1 California Employment Law Statement on Fair Use

Statement on Fair Use

RELEASE NO. 41, May 2010

LexisNexis Matthew Bender recognizes the balance that must be achieved between the operation of the fair use doctrine, whose basis is to avoid the rigid application of the copyright statute, and the protection of the creative rights and economic interests of authors, publishers and other copyright holders.

We are also aware of the countervailing forces that exist between the ever greater technological advances for making both print and electronic copies and the reduction in the value of copyrighted works that must result from a consistent and pervasive reliance on these new copying technologies. It is LexisNexis Matthew Bender's position that if the "progress of science and useful arts" is promoted by granting copyright protection to authors, such progress may well be impeded if copyright protection is diminished in the name of fair use. (See Nimmer on Copyright § 13.05[E][1].) This holds true whether the parameters of the fair use doctrine are considered in either the print or the electronic environment as it is the integrity of the copyright that is at issue, not the media under which the protected work may become available. Therefore, the fair use guidelines we propose apply equally to our print and electronic information, and apply, within §§ 107 and 108 of the Copyright Act, regardless of the professional status of the user.

Our draft guidelines would allow for the copying of limited materials, which would include synopses and tables of contents, primary source and government materials that may have a minimal amount of editorial enhancements, individual forms to aid in the drafting of applications and pleadings, and miscellaneous pages from any of our newsletters, treatises and practice guides. This copying would be permitted provided it is performed for internal use and solely for the purpose of facilitating individual research or for creating documents produced in the course of the user's professional practice, and the original from which the copy is made has been purchased or licensed as part of the user's existing in-house collection.

LexisNexis Matthew Bender fully supports educational awareness programs designed to increase the public's recognition of its fair use rights. We also support the operation of collective licensing organizations with regard to our print and electronic information.

No copyright is claimed in the text of statutes, regulation, and excerpts from court opinions quoted within this work.

A.M. v. Albertson's, LLC: Failure to Accommodate

In A.M. v. Albertson's, LLC, 178 Cal. App. 4th 455 (2009), the Court of Appeal held that an employer's single failure to make a reasonable accommodation, even during a long period of accommodation, violated the FEHA because it had tragic consequences for the employee who was not accommodated. A single failure to accommodate, even in the context of a larger pattern of successful accommodation, can serve as the basis for finding a failure to accommodate. See § 41.51[3][a].

Voluntary Employee Incentive Compensation Plan: Schachter v. Citigroup. In Schachter v. Citigroup, 47 Cal. 4th 610 (2009) the California Supreme Court held that an employer's voluntary employee incentive compensation plan did not violate Labor Code §§ 201, 202, and 219, because no earned, unpaid wages remained outstanding upon termination according to the terms of the incentive plan. The plan provided employees with shares of restricted company stock at a reduced price in lieu of a portion of the employee's annual cash compensation, as to which employees agreed that, should they resign or be terminated for cause before their restricted shares of stock vested, they would forfeit the stock and the portion of cash compensation they directed be paid in the form of the restricted stock. See, e.g., § 4.01[2][d.1].

Changes to California Unemployment Insurance Code. The Unemployment Insurance Code now provides that the Appeals Board must permit a party or representative to participate in a hearing by telephone on the party's or representative's request and showing a good cause. See § 80.83[8].

U.S. Supreme Court to Address Privacy Issues in Regards to Employees' Text Messaging. The U.S. Supreme Court has granted certiorari in City of Ontario v. Quon, 175 L. Ed. 2d 617 (2009). The case involves alpha-numeric pagers issued to police officers and the reasonable expectation of privacy in regards to text messaging on employer-issued devices. See, e.g., § 50.30[1][a].

New Alternative Workweek Provisions. The Legislature has amended California Labor Code section 511, regarding alternative workweek schedules, to provide that the regularly scheduled alternative workweek proposed by an employer for adoption by employees may be a single work schedule that would become the standard schedule for workers in the work unit, or a menu of work schedule options, from which each employee in the unit would be entitled to choose. The menu of work schedule options may include a regular schedule of eight-hour days compensated in accordance with Labor Code § 510(a). Employees who adopt a menu of work schedule options may, with employer consent, move from one schedule option to another on a weekly basis. See § 3.04[1][a][ii].

Hernandez v. Hillsides, Inc. In Hernandez v. Hillsides, Inc., 47 Cal. 4th 272 (2009), the California Supreme Court addressed issues regarding an employer's surveillance in a semi-private office after business hours and employees' common law and constitutional privacy rights. Although the court found that the employees had a reasonable expectation of privacy in their workplace, it held that the employer's conduct was "drastically limited" in nature and scope and was not highly offensive or sufficiently serious to constitute a privacy violation. See § 50.30.

Owen v. Macy's. In Owen v. Macy's, 175 Cal. App. 4th 462 (2009), an express written company policy forewarned new employees that their compensation package did not include paid vacation during their initial employment. Thus, no vacation pay was earned and none vested during that initial period, and employees could not claim any right to vested vacation during their initial employment: they knew in advance they would not earn or vest vacation pay during that period. Further, the rule against forfeiture of accrued vacation rights, by its own terms, could not apply to vacation pay to be earned in the future, i.e., vacation pay that had not yet accrued. See § 4.01[2][d].

Ricci v. DeStefano. In Ricci v. DeStefano, 2009 U.S. LEXIS 4945 (2009), the U.S. Supreme Court held that a race-based action like refusing to certify the results of a promotional examination that appears to have a disparate impact on racial minorities is impermissible under Title VII, unless the employer can demonstrate a strong basis in evidence that, had it not taken the action, it would have been liable under the disparate-impact statute. See §§ 41.20, 41.45, and 41.66.

Gross v. FBL Financial Services, Inc. In Gross v. FBL Financial Services, Inc., 174 L. Ed. 2d 119 (2009), the U.S. Supreme Court held that a plaintiff bringing an ADEA disparate-treatment claim must prove, by a preponderance of the evidence, that age was the "but-for" cause of the challenged adverse employment action. The burden of persuasion does not shift to the employer to show that it would have taken the action regardless of age, even when a plaintiff has produced some evidence that age was one motivating factor in that decision. Because Title VII is materially different with respect to the relevant burden of persuasion, this Court's interpretation of the ADEA is not governed by Title VII decisions. See § 41.31.

General Scope and Purpose of Set

CALIFORNIA EMPLOYMENT LAW provides complete coverage of the most important legal issues involving private employers that may arise under California and federal law as a result of the employment relationship (with the exception of certain topics noted below, which are governed exclusively by federal law). The set highlights matters that may lead to disputes, and ultimately litigation, between the employer and the employee.

Topics Covered and General Organization of Set

The set is divided in eight topical divisions, each of which is further subdivided into chapters. For a full list of chapters, see the General Table of Contents, above. The topics covered by the eight divisions are summarized below:

DIVISION I. WAGE AND HOUR LAWS. This division discusses statutes and regulations regulating the wages, hours, and working conditions of both adult and minor employees. The division discusses both state and related federal law.

DIVISION II. EMPLOYEE ILLNESSES AND INJURIES. This division outlines the general scope and applicability of California workers' compensation law, including the exclusive remedy doctrine and exceptions to that doctrine. (Detailed discussion of workers' compensation law may be found in Hannah, LAW OF EMPLOYEE INJURIES AND WORKERS' COMPENSATION.) The division also discusses administrative regulation of safety and health in the workplace, with an emphasis on the California Occupational Safety and Health Act.

DIVISION III. EMPLOYER LIABILITY TO THIRD PARTIES FOR CONDUCT OF EMPLOYEES. This division covers an employer's potential liability to third persons arising from the conduct of its employees. The division covers both tort liability arising from employees' conduct and contractual liability arising from transactions entered into by employees on behalf of their employers.

DIVISION IV. EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY. This division discusses state and federal laws protecting employees and applicants from discrimination on the basis of protected characteristics such as race, sex, age, religion, national origin, and handicap. The division covers substantive requirements imposed on employers under equal employment opportunity laws, as well as administrative and judicial enforcement of those laws. (For additional discussion of federal equal employment opportunity laws, see Larson, EMPLOYMENT DISCRIMINATION.)

DIVISION V. EMPLOYEE PRIVACY RIGHTS. This division discusses constitutional, statutory, and common law issues relating to employee privacy. The division covers limitations on employer collection, use, and disclosure of private information about employees.

DIVISION VI. WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND RELATED DISPUTES. This division covers decisional and statutory exceptions to the doctrine of at-will employment, and discusses an employer's potential liability for wrongful termination of employment. The division also includes discussion of means for avoiding such liability.

DIVISION VII. TRADE SECRETS AND UNFAIR COMPETITION. This division discusses the employer's rights regarding an employee's use and disclosure of the employer's confidential and proprietary information obtained in the course of employment, as well as restrictions on an employee's or former employee's right to compete with his or her employer or former employer.

DIVISION VIII. UNEMPLOYMENT AND STATE DISABILITY INSURANCE. This division discusses unemployment and state disability insurance law, including eligibility requirements and claims procedures for benefits, and procedures by which employers may protest claims.

A. SCOPE AND ORGANIZATION OF SET

1- California Employment Law

Topics Excluded

Employees of public entities and educational institutions in California are almost entirely governed by special statutory provisions contained in the Government and Education Codes, respectively. These provisions are beyond the scope of this set. Brief reference is made in appropriate places to the applicability of general rules and regulations regarding private employers to public entity employers. (For discussion of public sector labor relations law, including discipline, discharge, and layoff of state and local government employees, see Zerger et al., CALIFORNIA PUBLIC SECTOR LABOR RELATIONS.)

In addition, because this set focuses on California law, the following topics, which are governed exclusively by federal law, are omitted from this set:

1. Labor relations law in the private sector, including labor unions and collective bargaining. For discussion of these topics, see NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT: LAW & PRACTICE.
2. Employee benefit and retirement plans governed by the federal Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA).ⁿ¹ For discussion, see Bacon, Prater, and Tucker, EMPLOYEE BENEFITS GUIDE.
3. Federal immigration law. For discussion of employers' obligations under federal immigration law, see Frye and Klasko, EMPLOYERS' IMMIGRATION COMPLIANCE GUIDE.

The above topics are discussed, however, to the extent that they may preempt certain aspects of state law.

Organization of Chapters

Each chapter begins with a Scope note, which briefly describes the subject matter of the chapter and contains references to other chapters covering related topics. Following the Scope note is the Synopsis, which is an outline of the parts, sections, and subsections into which the chapter is divided. The text of the chapter may consist of one or more parts, each of which is further subdivided into numbered sections and subsections. In addition to discussion of the applicable law, the text of each chapter may contain one or more of the following: Illustrations, Consultant's Comments, and Practice Tips. Chapters also contain illustrative practice and litigation forms, where appropriate, such as sample contract provisions and forms of complaints. Each statement of law in the text is supported by a footnote containing citations to appropriate legal authority. The last part of each chapter consists of a Bibliography, containing references to other legal texts, annotations, and law review articles for further research.

1. Subject Matter Index;

3. Table of Cases; and
4. Table of Contents and Chapter Synopses.

Use of each of these finding aids is discussed below.

Subject Matter Index

The Subject Matter Index, located in Volume 4, lists all major topics discussed in the set alphabetically by subject matter. Under each major topic heading is a detailed, alphabetical listing of subtopics relating to the major topic. Each subtopic listed is followed by a reference to the text section or sections in CALIFORNIA EMPLOYMENT LAW in which that subtopic is discussed. For example, to find discussion of administrative employees who are exempt from overtime compensation requirements, the reader would look under the major heading "OVERTIME COMPENSATION," and then refer to the subheading "Administrative, executive and professional employees."

Tables of Statutes and Cases

The Table of Statutes and Table of Cases, also located in Volume 4, provide an alternative method of finding discussion of a particular topic. The Table of Statutes lists each constitutional provision, statute, administrative regulation, court rule, and similar authority cited in CALIFORNIA EMPLOYMENT LAW, followed by a reference to each text section in which it is cited. Thus, for example, a reader who is interested in discussion of California Labor Code Section 227.3, governing payment for unused vacation time on termination of employment, would turn to the heading "LABOR CODE" and look for the listing for Section 227.3, which would be followed by a reference to every text section in the set where that statute is cited. The reader would then refer to those text sections to find discussion of the statute.

Similarly, the Table of Cases can be used to find discussion of a particular case relating to a topic in which the reader is interested. The Table of Cases lists every case cited in the set, alphabetically by case name. Each case name listed is followed by a reference to every text section in which the case is cited.

In addition to the main Tables of Statutes and Cases (printed on white paper), Revision Tables of Statutes and Cases (printed on yellow paper) are included in certain releases. The Revision Tables, when included, are filed immediately before the main tables in Volume 4. The Revision Tables contain text section references for authorities cited in all replacement (revision) pages issued since the last complete revision of the main tables.

Table of Contents/Chapter Synopsis

At the beginning of each volume is a Table of Contents that lists all the chapters in that volume. Volume 1 contains a General Table of Contents listing all the chapters in the set. The reader may use these tables to find the chapter that covers the general topic in which the reader is interested. The reader may then turn to the Synopsis at the beginning of that chapter and look for the sections or subsections that may relate to the particular topic in which the reader is interested.

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS
CHAPTER 1 Overview of Wage and Hour Laws

1-1 California Employment Law Scope

AUTHOR: By Carol S. Sanders, J.D.

Scope

By Carol S. Sanders, J.D. n* SCOPE

This chapter discusses the coverage of state and federal wage and hour statutes and regulations, with emphasis on the California Labor Code, the wage orders promulgated by the California Industrial Welfare Commission, and the federal Fair Labor Standards Act. It outlines the powers and duties of government agencies responsible for enforcing wage and hour laws and sets forth the required procedures for promulgation of the California wage orders. It also sets forth the rules of construction when an employer is subject to both federal and state wage and hour laws, or when a contract or collective bargaining agreement contains provisions that conflict with wage and hour laws.

State and federal minimum wage law is discussed in Chapter 2. State and federal overtime compensation requirements are discussed in Chapter 3. Rules governing the time, place, and manner of payment of wages, and limitations on deductions from wage payments, are discussed in Chapter 4. Administrative and judicial remedies for violations of state and federal wage and hour laws are discussed in Chapter 5. Child labor laws are discussed in Chapter 6. Posting and recordkeeping requirements under state and federal wage and hour laws are discussed in Chapter 7.

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS
CHAPTER 1 Overview of Wage and Hour Laws
Part A. TEXT

1-1 California Employment Law § 1.01

AUTHOR: By Carol S. Sanders, J.D.

§ 1.01 Introduction

Both the federal government and the state of California have enacted comprehensive wage and hour laws establishing minimum wages, overtime compensation requirements, standards for working conditions, and restrictions on child labor for the primary purpose of protecting employees from oppressive working conditions.ⁿ¹ Employers covered by both federal and state wage and hour laws must comply with both and, to the extent that federal and state requirements conflict, must follow the law that provides the most protection for the employee.ⁿ²

The principal federal wage and hour legislation for most employers is the Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA).ⁿ³ The FLSA is supplemented by the Portal-to-Portal Act, which contains certain limitations on liability under the FLSA.ⁿ⁴ In addition, special federal statutes have been enacted to govern wages and hours of employees employed pursuant to contracts with the federal government.ⁿ⁵

In California, pursuant to constitutional and statutory authority,ⁿ⁶ the Industrial Welfare Commission (IWC) has promulgated administrative regulations known as wage orders, which are codified in Title 8 of the California Code of Regulations.ⁿ⁷ Industry and occupation wage orders set forth labor standards (including minimum wage and overtime compensation requirements) that must be complied with by employers in specific industries or employing workers in specific occupations, and a general minimum wage order sets forth the minimum wage that must be paid to employees regardless of the industry or occupation in which they work. For a discussion of the California wage orders, see § 1.05[2].

In addition to authorizing promulgation of the wage orders, the California Labor Code contains numerous other provisions relating to wages, hours, and working conditions of employees. For an overview of these provisions, see § 1.05[1].

CHAPTER 1 Overview of Wage and Hour Laws
Part A. TEXT

1-1 California Employment Law § 1.02

AUTHOR: By Carol S. Sanders, J.D.

§ 1.02 Standards of Construction Applicable When More Than One Law Addresses the Same Subject

Nothing in the FLSA excuses noncompliance with any federal or state law or municipal ordinance establishing a higher minimum wage or a lower maximum workweek or a higher standard relating to the employment of minors than that established under the FLSA.ⁿ¹ Thus, the FLSA does not preempt any state law that establishes a higher minimum wage or a shorter workweek than federal law. However, employees covered only under the FLSA may not claim benefits of more protective state law, since the FLSA does not purport to incorporate the more protective state law.ⁿ²

When a conflict exists between the FLSA and another federal law or state or local law, the law establishing the higher standard of protection for employees prevails.ⁿ³

In California, the state minimum wage may exceed the federal minimum wage, but may not fall below it.ⁿ⁴ In addition, the employer is subject to stricter overtime compensation rules than those under the FLSA in that, for example, maximum straight-time hours for the workday, in addition to the workweek, are generally applicable.ⁿ⁵ California law may be stricter than the FLSA in other areas as well. In those instances when California law imposes stricter standards, the employer subject to both the FLSA and California law must follow California law.ⁿ⁶

CHAPTER 1 Overview of Wage and Hour Laws
Part A. TEXT

1-1 California Employment Law § 1.03

AUTHOR: By Carol S. Sanders, J.D.

§ 1.03 Effect of Contractual Provisions

[1] Employment Contracts Generally

The decisions of the United States Supreme Court interpreting the FLSA have frequently emphasized the nonwaivable nature of an individual employee's right to a minimum wage and to overtime pay under the FLSA.ⁿ¹ Thus, it has been held that rights conferred under the FLSA cannot be abridged by contract, including collective bargaining agreements, or otherwise waived, because this would nullify the purposes of the statute and thwart the legislative policies it was designed to effectuate.ⁿ² Contracts falling short of the FLSA's policy of achieving a uniform national policy of guaranteed minimum compensation for all work or employment engaged in by covered employees must be set aside.ⁿ³ Thus, as long as they comply with the provisions of the FLSA, employers and employees covered under the FLSA may contract for any terms they choose.ⁿ⁴ They may agree to wages higher than the statutory minimum, or to workweeks shorter than the statutory maximum.ⁿ⁵

However, an employment contract containing a mandatory arbitration agreement may displace judicial and other remedies under state wage and hour law if the contract is covered by the Federal Arbitration Act.ⁿ⁶ Thus, for example, a California court of appeal has held that the Labor Commissioner did not have jurisdiction to adjudicate a complaint brought by a brokerage employee for overtime because the employee had signed an employment contract agreeing to the arbitration of any employment-related controversies.ⁿ⁷ For additional discussion of the preemptive effect of the Federal Arbitration Act, see Chapter 90.

When an employment agreement provides that an employee is entitled to a commission only while employed by the company, it will not be a breach of contract for the employer to refuse to pay a commission if the transaction leading to the commission is finalized after the employee leaves the company.^{n7.1}

[2] Collective Bargaining Agreement

[a] State Law

The fact that wages, hours, and other conditions of labor may also constitute proper or mandatory subjects of collective bargaining does not preclude the state from adopting minimum standards to protect the welfare of workers who may not enjoy sufficient bargaining strength to obtain adequate protection from their employers at the bargaining table.ⁿ⁸ Thus, the provisions of the Labor Code and the wage orders prevail over less protective provisions of collective bargaining agreements.

In a few instances, however, the wage orders and the Labor Code expressly defer to the provisions of applicable collective bargaining agreements. For example, under all the wage orders overtime compensation provisions are not applicable to employees covered by collective bargaining agreements providing premium wage rates for overtime work, a regular hourly rate of pay for those employees of not less than 30 percent more than the state minimum wage.ⁿ⁹ As another example, many of the Labor Code provisions relating to the time for payment of wages during the course of employment are inapplicable if the terms of an applicable collective bargaining agreement provide for a different pay arrangement.ⁿ¹⁰

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

It is important for employers of unionized employees to note that the legislature amended Section 514 in 2001 to narrow the collective bargaining exception to the overtime provisions of the Labor Code (Sections 510 and 511) only. Gone, for example, is the argument that Section 514 is broad enough to encompass Section 512 (meal periods). See, e.g., Valles v. Ivy Hill, Corp. (9th Cir. 2005) 410 F.3d 1071. Thus employers of unionized employees are best advised to consult counsel to determine the scope of their need to comply with provisions of the Labor Code that they may mistakenly believe are preempted by the LMRA. Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

In those instances in which a collective bargaining agreement covers wage and hour matters that are also covered by state law,ⁿ¹¹ section 301 of the Labor-Management Relations Act does not preempt state law under the following circumstances:

- If there is no dispute over the amount of the penalty and liability is governed by independent state law and the only need to refer to the collective-bargaining agreement is to compute damages;ⁿ¹²
- If there is no suggestion that the union sought or purported to bargain away the employee's state-law protections, and if so, whether the intention to waive such protections was clear and unmistakable;ⁿ¹³

If there is no indication that the parties to the collective bargaining agreement understood the binding arbitration provision to cover such state law claims.ⁿ¹⁴

[b] Federal Law

The Labor Management Relations Actⁿ¹⁵ reflects the congressional determination that, to improve the economic well-being of workers and promote industrial peace, the interests of some employees in a bargaining unit may have to be subordinated to the collective interests of a majority of their co-workers.ⁿ¹⁶ In contrast, the FLSA was designed to provide specific minimum protections to individual workers and to ensure that each employee covered by the FLSA would be protected from oppressive working conditions.ⁿ¹⁷ When the provisions of a collective bargaining agreement are in conflict with congressionally granted rights under the FLSA, the requirements of the FLSA take precedence.ⁿ¹⁸

However, in several instances, the FLSA provides for partial exemptions or exceptions to its general requirements on the basis of the provisions of collective bargaining agreements. For example, statutory overtime premiums for time worked in excess of the usual statutory maximum workweek need not be paid if the employee is employed under collective bargaining agreements guaranteeing specified hours of employment and meeting certain other requirements.ⁿ¹⁹

[3] Lease for Employer-Provided Housing

In Spinks v. Equity Residential Briarwood Apartments,ⁿ²⁰ an employer entered into a lease directly with the landlords to provide housing for one of its employees for a stated period of time. During that period, the employee suffered an employment-related injury, and the employer notified the employee it would no longer provide the housing and directed the landlords to change the locks, which they did. The employee sued the landlords, asserting that she was a third-party beneficiary of the lease, and alleging breach of contract, tort and statutory claims. The appellate court reversed the trial court's grant of summary adjudication to the landlords, finding that the employee raised triable issues of material fact on the question of whether she was a third-party beneficiary of the lease agreement between her employer and defendants. The court found that because she raised a triable issue of material fact on the question of whether she was a third-party beneficiary of the lease, her contract, tort and statutory claims were cognizable, and there remained a triable issue on the question of whether defendants acted with malice, so that the availability of punitive damages arising from plaintiff's tort claims should not have been summarily adjudicated. As the lease language made clear, the most basic aspect of the landlords' performance was their obligation to supply the employer with a place for its staff to live. As an entity, the employer could not "reside" in the apartment, so the only way the landlords could perform their lease obligation was by providing the apartment to one or more of the employer's employees. As a member of the employer's staff when the lease was formed, the employee arguably was among a class of intended beneficiaries of the lease.

It was not clear from the lease, however, that the employer intended its staff to have the benefit of the landlords' performance without restriction, i.e., for the entire term without regard to any other circumstance, such as continued employment, or that the landlords understood an intent by the employer that any given occupant would remain during the entire term. As to the intent to benefit the employee individually, the lease did not mention her explicitly, but the lease extension letter from the employer did identify her by name, raising an inference that the landlords' performance, at least during the lease extension period, was meant to benefit her specifically. Resort to the contract language alone did not resolve the question of the employee's status, so the court looked to the circumstances surrounding the formation and performance of the lease. Those circumstances raised an inference that the employee was an intended beneficiary of the lease, and they tended to show the employer's intent to benefit the employee by providing housing for her, procured via the lease. Subsequent events likewise suggested that she was the intended beneficiary of the lease, including the fact that she was allowed to move into the apartment.

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS
CHAPTER 1 Overview of Wage and Hour Laws
Part A. TEXT

1-1 California Employment Law § 1.04

AUTHOR: By Carol S. Sanders, J.D.

§ 1.04 Requirement of Employment Relationship

[1] State Law

[a] Employment and Related Terms Defined

An employment relationship must exist in order for the California wage orders or the provisions of the Labor Code governing wages, hours, and working conditions to apply.¹

"Employ," as used in the wage orders, means to engage, suffer, or permit to work.²⁻³ An "employee" means any person employed by an employer.⁵ In the personal service, public housekeeping, and mercantile industries,⁶ "employee" includes any lessee who is charged rent and who (1) does not use his or her own funds to purchase requisite supplies, (2) does not maintain an appointment book separate and distinct from that of the establishment in which the rented space is located, and (3) does not have a business license when applicable.⁷ For purposes of the wage orders, an "employer" means any person as defined in Labor Code Section 18^{7.1} who directly or indirectly, or through an agent or any other person, employs or exercises control over the wages, hours, or working conditions of any person.^{7.2}

The Labor Code contains various definitions of the terms employee, employer and employing. For example, the statutes that regulate gratuities⁸ define "employing" as hiring, or in any way contracting for, the services of an employee.⁹ An "employee" is every person, including an alien or minor, who renders service gratuitously, for wages, or for pay in any business for an employer, regardless of whether any wages or pay are measured by a standard of time, piece, task, commission, or another method and regardless whether service is rendered on a commission, concessionaire, or other basis. The term "employer" is defined as every person engaging in any business or enterprise in California and having one or more persons in service under any express or implied, oral or written, appointment, contract of hire, or apprenticeship, regardless whether the employer owns the business or operates on a concessionaire or other basis.¹⁰

The "employee" status of alleged independent contractors, lessees, volunteers, students, trainees, members of religious orders not working in commercial establishments that serve the general public, applicants for relief who exchange labor for aid or sustenance, and participants in a joint venture presents difficult coverage questions, resolution of which depends on the specific facts.

More than one entity may be responsible for the payment of wages or other benefits. The broad definition of "employer" for purposes of wage and hour law may allow more than one person to be liable for unpaid wages and penalties.ⁿ¹¹⁻¹³ⁿ¹⁴

Although there is a large volume of case authority defining the employment relationship for purposes of workers' compensationⁿ¹⁵ and tort law,ⁿ¹⁶ relatively few cases have interpreted the definitions of "employer" and "employee" for purposes of state wage and hour law.ⁿ¹⁷ Counsel should be careful when using workers' compensation or tort authority as a guide in determining whether an employment relationship exists in the wage and hour context. Although some legal principles may be similar, the results may differ.ⁿ¹⁸

[b] Independent Contractors

No employment relationship exists if the individual performing services for a principal is an independent contractor.ⁿ¹⁹ The Labor Code defines "independent contractor" as any person who renders service for a specified recompense for a specified result, under the control of the person's principal as to the result of the work only and not as to the means by which the result is accomplished.^{n19.1}

An independent contractor is customarily engaged in an independently established business and retains the right to control the manner in which he or she performs the contract. An employee, on the other hand, is subject to the absolute control and direction of the employer.ⁿ²⁰ Due to the numerous variables that can inform the employee/independent contractor distinction, the California Supreme Court has supplemented the statutory definition with classification factors, emphasizing that the most important factor is the right to control the manner and means of accomplishing the result desired.^{n20.1} Strong evidence in support of an employment relationship is the right to discharge at will, without cause. Other factors to be taken into consideration are the following:^{n20.2}

- Whether the one performing services is engaged in a distinct occupation or business.
- usually done under the direction of the principal or by a specialist without The kind of occupation, with reference to whether, in the locality, the work is supervision.
- The skill required in the particular occupation.
- Whether the principal or the worker supplies the instrumentalities, tools, and the place of work for the person doing the work.
- The length of time for which the services are to be performed.
- The method of payment, i.e., whether by the time or by the job.
- Whether the work is a part of the regular business of the principal.
- Whether the parties believe they are creating the relationship of employer-employee.

Each service arrangement must be evaluated on its facts, and the dispositive circumstances may vary from case to case.^{n20.3} Appellate case law arises primarily in the context of substantial evidence review of the determinations of the relevant fact finder.^{n20.4} Consequently, appellate courts have no authority to simply second-guess the conclusion reached by the fact finder; the substantive determination of employee or independent contractor is one of fact, and the appellate court must affirm if it is supported by substantial evidence.^{n20.5}

Litigation to determine employee or independent contractor status may be pursued as a class action.^{n20.6}

A rebuttable statutory presumption affects the burden of proof with respect to the status of a licensed construction contractor, or a person who performs services for another who is required to be so licensed. Such a person is deemed an employee rather than an independent contractor.ⁿ²¹ The statute specifies factors that may be relevant in overcoming the presumption.ⁿ²²

For full discussion of the distinction between employers and independent contractors under workers' compensation law, see Chapter 20.

[c] Lessees

In some cases, the relationship between the parties may be nominally structured as a "lease," with the principal "renting" space to the worker. However, the actual relationship between the parties must be carefully examined to determine whether the nominal "lease" is in fact an employment relationship subject to the wage and hour laws. The wage orders covering the personal service, public housekeeping, and mercantile industries,ⁿ²³ contain express provisions distinguishing bona fide lessees from employees in beauty salons and similar establishments.ⁿ²⁴

Questions may arise concerning the employment status of an individual who volunteers his or her services without requesting compensation.

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

The DLSE does not consider a bona fide volunteer to be an employee. The intent of the parties is controlling. If, for example, a person intends to volunteer his or her services for public service, religious, or humanitarian objectives, not as an employee and without expectation of pay, that individual is not an employee of the religious, charitable, or similar nonprofit corporation that receives the services.ⁿ²⁵ Conversely, a person who offers to work without compensation for the purpose of gaining experience in an occupation is deemed an employee, not a volunteer. Finally, the DLSE recognizes that an employee of a religious, charitable, or nonprofit organization may donate services to that employer as a volunteer. The donated services, however, may not be the usual duties of the employee. Thus, the DLSE offers the example that an office employee of a nonprofit hospital may volunteer to sit with sick patients outside normal work hours, but may not handle correspondence in connection with a special fund drive.

[e] Students

A variety of programs exist whereby students perform work for educational institutions or for third parties. The purpose of some of these programs is educational; others are merely intended to provide income to help students meet their educational expenses. Questions may arise concerning whether students performing work under such programs are "employees" for purposes of the Labor Code and wage orders.ⁿ²⁶

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

The DLSE has developed enforcement policies regarding various types of student employment programs, as indicated below.

Work Experience Education Programs. Under the DLSE guidelines, students enrolled in "exploratory work experience education" programs are not employees. Title 5 of the California Code of Regulations,

Section 10071(c), referred to in the DLSE guidelines, describes the responsibilities of students and employers under such a program. Generally, students do no productive work, and there is no intent to teach productive skills; they merely observe and sample a variety of work conditions. The students may not be paid, but they may receive school credit. The work must be related to a school course, and must be performed during school hours. Students are not issued work permits, and the number of work hours is limited. By contrast, students enrolled in "vocational work experience" programs,ⁿ²⁷ or "general work experience education" programsⁿ²⁸ are considered employees by the DLSE. Unlike "exploratory work experience education" programs, these programs stress the acquisition, reinforcement, and extension of vocational and other skills, and students are paid for their work experience.

Community Classroom Vocational Education Programs. According to the DLSE guidelines, students enrolled in "community classroom" programs, run by the Department of Education, are not employees, since the students do no productive work and are supervised by teachers with approved training plans, and the purpose of the programs is to learn.

Occupational Training for Disabled Students. The DLSE considers disabled students placed on jobs in private industry to perform productive work to be employees. However, as discussed in Chapter 2, such employees may be paid subminimum wages if special minimum wage permits are secured.ⁿ²⁹

Trainees or Interns. Students working as interns or trainees to fulfill licensing requirements, or to qualify for a skilled vocation or profession, are not employees under the DLSE guidelines if the training is academically oriented and designed primarily for the benefit of the student. The DLSE requires that the training be an essential part of an established course of an accredited school, or of an institution approved by a public agency to provide training for licensure. The program may not be for the benefit of any one employer, a regular employee may not be displaced by the trainee, and the training must be supervised by the school or a disinterested agency.^{n29.1} By contrast, the DLSE considers a student receiving on-the-job training with a specific employer to be an employee. Examples of classes of students that customarily require an internship period are medical student interns, dietician trainees, clinical laboratory technologist trainees, occupational therapist and physiotherapist trainees, and student radiologic technicians. In addition, the wage order governing the public housekeeping industry specifically exempts certain student nurses.ⁿ³⁰

Dental and medical assistant interns are not considered employees by the DLSE if all of the following criteria are fulfilled:

1. A regular, full-time medical or dental assistant is employed who is available to train and supervise the student;
2. The clinical practice period does not last longer than 10 days with any one dentist or doctor, and the student's total unpaid time worked does not exceed 160 hours;
3. The regularly employed medical or dental assistant submits a report to the school on the student's progress;
4. The school exercises absolute control over the placement of any student and supervises the training provided;
5. The interns are not used for vacation relief or reception work; and

6. The interns have a variety of learning experiences in each doctor's office.

Cosmetology school students in licensed schools, and beauty salon junior operators during the first 350 hours when they are not allowed to work on patrons, are likewise not considered employees. Dance studio students are not employees to the extent that they do not perform services or teach lessons, or remain on call.

Graduate Students Engaged in Research. Graduate students doing original professional-level research for the purpose of fulfilling advanced degree requirements are not considered employees by the DLSE, even if they are paid a stipend or given a grant. However, graduate students working as teaching assistants are considered employees by the DLSE.

Extracurricular Activities. High school or college students engaging in extracurricular activities primarily for their own benefit, or as part of an overall education program, are not considered employees by the DLSE. Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

[f] Trainees

Ordinarily, an employer may not avoid its obligations under the wage and hour laws merely by labeling an employee a "trainee." The DLSE uses an 11-prong test to determine whether an individual is exempt from minimum wage and overtime compensation requirements. Under that test, a person not on the employer's payroll, but enrolled in a training program offered by the employer, is not an employee if all of the following eleven criteria are met:^{30.1}

1. The training, even though it includes actual operation of the employer's facilities, is similar to that which would be given in a vocational school.
2. The training is for the benefit of the trainees or students.
3. The trainees or students do not displace regular employees, but work under their close supervision.
4. The employer derives no immediate advantage from the activities of the trainees or students, and on occasion the employer's operations may actually be impeded.
5. The trainees or students are not necessarily entitled to a job at the conclusion of the training period.
6. Any clinical training is part of an educational curriculum.
7. The employer and the trainees or students understand that the trainees or students are not entitled to wages for the time spent in training.
8. The trainees or students do not receive employee benefits.
9. The training is general, so as to qualify the trainees or students for work in any similar business, rather than designed specifically for a job with the employer offering the program. In other words, on completion of the program, the trainees or students must not be fully trained to work specifically for only the employer offering the program.
10. The screening process for the program is not the same as for employment, and does not appear to be for that purpose, but involves only criteria relevant for admission to an independent educational program.

11. Advertisements for the program are couched clearly in terms of education or training, rather than employment, although the employer may indicate that qualified graduates will be considered for employment.

Under certain circumstances, however, an employee may be paid a subminimum wage as a "learner" during the first 160 hours of employment in occupations in which the learner has no previous similar or related experience.ⁿ³¹

[g] Joint Venturers, Partners, and Shareholders

Relationships that are denoted as "joint enterprises," "joint ventures," "partnerships," or "shareholder agreements" may in some instances actually be employment relationships for purposes of wage and hour laws.

[h] Apprentices

Although apprentices are considered employees, apprentices who are "regularly indentured" under the State Division of Apprenticeship Standardsⁿ³² are exempt from the minimum wage provisions.ⁿ³³ For discussion of this exemption, see Chapter 2.

[i] Members of Religious Orders

The activities of members of religious orders may or may not render them "employees," depending on the nature of the services provided.ⁿ³⁴

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

Members of religious orders are not considered employees by the DLSE if their work is performed solely in the furtherance of the order's internal activities, the development of the order's facilities, or as part of the training offered by schools operated by a recognized church or denomination. However, members of religious orders who work at commercial enterprises operated by such orders that serve the general public, such as restaurants or thrift stores, or that contract to provide personal services to businesses, are considered employees by the DLSE. Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

In the past, the DLSE followed the rule that members of religious orders and clergy in general are not employees unless they work in commercial establishments serving the general public, following the conclusions reached by the United States Supreme Court regarding enforcement of the Fair Labor Standards Act in Alamo Foundation v. Secretary of Labor.ⁿ³⁵ But in view of the broad inclusion of the provisions of Labor Code sections 500 et seq., the DLSE now is reluctant to continue to take that view and advises that there is no specific exemption for clergy in California law. However, many clergy have advanced degrees in theology and may be exempt under the "learned professional" exemption, as long as the degree is required for the occupation in question. An advanced degree by itself does not satisfy the "learned professional exemption."ⁿ³⁶

[j] Spouses

In some occupations, it is not uncommon for an employee's spouse to assist an employee in the performance of his or her duties. Whether the spouse will also be considered an employee depends on the circumstances.

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

According to the DLSE, if an employer hires only one spouse and has no knowledge that the other spouse is also performing work for the employer, the latter spouse is not considered an employee of the employer. On the other hand, if the employer knows that both spouses are performing work assigned to one spouse, or that the work cannot be performed by one spouse without the help of the other, the DLSE considers both spouses to be employees. If both spouses are employees, the employer must keep separate wage and hour records on each spouse. Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

[k] Domestic Workers and Employment Agencies

Under certain conditions, an employment agency (as defined by Civil Code Section 1812.501(a) or (h)) is not the employer of any domestic worker for whom it procures, offers, refers, provides, or attempts to provide work.ⁿ³⁷ The first condition is that there must be a signed contract or agreement between the agency and the worker that contains, at a minimum, provisions specifying the following:ⁿ³⁸

1. That the employment agency will assist the domestic worker in securing work;
2. How the agency's referral fee will be paid; and
3. That the worker is free to sign agreements with other employment agencies and to perform domestic work for persons not referred by the agency.

The other conditions for negating an employment relationship between the domestic worker and the employment agency are the following:ⁿ³⁹

1. The worker informs the agency of any restrictions on hours, location, conditions, or type of work that the worker will accept, and the worker is free to select or reject any work opportunity offered, referred, or provided by the agency.ⁿ⁴⁰
2. The worker is free to renegotiate with the person hiring him or her the amount that the worker will be paid.ⁿ⁴¹
3. The worker receives no training from the agency other than a voluntary orientation session explaining the relationship between the agency and the worker, the agency's administrative and operating procedures, and the provisions of the contract or agreement the worker has signed.ⁿ⁴²
4. The agency provides no tools, supplies, or equipment necessary to perform domestic work.ⁿ⁴³
5. The worker is not obligated to pay the agency's referral fee, and the agency is not obligated to pay the worker, if the person for whom the worker performed services fails or refuses to pay for those services.ⁿ⁴⁴
6. Payments for domestic service are made directly to either the worker or the agency, and payments made to the agency are deposited into a trust account until they are made to the worker.ⁿ⁴⁵
7. Only the worker and the person for whom the worker performs services may terminate their relationship; the agency may not do so, but may decline to make additional referrals to a particular worker, and the worker may decline to accept a particular referral.ⁿ⁴⁶
8. The worker performs domestic work without any direction, control, or supervision exercised by the agency regarding the manner or means of performing that work.ⁿ⁴⁷

An employment agency is not deemed to exercise direction, control, or supervision for the above purposes by (1) informing the domestic worker about the services to be provided and the conditions of work specified by the person seeking to hire a domestic worker, (2) contacting the person who has hired the worker to determine if he or she is satisfied with the agency's referral service, (3) informing the worker when new referrals will be available, or (4) requesting the worker to let the agency know if the worker is unable to perform the work accepted.ⁿ⁴⁸

[2] Federal Law

[a] Generally

An employment relationship must also exist in order for the FLSA to apply.ⁿ⁴⁹ The Act does not cover non-employees even if they engage in covered activities.ⁿ⁵⁰

The FLSA defines "employer" as including any person acting directly or indirectly in the interest of an employer in relation to an employee.ⁿ⁵¹ The definition is sufficiently broad to encompass corporate officers with a significant ownership interest who have operational control of significant aspects of the corporation's day to day functions.^{n51.1} The term "employee" means any individual employed by an employer,ⁿ⁵² including most individuals employed by public agencies.ⁿ⁵³ To "employ" means to suffer or permit to work.ⁿ⁵⁴ In IBP, Inc. v. Alvarez,^{n54.1} the Supreme Court cited to the definition of "work or employment" announced in Tennessee Coal, Iron & R.R. Co. v. Muscoda Local No. 123,^{n54.2} as "physical or mental exertion (whether burdensome or not) controlled or required by the employer and pursued necessarily and primarily for the benefit of the employer and his business."

The Ninth Circuit has held that under the doctrine of successorship liability, a successor employer can be held liable for the predecessor employer's FLSA wage payment violations.ⁿ⁵⁵

[b] Employees Covered

The FLSA applies to all persons employed by an employer,ⁿ⁵⁶ although certain employees may be wholly or partially exempt from some or all of its provisions.ⁿ⁵⁷ However, even exempt individuals are "employees" under the FLSA, since permits are required in some cases to avoid compliance with the FLSA,ⁿ⁵⁸ and the FLSA expressly refers to all categories of exempt individuals as "employees."ⁿ⁵⁹ Thus, the FLSA covers trainees, beginners, apprentices, or learners if they are employed to work for an employer for compensation.ⁿ⁶⁰ Similarly, students employed in retail establishments, agriculture, institutions of higher education,ⁿ⁶¹ and elementary or secondary schools,ⁿ⁶² as well as disabled workers,ⁿ⁶³ are "employees" for purposes of the FLSA.

Although the statutory definitions of the employment relationship have been construed expansively by the courts in order to effectuate the FLSA's broad remedial purposes,ⁿ⁶⁴ there are limits. Thus, an individual who, without promise or expectation of compensation, but solely for his or her personal purposes or pleasure, works in activities carried on by other persons either for their pleasure or profit, is outside the purview of the FLSA.ⁿ⁶⁵

Independent contractors are not "employees" under the FLSA.ⁿ⁶⁶ Whether an employment relationship exists depends on the circumstances of the whole activity (also known as the "economic realities" test), but factors that may be useful in distinguishing employees from independent contractors for FLSA purposes are (1) the degree to which the alleged employer has the right to control the manner in which the work is to be performed; (2) the alleged employee's opportunity for profit or loss depending on managerial skills; (3) the alleged employee's investment in equipment or materials required to perform the work, or the employment of helpers; (4) whether work requires special skill; (5) the permanence of the working relationship; and (6) whether the work performed is an integral part of the employer's business.ⁿ⁶⁷

There are some persons who are expressly not "employees" under the FLSA. Thus, a person who volunteers to perform services for a state or local public agency is not an "employee" if he or she receives no compensation or only nominal fees, and the services are not the same type of services that the person is employed to perform for the agency.ⁿ⁶⁸

Part A. TEXT

1-1 California Employment Law § 1.04A

AUTHOR: By Carol S. Sanders, J.D.

§ 1.04A Public Employers and Employees

Unless Labor Code provisions are specifically made applicable to public employers, they apply only to employers in the private sector. Thus, for example, Labor Code §§ 510ⁿ¹ and 512ⁿ² do not expressly apply to public entities, and therefore did not apply to a public water storage district.ⁿ³ Labor Code §§ 201, 202, and 220(b), requiring an employer to immediately pay wages to an employee upon that employee's termination, layoff or resignation,ⁿ⁴ and Labor Code § 203, which imposes penalties against an employer who willfully fails to pay those wages in accordance with §§ 201 and 202, do not apply to employees directly employed by any county, incorporated city, or town or other municipal corporation.ⁿ⁵

The majority of the wage orders expressly exempt public employees. Although Wage Order No. 17, which applies to any industry or occupation not previously covered by, and all employees not specifically exempted in, the wage orders in effect in 1997, or otherwise exempted by law,ⁿ⁶ does not expressly exempt public employees, it does not alter the public employee exemptions in the prior wage orders.ⁿ⁷

CHAPTER 1 Overview of Wage and Hour Laws
Part A. TEXT

1-1 California Employment Law § 1.05

AUTHOR: By Carol S. Sanders, J.D.

§ 1.05 State Law Governing Wages and Hours

[1] Labor Code

[a] Overview of Provisions Affecting Wage and Hour Law

Wages, hours, and working conditions are generally governed by Labor Code sections 1171-1205. These provisions apply to adults and minors employed in any occupation, trade, or industry, whether compensation is measured by time, piece, or otherwise, but do not include any individual employed as an outside salesman.ⁿ¹ Among other things, this part of the Labor Code includes provisions that establish procedures for promulgation, review, and interpretation of wage orders;ⁿ² exempt certain industries and employees from various provisions of the wage orders;ⁿ³ authorize alternative workweek arrangements for certain employees;ⁿ⁴ authorize the IWC to establish special subminimum wages for certain types of employees;ⁿ⁵ and set forth various administrative and judicial remedies for violation of the wage and hour laws.ⁿ⁶ This section of the Labor Code also contains the Equal Pay Act,ⁿ⁷ discussed under [b], below. The provisions of the Labor Code governing wages, hours, and working conditions may not be deemed to restrict the exercise of local police powers in a more stringent manner.ⁿ⁸

Powers and duties of the Department of Industrial Relations and its subsidiary agencies, including the IWC and the Division of Labor Standards Enforcement (DLSE), are governed by Labor Code sections 50 et seq. For discussion of agency enforcement of state wage and hour law, see [3], below.

Payment of wages is governed by Labor Code sections 200-272. Rules governing assignment of wages are set forth in Labor Code section 300. Rules relating to employee gratuities are set forth in Labor Code sections 350-356. Prohibitions against coercing an employee to patronize his or her employer are set forth in Labor Code sections 450-452. Miscellaneous provisions relating to payment of wages on termination of employment and deductions from wages for tardiness are also set forth in Labor Code sections 2926-2928. For discussion of these topics, see Chapter 4.

The Eight-Hour-Day Restoration and Workplace Flexibility Act of 1999,ⁿ⁹ governing overtime compensation and workweek schedules, is discussed in § 3.04[1][a]. Also, Labor Code sections 510-856 contain restrictions on working hours of some employees, which are discussed in Chapter 3, Part B.

Restrictions on the employment of minors are set forth in Labor Code sections 1285-1399. For a discussion of child labor laws, see Chapter 6.

Wage and hour provisions applicable to employees on public works are governed by Labor Code sections 1720-1815, as further discussed in [c], below.

[b] Equal Pay Act

Labor Code section 1197.5, popularly known as the California Equal Pay Act, prohibits any employer from paying any individual in the employer's employ at wage rates less than the rates paid to employees of the opposite sex in the same establishment for equal work on jobs the performance of which requires equal skill, effort, and responsibility, and which are performed under similar working conditions.ⁿ¹⁰ An exception exists if the payment is made pursuant to a seniority system, a merit system, a system that measures earnings by quantity or quality of production, or a differential based on any bona fide factor other than sex.ⁿ¹¹ An employer who fails to comply with the equal pay requirements is liable to the affected employee in the amount of the wages, interest and in an additional equal amount as liquidated damages.ⁿ¹²

The provisions of the Equal Pay Act are administered and enforced by the DLSE.ⁿ¹³ Federal law provides similar restrictions regarding wage discrimination on the basis of sex.ⁿ¹⁴

For a full discussion of the state and federal equal pay statutes and related employment discrimination laws, see Chapters 40-43.

[c] Public Works

Special provisions govern the payment of wages to workers employed by a contractor for a public works project of more than $1,000.ⁿ¹⁵ These workers must be paid not less than the general prevailing rate of per diem wages for work of a similar character in the locality in which the public work is performed, and not less than the general prevailing rate of per diem wages for holiday and overtime work.ⁿ¹⁶ The prevailing rate is determined by the Director of Industrial Relations pursuant to procedures and standards set forth in the Labor Code.ⁿ¹⁷

The federal Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986 (the IRCA)^{n17.1} does not prevent undocumented workers from suing under the provisions governing the payment of wages to workers employed by a contractor for a public works project, so long as there is no issue of whether the employee submitted false documents showing that the employee was authorized to work in the United States.^{n17.2} The U.S. Supreme Court had held in Hoffman Plastic Compounds, Inc. v. NLRB ^{n17.3} that allowing the National Labor Relations Board to award backpay to illegal aliens would unduly trench upon explicit statutory prohibitions critical to federal immigration policy as expressed in IRCA, encourage the successful evasion of immigration authorities, condone prior violations of the immigration laws, and encourage future violations. However, the Court also held that undocumented workers had standing to file claims and were considered "employees" under the National Labor Relations Act,^{n17.4} and other courts have agreed that the IRCA did not foreclose all remedies for undocumented workers under FLSA, NLRA or other federal labor statutes.^{n17.5} The Court of Appeal was persuaded that IRCA did not prohibit undocumented workers from having standing to raise claims for prevailing wages on public works projects, as those claims were also for work already performed.^{n17.6} The court also found that the federal constitutional Supremacy Clause does not preempt California statutes declaring immigration status irrelevant to claims under California's labor, employment, civil rights and employee housing laws.^{n17.7}

For a discussion of the payment of minimum wage to public works employees, see Chapter 2.

[2] Industrial Welfare Commission Wage Orders

[a] Generally

The California wage orders, which are promulgated by the IWC pursuant to statutory mandate,ⁿ¹⁸ are administrative regulations that set forth requirements for minimum wages, overtime compensation, and working conditions in various industries and occupations in the state of California. They are codified in Title 8 of the California Code of Regulationsⁿ¹⁹ and generally provide greater protection to employer than does the FLSA.^{n19.1}

The IWC has promulgated eighteen wage orders. Twelve of the wage orders are "industry" orders, each of which applies to persons employed in the industry specified in the particular order.ⁿ²⁰ Four of the orders are "occupation" orders that apply to persons employed in specified types of occupations.ⁿ²¹ One order applies to any industry or occupation not previously covered by, and all employees not specifically exempted in, the Commission's wage orders in effect in 1997, or otherwise exempted by law.ⁿ²² One order is a general minimum wage order applicable to all California employers.ⁿ²³

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

Proper identification of the wage order that applies to a particular employer or employee is important, because the provisions of the various wage orders differ in many respects, including, for example, overtime compensation requirements.ⁿ²⁴ To determine which IWC wage order applies to an employee or group of employees, it is necessary first to determine whether the employer's business is covered by one of the industry orders. If it is, the industry order applies to all classifications of employees, regardless of the kind of work they do, unless they are specifically exempted by the applicability section of that order.ⁿ²⁵ For example, a clerical worker employed by a toy manufacturer is covered by Wage Order No. 1-2001, regulating the manufacturing industry,ⁿ²⁶ rather than by Wage Order No. 4-2001, which includes clerical occupations.ⁿ²⁷ A driver who delivers supplies for a chain of beauty shops is covered by Wage Order No. 2-2001, governing the personal service industry.ⁿ²⁸ A mechanic who works for a retail chain is covered by Wage Order No. 7-2001,ⁿ²⁹ governing the mercantile industry, rather than by Wage Order No. 4-2001, which includes mechanical occupations.ⁿ³⁰

If the employer's business is not covered by an industry order because it does not fall within a definition of one of the 12 covered industries, the employee's occupation must be examined to see which, if any, of the occupation orders applies. For example, an industrial nurse employed by a manufacturer would be covered under industrial Wage Order No. 1-98, governing the manufacturing industry.ⁿ³¹ A nurse employed by a hospital would be covered by industrial Wage Order No. 5-2001, governing the public housekeeping industry.ⁿ³² A nurse employed by a clinic that did not provide overnight beds or meals would not be covered under Wage Order No. 5-2001 or any other industry wage order. He or she would be covered under Wage Order No. 4-2001, governing the professional, technical, clerical, mechanical, and similar occupations.ⁿ³³

Until it promulgated Interim Wage Order-2000,ⁿ³⁴ effective October 1, 2000, those engaged in on-site construction activities, on-site logging, or on-site drilling and mining activities were covered only by the general minimum wage order.ⁿ³⁵ Employees engaged in those occupations are now covered by Wage Order 16-2001. Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

The majority of the wage orders expressly exempt public employees. Although Wage Order No. 17, which applies to any industry or occupation not previously covered by, and all employees not specifically exempted in, the wage orders in effect in 1997, or otherwise exempted by law,ⁿ³⁶ does not expressly exempt public employees, it does not alter the public employee exemptions in the prior wage orders.ⁿ³⁷

[b] Industry Wage Orders

[i] Listing of Industries Covered

The 12 specific industries covered under the wage orders are the following:

1. Amusement and Recreation (Wage Order No. 10-2001);n38-42n43
2. Broadcasting (Wage Order No. 11-2001);n44
3. Canning, Freezing, and Preserving (Wage Order No. 3-2001);n45
4. Handling Products After Harvest (Wage Order No. 8-2001);n46
5. Laundry, Linen Supply, Dry Cleaning, and Dyeing (Wage Order No. 6-2001);n47
6. Manufacturing (Wage Order No. 1-2001);n48
7. Mercantile (Wage Order No. 7-2001);n49
8. Motion Picture (Wage Order No. 12-2001);n50
9. Personal Service (Wage Order No. 2-2001);n51
10. Preparing Agricultural Products on the Farm for Market (Wage Order No. 13-2001);n52
11. Public Housekeeping (Wage Order No. 5-2001);n53 and
12. Transportation (Wage Order No. 9-2001).n54

The definitions of each industry and examples of businesses covered by the definitions are discussed in [ii] through [xiii], below.

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

Under DLSE guidelines, an industry, business, or establishment generally is classified according to the main purpose of the business, except in the case of the public housekeeping industry classification, which may encompass a business that has only incidental housekeeping activities if it is not otherwise covered by a different industry order.n55 Most large businesses conduct a variety of operations, but if those operations further a common business purpose under common general control, they are treated as one business. For example, if a manufacturer with a production plant in California also has a separate warehouse and a fleet of trucks and separate sales offices to handle distribution of its products, all of the different entities are treated as part of one business under Wage Order No. 1-2001, regulating the manufacturing industry.n56

If a single business has several different types of operations, the DLSE will classify the business by making a broad assessment and determine the principal purpose of the business on the basis of simple observation and common sense. For instance, a car wash establishment that has one or two gas pumps and a few items for sale would be covered under Wage Order No. 9-2001, which governs the transportation industry and expressly includes businesses that maintain or clean vehicles.n57 In contrast, an establishment that has several rows of pumps and includes car wash facilities for the convenience of the customers, or as part of a bargain available if the customer "fills up," is primarily in the business of selling gas and would be covered under Wage Order No. 7-2001, governing the mercantile industry.n58

If, however, a multipurpose company has distinctly separate units operating for distinctly different business purposes, and the operational management is separately organized at all levels, each of the distinct operating units may be covered by a different wage order. For example, if a large retail department store chain also owns an insurance company and a savings and loan company, which are operated separately as separate corporate entities, the three operations likely will be separately classified.

[ii] Manufacturing Industry Defined

"Manufacturing industry," as used in Wage Order No. 1-98, means any industry, business, or establishment operated for the purpose of preparing, producing, making, altering, repairing, finishing, processing, inspecting, handling, assembling, wrapping, bottling, or packaging goods, articles, or commodities, in whole or in part.ⁿ⁵⁹ However, Wage Order No. 1-2001 does not apply to businesses engaged in such activities if they are covered by one of the following orders:ⁿ⁶⁰

1. Wage Order No. 3-2001, governing the canning, preserving, and freezing industry;ⁿ⁶¹
2. Wage Order No. 8-2001, governing industries handling products after harvest;ⁿ⁶²
3. Wage Order No. 13-2001, governing industries preparing agricultural products on the farm for market;ⁿ⁶³ or
4. Wage Order No. 12-2001, governing the motion picture industry.ⁿ⁶⁴

Examples of operations covered under the manufacturing industry wage order include aircraft and aircraft parts manufacturers; automobile manufacturers; any form of assembly plant; automobile wrecking; blueprinting; ceramics; dental laboratories; electronic products; film developing and processing; lumber products; metal products; machinery; needle trades; oil refining; paper products; photostating services; plastic products; printing; repackaging of bulk products; reweaving; rubber manufacturing; sheet metal shops; shipbuilding (other than repair); shoe manufacturing and repair; and taxidermy.ⁿ⁶⁵ The order also applies to certain food processing operations that are not covered by Wage Order No. 3-2001 (governing canning, freezing, and preserving industries), such as nonretail bakers, breweries, candy manufacturers, cotton seed oil manufacturers, potato and corn chip manufacturers, dehydrated soup manufacturers, and tortilla and pizza manufacturers.ⁿ⁶⁶

[iii] Personal Service Industry Defined

"Personal service industry," as used in Wage Order No. 2-2001, means any industry, business, or establishment operated for the purpose of rendering, directly or indirectly, any service, operation, or process used or useful in the care, cleansing, or beautification of the body, skin, nails, or hair, or in the enhancement of personal appearance or health, including but not limited to beauty salons, schools of beauty culture offering beauty care to the public for a fee, barber shops, bath and massage parlors, physical conditioning services or facilities, weight control salons, health clubs, and mortuaries.ⁿ⁶⁷ Suntanning parlors are also within the scope of this wage order.ⁿ⁶⁸

[iv] Canning, Freezing, and Preserving Industry Defined

"Canning, freezing, and preserving industry," as used in Wage Order No. 3-2001, means any industry, business, or establishment operated for the purpose of canning soups, or of cooking, canning, curing, freezing, pickling, salting, bottling, preserving, or otherwise processing any fruits or vegetables, seafood, meat, poultry, or rabbit product, when the purpose of processing is the preservation of the product; all operations incidental to that preservation are included.ⁿ⁶⁹ Businesses covered by this wage order include manufacturers of fruit jellies and preserves, fruit juice

[v] Public Housekeeping Industry Defined

Wage Order No. 5-2001, governing the "public housekeeping industry," applies to any industry, business, or establishment that provides meals, housing, or maintenance services whether operated as a primary business or when incidental to other operations in an establishment not covered by another industry wage order.n71 Establishments covered under the public housekeeping industry wage order include, but are not limited to, the following:n72

1. Restaurants, nightclubs, taverns, bars, cocktail lounges, lunch counters, cafeterias, boarding houses, clubs, and all similar establishments where food in either solid or liquid form is prepared and served to be consumed on the premises;
2. Catering, banquet, box lunch service, and similar establishments that prepare food for consumption on or off the premises;
3. Hotels, motels, apartment houses, rooming houses, camps, clubs, trailer parks, office or loft buildings, and similar establishments offering rental of living, business, or commercial quarters;
4. Hospitals, sanitariums, rest homes, child nurseries, child care institutions, homes for the aged, and similar establishments offering board or lodging in addition to medical, surgical, nursing, convalescent, aged, or child care;
5. Private schools, colleges, or universities, and similar establishments that provide board or lodging in addition to educational facilities;
6. Establishments contracting for development, maintenance, or cleaning of grounds; or maintenance or cleaning of facilities and/or quarters of commercial units and living units; and
7. Establishments providing veterinary or other animal care services.

Other examples of establishments covered under Wage Order No. 5-2001 include fraternity and sorority houses, golf or other athletic clubs operating public eating facilities, landscaping firms, mini-storage establishments that are not connected with a transportation firm, organized camps, resorts, and pest control companies.n73

[vi] Laundry, Linen Supply, Dry Cleaning, and Dyeing Industry Defined

"Laundry, linen supply, dry cleaning, and dyeing industry," as used in Wage Order No. 6-2001, means any industry, business, or establishment operated for the purpose of washing, ironing, cleaning, refreshing, restoring, pressing, dyeing, storing, fumigating, mothproofing, waterproofing, or other processes incidental to these purposes, on articles or fabrics of any kind, including but not limited to clothing, hats, drapery, rugs, curtains, linens, household furnishings, textiles, furs, or leather goods.n74 The term includes self-service laundries and dry cleaning establishments, and "the collection, distribution, storage, sale or resale at retail or wholesale of the foregoing services."n75

[vii] Mercantile Industry Defined

Wage Order No. 7-2001 governs the "mercantile industry," which is defined as any industry, business, or establishment operated for the purpose of purchasing, selling, or distributing goods or commodities at wholesale or retail, or for the purpose of renting goods or commodities.n76 Establishments covered under the mercantile industry wage order include all retail stores, auctioneers, commodity agents and brokers, wholesale and retail florists, gas stations with car washes, import-export businesses, mail order houses, businesses that rent equipment or other goods, telephone soliciting businesses, trading stamp redemption stores, and wholesale houses.ⁿ⁷⁷

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

A retail store operated incidentally as part of another business (such as a hotel, hospital, or theater), is covered by the industry order applicable to the main business, rather than by Wage Order No. 7-2001. However, a separate establishment under a distinctly different organization (for example, a telephone equipment store operated by the sales division of a telephone company) may be covered by Wage Order No. 7-2001, depending on the specific facts.ⁿ⁷⁸ Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

[viii] Industries Handling Products After Harvest Defined

Wage Order No. 8-2001, governing "industries handling products after harvest," applies to any industry, business, or establishment operated for the purpose of grading, sorting, cleaning, drying, cooling, icing, packing, dehydrating, cracking, shelling, candling, separating, slaughtering, picking, plucking, shucking, pasteurizing, fermenting, ripening, molding, or otherwise preparing any agricultural, horticultural, egg, poultry, meat, seafood, rabbit, or dairy product for distribution, including all the operations incidental to these activities.ⁿ⁷⁹

Examples of operations covered under the wage order for industries handling products after harvest include beet sugar mills,ⁿ⁸⁰ cotton gins, dairies, fresh fruit and vegetable packing companies, dried fruit processing, commercial fish hatcheries, ice creameries that use whole milk, and wineries.ⁿ⁸¹

For a discussion of distinctions between operations falling under Wage Order No. 8-2001 and those falling under Wage Order No. 13-2001, governing industries preparing agricultural products on the farm for market, see [xiii], below. For a discussion of distinctions between operations falling under Wage Order No. 8-2001 and those falling under Wage Order No. 14-2001, governing the agricultural occupations, see [c][iii], below.

"Transportation industry," as used in Wage Order No. 9-2001, means any industry, business, or establishment operated for the purpose of conveying persons or property from one place to another whether by rail, highway, air, or water, and all operations and services in connection with that purpose, and also includes storing or warehousing of goods or property, and the repairing, parking, rental, maintenance, or cleaning of vehicles.ⁿ⁸²

Examples of businesses covered under the transportation industry wage order include airlines and railroads, ambulance services, armored car services, bus lines (privately owned), car washes, car and truck rental companies, ferry boats, garages and parking lots, garbage collection services, moving and storage companies, taxi services, and vehicle repair shops.ⁿ⁸³

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

Many types of businesses employ individuals to operate and maintain vehicles and warehouses; however, Wage Order No. 9-2001 applies only to businesses which have such operations as their main purpose. For example, a hotel employee who drives a courtesy van is covered by Wage Order No. 5-2001, governing the public housekeeping industry, rather than Wage Order No. 9-2001. In addition, a farm employee who delivers farm products to their first point of distribution would be covered by Wage Order No. 14-2001, governing agricultural occupations, rather than Wage Order No. 9-2001. And mechanics employed by an automobile dealership (as opposed to a repair shop having no connection with a dealership) are covered by Wage Order No. 7-2001, governing the mercantile industry, rather than Wage Order No. 9-2001.ⁿ⁸⁴ By contrast, a trucking company that ships mostly farm products is nevertheless primarily in the trucking business and would be covered by Wage Order No. 9-98. Classification depends on the primary purpose of the business.ⁿ⁸⁵ Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

[x] Amusement and Recreation Industry Defined

"Amusement and recreation industry," as used in Wage Order No. 10-2001, means any industry, business, or establishment operated for the purpose of furnishing entertainment or recreation to the public, including but not limited to theaters, dance halls, bowling alleys, billiard parlors, skating rinks, riding academies, race tracks, amusement parks, athletic fields, swimming pools, gymnasiums, golf courses, tennis courts, carnivals, and wired music studios.ⁿ⁸⁶ Although the employment of stable employees, including those working at amusement sites such as race tracks and riding academies, was previously governed by the wage order governing agricultural occupations,ⁿ⁸⁷ Wage Order No. 10-2001 now expressly applies to all employees employed by any employer operating a business at a horse racing facility, including stable employees. Stable employees include, but are not limited to grooms, hot walkers, exercise workers, and any other employees engaged in the raising, feeding, or management of racehorses, employed by a trainer at a racetrack or other non-farm training facility.ⁿ⁸⁸

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

The gymnasiums referred to in the definitional section of Wage Order No. 10-2001 are those used primarily for spectator or participatory sports and should be distinguished from establishments offering bodybuilding or weight control facilities, which are covered by Wage Order No. 2-2001 (governing personal services industry).ⁿ⁸⁹ Moreover, according to the DLSE, food service provided incidentally by a firm whose main business is offering entertainment, such as a theatre, bowling alley, or nightclub, does not affect its classification under Wage Order No. 10-2001. However, a golf club that has a public dining room is deemed to be operating a restaurant, and all employees of the club are covered by Wage Order No. 5-2001 (governing the public housekeeping industry). Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

[xi] Broadcasting Industry Defined

Wage Order No. 11-2001, which governs the "broadcasting industry," applies to any industry, business, or establishment operated for the purpose of broadcasting or taping and broadcasting programs through the medium of radio or television.ⁿ⁹⁰

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

According to the DLSE, the production of motion pictures on videotape for a purpose other than broadcasting is covered by Wage Order No. 12-2001 (governing the motion picture industry). If a company both tapes and broadcasts, such as when a television station tapes and broadcasts a news program, the taping operations are covered by Wage Order No. 11-2001. However, if a broadcaster contracts with another firm for the production of a videotape, the firm making the tape is covered by Wage Order No. 12-2001. If the main business of a company is to reproduce (that is, manufacture) tapes for wholesale or retail trade, Wage Order No. 1-2001 (governing the manufacturing industry) applies. If video production is incidental to an employer's main business (for example, a function performed by a promotion department of an industrial or financial corporation), the order covering the main business applies. Finally, the DLSE considers cable television companies to be operated for the purpose of providing a communications service. Cable television employees, therefore, are not covered by Wage Order No. 11-2001, but instead by Wage Order No. 4-2001 (governing professional, technical, clerical, mechanical, and similar occupations). Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

[xii] Motion Picture Industry Defined

Wage Order No. 12-2001, which governs the "motion picture industry," applies to any industry, business, or establishment operated for the purpose of motion picture or television film production, or primarily allied with theatrical or television motion picture productions, including but not limited to motion pictures for entertainment, commercial, religious, or educational purposes, whether made by film, tape, or otherwise.ⁿ⁹¹

[xiii] Industries Preparing Agricultural Products on the Farm for Market Defined

Wage Order No. 13-2001, governing "industries preparing agricultural products for market, on the farm," applies to any operation performed in a permanently fixed structure or establishment on the farm or on a moving packing plant on the farm for the purpose of preparing agricultural, horticultural, egg, poultry, meat, seafood, rabbit, or dairy products for market when these operations are done on the premises owned or operated by the same employer who produced the products referred to and includes all operations incidental thereto.ⁿ⁹²

Certain food processing operations such as slaughtering or poultry processing that are ordinarily covered under Wage Order No. 8-2001 (governing industries handling farm products after harvest)ⁿ⁹³ will be covered under Wage Order No. 13-2001 if the operation is carried out on the employer's own crop or animal product, or, in the case of egg processing, if handling is involved.ⁿ⁹⁴ Note, however, that if the grower processes crops or animal products for other growers, in addition to his or her own, the packing or processing operation is covered by Wage Order No. 8-2001.

For a discussion of distinctions between operations falling under Wage Order No. 13-80 and Wage Order No. 14-2001 (governing the agricultural occupations), see [c][iii], below.

[c] Occupation Wage Orders

[i] Listing of Occupations Covered

The four occupation wage orders are the following:

55. Tracers;

56. Vehicle operators.

Also covered under Wage Order No. 4-2001 are assistants to the above employees and other related occupations listed as professional, semiprofessional, technical, clerical, mechanical, and kindred occupations.ⁿ¹⁰¹

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

Most employees who are not covered by industry orders are engaged in listed or related occupations covered by Wage Order No. 4-2001. Several major kinds of business that are not covered by any of the industry wage orders, but which generally employ the classes of occupations covered by Wage Order No. 4-2001, are accounting firms, advertising agencies, banks, cemeteries, contractors, employment agencies, insurance companies, loan companies, investment firms, medical clinics other than hospitals, newspaper publishers, professional offices (such as for architects, attorneys, dentists, engineers, and physicians), public utilities, real estate offices, research and development firms, private schools or colleges not offering boarding, security guard services, telephone answering services, telephone and telegraph companies, and travel agencies.ⁿ¹⁰² Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

[iii] Agricultural Occupations Defined

Wage Order No. 14-2001 applies to all nonexempt persons employed in an agricultural occupation,ⁿ¹⁰³ except to employees covered by Wage Order No. 8-2001(handling products after harvest) or Wage Order No. 13-2001 (preparing agricultural products on the farm for market).ⁿ¹⁰⁴

"Employed in an agricultural occupation" means any of the following described occupations:ⁿ¹⁰⁵

1. The preparation, care, and treatment of farmland, pipeline, or ditches, including leveling for agricultural purposes, plowing, discing, and fertilizing the soil;
2. The sowing and planting of any agricultural or horticultural commodity;
3. The care of any agricultural or horticultural commodity, including, but not limited to, cultivation, irrigation, weed control, thinning, heating, pruning, tying, fumigating, spraying, and dusting;
4. The harvesting of any agricultural or horticultural commodity, including, but not limited to, picking cutting, threshing, mowing, knocking off, field chopping, bunching, baling, balling, field packing, and placing in field containers or in the vehicle in which the commodity will be hauled, and transportation on the farm or to the place of first processing or distribution;
5. The assembly and storage of any agricultural or horticultural commodity, including, but not limited to, loading, road siding, banking, stacking, binning, and piling.
6. The raising, feeding, and management of livestock, fur-bearing animals, poultry, fish, mollusks, and insects, including, but not limited to, herding, housing, hatching, milking, shearing, handling eggs, and extracting honey.
7. The harvesting of fish, as defined by Section 45 of the Fish and Game Code, for commercial sale.ⁿ¹⁰⁶
8. The conservation, improvement, or maintenance of a farm and its tools and equipment.

Other examples of activities covered under Wage Order No. 14-2001 include dairy farms where no processing except cooling is performed, trout farms, and oyster farms.ⁿ¹⁰⁷

Clerical workers employed by an agricultural company are not considered to be engaged in an agricultural occupation. Therefore, they are governed by Wage Order 4-2001,ⁿ¹⁰⁸ which applies to clerical occupations.ⁿ¹⁰⁹

[iv] Household Occupations Defined

"Household occupations," as used in Wage Order No. 15-2001, means all services related to the care of persons or maintenance of a private household or its premises by an employee of a private householder. These occupations include, but are not limited to, butlers, chauffeurs, companions, cooks, day workers, gardeners, graduate nurses, grooms, housecleaners, housekeepers, maids, practical nurses, tutors, valets, and other similar occupations.ⁿ¹¹⁰

Previously, personal attendants were expressly excluded from coverage under Wage Order No. 15.ⁿ¹¹¹ Under Wage Order 15-2001, the employment of personal attendantsⁿ¹¹² is governed under some, but not all, of the provisions Wage Order No. 15-2001.ⁿ¹¹³

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

A secretary who works for a private householder rather than for a business is covered under Wage Order No. 15-2001, governing household occupations, rather than under Wage Order No. 4-2001, governing clerical occupations. Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

[v] Construction, Drilling, Logging, Mining

"Construction occupations" include alteration, demolition, building, renovation, excavation, maintenance, remodeling, improvement and repair work as defined in the California Business and Professions Code Division 3, Chapter 9, section 7025 et seq., and any other similar occupations or trades.ⁿ¹¹⁴ "Drilling Occupations" include all work associated with the exploration or extraction of oil, gas, or water resources work, including but not limited to the installation, establishment, reworking, maintenance or repair of wells and pumps by boring, drilling, excavating, casting, cementing and cleaning for the extraction or conveyance of fluids such as water, steam, gases, or petroleum.ⁿ¹¹⁵ "Logging occupations" means any work for which a timber operator's license is required pursuant to California Public Resources Code sections 4571 through 4586, including the cutting or removal or both of timber or other solid wood forest products, including Christmas trees, from timberlands for commercial purposes, together with all the work that is incidental thereto, including but not limited to construction and maintenance of roads, fuel breaks, fire breaks, stream crossings, landings, skid trails, beds for the falling of trees, and fire hazard abatement.ⁿ¹¹⁶ "Mining Occupations" mean miners and other associated and related occupations (not covered by Labor Code Sections 750 et seq.) required to engage in excavation or operations above or below ground including work in mines, quarries, or open pits, used for the purposes of exploration or extraction of nonmetallic minerals and ores, coal, and building materials such as stone, gravel, and rock, or other materials intended for manufacture or sale, whether paid on a time, piece rate, commission, or other basis.ⁿ¹¹⁷

[d] General Minimum Wage Order

In addition to the 16 industry and occupation wage orders, the IWC has promulgated a general minimum wage order requiring that every employer pay to each employee, other than outside salespersons, and any individual who is a parent, spouse, or child of the employer, not less than $6.25 per hour (effective January 1, 2001) and not less than $6.75 per hour (effective January 1, 2002) for all hours worked.ⁿ¹¹⁸ The new minimum wage order has eliminated exemptions from the minimum wage for:ⁿ¹¹⁹

- Employees of the State and local government and any political subdivision thereof,

- Full-time carnival ride operators,
- Professional actors,
- Personal attendants in private homes except for persons under the age of eighteen who are employed as baby sitters for a minor child of the employer in the employer's home,
- Student nurses,
- Minors paid not less than 85% of the minimum wage rounded to the nearest nickel.

The IWC has also amended the previous partial exemption for learners to include minors. The general minimum wage order applies to employees not otherwise covered by an industry or occupation wage order, but does not apply to employees who are expressly exempt from all provisions, or from the minimum wage provisions, of a wage order otherwise covering those employees.ⁿ¹²⁰

[e] Substantive Coverage

The wage orders cover the following facets of employment:

1. Hours and days of work and overtime compensation;ⁿ¹²¹
2. Minimum wages;ⁿ¹²²
3. Reporting time pay (minimum wages payable to employee who reports to work as required, but is not put to work or is furnished less than half the usual or scheduled day's work).ⁿ¹²³
4. Licenses for employment of certain disabled workers at less than minimum wage;ⁿ¹²⁴
5. Recordkeeping and paycheck statement requirements;ⁿ¹²⁵
6. Deductions from pay;ⁿ¹²⁶
7. Provision of uniforms and equipment by employer;ⁿ¹²⁷
8. Crediting of meals and lodging against minimum wage under certain circumstances;ⁿ¹²⁸
9. Meal period requirements;ⁿ¹²⁹
10. Rest period requirements;ⁿ¹³⁰
11. Change rooms and resting facilities requirements;ⁿ¹³¹
12. Seating requirements;ⁿ¹³²
13. Temperature requirements;ⁿ¹³³
14. Requirements for adequate elevators, escalators, or similar services;ⁿ¹³⁴

15. Exemptions from provisions governing recordkeeping, meal periods, rest periods, and certain physical plant requirements by the DLSE;ⁿ¹³⁵ and

16. A requirement that copies of the applicable wage order be posted or made available to employees.ⁿ¹³⁶

[f] Exempt Employees

Certain categories of employees are exempt from all provisions of all of the wage orders, including outside salespersons, government employees,ⁿ¹³⁷ and members of the employer's immediate family.ⁿ¹³⁸ Persons employed in administrative, executive, and professional capacities are exempt from most of the provisions of the wage orders, including the minimum wage and overtime compensation requirements and the provisions requiring rest and meal periods.ⁿ¹³⁹

In addition, the new minimum wage order has eliminated exemptions from the minimum wage and meals and lodging credits for:ⁿ¹⁴⁰

- Employees of the State and local government and any political subdivision thereof,
- Full-time carnival ride operators,
- Professional actors,
- Personal attendants in private homes except for persons under the age of eighteen who are employed as baby sitters for a minor child of the employer in the employer's home,
- Student nurses,
- Minors paid not less than 85% of the minimum wage rounded to the nearest nickel.

The IWC has also amended the previous partial exemption for learners to include minors.

In addition, certain categories of employees are exempt from all provisions of the wage order regulating the particular industry or occupation in which they work, or are wholly or partly exempt from the minimum wage and/or overtime compensation provisions of that order.

The employer bears the responsibility of proving any exemption from the requirements of the IWC Wage Orders.ⁿ¹⁴¹

The DLSE opines that finding an employee exempt from the Wage Orders has far-reaching ramifications because exempt status deprives the employee not only of the right to overtime compensation, but also to most of the other protections afforded to non-exempt employees by the Wage Orders:ⁿ¹⁴²

- Section 3 overtime premium.ⁿ¹⁴³
- Section 4 minimum wage.ⁿ¹⁴⁴
- Section 5 reporting time pay.ⁿ¹⁴⁵
- Section 7 requirement of records under IWC Orders, but not records required by the Labor Code.ⁿ¹⁴⁶

- Section 9 requirement that the employer furnish a uniform. However, Labor Code section 2802 would provide some protection for the exempt employee).
- Section 10 requirement that meals and lodging amounts be limited.ⁿ¹⁴⁷
- Section 11 meal period requirement, and Section 12, rest period requirement.ⁿ¹⁴⁸

For a discussion of employees exempt from all provisions of the wage orders, or only from the minimum wage provisions, see Chapter 2. For a discussion of employees wholly or partly exempt only from the overtime compensation provisions of the wage orders, see Chapter 3. For discussion of coverage and exemptions from child labor laws, see Chapter 6.

[g] Procedures for Amending, Rescinding, or Adopting Wage Orders

[i] Generally

Wage orders may be adopted, amended, or rescinded by the IWC pursuant to procedures set forth in the Labor Code.ⁿ¹⁴⁹ IWC orders fixing minimum wages, maximum hours, and standard conditions of labor, when promulgated in accordance with the procedures specified in the Labor Code, are expressly exempted from the usual procedures for adopting administrative regulations set forth under Government Code sections 11346-11347.5.ⁿ¹⁵⁰

The IWC has the continuing duty to ascertain the wages paid and hours and conditions of labor and employment in the various occupations and industries in California.ⁿ¹⁵¹ If, after investigation, the IWC finds that wages paid to employees may be inadequate to supply the cost of proper living or that hours or conditions of labor may be prejudicial to the health or welfare of employees in any occupation, trade, or industry, the IWC must select a wage board to make recommendations regarding the adoption, amendment, or rescission of wage orders,ⁿ¹⁵² as discussed in [iv], below. In addition, as discussed in [ii] and [iii], below, the process of adopting, amending, or rescinding a wage order may be initiated by petition of interested parties.ⁿ¹⁵³

In addition to the procedures discussed below, specific procedures are applicable to promulgation of IWC minimum wage orders.ⁿ¹⁵⁴ For a discussion of procedures for promulgating minimum wage orders, see Chapter 2.

[ii] Petition by Interested Party

Any interested party may petition the IWC requesting the adoption, amendment, or repeal of a regulation. The petition must state the substance and nature of the regulation, amendment, or repeal that is requested and the reason for the request, and must refer to the IWC's authority to take the action that is requested.ⁿ¹⁵⁵

Within 120 days of the receipt of the petition, the IWC must notify the petitioner in writing of the receipt of the petition, set the matter for consideration at a public meeting, and issue a written decision that either (1) sets the matter for public hearing pursuant to Labor Code section 1178 or 1178.5,ⁿ¹⁵⁶ or (2) denies the petition and states the reasons for the denial.ⁿ¹⁵⁷ The petitioner may request reconsideration of any part or all of a decision denying the petition. The IWC's reconsideration of any matter relating to a petition is subject to the same procedures as prescribed for responding to the original petition, except that a decision to deny reconsideration is final.ⁿ¹⁵⁸

If a petition is referred to a wage board,ⁿ¹⁵⁹ the IWC must complete its final actions on the petition within 90 days after completion of the public hearing process.ⁿ¹⁶⁰

[iii] Petition Affecting Health Care Industry

If a labor organization or a trade association recognized in the health care industry files a petition with the IWC that requests an amendment to an order of the IWC that would directly regulate only the health care industry, the petitioner may request that the ordinary procedures for the review of such petitions not be used and that the special procedures prescribed under Labor Code section 1182.7(c) and (d) be followed instead.ⁿ¹⁶¹ If this request is made, the IWC must follow the special procedures.ⁿ¹⁶²

Under the special procedures, the IWC must, within 45 days after the date that the petition is filed, propose either the adoption or rejection of the petition, in whole or in part, without appointing a wage board.ⁿ¹⁶³ Thereafter, the usual procedures for publication of and hearings on IWC actions apply,ⁿ¹⁶⁴ except that hearings must be conducted within 90 days after the date the petition is originally filed.ⁿ¹⁶⁵ Not more than 30 days following the hearings, the IWC must take final action with respect to its proposal, and no later than 15 days following final action, notice of the action taken must be given.ⁿ¹⁶⁶ Any action adopting, amending, or repealing an order directly regulating only the health care industry takes effect 60 days following the date of notice of the final action.ⁿ¹⁶⁷

[iv] Investigation and Selection of Wage Board

Except in the case of petitions from labor organizations or trade associations in the health care industry,ⁿ¹⁶⁸ or amendments to minimum wage requirements necessary to conform to federal law,ⁿ¹⁶⁹ the adoption, amendment, or repeal of a wage order is commenced by appointment of a wage board by the IWC.ⁿ¹⁷⁰ Pursuant to Labor Code section 1178, the IWC must appoint a wage board if, after investigation, it finds that in any occupation, trade, or industry, the wages paid to employees may be inadequate to supply the cost of proper living, or that the hours or conditions of labor may be prejudicial to the health, morals, or welfare of employees.ⁿ¹⁷¹ The IWC must transmit to the wage board the information supporting the IWC's findings gathered in its investigation, which must include at least one public hearing.ⁿ¹⁷² The investigation contemplated in Labor Code section 1178 is a preliminary inquiry to determine whether there is sufficient question about the adequacy of the existing wage orders that wage boards ought to be selected. The IWC may rely on statistical and other data compiled in its normal investigative process, along with its consideration of the obvious effects of inflation.ⁿ¹⁷³

The wage board must be composed of an equal number of representatives of employers and employees in the occupation, trade, or industry in question, and a nonvoting representative of the IWC, designated by the IWC, who acts as the chairperson.ⁿ¹⁷⁴ The wage board must consider the findings of the IWC and any other information it deems appropriate and report to the IWC its recommendation regarding the proper minimum wage or other matters submitted to the board for its consideration.ⁿ¹⁷⁵

The proceedings and deliberations of the wage board must be made a matter of record for the use of the IWC and are admissible as evidence in any proceeding before the IWC.ⁿ¹⁷⁶

[v] Public Hearings on Proposed Regulations

Before amending or rescinding any existing order or adopting any new order, and after receipt of the wage board's report and recommendation, the IWC must prepare proposed regulations with respect to the matter under consideration.ⁿ¹⁷⁷ The proposed regulations must include any recommendations of the wage board that received the support of at least two thirds of the members of the wage board.ⁿ¹⁷⁸ A public hearing on the proposed regulations must be held in each of at least three cities in California; however, when the proposed regulations would affect only an occupation, trade, or industry that is not statewide in scope, a public hearing must be held in the locality in which the occupation, trade, or industry prevails.ⁿ¹⁷⁹ The proceedings must be recorded and transcribed and must thereafter be a matter of public record.ⁿ¹⁸⁰

[vi] Notice of Hearing and Publication

When the time and place for the holding of a hearing for the purpose of considering and acting on proposed regulations or similar matters has been set,ⁿ¹⁸¹ the IWC must give public notice thereof through advertisements in specified cities.ⁿ¹⁸² A copy of the notice and the proposed regulations must be mailed to the county clerk of each county in the state to be posted at the courthouse, and to each association of employers or employees that, in the opinion of the IWC, would be affected by the hearing.ⁿ¹⁸³ In addition, any person or organization in California filing with the IWC a written request for notice of the hearing must be provided with a copy of the notice and the proposed regulations.ⁿ¹⁸⁴ However, failure to mail this notice does not invalidate any IWC order issued after the hearing.ⁿ¹⁸⁵

The notice must state the time and place fixed for the hearing, which may not be less than 30 days from the date of publication and mailing of the notices.ⁿ¹⁸⁶

[vii] Procedures When Proposal Changed After Hearing

The IWC may not adopt, amend, or repeal a proposal that has been changed from that which had originally been made available to the public unless the change is nonsubstantive in nature.ⁿ¹⁸⁷ If a substantive change is made to the original proposal after the close of the public hearing, the full text of the change must be noticed within five days and made available to the public for comments for at least 10 days before the IWC adopts, amends, or repeals the regulation.ⁿ¹⁸⁸ No later than 10 days following the close of the public comment period, the IWC must take final action with respect to its modified proposal, and give notice of that action within 10 days according to the prescribed notice procedures.ⁿ¹⁸⁹ In no case may any action adopting, amending, or repealing an order take effect more than 60 days following the close of the public comment period.ⁿ¹⁹⁰

[viii] Amendment, Rescission, or Promulgation of Order

After receipt of the wage board report and the public hearings on the proposed regulations, the IWC may, on its own motion, amend or rescind an existing order or promulgate a new order.ⁿ¹⁹¹ However, with respect to proposed regulations based on recommendations supported by at least two thirds of the members of the wage board, the IWC must adopt the proposed regulations, unless it finds there is no substantial evidence to support such recommendations.ⁿ¹⁹²

Any action taken by the IWC in amending or rescinding an existing wage order, or promulgating a new one, must be published in at least one newspaper in each of the cities of Los Angeles, Sacramento, Oakland, San Jose, Fresno, San Diego, and San Francisco.ⁿ¹⁹³ A summary of the action taken and notice of where the complete text of the new or amended order may be obtained may be published in lieu of the complete text if the IWC determines that the summary and notice will adequately inform the public.ⁿ¹⁹⁴ The IWC's finding that there has been publication of any action taken by the IWC as required by Labor Code Section 1182.1 is conclusive as to the obligation of an employer to comply with the order.ⁿ¹⁹⁵ The statement of basisⁿ¹⁹⁶ need not be published.ⁿ¹⁹⁷ Any actions taken by the IWC in amending, rescinding, or promulgating orders become effective on the first day of the succeeding January or July, and not less than 60 days from the date of publication.ⁿ¹⁹⁸

Any person aggrieved directly or indirectly by any final rule or regulation of the IWC may apply to the IWC for a rehearing with respect to any matters determined or covered by the rule or regulation.ⁿ¹⁹⁹ The application must be verified and fully state the grounds on which rehearing is sought and must be made within 20 days after publication of the rule or regulation.ⁿ²⁰⁰ The IWC may grant or deny rehearing by order and notice given to the party applying for rehearing.ⁿ²⁰¹ If rehearing is granted, the IWC may redetermine the matter on the record before it and give notice of its redetermination in the same manner as provided for an original order.ⁿ²⁰² Rehearing is deemed denied unless acted on by the IWC within 30 days after the application is filed.ⁿ²⁰³

[x] Statement Regarding Basis

A majority of the commissioners must concur with each IWC order.ⁿ²⁰⁴ The IWC must prepare a statement regarding the basis on which the adopted or amended order is predicated. A majority of the commissioners must concur in the statement.ⁿ²⁰⁵ The IWC must publish a copy of the statement with the order in the California Regulatory Notice Register, and must provide a copy of the statement to any interested party on request.ⁿ²⁰⁶ The statement regarding basis must be more than a listing of authorizing statutes for the agency's regulatory action and must provide a reasoned explanation that reflects the factual, legal, and policy foundations for the action taken.ⁿ²⁰⁷ The California Supreme Court has expressly found that the statements regarding basis for the 1980 wage orders are adequate.ⁿ²⁰⁸

[xi] Mailing and Posting of Wage Orders

The IWC must send by mail, so far as practicable, to each employer in the occupation or industry affected by a wage order a copy of the applicable order.ⁿ²⁰⁹ The IWC must also send a copy of the order to each employer registering its name with the IWC for the purpose of receiving orders. Failure of the IWC to mail the order or notice of it to an affected employer does not relieve the employer of the duty of complying with the order.ⁿ²¹⁰

The employer must post a copy of the order in the building in which employees affected by the order are employed.ⁿ²¹¹

Employers who are subject to an order must also post a copy of the order and keep it posted in a conspicuous location frequented by employees during the day.ⁿ²¹² For a full discussion of posting requirements, see Chapter 7.

[xii] Summary of Orders' Regulations

The IWC must prepare a summary of the regulations contained in its orders.ⁿ²¹³ The summary must be printed on the first page of the document containing the full text of the order, and must include a brief description of the following subjects of the orders: minimum wage, hours and days of work, reporting time, pay periods, cash shortages and breakage, uniforms and equipment, meals and lodging, meal and rest periods, and seats.ⁿ²¹⁴ The summary must also include information on how to contact the field office of the Division of Labor Standards Enforcement, how to obtain a copy of the full text of the order and the statement regarding the basis of the order, and any other information the IWC considers necessary.ⁿ²¹⁵ At its discretion, the IWC may prepare a separate summary for each order or any combination of orders, or it may incorporate the regulations of all its orders into a single summary.ⁿ²¹⁶

[h] Validity of Wage Orders

State regulation of minimum wages, maximum hours, and working conditions carries with it a strong presumption of regularity, since the legislative power to regulate employment conditions is very broad, even though such regulations almost inevitably impose some economic burden on employers.ⁿ²¹⁷

Orders of the IWC fixing minimum wages, maximum hours, and standard conditions of labor for all employees, when promulgated in accordance with the applicable provisions of the Labor Code, are valid.ⁿ²¹⁸ Findings of fact made by the IWC in promulgating, amending, or rescinding wage orders are, in the absence of fraud, conclusive.ⁿ²¹⁹ The California Supreme Court has rejected challenges to the 1980 wage orders on the basis of procedural and constitutional defects, and has expressly ruled Wage Order Nos. 1-80 (now 1-2001), 3-80 (now 3-2001), 4-80 (now 4-2001), 5-80 (now 5-2001), 8-80 (now 8-2001), 9-80 (now 9-2001), 10-80 (now 10-2001), 13-80 (now 13-2001), and 14-80 (now 14-2001) to be valid.ⁿ²²⁰

In Small v. Superior Court, ^{n220.1} the Court of Appeal expressly found Wage Order 16, regulating the hours, wages, and working conditions of California employees engaged in onsite construction, drilling, logging, and certain mining occupations, valid. The trial court had concluded that the Wage Order was invalid, because it was not accompanied by a sufficient statement of the basis, was not properly published, and contained an unworkable definition of "given craft," which made the order unreasonable, arbitrary, capricious, and unfair. In reversing that conclusion, the Court of Appeal held that the IWC complied with various Labor Code provisions in adopting Wage Order 16;n220.2 the 14-page statement prepared by the IWC as to the basis for Wage Order 16 was adequate;n220.3 the employer challenging Wage Order 16 failed to carry its burden of proving that the IWC did not perform its official duty to publish the order under Labor Code § 1182.1;n220.4 and the definition of "work unit" in the Wage Order as adopted was based on the recommendation of at least two-thirds of the members of the wage board, which was comprised of representatives of both employers and employees,n220.5 and was implicitly supported by substantial evidence so that it was not arbitrary and capricious. The court also rejected the trial court's conclusion that the definition of "work unit" was unreasonable and unfair, finding that such policy determinations were matters for the wage board, whose recommendation, when supported by at least two-thirds of its members, the IWC was obligated to follow.n220.6

[3] Enforcement and Remedies

[a] Administrative Enforcement by Division of Labor Standards and Enforcement

The Division of Labor Standards Enforcement (DLSE) is one of six mandatory divisions of the Department of Industrial Relations,n221 a department of the state government that also includes the IWC.n222 The structure and operations of the DLSE are governed by Labor Code sections 79-105. The DLSE is under the direction of the Chief of the Division of Labor Standards Enforcement, also known as the "Labor Commissioner,"n223 who is appointed by the governor, subject to confirmation by the state senate, and holds office at the pleasure of the Director of Industrial Relations.n224

The DLSE is specifically responsible for administering and enforcing the provisions of Labor Code sections 1171 et seq., governing wages, hours, and working conditions,n225 and for enforcing wage orders promulgated by the IWC.n226 In addition, the DLSE may enforce other provisions of the Labor Code and all labor laws of the state not otherwise specifically vested in another officer, board, or commission.n227

The DLSE succeeded, and is vested with all of the powers, duties, purposes, responsibilities and jurisdiction of, the former Division of Labor Law Enforcementn228 and the Division of Industrial Welfare.n229 Any regulation or other action made by the abolished Division of Labor Law Enforcement or the Division of Industrial Welfare in the administration of a function transferred to the DLSE remains in effect, and is deemed to be a regulation or action of the DLSE unless and until repealed, modified, or rescinded by the DLSE.n230

The DLSE is headquartered in San Francisco.n231 Offices are also maintained in Los Angeles, Sacramento, San Diego, Oakland, Fresno, San Jose, and such other places as the Labor Commission may deem necessary.n232

In enforcing state wage and hour and other labor laws, the DLSE has authority, among other things, to issue subpoenas to compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of documents, and administer oaths and examine witnesses under oath;n233 take assignment of wage and other employee claims;n234 collect wages and benefits without assignment;n235 investigate and conduct hearings on employee complaints;n236 prosecute actions for collection of wages generallyn237 and for minimum wages or overtime compensation specifically;n238 and seek injunctions against willful violations of state wage and hour laws by employers.n239 The DLSE is also authorized to investigate complaints that wages paid are less than the wages to which the employee is entitled under the California Equal Pay Act,n240 and to prosecute actions on that employee's behalf.n241

For a full discussion of administrative remedies under California wage and hour laws, see Chapter 5.

[b] Judicial Enforcement

In lieu of the administrative remedies provided by the Labor Code for collection of unpaid wages and enforcement of wage and hour laws, referred to in [a], above, an aggrieved employee may maintain a civil action to collect unpaid wages or otherwise enforce his or her rights.ⁿ²⁴² Furthermore, administrative hearings before the Labor Commissioner are subject to de novo judicial review.ⁿ²⁴³ For discussion of civil actions by employees, see Chapter 5.

[c] Administrative Statements or Interpretations

The policy statements, interpretive bulletins and informational pamphlets issued by the DLSE have long been given great weight by appellate courts in California when determining questions regarding the meaning of the wage orders and other labor laws.ⁿ²⁴⁴ However, the Supreme Court, in Tidewater Marine Western, Inc. v. Bradshaw ⁿ²⁴⁵ concluded that these written interpretations should be given "no weight" in interpreting the wage orders. Tidewater involved the application of wage orders 4-89 and 9-90 to the employers' offshore activities. Defendants relied on the interpretations issued by the DLSE. The Supreme Court noted that the IWC, when promulgating its wage orders, must comply with rule-making procedures, including public hearings and input, which are analogous to the notice and public hearing procedures of the Administrative Procedures Act, Gov. Code § 11340.5(a), (APA). The Court contrasted this with the DLSE, which utilizes no such procedures when it issues its interpretations. It then determined that the DLSE interpretations constituted regulations because they are rules of "general application" and are interpretations of the wage laws. Accordingly, the Supreme Court concluded that the interpretations set forth in the DLSE Operations and Procedures Manual and its other publications constitute regulations and are therefore void because they are not promulgated in accordance with the APA. Interpretive bulletins, policy statements, and other informational pamphlets issued by the DLSE are cited throughout Chapters 1-7; however, counsel are cautioned that the future utility of these publications is unclear.

In 1998, in response to the Tidewater decision, the DLSE issued an Enforcement Policies and Interpretations Manual. In late 2002, the DLSE issued the 2002 Update to the Manual.ⁿ²⁴⁶ In Tidewater, the Supreme Court had held that "if an agency prepares a policy manual that is no more than a restatement or a summary, without commentary, of the agency's prior decisions in specific cases and its prior advice letters, the agency is not adopting regulations."ⁿ²⁴⁷ According to the DLSE, its 1998 Enforcement Policies and Interpretations Manual and the 2002 Update comply with Tidewater because the Manual and Update summarize policies and interpretations the DLSE has followed in discharging its duty to administer and enforce California labor statutes and regulations.ⁿ²⁴⁸ In the 2002 Update, the DLSE cites the sources from which the summarized policies and interpretations are derived as:ⁿ²⁴⁹

1. Decisions of California's courts construing California's labor statutes and regulations and otherwise applying relevant California law.
2. California statutes and regulations which are clear and susceptible to only one reasonable interpretation.
3. Federal court decisions which define or circumscribe the jurisdictional scope of California's labor laws and regulations or which are instructive in interpreting California laws that incorporate, are modeled on, or parallel federal labor laws and regulations.
4. Selected opinion letters issued by DLSE in response to requests from private parties, setting forth the policies and interpretations of DLSE with respect to the application of the state's labor statutes and regulations to a specific set of facts.
5. Selected prior decisions rendered by the Labor Commissioner or the Labor Commissioner's hearing officers in the course of adjudicating disputes arising under California's labor statutes and regulations.

In Morillion v. Royal Packing Co., ⁿ²⁵⁰ the Supreme Court held that advice or opinion letters of the DLSE are not subject to the rulemaking provisions of the APA, citing two of the Division's advice letters regarding the DLSE's interpretation of the term "hours worked and noting that the DLSE interpretation was consistent with the Court's independent analysis of hours worked.n251

In the 2002 Update, the DLSE stated that certain opinion letters cited in the Manual refer to "Interpretive Bulletins" previously issued by the DLSE and noted that in Tidewater the Supreme Court had held that the DLSE's use of interpretive bulletins violated the Administrative Procedures Act to the extent that they went beyond a simple restatement or summary of existing laws, duly promulgated regulations, judicial decisions, the DLSE's opinion letters, or administrative decisions. The DLSE concluded that to the extent any such interpretive bulletin purports to interpret the law by setting out rules of general application and fails to present the interpretation as a restatement or summary of the above enumerated sources, it is invalid.n252

DLSE opinion letters, administrative decisions, precedent decisions and other unreported sources of the DLSE's interpretations are contained in a companion volume to the 2002 Update.n253 The 2002 Update, along with the companion volume, can be found on the Internet at <http://www.dir.ca.gov/DLSE>.

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS
CHAPTER 1 Overview of Wage and Hour Laws
Part A. TEXT

1-1 California Employment Law § 1.06

AUTHOR: By Carol S. Sanders, J.D.

§ 1.06 Federal Law Governing Wages and Hours

[1] Fair Labor Standards Act

[a] Generally

The Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA),ⁿ¹ as limited by the Portal-to-Portal Act,ⁿ² is the primary federal statute governing wages and hours of employment. Other federal statutes regulating wages and hours apply to employers who have contracts to provide services or goods for the federal government.ⁿ³

The FLSA does not apply to Indian tribes when application of the FLSA would interfere with tribal self-government, i.e., protecting the tribes' exclusive rights of self-governance in purely intramural matters.^{n3.1} Thus, for example, the FLSA did not apply to law enforcement officers of the Navajo Nation Division of Public Safety suing the tribe. The officers maintain law and order within the reservation, which is a part of tribal government and an appropriate activity to exempt as intramural.^{n3.2} The FLSA also did not apply to claims against the United States, because the claims against the United States were in reality claims against the tribe.^{n3.3} The overtime provisions of the FLSA may apply to a retail business located on an Indian reservation and owned by Indian tribal members, and the Secretary of Labor may have the authority to enter the Indian reservation to inspect the books of that business. For example, the FLSA applied to a retail store located on trust land within an Indian reservation, which was owned by a member of the tribe. The intramural exception did not apply because the tribe had not enacted wage and hour laws, and because the store was a purely commercial enterprise engaged in interstate commerce selling out-of-state goods to non-Indians and employing non-Indians. The treaty rights exception did not apply because there was nothing in the treaty directly on point discussing employment or wages and hours, and language in the treaty regarding the tribe's agreement to free all slaves was not so ambiguous that it could be construed to cover the payment of required wages. Further, the treaty right to occupy and exclude did not give the store owners a right to regulate employment relationships with non-tribal members who consented to employment by tribal members, and the right to exclude and prevent non-Indians from living on tribal land did not prevent the Department of Labor from entering the reservation to investigate FLSA violations.^{n3.4}

[b] Purpose of Act

The FLSA was enacted on the basis of the congressional finding that the existence, in industries engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce,ⁿ⁴ of labor conditions detrimental to the maintenance of the minimum standard of living necessary for health, efficiency, and the general well-being of workers causes commerce to be used to spread and perpetuate such conditions among the workers of the several states, burdens commerce and the free flow of commerce, constitutes an unfair method of competition in commerce, leads to labor disputes, and interferes with the orderly and fair marketing of goods in commerce.ⁿ⁵ It is the policy of the FLSA to correct and as rapidly as practicable eliminate these conditions without substantially curtailing employment or earning power.ⁿ⁶

[c] Scope of Coverage

[i] Wages, Hours, and Conditions of Employment Generally

The FLSA establishes minimum wages to be paid employees covered by its provisions,ⁿ⁷ and maximum hours of employment, beyond which overtime compensation must be paid.ⁿ⁸ It also regulates employment of minors in activities related to interstate commerce,ⁿ⁹ prohibits wage discrimination based on sex,ⁿ¹⁰ and contains recordkeeping requirements.ⁿ¹¹

[ii] Compensable Activity: Portal-to-Portal Act

The Portal-to-Portal Actⁿ¹² relieves employers from liability for minimum wages or overtime compensation under the FLSA resulting from the failure to compensate employees for certain specified activities unless, at the time the activity was engaged in, it was made compensable by the terms of an express contractual provision, or by custom or practice not inconsistent with a contractual provision.ⁿ¹³

The Portal-to-Portal Act was intended to curtail the numerous suits for unpaid compensation and liquidated damages under the FLSA that were filed after the United States Supreme Court ruled in *Anderson v. Mt. Clemens Pottery Co.*ⁿ¹⁴ that the FLSA provided compensation for certain activities for which employees had historically and customarily not been reimbursed.ⁿ¹⁵

In 1996, Congress amended the Portal-to-Portal Act by enacting the Employee Commuting Flexibility Act,^{n15.1} which provides that an employer need not compensate an employee for specified activities.

For a full discussion of the Portal-to-Portal Act as it affects the computation of work hours for purposes of determining overtime compensation and minimum wages, see Chapter 3, Part A.

[iii] Wage Discrimination on Basis of Sex: Equal Pay Act

Included in the FLSA is Title 29 of the United States Code, section 206(d), known as the Federal Equal Pay Act. This statute prohibits employers from discriminating between employees on the basis of sex by paying wages to employees at a rate less than the rate at which the employer pays wages to employees of the opposite sex in the same establishment on jobs requiring equal skill, effort, and responsibility, and performed under similar working conditions, unless the unequal payment is made pursuant to a seniority system, a merit system, a system that measures earnings by quantity or quality of production, or a differential based on any other factor other than sex.ⁿ¹⁶ The Act also prohibits labor organizations from causing or attempting to cause an employer to discriminate against an employee on the basis of sex by paying lower wages to that employee.ⁿ¹⁷ Similar provisions have been enacted under state law.ⁿ¹⁸

For a full discussion of the provisions of the Federal Equal Pay Act and related statutory provisions regarding sex discrimination, as well as remedies for such discrimination, see Chapters 40-44.

[d] Geographical Coverage

The provisions of the FLSA are applicable only to employees whose services during the workweek are performed in a workplace in any state of the United States, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Outer Continental Shelf Lands,ⁿ¹⁹ American Samoa, Guam, Wake Island, Eniwetok Atoll, Kwajalein Atoll, and Johnston Island.ⁿ²⁰ Piece workers in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands are subject to specified minimum piece rates; and certain employees in Puerto Rico are subject to different minimum wage standards set forth in the FLSA.ⁿ²¹

Employees working in other United States territories or in foreign countries are not covered under the FLSA, even if they are United States citizens.ⁿ²²

[e] Individual Employee Coverage

[i] Generally

An employee may be covered by the provisions of the FLSA either (1) individually, as described in this subsection, or (2) as an employee of a covered enterprise, as discussed in [f], below.ⁿ²³

An employee is individually covered under the minimum wage, overtime, and child labor provisions of the FLSA if he or she in any workweek is engaged (1) in commerce, or (2) in the production of goods for commerce.ⁿ²⁴ The term "commerce," as used in the FLSA, means trade, commerce, transportation, transmission, or communication among the several states or between any state and any place outside of the state.ⁿ²⁵ The term "state" also includes the District of Columbia and any territory or possession of the United States.ⁿ²⁶

To be covered, the employee need not engage solely, or even primarily, in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce. Every employee whose engagement in such activities, even though small in amount, is regular and recurring is covered by the FLSA.ⁿ²⁷ However, an employee engaged in purely local (that is, noninterstate) activities is not covered individually.ⁿ²⁸

[ii] Employees Engaged in Commerce

Employees who are engaged in commerce include those who use interstate instrumentalities of commerce as a regular and recurrent part of their duties,ⁿ²⁹ engage in the distribution of goods across state lines,ⁿ³⁰ or perform work that facilitates the operation of instrumentalities of commerce, including maintaining, repairing, or improving those instrumentalities.ⁿ³¹ Employees are also covered as "engaged in commerce" if they contribute directly to the movement of commerce by providing goods or facilities to be used or consumed by the instrumentalities of commerce in the direct furtherance of their activities of transportation, communication, transmission, or other movement in interstate or foreign commerce.ⁿ³² For example, employees who provide such items as energy or fuel to railroads, radio stations, airports, or other instrumentalities of commerce are deemed to be covered because they are so related to the actual movement of commerce as to be considered an essential and indispensable part thereof.ⁿ³³

In determining whether employees are "engaged in commerce," the activities of the employees, and not the business of the employer, is considered.ⁿ³⁴

[iii] Employees Engaged in Production of Goods for Commerce

An employee is individually covered under the FLSA if he or she is engaged in the production of goods for commerce.ⁿ³⁵ This test for coverage requires analysis of three elements: (1) the "production" of (2) "goods" (3) "for commerce."ⁿ³⁶

An employee is deemed to have been engaged in the "production" of goods if he or she was employed in producing, manufacturing, mining, handling, transporting, or in any other manner working on the goods, or in any closely related process or occupation directly essential to production, in any state.ⁿ³⁷ If the employee's work is part of the employer's actual production of the goods, he or she is engaged in the "direct" production of goods. However, if the employee did not work on or even come into actual contact with the goods, he or she may still be engaged in the "indirect" production of goods if the work was closely related and directly essential to production.ⁿ³⁸

"Goods" are wares, products, commodities, merchandise, or articles or subjects of commerce of any character, or any part or ingredient of those "goods." They include ships and marine equipment; they do not include goods after they are delivered into the actual physical possession of the ultimate consumer other than a producer, manufacturer, or processor.ⁿ³⁹ "Goods" are not limited to commercial goods or articles of trade. They are also not limited to tangible property, but may be "ideas, wishes, orders, and intelligence."ⁿ⁴⁰ In addition, written materials are "goods" under the FLSA.ⁿ⁴¹ Gold,ⁿ⁴² livestock, poultry and eggs, vessels, vehicles, aircraft, garments being laundered or rented, ice, containers, electrical energy or power, gas, and by-products are also considered "goods."ⁿ⁴³ "Goods" do not include dams, river improvements, highways and viaducts, or railroad lines.ⁿ⁴⁴

The term "commerce" is defined in [i], above. Goods are produced "for" commerce when the employer intends, hopes, expects, or has reason to believe that the goods, or any unsegregated part of them, will move in interstate or foreign commerce.ⁿ⁴⁵ It makes no difference whether the employer, or a subsequent owner or possessor of the goods, actually puts them into interstate or foreign commerce, as long as such movement was reasonably anticipated at the time the employer's employees worked on the goods. The fact that the goods do in fact move in interstate or foreign commerce will be considered strong evidence that the employer intended, hoped, expected, or had reason to believe that the goods would move in that way.ⁿ⁴⁶

Goods produced for direct furtherance of interstate movement are produced "for" commerce regardless of the employer's intent.ⁿ⁴⁷ Thus, ice produced for use by interstate rail carriers for refrigeration is produced "for" commerce.ⁿ⁴⁸ However, production of goods for the instrumentalities of interstate commerce is not always production "for" commerce when the goods are used in the same state. For example, employees producing ice in a local plant that delivers ice for the water cooler in the community railroad station are not producing goods "for" commerce.ⁿ⁴⁹

Whether goods are produced "for" commerce depends on circumstances that exist at the time the goods are being produced rather than on some subsequent event. For example, goods produced to fill an out-of-state order that are destroyed by fire before they leave the state are nevertheless produced "for" commerce, and the employees who produced the goods are covered by the FLSA.ⁿ⁵⁰ Conversely, goods produced for a local contractor in the expectation that they will be used within the state are not produced "for" commerce, even if the contractor sells them to someone who moves to another state.ⁿ⁵¹ The practitioner should remember, however, that goods disposed of locally to persons who place them in commerce are produced "for" commerce if the employer intended, hoped, expected, or had reason to believe that the goods would be taken or sent out of the state.ⁿ⁵²

[f] Enterprise Coverage

All employees of an enterprise, including employees who would not be covered under the individual coverage test discussed in [e], above, ⁿ⁵³ are covered by the FLSA if the enterprise is engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce.ⁿ⁵⁴

An "enterprise" means the related activities performed (either through unified operation or common control) by any person or persons for a common business purpose, whether performed in one or more establishments, or by one or more corporate or other organizational units, but does not include the related activities performed for an enterprise by an independent contractor.ⁿ⁵⁵ Certain activities in connection with hospitals and other care institutions, educational institutions, state or local agency-regulated carriers, and public agencies are specifically deemed to be performed for a "business purpose."ⁿ⁵⁶

A retail or service establishment that is under independent ownership will not be deemed to be other than a separate or distinct enterprise because of any arrangement that includes, but is not limited to, the following:ⁿ⁵⁷

1. An agreement to sell, or sell only, certain goods specified by a particular manufacturer, distributor, or advertiser;
2. An agreement to join with other establishments in the same industry for the purpose of collective purchasing; or
3. An agreement to have the exclusive right to sell the goods or use the brand name of a manufacturer, distributor, or advertiser within a specified area.

In addition, an independent retail or service establishment will not be considered otherwise simply because it occupies premises leased to it by a person who also leases premises to other retail or service establishments.ⁿ⁵⁸

Pursuant to the Fair Labor Standards Amendment of 1989, an "enterprise engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce," means an enterprise that:

1. Has employees engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce, or that has employees handling, selling, or otherwise working on goods or materials that have been moved in or produced for commerce by any person, and is an enterprise whose annual gross volume of sales made or business done is not less than $500,000 (exclusive of excise taxes at the retail level that are separately stated);ⁿ⁵⁹
2. Is engaged in the operation of a hospital; an institution primarily engaged in the care of the sick, the aged, or the mentally ill or defective who reside on the premises of such an institution; a school for mentally or physically handicapped or gifted children; a preschool, elementary, or secondary school; or an institution of higher education (regardless of whether or not the hospital, institution, or school is public or private or operates for profit or not for profit);ⁿ⁶⁰ or
3. Is an activity of a public agency.ⁿ⁶¹

An establishment that has as its only regular employees the owner or the owner's parent, spouse, child, or other member of the owner's immediate family is not considered an enterprise engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce or part of such an enterprise under the FLSA, and its sales may not be included for the purpose of determining the annual gross volume of sales of any other enterprise.ⁿ⁶²

Any enterprise that on March 31, 1990, was subject to the payment of minimum wages pursuant to 29 United States Code section 206(a)(1) and that because of amendments to the enterprise test made by the Fair Labor Standards amendments of 1989, discussed above, is no longer subject to section 206(a)(1) must do all of the following:ⁿ⁶³

1. Pay its employees not less than the minimum wage in effect under 29 United States Code section 206(a)(1) on March 31, 1990 (or $3.35 per hour);
2. Pay its employees in accordance with the overtime compensation provisions of 29 United States Code section 207; and
3. Remain subject to the child labor provisions of 29 United States Code section 212.

Violation of any of these requirements by the employer is considered a violation of 29 United States Code section 206,

207, or 212, respectively.ⁿ⁶⁴

[g] Exemptions From Coverage

There are specific exemptions from coverage under which certain employees otherwise covered individually or as employees of a covered enterprise are wholly or partially excluded from the FLSA's provisions.ⁿ⁶⁵ For a discussion of employees who are exempt from both minimum wage and overtime compensation provisions, or from minimum wage provisions only, see Chapter 2. For a discussion of employees who are exempt from overtime compensation provisions only, see Chapter 3. For a discussion of exemptions under the child labor provisions of the FLSA, see Chapter 6.

[h] Enforcement and Remedies

[i] Administrative Enforcement

The provisions of the FLSA are administered, enforced, and interpreted by the Secretary of Labor, through the Wage and Hour Division of the Department of Labor.ⁿ⁶⁶ The Wage and Hour Division is under direction of an Administrator, who is appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate,ⁿ⁶⁷ and whose principal office is located in the District of Columbia (although the Division maintains offices throughout the country).ⁿ⁶⁸ The Division issues regulations and bulletins interpreting the provisions of the FLSA, which are set forth in Title 29 of the Code of Federal Regulations, Parts 500 et seq. Advisory interpretations by the Wage and Hour Division indicate the construction of the law that guides the Administrator and the Division in enforcing the FLSA.ⁿ⁶⁹ Although the Division's regulations and interpretations are not binding on the courts,ⁿ⁷⁰ good-faith reliance on such regulations and interpretations may constitute a defense to an action against an employer for violation of the minimum wage and overtime requirements of the FLSA, even if the regulation or interpretation is subsequently held to be invalid.ⁿ⁷¹

The Division is authorized to conduct investigations and gather data on wages, hours, and other employment conditions or practices.ⁿ⁷² In conducting such investigations, the Division is authorized to make on-site inspections of places of employment, interview employees, and examine employer records to determine whether any violations of the FLSA have occurred or to aid in the enforcement of the FLSA.ⁿ⁷³ When violations are found, the Administrator or his or her representative may seek voluntary compliance by the employer. The Division is also authorized to issue regulations requiring employers to maintain certain records concerning employees, and their wages, hours, and conditions of employment and to make certain reports to the Division to aid it in the enforcement of the FLSA and regulations thereunder.ⁿ⁷⁴

The Secretary of Labor is authorized to supervise the voluntary payment of unpaid minimum wages or overtime compensation and may bring a court action on behalf of an employee to recover the amount of unpaid minimum wages or overtime wages and an equal amount of liquidated damages.ⁿ⁷⁵ An action may also be maintained in federal court to enjoin future violations of the FLSA.ⁿ⁷⁶

For full discussion of enforcement procedures, see Chapter 5.

