and financial restatements in recent years, the Sarbanes-Oxley Act instituted a number of reforms to heighten auditor independence and increase auditor oversight. The measures include (i) restrictions on non-audit services; (ii) rotation of the lead audit partner at least every five years; (iii) a prohibition against auditing a company having a high level executive who worked on the prior year's audit as an employee of the auditor; and (iv) a prohibition against improper influence by company personnel on the conduct of the audit. n18 The effort to increase auditor oversight consisted principally of the authorization of the Public Company Accounting Oversight Board to (a) register firms that audit public companies; (b) oversee the audit activities of registered firms; (c) adopt auditing, quality control, ethics and independence standards for registered firms; (d) inspect registered firms periodically; and (e) discipline registered firms for violations of applicable standards or requirements. n19

Accountants and other experts can be held liable only if they are named with their consent in the registration statement as having prepared or certified any part of the registration statement or any report or valuation mentioned in it. n20 The filing of the consent provides some assurance that the expert has reviewed the disclosures in the registration statement pertaining to its work product and is satisfied with them.

It is possible under Rule 437 to request a waiver of the consent requirement when it can be demonstrated by affidavit that obtaining a consent is "impracticable or involves undue hardship on the registrant." The Commission, however, must agree to the waiver request prior to the effective date of the registration statement in order to dispense with the consent requirement. n21

[f] Counsel. Both the issuer and the underwriters engage counsel to assist them in meeting their responsibilities under the Securities Act. n22

Issuer's Counsel. The principal function of counsel to the issuer is to assist the issuer and its management in preparing the registration statement and performing the investigation necessary to support the disclosures in it. In performing this and other functions, issuer's counsel is subject to the attorney conduct requirements established by the SEC pursuant to Section 307 of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act. n23 Among other things, these provisions require counsel to engage in "up the ladder" reporting (ultimately to the board of directors, if necessary) of evidence of a material violation of securities law or breach of fiduciary duty or similar wrongdoing by the company or its agents. n24

Counsel for the issuer ordinarily is the principal drafter of the registration statement and solicits information from a variety of sources when doing so. While it may not be entirely appropriate to characterize the lawyer's role as that of a "scribe," counsel's function is limited generally to assisting the issuer in complying with the SEC's registration requirements, and does not involve any responsibility for the accuracy or completeness of the registration statement. n25

In addition to being the principal drafter of the registration statement, counsel to the issuer will take an active role in the due diligence process and prepare the documents necessary to put the issuer's corporate house in order for the offering (i.e., the corporate clean-up). n26 Counsel also will perform a variety of other tasks for the issuer, including (i) taking the steps necessary to have the securities being registered listed on a stock exchange (if listing is desired) and, in the case of an initial listing, assisting the issuer to identify changes to board composition and other corporate governance matters that must be addressed to meet listing standards; (ii) preparing and filing a related registration statement under the Exchange Act for any equity securities being sold (assuming registration is considered necessary); (iii) attending to the issuer's obligations under any registration rights agreements with existing security holders; (iv) obtaining consents and post-offering share "lock-up" agreements from existing security holders as agreed by the issuer and managing underwriter; (v) rendering an opinion on the validity of the securities being offered; and (vi) issuing a "legal opinion" relating to the offering and a negative assurance letter addressed to the underwriters regarding the absence of any material misstatements or omissions in the registration statement.

Underwriters' Counsel. Counsel to the underwriters will be involved in all aspects of the offering that have legal implications for the underwriters. These include (i) assisting in the underwriters' due diligence investigation; (ii) helping to prepare the registration statement; (iii) preparing and negotiating the underwriting agreement and other underwriting documents (such as agreements among underwriters and lock-up agreements); (iv) negotiating the form of comfort letter to be received from the company's accountants; and (v) obtaining clearance of the proposed underwriting compensation from FINRA.

Counsel for the underwriters also may be responsible for taking the steps necessary to assure that all state "blue sky" requirements applicable to the offering are complied with, and reviewing from a legal perspective all proposed public announcements relating to the offering. Underwriters' counsel also performs various tasks relating to the closing of the offering, including (i) the issuance of a legal opinion providing negative assurance regarding the absence of any material misstatements or omissions in the registration statement, and (ii) the preparation of a memorandum detailing the actions needed to complete the closing. As in the case of issuer's counsel, counsel to the underwriters is not considered either an expert or a controlling person where counsel does no more than perform legal services for its clients. n27

[2] Regulatory Authorities

The SEC is the dominant regulator of registered securities offerings, although other regulatory authorities also have an interest in various aspects of these offerings. These include state securities commissions, the stock exchanges and FINRA.

[a] SEC. The Commission is vested with the authority to administer the Securities Act. n28 Because the Act is purely a disclosure statute, the Commission is not permitted to pass on the merits of securities offerings. As a result, the Commission's action in making a registration statement effective does not constitute approval of the offering, and a legend to that effect is required to be included on the outside front cover page of each prospectus. n29

The Commission possesses a number of powerful tools to promote compliance with the Securities Act. For example, it can decline to make a registration statement effective until it is satisfied that the disclosures in it are adequate. n30 This has the effect of preventing the offering from taking place on the issuer's timetable and forces the issuer to reach an accommodation with the Commission. If a materially deficient registration statement becomes effective through the passage of time, n31 the Commission can institute stop order proceedings under Section 8(d) of the Act suspending the effectiveness of the registration statement or take other measures having a similar effect. n32 In only a small number of cases, however, are drastic measures necessary because an informal process exists under which the registrant and the Commission engage in a cooperative effort to produce a registration statement that meets the requirements of the Act. This process involves the issuance by the Commission staff of a "comment letter" pointing out deficiencies in the registration statement and the responses by the registrant to the comments by either making appropriate changes or, in some instances, by persuading the Commission staff that specific comments should be withdrawn. n33 The purpose of this informal process is to correct material deficiencies before any harm to investors has occurred, since no sales of securities can take place while the process is underway.

The Commission has delegated almost all of its authority for administering the disclosure requirements of the Securities Act to its staff. n34 Specifically, the Division of Investment Management processes the registrant statements of investment companies registered under the Investment Company Act of 1940, n35 and the Division of Corporation Finance assumes responsibility for the filings of all other issuers. n36

Over the years, the Commission has demonstrated a remarkable ability to adapt the Act to the realities of the times. For example, the adoption of various short registration forms in the 1970s and the full implementation of the integrated disclosure system in the early 1980s n37 did much to counter the concern that the requirements of the Act were unduly hampering the capital formation process. More recently, in 2005, the Commission adopted substantial reforms to the registration process that have helped expedite securities offerings by modernizing registration and prospectus delivery procedures, broadening the scope of permissible communications, and clarifying liability issues. n38 The continued vitality of the Securities Act more than 75 years after its passage is due in no small measure to the Commission's imaginative approach to its administration.

[b] State Securities Authorities. Prior to the enactment of the National Securities Markets Improvement Act of 1996 ("NSMIA"), n39 public offerings of securities were subject to substantial oversight by state securities authorities, many of which were able to impose merit standards on offerings. NSMIA changed this by adding an amendment to Section 18 of the Securities Act that in all material respects preempted state regulation of most registered securities offerings. n40

Although states no longer may engage in merit regulation of offerings, the states may still institute enforcement actions for fraud and under certain circumstances require the filing of notices and the payment of fees. As a result, it remains necessary to review the securities statutes and regulations, known as the "blue sky" laws, of each state in which the securities included in an offering will be offered or sold and comply with all applicable filing and fee requirements. As previously mentioned, counsel to the underwriters typically assumes this responsibility.

[c] Securities Exchange. A domestic issuer typically will want the securities that are being offered listed on a major national securities exchange, such as the New York Stock Exchange ("NYSE") or the Nasdaq Stock Exchange ("Nasdaq"), because of the exposure and liquidity afforded by such a listing. n41 The listing requirements for the various exchanges vary, although they generally are intended to provide some degree of assurance that the issuer is a stable entity with strong corporate governance procedures that is capable of producing consistent profits and filing regular reports under the Exchange Act of its activities. Counsel to the issuer is responsible for taking the steps necessary to (i) submit a listing application; (ii) petition for an exemption from listing requirements that the issuer may not be able to satisfy; and (iii) reserve in advance the issuer's proposed trading symbol.

[d] FINRA. The Financial Industry Regulatory Authority ("FINRA") is the largest independent regulator of securities firms doing business in the U.S. It was created on July 26, 2007 by consolidating the National Association of Securities Dealers ("NASD") with the member regulation, enforcement and arbitration functions of the NYSE. Among the functions assumed by FINRA from the NASD was the review of underwriting arrangements for registered public offerings to determine whether the compensation to be paid to the underwriters (all of which ordinarily are members of FINRA) is fair and reasonable. Counsel to the underwriters is responsible for taking the steps necessary to obtain FINRA clearance. These steps include (i) obtaining information (usually by questionnaire) concerning the affiliation of offering participants with FINRA members; (ii) providing that information to FINRA in the form of representations by the underwriters; (iii) filing drafts of the registration statement and underwriting documents with FINRA; and (iv) responding to questions or comments issued by the FINRA staff.

[3] Other Essential Parties

Other parties whose involvement in the offering often is necessary include the following:

Financial Printer. A financial printer prints both the preliminary and final prospectuses distributed to investors. n42

Security Printer. Unless the securities will be issued in "book-entry" form, it will be necessary to engage a printer to print certificates for the stock or debt securities sold in the offering.

Transfer Agent and Registrar. These parties are engaged to ensure that the corporate records pertaining to stock transfers and stockholders are properly maintained.

Standard & Poors Corporation's CUSIP Service Bureau. The Bureau will issue a nine-digit "CUSIP" number that identifies each new issue of securities approved for trading in the U.S. or Canada.

Securities Clearing Agency. A securities clearing agency (such as The Depository Trust Company) is engaged where the securities involved in the offering will trade in book-entry form.

Custodian and Attorney-in-Fact. If a secondary offering by selling stockholders is involved, these parties are needed to ensure the shares sold by the sellers are properly delivered.

Experts (Other Than the Auditor). Experts (such as engineers, in the case of oil and gas offerings) are engaged if there is a portion of the registration statement that requires an opinion or other action by an expert in the field.

Indenture Trustee. The indenture trustee is used in a debt offering to administer the provisions of the indenture for the offering.

Securities Rating Agency. Where preferred stock, debt, securities or asset-backed securities are being offered, the issuer will seek a rating for the securities from a securities rating agency.

Authorized Representative. An authorized representative in the U.S. is required in the case of registered offerings by foreign private issuers. n43

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Section 6(a) of the Securities Act states that the registration statement must be signed by "each issuer, its principal executive officer or officers, its principal financial officer, its comptroller or principal accounting officer, and the majority of its board of directors or persons performing similar functions (or, if there is no board of directors or persons performing similar functions, by the majority of the persons or board having the power of management of the issuer)." A person who signs a document attached to the registration statement (such as a prospectus that was not part of the offering materials), but not the registration statement itself, is not liable under Section 11. Dorchester Investors v. Peak International Ltd., [2000 to 2001 Transfer Binder] Fed. Sec. L. Rep. (CCH) P 91,356 (S.D.N.Y. 2001).

(n2)Footnote 2. Damages for a material misstatement or omission in a registration statement generally are limited under Section 11(e) of the Securities Act to the difference between the cost of the security and its value at the time the suit was brought or the price at which the security was sold. Section 11(g) of the Act indicates that the damages cannot exceed the public offering price.

(n3)Footnote 3. It is possible to have more than one issuer named in a registration statement, as in the case of a simultaneous offering of debt securities by a subsidiary and a related guarantee by the parent. In such situations, both entities are considered issuers but only as to the respective securities issued by each. Where two or more entities jointly issue the same securities, they are deemed co-issuers.

(n4)Footnote 4. Selling security holders usually are able to have their securities registered only if they have previously obtained contractual rights to register the securities or if they have a control relationship with the issuer. It is not uncommon in connection with initial public offerings to have a combined primary and secondary offering, with the selling security holders usually consisting of a few senior executives and major shareholders of the issuer.

(n5)Footnote 5. In rare cases, the identity of the issuer may be clear, but it is not practical to name the person as an issuer. For example, the writers of exchange-traded options clearly are the issuers of such securities, but it is not possible in advance of registration to know the identities of these persons. In lieu of naming the writers, the Commission requires the Options Clearing Corporation, which services the respective exchanges, to be listed as the issuer and assume the obligations of an issuer.

(n6)Footnote 6. A synonym for an issuer involved in a registered offering is the word "registrant," which appears frequently in the rules, regulations and forms adopted by the Commission under the Securities Act. The two terms are used interchangeably throughout this chapter.

(n7)Footnote 7. An issuer is not subject to liability where it can establish that the plaintiff had knowledge, at the time of acquiring the securities at issue, of the alleged misstatement or omission. See Section 11(a) of the Securities Act. This defense is difficult to sustain with respect to a broadly distributed public offering.

(n9)Footnote 9. Officers who do not sign a registration statement cannot be held liable under Section 11. See, e.g., O' Sullivan v. Trident Microsystems, Inc., [1993-1994 Transfer Binder] Fed. Sec. L. Rep. (CCH) P 98,116, at 98,911 (N.D. Cal. 1994).

(n10)Footnote 10. See Section 15. A controlling person may avoid liability by establishing that the person had no knowledge of, or reasonable grounds to believe, false or misleading statements were made. Id.

(n11)Footnote 11. See Section 11(b)(3) and the discussion of due diligence in § 7A.05[4] infra.

(n13)Footnote 13. See Section 12(a)(2).

(n14)Footnote 14. Selecting an underwriter when going public is an important decision because of the positive message the use of an established underwriter sends to the marketplace. See, e.g., J. Brau and S. Fawcett, Evidence on What CFOs Think About the IPO Process: Practice, Theory and Managerial Implications, 18 J. Applied Corp. Fin. (Summer 2006) 107.

(n15)Footnote 15. If liability is deemed to exist, there may be a question regarding the allocation of the liability among the various underwriters and other parties involved in the registration process. This is a matter that typically is addressed through indemnification and contribution provisions included in the underwriting agreement relating to the offering. See generally S. Older and J. Bloomstein, Indemnification and Contribution in Underwritten Offerings, Insights (January 2003) 15.

(n16)Footnote 16. For a considerable period of time, the SEC staff adhered to the "presumptive underwriter doctrine" under which all purchasers of ten percent or more of the securities in a registered offering were presumed to be statutory underwriters acting as conduits for a distribution of securities to the public. The staff abandoned this approach in the early 1980's "for a more flexible test which analyzes the facts and circumstances of each offering." See American Council of Life Insurance, SEC No-Action Letter (May 10, 1983), [1983-1984 Transfer Binder] Fed. Sec. L. Rep. (CCH) P 77,526 (1983).

(n17)Footnote 17. See generally Sections 7(a) and 11(a)(4). Not all persons who might at first glance be thought of as experts are so deemed under the Securities Act. For example, counsel whose function is limited to assisting the issuer in preparing the registration statement is not generally considered an expert. See Escott v. BarChris Construction Corp., 283 F. Supp. 643, 683 (S.D.N.Y. 1968). Also, by virtue of Rule 436(g)(1), a nationally recognized statistical rating organization whose security rating is disclosed in the prospectus is not considered an expert and need not file a consent to the use of its rating in the registration statement.

(n20)Footnote 20. See Sections 7 and 11(a)(4) of the Securities Act, and Rule 436. The exposure of accountants to Securities Act liability is significant. See, e.g., J. Candida, Section 11 of the Securities Act of 1933: The Disproportionate Liability Imputed to Accountants, 27 Del. J. of Corp. Law 565-85 (2002).

(n21)Footnote 21. Generally, the Commission and its staff are reluctant to grant waivers or otherwise undermine the consent requirement.

(n22)Footnote 22. In selecting counsel (and the auditor), it is important to do so on the basis of their expertise and ability, rather than previous relationships with the issuer or its insiders. Because the process of registering a public offering is complex and carries with it significant liabilities, it should be undertaken only with the assistance of advisors who can help make the process as efficient and pain-free as possible. See generally, IPOs From the Inside Out: The CFOs Speak, IPO Journal, 1-4, 12-13 (1999).

(n23)Footnote 23. The SEC has taken action in recent years against attorneys whom the SEC believed issued fraudulent legal opinions for public offerings. See S. H. Callcott and A. Slonecker, A Review of Recent SEC Actions Against Lawyers, 42 Rev. Sec. & Comm. Reg. 71 (2009).

(n24)Footnote 24. See Section 307 of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act, and Sec. Act Rel. Nos. 33-8185 (2003) and 33-8186 (2003). For a discussion of potential liability under Section 307 of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act and the rules of the SEC for attorneys involved in securities offerings, see L. Lowenfels, A. Bromberg, M. Sullivan, and D. Alberts, SEC Actions Against Lawyers Post Sarbanes-Oxley: A Reasoned Approach or an Assault Upon the Practicing Securities Bar?, 41 Sec. Reg. & L. Rep. (BNA) 1739 (September 21, 2009).

(n25)Footnote 25. See, e.g., Association of the Bar of the City of New York, Report by Special Committee on Lawyer's Role in Securities Transactions, Guidelines 4-6, 32 Bus. Law 1870, 1894-97 (1977).

(n26)Footnote 26. For a description of many of the tasks involved in the corporate clean-up, see § 7A.05[2] infra and R. Stevenson, Jr., Preparing a Company for an Initial Public Offering, 27 Rev. Sec. & Comm. Reg. 203 (1994).

(n28)Footnote 28. See Section 21 of the Exchange Act. The Commission has broad authority under Section 28 of the Securities Act to exempt "any person, security, or transaction, or any class or classes of persons, securities or transactions" from any provision of the Act or the rules or regulations hereunder if the exemption is "necessary or appropriate in the public interest, and is consistent with the protection of investors."

(n29)Footnote 29. See Item 501(b)(7) of Regulation S-K and Rule 481(b)(1).

(n31)Footnote 31. This might occur, for example, where the issuer has not included an automatic delaying amendment on the front cover page of the registration statement of the type described in Rule 473 and the document becomes effective 20 days after filing, as provided by Section 8(a) of the Act.

(n32)Footnote 32. The other measures are described in § 7A.06[9] infra .

(n33)Footnote 33. Because of staff shortages, the Commission is unable to review every registration statement. Therefore, the Commission staff's comment process does not extend to every registration statement.

(n34)Footnote 34. The Commission has not delegated to its staff the authority to deny acceleration requests under the Securities Act or the authority to institute stop or refusal order proceedings under Section 8 of the Act.

(n35)Footnote 35. See 17 C.F.R. 200.30-5(b), (b) and (c).

(n40)Footnote 40. Under Section 18, a state generally may not require the registration or qualification of a security or transaction, or prohibit or limit the use of any offering document prepared by or on behalf of an issuer in connection with an offering, if the security offered is a "covered" security (as defined in Section 18(b) of the Act) or will become one upon completion of the offering. The definition of "covered security" is broad enough to encompass most securities registered with the SEC.

(n41)Footnote 41. Following the passage of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act, which imposes substantial disclosure and corporate governance requirements on public companies listed on U.S. exchanges, many foreign issuers have chosen to list their securities solely on foreign exchanges.

(n43)Footnote 43. The term "foreign private issuer" is defined in Rule 405. A foreign private issuer is generally a non-U.S. company that either has 50% or less of its outstanding voting securities held of record by U.S. residents or has more than 50% of its outstanding voting securities held by U.S. residents and has no other nexus with the United States of the type described in Rule 405. As indicated in § 7A.07[1] infra , the adoption of Rule 172 in 2005 eliminated the need to print and deliver final prospectuses in paper form, with the result that they are not always printed.

2-7A Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 7A.03

§ 7A.03 Offering Methods

Most issuers use professional underwriters (i.e., investment bankers or broker-dealers) to market their offerings because of the ability of these firms to price and sell securities successfully and to maintain a trading market in the securities after the offering is completed. But, as explained below, a small number of issuers choose to market their offerings themselves, while some others may use relatively uncommon offering methods.

[1] Firm Commitment

The most common method of offering is through a professional underwriter that firmly commits to buy from the issuer all of the securities included in the registration statement for immediate resale to the public. A firm commitment arrangement places the underwriters at risk if they are unsuccessful in finding public purchasers, although the risk is not as great as it may seem on the surface. n1 From the issuer's standpoint, a firm commitment arrangement almost always assures the offering will be completed following the signing of the underwriting agreement, although on rare occasions the offering may be withdrawn before the closing. n2

[a] Selection of Underwriters. An issuer that is an attractive candidate for a public offering may have several reputable underwriters from which to choose. It should make the selection carefully because the underwriter's performance is critical not only to the success of the offering, but also to a well-functioning aftermarket following an IPO. The issuer should consider a variety of factors when determining which underwriter to select. These include the stature of the underwriter in the investment community, its experience in the issuer's industry, the nature of its clientele (i.e., primarily institutional or retail), the aftermarket performance of the underwriter's prior offerings, the proposed underwriting discount, and the level of compatibility with the underwriter's representatives who will be working on the offering. In some instances, particularly where competing underwriters have complementary capabilities (e.g., one has recognized expertise in the issuer's industry, another has a strong institutional capability, and a third has a large retail sales force), the issuer may select two or more firms to co-manage the offering. One of the firms selected ordinarily will serve as the lead managing underwriter. The lead manager typically will assume the role of primary decision-maker for the syndicate of underwriters that may be formed to market the offering, and also will maintain the records for the syndicate. Following the completion of the offering, the managing underwriter typically will furnish other investment banking services to the issuer, including assisting in subsequent financing efforts as necessary, and providing expertise on valuation and other matters.

[b] Underwriting Documents. There are a variety of documents prepared for underwritten offerings by counsel for the underwriter. These documents are fairly standardized, and have undergone some changes in recent years to reflect the SEC's reforms to the securities offering process in 2005. n3 The principal underwriting documents are described below.

Letter of Intent. After the issuer and the prospective underwriter have completed preliminary discussions and arrived at a general understanding, they may sign a letter of intent. Major underwriters, however, often do not use these letters. The letter of intent typically will outline the proposed terms of the offering and the underwriting compensation, but is not binding on the parties, except as to specified matters. n4

Underwriting Agreement. The underwriting agreement specifies the terms under which the offering will be underwritten. The underwriting agreement not only indicates the obligations of the underwriters, but also the conditions to which those obligations are subject. n5 The underwriters' obligations typically are conditioned on the accuracy of the issuer's representations and warranties, the issuer's compliance with specified undertakings, the non-occurrence of certain specified adverse developments prior to the closing date, and the receipt of various documents. These documents typically include opinions of counsel as to various legal matters, representations from the issuer's auditor (set forth in a "comfort letter" that provides negative assurances regarding the accuracy of certain financial data included in the registration statement), and certificates by officials of the issuer as to factual and financial matters. The closing, at which time the securities included in the offering are formally purchased by the underwriters, in most instances takes place three business days after pricing the offering. The delay between pricing and closing allows the underwriters sufficient time to collect funds from their customers for the sale of the securities.

Agreement Among Underwriters. This document provides the managing underwriter with permission from members of the underwriting syndicate to act on their behalf in negotiating and executing the underwriting agreement.

Selected Dealers Agreement. In many instances, the managing underwriter will enter into agreements with selected securities dealers that are not part of the underwriting syndicate for the purchase by the dealers of securities in the offering. The selected dealers agreement will notify each dealer of the terms of the offering, the selling concession, the allotment anticipated to be purchased by the dealer (unless declined by a specified time), and the portion of the underwriting discount allocated to the dealer.

Blue Sky Memorandum. This document indicates the states in which filings must be made and fees paid in order to sell securities in those states. Where the securities being offered will be listed on a major national securities exchange, the underwriters may not require a blue sky memorandum because NSMIA essentially preempts state blue sky laws with respect to securities listed on those exchanges.

[c] Formation of Syndicate and Selling Group. Before the marketing effort for the offering is launched, the managing underwriter will circulate a copy of the Registration Statement to other selected underwriters as part of an invitation to join the underwriting syndicate for the offering. The managing underwriter typically will want to underwrite the largest individual portion of the offering and spread the balance among other underwriters to limit the managing underwriter's risk and assure its continuous compliance with the SEC's net capital requirements. The amount allocated to the invited underwriters generally will be based upon their historical position in the investment banking community and the managing underwriter's obligation to repay them for having invited the managing underwriter to participate in their offerings. The selling group will consist of the syndicate members and selected dealers, with the latter's selection often based in large measure on the extent to which their customers tend to hold securities acquired in an underwritten offering rather than sell them to make a quick profit. Too many "buy and flip" customers can drive down the price of the securities and adversely affect the managing underwriter's ability to maintain a strong aftermarket.

[2] Best Efforts

In a "best efforts" underwriting arrangement, the underwriter agrees only to use its best efforts to sell the securities offered by the issuer. The compensation paid to the underwriter is characterized as a commission rather than an underwriting discount because the underwriter is acting as an agent for the issuer rather than as a principal buying from the issuer at a discount. The amount of underwriting compensation is less than that for a comparably-sized firm commitment offering because the underwriter's risk is considerably reduced.

Generally, only small underwriters will undertake to sell an offering on a best efforts basis. Because their capital is limited, a temporary charge against net capital of the type required by a firm commitment offering may be a hardship, and it also may be difficult for them to assemble a selling group of the type customarily seen in a firm commitment offering. The issuer likewise usually is small and frequently is in the developmental stage, lacking an operating history or financial performance of the type needed to attract an underwriter on a firm commitment basis.

A best efforts offering is subject to the condition that a specified minimum number of shares must be sold within a specified time period if any shares are to be sold at all. There usually is a ceiling on the maximum number of shares that may be sold. Because of the conditional nature of the offering, the funds received from investors are held in escrow until the minimum offering level is achieved.ⁿ⁶ If the minimum amount is not sold within the prescribed period, the funds are returned to the investors. The SEC examines best efforts offerings closely, and is particularly attentive to whether the minimum is sold and all customer funds are collected before the offering period expires.

[3] Self-Underwritten

On rare occasions, a company will make an initial public offering ("IPO") of its securities (typically common stock) without the use of a professional underwriter. Although this will eliminate investment banking fees and reduce the expenses of the offering, the difficulties attendant to self-underwritten IPOs are so significant that few companies attempt them.ⁿ⁷

Companies offering their own securities usually are small and not well known in the investment community, making it difficult to attract investors. Even if enough investors are attracted to allow the issuer to sell the minimum number of securities to be sold, the company's lack of visibility may result in a thin aftermarket that is weak and difficult to sustain. These problems are in addition to the difficulties that may be experienced when dealing with the SEC and other interested regulatory authorities, which generally presume that self-underwritten offerings are highly risky and examine them closely. The absence of a professional underwriter is particularly damaging in the regulatory context because the lack of underwriter due diligence increases the likelihood that the prospectus for the offering will be materially deficient. As a consequence, issuers undertaking a self-underwritten offering should be prepared for a searching review by the SEC of their registration statement that is likely to take a great deal longer than an underwritten public offering.

[4] Online

The use of the Internet as a vehicle for securities offerings has been infrequent but attained considerable credibility as a result of the success of the Internet IPO by Google Inc. in 2004. The Google IPO involved a Dutch auction approach to setting the IPO price, under which all interested investors submitted bids on the Internet indicating how many shares they wished to buy and at what price. The price selected was the price at which all of the offered shares could be sold. In addition to using the Internet to set the price, Google also completed many of the other tasks attendant to a public offering through the Internet, including the qualification of investors, management of the bid process, and delivery of the preliminary and final prospectuses. The end result was an IPO that attracted much attention and was fully subscribed.

Investment bankers appear to have mixed views regarding online offerings. Although they acknowledge the broad investor access provided by the Internet, they are wary of the diminished control over pricing occasioned by the Dutch auction approach. Nevertheless, the genie may have escaped from the bottle insofar as the use of the Internet for public offerings is concerned, making it possible for the Internet eventually to become a major vehicle for such offerings.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. The underwriters limit the risk by not committing themselves to purchase any securities until they sign the underwriting agreement, which often occurs at the time the offering price is fixed. At that point, they will have completed marketing activities and obtained indications of interest from their customers that enable them to negotiate with the issuer any changes in the size and price of the offering deemed necessary to complete the offering successfully. The late signing of the agreement also allows the underwriters to minimize the period during which they must charge their capital accounts under the Commission's minimum net capital rules with the amount of their respective contractual commitments.

(n2)Footnote 2. A "market-out" clause in the underwriting agreement allows the underwriter to terminate the offering before the closing upon the occurrence of significant unanticipated economic developments or other circumstances that adversely affect the market for the underwritten securities. See e.g., Diametrics Medical Aborts IPO as Uite Claims PPG Trade Secrets Were Stolen, Wall St. J. (August 12, 1993) at A1.

(n3)Footnote 3. See, e.g., S. Tsacoumis, Impact of Securities Offering Reform on Underwriting Arrangements, Insights (October 2005) 22.

(n4)Footnote 4. Among the matters that may be binding are commitments by the issuer to reimburse the underwriter for its expenses if the offering does not proceed, and to comply with specified conditions and undertakings prior to the filing of the registration statement.

(n5)Footnote 5. A common feature of the underwriting agreement is an over-allotment option which allows the underwriters, for a period that may range from seven to 30 days following commencement of the offering, the option to purchase up to a maximum of 15 percent of the total number of shares offered to cover over-allotments to customers on the same terms and conditions as the offered shares. See generally § 7A.07[2] infra.

(n6)Footnote 6. Rule 10b-9 under the Exchange Act states that it is unlawful under the antifraud provisions of Section 10(b) of that Act for any person involved in a best efforts offering to represent that the conditions of sale have been satisfied unless all of the securities required to be sold within the specified time period were sold in bona fide transactions and fully paid for by the date specified in the offering.

(n7)Footnote 7. An existing public company also may make a self-underwritten offering, but this has been an uncommon occurrence to date.

2-7A Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 7A.04

AUTHOR: Peter J. Romeo

[1] IPOs

Most companies enter the public company arena through an initial public offering. Whether a company is a viable candidate for an IPO depends on a variety of factors, including the growth potential of the enterprise, the quality of its management, its size and financial performance, and the perception by potential professional underwriters of the company's appeal to the investing public. The fact that a company may possess the attributes for a successful IPO is no guarantee that one will occur. Volatile market conditions and other considerations may stall an IPO in its tracks. Further, an IPO may not necessarily be the best approach for a particular company making it important for the company's decision makers to consider both the advantages and disadvantages of going the IPO route that are described below before committing to that approach. n1

[a] Advantages. Among the benefits that can flow to a company from an IPO are the following:

Funds for Operations. The infusion of capital from an IPO will immediately increase the company's net worth and enable it to move forward on its plans for growth and expansion.

Liquidity for Owners. The public market created by the IPO for the company's common stock will provide a measure of liquidity for existing investors and a ready basis for valuing their ownership interests for estate planning and other purposes.

Expanded Possibilities for Subsequent Financings. A public company ordinarily can move beyond the bank borrowings and costly private equity capital typically used to finance private enterprises to public methods of financing.

Engine for Growth. Because of the readily ascertainable market value of a company's common stock after an IPO, the stock can be used as consideration for future acquisitions, thereby fostering the issuer's growth and conserving the company's cash.

Improved Ability to Attract and Retain Personnel. The company should be in a better position to attract and retain executives and other personnel because of its ability to offer stock options and other stock-based compensation with significant potential for appreciation in value.

Recognition and Prestige. The perception of the company in the marketplace usually is enhanced by an IPO and often leads to better relations with employees, suppliers and customers.

[b] Disadvantages. An IPO carries with it some unwelcome baggage that should be taken into account before plunging into it, including the following:

High Costs. The costs of registration (including legal, accounting, printing and filing fees) before the underwriters' discount are likely to be at least $500,000 (and often much more), and will be followed by the ongoing costs of complying with the continuous disclosure and other requirements of the securities laws, including the Sarbanes-Oxley Act.

Diversion of Management Time. The company's senior managers must devote a significant amount of their time to the registration process and to the ongoing tasks of meeting SEC requirements and performing other public company responsibilities.

Loss of Privacy. The company's financial results and operations will be subject to scrutiny by the investment community, competitors and regulators, and the company will have to make public disclosure of dealings with management, including disclosure of compensation and personal transactions.

Decreased Flexibility. Following an IPO, the company's officers are likely to have less flexibility in managing the business, since they will have to take into account the impact of their decisions on the stock price and various constituencies, including public shareholders.

Increased Legal Exposure. The disclosure documents of the company and public comments by its insiders could lead to lawsuits seeking recovery of funds allegedly lost from investments in the company's securities as a result of material misstatements or omissions in the documents or comments.

Potential Loss of Control. The ownership interests of existing stockholders will be diluted by an IPO, making possible in many instances an unwanted takeover attempt that could result in a shift of control.

[2] Timetable

The amount of time required to complete the registration process depends on a number of factors, including the complexity of the issuer's operations, the amount of corporate "clean-up" and other preliminary work that needs to be done, the workload of the Commission staff, and the familiarity of the issuer's lawyers and auditor with Commission regulations and practices. For an IPO, the amount of time required typically can range from a minimum of four months, to six months or more in some cases. For other offerings, the amount of time depends to a significant extent on whether the issuer can use a short registration form (such as, Form S-3, or, for foreign private issuers, Form F-3). If either of these forms is available, the time required for preparing and processing the registration statement is significantly reduced.

Issuers that have not previously registered securities with the Commission should expect that two or three months will be necessary to complete the steps necessary for filing the registration statement. In addition to the time required to draft the document, the working group will have to devote many hours to assembling all of the relevant information and confirming the accuracy and completeness of the draft disclosures. The working group will be required to hold numerous meetings, and frequently rewrite the prospectus to meet legal requirements, address marketing considerations, and reflect new information and recent developments.

After the registration statement has been filed with the Commission, it can be made effective in as short a period as a few business days after filing for some offerings not involving a first-time registrant (and, as discussed later, can even become effective automatically upon filing if the registrant is a well-known seasoned issuer).ⁿ³ At the other extreme, the registration statement may never be made effective if it is deemed by the staff to contain material deficiencies that have not been cured. Issuers that have not previously filed with the Commission can anticipate that the review process generally will take from at least six weeks, to ten or more weeks, assuming there is a good faith effort by the issuer to satisfy the staff's concerns.ⁿ⁴

[3] Expenses

The costs to the issuer of registering securities are significant and typically include underwriters compensation, legal and accounting fees, printing costs, and registration and other expenses, as indicated below. Because the total cost of registration depends on a variety of factors, including the size and complexity of the offering, it generally is not possible to make a valid comparison of expenses in specific instances.

Underwriters Compensation. The underwriters' discount or commission usually is the largest single expense of a registered offering. The amount will vary, depending upon the size of the offering, whether it involves debt or equity securities (with debt offerings usually involving a lower rate), the selling efforts required (with a highly speculative offering generally necessitating more effort than other offerings), competition from other underwriters, and market conditions. For an initial public offering, the underwriters' discount usually ranges between seven to ten percent of the gross offering proceeds. For a billion dollar debt offering rated at the highest investment grade levels, the underwriters' commission may be one percent or less. The underwriters also may receive other compensation in the form of expense reimbursements, options or warrants to purchase stock in the future, or "cheap stock" (i.e., stock issued in advance of the offering at a price well below the public offering price).

Legal Fees. Legal expenses of the issuer include fees paid to its counsel for preparing the registration statement, negotiating the letter of intent (if any) and underwriting agreement, conducting due diligence activities, assisting with the exchange listing process and performing the corporate "clean-up" tasks necessary to get the company in shape for the public offering. In addition, a legal fee customarily is paid by the issuer (usually to counsel for the underwriter) for preparing a survey of applicable state blue sky requirements and filing any required state notices.

Accounting Fees. As with legal fees, accounting costs are unavoidable. The amount varies, depending primarily on the strength of the company's internal controls and procedures, the need for including interim financial statements in the registration statement, and the extent of the procedures necessary to produce a comfort letter. Requirements of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act may cause some IPO companies to engage in extensive review and upgrading of their internal controls over financial reporting as part of their planning process.

Printing Costs. Although registration statements are not required to be printed, underwriters insist on printed documents for most types of offerings.ⁿ⁵ To minimize printing costs, many issuers use internally-produced drafts until the point is reached where the issuer and underwriters wish to distribute a preliminary prospectus.ⁿ⁶

Filing Fees. The filing fees charged by the SEC, FINRA and a stock exchange can be significant, although they ordinarily constitute a relatively small portion of the total expenses. The Commission's fee for its 2009 fiscal year was $55.80 per million dollars of securities being registered.ⁿ⁷ Stock exchange fees are based on the number of shares being listed, with a surcharge for initial listing applications. In certain limited circumstances involving securities not listed on a stock exchange, state regulatory authorities also may charge a fee, with the amount varying by jurisdiction.

Other Costs. There are various other costs that are incurred as part of the registration process, including registrar and transfer agent fees and premiums for director and officer indemnity insurance.

[4] Gun Jumping

Gun jumping occurs when issuers or their representatives engage in publicity-generating activities that "jump the gun" on the use of the statutory prospectus by conditioning the market favorably for a registered public offering. Activities by the issuer or its representatives that can create gun jumping concerns include advertisements and other promotional materials, public announcements and press releases, research reports and other publications, presentations at investor or industry conferences, and speeches and public commentaries. n8 The most common response by the Commission to gun jumping activities is to delay the effectiveness of the offering until the harm generated by the publicity excesses has subsided, although it may take more stringent action in extreme cases. n9

In 2005 the Commission modified substantially its traditional approach to gun jumping. n10 Believing that technological advances in the dissemination of information and other factors had reduced the need for many of the long-standing gun jumping restrictions, the Commission eased the limitations on communications relating to registered offerings in the following manner, as explained more fully in the remaining paragraphs of this section:

- It permitted issuers and their representatives to issue documents relating to a registered offering called "free writing prospectuses" that may contain information not included in the statutory prospectus if certain conditions are satisfied;
- It enabled "well-known seasoned issuers" (a category of issuers created under the revised communications rules known generally as "WKSIs") to make offers during the period prior to filing a registration statement with the Commission; n11
- It indicated the extent to which issuers may release factual business information and forward-looking information while in registration;
- It provided clear guidelines on the use of electronic media in connection with registered public offerings; and
- It broadened the scope of summary notices of an offering permitted to be issued after a registration statement for the offering has been filed.

[a] Free Writing Prospectuses. Prior to the 2005 reforms, the statutory prospectus was the sole document through which a registered securities offering could be made. The reforms changed this approach by allowing issuers possessing certain qualifications, n12 as well as participants in their offerings (such as underwriters, brokers and dealers), to publish or disseminate other written communications as part of the selling effort. The term "free writing prospectus" is used to characterize these other communications, n13 and it is defined broadly (with certain exceptions) to include "any written communication that constitutes an offer to sell or a solicitation of an offer to buy the securities relating to a registered offering." n14 The effect of the definition, when read with two other definitions relevant to its meaning, n15 is to allow free writing prospectuses to be issued in paper or electronic form or to be broadcast or telecast. n16

Free writing prospectuses may include information that goes beyond the information in the statutory prospectus, n17 and are widely used. n18 The use of a free writing prospectus, however, is subject to certain conditions. n19 Each such prospectus:

- Must not contain information that conflicts with the information in the statutory prospectus; n20
- Must include a cautionary legend regarding the advisability of reading the statutory prospectus; n21
- Must be filed with the Commission in most instances; n22 and

- If not required to be filed, must be retained for at least three years. n23

In addition, certain types of issuers generally must accompany or precede the free writing prospectus with a copy of the statutory prospectus, which limits the usefulness of the free writing prospectus in the marketing effort. n24 An unintentional or immaterial failure to comply with the legend, filing and retention requirements on a timely basis is curable where a good faith and reasonable effort to comply was made and corrective action to remedy the deficiency was taken as soon as practicable. n25

A company that qualifies as a WKSIs may use a free writing prospectus at any time, including the period prior to filing a registration statement. n26 Other issuers or offering participants eligible to use a free writing prospectus may do so only after a registration statement has been filed. n27 "Seasoned issuers," which are issuers eligible to use Form S-3 or Form F-3 for a primary offering of securities on those forms, may issue free writing prospectuses at any time after filing the registration statement for the offering. n28 Issuers that do not qualify as WKSIs or seasoned issuers but are required to file reports under Section 13 or 15(d) of the Exchange Act, and are referred to as "unseasoned issuers," n29 may issue free writing prospectuses only if they have filed a registration statement for the offering and the free writing prospectus is preceded or accompanied by the statutory prospectus. n30 The same conditions apply to a "non-reporting issuer," which is an issuer that is not required to file reports pursuant to Section 13 or 15(d) of the Exchange Act, such as an IPO company or an issuer that voluntarily files reports under the Exchange Act. n31

Issuers are liable under the antifraud provisions not only for free writing prospectuses that they prepare, use or refer to, but also for any issuer information contained in any other offering participant's free writing prospectus. n32 Offering participants are not subject to liability for a defective free writing prospectus if they do not use, refer to, or participate in the planning and use of the free writing prospectus by another offering participant who uses it.

[b] Traditional Offering Communications. The revised communications rules introduced a number of important distinctions among the types of communications that historically have raised gun jumping concerns.

Communications During Pre-Filing Period. As previously mentioned, WKSIs may make unrestricted oral and written offers of securities during the period before they file the registration statement for the offering. n33 Other issuers may not make any offers during the pre-filing period. With the exception of certain ineligible issuers, n34 any issuer that publishes or disseminates a communication more than 30 days before filing a registration statement will be deemed not to have engaged in a prohibited offer so long as (i) the communication does not refer to a securities offering that is or will be the subject of a registration statement, and (ii) the issuer takes reasonable steps to prevent further distribution or publication of the communication during the 30-day period before the filing date. n35

Regular Business Communications. Two safe harbor rules treat most ongoing business communications as not involving an offer of securities. One of these rules codifies a longstanding Commission interpretation that issuers required to file reports under Section 13(a) or 15(d) of the Exchange Act may continue to publish or disseminate regularly released factual or forward-looking business information at any time, including during the period in which the reporting issuer conducts a registered offering. n36 The second safe harbor rule provides that non-reporting issuers may publish or disseminate at any time factual business information (but not forward-looking information) of a type that is regularly released and intended for use by persons other than in their capacity as investors or potential investors. n37 Advertisements of, or other information about, the issuer's products or services are considered to be within this safe harbor. n38

Rule 134 Notices. Rule 134 provides a safe harbor for "tombstone ads" and other public notices containing limited information about an offering that are disseminated after a registration statement for the offering has been filed. The communications reforms in 2005 broadened the scope of these notices by allowing them to include additional information regarding the issuer, its business, the terms of the securities being offered, the mechanics of the offering process, and other matters. n39 The expanded Rule 134 notice, however, may not include a detailed term sheet for the securities being offered. n40

Media Publications or Broadcasts. Offering participants generally may use the media to make offers if the requirements for free writing prospectuses are satisfied. n41 Additional requirements, however, apply to any issuer or other offering participant who either prepares or pays for a media publication or broadcast (as in the case of an "infomercial" or written advertisement). n42 Non-reporting issuers and unseasoned issuers in these situations must furnish a statutory prospectus no later than the time of the publication or broadcast, which has the effect of limiting the information that can be conveyed to that prescribed by Rule 134. n43 Seasoned issuers that prepare or pay for a media publication or broadcast must have their most recent statutory prospectus on file with the SEC. n44 Prior or simultaneous delivery of the statutory prospectus is not required where the interview or other media event constituting a free writing prospectus is prepared by an unaffiliated media person and is not paid for by the issuer or other offering participant. n45 The free writing prospectus, however, must be filed with the SEC by the issuer or offering participant. n46

Electronic Road Shows. The 2005 reforms eliminated many of the conditions imposed by SEC no-action letters on "road show" presentations to prospective investors transmitted over the Internet or other electronic media. n47 An electronic road show is considered a written communication subject to the restrictions that apply to free writing prospectuses, except where it is transmitted live and in real-time to a live audience. n48 An electronic road show or its script typically does not have to be filed with the SEC. Filing, however, is necessary for an electronic road show relating to an IPO offering of common equity or convertible equity securities where the road show is not bona fide or not readily available to an unrestricted audience. n49

Issuer Web Sites. An offer of an issuer's securities, either on the issuer's web site or on a third-party web site hyperlinked to the issuer's web site, is a written communication that, unless exempt, will be a free writing prospectus of the issuer. n50 Historical issuer information that can be accessed by visitors to the web site under a separate section containing such information ordinarily will not be considered a free writing prospectus unless it is incorporated by reference into, or included in, the statutory prospectus, or is used or referred to in connection with the offering. n51 Other information located on or hyperlinked to the issuer's web site also would not be viewed as a free writing prospectus where the information was published previously. n52

Research Reports. Research reports issued by broker-dealers and others relating to an issuer that is in registration are subject to the limitations imposed by Rules 137, 138 and 139 under the Securities Act. The reforms expanded the situations in which offering and non-offering participants may disseminate research reports during a registered offering. n53

[c] Preventive Actions. Although the communications rules adopted in 2005 have reduced the likelihood of gun jumping violations, issuers must remain sensitive to the dangers of uncontrolled communications relating to the offering. To avoid inadvertent violations, the issuer and underwriters should set up internal control procedures designed to ensure that the possibilities for gun jumping are minimized. Among other things, these procedures should require that, once the decision to proceed with an offering is made, (1) the issuer's web site be examined on a regular basis for forward-looking information and other potentially offending statements; (2) all press releases, speeches, and other proposed public statements be reviewed in advance by counsel; and (3) responses to media inquiries be limited to factual information. n54

[5] Integration

Almost from the inception of the Securities Act the Commission has been concerned that issuers might seek to circumvent the registration requirements of the Act by separating a single nonexempt offering into several purportedly exempt offerings. n55 Where it appears to the Commission staff that separate offerings are connected in a meaningful manner, it will "integrate" them by treating them as if they were a single issue for purposes of determining whether an exemption from the registration requirements of the Securities Act is available. For example, it is not uncommon for the staff to question whether a private offering made shortly before the filing of a registration statement for a public offering should be integrated with the public offering.

Although issuers are able to resolve most integration concerns through a dialogue with the staff, in some instances the staff will not agree with the issuer's view. In such circumstances, the issuer may be forced either to (i) withdraw the registration statement and abandon the public offering for a prescribed period; (ii) make a registered rescission offer to investors in the offering that the staff believes should be integrated; or (iii) include a risk factor in the registration statement regarding the contingent liability that may exist (assuming the staff is agreeable to that approach).

[a] The Five-Factor Test. The SEC provided substantial guidance regarding the application of the integration doctrine in 1961, n56 when it announced the five-factor test described below for considering whether separate offerings should be integrated as a single offering. n57 It is not necessary that all five factors be present in order to integrate multiple offerings. n58 Because the application of the five-factor test depends on the particular facts, there often is no clear-cut answer when applying the test to an individual situation. n59 Further, the staff appears to have taken a stricter approach than it formerly did to the application of the five-factor test, making it difficult for issuers to predict what approaches will be satisfactory to the staff. n60 As a result, efforts to resolve integration issues raised by the SEC staff occasionally can be contentious.

Are the offerings part of a single plan of financing. Important considerations in applying this factor include the timing of capital raising plans and whether the offerings are financially interdependent. For example, a court declined to integrate two offerings where the second offering was necessitated by "totally unforeseen operating difficulties." n61 And the SEC staff decided not to integrate a registered secondary offering with a private sale by the issuer to a large investor, noting that one offering was by the issuer and the other by its stockholders. n62

Are the offerings made for the same general purpose. This factor often is not significantly different from the "single plan of financing" factor and the two factors have been viewed by the staff as the most important of the five factors. n63 Examples of situations in which the Commission staff has found separate offerings to have different purposes include (i) an offering of stock options to motivate employees and a later offering to raise capital, n64 and (ii) an offering of commercial paper and an offering of unsecured promissory notes where the proceeds of the commercial paper were used for short-term "current transactions" and the proceeds of the notes were segregated and used for noncurrent transactions. n65

Do the offerings involve the same class of securities. Although offerings of different classes of securities (such as common stock and notes) ordinarily are not integrated, there may be a danger of integration where the two classes of securities are functional equivalents. The danger is most acute where one security can readily be substituted for another, pursuant to a conversion privilege or otherwise. For example, the SEC staff integrated an offering of common stock with an offering of bonds that were immediately convertible into the common stock. n66 But the staff did not integrate an offering of warrants to purchase common stock with an offering of common stock where the warrants could not be exercised for five years and were not transferable. n67

Are the offerings made at or about the same time. Offerings made within less than six months of each other may be considered to be at or about the same time, based on statements by the Commission staff n68 and the adoption by the Commission of a "safe harbor" from integration for offerings separated by more than six months. n69

Is the same type of consideration received. The majority of offerings involve the same form of consideration (i.e., cash). Where two offerings involve different forms of consideration, a sufficient basis may exist for not applying the integration doctrine. n70

[b] Methods of Avoidance. The best method of avoiding an integration problem in the context of a proposed registered offering is to discuss with the Commission staff in a pre-filing conference possible integration concerns that the staff might raise after filing. These concerns might be identified by reviewing relevant SEC releases and commentaries, including statements made by the staff in comment letters on filings made by other issuers in similar circumstances, which since August 1, 2004 have been posted on the SEC's web site with the issuers' Securities Act and Exchange Act filings. The issuer may have flexibility before filing to address staff concerns that might not exist after filing occurs. For example, a proposed private placement that contains pricing or other terms which the staff believes would cause investors not to be at market risk upon the filing of the registration statement may result in a comment by the staff that leaving the terms unchanged would require integration of the private placement with the registered offering. Concerns of this nature can be addressed before filing by changing the terms of the private placement before it is finalized. But changing the terms after filing will not resolve an integration concern raised by the staff because, as explained below, the staff requires that the investors must be irrevocably committed to the private offering before the registration statement is filed. n71

In addition to using a pre-filing conference to address potential staff concerns, an issuer may consider reliance on the following SEC rules and staff positions to avoid application of the integration doctrine:

Six-Month Gap. Rules 147(b)(2), 251(c)(2)(v) and 502(a), respectively, provide that intrastate, Regulation A and Regulation D limited offering and private placement transactions that are separated from other transactions by more than six months will not be integrated with the other transactions. n72

Discrete Exempt Offering. Rule 701 and Rule 144A both indicate that the offerings exempted by those rules are discrete from other offerings and therefore may not be integrated with the other offerings. n73 In addition, a note to Rule 502(a) indicates that foreign offerings made in compliance with Regulation S generally will not be integrated with simultaneous domestic offerings.

Prior Private Placement. Rule 152 provides a safe harbor for an issuer that engages in a valid private placement and then files a registration statement for a public offering. The rule precludes integration of the registered offering with any prior private offering under Section 4(2) of the Securities Act or Rule 506 under Regulation D, so long as the private offering is completed or abandoned before the public offering. n74 For purposes of the rule, (i) a prior private placement is deemed to have been completed when the investors irrevocably commit to purchase or accept the securities, subject only to conditions beyond their control, n75 and (ii) a registered public offering is deemed to commence upon the filing of the registration statement for the offering. n76 An important staff position that should not be overlooked is the so-called "Macy's Position," in which the staff indicated that where the closing of a public offering is a condition to the completion of a prior private placement and the decision whether to complete the public offering rests with some of the private investors who are board members, senior executives or other members of the issuer's management, integration will not be necessary because these investors are deemed not to need the protections of the Securities Act. n77

Acquisition Rights Not Currently Exercisable. The SEC staff takes the position that warrants or rights (such as conversion or subscription rights) to acquire other securities represent an ongoing offering of the underlying securities so long as the warrants or rights are currently exercisable. n78 Accordingly, a continuous private offering of securities convertible into common stock may lose its private placement exemption upon the commencement of a public offering of the common stock during the period in which the privately placed convertible securities are convertible or exercisable for common stock. To avoid integration, the issuer must complete all facets of its private placement of the convertible securities under Rule 152 before it files a registration statement for an offering of the common stock. Notwithstanding the deemed continuous offering of the underlying common stock, the staff will evaluate whether the private offering of convertible securities would be integrated with the public offering by reference to the time of the initial private placement of the convertible securities. If the initial private placement of the convertible securities would not be integrated with the public offering, there should be no further integration concern, even though the private offering represented by the convertible securities will continue during the period in which the public offering for the common stock has commenced. The staff, however, has raised issues regarding so-called "additional investment rights," in which the investor may exercise the right to receive not only more shares, but also more warrants. For example, transactions involving "springing warrants," which are warrants that result in additional warrants springing to life upon the exercise of the original warrants, have elicited a staff comment that the private placement in which the original warrants were issued was not completed, but was still ongoing. Under current staff positions, to avoid integration in circumstances involving a post-filing offering of warrants or other rights, it generally is necessary to prohibit exercisability of the warrants or rights until at least one year after the date of issuance. n79

(n5)Footnote 5. The increasing use of the Internet to circulate prospectuses may result in a significant reduction in printing costs in the future.

(n6)Footnote 6. Due to advancements in desk-top publishing, it is possible to produce internally a prospectus that has the quality of one produced by a financial printer. As a result, other than in major underwritten offerings or where high-quality artwork is featured in the prospectus, some issuers seek to reduce printing costs by making all changes on the internal document, and then submitting the final version to the printer for production by offset printing of the number of copies necessary for distribution.

(n7)Footnote 7. Pursuant to Section 6(b) of the Securities Act, the registration fee is set annually by the SEC, based on the costs to the government of the registration process and related activities. The maximum aggregate offering price is determined under Rule 457. The fee ordinarily is paid at the time of filing the registration statement. Well-known seasoned issuers filing an automatic shelf registration statement, however, are permitted by Rule 457(r) to elect under Rule 456(b) to pay the registration fee on a pay-as-you-go basis, with the fee deferred to the time of a takedown of securities from the registration statement.

(n8)Footnote 8. Important cases relating to gun jumping include Chris-Craft Indus. v. Bangor Punta Corp., 426 F.2d 569, (2d Cir. 1970); SEC v. Arvada Corp., 169 F. No. 33-4697 (1964); Sec. Act Rel. No. 33-5009 (1969); Sec. Act Rel. No. 33-5180 (1971).

which focuses on disclosure as the primary remedy, see the prospectus dated August 18, 2004 for the IPO registration statement of Google, Inc., available at <http://www.sec.gov/Archives/edgar/data/1288776/000119312504143377/d424b4.htm> (text of offensive gun jumping statements included in appendix to prospectus; risk factor and potential rescission right disclosed in body of prospectus). Examples of enforcement actions include the path breaking cases of In re Carl M. Loeb Rhoades & Co., 38 S.E.C. 843 (1959) ; and In re First Marine Corp., 38 S.E.C. 882 (1959) ; and actions in later years involving In the Matter of Competitive Capital Corp., Release No. 34-9184 (1971); In the Matter of Gold Properties Restoration Co., Inc., Release No. 33-6953 (1992); and In the Matter of Goldman Sachs & Co., Inc., Release No. 33-8434 (2004). Finally, disclosure of a contingent liability associated with gun jumping may cause the issuer's accountants to require that the company include a contingent liability in its financial statements or discuss the possibility of a rescission right in the footnotes to the financials. See, e.g., the final prospectus of Kraft Foods, Inc., dated June 12, 2001, available at <http://www.sec.gov/Archives/edgar/data/1103982/000095013001502333/d424b1.txt>.

(n11)Footnote 11. Rule 405 indicates that an issuer will qualify as a WKSII if it is eligible to use Form S-3 or F-3 and either (i) has a worldwide public common equity float of $700 million or more, or (ii) has issued during the immediately preceding three years in registered offerings for cash at least $1 billion of non-convertible securities, other than common equity.

(n12)Footnote 12. As indicated in Rule 164(e)-(g), some issuers are either ineligible for, or excluded from, the benefits provided by the communications reforms, and some offerings also are excluded. Rule 164(e) states that it is not available to issuers within the definition of "ineligible issuer" in Rule 405. Generally, an ineligible issuer either (i) possesses certain disqualifying characteristics specified in Rule 405 (such as blank check companies, penny stock issuers, and shell companies); (ii) is not current in filing required Exchange Act reports; or (iii) has been the subject of certain legal or enforcement proceedings specified in the rule. Rule 164(f) states that registered investment companies and business development companies, which are subject to independent regulatory requirements, are excluded from the use of free writing prospectuses. Rule 164(g) indicates that business combination transactions as defined in Rule 165(f)(1) and offerings on Form S-8 other than those by a WKSII also are excluded.

(n14)Footnote 14. See Rule 405. The definition makes no reference to oral offers because these have been permitted by the statute from inception.

(n15)Footnote 15. The term "written communication" used in the definition of free writing prospectus is defined in Rule 405 to mean any communication that is written or printed, a radio or television broadcast, or a graphic communication. A "graphic communication" is defined in Rule 405 to include all forms of electronic media, such as videotapes, CD-ROMs, web sites, voice mail systems and computers, although an exception exists for any communication which, at the time of origination, is live and disseminated in real-time to a live audience.

(n17)Footnote 17. See Rule 433(c)(1).

(n18)Footnote 18. The most common type of free writing prospectus from the outset has been a term sheet containing the pricing terms for an offering determined after completion of the marketing period. See, e.g., S. Thel, Free Writing, 33 J. Corp. Law 941 (Summer 2008), and comments in late 2006 by Martin Dunn, then-Deputy Director of the SEC's Division of Corporation Finance. Mr. Dunn indicated that in the first 10 months after the revised communications rules became effective (i.e., the ten-month period ending September 30, 2006), operating companies used free writing prospectuses in five ways: (i) 60% as a term sheet (usually in debt offerings); (ii) 29% as an offering marketing tool; (iii) 6% to furnish information previously provided to the media (such as filing a full transcript of a media interview); (iv) 4% as a prospectus update (e.g., to correct errors or update information); and (v) 1% to provide aspirational information about the issuer (i.e., "how great the company is"). 38 Sec. Reg. & L. Rep. (BNA) 1946 (November 20, 2006).

(n19)Footnote 19. Communications issued in connection with registered offerings involving a business combination transaction and communications relating to offerings of asset-backed securities registered on Form S-3 are subject to special requirements described in Rules 166 and 167, respectively, that do not apply to free writing prospectuses generally.

(n20)Footnote 20. See Rule 433(c)(1)(i). The information in the statutory prospectus is deemed to include information incorporated by reference from the issuer's reports filed under Section 13 or 15(d) of the Exchange Act. Id.

(n21)Footnote 21. See Rule 433(c)(2).

(n22)Footnote 22. See Rule 433(d) for a description of the circumstances under which a free writing prospectus must be filed with the SEC. Generally, issuers are required to file with the SEC free writing prospectuses they prepare or use, as well as free writing prospectuses prepared or used by other offering participants (such as underwriters) that contain material information about the issuer or its securities not previously filed. Issuers also must file any free writing prospectus that describes the final terms of the offering. Underwriters and other offering participants generally do not have to file free writing prospectuses used or referred to by them, except where the prospectus is distributed by or on behalf of the participant in a manner reasonably designed to lead to its broad unrestricted dissemination.

(n26)Footnote 26. See Rule 163 and Sec. Act Rel. No. 33-8591, § III.C. (2005). If a WKSI issues a written communication constituting an offer of securities prior to the filing of a registration statement for the offering, Rule 163 requires the WKSI to (i) include a legend in the communication indicating that the WKSI may file a registration statement with the SEC for the offering that the offeree should review before investing, and (ii) file the communication with the SEC if it later files a registration statement.

(n31)Footnote 31. See Rule 433(b)(2). One commentator has suggested that a six-question checklist be used to determine whether, and in what form, a communication can be a free writing prospectus ("FWP"): (1) Is the issuer eligible to use an FWP? (2) What is the category of the issuer for purposes of issuing an FWP? (3) Is the communication at issue within the definition of an FWP? (4) Is the communication an offer of a security? (5) Is the communication written? and (6) When is the communication made? See A. Pena, The Free-Writing Prospectus: A Six

Question Approach for Issuers, 35 Sec. Reg. L.J. 36 (Spring 2007).

Accordingly, for so long as this staff position remains in effect, securities that are not convertible or exercisable for at least one year after issuance should not be deemed to constitute an offering of the underlying security until the convertible securities become convertible or exercisable.

2-7A Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 7A.05

AUTHOR: Peter J. Romeo

[1] Joint Effort

Preparing a registration statement requires a joint effort by the issuer, underwriters and auditor because all are potentially liable under Section 11 of the Securities Act for material misstatements or omissions in the registration statement. All of the parties should closely coordinate their activities during the period in which the registration statement is being drafted to minimize duplication of effort and maximize each party's understanding of the issuer and the offering. Further, all of the parties should examine each draft of the registration statement critically and express their views freely, since experience indicates that only through open and frank discussion are potential disclosure problems and inconsistencies likely to be discovered and addressed.

[2] Preliminary Work

Issuers commencing the IPO process rarely have their affairs in a condition suitable for a public offering. Accordingly, a considerable amount of preliminary work known as the "corporate clean-up" usually is necessary before the registration statement can be prepared.

The initial task in the clean-up process usually is to transform the organizational and capital structure of the company into a form suitable for a public offering. Generally, this means that the business of the issuer must be conducted through a single corporation or a parent corporation with subsidiaries. If the business has been conducted through several corporations under common ownership, through partnerships or limited liability companies, or through combinations of business entities, the underwriters often will insist that the company adopt one of the simplified organizational structures mentioned above that is more functional from a public company standpoint. This can be accomplished by reorganizing through the use of mergers, liquidations, reclassifications, forward or reverse stock splits, or capital contributions.

The corporate clean-up may involve many other changes as well. Among the tasks performed by counsel to the issuer that may result in changes are the following: (i) review of the articles of incorporation, bylaws, corporate resolutions and stock records for the purpose of uncovering and correcting defects and implementing a corporate governance structure consistent with exchange listing standards; (ii) review of material contracts (including loan agreements, registration rights agreements, and rights of first refusal) to determine whether amendments or waivers of provisions may be necessary; (iii) examination of loan or similar arrangements with insiders to determine whether the arrangements would violate the restrictions on loans or other prohibited extensions of credit to directors and executive officers contained in Section 402 of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act; (iv) preparation, revision or termination of employment contracts with insiders as necessary; (v) adoption or amendment of stock incentive and other benefit plans for employees and directors as appropriate; and (vi) termination or revision of affiliated party arrangements as required.

If the issuer has not already done so, it should engage as its auditor an established accounting firm that is registered with the Public Company Accounting Oversight Board ("PCAOB") pursuant to Section 102 of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act. A registered firm that is in good standing with the PCAOB should have no difficulty in satisfying the Commission's requirement that it be independent of the issuer. Further, its expertise can be extremely valuable if the issuer has not previously been audited, since a first audit ordinarily will bring to the surface a large number of problems that a less experienced firm might have difficulty coping with.

Finally, those issuers with a preexisting obligation to file periodic reports with the Commission under Section 13(a) or 15(d) of the Exchange Act should make certain they are in full compliance with the periodic reporting requirements of the Exchange Act at the time of filing the registration statement. Form S-3, which is the short registration form that permits incorporation by reference of Exchange Act periodic reports, automatically attaches Securities Act liability to materially deficient disclosures in the reports. More important, the Commission staff will not process a registration statement unless the issuer currently is in compliance with its Exchange Act reporting obligations.

[3] Organizational Meeting

The organizational meeting is the first opportunity for the entire group involved in the proposed offering to begin working as a team. The meeting typically is held shortly after the managing underwriter is selected and is attended by representatives of the issuer, the managing underwriter and the auditor, as well as counsel for the issuer and the underwriter. Among the matters ordinarily discussed at the meeting are the size and structural aspects of the offering, sensitive disclosure concerns, significant accounting issues, stock exchange listing matters and prospective compliance with the exchange's corporate governance standards, and the time and responsibility schedule prepared by the managing underwriter. The selection of the registration form also may be discussed, although Form S-1 or (for foreign private issuers) Form F-1 is required for an IPO involving an issuer for which no specialized form is available.

[4] Due Diligence

Due diligence is the process by which parties who may be liable for material misstatements or omissions in a registration statement seek to verify the disclosures in the registration statement. Due diligence not only provides support for the disclosures, but it also shields all parties other than the issuer from liability if they can establish that a reasonable basis existed for their belief that the registration statement was accurate and complete. n1 The standard of reasonableness is "that required of a prudent man in the management of his own property." n2 Important cases involving the due diligence defense include Escott v. Bar Chris Construction Corp., n3 Feit v. Leasco Data Processing Equipment Corp., n4 and In re WorldCom, Inc. Securities Litigation. n5

There is some uncertainty as to what is necessary to establish a due diligence defense, since the courts have held that due diligence for Section 11 persons "will vary with the degree of involvement of the individual, his expertise, and his access to the pertinent information and data." n6 The Commission has issued its own statement on the subject of due diligence in Rule 176, which describes circumstances bearing on the reasonableness of a person's due diligence investigation. According to the Commission, the rule allows each person who may have liability under Section 11 to "evaluate the surrounding facts, including the extent of his prior relationship with the registrant, and utilize techniques of investigation appropriate to the circumstances of the offering." n7 The rule also confirms the concept stated in the case law that the degree of investigation is not the same for all Section 11 persons, but varies, depending on the circumstances. n8

Rule 176 states that the following circumstances are relevant in determining whether the due diligence defense can be relied upon by a person:

- The type of issuer;
- The type of security;
- The type of person;
- The office held when the person is an officer;
- The presence or absence of another relationship to the issuer when the person is a director or proposed director;
- Reasonable reliance on officers, employees, and other whose duties should have given them knowledge of the particular facts (in light of the functions and responsibilities of the particular person with respect to the issuer and the filing);
- When the person is an underwriter, the type of underwriting arrangement, the role of the particular person as an underwriter and the availability of information with respect to the registration; and
- Whether, with respect to a fact or document incorporated by reference, the particular person had any responsibility for the fact or document at the time of the filing from which it was incorporated.

At the least, it seems clear that each director and officer must become thoroughly familiar with the registration statement to have any hope of relying successfully on the defense. n9 These persons should review the document critically and raise questions about doubtful disclosures. n10 Moreover, directors and officers should not labor under the erroneous belief that they can avoid their responsibility by relying on counsel or some other person, since Bar Chris indicates that they must fulfill their investigative obligation personally. n11

The investment banks that act as professional underwriting firms traditionally have hired experienced counsel to assist them in meeting their due diligence responsibilities under Section 11. Where a shelf registration occurs, however, there frequently is little time before an offering is taken down from the shelf, even with the assistance of counsel, to conduct the type of due diligence investigation necessary for a high level of comfort. n12 The Commission's adoption of Rules 176 and 412 has allayed to some extent concerns by some professional underwriters about their ability to meet their due diligence responsibilities with respect to periodic reports under the Exchange Act incorporated by reference into shelf registration statements. Nonetheless, shelf registration, particularly automatic shelf registration permitted for well-known seasoned issuers under the SEC's 2005 reforms, has heightened the need for offering participants to conduct their due diligence as rapidly as possible. n13 Further, the numerous corporate scandals in the early 2000s involving financial and accounting misdeeds have emphasized the necessity for directors and underwriters to utilize in-depth due diligence procedures to justify reliance on the issuer's audited financial statements. n14

[5] Drafting Responsibilities. The objective when drafting the registration statement is to produce a document that both interests investors in purchasing the issuer's securities and shields the participants in the registration process from Securities Act liability. In effect, the registration statement is both a marketing and defensive document. It will be successful in meeting its dual purposes only if it has a compelling story to tell investors that is described in a complete and truthful manner.

The drafting process involves an allocation of duties among the parties. The issuer, through its counsel, generally prepares the nonfinancial portions of the registration statement, the auditor examines the financial portions, and the underwriters and their counsel assume responsibility for the underwriting documents. Counsel for the issuer usually takes the lead role in coordinating the activities of all of these parties and in drafting the registration statement.

The process of preparing the registration statement should be an organized one, with time schedules set up and adhered to, working groups formed, and meetings held to discuss the document. n15 The process usually begins with the issuer's counsel identifying the information to be assembled, seeking to verify the information, and then preparing a draft in conjunction with the issuer. Drafting the registration statement is not a simple "fill in the blanks" exercise in which the requirements of the applicable registration form are complied with by rote. Instead, the draft is prepared in narrative form, with basic information about the issuer and the offering set forth in a "Summary" in the forepart of the document and other detailed information included in later sections. n16 The initial draft is circulated to all concerned parties and thereafter typically undergoes substantial revision at numerous drafting sessions in which all parties participate before it is considered ready for filing with the Commission.

[6] Plain English

The SEC's rules require the prospectus for registration statements to be written in "plain English." n17 According to the Commission, writing in plain English requires at a minimum:

- Short sentences;
- Definite, concrete, everyday language;
- Active voice;
- Tabular presentation or a "bullet list" for complex material whenever possible;
- No legal jargon or highly technical business terms; and
- No multiple negatives. n18

The issuer must prepare the entire prospectus in accordance with the following four general writing techniques designed to make life easier for readers of the prospectus: n19

- Present information in clear, concise sections, paragraphs, and sentences, using short explanatory sentences and bullet lists whenever possible;
- Use descriptive headings and subheadings;
- Avoid frequent reliance on glossaries or defined terms as the primary means of explaining information in the prospectus; and
- Avoid legal and highly technical business terminology.

The Commission also has stated that persons preparing a prospectus should avoid the following writing conventions because they make the prospectus harder to read: n20

- Legalistic or overly complex presentations that make the substance of the disclosure difficult to understand;

- Vague boilerplate explanations that are readily subject to differing interpretations;
- Copying of complex information directly from legal documents without any clear and concise explanation of the provisions; and
- Repetitive disclosures that increase the size of the document but do not enhance the quality of the information.

In its comment letters on registration statements, the staff has identified a number of other principles that it believes all issuers should adhere to when preparing documents in plain English. Among other things, the letters indicate that issuers should:

- Eliminate legalese (evident from words such as "certain," "such," and "hereof"), jargon (such as "synergy" or "leverage"), vague terminology (such as "strategic alternatives"), and technical terms;
- Restrict defined terms to industry and proprietary terms only, and avoid acronyms;
- Limit the use of cross-references;
- Avoid parenthetical phrases, embedded lists of information, and excessive capitalization
- Avoid excessive use of footnotes in summary or selected financial information;
- Use Arabic numerals or alphabet letters, instead of roman numerals;
- Make right margins free-flowing, rather than justified; and
- Describe each risk factor by using a fully descriptive caption in sentence form and a concise paragraph that emphasizes the risk early in the discussion.

[7] Materiality

Contrary to popular wisdom, the Securities Act does not require all material information to be included in a registration statement. n21 What is essential for inclusion is any specifically required information, as well as any information that would prevent included statements from being misleading. n22 The term "material" is defined in Rule 405. The definition indicates that the term, when used in connection with a requirement to disclose information about a specified subject, applies only to information for which there is a substantial likelihood that a reasonable investor would attach importance in determining whether to purchase the security registered. n23

It is relevant to note the Supreme Court's view in Basic, Inc. v. Levinson that the materiality of a speculative event should be determined by balancing the magnitude of the event and the probability that it will happen, with the probability threshold being reduced as the magnitude increases. n24 Also relevant is the SEC's comment in Staff Accounting Bulletin 99 that materiality in the financial statement context should not be measured solely by quantitative standards, such as the percentage effect of an event on revenue or net income. n25 When addressing materiality concerns, an issuer also should consider qualitative factors that take into account the nature of the event and the surrounding circumstances. Thus, a company is required by the SEC to take into account all of the relevant circumstances, rather than simply using a formulaic approach involving the application of numerical standards to determine materiality.

[8] Forward-Looking Information

For much of its existence, the Commission prohibited public companies from including projections and forecasts in their registration statements and other disclosure documents. In the late 1960s, however, this attitude began to change, in recognition of the increasing dependence by the marketplace on estimates of future earnings. n26 By 1978, the Commission completed its turnaround on this issue by formally encouraging the inclusion of forward-looking statements in filed documents and annual reports. n27 The Commission adopted at that time essentially identical safe harbor rules under both the Securities Act and the Exchange Act (Rules 175 and 3b-6, respectively) for the issuance of projections, forecasts and other forward-looking information under prescribed circumstances. n28 Essentially, the rules require that the forward-looking statements have a reasonable basis (although it is not necessary to state the assumptions upon which they are based) and be made in good faith. n29 As a result, public companies can issue forward-looking statements within prescribed limits. n30

Despite the Commission's reversal of policy, the vast majority of public companies were nervous about issuing projections during the registration period because of the potential liability that could result if a court found that the requirements of Rule 175 were not met. n31 Most issuers did not want to risk being sued, or be faced with an obligation to correct a forecast that later proved to be materially inaccurate. Much of this concern eventually was dissipated by two developments. The first was the adoption by the judiciary in the early 1990s of the "bespeaks caution" doctrine. Under this doctrine, an issuer may escape liability for forward-looking statements made in good faith if the issuer shrouds the statements in meaningful, prominently disclosed, cautionary language warning investors about the dangers of relying on the statements. n32 The second was the enactment by Congress in 1995 of the Private Securities Litigation Reform Act ("PSLRA"), n33 which contains a safe harbor from Securities Act liability for forward-looking statements by certain qualifying issuers n34 that is broader than the Commission's safe harbor. n35

The PSLRA safe harbor covers both written and oral forward-looking statements that satisfy certain requirements. The safe harbor can be relied upon by qualifying issuers if the forward-looking statement either (i) is identified as a forward-looking statement and is accompanied by meaningful cautionary statements identifying important factors that could cause actual results to differ materially from those in the forward-looking statement, or (ii) a plaintiff fails to prove that the statement was made with actual knowledge that it was false or misleading. The legislative history of the PSLRA makes it clear that "boilerplate warnings will not suffice as meaningful cautionary statements" for issuers relying on approach (i) above, and that courts should "examine only the cautionary statement" and "should not examine the state of mind of the person making the statement." n36

The safe harbor also is available for oral forward-looking statements by employees, directors and other persons acting on behalf of qualifying issuers. To qualify for the safe harbor, the speaker must (i) provide a warning that the statement is a forward-looking one and actual results could differ materially from those contained in the forward-looking statement, and (ii) identify a readily available written document (such as a registration statement or Exchange Act report) containing additional relevant information. Neither oral nor written forward-looking statements are required to be updated under the safe harbor. n37

[9] Financial Statements and Data

All registration statements for public offerings must contain audited financial statements, and most usually include other financial data as well. n38 Pursuant to Section 401 of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act, the financial statements must reflect all material correcting adjustments identified by the issuer's auditor as being in accordance with GAAP and SEC requirements. Consistent with a separate provision of Section 401, the SEC has adopted Regulation G and amended Item 10 of Regulation S-K for the purpose of restricting the presentation of pro forma and other non-GAAP financial data. n39 Item 10, which is applicable to all non-GAAP financial measures included in Commission filings (including registration statements), imposes numerous disclosure obligations and other conditions on the use of such measures. Among other things, the presentation of the financial measure must include (i) the most directly comparable GAAP financial measure (or measures); (ii) a reconciliation of the non-GAAP measure to the GAAP measure; (iii) the reasons why the issuer believes the non-GAAP financial measure provides useful information to investors regarding the issuer's financial condition and results of operations; and (iv) any additional purposes, if material, for which management uses the non-GAAP financial measure.

In 2009, the SEC adopted rules requiring domestic and foreign public companies that prepare their financial statements in accordance with U.S. generally accepted accounting principles ("US GAAP") to file financial statements contained in their registration statements, periodic reports, and transition reports in an interactive data format using eXtensible Business Reporting Language ("XBRL"). n40 The interactive data required to be filed must be included as an exhibit to the registration statements and periodic reports filed by these companies. The XBRL requirement, which is being phased in over a three-year period, n41 currently applies only to financial statements included in registration statements and periodic reports but is expected to encompass other data in the future. n42

[10] Risk Factors

A discussion of the principal factors that make an offering speculative or risky must be included in the forepart of the prospectus, immediately after the "Summary" section under the caption "Risk Factors." n43 Perhaps more than any other section of the prospectus, the "Risk Factors" section provides the issuer with the best means for avoiding liability for the offering. The warnings to investors in this section generally should put the issuer in good position to rely on the "bespeaks caution" defense if a purchaser later alleges that the offering involved fraud. n44

The Risk Factors section should concisely summarize in plain English n45 the major risks attendant to an investment in the issuer. Disclosure of the individual risk factors should adhere generally to the following guidelines evident from informal statements by the SEC staff in staff legal bulletins and comment letters issued to individual issuers:

- The risk factors should be limited to those that are specific to the company, and not include risks that could apply to any issuer or any offering; n46
- The risk factors generally should be grouped into three categories: (i) company risks, (ii) industry risks, and (iii) investment risks; n47
- The risk factors should be presented in the order of their importance within a particular category;
- Individual risk factors should be presented by using a boldface caption describing the nature of the risk in a single sentence followed by a brief explanation of the information relevant to the risk;
- Where possible, examples of the risk should be included in the explanation; n48 and
- Countervailing considerations that may mitigate the described risk should not be included because they would diminish the effect of the warning regarding the risk and reduce the protection from liability otherwise available. n49

The number of risk factors will vary depending on the issuer and its particular circumstances. Although no material risk factors should be omitted, the issuer should not include generic risk factors unless they apply specifically to the issuer.

[11] Management's Discussion and Analysis ("MD&A")

The SEC views the MD&A as one of the most important sections of the prospectus, and its legal and accounting staff focus closely on it. The purpose of the MD&A is to provide the investing public with management's view of the issuer's business from both a short-term and long-term perspective, as well as its analysis of year-to-year changes in the issuer's financial statements for the last three fiscal years. n50 The analysis must encompass not only the issuer's results of operations, but also its liquidity and capital resources.

A key element of the MD&A is the requirement that the issuer disclose any known trends, demands, commitments, events or uncertainties that could materially affect its financial condition or results of operations. n51 The SEC staff has been known to review MD&A disclosures at a later date and, with the benefit of hindsight, inquire why the issuer did not alert the public to trends or uncertainties that led to subsequent material developments. Accordingly, it is imperative at the time of preparing the MD&A that the issuer focus not only on what has occurred in the past but also on what the future may hold. n52

The SEC staff also has emphasized the need for issuers to harmonize the presentation of its financial results in the MD&A with the presentations of those results outside its Exchange Act reports and other filings with the SEC, including registration statements. n53 Where the staff believes there may be a discrepancy in the presentations, it may require an issuer to reconcile inconsistent disclosure or to explain why the MD&A omits material information disclosed outside the filing. n54

[12] Description of Business

Item 101 of Regulation S-K requires the issuer to describe (i) the general development of its business, (ii) the business it has conducted and intends to conduct through itself and its subsidiaries, (iii) data for each of its segments (assuming there are at least two significant segments), n55 and (iv) data regarding its foreign operations. Ordinarily, the Commission staff does not comment heavily on the description of business where it perceives the description to be fair and balanced. In such situations, it generally seeks only to assure that the issuer has included, in a clear and concise manner, all of the information specifically required by Item 101 and can support the information. n56

[13] Pre-Filing Conferences

Important questions of a unique or unusual nature sometimes arise during the preparation of the registration statement that can materially affect the disclosures to be made or, indeed, the decision whether to make the offering at all. For example, there may be major difficulties in complying with the applicable financial statement requirements because of the unavailability of audited financial statements for the requisite period. n57 Or, there may be questions as to whether a prior failed enterprise is a predecessor of the issuer and therefore must be fully described in the registration statement. A pre-filing conference with the SEC staff is one way of obtaining guidance on these issues or possibly a waiver of the troublesome requirements where good cause is shown.

Although the SEC staff is not enthusiastic about pre-filing conferences and would prefer that most offerings simply be filed, it does hold itself out as being available for them when circumstances warrant. n58 Generally, however, the staff will insist that the requesting party submit a letter in advance describing the nature of the problems causing concern. The letter enables the staff to determine whether the problems can be resolved by telephone or letter without a conference. Where the staff agrees to hold a conference (and it almost always will if the registrant is insistent), the letter is used to determine whether members of the Division's accounting or legal staff also should attend. The staff, however, has made it clear that it will rarely review a draft copy of the registration statement at a conference or any other time prior to the filing date.

In the case of pre-filing conferences involving complex accounting issues, the SEC's accounting staff has prescribed a protocol to be followed by prospective registrants. n59 Generally, the protocol requires a submission in writing (by mail, fax or e-mail) of the relevant information to the Office of Chief Accountant, with a copy to the Chief Accountant of the Division of Corporation Finance. The submission should encompass a dozen specific items, including background information and facts, the question being raised, possible alternative answers and recommendations, and bases for the recommendations. If a formal meeting is requested, sufficient advance notice (usually at least five business days) is required to be given in writing. Following resolution of the issue, the registrant is required to submit a letter to the staff describing its understanding of the staff's position. If the staff objects to the description, it will inform the registrant. If the registrant fails to revise the letter to the staff's satisfaction, the staff will issue its own letter describing its understanding of the facts and the position taken.

Although pre-filing conferences do not always result in a resolution of the matters at issue, they often are useful even if the registrant fails to receive the response desired. As one commentator put it, "[i]n those instances in which the staff either is without authority to bend the rules or is simply unwilling to do so for fear of compromising investor protection, it is better to learn of the problem before wasting time and effort in the preparation of the registration statement." n60

[14] Filing Requirements

Filing the registration statement with the Commission involves a number of considerations, including compliance with the Commission's electronic filing requirements and payment of the registration fee.

[a] Electronic Form. The Commission requires all registration statements under the Securities Act to be filed in electronic form. n61 The submissions are made on EDGAR, the Commission's electronic filing system. n62 The requirements applicable to EDGAR submissions are set forth in Regulation S-T, n63 the Commission's electronic filing regulation.

As a result of the mandate to file electronically on EDGAR, a number of Commission rules prescribing specific requirements for filing registration statements in paper form with the Commission no longer apply to domestic issuers. n64 The rules effectively have been superseded by Rules 308 and 309 of Regulation S-T, which state that provisions in the Commission's rules relating to type size, font and other legibility requirements, as well as requirements for paper size, binding, sequential page numbering and number of copies, do not apply to documents satisfying the electronic format requirements of EDGAR. The legibility requirements of Rules 403 and 420 under the Securities Act (including requirements as to paper size, printing, language and pagination) continue to apply to prospectuses of issuers distributed in paper form to the investing public.

[b] Place of Filing. Registration statements filed electronically are deemed to be filed at the Commission's main office in Washington, D.C. if certain conditions are met, including payment of the required fee and compliance with the applicable electronic filing standards. n65 A copy of the registration statement, as well as various other documents relating to the fairness and reasonableness of the underwriting compensation, must be filed with FINRA for its review. n66 In addition, the issuer should supply copies of the registration statement to the securities administrator of any state that has a notice requirement for a public offering made in the state. Typically, counsel for the underwriters will take responsibility for making the requisite filings with FINRA and the states.

[c] Date of Filing. The date of filing a registration statement and any amendment thereto is deemed to be the date of receipt by the Commission. n67 A registration statement will be accepted for filing, however, only if all applicable filing requirements have been met and the requisite fee has been paid. n68 A registration statement generally will be accepted for filing only if it is filed electronically on EDGAR. n69

[d] Registration Fee. A registration fee must be paid electronically in connection with the filing of a registration statement. n70 Section 6(b)(5) of the Securities Act provides the Commission with the authority to set the fee rate for registration statements annually in accordance with the guidelines set forth in that section. n71 The fee is payable at the time of filing of the registration statement, n72 except in the case of certain shelf registration statements. n73

In computing the registration fee, reference should be made to Rule 457, which sets forth the Commission's view on the computation of the fee in certain selected circumstances. n74 If doubt persists about how to compute the fee after reviewing Rule 457, the registrant should contact the Division of Corporation Finance's Office of Chief Counsel for assistance.

[e] Proper Form. Except where the prospectus is being delivered electronically, it must be on "good quality, unglazed, white paper no larger than 8 x 11 inches in size, insofar as practicable." n75 Although the prospectus typically is printed, it may be typewritten, lithographed, mimeographed or prepared by any similar process that will produce clear, easily readable copies suitable for both a permanent record and repeated photocopying n76 Finally, the entire registration statement must be in the English language, although exhibits may be in a foreign language if accompanied by a complete or summary translation in English. n77

The form and content of the registration statement must conform to the applicable rules and forms in effect on the initial filing date. n78 If the rules or forms are changed after the filing date, the issuer must comply with the new provisions upon the filing of an amendment if the provisions so require. n79 If not required, the issuer may voluntarily comply if it wishes. n80

Generally, the issuer is automatically deemed to have filed on the proper registration form unless the Commission objects prior to the effective date. n81 Further, an issuer is permitted to file an amendment to a registration statement on any other registration form (including a shorter form) for which it is eligible on the filing date of the amendment. n82

[f] Delaying the Effective Date. Under Section 8(a), registration statements automatically become effective 20 days after filing, unless an amendment is filed to restart the 20-day period. Twenty days generally are not sufficient in most cases to allow the review process to run its course. To provide adequate time for the Commission to work with the registrant in curing deficiencies in the registration statement, and at the same time avoid the necessity for an amendment every 20 days to start the statutory time clock running again, the Commission created a device known as the "automatic delaying amendment."

Rule 473 indicates that the inclusion of a prescribed legend on the bottom of the front cover page (also known as the "facing page") of the registration statement and any amendment thereto will remove the necessity for filing amendments solely for the purpose of restarting the 20-day period. Failure to include the legend on the facing page or to use other measures to delay the effective date n83 means that the registration statement will become effective in the manner prescribed by Section 8(a).

Because of the Commission's manpower limitations, the Commission decided that certain registration statements relating to investments that generally have a low degree of risk should become automatically effective pursuant to Section 8(a). n84 Accordingly, Rule 473(d) states that these filings may not contain automatic delaying amendments. n85

[g] Signature Requirements. Section 6(a) requires that at least one copy of the registration statement be manually signed by the issuer, its principal executive officer or officers, its principal financial officer, its comptroller or principal accounting officer, and the majority of the board of directors or persons performing similar functions. Rule 471 imposes a similar obligation with respect to amendments to the registration statement. The signature requirement serves the purpose of impressing upon the signing parties, all of whom are subject to potential civil liabilities under Section 11(a) for material misstatements or omissions, their responsibility for the accuracy and completeness of the registration statement.

Because registration statements and amendments are filed electronically on EDGAR, a manually signed copy does not have to be filed with the Commission. Instead, the manual signature requirement is met by including a conformed signature in the electronic filing, and retaining in the issuer's files for five years a manually signed signature page or other document authenticating, acknowledging or otherwise adopting the signature included in the filing. n86

An issuer often will experience difficulty in finding a majority of directors available to sign amendments to the registration statement, since it usually is not practical to assemble the Board each time an amendment is to be filed. There are at least three ways of dealing with this problem:

- Incorporate into the initial filing of the registration statement powers of attorney from the directors to officials of the issuer enabling the officials to sign amendments when the directors are unavailable (the most widely used approach);
- Obtain and file counterpart signature pages, (i.e., a separate signature page for each director); or
- Obtain in advance (perhaps on the date the initial filing is signed) signed signature pages for later amendments, which should be used only if the directors have approved the amendment by telephone or otherwise for filing.

[h] Other Required Items. Also required to be included in a registration statement are any required consents of experts,ⁿ⁸⁷ and any power of attorney pursuant to which a person signs the registration statement on behalf of another.ⁿ⁸⁸ In addition, it also generally is necessary under Rule 424 to file copies of any prospectus containing substantive changes from or additions to a previously filed prospectus, as well as certain other prospectuses or documents.

Insider directors with intimate knowledge of corporate affairs and particular transactions are expected to make a more complete investigation and have more extensive knowledge than outside directors of facts supporting or contradicting information included in the registration statement. Cal. 1990), in which an outside director was held to have exercised reasonable due diligence where he reviewed six drafts of the registration statement, discussed certain aspects of it with management, and saw nothing suspicious or inconsistent with the knowledge he had acquired as a director. Other examples of situations in which the due diligence defense was successfully relied upon by directors include Laven v. Flanagan, 695 F Supp. 800 (D.N.J. 1988) , and In re Avant Garde Computing Inc. Securities Litigation 1989 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10483 (D.N.J. 1989) . (n10)Footnote 10. An example of an inadequate investigation by outside directors was cited in BarChris, and included review of a draft of the registration statement for approximately ten minutes, a failure to review the registration statement in its final form or to question management regarding specific statements contained in the registration statement, and sole reliance on representations of management regarding the accuracy of the registration statement. 283 F. (n16)Footnote 16. Although the registration statement serves the dual (and conflicting) purpose of being both a selling document and an "insurance policy" against potential liability, the concern for liability usually predominates. As a result, the information typically will be presented in a rather sober style, devoid of puffery or unverifiable claims.

(n17)Footnote 17. The plain English requirements are set forth primarily in Rule 421. Other provisions implementing these requirements include Rules 461 and 481, and Items 101, 501, 502, 503 and 508 of Regulation S-K. The plain English requirements were announced in Sec. Act Rel. No. 33-7497 (1998), and became effective on October 1, 1998. The SEC has provided guidance regarding the application of the plain English requirements in Staff Legal Bulletin No. 7 (1998), and in two booklets: A Plain English Handbook: How to Create Clear SEC Disclosure Documents, and Before & After Plain English Examples and Sample Analyses.

(n28)Footnote 28. Rule 175 and Rule 3b-6 indicate that the safe harbor provided by them is available only if (i) the forward-looking statement is included in specified disclosure documents filed with the SEC (including registration statements under the Securities Act and periodic reports under the Exchange Act), and (ii) it cannot be demonstrated that the statement "was made or reaffirmed without a reasonable basis or was disclosed other than in good faith."

(n29)Footnote 29. See, e.g., Wielgos v. Commonwealth Edison Co., 892 F.2d 509 (7th Cir. 1989) (estimates alleged to be misleading had a reasonable basis and were covered by the safe harbor of Rule 175).

Further, Item 303 of Regulation S-K, discussed in § 7A.05 [11] infra, encourages the inclusion of forward-looking information in management's discussion and analysis of financial condition and results of operations. Finally, Rule 11-03 of Regulation S-X permits financial forecasts in lieu of pro forma condensed statements of income.

(n31)Footnote 31. The reluctance to make projections can be traced to the limited coverage of the SEC's safe harbor rules. See, e.g., In re Donald Trump Casino Sec. Lit., 7 Fed. 3d 357 (3d Cir. 1993) ; In re Worlds of Wonder SEC. Lit., 814 F. Supp. 850, 858 (N.D. Cal. 1993) , aff'd, 35 F.3d 1407 (4th Cir. 1994) .

public common equity float of more than $5 billion; (ii) June 15, 2010, for all other domestic and foreign large accelerated filers; (iii) June 15, 2011, for all other filers currently using US GAAP; and (iv) the due date of their first periodic report, for other filers that first become subject to the XBRL requirement after the third year.

(n42)Footnote 42. The SEC said in its release announcing the adoption of the XBRL requirement that the requirement is part of its plan to replace the EDGAR system with the Interactive Data Electronic Applications ("IDEA") system. IDEA is based on an architecture that is completely new, and the SEC said it intends to phase IDEA in initially as a supplement to EDGAR and eventually as its replacement. (n43)Footnote 43. See Item 503(c) of Regulation S-K. A boldface reference to the "Risk Factors" section is required to be included on the front cover page of the prospectus, pursuant to instruction (5) to Item 501(b)(3) of Regulation S-K. In addition, registrants that are required to file annual and quarterly reports with the SEC pursuant to Section 13 or 15(d) of the Exchange Act must include a description of their risk factors in their annual reports on Form 10-K and indicate any material changes to those risk factors in their quarterly reports on Form 10-Q. See Item 1A of Part I of Form 10-K, and Item 1A of Part II of Form 10-Q. See also, R. B. Robbins and P. L. Rothenberg, Writing Risk Factor Disclosure in Exchange Act Reports, 39 Rev. Sec. & Comm. The Accounting Standards Codification ("ASC") of the Financial Accounting Standards Board ("FASB") provides in ASC Topic 280, Subtopic 10-50, that "an operating segment is a component of a public entity that has all of the following characteristics:

- a. It engages in business activities from which it may earn revenues and incur expenses ... ;
- b. Its operating results are regularly reviewed by the public entity's chief operating decision maker to make decisions about resources to be allocated to the segment and assess its performance; and
- c. Its discrete financial information is available.

The EDGAR Filing Manual, available at <http://www.sec.gov/info/edgar/edmanuals.shtml>, is the principal source of guidance for filing. modifications to them can be filed with FINRA for further review.

(n67)Footnote 67. See Section 6(c) of the Securities Act and Rule 456.

(n68)Footnote 68. See Rule 456. Pursuant to that rule, the failure to pay an insignificant amount of the required fee at the time of filing, due to a bona fide error, will not affect the date of filing.

(n69)Footnote 69. See Rule 14 of Regulation S-T. The SEC staff will make an accommodation for a foreign private issuer's first proposed filing (whether on Form F-1 or Form 20-F), by allowing the issuer to submit the filing in paper form on a confidential pre-filing basis. After the staff's comments have been incorporated by the issuer into its draft registration statement, the registration statement is then officially filed electronically.

(n70)Footnote 70. The registration fee for the SEC's 2009 fiscal year was $55.80 per million dollars of securities being registered. Fee payments must be submitted to U.S. Bank, N.A. in St. Louis, Missouri, in accordance with Rule 202.3a of the SEC's Rules of Practice and Investigations.

(n81)Footnote 81. Rule 401(g). This principle does not apply to some registration statements (such as those on Form S-8) and post-effective amendments that become effective immediately upon filing pursuant to Rule 462 or Rule 464.

(n82)Footnote 82. Rule 401(c)

(n83)Footnote 83. Pursuant to Rule 473(c), the registrant also can delay the effective date by sending a letter or telegram to the Commission prior to the deadline for automatic effectiveness stating that the registrant will amend the facing page of the registration statement to alter the proposed date of public sale of the securities being registered. Any such amendment made by telegram must be confirmed in writing within a reasonable time by filing the amendment.

(n84)Footnote 84. The registration statements that are made effective automatically are described in Rules 462, 464 and 467. They include filings (i) on Form F-7, F-8, or F-80 by certain Canadian issuers; (ii) on Form F-9 or F-10 relating to an offering being made contemporaneously in the United States and Canada by certain Canadian issuers; (iii) on Form S-8 relating to compensation plans; (iv) on Form S-3 or F-3 relating to a dividend or interest reinvestment plan; and (v) on Form S-4 complying with General Instruction G of that form.

(n85)Footnote 85. Most of these registration statements and amendments thereto become effective automatically upon filing with the Commission. See Rule 467 (Forms F-7, F-8 and Form F-80) and Rule 462 (Form S-8 and Forms S-3 and F-3 relating to dividend or interest reinvestment plans).

(n87)Footnote 87. As indicated in § 7A.02[1][e] supra, Section 7 of the Securities Act states that the written consent of any expert "shall be filed with the registration statement unless the Commission dispenses with such filing as impracticable or as involving undue hardship on the person filing the registration statement." See also Rule 436, which provides additional information regarding the consent requirement, and Rule 437, which deals with applications to dispense with the requirement.

2-7A Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 7A.06

Registration statements are subject to review, in whole or in part, by the Commission staff before they can be used for the sale of securities. In addition, it typically is necessary to obtain clearance of the underwriting compensation from FINRA and to file notices with some state authorities before sales can be made. The process of navigating these regulatory waters is discussed below.

[1] Statutory Framework

The disclosure purpose of the Securities Act precludes the SEC from approving or disapproving of securities offerings on the basis of their perceived merit. Consequently, the SEC focuses its efforts on methods to achieve the statutory purpose of full and fair disclosure of securities offerings. As explained below, the principal method utilized by the SEC staff is the issuance of comment letters on the disclosures contained in registration statements selected for review. n1

[2] The Review Process

Pursuant to authority delegated by the Commission, the staff of the Division of Investment Management processes registration statements filed by registered investment companies and the staff of the Division of Corporation Finance processes all other registration statements. Because of the latter's preeminent role in the review of registration statements, its organization and method of operation are described below.

[a] Organization of the Review Staff. The task of processing registration statements is the responsibility of the Division's 14 Disclosure Operations Offices, all of which are located at the Commission's headquarters in Washington, D.C. n2 Eleven of these offices specialize in specific sectors of the economy and review registration statements and other disclosure filings by companies in the sectors for which the respective offices are responsible. n3 Each of these offices is headed by an Assistant Director, n4 The remaining three Disclosure Operations Offices, each of which is headed by a Chief, deal with matters related to the disclosure review function. n5 The Disclosure Operations Offices are supported by seven other offices that deal with legal and regulatory policy matters relating to the Division's disclosure program. n6 Overseeing all of this activity is the senior management of the Division, consisting of the Director, two Deputy Directors (one of whom oversees the entire filing review process, in consultation with the Director), and seven Associate Directors (three of whom have oversight responsibility for specific Assistant Director Offices assigned to

The most important person involved in the review process is the Assistant Director, who heads the office to which the company's registration statement or other disclosure filing is assigned. The Assistant Director supervises the activities of 25-35 professionals (primarily attorneys and accountants), and is the principal person responsible for resolving significant disclosure and other issues that arise in the review of disclosure filings assigned to the office. Perhaps the most important responsibility of the Assistant Director with respect to registered offerings of securities is making the determination whether or when the registration statement for the offering will become effective.

[b] Assignment of Filings. Registration statements are assigned to an Assistant Director's office on the basis of the issuer's standard industrial code ("SIC"). n8 Each office specializes in particular industries, and is responsible for the filings made by the companies in those industries. Within each office, registration statements that are designated for review (after screening by a senior staff member) are assigned to a team consisting of an accountant who reviews the accounting aspects of the filing, and an examiner (i.e., an attorney or financial analyst) who reviews the non-accounting aspects. The work of these persons is reviewed by senior staff members, and leads eventually to the issuance of a formal letter of comment to the issuer regarding the perceived deficiencies in the registration statement.

A registration statement or other disclosure document that is selected for review will undergo one of three types of review. n9 The most complete type is a full cover-to-cover review, in which the staff will examine the entire filing for compliance with applicable disclosure and accounting requirements. Another type of review is a financial statement review, in which the staff will examine the financial statements and related disclosures, such as the MD&A, for compliance with applicable accounting standards and related disclosure requirements. The final type of review is a targeted review, in which the staff will examine one or more disclosure items of the filing for compliance with applicable disclosure and accounting requirements. The level of review is determined on the basis of various factors, including the type of filing and industry issues. n10

[c] Time Required. The amount of time required by the staff to process a registration statement will vary, depending on several factors. The most important of these is the type of review accorded to the registration statement. The review alternatives range from full review (as in the case of almost all IPOs) to no review at all (as in the case of registration statements that automatically become effective and other filings deemed to present lesser risk of problems than others). n11 If there will not be any review (a determination usually made within two to five business days after filing), the staff can make the registration statement effective within 48 hours after notifying the registrant of its no-review determination. On the other hand, if the filing is selected for full review, the staff will seek to issue its initial comment letter within 30 days of the filing date. On occasion, the staff is unable to meet the 30-day goal, and may take as long as 40-50 days to issue the comment letter. Factors that can delay the issuance of the letter include a large backlog of filings, the quality of the registration statement, the nature of the issuer or the transaction, n12 the time of year, n13 and the need to consult with other parties. n14

After the initial comment letter is issued, the time required to complete the review process will depend largely on how rapidly the registrant can amend the registration statement in a manner that will satisfy the staff's concerns. Often, more than one amendment will be needed to deal with those concerns, in part because the staff may raise additional issues in one or more follow-up comment letters after seeing the initial amendment. Depending on the volume of revised disclosures or supplemental information it receives in response to comments, the staff may take anywhere from a few days to a week or more to convey whatever comments it may have on an amendment. Under ideal circumstances, the time required to complete a full review from the date of filing may be as short as six or seven weeks, but can be much more protracted in some cases.

[3] The Comment Letter

The staff's comment letter describes deficiencies believed by the staff to exist in the registration statement and also often requests supplemental information about matters that the staff wishes to explore further outside the filing. The letter typically is faxed to counsel for the issuer, although where time is of the essence the SEC examiner may telephone its contents and follow up later with the written version. When preparing the comment letter, the staff seeks to focus on all material disclosure deficiencies and makes an effort to avoid issuing comments of a trivial nature. Consistent with the plain English directive applicable to registrants, the staff structures its comments in simple, concise language.

Generally, the staff's comments are of three types: (i) substantive comments requesting revision or clarification of specified disclosures (so-called "advise or revise" comments); (ii) comments requesting supplemental information; and (iii) "housekeeping" comments regarding various technical or procedural matters. Although the staff's goal is to raise all of its concerns in the initial comment letter, it is not foreclosed from raising additional concerns in subsequent comment letters. n15 Often, the staff will do so on the basis of its review of the supplemental information that it previously requested.

[a] Responding to the Staff's Comments. Upon receipt of the staff's comment letter, all parties involved in the registration effort (i.e., the issuer, its counsel and accountants, and the managing underwriter and its counsel) should discuss the comments in a meeting or conference call and generally agree on how to respond to them. Some comments may be unclear, in which case a representative of the issuer should contact the SEC examiner and seek clarification. The issuer's financial and accounting personnel should work with the issuer's auditor in responding to the accounting comments, while other management personnel should work with the issuer's counsel in preparing responses to the remaining comments.

After determining appropriate responses to the staff's comments, the issuer should prepare an amendment to the registration statement that addresses the comments. When the amendment is filed, it should be accompanied by a transmittal letter submitted electronically on EDGAR explaining how the registrant dealt with each of the comments. The issuer should include, where possible, references to the location in the amended prospectus (by caption, paragraph, and page number) where changes have been made in response to the comment under discussion. If the issuer has not complied with a comment by the staff, it should state its reasons in the transmittal letter. At the other extreme, if the amendment contains changes not called for by the staff, such as those reflecting a recent development, the nature of the changes should be fully explained in the letter.

Some staff comments request that additional information be included in the registration statement, even though the information does not appear to be required by the applicable form, rules or regulations or by general materiality standards. n16 The inclusion of this information is necessary only if its omission would result in a materially misleading document. Where this is not so, many practitioners nonetheless include the information where the registrant has no important interest at stake, but resist doing so where the disclosure would be harmful to the registrant or would be costly or time-consuming to obtain.

[b] Appeals of Adverse Comments. In some cases, the staff may issue comments that present significant concerns for the issuer, either because an adequate foundation does not appear to exist for the comments or some other reason. The staff has an open mind with respect to these concerns, as evidenced by its statement that "a company should not hesitate to request that the staff reconsider a comment it has issued ... at any point in the filing review process." n17

Accounting comments that appear to be unwarranted should be discussed by the issuer's accounting staff and accounting representative (typically its auditor) with the Accounting Branch Chief in the Assistant Director's office who examined the accounting aspects of the filing. If a satisfactory response is not received at that level, the issuer's representative should seek to discuss the matter with the Senior Assistant Chief Accountant in that office. Where an acceptable result remains elusive after this discussion, the controversy can be addressed with an Associate Chief Accountant in the Division's Office of Chief Accountant or with the Chief Accountant directly. Counsel for the issuer should be kept fully informed regarding these discussions.

Troublesome non-accounting comments involving legal or textual disclosure matters should be discussed initially with the examiner who reviewed the non-accounting aspects of the filing. If the matter cannot be resolved at that level, the appropriate course is to request a conference with the Legal Branch Chief in the Assistant Director's office, and then directly with the Assistant Director if the matter continues unresolved. If the Assistant Director is unwilling to withdraw or modify the comment to the issuer's satisfaction, counsel may properly request that the matter be considered by the Associate Director responsible for overseeing the Assistant Director's office, or ultimately, in the case of matters of fundamental importance, to the Deputy Director responsible for disclosure operations or to the Director of the Division. In no case, however, should counsel appeal to a more senior official unless the matter is highly important and the issuer has exhausted all opportunities at the lower level for reaching an accommodation.

The Commission staff generally is reasonable in dealing with soundly-based objections to its comments. As to matters of fundamental disagreement, however, the reality is that the staff almost always will prevail. The registrant's only alternatives in such situations are to comply with the staff's views or to challenge them by filing an amendment to the registration statement that will become effective automatically in 20 days. n18 Where a challenge is made, the Commission will then have to determine whether to institute a stop order proceeding or take other enforcement action. Obviously, the risk that it will do so is very high, and no registrant, after dispassionate consideration, should be willing to take that risk. Accordingly, even though the staff's comments are not legally binding, as a practical matter the issuer must reach an accommodation with the staff before the offering can proceed.

[c] Expediting the Review Process. Avoiding delays in the registration process is extremely important. The market, for example, may not remain receptive indefinitely and a "window" for making the offering successfully may be lost if the registration process is protracted. Further, excessive time in registration may necessitate updating the financial statements, n19 a costly and time-consuming process that should be avoided where possible. By following the procedures and techniques described below, an issuer should be able to minimize the time required to complete the registration process.

File the Best Document Possible. The registration statement should not be filed until all parties responsible for its preparation are satisfied that it complies with all applicable requirements. Filing an incomplete or substandard document simply to start the review process as early as possible is an unwise approach for several reasons. First, if the registration statement is in poor shape, the Commission may decline to review it by sending a "bedbug" letter, or, even worse, may institute formal stop order or other enforcement proceedings if the deficiencies appear to stem from careless disregard of the statutes and rules. n20 Second, there is no guarantee that the Commission staff will discover the deficiencies, with the result that the issuer and its counsel may be exposing themselves to potential liability for material misstatements and omissions by not taking their responsibilities more seriously. Finally, the filing of a highly deficient registration statement may result in a loss of credibility with the staff, making it more difficult to reach a meeting of the minds on future filings.

Avoid Surprises. After filing the registration statement, the issuer should studiously avoid activities that could require material changes in the disclosures previously made. For example, it would be advisable to suspend activities that might cause a potential major business combination under preliminary consideration to be viewed as probable and therefore disclosable. On the other hand, if an event occurs that could affect the processing of the registration statement, such as the loss of an underwriter or unexpected difficulty in meeting the updating requirements for financial statements, the issuer should promptly advise the staff of the problem so that the staff may consider its impact as quickly as possible.

Inquire About Delays. If the staff of the Commission has not provided comments or otherwise communicated with the registrant during the period contact was anticipated (e.g., within 30 days after a first-time registrant has filed or within five days after a repeat registrant has done so), counsel should call the office responsible for the filing to determine the status of the registration statement. Taking a passive approach in this type of situation may result in unnecessary delays, as might occur when the staff is grappling with disclosure issues that perhaps could be resolved quickly through the submission of supplemental data or a meeting with the staff, or both.

Respond Promptly and Fully to Staff Requests. Frequently, the staff will request support for particular statements or ask for further information regarding a matter discussed in the registration statement. Presumably, the items in question can be fully documented and ample supporting materials can be supplied. The best course is to gather all relevant materials and supply them as promptly as possible to the staff, along with a cover letter providing explanations where appropriate.

Anticipate the Need for Updating. As the countdown to the 135th day for updating financial statements (or the 130th day for accelerated and large accelerated filers) approaches its last few weeks, the registrant should anticipate a request by the staff to update financial statements and data and make appropriate preparations for doing so. n21

[4] Special Situations

The Commission's experience in the disclosure process has enabled it to craft approaches to unique situations that generally have the effect of maximizing the use of its limited resources without seriously undermining the quality of disclosures or placing undue burdens on registrants. The nature of the offering and the status of the issuer usually will determine which of the approaches the SEC will apply, as indicated below.

[a] IPOs. The Commission's policy is to review fully all registration statements by issuers that have not previously made any filings under the securities laws. n22 Registration statements for IPOs by domestic issuers typically are filed on Form S-1, the Commission's general registration form. The staff reviews IPOs with particular care, and it is not uncommon for it to issue a multitude of comments (70, 80 or more) on such filings. n23 Where an IPO is being made by an entity deemed to be an "ineligible issuer" within the definition of that term in Rule 405, staff sensitivities are at their highest level, and the issuer should anticipate not only a lengthy comment letter but also extensive delays in the processing of its registration statement.

[b] Follow-On Offerings. As a result of the adoption of the integrated disclosure system, n24 many issuers that have made timely filings under the securities laws for at least 12 calendar months can make public offerings on Form S-3, an abbreviated registration form which ordinarily requires much less time and effort to prepare than a registration statement for an IPO. Form S-3 allows the issuer to satisfy the disclosure requirements largely through incorporation by reference from public documents filed by the issuer under the Exchange Act. n25 Recognizing that repeat issuers generally are seasoned veterans of the disclosure system whose reports have been periodically examined by the staff over the years, n26 the Division reviews a relatively small percentage of registration statements filed by these entities.

[c] Shelf Offerings. Since 1982, the Commission has permitted issuers meeting certain conditions prescribed in Rule 415 and Form S-3 to register securities in advance for sale at later dates when market conditions and the issuer's need for capital are best suited for an offering. n27 The process whereby an issuer can place registered securities "on the shelf" for later sale affords the issuer great flexibility to tap the equity or debt markets at the right time, n28 at relatively low cost, without undue delay. n29

In 2005, the SEC made significant changes to the shelf registration rules designed to expedite shelf offerings. n30 Chief among these changes is a procedure for automatic shelf registration by well-known seasoned issuers ("WKSIs") that eliminates delays in shelf takedowns by these issuers. n31 Shelf registration statements filed by WKSIs become effective automatically upon filing. n32 In addition, a WKSI may (i) add immediately at any time after effectiveness (a) additional classes of securities not previously registered, and (b) majority-owned subsidiaries as registrants, n33 and (ii) pay registration fees either in advance or on a "pay-as-you-go" basis as securities are taken down from the shelf. n34

Other changes to the shelf registration process implemented in 2005 to reduce the restrictions on shelf offerings included: (i) adding Rule 430B to codify in a single rule the information that shelf issuers may omit from the base prospectus for the shelf offering and include instead in either a prospectus supplement, an Exchange Act report incorporated into the shelf registration statement, or a post-effective amendment; n35 (ii) deleting the requirement in former Rule 415(a)(2) that limited an issuer to registering only the amount of securities that it reasonably expected to offer and sell within two years; (iii) eliminating the restrictions on "at-the-market" shelf offerings by "seasoned issuers" with a $75 million public float; and (iv) permitting immediate takedowns from a shelf registration statement on Form S-3 or F-3 n36

[d] Business Combinations. The disclosures appropriate for mergers and other business combinations are distinctly different from most other types of securities offerings. As a result, the Commission adopted a special registration Form, S-4, for these offerings that heavily utilizes the principles of the integrated disclosure system. The SEC also adopted Regulation M-A to modernize the requirements applicable to business combinations. n37 In addition, the Commission clarified the financial statement requirements applicable to acquisitions in registered public offerings. n38

Where an S-4 filing is selected for full review by the staff, as most are, the processing time can be considerably longer than the time required for other types of offerings, due to the complexity of most business combinations. In addition, delays can result where the issuer inadequately conforms the registration statement to the Commission's plain English requirements. n39

[e] Asset-Backed Securities Offerings. Asset-backed investment grade securities provide qualified issuers with a ready means for securitizing assets through an offering on Form S-3. The frequency of these offerings caused the Commission to adopt Regulation AB, which prescribes the disclosure regime for asset-backed securities offerings. n40 Regulation AB requires significant additional disclosures beyond those formerly required for parties to asset-backed securities transactions, including sponsors, originators, servicers, administrators, and trustees. In addition, extensive static pool data are required, including information about performance trends with respect to groups of assets of the same type originated at the same time, as well as information about delinquencies and losses for static pools of the same asset type with the same sponsor. n41

[f] Employee Benefit Plans. In 1990, the Commission adopted a simplified method of registering securities issued in connection with employee benefit plans on Form S-8. n42 As amended, Form S-8 is little more than a notice to the Commission that an offering under a plan is being made by the issuer. Unlike other registration forms, no prospectus is required to be filed with the registration statement n43 and the registration statement becomes effective automatically upon filing with the Commission. n44 Operating on the theory that most information required by Form S-8 about the plan and the issuer is contained in documents required to be prepared for other purposes (such as to satisfy ERISA or the reporting requirements of the Exchange Act), the Commission has indicated that the statutory prospectus will consist of (i) documents delivered by the issuer to plan participants containing the information about the plan required by the form; (ii) a written statement of the availability, upon request, of certain other documents (e.g., the registrant's latest annual report) that are incorporated by reference; and (iii) the documents incorporated by reference. n45 Because registration statements on Form S-8 become effective automatically upon filing, there is no review or processing of these filings by the Commission staff.

[g] Selling Security Holders. Issuers from time to time may register securities for resale by their security holders pursuant to registration rights agreements or otherwise. n46 Resale registration statements are filed most commonly on Form S-3, which incorporates by reference information about the issuer from its Exchange Act reports, and typically contain little additional information beyond the names of the selling security holders, a broad description of the plan of distribution and, in some cases, a discussion of risk factors. Until the securities offering reforms of late 2005, it was necessary to include the names of all selling security holders known at the time of effectiveness and to add new or previously unidentified selling security holders thereafter by filing a post-effective amendment to the registration statement. As part of the 2005 rule changes, however, the SEC excepted from these requirements seasoned issuers eligible to use Form S-3 or Form F-3 for primary offerings. Further, issuers that qualify as WKSIs need not include the identities of selling security holders in an automatic shelf registration statement until after effectiveness n47 if they satisfy the conditions specified in Rule 430B(b). n48

[h] Foreign Issuers. Believing that the globalization of the international securities markets is a desirable objective, the Commission has taken a number of steps during the past two decades designed to lower the barriers to foreign issuers who wish to tap the United States markets. These initiatives include (i) the adoption of a separate integrated disclosure system for foreign private issuers containing a number of accommodations to foreign practices and policies, n49 (ii) the development of a multi-jurisdictional disclosure system with Canada designed to allow transactions to proceed in both the United States and Canada on the basis of home country disclosures and rules, n50 (iii) the adoption of Regulation S, which provides a safe harbor from registration for offshore distributions, n51 (iv) the adoption of Rule 144A, which provides an exemption for certain private resales in an effort to improve the efficiency of private placement markets in the United States for foreign securities, n52 (v) the adoption of changes to the non-financial statement disclosure requirements for foreign private issuers to conform the requirements more closely to the international disclosure standards endorsed by the International Organization of Securities Commissions, n53 and (vi) the adoption of exemptions designed to facilitate the inclusion of U.S. investors in cross-border tender offers, exchange offers, business combinations and rights offerings for the securities of foreign companies. n54

In addition, the Commission has expanded the universe of foreign issuers eligible to use short form registration and shelf registration, n55 streamlined financial statement reconciliation and financial schedule requirements, n56 expanded the safe harbor protection provided for certain announcements by issuers of exempt offerings or unregistered offerings, n57 provided a safe harbor in Rule 135e to facilitate U.S. press access to offshore activities relating to present or proposed offerings of securities, n58 enhanced the timeliness and quality of information regarding foreign private issuers required to be available to U.S. investors, n59 and made other changes designed to make the U.S. public markets more accessible to these issuers. n60

[i] Risky Issuers. In some instances, certain issuers will attract the attention of the SEC staff because of circumstances suggesting that offerings by these entities present a greater risk of Securities Act problems than other offerings. Issuers which are in precarious financial condition, members of industries experiencing severe financial difficulties, and companies with a limited history (such as shell companies), often will find that their Securities Act filings receive increased scrutiny from the SEC staff. Similarly, issuers that have been the subject of recent enforcement proceedings by the SEC, or are engaging in offerings (such as a rescission offer) indicating that there may have been a violation of the Securities Act in the recent past, may find their filings being reviewed more frequently and with greater depth than those of issuers not laboring under these disabilities.

[j] Small Business Issuers. The Commission has made numerous efforts over the years to ease the registration and other burdens imposed by the Securities Act on small businesses. n61 A major initiative was the adoption of Regulation S-B in 1992, which prescribed a separate disclosure scheme and special registration forms for small business issuers. n62 In 2007, the SEC decided to replace Regulation S-B and the registration forms related to it with a simplified system that contained new eligibility requirements designed to encompass a greater number of small issuers, referred to as "smaller reporting companies," than Regulation S-B. n63 To facilitate the use of the new system by eligible issuers, the SEC has issued an extensive guide to financial reporting by such issuers, n64 as well as other useful information available on its web site. n65

[5] Significant Processing Concerns

During the review process, the issuer is likely to be faced with a number of concerns that can seriously impede the offering if not resolved satisfactorily. Some of the more common ones are described below.

[a] Accounting Issues. Following the corporate scandals that led to the passage of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act in 2002, the SEC received funding for a substantial increase in the size of its accounting staff. As a consequence, accounting comments on registration statements increased, and in some instances are more numerous than the non-accounting comments. Among the issues that are frequently the subject of accounting comments are the following.

Cheap Stock. Many companies that anticipate going public in the future issue stock, stock options, or warrants to corporate insiders during the period prior to the IPO at prices well below the eventual IPO stock price. Because applicable accounting standards require a company to recognize compensation expense for issuances of equity securities for less than fair value, n66 the Commission staff generally will review stock options and other compensatory stock awards granted by an IPO registrant during the 12 months before the date of the issuer's most recent balance sheet included in the IPO prospectus.

In 2005, the staff began to apply the recommendations contained in an AICPA Practice Aid when reviewing cheap stock issues. n67 In accordance with these recommendations, the staff requires extensive MD&A and financial statement footnote disclosure of the process by which issuers comply with the Practice Aid. Among other things, issuers must reconcile and explain the differences between the fair values of the underlying common stock at each valuation date, and show the difference between the most recent fair value and the midpoint of the IPO offering range.

Deemed Dividends. The approach to cheap stock generally is applied by the SEC staff to sales made by the issuer to outside investors. Specifically, some sales made to investors in the six months preceding the IPO at prices significantly less than the IPO price have been viewed by the staff as involving a "deemed dividend" that requires a one-time accounting charge equal to the difference between the selling price and the deemed market value at the time. The sales that most often present this problem are those made to existing investors because the SEC staff frequently is skeptical that the sale price was arrived at on an arm's length basis.

Discounted Equity Sales. Sales of equity securities made during the pre-IPO period to strategic partners having a commercial relationship with the issuer, such as customers and suppliers, also attract the attention of the SEC accounting staff. The concern is that the sale price may not represent the actual market value because the investor may transfer value to the issuer in the course of the commercial relationship in exchange for a reduced purchase price. Where the staff believes that such a discounted sale may have occurred, it may insist on an accounting adjustment to be amortized over the life of the contract or other arrangement with the investor.

[b] Confidential Treatment. For competitive or other reasons, an issuer may feel that the disclosure of certain information in a registration statement will be harmful to it. In situations of this sort, it is permissible to request confidential treatment of the information pursuant to Rule 406, although the granting of the request is entirely within the Commission's discretion. n68

General Considerations. Although it is theoretically possible under Rule 406 to receive confidential treatment of any information, the SEC staff has made it clear that it will not, "except in unusual circumstances," grant confidential treatment to information specifically required to be disclosed by Regulation S-K or any other applicable disclosure requirement, or to information that is material. n69 From a practical standpoint, this means that only information included in an exhibit is likely to be a serious candidate for confidential treatment. Moreover, issuers should recognize that submitting a confidential treatment request could delay the effectiveness of the registration statement because effectiveness cannot occur until the request is resolved.

Substantive Requirements. The staff will deny a confidential treatment request if the information at issue already has been disclosed publicly. Thus, any public disclosure of the information, including unintentional disclosure or unauthorized disclosure by a third party, will defeat the application. n70 The application for confidential treatment should be as narrowly drawn as possible, focusing only on the information necessary to prevent competitive harm to the issuer, because the staff generally is not amenable to excluding entire sections from a document. The application also must set forth a legal analysis, with appropriate case law references, in support of the issuer's claim that an exemption from the Freedom of Information Act is available for the request. n71 Finally, the application should identify clearly the information that is the subject of the application, specify a particular date for the termination of confidential treatment of the information, and contain a consent to the release of the information for official purposes to other government agencies or bodies and to the Congress. n72

Procedural Requirements. Rule 406 and Staff Legal Bulletin No. 1 set forth the procedural requirements for confidential treatment requests. n73 Among other things, the request must be submitted in paper form (rather than electronically) with the Secretary of the Commission, and should be submitted at the same time the issuer files the registration statement containing the exhibit from which it omitted the confidential information. The issuer should note in the filed exhibit the places at which the information has been omitted and should submit to the Secretary of the Commission a complete copy of the document containing the confidential information, marked to show clearly the portions covered by the request. The issuer should also indicate to whom correspondence, orders, and notices should be sent.

[c] SEC Investigation. On rare occasions, an issuer in registration simultaneously is being investigated by the Commission's Enforcement Division for possible violations of the federal securities laws. While there is no rule or regulation mandating disclosure of the investigation, many issuers elect to make disclosure if the matters under investigation could have a material adverse impact. n74

A separate concern is whether the Commission will accelerate the effectiveness of the registration statement while the investigation is open. The answer is that it will grant an acceleration request by the issuer (assuming all other conditions for acceleration are met) if the issuer furnishes to the Commission prior to effectiveness a letter containing representations that:

- The disclosures in the registration statement are the responsibility of the issuer;
- The issuer is aware that the staff did not provide comments on the registration statement or specific parts thereof because of a pending investigation by the Division of Enforcement; and
- The issuer will not assert any action or inaction by the staff as a defense in any proceeding initiated by the Commission or any person under the federal securities laws. n75

Although the foregoing representations now are required in connection with the granting of all acceleration requests, even if the issuer is not being investigated, the Commission staff also may ask for a letter containing these representations in a situation where it will not accelerate the effective date but will allow the registration statement to become effective by operation of law. The purpose in doing so is to preclude the issuer from later asserting as a defense the Commission's passive action in allowing the registration statement to become effective without having instituted stop order or other enforcement proceedings.

[6] Marketing

[a] Circulation of Preliminary Prospectus. It is common in IPOs to make a "quiet filing" of the preliminary prospectus at the time the registration statement for the offering is submitted to the SEC. The filing is considered quiet because the preliminary prospectus is not circulated to investors (even though it becomes a public document upon filing). Instead, the issuer and the underwriters delay the commencement of the marketing effort until they have been able to incorporate changes made in response to the SEC's comments into a subsequently filed prospectus and can distribute the amended prospectus to investors. Waiting in this manner has two salutary effects. It reduces the time lag between the commencement of marketing and effectiveness of the registration statement, thereby limiting the possibility of investor concerns that might be occasioned by a lengthy delay after the initial filing. And it generally avoids the prospect of recirculation of the prospectus to address staff concerns, an event which is to be avoided at all costs because of the dampening effect it may have on the sales effort. n76

[b] Road Show. During the period following the filing of the registration statement, the managing underwriter will initiate various activities as part of the marketing effort. These include meetings with potential members of the syndicate and with personnel of the underwriter to organize the marketing effort. The principal focus of the marketing effort, however, will be on the "road show," which will commence after an amended prospectus reflecting the SEC's comments is available for distribution. The road show involves a series of meetings, usually over a period ranging from several days to one or two weeks, with securities dealers and institutional investors in various major cities designed to generate enthusiasm for the offering. Present at the road show meetings will be senior members of company management and representatives of the managing underwriter, who will combine to make an orchestrated presentation of the strengths of the issuer and its responses to any investor concerns that might exist.

Road shows can involve meetings with large audiences or smaller meetings with selected investors. As a result of reduced restrictions on electronic communications, road shows increasingly have included electronic presentations over the Internet or other electronic media. Where road shows are originated live and in real-time to a live audience, rather than in recorded form, they are deemed not to be a written communication or a free writing prospectus. n77

[c] Public Communications. During the offering period the issuer will publish a variety of communications as part of its ongoing business operations, and also will issue some communications specifically related to the offering. Two safe harbor rules generally insulate issuers from potential liability for regular business communications, as mentioned previously. n78 Other communications that may be related to the offering, including notices of the offering (such as "tombstone ads"), media interviews, and electronic road shows, may qualify for various exemptions. n79 Where they do not qualify for an exemption, they may be issued as a free writing prospectus so long as they do not conflict with the statutory prospectus, as discussed previously. n80

[d] Directed Share Program. A directed share program is one in which underwriters typically allocate a portion of an IPO (usually up to a maximum of 5%, but occasionally a bigger portion) to employees, vendors, customers and others having a friendly relationship with the issuer. These "friends and family" programs can cause problems for the issuer unless they are carefully conducted to avoid registration concerns. Specifically, a directed share program can be deemed to involve written offers to sell in violation of Section 5 of the Securities Act where prospective participants in the program are offered in writing the opportunity to participate before the registration statement relating to the offered securities is filed with the SEC. Or they can be deemed to violate Section 5 where they result in a binding commitment to participate before the registration statement has been declared effective. In these situations, the SEC may insist on the inclusion of a risk factor in the registration statement describing the apparent violation and indicating the potential right of purchasers to seek refunds or damages.

To avoid problems with directed share programs, some commentators have suggested that issuers and underwriters observe the following guidelines: (i) avoid contacting potential participants in writing or electronically by e-mail; (ii) hold group meetings for prospective employee participants at which an executive can explain the program orally; (iii) avoid the use of the issuer's web site to invite participation in the program; (iv) make clear to prospective participants that (a) they have no obligation to purchase shares until the registration statement becomes effective, (b) they may not receive the shares they request, and (c) they can change their minds about purchasing when the offering actually takes place; (v) delay implementation of the program until preliminary prospectuses are available for each potential participant; (vi) send only the information that is necessary (including the preliminary prospectus, the FINRA-required questionnaire, and a brief letter explaining the program); (vii) make certain, if the materials are distributed electronically, that the participants see the preliminary prospectus before indicating an interest in the program; (viii) include in each communication relating to the program the appropriate Rule 134(d) legend; and (ix) decline to accept any funds in advance of the effective date. n81

[7] Pricing and Effectiveness

After the SEC staff has reached the point where it believes the disclosures in the registration statement are satisfactory, the issuer may then take the steps necessary to seek acceleration of the effective date and to price the offering.

[a] Acceleration of Effective Date. Section 8(a) of the Securities Act provides that a registration statement shall become effective automatically 20 days after filing, unless the Commission determines that an earlier effective date is appropriate. n82 The ability to advance or "accelerate" the effective date provides the Commission with a powerful tool to promote compliance with the Act. Because issuers and underwriters ordinarily cannot afford any significant delays when the offering is ripe for pricing, acceleration almost always is essential. Accordingly, these parties have little choice but to conform to applicable Commission requirements for acceleration.

The Acceleration Process. Requests for acceleration are required by Rule 461 to be submitted to the staff at least 48 hours before the desired effective date. The acceleration request may be made orally, although any oral request must be confirmed in a follow-up letter submitted electronically on EDGAR. n83 The 48-hour period is needed to allow the Assistant Director who will be signing the order of effectiveness sufficient time to make a final review of the filing and determine whether there are any remaining disclosure issues. On occasion, the Assistant Director may raise concerns not previously mentioned by the staff. If the issuer cannot persuade the Assistant Director that the concerns do not warrant revisions to the prospectus, timing constraints and other considerations usually preclude the issuer from doing anything other than amending the prospectus to deal with the concerns. n84

Standards for Acceleration. In most instances, the acceleration process proceeds with little difficulty because the registrant will defer making an acceleration request until the prerequisites for acceleration mentioned in Rules 460 and 461 have been satisfied. These include: (i) the resolution of all outstanding staff comments on the registration statement; n85 (ii) clearance from FINRA regarding the reasonableness of the underwriting compensation; n86 and (iii) evidence that the preliminary prospectus has been adequately distributed to prospective investors. n87 Among the matters that can have a negative impact on an acceleration request (and possibly result in a refusal to grant it) are: (a) the existence of a Commission investigation of the issuer, an affiliate of the issuer, or one of the underwriters for possible securities law violations; n88 (b) the inclusion in a firm commitment offering of an underwriter which does not meet the financial responsibility requirements of Rule 15c3-1 under the Exchange Act; n89 (c) transactions by the issuer or other persons connected with the offering having an artificial effect on the market price of the offered securities; n90 (d) a failure to follow up the distribution of a materially inaccurate preliminary prospectus with appropriate correcting material; n91 or (e) in the case of a significant follow-on offering at the market, a failure by the registrant, selling security holders and underwriters to take sufficient measures to ensure compliance with Regulation M under the Exchange Act, which prohibits specified activities by offering participants that might be deemed to have a manipulative effect on the price of the securities being distributed. n92

[b] Pricing. When the SEC staff is satisfied with the registration statement and ready to make it effective, the managing underwriter can fix the public offering price. Unless an auction process is used to determine the offering price, n93 the price will be decided in an unscientific manner that takes into account various considerations. These include the degree of interest of potential major investors at various price levels, the desire to satisfy the issuer's pricing expectations, and the hope of having room for upward price movement in the aftermarket following effectiveness.

The offering price may be set either before or after effectiveness of the registration statement. Until 1987, the SEC required that the price be set prior to effectiveness, but in that year it also allowed pricing after effectiveness pursuant to Rule 430A, n94 as explained below.

Rule 430A. This rule allows the SEC to make the registration statement effective without the pricing or underwriting information where the securities are offered for cash and the omitted information is included in a prospectus filed with the SEC under Rule 424(b) within 15 business days after the effective date. In effect, the issuer has a three-week period under Rule 430A to price the offering, form the underwriting syndicate, and commence the offering. n95 Because of the flexibility afforded by the rule, this procedure has become dominant.

Pricing Amendment. Under this approach, several steps are required within a period of less than 24 hours beginning with the close of the trading market for the issuer's securities (if there is one) on the day before the anticipated date of effectiveness. These include (1) determining the offering price and underwriting discount; (2) executing the agreement among underwriters and the underwriting agreement; (3) preparing an amendment to the registration statement reflecting the pricing information and final underwriting arrangements; (4) filing the amendment with the SEC; and (5) the SEC declaring the registration statement effective. Because of the strict timetable for filing pre-effective pricing amendments and the need to wait for the SEC to declare such amendments effective before proceeding with the offering, this method is rarely used.

[c] Registration of Additional Shares. In some instances, market considerations make it necessary after effectiveness to add shares to the registration statement. For example, additional shares may be needed to accommodate unexpectedly heavy demand for the offering, or may be required to achieve a desired level of offering proceeds (e.g., by lowering the per share price and increasing the total number of shares). Where the number of shares to be added will not cause the maximum aggregate offering price to change by more than 20% from the previous estimate in the registration statement, the shares can be added by simply filing a new registration statement prior to the time confirmations are sent or given. n96 Because the registration statement becomes effective upon filing, n97 it does not cause any delays in the offering, n98 and therefore provides considerable flexibility to the issuer and underwriters.

[d] Recirculation Prior to Effectiveness. On occasion, the preliminary prospectus that the issuer hopes will be made effective by the SEC does not reflect a significant last-minute development. Situations of this sort present the thorny question whether the prospectus must be amended to reflect the development and then recirculated to prospective investors before they make their final investment decisions. n99 Recirculation is highly undesirable because it can imperil an offering by creating doubts in the marketplace about the impact of the last minute changes and by providing time for investors to reconsider and perhaps decide to place their money elsewhere.

Changes in the Maximum Aggregate Offering Price. The most common last-minute development not reflected in the preliminary prospectus is a significant change in the number or price (or both) of the shares being offered. An instruction to Rule 430A affords issuers considerable latitude in dealing with these types of situations. As previously indicated, the rule states that increases or decreases in volume or price representing no more than a 20% change in the maximum aggregate offering price set forth in the registration fee table will not require an amendment to the registration statement (and by implication will not require recirculation). n100 In effect, the instruction provides a safe harbor from recirculation for these types of changes. Moreover, even if the 20% limit is exceeded, the SEC has indicated that it is not necessary to file an amendment where the change will not have a material effect. n101

Current Staff Approach to Recirculation Concerns. Prior to the 2005 Securities Act reforms, the SEC staff had the final say regarding recirculation issues. Frequently, rather than requiring a formal amendment and recirculation of the amended prospectus, it would request that the managing underwriter undertake reasonable efforts to convey information about the recent development orally to prospective buyers. With the adoption of Rule 159 in 2005, however, the staff instituted a new approach to recirculation issues.

Rule 159 indicates that in determining liability under the antifraud provisions of the Securities Act for material misstatements or omissions, information conveyed to the purchaser after the time of sale will not be taken into account. This change has made it necessary for an issuer to ensure that all required information has been conveyed to purchasers before they finalize their investment decisions. n102 This change is counterbalanced to some extent by another change in 2005 that allows issuers to use free writing prospectuses to communicate information about last-minute developments in a written communication that can be transmitted electronically if hyperlinked to the statutory prospectus. The consequence of these changes is that the SEC staff no longer specifies how issuers should communicate the new information to investors. n103 Instead, the staff requests only that the new information be conveyed to investors but does not ask about, or express views on, the facts and circumstances of the conveyance. n104 In some instances, however, the staff may request a specific undertaking stating that the issuer understands its conveyance obligations. n105

explained earlier, n107 no issuer should unilaterally take the 20-day route because it almost surely will lead to an SEC enforcement action unless the issuer amends the registration statement before the 20[th] day by adding to the cover page a legend of the type prescribed by Rule 473 that delays the effective date. Consequently, the normal route to effectiveness is to wait until the registration statement is declared effective by the Assistant Director to whose office the filing was assigned. n108

[8] Withdrawal or Abandonment

Rule 477 provides that any registration statement and any amendment or exhibit thereto may be withdrawn by the registrant if the Commission finds that the withdrawal is "consistent with the public interest and the protection of investors." n109 The application by the registrant for withdrawal must be signed and should fully state the grounds upon which it is made and indicate that no securities were sold. n110 Typically, the Commission will not permit withdrawal if the registration statement is the subject of an investigation or inquiry by the Division of Enforcement. n111

Somewhat related to the withdrawal issue is the matter of "abandoned" registration statements. The Commission has stated in Rule 479 that when a registration statement or a post-effective amendment thereto has been on file for a period of nine months without becoming effective, the Commission may seek to have it declared abandoned. It is rarely necessary, however, for the Commission actually to declare a registration statement abandoned, since a simple inquiry by the SEC staff to the registrant will often spark either a withdrawal request or activity designed to revive the filing.

An issue that sometimes arises in connection with a withdrawn public offering is the effect that the failed offering may have on the ability of the issuer to raise capital privately. There historically was a concern that a private offering soon after withdrawal or abandonment of the registration statement could cause the offering to be "integrated" with the failed public offering and thereby deprive the nominally private offering of its securities registration exemption. This concern was addressed by the Commission in Rule 155, which was adopted in 2001 and mandates a 30-day waiting period before a private offering can commence after an aborted public offering.

[9] Enforcement

Any investor who purchased securities in an offering that violated the Securities Act may sue in a U.S. District Court to recover damages sustained as a result of the purchase. n112 The Commission also may institute proceedings to enforce the Act. Generally, the Commission prefers to enforce the registration provisions of the Act through the comment letter process. It will, however, institute formal action to enforce the registration provisions where there has been an apparent willful disregard of the applicable disclosure requirements or a willful attempt to conceal or mislead. In such situations, the Commission has a wide array of remedies available:

Cease-and-Desist Order. Section 8A of the Securities Act authorizes the Commission to enter a temporary or permanent order requiring a violator to cease and desist from committing or causing a violation in the future. n113

Injunction. Section 20 permits the Commission to seek from a U.S. District Court a temporary or permanent injunction against any person engaging, or about to engage, in any violation of the Act or the rules or regulations thereunder. n114

Stop Order. Section 8(d) permits the Commission to issue a stop order suspending the effectiveness of a registration statement or preventing a registration statement that has not yet become effective from being used. n115

Refusal Order. Section 8(b) permits the Commission to issue an order refusing to permit a registration statement to become effective until it has been amended in accordance with the order. n116

Denial of Effectiveness. Section 8(c) permits the Commission to decline to make effective an amendment filed after the effective date of the registration statement to which it relates. n117

Civil Monetary Penalty. Section 20(d) authorizes the Commission to seek from a U.S. District Court civil monetary penalties of up to $100,000 per violation of the Act by a natural person and up to $500,000 per violation by other persons, depending on the nature of the violation. n118

Criminal Penalty. Section 24 authorizes criminal penalties of up to $10,000 and prison terms of up to five years for each willful violation of the Act or the rules and regulations thereunder.

The Commission has established through various enforcement proceedings its resolve to make full use of the many weapons available to remedy Securities Act violations. Moreover, investors are not shy about instituting private lawsuits to recover any losses sustained by them as a result of such violations. The possibility that these parties may bring an enforcement action where an offering performs poorly provides a strong incentive for all parties responsible for a registration statement to exercise care when preparing it and to make a studious effort to comply with all applicable provisions of the Act.

The Division adopted the tiered levels of reviews following the enactment of Section 408 of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act in 2002. Section 408 requires that the reports of every issuer required to report under Section 13(a) or 15(d) of the Exchange Act be reviewed on a regular and systematic basis, no less frequently than once every three years. See generally, remarks of Alan Beller, then-Director of the Division, at a meeting on November 20, 2004 of the American Bar Association's Committee on Federal Regulation of Securities.

(n10)Footnote 10. The Division does not publicly disclose its criteria for determining the level of review accorded to registration statements and other disclosure documents. The SEC's Office of the Inspector General issued a report in 2006 evaluating the Division of Corporation Finance's preliminary review process. The report recommended that the Division (i) enhance its consideration of risk factors when selecting companies for preliminary review; (ii) maintain surveillance of the largest companies; and (iii) continue to manage its workload more efficiently. See Inspector General Recommends Improvements to Corporation Finance Review Process, Corporate Secretary's Guide (CCH), (July 11, 2006) 293.

(n12)Footnote 12. Some issuers, such as those in troubled industries, receive greater scrutiny from the staff, thereby increasing the processing time. Further, some transactions, such as business combinations, may be so complex that they require more processing time than ordinarily is necessary.

(n13)Footnote 13. During the first three months of the calendar year, the staff usually is reviewing a heavy volume of other filings, particularly proxy statements for annual meetings of stockholders.

(n14)Footnote 14. The Division, for example, may consult with other government agencies that have regulatory authority over the issuer's activities, or with the Division of Enforcement when the issuer is currently the subject of a formal order of investigation.

(N15)Footnote 15. See generally Sec. Act Rel. No. 33-5622 (1975). For a description of topics of particular interest or importance to investors in 2009 that could be the subject of staff comments on annual disclosure documents of issuers, see M. Mullany and E. Jerrehian, 2009 Annual Disclosure Documents, 42 Rev. Sec. & Comm. Reg. 61 (March 4, 2009). Because annual disclosure documents are required under the integrated disclosure system to contain various items of information that also must be included in registration statements for public offerings, many of the topics discussed by the authors are pertinent to registered offerings and could be the subject of comments on the registration statements for such offerings.

(n16)Footnote 16. In some circumstances, it is permissible not to include required information. See Rule 409, which states that required information that is unknown and not reasonably available to the registrant may be omitted if obtaining the information would involve unreasonable effort or expense, or the information rests peculiarly within the knowledge of another person not affiliated with the registrant. A registrant attempting to rely on Rule 409 to omit required information should include a full explanation of the reasons for its position in the transmittal letter to the staff, and include in the registration statement any information on the subject that it possesses or can acquire without unreasonable effort or expense.

(n18)Footnote 18. To become effective automatically within 20 days after filing, the delaying amendment language specified in Rule 473(a) must be omitted from the filing.

(n19)Footnote 19. Under Rule 3-12 of Regulation S-X, the most recent financial statements included in the registration statement generally cannot be more than 135 days old at the time of effectiveness.

(n20)Footnote 20. See Rule 3(a) of the Commission's Informal and Other Procedures, 17 C.F.R. 202.3(a).

(n21)Footnote 21. Where circumstances warrant, the staff may informally grant a waiver of the applicable deadline although such grants are relatively rare and generally are issued only if the financial statements will be filed within a few days after the deadline.

(n22)Footnote 22. After a lull of more than year in IPO filings due to the depressed stock market that began in mid-2008, the IPO market began a resurgence in the fall of 2009. See, e.g., L. Cowan, IPO Market Regains Momentum, Wall St. J. C3. (September 21, 2009); Big Names Come Back to Resurgent IPO Market, SEC Today, cover page (September 10, 2009).

(n25)Footnote 25. Documents subsequently filed by the issuer under the Exchange Act prior to the termination of the offering also are automatically incorporated into the Form S-3 registration statement, pursuant to Item 12(b) of the form.

(n26)Footnote 26. As previously indicated, the Commission is required by Section 408 of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act to review the Exchange Act filings of reporting issuers at least once every three years.

(n27)Footnote 27. Prior to 1982, the Commission generally permitted registration only of securities proposed to be offered presently, based on a literal interpretation of Section 6(a) of the Securities Act.

(n28)Footnote 28. The Commission expanded this flexibility in 1992 when it first permitted so-called "universal shelf" offerings. Under this approach, qualified issuers may register securities on short Form S-3 by gross dollar amount, without specifying the amount or type of takedowns (equity or debt) that might be made in the future. See Sec. Act Rel. No. 33-6964 (1992). For a description of the advantages and disadvantages of universal shelf registration, see V. Demont, Show Me the Money and How to Get It: The Speed and Flexibility of Universal Shelf Registrations, (Pepper Hamilton LLP) (May 28, 2009), available at <http://www.pepperlaw.com>.

(n29)Footnote 29. Takedowns from the shelf can be made without review by the SEC staff.

(n31)Footnote 31. See Rule 415(a)(5). A "WKSI" is defined in Rule 405 as an issuer eligible to use Form S-3 or Form F-3 that has either a worldwide public common equity float (i.e., equity held by non-affiliates) of at least $700 million, or issued in the preceding three years at least $1 billion of non-convertible securities, other than common equity, in registered primary offerings for cash. A "seasoned issuer" is an issuer eligible to use Form S-3 or Form F-3 to register a primary offering of securities because it has a public common equity float of at least $75 million and meets the other requirements of the applicable form. An "unseasoned issuer" is an issuer that is required to file reports pursuant to Section 13 or 15(d) of the Exchange Act, but is not eligible to register a primary offering on Form S-3 or Form F-3.

(n46)Footnote 46. A relatively common situation that gives rise to registration statements for selling security holders is a PIPE ("Private Investment in Public Equity"). A PIPE typically involves a private offering of securities (frequently large in size) that is subject to the condition that the stock purchased by investors in the PIPE will be able to be sold by the investors pursuant to an effective registration statement filed with the SEC promptly after the investors commit to the purchases. For information about PIPEs and a rebound in their popularity, see G. Gooding and J. (n47)Footnote 47. Pursuant to Rule 430B(d), the omitted information subsequently may be included in the registration statement for the resale offering by (i) a post-effective amendment; (ii) a prospectus supplement; or (iii) an Exchange Act report that is incorporated by reference into the registration statement.

(n48)Footnote 48. For seasoned issuers that are not WKSIs using an automatic shelf registration statement, these conditions include (i) completion prior to registration of the offering in which the securities being resold were acquired; (ii) issuance of the resale securities prior to the filing of the resale registration statement; and (iii) the inclusion of a generic reference in the registration statement to any unnamed selling security holders. The benefits of the rule are not available to a blank check company, shell company or penny stock issuer.

(n82)Footnote 82. The issuer typically extends indefinitely the 20-day statutory deferral of the effective date by placing on the facing page of the registration statement the "delaying amendment" language of Rule 473(a). See generally § 7A.05[14][f] supra.

(n83)Footnote 83. The issuer also must submit by letter a statement (which may be the acceleration request) that the issuer and the managing or principal underwriters are aware of their obligations under the Securities Act. See Rule 461(a).

(n84)Footnote 84. Although neither the Assistant Director nor any other member of the staff may deny an acceleration request, the effect of a denial can be achieved by the staff simply indicating that it is not in a position to grant the acceleration request. At that juncture, the registrant has the right to appeal the staff's determination to the full Commission, but should resist the urge to do so. Any such appeal is likely to consume considerable time and be fruitless in the end, since the Commission is loath to undermine its staff in such situations.

(n85)Footnote 85. By complying with all outstanding comments, the registrant will effectively satisfy the requirement of Rule 461(b)(1) that it have made a bona fide effort to make the prospectus reasonably concise and readable.

(n92)Footnote 92. Rule 461(b)(7).

(n93)Footnote 93. Two studies separately concluded that auctions more often than not result in an offering price that is superior to that produced by the fixed price process, based on fewer instances of underpricing (as reflected in smaller spikes in the aftermarket price), and reduced underwriting fees. See S. Hauser, U. Yaari, Y. Tanchuma and H. Baker, Initial Public Offering Discount and Competition, 49 Journal of Law & Economics 331 (2006); K. Pukthuanthong, N. Varaiya, and T. Walker, Bookbuilding Versus Auction Selling Methods: A Study of US IPOs, 9 Venture Capital: International Journal of Entrepreneurial Finance 311 (2007). A third study concluded that IPO underpricing decreases with detailed disclosure of the intended uses of the offering proceeds. See S. Rock and M. Willenborg, Disclosure of Intended Use of Proceeds and Underpricing in Initial Public Offerings, 45 Journal of Accounting Research 111 (2007).

(n94)Footnote 94. See Sec. Act Rel. No. 33-6714 (1987).

(n95)Footnote 95. Where the 15-business day filing requirement of the rule is not met, the omitted information relating to pricing and underwriting is required by Rule 430A(a)(3) to be included in a prospectus filed by post-effective amendment. As a result, the prospectus in such situations cannot be used until the SEC declares the amendment effective.

(n96)Footnote 96. Rule 462(b). The new registration statement essentially is identical to the one on file except for the number of shares shown as being registered.

(n98)Footnote 98. Where, however, the registration of additional shares would cause the offering size to increase by more than 20%, the registration statement would not become effective automatically. Instead, it would have to be declared effective formally by the Commission.

(n99)Footnote 99. At least one court has suggested that civil liability may result where an issuer failed to recirculate a prospectus that has been amended substantially. See generally, In re Regeneron Pharmaceuticals, Inc. Securities Litigation [1995 Transfer Binder] Fed. Sec. L. Rep. P 98,637 (S.D.N.Y. 1995).

(n100)Footnote 100. According to the instruction to Rule 430A, the changes can be reflected in the final prospectus required to be filed after effectiveness under Rule 424(b). Where additional shares that are within the 20% limit need to be registered after the registration statement has been made effective, Rule 462(b)(3) permits the new registration statement for the additional shares to become effective automatically upon filing with the Commission.

(n101)Footnote 101. See instruction to Rule 430A(a).

(n102)Footnote 102. This is in contrast to the situation prior to the adoption of Rule 159 under which the information could be conveyed in a final prospectus filed under Rule 424(b).

(n103)Footnote 103. See remarks by John White, then-Director of the SEC's Division of Corporation Finance, on April 7, 2006 to the American Bar Association's Committee on Federal Regulation of Securities, described in the Committee's newsletter to its members, at 3.

(n105)Footnote 105. Id.

(n108)Footnote 108. The Assistant Director's action in declaring the registration statement effective is made pursuant to authority delegated by the Commission and has the effect of accelerating the effective date prescribed by Section 8(a) by eliminating the 20-day waiting period. On May 22, 2006, the Commission eliminated its historic practice of providing a paper notice of effectiveness and instead began the practice of posting on its web site EDGAR orders of effectiveness on the morning after a filing is determined to be effective. See SEC Press Release No. 2006-61 (April 25, 2006).

(n109)Footnote 109. In an application for withdrawal of a registration statement filed on Form S-4 for a transaction meeting the requirements of General Instruction G of that form, the Commission will grant the request automatically if the application is submitted prior to the effective date. See Rule 477(b).

(n110)Footnote 110. Rule 477(c). The registrant's letter containing the withdrawal application must be submitted electronically on EDGAR, where it will be posted on the SEC's web site. If the issuer of an aborted IPO that results in a withdrawal of the IPO registration statement makes a second attempt at an IPO, a study indicates that the aborted IPO is likely to have an adverse effect on the valuation of the subsequent IPO attempt. See P. Lian and Q. Wang, Does the Market Incorporate Previous IPO Withdrawals When Pricing Second-Time IPOs?, 38 Financial Management 357 (2009).

(n111)Footnote 111. See, e.g., Sec. Act Rel. No. 33-8502 (2004) (withdrawal request denied where registrant issued misleading press release in connection with withdrawal request).

(n112)Footnote 112. See Section 12(a) of the Securities Act. Generally, Section 13 of the Act requires that such a lawsuit be instituted within one year of the date of discovering the violation, but no later than three years after the date the violation occurred.

(n113)Footnote 113. The Commission obtained cease-and-desist authority in 1990, and now uses that authority as the principal means of remedying violations of the Securities Act.

(n114)Footnote 114. The issuance of an injunction relating to violations of the Securities Act is not utilized often. The reason is that essentially the same relief as an injunction can be obtained with much less difficulty through the issuance of a cease-and-desist order by the Commission.

(n115)Footnote 115. Although the language of the statute clearly permits the Commission to institute stop order proceedings against registration statements that have become effective, it is ambiguous regarding the use of such proceedings with respect to pre-effective filings. The Commission, however, believes the statute provides adequate authority to issue stop orders against pre-effective registration statements. See In re Red Bank Oil Co., 20 SEC 863 (1945), and W. McLucas, Stop Order Proceedings Under the Securities Act of 1933: A Current Assessment, 40 Bus. Law. 515, 531 (1985).

(n116)Footnote 116. Refusal orders have been used only twice, in each case early in the statute's history. The refusal order remedy apparently was used because of the severe time constraints in the statute that require a notice of hearing relating to such an order to be issued "not later than ten days after the filing of the registration statement." See In re Gold Producers, Inc., 1 SEC 1 (1933), and In re International Investors Fund System, Inc., 1 SEC 461 (1936).

(n117)Footnote 117. For an example of a rare instance in which this remedy was employed, see Sec. Act Rel. No. 33-6955 (1992).

(n118)Footnote 118. The Commission appears to follow the policy of seeking civil monetary penalties primarily for egregious violations of the Act, such as those involving fraudulent conduct.

CHAPTER 7A The Registration Process

2-7A Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 7A.07

AUTHOR: Peter J. Romeo

§ 7A.07 The Post-Effective Period

The period after the registration statement has been made effective involves a variety of activities relating to the completion of the offering.

[1] Prospectus Delivery

The Securities Act requires delivery to each investor in a registered offering of a final prospectus meeting the requirements of Section 10(a) of the Act. n1 The SEC made a major change affecting this requirement by adopting Rule 159 in 2005. The rule provides that information conveyed to a purchaser after the time of sale will not be taken into account in determining liability under the antifraud provisions of the Act. n2 This can limit the utility of a final prospectus to memorializing the information in it for purchasers in the aftermarket. n3 In recognition of both this fact and technological advances that provide investors with greater access to information about securities offerings, the SEC adopted in 2005 the rule revisions described below that allow electronic availability of the final prospectus to satisfy the delivery obligation. n4

Deemed Delivery. The Commission adopted Rule 172 in 2005 for the purpose of applying an "access equals delivery" model to the delivery of final prospectuses. n5 This model presumes that investors have access to the Internet (including the SEC's web site containing a copy of the final prospectus) and therefore the delivery obligation is satisfied by simply having the final prospectus on file with the SEC. n6 As a consequence, offering participants do not have to print final prospectuses or physically deliver them if the final prospectus is filed with the SEC under Rule 424 n7 and certain other conditions are met. n8 Rule 174, however, requires delivery by a dealer of a prospectus for aftermarket transactions for 25 days following effectiveness where an issuer was not previously subject to the reporting requirements of the Exchange Act (or for 90 days if an IPO issuer's securities are not listed on a national securities exchange).

Confirmation of Sale. Each underwriter, broker or dealer participating in a registered offering (or the issuer, if the offering is made directly by it) is required to provide each purchaser in the offering with a confirmation of sale that is accompanied or preceded by a copy of the final prospectus. The confirmation requirement can be satisfied under Rule 173 by sending an e-mail notice or other form of written communication to each customer and member of the selling group within two business days after completion of the sale indicating the allocation of securities to the person and stating that the sale was made pursuant to a registration statement.

[2] Over-Allotment Option

It is common to include in a firm commitment underwriting agreement an "over-allotment option" enabling the underwriters to purchase additional shares for a specified period after effectiveness of the registration statement. The additional shares (which are limited by FINRA rule to 15% of the original allotment) may be needed to cover a short position created by overselling the original commitment. Overselling is relatively common, since it usually will assure that the full allotment is sold, even if some investors renege on their purchase commitments. An over-allotment option (also known as a "green shoe" option for the company that first utilized it) typically is exercisable for up to 30 days one or more times following effectiveness. Accordingly, the decision whether to exercise it will be made during the post-effective period. Nothing unusual needs to be done with respect to the exercise because the shares subject to the over-allotment option are among the number of shares included in the registration statement at the time it is declared effective.

[3] The Closing

After the securities that constitute the original allotment have been sold and the offering has been completed, the closing takes place. n9 The closing is a formal meeting that marks the conclusion of the offering, and it typically occurs within three or four business days after pricing the offering. n10 The parties represented at the meeting include the issuer and underwriters, counsel for the issuer and underwriters, the auditor, the registrar and the transfer agent (and, in the case of an offering of debt securities, the indenture trustee).

At the closing, the underwriters pay for the securities sold in the offering and the certificates for the securities (if any) are released for issuance. n11 In addition, various other events customarily occur. These include (i) delivery by the issuer's counsel of a legal opinion and a "negative assurance" letter relating to disclosures in the registration statement, the texts of which were previously negotiated with counsel for the underwriters; n12 (ii) the issuance of certifications to the underwriters by specified company officers attesting to certain facts; (iii) the delivery of a comfort letter by the auditors on the unaudited financial data included in the registration statement; and (iv) the furnishing of other documents requested by the underwriters, such as certified copies of the articles of incorporation, good standing certificates, and the like. The closing usually is brief, lasting no more than a few hours, since it typically is preceded the day before by a "pre-closing" in which the interested parties assemble the various documents to be exchanged and agree on their final content.

[4] Post-Closing Events

After the closing, a few additional tasks remain to complete the registration process.

[a] Required Filings. If any substantive changes are made to the prospectus as it existed on the date the registration statement became effective, the issuer must file under Rule 424(b) the revised form of prospectus with the SEC within the applicable time period prescribed in the rule. With respect to a prospectus that discloses pricing and other information that was allowed to be omitted under Rule 430A at the time of effectiveness, the issuer must file the amended prospectus under Rule 424(b)(1) no later than the second business day following the earlier of the date of pricing or the date the prospectus is first used after effectiveness.

Where a registration statement relates to an IPO, the issuer should report the use of proceeds in its first periodic report filed after effectiveness under Section 13 or 15(d) of the Exchange Act. n13 Further, the issuer should report any later application of offering proceeds in each subsequent periodic report filed through the date of termination of the offering. n14

[b] Deregistration. In some registered offerings, the issuer is unable to sell all of the securities before the offering is terminated. This can happen, for example, when the underwriter decides not to exercise an over-allotment option or the minimum amount required to complete a "best efforts" offering is not subscribed. When it is apparent that the securities will not be sold because the offering has been completed or terminated, or the registration statement has been withdrawn, the issuer is supposed to deregister them. n15 In practice, however, deregistration frequently does not occur and there are no adverse consequences for failing to do so. n16

Deregistration is accomplished by filing a post-effective amendment consisting of a facing sheet, a page stating the number of securities being deregistered and the reason for deregistration, and a signature page. If the issuer later decides to resell the deregistered securities in a registered offering, it will have to file an entirely new registration statement for that purpose. Any unused registration fee that results from not having sold securities that were registered may be applied to any future registration statement filed within five years of the initial filing date of the earlier registration statement. n17

[c] Public Company Memo. An issuer which becomes a public company as a result of a registered offering incurs a number of new responsibilities under the federal securities laws. To alert a newly public company to these responsibilities, it is customary for issuer's counsel to send the client a "public company memo." Typically, the memorandum will include a discussion of the requirement to file periodic reports under Section 13(a) or 15(d) of the Exchange Act, and the application of various requirements of the Exchange Act and, if applicable, stock exchange rules that flow from registration of a class of equity securities under Section 12 of that Act. n18

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. See Section 5(b)(2) of the Securities Act.

(n2)Footnote 2. See generally Sec. Act Rel. No. 33-8591, § IV.A. (2005).

(n3)Footnote 3. See generally Sec. Act Rel. No. 33-8591, § VI.A. (2005).

(n4)Footnote 4. Previously, the Commission had eased prospectus delivery obligations in various circumstances. See Rule 153 (delivery of prospectuses between brokers taking place over a national securities exchange deemed to have occurred by delivery to exchange of number of copies specified by it) and Rule 434 (delivery of final prospectus within T+3 settlement cycle in firm commitment offerings for cash satisfied by making delivery of offering documents at different intervals in offering process). Other rules that relate to the delivery of prospectuses under the Securities Act include Rule 153A (delivery of prospectus in merger or other transaction specified in Rule 145) and Rule 153B (delivery of prospectus for standardized options).

(n5)Footnote 5. To implement the access equals delivery model in 2005, the Commission amended Rule 153 (transactions between brokers on exchanges), Rule 173 (notice of registration), and Rule 174 (delivery of prospectuses in aftermarket). See Sec. Act Rel. No. 33-8591, § VI.B. (2005).

(n6)Footnote 6. See Sec. Act Rel. No. 33-8591, § VI.B. (2005).

(n7)Footnote 7. The Rule 424 filing condition is deemed satisfied if the issuer makes a good faith and reasonable effort to file the final prospectus within the Rule 424 period. Rule 172(c)(3) indicates that if the issuer unintentionally has failed to file the final prospectus by the Rule 424 deadline, it can cure the deficiency by filing the prospectus under Rule 424 as soon as practicable after the failure to file.

(n8)Footnote 8. The other conditions are specified in Rule 172(c) and include requirements that (i) the registration statement be effective and not be the subject of an enforcement proceeding under Section 8(d) or 8(e) of the Securities Act; and (ii) neither the issuer nor an underwriter or participating dealer be the subject of a pending proceeding under Section 8A of the Act in connection with the offering.

(n9)Footnote 9. If the over-allotment option is exercised, there will be a separate closing relating to the sale of shares pursuant to that option.

(n10)Footnote 10. See Rule 15c6-1 under the Exchange Act. If pricing occurs after 4:30 p.m. Eastern time and the offering is a firm commitment underwritten offering for cash, the rule permits the closing to take place on the fourth business day after pricing. The parties also are permitted to agree to a closing date different from that prescribed by the rule, although this occurs infrequently.

(n11)Footnote 11. If the issuer uses a book entry system of transfer, it will not issue certificates.

(n12)Footnote 12. For a report on negative assurance and an illustrative form of negative assurance letter, see Report of the Subcommittee on Securities Law Opinions, Committee on Federal Regulation of Securities, ABA Section of Business Law, Negative Assurance in Securities Offerings (2008 Revision), 64 Bus. Law. 395 (2009).

(n13)Footnote 13. See Rule 463(a), which indicates the disclosure should be in accordance with Item 701 of Regulation S-K or Regulation S-B, or Item 14(e) of Form 20-F, as applicable.

(n15)Footnote 15. See, e.g., Item 512(a)(3) of Regulation S-K, which sets forth the text of an undertaking required in shelf registration statements under Rule 415 to deregister any of the securities remaining unsold upon termination of the shelf offering.

(n16)Footnote 16. The Commission does not appear ever to have instituted an enforcement action based on an issuer's failure to deregister unsold securities. Indeed, in at least one instance, the Commission staff has indicated that although deregistration is desirable, it is not absolutely necessary. See Sec. Act Rel. No. 33-6281, § I.D. (1981), which discusses the deregistration of shares included in a Form S-8 registration statement for an employee benefit plan.

(n17)Footnote 17. See Rule 457(p).

(n18)Footnote 18. Typically, registration under Section 12 for a company that completes an IPO occurs at the same time that the registration statement under the Securities Act for the IPO is made effective by the SEC.

CHAPTER 7B Registration Of Investment Company Securities

2-7B Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 7B.01

AUTHOR: Thomas P. Lemke Gerald T. Lins

§ 7B.01 Introduction to the Registration of Investment Company Securities

Investment companies, unless exempt, must register with the Securities and Exchange Commission (the "SEC" or the "Commission") under the Investment Company Act of 1940 (the "Investment Company Act" or "Act"). The Investment Company Act imposes a comprehensive regulatory system on registrants, and a number of provisions and related rules and regulations apply to the offering of securities by investment companies. The Securities Act of 1933 ("Securities Act") also applies to public offerings of securities of investment companies. As a result, both an investment company and the securities it offers must be registered. The Commission has developed special forms and rules under both Acts governing registration of different types of investment companies and their securities, and investment companies may generally satisfy the registration requirements of both Acts by filing a single form. These forms now permit most types of investment companies to bifurcate disclosure between a somewhat shortened statutory prospectus, which must be provided to investors, and a "Statement of Additional Information" or "SAI," which must be provided to investors only upon request.

Procedurally, the initial registration of investment company securities is roughly comparable to that of other securities, although the particular ways in which securities of certain types of investment companies are brought to market have led to the development of procedures unique to those types of securities. In particular, open-end investment companies, commonly referred to as "mutual funds," generally offer their shares continuously. Accordingly, SEC rules permit funds to register an indefinite number of shares and to update their prospectuses through annual or, if necessary, more frequent post-effective amendments that become effective automatically, either immediately on filing or through lapse of time. Administratively, the Commission's Division of Investment Management (rather than the Division of Corporation Finance) is responsible for review of the registration of investment companies and their securities.

The substantive regulation of investment companies under the Investment Company Act is beyond the scope of this chapter, but a general knowledge of the applicability of that statute to certain types of issuers is a prerequisite to understanding the registration process for investment company securities. n1 Therefore, the chapter includes a summary discussion of the basic definition of an investment company and the exceptions therefrom, and of the different types of investment companies. In addition, the chapter includes a discussion of the applicability to investment companies of the Securities Act exemptions from registration of certain securities and transactions.

A number of different types of investment companies are regulated under the Investment Company Act, and both the substantive regulation and the format for disclosure will vary depending upon the category into which a particular investment company falls. In addition, there are a number of important exceptions from the Investment Company Act's broad definitions of investment company, as well as certain exemptions from regulation for entities that are considered investment companies.

[1] Investment Company Defined

[a] Basic Definition. Section 3(a)(1)(A) of the Investment Company Act defines "investment company" to include any issuer which is, holds itself out to be, or proposes to be engaged primarily in the business of investing, reinvesting or trading in securities. n2

[b] Companies Issuing Face-Amount Certificates of the Installment Type. Section 3(a)(1)(B) of the Investment Company Act defines investment company to include any issuer which is engaged or proposes to engage in the business of issuing face-amount certificates of the installment type or has been engaged in such business and has any such certificate outstanding (registration of face-amount certificate companies and their securities is extremely rare and will, therefore, not be covered in depth in this chapter). n3

[c] Inadvertent Investment Companies. Finally, Section 3(a)(1)(C) of the Investment Company Act also includes within the definition of investment company any issuer engaged or proposing to engage in the business of investing, reinvesting, owning, holding, or trading securities and which owns or proposes to acquire "investment securities" having a value exceeding 40 percent of the value of such issuer's total assets (exclusive of government securities and cash items) on an unconsolidated basis.

Section 3(a)(2) defines the term investment securities to include all securities other than government securities, securities of employees' securities companies and securities of majority owned subsidiaries that are not investment companies. This provision applies regardless of whether a company intends to be an investment company, so holding companies and other companies that regularly acquire interests in other companies in the form of securities may "inadvertently" come within the definition of an investment company and, therefore, be required to register and be regulated under the Investment Company Act unless an exemption or exception from this definition is available. n4

[2] Classification and Sub-classification of Investment Companies

Companies that come within the definition of an investment company are further "classified" and "sub-classified" pursuant to Sections 4 and 5.

[a] Management Companies. As a technical definitional matter, "management company" under Section 4(3) of the Investment Company Act is a catch-all category that includes all investment companies that do not fall into another category, i.e., all investment companies that are not unit investment trusts n5 or face-amount certificate companies. Management companies generally have actively managed portfolios of securities and offer primarily, if not exclusively, equity securities which evidence an undivided interest in that securities portfolio. Mutual funds and closed-end funds fall into this category. The Investment Company Act imposes a number of regulatory requirements on the governance and operations of management companies, including requirements as to the structure of the board of directors; n6 the approval of contracts with investment advisers and distributors; n7 transactions with affiliates; n8 capital structure; n9 and transactions in securities of the investment company. n10

[i] Open-end or Closed-end. Section 5(a)(1) of the Investment Company Act defines an "open-end" management company as one that offers for sale or has outstanding any security which it has issued and which may be redeemed by the holder. Investment companies that fall into this category are commonly known as "mutual funds." Typically they offer on a continuous basis to sell securities to or redeem securities from investors at a price based on "net asset value," as adjusted to reflect any sales charge (or "load"). Net asset value is generally determined by deducting liabilities from the value of the fund's portfolio plus any cash or other assets. n11 Mutual funds issue only common stock or the equivalent. n12

"Closed-end" companies (Section 5(a)(2)) usually do not offer shares on a continuous basis and there is no right of redemption, although closed-end funds may make tenders for outstanding shares. n13 Following their initial offering, closed-end fund shares are generally traded in the secondary markets, including securities exchanges. Closed-end funds may issue one class each of debt and preferred stock subject to asset coverage requirements set forth in Section 18 of the Investment Company Act.

[ii] Diversified or Non-Diversified. Subject to the requirements of the Internal Revenue Code, n14 management companies may choose whether their portfolios of securities will be treated as "diversified" (Section 5(b)(1)) or "non-diversified" (Section 5(b)(2)). If, however, a management company declares in its registration statement that it will be diversified, then pursuant to Section 13(a)(1) it must continue to be diversified unless shareholders approve a change. To be diversified a company must invest 75 percent or more of its total assets in:

- cash and cash items (including receivables), Government securities, securities of other investment companies; and
- other securities, provided that no more than 5 percent of its total assets may be invested in any one issuer (and it may own no more than 10 percent of the outstanding voting securities of any issuer).

It may invest the remaining 25 percent of its assets without restriction (except that it may not include in this 25 percent "basket" any securities if securities of the same issuer are included in the 75 percent basket). n15

[b] Unit Investment Trusts. Section 4(2) of the Investment Company Act states that a "unit investment trust" is a type of investment company which is organized under a trust indenture or a similar instrument, which does not have a board of directors, and which issues only redeemable securities, each of which represents an undivided interest in a unit of specified securities. A voting trust is not included in this definition. The assets of a unit investment trust typically consist of a portfolio of securities that normally remains fixed, securities of a specified mutual fund, or some combination of the two.

[c] Face-Amount Certificate Companies. Section 4(1) states that a "face-amount certificate company" is an investment company which is engaged or proposes to engage in the business of issuing face-amount certificates of the installment type, or which has been engaged in such business and has any such certificate outstanding.

[3] Exceptions from the Definition of Investment Company

As discussed below, the investment company regulatory scheme includes a number of exceptions from the broad definition of investment company both in the Investment Company Act and in the rules adopted by the Commission.

[a] Companies Primarily Engaged in Other Businesses. Section 3(b) excepts certain investment companies that fall within Section 3(a)(3). n16 Section 3(b)(1) excepts any issuer primarily engaged directly or through wholly-owned subsidiaries in a business or businesses other than investing, reinvesting, owning, holding or trading in securities. n17

In addition, Section 3(b)(2) authorizes the Commission to issue orders declaring an issuer not to be an investment company if the SEC finds that such issuer is primarily engaged in a business or businesses other than the investment company business, either directly or through majority-owned subsidiaries or through controlled companies which, as among themselves, are conducting similar types of business. n18

Finally, Section 3(b)(3) excepts a company all of whose outstanding securities (other than short-term paper and directors' qualifying shares) are owned by a company that comes within Section 3(b)(1) or Section 3(b)(2).

In addition, based on its administrative experience, the SEC has adopted several rules that exempt other types of investment companies from regulation under the Investment Company Act. Rule 3a-1 excepts companies that meet certain numerical asset and income tests generally designed to assure that such companies more closely resemble companies engaged in one or more operating businesses than they do companies that the SEC believes should be subject to investment company regulation. n19 Rule 3a-2 excepts so-called "transient" companies; that is, companies that intend to take steps to take themselves out of the definition of investment company within a year. n20 Rule 3a-3 excepts certain investment subsidiaries of companies that are not themselves investment companies.

In addition, the SEC has adopted exemptive rules for certain finance subsidiaries of non-investment companies. n21 Rule 3a-6 exempts certain foreign banks and insurance companies. Rule 3a-7 exempts certain entities formed in connection with securitization transactions.

[b] "Private" Investment Companies. Sections 3(c)(1) and 3(c)(7) except from the definition of investment company (and, therefore, from registration or any of the other requirements of the Investment Company Act) two types of investment companies that are not publicly offered and that meet other tests. Section 3(c)(1) applies to a company if its outstanding securities are beneficially owned by not more than 100 persons. For purposes of determining the number of beneficial owners of an issuer's securities, ownership of securities of the issuer by a company is generally deemed to be beneficial ownership by one person. However, under certain circumstances Section 3(c)(1) would require "looking through" that company and counting its shareholders. Specifically, if that company owns more than 10 percent of the outstanding voting securities of the issuer whose status as an investment company is being determined, ownership of the securities will be attributed not to the company but to the holders of the company's securities if the company n22 would itself be an investment company but for Section 3(c)(1) or Section 3(c)(7).

Section 3(c)(7) generally excepts companies that have as investors only "qualified purchasers." n23 For purposes of the Section 3(c)(7) exception, a "qualified purchaser" is defined as: (i) a natural person (including a spouse owning a joint or similar interest) owning not less than $5 million in investments; (ii) a company owning not less than $5 million in investments that is owned directly or indirectly by or for two or more related natural persons (i.e., persons related as siblings, spouses, direct lineal descendants as well as estates, foundations, trusts or charitable organizations established by or for these persons); n24 (iii) a trust that was not formed for the purpose of investing in a Section 3(c)(7) fund, n25 and that is managed solely by "qualified purchasers" and whose settlor or other contributors were all "qualified purchasers;" n26 and (iv) any person acting for its own account or the accounts of other "qualified purchasers" who in the aggregate owns and invests on a discretionary basis at least $25 million in investments. n27

[c] Companies in Certain Financial Businesses. Section 3(c) of the Investment Company Act also excepts various types of financial services companies that might come within the broad definition of an investment company but which Congress did not intend to regulate under the Investment Company Act, including:

- underwriters and brokers; n28
- banking institutions, including common trust funds of banks; n29
- insurance companies (but not their separate accounts); n30
- certain companies engaged in factoring or similar financing businesses or in investing in interests in real estate (as long as they do not issue installment face-amount certificates, periodic payment plan certificates, or redeemable securities); n31 and
- trusts relating to qualified employee benefit plans, as well as collective trust funds maintained by banks holding the assets of such trusts and insurance company separate accounts for such trusts. n32

[d] Miscellaneous Exceptions. Other exceptions in Section 3(c) include those for certain companies regulated under the Interstate Commerce and Public Utility Holding Company Acts (Section 3(c)(7) and (8) respectively); for eligible companies that hold oil, gas or mineral rights (Section 3(c)(9)); and for certain charitable entities (Section 3(c)(10)) and church plans (Section 3(c)(14)). In addition, Section 2(b) excludes certain governmental entities.

[4] Exempt Investment Companies

Under Section 6 of the Investment Company Act, certain types of investment companies are exempt from regulation or may be exempted conditionally or unconditionally n33 by the Commission. Section 6(a) exempts companies with businesses limited to certain territories, companies in bankruptcy, and certain other companies in special circumstances. n34 Section 6(b) contemplates exemptive applications by employees' securities companies. n35

Section 6(d) gives the Commission the authority to exempt small, closed-end investment companies that operate intrastate. n36 Section 6(f) provides a limited exemption for business development companies.

Finally, Section 6(c) authorizes the SEC to exempt any company to the extent that such exemption is necessary or appropriate in the public interest and consistent with the protection of investors and the purposes fairly intended by the policy and provisions of the Investment Company Act. n37 The Commission has used this broad exemptive authority many times in cases where the protections of the Investment Company Act were unnecessary or where alternative regulatory mechanisms could be found.

[5] Securities Act Exemptions Available to Investment Companies

Section 24 of the Investment Company Act makes certain Securities Act exemptions unavailable to investment companies. The exemption from registration for certain insurance contracts in Section 3(a)(8) of the Securities Act does not apply to any security issued by an investment company. The intrastate offering exemption in Section 3(a)(11) of the Securities Act does not apply to a security of which a registered investment company is the issuer. Unless the SEC provides an exemption, the limited dealer transaction exemption provided by Section 4(3) of the Securities Act does not apply to transactions in securities issued by open-end management companies, unit investment trusts, or face-amount certificate companies, if any other security of the same class is at the same time being offered or sold by the issuer or by or through an underwriter in a non-exempt transaction. The Commission has not promulgated such an exemption.

[6] Basic Registration Requirements

[a] General. Section 7 of the Investment Company Act provides that an investment company not entitled to rely on one of the exemptions or exceptions discussed above generally must register as an investment company before it can engage in activities in interstate commerce, including the public offering of their securities. n38 Generally speaking, public offerings of investment company securities are fully subject to the Securities Act, including the registration provisions thereof. Moreover, many of the SEC's general rules and regulations under the Securities Act apply to the registration of investment company securities. n39 However, the SEC has adopted special forms for the registration of investment company securities and, to a greater degree than is generally true for other types of issuers, the forms themselves set forth the requirements for registration, especially those regarding the content of registration statements. In many cases investment companies that offer their securities publicly may fulfill their registration obligations under both the Investment Company Act and the Securities Act by filing a single form. Investment companies, other than exchange-traded closed-end funds, are generally exempt from the registration requirements of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 ("Exchange Act") and all types of investment companies may generally satisfy Exchange Act reporting requirements by filing reports required under the Investment Company Act.

[i] "Notification of Registration." Management investment companies must file a very brief "Notification of Registration" on Form N-8A to become registered under the Investment Company Act. They must then file within three months the prescribed longer form that both completes Investment Company Act registration and registers shares under the Securities Act.

[ii] Capitalization. Pursuant to Section 14(a) of the Investment Company Act, no registered investment company may make a public offering unless:

- it has a net worth of at least $100,000;
- it has previously made a public offering and at that time had a net worth of at least $100,000; or
- satisfactory subscription agreements for at least $100,000 from no more than 25 persons have been obtained.

A single registered investment company may issue shares evidencing interests in multiple portfolios of securities. The SEC staff does not require each portfolio to satisfy the Section 14(a) requirement as long as the registrant as a whole does.

[b] Mutual Funds (Form N-1A). Mutual funds are open-end management investment companies and are more often than not diversified. Generally, they offer their shares to investors on a continuous basis and must, therefore, keep a registration statement effective under the Securities Act at all times. Mutual funds may complete their registration under both the Investment Company Act and the Securities Act by filing Form N-1A. n40

Briefly, mutual funds make disclosure to investors primarily in a two-part format. The prospectus, which must be provided to investors, satisfies the delivery requirements of the Securities Act. However, in addition, mutual funds are required to make available to investors, free of charge, a "Statement of Additional Information" or "SAI." Mutual funds may, and most do, incorporate the statement of additional information by reference into the prospectus. Mutual funds file post-effective amendments to their registration statements, both as may be required by economic or other changes and developments that are material to investors, and on an annual basis in order to keep their financial statements and other information current. n41

Many mutual funds are authorized to issue multiple series of shares with each series evidencing interests in a separate portfolio of securities. For all practical purposes, a series is a separate investment company. Such funds may combine all their series in a single registration statement but may choose whether to have a single prospectus for all such series or to have separate prospectuses for some or all such series. Mutual funds may also issue separate "classes" of shares in each separate series. n42 Typically, such share classes have different levels of expenses and/or offer different levels of service to investors.

[c] Closed-End Funds (Form N-2). A closed-end fund is a management investment company that offers shares that do not carry a right of redemption. Most closed-end funds do not offer shares continuously. n43 Accordingly, the registration process for securities of closed-end funds is more comparable to that of many other types of non-investment company issuers. Closed-end funds may register under both the Investment Company Act and the Securities Act by filing Form N-2, which the SEC has amended to permit two-part disclosure in a manner similar to mutual funds. After the initial registration closed-end funds must amend their investment company act registrations on an annual basis unless, pursuant to Rule 8b-16, they can include necessary updating information in their annual reports. n44

[d] Unit Investment Trusts (Forms S-6 and N-8B-2). Unit investment trusts are required to file separate registration statements under the Investment Company Act and the Securities Act. However, the requirements of the two forms overlap significantly and the requirements of Form N-8B-2 (the Investment Company Act registration form) are satisfied to a great extent through incorporation by reference of information from Form S-6. n45

In many cases, an umbrella registration statement under the Investment Company Act is filed. Under that umbrella various series of unit investment trusts are formed and interests in those series are offered to the public. A series is, in essence, a separate fixed and passive portfolio. For each series a separate registration statement on Form S-6 is filed. Within certain limits units of one series may be deposited in a later series. There are expedited registration procedures for series that have policies similar to those of previously registered series. n46 The SEC has proposed, but not adopted, Form N-7 for unit investment trusts (see Section 7B.07[5] below).

[e] Variable Insurance Products (Forms N-3, N-4, and N-6). Separate accounts of insurance companies offering variable annuities or variable life insurance (other than those offered exclusively to Internal Revenue Code Section 401 qualified plans and governmental plans) must register as investment companies. A variable annuity separate account organized as a management investment company may register on Form N-3 (see Section 7B.07[b] below), and a variable annuity separate account organized as a unit investment trust may register on Form N-4 (see Section 7B.07[c] below). Because these insurance products constitute a highly specialized segment of the investment company industry, this chapter discusses Forms N-3 and N-4 only briefly. n47

Variable life insurance separate accounts have available exemptions pursuant to Rule 6e-2 or Rule 6e-3(T) under the Investment Company Act and those organized as unit investment trusts use Form N-6 for Securities Act registration (see Section 7B.07[d] below).

[f] Small Business Investment Companies (Form N-5). Under the Investment Company Act, small business investment companies ("SBICs") are subject to certain special regulatory requirements, reflecting differences in their operations from those of typical investment companies and also reflecting their regulation by the Small Business Administration. SBICs register under the Investment Company Act and register their securities under the Securities Act by filing Form N-5. n48

[g] Face-Amount Certificate Companies (Forms S-1 and N-8B-4). As stated above, registration of face-amount certificate companies is rare. Such companies are required to register under the Investment Company Act by filing Form N-8B-4. Since there is no special Securities Act registration form for face-amount certificate companies, such a company would register securities on Securities Act Form S-1.

[h] Business Development Companies (Form N-2). Business development companies are subject to a special system of regulation under the Investment Company Act. However, technically they do not register under the Investment Company Act. Instead, they would have to satisfy the registration requirements of the Exchange Act. In registering their securities they may use Form N-2, while making additional disclosures as required by the SEC staff. n49

In addition, there are forms for business development companies to use in electing to be regulated as such. n50

[i] Certain Business Combinations (Form N-14). The SEC has adopted Form N-14--a combined proxy statement/prospectus--for management investment companies to register shares under the Securities Act issued in connection with business combinations and to act as the proxy statement for soliciting approval from the target fund's shareholders (see Section 7B.06 below).

[j] Exchange Act Requirements. Section 12(g)(2)(B) of the Exchange Act specifically exempts any registered investment company from registration pursuant to the requirements of that Section. However, certain exchange traded investment companies are subject to registration pursuant to Section 12(a) of the Exchange Act. In practice, only the shares of closed-end funds and "exchange-traded funds" ("ETFs") are traded on securities exchanges. All other investment companies are subject to Section 15(d) of the Exchange Act if their Securities Act registration statements become effective. However, with the exception of face amount securities companies, registered investment companies, even those traded on exchanges, are generally effectively exempted from reporting requirements under the Exchange Act.

The Exchange Act annual reporting requirements, as set forth in Rules 13a-1 and 15d-1, require annual reports on whatever form is prescribed for the particular type of registrant. All registered investment companies (except face amount certificate companies) are required to file Form N-SAR as both their annual and semi-annual reports. Similarly, investment companies that are filing Form N-SAR are not required to file quarterly and current reports under the Exchange Act (although funds are required to file Form N-Q under the Investment Company Act). n51 Rule 30e-1 requires management investment companies to send semi-annual reports containing prescribed information to shareholders. Rule 30e- 2 contains a similar requirement for unit investment trusts investing in management companies.

[k] EDGAR: Mandatory Electronic Filing. In 1994, the SEC created the Electronic Data Gathering, Analysis, and Retrieval System ("EDGAR"), and mandated that certain funds make electronic filings of certain registration statements, such as Forms N-1A, N-2, N-3, N-4 and N-5 and other filings, including Form N-SAR and certain proxy materials (as specified in Item 22(a)(4) of Schedule 14A under the Exchange Act). n52 The SEC also promulgated a comprehensive set of electronic filing rules, found in Regulation S-T. n53 The SEC has its own separate Internet Web site--www.sec.gov--which makes EDGAR filings as well as certain SEC releases and announcements available. n54

(n10)Footnote 10. See Sections 22 and 23 of the Investment Company Act.

(n11)Footnote 11. Section 2(a)(32) of the Investment Company Act defines redeemable security to mean any security, other than short-term paper, under the terms of which the holder, upon its presentation to the issuer or to a person designated by the issuer, is entitled (whether absolutely or only out of surplus) to receive approximately his proportionate share of the issuer's current net assets, or the cash equivalent thereof. "Value" is defined in Section 2(a)(41) of the Investment Company Act. Money market funds may value their assets on the basis of "amortized cost" rather than market value if they comply with Rule 2a-7 under the Investment Company Act.

(n13)Footnote 13. Such tenders might be made if the fund's shares were trading in the secondary market at a price below their net asset value ("trading at a discount"). In addition, so-called "prime rate funds" that invest principally in loan participations typically make quarterly tenders to provide liquidity to shareholders. Rule 23c-3 under the Investment Company Act permits certain closed-end funds (so-called 'interval funds') to make regular tenders subject to a number of conditions. However, funds that make tenders have, to date, generally not relied on this rule.

(n14)Footnote 14. Subchapter M of the Internal Revenue Code permits investment companies to avoid taxation of income and gains distributed to shareholders if certain requirements are satisfied. One such requirement is a diversification test that is similar to, but less restrictive than, the Investment Company Act test. See I.R.C. Section 851(b)(4).

(n15)Footnote 15. Money market funds are subject to stricter diversification requirements.

(n16)Footnote 16. See the discussion of inadvertent Investment Companies in § 7B.01[1][c] below. See also Lemke, Lins & Smith § 3.03.

(n17)Footnote 17. Section 2(a)(43) of the Investment Company Act provides that a company is a "wholly-owned subsidiary" if 95 percent of its voting securities are owned by another company.

(n18)Footnote 18. Unlike Section 3(b)(1), Section 3(b)(2) requires a company to seek a determination of its status by the SEC. However, a company that requests such a determination in good faith receives a statutory 60 day exemption and the SEC customarily grants extensions as necessary prior to a final determination. Section 2(a)(24) of the Investment Company Act provides that a company is a "majority-owned subsidiary" when 50 percent or more of its outstanding voting securities are owned by another person. Under Section 2(a)(9) "control" means the power to exercise a controlling influence over the management or policies of a company, unless this power is solely the result of an official position with the company. However, any owner of more than 25 percent of the voting securities of the company is presumed to control that company, and there is a presumption that no natural person can be controlled. Both of these presumptions may be rebutted by evidence. The SEC generally considers five areas of inquiry relevant to a status determination: the nature of the company's assets; sources of income; primary activities of officers and employees; representations about the nature of the company's business; and the company's history. See, e.g., Tonopah Mining Co. of Nevada, 26 S.E.C. 426 (1947). But see SEC v. National Presto Industries, Inc., No. 05-4612 (May 15, 2007, 7th Cir.). However, in certain situations, the SEC may consider an additional factor--the turnover rate of portfolio securities--in determining an issuer's primary engagement. See SEC v. Dart Group Corp., [1989-1990 Transfer Binder] Fed. Sec. L. Rep. (CCH) [Middle dot] 94,953 (D.D.C. Feb. 28, 1990).

(n19)Footnote 19. Under Rule 3a-1 under the Investment Company Act, reprinted in the Primary Law Sourcebook, Volume A, Section C: (a) a company must not be an investment company within the meaning of Section 3(a)(1) or 3(a)(2) (see §§ 7B.01[1][a] and [b] below) or a so-called "special situation investment company;" and (b) not more than 45 percent of its assets and 45 percent of its income may consist of or be derived from securities (other than government securities, employees' securities companies, and securities of primarily controlled companies which are not themselves investment companies).

(n20)Footnote 20. The primary test that must be met under rule 3a-2 is that the company relying on the Rule must intend to take steps to remove itself from the definition of an investment company within a year. Intent is evidenced by the adoption of appropriate board of director resolutions and by the company's business activities. The rule also defines when the one year time period commences.

(n21)Footnote 21. See Rules 3a-5 and 6c-9.

(n23)Footnote 23. Section 2(a)(51) defines "qualified purchaser" to include certain high net worth individuals and institutions. See also Rules 2a51-1, 2 and 3.

(n24)Footnote 24. The SEC staff believes that a trust generally may rely on Section 2(a)(51)(A)(ii) if all present or future vested or contingent economic interests in the trust's assets are held exclusively by eligible family members. In addition, according to the SEC staff, the family relationship requirements of Section 2(a)(51)(A)(ii) of the Investment Company Act are satisfied if a trust's beneficiaries are direct lineal descendants of a settlor and related as aunts, uncles, nieces and nephews. See Meadowbrook Real Estate Fund, 1998 SEC No-Act. LEXIS 805 (Aug. 26, 1998). The SEC staff has also granted relief to a charitable corporation that otherwise would meet the requirements of Section 2(a)(51)(A)(ii). See Goldman Sachs Asset Management, L.P., SEC No-Action Letter (pub. avail. Mar. 13, 2007).

(n26)Footnote 26. The SEC staff believes the appropriate time to determine the qualified purchaser status of the trustee is when the trustee makes the decision to acquire securities of the Section 3(c)(7) fund. See Meadowbrook Real Estate Fund, 1998 SEC No-Act. LEXIS 805 (Aug. 26, 1998); American Bar Ass'n Section of Business Law, 1999 SEC No-Act. LEXIS 456 (Apr. 22, 1999). If a trust has more than one trustee, only the trustee responsible for making investment decisions for the trust needs to be a "qualified purchaser." See American Bar Ass'n Section of Business Law, 1999 SEC No-Act. LEXIS 456 (Apr. 22, 1999). Furthermore, in certain situations where the contributions to the trust were made before the enactment of Section 3(c)(7), the staff believes the settlor to be a qualified purchaser if the amount of the contribution at the time it was made exceeds the $5 million threshold in terms of 1996 dollars. See Trusts Under the Will of Marion Searle, 2005 SEC No-Act. LEXIS 494 (Mar. 29, 2005). The SEC staff has also granted relief to a charitable corporation that otherwise would meet the requirements of Section 2(a)(51)(A)(iii). See Goldman Sachs Asset Management, L.P., SEC No-Action Letter (pub. avail. Mar. 13, 2007).

(n27)Footnote 27. Section 2(a)(51)(A) of the Investment Company Act. The SEC staff takes the position that a person may satisfy the $25 million threshold by aggregating investments the person owns with investments of accounts (including accounts of non-qualified purchasers) that the person invests on a discretionary basis. See Service Corporation Int'l, 1998 SEC No-Act. LEXIS 894 (Oct. 6, 1998). The SEC staff has also taken the position that a person who meets the requirements of this provision may invest jointly with a spouse who is not a qualified purchaser. See McDermott Will & Emery, 2007 SEC No-Act. LEXIS 542 (July 26, 2007). Section 2(a)(51) also provides that an entity that invests in the private investment company and, but for the exceptions in Section 3(c)(1) and 3(c)(7), would itself be an investment company will not be considered a "qualified purchaser" unless all direct and indirect beneficial owners of its securities who acquired their interests prior to April 30, 1996 consent to the entity's treatment as a "qualified purchaser." This provision ensures that investors who purchased with no intent of becoming an indirect investor in a Section 3(c)(7) company are not forced to do so.

(n28)Footnote 28. Section 3(c)(2) excepts from the definition of investment company any person primarily engaged in the business of underwriting and distributing securities issued by other persons, selling securities to customers, and acting as broker, or any one or more such activities, whose gross income normally is derived principally from such business and related activities.

(n29)Footnote 29. Section 3(c)(3) excepts banks, savings and loan associations, building and loan associations, cooperative banks, homestead associations, or similar institutions, (as well as any receiver, conservator, liquidator, liquidating agent or similar official). Section 2(a)(5) defines bank to mean: (a) a national bank; (b) a member bank of the Federal Reserve System; (c) any other bank as long as a substantial portion of its business consists of receiving deposits or exercising fiduciary powers and as long as it is subject to state or federal regulation and is not operated for the purpose of evading the Investment Company Act; and (d) a receiver, conservator, or liquidating agent. Section 3(c)(3) also excepts bank common trust funds if they are maintained exclusively for the collective investment and reinvestment of monies contributed thereto by the bank in its capacity as trustee, executor, administrator, or guardian. Under historical interpretations of the Glass-Steagall Act, interests in such common trust funds could not be marketed to investors unless the fund is registered under the Investment Company Act. Common trust funds may be used solely as an aid in the administration of fiduciary accounts, such funds may not be advertised or publicly sold except in the course of the ordinary advertising of fiduciary services, and fees and expenses charged must not contravene fiduciary principles.

(n31)Footnote 31. Section 3(c)(5) excepts eligible companies primarily engaged in: (a) purchasing or otherwise acquiring notes, drafts, acceptances, open accounts receivable, and other merchandise, insurance and services; (b) making loans to manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers of, and prospective purchasers of, specified merchandise, insurance and services; and (c) purchasing or otherwise acquiring mortgages and other liens on and interests in real estate. Section 3(c)(6) excepts certain companies that are engaged in a combination of businesses excepted in Sections 3(c)(3), (4) and (5).

(n32)Footnote 32. Section 3(c)(11) excepts any employees' stock bonus, pension, or profit-sharing trust which meets the requirements for qualification under Section 401 of the Internal Revenue Code; or any collective trust fund maintained by a bank consisting solely of assets of such trusts; or any separate account, the assets of which are derived solely from (a) contributions under pension or profit-sharing plans which meet the requirements of such section or the requirements for deduction of the employer's contribution under Section 404(a)(2) of such Code, and (b) advances made by an insurance company in connection with the operation of such separate account. The Commission takes the position that such a fund is not eligible for the Section 3(c)(11) exception since IRAs are qualified under Section 408 of the I.R.C. rather than Section 401.

(n33)Footnote 33. See Section 6(e) of the Investment Company Act.

(n34)Footnote 34. Section 6(a)(1) exempts companies organized and operating in Puerto Rico, the Canal Zone, the Virgin Islands, or other possessions of the United States. However, this exemption is available only as long as the investment company does not offer its securities in any state. Section 6(a)(2) limits the exemption for companies in bankruptcy to the time during which the company is under court supervision and also conditions the exemption on the company not selling securities, other than short-term paper and receiver's or trustee's certificates sold exclusively for cash. Section 6(a)(3) exempts certain companies that have been through court supervised reorganization and are not making a public offering of securities. Sections 6(a)(4) and (5) contain additional specialized and limited exemptions.

(n35)Footnote 35. Section 2(a)(13) defines an "employees' securities company" as an investment company the securities of which (other than short-term paper) are owned by a company's employees, former employees, and members of the immediate family of employees or former employees. The SEC may exempt employees' securities companies in whole or in part from the Investment Company Act but normally grants only limited and conditional exemptions.

(n36)Footnote 36. To be eligible for the exemption provided by Section 6(e), the company must not sell or offer securities having a value in excess of $100,000; the securities must be sold intrastate; and exemption must not be contrary to the public interest or inconsistent with the protection of investors. For discussion of registration of business development companies, see § 7B.01[6][h] above.

(n37)Footnote 37. See Section 1(b) of the Investment Company Act for a description of the policy and purposes of the Investment Company Act, which are, in essence, to eliminate the conditions which led to its enactment.

(n38)Footnote 38. Investment companies organized outside the U.S. may not make public offerings in the U.S. However, the SEC staff has permitted them to make private placements in the U.S. in compliance with limits that would be applicable if they were U.S. companies relying on Section 3(c)(1) or 3(c)(7). See § 7B.01[3][b] below.

(n43)Footnote 43. Like a traditional non-investment company issuer, a closed-end fund generally raises capital in an initial public offering of common stock. As a practical matter, most closed-end funds find it difficult to issue stock thereafter except through dividend reinvestment and occasional rights offerings. Some closed-end funds issue debt or preferred stock publicly or privately.

(n45)Footnote 45. See § 7B.05[2] above for discussion of coordination of requirements for Forms S-6 and N-8B-2.

(n46)Footnote 46. Some unit investment trusts issue units continuously, rather than in series, and use the proceeds of sales to accumulate shares of one or more registered management companies.

(n47)Footnote 47. See § 7B.07 above for discussion of Forms N-3 and N-4.

(n48)Footnote 48. SBIC registrations are rare because the preponderance of SBICs are closely held but the requirements are summarized briefly in § 7B.07[2] above.

(n49)Footnote 49. See Inv. Co. Act Rel. No. 11703, [1981 Transfer Binder] Fed. Sec. L. Rep. (CCH) P 82,858 (1981). The areas of disclosure covered in this release include special risks of business development companies; some of the financial information required of operating companies; disclosure about small business investment company subsidiaries; more detailed disclosure about portfolio companies; information about special compensation; and additional disclosure about the regulatory provisions of the Investment Company Act.

(n50)Footnote 50. Form N-6F, the notice of intent to file a notification of election, essentially allows a company that would come within the exclusion from the definition of an investment company in Section 3(c)(1) of the Investment Company Act except for the fact that it had a present intention of making a public offering to continue to operate without being regulated under the Investment Company Act for a limited period of time. Form N-54A is the form used to notify the SEC of an election to be regulated as a business development company, and Form N-54C is the form for notification of withdrawal of such an election.

2-7B Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 7B.02

AUTHOR: Thomas P. Lemke Gerald T. Lins

§ 7B.02 Statutory Provisions, Regulations, and Procedures Governing Registration of Investment Company Securities

The Securities Act and most of the SEC's procedural and formal requirements thereunder are applicable to the offering of securities by investment companies. This Chapter addresses the registration process but it is important to remember that the liability provisions of the Securities Act (and, for that matter the Exchange Act) apply to the offering and sale of investment company securities. n1 In addition, the Investment Company Act requires investment companies to register and to include certain disclosures in their registration statements. In many cases, investment companies may accomplish registration pursuant to the Securities Act and the Investment Company Act by filing a single form. Registration of investment companies and their securities is overseen by the staff of the SEC's Division of Investment Management.

[1] Activities Before and During Registration

[a] Pre-Filing. Section 5 of the Securities Act, which applies to the offering of securities by an investment company, accordingly limits pre-filing activities by investment companies. n2

With respect to unregistered unit investment trusts, no depositor or trustee of, or underwriter for, such a company may offer, sell, deliver, purchase, redeem, or otherwise acquire a security of a trust by use of the jurisdictional means or sell or purchase for the account of such company, by use of the jurisdictional means, any security or interest in a security, by whomever issued. In addition, unless a registration statement has been filed under the Investment Company Act, no promoter or underwriter for an investment company may offer, sell, or deliver, in connection with a public offering, any pre-organization certificate or subscription.

[b] Investment Company Registration.

[i] Notification of Registration. Under Section 8(a) an investment company may become registered by filing a "Notification of Registration" and will be deemed to be registered upon receipt by the SEC thereof. The form prescribed by the SEC for this purpose, Form N-8A, is very brief and requires only basic identifying information. n3 The form requires information such as the registrant's name, address and telephone number, agent for service of process, state of domicile, form of organization, classification under the Act, and total assets. Also required is the identity of the company's investment adviser and its board of directors, as applicable. Names must be given in full; initials or abbreviations will not suffice.

The instructions to the form caution that all items must be answered fully and accurately. If an item is not applicable to the registrant, it must indicate that fact by answering "NOT APPLICABLE." Items required by the form are to be answered as of the date the form is prepared, unless the context clearly indicates otherwise.

An original and three copies of the form must be filed with the SEC in Washington, D.C. The three copies may have facsimile or typed signatures. If the investment company has a board of directors, a director, officer, or trustee must sign the original on behalf of the registrant. In other cases (i.e., a UIT), the original must be signed on behalf of the registrant by an officer or director of its sponsor. If no sponsor exists or is functioning as of the date of filing, the signature may be made by an officer or director of the trustee or custodian.

In addition to the instructions in the form itself, Rules 8b-1 to 8b-32 under the Investment Company Act specify various procedural requirements applicable to Form N-8A as well as other forms. n4

The filing of this notification permits an investment company to engage in certain activities in interstate commerce and to be eligible for treatment as a regulated investment company under the Internal Revenue Code n5

However, filing Form N-8A does not constitute the filing of a registration statement under the Securities Act.

Pursuant to Section 8(b) and Rule 8b-5 under the Investment Company Act an investment company must file its full registration statement within three months after the filing of its notification of registration, except that, if the company's fiscal year ended within this three month period, it would be required to file its full registration statement within three months after its fiscal year end.

[c] Offering Securities and Advertising. Once a Securities Act registration statement has been filed in the manner described below, investment companies may offer their securities in interstate commerce by means of a variety of communications. As is the case with other issuers, investment companies may, pursuant to Section 5(c) of the Securities Act, make offers during the pre-effective period by means of a "red herring" prospectus meeting the requirements of Section 10(a) of the Securities Act.

The period after the registration statement is filed, but prior to its effectiveness, is known as the "waiting period." In many offerings of new securities--both of investment companies and other issuers--this period is used to disseminate information to potential investors. This practice not only assists issuers and underwriters in more accurately gauging the interest of potential investors but also provides potential investors with more time to evaluate and consider the securities to be offered.

To facilitate the dissemination of relevant information during the "waiting period," while also minimizing the possibility of sales activities prior to a registration statement's effective date, the SEC adopted Rule 430 n6 under the Securities Act. Rule 430 permits an investment company to provide potential investors with a preliminary prospectus during the "waiting period" so long as the preliminary prospectus contains substantially the information required in a final prospectus (except for information dependent on the offering price) and potential investors can obtain a Statement of Additional Information without charge upon written or oral request. Although the literal wording of Rule 430 could suggest that it is available only to registrants with no effective registration statement, the SEC staff has confirmed that a series company with an effective registration statement can rely on Rule 430 for a new series added by post-effective amendment. n7

Rule 481(b)(2) under the Securities Act requires that a preliminary prospectus disseminated during the waiting period must prominently include the following statement on the outside front cover page of the prospectus: n8

The information in this prospectus (or Statement of Additional Information) is not complete and may be changed. We may not sell these securities until the registration statement filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission is effective. This prospectus (or Statement of Additional Information) is not an offer to sell these securities and is not soliciting an offer to buy these securities in any state where the offer is not permitted.

Because this legend historically has appeared in red ink, this type of prospectus is frequently referred to as a "red herring." Rule 497(a) requires that five copies of the preliminary prospectus must be filed with the SEC at or prior to the time of first use if it varies from the form of prospectus included in the registration statement. n9 Rule 481(b)(2) also requires a similar legend to be included in any Statement of Additional Information used before the effective date. n10

The general requirements of Securities Act Rule 460 apply to investment companies. However, the granting of acceleration will not be conditioned upon distribution of preliminary prospectuses to underwriters and dealers in the case of certificates issued by face-amount certificate companies, or redeemable securities issued by open-end management companies or unit investment trusts if any other security of the same class is currently being offered or sold pursuant to an effective registration statement. n11

After the filing of a registration statement, investment companies may also advertise. n12 Except as noted below, the rules relating to advertising apply equally after the effectiveness of the registration statement. The Financial Industry Regulatory Association ("FINRA") n13 generally regulates the use of investment company advertising by its members. n14

Investment companies also may use supplemental sales literature as permitted by Section 2(10)(a) of the Securities Act after effectiveness of the registration statement. Investment companies may include sales literature in their prospectuses. Pursuant to Section 24(b) of the Investment Company Act, registered open-end companies, unit investment trusts and face-amount certificate companies must file three copies of sales literature within ten days after use. n15

Until 1978 the Commission had in effect a Statement of Policy concerning the contents of investment company sales literature. The Commission has withdrawn the Statement of Policy, although the Commission has suggested that some of the principles in the Statement of the Policy may remain valid. n16 The Commission has also adopted Rule 156 under the Securities Act, an interpretive rule applicable to sales literature. n17

Rule 135a permits investment companies to use so-called "generic" advertisements, which provide limited information about investment companies but not naming them.

Investment companies may also use advertising in the form of "omitting prospectuses" as permitted by Section 10(b) of the Securities Act. Rule 482 governs this type of advertising and generally permits inclusion of any information that is in the prospectus or that fairly summarizes information that is in the prospectus. n18 The Rule, in combination with Form N-1A, effectively permits the advertising of performance information that is more current than the information in the prospectus. A Rule 482 omitting prospectus may be used in conjunction with a "summary prospectus" permitted by 498.

Performance information used in Rule 482 advertisements must be computed in accordance with the requirements of the applicable registration form. In the case of money market funds, "yield" and "effective yield" quotations must be based on the annualized performance over a specified seven day period of a hypothetical one share account. n19 Other types of funds must base yield on performance over a 30-day period. Such funds may (and, if they quote yield, must) provide total return data over one, five and ten years (or the life of the fund, if less) in accordance with a prescribed formula. Such funds may also, within limits, advertise non-standard total return. Finally, any advertisement containing performance data must include disclosure about risk and fees. n20

[2] Filing the Registration Statement

[a] Basic Statutory Requirements. Section 6(a) of the Securities Act, which governs the method of registration of securities under the Securities Act, applies to investment company securities. As noted above, Section 8(b) of the Investment Company Act, together with Rule 8b-5 thereunder, generally requires a registered investment company (i.e., an investment company that has filed a notification of registration) to file a full registration statement under the Investment Company Act within three months. Section 8(b) further provides that the registration statement shall contain an original and such copies, and shall be in such form, as the Commission provides.

The procedural and formal requirements applicable to investment company registration statements generally correspond to those applicable to Securities Act registration statements. Finally, Section 8(b) enumerates certain specific categories of information that must be included to the extent prescribed by Commission rules and regulations as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors. n21

[b] Coordination of Securities Act and Investment Company Act Requirements. Section 8(c) authorizes the Commission to permit the filing of certain other documents, including documents filed under the Securities Act and under the Exchange Act, in lieu of the information and documents required by Section 8(b).

Specifically, the Commission may so designate:

- copies of the most recent Securities Act registration statement, or, in the absence thereof, a registration statement filed under the Exchange Act;
- copies of any reports filed pursuant to Section 13 or 15(d) of the Exchange Act; and
- a reasonably current report regarding the matters included in the foregoing and such other information as the Commission is authorized to require under Section 8(b).

As noted earlier, management companies may register under both the Investment Company Act and the Securities Act by filing a single form. n22

For unit investment trusts that invest exclusively in other registered investment companies, the Commission is authorized to permit a registration statement which eliminates inappropriate duplication. Unit investment trusts must file separate forms for registration under the Investment Company Act and the Securities Act but are able to avoid much of the duplication that doing so might otherwise cause through incorporation by reference.

[c] Other Investment Company Act Registration Provisions. Under Section 8(e) of the Investment Company Act the Commission may, in certain circumstances, suspend or revoke the registration statement of an investment company that has failed to file required registration statements or reports or has filed false or misleading registration statements or reports. In addition, under Section 8(f) the Commission may, upon its own motion or upon application, deregister an investment company, conditionally or unconditionally, if it concludes that the company has "ceased to be an investment company." n23 The Commission has simplified the deregistration process for most companies by adopting Rule 8f-1 and Form N-8F-1. Liquidation of a series of a registrant does not necessitate deregistration.

[d] Procedural and Formal Requirements.

[i] Introduction. For the most part, Regulation C (Rules 400-498 under the Securities Act), which governs the registration of securities generally, applies to the registration of investment company securities. Some of the rules in Regulation C have special provisions applicable to investment companies and a number of the rules (generally those numbered 480 and higher) apply exclusively to investment companies.

In addition, Rules 8b-1 through 8b-32 under Section 8(b) of the Investment Company Act govern investment company registration statements. Many of these rules closely parallel related rules in Regulation C.

[ii] General Requirements. A number of Regulation C's General Requirements (Rules 401-419) have direct counterparts under the Investment Company Act. n24

Other rules under Section 8(b) are similar but not identical to corresponding rules under Regulation C. Rules 404 and 8b-13, concerning preparation of the registration statement, are similar except that the latter requires the inclusion of items, numbers and captions. For the most part, however, the applicable forms modify or supersede this requirement. The definitional provisions (Rules 405 and 8b-2) have some overlap. It is noteworthy that the two definitions of "material" differ in certain respects. n25

The rules on incorporation by reference (Rule 411 of Regulation C and Rules 8b-23 and 8b-32 (as well as Rule 0-4) under the Investment Company Act) are generally comparable, although the various investment company registration forms modify these provisions in certain ways. Rule 414 governing registration of certain successor issuers has no counterpart under the Investment Company Act but the SEC staff has given "no-action" relief. n26 Finally, Rule 415 governing shelf registration is available only to closed-end management companies.

Regulation C has no counterpart to Rules 8b-4 and 8b-14. The former provides general guidance on interpreting requirements of forms, and the latter prohibits the use of riders in registration statements.

[iii] Form and Content of the Prospectus. The provisions of Regulation C dealing with the form and content of prospectuses (Rules 420 to 433) apply to investment companies unless otherwise specified. However, in many cases the registration forms for particular types of investment companies contain special requirements as to form and content that may modify or supersede Regulation C. Rule 497 contains particular requirements for investment companies filing on Form N-1A, N-2, N-3 and N-4. n27

[iv] Written Consents. Rules 436 through 439 under the Securities Act, which deal with consents by experts or counsel, are applicable to investment companies. In addition, Rule 483(c) contains additional technical requirements for the filing of consents by investment companies. n28

[v] Filing, Fees, Effective Date. Generally, the provisions of Securities Act Rules 455 through 461 apply to investment companies. n29

Although the provisions of Section 6(b) of the Securities Act and of Rule 457 thereunder governing computation of registration fees generally apply to investment companies, the Investment Company Act and the rules thereunder make special provision for fees with respect to securities of face-amount certificate companies and redeemable securities of open-end management companies and unit investment trusts. The current registration fee is $55.80 per million dollars of the aggregate offering price of the securities being registered. n30

Both Rule 0-8 under the Investment Company Act and Rule 111 under the Securities Act require that payment of fees be made by wire transfer, or by certified check, United States postal money order, bank cashier's check or bank money order payable to the Securities and Exchange Commission, omitting the name or title of any official of the Commission.

Rule 487 makes special provision for the effectiveness of registration statements under the Securities Act by unit investment trusts offered in series form. n31

[A] Registration of an Indefinite Number of Shares. Mutual funds may register an indefinite number of shares and pay fees annually based on net shares sold (i.e., purchases less redemptions). Section 24(f) of the Investment Company Act provides that funds are deemed to have registered an indefinite number of shares. Funds must pay the fee (and file Form 24f-2) within 90 days after the end of each fiscal year. Interest is charged on late payments.

[vi] Amendments and Withdrawals. Rules 470 through 479 under the Securities Act concerning amendments and withdrawals of registration statements are generally applicable to investment companies unless plainly inapplicable by their terms. n32 However, in the case of amendments, the appropriate form for the particular type of investment company will prescribe the information and documents to be included.

Rules 8b-15 and 0-3 under the Investment Company Act impose additional formal requirements in connection with amendments of investment company registration statements. n33

In addition, Rule 8b-16 requires management companies to file annual post-effective amendments to the registration statement under the Investment Company Act. n34

[vii] Special Rules for Investment Companies and Business Development Companies. Rules 480 through 489 constitute a section of Regulation C applicable only to investment companies and business development companies. n35 In addition, Rules 495 through 497 apply to mutual funds. n36 Many of these special rules are counterparts of requirements applicable to other types of issuers set forth elsewhere in Regulation C or in Regulation S-K.

Rule 480 requires investment companies or business development companies to include certain information in registration statements "wherever the title of securities is required to be stated." In the case of shares, the information must include par value, if any; the rate of dividends, if fixed, and whether dividends are cumulative or non-cumulative; a brief indication of any preference; and, if the securities are convertible, a statement to that effect. In the case of "funded debt," the registration statement must include the rate of interest; the date of maturity (or indication of serial maturities); any contingencies with respect to payment of principal or interest; any indication of the priority of the issue; and, if the securities are convertible, a statement to that effect. Comparable information is required for any other type of security. n37

Rule 481 is headed "Information Required in the Prospectus" but the applicability of the Rule is not limited to the prospectus. In particular, Rule 481(a) requires that the facing page of the registration statement set forth the approximate date of the proposed sale to the public and that there be a cross reference sheet showing the location of information in the prospectus required to be included in the prospectus in response to the items of the applicable registration form.

Rule 481(b) requires that the prospectus outside front cover contain a disclaimer of SEC approval n38 and that any preliminary prospectus be captioned as such and contain a description legend. n39

Rule 481(c) requires a table of contents on the inside or outside front cover, or the outside back cover of the prospectus. Rule 481(d) requires, in the case of stabilization, compliance with essentially the same type of regulations that apply to other types of issuers, including disclosure regarding over-allotments.

The requirements of Rule 482, the general advertising rule for mutual funds, generally permits an advertisement to contain information included or not included in the prospectus so long as it is not misleading. n40

Rule 483 pertains to exhibits in registration statements filed by investment companies and business development companies. Specifically, these companies must file an exhibit index and copies of any powers of attorney and consents. Registrants may include additional exhibits. However, they need not file certain documents that are substantially identical to others filed, and need not refile certain exhibits if immaterial changes are made after the original filing.

The other Rules in this special section of Regulation C are discussed elsewhere in this chapter. n41

Rule 495 applies to preparation of registration statements by mutual funds on Form N-1A and is substantially identical to Rule 404, except insofar as it extends certain flexibility accorded in the preparation of the Statement of Additional Information. n42 Specifically, the Statement of Additional Information does not have to be prepared in item and answer format; no reference need be made to inapplicable items; and negative answers may be omitted.

Rule 496 concerns the contents of prospectuses used after nine months and is identical to Rule 427 except that it extends the requirements thereof that are applicable to financial statements to the Statement of Additional Information.

Similarly, Rule 497 imposes requirements as to the filing of prospectuses that are comparable to those contained in Rule 424, but extends those requirements to the Statement of Additional Information.

[3] Information Required in the Registration Statement

[a] General. The requirements of Section 7 of the Securities Act governing information that must be in the registration statement apply to investment companies. In addition, Section 8(b) of the Investment Company Act applies to the contents of registration statements of investment companies.

[b] Additional Requirements Applicable to Investment Companies.

[i] Recital of Policy with Respect to Certain Activities. Section 8(b)(1) enumerates certain types of activities and requires that the registration statement under the Investment Company Act include such information about the registrant's policies with respect to those activities as the Commission by rules and regulations prescribes as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors. Those activities include:

- the classification and sub-classifications of the investment company; n43
- borrowing money;
- the issuance of senior securities; n44
- engaging in the business of underwriting securities issued by other persons; n45
- concentrating investments in a particular industry or group of industries; n46
- the purchase and sale of real estate n47 and commodities n48 or either of them;
- making loans to other persons; and n49
- portfolio turnover.

Section 8(b)(2) requires a recital of all investment policies of the investment company, not including those enumerated above, which are changeable only by shareholder vote. Section 8(b)(3) requires a recital of all additional policies which the registrant deems "matters of fundamental policy." Section 13(a) of the Investment Company Act generally requires adherence to the policies set forth pursuant to Section 8(b).

Section 8(b)(4) requires the registration statement to include the name and address of each affiliated person of the registrant; n50 the name and principal address of every company, other than the registrant, of which each such person is an officer, director or partner; and a brief statement of the business experience for the preceding five years of each officer and director of the registrant. Section 8(b)(5) requires the information and documents which would be required to be filed in order to register under the Securities Act and the Exchange Act.

[4] Taking Effect of Registration Statements and Amendments Thereto

[a] Original Registration Statement.

[i] Permanent Delaying Amendment. Typically, the original registration statement of an investment company includes an amendment as provided for in Rule 473(a) which prevents the registration statement from becoming effective automatically 20 days after it is filed pursuant to Section 8(a) of the Securities Act. This "permanent delaying amendment" is a convention which allows time for the SEC staff to review and comment on the registration statement.

[ii] Assignment to Branch. As stated above, the Division of Investment Management of the SEC reviews registration statements of investment companies and business development companies. All registration statements of insurance company separate accounts are assigned to a branch specializing in insurance products. Other registration statements of investment companies are assigned to any one of several other branches, depending on the circumstances. If, for example, the registrant is a new fund in a "family" or "complex" of funds--a group of mutual funds that have the same investment adviser, distribution or other sponsoring organization--the registration statement will normally be assigned to the branch that reviews filings of all the other investment companies in that family or complex. Some investment company registration statements may be assigned to branches that have developed expertise in that particular type of investment company. Other registration statements are assigned on a rotating basis.

[iii] Review and Comment. Generally initial registration statements of investment companies and business development companies are reviewed in detail, and the staff attempts to give written comments within approximately 30 days.

From time to time the SEC publishes the views of its staff on procedures to be followed in filing a registration statement (as well as other types of filings). In Securities Act Release No. 5738 n51 the staff reminded registrants about certain requirements that the staff believed were frequently overlooked and also described various levels of staff review procedures. Some of these overlooked requirements have been superseded but others are still relevant. The staff reminded registrants to be sure to file the correct number of copies as required by Rule 402 under the Securities Act. The staff also pointed out that the letter of transmittal accompanying a registration statement should describe possible problem areas and set forth the registrant's desired time schedule. The staff also reminded registrants of the existence of published guidelines for the preparation of investment company registration statements. n52

Release No. 5738 also describes various review procedures. In some cases where a registration statement appears to have been properly prepared and raises no novel or complex issues, the staff may give the registration statement only cursory review. In such cases the staff would give no written or oral comments but could advise the registrant in writing that it had given the registration statement only a cursory review and that, in any event, staff review may not be relied upon to indicate that the registration statement is true, complete or accurate.

Even where the staff has given a registration statement only cursory review, it will, absent some unusual circumstances, nevertheless grant a request for acceleration of the effectiveness of the registration statement. In a subsequent release n53 the staff announced that registration statements of new investment companies in a "complex" of funds might receive cursory review under certain circumstances. Cursory review would be used where such a new investment company had investment objectives, policies and techniques similar to those of a recent prior offering by another fund in the complex and where the registration statement contained disclosure that was not substantially different than the disclosure contained in one or more prior filings by funds in the complex. This type of review is also referred to as selective review.

Securities Act Release No. 5738 also discusses "customary review" and "deferred review." Deferred review is used in cases of very poorly prepared registration statements. The staff does not review the registration statement in detail but advises the registrant of the general nature of the problems the registration statement presents. Other registration statements are given customary review. A repeated theme in releases of this type is that, regardless of staff review, registrants are responsible for the adequacy of the disclosure they make.

Beginning in 1990, the staff issued annual letters commonly known as "generic comment letters," highlighting disclosure issues of particular prominence in the most recent year. The staff has announced that it will no longer issue such letters generally but will continue to send letters on accounting issues to chief financial officers. The staff has sought input from the investment company industry on improving the disclosure process and outlined certain steps it was taking in response. n54

[iv] Amendment and Acceleration. After the initial review and comment, the registrant generally files a pre-effective amendment, either formally or informally, making the requested changes or explaining in a transmittal letter why it proposes not to comply with the staff's comment. The staff has no formal guidelines for responding to pre-effective amendments so the registrant or its counsel needs to be diligent in following up with the staff on these filings. There may follow, depending on the circumstances, discussions between the registrant, or its counsel, and the SEC staff, followed by further pre-effective amendments.

As the culminating step in this process, the registrant may request acceleration of the effectiveness of the registration statement pursuant to Rule 461. The SEC staff has delegated authority from the Commission to grant such acceleration if it believes the statutory standard of Section 8(a) of the Securities Act is satisfied. n55

Rules 461(c) and 484 contain special provisions on indemnification. Rule 461(c) states that, in the case of investment companies or business development companies, the Commission may refuse to accelerate the effective date of a registration statement if the registrant is organized or administered pursuant to an instrument that protects or purports to protect any director or officer of the company against any liability to the company or its security holders to which he or she would otherwise be subject by reason of willful misfeasance, bad faith, gross negligence or reckless disregard of the duties involved in the conduct of his or her office. n56

Rule 484 conditions acceleration requests by registered investment companies or business development companies on an undertaking to submit certain types of indemnification provisions to a court of appropriate jurisdiction. n57

If the staff, and the Commission, will not grant acceleration, the registrant may go effective by removing its permanent delaying amendment. However, such removal is rare and risky, and the SEC staff, as a matter of policy, will not review or comment on any registration statement which does not have an effective permanent delaying amendment. The SEC has the authority under Section 8(d) of the Securities Act to issue a "stop order" preventing effectiveness of the registration statement.

[b] Post-Effective Procedures.

[i] General. Under the Securities Act, an investment company that is making a continuous offering of its securities must maintain a "current" prospectus for use in connection with those sales. Specifically, Section 10(a)(3) of the Securities Act requires that any prospectus used more than 9 months after the registration statement's effective date must contain financial and other information as of a date not more than 16 months prior to such use. An investment company making a continuous offering of its securities can update its prospectus by filing a post-effective amendment to its registration statement that contains updated financial statements and other information. n58

For most investment companies, Rule 485 under the Securities Act specifies the procedures by which a post-effective amendment becomes effective. n59 Rule 485(b) permits routine post-effective amendments to become effective automatically on filing or on a date specified by the registrant not later than 30 days after filing. A post-effective amendment is considered routine if it is filed for one of the following purposes:

- bringing the financial statements and other information up-to-date pursuant to Section 10(a)(3) of the Securities Act or the Commission's accounting regulations; or
- complying with the undertaking required in connection with acceleration of registration statements to file a post-effective amendment with updated financials within four to six months;

- designating a later effective date for a post-effective amendment under paragraph (a);
- updating information regarding portfolio managers or management's discussion of fund performance (if included in the prospectus);
- making any non-material changes which the registrant deems appropriate; n60
- changes by a unit investment trust to correspond to changes in an underlying investment company; and
- other changes approved by the Commission.

In addition, to be permitted to use Rule 485(b), the registrant must represent, in effect, that no material events have occurred. Finally, the facing sheet of the post-effective amendment must state that the registrant proposes that the amendment become effective pursuant to Rule 485(b).

Rule 485(a) permits non-routine post-effective amendments to become effective automatically but only on a date (selected by the registrant) between 60-80 days after filing, except in the case of a post-effective amendment to add a new series, which becomes effective on the 75th day after filing or on a later date (but not past the 95th day after filing) selected by the registrant. n61 In calculating this time period, the SEC staff treats the first day following the filing--rather than the day of filing--as the first day "after" the filing. n62 In addition, non-routine filings may become effective on an earlier date if accelerated by the SEC. n63

Registrants making a non-routine filing should file in advance of the 60-day time period (or, in the case of a new series, the 75-day time period) to ensure adequate time for staff review. SEC staff policy is to try to give comments on post-effective amendments within 30-45 days of the date of the filing, although the staff's workload at any given time could result in comments being given later.

In addition, the SEC staff has not objected where registrants treat other types of non-substantive changes as routine. For example, a sponsoring insurance company for a variable insurance contract may file an amendment to a registration statement under Rule 485(b) to add the representation required by Section 26(e)(2) of the Investment Company Act (i.e., that aggregate charges under the variable insurance contracts are "reasonable" in relation to services rendered, etc.). n64 Moreover, in certain cases where the SEC or the staff revises disclosure requirements, the staff has explicitly permitted prospectus revisions including such disclosure to be considered routine and filed under Rule 485(b). Examples include the requirement to include disclosure on telephonic redemptions n65 and the fee table. n66

A registrant making a routine filing must certify on the signature page of the amendment that no material event requiring disclosure in the prospectus, other than those specified in the rule, has occurred since the effective date of its most recent filing or the filing date of a not-yet-effective non-routine Rule 485(a) filing. If counsel prepares or reviews a routine Rule 485(b) filing, the filing must include a written representation from counsel that it contains no information that would make it a non-routine filing. n67 This representation may be included in a cover letter to the filing. To deter potential abuse in relying on Rule 485(b), the SEC retains the authority, delegated to the Division of Investment Management, to suspend a fund's ability to use Rule 485(b) if the fund designates an amendment under Rule 485(b) when it is not eligible to rely on that paragraph. n68

When submitting a non-routine Rule 485(a) filing, in addition to providing a red-lined copy to highlight disclosure changes made from the most recently filed post-effective amendment, a registrant should set forth in an accompanying transmittal letter the material changes which make the filing non-routine.

A non-routine Rule 485(a) filing will not become effective if a second non-routine Rule 485(a) filing is filed before the first filing has become effective. However, a routine Rule 485(b) filing can be made during the pendency of a non-routine Rule 485(a) if the routine Rule 485(b) filing is designated to become effective on the same date as the non-routine Rule 485(a) filing. This mechanism permits an investment company to make a non-routine Rule 485(a) filing without financial statements and subsequently file a routine Rule 485(b) filing for the sole purpose of adding updated financial statements to the registration statement.

Rule 486 permits closed-end funds and BDCs that periodically repurchase shares under Rule 23c-3 to file post-effective amendments and registration statements that become effective automatically. n69 Rule 487 provides a comparable process for new registration statements filed by UITs organized as series companies. n70

A registrant may request acceleration of the effectiveness of a post-effective amendment. The SEC staff may deny acceleration when, among other things:

- There has not been a bona fide effort to make the prospectus concise and readable;
- An inaccurate or incomplete preliminary prospectus has been distributed;
- The SEC is currently investigating the issuer, a controlling person, or one of the underwriters; or
- The investment company is organized or administered pursuant to any instrument that protects or purports to indemnify any director or officer against any liability to the company or its shareholders by reason of willful misfeasance, bad faith, gross negligence, or reckless disregard of duties.

What distinguishes a "routine" filing under Rule 485(b) from one that is "non-routine" under Rule 485(a) is the nature of the changes included therein. According to Rule 485, a filing is non-routine if it contains material changes (other than certain changes discussed below) such as:

- Changes in the registrant's investment objectives or fundamental policies;
- Suspension of sales or redemptions of shares;
- Termination of an investment advisory contract;
- Adding a new series to a series fund; amendments to permit the fund to advertise performance; n71 and
- In some cases, the resignation of the registrant's independent public accountant or one of its directors.

[ii] Continuous Offerings. Under Rule 485(c), the automatic effectiveness of a post-effective amendment under the rule may be suspended if it appears to the SEC that the amendment "may be incomplete or inaccurate in any material respect." The Commission has delegated this authority to the Director of Division of Investment Management, though this power has been used only rarely.

Subparagraph (d) of Rule 485 is a technical provision dealing with the effect of subsequently filed post-effective amendments on pending post-effective amendments.

Rule 486 applies to closed-end "interval funds"(i.e., those that make periodic tenders pursuant to Rule 23c-3 and may offer shares continuously), permitting automatic effectiveness of certain post-effective amendments. n72 Rule 488(a) permits 30-50 day automatic effectiveness of post-effective amendments filed on Form N-14 to register shares of a mutual fund in connection with certain business combinations.

[iii] Offerings by Series of Unit Investment Trusts. As discussed above, some unit investment trusts offer units continuously and use the proceeds of sales of units to accumulate shares of one or more other issuers (usually management investment companies). However, other unit investment trusts offer units representing interests in a portfolio of specifically identified securities that normally remains fixed. Typically, the securities in such a portfolio would be municipal or corporate obligations of comparable quality and maturities. Once the units evidencing an interest in that portfolio were sold, no additional portfolio securities would be acquired and no new units would be sold. A trust portfolio of this type is called a series.

A single unit investment trust registered under the Investment Company Act may offer numerous series, each with a different portfolio and each registered pursuant to a new registration statement under the Securities Act on Form S-6. Since units are redeemable, and redemptions could force the sale of portfolio securities, sponsors of unit investment trusts organized in the series format typically make a secondary market in trust units at a price equal to or higher than the redemption price.

The various series of such a unit investment trust may closely resemble each other in investment objectives and policies and manner of operation. If so, the textual portion of the registration statement for a given series may be identical, or nearly so, with that of one or more previous series, with only the detailed information about the particular portfolio securities being different. Accordingly, the SEC adopted Rule 487 to permit the registrant to set the date and time of effectiveness of the registration statement for a series that closely resembles one or more earlier series. Obviously, Rule 487 may not be used for the first series of a trust, but it may be used for any subsequent series if the following criteria are satisfied:

- the registrant is not engaged in the business of investing in securities issued by one or more open-end management investment companies;
- the registrant designates the date and time of effectiveness on the facing sheet of the registration statement;
- the registrant identifies one or more previous series of the trust for which the effective date of the registration statement was determined by the Commission or its staff, and makes the following representations:
 - (a) the portfolio securities for the new series do not differ materially in type or quality from those deposited in the previous series identified by the registrant;
 - (b) the registration statement does not contain disclosures that differ in any material respect from those in such previous registration statement (except to the extent necessary to identify specific portfolio securities and provide related financial information);
- the registrant represents that it has complied with Rule 460 under the Securities Act; n73
- the foregoing identifications and representations must be on the signature page of the registration statement; n74 and
- there must be a representation of any counsel as to availability of the Rule.

Subparagraph (c) of Rule 487 contains provisions relating to suspension of the ability to use the Rule and to petition for review of such a suspension.

[5] Information Required in Prospectus

[a] General. The provisions of Section 10(a) of the Securities Act apply to registration statements of investment companies. However, each applicable registration form sets the particular requirements for prospectus disclosure.

[b] Omitting Prospectus. Section 10(b) of the Securities Act also generally governs omitting prospectuses, but, as discussed above, Rule 482 prescribes the detailed requirements applicable to omitting prospectuses of investment companies and business development companies.

[c] Summary Prospectus.

In 2009, the SEC amended Rule 498 under the Securities Act to allow funds to sell shares by means of an abbreviated document called a "summary prospectus."ⁿ⁷⁵ ; alternatively, they may request the statutory prospectus and/or obtain it from the fund complex's Web site. Rule 498(c) requires the following information to appear either on the cover page or beginning of the "summary prospectus:"

- The fund's name (and, if applicable, the class to which the summary prospectus relates);
- The fund's or class's exchange ticker symbol;
- A statement identifying the document as a "summary prospectus;"
- The approximate date of the summary prospectus's first use;
- The following legend: "Before you invest, you may want to review the Fund's prospectus, which contains more information about the Fund and its risks. You can find the Fund's prospectus and other information about the Fund online at [_____]. You can also get this information at no cost by calling [_____] or by sending an e-mail request to [_____]."

In addition, the following specific disclosures must be covered in this order:

- Investment Objectives
- Risk/Return Summary and Fee Table
- Principal Investment Strategies, Risks and Performance
- Investment Advisers and Portfolio Managers
- Purchase and Sale Information
- Tax Information
- Financial Intermediary Compensation

With limited exceptions (e.g., for variable annuity products), the summary prospectus cannot be bound together other materials.

To rely on Rule 498, a fund must make various documents--including the summary prospectus, statutory prospectus, SAI and most recent annual and semi-annual reports--available on the Internet free of charge. These documents must permit the viewer to move back and forth online between the tables of contents of the summary prospectus and statutory prospectus and various referenced sections of the documents; in essence, to use a summary prospectus, the fund complex will need to have current versions of the summary prospectus and the statutory prospectus available on its Web site at all time. In addition, under certain circumstances, the fund may incorporate specified other documents (e.g., statutory prospectus, SAI, shareholder reports, etc.) by reference into the summary prospectus. The 2009 amendments to Rule 498 eliminated the previously permitted "profile" prospectus.

[6] SEC Plain English Requirements

The SEC has adopted rules that require use of "Plain English" writing principles when drafting the front part of prospectuses--i.e., the cover page, summary, and risk factor sections. The rules require public companies and mutual funds to write this information in everyday language that investors can understand. n76 Specifically, the SEC adopted amendments to Rule 421 (presentation of information in prospectuses), 461 (acceleration of effective date), and 481 (inclusion of certain information (such as legends) required in investment company registration statements) under the Securities Act (these rule changes are discussed immediately below), Regulation S-K and to various forms under the Securities Act and the Act. n77 To help explain the plain English principles in the rule, the SEC issued a handbook, entitled A Plain English Handbook: How to Create Clear SEC Disclosure Documents. This handbook recommends a number of Plain English techniques for drafting clearer documents.

With respect to the SEC staff's review of the Plain English requirements during the registration process, the SEC has stated that the staff will not correct grammatical mistakes, but rather will focus on whether the registrant discloses material information and whether that disclosure is clear and readable. n78

[a] Rule 421(b): Minimum Plain English Requirements. Rule 421(b) provides guidance on the minimum requirements for drafting prospectus disclosure that is clear, concise and understandable. n79 The rule requires registrants to prepare prospectuses using the following standards:

- Information must be presented in clear, concise paragraphs and sentences. If possible, the information must be presented in short explanatory sentences and "bullet" lists;
- Captions and subheading letters must specifically describe the disclosure included in the section;
- Terms that are not clear from the context generally should be defined in a glossary or other section of the document. Glossaries are recommended where they facilitate understanding of the disclosure. Frequent reliance on defined terms as the primary means of explaining information in the body of the prospectus must be avoided; and
- Legal and highly technical business language should be avoided.

The rule also notes some drafting conventions to avoid, including:

- Legalistic or overly complex presentations that make the substance of the disclosure difficult to understand;
- Vague boilerplate explanations that are readily subject to differing interpretations;
- Complex information copied directly from legal documents without any clear and concise explanation of the provision(s); and

- Repetitive disclosure that increases the size of the document, but does not enhance the quality of the information.

[b] Rule 421(d): Minimum Plain English Principles. Rule 421(d) codifies six minimum Plain English writing principles that public companies and mutual funds should use in drafting the front and back cover pages of, and any summary section included in, the prospectus. These principles are:

- Active voice;
- Short sentences;
- Definite, concrete, everyday words;
- Tabular presentations or "bullet" lists for complex material, whenever possible;
- No legal jargon, or highly technical business terms; and
- No multiple negatives.

[c] Rule 461: Refusal to Accelerate. Rule 461 generally provides that the SEC staff may consider the clarity of the disclosure in a registration statement when determining whether to accelerate its effectiveness. Paragraph (b)(1) of Rule 461 permits the staff to refuse to accelerate a registration statement not drafted in Plain English as required by Rule 421(d).

[d] Rule 481: Information Required in Investment Company Registration Statements. Rule 481 requires that certain information be disclosed in registration statements prepared on a form available solely to investment companies registered under the Investment Company Act. Among other things, amended Rule 481 requires that all legends must be written in Plain English and prescribes the location of the table of contents.

[i] Legends. All required legends must be written in Plain English, including the SEC legend and the "Subject to Completion" legend. The SEC has stated that using all capitalized letters for the legends does not give them proper prominence but rather makes them hard to read. The rule contains examples of Plain English legends. n80

(n1)Footnote 1. For a general discussion of Securities Act liability, see § 7A.03 below. Litigation involving investment company securities is discussed in Section 7B.08[2] below.

(n2)Footnote 2. "Gun-jumping" and other problems associated with the pre-filing period are discussed in § 7A.03[4] below.

For most of its history, the mutual fund industry generally believed that "gun jumping"--the unlawful advertising or promotion of an offering prior to filing or during the waiting period--was not a significant problem for open-end mutual funds because they continuously offer their shares at the current net asset value and thus generally did not seem subject to gun jumping concerns. Historically, these concerns have focused on the fact that investors may pay artificially inflated prices for newly issued shares because an issuer or underwriter created an instant demand for the offering through impermissible, pre-effectiveness advertising. In 1993, the SEC staff announced a rather expansive view of what may constitute "gun jumping" by mutual funds when dealing with the press. See SEC Industry Comment Letter at 8

(Feb. 22, 1993). The staff believes that discussions about a new fund in speeches, interviews, or press conferences that are then reprinted, excerpted, or used in articles or broadcasts before the effective date of a fund's registration statement may be "gun jumping." In the staff's view, anytime a fund, its adviser, underwriter, or their respective officers, directors, employees, agents, and affiliates talk to the press about a new fund, they run the risk that the press may reduce statements to an article/broadcast prior to effectiveness that may violate the law and for which the fund could be held liable. In such a case, the staff may decline to accelerate the effectiveness of the fund's registration statement and may impose a "cooling off" period and require re-circulation of any preliminary prospectus.

In addition, Section 7 of the Investment Company Act severely limits the domestic activities of any investment company that has not registered under that Act. Specifically, a domestically organized management company that has not registered under the Investment Company Act may not use the jurisdictional means to offer, sell, deliver after sale, purchase, redeem, retire, or otherwise acquire any of its securities; control any investment company that does any of the foregoing; engage in any business in interstate commerce; or control any company that engages in business in interstate commerce.

These limitations do not apply to transactions which are merely incidental to the dissolution of an investment company. Investment companies organized "offshore" may not use the jurisdictional means to make a public offering of their securities without first obtaining an exemption from the SEC but may otherwise engage in U.S. activities. See Section 7(d) of the Investment Company Act. Regulation D under the Securities Act permits non-public offers to unlimited numbers of "accredited investors." However, as a policy matter, the SEC staff will not condone a non-public offering in the U.S. of shares of an offshore fund except to the extent permissible for U.S. companies excepted from the definition of an investment company by Section 3(c)(1) or (7). See Goodwin, Proctor & Hoar, SEC No-Action Letter (pub. avail. Feb. 28, 1997).

(n3)Footnote 3. Form N-8A requires name, address, telephone number, and name and address of agent for service of process; the state under the laws of which the registrant was organized and the date thereof; registrant's form of organization; the classification and sub-classification of the registrant for purposes of the Investment Company Act; the name and address of each investment adviser (which would include sub-advisers); the name and address of any officers and directors; for unit investment trusts information about the sponsor, trustee, and any custodian; information about outstanding securities and any current or proposed public offerings; the current value of the registrant's total assets; a statement of whether the registrant proposes to operate as a small business investment company; and a copy of the registrant's last regular periodic report to its securityholders, if any.

(n4)Footnote 4. Among the matters addressed by these rules are: definitions (Rule 8b-2); number of copies, signatures, binding (Rule 8b-11); requirements as to paper, printing, and language (Rule 8b-12); incorporation by reference (Rule 8b-23); extension of time for furnishing information (Rule 8b-25); and incorporation of exhibits by reference (Rule 8b-32). The rules adopted under the Act are reprinted at the end of volume 1 below.

(n5)Footnote 5. Subchapter M of the Internal Revenue Code (Sections 851-855 and 860) provides for special tax treatment for eligible regulated investment companies. An eligible regulated investment company that distributes at least 90 percent of its income and satisfies certain other tests is not subject to regular federal tax on amounts distributed to shareholders (although an excise tax is imposed unless more stringent tests are satisfied).

(n15)Footnote 15. Rule 24b-3 under the Securities Act, reprinted in the Primary Law Sourcebook, Volume A, Section C provides that filing sales literature with FINRA will satisfy this filing requirement. Rule 24b-1 contains several definitions that elaborate on the types of documents and information that constitute sales literature. Rule 24b-2 requires that filings of sales literature be accompanied by a letter of transmittal.

No. 33-3385, [1949-1950 Transfer Binder] Fed. Sec. L. Rep. (CCH) P 76,077 (1950). Citations of later amendments thereto are contained in Inv. Co. Act Rel. No. 10,647, 6 Fed. Sec. L. Rep. (n17)Footnote 17. Rule 156 contains general anti-fraud provisions and specifically addresses certain potential problem areas in investment company sales literature (for example, statements implying that future gain may be inferred from past performance). Rule 156 also defines sales literature for purposes of the Rule broadly enough to include other types of advertising as well. See also Lemke, Lins & Smith § 19.01.

(n18)Footnote 18. A Rule 482 advertisement must contain only information the substance of which is in the full prospectus; must state conspicuously how a full prospectus may be obtained; and, if used prior to effectiveness of the registration statement, must contain the standard legend required by Rule 481(b)(2). See § 7B.02[2][d][vii] above. A Rule 482 advertisement does not have to include the standard legend required by Rule 481(b)(1) that the securities have not been "approved or disapproved" by the SEC. In addition, a Rule 482 advertisement does not have to be filed as a part of the registration statement (but does have to be filed pursuant to Rule 497). See § 7B.02[2][d][iii] above.

(n19)Footnote 19. Calculations of effective yield assume reinvestment of dividends.

(n20)Footnote 20. See § 7B.02[5][d] for a discussion of Rule 498 under the Securities Act, which permits mutual funds to use "summary prospectuses" to provide specified information to investors.

(n21)Footnote 21. These categories include a recital of policies on various activities, a recital of all policies changeable only by shareholder vote, and the name and address of each person affiliated with the fund.

(n22)Footnote 22. See § 7B.01[6] below.

(n23)Footnote 23. Section 13(c)(4) provides that an investment company may not, without shareholder approval, change its business so as to cease to be an investment company. Nevertheless, the SEC staff has allowed funds to liquidate without shareholder approval where consistent with applicable state laws.

(n24)Footnote 24. These rules include: requirements as to proper form (Rules 401 and 8b-10); number of copies, etc. (Rules 402 and 8b-11); requirements as to paper, etc. (Rules 403 and 8b-12); additional information (Rules 408 and 8b-20); information not known and not reasonably available (Rules 409 and 8b-21); disclaimer of control (Rules 410 and 8b-22); and title of securities (Rules 480 and 8b-3).

Rule 482 contains a cross reference to Rule 434d.

(n25)Footnote 25. Rule 405 provides that the term "material, when used to qualify a requirement for the furnishing of information as to any subject, limits the information required to those matters to which there is a substantial likelihood that a reasonable investor would attach importance in determining whether to purchase the security registered" whereas Rule 8b-2 provides that the term "material, when used to qualify a requirement for the furnishing of information as to any subject, limits the information required to those matters as to which an average prudent investor ought reasonably to be informed before buying or selling any security of the particular company."

(n26)Footnote 26. A no-action letter is a mechanism whereby the public and practitioners can obtain the informal views of the SEC staff on proposed transactions that appear to raise issues under the federal securities laws and rules thereunder. For a discussion of the mechanics of this process, see Lemke, The SEC No-Action Letter Process, 42 Bus. Law. 1019 (1987).

(n27)Footnote 27. Rule 431 conditions use of summary prospectuses on, among other things, registration under the Exchange Act. Open-end investment companies are exempt from this requirement.

(n28)Footnote 28. The SEC staff takes the position that a rating assigned to a mutual fund by a statistical rating organization is the statement of an expert under Section 7 of the Securities Act and, therefore, it cannot be included in the fund's prospectus without the organization's consent. See Franklin Tax-Free Trust, 1985 (Sept. 24, 1985). See also Rule 436(g) under the Securities Act; Inv. Co. Act Rel. No. 20508, at n. 19 (Aug 31, 1994). However, a company that provides general information to the public about issuers, including mutual funds, and whose services are not procured by a fund to assign the fund a rating, such as Morningstar, Inc., is not considered by the staff to be an expert for this purpose. See SEC Industry Comment Letter at 6 (Feb. 22, 1993). The staff believes that any ranking must be accompanied by a statement that past performance is no guarantee of future performance and a brief explanation of the manner in which the ranking is calculated, including whether sales loads and other fees and charges are factored in. The staff also requires that the ranking be current.

(n29)Footnote 29. Investment companies are specifically exempted from the provisions of Rule 463 governing reports of offerings of securities and the use of proceeds therefrom. In addition, Rules 462, 464, 466 and 467 are, by their terms, inapplicable to investment companies.

(n33)Footnote 33. Rule 8b-15 requires that all amendments be filed under cover of the facing sheet of the appropriate form, be clearly identified as amendments, and comply with all pertinent requirements applicable to registration statements and reports. The Rule also requires that amendments be filed separately for each registration statement or report amended. Rule 0-3 contains requirements as to amendments that substantially duplicate those in the various forms and also specifies the form of facing sheet.

(n34)Footnote 34. Special requirements governing post-effective amendments to Securities Act registration statements of management investment companies and certain insurance company separate accounts are discussed in § 7B.02[4][b][ii] above.

(n35)Footnote 35. The note to this section of Regulation C specifies that certain rules are applicable only to investment companies and business development companies but that the rest of Regulation C also applies to such companies, unless the context specifically indicates otherwise.

(n36)Footnote 36. Rules 490 through 494 are applicable only to foreign issuers.

(n37)Footnote 37. Section 18 of the Investment Company Act limits the degree to which investment companies may issue debt or other senior securities.

(n38)Footnote 38. The disclaimer must be in Plain English (see Section 7B.02[6] below). The rule does not require any specific language but the staff of the Division of Investment Management has generally required registrants to use either of the two examples provided in the rule.

(n39)Footnote 39. The rule requires that the legend be in the following language "or other clear and understandable language:"

The information in this prospectus (or Statement of Additional Information) is not complete and may be changed. We may not sell the securities until the registration statement filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission is effective. This prospectus (or Statement of Additional Information) is not an offer to sell these securities and is not soliciting an offer to buy these securities in any state where the offer or sale is not permitted.

(n44)Footnote 44. Section 18 limits the ability of investment companies to borrow money or issue senior securities.

(n45)Footnote 45. Section 12(c) of the Investment Company Act regulates participation by investment companies in underwriting. Underwriting by investment companies is rare at best.

(n46)Footnote 46. The SEC staff has long taken the position that investment of more than 25 percent of the value of an investment company's assets in a particular industry or group of industries represents concentration. Investment companies may preserve only limited freedom of action to concentrate pursuant to management's discretion and without shareholder approval unless the specific conditions under which any changes in concentration will be made are set forth in the fund's statement of investment policy. The U.S. Government is not considered an industry and money market funds may reserve freedom of action as to investments in domestic banks. Investment companies have some flexibility in defining industry categories.

(n47)Footnote 47. Investment companies generally do not invest in real estate but reserve the right to invest in companies that do invest in real estate, including real estate investment trusts.

(n48)Footnote 48. Many investment companies reserve the right to invest in financial futures within limits that allow them to avoid regulation by the Commodity Futures Trading Commission.

(n49)Footnote 49. Section 21 of the Investment Company Act prohibits an investment company from lending to a controlling person or a person under common control with the investment company.

(n50)Footnote 50. Section 2(a)(3) of the Investment Company Act defines "affiliated person" and Section 17, in particular, regulates certain types of dealings with affiliated persons. In general, most transactions with affiliated persons (as well as principal underwriters and affiliated persons of principal underwriters or affiliated persons) are prohibited without SEC approval, by rule or by order.

(n55)Footnote 55. Section 8(a) provides that the SEC may accelerate a registration statement:

[H]aving due regard to the adequacy of the information respecting the issuer theretofore available to the public, to the facility with which the nature of the securities to be registered, their relationship to the capital structure of the issuer and the rights of holders thereof can be understood, and to the public interest and the protection of investors.

(n56)Footnote 56. Sections 17(h) and (i) of the Investment Company Act generally prohibit a fund from indemnifying a director or officer against liability to the company or its shareholders that would otherwise result by "reason of willful misfeasance, bad faith, gross negligence or reckless disregard of the duties involved in the conduct of his office." The SEC staff believes that this prohibition extends to advances of legal fees and payments for settlements and judgments. See, e.g., Inv. Co. Act Rel. No. 11330 (Sept. 4, 1980).

(n57)Footnote 57. The required undertaking must be in substantially the following form:

Insofar as indemnification for liability arising under the Securities Act of 1933 may be permitted to directors, officers and controlling persons of the registrant pursuant to the foregoing provisions, or otherwise, the registrant has been advised that in the opinion of the Securities and Exchange Commission such indemnification is against public policy as expressed in the Act and is, therefore, unenforceable. In the event that a claim for indemnification against such liabilities (other than the payment by the registrant of expenses incurred or paid by a director, officer or controlling person of the registrant in the successful defense of any action, suit or proceeding) is asserted by such director, officer or controlling person in connection with the securities being registered, the registrant will, unless in the opinion of its counsel the matter has been settled by controlling precedent, submit to a court of appropriate jurisdiction the question whether such indemnification by it is against public policy as expressed in the Act and will be governed by the final adjudication of such issue.

(n58)Footnote 58. Open-end and closed-end funds also must be mindful of Rule 3-18 of Regulation S-X, 17 C.F.R. 210, which requires a fund that files a post-effective registration statement that is expected to become effective 245 or more days beyond the date of the fund's most current financial statements to update those financial statements with a new set of unaudited statements as of an interim date within the 245-day period. For example, assume that a series fund, whose financials are dated December 31, files a post-effective amendment to add a new series as of October 1. In this case, the fund would have to update the financial statement information contained in its prospectus with interim financials, often referred to as a "stub period." Typically, a fund in this circumstance would use its semi-annual unaudited financial report information to meet this requirement.

(n60)Footnote 60. See Rule 405 in Regulation C under the Securities Act for the definition of "material." See also Basic Inc. v. Levinson, 485 U.S. 224 (1988) .