[ii] Judicial Enforcement

An employee may bring a civil action in a state or federal court of competent jurisdiction to recover the amount of unpaid minimum wages or overtime compensation due under the FLSA, plus an equal amount as liquidated damages.ⁿ⁷⁷ The court must also award reasonable attorney's fees if the plaintiff employee recovers judgment.ⁿ⁷⁸ An individual employee may bring such an action on behalf of other employees similarly situated if each such employee gives his or her written consent to be made a party to such an action and if the consent is filed in the court in which the action is brought.ⁿ⁷⁹ The employee's right to bring such an action is terminated, however, if the Secretary of Labor brings an action to restrain violations of the FLSA and collect unpaid minimum wages and overtime compensation on behalf of the employee.ⁿ⁸⁰

For full discussion of civil actions under the FLSA, see Chapter 5.

[2] Federal Contractors

[a] Generally

Certain employers working under contract with the federal government, including employers not otherwise subject to the FLSA, are subject to special wage and hour legislation. Although detailed treatment of these federal statutes is beyond the scope of this treatise, the principal statutes are summarized below. If an employer is subject to both the FLSA and a special government-contract statute, that employer must comply with the requirements of both statutes; to the extent that they conflict, the employee must be paid according to the statute that requires the greatest pay.ⁿ⁸¹

[b] Walsh-Healey Act: Supply Contracts

[i] Generally

The Walsh-Healey Actⁿ⁸² establishes minimum wage and overtime compensation requirements, as well as other labor standards, applicable to employees working on contracts with a federal government agency or the District of Columbia for the manufacture or furnishing of materials, supplies, articles, or equipment in any amount over $10,000.ⁿ⁸³ All persons employed by the contractor in the manufacture or furnishing of the items used in the performance of the contract must be paid, without substantial deduction or rebate, prevailing minimum rates based on the standard for persons performing similar work in the industry in the locality where the work is performed, as determined by the Secretary of Labor, even if these wages are higher than the minimum wage established under the FLSA.ⁿ⁸⁴ The Walsh-Healey Act and federal regulations also prohibit work in excess of 40 hours a week, except when an employer enters into a bona fide collective bargaining agreement pursuant to Title 29 of the United States Code, section 207(b)(1) or (2),ⁿ⁸⁵ unless an employee who works overtime is paid an overtime rate set by the Secretary of Labor, which must be at least 1 1/2 times the basic hourly rate.ⁿ⁸⁶

The Walsh-Healey Act is deemed applicable only to employees engaged in, or connected with, the manufacture, fabrication, assembling, handling, supervision, or shipment of materials, supplies, articles, or equipment required under the contract. It is not deemed applicable to employees performing only office or custodial work, nor to any employee employed in a bona fide executive, administrative, professional, or outside salesperson capacity.ⁿ⁸⁷

[ii] Exceptions and Exemptions

The Secretary of Labor may make exceptions to the requirements of the Walsh-Healey Act on a written finding by the head of the contracting agency or department that the requirements will seriously impair the conduct of government business, or when justice or the public interest will be served.ⁿ⁸⁸ The Secretary also has the power to modify existing contracts, and may make rules and regulations allowing reasonable variances, tolerances, and exemptions to the requirements.ⁿ⁸⁹ If an increase in the maximum hours of labor stipulated in the contract is allowed, the Secretary of Labor must set a rate of overtime pay at not less than 1 1/2 times the basic hourly rate.ⁿ⁹⁰

The Walsh-Healey Act does not apply to purchases of materials, supplies, articles, or equipment that may usually be bought on the open market.ⁿ⁹¹ It also does not apply to perishables, including dairy, livestock, and nursery products, or to agricultural or farm products processed for first sale by the original producers; nor to any contracts made by the Secretary of Agriculture for the purchase of agricultural commodities, or the products of those commodities.ⁿ⁹² Also, the Act may not be construed to apply to the carriage of freight or personnel by vessel, airplane, bus, truck, express, or railway line where published tariff rates are in effect, or to common carriers subject to Title 47 United States Code, sections 151 to 610 (Communications Act of 1934), which governs interstate wire or radio communication.ⁿ⁹³

[iii] Enforcement and Remedies

The Secretary of Labor is empowered to make investigations,ⁿ⁹⁴ hold hearings, and issue orders requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses, as well as the production of evidence under oath, concerning breaches and violations of the Walsh-Healey Act.ⁿ⁹⁵ The Administrative Procedure Actⁿ⁹⁶ is applicable to these hearings.ⁿ⁹⁷

Breaches and violations of contract stipulations required by the Walsh-Healey Act are subject to liquidated, general, and statutory damages, and the contract may be canceled. Damages either may be withheld from amounts due the contractor, or may be recovered in suits brought by the United States Attorney General. Money due aggrieved employees may be recovered by the employees if they submit claims within one year from the date of actual notice to the contractor of withholding or recovery by the United States.ⁿ⁹⁸ Furthermore, lists of contractors that breach the Walsh-Healey Act must be distributed to all government agencies, and no federal contracts may be awarded to those contractors for three years following the date that the Secretary of Labor finds that the breach occurred, unless the Secretary recommends otherwise.ⁿ⁹⁹

[c] Davis-Bacon Act: Construction Contracts

[i] Generally

The Davis-Bacon Actⁿ¹⁰⁰ establishes minimum wage standards for mechanics and laborers working under federal contracts in excess of $2,000 for construction, alteration, and/or repair of federal public buildings or public works located within any state of the United States or the District of Columbia.ⁿ¹⁰¹ Specifications for any such contract must contain a clause stating that minimum wages to be paid various classes of laborers and mechanics will be based on the wages determined by the Secretary of Labor to be prevailing for corresponding classes of laborers and mechanics employed on similar projects in the locality in which the work is to be performed. Every contract based on these specifications must contain a stipulation that the contractor will pay wages not less than those stated in the specification.ⁿ¹⁰²

The Davis-Bacon Act does not contain any express provision requiring overtime compensation. However, applicable federal regulations provide that a covered contract must contain a clause that states that no contractor or subcontractor may require or permit work in excess of 40 hours per workweek, unless compensation at a rate of 1 1/2 times the basic rate of pay is provided.ⁿ¹⁰³ Also, the Davis-Bacon Act does imply that covered employees are entitled to overtime compensation, by describing how the basic rate of pay, on which "overtime pay to which ... [the employee] is entitled under any [f]ederal law," is computed.ⁿ¹⁰⁴

[ii] Exceptions and Exemptions

Variations, tolerances, and exemptions may not be made from the requirements of the Davis-Bacon Act, because it does not specifically provide for them.ⁿ¹⁰⁵ However, apprentices may work at less than the rate predetermined in a covered contract if they are registered in a bona fide apprenticeship program registered with the Department of Labor or a recognized state apprenticeship agency, or are in their first 90 days of certified probationary employment as apprentices in a registered program.ⁿ¹⁰⁶ Similarly, registered trainees may also work at less than the predetermined rate.ⁿ¹⁰⁷

[iii] Enforcement and Remedies

The contracting agency must ascertain whether the required clauses are contained in the contract.ⁿ¹⁰⁸ The agency must also conduct investigations to ensure compliance with the clauses.ⁿ¹⁰⁹ If (1) underpayments by a contractor or subcontractor total $1,000 or more, or (2) there is reason to believe violations were aggravated or willful, or (3) the contractor disregarded its obligations to employees or subcontractors, the agency must furnish a detailed enforcement report to the Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division of the Department of Labor.ⁿ¹¹⁰ If the foregoing circumstances do not exist, an enforcement report need not be submitted, unless the investigation was made at the request of the Department of Labor. In that case, the agency must submit a factual summary report detailing any violations.n111

The Administrator must also conduct investigations to ensure compliance with the labor standards of the Davis-Bacon Act, or to affirm or reject recommendations by the head of the contracting agency relating to labor standards matters.n112 If (1) underpayments disclosed by an investigation total $1,000 or more, (2) there is reason to believe violations were aggravated or willful, or (3) the contractor disregarded its obligations to employees or subcontractors, the Department of Labor must provide the federal agency with an enforcement report detailing the violations and any actions taken by the contractor to correct them.n113

The Administrator resolves wage disputes under the Davis-Bacon Act after investigation and notifies the contractor of its findings.n114 However, the affected contractor may request a hearing if he or she disagrees with the Administrator.n115 The contractor may also petition the Wage Appeals Board for review of the Administrator's rulings.n116

If a contractor fails to pay the minimum wages specified in the contract, the government contracting officer may withhold so much of the accrued payments as may be considered necessary to pay the laborers and mechanics the difference between the contract wages and those actually paid.n117 In addition, the contract may be terminated.n118 If the amounts withheld and paid by the federal government are insufficient to pay the wages required by the act, the laborers and mechanics may maintain a civil action against the contractor and its sureties for the difference.n119 If there is substantial evidence that violations were willful and in violation of a criminal statute, the matter must be forwarded to the United States Attorney General for prosecution.n120

The Comptroller General must distribute a list to all federal government departments of the names of persons or firms found to have disregarded their obligations to employees and subcontractors under the Davis-Bacon Act. Furthermore, no contract may be awarded to persons or firms appearing on the list, or to any firm, corporation, partnership, or association in which they have an interest, until three years after the date of the publication of the list.n121

[d] Service Contract Act

[i] Generally

The Service Contract Act (SCA)n122 imposes special minimum wage and fringe benefit requirements applicable to employers working under federal contracts in excess of $2,500, the principal purpose of which is to furnish services in the United States through the use of service employees.n123 A "service employee" is any person engaged in the performance of a services contract (other than a person employed in a bona fide executive, administrative, or professional capacity, as defined by the FLSA and regulations thereunder), regardless of any alleged contractual relationship between a contractor or subcontractor and that person.n124 The Service Contract Act does not expressly define or limit the types of "services" covered, but federal regulations cite the following examples: laundry and dry cleaning; transportation of the mail; custodial, janitorial, and guard service; packing and crating; food service; and miscellaneous housekeeping services.n125

Wages and fringe benefits specified in a service contract must be in accordance with those found by the Secretary of Labor to be prevailing in the locality for similar work.n126 Pursuant to the SCA and its regulations, the Secretary issues determinations, usually denominated "wage determinations," for localities, which encompass wages and fringe benefits for different categories of service employees.n127 The regulations implementing the SCA require that the minimum monetary wages and fringe benefits set forth in wage determinations be based on all available pertinent information as to wage rates and fringe benefits being paid at the time the determination is made. That information is most frequently derived from area surveys made by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, U.S. Department of Labor, or other Labor Department personnel. Information may also be obtained from government contracting officers and other available sources, including employees and their representatives and employers and their associations. The determinations may be based on the wage rates and fringe benefits contained in collective bargaining agreements when they have been determined to prevail in a locality for specified occupational classes of employees.ⁿ¹²⁸ The Secretary may also give due consideration to wage rates and fringe benefits that would be paid under federal pay systems.

Although the SCA administrative process provides the sole remedies for claims arising under the SCA itself, the SCA does not preclude an action under the False Claims Actⁿ¹²⁹ arising out of violations of the SCA.ⁿ¹³⁰ The SCA also does not preempt suits for wages, fringe benefits, and other compensation predicated on state or local laws consistent with the SCA and its goals.ⁿ¹³¹ Thus, for example, in Naranjo v. Spectrum Security Services, Inc.,ⁿ¹³² the Court of Appeal held that a state court action for violations of various California Labor Code sections by an employee of a company that provided security services under a contract with Immigration and Customs Enforcement was not preempted by the SCA, because the litigation would not conflict with the SCA or hinder the achievement of its goals. The claim to recover additional wages under Labor Code Section 226.7 regarding meal periods and rest breaksⁿ¹³³ neither conflicted with the SCA nor hindered the achievement of its goals. The wage determination attached to the employer's contract with the ICE set forth the minimum basic wage rates for a large number of employment categories, including the employee's category of detention officer, and contained provisions setting minimum rates for night pay, Sunday pay, and a hazardous pay differential, but contained no provisions regarding additional pay for the denial of meal and rest breaks. The claim thus sought state-required wages exceeding the minimum wages determined by the Secretary. Similarly, the claim under Labor Code Section 203, which imposes a penalty on employers willfully failing to pay discharged employees their full compensation in a timely manner, seeking a penalty for the additional wages allegedly not paid under Labor Code Section 226.7, was not preempted, because it also neither hindered nor conflicted with the SCA.ⁿ¹³⁴ Finally, the claim under Labor Code Section 226, which obliges employers to provide their employees with records of their earnings and deductions, and imposes penalties on employers who knowingly and intentionally fail to supply the records, was not preempted because Labor Code section 226 complemented the SCA and facilitated its goals by enhancing scrutiny of the employers' conduct.ⁿ¹³⁵ In no event may service contract wages be less than the minimum wage specified under the FLSA.ⁿ¹³⁶ Also, no part of the covered services may be performed in unsanitary, hazardous, or dangerous buildings or surroundings.ⁿ¹³⁷

The Service Contract Act also requires that a contractor or subcontractor who succeeds to a contract subject to the act and who provides substantially similar services must pay any service employee under that contract no less than the wages and fringe benefits to which that employee would have been entitled if employed under the predecessor's contract.ⁿ¹³⁸

[ii] Exceptions and Exemptions

The Service Contract Act does not apply to the following:ⁿ¹³⁹

1. Any contract of the United States or District of Columbia for construction, alteration, and/or repair, including painting or decorating, of public buildings or public works;
2. Any work required to be done in accordance with the Walsh-Healey Act;ⁿ¹⁴⁰
3. Any contract for the carriage of freight or personnel by vessel, airplane, bus, truck, express, railway line or oil or gas pipeline when published tariff rates are in effect;
4. Any contract for the furnishing of services by radio telephone, telegraph, or cable companies, subject to the Communications Act of 1934;ⁿ¹⁴¹
5. Any contract for public utility services, including electric light and power, water, steam, and gas;

6. Any employment contract providing for direct services to a federal agency by an individual or individuals; and

7. Any contract with the Post Office Department, the principal purpose of which is the operation of postal contract stations.

In addition, the Secretary of Labor may provide reasonable limitations and make rules and regulations allowing reasonable variations, tolerances, and exemptions to and from the Service Contract Act, except for the provision dealing with wage and fringe benefit determinations.ⁿ¹⁴² The Secretary may make limitations, variations, tolerances, and exemptions only in special circumstances in which he or she determines that they are necessary and proper in the public interest, or to avoid the serious impairment of government business.ⁿ¹⁴³ Any limitation, variation, tolerance, or exemption must be in accord with the remedial purpose of the Service Contract Act to protect prevailing labor standards.ⁿ¹⁴⁴

[iii] Enforcement and Remedies

The Service Contract Act is enforced by the head of the contracting federal agency or the Secretary of Labor.ⁿ¹⁴⁵ The enforcement provisions of the Walsh-Healey Actⁿ¹⁴⁶ govern the Secretary's authority to enforce the Service Contract Act.ⁿ¹⁴⁷ Thus, the Secretary may hold hearings and make decisions based on findings of fact as necessary to enforce the Service Contract Act.ⁿ¹⁴⁸ Wage and hour violations may be reported to any office of the Department of Labor, Wage and Hour Division, by any employer, employee, labor or trade organization, contracting agency, or other interested person or organization.ⁿ¹⁴⁹ Federal regulations govern administrative enforcement proceedings under the Service Contract Act.ⁿ¹⁵⁰

Employees have no private right of action against their employers under the Service Contract Act.ⁿ¹⁵¹ Moreover, if an employee is not satisfied with the amount of payments recovered on his or her behalf by the Wage and Hour Division of the Department of Labor, the employee is not entitled to a writ of mandamus compelling federal officials to bring additional enforcement action against the employer, unless the employee can prove that those officials failed to perform a ministerial (rather than discretionary) duty, violated a standard, or failed entirely to carry out the purposes of the Service Contract Act.ⁿ¹⁵²

Violations of the Service Contract Act will render the responsible party liable for a sum equal to the amount of any deductions, rebates, refunds, or underpayment of compensation. Funds due on the affected contract, or any other contract between the contractor and the federal government, may be withheld as necessary to pay aggrieved employees.ⁿ¹⁵³ Also, the contract may be canceled on written notice, and if the federal government enters into contracts with other contractors to complete the original contract, the violating party may be charged any additional cost.ⁿ¹⁵⁴ Moreover, the Comptroller General must distribute a list of the names of the violating persons or firms to all federal government agencies. Unless the Secretary of Labor recommends otherwise because of unusual circumstances, no federal contracts may be awarded to those persons or firms, or any firm, corporation, partnership, or association in which they have a substantial interest, for three years after publication of the list.ⁿ¹⁵⁵ Finally, if withheld funds are insufficient to satisfy the claims of all aggrieved employees, the United States may sue the responsible party to recover the remaining amount.ⁿ¹⁵⁶

[e] Contract Work Hours and Safety Standards Act

[i] Generally

The Contract Work Hours and Safety Standards Actⁿ¹⁵⁷ applies to contracts involving employment of laborers or mechanics on federal public works, and to the employment of laborers under a contract to which the United States or any federal agency is a party, or that is made on behalf of the United States or a federal agency, or that is financed by federal loans or grants under a federal statute providing wage standards.n158

Like the FLSA, the Contract Work Hours and Safety Standards Act imposes overtime compensation requirements for hours worked in excess of 40 in a week; daily overtime compensation requirements have been repealed.n159

[ii] Exceptions and Exemptions

The Contract Work Hours and Safety Standards Act does not apply to work in which United States or agency assistance is only in the nature of a loan guarantee or insurance.n160 The Act also does not apply to contracts for transportation by land, air, or water, or for the transmission of intelligence, or for the purchase of supplies or materials or articles ordinarily available in the open market; nor does it apply to any work required to be done in accordance with the Walsh-Healey Act.n161

In 1994, the Contract Work Hours and Safety Standards Act was amended to provide that the Act does not apply to a contract for an amount less than $100,000.n162 In addition, the Secretary of Labor may provide reasonable limitations and may make rules and regulations allowing reasonable variations, tolerances, and exemptions to and from the Contract Work Hours and Safety Standards Act if necessary and proper in the public interest to prevent injustice or undue hardship, or to avoid serious impairment of the conduct of government business.n163 Pursuant to such regulations, the following classes of contracts are exempt:n164

1. Contracts of $2,000 or less;
2. Purchases or contracts, other than construction contracts, in the aggregate amount of $2,500 or less;
3. Contract work performed in a workplace within a foreign country, or within a territory under United States jurisdiction other than a state, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, the Outer Continental Shelf lands, American Samoa, Guam, Wake Island, Eniwetok Atoll, Kwajalein Atoll, or Johnston Island;
4. Agreements entered into or on behalf of the Commodity Credit Corporation providing for the storing in or handling by commercial warehouses of wheat, corn, barley, rye, grain sorghums, soybeans, flaxseed, rice, naval stores, tobacco, peanuts, dry beans, seeds, cotton, and wool; and
5. Sales of surplus power by the Tennessee Valley Authority to state government entities, farmer or citizen organizations, and other individuals.n165

Federal regulations also contain several tolerancesn166 and variationsn167 to the Contract Work Hours and Safety Standards Act. For example, time spent in an organized program of related, supplemental instruction by laborers or mechanics employed under bona fide apprenticeship or training programs may be excluded from working time if certain criteria are met.n168

[iii] Enforcement and Remedies

Under federal regulations, the contracting federal agency and the Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division of the Department of Labor are initially responsible for enforcing contracts and labor standards under the Contract Work Hours and Safety Standards Act.n169 Inspectors of the work performed must report violations, together with the name of each aggrieved employee and the day or days of the violation, to the proper federal officer.n170 For a detailed discussion of the administrative enforcement procedures, see [c][iii], above.

A contractor who violates the act is liable to affected employees for unpaid wages. The contractor will also be liable to the United States for liquidated damages in the amount of $100 per violation per day.ⁿ¹⁷¹ The amount of unpaid wages and liquidated damages must be administratively determined and withheld, and the Comptroller General must pay the amounts determined to be due directly to the aggrieved employees from the withheld funds.ⁿ¹⁷² Moreover, if the violation was aggravated or willful, the contractor, or any entity in which it has a substantial interest, will be ineligible to receive contracts or subcontracts under the Contract Work Hours and Safety Standards Act for three years from the date that the Comptroller General publishes a list of ineligible contractors that includes the violating contractor's name.ⁿ¹⁷³

Aggrieved employees have a private right of action against violating contractors if the amount withheld to satisfy unpaid damages is insufficient to reimburse them.ⁿ¹⁷⁴ Also, intentional violations of the Contract Work Hours and Safety Standards Act are subject to criminal sanctions.ⁿ¹⁷⁵

[f] Copeland Act: "Anti-Kickback" Act

The Copeland Actⁿ¹⁷⁶ does not establish minimum labor standards but rather protects federal public works employees by making it a crime to induce an employee to give up any part of the wages to which he or she is entitled. The Copeland Act ensures that, pursuant to the Davis-Bacon Act, laborers and mechanics working on federal construction projects will be paid the prevailing wage without substantial rebate or deduction.ⁿ¹⁷⁷ However, the Copeland Act is broader in scope than the Davis-Bacon Act in that it applies to all public work projects regardless of contract value, and to all employees working on those projects. Violations of the Copeland Act are punishable by a fine of up to $5,000 or imprisonment for up to five years, or both.ⁿ¹⁷⁸

[g] Miller Act: Bond-Posting Requirement

The Miller Actⁿ¹⁷⁹ requires prime contractors for the construction or repair of federal public buildings or public works to post payment bonds to ensure payment of wages to all persons supplying labor or materials.ⁿ¹⁸⁰ The Miller Act applies to contracts exceeding $25,000 in amount.ⁿ¹⁸¹ Persons furnishing labor or material who were not paid in full by the contractor may sue on the payment bond.ⁿ¹⁸² The suit must be brought in the federal district court for the district in which the contract was to be performed and executed and must be brought in the name of the United States for the use of the person suing.ⁿ¹⁸³

[3] Family and Medical Leave Act of 1993

The Family and Medical Leave Act of 1993 ("FMLA")ⁿ¹⁸⁴ requires covered employers to provide eligible employees with unpaid family care leave for specified purposes, including the birth or adoption of a child of the employee, or the serious health condition of the employee or specified members of his or her family.ⁿ¹⁸⁵ For full discussion of the FMLA, see Chapter 8.

The Department of Labor's Wage and Hour Division enforces the FMLAⁿ¹⁸⁶ and promulgates implementing regulations.ⁿ¹⁸⁷ An employee may bring a civil action in state or federal court to recover damages caused by an employer's failure to provide leave as required by the FMLA.ⁿ¹⁸⁸

CHAPTER 2 Minimum Wages

1-2 California Employment Law Scope

AUTHOR: By Carol S. Sanders, J.D.

Scope

By Carol S. Sanders, J.D. n SCOPE*

This chapter discusses minimum wage obligations under state and federal law. Part A sets forth the prevailing minimum wages, and the interrelationship between the state and federal minimum wage law. It discusses the categories of employees who are entirely exempt from the provisions of the minimum wage laws, or who may be paid specified subminimum wages authorized under state and federal law. It also considers special applications of minimum wage laws, including split-shift premiums and piecework rates under California law, payment of minimum wages when wages are in the form of commissions, and the payment of prevailing wage rates, rather than minimum wages, applicable to employees of certain government contractors. Part B discusses the credits against minimum wage obligations that an employer may take for meals, lodging, and similar facilities provided to the employee, as well as the application of tips against minimum wages under federal law.

An overview of the applicability of the various wage and hour laws is set forth in Chapter 1. Procedures for determining hours worked (on which the minimum wage for a given pay period is determined) are discussed in Chapter 3. Rules governing the time and manner of payment of wages are discussed in Chapter 4. Remedies for failure to pay required wages are discussed in Chapter 5.

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS
CHAPTER 2 Minimum Wages
Part A. MINIMUM WAGE REQUIREMENTS

1-2 California Employment Law § 2.01

AUTHOR: By Carol S. Sanders, J.D.

§ 2.01 Federal and State Minimum Wage Law Compared

In recent history, the federal and California minimum wage rates have variously been different and equal. After January 1, 2002, California employers were required to pay each employee covered under California wage orders not less than $6.75 per hour for all hours worked.ⁿ¹ On and after January 1, 2007, the minimum wage for all industries was not less than $7.50 per hour, and on and after January 1, 2008, the minimum wage for all industries became not less than $8.00 per hour.^{n1.1} The federal minimum wage rate as of September 1, 1997, was $5.15 per hour; effective July 24, 2007, the federal minimum wage became $5.85 an hour; effective July 24, 2008, it rose to $6.55 an hour; and effective July 24, 2009, it rises to $7.25 an hour.ⁿ²

As discussed in Chapter 1, the provisions of the FLSA do not preempt the state from setting a higher minimum wage.ⁿ³ In addition to differences that may exist between state and federal law in the amount of the minimum wage, the rules governing coverage, exemptions, subminimum wages, and credits are often not coextensive. For example, tips received by an employee may be credited against an employer's minimum wage obligations under federal law,ⁿ⁴ but not under state law.ⁿ⁵ Under both federal and state law, employees who work in an executive, administrative, or professional capacity are exempt from application of minimum wage requirements,ⁿ⁶ but the definitions of these exemptions under federal law differ from the definitions under state law.ⁿ⁷ California and federal law differ in other respects, as discussed further in this chapter.

If a California employer is obligated to meet minimum wage requirements under both the FLSAⁿ⁸ and the state wage orders, and the rules differ with respect to a particular application of the minimum wage, the employer must adhere to the rule most protective of the employee in order to avoid liability for failure to pay the required minimum wage.ⁿ⁹ For further discussion of the interrelationship between state and federal wage and hour laws, see Chapter 1. For discussion of enforcement of minimum wage obligations, see Chapter 5.

As of March 1, 1997, the state rate increased to $5.00 per hour, and again on September 1, 1997, to $5.15 per hour (Lab. Code § 1182.11). DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS
CHAPTER 2 Minimum Wages
Part A. MINIMUM WAGE REQUIREMENTS

1-2 California Employment Law § 2.02

AUTHOR: By Carol S. Sanders, J.D.

§ 2.02 Minimum Wages and Method of Determination

[1] California Law

[a] Prevailing Minimum Wage

The current minimum wage for all industries under the wage orders promulgated by the California Industrial Welfare Commission (IWC)ⁿ¹ is not less than $8.00 per hour, as of January 1, 2008.^{n1.1} The minimum wage provisions apply to the vast majority of employees. However, the minimum wage order contains classes of employees who are exempt from its coverage (outside salespersons and individuals who are the parent, spouse or child of the employer); and the industry and occupation orders contain additional exemptions, exceptions, and qualifications.ⁿ² Wage Order MW-2001 has also eliminated non-statutory full and partial former exemptions of several large groups of employees: "employees of the State and local government and any political subdivision thereof, full-time carnival ride operators, professional actors, personal attendants in private homes except for persons under the age of eighteen who are employed as baby sitters for a minor child of the employer in the employer's home, student nurses, and minors paid not less than 85% of the minimum wage rounded to the nearest nickel. Additionally, the IWC amended the present partial exemption for learners to include minors."ⁿ³

Specified subminimum wages may be paid to certain other categories of employees to the extent authorized by the IWC.ⁿ⁴ In all other cases, an employer's failure to pay at least the minimum wage to nonexempt employees is unlawful and subjects the employer to civil penalties.ⁿ⁵ The employer's obligation to pay to the employee the required minimum wage cannot be waived by the employee's agreement to work for less.ⁿ⁶ For a discussion of remedies for failure to pay minimum wages, see Chapter 5.

In July, 1988, when the IWC raised the minimum wage to $4.75, it adopted a separate, lower minimum wage for "tipped employees," which the California Supreme Court subsequently invalidated.ⁿ⁷ The Court held that the provision of a lower minimum wage for tipped employees violates Labor Code section 351, which declares that tips are the sole property of the employee to whom they are given and which prohibits employers from crediting tips against an employee's wages.ⁿ⁸ In response, the IWC amended the wage orders to repeal the subminimum wage for tipped employees.

For discussion of prohibitions against crediting tips against an employee's wage,ⁿ⁹ see § 2.22 and Chapter 4.

[b] Effect of Federal Minimum Wage on State Minimum Wage

The state minimum wage must be at least equal to the federal minimum wage applicable to employees covered by the FLSA.ⁿ¹⁰ However, the IWC may set a minimum wage that exceeds the federal wage.ⁿ¹¹ If the IWC determines that the existing minimum wage is inadequate to supply the necessary cost of proper living to and maintain the health and welfare of California employees, it may amend or rescind existing orders fixing minimum wages, or it may promulgate a new order.ⁿ¹²

[c] Procedures for Determining Minimum Wage

[i] Generally

The California Constitution authorizes the Legislature to provide for minimum wages and for the general welfare of employees, and for these purposes to confer on a commission legislative, executive, and judicial powers.ⁿ¹³

The Industrial Welfare Commission must conduct a full review of the adequacy of the minimum wage at least once every two years.ⁿ¹⁴ On its own motion or on petition, the IWC may amend any order or portion of any order or adopt an order covering any occupation, trade, or industry not covered by an existing order.ⁿ¹⁵

If, after investigation, the IWC finds that wages paid to employees may be inadequate to supply the cost of proper living, it must select one wage board composed of an equal number of representatives of employers and employees, and a nonvoting representative of the IWC who will act as chairperson.ⁿ¹⁶ The wage board must consider the findings of the IWC and other information it deems appropriate.ⁿ¹⁷ It must thereafter report to the IWC its recommendation of a minimum wage adequate to supply the necessary cost of proper living and maintain the health and welfare of employees in the state, and its recommendations on other matters related to the minimum wage on which the IWC has requested recommendations.ⁿ¹⁸

After following mandatory procedures for preparing proposed regulations and holding public hearings on them,ⁿ¹⁹ the IWC may amend or rescind an existing order fixing minimum wages, or may promulgate a new order.ⁿ²⁰ If proposed regulations are based on recommendations supported by at least two-thirds of the wage board members, the IWC must adopt them unless it finds there is no substantial evidence to support the recommendations.ⁿ²¹

The Legislature may set the minimum wage and then direct the Department of Industrial Relations to amend and republish the Industrial Welfare Commission's wage orders to be consistent with those changes.^{n21.1}

[ii] The Living Wage Act of 1996

On November 5, 1996, the California voters passed Proposition 210. The declared purpose of this act was to raise the minimum wage above that of people on welfare.ⁿ²² This Act added Labor Code § 1182.11, increasing the minimum wage to not less than $5.00 on March 1, 1997, and to not less than $5.75 on and after March 1, 1998.ⁿ²³ Labor Code Section 1182.11 also provides that the IWC shall adopt minimum wage orders consistent with this section without convening wage boards.ⁿ²⁴

[ii.a] Increases in Minimum Wage Order No. MW-2001

The Industrial Welfare Commission adopted the 2001 and 2002 increases in the minimum wage rate pursuant to its authority in the Labor Code and Cal. Const., art. 14, § 1.ⁿ²⁵ In a challenge to the IWC's authority to proceed on this basis when it adopted minimum wage order MW-98, a court of appeal has held that the commission did not err or exceed the scope of its authority in amending its own prior wage orders so as to delete the requirement of overtime pay after eight hours of work per day, and to conform those overtime rules to the federal forty-hour week standard under the Fair Labor Standards Act.ⁿ²⁶

[iii] When Federal Minimum Wage Exceeds State Minimum Wage

If at any time the federal minimum wage is scheduled to exceed the minimum wage fixed by the IWC, the usual procedures pertaining to wage boards are waived and the IWC must, in a public meeting, adopt an order fixing a new minimum wage at the scheduled higher federal minimum wage.ⁿ²⁷ The effective date of the order must be the same as the effective date of the federal minimum wage increase, and the order does not become operative in the event the scheduled increase in the federal minimum wage does not become operative.ⁿ²⁸

[iv] Effective Date of Changes in State Minimum Wage

Pursuant to Labor Code section 1184, any amendments, rescissions, or promulgations of orders by the IWC affecting minimum wage rates become effective on the first day of the following January or July, and not less than 60 days from the date of publication.ⁿ²⁹ For a discussion of procedures for promulgating wage orders generally, see Chapter 1.

[d] "Averaging Method" to Determine Minimum Wage

In Armenta v. Osmose, Inc., ^{n29.1} employees paid an hourly wage under a collective bargaining agreement sued their employer for compensation for driving time and, for the foremen, time spent processing paperwork, which was not covered by the collective bargaining agreement. The court rejected the employer's argument that the required minimum wage should be determined using the Federal Labor Standards Act model of "averaging" all hours worked and the compensation received for those hours. The employer had argued that because the average hourly rate in any given pay period was higher than California's minimum wage, the employer had not violated California's minimum wage law.^{n29.2}

The Armenta court first noted that California courts have long recognized that California's wage laws are patterned on federal statutes, and that authorities construing those federal statutes provide persuasive guidance to state courts.^{n29.3} However, California courts also recognize an important qualification on the relevance of federal authorities in this area, which is that the state is empowered to go beyond the federal statutes and regulations in adopting protective laws and regulations for the benefit of employees. Thus, the federal authorities are of little assistance, if any, in construing state laws and regulations that provide greater protection to workers.^{n29.4} Similarly, when the language or intent of state and federal labor laws substantially differs, reliance on federal regulations or interpretations to construe state regulations is misplaced.^{n29.5} The court found that the minimum wage provisions of the FLSA differ significantly from California's minimum wage law, and the California legislature has expressed a clear intent to protect the minimum wage rights of California employees to a greater extent than federal law does.^{n29.6} The FLSA requires payment of minimum wage to employees who "in any work week" are engaged in commerce. In contrast, Labor Code section 1194(a) provides that any employee receiving "less than the legal minimum wage" is entitled to recover the unpaid balance of the "full amount" owed. The court found the minimum wage applicable to the employees in Armenta in Wage Order No. 4, section 4(A), which provided a minimum wage of $ 6.75 per hour for all hours worked, expressing the intent to insure that employees be compensated at the minimum wage for each hour worked.^{n29.7} The court then concluded that the averaging method utilized by the federal courts for assessing a violation of the federal minimum wage law is inappropriate for determining an employer's minimum wage obligation under California law.^{n29.8}

[e] Effect of Tips

The California Supreme Court has accepted review of Grodensky v. Artichoke Joe's Casino,^{n29.9} in which dealers at a casino failed to establish by a preponderance of the evidence that by requiring them to pool tips with shift managers, the casino violated Labor Code § 1194.

It was undisputed that every dealer was paid and received a weekly paycheck for the minimum hourly wage regardless of tips and that every dealer contributed daily to the tip pool from chips received as tips. Thus, none of the money from the tip pool came from the dealers' wages, and the wages were not below minimum wage. Further, the dealers presented no evidence that the tips collected for the pool were used to offset the wages owed. On the other hand, in California Drive-in Restaurant Association v. Clark,^{29.10} decided when it was lawful for an employer to take employees' tips, the employment arrangement was that the tips received by the people serving cars constituted their wages, and the employer added any amount necessary to ensure that they received the minimum wage. The end result was that tips were counted as a part of the legal wage. The California Supreme Court noted that the statute at that time would not have been violated if the employer retained the entire amount of all tips received above the minimum wage, or deducted the tips from the amount of any wages the employer agreed to pay in excess of the specified minimum.

[2] Federal Law

[a] Prevailing Minimum Wage

The federal minimum wage rate is $5.85 per hour as of July 24, 2007.³⁰ The federal minimum wage rose to $6.55 per hour as of July 24, 2008, and will rise to $7.25 per hour as of July 24, 2009.^{30.1}

Specified subminimum wages may be paid to certain categories of employees to the extent authorized by the FLSA, on issuance of special certificates by the Wage and Hour Administration.³¹ In all other cases, an employer's failure to pay at least the prevailing minimum wage to nonexempt employees subjects the employer to liability for damages and civil penalties.³² For a discussion of remedies for failure to pay minimum wages, see Chapter 5.

[b] Procedures for Determining Minimum Wage

Minimum wages are set by Congress pursuant to statute.³³ To assist Congress in determining the proper minimum wage, the Secretary of Labor is required by statute to submit an annual report containing an evaluation and appraisal of the minimum wage and overtime coverage under the FLSA, together with recommendations to Congress. In making the evaluation and appraisal, the Secretary must take into consideration any changes that may have occurred in the cost of living, productivity and level of wages in manufacturing, the ability of employers to absorb wage increases, and other pertinent factors.³⁴

[3] Prior Minimum Wage Rates Under California and Federal Law

It is important to be aware of prior minimum wage rates in the event that an audit covers periods prior to the establishment of the prevailing minimum wage rates, or a minimum wage violation is alleged to have occurred when a different minimum wage requirement was in effect.³⁵

Since January 1, 1978, the federal and state minimum wage rates have been as follows:³⁶

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS
CHAPTER 2 Minimum Wages
Part A. MINIMUM WAGE REQUIREMENTS

1-2 California Employment Law § 2.03

AUTHOR: By Carol S. Sanders, J.D.

§ 2.03 Employees Covered by Minimum Wage Provisions

[1] California Law

The minimum wages set by the IWC apply to all nonexempt employees, including those not specifically covered under wage orders applicable to specific occupations, trades, or industries.ⁿ¹ For discussion of the scope of coverage of the various wage orders, see Chapter 1.

[2] Federal Law

[a] Generally

The federal minimum wage under the FLSA applies to any nonexempt employeeⁿ² who in any workweek is employed in an enterprise engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce.ⁿ³ In addition, even if the employer's enterprise is not so engaged, the individual employee must be paid the minimum wage if during the workweek he or she is engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce.ⁿ⁴ For purposes of the FLSA, "commerce" is defined as trade, commerce, transportation, transmission, or communication among the several states (including the District of Columbia and any territory or possession of the United States) or between any state and any place outside that state.ⁿ⁵ For additional discussion of coverage under the FLSA generally, including the definition of an "enterprise engaged in commerce," see Chapter 1.

[b] Domestic Service Workers

Domestic service employees are deemed to affect commerce, for purposes of applying the FLSA.ⁿ⁶ The prevailing federal minimum wage must be paid to (1) an employee who in any workweek is employed in domestic service in a household unless that employee's compensation does not constitute wages under the Social Security Act,ⁿ⁷ that is, if compensation paid in cash is less than $1,000 per calendar year, or such increased amount as is dictated by the Social Security Actⁿ⁸ or (2) an employee who in any workweek is employed in domestic service in one or more households for more than eight hours in the aggregate.ⁿ⁹ For full discussion of what constitutes work time under the FLSA, see

Chapter 3.

Domestic service employees who reside in the household where they work are entitled to the same minimum wage as domestic service employees who work by the day. In determining the hours worked by live-in domestic employees for purposes of calculating the minimum wage, the employer and employee may exclude by agreement the amount of sleeping time, meal time, or other periods of complete freedom from duties.ⁿ¹⁰

[c] Government Service Contractors

Every employer providing contract services under a contract with the United States, or any subcontract thereunder, must pay the prevailing minimum wage to each employee whose rate of pay is not governed by the Service Contract Act of 1965ⁿ¹¹ or who is not otherwise covered as an employee engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce, or as an employee of an enterprise that is so engaged.ⁿ¹²

[d] State and Local Government Employees

Except for certain high level officers and advisors, state and local government employees are generally subject to the minimum wage (and overtime) provisions of the FLSA to the same extent as private employees.ⁿ¹³ The United States Supreme Court overruled a previous holding that state and local government employees engaged in traditional government activities are constitutionally exempt from minimum wage requirements under federal law.ⁿ¹⁴

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS
CHAPTER 2 Minimum Wages
Part A. MINIMUM WAGE REQUIREMENTS

1-2 California Employment Law § 2.04

AUTHOR: By Carol S. Sanders, J.D.

§ 2.04 Exempt Employees

[1] California Law

[a] Persons Employed in Administrative, Executive, or Professional Capacities

[i] Generally

Minimum wage and overtime provisions of most of the wage orders do not apply to persons "employed in an administrative, executive, or professional capacity."ⁿ¹ The sole exception is the wage order regulating the agricultural occupations, which does not apply to employees engaged in work (a) that is primarily intellectual, managerial, or creative; (b) that requires exercise of discretion and independent judgment; and (c) for which the remuneration is not less than two times the monthly state minimum wage for full time employment.ⁿ² Prior to their amendment effective, January 1, 2001, the wage orders themselves did not separately define what was meant by "administrative," "executive," and "professional" capacities. Instead, they provided a two-prong test under which a person was not considered to be employed in any of these capacities unless he or she met one of two alternative criteria.ⁿ³ Under the 2001 wage orders, the criteria are set forth in each wage order.

The current criteria for this exemption are further discussed in [ii]-[iii], below.

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

As further discussed below, the exemption for executive, administrative, and professional employees under the California wage orders is narrower than many employers realize. There is no blanket exemption for salaried employees or for "white collar" work in general. To qualify for the exemption for executive, administrative, and professional employees, the criteria set forth in the wage orders must be satisfied. In determining whether the exemption applies, the DLSE closely examines the employee's actual duties and responsibilities. The employee's title is not controlling.ⁿ⁴ Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

Each of the exemptions, i.e., administrative, executive or professional, requires that the employee be "primarily engaged in" the duties which meet the test for the exemption.ⁿ⁵ The DLSE defines "primarily engaged in" to mean that more than one-half of the employee's work time is spent engaged in exempt work. The DLSE definition differs substantially from the federal test, which simply requires that the "primary duty" of the employee fall within the exempt duties.ⁿ⁶

The DLSE also takes the position that activities constituting exempt work and non-exempt work under the Wage Orders are to be construed in the same manner as those terms are construed in the listed sections of the Code of Federal Regulations under the Fair Labor Standards Act effective as of the date of the Wage Order, which is October 1, 2000, for all Orders except Order 16, which is effective January 1, 2001.ⁿ⁷ In each instance, the federal regulations listed are the same federal regulations utilized by the DLSE for at least the past twenty years to interpret and enforce the Wage Orders. The IWC has detailed the definitions to be used in determining the administrative, executive and professional exemptions by specifying the federal regulations on which the IWC relies.ⁿ⁸ However, the Wage Orders reference the old federal regulations, which the Department of Labor recently superseded by enacting the new overtime regulations that took effect in August of 2004.

Activities to be considered exempt include work "directly and closely related" to exempt work and work properly viewed as a means for carrying out exempt functions.ⁿ⁹ The DLSE takes the position that the definitions of "directly and closely related to exempt work and work which is properly viewed as a means for carrying out exempt functions" differ from exemption to exemption. Specific examples for each of the exemptions are set out at former 29 CFR sections 541.108 (managerial), 541.208 (administrative), and 541.308 (professional).ⁿ¹⁰ It is not the intent of this definitional language to expand the exemption, but simply to recognize that there are limited instances when production-type activities must be utilized to carry out the duties of the otherwise exempt employee.ⁿ¹¹ Examples include:ⁿ¹²

- An attorney drafting a brief on a computer or typewriter.
- A manager preparing a personal memo to his or her staff on a computer.
- Driving visiting management to the airport so further discussions regarding management activities can be carried on.

Former 29 CFR section 541.110 refers to "occasional tasks" that are not "directly and closely related." The IWC does not intend for these tasks to be included in the determination of exempt work.ⁿ¹³ Thus, non-exempt work performed by an otherwise exempt manager on an occasional basis may not be counted toward the 50% time requirement. This reflects the long-established DLSE enforcement policy. Any past enforcement policy statement that may have been interpreted to countenance non-exempt work by exempt employees, even on an occasional basis, is a misinterpretation of DLSE policy and clearly inapplicable to the current Wage Orders.ⁿ¹⁴

The Legislature has stated in each of the exempt categories that as a condition of the exemption the employee must "customarily and regularly exercise discretion and independent judgment in performing" the duties.ⁿ¹⁵ The Wage Orders provide that the provisions of former 29 CFR section 541.107 are to be used to determine the activities constituting exempt versus non-exempt work. That section, however, only addresses the term "discretionary powers," not the exercise of discretion and independent judgment. The confusion arises from the fact that after the initial draft of the Wage Orders was produced, the California Legislature amended Labor Code section 515(a) to require, unlike the federal regulations, that to meet the criteria for exempt status, the employee "customarily and regularly exercises discretion and independent judgment in performing" the duties. In the Statement As To The Basis, the IWC cited, inter alia, former 29 CFR section 541.207 and specifically mentioned that section 541.207 contains a "description of what is meant by the phrase 'discretion and independent judgment.'" ⁿ¹⁶ For enforcement purposes, DLSE disregards the language of former 29 CFR section 541.107 and relies on the language of 29 CFR section 541.207 to define the term "discretion and independent judgment" in each of the exempt classifications.ⁿ¹⁷ Additionally, the stated intent of the

IWC that the California "quantitative test" continue to be different from and more protective of employees than the federal "qualitative" or "primary duty" test must be considered in applying the "directly and closely related" examples.¹⁸

The Wage Orders also provide that the work actually performed by the employee during the course of the work week must, first and foremost, be examined, and the amount of time the employee spends on exempt work, together with the employer's realistic expectations and the realistic requirements of the job, be considered in determining whether the employee satisfies the requirements to be exempt.¹⁹ In determining realistic expectations, consideration must be given to the following:²⁰

- Whether the employee's practice diverges from the employer's realistic expectations.
- Whether there was any concrete expression of employer displeasure over an employee's substandard performance.
- Whether the expressions were realistic, given the actual overall requirements of the job.

Thus, an employer may not choose to ignore the fact that it would not be reasonable to expect an employee to perform the duties assigned without performing work exceeding the duties test requirements.²¹

■ ILLUSTRATION:

When assessing a managerial exemption, a "straw boss" or working foreman has duties designed to be production duties and may also have some limited managerial duties. The production duties the straw boss is assigned would not be counted toward the "directly and closely related" work because they are designed to fulfill the production aspect of the worker's assigned duties. The fact that the straw boss performs production-type duties is not an outgrowth of his or her limited supervisory role, but is simply a part of his or her production duties.²²

It is long-standing DLSE enforcement policy that an employer may not, through the use of an idealized job description, thrust an employee into exempt status when the duties imposed on that employee would not realistically allow the employee to perform exempt activities more than 50% of the time. By the same token, an employee in an otherwise exempt position may not surreptitiously perform non-exempt duties that are not within the realistic expectations of the employer in order to defeat the exemption.²³

To meet the test for exempt status, an employee must, in addition to the above requirements, also earn a monthly salary equivalent to no less than two times the state minimum wage for full-time employment.²⁴ The DLSE has promulgated extensive policy regarding the meaning of this requirement and the interaction of California law and federal regulations.²⁵

[ii] Executive Employees

To be exempt from the minimum wage and overtime provisions of the wage orders because of an employee's executive status, the employee must be one:²⁶

- (a) Whose duties and responsibilities involve the management of the enterprise in which he or she is employed or of a customarily recognized department or subdivision thereof; and
- (b) Who customarily and regularly directs the work of two or more other employees therein; and
- (c) Who has the authority to hire or fire other employees or whose suggestions and recommendations as to the hiring or firing and as to the advancement and promotion or any other change of status of other employees will be given particular weight; and

(d) Who customarily and regularly exercises discretion and independent judgment; and

(e) Who is primarily engaged in duties which meet the test of the exemption.

The employee must also earn a monthly salary equivalent to no less than two times the state minimum wage for full-time employment. Full-time employment is defined in Labor Code § 515(c) as 40 hours per week.

The Wage Orders further require that the activities constituting exempt work and non-exempt work be construed in the same manner as such items are construed in specified regulations under the Fair Labor Standards Act (now superseded).ⁿ²⁷ Exempt work shall include, for example, all work that is directly and closely related to exempt work and work which is properly viewed as a means for carrying out exempt functions. The work actually performed by the employee during the course of the work week must, first and foremost, be examined and the amount of time the employee spends on such work, together with the employer's realistic expectations and the realistic requirements of the job, must be considered in determining whether the employee satisfies this requirement.ⁿ²⁸

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

The portion of the text immediately following the required elements of exempt executive status contains a sentence that refers to "the employer's realistic expectations and the realistic requirements of the job." This passage reflects the view that the IWC has formed of the portion of *Ramirez v. Yosemite Water Co.*ⁿ²⁹ that grants to employers the right to sustain the exempt status of employees who perform non-exempt work over employer objection.ⁿ³⁰ Employers will argue that Ramirez grants a broad affirmative defense, so long as they attempt to enforce the performance of the exempt duties that they intend a job to encompass. Employees will argue that Ramirez grants a limited affirmative defense that should rarely be granted. The IWC position lies somewhere in the middle. The IWC reference to the "realistic requirements of the job" is intended to bar the affirmative defense where there is a showing that, despite an employer's expression of displeasure at the performance of non-exempt work, the realistic requirements of the job compel the performance of such work. The example that the DLSE uses to explain its position involves the following Catch-22 hypothetical comment by an employer to an employee who is performing clerical work despite a request not to do so: "You may not perform clerical work in the future. However, due to limitations on staff headcount, you may not hire additional clerical employees to assist you." Employers, therefore, should be careful to make sure that instructions to refrain from the performance of non-exempt work are reasonably enforceable. Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

The DLSE has promulgated extensive policy regarding the executive employee exemption from the Wage Orders and the interaction of California law and federal regulations.ⁿ³¹

[iii] Administrative Employees

To be exempt from the minimum wage and overtime provisions of the wage orders, an administrative employee must be one:ⁿ³²

(a) Whose duties and responsibilities involve either:

(1) The performance of office or non-manual work directly related to management policies or general business operations of his or her employer or his or her employer's customers, or

(2) The performance of functions in the administration of a school system, or educational establishment or institution, or of a department or subdivision thereof, in work directly related to the academic instruction or training carried on therein; and

(b) Who customarily and regularly exercises discretion and independent judgment; and

(c) Who meets at least one of the following classifications:

(1) Who regularly and directly assists a proprietor, or an employee employed in a bona fide executive or administrative capacity (as such terms are defined for purposes of this section), or

(2) Who performs under only general supervision work along specialized or technical lines requiring special training, experience, or knowledge, or

The employee must also earn a monthly salary equivalent to no less than two times the state minimum wage for full-time employment. Full-time employment is defined in Lab. Code § 515(c) as 40 hours per week.

The Wage Orders further require that the activities constituting exempt work and non-exempt work be construed in the same manner as such terms are construed in specified regulations under the Fair Labor Standards Act (now superseded).ⁿ³³ Exempt work includes, for example, all work that is directly and closely related to exempt work and work which is properly viewed as a means for carrying out exempt functions. The work actually performed by the employee during the course of the work week must, first and foremost, be examined and the amount of time the employee spends on such work, together with the employer's realistic expectations and the realistic requirements of the job, must be considered in determining whether the employee is primarily engaged in duties that meet the test of the exemption.ⁿ³⁴

In Bell v. Farmers Ins. Exchange,ⁿ³⁵ the court held that branch office insurance claims representatives were properly classified as production, rather than administrative, employees under Wage Order 4 and therefore not exempt. In doing so, the court found that the term "administrative" in Wage Order 4,ⁿ³⁶ has a meaning independent of the limitations of Cal. Code Reg. § 11040 P 1(A)(1), (2).ⁿ³⁷ The court found further that federal authorities construing parallel provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act are relevant to interpretation of the administrative exemption.ⁿ³⁸ The court then applied the dichotomy between administrative workers, described as employees performing work directly related to management policies or general business operations of the employer or the employer's customers, and production workers, whose primary duty is producing the commodity or commodities, whether goods or services, that the enterprise exists to produce, as elucidated by federal decisions, as a useful approach to construing the meaning of "administrative" in Wage Order 4.ⁿ³⁹ The court concluded that the work of the claims representatives placed them squarely on the production side of the dichotomy, since the undisputed evidence established that claims adjusting is the sole mission of the branch claims offices in which the representatives worked and they are fully engaged in performing the day-to-day activities of that important component of the business.ⁿ⁴⁰

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

Bell v. Farmers Insurance Exchange ⁿ⁴¹ restricts the availability of exempt "administrative" status under federal and state wage and hour law. Both the California Labor Code and the FLSA provide an exemption from the payment of overtime for employees employed in an "administrative capacity." However, the regulations that implement the FLSA draw a distinction between "administrative" and "production" work. "Administrative" work encompasses tasks related to the "servicing" of a business, such as planning, negotiating, purchasing, marketing and business research. "Production" work encompasses tasks related to the manufacture of the employer's goods or the performance of the employer's core services. For many years, federal courts placed limited emphasis upon this administrative/production dichotomy, focusing instead upon other elements of the test, such as whether the employee performed work of "substantial importance" to the enterprise. Starting in 1990, however, a few federal circuit courts expanded upon this dichotomy by first identifying the "production" work of the employer (whether goods or services) and then denying exempt administrative status to employees primarily engaged in such activity.

Before Bell, no California state appellate court had comprehensively addressed the administration/production dichotomy and its application, if any, to California's wage and hour laws. In Bell, the First Appellate District held that it does apply. Stating it was following the federal cases, the court held that claims adjusters for Farmers Insurance Exchange ("FIE") "produced" the company's primary product--defined by the court as "the handling of insurance claims"--and were not exempt administrative employees.ⁿ⁴²

Facts of Bell

FIE is one of many affiliated entities within the Farmers Insurance Group of Companies. According to the court, the sole and exclusive business of FIE is handling insurance claims. The other affiliated entities handle sales and "activities that would normally be included within the executive and administrative functions of a corporation."ⁿ⁴³ Plaintiffs were a class of current and former claims adjusters who worked within FIE's network of branch offices. The adjusters were responsible for settling claims for FIE, determining liability, recommending coverage, estimating damage, detecting fraud and various other duties associated with claims adjusting.

Plaintiffs filed a motion for summary adjudication, arguing that FIE's primary product is "claims handling" and that claims adjusters are therefore non-exempt employees engaged in "producing" the adjustment of claims. The trial court, applying the administrative/productive dichotomy, granted plaintiff's motion.

The Significance of Federal Authorities When Interpreting

The Administrative Exemption Under State Law

After extended analysis, the court concluded that federal authorities may serve as an aid to determining whether an employee is an exempt administrative employee under state law. Looking to those federal authorities, the court identified three distinct sets of criteria for determining exempt "administrative" status: (1) the role of the employees within the organization; (2) the job duties of the employees; and (3) the employees' level of remuneration. Addressing the employees' role within the organization, the court commented that, unlike federal cases which had focused on the administrative/production dichotomy, Wage Order No. 4ⁿ⁴⁴ covered the duties and level of remuneration required for administrative exempt status, but did not address the employee's "role." Accordingly, the court deemed it useful to look to federal law to make this assessment.

The Administrative/Production Dichotomy

The federal regulations provide that exempt administrative status applies only to employees who perform work "directly related to management policies or general business operations." The federal interpretive regulations explain that this requirement is met only by employees performing administrative work, not by those employees performing primarily production work.ⁿ⁴⁵ Bell accepted the argument that the federal courts have expanded this distinction, specifically noting that recent cases have focused on the "nature of the employer's business," distinguishing between employees who administer the business affairs of the enterprise and those whose primary duty is producing the commodity (goods or services) that the enterprise exists to provide.ⁿ⁴⁶

Implications

By elevating a brief regulatory reference to production work to a major basis for denying exempt administrative status, the Bell court has upset fifty years of commonly held beliefs regarding exempt status. Now, analyzing job duties, formerly the foundation of exempt analysis, is subordinate to evaluating the employee's behavior to determine if it constitutes production work. Nothing could be less substantive, more confusing, or more unhelpful. Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

On appeal after trial, the California Court of Appeal refused to reconsider its prior decision in light of recent developments in federal case law, finding that reconsideration was precluded by the law of the case doctrine and that FIE failed to show an intervening change in the controlling rules of law to justify a departure from the procedural rule.^{n46.1} The court also found that FIE had not demonstrated that the trial court abused its discretion in granting class certification and later denying the two motions for decertification.^{n46.2} The court also upheld the trial court's use of the statistical methodology of random sampling and extrapolation for the determination of aggregate classwide damages,^{n46.3} but remanded to the trial court for limited amendment of the postjudgment plan of distribution of damages and the order approving claim forms and instructions, which will authorize the claims administrator to challenge suspect claims.^{n46.4}

In Eicher v. Advanced Business Integrators, Inc., ^{n46.5} a consultant to a computer software company was found not to fall with the administrative exemption. He was hired with a starting salary of $60,000 and no overtime compensation. His college degree was in sociology, not computer science. He spent half of his time in the office and the other half onsite at customers' venues. He primarily provided customer service and training on the software. He did not hire or fire employees, negotiate contracts with customers, or consult with the employer or its customers about business policies and practices. The employer carefully monitored the hours he worked, requiring him to account for at least 40 hours per week, and deducted from his pay for partial-day absences if he had no accrued paid time off for the absence. The trial court properly found that the employer did not meet its burden of proof with respect to the first element of the five-part test for an administrative exemption,^{n46.6} whether he performed office or nonmanual work directly related to management policies or general business operations of the employer or its customers, and thus did not need to examine the other four elements.^{n46.7}

On the other hand, in Combs v. Skyriver Communications, Inc., ^{n46.8} the employer did establish the application of the administrative exemption. Substantial evidence supported the finding that a former employee whose core responsibility was maintaining the well-being of the network of an Internet service provider was an administratively exempt employee. In a key distinction from Bell, the trial court concluded that the administrative/production worker dichotomy did not apply. The Combs court distinguished the Bell decisions both factually and legally. Factually, the court noted, the evidence in Bell showed that the employer itself characterized the plaintiff's responsibilities as "routine and unimportant." No such evidence was presented in Combs. Legally, the Combs court observed that the Bell decisions created the "administrative/production worker dichotomy" in analyzing a prior wage order that did not incorporate any federal regulations and did not contain a detailed definition of the administrative exemption. Because Wage Order 4-2001 did incorporate federal regulations and did define relevant terms, the dichotomy created in Bell was not dispositive. Indeed, the Combs court noted that the Bell court itself expressly cautioned against a broad application of the administrative/production dichotomy. The court analyzed the evidence of Combs' job responsibilities and concluded that they satisfied the elements of the administrative exemption.

The DLSE has promulgated extensive policy regarding the administrative employee exemption from the Wage Orders and the interaction of California law and federal regulations.ⁿ⁴⁷

[iv] Professional Employees

To be exempt from the minimum wage and overtime provisions of the wage orders, a professional employee must be one:⁴⁸

(a) Who is licensed or certified by the State of California and is primarily engaged in the practice of one of the following recognized professions: law, medicine, dentistry, optometry, architecture, engineering, teaching,⁴⁹ or accounting; or

(b) Who is primarily engaged in an occupation commonly recognized as a learned or artistic profession, as construed in accordance with federal regulations.^{49.1} For the purposes of this subsection, "learned or artistic profession" means an employee who is primarily engaged in the performance of:

(i) Work requiring knowledge of an advanced type in a field or science or learning customarily acquired by a prolonged course of specialized intellectual instruction and study, as distinguished from a general academic education and from an apprenticeship, and from training in the performance of routine mental, manual, or physical processes, or work that is an essential part of or necessarily incident to any of the above work; or

(ii) Work that is original and creative in character in a recognized field of artistic endeavor (as opposed to work which can be produced by a person endowed with general manual or intellectual ability and training), and the result of which depends primarily on the invention, imagination, or talent of the employee or work that is an essential part of or necessarily incident to any of the above work; and

(iii) Whose work is predominantly intellectual and varied in character (as opposed to routine mental, manual, mechanical, or physical work) and is of such character that the output produced or the result accomplished cannot be standardized in relation to a given period of time.

(c) Who customarily and regularly exercises discretion and independent judgment in the performance of duties set forth in paragraph (a).

(d) Who earns a monthly salary⁵⁰ equivalent to no less than two times the state minimum wage for full-time employment. Full-time employment is defined in Labor Code section 515(c) as 40 hours in a week.

(e) Notwithstanding the general definition of a professional employee, pharmacists employed to engage in the practice of pharmacy, and registered nurses employed to engage in the practice of nursing, are not to be considered exempt professional employees, nor are they to be considered exempt from coverage for the purposes of this subsection unless they individually meet the criteria established for exemption as executive or administrative employees. This rule for pharmacists and registered nurses does not apply to the following advanced practice nurses:

(i) Certified nurse midwives who are primarily engaged in performing duties for which certification is required pursuant to Article 2.5 (commencing with Section 2746) of Chapter 6 of Division 2 of the Business and Professions Code.

(ii) Certified nurse anesthetists who are primarily engaged in performing duties for which certification is required pursuant to Article 7 (commencing with Section 2825) of Chapter 6 of Division 2 of the Business and Professions Code.

(iii) Certified nurse practitioners who are primarily engaged in performing duties for which certification is required pursuant to Article 8 (commencing with Section 2834) of Chapter 6 of Division 2 of the Business and Professions Code.

(iv) These three occupations may meet the general requirements of exemption for professional employees

(f) Except as provided below, an employee in the computer software field will be exempt, if all of the following apply:^{50,1}

(i) The employee is primarily engaged in work that is intellectual or creative and that requires the exercise of discretion and independent judgment, and the employee is primarily engaged in duties that consist of one or more of the following:

(ii) The application of systems analysis techniques and procedures, including consulting with users, to determine hardware, software, or system functional specifications. The design, development, documentation, analysis, creation, testing, or modification of computer systems or programs, including prototypes, based on and related to, user or system design specifications. The documentation, testing, creation, or modification of computer programs related to the design of software or hardware for computer operating systems.

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

As under federal law, the phrase "discretion and independent judgment" for purposes of the wage orders does not have a lay meaning. It has a technical, legal meaning that is frequently misunderstood in three respects. First, "discretion and independent judgment" encompasses only decisions in which an employee has the power to make a choice free from immediate supervision. An employee who applies his or her knowledge in following prescribed procedures, in determining which procedures to follow, or in determining whether specified standards are met is not exercising discretion and independent judgment.⁵¹ Second, "discretion and independent judgment" encompasses only decisions affecting matters of consequence. Matters of consequence are those of real and substantial significance to the policies or general operation of the employer's business or the employer's customers. Third, "consequence" encompasses only decisions having a substantial effect on the general direction of a business as a whole. (An employee can have responsibilities related only to a segment of a business and still make decisions having a substantial effect on a business as a whole.) Decisions that are important to an employer only because they can lead to serious loss through the choice of incorrect techniques, the improper application of skills, neglect, or failure to follow instructions are not decisions of "consequence."⁵² Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

(iii) The employee is highly skilled and is proficient in the theoretical and practical application of highly specialized information to computer systems analysis, programming, or software engineering. A job title shall not be determinative of the applicability of this exemption.

(iv) The employee's hourly rate of pay is not less than $36.00 or, if the employee is paid on a salaried basis, the employee earns an annual salary of not less than $75,000 for full-time employment, which is paid at least once a month and in a monthly amount of not less than $6,250. The Division of Labor Statistics and Research will adjust both the hourly pay rate and the salary level on October 1 of each year

(to be effective on January 1 of the following year) by an amount equal to the percentage increase in the California Consumer Price Index for Urban Wage Earners and Clerical Workers. Effective January 1, 2009, the new amounts became the following: $37.94 per hour or an annual salary of $79,050 (in a monthly amount of not less than $6,587.50).

(g) This exemption for an employee in the computer software field does not apply to an employee if any of the following apply:^{n52.1}

(i) The employee is a trainee or employee in an entry-level position who is learning to become proficient in the theoretical and practical application of highly specialized information to computer systems analysis, programming, and software engineering.

(ii) The employee is in a computer-related occupation but has not attained the level of skill and expertise necessary to work independently and without close supervision.

(iii) The employee is engaged in the operation of computers or in the manufacture, repair, or maintenance of computer hardware and related equipment.

(iv) The employee is an engineer, drafter, machinist, or other professional whose work is highly dependent upon or facilitated by the use of computers and computer software programs and who is skilled in computer-aided design software, including CAD/CAM, but who is not in a computer systems analysis or programming occupation.

(v) The employee is a writer engaged in writing material, including box labels, product descriptions, documentation, promotional material, setup and installation instructions, and other similar written information, either for print or for on screen media or who writes or provides content material intended to be read by customers, subscribers, or visitors to computer-related media such as the World Wide Web or CD-ROMs.

(vi) The employee is engaged in any of the activities that would make the employee eligible for the exemption for the purpose of creating imagery for effects used in the motion picture, television, or theatrical industry.

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

It is important to emphasize that the computer professional exemption found in the Wage Orders applies to specified software professionals only. The limitation to software-related tasks does not preclude a finding that a computer hardware professional is exempt, but that showing must satisfy the executive, administrative or non-computer related professional guidelines for determining exempt status.
Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

The Wage Orders state that employees in the computer software field are exempt if they meet the listed criteria. Labor Code section 515.5 provides that employees in the computer software field are exempt from the requirement that overtime compensation be paid if they meet similar criteria. The DLSE takes the position that the computer software exemption is limited to the overtime exemption and that employees in the computer software field remain covered by the other protections in the Wage Orders.ⁿ⁵³

The DLSE has promulgated extensive policy regarding the professional employee exemption from the Wage Orders and the interaction of California law and federal regulations.ⁿ⁵⁴

[b] Other Persons Exempt From Minimum Wage and Overtime Provisions of All Wage Orders

[i] Outside Salespersons

Under Labor Code section 1171, outside salespersons are excluded from coverage of the provisions of Part 4, Chapter 1 of the Labor Code governing wages, hours, and working conditions.ⁿ⁵⁵ and the minimum wage and overtime provisions of the wage orders do not apply to these persons.ⁿ⁵⁶ The California regulations define an outside salesperson as any person, 18 years of age or older, who customarily and regularly works more than half the working time away from the employer's place of business, selling tangible or intangible items or obtaining orders or contracts for products, services, or use of facilities.ⁿ⁵⁷

In Ramirez v. Yosemite Water Co., Inc.,ⁿ⁵⁸ the California Supreme Court held that the definition of outside salesperson contained in Wage Order No. 7-80,ⁿ⁵⁹ not the definition in the federal regulationsⁿ⁶⁰ is determinative and provides that a person who "regularly works more than half the working time" engaged in sales activities outside the employer's place of business is exempt from California overtime law under Labor Code section 1171.ⁿ⁶¹

Unlike the qualitative approach taken under the federal exemption, which focuses on defining the employee's "primary function," rather than on the amount of time spent selling,ⁿ⁶² the California regulation takes a purely quantitative approach, focusing exclusively on whether the employee works more than half the time selling or obtaining orders or contracts.ⁿ⁶³ In this case, the trial court and the court of appeal erred in employing the federal method, or an improper hybrid of the state and federal methods, to determine whether the employee was an outside salesperson.ⁿ⁶⁴

Having recognized California's distinctive quantitative approach to determine which employees are outside salespersons, the Ramirez court then addressed whether the number of hours an employee works in sales should be determined by number of hours the employer (by job description or estimation) claims the employee should be devoting to sales or by the actual number of hours the employee spends on sales. The Court held that a combination of the two should be used to make that determination, so that neither the employer nor the employee can manipulate the numbers. Thus, a court should first determine the number of hours the employee actually spends on sales; but the court should then consider whether the employee's work diverges from the employer's reasonable expectations, whether there was any concrete expression of employer displeasure because of this divergence, and whether such expressions were realistic, given the actual overall job requirements.ⁿ⁶⁵ The Court added that the trial court should itemize the types of activities it considers to be sales-related, and the approximate average time that it finds the employee spent on each of these activities. Because the question whether a particular activity is sales-related is a mixed one of law and fact, this itemization will enable an appellate court to review whether the trial court's legal classifications are correct, and whether its factual findings are supported by substantial evidence.ⁿ⁶⁶

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

In Ramirez v. Yosemite Water Co., Inc.,ⁿ⁶⁷ the California Supreme Court announced evidentiary rules for the litigation of certain wage and hour cases that will complicate and prolong discovery and trial for both plaintiffs and defendants. At the heart of the problem lies a simple, but powerful, reality. Many jobs are comprised of multiple job duties that frequently change to reflect evolving business needs. As a consequence, many employees complete their job duties by engaging in tasks with which their supervisors may be generally, but not intimately, familiar. In litigation involving challenges to exempt status, courts must be careful that these timing and content issues are neither understated nor overstated to gain an improper advantage. Unfortunately, even in the absence of concerns regarding evidentiary advantages, the time it will now take to reconstruct each and every detail of a job in order to quantify its weight will be significant for the parties and for the judiciary. In jury trials, moreover, the special verdict forms that will be necessary to preserve exempt/non-exempt issues for appellate review will be especially difficult to draft and especially difficult for juries to parse. Hopefully, the courts will develop a "totality of the circumstances" or "reasonable inferences" test that will permit practitioners to more efficiently evaluate and resolve these claims. Alternatively, or in addition, the courts could rule certain types of activities to be exempt or non-exempt as a matter of law. As matters now stand, these cases will be complicated and protracted until further guidance is provided. Commentary by Kirby Wilcox

The apparent reason for specifically providing that minimum wage and other provisions do not apply to individuals employed as outside salespersons is that these employees normally control their own hours and are paid on a commission basis.ⁿ⁶⁸

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

The exemption for an "outside salesperson" does not apply to minors or to any employee who spends as much as one half of his or her working time at the employer's place of business.ⁿ⁶⁹ The DLSE's position is that when an employer establishes any fixed location at which the employee must work, that location constitutes one of the employer's places of business, and the exemption will not apply if the employee works 50 percent or more of the time at one or more such locations. Thus, for example, an employee who is required to sell flowers on a designated street corner is not an "outside salesperson." An employee who drives and makes sales from a catering or ice cream truck is not considered an "outside salesperson" because the truck is considered the employer's "place of business." Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

[ii] State and Local Government Employees

Prior to January 1, 2001, none of the provisions of the wage orders applied to employees directly employed by the State of California or any county, incorporated city or town, or other municipal corporation. However, Minimum Wage Order MW-2001 and Wage Order Nos. 1-2001-13-2001 repealed features of the exemption that previously applied to these employees.ⁿ⁷⁰

Additionally, state and local government employees are generally covered by the FLSA to the same extent that private employees are.ⁿ⁷¹

[iii] Family of Employer

None of the provisions of the wage orders applies to individuals who are the parents, spouses, or children or legally adopted children of the employer.ⁿ⁷²

[iv] Employees Licensed Under Fish and Game Code

No employee holding a commercial fishing license pursuant to Fish and Game Code Sections 7850-7856 or who is employed on a commercial passenger fishing boat licensed pursuant to Fish and Game Code Sections 7920-7925 may be subject to a minimum wage or maximum hour (overtime) order of the IWC.ⁿ⁷³

[v] Live-In Alternatives to Incarceration Rehabilitation Programs for Substance Abusers

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the participants, director, and staff of a live-in alternative to incarceration program with special focus on substance abusersⁿ⁷⁴ are exempt from the wage and hour provisions of the Labor Code when participating in operations owned and operated by the program, as long as all revenues generated by the operation are used for the support of the program.ⁿ⁷⁵

[vi] Employees in Computer Software Field

As indicated in [iii], above, an employee in the computer software field is exempt from the daily overtime pay provisions of Labor Code section 510 if all of the following apply:ⁿ⁷⁶

- (a) The employee is primarily engaged in work that is intellectual or creative and that requires the exercise of discretion and independent judgment, and the employee is primarily engaged in duties that consist of one or more of the following:

- (i) The application of systems analysis techniques and procedures, including consulting with users, to determine hardware, software, or system functional specifications.
- (ii) The design, development, documentation, analysis, creation, testing, or modification of computer systems or programs, including prototypes, based on and related to, user or system design specifications.
- (iii) The documentation, testing, creation, or modification of computer programs related to the design of software or hardware for computer operating systems.

(b) The employee is highly skilled and is proficient in the theoretical and practical application of highly specialized information to computer systems analysis, programming, or software engineering. A job title shall not be determinative of the applicability of this exemption.

(c) The employee's hourly rate of pay is not less than $36.00 or, if the employee is paid on a salaried basis, the employee earns an annual salary of not less than $75,000 for full-time employment, which is paid at least once a month and in a monthly amount of not less than $6,250. The Division of Labor Statistics and Research will adjust both the hourly pay rate and the salary level on October 1 of each year (to be effective on January 1 of the following year) by an amount equal to the percentage increase in the California Consumer Price Index for Urban Wage Earners and Clerical Workers. Effective January 1, 2009, the new amounts became the following: $37.94 per hour or an annual salary of $79,050 (in a monthly amount of not less than $6,587.50).

This exemption does not apply to an employee if any of the following apply:ⁿ⁷⁷

(a) The employee is a trainee or employee in an entry-level position who is learning to become proficient in the theoretical and practical application of highly specialized information to computer systems analysis, programming, and software engineering.

(b) The employee is in a computer-related occupation but has not attained the level of skill and expertise necessary to work independently and without close supervision.

(c) The employee is engaged in the operation of computers or in the manufacture, repair, or maintenance of computer hardware and related equipment.

(d) The employee is an engineer, drafter, machinist, or other professional whose work is highly dependent upon or facilitated by the use of computers and computer software programs and who is skilled in computer-aided design software, including CAD/CAM, but who is not in a computer systems analysis or programming occupation.

(e) The employee is a writer engaged in writing material, including box labels, product descriptions, documentation, promotional material, setup and installation instructions, and other similar written information, either for print or for on screen media or who writes or provides content material intended to be read by customers, subscribers, or visitors to computer-related media such as the World Wide Web or CD-ROMs.

(f) The employee is engaged in any of the activities set forth in Labor Code section 515.5(a) for the purpose of creating imagery for effects used in the motion picture, television, or theatrical industry.

[vii] Licensed Physician or Surgeon

Labor Code section 510 does not apply to an employee who is a licensed physician or surgeon, whose primary duties require licensure pursuant to Business & Professions Code section 2000 et seq., and whose hourly rate of pay is equal to or greater than a specified rate (currently $55, to be increased every January 1).ⁿ⁷⁸ The exemption does not apply to employees in a medical internship or resident program or to a physician employee covered by a valid collective bargaining agreement pursuant to Labor Code section 514.ⁿ⁷⁹

[c] Inapplicability of Certain Wage Orders to Specified Occupations[i] Student Nurses

Before January 1, 2001, none of the provisions of the wage order regulating wages, hours, and working conditions in the public housekeeping industryⁿ⁸⁰ applied to student nurses in a school accredited by the California Board of Registered Nursing or by the Board of Vocational Nurse and Psychiatric Technician Examiners or exempted by the provisions of the Business and Professions Code Sections 2789 or 2884.ⁿ⁸¹ However, Minimum Wage Order MW-2001 and Wage Order No. 5-2001 repealed features of the exemption that previously applied to student nurses.ⁿ⁸²

[ii] Carnival Ride Operators

Before January 1, 2001, the minimum wage and overtime provisions of the wage order regulating the amusement and recreation industryⁿ⁸³ did not apply to full-time ride operators employed by traveling carnivals.ⁿ⁸⁴ However, Minimum Wage Order MW-2001 and Wage Order No. 10-2001 repealed features of the exemption that previously applied to carnival ride operators.ⁿ⁸⁵

[iii] Professional Actors

Before January 1, 2001, the provisions of the wage orders regulating the broadcasting and motion picture industriesⁿ⁸⁶ did not apply to professional actors. However, Minimum Wage Order MW-2001 and Wage Order No. 10-2001 repealed features of the exemption that previously applied to professional actors in the broadcasting industryⁿ⁸⁷ and in the motion picture industry industryⁿ⁸⁸

[iv] Shepherders

Shepherders were entirely exempt from the Wage Orders until Wage Order 14-2001ⁿ⁸⁹ became effective on July 1, 2001. Since then, Sections 3, 4(A)-(D), 5, 6, 9, 11, 12 and 13 of Wage Order 14 do not apply to shepherders. Otherwise, Wage Order 14, including Section 4(A), applies to any workweek during which a shepherd employee is engaged in any non-shepherding agricultural or other work.ⁿ⁹⁰ "Non-shepherding work" is any work except work defined in Wage Order Section 2(N).ⁿ⁹¹ Wage Order 14 Section 14 provides special requirements applicable only to shepherders, i.e., that they be provided with regular mail service, an appropriate means to communicate with employers, health care providers and government regulators, and visitor access to a fixed housing site and, when applicable, mobile housing.ⁿ⁹²

A "shepherd" is any individual employed to do any of the following:ⁿ⁹³

- Tend flocks of sheep grazing on range or pasture.
- Move sheep to and about an area assigned for grazing.
- Prevent sheep from wandering or becoming lost, or using trained dogs to round up strays and protect sheep against predators and the eating of poisonous plants.

- Assist in the lambing, docking, and shearing of sheep.
- Provide water or feed supplementary rations to sheep.
- Perform the work of a sheepherder pursuant to an approved job order filed under the provisions of the federal Immigration and Nationality Act, commonly referred to as the "H-2A" program⁹⁴ or any successor provisions.

This exemption is only effective while the person is engaged for the entire workweek in sheepherding as that term is defined in Order 14.⁹⁵

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

The DLSE interprets the sheepherder exemption as applying only to shepherds who attend grazing flocks and bed down near evening campsites. They may help to shear sheep, but shearers who do not herd do not qualify for the exemption. Handlers of animals other than sheep are not exempt. Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

[v] Babysitters and Other Personal Attendants

Before January 1, 2001, none of the wage order provisions regulating household occupations⁹⁶ applied to personal attendants.⁹⁷ "Personal attendant" includes babysitters and any person employed by a private householder, or by any third-party employer recognized in the health care industry to work in a private household, to supervise, feed, or dress a child or person who by reason of advanced age, physical disability, or mental deficiency needs supervision, if there is no other significant amount of work required.⁹⁸

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

The DLSE's position is that household work related to the care of the child or infirm person, such as cooking, making beds, or washing clothes for that individual, may be included in the duties of a personal attendant. Other general housework may be included only if it does not constitute a "significant" amount of the employee's duties. The DLSE defines "significant amount" as not exceeding 20 percent of the hours worked in a workweek.⁹⁹ The DLSE also interprets this exemption as not including "practical nurses" (who are explicitly covered by the wage order)¹⁰⁰ and any other employee who performs any "intrusive procedure" (including taking or recording temperature, pulse, or respiration rate; giving medication; or emptying bedpans) on a regular basis. Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

However, Minimum Wage Order MW-2001 and Wage Order No. 15- 2001 repealed features of the exemption that previously applied to babysitters and professional attendants.¹⁰¹ Under Wage Order 15, "'Personal attendant' includes baby sitters and means any person employed by a private householder or by any third party employer recognized in the health care industry to work in a private household, to supervise, feed, or dress a child or person who by reason of advanced age, physical disability, or mental deficiency needs supervision."¹⁰² However, this change in the coverage of Wage Order No. 15-2001, does not apply to any babysitter under age 18 employed as a sitter for a minor child of the employer in the employer's home.¹⁰³

Note, however, that a personal attendant who is not employed in a private household would be covered by the minimum wage and overtime requirements of Wage Order No. 5-2001, subject to special overtime rules for employees of nonprofit organizations.¹⁰⁴

[vi] National Service Program Participants

Since January 1, 2001, none of the provisions of the wage orders has applied to individuals participating in national service programs, such as AmeriCorps, carried out using assistance provided under 42 U.S.C. § 12571.ⁿ¹⁰⁵

[d] Inapplicability of Minimum Wage Provisions of All Wage Orders to Apprentices

The minimum wage provisions of all wage orders other than Wage Order 16-2001 do not apply to apprentices regularly indentured under the State Division of Apprenticeship Standards.ⁿ¹⁰⁶ Other provisions of the wage orders are applicable to these apprentices.

The Labor Code provisions governing apprenticeship programs define an apprentice as a person at least 16 years of age who has entered into a written agreement (known as an "apprenticeship agreement") with an employer or program sponsor.ⁿ¹⁰⁷ The term of apprenticeship for each apprenticeable occupation must be approved by the Chief of the Division of Apprenticeship Standards and must not in any case provide for less than 2,000 hours of reasonably continuous employment for the apprentice and for his or her participation in an approved program of training through employment and through education in related and supplemental subjects.ⁿ¹⁰⁸

The exemption from minimum wage obligations applies only to apprentices who are regularly indentured pursuant to programs governed by Labor Code sections 3070-3098;ⁿ¹⁰⁹ therefore, it does not apply to on-the-job trainees generally, even if the employer calls such employees "apprentices."

By contrast, the FLSA does not provide a complete exemption from minimum wages for apprentices; instead, it provides that apprentices may be employed at a subminimum wage if the employer obtains a special certificate from the Wage and Hour Division pursuant to regulations promulgated under the FLSA.ⁿ¹¹⁰ Thus, a California employer who is subject to the FLSA will need to follow the procedures set forth in the federal regulations and obtain the required certificate before employing an apprentice at less than the regular minimum wage. For discussion of the federal provisions regarding apprentices, see § 2.05[2][b][iii].

[2] Federal Law

[a] Generally

The minimum wage and overtime provisions under the FLSAⁿ¹¹¹ do not apply to certain categories of employees described below.ⁿ¹¹² The employer claiming an exemption bears the burden of proving that the exemption exists,ⁿ¹¹³ and exemptions are strictly interpreted.ⁿ¹¹⁴ However, in some cases the FLSA may provide a "safe harbor" defense to employers who unintentionally cause the loss of an exempt status and who reimburse the employee for any impermissible salary deductions.ⁿ¹¹⁵

Certain exemptions under the FLSA are not identical to the comparable exemptions under the California wage orders, and some exemptions under the FLSA have no counterpart under the wage orders whatsoever. Where state and federal law diverge, the FLSA requires the employer to comply with whichever standard, or portion of it, is the more restrictive. Thus, the employer should be aware that the existence of a federal minimum wage or overtime exemption is no defense to liability under the wage orders if there is no corresponding California exemption.ⁿ¹¹⁶

The FLSA's overtime provisions presumptively apply to federal employees unless a specific FLSA exemption applies.ⁿ¹¹⁷ⁿ¹¹⁸

[b] Persons Employed in Executive, Administrative, or Professional Capacities

[i] Generally

Persons employed in a bona fide executive, administrative, or professional capacity are exempt from federal minimum wage and overtime provisions.ⁿ¹¹⁹ The criteria for these exemptions are set forth in detail in regulations promulgated by the U.S. Department of Labor (DOL), as recently revised, effective August 23, 2004.ⁿ¹²⁰ The new DOL regulations have replaced the former "short" and "long" tests for exempt status with single tests for determining whether an employee is exempt as an executive, administrative or professional employee. Common to all three sets of criteria is a requirement that employees earn at least $455 per week (equivalent to $23,660 per year), exclusive of board, lodging or other facilities.ⁿ¹²¹ Employers must pay this amount by means of a salary or, in the case of administrative and professional employees, a fee.^{n121.1}

[ii] Executive Capacity

Under the new regulations, employees are deemed exempt as employed in a bona fide executive capacity if (1) they are compensated on a salary basis at a rate of not less than $455 per week, exclusive of board, lodging or other facilities; (2) their primary duty^{n121.2} is management of the enterprise in which they are employed or of a customarily recognized department or subdivision thereof; (3) they customarily and regularly^{n121.3} direct the work of two or more other employees; and (4) they have the authority to hire or fire other employees or their suggestions and recommendations as to the hiring, firing, advancement, promotion or any other change of status of other employees are given particular weight.^{n121.4} The executive exemption also applies to business owners, defined as employees who own at least a bona fide 20 % equity interest in the enterprise in which the employee is employed, regardless of whether the business is a corporate or other type of organization, and who are actively engaged in its management.^{n121.5} The new regulations deleted the "sole charge" provision contained in the former regulations, under which employees who were in "sole charge of an independent establishment or a physically separated branch establishment" could be exempt under the executive exemption even though they exceeded the applicable percentage limitations on nonexempt work contained in the former regulations.^{n121.6}

"Management" under the new regulations includes, but is not limited to, activities such as interviewing, selecting, and training of employees; setting and adjusting their rates of pay and hours of work; directing the work of employees; maintaining production or sales records for use in supervision or control; appraising employees' productivity and efficiency for the purpose of recommending promotions or other changes in status; handling employee complaints and grievances; disciplining employees; planning the work; determining the techniques to be used; apportioning the work among the employees; determining the types of materials, supplies, machinery, equipment or tools to be used or merchandise to be bought, stocked and sold; controlling the flow and distribution of materials or merchandise and supplies; providing for the safety and security of the employees or the property; planning and controlling the budget; and monitoring or implementing legal compliance measures.^{n121.7}

A "customarily recognized department or subdivision" is intended to distinguish between a mere collection of employees assigned from time to time to a specific job or series of jobs and a unit with permanent status and function. A customarily recognized department or subdivision must have a permanent status and a continuing function. For example, a large employer's human resources department might have subdivisions for labor relations, pensions and other benefits, equal employment opportunity, and personnel management, each of which has a permanent status and function.^{n121.8} When an enterprise has more than one establishment, the employee in charge of each establishment may be considered in charge of a recognized subdivision of the enterprise.^{n121.9} A recognized department or subdivision need not be physically within the employer's establishment and may move from place to place. The mere fact that the employee works in more than one location does not invalidate the exemption if other factors show that the employee is actually in charge of a recognized unit with a continuing function in the organization.^{n121.10} Continuity of the same subordinate personnel is not essential to the existence of a recognized unit with a continuing function. An otherwise exempt employee will not lose the exemption merely because the employee draws and supervises workers from a pool or supervises a team of workers drawn from other recognized units, if other factors are present that indicate that the employee is in charge of a recognized unit with a continuing function.^{n121.11}

The phrase "two or more other employees" refers to two full-time employees or their equivalent. One full-time and two half-time employees, for example, are equivalent to two full-time employees, as are four half-time employees.^{n121.12}

The supervision can be distributed among two, three or more employees, but each such employee must customarily and regularly direct the work of two or more other full-time employees or the equivalent. Thus, for example, a department with five full-time nonexempt workers may have up to two exempt supervisors if each such supervisor customarily and regularly directs the work of two of those workers.^{n121.13} An employee who merely assists the manager of a particular department and supervises two or more employees only in the actual manager's absence does not meet this requirement.^{n121.14} An employee's hours worked cannot be credited more than once for different executives. Thus, a shared responsibility for the supervisor of the same two employees in the same department does not satisfy this requirement. However, a full-time employee who works four hours for one supervisor and four hours for a different supervisor, for example, can be credited as a half-time employee for both supervisors.^{n121.15}

Concurrent performance of exempt and nonexempt work does not disqualify an employee from the executive exemption if the requirements for the exemption, as described above, are otherwise met.^{n121.16} Whether an employee meets the requirements of the exemption when the employee performs concurrent duties is determined on a case-by-case basis, based on such factors as the relative importance of the exempt duties as compared with other types of duties; the amount of time spent performing exempt work; the employee's relative freedom from direct supervision; and the relationship between the employee's salary and the wages paid to other employees for the kind of nonexempt work performed by the employee.^{n121.17} Generally, exempt executives make the decision regarding when to perform nonexempt duties and remain responsible for the success or failure of business operations under their management while performing the nonexempt work. In contrast, the nonexempt employee generally is directed by a supervisor to perform the exempt work or performs the exempt work for defined time periods. An employee whose primary duty is ordinary production work or routine, recurrent or repetitive tasks cannot qualify for exemption as an executive.^{n121.18} For example, an assistant manager in a retail establishment may perform work such as serving customers, cooking food, stocking shelves and cleaning the establishment, but performance of such nonexempt work does not preclude the exemption if the assistant manager's primary duty is management.^{n121.19} An assistant manager can supervise employees and serve customers at the same time, or simultaneously direct the work of other employees and stock shelves, without losing the exemption.^{n121.20} In contrast, a relief supervisor or working supervisor whose primary duty is performing nonexempt work on the production line in a manufacturing plant does not become exempt merely because the nonexempt production line employee occasionally has some responsibility for directing the work of other nonexempt production line employees when, for example, the exempt supervisor is unavailable.^{n121.21} Similarly, an employee whose primary duty is to work as an electrician is not an exempt executive even if the employee also directs the work of other employees on the job site, orders parts and materials for the job, and handles requests from the prime contractor.^{n121.22}

Prior to August 23, 2004, when the old DOL overtime regulations were in effect, exempt executive status was based on the application of a "short" or "long" test, depending on the amount of the employee's earnings. Under the "short test," an employee was deemed exempt as employed in a bona fide executive capacity if (1) he or she was compensated on a salary basis at a rate of not less than $250 per week (exclusive of board, lodging, or other facilities), (2) his or her primary duty consisted of managing the enterprise or one of its customarily recognized departments or subdivisions, and (3) he or she customarily and regularly directed the work of at least two other employees.ⁿ¹²²

Under the "long test," an employee who was compensated on a salary basis at a rate of less than $250 per week, but at least $155 per week,ⁿ¹²³ was exempt as an executive if, in addition to meeting the above requirements regarding managerial and supervisory duties,ⁿ¹²⁴ he or she (1) had authority to hire or fire other employees or to make suggestions and recommendations regarding hiring, firing, advancement, promotion, and other changes of status, that were given particular weight;ⁿ¹²⁵ (2) customarily and regularly exercised discretionary powers;ⁿ¹²⁶ and (3) with limited exceptions, devoted no more than 20 percent of work hours to other activities, or, if employed in a retail or service establishment, devoted no more than 40 percent of work hours to other activities.ⁿ¹²⁷

[iii] Administrative Capacity

Under the new DOL regulations, an employee is exempt as an "employee employed in a bona fide administrative capacity" if (1) he or she is compensated on a salary or fee basis at a rate of not less than $455 per week, exclusive of board, lodging or other facilities; (2) his or her primary dutyⁿ¹²⁸ is the performance of office or non-manual work directly related to the management or general business operations of the employer or the employer's customers; and (3) his or her primary duty includes the exercise of discretion and independent judgment with respect to matters of significance.ⁿ¹²⁹

The phrase "directly related to the management of general business operations" refers to the type of work performed by the employee. To meet this requirement, an employee must perform work directly related to assisting with the running or servicing of the business, as distinguished, for example, from working on a manufacturing production line or selling a product in a retail or service establishment.ⁿ¹³⁰ This includes, but is not limited to, work in functional areas such as tax; finance; accounting; budgeting; auditing; insurance; quality control; purchasing; procurement; advertising; marketing; research; safety and health; personnel management; human resources; employee benefits; labor relations; public relations; government relations; computer network, internet and database administration; legal and regulatory compliance; and similar activities.ⁿ¹³¹ Some of these activities may be performed by employees who also would qualify for another exemption.ⁿ¹³² An employee may qualify for the administrative exemption if the employee's primary duty is the performance of work directly related to the management or general business operations of the employer's customers. Thus, for example, employees acting as advisers or consultants to their employer's clients or customers (as tax experts or financial consultants, for example) may be exempt.ⁿ¹³³

The exercise of discretion and independent judgment generally involves the comparison and the evaluation of possible courses of conduct, and acting or making a decision after the various possibilities have been considered.ⁿ¹³⁴ The phrase "discretion and independent judgment" is to be applied in the light of all the facts involved in the particular employment situation in which the question arises, considering such factors as whether the employee has authority to formulate, affect interpret, or implement management policies or operating practices; whether the employee carries out major assignments in conducting the operations of the business; whether the employee performs work that affects business operations to a substantial degree, even if the employee's assignments are related to operation of a particular segment of the business; whether the employee has authority to waive or deviate from established policies and procedures without prior approval; whether the employee has authority to negotiate and bind the company on significant matters; whether the employee provides consultation or expert advice to management; whether the employee is involved in planning long-term or short-term business objectives; whether the employee investigates and resolves matters of significance on behalf of management; and whether the employee represents the company in handling complaints, arbitrating disputes or resolving grievances.ⁿ¹³⁵

The new DOL regulations clarify that the exercise of discretion and independent judgment must be more than the use of skill in applying well-established techniques, procedures or specific standards described in manuals or other sources.ⁿ¹³⁶ However, the mere fact that an employee use manuals, guidelines or other established procedures containing or relating to highly technical, scientific, legal, financial or other similarly complex matters that can be understood or interpreted only by those with advanced or specialized knowledge or skills, does not preclude exemption.ⁿ¹³⁷ The exercise of discretion and judgment does not include clerical or secretarial work, recording or tabulating data, or performing other mechanical, repetitive, recurrent or routine work.ⁿ¹³⁸ The fact that many employees perform identical work or work of the same relative importance does not mean that the work of each such employee does not involve the exercise of discretion and independent judgment with respect to matters of significance.ⁿ¹³⁹ The exercise of discretion and independent judgment implies that the employee has authority to make an independent choice, free from immediate direction or supervision. However, employees can exercise discretion and independent judgment even if their decisions or recommendations are reviewed at a higher level.ⁿ¹⁴⁰ An employee does not exercise discretion and independent judgment with respect to matters of significance merely because the employer will experience financial losses if the employee fails to perform the job properly.ⁿ¹⁴¹

The DOL regulations contain a number of specific examples of jobs that the DOL deems to meet or not meet the requirements for the administrative exemption. Specifically, the regulations discuss insurance claims adjusters, employees in the financial services industry, persons who lead teams or other employees in major projects, executive or administrative assistants, human resources managers, purchasing agents, inspectors, examiners or graders, comparison shoppers for retail stores, and public sector investigators.ⁿ¹⁴²

The administrative exemption also applies to employees (1) who are compensated on a salary or fee basis at a rate of not less than $455 per week, exclusive of board, lodging or other facilities, or on a salary basis which is at least equal to the entrance salary for teachers in the educational establishment by which employed; and (2) whose primary duty is performing administrative functions directly related to academic instruction or training in an educational establishment or department or subdivision thereof.ⁿ¹⁴³ⁿ¹⁴⁴⁻¹⁴⁸

Prior to August 23, 2004, when the old DOL overtime regulations were in effect, exempt administrative status was based on the application of a "short" or "long" test, depending on the amount of the employee's earnings. Under the "short test," an employee was deemed exempt as employed in a bona fide administrative capacity if (1) he or she was compensated on a salary or fee basis at a rate of not less than $250 per week (exclusive of board, lodging, or other facilities); (2) his or her primary duty consisted of either (a) the performance of office or nonmanual work directly related to management policies or general business operations of the employer or its customers, or (b) the performance of functions in the administration of a school system or educational establishment or institution, or of a department or subdivision thereof, in work directly related to the academic instruction or training carried on therein; and (3) the performance of his or her primary duty included work requiring the exercise of discretion and independent judgment.ⁿ¹⁴⁹ The first part of the short test is commonly referred to as the "salary basis test"; the last two parts are known as the "duties test."

Under the "long test," an employee who was compensated on a salary or fee basis at a rate of less than $250 per week, but at least $155 per week,ⁿ¹⁵⁰ was exempt if, in addition to meeting the above requirements regarding primary duties, he or she (1) customarily and regularly exercised discretion and independent judgment;ⁿ¹⁵¹ (2)(a) regularly and directly assisted a proprietor or an employee employed in a bona fide executive or administrative capacity; or (b) performed, under only general supervision, specialized or technical work requiring special training, experience, or knowledge; or (c) executed under only general supervision special assignments and tasks;ⁿ¹⁵² and (3) devoted no more than 20 percent of the hours in a workweek to other activities, or, in the case of an employee of a retail or service establishment, no more than 40 percent of the hours in a workweek to other activities.ⁿ¹⁵³ⁿ¹⁵⁴

In Bothell v. Phase Metrics, Inc., decided under the former DOL regulations,ⁿ¹⁵⁷ the Ninth Circuit examined the exempt status of a field service engineer for a company that designed, manufactured, and sold robotic test and inspection equipment for the data storage industry. The employee worked with only one of the employer's clients, and the parties disputed whether the customer service he provided was "administrative," so as to exempt him from the wage and overtime requirements of the FLSA. Under the "primary duty" prong of the "short test," the court found that the customer service activities he performed went to the heart of the employer's marketplace offerings, not to the internal administration of its business or that of its client for whom he provided the service.ⁿ¹⁵⁸ Under the "substantial importance" prong, because the record could support the conclusion that the employee was essentially a highly skilled repairman, it was premature to conclude at the summary judgment stage that his work was "substantially important" to the management or operation of either the employer or its client.ⁿ¹⁵⁹ Under the "discretion and independent judgment prong," the court found that there were genuine issues of fact regarding the extent to which the employee was permitted to make decisions and the importance of the decisions over which he had control.ⁿ¹⁶⁰

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

In Bothell v. Phase Metrics, Inc., ⁿ¹⁶¹ the Ninth Circuit rendered two holdings of critical importance to the analysis of the administrative exemption. First, it held that the regulatory mandate that an employee perform duties related to the general business operations of an employer or an employer's customers includes the requirement that the employee play a role in "running the business itself or determining its overall course or policies." Whether this interpretation raises the bar for finding exempt administrative status depends upon whether the phrase "running the business itself" is the functional equivalent of its counterpart phrase ("or determining its overall course or policies") or something less difficult to satisfy. Plaintiffs will argue that the Ninth Circuit has rendered the administrative exemption available only to a small number of highly-placed managers. Defendants will argue that the executive exemption already covers most highly-placed managers and that the administrative exemption must encompass supervisors and managers at the lower end of the organizational hierarchy.

Second, Bothell held that the administrative/production dichotomy does not set an absolute bar to a finding of administrative status, as a California Court of Appeal held in Bell v. Farmers Insurance Group. Rather, the administrative/production distinction "should only be employed as a tool towards answering the ultimate question, whether work is directly related to management policies or business operations, not as an end in itself." Because both federal and state case law analysis of this dichotomy find their source in the same passage from the Code of Federal Regulations, this split of authority leaves practitioners (both plaintiffs and defendants) with competing arguments, but no clear resolution of their dispute. Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

[iv] Professional Capacity

Generally

Under the new DOL regulations, employees are exempt as "employed in a bona fide professional capacity" if (1) they are compensated on a salary or fee basis at a rate of not less than $455 per week, exclusive of board, lodging, or other facilities; and (2) their primary duty is the performance of work (i) requiring knowledge of an advanced type in a field of science or learning customarily acquired by a prolonged course of specialized intellectual instruction; or (ii) requiring invention, imagination, originality or talent in a recognized field of artistic or creative endeavor.¹⁶² The new DOL regulations thus retain the distinction between "learned" and "artistic" professionals.

Learned Professionals

To qualify for the learned professional exemption, an employee's primary duty must be the performance of work requiring advanced knowledge in a field of science or learning customarily acquired by a prolonged course of specialized intellectual instruction.¹⁶³ This primary duty test includes three elements: (1) the employee must perform work requiring advanced knowledge; (2) the advanced knowledge must be in a field of science or learning; and (3) the advanced knowledge must be customarily acquired by a prolonged course of specialized intellectual instruction.¹⁶⁴

The phrase "work requiring advanced knowledge" means work which¹⁶⁵ is predominantly intellectual in character, and which includes work requiring the consistent exercise of discretion and judgment, as distinguished from performance of routine mental, manual, mechanical or physical work. An employee who performs work requiring advanced knowledge generally uses the advanced knowledge to analyze, interpret or make deductions from varying facts or circumstances. Advanced knowledge cannot be attained at the high school level.¹⁶⁶ The phrase "field of science or learning" includes the traditional professions of law, medicine, theology, accounting, actuarial computation, engineering, architecture, teaching, various types of physical, chemical and biological sciences, pharmacy and other similar occupations that have a recognized professional status, as distinguished from the mechanical arts or skilled trades where in some instances the knowledge is of a fairly advanced type, but is not in a field of science or learning.¹⁶⁷

The phrase "customarily acquired by a prolonged course of specialized instruction" restricts the exemption to professions where specialized academic training is a standard prerequisite for entrance into the profession. The best prima facie evidence that an employee meets this requirement is possession of the appropriate academic degree. However, the word "customarily" means that the exemption is also available to employees in such professions who have substantially the same knowledge level and perform substantially the same work as the degreed employees, but who attained the advanced knowledge through a combination of work experience and intellectual instruction. Thus, for example, the learned professional exemption is available to the occasional lawyer who has not gone to law school, or the occasional chemist who is not the possessor of a degree in chemistry. However, the learned professional exemption is not available for occupations that customarily may be performed with only the general knowledge acquired by an academic degree in any field, with knowledge acquired through an apprenticeship, or with training in the performance of routine mental, manual, mechanical or physical processes. The learned professional exemption also does not apply to occupations in which most employees have acquired their skill by experience rather than by advanced specialized intellectual instruction.n168

The regulations provide examples of jobs that the DOL deems to meet or not meet the requirements for the learned professional exemption. Specifically, the regulations discuss the circumstances under which registered or certified medical technologists, nurses, dental hygienists, physician assistants, accountants, chefs, paralegals, athletic trainers and funeral directors may qualify for the exemption.n169

Creative Professionals

To qualify for the creative professional exemption, an employee's primary duty must be the performance of work requiring invention, imagination, originality or talent in a recognized field of artistic or creative endeavor as opposed to routine mental, manual, mechanical or physical work. The exemption does not apply to work which can be produced by a person with general manual or intellectual ability and training.n170 The work must be "in a recognized field of artistic or creative endeavor." This includes such fields as music, writing, acting and the graphic arts.n171

The requirement of "invention, imagination, originality or talent" distinguishes the creative professions from work that primarily depends on intelligence, diligence and accuracy. The duties of employees vary widely, and exemption as a creative professional depends on the extent of the invention, imagination, originality or talent exercised by the employee. Determination of exempt status, therefore, must be made on a case-by-case basis. This requirement generally is met by actors, musicians, composers, conductors, and soloists; painters who at most are given the subject matter of their painting; cartoonists who are merely told the title or underlying concept of a cartoon and must rely on their own creative ability to express the concept; essayists, novelists, short-story writers and screen play writers who choose their own subjects and hand in a finished piece of work to their employers; and persons holding the more responsible writing positions in advertising agencies. This requirement generally is not met by a person who is employed as a copyist, as an "animator" of motion-picture cartoons, or as a retoucher of photographs, since such work is not properly described as creative in character.n172

Journalists may satisfy the duties requirements for the creative professional exemption if their primary duty is work requiring invention, imagination, originality or talent, as opposed to work which depends primarily on intelligence, diligence and accuracy. Employees of newspapers, magazines, television and other media are not exempt creative professionals if they only collect, organize and record information that is routine or already public, or if they do not contribute a unique interpretation or analysis to a news product. Thus, for example, newspaper reporters who merely rewrite press releases or who write standard recounts of public information by gathering facts on routine community events are not exempt creative professionals. Reporters also do not qualify as exempt creative professionals if their work product is subject to substantial control by the employer. However, journalists may qualify as exempt creative professionals if their primary duty is performing on the air in radio, television or other electronic media; conducting investigative interviews; analyzing or interpreting public events; writing editorials, opinion columns or other commentary; or acting as a narrator or commentator.n173

Teachers

The professional exemption also applies to any employee whose primary duty is teaching, tutoring, instructing or lecturing in the activity of imparting knowledge and who is employed and engaged in this activity as a teacher in an educational establishment.^{173.1} by which the employee is employed.^{173.2} The exemption applies whether or not teachers meet the salary requirements or the other criteria required for other learned or creative professionals generally, as discussed above.^{173.3}

Practice of Law or Medicine

The professional exemption also applies to any employee who is the holder of (1) a valid license or certificate permitting the practice of law or medicine or any of their branches and is actually engaged in the practice thereof; or (2) the requisite academic degree for the general practice of medicine and is engaged in an internship or resident program pursuant to the practice of the profession.^{173.4} This exemption applies whether or not the employee meets the salary requirements or the other criteria required for other learned or creative professionals generally, as outlined above.^{173.5}

In the case of medicine, the exemption applies to physicians and other practitioners licensed and practicing in the field of medical science and healing or any of the medical specialties practiced by physicians or practitioners. The term "physicians" includes medical doctors including general practitioners and specialists, osteopathic physicians, podiatrists, dentists, and optometrists.^{173.6} Employees engaged in internship or resident programs, whether or not licensed to practice prior to commencement of the program, qualify as exempt professionals if they enter such internship or resident programs after the earning of the appropriate degree required for the general practice of their profession.^{173.7}

Veterinarians may fall within the professional exemption for physicians and other practitioners.^{173.8}

Computer Professionals

The professional exemption also applies to salaried or hourly-paid computer systems analysts, computer programmers, software engineers, and other similarly skilled employees who meet certain requirements.¹⁷⁴ First, the employee's primary duty must be one of the following;¹⁷⁵

1. The application of systems analysis techniques and procedures, including consulting with users, to determine hardware, software, or system functional specifications;
2. The design, development, documentation, analysis, creation, testing, or modification of computer systems or programs, including prototypes, based on and related to user or system design modifications;
3. The design, documentation, testing, creation, or modification of computer programs related to machine operating systems; or
4. A combination of the above duties, the performance of which requires the same level of skills.

Second, in the case of an hourly employee, the employee must be compensated at a rate of at least $27.63 per hour.¹⁷⁶ In the case of a salaried employee, the employee must earn a salary of at least $455 per week.¹⁷⁷ No particular license, certification, or academic degree is required for this exemption, but it is unavailable to trainees or employees in entry-level positions.¹⁷⁸ The exemption does not apply to employees who operate computers, employees who manufacture, repair, or maintain computer hardware or related equipment, or employees whose work is highly dependent on, or facilitated by, the use of computers but who are not engaged in computer systems analysis and programming occupations.^{178.1}

As discussed previously,¹⁷⁹ the professional exemption under the California wage orders is narrower than the federal exemption.¹⁸⁰ Moreover, California has a wage order expressly covering most nonexempt "professionals."^{180.1} Therefore, even if the employee satisfies the requirements for the "professional capacity" exemption under the FLSA, the employer will be required to comply with minimum wage and overtime requirements under California law, unless the employee qualifies for some other exemption, such as that for executives or administrators.

Professional Capacity under Former Regulations

Under the FLSA's old "short test," an employee was deemed exempt as employed in a bona fide professional capacity if the following criteria were met:^{n180.2}

1. He or she was compensated on a salary or fee basis at a rate of not less than $250 per week (exclusive of board, lodging, or other facilities); and
2. His or her primary duty
 - a. Included work requiring the consistent exercise of discretion and judgment,^{n180.3} and consisted of (i) the performance of work requiring advanced knowledge in a field of science or learning customarily acquired by a prolonged course of specialized intellectual instruction and study (as distinguished from a general academic education, apprenticeship, or training in routine mental, manual, or physical processes); or (ii) teaching, tutoring, instructing, or lecturing as an employee of a school system or educational establishment or institution; or
 - b. Consisted of the performance of work requiring invention, imagination, or talent in a recognized field of artistic endeavor.

Under the former "long test," an employee who was compensated on a salary or fee basis at a rate of less than $250 per week, but at least $170 per week,^{n180.4} was exempt as a professional if

1. His or her primary duty consisted of (a) work requiring advanced knowledge, as described in paragraph 2(a), above, or (b) work that was original and creative in character in a recognized field of artistic endeavor (as opposed to work that could be produced by a person endowed with general manual or intellectual ability and training) and the result of which depended primarily on the invention, imagination, or talent of the employee, or (c) teaching, tutoring, instructing, or lecturing as an employee of a school system or educational establishment or institution;^{n180.5}
2. His or her work required the consistent exercise of discretion and judgment in its performance;^{n180.6}
3. The work was predominantly intellectual and varied in character (as opposed to routine mental, manual, mechanical, or physical work) and was of such character that the output produced or result accomplished could not be standardized in relation to a given period of time;^{n180.7} and
4. The employee devoted no more than 20 percent of his or her workweek to activities that were not an essential part of, and necessarily incident to, the work described above.^{n180.8}

The requirement of a minimum salary of $170 per week did not apply to an employee (1) who held a license or certificate permitting the practice of law or medicine and who was actually engaged in that practice, (2) who held the requisite medical degree and who was engaged in an internship or residency, or (3) who was employed as a teacher.^{n180.9}

[v] Highly Compensated Employees

An employee with total annual compensation of at least $100,000 is deemed exempt under the executive, administrative or professional exemptions if the employee customarily and regularly performs any one or more of the exempt duties or responsibilities of an executive, administrative or professional employee identified in the applicable DOL regulations.¹⁸¹

"Total annual compensation" must include at least $455 per week on a salary or fee basis,^{181.1} and it also may include commissions, nondiscretionary bonuses and other nondiscretionary compensation earned during a 52-week period.^{181.2} If an employee's total annual compensation does not total at least $100,000 by the last pay period of the 52-week period, the employer may, during the last pay period or within one month after the end of the 52-week period, make one final payment sufficient to achieve the required level.^{181.3}

An employee who does not work a full year for the employer, either because the employee is newly hired after the beginning of the year or ends the employment before the end of the year, may qualify for exemption under these highly-compensated-employee provisions if the employee receives a pro rata portion of the required $100,000 minimum, based upon the number of weeks that the employee will be or has been employed.^{181.4} The employer may utilize any 52-week period as the year, such as a calendar year, a fiscal year, or an anniversary of hire year. If the employer does not identify some other year period in advance, the calendar year will apply.^{181.5}

[vi] Salary Basis

In most cases, as discussed above, an employee must be paid on a salary basis to qualify for exemption under the executive, administrative or professional exemptions.^{181.6} In general, an employee will be considered to be paid on a "salary basis" if the employee regularly receives each pay period on a weekly, or less frequent basis, a predetermined amount constituting all or part of his or her compensation, which amount is not subject to reduction because of variations in the quality or quantity of the work performed.^{181.7} Thus, subject to certain exceptions enumerated in the regulations, an employee must receive the full salary for any week in which he or she performs any work without regard to the number of days or hours worked.^{181.8} Exempt employees need not be paid for any workweek in which they perform no work. However, an employee is not paid on a salary basis if the employer makes deductions from the employee's predetermined compensation for absences occasioned by the employer or by the operating requirements of the business. If the employee is ready, willing and able to work, deductions may not be made for time when work is not available.^{181.9}

The DOL regulations list the following seven exceptions to the general prohibition against deductions from salary in increments of less than a full workweek:

(1) An employer may make deductions from pay in full-day increments when an exempt employee is absent from work for one or more full days for personal reasons, other than sickness or disability.^{181.10}

(2) An employer may make salary deductions in full-day increments for absences of one or more full days occasioned by sickness or disability (including work-related accidents) if it makes the deduction in accordance with a bona fide plan, policy or practice of providing compensation for less of salary occasioned by such sickness or disability. The employer is not required to pay any portion of the employee's salary for full-day absences for which the employee receives compensation under the plan, policy or practice. It may deduct for such full-day absences even though the employee has not yet qualified for benefits under the plan, policy or practice, and after the employee has exhausted the leave allowance thereunder. Similarly, an employer may make deductions from pay for absence of one or more full days if salary replacement benefits are provided under a state disability insurance law or workers' compensation law.^{181.11}

(3) An employer may not make deductions from pay in less than full-week increments for absences occasioned by jury duty, attendance as a witness or temporary military leave, but can offset any amounts that the employee received as jury fees, witness fees or military pay for a particular week against the salary due for that particular week.n181.12

(4) An employer may make deductions from pay for penalties imposed in good faith for infractions of safety rules of major significance. Safety rules of major significance include those relating to the prevention of serious danger in the workplace or to other employees, such as rules prohibiting smoking in explosive plants, oil refineries and coal mines.n181.13

(5) An employer may make salary deductions for unpaid disciplinary suspensions of one or more full days imposed in good faith for infractions of workplace conduct rules, but only if it imposes the suspension pursuant to a written policy applicable to all employees. Thus, for example, an employer may suspend an exempt employee without pay for three days for violating a generally applicable written policy prohibiting sexual harassment, or for 12 days for violating a generally applicable written policy prohibiting workplace violence.n181.14

(6) An employer is not required to pay the full salary in the initial or terminal week of an employee's employment. Rather, it may pay a proportionate part of the employee's full salary for the time that the employee actually worked in the first and last week of employment, based on an hourly or daily equivalent of the employee's full salary.n181.15

(7) An employer is not required to pay the full salary for weeks in which an exempt employee takes unpaid leave under the Family and Medical Leave Act. Rather, when an exempt employee takes unpaid leave under the FMLA, the employer may pay a proportionate part of the full salary for the time that the employee actually worked. For example, if an employee who normally works 40 hours per week uses four hours of unpaid FMLA leave, the employer could deduct 10 percent of the employee's normal salary that week.n181.16

The effect of making an improper salary deduction, depending on the circumstances, is loss of the employee's exempt status and possibly that of other exempt employees in the same job classification. Specifically, according to the DOL regulations, an employer who makes improper deductions from salary will lose the exemption if the facts demonstrate that the employer "did not intend to pay employees on a salary basis."n181.17 An actual practice of making improper deductions demonstrates that the employer did not intend to pay employees on a salary basis. The factors to consider when determining whether an employer has an actual practice of making improper deductions, according to the regulations, include, but are not limited to: the number of improper deductions, particularly as compared to the number of employee infractions warranting discipline; the time period during which the employer made improper deductions; the number and geographic location of employees whose salary was improperly reduced; the number and geographic location of managers responsible for taking the improper deductions; and whether the employer has a clearly communicated policy permitting or prohibiting improper deductions.n181.18

The regulations provide that if the facts demonstrate that the employer has an actual practice of making improper deductions, the exemption is lost during the time period in which the improper deductions were made for employees in the same job classification working for the same managers responsible for the actual improper deductions. Employees in different job classifications or who work for different managers do not lose their status as exempt employees. Thus, for example, if a manager at a company facility routinely docks the pay of engineers at that facility for partial-day personal absences, then all engineers at that facility whose pay could have been improperly docked by the manager would lose the exemption; engineers at other facilities or working for other managers, however, would remain exempt.n181.19 Improper deductions that are either isolated or inadvertent will not result in loss of the exemption for any employees subject to such improper deductions, if the employer reimburses the employees for such improper

The new regulations contain a "safe harbor" by which employers may protect themselves against continuing liability as a result of making one or more improper salary deductions under the DOL's salary basis rules. Specifically, if an employer (1) has a clearly communicated policy that prohibits the improper pay deductions specified in the regulations, (2) includes a complaint mechanism in the policy, (3) reimburses employees for any improper deductions, and (4) makes a good faith commitment to comply in the future, such employer will not lose the exemption for any employees unless the employer "willfully" violates the policy by continuing to make improper deductions after receiving employee complaints.n181.21 According to the regulations, if an employer fails to reimburse employees for any improper deductions or continues to make improper deductions after receiving employee complaints, the exemption is lost during the time period in which the improper deductions were made for employees in the same job classification working for the same managers responsible for the actual improper deductions.n181.22 The regulations state that the best evidence of a "clearly communicated policy" is a written policy that the employer distributed to employees prior to the improper pay deductions by, for example, providing a copy of the policy to employees at the time of hire, publishing the policy in an employee handbook or publishing the policy on the employer's intranet.n181.23

The DOL regulations clarify that an employer is permitted to provide exempt employees with additional compensation beyond the guaranteed minimum salary of at least $455 per week, and doing so will not cause the employees to lose their exempt status. Thus, for example, if an employer guarantees an exempt employee at least $455 each week paid on a salary basis and also pays additional compensation based on hours worked beyond the normal workweek, the employer does not thereby lose the right to classify the employee as exempt.n181.24 The same is true if the employer pays the additional compensation by commissions, percentage of the profits, bonus, or any other basis, including paid time off.n181.25

[c] Outside Sales Employees

Persons employed in the capacity of outside sales employees are exempt from the minimum wage and overtime provisions of the FLSA.n182 The definition of an employee employed in the capacity of an outside salesperson is set forth in detail in the regulations.n183 Broadly defined,n184 an outside salesperson is an employee whose primary duty is making salesn185 or obtaining orders or contracts for services or the use of facilities,n186 and who is customarily and regularly engaged away from the employer's place or places of businessn187 in performing such primary duty. The new regulations have removed the former requirement that, to be exempt, the employee's hours spent doing other work not exceed 20 percent of the hours worked in the workweek by nonexempt employees of the employers.n188 Work that is performed incidental to and in conjunction with the employee's own outside sales or solicitations, including incidental deliveries and collections, are not regarded as nonexempt work for this purpose.n189

Special considerations apply to drivers who deliver the employer's products and also perform functions concerned with the selling of these products. If it appears that the drivers' primary duty is to engage in selling activity, the exemption for outside salespersons may apply.n190 The regulations also contain detailed provisions concerning the effect of promotional work on an employee's status as an outside salesperson.n191

Note that the definition of an outside salesperson under the FLSA and federal regulations differs in some respects from the definition set forth in the California wage orders, particularly with regard to the amount and nature of nonexempt work permitted.n192 Sales personnel must meet the criteria under both definitions to qualify as exempt from minimum wage and overtime requirements.

[d] Reserved

[e] Employees of Seasonal Recreational Establishments

Employees of certain seasonal amusement or recreational establishments, organized camps, or religious nonprofit education conference centers are exempt from federal minimum wage and overtime provisions. Employees of private entities serving national parks, forests, or wildlife refuges are not exempt, except that employees of ski-related facilities remain exempt with respect to minimum wages.ⁿ¹⁹³ There is no comparably broad exemption under California law, although there are a few, narrower exemptions.ⁿ¹⁹⁴

[f] Other Exemptions

The FLSA contains several other exemptions, listed below. Note that many of these exemptions do not have counterparts under the California wage orders. Thus, many of these employees will be entitled to minimum wages and overtime, pursuant to California law. Other employees who are exempt from the federal minimum wage and overtime provisions are as follows:

1. Employees employed in certain fishing operations, or in the processing of marine products in conjunction with those fishing operations;ⁿ¹⁹⁵
2. Certain employees employed in agriculture, including those employed by an employer who used less than 500 man-days of agricultural labor during the preceding year, certain relatives of the employer, hand harvesters under specified conditions, and employees principally engaged in the range production of livestock;ⁿ¹⁹⁶
3. Employees exempted by regulation, order, or certificate issued under Title 29 United States Code section 214;ⁿ¹⁹⁷
4. Employees employed in connection with the publication of certain small, local newspapers;ⁿ¹⁹⁸
5. Switchboard operators employed by an independently owned public telephone company that has not more than 750 stations;ⁿ¹⁹⁹
6. Seamen on a foreign vessel;ⁿ²⁰⁰
7. Employees employed on a casual basis in domestic service employment to provide babysitting services or companionship services for individuals unable, due to age or infirmity, to care for themselves;ⁿ²⁰¹
8. Criminal investigators who are paid "availability pay" under Title 5, United States Code, section 5545a;ⁿ²⁰²
9. Employees engaged in the delivery of newspapers to consumers, or homeworkers engaged in the making of evergreen wreaths;ⁿ²⁰³ and
10. Employees whose services are performed in a foreign country or certain territories under the jurisdiction of the United States.ⁿ²⁰⁴

Postal inspectors may be exempt from the overtime requirements of the FLSA.ⁿ²⁰⁵

[g] Employment of Students by Elementary or Secondary Schools

The Secretary of Labor may by regulation or order provide that the minimum wage and overtime provisions of the FLSA do not apply to the employment by any elementary or secondary school of its students if that employment constitutes an integral part of the regular education program provided by the school and is in accordance with applicable child labor laws.ⁿ²⁰⁶ The Secretary to date has not promulgated any regulations implementing this exemption.

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS
CHAPTER 2 Minimum Wages
Part A. MINIMUM WAGE REQUIREMENTS

1-2 California Employment Law § 2.05

AUTHOR: By Carol S. Sanders, J.D.

§ 2.05 Employees Who May Be Paid Subminimum Wage

[1] California Law

[a] Apprentices and Learners

For any occupation in which a minimum wage has been established, the IWC is authorized by statute to issue to an apprentice or learner a special license authorizing employment of that apprentice or learner for the time and under the conditions that the IWC determines, and at a less than minimum wage. The IWC must fix a special wage for such apprentices or learners.ⁿ¹ The IWC may also fix the maximum number of employees to be employed under the license in any occupation, trade, industry, or establishment in which a minimum wage has been established.ⁿ²

Pursuant to its statutory authorization, the IWC has provided in its wage orders that employees who are "learners" may be paid not less than 85 percent of the minimum wage rounded to the nearest nickel (or $5.30 per hour based on the current minimum wage) during the first 160 hours of employment in occupations in which the learner has no previous similar or related experience.ⁿ³ Effective January 1, 2002, the minimum amount that employers may pay to learners is $5.75.ⁿ⁴ Although the IWC has eliminated the subminimum wage provisions for minors, it has amended the learners provisions of the wage orders to include minors.ⁿ⁵ In its Statement of Basis for the establishment of subminimum wages for learners, the IWC noted that learners usually are not as productive as experienced employees and that the subminimum wage increases job opportunities for persons new to the labor market.

As noted previously,ⁿ⁶ apprentices regularly indentured under State Division of Apprenticeship standards are completely exempt from the minimum wage provisions of the all wage orders other than Wage Order No. 16-2001.ⁿ⁷

The DLSE has stated that the learner's provision must be strictly construed, and that employers may pay learners' rate only to those learners who have no previous similar or related experience.ⁿ⁸ The DLSE has stated that before paying the learner's rate, an employer is responsible for determining whether the employee has any such previous similar or related experience, and that the employee's unfamiliarity with the employer's systems or procedures is sufficient to permit use of the rate.ⁿ⁹ The burden is on the employer to demonstrate these facts to avoid assessment and payment of the full minimum wage.ⁿ¹⁰

Neither the Employment Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA)ⁿ¹¹ nor the National Labor Management Relations Act (NLRA)ⁿ¹² preempts the application of California's apprenticeship prevailing wage lawⁿ¹³ that requires payment of prevailing wages to employees in apprenticeship programs that have not received state approval, but allows payment of lower apprenticeship wages to employees participating in state-approved apprenticeship programs.ⁿ¹⁴

For discussion of the federal provisions for subminimum wages for learners, students, and apprentices, see [2][a], below. Note that the federal provisions for learners are not identical to the California provisions in that they are limited to specific industries and in many cases provide for a longer learning period and a lower subminimum wage than permitted by the California wage order provisions. Furthermore, the federal subminimum wage for learners may not be paid unless the employer first applies for and obtains a special certificate.ⁿ¹⁵ Because of the differences and inconsistencies between the requirements under state and federal laws, a California employer that is subject to the FLSA and desires to pay a subminimum wage for learners must make sure that it has taken the necessary steps to comply with both laws.ⁿ¹⁶ For example, an employer subject to both laws may pay 18-year-olds and 19-year-olds the learner rate either for the first 90 consecutive calendar days or for the first 160 work hours, whichever occurs earlier; and that employee must be working for that employer for the first time and must not have previous similar or related work experience.ⁿ¹⁷ For discussion of the requirements of the federal training wage, see [2][e], below.

[b] Minors

For the purposes of the wage orders, "minor" means any person under the age of 18 years.ⁿ¹⁸ In its Statement as to the Basis for the General Minimum Wage Order, MW-2001, the IWC announced the elimination of the previous exemption of minors from the minimum wage provisions of the wage orders.ⁿ¹⁹ The IWC also amended the partial exemption for learners to include minors.ⁿ²⁰

The FLSA provides a subminimum "opportunity wage" for employees under age 20 during the first 90 consecutive calendar days after the employee is initially employed.ⁿ²¹

For additional discussion of child labor restrictions, see Chapter 6.

[c] Mentally or Physically Disabled Persons

[i] Individual Licenses

For any occupation in which a minimum wage has been established, the IWC is authorized by statute to issue to an employee who is mentally or physically disabled, or both, a special license authorizing the employment of the licensee for a period not to exceed one year from the date of the license's issuance, at a wage less than the legal minimum wage. The IWC must fix the special minimum wage for the licensee.ⁿ²² The license may be renewed on a yearly basis.ⁿ²³ The IWC is authorized to fix the maximum number of disabled employees to be employed under these licenses in any occupation, trade, industry, or establishment in which a minimum wage has been established.ⁿ²⁴

Pursuant to its statutory authority, the IWC has promulgated orders empowering the DLSE to issue licenses authorizing employment of a person whose earning capacity is impaired by physical disability or mental deficiency at subminimum wages.ⁿ²⁵ The licenses may be granted only on joint application of the employer and employee and the employee's representative, if any, and must be renewed on a yearly basis, or more frequently at the discretion of the DLSE.ⁿ²⁶ The wage orders do not specify the subminimum wages to be paid to disabled workers pursuant to such licenses or the criteria for granting such licenses.

For discussion of the provisions for subminimum wages for disabled employees under the FLSA, see [2][d], below.

[ii] Organizational Licenses

The IWC is empowered to issue a special license to a nonprofit organization such as a sheltered workshop or rehabilitation facility to permit employment at subminimum wages of employees who have been determined by the IWC to be mentally or physically disabled, or both, without requiring individual licenses of such employees, notwithstanding the provisions of Labor Code section 1191 (governing issuance of licenses to individual disabled employees).ⁿ²⁷ The IWC must fix a special minimum rate for these employees.ⁿ²⁸ The IWC has delegated this authority to the DLSE.ⁿ²⁹ The special license for the nonprofit corporation must be renewed on a yearly basis, or more frequently, as determined by the IWC or the DLSE.ⁿ³⁰ The IWC may fix the maximum number of employees to be employed under an organizational license.ⁿ³¹

For discussion of the provisions for subminimum wages for disabled employees under the FLSA, see [2][d], below.

[d] Student Employees and Counselors in Camps

Labor Code section 1182.4 provides that no student employee, camp counselor, or program counselor of an organized camp may be subject to a minimum wage or overtime provision of a wage order if that employee or counselor receives a weekly salary of at least 85 percent of the minimum wage for a 40-hour week,ⁿ³² regardless of the number of hours per week that the student employee or counselor actually works at the organized camp.ⁿ³³ However, if the employee works less than 40 hours a week, he or she must be paid at 85 percent of the hourly minimum wage for each hour worked.ⁿ³⁴

The camp may deduct the value of meals and lodging from the employee's salary in accordance with the requirements of the wage orders.ⁿ³⁵

An "organized camp" for purposes of Labor Code section 1182.4 means a site with programs and facilities established for the primary purposes of providing an outdoor group living experience with social, spiritual, educational, or religious objectives, for five days or more during one or more seasons of the year,ⁿ³⁶ and which meets the standards of the American Camping Association.ⁿ³⁷ The term does not include a motel, tourist camp, trailer park, resort, hunting camp, auto court, labor camp, penal or correctional camp, child care institution, or homefinding agency.ⁿ³⁸ The term also does not include any charitable or recreational organization that complies with rules and regulations for recreational trailer parks.ⁿ³⁹

[2] Federal Law[a] Generally

Under regulations and orders promulgated by the Secretary of Labor pursuant to the FLSA, the categories of employees discussed in [b]-[d] below, may be employed under special certificates at wages lower than the federal minimum wage, to the extent necessary to prevent curtailment of opportunities for employment.ⁿ⁴⁰ In addition, by statutory amendment to the FLSA, a subminimum "opportunity wage," discussed in [e], below, has been created for workers under 20 years old during the first 90 consecutive calendar days after that employee is initially employed.ⁿ⁴¹

[b] Learners, Apprentices, and Messengers[i] Generally

Learners, apprentices, and messengers employed primarily in delivering letters and messages may be employed under special certificates issued pursuant to regulations of the Secretary of Labor at wages lower than the regular minimum wage and subject to limitations as to time, number, proportion, and length of service.ⁿ⁴²

[ii] Student-Learners

A student-learner is a student who is receiving instruction in an accredited school, college, or university, and who is employed on a part-time basis under a bona fide vocational training program administered by the school, college or university.ⁿ⁴³ A student-learner generally must be at least 16 years of age, and must be 18 years of age if he or she is to be employed in certain hazardous occupations.ⁿ⁴⁴

A student-learner may be employed at a subminimum wage only under a special certificate issued by the Wage and Hour Division pursuant to the procedures set forth in the regulations.ⁿ⁴⁵ The certificate may not be issued retroactively.ⁿ⁴⁶ Application for a special certificate must be made on the official form available from the appropriate regional office of the Wage and Hour Division, and must be signed by the employer, the appropriate school official, and the student learner.ⁿ⁴⁷ Note that the California wage orders do not contain a subminimum wage provision for student-learners.

For discussion of the subminimum wage provisions for minors under the California wage orders, see [1][b], above.

[iii] Apprentices

Under the FLSA, an "apprentice" means a worker at least 16 years of age, except when a higher minimum age standard is otherwise fixed by law, who is employed to learn a skilled trade.ⁿ⁴⁸ Special certificates may be issued to employers or joint apprenticeship committees authorizing the employment of apprentices in skilled trades at wages lower than the prevailing minimum wage under federal law.ⁿ⁴⁹ To obtain a special certificate, the employer or joint apprenticeship committee must have the apprenticeship agreement registered by the appropriate recognized apprenticeship agency and then submit the agreement to the Wage and Hour Division for a determination regarding whether the agreement meets the requirements set forth in the regulations.ⁿ⁵⁰ If the Division finds that the agreement meets the requirements of the regulation, it will issue the special certificate, which specifies the terms and conditions under which it is granted, including the wage rate to be paid to the apprentice.ⁿ⁵¹

For discussion of the provisions of the California wage orders relating to apprentices, see § 2.04[1][d].

[iv] Learners

A "learner" under the FLSA is a worker whose total experience in an authorized learner occupation in the industry within the past three years is less than the period of time allowed as a learning period for that occupation in a learner certificate.ⁿ⁵²

An employer who wishes to utilize the federal subminimum wage for learners must apply for a special certificate on the official form furnished by the Wage and Hour Division.ⁿ⁵³ The certificate may not be issued retroactively.ⁿ⁵⁴

Certain conditions, intended to protect experienced workers, govern the issuance of the special certificates for employment of learners at subminimum wages. These include a showing by the employer that reasonable efforts have been made to recruit experienced workers, that the issuance of the certificate will not tend to create unfair competitive labor cost advantages, and that abnormal labor conditions such as a strike, lockout or other similar condition do not exist at the plant for which a learner certificate is requested.ⁿ⁵⁵

If learners are paid on a piece rate basis, they must be paid at least the same piece rate as experienced workers employed in the same plant for the same work, and must receive earnings based on these piece rates whenever the earnings exceed the subminimum rates permitted in the certificate.ⁿ⁵⁶

For discussion of the California wage order provisions for subminimum wages for learners, see [1][a], above.

[v] Messengers

Federal regulations provide that an application may be made to employ messengers to be engaged primarily in delivering letters and messages at a wage lower than the minimum wage applicable under federal law.ⁿ⁵⁷ There is no comparable provision under California law. In fact, messengers are expressly covered by the wage order governing the professional, technical, clerical, mechanical, and similar occupationsⁿ⁵⁸ and must be paid the California minimum wage unless some other exemption or partial exemption applies to the particular employee.

[c] Full-Time Students

Under the FLSA, full-time students employed in retail or service establishments,ⁿ⁵⁹ any occupation in agriculture,ⁿ⁶⁰ or in an institution of higher education in which they are enrolledⁿ⁶¹ may be employed at a wage rate not less than 85 per cent of the minimum wage.ⁿ⁶² The students may be employed at the subminimum wage regardless of age, but in compliance with applicable child labor laws.ⁿ⁶³

Restrictions apply to limit the weekly hours of employment to no more than 20, except during vacation periods,ⁿ⁶⁴ and, in the case of retail and service establishments and agricultural employment, to safeguard against the reduction of the full-time employment opportunities of employees other than full-time students employed under certificates.ⁿ⁶⁵

An employer wishing to employ a full-time student under the federal subminimum wage provision must apply for a special certificate on the official form available at the appropriate Regional Office of the Wage and Hour Division.ⁿ⁶⁶ A certificate may not be issued retroactively.ⁿ⁶⁷

[d] Disabled Workers in Competitive Industry

Special certificates may be issued for the employment of individuals whose earning or productive capacity is impaired by age, physical or mental deficiency, or injury at subminimum wages that are commensurate with wages paid to nondisabled workers employed in the same vicinity for essentially the same type of work, and related to the disabled individual's productivity.ⁿ⁶⁸ The employer must provide written assurances that he or she will review the subminimum wage rate at least every six months, and adjust the rate at least once a year to reflect the prevailing wage paid to experienced nondisabled individuals employed in the locality for essentially the same type of work.ⁿ⁶⁹ⁿ⁷⁰

An employee, or a parent or guardian on the employee's behalf, may petition the Secretary of Labor to obtain an administrative review of the special minimum wage rate set by the employer.ⁿ⁷¹

The 1986 amendments to Title 29 United States Code, section 214 eliminated prior provisions authorizing special certificates for payment of subminimum wages to workers in work activities centers (also known as sheltered workshops).ⁿ⁷² However, nothing in the amended statute may be construed to prohibit an employer from maintaining or establishing work activities centers to provide therapeutic activities for disabled clients.ⁿ⁷³

For discussion of the provisions for special licenses for employment of disabled individuals at subminimum wages under the California wage orders, see [1][c], above.

[e] Opportunity Wage

The Small Business Job Protection Act of 1996ⁿ⁷⁴ contains provisions for the establishment, as of October 1, 1996, of an "opportunity wage" for employees under the age of 20 during the first 90 consecutive calendar days after they are initially employed.ⁿ⁷⁵ This wage must be at least $4.25 per hour,ⁿ⁷⁶ and it is illegal for an employer to displace a current employee or reduce a current employee's work hours or benefits in order to pay the opportunity wage.ⁿ⁷⁷ The Department of Labor guidelines regarding the opportunity wage set forth the following points:ⁿ⁷⁸

1. The opportunity wage is not limited to only $4.25 per hour; any higher rate is permitted.
2. The $4.25 rate is specified in the statute and is not a percentage of the minimum wage. Thus, when the federal wage increased to $5.15 per hour on September 1, 1997, the minimum opportunity wage continued to be $4.25.
3. Each consecutive calendar day beginning with the first day of work, counts against the 90-day eligibility period, regardless of the actual days or hours worked. The day of the job offer or acceptance does not count unless work begins on that day. The 90-day period runs even if the employee comes off payroll during that period.
4. Employment prior to October 1, 1996, counts toward the 90-day period. If, as of October 1, 1996, an employer was beyond 90 calendar days into employment, he or she was ineligible for the opportunity wage from that employer.
5. An eligible youth is "initially employed" only once by any particular employer, but may be initially employed by more than one employer. Simultaneous employment by two separate (but not joint) employers does not affect eligibility.
6. A person already employed at a rate higher than $4.25 and otherwise eligible for the opportunity wage may not have his or her wage reduced to $4.25, since that would constitute an unlawful partial displacement.
7. The opportunity wage is a permanent part of the FLSA and is not scheduled to expire (like the prior "training wage," which expired in 1993).
8. Payment of the opportunity wage does not require a special federal certificate or other prior approval by the U.S. Department of Labor, nor does it have any training requirements or other limitations other than those described.

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS
CHAPTER 2 Minimum Wages
Part A. MINIMUM WAGE REQUIREMENTS

1-2 California Employment Law § 2.06

AUTHOR: By Carol S. Sanders, J.D.

§ 2.06 Other Applications of Minimum Wage Law

[1] Split-Shift and Reporting Time Premiums Under California Law

[a] Split-Shift Premium

A "split shift" means a work schedule that is interrupted by nonpaid nonworking periods established by the employer, other than bona fide rest or meal periods.ⁿ¹ An interruption initiated by the employee for personal reasons does not constitute a split shift, because it is not established by the employer.

All of the industry and occupation wage orders except Wage Order 16-2001 (construction, drilling, logging and mining occupations) require that when an employee works a split shift, one hour's pay at the minimum wageⁿ² must be paid in addition to the minimum wage for that workday, except when the employee resides at the place of employment.ⁿ⁴

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

The split-shift premium must be paid in addition to the minimum wage for the day, not in addition to whatever regular rate is paid. If the wage rate is higher than the applicable minimum wage, the excess over the minimum wage is credited toward the split-shift premium. Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

[b] Reporting Time Pay

All of the wage orders promote proper notice and scheduling of work by employers by mandating reporting time pay when an employee is required to report to work and does report, but is either not put to work, or is furnished less than half his or her usual or scheduled day's work.ⁿ⁵ In such cases, the employee must be paid for half the usual or scheduled day's work, but in no event for less than two hours nor more than four hours, of the employee's regular rate of pay.ⁿ⁶ which may not be less than the minimum wage.ⁿ⁷ In addition, all of the wage orders except Wage Order No. 16-2001 (construction, drilling, logging, and mining occupations) mandate that if the employee is required to report for work a second time in any one workday and is furnished less than two hours of work on the second reporting, the employee must be paid for two hours at the employee's regular rate of pay, which may not be less than the minimum wage. Alone among the wage orders, Wage Order 16-2001 contains a unique provision requiring that all employer-mandated travel occurring after the employee reports to his first work location must be compensated at the employee's regular rate of pay or any mandated applicable premium rate.ⁿ⁸ⁿ⁹

The reporting time pay provisions are not applicable under any of the following circumstances:ⁿ¹⁰

1. Operations cannot commence or continue because of threats to employees or property, or when recommended by civil authorities;
2. Public utilities fail to supply electricity, water, or gas, or there is a failure in the public utilities or sewer system; or
3. The interruption of work is caused by an Act of God or other cause not within the employer's control.

The reporting time pay provisions also do not apply to an employee on paid standby statusⁿ¹¹ who is called to perform assigned work at a time other than the employee's scheduled reporting time.ⁿ¹²

The DLSE has opined in a variety of situations involving the reporting time pay requirements:

- What the reporting time pay requirements are when an employee is told to report at a specific time and is then told that there is no work available at that time but that he or she is to report again, for example, two hours later. The language of the regulation requires that the applicable premium be paid if, at the first reporting of the day, the employee is not put to work or is provided less than one-half the scheduled or usual number of hours. This would be the result despite the fact that the employee might, eventually, work more than the scheduled hours in the day in a subsequent reporting. At the second reporting of the day, the same plain language of the regulation requires that in the event the employee is furnished with less than two hours of work, the employee is, nevertheless, entitled to recover two hours at the employee's regular rate of pay.ⁿ¹³ If the employee was not simply told to report later, but the employee's activities were restricted by the employer pending the second reporting time, the time spent would be compensable as waiting time.ⁿ¹⁴

- If an employee has no regularly scheduled shift, the employer must pay the usual shift worked, but in no event less than two or more than four hours. If an employee has a regularly contracted "scheduled" relief shift of less than two hours, the reporting time penalty is not applicable. However, the employee must be paid for the regularly scheduled contracted amount.ⁿ¹⁵

■ ILLUSTRATION:

Assume a worker is scheduled to work four days of two hours each and one day of one hour. The regularly contracted relief shifts are not subject to the reporting time penalty. This exception would not apply unless the shift is regularly scheduled and is less than two hours.ⁿ¹⁶

- How the reporting time requirements affect a situation in which the employer requires employees to attend a short training meeting, staff meeting or similar gathering.ⁿ¹⁷

■ ILLUSTRATION:

Assume the required meeting is scheduled for a day when the worker is not usually scheduled to work. The employer tells all of the workers that attendance at the meeting is mandatory and a one- or two-hour shift is "scheduled" for this meeting. Workers not "regularly scheduled" to work must be paid at least one-half of their usual or scheduled day's work. On the other hand, assume the required meeting is scheduled on the day a worker is scheduled to work, but after the worker's scheduled shift ends. If there is an unpaid hiatus between the end of the shift and the meeting, the employee must be paid at least two hours for reporting a second time in one day. If the meeting is scheduled to immediately follow the scheduled shift, there is no requirement to pay reporting time no matter how long the meeting continues.

■ Rain or other inclement weather that makes it impossible or unsafe to work falls into the category of an Act of God or other cause not within the employer's control, which does not require reporting time pay. If workers are sent home, either immediately on reporting to work or during the workday, because of rain or other inclement weather, there is no obligation to pay reporting time pay.ⁿ¹⁸

However, employees must be paid for all time they are restricted to the employer's premises or worksite while waiting out a delay caused by rain or other inclement weather, if they are not free to leave the premises during that time, even if the employees are relieved of all other duty while they are waiting for weather conditions to improve.ⁿ¹⁹ The employees must be paid their regular rate of compensation, which cannot be less than the minimum wage, or any overtime rate if applicable.ⁿ²⁰ Even if the employee is given some limited freedom to leave the employer's premises or worksite while waiting out a delay caused by rain or inclement weather, the employer still must pay the employee for the time if the employee is so restricted geographically and/or temporally that the employee is deprived of effective use of his or her own time.ⁿ²¹

■ ILLUSTRATION:

If a worker is told he can go across the street to a cafe during a rain delay, but he must report back to work within five minutes of being notified that work is starting, the entire time the worker is waiting in the cafe will constitute controlled stand-by time, which is treated as hours worked.ⁿ²²

[2] Piecework for Industrial Homeworkers Under California Law

Special regulations apply to persons employed as industrial homeworkers. They are considered employees and not independent contractors. They must be paid a piece rate sufficient to yield to workers in similar operations in the factory the legally established minimum wage.ⁿ²³

The DLSE has issued an interpretive bulletin stating that, by verbal or written agreement with the employee, the employer may not be obligated to pay for the cost or time required to repair a piece that was incorrectly made, for which the piece rate has already been paid, or to pay in whole or in part for a piece that is rejected as unsaleable. However, the total amount paid must be no less than the minimum wage for all hours worked. The employer is not required to pay separately for time spent in pickup or cleanup, or for company meetings at which attendance is compulsory. However, time spent in all these activities is considered work time and must be paid at a piece rate that results in total compensation of not less than minimum wage.ⁿ²⁴

[3] Employees Paid on Commission Basis

[a] California Law

Commission wages generally refer to compensation paid to a person for services rendered in the sale of the employer's property or services and based proportionately on the value of the property or services.ⁿ²⁵ Under the wage orders, the definition of "wages" means all amounts paid for labor performed by employees of every description, including, inter alia, amounts fixed by a commission basis.ⁿ²⁶

Under the wage orders, every employer must pay to each employee, on the established pay day for the period involved,ⁿ²⁷ not less than the minimum wage for all hours worked in the payroll period,ⁿ²⁸ whether the remuneration is paid by time, piece, commission, or otherwise.ⁿ²⁹ Thus, an employee who is paid on a commission basis, other than an outside salesperson who is wholly exempt from the minimum wage,ⁿ³⁰ must be paid an amount at least equal to the minimum wage for the hours worked during the pay period, even if the commissions actually earned during that period were less than this amount.

[b] Federal Law

Under the FLSA, commissions paid to employees must be sufficient to meet minimum wage requirements for hours worked during the pay period. Although the Wage and Hour Division's Field Operations Handbook states that commissions earned in excess of the minimum wage during a pay period may be carried over to satisfy the employer's minimum wage obligations for the next pay period,ⁿ³¹ one federal court of appeals has held that the employee must actually receive, during each pay period, an amount equal to the minimum wage for each hour worked during that period. An accounting entry crediting the employer for excess commissions earned by the employee during the previous pay period will not suffice.ⁿ³²

[4] Prevailing Rates for Employees of Government Contractors

[a] California Law

The Legislature and some local governments have adopted provisions requiring certain agencies and their contractors to pay employees no less than the prevailing wage rate for the work to be performed. Most prominent are the prevailing-rate requirements of Labor Code sections 1770 through 1774, applicable to construction work done under contract and paid in whole or in part out of public funds,ⁿ³³ or construction work done under private contract when more than 50 percent of the property is leased to the state or a political subdivision and other conditions are met.ⁿ³⁴ Workers on construction projects financed under the California Industrial Development Financing Act must also be paid no less than the general prevailing rate as determined in accordance with Labor Code Section 1773.ⁿ³⁵ However, the prevailing wage rate does not apply to contracts which are under the control of the federal government or its agencies, even when the federally mandated wages would be lower and the project is part of a local cooperation agreement with a state or local agency.ⁿ³⁶ⁿ³⁷

Effective until January 1, 2012, and retroactive to otherwise covered work concluded on or after January 1, 2002 to the extent permitted by law, an awarding public entity need not pay the general prevailing wage rate on public works contracts for work performed by the following:ⁿ³⁸

- A volunteer, defined as an individual who performs work for civic, charitable, or humanitarian reasons for a public agency or corporation qualified under section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code as a tax-exempt organization, without promise, expectation, or receipt of any compensation for work performed.
- A volunteer coordinator, defined as an individual paid by a corporation qualified under section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code as a tax-exempt organization, to oversee or supervise volunteers.
- Members of the California Conservation Corps or of Community Conservation Corps certified by the California Conservation Corps pursuant to Public Resources Code section 14507.5.

Prevailing wage regulations are substantially different from minimum wage statutes. A prevailing wage is in the nature of an average wage.ⁿ³⁹ The prevailing rate required under state statute is calculated on a per diem basis, and is determined by the Director of the Department of Industrial Relations, who must ascertain the prevailing rate for similar work in the locality where the work is performed, taking into consideration applicable wage rates established by collective bargaining agreements and other data.ⁿ⁴⁰

A public works contractor or subcontractor who pays less than the prevailing wage may be liable to the worker for the difference,ⁿ⁴¹ even if the public entity that awarded the contract failed to specify or keep on file the applicable prevailing rate as required under Labor Code Sections 1773 and 1773.2.ⁿ⁴² However, a subcontractor's employee on a public works project cannot sue the prime or general contractor on theories of statutory or contractual liability for the nonpayment of prevailing wages by the subcontractor, who was the employee's direct employer. There is no private right of action for enforcement by a subcontractor's employee against parties other than the subcontractor.ⁿ⁴³

Because California's prevailing wage lawⁿ⁴⁴ does not address matters of statewide concern, charter cities are not required to comply with the prevailing wage law with respect to public works contracts financed solely from city revenues. Those contracts are municipal affairs over which charter cities have paramount power under Cal. Const., art XI, § 5(a).ⁿ⁴⁵

ERISA does not preempt enforcement of California's prevailing wage law with respect to either state-approved apprenticeship programs or apprenticeship programs that are not state-approved.ⁿ⁴⁶ Where prevailing wage provisions regulate wages generally, as opposed to regulating wages that are part of a particular employee benefit plan, they do not sufficiently "relate" to ERISA to be preempted.ⁿ⁴⁷ Similarly, in Associated Builders & Contractors v. Golden Gate Chapter,ⁿ⁴⁸ the court decided whether a union's claims against an employer association's job targeting program under both the prevailing wage law and California Business and Professions Code section 17200 were preempted by the Labor Management Relations Act (LMRA).ⁿ⁴⁹ The court reasoned that because the claims could be resolved without interpreting the job targeting agreements, the LMRA did not preempt the claims.ⁿ⁵⁰ In Dillingham Const., N. A., Inc. v. County of Sonoma,ⁿ⁵¹ the court held that the National Labor Relations Act does not preempt the California law that requires the payment of prevailing wages to employees in apprenticeship programs that have not received state approval, although it allows the payment of lower apprenticeship wages to employees participating in state-approved apprenticeship programs.ⁿ⁵²

A requirement that wages be paid at a rate no lower than prevailing rates has been invalidated as applied to workers other than those employed in public works as defined in Labor Code Sections 1720 and 1720.2.ⁿ⁵³

[b] Federal Law

Employees covered under the following federal acts must be paid prevailing minimum rates based on the standard for persons performing similar work in the industry in the locality where the work is performed, as determined by the Secretary of Labor, even if these wages are higher than the minimum wage established under the FLSA:ⁿ⁵⁴

1. The Walsh-Healey Act,ⁿ⁵⁵ which covers employees working on contracts with a federal government agency for the manufacture or furnishing of materials, supplies, articles, or equipment in any amount over $10,000.
2. The Davis-Bacon Act,ⁿ⁵⁶ which covers mechanics and laborers constructing, altering, or repairing public buildings or public works under federal contracts in any amount over $2,000.
3. The Service Contract Act of 1965,ⁿ⁵⁷ which applies to contracts or subcontracts exceeding $2,500 for the provision of services to the federal government.ⁿ⁵⁸ (The Act does not apply to contracts covered under the Walsh-Healey or Davis-Bacon Acts, nor to contracts involving certain transportation, communication, public utility, or employment services, or to any contracts with the Post Office Department for the operation of postal contract stations.)ⁿ⁵⁹

Other acts relevant to the payment of prevailing wages to employees of government contractors are the Copeland Actⁿ⁶⁰ and the Miller Act.ⁿ⁶¹ The Copeland Act compels compliance with the requirements of the Davis-Bacon Act and prohibits any person from inducing employees on public works to give up any part of wages to which the employee is entitled. The Act has broader applicability than the Davis-Bacon Act, since it covers all persons employed in the construction of public works, including those other than mechanics and laborers, regardless of the monetary amount of the contract.

The Miller Act requires prime contractors for the construction or repair of public works to post payment bonds to ensure payment of wages to all persons supplying labor or materials.

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS
CHAPTER 2 Minimum Wages
Part A. MINIMUM WAGE REQUIREMENTS

1-2 California Employment Law § 2.07

AUTHOR: By Carol S. Sanders, J.D.

§ 2.07 Local Living Wage Laws

Some local governments, such as cities, have enacted "living wage" ordinances.ⁿ¹ These ordinances require certain employers to pay employees wages approximating the real cost of living in the locality, which is often significantly higher than the applicable state or federal minimum wage. These ordinances routinely exempt smaller or less profitable employers from their coverage.

In RUI One Corp. v. City of Berkeley, ⁿ² the Ninth Circuit held that Berkeley's living wage ordinanceⁿ³ did not violate the Contract Clause of the United States Constitution, the Equal Protection Clause of the United States and California Constitutions, or the state and federal Due Process Clauses as an impermissible delegation of legislative power to unions.

In Amaral v. Cintas Corp. No. 2, ⁿ⁴ the court considered the constitutionality and application of a living wage ordinance enacted by the City of Haywardⁿ⁵ and incorporated into its municipal contracts. A class action was filed against a company that entered into contracts with the City, but did not provide the minimum wages or benefits required by the ordinance to employees who worked in the company's facilities located outside of Hayward. The court held that the ordinance did not violate California Constitution article XI, section 7, because the constitutional prohibition applies only when a local government exercises its regulatory or police power, as opposed to its contracting or proprietary power, and because the ordinance did not purport to regulate conduct outside of Hayward's boundaries. Rather, the ordinance specified certain conduct the city wanted its contracting partners to follow, and it did not matter, for constitutional purposes, whether contractors may have to perform the required conduct outside the city's boundaries.ⁿ⁶ The court then found that the ordinance was not unconstitutionally vague.ⁿ⁷

Turning to the trial court's application of the ordinance, the court held that the trial court properly interpreted the requirements of the ordinance to find that it applied to the employer's contracts with Hayward,ⁿ⁸ that it required contractors to compensate every individual they employ to perform work on or under a service contract with Hayward with the hourly wage specified in the ordinance,ⁿ⁹ that all of the class members were "employees" entitled to the specified wage under the ordinance,ⁿ¹⁰ and that the purchase contracts the employer entered into with the city during the relevant timeframe were not too uncertain to be enforced and plaintiffs were intended third party beneficiaries of the contracts.ⁿ¹¹ The court also held that plaintiffs were entitled to recover penalties for various Labor Code violations for the employer's failure to pay class members full wages and benefits due upon termination,ⁿ¹² for the employer's secret payment of a lower wage than required,ⁿ¹³ for the employer's failure to provide itemized wage statements,ⁿ¹⁴ and for the employer's failure to provide paid vacation time upon termination,ⁿ¹⁵ all arising out of the employer's failure to compensate plaintiff class members in accordance with the ordinance. Finally the court found that the trial court properly calculated those penalties.ⁿ¹⁶

In Aguilar v. Cintas Corp. No. 2,ⁿ¹⁷ an action for violation of the Los Angeles Living Wage Ordinanceⁿ¹⁸ and related claims, the trial court erroneously denied plaintiff's motion for class certification, finding that the proposed class was not ascertainable and lacked a well-defined community of interest and that class treatment was not the superior means to resolve the litigation. The Court of Appeal found that the complexities of the case on which the trial court relied to find class certification inappropriate could be addressed by the use of subclasses and, with those issues resolved, the requirements for class treatment were satisfied.ⁿ¹⁹ In a subsequent opinion, the Court of Appeal held that a regulation promulgated to implement the Los Angeles Living Wage Ordinance (LWO) was in conflict with the ordinance and unenforceable in its entirety.ⁿ²⁰

1-2 California Employment Law § 2.20

AUTHOR: By Carol S. Sanders, J.D.

§ 2.20 Limitations on Crediting Employer-Provided Facilities Against Minimum Wage Pay

[1] California Law

California has a strong public policy favoring full payment of minimum wages,ⁿ¹ and an express statutory prohibition against employers compelling or coercing any employee or applicant for employment to patronize the employer in the purchase of anything of value.ⁿ² The promulgation of minimum wage orders under Labor Code Sections 1182 and 1184 must be construed in harmony with the prohibition against compelled patronage by an employee so as to carry out the fundamental legislative purpose of the entire Labor Code.ⁿ³ Accordingly, the employer-provided facilities that may be applied as credits against minimum wage pay are limited to the provision of meals and lodging, and then only if the employee gives prior, voluntary consent to the application of these credits.ⁿ⁴

[2] Federal Law

In view of the clear intention of Congress to protect the basic minimum wage required to be paid under federal lawⁿ⁵ from profiteering or manipulation by the employer in dealings with the employee, limitations and safeguards are prescribed to control the payment of wages in other than cash or its equivalent. While these do not prohibit payment of wages in the form of facilities furnished, they do prohibit the use of this medium of payment to avoid cash payment of the minimum wage obligations imposed by the FLSA.ⁿ⁶ Essential among the safeguards prescribed are the requirements that the employee actually receive the benefits of the facility for which he or she is charged,ⁿ⁷ and that the facility is furnished primarily for the benefit or convenience of the employee, rather than for the employer.ⁿ⁸ Although the regulations provide that the employee's acceptance of the facility must be voluntary and uncoerced,ⁿ⁹ some courts have held that the Secretary of Labor was without authority to promulgate this requirement, and have refused to enforce it.ⁿ¹⁰

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS
CHAPTER 2 Minimum Wages
Part B. CREDITS AGAINST MINIMUM WAGE

1-2 California Employment Law § 2.21

AUTHOR: By Carol S. Sanders, J.D.

§ 2.21 Meals, Lodging, and Similar Facilities

[1] California Law

[a] Generally

The wage orders allow the value of meals and lodging to be credited toward minimum wage obligation only with a voluntary written agreement between the employer and the employee,ⁿ¹ and only if the meals are actually received or the lodging is actually used.ⁿ²

The credits permitted for food and lodging under the California wage orders, as described in [b] and [c], below, are not necessarily the same as those permitted under the FLSA. Thus, a California employer who is subject to both laws will be restricted to the lesser of the two credits.ⁿ³

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

In contrast to the FLSA,ⁿ⁴ the California wage orders do not expressly permit a credit for facilities other than meals and lodging against the minimum wage.ⁿ⁵ However, the DLSE has indicated that it may consider permitting credit for certain other goods and services if (1) the value of the goods or services can be established, (2) there is a voluntary written agreement between the employer and employee before performance of the work to include a specified item at the agreed upon value, and (3) records are kept of the hours worked and all payments made. The DLSE may determine the fair value of such goods and services based on average cost to the employer or groups of employers similarly situated. Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

[b] Meals

[i] Generally

A "meal" means an adequate, well-balanced serving of a variety of wholesome, nutritious foods.ⁿ⁶ Meals evaluated as part of the minimum wage must be bona fide meals, consistent with the employee's work shift.ⁿ⁷

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

The wage orders generally provide that meals may not be credited against the minimum wage unless they are actually received.ⁿ⁸ However, the DLSE has taken the position that credits may be taken for occasional meals not eaten for personal reasons. Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

Generally, credit for meals is used to meet part of the employer's minimum wage obligation. The amounts credited may not be more than the following:ⁿ⁹

Breakfast:	$2.45
Lunch:	$3.35
Dinner:	$4.50

[ii] Employee Consent

In order for meals to be credited against the employer's minimum wage obligations, there must be a voluntary written agreement between the employer and the employees.ⁿ¹⁰

The requirement of employee consent to meal credits may be met without the individual employee's specific consent if a lawful, written collective bargaining agreement between the union, on behalf of the employees, and the employer permits the employer to apply meals toward the minimum wage.ⁿ¹¹ A collective bargaining agreement permitting meal credits takes precedence over any individual contract, and binds all members of the bargaining unit, whether or not they are union members or were employed in the bargaining unit at the time the agreement was entered into or ratified.ⁿ¹²

If the employees are not covered by a collective bargaining agreement, the employee must specifically authorize the meal credits.ⁿ¹³

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

The DLSE takes the position that the employee must be furnished with a copy of the agreement, and may change or revoke the agreement by filing a new meal deduction authorization or revocation. The employee's election must be given effect at the beginning of the first payroll period that starts 30 or more days after the employee files his or her election. Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

[c] Lodging

"Lodging" means living accommodations available to the employee for full-time occupancy that are adequate, decent, and sanitary according to usual and customary standards.ⁿ¹⁴ "Available for full-time occupancy" means available to the employee throughout the seven days in the week, even if the workweek is only five days per week.ⁿ¹⁵ Employees may not be required to share a bed.ⁿ¹⁶

When credit for lodging is used to meet part of the employer's minimum wage obligation, the amounts credited may not be more than the following:ⁿ¹⁷

Room occupied alone:	$31.75 per week
Room shared:	$26.70 per week
Apartments:
2/3 of ordinary rental value and in no event more than	$381.20 per month
When a couple are both employed by	$563.90 per month employer, 2/3 of ordinary rental value and in no event more than

If, as a condition of employment, the employee must live at the place of employment or occupy quarters owned or under the control of the employer, the employer may not charge rent in excess of the maximum amount creditable against the minimum wage.ⁿ¹⁸ However, in the case of resident apartment managers, an employer will not be in violation of any provision of an applicable wage order relating to credit or charges for lodging if the employer charges the manager, pursuant to a voluntary written agreement, up to two-thirds of the fair market rental value of the apartment supplied to the manager, even if it exceeds the maximum amount creditable against the minimum wage, if no credit for the apartment is used to meet the employer's minimum wage obligation to the employee.ⁿ¹⁹

As in the case of meal credits, the value of lodging may not be credited against the minimum wage without a voluntary written agreement between the employer and the employee.ⁿ²⁰

[2] Federal Law

[a] Generally

Pursuant to the FLSA,ⁿ²¹ employers may, under specified conditions, credit against their federal minimum wage obligations the value of board, lodging or "other facilities" customarily furnished,ⁿ²² unless a bona fide collective bargaining agreement precludes these costs from being calculated as wages.ⁿ²³ The amount of the credit will be determined either by the reasonable cost to the employer or by the fair value of the facilities.ⁿ²⁴

The types of facilities and amount of permissible credit under the FLSA and applicable regulations may not necessarily be the same in a given case as those permitted under the California wage orders. Therefore, an employer subject to both laws will be limited to the lower of the two credits. For discussion of permissible credits under the wage orders, see [1], above.

[b] Nature of Facilities That May Be Credited

"Other facilities" as used in the federal regulations must be similar to board or lodging.ⁿ²⁵ Some items deemed to be within the meaning of this term, and therefore creditable against wages, include tuition furnished by a college to student employees, general merchandise furnished at company stores, fuel, utilities, and transportation between home and work when the travel time does not constitute hours worked, and the transportation is not incidental or necessary to the employment.ⁿ²⁶ Meals furnished at company restaurants or cafeterias, by hospitals, hotels, or restaurants to their employees, or by colleges to their student employees, are explicitly recognized as "other facilities" that may be credited against wages.ⁿ²⁷

The cost of furnishing facilities that are primarily for the benefit or convenience of the employer may not be included in computing wages.ⁿ²⁸

Under the regulations, meals furnished to the employee are always regarded as primarily for the benefit and convenience of the employee.ⁿ²⁹ However, it should be noted that an employer's reimbursement to an employee for meal expenses incurred primarily for the employer's benefit or convenience, as an incident of employment, are not considered as meals furnished, and may not be included as wages.ⁿ³⁰

[c] Determination of Credit Amount

[i] Reasonable Cost

The "reasonable cost" to the employer of furnishing an employee with board, lodging, or other facilities may not be more than the actual cost to the employer of these facilities and may not include a profit to the employer or to any affiliated person.ⁿ³¹ The cost of furnishing facilities found by the Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division to be primarily for the benefit or convenience of the employer will not be recognized as reasonable and may not therefore be included in computing wages.ⁿ³² Such items include tools of the trade, required uniforms, certain safety equipment used in the mining industry, company security, and transportation charges when the transportation is an incident of and necessary to the employment.ⁿ³³

[ii] Fair Value

The Secretary of Labor may determine the "fair value" of board, lodging, or other facilities for defined classes of employees and in defined areas, based on average cost to the employer or to groups of employers similarly situated, or average value to groups of employees, or other appropriate measures of fair value.ⁿ³⁴ A determination of fair value, when applicable and pertinent, must be used in lieu of the actual measure of costs in determining the wage paid to an employee.ⁿ³⁵

[d] Employee Consent

The regulations promulgated by the Secretary of Labor provide that, for the reasonable cost of board, lodging, or other facilities to be considered part of the wage paid, the employee must accept the facility voluntarily and without coercion.ⁿ³⁶ However, some courts have taken the position that the Secretary is without statutory authority to impose the requirement of employee acceptance of a specific facility, and have held that regularly furnished meals or lodging may be credited against minimum wages even though the employee would prefer cash, since the employee's voluntary acceptance of employment included acceptance of the lawful conditions of employment.ⁿ³⁷ Cases that have held to the contrary have been distinguishedⁿ³⁸ as involving grossly inadequate facilities for which employers sought excessive credit,ⁿ³⁹ or exploitation of an uneducated alien who was paid little more than room and board.ⁿ⁴⁰

Although there may be some doubt whether voluntary acceptance of a credit for meals and lodging is required under federal law, the California wage orders clearly require a voluntary written consent to any such credit.ⁿ⁴¹

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS
CHAPTER 2 Minimum Wages
Part B. CREDITS AGAINST MINIMUM WAGE

1-2 California Employment Law § 2.22

AUTHOR: By Carol S. Sanders, J.D.

§ 2.22 Gratuities

[1] California Law

A "gratuity" is defined by the Labor Code as any tip, gratuity, money, or part thereof, that has been paid or given to or left for an employee by a patron of a business over and above the actual amount due the business for services rendered or for goods, food, drink, or articles sold or served to that patron.ⁿ¹ Any amounts paid directly by a patron to a dancer employed by an employer subject to Industrial Welfare Commission Wage Order Nos. 5 or 10 are deemed a gratuity.ⁿ²

Labor Code section 351 declares that gratuities are the sole property of the employee or employees to whom they are given or for whom they are left. Accordingly, except as described below, an employer is prohibited from collecting, taking, or receiving any portion of a gratuity given to or left for any employee by a patron, or from making wage deductions or credits on account of these gratuities.ⁿ³ As a matter of public policy, this prohibition cannot be contravened by private agreement.ⁿ⁴

The Supreme Court and IWC have construed this prohibition to eliminate the IWC's authority to allow a tip credit against the state minimum wage.ⁿ⁵

Labor Code Section 351 does not, however, prohibit an employer from requiring that tips be pooled among employees who directly provided service to the tipping patron.ⁿ⁶

An employer that permits patrons to pay gratuities by credit card must pay the employees the full amount of the gratuity that the patron indicated on the credit card slip, without any deductions for any credit card payment processing fees or costs that may be charged to the employer by the credit card company.ⁿ⁷ Payment of gratuities made by patrons using credit cards shall be made to the employees not later than the next regular payday following the date the patron authorized the credit card payment.ⁿ⁸

The DLSE's position is that compulsory service charges imposed on customers (e.g., service charges added to food costs for large banquets) are not gratuities or tips within the meaning of Labor Code Section 351, but are part of the employer's gross receipts. They are therefore not considered the property of the employees who performed the services.ⁿ⁹ If a portion of these service charges is subsequently paid over to the employees, the charges are considered wages, which may be credited against the employer's minimum wage obligations, but which must be included in the employee's regular rate of pay for purposes of computing overtime compensation.ⁿ¹⁰

For additional discussion of section 351, see Chapter 4.

[2] Federal Law

The Small Business Job Protection Act of 1996ⁿ¹¹ altered the federal tip credit, as previously set forth in 29 U.S.C. section 203(m), so that a tipped employee making at least $30 in tips must now be paid at least half of the new federal minimum wage of $4.25.ⁿ¹² This new law further provides that if the hourly wage added to the employee's actual tips does not equal the minimum wage, then the employer must make up the difference.ⁿ¹³ The gratuities credit does not apply to any tipped employee unless he or she has been informed by the employer of the provisions of Title 29 United States Code, section 203(m), governing the determination of wages of a tipped employee, and all tips received by the employee have been retained by the employee. The pooling of tips among employees who customarily and regularly receive tips is not prohibited.ⁿ¹⁴

As noted in [1], above, California law prohibits an employer from crediting gratuities against the state minimum wage.ⁿ¹⁵ Therefore, in practical effect, a California employer cannot utilize the federal credit for gratuities in meeting its minimum wage obligations.ⁿ¹⁶

CHAPTER 2 Minimum Wages
Part B. CREDITS AGAINST MINIMUM WAGE

1-2 California Employment Law § 2.23

AUTHOR: By Carol S. Sanders, J.D.

§ 2.23 Provision of Uniforms, Tools, and Equipment

[1] California Law

Under the California wage orders, uniforms, tools, and equipment required by the employer or necessary to the performance of a job must generally be provided by the employer, and the cost to the employer of furnishing them are not treated as credits against the minimum wage.ⁿ¹ However, an employee whose wages are at least two times the minimum wage may be required to provide and maintain hand tools and equipment customarily required by the trade or craft.ⁿ² Likewise, apprentices who are regularly indentured under the State Division of Apprenticeship Standards may be required to furnish the tools of their trade.ⁿ³ When tools, equipment, and uniforms are provided by the employer, the employer may require the employee to post a reasonable security deposit for the return of such items or, with prior written consent of the employee, may deduct the cost of such items from the employee's final pay check if an item is not returned to the employer.ⁿ⁴ However, the employer may not deduct for lost tools or uniforms without a showing of theft or culpable negligence, even if the employee authorized such deductions in writing. The employer must issue a receipt for the deposit, and no deduction may be made for normal wear and tear.ⁿ⁵ For further discussion, see Chapter 4.

[2] Federal Law

Under federal law, the cost of furnishing required uniforms and tools of the trade is generally not treated as wages paid for purposes of determining compliance with minimum wage and overtime requirements,ⁿ⁶ and the deduction of these costs from wages is illegal if the deduction reduces the wages to less than the prevailing minimum wage.ⁿ⁷

The cost to an employee of minimal maintenance necessary to keep a required uniform clean need not be reimbursed by the employer. However, if the uniform requires frequent or special maintenance care, the employer must reimburse costs incurred by the employee to the extent these costs reduce the employee's wages below the minimum wage level.ⁿ⁸

CHAPTER 2 Minimum Wages
Part B. CREDITS AGAINST MINIMUM WAGE

1-2 California Employment Law § 2.24

AUTHOR: By Carol S. Sanders, J.D.

§ 2.24 Contract Provisions

The DLSE interprets California law to explicitly prohibit employers from paying employees less than the wages required under any statute or less than the wages required under any contract or collective bargaining agreement.ⁿ¹ Under Labor Code section 221, an employer cannot collect or receive from an employee any part of the wages paid by the employer to the employee. Under Labor Code section 222, in any wage agreement arrived at through collective bargaining, an employer cannot wilfully or unlawfully with intent to defraud an employee, a competitor, or any other person, withhold from the employee any part of the agreed upon wage. Under Labor Code section 223, when a statute or contract requires an employer to maintain the designated wage scale, it is unlawful to secretly pay a lower wage while purporting to pay the wage designated by statute or contract.

This statutory scheme prevents an employer who operates under a contract that expressly pays employees less than the minimum wage for certain activities, e.g., washup time, recording time, etc., which constitute "hours worked" within the meaning of state law, from using any part of the wage payments required under the contract for activities compensated in an amount that equals or exceeds the minimum wage, as a credit toward satisfying minimum wage obligations for activities that under the contract terms are to be compensated at less than the minimum wage. Instead, all hours for which the employees are entitled to an amount equal or greater than the minimum wage pursuant to the provisions of the contract must be compensated precisely in accordance with the provisions of the contract. All other hours or parts of hours which the contract explicitly states will be paid at less than the minimum wage, but which constitute "hours worked" under state law, must be compensated at the minimum wage.ⁿ²

Further, averaging all wages paid under a contract within a particular pay period in order to determine whether the employer complied with its minimum wage obligations is not permitted. To do so would result in the employer paying the employees less than the contract rate for activities for which the contract requires payment of a specified amount equal to or greater than the minimum wage, which would violate Labor Code sections 221-223.ⁿ³

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS
CHAPTER 3 Overtime Compensation and Regulation of Hours Worked

1-3 California Employment Law Scope

AUTHOR: By Carol S. Sanders, J.D.

Scope

By Carol S. Sanders, J.D. n SCOPE*

This chapter discusses maximum hour regulations and overtime compensation requirements under state and federal law. It sets forth the basic overtime compensation requirements and the many exemptions from and exceptions to those requirements under state and federal law.

This chapter also examines the factors pertinent to determining whether overtime compensation is due, and, if so, the amount of that overtime compensation. It discusses when nonproductive employee time constitutes hours worked for purposes of overtime compensation, the various formulae for computing the employee's regular rate of pay for purposes of calculating overtime, and the circumstances under which sums paid to employees in addition to wages must be included in determining the regular rate of pay. It also discusses pay plans that impermissibly circumvent the overtime compensation requirements and the use of compensatory time off in lieu of overtime compensation payments. Restrictions on the number of hours that certain employees may work, regardless of whether overtime compensation is paid, are also discussed.

For an overview of the applicability of the various wage and hour laws, see Ch. 1. The minimum wage under state and federal law, below which an employee's regular rate may not fall, is discussed in Ch. 2. The time and manner in which wages, including overtime compensation, must be paid are discussed in Ch. 4. Remedies for failure to pay overtime compensation are discussed in Ch. 5. Special rules restricting working hours of minors are discussed in Ch. 6.

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS
CHAPTER 3 Overtime Compensation and Regulation of Hours Worked
Part A. OVERTIME COMPENSATION

1-3 California Employment Law § 3.01

AUTHOR: By Carol S. Sanders, J.D.

§ 3.01 Introduction

Both the the California wage ordersⁿ¹ and the federal Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA)ⁿ² have provisions requiring payment of an overtime premium to nonexempt employees who work more than a specified number of hours.

All of the California wage orders provide that an overtime premium must be paid if a nonexempt employee works more than a specified number of hours in a workday or more than a specified number of hours in a workweek.ⁿ³ For all industries and for all occupations except the agricultural occupations and the household occupations, an overtime premium must be paid for hours worked in excess of eight hours per workday or 40 hours per workweek, and for worked performed on the seventh consecutive day of work in a workweek.ⁿ⁴

Employers covered under the FLSA must also comply with applicable state laws or local ordinances that establish a maximum workweek that is shorter than that established by the Act.ⁿ⁵

Overtime compensation requirements are the primary legal restriction on the number of hours that an employee may be required to work. The purpose of the overtime premium requirements is to induce the employer to reduce the hours of work and employ more individuals, while compensating employees for the burdens of a long workweek.ⁿ⁶

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS
CHAPTER 3 Overtime Compensation and Regulation of Hours Worked
Part A. OVERTIME COMPENSATION

1-3 California Employment Law § 3.02

AUTHOR: By Carol S. Sanders, J.D.

§ 3.02 Overview of Factors Pertinent to Determining Overtime Compensation Obligations

On the surface, compliance with the overtime compensation requirements under state and federal law may appear to be a simple matter of paying to employees a specified premium rate for each hour worked in excess of a specified maximum number of hours during the workday or workweek. In practice, however, a complex analysis of multiple factors may be required in order to determine whether overtime compensation must be paid and, if so, the amount of that compensation. Pay plans that fail to take into strict account the rules and principles of overtime compensation law may be found to be in circumvention of the law,ⁿ¹ and may result in substantial liability for overtime compensation accrued over a past period.

In order to determine whether overtime compensation is due and the amount of that compensation, the following factors must be examined:

1. Is the employer covered by one of the California wage orders or by the FLSA, or both?ⁿ² If the employer is covered by both, the employer will need to examine the following factors under both laws and must pay overtime to the employee if either law so requires.
2. Is the employee entirely exempt from the overtime provisions of the California wage orders and/or the FLSA?ⁿ³
3. If the employee is nonexempt under either or both laws, what is the maximum-hour standard applicable to the employee? Under both state and federal law, hours worked in excess of 40 during the workweek will trigger the obligation to pay overtime compensation,ⁿ⁴ unless (a) the employee is covered by special maximum hour schedules applicable to particular occupations and industries,ⁿ⁵ or (b) an alternative work schedule that meets certain legal requirements is operative.ⁿ⁶ Under federal law, daily premiums are sometimes applicable.ⁿ⁷
4. Has the employee worked in excess of the maximum-hour standard applicable to him or her? To determine whether the employee worked in excess of the specified maximum number of hours, the employer must be aware of whether certain "nonproductive" time (such as traveling in connection with employment, being "on-call" in case work is required, or taking a duty-free meal period) must be counted as hours worked under state and federal law.ⁿ⁸ A determination of the number of hours worked is also necessary to determine the employee's regular rate of pay (see Paragraph 6, below) on which overtime is computed, unless the employee is paid solely on an hourly basis.ⁿ⁹

5. What overtime premium rate is applicable to the employee? Under state law, the premium is 1 1/2 times the employee's regular rate of pay during nonovertime hours, or, in some cases, double the regular rate.ⁿ¹⁰ Under the FLSA, the premium is 1 1/2 times the employee's regular rate during nonovertime hours,ⁿ¹¹ except in certain limited situations when an agreement meeting certain legal requirements is in effect.ⁿ¹² A premium based on a higher multiplier may be applicable under a private contract or agreement.

6. What is the employee's "regular rate" of pay? The employee's regular rate must be determined in order to determine overtime compensation due based on a multiple of 1 1/2 times or double that rate. Different formulas for determining the regular rate will be applicable depending on whether the employee is paid an hourly wage, or earns a fixed salary, commission, piece rate, or some other form of compensation.ⁿ¹³ If the employer has paid the employee certain sums in addition to his or her regular wages for hours worked, it must determine whether the additional sums must be included in calculating the regular rate or whether they may be excluded.ⁿ¹⁴

California law clearly delineates standards regarding which wage provisions an employer may negotiate in the context of a collective bargaining agreement.ⁿ¹⁵ In addition, a defendant may not attempt to inject a federal question into an action plainly asserting a state law claim in order to transform the action into one arising under federal law, thereby selecting the forum.ⁿ¹⁶

Part A. OVERTIME COMPENSATION

1-3 California Employment Law § 3.03

AUTHOR: By Carol S. Sanders, J.D.

§ 3.03 Employees Exempt From Overtime Pay Requirements

[1] California Law

[a] Exemptions From Both Minimum Wage and Overtime Provisions

Certain employees are exempt from both the overtime and minimum wage provisions of all the California wage orders. These employees include:

1. Persons employed in administrative, executive, or professional capacities;n1
2. Outside salespersons;n2
3. Certain members of the employer's family.n3

For a full discussion of the requirements for these exemptions, see ch. 2.

[b] Exemptions From Overtime Pay Provisions

[i] Employees Covered Under Collective Bargaining Agreements

Under all wage orders except the order governing agricultural occupations, the overtime pay provisions for adult employees do not apply to any employee covered by a collective bargaining agreement if that agreement provides premium wage rates for all overtime hours worked and a regular hourly rate for the employee of not less than 30% more than the state minimum wageⁿ⁴ (or at least $10.40 per hour, effective January 1, 2008).ⁿ⁵ Under the wage order for the agricultural occupations, the overtime pay provisions for adult employees do not apply to any employee covered by a collective bargaining agreement if that agreement provides premium wage rates for overtime work and a cash wage rate for the employee of not less than $1.00 per hour more than the minimum wage.ⁿ⁶ In addition, the overtime provisions of the wage order governing the transportation industry do not apply to employees who have entered into a collective bargaining agreement under and in accordance with the provisions of the federal Railway Labor Act.ⁿ⁷

For discussion of the special rules under the FLSA relating to employees covered by collective bargaining agreements,ⁿ⁸ see § 3.06[2][c].

[ii] Certain Commissioned Employees

The overtime payment provisions of Wage Order Numbers 4-2001 (governing professional, technical, clerical, mechanical, and similar occupations) and 7-2001 (governing the mercantile industry) do not apply to any employee whose earnings exceed 1½ times the minimum wage (or $10.13 per hour at the current hourly minimum wage of $6.75)ⁿ⁹ if more than half of that employee's compensation represents commissions.ⁿ¹⁰

In interpreting this exemption, in Keyes Motors, Inc. v. Division of Labor Standards Enforcement,ⁿ¹¹ the court of appeal applied the definition of "commission wages" contained in Labor Code section 204.1.ⁿ¹² That statute provides in part that "[c]ommission wages are compensation paid to any person for services rendered in the sale of such employer's property or services and based proportionately upon the amount or value thereof."ⁿ¹³ Applying this definition, the court held that the exemption contained in Wage Order Number 7-80 for employees who receive more than half of their compensation in the form of commissions was inapplicable to mechanics employed by an automobile dealer, even though the mechanics' compensation was based on a fixed percentage of the amounts charged to customers.ⁿ¹⁴ The court noted that the mechanics had no direct dealings with the dealer's customers and thus were not engaged in the sale of the dealer's repair services.ⁿ¹⁵ The court further observed that mechanics perform hard physical labor and that an interpretation entitling them to overtime compensation was compatible with the intent behind the overtime requirements, which is to protect the health and safety of employees.ⁿ¹⁶

In Ramirez v. Yosemite Water Co., Inc.,ⁿ¹⁷ the California Supreme Court looked to the definition of "commission" contained in Labor Code section 204.1, which applies specifically to employees of vehicle dealers, but which both parties and the Court agreed was more generally applicable, to determine whether an outside salesperson was a commissioned employee.ⁿ¹⁸ Citing Keyes Motors, Inc. v. Division of Labor Standards Enforcement,ⁿ¹⁹ the Court stated that Labor Code section 204.1 sets up two requirements, both of which must be met before a compensation scheme is deemed to constitute "commission wages." First, the employees must be involved principally in selling a product or service. Second, the amount of their compensation must be a percentage of the price of the product or service.ⁿ²⁰ In this case, the Court determined that it was unclear from the evidence presented whether the first prong of the test was met, and remanded for a determination on this issue.ⁿ²¹

An exemption similar to the California exemption exists under the FLSA, but the federal exemption is limited to commissioned employees of "retail or service establishments," as defined by federal statute.ⁿ²² For discussion of the federal exemption, see [2][c], below.

"Outside salespersons," as defined in the wage orders, are exempt from all provisions of all the wage orders, including the overtime provisions.ⁿ²³ For discussion of the exemption for outside sales personnel, see ch. 2.

[iii] Certain Motor Carrier Drivers

The overtime payment provisions of all wage orders, except the wage orders governing household occupationsⁿ²⁴ and the broadcasting and motion picture industries,ⁿ²⁵ are inapplicable to employees whose hours of service are regulated by the United States Department of Transportation under Title 49, Code of Federal Regulations sections 395.1-395.13 or by Title 13, California Code of Regulations sections 1200-1293, which regulate hours of drivers of certain vehicles, including farm buses, farm labor vehicles, and other motor carriers.ⁿ²⁶

For a listing of federal exemptions, some of which relate to employees of motor carriers, see [2][b], below.

[iv] Taxicab Drivers and Certain Airline Employees

The overtime payment provisions of the wage order governing the transportation industry are not applicable to taxicab drivers.ⁿ²⁷ Taxicab drivers are also exempt from overtime compensation requirements under the FLSA.ⁿ²⁸

The overtime provisions of the transportation industry wage order are also inapplicable to employees of an airline certificated by the federal or state government who work up to 60 hours in a workweek due to a temporary modification in the employee's normal work schedule not required by the employer but arranged at the request of the employee, including but not limited to situations in which the employee requests a change in days off or trades days off with another employee.ⁿ²⁹

All transportation industry employees, including airline employees, are exempt from state overtime requirements if they are covered by a collective bargaining agreement entered into pursuant to the federal Railway Labor Act.ⁿ³⁰ Such airline employees are also exempt from the overtime provisions of the FLSA.ⁿ³¹

[v] Motion Picture Projectionists

The overtime payment provisions of the wage order governing the amusement and recreation industry are not applicable to employees whose duties are exclusively those of a motion picture projectionist.ⁿ³²

All motion picture theater employees are exempt from the overtime requirements of the FLSA.ⁿ³³

[vi] Certain Employees in Broadcasting Industry

The overtime payment provisions of the wage order governing the broadcasting industry are not applicable to any person employed as an announcer, news editor, or chief engineer by a radio or television station in a city or town that has a population of 25,000 or less.ⁿ³⁴

A similar exemption for these categories of broadcasting employees exists under the FLSA, except that the exemption is both broader, in that it encompasses larger cities and towns, and narrower, in that employers in even small cities and towns are not exempt if they are located within a certain distance from the principal city in a standard metropolitan statistical area with a population in excess of 100,000.ⁿ³⁵

[vii] Irrigators

The overtime payment provisions of the wage order governing agricultural occupations are not applicable to an employee during any week in which more than half of his or her working time is devoted to performing the duties of an irrigator.ⁿ³⁶

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

The wage order itself does not define the term "irrigator." For enforcement purposes, the DLSE defines an irrigator as a person who applies water to agricultural crops through the use of portable pipes, ditches, sprinkler systems, or gravity flow methods. Irrigators may carry, lay out, and connect pipes; monitor rates of flow; adjust valves; shovel dirt in building and repairing ditches and levees; start, stop, and repair pumping equipment or other water conveyance systems; disassemble sprinkler systems and move them to the next location; and perform other duties in connection with the application of water to agricultural field crops. The duties may also include rodent control. The term normally does not apply to persons employed in greenhouses or nurseries. Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

An exemption for irrigation workers also exists under the FLSA, but with additional qualifications regarding the operation of the waterway and the exclusivity of its use for supply and storing of water for agricultural purposes.ⁿ³⁷

Note that all agricultural workers, not just irrigators, are exempt from the overtime requirements of the FLSA.ⁿ³⁸

[2] Federal Law

[a] Exemptions From Both Minimum Wage and Overtime Provisions

Employees who are exempt from both the overtime and minimum wage provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act are discussed in Chapter 2. These employees include persons employed in executive, administrative, or professional capacities; outside salespersons; employees of certain retail or service establishments; employees of seasonal recreational establishments; and certain other employees specified in Title 29 United States Code, section 213(a).

[b] Exemptions From Overtime Pay Provisions Under Title 29 United States Code, Section 213(b)

In addition to employees who are wholly exempt from both the minimum wage and overtime provisions of the FLSA, several categories of employees are exempt from the overtime provisions only.ⁿ³⁹ Many of these federal exemptions are of limited use to California employers because the California wage orders do not contain a comparable exemption, or the comparable California exemption is narrower, thus leaving the employee subject to the overtime provisions of the applicable California wage order. The following categories of employees are exempt from the overtime provisions of the FLSA:

1. Employees of motor carriers engaged in interstate commerce who are subject to the maximum hours regulations of the Secretary of Transportation;ⁿ⁴⁰
2. Employees engaged in the operation of a common carrier by rail and subject to the maximum hours provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act;ⁿ⁴¹
3. Employees of an air carrier subject to the provisions of the Railway Labor Act;ⁿ⁴²
4. Individuals employed as outside buyers of poultry, eggs, cream, or milk, in their raw or natural state;ⁿ⁴³
5. Employees employed as seamen;ⁿ⁴⁴

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

Although seamen are not covered by the FLSA, they are covered under the California wage order governing the transportation industry,ⁿ⁴⁵ to the extent that California has jurisdiction over such employees. The DLSE's position is that the wage order covers such employees if they (1) are employed on a vessel that operates exclusively between California ports or that leaves from and returns to the same California port, (2) entered into their employment agreements in California, and (3) are California residents.ⁿ⁴⁶ Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

6. Employees employed as announcers, news editors, or chief engineers by a radio or television station, if the station's major studio is located (A) in a city or town with a population of 100,000 or less, unless the city or town is part of a standard metropolitan statistical area that has a total population in excess of 100,000, or (B) in a city or town that has a population of 25,000 or less and is located in such a metropolitan statistical area, but is at least 40 airline miles from the principal city in the metropolitan area;ⁿ⁴⁷

7. Salespersons, partsmen, or mechanics primarily engaged in selling or servicing automobiles, trucks, or farm implements, if employed by nonmanufacturing establishments primarily engaged in the business of selling the vehicles or implements to ultimate purchasers;ⁿ⁴⁸ "this exemption does not include employees whose primary duties are selling financing and warranties, not vehicles;ⁿ⁴⁹

8. Salespersons primarily engaged in selling trailers, boats, or aircraft, if employed by nonmanufacturing establishments primarily engaged in the business of selling these items to ultimate purchasers;ⁿ⁵⁰

9. Drivers or driver's helpers making local deliveries, compensated on the basis of trip rates or other delivery payment plan, if the Secretary finds that the plan has the purpose and effect of reducing hours worked by these employees to, or below, the maximum workweek under the FLSA;ⁿ⁵¹

10. Employees employed in agriculture or in connection with the operation or maintenance of ditches, canals, reservoirs, or waterways not owned or operated for profit, or operated on a sharecrop basis, which are used exclusively for the supply and storing of water for agricultural purposes;ⁿ⁵²

11. Agricultural workers who are employed by farmers in livestock auction operations of such farmers, if the employee is primarily employed in agriculture, and is paid at least the minimum wage for work in connection with the livestock auction operations.ⁿ⁵³

12. Certain employees of country elevators.ⁿ⁵⁴

13. Employees engaged in the processing of maple sap into sugar (other than refined sugar) or syrup;ⁿ⁵⁵

14. Employees engaged in the transportation and preparation for transportation of fruits and vegetables from the farm to a place of first processing or marketing within the state, or engaged in the transportation of harvest workers to be employed within the same state;ⁿ⁵⁶

15. Drivers employed by employers engaged in the business of operating taxicabs;ⁿ⁵⁷

16. Employees employed in fire protection or law enforcement activities (including security personnel in correctional institutions) for a public agency that employs less than five employees in these activities;ⁿ⁵⁸

17. Live-in domestic service employees;ⁿ⁵⁹

18. Married couples employed by a nonprofit educational institution to serve as resident parents to orphans or other children who reside at the institution, if the couple resides in the facilities, receives free board and lodging, and cash compensation of at least $10,000;ⁿ⁶⁰

19. Motion picture theater employees;ⁿ⁶¹ and

20. Certain employees of logging and forestry operations employing no more than eight employees.ⁿ⁶²

[c] Commissioned Employees of Retail or Service Establishments

Under the FLSA, overtime compensation need not be paid to employees of a retail or service establishment if the employee's regular rate is in excess of 1 1/2 times the minimum hourly rateⁿ⁶³ and more than half of the employee's compensation for a representative period of not less than one month represents commissions on goods or services.ⁿ⁶⁴

A similar exemption exists under California law for commissioned employees in the professional, technical, clerical, and mechanical industriesⁿ⁶⁵ and the "mercantile" industry.ⁿ⁶⁶ The state exemption is broader than the federal exemption, because the definition of the "mercantile industry" is not limited to retail sales establishments, but applies to

"any industry, business, or establishment for the purpose of purchasing, selling, or distributing goods or commodities at wholesale or retail; or for the purpose of renting goods or commodities."n67 For discussion of the state exemption, see [1][b][ii], above.

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS
CHAPTER 3 Overtime Compensation and Regulation of Hours Worked
Part A. OVERTIME COMPENSATION

1-3 California Employment Law § 3.04

AUTHOR: By Carol S. Sanders, J.D.

§ 3.04 Determining Basic Maximum Hour Standards and Overtime Premium Rates

[1] California Law

[a] Eight-Hour-Day Restoration and Workplace Flexibility Act of 1999

[i] Overtime Requirements Generally

Reaffirming California's "unwavering commitment to uphold the eight-hour workday as a fundamental protection for working people[.]" the Eight-Hour-Day Restoration and Workplace Flexibility Act of 1999 (the Act) generally provides for overtime premium rates for work in excess of eight hours in one workday and work in excess of 40 hours in any one workweek.ⁿ¹

The Act, which provides that eight hours of labor constitute a day's work,ⁿ² deletes the authority of parties under prior law to otherwise expressly stipulate the number of hours that constitute a day's work.ⁿ³ Instead, the Act provides that, except for an employee working pursuant to an alternative workweek schedule, as specified,ⁿ⁴ hours worked in excess of eight hours in one day, hours worked in excess of 40 hours in one workweek, and the first eight hours worked on the seventh day of work in a given workweek must be compensated at the rate of no less than one and one-half times the regular rate of pay of an employee.ⁿ⁵ Hours worked in excess of 12 hours in one day as well as hours worked in excess of eight hours on any seventh day of a workweek must be compensated at the rate of no less than twice the regular rate of pay of an employee.ⁿ⁶ Employees working under an alternative workweek schedule under other specified provisions of the Act are exempt from these requirements.ⁿ⁷

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

Readers should be aware that the text of this treatise correctly states that Labor Code Section 510(a) provides for double time "for any work in excess of eight hours on any seventh day of a workweek." As phrased, this would permit an employee to take vacation or be absent for any other permissible reason on the first six days of a workweek and nevertheless receive double time for any work performed after eight hours on the seventh day. However, the IWC has interpreted Section 510(a) for all wage orders as if it said all hours worked in excess of eight (8) hours on the seventh (7th) consecutive day of work in a workweek. Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

Nothing in section 510 requires an employer to combine more than one rate of overtime compensation in order to calculate the amount to be paid to an employee for any hour of overtime work.^{n7.1} Thus, for example, when an employer pays an employee a premium rate of time and one-half for work on holidays, the plain language of Labor Code section 510 does not require the employer to compensate an employee at a rate higher than one and one-half times the regular rate of pay if the employee works more than eight hours in one day or 40 hours in one week.^{n7.2}

[ii] Permissible Alternative Workweeks

An employer may propose, and employees may adopt, an alternative workweek schedule that permits work by affected employees for no longer than ten hours per day within a 40-hour workweek without the payment of overtime to the affected employees, provided the schedule is approved by secret ballot by at least two-thirds of the affected employees in a work unit.ⁿ⁸ For these purposes, a "work unit" includes a division, department, job classification, shift, separate physical location, or subdivisions of any of those. A work unit may consist of an individual employee, as long as the criteria for an identifiable work unit are met.^{n8.1}

The regularly scheduled alternative workweek proposed by an employer for adoption by employees may be a single work schedule that would become the standard schedule for workers in the work unit, or a menu of work schedule options, from which each employee in the unit would be entitled to choose.^{n8.2} The menu of work schedule options may include a regular schedule of eight-hour days compensated in accordance with Lab. Code § 510(a).^{n8.3} Employees who adopt a menu of work schedule options may, with employer consent, move from one schedule option to another on a weekly basis.^{n8.4}

An employee working more than eight hours, but not more than 12 hours, in a day under an alternative workweek schedule is required to be paid an overtime rate of compensation of no less than one and one-half times his or her regular rate of pay for work in excess of the regular hours established by that schedule and for work in a workweek in excess of 40 hours per week and an overtime rate of compensation of no less than double his or her regular rate of pay for any work in excess of 12 hours per day and work in excess of eight hours on days worked beyond the regularly scheduled workweek under the agreement.ⁿ⁹ For example, an alternative workweek approved by the employees, during which the employees work three 12-hour days and one six-hour day, for which the employer pays overtime at time and one-half for the 11th and 12th hours on the 12-hour days, complies with Labor Code section 511.^{n9.1} Nothing in Labor Code § 511 requires an employer to combine more than one rate of overtime compensation in order to calculate the amount to be paid to an employee for any hour of overtime work.^{n9.2}

An employer may not reduce an employee's regular rate of hourly pay as a result of the adoption, repeal, or nullification of an alternative workweek schedule.^{n9.3}

An employer must make a reasonable effort to find a work schedule not to exceed eight hours in a workday to accommodate an employee eligible to vote in an alternative workweek election who is unable to work the alternative schedule hours established as the result of the election. The employer may provide a work schedule not to exceed eight hours in a workday to accommodate any employee hired after the date of the election who is unable to work the alternative schedule established as the result of the election.^{n9.4} The employer must explore any available reasonable alternative means of accommodating the religious belief or observance of an affected employee that conflicts with an adopted alternative workweek schedule.^{n9.5}

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

According to pre-1998 enforcement policy, the DLSE required payment of overtime to employees governed by an alternative workweek who worked on any day other than a day covered by the schedule.

Thus, for example, an employee whose work is governed by an alternative work schedule comprised of four nine-hour days from Monday through Thursday was entitled to overtime for work on Friday, even if the work did not take the employee beyond forty hours in the workweek. (This hypothetical assumes a workweek from Sunday midnight to Sunday midnight.) The DLSE has followed a similar enforcement rule since the enactment of AB 60 on January 1, 2000. Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

[iii] Makeup Work Time Due to Employee's Personal Obligation

If an employer approves the written request of an employee to make up work time that is lost as a result of a personal obligation of the employee, the hours of that makeup work time, if performed in the same workweek in which the time was lost, may not be counted towards computing the total number of hours worked in a day for purposes of the overtime requirements of Labor Code §§ 510 and 511,ⁿ¹⁰ except for hours in excess of 11 hours of work in one day or 40 hours in one workweek.ⁿ¹¹ An employee must provide a signed written request for each occasion he or she makes that request.ⁿ¹² An employer is prohibited from encouraging or otherwise soliciting an employee to make that request.ⁿ¹³

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

Labor Code Section 513 begins with the word, "If." Practitioners should expect the DLSE to interpret this Section as providing for make-up time only at the employer's discretion. Make-up time is not a mandatory right. Thus, employers likely are permitted to implement Section 513, or not, at any time. For example, absent evidence of discriminatory treatment actionable under some other statute, an employer has the discretion to grant requests for make-up time at certain times of the year or under certain circumstances, but not others. Furthermore, if an employer already has a make-up time policy, it is not required to supplant that policy with the terms of Section 513. However, if an employer has no make-up time policy, or if it has a make-up time policy that will create overtime obligations under the new eight-hour day, Section 513 offers the only means to secure relief from such overtime. Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

[iv] Exceptions for Administrative, Executive, and Professional Employees

Previous wage orders provided that no person employed in an administrative, executive, or professional capacity was required by those wage orders to be compensated for overtime work.ⁿ¹⁴ The Act authorizes the IWC to establish exemptions, with specified limitations, from the requirement that overtime compensation be paid for overtime workⁿ¹⁵ for executive, administrative, and professional employees, provided that the employee is primarily engaged in the duties which meet the test of the exemption and the employee earns a monthly salary equivalent to no less than two times the state minimum wage for full-time employment.ⁿ¹⁶ In wage orders effective January 1, 2001, the IWC defined what it means to be employed in an executive, administrative or professional capacity.ⁿ¹⁷

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

Labor Code Section 515(a) requires the payment of at least one-month's salary to all exempt employees, equivalent to "two times the state minimum wage for full-time employment." The drafters of the statute may not have considered that exempt employees can be part-time or full-time. Read literally, Section 515(a) requires the payment of a month's salary (based on twice the minimum wage) to exempt employees who may work only one workweek in a month. This base salary requirement may be low enough to permit many employers to avoid the consequences of a literal reading of Section 515(a), but practitioners will need to wait to determine whether the DLSE will apply some form of pro rata interpretation rule to part-time exempt workers. Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

In addition to exemptions to overtime payment requirements in wage orders for professional, executive or administrative employees in Labor Code Section 515, the overtime payment requirements of Labor Code Section 510 do not apply to a teacher at a private elementary or secondary academic institution in which pupils are enrolled in kindergarten or any of grades 1 to 12, inclusive.^{n17.1} Further, unless Labor Code provisions are specifically made applicable to public employers, they apply only to employers in the private sector. Labor Code § 510 does not expressly apply to public entities. Therefore, for example, it did not apply to a public water storage district.^{n17.2}

[v] Exceptions for Employees of Specified Industries

The Act repealed provisions of the Labor Code which contained specific workday and workweek requirements relating to employees of ski establishments,ⁿ¹⁸ employees of licensed hospitals,ⁿ¹⁹ and stable employees engaged in the raising, feeding, or management of racehorses.ⁿ²⁰ The Act also repealed the provisions exempting employers engaged in specified commercial fishing enterprises from the minimum wage and maximum hour provisions of existing law.ⁿ²¹

[vi] Other Exceptions

The Act does not apply to employees covered by a valid collective bargaining agreement, if the agreement expressly provides for the wages, hours of work, and working conditions of the employees, and if the agreement provides premium wage rates for all overtime hours worked and a regular hourly rate of pay for those employees of not less than 30 percent more than the state minimum wage.ⁿ²² When determining the scope of the collective bargaining exemption for any particular circumstance, it will be necessary to focus on the first two words of Labor Code Section 514 "This chapter" and make certain that the chapter extends to the policy or practice in question.

In addition, employment in which the hours of work do not exceed 30 hours in a week or 6 hours in a day are exempt from the general provisions of the Act relating to the hours and days that constitute a workday and a workweek, and related provisions.ⁿ²³

Further, persons employed in an agricultural occupation generally are exempt from specified regulation under the Labor Code.ⁿ²⁴

[vii] Meal Periods

The Act codifies the prohibition against employing an employee for a work period of more than five hours per day without providing the employee with a meal period of not less than 30 minutes, with the exception that if the total work period per day of the employee is no more than six hours, the meal period may be waived by mutual consent of both the employer and employee.ⁿ²⁵ The Act further prohibits an employer from employing an employee for a work period of more than 10 hours per day without providing the employee with a second meal period of not less than 30 minutes, with a specified exception.ⁿ²⁶ Notwithstanding the foregoing, the Industrial Welfare Commission (IWC) may adopt a working condition order permitting a meal period to commence after six hours of work if the commission determines that the order is consistent with the health and welfare of the affected employees.ⁿ²⁷ Meal periods are discussed in detail in § 3.23, below. The meal requirement does not apply to employees in the wholesale baking industry who are subject to an Industrial Welfare Commission Wage Order and are covered by a valid collective bargaining agreement with specific provisions.ⁿ²⁸

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

Read in conjunction with one another, Labor Code Sections 512 and 515(a), do not provide an exception to the meal period rules for exempt employees. Whether the DLSE will make such an exception as an enforcement practice is uncertain. Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

[viii] Days of Rest

With specified exceptions, the Act relaxes portions of Labor Code Sections 551 and 552, which pertain to one day of rest in every period of seven days.ⁿ²⁹ In general, an employer is not required to adhere to a strict requirement of one day's rest in seven and may accumulate days of rest for its employees, so long as: (1) the nature of the employment reasonably requires that the employee work seven or more consecutive days; and (2) in each calendar month, the employees receive days of rest equivalent to one day's rest in seven.ⁿ³⁰

[ix] Civil Penalties

An employer, or other person acting on behalf of an employer, is subject to civil penalties for the violation of provisions of the Act or provisions regulating hours and days of work of wage orders of the IWC.ⁿ³¹ The Labor Commissioner is authorized to issue citations for violations of the Act regulating the payment of wages for overtime work and provisions regulating hours and days of work in wage orders of the IWC.ⁿ³²

[x] Wage Order Nos. 1-2001-16-2001

The IWC adopted, effective January 1, 2001, wage orders governing overtime compensation and certain elements of alternative workweek schedules, including conduct of employee workweek elections.ⁿ³³

[a.1] Workday and Workweek as Basic Units for Determining Entitlement to Overtime Pay

All of the California wage orders provide that an overtime premium must be paid if a nonexempt employee works more than a specified number of hours in a workday and more than a specified number of hours in a workweek. For all industries and for all occupations except the agricultural occupations and the household occupations, an overtime premium must be paid for hours worked in excess of eight hours per workday or 40 hours per week and for work performed on the seventh consecutive day of work in a workweek.ⁿ³⁴

A "workday" means any 24 consecutive hours beginning at the same time each calendar day.ⁿ³⁵ A "workweek" means any seven consecutive days, starting with the same calendar day each week. Thus, a "workweek" is a fixed and regularly recurring period of 168 hours or seven consecutive 24-hour periods.ⁿ³⁶

Once established by the employer, the workweek is deemed as fixed by the DLSE for purposes of overtime pay computation. The DLSE permits a change in the workweek under the wage orders only if the change is intended to be permanent and is not designed to evade overtime obligations.ⁿ³⁷ If the employee's workweek is not specified in the employer's records, the DLSE will for enforcement purposes use the calendar week, from 12:01 a.m. Sunday through midnight Saturday, with each workday ending at midnight.ⁿ³⁸ For discussion of how overtime is computed when there is a change in the workweek, see § 3.11[2].

Under federal law, with certain limited exceptions discussed in this chapter, only the workweek is used as the measuring unit for overtime worked, because overtime compensation is required only for hours worked in excess of 40 during one workweek, and there is no overtime premium for hours worked during any given workday.ⁿ³⁹

[b] Overtime Premium Requirements Based on Workday: Wage Order Nos. 2-2001, 3-2001, 6-2001, 8-2001, 10-2001, 11-2001, 12-2001, 13-2001, 14-2001, 15-2001

[i] Premium of 1 1/2 -Time Pay for Hours Worked Over Eight During Weekday or Hours Worked Over 40 During Workweek

In the following industries and occupationsⁿ⁴⁰ nonexempt employees must be paid an overtime premium for all hours worked in excess of eight during the workday and in excess of 40 during the workweek, as well as for work performed on the seventh workday in a workweek:

1. Manufacturing industry;ⁿ⁴¹

2. Personal service industry;ⁿ⁴²

3. Canning, freezing, and preserving industry;n43
4. Professional, technical, clerical, mechanical and similar occupations;n44
5. Public housekeeping industry;n45
6. Laundry, linen supply, dry cleaning, and dyeing industry;n46
7. Mercantile industry;n47
8. Industries handling products after harvest;n48
9. Transportation industry;n49
10. Amusement and recreation industry;n50
11. Broadcasting industry;n51
12. Motion picture industry;n52
13. Industries preparing agricultural products for market, on the farm;n53
14. On-site construction, drilling, logging, and mining occupations;n54
15. Any industry or occupation not previously covered.n55

However, a nonexempt employee in the agricultural occupations may be employed on seven workdays in one workweek with no overtime pay required if the total hours of employment during the workweek do not exceed 30, and the total hours of employment in any one workday during that workweek do not exceed six.n56 Nonexempt live-in employees in the household occupations must be paid an overtime premium for time worked in excess of five workdays in a workweekn57 and for work performed during scheduled off-duty hours.n58 Nonexempt non-live-in employees in the household occupations must be paid an overtime premium for hours worked in excess of eight in one day and in excess of 40 in one week.n59

Except as noted in [ii], below, employees in the industries governed by these wage orders who work more than 40 hours in any workweek must be paid at least 1 1/2 times their regular rate of pay for all hours worked in excess of 40 hours.n60 Except as noted below,n61 in these industries employees must be paid at least 1 1/2 times their regular rate of pay for all hours worked in excess of eight hours, up to and including 12 hours, in any workday, and for the first eight hours worked on the seventh workday in a workweek.n62 Thereafter, the employees must be paid a premium of double their regular rate of pay, as discussed in [iii], below.

■ ILLUSTRATION 1 (Weekly Overtime Premium):

Employee is employed in a business covered by Wage Order No. 3-2001 and is not exempt from its provisions. Employee's regular rate of pay is $10.00 per hour. No special overtime exception is applicable. Employee's regular workweek runs from 12:01 a.m. Monday through midnight Sunday. During one workweek, Employee worked the following number of hours: Monday--8 hours; Tuesday--2 hours; Wednesday--8 hours; Thursday--8 hours; Friday--8 hours; Saturday--8 hours, for a total of 42 hours. Employee is entitled to overtime compensation of 1 1/2 times Employee's regular rate of pay (or $15.00 per hour) for the two hours worked in excess of 40 during the workweek. Therefore, Employee's gross pay for the week equals $430.00 (40 hours times $10.00, plus two hours times $15.00).

■ ILLUSTRATION 2 (Daily Overtime Premium):

Employee is employed in a personal service industry covered by California Wage Order No. 2-2001 and is not exempt from its provisions. Employee's regular rate of pay is $10.00 per hour. No special overtime exception is applicable. Employee's regular workweek runs from 12:01 a.m. Monday through midnight Sunday. During one workweek, Employee worked the following number of hours: Monday--8 hours; Tuesday--10 hours; Wednesday--6 hours; Thursday--12 hours; Friday--4 hours. Although the total hours worked by Employee during the workweek does not exceed 40, Employee is entitled to overtime compensation of 1 1/2 times Employee's regular rate of pay (or $15.00 per hour) for the two hours worked in excess of eight hours on Tuesday, and for the four hours worked in excess of eight hours on Thursday. Therefore, Employee's gross pay for the week equals $430.00 (34 hours times $10.00, plus six hours times $15.00).

[ii] Exceptions

Agricultural employees are paid 1 1/2 times their regular rate of pay only after working 10 hours in a workday or six days in a workweek.ⁿ⁶³ Live-in domestic employees qualify for 1 1/2 times their regular rate of pay for work performed during scheduled off-duty hoursⁿ⁶⁴ or for up to nine hours worked on the sixth day in a workweek.ⁿ⁶⁵ For a discussion of the special maximum work schedules applicable to these and certain other employees, see § 3.05[1]. For a discussion of different premiums applicable to agreements for alternative work schedules under California law, see § 3.06[1]. For a discussion of complete exemptions to overtime compensation requirements under California law, see § 3.03[1].

[iii] Premium of Double-Time Pay for Over 12 Hours Worked During Workday

Generally, an employee must be paid double his or her regular rate of pay for all hours worked in excess of 12 hours in any one workday and for all hours worked in excess of eight hours on the seventh day of work in any workweek.ⁿ⁶⁶ However, agricultural and non-live-in household employees are paid double their regular rate of pay only for hours worked in excess of eight on the seventh day of work in the workweek.ⁿ⁶⁷ Live-in household employees qualify for double their regular rate of pay for time worked in excess of nine hours on the sixth and seventh workday.ⁿ⁶⁸ Non-live-in employees in the household occupations are paid double time for the first eight hours worked on the seventh consecutive day of work in a workweek.ⁿ⁶⁹ For a discussion of the special maximum work schedules applicable to these and certain other employees, see § 3.05[1]. For a discussion of different premiums applicable to agreements for alternative work schedules under California law, see § 3.06[1]. For a discussion of complete exemptions to overtime compensation requirements under California law, see § 3.03[1].

[iv] Minors

Under the Labor Code, with certain exceptions,ⁿ⁷⁰ minors may not be employed more than eight hours in any workday, nor more than 40 hours per workweek if the minor is age 15 or younger, or 48 hours per workweek if the minor is age 16 or 17.ⁿ⁷¹ Thus, as a practical matter the daily premium under the wage orders in these industries and occupations is not operative for minors. However, most of the 2001 wage orders, except Wage Order No. 12-2001 (governing the motion picture industry) and Wage Order No. 14-2001 (governing agricultural occupations), provide that 1 1/2 times the minor's regular rate of pay must be paid for all hours worked in excess of 40 in any workweek.ⁿ⁷² Minors in the motion picture industry must be paid 1 1/2 times their regular rate of pay for all hours worked on the sixth consecutive day in a workweek.ⁿ⁷³

Minors who are 16 and 17 years of age and who are not required by law to attend school are an exception. They may be employed for the same hours as an adult and are subject to the overtime provisions applicable to adults employed in the same industry or occupation.ⁿ⁷⁴ The wage order covering agricultural occupations contains no provision for overtime for minors unless the minors fall within this exception.ⁿ⁷⁵

For a full discussion of permissible hours and times of employment of minors, see Ch. 6.

[2] Federal Law

[a] Workweek as Basic Unit for Determining Entitlement to Overtime Pay

[i] Generally

Under the FLSA, except for certain categories of employees,ⁿ⁷⁶ there is no provision for overtime compensation on a daily basis.ⁿ⁷⁷ Rather, overtime compensation is based only on hours worked in excess of 40 during the workweek.ⁿ⁷⁸

For purposes of the FLSA, an employee's workweek is defined as a fixed and regularly recurring period of 168 hours, or seven consecutive 24-hour periods.ⁿ⁷⁹ It need not coincide with the calendar week, but may begin on any day and at any hour of the day.ⁿ⁸⁰ For purposes of computing pay due under the FLSA, a single workweek may be established as a whole or different workweeks may be established for different employees or groups of employees.ⁿ⁸¹ Once the beginning of the workweek is established it remains fixed, regardless of the schedule of hours worked by the employee; however, a change in the beginning of the workweek may be made if it is intended to be permanent and is not designed to evade the overtime requirements of the Act.ⁿ⁸²

[ii] When Workday Applicable

Overtime compensation is payable for hours worked in one workday in excess of specified maximums under special rules applicable to the following categories of employees:

1. Employees covered under a collective bargaining agreement guaranteeing specified hours of work;ⁿ⁸³
2. Certain employees in the petroleum industry;ⁿ⁸⁴
3. Hospital employees on a 14-day work schedule;ⁿ⁸⁵
4. Certain employees in the tobacco industry;ⁿ⁸⁶ and
5. Certain employees in the cotton and sugar processing industries.ⁿ⁸⁷

[b] General Overtime Compensation Requirements

No employer subject to the FLSAⁿ⁸⁸ may employ any nonexempt employeeⁿ⁸⁹ for a workweek longer than 40 hours unless that employee receives compensation for employment in excess of 40 hours at a rate not less than 1 1/2 times the regular rate at which he or she is employed.ⁿ⁹⁰ For discussion of special maximum work schedules applicable to certain types of employees, see § 3.05[2]. For discussion of special rules regarding overtime for employees under certain voluntary agreements, see § 3.06[2].

[c] Domestic Service Employees

Employees in domestic service are expressly included as employees to whom the employer must pay overtime compensation of 1 1/2 times the employee's regular rate of pay for all hours in excess of 40 during the workweek.ⁿ⁹¹ However, domestic service workers who reside in the household in which they workⁿ⁹² and persons employed on a casual basis as babysitters or companionsⁿ⁹³ are exempt from the overtime provisions.ⁿ⁹⁴

Note that both live-in and non-live-in domestic service workers (except for "personal attendants," as defined in the wage orders) are subject to overtime requirements under California law.ⁿ⁹⁵

[d] Nonwaivability

The employer's obligation to pay overtime compensation as required under the FLSA cannot be waived or substituted by an agreement to work overtime at a lesser rate.ⁿ⁹⁶ Furthermore, an employee's entitlement to overtime cannot be waived by an agreement to work only a specified number of hours if in fact the employee works more than the number of hours agreed to.ⁿ⁹⁷

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS
CHAPTER 3 Overtime Compensation and Regulation of Hours Worked
Part A. OVERTIME COMPENSATION

1-3 California Employment Law § 3.05

AUTHOR: By Carol S. Sanders, J.D.

§ 3.05 Special Maximum Hour Standards Applicable to Certain Employees

[1] California Law

[a] Motion Picture Industry

[i] Generally

The wage order governing the motion picture industryⁿ¹ contains special overtime provisions for employees in that industry.ⁿ² Motion picture employees may not be employed more than eight hours in any workday, or more than forty hours in any workweek, unless paid appropriate overtime compensation. Employees may be employed up to a maximum of sixteen hours, including meal periods, in any one day from the time they are required and do report until dismissed, provided they are compensated for the overtime.ⁿ³ Daily employees and weekly employees,ⁿ⁴ excluding weekly employees guaranteed more than forty hours each workweek and "on call" employees,ⁿ⁵ must be compensated for the overtime at 1 1/2 times the employee's regular rate of pay for all hours worked in excess of eight hours up to and including twelve hours in any one workday, and for the first eight hours worked on the seventh consecutive day of work in a workweek,ⁿ⁶ and double the employee's regular rate of pay for all hours worked in excess of twelve hours in any workday, and for all hours worked in excess of eight hours on the seventh consecutive day of work in a workweek.ⁿ⁷ Overtime payments may not be compounded, and all payments made by the employer for daily overtime on the basis specified in the wage order must be applied toward any sum for weekly overtime.ⁿ⁸ The overtime rate of compensation required to be paid to a nonexempt full-time salaried employee must be computed by using the employee's regular hourly salary as 1/40th of the employee's weekly salary.ⁿ⁹

[ii] Extra Players

"Extra players," as defined in the wage order, are subject to special rules with regard to the daily overtime premium. An "extra player" is defined by the wage order as any person employed by an employer in the production of motion pictures to perform any work, including but not limited to that of a general extra, stand-in, photographic double, sports player, silent bit, or dress extra; or as extras employed in dancing, skating, swimming, diving, riding, driving, or singing; or as extras employed to perform any other actions, gestures, facial expressions, or pantomime.ⁿ¹⁰

Extra players should be distinguished from "professional actors," who are partially exempt from the provisions of the wage order governing the motion picture industry.ⁿ¹¹

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

Although the wage order defines an "extra player" as any person hired by an employer in the production of a motion picture "to perform any work, including but not limited to" the specified tasks,ⁿ¹² the DLSE interprets this definition of "extra player" as being limited to persons who actually perform or act in motion pictures. The tasks specified in the wage order are examples of activities engaged in by such persons. Camera operators, technicians, or other nonperformance employees are thus not "extra players." In determining whether an employee is an "extra player," who is subject to the wage order, or a "professional actor," who is exempt, the DLSE looks primarily to the agreement of the parties.
Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

An extra player employed in excess of eight hours in any workday from the time that the extra player is required to and does report until dismissed must be paid 1 1/2 times his or her regular rate of pay for the ninth and tenth hours worked and not less than double the extra player's regular rate of pay for all hours worked thereafter, computed in units of 1/10 of an hour.ⁿ¹³ For an extra player who works more than 40 hours in a workweek for a particular employer, the person's compensation is computed by multiplying the extra player's hourly rate of pay times 40, then adding 1 1/2 times the regular hourly rate of pay for all hours worked in excess of 40 during that workweek. The regular hourly rate is determined by dividing the amount of the extra player's weekly salary by the number of regular hours in a workweek.ⁿ¹⁴ An extra player employed by the week receives payment of daily overtime for all hours or fractions thereof worked beyond eight hours in any workday on which daily overtime occurs, as provided in the wage order. However, overtime payments may not be compounded, and all daily overtime payments made by the employer on the basis specified in the wage order must be applied toward any sum due for weekly overtime.ⁿ¹⁵ For additional discussion of computing the regular rate of pay, see §§ 3.08-3.09.

[b] Agricultural Occupations

An agricultural employeeⁿ¹⁶ who is employed more than 10 hours in one workday or more than six days in one workweek must receive 1 1/2 times his or her regular rate of pay for all hours worked over 10 in any workday and for the first eight hours worked on the seventh day of work. The employee must be paid double his or her regular rate of pay for all hours worked over eight on the seventh day of work in the workweek.ⁿ¹⁷

The overtime provisions applicable to agricultural workers are not applicable to an agricultural worker during any week in which more than half of that employee's worktime is devoted to performing the duties of an irrigator,ⁿ¹⁸ or to employees whose hours of service are regulated by the United States Department of Transportation under Title 49 Code of Federal Regulations §§ 395.1-395.13, or by 13 Cal. Code Reg. § 1200 et seq. (both relating to hours of service of drivers).ⁿ¹⁹ Clerical workers employed by an agricultural company are not considered to be engaged in an agricultural occupation; therefore, they are governed by occupational Wage Order 4-2001,ⁿ²⁰ which applies to clerical workers generally and which requires overtime pay after 8 hours per day or 40 hours per week.ⁿ²¹ For discussion of exemptions to the overtime compensation requirements under California law, see § 3.03[1].

Agricultural employees are exempt from overtime compensation requirements under the FLSA.ⁿ²² Thus, such employees are not subject to the federal provision for overtime compensation after 40 hours worked in a workweek.ⁿ²³

[c] Household Employees

Ordinarily, a live-in household worker must have at least 12 consecutive hours free of duty during each workday of 24 hours, and the total span of hours for a day of work may be no more than 12 hours.ⁿ²⁴ However, the span of hours may exceed 12 if the employee has at least three hours free of duty during the 12-hour span of work.ⁿ²⁵ The off-duty hours need not be consecutive, and the schedule for the hours must be set by mutual agreement of the employer and the employee, provided that an employee who is required or permitted to work during scheduled off-duty hours must be compensated at the rate of 1 1/2 times the employee's regular rate of pay for all such hours worked.ⁿ²⁶

Generally, a live-in employee may not be required to work more than five days in any one workweek without a day off of not less than 24 consecutive hours, except in an emergency.ⁿ²⁷ If the live-in employee does work in excess of these limits, he or she must be compensated for time worked in excess of five workdays in any workweek 1 1/2 times the regular rate of pay for hours worked up to and including nine hours; and for time worked in excess of nine hours on the 6th and 7th workdays, compensation must be double the regular rate of pay.ⁿ²⁸ A non-live-in domestic employee is subject to the eight-hour workday, 40-hour workweek, and overtime provisions that pertain to most California employees.ⁿ²⁹

Live-in domestic service workers are completely exempt from the federal overtime compensation provisions.ⁿ³⁰

[d] Personal Attendants, Camp Counselors, and Resident Managers of Homes for Aged

The wage order governing the "public housekeeping industry"ⁿ³¹ provides an exception to the usual overtime requirements for the following types of employees:ⁿ³²

1. Personal attendants;ⁿ³³
2. Adult employees or minors who are permitted to work as adults who have direct responsibility for minors receiving 24-hour care;
3. Organized camp counselors;ⁿ³⁴ and
4. Resident managers of homes for the aged having less than eight beds.

The above employees are not covered by the usual overtime requirements. However, they may not be employed more than 54 hours nor more than six days in any workweek except in the case of an emergency.ⁿ³⁵ If an emergency arises, the employee may be employed in excess of 54 hours or six days in any workweek if the employee is compensated for all such excess hours and days in the workweek at not less than 1 1/2 times the employee's regular rate of pay.ⁿ³⁶ An emergency is defined as an unpredictable or unavoidable occurrence at unscheduled intervals requiring immediate action.ⁿ³⁷

[e] Employees of Ski Establishments

Since January 1, 2001, the wages, hours, and working conditions of ski establishment employees have been governed by Wage Order No. 10, regulating the amusement and recreation industry. An employer who operates a ski establishment may institute a regularly scheduled workweek of not more than 48 hours during any month of the year when Alpine or Nordic skiing activities, including snowmaking and grooming activities, are actually being conducted by the ski establishment.ⁿ³⁸ However, for any hours worked in excess of ten hours in a day or 48 hours in a workweek, the employer must pay compensation at a rate of not less than 1 1/2 times the employee's regular rate of pay. For purposes of this provision, "ski establishment" means an integrated, geographically limited recreational industry which is comprised of basic skiing facilities, together with all operations and facilities related thereto.ⁿ³⁹ During any other time of the year, employees must be paid overtime compensation according to the general rules under any applicable wage order.ⁿ⁴⁰

There is no specific comparable provision under the FLSA for ski establishments. However, the FLSA does contain a 56-hour workweek provision for employees of an amusement or recreational establishment located in a national park or national forest or on land in the National Wildlife Refuge System if the employer is a private entity engaged in providing such services or facilities under a contract with the Secretary of Interior or the Secretary of Agriculture.ⁿ⁴¹ In addition, employees of certain other seasonal amusement and recreation establishments are completely exempt from both minimum wage and overtime requirements under the FLSA.ⁿ⁴² For discussion of this federal exemption, see Ch. 2.

[f] Health Care Employees and Ambulance Drivers and Attendants

The wage orders regulating the professional, technical, clerical, mechanical, and similar occupationsⁿ⁴³ and the public housekeeping industryⁿ⁴⁴ contain special overtime premium payment provisions for employees in the health care industry. Subject to the election procedures in the wage orders, an employer of employees in the healthcare industry may institute a regularly scheduled alternative workweek schedule that includes work days exceeding ten hours, but not more than 12 hours, within a forty 40-hour workweek without the payment of overtime compensation.ⁿ⁴⁵ However, this alternative schedule is only permissible if:ⁿ⁴⁶

- An employee who works beyond 12 hours in a workday shall be compensated at double the regular rate of pay for all hours in excess of 12;
- An employee who works in excess of 40 hours in a workweek shall be compensated at 1 1/2 times the employee's regular rate of pay for all hours over 40 hours in the workweek;
- Any alternative workweek agreement adopted provides for not less than four hours of work in any shift.
- The same overtime standards apply to employees who are temporarily assigned to a work unit covered by this subsection;
- Any employer who instituted an alternative workweek schedule pursuant to this subsection makes a reasonable effort to find another work assignment for any employee who participated in a valid election prior to 1998 pursuant to the provisions of Wage Orders 4 and 5 and who is unable to work the alternative workweek schedule established.ⁿ⁴⁷

Wage Order Nos. 4-2001 and 5-2001 impose further limitations on employers who require healthcare employees to work overtime hours or shifts. An employee assigned to work a 12-hour shift may not be required to work more than 12 hours in any 24-hour period unless the Chief Nursing Officer or authorized executive declares that:ⁿ⁴⁸

- A "healthcare emergency" exists;ⁿ⁴⁹ and
- All reasonable steps have been taken to provide required staffing, and
- Considering overall operational status needs, continued overtime is necessary to provide required staffing.

As an example of compensation under an alternative workweek schedule, an alternative workweek schedule for registered nurses employed by a particular health care provider provided for three 12-hour days per week at the regular rate of pay, one and one-half times the regular rate of pay for work performed beyond 40 hours in the workweek; and double the regular rate of pay for work in excess of 12 hours in a workday. In that case, under the plain language of Wage Order 5,^{n49.1} overtime was only due after 40 hours of work in a week, rather than for hours worked beyond the 36 in the regular schedule, but less than the 40 hours at which time-and-a-half began.^{n49.2}

No employee is required to work more than 16 hours in a 24-hour period unless by voluntary mutual agreement of the employee and employer; and no employee may work more than 24 consecutive hours until he or she receives not less than eight consecutive hours off-duty immediately following the 24 consecutive hours of work.ⁿ⁵⁰ Notwithstanding this provision, an employee may be required to work up to 13 hours in any 24-hour period if the employee scheduled to relieve the employee does not report for duty as scheduled and does not inform the employer more than two hours in advance that he or she will not be appearing for duty as scheduled.ⁿ⁵¹

Employers of ambulance drivers and attendants in the public housekeeping industry and in the transportation industry are required to provide adequate dormitory and kitchen facilities for those employees, if they are scheduled for 24-hour shifts and have agreed in writing to exclude from daily time worked not more than three meal periods of not more than one hour each and a regularly scheduled uninterrupted sleeping period of not more than eight hours.ⁿ⁵²

[2] Federal Law

[a] Employees of Certain Distributors of Petroleum Products

Special overtime compensation requirements are applicable to employees employed by an independently owned and controlled local enterprise engaged in the wholesale or bulk distribution of petroleum products that has an annual gross sales volume of less than $1 million exclusive of excise taxes, if (1) 75 percent of those sales are made within the state where the enterprise is located, (2) not more than 25 percent of those sales are to customers who are engaged in the bulk distribution of these products for resale, and (3) the employees in question receive compensation for employment in excess of 40 hours in a workweek at a rate not less than 1 1/2 times the federal minimum wage rate applicable to those employees.ⁿ⁵³ⁿ⁵⁴ These employees need not be paid 1 1/2 times their regular rate of pay for hours worked in excess of 40 during a workweek, but must be paid at a rate not less than 1 1/2 times their regular rate for hours worked in excess of 12 in one workday, or for employment in excess of 56 hours in one workweek.ⁿ⁵⁵

Note that there is no such special provision under the California wage orders for petroleum distributors; therefore, employees of such enterprises would appear to be covered by the regular overtime provisions of either the wage order governing the mercantile industryⁿ⁵⁶ or the wage order governing the manufacturing industry,ⁿ⁵⁷ depending on whether the employer produces, as well as sells, such products.

[b] Employees of Public Fire Protection and Law Enforcement Agencies

The usual overtime compensation requirements are not applicable to employees in fire protection or law enforcement activities (including security personnel in correctional institutions) if, after tours of duty of 216 hours within a work period of 28 consecutive days, or the average number of hours for such tours of duty as determined by the Secretary of Labor, or a proportionate ratio of such hours for a work period of less than 28 days but at least seven days, the employee receives compensation at a rate not less than 1 1/2 times his or her regular rate of pay.ⁿ⁵⁸ Employees engaged in fire protection or law enforcement activities in public agencies employing fewer than five employees in such activities are completely exempt from federal overtime compensation requirements.ⁿ⁵⁹ However, the fire protection exemption does not apply to dual function or cross-trained paramedics, who are individuals trained in both fire suppression and advanced life saving.^{n59.1}

Persons directly employed by the State of California, or any county, incorporated city or town, or other "municipal corporation" previously were entirely exempt from the overtime requirements and other provisions of the California wage orders. Since January 1, 2001, these employees no longer have been exempt from the minimum wage provisions and are only partially exempt from the other provisions of the California Wage Orders.ⁿ⁶⁰

[c] Employees in Tobacco Industry

For a period of not more than 14 workweeks in the aggregate in any calendar year, the usual overtime compensation requirements do not apply to employees engaged in providing services necessary and incidental to the sale at auction of specified types of tobacco, or engaged in other specified activities involving the growing, harvesting, and sale of tobacco, if the employee receives 1 1/2 times his or her regular rate of pay for hours worked in excess of 10 hours in a workday, or in excess of 48 hours in a workweek.ⁿ⁶¹ An employer receiving this exemption is not eligible for any other exemptions under Title 29 United States Code, section 207.ⁿ⁶²

The above federal rule is not effective in California because such employees are subject to the California wage orders governing the processing of agricultural products after harvest and would therefore be subject to the eight-hour workday and 40-hour workweek provisions of that wage order.ⁿ⁶³

[d] Employees in Ginning and Marketing of Cotton or Processing of Sugar

Employees engaged in certain activities related to the ginning of cotton or the processing of sugar need not be paid the usual overtime compensation under the FLSA for a period of not more than 14 workweeks in the aggregate, provided that during that time the employee receives 1 1/2 times his or her regular rate of pay for hours worked in excess of 10 in a workday and in excess of 48 in a workweek.ⁿ⁶⁴ An employer who receives an exemption under Title 29 United States Code, section 213(h) is not eligible for any other exemption under Title 29 United States Code, sections 207 or 213.ⁿ⁶⁵

The above federal rule is not effective in California because such employees are subject to the California wage orders governing the manufacturing industry or the processing of agricultural products after harvest and would therefore be subject to the eight-hour workday and 40-hour workweek provisions of those wage orders.ⁿ⁶⁶

[e] Employees of Private Recreational Establishments on National Park Lands

The general federal overtime compensation requirements are not applicable to employees of private amusement or recreational establishments located in a national park or forest or on land in the National Wildlife Refuge Systems and under contract with the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of Agriculture to provide services or facilities, if the employee receives compensation for employment in excess of 56 hours in any workweek at a rate not less than 1 1/2 times his or her regular rate of pay.ⁿ⁶⁷

No such provision exists under the California wage orders, and employees of such establishments are covered by the regular eight-hour workday and 40-hour workweek provisions of the wage order governing the amusement and recreation industry.ⁿ⁶⁸ If, however, the employing facility is a ski establishment, it is now governed by Cal. Wage Order No. 10-2001, and the employer may utilize a longer workweek during the months of actual skiing activities, provided employees are compensated at 1 1/2 times their regular rate of pay for hours worked in excess of ten per day or 48 per week.ⁿ⁶⁹

[f] Employees Receiving Remedial Education

The general federal overtime requirements do not apply to an employee for a period of not more than 10 hours in excess of the usual weekly maximum hour limitation if during that period the employee is receiving remedial education that meets specified requirements.ⁿ⁷⁰ To qualify for the overtime exemption, the remedial education must (1) be provided to employees who lack a high school diploma or educational attainment at the eighth grade level; (2) be designed to provide reading and other basic skills at an eighth grade level or below; and (3) not include job specific training.ⁿ⁷¹ Alternatively, the remedial education may be designed to fulfill the requirements for a high school diploma or a General Education Development (GED) certificate. The remedial education must be conducted during discrete times set aside for the program. To the maximum extent practicable, it must be held away from the employee's usual work station.ⁿ⁷²

Under the wage order, the term "personal attendant" includes baby sitters and means any person employed by a nonprofit organization covered by the wage order to supervise, feed, or dress a child or person who by reason of advanced age, physical disability, or mental deficiency needs supervision and who is required to perform no significant amount of other work. 8 Cal. DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS
Part A. OVERTIME COMPENSATION

1-3 California Employment Law § 3.06

AUTHOR: By Carol S. Sanders, J.D.