(n61)Footnote 61. To extend the time period past the 95th day, a registrant may file an amendment pursuant to Rule 485(b)(1)(iii) to extend the time period by up to 30 days. See Inv. Co. Act Rel. No. 20486, 1994 SEC LEXIS 2510 , Fed. Sec. L. Rep. (CCH) P 85,423, at 85,643 n. 19 (Aug. 17, 1994) ["Release 20486"].

The staff ordinarily limits its review of annual updating post-effective amendments filed under subparagraph (a) of Rule 485 to financial statements; material which has been underscored or otherwise marked to indicate textual changes; and areas in which recent developments suggest that changes in disclosure are likely to be appropriate. See Sec. Act Rel. No. 5988 (1978) and Sec. Act Rel. No. 6510 (1984). To expedite the processing of these filings, the staff has asked that the transmittal letter with such post-effective amendments explain the reason for the use of the delayed effectiveness procedures in subparagraph (a) of Rule 485 and whether the material portions of the amended registration statement have been reviewed in some other context, such as the post-effective amendment of another fund in the complex. See Sec. Act Rel. No. 6510 (1984). Finally, the staff has standby procedures pursuant to which it will not review certain post-effective amendments, particularly during especially busy times of the year. In connection with adopting these standby procedures, the staff particularly emphasized the importance of clear descriptions of material changes in transmittal letters. See Sec. Act Rel. No. 6353 (1981).

(n63)Footnote 63. Rule 461 under the Securities Act, 17 C.F.R. § 230.461, prescribes the procedures for requesting acceleration of the effective date of a filing. The registrant and principal underwriter must request acceleration in writing. A request for acceleration is deemed to be confirmation that the requestor is aware of its obligations under the Securities Act.

CHAPTER 7B Registration Of Investment Company Securities

2-7B Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 7B.03

AUTHOR: Thomas P. Lemke Gerald T. Lins

§ 7B.03 Form N-1A--Registration of Securities of Open-End Management Investment Companies

Open-end investment companies, commonly referred to as mutual funds, generally offer their shares to the public on a continuous basis and must offer to redeem those shares at net asset value per share. Mutual funds use Form N-1A for registration pursuant to both the Securities Act and the Investment Company Act. Form N-1A is a three-part document: a "simplified prospectus;" (b) a Statement of Additional Information, which must be delivered to investors upon request; and (c) additional information that must be filed with the SEC. As noted earlier, the SEC has adopted substantial changes to Form N-1A on several occasions.

[1] Introduction

Mutual funds were traditionally sold as a means for smaller investors to pool their assets in order to, in effect, achieve diversification of risk and to be able to contract for investment management at a reasonable cost. However, the mutual fund market has become highly complex and includes many large, sophisticated investors, including financial institutions, employee benefit plans, and corporations. Nevertheless, the typical mutual fund investor is still thought to be relatively unsophisticated. Before the adoption of Form N-1A, mutual fund prospectuses were "full disclosure" documents but there was a wide-spread belief that, in the words of the SEC, "under present requirements, mutual fund prospectuses are not effective disclosure documents for most investors because they are too long and complex." n1

Form N-1A seeks to address this problem by providing for a "simplified prospectus," which was intended to be a relatively brief document that may be used as the statutory prospectus, while requiring that a "Statement of Additional Information" or "SAI" containing more elaborate disclosures be made available to investors upon request and free of charge (the SAI may be, and generally is, incorporated by reference into the prospectus). The approach of Form N-1A embodies the widely shared conviction that the traditional mutual fund prospectus had, in the pursuit of full disclosure, become too long and complex. n2 The form implements the philosophy that a fund prospectus should contain clear and concise information about the fundamental characteristics of the fund, but additional information should be available--in the SAI--to those investors that need or desire it. The SEC also may use the information provided in Form N-1A in its regulatory, disclosure review, inspection, and policymaking roles.

In 1999, the SEC amended Form N-1A to "focus the disclosure in a fund's prospectus or essential information about the fund." n3

Specifically, these amendments to the form were intended to: (1) provide for a standardized risk/return summary at the beginning of the prospectus that concisely summarizes investment objectives, strategies, risks and performance and fees; (2) elicit discussion of risks of a portfolio as a whole rather than focusing on risks associated with each particular type of portfolio investment; and (3) provide for a graphic presentation of returns to help investors assess risk. These disclosures must be made in "Plain English" in accordance with Rule 421 under the Securities Act. n4 The SEC staff provided interpretive guidance based on experience with revised Form N-1A in letters to the Investment Company Institute dated May 19, 1998 and October 2, 1998. In early 2009, the SEC adopted further substantive amendments to the form and amended a number of rules, in an effort to make the form more user-friendly and facilitate the use of Web sites and other electronic media. n5

[2] Facing Sheet

The facing sheet required by Regulation C must be included. If a filing is made only under the Investment Company Act or the Securities Act, it should refer only to that Act. n6

[3] Cross-Reference Sheet

The cross reference sheet formerly required by Rules 481(a) and 495 is no longer included.

[4] General Instructions

[a] Definitions. This section defines certain commonly used terms, such as "class," "master-feeder fund," and "series," as a part of the SEC's efforts to reorganize and simplify the general instructions. Terms in Form N-1A have the same meaning as in the Investment Company Act or related rules, unless otherwise indicated.

[b] Filing and Use of Form N-1A. This section prescribes eligibility to use Form N-1A and states that it is to be used for Investment Company Act and Securities Act registration purposes. The section also reviews the various parts of the registration statement and refers registrants to applicable rules, particularly Regulation C under the Securities Act and the 8b series of Rules under the Investment Company Act, as well as the EDGAR filing requirements. The form also refers registrants to Rule 24f-2 under the Investment Company Act for information about filing fees.

[c] Preparation of the Registration Statement. The form stresses the importance of document design techniques that promote effective communication and inclusion of only as much information as is necessary to enable an average investor to understand the registrant's characteristics while discouraging over emphasis on "possible investments or activities of the fund that are not a significant part of the fund's investment operations."

[d] Form N-1A: Three Parts. Form N-1A is divided into three parts: Part A is the prospectus; Part B is the Statement of Additional Information; and Part C requires information that the registrant does not have to give to investors. The general instructions admonish registrants to avoid cross-references to the SAI or to shareholder reports in the prospectus. However, such cross-references are not precluded and registrants may, as a protection against liability for false or misleading prospectuses, wish to include in the description of investment policies and risks in the prospectus a cross-reference to the additional information in the SAI. As discussed in more detail below, the general incorporation of the SAI into the prospectus is on the outside cover of the prospectus in the Form N-1A. Court decisions have respected the concept of incorporating the SAI by reference into the prospectus, n7 but may be less inclined to do so if such incorporation is not prominent.

Rule 154 under the Securities Act permits funds to transmit one copy of the prospectus to multiple shareholders (who need not be related) with the same residential or electronic address (referred to as "householding"), provided the shareholders have consented in writing and the prospectuses are addressed either to each shareholder individually or to the shareholders as a group. Alternatively, for shareholders at the same post office box or residential street address who have the same last name (or who the fund reasonably believes are members of the same family), the fund can provide a separate written notice to them that the fund will deliver only one report to the shared address unless it receives contrary instructions. This written notice must be given at least 60 days before the fund starts to rely on it and must contain certain information, including how the shareholder can decline or revoke consent and a pre-addressed reply form or toll-free number to do so. Whether the fund obtained written consent or provided written notice, at least annually the fund must explain to consenting shareholders how they can revoke their consent. Where funds rely on Rule 154 to "household" combined proxy statement-prospectuses, they nonetheless need to provide separate proxy cards for each security holder.

[e] Incorporation by Reference. Mutual funds may incorporate the SAI by reference into the prospectus without delivering the SAI with the prospectus and most do. In addition, mutual funds may satisfy the financial statement requirements of Form N-1A by incorporating shareholder reports by reference. n8 Finally, the general rules on incorporation by reference are applicable in filings on Form N-1A. n9

[5] Part A: Information Required in a Prospectus

Part A of Form N-1A requires the following thirteen key items:

- Front and Back Cover Pages (Item 1)
- Risk/Return Summary: Investment Objectives/Goals (Item 2)
- Risk/Return Summary: Fee Table (Item 3)
- Investments, Risks, and Performance (Item 4)
- Management (Item 5)
- Purchase and Sale of Fund Shares (Item 6)
- Tax Information (Item 7)
- Financial Intermediary Compensation (Item 8)
- Investment Objectives, Principal Investment Strategies, Related Risks, and Disclosure of Portfolio Holdings (Item 9)
- Management, Organization and Capital Structure (Item 10)
- Shareholder Information (Item 11)
- Distribution Arrangements (Item 12)
- Financial Highlights Information (Item 13)

Form N-1A requires that Items 2 through 8--known as "summary disclosure"--be presented in "plain English" at the beginning of the prospectus after the cover page and table of contents. While no specified length for the "summary disclosure" is mandated, the SEC expects that it would be approximately three (3) to four (4) pages in length. Partly for this reason, the summary disclosure may not include information beyond that specifically required (although such information could be included elsewhere in the prospectus). The summary disclosure portion of each fund in a multi-fund prospectus must be presented separately, although certain aspects, most notably those relating to tax and distribution and intermediary compensation, can be combined if they are identical. n10

These requirements are summarized below.

[a] Item 1. Front and Back Cover Pages. Item 1 requires the prospectus front cover to disclose the following items:

- Fund's name and class (or classes) to which the prospectus relates;
- The exchange ticker symbol of the fund's shares (or the class offered by the prospectus). If the fund is an exchange-traded fund (ETF), the principal U.S. market(s) on which it trades should also be identified.
- Date of the prospectus;
- The legend required by Rule 481(b)(1) under the Securities Act (i.e., indicating that neither the SEC nor any state's securities commission has approved the securities or passed on the adequacy of the prospectus disclosure).

A fund also may include on the front cover page a statement of its investment objectives, a brief (e.g., one sentence) description of its operations, or any additional information, subject to a general rule about the presentation of information not required in the prospectus. n11

The back cover of the prospectus is required to include information about the availability of additional information about a fund. n12 This disclosure states that the SAI includes additional information about the fund, that additional information about the fund's investments is available in the fund's annual and semi-annual reports, and that in the fund's annual report, there is a discussion of the market conditions and investment strategies that significantly affected the fund's performance during its last fiscal year. The back cover page should also explain that the fund's annual and semi-annual reports are available, without charge, upon request and explain how shareholders can make inquiries. The fund must also provide a toll-free (or collect) number to call to request various fund documents. The fund may indicate if the various fund documents are available via email request or from a financial intermediary. Funds must send an SAI within three business days of request, and the SEC's Office of Compliance Inspections and Examinations will examine funds' compliance with this requirement in the course of routine inspections. n13 Finally, if the fund incorporates other information by reference, it must state where the information is incorporated from.

[b] Item 2. Risk/Return Summary: Investment Objectives/Goals.

Item 2 of Form N-1A requires that fund prospectuses contain a risk/return summary at the beginning providing key information about a fund's investment objectives or goals. The fund may identify its type or category (e.g., money market fund, balanced fund, etc.).

[c] Item 3. Risk/Return Summary: Fee Table. Item 3 of Form N-1A requires that the prospectus must contain a fee table, in plain English, after Item 2 of Form N-1A. The fee table is designed to show investors the cost of their investment by clearly setting out the fees and charges that investors incur directly or indirectly as a fund shareholder. The fee table must include the following:

Fees and Expenses of the Fund

This table describes the fees and expenses that you may pay if you buy and hold shares of the Fund.

Shareholder Fees (fees paid directly from your investment)

Maximum Sales Charge (Load) Imposed on Purchases (as a percentage of offering price)	_____ %
Maximum Deferred Sales Charge (Load) (as a percentage of _____)	_____ %
Maximum Sales Charge (Load) Imposed on Reinvested Dividends [and other Distributions] (as a percentage of _____)	_____ %
Redemption Fee (as a percentage of amount redeemed, if applicable)	_____ %
Exchange Fee	_____ %
Maximum Account Fee	_____ %

Annual Fund Operating Expenses (expenses that you pay each year as a percentage of the value of your investment)

Management Fees	_____ %
Distribution [and/or Service] (12b-1) Fees	_____ %
Other Expenses	_____ %
_____	_____ %
_____	_____ %
_____	_____ %
Total Annual Fund Operating Expenses	_____ %

Example

This example is intended to help you compare the cost of investing in the Fund with the cost of investing in other mutual funds.

The Example assumes that you invest $10,000 in the Fund for the time periods indicated and then redeem all of your shares at the end of those periods. The Example also assumes that your investment has a 5 percent return each year and that the Fund's operating expenses remain the same. Although your actual costs may be higher or lower, based on these assumptions your costs would be:

Click here to view image.

You would pay the following expenses if you did not redeem your shares:

1 year	$

3 years	$

5 years	$

10 years	$

The Example does not reflect sales charges (loads) on reinvested dividends [and other distributions]. If these sales charges (loads) were included, your costs would be higher.

Portfolio Turnover

The Fund pays transaction costs, such as commissions, when it buys and sells securities (or "turns over" its portfolio). A higher portfolio turnover rate may indicate higher transaction costs and may result in higher taxes when Fund shares are held in a taxable account. These costs, which are not reflected in annual fund operating expenses or in the example, affect the Fund's performance. During the most recent fiscal year, the Fund's portfolio turnover rate was ____% of the average of its portfolio.

As noted above, the fee table is divided into several parts:

- Shareholder Transaction Expenses - These are the sales charges or transaction fees that investors incur when they buy or sell fund shares. These expenses usually, but not always, are charged directly to the investor. The first three items apply to load funds, while the latter three apply to all funds.
- Annual Fund Operating Expenses - These are the ongoing fees for running the fund, such as management fees, custody fees, Rule 12b-1 fees, and legal and accounting expenses. The total of these expenses is commonly referred to as the fund's "expense ratio," because it represents the total of the fund's annual operating expenses expressed as a percentage of average net assets. These expenses are not paid directly by shareholders but rather are deducted against the fund's assets and, as a result, they reduce fund performance. Note that the fund's expense ratio does not include brokerage expenses incurred by the fund in buying and selling securities.
- Hypothetical Example - This is a projection that illustrates the estimated expenses a fund shareholder might pay over the next 10-year period. The hypothetical example is designed to illustrate to investors, in actual dollar amounts, how much they should expect to pay for investing in the fund. The hypothetical fee example shows the effect of the fund's expenses on a hypothetical $10,000 investment at the end of 1-, 3-, 5-, and 10-year periods, based on certain assumptions (because the example is seeking to predict future events), including whether the shareholder redeems their investment at the end of any of these periods. The hypothetical fee example reflects all expenses incurred by the typical shareholder, directly or indirectly, because it includes both shareholder transaction expenses and that portion of the fund's annual operating expenses paid by the shareholder.

■ Portfolio Turnover - This provides information on the level of the fund's trading activity, which can impact performance and incur tax liabilities.

[d] Item 4. Investments, Risks and Performance.

Item 4 of Form N-1A requires a fund to disclose various information about its principal investment strategies, the risks they may pose, and the fund's performance. The prospectus must summarize the fund's principal investment strategy, including the specific types of securities in which the fund principally invests or will invest, and any concentration policy of the fund. In addition, the fund must describe, in narrative form, the principal risks of investing in the fund, including the risks to which the fund's portfolio as a whole is subject and circumstances reasonably likely to affect adversely the fund's net asset value, yield, and total return. n14 Unless the fund is a money market fund, this item requires a fund to disclose that loss of money is a risk of investing in it. A fund can disclose information about the types of investors for whom the fund is intended and the types of investment goals that may be consistent with an investment in the fund. n15 A fund may not, however, describe in this section the rewards of investing in a fund. n16 A money market mutual fund must include special risk disclosure in this section of the prospectus, n17 as well as any fund sold through insured depository institutions. n18 Further, a fund must state if it is non-diversified and must describe the effect of non-diversification (i.e., disclose that, compared to other funds, the fund may invest a greater percentage of its assets in a particular industry or group of industries) and attendant risks. n19

Where a fund has a principal investment strategy of investing in securities of U.S. Government-sponsored entities such as the Federal National Mortgage Association (FNMA), the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation (FHLMC), Federal Home Loan Banks and similar entities whose securities are not backed by the full faith and credit of the U.S. Government, special risk disclosure is required. In particular, the SEC staff would expect the fund to disclose prominently that although the issuer may be chartered or sponsored by Acts of Congress, its securities are neither issued nor guaranteed by the United States Treasury. Likewise, risks pertaining to debt and mortgage-backed securities generally and to specific types of securities, such as "interest-only" and "principal-only" securities, should be clearly described. n20

[i] Item 4(b)(2). Risk/Return Bar Chart and Table.

A fund must include a bar chart showing the fund's annual returns for each of the last 10 calendar years and a table comparing the fund's average annual returns for the last 1, 5, and 10 calendar years n21 to those of a broad-based securities market index n22 as required by Item 4(b) Form N-1A. n23 Specifically, if a fund (other than a money market fund or a fund described in General Instruction C.3.(d)(iii) of Form N-1A) has annual returns for at least one calendar year, it must provide a table showing the fund's: (1) average annual total return (before taxes); (2) average annual total return (after taxes on distributions); (3) average annual total return (after taxes on distributions and sale of fund shares); and (4) index. n24 The table should include the following captions:

AVERAGE ANNUAL TOTAL RETURNS

(For the periods ended December 31, ...)

	1 year n25	5 years [or Life of Fund]	10 years [or Life of Fund]
Return Before Taxes	_____	_____	_____
	___ %	___ %	___ %
Return After Taxes on Distributions	_____	_____	_____
	___ %	___ %	___ %

Return After Taxes on Distributions and Sale of Fund Shares	_____ %	_____ %	_____ %
Index (reflects no de- ductions for [fees, ex- penses, or taxes])	_____ %	_____ %	_____ %

Adjacent to this table, a fund must provide a brief explanation that:

- After-tax returns are calculated using the historical highest individual federal income tax rates and do not reflect the impact of state and local taxes;
- Actual after-tax returns depend on an investor's tax situation and may differ from those shown, and after-tax returns shown are not relevant to investors who hold their fund shares through tax-deferred arrangements, such as 401(k) plans or individual retirement accounts;
- If the fund is a multiple class fund that offers more than one class in the prospectus, after-tax returns are shown for only one class and after-tax returns for other classes will vary; and
- If average annual total return (after taxes on distributions and redemption) is higher than average annual total return, the reason for this result may be explained. n26

The fund must provide a brief explanation of how the information required shows the variability of the fund's returns. n27 For example, the fund can state that the information provides some indication of the risks of investing in the fund by showing changes in the fund's performance from year-to-year and by showing average annual returns for 1, 5, and 10 years compared to a broad measure of market performance. The fund also should provide a statement that the fund's past performance, before and after taxes, is not an indication of future performance. n28

A money market fund may provide its 7-day yield ending on the date of the most recent calendar year or disclose a toll-free (or collect) telephone number for investors to obtain the current 7-day yield. n29 A fund also must disclose its best and worst returns for a quarter during the 10-year (or other) period reflected in the bar chart. n30 The date of the performance information in the table must be disclosed adjacent to it. To help investors, a fund must briefly explain how the information illustrates the variability of the fund's returns.

[e] Item 5. Management.

Item 5 of Form N-1A requires disclosure of each investment adviser of the fund, including sub-advisers. If a fund has three or more sub-advisers, only those sub-advisers responsible for a significant portion of the fund's net assets (i.e., 30 percent or more) must be identified. Except in the case of money market funds, if a sub-adviser's only responsibility is day-to-day management of cash and cash equivalents, it need not be identified. The fund must also disclose information about the person or persons primarily responsible for the day-to-day management of the fund's portfolio, including name, title and length of service. n31 Funds managed by a committee, team or other group have additional disclosure obligations. If a committee, team, or other group of persons is jointly and primarily responsible for the day-to-day management of the fund's portfolio, a fund should provide information for each member of such committee, team, or other group. n32

[f] Item 6. Purchase and Sale of Fund Shares

Item 6 calls for information relating to any minimum initial or subsequent investment requirements and, if the shares are redeemable, the procedures for doing so (e.g., telephone, written request, etc.). If the fund is an exchange-traded fund, the fund must specify the number of shares that it will issue (or redeem) in exchange for the delivery of a basket of assets and also explain that shares can be purchased and sold only on a national securities exchange through a broker-dealer. The fund must also disclose that the fund shares are based on market price and may trade at a price greater or less than the fund's net asset value.

[g] Item 7. Tax Information

In response to Item 7, a fund must disclose if it intends to make distributions that may be taxed as ordinary income or capital gains or that the fund intends to distribute tax-exempt income. If the fund holds itself out as investing in securities that generate tax-exempt income, the fund should provide a general statement that a portion of the fund's distribution may be subject to federal income tax.

[h] Item 8. Financial Intermediary Compensation

If the fund or its related companies pays financial intermediaries for the sale of fund shares or related services, it must include a statement substantially similar to the following:

Payments to Broker-Dealers and Other Financial Intermediaries.

If you purchase the Fund through a broker-dealer or other financial intermediary (such as a bank), the Fund and its related companies may pay the intermediary for the sale of Fund shares and related services. These payments may create a conflict of interest by influencing the broker-dealer or other intermediary and your salesperson to recommend the Fund over another investment. Ask your salesperson or visit your financial intermediary's Web site for more information.

[i] Item 9. Investment Objectives, Principal Investment Strategies and Related Risks, and Disclosure of Portfolio Holdings.

Rather than focusing on the characteristics and risks of each type of security in which a fund may invest, Item 9 of Form N-1A addresses a fund's principal investment strategies and the principal risks of the fund as a whole. ⁿ³³ A fund is required to focus on a fund's anticipated investment operations, rather than on investments that the fund might make, and to disclose how it intends to achieve its investment goals. Under Item 9(b), whether a particular investment strategy (including a strategy to invest in a particular type of security) is a principal investment strategy depends upon the strategy's anticipated importance in achieving the fund's investment objectives and how the strategy affects the fund's potential risks and returns. ⁿ³⁴ The SEC also requires a fund to explain generally how the fund's adviser decides what securities to buy and sell. ⁿ³⁵ In addition, Item 9(c) requires a fund to disclose the principal risks of investing in it, including the risks to which the fund's particular portfolio as a whole is expected to be subject and the circumstances reasonably likely to affect it adversely.

Item 9 also addresses the following four specific areas:

- Concentration - Instruction 4 to Item 9(b)(1) requires a fund to disclose its policies on industry concentration. ⁿ³⁶
- Temporary Defensive Positions - The prospectus also must disclose, if applicable, that in response to unfavorable market conditions, a fund may make temporary investments that are not consistent with its principal investment objectives and policies and the effect of such temporary investments. ⁿ³⁷
- Portfolio Turnover - The prospectus must disclose if the fund may engage in active and frequent trading of portfolio securities and, if so, the tax consequences of increased portfolio turnover and how the tax consequences and trading costs may affect performance. n38

- Risks - A fund must disclose the risks to which the fund's portfolio as a whole is expected to be subject and discuss the circumstances reasonably likely to affect adversely the fund's net asset value, yield, or total return. n39 Item 9(d) requires that the fund prospectus state that the fund's policies and procedures with respect to the disclosure of the fund's portfolio securities are available in the SAI and on the fund's Web site, if applicable.

[j] Item 10. Management, Organization and Capital Structure

Item 10 calls for more extensive information about the following items:

- Investment Adviser (Item 10(a)(1)) - Item 10 requires information in the prospectus about each investment adviser and sub-adviser to the fund. n40 Among other things, it requires disclosure of the name and address of each adviser to the fund, as well as a description of the adviser's experience. In addition, Item 10 requires prospectus disclosure of the aggregate advisory fees paid by a fund to the adviser during the most recent fiscal year and the basis of the compensation.

- Portfolio Manager[s] (Item 10(a)(2)) - A prospectus must disclose the business experience for each portfolio manager identified in Item 5(b) and statement that the SAI provides information about the manager's compensation, other account managed by the manager, and the manager's ownership of fund shares. If the portfolio manager is a member of a committee or group that is jointly responsible for the day-to-day management of the portfolio, for each such member, a fund must provide a brief description of the person's role on the committee, team, or other group (e.g., lead member), including a description of any limitations on the person's role and the relationship between the person's role and the roles of other persons who have responsibility for the day-to-day management of the fund's portfolio.

- Material Legal Proceedings (Item 10(a)(3)) - The fund must make disclosure about any material legal proceedings (other than routine litigation incidental to the business) to which the fund, the investment adviser or the principal underwriter is a party. This disclosure would include the court in which the proceedings are pending, the date instituted, the principal parties involved, a description of the factual basis alleged to underlie the proceedings, and the relief sought. In addition, the must disclose material proceedings instituted, or known to be contemplated, by a governmental authority. n41

- Capital Stock (Item 10(b)) - With respect to a fund's capital structure, Item 10 requires prospectus disclosure of any unique or unusual restrictions or potential liabilities associated with holding a fund's shares (other than investment risks) that may expose an investor to significant risks. n42

[k] Item 11. Shareholder Information. Item 11 of Form N-1A requires disclosure about a fund's purchase and redemption procedures, dividends, and distributions, but information about a fund's principal underwriter and service providers can be given in the SAI. n43 For example, the fund's prospectus must describe the circumstances under which it will use fair value pricing and its effects. n44 This Item addresses the following:

- Pricing of Fund Shares (Item 11(a)) - A fund must disclose the methods used to value its shares. n45 A fund also must disclose when net asset value is calculated. n46 Further, a fund must describe the circumstances under which it will use fair value pricing and its effects. n47 In responding to this Item, a fund may use a list of specific days or any other means that effectively communicates the information (e.g., explaining that shares will not be priced on the days on which the New York Stock Exchange is closed for trading). If a fund has portfolio securities that are primarily listed on foreign exchanges that trade on weekends or other days when the fund does not price its shares, a fund must disclose that the net asset value of its shares may change on days when shareholders will not be able to purchase or redeem the fund's shares.

■ Purchase of Fund Shares (Item 11(b)) - A fund must describe the procedures for purchasing the fund's shares

■ Redemption of Fund Shares (Item 11(c)) - A fund must describe the procedures for redeeming the fund's shares, including: (i) any restrictions on redemptions; (ii) any redemption charges, including how these charges will be collected and under what circumstances the charges will be waived; (iii) if the fund has reserved the right to redeem in kind; (iv) any procedure that a shareholder can use to sell the fund's shares to the fund or its underwriter through a broker-dealer, noting any charges that may be imposed for such service. The specific fees paid through the broker-dealer for such service need not be disclosed; (v) the circumstances, if any, under which the fund may redeem shares automatically without action by the shareholder in accounts below a certain number or value of shares; (vi) the circumstances, if any, under which the fund may delay honoring a request for redemption for a certain time after a shareholder's investment (e.g., whether a fund does not process redemptions until clearance of the check for the initial investment); and (vii) any restrictions on, or costs associated with, transferring shares held in street name accounts.

■ Dividends and Distributions (Item 11(d)) - A fund must describe its policy with respect to dividends and distributions, including any options that shareholders may have as to the receipt of dividends and distributions.

■ Frequent Purchases and Redemptions of Fund Shares (Item 11(e)) - A fund must describe the risks that frequent purchases and redemptions of fund shares pose to fund shareholders and whether the fund's directors have adopted policies and procedures regarding frequent purchases and redemptions of fund shares. If the fund's directors have adopted policies and procedures, they must be described in detail, including any restrictions (e.g., restrictions on the volume or number of transactions, fees or charges, exchange limitations, minimum holding periods, etc.), whether they apply uniformly and whether they apply to omnibus accounts. n48

■ Tax Consequences (Item 11(f)) - To simplify tax disclosure, Item 11 requires disclosure on the likely tax consequences to the fund and its shareholders if the fund operates as described in its prospectus. n49 Thus, disclosure about a fund's qualification under Subchapter M of the Internal Revenue Code can be provided in the SAI, unless the fund does not expect to qualify for Subchapter M treatment. n50 Item 11 also requires a fund to describe the tax consequences to shareholders of buying, holding, exchanging, and selling a fund's shares, and to disclose that the fund intends to make distributions to shareholders that may be taxed as ordinary income or capital gains and, if expected, that the fund's investment objectives or strategies will result in its distributions primarily consisting of ordinary income or long-term capital gains. n51

■ Exchange-Traded Funds (Item 11(g)) - If the fund is an exchange-traded fund and issues or redeems funds shares in creation units of at least 25,000 shares each, it does not need to provide the information on procedures for purchasing and redeeming shares, or the calculation as to when net asset values are calculated. The fund must also provide a table that shows the number of days the fund's market price was greater than and was less than the fund's net asset value (i.e., premium and discount) for the most recent completed calendar year and any quarters thereafter. This table is not required if the fund provides a free Internet Web site at which investors can obtain this information regarding premiums and discounts. n52

[l] Item 12. Distribution Arrangements. Under Item 12 of Form N-1A, a fund must provide information about its distribution arrangements (such as sales charges, Rule 12b-1 fees, multiple class and master-feeder fund arrangements) in a central location in the prospectus. The form requires Rule 12b-1 plan disclosure to focus on the amount of fees paid under the plan and to move detailed technical disclosure to the SAI. In addition to the amount of the fee, disclosure must provide that:

- The plan allows the fund to pay fees for the sale and distribution of fund shares;
- Distribution fees are continuous in nature and that these fees, over time, cumulatively may exceed other types of sales loads; n53
- Because distribution rates are paid out of the fund's assets on an ongoing basis, the fees may, over time, cost investors more than other types of sales loads. n54

Disclosure about service fees paid outside a Rule 12b-1 plan, the disclosure must be modified to reflect those payments. n55 Item 12 requires also disclosure in the prospectus about the amount of any sales load charged on an investment in a fund, disclosure indicating when a sales load may be reduced or eliminated, (e.g., letters of intent, accumulation plans, dividend reinvestment plans, withdrawal plans, exchange plans, etc.) as well as information about each different breakpoint as a percentage of the offering price and amount invested. The prospectus must also provide a summary of shareholder eligibility requirements (e.g., a description or list of types of accounts, account holders, and fund holdings that may be aggregated to determine eligibility for a breakpoint), a description of the various types of information and documents that will be needed to verify eligibility, and a description of how accounts are valued (e.g., historical cost, net amount invested and offering price). Finally, the prospectus must also state if additional information on breakpoints is available in the SAI and whether the fund makes information on sales loads and breakpoints available free or on its Web site. The SEC does not require information about additional classes or feeder funds that are not offered in the prospectus. n56

[m] Item 13. Financial Highlights Information. Item 13 requires a fund to include a financial highlights table in the prospectus, though the fund generally has flexibility as to where to place it. The financial highlights table shows in fairly significant detail how the fund's historical activities have affected each share of the fund, which is why it is sometimes referred to as the "Per Share Table."

The financial highlights table contains the most complete discussion of the fund's financial history. It typically consists of multiple lines of financial information set out in comparative columns for up to five years. n57 The purpose of this disclosure is to show how a single share of the fund was affected by the fund's investment activities during each year. The table's five year timeframe is intended to show how a share performed over what is assumed to be one full cycle of up-down fluctuations in the general financial markets. Disclosure regarding how a fund calculates its performance appears in the SAI. n58

The table is divided into two the following two parts:

- Per Share Data - The first several lines of the Per Share Data show a variety of historical financial facts about the fund--on a "per share" basis--such as the fund's yearly income and capital changes, the components of how much the fund earned (i.e., income and capital gain) or lost, and how much of the fund's earnings were distributed to shareholders.
- Ratios/Supplemental Data - The last few lines of the table show various ratios and supplemental information about the fund, including fund net assets, expense ratio, income ratio, and portfolio turnover rate.

The financial highlights table must include the following:

Financial Highlights

The financial highlights table is intended to help you understand the Fund's financial performance for the past 5 years [or, if shorter, the period of the Fund's operations]. Certain information reflects financial results for a single Fund share. The total returns in the table represent the rate that an investor would have earned [or lost] on an investment in the Fund (assuming reinvestment of all dividends and distributions). [6] Part B: Information Required in a Statement of Additional Information

Part B of Form N-1A, commonly referred to as the "Statement of Additional Information" (SAI), is designed to provide shareholders with additional information about the fund that is not required to be included in the simplified prospectus but may be of material interest to some shareholders. The SAI includes the following fourteen items:

- Cover Page and Table of Contents (Item 14)

- Fund History (Item 15)
- Description of Fund and Its Investments and Risks (Item 16)
- Management of the Fund (Item 17)
- Control Persons and Principal Holders of Securities (Item 18)
- Investment Advisory and Other Services (Item 19)
- Portfolio Managers (Item 20)
- Brokerage Allocation and Other Practices (Item 21)
- Capital Stock and Other Securities (Item 22)
- Purchase, Redemption, and Pricing of Shares (Item 23)
- Taxation of the Fund (Item 24)
- Underwriters (Item 25)
- Calculation of Performance Data (Item 26)
- Financial Statements (Item 27)

In many cases the SAI requires disclosure that is more expansive and detailed about topics that are summarized in the simplified prospectus.

[a] Item 14. Cover Page and Table of Contents.

[i] Front Cover Page. The Statement of Additional Information front cover must contain

- The fund's name and class (or classes) to which the SAI relates.
- The date of the SAI and the prospectus to which it relates.
- The exchange ticker symbol of the fund's shares (or the class offered by the prospectus). If the fund is an exchange-traded fund (ETF), the principal U.S. market(s) on which it trades should also be identified.

It must also indicate that the Statement of Additional Information is not a prospectus; state how a prospectus may be obtained.

[ii] Table of Contents. The Statement of Additional Information must contain a table of contents and "when useful" cross references to the prospectus.

[b] Item 15. Fund History. The Statement of Additional Information must contain the date of the fund's organization as well as the form and state in which it is organized. If the name of the fund has been changed, the Statement of Additional Information must so state. The Statement of Additional Information must also provide information about any change of business within the last five years.

[c] Item 16. Description of the Funds and Its Investments and Risks.

[i] Classification. The fund must state that it is an open-end management investment company and, if it is diversified, it must say so.

[ii] Investment Strategies and Risks. The Statement of Additional Information must discuss strategies and types of securities that are "not principal strategies" and the related risks.

[iii] Fund Policies. The Statement of Additional Information must describe the policy towards items specified in Section 8(b)(1) of the Investment Company Act: senior securities; borrowing; underwriting; industry concentration; real estate or commodities; loans; and any other fundamental policies or policies that may not be changed without shareholder approval. The Statement of Additional Information must also describe the vote required to obtain any such shareholder approval.

[iv] Temporary Defensive Position. The Statement of Additional Information, rather than the prospectus, should describe the types of investments the fund may make for temporary defensive purposes.

[v] Portfolio Turnover. The Statement of Additional Information must explain significant variations in turnover during the two most recent fiscal years or any anticipated variation. Money market funds are excepted from this requirement because they generally do not have to calculate portfolio turnover.

[d] Item 17. Management of the Fund.

[i] Board of Directors. There must be a brief description of the responsibility of the Board under state law, similar to what was formerly contained in prospectuses.

[ii] Management Information. With respect to directors and officers, there must be the familiar tabular showing of information relating to positions with the fund and principal occupations. For directors and advisory board members, there continues to be a requirement that compensation be described in detail.

[iii] Sales Loads. The Statement of Additional Information must describe sales load breaks for directors and other affiliates.

[iv] Additional Director Information. Expanded disclosure about directors will be required effective January 31, 2002. There must be disclosure within dollar ranges of director beneficial ownership of shares of each particular fund and of all funds within a fund complex. The definition of beneficial ownership is taken from Rule 16a-1(a)(2) under the Securities Exchange Act and the focus is on economic interest. The fund must also disclose certain positions, interest or transactions involving independent directors that might be viewed as creating conflicts of interest. Finally there must be information relating to the various board committees and as to the board's basis for approving the fund's investment advisory contract.

[v] Proxy Voting Policies. Unless a fund invests exclusively in non-voting securities, it must describe its proxy voting policies and procedures, including the procedures used to address conflicts of interest. The fund also must disclose how it voted proxies during the most recent 12-month period ending June 30[th], and make such information available by calling a specified toll-free number or on the fund's website at a specified Internet address, or both, and on the SEC's website.

[e] Item 18. Control Persons and Principal Holders of Securities.

[i] Control Persons. The Statement of Additional Information must include detailed information about the interests of persons who control the fund, generally those that own more than 25 percent of the voting stock or who otherwise exert control, if any.

[ii] Principal Holders. This item requires detailed information about holders of five percent or more of the fund's equity securities.

[iii] Management Ownership. The ownership interests of officers, directors and advisory board members must be stated as a group, except that, if their ownership interest is less than one percent, a statement to that effect will suffice.

[f] Item 19. Investment Advisory and Other Services.

[i] Investment Advisers. The Statement of Additional Information must include details about persons who control the investment adviser and must identify organizations affiliated with both the fund and the adviser. There must also be detailed information about the advisory fee, including the basis for calculating the fee; dollar amounts paid; credits; and expense limitations.

[ii] Principal Underwriter. The Statement of Additional Information must give the name and principal business address of the principal underwriter and disclose certain affiliations.

[iii] Certain Services and Payment Therefor. This item requires disclosure about services paid for by the investment advisor or a third party.

[iv] Service Agreements. This item requires information about "management-related service contracts," such as those related to daily administration of the fund. It does not require information about investment advisers, custodians, transfer agents, dividend-paying agents, counsel or auditors. Required information includes the identity of the service provider, certain relationships to the adviser or underwriter and the compensation.

[v] Other Investment Advice. This item requires information about certain other entities that may come within the definition of investment adviser to the fund in the Investment Company Act.

[vi] Dealer Reallowances. The Statement of Additional Information must disclose any portion of a front-end sales load that is reallowed to dealers. This information was formerly in the prospectus.

[vii] Rule 12b-1 Plans. The Statement of Additional Information must describe material aspects of a Rule 12b-1 Plan and any related agreements. Required information includes distribution activities; whether the plan is designed to "reimburse" or "compensate;" any carried over unreimbursed expenses; any joint distribution activities; and the interest of certain other persons.

[viii] Other Service Providers. This item requires that service providers not previously identified be listed.

[g] Item 20. Portfolio Managers. This item requires various information about portfolio managers required to be identified in response to Item 10(a)(2) who is primarily responsible for the management of any other account, including the number of other accounts managed within certain categories and a description of any material conflicts of interest that may arise with the portfolio manager's management of these other accounts.

[h] Item 21. Brokerage Allocation and Other Practices.

[i] Brokerage Transactions. This item requires a description of how the fund allocates brokerage transactions, as well as any material year-to-year differences in commissions paid.

[ii] Commissions. This item requires information about payments of brokerage commissions to affiliates.

[iii] Brokerage Selection. This item requires a description of how brokers are selected, including soft-dollar arrangements.

[i] Capital Stock. This item requires information about each class of fund stock, including: the title of the class; restrictions on transferability; obligations or liabilities; dividend rights; voting rights; liquidation rights; preemptive rights; conversion rights; redemption provisions; sinking fund provisions; and calls or assessments. There must also be disclosure if the rights of any class are limited or qualified by those of any other class.

[iii] Other Securities. The Statement of Additional Information must disclose information about other types of securities the fund issues, if any.

[j] Item 23. Purchase, Redemption, and Pricing of Shares.

[iv] Redemption in Kind. This item requires disclosure of any circumstances under which redeeming shareholders might receive portfolio securities rather than cash.

[k] Item 24. Taxation of the Fund. The fund must indicate any intention to qualify under Subchapter M of Internal Revenue Code and any consequences of not doing so. There also must be disclosures in any unusual tax aspects of the fund, including those resulting from foreign investment.

[l] Item 25. Underwriters.

[i] Distribution of Securities. The Statement of Additional Information must disclose the nature of any principal underwriter's obligation; whether the offering is continuous; and information about underwriting commissions.

[ii] Compensation. The Statement of Additional Information must include a table reflecting compensation to affiliated underwriters;

[iii] Other Payments. This item requires disclosure about other payments to underwriters and dealers;

[m] Item 26. Calculation of Performance Data.

[i] Money Market Funds. Money Market Funds must provide yield in accordance with a prescribed formula if the fund advertises such quotations.

[ii] Other Funds. Other types of funds that advertise performance must provide as applicable total return, yield, effective yield and non-standardized performance information.

[n] Item 27. Financial Statements.

[i] Registration Statement. The fund must provide the financial statements required by the SEC's Regulation S-X.

[ii] Annual Report. The Statement of Additional Information prescribes information required to be in the fund's annual and semi-annual reports to shareholders.

[7] Part C: Other Information

Part C of Form N-1A addresses other information, including exhibits, required to be included in a registration statement. Part C includes information about, among other things, the person maintaining physical possession of the fund's accounts and records, indemnification of officers or directors, and persons controlled by or under common control with the fund and the fund's principal underwriters. n59

Form N-1A also requires a number of exhibits in Part C, including a fund's organizational documents and certain key contracts. Part C is not required to be delivered to investors. Companies are not required to make it available to investors free of charge, but it is available for public examination at the SEC.

[a] Item 28. Exhibits. Form N-1A continues to require the filing of numerous exhibits, but the requirements have been simplified and modernized somewhat.

[b] Item 29. Persons Controlled By or Under Common Control With the Fund. The Statement of Additional Information continues to require disclosure of these control relationships.

[c] Item 30. Indemnification. There must be disclosure as to any arrangements under which any director, officer, underwriter or affiliate may be insured or indemnified.

[d] Item 31. Business and Other Connections of the Investment Adviser. This requirement relates not only to the adviser, but to directors, officers or partners of the adviser.

[e] Item 32. Principal Underwriters. The Statement of Additional Information continues to require identification of other funds for which its principal underwriter acts in that capacity; details about each director, officer or partner of the principal underwriter; and compensation to unaffiliated principal underwriters.

[f] Item 33. Location of Accounts and Records. The Statement of Additional Information must identify where required books and records are maintained.

[g] Item 34. Management Services. The Statement of Additional Information must summarize the substantive provisions of management related service contracts not discussed in the prospectus or Statement of Additional Information.

[h] Item 35. Undertakings. The form now requires only one undertaking: to file an amendment with certified financial statements showing the seed capital.

Along with the adoption of Form N-1A, the SEC published staff guidelines intended to assist persons who were preparing Form N-1A. A major purpose of these guidelines was to collect and adapt to Form N-1A many traditional SEC staff views on disclosure related topics. Amendments to Form N-1A have superseded the guidelines. See Inv. Co. Act Rel. No 23064 (Mar. 13, 1998); Inv. Co. Act Rel. No. 58284 (Jan. 13, 2009).

(n4)Footnote 4. The SEC's Plain English principles require that disclosure documents: present information in an easily readable format; use everyday language that investors can easily understand; and eliminate repetition of disclosure that lengthens a document and overwhelms the investor.

(n6)Footnote 6. See Rule 495(a) of Regulation C and Rule 481(a), which require investment company facing sheets to set forth the approximate date of proposed sale to the public. (n11)Footnote 11. See Instruction to Item 1(a) and General Instruction C.3(b) of Form N-1A.

(n12)Footnote 12. Item 1(b)(3) requires a fund to include on the back cover page of its prospectus a statement that information about the fund is available at the SEC's Public Reference Room and on the SEC's Internet site.

(n13)Footnote 13. See Instruction 3 to Item 1(b)(1); Release 23064, above, at n. 189 and accompanying text. The staff has stated that to demonstrate compliance with this requirement a fund must maintain policies and procedures, internally and with financial intermediaries through which fund shares are traded, that establish that the fund honors requests for the prospectus, SAI and annual/semi-annual reports within the three-business day period. The fund should also be able to demonstrate that its policies and procedures in fact result in timely distribution of these documents. See Letter from Barry D. Miller, Associate Director, SEC Division of Investment Management, to Craig S. Tyle, Investment Company Institute (May 19, 1998) [hereinafter cited as "Form N-1A Staff Comment Letter 1"].

(n14)Footnote 14. In the SEC's view, the purpose of this summary risk disclosure is to identify briefly the principal risks of investing in the particular fund and to emphasize those risks reasonably likely to affect the fund's performance. The SEC expects this disclosure to consist of a succinct summary of the principal risks and not to repeat the fuller discussion of these risks required elsewhere in the prospectus. The SEC believes it would generally be inconsistent with this requirement for a fund to include a "laundry list" of generic risk factors that does not identify the risks of investing in the fund. See Release 23064, above, at n. 34 and accompanying text.

(n15)Footnote 15. See Item 4(b)(1)(i) of Form N-1A.

(n16)Footnote 16. A fund could discuss the potential rewards of investing in the fund elsewhere in its prospectus as long as the information is not incomplete, inaccurate, or misleading. See Release 23064, above, at n. 40 and accompanying text.

(n17)Footnote 17. Item 4(b)(1)(ii) of Form N-1A requires the following money market mutual fund disclosure:

An investment in the Fund is not insured or guaranteed by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation or any other government agency. Although the Fund seeks to preserve the value of your investment at $1.00 per share, it is possible to lose money by investing in the Fund.

A money market mutual fund advised by or sold through a bank also would disclose in the risk summary of its prospectus:

An investment in the Fund is not a deposit of the bank and is not insured or guaranteed by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation or any other governmental agency.

Disclosure about the types of risks associated with investing in a tax-exempt money market fund that concentrates its investments in a particular state is not required in either the profile or the prospectus. See Release 23064, above, at n. 46 and accompanying text.

(n18)Footnote 18. Item 4(b)(1)(iii) of Form N-1A (the fund must make the disclosure set forth toward the end of the prior footnote).

(n19)Footnote 19. Item 4(b)(1)(iv) of Form N-1A.

(n20)Footnote 20. See Letter to Craig Tyle, General Counsel, Investment Company Institute, from Paul F. Royce, Director, SEC Division of Investment Management (Oct. 17, 2003).

(n21)Footnote 21. Item 4(b)(2) of Form N-1A provides that the bar chart of a fund in operation for fewer than 10 years must include annual returns for the fund's life. Both the bar chart and the performance table must be based on calendar year periods. See Release 23064, above, at n. 59 and accompanying text. Item 4(b)(2)(iii) permits, but does not require, a fund to include performance information for the fund's life if it exceeds 10 years. See Release 23064, above, at n. 71 and accompanying text. Instruction 4 to Item 4(b)(2) permits a fund that has not had the same adviser for the last 10 years to begin the bar chart and performance information on the date the new adviser began to provide advisory services to the fund, provided the conditions in Instruction 11 of Item 22(b)(7) are met. Instruction 1(a) to Item 4(b)(2) provides that if a fund's shares are sold subject to a sales load or account fees, the fund must state that sales loads or account fees are not reflected in the bar chart and that, if they had been reflected, returns would be less than those shown. The staff has stated that a load fund may not include load-waived performance returns in its performance table under Instruction 2 to Item 4(b)(2). See Letter from Barry D. Miller, Associate Director, SEC Division of Investment Management, to Craig S. Tyle, Investment Company Institute (Oct. 2, 1998) [hereinafter cited as "Form N-1A Staff Comment Letter 2"].

(n23)Footnote 23. The bar chart is intended to illustrate the variability of a fund's return. The average annual return information is designed to help investors evaluate a fund's performance and risks relative to "the market." See Release 23064, above, at n. 52 and accompanying text.

(n24)Footnote 24. General Instruction C.3.(d)(iii) of Form N-1A provides that the following entities are exempt: (1) a defined contribution plan that qualifies under Section 401(k) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 ("Code"); (2) a tax-deferred arrangement under Section 403(b) or 457 of the Code; (3) a variable contract as defined in Section 817(d) of the Code; (4) a similar plan or arrangement pursuant to which the investor is not taxed on the investment in the fund until it is sold; or (5) entities not subject to individual federal income tax (e.g., tax-exempt foundations, colleges and corporations). A fund may not rely on this exemption if the prospectus is used indirectly to offer shares to persons that are subject to individual taxation, such as an offer to a partnership whose individual partners are taxed on a pass-through basis.

Instruction 2(a) to Item 4(b)(2) provides that money market funds are to calculate 7-day yield. Instruction 2(e) to Item 4(b)(2) provides that returns required by paragraphs 2(c)(2)(iii)(A), (B) and (C) for a fund or a series must be adjacent to one another and appear in that order. When more than one fund or series is offered in the prospectus, a registrant may not intersperse returns of one fund or series with returns of another fund or series. The returns for a broad-based securities index cannot be interspersed with the returns of the fund or series, but rather must precede or follow them.

(n25)Footnote 25. The SEC Staff has stated that a fund may not use year-to-date return information until a fund has annual return information for at least one calendar year. See Form N-1A Staff Comment Letter 2, above.

(n26)Footnote 26. See Item 4(b)(2)(iv) to Form N-1A. With respect to a multiple class fund offering more than one share class in the prospectus, see Instruction 3 to Item 4(b)(2).

(n27)Footnote 27. See Item 4(b)(2)(i) of Form N-1A; see also Release 23064, above, at n. 57 and accompanying text.

(n28)Footnote 28. See Item 4(b)(2)(i).

(n29)Footnote 29. The staff has confirmed that while a money market fund that has annual return information for at least one calendar year must include the performance table in its prospectus, a money market fund need not compare its performance to a broad-based securities index. A money market fund, however, may include information for one or more other indices as permitted by Instruction 6 to Item 22(b) of Form N-1A.

In addition, Instruction 2(d) of Item 4(b)(2) of Form N-1A requires a non-money market fund that discloses yield to provide a toll-free (or collect) telephone number that investors can use to obtain current yield information. A non-money market fund, like a money market fund, has the option of providing yield information in its prospectus (together with the telephone number to obtain current yield information) or merely disclosing a telephone number that investors can use to obtain this information. See Form N-1A Staff Comment Letter 2, n. 28 above.

(n30)Footnote 30. See Item 4(b)(2)(ii) of Form N-1A; see also Release 23064, above, at n. 55 and accompanying text. The staff has stated that, consistent with the other information in the bar chart and the performance table, the highest and lowest quarterly performance information should be based on calendar quarters. See Form N-1A Staff Comment Letter 2, n. 28 above.

(n31)Footnote 31. This requirement does not apply to a money market fund.

(n32)Footnote 32. If more than five persons are jointly and primarily responsible for the day-to-day management of the fund's portfolio, the fund need only provide information for the five persons with the most significant responsibility for the day-to-day management of the fund's portfolio. See Instruction 2 to Item 5(b) of Form N-1A.

(n33)Footnote 33. The SEC believes that disclosing information about all the securities in which a fund might invest, particularly securities that do not contribute significantly to its investment objectives (e.g., illiquid securities, repurchase agreements, and options and futures contracts), does not help a typical investor evaluate how the fund's portfolio will be managed or the overall risks of investing in the fund. See Release 23064.

(n34)Footnote 34. See Instruction 2 to Item 9(b)(1). Instruction 1 to Item 9(b)(1) defines a strategy to include any policy, practice, or technique used to achieve a fund's investment objectives. Instruction 2 to Item 9(b)(1) provides that when determining whether a strategy is a principal investment strategy, a fund must consider, among other things, the amount of assets that it expects to commit to the strategy, the amount of assets that it expects to place at risk by the strategy, and the likelihood that it will lose some or all of those assets in implementing it. Instruction 3 to Item 9(b)(1) provides that a negative strategy (i.e., practices in which a fund may not or does not intend to engage) is not a principal investment strategy. Under this disclosure requirement, a bond fund, for example, typically would discuss generally the maturities, durations, ratings, and types of issuers of the bonds in which the fund invests principally. On the one hand, it generally will be unnecessary for a fund (other than, for example, a money market mutual fund) to disclose in its prospectus its cash management practices (e.g., entering into overnight repurchase agreements), because these practices are not typically among the principal investment strategies that a fund uses to achieve its investment objectives. However, a fund that has a principal investment strategy of allocating its assets among stocks, bonds, and money market instruments would need to disclose its use of cash equivalents.

(n35)Footnote 35. See Item 9(b)(2) of Form N-1A. In meeting this requirement, an equity fund could describe, for example, whether it emphasizes value or growth, or blends the two approaches. A value-oriented fund might state that the fund's adviser selects stocks that it considers to be undervalued by recognized measures of economic value such as earnings, cash flow, and book value. Other types of disclosure may relate to whether the adviser employs a "top-down" or "bottom-up" approach. Item 9(b)(2) of Form N-1A.

(n36)Footnote 36. The SEC believes that a fund investing more than 25 percent of its assets in a particular industry or group of industries is concentrating in that industry. Section 8(b)(1) of the Act requires a fund to disclose any policy to concentrate its investments in a particular industry or group of industries. Section 13(a)(3) of the Act requires that a fund obtain shareholder approval to change a policy to concentrate its investments.

(n37)Footnote 37. See Instruction 6 to Item 9(b)(1).

(n38)Footnote 38. See Instruction 7 to Item 9(b)(1).

(n39)Footnote 39. See Item 9(c) of Form N-1A.

(n40)Footnote 40. The prospectus must also include a statement that a discussion regarding the basis for the fund directors' approval of the investment advisory contract is available in the semi-annual or annual report to shareholders (along with the period covered by the report). See Item 10(a)(1)(iii) of Form N-1A.

(n41)Footnote 41. See Item 10(a)(3) of Form N-1A.

(n42)Footnote 42. See Release 23064, above, at n. 137 with accompanying text; Item 10(b) of Form N-1A. Given the remoteness of the risk, it is not necessary for funds organized as Massachusetts business trusts to disclose the possibility of contingent shareholder liability.

(n43)Footnote 43. See Release 23064, above, at n. 146 and accompanying text.

(n45)Footnote 45. See Release 23064, above, at n. 153 with accompanying text. The SEC added an instruction to Item 11(a)(1) of Form N-1A to encourage funds to discontinue the use of boilerplate disclosure of the technical aspects of valuation and require them to include a statement about the effect of the fund's use of fair value net asset calculation.

(n47)Footnote 47. See Item 11(a)(1) of Form N-1A. Where the fund invests in another registered open-end investment company, the fund may explain that the fund's net asset value is calculated based upon the net asset values of the registered open-end funds and that the prospectuses of those funds describe when fair value pricing is used.

(n48)Footnote 48. See Item 11(e) of Form N-1A; Inv. Co. Act Rel. No. 26418, 2004 SEC LEXIS 843 (Apr. 16, 2004) . If the fund has arrangements permitting frequent purchases or redemptions of fund shares, these must be disclosed in the fund's SAI.

(n51)Footnote 51. See id. at n. 164 and accompanying text; Item 11(e) of Form N-1A. Funds subject to this requirement would include, for example, those often described as "tax-managed," "tax-sensitive," or "tax-advantaged," which have investment strategies to maximize long-term capital gains and minimize ordinary income. In light of tax changes, the amended form also requires a fund to disclose that capital gains may be taxable at different rates depending upon the length of time that the fund holds its assets. See id. at n. 165 and accompanying text.

(n52)Footnote 52. See Item 11(g) to Form N-1A.

(n56)Footnote 56. See Release 23064, above, at n. 174 and accompanying text. Item 12(c)(4) of Form N-1A requires a feeder fund to describe briefly the circumstances under which it may change its investment in a master fund; feeder funds that do not have this authority need not include this disclosure. Item 12(c)(3) of Form N-1A only requires disclosure of conversions or exchanges from one class to another if the conversions or exchanges are mandatory or automatic.

(n57)Footnote 57. See id. at n. 176 and accompanying text. Investors interested in historical data beyond the 5-year period can look to the bar chart required by Item 4 of Form N-1A.

(n58)Footnote 58. See id. at n. 180 and accompanying text.

(n59)Footnote 59. In the past the SEC staff required funds to provide an undertaking to hold a shareholder meeting within 16 months of effectiveness to approve a fund's directors, advisory contract, distribution plan, and other matters. However, the staff no longer requires such a shareholder meeting. See Letter from Marianne K. Smythe, Director, SEC Division of Investment Management, to Matthew P. CHAPTER 7B Registration Of Investment Company Securities

2-7B Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 7B.04

AUTHOR: Thomas P. Lemke Gerald T. Lins

§ 7B.04 Form N-2: Registration of Securities of Closed-End Management Investment Companies

Closed-end investment companies register under the Investment Company Act and register their shares under the Securities Act by filing Form N-2.

[1] Introduction

Form N-2 permits closed-end funds to use a disclosure format comparable to that used by mutual funds. Accordingly, a closed-end fund may use a "simplified" prospectus and Statement of Additional Information. As with Form N-1A, Form N-2 is divided into Part A (the prospectus), Part B (the Statement of Additional Information) and Part C (other information required to be in the Registration Statement but not required to be given by the registrant to investors).

Form N-2 incorporates a number of disclosure innovations. For example, funds that may issue senior securities are required to discuss the effects of leveraging. In addition, as long as certain information is included in the annual report, closed-end funds are not required to file annual amendments pursuant to Rule 8b-16. n1

[2] General Instructions

Form N-2 is used by closed-end management investment companies (other than SBICs) for registration statements under both the Securities Act and the Investment Company Act. Fees for registration under the Securities Act are calculated in the manner provided for in Section 6(b) of the Securities Act and Rule 457 thereunder. Regulation C under the Securities Act generally governs filings on Form N-2. However, if the registration statement or an amendment was filed only under the Investment Company Act, the series of rules under Section 8(b) under the Investment Company Act governs. Rule 8b-16 requires an annual amendment to the Investment Company Act registration statement unless specified information is included in the annual report to shareholders.

The SEC's general rules on incorporation by reference of answers to items not required to be included in the prospectus are applicable. Generally speaking, a registrant may incorporate by reference any information contained elsewhere in the registration statement or in other filings with the SEC. In addition, a registrant may incorporate the Statement of Additional Information into the prospectus by reference and deliver it only if the investor requests it. Information may also be incorporated by reference into the Statement of Additional Information but must be provided along with the Statement of Additional Information unless the requesting person is a shareholder and otherwise has already received the material.

A registration statement, or an amendment thereto, under both the Securities Act and the Investment Company Act or under the Securities Act alone must consist of the facing sheet, Parts A, B & C, signatures, and all other required documents. A registration statement under the Investment Company Act alone must include somewhat more limited information.

Part A of Form N-2 governs the contents of the prospectus and Items 1 through 4 thereof must be set forth in the same order as they appear in the form. The registration statement may include charts, graphs and tables that are not misleading but only the fee table and table of contents may precede the financial highlights (formerly the per share table). Sales literature may be included in the prospectus but should not lengthen the prospectus and should not be placed so as to obscure essential disclosure.

The facing sheet for Form N-2 contains specified information, and as stated above, must be included in any registration statement or amendment thereto. The facing sheet contains boxes to indicate whether the registration statement is under the Securities Act or the Investment Company Act. If no designation is made, the filing will be treated as having been made under both Acts. Amendments must be numbered sequentially. The facing sheet must set forth the exact name of the registrant, the address of its principal executive offices, its telephone number, and the name and address of its agent for service. In addition, registration under the Securities Act must include the approximate date of the proposed public offering and a table setting forth the calculation of the registration fee.

[3] Part A: Information Required in a Prospectus

[a] Item 1. Outside Front Cover. The cover page of the prospectus for a closed-end management company must include all the information specified in Item 1 and may contain other information if it does not impede understanding of the required information. The cover page must include basic identifying information, including identification of the type of fund or a brief statement of the investment objectives. The outside front cover must also describe the offering and must include:

- the type of legend concerning the Statement of Additional Information that is required of mutual funds;
 - the date of the prospectus and Statement of Additional Information;
 - if applicable, a statement that securities are being offered for the account of shareholders;
 - a table showing offering price, sales load and proceeds to the registrant;
 - statements required by Rule 481(b) under the Securities Act;
 - if applicable, a statement that the securities have no history of public trading and a statement describing the tendency of closed-end funds to trade at a discount from net asset value;
 - a cross-reference to any discussion of speculative and high risk factors discussed in the prospectus;
- and
- any other information required by the rules of the SEC or any other governmental authority.

[b] Item 2. Cover Pages: Other Offering Information. The following must be disclosed either on the front cover or on the inside front or outside back cover: information required by paragraphs (d) through (f) of Rule 481 under the Securities Act and the name of any national Securities Exchange or over-the-counter market on which shares will be listed, as well as the symbol.

[c] Item 3. Fee Table and Synopsis. The prospectus must include a table of shareholder transaction expenses and annual expenses similar to that required under Form N-1A. Form N-2 also adopts the criteria established in Form N-1A for use of a synopsis.

[d] Item 4. Financial Highlights. The "Financial Highlights" section is similar to the section formerly entitled "Condensed Financial Information." It requires a tabular presentation of certain financial information on a per share basis. The most significant substantive change is that the table must include total investment return.

[e] Item 5. Plan of Distribution. The prospectus must show the name and principal business address of each principal underwriter, as well as the nature of any material relationship with the registrant other than that of principal underwriter. The prospectus must also show the amount of securities being underwritten and the nature of the obligation of the underwriter (i.e., whether the principal underwriters are making firm commitments or will use their "best efforts"). The prospectus must also show the price of the securities or, if that is impracticable, the method by which the price will be calculated. There must also be an explanation of all forms of compensation to underwriters. In addition, special circumstances may have to be described (such as offering of securities otherwise than through an underwriter; for the account of security holders; otherwise than for cash; or in conjunction with retirement plans). There must also be a description of any indemnification provisions.

[f] Item 6. Selling Shareholders. If securities are being sold for shareholders, the prospectus must include the information required by Item 507 of Regulation S-K.

[g] Item 7. Use of Proceeds. The prospectus must indicate the use of proceeds. Typically, of course, in the case of an investment company the proceeds will be invested pursuant to the registrant's investment policies. However, any other use for the proceeds, such as paying off indebtedness, would have to be disclosed pursuant to this item. There also must be disclosure about how long it will take to invest the proceeds fully and the consequences of any delay in doing so.

[h] Item 8. General Description of the Registrant. The prospectus must disclose the organization and operation of the Fund, including its date and form and location of organization, as well as its classification and subclassification under Sections 4 and 5 of the Investment Company Act.

The prospectus must also include a concise description of the fund's investment objectives and the policies of the registrant that will "constitute its principal portfolio emphasis." This disclosure must include whether the objectives can be changed without a shareholder vote; the types of securities in which the registrant invests principally; any industry groups in which the fund will concentrate; and any special investment techniques. There must be a discussion of the principal risk factors associated with the fund. If the fund can issue senior securities, there must also be a discussion of the effects of leverage. There should also be disclosure about less important investment policies. The registrant must also include appropriate information about the trading markets for its securities. This item also has special provisions relating to business development companies.

[i] Item 9. Management. The prospectus must include a concise discussion of the role of the board of directors in overseeing the fund's operations. There must be considerable information relating to the investment adviser, including identifying information, the services provided and the compensation paid. The prospectus must also identify the portfolio manager or managers.

There also must be information about services provided by and compensation paid to any person who provides significant administrative or business affairs management services (e.g., an "Administrator" or "Sub-Administrator").

The prospectus must also include basic identifying information about any custodians and transfer agents.

The prospectus also must identify the types of expenses the Fund is responsible for and its practice, if any, of allocating brokerage to affiliates. Finally, the discussion of management must include information about non-residents and control persons.

[j] Item 10. Capital Stock, Long-Term Debt, and Other Securities. The prospectus must include information about the basic attributes of securities outstanding. This item also requires a concise description of the tax consequences of investing in the Fund (i.e., a statement about qualification under Subchapter M of the Internal Revenue Code). Prospectuses relating to senior securities must also describe ratings.

[k] Item 11. Defaults and Arrears on Senior Securities. Such information must be provided, if applicable.

[l] Item 12. Legal Proceedings. The prospectus must include information about any material pending legal proceedings (other than routine litigation incidental to the business) that are likely to have any material adverse effect upon the ability of the investment adviser or principal underwriter to perform its contract or to have a material adverse effect on the fund itself.

[m] Item 13. Table of Contents of the Statement of Additional Information. This item is self-explanatory.

[4] Part B: Information Required in a Statement of Additional Information

[a] Item 14. Cover Page. The outside cover of the Statement of Additional Information must contain the registrant's name; a statement of about the function of the Statement of Additional Information and its relationship with the prospectus; the date of the Statement of Additional Information; the date of the prospectus and statements required by Rule 481(b)(2) under the Securities Act. The cover page may include other information if it does not impede understanding of the required information.

[b] Item 15. Table of Contents. This item requires listing the contents and requires cross-references to related disclosure in the prospectus where appropriate.

[c] Item 16. General Information and History. This item requires information, if applicable, about other businesses in which the fund engaged, name changes and reorganizations or similar proceedings.

[d] Item 17. Investment Objective and Policies. This item requires a concise description of the investment policies but does not require repetition of information in the prospectus. This item also requires listing of all fundamental policies not described in the prospectus which would include so-called "negative" policies (i.e., policies that prohibit a particular type of activity).

[e] Item 18. Management. This item requires a "management table" providing information in tabular form about directors, officers and, if any, advisory board members. The information required includes details about remuneration and retirement benefits. Form N-2 has been amended to require the kind of director information described supra in 7B.03[6][g].

[f] Item 19. Control Persons and Principal Holders of Securities. The registrant must pick a date within 30 days of the filing and identify any persons who control the fund or are known to own of record or beneficially 5 percent or more than any class of outstanding securities. There must also be aggregate information about shareholdings of officers, directors and advisory board members.

[g] Item 20. Investment Advisory and Other Services. This item requires additional information about the investment adviser, including control persons and affiliates that provide services to the fund. There must also be information about the fund's custodian and accountants.

[h] Item 21. Portfolio Managers. This item requires various information to be disclosed if the fund portfolio manager is primarily responsible for the day-to-day management of other accounts, including the number of accounts managed in certain categories and the total assets of such accounts, as well as a description of any material conflicts of interest that may arise in connection with the management of the fund and other accounts.

[i] Item 22. Brokerage Allocation and Other Practices. There must be a description of brokerage practices generally, with particular emphasis on information on brokerage allocated to affiliates.

[j] Item 23. Tax Status. This item calls for information not included in the prospectus that may be of interest to investors.

[k] Item 24. Financial Statements. This item requires inclusion of the financial statements required by Regulation S-X. Certain of the instructions apply to shareholder reports as well.

[5] Part C: Other Information

[a] Item 25. Financial Statements and Exhibits. This item requires a listing of all financial statements and exhibits. Exhibits include articles and by-laws; any voting trust agreements; instruments defining rights of security holders; the dividend reinvestment plan if any; material contracts; and other items if applicable.

[b] Item 26. Marketing Arrangements. This item requires description of any limitations on sales, stabilization activities and responsibilities of underwriters.

[c] Item 27. Other Expenses of Issuance and Distribution. This item requires an itemized statement of expenses other than underwriting discounts and commissions.

[d] Item 28. Persons Controlled by or Under Common Control. This item requires identification of persons in a control relationship with the registrant.

[e] Item 29. Number of Holders of Securities. This item requires identification as of a specified date within 90 days prior to filing as to holders of each class of the fund's securities.

[f] Item 30. Indemnification. This item requires information about indemnification of any director, officer, underwriter or affiliate. Applicable statutory provisions and rules must be noted.

[g] Item 31. Business and Other Connections of Investment Adviser. This item requires information about other businesses of the investment adviser and any of its directors, executive officers or partners.

[h] Item 32. Location of Accounts and Records. This item is self-explanatory.

[i] Item 33. Management Services. This item requires a discussion of management related services not discussed in the prospectus or in the other parts of the Statement of Additional Information.

[j] Item 34. Undertakings. This item enumerates specific undertakings the registrant must include in the registration statement.

[k] Item 35. Signatures. The form specifies the format for including signatures in the registration statement.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. A closed-end investment company need not file periodic reports on Form N-SAR if the following is included in its annual report: required information about the dividend reinvestment plan; material changes in investment objectives or policies; changes in the company's charter or by-laws that delay or prevent changes of control; changes in principal risk factors; and changes in portfolio managers.

CHAPTER 7B Registration Of Investment Company Securities

2-7B Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 7B.05

AUTHOR: Thomas P. Lemke Gerald T. Lins

§ 7B.05 Forms N-8B-2 and S-6--Unit Investment Trusts

[1] Introduction

Unit Investment Trusts are distinct from management investment companies (e.g., mutual funds and closed-end management companies) in that they are passive investment vehicles offering interest in:

- one or more underlying mutual funds; or
- a generally fixed portfolio of securities, typically municipal or corporate obligations.

Unit investment trusts of the latter type may offer units in series, each series consisting of a separate portfolio. Unit investment trusts register under the Investment Company Act by filing Form N-8B-2 and register units under the Securities Act by filing Form S-6. n1 As discussed in Section 7B.05[5] below, the SEC has proposed, but not adopted, Form N-7 which would permit integrated registration of unit investment trusts under the Investment Company Act and of their securities under the Securities Act. In addition to simplifying the registration process for unit investment trusts, this proposal would adopt a two-part disclosure format similar to that of Form N-1A and N-2.

[2] Coordination of the Requirements of Forms N-8B-2 and S-6

As discussed below, Form N-8B-2 requires detailed disclosure about the unit investment trust, its operations, and the offering of securities. Form S-6 requires that the same information, with a few exceptions, be in the prospectus. However, registrants generally avoid duplication by answering the items of Form N-8B-2 through incorporation by reference to information provided in Form S-6.

[3] General Instructions

[a] Form N-8B-2. The procedural and formal requirements for filing Form N-8B-2 are comparable to those contained in other forms. In some cases the general instructions have been superseded. For example, Form N-8B-2 provides, with respect to incorporation by reference, only that the answers to items 1 through 54 may be incorporated by reference to any of such items. However, other SEC rules, including Rule 411 of Regulation C and Rule 0-4 under the Investment Company Act, permit broader incorporation by reference. As mentioned above, unit investment trust registrants do not typically fill out Form N-8B-2 completely but respond to the various items, where feasible, by incorporation of the prospectus by reference. Once filed, Form N-8B-2 does not have to be amended.

[b] Form S-6. Form S-6 consists of the facing sheet, the prospectus, a formal undertaking to file certain required information, documents and reports; a list of the papers and documents comprising the registration statement; signatures; written consents; and exhibits. Certain rule references in the general instructions to Form S-6 are out-dated. Specifically, the number of copies of the prospectus is governed by Rule 402 of Regulation C, and written consents are governed by Rules 436 through 439 and Rule 483(c).

[4] Categories of Information Required

Except as noted, the information requirements discussed below are applicable to Form N-8B-2 and Form S-6.

[a] Organization and General Information. The registration statement must include basic identifying information about the trust and each depositor, trustee, or principal underwriter therefor. In addition, the title of each class of securities issued and the state under which the trust is organized must be identified and there must be certain information about the indenture governing operation of the trust. Form N-8B-2 must include information about any name changes and the date on which the fiscal year of the trust ends. Finally, there must be disclosure as to any material litigation.

[b] General Description of Trust and Securities of Trust.

[i] General Information Concerning the Securities of the Trust and the Rights of Holders. Item 10 requires general information about the attributes of the security being offered, including rights of redemption, any voting rights, and, in the case of periodic payment plan certificates, provisions regarding lapses or defaults by security holders in making payments. There must also be disclosure of whether security holders must be given notice of or must consent to any change in the assets of the trust; the terms and conditions of the securities of the trust; the provisions of the trust indenture; and the identity of the depositor, trustee or custodian.

[ii] Information Concerning Portfolio Securities. Item 11 requires a brief description of the types of securities that comprise the corpus of the trust. Special disclosure is required if the trust owns or will own any securities of its regular brokers or dealers. n2

If the trust issues periodic payment plan certificates and invests in securities of another investment company, the following information must be provided: the name of the company; the name and address of the depositor; the principal address of the trustee or custodian; the principal address of the principal underwriter; and the period during which the securities of such company have been the underlying securities.

[iii] Information Concerning Loads, Fees, Charges, and Expenses. Item 13 requires a description of all loads, fees, expenses or charges; the amount thereof; the person to whom the payments are made and his or her relationship to the trust; and the nature of the services performed. In the case of installment payment type periodic payment plan certificates, there must be a table showing the amounts to be paid and certain expenses. In addition, there must be an explanation of any special prices offered to any group, including officers, directors or employees of the depositor, the trustee, the custodian or the principal underwriter. There must also be disclosure as to whether any person may receive profits through the sale or purchase of the trust's securities or its underlying securities. n3

[iv] Information Concerning the Operations of the Trust. Items 14 to 24 of Form N-8B-2 require a brief description of the principal characteristics and method of operation of the trust, including the functions and the duties of the depositor, principal underwriter, custodian or trustee, or other person. There must be a description of the procedures for issuance and authentication of trust securities; payment by purchasers for trust securities; acquisition and disposition of underlying securities; withdrawal or redemption; handling of income or other funds of the trust; maintaining the books and records of the trust; and reports to security holders. There must also be a description of the major provisions of the trust indenture and of any bonding arrangement regarding the officers, directors, partners or employees of the depositor or principal underwriter.

[c] Organization, Personnel and Affiliated Persons of Depositor.

[i] Organization and Operations of Depositor. In addition to basic identifying information, the form requires a full description of all sales loads or other fees to be received by the depositor and a description of its business activities. If the depositor is involved with any investment companies, the names of those companies, their relationship, if any, to the trust, and the nature of the depositor's activities therewith must be included.

[ii] Officials and Affiliated Persons of Depositor. Extensive information is required about every officer, director, or partner of the depositor and about any 5 percent security holder of the depositor who is a natural person. The form requires disclosure of the name and principal business address of any such person and the nature of his or her relationship with the depositor. There must also be detailed disclosure of his or her ownership of securities of the depositor and of the trust. Finally, there must be a statement of his or her business experience during the last five years and information about other companies which he or she serves as officer, director or partner.

[iii] Companies Owning Securities of Depositor. If any company owns 5 percent or more of the outstanding voting securities of the depositor, there must be disclosure of the name and address of that company and detailed information about its security holdings in the depositor.

[iv] Controlling Persons. If any person, other than an officer, director or partner of the depositor, a 5 percent security holder of the depositor who is a natural person, or a company that owns 5 percent or more of the outstanding securities of the depositor controls the depositor, there must be disclosure of that person's name and address and the nature of its principal business and the basis for his or her control of the depositor.

[v] Compensation of Officers and Directors of Depositor. There must be extensive disclosure of remuneration for services paid by the depositor to its officers, partners, directors, and, in certain cases, employees. "Remuneration for services" for purposes of these requirements includes direct or indirect compensation paid for service rendered to the trust. Disclosure is required as to the three highest paid officers or partners; other officers or partners as a group; directors; and employees or other persons paid more than $10,000 during the fiscal year.

[d] Distribution and Redemption of Securities.

[i] Distribution of Securities. There must be information about the states in which the trust's securities are sold and whether or not the trust's authority to distribute securities has ever been revoked in any state. In Form N-8B-2, but not in Form S-6, there must be disclosure of whether the trust's sales of securities have been suspended for more than a month.

In addition, there must be a general description of the method of distribution of trust securities, including the substance of any current underwriting and dealer agreements.

[ii] Information Concerning Principal Underwriter. Basic identifying information about the principal underwriter is required, as well as an indication of whether the principal underwriter is a member of the National Association of Securities Dealers. There also must be detailed disclosure of the principal underwriter's fees, including fees received by each principal underwriter from any underlying investment company or any affiliated person or investment adviser thereof. There must be a description of the general business of the principal underwriter, including its relationship with any other investment company. Form N-8B-2 must show every branch office of the underwriter selling securities and the number of individual salesmen of the underwriter through whom securities of the trust were distributed for the last fiscal year. Finally, information about ownership of securities of the trust by the principal underwriter or its officers, directors or partners and a statement of all brokerage commissions received by any principal underwriter must be disclosed.

[iii] Offering Price. There must be information about how the offering price for trust units is determined and how the underlying securities are valued. n4 In addition, a specimen schedule showing the components of the offering price must be provided. n5

[iv] Suspension of Redemption Rights. If there was any suspension of redemption rights during the three fiscal years covered by the financial statements that must be filed with the registration statement, the circumstances thereof must be detailed.

[v] Redemption Valuation. Disclosure of how the securities of the trust are valued for purposes of withdrawal or redemption is required. Such disclosure is similar to the disclosure required for determination of the offering price.

[e] Information Concerning Trustee or Custodian. In addition to basic identifying information, there must be disclosure of the custodian's or trustee's fees and of whether the custodian or trustee may create a lien on the assets of the trust.

[f] Information Concerning Insurance of Holders of Securities. If there is any insurance covering holders of securities, there must be information about the insuring company and the terms of the policy or policies.

[g] Policy of Registrant. There must be disclosure of any policy of the trust and any provisions of the indenture governing elimination and substitution of portfolio securities. If any investment adviser or other person plays a role in such substitution or elimination, that person must be identified and there must be disclosure of any affiliation to the depositor, trustee or custodian, or principal underwriter, as well as of the remuneration to be received for such services. There must also be detailed disclosure as to any elimination of an underlying security during the last three years. Finally, a description of any fundamental policy of the trust must be provided.

[h] Tax Status. The registration statement must disclose whether the trust is a regulated investment company under Subchapter M of the Internal Revenue Code and, if not, what its taxable status is. Many unit investment trusts are treated as grantor trusts for income tax purposes and, therefore, pay no taxes on amounts distributed.

[i] Financial and Statistical Information. If the trust is not the issuer of periodic payment plan certificates, there must be a table showing, for each of the last ten years, the number of shares or units, net asset value, and dividends paid per share. If the trust is the issuer of periodic payment plan certificates, there must be detailed disclosure as to a hypothetical account with the trust.

If the trust is the issuer of periodic payment plan certificates, there must be additional disclosures in Form N-8B -2, but not in Form S-6, concerning certificates sold and terminated. Form N-8B-2 also requires financial statements prepared in accordance with Regulation S-X, including a statement of condition as of the close of the last fiscal year and statements of income and other distributable funds for three fiscal years. In addition, with respect to the depositor, there must be a balance sheet for the last fiscal year and a profit and loss statement and a statement of surplus for the fiscal year.

[j] Exhibits. Exhibits include the trust indenture; distribution related contracts; form of each type of security; certificate of incorporation or other instrument; any insurance policy; any agreement concerning an underlying investment company; all other material contracts; the form of application for a periodic payment plan certificate; notices sent to security holders pursuant to Section 19 of the Investment Company Act; and annual reports. In addition, the name and address of each dealer to or through whom securities were sold during the last fiscal year must be included.

[5] Proposed Form N-7 for UITs

In 1985, the SEC proposed Form N-7, an integrated registration form for UITs. n6 In addition to integrating disclosure and eliminating the need for two registration forms, the proposed form was designed to provide a more updated format for UIT disclosure, particularly for those organized as series companies. In response to industry criticism, the form was repropoed in 1987 n7 in a format to permit sponsors to prepare a two-part prospectus containing generic information about all series of a trust and specific information about each series. n8 To date, the SEC has not adopted the repropoed form.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Unit investment trusts that are commencing operations benefit from certain "start-up" exemptions. See Rule 14a-3, Rule 19b-1 and Rule 22c-1 under the Investment Company Act.

(n2)Footnote 2. See Rule 10b-1 under the Investment Company Act for the definition of "regular broker or dealer."

(n3)Footnote 3. The sponsor or depositor of the trust, typically the principal underwriter, assembles the trust's portfolio and deposits it with the trustee, receiving the units of the trust in return. The sponsor bears some market risk in connection with these transactions but may realize underwriter's or dealer's profits.

(n4)Footnote 4. If the underlying securities are securities of a registered investment company, the registration statement of the trust need not duplicate disclosure about valuation that is included in the registration statement for the underlying investment company.

(n5)Footnote 5. The schedule must show a detailed breakdown of assets; liabilities and other charges; net asset value per unit; offering price; and effective sales load.

(n7)Footnote 7. See Inv. Co. Act Rel. No. 15612, 1987 SEC LEXIS 2420, [1987 Transfer Binder] Fed. Sec. L. Rep. (CCH) P 84,109 (Mar. 9, 1987).

(n8)Footnote 8. The repropoed form would also eliminate, under certain conditions, the need for UITs to provide annual audited financial statements in prospectuses used in secondary market transactions.

CHAPTER 7B Registration Of Investment Company Securities

2-7B Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 7B.06

AUTHOR: Thomas P. Lemke Gerald T. Lins

§ 7B.06 Form N-14: Certain Business Combinations

A merger by two investment companies involves the issuance of shares by one company (i.e., the acquiring company) to the other company (i.e., the target company) in exchange for the latter's assets. These shares are then distributed to the target company's shareholders in dissolution of the target company. The most common mergers involve public funds with similar investment objectives or a public fund's acquisition of a small, non-public fund. n1

Form N-14--a combined proxy statement/prospectus--is used to register shares under the Securities Act issued in connection with business combinations by management investment companies and to act as the proxy statement for soliciting approval from the target fund's shareholders. n2 Specifically, Form N-14 may be used to register securities in connection with the following transactions:

- Business combinations of the type described in Rule 145 under the Securities Act;
- A merger not requiring shareholder approval under applicable state law;
- An exchange offer;
- A public offering or resale of any securities acquired in an offering registered on Form N-14; and
- Two or more of the transactions listed above registered on one registration statement.

In addition, the SEC staff has indicated that Form N-14 is the appropriate form for registration of reorganization transactions involving variable insurance separate accounts such as the conversion (merger) of management companies into a unit investment trust separate account with an underlying fund or portfolio company. n3

Form N-14 is commonly referred to as a "merger proxy" and generally it follows the three-part approach of Form N-1A. In addition to the preparation of a registration statement and a proxy, Form N-14 requires certain financial information, numerous supporting exhibits, and filing fees, and thus many registrants seek to avoid using it, if possible. n4

The Form N-14 Combined Proxy Statement/Prospectus requires the following general categories of information:

- A synopsis of the key features of the transaction, the acquiring fund and the company being acquired, including comparisons of: advisory and other fees; investment objectives and policies; distribution and purchase procedures and exchange rights; and redemption procedures;
- Principal risks of investing in the acquiring fund as opposed to the acquired company;
- Material features of the transaction, including: summary of terms; description of securities to be issued; reasons for the transaction; federal income tax consequences to security holders; material differences between rights of security holders in the acquiring fund and the acquired company; and a table for existing and pro forma capitalization;
- Information about the acquiring fund, including: condensed financial information (i.e., "Financial Highlights"); date, form and place of organization; classification as diversified or non-diversified; description of investment objectives and policies (i.e., types of securities invested in, concentration policies, etc.); principal risk factors of an investment in the acquiring fund; management of the acquiring fund; description of the investment adviser, its services and fees; and pending legal proceedings;
- A discussion of the market conditions, investment strategies and other factors that materially affected the acquiring fund's performance during the most recently completed fiscal year and a line graph comparing the acquiring fund's performance to that of an appropriate index;
- Information about the acquiring company's securities, including: description of their nature and significant attributes; voting rights; restrictions on disposition; material obligations or potential liability; other classes of outstanding securities; dividend and distribution policy; tax consequences of purchasing the securities; procedures for purchasing the securities; procedures for calculating net asset value; imposition of any sales charges; any special purchase methods or plans (e.g., a dividend reinvestment plan); and any minimum initial or subsequent investment;
- A description and information regarding any Rule 12b-1 distribution plans of the acquiring company;
- Information on the revocability of the proxy; persons making the solicitation and the method of solicitation; dissenter's appraisal rights; votes required for approval of proposals and method of counting votes; and effect of abstentions; and
- Names and addresses of controlling persons of either the acquiring company or acquired company.

Form N-14 need not be used for transactions that, while technically a reorganization or merger, do not represent a new investment. For example, when an existing fund reorganizes into a "shell" (i.e., a fund with no assets other than seed capital), no Form N-14 is required. n5 In such a situation, the proxy rules under Section 20 of the Act and Regulation 14A under the Exchange Act would apply. Most importantly, the fund would not be subject to additional Securities Act filings fees, as would likely be the case if it was involved in a transaction subject to Form N-14.

Finally, Rule 488 under the Securities Act specifies automatic effectiveness procedures, analogous to those in Rule 485, discussed above, for open-end investment company registration statements filed on Form N-14. n6 In particular, under Rule 488, a registration statement filed on Form N-14 is automatically effective on the 30th day after the date it was filed or at a later date, designated by the registrant, but not later than 50 days after the registration statement was filed. The SEC staff has cautioned that if filings under Rule 488 exclude required information, such as pro forma, audited annual or unaudited semi-annual financial statements, the staff will suspend the automatic effectiveness. n7 An amendment that is filed to add missing information or exhibits begins a new automatic effective date period, although the SEC staff may be willing to accelerate the effectiveness of the registration statement. n8

CHAPTER 7B Registration Of Investment Company Securities

2-7B Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 7B.07

AUTHOR: Thomas P. Lemke Gerald T. Lins

§ 7B.07 Other Investment Companies

Insurance companies offer variable annuity separate accounts that are registered as investment companies. These separate accounts are generally organized as unit investment trusts investing in underlying vehicles, typically mutual funds. A separate account organized as a unit investment trust registers on Form N-4, and a separate account organized as a management company uses Form N-3. Small business investment companies that are required to register under the Investment Company Act register their securities under the Securities Act use Form N-5. Business development companies are not required to register under the Investment Company Act, although they are regulated by that Act. They register securities under Form N-2.

[1] Variable Insurance Separate Accounts n1

[a] General. At the time Form N-1A was proposed, several commentators urged the SEC to adopt comparable forms for insurance company separate accounts offering variable annuity contracts. n2 The SEC subsequently promulgated integrated forms for these entities in 1985. n3 As a result, both the separate account and the variable annuity contracts it offers are registered on a single form.

Separate accounts organized as open-end management companies use Form N-3. n4 Based on the same three-part disclosure format as Form N-1A, Form N-3 includes a prospectus, an SAI, and other information that is required only in the registration statement filed with the SEC. The SEC has published extensive staff Guidelines for preparing registration statements on Form N-3.

The prospectus requires a concise presentation of material information about the separate account and its variable annuity contracts, including: a per-share table; a general description of the separate account and its sponsoring insurance company; the tax consequences to an investor of an investment in a variable annuity contract; and a general description of the variable annuity contracts, including the annuity options and death benefit available.

The SAI discusses in more detail items in the prospectus and other matters not in the prospectus that may be of interest to investors. For example, an SAI includes general information and history about the insurance company, brokerage allocation practices, and financial statements for the insurance company and the separate account. Finally, Part C of Form N-3 requires other information, similar to that required in Part C of Form N-1A.

Variable annuity separate accounts that are organized as unit investment trusts ("trust accounts") register on Form N-4. n5 Form N-4 follows the three-part format of Form N-3, with similar Guidelines, and requires much of the same disclosure. However, because a trust account typically invests in one or more management companies registered on Form N-1A, a Form N-4 for the annuity contract generally includes disclosure primarily relating to the contract, while the Form N-1A(s) for the underlying fund(s) contains more investment-oriented information. In recent years, administrative advantages have led almost all new variable annuity separate accounts to organize as trust accounts.

Forms N-3 and N-4 also are used by variable annuity separate accounts that fund tax-qualified pension plans but are excepted from the Act by Section 3(c)(11). n6 As is the case with Form N-1A, the SEC staff has encouraged registrants using Forms N-3 and N-4 to improve prospectuses by making them more concise, direct, and understandable. The staff has stated that a fund that chooses to make its prospectus more understandable and user-friendly, by making form and content changes, may submit a draft prospectus to the staff for informal review. n7 In 2002 the SEC adopted Form N-6, which is specifically tailored to variable life insurance.

[b] Form N-3 (Management Companies).

[i] General Requirements. Form N-3 is available for separate accounts that offer variable annuity contracts and that are organized as management investment companies under the Investment Company Act and may also be used by certain separate accounts that offer variable annuity contracts but which are not registered investment companies. The form consists of Part A (the prospectus); Part B (the Statement of Additional Information); and Part C (other information that must be filed with the SEC, but, with the exception of certain financial information, does not have to be made available to investors). The requirements of Form N-3, insofar as they relate to the operations of the separate account as an investment company, are comparable to those of Form N-1A.

[iii] Particular Disclosures About Insurance Features. Form N-3 requires considerable disclosure, particularly in the prospectus, as to the insurance aspects of the separate account. The insurance company must be identified and described, as must the types of variable annuity contracts offered pursuant to the registration statement (e.g., group, individual, single premium immediate, flexible premium deferred). The prospectus also must define special terms, such as accumulation unit, contract-owner, participant, sub-account, etc., in a glossary or index. Certain aspects of the annuity contract must be highlighted, particularly assessment of a portion of the sales load upon redemption or annuitization; assessment of a penalty tax upon withdrawal; and any revocation right, such as a ten-day free look provision. A discussion of the relationship of the separate account to the insurance company and a general description of variable annuity contracts must be included. The prospectus must discuss options during the annuity period and the death benefit, as well as all deductions from purchase payments. Certain tax aspects of the separate account must also be described.

Similar to the information required in a prospectus on Form N-1A, the Form N-3 prospectus must contain a table showing pre-accumulation unit income and capital changes. The Statement of Additional Information must have all financial statements of the separate account, as well as a two-year comparative balance sheet of the sponsoring insurance company. The remainder of the insurance company's financial statements may be placed in Part C but, whether or not such financial statements are in Part C, they must be made available to investors free of charge.

[c] Form N-4 (Unit Investment Trusts).

[i] General Requirements. Most, if not all, modern variable annuity separate accounts are organized as unit investment trusts. Form N-4 permits them to combine their registration statements under the Securities Act with their full registration statement under the Investment Company Act. n8 Form N-4 has the same three-part format as Form N-3 and Form N-1A. n9

Prospectuses of separate accounts that are unit investment trusts must, in addition to providing information comparable to that required in Form N-3, describe the portfolio companies of the trust. The information that must be included is the name of the fund or portfolio, its type (e.g., money market fund, bond fund, balanced fund) or a brief statement of its investment objectives and its investment adviser. Separate account contract owners must receive, in addition, the prospectus for the fund or funds in which they invest.

[ii] Particular Disclosures About Insurance Features. These disclosures are comparable to those required by Form N-3.

[d] Form N-6 (Variable Life Insurance). In 2002, the SEC adopted a registration form specifically tailored to variable life insurance. n10 Form N-6 focuses on disclosure of information that is relevant to variable life investors such as premium payments, death benefits, surrenders and loans, and eliminates requirements of the prior registration forms (Form N-8B-2 under the Investment Company Act and Form S-6 under the Securities Act) that produced lengthy prospectuses and disclosure of unhelpful information. Like the Form N-4 (variable annuity) and Form N-1A (mutual fund) registration forms, Form N-6 has a two-part format: a simplified prospectus and a Statement of Additional Information (SAI).

Among other features, Form N-6 utilizes a fee table that shows all costs associated with a variable life policy, including cost of insurance charges. Costs of insurance charges are presented in two ways: (1) as a range from minimum to maximum; and (2) as the actual charge for a representative policy owner. The fee table also requires maximum charges to be shown, though a fund can disclose current charges if desired.

Form N-6 does not require hypothetical illustrations, but if included, they can appear in either the prospectus or SAI and, among other things, must be preceded by a clear and concise explanation, must show values based on three gross rates of return (zero percent, six percent and some other percentage not to exceed 12 percent), and must reflect an arithmetic average of the total expenses of all available underlying funds. Form N-6 allows the separate account's financial statements and the insurer's balance sheets to appear in the SAI with the remainder of the insurer's financial statements appearing in Part C. Further, the insurer's financial statements can be prepared in accordance with statutory requirements rather than generally accepted accounting principles (GAAP), provided that the insurer does not otherwise prepare financial statements in accordance with GAAP for its SEC filings or those of its parent.

[2] Small Business Investment Companies--Form N-5

[a] General Requirements. Form N-5 is used for Securities Act and Investment Company Act registration by any small business investment company ("SBIC") registered under the Investment Company Act. n11 Relatively few SBICs are so registered. n12

[b] Information Required for Registration Under the Investment Company Act. Part I of Form N-5 requires extensive information about the SBIC and its fundamental and other policies; financial information; information about security holders and service contractors; information about indemnification of directors and officers; information about the interest of affiliated persons in certain transactions; information about other securities; and financial statements.

[c] Information Required for Registration Under the Securities Act. Part II of Form N-5 requires incorporation of most of the information required by Part I into the prospectus. In addition, information must be included in the prospectus about the plan of distribution, underwriting commissions and compensation; use of proceeds; and sales otherwise than for cash.

[3] Business Development Companies--Form N-2

[a] General Requirements. Business development companies use Form N-2, the registration form for closed-end funds, for registering their securities. n13

[b] Special Disclosures. In addition to satisfying the requirements of Form N-2, business development companies are required by the SEC to make additional disclosures. One area of additional disclosure is the special risk associated with investing in securities of small and developing or financially troubled business. Business development companies are also required to include disclosure comparable to that provided by operating companies pursuant to Items 301 (Selected Financial Data) and 303 (Management's Discussion and Analysis of Financial Conditions and Results of Operation) of Regulation S-K (however, business development companies need not include the per share condensed financial information required by Form N-2). In addition to the foregoing, business development companies have to make more disclosure than do closed-end funds about their portfolio companies. Also, business development companies are expected to provide enough information to demonstrate their compliance with the Investment Company Act, in the registration statement, although not necessarily in the prospectus.

CHAPTER 7B Registration Of Investment Company Securities

2-7B Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 7B.08

AUTHOR: Thomas P. Lemke Gerald T. Lins

§ 7B.08 Other Prospectus Disclosure Issues

One of the most significant challenges facing regulators and the fund industry is the nature and extent of the disclosure that funds should make in their prospectuses. Although SEC registration statements are fairly precise in terms of the topics that need to be covered in a prospectus, by necessity each fund generally must determine the quality and quantity of the disclosure needed to describe its unique characteristics.

Because the fund marketplace is in a constant state of flux, and because a fund itself may change or introduce new investment strategies or policies, the SEC staff has emphasized that funds cannot rely on the SEC or its staff to identify these changing areas or to assess whether, and to what extent, changes in prospectus disclosure are needed (although over the years regulators have not hesitated to require additional disclosure about areas of concern to them). n1 Rather, it is a fund's responsibility on an ongoing basis to analyze fund risk and review prospectus risk disclosure, and to update prospectus disclosure when appropriate. n2

[1] High Yield Bond Fund Disclosure

Since the 1980s, investment companies have acquired substantial amounts of non-investment grade debt securities (e.g., bonds rated lower than BBB by Standard and Poor's Corporation or lower than Baa by Moody's Investor's Service, Inc.), commonly known as "high yield" or "junk" bonds. Today there are many bond funds specializing in such securities. Periodic difficulties in the market for these securities have heightened SEC concern about the adequacy of disclosure regarding junk bond investments. To address these concerns, the SEC staff issued two letters (in 1989, and again in 1990) setting forth fairly extensive disclosure requirements for funds that invest in these instruments. n3 These Letters, along with the five other Generic Comment Letters issued by the SEC's Division of Investment Management over the years, were rescinded by the SEC as part of the 1998 Form N-1A Amendments. Although the specific conditions (e.g., percentage limitations) outlined in these Letters no longer apply, it appears the general disclosure principles announced in the Letters have been built into Form N-1A as part of the 1998 Form N-1A Amendments.

[2] Disclosure Cases

Fund disclosure cases usually involve an allegation under the Securities Act that disclosure about a matter was either misleading or insufficient.

[a] Adequacy of Comparisons. Lucia v. Prospect Street High Income Portfolio, Inc. n4 involved a closed-end fund whose objective was to invest in a diversified portfolio of junk bonds. The fund's shares declined due to the collapse of the junk bond market in 1989. At issue was certain disclosure in the fund's prospectus that presented favorable performance of junk bonds as compared to U.S. Treasury securities for the ten-year period prior to the initial public offering. The plaintiffs alleged that the fund's disclosure was inadequate because the fund's prospectus omitted a shorter, six-year comparison showing that U.S. Treasury securities performed better than junk bonds. The district court ruled that the prospectus' comparison to Treasury securities was not misleading.

However, the Court of Appeals concluded that because the prospectus contained the favorable ten-year comparison, a jury might determine that the unfavorable six-year comparison would have been material and that the omission of the six-year comparison might have rendered the ten-year comparison misleading. The court also stated that while a one-or two-year period favoring Treasury securities may not constitute a trend, a six-year period favoring Treasury securities is "substantial enough to cast some doubt on the reliability of the reported ten-year figure." n5

[b] Adequacy of Disclosure.

[i] Fund Risk Category. In Tabankin v. Kemper Short-Term Global Income Fund, n6 a district court dismissed a class action suit brought by shareholders who suffered losses when two global income funds' net asset values decreased approximately 20 percent. The plaintiffs claimed that the funds' prospectuses and sales literature misrepresented the true risks of investing in the funds, by characterizing the funds as being "conservative" and using "prudent" investment strategies when in fact the portfolio managers pursued a risky course of investment. Because the sales literature contained risk disclosure and referred the reader to the prospectuses, the court focused on the prospectus disclosure. n7

Among other things, the court found that the objective of each fund, to "provide as high a level of current income as is consistent with prudent investment management from a portfolio of high-quality money market instruments," was not misleading because, in effect, other statements in the prospectus defined the term "prudent investment management." n8 The court also found that the plaintiffs had failed to identify any material misrepresentations or omissions, and that the "total mix" of information available in the prospectuses identified the risks that came to pass.

In Young v. Nationwide Life Insurance Co., n9 a district court denied the defendants' motion to dismiss a case involving policyowners who purchased variable life insurance policies and who alleged that the issuers' marketing and other materials misrepresented the nature of these policies. Specifically, the plaintiffs alleged that the variable contracts' sub-accounts (i.e., mutual funds that are the underlying investments for the contracts and are available only to policyowners and not to the public at large) were misrepresented as clones or replicas of well-known, publicly-offered retail mutual funds with the same or similar names that would track the performance of the retail funds, which they did not do.

In denying the defendants' motion, the court noted that: 1) the sub-account fund names were very nearly identical to the names of the retail funds, giving rise to potential investor confusion; 2) the initial registration statement (although subsequently amended before effectiveness) stated that two of the sub-account funds would be managed in the same style as their corresponding retail funds and would include many of the same securities; 3) some confirmation statements consistently referred to the investment as the retail fund; and 4) marketing material for the variable contracts referred to certain sub-accounts using the name of the retail funds and included performance figures for the retail funds.

[ii] Fund Investments.

[A] Unauthorized Investments. In In re Alliance North American Government Income Trust, Inc. Securities Litigation, n10 a district court dismissed a class action alleging inadequate disclosure filed by investors in a fund whose net asset value declined substantially when the Mexican government devalued the peso in December 1994. The court stated that the key inquiry in determining whether a prospectus is materially misleading is whether the defendant's representations, taken together and in context, would have misled a reasonable investor about the nature of the investment. n11

Among others, the court addressed the plaintiff's claim that the fund's hedging practices and the availability of hedging devices were misrepresented. The plaintiff charged that the fund falsely reassured investors that the fund would protect itself from significant harm to its assets from currency fluctuations by using hedging techniques. The defendants countered, stating that: (1) the fund never made any assurance that it would use hedging devices (e.g., futures, options or forward contracts) to protect against currency fluctuations; and (2) the prospectus only referred to the possibility of hedging the fund's foreign investments but clearly stated there was no certainty such devices would be used. The court stated that phrasing an investment strategy in terms of possibilities, standing alone, is insufficient warning to shareholders of the risk of whether hedging devices would be used. However, the court ruled against the plaintiff, based on its finding that, in combination with other warnings contained in the prospectus and SAI, a reasonable investor should have been fully apprised of the risks that the fund would be unable to hedge effectively foreign currency risk.

On appeal, the Second Circuit Court of Appeals agreed that the fund's representations concerning the availability of hedging devices, taken together and in context, could have misled a reasonable investor. According to the court, cautionary language in the prospectus warned only that the fund's hedging maneuvers might fail, not that the fund would have no opportunity to use hedging maneuvers under the economic conditions then prevailing. On remand, the district court granted the fund's motion for summary judgment, finding that plaintiff's assertion that the fund had no opportunity to use hedging maneuvers was untenable.

[B] Mortgage-Backed Securities. In Schaefer v. Overland Express Family of Funds n12 the plaintiffs alleged that a mutual fund's investments in collateralized mortgage obligations ("CMOs") were based on false and misleading prospectus disclosure. Specifically, the plaintiffs claimed the fund failed to disclose that it could sell CMOs and incur a permanent loss, or that the fund's investments bore, among others, liquidity risk (the risk that CMO values, and their marketability, become impaired if interest rates rise), and extension risk (the possibility that rising interest rates may cause prepayments of underlying mortgages to occur at a slower than expected rate, thereby causing shorter-term securities to convert to longer-term securities that have greater price fluctuations).

In dismissing the plaintiffs' claims, the district court concluded that the alleged omissions and misrepresentations, when compared to the prospectus's risk disclosures, were immaterial under the "bespeaks caution" doctrine. n13 In particular, the court noted that the prospectus had warned of the risks of principal loss and that the fund had the ability to sell securities at a loss. The court also pointed out that disclosure of the fund's annual turnover rate of up to 250 percent put the plaintiffs on notice that the fund would be buying and selling securities (including CMOs). Moreover, the court reasoned that the possibility that a fund might and would sell certain securities at a loss is a fact that any reasonable investor would know and even presume. As to the allegations of inadequate disclosure about specific types of interest rate risk, the court concluded that such disclosure was immaterial because the alleged omitted risks are merely a subset of the primary risk attendant with these types of investments: namely, interest rate risk. The court noted that the fund's prospectus disclosed in detail the risks associated with interest rate fluctuations and limitations on interest rate adjustments, including the affect interest rate caps and adjustable rates have on the value of CMOs. n14

In In re TCW/DW North American Government Income Trust Securities Litigation, n15 shareholders of an open-end mutual fund brought a class action alleging that the defendants' prospectus was misleading. The plaintiffs claimed that, with respect to the fund's investments in mortgage-backed securities, the prospectus failed to alert investors of "extension risk" and the effect it might have on the fund's policy of generally maintaining a market value dollar-weighted average portfolio life of no greater than three years.

The defendants sought to dismiss the complaint on the basis that, even though the term "extension risk" was not used, the prospectus disclosed the nature, causes and consequences of such risk and that the prospectus "bespoke caution" about the various risks arising from a change in interest rates. The court held that the extension risk disclosure could be important to a reasonable investor and, therefore, dismissed the defendants' motion to dismiss. The court explained that even though the prospectus disclosed the fact that prepayments may slow when interest rates rise, the prospectus did not disclose the consequences of this statement--namely, that this event could change a short-term security into a longer-term security with the potential for greater price fluctuation. n16 In the court's view, extension risk is apparently limited to, and therefore relevant to a discussion about, mortgage-backed securities.

In Sheppard v. TCW/DW Term Trust 2000, n17 the court granted a defendant's motion to dismiss a class action suit brought against a closed-end fund alleging inadequate disclosure about the extent of the fund's reliance on mortgage-backed securities and the magnitude of the risk related to an increase in interest rates. The court found the prospectus to be adequate, warning potential investors of a rise in interest rates--the very risk that came to pass.

In Olkey v. Hyperion 1999 Term Trust, Inc., n18 plaintiffs appealed a lower court's dismissal of their class action against a group of closed-end investment companies investing primarily in mortgage-backed securities. The plaintiffs claimed that the defendants had misstated the fund's investment strategy by purporting to design a balanced portfolio that would attempt to remain interest rate-neutral, when in fact the portfolio favored rising interest rates. The plaintiffs also claimed that the defendants had failed to disclose the limitations of the use of mortgage-backed securities, which tend to go down when interest rates go up, as a hedge against investments in interest-only strips of mortgages ("IOs"), which tend to go up with interest rates, when rates decline. Finally, the plaintiffs claimed that the defendants had misrepresented the riskiness of the funds in "roadshow" presentations given to potential broker-dealers. During the period of time in which the misrepresentations were alleged to occur, interest rates declined to historic lows, resulting in a drop in the value of the funds' shares.

The appellate court affirmed dismissal of each of the plaintiffs' claims, concluding that when cautionary language contained in the prospectus is read together, the prospectus disclosure "bespeaks caution."

The court also found that, although not disclosed expressly, the prospectus implicitly and clearly communicated a bias in favor of rising interest rates. The court noted extensive prospectus disclosure about the nature and risks of mortgage-backed securities, including disclosure clearly indicating that, unlike traditional debt securities, a drop in interest rates may have a negative affect on the value of mortgage-backed securities (as well as increasing price and yield volatility) because of the likely increase in prepayment rates.

Based on this disclosure taken as a whole, the court determined a reasonable investor would have concluded that the investment objectives could only be achieved if interest rates rose more than they fell. Regarding the claim of inadequate hedging strategy disclosure, the court referenced prospectus disclosure, under the heading "Risk Factors," that precisely described the scenario that occurred. Furthermore, the court concluded that the representations made at "roadshows" were immaterial because they were contradicted by the plain and prominently displayed language in the prospectuses.

Finally, implying that the plaintiffs appeared to have brought suit merely because their investments had turned out badly, the court stated that the fact that a fund's investment manager makes a wrong call on the direction of the markets is not, in and of itself, a basis for a federal securities law claim. n19

In In re Fundamental Portfolio Advisors, Inc., Lance M. Brofman, and Fundamental Service Corporation, n20 a SEC administrative law judge, among others, found in an initial decision that respondents violated the antifraud provisions of the federal securities laws by marketing shares of a government bond fund as a safe, stable investment when in fact the fund was invested heavily in volatile inverse floating collateralized mortgage obligations that exposed the fund to significant losses when interest rates rose in 1994. The Fundamental U.S. Government Strategic Income Fund (the "Fund") is a no-load, open-end mutual fund created in early 1992. According to the Fund's original prospectus, and the way in which the Fund was marketed, the Fund's investment objective was designed to achieve high current income with minimum risk of principal and relative stability of net asset value. The prospectus further disclosed that the Fund would seek its objective by investing in securities issued or guaranteed by the U.S. Government having high current yields, and by limiting the duration of the Fund's portfolio to three years or less through hedging, including investments and options. The sales brochures for the Fund emphasized safety, containing for example statements in large, boldface type such as "Earn High Yields With Maximum Safety" and frequent references to the safety of U.S. Government securities. The Fund's three-year duration was emphasized as well as an important means for reducing volatility caused by interest rate fluctuations.

Faced with poor performance, the Fund's management caused the Fund to invest up to approximately 30 percent of the Fund's assets in inverse floaters, for the period from approximately March 1993 through 1994. Although these investments initially had a positive impact on the Fund's performance, in February 1994, when the Federal Reserve Board raised interest rates, the Fund's investment in inverse floaters (the coupon for which decreases as interest rates increase) contributed significantly to an approximate 32 percent drop in the Fund's net asset value. Prior to May 1994, the Fund's prospectus did not contain any risk disclosure concerning inverse floaters.

The administrative law judge found that, as a result of the Fund's inverse floater investments, the Fund's duration materially exceeded what was represented as the safe, stable figure of three, and that the standard the Fund's management used to determine duration did not measure the interest rate volatility of the Fund's portfolio, a fact known to management. The judge also found that, contrary to the prospectus, the Fund was unable to hedge the Fund's inverse floater investments using futures and options. Because the Fund's management could not quantify the sensitivity of floaters to the changes in interest rates and prepayments, the management could not determine the proper hedge position. Notwithstanding, the Fund's management knowingly continued to use misleading sales materials to market the Fund that emphasized high returns with maximum safety, supported by the claim of the Fund's three-year duration level. Based on these findings, the judge ordered the respondents to cease and desist from violations of the antifraud provisions, barred the named individual from association with an investment adviser or broker-dealer, revoked the investment adviser and broker-dealer registrations of the two registered entities and fined the individual $250,000 and the two other respondents $500,000 each.

[iii] Conversion of a Closed-End Fund to an Open-End Fund. In Finkel v. Putnam Convertible Opportunities and Income Trust,ⁿ²¹ the district court denied a plaintiff's motion to reargue the court's earlier dismissal of a suit alleging that a closed-end fund's prospectus essentially guaranteed that the fund would commence a share repurchase program or put the issue of converting to an open-end fund to shareholder vote in certain circumstances.

Because the fund's prospectus provided that the fund merely will consider conversion and warned that the fund has no present intention of taking such actions, the court found that no reasonable investor would have believed the prospectus to guarantee either that a share repurchase program would be recommended or that a shareholder vote to convert would occur.ⁿ²²

One of the most significant challenges facing regulators and the fund industry is the nature and extent of the disclosure that funds should make in their prospectuses. Although SEC registration statements are fairly precise in terms of the topics that need to be covered in a prospectus, by necessity each fund generally must determine the quality and quantity of the disclosure needed to describe its unique characteristics.

Because the fund marketplace is in a constant state of flux, and because a fund itself may change or introduce new investment strategies or policies, the SEC staff has emphasized that funds cannot rely on the SEC or its staff to identify these changing areas or to assess whether, and to what extent, changes in prospectus disclosure are needed (although over the years regulators have not hesitated to require additional disclosure about areas of concern to them).ⁿ²³ Rather, it is a fund's responsibility on an ongoing basis to analyze fund risk and review prospectus risk disclosure, and to update prospectus disclosure when appropriate.ⁿ²⁴

In a 1990 letter to funds, the staff stated that, in light of the substantial decline in high-yield bond prices during the preceding weeks, the staff believed it would be misleading for a fund whose yield reflected a substantial risk premium to promote the sale of fund shares without providing a thorough explanation of the reason for the high yields. See Letter from Gene A. Gohlke, Acting Director, Division of Investment Management, SEC, to Investment Company Registrants (Oct. 16, 1990). The staff observed that the higher yields resulting from these price declines reflected the risk of principal loss rather than the income stream that investors could expect. The staff expressed concern that bond fund investors might make investment decisions by comparing junk bond yields to those of bank instruments, money market funds, and funds investing in investment grade debt and suggested, among other things, that junk bond funds that use advertisements consider excluding yield quotations or prominently accompanying them with an explanation of the limitations and risks involved. See Letter from Gene A. [N]o fund prospectus can begin to describe all the myriad risks to which investments may be subject. To require lengthy, extensive and detailed disclosures of every potential risk an investor faces would be to encourage excessive and possibly mind-numbing disclosures that lose their informative value in the eyes of the market place and the investor. Too much disclosure would be as much of an evil as too little.

Hyperion 1999 Term Trust, Inc.*, 98 F. 3d 2 (2nd Cir. 1996) [hereinafter cited as "Hyperion 1999 Term Trust"]. Based on the decision in Hyperion 1999 Term Trust, a Second Circuit decision affirming the dismissal of a complaint against another mortgage-backed securities fund involving alleged inadequate risk disclosure (discussed below), the TCW court considered, but denied, a renewed motion to dismiss the TCW class action. See In re TCW/DW North American Government Income Trust Securities Litigation (S.D.N.Y. 1997). The TCW court distinguished the facts of this case from the facts in Hyperion 1999 Term Trust and Schaefer, concluding that extension risk disclosure was more important in TCW than in the other two cases because of the TCW fund's policy of maintaining a portfolio of securities with a short average life. The court stated that it could be a material omission to fail to disclose that a fund expecting to maintain a portfolio of short-term securities could, during a time of rising interest rates, have a portfolio of securities with a much longer life.

GENERAL INSTRUCTIONS

A. Definitions

References to sections and rules in this Form N-1A are to the Investment Company Act of 1940 [15 U.S.C. 80a-1 et seq.] (the "Investment Company Act"), unless otherwise indicated. Terms used in this Form N-1A have the same meaning as in the Investment Company Act or the related rules, unless otherwise indicated. As used in this Form N-1A, the terms set out below have the following meanings:

"Class" means a class of shares issued by a Multiple Class Fund that represents interests in the same portfolio of securities under rule 18f-3 [17 CFR 270.18f-3] or under an order exempting the Multiple Class Fund from sections 18(f), 18(g), and 18(i) [15 U.S.C. 80a-18(f), 18(g), and 18(i)].

"Exchange-Traded Fund" means a Fund or Class, the shares of which are traded on a national securities exchange, and that has formed and operates pursuant to an exemptive order granted by the Commission or in reliance on an exemptive rule adopted by the Commission.

"Fund" means the Registrant or a separate Series of the Registrant. When an item of Form N-1A specifically applies to a Registrant or a Series, those terms will be used.

"Market Price" refers to the last reported sale price at which Exchange-Traded Fund shares trade on the principal U.S. market on which the Fund's shares are traded during a regular trading session or, if it more accurately reflects the current market value of the Fund's shares at the time the Fund uses to calculate its net asset value, a price within the range of the highest bid and lowest offer on the principal U.S. market on which the Fund's shares are traded during a regular trading session.

"Master-Feeder Fund" means a two-tiered arrangement in which one or more Funds (each a "Feeder Fund") holds shares of a single Fund (the "Master Fund") in accordance with section 12(d)(1)(E) [15 U.S.C. 80a-12(d)(1)(E)].

"Money Market Fund" means a Fund that holds itself out as money market fund and meets the maturity, quality, and diversification requirements of rule 2a-7 [17 CFR 270.2a-7].

"Multiple Class Fund" means a Fund that has more than one Class.

2-7B Federal Securities Act of 1933 Scope

"Registrant" means an open-end management investment company registered under the Investment Company Act.

"SAI" means the Statement of Additional Information required by Part B of this Form.

"Securities Act" means the Securities Act of 1933 [15 U.S.C. 77a et seq.].

"Securities Exchange Act" means the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 [15 U.S.C. 78a et seq.].

"Series" means shares offered by a Registrant that represent undivided interests in a portfolio of investments and that are preferred over all other series of shares for assets specifically allocated to that series in accordance with rule 18f-2(a) [17 CFR 270.18f-2(a)].

B. Filing and Use of Form N-1A

1. What is Form N-1A used for?

Form N-1A is used by Funds, except insurance company separate accounts and small business investment companies licensed under the United States Small Business Administration, to file:

(a) An initial registration statement under the Investment Company Act and amendments to the registration statement, including amendments required by rule 8b-16 [17 CFR 270.8b-16];

(b) An initial registration statement under the Securities Act and amendments to the registration statement, including amendments required by section 10(a)(3) of the Securities Act [15 U.S.C. 77j(a)(3)]; or

(c) Any combination of the filings in paragraph (a) or (b).

2. What is included in the registration statement?

(a) For registration statements or amendments filed under both the Investment Company Act and the Securities Act or only under the Securities Act, include the facing sheet of the Form, Parts A, B, and C, and the required signatures.

(b) For registration statements or amendments filed only under the Investment Company Act, include the facing sheet of the Form, responses to all Items of Parts A (except Items 1, 2, 3, 4 and 13), B, and C (except Items 28(e) and (i) - (k)), and the required signatures.

3. What are the fees for Form N-1A?

No registration fees are required with the filing of Form N-1A to register as an investment company under the Investment Company Act or to register securities under the Securities Act. See section 24(f) [15 U.S.C. 80a-24f-2] and related rule 24f-2 [17 CFR 270.24f-2].

4. What rules apply to the filing of a registration statement on Form N-1A?

(a) For registration statements and amendments filed under both the Investment Company Act and the Securities Act or only under the Securities Act, the general rules regarding the filing of registration statements in Regulation C under the Securities Act [17 CFR 230.400 - 230.497] apply to the filing of Form N-1A. Specific requirements concerning Funds appear in rules 480 - 485 and 495 - 497 of Regulation C.

(b) For registration statements and amendments filed only under the Investment Company Act, the general provisions in rules 8b-1 - 8b-33 [17 CFR 270.8b-1 - 270.8b-33] apply to the filing of Form N-1A.

(c) The plain English requirements of rule 421 under the Securities Act [17 CFR 230.421] apply to prospectus disclosure in Part A of Form N-1A. The information required by Items 2 through 8 must be provided in plain English under rule 421(d) under the Securities Act.

(d) Regulation S-T [17 CFR 232.10 - 232.903] applies to all filings on the Commission's Electronic Data Gathering, Analysis, and Retrieval system ("EDGAR").

C. Preparation of the Registration Statement1. Administration of the Form N-1A requirements:

(a) The requirements of Form N-1A are intended to promote effective communication between the Fund and prospective investors. A Fund's prospectus should clearly disclose the fundamental characteristics and investment risks of the Fund, using concise, straightforward, and easy to understand language. A Fund should use document design techniques that promote effective communication. The prospectus should emphasize the Fund's overall investment approach and strategy.

(b) The prospectus disclosure requirements in Form N-1A are intended to elicit information for an average or typical investor who may not be sophisticated in legal or financial matters. The prospectus should help investors to evaluate the risks of an investment and to decide whether to invest in a Fund by providing a balanced disclosure of positive and negative factors. Disclosure in the prospectus should be designed to assist an investor in comparing and contrasting the Fund with other funds.

(c) Responses to the Items in Form N-1A should be as simple and direct as reasonably possible and should include only as much information as is necessary to enable an average or typical investor to understand the particular characteristics of the Fund. The prospectus should avoid: including lengthy legal and technical discussions; simply restating legal or regulatory requirements to which Funds generally are subject; and disproportionately emphasizing possible investments or activities of the Fund that are not a significant part of the Fund's investment operations. Brevity is especially important in describing the practices or aspects of the Fund's operations that do not differ materially from those of other investment companies. Avoid excessive detail, technical or legal terminology, and complex language. Also avoid lengthy sentences and paragraphs that may make the prospectus difficult for many investors to understand and detract from its usefulness.

(d) The requirements for prospectuses included in Form N-1A will be administered by the Commission in a way that will allow variances in disclosure or presentation if appropriate for the circumstances involved while remaining consistent with the objectives of Form N-1A.

2. Form N-1A is divided into three parts:

(a) Part A. Part A includes the information required in a Fund's prospectus under section 10(a) of the Securities Act. The purpose of the prospectus is to provide essential information about the Fund in a way that will help investors to make informed decisions about whether to purchase the Fund's shares described in the prospectus. In responding to the Items in Part A, avoid cross-references to the SAI or shareholder reports. Cross-references within the prospectus are most useful when their use assists investors in understanding the information presented and does not add complexity to the prospectus.

(b) Part B. Part B includes the information required in a Fund's SAI. The purpose of the SAI is to provide additional information about the Fund that the Commission has concluded is not necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors to be in the prospectus, but that some investors may find useful. Part B affords the Fund an opportunity to expand discussions of the matters described in the prospectus by including additional information that the Fund believes may be of interest to some investors. The Fund should not duplicate in the SAI information that is provided in the prospectus, unless necessary to make the SAI comprehensible as a document independent of the prospectus.

(c) Part C. Part C includes other information required in a Fund's registration statement.

3. Additional Matters:

(a) Organization of Information. Organize the information in the prospectus and SAI to make it easy for investors to understand. Notwithstanding rule 421(a) under the Securities Act regarding the order of information required in a prospectus, disclose the information required by Items 2 through 8 in numerical order at the front of the prospectus. Do not precede these Items with any other Item except the Cover Page (Item 1) or a table of contents meeting the requirements of rule 481(c) under the Securities Act. Information that is included in response to Items 2 through 8 need not be repeated elsewhere in the prospectus. Disclose the information required by Item 12 (Distribution Arrangements) in one place in the prospectus.

2-7B Federal Securities Act of 1933 Scope

(b) Other Information. A Fund may include, except in response to Items 2 through 8, information in the prospectus or the SAI that is not otherwise required. For example, a Fund may include charts, graphs, or tables so long as the information is not incomplete, inaccurate, or misleading and does not, because of its nature, quantity, or manner of presentation, obscure or impede understanding of the information that is required to be included. Items 2 through 8 may not include disclosure other than that required or permitted by those Items.

(c) Use of Form N-1A by More Than One Registrant, Series, or Class. Form N-1A may be used by one or more Registrants, Series, or Classes.

(i) When disclosure is provided for more than one Fund or Class, the disclosure should be presented in a format designed to communicate the information effectively. Except as required by paragraph (c)(ii) for Items 2 through 8, Funds may order or group the response to any Item in any manner that organizes the information into readable and comprehensible segments and is consistent with the intent of the prospectus to provide clear and concise information about the Funds or Classes. Funds are encouraged to use, as appropriate, tables, side-by-side comparisons, captions, bullet points, or other organizational techniques when presenting disclosure for multiple Funds or Classes.

(ii) Paragraph (a) requires Funds to disclose the information required by Items 2 through 8 in numerical order at the front of the prospectus and not to precede Items 2 through 8 with other information. Except as permitted by paragraph (c)(iii), a prospectus that contains information about more than one Fund must present all of the information required by Items 2 through 8 for each Fund sequentially and may not integrate the information for more than one Fund together. That is, a prospectus must present all of the information for a particular Fund that is required by Items 2 through 8 together, followed by all of the information for each additional Fund, and may not, for example, present all of the Item 2 (Risk/Return Summary: Investment Objectives/Goals) information for several Funds followed by all of the Item 3 (Risk/Return Summary: Fee Table) information for several Funds. If a prospectus contains information about multiple Funds, clearly identify the name of the relevant Fund at the beginning of the information for the Fund that is required by Items 2 through 8. A Multiple Class Fund may present the information required by Items 2 through 8 separately for each Class or may integrate the information for multiple Classes, although the order of the information must be as prescribed in Items 2 through 8. For example, the prospectus may present all of the Item 2 (Risk/Return Summary: Investment Objectives/Goals) information for several Classes followed by all of the Item 3 (Risk/Return Summary: Fee Table) information for the Classes, or may present Items 2 and 3 for each of several Classes sequentially. Other presentations of multiple Class information also would be acceptable if they are consistent with the Form's intent to disclose the information required by Items 2 through 8 in a standard order at the beginning of the prospectus. For a Multiple Class Fund, clearly identify the relevant Classes at the beginning of the Items 2 through 8 information for those Classes.

(iii) A prospectus that contains information about more than one Fund may integrate the information required by any of Items 6 through 8 for all of the Funds together, provided that the information contained in any Item that is integrated is identical for all Funds covered in the prospectus. If the information required by any of Items 6 through 8 is integrated pursuant to this paragraph, the integrated information should be presented immediately following the separate presentations of Item 2 through 8 information for individual Funds. In addition, include a statement containing the following information in each Fund's separate presentation of Item 2 through 8 information, in the location where the integrated information is omitted: "For important information about [purchase and sale of fund shares,] [tax information,] and [financial intermediary compensation], please turn to [identify section heading and page number of prospectus]."

(d) Modified Prospectuses for Certain Funds.

(i) A Fund may modify or omit, if inapplicable, the information required by Items 6, 11(b)-(d) and 12(a)(2)-(5) for funds used as investment options for:

(A) a defined contribution plan that meets the requirements for qualification under section 401(k) of the Internal Revenue Code (26 U.S.C. 401(k));

(B) a tax-deferred arrangement under sections 403(b) or 457 of the Internal Revenue Code (26 U.S.C. 403(b) and 457); and

(C) a variable contract as defined in section 817(d) of the Internal Revenue Code (26 U.S.C. 817(d)), if covered in a separate account prospectus.