§ 3.06 Special Alternative Work Schedules by Agreement

[1] California Law

[a] Agreement for Alternate Work Schedule

[i] In General

Under 14 of the wage orders,ⁿ¹ employers and employees may, by agreement, provide for alternative workweeks with work days longer than eight hours without a right to receive overtime premium if certain criteria are met. When originally enacted, all the wage orders had the same alternate workweek requirements. In 1989, Wage Order Nos. 1-80, 4-80, 5-80, and 10-80 were amended, and in 1990 the IWC amended the alternate workweek provisions of Wage Order No. 9-80. Prior to 1997, the criteria for Wage Order No. 1-89 differed from those in Wage Order Nos. 4-89, 5-89, 9-90, and 10-89. Then in 1997, the IWC adopted further amendments to Wage Order Nos. 1-98, 4-98, 5-98, 7-98, and 9-98. Most recently, in 2000, the IWC adopted Wage Order Nos. 1-2000-13-2000, and Interim Wage Order 2000, all effective January 1, 2001, that contain provisions for alternative workweeks provided that (1) the alternative workweek meets certain requirements, and (2) the alternative workweek schedule is either (a) in effect pursuant to prior rules or (b) adopted pursuant to prescribed election procedures.ⁿ²

[ii] Alternative Workweek

The California wage orders for all occupations except the agricultural and household occupationsⁿ³ and for all industries provide that an employer does not violate the daily overtime provisions of the wage orders if a regularly scheduled, alternative workweek is adopted pursuant to election procedures set forth in the wage orders.ⁿ⁴ Still, under such alternative workweek schedules, work in excess of ten hours per day (or twelve hours per day in the healthcare industry) must be compensated at an overtime rate.ⁿ⁵

Excepting the healthcare industry and certain offshore oil and gas production, drilling, and servicing occupations, which permit twelve-hour workdays in alternative workweek schedules, all work performed in any workday beyond the schedule established by the agreement up to 12 hours a day or beyond 40 hours per week must be paid at one and one-half times the employee's regular rate of pay. All work performed in excess of 12 hours per day and any work in excess of eight hours on those days worked beyond the regularly scheduled number of workdays established by the alternative workweek agreement shall be paid at double the employee's regular rate of pay.ⁿ⁶

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

In the "Statement as to the Basis" that accompanies the new Wage Orders, the IWC has taken the position that, once employees vote for an alternative workweek schedule, the employer must set the actual work days and the starting and ending time(s) of the shift(s) in advance of their commencement. The employer also may change any such schedule(s) with reasonable advance notice, so long as such changes are "occasional." The DLSE takes the position that occasional means not more often than once every four months.ⁿ⁷ Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

Alternative workweek schedules under Wage Order Nos. 1-2001 through 13-2001 must provide for not less than four hours of work in any shift.ⁿ⁸ The employer may, at the request of the employee, substitute one day of work for another day of the same length in the shift provided by the alternative workweek agreement on an occasional basis to meet the personal needs of the employee without the payment of overtime.ⁿ⁹ No hours paid at either one and one-half or double the regular rate of pay shall be included in determining when 40 hours have been worked for the purpose of computing overtime compensation.ⁿ¹⁰

If an employer whose employees have adopted an alternative workweek agreement permitted by the wage order requires an employee to work fewer hours than those that are regularly scheduled by the agreement, the employer shall pay the employee overtime compensation at a rate of one and one-half times the employee's regular rate of pay for all hours worked in excess of eight hours.ⁿ¹¹

An employer may not reduce an employee's regular rate of hourly pay as a result of the adoption, repeal or nullification of an alternative workweek schedule.ⁿ¹² An employer must explore any available reasonable alternative means of accommodating the religious belief or observance of an affected employee that conflicts with an adopted alternative workweek schedule, in the manner provided by subdivision (l) of Section 12940 of the Government Code.ⁿ¹³

Similarly, an employer must make a reasonable effort to find a work schedule not to exceed eight hours in a workday in order to accommodate any affected employee who was eligible to vote in an election authorized by the wage order and who is unable to work the alternative workweek schedule established as the result of that election.ⁿ¹⁴

An employer may, but is not required, to provide a work schedule not to exceed eight hours in a workday to accommodate any employee who is hired after the date of the election and who is unable to work the alternative workweek schedule established by the election.ⁿ¹⁵

New alternative workweek arrangements can be entered into only pursuant to the provisions of the new wage orders.ⁿ¹⁶ Arrangements adopted in a secret ballot election held prior to 1998, or under the rules in effect prior to 1998, and before the performance of the work, are valid after July 1, 2000, provided that the results of the election were reported by the employer to the Division of Labor Statistics and Research by January 1, 2001, in accordance with the requirements of the election procedures set forth in the election procedures section of the wage orders.ⁿ¹⁷ If a health care industry employer implemented a reduced rate for 12-hour shift employees in the last quarter of 1999 and desires to reimplement a flexible work arrangement that includes 12-hour shifts at straight time for the same work unit, the employer must pay a base rate to each affected employee in the work unit that is no less than that employee's base rate in 1999 immediately prior to the date of the rate reduction.ⁿ¹⁸

[iii] Specific Provisions for Certain Industries and Occupations

Alternative workweek schedules for employers covered by wage orders regulating the manufacturing industry, the personal service industry, the canning, freezing and preserving industry, the laundry, linen supply, dry cleaning, and dyeing industry, the mercantile industry, the industries handling products after harvest, the broadcasting industry, the motion picture industry and the industries preparing agricultural products for the market on the farm must provide that employees have not less than two consecutive days off within a workweek.ⁿ¹⁹

It is not a violation of the daily overtime provisions if an employer in the healthcare industry institutes, pursuant to the alternative workweek election procedures, a regularly scheduled alternative workweek schedule that includes work days exceeding 10 hours but not more than 12 hours within a 40-hour workweek without the payment of overtime compensation, provided that:ⁿ²⁰

- (a) An employee who works beyond 12 hours in a workday must be compensated at double the employee's regular rate of pay for all hours in excess of 12;
- (b) An employee who works in excess of 40 hours in a workweek must be compensated at one and one-half times the employee's regular rate of pay for all hours over 40 hours in the workweek;
- (c) Any alternative workweek agreement adopted pursuant to this section must provide for not less than four hours of work in any shift;
- (d) The same overtime standards must apply to employees who are temporarily assigned to a work unit covered by an alternative workweek schedule;
- (e) Any employer who instituted an alternative workweek schedule pursuant to Wage Order No. 4-2001, must make a reasonable effort to find another work assignment for any employee who participated in a valid election prior to 1998 pursuant to the provisions of Wage Order 4 and who is unable to work the alternative workweek schedule established;
- (f) An employer engaged in the operation of a licensed hospital or in providing personnel for the operation of a licensed hospital who institutes, pursuant to a valid order of the Commission, a regularly scheduled alternative workweek that includes no more than three 12-hour workdays, must make a reasonable effort to find another work assignment for any employee who participated in the vote which authorized the schedule and is unable to work the 12-hour shifts. An employer shall not be required to offer a different work assignment to an employee if such a work assignment is not available or if the employee was hired after the adoption of the 12-hour, three-day alternative workweek schedule.

Additionally, no employee assigned to work a 12-hour shift established pursuant to Wage Order No. 4-2001 may be required to work more than 12 hours in any 24-hour period unless the Chief Nursing Officer or authorized executive declares that:ⁿ²¹

- (a) A "healthcare emergency,"ⁿ²² exists, and
- (b) All reasonable steps have been taken to provide required staffing, and
- (c) Considering overall operational status needs, continued overtime is necessary to provide required staffing.

Notwithstanding the provisions regarding a healthcare emergency, an employee may be required to work up to 13 hours in any 24-hour period if the employee scheduled to relieve the subject employee does not report for duty as scheduled and does not inform the employer more than two hours in advance of that scheduled shift that he/she will not be appearing for duty as scheduled.n23

In alternative workweek schedules adopted for employees in the public housekeeping industry, no employee shall be required to work more than 16 hours in a 24-hour period unless by voluntary mutual agreement of the employee and the employer, and no employee shall work more than 24 consecutive hours until the employee receives not less than eight consecutive hours off duty immediately following the 24 consecutive hours of work.n24

If an employee working in the industries preparing agricultural products for the market was voluntarily working an alternative workweek schedule as of July 1, 1999, based on an individual agreement made after January 1, 1998 between the employee and employer, and that agreement provides for a workday of not more than 10 hours, that employee may continue to work that alternative workweek schedule without payment of an overtime rate of compensation if the employee submits, and the employer approves, a written request to do so. Any such request and approval had to be made on or before May 30, 2000. An employee may revoke his or her voluntary authorization to continue such a schedule with 30 days' written notice to the employer.n25

Employees working in offshore oil and gas production, drilling, and servicing occupations, as well as for employees working in onshore oil and gas separation occupations directly servicing offshore operations, may work an alternative workweek schedule of up to 12 hours per day within a 40-hour week without the payment of overtime, provided that such employees are paid an overtime rate of no less than two (2) times their regular rate of pay in excess of the regularly scheduled hours established by the alternative workweek agreement, and for one and one-half (1) times their regular rate of pay for any work in excess of 40 hours per week.

[iv] Election Procedures

The procedure by which an alternative workweek schedule is adopted or repealed is the same for all occupations and industries in which an alternative workweek schedule is available, except for certain on-site occupations in the construction, drilling, logging and mining industries. For example, unlike the other wage orders, Wage Order No. 16-2001 requires the employer to post the results of an alternative workweek election at the job site in an area frequented by employees.n26 The required procedures are:n27

- (1) Each proposal for an alternative workweek schedule must be in the form of a written agreement proposed by the employer. The proposed agreement must designate a regularly scheduled alternative workweek in which the specified number of work days and work hours are regularly recurring. The actual days worked within that alternative workweek schedule need not be specified. The employer may propose a single work schedule that would become the standard schedule for workers in the work unit, or a menu of work schedule options, from which each employee in the unit would be entitled to choose. If the employer proposes a menu of work schedule options, the employee may, with the approval of the employer, move from one menu option to another.
- (2) In order to be valid, the proposed alternative workweek schedule must be adopted in a secret ballot election by at least a 2/3 vote of the affected employees in the work unit. The election must be held during regular working hours at the employees' work site. "Affected employees in the work unit" may include all employees in a readily identifiable work unit, such as a division, a department, a job classification, a shift, a separate physical location, or a recognized subdivision of any such work unit. A work unit may consist of an individual employee as long as the criteria for an identifiable work unit is met.
- (3) Prior to the secret ballot vote, any employer who proposed to institute an alternative workweek schedule must have disclosed in writing to the affected employees the effects of the proposed arrangement on the employees' wages, hours, and benefits. This disclosure must include duly noticed meetings, held at least 14 days prior to voting, for the specific purpose of discussing the effects of the alternative workweek schedule. An employer must provide the written disclosure in a non-English language, as well as in English, if at least five percent of the affected employees primarily speak that non-English language. The employer must mail the written disclosure to employees who do not attend the meeting. Failure to comply with these requirements shall make the election null and void.

(4) Any election to establish or repeal an alternative workweek schedule must be held at the worksite of the affected employees. The employer must bear the costs of conducting any election. Upon a complaint by an affected employee, and after an investigation by the Labor Commissioner, the Labor Commissioner may require the employer to select a neutral third party to conduct the election.

(5) Any type of alternative workweek schedule that is authorized by the Labor Code may be repealed by the affected employees. Upon a petition of 1/3 of the affected employees, a new secret ballot election shall be held and a 2/3 vote of the affected employees is required to reverse the alternative workweek schedule. The election to repeal the alternative workweek schedule must be held not more than 30 days after the petition is submitted to the employer, except that the election must be held not less than 12 months after the date that the same group of employees voted in an election held to adopt or repeal an alternative workweek schedule. The election must take place during regular working hours at the employees' work site. If the alternative workweek schedule is revoked, the employer must comply within 60 days. Upon proper showing of undue hardship, the Division of Labor Standards Enforcement may grant an extension of time for compliance.

(6) Only secret ballots may be cast by affected employees in the work unit at any election held. The results of the election must be reported by the employer to the Division of Labor Statistics and Research within 30 days after the results are final, and the report of election results must be a public document. The report must include the final tally of the vote, the size of the unit, and the nature of the business of the employer.

(7) Employees affected by a change in the work hours resulting from the adoption of an alternative workweek schedule may not be required to work those new work hours for at least 30 days after the announcement of the final results of the election.

(8) Employers may not intimidate or coerce employees to vote either in support of or in opposition to a proposed alternative workweek. No employees may be discharged or discriminated against for expressing opinions concerning the alternative workweek election or for opposing or supporting its adoption or repeal. The employer, however, also may express his or her position concerning the proposed alternative workweek to the affected employees.

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

The Wage Orders are silent on the procedures applicable to employer-initiated termination of alternative workweeks. From an enforcement perspective, the Labor Commissioner will permit an employer to terminate an alternative workweek schedule at any time at its discretion. Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

Regarding employees who work part-time under an alternative workweek schedule (for example, two ten-hour days), the Labor Commissioner has interpreted this type of work schedule to require payment of premium pay for all hours worked on any day beyond the regularly scheduled days, even if the employee works less than eight hours on the extra day and less than 40 hours in the workweek.ⁿ²⁸ The Labor Commissioner reasoned that since the "regularly scheduled hours established by the agreement for that workday" is zero, overtime must be paid for any hours worked on an extra day.ⁿ²⁹

[b] Agreement for Long Workdays for Employees in Mining Operations

Pursuant to Labor Code Section 750.5, employers who employ workers in underground mines or smelters and plants for the reduction or refining of ores may, pursuant to an agreement between the employer and a 2/3 majority of the affected workers, adopt a policy specifying that periods of work may exceed eight hours in a 24-hour period.

Under this extended workday arrangement, employees must be compensated at 1 1/2 times their regular rate of pay for all work performed in any workday in excess of the scheduled hours established by the agreement, up to and including 12 hours, or in excess of 40 hours in one workweek. All work performed in excess of 12 hours in a workday must be compensated at double the regular rate of pay.ⁿ³⁰

The agreement must be confirmed in a secret-ballot election, held during regular working hours,ⁿ³¹ by at least 2/3 of the affected employees.ⁿ³² Affected employees are those employees whose hours are regulated by Chapter 3 of Division 2, Part 1 of the Labor Code, and who have become employed by the employer within 24 hours of the time the election begins.ⁿ³³ A policy adopted pursuant to these provisions is effective only for so long as specified in the agreement, but not to exceed 12 months.ⁿ³⁴

Not later than 14 days prior to the election, the employer must notify affected employees, in writing, of the following: how the proposed new work schedule would affect wages, hours, and benefits;ⁿ³⁵ the right to request a neutral third party to conduct the election;ⁿ³⁶ the right to file a complaint against the employer for election misconduct;ⁿ³⁷ and an explanation of any health or safety considerations of extended work shifts.ⁿ³⁸

The employer also must hold pre-election informational meetings to explain the effect of the proposed work schedule on the hours and compensation of the employees. Notice regarding the time, date, place, and purpose of the meetings and the election must be posted in at least three locations throughout the mine site for at least seven days prior to the election. Failure to comply with the meeting and notice requirements will render the election results null and void.ⁿ³⁹

Under an extended workday agreement, an employer must make a reasonable attempt to place an employee in an alternative work assignment that the employee is capable of performing, provided that the employee was eligible to participate in the election and is unable or unwilling to work the extended schedule. However, an employer is not required to make this accommodation if an alternative work assignment that the employee is capable of performing is not available or if the employee commenced his or her employment after the election.ⁿ⁴⁰

[2] Federal Law

[a] Irregular Work Schedules ("Belo Contracts")

Employees employed pursuant to a bona fide individual contract (oral or written) or a bona fide collective bargaining agreement, whose duties necessitate irregular hours or work, may be employed in excess of the maximum 40-hour workweek if the contract or agreement has been entered into before performance of the work andⁿ⁴¹

1. Specifies a regular rate of pay of not less than the federal statutory minimum hourly rateⁿ⁴² and compensation at not less than 1 1/2 times the specified rate for all hours worked in excess of the applicable statutory maximum workweek; and
2. Provides a weekly guaranty of pay for not more than 60 hours based on the rates specified above.

Contracts or agreements embodying these conditions are known as "Belo" contracts or agreements, after the United States Supreme Court case that validated their use.ⁿ⁴³ For the Belo exemption to apply, straight time as well as overtime hours must be irregular.ⁿ⁴⁴

In the absence of a Belo arrangement, computation on an hourly rate basis of the wages of employees who have irregular hours would vary widely. The Belo arrangement is intended to permit the creation of an artificial "regular rate," and to allow a means for employers to guarantee the same payment each week of at least a fixed amount based on a regular hourly rate for all work performed up to the maximum amount specified in the agreement. Consequently, the employee can rely on a regular weekly income, and the employer retains some control over labor costs.ⁿ⁴⁵

A wage plan must satisfy all the requirements of Title 29, United States Code, Section 207(f) to qualify as exempt from the overtime provisions of the FLSA.ⁿ⁴⁶ For a discussion of computation of the regular rate and overtime compensation for fluctuating workweek schedules under federal law in the absence of a Belo agreement, see § 3.09[2][b][iv].

The guaranteed fixed pay established by the Belo agreement may not cover more than the number of hours specified in the agreement (up to a maximum of 60) at the specified rates.ⁿ⁴⁷ If the employee works more than the specified number of hours, he or she must be paid additional overtime compensation, at the rates specified in the agreement, in addition to the guaranteed amount.ⁿ⁴⁸ However, the employee must be paid at least the full amount guaranteed by the agreement every week in which the employee performs any work for the employer, even if the employee works considerably fewer hours than specified in the agreement.ⁿ⁴⁹

California law contains no exception for an agreement comparable to a Belo agreement. Under certain circumstances, however, the overtime provisions of the California wage orders do not apply to employees covered by collective bargaining agreements.ⁿ⁵⁰ For discussion of this exemption, see § 3.03[1][b][i]. For discussion of the types of alternative workweek agreements that are permissible under California law, see [1], above.

[b] 14-Day Schedules for Hospital Workers

Employers engaged in the operation of a hospital or an institution primarily engaged in the care of sick, aged, or mentally ill residents may, pursuant to an agreement or understanding arrived at between the employer and the employee before performance of the work, establish a work period of 14 consecutive days in lieu of the workweek of seven consecutive days for purposes of overtime computation. Under this schedule, the employee must receive compensation at a rate not less than 1 1/2 times his or her regular rate of pay for employment in excess of eight hours during any workday, and in excess of 80 hours in the 14-day period.ⁿ⁵¹

When a hospital changes its shift schedule to accommodate its employees' scheduling desires, a change in pay rates between the old and new scheduling schemes in an attempt to keep overall pay revenue-neutral does not establish a violation of the FLSA's overtime pay requirements. Thus, for example, in response to nurses' requests for 12-hour shift schedules rather than 8-hour shift schedules, a hospital developed and implemented an optional 12-hour shift schedule and pay plan that did not violate the FLSA. The pay plan provided nurses the option of working a 12-hour shift schedule in exchange for receiving a lower base hourly salary that at all times exceeded the minimum wage set forth by the FLSA and time-and-a-half pay for hours worked in excess of eight per day. The result was that nurses who volunteered for the 12-hour shift schedule made approximately the same amount of money as they made on the 8-hour shift schedule while working the same number of hours and performing the same duties. There was no evidence to suggest the hospital was attempting to avoid paying its employees overtime wages, and there was no authority prohibiting the hospital from paying employees different hourly rates when assigned different shifts.^{n51.1}

California law provides nearly identical provisions for a 14-day workweek for hospital employees.ⁿ⁵²

[c] Employees Covered Under Collective Bargaining Agreement Limiting Hours of Employment

Overtime compensation for hours worked in excess of 40 during the workweek need not be paid to employees employed pursuant to a bona fide collective bargaining agreement that provides either:

1. That no employee shall be employed more than 1,040 hours during any period of 26 consecutive weeks;ⁿ⁵³ or

2. That during a specified period of 52 consecutive weeks the employee will be employed not more than 2,240 hours and guaranteed between 1,840 hours (or not less than 46 weeks at the normal number of work hours per week, but not less than 30 hours per week) and 2,080 hours of employment for which the employee shall receive compensation at rates not less than those applicable under the agreement, and that for all hours in excess of the guaranty that are also in excess of 40 per week, or in excess of 2,080 during the 52-week period, the employee will receive compensation at 1 1/2 times his or her regular rate.ⁿ⁵⁴

Employees covered under one of the above-described collective bargaining agreements must also receive compensation for employment in excess of 12 hours in any workday, and for employment in excess of 56 hours in any workweek, at a rate not less than 1 1/2 times their regular rate of pay.ⁿ⁵⁵

Excepting employees governed by Wage Order No. 14, employees covered under collective bargaining agreements providing for overtime premiums for all overtime hours worked and a regular hourly rate for the employee of not less than 30% more than the state minimum wage are completely exempt from the overtime provisions of the California wage orders.ⁿ⁵⁶ Under Wage Order No. 14, the collective bargaining exception applies if the agreement provides premium wage rates for overtime work and a cash wage rate of not less than one dollar ($1.00) more than the minimum wage.ⁿ⁵⁷ For discussion, see § 3.03[1][b][i].

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS
CHAPTER 3 Overtime Compensation and Regulation of Hours Worked
Part A. OVERTIME COMPENSATION

1-3 California Employment Law § 3.07

AUTHOR: By Carol S. Sanders, J.D.

§ 3.07 Determining Hours Worked

[1] California Law

[a] "Hours Worked" Defined

[i] Employees Generally

In order to determine whether an employer has complied with both its minimum wage and its overtime compensation obligations, it must determine the number of hours worked by the employee during a workweek and during each workday.ⁿ¹ The wage orders broadly define "hours worked" as the time during which an employee is subject to the control of the employer, and includes all the time the employee is suffered or permitted to work, whether or not required to do so.ⁿ² In addition, certain periods of time that may not ordinarily be thought of as worktime must be included in "hours worked," as discussed below.

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

Because "hours worked" under the wage orders include time when the employee is "permitted to work, whether or not required to do so,"ⁿ³ the DLSE takes the position that an employee who works overtime even though not requested to do so must be paid overtime compensation as required by the wage orders if the employer or supervisor knew or had reason to believe that the employee was working and did not prevent the overtime work. The DLSE also takes the position that the mere promulgation of a rule against overtime work is not enough to avoid liability for overtime pay. Management must make every effort to enforce such a rule. Thus, although an employer may discipline an employee for working unauthorized overtime, it cannot avoid payment for overtime it knew or had reason to know was performed.ⁿ⁴ Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

[ii] Professional, Technical, Clerical, Mechanical, and Public Housekeeping Employees in Health Care Industry

A special definition of "hours worked" applies to workers in the health care industry who are in professional, technical, clerical, mechanical, and similar occupations,ⁿ⁵ and public housekeeping workers in the health care industry. For these employees, "hours worked" means the time during which an employee is suffered or permitted to work for the employer, whether or not required to do so, as interpreted in accordance with the provisions of the federal Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA).ⁿ⁶ Whether an employee is subject to the employer's control, such as by beeper or pager, is no longer a factor in determining the number of hours worked.ⁿ⁷

For a discussion of the FLSA provisions governing hours worked, see [2][a], below.

[b] Travel Time

The DLSE's position is that arrival at the designated or prescribed reporting place starts the day's work unless travel time to that place is beyond the time required by the normal or usual commuting distance between home and work. The same rule applies with respect to the end of the day's work.ⁿ⁸ Thus, time spent traveling between home and the usual work place is not counted as hours worked. The fact that the employee commutes in a vehicle that is owned, leased, or subsidized by the employer and is used for the purpose of ridesharing, as defined in Vehicle Code Section 522, does not alter this rule.ⁿ⁹

In the absence of a collective bargaining agreement covering pay for travel time, time spent traveling during either regular working hours or in addition to regular working hours will be counted as hours worked if the travel is done pursuant to the employer's instructions.ⁿ¹⁰ This means that extended travel time is considered hours worked even though no productive work is performed.ⁿ¹¹ In Morillion v. Royal Packing Co.,ⁿ¹² agricultural workers were required by their employer to assemble at one location and be bussed to the job site; they were not permitted to travel to the job site on their own.ⁿ¹³ The Supreme Court found that the time on the bus was compensable.ⁿ¹⁴ On the other hand, if employees are not required to take the employer's bus, time spent on the bus is not compensable.^{n14.1}

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

Morillion v. Royal Packing Co.,ⁿ¹⁵ is significant for two primary reasons. First, Morillion notes that federal and state law regarding travel time differ substantially. Specifically, California has no analogue to the Portal-to-Portal Act.ⁿ¹⁶ Furthermore, the FLSA, with one limited exception for "clothes changing and wash-up time" contains no definition of "hours worked." Although the same term appears in the regulations under the FLSA, it is in a formulation that does not precisely parallel the state definition. Therefore, Morillion finds federal precedent regarding the compensability of commute time to be unpersuasive.

Second, Morillion ⁿ¹⁷ holds that the California wage orders define "hours worked" as covering both "the time that the employee is suffered or permitted to work, whether or not required to do so" and "the time during which an employee is subject to the control of an employer." That is, the state definition of "hours worked" provides two separate and distinct tests for determining the compensability of time. Each of those tests--the "suffered or permitted to work" test and the "control" test--function independently.

Morillion does not stand for the proposition that travel time is compensable--only that compulsory travel time may be compensable. Thus, the Court specially noted that "employers may provide optional free transportation to employees without having to pay them for their travel time, as long as employers do not require employees to use this transportation."^{n17.1} Morillion, however, does stand for the proposition that the "control" test has independent vitality. Therefore, employers are cautioned to review their policies and practices regarding compensable time in light of this development. Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

The existence of a collective bargaining agreement does not necessarily determine the compensability of travel time. If a collective bargaining agreement controls, § 301 of the Labor Management Relations Act will preempt a state law claim. Similarly, if the right exists independently of the collective bargaining agreement, courts still will consider whether it is nevertheless substantially dependent on analysis of a collective-bargaining agreement, in which case the state law claim still is preempted. However, if the state right exists totally independent of the collective bargaining agreement, there is no preemption.ⁿ¹⁸

If the total compensable travel time exceeds eight hours in one day, the employee must be paid 1 1/2 times his or her regular rate of pay for travel in excess of eight hours, less meals, time for relaxation, and the equivalent time that would normally be spent traveling from the employee's residence to his or her regular place of employment.ⁿ¹⁹

■ ILLUSTRATION:

Employee regularly works in San Francisco and his usual hours of employment are 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. The commute time from his home to his usual work location is approximately the same as the time from his home to the San Francisco airport. Employee is given a special one-day assignment in the desert east of San Diego, with instructions to leave San Francisco at 8 a.m. Employee leaves his home at 8 a.m., arrives at his work destination at noon, completes his assignment at 3 p.m., and arrives back at home in San Francisco at 9 p.m., making the best transportation connections he can. All the time between 8 a.m. and 9 p.m., including travel time, counts as hours worked except the travel time between Employee's home and the San Francisco airport and the usual meal time (unless Employee performs work for Employer during the meal period).

[c] Meal Periods

An employer cannot require any employee to work during any meal mandated by an applicable order of the Industrial Welfare Commission.ⁿ²⁰ If an employer fails to provide a non-exempt employee a meal period in accordance with an applicable order of the Industrial Welfare Commission, the employer must pay the employee one additional hour of pay at the employee's regular rate of compensation for each work day that the meal period is not provided.ⁿ²¹ The additional hour of pay required for failure to provide a meal period constitutes wages, not a penalty, so that a three-year statute of limitation applies to actions to collect the additional pay, rather than a one-year statute of limitations.^{n21.1}

If the employee is not relieved of all duty during the 30-minute meal period required under the wage orders,ⁿ²² the meal period is considered an "on-duty" meal period and counted as time worked.ⁿ²³ An "on-duty" meal period is permitted under the wage orders only when the nature of the work prevents an employee from being relieved of all duty and when a written agreement between the parties provides for a paid on-duty meal period.ⁿ²⁴

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

Although not directly stated in the wage orders, the DLSE and one court of appeal consider a meal period to be "on-duty" (and therefore counted toward hours worked) if an employee is not permitted to leave his or her work station or the employer's premises, even if the employee is otherwise relieved of all duties.ⁿ²⁵ Furthermore, even if not "on-duty," a meal period will be counted as hours worked if it is less than the 30-minute minimum required by the wage orders. By contrast, under the FLSA, a "bona fide meal period," which is excluded from hours worked, may exist even though the employee is not permitted to leave the premises, as long as the employee is otherwise completely relieved from his or her duties.ⁿ²⁶ Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.^{n26.1}

In determining whether restrictions on a meal period are sufficient to make the period "on duty," a two-step analysis is required. First, the restrictions must be primarily directed toward the fulfillment of the employer's requirements and policies. Second, the employees' time must be so substantially restricted that they are unable to engage in private pursuits.ⁿ²⁷ In Madera Police Officers Assn. v. City of Madera,ⁿ²⁸ the California Supreme Court found that police officers were "on duty" during meal periods scheduled by the watch commanders, when the officers were required to remain on call, leave a telephone number where they could be reached, and respond to citizen inquiries and crimes committed in their presence, and were prohibited from conducting personal business during the meal period if in uniform.ⁿ²⁹ The Court disapproved the analysis applied in Fowler v. State Personnel Board,ⁿ³⁰ which reached a contrary result in a similar fact situation, insofar as the Fowler court evaluated individual restrictions independently, without consideration of the net impact on the officer's time.ⁿ³¹

The state requirements regarding compensation for meal periods are similar to those under the FLSA, which require that meal periods during which the employee is required to perform any duties, including inactive duties (such as a requirement that the employee remain at a desk or machine while eating) be counted as worktime. However, the FLSA does not restrict an employer's right to require on-duty meals, as long as they are included in hours worked.ⁿ³²

[d] Rest Periods

The wage orders require that employers authorize and permit rest periods of a minimum duration during the workday. An employer cannot require an employee to work during any rest period mandated by an applicable order of the Industrial Welfare Commission.ⁿ³³ If an employer fails to provide an employee a rest period in accordance with an applicable order of the Industrial Welfare Commission, the employer must pay the employee one additional hour of pay at the employee's regular rate of compensation for each work day that the rest period is not provided.ⁿ³⁴

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

Because an employer is not required to record time taken for rest periods, it is reasonable to expect that the Labor Commissioner will pursue rest period claims under Lab. Code § 226.7 only if an employee provides evidence that an employer has denied rest periods that the employee has sought to take.
Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

Authorized rest period time must be counted as hours worked, for which there may be no deduction from wages.ⁿ³⁵ By statute, California also requires employers to provide a reasonable amount of break time for an employee to express breast milk for an infant child.ⁿ³⁶

For discussion of the requirements for rest periods, see § 3.24.

[e] Standby or On-Call Time

[i] Generally

Neither the wage orders nor the Labor Code define standby time, or establish rules for determining when it must be included in hours worked. However, the DLSE's policies and interpretations manual states that "free" on-call or standby time occurs when the employee is not required to remain on the employer's premises and is free to engage in personal pursuits, subject only to the requirement that the employee can be reached if needed. Free on-call or standby time is not considered hours worked.ⁿ³⁷

According to the Labor Commissioner, the central inquiry is whether the time in question is better characterized as "controlled" or "uncontrolled." For example, an employee who is required to stay at home and keep the telephone line free for calls from the employer is not free to engage in personal pursuits. Such on-call time would be considered hours worked. However, beeper systems or arrangements for periodic call-ins that allow normal movement in the community are alternatives that usually do allow the employee to engage in personal pursuits.^{n37.1} The bottom-line consideration is the amount of control the employer exercises over the employees' activities.ⁿ³⁸

The state guidelines are similar to the federal regulations on standby time, pursuant to which an employee who is not required to remain on the employer's premises but merely required to leave word at home or with company officials where he or she may be reached is not working while on call.ⁿ³⁹ However, the state guidelines' emphasis on freedom of movement for the employee during "free" standby time suggest that a requirement that the employee remain at a place where he or she may be reached during on-call time might be viewed as worktime under state law, although not under federal law. This view does not necessarily apply to at least two types of employees--certain health care industry employees and resident employees in the public housekeeping industry.ⁿ⁴⁰

Standby time is to be distinguished from reporting time. All of the wage orders mandate that employees be paid for a minimum amount of hours if the employee is required to report to work and does report, but is either not put to work, or is furnished less than a specified amount of work.ⁿ⁴¹ Only the hours that the employee actually worked or waited on the employer's premises after reporting need be counted as hours worked for purposes of computing overtime, even though the employee may be required to be compensated in excess of those hours. Under both federal and state law, reporting time payments made pursuant to the wage orders that are in excess of actual worktime are considered payments made other than for hours worked and are excluded from computation of the employee's regular rate.ⁿ⁴²

For a discussion of reporting time pay requirements under California law, see Ch. 2.

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

Except for household occupations,ⁿ⁴³ the wage orders generally do not specify whether employees who are "on duty" (i.e., required to remain on the premises) for extended periods of time (such as building security personnel, hotel desk clerks, firefighters, and ambulance drivers) must be compensated for free time, other than meal periods, that may occur during the shift. In practice, the DLSE applies a 24-hour test. If the employee is required to be on duty for less than 24 hours, the employee is considered to be working for the entire period (except for scheduled meal periods that meet the requirements set out in [c], above), even though the employee is permitted to sleep or engage in other activities when not busy. On the other hand, if the employee's on-duty period extends for 24 hours or more, both sleep time and uninterrupted meal periods of at least 30 minutes may be excluded from working time. The sleep time exclusion may not exceed eight hours during each 24 hours of duty, and the employer must furnish adequate sleeping facilities. If the employee does not have an opportunity to get at least five hours of sleep, the entire sleeping period must be counted as hours worked. The five hours need not necessarily be continuous and uninterrupted, but if interruptions are so frequent as to prevent reasonable periods of sleep totaling five hours, the entire period is considered hours worked.ⁿ⁴⁴ Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

[ii] Callbacks

Time spent on callbacks to the employer during a standby period is counted as time worked, and the employee who is called back to work must be paid at appropriate rates for the time worked, including a reasonable time for travel. If an employee's activities are restricted by the employer pending the second reporting time, then the intervening on-call or standby period is counted as time worked.ⁿ⁴⁵

[iii] Resident Employees in Public Housekeeping Industry

The wage order governing the "public housekeeping" industry (which covers a wide variety of facilities or businesses that provide meals and/or accommodations)ⁿ⁴⁶ provides that in the case of an employee who is required to reside on the premises, "hours worked" includes time spent carrying out assigned duties.ⁿ⁴⁷ Sleep time, meal periods, and other nonactive times that the employee can use for private pursuits (such as personal cooking and cleaning or watching television) are not considered hours worked.ⁿ⁴⁸

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

In determining hours worked for resident employees such as motel or apartment house managers, the DLSE considers such factors as (1) the number of units in the motel or apartment building; (2) the duties assigned by the employer and a realistic estimate of the time necessary to perform those duties; (3) the employer's instructions concerning the showing of vacant apartments or motel rooms, including the amount of discretion the employee has in being available to show apartments or rooms, or to turn on the "no vacancy" sign; (4) the occupancy level; (5) the nature and transiency of tenants; (6) the amount of nonworktime during the day that the employee can use for private pursuits on or off the premises; (7) the frequency and nature of interruptions at night and the amount of time required to handle those interruptions; (8) the frequency and nature of the employer's supervision; and (9) any unusual restrictions imposed by the employer on the nonworking hours of the employee. To avoid any disputes regarding the computation of hours worked for such employees, employers are advised to prepare an accurate written list of the employee's duties, including a realistic estimate of the amount of time necessary to perform each of those duties, and make clear to the employee in advance the employer's policy regarding payment for "nonactive" periods. Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

In at least one case,ⁿ⁴⁹ the DLSE took a position regarding Wage Order No. 5-89ⁿ⁵⁰ that was then contrary to its existing operations and procedures manual, which provided that a resident employee need not be paid for time he or she is required to be on the premises but is free to engage in personal activities.ⁿ⁵¹ The case involved a live-in motel employee who was expected to remain on the motel premises 24 hours a day but whose actual duties required, on average, less than 5 hours a day to perform. The employee had filed a claim for overtime pay, which the Labor Commissioner granted, and his employer appealed. At the ensuing trial, the Labor Commissioner, who represented the employee, unsuccessfully argued that Wage Order No. 5-2000 should be interpreted to mean that the employee was entitled to compensation for the entire time he spent at the motel, less certain allowances for sleep and meals.ⁿ⁵² The Labor Commissioner pursued this same argument on appeal, where it was equally unsuccessful. The appellate court rejected the Labor Commissioner's interpretation as contrary to the plain meaning of the wage order.ⁿ⁵³ The court also found the interpretation unconvincing because, as the Labor Commissioner had admitted at trial, it relies solely on the first clause of the wage order, which provides that employees must be paid for time during which they are subject to the employer's control, and thereby renders redundant the second clause, which provides that resident employees must be paid only for time spent carrying out assigned duties.ⁿ⁵⁴ Finally, the court refused to defer to the Labor Commissioner's interpretation because of the inconsistency between the DLSE's manual and the Labor Commissioner's position in this case, which the Labor Commissioner tried to explain by claiming that the DLSE's own manual was "inartfully drafted."ⁿ⁵⁵

Similarly, employees of a property management company who were required to live on the premises and to be on call and respond to emergencies were not entitled to overtime compensation for the time spent on call, but not responding to emergencies. The employees were able to attend to personal activities while they were not responding to an emergency, so long as they remained available to respond, i.e., within audible range of the telephone and alarm. The fact that they were required to remain in their apartment or the building office in order to hear the telephone and alarms did not make them more like a security guard or a receptionist (who had to remain at a duty station) than like the motel clerk in Brewer (who could enjoy the amenities of the motel). Like the motel clerk in Brewer, the employees could leave the premises if arrangements were made for their replacements.^{n55.1}

[iv] Professional, Technical, Clerical, Mechanical, and Public Housekeeping Employees in the Health Care Industry

For workers in the health care industry who are in professional, technical, clerical, mechanical, and similar occupations, and for public housekeeping workers in the health care industry, "hours worked" means the time during which an employee is suffered or permitted to work for the employer, whether or not required to do so, as interpreted in accordance with the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA).ⁿ⁵⁶ Therefore, in conformity with the FLSA guidelines, the fact that an employee is subject to his or her employer's control during free on-call or standby time because of the use of a beeper or pager or otherwise does not necessarily result in classification of that time as hours worked.ⁿ⁵⁷

[f] Time Spent in Adjusting Grievances

There are no state rules or guidelines regarding whether time spent in adjusting grievances will be considered worktime. Under federal law, time spent in adjusting grievances during the time the employees are required to be on the premises is hours worked, except that, if a union is involved, the determination of whether the time should be compensable is left to the collective bargaining process.ⁿ⁵⁸

However, a California court has held that, at least in regard to time spent participating in "walkaround inspections" authorized by the California Occupational Safety and Health Act,ⁿ⁵⁹ the employee must be compensated.ⁿ⁶⁰ The court in that case expressly rejected contrary holdings by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit.ⁿ⁶¹

[g] Work Recesses

California Wage Order Nos. 3-2001 (governing the canning, freezing, and preserving industry), 8-2001 (governing the industries handling products after harvest), and 13-2001 (governing agricultural occupations) provide that an employer may declare a "work recess" of 1/2 hour or more in addition to the meal period(s).ⁿ⁶² These recesses need not be included in hours worked if (1) the employer notifies the employees of the time to report back for work, (2) the employer permits the employees to leave the premises during the recess, (3) there are no more than two such recess periods within one shift, and (4) the total duration of the recess periods does not exceed two hours.ⁿ⁶³ Work stoppages of less than 1/2 hour may not be deducted from hours worked.ⁿ⁶⁴

[h] Voting Time

Employers are required to allow employees compensable time off of up to two hours for the purpose of voting in a statewide election if the employee does not have sufficient time during nonworking hours to vote.ⁿ⁶⁵

[i] Attendance at Judicial Proceedings

Although employers are prohibited by statute from discharging or "in any manner discriminating against" an employee for taking time off to serve as required by law on a jury or to appear as a witness,ⁿ⁶⁶ there is no requirement that the time taken be counted as compensable worktime.

Under California law, an employer may not deduct from an exempt employee's salary for jury duty or witness time.ⁿ⁶⁷

An employer must allow an employee who is a victim of a crime, an immediate family member of a victim,ⁿ⁶⁸ a registered domestic partner of a victim,ⁿ⁶⁹ or the child of a registered domestic partner of a victim to be absent from work in order to attend judicial proceedings related to that crime.ⁿ⁷⁰ For these purposes, a victim is defined as a person against whom one of the following crimes has been committed:ⁿ⁷¹

- (A) A violent felony, as defined in Penal Code section 667.5(c).
- (B) A serious felony, as defined in Penal Code section 1192.7(c).
- (C) A felony provision of law proscribing theft or embezzlement.

Before an employee may be absent from work for one of these reasons, the employee must give the employer a copy of the notice of each scheduled proceeding provided to the victim by the agency responsible for providing notice, unless advance notice is not feasible. When advance notice is not feasible or an unscheduled absence occurs, the employer may not take any action against the employee if the employee, within a reasonable time after the absence, provides the employer with documentation evidencing the judicial proceeding from a specified entity.ⁿ⁷² An employee may elect to use accrued paid vacation time, personal leave time, sick leave time, compensatory time off, or unpaid leave time, unless otherwise provided by a collective bargaining agreement, for any of these absences. The entitlement of any employee under Labor Code section 230.2 may not be diminished by any collective bargaining agreement term or condition.ⁿ⁷³ The employer must keep confidential any records regarding the employee's absence from work.ⁿ⁷⁴ The employer may not discharge from employment or in any manner discriminate against an employee, in compensation or other terms, conditions, or privileges of employment, including, but not limited to the loss of seniority or precedence, because the employee is absent from work pursuant to Labor Code section 230.2.ⁿ⁷⁵ Any employee who is discharged, threatened with discharge, demoted, suspended, or in any other manner discriminated or retaliated against in the terms and conditions of employment by his or her employer because the employee exercised his or her rights under Labor Code section 230.2 may file a complaint with the Division of Labor Standards Enforcement pursuant to Labor Code section 98.7. Notwithstanding any time limitation in Section 98.7, an employee filing a complaint has one year from the date of occurrence of the violation to file his or her complaint.ⁿ⁷⁶

[j] Other Activities

Neither the Labor Code nor the wage orders specifically address the question of whether other, work-related activities, such as washing up, changing uniforms, and attending training seminars, must be counted as hours worked. However, the DLSE policies and interpretations manual provides that time spent washing up at work and changing uniforms is compensable if it is compelled by the necessities of the employer's business.ⁿ⁷⁷ With respect to other activities, in some cases the DLSE will rely on analogous rules followed by the Wage and Hour Division under the FLSA, although the federal regulations are not binding on the DLSE.ⁿ⁷⁸ For discussion of FLSA regulations regarding hours worked, see [2], below.

By statute, time off work for an employee to enroll and participate in an adult literacy education program, whether provided on or off the jobsite, need not be counted as hours worked.ⁿ⁷⁹

[k] Absences From Work

There is no requirement in either the Labor Code or the wage orders that excused absences from work by private employees (such as for holidays, vacations, or illnesses) be included as worktime. In this regard, state and federal policy are the same. Nothing in California law precludes an employer from following the established federal policy permitting employers to deduct from exempt employees' vacation leave, when available, on account of partial-day absences from work.^{n79.1} For discussion of absences from work under federal law, see [2][o], below.

[l] Lost Work Time Made Up by Health Care Industry Employees

Employees in the health care industry may make up work time lost as a result of personal obligations, if the employee requests permission in writing and the employer concurs.ⁿ⁸⁰ This arrangement applies to health-care workers in professional, technical, clerical, mechanical, and similar occupations,ⁿ⁸¹ and to health-care workers in the public housekeeping industry. This lost time cannot exceed two hours in any one workweek or, where applicable, four hours in any 14-day work period,ⁿ⁸² and must be made up during that workweek or work period. The overtime provisions of the wage orders governing these two types of employees do not apply to this make-up time.ⁿ⁸³

[2] Federal Law

[a] Working ("Employment") Time Defined

In order to determine whether an employer has complied with its minimum wage and overtime compensation obligations under the FLSA, the number of hours that the employer has "employed" an employee during a given workweek must be determined.ⁿ⁸⁴ The FLSA defines the word "employ" as including "to suffer or permit to work."ⁿ⁸⁵ Thus, work not requested but suffered or permitted must be counted as worktime,ⁿ⁸⁶ including work performed at home that the employer knows or has reason to believe is being performed.ⁿ⁸⁷ An employee's failure to report overtime work will not defeat a claim for overtime if the employer knew that the employee worked the unreported overtime.ⁿ⁸⁸ The mere promulgation of a rule against overtime work is not enough. Management has the power to enforce that rule and must make every effort to do so.ⁿ⁸⁹ Conversely, work performed without the employer's knowledge need not be counted in determining entitlement to overtime compensation under the FLSA,ⁿ⁹⁰ even if the extra work was undertaken because of the difficulty of meeting the employer's production standards.ⁿ⁹¹

The workweek ordinarily includes all the time during which an employee is necessarily required to be on the employer's premises, on duty, or at a prescribed work place.ⁿ⁹² Work time may include waiting time when the employee does nothing other than being ready to serve at the employer's direction, since "readiness to serve may be hired, quite as much as service itself ...".ⁿ⁹³ However, travel time to and from work and certain "preliminary" and "postliminary" activities performed prior or subsequent to the workday are eliminated from working time under the Portal-to-Portal Act.ⁿ⁹⁴

If an individual works for more than one company at a time, it is necessary to undertake two separate inquiries to determine whether the employers are jointly responsible, separately responsible or not responsible for FLSA violations that their employees have alleged against them collectively.ⁿ⁹⁵ The first inquiry is whether the employees can prove that they or their employers are subject to the jurisdiction of the FLSA. The second inquiry is whether the employers are "joint for the purposes of sharing individually and collectively in any underlying FLSA liability."ⁿ⁹⁶

In Chao v. A-One Medical Services, Inc., plaintiffs worked for two employers, one of which met the jurisdictional prerequisite for FLSA "enterprise" coverage (annual gross revenues of $500,000 or greater) and one of which did not. Thus, a question arose whether the larger and the smaller company were a "single enterprise," obviating the need to establish the "enterprise" coverage of the smaller company alone. To answer that question, the court applied the three-part test found in the FLSA at 29 C.F.R. § 203(r)(1): (1) "related activities"; (2) "unified operations or common control"; and (3) "common business purpose." The court found that plaintiffs had established all three elements of the test and, therefore, agreed with the district court that the FLSA applied to both employers. The court then addressed the question whether the two employers for whom the plaintiffs worked were "joint employers" for the purposes of assessing liability jointly and severally.ⁿ⁹⁷ The court rejected use of the eight-part "economic realities" test, stating that the economic realities test was applicable only to circumstances in which one employer contracted for workers from another employer. Instead, the court applied the three-part test set forth in 29 C.F.R. § 791.2(a).ⁿ⁹⁸ The court concluded that the plaintiffs had met their burden of demonstrating joint employer status, thus resulting in an aggregation of the work done for both employers.

[b] Portal-to-Portal Act: Travel Time and Preliminary or Postliminary Activities Excluded From Working Time

[i] Generally

Pursuant to the Portal-to-Portal Act,ⁿ⁹⁹ an employer need not pay to an employee minimum wages or overtime compensation under the FLSA for or on account of the following activities engaged in by the employee:ⁿ¹⁰⁰

1. Walking, riding, or traveling to and from the actual place of performance of the principal activity or activities that the employee is employed to perform; and
2. Activities that are "preliminary to or postliminary to" the principal activity or activities that the employee is employed to perform.

However, these activities must be taken into account in determining compliance with federal minimum wages and overtime compensation requirements if they are compensable (1) by an express provision of a written or nonwritten contract in effect at the time of the activity between the employee, or his or her agent or collective bargaining representative, and the employer;ⁿ¹⁰⁰ (2) by a custom or practice in effect at the time of the activity, which is not inconsistent with the written or nonwritten contract referred to in (1).ⁿ¹⁰¹ For a discussion of compensable and noncompensable travel time, see [c], below.

[ii] What Constitutes "Principal Activities"

For purposes of the Portal-to-Portal Act, the term "principal activities" includes all activities that are an integral part of a principal activity.ⁿ¹⁰² "Principal activities" is to be liberally construed to include any work of consequence performed for an employer no matter when the work is performed.^{n102.1} Preparatory activities, which the Administrator has always regarded as compensable under the FLSA, remain so under the Portal-to-Portal Act, regardless of contrary custom or contract.ⁿ¹⁰³ Thus, for example, an employee who, at the commencement of the workday, oils, greases, or cleans the lathe machine he or she operates is engaging in an integral part of the principal activity of operating the machine. A garment worker in a textile mill who is required to report early to distribute clothing at the workbenches of other employees and to ready machines for operation by other employees is also engaging in an integral part of a principal activity.

Activities such as checking in and out and waiting to do so would not ordinarily be regarded as integral parts of a principal activity.ⁿ¹⁰⁴ Under the FLSA, commuting is presumptively noncompensable and is clearly distinct from principal activities.

[iii] Changing Clothes and Washing Up

Activities closely related to a principal activity constitute an integral part of the employee's principal activity. Time spent changing into clothes required for the performance of the principal activity is compensable as an integral part of that activity, but changing clothes merely for the convenience of the employee is considered a noncompensable "preliminary" or "postliminary" activity.ⁿ¹⁰⁵ Changing clothes as a cautionary measure after working in a toxic environment has been deemed an integral part of a principal activity and therefore must be counted as compensable worktime under the FLSA.ⁿ¹⁰⁶

However, regardless of the reason for changing clothes or washing up at the beginning and end of the workday, time spent in doing so will be excluded from measured working time if it has been excluded during the week involved by the express terms of or by custom or practice under a bona fide collective bargaining agreement applicable to the employee.ⁿ¹⁰⁷ During any week in which clothes changing or washing time was not so excluded, it must be counted as hours worked if the changing of clothes or washing is indispensable to the performance of the employee's work, is required by law or by the rules of the employer, or was a preliminary or postliminary activity compensable pursuant to the Portal-to-Portal Act.ⁿ¹⁰⁸ Putting on and taking off personal protective equipment, i.e., materials worn by an individual to provide a barrier against exposure to workplace hazards, does not constitute "changing clothes" as that phrase is used in 29 U.S.C. section 203(o) to describe certain noncompensable activities.ⁿ¹⁰⁹

In IBP v. Alvarez,ⁿ¹¹⁰ the United States Supreme Court agreed with the Ninth Circuit and held that under the FLSA as amended by the Portal-to-Portal Act of 1947, with respect to activities of employees who must don specialized or elaborate protective clothing on the employer's premises before they engage in the productive labor for which they are primarily hired, the time employees spend walking between the changing area and the production area, i.e., postdonning and predoffing walking time, is compensable under the FLSA. In reaching this conclusion the Court held first that activities, such as the donning and doffing of specialized or elaborate protective gear, that are performed either before or after the regular work shift, on or off the production line, are compensable under the portal-to-portal provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act if those activities are an integral and indispensable part of the principal activities for which covered workers are employed and are not specifically excluded by Section 4(a)(1) of the Portal-to-Portal Act.ⁿ¹¹¹

The Court then found that the locker rooms where special or elaborate safety gear is donned and doffed are the relevant place of performance of the principal activity the employee was employed to perform within the meaning of section 4(a)(1) of the Portal-to-Portal Act.ⁿ¹¹² Walking to that place before starting work is excluded from FLSA coverage, but the statutory text does not exclude walking from that place to another area within the plant immediately after the workday has commenced.ⁿ¹¹³ The Court distinguished its holding in Anderson v. Mt. Clemens Pottery,ⁿ¹¹⁴ which led to the adoption of the Portal-to-Portal Act, that the FLSA mandated compensation for the time that employees spent walking from time clocks located near the plant entrance to their respective places of work prior to the start of their productive labor. The Court found a critical difference between the walking in Anderson, which preceded the employees' principal activity because it occurred before the workday began, and the walking in IBP, which occurred after the workday began and before it ended. The Court found the walking time in IBP to be more comparable to time spent walking between two different positions on an assembly line than to the prework walking in Anderson.ⁿ¹¹⁵

The Court also held that regulations adopted by the Secretary of Labor in 1947 supported the view that when donning and doffing of protective gear are compensable activities, they may also define the outer limits of the workday. Under those regulations, the few minutes spent walking between the locker rooms and the production area are similar to the time spent walking between two different workplaces on the disassembly line.ⁿ¹¹⁶

The Court further held, however, that the time employees spend waiting to put on the protective gear, i.e., time that elapses before the principal activity of donning integral and indispensable gear, is not compensable.^{n116.1} Predonning waiting time, which is two steps removed from productive activity on the assembly line, is not a principal activity under § 4(a). The fact that certain preshift activities are necessary for employees to engage in their principal activities does not mean that those preshift activities are integral and indispensable to a principal activity. For example, even though walking from a time clock near the factory gate to a workstation is certainly necessary for employees to begin their work, the Portal-to-Portal Act evinces Congress' intent to repudiate Anderson's holding that such walking time was compensable under the FLSA. The Court noted that the analysis would be different if the employer required its employees to arrive at a particular time in order to begin waiting.^{n116.2} In this regard, the Court found pertinent a regulation characterizing the time employees must spend waiting to check in or to receive their paychecks as generally a preliminary activity covered by the Portal-to-Portal Act. The Court found that regulation fully consistent with statutory provisions allowing the compensability of such collateral activities to depend on either the agreement of the parties or the custom and practice in the particular industry.ⁿ¹¹⁷

In Ballaris v. Wacker Siltronic Corp.,^{n117.1} the Ninth Circuit held that an employer should have compensated employees for time spent changing into and out of their plant uniforms, because the employer required the employees to conduct the changing activities on-site. The employer received the primary benefit from the dress it ordered, because the uniforms were required to limit potential contamination and to assist the employer in ensuring the quality of the silicon chips manufactured at its plant; further, the uniforms were mandated to keep the company competitive, to promote a clean internal philosophy, and to attract favorable industry attention. Unlike Alvarez, however, the time involved was not insubstantial nor was it difficult to monitor.

[c] Travel Time

[i] Effect of Portal-to-Portal Act

As noted in [b][i], above, the Portal-to-Portal Actⁿ¹¹⁸ provides in part that no employer will be liable for the failure to pay the minimum wage or overtime compensation for time spent in walking, riding, or traveling to and from the actual place of performance of the employee's principal activity or activities, either prior to the commencement of the workday or subsequent to the time on the workday at which the employee ceases the principal activity or activities, unless that time is made compensable by express contract or by custom or practice not inconsistent with an express contract.ⁿ¹¹⁹ Thus certain travel time at the commencement or cessation of the workday, which was originally considered as working time under the FLSA (such as underground travel in minesⁿ¹²⁰ or walking from time clock to workbench),ⁿ¹²¹ need not be counted as working time unless it is compensable by contract, custom, or practice.ⁿ¹²²

The Employee Commuting Flexibility Act ("ECFA").^{n122.1} To be entitled to compensation for "off-the-clock" activities under ECFA, the employee must show that those activities are related to the employee's "principal activities" for the employer. In addition, activity that might otherwise be compensable is not if the time involved is de minimis.^{n122.2}

[ii] Ordinary Travel Between Home and Work

Normal travel time to and from work from the employee's home is not considered worktime for purposes of the FLSA regardless of whether the employee works at a fixed location or at different job sites.ⁿ¹²³ Travel need not occur frequently in order to be "normal" or "ordinary." For example, the Ninth Circuit has held that travel to mandatory off-site training occurring only a few times a year is noncompensable home-to-work travel, even though that time exceeds the employee's regular commute.ⁿ¹²⁴ Further, ordinary home-to-work travel is not considered worktime for purposes of the FLSA, even if the employer agrees to pay for the time.ⁿ¹²⁵ Activities incidental to securing entry to the employer's premises will also be considered noncompensable travel time.ⁿ¹²⁶

[iii] Emergency Travel Between Home and Work

Under some circumstances, travel from home to work constitutes worktime, as, for example, when an employee returns home after completing the workday and is called out to travel a substantial distance to perform an emergency job for one of the employer's customers. However, the Wage and Hour Division has not taken a position on whether travel to and from work by an employee who receives an emergency call outside of regular hours to report back to his or her regular place of business to do a job constitutes working time.ⁿ¹²⁷

[iv] Special One-Day Assignments in Another City

If an employee regularly works at a fixed location in one city, and is given a special one-day work assignment in another city, the travel time involved is considered worktime.ⁿ¹²⁸ Because, except for the special assignment, the employee would have had to report to his or her regular place of work, the travel time between the employee's home and a point of departure or arrival (such as a railroad depot) may be excluded as ordinary home-to-work travel.ⁿ¹²⁹ Similarly, the usual meal time is excludable.ⁿ¹³⁰

[v] Travel That Is Part of Work

Time spent by an employee in travel as part of his or her principal activity, such as traveling to different job sites during the workday, or reporting to meeting places to receive instructions, perform work, or pick up tools, is part of the day's work, and must be counted as hours worked regardless of contract, custom, or practice.ⁿ¹³¹

[vi] Travel Away From Home Community

Travel that keeps an employee away from home overnight is worktime when it cuts across the employee's regular workday and corresponding hours on nonworking days, excluding regular meal periods.ⁿ¹³² Thus, if an employee regularly works from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Monday through Friday, travel time during these hours is worktime on the weekends as well as on the other days. As an enforcement policy, however, the Wage and Hour Division will not consider as worktime time spent in travel away from home as a passenger on an airplane, train, boat, bus, or automobile outside of regular working hours.ⁿ¹³³ If the employee is offered public transportation but requests permission to drive his or her car instead, the employer may count as hours worked either the actual time spent driving the car or the time that would have been consumed during working hours if the employee had used the public conveyance.ⁿ¹³⁴

[vii] Work Performed While Traveling

Any work that the employee is required to perform while traveling must be counted as hours worked.ⁿ¹³⁵ An employee who operates a vehicle, boat, or airplane, or who is required to ride along as an assistant or helper, is considered to be working except during bona fide meal periods or when he or she is permitted to sleep in adequate facilities furnished by the employer.ⁿ¹³⁶

[d] Waiting or Standby Time

[i] Generally

Whether waiting time must be counted as time worked under the FLSA depends on the particular circumstances.ⁿ¹³⁷ The test is whether the time spent waiting is primarily for the benefit of the employer and its business.ⁿ¹³⁸ The determination involves scrutinizing the agreements between the parties, the conduct of the parties toward the agreements, the nature of the employee's duties, and their relation to the waiting time.ⁿ¹³⁹

In the case of homeworkers who bring their completed work to the employer, the Wage and Hour Division's position is that compelled waiting time after arriving at the employer's premises at the scheduled time is compensable. However, time spent waiting is not considered worktime if the homeworker reports at a time that is not prearranged.ⁿ¹⁴⁰ Employees of temporary help firms may enter into agreements with their employers to exclude from time worked time spent waiting at the firm's premises for jobs to become available with third parties.ⁿ¹⁴¹

[ii] On Duty

Time spent on duty during periods of unplanned inactivity, usually of short duration, is counted as worktime when the employee is unable to use the time effectively for his or her own purposes, and the time is controlled by the employer. Thus, a stenographer who reads while waiting for dictation, a fireman who plays checkers while waiting for an alarm, a factory worker who talks to fellow employees while waiting for machinery to be repaired, and a repair person who waits for the employer's customer to make the premises available are all regarded as working during these periods of inactivity.ⁿ¹⁴²

In the case of seamen on American vessels, for purposes of determining compliance with minimum wage requirements,ⁿ¹⁴³ on-duty time includes periods aboard ship on watch, performing work, or standing by at the direction of a superior officer.ⁿ¹⁴⁴

For discussion of when sleeping time during "on duty" periods must be counted as working time under the FLSA, see [g], below.

[iii] Off-Duty

Periods during which an employee is completely relieved from duty and which are long enough to enable the employee to use the time effectively for his or her own purposes are not considered to be hours worked.ⁿ¹⁴⁵ To be completely relieved from duty, the employee must be definitely told in advance that he or she may leave the job and need not commence work until a specified hour. Whether the time is long enough to enable the employee to use the time effectively for his or her own purposes depends on all the facts and circumstances of the case.ⁿ¹⁴⁶ In the case of truck drivers, for example, if the driver who reaches his or her destination must care for the employer's property while awaiting the return trip, the driver is working while waiting. If the driver is completely relieved from duty for a period of, for example, six hours between reaching the point of destination and the return trip, the driver is not working during the idle time.ⁿ¹⁴⁷

In the case of seamen on American vessels, off-duty periods include shore leave and time on board when the seaman is free to use time for personal purposes, even though the seaman is required to remain on-call.ⁿ¹⁴⁸ Live-in domestic service workers and their employers may agree to exclude from time worked free time other than for meals and sleeping, if the periods are of sufficient duration for the employee to make effective use of his or her time.ⁿ¹⁴⁹

Under the continuous workday theory, principal activities performed by employees before and/or after regular working hours may extend the workday. The time spent on those activities therefore may be compensable.^{n149.1} If an employee may perform those activities at any time, however, there can be periods during which the employee is relieved from duty and thus the workday will not be continuous.^{n149.2}

[iv] On-Call Time

"On-call" time refers to time when an employee is not actually on duty, but is subject to a requirement that he or she be available to be called in to work. In determining whether on-call time must be considered "hours worked" under the FLSA, the courts examine two factors: (1) the degree to which the employee is free to engage in personal activities; and (2) any agreements between the parties.ⁿ¹⁵⁰

The following types of agreements may be relevant to the issue of on-call compensation: (1) a collective bargaining agreement that provides overtime compensation for actual call-in work, but not for other off-duty time; (2) a constructive agreement arising because employees have been informed of the employer's overtime compensation policy and continue to work under the disclosed terms of that policy; and (3) an express agreement created by employees' voluntarily accepting the terms of the employers' overtime compensation policy by becoming employed after the policy has been implemented.ⁿ¹⁵¹ In determining whether an employee has free use of on-call time for personal purposes, courts have considered a number of factors, including the following:ⁿ¹⁵²

1. Whether there was an on-premises living requirement;^{n152.1}
2. Whether there were excessive geographical restrictions on employees' movements;
3. Whether the frequency of calls was unduly restrictive;
4. Whether a fixed time limit for response was unduly restrictive;
5. Whether the on-call employee could easily trade on-call responsibilities;
6. Whether the use of a pager could ease restrictions; and
7. Whether the employee had actually engaged in personal activities during call-in time.

The above list is illustrative, not exhaustive. No one factor is determinative.ⁿ¹⁵³ In determining whether employees are free to engage in personal activities, a court cannot take into consideration whether on-call duties are similar to and as demanding as regular duties; the relevant inquiry is whether on-call waiting time is substantially similar to regular work.ⁿ¹⁵⁴ On the other hand, an employee need not have substantially the same flexibility or freedom as the employee would if not on call. If that were true, all or almost all on-call time would be working time, which is a proposition the settled case law and administrative guidelines reject.^{n154.1}

An employee who is required to remain on call on the employer's premises or so close that the employee cannot use the time effectively is deemed to be working while "on call."ⁿ¹⁵⁵ Whether time spent on the premises is compensable time depends on the degree to which the employee is free to engage in personal activities during periods of idleness when he or she is subject to call, and the number of consecutive hours that the employee is subject to call without being required to work.ⁿ¹⁵⁶ In the case of employees who must remain on the premises for consecutive days, performing productive labor only part of the time, free time while on the employer's premises may not be includable as worktime depending on the facts of the case.ⁿ¹⁵⁷ A different approach is applicable when the employee resides, on an ongoing basis, on the employer's premises.ⁿ¹⁵⁸

In a case involving utility employees required to live on the work premises, the court found that as to the degree to which the employees were free to engage in personal activities, the balance of the factors listed above weighed narrowly in favor of the employees. The court identified the relevant factors in the balance as follows: The employer required the employees to live on premises (factor 1) and forbade them from maintaining an off-site primary residence. While on-call, the employees were subject to strict geographic constraints (factor 2), and they had to remain within earshot of their home phones and alarm systems because they were required to respond instantaneously to any alerts (factor 4). Use of a pager (or, for that matter, a wireless phone or two-way radio) would do little to lessen these burdens (factor 6), as the plant was readily accessible only by foot from the employees' homes. On the other hand, the employees acknowledged that each was called out, on average, only about once or twice a month (factor 3). When an employee was sick, on vacation, or otherwise occupied by personal needs, the employee usually was able to trade duty shifts with colleagues (factor 5). Perhaps most notable, the employees routinely engaged in personal activities while they were on-call (factor 7). They used portions of their duty shifts to sleep, eat, read, study, exercise, watch television, help their children with homework, play games, maintain their homes and yards, work on their motorcycles, and entertain guests. The court found that the geographic and response-time restrictions associated with their duty shifts were especially restrictive, and the fact that the average number of call-outs and emergency alarms were low was less important because while on call, the employees were responsible for the safety of thousands of people and accordingly had to be absolutely prepared to respond at all times (i.e., rested, sober, clothed, and otherwise able to race immediately to the trouble source if needed), without regard to how often they were actually called out.^{n158.1} As to the parties' agreement, the court found that there was an agreement, and that the agreement treating otherwise uncompensated duty shift call time as equivalent to four hours' actual work was eminently reasonable. However, the court found that it was not clear that the employees always worked the precise schedule and remanded to the trial court to calculate the overtime due each employee.^{n158.2}

In another case, hours spent by probation officers assigned to standby duty at county probation facilities were held to be hours worked, because the officers were required to remain on the premises (unless they obtained prior permission from a supervisor to leave), where they were given sleeping and shower facilities and had access to various recreational activities and equipment.ⁿ¹⁵⁹ Standby time spent by nurses working at these probation facilities was also held to be worktime, because the nurses were required to remain on the premises (where they were provided with sleeping, living, bath, and kitchen facilities), abide by rules governing staff on the premises, and keep their supervisor informed of their whereabouts.ⁿ¹⁶⁰

An employee who is not required to remain on the employer's premises but merely required to leave word at his or her home or with company officials where he or she may be reached is not generally regarded as working while on call.ⁿ¹⁶¹ In Owens v. Local No. 169,ⁿ¹⁶² for example, the employer had a policy of requiring mechanics to be on call during off-duty hours (except vacation periods) for possible return to work to make repairs on the employer's equipment. Mechanics received calls on a rotating basis and were placed at the bottom of the list each time they responded to and accepted a call back to work. The mechanics were not required to remain on the employers' premises; were not required to respond to all calls or to a fixed percentage of calls, but were only to accept a "fair share" of calls; and were not required to be reachable by pager. Those who did not request pagers were not required to respond to calls within a fixed time. Each mechanic received an average of six calls per year. The Ninth Circuit held that the employer's policy did not so restrict the employees' activities as to require the on-call time to be treated as compensable hours worked.ⁿ¹⁶³

Another Ninth Circuit case followed Owens to hold that county coroners were not entitled to compensation for on-call time. The court cited the following factors: (1) the coroner on call was required to respond to a page or telephone call within 15 minutes by telephone or two-way radio, but was not required to return to the employer's premises; (2) the coroners were not required to use pagers, but doing so voluntarily meant that the coroner on call was not restricted to areas with a telephone or two-way radio; (3) the coroners could easily trade shifts, although they were seldom willing to impose on each other's off-duty time by doing so; (4) the coroners had, while on call, engaged in a variety of personal activities, such as socializing, dining out, and hobbies, as well as working at second jobs and their own businesses; and (5) there was no on-premises living requirement.ⁿ¹⁶⁴ Although the frequency of calls resulting in the coroners being called back to duty (once every 6.45 hours) arguably supported the conclusion that their on-call time should be treated as hours worked, it was outweighed by the other factors.ⁿ¹⁶⁵

[e] Rest Periods

Short rest periods of approximately five to twenty minutes are common in industry and must be counted as hours worked.ⁿ¹⁶⁶ Time spent during such rest periods therefore may not be offset against other working time such as compensable waiting or on-call time as a way of reducing hours worked.ⁿ¹⁶⁷ Short coffee breaks and snack periods constitute compensable rest periods and are distinguished from bona fide meal periods, which are not considered worktime.ⁿ¹⁶⁸

[f] Meal Periods

Bona fide meal periods are not considered worktime.ⁿ¹⁶⁹ To constitute a bona fide meal period, the employee must be completely relieved from duty for the purpose of eating regular meals. The employee is not relieved if he or she is required to perform any duties, including inactive ones, while eating.ⁿ¹⁷⁰ Thus, for example, an office employee who is required to eat at his or her desk or a factory worker required to remain at his or her machine is working while eating.ⁿ¹⁷¹ However, if the employee is otherwise completely freed from his or her duties, the fact that he or she is not permitted to leave the premises during a meal period does not in itself require that the period be counted as working time.ⁿ¹⁷²

Ordinarily, 30 minutes will suffice for a bona fide meal period under the FLSA, although shorter durations may be long enough under special circumstances.ⁿ¹⁷³ Meal periods may be bona fide and not compensable even if they are not scheduled regularly, but are allowed when time is available.ⁿ¹⁷⁴

[g] Sleeping Time and Other Personal Activities

[i] Generally

An employee who is required to be on duty for less than 24 hours is considered to be working even when he or she is permitted to sleep or engage in other personal activities when not busy.ⁿ¹⁷⁵

If the employee is required to be on duty for 24 hours or more, the employer and the employee may agree to exclude bona fide meal periods and a bona fide regularly scheduled sleeping period of no more than eight hours, provided that adequate sleeping facilities are furnished and the employee can usually enjoy an uninterrupted night's sleep.ⁿ¹⁷⁶ In the absence of an agreement, the eight hours of sleeping time and meal periods constitute hours worked.ⁿ¹⁷⁷

Any interruptions in the sleeping period caused by a call to duty must be counted as hours worked.ⁿ¹⁷⁸ Furthermore, time spent sleeping will be counted as hours worked if the period is interrupted to such an extent that the employee cannot get a reasonable night's sleep.ⁿ¹⁷⁹ For enforcement purposes, the Wage and Hour Division has adopted the rule that an entire sleeping period is considered working time if the employee cannot get at least five hours of sleep during the scheduled period.ⁿ¹⁸⁰

[ii] Residence on Employer's Premises

Special considerations are applicable to employees who reside on the employer's premises on a permanent basis or for extended periods of time and who do not perform duties during the entire time that they are on the premises. Ordinarily, time spent engaging in normal private pursuits such as eating, sleeping, entertaining, and other periods of complete freedom from all duties, is not worktime. Because of the difficulty of determining the exact hours worked under these circumstances, any reasonable agreement of the parties that takes into consideration all of the pertinent facts will be accepted.ⁿ¹⁸¹

[h] Lectures, Meetings, and Training Programs

Attendance at lectures, meetings, training programs, and similar activities need not be counted as working time if all of the following criteria are met:ⁿ¹⁸²

1. Attendance is outside of the employee's regular working hours.
2. Attendance is in fact voluntary.
3. The course, lecture, or meeting is not directly related to the employee's job. (Training is directly related to the job if it is designed to make the employee handle the job more effectively, as distinguished from training the employee for another job or in a new or additional skill.)ⁿ¹⁸³
4. The employee does not perform any productive work during his or her attendance.

Attendance is not voluntary if the employee is led to believe that his or her working conditions or continuance of employment would be adversely affected by nonattendance.ⁿ¹⁸⁴ If an employee on his or her own initiative attends an independent school, college, or independent trade school after hours, the time does not count as hours worked for the employer even if the courses are related to the employee's job.ⁿ¹⁸⁵

There are some special situations in which the time spent in attending lectures, training sessions, and courses of instruction is not regarded as hours worked. For example, an employer may establish for the benefit of his or her employees a program of instruction that corresponds to courses offered by independent bona fide institutions of learning. Voluntary attendance by an employee at such courses outside of working hours would not be hours worked even if they are directly related to the employee's job, or paid for by the employer.ⁿ¹⁸⁶ Even when the employee's attendance is involuntary, exclusion from hours worked of time spent in attending lectures, training sessions, and courses of instruction may apply, but such an exception will only rarely be allowed.ⁿ¹⁸⁷

[i] Apprenticeship Training

Time spent in an organized program of related, supplemental instruction by employees working under bona fide apprenticeship programs may be excluded from working time if the following criteria are met:ⁿ¹⁸⁸

1. The apprentice is employed under a written apprenticeship agreement or program that substantially meets the fundamental standards of the Bureau of Apprenticeship and Training of the United States Department of Labor; and
2. The time does not involve productive work or performance of the apprentice's regular duties.

Time spent in related instruction will be counted as hours worked if the written agreement specifies that it is hours worked. However, the mere payment or agreement to pay for time spent in related instruction does not constitute an agreement that the time is counted as hours worked.ⁿ¹⁸⁹

[j] Time Spent Adjusting Grievances

Time spent in adjusting grievances between an employer and employees during the time the employees are required to be on the premises is counted as hours worked.ⁿ¹⁹⁰ However, if a bona fide union is involved, the counting of time so spent will, as a matter of enforcement policy, be left to the collective bargaining process or to the custom or practice under the collective bargaining agreement.ⁿ¹⁹¹

[k] Government Health and Safety Inspections

Under the federal Occupational Safety and Health Administration Act (OSHA),ⁿ¹⁹² authorized employee representatives must be given the opportunity to accompany an inspector on a tour of inspection, but are not required to accompany the inspector. If an employee representative does participate in the walkaround tour, the time so spent does not constitute hours worked, because it is not an activity controlled by the employer, and is not engaged in primarily for the employer's benefit.ⁿ¹⁹³ However, time spent by employees consulting with the OSHA inspector during the normal workday, at the inspector's request, is considered time worked.ⁿ¹⁹⁴ By analogy, time spent by employees during the normal workday consulting with government agents at the agents' request, pursuant to other official inspections of the place of employment, might also be considered time worked.

By contrast, a California court has taken the position that employee time spent participating in a walkaround tour under the California Occupational Safety and Health Act, Labor Code section 6314, is compensable as worktime.ⁿ¹⁹⁵

Time spent by an employee in waiting for and receiving medical attention on the premises or at the direction of the employer during the employee's normal working hours on workdays constitutes hours worked.ⁿ¹⁹⁶

[m] Civic and Charitable Work

Time spent in work for public or charitable purposes at the employer's request or under the employer's direction or control, or while the employee is required to be on the premises, is working time. Time spent voluntarily in these activities outside of normal working hours does not constitute hours worked.ⁿ¹⁹⁷

[n] Suggestion Systems

Time spent by employees outside of their regular working hours in developing suggestions under a general suggestion system is not working time. If, however, an employee is permitted to work on suggestions during regular working hours, or assigned to work on the development of a suggestion, the time is considered hours worked.ⁿ¹⁹⁸

[o] Absences From Work

The FLSA does not require an employer to pay an employee for absence from work for vacations, holidays, illness, or any other reason. Thus, courts have held that the granting of leaves of absence with or without pay is a matter of agreement between the employer and employee, and that the time need not be counted as worktime for purposes of the FLSA.ⁿ¹⁹⁹ For a discussion of exclusion of payments for absences from work in the computation of the regular rate of pay, see § 3.08[2][g][iii].

[p] Hours Made Worktime by Agreement

In some cases, an agreement provides for compensation for hours spent in certain activities that are not regarded as working time under the FLSA, such as preliminary and postliminary activities and duty-free meal periods. The agreement of the parties to provide compensation for such hours may or may not convert them into hours worked for purposes of the FLSA, depending on whether it appears from all the pertinent facts that the parties have agreed to treat this time as hours worked. Except for certain activity governed by the Portal-to-Portal Act that must be counted as hours worked,ⁿ²⁰⁰ the agreement of the parties will be respected, if reasonable.ⁿ²⁰¹ Thus, time spent in an activity that is not hours worked under the FLSA and not hours worked under the Portal-to-Portal Act, even when made compensable by contract, custom, or practice, may be excluded from computation of hours worked if the parties so agree. Payment for such time may be excluded from the regular rate of pay under Title 29, United States Code section 207(e)(2), but does not count as an overtime premium creditable toward the employer's overtime compensation obligations.ⁿ²⁰² For discussion of statutory exclusions from the regular rate of pay under the FLSA, see § 3.08[2][g].

[p.1] Agreement as to Hours Worked

When an employee resides on the employer's premises or works at home, it may be difficult to determine the exact number of overtime hours worked. Any reasonable agreement of the employer and employee as to overtime hours worked which takes into consideration all of the pertinent facts will be accepted.^{n202.1} Such an agreement must take into account some approximation of the hours actually worked or reasonably required to be worked by the employee.^{n202.2}

[q] De Minimis Time

Federal courts have held that insignificant periods of time worked before the official commencement or after the official close of the workday are regarded as de minimis and should not be counted as time worked.ⁿ²⁰³ There is no precise rule for determining the amount of time that may be excluded from the computation of hours worked as de minimis; the determination depends on the facts of each case.ⁿ²⁰⁴

One court has stated that the following factors should be considered in determining whether otherwise compensable time may be excluded as de minimis:ⁿ²⁰⁵

1. The administrative difficulty of recording the additional time;
2. The aggregate amount of compensation claimed for the time;ⁿ²⁰⁶ and
3. The regularity with which the employees perform the additional work.

The Ninth Circuit applied the de minimis rule to a claim for additional compensation by employees who arrived seven or eight minutes early to review log books and exchange information with employees from a preceding shift. Because there was a wide variance in the amount of time spent on compensable activities as opposed to social interaction, the court held that the difficulty of recording the time, and the irregularity of the additional preshift work, warranted application of the de minimis rule.ⁿ²⁰⁷ The result may be different, however, if the employee is directed by the employer to arrive a few minutes prior to the scheduled start of the workday.ⁿ²⁰⁸

The Ninth Circuit has not adopted a ten or fifteen minute de minimis rule. Although most courts have found daily periods of approximately 10 minutes de minimis even though otherwise compensable, there is no precise amount of time that may be denied compensation as de minimis and no rigid rule can be applied with mathematical certainty.^{n208.1}

[r] Statutory Exclusion of Certain Types of Employment in Computing Hours Worked

[i] Charter Activities by Employees in Railway or Motor Carrier Operations

In determining for overtime compensation purposes the hours worked for an employee of an employer engaged in the business of operating a street, suburban, or interurban electric railway, or a local trolley or motorbus carrier, whether or not for profit, hours employed in charter activities must be excluded if the employee's employment in these activities (1) was pursuant to an agreement or understanding with the employer arrived at before engaging in the employment, and (2) was not part of the employee's regular employment.ⁿ²⁰⁹

[ii] Public Employees

The FLSA contains special rules requiring the exclusion of certain employment of public employees from hours worked for overtime compensation purposes.ⁿ²¹⁰ The exclusions apply to (1) public fire protection and law enforcement employees who voluntarily perform work on a special detail involving fire protection or law enforcement activities for a separate and independent public employer;ⁿ²¹¹ (2) occasional or sporadic, voluntary part-time work by a public employee for his or her employer in a capacity different from that in which he or she is regularly employed;ⁿ²¹² and (3) a public employee's voluntary agreement to substitute for another public employee employed in the same capacity.ⁿ²¹³

[s] Use of Time Clocks

The FLSA does not require the use of time clocks to record hours worked.ⁿ²¹⁴ When time clocks are used, employees who voluntarily punch in before their regular starting time or remain after their closing time need not be paid for such periods, provided that they do not engage in any work.ⁿ²¹⁵ Although minor differences between clock records and actual hours worked cannot ordinarily be avoided, major discrepancies should be discouraged, since they raise doubt about the accuracy of the records of hours actually worked.ⁿ²¹⁶

In industries where time clocks are used, employers often make a practice of recording the employees' starting and stopping times to the nearest five minutes, or to the nearest one-tenth or one-quarter of an hour. The Wage and Hour Division presumes that this arrangement normally averages out and permits the practice, as long as it is not used in such a manner that it results, over a period of time, in failure to properly compensate employees for all time that they actually worked.ⁿ²¹⁷

(n73)Footnote 67. See, e.g., 2002 DLSE Enforcement Policies & Interpretations Manual, § 56.6.21. The federal FLSA likewise prohibits salary deductions for jury duty or witness time. Although the federal regulations expressly allow an employer to deduct jury pay from salary [29 CFR § 541.602(b)(3)], California law contains no such provision. If a California employer were to deduct jury pay from an exempt employee's salary, this almost certainly would violate the state statute on wage deductions [Lab. Code § 224], as well as California's salary basis rules. The preceding discussion applies only to salary docking. The rules on drawing down an employee's accrued vacation leave bank may be different, based on the recent California court of appeal decision in Conley v. PG&E and a recent change in the DLSE's enforcement position. For further discussion, see Consultant's Comment at § 2.04[1][a][i].

(n135)Footnote 122.1. 29 U.S.C. § 254(a)(2) amended the Portal-to-Portal Act in 1996. Under those amendments, an employer need not compensate an employee for walking, riding, or traveling to and from the actual place of performance of the principal activities the employee is employed to perform. The employer also need not compensate an employee for activities that are preliminary to or postliminary to the principal activities, whether they occur either prior to the time the employee commences the principal activities or subsequent to the time the employee ceases the principal activities. The use of an employer's vehicle for an employee's travel, and activities performed by an employee incidental to the use of the vehicle for commuting, are not considered part of the employee's principal activities if the use of the vehicle is within the employer's normal commuting area and the use of the employer's vehicle is subject to an agreement on the part of the employer and the employee or representative of the employee.

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS
CHAPTER 3 Overtime Compensation and Regulation of Hours Worked
Part A. OVERTIME COMPENSATION

1-3 California Employment Law § 3.08

AUTHOR: By Carol S. Sanders, J.D.

§ 3.08 Determining the Regular Rate of Pay--Compensation Included and Excluded

[1] California Law

[a] Generally--Relationship to Federal Law

Both California and federal law provide for overtime compensation premiums based on a multiple of the employee's "regular rate" of pay.ⁿ¹ Unlike federal law, however, no definition of "regular rate" is provided under either the California wage orders or the Labor Code. Except as discussed in [b] through [d], below, no specific guidelines exist for determining the types of compensation that are to be included or excluded in determining the regular rate. An informational pamphlet issued by the DLSE states only that "[t]he regular rate of pay includes many different types of remuneration, for example: hourly earnings, salary, piecework earnings, commission, bonus, value of meals and lodging."ⁿ² The DLSE takes the position that the failure of the IWC to define the term "regular rate" indicates the Commission's intent that in determining the payments to be included in or excluded from the calculation of the regular rate of pay, California will adhere to the standards adopted by the federal Department of Labor to the extent those standards are consistent with California law.^{n2.1}

California's wage orders are closely modeled after, although they do not duplicate, the provisions of the FLSA requiring an overtime premium for hours worked during the workweek in excess of 40.ⁿ³ When California laws are patterned on federal statutes, the federal laws construing that statute provide persuasive guidance; thus, federal rules for computing the regular rate for purposes of overtime compensation for workweek hours over 40 may be useful in construing state law.ⁿ⁴ The federal rules are discussed in [2], below.

[b] Payment for "Free" Standby Time

Some employees, such as nurses, laboratory and x-ray technicians, mortuary attendants, utility employees, and security guards, receive special compensation for uncontrolled or "free" standby time. "Free" standby time refers to time during which the employee must be available to be called back to work but is otherwise free to pursue personal interests. The DLSE has taken the position that compensation for any "free" standby time that does not constitute hours workedⁿ⁵ is not included in determining the employee's regular rate.ⁿ⁶ Under the FLSA, payment for uncontrolled standby time is included in the regular rate, even though such time is not regarded as working time,ⁿ⁷ since it was paid as compensation for performing a duty involved in the employee's job.ⁿ⁸

[c] Split-Shift Premium and Reporting Time Pay

As discussed in Chapter 2, an employee who is assigned a split shift, or who is required to report to work but is not given at least a certain minimum number of hours of work to perform, is under some circumstances entitled to certain minimum additional compensation under the wage orders.ⁿ⁹ Additional payments required under the California wage orders for split shifts or for reporting or "show-up" time that exceed the amount due for hours actually worked are considered penalties by the DLSE rather than compensation for hours worked, and are not included in computation of the regular rate.ⁿ¹⁰ The same is true under the FLSA.ⁿ¹¹

[d] Gratuities Versus "Service Charges"

As further discussed in Chapters 2 and 4, tips or gratuities left by customers for employees that are over and above the amount charged by the employer for the employees' services are, with limited exceptions, considered the exclusive property of the employee; they are not considered part of the employee's wages paid by the employer and thus may not be credited against the employer's minimum wage obligations under California law.ⁿ¹² Ordinarily, therefore, tips are not included in the employee's regular rate of pay for purposes of computing overtime compensation. However, the DLSE has drawn a distinction between tips and mandatory service charges that are added by the employer to the customer's bill (e.g., a service charge added on to the food costs for a banquet). The DLSE considers such charges to be part of the employer's gross receipts, rather than the property of the employees who performed the services.ⁿ¹³ If a portion of these service charges is subsequently paid over to the employees, the charges are considered wages, which may be credited against the employer's minimum wage obligations but which also must be included in the employee's regular rate of pay for purposes of computing overtime compensation.ⁿ¹⁴

[2] Federal Law

[a] Generally

Under the FLSA, the required overtime compensation must be paid at a rate not less than 1 1/2 times the "regular rate" at which the employee is employed.ⁿ¹⁵ The "regular rate" at which an employee is employed must be at least the federal statutory minimum wage.ⁿ¹⁶ If the employee's regular rate of pay is higher than the statutory minimum, his or her overtime compensation must be computed at a rate not less than 1 1/2 times that higher rate.ⁿ¹⁷

The regular rate includes all remuneration for employment paid to, or on behalf of, the employee, except those payments specifically excluded pursuant to Title 29 United States Code, section 207(e)(1)-(8).ⁿ¹⁸ The types of payments that are included and excluded from computation of the regular rate are discussed in [b] through [i], below. Only the statutory exclusions are authorized. All remuneration paid to employees which does not fall within one of the exclusions must be added into the total compensation before the regular hourly rate of pay is determined.^{n18.1}

For purposes of computing overtime compensation under the FLSA, the regular rate is always expressed as a per-hour rate.ⁿ¹⁹ The regular rate is the hourly rate actually paid the employee for the normal, nonovertime workweek for which he or she is employed. The regular rate under the FLSA may not be affected by any designation of a contrary "regular rate" in the wage contracts.ⁿ²⁰

Although the regular rate under the FLSA is always an amount per hour, the FLSA does not require that employees be compensated for nonovertime work on an hourly basis; regular earnings may be determined on a piece-rate, salary, commission, or other basis. In cases in which regular compensation is other than on an hourly basis, the hourly "regular rate" for overtime purposes must be computed by dividing the employee's total remuneration for employment (except statutory exclusions) in any workweek by the total number of hours actually worked by the employee in that workweek for which the compensation was paid.ⁿ²¹ For discussion of rules governing computation of the regular rate under different types of pay practices, such as salaries, commissions, and piece rates, see § 3.09.

[b] Noncash Payments Included in Regular Rate

If payments are made to employees in the form of goods or facilities that are regarded as part of wages, such as meals or lodgings, the reasonable cost to the employer or the fair value of the goods or of furnishing the facilities must be included in the regular rate.ⁿ²² For discussion of rules governing the determination of the value or cost of meals and lodging included as part of wages, see Ch. 2.

[c] Premiums for Overtime Work Excluded From Regular Rate

[i] Generally

The FLSA excludes from a determination of an employee's regular rate certain types of payments made by employers for work in excess of or outside of specified daily or weekly standard work periods or on certain special days.ⁿ²³ These payments are regarded as overtime premiums for purposes of the FLSA.ⁿ²⁴ They are not only excluded from the employee's regular rate of pay for the purpose of computing overtime compensation, but may be credited toward overtime compensation due under the FLSA.ⁿ²⁵ No other types of remuneration for employment may be so credited.ⁿ²⁶ Payments that do not meet the criteria discussed below must be included in the regular rate, as further discussed in [vi] through [viii], below.

[ii] Requirement That Extra Compensation Be Rate Per Hour in Excess of Regular Rate

To qualify as excludable overtime premiums, the extra compensation for overtime hours must be paid pursuant to a premium rate which, like the regular rate and the statutory overtime rate, is a rate per hour.ⁿ²⁷ To qualify as excludable premium pay for excess daily or weekly hours,ⁿ²⁸ the overtime rate must be greater than the regular rate, either a fixed amount per hour or a multiple of the nonovertime rate, such as 1 1/3, 1 1/2, or two times that rate.ⁿ²⁹

To qualify as excludable premium pay for work on weekends and other special days,ⁿ³⁰ or for work outside hours of the basic workday or workweek,ⁿ³¹ the overtime rate may not be less than 1 1/2 times the bona fide rate established in good faith for like work performed during nonovertime. The overtime rate may be a standard multiple greater than 1 1/2 (for example, double time), or it may be a fixed sum of money per hour which is, as an arithmetical fact, at least 1 1/2 times the nonovertime rate.ⁿ³²

■ ILLUSTRATION:

Employee is paid $5.00 per hour for nonovertime work. The overtime rate may not be less than $7.50, but may be set at a higher fixed figure such as $8.00 per hour.ⁿ³³

Certain forms of payments that are ostensibly extra compensation for overtime, such as lump sums attributable to overtimeⁿ³⁴ or payment on a "task" basisⁿ³⁵ do not qualify as overtime premiums, and must be included in computation of the regular rate. For a discussion of inclusion of nonqualifying additional compensation in the regular rate, see [vi] through [viii], below.

[iii] Premium Pay for Excess Daily or Weekly Hours

An employee's regular rate does not include extra compensation provided by a premium rate paid for certain hours worked by the employee in any day or workweek because such hours are hours worked in excess of eight in a day or in excess of the maximum 40-hour workweek, or in excess of the employee's normal working hours or regular working hours.ⁿ³⁶

The payment of the contractual overtime premium must be contingent on the employee having worked more than eight hours in a day or 40 hours in a week or the specified normal working schedule.ⁿ³⁷ In applying this rule to situations in which it is the custom to pay employees for hours during which no work is performed because of vacation, holiday, illness, failure of the employer to provide sufficient work, or other similar cause, it is permissible (but not required) to count these hours as hours worked in determining the amount of overtime premium pay due for more than eight hours worked per day or the maximum applicable hours standard, which may be excluded from the regular rate and credited toward the statutory overtime compensation.ⁿ³⁸

■ ILLUSTRATION:

Employer customarily pays its employees for time off work caused by bona fide illnesses. Employer also pays its employees at double their straight time hourly rate for hours worked in excess of 40 during a workweek. A standard workday is eight hours. In one workweek, Employee misses one workday, Monday, due to illness. Employee works a normal eight-hour shift on Tuesday through Thursday and an additional eight-hour shift on Saturday. Under the FLSA, Employer is permitted, but not required, to count the eight paid hours missed because of illness as "hours worked" for purposes of determining Employee's eligibility for the double time premium for the hours worked on Saturday. If Employer elects to treat the sick day as "hours worked," and pay the premium rate, the amount of the premium paid in excess of Employee's straight time rate would be excluded from computation of Employee's statutory regular rate and would be credited toward Employer's statutory overtime compensation obligation.ⁿ³⁹

An employer may not claim credit for "extra compensation ... for hours worked ... in excess of the employee's normal ... or regular working hours"ⁿ⁴⁰ by artificially dividing the employee's normal workday into a "straight time" period to which one rate is assigned, followed by a so-called "overtime period" for which a higher rate is specified, and claiming credit for this "overtime rate" against statutory compensation due for hours worked in excess of 40.ⁿ⁴¹ Such an arrangement will be regarded as a device to contravene the statutory purposes, and the premiums will be considered part of the regular rate.ⁿ⁴² For additional discussion of the prohibition against such "split-day" payments, see § 3.12[3].

Payment of premium rates for hours worked in excess of specified daily or weekly standards under California law are regarded as true overtime premiums for purposes of the FLSA and are credited against federal statutory overtime compensation obligations.ⁿ⁴³ The same is true of payment of premium rates pursuant to contract or California law on the sixth or seventh day worked in the workweek.ⁿ⁴⁴ For discussion of overtime premiums under California law, see § 3.04[1].

[iv] Premium Pay for Work on Weekends and Other Special Days

An employee's regular rate does not include extra compensation provided by a premium rate paid for work by the employee on Saturdays, Sundays, holidays, or regular days of rest, or on the sixth or seventh day of the workweek, if the premium rate is not less than 1 1/2 times the rate established in good faith for like work performed in nonovertime hours on other days.ⁿ⁴⁵ If the premium rate is less than 1 1/2 times the nonovertime rate, the extra compensation provided by the premium rate must be included in determining the employee's regular rate of pay, and cannot be credited toward statutory overtime due, unless it qualifies as an overtime premium for excess daily or weekly hours under Title 29 United States Code, section 207(e)(5),ⁿ⁴⁶ as discussed in [iii], above.

■ ILLUSTRATION:

Employee's straight-time hourly rate is $10.00. Employee is paid $15.00 per hour for all hours worked on Sundays or holidays. Employee's applicable maximum workweek is 40 hours. In a particular workweek, Employee works eight hours on each of seven workdays, for a total of 56 hours. One of the workdays is a Sunday and another is a holiday. Under the employment agreement, Employee would be entitled to $640.00 for the workweek. The $5.00 per hour paid in excess of Employee's straight-time rate for 16 hours worked on Sunday and the holiday would be credited against and fully satisfy Employer's overtime compensation obligations under the FLSA.ⁿ⁴⁷

The requirement that the premium rates for special days be based on a "rate established in good faith for like work performed in nonovertime hours on other days" is meant to distinguish bona fide employment standards from fictitious schemes and artificial devices to evade the overtime compensation requirements of the FLSA.ⁿ⁴⁸ For discussion of pay plans that are designed to circumvent overtime compensation requirements, see § 3.12.

To qualify as an overtime premium for special days, the premium must be paid because work is performed on the days specified, and not for some other reason that would not qualify the premium as an overtime premium. Thus, a premium paid to an employee because of the employer's failure to give adequate notice that the employee would be required to work on his or her regular day of rest would not qualify as an overtime premium for work on that day, and would be part of the employee's regular rate of pay unless it otherwise qualifies as an excludable premium.ⁿ⁴⁹

[v] "Clock Pattern" Premiums Pursuant to Agreement for Work Outside Hours of Basic Workday or Workweek

An employee's regular rate does not include extra compensation provided by a premium rate paid to the employee, pursuant to an applicable employment contract or collective bargaining agreement, for work outside of the hours established in good faith by the contract or agreement as the basic, normal, or regular workday (not exceeding eight hours) or workweek (not exceeding the maximum 40-hour workweek), if the premium rate is not less than 1 1/2 times the rate established in good faith by the contract or agreement for like work performed during the workday or workweek.ⁿ⁵⁰ Extra compensation for such outside hours is sometimes known as "clock pattern" premium pay.ⁿ⁵¹

■ ILLUSTRATION:

Employee is employed pursuant to a collective bargaining agreement that establishes the regular workday as the hours between 8 a.m. and 12 noon and between 1 p.m. and 5 p.m., Monday through Friday. The bona fide straight-time rate for work performed during such hours is $10.00 per hour, and Employee is paid $15.00 per hour for the same work performed outside of such hours. The extra $5.00 per hour for work performed outside the regular workday would not be included in computing Employee's regular rate and would be credited toward Employer's statutory overtime obligations.ⁿ⁵²

When the employment agreement provides for a premium only for certain undesirable hours worked outside the basic workday or workweek (such as for hours between midnight and 6 a.m.) or only for outside hours worked under undesirable conditions (such as when the employee has gone without a meal or rest period), such a premium may not be excluded from the regular rate.ⁿ⁵³ When there is an agreement for higher pay for after-hours work, a factual question may arise in regard to whether the agreement is a true overtime pay agreement rather than a production or incentive arrangement, or a night shift differential, more properly includable in the regular rate. If there is sufficient evidence that the higher hourly pay for after-hours work was both conceived by the employer and perceived by the employees as a reward for putting in hours beyond the established workweek, the pay would be excludable from the regular rate as an overtime premium.ⁿ⁵⁴

[vi] Fixed Sum or Flat Rate for Varying Amounts of Overtime Not Excludable

A premium in the form of a lump sum that is paid for work performed during overtime hours without regard to the number of overtime hours worked does not qualify as an excludable overtime premium under Title 29 United States Code, section 207(e). It must be included with the employee's other compensation in computing the regular rate and cannot be credited against statutory overtime compensation due.ⁿ⁵⁵ This is true even if the lump sum, under the particular circumstances, coincidentally equals or exceeds 1 1/2 times the employee's regular rate.ⁿ⁵⁶

■ ILLUSTRATION:

Employee is employed pursuant to an arrangement providing for payment of a flat sum of $100.00 to employees who work on Sunday. Employee's hourly straight-time rate for work performed Monday through Friday is $10.00 per hour. During a workweek, Employee works 40 hours, Monday through Friday, and four hours on Sunday. To compute Employee's regular rate, the $100.00 flat rate premium would be added to Employee's straight time wages ($400.00) and divided by the total number of hours worked (44), which yields a regular rate of $11.36 per hour. Employee would therefore be entitled to extra compensation of $22.72, which equals $5.68 per hour (1/2 the regular rate) for each hour worked in excess of 40 during the workweek. The $100.00 "premium" may not be credited against the additional overtime compensation due.ⁿ⁵⁷

The same reasoning applies when employees are paid a flat rate for a special job performed during overtime hours, without regard to the time actually consumed in performance.ⁿ⁵⁸ This situation is distinguishable from guaranteed "show-up" or "callback" pay, which may qualify as excludable from the regular rate to the extent that it covers more hours than the employee actually worked after reporting to work.ⁿ⁵⁹

[vii] Pay for Task Without Regard to Hours Worked Not Excludable

Some employment agreements provide for payment according to a job or task without regard to the number of hours consumed in completing the task. Under a common form of "task" payment plan, a determination is made that an employee should complete a particular task in eight hours. When the task is completed the employee is credited with eight "hours" of work, even though he or she may have actually worked more or less than that number of hours to complete the task. At the end of the week, an employee entitled to statutory overtime compensation for work in excess of 40 hours is paid at an established hourly rate for the first 40 of the "hours" credited and at 1 1/2 times the established rate for the "hours" credited in excess of 40. These employees are actually being compensated on a daily rate of pay basis.ⁿ⁶⁰ The number of "hours" credited to the employee bears no necessary relationship to the number of hours actually worked, which may be greater or less than 40.ⁿ⁶¹ The established "hourly" rate never controls the compensation that any employee actually receives, and therefore cannot be regarded as the regular rate for purposes of statutory overtime computation.ⁿ⁶² Since the premium rate is payable for hours worked without regard to whether or not the hours are in excess of eight per day or 40 per week, it cannot qualify as an excludable overtime premium under the FLSA.ⁿ⁶³ It must therefore be included in the regular rate and may not be credited against statutory overtime compensation due.ⁿ⁶⁴

[viii] Other Types of Premium Pay Not Qualifying for Statutory Exclusion

Any other form of premium pay that does not satisfy the requirements for statutory exclusion under Title 29 United States Code, section 207(e)(5), (6), (7) and (8) must be included in the employee's regular rate for purposes of overtime pay compensation and may not be credited toward statutory overtime pay requirements.ⁿ⁶⁵ Examples of other nonexcludable premiums include premiums for nightshift differentials; for hazardous, arduous, or dirty work; or for rapid performance of work.ⁿ⁶⁶

[ix] Value Derived from Stock Rights

The regular rate at which an employee is employed does not include any value or income derived from employer-provided grants or rights given pursuant to a stock option, stock appreciation right, or bona fide employee stock purchase program subject to certain conditions.ⁿ⁶⁷

[d] Payments in the Nature of Gifts as Reward for Service Excluded From Regular Rate

An employee's regular rate does not include sums paid as gifts, including payments in the nature of gifts made at Christmas time or on other special occasions, as a reward for service, the amounts of which are not measured by or dependent on hours worked, production, or efficiency.ⁿ⁶⁸ To qualify for exclusion under this provision, a bonus must be actually a gift or in the nature of a gift. A payment will not be considered in the nature of a gift if (1) it is measured by hours worked, production, or efficiency; (2) it is so substantial that it can be assumed that employees consider it a part of the wages for which they work; or (3) it is paid pursuant to a contract (so that the employee has a legal right to the payment and could bring suit to enforce it).ⁿ⁶⁹ On the other hand, if the bonus paid at Christmas or on another special occasion is a gift or in the nature of a gift, it may be excluded from the regular rate even though it is paid with sufficient regularity so that the employees are led to expect it.ⁿ⁷⁰ Such a bonus is excludable even though the amounts paid to different employees or groups of employees vary with the amount of the salary or regular hourly rate or according to length of service, so long as the amounts are not measured by or directly dependent on hours worked, production, or efficiency.ⁿ⁷¹

■ ILLUSTRATION:

Each year, Employer pays a Christmas bonus (not pursuant to contract) in the amount of two weeks' salary to all employees and an equal additional amount for each five years of service. This bonus would be excludable from the regular rate.ⁿ⁷²

Although bonuses paid as service rewards are excluded in computing the regular rate, such bonuses may not be credited toward overtime compensation due under the FLSA.ⁿ⁷³

[e] Payments to Profit-Sharing, Thrift, and Savings Plans Excluded From Regular Rate

An employee's regular rate does not include sums paid in recognition of services performed during a given period if the payments are made pursuant to a bona fide profit-sharing plan or trust or a bona fide thrift or savings plan, meeting the requirements of the Wage and Hour Administrator set forth in appropriate regulations,ⁿ⁷⁴ having due regard among other relevant facts, to the extent to which the amounts paid to the employee are determined without regard to hours of work, production, or efficiency.ⁿ⁷⁵ Such sums may not, however, be credited toward overtime compensation due under the FLSA.ⁿ⁷⁶

[f] Payments to Benefit Plans Excluded From Regular Rate

An employee's regular rate does not include contributions irrevocably made by an employer to a trustee or third person pursuant to a bona fide plan for providing old-age, retirement, life, accident, or health insurance or similar benefits for employees.ⁿ⁷⁷

For purposes of excludability from computation of an employee's regular rate, it makes no difference whether or not the benefit plan is one financed out of profits or one which matches employee contributions or otherwise encourages thrift or savings. If the plan is combined in a single program with a plan or trust for providing profit-sharing payments to employees, the profit-sharing payments may be excluded from the regular rate if they meet the requirements of the regulations governing profit-sharing plans,ⁿ⁷⁸ and the contributions made by the employer for providing the benefits may be excluded if they meet the conditions governing exclusion of benefit-plan contributions.ⁿ⁷⁹ Advance approval by the Department of Labor is not required.ⁿ⁸⁰ Detailed requirements for exclusion of benefit-plan payments are set forth in Title 29 Code of Federal Regulations, section 778.215.

If the contribution is not made as provided under Title 29 United States Code, section 207(e)(4) or if the plan does not qualify as a bona fide benefit plan, the contribution is treated the same as a bonus payment that is part of the regular rate of pay, and at the time the contribution is made the amount of the contribution must be apportioned back over the workweeks of the period during which it may be said to have accrued.ⁿ⁸¹ Overtime compensation based on the resultant increases in the regular hourly rate is due for each overtime hour worked during any workweek of the period.ⁿ⁸² For discussion and illustration of the method of allocating an includable bonus to determine the regular rate, see [h][iv], below.

Special rules apply to employer contributions included in fringe benefit wage determinations under the Davis-Bacon Actⁿ⁸³ and the Service Contract Act.ⁿ⁸⁴ For discussion of when these acts apply, see Ch. 1.

[g] Payments for Periods of No Work and Reimbursement for Employee Expenses Excluded From Regular Rate

[i] Generally

An employee's regular rate does not include the following:ⁿ⁸⁵

1. Payments made for occasional periods when no work is performed due to vacation, holiday, illness, failure of the employer to provide sufficient work, or other similar cause;
2. Reasonable payments for traveling expenses, or other expenses incurred by an employee in the furtherance of the employer's interests and properly reimbursable by the employer; and
3. Other similar payments to an employee which are not made as compensation for his or her hours of employment.

Under federal regulations, examples of "other similar payments" include sums paid to an employee for the rental of a vehicle, loans made by the employer to the employee, and the costs to the employer of furnishing such employee conveniences as parking spaces, on-the-job medical care, and recreational facilities.ⁿ⁸⁶ In addition, one federal appellate court, interpreting the phrase "other similar payments," has concluded that the exclusion is not limited to payments that are "similar" to the specific examples set forth in paragraphs (1) and (2), above, but applies to any type of payment that is not made as compensation for hours worked or services rendered.ⁿ⁸⁷ In that case, the court held that the exclusion for "other similar payments ... not made as compensation for ... hours of employment"ⁿ⁸⁸ was applicable to lump sum payments made to employees pursuant to a collective bargaining agreement, which the employer had negotiated for in lieu of wage increases.ⁿ⁸⁹ The payment involved was not conditioned on the number of hours worked, although there was a requirement that the employee had worked for the employer for a certain minimum period of time.ⁿ⁹⁰

[ii] Payment for Nonproductive Hours Distinguished

As discussed previously in this chapter,ⁿ⁹¹ working time is not limited to hours spent in active productive labor, but includes certain "nonproductive" time given by the employee to the employer, such as time spent waiting for work, remaining "on-call" or traveling on the employer's business or to and from other workplaces. To the extent that these hours are regarded as working time, payment made as compensation for these hours must be included in computation of the regular rate of pay.ⁿ⁹²

Even if payment is ostensibly made as compensation for nonproductive hours that are not regarded as working time under the FLSA (for example, for "on-call" time during which employees are free to engage in personal pursuits),ⁿ⁹³ that payment is nevertheless made as compensation for performing a duty involved in the employee's job and is not of a type excludable from the regular rate as a payment when no work is performed, unless it qualifies for exclusion because of the employer's failure to provide sufficient work or other similar cause.ⁿ⁹⁴ The Ninth Circuit had held that if, as frequently happens, employers pay employees for their duty-free meal periods, these wages may be includable in the regular rate of pay, even though the time expended by the employee during a duty-free meal period is not worktime for purposes of computing hours worked.ⁿ⁹⁵ However, two years after that decision, the regulation on which it was basedⁿ⁹⁶ was amended to provide that payments for meal periods not counted as hours worked should generally be excluded in computing the regular rate of pay when the parties have agreed to exclude such activities from hours worked. Under those amendments, if it appears from all the pertinent facts that the parties have agreed to exclude the meal period or other activities that would not constitute hours worked under the FLSA if not compensated from hours worked, payment for the period should be excluded from the regular rate.ⁿ⁹⁷ even if made compensable by contract, custom, or practice.^{n97.1}

[iii] Absences From Work Generally

The exclusion from regular rate of payments made when an employee is absent from work contemplates absences that are infrequent, sporadic, or unpredictable, and does not apply to regular "absences" such as lunch periods or regularly scheduled days of rest.ⁿ⁹⁸ The term "holiday" as used in the statutory exclusion is interpreted according to its ordinary usage to refer to those days customarily observed in the community in celebration of some historical or religious occasion; it does not refer to days of rest given to employees in lieu of or as an addition to compensation for working on other days.ⁿ⁹⁹

The term "failure of the employer to provide sufficient work" is intended to refer to occasional, sporadically recurring situations when the employee would normally be working but for such factors as machinery breakdown, nondelivery of supplies, weather conditions, and similarly unpredictable obstacles beyond the control of the employer.ⁿ¹⁰⁰ The term does not include reduction in work schedule,ⁿ¹⁰¹ ordinary temporary layoff situations, or any type of routine, recurrent absence of the employee.ⁿ¹⁰²

Examples of payments for absences that are excludable from the regular rate as similar to payments for periods of absence due to holidays, vacations, or failure of the employer to provide work include payments for absences due to jury service, reporting to a draft board, attending a funeral of a family member, or inability to reach the workplace because of weather conditions.ⁿ¹⁰³

[iv] Pay for Foregoing Holidays and Vacations

If an employee entitled to a paid idle holiday or vacation foregoes the holiday or vacation to perform work and is paid (in addition to the sum paid for the holiday or vacation) his or her customary rate or higher, the sum allocable to holiday or vacation pay is still excluded from the regular rate, but is not credited toward overtime compensation.ⁿ¹⁰⁴ This situation is distinguished from a situation in which an employee is entitled to idle holiday pay only when he or she is actually idle on that day, and foregoes the holiday idle pay to work at a premium rate on the holiday. Under these circumstances, the holiday premium portion of the pay is excluded from the regular rate as an overtime premium,ⁿ¹⁰⁵ and may be credited toward the statutory overtime compensation due.ⁿ¹⁰⁶

[v] "Show-Up," "Callback," and Similar Payments

Under some employment agreements, an employee may be paid a minimum of a specified number of hours' pay at the applicable straight time or overtime rate on infrequent and sporadic occasions when, after reporting to work at the scheduled starting time, the employee is not provided with the expected amount of work.ⁿ¹⁰⁷ Show-up, or reporting-time, pay is also mandated under all the California wage orders.ⁿ¹⁰⁸ Under the FLSA, reporting time payments made in excess of compensation for hours actually worked by the employee are considered payments other than for hours worked and are excluded from computation of the employee's regular rate.ⁿ¹⁰⁹

■ ILLUSTRATION:

An employment agreement provides that if Employee reports for scheduled work on any day, he will receive a minimum of four hours' work or pay for that many hours. Employee's applicable maximum workweek is 40 hours, and his regular straight-time hourly wage is $10.00. On Monday of a given workweek, Employee reports for work at the scheduled time, but there are only two hours of work for the Employee to perform. Employee then works eight hours a day on Tuesday through Saturday, for a total of 42 hours for the workweek. Under the agreement, Employee is entitled to $440.00 for the week, including $20.00 "show-up" pay for the two idle hours on Monday. The extra two hours of "show-up"

pay is not regarded as compensation for hours worked and is excluded from computation of Employee's regular rate, which remains $10.00 per hour. Employee is therefore entitled to additional overtime compensation of $10.00 (1/2 times his regular rate for the two hours worked in excess of 40).ⁿ¹¹⁰ The $20.00 "show-up" pay may not be credited toward Employer's overtime obligation.ⁿ¹¹¹

The same principles are applicable with respect to typical minimum "callback" pay agreements, under which an employee must receive payment for a specified minimum number of hours for returning to work after scheduled work hours have ended to perform extra work in response to the employer's call.ⁿ¹¹² These principles also apply to certain types of extra payments that are similar to "callback" pay. These include payments made to employees, on infrequent and sporadic occasions, for failure to give the employee sufficient notice to report for work on days of rest or during hours outside of the regular work schedule, or for being called back to work before the expiration of a specified number of hours between shifts or tours of duty, sometimes referred to as a "rest period." The extra payment, over and above the employee's earnings for the hours actually worked at the applicable straight time or overtime rate, is considered as a payment that is not made for hours worked.ⁿ¹¹³

[vi] Reimbursable Expenses

As noted in [i], above, payments made to reimburse an employee for expenses incurred by the employee on behalf of the employer or for the employer's convenience are not included in computing the employee's regular rate.ⁿ¹¹⁴ Examples of such expenses include the following:ⁿ¹¹⁵

1. Actual amounts expended by an employee in purchasing supplies, tools, materials, or equipment on behalf of the employer;
2. Actual or reasonably approximate amounts spent by an employee in purchasing, laundering, or repairing required uniforms or special clothing;
3. Actual or reasonably approximate amounts expended by an employee while traveling "over the road" on the employer's business, including transportation and living expenses away from home;
4. "Supper money" when a day-shift employee is requested to continue work during the evening hours;
5. Temporary excess home-to-work travel expenses incurred when the employer has moved the workplace to another town before the employee has had an opportunity to find living quarters in the new location, or when the employee must report for work at a place other than the regular workplace on a particular occasion.

If the amount paid as "reimbursement" is disproportionately large, the excess amount will be included in the regular rate.ⁿ¹¹⁶ If the employer reimburses the employee for expenses normally incurred by the employee for his or her own benefit rather than the employer's benefit (such as for regular home-to-work travel, buying lunch, paying rent, and the like), that amount must be included in computing (and will increase) the employee's regular rate.ⁿ¹¹⁷

[h] Discretionary Bonuses Excluded From Regular Rate

[i] General Rule

An employee's regular rate does not include sums paid in recognition of services performed during a given period if both the fact that payment is to be made and the amount of the payment are determined at the sole discretion of the employer at or near the end of the period and not pursuant to any prior contract, agreement, or promise causing the employee to expect such payments regularly.ⁿ¹¹⁸ Although excludable from the regular rate, such sums may not be credited toward overtime compensation due.ⁿ¹¹⁹

[ii] Nondiscretionary Bonuses Not Excludable

If the employer promises in advance to pay a bonus, the employer has abandoned his or her discretion with regard to it, and the bonus may not be excluded from the regular rate.ⁿ¹²⁰ The bonus will not qualify for exclusion from the regular rate if the employer abandons his or her discretion with regard to either the fact that payment will be made or the amount of the payment.ⁿ¹²¹

■ ILLUSTRATION:

Employer promises to sales employees that they will receive a monthly bonus computed by allocating a specified amount for each item sold whenever, in the employer's discretion, the financial condition of the firm warrants such payments. Employer has abandoned its discretion with regard to the amount of the bonus, even if not with regard to the fact of payment, and the bonus must therefore be included in computing the employees' regular rates.ⁿ¹²²

[iii] Incentive or Production Bonuses Not Excludable

Bonuses that are announced to employees to induce them to work more steadily or rapidly or efficiently, or to remain with the firm, are regarded as part of the regular rate of pay.ⁿ¹²³ Bonuses based directly on attendance, individual or group production, or quality and accuracy of work; bonuses contingent on the employee's continuing in employment until the time the payment is to be made; and similar types of bonuses are not discretionary bonuses and must be included in the regular rate of pay.ⁿ¹²⁴

[iv] Method of Computing Regular Rate Based on Nonexcludable Bonus

If the nonexcludable bonus covers only one weekly pay period, the amount of the bonus is merely added to the other includable earnings of the employee for that workweek and the total is then divided by the total hours worked to obtain the regular rate.ⁿ¹²⁵

Under many bonus plans, however, calculation of the bonus may necessarily be deferred over a period of time longer than a workweek. In such a case, the employer may disregard the bonus in computing the regular hourly rate until the time when the amount of the bonus can be ascertained, and pay overtime compensation at 1 1/2 times the employee's regular hourly rate, exclusive of the bonus.ⁿ¹²⁶ When the amount of the bonus can be ascertained, it must be apportioned back over the workweeks of the period during which it may be said to have been earned.ⁿ¹²⁷ The employee must then receive an additional amount of compensation for each workweek that he or she worked overtime during the period equal to 1/2 of the increase in the hourly rate of pay allocable to the bonus for that week multiplied by the number of statutory overtime hours worked during the week.ⁿ¹²⁸

■ ILLUSTRATION:

Employee is employed to produce widgets for Employer. Employee is compensated at $10.00 per hour, and earns a "bonus" based on his rate of production of widgets. The applicable maximum workweek is 40 hours. During Workweek 1, Employee works 44 hours and earns a bonus based on his production rate, but the amount of the bonus is not ascertainable until several weeks later. Initially, Employee must be paid 1 1/2 times the regular hourly rate (or $15.00) for the four hours worked in excess of 40 hours during the workweek. When the amount of Employee's bonus is ascertained, Employer finds that $220.00 is attributable to Workweek 1. To compute Employee's adjusted regular rate for Workweek 1, Employer must add the amount of the bonus earned during that week to the amount of Employee's hourly wages for the week, excluding the overtime premium ($220.00 plus $440.00 equals $660.00) and dividing by the total number of hours worked ($660.00 divided by 44 equals $15.00 per hour). Employee is therefore entitled to $10.00 in additional overtime compensation for Workweek 1, which is equal to

1/2 the increase in the regular rate of pay attributable to the bonus ($15.00 minus $10.00 equals $5.00, divided by two equals $2.50) multiplied by the number of hours (four) worked in excess of 40 during Workweek 1.n129

If it is impossible to allocate the bonus among the workweeks of the period in proportion to the amount of the bonus actually earned each week, some other reasonable and equitable method of allocation must be adopted. For example, under certain circumstances it may be reasonable and equitable to assume that the employee earned an equal amount of bonus each week of the period to which the bonus related, or each hour of the pay period, and to compute the additional overtime based on this assumption.n130

In some instances, the contract or plan for the payment of a bonus may also provide for the simultaneous payment of overtime compensation due on the bonus that satisfies in full the overtime provisions of the FLSA, making recomputation unnecessary. Such would be the case if, for example, a contract made prior to the performance of services provided for the payment of additional compensation in the way of a bonus at the rate of 10 percent of the employee's straight-time earnings, and 10 percent of overtime earnings.n131

[v] Prizes and Suggestion System Awards

Prizes are includable in the regular rate as a form of bonus if they are paid to an employee as remuneration for employment.n132 Prizes awarded for the quality, quantity, or efficiency of work done by employees during their customary working hours at their normal assigned tasks are part of the regular rate of pay.n133 Whether prizes awarded for activities outside the customary working hours of the employee, beyond the scope of the employee's duties, or away from the employer's premises are part of the regular rate depends on various factors, such as the amount of time spent by the employee in competing, the relationship between the contest activities and the usual work of the employee, whether the competition involves work usually performed by other employees for employers, and whether the employee was specifically urged to participate or led to believe that promotion or advancement depends on his or her participation.n134 For example, a prize paid for work performed in obtaining new business for an employer would be regarded as remuneration for employment, even though the duties of the participating employees do not normally encompass this type of work.n135 In contrast, a prize for recommending a good sales prospect to whom a sale was actually made would not be regarded as compensation for services if in fact the prizewinner performed no work or spent no time on the matter.n136

Prizes paid pursuant to a bona fide suggestion system are not included in the regular rate, at least when (1) the amount of the prize is based on the value of the suggestion to the company rather than the employee's earnings (that is, the prize is not a substitute for wages), (2) the suggestion is the result of additional effort unrelated to the employee's usual duties, (3) participation was not directly or indirectly coerced by the employer, (4) the invitation to submit suggestions is general in nature and no specific assignment is outlined to employees (either as individuals or as a group) to work on, (5) there is no time limit during which suggestions must be submitted, and (6) the employer has no knowledge, prior to submission of the suggestion, that the employee is working on preparation of a suggestion under circumstances suggesting that the task and schedule of work has been approved by the employer.n137

[i] Talent Fees in the Radio and Television Industry Excluded From Regular Rate

An employee's regular rate does not include sums paid in recognition of services performed during a given period if the payments constitute "talent fees," as defined and delimited by regulations of the Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division,n138 paid to performers, including announcers, on radio and television programs.n139

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS
CHAPTER 3 Overtime Compensation and Regulation of Hours Worked
Part A. OVERTIME COMPENSATION

1-3 California Employment Law § 3.09

AUTHOR: By Carol S. Sanders, J.D.

§ 3.09 Determining the Regular Rate of Pay--Computation Under Different Types of Pay Practices

[1] California Law

[a] Generally

As noted previously,ⁿ¹ the California wage orders and Labor Code provide no definition of the regular rate, and few guidelines exist regarding computation of the regular rate based on different types of pay arrangements. In most cases, federal rules for computing the regular rate are useful in construing state law.ⁿ² However, there are situations, discussed below, when federal formulas for computing the regular rate for purposes of overtime compensation may not be applied under state law.

[b] Hourly Rate Plus Production Bonus

When the employee receives a bonus based on hours worked, production, or efficiency, the bonus must be included in determining the employee's regular rate of pay for computing overtime.ⁿ³ The regular rate of pay for the bonus is computed by dividing the bonus by the total number of hours worked. The employee must then receive overtime compensation on the bonus, which is equal to (1) one-half times the bonus regular rate for each overtime hour worked during which the employee is ordinarily entitled to 1½ times the regular rate of pay, plus (2) the full amount of the bonus regular rate for each overtime hour worked during which the employee is ordinarily entitled to double the regular rate of pay.ⁿ⁴ The same formula is applied under the FLSA.ⁿ⁵

In Marin v. Costco Wholesale Corp.,^{n5.1} an employer that paid a nondiscretionary, formulaic bonus, based on paid hours, to long-term hourly employees, which increased the regular rate of pay, calculated the overtime owed on the bonus by dividing the employee's maximum base bonus by the minimum number of paid hours required to achieve the maximum bonus to determine a regular hourly bonus rate, and then by multiplying the number of overtime hours worked during the bonus period by one-half of that regular bonus rate. Plaintiffs contended that the employer was required to calculate the regular bonus rate by dividing the base bonus the employee earned by the number of straight time hours worked during the bonus period, and then multiplying the number of overtime hours by 1.5 times that regular bonus rate. The trial court concluded that the employer's bonus plan complied with California law when an employee worked less than 1,000 hours in a bonus period, but violated California law when an employee worked more than 1,000 hours because the formula paid the employee for only 1/3 of the bonus overtime due on hours worked beyond 1,000. Moreover, the trial court found that use of plaintiffs' formula to compute the bonus overtime owed was compelled by case law^{5.2} and sections of the Division of Labor Standards Enforcement's (DLSE) 2002 Enforcement Policies and Interpretations Manual distinguishing "flat sum" bonuses^{5.3} from bonuses based on a percentage of production or some formula other than a flat amount.^{5.4} The trial court conceded that its conclusion yielded apparently irrational results, e.g., that two employees working different amounts of straight time work but the same amount of overtime would have different hourly rates for purposes of calculating overtime and would be paid different amounts of overtime pay.^{5.5}

The Court of Appeal held that the employer's formula did not violate California law.^{5.6} No California court decision, statute, or regulation governed bonus overtime because the case on which the trial court relied^{5.7} was inapplicable; the DLSE Manual sections on the subject did not have the force of law because they were void regulations under the reasoning of Tidewater v. Marine Western Inc.;^{5.8} and DLSE opinion letters on the subject were not on point. The only authority was the statutory directive that overtime hours be compensated at a rate of no less than one and one-half times the regular rate of pay.^{5.9} The court found that the employer's bonus plan fulfilled that directive, relying on the Manual provisions for overtime on production bonuses as setting forth a valid formula.^{5.10} While the employer's bonus did not fit neatly into either of the categories the DLSE posited, but was, in a sense, a hybrid of the DLSE categories, it functioned for the most part like a production bonus, and the employer was not required to treat it as a flat sum bonus to effectuate the DLSE's policy concerns. The bonus was in the nature of a production bonus until the 1,000-paid-hour threshold was reached, and while it had some qualities of a flat sum bonus on hours paid thereafter, it did not encourage imposition of overtime during the post-1,000-hour period in a way that would support the use of the DLSE's flat sum bonus formula even as to overtime worked during that period.

[c] Regular Rate When Earnings Based on Fixed Salary

[i] Generally

The DLSE has taken the position that the hourly regular rate of pay of a salaried employee cannot be based on hours in excess of the maximum number of straight-time workweek hours permissible for the particular type of employment, even if the employment agreement contemplates that the salary will cover a longer workweek.⁶ The DLSE's method of computation has been held valid and applied by the courts.⁷ While the usual maximum straight-time workweek is 40 hours, California law permits a longer workweek for certain types of employees, as previously discussed. For example, employees of ski establishments may be required to work 48 hours in a workweek before overtime must be paid,⁸ and certain agricultural workers may be required to work 60 hours without being paid the overtime premium.⁹ In Espinoza v. Classic Pizza, Inc.,^{9.1} in calculating the plaintiff's regular rate of pay, the court was required to use a divisor of 40 for the period beginning with plaintiff's employment and ending December 31, 1997, during which plaintiff was covered by a wage order regulating the public housekeeping industry and mandating overtime pay for workweek exceeding 40 hours or a workday exceeding eight hours. However, the court was required to use a divisor of 60 for the period beginning January 1, 1998, through end of plaintiff's employment, when plaintiff was covered by a non-superseded wage order mandating overtime pay only for hours worked in excess of 40 hours per week.^{9.2}

Under the wage orders, as interpreted by the DLSE, if an employee on a weekly salary has a regularly scheduled workweek in excess of the maximum straight-time workweek hours applicable to the employee's occupation, his or her "regular" hourly rate for overtime compensation purposes would be higher than under federal law.

■ ILLUSTRATION:

Employee's maximum hours standard is 40 hours per workweek under the applicable wage order.

Employee is hired at a fixed salary of $550.00 for 55 hours. Employee's regular rate under federal law for a week in which Employee worked his or her regularly scheduled number of hours would be determined by dividing $550.00 by 55, yielding a regular rate of $10.00 per hour.ⁿ¹⁰ Applying the DLSE's computation rule, the regular rate under California law would be determined by dividing $550.00 by 40, yielding a regular rate of $13.75 per hour.

By contrast, the agreed regular hours of work are used to compute the regular rate of pay if they are less than the legal maximum applicable to the employee.ⁿ¹¹

■ ILLUSTRATION:

Employee is hired pursuant to an agreement under which 35 hours constitutes the regular workweek. Employee's weekly salary is $350.00, and the applicable maximum workweek is 40 hours. Employee's regular rate under the wage orders is $10.00 per hour ($350.00 divided by 35 hours).

[ii] Fixed Salary for Fluctuating Workweek

Under a fluctuating workweek arrangement, the employee may have hours of work that fluctuate from week to week, but the employee is paid a fixed salary pursuant to an understanding that the fixed amount represents straight time pay for whatever number of hours the employee is called on to work that week.ⁿ¹²

Under federal law, the regular rate in a fluctuating workweek is determined by dividing the number of hours actually worked in the particular workweek into the salary amount. Thus, the regular rate will vary from week to week, and the longer hours the employee works, the lower the regular rate will be. Overtime compensation will amount to an additional one-half of the regular rate for that workweek for all hours worked in excess of the maximum workweek.ⁿ¹³

[d] Employees Paid on Piecework or Commission Basis

For employees paid on a commission or piecework basis, the DLSE endorses either of two methods for calculating the regular rate. The most commonly used method is to compute the regular rate by dividing the total earnings for the week, including earnings during overtime hours, by the total hours worked during the week, including overtime hours. The employee is entitled to receive an additional 1/2 times the regular rate for each overtime hour for which he or she would be entitled to 1 times the regular rate under the applicable wage order; for each overtime hour that he or she would be entitled to double the regular rate, the employee must receive an additional amount equal to the full regular rate. Although recognizing that it is rarely used, the DLSE also permits using the piece or commission rate as the regular rate and paying one and one half times this rate for production during overtime hours.ⁿ¹⁴ The FLSA also permits this method of overtime compensation but requires that the employer and employee have an agreement in advance permitting the use of this method.ⁿ¹⁵

[2] Federal Law

[a] Regular Rate When Earnings Based on Hourly Rate

[i] Hourly Rate Exclusively

Under the FLSA, if the employee is employed solely on the basis of a single hourly rate, that rate is his or her regular rate. For overtime work, that employee must be paid, in addition to straight time hourly earnings, a sum determined by multiplying 1/2 the hourly rate by the number of hours worked in excess of 40 in the week.ⁿ¹⁶

[ii] Hourly Rate Plus Bonus

Any production bonuses received during the workweek must be added to the straight-time earnings to determine the hourly "regular rate" for overtime compensation purposes under the FLSA.ⁿ¹⁷

■ ILLUSTRATION:

Employee is employed at a straight-time hourly rate of $10.00, plus production bonuses. During a workweek, Employee works 46 hours and earns a production bonus of $20.00. Under the FLSA, Employee's regular rate is computed by first multiplying the straight-time rate times the number of hours actually worked ($10.00 times 46 equals $460.00), and adding the amount of the production bonus ($460.00 plus $20.00 equals $480.00). This total is then divided by the total hours worked (46), yielding an hourly regular rate of $10.22. Employee is entitled to be paid a total wage of $500.78 for 46 hours (40 hours at $10.22, plus six hours at $15.33).¹⁸

The DLSE follows the same formula for computing the regular rate on bonuses under the wage orders.¹⁹

In Marin v. Costco Wholesale Corp.,^{19.1} an employer that paid a nondiscretionary, formulaic bonus, based on paid hours, to long-term hourly employees, which increased the regular rate of pay, calculated the overtime owed on the bonus by dividing the employee's maximum base bonus by the minimum number of paid hours required to achieve the maximum bonus to determine a regular hourly bonus rate, and then by multiplying the number of overtime hours worked during the bonus period by one-half of that regular bonus rate. The employer's plan did not violate federal law under a federal regulation^{19.2} providing that if it is impossible to allocate a bonus among the workweeks of the period in proportion to the amount of the bonus actually earned each week, some other reasonable and equitable method of allocation must be adopted.^{19.3} Under the regulation, it could have been reasonable and equitable to assume that an employee earned an equal amount of bonus each week of the period to which the bonus related, and if the facts supported this assumption, additional compensation for each overtime week of the period could be computed and paid in an amount equal to one-half of the average hourly increase in pay resulting from bonus allocated to the week, multiplied by the number of statutory overtime hours worked in that week. On the other hand, if there were facts making it inappropriate to assume equal bonus earnings for each workweek, it could have been reasonable and equitable to assume that the employee earned an equal amount of bonus each hour of the pay period and the resultant hourly increase could have been determined by dividing the total bonus by the number of hours worked by the employee during the period for which it was paid. The additional compensation due for the overtime workweeks in the period could then have been computed by multiplying the total number of statutory overtime hours worked in each such workweek during the period by one-half the hourly increase.^{19.4} The court found that while the regulation may not have been directly on point, it was generally supportive of the employer's formula insofar as it contemplated an overtime-hour multiplier of 0.5, rather than 1.5, to compute the bonus overtime. Further, nothing in the regulation prohibited the employer's method of calculating bonus overtime.

[iii] Variation of Hourly Rate Based on Hours Worked

When an employee temporarily or sporadically works workweeks of varying lengths, it would be arithmetically possible for the employer to artificially vary the hourly rate paid for the same type of work from week to week based solely on the number of hours worked by the employee (that is, the more hours worked, the lower the rate paid), so that the employee would always earn the same average hourly rate, no matter how many hours he or she worked. For example, if an employer set up a schedule whereby the employee's hourly rate was $12.00 per hour for weeks in which the employee worked 40 hours, approximately $11.86 for weeks in which the employee worked 41 hours, approximately $11.64 for weeks in which the employee worked 42 hours, and so forth, the employee would always make $12.00 per hour, regardless of how many hours were worked in a particular week. Such a plan, however, is considered a bookkeeping device intended to circumvent the overtime provisions of the FLSA and is prohibited by federal regulations.²⁰ Overtime rates cannot be avoided by manipulating the pay for regular hours or otherwise reducing the pay for regular hours to make up for the overtime rate that will have to be paid.^{20.1} Under such circumstances, the hourly rate actually paid in the shorter or nonovertime week is deemed to be the regular rate in all weeks for overtime computation purposes.²¹ A shift differential, in which an employee receives additional pay due to the nature of the work, such as working a nightshift or performing undesirable tasks, must be included in the regular rate.^{21.1}

By contrast, the parties may, pursuant to a definite plan for the permanent reduction of the normal scheduled workweek (for example, from 48 to 40 hours), agree to a rising scale of hourly rates as the workweek is gradually reduced, in order to lessen the shock caused by the expected reduction in take-home pay. In order for the varying rates to be recognized as bona fide, certain criteria must be met, including that there be a clear downward trend in the duration of the workweek throughout the period of the plan, and that the various rates remain operative for substantial periods and do not vary from week-to-week in accordance with the number of hours that any particular employee or group happens to work.ⁿ²²

[b] Regular Rate When Earnings Based on Salary

[i] Weekly Salary for Fixed Workweek

If the employee is employed solely on a weekly salary basis, his or her regular hourly rate of pay is computed by dividing the salary by the number of hours per workweek for which the salary is intended to compensate.ⁿ²³

■ ILLUSTRATION:

Employee is hired at a weekly salary of $350.00, and it is understood that this salary is compensation for a regular workweek of 35 hours. Employee's regular rate of pay is $10.00 per hour ($350.00 divided by 35 hours). For overtime work, the employee is entitled to receive $10.00 per hour for each overtime hour up to 40 hours, and $15.00 for each hour worked thereafter.ⁿ²⁴

The same rule of computation applies if the employee is hired for a fixed workweek that exceeds the statutory maximum. All of the employee's salary must be included in computing the regular rate, and a premium equal to 1/2 the regular rate must be paid in addition to the employee's salary for all hours in excess of the maximum workweek applicable to that employee up to the number of hours regularly worked.ⁿ²⁵ In addition, the employee must be paid 1 1/2 times the regular rate for any hours worked in excess of his or her regular workweek.ⁿ²⁶ Federal regulations do not permit the employer to enter into an agreement under which the employee's salary purports to cover both overtime and nonovertime work, even if the same number of overtime hours are worked each week.ⁿ²⁷ The employee's entire salary must be credited toward the regular rate, and an additional, separately designated overtime premium, based on the number of overtime hours worked, must be paid to the employee. However, if the employee works exactly the same number of overtime hours each week, the additional premium may be stated in the form of a lump sum, as long as it is properly computed based on the number of overtime hours worked.ⁿ²⁸ For discussion of the requirements for exclusion of overtime premium payments from computation of the regular rate, see § 3.08[2][a].

If an employee is hired at a fixed salary for a specified workweek, and the workweek is subsequently reduced without a change in salary, the employee's regular rate will increase.ⁿ²⁹

■ ILLUSTRATION:

Employee is hired at a salary of $400.00 for a fixed workweek of 40 hours, and the workweek is then reduced to 35 hours with no change in salary. Employee's regular rate has increased from $10.00 per hour ($400.00 divided by 40) to $11.43 ($400.00 divided by 35). Assuming the applicable statutory maximum workweek is 40 hours, if Employee worked beyond 35 hours, the $11.43 hourly rate would apply up to 40 hours of work. After 40 hours, the overtime rate of 1 1/2 times $11.43 (or $17.15 per hour) would be owed to Employee. Thus, if Employee worked 41 hours in a particular week, he or she would be owed a salary of $400.00 covering 35 hours, plus five hours at $11.43 per hour (for the hours in excess of 35 up to and including 40), and $17.15 for the one hour worked in excess of 40, for total earnings of $474.30 for the week.ⁿ³⁰

[ii] Salary Covering Period Longer Than Workweek

A salary covering a period longer than a workweek must be reduced to its workweek equivalent.ⁿ³¹ Thus, a monthly salary is translated into its equivalent weekly wage by multiplying by 12 (the number of months) and dividing by 52

(the number of weeks). A semimonthly salary is translated into its equivalent weekly wage by multiplying by 24 and dividing by 52. Once the weekly wage is computed, the regular hourly rate of pay will be calculated in the same manner as a weekly salary,ⁿ³² as discussed in [i], above.

Alternatively, under federal regulations,ⁿ³³ the parties may provide that the regular rates will be determined by dividing the monthly salary by the number of working days in the month, and then by the number of hours of the normal or regular workday, as long as the resultant rate is not less than the statutory minimum wage.ⁿ³⁴

[iii] Fixed Salary for Variable Workweek Less Than Statutory Maximum

As in all cases of employees hired on a salaried basis, the regular rate for employees hired to work a variable number of hours depends in part on the agreement of the parties concerning the number of hours the salary is intended to compensate.ⁿ³⁵ If an employee is hired to work a variable number of hours up to a certain maximum number that is less than or equal to the statutory maximum, the regular rate is calculated by dividing the employee's total salary by the actual number of hours worked up to the maximum number specified in the agreement.ⁿ³⁶

■ ILLUSTRATION:

A customary workweek schedule is reduced from 40 hours to 35 hours, and the parties agree to change the basis of the employment arrangement by providing that the salary that formerly covered a fixed workweek of 40 hours now covers a variable workweek up to 40 hours. Under this agreement, Employee receives $400.00 for workweeks of varying lengths, such as 35, 36, 38, or 40 hours. The rate thus varies from week to week, but in weeks of 40 hours or more, the regular rate is $10.00 per hour ($400.00 divided by 40, the maximum amount of hours covered by the salary), and the overtime rate, for hours in excess of 40, remains $15.00 per hour. Because this salary arrangement presumably contemplates that the full salary will be paid for any workweek of 40 hours or less, Employee would be entitled to the full salary if he or she worked only 25 or 30 hours.ⁿ³⁷

[iv] Fixed Salary for Fluctuating Hours Including Overtime

Regulations issued pursuant to the FLSA permit a salary arrangement under which an employee whose work hours fluctuate from week to week may, pursuant to a clear mutual understanding of the parties, be paid a fixed salary as compensation (apart from overtime premiums) for the hours worked each workweek, whatever their number.ⁿ³⁸ However, except in the case of "Belo" agreements satisfying the requirements of Title 29, United States Code section 207(f),ⁿ³⁹ a salary arrangement under which the employer pays a fixed amount purporting to cover both straight time and overtime compensation for an employee who does not work a fixed schedule does not satisfy the requirements of the FLSA.ⁿ⁴⁰ The employee must receive extra compensation, in addition to the regular salary, for all overtime hours worked at a rate not less than 1/2 his or her regular rate of pay.ⁿ⁴¹ The regular hourly rate for each workweek is determined by dividing the number of hours actually worked in that workweek into the amount of the salary. Since the salary is intended to compensate the employee at straight-time rates for whatever hours are worked in the workweek, the regular rate will vary from week to week. Additional payment for overtime hours at 1/2 this regular rate satisfies the overtime pay requirement because these hours have already been compensated at the straight-time regular rate under the salary arrangement.ⁿ⁴²

The fluctuating workweek method of overtime payment may only be used if the fixed salary is sufficient to assure that the employee's average hourly earnings will not fall below the minimum wageⁿ⁴³ for workweeks in which the number of hours worked by the employee is greatest.ⁿ⁴⁴ In addition, the employee must clearly understand that the salary covers whatever hours the job may demand in a particular workweek, except for overtime premiums,ⁿ⁴⁵ and the employer must pay the full salary even in workweeks in which a full schedule of hours is not worked.ⁿ⁴⁶

[v] Fixed Weekly Salary for Alternating Workweeks of Different Fixed Lengths

In some cases, an employee may be hired under an arrangement whereby the employee earns a fixed salary covering alternating workweeks of different fixed lengths (for example, 35 hours one week and 40 hours the next week). Under such an arrangement, the employee will have two, alternating regular rates. Federal regulations permit such an arrangement, as long as the lengths of the alternating workweeks are fixed on a permanent basis far in advance, are not subject to the control of the employer, and do not vary with fluctuations in the employer's business.ⁿ⁴⁷ Overtime compensation must, of course, be paid to the employee for hours worked in excess of the statutory maximum in any workweek, based on 1 1/2 times the regular rate applicable in that particular workweek.ⁿ⁴⁸

[c] Regular Rate When Earnings Based on Piece Rates

The hourly rate of pay for an employee employed on a piece-rate basis is computed by adding together the employee's total earnings for the workweek from piece rates and all other sources (such as production bonuses), and any sums paid for waiting time or other hours worked.ⁿ⁴⁹ To yield the pieceworker's regular rate for that workweek, the total sum of earnings is then divided by hours worked in the workweek for which this compensation was paid. For overtime work, the pieceworker is entitled to be paid, in addition to total weekly earnings at this regular rate for all hours worked, including overtime hours, a sum equivalent to one-half this regular rate multiplied by the number of hours worked in excess of 40.ⁿ⁵⁰

■ ILLUSTRATION:

Employee earns $450.00 based on piece rates, for 46 hours of productive work during a workweek. In addition, Employee is compensated at an hourly rate of $10.00 for four hours of waiting time during that week. Employee's regular rate is calculated by dividing the total regular compensation (piece-rate compensation plus waiting time compensation) for the week by the total number of hours worked during the week ($490.00 divided by 50 equals $9.80 per hour). Employee is entitled to receive additional overtime compensation of $4.90 per hour for the 10 hours worked in excess of 40, for total overtime compensation of $49.00.ⁿ⁵¹

In some cases, an employee is hired on a piece-rate basis coupled with a minimum hourly guaranty. If an employee's piece-rate earnings for a given workweek fall short of the amount that would be earned for the total hours of work at the guaranteed rate, the employee is paid the difference. In such weeks, the employee is in fact paid at an hourly rate, and the minimum hourly guaranteed pay is treated as the employee's regular rate of pay for purposes of the FLSA.ⁿ⁵²

For a discussion of an alternative method of computing overtime compensation for piecework, based on a multiple of the applicable piece rates, see § 3.10[1][b].

[d] Regular Rate When Earnings Based on Commission

[i] Generally

Commissions are considered payments for hours worked and must be included in the regular rate, regardless of the formula on which the commission is based or the method of computing, allocating, and paying the commission, and regardless of whether the commission is the sole source of the employee's compensation or is paid in addition to a guaranteed salary or hourly rate, or on some other basis.ⁿ⁵³ For discussion of the exemption of certain commissioned employees of retail or service establishments from overtime compensation requirements, see § 3.03[2][c].

[ii] Commission Paid on Workweek Basis

If the commission is paid on a weekly basis, the regular hourly rate for the workweek is obtained by adding commission payments to the employee's other includable earnings for that workweek, and dividing that amount by the total number of hours worked in that workweek.ⁿ⁵⁴ The employee must then be paid extra compensation at 1/2 of that rate for each hour worked in excess of the applicable maximum hour standard for that employee.ⁿ⁵⁵

[iii] Deferred Commission Payments

If the calculation and payment of the commission cannot be completed until sometime after the regular payday for the workweek, the employer may disregard the commission in computing the regular hourly rate until the amount of commission can be ascertained.ⁿ⁵⁶ Until that is done, the employer may pay compensation for overtime based on the employee's hourly rate, exclusive of the commission.ⁿ⁵⁷ When the commission can be computed and paid, additional overtime compensation due by reason of the inclusion of the commission in the employee's regular rate must also be paid. To compute this additional overtime compensation, the commission must be apportioned back over the workweeks of the period during which it was earned.ⁿ⁵⁸ The employee must then receive additional overtime compensation for each week during the period in which he or she worked in excess of the applicable maximum hours standard.ⁿ⁵⁹ The additional compensation for that workweek must be not less than 1/2 of the increase in the hourly rate of pay attributable to the commission for that week multiplied by the number of hours worked in excess of the applicable maximum hours standards in that week.ⁿ⁶⁰

■ ILLUSTRATION:

Employee is compensated at $10.00 per hour, plus commissions. The applicable maximum workweek is 40 hours. During Workweek 1, Employee works 44 hours and earns commissions on the sale of Employer's products, but the amount of the commissions is not ascertainable until sales invoices are processed several weeks later. Initially, Employee must be paid 1 1/2 times the regular hourly rate (or $15.00) for the four hours worked in excess of 40 hours during the workweek. When Employee's commissions are ascertained, Employer finds that $220.00 is attributable to Workweek 1. To compute Employee's adjusted regular rate for Workweek 1, Employer must add the amount of the commissions earned during that week to the amount of Employee's hourly wages for the week, excluding the overtime premium ($440.00 plus $220.00 equals $660.00) and divide by the total number of hours worked ($660.00 divided by 44 equals $15.00 per hour).ⁿ⁶¹ Employee is entitled to $20.00 in additional overtime compensation for Workweek 1, which is equal to 1/2 the increase in the regular rate of pay attributable to the commissions ($15.00 minus $5.00 equals $10.00, divided by two equals $5.00) multiplied by the number of hours (four) worked in excess of 40 during Workweek 1.ⁿ⁶²

If it is not possible or practicable to allocate the commission among the workweeks of the period in proportion to the amount of commission actually earned or reasonably presumed to have been earned each week, computation may be based on the assumption that the employee earned an equal amount of commission for each hour worked during the commission computation period.ⁿ⁶³ After the increase in the hourly rate based on the deferred commission allocation is determined, additional overtime due is computed by multiplying 1/2 of this figure by the number of overtime hours worked in each of the overtime workweeks of the commission computation period.ⁿ⁶⁴

[e] Regular Rate When Earnings Based on Day Rates and Job Rates

If an employee is paid a flat sum for a day's work or for a particular job, without regard to the number of hours worked in that day or at that job, his or her regular rate of pay is determined by adding all sums received at that rate in the workweek (assuming no other forms of compensation for services), and dividing the total by the number of hours actually worked. The employee is then entitled to an extra 1/2 times this rate for all hours worked in excess of 40 in the workweek.ⁿ⁶⁵

[f] Regular Rate When Employee Works at More Than One Rate

If an employee in a single workweek works at two or more different types of work for which different nonovertime rates of pay have been established, the employee's regular rate for that week is the weighted average of those rates. The employee's total includable earnings are computed to include his or her compensation during the workweek from all applicable rates, and are then divided by the total number of hours worked at all jobs.ⁿ⁶⁶

■ ILLUSTRATION:

Employee is compensated at $10.00 per hour to perform Job A and $15.00 per hour to perform Job B. During a given workweek, Employee works 40 hours at Job A and 10 hours at Job B. Employee's regular rate for that workweek would be $11.00 per hour, which equals the total nonovertime pay due for both jobs ($550.00) divided by the total number of hours worked during the week (50).ⁿ⁶⁷ Employee would be entitled to additional compensation of $55.00 for that workweek, which equals 1/2 times the regular rate of pay ($5.50) times the number of hours worked in excess of 40 (10 hours).

Alternatively, the parties may agree that the amount to be paid to the employee for performance of a particular type of work during overtime hours will be computed at rates not less than 1 1/2 times the bona fide rate applicable to the same work when performed during nonovertime hours.ⁿ⁶⁸ For a discussion of this alternative method of computing overtime pay, see § 3.10[1][c].

[g] Regular Rate When Compensation Includes Payment for Nonproductive Hours of Work

An agreement may not provide that nonproductive worktime, such as hours spent in waiting time or travel time on the employer's behalf,ⁿ⁶⁹ is noncompensable or not counted in calculating hours worked for purposes of overtime compensation requirements.ⁿ⁷⁰ However, the parties may agree to compensate nonproductive hours worked at a rate that is lower than the rate applicable to productive work (as long as the lower rate is at least as high as the applicable minimum wage). In such a case, the regular rate is the weighted average of the two rates, and computation is determined in the same manner as in any situation in which the employee works at two or more different rates for different work.ⁿ⁷¹ In the absence of an agreement setting a different rate for nonproductive hours, the employee would be owed compensation at the regular hourly rate set for productive work for all hours worked up to the applicable maximum workweek and at least 1 1/2 times that rate for hours worked in excess of the maximum.ⁿ⁷²

It is permissible to assign no special hourly rate to nonproductive hours if they are properly counted when computing hours worked, and if the parties understand that the other compensation received by the employee is intended to cover pay for nonproductive hours. For example, the parties may agree that the pay earned by employees at piece rates is intended to compensate them for all hours worked, productive as well as nonproductive. In this case, the regular rate of the pieceworker will be determined by dividing the total piecework earnings by the total hours worked (including nonproductive hours), and an additional 1/2 times that rate would be due for each hour worked in excess of the maximum workweek.ⁿ⁷³

Payment for nonproductive worktime, which is includable in the regular rate, is distinguished from payment for hours when no work is performed, such as for absences or for hours spent in certain activities that are not regarded as worktime under the FLSA. Payment for hours when no work is performed may be excluded from computation of the regular rate.ⁿ⁷⁴

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS
CHAPTER 3 Overtime Compensation and Regulation of Hours Worked
Part A. OVERTIME COMPENSATION

1-3 California Employment Law § 3.10

AUTHOR: By Carol S. Sanders, J.D.

§ 3.10 Exceptions to Requirement of Computing Overtime Based on Regular Rate of Pay Under Federal Law

[1] Alternative Computation for Pieceworkers and Other Employees

[a] Generally

Title 29 United States Code, section 207(g) provides limited exceptions to the normal requirement that overtime compensation be based on the employee's regular rate of pay, as defined in the FLSA and its regulations. These provisions are discussed in [b] through [d], below. These alternative methods of computing overtime may only be used by the employer pursuant to an agreement or understanding arrived at before performance of the work.ⁿ¹ Furthermore, under any such agreement, the employee's average hourly earnings for the workweek (exclusive of premiums that are not part of the statutory regular rate)ⁿ² must be not less than the minimum hourly wage permissible under law.ⁿ³ In addition, extra overtime compensation must be properly computed and paid on other forms of additional pay that are required to be included in computing the regular rate.ⁿ⁴

[b] Overtime Compensation Computed on Basis of Piece Rates

In the case of employees employed at piece rates, the parties may agree to compute overtime compensation at piece rates not less than 1 1/2 times the bona fide piece rates applicable to the same work when performed during nonovertime hours.ⁿ⁵ The agreement must be entered into before performance of the work, and overtime must be properly computed and paid on all other forms of compensation required to be included in the regular rate.ⁿ⁶ The piece rate will be regarded as bona fide if it is the rate actually paid for work performed during the nonovertime hours and is sufficient to yield at least the minimum wage per hour.ⁿ⁷

The DLSE also permits use of the above method of computing overtime based on piece rates under the California wage orders, but does not expressly require an advance agreement between the parties.ⁿ⁸ Under the FLSA, however, in the absence of an alternative computation agreement, overtime compensation must be computed by adding together the employee's total earnings for the workweek from piece rates and other includable earnings, and dividing that sum by the hours worked in the workweek to obtain the pieceworker's regular rate for that workweek.ⁿ⁹ For discussion of computation of regular rate based on piece rates under the FLSA in the absence of an agreement for alternative computation of overtime, see § 3.09[2][c].

[c] Employees Performing Two or More Kinds of Work

In the case of employees performing two or more kinds of work for which different hourly or piece rates have been established, the parties may agree that compensation for a particular type of work performed during overtime hours will be computed at rates not less than 1 1/2 times the bona fide rates applicable to the same work when performed during nonovertime hours.ⁿ¹⁰ An hourly rate will be regarded as a bona fide rate for a particular kind of work if it is equal to or greater than the minimum wage and if it is the rate actually paid for that kind of work when performed during nonovertime hours.ⁿ¹¹

An hourly rate at least equal to the minimum wage may be regarded as a bona fide rate even though it applies solely to a type of work that is performed only during overtime hours. For example, in one case, nurses at a hospital were paid at their regular rate during their regular weekday shift. In addition, nurses were assigned to an additional overtime shift during which they were "on premises on-call." The hospital paid the nurses 1 1/2 times their regular rate for active periods during these overtime shifts, but only 1 1/2 times the federal minimum wage for periods during which the nurses were waiting to be called for active duty. The appellate court held that the minimum wage could be established as a bona fide rate for the waiting periods because the work was different in kind from the work performed during the nurses' regular shifts. The fact that the type of work to which the lower rate applied was never performed during overtime hours did not prevent the rate from being a bona fide rate for purposes of the FLSA.ⁿ¹²

If the employee works at a combination of hourly and piece rates, the payment of a rate not less than 1 1/2 times the hourly or piece rate applicable to the type of work being performed during the overtime hours will meet the overtime requirements of the FLSA if the provisions concerning alternative computation of piece ratesⁿ¹³ and those concerning hourly ratesⁿ¹⁴ are respectively met.ⁿ¹⁵

In the absence of an alternative computation agreement, overtime compensation for an employee working at two or more different types of work for which different rates are applicable must be based on the regular rate. The regular rate is computed by adding together total includable earnings during the workweek from all applicable rates, and dividing the sum by the total hours worked at all jobs during that workweek.ⁿ¹⁶

[d] Overtime Compensation Computed on "Basic Rate" Established by Agreement

The parties may agree to compute overtime compensation at a rate not less than 1 1/2 times the rate established by the agreement or understanding as the "basic rate" to be used in computing overtime compensation, provided that the rate so established is authorized by regulation of the Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division as being substantially equivalent to the average hourly earnings of the employee, exclusive of overtime premiums, in the particular work over a representative period of time.ⁿ¹⁷ Payments made in conformity with regulations issued pursuant to Title 29 United States Code, section 207(g)(3)ⁿ¹⁸ satisfy the overtime pay requirements of the FLSA.ⁿ¹⁹

[2] Guaranteed Compensation Including Overtime Pay Under "Belo Contracts"

Under a "Belo contract" for employees whose duties necessitate irregular hours of work, a fixed weekly guarantee of pay is established for up to 60 hours during a workweek, which includes overtime compensation for hours worked in excess of 40 during the workweek. Under such an agreement, the parties specify a "regular rate," which is used to compute the employee's straight time and overtime compensation for the maximum number of hours specified in the agreement.ⁿ²⁰ For a discussion of requirements for a Belo contract under Title 29 United States Code, section 207(f), see § 3.06[2][a].

The specified regular rate of pay under a Belo contract may be any hourly amount (not less than the applicable minimum wage) that the parties agree to and that can reasonably be expected to be operative in controlling the employee's compensation.ⁿ²¹ The rate specified must be one that would be operative and unvarying in determining the total amount of the employee's compensation (that is, the rate must be one that the FLSA does not require be recalculated from week to week). Thus, it is not possible to enter into a Belo contract with an employee whose regular weekly earnings are made up in part by the payment of regular bonuses and commissions that are required to be included in the computation of the regular rateⁿ²² because that employee's total compensation is controlled both by the additional payments and by the hourly rate.ⁿ²³

The regular rate specified in the contract together with the guarantee must be the actual measure of the regular wages that the employee receives. However, the payment of extra compensation, over and above the guaranteed amount, which is excludable from computation of the regular rate under Title 29 United States Code, section 207(e), such as for work on holidays or for discretionary bonuses,ⁿ²⁴ will not invalidate a contract that otherwise qualifies under Title 29 United States Code, section 207(f).ⁿ²⁵

The Belo contract must provide for compensation of not less than 1 1/2 (or any agreed higher multiple) times the specified regular rate for all hours worked in excess of the applicable maximum hours standard for the particular workweek.ⁿ²⁶ Thus, if the employee works more than the specified number of hours covered by the guarantee, he or she must be paid, for each such hour, overtime compensation as provided in the contract, in addition to the guaranteed amount.ⁿ²⁷ The amount of weekly pay guaranteed may not exceed compensation due at the specified regular rate for the applicable maximum hours standards and at the specified overtime rate for excess hours, and the number of hours to which the guarantee applies may not exceed a total of 60.ⁿ²⁸

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS
CHAPTER 3 Overtime Compensation and Regulation of Hours Worked
Part A. OVERTIME COMPENSATION

1-3 California Employment Law § 3.11

AUTHOR: By Carol S. Sanders, J.D.

§ 3.11 Special Problems in Computing Overtime Pay

[1] Daily and Weekly Overtime Applicable

Generally, overtime compensation under the FLSA applies only when the number of hours worked exceeds the standard specified for the workweek.ⁿ¹ However, in some instances, the FLSA provides for a daily premium. For example, the partial exemption under Title 29 United States Code, section 207(b) for employees covered under certain collective bargaining agreements limiting hours of employment requires overtime compensation for hours worked in excess of 12 in any one workday, as well as hours hours worked in excess of 56 during a workweek.ⁿ² Under this arrangement, the employee must be paid at the overtime rate for all hours worked in the workweek in excess of the applicable daily maximum or in excess of the applicable weekly maximum, whichever number of hours is greater.ⁿ³

■ ILLUSTRATION:

Employee is employed under a collective bargaining agreement providing for payment at 1 1/2 times the regular hourly rate for hours worked in excess of 12 during a workday and 56 in a workweek.

Employee's regular hourly rate is $10.00. During a particular workweek, Employee works the following schedule:

Monday:	14 hours
Tuesday:	9 hours
Wednesday:	10 hours
Thursday:	15 hours
Friday:	12 hours
Saturday:	8 hours
TOTAL:	68 hours

Employee has worked five hours over the 12-hour daily maximum and 12 hours over the 56-hour weekly maximum. Since the weekly overtime hours are greater, Employee is entitled to pay for 12 hours at $15.00 an hour (1 1/2 times $10.00), a total of $180.00 for the 12 overtime hours, and to pay at his or her regular rate for the remaining 56 hours (56 times $10.00) in the amount of $560.00, for a total of $740.00 for the week. If Employee had not worked the eight hours on Saturday, total hours worked in the week would have been 60, of which five were daily overtime hours. Under this schedule, the daily overtime hours exceed the weekly overtime hours (four); therefore, Employee would be entitled to five hours of overtime pay at 1 1/2 times the regular rate, or $75, plus the pay at his or her regular rate for the remaining 55 hours (55 times $10.00) in the amount of $550.00, or a total of $625.00 for the week.ⁿ⁴

The California requirements for daily and weekly overtime compensation may also overlap if an employee works in excess of both the daily and the weekly maximum hours.ⁿ⁵ If the wage order providing for overtime pay is not clear with respect to the premium to be paid,ⁿ⁶ California courtsⁿ⁷ follow a rule similar to that applied under the FLSA. That is, the employee must be paid overtime for all hours worked in a workweek in excess of the applicable daily or weekly maximum, whichever number of hours is greater. If interpreted otherwise, the employee would receive weekly overtime pay in addition to daily overtime.ⁿ⁸

To calculate overtime when the daily and weekly maximum hours have been exceeded, the employer must do the following: (1) review all hours worked during the workweek; (2) calculate the value of all daily overtime hours, including double time; and (3) calculate the value of all weekly overtime hours. The employer must then pay the employee for the greater of the value of the daily overtime hours or the value of the weekly overtime hours. Note that if the daily maximum hours are exceeded, only the regular hours worked per day are counted toward the weekly maximum of 40 hours.ⁿ⁹ For example, an employee who works 45 hours in the first 3 days of a week has worked only 24 hours toward the weekly 40-hour maximum. If the employee does no work for the rest of the week, then the weekly maximum is not exceeded.

[2] Overlapping Workweeks

When the beginning of a workweek is permanently and legitimately changed for an employee or for a group of employees, a situation results in which one or more hours or days fall in both the "old" and "new" workweek. Thus, if the workweek commenced at 7 a.m. on Monday and it is changed to begin at 7 a.m. on Sunday, the hours worked from 7 a.m. on Sunday to 7 a.m. on Monday will constitute both the last hours of the old workweek and the first hours of the newly established workweek.ⁿ¹⁰ Under the FLSA, if the employee's working time falls within hours included in both workweeks, the Department of Labor, as an enforcement policy, will assume that the statutory overtime requirements have been satisfied if computation is made as follows: a total computation of straight time and overtime is made first on the assumption that the overlapping hours are includable only in the "old" workweek, and then on the assumption that they are includable only in the "new" workweek, and the employee is paid the greater of the amounts computed under these two assumptions.ⁿ¹¹

■ ILLUSTRATION:

Employee's regular hourly rate is $10.00, and the applicable maximum workweek is 40 hours. On Sunday, November 8, 1987, Employee worked five hours. Employee's last "old" workweek commenced at 7 a.m. on Monday, November 2, and he worked 40 hours for the period from November 2 through November 6, so that for the "old" workweek ending on November 8, Employee would be owed straight-time and overtime compensation for 45 hours. Employer proposes to permanently change Employee's workweek schedule so that it would commence at 7 a.m. on Sunday, November 8. In the "new" workweek commencing November 8 and ending November 14, Employee works a total of 40 hours, including the five hours worked on November 8. Employee would receive more total compensation for the 13-day period from November 2 through November 14 if the five hours worked on November 8 are considered part of the "old" workweek, rather than the "new" workweek (since he would receive overtime premium pay for the five hours worked on November 8 only if it is considered part of the "old" workweek). Therefore, the hours should be considered part of the "old" workweek, and Employee should receive $475.00 (40 hours at $10.00 per hour, plus five hours at $15.00 per hour) for the period from November 2 through November 8, and $350.00 (35 hours at $10.00 per hour) for the period from November 9 through November 14.ⁿ¹²

The California wage orders do not specify how overtime should be computed in the above situation. Generally, however, the workweek, once established by the employer, is deemed as fixed by the DLSE for purposes of overtime pay computation. The DLSE permits a change in workweek under the wage orders only if the change is intended to be permanent and is not designed to evade overtime obligations.ⁿ¹³ The federal approach illustrated above appears to satisfy the DLSE's criteria since it would prevent the employee from losing overtime compensation because of the change in the work schedule.

[3] Additional Pay for Past Period

Under the FLSA, if a retroactive pay increase is awarded to employees, their regular rate of pay increases for the period of retroactivity, and the employee is owed 1 1/2 times the amount of the increase for each overtime hour worked during the retroactive period, regardless of any contrary agreement among the parties.ⁿ¹⁴ A retroactive pay increase in the form of a lump sum for a particular period must be prorated back over the hours of the period to determine the resultant increases in the regular rate, in precisely the same manner as a lump-sum deferred bonus is prorated.ⁿ¹⁵ For a discussion of computing deferred bonuses in regular rate of pay, see § 3.08[2][h][iv].

[4] Wage Deductions

[a] Generally

The word "deduction" may refer to reductions in pay resulting from several causes:

1. Deductions to cover the cost to the employer of furnishing "board, lodging, or other facilities," within the meaning of Title 29 United States Code, section 203(m);ⁿ¹⁶
2. Deductions for other items such as tools and uniforms, which are not regarded as "facilities";
3. Deductions authorized by the employee (such as union dues) or required by law (such as taxes and garnishments);
4. Reductions in a fixed salary paid for a fixed workweek in weeks in which the employee fails to work the full schedule; and
5. Deductions for disciplinary reasons.

As discussed below, these wage deductions do not affect computation of an employee's regular rate under the FLSA.ⁿ¹⁷

In Sumuel v. ADO, Inc.,^{n17.1} the employer's disability policies and practices complied with the salary basis tests, even though employees who returned to work after an illness were not paid their regular salaries until payroll received the proper documentation confirming that the employees had returned to work and the employer deducted improper amounts from the employees' company-paid disability benefits based on imputed state disability benefits the employees did not actually receive. A delay in receiving normal salary payments when an employee returned from disability leave was not an improper deduction, because there was no evidence any employee was not ultimately paid in full. Further, the deduction based on imputed SDI was miscalculation of a disability benefit, not a deduction from salary implicating the salary basis test.^{n17.2} The employer's policy not to pay a full week's salary to employees who worked a partial week before going out on short-term disability leave was a deduction in salary.^{n17.3} However, the employer's policy of stopping salary payments as of the first day of a disability period qualified as bona fide under federal regulations and state law.^{n17.4}

For a full discussion of restrictions on deductions from wages, see Ch. 4.

[b] Deductions to Reimburse Employer for Certain Costs Authorized by Employee or Required by Law

In the case of deductions for board, lodging, or other facilities, or for other items such as tools and uniforms, or deductions authorized by the employee (such as union dues) or required by law (such as taxes or garnishments), the employee's regular rate under the FLSA is the same as it would have been if the occasion for the deduction had not arisen.ⁿ¹⁸ The regular rate is determined by dividing total includable compensation before deductions by the total hours worked in the workweek.ⁿ¹⁹

[c] Salary Reduction for Short Workweek

When a proportionate reduction is made in a fixed salary paid for a fixed workweek in weeks in which the employee fails to work the full schedule,ⁿ²⁰ the reduction is not, properly speaking, a "deduction" at all. In such cases, the employee is, for practical purposes, employed at an hourly rate of pay.ⁿ²¹ The hourly rate is the quotient of the fixed salary divided by the fixed number of hours it is intended to compensate.

■ ILLUSTRATION:

Employee is hired at a fixed salary of $400 per week. Employee's normal work schedule is 40 hours per week. The employment agreement provides that if the employee does not work the full schedule during a workweek, the salary will be a percentage of the full salary equal to the quotient of the number of hours worked divided by 40. During one workweek, Employee works only 36 hours. Under the agreement, Employee's salary for that workweek would be reduced to $360. Since in either case the employee's regular rate is equal to total compensation divided by the actual number of hours worked,ⁿ²² the "deduction" of $40 from Employee's salary does not alter the regular rate, which remains $10.00 per hour.ⁿ²³

When an employee is paid a fixed salary for a workweek of variable hoursⁿ²⁴ or receives guaranteed pay under a "Belo agreement,"ⁿ²⁵ the understanding is that the salary or guarantee is due the employee in short workweeks as well as in longer ones, and "deductions" for short workweeks are not made. In cases in which the understanding of the parties is not clearly shown in regard to whether a fixed salary is intended to cover a fixed or variable workweek, the practice of making "deductions" from the salary for hours not worked in short workweeks will be considered strong, if not conclusive, evidence that the salary covers a fixed workweek.ⁿ²⁶

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

The federal overtime and minimum wage exemptions for executive, administrative, and professional employees are based on minimum levels of salary without regard to the number of days or hours worked in a pay period.ⁿ²⁷ Thus, the employer should take extreme care not to make any deductions from the salary of an otherwise exempt executive, administrative, or professional employee that might result in loss of the exemption for the workweek involving the deduction. The new 2004 Department of Labor overtime regulations contain guidelines regarding such deductions.ⁿ²⁸ Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

[d] Disciplinary Deductions

When deductions are made for disciplinary reasons, the regular rate of an employee is computed before deductions are made. These deductions may never reduce the employee's earnings to an average below the applicable minimum wage or cut into any part of the overtime compensation due the employee.ⁿ²⁹

■ ILLUSTRATION:

Employer has a policy of penalizing its employees for lateness by deducting a half-hour's straight-time pay from their wages for each half hour, or fraction of an hour, that an employee is late. Employee's regular hourly rate is $10.00 per hour, and the applicable maximum hour standard is 40 hours. In a given workweek, Employee is 15 minutes late for work on one occasion, and Employer deducts $5.00 from Employee's paycheck. Employee actually works 41 hours during that workweek. For purposes of computing overtime compensation for that workweek, Employer must count as hours worked all the time actually worked by Employee; Employer may not consider the $5.00 disciplinary deduction in computing Employee's regular rate for the week, which remains $10.00. Employee is entitled to $15.00 for the one overtime hour worked.ⁿ³⁰

Under California law, an employer may not deduct from an exempt employee's salary for disciplinary reasons.ⁿ³¹

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS
CHAPTER 3 Overtime Compensation and Regulation of Hours Worked
Part A. OVERTIME COMPENSATION

1-3 California Employment Law § 3.12

AUTHOR: By Carol S. Sanders, J.D.

§ 3.12 Pay Plans That Circumvent Overtime Provisions

[1] Generally

The overtime provisions of the FLSA may not be avoided by setting an artificially low hourly rate on which overtime pay is to be based, and making up the additional compensation due to employees by other means.ⁿ¹ An artificial regular rate exists when a varying rate is set that decreases as the length of the workweek increases, or when includable sums (such as for bonuses not in the nature of a gift, facilities furnished by the employer, or pay for nonproductive worktime) are excluded from computation of the regular rate.ⁿ²

[2] Low Hourly Rate Plus Guarantee

An example of a scheme that was held to be an unlawful attempt to evade the overtime penalties of the FLSA was the setting of an arbitrarily low hourly rate on which overtime compensation would be computed, coupled with a guarantee that if the employee's straight-time and overtime compensation based on this rate fell short, in any week, of the compensation that would be due on a piece-rate basis of a specified amount per piece, the employee would be paid on the piece-rate basis instead. The hourly rate was set so low that it was seldom operative, so that the employee's pay was determined by the piece rate rather than an amount per hour. The actual regular rate of the employee under these circumstances must be the quotient of total piece-rate earnings paid in any week divided by the total hours worked in that week.ⁿ³

[3] Split-Day Plan

Under a "split-day" or "Poxon" plan, a regular workday is artificially divided into two portions. One portion is labeled the "straight-time" portion of the day, for which a low hourly rate is paid, designated as the regular rate. The other portion of the day is labeled "overtime," for which 1 1/2 times the low "straight-time" hourly rate is paid.ⁿ⁴

■ ILLUSTRATION:

Employee to whom a 40-hour maximum workweek is applicable works a normal eight-hour day, and is arbitrarily assigned an hourly rate of $10.00 per hour under a contract that provides for "overtime" pay of 1 1/2 times this rate for all hours in excess of four each day. Employee receives $40 for the first four hours, and $60 for the remaining four hours (four hours at $15 per hour), or a total of $100 each normal workday. If Employee worked a sixth eight-hour day at $100 for the day, Employer might claim to owe no additional overtime pay, on the basis that Employee had already been compensated at "overtime" rates for 20 hours of the workweek. In fact, Employee's regular rate of pay is $12.50 ($100 divided by eight hours), and Employee is entitled to overtime compensation based on 1 1/2 times this regular rate, or $18.75, for each hour worked in excess of the applicable maximum workweek. The alleged "overtime" rate of $15 per hour must be included in computing Employee's regular rate and may not be credited toward Employer's overtime obligations, since it is not based on either hours worked in excess of Employee's normal or regular working hours, or work performed outside of the hours established in good faith as the basic, normal, or regular workday, pursuant to Title 29 United States Code, Section 207(e).ⁿ⁵

[4] Pseudo-Bonuses

The term "bonus" is improperly applied if it is used to designate a portion of regular wages that the employee is entitled to receive under his or her regular wage contract, with the purpose of avoiding payment of overtime compensation on that portion of the wages.ⁿ⁶ The general rule is that whenever the employee is guaranteed a fixed or determinable sum as his or her wages each week, no part of this sum is a true bonus and the rules for determining overtime due on bonuses do not apply.ⁿ⁷

■ ILLUSTRATION:

Employee is paid a fixed sum of $600 per week, regardless of the number of hours worked in the week. Employer sets an arbitrary hourly wage of $9.60 for the first 40 hours, overtime compensation at $14.40 per hour, and labels as a "bonus" whatever portion of the $600 that remains after straight-time and overtime compensation is paid based on these arbitrary hourly rates. The bonus will vary from week to week, decreasing as the hours worked increase, and vanishing entirely in any week in which the employee works 55 hours or more. This "bonus" is not the type excludable from the regular rate.ⁿ⁸ Instead, Employee's regular rate of pay under the FLSA must be determined each week by dividing the $600 sum by the number of hours worked in the week.ⁿ⁹

The artificial labeling of part of the regular wage as a bonus is in no way legitimized if the employer proceeds to compute and pay overtime compensation due on the "bonus" by prorating it back over the hours of the workweek. Overtime compensation has still not been properly computed for this employee at the regular rate.ⁿ¹⁰

A pseudo-bonus is also created when a "percentage bonus" is separated out of a fixed weekly wage, and decreases in amount in direct proportion to increases in the number of hours worked.ⁿ¹¹ A true percentage bonus is based on a percentage of total wages, both straight-time and overtime. Since such a bonus is paid on the overtime compensation as well as the straight-time compensation, no recomputation of the regular rate is necessary and no additional compensation need be paid.ⁿ¹²

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS
CHAPTER 3 Overtime Compensation and Regulation of Hours Worked
Part A. OVERTIME COMPENSATION

1-3 California Employment Law § 3.13

AUTHOR: By Carol S. Sanders, J.D.

§ 3.13 Use of Compensatory Time Off in Lieu of Overtime Pay

[1] California Law

Labor Code Section 204.3 permits employees to receive compensatory time off in lieu of overtime compensation at a rate of not less than 1 1/2 hours for each hour of employment for which overtime compensation is required by law. However, if an hour of employment would otherwise be paid at a rate of more than 1 1/2 times the employee's regular rate of compensation, then the employee may receive compensatory time off measured at this higher rate.n1

Compensatory time off (also referred to as "compensating time" and "compensating time off") is defined as hours during which an employee is not working, which are not counted as hours worked during the workweek or work period for purposes of overtime compensation, and for which the employee is compensated at the employee's regular rate.n2 Employers must keep records that accurately reflect compensatory time off earned and used.n3

Employers may not provide compensatory time off in lieu of overtime compensation unless the following four conditions are met:n4

1. The compensatory time off is provided pursuant to a collective bargaining agreement, memorandum of understanding, or other written agreement between the employer and the duly authorized representative of the employees, or, for employees not covered by a collective bargaining agreement or memorandum of understanding, pursuant to a written agreement entered into between the employer and employee before performance of the work.
2. The employee has requested in writing compensatory time off in lieu of overtime compensation.
3. The employee is regularly scheduled to work no less than 40 hours in a workweek.
4. The employee has not accrued more than 240 hours of compensatory time off (any employee who has accrued 240 hours of compensatory time off must be paid overtime compensation for any additional overtime hours of work).

Employers must allow an employee who has accrued compensatory time off to use the time within a reasonable period after the employee so requests, if the use of the time does not unduly disrupt the employer's operations.ⁿ⁵ Whether an employer has granted a request within a reasonable period depends on the normal schedule of work, anticipated peak workloads based on past experience, emergency requirements for staff and services, and the availability of qualified substitute staff.ⁿ⁶ An employer has the option, at the employee's request, to pay the employee overtime compensation in lieu of compensatory time off that has accrued for at least two pay periods.ⁿ⁷

Any compensation paid to an employee for accrued compensatory time off must be paid at the regular rate earned by the employee at the time the employee receives payment.ⁿ⁸ However, if an employee who has accrued compensatory time off terminates his or her employment, the employer must pay the employee for the unused compensatory time off at a rate not less than the higher of either (1) the average regular rate received by the employee during the last three years of employment, or (2) the employee's final regular rate.ⁿ⁹

Labor Code section 204.3 does not apply to employees who are exempt from the overtime provision of the California wage orders,ⁿ¹⁰ or to any employees subject to the following wage orders of the IWC:ⁿ¹¹

1. Order No. 1-2001 (manufacturing industry);ⁿ¹²
2. Order No. 3-2001 (canning, freezing, and preserving industries);ⁿ¹³
3. Order No. 5-2001 (public housekeeping industry);ⁿ¹⁴
4. Order No. 10-2001 (amusement and recreation industries);ⁿ¹⁵ and
5. Order Nos. 8-2001, 13-2001, and 14-2001 (handling products after harvest, preparing agricultural products for market on the farm, and agricultural occupations).ⁿ¹⁶

Before the enactment of Labor Code Section 204.3 in 1993, the use of compensatory time off in lieu of overtime compensation was not expressly provided for in either the Labor Code or the wage orders. However, the DLSE had a written policy permitting the use of compensatory time off, subject to several conditions.ⁿ¹⁷ Currently, the DLSE takes the position that Labor Code section 204.3 only applies to public employers, and that private employers in California may not utilize compensatory time off provisions under any circumstances.ⁿ¹⁸ However, private employers who receive a written request from an employee to make up time which would be lost as a result of a personal obligation may find a safe harbor from overtime under Labor Code section 513, so long as the provisions of that section are satisfied.ⁿ¹⁹

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

Labor Code Section 204.3 permits the substitution of compensatory time off in lieu of overtime compensation. The new statute, however, is of limited value to California employers for at least four reasons. First, as noted above, it does not apply to employers subject to Wage Orders No. 1-2001, 3-2001, 5-2001, 8-2001, 10-2001, 13-2001, or 14-2001.ⁿ²⁰ Second, it permits time off only if all of the following conditions are met:ⁿ²¹ (1) the compensatory time off is provided pursuant to applicable provisions of a collective bargaining agreement, or, if not covered by a collective bargaining agreement, pursuant to a written agreement entered into between the employer and the employee before the performance of the work; (2) the employee may only accrue a maximum of 240 hours of compensatory time off; (3) the employee has requested, in writing, compensatory time off in lieu of overtime pay; and (4) the employee is regularly scheduled to work no less than 40 hours in a workweek. Third, current federal law, discussed in [2], below, which applies to all employers who engage in interstate commerce, provides that, if compensatory time off is granted, it must be taken in the pay period in which the overtime is worked thereby rendering impossible an accrual of 240 hours of compensatory time off. Thus, because the stricter standard controls in any conflict between federal and state law, the federal "same pay period" requirement effectively preempts the state law provision for accrual of 240 hours of compensatory time off. Fourth, compensatory time off policies are subject to other limitations as well and are carefully scrutinized by the regulating agencies. All doubts regarding the proper payment of overtime compensation are resolved against the employer. In short, employers who wish to substitute compensatory time off in lieu of overtime pay may wish to consult legal counsel. Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

[2] Federal Law

Except for state and local government employees,ⁿ²² the FLSA does not permit the use of compensatory time off in lieu of overtime pay. However, federal enforcement policy permits the employer to restrict the employee's workweek hours to 40 or under by the use of mandatory compensatory time off within that particular workweek. For example, if an employer anticipates that it will be necessary for an employee who normally works 40 hours, Monday through Friday, to work two hours on Saturday, the employer could avoid overtime liability by requiring the employee to take two hours off on one of the other workdays during the same workweek, thereby assuring that the employee does not work in excess of the statutory maximum workweek.ⁿ²³

If the employee works more than 40 hours during the workweek, the employer may not use compensatory time off during subsequent workweeks as payment for the overtime hours. However, the employer may nevertheless achieve essentially the same result by reducing the employee's work schedule during a subsequent week within the same pay period by 1 1/2 hours for each overtime hour worked during the previous week, resulting in the employee's compensation for the two-week period being the same as if the employee had worked two normal 40-hour workweeks.ⁿ²⁴ To satisfy the requirements of the FLSA, the "time-off" plan must meet the following conditions:ⁿ²⁵

1. The employee must be employed by the hour, at fixed hourly rates of pay, or be paid a regular salary for a fixed number of hours per week;
2. The pay period must be longer than a week (for example, biweekly, semimonthly, or monthly);
3. Time-off adjustments, in the ratio of 1 1/2 hours for each overtime hour worked, must be made within the pay period; and
4. Straight-time and overtime compensation for the hours actually worked in each workweek of the pay period must be computed on the established hourly rates and paid currently at the end of each period, without regard to the hours worked or earnings in any other pay period.

■ ILLUSTRATION:

Employee's straight-time hourly rate is $10.00, and the applicable maximum workweek is 40 hours. Employee normally works 40 hours per week and is paid every other week, resulting in a usual biweekly paycheck of $800. During Workweek 1, Employee is required to work two hours of overtime for a total of 42 hours, resulting in total compensation for the week of $430 (including time-and-a-half for the two overtime hours). During Workweek 2, Employer reduces Employee's work schedule to 37 hours (essentially requiring Employee to take three hours off). Assuming that this does not violate the employment agreement between the parties, this is permissible under the FLSA and would reduce Employee's compensation for Workweek 2 to $370. Employee's total compensation for Workweeks 1 and 2 would therefore be $800--the same as if Employee had not worked any overtime during Workweek

Note that the above time-off plan may not be utilized unless the Employee is either paid on an hourly wage basis or receives a fixed salary for a fixed number of hours per week.ⁿ²⁶ Such a plan would not be permissible when the employee is paid a fixed salary for a fluctuating workweek, since such employees are entitled to be paid their full salary for short as well as long workweeks.ⁿ²⁷

The FLSA expressly provides that employees of a state, political subdivision of a state, or interstate governmental agency may under certain conditions be afforded compensatory time off in lieu of monetary overtime compensation. The circumstances under which state and local government employers may provide compensatory time off in lieu of overtime are specified in Title 29, United States Code, Section 207(o).

Part B. OTHER RESTRICTIONS ON HOURS WORKED

1-3 California Employment Law § 3.20

AUTHOR: By Carol S. Sanders, J.D.

§ 3.20 Generally

As noted previously, the overtime pay requirements discussed in Part A constitute the principal legal limitation on the number of hours that may be worked by adult employees. In addition to the overtime requirements, the Labor Code and the California wage orders provide some additional restrictions on employee work schedules. These provisions are discussed in the succeeding sections of this part.

The FLSA (apart from child labor limitations discussed in Chapter 6) contains no absolute limitation on the number of hours that an employee may be required to work in a workweek, as long as the overtime payment requirements are complied with.ⁿ¹

Apart from the limitations described in this part, additional limitations on hours worked may be imposed by federal or state safety regulations applicable to particular types of hazardous workⁿ² or by collective bargaining agreements or individual employment contracts. Such limitations are beyond the scope of this chapter.

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS
CHAPTER 3 Overtime Compensation and Regulation of Hours Worked
Part B. OTHER RESTRICTIONS ON HOURS WORKED

1-3 California Employment Law § 3.21

AUTHOR: By Carol S. Sanders, J.D.

§ 3.21 One Day's Rest in Seven

[1] Generally

Labor Code Section 551 provides that every employee in any occupation of labor is entitled to one day's rest in seven. Labor Code Section 552 prohibits any employer from requiring his or her employees to work more than six days in seven. However, several exceptions to the day-of-rest requirement are set forth in Labor Code Sections 554 and 556, as discussed in [2], below. Furthermore, Labor Code Section 554 provides that the one-day-of-rest requirement may be met by accumulating days of rest when the nature of the employment reasonably requires that the employee work seven or more consecutive days, provided that in each calendar month the employee receives days of rest equivalent to one day's rest in seven.

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

As an enforcement policy, the DLSE interprets Labor Code Sections 551 and 554 as permitting employees to work more than six consecutive days when it is reasonably required by the nature of the work, provided that employees (1) receive an average of one day off in seven during the calendar month, and (2) are properly compensated for overtime hours worked. As discussed in Part A,ⁿ¹ the wage orders require that an overtime premium be paid for hours worked on the seventh workday in a workweek.ⁿ² Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

For discussion of the Eight-Hour-Day Restoration and Workplace Flexibility Act of 1999, governing overtime compensation and workday and workweek schedules, refer to § 3.04[1][a], above.

[2] Exceptions

The day-of-rest requirements of Labor Code Sections 551 and 552 do not apply to any of the following situations:ⁿ³

- "Cases of emergency";ⁿ⁴

- Work performed in the protection of life or property from loss or destruction; or
- Any common carrier engaged in or connected with the movement of trains.

The statutory day-of-rest requirements will also not apply when the hours of employment do not exceed 30 hours in any week or six hours in any one day of the week.ⁿ⁵

Persons employed in an agricultural occupation, as defined in the wage order of the IWC relating to agricultural operationsⁿ⁶ are exempt from statutory day-of-rest requirements, with a prescribed exception.ⁿ⁷

If a valid collective bargaining agreement pursuant to Lab. Code § 514 exists regarding hours of work, the day-of-rest requirement does not apply.ⁿ⁸ However, employees subject to such an agreement must still receive an average of one day off in seven during each calendar month, unless the agreement expressly provides otherwise.ⁿ⁹

In addition to the statutory exceptions to the day-of-rest requirements, the Chief of the DLSE may exempt any employer or employees from the day-of-rest requirements when, in his or her judgment, hardship will otherwise result.ⁿ¹⁰

It should be noted that the Industrial Welfare Commission, under its general authority to fix the maximum hours of work and conditions of labor,ⁿ¹¹ may promulgate wage orders requiring a day of rest that override the exceptions provided by statute.ⁿ¹² Employment of any employee for longer hours than those permitted by the wage orders is unlawful.ⁿ¹³ For discussion of limitations on hours of work set forth in the wage orders, see § 3.22.

CHAPTER 3 Overtime Compensation and Regulation of Hours Worked
Part B. OTHER RESTRICTIONS ON HOURS WORKED

1-3 California Employment Law § 3.22

AUTHOR: By Carol S. Sanders, J.D.

§ 3.22 Restrictions on Hours of Duty

[1] Seventy Two-Hour Weekly Limits

[a] Canning, Freezing, and Preserving Industry

Employees in the canning, freezing, and preserving industry must be given a 24-hour period off duty after working up to a maximum of 72 hours in a period of seven consecutive days.n1

[b] Industries Handling Products After Harvest

In industries handling products after harvest, an employee may work up to a maximum of 72 hours in any workweek, after which the employee must have a 24-hour period off duty.n2 However, in the grape and tree fruit industry, receivers, loaders, fork lift operators, shipping clerks, and maintenance workers are exempt from the mandatory day-off requirement.n3 In the cotton ginning industry, employees may voluntarily exempt themselves from the mandatory day-off provision by notifying the employer in writing. The employee may withdraw the exemption by notifying the employer in writing at least five days before the desired day off.n4 The notice provision does not apply to instances of illness or emergencies.n5

In the exercise of any exemption from the mandatory day off provided under Wage Order No. 8-2001 (governing industries handling products after harvest) or pursuant to administrative exemptions granted by the Labor Commissioner under Labor Code Section 1198.3, the employer may not discriminate against any employee who desires to take 24 hours off after 72 hours worked in a workweek.n6 An employer who permits employees to work more than 72 hours per workweek pursuant to any exemption must give each employee a copy of the applicable legal provision for the exemption, in both English and Spanish, and post it at all times in a prominently visible place.n7

[c] Industries Preparing Agricultural Products for Market

In industries preparing agricultural products for market on the farm, any work by an employee in excess of 72 hours in a workweek must be on a voluntary basis. No employee may be discharged or in any other manner discriminated against for refusing to work in excess of 72 hours in a workweek.ⁿ⁸

[2] Sixteen-Hour Daily Limit for Motion Picture Employees

Employees in the motion picture industry may be employed up to a maximum of 16 hours, including meal periods, in any one day from the time they are required to and do report until the time they are dismissed.ⁿ⁹

[3] Limits for Live-In Household Employees

Live-in household employees must have at least 12 consecutive hours free of duty during each workday of 24 hours, unless overtime compensation is paid and other conditions are met.ⁿ¹⁰ A live-in employee may not be required to work more than five days in a workweek without a day off of at least 24 consecutive hours except in an emergency (defined as an unpredictable or unavoidable occurrence at unscheduled intervals requiring immediate action),ⁿ¹¹ and then only on condition that overtime compensation is paid.ⁿ¹²

The exceptions to limits on consecutive hours of duty for live-in domestic service employees are related to the special overtime payment provisions applicable to these employees, and are discussed under § 3.05[1][c].

[4] Limits for Minors

As discussed in Chapter 6, the Labor Code contains numerous limitations on the hours and types of employment that may be engaged in by minors.ⁿ¹³ However, the IWC has amended all the 2001 wage orders to eliminate the minimum wage exemption for employees who are minors.ⁿ¹⁴ The IWC has also amended the previous partial exemption for learners to include minors.ⁿ¹⁵

For a full discussion of restrictions on hours and times of day worked by minors, see Ch. 6.

[5] Statutory Limits Applicable to Certain Occupations

The Labor Code prohibits the employment of employees in certain occupations beyond a specified number of consecutive hours, regardless of whether overtime premiums are available. The occupations whose hours are restricted include trainmen and dispatchers,ⁿ¹⁶ miners,ⁿ¹⁷ and pharmacists.ⁿ¹⁸

[6] Lost Work Time Made Up by Health Care Industry Employees

Employees in the health care industry may make up work time lost as a result of personal obligations, if the employee requests permission in writing and the employer concurs.ⁿ¹⁹ This lost time cannot exceed two hours in any one workweek or, where applicable, four hours in any 14-day work period,ⁿ²⁰ and must be made up during that workweek or work period.ⁿ²¹ Such make-up time generally is not subject to the overtime provisions of the wage orders governing these two types of employees. But any time worked in excess of 11 hours in a workday or 40 hours per week or 80 hours in a 14-day work period must be paid at the overtime premium rate.ⁿ²²

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS
CHAPTER 3 Overtime Compensation and Regulation of Hours Worked
Part B. OTHER RESTRICTIONS ON HOURS WORKED

1-3 California Employment Law § 3.23

AUTHOR: By Carol S. Sanders, J.D.

§ 3.23 Meal Periods

A nonexempt employee¹ working more than five hours must be provided with a meal period of at least 30 minutes. However, if a work period of not more than six hours will complete the day's work, the meal period may be waived by mutual consent of employer and employee.² In addition, an employee working more than 10 hours per day must be provided with a second meal period of not less than 30 minutes. However, if the total hours worked are no more than 12, the second meal period may be waived by mutual consent of the employer and the employee, but only if the first meal period was not waived.³ Notwithstanding the foregoing, the Industrial Welfare Commission may adopt a working condition order permitting a meal period to commence after six hours of work if the commission determines that the order is consistent with the health and welfare of the affected employees.⁴

The meal requirement in Labor Code section 512 applies to employees covered by collective bargaining agreements, because it is a non-negotiable state law right.¹ The meal requirement in Labor Code section 512(a) does not apply to an employee in the wholesale baking industry who is subject to an Industrial Welfare Commission Wage Order and is covered by a valid collective bargaining agreement providing for a 35-hour workweek consisting of five seven-hour days, payment of 1 1/2 times the regular rate of pay for time worked in excess of seven hours per day, and a rest period of not less than 10 minutes every two hours.² Further, unless Labor Code provisions are specifically made applicable to public employers, they apply only to employers in the private sector, and Labor Code § 512 does not expressly apply to public entities. Therefore, for example, it did not apply to a public water storage district.³

The Industrial Welfare Commission may not enact wage orders inconsistent with Labor Code section 512. Thus, for example, the IWC exceeded its authority in adopting a provision in the Wage Order covering employees in construction, drilling, logging, and mining, exempting employees covered by qualifying collective bargaining agreements from meal period requirements.⁴

In the broadcasting and motion picture industries, meal periods of between 30 minutes and one hour must be provided after six hours of work. Subsequent meal periods for all employees must be provided not later than six hours after the termination of the preceding meal period.⁵

In agricultural work, the employer must authorize and permit all employees after a work period of not more than five hours to take a meal period of at least 30 minutes. The parties may mutually waive the meal period if a work period of not more than six hours will complete the day's work.ⁿ⁷

Employees in the health care industry who work shifts of more than eight total hours in a workday may voluntarily waive their right to one of the meal periods they would otherwise receive.ⁿ⁸ This arrangement applies to health care workers in professional, technical, clerical, mechanical, and similar occupations,ⁿ⁹ and to health care workers in the public housekeeping industry.ⁿ¹⁰ The waiver must be in writing and voluntarily signed by both the employee and the employer; an employee may revoke the waiver at any time by giving the employer at least one day's written notice.ⁿ¹¹

The meal period rules applicable to employees in certain on-site construction, drilling, mining and logging occupations do not apply to those employees who are covered by a valid collective bargaining agreement if the agreement expressly provides for the wages, hours of work, and working conditions of the employees, and if the agreement provides premium wage rates for all overtime hours worked and a regular hourly rate of pay for those employees of not less than 30 percent more than the state minimum wage.ⁿ¹²

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

There is some confusion regarding the meaning of Wage Order 5, Section 11(D), which states that "employees in the health care industry who work shifts in excess of eight (8) total hours in a workday may voluntarily waive their right to one of their two meal periods." Labor Code Section 512 seems to permit waivers of first meal periods for days over 6 hours, because the second sentence of that statute states "if the total hours worked is no more than 12 hours, the second meal period may be waived by mutual consent of the employer and the employee only if the first meal period was not waived." However, the first sentence of Labor Code Section 512 seems to say the opposite--that employers and employees cannot mutually agree to waive the first meal period for days over 6 hours. Employers will argue that the second sentence is the more specific and provides the authority for Wage Order 5, Section 11(D). Employees will argue that the second sentence of Labor Code Section 512 merely confirms the prohibition against first meal period waivers in the first sentence, and that the IWC lacked the authority to promulgate Wage Order 5, Section 11(D). Ultimately, only the legislature or the courts can resolve this issue. Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

Wage Order 9 covers employees in the transportation industry. The exemption in Section 3 of Wage Order 9 for employees whose hours of service are regulated by state and federal regulations concerning drivers' hours of service refers only to section 3 of the Wage Order, which governs hours of service, and not to the entire Wage Order. Thus, the meal period requirement in Wage Order 9 applies to all employees covered by the Wage Order.^{n12.1} For example, in Cicairos v. Summit Logistics, Inc.,^{n12.2} on a summary judgment motion, the employer failed to show that it provided its employee truck drivers with adequate meal breaks. A declaration by the employer's payroll department manager stated that, because drivers were constantly on the road, their activity could not be regulated by the employer and the decision by a driver to take meal breaks and rest periods was left to the driver's discretion. However, the employer had a computerized system on each truck allowing it to keep track of various aspects of the drivers' activities, such as speed, starts and stops, and elapsed time, and drivers could input other factors manually, such as road construction and heavy traffic, that the computer system could not sense itself. By requiring its drivers to keep track of these factors, the employer had the ability to regulate driver activity, but did not schedule meal periods, did not provide an activity code for them, or monitor compliance. Furthermore, the employer's management pressured drivers to make more than one daily trip, making drivers feel that they should not stop for lunch. The employer's obligation to provide the plaintiffs with an adequate meal period was not satisfied by assuming the meal periods were taken, because employers have an affirmative obligation to ensure workers are actually relieved of all duty.^{n12.3} Employers also have a duty under Wage Order 9, to record their employees' meal periods.

Under all the wage orders, if the employee is not relieved of all duty during the 30-minute meal period, it will be considered an "on-duty" meal period and counted as time worked. An "on-duty" meal period is permitted only when the nature of the work prevents an employee from being relieved of all duty and when by written agreement between the parties an on-the-job paid meal period is agreed to.ⁿ¹³ For a discussion of what constitutes a compensable "on-duty" meal period, see § 3.07[1][c].

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS
CHAPTER 3 Overtime Compensation and Regulation of Hours Worked
Part B. OTHER RESTRICTIONS ON HOURS WORKED

1-3 California Employment Law § 3.24

AUTHOR: By Carol S. Sanders, J.D.

§ 3.24 Rest Periods

Every employer covered by a California wage order must authorize and permit nonexempt employees¹ to take rest periods, which insofar as practicable must be in the middle of each work period. The authorized rest period time must be based on the total hours worked daily at the rate of 10 minutes rest time per four hours or major fraction thereof. However, a rest period need not be authorized for employees whose total daily work time is less than 3 1/2 hours.² An opinion letter from DLSE states that the rest period requirement is a state-mandated minimum labor standard.³

In the motion picture industry, additional interim rest periods must be provided during periods of actual rehearsal or shooting for swimmers, dancers, skaters, and other performers engaged in strenuous physical activities.⁴

Wage Order No. 9, which regulates employers in the transportation industry, requires every employer to authorize and permit all employees to take rest periods, which insofar as practicable should be in the middle of each work period. The exemption in Section 3 of Wage Order 9 for employees whose hours of service are regulated by state and federal regulations concerning drivers' hours of service refers only to section 3 of the Wage Order, which governs hours of service, and not to the entire Wage Order. Thus, the rest period requirement in Wage Order 9 applies to all truck drivers covered by the Wage Order.⁵ In Cicairos v. Summit Logistics, Inc.,⁶ on a motion for summary judgment by the employer, the court found that the employer did not prove it supplied truck drivers with the required rest periods. Although the employer was not required to keep records of the drivers' rest periods, it could still be liable if as a result of employer coercion or encouragement, the drivers did not take their full 10-minute rest period. The computer system on each truck did not include a code for rest breaks, which may have encouraged drivers not to take breaks. Drivers said they felt pressured not to take rest breaks because rest breaks were not on the list of delays that were paid. Finally, it appeared that the employer's management was aware that some drivers were not taking rest breaks. In Bell v. Superior Court,⁷ in which drivers for a petroleum company sought class certification for claims based on the employer's failure to provide rest periods, evidence supported the trial court's conclusion that common issues did not predominate, because the employer provided substantial evidence that there was no uniform policy or practice forbidding or preventing breaks, and a driver who did not take the necessary breaks did so for reasons that required independent adjudication.⁸

The rest period requirement contained in Wage Order 16-2001 (certain on-site construction, drilling, mining and logging occupations) does not apply to any employee covered by a valid collective bargaining agreement which provides equal or greater protection.ⁿ⁹ Further, rest periods in those occupations need not be authorized when the disruption of continuous operations would jeopardize the product or process of the work, but the employer in such circumstances is required to make up the missed rest period that day or pay the employee for the missed ten (10) minutes at the employee's regular rate of pay.ⁿ¹⁰

Every employer, including the state and political subdivisions, must provide a reasonable amount of break time to accommodate an employee desiring to express breast milk for an infant child,ⁿ¹¹ unless the provision of such break time would seriously disrupt the employer's operations.ⁿ¹² An employer may schedule the break time to express breast milk to run concurrently with break time already provided to the employee. If concurrent scheduling is not possible, an employer must provide additional, unpaid time for expressing milk.ⁿ¹³ An employer must make reasonable efforts to provide a room or other location (other than a toilet stall) to express milk in private. The room must be in close proximity to the employee's work area, and may include the place the employee normally works.ⁿ¹⁴ An employer who violates these requirements is subject to a civil penalty of $100 for each violation.ⁿ¹⁵

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

New Labor Code §§ 1030-1032 pose a number of questions for which there are no clear answers. The following guidance, however, appears prudent:

How substantial a showing must an employer make that allowing break time would seriously disrupt its operations? The statute does not define "seriously disrupt." The absence of a definition, coupled with the Legislature's choice not to impose on employers the burden of proving "undue hardship," suggests that the employer's burden is not onerous. However, because employers must already provide nonexempt employees with specified break and meal periods during the work day, the "seriously disrupt" standard may be difficult to meet if an employee is prepared to confine the time when she expresses milk to her required break and meal periods.

May an employee consistently refuse to use her usual break time to express milk? While the statute allows an employee to assert that concurrent scheduling is not possible, an employer should reasonably be able to require an employee to use her usual break time, absent special circumstances. For the employee who consistently requires more than her usual break time to express milk, the employer is obligated to afford the additional time on an unpaid basis. Of course, an employer need not accede to the employee's schedule if doing so would seriously disrupt its operations.

May an employee insist that she be allowed to express milk in the place where she normally works, rather than in an employer-designated area? The statute does not guarantee an employee the use of her normal work area; rather, it identifies the work area as an option. However, unless employers have legitimate business reasons for denying employees the option to use their normal work areas, they should refrain from imposing such a restriction. Additionally, as a practical matter, providing employees with the use of a room in or near their normal work areas will increase the amount of time such employees are available to perform their job duties.

Must employers provide any amenities in the "room or other location?" The statute does not require anything other than a simple room or other location. However, the essence of the statute, as indicated by its exclusion of a "toilet stall" as an acceptable location, is that employees be provided with a private space to express milk. Thus, employers able to provide a locked room--with a key made generally accessible--should consider doing so. While not required, additional amenities might include a chair and cold storage for expressed milk.

Must employers provide multiple rooms if more than one employee needs to express milk at a given time? No. Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS

CHAPTER 4 Payment of Wages

Part A. TIME, PLACE, AND FORM OF WAGE PAYMENTS

1-4 California Employment Law § 4.01

AUTHOR: By Susan Spurlark, J.D.

§ 4.01 Time and Place of Payment

[1] During the Course of Employment

[a] General Rules

During the course of employment, wages for most employees must be paid at least twice each month.ⁿ¹ The dates for payment of the wages must be designated in advance by the employer as regular paydays and published in a payday notice.ⁿ² However, different pay periods are prescribed by the Labor Code for certain types of employees. The rules governing time of payment for various types of employees and the penalties for violations of these rules are set forth below.

[b] Nonsalaried Employees

[i] Payment of Regular (Straight-Time) Wages

Unless they are covered by a collective bargaining agreement that makes other provision for time of payment,^{n2.1} most non-salaried employees, other than employees engaged in seasonal labor as defined in Labor Code Section 250,ⁿ³ must be paid their wages twice each calendar month during the course of employment on days designated in advance by the employer as the regular paydays.ⁿ⁴ Labor Code Section 204 provides that labor performed between the 1st and 15th day of a calendar month must be paid for between the 16th and 26th day of that month.ⁿ⁵ Labor performed between the 16th day of the month and the last day of the month must be paid for between the 1st day and the 10th day of the following calendar month.ⁿ⁶ If such employees are paid biweekly (every other week), semimonthly, or weekly, the requirements of Labor Code Section 204 are satisfied if the employees are paid no more than seven calendar days after the close of the payroll period.ⁿ⁷

Labor Code Section 204 is inapplicable to employees who are paid on a weekly basis on a regular payday designated by the employer in advance of rendition of services by the employee.ⁿ⁸ Such employees must be paid in compliance with Labor Code Section 204b, which provides that if work is performed prior to or on the regular payday in a given week, it must be paid for not later than the payday in the next calendar week.ⁿ⁹ If the work is performed after the payday in a given week, it must be paid for within seven days after the payday in the next calendar week.ⁿ¹⁰

■ ILLUSTRATION:

Employer pays its hourly employees every Thursday. Employee commenced working for Employer on Monday of Week 1. On Monday through Friday of Week 1, Employee worked eight hours each, at $10.00 per hour. On Thursday of Week 2, Employee would receive a check for $320, less deductions, representing his or her pay for Monday through Thursday of Week 1. On Thursday of Week 3, Employee would receive a check for $80, less deductions, representing his or her pay for Friday of Week 1, plus any amounts earned during Monday through Thursday of Week 2.ⁿ¹¹

Salaried executive, administrative, and professional employees are subject to special rules, as discussed in [c], below.ⁿ¹²

[ii] Payment of Overtime

If an hourly employee has worked overtime, Labor Code Section 204 provides that payment for "labor in excess of the normal work period" must be made "no later than the payday for the next regular payroll period."^{n12.1} An employer is in compliance with the requirements of Labor Code Section 226(a) relating to total hours worked by the employee, if hours worked in excess of the normal work period during the current pay period are itemized as corrections on the pay stub for the next regular pay period.^{n12.2}

The Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA) itself does not address this question.ⁿ¹³ However, federal regulations require payment on the regular payday for the period when the overtime was worked, if practicable.ⁿ¹⁴ Overtime payments may not in any case be delayed longer than is reasonably necessary to calculate the amount of the payment.ⁿ¹⁵

Rules regarding overtime pay for salaried executives, administrative, and professional employees are set forth in subsection [c], below. For complete discussion of rules pertaining to overtime, including the provision of compensatory time off in lieu of paying the overtime premium, see Chapter 3.

[c] Salaried Executive, Administrative, and Professional Employees

Payment requirements for salaried executive, administrative, and professional employees depend on whether or not the employee is exempt from the requirements of the federal FLSA.ⁿ¹⁶ The exemption for executive, administrative, and professional employees is discussed in Chapter 2.

Salaried executive, administrative, and professional employees of employers who are covered by (that is, not exempt from) the FLSA must be paid their regular, straight-time wages at least monthly.ⁿ¹⁷ If this monthly option is chosen, wages must be paid on or before the 26th day of the month during which the work was performed, and the payment must include the entire month's salary, including the unearned portion between the date of payment and the last day of the month.ⁿ¹⁸ However, if there is an applicable collective bargaining agreement that provides a different pay arrangement, the terms of that agreement control.ⁿ¹⁹

The Labor Code provides that if an exempt salaried executive, administrative, or professional employee earns wages for hours worked in excess of 40 in a calendar week, those wages must be paid on or before the 26th day of the calendar month immediately following the month in which the labor was performed, unless the employee is covered by a collective bargaining agreement that has different provisions.ⁿ²⁰ However, federal regulations under the FLSA require payment for overtime by the payday for the period during which the overtime was worked, or as soon as practicable thereafter.ⁿ²¹

Salaried executive, administrative, and professional employees who are exempt from the requirements of the FLSA are not subject to the requirements of Labor Code Section 204 (requiring monthly payments on the 26th of the month) provided all of the following apply:ⁿ²²

1. They are not covered by a collective bargaining agreement;
2. They do not receive overtime pay; and
3. They are paid within seven days of the close of their monthly pay period.

[d] Agricultural and Domestic Employees

Agricultural employees (including viticultural and horticultural employees), other than seasonal laborersⁿ²³ and employees of a farm labor contractor, who receive board and lodging as a part of their remuneration must be paid at least once each calendar month on a date designated in advance as the regular payday.ⁿ²⁴ Regular paydays cannot be more than 31 days apart, and all wages earned up to that payday must be included in the payment.ⁿ²⁵

These payment provisions for agricultural employees also apply to household domestic workers who receive board and lodging as part of their remuneration.ⁿ²⁶ By implication, domestic workers who do not receive room and board are covered by the rules set forth in [b], above.ⁿ²⁷

Agricultural employees, other than seasonal laborers as defined in Labor Code Section 250,ⁿ²⁸ who do not receive board and lodging and do not work for a farm labor contractor, and who are not covered by the National Labor Relations Act or the FLSA, must be paid twice each month.ⁿ²⁹ Wage payments to such employees for work performed between the 1st day and 15th day of each month must be made between the 16th day and 22nd day of that month, and payments for work performed between the 16th day and the last day of the month must be made between the 1st day and the 7th day of the following month.ⁿ³⁰

Finally, agricultural employees who are employed by a farm labor contractor,ⁿ³¹ including those who receive room and board as part of their compensation, must be paid on a weekly basis.ⁿ³² The payday must be designated in advance; the payment must include all wages earned up to and including the fourth day before the payday.ⁿ³³

[e] Commissioned Employees of Motor Vehicle Dealers

Commission wages paid to employees of a licensed vehicle dealer must be paid once each calendar month on a day designated in advance by the employer as the regular payday.ⁿ³⁴ Commission wages are defined as compensation paid to any person for the sale of the employer's property or services and which is based proportionately on the amount or value of the property or services.ⁿ³⁵ This provision does not apply when there is a collective bargaining agreement between the employer and the employees that sets the date on which payment must be made.ⁿ³⁶

[f] Employees Covered by Collective Bargaining Agreement

For employees who are subject to a collective bargaining agreement containing provisions regarding time for payment of wages that differ from the Labor Code provisions, the provisions of the agreement govern the time for payment.ⁿ³⁷

[f.1] Temporary Services Employees

If an employee of a temporary services employer is assigned to work for a client, the employee's wages are due and payable no less frequently than weekly, regardless of when the assignment ends. Wages for work performed during any calendar week are due and payable not later than the regular payday of the following calendar week. A temporary services employer is deemed to have timely paid wages upon completion of an assignment if wages are paid in compliance with Lab. Code § 201.3(b)(1).n37.1

If an employee of a temporary services employer is assigned to work for a client on a day-to-day basis, the employee's wages are due and payable at the end of each day, regardless of when the assignment ends, if each of the following occurs:n37.2

- The employee reports to or assembles at the office of the temporary services employer or other location.
- The employee is dispatched to a client's worksite each day and returns to or reports to the office of the temporary services employer or other location upon completion of the assignment.
- The employee's work is not executive, administrative, or professional, as defined in the wage orders of the Industrial Welfare Commission, and is not clerical.

If an employee of a temporary services employer is assigned to work for a client engaged in a trade dispute, the employee's wages are due and payable at the end of each day, regardless of when the assignment ends.n37.3

If an employee of a temporary services employer is assigned to work for a client for over 90 consecutive calendar days, Labor Code section 201.3 does not apply, unless the temporary services employer pays the employee weekly in compliance with Labor Code section 201.3(b)(1).n37.4

For these purposes, a "temporary services employer" is an employing unitn37.5 that contracts with clients or customers to supply workers to perform services for the clients or customersn37.6 and that performs all of the following functions:n37.7

- Negotiates with clients and customers for matters such as the time and place where the services are to be provided, the type of work, the working conditions, and the quality and price of the services.
- Determines assignments or reassignments of workers, even if workers retain the right to refuse specific assignments.
- Retains the authority to assign or reassign a worker to another client or customer when the worker is determined unacceptable by a specific client or customer.
- Assigns or reassigns workers to perform services for clients or customers.
- Sets the rate of pay of workers, whether or not through negotiation.
- Pays workers from its own account or accounts.
- Retains the right to hire and terminate workers.

"Temporary services employer" does not include any of the following:n37.8

- A bona fide nonprofit organization that provides temporary service employees to clients.
- A farm labor contractor, as defined in Labor Code section 1682(b).
- A garment manufacturing employer, which, for these purposes, has the same meaning as "contractor" as defined in Labor Code section 2671(d).

A temporary services employer who violates Labor Code section 201.3 is subject to the civil penalties provided for in Labor Code section 203,^{n37.9} and to any other penalties available at law.^{n37.10} Nothing in Labor Code § 201.3 can be interpreted to limit any rights or remedies otherwise available under state or federal law.^{n37.11}

[g] Penalty for Nonpayment

In addition to and apart from the general penalties discussed in § 4.04[2], an employer who fails to pay wages within the time periods discussed in [a]-[f.1], above, is subject to the following civil penalty:ⁿ³⁸

1. For any initial violation, $100 for each failure to pay each employee; or
2. For each subsequent violation, or for any willful or intentional violation, $200 for each failure to pay each employee, plus 25% of the amount unlawfully withheld.

The penalty may be recovered by the Labor Commissioner as part of a hearing held to recover unpaid wages or in an independent civil action against the employer.ⁿ³⁹ For further discussion of procedures for recovery of civil penalties by the Labor Commissioner, see Chapter 5.

Persons who violate these provisions are also guilty of a misdemeanor.ⁿ⁴⁰

[h] Late Payment as Violation of FLSA

An employer who does not pay an employee's wages on the employee's regular payday is in violation of the federal Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA).ⁿ⁴¹ Although the FLSA says only that employers "shall pay" a minimum wage and does not specifically provide that that minimum wage must be paid promptly,ⁿ⁴² the statutory scheme taken as a whole necessarily assumes that wages are due at some point and thereafter become "unpaid."ⁿ⁴³ Once a payday has passed without a payment, an employer has not met the obligation to "pay" the minimum wage.ⁿ⁴⁴ Thus, the Ninth Circuit had held that the State of California violated the FLSA when a budget impasse developed in the Legislature, no funds were appropriated for payment of salaries, and state employees did not receive their paychecks until 14 to 15 days after their normal payday.ⁿ⁴⁵

For discussion of enforcement procedure and remedies under the FLSA, see Chapter 5.

[2] Payment on Discharge, Layoff, or Resignation

[a] Payment Generally

[i] Discharge or Layoff

With certain limited exceptions,ⁿ⁴⁶ when an employee is discharged or laid off, all of the employee's earned and unpaid wages are due and payable at the time of the discharge or layoff.ⁿ⁴⁷ An employee who is discharged must be paid at the place of discharge.ⁿ⁴⁸

Labor Code Section 201 does not define "discharge." The California Supreme Court has defined the "discharge" element of Lab. Code § 201 to include (but not require) an involuntary termination from an ongoing employment relationship, such as when an employer fires an employee. The "discharge" element also may be met when an employer releases an employee after completion of the specific job assignment or time duration for which the employee was hired.^{n48.1}

[ii] Resignation

If an employee who does not have a written contract for a definite period resigns, his or her wages are due and payable not later than 72 hours after the resignation.ⁿ⁴⁹ However, if the employee has given at least 72 hours' notice of his or her intention to quit, the final payment of all wages is due at the time of quitting.ⁿ⁵⁰ An employee who quits must be paid at the office or agency of the employer in the county where the employee worked.ⁿ⁵¹ However, an employee who quits without providing a 72-hour notice is entitled to receive payment of wages by mail if he or she so requests and designates a mailing address. The date of mailing constitutes the date of payment for purposes of the requirement that wages be paid within 72 hours after notice of quitting.ⁿ⁵²

[iii] Commissions Earned After Termination

When an employment agreement provides that an employee is entitled to a commission only while employed by the company, it will not be a breach of contract or a breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing for the employer to refuse to pay a commission if the transaction leading to the commission is finalized after the employee leaves the company.^{n52.1}

Commissions are "wages" for the purposes of Labor Code §§ 2926, 206.^{n52.2} For purposes of enforcing the provisions of the Labor Code, however, the right to a commission depends on the terms of the contract for compensation.^{n52.3} There is an exception to this principle when a contract provision is unconscionable.^{n52.4}

[b] Exceptions[i] Seasonal Employees

An employer who lays off employees because of the termination of seasonal employment in the curing, canning, or drying of any variety of perishable fruit, fish, or vegetables is deemed to have made immediate payment when the employee's wages are paid within 72 hours of termination or such reasonable time as is necessary for computation and payment of the wages, whichever is less.ⁿ⁵³ Payments to such employees may be made by mail if the employee so requests and designates a mailing address.ⁿ⁵⁴

[ii] Motion Picture Employees

Because persons engaged in the production of motion pictures are often employed at various locations far removed from the employer's principal administrative office and because of the unusual or uncertain hours often worked by such employees, the Legislature has made special provision for the payment of wages of such employees on termination of employment.ⁿ⁵⁵ Under Labor Code Section 201.5, an employee engaged in the production or broadcasting of motion pictures whose employment terminates is entitled to receive payment of the wages earned and unpaid at the time of the termination by the next regular payday.ⁿ⁵⁶ "Next regular payday" for these purposes means the day designated by the employer pursuant to Labor Code § 204 for payment of wages earned during the payroll period in which the termination occurs.ⁿ⁵⁷ "Production or broadcasting of motion pictures" in this context means the development, creation, presentation, or broadcasting of theatrical or televised motion pictures, television programs, commercial advertisements, music videos, or any other moving images, including, but not limited to, productions made for entertainment, commercial, religious, or educational purposes, whether these productions are presented by means of film, tape, live broadcast, cable, satellite transmission, Web cast, or any other technology that is now in use or may be adopted in the future.ⁿ⁵⁸

Under Labor Code Section 201.5, an employment terminates when the employment relationship ends, whether by discharge, lay off, resignation, completion of employment for a specified term, or otherwise.^{n58.1} "An employee engaged in the production or broadcasting of motion pictures" is defined for purposes of Section 201.5 as an employee to whom both of the following apply:^{n58.2}

1. The employee's job duties relate to or support the production or broadcasting of motion pictures or the facilities or equipment used in the production or broadcasting of motion pictures.
2. The employee is hired for a period of limited duration to render services relating to or supporting a particular motion picture production or broadcasting project, or is hired on the basis of one or more daily or weekly calls.^{n58.3}

The payment of wages to employees covered by Section 201.5 may be mailed to the employee or made available to the employee at a location specified by the employer in the county where the employee was hired or performed labor.^{n58.4} The payment is deemed to have been made on the date that the employee's wages are mailed to the employee or made available to the employee at the location specified by the employer, whichever is earlier.^{n58.5}

Nothing in Section 201.5 prohibits the parties to a valid collective bargaining agreement from establishing alternative provisions for final payment of wages to employees covered by Section 201.5 if those provisions do not exceed the time limitation established in Labor Code Section 204.^{n58.6}

In the case of movie extras, the DLSE has analyzed the question of which Labor Code provision applies to the timely payment of wages.ⁿ⁵⁹ The determination is made complex because three different entities are often involved: the production company, a casting agency, and a payroll service. Thus, the threshold determination the DLSE must make is which entity or combination of entities is the employer for purposes of determining compliance with wage payment rules.ⁿ⁶⁰ Once that determination is made, the DLSE inquires whether the employment is of an irregular, uncertain nature (in which case, Labor Code section 201.5, discussed above, applies) or a more permanent relationship exists between the employer and the extra (in which case Labor Code section 204 applies).ⁿ⁶¹ For example, if the extras are paid directly by the production company on a one-time basis, the employment is irregular and uncertain, termination of each particular job is essentially a "lay off," and the DLSE's position is that Labor Code § 201.5 is applicable.ⁿ⁶² By contrast, if a casting agent or payroll agency works regularly with an extra, sending him or her out on jobs on a continuous, although intermittent, basis and pays the extra his or her wages, the relationship between the casting agent or payroll service and the extra is similar to that of a temporary services agency and its temporary employees, and payment must be made pursuant to Labor Code section 204, which provides that payment of wages be made to nonsalaried employees twice a month.ⁿ⁶³

[iii] Oil Drilling Employees

As in the case of the motion picture business, the Legislature has made special provision for the payment of oil drilling employees on discharge because such employees are often employed at sites located at great distances from the employer's principal administrative offices.ⁿ⁶⁴ An employer who lays off oil drilling employees is deemed to have made timely payment of wages if the wages of those employees are paid within such reasonable time as is necessary for computation of the wages and payment thereof.ⁿ⁶⁵ⁿ⁶⁶ The reasonable time allowed for payment may not exceed 24 hours, excluding Saturdays, Sundays, and holidays, and payment may be made by mail and will be deemed made at the time of mailing.ⁿ⁶⁷

[iv] Employees Paid at a Central Place

When employees are engaged in an employment that normally involves working for several employers in the same industry interchangeably, the employers, or some of them, may cooperate to establish a plan for the payment of wages at a central place or places, in accordance with a unified schedule of paydays.ⁿ⁶⁸ In such cases, all workers, including those who have been discharged, receive their wages at the central place(s), and the provisions of Labor Code Sections 201 (immediate payment on discharge or layoff), 202 (payment on resignation), and 208 (place of payment on discharge or resignation) do not apply.ⁿ⁶⁹ Instead, the employers should follow the established payment plan.ⁿ⁷⁰

A central payment plan may not be considered in effect until 10 days after the employers give notice of intention to establish the plan to the California Labor Commissioner.ⁿ⁷¹ Further, once established, the plan cannot be abandoned without giving notice of intention to abandon the plan to the Labor Commissioner.ⁿ⁷²

[v] Employees at Venue Hosting Theatrical or Concert Events

Notwithstanding Labor Code Section 201(a), which governs payment on discharge or layoff generally,^{n72.1} employees employed at a venue that hosts live theatrical or concert events and who are enrolled in and routinely dispatched to employment through a hiring hall or other system of regular short-term employment established in accordance with a bona fide collective bargaining agreement may, along with their employers, establish by express terms in their collective bargaining agreement the time limits for payment of wages to an employee who is discharged or laid off.^{n72.2}

[vi] Temporary Services Employees

If an employee of a temporary services employer is assigned to work for a client and is discharged by the temporary services employer or leasing employer, wages are due and payable as provided in Labor Code section 201.^{n72.3} If an employee of a temporary services employer is assigned to work for a client and quits his or her employment with the temporary services employer, wages are due and payable as provided in Labor Code section 202.^{n72.4}

A temporary services employer who violates Labor Code section 201.3 is subject to the civil penalties provided for in Labor Code section 203.^{n72.5} and to any other penalties available at law.^{n72.6} Nothing in Labor Code § 201.3 can be interpreted to limit any rights or remedies otherwise available under state or federal law.^{n72.7}

[vii] Public Employees

Labor Code §§ 201 and 202 do not apply to employees directly employed by any county, incorporated city, or town or other municipal corporation.^{n72.8}

[c] Severance Pay

There is no state or federal law requiring employers to pay severance pay to discharged employees in the absence of an agreement to do so. To the extent that an employer has established a plan or fund for the purpose of making severance payments, such plans have been held to be "employee welfare benefit plans," which are governed by the provisions of the federal Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA).ⁿ⁷³ However, severance pay will not be considered a plan within the meaning of ERISA if the benefit package does not implicate an ongoing administrative scheme.ⁿ⁷⁴ Although the Labor Commissioner is authorized by the Labor Code to enforce, and take assignment of, severance pay claims pursuant to the general statutory procedure for enforcement of claims for wages and supplemental compensation,ⁿ⁷⁵ several federal court decisions have held that state regulation of severance pay benefits is pre-empted by the enforcement provisions of ERISA.ⁿ⁷⁶ Although the Labor Commissioner and Division of Labor Standards Enforcement have been enjoined from enforcing severance pay claims against employers in or affecting commerce,ⁿ⁷⁷ the DLSE takes the position that the Labor Commissioner may accept claims for severance pay so long as the severance pay plan at issue is not subject to ERISA.ⁿ⁷⁸

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

Although discussion of ERISA-related wage issues is beyond the scope of this treatise, it should be noted that ERISA may cover some unfunded severance pay plans or policies of non-governmental employers.

As a consequence, all California employers who have severance pay plans or policies should consult counsel to determine whether they must prepare written severance plan documents, summary plan descriptions, and annual IRS Form 5500's, as required by ERISA. Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

[d] Vacation Pay[i] Generally

Labor Code Section 227.3 and the California Supreme Court's decision in *Suastez v. Plastic Dress-Up Co.*ⁿ⁷⁹ govern payment for accrued and unused vacation time on termination of employment. Labor Code Section 227.3 provides that, unless otherwise provided by a collective bargaining agreement, whenever an employment contract or employer policy provides for paid vacations, and an employee is terminated without having taken off his or her vested vacation time, all vested vacation must be paid to the employee as wages at his or her final rate in accordance with the provisions of the employment contract or employer policy regarding eligibility or time served.ⁿ⁸⁰ Furthermore, an employment contract or employer policy may not provide for forfeiture of vested vacation time on termination of employment.ⁿ⁸¹ A local living wage ordinance may apply of its own force as a governing legal entitlement, allowing employees to recover vacation pay and serving as the basis for penalties under section 227.3.^{n81.1} The Labor Commissioner or designated representative, in the resolution of any dispute with regard to vested vacation time, is directed to apply the principles of equity and fairness.ⁿ⁸²

Labor Code Section 227.3 merely provides that if an employer promises, by contract or policy, to give its employees paid vacations, the employer must pay an employee wages for all "vested vacation time" the employee has accrued but not taken at the time of termination. Section 227.3 does not specify the manner in which the employee must have accrued the time. Thus, section 227.3 does not require that an employer pay wages for vacation time that was accrued only "in accordance with" or "as a result of" or "pursuant to" an employment contract or policy. Rather, it states that if the entitlement to paid vacation leave in general is given to employees in a contract or policy, the employer must pay the employee wages, in accordance with the contract or policy, for accrued vacation time.^{n82.1}

An employer may offer new employees no vacation time. For example, where an express written company policy forewarned new employees that their compensation package did not include paid vacation during their initial employment, no vacation pay was earned and none vested during that initial period. Employees could not claim any right to vested vacation during their initial employment, because they knew in advance they would not earn or vest vacation pay during that period.^{n82.2}

In Massachusetts v. Morash,ⁿ⁸³ the United States Supreme Court has held that the lump sum payment from an employer's general assets to an employee for the value of his or her unused vacation benefits on termination of employment is not governed by ERISA.ⁿ⁸⁴ Thus, the Court reversed a Massachusetts decision holding that a criminal action to enforce payment to discharged employees for their unused vacation time was preempted by ERISA.ⁿ⁸⁵ In making its decision that vacation payments paid out of an employer's general assets do not fall within the ambit of ERISA regulation, the Court pointed out that this type of benefit is not subject to the risks and abuses that are inherent in plans having accumulated separate assets, which are the type of plans Congress intended to protect by enacting ERISA.ⁿ⁸⁶ The Court gave great weight to the regulations issued by the Department of Labor,ⁿ⁸⁷ which excluded such vacation pay from the definition of welfare benefit plans subject to ERISA.ⁿ⁸⁸ The Court also stated that the payment of wages, including vacation pay, is an area that the states have traditionally regulated.ⁿ⁸⁹ The Court indicated that an entirely different situation would be presented if a separate fund had been created by a group of employers to guarantee the payment of vacation benefits to workers who regularly shift their jobs from one employer to another. The Court stated that in such a case, the risks to the funds and the need to adhere to reporting and disclosure requirements are greater, and that ERISA would probably apply to the payment of vacation pay from such funds.ⁿ⁹⁰

Thus, Labor Code Section 227.3 and state enforcement thereof is not pre-empted by ERISA with regard to vacation compensation paid from the employer's general payroll accounts, but vacation benefits funded from some source other than the employer's general assets, such as a trust fund or benefit association probably may be covered by ERISA. The California Labor Commissioner and Division of Labor Standards Enforcement, which enforce Labor Code Section 227.3, take the position that application of that Section to funded vacation plans is pre-empted by ERISA.ⁿ⁹¹

As noted above, Labor Code Section 227.3 by its terms does not apply if the employee is covered by a collective bargaining agreement that contains other provisions regarding vacation pay. The Labor Commissioner has stated that when a collective bargaining agreement contains a provision governing vacation pay that would otherwise be barred by Section 227.3, the collective bargaining agreement will control.ⁿ⁹²

Some employers do not provide separate arrangements for vacation and sick leave; instead, employees are granted a certain number of "paid days off," which can be used for any purpose, including vacation and sick leave. Since employees have an absolute right to take these days off (unlike traditional sick leave, which is contingent on the employee actually being ill), the Labor Commissioner treats these "paid days off" as vacation days for purposes of applying Labor Code Section 227.3.ⁿ⁹³

Some employers have attempted to evade application of Labor Code Section 227.3 by establishing a Voluntary Employees' Beneficiary Association Trust (VEBA), normally a funded plan, which uses an "advance and recapture" method that permits the VEBA to disburse large amounts of vacation pay but maintain virtually no accumulated funds in its account.ⁿ⁹⁴ Courts have held that this type of plan is not an ERISA employee welfare benefit plan and is therefore not exempt from the requirements of Labor Code Section 227.3.ⁿ⁹⁵

[Ii] When Vacation Pay Vests

Labor Code Section 227.3 provides that the employer must pay a discharged employee wages for all unused vested vacation time and prohibits any employment contract or employer policy that provides for forfeiture of such vacation time on termination. In Suastez v. Plastic Dress-Up Co.,ⁿ⁹⁶ the California Supreme Court addressed the issue of when vacation time vests for purposes of Labor Code Section 227.3. In Suastez, the employer had a rule that employees were not eligible to receive their annual allotments of vacation days until they had passed their anniversary dates each year; any employee who was terminated before his or her anniversary date was not paid any vacation pay.ⁿ⁹⁷ The Supreme Court held that paid vacation time, when granted, is a form of additional compensation for the employee's services and that the right to vacation time therefore vests as it is earned; that is, "a proportionate right to a paid vacation 'vests' as the labor is rendered ... On termination of employment, ... [Labor Code Section 227.3] requires that an employee be paid in wages for a pro rata share of his vacation pay."ⁿ⁹⁸

In Suastez, the employer had contended that, because employees were not permitted vacation pay under its policy unless they were employed on their anniversary dates, employment on that date was a "condition precedent" to vesting. Thus, the employer argued, an employee terminated before his or her anniversary date had no "vested vacation time."ⁿ⁹⁹ The Court rejected this argument, holding that the employer's policy was, in effect, a condition subsequent that attempted to effect a forfeiture of vested vacation rights, in violation of Labor Code Section 227.3.ⁿ¹⁰⁰

The Suastez decision does not expressly state whether vacation time accrues on an hourly, daily, weekly, or some other basis. The Labor Commissioner interprets Suastez as providing for payment at termination based on a daily pro-rata share of the final rate of pay as of the date of termination.ⁿ¹⁰¹

■ ILLUSTRATION:

Employer's policy provides that all employees are entitled to receive 12 paid vacation days per year. New employees are not entitled to take any vacation time, however, until they have been with the company for six months. Employee A is hired on January 1 and discharged on April 1. On discharge, Employee A is entitled to all wages due, plus the equivalent of three days' pay, representing his vested, unused vacation time.ⁿ¹⁰²

An employer may expressly limit the vesting of vacation time by establishing a "no additional accrual" vacation policy. Such a policy prevents an employee from earning vacation time over a designated limit. Once the employee has accrued vacation time to the limit, the employee cannot earn more time until the employee takes some of the accrued time. This type of vacation policy is permissible because it does not involve a forfeiture of vested vacation time, but merely limits the amount of time that vests. However, the policy must be explicitly provided in the employment agreement. In the absence of an express provision, vacation will accumulate without limit.ⁿ¹⁰³

The rule against forfeiture of accrued vacation rights, by its own terms, cannot apply to vacation pay to be earned in the future, i.e., vacation pay that has not yet accrued.^{n103.1}

The statutes of limitation applicable to an employee's right to sue for payment of unused vacation potentially apply twice in the analysis of vacation entitlement. To understand this concept, consider the case of a terminated employee who seeks lost vacation pay before the Labor Commissioner or in court. The first question concerns the amount of unused vacation the employee may claim to exist as of the time of his or her termination. The Labor Commissioner takes the position that the employee may not reach back further than two years in the case of an oral employment contract or four years in the case of a written employment contract.ⁿ¹⁰⁴ The second question concerns the length of time after termination that an employee may wait to file a claim for the vacation entitlement that existed at the time of termination. Again, the answer is two or four years, depending on whether the agreement with the employer was oral or written.ⁿ¹⁰⁵ Thus, one court of appeal has held that an employee could claim payment only for unused time that accrued under a written contract during the four-year period preceding termination, even though the employee had accrued 12 years of vacation.ⁿ¹⁰⁶

[iii] Labor Commissioner's Guidelines on Vacation Pay

As discussed in [i] and [ii], above, Labor Code Section 227.3, as interpreted by the Supreme Court in Suastez, provides that an employee's right to vacation pay vests on a pro-rata basis as labor is performed during the year and prohibits any policy that results in forfeiture of vested vacation pay. In light of the Suastez decision, the Labor Commissioner has issued the following guidelines concerning which vacation policies will be regarded as valid for enforcement purposes:

1. An employer may choose not to provide any vacation benefits to any of its employees or may choose to limit that benefit to certain classifications of employees (for example, only full-time employees).ⁿ¹⁰⁷
2. An employer may provide that employees do not earn any vacation until they have been employed for a certain period of time (for example, the probationary period or a certain number of months or years). Such a rule will be recognized by the Labor Commissioner only if it is not a subterfuge and, in fact, no vacation is implicitly earned or accrued during the waiting period.ⁿ¹⁰⁸ According to the Labor Commissioner, an example of a plan that would be "an obvious subterfuge" would be one in which an employee "earns" no vacation during his or her first year of employment, four weeks during the second year, and only two weeks per year thereafter.ⁿ¹⁰⁹ In that case, it is clear that the rule is intended to avoid paying any vacation pay earned by employees during their first year who are terminated prior to their anniversary date.ⁿ¹¹⁰

■ ILLUSTRATION:

Employer's policy provides that all employees are entitled to receive 12 paid vacation days per year, accrued at a rate of one day per month worked. Employer expressly provides, however, that new employees do not accrue any vacation time until they have been with the company for six months. Employee A is hired on January 1 and discharged on April 1. Employee B is hired on January 1 and discharged on August 1. On discharge, Employee A is entitled to no vacation pay; Employee B is entitled to one day's vacation pay.ⁿ¹¹¹ If instead, Employer's policy provided that new employees accrued vacation time at a rate of two days per month during the second six-month period of their first year of employment, and one day per month thereafter, the Labor Commissioner would disregard the accrual provisions of the plan as a "subterfuge." In that case, Employee A would be entitled to three days' vacation pay on discharge, and Employee B would be entitled to seven days' vacation pay.ⁿ¹¹²

3. The DLSE presently takes the position that vacation earnings must be proportional. Arbitrary dates or accelerated earning periods which would allow for a disproportionate rate of earning are prohibited.ⁿ¹¹³

4. The Labor Commissioner interprets Labor Code Section 227.3 and Suastez as prohibiting a "use it or lose it" policy, under which an employee who fails to use all of his or her accrued vacation time by a certain date loses the right to take that time off and is not compensated for the unused time.ⁿ¹¹⁴

However, the Labor Commissioner has stated that an employer can, in effect, achieve the same result by providing for a "ceiling" on the amount of unused vacation time that may be accrued at any one time; that is, an employer's policy may provide that once a certain amount of vacation time is accrued, but not taken, vacation pay ceases to accrue until the employee takes vacation time.ⁿ¹¹⁵ The time periods provided for taking vacation must be reasonable, and the plan must not be a subterfuge for denying employees vacation benefits.ⁿ¹¹⁶ⁿ¹¹⁷⁻¹¹⁸

In all cases, the employer's rules regarding vacation must be clearly stated and not be a subterfuge for avoiding the requirements of Labor Code Section 227.3 and Suastez.ⁿ¹¹⁹ Any doubts will be resolved against the employer.ⁿ¹²⁰

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

Misstatements regarding the primary holding in Suastez are still common. Suastez is not primarily a case prohibiting forfeiture of vested vacation pay because Labor Code Section 227.3 already prohibited such conduct. The importance of Suastez is its declaration regarding when vacation pay vests--"as the labor is rendered."ⁿ¹²¹ For example, suppose Employer's vacation policy is to allot 10 days of vacation to each employee on January 1 of each year. Employee resigns on June 30, having taken no vacation in that year or in the prior year. Under Suastez, as interpreted by the Labor Commissioner, Employer owes Employee 25 days of vacation pay--10 days for the prior year, 10 days for the current year, and 5 days for the ensuing year. That is, the policy of allotting 10 days of vacation on each January 1 is construed as the allotment of a fully-vested vacation entitlement that accrued over the course of the previous year, and not over the course of the year of its allotment. Thus, when Employee resigns on June 30, he or she also has accrued 1/2 of the vacation entitlement for the ensuing January 1.