(ii) A Fund that uses a modified prospectus under Instruction (d)(i) may:

(A) alter the legend required on the back cover page by Item 1(b)(1) to state, as applicable, that the prospectus is intended for use in connection with a defined contribution plan, tax-deferred arrangement, or variable contract; and

(B) modify other disclosure in the prospectus consistent with offering the Fund as a specific investment option for a defined contribution plan, tax-deferred arrangement, or variable contract.

(iii) A Fund may omit the information required by Items 4(b)(2)(iii)(B) and (C) and 4(b)(2)(iv) if the Fund's prospectus will be used exclusively to offer Fund shares as investment options for one or more of the following:

(A) a defined contribution plan that meets the requirements for qualification under section 401(k) of the Internal Revenue Code (26 U.S.C. 401(k)), a tax-deferred arrangement under section 403(b) or 457 of the Internal Revenue Code (26 U.S.C. 403(b) or 457), a variable contract as defined in section 817(d) of the Internal Revenue Code (26 U.S.C. 817(d)), or a similar plan or arrangement pursuant to which an investor is not taxed on his or her investment in the Fund until the investment is sold; or

(B) persons that are not subject to the federal income tax imposed under section 1 of the Internal Revenue Code (26 U.S.C. 1), or any successor to that section.

(iv) A Fund that omits information under Instruction (d)(iii) may alter the legend required on the back cover page by Item 1(b)(1) to state, as applicable, that the prospectus is intended for use in connection with a defined contribution plan, tax-deferred arrangement, variable contract, or similar plan or arrangement, or persons described in Instruction (d)(iii)(B).

(e) Dates. Rule 423 under the Securities Act [17 CFR 230.423] applies to the dates of the prospectus and the SAI. The SAI should be made available at the same time that the prospectus becomes available for purposes of rules 430 and 460 under the Securities Act [17 CFR 230.430 and 230.460].

(f) Sales Literature. A Fund may include sales literature in the prospectus so long as the amount of this information does not add substantial length to the prospectus and its placement does not obscure essential disclosure.

D. Incorporation by Reference

1. Specific rules for incorporation by reference in Form N-1A:

(a) A Fund may not incorporate by reference into a prospectus information that Part A of this Form requires to be included in a prospectus, except as specifically permitted by Part A of the Form.

(b) A Fund may incorporate by reference any or all of the SAI into the prospectus (but not to provide any information required by Part A to be included in the prospectus) without delivering the SAI with the prospectus.

(c) A Fund may incorporate by reference into the SAI or its response to Part C, information that Parts B and C require to be included in the Fund's registration statement.

2. General Requirements:

All incorporation by reference must comply with the requirements of this Form and the following rules on incorporation by reference: rule 10(d) of Regulation S-K under the Securities Act [17 CFR 229.10(d)] (general rules on incorporation by reference, which, among other things, prohibit, unless specifically required by this Form, incorporating by reference a document that includes incorporation by reference to another document, and limits incorporation to

(2) The exchange ticker symbol of the Fund's shares or, if the prospectus relates to one or more Classes of the Fund's shares, adjacent to each such Class, the exchange ticker symbol of such Class of the Fund's shares. If the Fund is an Exchange-Traded Fund, also identify the principal U.S. market or markets on which the Fund shares are traded.

(3) The date of the prospectus.

(4) The statement required by rule 481(b)(1) under the Securities Act.

2-7B Federal Securities Act of 1933 PART A

(b) Back Cover Page. Include the following information, in plain English under rule 421(d) under the Securities Act, on the outside back cover page of the prospectus:

(1) A statement that the SAI includes additional information about the Fund, and a statement to the following effect:

Additional information about the Fund's investments is available in the Fund's annual and semi-annual reports to shareholders. In the Fund's annual report, you will find a discussion of the market conditions and investment strategies that significantly affected the Fund's performance during its last fiscal year.

Explain that the SAI and the Fund's annual and semi-annual reports are available, without charge, upon request, and explain how shareholders in the Fund may make inquiries to the Fund. Provide a toll-free (or collect) telephone number for investors to call: to request the SAI; to request the Fund's annual report; to request the Fund's semi-annual report; to request other information about the Fund; and to make shareholder inquiries. Also, state whether the Fund makes available its SAI and annual and semi-annual reports, free of charge, on or through the Fund's Web site at a specified Internet address. If the Fund does not make its SAI and shareholder reports available in this manner, disclose the reasons why it does not do so (including, where applicable, that the Fund does not have an Internet Web site).

Instructions.

1. A Fund may indicate, if applicable, that the SAI, annual and semi-annual reports, and other information are available by E-mail request.

2. A Fund may indicate, if applicable, that the SAI and other information are available from a financial intermediary (such as a broker-dealer or bank) through which shares of the Fund may be purchased or sold.

3. When a Fund (or financial intermediary through which shares of the Fund may be purchased or sold) receives a request for the SAI, the annual report, or the semi-annual report, the Fund (or financial intermediary) must send the requested document within 3 business days of receipt of the request, by first-class mail or other means designed to ensure equally prompt delivery.

4. A Fund that has not yet been required to deliver an annual or semi-annual report to shareholders under rule 30e-1 [17 CFR 270.30e-1] may omit the statements required by this paragraph regarding the reports.

5. A Money Market Fund may omit the sentence indicating that a reader will find in the Fund's annual report a discussion of the market conditions and investment strategies that significantly affect the Fund's performance during its last fiscal year.

2-7B Federal Securities Act of 1933 PART A

(2) A statement whether and from where information is incorporated by reference into the prospectus as permitted by General Instruction D. Unless the information is delivered with the prospectus, explain that the Fund will provide the information without charge, upon request (referring to the telephone number provided in response to paragraph (b)(1)).

Instruction. The Fund may combine the information about incorporation by reference with the statements required under paragraph (b)(1).

(3) A statement that information about the Fund (including the SAI) can be reviewed and copied at the Commission's Public Reference Room in Washington, D.C., and that information on the operation of the Public Reference Room may be obtained by calling the Commission at 1-202-551-8090. State that reports and other information about the Fund are available on the EDGAR Database on the Commission's Internet site at <http://www.sec.gov>, and that copies of this information may be obtained, after paying a duplicating fee, by electronic request at the following E-mail address: publicinfo@sec.gov, or by writing the Commission's Public Reference Section, Washington, D.C. 20549-1520.

(4) The Fund's Investment Company Act file number on the bottom of the back cover page in type size smaller than that generally used in the prospectus (e.g., 8-point modern type).

Item 2. Risk/Return Summary: Investment Objectives/Goals

Disclose the Fund's investment objectives or goals. A Fund also may identify its type or category (e.g., that it is a Money Market Fund or a balanced fund).

Item 3. Risk/Return Summary: Fee Table

Include the following information, in plain English under rule 421(d) under the Securities Act, after Item 2:

Fees and expenses of the Fund

This table describes the fees and expenses that you may pay if you buy and hold shares of the Fund. You may qualify for sales charge discounts if you and your family invest, or agree to invest in the future, at least $[ _____] in [name of fund family] funds. More information about these and other discounts is available from your financial professional and in [identify section heading and page number] of the Fund's prospectus and [identify section heading and page number] of the Fund's statement of additional information.

Example

This Example is intended to help you compare the cost of investing in the Fund with the cost of investing in other mutual funds.

The Example assumes that you invest $10,000 in the Fund for the time periods indicated and then redeem all of your shares at the end of those periods. The Example also assumes that your investment has a 5% return each year and that the Fund's operating expenses remain the same. Although your actual costs may be higher or lower, based on these assumptions your costs would be:

1 year	3 years	5 years	10 years
$	$	$	$
_____	_____	_____	_____
_____	_____	_____	_____
_____	_____	_____	_____
_____	_____	_____	_____

You would pay the following expenses if you did not redeem your shares:

1 year	3 years	5 years	10 years
$	$	$	$
_____	_____	_____	_____

_____ — — — — —

The Example does not reflect sales charges (loads) on reinvested dividends [and other distributions]. If these sales charges (loads) were included, your costs would be higher.

Portfolio Turnover

The Fund pays transaction costs, such as commissions, when it buys and sells securities (or "turns over" its portfolio). A higher portfolio turnover rate may indicate higher transaction costs and may result in higher taxes when Fund shares are held in a taxable account. These costs, which are not reflected in annual fund operating expenses or in the example, affect the Fund's performance. During the most recent fiscal year, the Fund's portfolio turnover rate was _____ % of the average value of its portfolio.

Instructions.

1. General.

(a) Round all dollar figures to the nearest dollar and all percentages to the nearest hundredth of one percent.

(b) Include the narrative explanations in the order indicated. A Fund may modify the narrative explanations if the explanation contains comparable information to that shown. The narrative explanation regarding sales charge discounts is only required by a Fund that offers such discounts and should specify the minimum level of investment required to qualify for a discount as disclosed in the table required by Item 12(a)(1).

(c) Include the caption "Maximum Account Fees" only if the Fund charges these fees. A Fund may omit other captions if the Fund does not charge the fees or expenses covered by the captions.

(i) If the Fund is a Feeder Fund, reflect the aggregate expenses of the Feeder Fund and the Master Fund in a single fee table using the captions provided. In a footnote to the fee table, state that the table and Example reflect the expenses of both the Feeder and Master Funds.

(ii) If the prospectus offers more than one Class of a Multiple Class Fund or more than one Feeder Fund that invests in the same Master Fund, provide a separate response for each Class or Feeder Fund.

(e) If the Fund is an Exchange-Traded Fund,

(i) Modify the narrative explanation to state that investors may pay brokerage commissions on their purchases and sales of Exchange-Traded Fund shares, which are not reflected in the example; and

(ii) If the Fund issues or redeems shares in creation units of not less than 25,000 shares each, exclude any fees charged for the purchase and redemption of the Fund's creation units.

2. Shareholder Fees.

(i) "Maximum Deferred Sales Charge (Load)" includes the maximum total deferred sales charge (load) payable upon redemption, in installments, or both, expressed as a percentage of the amount or amounts stated in response to Item 12(a), except that, for a sales charge (load) based on net asset value at the time of purchase, show the sales charge (load) as a percentage of the offering price at the time of purchase. A Fund may include in a footnote to the table, if applicable, a tabular presentation showing the amount of deferred sales charges (loads) over time or a narrative explanation of the sales charges (loads) (e.g., _____% in the first year after purchase, declining to _____% in the _____ year and eliminated thereafter).

(ii) If more than one type of sales charge (load) is imposed (e.g., a deferred sales charge (load) and a front-end sales charge (load)), the first caption in the table should read "Maximum Sales Charge (Load)" and show the maximum cumulative percentage. Show the percentage amounts and the terms of each sales charge (load) comprising that figure on separate lines below.

(iii) If a sales charge (load) is imposed on shares purchased with reinvested capital gains distributions or returns of capital, include the bracketed words in the third caption.

(b) "Redemption Fee" includes a fee charged for any redemption of the Fund's shares, but does not include a deferred sales charge (load) imposed upon redemption.

(c) "Exchange Fee" includes the maximum fee charged for any exchange or transfer of interest from the Fund to another fund. The Fund may include in a footnote to the table, if applicable, a tabular presentation of the range of exchange fees or a narrative explanation of the fees.

(d) "Maximum Account Fees." Disclose account fees that may be charged to a typical investor in the Fund; fees that apply to only a limited number of shareholders based on their particular circumstances need not be disclosed. Include a caption describing the maximum account fee (e.g., "Maximum Account Maintenance Fee" or "Maximum Cash Management Fee"). State the maximum annual account fee as either a fixed dollar amount or a percentage of assets. Include in a parenthetical to the caption the basis on which any percentage is calculated. If an account fee is charged only to accounts that do not meet a certain threshold (e.g., accounts under $5,000), the Fund may include the threshold in a parenthetical to the caption or footnote to the table. The Fund may include an explanation of any non-recurring account fee in a parenthetical to the caption or in a footnote to the table.

3. Annual Fund Operating Expenses.

(a) "Management Fees" include investment advisory fees (including any fees based on the Fund's performance), any other management fees payable to the investment adviser or its affiliates, and administrative fees payable to the investment adviser or its affiliates that are not included as "Other Expenses."

(b) "Distribution [and/or Service] (12b-1) Fees" include all distribution or other expenses incurred during the most recent fiscal year under a plan adopted pursuant to rule 12b-1 [17 CFR 270.12b-1]. Under an appropriate caption or a subcaption of "Other Expenses," disclose the amount of any distribution or similar expenses deducted from the Fund's assets other than pursuant to a rule 12b-1 plan.

(i) "Other Expenses" include all expenses not otherwise disclosed in the table that are deducted from the Fund's assets or charged to all shareholder accounts. The amount of expenses deducted from the Fund's assets are the amounts shown as expenses in the Fund's statement of operations (including increases resulting from complying with paragraph 2(g) of rule 6-07 of Regulation S-X [17 CFR 210.6-07]).

(ii) "Other Expenses" do not include extraordinary expenses as determined under generally accepted accounting principles (see Accounting Principles Board Opinion No. 30). If extraordinary expenses were incurred that materially affected the Fund's "Other Expenses," disclose in a footnote to the table what "Other Expenses" would have been had the extraordinary expenses been included.

(iii) The Fund may subdivide this caption into no more than three subcaptions that identify the largest expense or expenses comprising "Other Expenses," but must include a total of all "Other Expenses." Alternatively, the Fund may include the components of "Other Expenses" in a parenthetical to the caption.

(d)

(i) Base the percentages of "Annual Fund Operating Expenses" on amounts incurred during the Fund's most recent fiscal year, but include in expenses amounts that would have been incurred absent expense reimbursement or fee waiver arrangements. If the Fund has changed its fiscal year and, as a result, the most recent fiscal year is less than three months, use the fiscal year prior to the most recent fiscal year as the basis for determining "Annual Fund Operating Expenses."

(ii) If there have been any changes in "Annual Fund Operating Expenses" that would materially affect the information disclosed in the table:

(A) Restate the expense information using the current fees as if they had been in effect during the previous fiscal year; and

(B) In a footnote to the table, disclose that the expense information in the table has been restated to reflect current fees.

(iii) A change in "Annual Fund Operating Expenses" means either an increase or a decrease in expenses that occurred during the most recent fiscal year or that is expected to occur during the current fiscal year. A change in "Annual Fund Operating Expenses" does not include a decrease in operating expenses as a percentage of assets due to economies of scale or breakpoints in a fee arrangement resulting from an increase in the Fund's assets.

(e) If there are expense reimbursement or fee waiver arrangements that will reduce any Fund operating expenses for no less than one year from the effective date of the Fund's registration statement, a Fund may add two captions to the table: one caption showing the amount of the expense reimbursement or fee waiver, and a second caption showing the Fund's net expenses after subtracting the fee reimbursement or expense waiver from the total fund operating expenses. The Fund should place these additional captions directly below the "Total Annual Fund Operating Expenses" caption of the table and should use appropriate descriptive captions, such as "Fee Waiver [and/or Expense Reimbursement]" and "Total Annual Fund Operating Expenses After Fee Waiver [and/or Expense Reimbursement]," respectively. If the Fund provides this disclosure, also disclose the period for which the expense reimbursement or fee waiver arrangement is expected to continue, including the expected termination date, and briefly describe who can terminate the arrangement and under what circumstances.

(i) If the Fund (unless it is a Feeder Fund) invests in shares of one or more Acquired Funds, add a subcaption to the "Annual Fund Operating Expenses" portion of the table directly above the subcaption titled "Total Annual Fund Operating Expenses." Title the additional subcaption: "Acquired Fund Fees and Expenses." Disclose in the subcaption fees and expenses incurred indirectly by the Fund as a result of investment in shares of one or more Acquired Funds. For purposes of this item, an "Acquired Fund" means any company in which the Fund invests or has invested during the relevant fiscal period that (A) is an investment company or (B) would be an investment company under section 3(a) of the Investment Company Act (15 U.S.C. 80a-3(a)) but for the exceptions to that definition provided for in sections

2-7B Federal Securities Act of 1933 PART A

3(c)(1) and 3(c)(7) of the Investment Company Act (15 U.S.C. 80a-3(c)(1) and 80a-3(c)(7)). If a Fund uses another term in response to other requirements of this Form to refer to Acquired Funds, it may include that term in parentheses following the subcaption title. In the event the fees and expenses incurred indirectly by the Fund as a result of investment in shares of one or more Acquired Funds do not exceed 0.01 percent (one basis point) of average net assets of the Fund, the Fund may include these fees and expenses under the subcaption "Other Expenses" in lieu of this disclosure requirement.

(ii) Determine the "Acquired Fund Fees and Expenses" according to the following formula:

$$\text{AFFE} = [(F1/FY)*AI1 * D1] + [(F2/FY)AI2 D2] + [(F3/FY)AI3 D3] + \text{Transaction Fees} + \text{Incentive Allocations}$$

Average Net Assets of the Fund

Where:

AFFE = Acquired Fund fees and expenses;

F1, F2, F3, ... = Total annual operating expense ratio for each Acquired Fund;

FY = Number of days in the relevant fiscal year.

AI1, AI2, AI3, ... = Average invested balance in each Acquired Fund;

D1, D2, D3, ... = Number of days invested in each Acquired Fund; and "Transaction Fees" = The total amount of sales loads, redemption fees, or other transaction fees paid by the Fund in connection with acquiring or disposing of shares in any Acquired Funds during the most recent fiscal year.

"Incentive Allocations" = Any allocation of capital from the Acquiring Fund to the adviser of the Acquired Fund (or its affiliate) based on a percentage of the Acquiring Fund's income, capital gains and/or appreciation in the Acquired Fund.

(iii) Calculate the average net assets of the Fund for the most recent fiscal year, as provided in Item 13(a) (see Instruction 4 to Item 13(a)).

(iv) The total annual operating expense ratio used for purposes of this calculation (F1) is the annualized ratio of operating expenses to average net assets for the Acquired Fund's most recent fiscal period as disclosed in the Acquired Fund's most recent shareholder report. If the ratio of expenses to average net assets is not included in the most recent shareholder report or the Acquired Fund is a newly formed fund that has not provided a shareholder report, then the ratio of expenses to average net assets of the Acquired Fund is the ratio of total annual operating expenses to average annual net assets of the Acquired Fund for its most recent fiscal period as disclosed in the most recent communication from the Acquired Fund to the Fund. For purposes of this instruction: (i) Acquired Fund expenses include increases resulting from brokerage service and expense offset arrangements and reductions resulting from fee waivers or reimbursements by the Acquired Funds' investment advisers or sponsors; and (ii) Acquired Fund expenses do not include expenses (i.e., performance fees) that are incurred solely upon the realization and/or distribution of a gain. If an Acquired Fund has no operating history, include in the Acquired Funds' expenses any fees payable to the Acquired Fund's investment adviser or its affiliates stated in the Acquired Fund's registration statement, offering memorandum or other similar communication without giving effect to any performance.

(v) To determine the average invested balance (AI1), the numerator is the sum of the amount initially invested in an Acquired Fund during the most recent fiscal year (if the investment was held at the end of the previous fiscal year, use the amount invested as of the end of the previous fiscal year) and the amounts invested in the Acquired Fund no less frequently than monthly during the period the investment is held by the Fund (if the investment was held through the end of the fiscal year, use each month-end through and including the fiscal yearend). Divide the numerator by the number of measurement points included in the calculation of the numerator (i.e., if an investment is made during the fiscal year and held for 3 succeeding months, the denominator would be 4).

(vi) A New Fund should base the Acquired Fund fees and expenses on assumptions as to the specific Acquired Funds in which the New Fund expects to invest. Disclose in a footnote to the table that Acquired Fund fees and expenses are based on estimated amounts for the current fiscal year.

(vii) The Fund may clarify in a footnote to the fee table that the total annual fund operating expenses under Item 3 do not correlate to the ratio of expenses to average net assets given in response to Item 13, which reflects the operating expenses of the Fund and does not include Acquired Fund fees and expenses.

4. Example.

(a) Assume that the percentage amounts listed under "Total Annual Fund Operating Expenses" remain the same in each year of the 1-, 3-, 5-, and 10-year periods, except that an adjustment may be made to reflect any expense reimbursement or fee waiver arrangements that will reduce any Fund operating expenses for no less than one year from the effective date of the Fund's registration statement. An adjustment to reflect any expense reimbursement or fee waiver arrangement may be reflected only in the period(s) for which the expense reimbursement or fee waiver arrangement is expected to continue.

(b) For any breakpoint in any fee, assume that the amount of the Fund's assets remains constant as of the level at the end of the most recently completed fiscal year.

(c) Assume reinvestment of all dividends and distributions.

(d) Reflect recurring and non-recurring fees charged to all investors other than any exchange fees or any sales charges (loads) on shares purchased with reinvested dividends or other distributions. If sales charges (loads) are imposed on reinvested dividends or other distributions, include the narrative explanation following the Example and include the bracketed words when sales charges (loads) are charged on reinvested capital gains distributions or returns of capital. Reflect any shareholder account fees collected by more than one Fund by dividing the total amount of the fees collected during the most recent fiscal year for all Funds whose shareholders are subject to the fees by the total average net assets of the Funds. Add the resulting percentage to "Annual Fund Operating Expenses" and assume that it remains the same in each of the 1-, 3-, 5-, and 10-year periods. A Fund that charges account fees based on a minimum account requirement exceeding $10,000 may adjust its account fees based on the amount of the fee in relation to the Fund's minimum account requirement.

(e) Reflect any deferred sales charge (load) by assuming redemption of the entire account at the end of the year in which the sales charge (load) is due. In the case of a deferred sales charge (load) that is based on the Fund's net asset value at the time of payment, assume that the net asset value at the end of each year includes the 5% annual return for that and each preceding year.

(f) Include the second 1-, 3-, 5-, and 10-year periods and related narrative explanation only if a sales charge (load) or other fee is charged upon redemption.

5. Portfolio Turnover. Disclose the portfolio turnover rate provided in response to Item 13(a) for the most recent fiscal year (or for such shorter period as the Fund has been in operation). Disclose the period for which the information is provided if less than a full fiscal year. A Fund that is a Money Market Fund may omit the portfolio turnover information required by this Item.

6. New Funds. For purposes of this Item, a "New Fund" is a Fund that does not include in Form N-1A financial statements reporting operating results or that includes financial statements for the Fund's initial fiscal year reporting operating results for a period of 6 months or less. The following Instructions apply to New Funds.

(a) Base the percentages expressed in "Annual Fund Operating Expenses" on payments that will be made, but include in expenses, amounts that will be incurred without reduction for expense reimbursement or fee waiver arrangements, estimating amounts of "Other Expenses." Disclose in a footnote to the table that "Other Expenses" are based on estimated amounts for the current fiscal year.

(b) Complete only the 1- and 3-year period portions of the Example and estimate any shareholder account fees collected.

Item 4. Risk/Return Summary: Investments, Risks, and Performance

Include the following information, in plain English under rule 421(d) under the Securities Act, in the order and subject matter indicated:

(a) Principal investment strategies of the Fund.

Based on the information given in response to Item 9(b), summarize how the Fund intends to achieve its investment objectives by identifying the Fund's principal investment strategies (including the type or types of securities in which the Fund invests or will invest principally) and any policy to concentrate in securities of issuers in a particular industry or group of industries.

(b) Principal risks of investing in the Fund.

(1) Narrative Risk Disclosure.

(i) Based on the information given in response to Item 9(c), summarize the principal risks of investing in the Fund, including the risks to which the Fund's portfolio as a whole is subject and the circumstances reasonably likely to affect adversely the Fund's net asset value, yield, and total return. Unless the Fund is a Money Market Fund, disclose that loss of money is a risk of investing in the Fund.

Instruction. A Fund may, in responding to this Item, describe the types of investors for whom the Fund is intended or the types of investment goals that may be consistent with an investment in the Fund.

(ii) If the Fund is a Money Market Fund, state that:

An investment in the Fund is not insured or guaranteed by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation or any other government agency. Although the Fund seeks to preserve the value of your investment at $1.00 per share, it is possible to lose money by investing in the Fund.

(iii) If the Fund is advised by or sold through an insured depository institution, state that:

An investment in the Fund is not a deposit of the bank and is not insured or guaranteed by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation or any other government agency.

Instruction. A Money Market Fund that is advised by or sold through an insured depository institution should combine the disclosure required by Items 4(b)(1)(ii) and (iii) in a single statement.

(iv) If applicable, state that the Fund is non-diversified, describe the effect of non-diversification (e.g., disclose that, compared with other funds, the Fund may invest a greater percentage of its assets in a particular issuer), and summarize the risks of investing in a non-diversified fund.

(2) Risk/Return Bar Chart and Table.

2-7B Federal Securities Act of 1933 PART A

(i) Include the bar chart and table required by paragraphs (b)(2)(ii) and (iii) of this section. Provide a brief explanation of how the information illustrates the variability of the Fund's returns (e.g., by stating that the information provides some indication of the risks of investing in the Fund by showing changes in the Fund's performance from year to year and by showing how the Fund's average annual returns for 1, 5, and 10 years compare with those of a broad measure of market performance). Provide a statement to the effect that the Fund's past performance (before and after taxes) is not necessarily an indication of how the Fund will perform in the future. If applicable, include a statement explaining that updated performance information is available and providing a Web site address and/or toll-free (or collect) telephone number where the updated information may be obtained.

(ii) If the Fund has annual returns for at least one calendar year, provide a bar chart showing the Fund's annual total returns for each of the last 10 calendar years (or for the life of the Fund if less than 10 years), but only for periods subsequent to the effective date of the Fund's registration statement. Present the corresponding numerical return adjacent to each bar. If the Fund's fiscal year is other than a calendar year, include the year-to-date return information as of the end of the most recent quarter in a footnote to the bar chart. Following the bar chart, disclose the Fund's highest and lowest return for a quarter during the 10 years or other period of the bar chart.

(iii) If the Fund has annual returns for at least one calendar year, provide a table showing the Fund's (A) average annual total return; (B) average annual total return (after taxes on distributions); and (C) average annual total return (after taxes on distributions and redemption). A Money Market Fund should show only the returns described in clause (A) of the preceding sentence. All returns should be shown for 1-, 5-, and 10- calendar year periods ending on the date of the most recently completed calendar year (or for the life of the Fund, if shorter), but only for periods subsequent to the effective date of the Fund's registration statement. The table also should show the returns of an appropriate broad-based securities market index as defined in Instruction 5 to Item 27(b)(7) for the same periods. A Fund that has been in existence for more than 10 years also may include returns for the life of the Fund. A Money Market Fund may provide the Fund's 7-day yield ending on the date of the most recent calendar year or disclose a toll-free (or collect) telephone number that investors can use to obtain the Fund's current 7-day yield. For a Fund (other than a Money Market Fund or a Fund described in General Instruction C.3.(d)(iii)), provide the information in the following table with the specified captions:

AVERAGE ANNUAL TOTAL RETURNS

(For the periods ended December 31,

_____))

	1 year	5 years [or Life of Fund]	10 years [or Life of Fund]
Return Before Taxes	____%	____%	____%
Return After Taxes on Distributions	____%	____%	____%
Return After Taxes on Distributions and Sale of Fund Shares	____%	____%	____%

2-7B Federal Securities Act of 1933 PART A

Index _____% _____% _____% (reflects no deduction for [fees, expenses, or taxes])

(iv) Adjacent to the table required by paragraph 4(b)(2)(iii), provide a brief explanation that:

(A) After-tax returns are calculated using the historical highest individual federal marginal income tax rates and do not reflect the impact of state and local taxes;

(B) Actual after-tax returns depend on an investor's tax situation and may differ from those shown, and after-tax returns shown are not relevant to investors who hold their Fund shares through tax-deferred arrangements, such as 401(k) plans or individual retirement accounts;

(C) If the Fund is a Multiple Class Fund that offers more than one Class in the prospectus, after-tax returns are shown for only one Class and after-tax returns for other Classes will vary; and

(D) If average annual total return (after taxes on distributions and redemption) is higher than average annual total return, the reason for this result may be explained.

Instructions.

1. Bar Chart.

(a) Provide annual total returns beginning with the earliest calendar year. Calculate annual returns using the Instructions to Item 13(a), except that the calculations should be based on calendar years. If a Fund's shares are sold subject to a sales load or account fees, state that sales loads or account fees are not reflected in the bar chart and that, if these amounts were reflected, returns would be less than those shown.

(b) For a Fund that provides annual total returns for only one calendar year or for a Fund that does not include the bar chart because it does not have annual returns for a full calendar year, modify, as appropriate, the narrative explanation required by paragraph (b)(2)(i) (e.g., by stating that the information gives some indication of the risks of an investment in the Fund by comparing the Fund's performance with a broad measure of market performance).

2. Table.

2-7B Federal Securities Act of 1933 PART A

(a) Calculate a Money Market Fund's 7-day yield under Item 26(a); the Fund's average annual total return under Item 26(b)(1); and the Fund's average annual total return (after taxes on distributions) and average annual total return (after taxes on distributions and redemption) under Items 26(b)(2) and (3), respectively.

(b) A Fund may include, in addition to the required broad-based securities market index, information for one or more other indexes as permitted by Instruction 6 to Item 27(b)(7). If an additional index is included, disclose information about the additional index in the narrative explanation accompanying the bar chart and table (e.g., by stating that the information shows how the Fund's performance compares with the returns of an index of funds with similar investment objectives).

(c) If the Fund selects an index that is different from the index used in a table for the immediately preceding period, explain the reason(s) for the selection of a different index and provide information for both the newly selected and the former index.

(d) A Fund (other than a Money Market Fund) may include the Fund's yield calculated under Item 26(b)(2). Any Fund may include its tax-equivalent yield calculated under Item 26. If a Fund's yield is included, provide a toll-free (or collect) telephone number that investors can use to obtain current yield information.

(e) Returns required by paragraphs 4(b)(2)(iii)(A), (B), and (C) for a Fund or Series must be adjacent to one another and appear in that order. The returns for a broad-based securities market index, as required by paragraph 4(b)(2)(iii), must precede or follow all of the returns for a Fund or Series rather than be interspersed with the returns of the Fund or Series.

3. Multiple Class Funds.

(a) When a Multiple Class Fund presents information for more than one Class together in response to Item 4(b)(2), provide annual total returns in the bar chart for only one of those Classes. The Fund can select which Class to include (e.g., the oldest Class, the Class with the greatest net assets) if the Fund:

(i) Selects the Class with 10 or more years of annual returns if other Classes have fewer than 10 years of annual returns;

(ii) Selects the Class with the longest period of annual returns when the Classes all have fewer than 10 years of returns; and

2-7B Federal Securities Act of 1933 PART A

(iii) If the Fund provides annual total returns in the bar chart for a Class that is different from the Class selected for the most immediately preceding period, explain in a footnote to the bar chart the reasons for the selection of a different Class.

(b) When a Multiple Class Fund offers a new Class in a prospectus and separately presents information for the new Class in response to Item 4(b)(2), include the bar chart with annual total returns for any other existing Class for the first year that the Class is offered. Explain in a footnote that the returns are for a Class that is not presented that would have substantially similar annual returns because the shares are invested in the same portfolio of securities and the annual returns would differ only to the extent that the Classes do not have the same expenses. Include return information for the other Class reflected in the bar chart in the performance table.

(c) When a Multiple Class Fund presents information for more than one Class together in response to Item 4(b)(2):
(i) Provide the returns required by paragraph 4(b)(2)(iii)(A) of this Item for each of the Classes;

(ii) Provide the returns required by paragraphs 4(b)(2)(iii)(B) and (C) of this Item for only one of those Classes. The Fund may select the Class for which it provides the returns required by paragraphs 4(b)(2)(iii)(B) and (C) of this Item, provided that the Fund:

(A) Selects a Class that has been offered for use as an investment option for accounts other than those described in General Instruction C.3.(d)(iii)(A);

(B) Selects a Class described in paragraph (c)(ii)(A) of this instruction with 10 or more years of annual returns if other Classes described in paragraph (c)(ii)(A) of this instruction have fewer than 10 years of annual returns;

(C) Selects the Class described in paragraph (c)(ii)(A) of this instruction with the longest period of annual returns if the Classes described in paragraph (c)(ii)(A) of this instruction all have fewer than 10 years of returns; and

(D) If the Fund provides the returns required by paragraphs 4(b)(2)(iii)(B) and (C) of this Item for a Class that is different from the Class selected for the most immediately preceding period, explain in a footnote to the table the reasons for the selection of a different Class;

(iii) The returns required by paragraphs 4(b)(2)(iii)(A), (B), and (C) of this Item for the Class described in paragraph (c)(ii) of this instruction should be adjacent and should not be interspersed with the returns of other Classes; and

(iv) All returns shown should be identified by Class.

(d) If a Multiple Class Fund offers a Class in the prospectus that converts into another Class after a stated period, compute average annual total returns in the table by using the returns of the other Class for the period after conversion.

4. Change in Investment Adviser: If the Fund has not had the same investment adviser during the last 10 calendar years, the Fund may begin the bar chart and the performance information in the table on the date that the current adviser began to provide advisory services to the Fund subject to the conditions in Instruction 11 of Item 27(b)(7).

Item 5. Management

(a) Investment Adviser(s). Provide the name of each investment adviser of the Fund, including sub-advisers. Instructions.

1. A Fund need not identify a sub-adviser whose sole responsibility for the Fund is limited to day-to-day management of the Fund's holdings of cash and cash equivalent instruments, unless the Fund is a Money Market Fund or other Fund with a principal investment strategy of regularly holding cash and cash equivalent instruments.

2. A Fund having three or more sub-advisers, each of which manages a portion of the Fund's portfolio, need not identify each such sub-adviser, except that the Fund must identify any sub-adviser that is (or is reasonably expected to be) responsible for the management of a significant portion of the Fund's net assets. For purposes of this paragraph, a significant portion of a Fund's net assets generally will be deemed to be 30% or more of the Fund's net assets.

(b) Portfolio Manager(s). State the name, title, and length of service of the person or persons employed by or associated with the Fund or an investment adviser of the Fund who are primarily responsible for the day-to-day management of the Fund's portfolio ("Portfolio Manager").

Instructions.

1. This requirement does not apply to a Money Market Fund.

2. If a committee, team, or other group of persons associated with the Fund or an investment adviser of the Fund is jointly and primarily responsible for the day-to-day management of the Fund's portfolio, information in response to this Item is required for each member of such committee, team, or other group. If more than five persons are jointly and primarily responsible for the day-to-day management of the Fund's portfolio, the Fund need only provide information for the five persons with the most significant responsibility for the day-to-day management of the Fund's portfolio.

Item 6. Purchase and Sale of Fund Shares

(a) Purchase of Fund Shares. Disclose the Fund's minimum initial or subsequent investment requirements.

(b) Sale of Fund Shares. Also disclose that the Fund's shares are redeemable and briefly identify the procedures for redeeming shares (e.g., on any business day by written request, telephone, or wire transfer).

(c) Exchange-Traded Funds. If the Fund is an Exchange-Traded Fund,

(i) Specify the number of shares that the Fund will issue (or redeem) in exchange for the deposit or delivery of basket assets (i.e., the securities or other assets the Fund specifies each day in name and number as the securities or assets in exchange for which it will issue or in return for which it will redeem Fund shares) and explain that:

(A) Individual Fund shares may only be purchased and sold on a national securities exchange through a broker-dealer; and

(B) The price of Fund shares is based on market price, and because Exchange-Traded Fund shares trade at market prices rather than net asset value, shares may trade at a price greater than net asset value (premium) or less than net asset value (discount); and

(ii) If the Fund issues shares in creation units of not less than 25,000 shares each, the Fund may omit the information required by Items 6(a) and 6(b).

Item 7. Tax Information

State, as applicable, that the Fund intends to make distributions that may be taxed as ordinary income or capital gains or that the Fund intends to distribute tax-exempt income. For a Fund that holds itself out as investing in securities generating tax-exempt income, provide, as applicable, a general statement to the effect that a portion of the Fund's distributions may be subject to federal income tax.

Item 8. Financial Intermediary Compensation

Include the following statement. A Fund may modify the statement if the modified statement contains comparable information. A Fund may omit the statement if neither the Fund nor any of its related companies pay financial intermediaries for the sale of Fund shares or related services.

Payments to Broker-Dealers and Other Financial Intermediaries.

If you purchase the Fund through a broker-dealer or other financial intermediary (such as a bank), the Fund and its related companies may pay the intermediary for the sale of Fund shares and related services. These payments may create a conflict of interest by influencing the broker-dealer or other intermediary and your salesperson to recommend the Fund over another investment. Ask your salesperson or visit your financial intermediary's Web site for more information.

Item 9. Investment Objectives, Principal Investment Strategies, Related Risks, and Disclosure of Portfolio Holdings

(a) Investment Objectives. State the Fund's investment objectives and, if applicable, state that those objectives may be changed without shareholder approval.

(b) Implementation of Investment Objectives. Describe how the Fund intends to achieve its investment objectives. In the discussion:

(1) Describe the Fund's principal investment strategies, including the particular type or types of securities in which the Fund principally invests or will invest.

Instructions.

1. A strategy includes any policy, practice, or technique used by the Fund to achieve its investment objectives.

2. Whether a particular strategy, including a strategy to invest in a particular type of security, is a principal investment strategy depends on the strategy's anticipated importance in achieving the Fund's investment objectives, and how the strategy affects the Fund's potential risks and returns. In determining what is a principal investment strategy, consider, among other things, the amount of the Fund's assets expected to be committed to the strategy, the amount of the Fund's assets expected to be placed at risk by the strategy, and the likelihood of the Fund's losing some or all of those assets from implementing the strategy.

3. A negative strategy (e.g., a strategy not to invest in a particular type of security or not to borrow money) is not a principal investment strategy.

4. Disclose any policy to concentrate in securities of issuers in a particular industry or group of industries (i. e., investing more than 25% of a Fund's net assets in a particular industry or group of industries).

5. Disclose any other policy specified in Item 16(c)(1) that is a principal investment strategy of the Fund.

6. Disclose, if applicable, that the Fund may, from time to time, take temporary defensive positions that are inconsistent with the Fund's principal investment strategies in attempting to respond to adverse market, economic, political, or other conditions. Also disclose the effect of taking such a temporary defensive position (e.g., that the Fund may not achieve its investment objective).

7. Disclose whether the Fund (if not a Money Market Fund) may engage in active and frequent trading of portfolio securities to achieve its principal investment strategies. If so, explain the tax consequences to shareholders of increased portfolio turnover, and how the tax consequences of, or trading costs associated with, a Fund's portfolio turnover may affect the Fund's performance.

(2) Explain in general terms how the Fund's adviser decides which securities to buy and sell (e.g., for an equity fund, discuss, if applicable, whether the Fund emphasizes value or growth or blends the two approaches).

(c) Risks. Disclose the principal risks of investing in the Fund, including the risks to which the Fund's particular portfolio as a whole is expected to be subject and the circumstances reasonably likely to affect adversely the Fund's net asset value, yield, or total return.

(d) Portfolio Holdings. State that a description of the Fund's policies and procedures with respect to the disclosure of the Fund's portfolio securities is available (i) in the Fund's SAI; and (ii) on the Fund's website, if applicable.

Item 10. Management, Organization, and Capital Structure

(a) Management.

(1) Investment Adviser.

2-7B Federal Securities Act of 1933 PART A

(i) Provide the name and address of each investment adviser of the Fund, including sub advisers. Describe the investment adviser's experience as an investment adviser and the advisory services that it provides to the Fund.

(ii) Describe the compensation of each investment adviser of the Fund as follows:

(A) If the Fund has operated for a full fiscal year, state the aggregate fee paid to the adviser for the most recent fiscal year as a percentage of average net assets. If the Fund has not operated for a full fiscal year, state what the adviser's fee is as a percentage of average net assets, including any breakpoints.

(B) If the adviser's fee is not based on a percentage of average net assets (e.g., the adviser receives a performance-based fee), describe the basis of the adviser's compensation.

(iii) Include a statement, adjacent to the disclosure required by paragraph (a)(1)(ii) of this Item, that a discussion regarding the basis for the board of directors approving any investment advisory contract of the Fund is available in the Fund's annual or semi-annual report to shareholders, as applicable, and providing the period covered by the relevant annual or semi-annual report.

Instructions.

1. If the Fund changed advisers during the fiscal year, describe the compensation and the dates of service for each adviser.

2. Explain any changes in the basis of computing the adviser's compensation during the fiscal year.

3. If a Fund has more than one investment adviser, disclose the aggregate fee paid to all of the advisers, rather than the fees paid to each adviser, in response to this Item.

(2) Portfolio Manager. For each Portfolio Manager identified in response to Item 5(b), state the Portfolio Manager's business experience during the past 5 years. Include a statement, adjacent to the foregoing disclosure, that the SAI provides additional information about the Portfolio Manager's(s') compensation, other accounts managed by the Portfolio Manager(s), and the Portfolio Manager's(s') ownership of securities in the Fund. If a Portfolio Manager is a member of a committee, team, or other group of persons associated with the Fund or an investment adviser of the Fund that is jointly and primarily responsible for the day-to-day management of the Fund's portfolio, provide a brief description of the person's role on the committee, team, or other group (e.g., lead member), including a description of any limitations on the person's role and the relationship between the person's role and the roles of other persons who have responsibility for the day-to-day management of the Fund's portfolio.

(3) Legal Proceedings. Describe any material pending legal proceedings, other than ordinary routine litigation incidental to the business, to which the Fund or the Fund's investment adviser or principal underwriter is a party. Include the name of the court in which the proceedings are pending, the date instituted, the principal parties involved, a description of the factual basis alleged to underlie the proceeding, and the relief sought. Include similar information as to any legal proceedings instituted, or known to be contemplated, by a governmental authority.

Instruction. For purposes of this requirement, legal proceedings are material only to the extent that they are likely to have a material adverse effect on the Fund or the ability of the investment adviser or principal underwriter to perform its contract with the Fund.

(b) Capital Stock. Disclose any unique or unusual restrictions on the right freely to retain or dispose of the Fund's shares or material obligations or potential liabilities associated with holding the Fund's shares (not including investment risks) that may expose investors to significant risks.

Item 11. Shareholder Information

(a) Pricing of Fund Shares. Describe the procedures for pricing the Fund's shares, including:

(1) An explanation that the price of Fund shares is based on the Fund's net asset value and the method used to value Fund shares (market price, fair value, or amortized cost); except that if the Fund is an Exchange-Traded Fund, an explanation that the price of Fund shares is based on market price.

Instruction. A Fund (other than a Money Market Fund) must provide a brief explanation of the circumstances under which it will use fair value pricing and the effects of using fair value pricing. With respect to any portion of a Fund's assets that are invested in one or more open-end management investment companies that are registered under the Investment Company Act, the Fund may briefly explain that the Fund's net asset value is calculated based upon the net asset values of the registered open-end management investment companies in which the Fund invests, and that the prospectuses for these companies explain the circumstances under which those companies will use fair value pricing and the effects of using fair value pricing.

(2) A statement as to when calculations of net asset value are made and that the price at which a purchase or redemption is effected is based on the next calculation of net asset value after the order is placed.

(3) A statement identifying in a general manner any national holidays when shares will not be priced and specifying any additional local or regional holidays when the Fund shares will not be priced.

Instructions.

1. In responding to this Item, a Fund may use a list of specific days or any other means that effectively communicates the information (e.g., explaining that shares will not be priced on the days on which the New York Stock Exchange is closed for trading).

2. If the Fund has portfolio securities that are primarily listed on foreign exchanges that trade on weekends or other days when the Fund does not price its shares, disclose that the net asset value of the Fund's shares may change on days when shareholders will not be able to purchase or redeem the Fund's shares.

(b) Purchase of Fund Shares. Describe the procedures for purchasing the Fund's shares.

(c) Redemption of Fund Shares. Describe the procedures for redeeming the Fund's shares, including:

(1) Any restrictions on redemptions.

(2) Any redemption charges, including how these charges will be collected and under what circumstances the charges will be waived.

(3) If the Fund has reserved the right to redeem in kind.

(4) Any procedure that a shareholder can use to sell the Fund's shares to the Fund or its underwriter through a broker-dealer, noting any charges that may be imposed for such service.

Instruction. The specific fees paid through the broker-dealer for such service need not be disclosed.

(5) The circumstances, if any, under which the Fund may redeem shares automatically without action by the shareholder in accounts below a certain number or value of shares.

(6) The circumstances, if any, under which the Fund may delay honoring a request for redemption for a certain time after a shareholder's investment (e.g., whether a Fund does not process redemptions until clearance of the check for the initial investment).

(7) Any restrictions on, or costs associated with, transferring shares held in street name accounts.

(d) Dividends and Distributions. Describe the Fund's policy with respect to dividends and distributions, including any options that shareholders may have as to the receipt of dividends and distributions.

(e) Frequent Purchases and Redemptions of Fund Shares.

(1) Describe the risks, if any, that frequent purchases and redemptions of Fund shares by Fund shareholders may present for other shareholders of the Fund.

(2) State whether or not the Fund's board of directors has adopted policies and procedures with respect to frequent purchases and redemptions of Fund shares by Fund shareholders.

(3) If the Fund's board of directors has not adopted any such policies and procedures, provide a statement of the specific basis for the view of the board that it is appropriate for the Fund not to have such policies and procedures.

(4) If the Fund's board of directors has adopted any such policies and procedures, describe those policies and procedures, including:

(i) Whether or not the Fund discourages frequent purchases and redemptions of Fund shares by Fund shareholders;

(ii) Whether or not the Fund accommodates frequent purchases and redemptions of Fund shares by Fund shareholders; and

(iii) Any policies and procedures of the Fund for deterring frequent purchases and redemptions of Fund shares by Fund shareholders, including any restrictions imposed by the Fund to prevent or minimize frequent purchases and redemptions. Describe each of these policies, procedures, and restrictions with specificity. Indicate whether each of these restrictions applies uniformly in all cases or whether the restriction will not be imposed under certain circumstances, including whether each of these restrictions applies to trades that occur through omnibus accounts at intermediaries, such as investment advisers, broker-dealers, transfer agents, third party administrators, and insurance companies. Describe with specificity the circumstances under which any restriction will not be imposed. Include a description of the following restrictions, if applicable:

(A) Any restrictions on the volume or number of purchases, redemptions, or exchanges that a shareholder may make within a given time period;

(B) Any exchange fee or redemption fee;

(C) Any costs or administrative or other fees or charges that are imposed on shareholders deemed to be engaged in frequent purchases and redemptions of Fund shares, together with a description of the circumstances under which such costs, fees, or charges will be imposed;

(D) Any minimum holding period that is imposed before an investor may make exchanges into another Fund;

(E) Any restrictions imposed on exchange or purchase requests submitted by overnight delivery, electronically, or via facsimile or telephone; and

(F) Any right of the Fund to reject, limit, delay, or impose other conditions on exchanges or purchases or to close or otherwise limit accounts based on a history of frequent purchases and redemptions of Fund shares, including the circumstances under which such right will be exercised.

(5) If applicable, include a statement, adjacent to the disclosure required by paragraphs (e)(1) through (e)(4) of this Item, that the SAI includes a description of all arrangements with any person to permit frequent purchases and redemptions of Fund shares.

(f) Tax Consequences.

(1) Describe the tax consequences to shareholders of buying, holding, exchanging and selling the Fund's shares, including, as applicable, that:

(i) The Fund intends to make distributions that may be taxed as ordinary income and capital gains (which may be taxable at different rates depending on the length of time the Fund holds its assets). If the Fund expects that its distributions, as a result of its investment objectives or strategies, will consist primarily of ordinary income or capital gains, provide disclosure to that effect.

(ii) The Fund's distributions, whether received in cash or reinvested in additional shares of the Fund, may be subject to federal income tax.

(iii) An exchange of the Fund's shares for shares of another fund will be treated as a sale of the Fund's shares and any gain on the transaction may be subject to federal income tax.

(2) For a Fund that holds itself out as investing in securities generating tax-exempt income:

(i) Modify the disclosure required by paragraph (f)(1) to reflect that the Fund intends to distribute tax-exempt income.

(ii) Also disclose, as applicable, that:

(A) The Fund may invest a portion of its assets in securities that generate income that is not exempt from federal or state income tax;

(B) Income exempt from federal tax may be subject to state and local income tax; and

(C) Any capital gains distributed by the Fund may be taxable.

(3) If the Fund does not expect to qualify as a regulated investment company under Subchapter M of the Internal Revenue Code [I.R.C. 851 et seq.], explain the tax consequences. If the Fund expects to pay an excise tax under the Internal Revenue Code [I.R.C. 4982] with respect to its distributions, explain the tax consequences.

(g) Exchange-Traded Funds. If the Fund is an Exchange-Traded Fund:

(1) The Fund may omit from the prospectus the information required by Items 11(a)(2), (b), and (c) if the Fund issues or redeems Fund shares in creation units of not less than 25,000 shares each; and

(2) Provide a table showing the number of days the Market Price of the Fund shares was greater than the Fund's net asset value and the number of days it was less than the Fund's net asset value (i.e., premium or discount) for the most recently completed calendar year, and the most recently completed calendar quarters since that year (or the life of the Fund, if shorter). The Fund may omit this table if the Fund provides an Internet address at the Fund's Web site, which is publicly accessible, free of charge, that investors can use to obtain the premium/discount information required in this Item.

Instruction.

1. Provide the information in tabular form.
2. Express the information as a percentage of the net asset value of the Fund, using separate columns for the number of days the Market Price was greater than the Fund's net asset value and the number of days it was less than the Fund's net asset value. Round all percentages to the nearest hundredth of one percent.
3. Adjacent to the table, provide a brief explanation that: shareholders may pay more than net asset value when they buy Fund shares and receive less than net asset value when they sell those shares, because shares are bought and sold at current market prices.
4. Include a statement that the data presented represents past performance and cannot be used to predict future results.

Item 12. Distribution Arrangements

(a) Sales Loads.

(1) Describe any sales loads, including deferred sales loads, applied to purchases of the Fund's shares. Include in a table any front-end sales load (and each breakpoint in the sales load, if any) as a percentage of both the offering price and the net amount invested.

Instructions.

1. If the Fund's shares are sold subject to a front-end sales load, explain that the term "offering price" includes the front-end sales load.

2-7B Federal Securities Act of 1933 PART A

2. Disclose, if applicable, that sales loads are imposed on shares, or amounts representing shares, that are purchased with reinvested dividends or other distributions.

3. Discuss, if applicable, how deferred sales loads are imposed and calculated, including:

(a) Whether the specified percentage of the sales load is based on the offering price, or the lesser of the offering price or net asset value at the time the sales load is paid.

(b) The amount of the sales load as a percentage of both the offering price and the net amount invested.

(c) A description of how the sales load is calculated (e.g., in the case of a partial redemption, whether or not the sales load is calculated as if shares or amounts representing shares not subject to a sales load are redeemed first, and other shares or amounts representing shares are then redeemed in the order purchased).

(d) If applicable, the method of paying an installment sales load (e.g., by withholding of dividend payments, involuntary redemptions, or separate billing of a shareholder's account).

(2) Unless disclosed in response to paragraph (a)(1), briefly describe any arrangements that result in breakpoints in, or elimination of, sales loads (e.g., letters of intent, accumulation plans, dividend reinvestment plans, withdrawal plans, exchange privileges, employee benefit plans, redemption reinvestment plans, and waivers for particular classes of investors). Identify each class of individuals or transactions to which the arrangements apply and state each different breakpoint as a percentage of both the offering price and the net amount invested. If applicable, state that additional information concerning sales load breakpoints is available in the Fund's SAI.

Instructions.

1. The description, pursuant to paragraph (a)(1) or (a)(2) of this Item 12, of arrangements that result in breakpoints in, or elimination of, sales loads must include a brief summary of shareholder eligibility requirements, including a description or list of the types of accounts (e.g., retirement accounts, accounts held at other financial intermediaries), account holders (e.g., immediate family members, family trust accounts, solely-controlled business accounts), and fund holdings (e.g., funds held within the same fund complex) that may be aggregated for purposes of determining eligibility for sales load breakpoints.

2. The description pursuant to paragraph (a)(2) of this Item 12 need not contain any information required by Items

17(d) and 22(b).

(3) Describe, if applicable, the methods used to value accounts in order to determine whether a shareholder has met sales load breakpoints, including the circumstances in which and the classes of individuals to whom each method applies. Methods that should be described, if applicable, include historical cost, net amount invested, and offering price.

(4)

(i) State, if applicable, that, in order to obtain a breakpoint discount, it may be necessary at the time of purchase for a shareholder to inform the Fund or his or her financial intermediary of the existence of other accounts in which there are holdings eligible to be aggregated to meet sales load breakpoints. Describe any information or records, such as account statements, that it may be necessary for a shareholder to provide to the Fund or his or her financial intermediary in order to verify his or her eligibility for a breakpoint discount. This description must include, if applicable:

(A) Information or records regarding shares of the Fund or other funds held in all accounts (e.g., retirement accounts) of the shareholder at the financial intermediary;

(B) Information or records regarding shares of the Fund or other funds held in any account of the shareholder at another financial intermediary; and

(C) Information or records regarding shares of the Fund or other funds held at any financial intermediary by related parties of the shareholder, such as members of the same family or household.

(ii) If the Fund permits eligibility for breakpoints to be determined based on historical cost, state that a shareholder should retain any records necessary to substantiate historical costs because the Fund, its transfer agent, and financial intermediaries may not maintain this information.

(5) State whether the Fund makes available free of charge, on or through the Fund's Web site at a specified Internet address, and in a clear and prominent format, the information required by paragraphs (a)(1) through (a)(4) and Item 22(a), including whether the Web site includes hyperlinks that facilitate access to the information. If the Fund does not make the information required by paragraphs (a)(1) through (a)(4) and Item 22(a) available in this manner, disclose the reasons why it does not do so (including, where applicable, that the Fund does not have an Internet Web site).

Instruction. All information required by paragraph (a) of this Item 12 must be adjacent to the table required by paragraph (a)(1) of this Item 12; must be presented in a clear, concise, and understandable manner; and must include tables, schedules, and charts as expressly required by paragraph (a)(1) of this Item 12 or where doing so would facilitate understanding.

(b) Rule 12b-1 Fees. If the Fund has adopted a plan under rule 12b-1, state the amount of the distribution fee payable under the plan and provide disclosure to the following effect:

(1) The Fund has adopted a plan under rule 12b-1 that allows the Fund to pay distribution fees for the sale and distribution of its shares; and

(2) Because these fees are paid out of the Fund's assets on an on-going basis, over time these fees will increase the cost of your investment and may cost you more than paying other types of sales charges.

Instruction. If the Fund pays service fees under its rule 12b-1 plan, modify this disclosure to reflect the payment of these fees (e.g., by indicating that the Fund pays distribution and other fees for the sale of its shares and for services provided to shareholders). For purposes of this paragraph, service fees have the same meaning given that term under rule 2830(b)(9) of the NASD Conduct Rules [NASD Manual (CCH) 4622].

(c) Multiple Class and Master-Feeder Funds.

(1) Describe the main features of the structure of the Multiple Class Fund or Master-Feeder Fund.

(2) If more than one Class of a Multiple Class Fund is offered in the prospectus, provide the information required by paragraphs (a) and (b) for each of those Classes.

(3) If a Multiple Class Fund offers in the prospectus shares that provide for mandatory or automatic conversions or exchanges from one Class to another Class, provide the information required by paragraphs (a) and (b) for both the shares offered and the Class into which the shares may be converted or exchanged.

(4) If a Feeder Fund has the ability to change the Master Fund in which it invests, describe briefly the circumstances under which the Feeder Fund can do so.

Instruction. A Feeder Fund that does not have the authority to change its Master Fund need not disclose the possibility and consequences of its no longer investing in the Master Fund.

Item 13. Financial Highlights Information

(a) Provide the following information for the Fund, or for the Fund and its subsidiaries, audited for at least the latest 5 years and consolidated as required in Regulation S-X [17 CFR 210].

Financial Highlights

The financial highlights table is intended to help you understand the Fund's financial performance for the past 5 years [or, if shorter, the period of the Fund's operations]. Certain information reflects financial results for a single Fund share. The total returns in the table represent the rate that an investor would have earned [or lost] on an investment in the Fund (assuming reinvestment of all dividends and distributions). This information has been audited by _____, whose report, along with the Fund's financial statements, are included in [the SAI or annual report], which is available upon request.

Instructions.

1. General.

2-7B Federal Securities Act of 1933 PART A

(a) Present the information in comparative columnar form for each of the last 5 fiscal years of the Fund (or for such shorter period as the Fund has been in operation), but only for periods subsequent to the effective date of the Fund's registration statement. Also present the information for the period between the end of the latest fiscal year and the date of the latest balance sheet or statement of assets and liabilities. When a period in the table is for less than a full fiscal year, a Fund may annualize ratios in the table and disclose that the ratios are annualized in a note to the table.

(b) List per share amounts at least to the nearest cent. If the offering price is expressed in tenths of a cent or more, then state the amounts in the table in tenths of a cent. Present the information using a consistent number of decimal places.

(c) Include the narrative explanation before the financial information. A Fund may modify the explanation if the explanation contains comparable information to that shown.

2. Per Share Operating Performance.

(a) Derive net investment income data by adding (deducting) the increase (decrease) per share in undistributed net investment income for the period to (from) dividends from net investment income per share for the period. The increase (decrease) per share may be derived by comparing the per share figures obtained by dividing undistributed net investment income at the beginning and end of the period by the number of shares outstanding on those dates. Other methods of computing net investment income may be acceptable. Provide an explanation in a note to the table of any other method used to compute net investment income.

(b) The amount shown at the Net Gains or Losses on Securities caption is the balancing figure derived from the other amounts in the statement. The amount shown at this caption for a share outstanding throughout the year may not agree with the change in the aggregate gains and losses in the portfolio securities for the year because of the timing of sales and repurchases of the Fund's shares in relation to fluctuating market values for the portfolio.

(c) For any distributions made from sources other than net investment income and capital gains, state the per share amounts separately at the Returns of Capital caption and note the nature of the distributions.

3. Total Return.

(a) Assume an initial investment made at the net asset value calculated on the last business day before the first day of each period shown.

(b) Do not reflect sales loads or account fees in the initial investment, but, if sales loads or account fees are imposed, note that they are not reflected in total return.

2-7B Federal Securities Act of 1933 PART A

(c) Reflect any sales load assessed upon reinvestment of dividends or distributions.

(d) Assume a redemption at the price calculated on the last business day of each period shown.

(e) For a period less than a full fiscal year, state the total return for the period and disclose that total return is not annualized in a note to the table.

4. Ratios/Supplemental Data.

(a) Calculate "average net assets" based on the value of the net assets determined no less frequently than the end of each month.

(b) Calculate the Ratio of Expenses to Average Net Assets using the amount of expenses shown in the Fund's statement of operations for the relevant fiscal period, including increases resulting from complying with paragraph 2(g) of rule 6-07 of Regulation S-X and reductions resulting from complying with paragraphs 2(a) and (f) of rule 6-07 regarding fee waivers and reimbursements. If a change in the methodology for determining the ratio of expenses to average net assets results from applying paragraph 2(g) of rule 6-07, explain in a note that the ratio reflects fees paid with brokerage commissions and fees reduced in connection with specific agreements only for periods ending after September 1, 1995.

(c) A Fund that is a Money Market Fund may omit the Portfolio Turnover Rate.

(d) Calculate the Portfolio Turnover Rate as follows:

(i) Divide the lesser of amounts of purchases or sales of portfolio securities for the fiscal year by the monthly average of the value of the portfolio securities owned by the Fund during the fiscal year. Calculate the monthly average by totaling the values of portfolio securities as of the beginning and end of the first month of the fiscal year and as of the end of each of the succeeding 11 months and dividing the sum by 13.

(ii) Exclude from both the numerator and the denominator amounts relating to all securities, including options, whose maturities or expiration dates at the time of acquisition were one year or less. Include all long-term securities, including long-term U.S. Government securities. Purchases include any cash paid upon the conversion of one portfolio security into another and the cost of rights or warrants. Sales include net proceeds of the sale of rights and warrants and net proceeds of portfolio securities that have been called or for which payment has been made through redemption or maturity.

(iii) If the Fund acquired the assets of another investment company or of a personal holding company in exchange for its own shares during the fiscal year in a purchase-of-assets transaction, exclude the value of securities acquired from purchases and securities sold from sales to realign the Fund's portfolio. Adjust the denominator of the portfolio turnover computation to reflect these excluded purchases and sales and disclose them in a footnote.

(iv) Include in purchases and sales any short sales that the Fund intends to maintain for more than one year and put and call options with expiration dates more than one year from the date of acquisition. Include proceeds from a short sale in the value of the portfolio securities sold during the period; include the cost of covering a short sale in the value of portfolio securities purchased during the period. Include premiums paid to purchase options in the value of portfolio securities purchased during the reporting period; include premiums received from the sale of options in the value of the portfolio securities sold during the period.

(b) A Fund may incorporate by reference the Financial Highlights Information from a report to shareholders under rule 30e-1 into the prospectus in response to this Item if the Fund delivers the shareholder report with the prospectus or, if the report has been previously delivered (e.g., to a current shareholder), the Fund includes the statement required by Item 1(b)(1).

For example, when furnishing information in a table, you should provide separate tables (or separate sections of a single table) for directors who are interested persons and for directors who are not interested persons. When furnishing information in narrative form, indicate by heading or otherwise the directors who are interested persons and the directors who are not interested persons.

2-7B Federal Securities Act of 1933 PART B

3. Identify the company in which the director or immediate family member of the director owns securities in column (3). 4. Provide the information required by columns (5) and (6) on an aggregate basis for each director and his immediate family members.

(6) Unless disclosed in response to paragraph (b)(5) of this Item 17, describe any direct or indirect interest, the value of which exceeds $120,000, of each director who is not an interested person of the Fund, or immediate family member of the director, during the two most recently completed calendar years, in:

(i) An investment adviser or principal underwriter of the Fund; or

(ii) A person (other than a registered investment company) directly or indirectly controlling, controlled by, or under common control with an investment adviser or principal underwriter of the Fund.

Instructions.

1. A director or immediate family member has an interest in a company if he is a party to a contract, arrangement, or understanding with respect to any securities of, or interest in, the company.

2. The interest of the director and the interests of his immediate family members should be aggregated in determining whether the value exceeds $120,000.

2-7B Federal Securities Act of 1933 PART B

(iv) An officer of an investment company, or a person that would be an investment company but for the exclusions provided by sections 3(c)(1) and 3(c)(7) (15 U.S.C. 80a-3(c)(1) and (c)(7)), having the same investment adviser or principal underwriter as the Fund or having an investment adviser or principal underwriter that directly or indirectly controls, is controlled by, or is under common control with an investment adviser or principal underwriter of the Fund;

1. Include the name of each director or immediate family member whose interest in any transaction or series of similar transactions is described and the nature of the circumstances by reason of which the interest is required to be described.

2. State the nature of the interest, the approximate dollar amount involved in the transaction, and, where practicable, the approximate dollar amount of the interest.

3. In computing the amount involved in the transaction or series of similar transactions, include all periodic payments in the case of any lease or other agreement providing for periodic payments.

4. Compute the amount of the interest of any director or immediate family member of the director without regard to the amount of profit or loss involved in the transaction(s).

5. As to any transaction involving the purchase or sale of assets, state the cost of the assets to the purchaser and, if acquired by the seller within two years prior to the transaction, the cost to the seller. Describe the method used in determining the purchase or sale price and the name of the person making the determination.

2-7B Federal Securities Act of 1933 PART B

6. Disclose indirect, as well as direct, material interests in transactions. A person who has a position or relationship with, or interest in, a company that engages in a transaction with one of the persons listed in paragraphs (b)(7)(i) through (b)(7)(viii) of this Item 17 may have an indirect interest in the transaction by reason of the position, relationship, or interest. The interest in the transaction, however, will not be deemed "material" within the meaning of paragraph (b)(7) of this Item 17 where the interest of the director or immediate family member arises solely from the holding of an equity interest (including a limited partnership interest, but excluding a general partnership interest) or a creditor interest in a company that is a party to the transaction with one of the persons specified in paragraphs (b)(7)(i) through (b)(7)(viii) of this Item 17, and the transaction is not material to the company.

7. The materiality of any interest is to be determined on the basis of the significance of the information to investors in light of all the circumstances of the particular case. The importance of the interest to the person having the interest, the relationship of the parties to the transaction with each other, and the amount involved in the transaction are among the factors to be considered in determining the significance of the information to investors.

8. No information need be given as to any transaction where the interest of the director or immediate family member arises solely from the ownership of securities of a person specified in paragraphs (b)(7)(i) through (b)(7)(viii) of this Item 17 and the director or immediate family member receives no extra or special benefit not shared on a pro rata basis by all holders of the class of securities.

9. Transactions include loans, lines of credit, and other indebtedness. For indebtedness, indicate the largest aggregate amount of indebtedness outstanding at any time during the period, the nature of the indebtedness and the transaction in which it was incurred, the amount outstanding as of the end of the most recently completed calendar year, and the rate of interest paid or charged.

10. No information need be given as to any routine, retail transaction. For example, the Fund need not disclose that a director has a credit card, bank or brokerage account, residential mortgage, or insurance policy with a person specified in paragraphs (b)(7)(i) through (b)(7)(viii) of this Item 17 unless the director is accorded special treatment.

(8) Describe briefly any direct or indirect relationship, in which the amount involved exceeds $120,000, of any director who is not an interested person of the Fund, or immediate family member of the director, that existed at any time during the two most recently completed calendar years with any of the persons specified in paragraphs (b)(7)(i) through (b)(7)(viii) of this Item 17. Relationships include:

(i) Payments for property or services to or from any person specified in paragraphs (b)(7)(i) through (b)(7)(viii) of this Item 17;

2-7B Federal Securities Act of 1933 PART B

(ii) Provision of legal services to any person specified in paragraphs (b)(7)(i) through (b)(7)(viii) of this Item 17;

(iii) Provision of investment banking services to any person specified in paragraphs (b)(7)(i) through (b)(7)(viii) of this Item 17, other than as a participating underwriter in a syndicate; and

(iv) Any consulting or other relationship that is substantially similar in nature and scope to the relationships listed in paragraphs (b)(8)(i) through (b)(8)(iii) of this Item 17.

Instructions.

1. Include the name of each director or immediate family member whose relationship is described and the nature of the circumstances by reason of which the relationship is required to be described.

2. State the nature of the relationship and the amount of business conducted between the director or immediate family member and the person specified in paragraphs (b)(7)(i) through (b)(7)(viii) of this Item 17 as a result of the relationship during the two most recently completed calendar years.

3. In computing the amount involved in a relationship, include all periodic payments in the case of any agreement providing for periodic payments.

4. Disclose indirect, as well as direct, relationships. A person who has a position or relationship with, or interest in, a company that has a relationship with one of the persons listed in paragraphs (b)(7)(i) through (b)(7)(viii) of this Item 17 may have an indirect relationship by reason of the position, relationship, or interest.

5. In determining whether the amount involved in a relationship exceeds $120,000, amounts involved in a relationship of the director should be aggregated with those of his immediate family members.

6. In the case of an indirect interest, identify the company with which a person specified in paragraphs (b)(7)(i) through (b)(7)(viii) of this Item 17 has a relationship; the name of the director or immediate family member affiliated with the company and the nature of the affiliation; and the amount of business conducted between the company and the person specified in paragraphs (b)(7)(i) through (b)(7)(viii) of this Item 17 during the two most recently completed calendar years.

2-7B Federal Securities Act of 1933 PART B

7. In calculating payments for property and services for purposes of paragraph (b)(8)(i) of this Item 17, the following may be excluded:

A. Payments where the transaction involves the rendering of services as a common contract carrier, or public utility, at rates or charges fixed in conformity with law or governmental authority; or

B. Payments that arise solely from the ownership of securities of a person specified in paragraphs (b)(7)(i) through (b)(7)(viii) of this Item 17 and no extra or special benefit not shared on a pro rata basis by all holders of the class of securities is received.

8. No information need be given as to any routine, retail relationship. For example, the Fund need not disclose that a director has a credit card, bank or brokerage account, residential mortgage, or insurance policy with a person specified in paragraphs (b)(7)(i) through (b)(7)(viii) of this Item 17 unless the director is accorded special treatment.

(9) If an officer of an investment adviser or principal underwriter of the Fund, or an officer of a person directly or indirectly controlling, controlled by, or under common control with an investment adviser or principal underwriter of the Fund, served during the two most recently completed calendar years, on the board of directors of a company where a director of the Fund who is not an interested person of the Fund, or immediate family member of the director, was during the two most recently completed calendar years, an officer, identify:

(i) The company;

(4) Payments for investment advisory services under an investment advisory contract.

Instructions.

1. Do not include in response to this paragraph information provided in response to paragraph (b) or with respect to service fees under the Instruction to Item 12(b)(2). Do not include any payment for a service excluded by Instructions 1 and 2 to Item 19(d) or by Instruction 2 to Item 34.

2. If the payments were made under an arrangement or policy applicable to dealers generally, describe only the arrangement or policy.

Item 26. Calculation of Performance Data

(a) Money Market Funds. Yield quotation(s) for a Money Market Fund included in the prospectus should be calculated according to paragraphs (a)(1) - (4).

(1) Yield Quotation. Based on the 7 days ended on the date of the most recent balance sheet included in the registration statement, calculate the Fund's yield by determining the net change, exclusive of capital changes and income other than investment income, in the value of a hypothetical pre-existing account having a balance of one share at the beginning of the period, subtracting a hypothetical charge reflecting deductions from shareholder accounts, and dividing the difference by the value of the account at the beginning of the base period to obtain the base period return, and then multiplying the base period return by (365/7) with the resulting yield figure carried to at least the nearest hundredth of one percent.

(2) Effective Yield Quotation. Based on the 7 days ended on the date of the most recent balance sheet included in the registration statement, calculate the Fund's effective yield, carried to at least the nearest hundredth of one percent, by determining the net change, exclusive of capital changes and income other than investment income, in the value of a hypothetical pre-existing account having a balance of one share at the beginning of the period, subtracting a hypothetical charge reflecting deductions from shareholder accounts, and dividing the difference by the value of the account at the beginning of the base period to obtain the base period return, and then compounding the base period return by adding 1, raising the sum to a power equal to 365 divided by 7, and subtracting 1 from the result, according to the following formula:

(3) Tax Equivalent Current Yield Quotation. Calculate the Fund's tax equivalent current yield by dividing that portion of the Fund's yield (as calculated under paragraph (a)(1)) that is tax-exempt by 1 minus a stated income tax rate and adding the quotient to that portion, if any, of the Fund's yield that is not tax-exempt.

(4) Tax Equivalent Effective Yield Quotation. Calculate the Fund's tax equivalent effective yield by dividing that portion of the Fund's effective yield (as calculated under paragraph (a)(2)) that is tax-exempt by 1 minus a stated income tax rate and adding the quotient to that portion, if any, of the Fund's effective yield that is not tax-exempt.

Instructions.

1. When calculating yield or effective yield quotations, the calculation of net change in account value must include:

(a) The value of additional shares purchased with dividends from the original share and dividends declared on both the original shares and additional shares; and

(b) All fees, other than nonrecurring account or sales charges, that are imposed on all shareholder accounts in proportion to the length of the base period. For any account fees that vary with the size of the account, assume an account size equal to the Fund's mean (or median) account size.

2. Exclude realized gains and losses from the sale of securities and unrealized appreciation and depreciation from the calculation of yield and effective yield. Exclude income other than investment income.

3. Disclose the amount or specific rate of any nonrecurring account or sales charges not included in the calculation of the yield.

4. If the Fund holds itself out as distributing income that is exempt from federal, state, or local income taxation, in calculating yield and effective yield (but not tax equivalent yield or tax equivalent effective yield), reduce the yield quoted by the effect of any income taxes on the shareholder receiving dividends, using the maximum rate for individual income taxation. For example, if the Fund holds itself out as distributing income exempt from federal taxation and the income taxes of State A, but invests in some securities of State B, it must reduce its yield by the effect of state income taxes that must be paid by the residents of State A on that portion of the income attributable to the securities of State B.

(b) Other Funds. Performance information included in the prospectus should be calculated according to paragraphs (b)(1) - (6).

2-7B Federal Securities Act of 1933 PART B

(1) Average Annual Total Return Quotation. For the 1-, 5-, and 10-year periods ended on the date of the most recent balance sheet included in the registration statement (or for the periods the Fund has been in operation), calculate the Fund's average annual total return by finding the average annual compounded rates of return over the 1-, 5-, and 10-year periods (or for the periods of the Fund's operations) that would equate the initial amount invested to the ending redeemable value, according to the following formula:

$P(1+T)^n = ERV$ Where:

P = a hypothetical initial payment of $1,000.

T = average annual total return.

n = number of years.

ERV = ending redeemable value of a hypothetical $1,000 payment made at the beginning of the 1-, 5-, or 10-year periods at the end of the 1-, 5-, or 10-year periods (or fractional portion).

Instructions.

1. Assume the maximum sales load (or other charges deducted from payments) is deducted from the initial $1,000 payment.

2. Assume all distributions by the Fund are reinvested at the price stated in the prospectus (including any sales load imposed upon reinvestment of dividends) on the reinvestment dates during the period.

3. Include all recurring fees that are charged to all shareholder accounts. For any account fees that vary with the size of the account, assume an account size equal to the Fund's mean (or median) account size. Reflect, as appropriate, any recurring fees charged to shareholder accounts that are paid other than by redemption of the Fund's shares.

4. Determine the ending redeemable value by assuming a complete redemption at the end of the 1-, 5-, or 10-year periods and the deduction of all nonrecurring charges deducted at the end of each period. If shareholders are assessed a deferred sales load, assume the maximum deferred sales load is deducted at the times, in the amounts, and under the terms disclosed in the prospectus.

5. State the average annual total return quotation to the nearest hundredth of one percent.

6. Total return information in the prospectus need only be current to the end of the Fund's most recent fiscal year.

2-7B Federal Securities Act of 1933 PART B

(2) Average Annual Total Return (After Taxes on Distributions) Quotation. For the 1-, 5-, and 10-year periods ended on the date of the most recent balance sheet included in the registration statement (or for the periods the Fund has been in operation), calculate the Fund's average annual total return (after taxes on distributions) by finding the average annual compounded rates of return over the 1-, 5-, and 10-year periods (or for the periods of the Fund's operations) that would equate the initial amount invested to the ending value, according to the following formula:

$P(1+T)^n = ATV[D]$ Where:

P = a hypothetical initial payment of $1,000.

T = average annual total return (after taxes on distributions).

n = number of years.

ATV = ending value of a hypothetical $1,000 payment made at the beginning of the 1-, 5-, or 10-year periods at the end of the 1-, 5-, or 10-year periods (or fractional portion), after taxes on fund distributions but not after taxes on redemption.

Instructions.

1. Assume the maximum sales load (or other charges deducted from payments) is deducted from the initial $1,000 payment.

2. Assume all distributions by the Fund, less the taxes due on such distributions, are reinvested at the price stated in the prospectus (including any sales load imposed upon reinvestment of dividends) on the reinvestment dates during the period.

3. Calculate the taxes due on any distributions by the Fund by applying the tax rates specified in Instruction 4 to each component of the distributions on the reinvestment date (e.g., ordinary income, short-term capital gain, long-term capital gain). The taxable amount and tax character of each distribution should be as specified by the Fund on the dividend declaration date, but may be adjusted to reflect subsequent recharacterizations of distributions. Distributions should be adjusted to reflect the federal tax impact the distribution would have on an individual taxpayer on the reinvestment date. For example, assume no taxes are due on the portion of any distribution that would not result in federal income tax on an individual, e.g., tax- exempt interest or non-taxable returns of capital. The effect of applicable tax credits, such as the foreign tax credit, should be taken into account in accordance with federal tax law.

4. Calculate the taxes due using the highest individual marginal federal income tax rates in effect on the reinvestment date. The rates used should correspond to the tax character of each component of the distributions (e.g., ordinary income rate for ordinary income distributions, short-term capital gain rate for short-term capital gain distributions, long-term capital gain rate for long-term capital gain distributions). Note that the required tax rates may vary over the measurement period. Disregard any potential tax liabilities other than federal tax liabilities (e.g., state and local taxes); the effect of phaseouts of certain exemptions, deductions, and credits at various income levels; and the impact of the federal alternative minimum tax.

5. Include all recurring fees that are charged to all shareholder accounts. For any account fees that vary with the size of the account, assume an account size equal to the Fund's mean (or median) account size. Assume that no additional taxes or tax credits result from any redemption of shares required to pay such fees. Reflect, as appropriate, any recurring fees charged to shareholder accounts that are paid other than by redemption of the Fund's shares.

6. Determine the ending value by assuming a complete redemption at the end of the 1-, 5-, or 10-year periods and the deduction of all nonrecurring charges deducted at the end of each period. If shareholders are assessed a deferred sales load, assume the maximum deferred sales load is deducted at the times, in the amounts, and under the terms disclosed in the prospectus. Assume that the redemption has no tax consequences.

7. State the average annual total return (after taxes on distributions) quotation to the nearest hundredth of one percent.

(3) Average Annual Total Return (After Taxes on Distributions and Redemption) Quotation. For the 1-, 5-, and 10-year periods ended on the date of the most recent balance sheet included in the registration statement (or for the periods the Fund has been in operation), calculate the Fund's average annual total return (after taxes on distributions and redemption) by finding the average annual compounded rates of return over the 1-, 5-, and 10-year periods (or for the periods of the Fund's operations) that would equate the initial amount invested to the ending value, according to the following formula:

$P(1+T)^n = ATV[DR]$ Where:

P = a hypothetical initial payment of $1,000.

T = average annual total return (after taxes on distributions and redemption).

n = number of years.

ATV[DR] = ending value of a hypothetical $1,000 payment made at the beginning of the 1-, 5-, or 10-year periods at the end of the 1-, 5-, or 10-year periods (or fractional portion), after taxes on fund distributions and redemption.

Instructions.

1. Assume the maximum sales load (or other charges deducted from payments) is deducted from the initial $1,000 payment.

2. Assume all distributions by the Fund, less the taxes due on such distributions, are reinvested at the price stated in the prospectus (including any sales load imposed upon reinvestment of dividends) on the reinvestment dates during the period.

3. Calculate the taxes due on any distributions by the Fund by applying the tax rates specified in Instruction 4 to each component of the distributions on the reinvestment date (e.g., ordinary income, short-term capital gain, long-term capital gain). The taxable amount and tax character of each distribution should be as specified by the Fund on the dividend declaration date, but may be adjusted to reflect subsequent recharacterizations of distributions. Distributions should be adjusted to reflect the federal tax impact the distribution would have on an individual taxpayer on the reinvestment date. For example, assume no taxes are due on the portion of any distribution that would not result in federal income tax on an individual, e.g., tax-exempt interest or non-taxable returns of capital. The effect of applicable tax credits, such as the foreign tax credit, should be taken into account in accordance with federal tax law.

4. Calculate the taxes due using the highest individual marginal federal income tax rates in effect on the reinvestment date. The rates used should correspond to the tax character of each component of the distributions (e.g., ordinary income rate for ordinary income distributions, short-term capital gain rate for short-term capital gain distributions, long-term capital gain rate for long-term capital gain distributions). Note that the required tax rates may vary over the measurement period. Disregard any potential tax liabilities other than federal tax liabilities (e.g., state and local taxes); the effect of phaseouts of certain exemptions, deductions, and credits at various income levels; and the impact of the federal alternative minimum tax.

5. Include all recurring fees that are charged to all shareholder accounts. For any account fees that vary with the size of the account, assume an account size equal to the Fund's mean (or median) account size. Assume that no additional taxes or tax credits result from any redemption of shares required to pay such fees. Reflect, as appropriate, any recurring fees charged to shareholder accounts that are paid other than by redemption of the Fund's shares.

6. Determine the ending value by assuming a complete redemption at the end of the 1-, 5-, or 10-year periods and the deduction of all nonrecurring charges deducted at the end of each period. If shareholders are assessed a deferred sales load, assume the maximum deferred sales load is deducted at the times, in the amounts, and under the terms disclosed in the prospectus.

7. Determine the ending value by subtracting capital gains taxes resulting from the redemption and adding the tax benefit from capital losses resulting from the redemption.

(a) Calculate the capital gain or loss upon redemption by subtracting the tax basis from the redemption proceeds (after deducting any nonrecurring charges as specified by Instruction 6).

(b) The Fund should separately track the basis of shares acquired through the $1,000 initial investment and each subsequent purchase through reinvested distributions. In determining the basis for a reinvested distribution, include the distribution net of taxes assumed paid from the distribution, but not net of any sales loads imposed upon reinvestment. Tax basis should be adjusted for any distributions representing returns of capital and any other tax basis adjustments that would apply to an individual taxpayer, as permitted by applicable federal tax law.

2-7B Federal Securities Act of 1933 PART B

(c) The amount and character (e.g., short-term or long-term) of capital gain or loss upon redemption should be separately determined for shares acquired through the $1,000 initial investment and each subsequent purchase through reinvested distributions. The Fund should not assume that shares acquired through reinvestment of distributions have the same holding period as the initial $1,000 investment. The tax character should be determined by the length of the measurement period in the case of the initial $1,000 investment and the length of the period between reinvestment and the end of the measurement period in the case of reinvested distributions.

(d) Calculate the capital gains taxes (or the benefit resulting from tax losses) using the highest federal individual capital gains tax rate for gains of the appropriate character in effect on the redemption date and in accordance with federal tax law applicable on the redemption date. For example, applicable federal tax law should be used to determine whether and how gains and losses from the sale of shares with different holding periods should be netted, as well as the tax character (e.g., short-term or long-term) of any resulting gains or losses. Assume that a shareholder has sufficient capital gains of the same character from other investments to offset any capital losses from the redemption so that the taxpayer may deduct the capital losses in full.

8. State the average annual total return (after taxes on distributions and redemption) quotation to the nearest hundredth of one percent.

(4) Yield Quotation. Based on a 30-day (or one month) period ended on the date of the most recent balance sheet included in the registration statement, calculate the Fund's yield by dividing the net investment income per share earned during the period by the maximum offering price per share on the last day of the period, according to the following formula:

$YIELD = 2[(a-b/cd + 1)[6]-1]$ Where:

- a = dividends and interest earned during the period.
- b = expenses accrued for the period (net of reimbursements).
- c = the average daily number of shares outstanding during the period that were entitled to receive dividends.
- d = the maximum offering price per share on the last day of the period.

Instructions.

1. To calculate interest earned on debt obligations for purposes of "a" above:

(a) Calculate the yield to maturity of each obligation held by the Fund based on the market value of the obligation (including actual accrued interest) at the close of business on the last business day of each month or, with respect to obligations purchased during the month, the purchase price (plus actual accrued interest). The maturity of an obligation with a call provision(s) is the next call date on which the obligation reasonably may be expected to be called, or if none, the maturity date.

2-7B Federal Securities Act of 1933 PART B

(b) Divide the yield to maturity by 360 and multiply the quotient by the market value of the obligation (including actual accrued interest) to determine the interest income on the obligation for each day of the subsequent month that the obligation is in the portfolio. Assume that each month has 30 days.

(c) Total the interest earned on all debt obligations and all dividends accrued on all equity securities during the 30-day (or one month) period. Although the period for calculating interest earned is based on calendar months, a 30-day yield may be calculated by aggregating the daily interest on the portfolio from portions of 2 months. In addition, a Fund may recalculate daily interest income on the portfolio more than once a month.

(d) For a tax-exempt obligation issued without original issue discount and having a current market discount, use the coupon rate of interest in lieu of the yield to maturity. For a tax-exempt obligation with original issue discount in which the discount is based on the current market value and exceeds the then-remaining portion of original issue discount (market discount), base the yield to maturity on the imputed rate of the original issue discount calculation. For a tax-exempt obligation with original issue discount, where the discount based on the current market value is less than the then-remaining portion of original issue discount (market premium), base the yield to maturity on the market value.

2. For discount and premium on mortgage or other receivables-backed obligations that are expected to be subject to monthly payments of principal and interest ("paydowns"):

(a) Account for gain or loss attributable to actual monthly paydowns as an increase or decrease to interest income during the period; and

(b) The Fund may elect:

(i) To amortize the discount and premium on the remaining securities, based on the cost of the securities, to the weighted average maturity date, if the information is available, or to the remaining term of the securities, if the weighted average maturity date is not available; or

(ii) Not to amortize the discount or premium on the remaining securities.

3. Solely for the purpose of calculating yield, recognize dividend income by accruing $1/360$ of the stated dividend rate of the security each day that the security is in the portfolio.

2-7B Federal Securities Act of 1933 PART B

4. Do not use equalization accounting in calculating yield.
 5. Include expenses accrued under a plan adopted under rule 12b-1 in the expenses accrued for the period. Reimbursement accrued under the plan may reduce the accrued expenses, but only to the extent the reimbursement does not exceed expenses accrued for the period.
 6. Include in the expenses accrued for the period all recurring fees that are charged to all shareholder accounts in proportion to the length of the base period. For any account fees that vary with the size of the account, assume an account size equal to the Fund's mean (or median) account size.
 7. If a broker-dealer or an affiliate of the broker-dealer (as defined in rule 1-02(b) of Regulation S-X [17 CFR 210.1-02(b)]) has, in connection with directing the Fund's brokerage transactions to the broker-dealer, provided, agreed to provide, paid for, or agreed to pay for, in whole or in part, services provided to the Fund (other than brokerage and research services as those terms are used in section 28(e) of the Securities Exchange Act [15 U.S.C. 78bb(e)]), add to expenses accrued for the period an estimate of additional amounts that would have been accrued for the period if the Fund had paid for the services directly in an arm's length transaction.
 8. Undeclared earned income, calculated in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles, may be subtracted from the maximum offering price. Undeclared earned income is the net investment income that, at the end of the base period, has not been declared as a dividend, but is reasonably expected to be and is declared as a dividend shortly thereafter.
 9. Disclose the amount or specific rate of any nonrecurring account or sales charges.
 10. If, in connection with the sale of the Fund's shares, a deferred sales load payable in installments is imposed, the "maximum public offering price" includes the aggregate amount of the installments ("installment load amount").
- (5) Tax Equivalent Yield Quotation. Based on a 30-day (or one month) period ended on the date of the most recent balance sheet included in the registration statement, calculate the Fund's tax equivalent yield by dividing that portion of the Fund's yield (as calculated under paragraph (b)(2)) that is tax-exempt by 1 minus a stated income tax rate and adding the quotient to that portion, if any, of the Fund's yield that is not tax-exempt.
- (6) Non-Standardized Performance Quotation. A Fund may calculate performance using any other historical measure of performance (not subject to any prescribed method of computation) if the measurement reflects all elements of return.

Item 27. Financial Statements

(a) Registration Statement. Include, in a separate section following the responses to the preceding Items, the financial statements and schedules required by Regulation S-X. The specimen price-make-up sheet required by Instruction 4 to Item 23(c) may be provided as a continuation of the balance sheet specified by Regulation S-X.

Instructions.

1. The statements of any subsidiary that is not a majority-owned subsidiary required by Regulation S-X may be omitted from Part B and included in Part C.

2. In addition to the requirements of rule 3-18 of Regulation S-X [17 CFR 210.3-18], any Fund registered under the Investment Company Act that has not previously had an effective registration statement under the Securities Act must include in its initial registration statement under the Securities Act any additional financial statements and condensed financial information (which need not be audited) necessary to make the financial statements and condensed financial information included in the registration statement current as of a date within 90 days prior to the date of filing.

(b) Annual Report. Every annual report to shareholders required by rule 30e-1 must contain the following:

(1) Financial Statements. The audited financial statements required, and for the periods specified, by Regulation S-X.

Instructions.

1. Schedule VI - Summary schedule of investments in securities of unaffiliated issuers [17 CFR 210.12-12C] may be included in the financial statements in lieu of Schedule I - Investments in securities of unaffiliated issuers [17 CFR 210.12-12] if: (a) the Fund states in the report that the Fund's complete schedule of investments in securities of unaffiliated issuers is available (i) without charge, upon request, by calling a specified toll-free (or collect) telephone number; (ii) on the Fund's website, if applicable; and (iii) on the Commission's website at <http://www.sec.gov>; and (b) whenever the Fund (or financial intermediary through which shares of the Fund may be purchased or sold) receives a request for the Fund's schedule of investments in securities of unaffiliated issuers, the Fund (or financial intermediary) sends a copy of Schedule I - Investments in securities of unaffiliated issuers within 3 business days of receipt by first-class mail or other means designed to ensure equally prompt delivery.

2-7B Federal Securities Act of 1933 PART B

2. In the case of a Money Market Fund, Schedule I - Investments in securities of unaffiliated issuers [17 CFR 210.12-12C] may be omitted from its financial statements, provided that: (a) the Fund states in the report that the Fund's complete schedule of investments in securities of unaffiliated issuers is available (i) without charge, upon request, by calling a specified toll-free (or collect) telephone number; (ii) on the Fund's website, if applicable; and (iii) on the Commission's website at <http://www.sec.gov>; and (b) whenever the Fund (or financial intermediary through which shares of the Fund may be purchased or sold) receives a request for the Fund's schedule of investments in securities of unaffiliated issuers, the Fund (or financial intermediary) sends a copy of Schedule I--Investments in securities of unaffiliated issuers within 3 business days of receipt by first-class mail or other means designed to ensure equally prompt delivery.

(2) Condensed Financial Information. The condensed financial information required by Item 13(a) with at least the most recent fiscal year audited.

(3) Remuneration Paid to Directors, Officers, and Others. Unless shown elsewhere in the report as part of the financial statements required by paragraph (b)(1), the aggregate remuneration paid by the Fund during the period covered by the report to:

(i) All directors and all members of any advisory board for regular compensation;

(ii) Each director and each member of an advisory board for special compensation;

(iii) All officers; and

(iv) Each person of whom any officer or director of the Fund is an affiliated person.

(4) Changes in and Disagreements with Accountants. The information concerning changes in and disagreements with accountants and on accounting and financial disclosure required by Item 304 of Regulation S-K [17 CFR 229.304].

(5) Management Information. The management information required by Item 17(a)(1).

(6) Availability of Additional Information about Fund Directors. A statement that the SAI includes additional information about Fund directors and is available, without charge, upon request, and a toll-free (or collect) telephone number for shareholders to call to request the SAI.

(7) Management's Discussion of Fund Performance. Disclose the following information unless the Fund is a Money Market Fund:

(i) Discuss the factors that materially affected the Fund's performance during the most recently completed fiscal year, including the relevant market conditions and the investment strategies and techniques used by the Fund's investment adviser.

(ii)

(A) Provide a line graph comparing the initial and subsequent account values at the end of each of the most recently completed 10 fiscal years of the Fund (or for the life of the Fund, if shorter), but only for periods subsequent to the effective date of the Fund's registration statement. Assume a $10,000 initial investment at the beginning of the first fiscal year in an appropriate broad-based securities market index for the same period.

(B) In a table placed within or next to the graph, provide the Fund's average annual total returns for the 1-, 5-, and 10-year periods as of the end of the last day of the most recent fiscal year (or for the life of the Fund, if shorter), but only for periods subsequent to the effective date of the Fund's registration statement. Average annual total returns should be computed in accordance with Item 26(b)(1). Include a statement accompanying the graph and table to the effect that past performance does not predict future performance and that the graph and table do not reflect the deduction of taxes that a shareholder would pay on fund distributions or the redemption of fund shares.

Instructions.

1. Line Graph Computation.

(a) Assume that the initial investment was made at the offering price last calculated on the business day before the first day of the first fiscal year.

(b) Base subsequent account values on the net asset value of the Fund last calculated on the last business day of the first and each subsequent fiscal year.

(c) Calculate the final account value by assuming the account was closed and redemption was at the price last calculated on the last business day of the most recent fiscal year.

2-7B Federal Securities Act of 1933 PART B

(d) Base the line graph on the Fund's required minimum initial investment if that amount exceeds $10,000.

2. Sales Load. Reflect any sales load (or any other fees charged at the time of purchasing shares or opening an account) by beginning the line graph at the amount that actually would be invested (i.e., assume that the maximum sales load, and other charges deducted from payments, is deducted from the initial $10,000 investment). For a Fund whose shares are subject to a contingent deferred sales load, assume the deduction of the maximum deferred sales load (or other charges) that would apply for a complete redemption that received the price last calculated on the last business day of the most recent fiscal year. For any other deferred sales load, assume that the deduction is in the amount(s) and at the time(s) that the sales load actually would have been deducted.

3. Dividends and Distributions. Assume reinvestment of all of the Fund's dividends and distributions on the reinvestment dates during the period, and reflect any sales load imposed upon reinvestment of dividends or distributions or both.

4. Account Fees. Reflect recurring fees that are charged to all accounts.

(a) For any account fees that vary with the size of the account, assume a $10,000 account size.

(b) Reflect, as appropriate, any recurring fees charged to shareholder accounts that are paid other than by redemption of the Fund's shares.

(c) Reflect an annual account fee that applies to more than one Fund by allocating the fee in the following manner: divide the total amount of account fees collected during the year by the Funds' total average net assets, multiply the resulting percentage by the average account value for each Fund and reduce the value of each hypothetical account at the end of each fiscal year during which the fee was charged.

5. Appropriate Index. For purposes of this Item, an "appropriate broad-based securities market index" is one that is administered by an organization that is not an affiliated person of the Fund, its investment adviser, or principal underwriter, unless the index is widely recognized and used. Adjust the index to reflect the reinvestment of dividends on securities in the index, but do not reflect the expenses of the Fund.

6. Additional Indexes. A Fund is encouraged to compare its performance not only to the required broad-based index, but also to other more narrowly based indexes that reflect the market sectors in which the Fund invests. A Fund also may compare its performance to an additional broad-based index, or to a non-securities index (e.g., the Consumer Price Index), so long as the comparison is not misleading.

7. Change in Index. If the Fund uses an index that is different from the one used for the immediately preceding fiscal year, explain the reason(s) for the change and compare the Fund's annual change in the value of an investment in the hypothetical account with the new and former indexes.

8. Other Periods. The line graph may cover earlier fiscal years and may compare the ending values of interim periods (e.g., monthly or quarterly ending values), so long as those periods are after the effective date of the Fund's registration statement.

9. Scale. The axis of the graph measuring dollar amounts may use either a linear or a logarithmic scale.

10. New Funds. A New Fund (as defined in Instruction 6 to Item 3) is not required to include the information specified by this Item in its prospectus (or annual report), unless Form N-1A (or the annual report) contains audited financial statements covering a period of at least 6 months.

11. Change in Investment Adviser. If the Fund has not had the same investment adviser for the previous 10 fiscal years, the Fund may begin the line graph on the date that the current adviser began to provide advisory services to the Fund so long as:

(a) Neither the current adviser nor any affiliate is or has been in "control" of the previous adviser under section 2(a)(9) [15 U.S.C. 80a-2(a)(9)];

(b) The current adviser employs no officer(s) of the previous adviser or employees of the previous adviser who were responsible for providing investment advisory or portfolio management services to the Fund; and

(c) The graph is accompanied by a statement explaining that previous periods during which the Fund was advised by another investment adviser are not shown.

(iii) Discuss the effect of any policy or practice of maintaining a specified level of distributions to shareholders on the Fund's investment strategies and per share net asset value during the last fiscal year. Also discuss the extent to which the Fund's distribution policy resulted in distributions of capital.

(iv) Provide a table showing the number of days the Market Price of the Fund shares was greater than the Fund's net asset value and the number of days it was less than the Fund's net asset value (i.e., premium or discount) for the most recently completed five fiscal years (or the life of the Fund, if shorter). The Fund may omit this table from the annual report if the Fund provides an Internet address at the Fund's Web site, which is publicly accessible, free of charge, that investors can use to obtain the premium/discount information required in Item 11(g)(2).

Instructions.

1. Provide the information in tabular form.
2. Express the information as a percentage of the net asset value of the Exchange-Traded Fund, using separate columns for the number of days the Market Price was greater than the Fund's net asset value and the number of days it was less than the Fund's net asset value. Round all percentages to the nearest hundredth of one percent.
3. Adjacent to the table, provide a brief explanation that: shareholders may pay more than net asset value when they buy Fund shares and receive less than net asset value when they sell those shares, because shares are bought and sold at current market prices.
4. Include a statement that the data presented represents past performance and cannot be used to predict future results.

(c) Semi-Annual Report. Every semi-annual report to shareholders required by rule 30e-1 must contain the following (which need not be audited):

(1) Financial Statements. The financial statements required by Regulation S-X for the period commencing either with:

- (i) The beginning of the Fund's fiscal year (or date of organization, if newly organized); or
- (ii) A date not later than the date after the close of the period included in the last report under rule 30e-1 and the most recent preceding fiscal year.

Instruction. Instructions 1 and 2 to Item 27(b)(1) also apply to this Item 27(c)(1).

(2) Condensed Financial Information. The condensed financial information required by Item 13(a), for the period of the report as specified by paragraph (c)(1), and the most recent preceding fiscal year.

(3) Remuneration Paid to Directors, Officers, and Others. Unless shown elsewhere in the report as part of the financial statements required by paragraph (c)(1), the aggregate remuneration paid by the Fund during the period covered by the report to the persons specified under paragraph (b)(3).

(4) Changes in and Disagreements with Accountants. The information concerning changes in and disagreements with accountants and on accounting and financial disclosure required by Item 304 of Regulation S-K [17 CFR 229.304].

(d) Annual and Semi-Annual Reports. Every annual and semi-annual report to shareholders required by rule 30e-1 must contain the following:

(1) Expense Example. The following information regarding expenses for the period:

Example

As a shareholder of the Fund, you incur two types of costs: (1) transaction costs, including sales charges (loads) on purchase payments, reinvested dividends, or other distributions; redemption fees; and exchange fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including management fees; distribution [and/or service] (12b-1) fees; and other Fund expenses. This Example is intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Fund and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The Example is based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the period and held for the entire period [insert dates].

Actual Expenses

The first line of the table below provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period. [If the Fund charges any account fees or other recurring fees that are not included in the expenses shown in the table, for example, because they are not charged to all investors, disclose the amounts of these fees, describe the accounts that are charged these fees, and explain how an investor would use this information to estimate the total ongoing expenses paid over the period and the impact of these fees on ending account value.]

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the table below provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Fund's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Fund's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Fund and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds. [If the Fund charges any account fees or other recurring fees that are not included in the expenses shown in the table, for example, because they are not charged to all investors, disclose the amounts of these fees, describe the accounts that are charged these fees, and explain how an investor would use this information in making the foregoing comparison.]

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher.

Instructions.

1. General.

(a) Round all figures in the table to the nearest cent.

(b) Include the narrative explanations in the order indicated. A Fund may modify the narrative explanations if the explanation contains comparable information to that shown, and is required to make any modifications necessary to reflect accurately the Fund's circumstances. A Fund may eliminate any parts of the narrative explanations that are inapplicable. For example, a Fund that does not charge loads need not include the statement that the Example does not reflect loads or that costs would be higher if loads were included.

(c) The Fund's expense ratio shown in the footnote to the table should be calculated in the manner required by Instruction 4(b) to Item 13(a) using the expenses for the Fund's most recent fiscal half-year (the Fund's second fiscal half-year in the case of an annual report). Express the expense ratio on an annualized basis.

(i) If the Fund is a Feeder Fund, reflect the aggregate expenses of the Feeder Fund and the Master Fund. In a footnote to the Example, state that the Example reflects the expenses of both the Feeder and Master Funds.

(ii) If the report covers more than one Class of a Multiple Class Fund or more than one Feeder Fund that invests in the same Master Fund, provide a separate Example for each Class or Feeder Fund.

2-7B Federal Securities Act of 1933 PART B

(e) If the Fund is an Exchange-Traded Fund:

(i) Modify the narrative explanation to state that investors may pay brokerage commissions on their purchases and sales of Exchange-Traded Fund shares, which are not reflected in the example; and

(ii) If the Fund issues or redeems shares in creation units of not less than 25,000 shares each, exclude any fees charged for the purchase and redemption of the Fund's creation units.

2. Computation.

(i) In determining the Fund's "actual expenses" for purposes of this example, include all expenses that are deducted from the Fund's assets or charged to all shareholder accounts, including "Management Fees," "Distribution [and/or Service] (12b-1) Fees," and "Other Expenses" as those terms are defined in Instruction 3 to Item 3 of this form as modified by Instructions 2(a)(ii) and (c)(i) to this Item. Reflect recurring and non-recurring fees charged to all investors other than any exchange fees, sales charges (loads), or fees charged upon redemption of the Fund's shares. The amount of expenses deducted from the Fund's assets are the amounts shown as expenses in the Fund's statement of operations (including increases resulting from complying with paragraph 2(g) of rule 6-07 of Regulation S-X [17 CFR 210.6-07]).

(ii) For purposes of this Item 27(d)(1), "Other Expenses" include extraordinary expenses as determined under generally accepted accounting principles (see Accounting Principles Board Opinion No. 30). If extraordinary expenses were incurred that materially affected the Fund's "Other Expenses," the Fund may disclose in a footnote to the Example what "actual expenses" would have been had the extraordinary expenses not been included.

(b) Assume reinvestment of all dividends and distributions.

(i) Base the percentages of "actual expenses" on amounts incurred during the Fund's most recent fiscal half-year (the Fund's second fiscal half-year in the case of an annual report). "Actual expenses" should reflect actual expenses after expense reimbursement or fee waiver arrangements that reduced expenses during the most recent fiscal half-year.

(ii) If there have been any increases or decreases in Fund expenses that occurred during the Fund's most recent fiscal half-year (or that have occurred or are expected to occur during the current fiscal year) that would have materially affected the information in the Example had those changes been in place throughout the most recent fiscal half-year, restate in a footnote to the Example the expense information using the current fees as if they had been in effect throughout the entire most recent fiscal half-year. A change in Fund expenses does not include a decrease in expenses as a percentage of assets due to economies of scale or breakpoints in a fee arrangement resulting from an increase in the Fund's assets.

(d) Reflect any shareholder account fees collected by more than one Fund by allocating the total amount of the fees collected during the Fund's most recent fiscal half-year (the Fund's second fiscal half-year in the case of an annual report) for all such Funds to each Fund in proportion to the relative average net assets of the Fund. A Fund that charges account fees based on a minimum account requirement exceeding $1,000 may adjust its account fees based on the amount of the fee in relation to the Fund's minimum account requirement.

(2) Graphical Representation of Holdings. One or more tables, charts, or graphs depicting the portfolio holdings of the Fund by reasonably identifiable categories (e.g., type of security, industry sector, geographic region, credit quality, or maturity) showing the percentage of net asset value or total investments attributable to each. The categories and the basis of presentation (e.g., net asset value or total investments) should be selected, and the presentation should be formatted, in a manner reasonably designed to depict clearly the types of investments made by the Fund, given its investment objectives. Credit quality should be the ratings grade assigned by a nationally recognized statistical rating organization ("NRSRO"), as that term is used in paragraphs (c)(2)(vi)(E), (F), and (H) of Rule 15c3-1 under the Exchange Act [17 CFR 240.15c3-1(c)(2)(vi)(E), (F), and (H)]. The fund should use ratings of only one NRSRO.

(3) Statement Regarding Availability of Quarterly Portfolio Schedule. A statement that: (i) the Fund files its complete schedule of portfolio holdings with the Commission for the first and third quarters of each fiscal year on Form N-Q; (ii) the Fund's Forms N-Q are available on the Commission's website at <http://www.sec.gov>; (iii) the Fund's Forms N-Q may be reviewed and copied at the Commission's Public Reference Room in Washington, DC, and that information on the operation of the Public Reference Room may be obtained by calling 1-800-SEC-0330; and (iv) if the Fund makes the information on Form N-Q available to shareholders on its website or upon request, a description of how the information may be obtained from the Fund.

(4) Statement Regarding Availability of Proxy Voting Policies and Procedures. A statement that a description of the policies and procedures that the Fund uses to determine how to vote proxies relating to portfolio securities is available (i) without charge, upon request, by calling a specified toll-free (or collect) telephone number; (ii) on the Fund's website, if applicable; and (iii) on the Commission's website at <http://www.sec.gov>.

Instruction. When a Fund (or financial intermediary through which shares of the Fund may be purchased or sold) receives a request for a description of the policies and procedures that the Fund uses to determine how to vote proxies, the Fund (or financial intermediary) must send the information disclosed in response to Item 17(f) of this Form, within three business days of receipt of the request, by first-class mail or other means designed to ensure equally prompt delivery.

(5) Statement Regarding Availability of Proxy Voting Record. A statement that information regarding how the Fund voted proxies relating to portfolio securities during the most recent 12-month period ended June 30 is available (i) without charge, upon request, by calling a specified toll-free (or collect) telephone number; or on or through the Fund's website at a specified Internet address; or both; and (ii) on the Commission's website at <http://www.sec.gov>.

Instructions.

1. If a Fund discloses that the Fund's proxy voting record is available by calling a toll-free (or collect) telephone number, and the Fund (or financial intermediary through which shares of the Fund may be purchased or sold) receives a request for this information, the Fund (or financial intermediary) must send the information disclosed in the Fund's most recently filed report on Form N-PX, within three business days of receipt of the request, by first-class mail or other means designed to ensure equally prompt delivery.

2. If a Fund discloses that the Fund's proxy voting record is available on or through its website, the Fund must make available free of charge the information disclosed in the Fund's most recently filed report on Form N-PX on or through its website as soon as reasonably practicable after filing the report with the Commission. The information disclosed in the Fund's most recently filed report on Form N-PX must remain available on or through the Fund's website for as long as the Fund remains subject to the requirements of Rule 30b1-4 (17 CFR 270.30b1-4) and discloses that the Fund's proxy voting record is available on or through its website.

(6) Statement Regarding Basis for Approval of Investment Advisory Contract. If the board of directors approved any investment advisory contract during the Fund's most recent fiscal half-year, discuss in reasonable detail the material factors and the conclusions with respect thereto that formed the basis for the board's approval. Include the following in the discussion:

(i) Factors relating to both the board's selection of the investment adviser and approval of the advisory fee and any other amounts to be paid by the Fund under the contract. This would include, but not be limited to, a discussion of the nature, extent, and quality of the services to be provided by the investment adviser; the investment performance of the Fund and the investment adviser; the costs of the services to be provided and profits to be realized by the investment adviser and its affiliates from the relationship with the Fund; the extent to which economies of scale would be realized as the Fund grows; and whether fee levels reflect these economies of scale for the benefit of Fund investors. Also indicate in the discussion whether the board relied upon comparisons of the services to be rendered and the amounts to be paid under the contract with those under other investment advisory contracts, such as contracts of the same and other investment advisers with other registered investment companies or other types of clients (e.g., pension funds and other institutional investors). If the board relied upon such comparisons, describe the comparisons that were relied on and how they assisted the board in concluding that the contract should be approved; and

(ii) If applicable, any benefits derived or to be derived by the investment adviser from the relationship with the Fund such as soft dollar arrangements by which brokers provide research to the Fund or its investment adviser in return for allocating Fund brokerage.

Instructions.

1. Board approvals covered by this Item include both approvals of new investment advisory contracts and approvals of contract renewals. Investment advisory contracts covered by this Item include subadvisory contracts.
2. Conclusory statements or a list of factors will not be considered sufficient disclosure. Relate the factors to the specific circumstances of the Fund and the investment advisory contract and state how the board evaluated each factor. For example, it is not sufficient to state that the board considered the amount of the investment advisory fee without stating what the board concluded about the amount of the fee and how that affected its decision to approve the contract.
3. If any factor enumerated in paragraph (d)(6)(i) of this Item is not relevant to the board's evaluation of an investment advisory contract, note this and explain the reasons why that factor is not relevant.

CHAPTER 8 The Trust Indenture Act of 1939

2-8 Federal Securities Act of 1933

AUTHOR: Howard M. Friedman This chapter was prepared by Howard M. Friedman, Professor of Law, Emeritus, University of Toledo. The author wishes to thank Mr. John Brousseau for his valuable research assistance in preparing the original version of this chapter and the University of Toledo for its research support through its Faculty Research Awards and Fellowships Program.

Summary of This Chapter

The Trust Indenture Act was designed to protect investors who purchase publicly distributed debt securities. The terms used to describe the debt instruments involved include "bond," "note," "debenture," "commercial paper," "equipment trust certificate," and "collateral trust bond." The Trust Indenture Act, the terms of which are closely integrated with the Securities Act, focuses on the terms of the indenture to achieve investor protection by imposing minimum obligations on trustees and ensuring that trustees have the powers and resources to meet their obligations. See § 8.01 infra.

The Trust Indenture Act identifies the abuses that led to its adoption in 1939. The final version of the Act was designed to remedy these perceived abuses and to reflect certain concerns of brokers and businesses. See § 8.02 infra.

As amended in 1990, the Trust Indenture Act provides that specified substantive provisions concerning the trustee's powers, duties, and qualifications as well as the issuer's duties are a part of and govern every qualified indenture, whether qualified before or after 1990. The "business provisions" of the indenture are left unregulated. Breaches of the indenture's provisions are enforceable only by the trustee or the bondholders through court proceedings. The statutorily required provisions of the indenture are governed by federal law while the "business provisions" of the instrument are governed by state law. See § 8.03 infra.

The Trust Indenture Act applies only to debt securities and interests in debt securities. The Commission has excluded interests not represented by a separate physical certificate and interests in which there is no fixed obligation to pay a sum of money from the coverage of the Act. Only primary distributions require indenture qualification; sales by persons acting as conduits for the issuer, however, are not exempt from the Act's provisions. The brokers' transaction exemption under the Securities Act is incorporated into the Trust Indenture Act. See § 8.04 infra.

The Trust Indenture Act generally requires that all securities covered by the Act be issued under an indenture that meets the requirements of the Act. Exemptions are available under the Act that permit an issuer to issue not more than $5 million of debt securities during a twelve month period without an indenture, or, if the indenture limits the amount of securities that may be outstanding under it at any time to $10 million the indentures' substantive terms need not fully comply with the provisions of the Act. In certain cases, the Commission has required the integration of separate transactions or issues under the exemptive provisions. See § 8.05 infra.

The Trust Indenture Act provides for the exemption of certain securities. Issuers may apply to the Commission for an order to exempt securities issued under open-end provisions of pre-1939 indentures. The Trust Indenture Act was closely integrated with the Securities Act and, with two exceptions (the exemptions for recapitalizations involving exchanges with existing security holders and judicially and administratively approved reorganizations) the exemptions under Securities Act Section 3 were incorporated into the Trust Indenture Act. Several provisions cover exemptions from the Trust Indenture Act for securities issued in connection with the creation and maintenance of a secondary market in real estate mortgages. Other exemptions from the Trust Indenture Act involve certain foreign government securities, guarantees of exempted securities, issues of limited dollar amounts and bankruptcy related commercial notes. The Commission may grant other exemptions by order or rule, and has done so for certain cross-border offerings of Canadian securities and for certain exchange offers and business combination transactions by foreign private issuers. See § 8.06 infra.

The Trust Indenture Act also provides for the exemption of debt securities sold in transactions that are also exempt under Securities Act Section 4. Thus, the exemptions for certain private placements, offers and sales to "accredited investors" of up to $5 million, and sales in large dollar amounts of promissory notes secured by certain first lien real estate mortgages are incorporated by the Trust Indenture Act. See § 8.07 infra.

The Trust Indenture Act specifies the mandatory provisions that are part of every qualified indenture as well as permissible provisions, many of which are included by operation of law unless indenture language to the contrary appears. Other provisions, some of which are standardized and others negotiable, may also be included. Generally, four alternative formats for qualified indentures are available: an indenture which relies upon the automatic incorporation provisions of the Trust Indenture Act; the conventional unified document; the two-part indenture recommended by the American Bar Foundation; and the Revised Model Simplified Indenture. See § 8.08 infra.

Filing with the Commission under the Securities Act and the Trust Indenture Act is closely coordinated. Under the Trust Indenture Act, the indenture is deemed qualified when the Securities Act registration statement becomes effective. The issuer of debt securities must file with the Commission: the Securities Act registration statement; Form T-1, the statement of eligibility and qualification of the trustee; and a copy of the indenture with a table of contents. The Securities Act prospectus must contain a description of the debt securities being registered and of the indenture. See § 8.09 infra.

Supplemental indentures that make changes in the rights of indenture security holders or effect other indenture amendments may be entered into provided they comply with the provisions of the Trust Indenture Act. Shelf registrations of debt securities under Rule 415 present special problems regarding the form of a supplemental indenture when they are needed. SEC rules adopted in July 2005 will simplify the process by permitting large companies to add debt securities to shelf registrations by post-effective amendment. See § 8.10 infra.

Securities that are exempt from registration under the Securities Act but not under the Trust Indenture Act (certain recapitalizations and reorganizations) require indenture qualification. In such cases, the requirement of indenture qualification generally depends on whether a "sale" has occurred. If no Securities Act registration statement is to be filed, the issuer's application for qualification of the indenture on Form T-3, the trustee's statement of eligibility and qualification on Form T-1, and all other items required for qualification when a Securities Act registration is required must be filed with the Commission. See § 8.11 infra.

2-8 Federal Securities Act of 1933

The Trust Indenture Act requires that under every qualified indenture there always be at least one institutional trustee with a combined capital and surplus of at least $150,000. A permissive provision may provide that the trustee's capital and surplus be determined by reference to the trustee's most recently published report of condition. Foreign business entities may act as the institutional trustee only if permitted by Commission order or rule. The Act permits the use of one or more co-trustees, who may be individuals, but the trustees' rights, powers, duties and obligations must be imposed on and carried out by the required institutional trustee, either alone, or jointly with the co-trustees. See § 8.12 infra.

The obligor and its affiliates may not serve as indenture trustee. Specific post-default conflicts of interest require the resignation or removal of the trustee unless the Commission, in the case of certain defaults not involving non-payment permits a delay in the obligation to resign. The prohibited conflicts include: dual trusteeships (with some exceptions); prohibited affiliations between the trustee and the obligor or underwriters; beneficial ownership of the trustee's voting securities by the obligor, underwriter, or their affiliates; direct or indirect ownership by the trustee of securities of the obligor and underwriters; and the trustee's being a creditor of the obligor, the trustee's ownership of the obligor's or underwriters' securities in fiduciary capacities; and the trustee's being a creditor of the obligor. See § 8.13 infra.

Under every qualified indenture, the obligor must furnish to the indenture trustee: bondholder lists; copies of Exchange Act reports; annual certification of compliance with conditions and covenants; evidence of recording the indenture and compliance with any conditions precedent; and certificates of fair value. Permissive provisions obligating the issuer to furnish the trustee other evidence of compliance with indenture conditions and covenants may also be included in the indenture. See § 8.14 infra.

The Trust Indenture Act imposes certain duties on the indenture trustee prior to any default by the obligor. The trustee must provide annual reports and periodic reports on certain developments to indenture security holders and to give notice to the security holders of all defaults known to the trustee within ninety days of their occurrence. Unless provided to the contrary in the indenture, the trustee's liability is limited to the performance of the duties specified in the indenture. The trustee, though, must examine certificates and opinions to determine if they comply with the indenture's requirements. A trustee's resignation is effective only upon appointment and acceptance by a successor trustee. See § 8.15 infra.

Among the servicing functions that must be provided for debt securities, only the duties of the paying agent are regulated by the Trust Indenture Act. The Act requires that each paying agent hold all funds received by it for the payment of principal or interest in trust for the indenture security holders or the indenture trustee and give the trustee notice of any default by an obligor in the payment of principal or interest. See § 8.16 infra.

The Trust Indenture Act imposes an enhanced duty of care and skill on trustees after default and to give trustee adequate powers to carry out their duties. The Act grants the trustee the authority, before and after default, to file proofs of claim and other papers in judicial proceedings and to recover judgment in its own name; indentures generally give the trustee other post-default remedial powers not specified in the Act. The Act permits the trustee prior to default to be a direct creditor of the obligor on the indenture securities, but requires the apportionment of amounts collected by the trustee during a specified time. The trustee is also empowered to represent the interest of indenture security holders in bankruptcy proceedings. See § 8.17 infra.

The Trust Indenture Act provides for direct action to be taken by the indenture security holders to enforce their rights, such as requirements that facilitate communications between bondholders and guarantee the bondholder's right to sue for principal and interest, and permissive provisions that authorize bondholders to postpone interest payments and waive past defaults, direct the trustee in conducting remedial proceedings, and remove the trustee. The Act permits indentures to include no-action clauses (except to enforce payment of principal or interest) to prevent small numbers of bondholders from acting contrary to the best interests of bondholders in general. See § 8.18 infra.

2-8 Federal Securities Act of 1933

The indenture trustee who fails to carry out its obligations under a qualified indenture may be liable to injured bondholders under state law breach of duty claims or a federal private right of action explicitly recognized by the 1990 amendments to the Trust Indenture Act. See § 8.19 infra.

The Trust Indenture Act creates a private right of action for damages in favor of a person who relies on a materially false or misleading statement in a Trust Indenture Act document. The 1990 amendments to the Trust Indenture Act created some uncertainty as to whether the Commission's enforcement power extends beyond ensuring initial indenture qualification and enforcing prohibitions against false or misleading statements in filings made with the Commission. Willful violations of the Trust Indenture Act, presumably including failure to comply with mandatory obligations imposed by law under the 1990 amendments may result in criminal prosecution. See § 8.20 infra.

The Trust Indenture Act does not preempt state jurisdiction provided the state law does not conflict with federal law. Several states have adopted trust indenture requirements for securities offered or sold in state. See § 8.21 infra.

CHAPTER 8 The Trust Indenture Act of 1939

2-8 Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 8.01

§ 8.01 Introduction

The Trust Indenture Act was designed to protect investors who purchase publicly distributed debt securities. The terms used to describe the debt instruments involved include "bond," "note," "debenture," "commercial paper," "equipment trust certificate," and "collateral trust bond." The Trust Indenture Act, the terms of which are closely integrated with the Securities Act, achieves investor protection by imposing minimum obligations on trustees and ensuring that trustees had the powers and resources to meet their obligations.

Debt financing by corporations takes numerous forms. Sometimes funds are borrowed directly from one or a group of banks, or directly from other institutional lenders. At other times funds are borrowed through the sale of debt securities to public investors. The Trust Indenture Act of 1939 n1 (hereafter referred to as the "Act" or the "TIA") governs some aspects of debt financing from public investors.

The terms employed to describe the different debt instruments depend generally upon whether the instruments are long or short term, whether they are issued under an indenture, and whether they are secured by collateral or are unsecured. While the term "bond" is sometimes used to refer to all long term debt evidenced by securities, "bonds" are, more accurately long term debt instruments secured by a mortgage on property of the corporate issuer. "Bonds" are to be contrasted with "debentures" which are long term uncollateralized debt securities. Debenture holders are general unsecured creditors of the issuer. n2

There is some disagreement over the use of the term "note." Sometimes the term is employed to describe any comparatively short term corporate debt instrument. n3 At other times, "note" is used to describe a debt instrument of any duration that is issued pursuant to a loan agreement directly between the borrower and the lender, as opposed to an instrument issued under an indenture with a third party as trustee. n4

Within these broad outlines, there are also rather specific subcategories of debt instruments. "Commercial paper," for example, refers to high quality short-term unsecured promissory notes traded in the organized money markets.

Maturities vary from one day to nine months, but are most commonly between 30 and 90 days, at which time the paper is usually rolled over. n5 Commercial paper is generally exempt from both Securities Act registration and Trust Indenture Act qualification. n6

Debt instruments secured by more exotic forms of collateral often are referred to by special titles. For example, "equipment trust certificates" are rather complex debt instruments used to finance the purchase of railroad cars, airplanes, or similar equipment, secured by the equipment whose title has been transferred to a trustee and then leased back or sold under a conditional sale agreement to the railroad, airline, or other borrower. n7 "Collateral trust bonds" are debt securities collateralized by the pledge of other securities, often those of a subsidiary. n8

In the volatile markets of the 1980s, a number of innovative types of debt securities were created to provide greater flexibility in terms and the ability to come to market rapidly. These included medium term notes which were offered on a continuous basis or in multiple tranches, debt securities with variable interest rates, and debt securities denominated in or indexed to foreign currencies. n9 In addition, the securities markets became increasingly internationalized. n10

The Trust Indenture Act was designed to protect investors who purchase publicly distributed debt securities. The provisions of the Trust Indenture Act are closely integrated with those of the Securities Act of 1933. In registered offerings, compliance with the requirements of the Trust Indenture Act is a condition to the Commission's ordering effective a Securities Act registration statement relating to debt securities. n11

The Trust Indenture Act focuses on the terms of the indenture as the method of achieving investor protection. An indenture is a contract between the issuer of debt securities and a trustee, generally a bank or trust company. n12 Section 303(7) of the Trust Indenture Act defines "indenture" broadly to mean "any mortgage, deed of trust, trust or other indenture or similar instrument or agreement" under which securities are issued, whether or not any property is mortgaged under it. n13

Historically, the corporate indenture originated as a mortgage of property securing the corporate debtor's obligation on its bonds. n14 The indenture trustee was the mortgagee, holding the mortgage for the benefit of numerous bondholders. The indenture developed into a complex document that largely centralized the enforcement of bondholders' rights in the trustee, even where unsecured debentures were being issued. n15 Courts, however, were in disagreement as to whether the indenture trustee stood in a true fiduciary relationship with bondholders, or was something less than a fiduciary. n16

The Trust Indenture Act of 1939 was an attempt by Congress to impose minimum obligations on trustees, and to assure that trustees had the powers and resources to meet those obligations. In doing so, Congress created an immensely complex statute. This complexity was for many years a deterrent to the updating of the Act by later Congresses. n17 Changes in the securities markets and in trust institutions since 1939 however finally led to significant statutory revisions. n18 In late 1987, at the urging of the SEC, a number of amendments were introduced in Congress as the Trust Indenture Reform Act of 1987. n19 The proposals in slightly modified form were enacted as Title IV of the Securities Acts Amendments of 1990. n20

There is no basic or historically established distinction between 'debentures' and 'notes.' There has emerged, however, a clear and useful distinction in modern usage. According to this usage, in the area of long-term debt securities, a security is properly termed a 'note' when it is not issued pursuant to an indenture and there is no indenture trustee. However, it may be, and usually is, issued to one or a few purchasers pursuant to a purchase or loan agreement. ...

CHAPTER 8 The Trust Indenture Act of 1939

2-8 Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 8.02

AUTHOR: Howard M. Friedman This chapter was prepared by Howard M. Friedman, Professor of Law, Emeritus, University of Toledo. § 8.02 History and Purpose of the Trust Indenture Act

The Trust Indenture Act identifies the abuses that led to its adoption in 1939. The final version of the Act was designed to remedy these perceived abuses and to reflect certain concerns of brokers and businesses.