Most employers have responded to Suastez and to the DLSE's Interpretive Bulletin by implementing vacation plans that provide for vacation allotment in other than annual increments--for example, on a weekly or monthly basis. If Employer in the previous hypothetical case had implemented a vacation plan providing for the accrual of 10/12 of one vacation day for each month worked (that is, 10 days per year), it would have owed Employee only 15 vacation days on the June 30 resignation day--10 days for the previous year and 5 days for the current year.

The DLSE's Interpretive Bulletin regarding Suastez also, as stated in the text, permits an employer to tailor a vacation plan to its particular circumstances. It can provide for no vacation accrual whatsoever during an initial period of employment.ⁿ¹²² It can suspend all further vacation accruals when an employee reaches an accumulated maximum vacation entitlement.ⁿ¹²³ⁿ¹²⁴

An employer may not, however, force an employee to "use or lose" accrued vacation under any circumstances.ⁿ¹²⁵ Accrued vacation is a form of wages and may not be forfeited on termination.ⁿ¹²⁶ In addition, an employer may not, on the one hand, purport to deny vacation accrual during an initial period of employment, and, on the other hand, permit that employee to take a full year's vacation entitlement between the end of the introductory period and the end of the vacation year. The DLSE will interpret such a practice as a retroactive accrual credit for the introductory period.ⁿ¹²⁷ Commentary by

Kirby Wilcox.

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT: Note that the DLSE also takes the position that floating holidays are vacation days. Thus, at termination, an employer must pay a departing employee for all unused floating holidays. As a sole exception, an employer may link the availability of a floating holiday to a specific event, such as a birthday or an anniversary. For example, an employer may require that an employee use floating holidays within a window period spanning one week before and one week after the event in question. If an employee does not take the floating holiday within the window period (and has no claim that the employer frustrated the ability to do so), the employee forfeits the day. The DLSE has not addressed the question whether its nine-month rule applies to an employer's ability to cap floating holidays, to keep them from accumulating in subsequent years. Nonetheless, it would appear reasonable to deal with this enforcement vacuum in two steps. First, the DLSE should recognize the right of an employer to cap floating holidays at the maximum annual entitlement, because, by December 31 of any year, an employee has had more than nine months to use the days granted on January 1. Second, employers, to avoid forfeiture arguments, should draft their floating holiday policies to state that employees are entitled to X days per year, and that employees who use fewer than the allotted days during the year will receive only those additional days on January 1 to restore their allotment to the annual maximum. Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

[d.1] Incentive Compensation

Incentive compensation, whether in the form of a traditional cash bonus program or a more complex restricted stock plan, is generally understood as an "inducement to employees to procure efficient and faithful service."^{n127.1} Eligibility to receive incentive compensation is properly determined by the plans' specific terms and general contract principles.^{n127.2} Only when an employee satisfies the conditions precedent to receiving incentive compensation, which often includes remaining employed for a particular period of time, can the employee be said to have earned the incentive compensation, thereby necessitating payment upon resignation or termination.^{n127.3}

In Schachter v. Citigroup,^{n127.4} the employer offered a voluntary employee incentive compensation plan providing employees with shares of restricted company stock at a reduced price in lieu of a portion of the employee's annual cash compensation. Employees agreed that, should they resign or be terminated for cause before their restricted shares of stock vested, they would forfeit the stock and the portion of cash compensation they directed be paid in the form of the restricted stock. The California Supreme Court held that the plan's forfeiture provision did not violate Labor Code §§ 201, 202, and 219, because no earned, unpaid wages remained outstanding upon termination according to the terms of the incentive plan.

The Court concluded that no employee who participated in the incentive plan would be owed and therefore required to forfeit any "earned and unpaid" wages upon resigning or being terminated for cause.^{n127.5} For these purposes, a wage is defined as "all amounts for labor performed by employees of every description, whether the amount is fixed or ascertained by the standard for time, task, piece, commission basis, or other method of calculation."^{n127.6} The term "wages" is broadly construed to include not only the periodic monetary earnings of the employee, but also the other benefits to which the employee is entitled as a part of his or her compensation.^{n127.7} Incentive compensation, such as bonuses and profit-sharing plans, also constitute wages.^{n127.8}

In Schachter, the percentage of an employee's annual compensation he directed be paid to him in the form of shares of restricted stock did not constitute a wage that remained earned but unpaid following his resignation. All cash compensation he received constituted a wage, and shares of restricted stock issued to him also constituted a wage. Labor Code § 219 prohibited the employer and employee from agreeing, even voluntarily, to circumvent provisions of the Labor Code relating to the payment of wages. However, the employer and employee were free to prospectively and bilaterally alter the terms of employment. For example, straight-time wages above the minimum wage are a matter of private contract between the employer and employee.^{n127.9} When the employee submitted his plan election form, he agreed to a restructured compensation package that included a lower annual salary and payment in the form of restricted stock subject to all of the provisions and administrative rules of the plan, and he acknowledged that his resignation or termination for cause before the end of the two-year vesting period would result in forfeiture of the restricted stock and the percentage of his compensation that he authorized to be paid in the form of such restricted stock. The employer was thus not required to pay the portion of compensation he directed be paid to him in the form of restricted stock as a cash payment upon his resignation. He necessarily agreed his compensation would consist of cash payments and a retention-based conditional interest in the shares, with his interest in the shares being earned only if he remained with the company for two years, and he elected not to remain for the designated period, voluntarily terminating his employment before his restricted stock fully vested. By the terms of the plan, he was not entitled to the unvested shares of restricted stock. Having elected to receive some of his compensation in the form of restricted stock, a transaction he was aware carried risk as well as the potential for reward, the employee could not later assert that he should have been paid in cash that portion of his compensation he elected to receive as restricted stock.

Further, there is no requirement that the incentive compensation, like vacation pay, vest on a pro rata basis, entitling an employee to at least some payment upon resignation. Unlike vacation pay, the purpose of incentive compensation is to serve as an inducement to employees to procure efficient and faithful service.^{n127.10}

[e] Penalty for Nonpayment on Discharge or Quitting

Labor Code Section 203 provides a penalty when an employer fails to pay wages in accordance with Labor Code Sections 201 (payment on discharge), 201.3 (payment by temporary services employer), 201.5 (payment of movie production employees on termination), and 202 (payment on quitting). It provides that if an employer willfully fails to pay wages of an employee pursuant to the above Labor Code Sections, that employee's daily wages will continue as a penalty from the date that the wages were due until they are paid or an action is commenced, but for no more than 30 days.ⁿ¹²⁸ Penalties accrue not only on the days that the employee might have worked, but also on nonworkdays.ⁿ¹²⁹ Thus, under Section 203, an employee's daily rate of pay is multiplied by the number of days of nonpayment for a maximum of 30 days.ⁿ¹³⁰

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

The decision in Mamika is not surprising, but it produces a result that some practitioners do not often stop to consider. The 30-day wage continuation penalty in Labor Code Section 203 is not a sanction equal to one month of continued pay. It is a penalty equal to more than five weeks of continued pay. That is, a month of work typically consists of approximately 4.3 weeks, or 23 days. The sanction in Labor Code Section 203, however, provides for an additional seven days of pay beyond the "typical" month. This is true, even for exempt employees who are paid on a monthly basis. The remuneration of all employees (whether exempt, salaried non-exempt, commissioned, or paid on any other basis) must be reduced to a daily rate and multiplied by 30 to comply with the statute. The bottom line is that waiting time penalties often far exceed the actual damages in the underlying dispute. Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

Section 203 does not apply to any period during which the employee hides, otherwise absents himself or herself in order to avoid payment, or refuses to receive full payment, including penalties under Section 203, tendered to him or her.ⁿ¹³¹ It also does not apply pursuant to the terms of a settlement agreement resolving termination claims if the agreement is silent as to penalties.ⁿ¹³² One case has indicated, however, that tender of wages due, without a tender of any alleged penalties or interest, is sufficient to preclude further imposition of penalties, at least when the amount of the penalties and/or interest due is insignificant.ⁿ¹³³

Labor Code § 203 does not apply to employees directly employed by any county, incorporated city, or town or other municipal corporation.^{n133.1}

The term "willfully," as used in Labor Code Section 203, has been defined to include an intentional failure or refusal to pay wages that are due and does not require proof of a deliberate evil purpose to defraud the employee.ⁿ¹³⁴ In unusual cases in which the employer's obligation to make payments is unclear due to the uncertain state of the law, the court may in its discretion determine that waiting time penalties should not be imposed.ⁿ¹³⁵ Under a DLSE regulation, a failure to pay is not "willful" if there is a "good faith dispute" regarding whether any wages are due.ⁿ¹³⁶ A good faith dispute occurs, under the regulation:

when an employer presents a defense, based in law or fact which, if successful, would preclude any recovery on the part of the employee. The fact that a defense is ultimately unsuccessful will not preclude a finding that a good faith dispute did exist. Defenses presented which, under all the circumstances, are unsupported by any evidence, are unreasonable, or are presented in bad faith, will preclude a finding of a "good faith dispute."ⁿ¹³⁷

If the amount of wages due is not capable of ascertainment at the time of termination, no penalty is imposed if the money is paid immediately after ascertainment and consistent with the parties' agreement and/or past practice.ⁿ¹³⁸

As noted above, Labor Code section 203 provides that penalties cease when an "action" for recovery of wages is commenced. In Triad Data Services, Inc. v. Jackson,ⁿ¹³⁹ the court reviewed the logic behind the penalty provisions of Labor Code section 203 and held that the term "action" refers to a civil action filed in a court of law.ⁿ¹⁴⁰ The court further held that the filing of a claim with the Labor Commissioner does not constitute the commencement of an "action" within the meaning of section 203 and that the "waiting time" penalty provided by that section therefore does not cease on the filing of such a claim.ⁿ¹⁴¹

[3] Payment of Striking Employees

Labor Code section 209 provides that striking employees must be paid all unpaid wages by the next regular payday following the beginning of the strike without "abatement or reduction."ⁿ¹⁴² In addition, the employer must return to each striking employee any deposits, money, or other guaranty required of the employee to secure faithful performance of the employee's duties.ⁿ¹⁴³ Labor Code section 209 does not apply to employers of seasonal labor, as defined in Labor Code section 250.ⁿ¹⁴⁴

[4] Payday Notice

[a] Requirement for Payday Notice

The Labor Code requires every employer to post conspicuously a notice stating the employer's regular pay days and the time and place of payment, in accordance with Labor Code sections 200 through 243.ⁿ¹⁴⁵ The notice must be posted at the place of work, if practicable.ⁿ¹⁴⁶ Otherwise, it must be posted where it can be seen by employees as they come and go to work, or at the office or nearest agency for payment kept by the employer.ⁿ¹⁴⁷

The posting requirement does not apply to seasonal labor as defined in Labor Code section 250.ⁿ¹⁴⁸

[b] FORM--Sample Payday Notice

[i] Comment

The form set forth in [ii], below, is a sample notice informing employees of the regular date, time, and place for payment of wages, as required by Labor Code section 207. The notice should contain at least the following information:ⁿ¹⁴⁹

1. The name of the employer;
2. The regular paydays for that employer;
3. The time when wage payments will be made available; and
4. The place where the payments will be made.

The form must be posted conspicuously, and it is preferable that it be posted where the employees work or where they pass as they come to and from work (for example, at a time clock or entry way for employees).ⁿ¹⁵⁰ The additional identifying information suggested below may be useful, but is not required by statute.

The Division of Labor Standards Enforcement also provides a form that may be used by employers to comply with the requirements of the Labor Code. That form may be obtained from any office of the Division of Labor Standards Enforcement.ⁿ¹⁵¹

[ii] Form

NOTICE OF PAYDAYS

The regular paydays of _____ [employer's name] are as follows: _____ [Specify dates, e.g., the 15th of the month and the last day of the month, or in the event of a holiday or weekend, the last day of work closest to those dates]. Checks will be _____ [specify method of distribution, e.g., available for pick up from the employees' supervisor or distributed to work station] _____ [after or between] _____ [specify time, e.g., 3:00 P.M. or 3:00-5:30 P.M.] on each pay day. [If there are any questions about these paydays or if an employee wishes to make alternative arrangements for the pick-up of a check, inquiries should be directed to _____ (specify name, title, and location and/or telephone number of person to whom questions should be directed).]

Date: _____ By _____ [name]
 _____ [title]

[c] Penalty for Failure to Post Notice

An employer's failure to post the required payday notice constitutes prima facie evidence that the employer has violated Labor Code sections 201.3, 204, 204b, 205, 207, 208, 209, and 212.ⁿ¹⁵² In addition, the employer, or any responsible agent, manager, superintendent, or officer of the employer, who fails to post a payday notice as required by Labor Code section 207 is guilty of a misdemeanor.ⁿ¹⁵³ An employer who is convicted of a violation of this provision may be required to post a bond in a sum to be determined by the Labor Commissioner.ⁿ¹⁵⁴ An employee or a former employee may bring an action against an employer convicted of a second violation of Labor Code section 200 et seq. for a temporary restraining order prohibiting that employer from doing business in California unless that employer posts a bond.ⁿ¹⁵⁵

see Chapter 5 for additional discussion of the remedies for violations of the wage payment laws and the procedures for effectuating those remedies.

AUTHOR: By Susan Spurlark, J.D.

§ 4.02 Form of Payment

[1] State Law

Labor Code section 212 prohibits an employer or its agent or officer from issuing any order, check, draft, note, memorandum, or other acknowledgment of indebtedness as payment of wages due, or to become due, or as an advance on wages to be earned, unless the instrument meets all of the following requirements:n1

2. The instrument must be payable at some established place of business in California, the name and address of which must appear on the instrument; and
3. At the time of its issuance and for a reasonable time thereafter, which must be at least 30 days, the maker or drawer of the instrument must have sufficient funds in, or credit, arrangement, or understanding with the drawee for payment of the instrument.

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

The requirement in Labor Code section 212 that the instrument issued in payment of wages must be payable at an established place of business in California warrants special mention. Many employers that are domiciled outside California or that use payroll services located outside California issue wage checks drawn on out-of-state financial institutions having no place of business in California. Under Labor Code section 212, these wage checks must state on their face a California place of business where they may be cashed. Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

Labor Code section 212 further prohibits an employer from issuing any "scrip, coupon, cards, or other thing redeemable, in merchandise or purporting to be payable or redeemable otherwise than in money" as payment of wages.n2

An employer who violates the provisions of Labor Code section 212 is guilty of a misdemeanor.ⁿ³ In addition, the employer may be subject to a variety of civil penalties.ⁿ⁴ For discussion of civil penalties under Labor Code section 225.5, which apply to violations of Labor Code section 212, see § 4.04[2]. For additional discussion of enforcement of wage and hour laws, see Chapter 5.

Labor Code section 212 does not prohibit an employer from guaranteeing the payment of bills incurred by an employee for the "necessaries of life" or for tools or other implements used by the employee in the performance of his or her duties.ⁿ⁵ Section 212 also does not prohibit an employer from depositing wages in an account in any bank, savings and loan association, or credit union of the employee's choice with a place of business located in California, provided that the employee has voluntarily authorized the deposit.ⁿ⁶ If an employer discharges an employee or the employee quits, the employer may pay the wages earned and unpaid at the time the employee is discharged or quits by making a deposit into the account, provided the employer complies with the provisions relating to the payment of wages on termination or quitting of employment.ⁿ⁷

Students of nonprofit schools, colleges, universities, and other nonprofit educational institutions are exempted from the requirements set forth in Labor Code section 212.ⁿ⁸

Labor Code section 212 on its face only prohibits payment of wages by certain types of instruments that are not redeemable in cash; it does not prohibit the payment of additional compensation in forms other than cash. Furthermore, section 212 does not expressly prohibit deductions from cash wages to cover the costs of meals, lodging, or similar facilities provided by the employer. However, the amount of such deductions and the circumstances under which they may be deducted are both limited by other provisions of state law.ⁿ⁹ For discussion of limitations on crediting of amounts for employer-supplied meals and lodging against the employer's minimum wage obligations, see Chapter 2. For discussion of other limitations on deductions from wages, see § 4.10.

[2] Federal Law

Regulations promulgated pursuant to the FLSA require that minimum wage and overtime compensation payments mandated by the FLSA be made in cash or a negotiable instrument payable at par.ⁿ¹⁰ However, under specified circumstances, the "reasonable cost" or "fair value," as determined by the Secretary of Labor, of food, lodging, and "other facilities" furnished by the employer are included in the definition of "wages" under the FLSA and may therefore be credited toward wage payments required by the FLSA.ⁿ¹¹ For discussion of the circumstances under which food, lodging, and other facilities may be credited against federal minimum wage and overtime obligations, see Chapter 2.

The FLSA regulations prohibit payment of minimum wages and overtime in the form of scrip, tokens, credit cards, "dope checks," coupons, and similar devices since they are neither cash nor "other facilities" within the meaning of the FLSA.ⁿ¹² The regulations do permit employers to use tokens or scrip for purposes of determining the amount of cash wages due at the end of the pay period. For example, wages of piece workers may be calculated by issuing tokens representing a fixed amount of work performed, which are redeemed at the end of the pay period for cash.ⁿ¹³

CHAPTER 4 Payment of Wages

Part A. TIME, PLACE, AND FORM OF WAGE PAYMENTS

1-4 California Employment Law § 4.03

AUTHOR: By Susan Spurlark, J.D.

§ 4.03 Itemized Statement of Wages and Deductions

[1] General Requirement

Every employer is required to furnish his or employees with an itemized statement of wages and deductions either semi-monthly or at the time of each payment of wages.ⁿ¹ The statement must either be a detachable part of the check, draft, or voucher paying the wages, or a separate statement, if the wages are paid by personal check or cash.ⁿ² The written statement must contain the following information:ⁿ³

1. Gross wages earned by the employee;
2. Total hours worked by the employee, except for an employee whose compensation is solely based on a salary and who is exempt from payment of overtime;^{n3.1}
3. The number of piece-rate units earned and any applicable piece rate if the employee is paid on a piece-rate basis;
4. A separate listing of all deductions made from the gross wages, except that all deductions made at the written request of the employee may be aggregated and shown as a separate item;
5. Net wages earned;
6. The dates of the beginning and the end of the period for which the employee is being paid;
7. The employee's name and his or her social security number, except that by January 1, 2008, only the last four digits of the social security number or an employee identification number other than a social security number may be shown on the check;

8. The employer's name and address; and

9. All applicable hourly rates in effect during the pay period and the corresponding number of hours worked at each hourly rate by the employee.

An opinion letter from DLSE states that the obligation to list the total hours worked during the pay period can only be satisfied by listing the precise, actual number of hours worked. If it is left to the employee to add up the daily hours shown on the time cards or other records so that the employee must perform arithmetic computations to determine the total hours worked during the pay period, the requirements of Section 226 would not be met.ⁿ⁴

Deductions made from cash payments of wages must be recorded in ink or other indelible form, and properly dated, showing the month, day, and year.^{n4.1} A copy of either the itemized statement, or a record of the deductions, must be kept on file by the employer for at least three years at either the place of employment or a central location within California.ⁿ⁵ The employer must afford a current or former employee the right to inspect and copy records of this information pertaining to that current or former employee, on reasonable request to the employer.ⁿ⁶

The employer may take reasonable steps to assure the identity of the current or former employee, and, if the employer provides copies of records, it may charge the current or former employee the actual cost of reproduction.ⁿ⁷ An employer who receives a written or oral request to inspect or copy records pertaining to a current or former employee must comply with the request as soon as practicable, but no later than 21 calendar days from the date of the request. A violation of this obligation is an infraction.ⁿ⁸ Impossibility of performance, not caused by or a result of a violation of law, is an affirmative defense for an employer in any action alleging a violation of this requirement. An employer may designate the person to whom a request will be made.ⁿ⁹ An employer's failure to permit a current or former employee to inspect or copy records in a timely manner entitles the current or former employee or the Labor Commissioner to recover a $750 penalty from the employer.ⁿ¹⁰ An employee may also sue for injunctive relief to ensure compliance with Lab. Code § 226 and is entitled to an award of costs and reasonable attorney's fees.ⁿ¹¹

For full discussion of recordkeeping requirements, see Chapter 7.

[2] Exceptions

Owners and occupants of residential dwellings who employ persons to perform duties incidental to the ownership, maintenance, or use of the residence, including the care and supervision of children, or duties that are of a personal nature and are not in the course of the trade, business profession, or occupation of the owner or occupant of the residence are exempt from the Labor Code provision requiring written statements.ⁿ¹² However, such employers are required to maintain certain records regarding identities, wages, and hours worked by employees.ⁿ¹³ For additional discussion of recordkeeping requirements, see Chapter 7.

Labor Code Section 226 does not apply to the state, or any city, county, city and county, district, or any other governmental entity, except that if the governmental entity furnishes its employees with a check, draft, or voucher paying the employee's wages, the state or a city, county, city and county, district, or other governmental entity must, by January 1, 2008, use no more than the last four digits of the employee's social security number or an employee identification number other than the social security number on the check, draft, or voucher.ⁿ¹⁴

[3] Penalties for Failure to Provide Statement

An employer who violates the itemized statement provisions may face a civil penalty of $250 per employee for each violation in an initial citation and $1000 per employee for each violation in a subsequent violation.ⁿ¹⁵ In enforcing this provision, the Labor Commissioner has discretion not to penalize the employer for a first violation if the violation was due to a clerical error or inadvertent mistake.ⁿ¹⁶ The penalty may be imposed by the Labor Commissioner by citation after notice and opportunity for a hearing.ⁿ¹⁷ For further discussion of enforcement procedures, see Chapter 5.

An employee suffering injury as a result of a knowing and intentional failure by an employer to comply with Lab. Code § 226(a) is entitled to recover the greater of all actual damages or $50 for the initial pay period in which a violation occurs, and $100 per employee for each violation in a subsequent pay period, not exceeding an aggregate penalty of $4,000, and is entitled to an award of costs and reasonable attorney's fees.ⁿ¹⁸ A prevailing employee is entitled to an award of reasonable attorney's fees under Lab. Code § 226(e) as a matter of right.^{n18.1}

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

As a practical matter, it is difficult to imagine the circumstance in which an employee would secure entitlement to the $50 and $100 penalties specified in Labor Code § 226(e). Entitlement is a function of proof both that an employer knowingly and intentionally failed to provide a conforming wage statement and that the failure caused injury. Although it is possible, for example, that a wage statement might misstate an employee's earnings and cause an employee to overdraft an account and suffer overdraft charges, such errors are typically clerical and not the result of intentional conduct. Commentary by Kirby Wilcox

In addition, an employer who knowingly and intentionally fails to provide itemized statements of wages and deductions as required by statute is guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment not to exceed one year, or both.ⁿ¹⁹ This penalty also applies to any officer, agent, employee, fiduciary of the employer, or any other person who is in control, receipt, custody, or disposal of the wages due to an employee and who knowingly or intentionally participates or aids in the violation of the statement requirements.ⁿ²⁰ This penalty is in addition to any others provided by law.ⁿ²¹ This penalty does not apply to the state, or any city, county, city and county, district, or any other governmental entity.ⁿ²²

CHAPTER 4 Payment of Wages

Part A. TIME, PLACE, AND FORM OF WAGE PAYMENTS

1-4 California Employment Law § 4.04

AUTHOR: By Susan Spurlark, J.D.

§ 4.04 Wage Disputes

[1] Procedure for Resolution

As discussed previously,ⁿ¹ California law requires prompt payment of wages due to employees on the specified payday.ⁿ² Failure to pay wages when due may lead to the imposition of civil and criminal penalties.ⁿ³

When there is a dispute about the amount of wages due, the employer is required to pay, without any condition, any part of the employee's wages that the employer concedes is due within the time limits set by law.ⁿ⁴ As to any remaining balance claimed to be due, the employee may pursue any remedies available to him or her.ⁿ⁵ An employee's remedies include a hearing before the Labor Commissioner, followed by a de novo court appeal,ⁿ⁶ or an independent civil action.ⁿ⁷ These remedies and applicable procedures are discussed in Chapter 5.

[2] Penalties for Willful Failure to Pay Wages

In addition to the penalties applicable to violations of specific provisions of the Labor Code governing wage payment,ⁿ⁸ which are referred to elsewhere in this chapter, Labor Code section 216 makes it a misdemeanor (1) for an employer who has the ability to pay wages to willfully refuse to pay wages that are due and payable after a demand has been made,ⁿ⁹ or (2) for an employer to falsely deny the amount or validity of a wage claim, or that wages are due, with the intent to secure any discount of the wages due or with the intent to annoy, harass, oppress, hinder, delay, or defraud the person to whom the wages are due.ⁿ¹⁰

Violations of Labor Code section 216 may also result in the imposition of the following civil penalties:

1. For the first violation, $100 for each failure to pay each employee;ⁿ¹¹ and
2. For each subsequent violation, or any willful or intentional violation, $200 for each failure to pay each employee, plus 25% of the amount unlawfully withheld.ⁿ¹²

The penalty may be recovered by the Labor Commissioner as part of a hearing held to recover unpaid wages and penalties or in an independent civil action.ⁿ¹³

A court does not have discretion to forgo imposing penalties under Labor Code section 225.5, even when there is a good faith dispute as to whether wages were due.ⁿ¹⁴

If after investigation and hearing of a wage claim, the Labor Commissioner upholds the validity of the claim, Labor Code section 206(b) requires that the employer pay the amount found to be due within ten days after the employer receives notice of the amount due. If the employer has ability to pay the amount due and willfully fails to do so within ten days, the employer will, in addition to all other penalties, be required to pay treble the amount of damages to the employee that occurred as a "direct and foreseeable consequence" of the failure to pay,ⁿ¹⁵ unless the employer files its notice of appeal of the Commissioner's decision within that period.ⁿ¹⁶ For discussion of proceedings before the Labor Commissioner, see Chapter 5.

Employers who fail to make timely payment of wages may also be required to furnish a bond in order to secure future compliance.ⁿ¹⁷

[3] Prohibition Against Requiring Release of Wage Claims

An employer may not require the execution of a release of any claim or right on account of wages due unless the wages have been paid.ⁿ¹⁸ Any release that violates this rule is null and void as between the employer and employee, and the violation is a misdemeanor.ⁿ¹⁹ For these purposes, "execution of a release" includes requiring an employee, as a condition of being paid, to execute a statement of the hours the employee worked during a pay period, which the employer knows to be false.ⁿ²⁰

§ 4.05 Payment of Employees of Unlicensed Subcontractor

An employee of an unlicensed subcontractor may assert a wage claim against the general contractor. In Sanders Construction Co. v. Cerda, n1 laborers who worked for an unlicensed subcontractor filed wage claims against the general contractor with the Labor Commissioner, seeking wages, interest, and waiting time penalties.n2 The Court of Appeal found that the general contractor was the statutory employer of the laborers by the operation of Labor Code § 2750.5, which does not apply only to cases involving workers' compensation and unemployment benefits.n3

1-4 California Employment Law § 4.10

AUTHOR: By Susan Spurlark, J.D.

§ 4.10 Wage Deductions and Set-Offs

[1] California Law

[a] Authorized Deductions

[i] Generally

An employer's right to deduct from or withhold a portion of wages when due is limited by a variety of provisions in the Labor Code,ⁿ¹ Industrial Welfare Commission wage orders,ⁿ² and case law. The limitations are discussed in subsections [b]-[g], below.

Permissible deductions from wages may generally be classified as follows:ⁿ³

1. Deductions that are required or authorized by state or federal law;
2. Deductions that are expressly authorized in writing by the employee to cover insurance premiums, hospital or medical dues, or other deductions not amounting to a rebate or deduction from the standard wage arrived at by collective bargaining or pursuant to wage agreement or statute; and
3. Deductions to cover health and welfare or pension plan contributions that are expressly authorized by a collective bargaining or wage agreement.

[ii] Examples of Deductions Required or Authorized by Law

Examples of deductions expressly required by law are deductions for state and federal income taxes, social security taxes, and state disability insurance taxes. Other examples are deductions pursuant to the statutory procedures for wage garnishment.ⁿ⁴

Labor Code Section 2928 authorizes an employer to make deductions from wages for tardiness that are proportionate to the wage that would have been earned during the time actually lost, or for a half-hour's wages if the time lost is less than 30 minutes. In addition, under some circumstances, an employer may deduct certain losses caused by an employee from his or her wages, as further discussed in [c], below.ⁿ⁵

[iii] Examples of Deductions Authorized by Employee

Examples of items that may be deducted from wages if authorized in advance by the employee in writing include:

1. Premiums for life, health, or disability insurance;ⁿ⁶
2. Deductions made pursuant to voluntary wage assignments complying with the requirements of the Labor Code;ⁿ⁷
3. Contributions to pension or retirement plans;ⁿ⁸
4. Deductions from final pay check to recoup the cost of uniforms and equipment that are provided by the employer and that are not returned by the employee on completion of the job;ⁿ⁹ and
5. Periodic deductions from wages authorized by employee to repay certain types of indebtedness owed to the employer.ⁿ¹⁰

[b] Wage Deductions or Setoffs to Recover Debts Owed by Employee to Employer

No provision of the Labor Code specifically regulates the use of wage deductions to setoff debts owed to the employer by an employee. Setoffs are defined as an equitable principle that "either party to a transaction involving mutual debts and credits can strike a balance, holding himself owing or entitled only to the net difference."ⁿ¹¹ Employers have often used deductions from wages as a means of recovering amounts owed by employees in a variety of situations, including repayment of employee loans, recoupment of wage overpayment and wage advances, and payment for employee purchases.

In Barnhill v. Robert Saunders & Co.,ⁿ¹² a court of appeal imposed limitations on an employer's right to recoup an employee's debt to the employer by deducting the amount owed from the employee's wages. Barnhill involved a situation in which an employee had signed a promissory note allowing the deduction of a specified amount from her wages each pay period in order to pay a debt owed to the employer. At the time of termination, the employer accelerated the indebtedness and deducted the entire amount of the outstanding balance from the employee's final paycheck, leaving the employee with no net pay.ⁿ¹³ The court of appeal held that the employer was not permitted to offset the indebtedness due against the wages owed to the employee.ⁿ¹⁴ The court reasoned that to permit such an offset would in effect allow the employer to obtain prejudgment attachment of the employee's wages, despite the fact that wages are completely exempt from attachment pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure Sections 487.020(c) and 706.011(a).ⁿ¹⁵

The Division of Labor Standards Enforcement (DLSE) has interpreted Barnhill as prohibiting an employer from deducting from the employee's final paycheck any amount representing the unpaid balance of a debt owed by the employee to the employer, which was the specific action taken by the employer in Barnhill.ⁿ¹⁶ Such deductions are prohibited even if the indebtedness is evidenced by a written promise to pay "on demand."ⁿ¹⁷ Examples of the kinds of indebtedness that the DLSE regards to be governed by Barnhill include:ⁿ¹⁸

1. Loans to the employee;
2. Obligations incurred from a product purchase plan;

3. Educational assistance;
4. Moving expenses that the employee agrees to reimburse in whole or in part;
5. Amounts owed to the employer by purchases charged on a monthly revolving account; and
6. Overpayment of wages or salaries if the employee was not aware or could not reasonably be expected to have been aware of the overpayment.

However, the DLSE's interpretive bulletin on Barnhill also states that "[w]ith regard to indebtedness, the periodic amount regularly deducted with the employer's [sic, employee's] written authorization may be deducted from the final paycheck," as long as the employer does not attempt to deduct the entire outstanding indebtedness in the final check.ⁿ¹⁹

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

Whether an employer may deduct salary or wage advances from a final paycheck is unclear. The 1985 interpretive bulletin regarding Barnhill ⁿ²⁰ indirectly addresses the issue by sanctioning the deduction of salary and wage overpayments from final paychecks if an employee is aware or reasonably could have been expected to be aware of the overpayment. The 1986 interpretive bulletin regarding vacation payⁿ²¹ directly addresses the issue by declaring vacation advances to be wage advances and stating that "an employer will be permitted to reconcile the account and recoup the wage advances from the employee's final paycheck." The 1988 court of appeal decision in California State Employees' Ass'n v. State of California, ⁿ²² however, seriously undermines the validity of both interpretive bulletins by declaring inadvertent wage overpayments to be debts that are not recoverable by setoff from any paycheck. The court held that the employer's exclusive remedy in such circumstances are the state's wage garnishment and attachment laws. A 1991 unpublished opinion letter by H. Thomas Cadell, Jr., chief counsel for the Labor Commissioner at that time, further complicates the issue by citing the Barnhill and State Employees cases as authority for the proposition that a signing bonus that is deemed an advance on wages and that is extinguished if the recipient remains employed for a specified period is a debt that cannot be deducted from the final paychecks. The opinion letter does not cite either the 1985 or 1986 interpretive bulletins mentioned above and would appear to overrule them, but for comments in its closing paragraphs. Specifically, the Chief Counsel indicates that an employer may advance wages already earned but not yet payable, provided that the deduction is made from the paycheck for the same payroll period (even if it is the final paycheck). In addition, the Chief Counsel's letter appears to regard as lawful the deduction from final paychecks of draws or advances on sales commissions, provided that the deduction is the subject of a prior agreement, the deduction is made from a commission payment, and the deduction does not leave the employee with less than the minimum wage for the services performed. Note, however, that a separate unpublished opinion letter from 1990 by Chief Counsel Cadell severely limits the right of an employer to make deductions from subsequent sales commissions under circumstances in which prior commissions were paid for sales that have become delinquent or uncollectible.

Such inconsistent authority is disconcerting. Employers, therefore, should be wary of adopting or continuing any policies or practices that contemplate salary, wage, or commission deductions without first consulting a competent personnel professional or attorney. Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

Moreover, in Phillips v. Gemini Moving Specialists, ⁿ²³ the court of appeal held that there is a fundamental public policy against an employer's retaliation for its employee having asserted a right to be free of the employer's withholding of pay.ⁿ²⁴ The court cited Barnhill v. Robert Saunders & Co. ⁿ²⁵ That holding was based on the rationale that the state's wage exemption statutes were meant to protect an employee's basic standard of living regardless of any debts owed.ⁿ²⁶ The Phillips court found a clear fundamental and substantial public policy, set forth in many Labor Code sections and in Code of Civil Procedure, section 487.020, protecting an employee's wages generally and further protecting wages from setoffs such as the one in this case, taken without written authorization, contrary to plaintiff's request, and for an amount in excess of the agreed-on sum.ⁿ²⁷

[c] Cash Shortages, Breakage, and Loss of Equipment or Uniforms

[i] General Prohibition Against Deduction for Simple Negligence

An employer may not make any deduction from an employee's wage (or require any reimbursement from the employee) because of a cash shortage, breakage, or loss of equipment that results from simple negligence.ⁿ²⁸ Such losses are regarded by law as the costs of doing business that must be borne by the employer. Allowing deductions from wages to cover those losses would obviate the need for the rules governing the use of cash bonds to secure proper performance.ⁿ²⁹ This rule also bars bonuses that are based in part on the amount of cash shortages or other losses.ⁿ³⁰

[ii] Limited Exceptions for Dishonest or Willful Acts or Gross Negligence

All California wage orders except the wage order governing employees in certain on-site construction, drilling, logging, and mining occupations permit an employer to make a deduction from an employee's wages for cash shortage, breakage, or loss of equipment if the employer can show that the shortage, breakage, or loss was caused by a dishonest or willful act, or by the gross negligence of the employee.ⁿ³¹ Substantially the same provision was upheld in Kerr's Catering Service v. Department of Industrial Relations.ⁿ³² However, before making such a deduction, the employer should have proof that the loss was caused by the employee to be charged and that the loss was the result of dishonesty, willful conduct, or gross negligence, rather than simple negligence; the Labor Commissioner places the burden on the employer to establish these facts by the weight of the evidence.ⁿ³³ If the employer fails to meet the burden of proof, waiting time penalties under Labor Code Section 203 may be assessed.ⁿ³⁴

The decision in Barnhill v. Robert Saunders & Co. ⁿ³⁵ arguably casts some doubt on the continuing validity of the wage order provision allowing wage deductions for losses caused by dishonest or willful conduct or gross negligence. As discussed in [b], above, the court in Barnhill held that an employer may not deduct a debt owed by the employee from the employee's final paycheck.ⁿ³⁶ The rationale behind the court's decision was that such a deduction was tantamount to prejudgment attachment of an employee's wages and was contrary to the legislative policy behind the statutory exemption of such wages from attachment.ⁿ³⁷ Although the facts in Barnhill involved an outstanding contractual indebtedness, rather than a wage deduction based on cash shortages or damage to the employer's property, the rationale behind the court's decision seems equally applicable to the latter situation. In addition, one court of appeal, in applying the analysis in Barnhill v. Robert Saunders & Co., ⁿ³⁸ has held that there is a fundamental public policy against an employer's retaliation for its employee having asserted a right to be free of the employer's withholding of pay.ⁿ³⁹

[iii] Limited Exception for Failure to Return Equipment or Uniforms

Wage orders 1-2001 through 15-2001 also provide an exception to the prohibition against deductions for losses in cases in which an employee fails to return a uniform or equipment issued to him or her by the employer and has given a prior written authorization for the deduction.ⁿ⁴⁰

[d] Gratuities

[i] Generally

Under the Labor Code, any gratuities received by an employee are deemed to be his or her sole property, and an employer generally may not collect, take, or receive any gratuity (or any part thereof) that is paid, given to, or left for an employee by a patron.ⁿ⁴¹ Except as indicated below, the employer also may not deduct any such amount from the wages owed to the employee or credit that amount toward the employee's wages.ⁿ⁴² In this context, a gratuity includes any tip, money, or part thereof, that has been paid or given to or left for an employee by the patron of a business over and above the amount actually due to the business for services rendered or for goods, food, drink, or articles sold or served to the patron.ⁿ⁴³ The employer is required to keep records of gratuities it receives or holds for any purpose.ⁿ⁴⁴ A violation of these provisions is a misdemeanor.ⁿ⁴⁵

The DLSE's position is that compulsory service charges imposed on customers (e.g., service charges added to food costs for large banquets) are not gratuities or tips within the meaning of Labor Code section 351, but are part of the employer's gross receipts. Such service charges are therefore not considered the property of the employees who performed the services.ⁿ⁴⁶ The Labor Commissioner also stated that if a portion of the service charge is subsequently paid to employees, the charges are considered wages, which may be credited against the employer's minimum wage obligations, but which also must be included in the employee's regular rate of pay for purposes of computing overtime compensation.ⁿ⁴⁷

An employer that permits patrons to pay gratuities by credit card must pay the employees the full amount of the gratuity that the patron indicated on the credit card slip, without any deductions for any credit card payment processing fees or costs that may be charged to the employer by the credit card company.ⁿ⁴⁸ Payment of gratuities made by patrons using credit cards shall be made to the employees not later than the next regular payday following the date the patron authorized the credit card payment.ⁿ⁴⁹

Under certain circumstances, the FLSA permits an employer to credit tips received by its employees against its minimum wage and overtime obligations.ⁿ⁵⁰ However, this provision is of no use to California employers, since Labor Code Section 351 prevents an employer from crediting tips received by employees against the state or federal minimum wage.ⁿ⁵¹ For further discussion of crediting tips toward minimum wage obligations, see Chapter 2.

[ii] Tip-Pooling Agreements

The DLSE has indicated that tip splitting or pooling arrangements, whether voluntary or involuntary, do not violate the provisions of Labor Code Section 351, and are permissible, so long as certain requirements are met.ⁿ⁵² The DLSE reasons that even involuntary tip-pooling is permissible because Labor Code Section 351 contemplates that a particular tip could have been left by a patron for more than one employee, and it generally would not be feasible to find out what portion of each tip was intended to be left for which employees. Hence, an employer may adopt a reasonable policy requiring employees to contribute to a tip-pooling arrangement, as long as the employer does not share in any part of the tips.ⁿ⁵³ Courts of appeal also have held that Labor Code Section 351 does not prohibit employers from requiring pooling of tips.ⁿ⁵⁴

In Jameson v. Five Feet Restaurant, Inc.,^{n54.1} a court found that there was substantial evidence that a restaurant's floor managers were "agents" of the restaurant as defined by Labor Code section 350(d), and therefore the restaurant's policy requiring servers to give the floor manager 10 percent of their nightly tips violated Labor Code section 351. For these purposes, "employer" and "agent" are defined in Labor Code section 350.^{n54.2} Section 350(d) does not require that an agent's duties exclusively consist of hiring, discharging, or supervising employees or require that an agent spend the majority of his or her time performing those functions. Therefore, it is irrelevant that the agents perform other duties in addition to the functions described in section 350(d).ⁿ⁵⁵

On the other hand, an employer may require equitable allocation of tips placed in a collective tip box for employees providing service to the customer, even when an employee also has limited supervisory duties, and even if the supervisor could be considered to be an "agent" under Labor Code § 350. Section 351 does not prohibit an employee who is also an agent from keeping his or her own tip.ⁿ⁵⁶

The California Supreme Court has accepted review of Grodensky v. Artichoke Joe's Casino.^{n56.1}

[e] Costs of Physical and Medical Examinations

Labor Code Section 222.5 forbids any deduction from wages, or any other requirement that an employee or applicant pay, for the cost of any pre-employment medical or physical examination taken as a condition of employment.ⁿ⁵⁷ The statute further prohibits an employer from deducting from wages or requiring an employee to pay for any medical or physical examination required by state, federal, or local law or regulation.ⁿ⁵⁸ Under the DLSE's interpretation of this provision, an employer may require an applicant to pay for pre-employment medical or physical examinations that are required by law as a condition of employment, but may not require an existing employee to pay for a legally-required examination during the course of employment.ⁿ⁵⁹ A violation of this provision is a misdemeanor.ⁿ⁶⁰

Labor Code Section 231 requires an employer to pay for the cost of a physical examination for an employee required in connection with the issuance of a driver's license when the employer requires the driver's license as a condition of employment.ⁿ⁶¹

If an employer requests that an employee obtain a second or third opinion as to whether or not he or she needs to take a medical leave under the family care leave provisions of the Government Code,ⁿ⁶² the employer must pay for the costs involved with obtaining those opinions.ⁿ⁶³

[e.1] Cost of Workers' Compensation

Labor Code Section 3751(a) prohibits an employer from exacting or receiving any contribution, or making or taking any deduction from the earnings of any employee, either directly or indirectly, to cover the whole or part of the cost of workers' compensation.ⁿ⁶⁴ An employer's violation of this provision is a misdemeanor.ⁿ⁶⁵

[f] Costs of Bonds and Photographs

Labor Code Section 401 requires an employer to pay the cost of bonds or photographs required for employment.ⁿ⁶⁶ A violation of Labor Code Section 401 is a misdemeanor.ⁿ⁶⁷

[g] Other Statutorily Prohibited Withholding

Unless otherwise authorized, Labor Code Section 221 makes it unlawful for an employer to collect or receive from its employees any part of the wage previously paid to the employee. This is the "anti-kickback" statute, and a violation of its provisions constitutes a misdemeanor.ⁿ⁶⁸ In Steinhebel v. Los Angeles Times Communications,^{n68.1} the court found that an employer's chargeback of commission advances on newspaper subscriptions against telemarketers' future advances on commission if customers did not keep their subscriptions was not a violation of Section 221. The telemarketers were aware that a sale did not qualify as a "commissionable order" until the customer kept the subscription for 28 days, and the telemarketers agreed that they would receive advances before the employer could ascertain whether the sales would actually ripen into "commissionable orders." The court held that advances on commissions did not constitute the payment of "wages," and the 28-day requirement was a condition precedent to the telemarketers' entitlement to a commission. On the other hand, in Harris v. Investor's Business Daily, Inc.,^{n68.2} the trial court erred in granting the employer's motion for summary adjudication that the employer's chargeback policy was lawful. Under the policy, newspaper subscription telemarketers were "charged back" the points earned from a sale if the customer cancelled within 16 weeks, which affected commissions and any bonuses earned by the employee. The appellate court distinguished Steinhebel on the ground that in Steinhebel, the employment agreement clearly identified the commission as an advance; because a condition to the employee's right to the commission had yet to occur, an advance was not a wage within the meaning of Labor Code section 221. Unlike the employees in Steinhebel, the Harris telemarketers did not expressly agree to the chargeback policy in writing. Further, even if the employees knew about the policy, the employer's materials suggested that the points were earned at the time of the sale, not at some designated point in the future.

Labor Code Sections 222 and 223 bar payment of less than the wage called for by a collective bargaining agreement or by statute or other wage agreement. In the case of wages set by collective bargaining agreements, a violation occurs when the contractual rate is withheld either willfully, unlawfully, or with an intent to defraud an employee, a competitor, or any other person.ⁿ⁶⁹ The fact that an individual employee has signed a private agreement to the lower wage rate is not sufficient to overcome the requirements of the contract.ⁿ⁷⁰ Labor Code Section 223 bars the "secret" payment of wages at a rate that is less than that set by contract or statute (for example, state and federal minimum wage rates).^{n70.1} Such an unlawful withholding may occur when the deduction for meals or other facilities is exorbitant.ⁿ⁷¹ Violations of these provisions are also misdemeanors.ⁿ⁷²

Labor Code Section 224 prohibits deductions for taxation by local jurisdictions of employees working but not residing in that jurisdiction if resident employees are not similarly taxed, irrespective of any employee authorization.ⁿ⁷³ Section 224 also provides that Labor Code sections 221, 222, and 223 do not make it unlawful for an employer to withhold or divert any portion of an employee's wages when a deduction is expressly authorized in writing by the employee to cover deductions not amounting to a rebate or deduction from the standard wage. In Koehl v. Verio, Inc.,^{n73.1} sales associates' compensation plans provided for base pay and payment of commissions when an order was booked, but which the employer could recover or charge back if specified conditions were not met. Thus, under Labor Code section 224, the chargebacks were made pursuant to written commission plans which expressly authorized them. Further, the chargebacks were not taken against the employee's standard wage. Although "standard wage" is not defined in section 224, common usage of the term refers to an employee's base pay, and the associates themselves referred to their base pay as their "standard" wage.

[h] Deduction of Unidentified Returns From Earned Commissions

A court of appeal has held that a retail employer's policy of deducting a proportionate amount of "unidentified returns" (i.e., returns of merchandise for which it was not possible to identify the specific salesperson who had sold the merchandise) from the earned commissions of all sales employees violated state wage and hour law.ⁿ⁷⁴ Relying in part on a previous California Supreme Court decision involving deductions for cash and merchandise shortages,ⁿ⁷⁵ the court held that the employer's policy violated Labor Code Section 221 (discussed in [g], above), which prohibits an employer from receiving back any part of wages previously paid by the employer to an employee.ⁿ⁷⁶ The court rejected the employer's argument, backed by a private opinion letter written by the Labor Commissioner, that the amounts withheld were not a deduction, but merely a device for taking account of returned merchandise as a basis for computing employees' commissions. The court observed that to the extent the employer deducts for unidentified returns resulting from other employees' abuse, the conscientious sales person is required to return a portion of commissions that he or she has legitimately earned from completed sales in order to compensate the employer for commissions paid on sales that other employees did not complete--amounts that otherwise would be a business loss that the conscientious sales employee had done nothing to cause. The court further noted that another cause of unidentified returns was customer neglect that was tolerated by the employer (e.g., the customer's failure to obtain or retain the sales document, the "return" of stolen or damaged merchandise, etc.). To that extent, the employer was requiring employees to compensate the employer for losses caused by its generous return policy. The court concluded that such a policy of punishing all employees for the sins of a few employees (or for those of its customers) could not stand scrutiny under California law.ⁿ⁷⁷

[i] Deductions from Incentive Compensation Plan

In Prachasaisoradej v. Ralphs Grocery Co., Inc.,^{n77.1} the California Supreme Court held that a retail employer's profit-based supplementary incentive compensation plan was not invalid, even though calculation of payments under the plan included subtracting store expenses from store revenues. The plan was not illegal simply because, pursuant to normal concepts of profitability, ordinary business expenses, such as storewide workers' compensation costs, and storewide cash and merchandise losses, were figured in, along with such other store expenses as the electric bill and the cost of goods sold, to determine the store's profit, upon which the supplementary incentive compensation payments were calculated. The employer did not illegally shift those costs to employees. After fully absorbing the expenses at issue, the employer simply determined what remained as profits to share with its eligible employees in addition to their normal wage.

[2] Federal Law

Federal regulations bar deductions that have the effect of lowering the employee's wages below the rates required by the minimum wage and overtime provisions of the FLSA.ⁿ⁷⁸ Thus, for example, deductions for items provided by the employer that do not constitute "board, lodging, or other facilities" within the meaning of the FLSA,ⁿ⁷⁹ or that exceed the "reasonable cost" for such items as defined by the regulations,ⁿ⁸⁰ would be improper if those deductions reduce the employee's wages below the federal minimum wage.ⁿ⁸¹ For discussion of rules permitting employers to credit amounts for food, lodging, and other facilities against the minimum wage, see Chapter 2.

A police officer trainee's agreement to reimburse the employer for training costs if the trainee voluntarily left employment before five years, did not violate FLSA's minimum wage and overtime mandates. Though the employer paid the employee well above the minimum wage during his tenure with the police department, he did not receive his wages unconditionally or free and clear, as required by federal regulations.^{n81.1} Even assuming arguendo that providing training to the trainee was primarily for the benefit of the employer, and that the employer therefore could not deduct the cost of the training from the trainee's wages if to do so would drive wages below the minimum wage, the trainee failed to establish a violation of the FLSA, because the trainee received training while he was an employee and receiving wages, so that he thus incurred no "pre-employment expenses." Further, even assuming the employer had deducted the cost of training as he received it, it was unclear whether such a hypothetical deduction would have driven the trainee's salary below the minimum wage.^{n81.2} However, the employer was not permitted to withhold the trainee's final paycheck in order to satisfy the debt that arose when he left employment within the first year. Under the FLSA, an employee is entitled to keep any compensation the FLSA specifies as a statutory floor below which no contract may go, so that the trainee was entitled to at least the statutory minimum wage for the final pay period he worked.^{n81.3}

The regulations permit employers to deduct taxes that are assessed against the employee and forwarded to a government agency, such as federal, state, and local income taxes, Social Security taxes, and state disability insurance, even if the employee's net wages are thereby reduced below the minimum wage.ⁿ⁸² The regulations also permit an employer to deduct amounts properly withheld pursuant to a wage garnishment order,ⁿ⁸³ as well as deductions voluntarily authorized by the employee pursuant to a wage assignment or other order to pay a sum for the benefit of the employee to a creditor, donee, or other bona fide third party.ⁿ⁸⁴ Cases have also indicated that the FLSA permits deductions for repayment of wage advancesⁿ⁸⁵ and amounts that were misappropriated by the employee.ⁿ⁸⁶ The employer may not, however, routinely deduct "cash shortages" that result from the ordinary operation of the business, rather than from theft or misappropriation by the employee.ⁿ⁸⁷

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS

CHAPTER 4 Payment of Wages

Part B. WAGE DEDUCTIONS, ASSIGNMENTS, AND GARNISHMENTS

1-4 California Employment Law § 4.11

AUTHOR: By Susan Spurlark, J.D.

§ 4.11 Assignment of Wages

[1] Transactions Governed

Assignments of wages are generally governed by Labor Code section 300. However, the rules regarding wage assignments set forth in section 300 do not apply to (1) earnings assignment orders for support issued in family law proceedings,ⁿ¹ or (2) wage assignment orders issued under Probate Code section 3088 (wage assignment for support of conservatee from community property of conservatee's spouse).ⁿ² In addition, the Labor Commissioner, in accepting assignment of wage claims for enforcement purposes pursuant to Labor Code section 96,ⁿ³ is not bound by any technical rules regarding the validity of assignments.ⁿ⁴ The rules governing wage assignments also do not apply to deductions authorized by the employee for the following purposes:ⁿ⁵

1. Payment for life, retirement, disability, or unemployment insurance premiums;
2. Payment of taxes owed by the employee;
3. Contributions to funds, plans, or systems providing for death, retirement, disability, unemployment, or other benefits;
4. Payment for goods or services furnished by the employer to the employee or the employee's family at the employee's request; and
5. Contributions "for charitable, educational, patriotic or similar purposes."

[2] Requirements for Validity

Except for certain types of wage assignments mentioned in [1], above, a wage assignment must meet the requirements of Labor Code section 300 to be valid. First, at the time the assignment is made, the wages or salary to be assigned must have been earned unless the assignment (1) is for the necessities of life, (2) is made directly to the person furnishing those necessities, and (3) does not exceed the amount needed to furnish those necessities.ⁿ⁶ This provision has been interpreted to allow assignment of future earnings from a current employment, but not earnings from future employment.ⁿ⁷

Second, an assignment is not valid if, at the time the assignment is filed with the employer, another assignment of wages by the employee is subject to payment or if an earnings withholding order against the employee's wages or salary is in force.ⁿ⁸ In addition, assignments are not allowed if the employee is paid under a plan for payment by several different employers at a central place as provided for in Labor Code section 204a.ⁿ⁹ No more than 50% of the assignor's wages may be withheld at the time of each payment of wages.ⁿ¹⁰

The wage assignment must be in writingⁿ¹¹ and must contain the following elements:

1. The assignment must be signed by the person whose wages are to be assigned and must specifically identify the transaction to which it applies;ⁿ¹²
2. If the person making the assignment is married, written consent of that person's spouse must be attached, unless the assignor attaches a written statement setting forth the fact that (1) a judgment decreeing a legal separation has been entered, or (2) the spouses are living apart after entry of an interlocutory judgment dissolving the marriage;ⁿ¹³
3. If the assignment is by a minor, the written consent of the minor's parent or guardian must be attached to the assignment;ⁿ¹⁴
4. To the extent requirements (2) and (3), above, are inapplicable, the assignment must include a written statement that the person is unmarried and/or is an adult;ⁿ¹⁵ and
5. The written assignment must contain a statement attesting to the fact that no other assignment exists with respect to the same transaction or series of transactions.ⁿ¹⁶

A copy of the assignment and of any required consents and statements, authenticated by a notary public, must be filed with the employer along with an itemized statement of the amount then due to the assignee.ⁿ¹⁷ The employer is entitled to rely on the statements of fact in the consents or statement of age and marital status without making an independent investigation of the truth of those facts and may not be held liable for any payment made to an assignee in reliance on those facts.ⁿ¹⁸

The assignment and any power of attorney to assign or collect wages is revocable at any time by the employee.ⁿ¹⁹ The revocation is not effective, however, until the employer receives written notice of the revocation from the employee.ⁿ²⁰

If the employee is covered by the FLSA, the assignment may not be made in favor of the employer.ⁿ²¹

[3] Labor Commissioner as Assignee of Wage Claims

Labor Code Section 96 authorizes the Labor Commissioner and his or her deputies and representatives to take assignments of wage claims and certain other employee claims for purposes of enforcement. Such assignments need not comply with the requirements of Labor Code Section 300, discussed in [2], above.ⁿ²²

Labor Code Section 96 authorizes the Labor Commissioner to take assignments of the following types of claims:

- Wage claims and incidental expense accounts and advances;

- Mechanics' and other liens of employees;
- Claims based on "stop orders" for wages and on bonds for labor;
- Claims for damages for misrepresentations of conditions of employment;
- Claims for unreturned bond money of employees;
- Claims for penalties for nonpayment of wages;
- Claims for return of workers' tools in the illegal possession of another person;
- Claims for vacation pay, severance pay, or other compensation supplemental to a wage agreement;ⁿ²³
- Awards for workers' compensation benefits in which the Worker's Compensation Appeals Board has found that the employer has failed to secure payment of compensation and where the award remains unpaid for more than 10 days after having become final;ⁿ²⁴
- Claims for loss of wages as the result of discharge from employment for garnishment of wages;ⁿ²⁵ and
- Claims for lost wages as the result of demotion, suspension, or discharge from employment for lawful conduct occurring during nonworking hours away from the employer's premises.

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

Practitioners were not generally aware of the proposal to add the final listed claim to Labor Code Section 96 until the amendment became law, effective January 1, 2000. Nor, from a bare reading of the addition, is it clear whether the legislature intended it to reflect existing law or to create new substantive rights. At the least, the addition affirms privacy rights embodied in article I, § 1 of the State Constitution. Whether the courts will view the provision more expansively is uncertain and will require a review of the limited legislative history of the amendment. Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

These assignments can only be made on behalf of employees, not independent contractors.ⁿ²⁶ However, if the employee is covered by a collective bargaining agreement, the employee's collective bargaining representative may act as assignee of wage claims for enforcement by the Labor Commissioner, subject to the employee's option to reject such representation and to represent himself or herself.ⁿ²⁷ A complete discussion of the procedures for such an assignment and enforcement proceedings generally is set forth in Chapter 5.

CHAPTER 4 Payment of Wages

Part B. WAGE DEDUCTIONS, ASSIGNMENTS, AND GARNISHMENTS

1-4 California Employment Law § 4.12

AUTHOR: By Susan Spurlark, J.D.

§ 4.12 Wage Garnishment

[1] Procedure and Limitations

[a] California Law

Under California law, the judicial procedures governing withholding of wages from an employee's paycheck for payment of a debt to a third party are set forth in *Code of Civil Procedure Section 706.010 et seq.*ⁿ¹ known as the Wage Garnishment Law.ⁿ² Special statutory provisions govern judicially ordered wage assignments to secure payment of child, spousal, and family support,ⁿ³ which are referred to as "earnings assignment orders for support" in the Wage Garnishment Law.ⁿ⁴ In addition, as discussed in [3], below, the Labor Code contains provisions protecting employees from discharge whose wages have been garnished for the payment of one judgment or whose wages have been threatened with garnishment.ⁿ⁵

Except for proceedings by the state to collect a state tax liabilityⁿ⁶ and certain support proceedings,ⁿ⁷ California law only permits garnishment of wages to enforce a judgment.ⁿ⁸ Wages are exempt from pre-judgment attachment.ⁿ⁹

The procedures for withholding of wages to enforce judgments under California law apply to all "earnings," which are defined as any compensation payable by an employer to an employee for personal services performed by the employee, whether denominated as wages, salary, commission, bonus, or otherwise.ⁿ¹⁰ An employee for purposes of these provisions includes any individual who performs services subject to the right of the employer to control both what shall be done and how it shall be done.ⁿ¹¹

The Judicial Council has promulgated official forms for all applications, notices, claims, claims of exemption, orders, and other documents required under the Wage Garnishment Law.ⁿ¹² Use of the Judicial Council forms is mandatory.ⁿ¹³ The forms most applicable to employers are reproduced in [2], below. For blank copies of all Judicial Council wage garnishment forms suitable for reproduction and use, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Judicial Council Forms, Volume I, Part D (Matthew Bender).

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

The California Judicial Council forms pertaining to garnishment are well-drafted. Each includes detailed instructions. Counsel who are asked to address technical or practical questions regarding the procedures for responding to wage garnishment orders are advised to consult both the forms and the Code of Civil Procedure. Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

Enforcement of a judgment or a state tax liability from the earnings of an employee is accomplished by service of an "earnings withholding order" on the employer.ⁿ¹⁴ On being served with an earnings withholding order, the employer must give notice of the order to the employee as required by statute,ⁿ¹⁵ complete and mail a return form to the levying officer specified in the order,ⁿ¹⁶ withhold the specified amounts from the employee's wages until the order terminates as specified by law,ⁿ¹⁷ and pay the amounts withheld to the levying officer.ⁿ¹⁸ The official Judicial Council form of earnings withholding order contains detailed instructions for the employer on the reverse side.ⁿ¹⁹ Failure to withhold and pay over the amounts specified in the order may result in civil and criminal liability.ⁿ²⁰

If more than one order is served on an employer with respect to the same employee, the statute sets forth the rules governing priority of orders, based on the type of order, date of service, and date of judgment.ⁿ²¹ The rules of priority are explained on the Judicial Council form of employer's return.ⁿ²²

The Wage Garnishment Law also contains limitations on the amount of wages per workweek that may be subject to garnishment.ⁿ²³ The Wage Garnishment Law incorporates limitations set forth in the federal Consumer Credit Protection Act,ⁿ²⁴ except that the California statute provides for more limited garnishment of wages for payment of support or state taxes than is permitted under the federal law.ⁿ²⁵ An explanation of these rules and of the amounts to be withheld is printed on the reverse side of the Judicial Council earnings withholding order forms.ⁿ²⁶ Under certain circumstances, the employee may be entitled to obtain an additional exemption, thereby further reducing the amount withheld, if he or she can establish that an additional amount is required for his or her own support or for the support of family members who rely on the employee for support.ⁿ²⁷

Service of an earnings withholding order creates a lien not only on the earnings of the judgment debtor-employee that are required to be withheld but also on all property of the employer that is subject to enforcement of a money judgment in an amount equal to the amount required to be withheld under the order.ⁿ²⁸ The lien continues for a period of one year from the date that the earnings become payable to the employee unless the amount required to be withheld pursuant to the order is paid as required by law.ⁿ²⁹

A detailed description of the procedures for garnishment of wages is beyond the scope of this chapter. For full treatment of this topic, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, "Garnishment."

[b] Federal Law

Federal law also contains restrictions on garnishment of wages, as part of the Consumer Credit Protection Act.ⁿ³⁰ Enacted pursuant to Congress' general power to regulate interstate commerce and to establish uniform bankruptcy laws,ⁿ³¹ the federal provisions limit the amount of wages that may be garnished per week to a specified percentage of an employee's "disposable earnings,"ⁿ³² which are defined as that part of an individual's earnings remaining after the deduction from those earnings of any amounts required by law to be withheld,ⁿ³³ such as income, social security, and other withholding taxes.ⁿ³⁴ The Act provides for a separate, higher limitation on the amount that may be withheld from an employee's wages pursuant to a court order for support.ⁿ³⁵

The Consumer Credit Protection Act does not limit the amounts that may be withheld under a federal court order pursuant to Chapter 13 of the federal bankruptcy lawsⁿ³⁶ or for any debt for state or federal taxes.ⁿ³⁷ However, the Internal Revenue Code and Treasury Department regulations set forth limitations on the amounts that may be withheld for federal taxes,ⁿ³⁸ and the California Wage Garnishment Law contains limitations on the amount that may be withheld for California state taxes.n39

The Consumer Credit Protection Act is superceded by state laws that prohibit wage garnishment or that provide for more limited garnishment than is permitted under the Act.n40 As noted in [a], above, California's Wage Garnishment Law incorporates the federal limitations on amount by reference and in some cases provides for even more limited garnishments than permitted by federal law.n41

The Act also prohibits discharge of any employee based on the fact that his or her wages have been garnished for any one indebtedness, as discussed in [3], below. n42

[a] FORM--Earnings Withholding Order and Employer Instructions--General

[i] Comment

The Judicial Council's most recent official form of general earnings withholding order with accompanying employer's instructions is set forth in [ii], below. n43

CAUTION:

This form does not reflect 1996 and later changes in minimum wage.n44 The original and one copy is completed and served on the employer by the levying officer or a registered process server.n45 The contents of the order is prescribed by statute,n46 and use of the form is mandatory.n47 The levying officer or registered process server must also serve the form for the employer's return and the form of notice to the employee along with the earnings withholding order.n48 For reproductions of those forms, see [c] and [d], below.

The employer must deliver a copy of the earnings withholding order and the notice of earnings withholding order to the employee within 10 days from the date that the order was served on the employer, unless the employee is no longer employed by the employer and the employer owes no wages to the employee.n49 For detailed discussion concerning use and service of this form, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, "Garnishment." For a blank copy of this form suitable for reproduction and use, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, "Judicial Council Forms," Volume I, Part D.

If the withholding order is for child or spousal support, the Judicial Council Form of earnings withholding order for support will be served on the employer in lieu of this form.n50 For a reproduction of that form, see [b], below. In the case of state tax liabilities, the state agency uses its own prescribed form.n51

[b] FORM--Earnings Withholding Order for Support and Employer Instructions

[i] Comment

The Judicial Council's official form of earnings withholding order for support with accompanying employer's instructions is set forth in [ii], below. n52 This form is used to collect delinquent amounts payable under a judgment for the support of a child, spouse, or former spouse of the affected employee.n53 The original and one copy is completed and served on the employer by the levying officer or a registered process server.n54 The contents of the order is prescribed by statute,n55 and use of the form is mandatory.n56 The levying officer or registered process server must also serve the form for the employer's return and the form of notice to the employee along with the earnings withholding order.ⁿ⁵⁷ For reproductions of those forms, see [c] and [d], below.

The employer must deliver a copy of the earnings withholding order and the notice of earnings withholding order to the employee within 10 days from the date that the order was served on the employer, unless the employee is no longer employed by the employer and the employer owes no wages to the employee.ⁿ⁵⁸ For detailed discussion concerning use and service of this form, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Garnishment. For a blank copy of this form suitable for reproduction and use, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Judicial Council Forms, Volume I, Part D.

If the withholding order is not for child or spousal support, the Judicial Council Form of general earnings withholding order for support will be served on the employer in lieu of this form.ⁿ⁵⁹ For a reproduction of that form, see [a], above. However, in the case of state tax liabilities, the state agency uses its own prescribed form.ⁿ⁶⁰

[c] FORM--Notice to Employee of Earnings Withholding Order (Employee Instructions)

[i] Comment

The Judicial Council's official form of notice to employee of earnings withholding order (entitled "Employee Instructions") is set forth in [ii], below.ⁿ⁶¹ The levying officer or registered process server is required to serve a copy of this form on the employer along with the earnings withholding order and form of employer's return.ⁿ⁶² The form and contents of the notice are prescribed by statute.ⁿ⁶³ and use of the form is mandatory.ⁿ⁶⁴

The employer must deliver a copy of the notice along with a copy of the earnings withholding order within 10 days from the date that the order and notice were served on the employer, unless the employee is no longer employed by the employer and the employer owes no wages to the employee.ⁿ⁶⁵ For detailed discussion concerning use and service of this form, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Garnishment. For a blank copy of this form suitable for reproduction and use, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Judicial Council Forms, Volume I, Part D.

In the case of state tax liabilities, the state agency uses its own prescribed form.ⁿ⁶⁶

[d] FORM--Employer's Return

[i] Comment

The Judicial Council's official form of employer's return is set forth in [ii], below.ⁿ⁶⁷ The levying officer or registered process server must serve a copy of the return form on the employer along with the earnings withholding order and notice to employee of earnings withholding order.ⁿ⁶⁸ The contents of the return form are prescribed by statute,ⁿ⁶⁹ and use of the form is mandatory.ⁿ⁷⁰

The employer must complete the form and mail it by first-class mail, postage prepaid, to the levying officer designated on the form within 15 days from the date of service.ⁿ⁷¹ If the earnings withholding order is ineffective (because another order has higher priority or because the employee is no longer employed and owed no wages by the employer), the employer must send the order back to the levying officer along with the completed return form.ⁿ⁷² The rules governing priority of orders are summarized on the reverse side of the form. For detailed discussion concerning completion of this form, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Garnishment. For a blank copy of this form suitable for reproduction and use, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Judicial Council Forms, Volume I, Part D.

[3] Prohibition Against Discharge of Employee for Garnishment

Both state and federal law contain prohibitions against discharging employees whose wages have been garnished.ⁿ⁷⁴ Under the federal Consumer Credit Protection Act, an employer may not discharge an employee because that employee's earnings have been garnished for one indebtedness.ⁿ⁷⁵ Under this provision, if two garnishment orders are served but only one is effective, there has been only one garnishment, and any discharge would be unlawful.ⁿ⁷⁶ The penalty for a willful violation of the federal act is a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both.ⁿ⁷⁷ The Secretary of Labor is charged with enforcement of the Act.ⁿ⁷⁸ Numerous decisions have ruled that there is no private right of action to enforce the anti-discrimination provisions of the federal act.ⁿ⁷⁹ However, alternative causes of action may be available to challenge the termination.ⁿ⁸⁰

California Labor Code Section 2929 prohibits the termination of an employee because the employee's wages were threatened with garnishment or because the employee's wages were garnished for the payment of one judgment.ⁿ⁸¹ This protection cannot be abrogated by contract.ⁿ⁸² This section was intended to aid enforcement of the above federal statute barring discharge because of one garnishmentⁿ⁸³ and is to be interpreted in a manner consistent with federal law.ⁿ⁸⁴

Unlike the federal act, the state statute provides a private remedy. Labor Code Section 2929 provides that unless the employee has greater contractual rights, his or her wages (in an amount not to exceed the wages earned during the 30 calendar days immediately preceding the date of the levy of execution on the employee's wage) shall continue as a penalty until reinstatement or for 30 days, whichever occurs sooner.ⁿ⁸⁵ The employee must give the employer notice of intention to make a wage claim under this subdivision within 30 days after being discharged, and, if he or she wishes the Labor Commissioner to take assignment of his wage claim, he or she must file a wage claim with the Labor Commissioner within 60 days after being discharged.ⁿ⁸⁶ The Labor Commissioner has the discretion to take assignment of wage claims under Section 2929.ⁿ⁸⁷ However, if a criminal prosecution based on the same discharge has been commenced for violation of the federal Consumer Credit Protection Act,ⁿ⁸⁸ the employee may not recover under Labor Code Section 2929.ⁿ⁸⁹

The employee's statutory remedy under Labor Code Section 2929 does not affect any other rights that the employee may have against the employer.ⁿ⁹⁰ Thus, an employee who has been discharged because his or her wages have been garnished or threatened with garnishment may also possibly have a common law tort or contract cause of action for wrongful termination. In that event, the terms of the statute do not affect the employee's cause of action; for example, the fact that the employee's wages have been garnished for more than one judgment (so that the statutory protection does not apply)ⁿ⁹¹ does not in itself preclude common law liability for wrongful termination.ⁿ⁹² For full discussion of an employer's liability for wrongful termination, see Chapter 60.

In addition to Labor Code section 2929, a statutory provision governing judicially ordered wage assignments of child, spousal, and family support prohibits an employer from using such an assignment as grounds for refusing to hire a person, for discharging or taking disciplinary action against an employee, for denying a promotion to an employee, or for taking any other action adversely affecting the terms and conditions of employment of an employee.ⁿ⁹³ An employer's violation of this provision may result in an assessment of a civil penalty of up to $500.ⁿ⁹⁴

The federal bankruptcy law provides additional protection for indebted employees who become involved in bankruptcy proceedings or who may seek the protection of such proceedings. Title 11 United States Code, section 525(b) provides as follows:

No private employer may terminate the employment of, or discriminate with respect to employment against, an individual who is or has been a debtor under this title, a debtor or bankrupt under the Bankruptcy Act, or an individual associated with such debtor or bankrupt, solely because such debtor or bankrupt--

(1) is or has been a debtor under this title or a debtor or bankrupt under the Bankruptcy Act;

(2) has been insolvent before the commencement of a case under this title or during the case but before the grant or denial of a discharge; or

(3) has not paid a debt that is dischargeable in a case under this title or that was discharged under the Bankruptcy Act.

CHAPTER 5 Administrative and Judicial Remedies Under Wage and Hour Laws

1-5 California Employment Law Scope

AUTHOR: By Susan Spurlark, J.D.

Scope

By Susan Spurlark, J.D. n SCOPE*

This chapter discusses remedies for failure to comply with wage and hour laws. Part A covers remedies under California law for failure to pay wages, including a discussion of the jurisdiction of the California Labor Commissioner and the Department of Labor Standards Enforcement, administrative proceedings under the California Labor Code, actions by the Labor Commissioner on behalf of employees, and civil penalties imposed under the Labor Code. Part A also discusses civil actions by employees for violation of the wage payment laws and the legal protection given to employees who file a wage claim or testify against an employer. Finally, Part A briefly discusses criminal sanctions and bond requirements that may be imposed against an employer who wilfully violates the Labor Code.

Part B discusses additional remedies available for failure to pay required minimum wages or overtime compensation under both state and federal law.

Recordkeeping obligations are discussed in Chapter 7. For discussion of remedies for violations of child labor laws, see Chapter 6. For an overview of the applicability of the various wage and hour laws, see Chapter 1.

Subpart 1. Generally

§ 5.01 Available Remedies

If an employer fails to pay contractually or statutorily required wages or fails to pay wages in the manner or at the time required by law, California law provides a number of remedial procedures.ⁿ¹ The two most commonly used remedial procedures are set forth in the Labor Code and lie within the jurisdiction of the California Labor Commissioner. The first procedure is set forth in Labor Code Sections 98-98.2 and is known as the "Berman" hearing procedure. It is discussed in Part A, Subpart 2, §§ 5.10-5.18. The second procedure, set forth in Labor Code Section 98.3, authorizes the Labor Commissioner to bring a civil action on behalf of an aggrieved employee for recovery of unpaid wages and penalties. It is discussed in Subpart 3, § 5.30.

State and federal law provide five other procedures to remedy violations of wage and hour laws. First, the Labor Commissioner is empowered by Labor Code Sections 210 and 225.5 to bring a civil action to recover statutory penalties for failure to pay wages due. This procedure is discussed in Part A, Subpart 3, § 5.31. Second, Labor Code Section 218 authorizes any individual wage claimant to file a civil action to recover wages due, either directly or through an assignee, on his or her own behalf or on behalf of a class of employees, and also to seek an award of civil penalties under the Private Attorneys General Act of 2004, Labor Code Section 2699 et seq. This procedure is discussed in Part A, Subpart 4, §§ 5.40-5.42 and Part B, Subpart 1, § 5.72. Third, Labor Code Sections 98.6 and 98.7, as well as provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act,ⁿ² provide administrative remedies for unlawful discrimination or retaliation against an employee or applicant for filing a wage claim or testifying against an employer with regard to a wage claim.ⁿ³ These remedies are discussed in §§ 5.50- 5.51 and 5.83. Fourth, the Labor Code contains numerous sections that provide for the imposition of criminal penalties and bond requirements on employers who violate the wage and hour laws. These provisions are discussed in Part A, Subpart 6, §§ 5.60-5.62. Fifth, state and federal law provide administrative and civil procedures specifically intended to remedy failure to pay mandated minimum wages or overtime compensation. These remedies overlap with, but are narrower in scope than, the procedures set forth above. The state administrative procedures are set forth in Labor Code Sections 1193.5-1197.1 and are discussed in Part B, Subpart 1, §§ 5.70-5.71. The federal administrative procedures are set forth in the Fair Labor Standards Actⁿ⁴ and are discussed in Part B, Subpart 2, § 5.81. Civil actions for failure to pay minimum wages or overtime are discussed in § 5.72 (state actions) and § 5.82 (federal actions).

Part A. REMEDIES FOR FAILURE TO PAY WAGES GENERALLY
Subpart 1. Generally

1-5 California Employment Law § 5.02

§ 5.02 Jurisdiction of Labor Commissioner Over Administrative Claims

[1] Jurisdiction

[a] In General

The California Labor Commissioner is the Chief of the Division of Labor Standards Enforcement (DLSE).ⁿ¹ The DLSE, under the direction of the Labor Commissioner, is responsible for enforcement of all provisions of the Labor Code unless jurisdiction is specifically vested in another officer, board, or commission.ⁿ² The DLSE's jurisdiction includes all laws and penalties relating to the payment of minimum wages and overtime compensation,ⁿ³ the time and manner of payment of wages,ⁿ⁴ collection of unpaid wages and benefits,ⁿ⁵ and discrimination against wage claimants and witnesses in wage claim proceedings.ⁿ⁶ The DLSE also enforces child labor restrictions under the Labor Code.ⁿ⁷

The Labor Commissioner's jurisdiction does not limit the authority of prosecuting attorneys of the cities and/or counties and affected employees or their assignees to prosecute civil and/or criminal actions for violations of Labor Code Section 200 et seq., governing payment of wages.ⁿ⁸ For discussion of civil actions by employees, see §§ 5.40-5.41; for discussion of ERISA preemption, see § 2.06[4][a].

[b] Wage Disputes Involving Application of Collective Bargaining Agreements

The Labor Code provides that the Labor Commissioner does not have jurisdiction over wage disputes involving the interpretation or application of collective bargaining agreements that provide for arbitration.ⁿ⁹ The Labor Commissioner has in the past interpreted this rule as precluding its adjudication of such wage disputes,ⁿ¹⁰ and has adopted a policy of declining to enforce any state-law claims by employees covered by collective bargaining agreements if those claims involve relief based on the employee's wage rate, as set forth in the agreement.ⁿ¹¹ However, in Livadas v. Bradshaw,ⁿ¹² the United States Supreme Court held that the National Labor Relations Act (NLRA) preempts this policy because the policy penalizes an employee's right to bargain collectively with his or her employer. The Court reasoned that the policy presents the employee with the "unappetizing choice" of either enforcing his or her rights under state law or exercising the right under the NLRA to enter into a collective-bargaining agreement with an arbitration clause.ⁿ¹³ The employee in Livadas claimed that her employer had not paid the wages owed her on discharge, as required by Labor Code Section 201, and that she was therefore entitled to the penalty provided under Labor Code Section 203, namely the continuation of her daily wages at the same rate until the wages due on discharge were paid or an action was commenced, but for no more than 30 days.ⁿ¹⁴ The Court rejected the Commissioner's argument that determining the "same rate" required interpretation and application of the employee's collective bargaining agreement, noting that deciding the validity of the employee's claim required reference not to the terms of the agreement but to a calendar.ⁿ¹⁵

According to the Labor Commissioner, the Court in Livadas did not open the door to unlimited adjudication by the DLSE of claims filed by employees covered by collective bargaining agreements containing arbitration clauses, but neither did the Court offer any guidelines in determining when adjudication by the DLSE is precluded.ⁿ¹⁶ However, following a more recent United States Supreme Court decision regarding whether an employee's claim is independent of a collective bargaining agreement and can be resolved or enforced without interpretation of the agreement,ⁿ¹⁷ the Labor Commissioner has issued interim guidelines to be used by all DLSE personnel until new written directives are issued.ⁿ¹⁸ Under these guidelines, the DLSE will not reject any claim solely because the claimant's employment was covered by the terms of a collective bargaining agreement.ⁿ¹⁹ The guidelines outline the procedures for handling (1) claims that clearly indicate that a collective bargaining agreement covers the employment, (2) situations in which the existence of a collective bargaining agreement is not initially clear, and (3) situations in which the resolution of the meaning of the agreement's terms is the subject of dispute.ⁿ²⁰ The guidelines also prescribe the role of DLSE attorneys in reviewing this type of case, and require DLSE legal staff to address the following issues: (1) whether the claim is based on a state law right; (2) whether the state law right is a minimum standard that cannot be bargained away; (3) whether the state law claim is independent of the collective bargaining agreement; and (4) whether the collective bargaining agreement is the only source of the claimant's right.ⁿ²¹ The guidelines give the following examples of how the DLSE will treat cases of this type:

■ ILLUSTRATION 1:

X, a union-represented employee, claims that her former employer delayed three days in making her final wage payment. The employer does not dispute X's rate of pay, hours worked, or when it paid X's final wages. The DLSE may proceed with X's claim for waiting time penalties.ⁿ²²

■ ILLUSTRATION 2:

Y, a union-represented employee, claims that he was entitled to a wage of $8 per hour. His employer claims that Y was only entitled to $7 per hour under the collective bargaining agreement, and therefore made a full and immediate final wage payment to Y based on the $7 per hour rate. Because the only dispute is whether Y is entitled to $7 per hour or $8 per hour, the DLSE must hold Y's claim in abeyance until the parties reach a final resolution of the wage-rate issue under the collective bargaining agreement. If the arbitrator concludes that Y was only entitled to $7 per hour, the employer is not liable for any penalties. If the arbitrator concludes that Y was entitled to $8 per hour, the DLSE may proceed with Y's claim for penalties after receiving a definitive resolution of the contractual issues.ⁿ²³

■ ILLUSTRATION 3

Z, a union-represented employee, claims that she is entitled to a rate of pay of $8 per hour. Z's employer has not paid her any final wages for thirty days. Z's employer admits that it owes Z wages for her final pay period, but claims it only owes her wages at the rate of $7 per hour. The DLSE may hold Z's claim in abeyance so that the arbitrator may resolve whether Z was entitled to $7 per hour or $8 per hour under the applicable collective bargaining agreement. However, even if the arbitrator rules that Z is only entitled to $7 per hour (or the union withdraws or abandons the grievance), the employer will still be liable for penalties at the rate of $7 per hour. Under Labor Code Section 206(a), the employer had a duty to make immediate payment of all wages it conceded were due to Z, and the dispute over Z's rate of pay does not prevent the DLSE from enforcing the penalty claim at least as to the amount the employer has conceded was due.ⁿ²⁴

In a case involving claims for overtime compensation under federal and state law, the Ninth Circuit found that section 301 of the Labor Management Relations Act preempted a state law claim because resolution of the dispute required interpretation of the pay and overtime pay provisions in a collective bargaining agreement.ⁿ²⁵

[2] Types of Proceedings

[a] Generally

The DLSE may pursue one of two procedures for adjudication of wage claims filed pursuant to Labor Code Sections 96 (assignment of claims for wages and other benefits), 96.7 (wage and benefit claims which are not assigned), 98 (complaints for recovery of wages, penalties, and other demands for compensation), and 1195.5 (nonpayment of wages in excess of the minimum wage). The two procedures are (1) the "Berman" hearing procedure pursuant to Labor Code Sections 98-98.2,ⁿ²⁶ and (2) a civil action by the Labor Commissioner under Labor Code Section 98.3.ⁿ²⁷

Separate procedures are provided for the imposition of penalties paid to the State of California.ⁿ²⁸ In addition, there are special provisions governing claims of discrimination under various provisions of the Labor Code.ⁿ²⁹

[b] "Berman" Hearings

"Berman" proceedings are authorized in cases of complaints for wages, penalties, and other demands for compensation and may also be used where a claim is filed by the holder of a payroll check or other instrument returned for insufficient funds if the holder, after a diligent search, cannot return the dishonored check and recover the sums at issue.ⁿ³⁰ The proceeding involves an employee complaint, investigation, administrative hearing before a hearing officer, and decision and award by the Labor Commissioner.ⁿ³¹ There is a right of appeal with a hearing de novo by the court.ⁿ³²

"Berman" proceedings may not be used in the case of claims involving bankruptcies or probate; mechanics', loggers', or miners' claims; preferred wage claims under Code of Civil Procedure sections 1204, 1205 or 1206;ⁿ³³ discrimination and retaliation complaints under Labor Code section 98.6 (prohibiting discrimination as a result of filing wage claim or testifying in wage claim proceeding); cases involving discrimination or retaliation for engaging in certain other protected activities;ⁿ³⁴ other nonwage matters where criminal or civil citations are used (such as violations of child labor laws, itemized wage and deduction statement violations, matters involving unlicensed contractors, health and welfare benefits, and payday violations); and anonymous or confidential complaints of Industrial Welfare Commission wage order violations.ⁿ³⁵

"Berman" proceedings are discussed in depth in Subpart 2, §§ 5.10-5.18.

[c] Civil Actions Under Labor Code Section 98.3

Under Labor Code section 98.3, following an investigation and/or "hearing" conducted by an assigned Deputy Labor Commissioner, a civil action may be brought by the Labor Commissioner on behalf of the claimant.ⁿ³⁶ Generally, the Labor Commissioner is authorized to bring suit under section 98.3 when the employee has a valid claim and cannot afford to employ counsel.ⁿ³⁷ However, authority exists for the Labor Commissioner to prosecute actions on behalf of employees in other circumstances.ⁿ³⁸ These proceedings are discussed in Subpart 3, §§ 5.30-5.32.

[3] Investigatory Powers

The Labor Commissioner's authority to conduct investigations is delineated in the Labor Code. The code gives the Labor Commissioner and his deputies and agents "free access to all places of labor" to conduct investigations.ⁿ³⁹

Refusal of such admission or a willful failure to furnish the Labor Commissioner with statistics or information is a misdemeanor, which is punishable by a fine of up to $1000.ⁿ⁴⁰ In the course of its investigation, the Commissioner or other DLSE employees may inspect or make excerpts from books, reports, contracts, payrolls, documents, or other papers relating to employees.ⁿ⁴¹

In addition, the Labor Commissioner may issue subpoenas to compel the attendance of witnesses or production of records; administer oaths; examine witnesses under oath; take verifications, acknowledgments, or proofs of written instruments; and take depositions and affidavits in order to carry out the provisions of the Labor Code and other laws within the jurisdiction of the DLSE.ⁿ⁴² Obedience to subpoenas issued by the Labor Commissioner is enforced by the courts.ⁿ⁴³ The DLSE's subpoena power extends to records necessary to determine whether the employer or entity is subject to the DLSE's jurisdiction and whether there has been a violation of provisions that the DLSE is authorized to regulate.ⁿ⁴⁴ For example, in a case involving the issue of whether an employer maintaining a Voluntary Employees' Beneficiary Association Trust (VEBA) was subject to California law governing payment of accrued vacation time,ⁿ⁴⁵ the DLSE was entitled to subpoena all of the following items filed or maintained by the VEBA: (1) IRS exempt organization returns; (2) IRS employee benefit plan returns; (3) IRS applications for recognition of exemption; (4) California Franchise Tax Board exempt organization returns and applications; (5) the plan description and summary plan description; (6) annual reports; (7) bank statements reflecting all receipts and disbursements; and, (8) all written guidelines, manuals, policy memos, or employee handbooks provided by the employer or the VEBA to employees regarding the establishment, funding, or operation of the VEBA.ⁿ⁴⁶

Officers and employees of the DLSE may be designated as peace officers with the authority to make arrests, serve processes and notices throughout the state, and in some instances to carry firearms.ⁿ⁴⁷ DLSE employees who are not peace officers may make arrests without a warrant if a person, in their presence, violates any law that the DLSE is authorized to enforce, or if there is probable cause to believe that such laws have been violated.ⁿ⁴⁸

Limitations have been placed on the DLSE's investigatory authority, particularly when access to an employer's premises is sought. The Labor Commissioner has established the following policies regarding inspections of employer premises:ⁿ⁴⁹

1. The Labor Commissioner (or other authorized DLSE employees) may have free access, without consent, to public areas of an employer's premises;
2. Consent is required for entry into nonpublic areas of an employer's premises, whether for inspection of records or other inspections;ⁿ⁵⁰
3. Consent cannot be coerced by intimidation or color of legal right. The Labor Commissioner may not cite Labor Code sections 90, 1174, or 1175 as authority for an inspection of a nonpublic area of the work place;
4. If consent is withheld or an inspection is refused on request, an administrative search warrant must be obtained if an actual inspection of the premises is desired;ⁿ⁵¹
5. In order to review books and records, a subpoena duces tecum issued pursuant to Labor Code section 92 should be used. If the subpoena is issued by the DLSE, it cannot refer to criminal penalties for disobedience;
6. Inspections pursuant to administrative search warrants may not be made between 6 p.m. of any day and 8 a.m. of the succeeding day, in the absence of the employer or his or her representative, and there may be no forcible entry, unless there is a compelling reason and such inspection is authorized by the judge issuing the warrant;

7. And, if prior consent for the inspection has been refused, notice that a warrant has issued must be given at least 24 hours in advance of execution, unless the judge for good cause orders otherwise.

The use of subpoenas issued pursuant to Labor Code section 92, which threatened criminal prosecution under Labor Code section 93 in the event of noncompliance, was challenged in California Restaurant Assn. v. Henning.ⁿ⁵² In that case, the court of appeal held that Labor Code section 93 is unconstitutional on its face and as applied "because it provides for strict criminal liability in the event a subpoenaed party refuses to surrender his rights against unreasonable searches and seizures without a prior judicial validation of the subpoena as required by the Fourth Amendment."ⁿ⁵³ In the face of this ruling, the Labor Commissioner has advised DLSE staff that the DLSE can no longer file criminal complaints against an employer who has willfully ignored a subpoena issued by the Labor Commissioner pursuant to Labor Code section 92.ⁿ⁵⁴ Investigatory subpoenas may, however, be issued pursuant to Labor Code section 74 and are enforceable by the courts.ⁿ⁵⁵

The California Supreme Court has rejected constitutional challenges to judicial enforcement of administrative subpoenas issued by the DLSE under Labor Code section 74 that order employers to produce wage and hour records required to be maintained under Labor Code section 1174.ⁿ⁵⁶ The Court held that judicial enforcement of such subpoenas violates neither the Fourth Amendment proscription against unreasonable searches and seizures nor the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination.ⁿ⁵⁷

Subpart 2. "Berman" Hearings (Labor Code Sections 98-98.2)

1-5 California Employment Law § 5.10

AUTHOR: By Susan Spurlark, J.D.

§ 5.10 Initial Investigation and Processing of Employee Complaints

■ PRACTICE TIP:

Most of the administrative procedures utilized by the Labor Commissioner and the DLSE are not described in regulations or official bulletins of that department. However, the DLSE's Operations and Procedures Manuals contain detailed guidelines for the DLSE's staff in handling wage claims and administrative hearings, particularly under the "Berman" procedure. Description of DLSE procedures contained in this subpart are based in part on the guidelines in those manuals. Counsel may wish to check with the DLSE in case of doubt about current procedures. Commentary by Susan Spurlark.

Labor Code section 98(a) authorizes the Labor Commissioner to investigate employee complaints for unpaid wages, penalties, and other compensation. The powers of the Labor Commissioner with regard to the investigation are discussed in § 5.02 [3] and include the right to make inspections, subpoena witnesses and documents, and conduct depositions and other examinations of witnesses.n1

An investigation may be initiated by the claimant's completion of a form called the "Initial Report or Claim" (DLSE 1). That form assigns the employee's claim to the Labor Commissioner and allows an initial screening of the claim. Formal proceedings before the Labor Commissioner are subsequently initiated by completion and filing of the DLSE "Complaint" form (DLSE 530),n2 which is set forth and discussed in § 5.11.

After receipt of the initial claim, the DLSE may attempt to encourage the parties to settle the claim without the need for further investigation.n3 In addition, employers may be invited at the investigative stage to provide pertinent information and documents, and an informal conference may be held.n4 If settlement is not possible, within 30 days of filing of the complaint, the DLSE must decide to (1) conduct a "Berman" hearing pursuant to Labor Code sections 98-98.2; (2) pursue a civil action pursuant to Labor Code section 98.3;n5 or (3) take no further action on the complaint.n6

■ PRACTICE TIP:

According to its Operations and Procedures Manual, the DLSE treats the date of the execution of the "complaint" form (DLSE 530), and not the date of the filing of the claim (DLSE 1), as the significant date for purposes of the 30-day time limit for action set forth in Labor Code section 98(a). Commentary by Susan Spurlark.

Guidelines have been established to assist Deputy Labor Commissioners in determining which course of action to follow.⁷ The alternative of taking no action on the complaint is self-explanatory. The principal difference between the other two procedural alternatives is that a decision after a "Berman" proceeding under Labor Code sections 98-98.2 automatically becomes a judgment if not appealed or paid, whereas a proceeding under Labor Code section 98.3 requires institution of a civil action.⁸ However, as discussed in § 5.02[2][b], a "Berman" proceeding is not applicable or amenable to all situations.⁹ The guidelines suggest that complex unliquidated claims in which the claimant appears to be able to afford private counsel should not be processed by the Labor Commissioner at all and that a private civil action by the claimant should be undertaken.¹⁰ Once a decision has been made to proceed under Labor Code section 98 or 98.3, that decision may be changed if the circumstances warrant.¹¹

If the Labor Commissioner decides to conduct a "Berman" hearing, the hearing must be held within 90 days of that determination.¹²

Subpart 2. "Berman" Hearings (Labor Code Sections 98-98.2)

1-5 California Employment Law § 5.10A

AUTHOR: By Susan Spurlark, J.D.

§ 5.10A Statute of Limitations

The three-year statute of limitationsⁿ¹ applies to claims for unpaid wages filed under Labor Code section 98(a). In Cuadra v. Millan,ⁿ² plaintiffs sought back pay for the three-year period preceding the filing date of their claim. However, the Labor Commissioner argued that the statute was tolled from the date of their "Berman hearing."ⁿ³ Noting the frequently appreciable delay between the dates of filing claims for back pay and the dates of the hearings on such claims, the Supreme Court held that the Commissioner's policy constituted an abuse of discretion because it penalized employees who exercised their right to a "Berman hearing" and frustrated the remedial purpose of legislation entitling employees to all back wages due.ⁿ⁴

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

In Cuadra v. Millan,ⁿ⁵ the California Supreme Court has made it clear that employers should seek early determination of their Labor Commissioner claims. That is, back pay liability, if any, will be calculated up to three (or four) years back from the date that an employee files his or her underlying complaint, not from the date of the administrative hearing. Because the hearing can follow the filing of the complaint by months (and sometimes more than a year), there is significant value in agreeing to early hearing dates for claims that implicate ongoing liability. Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS
CHAPTER 5 Administrative and Judicial Remedies Under Wage and Hour Laws
Part A. REMEDIES FOR FAILURE TO PAY WAGES GENERALLY
Subpart 2. "Berman" Hearings (Labor Code Sections 98-98.2)

1-5 California Employment Law § 5.11

AUTHOR: By Susan Spurlark, J.D.

§ 5.11 Pleadings

[1] Pleadings Allowed

Only two pleadings are required in "Berman" proceedings; they are the complaint and the answer.ⁿ¹ These pleadings are to be in writing and must conform to the form and rules of practice and procedure adopted by the Labor Commissioner.ⁿ² Pursuant to that authority, the Labor Commissioner has promulgated a form for the complaint and answer in these proceedings.ⁿ³

[2] FORM--Complaint to Labor Commissioner for Recovery of Wages, Penalties, or Other Compensation

[a] Comment

The complaint initiates formal action on a claim for wages, penalties, or other demand for compensation.ⁿ⁴ It is based on information provided by the complaining employee on the "Initial Report or Claim" (DLSE 1). Although the complaint is often completed by the DLSE's staff, it must be signed by the employee making the claim.ⁿ⁵

The initial report and/or the complaint may be filed in any of the DLSE's district offices; however, it will be referred to the office for the county in which the compensation claimed was earned, or in which the acts complained of were performed, for investigation and hearing.ⁿ⁶ No fee for filing the complaint is prescribed by the code or by any regulation or rule.

The form of the complaint is prescribed by the Labor Commissioner and is found in standard form DLSE 530.ⁿ⁷ A copy of that form is set forth in subsection [b], below. The information required by the form is largely self-explanatory. The statement of amounts claimed required by Paragraph 4 of the form should include separate dollar calculations for all matters that arise from the same transaction in order to assure proper notice to the employer. The calculations may be put on a separate attached sheet of paper marked Exhibit A if there is not enough room on the complaint. If the claimant is a minor, the signature of his or her parent or guardian should be included.

The form set forth in [b], below, should not be used by merchants who seek to collect for dishonored payroll checks. A separate complaint procedure and form (DLSE 532) applies to such claimants.ⁿ⁸

[3] FORM--Answer to Complaint to Labor Commissioner for Recovery of Wages, Penalties, or Other Compensation

[a] Comment

A copy of the form of an answer to an administrative complaint under Labor Code section 98(a) (DLSE 531) is set forth in subsection [b], below. The answer is not filed until after service of the complaint and a notice of hearing.ⁿ⁹ In practice, the Labor Commissioner may also serve a Notice of Claim Filed and Conference (DLSE 563) prior to requiring an answer.ⁿ¹⁰

There is no requirement that an answer be filed.ⁿ¹¹ The question of whether to file an answer depends on the circumstances of the case and the strategy of the employer and its counsel. In determining whether or not to file an answer, defense counsel should note that the Labor Code places the introduction of evidence on matters not included in an answer within the discretion of the Labor Commissioner and provides for a continuance in order to allow the claimant to respond to the new evidence.ⁿ¹² The Labor Commissioner is ordinarily reluctant to grant continuances of hearings and may refuse to open up areas not pled, particularly if they are considered of marginal relevance.ⁿ¹³ On the other hand, if the employer fails to answer or appear at the hearing, no default may be taken and the employer maintains its right to file an appeal for a hearing de novo before the appropriate court.ⁿ¹⁴

The precise form of the answer is prescribed by the Labor Commissioner and is set forth in standard form DLSE 531.ⁿ¹⁵ As a matter of practice, the standard form of answer is usually served on the defendant at the time of service of the notice of hearing. The answer is completed by the defendant and should be filed within 10 days after service of the complaint and notice of hearing.ⁿ¹⁶ It is filed with the Labor Commissioner,ⁿ¹⁷ which currently forwards a copy to the plaintiff.

The standard form is largely self-explanatory. In the space provided (or on an additional attached sheet), the employer should state which allegations of the complaint it agrees with and which ones it denies. The answer should also set forth any affirmative defenses, either in the space provided or on an attached additional sheet. Some of the most common defenses are that the employer is exempt from the wage orders or requirements of the Labor Code; that the alleged employee is an independent contractor or otherwise exempt from the requirements of the wage orders or the Labor Code; and that the complaint is untimely. Other defenses relate to the imposition of penalties and are discussed in § 5.31.

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS
 CHAPTER 5 Administrative and Judicial Remedies Under Wage and Hour Laws
 Part A. REMEDIES FOR FAILURE TO PAY WAGES GENERALLY
 Subpart 2. "Berman" Hearings (Labor Code Sections 98-98.2)

1-5 California Employment Law § 5.12

§ 5.12 Voluntary Conference and Settlement Procedures

[1] FORM--Notice of Claim Filed and Conference

[a] Comment

The Labor Code does not provide for either a "notice of claim filed" or any "conference." These procedures have been developed pursuant to the Labor Commissioner's authority to establish procedures for investigation and resolution of wage and other monetary claims.ⁿ¹ Under this procedure, at the time the claim is filed or within 48 hours, the DLSE decides to either send the matter to a conference or directly to a hearing, and a notice of claim and of either a conference or hearing is sent to the parties.ⁿ² A copy of the Notice of Claim Filed and Conference (DLSE 563/PLT.) is set forth in [b], below, and is self-explanatory. If a conference is held, it is supposed to take place within at least 30 days of the notice.ⁿ³

If a Notice of Claim Filed and Hearing (DLSE 565) is served instead of proceeding with a conference, the form is identical, except for the title, to the Notice of Hearing (DLSE 533), discussed in § 5.13[2].

[b] Form Notice of Claim Filed and Conference

[2] Conduct of Conference

The conference is conducted in an informal manner by the investigating deputy Labor Commissioner, and the defendant's attendance is voluntary.ⁿ⁴ Its purpose is to attempt conciliation and, if that is not possible, to decide which of the following courses of action is appropriate: (1) dismiss the claim, (2) recommend settlement and advise of the consequences of failure to settle, (3) refer to a Labor Code section 98(a) ("Berman") hearing, or (4) refer to a Labor Code section 98.3 hearing.ⁿ⁵ In addition, the conference may also be used to resolve entity issues (that is, to determine which entity is liable for wages or other compensation claimed to be due).ⁿ⁶

If the employer does not appear for the conference, the deputy Labor Commissioner may further interview the employee and may dismiss the claim if the employee cannot make a prima facie showing of his or her claim.ⁿ⁷ If the employee does not appear for the conference, the complaint will be dismissed, unless good cause is shown for the nonappearance.ⁿ⁸ If the matter is dismissed, a Notice of Investigation Completed (DLSE 15) is used.ⁿ⁹

[3] Procedures on Settlement or Partial Payment of Claim

Under the DLSE's internal operating practices, as described in its Operations and Procedures Manual, if a compromise is reached or payment in full is received at any time before an order, decision, and award is issued,ⁿ¹⁰ the complaining employee is required to sign a release (DLSE 51) of the claims set forth in the complaint. If there is no mutual settlement and monies are received that reflect less than the total amount claimed to be due, the procedures depend on whether a hearing date has been set and whether conditions are attached to the payment. If no hearing date has been set and no conditions are attached to the payment, the monies are remitted to the complainant and only the remaining issues are tried at the hearing. If conditions are placed on the payment, the monies are placed in trust pending the hearing. If less than the full amount due is received after a Notice of Hearing (DLSE 533)ⁿ¹¹ has been served, the investigating deputy Labor Commissioner testifies about the date of receipt, the amount received, and any relevant circumstances during the hearing; the receipt of those monies may be reflected in an amended complaint if service has not been effected.

 Subpart 2. "Berman" Hearings (Labor Code Sections 98-98.2)

1-5 California Employment Law § 5.13

§ 5.13 Notice of Hearing

[1] Requirement

The "Berman" hearing must be held within 90 days after the Labor Commissioner's decision to hold such a hearing.ⁿ¹ However, the Commissioner may postpone or grant additional time before setting a hearing if the Commissioner finds that it would lead to an equitable and just resolution of the dispute.ⁿ² Once a hearing date is set, the DLSE must serve a notice of the time and place of the hearing on all parties personally or by certified mail.ⁿ³ A copy of the complaint, showing the amount of compensation requested by the claimant, must be served with the notice.ⁿ⁴

[2] FORM--Notice of Hearing

[a] Comment

A copy of the DLSE's Notice of Hearing (DLSE 533) to the defendant is set forth in [b], below; a copy of the DLSE's Notice of Hearing (DLSE 533) to the Plaintiff is set forth in [c], below. Both forms are self explanatory. They are prepared by the DLSE calendar clerk once the date of the hearing has been set and signed by the hearing officer. They set forth the place, date, and time of the hearing and are accompanied by a copy of the complaint.ⁿ⁵

If the return receipt for the plaintiff's Notice of Hearing is not received 10 days or more before the hearing date, the plaintiff is advised that if the notice is not picked up by a specified date, the matter will be closed without prejudice for lack of interest.ⁿ⁶ If the return receipt form for the defendant is returned unclaimed, the Notice of Hearing is sent to the plaintiff or others with instructions to arrange for service, and the matter may be taken off calendar if timely service is not possible; the plaintiff should check in these circumstances to assure that the hearing will take place as scheduled. Finally, if service on the defendant can not be effected, the file is returned to the investigating deputy Labor Commissioner and is rescheduled when service is arranged, provided the statute of limitations has not expired.

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS
 CHAPTER 5 Administrative and Judicial Remedies Under Wage and Hour Laws
 Part A. REMEDIES FOR FAILURE TO PAY WAGES GENERALLY
 Subpart 2. "Berman" Hearings (Labor Code Sections 98-98.2)

1-5 California Employment Law § 5.14

AUTHOR: By Susan Spurlark, J.D.

§ 5.14 Default

[1] Generally

No default can be entered against an employer for failure to answer the complaint and/or appear at the "Berman" hearing.ⁿ¹ In that circumstance, the Labor Commissioner is required to hear the available evidence and to render a decision based on that evidence.ⁿ² If the plaintiff fails to appear for a hearing, under the DLSE's internal guidelines, no hearing is conducted and the matter is dismissed without prejudice.

[2] Relief From Adverse Ruling After Failure to Appear

A defendant employer who fails to answer or appear because of lack of notice of the pendency of the proceedings may apply to the Labor Commissioner for relief from the Commissioner's decision or award.ⁿ³ If an application is made, the Labor Commissioner may grant relief in accordance with the provisions of Code of Civil Procedure section 473,ⁿ⁴ including setting aside any order, decision, or award rendered as a result of the proceedings and granting a new hearing.ⁿ⁵ This right is independent of the right of appeal under Labor Code section 98.2.ⁿ⁶

■ PRACTICE TIP:

There is no comparable statutory procedure for a plaintiff who fails to appear at a "Berman" hearing; however, under the DLSE's internal procedures, relief is afforded through the use of administrative dismissal without prejudice, which is to protect a plaintiff who unavoidably or excusably fails to appear.
Commentary by Susan Spurlark.

A defendant seeking relief under Labor Code section 98(f) must file an application form (DLSE 536) in the DLSE office where the hearing was held. The application must be filed within 6 months of the date of entry of the Labor Commissioner's decision.ⁿ⁷ A defendant who fails to appear may not seek relief from the courts because of alleged lack of knowledge of the proceedings or because "the findings or award ... are void upon their face" without first having exhausted this administrative remedy.ⁿ⁸

■ PRACTICE TIP:

Under the DLSE's procedures, a Stay of Execution of the Judgment is filed pending action on the application, and efforts to collect the judgment are halted.ⁿ⁹ A hearing is held on the application for relief on a priority basis and a decision is rendered on DLSE form 535(b). If the application is denied, the defendant can appeal; if the application is granted, a new hearing under Labor Code section 98(a) is held before a new hearing officer, as if no prior hearing had been held. Commentary by Susan Spurlark.

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS
CHAPTER 5 Administrative and Judicial Remedies Under Wage and Hour Laws
Part A. REMEDIES FOR FAILURE TO PAY WAGES GENERALLY
Subpart 2. "Berman" Hearings (Labor Code Sections 98-98.2)

1-5 California Employment Law § 5.15

AUTHOR: By Susan Spurlark, J.D.

§ 5.15 Hearing

[1] Hearing Officer's Role and Authority

A Labor Code section 98 hearing is presided over by a hearing officer, who is a deputy Labor Commissionerⁿ¹ other than the investigating deputy Labor Commissioner. The hearing officer has the authority to (1) issue subpoenas, (2) grant or deny requests for continuances or changes of venue, and (3) control the conduct of the hearing, including limiting the number of witnesses for corroboration and/or to establish a fact, excluding evidence, excusing witnesses, and determining the order of the presentation of evidence.ⁿ² Detailed guidelines for hearing officers are found in the DLSE's Operations and Procedures Manual.

As a matter of internal policy, hearing officers are encouraged to attempt to arrange settlement before conducting a "Berman" hearing.ⁿ³ If settlement attempts prove unsuccessful, the hearing officer will seek stipulations by the parties to eliminate unnecessary proof of any facts that are not disputed.ⁿ⁴

[2] Conduct of Hearing

The Labor Code provides that "Berman" hearings are governed by the DLSE and by rules of practice and procedure adopted by the Labor Commissioner.ⁿ⁵ Regulations adopted by the Commissioner provide that hearings are to be reported or phonographically recorded (by use of tape recorder).ⁿ⁶ Either party may request a copy of the transcript or recording, but the requesting party must bear all costs incidental to preparation of the transcript or recording.ⁿ⁷ If the hearing is transcribed by a party, a copy of the transcription must be provided to the Labor Commissioner, free of charge, within five days after the transcription.ⁿ⁸

The regulations further provide that the hearing need not be conducted according to technical rules of evidence, as further discussed in [3], below.ⁿ⁹ In presiding over the hearing, the hearing officer controls the order of the presentation of evidence and rules on matters concerning the conduct of the hearing and of the parties appearing.ⁿ¹⁰ All parties have a right, but are not required, to be represented by counsel.ⁿ¹¹

■ PRACTICE TIP:

Additional procedures governing such hearings have not been officially promulgated as regulations, but are contained in the DLSE's Operations and Procedures Manual. The guidelines provide for use of stipulations to expedite the hearing, swearing of witnesses, and explanations of proceedings at the beginning and the end of the hearing; they establish the order of the hearing so that the DLSE, the complainant, and then the defendant may present witnesses. Guidelines regarding amendments of pleadings during the hearing, use of closing briefs (which are not favored by the DLSE), and reports required from the hearing officer (Hearing Report--DLSE 539) are also provided. Finally, the guidelines suggest that requests by the parties to make their own tapes of the proceedings should be denied, but that the parties and their representatives should be allowed to listen to, copy, and transcribe the DLSE's recordings at their own expense and that inspection of the hearing file, other than the hearing officer's notes, by the parties or the public is acceptable. Commentary by Susan Spurlark.

[3] Evidence

The Labor Commissioner's regulations provide that proceedings in a "Berman" hearing need not be conducted according to technical rules of evidence and witnesses.ⁿ¹² Instead, any relevant evidence is admitted "if it is the sort of evidence on which responsible persons are accustomed to rely in the conduct of serious affairs, regardless of the existence of any common law or statutory rule which might make improper the admission of such evidence over objection in civil actions."ⁿ¹³

Oral evidence is taken on oath and affirmation, and each party has the right to call and examine witnesses, to introduce exhibits, to cross-examine opposing witnesses on any relevant matter even if that matter was not raised on direct examination, to impeach any witness (regardless of which party called that witness to testify), and to rebut evidence against the party.ⁿ¹⁴ The DLSE's Operations and Procedures Manual contains the only current guidelines regarding use of documentary exhibits and provides for their marking, identification, and efforts to resolve any objections by assuring a proper foundation for the evidence.

[4] Continuances

The Commissioner's regulations provide that continuances of a hearing are ordinarily not granted.ⁿ¹⁵ Continuances may be granted at the discretion of the hearing officer "upon a showing of extraordinary circumstances and good cause for continuance by the party requesting same."ⁿ¹⁶ However, under Labor Code section 98(e), a continuance must be granted to a claimant to review any evidence introduced by the defendant employer relating to a matter that was not pleaded in the answer (assuming that the hearing officer, in his or her discretion, permits any such evidence to be introduced).ⁿ¹⁷

■ PRACTICE TIP:

Under the DLSE's internal guidelines, continuances must be granted if the complaint is amended and may be granted if the hearing cannot be completed in the allotted time or if there is to be a submission of documents or briefs. Dates for any continuance or waiver of notice by certified mail are to be established on the record. Commentary by Susan Spurlark.

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS
 CHAPTER 5 Administrative and Judicial Remedies Under Wage and Hour Laws
 Part A. REMEDIES FOR FAILURE TO PAY WAGES GENERALLY
 Subpart 2. "Berman" Hearings (Labor Code Sections 98-98.2)

1-5 California Employment Law § 5.16

AUTHOR: By Susan Spurlark, J.D.

§ 5.16 Order, Decision, or Award by Labor Commissioner

[1] Generally

Within 15 days after the hearing is concluded, the hearing officer must file his or her order, decision, or award.ⁿ¹ The order, decision, or award must include a summary of the hearing and the reasons for the decision, as well as notice of the parties' right to appeal and of the consequences of failure to do so in a timely manner.ⁿ² In addition, there must be a statement of any sums due either as proven damages or as penalties.ⁿ³ Interest on any award granted accrues on all due and unpaid wages at the same rate as prescribed by subdivision (b) of section 3289 of the Civil Code.ⁿ⁴ from the date that the wages were due pursuant to Labor Code sections 200-452 until the date that they are paid.ⁿ⁵

After filing the order, decision, or award, the Labor Commissioner must serve a copy of the decision personally or by first-class mail on all of the parties.ⁿ⁶ If a claim is filed under Labor Code sections 98-98.2 against a person operating or doing business under a fictitious business name, as defined in Bus. & Prof. Code § 17900, the DLSE is required to inquire, as of the time of the hearing, whether the name of the person is the legal name under which the business or person has been licensed, registered, incorporated, or otherwise authorized to do business.ⁿ⁷ Prior to the entry of judgment on an award under Lab. Code § 98.2, the DLSE may amend an order, decision, or award to conform to the legal name of the business or the person who is the defendant to a wage claim, provided it can be shown that the proper service was made on the defendant or the defendant's agent--unless a judgment had been entered on the order, decision, or award pursuant to Labor Code Section 98.2(d).ⁿ⁸ Following such entry of judgment, the Labor Commissioner may apply to the clerk of the court that entered the judgment pursuant to the Commissioner's final order, decision, or award to conform the judgment to the defendant's legal name, provided that it can be shown that proper service was made on the defendant or the defendant's agent.ⁿ⁹

The Labor Commissioner cannot dismiss a claim after conducting an administrative (Berman) hearing.ⁿ¹⁰ The California Supreme Court has held that the Labor Commissioner is under no obligation to accept a claim, but that once he or she does so and conducts a Berman hearing, Labor Code section 98.1 does not give the Labor Commissioner the option to summarily dismiss a wage claim.ⁿ¹¹

■ PRACTICE TIP:

Under the DLSE's internal guidelines, the order, decision, or award, once issued, cannot be amended to correct an oversight or error in judgment. However, obvious clerical errors on the order, decision, or award can be corrected by the hearing officer before the date an appeal is filed or judgment is entered; the amended order, decision, or award is dated as the date of the original order, decision or award and is called "Amended Order, Decision or Award of Labor Commissioner (nunc pro tunc)." Commentary by Susan Spurlark.

[2] FORM--Order, Decision, or Award of Labor Commissioner

[a] Comment

The order, decision, or award is prepared by the hearing officer (the deputy Labor Commissioner).ⁿ¹² A copy of the standard form used (DLSE 535) is set forth in subsection [b], below.

As required by statute,ⁿ¹³ the form contains space for entry of the amount, if any, awarded to the complainant, and advises the parties of their right to appeal and of the consequences of their failure to do so. The hearing officer enters the name and address of the appropriate court for appeal at the bottom of the form just after the notice of appeal rights, next to the asterisk. The summary of the hearing and reasons for decision, as required by the Labor Code,ⁿ¹⁴ are contained on a separate formⁿ¹⁵ and are incorporated by reference in the form of order, decision, or award (DLSE 535).

[b] Form Order, Decision, or Award of Labor Commissioner

[3] FORM-Reserved

[4] Filing of Labor Commissioner's Order, Decision, or Award With Court Clerk and Entry of Judgment Thereon

If the order, decision, or award is properly served on the parties,ⁿ¹⁶ and no notice of appeal is filed within the period allowed for appeal of the award,ⁿ¹⁷ the decision or award is deemed a final order, in the absence of fraud.ⁿ¹⁸ Within 10 days after the order, decision, or award becomes final, the Labor Commissioner must file a certified copy of the final order with the clerk of the appropriate superior court of the appropriate county, unless a settlement has been reached by the parties and approved by the Labor Commissioner,ⁿ¹⁹ or unless the DLSE receives full payment of the award or ascertains that the defendant-employer has made direct payment of the award to the claimant within that period.ⁿ²⁰

On filing, judgment is entered immediately by the court clerk in conformity with the order, decision, or award.ⁿ²¹ The judgment so entered has the same force and effect as, and is subject to all provisions of law relating to, a judgment in a civil action.ⁿ²² For discussion of enforcement of the award after entry of judgment by the court, see § 5.17.

[5] Penalty for Failure to Pay Wages After Notice of Commissioner's Order

Labor Code section 206(b) imposes a penalty on an employer having the ability to pay who, after investigation and hearing by the Labor Commissioner, willfully fails to pay wages found to be due within 10 days of receipt of notice of wages due from the Labor Commissioner. That employer is subject to a penalty of treble the amount of any damages accruing to the employee as a direct and foreseeable consequence of the failure to pay, in addition to any other applicable penalty.ⁿ²³ Other penalties that may apply are those imposed by Labor Code sections 203, 210, and 1197.1

.n24*Labor Code section 206(b)* is not applicable if the employer takes a timely appeal from the decision of the Labor Commissioner.n25

[6] Interest on Unpaid Wages

In any action brought for the nonpayment of wages, the court must award interest on all due and unpaid wages at the rate of interest specified in subdivision (b) of Section 3289 of the Civil Code.n26 Interest shall accrue from the date the wages were due and payable as provided in the Labor Code Part 1 (commencing with Section 200) of Division 2.n27

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS
CHAPTER 5 Administrative and Judicial Remedies Under Wage and Hour Laws
Part A. REMEDIES FOR FAILURE TO PAY WAGES GENERALLY
Subpart 2. "Berman" Hearings (Labor Code Sections 98-98.2)

1-5 California Employment Law § 5.17

§ 5.17 Enforcement of Labor Commissioner's Award

[1] Generally

Enforcement of the judgment entered pursuant to *Labor Code section 98.2*ⁿ¹ may be accomplished "in the same manner as any other judgment of the court in which it is entered."ⁿ² Enforcement of such judgments has court priority.ⁿ³

The Labor Commissioner is required by statute to make "every reasonable effort" to assure that judgments resulting from wage hearings are satisfied, including taking all appropriate legal action and requiring the employer to deposit a bond as provided in Labor Code section 240.ⁿ⁴ Furthermore, to ensure that judgments are satisfied, the Labor Commissioner is now authorized to serve on the judgment debtor (i.e., the employer) a form similar to, and requiring reporting of the same information as, the form approved or adopted by the Judicial Council for use in small claims court proceedingsⁿ⁵ to assist in identifying the nature and location of any assets of the judgment debtor. The Labor Commissioner may serve this form personally or by first-class mail at the judgment debtor's last known address listed with the DLSE.ⁿ⁶ The judgment debtor must complete the form and deliver it to the DLSE at the address listed on the form within 35 days after the form is served on the judgment debtor, unless the judgment has been satisfied.ⁿ⁷ In the case of willful failure by the judgment debtor to comply with this provision, the DLSE or judgment creditor may request the court to apply the sanctions provided by Code of Civil Procedure section 708.170 (sanctions for failure to appear at judgment debtor's examination).ⁿ⁸

The Commissioner's guidelines for DLSE enforcement of judgments are set forth in a division management memorandum.ⁿ⁹ Generally, the Commissioner will accept assignment of judgments for collection if the defendant has known assets; however, the Commissioner and the DLSE will execute only on liquid assets (defined as cash or assets that may be immediately converted to cash, such as bank accounts and accounts receivable).ⁿ¹⁰ The Commissioner will also record the judgment with the county recorder's office in any county where the defendant is believed to have real property.ⁿ¹¹ If it is apparent that the defendant has assets, but the claimant and the DLSE are not readily able to locate those assets, the DLSE may schedule a debtor's examination to attempt to locate the defendant's assets.ⁿ¹² If all collection attempts prove futile, the DLSE will, at the end of six months, close its files and reassign the judgment to the claimant.n13

The judgment creditor, or the Labor Commissioner as assignee of the judgment creditor, is entitled to court costs and reasonable attorney fees for enforcing the judgment rendered pursuant to Labor Code section 98.2.n14

[2] Stay of Execution of Judgment

[a] Power of Labor Commissioner

Pursuant to Labor Code section 98.2(g), the Labor Commissioner may "stay execution of any judgment entered upon an order, decision, or award that has become final upon good cause appearing therefor." The Labor Commissioner may impose "terms and conditions" on the stay, if granted, and must file a certified copy of the stay with the clerk entering judgment.n15

[b] FORM--Request for Stay of Execution of Judgment

[i] Comment

A form for a request for stay of execution of judgment is set forth in subsection [ii], below. No particular form is prescribed for such a request and it may take the form of a letter or a pleading. The only circumstance where the Labor Commissioner has established procedures relating to a stay is in conjunction with an application for relief from default under Labor Code section 98(g).n16 In that circumstance, no particular request for a stay appears to be necessary; the stay (DLSE 541) is automatically entered when an application for relief (DLSE 536) is filed.

In other circumstances, the request for a stay also, in all probability, will be made by the defendant. It must include a showing of good cause in order to receive favorable consideration by the Labor Commissioner.n17 In addition, the proposed form contains information about the judgment which will assist the Labor Commissioner in completing the requested order. No time limit for such a request is set forth by the code, but it should be made immediately after the necessity arises in order to support the good cause requirement. The request should be filed in the office of the DLSE where the hearing was conducted, and proof of service should be shown on all other parties.

■ PRACTICE TIP:

In most circumstances, other than where an application for relief from default is sought, a request for stay of execution of the judgment will be unnecessary because the defendant will have appealed the award or decision and the judgment will not have been entered.n18 Commentary by Susan Spurlark.

[3] Satisfaction of Judgment

[a] Labor Commissioner's Power to Order Entry of Satisfaction

If the judgment is satisfied, other than by execution, the Labor Commissioner may, at the request of either party or on its own motion, order entry of satisfaction of judgment.ⁿ¹⁹ If a certified copy of such an order is filed with the clerk of the appropriate court, the clerk must enter a satisfaction of the judgment in its records.ⁿ²⁰

■ PRACTICE TIP:

Although the Labor Code appears to make entry of a satisfaction of judgment permissive,ⁿ²¹ the Labor Commissioner's internal guidelines require such entry on notice that the judgment has been paid either through the DLSE or directly to the plaintiff, and plaintiffs are instructed to report direct payments.
Commentary by Susan Spurlark.

[b] FORM--Request for Order for Entry of Satisfaction of Judgment

[i] Comment

A form for a request for an order for entry of satisfaction of judgmentⁿ²² is set forth in subsection [ii], below. No particular form is prescribed by the code or the Labor Commissioner. The suggested form contains all of the information regarding the judgment necessary for the Labor Commissioner to prepare the requested order (DLSE 542). The request may be made by either party, although it will most often be made by the employer who is the judgment debtor. There is no time limit for this request, but it is in the interest of the judgment debtor to have it entered as soon as the judgment has been satisfied. The request is filed with the Labor Commissioner in the office that conducted the hearing, and proof of service should be shown on all other parties. The employer should also assure that the satisfaction of judgment is filed in each county where a judgment lien has been recorded.

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS
CHAPTER 5 Administrative and Judicial Remedies Under Wage and Hour Laws
Part A. REMEDIES FOR FAILURE TO PAY WAGES GENERALLY
Subpart 2. "Berman" Hearings (Labor Code Sections 98-98.2)

1-5 California Employment Law § 5.18

AUTHOR: By Susan Spurlark, J.D.

§ 5.18 Appeal of Labor Commissioner's Award

[1] Right to Appeal and Time Limit

Labor Code Section 98.2(a) gives either party the right to appeal the award of the Labor Commissioner to the court, as a limited or unlimited civil case, depending on the jurisdictional amount. A limited civil case involves a claim for damages of less than $25,000; an unlimited civil case involves a claim for damages of $25,000 or more.ⁿ¹ The defendant need not have participated in the proceedings before the Labor Commissioner in order to prosecute an appeal.ⁿ²

Any appeal must be filed within 10 days after service of notice of the order, decision, or award.ⁿ³ If the order is served by mail, service is deemed complete at the time of deposit, but the 10-day period for filing the appeal is extended by 5 calendar days if the place of address and the place of mailing are both within California, 10 calendar days if either the place of mailing or the place of address is outside California but within the United States, and 20 calendar days if either the place of mailing or the place of address is outside the United States.ⁿ⁴ This requirement is considered jurisdictional and mandatory and is strictly enforced.ⁿ⁵ Relief from this time limit will not be afforded on the grounds of mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect.ⁿ⁶ In addition, Labor Code section 98.2(a) requires the appellant to serve a copy of the appeal request on the Labor Commissioner.

Once a party has filed an appeal for a trial de novo under Labor Code Section 98.2, no statutes or regulations provide procedures for withdrawing that appeal.ⁿ⁷ Thus, a non-appealing party can reasonably expect that it need take no action, such as a cross-appeal, to preserve its rights once the adverse party has filed a notice of appeal.ⁿ⁸ Conversely, the party that has filed an appeal does not have the unilateral right to withdraw its appeal by filing a request for dismissal, because this action affects the rights of the other party.ⁿ⁹ For example, an employer may appeal to the appropriate court for a trial de novo following an adverse decision by the Labor Commissioner.ⁿ¹⁰ However, that employer cannot file an appeal and then unilaterally request its dismissal because the dismissal could deprive the employee of participation in proceedings that potentially could lead to additional damages and reimbursement of attorney's fees.n11

Although the proceeding is referred to as an "appeal" in Labor Code Section 98.2(a), that section also provides that the case is to be heard by the court "de novo." Thus, as discussed further in [3], below, an "appeal" of the Labor Commissioner's decision is actually a full new trial conducted by the court on the evidence presented to it rather than a conventional "appeal" limited to a review of the previous proceedings.n12 The decision of the reviewing court, following a de novo hearing, is subject to a conventional appeal to the appropriate appellate court.n13

While the parties to the de novo proceeding are generally the claimant and the employer, the Labor Commissioner may intervene "where questions of the interpretation of statutes or administrative regulations are present."n14

[1A] Appellant Employer Must Post Undertaking

Whenever an employer files an appeal pursuant to Labor Code Section 98.2, the employer must post an undertaking with the reviewing court in the amount of the order, decision, or award issued by the Labor Commissioner.n15 The undertaking may be either an appeal bond issued by a licensed surety or a cash deposit with the court.n16 The employer must notify the other parties and the Labor Commissioner in writing of the posting of the undertaking.n17 If the employer ultimately owes the employee some amount pursuant to judgment, withdrawal or dismissal of appeal without entry of judgment, or settlement agreement and fails to pay the amount owed within 10 days of entry of the judgment, dismissal, or withdrawal of the appeal, or the execution of a settlement agreement, a portion of the undertaking equal to the amount owed, or the entire undertaking if the amount owed exceeds the undertaking, shall be forfeited to the employee.n18

An employer's failure to post the required undertaking does not deprive the trial court of jurisdiction to review an award issued by the Labor Commissioner on the employer's appeal. The requirement of an undertaking in Labor Code section 98.2(b) is directory rather than mandatory and jurisdictional. However, the trial court may promptly issue, either sua sponte or on an employee's application or motion, an order requiring the appealing employer to post an undertaking in a certain amount by a certain date or be subject to sanctions, including dismissal of the appeal.n18.1

[2] FORM--Appeal of Labor Commissioner's Award

[a] Comment

As discussed further in [3], below, a proceeding under Labor Code Section 98.2(a), although denoted an "appeal" is actually a trial de novo by the court.n19 The Labor Code, Code of Civil Procedure, and California Rules of Court provide no guidance regarding the nature of the pleading, notice, or other document necessary to initiate an "appeal" under that statute. In practice, the procedures vary from court to court. Some courts may require filing of a formal civil complaint, others may accept a copy of the complaint before the Labor Commissioner, while others may require a "notice of appeal" accompanied by a copy of the Labor Commissioner's decision (and possibly a brief). Counsel would therefore be well-advised to check the local court rules and contact the clerk of the court to determine the nature of the document necessary to initiate a de novo proceeding under Labor Code Section 98.2(a) in that particular court. One court of appeal has held that a notice of appeal under Labor Code Section 98.2(a) is not an initial pleading and therefore does not require the signature of an attorney. Thus, the court held that a corporate officer may sign the notice of appeal.n20 Note, however, that under subsequent legislation, if the appealing party is represented by an attorney, the attorney of record may be required to sign the notice of appeal.n21

The Labor Commissioner has promulgated a form of Notice of Appeal (DLSE 537), which it suggests using in appealing a decision of the Commissioner under Labor Code Section 98.2(a). A copy of that form is set forth in subsection [b], below. The form is modeled after the notice of appeal used in conventional civil appeals.n22 The form requests that the clerk of the court give notice of the date, time, and place of the de novo hearing before the court. A copy of the Labor Commissioner's order, decision, or awardⁿ²³ should be attached to the notice of appeal, if used. However, counsel should check with the particular court in which the appeal is to be filed before using this form because the rules of that court will govern the format of the papers to be filed,ⁿ²⁴ and some courts may not accept the DLSE form or may require additional supporting papers.

[3] De Novo Hearing by Court

Although a proceeding under Labor Code section 98.2(a) to review the Labor Commissioner's decision is referred to in the statute as an "appeal," the proceeding differs significantly from an ordinary appeal. Whereas a conventional appeal in a civil action is limited to a review of the record in the trial court, and the appellate court is precluded from retrying the case or reweighing the evidence, the reviewing court in an "appeal" under Labor Code section 98.2(a) hears the case "de novo"; that is, the parties literally receive a new trial.ⁿ²⁵ In the de novo hearing, the court may hear testimony, including entirely new evidence, and the decision of the Labor Commissioner is entitled to no weight.ⁿ²⁶ Rather than basing its decision on a review of the proceedings before the Labor Commissioner, the court decides the case based on the evidence presented directly to the court.ⁿ²⁷

In the de novo hearing, the court has discretion to consider wage-related claims not raised by the employee before the Labor Commissioner. Thus, for example, on the employer's appeal of the Labor Commissioner's determination that the employer was liable for unpaid overtime and waiting time penalties, the trial court had discretion to consider the employee's claims for rest and meal period and itemized pay statement violations, even though the employee had not raised them before the Labor Commissioner.^{n27.1}

The Labor Code, Code of Civil Procedure, and California Rules of Court provide no specific procedures for the hearing of Labor Code section 98.2(a) appeals. Since such an appeal involves a trial de novo in the reviewing court, the proceeding is generally subject to all of the procedures incident to any other trial in the particular reviewing court.ⁿ²⁸ However, the reviewing court has discretion to establish procedures for handling such cases to assure that the purposes of the wage claim statutes in providing an expedited proceeding will not be thwarted.ⁿ²⁹ Thus, for example, discovery is permissible in such proceedings, but the court may limit discovery under its inherent power to control actions in order to assure that use of that procedure is not inconsistent with the expeditious resolution of wage disputes.ⁿ³⁰

[4] Award of Costs and Attorney's Fees Against Unsuccessful Appellant

If the party seeking the de novo appeal is unsuccessful, the court is required by statute to determine the costs and reasonable attorney's fees incurred by any respondents and to assess that amount as a cost on the appellant.ⁿ³¹ The right to costs and attorney's fees does not apply if the party seeking the de novo appeal is successful.^{n31.1} The standards for determining a reasonable attorney's fee appear to be the same as in any other action.ⁿ³²

An indigent employee represented by the Labor Commissioner may collect attorney's fees when the appellant-employer is unsuccessful. Although the employee does not pay attorney's fees to the Commissioner for the representation, the fees have been incurred on the employee's behalf.ⁿ³³ Allowing such awards serves the legislative purpose of discouraging unmeritorious appeals of wage claims, thereby reducing the costs and delays of prolonged disputes by imposing the full costs of litigation on the unsuccessful appellant.ⁿ³⁴ The threat of statutory attorney's fees offers equal treatment to indigent claimants and those that can afford private counsel by equally deterring time-consuming and costly appeals by employers.ⁿ³⁵

For purposes of an attorney's fees award under section 98.2(c), a party who elects a trial de novo after the Commissioner issues a decision and award and is unsuccessful in the trial de novo is liable for the other party's fees and costs.^{n35.1}

The right of a party who chooses to pursue the administrative remedy under Labor Code section 98 et seq. rather than filing a civil action under Labor Code section 1194 to recover attorney's fees is governed by Labor Code section 98.2(c) rather than by section 1194. The trial de novo in superior court under Labor Code section 98.2(a) is not a civil proceeding contemplated by Labor Code section 1194.^{n35.2}

The right to recover attorney fees in Labor Code section 98.2(c) is limited to fees incurred on appeal from the commissioner's decision.^{n35.3} If the resulting trial court judgment is more favorable to the appealing party than was the administrative award from which the appeal was taken, the appealing party will not be liable for the other's fees and costs. Success does not require a complete reversal of the earlier award. In an employer appeal, an incremental reduction in the administrative award constitutes success. Likewise, in an employee appeal, an incremental increase in the administrative award constitutes success.ⁿ³⁶ An employee is successful if the court awards an amount greater than zero.ⁿ³⁷

In Smith v. Rae-Venter Law Group,ⁿ³⁸ the California Supreme Court disapproved the contrary views in Triad Data Services, Inc. v. Jackson,ⁿ³⁹ and Cardenas v. Mission Industries.ⁿ⁴⁰ Triad and Cardenas were both decided in the context of employer appeals, but stated a rule applicable in both employer and employee appeals. In those cases, the courts had held that the fee-shifting provision of Labor Code section 98.2(c) becomes operative only when the judgment of the trial court completely eliminates the Commissioner's administrative award. In Smith, on the employee's appeal, the superior court entered a judgment in favor of the employee nearly identical to the Commissioner's except for a $230 variance in prejudgment interest awards (based on the trial court's prejudgment-interest award on nonwage items, which the Commissioner was not empowered to award). The trial court then denied the employer's motion for attorney's fees on the ground that the employee's appeal was successful because he had obtained a judgment in his favor. The Supreme Court, however, declined to decide whether the employee's award of prejudgment interest on his nonwage claims rendered his appeal successful for purposes of cost and fee shifting. The Court held that because its decision was a clear break from the previously uniform application of the Triad and Cardenas courts' construction of section 98.2(c), its decision could not be retroactively applied to Smith.ⁿ⁴¹ However, the Legislature overturned the decision in Smith by amending Labor Code section 98.2(c) to provide that an employee is successful if the court awards an amount greater than zero.ⁿ⁴²

The provisions of Labor Code section 98.2(c) authorizing an award against an unsuccessful appellant do not authorize an award to a successful appellant.ⁿ⁴³ The purpose of the statute is to promote the finality of the Commissioner's awards and discourage meritless and unwarranted appeals by assessing costs and attorney fees against unsuccessful appellants. Thus, Labor Code Section 98.2(c) does not provide a basis for recovery of fees and costs by an employer that prevailed in its challenge to an adverse Labor Commissioner determination.ⁿ⁴⁴

Attorney's fees have also been assessed as costs as a condition of granting relief under Code of Civil Procedure section 473 from a default entered as a result of a party's nonappearance at a hearing de novo by the court.ⁿ⁴⁵ In the latter case, the court assessed the fees against the responsible attorney (the Labor Commissioner's office, who was representing the claimant) rather than the claimant himself.ⁿ⁴⁶

[4A] Award of Prejudgment Interest to Successful Employee-Appellant

Labor Code Section 98.1 provides for an award of prejudgment interest to an employee who is awarded compensation by the Labor Commissioner.ⁿ⁴⁷ One court of appeal has held that an employee who is unsuccessful before the Labor Commissioner, and who, therefore, is not entitled to prejudgment interest under Labor Code Section 98.1, is nevertheless entitled to an award of prejudgment interest under Civil Code Section 3287 (the statute providing for interest on damages generally) if the employee prevails on appeal in a judicial trial de novo under Labor Code Section 98.2.ⁿ⁴⁸

[5] Representation of Indigent Employee by Labor Commissioner in De Novo Court Hearing

The Labor Commissioner may, on request, represent a claimant who cannot financially afford counsel in the de novo proceedings provided for under Labor Code Section 98.2.ⁿ⁴⁹ Labor Code Section 98.4 further provides that the Labor Commissioner "shall" represent the claimant if the claimant "is attempting to uphold the amount awarded by the Labor Commissioner and is not objecting to any part of the Labor Commissioner's final order."ⁿ⁵⁰ Representation in the de novo proceedings includes representation in any further appeal.ⁿ⁵¹

The claimant must request representation by the Labor Commissioner.ⁿ⁵² A form has been promulgated by the Labor Commissioner for requesting representation (DLSE 553) and must be completed along with a "Statement of Financial Status" (DLSE 554). The language in those forms appears to ignore the Commissioner's discretionary power to provide representation when the claimant challenges some aspect of the decisionⁿ⁵³ and requires certification that the indigent claimant is satisfied with and does not object to the final order, decision, or award.ⁿ⁵⁴

The Labor Commissioner's decision regarding financial ability to afford counsel is discretionary, and there is a presumption that such discretion will be exercised conscientiously.ⁿ⁵⁵ The Labor Commissioner's decision in this regard is not subject to review in the proceedings that occasion the representation.ⁿ⁵⁶

An indigent employee represented by the Labor Commissioner may collect attorney's fees when the appellant-employer is unsuccessful.ⁿ⁵⁷

§ 5.19 Offsets of Unsatisfied Judgments

An employer must satisfy a judgment in proceedings under Labor Code Section 98.2 within 90 days after issuance of a final judgment or be subject to having the unpaid amount of the judgment offset against various amounts due to the employer from the State of California.ⁿ¹ These amounts include refunds of personal income tax, bank and corporation tax, and sales and use tax, as well as winnings in the California State Lottery.ⁿ²

To enforce these provisions, employers must provide the Labor Commissioner with identifying numbers at the time the judgment becomes final.ⁿ³ A corporate employer must provide the corporation's identification number issued by the Secretary of State, and an employer who is an individual must provide his or her Social Security number.ⁿ⁴

§ 5.30 Actions by Labor Commissioner to Collect Wages

[1] Generally

[a] Prosecution of Action Under Labor Code Section 98.3

As an alternative to conducting a "Berman" hearing and representing indigent claimants in a de novo court review of that proceeding, as discussed in Subpart 2, above, the Labor Commissioner and DLSE may also prosecute civil actions for (1) collection of wages, penalties, and demands of persons who (in the opinion of the Commissioner) have valid claims and are financially unable to employ counsel;ⁿ¹ (2) return of worker's tools that are illegally in the possession of another;ⁿ² (3) collection of wages and other moneys payable to employees or to the State of California arising out of the employment relationship or an order of the Industrial Welfare Commission;ⁿ³ and (4) recovery of wages or other monetary benefits that are owed to the Industrial Relations Unpaid Wage Fund.ⁿ⁴ The apparent intent of these provisions is to allow the Labor Commissioner to act in cases in which the procedures under Labor Code sections 98-98.2 are not applicable or would be impracticable (for example, actions to recover the cost of uniforms employees were wrongfully required to purchase,ⁿ⁵ class claims, claims involving bankruptcies, and claims of failure to provide itemized statements).ⁿ⁶

If the Labor Commissioner pursues a matter under Labor Code section 98.3, the Commissioner is not required to pay the normal filing fees.ⁿ⁷ In the event of a recovery, the amount ordinarily charged as a filing fee is assessed as part of the judgment and is paid by the Commissioner if sufficient money is collected over and above the wages, penalties, or demands due to the claimant(s).ⁿ⁸ Similar provision is made for payment and recoupment of other court costs, service of process fees, storage charges, and keeper's fees.ⁿ⁹

Although the Labor Commissioner is authorized to accept assignments of wage claims from employees,ⁿ¹⁰ the Commissioner may, after investigation and determination that wages or monetary benefits are due and unpaid to any California employee, also take action to collect unpaid wages and benefits without taking an assignment.ⁿ¹¹ If the Commissioner acts without taking an assignment, he or she acts as trustee of any wages recovered and must make a diligent search to locate the employees to whom those wages are owed.ⁿ¹² The wages collected must be remitted to the employees to whom they are owed, when located.ⁿ¹³ Until remitted, the collected wages are deposited in the Industrial Relations Unpaid Wage Fund.ⁿ¹⁴

[b] Investigation and Enforcement of Wage Claims Under Labor Code Section 1195.5

Labor Code section 1195.5 also gives the Labor Commissioner and the DLSE authority to investigate and enforce claims for wages. It applies when a claim is made that wages, which are conceded to be above the minimum set by law, have not been computed or paid correctly.ⁿ¹⁵ Representation does not appear from the language of the statute to be dependent on inability to afford counsel; however, like Labor Code section 98.3(b), Labor Code section 1195.5 does appear to include class claims.ⁿ¹⁶

Labor Code section 1195.5 provides that the DLSE "shall determine" the amount of wages due to the complainant employees and that the DLSE "shall enforce payment of any sums found ... to be due and unpaid," but the statute does not specify the procedures to be utilized in enforcing payment of such claims.ⁿ¹⁷ A decision regarding the procedures to be used would likely be handled like similar decisions involving other types of employee claims for unpaid wages.ⁿ¹⁸ The DLSE may proceed either by a hearing under Labor Code sections 98-98.2 or by a civil action under Labor Code section 98.3.

[2] Criteria for Taking Action on Behalf of Employee

The Labor Commissioner is authorized to seek enforcement of some claims under Labor Code sections 98.3 and 1195.5 without regard to the claimant's financial ability to afford counsel.ⁿ¹⁹ The statutory authorization to pursue claims for illegally withheld tools, claims of employees or the state arising out of an employment relationship or the Industrial Welfare Commission orders, claims for monies due to the Industrial Relations Unpaid Wage Fund, and claims for wages that have been improperly calculated or paid is not expressly made contingent on a finding of inability to afford counsel.ⁿ²⁰ In cases in which representation is dependent on inability to afford counsel,ⁿ²¹ the standards and rules are the same as those applied when an indigent claimant seeks representation by the Labor Commissioner in a de novo court hearing under Labor Code section 98.4, as discussed in § 5.18[5].

Subpart 3. Other Actions by Labor Commissioner

§ 5.31 Actions by Labor Commissioner to Collect Civil Penalties

[1] Penalties Imposed Pursuant to Labor Code Sections 210 and 225.5

Labor Code sections 210 and 225.5 provide civil penalties for violations of various Labor Code provisions relating to the time, manner, and place for payment of wages.ⁿ¹ Labor Code section 210 provides penalties for failure to pay wages in violation of Labor Code sections 201.3 (payments by temporary services employer), 204 (general provision for semimonthly wage payments), 204b (weekly wage payments), 204.1 (monthly payments to commissioned employees of vehicle dealers), 204.2 (payments to exempt executive, administrative, and professional employees), 205 (payments to agricultural and domestic employees), 205.5 (payments to other agricultural employees), and 1197.5 (wage discrimination based on sex). Labor Code section 225.5 provides penalties for employers who unlawfully withhold wages in violation of Labor Code sections 212 (dishonored checks and prohibited forms of payment), 216 (willful refusal to make wage payments when due), 221 (repayment of wages to employer), 222 (withholding part of wage agreed on through collective bargaining), and 223 (payment of less than the statutory or contractual wage). Under both statutes, the penalties are as follows:ⁿ²

1. For any initial violation, $100 for each failure to pay each employee; or
2. For each subsequent violation, or any willful or intentional violation, $200 for each failure to pay each employee, plus 25% of the amount unlawfully withheld.

There is an additional civil penalty for violation of Labor Code section 212 (dishonored checks) under Civil Code section 1719; this penalty is not enforced by the Labor Commissioner.ⁿ³

The Labor Commissioner interprets Labor Code sections 210 and 225.5 as allowing the DLSE discretion in determining whether a penalty will be assessed.ⁿ⁴ A DLSE interpretive bulletin states that "[p]enalties should not be assessed when there is evidence of a good-faith dispute, when the wages are paid as a result of a voluntary settlement conference, of if there is other substantial evidence of an absence of intentional violation."⁵ The DLSE defines an "initial violation" as any violation occurring after the operative date of the statutes (January 1, 1984), regardless of whether penalties were assessed; a "subsequent violation" is any violation that occurs after notice of a previous violation, regardless of whether penalties were assessed for the previous violation.⁶ A "willful or intentional violation," according to the DLSE's interpretation, includes all employment practices engaged in deliberately or knowingly, rather than accidentally or inadvertently.⁷

If penalties are sought, the Labor Commissioner is required to take the necessary civil action to collect the penalties; the action is brought in the name of the people of the State of California and the Commissioner is authorized to act on the people's behalf when bringing such an action.⁸ Alternatively, the Labor Commissioner may include a claim for penalties in a "Berman" hearing to recover unpaid wages⁹ if there is at least one underlying wage claim related to the penalty claim, or may file a civil action pursuant to Labor Code section 98.3.¹⁰ The DLSE's current procedures for handling claims under Labor Code sections 210 and 225.5 are set forth in Division Management Memoranda issued by the DLSE.¹¹ In an action to recover these civil penalties, the Labor Commissioner is not required to pay any court costs or service fees; however, if the action is successful, the cost of those fees are added to the amount of the judgment and are paid out of the first money received on the judgment.¹² Twelve and one half percent of penalties recovered is paid into a fund within the Labor and Workforce Development Agency dedicated to educating employers about state labor laws, and the remainder is payable to the state's General Fund.¹³

In addition to the civil penalties set forth above, the Labor Commissioner may seek criminal sanctions for violations covered by Labor Code sections 210 and 225.5.¹⁴ These actions may be taken in the case of "flagrant" violations and are initiated by filing a criminal complaint with the appropriate prosecuting attorney in accordance with the DLSE's internal procedures.¹⁵

[2] Penalties Imposed For Violation of Labor Code Section 226

[a] Imposition of Penalty

Labor Code section 226 requires employers to provide non-salaried, non-exempt employees, either semi-monthly or at the time of each wage payment, with itemized statements of:

- gross wages earned
- total hours worked
- the number of piece-rate units earned and any applicable piece rate if the employee is paid on a piece-rate basis
- all deductions made on written orders of the employee
- net wages earned
- the inclusive dates of the period for which the employee is paid
- the name of the employee and his or her social security number^{15.1}
- the name and address of the legal entity that is the employer
- all applicable hourly rates in effect during the pay period and the corresponding number of hours worked at each hourly rate by the employee.¹⁶

When an employer knowingly and intentionally fails to provide the required statement, the injured employee is entitled to recover the greater of all actual damages or $50 per employee for the initial pay period in which a violation occurs, and $100 per employee for each violation in a subsequent pay period, not exceeding an aggregate penalty of $4,000 and all costs and reasonable attorneys' fees in an action in the appropriate court.ⁿ¹⁷

An employer who violates Labor Code section 226 is also subject to a civil penalty of $250 per employee for each violation in an initial citation and $1,000 per employee for each violation in a subsequent violation for which the employer fails to provide a wage deduction statement or fails to keep the written records required by that statute.ⁿ¹⁸ In enforcing this provision, the Labor Commissioner will take into account whether the violation is inadvertent, and has discretion not to penalize the employer for a first violation if the violation was due to a clerical error or inadvertent mistake.ⁿ¹⁹ These penalties are in addition to any other penalty provided by law.ⁿ²⁰

The above civil penalty may be imposed by citations issued by the Labor Commissioner after inspection or investigation.ⁿ²¹ Citations must be in writing and contain a description of the nature of the violation, including a reference to the statutory provision that was allegedly violated.ⁿ²² As a matter of enforcement policy, the DLSE issues citations for "the maximum penalties attached to the violation(s) found to have been committed for a period of up to one year prior to the date of discovery of the violation(s)," and field personnel are not allowed to agree to or to attempt to negotiate a compromise of the civil penalty assessment prior to the issuance of the citation.ⁿ²³ The citation is either served personally or by registered mail in accordance with Government Code section 11505(c).ⁿ²⁴

[b] Contesting Penalty

An employer who receives a citation may contest the citation or the proposed penalty assessment by notifying the office of the Labor Commissioner listed on the citation within 15 business days after service of the citation that an informal hearing is desired.ⁿ²⁵

■ PRACTICE TIP:

While the form of the notice is not specified by the Labor Code, in order to avoid disputes, the notice should be in writing and served in a manner that records the time of delivery (for example, personally or by registered mail with return receipt requested). Commentary by Susan Spurlark.

The Labor Commissioner is required by statute to hold a hearing on the contest within 30 days and to render a decision at the conclusion of the hearing that either affirms, modifies, or dismisses the citation or proposed assessment of penalty.ⁿ²⁶ D.L.S.E. Division Management Memo. No. 88-5 describes the procedures for conducting such hearings. The hearing must be recorded on equipment that will produce an audio record of adequate quality to allow a Certified Shorthand Reporter to produce a transcript of the proceedings for use in the event of judicial review.ⁿ²⁷

The Labor Commissioner's decision must consist of a notice of findings, findings, and order, which must be served on all parties to the hearing within 15 days after the hearing by regular first-class mail at the party's last known address on file with the Labor Commissioner.ⁿ²⁸ Any amount found to be due by the Commissioner as a result of the hearing is due and payable 45 days after notice of the findings and written findings and order have been mailed to the party assessed.ⁿ²⁹ A writ of mandate may be sought from the appropriate court to review the Labor Commissioner's findings, as long as the party agrees to pay any judgment and costs ultimately rendered by the court against the party for the assessment.ⁿ³⁰ The writ must be sought within 45 days after service of the notice of findings, findings, and order.ⁿ³¹ However, pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure section 1013, the 45-day period is extended by 5 calendar days if the place of address and the place of mailing are both within California, 10 calendar days if either the place of mailing or the place of address is outside California but within the United States, and 20 calendar days if either the place of mailing or the place of address is outside the United States.ⁿ³² As in the case of any administrative mandate proceeding, the proceeding is not de novo, and the court reviews only the transcript of the hearing and any evidence introduced at the hearing.ⁿ³³

As a matter of enforcement policy, civil penalty assessments may be settled or compromised before, during, or after a hearing when the DLSE feels it is warranted by a "justifiable and substantial reason" and provided it is not based on any "practice of 'across-the-board' percentage reduction in penalties."ⁿ³⁴ Permissible reasons for compromise or settlement include (1) absence of bad-faith, culpability, or willfulness, and (2) excessiveness of the penalty under the circumstances (including the employer's financial ability).ⁿ³⁵

A person who does not contest a citation is expected to transmit payment of the penalty to the Labor Commissioner's office designated on the citation within 15 days after issuance of the citation.ⁿ³⁶

If no petition contesting the citation or assessment of penalty is filed, the Labor Commissioner may file a certified copy of the citation or assessment in the office of the clerk of the superior court in any county in which the person assessed has or had a place of business.ⁿ³⁷ Similarly, if findings and an order are made affirming or modifying a citation or assessment of penalty, the Labor Commissioner may file a certified copy of the findings and order in the office of the clerk of the superior court in any county in which the person assessed has property or has or had a place of business.ⁿ³⁸ In either case, immediately on filing, the clerk must enter judgment for the state against the person assessed in the amount shown on the citation, proposed assessment, or order, as the case may be.ⁿ³⁹ A judgment so entered bears the same rate of interest and has the same effect as other judgments and must be given the same preference allowed by the law on other judgments rendered for claims for taxes.ⁿ⁴⁰ The clerk may make no charge for entering the judgment.ⁿ⁴¹

[3] Penalties Imposed for Violation of Provisions Requiring Payment of Prevailing Rates to Public Works Employees

Labor Code Sections 1770 through 1774 require certain contractors and subcontractors on public works to pay the "prevailing rates of wages" and to comply with statutory provisions governing hours of work.ⁿ⁴² A contractor or subcontractor who violates those requirements forfeits not more than $50 for each calendar day, or portion thereof, for each worker paid less than the prevailing rates for his or her craft,ⁿ⁴³ and $25 for each worker for each calendar day that the worker is required or permitted to work more than 8 hours per day or 40 hours in a calendar week without being paid overtime compensation, in violation of Labor Code Sections 1810 through 1815.ⁿ⁴⁴ The amount of the forfeiture in cases of failure to pay the prevailing wage is determined by the Labor Commissioner and must be based on consideration of both of the following:ⁿ⁴⁵

- (i) Whether the failure of the contractor or subcontractor to pay the correct rate of per diem wages was a good faith mistake and, if so, the error was promptly and voluntarily corrected when brought to the attention of the contractor or subcontractor.
- (ii) Whether the contractor or subcontractor has a prior record of failing to meet its prevailing wage obligations.

The penalty may not be less than $10 for each calendar day, or portion thereof, for each worker paid less than the prevailing wage rate, unless the failure of the contractor or subcontractor to pay the correct rate of per diem wages was a good faith mistake and, if so, the error was promptly and voluntarily corrected when brought to the attention of the contractor or subcontractor. The penalty may not be less than $20 for each calendar day, or portion thereof, for each worker paid less than the prevailing wage rate, if the contractor or subcontractor has been assessed penalties within the previous three years for failing to meet its prevailing wage obligations on a separate contract, unless those penalties were subsequently withdrawn or overturned. The penalty may not be less than $30 for each calendar day, or portion thereof, for each worker paid less than the prevailing wage rate, if the Labor Commissioner determines that the violation was willful.ⁿ⁴⁶ The Labor Commissioner's determination of the amount of the penalty is reviewable only for abuse of discretion.ⁿ⁴⁷

When the amount due under Section 1775 is collected from the contractor or subcontractor, any outstanding wage claim under Chapter 1 (commencing with Section 1720) of Part 7 of Division 2 against that contractor or subcontractor⁴⁸ must be satisfied before applying that amount to the penalty imposed on that contractor or subcontractor pursuant to Section 1775.ⁿ⁴⁹ The contractor or subcontractor must pay the difference between the prevailing wage rates and the amount paid to each worker for each calendar day or portion thereof for which each worker was paid less than the prevailing wage rate. The body awarding the contract must insert in the contract a stipulation that the contractor or subcontractor will comply with Section 1775.ⁿ⁵⁰

If an employee of a public works project subcontractor does not receive the general prevailing per diem wages, the prime contractor is not liable for penalties unless the prime had knowledge of the subcontractor's failure to pay the specified prevailing wagesⁿ⁵¹ or unless the prime contractor failed to do the following:

1. The contractor and the subcontractor failed to execute a contract which included the provisions of Labor Code sections 1771, 1775, 1776, 1777.5, 1813, and 1815; and
2. The contractor failed to monitor payment of the specified general prevailing rate of per diem wages by the subcontractor to the employees by periodic review of the subcontractor's certified payroll records; and
3. Upon becoming aware of the subcontractor's failure to pay specified prevailing wages, the contractor failed to diligently take corrective action, including retaining sufficient funds due the subcontractor; and
4. Prior to making final payment to the subcontractor, the contractor failed to obtain the subcontractor's signed affidavit attesting to payment of the specified general prevailing rate to his or her employees.ⁿ⁵²

Within 15 days of receipt by the Division of Labor Standards Enforcement, the Division must notify the contractor on a public works project of a complaint of the failure of a subcontractor on that public works project to pay workers the general prevailing rate of per diem wages.ⁿ⁵³ The contractor and subcontractor are jointly liable for all amounts due pursuant to a final order or a judgment on a final order; and the Labor Commissioner is required to collect any amounts due from the subcontractor before pursuing the claim against the contractor.^{n53.1}

A subcontractor's employee on a public works project cannot sue the prime or general contractor on theories of statutory or contractual liability for the nonpayment of prevailing wages by the subcontractor (who is the employee's direct employer). There is no private right of action for enforcement by a subcontractor's employee against parties other than the subcontractor.ⁿ⁵⁴

In Lujan v. G & G Fire Sprinklers, Inc.,^{n54.1} the United States Supreme Court reversed, for the second time, the Ninth Circuit's holding that Labor Code provisions authorizing the state to seize money and impose penalties for a subcontractor's failure to comply with prevailing wage requirementsⁿ⁵⁵ violate the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. The Ninth Circuit had based its holding on the ground that the statutory scheme does not afford the subcontractor any prior notice or hearing.ⁿ⁵⁶ The Supreme Court held that California law affords subcontractors sufficient opportunity to challenge state prevailing wage determinations in breach-of-contract actions in superior court,ⁿ⁵⁷ thus refuting the claim of deprivation of payment without due process.ⁿ⁵⁸ In Mobley v. Los Angeles Unified School Dist.,ⁿ⁵⁹ the Court of Appeal criticized the decision in Lujan because of "serious limitations with the breach of contract avenue." However, the court recognized that because the enactment of Labor Code sections 1741 and 1742, effective July 1, 2001, clarifies that an administrative hearing on the merits must be afforded contractors and subcontractors who are denied payments under their state contracts for alleged violations of prevailing wage law, these issues may now be moot.

Until July 1, 2001, the following rules applied when employees were not paid the general prevailing wage on a public works project. When penalties or amounts due employees could not have been satisfied from payments owed to the contractor by the public agency awarding the contract, the agency was required to notify the DLSE of the violation.ⁿ⁶⁰ The DLSE, with the assistance of the awarding public agency, was authorized to maintain an action in any court of competent jurisdiction to recover the amounts due as penalties or wages.ⁿ⁶¹ The action must have been commenced within 180 days after the filing of notice of completion or acceptance of the public work, whichever was later.ⁿ⁶² The only issue in that action was the liability of the contractor or subcontractor for the sums alleged as penalties and wages, and the burden of proof was on the contractor to establish that those sums were not due.ⁿ⁶³ Any recovery was used to pay the workers first, and if the amount recovered was not sufficient to pay all of the workers, the amount was prorated.ⁿ⁶⁴ In addition to the penalties noted above, Labor Code section 98.9 required the Labor Commissioner to certify any "willful or deliberate" violations of the Labor Code by a licensed contractor to the Contractors' State License Board for appropriate disciplinary action.ⁿ⁶⁵

Effective July 1, 2001, the DLSE is required only to notify the contractor within 15 days of receiving a complaint that prevailing wages have not been paid to workers on a public works project.ⁿ⁶⁶

§ 5.32 Disputes Regarding Seasonal Laborers

The Labor Commissioner must hear and decide all wage disputes involving seasonal laborers, as defined in the Labor Code.ⁿ¹ No specific procedures are set forth in the Labor Code for such hearings. After the final hearing, the Labor Commissioner must file a copy of the findings of fact and award in the office of the DLSE, and the amount of the award is "conclusively presumed to be the amount of wages due and unpaid to the employee at the time of termination," subject to review by the courts.ⁿ²

When wages for "seasonal employees" are not paid when due, the Labor Commissioner must impose a civil penalty of no more than 30 days' pay as a waiting time penalty consistent with the terms of Labor Code Section 203 (penalty for failure to pay wages due on termination of employment).ⁿ³ The procedures for assessing and contesting those penalties are the same as those used for penalties imposed pursuant to Labor Code Sections 210 and 225.5.ⁿ⁴

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS
CHAPTER 5 Administrative and Judicial Remedies Under Wage and Hour Laws
Part A. REMEDIES FOR FAILURE TO PAY WAGES GENERALLY
Subpart 4. Civil Action by Employee

1-5 California Employment Law § 5.40

AUTHOR: By Susan Spurlark, J.D.

§ 5.40 Civil Action by Employee or Former Employee to Recover Wages

[1] Right of Action

Although many (perhaps most) wage claimants choose to utilize the administrative remedies described in Subparts 2 and 3, above, to pursue wage claims, claimants are not statutorily required to pursue their remedies through the Labor Commissioner. Labor Code Section 218 authorizes a wage claimant to bring a civil action, directly or through an assignee, to recover any wages or penalties due under *Labor Code Section 200 et seq.*ⁿ¹ In addition, agreements to pay an employee are contractual, and causes of action for breach of contract, an accounting, or declaratory relief may be added when wages and/or benefits are not paid consistent with the agreement.ⁿ² However, breach of contract and other state-law claims related to most employee benefit agreements generally are preempted by the remedies of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA).ⁿ³

An employee seeking only statutory Labor Code penalties that already were recoverable by employees prior to the adoption of the Private Attorneys General Act of 2004,^{n3.1} is not required to comply with the Act's administrative prerequisites before filing suit directly under Labor Code section 218.^{n3.2} Further, employees may rely on PAGA to penalize conduct that occurred before the statute went into effect.^{n3.3}

An employee's right to maintain a civil action to recover due and unpaid wages is unaffected by the existence of a private agreement to arbitrate.ⁿ⁴ However, if the wages are set by a collective bargaining agreement, claims must be submitted to any arbitration procedure under the agreement.ⁿ⁵ Furthermore, the U.S. Supreme Court has held that the Federal Arbitration Actⁿ⁶ preempts Labor Code Section 229 with regard to agreements that are covered by the Act.ⁿ⁷ Thus, if an employee is subject to an arbitration agreement covered by the Act,ⁿ⁸ he or she may be required to arbitrate a wage claim, notwithstanding Section 229.ⁿ⁹

Consistent with the strong public policy behind Labor Code Section 1194, employers cannot use class arbitration waivers to weaken or undermine the private enforcement of overtime pay legislation by placing formidable practical obstacles in the way of employees' prosecution of those claims. Thus, a trial court should not enforce class arbitration waivers in employment arbitration agreements that preclude class arbitrations by employees whose statutory rights to overtime pay pursuant to Labor Code Sections 500 et seq. and 1194 allegedly have been violated if the court determines, based on the following factors, that class arbitration would be a significantly more effective way of vindicating the rights of affected employees than individual arbitration:n9.1

- ☐ The modest size of the potential individual recovery.
- ☐ The potential for retaliation against members of the class.
- ☐ The fact that absent members of the class may be ill-informed about their rights.
- ☐ Other real world obstacles to the vindication of class members' rights to overtime pay through individual arbitration.

Further, a finding of procedural unconscionability is not required to invalidate a class arbitration waiver if that waiver implicates unwaivable statutory rights. But such a finding is a prerequisite to determining that the arbitration agreement as a whole is unconscionable.n9.2

Employees of charter counties may not sue under Labor Code provisions governing compensation, including matters such as overtime,n9.3 and meal and rest periods,n9.4 because charter counties have exclusive power under the California Constitution to determine the compensation of their employees.n9.5

[2] Statute of Limitations

[a] Generally

The general rules contained in the Code of Civil Procedure govern the time for institution of an action to recover unpaid wages after the claim has accrued.n10 A claim based on an oral contract must be brought within two years after accrual of the cause of action.n11 Actions based on a written agreement must be commenced within four years after accrual of the cause of action.n12 An action to recover a statutory penalty or forfeiture must be brought within one year of the accrual of the cause of action.n13 If a claim is included for waiting time penalties allowed under Labor Code Section 203, that claim may be brought within the time allowed for bringing the underlying claim for wages rather than the one-year period set forth in Code of Civil Procedure Section 340.n14 On the other hand, when the employee's action seeks only waiting time penalties (and not the accompanying wages), the one-year statute under Code of Civil Procedure Section 340(a) governs.n14.1

In addition, Code of Civil Procedure Section 338(a) provides a three-year limitations period for actions based on a liability created by statute, other than a penalty or forfeiture. One court of appeal has held that this three-year limitations period, rather than the two-year limitations period applicable to actions based on oral contracts, applies to an action to recover unpaid overtime compensation.n15 The California Supreme Court has held that the additional hour of pay required under Lab. Code § 226.7 for failure to provide a meal period constitutes wages, so that a three-year statute of limitation applies to actions to collect the additional pay. The court rejected the argument that the payment was a penalty to which a one-year statute of limitations would apply.n15.1 Additionally, employees may in certain circumstances pursue wage claims under the four-year statute of limitations contained in California's Unfair Business Practices Act, Business & Professions Code section 17200 et seq.

The cause of action for recovery of unpaid wages accrues from each payday or date when the required compensation was not paid.ⁿ¹⁶

[b] Vacation Pay Claims

As discussed in Chapter 4, an employee is entitled to payment for all unused, vested vacation time on termination of employment.ⁿ¹⁷ Because an employee has the right to be paid for unused vacation only after the employee is terminated without having taken off the vested vacation time,^{n17.1} termination of employment is the event that converts the employer's obligation to allow an employee to take vacation from work into the monetary obligation to pay that employee for unused vested vacation time.^{n17.2} When a terminated employee brings a claim based on vacation pay allegedly due, issues may arise regarding when the statute of limitations on such claims begins to run. The DLSE has taken the position that the applicable statute of limitations (either two years or four years)ⁿ¹⁸ is applied twice in such cases: first, to determine the amount of liability, and then to determine the period within which the claim must be brought.ⁿ¹⁹

For purposes of determining the amount of liability, the DLSE has stated that the statute begins to run as the vacation is earned or at the point when the employee is eligible to take the vacation, rather than at the date of termination.ⁿ²⁰ Thus, ordinarily, only vacation pay that accrued within the statutory limitation period prior to termination may be recovered on termination.ⁿ²¹ One court of appeal has held that an employee could claim payment only for unused time that accrued under a written contract during the four-year period preceding termination, even though the employee had accrued 12 years of vacation.ⁿ²² Another court of appeal disagreed with the DLSE, rejecting its dual application of the statute of limitations, and held that (1) A cause of action for breach of contract accrues for statute of limitations purposes only after there has been a breach of the contract, (2) the point at which vacation time is earned cannot be equated to a breach of contract and, therefore, (3) the statute of limitations applicable to contracts does not begin to run when vacation time is earned. Accordingly, the statute of limitations cannot be applied as a "look-back period" to limit an employer's statutory obligation to pay for all vested vacation time that an employee did not take before the employment was terminated.^{n22.1} The DLSE has also stated that if the employer has a policy or rule that precludes the employee from taking his or her vacation within the limitations period or that results in forfeiture of vacation during the term of employment, the statute of limitations will be deemed to be tolled and would not begin to run until the date of termination.ⁿ²³

As noted above, a cause of action to enforce the statutory right to be paid for vested vacation does not accrue until the date employment is terminated.^{n23.1} A cause of action seeking payment for unused vested vacation before employment is terminated will be dismissed as premature.^{n23.2}

There are three statutes of limitations that might apply to a claim by a former employee seeking payment for unused vested vacation, because the claim could be characterized as one based on (1) an oral employment contract, (2) a written employment contract, or (3) a liability created by statute.^{n23.3} A two-year limitations period applies to oral contract claims.^{n23.4} A four-year limitations period applies to claims based on written contracts.^{n23.5} A three-year limitations period applies to an action upon a liability created by statute.^{n23.6} The DLSE takes the position that once the employee is terminated, he or she must bring an action to recover the total amount of vacation pay due on termination within two years or four years after the date of termination.ⁿ²⁴

[3] Jurisdiction

The principal determinant of subject matter jurisdiction in state courts is the amount in controversy. Cases involving less than $25,000 are "limited civil cases,"ⁿ²⁵ and cases involving less than $5,000 generally must be brought in the small claims division of that court.ⁿ²⁶ Actions seeking equitable relief (e.g., injunctions, declaratory relief, or an accounting) are "unlimited civil cases,"ⁿ²⁷ except that an action for equitable relief that may be necessary to preserve the rights and property of parties to a limited civil case over which the court otherwise has jurisdiction is also a "limited civil case."ⁿ²⁸

State-law claims for failure to pay wages provided under a collective bargaining agreement or to provide employment benefits may be preempted by the Labor Management Relations Act (LMRA) and/or ERISA, respectively, and the action must be brought in the United States District Court.ⁿ²⁹

[4] Recovery of Attorney's Fees and Costs

In an action brought for the nonpayment of wages and other employment benefits, the court is required by Labor Code Section 218.5 to award reasonable costs and attorney's fees to the prevailing party if any party to the action requests attorney's fees and costs on initiation of the action. Labor Code Section 218.5 does not apply to (1) actions brought by the Labor Commissioner, (2) sureties issuing a bond under Business and Professions Code provisions regulating licensed contractors, and (3) actions to enforce mechanics' liens under *Civil Code Sections 3109 et seq.*ⁿ³⁰ Labor Code Section 218.5 does not apply to any action for which attorney's fees are recoverable under *Labor Code Section 1194.*ⁿ³¹

In an action for nonpayment of overtime wages, Labor Code Section 1194 is applicable and not *Labor Code section 218.5.*ⁿ³² A prevailing employee is entitled to an award of reasonable attorney's fees under Labor Code Section 1194 as a matter of right.^{n32.1} In an action to recover unpaid overtime wages, the successful defendant is not entitled to receive attorney's fees.ⁿ³³ Labor Code Section 1194 also authorizes an award of attorney's fees for fees incurred in the trial court when an employee prevails in the trial court in a Labor Code Section 98.2 "appeal" from an administrative decision.^{n33.1}

Labor Code Section 218.5 does apply, however, to actions brought to recover wages of salaried executive employees. For purposes of the Labor Code,ⁿ³⁴ the salaries of executives are protected wages, and a cause of action for nonpayment of such wages falls under *Labor Code section 218.5.*ⁿ³⁵

Code of Civil Procedure Section 1031 provides additional authority for an award of attorney's fees in an action to recover unpaid wages. However, Section 1031 only applies if the demand, excluding interest, does not exceed $300.ⁿ³⁶ An award under section 1031 may only be made to a prevailing plaintiff or cross complainant, and the amount of the fee awarded may not exceed 20% of the amount recovered.ⁿ³⁷

The right of a party to recover attorney's fees when the party pursues the administrative remedy under Lab. Code § 98 et seq. rather than filing a civil action under Lab. Code § 1194 is governed by Lab. Code § 98.2(c) rather than by section 1194 or Lab. Code § 218.5. The trial de novo in superior court under Lab. Code § 98.2(a) is not a civil proceeding contemplated by *Lab. Code § 1194.*ⁿ³⁸

[5] Recovery of Statutory Penalties

In 2004, the California Legislature added Labor Code section 2699. Previously, only the DLSE had the authority to collect statutory penalties. Labeled the "Private Attorney General Act of 2004," section 2699 allows current and former employees to bring private lawsuits for violation of any provision of the Labor Code other than the workers' compensation provisions. Although some Labor Code provisions previously had no penalties for violations, section 2699 now imposes penalties for each of those sections. Employers are liable for the penalties regardless of whether their violations were willful. Furthermore, employees claiming to be aggrieved may sue not only on their own behalf but on behalf of all similarly-situated current and former employees.

The California Supreme Court has addresses two procedural issues arising from the statutory language: (1) can an "aggrieved employee" assign his or her claim to a non-aggrieved representative, such as a union, and (2) must an aggrieved employee who seeks to bring a representative action on behalf of others under the Private Attorney General Act meet the requirements for maintaining a class action? The Supreme Court answered both questions "No."

In Amalgamated Transit Union v. Superior Court, n38.1 the California Supreme Court addressed the assignment issue. n39 The Court found that the Private Attorney General Act "does not create property rights or any other substantive rights." Rather, the Act is procedural only, allowing an aggrieved employee to recover civil penalties for Labor Code violations that otherwise would have been sought by state labor law enforcement agencies. Because the right to a statutory penalty cannot be assigned, the aggrieved employee "does not own an assignable interest." As a result, the union that brought the claim on behalf of its members had no standing to bring the claim, even though the members themselves were aggrieved employees.

In Arias v. Superior Court, n39.1 the California Supreme Court addressed the class action question. The Court held that an employee who brings a representative action under the Private Attorney General Act need not satisfy the requirements of a class action. In Arias, a former employee sued his former employer, on behalf of himself and other current and former employees, for, among other things, various labor code violations. He sought recovery under California's Unfair Competition Law, California Business and Professions Code § 17200 and under the Private Attorney General Act. The trial court struck the claims under the Act on the ground that the plaintiff failed to comply with the pleading requirements of class actions. The court of appeal issued a peremptory writ of mandate, holding that the representative claims under the Act were not subject to class action requirements.

The Supreme Court affirmed the court of appeal. The Court first rejected the employer's argument that class action requirements apply generally to any form of representative action absent statutory language precluding their application. The Court next rejected a contention that the legislative history supported application of class action requirements, finding that the history did not expressly refer to class actions. Finally, the Court reasoned that its holding did not violate employer's due process rights, because a judgment in a representative action under the Act is binding "not only on the named employee plaintiff but also on government agencies "and any aggrieved employee not a party to the proceeding." Thus, the Court concluded, employers will not be faced with "one-way intervention," where successive plaintiffs could sue the employer until one prevailed, allowing all others to ride on that single success. n40

Under section 2699, the civil penalty for any Labor Code violation that does not already have an assigned penalty amount is $100 per pay period for a first violation and $200 per pay period for any subsequent violation. n41 In addition to their other remedies, aggrieved employees are entitled to retain 25% of any civil penalties awarded and to recover their attorneys' fees and costs. The remaining 75% of any penalty award goes to the State's Labor and Workforce Development Agency. n42

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

Given the significant exposure section 2699 creates, employers likely will question whether the statute can be applied to Labor Code violations that took place before the statute's enactment. The general rule is that a new law will not be applied retroactively absent a clear expression of this intention by the Legislature. Notwithstanding the general rule, courts will allow a new law to be applied to pending litigation if the law is determined to be "procedural" in nature (meaning, it does not change the legal effect of past conduct). Labor Code section 2699 does not contain a clear indication that the Legislature intended it to apply retroactively. However, employers can expect plaintiffs' lawyers to argue in existing cases that the new law, especially those portions providing for recovery of existing civil penalties, is not substantive change but merely a procedural change and, therefore, that they should be allowed to amend the complaint to seek those additional penalties and attorney's fees. Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

Because Labor Code Section 2699(g) provides that an employee "shall be entitled" to an award of attorney's fees, a reasonable award to a prevailing employee is a matter of right. n43

An arbitration agreement that precludes an employee from acting as "a private attorney general" may be unconscionable and unenforceable. In Franco v. Athens Disposal Co., Inc., n44 a former trash truck driver filed a class action against his former employer for alleged violations of California's meal and rest period laws. The company petitioned to compel arbitration based on a written agreement containing a waiver of class arbitration and precluding an employee from acting in a private attorney general capacity, which the trial court granted. The Court of Appeal first held that the class arbitration waiver was unconscionable.ⁿ⁴⁵ The court then held that an employer could not preclude an employee or former employee from acting as a private attorney general, as that would violate the PAGA, which authorizes an aggrieved employee to recover civil penalties "on behalf of himself ... and other current or former employees."ⁿ⁴⁶ The Legislature made clear that an action under the PAGA is in the nature of an enforcement action, with the aggrieved employee acting as a private attorney general to collect penalties from employers who violate labor laws. Such an action is fundamentally a law enforcement action designed to protect the public and penalize the employer for past illegal conduct. By prohibiting enforcement of the PAGA, the arbitration agreement impeded the goal of comprehensively enforcing a statutory scheme through the imposition of statutory sanctions and fines as articulated by the California Supreme Court in Gentry v. Superior Court.ⁿ⁴⁷ Thus, the prohibition of private attorneys general was invalid. Further, because the arbitration agreement contained a class arbitration waiver and precluded plaintiff from seeking civil penalties on behalf of other employees contrary to the PAGA, the agreement as a whole was tainted with illegality and was unenforceable.ⁿ⁴⁸

[6] Defenses

In addition to making admissions and denials, as appropriate, of the facts alleged in the employee's complaint,ⁿ⁴⁹ the employer's answer should separately allege any new facts (not alleged in the complaint) constituting defenses to the causes of action alleged in the complaint.ⁿ⁵⁰ Examples of affirmative defenses to an action for failure to pay wages or benefits as required by the Labor Code include the following:

1. The parties are independent contractors, rather than an employer and employee subject to the provisions of the Labor Code;ⁿ⁵¹
2. The defendant-employer and/or plaintiff-wage claimant is exempt from the applicable provision(s) of the Labor Code;ⁿ⁵²
3. The cause of action is based upon an interpretation and/or application of a collective bargaining agreement and is barred by Labor Code section 229;ⁿ⁵³
4. The cause of action is preempted by the federal Labor Management Relations Act (LMRA);ⁿ⁵⁴
5. The cause of action is preempted by the federal Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA);ⁿ⁵⁵
6. The defendant and/or plaintiff are not proper parties to the action;ⁿ⁵⁶ or
7. Plaintiff secreted or absented himself or herself in order to avoid payment of wages or refused to receive the payment fully tendered to him or her, thereby relieving defendant of liability for waiting time penalties.ⁿ⁵⁷

Other potential defenses include lack of subject matter jurisdiction,ⁿ⁵⁸ failure to state a cause of action,ⁿ⁵⁹ and failure to commence the action within the applicable statute of limitations.ⁿ⁶⁰

A release executed by an employee may provide an employer with a defense to a later action on the same claim. In Chindarah v. Pick Up Stix, Inc.,ⁿ⁶¹ the trial court properly found that releases barred a class action against the employer based on alleged misclassification of employees as exempt from overtime. Labor Code section 206.5, which prohibits an employer from requiring the execution of a release of a claim on account of wages due, unless payment of those wages has been made, did not render the releases invalid. Nor did section 1194(a), which provides that notwithstanding any agreement to work for a lesser wage, an employee receiving less than the legal minimum wage or the legal overtime compensation applicable to the employee is entitled to recover in a civil action the unpaid balance of the full amount of this minimum wage or overtime compensation, including interest, reasonable attorney's fees, and costs of suit. Former employees had sued the employer in a class action. The employer then settled with as many putative class members as possible, and they signed a settlement agreement including a release of all issues and claims for unpaid overtime. The court found that there is no statute providing that an employee cannot release claims to past overtime wages as part of a settlement of a bona fide dispute over those wages. The releases settled a dispute over whether the employer had violated wage and hour laws in the past, and they did not purport to exonerate it from future violations. They also did not condition the payment of wages concededly due on execution of the releases.

In Watkins v. Wachovia Corp.,ⁿ⁶² a release (of all claims against an employer) executed by an employee in exchange for enhanced severance benefits, which the employee received, was not unenforceable as violative of Labor Code Section 206.5. In addition to the enhanced severance benefits, the employee received all pay concededly due her, and she conceded that she would have received that pay and standard severance benefits had she not executed the release. In a subsequent action for allegedly unpaid overtime, the employer was granted summary judgment based on the release. Citing Chindarah, and reading Labor Code Section 206.5 in connection with Labor Code Section 206, the court concluded that Labor Code Section 206.5 did not prevent the settlement of wage claims, but did prevent the employer from withholding wages concededly due in order to coerce a settlement of the disputed amount. The court also concluded that a bona fide dispute existed when the employee signed the release, and under the circumstances, the release was enforceable, making the grant of summary judgment to the employer appropriate.

If the grounds for objecting to the complaint appear on the face of the complaint (or from any matter of which the court is required or permitted to take judicial notice), the objection should be made by demurrer rather than answer.ⁿ⁶³

[7] Class Actions

A civil action to recover allegedly unpaid wages may appropriately be brought as a class action under Code of Civil Procedure section 382.ⁿ⁶⁴ In Sav-On Drug Stores, Inc. v. Superior Court (Rocher),ⁿ⁶⁵ the trial court did not abuse its discretion in certifying as a class action an action for recovery of unpaid overtime compensation based on the allegation that the employer improperly classified employees as managers exempt from overtime requirements under the IWC wage order.

In Bufile v. Dollar Financial Group, Inc.,ⁿ⁶⁶ the trial court denied a motion for class certification in an action alleging denial of lunch and rest breaks required by the Labor Code and Wage Orders on the grounds of collateral estoppel, i.e., that a previous attempt to certify the class by a different named plaintiff had been denied. The Court of Appeal found that the classes in the two cases were not the same and thus the issues were different. Under the current named plaintiff's structuring of the case, the court could identify the class from the employer's records and determine liability as a matter of law.ⁿ⁶⁷ The Court of Appeal then found that the motion for class certification satisfied the commonality, ascertainability and superiority requirements.ⁿ⁶⁸

In Lee v. Dynamex, Inc.,ⁿ⁶⁹ after first denying a former employee's motion to compel the employer to identify and provide contact information for potential putative class members, the trial court abused its discretion in refusing to certify a class action alleging the employer improperly reclassified drivers from employees to independent contractors in violation of California Labor Code requirements for employees. The basic parameters of the proposed class could be readily ascertained through company records, and the trial court unnecessarily confused issues of ascertainability with the merits of the underlying claims.ⁿ⁷⁰ Further, in light of the trial court's erroneous discovery order precluding identification of potential class members before certification, the putative class representative was not provided with an adequate opportunity to meet his burden with regard to a community of interest among potential class members in terms of the predominance of common questions of law or fact, the typicality of the class representative's claims or the adequacy of his representation as the sole named plaintiff.ⁿ⁷¹

In Ghazaryan v. Diva Limousine, Ltd.,ⁿ⁷² an action challenging a limousine service's policy of paying its drivers an hourly rate for assigned trips, but failing to pay for on-call time between assignments ("gap time"), the trial court incorrectly focused on the potential difficulty of assessing the validity of the employer's compensation policy in light of variations in how drivers spent their gap time. The court of appeal reversed the trial court's denial of the plaintiff's motion to certify two proposed overlapping subclasses and remanded with directions to certify the proposed subclasses. The trial court fundamentally misconceived the import of the rule against evaluating the merits of a plaintiff's claims in deciding whether class treatment is appropriate. Rather than denying certification because it could not reach the merits, the trial court should have evaluated whether the theory of recovery advanced by the plaintiff was likely to prove amenable to class treatment. The proposed class was properly defined in terms of objective characteristics and common transactional facts, not by identifying the ultimate facts that would establish liability. The proposed class of all drivers employed by the limousine service during a specific period of time was identified by the service through computerized employment records, and the existence of separate assignments with separate compensation schemes did not render the proposed class unascertainable. Inherent differences among employees in the amount of gap time accumulated and how that time was spent did not destroy the community of interest, because determining whether a sufficient community of interest existed to warrant class certification did not depend on the differences among individual drivers' use of their gap time but on the reasonableness of the policies as applied to the drivers as a whole. There was no question that class treatment constituted the superior mode of resolving plaintiff's claims, because there was no advantage to either party to resolution of the validity of the policies on a piecemeal basis, and that prospect jeopardized the ability of employees to find competent representation if restricted to their own individual claims.

On the other hand, in In re BCBG Overtime Cases,ⁿ⁷³ the trial court properly granted a motion by the employer to strike class allegations from the employee's complaint alleging that the employer designated all managers and assistant managers as "exempt" to avoid paying them overtime wages. The employer could properly bring the motion to strike the class allegations from the complaint before the plaintiffs had filed their motion to certify the class. Under both California and federal law, either party could initiate the class certification process, and the employer's motion to strike the class allegations was not made before plaintiffs had a chance to conduct discovery on class certification issues. Plaintiffs received proper notice of the employer's motion and had the opportunity to respond with evidence of their own, but they presented nothing to counter the employer's evidence that the action did not meet the requirements of a class action.

Similarly, in Ali v. U.S.A. Cab Ltd.,^{n73.1} the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying a motion to certify a class of lessees of taxicabs, in an action alleging they were improperly classified as independent contractors rather than employees. The Court of Appeal held that the trial court's finding that the putative class representative failed to meet his burden of showing a predominance of common issues of fact and law was amply supported by the declarations of 36 putative class members as to their actual conduct. Although leases of cabs and training manuals were uniform, the court reasonably found the testimony of putative class members would be required on the issues of employment and fact of damage. The trial court also did not abuse its discretion in finding that a class action was not a superior method of trying the case, because individual issues of fact predominated over common issues, making a class action extremely difficult to manage.

In a wage and hour action brought in federal court under California law, a class may be certified under Fed. R. Civ. Proc. 23 when the court finds that the questions of law or fact common to class members predominate over any questions affecting only individual members, and a class action is superior to other available methods for fairly and efficiently adjudicating the controversy.^{n73.2} The focus in the predominance inquiry is on the relationship between the common and individual issues.^{n73.3} For example, while uniform policies classifying employees as exempt from overtime laws are relevant to the Rule 23(b)(3) analysis, it is an abuse of discretion to rely on those policies to the near exclusion of other relevant factors touching on predominance.^{n73.4}

In the litigation of a class action involving wage and hour issues, the court may compel the employer to provide the names and contact information of all current and former employees and adopt a proposed notice to those individuals requiring them to object in writing in order to prevent information about them from being disclosed to the named plaintiffs.ⁿ⁷⁴

In a class action brought in federal court for wage and hour violations, nothing in Federal Rule Civil Procedure 23 precludes an employer from preemptively moving to deny certification of a class action before the putative class representatives move for certification. The plain language of Rule 23(c)(1)(A), which provides that at an early practicable time after a person sues or is sued as a class representative, the court must determine by order whether to certify the action as a class action, neither vests plaintiffs with the exclusive right to put the class certification issue before the district court nor prohibits a defendant from seeking early resolution of the class certification question.^{n74.1} Further, the court may grant the employer's motion before the pretrial motion cutoff and the discovery cutoff, so long as plaintiffs have sufficient time to prepare for the employer's motion.^{n74.2}

A trial court must approve the settlement of a class action. In evaluating the reasonableness of a class action settlement agreement, the trial court should consider the following factors:ⁿ⁷⁵

- The strength of plaintiffs' case.
- The risk, expense, complexity and likely duration of further litigation.
- The risk of maintaining class action status through trial.
- The amount offered in settlement.
- The extent of discovery completed and the stage of the proceedings.
- The experience and views of counsel.
- The presence of a governmental participant.
- The reaction of the class members to the proposed settlement.

A presumption of fairness exists when each of the following is true:ⁿ⁷⁶

- The settlement is reached through arm's-length bargaining.
- Investigation and discovery are sufficient to allow counsel and the court to act intelligently.
- Counsel is experienced in similar litigation.
- The percentage of objectors is small.

In Kullar v. Foot Locker Retail, Inc.,ⁿ⁷⁷ the trial court concluded that the four factors supporting a presumption of fairness were established and were sufficient to support a finding that the settlement of the class action alleging violations of the Labor Code and Wage Orders was fair, adequate and reasonable. However, with regard to the claims that class members were not provided meal periods required under the Labor Code,ⁿ⁷⁸ no discovery was conducted, no declarations were filed in support of the settlement indicating the nature of the investigation that had been conducted to determine the number of employees that had allegedly been denied meal breaks, the frequency with which the denials had occurred, or the circumstances surrounding those denials, and no analysis was provided of the factual or legal issues that required resolution to determine the extent of any one-hour-pay penalties to which class members may have been entitled. Further, no time records were produced in discovery nor was the trial court presented any estimated quantification of the number of one-hour-pay penalties that might be due or any explanation of the factors that were considered in discounting the potential recovery for purposes of settlement. While information may have been exchanged informally by counsel during the course of a mediation session, there was nothing before the court to establish the sufficiency of class counsel's investigation other than their assurance that they had seen what they needed to see. Further, the trial court could not determine the adequacy of a class action settlement without independently satisfying itself that the consideration being received for the release of the class members' claims was reasonable in light of the strengths and weaknesses of the claims and the risks of the litigation. The trial court acknowledged that it would have been preferable for it to have been presented with data permitting it to review class counsel's evaluation of the sufficiency of the settlement, but felt that this was precluded because the supporting information was exchanged in the course of mediation. However, the fact that the settlement was reached during mediation to which Evid. Code § 1119 applied did not eliminate the court's obligation to evaluate the terms of the settlement and to ensure that they were fair, adequate and reasonable. If relevant information was subject to a privilege, other data had to be provided enabling the court to make an independent assessment of the adequacy of the settlement terms. Further, the fact that communications were made during the mediation and writings prepared for use in the mediation that were inadmissible and not subject to compulsory production did not mean the underlying data, not otherwise privileged, was also immune from production.ⁿ⁷⁹ For example, payroll records, if relevant to the quantification of the claims being settled, were subject to discovery and could be introduced in opposition to the settlement even if they were disclosed to class counsel during the mediation, and even if class counsel was shown only a summary or analysis of those records that was not itself subject to production because it was prepared for use in the mediation.

On the other hand, in Clark v. American Residential Services, LLC, ^{n79.1} after certifying the class in an action for damages and penalties for allegedly unpaid minimum and overtime wages, failure to provide meal and rest periods, and other Labor Code violations and unfair business practices, the trial court approved a settlement reached by the parties after a one-day mediation before a respected mediator, apparently in reliance on counsel's evaluation of the class's overtime claim as having "absolutely no" value, without regard to objectors' claim that counsel's evaluation was based on an allegedly "staggering mistake of law." The Court of Appeal vacated the order, finding that while the trial court need not have determined the ultimate legal merit of the claims, it was obliged to determine, at a minimum, whether a legitimate controversy existed, so that it had some basis for assessing whether the parties' evaluation of the case was within the "ballpark" of reasonableness. The trial court simply accepted class counsel's conclusion the overtime claim had "absolutely no" value, without a substantiated explanation of the manner in which it evaluated a core legal issue.

Once a purported class representative settles the action and enters into a stipulated judgment based on the settlement, an appeal of the denial of class certification is moot.ⁿ⁸⁰ Further, a putative class representative who settles his or her own claim after denial of class certification does not have standing to appeal the denial of the class certification.ⁿ⁸¹

In wage and hour class actions, class counsel owes a duty of care to the class as a whole to represent all class members with the skill, prudence, and diligence that attorneys of ordinary skill and capacity commonly possess and exercise in the performance of their tasks. But class counsel is not negligent and does not commit legal malpractice by not contacting a putative class member before the claim filing deadline to inquire as to why the putative class member did not file a claim and to make sure the putative class member is aware of the need to do so.^{n81.1}

[8] Punitive Damages

Under California law, punitive damages ordinarily are recoverable only in an action for the breach of an obligation not arising from contract, in which the requisite culpable conduct is also present.ⁿ⁸² The word "contract" in this context means an agreement between the parties, not an obligation imposed by law despite the absence of any agreement.ⁿ⁸³ The availability of punitive damages may also be constrained by the "new right-exclusive remedy" doctrine, i.e., when a statute creates new rights and obligations not previously existing in the common law, the express statutory remedy is deemed to be the exclusive remedy available for statutory violations, unless it is inadequate.ⁿ⁸⁴ When the statute merely recognizes a cause of action because the claim had a preexisting common law analogue, all forms of relief granted to civil litigants generally, including appropriate punitive damages, are available unless a contrary legislative intent appears.ⁿ⁸⁵

In Brewer v. Premier Golf Properties, LP,ⁿ⁸⁶ the Court of Appeal held that both under general principles (barring punitive damages awards absent breach of an obligation not arising from contract) and by application of the "new right-exclusive remedy" doctrine, punitive damages were not recoverable when liability was premised solely on the employer's violation of Labor Code statutes regulating meal and rest breaks,ⁿ⁸⁷ pay stubs, and minimum wage laws. Those claims, on which a former employee recovered in an action against the former employer, accreted to the employment contract between the employer and the employee. The Labor Code provisions governing meal and rest breaks, minimum wages, and accurate pay stubs constitute statutory obligations and are imposed only when the parties have entered into an employment contract. The breach of an obligation arising out of an employment contract, even when the obligation is implied in law, permits contractual damages, but does not support tort recoveries.ⁿ⁸⁸ Further, the Labor Code statutes regulating pay stubsⁿ⁸⁹ and minimum wagesⁿ⁹⁰ created new rights and obligations not previously existing in the common law and provided express statutory remedies, including punitive penalties for the violation of those statutes.ⁿ⁹¹ In Brewer, the former employee sought and recovered the maximum penalty available for the employer's pay stub violations, and the judgment contained an additional penalty for the overtime violations. Similarly, the Labor Code section requiring employers to provide meal breaksⁿ⁹² and the regulations requiring employers to provide rest breaksⁿ⁹³ and providing numerous forms of remedies for their violation, created new rights and obligations not previously existing in the common law, and the statutory and regulatory scheme provided a comprehensive and detailed remedial scheme for its enforcement.ⁿ⁹⁴ Those remedies included an award in the nature of liquidated damages under Labor Code section 226.7,ⁿ⁹⁵ injunctive relief,ⁿ⁹⁶ and potential statutory penaltiesⁿ⁹⁷

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS
 CHAPTER 5 Administrative and Judicial Remedies Under Wage and Hour Laws
 Part A. REMEDIES FOR FAILURE TO PAY WAGES GENERALLY
 Subpart 4. Civil Action by Employee

1-5 California Employment Law § 5.42

AUTHOR: By Susan Spurlark, J.D.

§ 5.42 Action by Assignee to Recover Wages Owed

[1] Generally

Labor Code section 218 authorizes an action by an employee's assignee to collect wages that are due. However, except in the case of an assignment to the Labor Commissioner,ⁿ¹ the assignment must meet the requirements of Labor Code section 300.ⁿ² For discussion of those requirements, see Chapter 4.

If the assignment is valid, the assignee has the same enforcement rights and is subject to the same defenses as the assignor (i.e., the employee assigning the wages).ⁿ³ However, any claim for penalties by an assignee appears to be limited to the portion of the penalty that had accrued prior to the assignment.ⁿ⁴

[2] FORM--Complaint by Assignee for Wages Owed

[a] Comment

The form set forth in subsection [b], below, is a complaint for wages by an assignee to recover wages owed to the assignor-employee or former employee. The plaintiff-assignee must allege facts showing the assignor's entitlement to the wages, as set forth in § 5.41[1]. The assignee should also plead facts that show that a proper assignment has been made; however, any defect in the assignment under Labor Code section 300 is an affirmative defense, which must be pleaded and proved by the defendant.ⁿ⁵ For discussion of the requirements for validity of a wage assignment, see Chapter 4.

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS
CHAPTER 5 Administrative and Judicial Remedies Under Wage and Hour Laws
Part A. REMEDIES FOR FAILURE TO PAY WAGES GENERALLY
Subpart 5. Protection of Employee or Claimant Against Retaliation

1-5 California Employment Law § 5.50

AUTHOR: By Susan Spurlark, J.D.

§ 5.50 Discrimination and Retaliation Forbidden

Labor Code section 98.6(a) forbids discrimination or retaliation against an employee or applicant for employment on the following bases:

- The employee or applicant engaged in any conduct delineated in Labor Code section 79 et seq., including the conduct described in 96(k) (making claim for loss of wages as result of demotion, suspension, or discharge from employment for lawful conduct occurring during nonworking hours away from employer's premises) and Labor Code section 1101 et seq. (political affiliations).n1
- The employee or applicant filed a bona fide complaint or claim or instituted or caused to be instituted any proceeding under or relating to his or her rights, which are under the jurisdiction of the Labor Commissioner.
- The employee has initiated any action or notice pursuant to Labor Code section 2699 (recovery of civil penalty for violation of Labor Code through civil action brought by aggrieved employee).n1.1
- The employee testified or is about to testify in any such proceeding.
- The employee or applicant exercised on behalf of himself, herself, or others any rights afforded him or her.

Acts of discrimination and retaliation include discharge, threats of discharge, demotion, suspension, and any other discrimination in terms and conditions of employment.n1.2

An employee who is discriminated or retaliated against because he or she made a bona fide complaint is entitled to reinstatement and/or reimbursement for wages and benefits lost as a result.n2 An employer who willfully refuses to hire, promote, or otherwise restore such an employee following a decision by a grievance procedure, arbitration, or other hearing authorized by law is guilty of a misdemeanor.ⁿ³ However, the legislation enacting Labor Code section 98.6 provides that it may not be construed to entitle an employee to reinstatement or reimbursement for lost wages or work benefits if the employee willfully misrepresents any facts to support a complaint or claim filed with the Labor Commissioner.ⁿ⁴

An applicant for employment is entitled to employment and reimbursement for lost wages and work benefits caused by the acts of the prospective employer if the applicant engaged in any protected conduct or made a bona fide complaint or claim and was: refused employment, not selected for a training program leading to employment, or in any other manner discriminated against in the terms and conditions of an offer of employment.ⁿ⁵ However, Labor Code section 98.6 may not be construed to invalidate a collective bargaining agreement requiring an applicant for a position that is subject to the collective bargaining agreement to sign a contract that protects either or both of the following:ⁿ⁶

- Protection of the employer against conduct in direct conflict with the essential enterprise-related interests of the employer and in which breach of the contract would constitute a material and substantial disruption of the employer's operation.
- Protection of a firefighter against any disease presumed to arise in the course and scope of employment, by limiting his or her consumption of tobacco products on and off the job.

Similarly, Labor Code section 98.6 may not be construed to invalidate an employer requirement of an applicant for a position that is not subject to a collective bargaining agreement to sign an employment contract that provides the foregoing protections.ⁿ⁷

The provisions of Labor Code section 98.6, as amended by AB 1015 to create new actions or remedies for employees or applicants effective on January 1, 2002, do not apply to the following:ⁿ⁸

- A state or local law enforcement agency.
- A religious association or corporation under Gov. Code section 12926(d), except as provided in Gov. Code section 12926.2.ⁿ⁹
- Any person described in Evidence Code section 1070, governing a news person's immunity from contempt for refusing to disclose a news source.ⁿ¹⁰

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

Labor Code Section 98.6 poses many questions for employment law practitioners.

Does AB 1015, the bill that amended section 98.6, evidence the Legislature's intent to create a substantive right for employees under Labor Code Section 96(k)? Following the passage of Assembly Bill 1689, which added subsection (k) to Labor Code Section 96 (effective January 1, 2001), debate focused on whether Section 96(k) created a new substantive right for employees subjected to adverse action for engaging in "lawful conduct during nonworking hours," or merely created a new procedural right--by allowing the Labor Commissioner to take assignment of such a claim that would have been actionable in a lawsuit by an individual employee prior to the addition of subsection (k). At least one appellate court has held that Section 96(k) merely creates a new procedural remedy, not a new public policy.ⁿ¹¹

What kind of conduct does Section 96(k), and by extension Section 98.6, protect? Examples of "lawful conduct during nonworking hours" by employees and applicants might include engaging in consulting work for a competitor company or membership in an extremist political group. At least one court has held that it does not include dating a subordinate, where the employer has a policy prohibiting such a relationship and the employee has advance notice of the policy.ⁿ¹²

May an employer restrict an employee's conduct that is protected under Section 96(k)? Employers should tread carefully here. Under Section 98.6, such conduct may be restricted only if it directly conflicts with the employer's "essential enterprise-related interests," a term which is not defined. For example, is an employer's interest in preventing sexual harassment in the workplace an "essential enterprise-related interest," such that an employee and her supervisor can be restricted from engaging in an off-premises dating relationship? The answer is unclear. Thus, an employer that demotes, suspends, or discharges the employee or her supervisor for engaging in the off-premises dating relationship risks the filing of claims under Section 98.6 for lost wages resulting from the adverse action.

If an employer seeks to restrict certain protected conduct, what is the mechanism under Section 98.6 for doing so? By its terms, Section 98.6 does not invalidate "employment contracts" between an employer and employee or applicant that protect the employer against conduct in direct conflict with the employer's essential enterprise-related interests. Whether prohibitions against such conduct contained in employee handbooks or personnel policy manuals will be deemed sufficient to constitute an exclusion from Section 98.6 protections remains an open question.

Under AB 1015, may an employer refuse to hire an otherwise qualified applicant based on information obtained during the pre-hire screening process reflecting the applicant's "lawful conduct during nonworking hours" of which the employer does not approve? Section 98.6 states that it does not invalidate employment contracts with applicants to prohibit off-premises conduct that directly conflicts with the employer's essential enterprise-related interests. However, as a practical matter, such contracts generally will only be entered into after an applicant is hired to curb prospective conduct. Whether an employer can enter into such an "employment contract" with an applicant during the pre-hire process remains to be seen. Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS
 CHAPTER 5 Administrative and Judicial Remedies Under Wage and Hour Laws
 Part A. REMEDIES FOR FAILURE TO PAY WAGES GENERALLY
 Subpart 5. Protection of Employee or Claimant Against Retaliation

1-5 California Employment Law § 5.51

AUTHOR: By Susan Spurlark, J.D.

§ 5.51 Procedure in Case of Complaint of Discrimination or Retaliation

Labor Code section 98.7 provides an administrative mechanism for remedying complaints of discrimination and/or retaliation in violation of any law under the jurisdiction of the Labor Commissioner.ⁿ¹ It is not the exclusive remedy for such claims; the employee may pursue any other remedies that may be available.ⁿ² Thus, there is no requirement that a plaintiff proceed through the Labor Code administrative procedure provided in Labor Code Section 98.7 in order to pursue a statutory cause of action.^{n2.1}

The Labor Commissioner is required to establish procedures for the administrative review of retaliation claims.ⁿ³ Any complaint should be filed with the Labor Commissioner within six months after the occurrence of the violation, although that time limit may be extended for good cause.ⁿ⁴ When a complaint is filed, the Labor Commissioner must give a summary of its procedures to both the employee and the respondent.ⁿ⁵

The complaint is assigned as a priority matter for investigation and preparation of a report to the Labor Commissioner.ⁿ⁶ The investigation, which is conducted by an investigator who specializes in such complaints, may include interviews with the parties and witnesses and a review of documents, all of which should be included in the report.ⁿ⁷ However, the identity of witnesses remains confidential unless disclosure is necessary to facilitate the investigation or any prosecution.ⁿ⁸

The Labor Commissioner, or his or her designee, reviews the report to determine whether or not a violation has occurred.ⁿ⁹ The Labor Commissioner may hold a hearing to further ascertain the facts and may issue, serve, and enforce any necessary subpoenas in conjunction with that hearing.ⁿ¹⁰ The Labor Commissioner must issue a decision within 60 days of the filing of the complaint.ⁿ¹¹ Either party may appeal that decision to the Director of Industrial Relations within 10 days of notice of the Labor Commissioner's decision.ⁿ¹² The appeal must contain a statement of the grounds for the appeal and every issue that is to be considered.ⁿ¹³ The Director of Industrial Relations must issue a decision either modifying, affirming, or reversing the Labor Commissioner's determination within 10 days; that decision is not subject to further administrative appeal.ⁿ¹⁴

If a violation is found, the Labor Commissioner must order the respondent to cease and desist and to make the complainant whole, including rehiring or reinstatement, back pay with interest, and payment for reasonable attorney's fees incurred for any hearing held during the investigation.ⁿ¹⁵ If the respondent fails to comply within 10 working days after notification of the Labor Commissioner's determination, the Commissioner must initiate an action in the appropriate court to secure the remedy.ⁿ¹⁶ In addition, the Commissioner is required to seek appropriate temporary relief or restraining orders, unless he or she determines that good cause exists for not doing so.ⁿ¹⁷ The Labor Commissioner is the only person authorized to institute this action; however, if the Labor Commissioner fails to act promptly, the complainant may petition for a writ of mandate to compel the action and, if successful, is entitled to recover reasonable attorney's fees and costs.ⁿ¹⁸ Further, the complainant may intervene in any action filed by the Labor Commissioner.ⁿ¹⁹ Appropriate relief in such an action includes, but is not limited to, rehiring or reinstatement of the complainant, reimbursement of lost wages with interest thereon, and other appropriate compensation or equitable relief.ⁿ²⁰

If the Labor Commissioner finds no violation and dismisses the complaint, he or she must notify the complainant of his or her right to seek full relief by bringing an action in the appropriate court and of the right to file a claim with the U.S. Department of Labor where appropriate.ⁿ²¹ The filing of a timely complaint against the state program with the U.S. Department of Labor stays the Labor Commissioner's dismissal until the U.S. Secretary of Labor makes a determination regarding the alleged violation. Within 15 days of receiving that determination, the Labor Commissioner must notify the parties whether he or she will reopen the complaint or reaffirm the dismissal.ⁿ²² The Labor Commissioner may also assess reasonable attorney's fees associated with any investigatory hearing against the complainant if the Commissioner finds that the complaint was frivolous, unreasonable, and brought in bad faith.ⁿ²³

§ 5.60 Violations for Which Criminal Sanctions Are Provided

The Labor Code is replete with criminal sanctions for violations of its requirements. In conjunction with requirements relating to wages and hours of work, the following are among those sections imposing criminal sanctions:

1. Labor Code sections 90, 91, 93, 1175 (impeding investigations and other duties of Labor Commissioner and DLSE; refusal to obey subpoenas);
2. Labor Code section 206.5 (prohibition against requiring release of claim for wages);
3. Labor Code section 215 (violation of certain provisions relating to time and manner of payment of wages and pay day notices);
4. Labor Code section 216 (willful failure to pay wages by person with ability to do so; false denial of amount or validity of wage claim);
5. Labor Code section 225 (violation of certain prohibitions against improper withholding or reduction of wages);
6. Labor Code section 226.6 (violation of requirements for itemized wage and deduction statements);
7. Labor Code section 227 (failure to make certain employee benefit payments);ⁿ¹
8. Labor Code sections 270-272 (violation of wage security requirements for certain occupations);
9. Labor Code section 354 (violation of provisions relating to employee tips);

10. Labor Code section 408 (violation of provisions relating to payment for bonds and employee photographs);
11. Labor Code section 451 (violation of prohibition against coerced patronage of employer by employee);
12. Labor Code sections 553, 605, 606, 752, 801, and 853 (violation of statutory provisions limiting maximum hours of work);
13. Labor Code sections 1199, 1199.5 (violation of minimum wage, maximum hour, and other provisions of wage orders and of statutory equal pay requirements);
14. Labor Code sections 1303, 1308, 1308.1, 1308.3, 1308.5, 1308.7, 1309, 1309.5, 1391, and 1392 (violation of restrictions on employment of minors);
15. Labor Code section 1697(a) (violation of various requirements relating to farm labor contractors); and
16. Labor Code section 1777 (violation of provisions requiring payment of prevailing wages to certain laborers on public works projects).

■ PRACTICE TIP:

The above list is not meant to be exhaustive. Related criminal provisions may be contained in the Penal Code or other codes. While in this author's experience criminal sanctions are not imposed often, they may be considered by the Labor Commissioner or other prosecuting authority whenever there are flagrant and continuing violations. The actual provisions of the Labor Code should be reviewed in each case when advising a client of the possible penalties. Commentary by Susan Spurlark.

The penalties for these violations are either set forth in the section making the violation a crime,ⁿ² in Labor Code section 23, or in the Penal Code. Labor Code section 23 provides that unless a different punishment is expressly prescribed, every offense declared by the Labor Code to be a misdemeanor is punishable by imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding 6 months, or by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or both.

§ 5.61 Standards for Imposition of Criminal Sanctions

Constitutional challenges to the imposition of criminal sanctions for failure to pay wages have been made based on the prohibition against imprisonment for debt.ⁿ¹ The courts have rejected these challenges on the grounds that the statutes imposing criminal penalties require "willfulness" and that purposeful failure to pay wages owed when there is no claim of inability to pay is a fraud and constitutes an exception to the prohibition against imprisonment for debt.ⁿ² In cases involving payment of wages by bad checks,ⁿ³ the necessary willfulness may be shown by failure to assure the sufficiency of the payment.ⁿ⁴

Subpart 6. Criminal Sanctions and Bond Requirements

1-5 California Employment Law § 5.62

AUTHOR: By Susan Spurlark, J.D.

§ 5.62 Bond Requirements

[1] Penalty Bonds

The Labor Commissioner may, in addition to all other penalties, require an employer who has been convicted of a violation of any provision of Labor Code sections 200 et seq. (relating to payment of wages), or who has not paid a judgment for nonpayment of wages within 10 days after expiration of the appeal period, to post a bond to secure future compliance with payment requirements.ⁿ¹ The amount of the bond is in the Labor Commissioner's discretion; it is payable to the Labor Commissioner and is conditioned on payment of any judgment for nonpayment of wages against the employer and on the employer's payment, for a definite period not exceeding 6 months, of wages in accordance with the law.ⁿ²

If the employer fails to deposit the bond within 10 days after demand by the Labor Commissioner, the Commissioner may bring an action on behalf of the people of the State of California to compel the employer to furnish the bond or to cease doing business until the bond is furnished.ⁿ³ In such an action, the employer has the burden of proving that the bond is unnecessary or that the amount demanded is excessive.ⁿ⁴ If the court finds just cause for requiring the bond or that the bond is reasonably necessary or proper to secure prompt payment of wages to the employer's employees and to assure employer's compliance with the wage payment statutes, it may enjoin the operations of that employer until the bond is furnished and order other appropriate relief to compel compliance with that requirement.ⁿ⁵

The Labor Commissioner's internal procedures for requirement of penalty bonds provide, in part, that a bond should not be sought until normal collection efforts have been exhausted,ⁿ⁶ and that Deputy Labor Commissioners should not contravene the normal processes of law concerning examination of judgment debtors but may seek information regarding assets informally.ⁿ⁷ In addition, an action under Labor Code section 240 against a specific employer is not necessarily binding if that employer goes into business as another entity.ⁿ⁸

[1A] Action by Current or Former Employee to Require Employer to Deposit Bond

Labor Code section 243 provides a procedure by which a current or former employee may obtain a temporary restraining order requiring an employer to cease doing business unless it deposits a bond securing its compliance with wage payment laws. If, within 10 years after an employer either is convicted of a violation of Labor Code sections 200 et seq. (regarding payment of wages) or has failed to satisfy a judgment for nonpayment of wages, or both, the employer is alleged on a second occasion to have been convicted of such a violation or to have failed to satisfy a judgment for nonpayment of wages, an employee may bring an action in a court of competent jurisdiction for a temporary restraining order prohibiting the employer from doing business in the State of California unless the employer deposits with the court a bond to secure the employer's compliance with the Labor Code provisions regarding payment of wages or to satisfy the judgment for nonpayment of wages.ⁿ⁹ The action may be brought by the employee on his or her own behalf and on behalf of others.ⁿ¹⁰ A former employee who was a party to an earlier action against an employer in which a judgment for payment of wages was obtained, and who alleges that the employer has failed to satisfy the judgment, may also petition the court for such a temporary restraining order, in addition to any other available remedy.ⁿ¹¹

On filing of an affidavit that, to the court's satisfaction, shows reasonable proof that the employer, for the second time within 10 years, has been convicted of violating Labor Code sections 200 et seq. or has failed to satisfy a judgment for nonpayment of wages, or both, the court may grant a temporary restraining order pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure section 527 that prohibits the employer "within 30 days" from conducting any business in the State of California unless the employer deposits a bond payable to the Labor Commissioner that is conditioned on the employer making wage payments in accordance with Labor Code sections 200 et seq. or satisfying any judgment for nonpayment of wages, or both.ⁿ¹² The court must order the employer to deposit the bond with the court at any point in time, within in a five-year period from the date of the order, that the employer employs more than 10 employees.ⁿ¹³ The bond must be in an amount equal to $25,000, or 25% of the employer's weekly gross payroll at the time the bond is posted, whichever is greater.ⁿ¹⁴ The term of the bond must be for the duration of the service of the employee who brought the action until past due wages have been paid or until satisfaction of any judgment for nonpayment of wages.ⁿ¹⁵

An employer who, for the third time within 10 years after the first occurrence, is alleged to have violated Labor Code sections 200 et seq. or to have failed to satisfy a judgment for nonpayment of wages, or both, will be deemed by the court to have commenced a new five-year period within which the court may order posting of a bond as specified in Labor Code section 243(b).ⁿ¹⁶ In such a case, the court may, in its discretion, require the posting of a bond in an amount greater than that specified above, if appropriate under the circumstances.ⁿ¹⁷

For purposes of Labor Code section 243(b), an employer is deemed to have been convicted of having violated Labor Code sections 200 et seq. or to have failed to satisfy a judgment for the second time within 10 years if, to secure labor or personal services in connection with his or her business, the employer uses the services of an agent, contractor, or subcontractor who is convicted of violating Labor Code sections 200 et seq. or who fails to satisfy a judgment for wages respecting those employees, or both, but only if the employer had actual knowledge of the latter's failure to pay wages.ⁿ¹⁸ In issuing a temporary restraining order under this provision, the court must count the agent's, contractor's, or subcontractor's employees as part of the employer's total work force for purposes of determining the amount and term of the bond.ⁿ¹⁹ The agent's, contractor's, or subcontractor's violation of the wage payment statutes or failure to satisfy a judgment for nonpayment of wages will not, however, be attributed to the employer if a temporary restraining order under Labor Code section 243 has already been issued against the agent, contractor, or subcontractor, acting as an employer.ⁿ²⁰

Actions brought under Labor Code section 243 are required to be set for trial at the earliest possible date and take precedence over all other cases, except older matters of the same character and matters to which special precedence may be given by law.ⁿ²¹

[2] Wage Security Bonds

The requirements for wage security bonds are found in Labor Code sections 270 et seq., 2675, and 2679 and in Title 8

California Code of Regulations, sections 13300 et seq. Employers in the mining, logging and saw mill, door-to-door selling or telephone solicitation, theatrical and garment industries are required to maintain a bond, cash deposit, or other salable surety, sufficient to assure their ability to make payroll obligations.ⁿ²² Guidelines for imposition of such bonds may be found in the DLSE's Operations and Procedures Manual.ⁿ²³

[3] Penalty for Refusal by Bonding Company or Surety to Pay Wage Claim

If a bonding company that has issued a bond to secure the payment of wages for labor, or the surety on such a bond, willfully fails to pay, without abatement or reduction, any verified claim for wages found to be due and payable, the wage claim continues as a penalty against the bonding company or surety at the same rate as the wages on which the claim is based from the date on which demand for payment was made until the date of payment or 30 days, whichever occurs first.ⁿ²⁴ This provision does not apply to contractor's bonds required pursuant to Business and Professions Code section 7071.6.ⁿ²⁵

§ 5.70 Available Remedies

An employee who receives less than the minimum wage or overtime compensation required under the California wage orders may pursue the general administrative procedures for resolving wage claims under Labor Code section 98, as described in §§ 5.10-5.18. Alternatively, Labor Code sections 1193.5 and 1195-1197.1 provide additional administrative remedies specifically designed to remedy unlawful failure to pay minimum wages.ⁿ¹ These provisions are discussed in § 5.71. Civil actions for violation of the minimum wage and overtime compensation provisions of the wage orders may also be brought by the DLSEⁿ² or by the employee;ⁿ³ they are discussed in §§ 5.71[6] and 5.72, respectively.

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS

CHAPTER 5 Administrative and Judicial Remedies Under Wage and Hour Laws

Part B. ADDITIONAL REMEDIES FOR FAILURE TO PAY MINIMUM WAGES OR OVERTIME COMPENSATION

Subpart 1. California Law

1-5 California Employment Law § 5.71

AUTHOR: By Susan Spurlark, J.D.

§ 5.71 Role of Division of Labor Standards Enforcement

[1] Acceptance and Investigation of Complaints

Any person may register a complaint with the DLSE that an employee has been paid less than the minimum wage.ⁿ¹ Since the provision does not specifically require that the employee file the complaint, the complaint may be filed anonymously or by one person on behalf of others. The DLSE is required to investigate all such complaints and "take all proceedings necessary to enforce payment of a wage not less than the minimum wage."ⁿ²

The DLSE is authorized to supervise payment of any unpaid minimum wages or overtime compensation found to be owed to any employee under Labor Code sections 1171 et seq. or the provisions of the wage orders.ⁿ³ An employee who accepts payment of sums found to be due on demand of the DLSE thereby waives his or her right to sue the employer directly under Labor Code section 1194.ⁿ⁴

[2] Administrative Rulings

The Labor Commissioner and DLSE are authorized to administer and enforce Labor Code sections 1171 et seq. and wage orders promulgated thereunder.ⁿ⁵ On request, the Labor Commissioner is required to make available enforcement policy statements and interpretations of the California IWC wage orders.ⁿ⁶

The policy statements, interpretive bulletins and informational pamphlets issued by the DLSE have long been given great weight by appellate courts in California when determining questions regarding the meaning of the wage orders and other labor laws.ⁿ⁷ However, the Supreme Court, in Tidewater Marine Western, Inc. v. Bradshaw ⁿ⁸ has concluded that these written interpretations should be given "no weight" in interpreting the wage orders. Tidewater involved the application of wage orders 4-89 and 9-90 to the employers' offshore activities. Defendants relied on the interpretations issued by the DLSE. The Supreme Court noted that the IWC, when promulgating its wage orders must comply with rule-making procedures, including public hearings and input, which are analogous to the notice and public hearing procedures of the Administrative Procedures Act, Government Code section 11340.5, subdivision a, (APA). The Court contrasted this with the DLSE, which utilizes no such procedures when it issues its interpretations. It then determined that the DLSE interpretations constituted regulations because they are rules of "general application" and are interpretations of the wage laws. Accordingly, the Supreme Court concluded that the interpretations set forth in the DLSE Enforcement Policies and Interpretations Manual and in other publications constitute regulations and are therefore void because they are not promulgated in accordance with the APA.ⁿ⁹

[3] Examination of Employer's Records

The Industrial Welfare Commission (IWC), which promulgates the wage orders,ⁿ¹⁰ and the DLSE are charged with ascertaining the wages paid to all employees in California and the hours and conditions of employment in various occupations, and with investigating the "health, safety, and welfare of such employees."ⁿ¹¹ Employers are required to give representatives of the DLSE and members of the IWC access to places of business to secure information or make any authorized investigation; allow inspection and/or make excerpts from books, reports, contracts, payrolls, documents or papers relating to the employment of employees; maintain certain records;ⁿ¹² and furnish the IWC with requested reports and information.ⁿ¹³ Refusal to comply is a misdemeanor.ⁿ¹⁴ Willful failure either to maintain the required records or to allow IWC members or DLSE employees to inspect records subjects an employer to a civil penalty.ⁿ¹⁵ For a full discussion of the DLSE's investigatory powers and limitations on the right to examine employer records, see §§ 5.02 [3] and 5.10.

[4] Penalties

[a] Issuance of Citation of Penalty

Labor Code section 1197.1(b) provides that if, after an investigation, the Labor Commissioner determines that an employee has been paid "wages less than the minimum," the Commissioner "may issue" a penalty citation. The Commissioner may also assess such penalties at the conclusion of a "Berman" hearing under Labor Code section 98(a).ⁿ¹⁶ For enforcement purposes, the Labor Commissioner has interpreted payment of "wages less than the minimum" to include (1) payment of less than the minimum amount required under an IWC wage order; (2) improper credit of tips against the minimum wage; (3) deductions for meals without an advance written agreement; (4) unauthorized deductions for cash shortages or breakage; (5) failure to pay for all hours worked, including on-duty meal periods; and (6) paying a piece rate which does not equal the minimum wage.ⁿ¹⁷ The penalty set forth in Labor Code section 1197.1 is not applicable to (1) nonpayment of wages for overtime when the hourly rate received for all hours is higher than the minimum wage; (2) nonpayment of split-shift premiums or reporting time pay; (3) failure to provide tools, equipment or uniforms or the maintenance of those items; or (4) overcharging for room and board where it is not credited against the minimum wage.ⁿ¹⁸

Labor Code section 1197.1(a) provides the following penalties for such violations:

1. For any initial violation that is intentionally committed, $100 for each underpaid employee for each pay period for which the employee is underpaid; and
2. For each subsequent violation for the same specific offense, $250 for each underpaid employee for each pay period for which the employee is underpaid, regardless of whether the initial violation is intentionally committed.

Because the statute provides that the Commissioner "may" issue a penalty when it finds a violation,ⁿ¹⁹ the DLSE takes the position that the Commissioner is entitled to "exercise judgment as to whether penalties should be assessed."ⁿ²⁰ As interpreted by the DLSE, intentional violations are ones that are "engaged in deliberately or knowingly, rather than accidentally or inadvertently."ⁿ²¹ In assessing whether there is an intentional violation, "evidence of a good-faith dispute, or the payment of wages as a result of a voluntary settlement conference or other mitigating circumstances may be substantial evidence of an absence of intentional violation."ⁿ²² Subsequent violations include any violation occurring after notice of a previous violation, irrespective of whether a citation was issued, and the "same specific offense" includes any failure to pay minimum wages, regardless of the reason.ⁿ²³

Generally, penalties will not be pyramided; that is, if the employer has failed to pay the minimum wage to a single employee as a result of several improper practices (for example, improper crediting of tips and overcharging for meals), the failure will nevertheless be considered one violation.ⁿ²⁴ However, if there are separate violations applicable to different employees, each of those violations may be attributed to the affected employee and multiple penalties may be assessed.ⁿ²⁵ In addition, a violation at one branch of a business (having a separate manager) will not be considered a previous violation, for purposes of assessing penalties against the employer, if a violation is subsequently committed at another branch of the business under different supervision.ⁿ²⁶

The citation must be in writing and describe the nature of the violation and refer to any statutory provisions allegedly violated.ⁿ²⁷ The citation may be served personally or by registered mail.ⁿ²⁸ An employer who does not contest the citation must pay the penalty within 15 business days after issuance of the citation.ⁿ²⁹ In addition, the Labor Commissioner may file a certified copy of the uncontested citation or proposed assessment in the appropriate superior court, and the court clerk must enter judgment for the state against the employer in the amount shown on the citation or the proposed assessment.ⁿ³⁰ The Labor Commissioner must take all appropriate action, including bringing a civil action, to enforce the citation and recover the penalty.ⁿ³¹

In addition to these civil penalties, the employer may be subject to a civil action by the affected employee(s).ⁿ³² The employer or its agent who violates these laws is also subject to criminal prosecution, particularly when the violations are flagrant.ⁿ³³

[b] Contesting Proposed Citation/Assessment of Penalty

Within 15 business days after the service of a citation assessing a civil penalty pursuant to Labor Code Section 1197.1(b), the employer may request an informal hearing to contest the citation and penalty by notifying the office of the Labor Commissioner listed on the citation.ⁿ³⁴ This request may be either oral or written, and notice of the hearing by the DLSE may be oral with a confirming letter.ⁿ³⁵ The DLSE requires that the offender receive at least 3 days' notice of the hearing.ⁿ³⁶ Within 30 days after the request, the Labor Commissioner, or his or her designee, must hold a hearing and affirm, modify, or dismiss the citation.ⁿ³⁷ The decision of the Labor Commissioner must consist of a notice of findings, findings, and an order, and must be served on all parties within 15 days after the hearing.ⁿ³⁸ Any amount found due as a result of the hearing becomes due and payable 45 days after service of the Labor Commissioner's decision.ⁿ³⁹ Within 45 days after service of the decision, the employer may take a writ of mandate to the appropriate superior court.ⁿ⁴⁰ The employer must pay any judgment and costs ultimately rendered against it by the court.ⁿ⁴¹ The Labor Commissioner is required to take all appropriate action, including a civil action, to enforce the citation and recover the penalty.ⁿ⁴²

[5] Injunction

Labor Code Section 1194.5 authorizes the DLSE to seek an injunction in a court of competent jurisdiction barring further violations "in any case in which a person employing an employee has willfully violated any of the laws, regulations, or orders governing the wages, hours of work, or working conditions of such employee" If an injunctive action is brought it is governed by the procedures generally applicable to injunctive procedures and actions by the Labor Commissioner.ⁿ⁴³

[6] Civil Action by Agency on Behalf of Employee

The DLSE or the Department of Industrial Relations (DIR) may institute civil actions on behalf of employees who have been paid less than the minimum wage or who did not receive the required overtime compensation.ⁿ⁴⁴ The affected employees must consent to such an action.ⁿ⁴⁵ An employee's consent to institution of a civil action by the DLSE or DIR pursuant to Labor Code Section 1193.6 waives the employee's right to institute a civil action against the employer pursuant to Labor Code Section 1194, unless the Labor Commissioner's action is dismissed without prejudice by the DLSE or the DIR.ⁿ⁴⁶

If a civil suit is instituted, the Labor Commissioner may recover "costs of suit" in addition to unpaid wages and compensation. If recovered, costs will then be paid if there is sufficient money after payment of the wages, penalties, or demands due to the employees.ⁿ⁴⁷ Although the DLSE is exempt from paying the filing fees and other fees charged by a court in connection with litigation,ⁿ⁴⁸ it is not exempt from paying the costs of litigation specified in Code of Civil Procedure section 1033.5, incurred by an opponent, when the opponent is the prevailing party under Code of Civil Procedure section 1032.ⁿ⁴⁹

On or after January 1, 1992, the DLSE or DIR may commence and prosecute the civil action with or without the consent of the employee. If the action is commenced on or after that date, the DLSE or DIR may also recover interest on the unpaid wages or compensation. In addition to the wages, compensation, and interest awarded, the court must award costs of suit plus reasonable attorney's fees.ⁿ⁵⁰ If the action is brought to recover amounts unpaid in violation of the minimum wage fixed by an order of the commission, the court may also award liquidated damages equal to the amount of wages unlawfully unpaid plus interest. Liquidated damages are not recoverable for failure to pay overtime compensation.ⁿ⁵¹

If within six months after collection, the Labor Commissioner cannot deliver any monies recovered to the person to whom they are due, the monies are deposited in the Industrial Relations Unpaid Wage Fund in the State Treasury until that person can be found.ⁿ⁵²

The owners, officers and managers of corporate employers cannot be personally liable in an action by the Commissioner under Labor Code Section 1193.6 under the IWC "employer" definition.ⁿ⁵³ In Reynolds v. Bement,ⁿ⁵⁴ the California Supreme Court held that the IWC employer definition did not apply to hold corporate control figures liable for the failure of the corporation to pay overtime in an action by an employee under Labor Code Section 1194. In Bradstreet v. Wong,ⁿ⁵⁵ the Court of Appeal found that Labor Code Section 1193.6, like Labor Code Section 1194, uses the term "employee" but does not define it, leaving the court with the same basic issue of statutory interpretation as the Court in Reynolds, i.e., that neither the term "employer" nor the term "employee" are statutorily defined in the substantive Labor Code provisions that were allegedly violated. Absent a clear and unequivocal expression of contrary legislative intent, the court assumed the Legislature intended these terms would be interpreted in accordance with the common law.ⁿ⁵⁶ Although the court cautioned against reading the narrow holding in Reynolds as a categorical decision that all provisions of the Labor Code using the term "employer" or "employee" must be interpreted in accordance with the common law definitions, the court concluded that the mere reference in Labor Code Section 1193.6 to "the orders of the commission" did not evince a clear and unequivocal legislative intent to depart from the established common law meaning of those terms, and that the trial court correctly concluded that, under the common law definition, the corporations, not the individual owners, directors and managers, were the employers liable for the alleged violations of the Labor Code arising out of the failure of the corporations to pay its employees.

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS

CHAPTER 5 Administrative and Judicial Remedies Under Wage and Hour Laws

Part B. ADDITIONAL REMEDIES FOR FAILURE TO PAY MINIMUM WAGES OR OVERTIME COMPENSATION

Subpart 1. California Law

1-5 California Employment Law § 5.72

AUTHOR: By Susan Spurlark, J.D.

§ 5.72 Civil Action by Employee

[1] Right of Action

Any employee who has been paid less than the required minimum wage or overtime compensation is entitled to institute a civil action to recover any sums that are due.ⁿ¹ The averaging method utilized by the federal courts for assessing a violation of the federal minimum wage law is inappropriate for determining an employer's minimum wage obligation under California law. California's labor statutes reflect a strong public policy in favor of full payment of wages for all hours worked.ⁿ² The employee is additionally entitled to recover interest on the unpaid wages or compensation, plus reasonable attorney's fees.ⁿ³ If the employee seeks recovery of amounts unpaid in violation of the minimum wage fixed by an order of the IWC, the court may also award liquidated damages equal to the amount of wages unlawfully unpaid plus interest. An employee may not recover liquidated damages for failure to pay overtime compensation.ⁿ⁴ The waiting time penalties prescribed in Labor Code section 203 may also apply in an action to recover payment of minimum wage.^{n4.1} When a violation of the minimum wage law is claimed, waiting time penalties must be assessed by arriving at a daily wage using the minimum wage claimed by the employee.^{n4.2} The right to bring a civil action cannot be waived by the employee's agreement to work at a rate less than the minimum wage or without overtime compensation, or by acquiescence in payment of less than the statutorily required amounts.ⁿ⁵

If the employee in such an action proves that he or she performed work for which he or she did not receive the proper minimum wage or overtime compensation and produces sufficient evidence to permit a reasonable inference as to the amount and extent of that work, the burden shifts to the employer to come forward with evidence of the precise amount of work performed or to negate the inference drawn from the employee's evidence.ⁿ⁶ If the employer fails to produce such evidence because it has failed to keep proper records of the employee's time, the court may award damages based on the employee's evidence, even if such damages only approximate the actual hours worked.ⁿ⁷

An action for recovery of unpaid overtime compensation must be brought within the three-year limitations period provided by Code of Civil Procedure Section 338(a) for actions based on a liability created by statute, other than a penalty or forfeiture.ⁿ⁸ A separate cause of action for overtime compensation accrues on each regular pay day immediately following the work period during which the services were performed and for which overtime compensation is claimed.ⁿ⁹ Thus, an action for unpaid overtime compensation under section 338(a) is timely only with respect to those paydays that occur within three years prior to commencement of the action.ⁿ¹⁰ However, employees also may be permitted to pursue overtime claims under the four-year statute of limitations contained in the Unfair Business Practices Act, Business & Professions Code section 17200 et seq.