In 1934, the Senate version of the Securities Exchange Act would have imposed registration and disclosure obligations on bondholder protective committees formed in connection with corporate reorganizations or liquidations. n1 The Conference Committee rejected this proposal and instead adopted Section 211 of the 1934 Act n2 directing the Commission to undertake a study of protective and reorganization committees. n3 The report by the Commission was issued in eight parts over the next several years. n4 It led ultimately to the enactment of the Chandler Act in 1938 dealing with corporate reorganizations under the Bankruptcy Act, n5 and to the enactment of the Trust Indenture Act in 1939. n6

Abuses of the pre-1939 period were identified by Congress in the statutory findings set out in the Trust Indenture Act. n7 Widely dispersed bondholders were unable to effectively enforce their rights without the existence of an indenture trustee with adequate powers and responsibilities. n8 When a trustee was provided for, the indenture often imposed few obligations on the trustee and often contained broad exculpatory clauses protecting the trustee. n9 Trustees often had conflicts of interest that interfered with the performance of their duties to bondholders or had inadequate resources to carry out their duties. n10 Corporate obligors in many cases were not required to furnish to either the trustee or bondholders current financial information or information about the obligor's compliance with indenture covenants. n11 Indeed, even names and addresses of bondholders were generally unavailable. n12 Provisions in indentures were sometimes misleading, and, in any event, full and fair disclosure to investors of the effect of indenture provisions was lacking. n13 Finally, little opportunity existed for potential investors to change the situation since the timing and complexity of the drafting of the indenture precluded any meaningful participation by them in the negotiation of the indenture's terms. n14

The Trust Indenture Act was designed to remedy these perceived abuses. n15 The drafting of the Act, however, was affected by the lobbying efforts of banks and businesses:

Banking institutions which frequently acted as trustees registered vigorous opposition to further regulation of business under what they called the "dominion theory." They viewed the [Securities and Exchange] Commission as a new agency seeking to expand its regulatory role and increasingly to encroach upon private business, and the registration procedures as so time consuming and costly that necessary financing would cease to be available. n16

The approach of the Trust Indenture Act ultimately reflected these concerns of banks and businesses. Indeed, early versions of the bill, which would have given the Commission discretionary authority to promulgate rules regarding many of the terms of the indenture, were ultimately rejected in favor of precise enumeration of the required terms by Congress. n17

CHAPTER 8 The Trust Indenture Act of 1939

2-8 Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 8.03

AUTHOR: Howard M. Friedman This chapter was prepared by Howard M. Friedman, Professor of Law, Emeritus, University of Toledo. § 8.03 Unique Regulatory Approach of the Trust Indenture Act

As amended in 1990, the Trust Indenture Act provides that specified substantive provisions concerning the trustee's powers, duties, and qualifications as well as the issuer's duties are a part of and govern every qualified indenture, whether qualified before or after 1990. The "business provisions" of the indenture are left unregulated. Breaches of the indenture's provisions are enforceable by the trustee or the bondholders through court proceedings. The statutorily required provisions of the indenture are governed by federal law while the "business provisions" of the instrument are governed by state law.

A trust indenture statute which, like the Securities Act, would have given the Commission ongoing enforcement powers would have been unacceptable to business interests in 1939. Further, investors would not have been adequately protected by a disclosure statute modeled after the Securities Act of 1933. n1 The adhesion nature of lending arrangements between corporations and bondholders required that the terms of the indenture itself be regulated.

As originally enacted, the Trust Indenture Act required in part that every indenture qualified under the Act contain specified substantive provisions relating to the trustee's powers, duties, and qualifications, and other provisions relating to the issuer's duties. n2 As amended in 1990, Section 318(c) automatically makes these provisions a part of every qualified indenture, whether or not the provisions are physically contained in the indenture. Prior to 1990, the Act also contained a number of permissive provisions that could be placed in the indenture. The 1990 amendments automatically make many of these part of every qualified indenture unless the indenture specifically excludes them. The Act also prohibits certain exculpatory clauses from being inserted in the indenture and precludes certain interferences with bondholders' rights to enforce their claims to principal and interest payments. Section 318(a) of the Act provides that the Trust Indenture Act's provisions control any indenture terms that are inconsistent with those provisions.

The Act, however, leaves the "business provisions" of the indenture unregulated. Section 318(b) of the Trust Indenture Act permits a qualified indenture to contain any provisions not in contravention of the Trust Indenture Act, in addition to the provisions specifically authorized by the Act. The Trust Indenture Act imposes no controls on such things as interest rates, financial covenants, maturity dates, or the definition of when a default occurs. The issuer is free to draft these provisions in light of prevailing market conditions and accepted customs of the securities industry, n3 but many business provisions typically follow a boilerplate form developed over time. n4

The automatic incorporation of substantive terms into the indenture that is provided for by the 1990 amendments to the Act accomplished two kinds of efficiencies. First, it eliminated the need for the Commission staff to examine indentures to assure that the mandatory provisions were in fact included. n5 Indeed staff limitations in recent years had jeopardized investor protection by permitting a large proportion of indentures to become qualified without undergoing staff review. n6 Second, the automatic incorporation of required indenture provisions permits issuers to save substantial legal and printing costs by omitting their verbatim inclusion in the indenture. n7 Over the years, much energy had been devoted to devising ways to shorten the required verbiage. n8 Indentures now need make no mention at all of mandatory provisions, although (while not required) issuers may still wish to include a short statement to the effect that the indenture is governed by the provisions of the Trust Indenture Act.

The decision by Congress in 1939 to structure the Act to prescribe the substantive terms of each indenture accomplished the goal of eliminating ongoing Commission enforcement of indenture provisions. Once the indenture was initially qualified, the Commission was largely out of the picture. n9 Later breaches of duties were enforceable only by the trustee or by bondholders through court proceedings. Indeed, Section 309(e) of the Act provides that "[n]othing in this title shall be construed as empowering the Commission to conduct an investigation or other proceeding for the purpose of determining whether the provisions of an indenture which has been qualified under this title are being complied with, or to enforce such provisions."

The 1990 amendments to the Act not only provide for automatic incorporation into the indenture of the Act's provisions, they also state that the provisions of the Act, which impose a duty upon any person, "govern every qualified indenture." n10 The Senate Report described the effect of this language as follows:

This Title would convert the mandatory contractual terms in the Act to direct statutory commands and impose those terms on any indenture qualified under the Act. In other words, the Act's mandatory terms would govern the rights and duties under a qualified indenture both as provisions of positive law and as provisions of the indenture contract. n11

In mandating compliance with the standards of the Act by obligors, trustees and paying agents, separately from any contractual obligation that arises because of the constructive inclusion of mandatory terms in the indenture, the 1990 amendments appear to have substantially expanded the federal government's enforcement role. Since failure to comply with these standards would be a direct violation of the TIA, it would appear that such non-compliance could be prosecuted under TIA Section 325. n12 It is unclear, however, how this is affected by the provisions of Section 309(e) which were retained after 1990 and which preclude the Commission from conducting any investigation to determine whether the provisions of a qualified indenture have been complied with, or from enforcing the provisions of a qualified indenture.

Section 318(c) not only applies the TIA requirements, regardless of the contents of the indenture, to indentures that were qualified after the enactment of the 1990 amendments, but also applies the requirements retroactively to previously qualified indentures. n13 However, optional provisions that require an explicit opt-out for newly qualified indentures will not be deemed to be added to previously qualified indentures that did not contain them.

The original statutory structure led to significant confusion over the relationship between state and federal law when private parties attempted to enforce indenture provisions. The indenture contract and mortgage are basically documents governed by state contract and property law. Clearly, the business provisions of the indenture are governed by state law. The more complex question, and one focused on by the courts only many years after the Act's passage, was whether interpretation of the statutorily mandated provisions was to be governed by federal law.

In Morris v. Cantor,ⁿ¹⁴ Judge Ward strongly affirmed the federal law nature of the required indenture provisions:

[T]he remedy Congress chose was simply to state precisely which terms were required, permitted and prohibited in the contract. It viewed the problem as nationwide in scope and sought a nationwide solution. ... Accordingly, this legislation must be viewed as an indirect method of imposing nationally uniform and clearly defined obligations upon those associated with the issuance of corporate debt. The Court holds that the statute thereby 'created liability' as surely as though it had directly required the same actions and standards of behavior of trustees and obligors. ...ⁿ¹⁵

This interpretation leads to a federalization of the statutorily required portions of the indenture contract, while the other "business" portions of the same document are governed by state law.

Language added in 1990 to Section 322(b) of the Act was intended by Congress to confirm that prescribed indenture provisions are governed by federal law.ⁿ¹⁶

In 1996, some in Congress, under the rubric of deregulation, proposed repeal of the TIA, or at least study of the need for its repeal. Opposition by corporate trustees prevented these initiatives from being enacted into law.ⁿ¹⁷

CHAPTER 8 The Trust Indenture Act of 1939

2-8 Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 8.04

AUTHOR: Howard M. Friedman This chapter was prepared by Howard M. Friedman, Professor of Law, Emeritus, University of Toledo. The author wishes to thank Mr. John Brousseau for his valuable research assistance in preparing the original version of this chapter and the University of Toledo for its research support through its Faculty Research Awards and Fellowships Program.

§ 8.04 Coverage of the Act

The Trust Indenture Act applies only to debt securities and interest in debt securities. The Commission has excluded interests not represented by a separate physical certificate and interests in which there is no fixed obligation to pay a sum of money from the coverage of the Act. Only primary distributions require indenture qualification; sales by persons acting as conduits for the issuer, however, are not exempt from the Act's provisions. The brokers' transaction exemption under the Securities Act is incorporated into the Trust Indenture Act.

The Trust Indenture Act applies only to debt securities and interests in debt securities. It does not apply to stock. n1 More specifically, Section 304(a)(1) of the Act limits its application to:

- (1) any "note, bond, debenture, or evidence of indebtedness, whether or not secured";
- (2) any "certificate of interest or participation in" such debt securities; n2 or
- (3) any "temporary certificate for, or guarantee n3 of" such debt securities or certificates of interest. n4

Certain debt securities exempted from Securities Act coverage under Section 3 of the Securities Act are also exempt from the Trust Indenture Act under Section 304(a)(4). For example, short term commercial paper is exempt under Securities Act Section 3(a)(3) n5 and Trust Indenture Act Section 304(a)(4). n6

The SEC has permitted the sale of "Tuition Certificates" under a private IRC § 529 pre-paid tuition plan without compliance with the TIA. It apparently accepted the argument that the certificates are not "securities" because they are not purchased for investment, but instead in order to receive future educational benefits for use and consumption. n7

In its interpretation of Section 304(a)(1), the Commission has tended to exclude from Trust Indenture Act coverage interests not represented by a separate physical certificate. In several no-action letters, for example, interests in liquidating trusts, or contingent payment rights granted in connection with a business acquisition, were found to be exempt from qualification under the Trust Indenture Act where the interests were not evidenced by a certificate and were not transferable except by will, intestate succession, or operation of law. n8 In other cases, even where certificates were issued by liquidating trusts, since they were issued to shareholders they were found not to be debt securities requiring qualification under the Trust Indenture Act, even though registration under the Securities Act of 1933 might have been required. n9

The Commission's emphasis on the existence of physical certificates seems to be an attempt to distinguish "securities" from commercial or open account indebtedness. So, an arrangement equivalent to deferred cash payments in a stock repurchase plan n10 or an arrangement for paying off commercial or open account creditors in future installments n11 is not covered by the Trust Indenture Act.

While the Commission usually has not focused on the tests applied by the courts under the Securities Act of 1933 and the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 to deal with the analogous issue of when a promissory note is or is not a security, n12 it does seem to have taken the position that when deferred payment arrangements relate to obligations originally evidenced by a security, qualification is necessary even where physical certificates are not issued to represent the deferred payment rights. n13

In situations such as those involving interests in litigation proceeds n14 and interests in profit sharing plans, n15 the Commission has focused on the absence of a fixed obligation to pay an amount of money to holders of the interests as the basis for concluding that the interests are not debt securities covered by the Trust Indenture Act.

The Commission's focus on whether an instrument involves a fixed obligation to pay a sum of money involves the problem of distinguishing debt securities from equity investments. n16 Although similar problems have arisen most often under the Internal Revenue Code, n17 tax law does not seem to present the most relevant precedents. The close relationship that has existed historically and in underlying purpose between the Trust Indenture Act and the federal bankruptcy laws should make precedents relating to bankruptcy liquidations and reorganizations the most relevant for Trust Indenture Act purposes. Distinctions between debt claims and equity interests must typically be made in bankruptcy proceedings. n18 Bankruptcy courts generally focus on the state law's characterization of an instrument as debt or equity. n19

Section 304(a)(2) of the Trust Indenture Act further excludes from the Act's coverage "any certificate of interest or participation in two or more securities having substantially different rights and privileges, n20 or a temporary certificate for any such certificate." Thus, the Act would apply to certificates of participation into which a large mortgage and note had been divided, n21 but would not cover interests in a mutual fund whose portfolio consisted of various debt securities, since the portfolio securities in which the mutual fund stockholders have an interest have substantially different rights. n22 The provisions of the Act would also not apply where a certificate involved interests in more than one security of a single issuer. n23

The Trust Indenture Act's requirements that debt securities be issued only under a qualified indenture apply only to public distributions of debt by or on behalf of the issuer. Even though registration under the Securities Act is required for secondary distributions, i.e., for sales by or on behalf of control persons (affiliates), only primary distributions require indenture qualification. The force of the Act is directed only at the creation of the indenture by the issuer. This result is accomplished rather cryptically by Section 304(b), which exempts from the indenture qualification requirements any transaction that would be exempt from the Securities Act "but for the last sentence of paragraph (11) of section 2 of such Act" which is the provision that brings within the Securities Act's registration requirements most public distributions by or on behalf of affiliates. n24

Section 304(b), however, does not exempt from the provisions of the Trust Indenture Act sales by persons acting as conduits for the issuer. Thus, an institutional investor who acquired debt securities not qualified under the Trust

Indenture Act in an exempt private offering would violate not only the Securities Act but also Section 306 of the Trust Indenture Act if the investor resold the debt securities without registration and indenture qualification, unless the investor complied with Securities Act Rule 144 or found some other exemption. n25 At one time, it was common to include in the loan agreement for notes sold to institutional investors a "debenturizing" provision so that institutional holders could exchange their notes for debentures issued under a qualified indenture if the institution desired to resell in a nonexempt transaction. This provision is not frequently included in loan agreements today. n26

Section 304(b) of the Trust Indenture Act also incorporates the brokers' transactions exemption of Securities Act Section 4(4). n27 Thus, a broker who sells a debt security, not issued under a qualified indenture, is not in violation of the Trust Indenture Act if the purchaser was not solicited to buy the security, the broker performed only the normal broker's functions, and no more than the usual and customary broker's commission was paid. If, however, the broker is aware that he is acting as a conduit for the issuer in distributing unqualified debt securities, the broker would be acting as an underwriter and not merely as a broker and the brokers' transactions exemption would be unavailable. n28

Like the registration provisions of the Securities Act of 1933, the Trust Indenture Act's provisions are directed at protecting U.S. residents and citizens. Regulation S provides a safe harbor under the Securities Act of 1933 for offers and sales made outside the United States in compliance with the terms of the regulation. The Commission has indicated that it also will not take any enforcement action under the Trust Indenture Act if offers and sales are made off shore in compliance with the safe harbor provisions of Rule 903 or 904 of Regulation S. n29

2-8 Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 8.05

AUTHOR: Howard M. Friedman This chapter was prepared by Howard M. Friedman, Professor of Law, Emeritus, University of Toledo. The author wishes to thank Mr. John Brousseau for his valuable research assistance in preparing the original version of this chapter and the University of Toledo for its research support through its Faculty Research Awards and Fellowships Program.

§ 8.05 Basic Indenture Requirement and Exemptions for Small Issues

The Trust Indenture Act generally requires that all securities covered by the Act be issued under an indenture that meets the requirements of the Act. n1 Exemptions are available under the Act that permit an issuer to issue not more than $5 million of debt securities during a twelve month period without an indenture, or, if the indenture limits the amount of securities that maybe outstanding under it at any time to $10 million, the indenture's substantive terms need not fully comply with the provision of the Act. In addition, up to $5 million of debt securities may be offered under Regulation A without Trust Indenture Act compliance. In certain cases, the Commission has required the integration of separate transactions or issues under the exemptive provisions.

The Trust Indenture Act generally requires that all securities covered by the Act be issued under a qualified indenture which is governed by the requirements of Sections 310-318 of the Act. n2 However, exemptions from this requirement are available for issuances of small dollar amounts of debt securities. In 1992, the Commission used its rule making authority under Sections 304(a)(8) and (9) and 304(d) of the Act to implement exemptions from the Trust Indenture Act that parallel its various small business regulatory initiatives under the Securities Act of 1933. n3 These exemptions expand substantially on the pre-1992 exemptions available for small issuances.

[1] Securities Issued without an Indenture--Section 304(a)(8) and Rule 4a-1

Rule 4a-1 promulgated under Section 304(a)(8) of the Trust Indenture Act permits an issuer to issue not more than $5 million of debt securities during a twelve month period without using an indenture. n4 Thus, an offering made pursuant to Rule 504 of 505 of the Securities Act of 1933 will be free of Trust Indenture Act restrictions. n5 The Commission will permit more than $5 million of non-indenture debt securities to be registered at one time under the Securities Act, so long as the plan of distribution detailed in the prospectus limits the amount issued and sold in any one year to $5 million or less. n6 When a debt security is issued along with an equity security in a unit, the exemption is available so long as the aggregate amount of the debt portion is under $5 million. n7

[2] Securities Issued under Regulation A--Rule 4a-2

Pursuant to its Section 304(d) authority to promulgate exemptive rules, the Commission has adopted Rule 4a-2 which exempts from the requirements of the Trust Indenture Act any security that has been issued or will be issued in accordance with the provisions of Regulation A under the Securities Act of 1933. n8 Regulation A permits offerings of up to $5 million. n9

[3] Securities Issued under an Indenture Not Exceeding $10 Million--Section 304(a)(9) and Rule 4a-3

If the Rule 4a-1 or 4a-2 exemptions are not available to the issuer, its debt securities must be issued under an indenture. However, under Section 304(a)(9) and Rule 4a-3, the indenture's substantive terms need not comply with the provisions of the Trust Indenture Act if the indenture limits the amount of securities that may be outstanding under it at any time to $10 million. The Section 304(a)(9) exemption may not be applied to more than $10 million of securities of the same issuer in any thirty-six-month period. However the 36-month period is a "rolling period", beginning with the initial offering under the indenture. n10

The Section 304(a)(9)/ Rule 4a-3 exemption allows only one $10 million indenture to be used during a 36-month period, even if the securities issued under a prior indenture have been redeemed and the indenture terminated. n11

Despite the language of Section 304(a)(9), which requires the indenture itself to limit the dollar amount of securities outstanding under it to be exempt, in at least one case, the Commission, because of the judicial supervision involved, has permitted the offering of debt securities in a bankruptcy reorganization to begin without indenture qualification even though the dollar limit might ultimately be exceeded. The Commission required, however, that the indenture be qualified before actual issuance of the securities if the dollar amount was in fact exceeded when the precise amount of debt securities to be issued in the reorganization was determined. n12

The indenture that is required when the $10 million limit is not exceeded need not fully comply with the requirements of the Trust Indenture Act. No action letters have defined minimal standards for these unqualified indentures. These indentures should contain "the usual covenants, events of default, and the procedures by which the collective rights of the security holders may be enforced." n13 Thus, while Section 304(a)(9) does not explicitly require that an indenture provide for a trustee, the Commission takes the position that "as a practical matter, such collective rights are best enforced by a trustee who is accorded specific powers for this purpose." n14 The trustee, however, need not meet the eligibility requirements of Section 310, which would be applicable in the case of a qualified indenture. n15

[4] Integration of Issues Exempt under Sections 304(a)(8) and 304(a)(9)

The dollar limits in the exemptive provisions of both Section 304(a)(8) and Section 304(a)(9) pose problems relating to the integration of separate transactions: which securities sold in the relevant time periods must be aggregated in computing the $5 million limit on non-indenture securities and the $10 million limit on indenture securities exempt from Trust Indenture Act requirements? While the last sentence of Section 304(a) provides that, in computing the relevant dollar amounts under Sections 304(a)(8) and (9), securities exempt under any other provisions of the Trust Indenture Act may be disregarded, n16 it does appear that non-indenture securities issued in reliance on Section 304(a)(8) or otherwise, count against the overall limit in Section 304(a)(9) and Rule 4a-3 restricting the total dollar amount within any consecutive 36 month period to which Section 304(a)(9) may be applied. n17

In adopting Rule 4a-2 providing a Trust Indenture Act exemption for securities offered under Regulation A, the Commission indicated that it intended the rule to parallel those under the Securities Act of 1933. n18 Under the Securities Act, a Regulation A offering is not integrated with prior Rule 504 or 505 offerings. n19 Thus, an offering under Rule 504 or 505 which is exempt from the Trust Indenture Act under Rule 4a-1 could be combined with a subsequent Regulation A offering which relied on Rule 4a-2 for a Trust Indenture Act exemption. However, where a Rule 504 or 505 offering follows a Regulation A offering, under the Securities Act of 1933 the dollar limits permitted under Rule 504 or 505 are decreased by the amount of any Regulation A offering during the prior twelve months. n20 Thus, Rule 504 and 505 are effectively unavailable for a year following a Regulation A offering.

Under the Securities Act of 1933, a Regulation A offering is not integrated with a subsequent registered offering. n21 Pursuant to the non-integration provisions of Trust Indenture Act Section 304(a), an offering under Regulation A relying on Rule 4a-2 could be combined with a subsequent registered offering that relies upon either Rule 4a-1 or Rule 4a-3 for a Trust Indenture Act exemption.

Despite the non-integration provision in Section 304(a), the Commission has required integration of debt securities issued to a corporation's controlling shareholder with the concurrent issuance of identical debt securities of a limited dollar amount to its other shareholders. This application of traditional Securities Act integration standards n22 prevented the combined use of Section 304(a)(8) with the private offering exemption of Section 304(b)(1) to avoid indenture qualification when the two transactions were, in fact, closely related aspects of a single recapitalization. n23

However, the Commission has not required integration of convertible debentures issued in a tender offer to a few United States security holders with those issued simultaneously to overseas security holders of the target company. n24

CHAPTER 8 The Trust Indenture Act of 1939

2-8 Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 8.06

AUTHOR: Howard M. Friedman This chapter was prepared by Howard M. Friedman, Professor of Law, Emeritus, University of Toledo. § 8.06 Exempt Securities

The Trust Indenture Act provides for the exemption of certain securities. Issuers may apply to the Commission for an order to exempt securities issued under open-end provisions of pre-1939 indentures. The Trust Indenture Act was closely integrated with the Securities Act and, with two exceptions (the exemptions for recapitalizations involving exchanges with existing security holders and judicially and administratively approved reorganizations), the exemptions under Securities Act Section 3 were incorporated into the Trust Indenture Act. Several provisions cover exemptions from the Trust Indenture Act for securities issued in connection with the creation and maintenance of a secondary market in real estate mortgages. Other exemptions from the Trust Indenture Act involve certain foreign government securities, guarantees of exempted securities, issues of limited dollar amounts, and bankruptcy related commercial notes. The Commission may grant other exemptions by order or rule, and has done so for certain cross-border offerings of Canadian securities.

[1] Pre-1939 Indentures--Section 304(c)

A special problem is posed by sales of securities issued under open-end indentures executed prior to the effective date of the Trust Indenture Act. n1 Open-end indentures provide for later issuance of additional series of bonds. Use of supplemental indentures authorizing new issuances under these open-end provisions, rather than the execution of new indentures, might be necessary to make collateral available to secure. n2 To allow future series of debt securities to be issued under the terms of the original indenture, however, would permit the issuer, long after 1939, to avoid giving new bondholders the protections of the Act. On the other hand, the original indenture might require an unobtainable consent of the bondholders for some of the changes necessary to bring the indenture into compliance with the Trust Indenture Act. Congress reconciled these competing demands through Section 304(c).

Section 304(c) permits the issuer to apply to the Commission for an order to exempt from one or more provisions of the Trust Indenture Act securities issued under open-end provisions of pre-1939 indentures. Under Section 304(c)(1), the Commission is to issue the order if it finds that any pre-1939 indenture or any provision of law would require consent of indenture security holders before a supplemental indenture or other form of amendment could be used to conform the indenture to the requirements of the Act. n3 Under Section 304(c)(2), the Commission is to issue an order for exemption even when consent of bondholders is not required, if compliance with the provisions of the Act would impose an undue burden on the issuer. n4

Applications for an order under Section 304(c) are to be made on Form T-4. Rules 4c-1 through 4c-5 of the Act detail the formal and procedural requirements for these applications. T-4 is still required to be filed with the SEC in paper form rather than being filed electronically through the EDGAR system. n5 Three copies of Form T-4 are to be filed. n6 The Form calls for an indication of each provision of the Act from which an exemption is sought and other information necessary to permit the Commission to determine whether an exemption should be granted. n7 An applicant under Section 304(c)(1) may waive its right to a hearing and request the Commission to decide the matter on the basis of the application and other information in the Commission's files. n8

Initially, the duration of the Section 304(c) application for exemption provision was self-limiting, since it could be invoked only so long as some debt securities issued under the original indenture prior to 1940 were still outstanding. In 1960, the section was amended so that issuers who still had not brought their pre-1939 indentures into compliance with the Trust Indenture Act could continue to apply for an exemption for securities which continue to be issued under supplemental indentures. n9 So long as indenture securities sold prior to 1940 were outstanding on January 2, 1959, the issuer can continue indefinitely to apply for exemptions even though at the time of application the obligation under the pre-1940 securities have been satisfied and these securities are no longer outstanding. n10

Section 304(c) has not been widely used because of the Commission's holding in Hugo Stinnes Corp. n11 that an indenture may be amended without the consent of security holders to increase the duties of the trustee when the indenture is silent as to the procedure for these amendments. As a practical matter, few non-conforming pre-1939 open-end indentures remain under which new debt may be issued. n12

[2] Securities Exempt under Section 3 of the Securities Act--Section 304(a)(4)

While the Trust Indenture Act was closely integrated with the provisions of the Securities Act of 1933, two exemptive provisions of the Securities Act were not carried over into the Trust Indenture Act. n13

The first was the Securities Act exemption for recapitalizations involving exchanges solely with existing security holders under Securities Act Section 3(a)(9). n14 Congress reasoned that, while existing security holders may not need additional disclosures under the Securities Act, they do need the substantive protections of the Trust Indenture Act. n15

Second, the Securities Act exemption for judicially and administratively approved reorganizations under Section 3(a)(10) n16 was excluded because courts and agencies were thought to rarely examine trust indentures as part of their review of the fairness of a plan of reorganization. n17

The remaining exemptions from Section 3(a) of the Securities Act were incorporated into the Trust Indenture Act through Trust Indenture Act Section 304(a)(4). The 1990 amendments to Section 304(a)(4) n18 simplified coordination of exemptions under the Securities Act and the Trust Indenture Act. Prior to those amendments, Section 304(a)(4) had, with one exception, n19 incorporated only the 1939 version of exemptions under the Securities Act. n20 By the language adopted in 1990, Congress assured that Trust Indenture Act exemptions track the present versions of, and any future amendments to, Securities Act Sections 3(a)(2)-(8) and 3(a)(11).

The Section 3(a)(2) exemption incorporated into Section 304(a)(4)(A) of the Trust Indenture Act, exempts securities issued or guaranteed by the United States, n21 its territories, the District of Columbia, or by congressionally authorized federal instrumentalities, n22 and those issued or guaranteed by any state or its political subdivisions, or government instrumentalities, n23 and securities issued or guaranteed by state and national banks. n24 Thus, participation certificates in a pool of municipal and government agency bonds, where the certificates are sold and unconditionally guaranteed by a bank, are exempt under Section 304(a)(4)(A).ⁿ²⁵ Section 3(a)(2) of the Securities Act also exempts certain interests in bank common trust funds, various interests or participations in tax sheltered employee benefit plans, and certain industrial development bonds.ⁿ²⁶ Industrial development bonds outside the scope of Section 3(a)(2) must be qualified under the Trust Indenture Act.ⁿ²⁷

The Securities Act Section 3(a)(3), incorporated through Trust Indenture Act Section 304(a)(4), exempts short term notes arising out of current transactions.ⁿ²⁸

Securities Act Section 3(a)(4) exempts securities of non-profit organizations.ⁿ²⁹ Through the exemption, bonds issued by churches, universities, non-profit hospitals, and similar institutions are exempt from Trust Indenture Act coverage.ⁿ³⁰

Section 3(a)(5) of the Securities Act exempts securities of savings and loan associationsⁿ³¹ and of farmer's cooperative organizations.ⁿ³² The incorporation of the exemption into the Trust Indenture Act is important, for example, in relation to guarantees of industrial revenue bonds issued by savings and loan associations.ⁿ³³ The exemption does not extend to participation interests in a pooled fund of tax exempt bonds offered by a savings and loan association,ⁿ³⁴ or to interests in a pool of savings and loan association bonds.ⁿ³⁵

Section 3(a)(6) of the Securities Act exempts any interest in a railroad equipment trust.ⁿ³⁶

Section 3(a)(7) of the Securities Act originally provided an exemption for "[c]ertificates issued by a receiver or by a trustee in bankruptcy, with the approval of the court."ⁿ³⁷ With the passage of the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978, conforming amendments to Section 3(a)(7) were added to retain in the Securities Act the exemption for certificates issued with bankruptcy court approval by a receiver, trustee, or debtor in possession.ⁿ³⁸ In addition, the exemption of these securities from Trust Indenture Act coverage (as well as from various other securities law provisions) was effected through language in Section 364(f) of the Bankruptcy Reform Act.ⁿ³⁹ The legislative history makes clear the Congressional intent. Representative Edwards, the sponsor of the bill, described Section 364(f) as follows:

This provision continues the exemption found in section 3(a)(7) of the Securities Act of 1933 for certificates of indebtedness issued by a trustee in bankruptcy. The exemption applies to any debt security issued under section 364 of Title 11. The section does not intend to change present law which exempts such securities from the Trust Indenture Act. ...ⁿ⁴⁰

Section 3(a)(8) of the Securities Act, as incorporated into the Trust Indenture Act, exempts insurance policies and annuity contracts.ⁿ⁴¹ Under this exemption, it would appear that guarantees issued by insurance companies to guarantee payment of corporate bonds are exempt from Trust Indenture Act coverage.ⁿ⁴²

The Securities Act Section 3(a)(11) intrastate offering exemption is also incorporated by Trust Indenture Act Section 304(a)(4).ⁿ⁴³ However, an intrastate offering of debt securities may require both Securities Act registration and Trust Indenture Act qualification when an out-of-state offering of stock is part of the same plan of financing and is thus integrated with the debt offering for determining whether the debt is "part of an issue" of securities that meets the Section 3(a)(11) requirements.ⁿ⁴⁴

[3] Securities Issued in Operations of Secondary Markets for Real Estate Mortgages--Section 304(a)(5)

An array of provisions exempts from the Trust Indenture Act securities issued in connection with the creation and maintenance of a secondary market in real estate mortgages, including securities issued by Government National Mortgage Association (GNMA) and the Federal National Mortgage Association (FNMA).

Section 304(a)(5) of the Trust Indenture Act initially exempts "any security issued under a mortgage indenture as to which a contract of insurance under the National Housing Act is in effect." n45 It was contemplated that this exemption would cover insured mortgage-backed securities issued as financing instruments by the then governmentally-owned Federal National Mortgage Association (FNMA), which had been chartered under provisions enacted in 1938. n46 However, the Commission has also interpreted the section to exempt certificates representing interests in pools of government insured mortgages, where the certificates are distributed by (1) investment banking firms, or (2) the trustee itself, which holds the mortgages. n47

In 1954, Congress began the process that would lead to the division of the original FNMA into two entities. The split was finally implemented in 1968 when FNMA became a privately-owned (but government sponsored) corporation and, at the same time, a new government corporation, Government National Mortgage Association (GNMA), was created. n48 FNMA may issue stock, debt, and mortgage-backed securities. n49 GNMA may issue government guaranteed mortgage-backed securities (pass-throughs) as well as bond type securities. n50 General provisions enacted in 1968 n51 treat the securities issued by both associations as "exempt securities within the meaning of laws administered by the Securities and Exchange Commission." n52

Prior to the passage of the 1968 provisions, two other Trust Indenture Act exemptions, which still remain, were enacted. One exemption dating from 1964 n53 exempts from all federal securities laws FNMA securities evidencing participations in mortgages held by various federal government agencies. n54 The other exemption, dating from 1966, and found in Section 304(a)(10) of the Trust Indenture Act, exempts from the coverage of the Trust Indenture Act securities issued under a mortgage or trust deed on group medical practice facilities, insured under Title XI of the National Housing Act.

Besides the sale of mortgage-backed securities, the secondary mortgage market involves the sale of mortgages themselves, and fractional interests in mortgages. In 1960, the Commission took a no-action position concerning Trust Indenture Act coverage of sales by financial institutions to private investors of Federal Housing Administration insured mortgages and fractional interests in them. n55 While these sales are not literally within the exemption of Section 304(a)(5), the Commission relied on Congressional policy underlying that section in finding that these sales could be made without Trust Indenture Act qualification. n56

In 1975, Congress added Section 4(5) to the Securities Act of 1933, which in turn is incorporated into the Trust Indenture Act by Section 304(b). Section 4(5) exempts the offer and sale of promissory notes directly secured by a first lien on improved residential or commercial real estate, and participation interests in and forward commitments on such notes. n57 To be exempt, these securities must be sold in amounts of $250,000 or more. Where the purchaser is not a bank, savings and loan, or insurance company, the exemption may be applied only to mortgages originated by banks or savings and loans. Where the purchaser is a bank or savings and loan, mortgages originated by other HUD-approved mortgagees are also within the exemption.

[4] Foreign Government Securities--Section 304(a)(6)

Even though foreign government securities must be registered under the Securities Act of 1933, Section 304(a)(6) exempts from the Trust Indenture Act:

any note, bond, debenture, or evidence of indebtedness issued or guaranteed by a foreign government or by a subdivision, department, municipality, agency, or instrumentality thereof.

The Senate and House reports on the Trust Indenture Act explain the distinction between the two Acts merely by stating that "[s]ubstantially different considerations apply to such issues." n58

The Trust Indenture Act exemption, by including agencies and instrumentalities of foreign governments, is broader than the language of Section 7 of the Securities Act, which permits the use of Schedule B for registration of offerings by "foreign governments, or political subdivisions thereof." n59 The Commission has generally treated securities of international agencies as being exempt under Section 304(a)(6), and has taken a no-action position when Schedule B under the Securities Act is used, without passing on whether the multilateral organizations are within the language of Securities Act Section 7. n60

[5] Guarantees of Exempted Securities--Section 304(a)(7)

Guarantees of debt securities are included within the coverage of the Trust Indenture Act, n61 but guarantees of securities exempted by Section 304(a) are themselves exempt under Section 304(a)(7). n62

In recent years, credit default swaps have often been used in place of guarantees to protect lenders against significant payment defaults. n63 However, the TIA does not apply to most credit default swaps. Section 2A of the Securities Act excludes individually negotiated swap agreements from the definition of "security," and TIA Section 303 incorporates that definition into the Trust Indenture Act. Many standardized credit default swaps have been exempted from the TIA through a temporary SEC rule, TIA Rule 4d-11T. This exemption was adopted as part of a package of rules that encourage the trading of standardized credit default swaps through central counterparties. n64 The TIA rule exempts from qualification and indenture requirements any CDS sold in reliance on Securities Act 239T, i.e. a standardized CDS sold through a clearing agency to an "eligible contract participant" (as defined in §1(a)(12) of the Commodity Exchange Act). n65

[6] Issues of Limited Dollar Amounts--Sections 304(a)(8) and (9)

Sections 304(a)(8) and 304(a)(9) provide exemptions for issues of debt securities under $5 million and $10 million, respectively. n66

[7] Bankruptcy Related Notes

While the drafters of the Trust Indenture Act contemplated that debt securities issued in judicially approved reorganizations would be covered by the Act, n67 Congress, in the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978, exempted one type of bankruptcy-related security from the Trust Indenture Act. Section 1145(d) of the Bankruptcy Reform Act provides that:

The Trust Indenture Act of 1939 does not apply to a note issued under the plan that matures not later than one year after the effective date of the plan. n68

The statement of Representative Edwards, the sponsor of the bill, explaining this provision indicates some confusion by the drafters of the Bankruptcy Reform Act about the coverage of the Trust Indenture Act. He stated:

Some commercial notes receive such an exemption under 304(a)(4) of the Trust Indenture Act of 1939 ... and others may receive protection by incorporation by reference into the Trust Indenture Act of securities exempt under Section 3(a)(3), (7), (9), or (10) of the Securities Act of 1933.

In light of the amendments made to the Securities Act of 1933 [by the Bankruptcy Reform Act] ... a specific exemption from the Trust Indenture Act is required in order to create certainty regarding plans of reorganization. Section 1145(d) is not intended to imply that commercial notes issued under a plan that matures more than 1 year after the effective date of the plan are automatically covered by the Trust Indenture Act of 1939 since such notes may fall within another exemption thereto. n69

Of course, Representative Edwards was incorrect in stating that the Trust Indenture Act incorporates the Sections 3(a)(9) and 3(a)(10) exemptions of the Securities Act. n70

[8] Commission's Authority to Exempt other Securities--Section 304(d)

Section 304(d) authorizes the Commission to exempt from one or more of the provisions of the Trust Indenture Act, either conditionally or unconditionally, any persons, registration statements, indentures, securities or transactions. Upon application by an interested person, exemptions may be made in individual cases through a Commission order. Upon the Commission's own motion, more general exemptions may be granted through rules. Section 304(d) places few limits upon the Commission's exemptive authority. It requires only that any exemption granted be "necessary or appropriate in the public interest and consistent with the protection of investors and the purposes fairly intended by this title." It also permits the Commission "in its sole discretion, [to] decline to entertain any application for an order of exemption."

These provisions were enacted as part of the 1990 amendments to the Trust Indenture Act, replacing a narrower exemptive authority that had been available only for foreign private issuers. The broader authority was seen as necessary to permit the Commission to take account of changes in types of debt securities, in methods of public financing, and in relations between obligors and their financial intermediaries. ⁿ⁷¹ As an example, in proposing the legislation the Commission had pointed to the problems of applying the verification requirements of TIA Section 314(d) for release or substitution of collateral to collateralized mortgage obligations (CMOs) secured by pools of fungible, high quality securities. ⁿ⁷²

In May 1991, the Commission adopted Rules 4d-7 and 4d-8, specifying the procedures for applying for an exemptive order under Section 304(d). ⁿ⁷³ Basically, an application must contain a statement of the relevant facts, including a justification for the exemptions requested and a discussion of any benefit expected for security holders, trustees and/or obligors. Applications for exemptive relief under TIA § 304(d) are one of the few types of documents that are still required to be filed with the SEC in paper form rather than being filed electronically through the EDGAR system. ⁿ⁷⁴

In addition, the Commission has used its rulemaking Section 304(d) authority to facilitate cross-border offerings by foreign issuers. ⁿ⁷⁵ Effective July 1, 1991, the Commission adopted Rule 4d-9 as part of its multijurisdictional disclosure system for cross-border offerings by certain Canadian issuers. ⁿ⁷⁶ The Canada Business Corporations Act, which governs indentures of federally chartered corporations; the Bank Act, which governs indentures for debt securities issued by Canadian banks; the British Columbia Company Act of 1979, which covers indentures of companies incorporated under British Columbia Law; and the Business Corporations Act, 1982 (Ontario), which governs all trust indentures used in connection with debt offerings made by prospectus in Ontario regardless of the law under which the corporation was organized, all provide protections similar to those found in the Trust Indenture Act. ⁿ⁷⁷ Rule 4d-9 exempts from many of the Trust Indenture Act's requirements indentures of issuers subject to these Canadian statutes if the indenture securities are registered under the Securities Act of 1933 on Form SB-2 F-7, F-8, F-9, F-10 or F-80. However, Section 310(a)(1), (2) and (5) of the Trust Indenture Act which set out the eligibility requirements for institutional trustees continue to apply to such indentures. ⁿ⁷⁸ So does Section 316(b) which prohibits the impairment, without the security holder's consent, of the holder's right to receive payment of principal and interest when due and to institute suit to enforce such payment. ⁿ⁷⁹ Canadian law does not provide protections comparable to those found in Section 316(b) to indenture security holders. ⁿ⁸⁰ The Commission has also used its rulemaking Section 304(d) authority to encourage issuers to include U.S. security holders of foreign companies in exchange offers and business combinations on an equal basis with foreigners. In the past, some countries had allowed the exclusion of U.S. security holders because of the difficulties of complying with U.S. regulatory requirements, even though their law otherwise required equal treatment of all security holders. Where U.S. persons held small amounts of securities so that their participation was not necessary for the success of the transaction, their exclusion was common. This prevented U.S. investors from receiving a premium for their securities. In 1999, the SEC adopted Securities Act Rule 802 to exempt from 1933 Act registration requirements securities exchanged for the securities of a foreign private issuer in an exchange offer or business combination, if U.S. holders own no more than 10% of the securities that are the subject of the exchange offer or business combination, and if certain other requirements are met. In order to avoid undermining the usefulness of the Rule 802 exemption, the SEC at the same time adopted Trust Indenture Act Rule 4d-10 which exempts from the requirements of the TIA any debt security issued in compliance with Rule 802, even if the security is not issued under an indenture of any kind.

[9] Small Business Investment Companies--Section 304(e)

In 1958, Congress gave the Commission authority to issue exemptive rules for Small Business Investment Companies' securities under both the Securities Act and the Trust Indenture Act by adding Section 3(c) to the Securities Act and Section 304(e) to the Trust Indenture Act. n81 While the Commission has implemented its Securities Act authority through the promulgation of Regulation E for offerings not exceeding $5,000,000, n82 it has enacted no rules to implement its authority under Section 304(e).

Offerings under Section 529 qualified state tuition programs that are administered by state instrumentalities have generally been found to be exempt from both 1933 Act registration and from the qualification requirements of the TIA. See e.g. Ohio Tuition Trust Authority, Ohio Variable College Savings Trust Fund, 2000 SEC No-Act. the position that the narrowing amendments relating to railroad securities enacted in 1976 were effectively incorporated into the Trust Indenture Act. Burlington Northern, Inc., C.C.H. Fed. Sec. L. Rep. P 82,149 (Div. Corp. Fin. 1979).

§ 8.07 Exempt Transactions--Non-Issuer Offerings and Private Placements

The Trust Indenture Act also provides for the exemption of debt securities sold in transactions that are also exempt under Securities Act Section 4. Thus, the exemptions for certain private placements, offers and sales to "accredited investors" of up to $5 million, and sales in large dollar amounts of promissory notes secured by certain first lien real estate mortgages are incorporated by the Trust Indenture Act.

Section 304(b) of the Trust Indenture Act provides that any debt securities sold in transactions exempt under Section 4 of the Securities Act are also exempt from the requirement that they be issued under a qualified indenture. n1 This incorporation of Securities Act Sections 4(1), n2 4(3) n3 and 4(4), n4 along with the Trust Indenture Act Section 304(b) exemption for sales on behalf of affiliates, effectively exempts all offerings except those by the issuer or distributions by those acting as conduits for the issuer. n5

Section 304(b) also incorporates the private offering exemptions of Securities Act Sections 4(2), n6 4(5) n7 and 4(6). n8 Thus, the typical private placement of debt securities with institutional investors in reliance on Securities Act Section 4(2), or its counterpart, Rule 506, n9 is exempt from the Trust Indenture Act qualification requirement.

Similarly, offers or sales to "accredited investors" of up to $5 million in reliance on Securities Act Section 4(6) is also exempt from Trust Indenture Act qualification. The parallel Securities Act Rule 505 exemption, n10 however, does not exempt an issuer from the Trust Indenture Act since that rule was promulgated not as a definition of terms in Section 4(6), n11 but pursuant to Section 3(b) of the Securities Act. Exemptions under Section 3(b) are not carried over into the Trust Indenture Act. Debt securities issued under the Securities Act Rule 505 exemption, with its $5 million ceiling, can usually find an exemption from Trust Indenture Act qualification under Section 304(a)(9) and Rule 4a-2, n12 in which case only an indenture of a more limited type would be required. n13

The exemption in Securities Act Section 4(5) for sales in large dollar amounts of promissory notes secured by certain first lien real estate mortgages is also incorporated by Trust Indenture Act Section 304(b). n14

CHAPTER 8 The Trust Indenture Act of 1939

2-8 Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 8.08

AUTHOR: Howard M. Friedman This chapter was prepared by Howard M. Friedman, Professor of Law, Emeritus, University of Toledo. § 8.08 Drafting the Indenture

The Trust Indenture Act specifies the mandatory provisions that are part of every qualified indenture as well as permissible provisions, many of which are included by operation of law unless indenture language to the contrary appears. Other provisions, some of which are standardized and others negotiable, may also be included. Generally, four alternative formats for qualified indentures are available: an indenture which relies upon the automatic incorporation provisions of the Trust Indenture Act; the conventional unified document; the two-part indenture commended by the American Bar Foundation; and the Revised Model Simplified Indenture.

The lawyer's most common encounter with the Trust Indenture Act will be in the drafting of an indenture that is governed by the requirements of the Act. Sections 310 to 318 of the Trust Indenture Act:

- (1) set out mandatory provisions that are included automatically by operation of law in every qualified indenture;
- (2) set out other permissible provisions, many of which are automatically included in the indenture by operation of law unless specifically excluded by language in the indenture, and others that may be (and often are) included in the qualified indenture; and
- (3) prohibit the inclusion of certain types of exculpatory clauses.

Of course, the drafting of an indentureⁿ¹ involves a good deal more than merely compliance with the provisions of the Trust Indenture Act. An indenture will contain many other provisions, some of which have in practice become somewhat standardized, and others of which must be carefully negotiated. In recent years, notions of the extent to which indenture terms are negotiable has changed. Except for the provisions required by the Trust Indenture Act, standard boilerplate seems to have become less sacrosanct.ⁿ²

In general, four alternative formats for qualified indentures are available. The simplest is one which does not recite the mandatory provisions or most of the optional provisions of the Trust Indenture Act, and instead relies upon their being automatically included in the indenture pursuant to Section 318(c). In using this option, the lawyer might wish to include a statement in the indenture to make it clear that reliance is being placed upon automatic incorporation. Such a statement might read: "This indenture is governed by the provisions of the Trust Indenture Act of 1939, as amended."

Prior to 1990, the most widely used format was the conventional unified document, in which both the negotiated and the boilerplate clauses are set out in a single integrated document. The provisions mandated by the Trust Indenture Act are included verbatim within the indenture.

The third format is the two-part indenture recommended by the American Bar Foundation's Corporate Debt Financing Project, in which the indenture consists of two related documents. The first is an Incorporating Indenture containing the negotiated terms and incorporating by reference the second document, the Model Indenture, which is appended. The Model Indenture contains the provisions mandated by the Trust Indenture Act set out verbatim, plus additional standard provisions that are considered by the drafters of the model provisions to be best left in well-considered boilerplate form.

The two part format has never received acceptance in the tradition-bound world of corporate finance. The American Bar Foundation admitted this when in 1981 it published its Mortgage Bond Indenture Form in the traditional integrated manner, stating that the incorporating technique "has rarely been used in practice by law firms because of its complexities." n4 The ABF did however retain in the Mortgage Bond Indenture Form the notion of negotiable and non-negotiable provisions, printing each of the two in a distinctive type style.

The fourth available format is the Revised Model Simplified Indenture. n5 It embodies two major innovations. First, it is drafted in the "plain English" style that is becoming increasingly popular in legal documents n6 and increasingly a focus of SEC rulemaking under other statutes. n7 Second, it incorporates by reference, and sometimes relies on TIA Section 318(c)'s automatic incorporation into the indenture of, n8 the mandatory and permissive clauses set out in the Trust Indenture Act, rather than setting them out in full as part of the indenture document. For example, instead of setting out in full the lengthy mandatory provisions relating to preferential collections of claims against the company by the trustee, the Revised Model Simplified Indenture merely provides in Section 7.11:

Upon and so long as the Indenture is qualified under the TIA, the Trustee is subject to TIA Section 311(a), excluding any creditor relationship listed in TIA Section 311(b).

The definitional provisions in Section 1.01 of the Revised Model Simplified Indenture assure that incorporation by reference locks in the Trust Indenture Act as it is in force on the date the indenture is executed. Section 309(c) of the Trust Indenture Act provides that, with one exception, changes by the Commission in its rules or orders shall not affect the qualification, form, or interpretation of previously qualified indentures. The exception to this is the Commission's rulemaking authority under Section 314(a) to require obligors to file reports with the indenture trustee and the Commission, and to furnish information to any security holders.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Several resources are available to the practitioner who is drafting an indenture. Perhaps the most comprehensive is the American Bar Foundation's Commentaries on Indentures published in 1971 as part of the ABF's Corporate Debt Financing Project. It contains the text of ABF's Model Debenture Indenture provisions for fairly standardized portions of the indenture and samples of numerous types of generally negotiated indenture provisions, all accompanied by extensive explanatory comments. Other reference sources that may be helpful in the drafting task are the separately published American Bar Foundation's Mortgage Bond Indenture Form (1981); Suggested Provisions for Corporate Mortgages and Indentures published in 4 C.C.H. Fed. Sec. L. Rep. P 43,500 ff; and Securities Act Release 6090 (July 11, 1979) Techniques in Drafting Trust Indentures, 5 C.C.H. Fed. Sec. L. Rep. P 42,164A. An excellent guide, extending beyond merely the drafting problems, is Thomas Arthur & Steven B. Kite, Bond Financing, which is a portfolio in the Bureau of National Affairs' Corporate Practice Series. A similarly broad work focusing on issues from the trustee's perspective is R. Landau & J. Kruegar, Corporate Trust Administration and Management (5th ed., 1998). Finally, the most recent addition to aid in drafting an indenture is the American Bar Association's Revised Model Simplified Indenture, 55 Bus. Law. 1115 (2000).

(n2)Footnote 2. In 1971, the American Bar Foundation's Commentaries on Indentures stated that certain clauses not required by the Trust Indenture Act are nevertheless "practically 'non-negotiable,' not in the sense that they cannot be negotiated, but in the sense that they seldom are in fact negotiated and as a practical matter in most cases ought not to be." Id., p. 3. A dozen years later, the drafters of the Model Simplified Indenture stated that except for the required Trust Indenture Act provisions, "nearly all portions of an indenture are subject to negotiation in varying degrees." Model Simplified Indenture, 38 Bus. Law. 741, 742 (1983).

The Corporate Debt Financing Project has published two model indentures designed for use within incorporating indentures: Model Debenture Indenture Provisions (1965) and Model Debenture Indenture Provisions, All Registered Issues (1967). Each also contains a Sample Incorporating Indenture.

CHAPTER 8 The Trust Indenture Act of 1939

2-8 Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 8.09

AUTHOR: Howard M. Friedman This chapter was prepared by Howard M. Friedman, Professor of Law, Emeritus, University of Toledo. § 8.09 Filing with the Commission--Coordination with the Securities Act of 1933

Filing with the Commission under the Securities Act and the Trust Indenture Act is closely coordinated. Under the Trust Indenture Act, the indenture is deemed qualified when the Securities Act registration statement becomes effective. The issuer of debt securities must file with the Commission: the Securities Act registration statement; Form T-1, the statement of eligibility and qualification of the trustee; and a copy of the indenture with a table of contents. The Securities Act prospectus must contain a description of the debt securities being registered and of the indenture.

Since in almost all cases securities offerings that require indenture qualification also require Securities Act registration, the requirements for filing with the Commission under both Acts are closely coordinated. n1

Under Section 309(a)(1) of the Trust Indenture Act, the indenture will be deemed to have been qualified when the Securities Act registration statement becomes effective. Along with the Securities Act registration statement, the issuer of debt securities must file with the Commission:

- (1) a statement of eligibility and qualification of the indenture trustee, usually on Form T-1;
- (2) a copy of the indenture including a table of contents; and
- (3) a cross-reference sheet showing the location in the indenture of the mandatory and permissive Trust Indenture Act provisions. n2

In addition, the prospectus filed under the Securities Act must contain a description of the debt securities being registered and of the indenture. n3 With the full phasing in of the EDGAR system in 1996, these filings must all be made electronically. n4

[1] Statement of Trustee's Eligibility and Qualification--Form T-1

Section 305(a)(1) of the Trust Indenture Act requires that with the Securities Act registration statement there be filed such information as the Commission may prescribe in order to enable it to determine whether the trustee is eligible to serve. If the trustee does not meet the criteria of Section 310(a), the Commission, under Section 305(b), is to issue a refusal order prior to the effective date of the registration statement to prevent the registration statement from becoming effective. n5

The statement of eligibility and qualification will be filed by the trustee on Form T-1, the form to be used by corporations designated to act as trustees. n6 Section 310(a)(1) requires that if, as is typically the case, there is only one indenture trustee, it must be a corporation. An individual may only serve as a co-trustee along with the institutional trustee. In the unusual situation where an individual co-trustee is used, Form T-2 must also be filed as his statement of eligibility and qualification. n7 The March 1996 Report of the SEC's Task Force on Disclosure Simplification recommended that the SEC eliminate Forms T-1 and T-2. It recommended that these be replaced merely by a representation in the registration statement that the trustee is eligible to serve, or, in a shelf registration, that the trustee will be eligible upon selection, along with a statement by the trustee confirming its eligibility which would be filed as an exhibit. n8 However, the SEC did not act upon that recommendation.

Form T-1 is to be filed through EDGAR as a separate part of the registration statement. n9 It may not be incorporated by reference from a previous filing. n10 If a single trustee will serve under two indentures being qualified with the same registration statement, only one Form T-1 needs to be filed. However reference should be made on the cover page of the T-1 to the fact that there are two indentures. n11 The Form T-1 must be signed by the trustee, through its duly authorized agent or officer. n12 Form T-1 is filed in an item and response format. n13 The items elicit information relevant to whether the trustee complies with the requirements of Section 310. n14 Among the required exhibits is a copy of the trustee's latest report of financial condition published as required by law or by the supervising authority. Where publication is not required, the SEC will accept the unpublished report filed with the supervising authority. n15 Forms T-1 and T-2 were revised in May 1991 to conform to the 1990 amendments to the Act. n16

If the Form T-1 contains any material misstatement or omission, Section 323(a) of the Trust Indenture Act creates a private right of action for damages caused by reliance on the misstatement or omission in favor of any person who, not knowing of the inaccuracy, purchases or sells a security issued under the indenture to which the Form T-1 relates. The defendant who is responsible for the inaccurate statement is allowed the defense that he acted in good faith and had no knowledge of the inaccuracy. n17

Section 305(b)(2) was added to the Trust Indenture Act in 1990 to facilitate the qualification of debt securities registered for delayed offering under Securities Act Rule 415. n18 This section permits indentures for shelf registered debt to be qualified at the time the 1933 Act registration statement becomes effective, even though no trustee is named until the securities are actually later offered to the public. This procedure may be particularly useful when debt securities that must be registered may in fact never be issued, such as payment in kind securities (PIKs) where dividends or interest may be paid at the issuer's election in debt securities, or equity securities convertible into debt.

Under TIA Section 305(b)(2), the Commission is to adopt rules requiring an application to be filed to determine the eligibility of the indenture trustee shortly after the actual sale of any of the shelf-registered securities. Given the minimal requirements for eligibility, Congress anticipated that few instances of ineligibility would arise. The application will be effective ten days after filing, unless effectiveness is accelerated by the Commission. Congress anticipated that effectiveness would be accelerated in almost all cases. In the event that the designated trustee is not eligible, the Commission is to issue a refusal order. If a refusal order is issued, the obligor on the securities must appoint an eligible trustee within five calendar days. n19

In May 1991, the Commission adopted Rules 5b-1 to 5b-3 in order to carry out Congress' mandate. n20 Under these rules, the trustee is required to file Form T-1 and, where necessary, Form T-2, no later than the second business day following the initial date of public offering or sales after effectiveness of the registration statement. At the same time, the Commission amended Item 512 of Regulation S-K to require that when a registration statement for a shelf offering is filed without qualifying a trustee, an undertaking must be included providing that the registrant will file to qualify the trustee at the time required by, and otherwise in accordance with, the Commission rules. n21 Where Form T-1 is filed on a delayed basis in a shelf offering, it must be separately filed through EDGAR as form type "305B2", and not filed as a post-effective amendment to the registration statement or on a Form 8-K incorporated by reference into the registration statement. n22

If the issuer fails to file an application as required to determine the eligibility of a trustee after shelf-registered securities are sold, the Commission may issue a stop order suspending the effectiveness of the registration statement or of the application for qualification of the indenture. n23

[2] The Indenture, Table of Contents and Cross-Reference Sheet

Item 601(b)(4) of Regulation S-K requires that there be filed as an exhibit to Securities Act registration statements all instruments, including indentures, defining the rights of the holders of the debt securities being registered. n24 In addition, subparagraph (b)(4)(iv) of Item 601 provides:

If any of the securities being registered are, or will be issued under an indenture to be qualified under the Trust Indenture Act, the copy of such indenture which is filed as an exhibit shall include or be accompanied by (A) a reasonably itemized and informative table of contents; and (B) a cross-reference sheet showing the location in the indenture of the provisions inserted pursuant to Sections 310 through 318(a) inclusive of the Trust Indenture Act of 1939.

The American Bar Foundation's model indentures and the Revised Model Simplified Indenture contain both tables of contents and cross-reference sheets that comply with these requirements.

This requirement for a table of contents and a cross reference sheet appears superfluous after the 1990 amendments to the Act, and apparently the Commission staff will not object to the omission of a cross reference sheet. n25 The requirement was originally designed to simplify the Commission staff's review of the indenture and Form T-1 that occurred simultaneously with review of the Securities Act registration statement. n26 The automatic incorporation of the mandatory provisions effected by the 1990 amendments to the Act eliminated the need for staff review of indentures, n27 and permitted the prompter processing of indentures that is of special concern in registered offerings made during brief favorable interest "windows."

[3] Securities Act Prospectus Disclosure of Security Terms and Indenture Provisions

Securities Act registration statements must contain a description of the securities being registered. n28 The information required to be set out in the prospectus is detailed in Item 202 of Regulation S-K. n29

The drafters of the Trust Indenture Act were troubled by the then-common practice of describing debt securities being offered by merely including in the prospectus a literal transcription of complex indenture provisions. n30 Therefore, Section 305(a)(2) required the issuer to include in the registration statement an analysis of a number of important indenture provisions. Specifically, the analysis was required to deal with:

- (1) the indenture's definitions of default and its provisions relating to when notice of these defaults could be withheld from security holders;
- (2) the provisions relating to authentication and delivery of the indenture securities and the application of the proceeds of the offering;

- (3) provisions on release and substitution of collateral;
- (4) provisions relating to satisfaction and discharge of the indenture; and
- (5) provisions relating to the issuer's furnishing of evidence of compliance with conditions and covenants.

As originally enacted, Sections 305(a)(2) and 305(c) required this analysis to be set forth in full in the prospectus, and also permitted the Commission, in individual cases, to require inclusion in the prospectus of a supplementary analysis prepared by the Commission. n31 To give the Commission flexibility to simplify Securities Act prospectuses, n32 Congress, in 1954, amended Section 305(c) to permit the Commission to determine by rule the extent to which prospectuses must contain the issuer's analysis of indenture provisions. n33 Item 202 of Regulation S-K, in fact, excludes some of the information that is otherwise specified in Section 305(a)(2). Instruction 3 to Item 202 states:

Section 305(a)(2) of the Trust Indenture Act ... shall not be deemed to require the inclusion in a registration statement or in a prospectus of any information not required by this Item. n34

The Commission's authority under Section 305(c) to prepare its own supplementary analysis and require its inclusion in the prospectus, has never been used. n35 When the Trust Indenture Act was enacted, Congress apparently assumed that the Commission-prepared analysis would become an important disclosure tool. In reliance on the safeguard provided by the Commission's power to prepare a supplementary analysis, n36 Congress in Section 305(d) exempted from the civil and criminal provisions of both the Securities Act and the Trust Indenture Act n37 any misstatements or omissions in the issuer's required analysis of the indenture. Misstatements and omissions in the analysis, however, are not exempt from Exchange Act Rule 10b-5, n38 and it seems clear that the courts would not imply such an exemption. n39

Adequate disclosure of the terms of the securities being offered is also furthered by rules requiring the title of securities used in the registration statement and in the Form T-1 to be fully descriptive of the securities' terms. n40

[4] Refusal Orders

If the requirements of the Trust Indenture Act have not initially been met, the Commission's formal administrative remedy is the issuance of an order refusing to permit effectiveness of the Securities Act registration statement offering the debt securities. Section 305(b) of the Trust Indenture Act sets out three grounds for refusal orders:

- (1) the security has not been issued under an indenture;
- (2) the indenture does not conform to the requirements of the Trust Indenture Act; or
- (3) the designated trustee is not eligible or has a prohibited conflict of interest.

The procedures for notice and hearing before the issuance of a refusal order are specified by reference to Section 8(b) of the Securities Act. n41

The unrealistic procedural restrictions surrounding Section 8(b) proceedings, however, have eliminated the use of the refusal order as an enforcement device. n42 Section 8(b) requires notice to the issuer not later than ten days after filing of the registration statement, and an opportunity for a hearing within ten days after the notice. Under the Securities Act, Section 8(d) stop order proceedings have replaced the use of refusal orders. n43 This option does not appear to exist under the Trust Indenture Act. n44 In fact, as in the vast majority of Securities Act situations, any Trust Indenture Act deficiencies before the effective date of the registration statement are handled by letters of comment from the staff of the Commission's Division of Corporation Finance. n45

After the indenture qualification has become effective, under Section 309(b) no stop order shall be issued under Securities Act Section 8(d), except on the grounds specified in Section 8(b) of the Securities Act, i.e., material misstatements or omissions, or failure to cooperate in a Section 8(e) examination. Post-effective non-compliance with Trust Indenture Act mandated terms is left to private enforcement by security holders. n46

2-8 Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 8.10

§ 8.10 Supplemental Indentures and Special Problems of Shelf Registrations

Supplemental indentures that make changes in the rights of indenture security holders or effect other indenture amendments may be entered into provided they comply with the provisions of the Trust Indenture Act. Shelf registrations of debt securities under Rule 415 present special problems regarding the form of a supplemental indenture when they are needed.

Supplemental indentures may be entered into to make changes in the rights of the indenture security holders, or, in the case of open-end indentures, to create a new series of securities. n1 The Commission requires that all qualified indentures contain a provision that any supplemental indenture will comply with the provisions of the Trust Indenture Act. This is the Commission's only alternative to assure that future indenture amendments will comply with the Act since, under Section 309(e), the Commission is denied continuing jurisdiction over indentures once they are qualified. n2

As discussed in §8.11, modifications of rights that result in the offering of a new security require a new qualification of the indenture. However modifications that are not significant enough to amount to the creation of a new security may be made by merely filing the supplemental indenture with the SEC. Where the indenture securities are still being offered under a Form S-3 registration statement, the supplemental indenture is filed as an exhibit on Form 8-K. Otherwise it is filed as an automatically-effective, exhibits-only, post effective amendment as provided in Securities Act Rule 462(d). If the offering of the debt securities has terminated, the supplemental indenture is to be filed as Exhibit 4 to the company's next Exchange Act report. n3

Some rights of the indenture security holders may, subject to the limitations of Section 316, n4 be modified under the typical indenture by a vote of security holders without the filing of a supplemental indenture. n5 Solicitation of consents from indenture security holders will be subject to the Commission's proxy rules only if the indenture securities are convertible securities listed on an exchange or registered under Section 12(g) of the Exchange Act. n6 Exchange listed non-convertible debt securities are exempted from the proxy rules by Securities Exchange Act Rule 3a12-11. Some indentures authorize the issuer to fix a record date for purposes of determining bondholders whose consents will be solicited. This may be necessary in order to allow securities depositories to effectively receive instructions from ever-changing beneficial owners. n7

Typically, the indenture provides that supplemental indentures effecting certain changes that do not adversely affect the rights of the security holders n8 may be entered into without consent of the indenture security holders. In other situations, supplemental indentures require the consent of specified percentages of security holders. n9 Section 316(b) precludes the use of a supplemental indenture to extend the maturity date or to postpone any interest payment for more than three years over the objection of any indenture security holder.

The adoption of Securities Act Rule 415, liberalizing the use of "shelf registration," has created particular problems relating to supplemental and additional indentures. n10 Rule 415 offerings may merely be delayed offerings of securities whose terms are completely spelled out in the initial registration statement and accompanying indenture. Often, however, shelf registrations of debt securities are designed to take advantage of interest "windows" so that a supplemental indenture will be needed to define the precise terms of the series to be issued. In such a case, where the securities being offered have generally been fully described in the registration statement, a sticker, rather than a post-effective amendment, may be used on the prospectus to reflect the interest rate, price, maturity date, redemption and similar provisions of the series being offered. n11 Under Rule 415, shelf offerings of debt securities by the issuer will virtually always be registered on Securities Act Form S-3. n12 Therefore, the supplemental indenture may be filed with the Commission on a Form 8-K, n13 rather than as an exhibit in a post-effective amendment, since the Form S-3 incorporates by reference future Exchange Act filings n14 made during the offering. n15

When the issuer is not certain of the form that the debt securities will take at the time of initial registration, it may file and qualify several forms of indentures that either are open-ended or specify the amounts of securities to be issued under them. For example, the issuer could file straight coupon, deep discount, and zero coupon forms of indentures, and later by prospectus sticker indicate which is being used. n16 The issuer, however, may not merely qualify a model form of indenture that does not relate to specific securities until the indenture is amended at some future time to include their characteristics. n17 Finally, an issuer may not omit the indenture in the original registration statement in contemplation of later filing it as part of a post-effective amendment. n18

The largest publicly-held companies have an additional option. In July 2005, the SEC adopted extensive revisions in its regulation of securities offerings. n19 A part of the changes permit "well-known seasoned issuers" n20 to raise capital through an "automatic shelf-registration process." Using this process, eligible companies can wait and add additional classes of securities or guarantees of securities to their shelf registration statement by post-effective amendment after the registration statement is effective. n21 The post-effective amendment will become effective as soon as it is filed. n22 Where debt securities are added by post-effective amendment, the filing then must also include the indenture and any other forms, information and signatures necessary to qualify the indenture under the TIA. n23

2-8 Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 8.11

AUTHOR: Howard M. Friedman This chapter was prepared by Howard M. Friedman, Professor of Law, Emeritus, University of Toledo. The author wishes to thank Mr. John Brousseau for his valuable research assistance in preparing the original version of this chapter and the University of Toledo for its research support through its Faculty Research Awards and Fellowships Program.

§ 8.11 Indenture Qualification in Recapitalizations and Reorganizations

Securities that are exempt from registration under the Securities Act but not under the Trust Indenture Act (certain recapitalizations and reorganizations) require indenture qualification. In such cases, the requirement of indenture qualification generally depends on whether a "sale" has occurred. n1 If no Securities Act registration statement is to be filed, the issuer's application for qualification of the indenture on Form T-3, the trustee's statement of eligibility and qualification on Form T-1, and all other items required for qualification when a Securities Act registration is required, must be filed with the Commission.

Sections 306 and 307 of the Trust Indenture Act require, and provide the procedures for, qualification of indentures covering securities exempt from registration under the Securities Act, but not from the Trust Indenture Act. These exemptions include the Securities Act Section 3(a)(9) exemption for exchanges of securities with existing security holders exclusively where no payment is made for soliciting the exchange n2 and the Section 3(a)(10) exemption for judicially or administratively approved reorganizations. n3

Section 306 of the Trust Indenture Act prohibits the use of interstate facilities or the mails to sell or to deliver after sale any security issued under an unqualified indenture, where that security is not registered under the Securities Act and is not exempt from the Trust Indenture Act. n4 Recapitalizations that do not amount to "sales" of debt securities do not fall under the prohibitions of Section 306. Section 303(2) of the Trust Indenture Act defines "sale" and its derivative terms by reference to Section 2(3) of the Securities Act, n5 except that a sale of a certificate of interest or participation is a sale of the underlying security only if convertible into such security.

A frequent question is whether particular changes in the terms of debt securities through amendments to the indenture involve the exchange, and thus the "sale," of new securities. n6 If so, a new indenture qualification would be required. It has usually been held that the sale of a new security has occurred when the modification extends the maturity date of the debt securities. n7 Other changes in an indenture (not, of course, involving the mandatory Trust Indenture Act provisions) n8 have usually been viewed as not creating a new security. n9 Typical of these are amendments relating to the acquisition of the issuer by another corporation (e.g., the assumption of the debt by the acquiring company),ⁿ¹⁰ or changes in covenants that trade off concessions to the issuer for an increased interest rateⁿ¹¹ or for an earlier maturity date.ⁿ¹² Reincorporations or reorganizations that shift debt to a successor business entity, or add a guarantee by the successor, are generally permitted without requalification so long as the original indenture permits the trustee to enter into supplemental indentures without the vote or consent of security holders.ⁿ¹³ Similarly, increasing the interest rate on outstanding convertible securities to discourage conversion does not create a new security; however additional changes may raise questions.ⁿ¹⁴

The Commission has not articulated a consistent rationale for these determinations. One court has suggested that the touchstone is whether the modifications benefit the security holders.ⁿ¹⁵ Requests for no-action letters that have been granted generally focus on the rationale that changes made in accordance with amendment procedures found in the original indenture are merely contractual modifications anticipated in the original security, and are therefore not the issuance of a new security.ⁿ¹⁶ No-action requests also argue that modifications that do not materially or fundamentally change the security do not result in a new security.ⁿ¹⁷ Finally, when the amendment is one that the indenture permits without consent of the security holders, it is argued that no sale has occurred because no investment decision is being sought or made.ⁿ¹⁸ Thus, no sale occurs when there is a substitution of a new obligor under indenture provisions that permit such a change without approval or consent of holders of the indenture securities. However, if approval by debt holders must be solicited, the sale of a new security has taken place.ⁿ¹⁹ Even where the sale of a new security is not involved, however, if the modified securities are voluntarily registered under the Securities Act, the Commission requires a new Form T-1 to be filed to requalify the trustee.ⁿ²⁰

Various reorganizations and recapitalizations involving exchanges of securities require Trust Indenture Act qualification, even though a Securities Act exemption is available. Perhaps the most common situation is the issuance of certain debt securities in a reorganization under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Reform Act.ⁿ²¹ While trustees' certificates issued during the course of a reorganization, and commercial notes issued under a plan of reorganization that mature within one year, are exempt from Trust Indenture Act coverage, longer term debt securities issued under a plan of reorganization require Trust Indenture Act qualification, even though they are exempt from Securities Act registration by reason of Section 1145(a) of the Bankruptcy Reform Act.ⁿ²²

In a bankruptcy reorganization, the SEC views the solicitation of plan approval from creditors and other claimants as the event that constitutes an offering of debt securities under the plan. Therefore an application for qualification on Form T-3 must be filed before creditors are solicited to approve the plan. The issuer cannot wait until after court approval of the plan.ⁿ²³

Securities issued in other non-bankruptcy reorganizations and recapitalizations also generally require Trust Indenture Act qualification, even though exempt from Securities Act registration under Sections 3(a)(9) or 3(a)(10).

When debt securities are exempt from Securities Act registration but nevertheless require indenture qualification, Sections 306 and 307 of the Trust Indenture Act set up separate qualification procedures and disclosure requirements, generally modeled after Securities Act registration of non-exempt securities.ⁿ²⁴ Section 306 basically tracks the format of Section 5 of the Securities Act.ⁿ²⁵ Under Section 306(c), no offers may be made through interstate facilities or the mails unless the security is to be issued under an indenture and an application for qualification has been filed.ⁿ²⁶ Section 306(b) prohibits written offers (i.e., use of a "prospectus" as defined in Section 303(3) of the Trust Indenture Act) through interstate facilities or the mail unless the offers include, to the extent required by Commission rule, the information prescribed in Section 305(c) analyzing the indenture terms.ⁿ²⁷ Section 306(a) prohibits the use of interstate facilities or the mails for sales of securities or deliveries after sale unless the securities are to be issued under an indenture and an application for qualification of the indenture is effective.

A drafting error, however, does complicate the provisions of Section 306. Section 306 was amended in 1954,ⁿ²⁸ and the legislative history makes it absolutely clear that Congress' intent was to conform the Trust Indenture Act to the Securities Act amendments that were enacted at the same time. n29 In particular, the amendments to Section 306 were intended to permit certain offers to be made during the waiting period between filing of the application for indenture qualification and its effective date, in the same way that certain waiting period offers under the Securities Act were legalized. n30 If the amendment had been properly drafted, Section 306(b) would have permitted oral offers and written offers containing specified disclosures in the waiting period between filing and effectiveness. As drafted, however, Section 306(b) only refers to offers made in the post-effective period. It appears, however, that the Commission treats Section 306(b) as if it were drafted in accordance with the intent expressed by Congress. n31

The disclosures to be made along with any written offer are, under Section 306(b), to be prescribed by Commission rule. The Commission has not promulgated any rules, but apparently advises registrants to provide the analysis of indenture provisions specified in Section 305(c) when it is deemed necessary. n32

[1] Form T-3--Application for Qualification of Indenture

When no Securities Act registration statement is to be filed, Section 307(a) specifies the procedures for obtaining qualification of the indenture under the Trust Indenture Act. An application for qualification of the indenture must be filed by the issuer on Form T-3. The trustee's statement of eligibility and qualification, generally filed on Form T-1, n33 must also be separately filed, n34 as well as all other items required under Section 305(a) for qualification when a Securities Act registration statement is required. n35 These filings are to be made electronically through the EDGAR system. n36 A filing fee of $100 for the Form T-3 must be sent to the US Treasury's designated lockbox depository. n37

The form requires disclosure of information regarding:

- (1) the issuer's form of organization and the state under whose laws it is organized;
- (2) a list or diagram of the issuer's "affiliates"; n38
- (3) a list of directors, executive officers, and principal (10% or more) shareholders;
- (4) names and addresses of past and prospective underwriters;
- (5) a table showing the issuer's capital structure and amounts of each class of securities authorized and outstanding;
- (6) an analysis of certain indenture provisions, as required by Section 305(a)(2); n39
- (7) the name and address of other obligors on the indenture securities; and
- (8) various exhibits, including the indenture and a cross reference sheet from it to the Trust Indenture Act's provisions, any prospectus sent to security holders, the issuer's charter and bylaws, and the relevant court or administrative order where an exemption from Securities Act registration has been claimed under Securities Act Section 3(a)(10). Offering materials that are required to be filed as an exhibit may be filed in definitive form when acceleration of the Form T-3 is requested. n40

Form T-3 is to be signed on behalf of the issuer by a duly authorized person. n41

If Form T-3 is to be used to qualify guaranteed debt, the primary obligor and each guarantor must file separate Form T-3's. Each Form T-3 will reflect information relating to the entity filing it. n42

Under Section 306, no sales of indenture securities may be made until after the indenture qualification is effective. The timing and procedures of Securities Act Section 8 regarding effectiveness of registration statements are incorporated into the Trust Indenture Act by Section 307(c) and thereby made applicable to Form T-3 applications for qualification. Thus an indenture qualification becomes effective twenty days after the last amendment to it is filed, unless the Commission accelerates the effective date. Rule 7a-9 under the Trust Indenture Act provides for use of an automatic delaying amendment in any Form T-3, to prevent effectiveness until the Commission staff has completed its review.

In two early Releases, n44 the Commission applied the prohibitions of Section 306 strictly to when-issued trading of securities. It took the position that no when-issued trading of debt securities to be issued in judicially approved reorganizations exempt from registration under Securities Act Section 3(a)(10) could occur until after the relevant indenture qualification was effective. n45 The Division of Corporation Finance appears to have retreated from this position in a 1986 no-action letter. n46 Examining proposed when-issued trading of securities to be issued in a recapitalization without registration in reliance on Securities Act Section 3(a)(9), the Division permitted when-issued trading by investors (other than the issuer) and by broker-dealers who are not underwriters to begin as soon as Form T-3 is filed with the Commission. The Division added, however, that if in the future the Commission were to implement TIA Section 305(c) by rules requiring an analysis of indenture provisions to be included in any prospectus, then dealers as well as issuers and underwriters would be required to await qualification of the indenture before selling and, pursuant to Section 306(b), they would be required to deliver that analysis.

Section 307(c) incorporates both the Section 8(b) refusal order and the Section 8(d) stop order provisions of the Securities Act, as well as the Section 8(e) procedures for an examination to determine whether a stop order should be issued. Section 309(b) provides that a stop order may be issued after the effective date of the application for qualification only on the grounds specified in Securities Act Section 8, i.e., if the offering circular being used is materially false or misleading. Only a pre-effective refusal order or stop order may be used to deal with a non-complying indenture or an ineligible trustee.

When a stop order or refusal order is in effect, or when a pre-effective public examination or proceeding has been instituted, Section 306(c) prohibits the use of interstate facilities or the mail to offer indenture securities, n47 except in unsolicited brokers' transactions permitted under the exemption incorporated by Section 304(b). n48

CHAPTER 8 The Trust Indenture Act of 1939

2-8 Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 8.12

AUTHOR: Howard M. Friedman This chapter was prepared by Howard M. Friedman, Professor of Law, Emeritus, University of Toledo. § 8.12 Who Is Eligible for Appointment As Trustee?--Section 310

The Trust Indenture Act requires that under every qualified indenture there always be at least one institutional trustee with a combined capital and surplus of at least $150,000. A permissive provision may provide that the trustee's capital and surplus be determined by reference to the trustee's most recently published report of condition. Foreign business entities may act as the institutional trustee only if permitted by Commission order or rule. The Act permits the use of one or more co-trustees, who may be individuals, but the trustees' rights, powers, duties and obligations must be imposed on and carried out by the required institutional trustee, either alone, or jointly with the co-trustees.

One of the concerns articulated by Congress in 1939 was that indenture trustees often did not have resources commensurate with their responsibilities. n1 To remedy this, Section 310(a) provides that under every indenture that is qualified, or to be qualified, there must always be at least one institutional trustee that shall have a combined capital and surplus of at least $150,000. n2 The institutional trustee must be a corporation organized and doing business under the laws of the United States, of any state or territory, or of the District of Columbia. The institution must be authorized by those laws to exercise corporate trust powers, and must be subject to supervision or examination by those governmental authorities. n3 A subsidiary of a foreign company is not disqualified so long as it is organized and doing business under U.S. law or the law of any U.S. state. n4

As amended in 1990, Section 310(a)(1) authorizes the Commission to prescribe rules to allow a foreign corporation or business entity to act as the institutional indenture trustee if under the laws of its home country it is authorized to exercise corporate trust powers and if it is subject to examination or supervision by its home country that is substantially equivalent to that imposed on United States banks and trust companies. The Commission apparently interprets this to require that the trustee be chartered as a bank or trust company and will not permit a company organized under a state's general corporation law to act as the institutional trustee. n5 In formulating its rules, the Commission is directed to consider whether reciprocal rights to act as sole trustee are given to U.S. banks and trust companies in the foreign country involved. n6 An application under Section 310(a)(1) is to be filed on Form T-6. n7 A foreign trustee that does not meet the requirements of Section 310(a)(1) can seek an exemptive order under Section 304(d) permitting it to serve.

Acting under the authority granted in Section 310(a)(1), the Commission has adopted Rule 10a-5. n9 The rule covers indenture securities registered under the Securities Act of 1933 on Form S-B, F-7, F-8, F-9, F-10 or F-80, developed under the Commission's multijurisdictional disclosure system for cross-border offerings by certain Canadian issuers. The rule permits trust companies which are incorporated and regulated under the laws of Canada or its political subdivisions to serve as sole trustee under a qualified indenture for securities of these issuers, without separately applying for an order under Section 310(a)(1). To be eligible, a trust company must be subject to supervision or examination pursuant to the Trust Companies Act (Canada), R.S.C. 1985, or the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act, R.S.C. 1985. Rule 10a-5 also requires each Canadian trustee relying upon the rule to file on Form F-X an appointment of a person in the United States as agent for service of process. n10

When Form T-6 is used by a foreign entity solely to apply for permission to act as the institutional indenture trustee, the applicant must complete Item 1, General Information; Item 15, Substantial Equivalency of Trust Regulation in the Foreign Jurisdiction and Eligibility of United States Trustees to Act as Sole Trustees in the Foreign Jurisdiction; and Item 16. List of Exhibits. Where Form T-6 is also used to assure that the trustee meets the TIA's eligibility requirements, additional items similar to those called for in Form T-1 must be completed. n11

Whatever the efficacy in 1939 of the $150,000 capital and surplus figure to assure that the trustee had adequate resources to carry out its duties, the figure is ridiculously low today. As a matter of practice, most indentures today impose a $5 million minimum capital and surplus requirement on trustees. n12 Section 310(a)(2) permits the indenture to provide that the trustee's capital and surplus is to be determined by reference to the trustee's most recently published report of condition, so long as its reports are published at least annually pursuant to law or requirements of state or federal regulatory authorities. Indentures generally include this permissive provision. n13 If the securities are to be listed on the New York Stock Exchange, the trustee must also meet the requirements established by the NYSE Company Manual, one of which is that it must be "a bank or trust company, having substantial capital and surplus, and having the experience and facilities for the proper performance of corporate trust functions." n14

Sometimes indentures require that the trustee have its principal office in New York City or some other major financial center, n15 which typically will also be the city designated by the indenture as the place where an office will be maintained for holders to obtain payment of principal and interest, and for them to present the securities for transfer, exchange, or registration. n16 The Trust Indenture Act does not require a provision of this sort, but if debt securities are to be listed on the New York Stock Exchange, the Exchange must approve the bank or trust company chosen as registrar and/or transfer agent. n17 Usually the issuer will appoint the trustee as its agent for these purposes. n18

The Trust Indenture Act, through Section 310(a)(3), permits the use of one or more co-trustees, who may be individuals, in addition to the required institutional trustee. n19 However, where co-trustees are used, Section 310(a)(3) also requires that all rights, powers, duties and obligations of the trustees shall be imposed on and carried out by the institutional trustee, either alone, or jointly with the co-trustees, except to the extent that the institutional trustee is legally incompetent or unqualified to do so.

Finally, Section 310(a)(4) provides that when the indenture relates to certificates of interest or participation, the trustee shall have all rights, powers, and privileges of a holder of the underlying securities.

Form T-1, filed by the trustee with the Commission to indicate the trustee's eligibility, n20 elicits on the facing sheet, in Item 1, and through required exhibits, the information necessary to determine whether the eligibility requirements of Section 310(a) have been met. Since the indenture can be qualified only if the original trustee meets the eligibility requirements, n21 the ongoing eligibility requirements are relevant primarily to subsequent changes in the trustee's status and to the eligibility of successor trustees. n22 Since Section 310(a)(1) requires that there shall at all times be at least one trustee who meets the Trust Indenture Act's eligibility requirements, indentures generally require the trustee to resign if it ceases to be eligible. n23 Further, indentures generally specify procedures for removing the trustee that has lost its eligibility and has not voluntarily resigned. n24 Typically, in these situations, the trustee may be removed by the board of directors of the issuer, by holders of a majority in principal amount of the indenture securities, or by a court upon petition by any indenture security holder (or sometimes upon petition by any person who has been an indenture security holder for at least six months). n25

Indentures also typically provide a procedure for the appointment of a successor trustee after the original trustee has resigned or been removed. The Revised Model Simplified Indenture provides for the issuer to promptly appoint a successor. If a successor does not take office within 30 days, the retiring trustee may appoint a successor. After 45 days, the issuer, the retiring trustee or debenture holders may petition a court for appointment of a successor. n26 A successor trustee needs to file a Form T-1 only if there is an offer or sale of the debt securities in connection with the succession. An offer or sale that requires 1933 Act registration, or otherwise requires indenture qualification, would also require qualification of the successor trustee. n27

§ 8.13 Conflicts of Interests--Section 310(a)(5) and Section 310(b)

The obligor and its affiliates may not serve as indenture trustee. Specific post-default conflicts of interest require the resignation or removal of the trustee unless the Commission, in the case of certain defaults not involving non-payment, permits a delay in the obligation to resign. The prohibited conflicts include: dual trusteeships (with some exceptions); prohibited affiliations between the trustee and the obligor or underwriters; beneficial ownership of the trustee's voting securities by the obligor, underwriter, or their affiliates; direct or indirect ownership by the trustee of securities of the obligor and underwriters; the trustee's ownership of the obligor's or underwriters' securities in fiduciary capacities; and the trustee's being a creditor of the obligor.

Section 310(a)(5) disqualifies the obligor on the indenture securities, or any person directly or indirectly controlling, controlled by, or under common control with such obligor, from serving as indenture trustee. n1 Under the 1990 amendments to the Trust Indenture Act, only these conflicts of interest disqualify a trustee from serving initially. Upon default, however, a broader group of relationships will be deemed to be conflicts of interest and will require the trustee's resignation so that the trustee can "take vigorous action for the enforcement of rights under the indenture." n2

As originally enacted in 1939, the Trust Indenture Act enumerated a broader list of conflicts that precluded initial eligibility to serve as trustee. By 1990, however, it appeared to Congress and the Commission that before default, the trustee's duties are essentially ministerial in nature involving little exercise of discretion on behalf of security holders. Thus, many relationships that were previously treated as impermissible pre-default conflicts of interest are, under the 1990 amendments, now permitted to exist before default. n3 In taking this position, Congress responded to the Commission's concern that the broad pre-default conflict standards in the original Act unduly restricted other business activities of trustees. In particular, participation by affiliates of United States banks in overseas offerings was hampered. The original Act prohibited a bank from acting as trustee if its affiliate had served as an underwriter of any securities issued by the obligor during the previous three years. n4

Section 310(b) now enumerates specific relationships which become conflicts of interest and require a trustee to resign

when the indenture securities are in default. n5 For this purpose, Section 310(b) provides that the definition of default found in the indenture, exclusive of any period of grace or requirement of notice, controls. Notice and grace periods are ignored in order to prevent evasion of the disqualification provisions through definitions in the indenture. n6 These prohibited post-default relationships are largely the conflicts which the 1939 Act specified as being prohibited either before or after default, with the significant addition of most creditor relationships between the trustee and the obligor as well.

Even with this addition, however, the enumerated conflicts fail to include a number of situations that the traditional state law of fiduciary duties might well find to be conflicts of interest. n7 This was apparent to the Commission at the time the original Trust Indenture Act was being considered by Congress, but the Commission reluctantly endorsed the approach embodied in the Trust Indenture Act, which it described as setting out "rules of thumb" for the trustee as to conflicts of interest. n8

Section 310(b) creates as a required part of the indenture provisions an elaborate mechanism for resignation or removal of the trustee that has or acquires one of the enumerated conflicts. n9 If a default has occurred, the trustee must, within 90 days after it ascertains that it has a prohibited conflict of interest, either eliminate the conflict or resign. The resignation is effective upon appointment of a successor and the successor's acceptance of appointment. The obligor must take prompt steps to have a successor appointed.

If the trustee fails to resign, it must notify the indenture security holders of this within ten days after the expiration of the 90-day resignation period. Finally, any person who has owned the indenture securities for at least six months may petition a court for removal of a trustee that has not eliminated a prohibited conflict of interest, and for appointment of its successor, if the trustee has not submitted its required resignation after the security holder has requested it in writing. n10 If, however, the default which has triggered the trustee's duty to resign may be cured or waived and does not involve failure to pay principal, interest, or any sinking or purchase fund installment, the trustee may petition the Commission to delay its obligation to resign. The trustee's application must describe the procedures available under the indenture for eliminating the default, and the trustee must sustain the burden of proving both that the default may be cured or waived during a reasonable period and that a stay will not be inconsistent with the interests of indenture security holders. The filing of the application automatically stays the trustee's duty to resign until the Commission orders otherwise. n11 Rules 10b-4 to 10b-6 set out the application procedures, including provisions for publication of notice so that interested persons may submit information bearing on the desirability of holding a hearing on the application. n12

When securities are privately placed, but issued under an indenture in anticipation of a later resale to the public that will require indenture qualification, the indenture provisions reflecting the requirements of Section 310(b), as well as those mandated by several other Trust Indenture Act sections, traditionally have been conditioned by a "trigger clause." Under this clause, these indenture provisions do not become operative unless and until the indenture is qualified under the Trust Indenture Act. n13 However, once operative, the mandatory provisions must apply to all outstanding securities issued prior to qualification, as well as to any issued later. n14 Since the 1990 amendments to the Act, this same result can be obtained more simply by eliminating physical inclusion of the mandatory terms in the original indenture and relying upon their becoming included by operation of law when the indenture is later qualified. Presumably, upon qualification, the terms included by operation of law would apply to outstanding securities issued under the indenture prior to qualification. n15

[1] Dual Trusteeships

Under Section 310(b)(1), one prohibited conflict after default, with some exceptions, results from the trustee's serving as a trustee under any other indenture relating to other securities of the same issuer. n16 The trustee would find itself representing two groups of claimants competing for the same assets. n17

More precisely, the Section 310(b)(1) prohibition applies to other indenture trusteeships for any "obligor" on the indenture securities. Section 303(12) defines "obligor" as every person who is liable on the security, and if the security is a certificate of interest or participation, as also including every person liable on the underlying securities. n18 Thus, when a parent corporation guarantees the securities of a subsidiary, both corporations are obligors on the securities. n19 In 1987, Section 303(12) was amended to specifically include guarantors as obligors. n20

However, absent a guarantee, Section 310(b)(1) does not generally prohibit the trustee from serving under separate indentures of affiliates. Thus, parent and subsidiary or brother-sister corporations may employ the same trustee for indentures covering their debt securities, since they are different obligors. n21

The multiple trusteeship prohibition is not limited to situations where both indentures are qualified. A conflict would apparently be present when a trustee under a qualified indenture relating to a utility company's bonds, for example, is also trustee under an exempt indenture for industrial revenue bonds issued for the benefit of and guaranteed by the same utility. The utility is a primary obligor as to one issue of bonds and an obligor through its guarantee on the other. n22

The 1990 amendments to Section 310(b) apply the prohibition on multiple trusteeships not only to trusteeships under other indentures, but also to trusteeships for more than one outstanding series of securities issued under a single indenture. A separate series is present when a group of securities issuable under an indenture has the right to vote to take action or direct the indenture trustee to take action, separate from another such group of securities. However, even such a separate vote will not create a separate series if under the indenture all groups of securities rank equally and are wholly unsecured. n23 This definition will not cover typical mortgage bond indentures of public utilities which authorize the issuance of bonds in series, but which do not give separate voting rights to each series. n24 The legislative history indicates that this extension of Section 310(b)(1) to separate series of securities issued under a single indenture merely codified an existing interpretive position of the Commission. n25

In recent years, there have been extensive mergers among U.S. banks. This may make it more difficult than in the past to find separate trustees for multiple indentures. n26

[a] Exceptions and Exemptions from Dual Trusteeship Prohibition. There are several exceptions to the dual trusteeship prohibitions in Section 310(b)(1). Where one indenture relates to collateral trust certificates and the other relates to the securities that are the only collateral under the collateral trust indenture, no conflict is present. n27 Similarly, when the obligor is a real estate company with no substantial unmortgaged assets and two indentures are secured by wholly separate and distinct parcels of real estate, a dual trusteeship is permitted since there would not be later competition for any of the same assets. n28

Subject to express provisions to the contrary in the indenture, Section 310(b)(1)(i) generally permits dual trusteeships for indentures or series that are wholly unsecured and rank equally. The statutory language provides that for a dual trusteeship to be permitted, the indenture must specifically describe the other indentures or series, or else the other indenture must be one which is subsequently qualified under the Trust Indenture Act. However, the SEC staff takes the position that "the technical omission of references to earlier indentures does not prevent reliance on this self-executing exclusion from the conflict of interest provision...." n29 Despite the general exemption, dual trusteeships will not be permitted where the Commission has declared by order that the indentures (or the separate series), even though wholly unsecured and of equal rank, contain provisions which are so likely to involve material conflicts of interest that the dual trusteeships should be prohibited. Normally, the Commission will not enter a disqualifying order declaring that material conflicts of interest are likely to exist unless the securities issued under the different indentures have different priorities or materially different default provisions. n30

The Commission staff has taken the position that a qualified indenture covering debentures remains "wholly unsecured" for purposes of Section 310(b)(1)(i) even though "in-substance defeasance" arrangements have been made to extinguish the debt. n31 Furthermore, the trustee of a defeasance trust which meets the requirements of SFAS No. 76 n32 is not precluded from also acting as an indenture trustee under another wholly unsecured indenture as a result of acting as defeasance trustee for the same issuer. n33

Even if Section 310(b)(1)(i) is unavailable, subject to express provisions to the contrary in the indenture Section 310(b)(1)(ii) permits a dual trusteeship if the issuer, upon application to the Commission and after opportunity for hearing, sustains the burden of proving that there is not likely to be a conflict of interest. n34 Rule 10b-2 under the Trust Indenture Act streamlines the approval of this application where the prior indenture under which the trustee serves relates to securities that are being refunded by the proceeds of the new indenture securities being issued. In this situation, the dual trusteeship will only be temporary. Under Rule 10b-2, a filed application will be deemed to have been granted unless the Commission orders a hearing within seven days.

After notice and opportunity for hearing, in several other situations the Commission routinely grants applications under Section 310(b)(1)(ii) to permit dual trusteeships. Typically at issue are two unsecured indentures, one previously qualified under the Trust Indenture Act and the other exempt from qualification. The exempt indenture often relates to industrial development bonds n35 or to privately placed debt securities. n36 Section 310(b)(1)(ii) is also available to permit dual trusteeships involving secured debt where conflicts of interest are unlikely to develop. A common situation involves issues of equipment trust certificates or of other debt where the multiple indentures rank pari passu and are each secured by separate collateral. n37

In another case, after the issuer filed in bankruptcy under Chapter 11 a trustee under one indenture proposed to become a successor trustee under a second indenture of the issuer. The original trustee, a creditor of the issuer, was forced to resign because the bankruptcy filing constituted a default. n38 Both indentures now in default had almost identical remedy provisions. Since both indentures were unsecured and ranked equally, dual trusteeships would have been permitted under Section 310(b)(1)(i) if the later indenture had specifically described the earlier one. However, it did not. In this situation, the Commission found that a material conflict was unlikely to develop and granted an order under Section 310(b)(1)(ii) permitting the trustee to serve under both indentures. n39

Applications for exemptive relief under TIA Section 310 are one of the few types of documents that are still required to be filed with the SEC in paper form rather than being filed electronically through the EDGAR system. n40 No specific form has been promulgated by the Commission for applications under Section 310(b)(1)(ii). The form which most applications take sets out the relevant facts and requests that the Commission issue the appropriate order. Usually the applicant waives its right to a hearing and its right to specify procedures pursuant to Rule 8(b) of the Commission's Rules of Practice. The application is generally accompanied by a draft for the Commission of a public notice of the filing and of the opportunity to request a hearing, and is sometimes accompanied by a draft of an order for granting the application. n41 The SEC staff has advised that three copies of the application should be filed, with at least the original signed. n42

[2] Prohibited Affiliations Between Trustee and Obligor or Underwriters

Conflicts of interest may arise after default from affiliations between the trustee and the issuer of the indenture securities or its underwriters. These affiliations are defined as prohibited conflicts of interest by Sections 310(b)(2), (3), and (4).

Section 310(b)(2) prohibits the trustee or any of its directors or executive officers from being an underwriter for the obligor. This prohibition is not limited to an underwriter for the indenture securities, but also extends to any person who within the prior one-year period was an underwriter of any security of the obligor still outstanding when the determination of underwriter status is made. n43 The potential conflict here stems from the generally close ties between underwriters and management of the issuer, including the underwriter's access to inside information n44 that might be used in trading in the issuer's stock. n45

The term "underwriter" is defined more narrowly in one respect under the Trust Indenture Act than in the Securities Act. Unlike Securities Act Section 2(a)(11), n46 Trust Indenture Act Section 303(4) does not include persons involved in a distribution on behalf of affiliates of the issuer in the definition of "underwriter." n47 Section 310(a)(5), however, as a condition of eligibility separately prohibits the trustee from being an affiliate of the issuer. n48

In Shop Rite Foods, Inc., n49 the Commission staff indicated that a bank's sale to correspondent banks of participations in its loans to the issuer, where the correspondents agree to purchase them for investment, does not constitute the seller bank as an underwriter n50 within Section 303(4) or Section 310(b)(2), since the sales do not constitute a distribution. n51

Section 310(b)(3) defines as a prohibited conflict situations in which the trustee directly or indirectly controls, is controlled by, or is under common control with an underwriter n52 for the obligor. n53 Thus, Section 310(b)(3) prohibits affiliates of the trustee from placing themselves in positions that would constitute a conflict under Section 310(b)(2) if held by the trustee itself. n54 Trust Indenture Act Rule10b-3 sets out procedures whereby a proposed trustee may obtain an advance ruling from the Commission as to whether it is an affiliate of any person who will be named in a registration statement or a Form T-3 n55 as an underwriter for the obligor. n56

Of particular concern under Section 310(b)(3) is the potential conflict created by the presence of foreign investment banking subsidiaries of bank holding companies. If, within one year prior to default, the foreign subsidiary has underwritten securities of the obligor, a commercial bank subsidiary of the same holding company would be required to resign as indenture trustee since a person under common control with the trustee would be an underwriter for the obligor. n57 Where a U.S. parent has guaranteed securities of a foreign subsidiary, a foreign investment banking firm distributing the subsidiary's securities will also be underwriting securities, i.e., the guaranties, of the parent. Thus, after default a bank affiliated with the foreign investment banking firm would be required to resign as indenture trustee for the parent. n58

Conflict of interest problems may also arise because affiliates and bona fide subsidiaries of insured state banks that are not members of the Federal Reserve System are permitted to underwrite corporate securities. n59 Moreover, affiliates and subsidiaries of national banks and state member banks are permitted to engage in limited amounts of underwriting activities. n60 Thus, the potential for affiliation between a trustee and underwriters for an obligor are increased.

Section 310(b)(4) defines, as a prohibited conflict of interest, various interlocks between the trustee and the obligor or its underwriters. n61 With certain exceptions, the trustee and any of its directors or executive officers are precluded from being a director, officer, partner, employee, appointee, or representative of an obligor, or of an underwriter for an obligor who is currently engaged in the business of underwriting. n62

Many of the interpretive problems under Section 310(b)(4) relate to who is a "director" or "executive officer" of the trustee. "Director" is defined in Section 303(5) as a director or any individual performing similar functions for a business, whether or not it is incorporated. The Commission, in a no action letter, after initially taking the contrary position, indicated its view that an emeritus, honorary, or advisory director who is appointed rather than elected, who does not have the right to vote, and who serves merely as an advisor without customary directorial responsibilities would not be a "director" as defined in Section 303(5). n63

"Executive officer" is defined in Section 303(6) to mean "the president, every vice president, every trust officer, the cashier, the secretary, and the treasurer of a corporation, and any individual customarily performing similar functions with respect to any organization whether incorporated or unincorporated, but shall not include the chairman of the board of directors." n64 The Commission, however, has taken the position that the chairman of the board will be considered an "executive officer" where he performs the duties and functions of an executive officer in addition to those of chairman of the board. n65

The Trust Indenture Act does permit a limited number of interlocking directors between the trustee and the obligor. n66 This provision in Section 310(b)(4) stems from Congress' conclusion that some representation of the trustee on the obligor's board is a means by which bondholders can have their interests protected. The concern was that interlocks not be so extensive that representatives of the obligor deter the trustee in its performance of its duties on behalf of security holders. n67

Congress, therefore, permitted interlocks of one director or executive officer each way, with one additional common director if the trustee's board has over nine members. n68 More precisely, Section 310(b)(4)(A) permits one person to be a director, or an executive officer, or both, of the trustee, and a director, or executive officer, or both, of the obligor, so long as the person is not at the same time an executive officer of both. n69 Section 310(b)(4)(B) permits an additional individual to be a director, or executive officer, or both, of the trustee and a director of the obligor, so long as the number of directors of the trustee in office is more than nine.

Section 310(b)(4) prohibits the trustee's directors or executive officers from being an "employee, appointee or representative" of the obligor or its underwriters. While this has been read by the Commission as not prohibiting a person from being an independent contractor, difficult problems have arisen as to directors of the trustee who are lawyers for the obligor or its underwriter. After a period of some confusion on the issue, the Commission finally took the position that a lawyer will not be considered an "employee, appointee or representative" of the obligor or its underwriter unless the lawyer is employed as house counsel, or there are other extenuating circumstances. n70

In one case, the Commission took the position that the prohibition in Section 310(b)(4) on the trustee or its directors or executive officers being a "partner" of the obligor included a prohibition on becoming a "limited partner." n71 With the spread of publicly held limited partnerships, n72 this position may create numerous problems where a limited partnership is an obligor and principals of the trustee, or the trustee in a fiduciary capacity, hold small amounts of the obligor's limited partnership interests. It would seem, despite the Commission's earlier position, that these interests should not disqualify the trustee where holdings of the same amount of stock, if the obligor were a corporation, would not create a prohibited conflict of interest.

Finally, despite the general prohibition on the trustee being an "appointee" or "representative" of the obligor, or its underwriters, Section 310(b)(4)(C) permits the trustee to be designated by any obligor or underwriter to act as transfer agent, registrar, custodian, paying agent, fiscal agent, escrow agent, depositary, or to act in a similar capacity, or to act as trustee so long as the dual trusteeship prohibitions of Section 310(b)(1) are not violated.

[3] Ownership of Trustee's Voting Securities by Obligor, Underwriter, or their Affiliates Separate from the pre-default prohibition of Section 310(a)(5) on control of the trustee by the obligor and the Section 310(b)(3) prohibition n73 on control of the trustee after default by an underwriter, for the obligor, Section 310(b)(5) defines as a post-default conflict of interest the beneficial ownership of specific percentages of the trustee's voting securities by the obligor, its underwriters, or certain principals of either.

The beneficial ownership of 10% or more of the trustee's voting securities by the obligor or any one of its directors, partners, or executive officers is a conflict, as is the beneficial ownership of 20% or more, collectively, by any two or more such persons. The same 10% prohibition applies under Section 310(b)(5) to an underwriter n74 for the obligor and to directors, partners, and executive officers of the underwriter, except that collective as well as individual ownership of only 10%, rather than 20%, will also trigger a conflict.

"Voting securities," defined in Section 303(16), are any securities presently entitling one to vote in the direction or management of a company's affairs, or any voting trust certificate or similar security whereby trustees or agents of the security holder are presently entitled to so vote. Computation of the percentage of voting securities owned is aided by directives in Section 303(16) and Rule 10b-1. The percentage of voting securities is calculated in relation to the aggregate votes of all outstanding voting securities. n75 Outstanding securities are those issued and not held by or for the account of the issuer. Securities placed in escrow by the issuer are not counted as outstanding unless a person other than the issuer is entitled to vote them. n76

"Beneficial ownership" of securities has been defined by the Commission so that a person is generally treated as beneficially owning securities held in the name of his or her spouse and their minor children, since usually a person receives benefits substantially equivalent to ownership from those securities. n77 Also, a person is treated as beneficially owning securities held in the name of any other person where by reason of contract, understanding, relationship, agreement, or other arrangement he receives benefits substantially equivalent to ownership of the securities. n78 A rebuttable presumption of a person's beneficial ownership exists as to securities held in the name of relatives or spouse's relatives who share the person's home. n79 Finally, regardless of other indicia, a person is the beneficial owner of any securities as to which he can vest or revest title in himself either at once or at some future time. n80

[4] Direct or Indirect Ownership by Trustee of Securities of Obligor and Underwriters

Sections 310(b)(6), (7), and (8) of the Trust Indenture Act define, as post-default conflicts of interest, certain beneficial ownership of securities by the trustee and certain holdings by it of securities as collateral for an obligation which is in default. These holdings do not disqualify a trustee from serving prior to default. n81 These post-default prohibitions apply variously to securities of the obligor, its affiliates, and its underwriters. Some of these prohibitions apply to ownership of any class, including debt securities and non-voting stock, while others apply only to ownership of voting securities. However, none of the prohibitions apply to holding or ownership of any note or other evidence of indebtedness issued in connection with a bank loan, or any certificate of interest or participation in such instruments. The prohibitions apply only to securities generally known as corporate securities. n82

Prohibited ownership of the obligor's securities by the trustee is covered by Section 310(b)(6). A conflict exists if the trustee owns beneficially n83 or holds as collateral for an obligation that is in default either 5% or more of the obligor's voting securities, or 10% or more of any other class of the obligor's securities (other than securities issued under the subject indenture and under any other indenture as to which it serves as trustee). n84 A conflict also exists if the trustee similarly owns or holds 10% or more of any class of security of an underwriter n85 for the obligor.

Sections 310(b)(7) and (8) deal with securities of particular affiliates of the obligor. Section 310(b)(7) relates to securities of a person who, to the knowledge of the trustee, either owns 10% or more of the obligor's voting securities, or directly or indirectly controls or is under common control with the obligor. n86 The trustee has a conflict of interest if it beneficially owns or holds as collateral for an obligation that is in default 5% or more of the voting securities of such an affiliate.

Section 310(b)(8) relates to securities of any person who, to the knowledge of the trustee, owns 50% or more of the obligor's voting securities. The trustee has a conflict of interest if it beneficially owns, or holds as collateral for an obligation in default, 10% or more of any class of such parent's securities.

In applying the provisions of Sections 310(b)(6), (7), and (8), as to voting securities, the definitions and computational rules discussed with regard to the ownership of the trustee's voting securities by the obligor apply. n87 In determining whether the prohibited percentage ownership of other classes of securities, as well as of voting stock, exists, Trust Indenture Act Rule 10b-1 gives additional assistance. Percentages are to be computed in relation to:

- (1) the number of shares outstanding for classes of stock;
- (2) the principal amount outstanding for classes of debt securities; and

(3) the number of units outstanding for classes of other securities. n88

Securities are of the same class if they confer substantially the same rights and privileges. Where secured evidences of indebtedness are issued under a single indenture, differences in interest rates and maturity dates of various series are not sufficient to create different classes. Similarly, different classes are not created by interest or maturity variations in unsecured debt, whether or not issued under a single indenture. n89

In determining the principal amount of securities outstanding, computations are to exclude:

- (1) securities of an issuer held in a sinking fund relating to the same class;
- (2) securities held in a sinking fund relating to another class if that other class is not in default as to principal, interest or otherwise;
- (3) securities pledged by the issuer as security for an obligation of the issuer not in default as to principal, interest, or otherwise; and
- (4) securities held in escrow if placed in escrow by the issuer and, as to voting securities, if no person other than the issuer is entitled to vote them. n90

In determining whether the trustee holds collateral for an obligation that is in default, "default" includes only a default in principal that has continued for thirty days or more and has not been cured. n91 The trustee is not to be deemed the owner or holder of any security held:

- (1) as collateral that is not in default as so defined;
- (2) as collateral under the indenture to be qualified, irrespective of any default; n92 or
- (3) as agent for collection, custodian, escrow agent, depository, or in any similar representative capacity. n93

[5] Trustee's Ownership of Obligors' or Underwriters' Securities in Fiduciary Capacities

Section 310(b)(9) of the Trust Indenture Act defines when a post-default conflict of interest arises from the trustee's ownership of securities in the capacity of executor, administrator, testamentary or inter vivos trustee, guardian, committee or conservator, or in other similar capacities. However, securities held as agent for collection, custodian, escrow agent, depository, or in a similar representative capacity are not counted for purposes of Section 310(b)(9). n94 A trustee for the obligor's profit sharing plan (assuming it does not have the power to vote shares held by the plan) is subject to the disqualification provisions of Section 310(b)(9) instead of the stricter requirements of Section 310(b)(6). n95

If, on the date of default (as defined in the indenture but exclusive of any grace period or notice requirement) or on any anniversary of such default, the trustee owns in the aggregate in any of these fiduciary capacities 25% or more of the voting securities or of any class of securities which is covered by Sections 310(b)(6), (7), or (8), then a conflict exists. Thus, the trustee may not hold in a fiduciary capacity 25% or more of any of the following:

- (1) the voting securities of an obligor;
- (2) any other class of an obligor's securities (except securities issued under the current indenture and under other indentures for which it is trustee);

- (3) any class of securities of the underwriter for an obligor;
- (4) the voting securities of any person who, to the knowledge of the trustee, owns 10% or more of an obligor's voting securities, or controls or is under common control with an obligor; or
- (5) any class of securities of any person who, to the knowledge of the trustee, owns 50% or more of the obligor's voting securities.

However, a two year grace period applies to securities acquired by the trustee as executor, administrator, or testamentary trustee of an estate, so long as the estate does not itself own an amount in excess of the prohibited 25%.

Section 310(b)(9) requires that promptly after any default and annually thereafter so long as the securities remain in default, the trustee shall make a check of its holdings as of such dates in the various fiduciary capacities covered by the section's prohibitions. While Section 310(b)(9) does not explicitly require any pre-default check of holdings, the requirement in Section 313(a)(2) to report annually the creation of or any material change to a relationship that would create a post-default conflict effectively requires annual pre-default checks on holdings. n97

The 25% trigger under Section 310(b)(9) is unlikely to be exceeded except in the case of banks or trust companies that act as trustees under corporate pension or profit sharing plans that invest heavily in employer securities. In these cases, a crucial issue will be whether the bank is acting under the plan as a true trustee, or whether, instead, it is acting merely as a custodian or in some similar representative capacity so that its stock holdings are not counted against the 25% figure. In response to a no-action letter request posing this issue, the Commission staff refused to take a position on the matter because it was raised in connection with an already-qualified indenture, over which the Commission had no enforcement authority. n98

If the obligor is in default on the payment of principal for interest, a more constraining conflict of interest requirement is triggered by Section 310(b)(9). When a default in principal or interest has continued for thirty days, the trustee shall make a prompt check of its security holdings in its Section 310(b)(9) fiduciary capacities as of the end of the thirty day period. Thereafter, all of its holdings in its fiduciary capacities, whether in sole or joint control, are subject to the lower percentage triggers of Sections 310(b)(6), (7), and (8). This is consistent with Section 316(b)'s special protection of indenture security holders when there has been a payment default. n99

The various definitional and computational rules relating to Sections 310(b)(6), (7), and (8) also apply to Section 310(b)(9). n100

[6] Trustee as Creditor of Obligor

Section 310(b)(10), added in 1990, provides (with limited exceptions) that a conflict of interest exists if, after default, the trustee is or becomes a creditor of the obligor. In enacting this section, Congress stated:

No conflict could be clearer than that between the interests of a trustee with significant loans to a corporate borrower ... and that corporation's bondholders. On default, a trustee/creditor may become a competitor for funds of the corporation and, thus, in a relation adverse to the rights of the bondholders. Because most institutional trustees are commercial banks, a creditor relationship with the obligor is an ordinary occurrence. n101

Indeed Congress recognized that even prior to 1990 when such creditor relationships were permitted, the common practice was for trustee/creditors to resign when a default occurred in recognition of their inability to both fairly represent indenture security holders and assert their own claims. n102

Prior to 1990, few provisions of the Trust Indenture Act had created so much controversy as those which permitted the indenture trustee to also be a direct creditor of the obligor on the indenture securities. n103 In fact, despite the implicit acceptance of the dual creditor-trustee status, n104 cases indicated that a cause of action existed under state law for breach of fiduciary duty against a trustee-creditor which had collected funds on its own behalf, n105 and similarly, under the Trust Indenture Act itself when the dual status originated through the willful misconduct of the trustee. n106

The conflicts of interest that resulted from dual creditor-trustee status were justified on two pragmatic grounds. First, it was claimed that banning of the dual role would either lead all banks to opt for the more lucrative creditor relationship so that responsible trustees would be unavailable, or else would lead to exorbitant trustee's fees. n107 Second, it was urged that the trustee bank might be the only lender willing to make a "rescue loan" as insolvency approached. n108 The force of these objections to prohibiting the trustee-creditor conflict was largely eliminated when the 1990 amendments to the Trust Indenture Act limited the creditor-trustee's obligation to resign to post-default creditor relationships.

Section 310(b)(10) excludes from the definition of prohibited relationships five of the relationships that are also excluded from the apportionment requirements of Section 311(b). These excluded relationships, described by Congress as "incidental creditor relations ... which ordinarily do not involve opportunity for material conflict with the interests of indenture security holders," n109 are:

- (1) a creditor relationship arising from the ownership or acquisition of securities issued under any indenture, or any security or securities having a maturity of one year or more at the time of acquisition by the indenture trustee;
- (2) a creditor relationship arising from disbursements made in the ordinary course of business in the capacity of trustee under an indenture, transfer agent, registrar, custodian, paying agent, fiscal agent or depositary, or other similar capacity;
- (3) a creditor relationship arising from an indebtedness created as a result of services rendered or premises rented, or from an indebtedness created as a result of goods or securities sold in a cash transaction as defined in the indenture;
- (4) a creditor relationship arising from the ownership of stock or other securities of an Edge Act corporation where that corporation is a creditor of the obligor on the indenture securities; and
- (5) a creditor relationship arising from the acquisition, ownership, acceptance, or negotiation of any drafts, bills of exchange, acceptances, or obligations which are self-liquidating paper as defined in the indenture. n110

(n1)Footnote 1. The legislative history of this provision indicates that it merely embodies the conflict prohibition that, prior to 1990, was found in TIA § 310(b)(2). S. Rep. No. 101-155 (1989), 101st Cong., 1st Sess., p. 48. In fact, the pre-1990 prohibition was narrower, applying only to the obligor and any of its directors or executive officers. In Daimler-Benz Aktiengesellschaft, SEC Rel. No. 39-2353 (Apr. 25, 1997), 1997 LEXIS 909, the SEC granted an exemption from the provisions of § 310(a)(5) where the trustee was the registered owner of the obligor's stock under its American Depositary Receipt program, but did not have discretion to vote or transfer those shares.

In enacting the 1990 amendments to Section 310(b), the Senate Committee Report stated that the disqualification requirements of the original TIA were "an outgrowth of the 1936 Report and reflected Congress' concern about instances of abuses involving relationship between the obligor and the trustee. However, each of the instances of abuse cited in the 1936 Report arose in situations in which there had been a default on the bonds. In the cases described in the Report, the trustees took steps to protect their own financial interests, instead of protecting the interests of the bondholders. There is no indication in the legislative history of the TIA that Congress was concerned about abuses by trustees prior to a default." S. Rep. No. 101-155 (1989), 101st Cong., 1st Sess., p. 32.

(n8)Footnote 8. See SEC Manual--Trust Indenture Act of 1939 at pp 10-11, discussing and quoting legislative history in this regard. Two lines of cases suggest routes of attack on alleged conflicts that are not enumerated in Section 310(b). One line suggests that the Trust Indenture Act itself creates liability when the circumstances under which the conflict of interest was created constituted willful misconduct. See In re Equity Funding Corp. of America Securities Litigation, 416 F. Supp. 161, 203 (C.D. Cal. 1976); Morris v. Cantor, 390 F. Supp. 817, C.C.H. Fed. Sec. L. Rep. P 94,996 (S.D.N.Y. 1975). See § 8.19 infra. The other line recognizes that state law may impose additional fiduciary obligations on indenture trustees. See, e.g., Broad v. Rockwell International Corp., 614 F.2d 418, 431-32, C.C.H. Fed. Sec. L. Rep. P 97,326 at pp. 97,192-93, aff'd en banc, 642 F.2d 929, C.C.H. Fed. Sec. L. Rep. P 97,961 at p. 90,941 (N.D. Ga. 1981). The tension between these holdings and the typical indenture provision, permitted by Section 315(a), which limits the trustee's liability for pre-default conduct to breaches of those duties specifically set out in the indenture, is discussed in § 8.15[2] infra. The present discussion is limited to the conflict of interest provisions of Section 310(b) itself.

(n9)Footnote 9. TIA Section 310(b) applies to "any indenture trustee," not just to the institutional trustee. Thus, it would apply to any co-trustee.

(n18)Footnote 18. TIA Section 303(12) excludes from the definition of "obligor" certain merely formal issuers, i.e., trustees who issue certificates of interest or participation, equipment trust certificates or like securities. This parallels the definition of "issuer" in Securities Act Section 2(4), discussed in § 4.02[1] supra. See, e.g., CSX Corporation, Seal and Service, Inc. (No Action Letter, Aug. 10, 1987); National Cooperative Services Corp. (No Action Letter, May 3, 1985); Military Sealift Command (No Action Letter, Sept. 26, 1984); Colorado-Ute Electric Association, Inc. (No Action Letter, Sept. 7, 1984), all involving non-recourse issuers in leveraged lease transactions.

Similarly, the formal issuers of equipment trust certificates, i.e., the owner-trustees, are not "indenture trustees" for purposes of the Trust Indenture Act. See World Airways Inc. (No Action Letter, Sept. 12, 1977); Pan American World Airways, Inc., C.C.H. Fed. Sec. L. Rep. P 78,551 (Div. Corp. Fin. 1971); Trans World Airlines, Inc. (No Action Letter, June 10, 1971). Cf. United States Trust Company of New York (No Action Letter, June 16, 1975) (no dual trusteeship conflict under TIA Section 310(b)(1) by reason of being an owner-trustee and an indenture trustee in connection with same corporation).

For a brief period after 1939, the Commission took a much broader view, construing "obligor" to include subsidiaries and affiliates and similarly taking the position that parents, subsidiaries, and affiliates of the trustee could not serve as trustee under indentures of the same obligor as the trustee. These positions were abandoned in the 1940's. See SEC Manual--Trust Indenture Act of 1939 at pp. 14a-16 (June 1958).

(n22)Footnote 22. Cf. Dorsey, Marquart, Windhurst, West & Hallady (No Action Letter, Jan. 16, 1974).

It has been suggested that great care be taken in examining the situation even when there is no formal guarantee, but the credit of an obligor under another indenture is in fact the primary security for payment of the obligations under the subject indenture trusted by the same person. An example is "if corporation A issued securities for the construction of certain facilities to be leased to corporation B, the rental payments being sufficient to service the securities and the lease, and the right to receive the rents being pledged under the indenture." While the SEC's policy prior to the 1990 TIA amendments also permitted certain series of separately collateralized securities which ranked equally to be issued under a single indenture with the same trustee even when the series had separate voting rights, the Commission required that such indentures mandate the resignation of the trustee when material conflicts of interest between series arose. Texas Commerce National Association, supra. Since a default on one of the series might well have created a conflict of interest, the 1990 TIA amendments which limit prohibitions on dual trusteeships to post-default situations do not seem to substantially narrow the Commission's former position.

(n52)Footnote 52. TIA Section 310(b) (third from last paragraph) defines "underwriter" for purposes of Section 310(b) to include only a person "who, within one year prior to the time as of which the determination is made, was an underwriter of any security of such obligor outstanding at the time of determination." The current underwriters of the securities under the indenture being qualified are also included. See SEC Manual--Trust Indenture Act of 1939 at pp. 50-52 (June 1958); In the Matter of Shell Union Oil Corp., 8 S.E.C. 520 (1941) ; American Bar Foundation, Commentaries On Indentures 268 (1971). Prior to the 1990 amendments, "underwriter" included all persons who had acted as an underwriter within three years before the time the determination was made. This change was intended to "recognize that relationships between obligors and investment brokers lack the permanency they had in the nineteen thirties." S. Rep. No. 101-155 (1989), 101st Cong., 1st Sess., p.33.

The Trust Indenture Act does not define persons who sell on behalf of affiliates to be underwriters of the obligor.

(n53)Footnote 53. TIA Rule 0-2 defines "control" as "the power to direct the management and policies of a person, directly or through one or more intermediaries, whether through the ownership of voting securities, by contract, or otherwise."

TIA Rule 7a-26 permits the applicant in a Form T-3 and the trustee in a Form T-1 to disclaim control if the question is open to reasonable doubt. However, the facts that are material to the question must be disclosed if control is disclaimed.

TIA Section 310(b) (third from last paragraph) requires the indenture to provide that the percentage ownership figures in Sections 310(b)(5)-(9), discussed in § 8.13[3] and § 8.13[4] infra , are not relevant to the issue of control under Section 310(b)(3).

§ 8.14 Duties of Obligors to Trustee

Under every qualified indenture the obligor must furnish to the indenture trustee: bondholder lists; furnish copies of Exchange Act reports, annual certification of compliance with conditions and covenants; evidence of recording the indenture and compliance with any conditions precedent; and certificates of fair value. A parent that guarantees a subsidiary's debt securities is an "obligor" under the indenture, and so must also furnish these reports. n1 Permissive provisions obligating the issuer to furnish the trustee other evidence of compliance with indenture conditions and covenants may also be included in the indenture.

The Trust Indenture Act imposes upon each obligor certain duties to the indenture trustee.

[1] Furnishing Bondholders Lists

Section 312(a) of the Trust Indenture Act requires each obligor to furnish current bondholder lists to the trustee. At stated intervals of not more than six months, and at such other times as the trustee may request in writing, each obligor is required to furnish or cause to be furnished to the institutional trustee all information possessed by itself and its paying agents as to the names and addresses of the indenture security holders. Despite the six month requirement, qualified indentures often do not require the first list until more than six months after the date the indenture is qualified, but use a six month interval for subsequent lists. n2 Typically indentures peg the date for furnishing bondholder lists to the semiannual interest payment dates. n3

The indenture trustee must also preserve all the information furnished to it or received by it when it acts itself as paying agent n4 in as current a form as is reasonably practicable. n5

When the Trust Indenture Act was drafted, bonds were generally issued in bearer form, but Internal Revenue Code regulations required bondholders to file ownership certificates with the paying agent when presenting coupons for payment. n6 It was this information that Congress assumed would be turned over to the trustee. n7 Typically, indentures for bonds in bearer form call for bondholder lists to be furnished to the trustee from 45 to 60 days after the interest payment dates. n8 The requirement for the filing of ownership certificates by holders of corporate bonds was eliminated in 1942 to reduce the massive paperwork burden that it had imposed. n9 This eliminated the only reliable source for the compiling of bondholder lists for bonds in bearer form. After 1942, information in the possession of the obligor and its paying agents as to the holders of bearer bonds was often incomplete. n10

The movement, in recent years, to fully registered bonds has again created an accurate source for bondholder lists. n11 Usually the trustee is also named registrar for the indenture securities, so that there is little if any additional information to be furnished to it under the Section 312(a) indenture provisions. n12 When the trustee is not the registrar, bondholder lists are available rapidly, and generally indentures require them to be furnished to the trustee either on or before the interest payment dates, n13 or not more than 15 days after such dates. n14

In private placements, where the securities are issued under an indenture in contemplation of later resale to the public, traditionally the requirements of Section 312(a) were made subject to a "trigger clause" that made them operative only if the indenture was later qualified under the Trust Indenture Act. n15 Since the 1990 amendments to the Act, this same result can be obtained more simply by eliminating physical inclusion of the mandatory terms in the original indenture and relying upon their becoming included by operation of law when the indenture is later qualified. n16

[2] Furnishing Copies of Exchange Act Reports and Annual Certificates of Compliance

Under Section 314(a)(1) of the Trust Indenture Act, each obligor must file with the trustee copies of all periodic reports required by Section 13 or Section 15(d) of the Securities Exchange Act. n17 Thus, every current report on Form 8-K, quarterly report on Form 10-Q, and annual report on Form 10-K is to be filed with the trustee. n18 Sometimes indentures call for the reports to be sent to the trustee within 15 days after they are required to be filed with the Commission. n19 Other indentures call for the reports to be sent to the trustee within 15 days after they are actually filed with the SEC. n20 The drafters of the Revised Model Simplified Indenture suggest that Section 314(a)(1) may permit electronic transmission of these reports to the trustee, if the trustee agrees to receive them in electronic form. n21

Courts have held that Section 314(a)(1) does not impose an independent obligation that 1934 periodic reports be filed on time. The section merely requires that the obligor file with the trustee those reports that it has in fact filed with the SEC. Thus failure to file a timely Form 10-K, 10-Q or 8-K is not a breach of the TIA or of an indenture covenant that generally requires compliance with the TIA. It is only a breach of a covenant if the indenture language sets a time frame for filing or transmission of periodic reports to the trustee. n22

Since the 1990 amendments to the Act, Section 314(a)(4) also requires each obligor to furnish the trustee at least annually a certificate regarding the obligor's compliance with all conditions and covenants under the indenture. A brief certificate from the obligor's principal executive officer, principal financial officer, or principal accounting officer as to his or her knowledge of the obligor's compliance satisfies the requirement. Compliance is to be determined without regard to any grace period or notice requirement provided under the indenture, the same manner in which default is determined for purposes of triggering the conflict of interest provisions under Section 310(b). n23 At least one court has held that the statutory requirement as to the officer who must furnish an annual certificate refers to job functions, not to formal titles. It is the individual who is in fact functioning as the principal executive, financial or accounting officer who must sign. n24

The obligor must also comply in the future with certain other information-furnishing requirements, if the Commission should decide to exercise its rulemaking authority under Section 314(a). n25 The Commission is given rulemaking power to:

- (1) require obligors that are not subject to the continuous reporting requirements of the Exchange Act to nevertheless file Exchange Act Section 13 reports, i.e., Forms 8-K, 10-Q, and 10-K, with the Commission and the trustee; n26

(2) require obligors to file with the trustee and the Commission reports on compliance with indenture conditions and covenants beyond the reports required by Section 314(a)(4), including annual accountants' reports on certain matters; n27 and

(3) require obligors to send to the indenture security holders summaries of Exchange Act reports and any other reports that Commission rules require the obligor to file with the trustee. n28

The Trust Indenture Act permits the Commission to promulgate these reporting rules and make them applicable to indentures that have been qualified in the past, as well as to newly qualified ones. n29 The Commission has not adopted any rules under these enabling provisions. n30 However, in a less direct manner, it has required the issuer to report any material defaults under the indenture to the trustee. Virtually all issuers of securities covered by the Trust Indenture Act are also subject to the continuous reporting requirements of Section 13 or 15(d) of the Securities Exchange Act. Both quarterly reports on Form 10-Q, and the financial statements in the Form 10-K annual reports must include information on defaults. As discussed above, copies of all Form 10-Q and 10-K reports must in turn be filed with the trustee.

Specifically, Item 3 of Form 10-Q requires reporting of any material default in payment of principal, interest, a sinking or purchase fund installment, or any other material default not cured within 30 days, if the indebtedness involved exceeds 5% of the total assets of the issuer and its consolidated subsidiaries. The Form 10-Q must identify the indebtedness, state the nature of the default, and indicate as to any default in the payment of principal, interest, or a sinking or purchase fund installment, the amount of the default and total arrearages to date. Disclosure is required only when occurrences have matured into events of default through the expiration of any grace period and compliance with any notice requirements. n31

In Form 10-K, the notes to the financial statements must reflect the information called for in Rule 4-08(c) of Regulation S-X. n32 This rule specifies disclosure of facts and amounts relating to any default in principal, interest, sinking fund or redemption provisions, or any breach of indenture covenants that existed as of the balance sheet date and were not subsequently cured. Also, information about any waiver of acceleration of the indebtedness must be furnished.

Private placements under indentures that may later be qualified traditionally used a trigger clause to delay the applicability of the Section 314(a) provisions. n33 Since the 1990 amendments to the Act, this same result can be obtained more simply by eliminating physical inclusion of the mandatory terms in the original indenture and relying upon their becoming included by operation of law when the indenture is later qualified. n34 When this is done, other covenants will often be negotiated to take immediate effect to assure the furnishing of information to the lenders about the issuer. n35

[3] Furnishing Evidence of Recording and Compliance with Conditions Precedent

Where the indenture is secured by a mortgage or pledge of property, Section 314(b) requires the obligor to furnish the trustee with evidence of proper recording of the indenture. Promptly after the execution and delivery of the indenture, an opinion of counsel (who may be counsel for the obligor) must be delivered to the trustee. The opinion must state either that the indenture has been properly recorded and filed so as to make its lien effective, giving the details of the filing, or else, the opinion must state that no recording is necessary to make the lien effective. A similar opinion of counsel must be furnished annually to evidence any re-recording and re-filing necessary to maintain the lien, or to indicate that this action is not necessary. n36 When the indenture securities are secured by a lien on personal property, presumably the opinions of counsel should focus on whether UCC-1 financing statements have been filed in order to perfect the lien, rather than on whether the indenture itself has been properly recorded. n37

Under Section 314(c), whenever the obligor requests the trustee to take any action under the indenture, such as authenticating and delivering securities, n38 releasing or substituting (or both) mortgaged property, n39 or satisfying and discharging securities, n40 the obligor must furnish the trustee with evidence that all relevant conditions precedent have been met. n41 The evidence, detailed by Section 314(c), must consist of both a certificate by officers who are specified in the indenture, n42 and an opinion of counsel (who may be counsel for the obligor). In some situations, an accountant's certificate must also be furnished.

The language of Sections 314(c)(1) and (2), requiring officers' certificates and opinions of counsel, calls for each person to state that in his opinion there has been compliance with the relevant conditions precedent. However, as a practical matter, in giving such an opinion, officers must rely on counsel for legal matters, and counsel must rely on the officers for particular facts. Both must rely on accountants and engineers for other data. The Commission permits the indenture to include language stating that opinions may be based on representations of various experts, or on representations of officers as to facts in the possession of the company. This reliance will not be permitted, however, where the person relying knows, or in the exercise of reasonable care should have known, that the representations on which he relied were erroneous. n43

The requirements in Section 314(c)(3) for an accountant's certificate apply mainly in the context of mortgage bonds. They apply where conditions precedent are subject to verification by an accountant, such as requirements to maintain specified ratios or some amount of net quick assets, or negative pledge clauses. n44 Often, financial covenants in debentures are not drafted as conditions precedent to action by the trustee, and in such situations Section 314(c) is irrelevant. n45

Perhaps the most common situation in which an accountant's certificate may be required is a clause that conditions the issuance of additional series of bonds under an open-end indenture upon a certain ratio of earnings to interest charges having been achieved. n46 Issuance of additional bonds by companies subject to the Public Utility Holding Company Act must meet such a requirement. n47

The requirements of Section 314(c)(3) as to accountants' certificates call for the certificate to be furnished by an independent public accountant selected or approved by the trustee in the exercise of reasonable care when the trustee is called upon to authenticate and deliver substantial amounts of new indenture securities. This added requirement is triggered when the amount of securities authenticated and delivered since the beginning of the calendar year, together with the proposed additional issuance, equals or exceeds 10% of the amount outstanding. Excluded from the 10% computation are indenture securities as to which no accountant's certificate is required and those as to which an independent accountant's certificate has previously been furnished.

As to conditions precedent that involve information apparently thought to be available only to the issuer, Section 314(c) calls only for officers' certificates. This is the case where the condition precedent depends on facts as of a date or period not covered by required annual reports of the obligor. Thus, where an earnings test is applied as a condition precedent to the issuance of additional bonds, no accountant's certificate n48 is required where the relevant period over which earnings are to be measured is different from the period covered in the obligor's last annual report. n49 Further, officers' certificates alone are required as to the adequacy of depreciation, maintenance, or repairs when these are part of a condition precedent. Finally, where a condition precedent involves the amount and value of property additions, Section 314(c) calls only for an officers' certificate plus, where required by Section 314(d)(3), n50 an opinion of an engineer, appraiser, or other expert.

The evidentiary provisions required by Section 314(c) have sometimes been made subject to a trigger clause in private placements, so that they would become operative only if Trust Indenture Act qualification is effected. n51 Since the 1990 amendments to the Act, this same result can be obtained more simply by eliminating physical inclusion of the mandatory terms in the original indenture and relying upon their becoming included by operation of law when the indenture is later qualified. n52

[4] Form of Opinions on Compliance with Conditions or Covenants

Section 314(e) specifies the form that opinions relating to any indenture covenant or condition must take. The Act prescribes this format for Section 314(c) opinions on compliance with conditions precedent and also for any certificates regarding compliance with other covenants, n53 except for the annual certificates of compliance required by Section 314(a)(4). n54

Each certificate or opinion must include a statement that the person making it has read the relevant covenant or condition. It must contain a brief statement as to the nature and scope of the examination or investigation on which the person's statements or opinions are based. n55 It must recite that, in the opinion of the person making the certificate, he has made an examination or investigation that is adequate to permit him to express an informed opinion. Finally, the certificate must indicate whether or not, in the opinion of such person, there has been compliance with the relevant condition or covenant. n56 However, Section 314(e) does not require disclosure of the factual bases upon which the certificate or opinion is based. n57

The American Bar Foundation Model Debenture Indenture limits the requirements of Section 314(e) to each individual signing the certificate or opinion, on the ground that the Trust Indenture Act could not have intended "person" as used in Section 314(e) to include corporations or similar entities. n58

[5] Furnishing Certificates of Fair Value

For any indenture that is secured by the mortgage or pledge of property or securities, Section 314(d) imposes on the obligor a requirement to furnish certificates of fair value to the trustee. The certificates must be from an engineer, appraiser, or other expert. n59 They are to be furnished when the lien on any property or securities is to be released. Also, they are to be furnished when property or securities are to be added as the basis for authenticating and delivering additional securities, or as the basis for withdrawing cash or releasing other property that secures payment of the bonds. n60

Section 314(d)(1) mandates that for any property or securities to be released from the lien of the indenture, the certificate or opinion of the engineer, appraiser or other expert must state that in that person's opinion the proposed release will not impair the collateral in contravention of the indenture's provisions. n61

The Commission takes the position that certificates under any of the clauses of Section 314(d) must state the dollar amount of the value of the property in question, not merely that its value exceeds or is less than a particular amount. n62 If the dollar amount of property or securities to be released is substantial, the certificate must be from an independent engineer, appraiser, or expert who is selected or approved by the trustee in the exercise of reasonable care. Otherwise, unless the indenture expressly provides to the contrary, the expert need not be independent, and may be an officer or employee of the obligor. n63 The requirement of an independent expert is applicable if the fair value of the property or securities to be released, when added to the value of other releases since the beginning of the then current calendar year, equals 10% or more of the indenture securities outstanding. An independent expert, however, is not required if the value of the property or securities to be released is less than $25,000 or less than 1% of the indenture securities outstanding. n64

The Commission raises no question when the indenture permits certain limited releases and substitutions without a certificate of fair value. In particular, provisions permitting the sale of obsolete or outworn tools and equipment, the surrender of leaseholds, franchises, and easements, the taking of property by eminent domain, the demolition or abandonment of property no longer useful to the business, or the sale of timber and crops, have been permitted, as has the substitution of other property thereafter, without certificates of fair value. n65 Similarly, certificate requirements may be ignored when deposited securities are to be surrendered in a reorganization, recapitalization, or merger, and the new securities to be issued are to be substituted for them. n66

Where securities are collateralized by substantially all of the corporation's assets, a strict application of Section 314(d)(1) would prevent the sale of inventory and collection or other disposition of accounts or notes receivable by the obligor in the ordinary course of business without first furnishing a certificate of fair value before each sale or disposition. In Mary Kay Cosmetics, n67 the Commission permitted an indenture to be qualified which allowed such ordinary business activities so long as a semi-annual certificate was delivered to the trustee stating that all sales of inventory and all collections or other dispositions of accounts receivable and notes receivable during the immediately preceding six-month period were in the ordinary course of business. In addition, the indenture was to provide that the company could not dispose of over 10% of its assets (including inventory) other than in the ordinary course of business in any given year, and was to require delivery to the trustee annually of audited financial statements. n68 Subsequently, the Commission extended its no-action position to also permit other kinds of releases of collateral in the ordinary course of business (not exceeding 10% of the amount of indenture securities outstanding) without the furnishing of certificates of fair value each time. Again, this was subject to requirements to deliver annual audited financial statements and semi-annual certificates stating that the releases were in the ordinary course of business and that the proceeds were used in the ordinary course of business or to make cash payments permitted by the indenture. n69

The SEC appears willing to issue orders under TIA § 304(d) exempting indentures from the certificate of fair value delivery requirements that are broader than its no-action positions. It has exempted ordinary-course disposal of collateral, regardless of amount, from the requirements of § 314(d), so long as the issuer furnishes the trustee (1) annual audited financials and (2) semi-annual certificates stating that disposals of collateral were in the ordinary course of business and proceeds were used as permitted by the indenture. n70

In International Harvester Co., n71 the issuer proposed to eliminate the Section 314(d) requirements insofar as they related to release of collateral under an "equal and ratable security" clause. Under this clause, debenture holders are given an equal and ratable lien with later creditors if the issuer later creates a lien on specifically identifiable assets. International Harvester created such a subsequent lien in a financing arrangement with institutional lenders. The collateral subject to the equal and ratable security clause was governed by "shared collateral agreements" between the issuer and a separate collateral trustee acting for the benefit of both the debenture holders and the institutional lenders. Only the institutional lenders had control over any release of the shared collateral from the lien. Under those circumstances the Commission staff concluded that the debenture indenture was not required to include the Section 314(d) provisions.

A later similar case involved a shared collateral agreement that was wholly external to the indenture. The issuer applied for a formal exemption arguing that Section 314(d) was not intended to apply to indentures that do not contain the provisions creating the security interest. In granting the exemption, the Commission emphasized both that the shared collateral agreement was external to the indenture and that decisions to maintain or release collateral were not made by the indenture trustee or the indenture security holders. n72

Section 314(d)(2) requires certificates of the fair value be furnished to the obligor on the indenture securities attesting to the value of securities whose deposit with the trustee is to be the basis for authentication and delivery of indenture securities, or the basis for the withdrawal of cash or release of collateral. n73 However, under this section, certificates are not required as to the deposit of securities issued under the subject indenture or as to securities secured by a lien prior to that of the indenture on property that also collateralizes the indenture securities. n74 The certificate of fair value must be provided by the same experts as under Section 314(d)(1), n75 who must be independent of the issuer whenever the value of the securities to be deposited plus all other securities deposited since the beginning of the calendar year equals 10% or more of the indenture securities outstanding. However, an independent expert is not required if the value of the securities to be deposited is less than $25,000 or less than 1% of the indenture securities outstanding. In such cases, unless the indenture expressly provides to the contrary, the expert may be an officer or employee of the obligor. n76 When an independent expert is required because of the amount of securities to be deposited as a basis for authentication and delivery of indenture securities, the certificate must also cover the value of all other securities deposited since the beginning of the calendar year as to which a certificate has not previously been furnished.

Section 314(d)(3) requires the indenture to contain provisions requiring the obligor to deliver to the trustee an engineer's, appraiser's, or other expert's certificate of the fair value to the obligor of any property that is to be subjected to the lien of the indenture as the basis for authenticating and delivering securities, withdrawing cash, or releasing collateral. n77 The requirements call for the certificate to be from an independent expert, selected or approved by the trustee in the exercise of reasonable care, if within six months prior to the acquisition of the property by the obligor, the property was used by someone else in a business similar to that in which the obligor will use it, and if the property is worth at least $25,000 and at least 1% of the amount of the indenture securities outstanding. Where an independent expert is required and the addition of collateral relates to the authentication and delivery of indenture securities, the certificate must cover all the property added since the beginning of the then current calendar year as to which a certificate of an independent expert has not previously been furnished. Where an independent expert is not required, unless the indenture expressly provides to the contrary, the expert may be an officer or employee of the obligor. n78

The Commission takes the position that certificates are not required for property additions that are to be improved by new construction when cash is pledged for that purpose, even though technically the addition is the basis for withdrawing the cash. However, where property additions are the basis for the release of insurance proceeds that are not restricted to rebuilding or repair, a certificate is required. n79

Where after-acquired property is automatically or periodically subjected to the lien of the indenture, the Commission's view is that certificates of fair value should be provided at the time the property is used as the basis for authentication of bonds or for the release of property or cash, rather than at the time the lien first attaches. n80

There is some ambiguity as to whether certificates of fair value under Section 314(d) must comply with the format prescribed by Section 314(e), n81 since the statutory language is unclear whether certificates of fair value are certificates "with respect to compliance with a condition or covenant." The Commission has taken the position that an indenture may use the same ambiguous statutory language that Section 314(e) uses, but the indenture may not specifically exclude certificates of fair value from the Section 314(e) requirements. This conclusion is based on the Commission's view that certificates of fair value do evidence compliance with covenants or conditions when the certificates are used as an integral part of authentication and release provisions in the indenture. n82

The Commission's view is that certificates under all the clauses of Section 314(d) must be current, i.e., as of a date within 90 days of the request that the trustee take action requiring the certificate. n83 This poses special difficulties under Section 314(d)(3) as to certain property addition clauses that are common in public utility indentures. These "accounting type" clauses permit the carry forward of the unused portions of past property additions. The credit carried forward is computed under a formula that involves all property additions since the date of the indenture, some of which may have since been altered or replaced. n84 The Commission has developed a number of methods for accommodating such clauses to the requirements for a current valuation under Section 314(d). They involve creating presumptions as to which property gives rise to the credits, or compromising on the current date requirement if the amount of the credit, the years from which it can be carried, or both, are limited, or if a maintenance fund with interim fund certificates plus periodic inspection of properties for the adequacy of maintenance is provided. n85

[6] Permissive Provisions on Evidence of Compliance with Covenants

Section 314(f) permits, but does not require, the indenture to include additional provisions obligating the issuer to furnish the trustee evidence of compliance with indenture conditions and covenants. Since 1990, Section 314(a)(4) has required an annual officer's certificate regarding compliance. n86

Prior to 1990, indentures typically included covenants requiring the obligor to furnish the trustee with an annual statement of compliance indicating that the issuer had fulfilled all its obligations under the indenture. A common version called for a more elaborate certificate than the one described in 314(a)(4). It required a statement signed by two corporate officers indicating that a review of the company's activities and performance had been made under their supervision, and to the best of their knowledge, based on that review, the company had fulfilled all its obligations under the indenture. If defaults had occurred, then the certificate was to specify them and their nature and status. n87

Neither the provision for the officers' statements in the American Bar Foundation's Commentaries On Indentures, nor the one included in the Model Simplified Indenture, n88 required the compliance certificate to follow the format of Section 314(e). n89 This was intentional because of the ambiguity in the Section 314(e) requirement that the certificate state the nature and scope of the examination or investigation on which the opinion in the certificate is based. n90 The drafters of these model provisions apparently were convinced that this approach was permissible under the Trust Indenture Act, despite an earlier Commission position that Section 314(e) "would appear to be broad enough to cover certificates or opinions required by the terms of the indenture in addition to those required by Section 314(c) and (d) of the Act." n91 The 1990 amendments to the Act are consistent with the understanding of the drafters of the model provisions, excluding from the requirements of Section 314(e) the officer's certificate required by Section 314(a)(4). n92

An indenture may also call for the issuer to furnish the trustee a compliance certificate from the independent public accountants who have audited the issuer's annual financial statements. Typically, accountants are merely required to state that in the course of their examination of the company's books, they obtained no knowledge of any default or event that would become a default upon lapse of time, notice, or both, or of any failure to fulfill a covenant on the part of the issuer. The certificate may be required to extend to defaults and breaches under other indebtedness as well as under the indenture. n93

In 1977, the SEC's Advisory Committee on Corporate Disclosure decried the Commission's lack of attention to the informational needs of bondholders. CHAPTER 8 The Trust Indenture Act of 1939

2-8 Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 8.15

AUTHOR: Howard M. Friedman This chapter was prepared by Howard M. Friedman, Professor of Law, Emeritus, University of Toledo. § 8.15 Duties of Trustee Prior to Default

The Trust Indenture Act imposes certain duties on the indenture trustee prior to any default by the obligor. The trustee must provide annual reports and periodic reports on certain developments to indenture security holders and to give notice to the security holders of all defaults known to the trustee within ninety days of their occurrence. Unless provided to the contrary in the indenture, the trustee's liability is limited to the performance of the duties specified in the indenture. A trustee's resignation is effective only upon appointment and acceptance by a successor trustee.

Despite the great concern expressed by Congress in 1939 over the passivity of indenture trustees in enforcing the rights of security holders, n1 the Trust Indenture Act imposes rather minimal duties on the indenture trustee prior to any default by the obligor. n2 Suggestions that the pre-default duties of trustees should be markedly increased have been met with strong protests that these changes would lead to prohibitively large increases in trustees' fees. n3

An indenture may permit the indenture trustee to temporarily invest idle cash in money market funds or other securities. n4 In light of the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act which requires banks to sometimes register as broker-dealers, n5 questions arise as to whether this kind of investment activity can be carried out without broker-dealer registration. Exchange Act Section 3(a)(4)(B)(ii) excludes from the definition of "broker" any bank that merely effects transactions in a "trustee capacity", does not otherwise publicly solicit brokerage business and meets certain requirements as to its compensation. Prior to the adoption of Regulation R, Exchange Act Rule 3b-17 explicitly provided that an indenture trustee was acting in a "trustee capacity." The release adopting Regulation R repealed Rule 3b-17, relegating the definition of "trustee capacity" to the broader language of Section 3(a)(4)(D) of the Exchange Act. n6 That language, however, appears explicit enough to include indenture trustees. The Act's compensation requirements are aimed at assuring that banks operating as trustees are "chiefly compensated" by administration or annual fees, fees based on percentage of assets under management, and flat or capped per order fees reflecting only the cost of executing orders. Banks are not to be compensated primarily through traditional sales commissions without registering as broker-dealers. n7 However, where a bank as indenture trustee invests idle cash only in no-load money market mutual funds, Regulation R, Rule 741 under the Exchange Act permits it to ignore these compensation requirements. This permits bank indenture trustees to receive payments from a no-load money market fund or its distributor for investing idle cash in that fund, even when that sales compensation exceeds the relationship compensation that the bank receives from the issuer of the indenture securities. Often trustees take this potential sales compensation into account in negotiating the trustee fees charged to issuers. n8

[1] Reports by Trustee to Security Holders--Section 313

Section 313 requires the trustee to:

- (1) transmit annual reports and periodic reports on certain developments to the indenture security holders; n9
- (2) file a copy of each report with every exchange on which the indenture securities are listed; and
- (3) file a copy of each report with the Commission. n10

Even with the full implementation of EDGAR, these reports are still to be filed in paper form. n11

The brief annual report required by Section 313(a) is required only if changes have occurred in any of eight different matters. First, the trustee must report with respect to any change in its continuing eligibility and qualification under Section 310. n12 Second, the trustee must report on the creation of, or any material change in, a relationship which, under Section 310(b), would constitute a conflict of interest after default by the obligor on the indenture securities.

Third, the trustee must report on the character and amount of any advances it has made that may result in a claim by it prior to the claims of the indenture security holders on property or funds held by the trustee, if the amount of such advances remaining unpaid equals more than 0.5% of the indenture securities outstanding. n13 The intent of Congress in enacting the 1990 amendments to the TIA was that reporting of advances should be required only when changes to the amount, interest rate, maturity or collateral have occurred. A drafting error in the amendments led to the language of Section 313(a)(3) appearing to require annual reporting of indebtedness whether or not such changes occurred. The Commission has stated that it intends to recommend a technical amendment to Congress correcting the legislation, and that until such time as the amendment can be made, trustees should prepare their reports to reflect Congressional intent, i.e., they need only report changes during the year. n14

Fourth, the trustee must report the principal, interest rate, maturity date, and collateral for all other amounts owed to it on the date of the report by the obligor on the indenture securities. n15 However, the trustee need not report on indebtedness arising from the relationships described in Sections 311(b)(2), (3), (4), or (6). n16 Thus no report is required of indebtedness arising from:

- (1) certain authorized advances under the indenture or in bankruptcy;
- (2) disbursements in the ordinary course of business as indenture trustee, transfer agent, paying agent or in other similar capacities;
- (3) services rendered, premises rented, or goods or securities sold in a cash transaction; or
- (4) transactions in self-liquidating paper.

Fifth, the trustee must report on any changes in the property and funds physically in its possession.

Sixth, the trustee must report on any change to any release, or release and substitution, of property subject to the lien of the indenture, not previously reported. n17 The Commission has stated that the addition in 1990 of language requiring reporting only of changes to releases and substitutions was a drafting error. The provision should require reporting of all previously unreported releases and substitutions. The Commission intends to recommend a technical amendment to Congress to correct this error. n18

Seventh, the trustee must report any additional issue of indenture securities not previously reported.

Finally, the trustee is to report any other action taken by it in performance of its duties under the indenture that it has not previously reported, which in its opinion is material, except any action concerning a default, the notice of which has been or is to be withheld under an indenture provision authorized by Section 315(b). n19

While the Trust Indenture Act does not specify the date for the trustee's annual report, under the pre-1990 version of the Act the Commission had suggested n20 that where the timing would not unduly advance nor delay the first report, a report dated as of shortly after May 15 would be most appropriate, since Section 310(b)(9) used to require the trustee to check its eligibility with regard to holdings in fiduciary capacities as of that date. Now Section 310(h)(4) requires a check only upon default and annually thereafter, n21 so that a preference for a May 15 reporting date is no longer necessary if another date would be more convenient. Usually, the indenture gives the trustee 60 days from the reporting date to prepare and transmit the report. n22

More frequent reports by the trustee are required when certain events occur. Section 313(b)(1) of the Trust Indenture Act requires the trustee to report to indenture security holders (and file copies with relevant exchanges and the Commission) within 90 days after any release, or release and substitution of property, unless the fair value of the property involved, as set forth in the required Section 314(d)(1) certificates, n23 is less than 10% of the amount of indenture securities then outstanding.

Section 313(b)(2) similarly requires more frequent reporting of large advances made to the obligor as to which the trustee may claim a lien prior to that of the indenture security holders on property or funds held by the trustee. Within 90 days after the unpaid advances that have not previously been reported aggregate over 10% of the indenture securities outstanding, the trustee must report their character and amount. The report must relate to advances since the date of the last annual report, or if no annual report has yet been transmitted, advances since the date of the indenture.

Section 313(c) prescribes the required manner of transmitting reports to the indenture security holders. n24 The reports must be mailed to all registered holders and to all holders of bearer form securities who have, within the past two years, filed their names and addresses with the trustee for that purpose. n25 The annual reports must also be mailed to everyone on the bondholders list furnished to the trustee pursuant to Section 312(a). n26 Because Section 313(c) specifically requires these reports to be transmitted by mail, the SEC's policies on electronic delivery of documents to investors do not apply. n27

If the indenture securities are listed on the New York Stock Exchange, the NYSE requires the issuer to instruct the trustee to give immediate notice to the exchange of:

- (1) any change or removal of deposited collateral;
- (2) acceleration of maturity by the trustee;
- (3) issuance or authentication of duplicate bonds;
- (4) cancellation, retirement, or other reduction in the amount of bonds outstanding; and
- (5) any call for redemptions including sinking fund requirements. n28

[2] Limitations on Trustee's Pre-Default Duties

Section 315(a) reflects a notion of the trustee's duties prior to default as being essentially administrative in nature. n29 Under Section 315(a)(1) unless express provisions to the contrary are included in the indenture, the indenture will automatically be deemed to provide that prior to default n30 the trustee shall not be liable except for the performance of those duties specifically set out in the indenture. n31 Often this is supplemented by another clause placed in the indenture stating that no provision of the indenture shall require the trustee to expend or risk its own funds or incur any liability in performing any of its duties under the indenture, if it reasonably believes that it will not be repaid or indemnified. n32

In Meckel v. Continental Resources Co., n33 the Second Circuit stated: "Unlike the ordinary trustee, who has historic common-law duties imposed beyond those in the trust agreement, an indenture trustee is more like a stakeholder whose duties and obligations are exclusively defined by the terms of the indenture agreement." n34 Relying upon this principle, and pointing to the indenture clause permitted by Section 315(a)(1) which was included in the indenture at issue, the Second Circuit held that the indenture trustee had no obligation under the Trust Indenture Act to give the holders of convertible debentures notice of redemption beyond the notice by first class mail called for by the indenture. n35

Using a similar rationale, in Elliott Associates v. J. Henry Schroder Bank & Trust Co., n36 the Second Circuit held that, absent self-dealing, the trustee was not obligated to weigh the financial interests of the debenture holders in waiving a 50 day notice period for redemption as permitted in the indenture.

The trustee is liable if it engages in willful misconduct, is negligent in carrying out its duties under the indenture, or negligently fails to perform those duties. n37 Section 315(d) prohibits the indenture from containing exculpatory n38 clauses relating to negligent or willful misconduct. n39 Under Section 315(a)(2), however, unless expressly provided to the contrary, the indenture is automatically deemed to provide that the trustee, in carrying out its pre-default duties, may conclusively rely on the truth of statements and the correctness of opinions in documents conforming to the requirements of the indenture, unless the trustee is acting in bad faith. n40 The trustee, though, must at least examine the certificates and opinions furnished to it pursuant to § 314 of the Trust Indenture Act to determine whether they conform to the indenture's requirements. n41

Semi-Tech Litigation, LLC v. Bankers Trust Company n42 held that TIA § 315(a) imposes a duty on the trustee to examine each certificate furnished to it to determine whether it conforms to the indenture, even if the trustee does not intend to rely on statements or opinions in the certificate. It also held that the requirement to examine certificates furnished "pursuant to section 314" includes not just the annual certificate of compliance required by § 314(a), but also additional certificates that the indenture may call for, since § 314(f) explicitly permits the indenture to provide for additional evidence of compliance with indenture conditions and covenants.

While the trustee is required to examine opinions of counsel actually furnished to it to determine that they conform to the indenture's requirements, the court in Harriet & Henderson Yarns, Inc. v. Castle held that the trustee breaches no duty when it ignores the obligor's total failure to furnish the statutorily required opinion of counsel stating that a lien on assets securing the indenture has been perfected. In the court's view, Section 314(b) "clearly does not impose a duty on indenture trustees to ensure that liens are perfected for the benefit of the debenture holders." n43

Unless expressly excluded by provisions in the indenture, the indenture will automatically be deemed to contain two other exceptions to the trustee's liability for negligence. First, under Section 315(d)(2), the trustee will be protected from liability for any good faith errors of judgment made by its own responsible officers, unless it is proven that the trustee was negligent in ascertaining the pertinent facts. n44 Second, Section 315(d)(3) protects the trustee in following the directions of holders of a majority of the indenture securities. n45

While Section 315(d) is framed in the negative and prohibits exculpatory clauses (except those discussed above), which excuse the trustee's willful misconduct or negligence, the Commission has traditionally insisted on an affirmative statement in the indenture. The indenture has been required to provide that no other provision of the indenture shall be construed to relieve the trustee from liability for its own negligent action, its own negligent failure to act, or its own willful misconduct. n46 The clause in this form qualifies any other indenture provision that might be exculpatory. n47 Requiring such an affirmative statement seems to be inconsistent with the 1990 amendments to the Act which were intended to assure full compliance without the necessity of physically including statutorily mandated language in the indenture. n48 Such an affirmative qualification is not automatically incorporated under the 1990 amendments and, if necessary, would thus require physical inclusion.

While the trustee may not be relieved of liability for its own negligence, it is less certain whether the TIA should be read to also exclude indemnification of the trustee for losses caused by its negligence. n49

[3] Notice to Security Holders of Known Defaults

Section 315(b) requires the trustee to give notice to the indenture security holders of all defaults known to the trustee, within 90 days of their occurrence. n50 Since the notice date runs from the date of the default, rather than the date of discovery by the trustee, the provision may occasionally create time pressures. Where the trustee does not learn of a default until after 90 days, n51 the Commission's view is that prompt notice to indenture security holders should then be given. n52 In Semi-Tech Litigation, LLC v. Bankers Trust Company, n53 the trustee did not know about a default because it failed to properly carry out its duty to examine certificates of compliance furnished to it. The Second Circuit held that the trustee's failure to examine the certificates did not excuse its failure to give notice to indenture security holders. However the breach of duty in this case was found to support only nominal damages since the note holders' losses would not have been prevented by the trustee's performing its duties properly.

Notice of default is to be transmitted by mail to indenture security holders identified in the manner prescribed in Section 313(c), i.e., to all registered holders, to all persons whose names and addresses are on bondholders lists furnished to the trustee semi-annually as required by Section 312(a), and to all holders who have furnished their names and addresses to the trustee for the purpose of receiving reports during the preceding two years. n54

The Trust Indenture Act makes a sharp distinction between the trustee's duty of care before default and its duty after default. n55 The higher duty of care in post-default situations, however, is triggered under Section 315(c) only when there is a default as defined in the indenture. For the reasons to be described, this results in a situation in which the trustee has no affirmative duty to use reasonable care in discovering defaults by the obligor. n56

Indentures typically use the term "event of default" to describe the occasion for imposing the mandated higher standard of care on the trustee. n57 An event of default usually is defined as occurring when certain easily recognized things happen, e.g., there has been a failure to pay principal at maturity, there has been a failure to pay interest that continues for 30 days after it is due, bankruptcy or similar proceedings have been instituted by the issuer, or a decree adjudging the company bankrupt or insolvent has been entered and has remained in effect for 60 consecutive days.

An event of default involving other indenture covenants, however, is usually defined as occurring only where a breach continues for 30 days after either the trustee gives notice to the issuer or at least 10% of the indenture security holders give notice to the issuer, or the trustee, or both. n58 Thus, merely the breach of a covenant without its discovery and some notice being given, would not raise the trustee's duty of care to that required after default.

The provision in Section 315(b) relating to the trustee's giving notice of default, however, is not drafted by reference to a default as defined in the indenture. Thus, the trustee must give notice within 90 days of any occurrence that will mature into an event of default after the passage of time permitted by a grace period in the indenture. n59 This is consistent with the provision of Section 310(b) which uses default exclusive of any grace period or notice requirement, as the event which triggers the conflict of interest disqualifications of the trustee. n60

If a default is cured during a grace period before it matures into an event of default, or is waived, indentures typically excuse the trustee from reporting the situation to the indenture security holders. n61 The Commission appears to consider this to be consistent with the Act's requirements. n62

The indenture security holders could be seriously injured by premature disclosure of defaults that may be cured or as to which other arrangements may be made. n63 Therefore, unless expressly provided to the contrary in the indenture, Section 315(b) permits the trustee, in case of defaults other than in payment of principal, interest, sinking fund or purchase fund, to withhold the notice to security holders otherwise mandated by Section 315(b). For example, it is common for trustees to rely on this provision in cases where they receive from the issuer a certificate of compliance with indenture conditions and covenants that is not in proper form. n64 The trustee is protected in withholding this notice where the action has been approved by its board of directors, its executive committee, or by a trust committee comprised of directors or responsible officers or both, who in good faith determine that withholding of notice is in the interests of the indenture security holders. n65

[4] Resignation of Trustee in Anticipation of Default

The Trust Indenture Act does not appear to restrict the trustee's decision to resign, regardless of the reason. As amended in 1990, however, the Act does require that any resignation become effective only upon appointment of a successor and the successor's acceptance of the appointment. n66 While this reflects the terms that have traditionally appeared in most indentures, n67 the statutory amendment was designed to assure that a trusteeship would not be abandoned without a successor in anticipation of the obligor's default. n68 Resignation in anticipation of, or upon, default by a trustee who is also a direct lender to the obligor on the indenture securities was a common practice n69 even before post-default resignation of a trustee-creditor was mandated in 1990. n70 This course of action not only provides separate representation for bondholders when the trustee otherwise has conflicting interests, n71 but also, if early enough, may permit the trustee to avoid the otherwise applicable requirements of Section 311 to share with indenture security holders amounts collected by the trustee within three months before default, and after default. n72

If the indenture securities are listed on the New York Stock Exchange, the issuer must give the exchange at least 5 business days' notice of any change in trustee. n73 Indentures typically permit the trustee who has resigned to petition a court for appointment of a successor if one has not accepted appointment within 30 or 60 days. n74

§ 8.16 Duties of Paying Agent

Various servicing functions must be provided for debt securities. The issuer will appoint a bond registrar, a paying agent, an exchange agent, and depending on the circumstances, a conversion agent, subscription agent, or both a conversion and subscription agent. Usually, the bank that is acting as indenture trustee will be appointed to handle these servicing functions, though additional banks may also be used. n1

The only one of these servicing functions regulated by the Trust Indenture Act is that of paying agent. Section 317(b) requires that each paying agent hold all funds received by it for the payment of principal or interest in trust for the indenture security holders or the indenture trustee. n2 In In re Sunshine Jr. Stores Inc., n3 the court held that the fiduciary duty of a bank trust department holding prepayment funds deposited by the obligor on Notes that had been called includes payment of interest on those funds. Also, under Section 317(b), each paying agent must give the trustee notice of any default by an obligor in the payment of principal or interest.

A district court has concluded that once the obligor deposits funds in trust with the paying agent, the obligor loses control over the funds and has no ownership claim to them. Thus the obligor has no cause of action against the paying agent for diverting deposited funds to the indenture trustee to use to fund litigation expenses. n4

In Continental Mortgage Investors v. First National City Bank, n5 the indenture provided that no payment of principal or interest should be made on the indenture securities if senior indebtedness was in default. When it appeared that the senior indebtedness might shortly be in default, the obligor transmitted funds to cover the upcoming interest payment on the indenture securities to the bank that acted as trustee and paying agent. The funds were accompanied by a letter stating that they were to be used to pay interest unless the bank was instructed to the contrary by the obligor. The court held that these funds were not received by the bank in its capacity as trustee or paying agent, so that the relevant provisions of the indenture were not called into play; the funds were transferred under a separate agreement rather than under the indenture. n6

Since paying agents other than the trustee normally are not a party to the indenture, the requirements of Section 317(b) have traditionally been met by a clause imposing upon the obligor the task of assuring that each paying agent agrees in writing to comply with the obligations set out in Section 317(b).ⁿ⁷ The 1990 amendments which make the Act's requirements not only contractual in nature, but also impose them as provisions of positive law,ⁿ⁸ would appear to eliminate the need for such a clause since, presumably, the obligations of Section 317(b) would now be binding upon paying agents even when they are not formal parties to the indenture.

If the issuer will act as its own paying agent, the indenture has typically required it to set aside before the due date and to hold in trust for the indenture security holders, amounts sufficient to pay principal and interest, and require it to notify the trustee of its action in this regard or of its failure to so act. The language of Section 317(b) is ambiguous as to whether in the absence of a specific provision in the indenture this is mandatory when the issuer assumes the paying agent's role.ⁿ⁹

The New York Stock Exchange has broader rules for any debt securities listed on that exchange. Any indenture permitting the deposit of funds with the trustee, depository, or paying agent for payment, redemption, or release of collateral must contain provisions requiring the funds to be impressed with a trust for the benefit of the indenture security holders.ⁿ¹⁰

While Section 317(b) requires the paying agent to hold funds deposited for payment in trust, it does not require that those funds be segregated from other trust funds. Typically, indentures give permission to the trustee that holds funds as paying agent or in other capacities to mingle trust indenture funds with other funds.ⁿ¹¹ The New York Stock Exchange, on the other hand, requires segregation by the depository of funds relating to listed bonds where the depository is not a trust company or banking institution having substantial capital and surplus.ⁿ¹²

CHAPTER 8 The Trust Indenture Act of 1939

2-8 Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 8.17

AUTHOR: Howard M. Friedman This chapter was prepared by Howard M. Friedman, Professor of Law, Emeritus, University of Toledo. § 8.17 Powers and Duties of Trustee after Default

The Trust Indenture Act imposes an enhanced duty of care and skill on trustees after default and gives trustees adequate powers to carry out their duties. The Act grants the trustee the authority, before and after default, to file proofs of claim and other papers in judicial proceedings and to recover judgment in its own name; indentures generally give the trustee other post-default remedial powers not specified in the Act. The Act permits the trustee prior to default to be a direct creditor of the obligor on the indenture securities, but requires the apportionment of amounts collected by the trustee during a specified time.

The trustee is also empowered to represent the interests of indenture security holders in bankruptcy proceedings. Debtors in bankruptcy may have several different classes of debt securities outstanding and may have several different indenture trustees asserting claims in bankruptcy reorganization proceedings. Often the trustees will coordinate their efforts to preserve the debtor's collateral and collect amounts due to bondholders. In United Airlines v. U.S. Bank N.A.,ⁿ¹ the debtor in a reorganization proceeding claimed that it was a violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act for indenture trustees to cooperate in this way. The Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals in an opinion by Judge Easterbrook rejected the antitrust claim, describing coordination as "a normal function of indenture trustees."

One of the principal concerns of Congress in enacting the Trust Indenture Act was to assure that the indenture trustee would act responsibly and effectively after a default by the obligor.ⁿ² To accomplish this, the Trust Indenture Act imposes an enhanced duty of care and skill on trustees after default, and insures that trustees have adequate powers to carry out those duties.ⁿ³

[1] Post-Default Duties of Care and Skill

Section 315(c) provides that the trustee, in case of default (as defined in the indenture), must exercise the rights and powers vested in it by the indenture, and must use the same degree of care and skill in their exercise as a prudent man would exercise or use under the circumstances in the conduct of his own affairs.ⁿ⁴

The Senate and House Reports describe the purpose of Section 315(c) to be to raise the standard of conduct for indenture trustees to that "observed by the more conscientious trust institutions ..." n5 The standard was intended to be the same as that imposed on trustees of personal trusts. n6 The House changed the language of Section 315(c) to its final form, referring to the degree of care and skill a prudent man would exercise "in the conduct of his own affairs." The Senate reference to the care that would be exercised by a prudent man "if he were a fiduciary" was rejected as confusing, in favor of the House version that was seen to reflect the "customary standard." n7

In LNC Investments, Inc. v. First Fidelity Bank, N.A., the court had occasion to examine the meaning of the TIA's "prudent man" standard. First, the court made clear, the standard requires that the trustee be judged by the facts as they existed at the time of the conduct, not by hindsight. Second, the trustee will not be held liable for a mere error in judgment so long as its decision was the result of careful and informed deliberation; but the trustee must have been well informed. The trustee may satisfy its obligation in this regard by relying on advice of counsel, but only if the trustee provided complete disclosure to counsel and only if the reliance was reasonable. Finally, if more than one course of action could be deemed prudent, the trustee will not be liable for choosing one rather than another of the acceptable alternatives. n8

The trustee's enhanced duties are triggered only by a default as defined in the indenture. n9 Thus, where the indenture defines an event of default as occurring only upon notice and the running of a grace period, the enhanced duty is not imposed before those conditions occur. n10 Also, as permitted by the Commission, indentures usually provide that the trustee remains under this enhanced duty only while the event of default continues. Once the event of default is cured or waived, the trustee may act as in the pre-default period. n11

Prior to enactment of the Trust Indenture Act, trustees saw themselves, after default, largely as an instrumentality of the security holders. n12 Upon default, trustees would confer with the obligor and work out tentative proposals. Then they would communicate with bondholders and assist them in forming a protective committee to represent their interests. n13 Section 315(c) was largely directed at preventing trustees from misusing indenture provisions that had originally been designed to protect the trustee during this consultative process. n14 The section prohibits immunity clauses that permit the trustee to demand that bondholders give it notice of default, n15 a demand for action, and indemnity before it exercises its powers under the indenture. n16

Even after default, the trustee, under Section 315(d)(3), is protected when it relies in good faith on the direction of not less than a majority of bondholders, as provided in Section 316(a), relating to the time, method, and place of conducting any proceeding for any remedy, or exercising any trust or power conferred on the trustee, under the indenture. n17 Also, under Section 315(d)(2), the trustee may be protected from liability for good faith errors in judgment of its own responsible officers, unless the trustee was negligent in ascertaining the pertinent facts. n18

However, a provision in an indenture which prohibits the indenture trustee from serving as an official voting member of any creditors' committee in any bankruptcy or insolvency proceeding is not permitted. Similarly an indenture provision prohibiting the indenture trustee from approving the appointment of additional creditors' committees for holders of the indenture securities, and from opposing the appointment of any individual security holder to any creditors' committee, is impermissible. The staff of the SEC has taken the position that such clauses would unduly circumscribe the post-default duties imposed on the indenture trustee by the TIA. n19

The indenture may give the trustee a prior lien on the mortgaged or pledged property, or the proceeds of suit, for its compensation and expenses in connection with enforcement. n20 Alternatively, indentures often excuse the trustee from expending its funds or incurring financial liability in performing its duties unless it has reasonable assurance of repayment. n21

At least one commentator has criticized the Trust Indenture Act's post-default standard as encouraging trustees to initiate precipitate action after default to the possible detriment of all parties to protect themselves from charges of negligently failing to meet their enhanced post-default obligations. n22

Section 315(c) imposes enhanced post-default duties on the trustee in its exercise of the rights and powers vested in it by the indenture. The Commission has indicated that in its view, the language required by Section 315(c) may also be broad enough to cover implied rights and powers arising from the trustee's position. n23

[2] Powers of Trustee to Act on Behalf of Security Holders

For the trustee to effectively protect indenture security holders, it must have authority to pursue on their behalf claims against the obligor. n24 Section 317(a) assures that the trustee has sufficient enforcement powers. n25

Section 317(a)(2) authorizes the trustee, both before and after default, to file proofs of claim and other papers in connection with claims by the trustee or bondholders in any judicial proceeding relating to the obligor, its creditors, or its property. n26 This provision is necessary to assure that courts will not take the position that only the indenture security holders themselves have the right to file claims. n27

Section 317(a)(1) gives the trustee authority to recover judgment in its own name as trustee of an express trust against the obligor in case of default in payment of principal when due, or in case of a default in payment of interest, after any grace period provided by the indenture. n28 Again, this provision is necessary to assure that courts will not require suits for payment to be brought only by the indenture security holders directly. n29

Despite these provisions, courts have had some difficulty regarding the standing of the indenture trustee to represent indenture security holders in litigation affecting their interests where the defendant is not the obligor. In a case growing out of the Penn Central collapse, the Third Circuit found that the indenture trustee had standing to object to a settlement in derivative suits by shareholders of a corporation the stock of which was pledged as collateral under the indenture. n30

However, in a case involving settlement of securities claims, the Ninth Circuit refused to permit the indenture trustee to represent the interests of Equity Funding Corporation's debenture holders. n31 The indenture trustee wished to oppose the terms of the settlement of claims against persons other than Equity Funding who were involved in fraudulent activities relating to Equity Funding securities. Its objection related to a provision reducing the debenture holders' recovery by the amount of cash and stock they received in Equity Funding's bankruptcy reorganization. Since debenture holders were already represented by class representatives in the securities litigation, the court held that the indenture trustee could not be a representative in the class action. The provisions of Section 317(a) were found not to require a different result because no claims against the obligor on the indenture securities were involved in the class action. n32

In National City Bank v. Coopers & Lybrand, n33 the Minnesota Court of Appeals denied standing to the indenture trustee to pursue claims against the issuer's accountants after the completion of a bankruptcy reorganization. It held that the trustee's powers under the indenture were limited to claims on the notes or under the indenture and that, furthermore, under the terms of the reorganization plan, the relevant indentures were no longer in effect. A similar result was reached in Central Bank of Denver, N.A. v. Deloitte & Touche, n34 by the Colorado Court of Appeals. It held that the indenture, which was not covered by the TIA, did not grant the trustee authority to sue accountants to recover losses sustained by bondholders as a result of the accounting firm's negligence in auditing the issuer. As interpreted by the court, the authority given by the indenture to the trustee to enforce payment of the bonds was limited to action to accelerate the bonds and compel the issuer to make payment. It did not include an action against a third party to replenish the trust assets, particularly when any bondholders who did not rely on the financial statements should not share in a recovery against the accountants.

The drafters of the Revised Model Simplified Indenture state that their Indenture does not empower the trustee to pursue state or federal securities law claims or common law fraud claims for misrepresentations that induced bondholders to purchase or hold the indenture securities. The trustee's role is to enforce rights arising under the indenture and the securities against the company for the equal benefit of all bondholders. Pursuing fraud claims may create conflicts for the trustee. Claims may be held by persons who are no longer holders of the indenture securities; different holders may have different rights to recover; recovery by holders of fraud claims may prejudice collections by current bond holders; and securities fraud claims may be subordinated in bankruptcy to claims for payment by current holders. n35

Normally, indentures will give the trustee a number of other post-default remedial powers that are not specified in the Trust Indenture Act. One of the most basic of these is the power to accelerate maturity upon an event of default. n36 When indenture securities are listed on the New York Stock Exchange, the NYSE must be given immediate notice of any acceleration of the maturity date that has been declared by the trustee. n37 Other remedial powers are often given to the trustee to enable the trustee to take possession of, or foreclose upon, collateral, n38 as well as to enable it to institute any other appropriate judicial proceedings. n39

[3] Post-Default Obligations of Trustee-Creditor

Subject to certain exceptions, Section 311 requires that if the indenture trustee is, or becomes, a creditor of the obligor within three months prior to, or after, a failure by the obligor to pay principal or interest as it becomes due, then unless and until the default is cured, the trustee must set aside in a special account for the benefit of both the trustee individually and the indenture security holders various amounts received by the trustee. The three month period runs from the date of non-payment of principal or interest, even if the indenture otherwise provides a grace period before non-payment becomes an event of default. n40 In case of a bankruptcy filing, the 3-month period is intended to reach preferential transfers from the start of the 3-month period and continuing until a court has allocated the funds set aside. n41 Also, where the trustee is a trustee under several qualified indentures under which there are payment defaults by the obligor, the three month period for holders of any of the indenture securities runs from the earliest default. n42

If the trustee is required to account to the indenture security holders, the funds and property held by the trustee in the special account must be apportioned so that the trustee and the security holders realize the same percentage of their respective claims. The apportionment formula combines payments from the special account with payments from unsecured claims filed in state or federal court in receivership, bankruptcy, or reorganization proceedings in computing the pro rata shares of the trustee and of the indenture security holders. The percentages realized are computed after deducting from the claims against the obligor any payments received from sources other than the special account and payments received in judicial proceedings. Distributions to security holders or the trustee-creditor with regard to the secured portion of their claims are excluded from the apportionment computations. n43

The amounts which the trustee must hold in the special account are:

- (1) all reductions in indebtedness effected after the beginning of the three month period that are valid against the obligor and its other creditors; n44 and
- (2) all property received after the start of the three month period as:
 - (a) security for the trustee's claim, n45
 - (b) in satisfaction or settlement of the claim, or otherwise as to the claim, n46 or
 - (c) any proceeds from the sale of such property. n47

The property received by the trustee, or its proceeds, however, are held subject to any rights of the obligor or its other creditors. n48 The trustee need not set aside reductions in the amount owed to it resulting from the exercise of any right of set-off that the trustee could have exercised n49 if bankruptcy had been filed on the date of default. n50

Section 311(a) excludes from the apportionment requirements receipts from several items as to which the element of competition with indenture security holders is not present. n51 Payments by persons other than the obligor who are liable on the trustee's claim, the proceeds from the sale of the claim to a third person, and distributions from bankruptcy, receivership, or reorganization proceedings n52 may be retained in full by the trustee. Similarly, amounts realized from the sale or release of property held as security for the claim, where the property was so held before the beginning of the three month period, may be retained by the trustee. Finally, bona fide rescue loans are encouraged n53 by permitting the trustee to realize for its own account the proceeds from the sale or release of collateral relating to a claim created after the beginning of the three month period, but only if the collateral was received simultaneously with the creation of the debt and the trustee proves that at the time of the loan it had no reasonable cause to believe that a failure to pay principal or interest would occur within three months.

Particularly in a corporate bankruptcy reorganization, the apportionment formula of Section 311(a) may be difficult to apply, since it requires a determination of the value of the securities or other property received by the trustee and the indenture security holders, respectively, in the reorganization. n54 Section 311(a), presumably in recognition of this, allows the court in which any receivership, bankruptcy, or reorganization is pending the option to depart from the strict application of the apportionment formula and instead to merely give the formula "due consideration in determining the fairness of the distributions to be made to the indenture trustee and the indenture security holders" n55

Section 311(a) requires the apportionment provisions to continue to apply to any trustee that has resigned or been removed during the three month period. However, if the trustee has resigned or been removed before the three month period, it is subject to the apportionment requirement only if it received payment on its claim after the beginning of the three month period and this was within three months after its resignation or removal.

The three month time periods in Section 311(a) were inserted in the 1990 amendments to the Act in order to conform the section to the provisions of the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978. n56 Section 311(a) provides that the prior Trust Indenture Act references to three-month periods will continue to apply to trustees in any bankruptcy proceedings filed under pre-1978 law.

Unless expressly provided to the contrary in the indenture, Section 311(b) excludes from the apportionment requirement six other creditor relationships that the trustee may have, but which are seen as not involving "an acute conflict of interest." n57

The first of the excluded creditor relationships is that arising from "the ownership or acquisition of securities issued under any indenture, or any security or securities having a maturity of one year or more at the time of acquisition by the indenture trustee." n58 The scope of this provision was the subject of extensive litigation in United States Trust Company of New York v. First National City Bank, n59 one of a number of cases growing out of the collapse of Equity Funding Corporation of America. The trustee under the indenture relating to Equity Funding's convertible subordinated debentures, as agent for itself and three other banks, entered into a revolving credit agreement with Equity Funding. Advances under the agreement were evidenced by a "grid note," that is, a note on which advances and repayments would be indicated by notations. The trustee claimed that the revolving credit agreement and the grid note were securities having a maturity of one year or more, and were therefore, under the terms of the indenture, excluded from the Trust Indenture Act's apportionment requirements.

The court rejected the trustee's claim, stating that the securities exclusion "was primarily intended to cover the case where the indenture trustee holds some securities out of a large public issue and where the indenture trustee's securities are treated the same as the vast majority of securities held by others and there is little or no opportunity or incentive for the indenture trustee to favor its individual interests over those of the debenture holders." n60

The second creditor relationship that is excluded from the apportionment requirements is one which arises by reason of advances to preserve property subject to the lien of the indenture, or to discharge tax liens or other prior liens on the trust estate, if the advances are authorized by the indenture or by a bankruptcy or receivership court. This exclusion, however, is available only if notice of the advances and the circumstances surrounding them are given to the indenture security holders at the time and in the manner provided in the indenture. n61 The notice under this provision in Section 311(b)(2) covers advances of any amount, not merely advances sufficiently large to require reporting under Section 313. n62

The third excluded creditor relationship is that which arises from disbursements made in the ordinary course of business as indenture trustee, transfer agent, registrar, custodian, paying agent, fiscal agent or depositary, or in other similar capacity. n63

The fourth creditor relationship that is excluded from the operation of Section 311(a) is any indebtedness created as a result of services rendered or premises rented, or from goods or securities sold in a cash transaction. n64 The indenture must define "cash transaction" in the manner specified by Trust Indenture Act Rule 11b-4: "any transaction in which full payment is made within seven days after delivery of the goods or securities in currency, checks, or other orders drawn on banks and payable on demand."

A fifth exclusion is any creditor relationship arising from ownership of stock or other securities of an Edge Act n65 corporation, which are corporations engaged almost exclusively in financing foreign trade. n66

Finally, the Act excludes from the apportionment requirements creditor relationships arising from the acquisition, ownership, acceptance, or negotiation of any drafts, bills of exchange, acceptances, or obligations that are "self-liquidating paper." The indenture must define self-liquidating paper as it is defined in Rule 11b-6. Self-liquidating paper includes any obligation which is incurred for the purpose of financing trade, manufacture, or shipment of goods, and which is secured by a lien on the goods or the proceeds from their sale, if the security was received by the trustee at the same time that the creditor relationship was created.

Indentures used in private placements that may later be qualified under the Trust Indenture Act traditionally provided for the Section 311 apportionment provisions to become effective only upon any later qualification. n67 Since the 1990 amendments to the Act, this same result can be obtained more simply by eliminating physical inclusion of the mandatory terms in the original indenture and relying upon their becoming included by operation of law when the indenture is later qualified. n68

[4] Indenture Trustee's Role in Bankruptcy Proceedings

The role of the indenture trustee in representing interests of the indenture security holders is explicitly recognized in the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978. n69 An indenture trustee representing security holders may be a party that files an involuntary petition in bankruptcy against the obligor. n70 An indenture trustee, as well as a creditor, may file a proof of claim, n71 and may examine the debtor at a meeting of creditors. n72

In a reorganization under Chapter 11, the indenture trustee is one of the parties to receive a copy of the examiner's or bankruptcy trustee's statement of investigation of the debtor. n73 Similarly, the indenture trustee is one of the persons entitled to raise, appear, and be heard on any issue in the reorganization. n74 The indenture trustee is one of the parties entitled to file a plan of reorganization where a bankruptcy trustee has been appointed or where a debtor has failed to file a plan or obtain acceptance of a plan during specified time periods. n75

The indenture trustee is entitled to have allowed, as administrative expenses, its actual and necessary expenses plus reasonable compensation for its services based on the time, nature, extent, and value of the services and the cost of comparable services in other contexts. n76 Expenses and compensation for services, though, are allowable only when the indenture trustee made "a substantial contribution" in the Chapter 11 proceedings. n77

§ 8.18 Bondholders' Role in Enforcing Indenture Provisions

The Trust Indenture Act provides for direct action to be taken by the indenture security holders to enforce their rights, such as requirements that facilitate communications between bondholders and guarantee the bondholder's right to sue for principal and interest, and permissive provisions that authorize bondholders to postpone interest payments, waive past defaults, direct the trustee in conducting remedial proceedings, and remove the trustee. The Act also includes protective provisions to prevent small numbers of bondholders from acting contrary to the best interests of bondholders in general.

While the Trust Indenture Act attempts to assure the availability of a responsible indenture trustee to enforce the rights of the indenture security holders, it also provides mechanisms for direct action by the security holders themselves. The relevant provisions of the Trust Indenture Act are delicately balanced. In general, security holders have the ultimate decision making authority regarding the enforcement of their rights. However, protective provisions are included to prevent small numbers of bondholders from acting contrary to the best interests of bondholders in general.

[1] Communications among Bondholders

Section 312(b) contains provisions that facilitate communications among indenture security holders. n1 Under Section 312(b), certain action must be taken by the institutional trustee after it receives a written application from three or more indenture security holders stating that they desire to communicate with other indenture security holders as to their rights. The security holders' application must be accompanied by a copy of the proxy or other communication that they propose to transmit to other bondholders. It must also be accompanied by reasonable proof that each applicant has owned an indenture security for at least six months prior to the application.

When the institutional trustee receives this application, within five business days it must (at the trustee's election) either afford the applicants access to the security holder lists that it is required to maintain under the provisions of Section 312(a), n2 or else furnish information that will lead to the trustee's mailing of the communication to the indenture security holders.

If the trustee chooses to mail the communication, it must, within the five business day period, inform the applicants of the approximate number of indenture security holders and the approximate cost of mailing the proposed communication to them. Then, if the applicants furnish the trustee the material to be mailed and make or provide for payment of the reasonable expenses of mailing, the trustee must mail the material with reasonable promptness to all indenture security holders on the list in its possession.

If the trustee believes that the requested mailing would be contrary to the best interests of the indenture security holders, or would be in violation of law, Section 312(b) permits the trustee to temporarily delay mailing and seek a ruling by the Commission. Within five days after the tender by the applicant bondholders of the communication that they desire the trustee to mail, the trustee may mail to the applicants and file with the Commission a written statement specifying the basis of its opinion as to why the mailing would be contrary to the security holders' best interests or in violation of law. After an opportunity for hearing, the Commission may, and if demanded by the trustee or applicants must, enter an order either sustaining or refusing to sustain the trustee's objections. The trustee must mail the material only if the Commission refuses to sustain its objections or if, after sustaining its objections, the Commission later, after notice and opportunity for hearing, finds that the applicants have met the objections.

Bondholders may use the Section 312(b) procedures to communicate as to various concerns. For example, they may wish to exercise their rights to accelerate the due date after an event of default, to direct the trustee to enforce certain remedies, or to remove the trustee. n3

While Section 312(b) would appear to be concerned only with the trustee's duty, one court has held that Section 312(b) affirmatively prohibits indenture security holders from mailing a communication to their fellow security holders without first making application to the indenture trustee. n4 Thus, in the court's view, the trustee may prevent any mailing of incomplete or misleading communications under its power to refuse to transmit communications that it and the Commission find to be contrary to the best interests of the indenture security holders or in violation of law. n5

Communications by bondholders pursuant to the provisions of Section 312(b) may be subject to the Commission's proxy rules under Securities Exchange Act Section 14. Where the indenture securities are listed on an exchange, n6 or where convertible debt securities of an issuer with over $10 million in assets are traded over-the-counter and are held of record by at least 500 persons, n7 the securities are required to be registered under Section 12 of the Exchange Act, and thereby become subject to the proxy rules. n8 The solicitation of any proxy, consent, or authorization concerning such indenture securities is subject to the provisions of Exchange Act Rule 14a-9 prohibiting material misstatements or omissions. In any solicitation of ten or more persons, n9 each security holder must be furnished a proxy statement meeting the requirements of Schedule 14A. n10

In Matter of W. T. Grant Co., n11 a group of debenture holders who had appealed the bankruptcy court's approval of a settlement offer proposed to distribute a letter seeking written evidence of support from other debenture holders, and to have the responses entered in the court record. The court held that this was a proxy solicitation.

In a no action letter, the Commission staff found that a proxy solicitation would be involved if a debenture holder were to solicit other holders to give notice of default to the issuer. Under the indenture, redemption could be forced if 25% of the holders notified the issuer of a default and of their rights. The soliciting debenture holder intended to enclose in his communication a card that other debenture holders would complete in duplicate and send to the issuer and to the soliciting debenture holder. n12

Section 312(c) of the Trust Indenture Act protects the indenture trustee from liability for disclosing the names of bondholders under provisions mandated by Section 312(b), regardless of the source of the names. n13 It also protects the trustee from liability that might otherwise arise from its mailing of material pursuant to a request under Section

312(b). Thus, the trustee will not be in violation of the proxy rules if it mails noncomplying material furnished by an indenture security holder.

[2] No-Action Clauses

In centralizing enforcement responsibilities in the indenture trustee, the linchpin is the no-action clause. n14 This clause, common in indentures, generally prohibits individual bondholders from instituting suit unless the trustee has refused to do so after a request from at least 25% in principal amount of the bondholders who have offered reasonable indemnity against costs, expenses, and liabilities. n15 In older indentures, the typical clause required bondholders to give the trustee 60 days to comply with their request. n16 The drafters of the Revised Model Simplified Indenture suggest shortening this to 15, or at most 30, days, since a "pre-packaged" bankruptcy plan can often be completely taken from filing to confirmation in less than 60 days. n17 The Revised Model Simplified Indenture also contains an optional clause which, if included, requires the trustee to mail to debenture holders any notice it receives from other debenture holders requesting it to take action, and also to mail to them any notice it has sent back to requesting debenture holders refusing to comply with their request. n18

Often one, or a few, institutional investors hold the requisite 25% of the bonds needed under the no-action clause to request the trustee to pursue a remedy. n19 However, the added requirement that the requesting bondholders offer the trustee indemnity requires one, or a few, institutions alone to provide for costs, expenses and liabilities that should be borne proportionately by all bondholders. Even where that indemnity is offered, problems exist if the trustee does not then respond by taking action. At least unless the trustee waives the requirement, the institutional investors cannot proceed on their own under the typical no-action clause until 60 days have elapsed. Often judicial intervention is needed much sooner if the bondholders' interests are to be protected. n20

Recognizing the problems posed by the indemnity requirement, the Revised Model Simplified Indenture has removed that requirement from its no-action clause. While the trustee can still insist on indemnity before it agrees to file suit, the debenture holders are not precluded from bringing suit or taking other action merely because they fail to offer indemnity. n21

Section 316(b) places limits on the permissible scope of no-action clauses by prohibiting their application to bondholder suits for payment of principal or interest, except for a limited postponement of interest. n22 Even where the claim for principal and interest is asserted against the issuer's parent on a "piercing the corporate veil" theory, still a no-action clause may not be invoked to preclude suit. n23

No action clauses are designed to prevent spurious litigation, multiple suits, and premature assertion of claims when delay might be more beneficial to the bondholders as a group. n24 While suits within the scope of the no-action clause are typically against the issuer, some suits against third parties may also be barred. n25 However, no-action clauses have uniformly been read to permit suits by bondholders against the indenture trustee for wrongdoing. n26 The anti-exculpation provisions of TIA Section 315(d) would presumably preclude a no-action clause that purported to insulate the indenture trustee from its own negligence or its own willful misconduct. n27

Some courts have also permitted bondholders to ignore no-action clauses when the indenture trustee has a conflicting interest and demand upon it to bring suit against the issuer or a third party would presumably be futile. n28 However, in Murray v. U.S. Bank Trust Nat'l. Ass'n., n29 the Eleventh Circuit enforced a no-action clause against bondholders who claimed that the trustee had a conflict of interest. Shareholders claimed that the trustee should not have the sole right to sue its predecessor trustees for their negligence and breach of fiduciary duty in permitting a security interest in collateral to lapse. The bond proceeds had been loaned to a third party and the loan had been secured by the borrower's accounts receivable and inventory. Prior trustees failed to file a continuation statement and the current trustee failed to discover the fact that the collateral had been lost. Bondholders claimed that a conflict of interest stemmed from the fact that the current trustee would be liable if the losses could not be recovered from the prior trustees. The court held that the current trustee should be permitted to complete its litigation. Any conflict of interest was not significant enough to create an exception. After that litigation was completed, bondholders could sue the current trustee for negligence if there were still unrecovered losses. n30

A typical no-action clause precludes the bondholder from instituting proceedings "with respect to this Indenture, or for the appointment of a receiver or trustee, or for any other remedy hereunder." n31 Sometimes the no-action clause merely refers to any "remedy with respect to this Indenture or the Securities." n32 No-action clauses have been described as applying to "any claim that can be enforced by the trustee on behalf of all bonds" except for payment defaults, "no matter what legal theory a plaintiff advances." n33 Thus, they have been held to apply not only to claims arising from breach of specific provisions in the indenture, but to claims for breach of implied covenants of good faith and fair dealing, to claims that the issuer made fraudulent conveyances of assets, and to claims that fraud by the issuer prevented the filing of a suit to enjoin a corporate restructuring that increased the risk of a default on the indenture securities. However, the typical no-action clause does not prohibit a suit claiming fraudulent inducement to purchase or sell the indenture securities. In the case of a purchase, the claim goes to the question of whether the bondholder ever effectively agreed to be bound by the no-action clause. In the case of a sale, the seller no longer has a relationship with the trustee that permits the trustee to assert his claim. Moreover, fraud in connection with plaintiff's purchase or sale of securities does not necessarily involve an injury shared by all bondholders, which is the only sort of claim that the trustee may assert. n34

Also, the typical no-action clause permits a direct action seeking rescission of the purchase of indenture securities or damages where their sale violated the federal securities laws. n35 Sometimes, however, a no-action clause may, by its terms, be broad enough to cover a claim asserted by bondholders under the Securities Act of 1933 or the Securities Exchange Act of 1934. Even if that is the case, the Second Circuit has held that

The statutory framework of the 1933 and 1934 Acts compels the conclusion that individual security holders may not be forced to forego their rights under the federal securities laws due to a contract provision [A]ctions based on federal securities laws may not be precluded by the no-action clause. n36

Where indenture security holders may bring a direct action to enforce indenture provisions, Section 315(e) deems automatically included in the indenture, unless expressly excluded by language in the indenture, the security holders' agreement to the court's imposing on them an undertaking to pay costs. n37 This permits the court, in its discretion, to assess reasonable costs, including reasonable attorney's fees, having due regard to the merits and good faith of the claims or defenses made by the litigant. n38 This provision calling for an undertaking for costs, however, may not apply to a suit instituted by any indenture security holder, or group of holders, who hold in the aggregate more than 10% of the indenture securities outstanding, nor may it apply to a suit by any bondholder for payment of principal or interest, on or after their respective due dates. n39

[3] Right to Sue for Principal and Interest

Section 316(b) guarantees certain rights to each indenture security holder. The right of any bondholder to receive principal and interest, n40 or to institute suit for their enforcement, n41 on or after their respective due dates expressed in the indenture security n42 must not be impaired or affected n43 without the consent of the holder. n44 However, a limited postponement of interest, effected in accordance with Section 316(a)(2), is permitted. n45

The right to sue for principal on or after the due date set out in the bond instrument is a right separate from the right normally included in indentures to accelerate the due date of the debt security upon various events of default. According to the Tenth Circuit, this means that even though the statute of limitations period has expired as measured from the accelerated due date, it begins to run again as to suits by individual investors once the later original due date arrives. n46

In many situations, it is unclear whether a particular claim is for principal and interest when due, or whether the claim does not meet that definition and is thus subject to the constraints of the indenture's no-action clause. Where a note had a provision for interest to be reset by the issuer on a specified date and gave note holders the option for 30 days after the reset date to require the issuer to repurchase their notes for the outstanding principal amount plus accrued interest, a suit to enforce a note holder's repurchase rights was a suit to enforce payment of principal protected by TIA Section 316(b). The indenture defined this repurchase obligation in a way that created a demand obligation in favor of the note holder. n47 However where an indenture gave debenture holders the right to tender their debentures for repurchase at a premium upon the occurrence of certain triggering events, including certain hostile takeovers, a suit attempting to enforce their right to tender was barred by the indenture's no-action clause. TIA Section 316(b) was found to apply only to failure to pay after an explicit date on which a principal or interest payment has become absolutely and unconditionally due. Plaintiff's right to tender debentures before their due date was found analogous to an indenture provision providing for acceleration of principal and interest upon default. n48 An earlier case had held that acceleration is a collection remedy, and failure to pay the full amount due under an acceleration clause is not to be considered a payment default. n49

Another issue that arises under Section 316(b) is whether (despite an indenture's no-action clause) the TIA assures individual bond holders the right to file an involuntary petition in bankruptcy against the obligor when there has been a payment default. Some courts have applied no-action clauses to preclude bondholders from filing involuntary bankruptcy petitions against a defaulting issuer. n50 However, in In re Envirodyne Industries, Inc., n51 the bankruptcy court in the Northern District of Illinois distinguished earlier cases and held that Section 316(b) covers not only individual claims for interest and principal, but also the type of collective action involved in forcing the issuer into bankruptcy.

An indenture provision limiting or denying the right to institute a suit to receive principal or interest is permitted by Section 316(b) if the prosecution or the entry of judgment would result in the surrender, impairment, waiver, or loss of the indenture's lien on collateral. This exception stems from a peculiarity of California law n52 that permits only one action to foreclose a mortgage on real property. n53 If a bondholder recovers judgment on the bond without foreclosing on the mortgage, he waives the mortgage's security for all bondholders. n54 Thus, whenever an indenture is secured by real property located in California, this permissive provision is likely to be included.

The provisions of Section 316(b) were not designed to prevent a majority of bondholders from binding dissenters to changes in the indenture that do not relate to principal or interest payments, nor to prevent a majority from waiving defaults other than non-payment, n55 even if the waivers indirectly affect the assets available for payment. n56 Similarly, Section 316(b) has not been interpreted to prevent a majority from amending sinking fund provisions in an indenture. n57

Section 316(b) does, however, permit individual bondholders to dissent from an issuer's plan of debt readjustment and instead sue on their bonds. n58 In the view of some courts, this is true even when the reorganization, while not technically changing the amount of interest or principal owed to bondholders, does as a practical matter impair or affect the holders' rights to sue for or receive payment. Thus in Federated Strategic Income Fund v. Mechala Group Jamaica, Ltd., n59 the court granted a preliminary injunction to prevent the consummation of an issuer's tender offer for its notes which had been accepted by 77% of its note holders. The offer involved the purchase of the notes for a fraction of their principal amount from holders who also consented to various amendments to the indenture that would govern the remaining untendered notes. Those amendments would have eliminated the guarantees of the notes by the issuer's subsidiaries and would have allowed the issuer (which was the only remaining obligor) to proceed with a reorganization that would have stripped it of all its meaningful assets. In the court's view, these changes "as a practical matter" would have impaired note holders' right to sue for payment when the notes matured. n60

Other courts, however, interpret Section 316(b) as applying only to security holders' legal rights to the payment of principal and interest, not to impairment of merely their practical ability to receive payment. So a fraudulent transfer of assets that left the issuer of debt securities insolvent may not be attacked on the ground that it was not approved by all of the indenture security holders. n61

The effect of Section 316(b) is to force recapitalizations into bankruptcy court. n62 The drafters of the TIA understood this and saw this result as assuring "judicial scrutiny of the fairness of debt-readjustment plans." n63 With the enactment of the 1978 Bankruptcy Code, however, judicial examination of fairness in bankruptcy was largely eliminated when a reorganization plan was approved by two-thirds in amount and a majority in number of bondholders voting. n64 Particularly with the development of procedures for prepackaged bankruptcies, the constraints imposed by Section 316(b) on negotiated recapitalizations were, as a practical matter, largely eliminated. n65 An important concern of the original drafters of TIA Section 316(b) was that insiders might dominate the reorganization process if an absolute right to sue for principal and interest were not maintained. n66 That concern was alleviated by the 1978 Bankruptcy Code's provisions permitting the bankruptcy court to exclude from the approval vote bonds held by persons that have a conflict of interest in voting. n67

The Bankruptcy Code permits U.S. courts to recognize and enforce the results of insolvency proceedings brought in the courts of foreign countries. While a foreign proceeding is pending, the foreign representative may file a petition for recognition of a foreign proceeding in a U.S. Bankruptcy Court in order to stay proceedings in the United States against property involved in the foreign proceedings and obtain an order for the turnover of U.S. property to the foreign court. n68 TIA Section 316(b) does not prevent the impairment of a bondholder's right to principal and interest through a foreign proceeding. An ancillary proceeding under the U.S. Bankruptcy Code may enforce the foreign restructuring plan. n69

In debentures covering subordinated debt securities, the subordination clauses must be drafted carefully in order to avoid a conflict between the rights of the subordinated debt holders under Section 316(b) to sue for principal and interest and the rights of senior security holders to be paid before payment is made to holders of subordinated debt. Typical indenture provisions deal with this by providing that any amounts otherwise due to subordinated debt holders must instead be paid to senior security holders until they are paid in full. The rights of the subordinated debt holders to eventually enforce their judgments are protected through subrogation. n70

The ABA's Model Debenture Indenture provides, in response to the requirements of TIA Section 316(b), not only that indenture security holders have the right to receive payment of principal and interest on their due dates, but that such right "is absolute and unconditional." That provision was inserted to assure that the indenture securities would be negotiable instruments under former Article 3 of the Uniform Commercial Code. n71 Under today's UCC, Article 8, not Article 3, governs investment securities, and Article 8 applies to notes whether or not they evidence an "unconditional" right to payment. n72 In Bank of N.Y. v. First Millennium, Inc., n73 an indenture provision giving the right to unconditional payment was read by the court--as a matter of New York contract law--to allow holders of limited recourse notes to collect their unpaid principal from any of the issuer's assets, not just from the collateral securing the notes. The court noted that the drafters of the indenture, consistent with Section 316(b), could have modified the Model Indenture provisions to limit claimants on the notes to the collateral securing them. However they did not do so and the court was unwilling to revise their language for them. The court also concluded that in states that have adopted Revised Article 3 of the UCC, a different result would be reached because it provides that a promise is not made conditional because payment is limited to resort to a particular fund or source. n74

[4] Postponement of Interest and Waiver of Past Defaults by Vote of Bondholders

Section 316(a)(2) permits the indenture to contain provisions authorizing the holders of at least 75% in principal amount of the outstanding indenture securities, or of any outstanding series of securities, n75 to consent to the postponement of any interest payment for a period not exceeding three years from its due date. n76 In computing the requisite 75% vote, securities owned by any obligor or by any person directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by or under direct or indirect common control with any obligor are to be disregarded. In this way, voting by persons with clear conflicting interests is avoided. n77 Permitting a limited postponement of interest may facilitate temporary readjustments in times of cash flow crises without triggering a payment default and acceleration of the principal amount. n78

Subject to contrary provisions in the indenture, Section 316(a)(1)(B) permits holders of not less than a majority in principal amount of the outstanding indenture securities to consent on behalf of all holders to the waiver of any past default and its consequences. n79 The indenture may permit a majority of any outstanding series of securities to similarly consent to the waiver of past defaults and their consequences on behalf of all holders of the series. n80 In computing the votes needed, securities owned by obligors or their affiliates are disregarded in the identical manner as in voting on interest postponements. While the Trust Indenture Act permits waivers of default by a majority vote, indentures sometimes require a 66 2/3 % vote. n81 This power to waive defaults permits the requisite majority of bondholders to effect a settlement without resorting to the bankruptcy courts. n82

The majority's power to waive past defaults is subject to the overriding provision of Section 316(b) assuring each bondholder the right to receive or sue for principal and interest after their respective due dates. n83 Since Section 316(b) refers to the maturity date expressed in the indenture security, it is permissible to include in a qualified indenture a provision for a majority to rescind an acceleration of the due date. The American Bar Foundation's Model Debenture Indenture n84 provides for rescission of an acceleration before the trustee has obtained a judgment for payment n85 if a majority of debenture holders give written notice to the issuer and the trustee and if certain other conditions are met. The conditions require the issuer to pay or deposit with the trustee an amount sufficient to cover overdue payments plus interest on them and the trustee's expenses and compensation. They also require all other events of default to be cured or waived. Since rescission of acceleration would appear to be the waiver of the consequences of a past default as that term is used in Section 316(a)(1)(B), securities held by the obligor or its affiliates presumably must be disregarded in determining whether the requisite majority has agreed. n86

Solicitation of bondholders to consent to interest postponements or waivers of default may be subject to the Commission's proxy rules if the bonds are listed on an exchange or where convertible debentures are involved. n87

Section 316(c) permits the obligor to set a record date for purposes of determining the security holders entitled to vote on the postponement of interest or the waiver of past defaults. Unless the indenture provides otherwise, the record date is to be the later of (1) thirty days before the first solicitation of security holders or (2) the date prior to the first solicitation when the most recent list of holders was furnished to the trustee pursuant to Section 312. n88

[5] Directions to Trustee by Bondholders

Subject to contrary provisions in the indenture, Section 316(a)(1)(A) permits the holders of not less than a majority in principal amount of the outstanding indenture securities to direct the time, method, and place of conducting any proceeding for any remedy available to the trustee under the indenture, or exercising any trust or power conferred on the trustee under the indenture. n89 The Revised Model Simplified Indenture contains a provision permitting a beneficial owner, instead of the record owner, of the indenture securities to give directions to the trustee if the beneficial owner furnishes an affidavit of beneficial ownership and satisfactory indemnity to the trustee against any loss, liability or expense that may result from the trustee's acting on the basis of the affidavit. This clause permits, for example, an institutional owner whose securities are ultimately held of record by a depository to act quickly in providing direction to the trustee. n90

Under Section 315(d)(3), unless the indenture provides to the contrary, the trustee is protected as to any action taken or omitted in good faith in accordance with the direction of bondholders so given. n91

In determining under Section 316(a)(1)(A) whether the requisite majority has given directions, securities owned by any

obligor, or by any person directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by or under direct or indirect common control with the obligor, are to be disregarded. In determining whether the trustee is protected by Section 315(d)(3), only securities that the trustee knows are owned by the obligor or affiliates need to be disregarded in determining if a requisite majority of bondholders has given directions. n92

Section 316(a)(1)(A) permits the indenture to provide for directions to be given by a majority vote of any outstanding series of securities. For this purpose, "series" is defined by Section 310(b) to mean any group of securities whose terms permit holders to vote separately to direct the indenture trustee, or to otherwise take action pursuant to a separate vote. However securities that rank equally and are wholly unsecured may not be treated as separate series. n93

Section 316(c) allows the obligor to set a record date for purposes of determining the security holders entitled to vote or consent in giving permitted directions to the trustee. Unless the indenture provides otherwise, the record date is to be the later of (1) thirty days before the first solicitation of security holders or (2) the date prior to the first solicitation when the most recent list of holders was furnished to the trustee pursuant to Section 312. n94 The record date procedure may also be used for any other vote of indenture security holders, so long as the action they take is not prohibited by the Trust Indenture Act. n95

Section 316(a)(1)(A) does not prevent the indenture from giving less than a majority of bondholders the power to directly, rather than through the trustee, take action such as accelerating maturity after default, ripening a breach of a covenant into an event of default, causing an investigation to be made, or calling a meeting of bondholders. n96

Even though Section 316(a)(1) is permissive, it has been interpreted as prohibiting provisions not consistent with its requirements. n97 However, permitting the trustee to refuse to follow the bondholders' direction when the direction is in conflict with requirements of law or other provisions in the indenture, or where it would involve the trustee in personal liability, or would unduly prejudice the other bondholders, is allowed as consistent with Section 316(a)(1)(A). n98

Section 316(a)(1)(A) may not be used to circumvent the right of bondholders to sue for principal and interest n99 granted by Section 316(b). n100

Where debt securities that are not issued under a qualified indenture are listed on the New York Stock Exchange, NYSE rules prohibit the indenture from containing any provision requiring a request or demand of holders of more than 30% of the outstanding bonds to compel the trustee to proceed with the enforcement of any remedy provided by the indenture upon an event of default. However, the indenture may permit holders of a majority of the bonds to rescind any minority action. n101 Such a provision would be inconsistent with Section 316(a)(2)(A) in a qualified indenture.

The right of bondholders to act directly and their right to give directions to the trustee preserves their option to form a protective committee to represent their interests when default is imminent or has occurred. n102

[6] Removal of Trustee

An ultimate power of bondholders to control the trustee is generally granted by indenture provisions permitting bondholders to remove the trustee. Both the American Bar Foundation's Model Debenture Indenture and the Revised Model Simplified Indenture provide for removal of the trustee by a majority in principal amount of the outstanding indenture securities. n103 (n39)Footnote 39. For further discussion, see § 8.19 infra.

(n40)Footnote 40. The Commission takes the position that Section 316(b) precludes qualification where indenture securities provide for payment of principal or interest in a medium other than cash, e.g., common stock, upon default, or upon the happening of any other event that is not in the indenture security holder's control. See American Campgrounds, Inc., N.A. (No Action Letter, April 17, 1975). In Daimler-Benz Aktiengesellschaft, SEC Rel. No. 39-2353 (Apr. 25, 1997), 1997 LEXIS 909, the SEC granted an exemption from the provisions of § 316(b) for Notes that were mandatorily convertible into the issuer's stock at maturity. See Daimler Benz to Offer Mandatory Convertible Bonds, Business Wire, Apr. 16, 1997.

(n41)Footnote 41. See Continental Bank & Trust Co. v. First Nat. Petroleum Trust, 67 F. Supp. 859, 4 S.E.C. Jud. Dec. 643, C.C.H. Fed. Sec. L. Rep. P 90,364 (D.R.I. 1946) . However, the automatic stay imposed by 11 U.S.C. § 362(a)(1) upon the filing of a federal bankruptcy petition applies to suits for payment of principal or interest instituted by bondholders before the bankruptcy filing. See Feldbaum v. McCrory Corp., 1992 Del. Ch. LEXIS 113 at *38-*39 (1992) .

(n43)Footnote 43. An attempt to circumvent these requirements through forcing indenture security holders to be part of a class action has been found improper. See Continental Assurance Co. v. Macleod-Stedman, Inc., 694 F. Supp. 449, 455-56 (N.D. Ill., 1988) .

(n44)Footnote 44. The provisions of TIA Section 315(e) permitting the indenture to provide for an undertaking for costs, including attorney's fees, in litigation relating to the indenture's provisions do not permit an undertaking to be required in any suit by an indenture security holder to enforce the payment of principal or interest on or after their respective due dates as expressed in the indenture security.

§ 8.19 Liability of Indenture Trustee to Bondholders

The indenture trustee who fails to carry out its obligations under a qualified indenture may be liable to injured bondholders under state law breach of fiduciary duty or breach of contract claims or under a federal private right of action explicitly recognized by the 1990 amendments to the Trust Indenture Act. n1

The indenture trustee plays a central role in protecting the rights of indenture security holders. Where the trustee fails to adequately carry out its obligations, liability to injured bondholders has been imposed. n2 Courts have regularly entertained the assertion of state law breach of duty claims against indenture trustees under qualified indentures, n3 supported by Section 323(b), which states that "[t]he rights and remedies provided by this title shall be in addition to any and all other rights and remedies that may exist ... at law or in equity." n4

In addition, a private right of action exists in favor of indenture security holders when trustees have failed to comply with obligations imposed by the Trust Indenture Act. In 1990, Congress amended Section 322(b) to provide that federal courts have jurisdiction over actions brought to enforce any duty created by the Act. The Senate Report explicitly stated that this language was intended to codify those judicial holdings which had found private rights of action for enforcement of mandatory indenture terms. n5 A judgment against an indenture trustee based on a violation of the TIA (unlike one based on breach of contract or fiduciary duty) is non-dischargeable in bankruptcy under the Sarbanes-Oxley Act of 2002. n6

Courts began a number of years ago to imply federal private rights of action in favor of indenture security holders when trustees failed to comply with obligations imposed through indenture provisions required by the Trust Indenture Act. n7 The most elaborate analysis of the factors which supported a finding before the 1990 amendments that a federal private right of action existed for breach of federally mandated terms of the indenture is found in the Third Circuit's opinion in Zeffiro v. First Pennsylvania Banking and Trust Co. n8

In Zeffiro, it was alleged that the trustee failed to set aside assets it received as a direct creditor within four months of the obligor's default as required by provisions in Section 311(a), n9 that it failed to transmit reports to debenture holders as required by provisions in Section 313, n10 that it made misleading statements in reports it did transmit, and that the trustee failed to disqualify itself when a conflict of interest arose, in violation of provisions required by Section 310(b). n11 Further, it was claimed that the trustee failed to notify debenture holders of defaults by the obligor as was required by provisions in Section 315(b), n12 and that it failed to take adequate action after default, in violation of provisions in Section 315(c). n13

Using the widely accepted four part test of Cort v. Ash, n14 the court found strong reasons to imply a private right of action. The statutory language and history made it clear that indenture security holders are the special beneficiaries of the Trust Indenture Act. n15 The legislative history suggested that Congress intended to permit suits by indenture security holders against trustees who violated the mandatory indenture provisions, and that there was no intent to limit these suits to state court. n16 A federal private right of action was consistent with the overall structure and jurisdictional language of the Trust Indenture Act. A private right of action furthered Congress' goal of creating a uniform national standard for indenture trustees, and was necessary because of the lack of federal administrative enforcement authority under the Trust Indenture Act. n17 Finally, the cause of action was not one traditionally relegated to state law since interpretation of the mandatory indenture terms is dependent upon the meaning of federal law, not, as in traditional contract cases, on the intent of the parties. n18

The rationale of Zeffiro was carried a step further in Morris v. Cantor, n19 although Morris was decided prior to Zeffiro. The provision in Section 315(d) prohibiting exculpatory clauses that purport to relieve the trustee from liability for negligence or willful misconduct n20 was at issue in Morris. Judge Ward held that Section 315(d) creates a uniform standard of care governing the conduct of indenture trustees, violation of which gave rise to a private right of action under federal law. n21

The trustee will be liable only if its breach of duty proximately caused the bondholders' injuries. In Semi-Tech Litigation, LLC v. Bankers Trust Company, the court held that the plaintiff has the burden to show proximate cause. In that case, note holders failed to prove that their losses would have been avoided even if the trustee had properly carried out its duty to examine the non-conforming certificates of compliance with indenture conditions that the obligor had furnished to the trustee. n22

In LNC Investments, Inc. v. First Fidelity Bank, N.A., it was alleged that the indenture trustees breached the prudent person standard imposed by the TIA when they failed to file a motion in Eastern Airlines' bankruptcy reorganization to lift the automatic stay imposed under the Bankruptcy Code which prevented the trustees from obtaining the collateral underlying the equipment trust certificates covered by the indentures. The district court instructed the jury that this failure proximately caused the bondholders' damages only if the bondholders had relied on the trustees to act prudently. On appeal, the court held that reliance was not required for the bondholders' breach of contract and fiduciary duty claims against the trustees, but that the question of whether reliance was required for their Trust Indenture Act claim had not been preserved for appeal. n23 Subsequently, after the case was reassigned to a different judge, the district court held that even in the TIA claim, reliance was not a necessary element of proximate cause. n24 The district court also held that even though the bondholders' injury crystallized after one of the defendant trustees had resigned and been replaced by a new trustee, if the original trustee's failure to file a "lift stay" motion was a substantial factor in causing the injury, it is liable. The successor trustee's failure to file a lift stay motion was a concurrent, not a superseding, cause of the loss. n25

Despite the fact that co-trustees, or the original and a successor trustee, could both be liable under the TIA, the LNC Investments trial court, in a separate opinion, found that one trustee had no right to obtain contribution from another trustee for liability imposed under the TIA. While some language in the court's opinion suggests that the TIA merely does not impose a uniform national standard regarding the right of a trustee to obtain contribution, the court's holding goes further. Later language makes clear that since the TIA creates no federal right to obtain contribution, there also can be no right of contribution under state law for TIA violations. Any contribution under state law must be based upon breach of a state law obligation. n26

TIA Section 323(b) provides that in suits for damages under the TIA, "no person ... shall recover, through satisfaction of judgment in one or more actions, a total amount in excess of his actual damages on account of the act complained of." This has been interpreted to mean that plaintiffs may recover only their out-of-pocket losses, defined as the difference between what they paid for their securities and what they received for them. Where a plaintiff purchased debt securities at a discount, damages may not be measured on the basis of the securities' full principal amount. Nor may damages be measured by the amount that plaintiff would have received in a bankruptcy reorganization had the trustee fulfilled its duties. n27

One express limitation on the trustee's liability is imposed by Section 309(d). No trustee under a qualified indenture may be subject to liability because the indenture itself fails to comply with Trust Indenture Act requirements. This safe harbor seems largely unnecessary since the 1990 amendments which automatically incorporate the Act's mandatory terms into each qualified indenture. However, only requirements of the statute are automatically incorporated; Section 309(d) also protects against failure of the indenture to comply with any rule, regulation, or order under the Act.

Section 309(d) shields the indenture trustee when the indenture has been qualified under the TIA. Vernon Johnson Family Ltd. Partnership v. Bank One Texas further shields trustees by holding that a claim by note holders that notes issued under an unqualified indenture should have in fact been registered under the Securities Act and qualified under the TIA is not a claim that may be asserted against the indenture trustee. n28

Once it is found that the Trust Indenture Act, or any rule or order under it, has "created" liability on the part of an indenture trustee, Section 322(b) gives concurrent jurisdiction to state and federal courts for suits brought to enforce this liability. n29 However, Section 322(b) incorporates the anti-removal provision of Securities Act Section 22(a) so that a TIA suit instituted in state court may not be removed by defendant to federal court. This anti-removal provision may not be circumvented by attempting to obtain from a federal court a declaratory judgment regarding a TIA claim pending in state court. n30

The provision made part of the indenture by Section 315(e) providing for an undertaking for costs, including attorneys fees, n31 applies to any suit by bondholders against the trustee for action taken or omitted by it as trustee, except where instituted by one or a group of bondholders holding in the aggregate more than 10% of the principal amount of indenture securities outstanding. n32 In LNC Investments, Inc. v. First Fidelity Bank, n33 the court found that for purposes of computing whether plaintiffs held more than 10% of the "outstanding" indenture securities, distributions made during a bankruptcy reorganization to indenture security holders did not operate to reduce the principal amount of securities "outstanding" when the court's order directing the distribution did not mention redemption of any of the securities as a result of the distribution.

Venue for actions brought to enforce any liability or duty created by the Trust Indenture Act or by rules or orders under it, is specified in Section 322(b) by reference to Section 22(a) of the Securities Act. Venue lies in the district in which the defendant is found or is an inhabitant or transacts business, or in the district where the offer or sale took place if the defendant participated therein. Presumably, Section 322(b) also incorporates the Securities Act Section 22(a) provisions permitting service of process in any other district in which the defendant is an inhabitant or wherever he may be found. n34

Prior to 1982, suits against indenture trustees which were national banks could be brought only in the district in which the bank was established or in state court in the county or city in which the bank was located. n35 In 1982, Congress eliminated this restriction except for national banks that are in FDIC receivership proceedings. n36

The bondholders' cause of action against the indenture trustee may not be brought on their behalf in a bankruptcy reorganization by the bankruptcy trustee. The Supreme Court in Caplin v. Marine Midland Grace Trust Co. n37 held that Congress had not intended to grant the bankruptcy trustee standing to assert bondholders' claims. This result has not been changed by the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978. A provision in the bill as originally proposed would have overruled Caplin, but this language was deleted in the final version of the Act. n38

A bondholder who has purchased bonds after the acts which give rise to a claim under the TIA against the indenture trustee lacks standing to assert the claim. Federal law governs the assignability of claims under the TIA. The cause of action which prior bondholders had against the trustee for the trustee's failure to carry out its obligations under the TIA are not automatically assigned to subsequent purchasers of the bonds. n39 However, if the trustee is engaged in a continuing course of wrongful conduct which began before the purchase of the indenture securities but continues after the purchase, purchasers will have standing to sue under the TIA for the losses flowing from the post-purchase breach that were not reflected in the price of their securities when they purchased them. n40 Also, while TIA claims are not automatically transferred along with bonds, where TIA claims have been explicitly assigned, the assignee (here an entity created by the reorganization plan) has been held to have standing to bring suit on those claims against trustee. n41

The Trust Indenture Act is silent as to the statute of limitations period to be applied to actions against the trustee for violation of duties imposed upon the trustee by the TIA. Until the 1991 United States Supreme Court decision in Lampf, Pleva, Lipkind, Prupis & Petigrow v. Gilbertson n42 courts traditionally had borrowed the analogous state statute of limitations period when the federal securities laws were silent about the limitations period to be applied. Lampf, Pleva held that a uniform federal statute of limitations should be applied to actions under Securities Exchange Act Rule 10b-5. It would seem that courts should also apply the Lampf, Pleva analysis to claims brought to enforce duties of the trustee under the TIA. Given the close relationship between the TIA and the Securities Act of 1933, perhaps a variant of the one year/three year limitations period found in Section 13 of the 1933 Act should be applied, e.g., one year after discovery of the trustee's violation or after discovery should have been made in the exercise of reasonable diligence, but no more than three years after the violation.

So far, courts have been unwilling to apply Lampf, Pleva to TIA claims. In Cruden v. Bank of New York, n43 the Second Circuit affirmed the district court's pre-Lampf, Pleva holding n44 that New York's six year limitations period for breaches of contract applied to claims against trustees under the TIA. In Cruden, plaintiff had alleged both that the trustees had breached terms of the indenture contract and the trustees had violated duties imposed by the Trust Indenture Act. The court stated that because the contract and the statutory claims were so intertwined, "it appears prudent in this case to continue to borrow state statutes of limitations for suits arising out of indenture agreements." n45

Cruden also explored the issue of when the limitations period begins to run on claims that trustees violated their duties under the TIA in entering into supplemental indentures. It held that the statute began to run only when the plaintiffs were entitled to a remedy, regardless of when the trustees' actual breach occurred. The indentures' "no-action" clauses tolled the statute until that time. A remedy was available only when the issuer defaulted in payment of principal and interest. Had suit been brought at the time the supplemental indentures were entered, debenture holders would have had no remedy. Damages could not have been ascertained, since there had been no default in principal or interest. Equitable relief could not have been fashioned without the trustees joining the issuer as an indispensable party. However, such joinder would have impermissibly circumvented the indentures' "no-action" clauses n46 which precluded suit against the issuer at that earlier time.

CHAPTER 8 The Trust Indenture Act of 1939

2-8 Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 8.20

AUTHOR: Howard M. Friedman This chapter was prepared by Howard M. Friedman, Professor of Law, Emeritus, University of Toledo. § 8.20 Civil Liability under Section 323(a); Commission Enforcement; Criminal Reference

The Trust Indenture Act creates a private right of action for damages in favor of a person who relies on a materially false or misleading statement in a Trust Indenture Act document. The 1990 amendments to the Trust Indenture Act create some uncertainty as to whether the Commission's enforcement power extends beyond ensuring initial indenture qualification and enforcing prohibitions against false or misleading statements in filings made with the Commission. Willful violations of the Trust Indenture Act, presumably including failure to comply with mandatory obligations imposed by law under the 1990 amendments, may result in criminal prosecution.

[1] Civil Liability under Section 323(a)

Section 323(a) of the Trust Indenture Act creates a private right of action for damages. Any person who makes, or causes to be made, a materially false or misleading statement, or who omits any material fact, in any Trust Indenture Act application, report, or document filed with the Commission, is liable to any person who, not knowing of the untruth or omission, in reliance on it purchases or sells a security issued under the indenture to which the application, report, or document relates. n1 The defendant is liable for the damages caused by reliance on the statement or omission, unless the defendant proves that he acted in good faith and without knowledge of the statement's falsity or of the omission. However, such a cause of action does not follow the securities when they are resold to purchasers who were not themselves defrauded. As a matter of federal law, no such automatic assignment occurs. n2

Concurrent state and federal court jurisdiction over these suits is granted by Section 323(a), and the court may require an undertaking for costs, including attorneys' fees, against either party, having due regard to the merits and good faith of the suit or defense.

Section 323(a) imposes a statute of limitations on these actions of one year after discovery of the facts and of no more than three years after the accrual of the cause of action.

Section 305(d) excludes certain information describing the indenture securities from the operation of Section 323. n3

[2] Commission Enforcement

The Commission's investigatory and enforcement roles under the Trust Indenture Act have traditionally been seen as limited. However, the 1990 amendments to the Act appear to have created the potential for expansion of the Commission's traditional role. Section 309(e) precludes the Commission from conducting any investigation or proceeding to determine whether there is compliance with the provisions of an indenture that has already been qualified, or to enforce the indenture's provisions. n4 Those provisions would appear to limit the Commission's enforcement role to assuring initial indenture qualification and enforcing prohibitions against false or misleading statements in filings made with the Commission under the Trust Indenture Act.

This limited role is reinforced in the pre-qualification period by the provisions of Section 321(c) that specifically limit the scope of any investigation of, or information gathering regarding, a prospective trustee. The commission is limited to:

- (1) determining whether the prospective trustee is qualified under Section 310(b); n5
- (2) requiring inclusion in the registration statement or Form T-3 of information regarding the trustee's eligibility under Section 310(a)(1); n6 and
- (3) requiring inclusion in the registration statement or Form T-3 of the trustee's most recent report of condition to regulatory authorities, or otherwise determining that the trustee meets the capital and surplus requirements of Section 310(a)(2). n7

The Commission is authorized to issue refusal orders to prevent the effectiveness of a Securities Act registration statement when there has not been full Trust Indenture Act compliance. n8 It may also issue stop orders or refusal orders to prevent the offering or sale of securities in violation of the Trust Indenture Act when qualification, but not Securities Act registration, is required. n9 These and other Commission orders under the Trust Indenture Act are appealable to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia or for the circuit in which the appellant resides or has his principal place of business. n10

Section 321(a) grants the Commission the authority found in Securities Act Section 20 to investigate violations and to enforce the Trust Indenture Act through injunctive actions. n11 The basic prohibitions, violation of which may serve as a predicate for an injunction, are found in Section 325, which prohibits willful violation of any provision of the Act, or rules or orders under it, and prohibits the willful making of material misstatements or omissions in applications, reports, or documents filed or required to be filed under the Trust Indenture Act. It is here that the 1990 amendments create confusion. The TIA now imposes as a direct requirement of law various obligations which previously were binding only because they appeared in the indenture. n12 Now violation of mandatory indenture provisions is also a violation of the Act itself and thus, seemingly, the basis for an injunction unless the limitations of Section 309(e) are seen as precluding this result. Injunctions may also be predicated on violations of Section 306, which prohibits certain offers and sales of debt securities that should have been qualified under the Trust Indenture Act on Form T-3. n13

If it appears to the Commission that any person is engaged, or is about to engage in a Trust Indenture Act violation, the Commission may bring an action for a permanent or temporary injunction in federal district court. Upon a proper showing, an injunction or restraining order will be granted, without bond. n14 The primary element of a "proper showing" after proof of the predicate violation is demonstration of the reasonable likelihood of future violations. n15 Broad ancillary relief is also available in injunctive actions. n16

Section 321(a) gives the Commission all enforcement powers in Trust Indenture Act matters that are granted under Section 20 of the Securities Act. In the Securities Enforcement Remedies and Penny Stock Reform Act of 1990, n17 Section 20(d) was added to the Securities Act, giving the Commission broad authority to seek civil monetary penalties for violations of the statute or rules. Presumably the same penalties may be sought for violations of the Trust Indenture Act or the rules thereunder.

To conduct investigations, the Commission is given subpoena power by Section 321(a). By reference to Securities Act Section 22(b), n18 Trust Indenture Act Section 321(a) permits the Commission to seek judicial enforcement of its subpoenas. n19

Section 321(b) contains a special provision authorizing Commission access to reports, records, and information in the possession of federal banking regulatory agencies relating to indenture trustees or prospective indenture trustees, and authorizing these banking regulatory agencies to examine trustees or prospective trustees for the Commission. The section requires every trustee, as a condition precedent to indenture qualification, to consent to the Commission's receiving upon request from federal or state banking authorities copies of their reports of examinations of the trustee. n20 Under Section 321(b), none of the information received by the Commission from banking regulatory authorities may be divulged to persons outside the Commission, except that this information may be made available to the Department of Justice in confidence in connection with criminal reference of Trust Indenture Act cases.

[3] Criminal Reference

Section 325 imposes a fine of up to $10,000, or imprisonment up to five years, or both, for persons convicted of willful violation of the Trust Indenture Act, or the rules or orders under it, or for persons convicted of willfully making material misstatements or omissions in any Trust Indenture Act application, report, or document filed or required to be filed with the Commission. However, proof of specific intent to commit a violation is not required. n21

Securities Act Section 20(b), which is made applicable to Trust Indenture Act violations by Section 321(a), provides for the Commission to transmit evidence of violations to the Attorney General for prosecution. Since the mid-1970s, the Commission, in recommendations for criminal prosecution under various of the statutes it administers, has used an expedited procedure by which files are sent directly to U.S. Attorneys' offices, by passing the Department of Justice. n22

Whatever the effect of Section 309(e) on the Commission's enforcement of duties made a part of positive law by the 1990 TIA amendments, n23 Section 309(e) appears to have no application to investigations or proceedings by the Department of Justice or the U.S. Attorneys' offices. Thus willful violations of obligations imposed by the Trust Indenture Act upon trustees, obligors or paying agents would seem to create the basis for criminal prosecutions under Section 325, even though prior to 1990 this would not have been the case because such obligations were then binding only because they were a part of the indenture contract. n24

2-8 Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 8.21

§ 8.21 State Trust Indenture Requirements

The Trust Indenture Act does not preempt state jurisdiction provided the state law does not conflict with federal law. Several states have adopted trust indenture requirements for securities offered or sold in the state.

Section 316 provides that the Trust Indenture Act shall not preempt state jurisdiction over any person or security, insofar as state law is not in conflict with federal provisions. n1 Several states have imposed trust indenture requirements for securities offered or sold in the state. Some states require that debt securities generally be issued under an indenture. n2 At least four states require compliance with the provisions of the Trust Indenture Act in some or all offerings. n3 New York has enacted a separate group of provisions relating to the content of indentures secured by a mortgage on real property and the conduct of trustees and bondholder committees. n4 Many of the New York provisions apply only to indentures that have not been qualified under the Trust Indenture Act of 1939. n5

Securities Act Section 18, as amended by the National Securities Markets Improvement Act of 1996, n6 preempts state qualification and merit review requirements for "covered securities," including state trust indenture requirements that are preconditions for state registration or qualification of covered securities. Debt securities which themselves are listed on the New York Stock Exchange, American Stock Exchange or Nasdaq, or which are issued by companies that have stock listed on these exchanges, are all covered securities. n7 New York's trust indenture provisions, which are part of its real property law, probably are not preempted since they are not requirements "with respect to registration or qualification of securities or ... of securities transactions." n8

CHAPTER 9 Civil Liabilities under the Securities Act *

2-9 Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 9.01

§ 9.01 Introduction

The Securities Act of 1933 ("Securities Act" or "1933 Act") was enacted in reaction to the stock market crash of 1929. Its purpose was to ensure that investors had the information necessary to make informed decisions and to protect them from fraud and misrepresentation. The 1933 Act ensured that adequate information would be available by federalizing the requirement that investors be provided with a registration statement upon the initial distribution of most securities and a prospectus upon offering securities to the public. n1 Although most states had adopted blue sky laws requiring the registration of securities well before the enactment of the 1933 Act, these laws did not provide private remedies for those harmed by false and misleading registration statements. n2

The 1933 Act filled that void by providing express civil damage remedies designed to protect investors from fraud and misrepresentation. Specifically, Sections 11 and 12 impose the following:

- strict liability for an issuer of securities sold pursuant to a materially misleading registration statement;
- liability for other persons--principally officers who sign the registration statement, directors, underwriters, and certain experts--for a materially misleading registration statement, unless they prove that they exercised due diligence in assuring the accuracy of the registration statement;
- strict liability for the seller of securities sold without any registration statement, unless the seller proves that the securities are exempt from registration because of an exemption;
- liability for the seller of securities, without regard to whether they are exempt from registration, for material misrepresentations and omissions in a prospectus or oral communication, unless the seller affirmatively proves that he or she did not know and in the exercise of reasonable care could not have known of the untruth or omission; and
- liability for "controlling persons" for violations committed by other persons, unless the controlling person proves that there was no reasonable ground to believe in the existence of the facts giving rise to the controlled person's liability.

The 1933 Act greatly expanded the remedies available under the common law.ⁿ³ For example, common law actions for fraud and deceit protected against material misrepresentations and omissions, but generally required the plaintiff to prove scienter, which the 1933 Act does not require. Also, negligent misstatements often provided a basis for relief only if the plaintiff and defendant were in privity. In addition, innocent misrepresentations led only to a rescission remedy, not damages. Finally, many common law actions required proof of reliance, which the civil liability provisions of the 1933 Act do not require.

The 1933 Act provisions impose liability on a narrower class of defendants and apply to a narrower class of transactions than Section 10(b) of the Securities Exchange Act, by far the most widely litigated provision of the federal securities laws. However, the Supreme Court's decision in *Ernst & Ernst v. Hochfelder*ⁿ⁴ that a private plaintiff must prove scienter to prevail under Section 10(b) greatly increased the importance of the 1933 Act provisions, which do not require that the plaintiff prove scienter. The absence of scienter as an element under a 1933 Act cause of action is a significant advantage for plaintiffs seeking a civil recovery.

The purpose of this chapter is to examine in detail the civil liability provisions of the 1933 Act--Sections 11, 12(a)(1), and 12(a)(2). In addition, this chapter discusses the absence of an implied right of action under Section 17(a) and briefly examines arbitration of securities claimsⁿ⁵ and class actions.

CHAPTER 9 Civil Liabilities under the Securities Act *

2-9 Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 9.02

§ 9.02 Section 11--Liability for False Registration Statement

[1] Introduction

Section 11 of the 1933 Act provides an express remedy for persons who purchased securities issued pursuant to a registration statement affected by material misrepresentations or omissions. Section 11's overriding purpose is "to assure compliance with the disclosure provisions of the [1933] Act by imposing a stringent standard of liability on the parties who play a direct role in a registered offering." n1 It accomplishes this by holding issuers strictly liable for the accuracy of the registration statement, and imposing on others a duty of "reasonable investigation," and a standard of "reasonable grounds to believe" that the registration statement is accurate. n2

After briefly describing Section 11's structure, this section describes the elements of plaintiff's affirmative case, including standing, the persons who may be held liable for violations, and the transactions covered by Section 11. n3 This section also examines the affirmative defenses available to defendants other than the issuer. In addition, it discusses the relief available if violations are established as well as the defendant's ability to seek contribution from other parties. Finally, it addresses various procedural and related matters pertinent to Section 11 claims.

[2] The Statute

Section 11 is the most detailed civil liability provision in the 1933 Act. Subsection (a) defines the class of transactions to which Section 11 extends, the persons who may be liable, and the potential class of plaintiffs. Subsections (b) and (c) set forth the various due diligence defenses available to particular defendants. Subsection (e) sets forth the measure of damages for Section 11 violations. In addition, it provides an affirmative defense to defendants who can prove that the damages suffered by the plaintiffs were not caused by that portion of the registration statement as to which the defendant's liability is asserted. Finally, subsection (e) authorizes a court to require plaintiffs to post bond in a suit under any provision of the 1933 Act and to award attorney's fees if the court believes the suit "to have been without merit." n4

[3] Elements of Plaintiff's Affirmative Case

Proof of the plaintiff's affirmative case under Section 11 is considerably simpler than under Section 10(b) of the Securities Exchange Act. n5 Scienter, causation, and reliance--frequent roadblocks in Section 10(b) litigation--are not elements of the plaintiff's cause of action under Section 11. n6 Indeed, in Herman & MacLean v. Huddleston, the Supreme Court acknowledged that, compared to section 10(b), "[s]ection 11 places a relatively minimal burden on a plaintiff." n7

Specifically, a Section 11 plaintiff must prove that:

- he or she has standing (i.e., that he or she acquired a security issued pursuant to the allegedly misleading registration statement);
- the defendants are among those covered by Sections 11(a)(1)-11(a)(5);
- when the registration statement became effective, it "contained an untrue statement of a material fact or omitted to state a material fact necessary to make the statements therein not misleading;" and
- the suit is brought within the statute of limitations. n8

The first three elements are discussed in greater detail below.

[4] Plaintiff's Standing and the Problem of Tracing

Although Section 11(a) defines the class of plaintiffs as "any person acquiring such security," not everyone who purchases securities at a price affected by a material misrepresentation or omission in the registration statement has standing to sue under Section 11. For example, Section 11(a) provides that a plaintiff may not recover if, at the time of the purchase, he or she knew of the untruth or omission.

Standing also may be limited by how the security was purchased. Clearly, plaintiffs who make purchases in the initial offering have standing to sue. The law is less clear with respect to secondary market purchases. This lack of clarity follows from the Supreme Court's decision in Gustafson v. Alloyd Co., n9 which limited standing under another provision of the 1933 Act, Section 12, to only those who purchased in the initial offering, not secondary market purchasers. Following Gustafson, at least one district court has also limited standing under Section 11 to those who purchase in an initial offering. n10 Most courts, however, have limited Gustafson to Section 12 causes of action. For example, all circuit courts to address the issue (including the Second Circuit) have refused to expand Gustafson to Section 11. n11 Following these circuit court decisions, most district courts have held that Section 11 actions may be brought by secondary market purchasers. n12

However, secondary market purchasers pursuing a Section 11 claim must be able to "trace" their specific securities to a false or misleading registration statement. n13 If, for example, a post-effective amendment rather than the registration statement is misleading, then plaintiffs whose shares were purchased before the post-effective amendment could not sustain a Section 11 claim. n14 Post-Gustafson cases have not provided much guidance concerning how a plaintiff can demonstrate tracing. Kirkwood v. Taylor, n15 a pre-Gustafson case that extensively discussed tracing methods, provides some guidance.

In Kirkwood, the court decertified a Section 11 class because the plaintiffs were unable to trace their shares back to the misleading registration statement. The Kirkwood court discussed four different tracing methods and the difficulties associated with each: (1) direct trace; (2) fungible mass; (3) contrabroker; and (4) heritage methods. n16 Each method is discussed below; however, it is important to note that no court has ever accepted the fungible mass, contrabroker or heritage methods.

[a] Direct Trace Method. The direct trace method requires proof that the stock now held by the plaintiff was originally purchased in the registered offering. Typically a number of indicia are present, such as the initial customer's receipt of a preliminary prospectus, a notation on the purchase order ticket showing purchase in the offering, purchase at the offering price, lack of commission, language regarding the prospectus on the customer's confirmation slip, and special coding of the transaction by the brokerage firm. While the Kirkwood court acknowledged that this is an appropriate method of tracing, none of the plaintiffs in that case could trace their shares under this method.

[b] Fungible Mass Method. Under the "fungible mass method," plaintiffs whose shares were held in a nominee account (typically Cede & Co., the nominee name of the Depository Trust Company) may identify the proportion of shares held by the nominee that are purchased by the nominee in the registered offering and assert that the same proportion of their shares held by the nominee should be deemed to have been purchased in the registered offering. Kirkwood rejected this approach because it showed only that the plaintiffs might have purchased shares issued pursuant to the allegedly misleading registration statement, not that they did purchase such shares. For purposes of Section 11, shares are not fungible. n17

[c] Contrabroker Method. Under the "contrabroker method," plaintiffs attempted to trace their purchases to brokers who participated as underwriters of the registered offering. The court rejected this approach because plaintiffs were unable to prove that the brokers only sold shares issued pursuant to the registration statement.

[d] Heritage Method. Under the "heritage method," plaintiffs who purchased stock on the over-the-counter market and who received stock certificates registered in their individual names attempted to trace the certificates back until they determined the ultimate origin of their certificates. The court rejected this approach principally because the plaintiffs were unable to show that the certificates covered only newly issued shares.

The fifth circuit recently addressed yet another method of tracing which it labeled "statistical tracing." In Krim v. PcOrder.com, Inc., n18 the plaintiffs attempted to satisfy the tracing requirement by demonstrating that at the time they purchased their shares, 99.85% of the shares comprising the pool from which they purchased could be traced to the tainted offering. Thus, they argued, it was virtually guaranteed that some or all of the plaintiffs' shares came from the tainted offering (although they could offer no particularized evidence with respect to their shares). n19 The court rejected this method, finding that it would impermissibly expand the statute by effectively eliminating the tracing requirement in situations where more than 50% of the outstanding shares of a security could be traced to the initial offering. n20 Thus, the court held, statistical evidence alone is insufficient to satisfy the tracing requirement where there is any likelihood (no matter how slight) that the plaintiff's shares did not come from the tainted offering. n21

The "tracing" requirement poses a significant and sometimes insuperable obstacle for secondary market purchasers of securities, particularly where more than one registered offering has been made and not all the registration statements are alleged to be misleading. Proof that the shares might have been the subject of a false or misleading registration statement, or even that it is statistically probable that the shares were issued pursuant to such a registration statement, is insufficient to survive a motion for summary judgment. Allegations that some or all of the shares were issued pursuant to a false or misleading registration statement, however, might survive a motion to dismiss. n22

[5] Persons Liable

After establishing standing, the plaintiff must prove that the defendant falls under one of two categories:

- those listed in Section 11(a): individuals "who are signators of the registration statement, directors or partners of the issuer, experts named as preparing or certifying a portion of the registration statement, or underwriters of that issue;" n23
- under Section 15 of the 1933 Act, controlling persons (i.e., any person who "controls any person liable under Section 11 or 12"). n24

Each of these categories are discussed below.

[a] Primary Defendants: those listed in Section 11(a). Unlike Section 10(b) of the 1934 Act, which applies to "any person" who engages in the prohibited conduct, Section 11(a) carefully limits the potential defendants. The first category of potential defendants listed in Section 11(a) consists of persons who sign the registration statement. n25 Section 6(a) of the 1933 Act requires that a registration statement be signed by "each issuer, its principal executive officer or officers, its principal financial officer, its comptroller or principal accounting officer, and the majority of its board of directors or persons performing similar functions" n26

The other principal categories of defendants listed in Section 11(a) are the following: directors (Section 11(a)(2)); persons who are named in the registration statement with their consent as about to become directors (Section 11(a)(3)); professionals who are named in the registration statement as having prepared or certified part of the registration statement or any report used in connection with the registration statement (Section 11(a)(4)); and every underwriter of the securities (Section 11(a)(5)). n27

Among those who are not listed in Section 11(a) are non-signing officers, lawyers and other professionals who do not sign the registration statement or certify allegedly misleading information in it, broker-dealers who are not members of the underwriting syndicate, transfer agents, registrars, employees of the issuer, personnel of the underwriters, and persons who are scheduled to become directors but are not referred to as such in the registration statement. n28

[b] Controlling Persons. Section 15 of the 1933 Act imposes liability on "[e]very person who, by or through stock ownership, agency, or otherwise, or who, pursuant to or in connection with an agreement or understanding with one or more other persons by or through stock ownership, agency or otherwise, controls any person liable under Section 11 or 12." n29 Congress intentionally chose not to define "control", believing that "[i]t would be difficult if not impossible to enumerate or to anticipate the many ways in which actual control may be exerted." n30 Predictably Congress' abdication has produced conflicting interpretations by the lower courts.

Many courts follow the SEC's broad formulation of control set forth in 1933 Act Rule 405 and Exchange Act Rule 12b-2, which define control as "the possession, direct or indirect, of the power to direct or cause the direction of the management and policies of a person, whether through the ownership of voting securities, by contract, or otherwise." n31 Under this test, once it is shown that the defendant participates in the operations of the corporation in general, it is sufficient that the "controlling person" possesses the power to control the specific activity upon which the primary violation is based even if he or she does not exercise that control. n32

Other courts require that the plaintiff allege "some kind of participation by the controlling person in the activities of the controlled person which are claimed to be violative of the securities laws." Some courts require that the participation in the violative conduct be "culpable" in order to provide a basis for controlling person liability. Under this approach, the plaintiff must prove: that the defendant (1) possessed the power to control or influence the primary violator and (2) was a culpable participant in the alleged illegal activity. n33 This reflects sensitivity to the fact that without such a limitation, a plaintiff could easily bring into the litigation entirely nonculpable defendants with no more than the allegation that they had the power to exercise control over one or more of the primary defendants. However, nothing in the specific language of Section 15, Exchange Act Rule 12b-2, or 1933 Act Rule 405 supports this interpretation. In fact, the courts that have required a showing of "culpable" conduct appear to confuse the issue of control with the separate issue of whether the controlling person has established a statutory defense. n34

Section 15 provides that a controlling person who "had no knowledge of or reasonable ground to believe in the existence of the facts by reason of which the liability of the controlled person is alleged to exist" may avoid liability. n35 The defendant bears the burden of proving that he or she lacked such knowledge. n36

[6] Transactions Covered by Section 11

The plaintiff must also prove that the alleged conduct is covered by Section 11. In other words, there must be: (1) a misrepresentation or omission that (2) is material and (3) affects the registration statement as of its effective date. n37 Each of these elements are discussed below.

[a] Misrepresentations and Omissions. The registration statement must be affected by a material misrepresentation or omission. Although mere allegations of unfairness or breach of fiduciary duty are not actionable under Section 11, n38 liability under Section 11 may result from a failure either to meet affirmative disclosure obligations or to disclose facts necessary to make other statements in the registration statement not misleading. n39

[b] Materiality. Section 11(a) imposes liability when a registration statement contains "an untrue statement of a material fact or omit[s] to state a material fact required to be stated therein or necessary to make the statements therein not misleading." (italics added). n40 Prior to 1976, the precise formulation of the materiality standard was the subject of much debate and conflicting interpretations. n41 At least on the semantic level, however, the Supreme Court's decision in TSC Indus., Inc. v. Northway, Inc. largely resolved the issue. n42

In TSC Indus., the Supreme Court held that an omitted fact is material "if there is a substantial likelihood that the disclosure of the omitted fact would have been viewed by the reasonable investor as having significantly altered the 'total mix' of information made available." n43 The Court also stated that in view of the remedial purposes of the statute, "it is appropriate that these doubts [regarding materiality] be resolved in favor of those the statute is designed to protect." n44 Although TSC Indus. involved civil liability under the proxy provisions of the Securities Exchange Act, the materiality standard articulated there has been applied by courts under Section 11 and other civil liability provisions of the securities laws. n45

As one might expect, however, articulation of the legal standard has left open the question of how that legal standard is to be applied to the facts of particular cases. Indeed, the most general principle to emerge is that materiality issues rarely can be resolved as a matter of law, but rather must be resolved by the fact finder in light of the importance of a particular fact or facts in the context of the total mix of information available in a given case. n46 In SEC v. Seaboard Corp., the court noted materiality is "normally a jury question and should not be taken from it unless the court has engaged in meticulous and well articulated analysis of each item of withheld or misrepresented information." n47 However, if a court concludes that, as a matter of law, there is no material misrepresentation in the registration statement, it will dismiss the Section 11 claim. n48

Further complicating matters is the notion of "qualitative" materiality. In recent years, the duty to disclose information bearing on the competency or integrity of management has received renewed interest by the SEC and the courts. Although such information may not be quantitatively material, because it may not significantly affect the issuer's financial status in an easily measurable way, it frequently is qualitatively material because it reflects on the quality of corporate management. This incongruity is recognized in the SEC's Staff Accounting Bulletin No. 99, rejecting exclusive reliance on quantitative benchmarks to determine materiality. n49 As the SEC stated many years ago, "[e]valuation of the quality of management--to whatever extent it is possible--is an essential ingredient of informed investment decision[s]." n50

Although there is no assurance that different courts will take a consistent approach to materiality issues, some common themes have emerged from case law. For example, misrepresentations and omissions that are unlikely to affect the market price of securities ordinarily are considered immaterial. Also, the registration statement is not required "to set forth legal conclusions, engage in speculation, characterize the basic underlying facts with pejorative descriptions or verbalize all adverse inferences expressly" and the omission of these items does not give rise to liability. n51 Similarly, defendants "are not required to admit wrongdoing before it is properly determined in a court of law," n52 are not required to accuse themselves of mismanagement and poor business judgment, n53 are not required to disclose "that which should be obvious to the average investor," n54 and are not required to "[foretell] the future." n55 Accordingly, omission of these items does not give rise to civil liability. In addition, inaccurate projections are not actionable where there was a reasonable basis for the projection at the time it was made. n56 In addition, the principal focus of disclosure requirements is "firm specific information" rather than more general information about, for example, "the competition, regulatory conditions, and the economy as a whole." n57 "Market knowledge" of related facts may lessen the likelihood that particular undisclosed facts will be deemed material. n58 Finally, a statement may not be material if there are warnings, or disclaimers attached to the predictive statements (the "bespeaks caution" defense). n59

Specifically, the court In re Donald J. Trump Casino Securities Litigation-Taj Mahal Litigation noted that for a defendant to utilize the bespeaks caution defense, "the cautionary statements must be substantive and tailored to the specific future projections, estimates or opinions in the prospectus which the plaintiffs challenge." n60 For the bespeaks caution defense to apply, there must have been a reasonable basis to make the forward-looking statement. n61

The PSLRA codified the "bespeaks caution" defense by amending the 1933 Act to add a new Section 27A. Section 27A generally provides issuers with a safe harbor from liability in private actions for certain forward-looking statements (e.g., projections). The safe harbor applies to both written and oral statements, as long as:

- (1) the statement is identified as a forward-looking statement and is accompanied by meaningful cautionary language; n62
- (2) the statement is immaterial; or
- (3) the plaintiff fails to prove that the statement was made with actual knowledge of its falsity (no matter whether cautionary language was used). This safe harbor applies only to private actions, not to SEC enforcement actions. n63

The safe harbor also contains specified provisions for oral forward-looking statements made by an issuer. Such oral forward-looking statements are protected if they are identified as forward-looking statements, are accompanied by meaningful cautionary language, and identify "readily available" documentation that sets forth important factors that could cause results to differ materially from those projected. The legislation provides that such documentation is to be deemed "readily available" if it is either filed with the SEC or otherwise generally disseminated.