Individuals who exercise corporate control over a corporate employer may not be held personally liable for overtime or other compensation owed an employee under Labor Code section 1194. Further, although corporate directors may be personally liable for tortious activity, a simple failure to comply with statutory overtime requirements does not qualify.^{n10.1} Addressing an issue left open in Reynolds, a court of appeal has held that a chief executive officer of a corporation, even one with operational control, is not liable for the corporation's delinquencies in paying wages, even if the Department of Labor Standards Enforcement, rather than the individual employee, brings the action in court.^{n10.2} The court also opined that dicta in Reynolds leaving open questions concerning the DLSE's use, in administrative proceedings, of the IWC employer definition may be an empty one, since "Berman" hearings are reviewed de novo in superior court at the request of either party.^{n10.3} Additionally, even in the administrative context, the DLSE in its adjudicatory role is obligated to follow the substantive law. Nothing in that process precludes hearing officers from finding individual corporate agents liable for unpaid wages when liability is proven on established common law theories, such as alter ego, or statutory theories. But those are the only theories on which liability against an individual corporate officer may be based.^{n10.4}

Any provision of the Labor Code that provides for a civil penalty to be assessed and collected by the Labor and Workforce Development Agency or any of its departments, divisions, commissions, boards, agencies, or employees, for a violation of the Labor Code, may, as an alternative, be recovered through a civil action brought by an aggrieved employee on behalf of himself or herself and other current or former employees pursuant to the procedures specified in Labor Code section 2699.3.ⁿ¹⁰ For these purposes, an aggrieved employee is any person who was employed by the alleged violator and against whom one or more of the alleged violations was committed.ⁿ¹¹ An aggrieved employee may not maintain an action if the agency or any of its departments, divisions, commissions, boards, agencies, or employees, on the same facts and theories, cites a person for a violation of the same section or sections of the Labor Code under which the aggrieved employee is attempting to recover a civil penalty on behalf of himself or herself or others, or initiates a proceeding pursuant to Labor Code section 98.3.ⁿ¹² Before an employee may file an action seeking to recover civil penalties for violations of any of the Labor Code provisions enumerated in Labor Code § 2699.5, however, the employee must comply with the Labor Code Private Attorneys General Act's administrative procedures as set forth in Labor Code § 2699.3(a). Those procedures include providing notice to the Labor and Workforce Development Agency (LWDA) and the employer and waiting a prescribed period of time to permit the LWDA to investigate and to decide whether to cite the employer for the alleged violations.^{n12.1}

For these purposes, whenever the Labor and Workforce Development Agency, or any of its departments, divisions, commissions, boards, agencies, or employees has discretion to assess a civil penalty, a court is authorized to exercise the same discretion, subject to the same limitations and conditions, to assess the penalty.ⁿ¹³ The civil penalty for violation of all provisions of the Labor Code except those for which a civil penalty is specifically provided is as follows:ⁿ¹⁴

- (1) If, at the time of the alleged violation, the person does not employ one or more employees, the civil penalty is $500.
- (2) If, at the time of the alleged violation, the person employs one or more employees, the civil penalty is $100 for each aggrieved employee per pay period for the initial violation and $200 for each aggrieved employee per pay period for each subsequent violation.

(3) If the alleged violation is a failure to act by the Labor and Workplace Development Agency, or any of its departments, divisions, commissions, boards, agencies, or employees, there is no civil penalty.

In any action by an aggrieved employee seeking recovery of a civil penalty available under Labor Code section 2699 (a) or (f), a court may award a lesser amount than the maximum civil penalty amount if, based on the facts and circumstances of the particular case, to do otherwise would result in an award that is unjust, arbitrary and oppressive, or confiscatory.^{n14.1}

Any employee who prevails in this action is entitled to an award of reasonable attorneys' fees and costs.ⁿ¹⁵ Nothing in Labor Code section 2699 operates to limit an employee's right to pursue other remedies available under state or federal law, either separately or concurrently with an action taken under Section 2699.ⁿ¹⁶ Retroactive to January 1, 2004, and applicable to all pending proceedings, no action may be brought for any violation of a posting, notice, agency reporting, or filing requirement of the Labor Code, except where the filing or reporting requirement involves mandatory payroll or workplace injury reporting.^{n16.1}

Civil penalties recovered against a person who employs one or more employees are distributed as follows: 75% to the Labor and Workforce Development Agency for education of employers and employees about their rights and responsibilities under the Labor Code, to be continuously appropriated to supplement and not supplant the funding to the agency for those purposes, and 25% to the aggrieved employees.ⁿ¹⁷ Civil penalties recovered against a person who does not employ one or more employees are to be distributed to the Labor and Workforce Development Agency for enforcement of labor laws and education of employers and employees about their rights and responsibilities under the Labor Code, to be continuously appropriated to supplement and not supplant the funding to the agency for those purposes.ⁿ¹⁸

Retroactive to January 1, 2004, and applicable to all pending proceedings, the superior court must review and approve any penalties sought as part of a proposed settlement agreement pursuant to Labor Code section 2699.^{n18.1}

Nothing contained in these provisions is intended to alter or otherwise affect the exclusive remedy provided by the workers' compensation provisions.ⁿ¹⁹

A civil action by an aggrieved employee pursuant to Labor Code 2699(a) or (f) alleging a violation of any provision listed in Labor Code section 2699.5 may commence only after the following requirements have been met:^{n19.1}

(1) The aggrieved employee or representative must give written notice by certified mail to the Labor and Workforce Development Agency and the employer of the specific provisions of the Labor Code alleged to have been violated, including the facts and theories to support the alleged violation.

(2) The agency must notify the employer and the aggrieved employee or representative by certified mail that it does not intend to investigate the alleged violation within 30 calendar days of the postmark date of the notice. Upon receipt of that notice or if no notice is provided within 33 calendar days of the postmark date of the notice, the aggrieved employee may commence a civil action pursuant to Labor Code section 2699. If the agency intends to investigate the alleged violation, it must notify the employer and the aggrieved employee or representative by certified mail of its decision within 33 calendar days of the postmark date of the notice. Within 120 calendar days of that decision, the agency may investigate the alleged violation and issue any appropriate citation. If the agency determines that no citation will be issued, it must notify the employer and aggrieved employee of that decision within five business days by certified mail. Upon receipt of that notice or if no citation is issued by the agency within the 158-day period or if the agency fails to provide timely or any notification, the aggrieved employee may commence a civil action. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, a plaintiff may as a matter of right amend an existing complaint to add a cause of action arising under Labor Code section 2699 at any time within 60 days of the specified time periods.

A civil action by an aggrieved employee pursuant to Labor Code section 2699(a) or (f) alleging a violation of any provision of the Labor Code provisions relating to occupational health and safety must meet specified requirements.^{n19.2} A civil action by an aggrieved employee pursuant to Labor Code section 2699(a) or (f) alleging a violation of any provision other than those listed in Labor Code section 2699.5 or the occupational health and safety provisions may commence only after the following requirements have been met:^{n19.3}

- (1) The aggrieved employee or representative must give written notice by certified mail to the Labor and Workforce Development Agency and the employer of the specific provisions of the Labor Code alleged to have been violated, including the facts and theories to support the alleged violation.
- (2) The employer may cure the alleged violation within 33 calendar days of the postmark date of the notice. The employer must give written notice by certified mail within that period of time to the aggrieved employee or representative and the agency if the alleged violation is cured, including a description of actions taken, and no civil action pursuant to Labor Code section 2699 may commence. If the alleged violation is not cured within the 33-day period, the employee may commence a civil action. No employer may avail himself or herself of the notice and cure provisions more than three times in a 12-month period for the same violation or violations contained in the notice, regardless of the location of the worksite.
- (3) If the aggrieved employee disputes that the alleged violation has been cured, the aggrieved employee or representative must provide written notice by certified mail, including specified grounds to support that dispute, to the employer and the agency. Within 17 calendar days of the postmark date of that notice, the agency must review the actions taken by the employer to cure the alleged violation, and provide written notice of its decision by certified mail to the aggrieved employee and the employer. The agency may grant the employer three additional business days to cure the alleged violation. If the agency determines that the alleged violation has not been cured or if the agency fails to provide timely or any notification, the employee may proceed with the civil action. If the agency determines that the alleged violation has been cured, but the employee still disagrees, the employee may appeal that determination to the superior court.

The time periods specified in Labor Code section 2699.3 are not counted as part of the time limited for the commencement of the civil action to recover penalties under Labor Code section 2699.^{n19.4}

[2] FORM--Complaint for Minimum Wages or Overtime Compensation

[a] Comment

The form of complaint set forth in [b], below, is for use by an employee in an action under Labor Code Section 1194 seeking damages for failure to pay minimum wages and/or overtime compensation as required under the California wage orders.ⁿ²⁰ The complaint includes the following allegations:

1. The existence of an employment relationship, including the dates of employment, position held, and the agreed-on wage rate and hours (Paragraphs 2 and 3);ⁿ²¹
2. Facts showing the actual hourly rate received and hours worked by the employee (Paragraph 4);ⁿ²²
3. References to the applicable portions of the relevant wage orders and/or statutory provisions with respect to minimum wage rates and overtime hours (Paragraphs 5 and 6); and

4. The fact of nonpayment of the required minimum wage and/or overtime compensation (Paragraphs 7 and 8).

Violations of minimum wage and/or overtime compensation laws and orders may also involve violations of the provisions of the Labor Code governing payment of wages,ⁿ²³ and causes of action under those provisions or for breach of contractⁿ²⁴ may be included, when appropriate, as well as claims under Business and Professions Code section 17200 for unfair business practices. [3] Defenses

In addition to admitting or denying the allegations of the complaint (for example, denying that an employment relationship existed or that the wages paid to the plaintiff violated the applicable minimum wage or overtime requirements), the employer's answer should set forth any applicable affirmative defenses,ⁿ²⁵ including the following, as appropriate:

1. The employer and/or employee is exempt from the minimum wage and/or overtime compensation requirements of the wage orders;ⁿ²⁶
2. The hours claimed are not "hours worked" within the meaning of the wage orders, so that minimum wage and overtime compensation need not be paid for those hours;ⁿ²⁷

3. The employee was properly paid a subminimum wage pursuant to the provisions of the wage orders;ⁿ²⁸ or

4. Liquidated damages should be denied or reduced because the employer's act or omission was in good faith and the employer had reasonable grounds for believing that the act or omission did not violate any Labor Code provision relating to minimum wage or any order of the IWC.ⁿ²⁹

Note that the fact that an employee agreed to work for less than the legal minimum wage is not a defense to such an action.ⁿ³⁰

§ 5.80 Types of Remedies Available Under Fair Labor Standards Act

The Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA) provides a remedial scheme for failure to pay federally required minimum wages and overtime compensation.ⁿ¹ There are six remedies available for FLSA violations. First, voluntary payment of unpaid minimum wages and overtime payments may be sought under the aegis of the Secretary of Labor through the Wage and Hour Division.ⁿ² Second, the Secretary of Labor may bring a civil action to recover unpaid minimum wages or overtime compensation and liquidated damages in any court of competent jurisdiction.ⁿ³ Third, the Secretary of Labor may seek injunctive relief in federal court against an employer who violates the minimum wage, overtime, discrimination, and other provisions of the FLSA.ⁿ⁴ Fourth, an employee or group of employees may bring a civil action in any court of competent jurisdiction for violation of the minimum wage and overtime rules or alleged discrimination or retaliation.ⁿ⁵ Fifth, civil penalties may be assessed against the employer for repeated or willful violations of minimum wage or overtime provisions.ⁿ⁶ Finally, criminal proceedings may be brought against an employer who willfully violates the FLSA.ⁿ⁷ These are the sole remedies allowed for violations of FLSA.ⁿ⁸

COMPENSATION

Subpart 2. Federal Law

1-5 California Employment Law § 5.81

§ 5.81 Role of Wage and Hour Division of Department of Labor

[1] Supervision Over Payment of Minimum Wages and/or Overtime Compensation

The Secretary of Labor is authorized to supervise payment of unpaid minimum wages and/or overtime compensation due pursuant to the provisions of the FLSA.ⁿ¹ Such payment may occur following an investigation by the Wage and Hour Division.ⁿ² When unpaid minimum wages and overtime compensation are recovered by the Secretary of Labor, they are held in a special deposit account for three years for purposes of payment to the affected employees and, if not payable in that time, are remitted to the United States Treasury.ⁿ³ An employee's acceptance of such amounts recovered by the Secretary as payment in full constitutes a waiver of that employee's right to bring a civil action against the employer pursuant to Title 29 United States Code Section 216(b).ⁿ⁴ The Secretary may delegate his or her enforcement functions under the FLSA to state or local labor authorities, such as the DLSE, with the consent and cooperation of those authorities.ⁿ⁵

[2] Investigation of Employer's Records

The Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division of the Department of Labor or his or her representative may investigate and gather data regarding wages, hours, and working conditions in any industry subject to the FLSA.ⁿ⁶ That authority includes the authority to enter and inspect the place of business, inspect and copy the employer's records, and question employees.ⁿ⁷

The Secretary's authority is circumscribed by the requirement that the investigation be directed to ascertaining whether violations have occurred or to aiding enforcement of the FLSA.ⁿ⁸ The purpose of such an investigation may be to determine whether an employer or employee is covered under the FLSA and may be conducted even though no complaint is pending.ⁿ⁹

The Secretary may issue subpoenas for witnesses and records, which will be enforced if they are reasonably relevant to a subject matter within the scope of the Secretary's authority.ⁿ¹⁰ Contempt is available to enforce a subpoena issued under this provision.ⁿ¹¹ However, the employer has a right to challenge the subpoena before suffering any penalties for noncompliance.ⁿ¹² With their consent and cooperation, the Secretary may utilize the services of state and local authorities, such as the DLSE, in carrying out such investigations in addition to the bureaus or divisions of the Department of Labor.ⁿ¹³

[3] Administrative Rulings

The Wage and Hour Administration issues administrative rulings, interpretive bulletins, and regulations relating to the provisions of the FLSA. These rulings are relied on by employers and employees in determining rights and obligations under that act and, while not binding on the courts, they are entitled to substantial weight.ⁿ¹⁴ In addition, the employer's good-faith reliance on written regulations or interpretations by the Division may in some cases provide a complete and/or partial defense to a civil action under the FLSA.ⁿ¹⁵ For discussion of this defense, see § 5.82[6][b].

[4] Criminal Penalties Against Employers

Criminal penalties may be imposed for a willful violation of the FLSA.ⁿ¹⁶ Criminal sanctions may not be based on an individual act, but require proof of a course of unlawful conduct.ⁿ¹⁷ A person convicted may be subject to a fine of up to $10,000, or imprisonment of up to 6 months, or both.ⁿ¹⁸ Imprisonment may not be imposed, however, unless there has been a prior conviction under the FLSA.ⁿ¹⁹ A plea of nolo contendere will serve as a prior conviction for this purpose.ⁿ²⁰ Since the criminal sanctions are applicable to "any person," not just employers, a manager or supervisor may be held criminally liable under this provision.ⁿ²¹

[5] Complaint Brought by Agency on Behalf of Employee

[a] Generally

The Secretary of Labor is authorized by statute to bring a civil action on behalf of an employee or employees to recover unpaid minimum wages and/or overtime compensation and an equal amount of liquidated damages.ⁿ²² The Secretary does not need the authorization of the affected employees to proceed, and the employees need not be joined as parties.ⁿ²³ Furthermore, the employees' right to bring a civil action on their own behalfⁿ²⁴ terminates when the Secretary files the complaint in such an action, unless the action is dismissed without prejudice on the Secretary's motion.ⁿ²⁵ The affected employees are not permitted to intervene in an action commenced by the Secretary.ⁿ²⁶

The Ninth Circuit has held that a defendant employer is entitled to a jury trial in an action brought by the Secretary to recover liquidated damages under the FLSA, even if the action is combined with a claim for equitable relief.ⁿ²⁷

[b] Jurisdiction

An action by the Secretary of Labor to recover unpaid minimum wages and overtime compensation may be brought in any federal or state court of competent jurisdiction.ⁿ²⁸ Jurisdiction in the federal courts is not dependent on the amount in controversy.ⁿ²⁹

[c] Statute of Limitations

The statute of limitations for actions to recover unpaid minimum wages, overtime compensation, or liquidated damages under the FLSA is set forth in the Portal-to-Portal Act.ⁿ³⁰ Most cases must be brought within two years of the accrual of the cause of action;ⁿ³¹ however, in the case of willful violations, the statute of limitations is extended to three years.ⁿ³² A violation is "willful" for purposes of the FLSA if the employer either knew its conduct was prohibited by the FLSA or showed reckless disregard for the matter of whether its conduct was prohibited.ⁿ³³ The cause of action accrues on each pay day immediately following the period during which services were rendered for which unpaid compensation is claimed,ⁿ³⁴ and the action is deemed commenced on the date that the complaint is filed.ⁿ³⁵

[d] Damages

When the Secretary of Labor brings an action under the FLSA against an employer on behalf of several or many employees, the court may award damages to employees other than those who directly testified based on testimony that fairly represents a percentage of the employer's employees.ⁿ³⁶ Once the employees have established a prima facie case that they have worked hours for which they were not properly compensated, the employer has the burden of coming forward with evidence of the precise amount of work performed or of evidence to negate the reasonableness of the inference to be drawn from the employees' evidence.ⁿ³⁷ If an employer fails to meet its burden, the court may award damages to the employees even if the result is only approximate.ⁿ³⁸ In McLaughlin v. Ho Fat Seto,ⁿ³⁹ the Ninth Circuit affirmed the district court award of damages to the Secretary of Labor for 23 employees, even though only 5 employees had testified at trial, because the damages were an approximation based on reasonable inferences drawn from the employees' testimony, with consideration given to the inconsistencies in the testimony and the court's conclusion that the rebuttal witnesses were not credible.

[6] Injunctions

[a] Generally

Both prospective and restitutionary injunctive relief may be sought for violations of the FLSA.ⁿ⁴⁰ An action for injunctive relief may be brought by the Secretary in conjunction with an action under Title 29 United States Code Section 216(c) to recover unpaid minimum wages and overtime compensation.ⁿ⁴¹ Actions for injunctive relief may only be brought by the Secretary of Labor and only in the United States District Courts.ⁿ⁴²

[b] Types of Violations That May Be Restrained

The following acts may be enjoined by the court in an injunction proceeding brought by the Secretary of Labor:ⁿ⁴³

1. Transportation by any person other than a common carrier of "hot goods" (that is, goods that were produced by employment of employees in violation of the minimum wage or overtime compensation requirements of the FLSA);ⁿ⁴⁴
2. Violations of the minimum wage or overtime compensation requirements of the FLSA,ⁿ⁴⁵ except when the employee would be barred from recovery of those sums by the statute of limitations;ⁿ⁴⁶
3. Discharge of or discrimination against an employee who has initiated or participated in proceedings under the FLSA;ⁿ⁴⁷
4. Violation of the child labor provisions of the FLSA;ⁿ⁴⁸ and
5. Failure to comply with recordkeeping obligations imposed by the FLSA.ⁿ⁴⁹

Injunctions are issued to secure future compliance with the FLSA and to restrain withholding of wages that are due, but not to punish for past violations.ⁿ⁵⁰ In either case, issuance of the injunction is in the public interest and remedies a public offense.ⁿ⁵¹

The grant of an injunction is discretionary.ⁿ⁵² The factors that a court will consider in determining whether to issue an injunction are the duration of the violation, whether the violation was willful as opposed to inadvertent, the probability that the violation will continue without the injunction, and considerations of equity; however, the size of the business and the possible harm the injunction may cause are not reasons to refuse the injunction.ⁿ⁵³

[c] Contempt

An employer or other person who violates an injunction issued pursuant to Title 29 United States Code Section 217 may be held in civil and/or criminal contempt of court.ⁿ⁵⁴ Whether the contempt is civil or criminal depends on the nature of the remedy.ⁿ⁵⁵ In the case of civil contempt, the order is directed toward assuring compliance and may also include an award of costs for the Secretary of Labor's further expenses of investigation and other expenses related to the litigation.ⁿ⁵⁶ In the case of criminal contempt, the object of the action is penal, and the employer may be punished for violation of the injunction by imprisonment or fines even if there is no violation of the criminal provisions of the FLSA.ⁿ⁵⁷ A finding of contempt will not be relieved because the employer's actions were not willful.ⁿ⁵⁸ Further, it is not necessary to show that the employer purposely evaded the prior order to obtain an order holding the employer in contempt.ⁿ⁵⁹ Finally, the usual statute of limitations is not applicable, and an order of contempt can be sought although the injunction was issued more than three years prior to institution of the contempt proceedings.ⁿ⁶⁰

[7] Civil Penalties[a] Imposition of Penalty

The Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division, or an official authorized by the Administrator, has authority to determine when a person has repeatedly or willfully violated the minimum wageⁿ⁶¹ or overtimeⁿ⁶² laws and whether a civil money penalty for the violation is appropriate.ⁿ⁶³ An employer's violation is deemed to be repeated under two circumstances. First, it is repeated if the employer previously violated the minimum wage or overtime laws, provided that the employer previously received notice, through a responsible Wage and Hour Division official or through another authority, of the alleged violation. Second, a violation is repeated if a court or other tribunal finds that an employer previously violated those laws, unless an appeal from that finding has been timely filed and is pending before a court or other tribunal with jurisdiction to hear the appeal, or unless the finding has been set aside or reversed by the appellate tribunal.ⁿ⁶⁴

An employer is deemed to have willfully violated the minimum wage or overtime laws if the employer knew that its conduct was prohibited by the minimum wage and overtime laws or showed reckless disregard for the requirements of those laws.ⁿ⁶⁵ One situation in which an employer's conduct is deemed knowing is when the employer received advice from a responsible Wage and Hour Division official to the effect that the conduct was not lawful.ⁿ⁶⁶ If the employer was required to inquire further into whether its conduct was in compliance with the laws but failed to do so adequately, its conduct is in reckless disregard of the requirements of those laws.ⁿ⁶⁷ The Administrator may impose a civil penalty not exceeding $1,100 on the employer.ⁿ⁶⁸ The amount of the penalty is determined with consideration for the appropriateness of the penalty in relation to the size of the business of the person charged and the gravity of the violation.ⁿ⁶⁹ If appropriate, the Administrator may also consider other relevant factors in assessing the penalty, such as:ⁿ⁷⁰

1. Whether the employer has made efforts in good faith to comply with the provisions of the FLSA and its regulations;
2. The employer's explanation for the violations, including whether the violations were the result of a bona fide dispute of doubtful legal certainty;
3. The previous history of violations, including whether the employer is subject to injunction against violation of the FLSA;
4. The employer's commitment to future compliance;
5. The interval between violations;

6. The number of employees affected; and
7. Whether there is a pattern to the violations.

[b] Procedures for Assessment and Collection[i] Notice of Penalty

If the Administrator decides to impose a civil penalty on any person, the Administrator must issue and serve a notice of the penalty on that person.ⁿ⁷¹ The notice must state the following:ⁿ⁷²

1. The amount of the penalty;
2. The reason or reasons for imposing it;
3. The right of the person to take exception to the assessment and to request a hearing;
4. The fact that the determination becomes final and unappealable if no timely exception and request for a hearing are received; and
5. The time, method, and procedures for taking exception and requesting a hearing.

Service of the notice must be in person or by certified mail.ⁿ⁷³ Personal service is made by delivering the notice to the individual, an officer of the corporation, or the attorney of record. The service is deemed complete when the notice is handed to the party, officer, or attorney, or when it is left at the office with a clerk or person in charge, in a conspicuous place in the office if no one is in charge, or at the residence of the party or attorney.ⁿ⁷⁴

Service by mail is made by sending the notice to the last known address of the individual, corporate officer, or attorney, and such service is deemed complete on mailing.ⁿ⁷⁵ If service by certified mail is not accepted, notice is deemed received on the date of the attempted delivery, and the Administrator has discretion to serve the notice by regular mail.ⁿ⁷⁶

The amount of the penalty determined by the Administrator and set forth in the notice becomes final and may be collected,ⁿ⁷⁷ unless the person charged with the violation takes a timely exception and requests a hearing.ⁿ⁷⁸

[ii] Exception and Request for Hearing

A person who takes exception to the penalty determination must request an administrative hearing. The exception must be mailed to the official who issued the penalty determination at the address of the Wage and Hour Division appearing on the determination notice. It must be received by the Administrator no later than 15 days after the date the person charged receives the notice of the penalty.ⁿ⁷⁹ The 15-day period begins on the day following receipt and includes the fifteenth day. If the fifteenth day is a Saturday, Sunday, or federally observed holiday, the period is extended to include the next business day.ⁿ⁸⁰ No additional time is allowed when service of the notice or of the exception is made by mail.ⁿ⁸¹

The requirements for the contents of the written exception and request for a hearing are minimal. No particular form is prescribed,ⁿ⁸² but precise drafting is important because the exception and request will be given the effect of a responsive pleading in the subsequent administrative hearing.ⁿ⁸³ The request must be dated and typed or legibly written. It must specify which issues stated in the notice give rise to the request and why the person believes that the determination is wrong. The request must be signed by the person making it, or by an authorized representative of that person. It must also include the address at which the person or authorized representative desires to receive further communications relating to the request.ⁿ⁸⁴

[iii] Pre-Hearing Procedures

On receipt of a timely exception and request for hearing, the Administrator, through the Associate or Regional Solicitor for the Division of Fair Labor Standards, must issue an Order of Reference, referring the matter to the Chief Administrative Law Judge. The notice of the penalty determination and the request for a hearing must be attached to the referral order.ⁿ⁸⁵ Counsel for the Administrator must serve a copy of the referral order and attachments, plus a copy of the Procedures for Assessing and Contesting Civil Money Penalties,ⁿ⁸⁶ on the person who requests the hearing in the same manner as service of the notice of determination.ⁿ⁸⁷

The notice of determination and request for hearing are given the effect of a complaint and answer for purposes of the administrative proceeding.ⁿ⁸⁸ Amendments to the notice or request may be permitted by the administrative law judge in compliance with the Rules of Practice and Procedure for Administrative Hearings Before the Office of Administrative Law Judges.ⁿ⁸⁹

The party who requests an administrative hearing must serve copies of all pleadings and other documents required for the hearing on the following persons:ⁿ⁹⁰

1. Two copies on the attorneys for the Department of Labor;
2. One copy on the Associate Solicitor, Division of Fair Labor Standards, Office of the Solicitor, U.S. Department of Labor, 200 Constitution Avenue NW, Washington, DC 20210; and
3. One copy on the attorney representing the Department of Labor in the proceeding.

The administrative law judge appointed to hear the case will notify the parties of the time and place of the prehearing conference and the hearing.ⁿ⁹¹

[iv] Administrative Hearing and Decision

The hearing is conducted in accordance with the Rules of Practice and Procedure for Administrative Hearings Before the Office of Administrative Law Judges.ⁿ⁹² To the extent those Rules conflict with the Procedures for Assessing and Contesting Civil Money Penalties,ⁿ⁹³ the latter control.ⁿ⁹⁴ An exception to the Rulesⁿ⁹⁵ is made to allow for the admissibility of testimony by current or former Department of Labor employees concerning information obtained in the course of investigations and conclusions drawn from that information. Any documents in the Department of Labor files, except the investigation file on the violations at issue, are also admissible in the proceeding.ⁿ⁹⁶

The administrative law judge must render a decision on the issues referred by the Administrator.ⁿ⁹⁷ With respect to each material issue presented on the record, the decision must state the findings, conclusions, and reasons for such conclusions. It must also wholly or partially affirm, deny, reverse, or modify the Administrator's determination.ⁿ⁹⁸ The decision must be limited to a determination of whether the respondent committed a repeated or willful violation of the minimum wage or overtime laws and whether the penalty assessed was appropriate. The judge may not determine the legality of a regulation or the constitutionality of a statute.ⁿ⁹⁹

The administrative law judge must serve copies of the decision on each party.ⁿ¹⁰⁰ The decision constitutes the final order of the Secretary of Labor, unless a party appeals.ⁿ¹⁰¹ The official record of each completed administrative hearing is filed with the Chief Administrative Law Judge.ⁿ¹⁰²

[v] Appeal to Secretary of Labor

A party who desires to have the decision of an administrative law judge reviewed must file an original and two copies of a petition for review with the Department of Labor's Administrative Review Board in Washington, DC.ⁿ¹⁰³ The petition must be received by the Secretary within 30 days of the date of the decision.ⁿ¹⁰⁴ If a petition for review is timely filed, the decision of the Administrative Law Judge is inoperative unless and until the Board dismisses the appeal or issues a decision affirming the decision of the Administrative Law Judge.ⁿ¹⁰⁵ Documents are not deemed filed with the Board until actually received by the Board, either on or before the due date. No additional time is added when service of a document requiring action within a prescribed time was made by mail.^{n105.1}

Copies of the petition for review must be served on all parties and on the Chief Administrative Law Judge,ⁿ¹⁰⁶ who is required to forward the administrative hearing record to the Secretary on receipt of the petition for review.ⁿ¹⁰⁷ A copy of each document filed with the Board must be served on all other parties involved in the proceeding. Service must be by personal delivery or by mail. Service by mail is deemed effected at the time of mailing to the last known address of the party.ⁿ¹⁰⁸

The final decision of the Board must be served on all parties and on the Chief Administrative Law Judge. Service must be in person or by mail to the last known address.ⁿ¹⁰⁹

[vi] Collection of Penalty

When the penalty determination becomes final, the amount of the penalty is immediately due and payable to the U.S. Department of Labor. Payment must be made by certified check or money order, payable to the Wage and Hour Division, and must be delivered or mailed to the District Office of the Wage and Hour Division which issued and served the original notice of the penalty.ⁿ¹¹⁰

The Secretary has authority to collect an unpaid penalty by any of three methods. First, if the person charged is owed any sums by a United States agency, the Secretary may request the agency to withhold the penalty amount from the sums owed and to remit it to the Secretary.ⁿ¹¹¹ Second, if the person charged does not remit the penalty within a reasonable time after notification to do so, the Secretary may institute a civil action to recover the penalty in any court of competent jurisdiction.ⁿ¹¹² Third, if the penalty is imposed as part of a court order in a civil action brought by the Secretary to enjoin a violation of the child labor lawⁿ¹¹³ or a repeated or willful violation of the wageⁿ¹¹⁴ or overtimeⁿ¹¹⁵ laws, or in a criminal proceeding brought by the Department of Justice to enforce compliance with these same statutes,ⁿ¹¹⁶ a noncomplying party may be subject to contempt proceedings.ⁿ¹¹⁷

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS

CHAPTER 5 Administrative and Judicial Remedies Under Wage and Hour Laws

Part B. ADDITIONAL REMEDIES FOR FAILURE TO PAY MINIMUM WAGES OR OVERTIME

COMPENSATION

Subpart 2. Federal Law

1-5 California Employment Law § 5.82

AUTHOR: By Susan Spurlark, J.D.

§ 5.82 Claim of Employee

[1] Procedure for Bringing Claim

Title 29 United States Code Section 216(b) authorizes the institution of actions by aggrieved employees for recovery of unpaid minimum wages and overtime compensation as well as an equal amount of liquidated damages, attorney's fees, and costs. The employee is not required to pursue any administrative procedure, give notice of the claim, or exhaust arbitration or grievance proceedings prior to bringing such an action.ⁿ¹ The action may also be brought even if the employee previously raised the issue of FLSA violations in arbitration and lost.ⁿ² However, the employee's right to bring an action terminates if he or she accepts payment of sums recovered by the Secretary of Labor as payment in full or if the Secretary brings an action to recover unpaid minimum wages and overtime compensation or to enjoin withholding of such compensation.ⁿ³

Such actions are governed by the same statute of limitations as actions by the Secretary of Labor under Title 29 United States Code Section 216(c),ⁿ⁴ which is discussed in § 5.81[5][c]. The statute of limitations is tolled by the filing of the complaint where all plaintiffs are named and consent to the suit at the outset.ⁿ⁵ If an action is brought on behalf of other unnamed individuals who are similarly situated, it is not commenced as to those individuals until they have filed effective consents to be parties and to be bound by the action with the court.ⁿ⁶

Similarly, in Albertson's, Inc. v. United Food ⁿ⁷ a suit brought under Title 29 United States Code Section 185, the Ninth Circuit held that employees who were forced to work "off the clock" (that is, without having punched in and received their proper pay) have the right to sue under the FLSA, regardless of whether their claims also are covered by the terms of a collectively bargained grievance and arbitration procedure.ⁿ⁸ The court explained that in submitting a grievance to arbitration, an employee seeks to vindicate his or her contractual right under a collective bargaining agreement, while in filing a lawsuit under the FLSA, an employee asserts independent statutory rights granted by Congress. The distinctly separate nature of these contractual and statutory rights is not vitiated merely because both are violated as a result of the same factual occurrence.ⁿ⁹

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

Although Albertson's holds that a collectively bargaining grievance and arbitration procedure does not bar an employee from pursuing his or her statutory FLSA claims in court,ⁿ¹⁰ it does not follow that an employee who has arbitrated his or her wage claim and lost may bring an FLSA lawsuit without fear of res judicata or collateral estoppel. Practitioners should research the current status of federal and state law to determine whether the arbitration decision may preempt some or all of the issues presented in the employee's court complaint. Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

[2] Jurisdiction

Both the federal and state courts of general jurisdiction can entertain actions by employees to recover unpaid minimum wages and/or overtime compensation.ⁿ¹¹ The federal courts may also exercise pendent jurisdiction over related state claims.ⁿ¹² The provision of the FLSA that suit under the Act "may be maintained... in any Federal or State court of competent jurisdiction,"ⁿ¹³ does not bar removal of a suit from state to federal court.ⁿ¹⁴

[3] Parties

Actions for recovery of unpaid minimum wages and/or overtime compensation under the FLSA may not be maintained by representatives of the affected employees such as unions or assignees.ⁿ¹⁵ As noted in [1], above, any represented employees must file their consent to participate in such an action.ⁿ¹⁶ However, the courts give a liberal construction to "related" claims in determining what claims may be brought together.ⁿ¹⁷ In addition, such an action may be maintained by the estate of a deceased employee.ⁿ¹⁸

The requirement that employees cannot be party plaintiffs unless (a) they give their consent in writing to participate in the action and (b) the consent is filed with the court^{n18.1} is known as the "opt-in" provision.^{n18.2} Actions involving opt-in provisions are known as "collective actions" rather than "class actions."^{n18.3} Further, because of the opt-in provision, actions for unpaid minimum wages or overtime compensation under the FLSA cannot be brought as class actions governed by Fed. R. Civ. Proc. 23.^{n18.4} In a Rule 23 proceeding, a class is described in the complaint. If the action is maintainable as a class action, each person within the description is considered to be a class member and, as such, is bound by the judgment, whether favorable or unfavorable, unless the person has "opted out" of the suit. Under the opt-in provision of the FLSA, no person can become a party plaintiff or be bound by or benefit from a judgment unless that person has affirmatively "opted into" the class, i.e., given written, filed consent.^{n18.5} Other differences include the following:^{n18.6}

- The tolling of the statute of limitations. In federal class actions the statute of limitations is tolled for all class members until the class certification has been made or the individual class member opts out,^{n18.7} while in an FLSA action the statute is tolled only after the plaintiff has opted in.
- The definitions of parties "similarly situated."
- The considerations affecting the trial court's involvement in an FLSA action in the process of notifying potential additional plaintiffs. The problems generated by the notice of the pending action to potential plaintiffs in a collective action with the opt-in feature call for early and active intervention by the trial court.^{n18.8} In a class action, the trial court's role, at least at the outset of the action, is more passive and restricted to ruling on whether the action should be certified as a class action.

Further, a FLSA plaintiff who voluntarily settles individual claims prior to being joined by opt-in plaintiffs does not retain a personal stake in the appeal of the trial court's class action certification denial so as to preserve appellate jurisdiction.^{n18.9}

The proper defendant to be joined will vary according to the employer's form of business. A corporate employer, for example, may be sued after merger.ⁿ¹⁹ Individual stockholders may be liable if the corporation has been dissolved and insufficient assets remain to pay the wage claims.ⁿ²⁰ Suit may be brought against an individual who is the principal stock holder and manager in a corporate employer.ⁿ²¹ Suit may also be brought against individuals who would not be considered common law "employers." When an individual exercises "control over the nature and structure of the employment relationship," or "economic control" over the relationship, that individual is an employer within the meaning of the FLSA.ⁿ²² Partners may be held liable in proportion to their interest in the partnership.ⁿ²³

Individual managers can be held liable under the FLSA even after the corporation has filed for bankruptcy.^{n23.1}

Joint employers may both be held liable.ⁿ²⁴ An employer and union that violate provisions of the FLSA may be sued jointly.ⁿ²⁵

Because states enjoy sovereign immunity from FLSA claims, employees may not sue a state in federal court in the absence of a waiver by the state.ⁿ²⁶ Such a waiver will only be found when stated "by the most express language or by such overwhelming implications from the text as (will) leave no room for any other reasonable construction."ⁿ²⁷

Parties may preserve their anonymity in filing a suit under the FLSA in special circumstances when the need for anonymity outweighs prejudice to the opposing party and the public's interest in knowing the party's identity.ⁿ²⁸ The Ninth Circuit has held that in cases in which pseudonyms are used to shield the anonymous party from retaliation, the district court should determine the need for anonymity by evaluating the following factors: (1) the severity of the threatened harm, (2) the reasonableness of the anonymous party's fears, and (3) the anonymous party's vulnerability to such retaliation.ⁿ²⁹

[3A] Discovery and Evidence

Fed. R. Civ. Proc. 26(a)(1)(A)(iii) requires the disclosure of a computation of each category of damages claimed by the disclosing party. Rule 26(e)(1)(A) requires disclosing parties to supplement their prior disclosures in a timely manner when the prior response is incomplete or incorrect. Fed. R. Civ. Proc. 37(c)(1) gives teeth to these requirements by forbidding the use at trial of any information required to be disclosed by Rule 26(a) that is not properly disclosed.^{n29.1}

Under Fed. R. Civ. Proc. 37, exclusion of evidence not disclosed is appropriate unless the failure to disclose was substantially justified or harmless.^{n29.2} In actions brought under the FLSA, a plaintiff may be substantially justified in failing to disclose damage computations for each opt-in plaintiff, because the law is unsettled as to the obligation to disclose such information on an individual basis in FLSA opt-in class of actions.^{n29.3} However, when individual opt-in plaintiffs also proceed on state law causes of action that were not included in the class action, disclosure on an individual basis is required under Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a).^{n29.4}

[4] Amounts Recoverable

In an action under Title 29 United States Code Section 216(b), the employer is liable to the plaintiff-employees for any unpaid minimum wages and/or overtime compensation found to be due under the terms of the FLSA.ⁿ³⁰ Assuming that the plaintiffs can show by reasonable inference that work was performed and not properly compensated, recovery is proper even if the damages cannot be calculated with precision because of the employer's failure to keep proper records.ⁿ³¹

In addition, the successful plaintiff is entitled to an award of liquidated damages equal to the amount of minimum wages or overtime compensation found to be due, unless the employer can show that the act or omission was in good faith and that the employer had reasonable grounds for believing that there was no violation of the FLSA.ⁿ³² If the employer establishes such good faith, the court has "discretion" to award no liquidated damages or to award an amount less than the amount to which the employee would otherwise be entitled under Title 29 United States Code, section 216.ⁿ³³ although the court is not required to so limit the award.ⁿ³⁴ A claim for liquidated damages arises when the minimum wages and/or overtime compensation are not paid when due, and a claim may be brought for liquidated damages even if the underlying wages are subsequently paid.ⁿ³⁵ A finding of the employer's good faith is plainly inconsistent with a finding of the employer's willfulness, allowing extension of the statute of limitations from two to three years under 29 U.S.C. § 255(a).ⁿ³⁶ The only circuit to address the issue has concluded that punitive damages are available under the FLSA.ⁿ³⁷

Interest on the judgment may also be awarded. Prejudgment interest is not awarded when liquidated damages are awarded.ⁿ³⁸ The Ninth Circuit awards prejudgment interest on the grounds that compensation should be provided for the loss of the use of the money that was owed.ⁿ³⁹ However, not all the circuits agree.ⁿ⁴⁰ Awards of postjudgment interest are made as a matter of course.ⁿ⁴¹

Finally, the plaintiff-employees are entitled to recover attorney's fees and costs if successful.ⁿ⁴² The award of attorney's fees may include fees for work on appeal and post-remand matters if the judgment is upheld.ⁿ⁴³ The award of fees is mandatory, but the amount is within the discretion of the court.ⁿ⁴⁴ The factors that are considered in making the fee award are those enumerated in the case of Kerr v. Screen Extras Guild, Inc. ⁿ⁴⁵

[5] FORM--Complaint for Minimum Wages or Overtime Pay

[a] Comment

The form set forth in subsection [b], below, is a complaint for recovery of minimum wages and/or overtime compensation by an employee pursuant to Title 29 United States Code, section 216(b). The form set forth below is designed for use in an action in United States District Court, although its substantive allegations may be modified for use in an action brought in state court.

If brought in federal court, the complaint is subject to the requirements of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Rule 8.ⁿ⁴⁶ The complaint must include the following allegations:

1. Facts showing that the federal court has subject matter jurisdiction (Paragraph 1);ⁿ⁴⁷
2. Facts showing that the employer and employee are covered under the FLSA, either because the employee is personally engaged in commerce or the production of goods for commerce or because the employee is employed by an "enterprise" engaged in commerce or the production of goods for commerce (Paragraph 3);ⁿ⁴⁸
3. Facts showing the existence of an employer-employee relationship (Paragraph 2);ⁿ⁴⁹
4. The nature of the alleged violation of the FLSA (that is, payment of less than the minimum wage or overtime compensation required under the FLSA);ⁿ⁵⁰
5. The amount of unpaid minimum wages and/or overtime compensation sought, the period for which it is claimed, and the rate at which it is calculated; and
6. Facts sufficient to take the complaint outside of the limitations of the Portal-to-Portal Act (if the facts alleged in the complaint show the potential applicability of those limitations).ⁿ⁵¹

[6] Defenses

[a] Generally

Potential defenses to an action under the FLSA to recover unpaid minimum wages and/or overtime compensation, plus liquidated damages, include the following:

1. The employer or employee is statutorily exempt from the minimum wage and/or overtime compensation requirements of the FLSA;n52
2. The employee was employed by a public agency and received compensatory time off in lieu of overtime, as allowed by the FLSA;n53
3. The hours for which the employee claims compensation are not considered working time under the FLSA and Portal-to-Portal Act;n54
4. The action is barred by the statute of limitations;n55 or
5. The plaintiff-employee accepted payment of back wages under the supervision of the Secretary of Labor as payment in full.n56

In addition, as discussed in [b], below, the employer's good-faith belief in the legality of its actions may under certain circumstances constitute a complete or partial defense to such an action.n57

[b] "Good-Faith" Defenses Under Portal-to-Portal Act

The Portal-to-Portal Act provides two separate defenses based on the employer's good-faith belief in the legality of its actions.n58 First, Title 29 United States Code, section 259 provides that an employer shall not be subject to any liability or punishment for failure to pay minimum wages or overtime compensation under the FLSA if the employer pleads and proves that it acted in good-faith conformity with and reliance on any written administrative regulation, order, ruling, approval, or interpretation of the Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division of the Department of Labor or any administrative practice or enforcement policy of that agency with respect to the class of employers to which it belongs. This defense, once established, bars liability even if, subsequent to the act or omission, the administrative regulation, order, ruling, approval, interpretation, practice, or enforcement policy is modified or rescinded or is determined by judicial authority to be invalid or of no legal effect.n59 This defense and the definitions of the terms used are set forth in further detail in the regulations issued by the Wage and Hour Division.n60 To be insulated from liability under this good faith exception, an employer must show that it acted in (1) good faith, (2) conformity with, and (3) reliance on the Department of Labor's regulations or the Administrator's Opinion Letter.n61 The test has both objective and subjective components. The test is whether the employer acted as a reasonably prudent person would have acted under the same or similar circumstances. It also requires that the employer have honesty of intention and no knowledge of circumstances that ought to put the employer on inquiry.ⁿ⁶² The test also places on employers an affirmative duty to inquire about uncertain FLSA coverage issues.ⁿ⁶³ The employer bears the burden of proof to establish this exception.ⁿ⁶⁴ⁿ⁶⁵ There must be an affirmative writing by the agency. For example, the failure of the agency to respond to an employer's request for a ruling is not considered an interpretation or ruling of the agency.ⁿ⁶⁶ Furthermore, the administrative regulation, order, ruling, approval, or interpretation must be in effect at the time of the reliance.ⁿ⁶⁷

A separate defense established by Title 29 United States Code, section 260 bars recovery of liquidated damages under the FLSAⁿ⁶⁸ if the employer proves to the satisfaction of the court that the act or omission complained of was in good faith and that the employer had reasonable grounds for believing that its act or omission was not a violation of the FLSA.ⁿ⁶⁹ The employer bears the difficult burden of proving both subjective good faith and objective reasonableness, with double damages being the norm and single damages the exception.ⁿ⁷⁰ This defense, if established, permits the court to exercise its discretion as to whether or not to award liquidated damages and, if so, whether to award an amount less than the amount to which the plaintiff would otherwise be entitled under Title 29 United States Code, section 216.ⁿ⁷¹ If the defendant employer fails to sustain its burden of proof, an award of liquidated damages equal to the amount of back wages due is mandatory.ⁿ⁷²

[7] Termination of Right to Bring Claim

An agreement to accept sums recovered pursuant to a settlement under the Secretary of Labor's supervision as payment in full of minimum wages and overtime compensation due waives the employee's rights to bring a civil action on receipt of full payment, including liquidated damages.ⁿ⁷³ The right to bring an action for recovery of minimum wages and/or overtime compensation or to join in such an action also terminates when the Secretary of Labor files a complaint for minimum wages, overtime compensation, liquidated or other damages, or for injunctive relief.ⁿ⁷⁴ The right to maintain an individual action is reinstated if the Secretary's action under Title 29 United States Code, section 216(c) is dismissed without prejudice on motion of the Secretary.ⁿ⁷⁵

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS

CHAPTER 5 Administrative and Judicial Remedies Under Wage and Hour Laws

Part B. ADDITIONAL REMEDIES FOR FAILURE TO PAY MINIMUM WAGES OR OVERTIME

COMPENSATION

Subpart 2. Federal Law

1-5 California Employment Law § 5.83

AUTHOR: By Susan Spurlark, J.D.

§ 5.83 Protection of Employee for Filing Claim or Testifying Against Employer

The FLSA makes it unlawful for "any person" to discharge or in any other manner discriminate against any employee because that employee has (1) filed any complaint or instituted or caused to be instituted any proceeding under or related to the FLSA, or (2) has testified or is about to testify in any such proceeding.ⁿ¹ This anti-retaliation provision has been held applicable to an employee who resigned because of alleged discrimination and to an employee who testified in a criminal proceeding against an employer.ⁿ² Another example of an act of retaliation prohibited by this provision is the filing of a lawsuit against an employee who brought a claim against the employer.ⁿ³ An employer may be held liable for such retaliation even if the employer is ultimately determined not to be covered by the FLSA and regardless of the merits of the underlying claims.ⁿ⁴

In a case of first impression in the circuit, the Ninth Circuit concluded that the FLSA's antiretaliation provision should be interpreted broadly to include informal complaints made to employers.ⁿ⁵ The court pointed out, however, that the complaints made cannot be too amorphous, informal, or generalized.ⁿ⁶ The issue of specificity must be determined on a case-by-case basis, but as long as the employee communicates the substance of the allegations to the employer, he or she will be protected by the antiretaliation provision. In addition, the employee may communicate the complaint either orally or in writing, and need not refer to the statute by name.ⁿ⁷

An employer who unlawfully discriminates against a claimant or witness in a proceeding under the FLSA is liable for legal or equitable relief as appropriate under the circumstances, including employment, reinstatement, promotion, back pay, and an additional equal amount as liquidated damages.ⁿ⁸ The purpose of the award is to return the employee to the position he or she would have been in but for the discrimination.ⁿ⁹ However no award will be made for gross humiliation, embarrassment, and inconvenience.ⁿ¹⁰ The court has discretion with regard to the propriety of an order of reinstatement, and such a remedy will be denied where there is evidence of dishonesty or incompetence.ⁿ¹¹

An employee injured by such discrimination or retaliation may bring a civil action on his or her own behalf or on behalf of other employees similarly situated (with their written consent) to obtain the remedies described above, subject to the same provisions applicable to actions to recover minimum wages or overtime compensation, as discussed in § 5.82.ⁿ¹² However, the employee's right to bring or to become a party to such an action terminates if the Secretary of Labor brings an action pursuant to Title 29 United States Code, section 217 for legal and equitable relief as a result of such discrimination or retaliation.ⁿ¹³

For discussion of other statutory and common law remedies for unlawful termination or retaliation, see generally Chapter 60.

CHAPTER 6 Child Labor Laws

1-6 California Employment Law Scope

AUTHOR: By Susan Spurlark, J.D.

Scope

By Susan Spurlark, J.D. n SCOPE*

This chapter discusses state and federal laws and regulations that restrict and regulate the employment of minors. The chapter identifies the persons covered by child labor laws and persons who are exempt from coverage. The chapter also discusses limitations on the time of day or night and the total number of hours that may be worked by minors, as well as the type of work in which minors may engage. Finally, the chapter discusses the permits that are required when minors are employed, the penalties for violations of child labor laws, and enforcement procedures.

Remedies for violations of wage and hour laws generally are covered in Chapter 5. Minimum wage requirements as they relate to minors are discussed in Chapter 2. Overtime compensation requirements are discussed in Chapter 3. For an overview of the applicability of various wage and hour laws, including the child labor provisions thereof, see Chapter 1.

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS

CHAPTER 6 Child Labor Laws

Part A. TEXT

1-6 California Employment Law § 6.01

AUTHOR: By Susan Spurlark, J.D.

§ 6.01 Persons Covered and Exempted

[1] California Law

[a] Generally

The California Labor Code and California Education Code contain numerous provisions regulating the employment of minors. These statutory provisions restrict both (1) the hours that minors may be employed,ⁿ¹ and (2) the types of work that minors may perform.ⁿ² The Education Code also contains provisions regulating the employment of minors by requiring minor pupils to obtain work permits.ⁿ³ The purpose of these laws is to "protect minors against the risk of injuries generally associated with child labor, such as overwork and exposure to dangerous, immoral, or unhealthful conditions."ⁿ⁴

As used in the Labor Code provisions, a minor is any person who is under the age of 18 years and required to attend school pursuant to the compulsory education laws.ⁿ⁵ However, under that definition, a person under the age of 18 who is not required to attend school solely because he or she is not a resident of California is still considered a minor.ⁿ⁶ A minor also includes any person under the age of six years.ⁿ⁷ Some of the child labor provisions apply only to minors under the age of 16 years,ⁿ⁸ and some are limited to younger minors.ⁿ⁹

Civil and criminal sanctions for violations of the child labor laws apply to any person, or agent or officer thereof, who employs a minor directly or indirectly through third persons in violation of the Labor Code provisions, and also to parents and guardians who violate those provisions.ⁿ¹⁰ These provisions, and civil penalties for their violation, also apply to persons who own or control the real property on which the minor is employed, regardless of whether the owner is the minor's employer, if the employment is for such owner's benefit and he or she knowingly permits the violation or continuation of the violation.ⁿ¹¹

[b] Exemptions

The Labor Code restrictions on employment of minors do not prohibit or prevent the following:

1-6 California Employment Law § 6.01

1. Employment by the minor's parent(s) or guardian(s) if the work involves agricultural, horticultural, viticultural, or domestic labor, is performed when the public schools are not in session or outside of school hours, and is performed on or in connection with premises owned, operated, or controlled by the parent or guardian;ⁿ¹²
2. Employment of minors who are exempt from compulsory school attendance under Education Code Section 48231 (exemption for pupils who enter from another state within ten school days before end of school term);ⁿ¹³ or
3. The appearance of a minor in (a) any church, public or religious school, or community entertainment, (b) any school entertainment or any entertainment for charity or for children, for which no admission fee is charged, (c) any radio or television broadcasting exhibition, if the minor receives no compensation directly or indirectly therefore, the engagement is limited to a single appearance lasting no more than one hour, and no admission fee is charged, or (d) any one event during a calendar year, occurring on a day when school attendance is not required or on the preceding day, lasting four hours or less, provided the minor's parent or guardian is present and the minor does not directly or indirectly receive any compensation.ⁿ¹⁴

Furthermore, minors 14 and 15 years of age may be employed in occupations not otherwise prohibited by the child labor provisions of the Labor Code, including, but not limited to, the following:

1. Office and clerical work, including operation of office machines;ⁿ¹⁵
2. Cashiering, selling, modeling, art work, work in advertising departments, window trimming, and comparative shopping;ⁿ¹⁶
3. Price marking and tagging by hand or by machine, assembling orders, packing, and shelving;ⁿ¹⁷
4. Bagging and carrying out customers' orders;ⁿ¹⁸
5. Errand and delivery work by foot, bicycle, or public transportation;ⁿ¹⁹
6. Cleanup work, including the use of vacuum cleaners and floor waxers, and maintenance of grounds (other than the use of power-driven mowers or cutters);ⁿ²⁰
7. Kitchen work and other work involved in preparing and serving food and beverages, including operation of machines and devices used in the performance of this work;ⁿ²¹ or
8. Cleaning vegetables and fruits, and wrapping, sealing, labelling, weighing, pricing, and stocking goods (if performed in areas physically separate from areas where meat is prepared and outside freezers or meat coolers).ⁿ²²

The Labor Commissioner may issue an exemption from laws regulating the employment of minors to employers operating agricultural packing plants that employ minors 16 and 17 years of age on days when school is not in session.ⁿ²³ The exemptions allow employment of these minors for up to 10 hours per day during the peak harvest season.ⁿ²⁴ The Labor Commissioner may grant an exemption only if it will not materially affect the safety and welfare of minor employees and if it will prevent undue hardship on the employer.ⁿ²⁵ An employer must apply for the exemption and may have to undergo an inspection of the plant before the Labor Commissioner issues the exemption.ⁿ²⁶

In addition, many of the specific statutory restrictions contain exceptions specifically applicable to those provisions. These exceptions are discussed under the specific provisions to which they relate.

[2] Federal Law

[a] Generally

[i] Fair Labor Standards Act--Oppressive Child Labor

The Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA)ⁿ²⁷ prohibits any employer from employing any "oppressive child labor" in commerce or the production of goods for commerce, or in any enterprise engaged in commerce or the production of goods for commerce.ⁿ²⁸ For general discussion of the applicability of the FLSA, including a discussion of what constitutes employment in commerce or the production of goods for commerce (or an "enterprise" engaged in such activities), see Chapter 1.

Except as discussed in [b], below, employment of a minor under the age of 16 years in any occupation constitutes "oppressive child labor,"ⁿ²⁹ and is therefore prohibited by the FLSA.ⁿ³⁰ Employment of minors between the ages of 16 and 18 years in occupations determined by the Secretary of Labor to be particularly hazardous for the employment of minors or detrimental to their health or well-being also constitutes "oppressive child labor."ⁿ³¹ For discussion of particular occupations that have been determined to be hazardous to minors by the Secretary, see § 6.03[2].

[ii] Fair Labor Standards Act--"Hot Goods" Prohibited

A separate provision applicable to producers, manufacturers, and dealers bars such persons or entities from shipping or delivering for shipment in commerce any goods that have been produced in an establishment located in the United States where oppressive child labor was employed within 30 days prior to the removal of the goods from that establishment.ⁿ³² Under this provision, goods produced in such an establishment may not lawfully be shipped in commerce even if oppressive child labor was not employed to produce those particular goods.ⁿ³³

This provision, often referred to as the "hot goods" provision, is not applicable to a purchaser who acquires the goods in good faith in reliance on a written assurance from the producer, manufacturer, or dealer that the goods were produced in compliance with the child labor provisions of the FLSA, and who acquired the goods for value without notice of any violation of the FLSA.ⁿ³⁴ In addition, a prosecution and conviction of a defendant for shipping or delivering goods in violation of the FLSA acts as a bar to any further prosecution against the same defendant for shipments or deliveries of such goods that occurred before the beginning of the prosecution.ⁿ³⁵

[iii] Other Laws

The provisions of the FLSA regarding child labor must be complied with in addition to any other applicable law, and do not pre-empt other federal, state, or local laws that impose higher standards than the FLSA.ⁿ³⁶ Thus, if more than one law or regulation applies to a particular activity governed by various child labor laws, the more stringent standard applies.ⁿ³⁷

Other federal laws containing provisions that relate to child labor include the Walsh-Healy Act,ⁿ³⁸ which governs the use of child labor by federal contractors;ⁿ³⁹ and the Mineral Land Leasing Act,ⁿ⁴⁰ which, among other things, restricts the employment of children under 16 years of age in certain mining operations.ⁿ⁴¹

[b] Exemptions

[i] Employment by Parents

Although employment of a minor under the age of 16 years in commerce or the production of goods for commerce generally constitutes "oppressive child labor" and is prohibited by the FLSA,ⁿ⁴² the FLSA permits a parent or person standing in the place of a parent to employ his or her own child or ward who is under the age of 16 years in an occupation other than manufacturing, mining, or those that have been found to be particularly hazardous or detrimental to the health and well being of children between the ages of 16 and 18 years.ⁿ⁴³ This exemption does not apply unless the child works exclusively for the parent or person standing in the parent's place.ⁿ⁴⁴ A minor below the age of 16 years who is employed in agricultural occupations that are particularly hazardous to children under the age of 16 years is also exempt from the child labor provisions of the FLSA if the minor is employed by his or her parent (or a person standing in the place of a parent) on a farm owned or operated by that parent.ⁿ⁴⁵

[ii] Agricultural Occupations

The child labor provisions of the FLSA do not apply to a minor employed in agriculture outside of school hours for the school district in which the minor resides, if one of the following conditions also exists:ⁿ⁴⁶

1. The employee is less than 12 years old, and is employed either (a) by his or her parent (or by a person standing in the place of a parent) on a farm owned or operated by the parent, or (b) with the consent of his or her parent (or a person standing in the place of a parent) on a farm where none of the employees must be paid the federal minimum wage because of the exemption provided by Title 29 United States Code, Section 213(a)(6)(A);ⁿ⁴⁷ or
2. The employee is 12 or 13 years old, and (a) the employment is with the consent of his or her parent (or a person standing in the place of a parent), or (b) his or her parent (or a person standing in the place of a parent) is employed on the same farm; or
3. The employee is 14 years old or older.

The exemption does not apply to an employee under the age of 16 years who is employed in an agricultural occupation found to be particularly hazardous for children below the age of 16, except when the employee is employed by his or her parent (or a person standing in place of the parent) on a farm owned or operated by the parent.ⁿ⁴⁸ For discussion of agricultural occupations that have been found to be hazardous to minors, see § 6.03[2][c].

Under specified conditions, the FLSA permits agricultural employers to apply to the Secretary of Labor for a waiver of the child labor provisions for a period not to exceed 8 weeks in any calendar year to allow employment of minors between the ages of 10 and 12 years as hand harvest laborers.ⁿ⁴⁹ For discussion, see § 6.04[2][b].

It should be noted that the federal exemption for agricultural employees is not coextensive with the analogous California exemption. For discussion of the latter, see §§ 6.02[1][b][i], 6.03[1][b].

[iii] Actors and Performers

The FLSA provides a complete exemption from its child labor provisions for children employed as actors or performers in motion pictures or theatrical productions, or in radio or television productions.ⁿ⁵⁰ The term "performer" is defined by federal regulationsⁿ⁵¹ and is broader than the term "actor."ⁿ⁵²

Although exempt from the child labor provisions of the FLSA, child actors and performers are subject to statutory and administrative regulation under California law.ⁿ⁵³ For discussion of these provisions, see §§ 6.03[1][c], 6.04[1][b].

[iv] Newspaper Carriers and Wreathmakers

The child labor provisions of the FLSA (as well as the minimum wage and overtime provisions) do not apply to any employee engaged in the delivery of newspapers to the consumer.ⁿ⁵⁴ Examples of the kinds of work covered by the exemption for newspaper delivery are found at Title 29 Code of Federal Regulations Section 570.124. The same provision of the FLSA exempts "any homemaker engaged in the making of wreaths composed principally of natural holly, pine, cedar, or other evergreens (including the harvesting of evergreens or other forest products used in making such wreaths)."ⁿ⁵⁵ No such blanket exemption exists under California law.

[v] Other Exemptions

The child labor, minimum wage, and overtime provisions of the FLSA do not apply to work performed within a foreign country or to work performed within a United States territory other than a state of the United States, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, the outer Continental Shelf lands,ⁿ⁵⁶ American Samoa, Guam, Wake Island, Eniwetok Atoll, Kwajalein Atoll, and Johnston Island.ⁿ⁵⁷

Further, by regulation, the Secretary of Labor permits employment of children between the ages of 14 and 16 years in certain occupations, including those in retail, food service, and gasoline service establishments, if certain requirements are met, and in certain school administered and supervised "work experience and career exploration" programs that meet the standards of the state educational agency.ⁿ⁵⁸ For discussion, see § 6.03[2][a].

AUTHOR: By Susan Spurlark, J.D.

§ 6.02 Restrictions on Hours of Work

[1] California Law

[a] Generally

Restrictions on the hours that a minor may work are found in both the Labor Code and the Education Code.ⁿ¹ Except as discussed in [b], below, the Labor Code provides that no minor may be employed for more than 8 hours in a 24-hour day.ⁿ² A minor who is age 15 or younger may not be employed for more than 40 hours in a week, nor for any time before 7:00 a.m. or after 7:00 p.m., except that the minor may work until 9:00 p.m. from June 1 through Labor Day.ⁿ³ A minor who is age 16 or 17 may not be employed for more than 48 hours in a week, nor for any time before 5:00 a.m. or after 10:00 p.m. on any day preceding a schoolday, although the minor may be employed on any evening preceding a nonschoolday until 12:30 a.m. on the nonschoolday.ⁿ⁴ A schoolday is any day on which the minor is required to attend school for 240 minutes or more.ⁿ⁵ The Labor Code provision is inapplicable to any minor employed to deliver newspapers to consumers.ⁿ⁶

Pursuant to the Education Code and with the exceptions explained in [b], below, a minor who must obtain a school work permitⁿ⁷ and who is age 14 or 15 may not work more than 3 hours outside school hours on a school day.ⁿ⁸ An employer may not employ such a minor for more than 3 hours in a day or for more than 18 hours in a week, nor may such a minor be employed during school hours.ⁿ⁹ A minor who is 16 or 17 may not work more than 4 hours outside school hours on any day on which the minor is required by law to attend school.ⁿ¹⁰ An employer is prohibited from employing such a minor for more than 4 hours in any day on which the minor must by law attend school for 240 minutes or more.ⁿ¹¹ However, such a minor may work outside school hours for no more than 8 hours on any day that the minor is required by law to attend school and that is immediately prior to a nonschoolday.ⁿ¹² In addition, a 13-year-old who has completed the sixth grade, who is identified as having exhibited the potential to drop out of school, and who participates in an employment program sponsored by a school district, may be issued a work permit, within the school district's discretion, to work two hours a day, with a maximum of four hours a week.ⁿ¹³ Employment for the delivery of newspapers to consumers is excluded from the Education Code provisions.ⁿ¹⁴

[b] Exceptions[i] Agricultural and Related Occupations

The general work hour restrictions do not apply to any minor employed in agricultural, horticultural, viticultural, or domestic labor outside of school hours who is working for or under the control of the minor's parent or guardian, and who is performing that work on or in connection with premises owned, operated, or controlled by the parent or guardian. However, minors who are under school age may not engage in such activities during school hours.ⁿ¹⁵

In addition, the Labor Commissioner may issue an exemption from laws regulating the employment of minors to employers operating agricultural packing plants that employ minors 16 and 17 years of age on days when school is not in session.ⁿ¹⁶ The exemptions allow employment of these minors for up to 10 hours per day during the peak harvest season.ⁿ¹⁷ The Labor Commissioner may grant an exemption only if it will not materially affect the safety and welfare of minor employees and if it will prevent undue hardship on the employer.ⁿ¹⁸ An employer must apply for the exemption and may have to undergo an inspection of the plant before the Labor Commissioner issues the exemption.ⁿ¹⁹

[ii] Entertainment Industry

Labor Code Section 1308.7 restricts the hours that any minor may work in the entertainment industry.ⁿ²⁰ No minor may be employed more than eight hours in one day of 24 hours, or more than 48 hours in one week.ⁿ²¹ In addition, a minor may not work before 5:00 a.m. or after 10:00 p.m. on any day preceding a schoolday.ⁿ²² However, a minor may work during any evening preceding a nonschoolday until 12:30 a.m. on the nonschoolday.ⁿ²³ A schoolday is any day in which a minor is required to attend school for 240 minutes or more.ⁿ²⁴

Prior to the enactment of Labor Code Section 1308.7, the Labor Commissioner, pursuant to his or her authority to enforce the child labor provisions of the Labor Code,ⁿ²⁵ issued regulations providing guidelines for the employment of minors in the entertainment industry.ⁿ²⁶ Among other things, these regulations limit the hours that minors of certain ages may remain at the place of employment and the hours that they may actually work.ⁿ²⁷ The time limits range from 2 hours (of which no more than 20 minutes may be work time) for babies from the age of 15 days until 6 months, to 10 hours (of which 6 hours are normally work time, 3 are for school, and 1 for rest and relaxation) for minors between the ages of 16 and 18 years.ⁿ²⁸

The regulations define the extent to which certain activities such as meal periods, travel to and from the place of performance, and time spent at home in make-up and hairdressing, must be counted as work time.ⁿ²⁹ Make-up and hairdressing with the assistance of another person may not begin before 8:30 a.m.ⁿ³⁰ The hours of the day during which infants under the age of six months may work is more strictly limited.ⁿ³¹ A period of 12 hours must elapse between the time work ends on one day and begins on the next.ⁿ³² Permission to vary or extend the hours of minors in the entertainment industry must be obtained from the Labor Commissioner and may be granted only for limited reasons and for limited periods.ⁿ³³

[iii] Messengers

Minors under the age of 18 years may be employed or permitted to work as messengers for telephone, telegraph, or messenger companies (or for the United States government or any of its departments while operating a telephone, telegraph, or messenger service) only between the hours of 6:00 a.m. and 9:00 p.m.ⁿ³⁴ Minors under the age of 16 years may not be employed as messengers at all except in cities with 15,000 or fewer inhabitants.ⁿ³⁵ Employment for the delivery of newspapers to consumers is excluded from these requirements.ⁿ³⁶

[iv] Work Experience and Cooperative Vocational Education Programs

Under Labor Code Section 1391.1, minors who are of ages 16 or 17 and who are enrolled in work experience or cooperative vocational education programs approved by the State Department of Education (or in similar programs conducted by private schools) may work between the hours of 10:00 p.m. and 12:30 a.m. if such employment is not detrimental to the health, education, or welfare of the minor and the work hours are approved by the minor's parents and work experience coordinator.ⁿ³⁷ A minor who works such hours must be paid no less than the adult minimum wage for those hours.ⁿ³⁸

An exemption is also available for minors who are enrolled in, and employed pursuant to, a work experience and career exploration program that is supervised and administered by a school. However, the minor may be employed for no more than 23 hours per week, any portion of which may be during school hours.ⁿ³⁹

A similar exemption authorizes forestry and conservation work, including firefighting, which is a part of training and rehabilitation programs for 16- to 18-year-old wards of the youth authority.ⁿ⁴⁰

[v] High School Graduates

Labor Code Section 1391.2(a) provides that any minor under 18 years old who has been graduated from a high school maintaining a four-year course above the eighth grade (or who has received an equal amount of education in a private school or by private tuition), or who has been awarded a certificate of proficiency pursuant to Education Code Section 48412, may be employed for the same hours that an adult may be employed for performing the same work. Such minors must be paid at the same rate as similarly situated adult workers, in the absence of differences in seniority, ability, skill, or other "reasonable [basis for] differentiation."ⁿ⁴¹

[vi] Minors Exempt From Compulsory School Attendance

The general limitations on employment of minors contained in Labor Code Section 1285 et seq. do not prohibit the full-time employment of minors who are exempt from compulsory school attendance pursuant to Education Code Section 48231.ⁿ⁴² That section of the Education Code provides that a minor between the ages of 12 and 18 years who enters "an attendance area" in California from another state within 10 school days before the end of the school term during which such entrance occurs is exempt from school attendance for the remainder of the term.ⁿ⁴³

[vii] Permits for Full-Time Employment

As noted in [a], above, the Education Code provides that minors who are of age 14 or 15 may be employed for no more than 3 hours on a schoolday, minors who are of age 16 or 17 may be employed for no more than 4 hours on a schoolday, and minors of age 13 who have been issued a permit under limited circumstances may be employed for no more than 2 hours a day and no more than 4 hours per week.ⁿ⁴⁴ However, Education Code Section 49130 provides that minors between the ages of 14 and 16 who have graduated from elementary school may receive a permit to work full time if any of the following conditions apply: (1) the minor's parent or guardian cannot work due to illness or injury;ⁿ⁴⁵ (2) the minor's family needs the minor's earnings because of the death or desertion of the minor's mother or father and the inability to secure sufficient aid in any other manner;ⁿ⁴⁶ (3) the minor cannot reside with his or her family and the minor's earnings are necessary for the minor's support;ⁿ⁴⁷ or (4) the minor is living in foster care, and the purpose of the minor's employment is to further the minor's emancipation or enable the minor to obtain necessary work skills and habits.ⁿ⁴⁸ The permit is only valid until the end of the school year in which it was issued, and the minor must enroll in a work experience education program.ⁿ⁴⁹ Minors who are of age 16 or 17 may be issued a permit for full-time employment without regard to the provisions of Education Code Sections 49130, 49132, 49133(d) or 49134 (general requirements for full-time work permits).ⁿ⁵⁰

Although a minor who obtains such a permit may be exempt from the work time restrictions in the Education Code, none of the Education Code provisions regarding work permits purport to supersede the time restrictions contained in the Labor Code. Thus, the minor is still subject to the hour limits contained in Labor Code Section 1391.

[2] Federal Law

The FLSA itself contains no express limitation on work hours for minors (other than the overtime compensation provisions applicable to all employees).ⁿ⁵¹ However, the FLSA authorizes the Secretary of Labor to issue child labor regulations determining that certain occupations (other than manufacturing and mining), work hours, and work conditions are not deemed to be "oppressive" because they do not interfere with the schooling, health, or well-being of 14 to 16-year-old minors.ⁿ⁵² Pursuant to this statutory authority, the Secretary has promulgated regulations permitting employment of 14 to 16-year-old minors in certain occupations in retail, food service, and gasoline service establishments and other nonprohibited occupations under certain conditions.ⁿ⁵³ These occupations include office and clerical work; cashiering; advertising work; selling; price marking; assembling, packing, or shelving orders; bagging and carrying orders; errand and delivery work by foot, bicycle, or public transportation; clean up work; certain kitchen work; and certain work at gasoline stations, such as pumping gas.ⁿ⁵⁴

Among other things, these regulations restrict the hours during which minors between 14 and 16 years old may be employed in such occupations.ⁿ⁵⁵ Generally, employment in such occupations may only occur outside of school hours.ⁿ⁵⁶ In all cases, when school is not in session, a minor may work no more than 40 hours in any one week and 8 hours in any one day.ⁿ⁵⁷ When school is in session, the minor may work no more than 18 hours in any one week and 3 hours in any one day.ⁿ⁵⁸ Such work must be performed between the hours of 7 a.m. and 7 p.m., except that between June 1 and Labor Day, the minor may work until 9 p.m.ⁿ⁵⁹ A limited exception exists for minors working as attendants at sporting events.ⁿ⁶⁰

Under the FLSA, minors over the age of 16 years may engage in agricultural work during school hours.ⁿ⁶¹ Minors between the ages of 14 and 16 years may perform agricultural work only outside of school hours for the school district where such minor is living.ⁿ⁶²

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS

CHAPTER 6 Child Labor Laws

Part A. TEXT

1-6 California Employment Law § 6.03

AUTHOR: By Susan Spurlark, J.D.

§ 6.03 Restrictions Relating to Type of Work

[1] California Law

[a] Generally

The Labor Code prohibits or otherwise restricts employment of minors in certain specified occupations and industries.ⁿ¹ In addition, Labor Code Section 1296 allows the Division of Labor Standards Enforcement (DLSE) to determine whether other trades, processes of manufacture, or occupations are "sufficiently dangerous to the lives and limbs or injurious to the health or morals of minors under 16 years of age to justify their exclusion therefrom."ⁿ² Such a determination may be made only after a hearing to determine the existence of the necessary facts,ⁿ³ and the DLSE's determination may be reviewed by the superior court.ⁿ⁴

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

Labor Code Section 1290 provides that "[n]o minor under the age of 16 years shall be employed, permitted, or suffered to work in or in connection with any manufacturing establishment or other place of labor or employment at any time except as may be provided in this article [Labor Code Sections 1285-1312] or by [the Education Code provisions governing mandatory school attendance]."ⁿ⁵ Because many of the cited Labor Code Sections prohibit employment of minors under 16 years old in specified occupations,ⁿ⁶ rather than permitting employment, the italicized language in Section 1290 could be read literally to ban employment of minors under the age of 16 years in any occupation. However, such a literal interpretation would render superfluous numerous specific Labor Code prohibitions, as well as the DLSE's authority to prohibit employment of minors under the age of 16 years in occupations where such employment "is not already forbidden by law."ⁿ⁷ The italicized language was therefore probably intended to refer to other places of employment similar to "manufacturing establishments,"ⁿ⁸ and not to bar all employment of minors under 16 years old. A California Supreme Court decision adopted this interpretation in construing a former statute containing similar language.ⁿ⁹ Thus, notwithstanding the literal terms of Labor Code Section 1290, California law appears to permit employment of minors under the age of 16 years in nonmanufacturing establishments, except when such employment is otherwise prohibited or restricted by law. Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

[b] Agricultural Zone of Danger

Minors under 12 years may not work or accompany an employed parent or guardian in an "agricultural zone of danger," except when the work is performed outside of school hours for, or under the control of, that parent or guardian and on premises owned, operated, or controlled by the parent or guardian.ⁿ¹⁰ An "agricultural zone of danger" means any or all of the following:ⁿ¹¹

1. On or about moving equipment;
2. In or about unprotected chemicals;
3. In or about any unprotected water hazard; and
4. In or about other hazards that are determined, after hearing, by the Department of Industrial Relations to constitute an agricultural zone of danger.

[c] Entertainment

Labor Code Sections 1294 and 1308 prohibit any person (including employers, parents, guardians, or relatives) from employing a minor under 16 years of age (or causing, procuring, or encouraging the engagement of the minor) in any business, occupation, exhibition, or vocation that is injurious to the minor's health or morals or that is dangerous to the minor's life or limb.ⁿ¹² Specifically, Labor Code Section 1308 prohibits employment of such minors in singing, playing musical instruments, rope or wire walking, dancing, begging, or peddling.ⁿ¹³ Section 1308 also prohibits employment of such minors as gymnasts, acrobats, contortionists, or riders;ⁿ¹⁴ or in "any mendicant or wandering business."ⁿ¹⁵ Section 1308 also prohibits employment of minors under 18 years of age in any "obscene, indecent, or immoral purposes, exhibition, or practice whatsoever."ⁿ¹⁶

Labor Code Section 1308 expressly does not prohibit the following:

1. The employment or use of any minor as a singer or musician in any church, school, or academy or the teaching or learning of the science or practice of music;ⁿ¹⁷
2. The employment of any minor as a musician at any concert or other musical entertainment, or as a performer in any form of entertainment, with the written consent of the Labor Commissioner pursuant to Labor Code Section 1308.5;ⁿ¹⁸
3. The participation by a minor of any age in a horseback riding exhibition, contest, or event other than a rough stock rodeo event,ⁿ¹⁹ circus, or race.ⁿ²⁰ and
4. The leading of livestock by a minor in nonprofit fairs, stock parades, livestock shows, and exhibitions.ⁿ²¹

Moreover, if Labor Code Section 1308 is read in conjunction with Labor Code Section 1310,ⁿ²² the following activities are also permitted:

1. The appearance by a minor in any church, public or religious school, or community entertainment;ⁿ²³
2. The appearance by a minor in any school entertainment or in any entertainment for charity or for children, where no admission fee is charged;n24

3. An appearance in any radio or television broadcasting exhibition, where the minor receives no compensation, the engagement lasts no more than one hour, and no admission fee is charged;n25 and

4. An appearance of a minor at any one event during a calendar year, occurring on a day when school attendance is not required or on the preceding day, lasting four hours or less, provided the minor's parent or guardian is present and the minor does not directly or indirectly receive any compensation.n26

Minors under the age of 16 years, who are not otherwise exempted by Labor Code Section 1285 et seq., may be employed in various other occupations in the entertainment industry with the written consent of the Labor Commissioner.n27 Permits for such employment are discussed in § 6.04[1][b].

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

Despite the prohibition of Labor Code Section 1308 against minors under 16 years participating in such activities as "singing," "playing on musical instruments," and "dancing," the section must be construed along with other provisions of the Labor Code and the California Code of Regulations. These provisions establish that minors may work in certain types of entertainment with the consent of the Labor Commissioner if the work environment is proper,n28 and that minors need not obtain the consent of the Labor Commissioner if they are performing without compensation under the conditions specified in Labor Code Section 1310, set forth above. The DLSE concurs with this approach.n29 Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

[d] Manufacturing

Minors under the age of 16 years may not be employed in or in connection with any manufacturing establishment except as provided by relevant provisions of the Labor and Education Codes.n30 The restriction on work in a manufacturing establishment applies to work done "at any place upon the work of a manufacturing establishment, or upon any of the materials entering into the products of a manufacturing establishment, whether under contract or arrangement with any person in charge of or connected with a manufacturing establishment directly or indirectly through contractors or third persons."n31

In addition, the Labor Code contains prohibitions against employment of minors under 16 years old in certain specific kinds of tasks associated with manufacturing,n32 as discussed in [e] through [g], below.

[e] Machinery

The Labor Code contains a number of specific prohibitions against the employment of minors under 16 years old in certain hazardous tasks relating to the operation of various types of machinery. Labor Code Section 1292 provides that no minor under the age of 16 years may be permitted to work in any capacity involving any of the following tasks:

1. Adjusting any belt to any machinery;n33
2. Sewing or lacing machine belts in any workshop or factory;n34 or
3. Oiling, wiping, or cleaning machinery, or assisting therein.n35

Labor Code Section 1293 prohibits an employer from employing such minors (or permitting them to work) in any capacity in operating or assisting in the operation of the following machines:

1-6 California Employment Law § 6.03

1. Circular or band saws, wood shapers, wood-jointers, planers, sandpaper or wood-polishing machinery, or wood turning or boring machinery;n36
2. Picker machines or machines used in picking wool, cotton, hair, or other material; carding machines; leather-burnishing machines; or laundry machinery;n37
3. Printing-presses of all kinds; boring or drill presses; stamping machines used in sheet-metal and tinware, in paper and leather manufacturing, or in washer and nut factories; metal or paper-cutting machines; or paper-lace machines;n38
4. Corner-staying machines in paper-box factories; or corrugating rolls, such as are used in corrugated paper, roofing, or washboard factories;n39
5. Dough brakes or cracker machinery of any description;n40
6. Wire or iron straightening or drawing machinery; rolling-mill machinery; power punches or shears; washing, grinding, or mixing machinery; calendar rolls in paper and rubber manufacturing; steamboilers;n41 or
7. Any work in proximity to any hazardous or unguarded belts, machinery, or gearing.n42

For discussion of an exception to Labor Code Sections 1292 and 1293, which relates to certain student and apprentice employees,n43 see [j], below.

In addition, regulations promulgated by the Labor Commissioner pursuant to statutory authorityn44 bar employment of minors under the age of 16 years from any occupation in which such minors come in close proximity to moving machinery.n45

[f] Transportation and Gas Service Stations

Pursuant to Labor Code Section 1294, minors under the age of 16 years may not be employed in any capacity in any of the following tasks:

1. Working on a railroad, whether steam, electric, or hydraulic;n46
2. Working on a vessel or boat engaged in navigation or commerce within the jurisdiction of the State of California;n47 or
3. Operating any automobile, motor car, or truck.n48

For discussion of an exception to Labor Code Section 1294 for certain student and apprentice employees,n49 see [j], below.

Minors 16 and 17 years of age may work in gas service stations in the following activities:n50

1. Dispensing gas or oil;
2. Courtesy service;
3. Car cleaning, washing, and polishing; or

4. Activities specified in Labor Code Section 1294.3 (clerical, retail, cleanup, and food service activities).ⁿ⁵¹

However, no minor 16 or 17 years of age may perform work in a gas service station that involves either (1) the use of pits, racks, or lifting apparatus, or (2) the inflation of a tire mounted on a rim equipped with a removable retaining ring.ⁿ⁵² Minors under the age of 16 years may be employed in gas service stations to perform only those activities specified in Labor Code Section 1294.3 (clerical, retail, cleanup, and food service activities).ⁿ⁵³

Regulations promulgated by the Labor Commissionⁿ⁵⁴ prohibit employment of minors under the age of 16 years in the following tasks:

1. Delivering goods, merchandise, commodities, papers, or packages from motor vehicles;ⁿ⁵⁵ or
2. Working in close proximity to the functioning parts of unguarded and dangerous moving equipment, aircraft, or vessels, or functioning blades or propellers.ⁿ⁵⁶

However, legislation enacted after the promulgation of the above regulations specifically permits a minor to deliver newspapers to consumers by an automobile that is driven by a person 16 years of age or older, or by foot, bicycle, or public transportation.ⁿ⁵⁷

[g] Other Hazardous Occupations

In addition to the general prohibition against employing minors under 16 years old in occupations that are injurious to the health or dangerous to the life and limb of such minors,ⁿ⁵⁸ Labor Code Section 1294 prohibits the following specific types of hazardous employment for such minors:

1. Working in, about, or in connection with any processes in which dangerous or poisonous acids are used; in the manufacture or packing of paints, colors, or white or red lead; or in soldering;ⁿ⁵⁹
2. Working in occupations causing dust in injurious quantities; in the manufacture or use of dangerous or poisonous dyes; in the manufacture or preparation of compositions with dangerous or poisonous gases; or in the manufacture or use of compositions of lye in which the quantity thereof is injurious to health;ⁿ⁶⁰
3. Working on scaffolding; in heavy work in the building trades; in any tunnel or excavation; or in, about, or in connection with any mine, coal breaker, coke oven, or quarry;ⁿ⁶¹ and
4. Assorting, manufacturing, or packing tobacco;ⁿ⁶²

For discussion of an exception to Labor Code Section 1294 for certain student and apprentice employees,ⁿ⁶³ see [j], below.

Furthermore, regulations promulgated by the Labor Commissioner pursuant to the Labor Codeⁿ⁶⁴ prohibit the following specific types of hazardous employment for minors under the age of 16 years:

1. All building or construction work of any kind;ⁿ⁶⁵
2. All occupations in or about any plant manufacturing explosives or articles containing explosive components, and all occupations in the transportation and sale of explosives or articles containing explosive components;n66 or working in close proximity to explosives;n67

3. Door-to-door selling of newspaper or magazine subscriptions other than in connection with a regular news carrier delivery route, or of candy, cookies, flowers or other merchandise or commodities unless the requirements of Title 8 California Code of Regulations Section 11706(a)(1)-(4) are met;n68 and

4. Selling to passing motorists of newspapers, candy, flowers, or other merchandise or commodities from a fixed location on a street, highway, or freeway island or divider, or freeway on or off ramp, or the side of a freeway or highway entrance or exit shoulder.n69

[h] Occupations Affecting Morals

Minors under 16 years are barred from any employment that is "injurious to the ... morals of the minor."n70*Labor Code Section 1308(a)(3)* prohibits the employment of any minor under the age of 18 years in "any obscene, indecent, or immoral purposes, exhibition, or practice whatsoever." Separate statutory provisions prohibit farm labor contractors and talent agencies from sending any minors to places where their morals, health, safety, or welfare could be adversely affected (such as houses of prostitution, gambling houses, saloons, etc.) if the character of the place could have been ascertained on reasonable inquiry.n71 Finally, several provisions of the Penal Code bar employment of minors in certain situations that would be inimical to their morals.n72

[i] Messengers and Street Occupations

Minors under the age of 16 years may not be employed as messengers for telegraph, telephone, or messenger companies (or for the United States government operating such service) in distributing, transmitting, or delivering goods or messages in cities with more than 15,000 inhabitants.n73 This restriction is inapplicable to minors employed to deliver newspapers to consumers.n74

No minor under 12 years of age may be employed or permitted to work at any time in, or in connection with, the occupation of selling or distributing newspapers, magazines, periodicals, or circulars. This provision prevails over Labor Code Section 1308.1, which allows minors to sell newspaper subscriptions door to door.n75 However, this provision does not apply to minors who are at least 10 years of age and engaged as newspaper carriers on January 1, 1995.n76

[i.1] Door-to-Door Sales

No minor under the age of 6 years is permitted to engage in the door-to-door sales or street sales of candy, cookies, flowers, or any other merchandise or commodities.n77

A minor under the age of 16 years who is permitted by law or regulation to engage in door-to-door selling of newspaper or magazine subscriptions or of candy, flowers, or other merchandise or commodities may not be employed in those activities more than 50 miles from his or her residence.n78

"Door-to-door sales" has the same meaning as "home solicitation contract or offer," as defined in Civil Code Section 1689.5(a), except that the minimum monetary limitation of that provision does not apply.n79

[i.2] Incorporation of Federal Restrictions

Minors under the age of 16 years may not be employed or permitted to work in either of the following:

1. Any occupation declared particularly hazardous for the employment of minors under 16 in Title 29 Code of Federal Regulations Section 570.71, which covers a variety of activities related to agriculture, such as operating certain farm machinery, working with certain animals, or handling certain chemicals and explosives;ⁿ⁸⁰ or

2. Any occupation excluded from the application of Subpart C of Part 570 of Title 29 of the Code of Federal Regulations, as set forth in Title 29, Code of Federal Regulations, Sections 570.33 and 570.34(b);ⁿ⁸¹

In addition, minors may not be employed or permitted to work in any occupation declared particularly hazardous for the employment of minors between 16 and 18 years of age, or detrimental to their health or well-being, in Title 29 Code of Federal Regulations, Part 570, Subpart E.ⁿ⁸²

None of these restrictions prohibits minors who process and deliver newspapers from entering areas of a newspaper plant, other than areas where printing presses are located, for purposes related to newspaper processing or delivery.ⁿ⁸³

[j] Exceptions

The restrictions in *Labor Code Sections 1292, 1293, and 1294*ⁿ⁸⁴ do not apply to the following:

1. Courses of training in vocational or manual training schools or in state institutions;ⁿ⁸⁵
2. Apprenticeship training provided in a program established pursuant to Labor Code Section 3070 et seq.;ⁿ⁸⁶ or
3. Work experience education programs conducted pursuant to relevant provisions of the Education Code,ⁿ⁸⁷ provided that the work experience coordinator determines that the students have been sufficiently trained, parental approval is obtained, and the principal or student counselor has determined that the student's progress toward graduation will not be impaired.ⁿ⁸⁸

The restrictions in *Labor Code Section 1294.1*ⁿ⁸⁹ do not apply to the following:

1. Student-learners in a bona fide vocational agriculture program working under a written agreement;ⁿ⁹⁰ or
2. Minors 14 or 15 years of age who hold certificates of completion of either a tractor operation or a machine operation program and who are working in the occupations for which they have been trained.ⁿ⁹¹

For discussion of other exceptions to the child labor laws, see § 6.01[1][b].

[2] Federal Law

[a] Employment of Minors Between 14 and 16 Years Old

As noted previously,ⁿ⁹² except when the minor is employed by his or her parent or guardian under specified circumstances, the FLSA prohibits as "oppressive child labor" the employment of minors under 16 years old in any occupation.ⁿ⁹³ While the Secretary of Labor has authority to promulgate regulations permitting employment of 14 to 16-year-old minors in certain occupations under certain conditions,ⁿ⁹⁴ the Secretary has, by regulation, found that employment in the following occupations constitutes oppressive child labor for 14 to 16-year-old minors and is therefore prohibited by the FLSA:ⁿ⁹⁵

1. Manufacturing, mining, or processing occupations, including occupations requiring the performance of any duties in work rooms or work places where goods are manufactured, mined, or otherwise processed;n96
2. Occupations that involve the operation or tending of hoisting apparatus or any power-driven machinery other than office machines;n97
3. The operation of motor vehicles or service as helpers on such vehicles;n98
4. Public messenger service;n99
5. Occupations that have been declared by the Secretary of Labor to be hazardous for the employment of minors between the ages of 16 and 18 years or detrimental to their health and well-being;n100 and
6. Occupations in connection with (a) transportation of persons or property by rail, highway, air, water, pipeline, or other means; (b) warehousing and storage; (c) communications and public utilities; and (d) construction, demolition, and repair.n101 (Minors between the ages of 14 and 16 years may, however, engage in office work (including ticket office work) or sales work in connection with these occupations, as long as the work does not involve the performance of any duties on trains, motor vehicles, aircraft, vessels, or other modes of transportation, or at the actual site of construction operations.)n102

The regulations do permit minors between the ages of 14 and 16 years to engage in specified work in connection with retail, food service, and gasoline service establishments.n103 The permitted occupations are set forth in Title 29 Code of Federal Regulations Section 570.34(a) and include such jobs as office work (including the operation of office machines); cashiering; selling; modeling; art work; price marking and tagging; assembling and packing orders; shelving; bagging and carrying out customer orders; errand and delivery work (by foot, bicycle, or public transportation only); cleanup work (including operation of vacuum cleaners and floor waxers, but not power mowers or cutters); kitchen work involving preparing and serving food and beverages (including the operation of specified kitchen machines and devices); cleaning vegetables and fruits; and wrapping, labeling, sealing, weighing, pricing, and stocking goods. However, such minors may not be employed to perform any of the following:n104

1. Work performed in or about boiler or engine rooms;
2. Work in connection with maintenance or repair of the establishment, machines, or equipment;
3. Outside window washing from window sills and all work requiring the use of ladders, scaffolds, or their substitutes;
4. Cooking and baking, except that cooking is permitted with electric or gas grilles, which does not involve cooking over an open flame or with equipment such as rotisseries, broilers, pressurized equipment including fryolators, and cooking devices that operate at extremely high temperatures such as ""Neico broilers"", and cooking is permitted with deep fryers that are equipped with and utilize a device which automatically lowers the baskets into the hot oil or grease and automatically raises the baskets from the hot oil or grease;
5. Occupations that involve operating, setting up, adjusting, cleaning, oiling, or repairing power-driven food slicers and grinders, food choppers and cutters, and bakery-type mixers;
6. Work in freezers and meat coolers and all work in preparation of meats for sale other than as allowed by Title 29 Code of Federal Regulations Section 570.34(a)(9) (permitting wrapping, sealing, labeling, and weighing, pricing, and stocking of goods performed in areas physically separate from freezers, coolers, and other places where preparation of meat is performed);

7. Loading and unloading goods to and from trucks, railroad cars, or conveyors; and

8. All occupations in warehouses other than office and clerical work.

Employment of minors under 14 years old constitutes oppressive child labor in all cases unless the minor is employed by his or her parent, or a person standing in the parent's place, or the minor is otherwise exempt under Title 29 United States Code Section 213.ⁿ¹⁰⁵

[b] Occupations Hazardous to Minors Between Ages of 16 and 18 Years

[i] Generally

The FLSA prohibits employment of a minor between the ages of 16 and 18 years in any occupation that has been declared by the Secretary of Labor to be particularly hazardous to, or otherwise detrimental to the health and well-being of, such minors.ⁿ¹⁰⁶ Pursuant to this statutory authority, the Secretary of Labor has promulgated orders declaring specified occupations to be particularly hazardous for such minors.ⁿ¹⁰⁷ The regulations also set forth procedures for investigating the employment conditions in various occupations and for adding to or modifying the list of hazardous occupations.ⁿ¹⁰⁸

The current designations of hazardous occupations include restrictions applicable to specific occupations and to entire industries.ⁿ¹⁰⁹ When the restriction is made on an occupational basis, it applies regardless of the industry in which the occupation is performed.ⁿ¹¹⁰

[ii] Specific Occupations

Pursuant to the FLSA,ⁿ¹¹¹ the Secretary of Labor has issued orders identifying 17 types of industries or occupations that are particularly hazardous to, or detrimental to the health or well-being of, minors between the ages of 16 and 18 years. These occupations and industries are identified and defined in detail in the Code of Federal Regulations.ⁿ¹¹² In some cases, the orders prohibit all work in the designated occupation or industry, except for specified tasks.ⁿ¹¹³ In other cases, the orders simply list specific prohibited types of work in a particular occupation.ⁿ¹¹⁴ The following is a list of covered industries and occupations, by order number:

1. Occupations in or about plants or establishments manufacturing or storing explosives or articles containing explosive components;ⁿ¹¹⁵
2. Motor-vehicle driver and outside helper;ⁿ¹¹⁶
3. Coal-mine occupations;ⁿ¹¹⁷
4. Logging occupations and occupations in the operation of any sawmill, lath mill, shingle mill, or cooperage stock mill;ⁿ¹¹⁸
5. Occupations involved in the operation of power-driven woodworking machines;ⁿ¹¹⁹
6. Exposure to radioactive substances and to ionizing radiations;ⁿ¹²⁰
7. Occupations involved in the operation of power-driven hoisting apparatus;ⁿ¹²¹

8. Occupations involved in the operations of power-driven metal forming, punching, and shearing machines;n122
9. Occupations in connection with mining, other than coal;n123
10. Occupations involving slaughtering, meat packing or processing, or rendering;n124
11. Occupations involved in the operation of bakery machines;n125
12. Operations involved in the operation of paper-products machines, scrap paper balers, and paper box compactors;n126
13. Occupations involved in the manufacture of brick, tile, and kindred products;n127
14. Occupations involved in the operations of circular saws, band saws, and guillotine shears;n128
15. Occupations involved in wrecking, demolition, and shipbreaking operations;n129
16. Occupations in roofing operations and on or about a roof;n130 and
17. Occupations in excavations operations.n131

[iii] Exemptions for Apprentices and Student-Learners

Some of the orders listed in [ii], above, contain exemptions from their restrictions for the employment of apprentices or student-learners under the conditions described below.n132

The exemption for employment of apprentices applies only when (1) the minor is employed in a craft recognized as an apprenticeable trade; (2) the work of the apprentice in the occupation declared to be particularly hazardous is incidental to the apprentice's training; (3) such work is intermittent and engaged in only for short periods of time, is performed under the direct and close supervision of a journeyman, and is necessary for the training; and (4) the apprentice is registered as an apprentice in accordance with standards of the federal Bureau of Apprenticeship and Training or of a state agency recognized by the Bureau, or is employed in a program that the Secretary of Labor finds to conform substantially with such federal or state standards.n133

The exemption for student-learners applies when the minor is enrolled in a recognized course of study and training in a cooperative vocational training program under a recognized state or local educational authority (or a substantially similar program conducted by a private school) and the employment is pursuant to a written agreement that provides (1) that the student-learner's work in the occupation declared to be particularly hazardous is incidental to the training; (2) that the work shall be intermittent and for short periods of time and shall be conducted under the direct and close supervision of a qualified and experienced person; (3) that safety instructions will be given by the school and correlated by the employer with on-the-job training; and (4) that a schedule of organized and progressive work processes will be prepared.n134 The written agreement must bear the student-learner's name and must be signed by the employer and by the school coordinator or principal of the student-learner's school.n135 Copies of the agreement must be kept on file by both the school and the employer, and the agreement may be revoked if it is found that reasonable precautions have not been observed for the safety of any minors employed under the agreement.n136

[c] Agricultural Occupations

[i] Generally

As discussed previously,ⁿ¹³⁷ the child labor provisions of the FLSA do not apply to employment in agriculture outside of school hours under certain conditions.ⁿ¹³⁸ However, the agricultural exemption does not permit the employment of minors under the age of 16 years in agricultural occupations that the Secretary of Labor has determined to be particularly hazardous for such minors, except when the minor is employed by his or her parent (or by a person standing in the place of the parent) on a farm owned or operated by the parent (or person standing in the parent's place).ⁿ¹³⁹ The Secretary of Labor has promulgated regulations declaring specified agricultural occupations to be particularly hazardous to minors under the age of 16 years.ⁿ¹⁴⁰ The specified occupations are as follows:

1. Operation of a tractor of over 20 PTO horsepower; connecting or disconnecting an implement or any of its parts to such a tractor;ⁿ¹⁴¹
2. Operating or assisting to operate (including starting, stopping, adjusting, feeding, or other activity involving physical contact with the operation) various designated farm machines (including corn pickers, cotton pickers, hay mowers and balers, grain combines, feed grinders, power post-hole diggers, trenchers, earth-moving equipment, fork-lifts, and various power saws, among others);ⁿ¹⁴²
3. Working in a yard, pen, or stall occupied by a bull, boar, or stud horse maintained for breeding purposes; or a sow or cow with newborn young;ⁿ¹⁴³
4. Felling, bucking, skidding, loading, or unloading timber with a butt diameter of more than six inches;ⁿ¹⁴⁴
5. Working from a ladder or scaffold at a height of over 20 feet;ⁿ¹⁴⁵
6. Driving motor vehicles when transporting passengers, or riding on a tractor as a passenger or helper;ⁿ¹⁴⁶
7. Working inside certain storage areas or silos and manure pits;ⁿ¹⁴⁷
8. Handling or applying certain toxic agricultural chemicals (including cleaning or decontaminating equipment, disposal or return of empty containers, or serving as a flag person for an aircraft applying those chemicals);ⁿ¹⁴⁸
9. Handling any blasting agents;ⁿ¹⁴⁹ and
10. Transporting, transferring, or applying anhydrous ammonia.ⁿ¹⁵⁰

[ii] Exemptions

The prohibition against employment of minors under 16 years old in occupations listed in paragraphs (1) through (5) of subsection [i], above, do not apply to the employment of any minor as a vocational agriculture student-learner if certain requirements for training and safety are met.ⁿ¹⁵¹ Further, minors between the ages of 14 and 16 years who have successfully completed certain 4-H or equivalent training programs in tractor operation and/or farm machine operation may perform work described in paragraphs (1) and/or (2) of subsection [i], above, if they have been given instructions on the safe and proper operation of the specific equipment to be used and are as continuously and closely supervised by the employer as feasible.ⁿ¹⁵² Students between the ages of 14 and 16 years who have successfully completed the U.S. Department of Health, Education, and Welfare's Vocational Agriculture Training Programs in Safe Tractor Operation or Safe Farm Machinery Operation may also perform the work listed in paragraphs (1) and (2) under subsection [i], above.

AUTHOR: By Susan Spurlark, J.D.

§ 6.04 Required Permits

[1] California Law

[a] General Permits to Work and to Employ

[i] Requirement for Issuance

The Education Code contains provisions governing the issuance of work permits to nonexempt minorsⁿ¹ and "permits to employ" to employers wishing to hire such minors.ⁿ² The minor's work permit is issued by the superintendent of the school district or county in which the minor resides, the chief executive officer or the equivalent position of a charter school that a minor attends, by certain school personnel authorized by the superintendent, or, subject to specific requirements and conditions, the principal of a public or private school, after the minor's parent, guardian, foster parent, caregiver with whom the minor resides, or residential shelter services provider has signed and filed a written request for the permit.ⁿ³ An employer of a minor subject to the permit requirement must also obtain a permit to employ the minor by sending a form prescribed by the Department of Education to the officer authorized to issue the permit.ⁿ⁴ No person, firm, or corporation may employ, suffer, or permit any minor under the age of 18 years to work in any establishment or occupation without a permit to employ issued by the proper educational officers in accordance with law.ⁿ⁵

Permits to work in establishments and occupations not prohibited by law may be issued to any minor between the ages of 12 and 18 years who is to be employed during regular school holidays, regular or specified occasional public school vacations, and times when the student is exempt from compulsory education pursuant to Education Code Section 48231.ⁿ⁶ Permits may also be given to minors between the ages of 14 and 18 years for part-time work outside of school hours on school days, if the minor has completed the equivalent of the 7th grade,ⁿ⁷ and in conjunction with work experience education courses that meet the requirements of Education Code Sections 51760-51769.ⁿ⁸ Permits may also be issued for 13-year-old minors who have completed the sixth grade, who are identified as having exhibited the potential to drop out of school, and who participate in an employment program sponsored by a school district, to work two hours per day, with a maximum of four hours per week.ⁿ⁹ Permits for full-time work may be issued to minors between the ages of 16 and 18 years.ⁿ¹⁰ Permits for full-time work may also be issued to minors between the ages of

14 and 16 years in cases of extreme family financial hardship; there are special requirements for the issuance of such permits.ⁿ¹¹

For a minor who is not required by law to attend school, but who is otherwise required to hold a permit to work, the person authorized to issue such permits may issue a "certificate of age" instead.ⁿ¹² That certificate may be issued when the minor, accompanied by his or her parent, guardian or other responsible person, presents evidence of the minor's age to the issuing authority.ⁿ¹³

If the minor has been legally emancipated pursuant to Family Code Section 7000 et seq., the minor may apply for a work permit without the consent of a parent or guardian.ⁿ¹⁴ Such minors must, however, have a work permit unless otherwise exempt.ⁿ¹⁵

Permits to work and to employ, and certificates of age, must be issued on forms prepared and provided by the Superintendent of Public Instruction or authorized local school districts.ⁿ¹⁶ The permit to employ must contain the minor's name, age, birthdate, address, and phone number; the place and hours of compulsory school attendance (or a statement of exemption therefrom); the maximum number of hours per day and per week that the student may work while school is in session;ⁿ¹⁷ the minor's social security number; the signature of the minor and the issuing authority; and the date on which the permit expires.ⁿ¹⁸

[ii] Maintaining Permit on File

Every person, agent, or officer thereof who employs a minor, either directly or indirectly through a third person, must keep on file all permits and certificates that are issued pursuant to Labor Code Section 1285 et seq. or *Education Code Section 49100 et seq.*ⁿ¹⁹ The files of such permits must be open at all times to inspection by school attendance and probation officers, the State Board of Education, and officers of the DLSE.ⁿ²⁰ Failure to produce a work permit, a permit to employ, or a certificate of age relating to a particular minor is prima facie evidence of illegal employment of that minor.ⁿ²¹

[iii] Expiration and Revocation of Permit

Permits to work during a particular school year expire five days after the opening of the next succeeding school year.ⁿ²²

The certificates and permits to work or employ are subject to revocation whenever the Labor Commissioner or issuing authority finds that the conditions for legal issuance of the permit or certificate no longer exist or never existed; that the employment is impairing the health or education of the minor; that the work being performed is in violation of law; or that any provision or condition of the permit is being violated.ⁿ²³ School authorities empowered to issue such permits may enter any place of employment within their jurisdiction to examine permits and certificates relating to all minors employed in that place, and to investigate any violations of the child labor and permit provisions of the Education Code and Labor Code.ⁿ²⁴

[iv] Exemptions

Minors who have graduated from a high school maintaining a four-year course above the eighth grade, or who have received an equal amount of education in a private school or by private tuition, or who have been awarded a certificate of proficiency under Education Code Section 48412, are exempt from the work permit requirements of the Education Code.ⁿ²⁵ In addition, permits to work or to employ are not required in case of employment by and for, or under the control of, a parent or guardian on or in connection with premises owned, operated, or controlled by the parent or guardian, unless the work is in manufacturing, mercantile, or similar commercial enterprises, or is otherwise forbidden by Labor Code Sections 1294, 1296, or 1308.5.ⁿ²⁶ Permits to work or to employ are also not required in the case of horseback riding exhibitions, contests, or events permitted by Labor Code Section 1308(b)(3).ⁿ²⁷

[b] Entertainment Industry Permits

[i] Statutory Requirements

Labor Code Section 1308.5(a) requires the written consent of the Labor Commissioner for the employment of nonexempt minors under the age of 16 years in the following specified occupations within the entertainment industry:

1. Employment of any minor in the presentation of any drama, legitimate play, or radio broadcasting or television studio;ⁿ²⁸
2. Employment of any minor 12 years old or older in any other performance, concert, or entertainment;ⁿ²⁹
3. Appearance of a minor over the age of 8 years in any performance, concert, or entertainment during the public school vacation;ⁿ³⁰
4. Appearance of any minor in noncommercial entertainment;ⁿ³¹
5. Employment of a minor in the making of phonograph recordings or as an advertising or photographic model;ⁿ³² and
6. Employment or appearance of any minor pursuant to a contract approved by the superior court under the provisions of Family Code Section 6750 et seq. (requiring court approval of certain contracts to employ minors in entertainment industry).ⁿ³³

In addition, the Labor Commissioner's written consent is required for any minor between the age of 8 and 18 years, who is otherwise permitted by law to be employed as an actor, actress, or performer in a theater, motion picture studio, radio broadcasting studio, or television studio, to continue working between 10 p.m. and midnight in a performance or production beginning at an earlier hour.ⁿ³⁴

Prior to giving such consent, the Labor Commissioner must determine that the environment in which the performance, concert, or entertainment is to be produced is proper for the minor; that the conditions of employment are not detrimental to the minor's health; and that the minor's education will not be neglected or hampered.ⁿ³⁵

The Labor Commissioner's written consent is void after the expiration of 10 business days from the date it was granted, unless it is attached to a true and correct copy of the trustee's statement evidencing the establishment on behalf of the minor of a "Coogan Trust Account."ⁿ³⁶ If the consent is attached to a true and correct copy of the trustee's statement, the written consent is valid for a six month period.ⁿ³⁷

A person may not apply for the Commissioner's written consent to employ the same minor under a contract in the entertainment industry more than once in any six month period. If the Commissioner issues written consent for the employment of the same minor more than once within any six month period, the earliest dated written consent is valid, and any other written consent issued during that six month period is void.ⁿ³⁸

[ii] DLSE Regulations

Pursuant to its authority to enforce the child labor provisions of the Labor Code,ⁿ³⁹ the DLSE has promulgated regulations requiring employers in the entertainment industry to obtain a permit to employ any minor under 18 years old who is required by law to attend school (or who is not required to attend school solely because he or she is a nonresident of California).ⁿ⁴⁰ In addition, any such minor who desires to be employed in the entertainment industry must obtain an entertainment work permit.ⁿ⁴¹ The permit requirements are set forth in Title 8 California Code of Regulations Sections 11750-11765. As used in the regulations, the "entertainment industry" is defined as any organization or individual using the services of any minor in any of the following:ⁿ⁴²

1. Any motion picture of any type (including film and videotape), using any format (such as theatrical film, commercial, documentary, television program, etc.) by any medium (including theater, television, or videocassette);
2. Photography;
3. Recording;
4. Modeling;
5. Theatrical productions;
6. Publicity;
7. Rodeos;
8. Circuses;
9. Musical performances; and
10. Any other performances where minors perform to entertain the public.

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

The regulations, in part, implement the consent requirements of Labor Code Section 1308.5(a), discussed in [i], above, but they are not limited to the particular types of work specified in that section and are not limited to employees under 16 years old.ⁿ⁴³ The regulatory breadth is attributable to the DLSE's reliance on other Labor Code provisions in addition to Section 1308.5 as authority for its entertainment industry permit requirements. Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

[iii] Procedure for Obtaining Permits to Employ

Permits to employ minors and permits for minors to work in the entertainment industry are issued by the DLSE.ⁿ⁴⁴ Employers who wish to employ minors in the entertainment industry must complete and submit an application (DLSE 281) to the DLSE along with verification of a current and valid worker's compensation insurance policy (DLSE 601).ⁿ⁴⁵ Once issued, the permit has no expiration date but is voided if the insurance lapses.ⁿ⁴⁶

If the employer wishes to employ a group of minors, a "Blanket Entertainment Work Permit" (DLSE 287) may be sought by filing a separate application (DLSE 280).ⁿ⁴⁷ Blanket permits are valid only for particular productions and for the periods of times stated in the permit, and they are subject to the employer's compliance with all relevant laws and regulations.ⁿ⁴⁸ The application for such a permit must show that there will be sufficient studio teachers provided;ⁿ⁴⁹ proof of worker's compensation insurance; the presence of a parent or guardian for every 20 minors or fraction thereof; a list of the names of all minors to be employed under the permit; and necessary school, parental, and medical authorizations.ⁿ⁵⁰

[iv] Procedure for Obtaining Work Permits

Minors desiring to work in the entertainment industry must also obtain an entertainment work permit.ⁿ⁵¹ An application for such a permit must be completed and signed by the minor's parent or guardian (unless the minor is emancipated) and must contain identifying information; verification of the minor's school record, attendance, and satisfaction of the school district's requirements with respect to age, school record, attendance, and health.ⁿ⁵² A birth certificate may be required of minors who are under the age for mandatory school attendance, and the Deputy Labor Commissioner may require a physical examination if it is felt necessary to assure that the minor's condition permits the work called for by the employer.ⁿ⁵³

The work permit, if issued, is valid for a six-month period, and must be renewed in the same manner as provided for its original issuance.ⁿ⁵⁴

[v] Denial, Suspension, or Revocation of Permit

The DLSE may deny an entertainment industry permit to employ if the employment will be hazardous or detrimental to the health, safety, morals, or education of the minor.ⁿ⁵⁵ In addition, the DLSE may deny, revoke, or suspend a permit to employ if the employer violates the DLSE's entertainment industry regulations or commits a misdemeanor violation of any Labor Code provision regarding child labor.ⁿ⁵⁶ A permit may also be denied, suspended, or revoked if a studio teacher has been discharged or discriminated against for (1) complaining to the DLSE or to the permit holder (or its agents or employees) that conditions on the set or location were dangerous to the health, safety, or morals of minors employed on the set or location; or (2) taking any action to preclude, suspend, or terminate the employment of minors on a set or location for reasons of health, safety, or morals of the minors.ⁿ⁵⁷ If a permit is denied, suspended, or revoked, an appeal may be taken, and the Labor Commissioner will hold an administrative hearing.ⁿ⁵⁸

[vi] Presence of Parents, Guardians, and Studio Teachers

DLSE regulations require that a parent or guardian of any minor under 16 years old be present with and accompany the minor on the set or location, and to be within sight or sound of the minor at all times.ⁿ⁵⁹

The regulations also require employers in the entertainment industry to provide studio teachers for all minors between the ages of 15 days and 16 years, and for minors between the ages of 16 and 18 years if necessary for their education.ⁿ⁶⁰ Studio teachers must hold current, valid elementary and secondary teaching credentials, and must be certified by the Labor Commissioner following a written examination that tests the teacher's knowledge of child labor laws.ⁿ⁶¹ In addition to teaching,ⁿ⁶² studio teachers are responsible for "caring and attending to the health, safety and morals of minors under sixteen (16) years of age for whom they have been provided by the employer, while such minors are engaged or employed in any activity pertaining to the entertainment industry and subject to these regulations."ⁿ⁶³ On schooldays, one studio teacher must be provided for each group of 10 or fewer minors between the ages of 15 days and 16 years.ⁿ⁶⁴ During weekends, holidays, or school vacation periods, one studio teacher must be provided for each group of 20 or fewer such minors.ⁿ⁶⁵ Studio teachers must be provided for minors between the ages of 18 and 16 years when required for their education.ⁿ⁶⁶ The studio teacher's remuneration must be paid by the employer.ⁿ⁶⁷

A studio teacher may refuse to allow the engagement of a minor on a set or location and may remove the minor therefrom if, in the teacher's judgment, conditions present a danger to the health, safety, or morals of the minor.ⁿ⁶⁸ Any such action by the studio teacher may be immediately appealed to the Regional Manager of the DLSE (representing the Labor Commissioner), who may affirm or countermand the action.ⁿ⁶⁹

[c] Door-to-Door Sales Registration

Anyone 18 years or older who transports, or provides direction or supervision during transportation of, a minor under 16 years of age to any location more than 10 miles from the minor's residence, or who directs or supervises the minor, for the purpose of facilitating the minor's participation in door-to-door sales of any merchandise or commodity must register annually with the Labor Commissioner.ⁿ⁷⁰ Registration requires the execution under penalty of perjury of a written application, an investigation of the applicant's character, competency, and responsibility, and payment of a fee.ⁿ⁷¹ These registration requirements do not apply to the minor's parents or guardians, to anyone solely providing transportation for hire, or to anyone acting on behalf of a trustee or charitable corporationⁿ⁷² or an entity described in Government Code Section 12583.ⁿ⁷³

Similar registration requirements apply to individuals, associations, corporations, or other entities that employ or use, indirectly through third persons or directly, minors under 16 years of age in door-to-door sales at any location more than 10 miles from the minor's residence.ⁿ⁷⁴ Registration requires the execution under penalty of perjury of a written application (including a copy of any written contract or agreement offered to the minor or used in the sales), an investigation into whether the applicant has previously violated the California child labor laws and whether the minors will be exposed to hazardous or unsafe working conditions, and payment of a fee.ⁿ⁷⁵ Registrants must make all of their payroll records available for inspection by the Labor Commissioner.ⁿ⁷⁶ These registration requirements do not apply to a trustee or charitable corporationⁿ⁷⁷ or to an entity described in Government Code Section 12583.ⁿ⁷⁸

The Labor Commissioner may revoke, suspend, or refuse to renew a registration if any of the following have occurred:

1. The registrant or an agent of the registrant has violated or failed to comply with the provisionsⁿ⁷⁹ governing registration;ⁿ⁸⁰
2. The registrant has made any misrepresentation or false statement in the application for registration;ⁿ⁸¹
3. The Labor Commissioner or a court of law has found that the registrant or an agent of the registrant has violated, or willfully aided or abetted the violation of, any California law regulating employment of minors;ⁿ⁸² or
4. The Secretary of Labor or a court of law has found that the registrant has violated the child labor provisions of the FLSA.ⁿ⁸³

[2] Federal Law

[a] Age Certificates

The FLSA authorizes the Secretary of Labor to promulgate regulations requiring employers to obtain proof of age from employees.ⁿ⁸⁴ If an employer has on file an unexpired certificate, issued and held in accordance with the Secretary's regulations, which certifies that the minor who is employed is above the oppressive child labor age for the occupation in question, no oppressive child labor shall be deemed to exist.ⁿ⁸⁵

The certificate may be either (1) a federal certificate of age issued by a person authorized by the Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division, or (2) a California work permit or age certificate issued pursuant to the California Labor and Education Codes.ⁿ⁸⁶ An application for a federal age certificate must be made by the minor seeking the employment, or by the prospective employer.ⁿ⁸⁷ Satisfactory documentary evidence of age must be provided, which may take the form of (1) a birth certificate or other similar record issued by the registrar of vital statistics; (2) a record of baptism, family bible record of births, passport, immigration records, or the like, provided that such documents have been in existence for at least one year before the time they are offered as evidence of age; or (3) a school record of age, accompanied by a sworn statement of the parent or parent substitute, and a certificate of a physician concerning the physical age of the minor, containing specified information.ⁿ⁸⁸ There is a preference for the first form of evidence, and the others will generally not be accepted unless the preceding form is unavailable.ⁿ⁸⁹

The federal age certificate must be in the form provided by regulation and must contain the signature of the minor and the issuing officer.ⁿ⁹⁰ Once issued, a certificate for a person under 18 years is sent to the minor's prospective employer. The employer must keep the certificate on file at the minor's workplace. When the minor terminates employment, the employer must give the certificate to the minor. The minor may then present the previously issued certificate to future employers as proof of age.ⁿ