According to Section 27A(d), the safe harbor provision does not impose a duty to update a forward-looking statement. Although it is not entirely clear whether this provision is meant to eliminate any such duty that otherwise exists under law, or merely to clarify that no implied "duty to update" may be gleaned from Section 27A, it appears from the language of the statute--which refers explicitly to the fact that "[n]othing in this section shall impose 'a duty to update' "--that the latter meaning is intended.

[c] As of the Effective Date of the Registration Statement. Section 11 provides relief only for misstatements or omissions that affect a registration statement as of its effective date. Misstatements in a preliminary prospectus that are corrected before the prospectus is finalized are not actionable. Similarly, a registration statement that becomes misleading because of events occurring after its effective date is not actionable. Although the failure to correct may in some circumstances violate Section 12(a)(2) of the 1933 Act or Section 10(b) of the Securities Exchange Act, n64 Section 11 provides no liability unless the misrepresentations and omissions were present "when [the registration statement] became effective." n65

Special problems arise in shelf registrations made under SEC Rule 415 pursuant to which securities are registered for a continuous or delayed offering. n66 Rule 415 requires an issuer to keep information in the shelf registration statement accurate and up-to-date while offers or sales are being made. Also, item 512 of Regulation S-K requires a specific undertaking in shelf registrations that a post-effective amendment will be filed to reflect "fundamental changes" occurring after the effective date of the registration statement. In Gallagher v. Abbott Laboratories, the court noted that "the issuer must file and distribute an addendum to that document bringing matters up to date" and that this applied to both the issuance of new securities and the selling of stock. n67 Thus, in the case of shelf registrations, post-effective events could theoretically give rise to Section 11 liability if the post-effective amendments are misleading.

[7] Statute of Limitations

Finally, the plaintiff must prove that the action is brought within the statute of limitations. This requirement is discussed infra at Section 9.05.

[8] The "Missing" Elements of Reliance, Causation and Scienter

Unlike Section 10(b) of the Securities Exchange Act, Section 11 does not require a plaintiff to prove reliance, causation, or scienter. n68 Indeed, in Herman & MacLean v. Huddleston, n69 the Supreme Court observed that the principal difference between Section 11 of the 1933 Act and Section 10(b) of the Securities Exchange Act is that under Section 10(b) a plaintiff "must prove that the defendant acted with scienter, i.e., with intent to deceive, manipulate, or defraud." n70

There are, however, qualifications to this general statement. For example, reliance must be proven if the plaintiff's purchase occurs after the issuer has made generally available an earnings statement for a twelve month period beginning after the effective date of the registration statement. In that case, Section 11(a) conditions the right of recovery on "proof that such person acquired the securities relying on such untrue statement in the registration statement or relying upon the registration and not knowing of such omission." n71 This requirement reflects Congress' recognition that "in all likelihood the purchase and price of the security purchased after publication of such an earning statement will be predicated on that statement rather than upon the information disclosed upon registration." n72 Such reliance need not be direct; it "may be established without proof of the reading of the registration statement by such person." n73 Additionally, lack of reliance will bar recovery by sophisticated plaintiffs who entered into a binding commitment to purchase securities before the filing of the defective registration statement. n74

Also, although causation is not an element of the plaintiff's case, lack of causation is an affirmative defense, as discussed in Section 9.02[11] below.

[9] Affirmative Defenses

Once the plaintiff proves the affirmative elements of a Section 11 case, the defendant can still avoid liability if he or she can prove one of the available affirmative defenses:

- plaintiff's knowledge of the untruth or omission (Section 11(a));
- non-causation (Section 11(e));
- due diligence (Section 11(b))

We discuss each of these in more detail below.

[10] Plaintiff's Knowledge

Although reliance is not part of a plaintiff's affirmative case, Section 11(a) grants a complete defense upon proof that "at the time he acquired his stock [the plaintiff] knew of such untruth or omission." This defense is available to all defendants, including the issuer. Defendants must show actual, not constructive, knowledge. n75

[11] Non-causation Defense

Section 11(e) provides an affirmative defense to any defendant, including the issuer, who proves there was no loss causation. n76 The defense applies to any damage that the defendant proves "represents other than the depreciation in value of such security resulting from such part of the registration statement, with respect to which liability is asserted." n77 For example, a defendant may prove that there was no loss causation if he can establish that the decline in a security's value was due to a general decline in the market. n78 Although the burden of proving the absence of loss causation is a difficult one, in Akerman v. Oryx Communications, Inc. n79 the court granted summary judgment to the defendants on this ground where they demonstrated that (1) the market price of the security did not significantly change after the corrected facts were disclosed; and (2) unrebutted expert testimony showed that the decline in the price of the securities was consistent with the change in price of comparable stocks during the same time. n80

[12] Due Diligence Defense

Generally, Section 11(b) provides an affirmative defense against liability for persons (other than the issuer) if the individual engaged in reasonable investigation and had reasonable grounds to believe that the statements were true and that there was no material omission. Section 11(c) provides that "the standard of reasonableness shall be that required of a prudent man in the management of his own property." Application of these defenses varies depending on whether an expert or non-expert defendant is involved and on whether an expertised, non-expertised, or official portion of the registration statement is at issue. The WorldCom case, for instance, recently drove home this point and set out the potential consequences of a failure adequately to plan and implement a due diligence process. While the amount and form of diligence required will vary from deal to deal, prudent practice would be to employ a general due diligence checklist which includes (but is not limited to) the following areas:

- Background Overview: Parties should review the pertinent market, primary and potential competitors, operating history, and the company's organizational and management structure;
- Business Information: Parties should review the company's operations, growth strategy and objectives, historical performance and financial projections (including assessing the reasonableness of assumptions), key risks within and outside the company, and potential acquisitions;
- Finance and Accounting: Parties should review and understand the company's audited and unaudited financial statements (discussing them with auditors if necessary), significant accounting policies (paying particular attention to any material weaknesses or significant deficiencies noted by auditors), internal controls, and auditor independence issues;
- Legal and Regulatory: Parties should review the company's corporate governance documents, pending and/or threatened litigation, Sarbanes-Oxley compliance procedures, existing contracts (paying particular attention to representations and warranties), pending material transactions, and any licenses, trademarks, or patents held by the company.

The due diligence defense in Section 11(b) and the extent to which the 1933 Act should hold persons liable for unintentional violations were controversial issues during the debate preceding the enactment of the 1933 Act. In this section, we provide some background on the Congressional intent on Sections 11(b) and (c) and a summary of SEC guidance in this area. Next, we discuss how the defense applies to issuers, experts, and non-experts and the distinction between expertised and non-expertised portions of the registration statement.

[a] Congressional Intent. Three factors are important in understanding Congressional intent with respect to the due diligence defense. First, Congress believed that requiring defendants to establish the applicability of the defense was "indispensable to make the buyer's remedies under these sections particularly effective," n81 and that "it is necessary to throw the burden of disproving responsibility for reprehensible acts of omission or commission on those who purport to issue statements for the public's reliance." These statements, it should be remembered, were made in 1933--several years before the adoption of federal rules of civil procedure providing extensive discovery rights. Thus, at the time that the statement was made, it was far more difficult than it is today to prove that the defendant's conduct was culpable.

Second, Congress wanted to assure that corporations making public offerings of securities were directed not merely by honest directors, but also by competent directors. A continuing theme running throughout the legislative history was to stop the practice of using "dummy directors" and to place upon the originators of securities "a duty of competence and innocence." n82

Third, Congress intended that the duty of care imposed on defendants under Section 11 would vary depending on their role in the distribution. As stated in the House Report, "[t]he duty of care to discover varies in its demands upon participants in security distribution with the importance of their place in the scheme of distribution and with the degree of protection that the public has a right to expect." n83

Finally, although the House Report condemned the practice of using "dummy directors" with no actual oversight responsibilities, n84 it also rejected as an "impossible burden" compelling directors to "guarantee the absolute accuracy of every statement that they are called upon to make." n85 The Conference Report, in adopting the House approach and rejecting a Senate version of Section 11 that would have provided no due diligence defense, stressed the duty of reasonable care and the reasonableness of a defendant's delegating certain duties of investigation, especially where "the character of the acts involves professional skill or facilities not possessed by the fiduciary himself." n86

[b] SEC Guidance. The SEC has attempted to give some guidance on what constitutes due diligence through Rule 176, which was adopted as part of the Commission's integrated disclosure program. n87 Essentially, Rule 176 attempts to define the principal circumstances relevant in determining whether the due diligence requirements have been satisfied. Although it provides a convenient checklist of factors to consider, the general language of Rule 176 does not address specific issues in particular cases. It provides that the relevant circumstances in determining whether due diligence requirements have been met include:

- the type of issuer, since disclosure requirements vary depending on the characteristics of the issuer;
- the type of security, since this may be relevant in evaluating the financial condition and prospects of the issuer;
- the type of person, since the thoroughness of the required investigation depends on the importance of the person's place in the scheme of distribution;
- in the case of an officer, the actual office held since the investigation will vary depending on the person's position and responsibilities;
- in the case of a director or a proposed director, the presence or absence of another relationship with the issuer giving the director expertise, knowledge or responsibility with respect to particular matters;
- reasonable reliance on others whose duties should have given them knowledge of the particular facts;
- in the case of an underwriter, the type of underwriter involved (i.e., managing underwriter, participating underwriter, or merely a statutory underwriter); and
- with respect to a fact or document incorporated by reference, whether the person had any responsibility for the fact or document at the time of the filing from which it was incorporated.

[c] Applicability to Issuers. The in terrorem effect of Section 11 is most starkly seen in the case of issuer liability. Subsection (b) expressly limits the due diligence defense to persons "other than the issuer." The issuer's responsibility comes close to insuring the material accuracy of the registration statement. n88 The only defenses available to the issuer are to prove that (1) the plaintiff knew of the untruth or omission at the time of his acquisition, or (2) the decline in the value of the securities was due to factors other than misrepresentations or omissions in the registration statement.

[d] Applicability to Non-Experts.

For purposes of defining the availability of the due diligence defense to different categories of non-issuer defendants, Section 11 and related caselaw draw a clear distinction between "experts" and "non-experts," and between "expertised" and "non-expertised" portions of a registration statement. Under Section 11(a)(4), an expert means "[e]very accountant, engineer, or appraiser, or any person whose profession gives authority to a statement made by him." It has been held, for example, that an attorney who provides a legal opinion used in connection with a registration statement is an expert under Section 11. n89 An expert's liability is limited to the "expertised" portion of the registration statement. n90 Section 11(b)(3) defines the expertised portion of a registration statement as any "part of the registration statement purporting to be made on the authority of an expert ... or purporting to be a copy of or extract from a report or valuation of an expert." n91

Accordingly, the remainder of the registration statement (that is, everything other than the expertised portion) is known under Section 11 and applicable caselaw as the "non-expertised" portion of the registration statement.

In contrast to an expert, a non-expert (i.e., an officer, director, or other defendant outside the scope of Section 11(a)(4)) may be liable for false or misleading statements in both the expertised and non-expertised portions of the registration statement.

[i] Due Diligence Defense as to Non-Expertised Portions of the Registration Statement.

A non-expert defendant may escape liability for a non-expertised portion of the registration statement by proving that "he had, after reasonable investigation, reasonable ground to believe and did believe, at the time such part of the registration statement became effective, that the statements therein were true and that there was no omission to state a material fact required to be stated therein or necessary to make the statements therein not misleading" n92 In other words, the non-expert must prove not only that he undertook a reasonable investigation, but also that as a result of that investigation he had reasonable ground to believe that the registration statement was accurate.

Through an analysis of BarChris and more recent cases, we discuss the due diligence defense as it applies to different categories of defendants. n93

[A] Inside Directors. The "reasonable investigation" and "reasonable ground to believe" standards vary "with the degree of involvement of the individual, his expertise, and his access to the pertinent information and data." n94 Because reasonableness varies with the role of the defendant, "inside" directors, i.e., directors who are also officers of the corporation or who have a particularly close affiliation with the corporation, are subject to a particularly high standard of reasonableness. Existing case law imposes "such stringent requirements of knowledge of corporate affairs on inside directors that one is led to the conclusion that liability will lie in practically all cases of misrepresentation." n95

Inside directors find themselves in a "catch-22" position under Section 11. If they are diligent and knowledgeable about corporate affairs, their knowledge is deemed inconsistent with a reasonable ground to believe that the registration statement is accurate. If they are not diligent and not knowledgeable about corporate affairs, then their ignorance is deemed inconsistent with a reasonable ground to believe in the accuracy of the registration statement. The liability of a director who signs a registration statement "does not depend upon whether or not he read it or, if he did, whether or not he understood what he was reading." n96 The five inside directors in BarChris covered the gamut in terms of their education and knowledge of and involvement in the corporation's affairs. All were held liable, and it is apparent from the tenor of the opinion that the court did not consider the liability of the inside directors for inaccuracies in the non-expertised portions of the registration statement to present a close issue.

The fact that a director cooperated fully in frankly disclosing to persons preparing the registration statement all the facts known to him, and then relied on such persons to make adequate disclosures, is largely irrelevant. An inside director is "not entitled to sit back and place the blame on the lawyers for not advising him about [inaccuracies in the registration statement]." n97 Rather, the director must "make a reasonable investigation of the truth of all the statements in the unexpertised portion of the document which he signed." n98

[B] Specialist Outside Directors. Specialist directors, i.e., directors having particular expertise or involvement in matters related to the registration statement, also are subject to a stringent standard of diligence. An outside attorney-director who helped prepare the registration statement in BarChris was held liable in part because his very involvement meant "more was required of him in the way of reasonable investigation than could fairly be expected of a director who had no connection with this work." n99

Although the attorney-director argued that he was entitled to rely on the officers who had first hand knowledge of the company's affairs, the court held that "to require a check of matters easily verifiable is not unreasonable." n100 It went on to fault the director for failing to read various contracts and minutes of subsidiaries, preparing inadequate written questionnaires, and failing to check the books of the company. After making some allowance for the fact that the attorney-director had been misled by the company's officers, the court nevertheless found that there were "too many instances in which [the attorney-director] failed to make an inquiry which he could easily have made which, if pursued, would have put him on his guard." n101 In Feit, the court treated lawyer-directors as insiders because they were involved intimately with operation of the company. n102

[C] Non-Specialist Outside Directors. Non-specialist outside directors are subject to a less rigorous standard of diligence than either inside directors or specialist directors. n103 This does not mean, however, that their burden is satisfied easily.

In BarChris the two non-specialized outside directors also failed to establish their due diligence defenses as to the non-expertised portion of the registration statement. They had joined the company shortly before the effective date of the amended registration statement. They did little more than ask one or two general questions about the registration statement and accept management's answers at face value. This failed to satisfy the prudent man standard because, in the court's words, "a prudent man would not act in an important matter without any knowledge of the relevant facts, in sole reliance upon representations of persons who are comparative strangers and upon general information which does not purport to cover the particular case." n104

Outside directors fared better in Laven v. Flanagan. n105 In Laven, Western Union issued a registration statement in connection with its sale of $50 million of preferred shares. After the offering, Western Union's banks cancelled a $100 million line of credit, its largest shareholder sold its holdings, Western Union wrote down its assets, and the price of its stock plummeted. Shareholder suits alleging violations of Section 11 of the 1933 Act and other provisions of the federal securities laws followed. The court granted summary judgment to the outside directors, holding that as a matter of law they had established their due diligence defense under Section 11. It found that they had reviewed the prospectus, and had reasonably relied on the representations of the independent auditor, the underwriter, and Western Union's management. Because their activities "were a far cry from the passive and total reliance on company management that defeated the due diligence defense in [BarChris]," the court granted summary judgment. n106 The cases make clear that outside directors cannot merely rely on inside directors. They must undertake their own effort to verify that the company's statements are accurate and complete.

[D] Underwriters. As the summary judgment decision in In re WorldCom, Inc. Securities Litigation n107 ("WorldCom") makes clear, underwriters continue to be held to a very high standard with respect to due diligence. This decision outlined the pitfalls which underwriters must avoid in establishing the foundation for a due diligence defense.

WorldCom bondholders sued the underwriters of two public debt offerings under sections 11 and 12(a)(2) after WorldCom announced in 2002 that it had improperly overstated earnings totaling at least $11 billion. Moving for summary judgment, the underwriters asserted reliance on Arthur Andersen's audits of WorldCom's year-end financial statements, and with respect to the company's unaudited interim financial statements, the underwriters argued that their reliance on Andersen's comfort letters (based on quarterly reviews) gave rise to a due diligence defense. In denying the motion, the court held that although audited financial statements qualify as expertised information, unaudited financial statements (even if the subject of an auditor's comfort letter) do not. n108 After discussing SEC rules that make clear that accountants are not subject to liability as experts for financial statements that they merely review but do not audit, the court held that an accountant's comfort letter as to interim financial statements "[does] not expertise any portion of the registration statement that is non-expertised" and that underwriters may not rely upon such a letter to establish a due diligence defense. n109 Thus, to assert a successful due diligence defense, the underwriters had to show that they undertook reasonable independent verification of the non-expertised portions of the registration statements (including interim financial information), and had reasonable grounds to believe in their accuracy. n110 Furthermore, as discussed more fully in Section 9.02[12][D][ii][C], the court held that even with respect to audited financial statements, blind reliance on an auditor's opinion is insufficient to avoid liability where "red flags" exist. n111

BarChris also remains a key decision on the issue of underwriter due diligence. In that case the managing underwriter, which had read BarChris' prospectuses and annual reports, reviewed similar documents of other companies in the industry, and checked BarChris' reputation with banks and other financial institutions (among other procedures), was held liable because the court found that it had not attempted to verify the information supplied by the company's officers. The court emphasized that "the positions of the underwriter and the company's officers are adverse" and that "statements made by company officers to an underwriter to induce him to underwrite may be self-serving." n112 Therefore, underwriters "must make some reasonable attempt to verify the data submitted to them." n113

With little explanation, the court went on to hold that the participating underwriters were also liable since they had relied solely on the lead underwriter. n114 This should not, however, be interpreted as either prohibiting participating underwriters from delegating responsibilities to the managing underwriter, n115 or automatically holding the participating underwriters liable for deficiencies in the managing underwriter's investigation.

Congress recognized that Section 11 permits reasonable delegation. n116 An interpretation of Section 11 that requires participating underwriters to duplicate all of or portions of the investigation conducted by the managing underwriter would result in needless waste and expense. The more sensible interpretation is contained in a 1972 Securities Act release, which sets forth the SEC's view that although a participating underwriter may delegate responsibilities to a managing underwriter and thus "may relieve himself of the task of actually verifying the representations in the registration statement," he must satisfy himself "that the managing underwriter makes the kind of investigation the participant would have performed if he were the manager." n117 The obligation of a participating underwriter under section 11 is not to avoid delegating investigatory responsibilities to the managing underwriter, but to assure himself that the manager's program of investigation and actual investigative performance is adequate.

[iii] Due Diligence Defense as to Expertised Portions of the Registration Statement. Section 11(b)(3)(C) sets forth the non-expert's due diligence defense for expertised portions of the registration statement. In contrast to the Section 11(b)(3)(B) due diligence defense for non-expertised portions of the registration statement, Section 11(b)(3)(C) does not contain an explicit "reasonable investigation" requirement and does not affirmatively require a "reasonable ground to believe" in the accuracy of the registration statement. Instead, it is stated in the negative, requiring proof that the defendant "had no reasonable ground to believe and did not believe ... that the statements therein were untrue or that there was an omission to state a material fact; or that such part of the registration statement did not fairly represent the statement of the expert" n118

[A] Inside Directors. Inside directors typically have, and are expected to have, relatively detailed knowledge of the more material matters concerning the corporation. The larger the number of misrepresentations and omissions in a registration statement and the more material the matters misrepresented or omitted, the greater is the likelihood that an inside director will be unable to establish the due diligence defense even as to the expertised portions of the registration statement. Four of the five inside directors in BarChris failed to establish their due diligence defense with respect to the expertised portions of the registration statement. They were found to have known too much of the corporation's affairs to have reasonably believed that there were no untrue statements or material omissions in the certified financial statements.

The one inside director who did establish due diligence as to the expertised portion of the registration statement was a lawyer who became a director late in the registration process. The court found that he merely attended to legal matters of a routine nature, did not participate in the management of the company, and had no personal knowledge of the corporation's affairs. In light of his limited role in the corporation and his limited knowledge, the court found that it was reasonable for him to rely on the accountant's certification of the company's financial statements.

[B] Outside Directors and Specialist Outside Directors. Each of the outside directors in BarChris, including the so-called "specialist director" who helped prepare the registration statement, was able to assert a successful due diligence defense as to the expertised portion of the registration statement. Their knowledge about the corporation was not extensive enough to give them reason to question the accuracy of the certified financial statements, and they were entitled to rely on the company's accountants with respect to such statements rather than conduct their own independent investigation.

[C] Underwriters. The underwriters in BarChris were held not liable for the expertised portions of the registration statement. As with the outside directors, their knowledge of the corporation was not found to be inconsistent with the certification provided by the accountants, and they were not found to have any further duty of investigation with respect to the certified financial statements. In contrast, the Worldcom court found that the underwriters were not entitled to rely upon financial statements that had been reviewed but not audited by the company's independent auditors, nor could they rely upon "comfort letters" provided by the auditors without undertaking their own independent inquiry as to the reliability of the company's financial information. Even as to the company's audited financial statements, which the Worldcom court acknowledged would qualify as "expertised" portions of the registration statement, the court held that the underwriters' reliance may not be blind. Rather, "where 'red flags' regarding the reliability of an audited financial statement emerge, mere reliance on an audit will not be sufficient to ward off liability." n119

The court characterized as a red flag "any information that strips a defendant of his confidence in the accuracy of those portions of a registration statement premised on audited financial statements." n120 In the Worldcom case, the court saw potential red flags in the fact that certain of WorldCom's financial ratios were out-of-step with its industry competitors and that a number of the underwriters had themselves recently downgraded the company's credit rating. n121 Beyond undue reliance on audit opinions, the court was troubled by other aspects of the underwriters' due diligence as well, citing "superficial" and "cursory" questioning of management, poor documentation of the diligence process, and an overall failure to play "devil's advocate" in gaining an understanding of the company's business. n122

[e] Applicability to Experts. With respect to the matters that an expert certifies, the due diligence defense is similar to that of non-experts for non-expertised portions of the registration statement. The expert must prove that at the time the expertised portion of the registration statement became effective, "he had, after reasonable investigation, reasonable ground to believe and did believe ... that the statements therein were true and that there was no omission to state a material fact required to be stated therein ... or necessary to make the statements therein not misleading." n123 What constitutes a reasonable investigation will be determined, in part, by prevailing industry standards. n124 Alternatively, under Section 11(b)(3)(B)(ii), the expert may prove that the expertised portion of the registration statement does not represent fairly his statement as an expert.

In BarChris the accountants were held liable for certifying false financial statements principally because they were "too easily satisfied with glib answers to [their] inquiries" and "there were enough danger signals in the materials which [they] did examine to require some further investigation." n125

Similarly, the WorldCom court acknowledged the fact-intensive nature of the inquiry, particularly given the minimal case law guidance defining the contours of the due diligence defense for accountants. n126 In denying Arthur Andersen's motion for summary judgment, the court held that the plaintiffs had "presented evidence that raises questions of fact as to whether each of [the accounting decisions questioned by the plaintiffs] complied with GAAP individually and in the context of their impact on the financial statements of WorldCom taken as a whole." n127 Thus, Andersen faced liability for its unqualified audit opinion where the court found that the auditors appreciated the risk of fraud at WorldCom (citing, among other things, aggressive accounting and undue emphasis on maintaining a high stock price) but did not take adequate steps to prevent it. n128

[f] Lessons of BarChris and WorldCom. The BarChris decision is important, not for hard and fast black-letter rules on how to satisfy the Section 11 due diligence requirements, but for its general approach. Above all, two principles emerge from the decision: first, reliance on others to "get it right" generally will not, by itself, excuse one from liability under Section 11; second, in determining whether due diligence has in fact been exercised, courts will not elevate form over substance. BarChris noted that the key to due diligence is the independent verification of the facts, and that the "reasonableness" varies depending on the defendant's role with the issuer. Courts will focus not merely on the mechanics of asking questions and getting answers, but on what steps were taken to verify the information contained in those answers. Delegation of responsibilities, while clearly permissible in many circumstances, will be looked upon with suspicion when used to excuse liability.

Counsel for the company is similarly well advised to be thoroughly familiar with the company's affairs. Corporate officials, including outside directors, should be advised to be familiar with the company's business and to ask specific questions tailored to the contents of the registration statement. Reliance on others "to get it right" does not avoid liability under the Act, nor does asking superficial questions concerning the general nature of the company's business.

WorldCom, in addition to reiterating the lessons learned from BarChris, further defined and narrowed the contours of the due diligence defense. Like BarChris, WorldCom is significant in its approach to the defense on the basis of the bedrock principle that "tacit reliance on management assertions is unacceptable; the underwriters must play devil's advocate." n129

The WorldCom court borrowed the "devil's advocate" language from BarChris, and shaped this theme throughout its due diligence commentary. For example, the WorldCom court limited the reliance that can be placed on audited financial information by requiring underwriters to watch for warning signs which may indicate a lack of reliability as to the information being presented. "[W]here 'red flags' regarding the reliability of an audited financial statement emerge, mere reliance on an audit will not be sufficient to ward off liability." n130 With respect to unaudited financial information, meanwhile, reliance on an auditor's comfort letter, without more, constitutes no defense at all to section 11 liability. n131 The courts will continue to parse out these issues, but underwriters would be wise to heed the lessons of the past in performing due diligence going forward.

[13] Damages

Section 11(e) provides three alternative measures of damages, all essentially compensatory in nature. Where plaintiff has not sold the stock, the measure is the difference between the amount paid for the stock when purchased and its "value" at the time suit is brought. n132 Where the stock has been sold before the action is brought, the measure is the difference between the amount paid for the stock when purchased and the "price" at which it was disposed of in the market. n133 Where the stock is sold after suit is brought but before judgment is rendered, the measure is the difference between the amount paid for the stock when purchased and the price at which it was disposed of so long as this does not exceed the difference between the purchase price and the value at the time of suit. n134 In other words, price increases after a suit is filed may reduce damages, but price decreases after a suit is filed will not increase damages. n135

The term "value," as used in the first of the three measures, is not necessarily synonymous with market price. If the market price has been affected by misrepresentations or omissions of material fact, value may be either higher or lower than the market price. n136 Ordinarily, "value" is the market price after the facts have been disclosed to the public. n137

A number of other qualifications should be noted with respect to the measure of damages. First, in determining the "amount paid" for the security, the statute provides that this amount shall not exceed the price at which the security was offered to the public. Thus, for example, if the stock is first sold to the public at $10 a share, but plaintiff buys in the secondary market at $15 a share, and the value of plaintiff's share is only $5 a share when suit is brought, plaintiff's maximum damages are $5 a share rather than $10 a share. n138 Second, the statute also provides that each underwriter may not be liable for damages in excess of the total price at which the securities underwritten by him were offered to the public unless the underwriter knowingly receives extra compensation from the issuer. n139 Third, no defendant is liable for any portion of the damages that he proves was caused by matters other than the misrepresentations or omissions in that part of the registration statement as to which liability is asserted. Fourth, price declines before disclosure of the allegedly omitted facts generally may not be charged to defendants. n140 Finally, benefit-of-the-bargain damages are not available under Section 11. n141

[14] Contribution

Section 11(f) provides an express cause of action for contribution against a defendant who becomes liable under Section 11. n142 Contribution may be obtained from any other person who, if sued separately, would have been liable for the same payment except that a person who has engaged in fraud is not entitled to contribution from a person who has not engaged in fraud. n143

[15] Procedural Issues Common to Sections 11 and 12

There are certain procedural issues common to Section 11 and Section 12 claims. They are as follows.

[a] Forum. Under Section 22(a), a plaintiff may bring a Section 11 or 12 action in a federal district court, or a state court. Section 22(a) provides that a Section 11 claim filed in a state court cannot be removed to federal court. n144 However, there is a split of authority among federal circuit courts as to whether Section 22(a)'s removal bar was superceded by the Class Action Fairness Act of 2005 (CAFA), n145 which permits removal of class actions that exceed $5 million in claimed damages and involve at least partial diversity between plaintiffs and defendants. n146

[b] Costs and Attorney's Fees. Section 11(e) authorizes a court, "in its discretion,"

- to "require an undertaking for the payment of the costs of such suit, including reasonable attorney's fees," and
- to award such costs to the prevailing party "if the court believes the suit or the defense to have been without merit." n147

These provisions are applicable to any suit brought under any section of the 1933 Act.

If applied broadly, Section 11(e) could have a serious deterrent effect on suits brought under the 1933 Act, particularly in class actions where reasonable attorney's fees of six and seven figures are not unusual. However, courts have generally applied these provisions narrowly. Courts frequently recognize that they should require security only upon ruling that "an eventual finding of bad faith or obvious lack of merit appear[s] likely" n148 Few courts would make such a finding in the early stages of litigation. n149

Similarly, although the statute authorizes the award of attorney's fees merely upon a showing that the suit or defense was "without merit," this standard has also been interpreted narrowly to require a finding that the suit "borders on the frivolous" or has been "brought in bad faith." n150 Courts have awarded fees under this provision only on rare occasions. n151 On the other hand, taxable costs are awarded as a matter of course to the prevailing party in Section 11 and 12 litigation. n152

The impact of the PSLRA on Section 11(e) remains an open issue. Upon final adjudication of a 1933 Act claim, the PSLRA requires courts to assess the parties' compliance with Rule 11(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and to impose sanctions for any violations. The PSLRA also creates a rebuttable presumption that an award of attorney's fees and expenses is the appropriate sanction. There is an argument that the PSLRA's mandatory language supercedes the discretionary power to award fees that courts formerly enjoyed under Section 11(e). Nor is there clear guidance on whether, or to what extent, Section 11(e)'s "without merit" standard overlaps the "violation of Rule 11(b)" standard in the PSLRA. Both these issues await resolution by the courts.

[c] Rule 9(b). Another procedural issue applicable to Sections 11 and 12 merits particular mention. In contrast to the general notice pleading permitted under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Rule 9(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure requires that all allegations of fraud be pleaded "with particularity."

The rule has been interpreted to require the plaintiff to specify:

- precisely what written statements, oral misrepresentations, or omissions were made;
- the time and place of each such statement or omission and the person responsible for making (or, in the case of omissions, not making) the same;
- the context of such statements and the manner in which they misled the plaintiffs; and
- what the defendants obtained as a consequence of the fraud. n153

Where applicable, this provision may impose significant obstacles for a plaintiff who, particularly at the beginning stages of litigation, often is not able to satisfy the requirements of the rule. Indeed, one of the most frequent bases for dismissal of Section 10(b) actions is the inability of a plaintiff to comply with Rule 9(b).

Strictly speaking, Sections 11 and 12(a)(2) do not create fraud claims because they do not require proof of scienter; rather, they are predicated on false or misleading disclosures regardless of intent. Thus, at least at first blush, Rule 9(b) would appear to be inapplicable to alleged violations of Sections 11 and 12(a)(2). However, plaintiffs sometimes combine Section 11 and 12(a)(2) allegations with Section 10(b) allegations and use the same scienter allegations for all claims. The issue that arises in such cases is whether Rule 9(b) becomes applicable to claims under Section 11 and 12(a)(2) if the plaintiff includes allegations of scienter.

Some courts maintain that Rule 9(b) does not apply to Section 11 and 12(a)(2) claims even when these claims incorporate factual allegations of scienter. n154 Other courts disagree, citing the language in Rule 9(b) referring to "all averments of fraud or mistake." n155

In Rombach v. Chang, n156 the Second Circuit finally settled a long standing difference of opinion among the lower courts of that Circuit as to the applicability of Rule 9(b) to Section 11 and 12(a)(2) claims that include scienter allegations. Coming down firmly on the side of those Circuits, such as the Third, Fifth, and Ninth, that have held Rule 9(b) applies to Section 11 and Section 12(a)(2) claims grounded in fraud, the Second Circuit observed that "[b]y its terms, Rule 9(b) applies to 'all averments of fraud' ... " and held that "while a plaintiff need allege no more than negligence to proceed under Section 11 and Section 12(a)(2), claims that do rely upon averments of fraud are subject to the test of Rule 9(b)." n157

Although some courts n158 continue to hold that Rule 9(b) is inapplicable to Section 11 and 12(a)(2) claims, plaintiffs should not assume the burden of complying with Rule 9(b) when that burden can be avoided. A plaintiff should frame his or her Section 11 and 12(a)(2) allegations carefully by not combining them with fraud allegations that may be necessary to support other alleged violations in the complaint. If the plaintiff fails to separate the Section 11 and 12(a)(2) allegations from the fraud allegations, the defendant is on firm ground to demand compliance with Rule 9(b) in most jurisdictions.

A distinct but related issue is the applicability of the PSLRA's heightened pleading standards, which go beyond the requirements of Rule 9(b), to Section 11 and 12(a)(2) claims. The PSLRA amended the Exchange Act to require plaintiffs to state with particularity both the reason why a statement was misleading and "facts giving rise to a strong inference that the defendant acted with the required state of mind." n159 However, Section 21D of the Exchange Act states that these standards apply only to private actions "arising under this chapter;" that is, under the Exchange Act. n160 Section 21D further restricts the applicability of the scienter standard to actions in which the plaintiff may recover money damages "only on proof that the defendant acted with a particular state of mind." n161 Based on this text, the heightened pleading standards clearly do not apply to Section 11 and 12(a)(2) claims, which arise under the 1933 Act and do not require scienter. However, among the few courts that have explicitly considered the issue, more have held that the PSLRA does apply n162 than have held that it does not. n163

[d] Stay of Discovery. Section 27(b) of the 1933 Act, added as part of the PSLRA, seeks to control discovery costs. It provides that in any private action arising under the 1933 Act, including Sections 11 and 12, "all discovery and other proceedings shall be stayed during the pendency of any motion to dismiss." n164 The provision authorizes a court to permit discovery upon the motion of any party "that particularized discovery is necessary to preserve evidence or to prevent undue prejudice to that party." n165

While the stay is in place, the parties to the action are required to preserve evidence. n166 The willful failure by any party to comply with the statutory directive to preserve evidence can result in court-ordered sanctions. n167

(n27)Footnote 27. Occasionally, issuers offer unregistered securities through a private placement under Rule 144A promulgated pursuant to the 1933 Act to qualified purchasers, and subsequently offer to exchange the unregistered 144A securities for registered securities--a procedure known as an "Exxon capital exchange offer." In In re Livent, Inc. Noteholders Sec. Litig., 151 F. Supp. 2d 371, 430-31 (S.D.N.Y. 2001) , the court confronted the question of whether initial purchasers pursuant to an "Exxon capital exchange offer" are subject to underwriter liability under Section 11. Finding that the imposition of Section 11 liability on such persons would "defeat the capital market financing objectives the Rule 144A exemption was designed to achieve," "the In re Livent court held that such liability did not apply to initial purchasers of unregistered securities who were not directly involved in the preparation of the registration statement or in the subsequent exchange of their unregistered securities for registered securities. Id. at 431-32 .

(n91)Footnote 91. The leading Section 11 decision, *Escott v. The mere fact that, for example, the issuer's or underwriter's lawyer has prepared a portion or all of the registration statement does not expertise it. See, e.g., *In re New York City Shoes Sec. CHAPTER 9 Civil Liabilities under the Securities Act *

2-9 Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 9.03

§ 9.03 Section 12(a)(1) Liability for Offers and Sales of Unregistered Securities

[1] Introduction

Section 11 prohibits the filing of a misleading registration statement. Section 12(a)(1) n1 of the 1933 Act complements Section 11 by providing a private damage remedy against persons who offer or sell unregistered securities in violation of Section 5 of the Act.

A person who sells securities in violation of the registration provisions of the Securities Act is strictly liable under Section 12(a)(1). n2 Thus, as under Section 11, a Section 12(a)(1) plaintiff need not prove scienter or any other form of culpability as part of his or her affirmative case. Unlike Section 11, however, Section 12(a)(1) does not provide a due diligence defense. If the sold instruments are nonexempt securities, n3 and the transaction is not exempt from registration, n4 the seller is liable regardless of the care exercised.

Section 12(a)(1), by its terms, covers a narrower class of defendants than Section 11, only providing a remedy against a person who "offers or sells" a security. That said, the term "seller" extends not only to defendants who pass title, but also to defendants who solicit the purchase of securities. n5

[2] The Statute

In contrast to the detailed and lengthy provisions of Section 11, Section 12(a)(1) is brief. It provides:

Any person who

(1) offers or sells a security in violation of Section 5 ... shall be liable, subject to subsection (b) to the person purchasing such security from him, who may sue either at law or in equity in any court of competent jurisdiction, to recover the consideration paid for such security with interest thereon, less the amount of any income received thereon, upon the tender of such security, or for damages if he no longer owns the security.

While most Section 12(a)(1) litigation involves the offer or sale of unregistered securities in violation of Section 5(a) of the 1933 Act, Section 5 (and therefore Section 12(a)(1)) is not limited to the offer and sale of unregistered securities. n6

[3] Elements of the Action

The plaintiff's affirmative case under Section 12(a)(1) is straightforward. To state a claim, the plaintiff must prove that:

- defendants sold or offered to sell securities;
- by the use of the mails or means of interstate transportation or communication; and
- the securities were not sold pursuant to an effective registration statements. n7

Once the plaintiff has established these three basic elements, the burden then shifts to the defendant to show that the securities are exempt from the registration requirements. n8 A seller who cannot establish that the securities are exempt from registration is strictly liable regardless of whether the plaintiff relied on the seller.

[4] Plaintiff's Standing

Section 12(a)(1) limits standing to the person purchasing the security from the defendant. n9 Thus, at a minimum the plaintiff must both be a purchaser of securities, and have purchased those securities from the defendant. n10 The plaintiff's standing requirements are the same under Sections 12(a)(1) and 12(a)(2). n11

[5] Persons Liable

[a] General Standards. Section 12 imposes liability only against a person who "offers or sells a security." The key issue is the conduct that makes one a "seller" (or "offeror") within the meaning of Section 12.

Pinter v. Dahl, n12 decided by the Supreme Court in 1988, rejected long-standing lower court interpretations, both broad and restrictive, of the term "seller" under Section 12. The Court rejected the argument, accepted by a few courts, that "sellers" are limited to persons who pass title to securities. n13 The Court also rejected the view of most lower courts that the term broadly extends to persons with lesser involvement, including those who are "substantial factors," or the "proximate cause" of, or "participants" in the transaction. n14

Instead, the Supreme Court held that Section 12(a)(1) applies not only to persons who pass title, but also to persons "who solicit securities purchases," provided that they are "motivated at least in part by a desire to serve [their] own financial interests or those of the securities owner." n15 To state a claim, the plaintiff must demonstrate "not only that [the defendant] actively solicited investors, but that [the] plaintiff purchased the securities as a result of [the defendant's] solicitation. n16 The Court also made clear that remote sellers are not covered under Section 12(a)(1):

Remote purchasers are precluded from bringing actions against remote sellers. Thus, a buyer cannot recover against his seller's seller unless the remote seller solicits the purchase. n17

Neither does Section 12(a)(1) impose liability "on a person who urges the purchase but whose motivation is solely to benefit the buyer." n18 Thus, a person "who gratuitously urges another to make a particular investment decision" is not a seller. n19

Generally speaking, according to the Pinter court, Congress did not intend Section 12 primary liability to extend to "collateral participants" in an unlawful securities transaction, such as "participants in the activities leading up to the sale." n20 Indeed, unlike Section 11, Section 12 does not specifically identify such persons among those who are subject to suit. n21 The Court therefore reasoned that Section 12 is not intended to embrace "those who merely assist in another's solicitation efforts." n22 In practice, Pinter suggests considering the relationship between the defendant and purchaser rather than the degree of the defendant's involvement in the sale. n23

A "seller" within the meaning of Section 12 typically "will have sought or received a personal financial benefit from the sale, such as where he 'anticipat[es] a share of the profits,' or receives a brokerage commission." n24 However, "a person who solicits the buyer's purchase in order to serve the financial interests of the owner may properly be liable under [Section 12(a)(1)] without showing that he expects personally to participate in the benefit the owner enjoys." n25 One indication of sufficient involvement in solicitation for Section 12 liability is the defendant's control over the content of the information that potential investors receive, n26 as well as over which potential investors will be solicited. n27

Pinter declined to decide whether liability can also arise under Section 12(a)(1) for aiding and abetting. n28 The Supreme Court later resolved this issue in Central Bank of Denver v. First Interstate Bank of Denver, n29 holding that there is no liability for aiding and abetting under Sections 11 or 12. n30

[b] Specific Applications.

The sections below discuss the following categories of defendants typically named in Section 12 actions: accountants, attorneys, banks, brokers, directors, issuers, and underwriters. n31

[i] Accountants

Before Pinter, many courts had declined to dismiss accountants from Section 12 claims because, although accountants do not "sell" securities in the traditional sense, their representations about various financial matters often contribute to a plaintiff's purchasing decision. n32

Not all courts, however, took such an approach. In Ahern v. Gaussoin, n33 the court held that the accountants' preparation of portions of a registration statement alleged to be materially misleading, as well as a comment by one accountant giving the company a "clean bill of health," did not constitute sufficient participation in the sale to make the accountants sellers under Section 12. Accordingly, the court granted summary judgment to the accountants on the Section 12 claim. Similarly, in Farlow v. Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co., the court held that the mere fact that an accounting firm had not disclaimed, qualified, or footnoted allegedly misleading financial statements did not make the firm a "seller" under Section 12(a)(2). n34 And, in at least one instance, claims against accountants arising under Section 12 were dismissed by a court adhering to a strict privity approach. n35

In Pinter, the Supreme Court limited the exposure of accountants under Section 12. In most cases, the Court determined, accountants are merely "participants in the activities leading up to the sale." n36 The Court deemed this level of involvement inadequate to achieve seller status. n37 Post-Pinter cases overwhelmingly hold that accountants are not "sellers" for Section 12 purposes. n38

[ii] Attorneys

Prior to Pinter, a number of cases considered the liability of attorneys as "sellers" under Section 12. In Croy v. Campbell, n39 the court held that an attorney who introduced plaintiffs to the seller of a security and told the plaintiffs that the security was the best investment they could make from a tax standpoint was not a seller under Section 12. The court based its conclusion on the following factors:

- the attorney made no representations about the operational or construction aspects of the project and had nothing to do with the sales brochure;
- in delivering the sales brochure to the plaintiffs, the attorney acted as the purchaser's agent, not the seller's;
- the attorney did not attempt to persuade the plaintiffs to purchase the securities;

- the statement about the benefits of the investment was limited to the beneficial tax consequences; and
- the plaintiffs made their decision to invest only after obtaining independent advice, talking with the seller, and reviewing the projects themselves. n40

Conversely, some courts have included attorneys as Section 12 sellers where there was an allegation that they engaged in their own culpable behavior or that they solicited the plaintiffs to invest. Thus, in Junker v. Crory, n41 the same court that dismissed claims against an attorney in Croy v. Campbell upheld such claims where the attorney intentionally or recklessly misrepresented to the purchasers the true value of the securities and actively solicited their participation in the transaction. Similarly, in Ahern v. Gaussoin, n42 the court held that although mere performance of routine legal services would not make an attorney a seller, urging plaintiffs to invest in securities would. n43

Pinter supports these decisions. An attorney who solicits purchases is a seller, whereas an attorney who simply provides assistance to others who solicit is not a seller. n44

In practice, however, attorneys typically do not solicit purchases in the manner contemplated by Section 12, and most post-Pinter cases have dismissed Section 12 claims against attorneys. n45

[iii] Banks/Lenders

As with attorneys, banks and other lenders have been held liable under Section 12 where they actively solicited investments. In Davis v. Avco Fin. Servs., Inc., n46 for example, the manager of a finance company that was providing loans to investors to invest in a fraudulent securities scheme attended meetings of investors, provided them with blank loan application forms, represented that the investment was of good quality, and ultimately provided loans to 45 investors. The court found that the manager's participation in the selling process could be deemed sufficient to make the finance company a seller. n47

On the other hand, in In re Rexplore, Inc. Sec. Litig., n48 the court held that allegations that a lender and two insurance companies accepted the investors' promissory notes and approved the investors as participants in a private offering were insufficient to impose "seller" status. The court held that these allegations indicated that the defendants only "conducted routine ordinary business activities in providing services needed by [the company] to finalize the sales transactions." n49

Since Pinter, the court in Ryder Int'l Corp. v. First Am. Nat'l Bank n50 held that a bank that provided financial information concerning commercial paper for sale by others and mechanically executed orders to buy was not an "offeror" or a "seller" under Section 12. Ryder was distinguished in In re NBW Commercial Paper Litig., n51 which held that where a bank did solicit the purchase of commercial paper issued by its parent holding company, the bank was a Section 12 seller. In another case, Smith v. Am. Nat'l Bank and Trust Co., n52 a bank that guaranteed a dealership's overdrafts and never disclosed the dealership's problems to the plaintiff was held not to be a Section 12 seller. The court stated that the bank could not be a seller unless it "urges a prospective purchaser to buy." n53

[iv] Brokers

Brokers are among the most frequent targets of Section 12 actions. Indeed, Pinter expressly identifies brokers as potential Section 12 defendants. n54 Where a broker acts as a principal, the broker is the immediate seller under Section 12 and therefore may be liable. Indeed, post-Pinter cases have often held that brokers are sellers under Section 12. n55 Where a broker neither passes title nor makes solicitations, however, post-Pinter cases continue to hold that brokers are not sellers. n56 This is true even where the broker collects commissions on the transactions at issue. n57

[v] Directors and Officers

Directors and officers, as long as they stay one or two steps removed from the direct selling process, generally have avoided seller status under Section 12. n58 For example, in In re Activision Sec. Litig. n59 plaintiffs alleged that the directors and officers were sellers because they helped draft the allegedly misleading prospectus, participated in "roadshow" presentations of information to analysts and brokers, set the price for the securities, and negotiated fees with the underwriters. The court found that these activities were typical for a director in a public offering and that, as a matter of law, such activities were insufficient to make one a seller. n60

Conversely, in In re Craftmatic Sec. Litig., a post-Pinter appellate court decision, the court appeared to agree with the proposition that directors of a company "could be held liable under Section 12(a)(2) because they were allegedly responsible for the preparation and dissemination of the allegedly fraudulent prospectus used in the marketing of the securities and because their involvement in the solicitation process served their own financial interests." n61 Similarly, other post-Pinter cases have found officers to be proper Section 12 defendants if they prepared and disseminated an allegedly false prospectus. n62 For example, one case held that officers and directors who were managers of the consolidated partnership for which investors were being solicited and were members of the managing committee that recommended approval of the transaction could be sellers under Section 12. n63 Directors and officers can also be subject to liability as "control persons" under Section 15 for an underlying violation of Section 12(a)(2). n64 Both before and after Pinter, where directors or officers actively solicited plaintiffs to purchase securities, they have been held liable as sellers. n65

[vi] Issuers

Where an issuer directly sells its securities, it is, of course, a seller with respect to persons who purchase from it. n66 However, issuers who sell securities through a firm commitment underwriting have been held not to be sellers under Section 12 with respect to persons who purchase from the underwriter. n67 By analogy, issuers also should not be deemed sellers with respect to open market purchasers. This is supported by the Supreme Court's statement in Pinter that "a buyer cannot recover against his seller's seller." n68

On the other hand, in Craftmatic Securities Litigation, a case involving a firm commitment offering, the court stated that although an issuer's involvement in preparing the prospectus "is not, alone, sufficient to demonstrate seller status under Section 12, "direct and active participation in the solicitation of the immediate sale [may result in holding] the issuer liable as a Section 12(a)(2) seller." n69 The Craftmatic court cited, with seeming approval, cases standing for the following propositions:

- one who prepares documents for an offering is a Section 12(a)(2) seller if a commission was earned from the actual seller for persuading an investor to make a particular investment; n70
- issuers are sellers to the extent they utilize a system analogous to that of automobile manufacturers, that is, to the extent they create distribution chains and engage in intensive marketing to convince the public to purchase their securities. n71

Similarly, in Norman v. Paco Pharmaceutical Services, Inc., n72 a state court held that after Pinter an issuer and other defendants might be Section 12 sellers "if they had any role in the preparation and dissemination of the allegedly fraudulent Prospectus used to market the securities." n73

[vii] Underwriters

Underwriters are sellers with respect to the persons who purchase directly from them. n74 The issue that the courts struggled with prior to Pinter was whether lead underwriters, whose involvement in an offering is typically extensive, may be held liable to persons who purchase from other members of the underwriting syndicate. Notwithstanding the fact that the extensive involvement of lead underwriters in the entire selling effort could reasonably have led courts prior to Pinter to conclude that they were "substantial factors" or "substantial participants" in sales by the members of the underwriting syndicate, decisions before and after Pinter have limited the underwriter's Section 12 seller status to direct sales of that underwriter. n75 Underlying the courts' treatment of the lead underwriter's seller status was that Section 11(e) limits an underwriter's liability under Section 11 to the total price at which the securities underwritten by that underwriter were sold to the public. If Section 12 were interpreted to extend an underwriter's liability to securities sold by others, the Section 11(e) restriction could easily be circumvented. Pinter further supports limiting seller status to the underwriters who actually solicit purchases.

[6] Rescission and Damages

Section 12(a)(1) provides for rescission or, if the securities are no longer owned, damages. The same relief is available for Section 12(a)(2) violations. n76

[7] In Pari Delicto

In Bateman Eichler, Hill, Richards, Inc. v. Berner, n77 the Supreme Court held that the common law defense of in pari delicto--literally, "in equal fault"--applies to actions under Section 10(b) of the Exchange Act. In Pinter v. Dahl, the Supreme Court held that the defense also applies to actions under Section 12 of the Securities Act. n78

Despite its potential applicability, however, the defense is unlikely to succeed in many Section 12 cases. The first element of the in pari delicto defense requires proof that the plaintiff bears at least substantially equal responsibility for the underlying illegality. In the context of a Section 12(a)(1) violation, this is satisfied only if the plaintiff is at least equally responsible for the issuer's failure to (i) register the securities before offering them for sale or (ii) conduct the sale in such a manner as to meet the requirements for an exemption. The Supreme Court specifically stated in Pinter that "a purchaser's knowledge that the securities are unregistered cannot, by itself, constitute equal culpability, even where the investor is a sophisticated buyer who may not necessarily need the protection of the Securities Act." n79 Rather, courts must focus on the extent to which the plaintiff and the defendant cooperated in developing and carrying out the scheme to distribute unregistered securities.

The second element of the test is proof that preclusion of the suit would not offend the underlying policies of the 1933 Act. In Pinter, the Supreme Court stated that preclusion of a Section 12(a)(1) suit would interfere significantly with the policies of the securities laws if the Section 12(a)(1) plaintiff "is primarily an investor." n80 In fact, the Court stated that "even where a plaintiff actively participates in the distribution of unregistered securities, his suit should not be barred where his promotional efforts are incidental to his role as an investor." n81 These requirements negate an in pari delicto defense to a Section 12(a)(1) action except where the plaintiff's role as a promoter in the offering is equal to or greater than his role as an investor. n82 This will rarely be the case.

The in pari delicto defense is not the only potential common law defense to a Section 12 claim. In Murken v. Barrow, n83 the plaintiff sought rescission under Section 12(a)(1) on the ground that he had never received a copy of the required prospectus. The court dismissed the claim because plaintiff delayed asserting his rights by almost one year during which time the value of his shares had decreased. The court stated that the claim was barred under principles of estoppel, noting that "[t]here is nothing in the language of Section 12 or its legislative history to indicate that Congress intended to create a right enforceable in law or in equity not subject to defenses available at law or in equity to an action based on a voidable contract." n84 A Section 12 defendant has "the defenses normally available to him according to the exigencies of the particular case." n85

CHAPTER 9 Civil Liabilities under the Securities Act *

2-9 Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 9.04

§ 9.04 Section 12(a)(2)--General Civil Liability Provision

[1] Introduction

Sections 11 and 12(a)(1) essentially are limited to registration violations; the former applies to misleading registration statements and the latter to the failure to file a registration statement. Thus, both provide remedies only with respect to securities that are required to be registered. Section 12(a)(2), on the other hand, applies to both registered and unregistered securities. It supplements Section 11 by extending liability for misleading registration statements to persons who sell registered securities, regardless of whether such persons are within the categories of defendants specified by Section 11. In addition, and more importantly, it covers misrepresentations and omissions in "prospectuses" and "oral communications" even where no registration statement is required.

[2] The Statute

Section 12(a)(2) provides:

Any person who offers or sells a security (whether or not exempted by the provisions of Section 3, other than paragraphs (2) and (14) of subsection (a) thereof), by the use of any means or instruments of transportation or communication in interstate commerce or of the mails, by means of a prospectus or oral communication, which includes an untrue statement of a material fact or omits to state a material fact necessary in order to make the statements, in the light of the circumstances under which they were made, not misleading (the purchaser not knowing of such untruth or omission), and who shall not sustain the burden of proof that he did not know, and in the exercise of reasonable care could not have known, of such untruth or omissions, shall be liable subject to subsection (b), to the person purchasing such security from him, who may sue either at law or in equity in any court of competent jurisdiction, to recover the consideration paid for such security with interest thereon, less the amount of any income received thereon, upon the tender of such security, or for damages if he no longer owns the security.

[3] Plaintiff's Standing Generally

In 1995, in Gustafson v. Alloyd Co.,ⁿ¹ the Supreme Court limited Section 12 liability to "public offerings." Following that decision, courts have held that "plaintiffs have standing under Section 12(a)(2) ... only if they purchase their securities in a public offering rather than in a private transaction or in the secondary market." ⁿ²

In addition, like Section 12(a)(1), Section 12(a)(2) limits standing to the person "purchasing such security" from the defendant. Thus, at a minimum the plaintiff must both be a purchaser of securities, n3 and have purchased those securities from the defendant. On close questions, courts have generally resolved the issue in favor of standing. n4

[4] Elements of the Action

To recover under Section 12(a)(2), a plaintiff must prove that the defendant, through the mails or means of interstate commerce or transportation:

- offered or sold a security;
- by means of a prospectus or oral communication;
- which included a material misrepresentation or omission; and
- the plaintiff did not know of the untruth or omission. n5

[a] By Means of a Prospectus or Oral Communication. With the exception of government and bank securities exempt from registration under Section 3(a)(2) of the 1933 Act, Section 12(a)(2) applies to all securities, whether or not they are exempt from registration. The securities, however, must be sold "by means of" a "prospectus" or oral communication. The phrase "oral communication" is restricted to those oral communications related to a prospectus. n6 An oral communication that is innocuous when viewed in isolation may nevertheless be actionable if it is used to induce reliance on some other representation that is false or misleading. n7 Note that this is further clarified by new Rule 159, which specifies that the communication must take place on or before the date of the sale. n8

The "by means of" language does not require proof of plaintiff's reliance. n9 Indeed, a plaintiff need never have received, much less reviewed, the prospectus alleged to be misleading. Moreover, under Section 12(a)(2), "Congress shifted the risk of an intervening decline in the value of the security to defendants, whether or not that decline was actually caused by the fraud." n10 Most courts have held that the "by means of" language does require some causal connection between the prospectus or oral communication and the plaintiff's purchase. n11 Thus, where a communication is neither intended to be, nor is perceived as, instrumental in effecting a sale, recovery has been denied due to the absence of causation. n12 Further, where a defendant's allegedly violative conduct occurs after the sale, the "by means of" requirement is not satisfied. n13

The last point, that liability under Section 12(a)(2) cannot be premised upon communications to investors which take place after the time of sale, was recently re-affirmed by the SEC in its new Rule 159. n14 The flipside, however, is that corrective disclosures made after the time of sale (in a final prospectus, prospectus supplement, or other filing or communication) will not shield the issuer from liability for pre-sale misstatements. The SEC views the "time of sale" as being the time when an investor contractually commits to purchasing a security. n15 Thus, for example, if information necessary to make a pre-sale statement not misleading is contained in a final prospectus issued after an investor enters into a contract of sale, the issuer will nevertheless face liability for the misstatement under Section 12(a)(2), assuming the other elements of the statute are satisfied.

The limits of the term "prospectus" for purposes of the statute has been the subject of debate. In Gustafson v. Alloyd Co., Inc., n16 the Supreme Court held that the term "prospectus," as used throughout the 1933 Act, is limited to the type of document that Section 10 of the Act requires to be made in a public offering by an issuer or its controlling shareholders. By its holding, the Court effectively limited the applicability of Section 12(a)(2) to public offerings and eliminated Section 12(a)(2) as a remedy in secondary market transactions. n17

But the analysis does not end there. The definition of a "public offering" is itself highly fact specific and is similar to that which is employed in other contexts under the federal securities laws. Such factors that should be considered in determining whether an offer of securities is a "public offering" include: 1) the number of persons to whom the securities were offered and sold; 2) the amount of securities acquired; 3) the manner of sale; 4) the adequacy of the then available information about the issuer; and 5) the needs of the offerees at that time for the protection afforded by the registration requirements of the 1933 Act. n18 Unless it is clear that the transaction is non-public, some courts have held it is inappropriate to resolve the applicability of Section 12(a)(2) on a motion to dismiss. n19

[b] Misrepresentations or Omissions. Like other sections of the federal securities laws, Section 12(a)(2) is directed at deception through misrepresentations or omissions, not mere breaches of fiduciary duty or corporate unfairness. n20 Thus, the failure to allege misrepresentations or omissions is fatal to a Section 12(a)(2) claim. n21

[c] Materiality. Only "material" misrepresentations and omissions are actionable under Section 12(a)(2). n22 Courts use the same materiality standard under Section 12(a)(2) as they do under Section 11, namely that an omission is material if there is a substantial likelihood that "disclosure of the omitted fact would have been viewed by the reasonable investor as having significantly altered the total mix of the information made available." n23

[d] Plaintiff's Ignorance of the Untruth or Omission. Section 12(a)(2) explicitly limits recovery to persons "not knowing of such untruth or omission," and plaintiffs must affirmatively plead this lack of knowledge. The courts, however, differ on how plaintiffs may satisfy this requirement. Some older decisions have held that plaintiffs must prove "excusable" ignorance. n24 More recently, courts have held that actual ignorance is all that Section 12(a)(2) requires and that plaintiffs have no due diligence obligation of their own. n25

[5] Persons Liable

As is true under Section 12(a)(1), Section 12(a)(2) provides a remedy only against a defendant who "offers or sells" a security and only as to the plaintiff purchasing the security from the defendant. n26 In Pinter v. Dahl, n27 the Supreme Court set forth the test for seller status under Section 12(a)(1) and indicated that such principles were also relevant to Section 12(a)(2). It did not, however, decide whether the standards under Section 12(a)(1) equally applied under Section 12(a)(2). Both prior to and subsequent to the Supreme Court's decision, however, lower courts have held that the meaning of seller is the same in Section 12(a)(2) as it is in Section 12(a)(1). n28

[6] Reasonable Care Defense

In contrast to Section 11, which provides separate defenses to certain defendants depending on whether expertised or non-expertised portions of the registration statement are at issue, Section 12(a)(2) grants the same defense to every defendant. The defendant may avoid liability by proving that he or she did not know, and in the exercise of reasonable care could not have known, of the untruth or omission. n29 Some courts have been willing to resolve this reasonable care issue as a matter of law. n30

As a practical matter, the reasonable care defense available under Section 12(a)(2) is substantially similar to the due diligence defense available under Section 11 and discussed above at Section 9.02[12]. Significantly, the House Committee Report on the bill that ultimately became the 1933 Act described the defenses in Section 11 and 12 in the same way:

All who sell securities with such a flaw [a misleading statement or omission], who cannot prove that they did not know; or who in the exercise of reasonable care could not have known; of such misstatement or omission, are liable under Sections 11 and 12. n31

The Conference Report also referenced the defenses in similar language. n32

Congress' omission in Section 12(a)(2) of the "reasonable investigation" language used in parts of Section 11(b) has not prevented courts from finding that reasonable care required an investigation into the circumstances of a particular case. In Sanders v. John Nuveen & Co., the court found that an underwriter of commercial paper failed to satisfy its reasonable care defense under Section 12(a)(2) because it did not examine the issuer's tax returns, corporate minutes, or contracts and did not meet with any representatives of the auditor. n33

The defendant argued that the court was effectively imposing Section 11 standards in a Section 12 action. The court responded:

It is not at all clear that Congress intended to impose a higher standard of care under Section 11 than under [Section 12(a)(2)]; in the circumstances of this case, the reasonable care standard required the reasonable investigation. n34

The court went on to state that "[s]ince what constitutes reasonable care under Section 12(a)(2) depends upon the circumstances, we, of course, do not intimate that the duty of a seller under Section 12(a)(2) is always the same as that of an underwriter in a registered offering under Section 11." n35 Other courts have also concluded that defendants failed to establish a reasonable care defense under Section 12(a)(2) because they failed to make the inquiry that would have put them on notice (particularly where "warning signals" existed). n36

One appellate decision suggests that the reasonable care standard under Section 12 may vary according to at least five factors:

- the amount of planning and promotional participation by the defendant;
- the defendant's access to source data;
- the relative skill of the defendant and plaintiff in ferreting out the truth;
- the defendant's pecuniary interest in the completion of the transaction; and
- the existence of a relationship of trust and confidence between the plaintiff and the defendant. n37

Thus, the same factors that courts look at in determining whether a Section 11 defendant's investigation was reasonable inform a reasonable care inquiry under Section 12(a)(2).

[7] Rescission and Damages

Section 12 provides alternative forms of recovery. A plaintiff who still owns the security may obtain rescission, consisting of "the consideration paid for such security with interest thereon, less the amount of any income received thereon" n38 A party seeking rescission must make a demand promptly upon learning of the misrepresentation. n39 On the other hand, a plaintiff no longer owning the security may obtain "damages." n40 In contrast to Section 11, n41 Section 12 does not itself specify the measure of damages.

[a] Tender of Security. Section 12 conditions rescission upon tender of the security. n42 It prescribes no time for tender, and the courts have often been generous in finding that the tender requirement has been satisfied. Thus, a rescission demand under Section 12 has been held to constitute an implicit tender. n43 A recitation in the complaint that a tender is being made "subject only to the condition that the defendants pay in full any judgment that plaintiff may acquire" has also been held to be sufficient. n44 Such recitation, however, must be "explicit." n45

[b] Offset. Section 12 provides that, upon tender, the defendant must refund the consideration paid for the security "less the amount of any income received thereon." n46 At a minimum, the "income received thereon" includes dividend income paid to the plaintiff. n47 In Randall v. Loftsgaarden, n48 the Supreme Court resolved a split among the circuits and held that tax savings to the purchaser could not be offset under Section 12(a)(2).

[8] Indemnification and Contribution

Courts have generally held that a party who is subject to a dispositive finding of liability cannot bring a claim for indemnification under the 1933 Act. n49

However, courts have widely held that there is an implied right to contribution under the federal securities laws, n50 although, relying on Supreme Court cases rejecting implied contribution claims under other federal statutes, some courts have held that there is no right to contribution under Section 12(a)(2). n51 Moreover, in Pinter v. Dahl, n52 the Supreme Court observed that unlike Section 11, Section 12 contains no express right of contribution, and Justice Stevens (in dissent) specifically drew attention to the Court's decisions declining to recognize an implied right to contribution in other statutes that are silent on the issue. n53 The Court, however, did not decide the issue. In Musick, Peeler & Garrett v. Employer's Ins. of Wausau, n54 the Supreme Court found an implied right of contribution under Section 10(b). Unlike Section 12(a)(2), however, Section 10(b) is an implied cause of action. In the case of an implied cause of action, the Supreme Court looks to analogous express causes of action to determine the elements of the implied claim. In the case of an express cause of action, however, the fact that other express causes of action contain rights of contribution may suggest that Congress' omission of a right of contribution under Section 12(a)(2) reflects an intent not to permit contribution under that section. Thus, even after Musick, it may still be argued that the absence of a provision for contribution in Section 12(a)(2) evidences an intent not to permit contribution under that section.

CHAPTER 9 Civil Liabilities under the Securities Act *

2-9 Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 9.05

§ 9.05 Statute of Limitations-Section 13

[1] Introduction

Section 13 provides the statute of limitations applicable to Sections 11, 12(a)(1), and 12(a)(2). For each section, there is a one-year and a three-year limitation period. Section 13's one-year and three-year limitation periods are cumulative rather than alternative. n1 This means suit must be brought within both the one-year period and the three-year period. After quoting the text of the statute, we discuss the pleading requirements applicable to the statute of limitations. We then describe the circumstances that trigger the commencement of the statute for each of the Sections. We then discuss tolling of the statute of limitations.

One issue that has arisen in connection with Section 13 is the extent to which the Sarbanes-Oxley Act of 2002 changed the statute of limitations applicable to claims under the 1933 Act. This issue will be addressed in Section 9.05[4].

[2] The Statute

Specifically, Section 13 provides as follows:

No action shall be maintained to enforce any liability under Section 11 or Section 12(a)(2) unless brought within one year after the discovery of the untrue statement or the omission, or after such discovery should have been made by the exercise of reasonable diligence, or, if the action is to enforce a liability created under Section 12(a)(1), unless brought within one year after the violation upon which it is based. In no event shall any such action under Section 11 or Section 12(a)(1) be brought more than three years after the security was bona fide offered to the public, or under Section 12(a)(2) more than three years after the sale.

[3] Pleading Requirements

Compliance with the statute of limitations generally is regarded an affirmative part of the plaintiff's case. n2 Courts require that the plaintiff set forth the time and circumstances of the discovery of the fraudulent statements, the reason why discovery was not made earlier if more than one year has elapsed since the fraudulent conduct occurred, and the diligent efforts that plaintiff undertook in making or seeking such discovery. n3 These courts consider the statute of limitations not merely a procedural requirement; failure to meet the requirements of Section 13 can thus result in a dismissal as a matter of law. n4

Conclusory allegations that the defendant concealed the fraud, n5 or that the plaintiff did not and could not have discovered the violations within one year of the complaint, or that plaintiff exercised due diligence and was lulled into a false sense of security because of a fiduciary relationship with the defendant n6 are usually considered insufficient to satisfy the plaintiff's pleading and proof requirements. Instead, due diligence requires plaintiffs to make a reasonable inquiry about their investment and to take affirmative steps to inform themselves of the facts. n7

Some courts are very careful to distinguish the plaintiff's pleading requirements from the plaintiff's ultimate burden. For example, the Seventh Circuit noted that "although courts ... commonly entertain statute of limitations defenses that have been submitted under the guise of a 'motion to dismiss,' such defenses are technically affirmative defenses under Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(c); and the pleading of an affirmative defense does not relieve a defendant from the obligation of answering the allegations of the complaint." n8

[4] Commencement of the Statute

When the statute of limitations commences depends on the type of action brought and the limitation being examined.

[a] Section 11.

Section 11 actions must be brought within one year after the discovery of the untrue statement or the omission, or after such discovery should have been made by the exercise of reasonable diligence, and no more than three years after the security was bona fide offered to the public. n9

[i] One-Year Period. The one year limitation period begins to run at the earlier of when the purchaser (i) actually discovered the untrue statement or omission, or (ii) should have discovered the untrue statement or omission by the exercise of reasonable diligence. Courts generally hold that the plaintiff should have discovered the untruth when he or she has enough information to place him on "inquiry notice" (i.e., enough notice that a reasonable person would diligently investigate further). n10 This is an objective test.

Some items, so-called "storm warnings," are sufficient, as a matter of law, to constitute inquiry notice:

- publication of news articles and analysts' reports; n11
- precipitous stock slides or other indication of poor performance inconsistent with a defendant's representations; n12
- receipt of a Schedule K-1 tax form showing that cash distributions and tax losses on an investment were different than the distributions and losses represented by a broker; n13
- disclosure of a major regulatory action; n14
- information contained in the prospectus; n15
- the suspension of trading in the issuer's stock; n16
- notice that the issuer has filed for reorganization in bankruptcy; n17 and
- defaulting on interest payments. n18

The court in In re CBT Group PLC Securities Litigation noted that the cumulative effect of more than one event can provide enough information to trigger the statute of limitations. n19 The full extent of the fraud need not have been uncovered to trigger Section 13. "An investor need not have notice of the full extent of the fraud or misstatements to be put on inquiry notice." n20

There is a split of authority among the federal circuit courts as to what constitutes inquiry notice. In particular, the circuit courts disagree on whether evidence merely suggesting the possibility of a misstatement is sufficient to trigger the duty to investigate, or whether the plaintiff must be on notice of facts supporting all elements of a fraud claim, including scienter. n21 This precise issue is currently before the Supreme Court in In re Merck & Co., Inc. Securities, Derivative & "ERISA" Litigation. n22

Plaintiffs charged with a duty of investigation arising from inquiry notice may not satisfy that duty "merely [by relying] on reassurances given by management." n23

Courts often decide inquiry notice on summary judgment motions, n24 and sometimes decide the issue on motions to dismiss. n25 Some courts, however, have held that whether a plaintiff exercised reasonable diligence in investigating a fraud claim is a question of fact for the jury. n26

[ii] Three-Year Period. Section 11 actions must also be brought within three years of the bona fide offering of the security to the public. Most courts hold that this means when the securities were first offered to the public. n27 A few courts, however have held that the statute begins to run only after the securities were last offered to the public, n28 or even when the securities were first offered to the plaintiff. n29 The three year limit is absolute. n30

[b] Section 12(a)(1).

A Section 12(a)(1) action must be brought within one year of the violation upon which it is based and no more than three years after the security was bona fide offered to the public. n31

[i] One-Year Period. The one-year period begins to run when the Section 5 violation on which it is based occurs. A Section 5 violation may involve an illegal offer, an illegal sale, and/or an illegal delivery. Since the use of the mails or other means of interstate commerce to sell, confirm the sale, or deliver an unregistered security violates Section 12(a)(1), the statute ordinarily begins to run from the latest of these dates. n32 Some courts hold that the statute begins to run at the time the mail is used "to complete any integral stage of the sale of an unregistered security, including remittance of the funds for purchase." n33 The Eleventh Circuit, for example, held that even though the plaintiffs filed suit more than one year after they became committed to purchase unregistered securities and more than one year after the defendant accepted the plaintiffs' offer to buy, the suit was timely because it was brought within one year of the time the defendants made use of the means of interstate commerce to transfer the purchase price of securities from the escrow account. n34

Where the only violation alleged is an unlawful sale, one court has held that the statute begins to run on the date of the defendant's last sales-related activity. n35 Other courts have held that it begins to run when the plaintiff purchased his securities. n36 Another has held that it begins to run from the time the offer to purchase is accepted. n37 Where the purchaser of the securities pays for the securities through installment payments, it has been held that the sale is complete for statute of limitations purposes once a firm agreement to sell is reached even though the actual payments are made later. n38 Where multiple purchases of unregistered securities are involved, the action may be barred as to some purchases but not others. n39

[ii] Three-Year Period. Like Section, 11, Section 12(a)(1) actions must be brought within three years of the bona fide offering of the security to the public. Since Section 12(a)(1) complaints are usually predicated on an allegation that the securities should have been but were not registered, it may be asked how a party can claim that such securities could have been "bona fide" offered to the public for purposes of starting the running of the statute of limitations purposes.

One court has held that the three-year limitation period does not apply to Section 12(a)(1) actions alleging the sale of unregistered securities because such securities were not bona fide offered to the public. n40 Others, however, have concluded that the term "bona fide" does not mean compliance with registration requirements, but rather that the term merely means an offering "that the issuer is prepared to honor," n41 or a genuine offering of securities. n42 A plaintiff who purchases an unregistered security more than three years after the security is first offered to the public may find that his or her claim under Section 12(a)(1) was barred by the statute of limitations even before acquisition of the security. n43

[c] Section 12(a)(2)

A plaintiff must bring a Section 12(a)(2) claim within one year after the discovery of the untrue statement or the omission, or after such discovery should have been made by the exercise of reasonable diligence, or no more than three years after the sale. n44

[i] One-Year Period The one-year statute of limitations for Section 12(a)(2) actions is the same as that for Section 11. n45

[ii] Three-Year Period A Section 12(a)(2) action also must be brought within three years of the sale of the particular security. Generally, a purchase or sale is deemed to occur on the date that a party enters into a binding commitment to undertake a securities transaction. n46 In certain circumstances, however, it is difficult to determine exactly when a sale took place. For example, where the purchaser possesses the power to terminate the agreement prior to full performance, he or she may be viewed as making a new investment decision at each point at which he or she chooses to go forward, and each such investment decision may be viewed as a separate sale and purchase. n47 This is referred to as the investment decision doctrine. Not all courts have been willing to apply the investment decision doctrine to statute of limitation issues under Section 12(a)(2). n48

A few courts have used the "integrated offering" doctrine which was initially articulated by the SEC as a basis for determining whether an offering of securities should be regarded as separate or part of a larger offering for registration purposes. Under this doctrine, separate offerings of securities may be integrated depending on whether:

- they are part of a single plan of financing;
- they involve issuance of the same class of securities;
- they were made at or about the same time;
- the same type of consideration was received; and
- the offerings were made for the same general purpose. n49

Where the integrated offering doctrine is applied and the offerings are integrated, the statute of limitations may not begin to run as to any of the sales until the plaintiff makes the last purchasing decision in the integrated offering. n50 Although some courts have applied the integration doctrine to statute of limitations decisions under Section 13, the only appellate court to reach the issue concluded that the doctrine may not be used to extend the statute of limitations. n51 The court explained, "[t]he concept of integrating sales and offerings was developed by the Securities and Exchange Commission in a totally different context and for the totally different purpose of determining whether the effect of multiple sales on the marketplace merits regulation or exemption from registration, and it has no application to the commencement of the statute of limitations." n52

[5] Absence of Tolling

The one-year limitation period for Sections 11 and 12(a)(2) is based on when discovery of the untruth or omission was made or "should have been made." In contrast, the three-year periods for each section and the one-year period for Section 12(a)(1) actions contain no "should have" language. One question that arises is whether the limitation periods are nevertheless tolled until the plaintiff should have known of the violation.

Almost all the courts that have considered the issue have held that the three-year period cannot be tolled for any of the actions. n53 This is consistent with the statutory language that "in no event" may the action be brought outside the three-year period. With respect to the one-year limitation period for Section 12(a)(1) actions, there is no language comparable to the "in no event" language applicable to the three-year periods. Some courts nevertheless have held that there can be no tolling, n54 while others have held that this one-year period can be tolled. n55

It is also important to note that, with respect to claims or defenses not raised in the original complaint which are added later, these claims or defenses may be held to "relate back" to the date of the original complaint for statute of limitations purposes. n56

[6] Statute of Limitations under the Sarbanes-Oxley Act

As part of the sweeping reforms enacted pursuant to the Sarbanes-Oxley Act of 2002, Congress amended the statutes of limitations applicable to securities fraud claims. Specifically, in Section 804 of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act, Congress lengthened the period of time after discovery of the facts constituting a violation from one year to two years, and lengthened the period of time after a violation in which a claim must be brought from three years to five years. n57

The amended statute of limitations is, by its terms, limited to claims of "fraud, deceit, manipulation, or contrivance in contravention of a regulatory requirement concerning the securities laws, as defined in Section 3(a)(47) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934" n58 Section 3(a)(47) of the 1934 Act, in turn, defines "securities laws" to include the Securities Act of 1933. n59 Accordingly, even though the only "private rights of action" available under the 1933 Act--Sections 11, 12, and 15--do not, on their face, require fraud as an element, some courts have held that application of the longer statute of limitations enacted by Sarbanes-Oxley to claims under the 1933 Act depends on whether the claims include allegations of fraud, deceit, manipulation, or contrivance. n60

As a practical matter, therefore, one must consider whether claims brought nominally under Sections 11, 12, or 15 of the Securities Act are subject to the old one year to three years statute of limitations or the new two year to five years statute, based upon whether the claims are supported by allegations of fraud, deceit, manipulation, or contrivance, as such claims often are. This consideration is especially important in jurisdictions, such as the Second Circuit, which have held that allegations pursuant to Sections 11 and 12 of the 1933 Act that "sound in fraud" are subject to the particularity requirement of Rule 9(b). After all, defendants who benefit from the more stringent pleading requirements of Rule 9(b), as applied to 1933 Act claims, should expect as the flipside of such a benefit the more lax limitations period applicable to fraud claims under the securities laws. n61

CHAPTER 9 Civil Liabilities under the Securities Act *

2-9 Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 9.06

§ 9.06 Absence of Implied Right of Action under Section 17(a)

Section 17(a) of the Securities Act applies to secondary market transactions in a company's securities, as well as public offerings and private placements, and makes it unlawful for any person in the offer or sale of securities:

- (1) To employ any device, scheme, or artifice to defraud; or

- (2) To obtain money or property by means of any untrue statement of a material fact or any omission to state a material fact necessary in order to make the statements made, in light of the circumstances under which they were made, not misleading; or

- (3) To engage in any transaction, practice, or course of business which operates or would operate as a fraud or deceit upon the purchaser. n1

Section 17(a) is a general antifraud provision, similar to Section 10(b) of the Securities Exchange Act and Rule 10b-5 thereunder. n2 Although the elements of a Section 17(a) claim are similar to the elements for Rule 10b-5, there are some important differences. For example, scienter is not required for an action under Section 17(a)(2) or (3), although it is required to establish a violation of Section 17(a)(1). n3 Further, some commentators have found that Section 17(a)'s "in the offer or sale" requirement may be broader than Section 10(b)'s "in connection with the purchase or sale requirement." n4

Another important difference is that courts have consistently held that there is no implied private right of action under Section 17(a). n5 Although the Supreme Court has not reached the issue, it is highly likely that the Court would refuse to find an implied private right of action under Section 17(a). For example, in Transamerica Mortgage Advisors, Inc. v. Lewis, n6 the Court held that Section 206 of the Investment Advisers Act of 1940, which contains language closely following that of Section 17(a), did not confer an implied private right of action. In reaching its decision, the Court, noting that "what must ultimately be determined is whether Congress intended to create the private remedy asserted," relied on the "elemental canon of statutory construction that where a statute expressly provides a particular remedy or remedies, a court must be chary of reading others into it." n7 Since the Investment Advisers Act expressly provides for criminal prosecutions and administrative enforcement of Section 206 (just as the 1933 Act provides for criminal prosecutions and administrative enforcement of Section 17(a)), the Court concluded: "In view of these express provisions for enforcing the duties imposed by § 206, it is highly improbable that Congress absentmindedly forgot to mention an intended private action." n8 The Court similarly deduced, from Congress' express provision for private damages actions under other securities laws, that the absence of such express provision under Section 206 demonstrated an intent not to imply such remedies under that statute. "Obviously," the Court noted, "when Congress wished to provide a private damage remedy, it knew how to do so and did so expressly." n9

Five months prior to the Transamerica decision the Court decided Touche Ross & Co. v. Redington. n10 In Redington, the Supreme Court held that the broker-dealer record-keeping provisions of Section 17(a) of the Securities Exchange Act do not confer a private right of action. The Court viewed the fact that Section 17(a) of the Securities Exchange Act (like Section 17(a) of the 1933 Act) is "flanked by provisions ... that explicitly grant private causes of action" n11 as evidence that Congress did not intend to create a similar right under that particular provision." Likewise, many of the provisions surrounding Section 17(a) of the 1933 Act explicitly confer private rights of action. n12 (n12)Footnote 12. The wording and legislative history of the 1933 Act also weigh against finding a private right of action under Section 17(a). The statutory scheme of the 1933 Act, which provides comprehensive private damage remedies under Sections 11 and 12, is strong proof that additional private damage remedies should not be read into the statute. When describing the specific sections that would give rise to civil liability under the 1933 Act, Congress stated only that "Sections 11 and 12 create and define the civil liabilities imposed by the act," H.R. Rep. No. 73-85, at 9-10 (1933), with no mention of Section 17.

CHAPTER 9 Civil Liabilities under the Securities Act *

2-9 Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 9.07

§ 9.07 Arbitration of Securities Act Claims

In 1989, in Rodriguez de Quijas v. Shearson/Am. Express, Inc.,ⁿ¹ the Supreme Court overruled a thirty-six year old precedent by holding that predispute agreements to arbitrate 1933 Act claims are enforceable. The Court explained that its prior anti-arbitration stance was wrongly predicated on a "judicial hostility" that has "fallen far out of step with our current strong endorsement of the federal statutes favoring this method of resolving disputes." ⁿ² Rodriguez essentially harmonized the treatment of Securities Act arbitration claims with those made pursuant to the Exchange Act. ⁿ³

The increasing application of arbitration clauses to securities claims has led to an upgrading of the arbitration rules issued by the New York Stock Exchange, the American Stock Exchange, and the Financial Industry Regulatory Authority ("FINRA"), which replaced the National Association of Securities Dealers, Inc. ("NASD"). These changes established minimum qualifications for so-called "public arbitrators," compelled arbitrators to disclose background information and potential conflicts of interest, provided broader discovery rights, required that a record be made of each arbitration hearing, and expanded the content and public availability of arbitration awards. Five days before the Rodriguez decision, the Securities Exchange Commission announced its approval of these modifications. ⁿ⁴

Because the Court did not expressly address the 1933 Act, however, a number of lower courts had continued to hold that agreements to arbitrate claims under the Securities Act remained unenforceable. In conjunction, the Court made clear that both Securities Act and Exchange Act claims are subject to mandatory arbitration agreements.

CHAPTER 9 Civil Liabilities under the Securities Act *

2-9 Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 9.08

§ 9.08 Class Actions

[1] Introduction

No discussion of the 1933 Act's civil liability provisions would be complete without some mention of the class action. Courts routinely have accepted class actions as a bona fide method for redressing securities law violations. n1 As one court has stated, "[j]udicial sentiment overwhelmingly favors utilizing the expedient of class representation for plaintiffs claiming securities law violations." n2 Whether or not justified, the approach followed by many courts is that "in a doubtful case any error should be committed in favor of allowing the securities class action." n3

[2] Requirements

[a] PSLRA Requirements

Before a class may be certified, the plaintiff must satisfy the requirements of Section 27(a) of the 1933 Act, added as part of the PSLRA in 1995. Section 27(a) sets forth the procedure for the selection of the lead plaintiff who will serve as representative of the class.

Under Section 27(a)(2), each plaintiff seeking to serve as class representative must file with complaint a signed and sworn certification that:

- states that the plaintiff has reviewed the complaint and authorized its filing;
- states that the plaintiff did not purchase the security that is the subject of the complaint at the direction of plaintiff's counsel or in order to participate in any private action arising under the 1933 Act;
- states that the plaintiffs is willing to serve as a representative party on behalf of a class, including providing testimony at deposition and trial, if necessary;
- sets forth all of the transactions of the plaintiff in the security that is the subject of the complaint during the class period specified in the complaint;
- identifies any other action under the 1933 Act filed within three years of the date on which the certification is signed by the plaintiff, in which the plaintiff has sought to serve, or has served, as a representative party on behalf of a class; and

- states that the plaintiff will not accept any payment for serving as a class representative beyond the plaintiff's pro rata share of any recovery, except as ordered or approved by the court.

Section 27(a)(2)(B) clarifies that the certification shall not constitute a waiver of the attorney-client privilege.

Beyond the required certification, Section 27(a)(3) sets forth the procedure for the appointment of the lead plaintiff. Specifically, within 20 days of the filing of the complaint, the plaintiffs must provide notice to members of the purported class, in a "widely circulated national business-oriented publication or wire service," n4 (1) of the pendency of the action, the claims asserted therein, and the purported class period, and (2) that within 60 days of the notice, any member of the purported class may move the court to serve as lead plaintiff. n5 Within 90 days of the notice, the court is to appoint a lead plaintiff (from among those moving the court for such designation) that the court determines to be "most capable of adequately representing the interests of class members." n6 The selected lead plaintiff, subject to the approval of the court, is to select and retain counsel to represent the class. n7

In selecting the lead plaintiff, the court applies a rebuttable presumption that the "most adequate plaintiff" is the person or group that has the "largest financial interest in the relief sought by the class." n8 This presumption may be rebutted only by evidence that the purported class representative "will not fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class" or "is subject to unique defenses that render such plaintiff incapable of adequately representing the class." n9 Plaintiffs seeking to rebut the presumption are permitted discovery to support their objection, but only upon demonstrating a "reasonable basis" for their contention that the presumptive lead plaintiff "is incapable of adequately representing the class." n10

Unless otherwise permitted by the court, no person may serve as lead plaintiff (or as an officer, director, or fiduciary of a lead plaintiff) in more than 5 securities class actions brought under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure during any 3-year period. n11

Courts have highlighted the importance of judicial involvement in the selection of lead plaintiffs and lead counsel. In In re Razorfish, Inc. Sec. Litig., Judge Rakoff of the Southern District of New York acknowledged that "securities class litigation continues to be lawyer-driven in material respects and the reforms Congress contemplated in the Reform Act can be achieved, if at all, only with some help from the courts." n12 In Razorfish, Judge Rakoff rejected lead plaintiff bids by three competing groups, each of which he labeled "an artifice cobbled together by cooperating counsel for the obvious purpose of creating a large enough grouping of investors to qualify as 'lead plaintiff'" n13 Selecting one, he held, would "allow and encourage lawyers to direct the litigation." n14 Instead, he chose from the competing "groups" the institutional investor with the greatest purported loss and ordered that it fulfill its own fiduciary duty to select lead counsel as required by the PSLRA. The Fifth Circuit in Berger v. Compaq Computer Corp. became the first appellate court to endorse this active role mandated by the PSLRA for the courts to ensure that lead plaintiffs are capable of directing the litigation. The Berger court determined that "because absent class members are conclusively bound by the judgment in any class action brought on their behalf, the court must be especially vigilant to ensure that the due process rights of all class members are safeguarded through adequate representation at all times." n15

Courts have also taken a more active role in the selection of counsel for lead plaintiffs in securities class actions. Thus, some courts have rejected lead plaintiffs' selections of counsel where they found that the lead plaintiffs had failed to discharge their duty to retain counsel on terms favorable to the class. n16 To this end, some courts have adopted a competitive bidding process for the selection of lead counsel, theorizing that this approach balances the PSLRA's desire to have the lead plaintiff select lead counsel with the class objective of securing cost-effective representation for the class through a competitive selection process. n17 The position is by no means universally accepted, however. At least one appellate court has held the auction approach to be "inappropriate in the typical [PSLRA] case." n18 Instead, as another court has held, "modest intervention," unlike an auction system, "is fully consistent with the mandate of the Reform Act that the lead plaintiff's selection and retention of counsel be subject to a court approval." n19

Finally, courts recently have considered the role of defendants in the selection process for lead plaintiffs and counsel. Not surprisingly, courts have taken differing positions on this issue. Thus, courts precluding defendants from being heard generally cite to the PSLRA's procedural rules that permit only purported class members to seek lead plaintiff appointment. n20 Decisions permitting defendants to address the issue tend to reference a belief that courts benefit from hearing all views, regardless of whether defendants have official standing. n21 Other courts have expressed a belief that whether defendants should be heard depends on the nature of the objections raised, i.e., whether the objections pertained to procedural irregularities or were merely directed to the choice of lead counsel. n22

[b] Rule 23 Requirements

In addition to the PSLRA, the purported class must also comply with Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23. Rule 23 requires a party seeking class certification to demonstrate that:

- the class is so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable;
 - there are questions of law or fact common to the class;
 - the claims or defenses of the representative parties are typical of the claims or defenses of the class;
- and
- the representative parties will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class.

In addition, class representatives are obligated to satisfy one of Rule 23(b)'s three subsections. Thus, the representative must demonstrate either that:

- (1) the prosecution of separate actions by or against individual members of the class would create a risk of (a) inconsistent or varying adjudications with respect to individual members of the class which would establish incompatible standards of conduct for the party opposing the class, or (b) adjudications with respect to individual members of the class which would as a practical matter be dispositive of the interests of the other members not parties to the adjudications or substantially impair or impede their ability to protect their interests;
- (2) the party opposing the class has acted or refused to act on grounds generally applicable to the class, thereby making appropriate final injunctive relief or corresponding declaratory relief with respect to the class as a whole; or
- (3) questions of law or fact common to the members of the class predominate over any questions affecting only individual members, and a class action is superior to other available methods for the fair and efficient adjudication of the controversy.

Most securities class actions are brought under the third of these requirements, 26(b)(3), which requires a showing that questions of law or fact predominate over individual questions, and that the class action is superior to other methods for the fair and efficient adjudication of the controversy. n23

[3] Numerosity

The requirement that a class be so numerous that joinder of all members is impractical rarely poses an obstacle to class certification in securities cases. In fact, "[n]umerosity is generally presumed when a claim involves nationally traded securities." n24 Because courts are reluctant to establish rigid rules for making numerosity determinations, n25 they usually rely on common sense when deciding if joinder is inconvenient. n26 Factors courts commonly consider include: (1) the nature of the action; (2) the size of the individual claims; (3) the inconvenience of trying individual suits; and (4) the ease with which class members can be identified. n27 When attempting to prove numerosity, a class representative need not provide the precise number or identity of the class members. n28 All that is required is a good faith estimate of class size. n29

[4] Commonality

Like numerosity, the commonality requirement generally is easy to establish in securities class actions. n30 Commonality does not require that class members share identical claims, it only mandates that at least one important question of law or fact exist that affects all members of the class. n31 In a securities case, the requirement usually is satisfied by an allegation that all members of the class were deceived by similar misrepresentations or omissions, and that they have a right to recover under a common theory of liability. n32

[5] Typicality

The typicality requirement focuses on whether the representative's claims or defenses are of the same general nature as those held by the class at large. n33 In other words:

[T]here must be a nexus between the class representative's claims or defenses and the common questions of fact or law which unite the class. A sufficient nexus is established if the claims or defenses of the class and the class representative arise from the same event or pattern or practice and are based on the same legal theory. Typicality, however, does not require identical claims or defenses. A factual variation will not render a class representative's claim atypical unless the factual position of the representative markedly differs from that of other members of the class. n34

This requirement tends to overlap the predominance factor discussed below. At least in Section 11 and 12(a)(2) litigation, a failure to demonstrate typicality rarely results in the denial of class certification, but may result in limiting the class. n35

Like the requirements discussed above, typicality is not a difficult obstacle to overcome in securities class actions. n36 As one court stated: "[t]he typicality requirement should be construed broadly. 'Differences in the amount of damage, the size or manner of [stock] purchase, the nature of the purchaser, and even the specific document influencing the purchase will not render a claim atypical in most securities cases.'" n37

In Vitiello v. Cicconi (In re Data Access Sys. Sec. Litig.), n38 the defendants urged that the claims of 13 of 15 purported class representatives were atypical because they admitted that they did not rely on the company's allegedly false financial statements or prospectus. The court rejected this argument, stating that "differing types of reliance are present in almost every securities class action" and if "factual differences of this nature were sufficient to defeat class action certification, there could never be a class action of securities purchasers." n39

Moreover, with respect to a Section 11 subclass, the court held that a plaintiff who purchased stock directly from an underwriter in the initial public offering could represent persons who purchased in the aftermarket, as well as persons who purchased after the company's 12-month earnings statement was issued, and thus had a significantly more difficult burden of proving reliance. The court stated that it saw "no compelling analytic difference between those cases in which each plaintiff must prove that he or she relied and the present case where some plaintiffs will have to prove reliance and some will not." n40

[6] Adequacy

The adequacy requirement assures that a class representative fairly and adequately protects the interests of the class. Generally, adequacy exists if: "(1) the named representative [does] not have antagonistic or conflicting interests with the unnamed members of the class, and (2) the representative appears able to vigorously prosecute the interests of the class through qualified counsel." n41 A number of factors may persuade a court to deny class certification on adequacy grounds. Some examples include: class representatives being subject to a unique defense, n42 class representatives' ignorance of the case, n43 and class representatives' having not themselves purchased securities from defendants. n44

[7] Predominance

Although predominance is closely linked to commonality, the requirement forces the named plaintiffs to meet a much more demanding burden of proof. n45 The class representative must demonstrate that issues subject to generalized proof, and thus applicable to the class as a whole, are superior to those subject only to individualized proof. n46 The purpose of the predominance requirement is to measure whether a class is sufficiently cohesive to warrant certification. n47

Each predominance determination turns on the facts of the particular case. If the communications that are the subject of the securities fraud action are similar, then common issues about the accuracy of the statement and its materiality likely will predominate. Therefore, when a claim is based on a single allegedly misleading written document or small class of documents, the predominance standard usually is satisfied. n48 If, however, the communications are dissimilar, i.e. contained in non-standardized oral communications, predominance is less easily established. n49

[8] Superiority

For class certification to be granted, a class action must be superior to other means of adjudicating a plaintiff's claims. Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(b)(3) provides a nonexhaustive list of factors to consider when conducting a superiority inquiry. n50 These include: (1) the interest of members of the class in individually controlling the prosecution or defense of separate actions; (2) the extent and nature of any litigation concerning the controversy already commenced by or against members of the class; (3) the desirability or undesirability of concentrating the litigation of the claims in the particular forum; and (4) the difficulties likely to be encountered in the management of a class action. n51 Because securities litigation is usually characterized by a vast geographical dispersion of plaintiffs, representing a wide range of investment interests, class actions frequently are held to be superior to individual suits. n52

[9] Removal

Section 22(a) provides for concurrent state and federal jurisdiction over Securities Act claims. Pursuant to that section, claims arising under Sections 11 or 12 may be brought in either state or federal court, and claims brought in state court may not be removed to federal court. While seemingly straightforward, this provision has led to substantial uncertainty when viewed alongside other federal statutes governing jurisdiction and removal of class action claims.

The confusion results, in part, from ambiguity as to the scope of the Securities Litigation Uniform Standards Act of 1998 ("SLUSA"), n53 which governs class actions based on state law and alleging fraud in connection with the purchase or sale of a "covered security." n54 The purpose of SLUSA was to federalize securities class actions in order to prevent class action plaintiffs from avoiding the stringent pleading standards and discovery stay provisions of the PSLRA by bringing securities class actions in state court under state blue sky laws. Under SLUSA, class actions brought in state court alleging fraud in connection with the purchase or sale of a covered security are removable to federal court, where they become subject to SLUSA preemption. SLUSA also included a conforming amendment to Section 22(a), providing that Securities Act claims are not removable "except as provided in [SLUSA]." n55 actions brought in state court alleging fraud in connection with covered securities are removable, or only those that are based on state law. Some courts, relying on the plain language of Section 16(b), have held that SLUSA is expressly limited to state law claims, and thus Securities Act class actions are not removable under SLUSA. n56 However, other courts have held that Securities Act class actions involving covered securities are removable under SLUSA, despite the wording of Section 16(b), reasoning that if SLUSA's removal provision applied only to state law claims (and Securities Act claims were not removable), then the amendment to Section 22(a) would be meaningless. n57 One way to reconcile these interpretations would be to view SLUSA as allowing for removal of class actions that assert both federal and state law securities fraud claims (which would result in dismissal of the state law claims and litigation of the federal claims in federal court), but not class actions asserting only federal claims. n58

Courts and commentators have found SLUSA's removal provision ambiguous, insofar as it is unclear whether all class

Adding to the confusion is the Class Action Fairness Act of 2005 (CAFA), which provides a uniform basis for removal of all class actions that meet certain requirements. n59 Although class actions involving "covered securities" are exempt from CAFA, n60 class action claims arising under the Securities Act that do not involve covered securities are seemingly subject to its removal provisions, despite Section 22(a)'s bar on removal. As discussed above in Section 9.02[15][a], there is a split of authority among federal circuit courts as to whether Section 22(a)'s removal bar was superseded by CAFA. n61 This split of authority exacerbates the uncertainty already existing with respect to SLUSA's removal provision. The result is that, depending upon the jurisdiction, a Securities Act class action may be removable under SLUSA but not CAFA (if it involves a covered security), n62 or under CAFA but not SLUSA (if it does not involve a covered security), n63 or may not be removable under either statute. n64

CHAPTER 10 SEC Enforcement Practice *

2-10 Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 10.01

§ 10.01 The Securities and Exchange Commission

The U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission ("SEC" or "Commission") is responsible for civil enforcement of the federal securities laws: the Securities Act of 1933 (the "Securities Act"); n1 the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (the "Exchange Act"); n2 the Investment Company Act of 1940 (the "Investment Company Act"); n3 and the Investment Advisers Act of 1940 (the "Investment Advisers Act"). n4 As with the other federal securities laws, the SEC has broad authority to conduct investigations regarding possible violations of the Securities Act. Section 19(c) of the Securities Act provides, in relevant part:

For the purpose of all investigations which, in the opinion of the Commission, are necessary and proper for the enforcement of [the Securities Act], any member of the Commission or any officer or officers designated by it are empowered to administer oaths and affirmations, subpoena witnesses, take evidence, and require the production of any books, papers, or other documents which the Commission deems relevant or material to the inquiry, Such attendance of witnesses and the production of such documentary evidence may be required from any place in the United States or any Territory at any designated place of hearing.

15 U.S.C. 77(s)(c). Approximately, 10-20 percent of the enforcement actions brought by the SEC involve securities offerings. n5

[1] The Commissioners

The SEC consists of up to five Commissioners, including a Chairman, nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate. Historically, the Chairman and no more than two other Commissioners are members of the President's party. Although the Commissioners are rarely involved in the day-to-day supervision of investigations, the Commissioners play a significant role in establishing the Commission's priorities. In addition, the SEC cannot bring an enforcement action unless the Commissioners vote to authorize the action.

[2] The Division of Enforcement

The SEC Staff is organized by function into Divisions and Offices, the largest of which is the Division of Enforcement. The Division of Enforcement consists of approximately 1,300 Staff members. The Enforcement Staff is responsible both for conducting investigations and for litigating civil enforcement actions in the federal district courts and before administrative law judges. n6 The Enforcement Staff is located in twelve offices.

The largest concentration of SEC Enforcement Staff is at the Washington, D.C. home office, located at 100 F Street, N.E. in Washington, D.C. ("Home Office"). The SEC Enforcement Staff is distributed between the Home Office at 100 F Street, N.E., Washington, D.C. and eleven regional offices. The Enforcement Staff in the Home Office and the eleven regional offices report to the three deputy directors and one director. The Regional Offices are located in New York City, Boston, Philadelphia, Miami, Atlanta, Chicago, Fort Worth, Salt Lake City, Los Angeles and San Francisco. Several factors affect which office conducts an investigation including the resources and expertise of the offices and the location of: the wrongful conduct; the potential wrongdoers; the relevant entities; and the witnesses. n7

In 2009, SEC Enforcement Director Robert Khuzami announced a number of steps intended to make the SEC's enforcement efforts more efficient. The Division established national units dedicated to highly specialized and complex areas of securities laws: asset management; market abuse; structured and new products; foreign corrupt practices; and municipal securities and public pensions. The intention is that the members of these specialized units will obtain enhanced training and improved access to specialists that will make them experts with respect to particular markets, products and transactions and that the unit members will use that expertise to conduct investigations with increased efficiency and effectiveness and will share that expertise with other members of the enforcement Staff who are conducting investigations in these specialized areas.

Historically, the SEC attorneys who conducted investigations were supervised by branch chiefs, branch chiefs in the home office reported to assistant directors and branch chiefs in the regions reported to assistant regional directors. In 2010, the Enforcement Division abolished the branch chief position, promoting many of the branch chiefs to assistant director or assistant regional director slots and redeploying most of the former branch chiefs to conduct investigations. This reorganization eliminated one layer of supervision and freed up experienced staff members to conduct investigations.

[3] Other Divisions and Offices

The General Counsel is the chief legal officer of the SEC and is responsible for representing the SEC in certain civil, private, or appellate proceedings, preparing legislative material, and providing independent advice and assistance to the SEC Commissioners, the divisions, and the offices. The Office of the General Counsel reviews each enforcement recommendation memorandum and advises the Commission regarding legal or policy issues raised by the recommendation.

The Division of Corporation Finance oversees public company disclosure. The Division of Corporation Finance reviews selected disclosure documents filed by public companies and assists public companies in interpreting SEC rules and recommends new rules for adoption. It is a source of referrals and advises the Enforcement Staff and the Commission regarding enforcement matters relating to corporate disclosure, financial reporting, and securities offerings.

The Division of Market Regulation establishes and maintains standards for fair, orderly, and efficient markets. It regulates the major securities market participants including broker-dealers, self-regulatory organizations (SROs), transfer agents, and securities information processors. The Division of Market Regulation advises Enforcement and the Commission regarding enforcement matters relating to the operation of the securities markets.

The Division of Investment Management oversees and regulates the investment management industry and administers the securities laws affecting investment companies, including mutual funds and investment advisers. The Division of Investment Management also administers the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935. The Division of Investment Management advises Enforcement and the Commission regarding relevant enforcement matters.

The Office of Compliance Inspections and Examinations administers the SEC's examination and inspection program for SROs, broker-dealers, transfer agents, clearing agencies, investment companies, and investment advisers. This office conducts inspections to promote compliance with the securities laws, to detect violations of the law, and to keep the SEC Commissioners informed of developments in the regulated community. The office is a source of referrals and sometimes provides expertise to support Enforcement investigations.

CHAPTER 10 SEC Enforcement Practice *

2-10 Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 10.02

§ 10.02 Power of the SEC to Gather Information

The SEC Staff has the power to initiate an inquiry without specific authorization of the Commission. As the Commission's rules explain:

Where, from complaints received from members of the public, communications from federal or state agencies, examination of filings made with the Commission, or otherwise, it appears that there may be violation of the acts administered by the Commission or the rules and regulations thereunder, a preliminary investigation is generally made. In such preliminary investigation no process is issued or testimony compelled. n1

Many SEC investigations begin as a "Matter under Inquiry" ("MUI"). A MUI can be opened by an Assistant Director upon a determination that sufficiently credible information suggests that a MUI could lead to an enforcement action that would address a violation of the federal securities laws. In order to make that determination the assistant director must consider a number of factors including: the statutes or rules potentially violated; the egregiousness of the potential violation; the potential magnitude of the violation; the potential losses involved; whether the potentially harmed group is particularly vulnerable or at risk; whether the conduct is ongoing; whether the conduct can be investigated efficiently and within the statute of limitations period; and whether other authorities are better suited to conduct the investigation. n2 The SEC Enforcement Manual recognizes that "the threshold analysis for the opening of a MUI is relatively low" and a MUI "can be opened on the basis of very limited information." n3 A MUI converts into an investigation after sixty days or when the Staff, in consultation with an Associate Director, determines that it is an appropriate use of SEC resources to open an investigation and is supposed to be based on more information-gathering and analysis than a MUI. n4 If the Staff concludes that an MUI should not convert into an investigation, then the Staff, in consultation with an Associate Director, should close the MUI before it converts into an investigation. n5

Companies and individuals often voluntarily produce documents and otherwise provide information in response to an informal inquiry. If the Staff is able to obtain voluntarily the materials and testimony it desires without resorting to compulsory process, it might conduct an entire investigation without ever seeking a formal order from the Commission.

The Commission has the power to compel the production of documents and the taking of testimony to investigate possible violations of the federal securities laws. n6 The Commission delegates that power to the Staff by issuing a Formal Order of Investigation, which authorizes the Staff to subpoena witnesses to provide testimony and produce documents. A Formal Order "launches the formal investigation, defines its scope, and establishes the limits within which investigative Staff may resort to process." n7 The Staff can obtain a Formal Order without any prior notice to witnesses or counsel. Courts have stated that the Commission has the statutory authority to authorize a formal investigation without any evidence that the federal securities laws have been violated. n8 In 2009, the Commission delegated to the Enforcement Director, who delegated to his senior staff, the power to issue formal orders. n9

The Staff may seek and obtain a Formal Order regardless of the level of cooperation. Other witnesses might decline to produce documents or provide testimony absent a subpoena. Some entities, such as telephone companies and banks, cannot produce customer records without a subpoena. In addition, many Staff members believe that witnesses and individuals respond more promptly and thoroughly to subpoenas than voluntary requests.

SEC investigative subpoenas are not self-enforcing and require the SEC to file a subpoena enforcement action in federal court. n10 The Commissioners have delegated to the Director of Enforcement the power to authorize a subpoena enforcement action. The SEC initiates a subpoena enforcement action by filing an application to show cause with supporting materials in the U.S. District Court.

The application and supporting materials are then available to the media and the public. Accordingly, the filing of a subpoena enforcement action can result in considerable adverse publicity at an early stage of the investigation.

It is difficult, but not necessarily impossible, to challenge an SEC subpoena successfully on the grounds that it seeks irrelevant materials, imposes undue burden or expense, or was issued in bad faith. Because of the adverse publicity likely to be generated by an SEC subpoena enforcement proceeding and the low probability that the courts will uphold a challenge to the subpoena, it usually makes more sense to negotiate with the Staff than to resist the subpoena and attempt to defend a subpoena enforcement action. n11 In addition, although the government has rarely prosecuted failure to comply with an SEC subpoena, it is a misdemeanor to fail to obey an SEC subpoena "without just cause." n12

The Right to Financial Privacy Act (the "RFPA") gives certain customers of "financial institutions" certain rights in connection with SEC subpoenas. n13 The RFPA provides a mechanism by which a customer, subject to limited exceptions, is given notice that the SEC has subpoenaed the customer's financial records from a financial institution and can challenge the subpoena on the ground that the financial records are not relevant to a legitimate law enforcement investigation. n14 While it is difficult to challenge a subpoena successfully, the RFPA does provide customers with notice of certain subpoenas and exposes the SEC Staff to substantial liability if the Staff does not comply with the procedural requirements of the RFPA. n15

CHAPTER 10 SEC Enforcement Practice *

2-10 Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 10.03

§ 10.03 Initial Steps in Responding to SEC Investigation

[1] Alerting Senior Management and Board of Directors

If a company learns of an SEC enforcement inquiry and it appears that either the company or its senior officers may have exposure, the company should consider promptly notifying senior management and the Board of Directors, especially the audit committee of the board.

[2] Forming a Response Team

A company should form a team responsible for responding to the SEC investigation. Potential members of the response team include the company's chief legal officer, the company's disclosure counsel, and the company's senior public relations and investor relations advisers. Often the team should also include the company's chief financial officer and chief accounting officer. The team should work with the company's senior management and Board of Directors.

If the company appears to have potential exposure, the company should consider retaining outside SEC enforcement counsel to advise the response team, senior management and the Board of Directors. SEC defense counsel should quickly gather and evaluate information relating to the SEC investigations and deal with the SEC Staff. Companies may also seek input from outside public relations advisers. If the company retains a public relations adviser, it should be aware that sharing otherwise privileged information with an outside public relations firm may destroy the privilege. n1 Communications with the public relations adviser are most likely to be protected if the adviser is retained by counsel for the purpose of advising counsel and the company with respect to the investigation and anticipated litigation.

[3] Preserving Documents

The company should promptly take steps to maintain documents relevant to the SEC. These steps should address both paper documents and documents that are stored electronically. In many instances, the company should consult extensively with members of its Information Technology Department and/or documents retention/retrieval consultants to ensure that electronic documents are not destroyed inadvertently. Destruction of relevant documents after the commencement of an SEC inquiry can constitute a federal felony and significantly heightens the risk of a criminal enforcement action against the company and its personnel. n2 At a minimum, the destruction of documents will likely color the SEC's view of the case and increase the likelihood of an enforcement action. Moreover, the destruction of documents could pose significant challenges to defending either an SEC enforcement action or related private litigation.

[4] Considering Disclosure Matters

The company should also consider what disclosure, if any, to make regarding the existence of the SEC investigation. In general, a company has no obligation to disclose the existence of an SEC investigation unless the existence of the investigation is material. Even if the existence of the probe is material, disclosure generally is not required unless the company or its insiders are selling securities to people unaware of the probe, the company is filing a periodic report, or disclosure is somehow necessary to correct a prior statement that was inaccurate when made. Of course, a company might disclose an investigation because, as a practical matter, it expects that news of the investigation will leak in any event. In addition, if an SEC investigation prompts a company to discover that its disclosures were materially misleading when made, the company should correct that disclosure. n3 In part because it is historically unusual for companies to disclose SEC inquiries, the unnecessary disclosure of an SEC inquiry can have a number of adverse consequences, including a decline in the company's stock price, the triggering of securities class actions, and anxiety among the customer's suppliers and customers. In addition, there is some concern that the Staff will have a greater reluctance to close an investigation without an enforcement action if the existence of the investigation is public knowledge.

If the company discloses an SEC investigation, there will be great pressure from analysts, the press, and investors to be open and forthcoming. The company should limit its answers to information in which it has great confidence and should recognize that its answers potentially create a duty to update information as the investigation progresses. Before management confers with analysts or the press, it should thoroughly prepare its response. Usually, it is best for the company to identify one spokesperson to respond to media inquiries.

[5] Alerting Employees

The company should consider reminding appropriate personnel of the company policy that company employees refer questions from the investing public, analysts and the press to the appropriate unit(s) within the company, such as investor relations, public relations, and legal. The company should remind company personnel of company policies limiting discussions with the media.

There is a possibility that the SEC will directly contact current and former company employees. Accordingly, counsel may wish to notify company personnel that they might be contacted by the SEC Staff, that (1) they have the right to consult with counsel before submitting to an interview; (2) if they talk to a law enforcement agency, they must tell the truth; and (3) if they talk to a law enforcement agency, they should promptly notify the company's legal department. The company should, however, be careful not to engage in conduct that might be viewed as obstruction of justice or tampering with a witness. n4 For example, the company should not instruct employees not to talk to law enforcement agencies. Accordingly, it is best to educate company personnel regarding their rights before any specific law enforcement is anticipated.

Company counsel should also instruct employees who are aware of the investigation not to discuss the investigation with others beyond the extent necessary to perform their jobs. In testimony, the SEC Staff routinely asks witnesses about conversations they have had regarding the investigation. Thus, at a minimum, discussing the investigation will unnecessarily lengthen the testimony. More seriously, innocent conversations taken out of context can create suspicion that the witnesses were conspiring to orchestrate testimony.

[6] Alerting Insurance Companies

The company should promptly notify insurance carriers of the SEC inquiry. Depending on the circumstances of the request and the terms of the policy, a request for information in an SEC inquiry could be considered either a covered claim under a directors and officers liability policy or a circumstance that triggers a notification obligation. Failure to provide prompt notification to the insurance carrier could jeopardize coverage.

[7] Alerting Auditors and Others

In most circumstances, the company should promptly notify its auditors of any SEC investigation relating to the company's financial statements or related disclosures. Auditors can assist management in assessing the implications, if any, that the SEC investigation might have on the company's financial statements and related disclosures. Failure to notify the auditor can damage the auditor's confidence in the openness and candor of company management. In addition, CEOs and CFOs must certify each quarter that they have notified the auditors (as well as the audit committee) of:

- all significant deficiencies in the design or operation of internal controls which could adversely affect the issuer's ability to record, process, summarize and report financial data and have identified for the issuer's auditors any material weaknesses in internal controls; and
- any fraud, whether or not material, that involves management or other employees who have a significant role in the issuer's internal controls. n5

Company management should consider alerting significant regulators and creditors, as well as suppliers and customers who might be contacted directly by the Staff. Failure to provide such notice could jeopardize the company's relationships with these important constituencies. If the company decides to notify suppliers or customers, the company should attempt to make this contact in a manner that does not suggest obstruction of justice or pose a danger that the supplier or customer will sell the company's stock based on the alert.

[8] Setting Priorities

The company's Board and senior management should establish (and continuously reevaluate) a set of priorities. For some companies, the top priority will be expediting a quick resolution of the SEC investigation. For other companies, the top priority will be avoiding a fraud injunction. For others, the top priority will be avoiding criminal prosecution. Counsel should assist the company in making informed decisions in setting priorities and in developing and implementing strategies for achieving these priorities.

[9] Considering Remedial Action

Information gathered in response to an SEC investigation should be evaluated in order to assess whether remedial action is appropriate. This remedial action can include enhancement of internal controls or other disclosure controls and procedures, disciplinary action against employees who acted improperly, and disclosures that either supplement or correct disclosures previously made to the investing public.

[10] Not Retaliating Against Whistleblowers

Companies should refrain from conduct that could be perceived as retaliation against whistleblowers. The Sarbanes-Oxley Act of 2002 sets forth both civil and criminal penalties for retaliating against whistleblowers. n6 In addition, SEC enforcement officials and federal prosecutors are likely to take a dim view of companies that they perceive as engaging in retaliatory conduct against individuals who volunteered information to law enforcement agencies.

CHAPTER 10 SEC Enforcement Practice *

2-10 Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 10.04

§ 10.04 Gathering Information and Conducting Internal Investigations

[1] Gathering Information

It is important for defense counsel to gather as much information as practicable regarding the underlying events. The information collected will assist senior management and the Board of Directors in making informed decisions regarding whether the extent, if any, it is appropriate to issue corrective or clarifying disclosures, enhance internal controls, or discipline personnel. n1 The information will also assist the CEO and CFO in assessing whether they can sign the certifications required by Sections 302 and 906 of the Sarbanes Oxley Act of 2002 and assist senior management and the Board in determining the appropriate priorities for the company to set in responding to the SEC investigation.

Unless there is corresponding litigation, counsel cannot use compulsory process to obtain evidence. In addition, company counsel may attend SEC testimony only if such counsel represents the individual witness. Accordingly, defense counsel's investigation usually consists of:

- reviewing company documents (including e-mails) and other documents made available to the company;
- interviewing officers and employees of the company and other cooperative witnesses;
- reviewing public sources of information, such as newspapers, SEC filings, and reports in the business press; and
- talking to counsel for other parties or reviewing the transcripts of testimony given by those persons before the SEC.

The information developed in such an investigation might expedite a favorable resolution of the investigation by enabling the company to persuade the Staff to discontinue, or at least limit, the investigation and by assisting defense counsel in preparing witnesses to testify accurately and effectively. Evidence gathered by counsel may strengthen the defense by enabling counsel to identify evidence that, for example, tends to corroborate the company's position or its disclosures or more effectively refreshes the recollections of the company's employees before they testify.

Defense counsel should carefully search for and review relevant documents. The SEC gives documentary evidence more credence than testimony. Accordingly, the Staff's theory underlying its investigation will be largely derived from documents, and the Staff will extensively use documents in investigative testimony. Counsel's review of the documents is critical in forecasting the direction and outcome of the investigation and in preparing witnesses for testimony.

In addition to searching for documents requested by the Enforcement Staff, the company and its counsel should consider whether to search for other documents relevant to the subject matter of the SEC investigation. These documents may be responsive to a future subpoena or assist the company in demonstrating that its conduct conformed to the law. The persons gathering the documents should keep a record of each file searched, the criteria applied during the search of that file, and the source of each document retrieved during the search.

Defense counsel will also interview company personnel. Unless company counsel also represents the interviewee, before or at the outset of the interview, the witness should be given what are referred to as "Upjohn warnings." In general, Upjohn warnings serve three primary purposes in an internal investigation. First, they lay the predicate for the company being able to assert attorney-client privilege with respect to the interview. Second, they ensure that the interviewee will not be able to successfully assert that the interview is protected by a privilege controlled by the interviewee. Third, they address the counsel's ethical obligation to ensure that the witness understands that the counsel represents the company, not the witness.

Thus, the interviewee should be informed, either orally or in writing, that counsel has been retained to represent the company. In addition, in-house counsel should instruct company witnesses to cooperate with company counsel, to keep confidential any communications with counsel, and to refrain from discussing the investigation with persons other than counsel. Unless company counsel represents the witness as well as the company, company counsel should consider advising the witness that:

- counsel does not represent the witness;
- while the witness should keep the interview confidential, the witness may discuss the interview with his or her separate counsel; and
- the company reserves the right to decide whether information obtained during the interview should be disclosed to any third party, including senior management or the SEC. n2

Consideration should be given to whether the witness should be specifically advised that:

- the witness's personal counsel may attend the interview,
- the company will indemnify the witness for reasonable fees and expenses associated with such counsel; and
- the Government might take the position that if the witness makes false statements to company counsel knowing that company counsel will forward those statements to the Government, the witness may be guilty of obstruction of justice.

Counsel should prepare for each witness interview by identifying significant documents, reviewing the information that other witnesses have provided, and identifying the key points to be covered with the witness. Counsel may want to prepare an interview outline and to compile documents to serve as both a guide and a checklist. Counsel must, however, be alert for additional topics to review with the witness.

In questioning a witness, it is often useful to begin with background questions that will help set the witness at ease and build a rapport between counsel and the witness. Counsel should ask broad, open-ended questions regarding the events under inquiry. Asking broad, open-ended questions maximizes the likelihood that the witness will provide insights into the witness's perspective on the events and that counsel will elicit unanticipated, but potentially valuable, information.

Counsel should ask follow-up questions to obtain specific information underlying general answers. Counsel should also ask questions based on information learned from other sources. In posing questions based on information provided by other witnesses, counsel should hesitate before revealing the source of the information. Revealing what was said by a prior person can taint the recollection of the witness so that when the witness testifies months or years later, the witness has difficulty distinguishing between what the witness learned in the interview and what the witness knew prior to the interview.

Counsel should ask the witness questions based on documents. Before showing the witness documents, however, it is desirable to learn what the witness recalls without the aid of a document. If a document is shown to a witness at the outset, there is a danger that the witness will tend to adopt the information and characterizations in the document. Careful consideration of a document by the witness in advance of testimony often enables the witness to recall more fully the context in which the document was created and received.

Counsel should ask the witness about documents underlying the relevant events, both existing documents and documents that might no longer be in existence.

Counsel should ask the witness about other individuals who may have information regarding the relevant event. The identification of additional individuals with knowledge is an important goal of every interview.

Counsel should listen carefully to the answers. Counsel should consider what the witness has said and what the witness has not said.

It is often useful to have two attorneys present at the interview. While one attorney takes the lead in asking questions, the other can take notes and help to identify areas for further inquiry. In taking notes, counsel should be careful to note that the appropriate warnings were given to the witness. In taking notes and drafting interview memoranda, counsel should also be aware of the possibility that the company will ultimately waive the privilege and turn the interview memoranda over to the government.

Counsel typically prepares a memorandum of each witness interview. The memorandum of the interview should:

- be prepared by counsel,
- expressly state that it contains the mental impressions and conclusions of counsel,
- expressly state that it is not a substantially verbatim record of the interview, and
- reflect the provision of "Upjohn warnings."

Defense counsel should also review publicly available information. For example, in connection with SEC investigations into securities trades, counsel should obtain trading information from the listing exchange or from the NASDAQ and relevant news stories or analyst reports from computer databases.

Individuals or entities outside the company are also important sources of information. Company counsel should carefully consider contacting these persons (or their counsel) in order to learn the information in their possession and any information or documents that these individuals or entities provided to the SEC Staff. Before making these contacts, however, counsel should consider the impact such a contact might have on the company's business relationship, the danger that such contacts will trigger rumors regarding the company, and whether the contacts are likely to be protected by a joint defense privilege. n3 Counsel should be mindful in interviewing these persons, however, that the fact and substance of the interview may be disclosed to the SEC and perhaps others. If there is a concern that the government might view the contact with the third person as obstruction of justice or as impeding the government investigation, counsel might consider consulting with the government before making such contact.

Defense counsel should consider whether persons other than the client are likely to have relevant documents. To the extent that the relevant documents are exculpatory or have been obtained by the SEC, counsel should consider attempting to obtain copies of such documents, regardless of whether they have been subpoenaed by the Staff. During the investigation, the SEC will not disclose those documents to company counsel except to the extent the Staff introduces the documents as exhibits in testimony. On the other hand, to the extent that such documents are incriminating and have not been obtained by the SEC, counsel should consider merely inspecting the documents. n4

[2] Internal Investigations

Internal investigations are common where a shareholder has filed (or is expected to file) a derivative action against corporate officers and/or directors. Courts are more likely to defer to not pursue claims against officers and directors if the decision is made by a committee of independent, disinterested directors based on an investigation by independent counsel and after sufficient deliberation by the committee. In addition, the Board of Directors or senior management might authorize an internal investigation in order to obtain information that will assist in the execution of their fiduciary duties to the corporation and its shareholders. The company might institute an internal investigation in response to pressure from auditors or others who have indicated that the financial statements might be misstated. The institution of the internal investigation can assist in the defense of an investigation by demonstrating that far from ratifying the suspected misconduct, senior management and/or the Board of Directors responded affirmatively to red flags. The presentation to the SEC and/or prosecutors of the findings of an internal investigation can sometimes assist in the expeditious resolution of an investigation or earn the company credit for cooperation.

Internal investigations are often especially appropriate where a company learns of a possible securities law violation before the initiation of an SEC investigation. In this circumstance, senior management and the Board of Directors need to learn the facts so that they can make informed decisions and determine whether remedial measures are necessary. For example, if the company determines that its financial statements might have been materially misstated, an internal investigation can assist the company in determining whether the company should restate its financial statements, whether the misstatement was the result of wrongdoing, whether any company personnel should be disciplined, and whether the company should enhance its system of internal accounting controls. In appropriate circumstances, it might be in the company's interest to report the results of the internal investigation to the SEC or other government authorities.

In October 2001, the SEC issued a report of investigation encouraging companies to institute internal investigations upon learning of possible violations of the federal securities laws and to report to the SEC the results of the investigation. n5 This report is commonly referred to as the "Seaboard § 21(a) Report." As reported in the Seaboard § 21(a) Report, the facts are straightforward. A controller at a subsidiary caused Seaboard Corporation's periodic reports to be misstated. On discovering the misconduct, Seaboard Corporation's internal auditors conducted an immediate inquiry and advised management, which notified the audit committee. The audit committee conducted an investigation through outside counsel, the controller and two other employees were fired, and the company issued a prompt public announcement of an anticipated restatement. Seaboard Corporation also cooperated with the Staff by providing "all information relevant to the underlying violations" and setting up meaningful remedial measures. The Commission decided not to bring an enforcement action against Seaboard and issued a report explaining the basis for this decision. In the report, the Commission indicated that among the reasons why it did not bring an enforcement action against Seaboard Corporation were the facts that upon learning of the possible violation Seaboard Corporation had instituted internal reviews performed by outside professionals unfettered by limitations or interference from interested persons, had taken corrective action, and had voluntarily reported the results of that internal review to the Staff. The report provides only limited comfort to issuers; the Commission and the Staff have emphasized that even if an issuer takes prompt and effective corrective action and cooperates with the Staff, the Commission might bring an enforcement action against the issuer where the conduct was more egregious or the harm to the investing public more substantial.

If the company determines that there has been a violation and it appears that the SEC has not yet launched an inquiry, the company must decide whether to report the violation to the Staff. This is a delicate judgment. There are several reasons why the company should consider reporting the violation to the SEC. If the company's disclosures were materially false or misleading when made, the company may have a duty to correct those disclosures and any restatement of financial statements is likely to trigger any SEC enforcement inquiry. As indicated in the Seaboard § 21(a) Report, the SEC might treat the company more leniently if it voluntarily reports the potential violation to the SEC than if the SEC learns of the potential violation on its own. By voluntarily reporting the potential violation, the company can influence which members of the SEC Staff are involved in the investigation; some members of the SEC Staff have records for being more reasonable and efficient than other members of the SEC Staff.

There are also reasons why a company might refrain from reporting to the Commission that it has conducted an internal investigation and identified possible violations of the federal securities laws. If a company reports itself to the Staff, the company virtually guarantees that the Staff will open an investigation. Although the SEC Staff monitors SEC filings and news wire reports for announcements of restatements, it doesn't investigate everything. In addition, if a company voluntarily reports the results of an internal investigation, the Staff might press the company to provide information protected by attorney-client privilege or the work product privilege. While the Staff will often agree that the provision of privileged information does not waive the privilege, it is not clear whether such an agreement will prevent private litigants and others from arguing that the provision of information did waive the privilege.

Companies sometimes retain for the internal investigation a different law firm than the law firm retained to defend the company in the SEC investigation. It is clear that retaining separate law firms adds to the cost and disruption associated with an SEC investigation. Third parties might view the independence of the law firm conducting the investigation on behalf of the company as impaired if the company also represents members of the company's management. In some circumstances, the simultaneous representation of both the company and members of management might impose limits on the scope of the representations. Moreover, if the company discloses to the Enforcement Staff the results of the internal investigation, because courts are likely to hold that the disclosure waived any privilege that might otherwise protect the internal investigation. Accordingly, there is a risk that the attorneys who conducted the internal investigation might become testifying witnesses and therefore not be able to operate as defense counsel.

Companies sometimes ask the Enforcement Staff to defer seeking documents and taking of testimony for a short time pending completion of the company's investigation. In deciding whether to delay its investigation, the Staff considers the extent to which the internal investigation will be independent, n6 the nature of the suspected violations and whether they are ongoing, the amount of delay involved, whether there is ongoing harm to the investing public, and the extent to which the Staff will be given access to the results of the investigation, perhaps even including a report of the investigation and the underlying workpapers, and the apparent professionalism and depth of the investigation. n7

[3] Minimum Standards for Attorneys

Attorneys who represent issuers in SEC investigations, including law department attorneys supervising such attorneys, should be cognizant of the requirements of the SEC Standards of Professional Conduct for Attorneys. n8 These standards impose requirements on attorneys who "appear and practice before the Commission in the representation of an issuer," including a requirement to report "evidence of a material violation" up the ladder of the issuer's organization. n9 There are a number of exemptions to this requirement. One exemption applies to attorneys:

- (1) retained or directed by the chief legal officer (or the equivalent thereof);

2-10 Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 10.04

(2) to assert, consistent with his or her professional obligations, a colorable defense on behalf of the issuer (or the issuer's officer, director, employee, or agent, as the case may be) in;

(3) any investigation or judicial or administrative proceeding relating to such evidence of a material violation; and

(4) the chief legal officer (or the equivalent thereof) provides reasonable and timely reports on the progress and outcome of such proceeding to the issuer's board of directors or a committee of independent directors.

17 C.F.R. § 205.3(b)(6)(ii). An attorney also does not have such a duty if the engagement satisfies an alternative set of four criteria:

(1) the attorney was retained or directed by the issuer's chief legal officer (or the equivalent thereof);

(2) to investigate such evidence of a material violation;

(3) the attorney reports the results of such investigation to the chief legal officer (or the equivalent thereof); and

(4) except where the attorney and the chief legal officer (or the equivalent thereof) each reasonably believes that no material violation has occurred, is ongoing, or is about to occur, the chief legal officer (or the equivalent thereof) reports the results of the investigation to the issuer's board of directors or a committee of independent directors.

17 C.F.R. § 205.3(b)(6)(i).

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. In many instances, the audit committee will retain independent counsel to conduct an internal investigation. Defense counsel should consider consulting with audit committee counsel to consider the extent to which they can coordinate their efforts in order to reduce the duplication of effort and the burden that simultaneous information gathering processes place on company personnel. Differing missions and the associated privilege issues may, however, limit the amount of coordination.

(n2)Footnote 2. Confidential communications between company defense counsel and a company employee should be protected by the attorney-client privilege even if counsel does not represent the individual employee as long as he or she was interviewed because he or she was believed to possess information as a company employee that was necessary to the effective representation of the company. See Upjohn Co. v. United States, 449 U.S. 383, 394 (1981) . A strong argument can be made that such communications with former employees of the company are also protected by the attorney-client privilege.

(n3)Footnote 3. See, e.g., In re Grand Jury Subpoena Duces Tecum Dated Nov. 13, 1974, 406 F. Supp. 381, 389-93 (S.D.N.Y. 1975) (describing the requirements of the joint defense privilege).

(n6)Footnote 6. The Staff's perception regarding the independence with which the fact-gathering investigation was conducted will turn on such factors as the identity of counsel conducting the investigation and the corporate officials to whom counsel reports. Accordingly, where the conduct of senior management is at issue, it might be appropriate to have counsel report either to the audit committee or a special committee of the Board of Directors.

(n7)Footnote 7. Given the risk that disclosure of the results of the investigation will constitute a waiver of the attorney-client privilege and of work-product protection, any interview notes, memoranda, and evaluative memoranda should be drafted with great care.

CHAPTER 10 SEC Enforcement Practice *

2-10 Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 10.05

§ 10.05 Issues in Representing Individuals

[1] Meeting with the Client

At the onset of the matter, counsel should meet with the individual client. Counsel should explain to the client how the Staff conducts an investigation and the possible outcomes. Counsel should caution the witness to maintain all documents arguably relevant to the SEC investigation and should caution the witness against discussing the investigation with others, explaining that the Staff is likely to ask the witness regarding all discussions the witness has had regarding the investigation.

Counsel should also begin gathering information from the individual. Counsel should ask about the individual's education and employment background, trading in relevant securities, and any prior involvement in criminal or civil litigation. Counsel should also begin obtaining evidence regarding the events underlying the investigation in order to begin to understand the individual's exposure and to develop a strategy for responding to the investigation. In many instances, company counsel and counsel to other witnesses can be valuable sources of information. Company counsel might provide copies of, or at least access to copies of, documents produced to the Staff and of e-mails and other documents associated with the individual.

Unlike U.S. Department of Justice prosecutors, the SEC Enforcement Staff do not routinely identify persons or entities as "targets" or "subjects" of an investigation. Indeed, the U.S. Supreme Court has held that the Commission is not required to notify the "targets" of nonpublic investigations when the SEC issues a subpoena to a third party. n1 Accordingly, it is often difficult to determine if a particular entity or individual is a target of the SEC investigation.

In 2010, the Enforcement Division revised its enforcement manual to provide a number of tools designed to foster cooperation. The Manual provides that an Assistant Director, with approval of a supervisor at or above the Associate Director level, may orally provide assurance that the Division does not anticipate recommending an enforcement action against the individual or company based upon the evidence currently known to the staff ("oral assurance"). n2 The Manual also provides that the Enforcement Division can agree to recommend to the Commission that the individual or company receive credit for cooperating in its investigation and related enforcement actions and, under certain circumstances, to make specific enforcement recommendations ("cooperation agreement"). n3 Defense counsel should consider whether to seek oral assurances or a cooperation agreement.

[2] Fifth Amendment Privilege against Self-Incrimination

Under the Fifth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution, an individual witness has the privilege not to make a "testimonial communication" that is "self-incriminating." n4 Corporations, partnerships and other collective entities do not have a privilege against self-incrimination. n5 Companies and other collective entities cannot decline to produce documents on the ground that its individual employees refuse to turn them over. n6

In general, the Fifth Amendment does not protect the contents of documents. n7 Under the "act of production" doctrine, an individual can decline to produce documents if the act of producing the documents is testimonial in nature and that testimony is self-incriminating. If the Government already knows the existence and location of the documents, the "act of production" doctrine might not be available. n8

A witness may assert the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination if the witness "reasonably believes that his testimony could be used in a criminal prosecution or could lead to other evidence that might be so used." n9 In general, a witness would likely have grounds for such a belief if the witness is a potential target of an SEC enforcement action.

The decision to assert the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination is a difficult one. In many instances in which a witness could validly assert the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination, it is nevertheless in the interest of the witness to produce documents and testify. A defendant who asserts the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination in litigation will encounter great difficulty defending that litigation. The trier of fact will be entitled to draw an adverse inference from the assertion of the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination during litigation of any civil enforcement action. n10 In addition, the defendant may be precluded from introducing evidence at trial. n11

During an investigation, the Staff is likely to focus its greater investigative energies on any witness who asserts the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination. By declining to testify based on the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination, a witness may forgo a valuable opportunity to present exculpatory information. In addition, the Staff tends to assume that a witness who declines to testify based on the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination will either continue to assert that privilege during litigation of any enforcement action or will give highly incriminating testimony. The Staff will be less forthcoming in the Wells Process if the potential defendant asserted the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination than if the witness testified. If the SEC brings an enforcement action against a defendant who asserted the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination during the investigation, the charging document is likely to plead that the defendant asserted the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination. Moreover, some companies will terminate any employee who asserts the privilege during an investigation.

Nevertheless, invocation of the Fifth Amendment privilege is prudent in some circumstances. It may be easier for a witness to defend a criminal prosecution successfully or negotiate a relatively favorable plea bargain, if the witness has declined to testify during the SEC investigation. In all cases, counsel should advise witnesses that false or misleading statements to the SEC may lead to criminal prosecution for perjury or obstruction of justice, even in cases that otherwise would not merit criminal interest. Accordingly, it often will be in the interest of the witness to decline to testify based upon the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination if a criminal prosecution is likely.

Asserting the Fifth Amendment privilege may also be in the witness's interest if the SEC is likely to bring an enforcement action against the witness regardless of whether the witness testifies. There are, of course, instances in which the testimony that a witness would provide would be sufficiently incriminating as to render an SEC enforcement action likely.

The Enforcement Staff often requires a witness to appear for testimony even if counsel to the witness notifies the Staff in advance of testimony of the witness's intention to assert the privilege in response to numerous questions. If the Staff does require the witness to appear, defense counsel should carefully prepare the witness to assert the privilege as appropriate.

In rare circumstances, the SEC Staff seeks a grant of use immunity so that the SEC can compel a witness to testify despite the witness's willingness to assert the Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination. The Organized Crime Control Act of 1970, provides that, where certain criteria are met and upon approval by a DOJ official at the level of an assistant attorney general or higher, the Securities and Exchange Commission may issue an order granting "use immunity" from criminal prosecution to a witness in an investigation and compelling his or her testimony and other information. 18 U.S.C. Sections 6001-6004. This order federal and state governments from using a witness's compelled testimony, or the fruits of such testimony, against the witness in connection with criminal prosecution of the witness, except in a prosecution for perjury, false statement, or failure to comply with the order. Use immunity conferred to a witness in SEC investigations will not protect that witness from liability in civil proceedings. The SEC can still bring civil or administrative proceedings against the witness based upon the immunized testimony. If the Commission issues an order immunizing the witness and compelling testimony, the witness can no longer continue to refuse to testify either in the investigation or in a related enforcement action.

[3] Multiple Representation

Under the Commission's Rules of Practice, each witness has the right to be accompanied by counsel, but only if counsel represents the individual witness. n12 Thus, counsel for the company usually can attend testimony only if company counsel also represents the witness personally. The Staff will ask counsel to confirm this fact on the record at the beginning of the testimony.

Representing multiple witnesses can result in substantial cost savings. In addition, by representing multiple witnesses can assist counsel in mastering the facts and developing a set of insights into the Staff's approach

If a lawyer represents multiple clients in an investigation, the lawyer should obtain the informed consent of each client to the multiple representation and to lawyer's using that client's confidences and secrets in representing the lawyer's other clients to the investigation. The engagement letter for each client should specify that the client consents to the lawyer's continued use of confidences and secrets even if the lawyer ceases to represent the client because, for example, of a conflict of interest that precludes simultaneous representation.

Conflicts of interest can preclude counsel from representing both the company and an individual witness. A lawyer may not represent a witness in an SEC investigation if that representation will likely be adversely affected by the lawyer's representation of another witness unless the lawyer obtains the informed consent of the client after full disclosure. Unless a lawyer obtains the informed consent of the client after full disclosure, a lawyer also may not represent a witness in an investigation if the lawyer's professional judgment on behalf of the client will be or reasonably may be adversely affected by the lawyer's responsibilities to one or more other clients. In many instances, it is problematic for company counsel to represent a rogue employee.

In 2010, the Enforcement Division instituted measures to encourage individuals to provide extraordinary cooperation to the Enforcement Division. n13 In assessing whether a conflict of interest precludes multiple representation, counsel should consider these measures and the possibility that one prospective client might benefit from providing extraordinary cooperation to the detriment of another prospective client.

If counsel initially determines that it is appropriate to represent multiple clients in an investigation, counsel should reevaluate the situation as the investigation develops. It is particularly appropriate for counsel to re-evaluate the multiple representation if it appears likely that the Staff will make a Wells Call on two or more of counsel's clients or if criminal prosecution becomes likely.

Company counsel may decide that it can represent a witness only if the witness also has the benefit of separate counsel.

Separate counsel might be necessary to ensure that the client's consent to the multiple representation is informed. There might be issues as to which the ability of company counsel to provide impartial advice is impaired, particularly as to advising the witness regarding the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination. This difficulty can be addressed by bringing in separate counsel to advise the individual on the Fifth Amendment issue. Separate counsel can also mitigate the potential harm if company counsel later has to withdraw from representing the individual. For example, company counsel will often find it difficult to simultaneously represent multiple witnesses once the Staff has made Wells Calls. At that point, a witness could be prejudiced if separate counsel had not already become familiar with the matter.

[4] Indemnification of Legal Fees

Most corporate charters and by-laws permit or require a company to pay legal fees incurred by a company officer in response to an investigation relating to the company. Under Delaware corporate law, for example, a corporation may indemnify a corporate director, officer or employee for expenses (including reasonable attorneys' fees) incurred by reason of the fact that the person is a director, officer or employee of the corporation provided the person acted in good faith and in a manner the person reasonably believed to be in the corporation's best interest. Corporate charters and by-laws typically provide that indemnification shall be provided to the fullest extent permitted by law. In addition, indemnification often benefits company because it is in the interests of the company that its personnel testify truthfully and effectively.

Companies that advance legal fees typically require the covered employee to undertake to reimburse the company in certain limited circumstances. In Messing v. FDI, Inc.,ⁿ¹⁴ for example, the court noted that Delaware law required a resolution of the board of directors and the receipt of an undertaking from the director (whose fees would be paid by the company) regarding his obligation to reimburse the company if no indemnification was available before making any expenditure of corporate funds in connection with the representation of corporate directors.

CHAPTER 10 SEC Enforcement Practice *

2-10 Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 10.06

§ 10.06 Production of Documents and Information to the Division of Enforcement Staff

Documents play a central role in SEC investigations. The Staff can request that a person voluntarily produce documents and information or, in formal investigations, issue subpoenas demanding the production of documents. In addition, the Staff can utilize the SEC's examination power to obtain documents and information from regulated entities, such as securities broker-dealers. n1

Once the Commission has issued a Formal Order of Investigation, the Staff can issue a subpoena duces tecum, calling for the production of documents. Typically, the subpoena will call for the production of original documents, and the transmittal letter from the Staff will state that the witness may instead produce copies at his or her expense.

[1] Negotiating with the Staff Regarding the Subpoena

SEC subpoenas are typically very broad. In part, the Staff deliberately drafts subpoenas broadly in order to ensure that the recipient preserves all documents likely to be relevant. In part, the breadth results from a lack of familiarity with how the company operates and compiles and maintains information, requests for documents often are ambiguous and burdensome. When a company receives a subpoena, counsel should confer with the company regarding the scope of the subpoena in order to:

- ensure that no documents responsive to the subpoena will be discarded or destroyed,
- determine the extent to which the subpoena is ambiguous or burdensome, and
- begin the process of gathering responsive documents. n2

The Staff will often agree to narrow a subpoena or defer production as to portions of the subpoena if they believe such action will likely accelerate production of more important information. Sometimes, the cost of photocopying the responsive documents is burdensome because of the number of documents or because of the size or condition of such documents. In such circumstances, the Staff sometimes may agree to inspect the documents and designate which are of interest to the Staff, rather than requiring the company to produce all responsive documents. Counsel and the company should consider whether the Staff should be asked to inspect the documents at the company's offices or off-site (e.g., counsel's offices).

The Staff can often be persuaded to alter or defer requests for documents reflecting certain information if counsel explains that locating responsive documents would be burdensome (e.g., require manual searches at numerous locations). The Staff is especially likely to alter or defer a portion of its request (or defer a portion of its request), if the company identifies alternative documents that contain comparable information and can be located with substantially less difficulty or offers to create documents containing the requested information.

The initial discussion with the Staff regarding documents often provides counsel with a vehicle for attempting to explore the Staff's view of the investigation and the Staff's perception of the client. Given that counsel may not have mastered the facts in time for this discussion, counsel should hesitate to provide information to the Staff at this early stage of the investigation. The discussion, nevertheless, may provide an opportunity for counsel to begin attempting to influence the Staff's view of, and approach to, the matter.

The Staff often subpoena documents with a return date two to four weeks in the future, but will usually agree to extend the return date if counsel and the company can explain why such a reasonable extension is appropriate. In many instances, the Staff will agree to a rolling production based on the Staff's priorities or the degree of difficulty involved in the company's retrieving and reviewing the documents.

Companies should never ignore an SEC subpoena. Lack of timely responsiveness to a subpoena will detract from the company's credibility and working relationship with the Staff and significantly increase the burden of responding to the Staff's requests. Moreover, failure to comply with a Commission subpoena "without just cause" is punishable as a misdemeanor. Extensions and other modifications of a subpoena should be confirmed in writing.

[2] Searching for and Reviewing Documents

The search for documents should be thorough. Even if the company conducted a reasonable, good-faith search at the outset, if significant responsive documents surface late in the investigation, the Staff may infer that the documents were deliberately withheld in order to obstruct the probe. Accordingly, a systematic effort should be made to identify all locations reasonably likely to contain documents responsive to the subpoena or document request. Each of these locations should then be searched for responsive documents by persons who understand the request and understand the importance of exercising care in locating and identifying documents. Counsel often supervises and tests the thoroughness of the search. The persons conducting the search should maintain a record of each location searched, when the location was searched, who conducted that search and the search criteria applied.

The search for documents should not necessarily be limited to documents responsive to the subpoena. The search should be extended to cover additional documents that help to explain the relevant events or that might contain exculpatory or inculpatory information. Even if a document is clearly not responsive to the current subpoena, the Staff might issue subsequent, broader subpoenas. In addition, nonresponsive documents can help counsel understand the case, advise the company, and prepare witnesses for testimony.

Many SEC defense counsel interpret SEC subpoenas more broadly than they would a document request or subpoena served in private litigation. In private litigation, defense counsel often are prepared to rely on a narrow reading of a subpoena as long as they believe that they can persuade a relatively impartial court that their interpretation was supported by a good faith reading of the subpoena or document request. In an SEC investigation, defense counsel reason that there will likely be an adverse impact on the credibility of the company and defense counsel if the SEC Staff learns of a significant document that was not produced because it was deemed nonresponsive, unless the Staff can be persuaded that the subpoena that they drafted did not call for such documents. Given the natural tendency of some Staff members to assume that the subpoena that they drafted called for all significant documents, this is a substantial burden.

Many defense counsel rely on search terms when searching electronic documents, such as e-mails. Search terms can substantially reduce the cost of gathering and reviewing electronic documents. If defense counsel elects to rely on key word searches, defense counsel should consider consulting with the SEC regarding the search terms.

In addition, it often is appropriate to consult with the Staff regarding the format in which electronic documents will be produced.

[3] Producing Documents

The Staff will usually accept the production of copies in lieu of originals. Counsel typically use Bates coding to identify each page of a production. The code should not conceal any text or marking on the document. Documents produced to the Staff should also be labeled with a request for confidential treatment for the purposes of the Freedom of Information Act. n4 The Staff generally does not reimburse for costs incurred in searching for and copying documents, reasoning that the Staff takes the position that reimbursement is not appropriate because it is entitled to the originals and is accepting copies as an accommodation to the recipient of the subpoena. n5 Witnesses typically retain originals and produce a set of numbered copies.

The letter transmitting the documents to the Staff should identify the numerical range of the documents being produced and request that they be accorded confidential treatment for the purposes of FOIA. A copy of the request for confidential treatment should be sent to the SEC's FOIA officer.

When producing documents, counsel should consider addressing with the Staff documents that on first examination might appear to be problematic for the client. It sometimes is useful to defuse these documents at the time of production by putting them into context or otherwise explaining why a more benign interpretation is appropriate. For example, in an investigation into whether a company's publicly disclosed revenue projections were realistic, there might be an internal forecast that deliberately incorporated conservative assumptions to assist the company in determining whether it would still satisfy its loan covenants if the company performed worse than expected. It might benefit the company to provide this explanation to the Staff.

If requested documents contain trade secrets, counsel should consider taking steps to protect the trade secrets. While the law on the subject is unclear, where documents contain trade secrets the Staff may agree to a solution that serve the needs of the Staff while protecting the legitimate interests of the company. For example, counsel might offer to make the documents available for inspection while declining to produce copies.

CHAPTER 10 SEC Enforcement Practice *

2-10 Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 10.07

§ 10.07 Providing Information Compilations to the Staff

Especially at the outset of a probe, the Staff often asks for information on a voluntary basis. For example, especially in insider trading investigations the Staff might ask for a chronology setting forth events, the identity of persons with knowledge of those events, and the dates on which such persons obtained that knowledge.

Great care should be taken when preparing a compilation of information for the Staff. First, the Staff may rely on the compilation in conducting the investigation and determining whether an enforcement action is appropriate. Second, the company and counsel may lose credibility if the Staff determines that the compilation is incomplete or inaccurate. Third, a chronology of events submitted to the SEC might be admitted as evidence in a judicial proceeding. Fourth, deliberately false statements in the chronology would be subject to criminal prosecution under 18 U.S.C. § 1001.

CHAPTER 10 SEC Enforcement Practice *

2-10 Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 10.08

§ 10.08 Preparing Witnesses for Testimony

The Staff usually obtains information from witnesses through testimony that is provided under oath in the presence of a court reporter. Under certain circumstances, the Staff proceeds through interviews that are not transcribed or recorded. The Staff might proceed with an interview early in the investigation when the Staff is still in the process of trying to decide to proceed. The Staff might proceed with a telephone interview when the witness is sufficiently peripheral to the investigation that the Staff believes that the cost and inconvenience of testimony is unwarranted.

The Staff also sometimes proceeds with in-person interviews that are off-the-record. The Staff might proceed with such an interview when the Staff believes that a criminal proceeding is likely and the prosecutors would prefer that the Staff not create prior written statements of witnesses. The Staff sometimes agrees to an off-the-record interview when an settlement agreement has been tentatively negotiated and the purpose of the interview is to confirm that the settlement terms are appropriate.

It is important to treat interviews seriously even if they are not being recorded or transcribed. An imprecise or inaccurate statement during the interview could have serious ramifications. Great care should be taken to ensure that the witness is prepared to answer questions accurately and effectively. Witnesses have been prosecuted for statements made in interviews. Especially if the interview occurs early in the investigation, the interview can greatly influence the Staff's view of the witness and the matter.

Testimony before the Commission is integral to the effective defense of the corporate client and many of the individual witnesses. In many respects preparation of a witness for testimony is similar to the preparation of a witness for a deposition. Counsel should educate the witness about the Staff's likely focus in the anticipated testimony. It is important for the witness to understand, to the extent possible, the Staff's working theory of the case so that the witness can frame precise answers to the Staff's questions, identify additional information that might assist the Staff in determining that the federal securities laws have not been violated, putting damaging disclosures in an appropriate context, and respond effectively to unanticipated documents or questions.

In preparing for testimony, counsel should review with the witness the key events most likely to be the focus of the Staff's questioning. In large part, this aspect of the preparation should proceed in a manner similar to the interview of a witness. Discussing these events in advance of the testimony often refreshes the recollection of the witness and provides an opportunity for the witness to explore with counsel the implications of the witness's recollections.

Counsel should further prepare the witness for testimony by engaging in question and answer sessions in which the witness practices answering counsel's questions as if the witness were testifying before the SEC. During these sessions, counsel should note how the witness is answering the questions so that counsel can then give the witness constructive feedback on both the positive and the negative aspects of the witness answers.

In addition, counsel should advise the witness of the importance of telling the truth. Counsel should explain that telling the truth is important both because lying during testimony is a crime and because lying undermines the witness's credibility. Counsel should consider cautioning the witness that falsely testifying not to recall a material fact is perjury. n1 According to federal law:

Whoever, in any matter within the jurisdiction of any department or agency of the United States knowingly and willfully falsifies, conceals or covers up by any trick, scheme, or device a material fact, or makes any false, fictitious or fraudulent statements or representations, or makes or uses any false writing or document knowing the same to contain any false, fictitious or fraudulent statement or entry, shall be fined under [Title 18] or imprisoned not more than five years, or both. n2

Section 1621 further provides:

Whoever ... having taken an oath before a competent tribunal, officer, or person, in any case in which a law of the United States authorizes an oath to be administered, that he will testify, declare, depose, or certify truly, or that any written testimony, declaration, deposition, or certificate by him subscribed, is true, willfully and contrary to such oath states or subscribes any material matter which he does not believe to be true ... is guilty of perjury and shall ... be fined under this title or imprisoned not more than five years, or both. n3

Counsel should explain to the witness that his or her demeanor is important, because the Staff members at the testimony will perform a significant role in forming the decision of the senior Staff and the Commission regarding the nature and extent of any enforcement action that will be authorized by the Commission. The witness should be advised to be respectful, but not obsequious, hostile, or familiar. The witness should be advised to avoid attempts at humor, and that all statements made in the presence of the Staff, even "off the record," might have an impact on the outcome of the investigation.

While witnesses generally should not volunteer information not required by the questions posed by the Staff, because the Staff and the Commission will rely heavily on the transcript of the testimony in assessing whether to bring an enforcement action, counsel should consider advising the witness to volunteer facts important to the defense. Accordingly, an important part of the preparation for testimony may be the process of gathering and identifying those facts and themes that are important to the defense.

Defense counsel should caution the witness not to testify regarding events based on surmise, except to the extent that defense counsel and the witness have specifically agreed otherwise. Because of an eagerness to cooperate with the Staff, many witnesses have a tendency to testify as if they recall certain events when, in fact, they are merely speculating that such events might well have occurred. Unless the witness clearly indicates that the testimony is based on surmise or speculation, the testimony can inadvertently mislead the Staff and (if the testimony conflicts with other evidence) create credibility problems for the witness or for others. Even if clearly identified as speculation or surmise, such testimony can unnecessarily prolong the testimony. In the exceptional circumstance where speculation is appropriate, the witness should make it clear that the testimony is speculation.

Counsel should attempt to familiarize the witness with what is likely to happen during the testimony, including the format of the testimony room, the number of SEC Staff members likely to attend, and the role of the court reporter.

Counsel should review with the witness the speech that the Staff members will give at the beginning of the testimony and the questions that the Staff typically asks at the beginning of testimony. There are certain questions that the Staff routinely asks witnesses. The Staff routinely asks for information regarding the witness's address, telephone numbers, educational background, employment background, criminal convictions, and securities activities. The Staff also routinely asks about the witness' search for documents, whether the witness knows of anyone else who has provided testimony, whether the witness has reviewed any transcripts or summaries of testimony, whether the witness has discussed the witness's testimony or the investigation with any person, whether the witness has been convicted of any crime other than a traffic offense, and whether the witness has testified before.

Counsel should review with the witness topics likely to implicate the attorney-client or work product privilege. In order to protect the privilege, it is prudent to alert the witness to identify for counsel questions that call for him or her to testify regarding any meeting at which counsel to the company or to the witness was present or any document that was addressed to or from counsel for the company or the witness. For example, the Staff might ask from whom the witness learned a certain fact and, unbeknownst to counsel, the witness may have first learned that information through a privileged communication from other company counsel. The witness should be instructed to confer with counsel before testifying regarding any communication between counsel and either the witness or the company.

The Staff often relies heavily on documents when questioning a witness and will frequently endeavor to use documents to refresh a witness's recollection. Counsel should explain to the client the concept of refreshed recollection and admonish the client not to testify to recalling a document merely because it shows the witness as an author or recipient of the document or an event merely because the event is described or referred to in the document.

The SEC Staff often asks questions that incorporate characterizations of the witness's prior testimony. Counsel should prepare the witness to be alert when addressing such questions and on various approaches to addressing mischaracterization by the Staff.

CHAPTER 10 SEC Enforcement Practice *

2-10 Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 10.09

§ 10.09 Defending SEC Testimony

[1] Authority of the Staff to Take Testimony

Unless the enforcement investigation is defused in the very early stages, the Staff will usually seek to take the testimony of corporate personnel and other individuals under oath. Usually, the Staff prefers to have completed most of its document collection and review before launching this phase of the investigation, although its efforts to obtain relevant documents will likely continue throughout the investigation.

Once a Formal Order has been issued, the Staff has the authority to subpoena witnesses to appear anywhere in the country: "[T]he attendance of witnesses and the production of [books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, and other records] may be required from any place in the United States or any State at any designated place of hearing." n1 Thus, the Staff can subpoena the witness to appear at the Staff's offices even if the witness resides in California and the Staff is located in Washington, D.C. or Miami, Florida. The location of the testimony is, however, often subject to negotiation.

The SEC subpoena will often call for the witness to appear for testimony at the offices in which the Staff is located (e.g., a subpoena issued by Staff of the Northeast Region is likely to call for the witness to appear at the SEC offices in New York). It is sometimes possible to persuade the Staff to take the testimony in a location that is more convenient for the witness. However, the Staff will almost always insist on taking testimony either at an SEC office or other federal government office.

Witnesses summoned to appear before the Commission are entitled to the same witness fees and mileage as witnesses in the courts of the United States. n2 The SEC will also pay "reasonable travel expenses" of the witness up to certain caps. After the testimony, the witness can submit a request for witness fees and for reimbursement of travel expenses. The SEC does not reimburse witnesses for either the legal fees or the travel expenses incurred by requiring counsel to travel.

The Staff will often subpoena the witness to appear for testimony two to four weeks after the date on which the subpoena was served. The date of the testimony is often subject to negotiation, especially if either the witness or counsel has a scheduling conflict. If the return date on the subpoena does not provide sufficient time for preparation, counsel should attempt to negotiate a reasonable extension.

The Staff is under pressure to speed investigations along. Accordingly, in circumstances where it appears likely that the witness will eventually be subpoenaed, it is prudent to begin the preparation process before the Staff has served a subpoena.

[2] Right of the Witness to be Represented by Counsel

The Commission's Rules of Practice provide the following description of the role of a witness's counsel during SEC testimony:

The right to be accompanied, represented and advised by counsel should mean the right of a person testifying to have an attorney present with him during any formal investigative proceeding and to have this attorney (1) advise such person before, during and after the conclusion of such examination; (2) question such person briefly at the end of the examination to clarify any of the answers such person has given; and (3) make summary notes during such examination solely for the use of such person. n3

It will sometimes be appropriate for an expert to accompany counsel in order to assist in defending the SEC testimony. For example, in an investigation involving complex accounting issues, an accounting expert sometimes accompanies counsel.

The SEC's Rules of Practice do not expressly state that an expert may accompany counsel at testimony; however, the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia has held that an expert may accompany counsel for the purpose of providing assistance. n4 In SEC v. Whitman, n5 each of two witnesses refused to testify unless the Staff permitted an accountant to accompany and assist each witness and his counsel during the actual taking of testimony. Refusing to enforce the subpoenas unless the SEC permitted the accountant to accompany and assist the witnesses, the court said that, in light of the Administrative Procedure Act, to the extent the Commission's rules impinged "upon counsel's ability to adequately represent his client who has been called upon to testify, they cannot be upheld." n6

Prior to the witness's testifying, counsel should ascertain if the witness suffers from a medical condition rendering him or her particularly susceptible to fatigue, memory lapses, or other conditions that might impair the ability to testify effectively. If the witness has such a condition, counsel should consider notifying the SEC Staff of that condition at or before the outset of testimony.

[3] Representing the Witness During Testimony

The rules of practice governing investigations do not expressly permit counsel to object to the questions posed by the Enforcement Staff, and the Staff frequently notes that the federal rules of procedure and evidence do not govern SEC testimony. It is usually appropriate for counsel to note on the record defects in the Staff's questions (e.g., the question is compound or ambiguous, the question assumes the existence of a fact not in evidence). Counsel should be alert for Staff questions that inadvertently distort a witness's testimony or that contain an inaccurate premise. While it is often preferable for a witness to handle such questions without the intervention of counsel, counsel should intervene as necessary to protect the integrity of the record. If possible, counsel should make his or her points in a manner that demonstrates a desire to enhance, rather than obstruct, the ability of the Staff to obtain accurate and reliable information.

The Staff respects the attorney-client and work-product privileges and other privileges recognized by federal law. Counsel can and should object to questions that call for information protected by the attorney-client privilege and the work-product doctrine. If necessary, counsel should instruct the witness not to answer such questions.

Counsel should monitor the condition of the witness. Testifying before the Staff can be extremely demanding. Accordingly, counsel should request a break whenever the witness appears to be tiring. Although the Staff controls the timing of breaks, it will almost always accommodate such a request.

The SEC often relies heavily on documents during testimony. In general, counsel should ensure that the witness does not respond to questions regarding a document until the witness has completed reading the document. Where the Staff has focused on only a portion of a long document, it sometimes is appropriate to have the witness respond after reading only that portion and the surrounding portions. This should only be done if the record reflects that the witness has not read the entire document.

Occasionally, a witness will inadvertently give an answer that is not completely accurate. For example, the witness might inadvertently neglect to identify one or two persons who were present at a meeting. Counsel should either confer with the witness on such occasions to determine if the witness has testified inaccurately or ask a question designed to supplement or correct the testimony. Prompt supplementation will help preserve the witness's credibility. In addition, while prompt clarification, supplementation, or correction of testimony arguably is not a defense to a charge under §§ 1001 or 1621 of the United States Code for false statements, n7 it is likely to be viewed as strongly negating the element of intent. For example, the court in Fletcher v. Hook n8 affirmed the district court's dismissal of a perjury claim where the false statement was corrected later in the person's testimony. n9

There are a number of methods by which the testimony of a witness can be clarified, supplemented, or corrected. Preferably, the witness can work the supplementation into responses to questions posed by the Staff. Alternatively, during the course of the testimony, the Staff will usually permit the witness to make a clarifying statement or permit counsel to ask clarifying questions. In addition, at the conclusion of the testimony, the witness may make clarifying statements and counsel may ask clarifying questions.

Counsel should determine whether it is in the interest of the witness to bring additional or clarifying information to the attention of the Staff through questions posed by counsel. While the rules explicitly provide for clarifying questions only at the conclusion of testimony, the Staff will usually permit counsel to ask brief clarifying questions of the witness during the course of the testimony. The testimony of a witness is often of great importance in influencing the outcome of an investigation. In general, if the Staff's questioning does not permit the witness to present exculpatory evidence, counsel should consider asking questions that will elicit the evidence.

Counsel should request on the record that the transcript and all other records of the testimony be accorded confidential treatment pursuant to 17 C.F.R. § 200.83 and the Freedom of Information Act.

[4] Obtaining a Transcript of the Testimony

A witness who has provided testimony has a qualified right to obtain a copy of the transcript of the testimony upon payment of a fee to the reporter:

A person who has submitted documentary evidence or testimony in a formal investigative proceeding shall be entitled, upon written request, to procure a copy of his documentary evidence or a transcript of his testimony on payment of the appropriate fees; provided, however, that in a nonpublic formal investigative proceeding the Commission may for good cause deny such request. In any event, any witness, upon proper identification, shall have the right to inspect the official transcript of the witness's own testimony. n10

In deciding to request a copy of the transcript, counsel should consider not only the expense involved in obtaining the transcript, but also the risk that the witness might be required to produce the transcript in response to a discovery request served in civil litigation. n11 It is rare for the Commission to deny a request for a transcript. If counsel needs to obtain the transcript quickly, he or she should check on the Staff's processing of the request.

The transcript of the testimony provided by the Staff does not include a copy of the exhibits shown to the witness. Accordingly, during the testimony counsel should either keep a careful record of the documents shown to the witness as exhibits, or ensure that the transcript will contain a sufficiently detailed description of the document to enable counsel to identify the document.

In addition to having a conditional right to purchase the transcripts, the witness and his or her counsel have the right to inspect the transcript. Many Staff members acknowledge that this right includes the right after the testimony to inspect exhibits used during the testimony.

CHAPTER 10 SEC Enforcement Practice *

2-10 Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 10.10

§ 10.10 Wells Process

After the SEC Staff has tentatively decided that an enforcement action is appropriate, but before it submits the recommendation memorandum to the Commission, the Staff ordinarily will contact counsel to each prospective defendant and provide notice of its tentative decision. Although the SEC rules provide that the Staff has discretion not to provide such notice, the Staff routinely provides such notice absent unusual circumstances (e.g., the Staff intends to seek a temporary restraining order freezing funds, the Staff fears that the prospective defendant might flee the country).

The Staff can provide the notice by telephone call or letter or a telephone call promptly followed by a letter. The notification is commonly referred to as a "Wells Call." The Staff will typically state that the prospective defendant will be given an opportunity to make a written or videotaped submission setting forth the position and arguments of the individual or entity. n1 This statement is known as a "Wells Submission," after John A. Wells, who chaired the Advisory Committee on Enforcement Policies and Practices (known as the Wells Committee) in 1972.

In response to recommendations made by the Wells Committee, the Commission published Securities Act Release No. 5310, Procedures Relating to the Commencement of Enforcement Proceedings and Termination of Staff Investigations, n2 that vests the Staff with discretion to advise prospective defendants of the indicated violations and to allow them to submit to the Staff a written statement setting forth their "interests and position." As described in the Commission's rules, if the Staff recommends that the Commission authorize an enforcement action, the Staff must forward the submission to the Commission with the Staff's recommendation memorandum:

Persons who become involved in preliminary or formal investigations may, on their own initiative, submit a written statement to the Commission setting forth their interests and position in regard to the subject matter of the investigation. Upon request, the Staff, in its discretion, may advise such persons of the general nature of the investigation, including the indicated violations as they pertain to them, and the amount of time that may be available for preparing and submitting a statement prior to the presentation of a Staff recommendation to the Commission for the commencement of an administrative or injunction proceeding. Submissions by interested persons should be forwarded to the appropriate Division Director or Regional Director, or District Administrator with a copy to the Staff members conducting the investigation and should be clearly referenced to the investigation to which they relate. In the event a recommendation for the commencement of an enforcement proceeding is presented by the Staff, any submissions by interested persons will be forwarded to the Commission in conjunction with the Staff memorandum. n3

If, after reviewing the Wells Submission, the Staff decides to recommend an enforcement action, then the Staff's memorandum, along with the prospective defendant's Wells Submission, is distributed to the Commissioners and to senior officers of other offices and divisions of the SEC. If the Staff's proposal is to be addressed in the ordinary course of business, the Commission will meet to act on the recommendation within several weeks of docketing of the matter. The Commission considers the recommendation of the Staff at a closed meeting, without the presence of the prospective defendant or defense counsel.

It is not unusual for the Staff to inform defense counsel that he or she has only 20 days or less from the date of the initial Wells Call to file the Wells Submission. Often the Staff will grant limited extensions if warranted by the circumstances; however, the Staff is under considerable pressure by management to conclude the Wells process without delay. Accordingly, if a Wells Call appears likely, it might be appropriate to begin preparing the Wells Submission in advance of the Wells Call.

[1] Anticipating Impact of Possible Wells Call

Defense counsel should consider asking the Staff to notify counsel if the Staff is considering making a Wells Call. The receipt of a Wells Call can have a substantial adverse impact on an individual or company. For example, the National Association of Securities Dealers (the "NASD") requires a person associated with a NASD member securities firm to update his or her Form U-4 upon, among other things, written notification that he or she is the subject of an SEC investigation that could result in an adverse finding against the person. n4

In addition, a public company might consider it appropriate to disclose the receipt of a Wells Call by a senior officer of the company. In light of the significant adverse ramifications that such a Wells Call can have, Staff members will sometimes agree to notify defense counsel in advance of a Wells Call that the Staff has serious concerns which could ultimately lead to the initiation of the Wells Process. Defense counsel can at this earlier stage attempt to persuade the Staff that an enforcement action is inappropriate.

[2] Obtaining As Much Information As Possible Regarding the Staff's Case

When seeking authority from the Commission to institute an enforcement action, the Staff submits to the Commissioners a memorandum recommending the institution of an enforcement action. The Staff's memorandum usually sets forth the key evidence and legal theories on which the Staff has based their conclusion that the federal securities laws have been or are about to be violated and that an enforcement action should be brought. The preparation of the memorandum can consume weeks or even months as it winds its way through the various layers of supervisory review and is amended to respond to factual or legal arguments set forth in a Wells Submission.

The Wells Submission should respond to the arguments that the Staff makes in its recommendation memorandum. Because the Staff's recommendation memorandum is a confidential document and will not be made available to defense counsel, it is important to elicit from the Staff as much detail as possible regarding the bases for its proposed recommendation.

As indicated above, throughout the information-gathering phase of the investigation, counsel should endeavor to identify the Staff's concerns and potential arguments. Usually, counsel can ascertain many of the Staff's concerns and potential arguments by becoming familiar with the priorities and management realities which drive the SEC's enforcement program, conferring with other defense counsel, and reviewing documents and testimony. n5 Counsel can also learn valuable information by engaging in an ongoing dialogue with the Staff throughout the information-gathering phase of the investigation.

Upon receiving a Wells Call, defense counsel should attempt to supplement this information. In the initial Wells Call letter, the Staff will typically provide a cursory outline of the charge that it tentatively decided to recommend. For example, the letter might do little more than identify the statutory provisions allegedly violated and the nature of the relief tentatively sought by the Staff (e.g., an injunction, civil penalties, a cease-and-desist order, a bar from association with a broker-dealer). If the initial Wells Call is a telephone call, the Staff will often provide more information.

Upon receiving a Wells Call, defense counsel should attempt to engage in a detailed discussion with the Staff. These discussions often involve the investigators who conducted the investigation and the superiors who are familiar with the investigation. When appropriate, counsel can ask for a meeting in order to obtain a more detailed understanding of the basis of the Wells Call. Such a meeting is especially likely to be appropriate if defense counsel is newly hired in response to the Wells Call.

There is a significant range of practices regarding the extent to which the Staff will provide details regarding the theory and evidence underlying its tentative decision. There are several reasons why the SEC Staff should disclose their concerns and potential arguments to defense counsel. Full disclosure improves the ability of the Senior Staff and the Commission to evaluate the Staff's recommendation after having been tested by a well-informed Wells Submission that carefully addresses the Staff's concerns and arguments. It is in no one's interest for the SEC to institute an enforcement action based on a mistaken view of the evidence or the law. In addition, the more information the Staff provides to defense counsel, the more likely it is that the Staff can persuade defense counsel that prompt settlement is in the best interests of counsel's client. For these reasons, among others, the Staff typically is willing to share information in some detail as they set forth their perception of the evidence and the law during the Wells process.

While a limited amount of defense advocacy is sometimes appropriate, defense counsel's primary goal at this phase of the Wells process is usually to obtain as much information as possible regarding the Staff's view of the evidence and the law. The Staff is likely to be more forthcoming with information if defense counsel is open about the defense view of the evidence and the law. The Staff is also more likely to be forthcoming if defense counsel avoids putting the Staff on the defensive. Defense counsel should strive to keep the discussion civil and pleasant; it is rarely productive to debate the facts with the Staff at this stage.

Unless the witness asserted the Fifth Amendment privilege against self incrimination during the investigation, the Staff will usually provide to defense counsel sufficient information to prepare an effective Wells Submission. If defense counsel is unable to obtain sufficient information, defense counsel should consider speaking with the more senior members of the Staff who are assigned to the investigation.

Counsel should consider also contacting counsel to other individuals and entities believed to be prospective defendants, individuals believed to have provided testimony to the Staff, and individuals and entities believed to have provided documents to the Staff. In addition, defense counsel should contact other individuals and entities who might be able to provide exculpatory evidence.

[3] Deciding Whether to File a Wells Submission

A Wells Submission serves a number of purposes. Ideally, it might persuade either the Staff or the SEC that an enforcement action is not appropriate. Alternatively, the statement might persuade either of them to narrow the scope or change the form of the proposed enforcement action. In addition, the Wells Process often serves as a vehicle for arriving at a more favorable settlement than might otherwise be the case.

In many cases, it will be clear whether the prospective defendant should file a Wells Submission. In some cases, however, the decision whether to file a Wells Submission will be a judgment call based on a number of factors. These factors include:

- counsel's judgment regarding the likelihood that either the Staff or the Commission can be persuaded not to proceed with an enforcement action. A Wells Submission is especially likely to be effective where (1) the prospective defendant is peripheral to the alleged violation; (2) the Staff appears to be proceeding on a mistaken interpretation of the law; or (3) the Staff appears to be proceeding with an understanding of the facts that are not supported by the record. Even if the SEC Staff members appear to be unmovable, a Wells Submission might persuade either senior members of the SEC Staff or the Commissioners that the proposed action should not be pursued.

- counsel's judgment regarding the likelihood that the Wells Submission might persuade either the Staff or the Commission to agree to a settlement that would be acceptable to the prospective defendant. By highlighting evidence that favors the prospective defendant and by identifying the weaknesses in the Staff's position, the Wells Submission might persuade either the Staff or the Commission to agree to a settlement that would be acceptable to the prospective defendant. For example, where the Staff position expressed in the Wells Call involved a fraud charge and a penalty, the Staff might be persuaded through the Wells Process to recommend a settlement involving a charge of negligence.

- the extent to which the filing of an SEC action would have a devastating impact on the career of the prospective defendant/respondent even if he or she ultimately prevails in the enforcement action. For many individuals who are senior executives of publicly owned companies or who are employed by public accounting firms or regulated entities (e.g., broker-dealer firms, investment companies, investment advisors), the very filing of an SEC enforcement action can have severe adverse consequences. Accordingly, it will often be appropriate to file a Wells Submission on behalf of such individuals, even though, in the judgment of counsel, the Wells Submission is unlikely to avoid an enforcement action and might, for the reasons set forth below, reduce the strategic advantage possessed by the prospective defendant in ensuing litigation.

The filing of a Wells Submission may be unnecessary if the Staff and the prospective defendant or respondent have reached a settlement in principle before the Wells Submission is filed. In addition, there are other factors that sometimes indicate that the filing of a Wells Submission would be inappropriate:

- There is little likelihood that the Wells Submission will dissuade the Staff from recommending the proposed action and the Commission from authorizing the action, and the prospective defendant is not inclined to settle. In these circumstances, the prospective defendant might be better advised to conserve resources for litigation and not reveal defense theories prematurely.

- There is a possibility of a criminal prosecution. The Wells Submission might be admissible in a criminal prosecution and often discloses the defense's arguments.

- There are serious deficiencies in the Staff's case that the Staff could cure with relative ease once they are identified in the Wells Submission. The Staff may respond to a Wells Submission by conducting additional discovery to obtain the evidence that was otherwise missing from the record or by modifying the theory of the case in a manner that will make it harder to defend.

[4] Drafting the Wells Submission

Many Wells Submissions contain a summary, a detailed statement of the facts, and factual, legal and policy arguments. Some Wells Submissions argue that even if the Commission authorizes an enforcement action, the Commission should not seek the sanctions sought by the Staff.

In drafting the Wells Submission, defense counsel should bear in mind that the Submission is likely to be reviewed by a number of Commission personnel including:

- the Staff members who conducted the investigation;
- their supervisors, usually including senior members of the Staff; n6
- the Commissioners or their personal legal assistants;
- the SEC Office of the General Counsel; and
- personnel from other relevant divisions or offices (e.g., the Division of Market Regulation in a case involving broker-dealers, trading practices, or market structure, the Office of the Chief Accountant in a case involving accounting or auditing issues).

The appropriate length of the Wells Submission varies according to the complexity of the case. The SEC Staff routinely informs prospective defendants that a Wells Submission should not exceed 40 pages. In most instances, a serious effort should be made to limit the submission to less than 40 pages. In light of its considerable docket, the Commission may not be prepared to review a lengthy document with care.

In Securities Act Release No. 5310, n7 the SEC advises that Wells Submissions are most useful in connection with questions of policy and law and that disagreements regarding factual matters can rarely be resolved through the Wells process. Defense counsel should largely disregard this advice. If the Staff's recommendation is based on an inaccurate or incomplete factual predicate, counsel should discuss the evidentiary flaws. This evidence can be drawn from the record assembled by the Staff during the investigation or from other sources. For example, in an insider trading investigation, it may be appropriate to submit (1) newspaper articles showing that the allegedly nonpublic information was in the public domain; (2) trading records showing that the trades by an alleged tippee were typical of trades previously made by him or her; and (3) an affidavit from the person (e.g., a stockbroker) who, based on publicly available information, recommended the trade to the alleged tippee. Similarly, in an accounting case, it may be appropriate to submit affidavits from experts explaining why the company's accounting was thought to be in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles.

The Wells Submission should set forth the facts that are central to the defense and should address the evidence on which the Staff places substantial reliance. Facts are often more compelling than legal and policy arguments. Even if defense counsel does not dispute the Staff's facts, defense counsel should bring other, mitigating facts to the attention of the Staff and the Commission.

In advance of arguing for the appropriate sanction, defense counsel should review recent settlements to determine whether the enforcement remedy recommended by the Staff is consistent with recent prior settlements. The SEC and the Staff believe that similarly situated defendants should be treated similarly and may be persuaded by an argument based on fairness and consistency.

The Wells Submission may be discoverable and admissible in litigation. n8 A strong argument can be made that a Wells Submission is settlement material and is inadmissible at trial under Federal Rule of Evidence 408. n9 It therefore is often advisable to include in the Wells Submission a footnote indicating that the Submission is being filed for the purpose of resolving the matter without litigation. Defense counsel should understand the danger that the Commission (or other litigants, such as plaintiff shareholders) will attempt to introduce the Wells Submission into evidence.

[5] Following Up With the Staff After Submitting a Wells Submission

The Wells Process does not end with the filing of the Wells Submission. It is important for defense counsel to ascertain whether the Staff's position has shifted in response to the Wells Submission. The Staff sometimes changes its theory in response to arguments set forth in the Wells Submission. While defense counsel can include in the Wells Submission a request that the Staff notify counsel if it materially changes its position after receipt of the Wells Submission, the Staff does not always notify defense counsel of such changes.

Accordingly, after filing the Wells Submission, defense counsel should discuss with the Staff the issues raised in the Wells Submission. Such a discussion will help counsel assure that the Staff understands the defense theory and its implications and identify and address any changes in the Staff's position and any lingering concerns. Similarly, the Staff might articulate its position in a manner that provides new insights into the Staff's view of the case. If counsel gains new insights into the Staff's view of the case or learns that the Staff has altered its theory, defense counsel should consider filing a supplemental Wells Submission.

While senior members of the Staff review the Wells Submissions, they only have a limited amount of time to devote to most Wells Submissions. In appropriate circumstances, a meeting that includes members of the Staff (e.g., Associate Directors, Associate Regional Administrators, members of relevant specialized units, the Chief Counsel of the Division of Enforcement, the Chief Enforcement Accountant) can provide a valuable opportunity to focus the senior Staff on defense arguments unfiltered by the Staff members who have investigated the case for months, or even years. Similarly, a post-filing meeting can provide an opportunity to ensure that representatives of other interested Divisions (e.g., Division of Market Regulation, Division of Corporation Finance, Office of the General Counsel, etc.) focus on the defense.

Defense counsel can also attempt to influence who will attend the meeting. If the matter presents technical issues, it is appropriate to ask whether a representative of another relevant division will attend. For example, if the matter involves GAAS and GAAP issues, it might be appropriate to ask whether representatives of the Office of Chief Accountant plan to attend the meeting. If the presentation will focus on the evidentiary weakness of the case, defense counsel can suggest that a member of the trial unit attend the meeting. Prior to attending the meeting, defense counsel should attempt to learn (1) the Staff's reactions to the Wells Submission and (2) the identity of the SEC personnel who are expected to attend the meeting. This information can assist defense counsel in determining the appropriate focus and emphasis for their presentation.

Defense counsel sometimes prepares a detailed presentation of the defense, including visual aids, designed to engage and hold the interest of the attendees. Sometimes, however, defense counsel simply prepares talking points similar to the presentation that an advocate would make in an oral argument. Counsel should take extreme care to ensure that there is adequate evidence to support each factual point and to base the theory of the defense on a factual background as similar as possible to that described by the Staff as the basis for their preliminary determination. By so doing, defense counsel will minimize clashes with the Staff not needed to advance his or her client's interests.

The provision of the Investment Company Act of 1940 authorizing the SEC to conduct investigations relating to violations of the act requires the Commission to "permit any person to file

CHAPTER 10 SEC Enforcement Practice *

2-10 Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 10.11

§ 10.11 Settlement Discussions

The vast majority of SEC enforcement actions are resolved through settlements. Often these settlements arise from settlement discussions initiated by defense counsel. Whether and when to initiate settlement discussions is one of the most delicate judgments to be made in an SEC investigation.

Defense counsel should consider initiating settlement discussions if it appears likely that the Commission will ultimately authorize an enforcement action. There are two major advantages to initiating early settlement discussions. First, settlement discussions may assist the Staff in focusing the investigation and thereby facilitate an expeditious resolution, which can substantially benefit a company given the burdens that a pending SEC investigation can impose. Second, the Staff may be more flexible in fashioning settlements early in an investigation rather than later in the investigation when the Staff has invested greater resources to the investigation and the Staff's views have hardened.

On the other hand, the initiation of settlement discussions may embolden the Staff and the Commission, reducing the likelihood that the Staff will be persuaded not to recommend enforcement action or that the Commission will be persuaded not to authorize an enforcement action. n1 In addition, there is no guarantee that the Staff will accept an early settlement offer, especially if the proposed settlement offer covers only a limited number of the potential defendants.

There are a number of factors that encourage settlement irrespective of the strength or weakness of the Commission's case. The legal fees, and other costs incurred in litigating against the SEC, are likely to be substantial. If the enforcement action is filed in federal court, there is likely to be extensive discovery. The adverse publicity generated from the filing of a settled SEC enforcement action arguably is not substantially greater than the adverse publicity initially generated by a litigated enforcement action, and the litigation of the enforcement action can result in continuing adverse publicity. In addition, adverse findings in the enforcement litigation are likely to be binding on the litigating defendants in any private actions brought by shareholders. The Supreme Court has held that where private plaintiffs sue a defendant against whom the SEC has obtained a judgment in a litigated (as opposed to settled) injunctive action, the plaintiffs could use the doctrine of offensive collateral estoppel to preclude the defendant from relitigating in the private litigation the issues necessarily decided in the enforcement action. n2 Moreover, from the perspective of a regulated entity or an issuer, the litigation of the enforcement action can have an adverse impact on relations with other divisions of the SEC.

A number of subjects are typically open for discussion in settlement discussions, including: (1) the type of enforcement action (e.g., a cease-and-desist action versus an injunctive action); (2) the substantive charges (e.g., violations of the reporting provisions of the Exchange Act versus violations of the antifraud provisions); (3) the language of the charging document (e.g., the defendant might seek to soften inflammatory language or to include mitigating language); (4) the amount of the disgorgement (the amount of disgorgement is often a subject of legitimate debate); (5) the amount of monetary penalties (in negotiating penalties, it is helpful to review recent precedents set by other settlements or litigated matters); and (6) waivers from certain collateral consequences (e.g., in an enforcement action against a broker-dealer, the Staff will often agree to waive the application of Section 9(a) of the Investment Company Act). Companies can also seek to limit the extent to which the SEC brings enforcement actions against company personnel.

In settling an enforcement action, the SEC generally will permit the defendant to settle without admitting or denying any substantive allegations. SEC rules set forth the policy of the Commission "not to permit a defendant or respondent to consent to a judgment or order that imposes a sanction while denying the allegations in the complaint or order for proceeding." n3 Pursuant to this policy, the Staff requires that a settling defendant agree to the inclusion of the following language in the settling defendant's consent to the settlement:

In compliance with this policy, [settling defendant] agrees not to take any action or to make or permit to be made any public statement denying, directly or indirectly, any allegation in the Complaint or creating the impression that the Complaint is without factual basis. If [settling defendant] breaches this agreement, the Commission may petition the Court to vacate the Judgment and restore this case to its active docket. Nothing in this provision affects [settling defendant's]: (i) testimonial obligations; or (ii) right to take legal positions in proceedings in which the Commission or the United States is not a party.

The Staff requires similar language in settlements of administrative proceedings.

The Staff seeks Commission authorization to file or institute an enforcement action by means of an action memorandum that sets forth the Staff's recommendation and the factual and legal basis for that recommendation. The Staff must obtain the authorization of either a Deputy Director or the Enforcement Director before submitting an action memorandum to the Commission. n1 The Commission's consideration of the action memorandum typically takes place in a meeting of the Commissioners at which the Division Staff, but not defense counsel, are present.

CHAPTER 10 SEC Enforcement Practice *

2-10 Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 10.13

§ 10.13 Enforcement Remedies

The SEC has access to a wide array of enforcement remedies. The SEC has authority to bring enforcement proceeding in federal court or in the Commission's administrative forum.

[1] Federal Court Enforcement Actions

The SEC can ask a federal court to issue an order imposing monetary penalties, enjoining the defendant from violating the relevant provisions of the federal securities laws, and imposing other equitable relief. In actions against persons who participated in a penny stock offering, the SEC can seek an order prohibiting that person from participating in penny stock offerings. In actions charging violations of the antifraud provisions, the SEC can seek an order barring the defendant from serving as an officer or director of a public company. In certain circumstances, the SEC can also seek a temporary order freezing the assets of a public company that the SEC believes is likely to make extraordinary payments to its directors, officers, partners, controlling persons, agents or employees.

[a] Injunctive Relief

Historically, the SEC relied primarily on civil injunctive actions in matters that did not involve broker-dealers or investment advisers. § Securities Act §§ 20(b) and 22(a) authorizes the SEC to bring an action in federal district court whenever "it shall appear ... that any person is engaged or about to engage in acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of the provisions of this title, or of any rule or regulation prescribed under authority thereof." n1 §

In order to obtain an injunction, the SEC must do more than establish that the defendant violated the federal securities laws. n2 Courts have articulated a variety of standards regarding the additional burden that the SEC must meet, such as stated that an injunction is appropriate only when the SEC has showing that "a reasonable likelihood exists" that a future violation would occur absent an injunction, n3 a "reasonable and substantial" likelihood exists that future violations will occur, or a "substantial likelihood" exists of future violations." n4.

It has been held that the SEC, unlike private plaintiffs, need not prove reliance on alleged misrepresentations in order to enjoin future violations of § 17(a) of the Securities Act.

[b] Disgorgement of Unjust Enrichment

Pursuant to their power to grant equitable relief, courts order defendants to disgorge profits obtained as a result of securities law violations. n5 Disgorgement is a particularly common remedy in proceedings involving insider trading or stock manipulation. n6 More recently the SEC has sought disgorgement from individuals of bonuses, other incentive compensation and stock profits attributable to inflated financial statements. The SEC sometimes also seeks disgorgement of compensation paid to employees, of fees paid to professional or investment banking firms and of proceeds of offerings raised through the use of fraudulent offering materials.

[c] Temporary Freezes

In the Sarbanes-Oxley Act of 2002, Congress gives the Commission authority to seek a temporary order against extraordinary payments by an issuer to any officer, director, agent or employee of any issuer under investigation for the violation of the federal securities laws. n7 In rendering the first appellate opinion addressing the foregoing, the Ninth Circuit, en banc panel, approved a broad interpretation of this provision. n8

[d] Other Ancillary Equitable Relief

The Sarbanes-Oxley Act of 2002 amended the Exchange Act to provide expressly that in any action or proceeding instituted by the SEC under any provision of the securities laws, the SEC may seek, and any federal court may grant, any equitable relief that may be appropriate or necessary for the benefit of investors. n9

[e] Disclosure

In a number of proceedings, the SEC has obtained a court order directing an issuer to make curative disclosures. n10 This remedy can have substantial collateral consequences. For example, the SEC sometimes obtains as part of a settlement a court order directing the issuer to correct previously issued financial statements that the SEC has alleged to be materially misstated. Even though the defendant has consented to entry of the order without admitting or denying any allegations, the act of restating financial statements arguably constitutes an admission that the previously issued financial statements were in error and that the restated financial statements are fairly stated.

Under § 304 of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act of 2002, if an issuer restates its financial statements, the CEO and the CFO might be required to reimburse the issuer for certain incentive-based and equity based compensation and certain stock profits.

[f] Civil Penalties

Prior to 1990, the SEC had only limited authority to seek fines or penalties. The most significant of the statutes conferring fining authority on the courts prior to 1990 was the Insider Trading Sanctions Act ("ITSA"), as amended by the Insider Trading Securities Fraud Enforcement Act ("ITSFEA"), which authorizes the SEC to seek, and the courts to impose, fines up to the greater of $1,000,000, or three times the profit gained or loss avoided as a result of the violations. n11 These fines are imposed against persons who violate the Exchange Act by purchasing or selling security while in possession of material, nonpublic information, or by communicating such information, or, with respect to controlling persons of issuers, acting with reckless disregard of the risk of insider trading in the issuer's securities.

In 1990, Congress enacted the Securities Enforcement Remedies Act of 1990 (the "Remedies Act") and Penny Stock Reform, n12 which amended the Securities Act, the Exchange Act, the Investment Company Act and the Investment Advisers Act in order, inter alia, to authorize courts to impose penalties for violations of any of the provisions of the federal securities laws upon a proper showing by the SEC. n13 The legislative history indicates that the primary purpose of the monetary penalties was deterrence. n14 The amendments to the Securities Act and the Exchange Act exempt from the civil penalty provisions of the Remedies Act insider trading violations that are subject to penalties pursuant to § 21A of the Exchange Act.

Like the other federal securities laws, the Securities Act authorizes the Commission to seek fines and remedies in a district court. n15 These fines operate in a three-tiered structure that punishes fraud and deceit most severely. n16 Each separate violation of a cease-and-desist order is considered a separate defense and each day violation a cease-and-desist order is also a separate offense. n17

[g] Orders Barring Service as an Officer or Director of a Public Company

Under § 20(e) of the Exchange Act, a court in an SEC enforcement action may bar a defendant from serving as an officer or director of a public company where it finds that the defendant has violated antifraud provisions of the federal securities laws including § 17(a)(1) of the Securities Act, and the defendant's "conduct demonstrates unfitness to serve as an officer or director." n18 In testifying on behalf of the bar authority, then-SEC Chairman Richard Breeden told Congress that the Commission would seek the remedy "only in those cases ... that involve egregious fraudulent conduct." n19

In 2002, SEC enforcement officials publicly complained about the reluctance of courts to bar individuals from serving as officers and directors of public companies. n20 In apparent response to these complaints, the Sarbanes-Oxley Act of 2002 amended the Exchange Act and Securities Act to change the statutory standard from "substantial unfitness" to "unfitness." n21 The SEC is likely to argue that this amendment was intended to lower the threshold for barring individuals from serving as officers and directors of public companies. Indeed, the Commission has sought officer and director bars far more frequently since the Sarbanes-Oxley Act was adopted. n22

[h] Penny Stock Bars

Section 21(d) of the Exchange Act n23 and Section 20(g) of the Securities Act of 1933, n24 as amended by the Sarbanes-Oxley Act of 2002, authorize a court to prohibit any person who engaged in misconduct in the offering of a penny stock from participating in the offering of a penny stock, conditionally or unconditionally for such period of time as the court deems appropriate. n25 This amendment effectively authorized the courts to grant a form of relief that the SEC was already authorized to issue in administrative proceedings.

[2] Administrative Remedies Against Regulated Persons

[a] Bars and Other Limitations

The Securities Act, like other federal securities laws, provides for officer and director bars in connection with scienter-based violations. The Securities Act also authorizes the Commission to impose such bars in connection with cease-and-desist proceedings. n26 The bar may be permanent or for a shorter period and may be conditional or unconditional. n27

[b] Monetary Penalties and Disgorgement

In addition to its power to sanction regulated entities, the SEC is authorized to impose money penalties in administrative proceedings against regulated entities, persons affiliated with those entities, and persons associated with penny stock offerings. n28 The same three-tier structure of penalties applies here as in a civil injunctive action. n29

The SEC also possesses the authority to order an accounting and disgorgement from regulated entities, persons associated with those entities, and persons associated with penny stock offerings. n30 While the presence of illicit gains is a factor to consider in assessing penalties in administrative proceedings, this disgorgement provision gives the Commission direct authority to reclaim illegal profits. Prior to the Remedies Act, this option was available to the SEC only through the courts.

[3] Other Administrative Remedies

[a] Cease-and-Desist Remedies

Under the Remedies Act, the SEC has broad powers to issue an order requiring that a person cease-and-desist from committing the violation or any future violation of the same provision, rule, or regulation. The Commission may enter an administrative cease-and-desist order against any person that is, was, or is about to violate any provision of the federal securities laws and any person "that is, was, or would be a cause of the violation due to an act or omission the person knew or should have known would contribute to the violation." n31

The legislative history of the Remedies Act indicates that Congress provided the cease-and-desist remedy as an alternative remedy that permits flexibility to address violations that do not warrant injunctions or the collateral consequences of an injunction. n32 The House Report noted that it would be appropriate for the SEC to use the cease-and-desist remedy against persons "who commit isolated infractions and present a lesser threat to investors" and to avoid protracted litigation or settlement negotiations resulting from concerns regarding the severe collateral consequences that may arise from an injunction. n33

The Commission and the D.C. Circuit have taken the position that to issue a cease-and-desist order, there must be "some likelihood of future violations." n34 This requires a showing of likelihood considerably less stringent than that required for an injunction to issue. However, because the nature of the cease-and-desist remedy is inherently forward-looking, if there is no possible risk of future harm, then the imposition of a cease-and-desist order is unwarranted.

Furthermore, the Securities Act authorizes the Commission to publish its findings and enter an order to cease-and-desist from any violation of the Securities Act. n35 Using these provisions, the Commission must hold a hearing between thirty and sixty days after the service of the notice. n36 Additionally, the Commission may order a temporary order if there is the likelihood of substantial harm. This temporary order, however, is limited to brokers, dealers, and investment companies.

[b] Accounting and Disgorgement

In any administrative proceeding to obtain a cease-and-desist order, the SEC may also enter an order "requiring accounting and disgorgement." n37

[c] Temporary Cease-and-Desist Authority

The SEC has the authority under § 8A(c) of the Securities Act to issue temporary orders against regulated entities (brokers, dealers, investment advisers, investment companies, municipal securities dealers, government securities brokers, or transfer agents) and persons associated or seeking to become associated with such entities. n38 In 2002, the Sarbanes-Oxley Act § 3(b)(3) amended Exchange Act § 21C(c)(2) to authorize the Commission to issue temporary cease-and-desist orders against "registered public accounting firms" as well. n39 The same findings required for issuance of a permanent order must also be made before issuance of a temporary order. Additionally, the SEC must find that the violation giving rise to the order "is likely to result in significant dissipation or conversion of assets, significant harm to investors, or substantial harm to the public interest" to warrant the temporary order. n40

[d] Administrative Orders Barring Service as an Officer or Director of a Public Company

By the Sarbanes-Oxley Act of 2002, Congress amended the Exchange Act and the Securities Act to authorize the SEC to prohibit a person from serving as an officer or director of a public company if that person violated Exchange Act § 10(b), any rule thereunder, or Securities Act § 17(a)(1) and the conduct of that person demonstrates "unfitness" to serve as an officer or director of the public company. n41

[e] Refusal Orders, Stop Orders, and Examinations

Sections 8(b) and 8(d) of the Securities Act authorize the SEC to issue refusal orders and stop orders, respectively. Both sections provide that if the Commission finds that a registration statement is defective, it may issue an order preventing the statement from becoming effective.

[f] Disciplining Professionals Who Practice Before the Commission

The SEC has long asserted authority over professionals who practice before the Commission. Historically, the SEC based this authority on Rule 2(e) of the SEC Rules of Practice. In 1995, the SEC recodified its Rules of Practice, and Rule 2(e) became Rule 102(e). The Sarbanes-Oxley Act of 2002 amends the Exchange Act to incorporate Rule 102(e)(1) into the Exchange Act. n42

The SEC has interpreted the phrase "practicing before the Commission" broadly. For example, the SEC has found that such practice includes an attorney providing legal advice regarding the securities laws. n43 Accordingly, the SEC has sanctioned an attorney pursuant to Rule 2(e) where the attorney made a misrepresentation in a letter to an escrow settlement that had been established in connection with a registered offering of securities, even though it was not clear that the respondent was even practicing securities law in rendering advice to the escrow agent. n44 As to accountants, the SEC has indicated that the term at issue includes the preparation of financial statements to be filed with the SEC by inside accountants, as well as the audit or review of such financial statements. n45

Section 4C and SEC Rule of Practice 102(e)(1) give the Commission authority to "censure any person, or deny, temporarily or permanently, to any person the privilege of practicing before the Commission" if, after notice and opportunity for a hearing, that person is found:

- not to possess the requisite qualifications to represent others; or
- to be lacking in character or integrity, or to have engaged in unethical or improper professional conduct; or
- to have willfully violated, or willfully aided and abetted the violation of the securities laws and regulations thereunder.

Both the statute and the rule provide that for licensed accountants "improper professional conduct" includes "intentional or knowing conduct, including reckless conduct, that results in a violation of the applicable professional standards." n46 In addition to intentional or reckless misconduct, the statute also provides that "negligent conduct in the form of ... a single instance of highly unreasonable conduct that results in a violation of applicable professional standards" or "repeated instances of unreasonable conduct ... that indicate a lack of competence to practice before the Commission" are grounds for censure or bar a licensed accountant from practice before the Commission.

Under the Rule of Practice 102(e)(2), any attorney, accountant, or engineer whose license to practice has been revoked in any state, or who has been convicted of a felony or crime involving moral turpitude, is automatically suspended from appearing or practicing before the SEC. n47

In general, the SEC may suspend or bar a person only after notice and hearing. Under Rule of Practice 102(e)(3), the SEC may, however, suspend from appearing or practicing before it any attorney, accountant, engineer, or other professional or expert who has been by name:

- (1) permanently enjoined by any court of competent jurisdiction, by reason of his or her misconduct in an action brought by the Commission, from violating or aiding and abetting the violation of any provision of the Federal securities laws or of the rules and regulations thereunder; or

(2) found by any court of competent jurisdiction in any action brought by the Commission to which he or she is a party or found by the Commission in any administrative proceeding to which he or she is a party to have violated (unless the violation was found not to have been willful) or aided and abetted the violation of any provision of the Federal securities laws or of the rules and regulations thereunder. n48

The order of temporary suspension may not be entered by the Commission more than 90 days after the date on which the final judgment or order entered in the judicial or administrative proceeding has become effective, whether upon completion of review or appeal procedures, or because further review or appeal procedures are no longer available. n49

[g] Deferred Prosecution Agreements and Non-Prosecution Agreements

In 2010, the Enforcement Division amended its Manual to set forth two remedies that are analogous to remedies that federal prosecutors had been using extensively for the past decade: deferred prosecution agreements and non-prosecution agreements. The SEC can enter into deferred prosecution agreements and non-prosecution agreements only with the approval of the Commission.

The Enforcement Manual provides that a deferred prosecution agreement is a written agreement between the Commission and a potential cooperating individual or company in which the Commission agrees to forego an enforcement action against the individual or company if the individual or company agrees to, among other things: 1) cooperate truthfully and fully in the Commission's investigation and related enforcement actions; 2) enter into a long-term tolling agreement; 3) comply with express prohibitions and/or undertakings during a period of deferred prosecution; and 4) under certain circumstances, agree either to admit or not to contest underlying facts that the Commission could assert to establish a violation of the federal securities laws. n50 Under the terms of the agreement, if the agreement is violated during the period of deferred prosecution, the Staff may recommend to the Commission--and the Commission may authorize--an enforcement action against the individual or company for the original misconduct as well as any additional misconduct. Furthermore, if the Commission authorizes the enforcement action, the Staff may use any factual admissions made by the cooperating individual or company to file a motion for summary judgment, while retaining the ability to bring an enforcement action for any additional misconduct at a later date. Deferred prosecution agreements must be approved by the Commission.

Like deferred-prosecution agreements, non-prosecution agreements are agreements in which the Commission agrees not to pursue an enforcement action against the company or individual and the company or individual agrees to cooperate fully with the SEC and makes certain other undertakings (e.g., payment of disgorgement or civil penalties) and the Staff retains the ability to recommend--and the Commission retains the authority to authorize--an enforcement action if the company or individual violates the agreement. Unlike deferred prosecution agreements, non-prosecution agreements typically do not include an agreement to admit (or not contest) certain facts and does not include a tolling agreement.

§ 10.14 Closing an Investigation

The Staff sometimes closes an investigation without any enforcement action. In deciding whether to close an investigation without an enforcement action, the Staff is to consider such factors as: the seriousness of the potential violations; the Staff resources available to pursue the investigation; the sufficiency of the evidence; and the age of the conduct underlying the potential violations. n1 The SEC manual provides that once a decision has been made to close an investigation, the Staff should (1) prepare a short closing memorandum summarizing what the Staff did in the investigation and (2) prepare and send appropriate termination notices. In addition, the Staff is to send a termination notice to an individual or entity when the Staff has decided not to recommend an enforcement action against that individual or entity, even if the investigation has not been closed. n2

§ 10.15 Conclusion

The enormous increase in the stakes associated with SEC enforcement has highlighted the importance of responding carefully to SEC investigations. From the initial indication of potential wrongdoing or the initial contact from the Staff through the production of documents and the provision of testimony to the Wells process and, perhaps, the settlement discussions, each step of the response is filled with opportunity and fraught with peril. Armed with knowledge of the SEC process, experience with potential challenges, and insights into the Staff's perspectives, counsel may be able to help clients maximize the opportunities and minimize the risks.

CHAPTER 11 Criminal Enforcement of the Federal Securities Act

2-11 Federal Securities Act of 1933

AUTHOR: Thomas A. Ferrigno and Matthew H. Kirtland

Summary of This Chapter

Persons or companies under investigation by the Securities and Exchange Commission (the "SEC" or "Commission") may be potential criminal defendants because the SEC regularly refers evidence of violations of the Securities Act of 1933 (the "Securities Act") to the Department of Justice (the "DOJ") for criminal prosecution. In the absence of highly unusual circumstances, there is no prohibition against such referrals. Likewise, in the absence of substantial prejudice to a defendant, the government may bring simultaneous civil and criminal actions to enforce the Securities Act. See § 11.01 infra.

Section 24 of the Securities Act provides criminal penalties for willful violations of it or of the rules and regulations promulgated thereunder. It also prohibits a person from willfully making any untrue statement of material fact in a registration statement or from omitting to state any material fact required to make a registration statement not misleading. Most prosecutions under Section 24 concern willful violations of Section 5(a) (sale of unregistered securities) and Section 17(a) (fraud in connection with the offer and sale of securities). See § 11.02 infra.

Criminal prosecutions under the Securities Act frequently include charges under other criminal statutes. The most commonly joined offenses are for mail fraud, wire fraud, and conspiracy. Other relevant statutes concern aiding and abetting, false statements, perjury, and racketeering. See § 11.03 infra.

A five-year statute of limitations applies to prosecutions under the Securities Act. As a general rule, the limitations period begins to run when the crime is complete. There is an exception, however, for ongoing criminal schemes. See § 11.04 infra.

The United States district courts have exclusive jurisdiction over prosecutions under the Securities Act. This jurisdiction covers cases even where some of the allegedly criminal conduct occurred outside of the United States. Finally, the venue provisions applicable to Securities Act prosecutions frequently give the government a choice among several district courts for seeking an indictment. See § 11.05 infra.

In 2002, Congress passed the Sarbanes-Oxley Act which, among other things, creates new criminal securities fraud offenses as well as modifies existing laws that traditionally have been used to prosecute securities fraud. See § 11.06 infra.

This chapter will begin with an examination of the manner in which the SEC refers cases to the DOJ for criminal prosecution. It will then discuss the elements of criminal offenses under the Securities Act. Particular attention will be given to the "willfulness" requirement. A brief analysis of other criminal statutes that frequently are implicated in Securities Act prosecutions will follow. The chapter will then discuss the statute of limitations for criminal prosecutions under the Securities Act and conclude with a review of jurisdictional and venue provisions applicable to criminal prosecutions.

CHAPTER 11 Criminal Enforcement of the Federal Securities Act

2-11 Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 11.01

AUTHOR: Thomas A. Ferrigno and Matthew H. Kirtland

§ 11.01 Criminal Referrals from the SEC to the Department of Justice

Any investigation commenced by the SEC could result in a potential criminal prosecution. Section 20(b) of the Securities Act n1 empowers the Commission to "transmit such evidence as may be available concerning ... acts or practices [that may violate the Act] to the Attorney General who may, in his [or her] discretion, institute the necessary criminal proceedings under this title." n2 The Commission's formal process for making criminal referrals to the DOJ involves a recommendation from the Division of Enforcement to the Commission and review by the SEC General Counsel. n3 In addition to the formal criminal referral process, SEC staff members are permitted to discuss nonpublic investigations with prosecutors if authorized to do so by an official at the level of Assistant Director or higher in one of the SEC Divisions, or by an official in a regional office at the level of Assistant Regional Director or District Administrator or higher. n4 SEC staff may also share information in its investigatory files with prosecutors. n5 A number of cases have acknowledged the propriety of simultaneous SEC and DOJ investigations. n6 Accordingly, it is not unusual for SEC staff members to make informal referrals during the course of a preliminary investigation, and there is no statutory or regulatory impediment to such action. n7

There may, however, be situations where a criminal referral infringes a defendant's constitutional rights. For example, in United States v. Rodman, n8 the SEC not only made a criminal referral in violation of a promise that it would "strongly recommend" against prosecution, but it also obtained and forwarded to federal prosecutors incriminating evidence given by the defendant in reliance on that promise. Affirming the district court's dismissal of the defendant's indictment, the appellate court held that "[i]n light of the failure of the SEC to comply with what the district court found to be its agreement, the district court's view that the unfairness to the appellee warranted dismissal of the indictment was not an abuse of the court's supervisory function." n9 In United States v. Fields, however, the court called Rodman "the rare case" n10 and held that, in the absence of prejudice to the defendant or of widespread or continuous official misconduct, conduct of SEC employees in concealing their criminal referral while negotiating a civil consent decree, albeit improper, did not justify dismissal of the subsequent indictment. n11

As a general rule, "[i]n the absence of substantial prejudice to the rights of the parties involved, simultaneous or successive prosecution of civil and criminal actions [also] is unobjectionable." n12 In other words, the criminal defendant has "the burden of showing that the civil investigation was conducted in 'bad faith' and solely for the purpose of obtaining criminal evidence." n13 Moreover, it has been held that civil investigators act in good faith if there is a non-criminal purpose to their investigation, even if the information gleaned is later used for criminal enforcement purposes. n14 Despite this substantial burden on the defendant and presumption of good faith, one recent case, United States v. Scrushy n15 held that the SEC and the DOJ were working together improperly because discovery mechanisms in the civil investigation were being used to gather evidence for the criminal investigation. In Scrushy, the defendants were unaware of a prospective criminal proceeding when they agreed to provide testimony to the SEC. The court characterized the merger of the proceedings as a departure "from the proper administration of criminal justice." Although this case could be viewed as evidence of district courts' willingness to entertain challenges to improper parallel proceedings, a more recent case that discusses Scrushy has viewed it as distinguishable because of the egregious government misconduct involved, including the government's actively concealing the existence of the criminal investigations from the defendants in order to continue obtaining discovery through the civil investigations. n16 Even if a court finds no objection to simultaneous criminal and civil proceedings, it may order the SEC not to furnish non-public information to the DOJ. n17

For various reasons, referrals may result in successful criminal prosecution notwithstanding the SEC's inability to obtain relief that it seeks in the parallel civil actions. For example, a defendant's avoidance of an SEC injunction does not guarantee victory in a criminal proceeding concerning the same transactions; a court may decline to enter an injunction because the SEC failed to establish a reasonable likelihood of future violations even though it did establish a violation. Similarly, in United States v. Mumford, n18 the Fourth Circuit affirmed the denial of a motion to dismiss the indictment, which the defendant made on the grounds that a prior court decision denying the SEC's petition for injunctive relief was res judicata. The court explained:

The SEC complaint was for prospective injunctive relief, an equitable action which is in many respects sui generis. This trial is a criminal action. Since the two proceedings do not present the same cause of action, res judicata does not bar the criminal prosecution ... n19

Likewise, the court held that the SEC's civil defeat did not collaterally estop the government from litigating the issue of the defendant's past criminal violations:

The only issue actually litigated in the SEC action was the likelihood that [the defendant] would engage in future SEC violations. Since the two proceedings addressed different issues, collateral estoppel does not apply. n20

Accordingly, the SEC and the DOJ, in many ways, have independent bites at the apple. However, in United States v. Rogers, it was held that criminal proceedings were estopped by a prior civil enforcement action. n21 Nonetheless, it should be noted that while Rogers distinguishes Mumford, there is no case precedent that dictates that a victory in a civil action will assure dismissal of a criminal indictment.

CHAPTER 11 Criminal Enforcement of the Federal Securities Act

2-11 Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 11.02

AUTHOR: Thomas A. Ferrigno and Matthew H. Kirtland

§ 11.02 Elements of a Criminal Offense Under Section 24 of the Securities Act

Offenses under the Securities Act are made criminal by Section 24, which provides:

Any person who willfully violates any of the provisions of this title, or the rules and regulations promulgated by the Commission under authority thereof, or any person who willfully, in a registration statement filed under this title, makes any untrue statement of a material fact or omits to state any material fact required to be stated therein or necessary to make the statements therein not misleading, shall upon conviction be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both. n1

Section 24 creates two broad categories of criminal transgressions. n2 The first is for "willful" violations of any other provisions of the Securities Act or of the rules and regulations promulgated thereunder by the SEC. For purposes of reference, those activities, the willful commission of which may subject persons to criminal prosecution under the Securities Act, are listed in the footnotes. n3

The statutory provisions most frequently cited in criminal prosecutions under Section 24 are Section 5(a) (sale of unregistered securities) and Section 17(a) (fraud in connection with the offer and sale of securities). The second category of offenses provided under Section 24 is for "willful" misrepresentations in a registration statement filed with the SEC under the Securities Act. Accordingly, any discussion of Section 24 must begin with an analysis of the requirement of "willfulness."

[1] "Willfulness"

[a] Specific Versus General Intent. No one can be convicted under Section 24 of the Securities Act unless the government can prove that he or she acted "willfully." Unfortunately, it is easier to state what is not required to prove willfulness than to state what is required. n4 For example, it has long been established "that in proving that a defendant acted knowingly and wilfully [sic] it [is] not necessary for the defendant to know that he [is] breaking 'any particular law or any particular rule'." n5 It also has been held that a defendant can be convicted for willfully violating Section 17(a)(1) of the Securities Act even if he or she does not know that he or she is dealing with a "security," as that term is defined in Section 2(1) of the Securities Act. Likewise, a defendant may be found to have acted willfully even if he or she did not know that his or her illegal act would make use of the mails as long as "the use of the mails ... should have been foreseen and contemplated." n6 Two Supreme Court decisions suggest that willful violations require some appreciation of illegality. In Ratzlaf v. United States, the Supreme Court reversed a conviction for willful violation of an anti-structuring provision because it was not clear that the defendant knew his conduct was illegal. n7 The Court extended this logic four years later when it held in Bryan v. United States that a street-corner gun dealer could be convicted of willfully violating a licensing requirement because "[t]he evidence was unquestionably adequate to prove ... that he knew that his conduct was unlawful," even if he was unaware of the specific licensing statute. n8 The Ratzlaf and Bryan decisions suggest that Section 24 requires knowledge of unlawfulness. However, the Supreme Court has also observed that willful is a " 'word of many meanings' and 'its construction is often influenced by its context.' " n9 The Court has yet to define the precise meaning of the word in the securities context and some lower courts have resisted applying the Ratzlaf and Bryan construction of willfulness in cases considering violations of the Securities Act and the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (the "Exchange Act").

In a case decided after Ratzlaf and before Bryan, the Ninth Circuit considered the definition of willfulness under Sections 17(a) and 24 of the Securities Act, and held that, unlike the Ratzlaf definition, willfulness in this context does not require proving that the defendant knew his conduct was illegal. n10 A similar result was reached by the Ninth Circuit in United States v. Tarallo n11 with respect to the definition of willfulness in Section 32(a) of the Exchange Act, the provision which criminalizes violations under that Act. There the court stated: "[u]nder our jurisprudence, then, 'willfully' as it is used in [Section 32(a)] means intentionally undertaking an act that one knows to be wrongful; 'willfully' in this context does not require that the actor know specifically that the conduct was unlawful." n12

Although willfulness is not equivalent to a specific intent to violate the law, the term does require some level of guilty knowledge. This requires a jury to ascertain the condition of the defendant's mind at the time of the alleged violation. n13 "Since the condition of the mind is rarely susceptible of direct proof, recourse must be had to all pertinent circumstances." n14

An easy case is provided by United States v. Custer Channel Wing Corp. n15 In this case, the defendants were convicted of criminal contempt n16 for disobeying a previously issued injunction that prohibited them from selling unregistered securities in violation of Section 5 of the Securities Act. Under these circumstances, the court of appeals had no trouble finding sufficient evidence of willfulness to support the convictions:

The appellants had already breached the law and had been enjoined not to do so again; yet they knowingly repeated the selfsame forbidden acts. It is not consonant with reason, in these circumstances, to demand a more explicit demonstration of an evil mind in order to sustain the conviction for criminal contempt. n17

In United States v. Dinneen, n18 the Tenth Circuit also concluded that the defendant's violation of an injunction against the sale of unregistered stock automatically satisfied the willfulness requirement of Section 24, at least where "personal service was made on [the defendant] of the preliminary injunction prior to the [questioned] transaction [and the] wording of the injunction plainly indicated the lack of registration." The Eighth Circuit reached a similar conclusion in United States v. Prugh:

In view of Prugh's prior experience in the securities field it seems reasonable to presume that he would know whether the securities he purchased [and resold] were properly registered or not. If uncertain, he knew how to check on the registration. In view of the injunction which was entered against him it was incumbent on him to determine if his transactions were in violation of the terms of that injunction. n19

In other words, his failure to do so showed a reckless disregard for the legality or illegality of his actions. n20 Thus, "[t]he Government was not required to show that Prugh knew that he was violating the terms of the injunction ... but only to prove that he intentionally conducted the proscribed stock transactions." n21

As these cases demonstrate, a criminal defendant who is under prior injunctive restraint "cannot possibly be fitted into the pattern of an innocent stumbling into an unintended transgression." n22 The injunctions "pointedly brought to the defendants' attention their past infraction[s] ... and laid down a specific admonitory prescription to guide their future course... thus warned, they should have been more than normally careful in their behavior not to repeat the offense[s]." n23

Another issue is the possibility that scienter standards developed in the SEC civil context may be imported into a criminal proceeding to analyze willfulness. For example, Section 17(a)(1), under which most criminal prosecutions are brought, prohibits the employment of "any device, scheme or artifice to defraud" in relation to an offer or sale of securities. n24 In Aaron v. Securities and Exchange Commission, n25 the Supreme Court held that proof of scienter -- "a mental state embracing intent to deceive, manipulate, or defraud"-- is required to prove a violation of Section 17(a)(1) in an SEC injunctive action, but not to prove violations of Sections 17(a)(2) or 17(a)(3). n26 In a 1982 decision, United States v. Boyer, n27 the Third Circuit suggested that the mental element of the offense in civil and criminal cases under the Securities Act should be the same. Accordingly, in a criminal prosecution under Section 17(a)(1), evidence of scienter could be required to establish willfulness. n28

Specific intent under Section 17(a)(1) can be established by evidence that a defendant sold securities with a recommendation that they were a "good investment" in spite of his or her knowledge of the issuer's precarious financial condition. n29 Specific intent under Section 17(a) also can be established by evidence that the defendant acted with reckless disregard for the truth or falsity of his or her statements. n30

A different standard of willfulness is used in prosecutions under Section 5 of the Securities Act. "Fraud is not a necessary constituent of" this offense. n31 Accordingly, willfulness can be established simply by proving that the defendant knew "the facts which constitute [the] statutory violation." n32 In United States v. Hill, this was shown by evidence that (1) the defendant caused the unregistered securities to be sold and (2) he knew that registration was required. n33 In another case, it was held that evidence that the defendant did not register the securities in order to conceal a fraudulent scheme would also establish "willfulness" under Sections 5 and 24. n34

[b] The "Knew or Should Have Known" Standard. Since at least 1964, a "knew or should have known" standard has been used to prove "willfulness" in criminal prosecutions under the Securities Act. In United States v. Benjamin, n35 the Second Circuit considered the claims of an accountant, an attorney, and a promoter who had grossly misrepresented the activities and financial condition of the issuer. Claiming that their misrepresentations had been made in ignorance of the true facts, the defendants disputed the finding of willfulness by the trial court. The court of appeals, however, found that the government had amply proved willfulness, stating "that in the context of § 24 of the Securities Act as applied to § 17(a), the Government can meet its burden by proving that a defendant deliberately closed his eyes to facts he had a duty to see or recklessly stated as facts things of which he was ignorant." n36 The court opined that Congress did not intend for professionals to "be able to escape criminal liability on a plea of ignorance when they have shut their eyes to what was plainly to be seen" n37

[c] The Professional Advice Defense. One of the most common defenses to a prosecution under Section 24 is the claim that the violation was caused by good faith reliance upon professional advice from an attorney or accountant. The rationale behind this defense is that a belief that one's actions are legal negates any finding of willfulness in violation of the law. Courts have uniformly held that advice of counsel under these circumstances does not provide a complete or automatic defense, but that it may, on a case-by-case basis, exculpate the person relying on the advice. n38 It has been held, however, that while reliance on advice of counsel may provide a valid defense if "the crime requires specific intent, it does not if only knowledge of the facts is required." n39

For example, in United States v. Crosby, n40 three brokers were found guilty of willfully selling unregistered securities in violation of Section 5(a). These brokers, however, repeatedly had received legal advice that "the stock was exempt from registration and free for trading." n41 The Second Circuit overturned their convictions, finding that the defendants' procurement and reliance on this advice was in good faith and precluded a finding of willfulness. The court rejected the government's insistence that there had been no real reliance on the legal advice or that the advice had not actually blinded the brokers to the illegality of their acts. Although there had been a large number of stock sales, a stock dividend declared after the acquisition of a company, and frequent meetings between the brokers and corporate officials, the court dismissed each of these as normal business conduct. n42

The Crosby case, then, sets up a framework for the advice of counsel defense: if the advice is credible, complete, and accepted in good faith, it can negate any "willfulness" in a technical violation of the law. n43 Legal advice will not exculpate where there is evidence to infer that the defendant truly understood the illegality of the activity, regardless of the advice. n44 In short, the legal advice must be a reasonable and actual cause of a misperception in legal duties.

In United States v. Dardi, the Second Circuit found extrinsic evidence sufficient to support the jury's conclusion that the defendant had not relied in good faith on legal advice. n45 While acknowledging that the jury could consider the advice of counsel defense, the court sought to explain the reasonable inferences the jury might have made in concluding that legal advice had not negated the willfulness of the defendant's offense:

[R]eliance on the opinion of counsel is but one consideration which may be persuasive in the jury's determination of the defendant's state of mind. Among other factors which the jury could consider as going to [defendant's] good faith reliance on legal advice was the fact that the letters expressing the opinion that the stock could be sold without registration specifically made the assumption that the sales were not being made for "control" persons. And, as pointed out, the jury could have inferred that when these opinions were rendered [defendant] knew that he was dealing with control persons. n46

Using much the same approach, the Ninth Circuit in United States v. Manning summarily affirmed convictions of defendants who tried to use the advice of counsel defense where their lawyer was an alleged co-conspirator. n47 The Court's opinion conveys the impression that the obvious illegality of the acts made any claim on reliance of counsel incredible:

The assertion that the appellants' actions were immunized by reliance on the legal advice of their alleged co-conspirator Eisenberg misreads the law in this respect. Their actions in utilizing fictitious stockholders and nominees negate any claim that they thought they were acting lawfully. Moreover, it appears from the evidence that they did not treat Eisenberg as an independent, unbiased legal advisor. n48

Manning represents a logical factual application of the Crosby/Dardi doctrine: an attorney's advice is not a defense unless it is neutral and independent.

Advice of counsel can displace willfulness, but it will only be a strong defense if it meets rigorous conditions. The client must seek legal advice in good faith, from an unaffiliated, unbiased professional to whom all the pertinent facts must be given. n49 The client must rely on the advice in good faith--a condition perhaps best shown by the credibility of the legal opinion coupled with the client's lack of countervailing knowledge. On the other hand, evidence that a client ignored his lawyer's advice that his actions were illegal is evidence of willfulness. n50

[2] Violations of Section 17(a)

The majority of prosecutions under Section 24 are for willful violations of Section 17(a):

It shall be unlawful for any person in the offer or sale of any securities or any security-based swap agreement (as defined in Section 206B of the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act) by the use of any means or instruments of transportation or communication in interstate commerce or by use of the mails, directly or indirectly --

- (1) to employ any device, scheme, or artifice to defraud, or
- (2) to obtain money or property by means of any untrue statement of a material fact or any omission to state a material fact necessary in order to make the statements made, in the light of the circumstances under which they were made, not misleading; or
- (3) to engage in any transaction, practice, or course of business which operates or would operate as a fraud or deceit upon the purchaser. n51

The threshold element of a Section 17 violation is "the use of any means or instruments of transportation or communication in interstate commerce or ... use of the mails." The purpose of this requirement "is solely to create a basis for federal jurisdiction." n52 Telephone conversations satisfy this "jurisdictional means" test. n53 So do telegrams n54 and sales initiated from the floor of a national stock exchange, even though no use of the mails or of telephones occurs in connection therewith. n55

Use of the mails also triggers Section 17(a). However, it is not necessary to prove that the defrauded investor relied on any of the mailings. n56 "Rather, what must be shown is that the scheme had an impact on the investor and that the mails were used in employing the scheme." n57 Thus, the use of the mails need only be a small part of the fraudulent scheme. n58 In fact, it is immaterial whether the mailing was done by the defendant or by someone else as long as the use of the mails was foreseeable. n59

Section 17(a) prohibits fraudulent sales not only to investors, but also to brokers and dealers. n60 Also, it is not essential that the Section 17(a) defendants be the actual offerors or sellers of securities: "it is enough to show that [they] knowingly and actively participated in a fraudulent scheme which resulted in the offer or sale." n61 Section 17(a) thus applies to a wide variety of situations, for the "[c]ourts have recognized that section 17(a) must be given broad scope and flexible interpretation in order to encompass all the ingenious variations of securities fraud that arise." n62

[3] Violations of Section 5(a)

Criminal actions are also brought under Section 5(a) of the Securities Act. n63 While less frequently filed than Section 17(a) prosecutions, several major criminal prosecutions have included Section 5(a) violations. n64 Section 5(a) provides:

- (a) Unless a registration statement is in effect as to a security, it shall be unlawful for any person, directly or indirectly --
 - (1) to make use of any means or instruments of transportation or communication in interstate commerce or of the mails to sell such security through the use or medium of any prospectus or otherwise; or
 - (2) to carry or cause to be carried through the mails or in interstate commerce, by any means or instruments of transportation, any such security for the purpose of sale or for delivery after sale.

The elements of a Section 5(a)(1) violation are:

- the mails or facilities of interstate commerce are used;

- to sell a security for which no registration statement is in effect;
- through the use of or medium of any prospectus or otherwise.

The essential elements of a Section 5(a)(2) violation are:

- a security is carried through the mails or in interstate commerce;
- for the purpose of a sale or delivery after a sale; and
- no registration statement is in effect as to such security at the time thereof. n65

There is no requirement that the use of means or instruments of transportation, communication in interstate commerce, or the use of the mails actually caused the sale of unregistered securities. n66

This subsection is violated when, in connection with the sale of such stock, the mails are used to transmit an offer or other sales literature, to transport the securities after sale, to remit the proceeds to the seller, to send confirmation slips to the buyer, and perhaps even when used in more tangential ways. n67

If the defendant did not personally perform the mailing, he may nevertheless violate Section 5 if the mailing was a reasonably foreseeable result of the transaction. n68 Likewise, registration under the "Exchange Act" does not excuse a failure to register under Section 5 of the Securities Act. n69

[4] Violations of Section 24

In addition to providing for criminal prosecution of violations of other sections of the Securities Act, Section 24 prohibits the willful filing of a false or misleading registration statement. Criminal prosecutions under this clause of Section 24 are not as common as prosecutions for violations of Section 17(a) or 5(a). n70 In fact, the filing of false or misleading registration statements is sometimes prosecuted as fraud under Section 17(a). n71

On the dividend, the court said, "Appellee argues that the brokers 'knew' Texas-Adams legitimately could not have declared such a large stock dividend to controlling American Montana The fallacies in this reasoning are clear. CHAPTER 11 Criminal Enforcement of the Federal Securities Act

AUTHOR: Thomas A. Ferrigno and Matthew H. Kirtland

§ 11.03 Other Criminal Statutes Frequently Charged in Conjunction with Violations of the Securities Act

In many criminal prosecutions under the Securities Act, the indictments will include charges of mail fraud, n1 wire fraud, n2 conspiracy, n3 aiding and abetting, n4 false statements, n5 perjury, n6 and racketeering. n7 Charges under the Exchange Act may also be joined. The elements of these offenses, other than those under the Exchange Act, are discussed below. n8

[1] Mail Fraud and Wire Fraud

Due to their broad language and scant legislative history, the mail and wire fraud statutes are commonly charged in prosecutions of various fraudulent schemes. The mail fraud statute provides:

Whoever, having devised or intending to devise any scheme or artifice to defraud, or for obtaining money or property by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, representations, or promises, or to sell, dispose of, loan, exchange, alter, give away, distribute, supply, or furnish or procure for unlawful use any counterfeit or spurious coin, obligation, security, or other article, or anything represented to be or intimated or held out to be such counterfeit or spurious article, for the purpose of executing such scheme or artifice or attempting so to do, places in any post office or authorized depository for mail matter, any matter or thing whatever to be sent or delivered by the Postal Service ... or takes or receives therefrom, any such matter or thing, or knowingly causes to be delivered by mail or such carrier according to the direction thereon, or at the place at which it is directed to be delivered by the person to whom it is addressed, any such matter or thing, shall be fined under this title or imprisoned not more than 20 years, or both. If the violation affects a financial institution, such person shall be fined not more than $1,000,000 or imprisoned not more than 30 years, or both. n9

The wire fraud statute has similar provisions. n10 While the two statutes are very similar, the wire fraud statute requires communications in interstate or foreign commerce while the mail fraud statute only requires use of the mails. However, courts have held that these statutes are to be given the same construction. Even after the enactment of the more specific Securities Act and Exchange Act, mail and wire fraud prosecutions continue, for it has long been held that the securities laws did not repeal any part of the mail or wire fraud statutes. n11

The essential elements of mail or wire fraud are (1) a scheme to defraud, and (2) use of the mails or of communications in interstate or foreign commerce, (3) in execution or furtherance of this scheme. n12 "A scheme to defraud is conduct intended to or reasonably calculated to deceive ordinary people." n13 Proof of this scheme does not require a showing that the investor relied on these mailings to his or her detriment. n14 Nor is the scheme's lack of success relevant. n15 However, the misrepresentations must be material. n16 A mail or wire fraud scheme may be designed to deprive the owner of all kinds of "property," including such intangible property as confidential business information. n17

A scheme to defraud also requires proof of the defendant's specific intent to defraud, n18 or, at the very least, proof of a reckless disregard for the truth or falsity of one's representations. n19 The requirement of specific intent or reckless indifference, however, is not satisfied by the possibility that the defendant could have discovered the fraud. n20

The second essential element of mail or wire fraud is use of or causing the use of the mails or of communications in interstate or foreign commerce. n21 A person "causes the mails to be used" if use of the mails or wires would reasonably follow the actions he has taken. n22 Therefore, it is not necessary for the government to prove that the defendant himself mailed or wired anything; it must only be proved that defendant was a knowing participant in a scheme to defraud at the time the mails or wires were used. n23 Of course, if the defendant had no reason to believe that the mails or communications in interstate or foreign commerce would be used in executing the scheme and if someone else actually did the mailing, then the defendant has a valid defense against a mail fraud charge. n24

The third essential element of mail or wire fraud is proof that the mailings or communications were executed to further the fraudulent scheme. In securities-related cases, this element may be satisfied even if the fraudulent sale occurs before anything is mailed or communicated by wire. n25 For example, information sent to defrauded investors after they have paid for worthless stock may prolong the illusion of the sale's legitimacy. This is referred to as "lulling" by most courts, and the Supreme Court has held that "lulling" letters are to be considered as mailings in "furtherance of the scheme" for the purpose of mail fraud prosecutions. n26 However, the mail fraud statute is not violated if mails are not sufficiently related to the defendant's fraudulent scheme. n27

[2] Conspiracy

The federal conspiracy statute prohibits two or more persons from joining together to commit any offense against the United States or to defraud the United States or its agencies. It reads in part:

If two or more persons conspire either to commit any offense against the United States, or to defraud the United States, or any agency thereof in any manner or for any purpose, and one or more of such persons do any act to effect the object of the conspiracy, each shall be fined under this title or imprisoned not more than five years, or both. n28

This conspiracy statute is commonly charged in securities fraud prosecutions because the grand schemes involved usually require the participation of many people. n29

In a conspiracy prosecution, it is not necessary for the government to show that each co-conspirator knew all parts of the illegal plan. n30 It is necessary to show only that the defendants "knew of the conspiracy and that they associated themselves with it" in some way. n31 Thus, in one prosecution for conspiracy to violate Sections 5 and 24 of the Securities Act through the sale of unregistered securities, it was held that the "government was required to prove either that [the defendants] knew, or that they deliberately closed their eyes to the necessity for registering the ... stock before selling it." n32

Such proof included evidence that the defendants acted in a furtive and roundabout manner; were warned by their lawyers regarding the illegality of their actions; "laundered" their securities through a shell corporation; were familiar with the registration requirements of the Securities Act and its implementing regulations; and used nominees to conceal their stock ownership. n33

[3] Aiding and Abetting

Aiding and abetting charges may be brought under 18 U.S.C. § 2 (2000) against those who assisted in a proven securities law violation:

Whoever commits an offense against the United States or aids, abets, counsels, commands, induces or procures its commission, is punishable as a principal. Whoever willfully causes an action to be done which if directly performed by him or another would be an offense against the United States, is punishable as a principal.

It should be emphasized that a violation of 18 U.S.C. § 2 does not create a separately indictable offense. n34 Such a violation merely allows aiders and abettors to be punished as principals under some other criminal statute. n35

In civil enforcement actions brought by the SEC, the elements necessary to establish an aiding and abetting charge for violation of the Securities Act are set forth in Section 20(e) of the Securities Act:

For purposes of any action brought by the Commission under paragraph (1) or (3) of section 78u(d) of this title, any person that knowingly provides substantial assistance to another person in violation of a provision of this title [15 U.S.C. §§ 78a et seq.], or of any rule or regulation issued under this title, shall be deemed to be in violation of such provision to the same extent as the person to whom such assistance is provided. n36

This provision was part of the Private Litigation Securities Reform Act of 1995 (PLSRA). The PLSRA was a response to the Supreme Court's decision in Central Bank v. First Interstate Bank, n37 which eliminated aiding and abetting liability under section 10(b) in private actions n38 and could also have been interpreted as eliminating aiding and abetting liability in SEC federal court actions. n39 The provision restored the SEC's ability to pursue aiders and abettors and intentionally reflects the elements necessary to establish an aiding and abetting charge under the previous case law. n40

Under the previous case law, the scienter requirement was that an aider and abettor act with "actual knowledge." n41 To the extent that pre-Central Bank jurisprudence diverged on whether "recklessness" might also satisfy this scienter requirement, this divergence of views gives way to the plain language of the PLSRA, which uses the word 'knowingly.' " n42

It is unclear whether criminal aiding and abetting charges may be brought under Section 20(e) of the Securities Act or whether these charges can only be brought under 18 U.S.C. § 2. Section 20(e) restricts itself to "any action brought by the Commission," not the DOJ. In Glaser v. Enzo Biochem Inc., however, the 4th Circuit Court of Appeals stated that "the post-Central Bank enactment of 15 U.S.C. § 78t(e) ... authorizes criminal prosecutions of persons who aid and abet securities laws violations." n43 These results may be reconcilable since the Commission can make a criminal referral to the DOJ under paragraph (1) of section 78u(d), specifically incorporated into the aider-abettor provision of the Securities Act, Section 20(e).

Regardless, the standard for aider and abettor liability in criminal cases brought by the DOJ appears to be the same as the standard for aider and abettor liability under Section 20(e). For example, in United States v. Erb, aider and abettor liability was imposed under Section 24 on an underwriter who "knowingly assisted in the preparation and filing of a false registration statement." n44 This defendant had purchased a substantial block of stock at a reduced price prior to its public offering. n45 He gave instructions, however, that the stock should be issued in the name of a third person in order to avoid SEC and NASD rules on the pre-offering purchase of stock by underwriters. n46 He knew, therefore, that any registration statement filed with the SEC would falsely represent his interest in the issuer corporation and that the filing of a registration statement was a prerequisite to making a profit by selling his stock. n47 Under these circumstances, a case for aider and abettor liability was established.

[4] False Statements

Criminal prosecution under Section 24 of the Securities Act for the filing of a false or misleading registration statement can also involve the false statement section of the Criminal Code:

[W]hoever, in any matter within the jurisdiction of the executive, legislative, or judicial branch of the Government of the United States knowingly and willfully (1) falsifies, conceals or covers up by any trick, scheme, or device a material fact; (2) makes any materially false, fictitious or fraudulent statement or representation; or (3) makes or uses any false writing or document knowing the same to contain any materially false, fictitious or fraudulent statement or entry; shall be fined under this title or imprisoned not more than 5 years ... or both. n48

The essential elements of a false statement prosecution are "that (1) the defendant made a statement; (2) the statement was false, fictitious or fraudulent ... ; (3) the statement was made knowingly and willfully; (4) the statement was within the jurisdiction of the federal agency n49 In addition, some circuits require that the statement was material." n50

Although interpreted broadly, 18 U.S.C. § 1001 (2000) only applies to those who knowingly and willfully lie to the Government. n51 This burden does not require the Government to prove that the defendants acted with evil intent "but rather that they had certified a statement knowing it to be false." n52

In addition to written statements, 18 U.S.C. § 1001 (2000) also covers oral statements. n53 Unlike the perjury statute, however, the false statements statute does not limit prosecution to statements made under oath. In fact, the Supreme Court has interpreted the false statement statute broadly to include any false statements made to any administrative agency. n54 Accordingly, § 18 U.S.C. 1001 (2000) would cover false statements made to officers of the SEC in the course of a formal or informal investigation, n55 as well as the filing of false and misleading documents, e.g., registration statements with the Commission. Yet, it is not frequently used in conjunction with Section 24.

[5] Perjury

Perjury in testimony before the SEC could also be charged in an indictment along with violations of Section 24. The operative statute is 18 U.S.C. § 1621 (2000), which provides in pertinent part:

Whoever ... having taken an oath before a competent tribunal, officer, or person, in any case in which a law of the United States authorizes an oath to be administered, that he will testify, declare, depose, or certify truly ... willfully and contrary to such oath states ... any material matter which he does not believe to be true ... is guilty of perjury and shall, except as otherwise provided by law, be fined under this title or imprisoned not more than five years, or both. n56

An SEC staff attorney who by order of the Commission is designated as an officer of the Commission and empowered to administer oaths and take evidence for the purpose of an investigation is competent to do so within the meaning of the perjury statute. Thus, in Boehm v. United States, n57 a corporate director was convicted of perjury after he testified falsely under oath before an SEC officer that he did not pay his expense account, falsify his travel vouchers, or accept kickbacks or rebates. Likewise, in Woolley v. United States, n58 the defendant was convicted of perjury after he testified under oath in an SEC investigation that he had no connection with the investigated corporation, when, in fact, he was a director and officer.

[6] RICO

The Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO") n59 contains sweeping prohibitions against a wide variety of activities conducted in interstate commerce "through a pattern of racketeering activity." n60 Violations of these prohibitions are punishable by a fine or imprisonment up to life or both. n61 The statute also contains broad criminal forfeiture provisions. n62

A "pattern of racketeering activity" requires, at a minimum, the commission of two predicate offenses within a period of ten years. n63 Such predicate offenses include mail fraud, wire fraud, and "fraud in the sale of securities." n64 Accordingly, a RICO charge may be joined in an indictment charging violations of Sections 24 and 17(a) of the Securities Act n65 and greatly increases the potential penalties for securities fraud.

Boyer*, 694 F.2d 58, 59 (3d Cir. 1982) (defendant showed disregard for the truth or falsity of statements he presented to prospective investors as facts); United States v. Farris, 614 F.2d 634, 639 (9th Cir. 1979) (defendant was guilty of mail fraud because he was aware that the guarantor of notes was in dire financial straits, yet continued to sell notes to investors without revealing this information).

(n21)Footnote 21. Each mailing or communication may be charged as a separate crime even though it relates to the same fraudulent scheme. Badders v. United States, 240 U.S. 391, 394 (1916) . For an explanation of why mail fraud is not viewed as one continuing offense, see Mitchell v. United States, 142 F.2d 480, 481 (10th Cir. 1944) :

It is of course true that an offense of a continuing duration cannot be arbitrarily divided into separate and distinct offenses by the disposition of the prosecutor and the grand jury to divide it into separate elements of time But we have quite a different situation. The crimes charged in each count constitute one continuous scheme to defraud; the same scheme is alleged in each count of the indictment, and the offense charged in each count has its genesis in the continuing scheme to defraud. But the gist and crux of the offense is the use of the mails in the execution of the scheme; it is the use of the mails for the purpose of executing the scheme which gives the federal courts jurisdiction over the offense The plain distinction lies in the difference between one continuing offense which may be consummated by a single or plural acts over a period of time ... and an indictment which alleges a continuing scheme and artifice to defraud, which is made criminal under the law each and every time the mail is used in execution thereof, and only when and if the mails are used.

2-11 Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 11.04

§ 11.04 Statute of Limitations for Criminal Prosecutions Under the Securities Act

The Securities Act does not contain a statute of limitations for criminal offenses. Hence, 18 U.S.C. § 3282 n1 which sets a five-year period of limitation for all non-capital criminal offenses, must be applied in criminal prosecutions under Section 24.

To determine whether 18 U.S.C. § 3282 bars prosecution of an offense, it must be determined when the offense occurred. As a general rule, the limitations period begins when the crime is completed. n2 For example, in a prosecution under Section 24 for the filing of false or misleading registration statements, the statute of limitations begins to run "when the statements are 'received' by the SEC." n3 Moreover, each such filing constitutes a separate and distinct offense. n4

In criminal cases under Section 17(a), however, it should be noted that the statute of limitations does not act as an "evidentiary bar," and evidence of a scheme outside of the five year limitations period is admissible. n5 For example, in United States v. McDonald, n6 lulling payments mailed to investors concealed a land fraud scheme, caused some investors to invest more money, and maintained the defrauding company's reputation as a reliable source of investments. Accordingly, the statute of limitations did not begin to run until after those payments were made. n7

McDonald dealt with an initial fraudulent act that was followed by other acts that furthered the initial crime and, hence, was properly characterized as a continuing offense. However, an initial act that violates the law is not a continuing offense simply because it is not corrected. n8

[T]he statute begins to run the moment the crime is sufficiently complete to enable the government to initiate prosecution. There are only two exceptions to this general rule: (a) when a defendant (or, in the case of conspiracy, one of his co-conspirators) thereafter engages in some "affirmative" action in furtherance of the crime; or (b) where time is extended by a statute which specifically refers to limitations of time. n9

Therefore, there being no provision in the Securities Act extending the limitations period, in the absence of additional affirmative action by a defendant in furtherance of his crime, the statute of limitations for securities fraud under Section

24 will have begun to run whenever "the government could have commenced prosecution." n10

CHAPTER 11 Criminal Enforcement of the Federal Securities Act

2-11 Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 11.05

AUTHOR: Thomas A. Ferrigno and Matthew H. Kirtland

§ 11.05 Jurisdiction and Venue Over Criminal Prosecutions Under the Securities Act

[1] Subject Matter Jurisdiction

Section 22(a) of the Securities Act vests the federal district courts with "jurisdiction of offenses and violations under this title and under the rules and regulations promulgated by the Commission in respect thereto" n1 Similarly, 18 U.S.C. § 3231 grants the district courts "original jurisdiction, exclusive of the courts of the States, of all offenses against the laws of the United States." Accordingly, there is no dispute regarding a federal district court's subject-matter jurisdiction over criminal prosecutions under the Securities Act.

[2] Transnational Offenses

Disputes do arise, however, regarding the application of the Securities Act to transactions occurring outside of the United States. As discussed supra, many of the prohibitions contained in the Securities Act have "jurisdictional means" tests. In other words, the defendant must have used the mails or some instrumentality of interstate commerce to achieve the unlawful end. Because Section 2(7) of the Securities Act defines "interstate commerce" to include transportation or communication "between any foreign country and any State," n2 the courts have extended the Securities Act's prohibitions to fraudulent securities transactions involving foreign countries. n3

For example, in United States v. Clark, n4 the defendant moved to dismiss one count of his indictment alleging fraud in the sale of securities to European investors. The securities at issue were "debentures of Four Seasons Overseas, N.V., a Netherlands Antilles corporation, with attached warrants for the purchase of the common stock of Four Seasons Nursing Centers," a U.S. company. n5 Relying on Leasco Data Processing Equipment Corp. v. Maxwell, n6 a case dealing with Section 10(b) of the Exchange Act, the court held Section 17(a) applicable to misconduct occurring in a foreign country as long as "there was both conduct in the United States and impact on an American investor." n7 The court then found that the indictment contained sufficient allegations of fraudulent conduct in the United States and of detrimental impact on American investors because the European offering was part of a scheme to inflate the earnings and market price of Four Seasons stock traded in the United States. n8

In Clark, the court employed "conduct" and "effect" tests. n9 The "conduct" test analyzes whether the fraudulent conduct that forms the alleged violation occurred in the United States, whereas the "effects" test analyzes whether conduct outside the United States has had a substantial damaging effect on U.S. investors or securities markets. n10 In United States v. Cook, n11 to the court used only the "conduct" test to affirm the district court's assertion of jurisdiction over a defendant who had defrauded European investors through a Ponzi scheme n12 related to the sale of fractional undivided working interests in oil and gas wells located in the United States.

The scheme operated out of Dallas, Texas; the securities sold were American securities; the money from the scheme was brought back to the United States; and some investors were defrauded, in part, in this country. n13 The Court had no trouble concluding that this fraud thus violated Sections 17(a) and 24 of the Securities Act:

It is an absurd notion that Congress intended activity in the United States involving American securities to be exempt from the fraud provisions of the securities acts simply because the victims are not American citizens That Congress would allow America to be a haven for swindlers and confidence men when the victims are European while expecting the highest level of business practice when the investors are American is "simply unimaginable." n14

[3] Venue

Even if a court has subject-matter jurisdiction over an offense, venue must also be proper. A crime committed in a single judicial district must be prosecuted there. n15 However, a criminal offense may span more than one district. Accordingly, Section 20(b) of the Securities Act provides that a criminal proceeding "may be brought either in the district wherein the transmittal of the prospectus or security complained of begins, or in the district wherein such prospectus or security is received." n16 It is clear, however, that not every criminal violation of the Securities Act involves the transmittal or receipt of a prospectus or security. Accordingly, it has been held that the general criminal venue provisions of 18 U.S.C. § 3237 (2000) apply to all prosecutions under the Securities Act, and that Section 20(b) "merely provides for an auxiliary venue under certain circumstances." n17

Therefore, any offense under the Securities Act that is "begun in one district and completed in another, or committed in more than one district, may be inquired of and prosecuted in any district in which such offense was begun, continued, or completed." n18 Alternatively, "[a]ny [Securities Act] offense involving the use of the mails, transportation in interstate or foreign commerce, or the importation of an object or person into the United States ... may be inquired of and prosecuted in any district from, through, or into which such commerce, mail matter, or imported object or person moves." n19

A change of venue may be granted upon motion under Rule 21(b) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, which provides that "[u]pon the defendant's motion, the court may transfer the proceeding, or one or more counts, against that defendant to another district for the convenience of the parties and witnesses and in the interest of justice." n20

This provision is addressed to the trial judge's discretion. n21 To invoke its benefits, a defendant need not necessarily show that venue is proper in the proposed transferee district. n22 The defendant, however, must show that the interests of justice favor transfer. For example, in United States v. Cashin, the Second Circuit denied the government's petition for mandamus after the lower court granted the defendants' request for a transfer of their trial from the Southern District of New York, where the jurisdictional mailings took place, to the Southern District of Alabama, where all the defendants resided and where they allegedly created their fraudulent scheme. n23 In this case, "the only alleged use of the mails was to confirm purchases already induced by the defendants' deceit." n24 Accordingly, the appellate court saw no abuse of discretion in the district court's application "of the liberal transfer provision of Rule 21(b)." n25

On the other hand, in United States v. Wolfson, the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York denied the defendants' transfer motion even though all the defendants lived in Jacksonville, Florida, all their records were there, the witnesses they intended to call at trial lived there, and personal reasons of health and convenience favored a transfer to the Northern District of Florida. n26 According to the court, "none of the[se] factors, whether considered singly or collectively, would justify transfer of the trial." n27 To the contrary, the substantial number of transactions undertaken by the defendants in New York, the defendants' financial ability to travel thereto, and the court's ability to manage the case so as to minimize the inconvenience to the defendants militated against transfer. n28

CHAPTER 11 Criminal Enforcement of the Federal Securities Act

2-11 Federal Securities Act of 1933 § 11.06

AUTHOR: Thomas A. Ferrigno and Matthew H. Kirtland

§ 11.06 The Sarbanes-Oxley Act of 2002

The Sarbanes-Oxley Act of 2002 ("Sarbanes-Oxley") was passed by Congress, in part, to strengthen the prohibitions against securities fraud. One component of Sarbanes-Oxley is the creation of new federal criminal securities fraud offenses as well as modification of the existing statutes traditionally used to prosecute securities fraud. Other components include the creation of a Public Company Accounting Oversight Board, mandatory enhanced financial disclosures from public companies, and implementation of provisions aimed at increasing corporate responsibility.

Sarbanes-Oxley, however, does not amend the Securities Act and therefore is not directly relevant to this chapter. The effect Sarbanes-Oxley will have is its addition of new statutes and strengthening of existing statutes that can be charged in conjunction with violations of the Securities Act. These add powerful new tools to a prosecutor's arsenal and should not be underestimated by any regulated entity. For example, Section 903 of Sarbanes-Oxley increases the maximum prison terms under the federal mail and wire fraud statutes from five years to twenty years. In addition, Section 1107 amends the federal whistle-blower protection statute to prohibit retaliation against any informant who provides law enforcement officers with truthful information relating to the commission or possible commission of any federal offense, including criminal violations of the Securities Act or the Exchange Act. n1 The penalty for such offense is a criminal fine and/or imprisonment for up to ten years. n2 Because criminal violations of the Securities Act often are triggered by disclosures from corporate insiders, who sometimes are retaliated against, this new provision could have a broad impact.

Sarbanes-Oxley also creates entirely new securities fraud offenses. For example, Section 807 of Sarbanes-Oxley adds a new felony to the criminal code at 18 U.S.C. § 1348 (2000), penalizing with fines and/or up to 25 years imprisonment any person who knowingly executes or attempts to execute a "scheme or artifice" to defraud any person in connection with securities of a public company or to obtain, through false or fraudulent pretenses, any person's money or property in connection with securities of a public company. This provision applies equally to corporations and corporate officers and eliminates the previously existing hodge-podge of federal statutes, including mail and wire fraud, that prosecutors often resorted to prosecute securities fraud.

Section 906 of Sarbanes-Oxley makes it a crime for any chief executive officer or chief financial officer to falsely certify that the periodic financial reports required by Section 13(a) or 15(d) of the Exchange Act comply with the requirements of such statutes. If such a false certification violation is committed "willfully," the penalty can be up to $5 million and 20 years in prison. For a violation that is not committed "willfully," the penalty can be up to $1 million and ten years in prison. While not directly relevant to prosecutions under the Securities Act, this new provision has the potential to dramatically increase the overall number of criminal securities prosecutions.

Section 1102 of Sarbanes-Oxley expands the existing federal obstruction of justice offense, adding Sections 1519 and 1520 to Title 18 of the United States Code, to cover destruction of evidence before a proceeding is pending and to cover persons acting alone, as opposed to in concert with others, when destroying evidence. This closes existing loopholes in the law and it is likely that these offenses will be charged more frequently in conjunction with prosecutions under the Securities Act.
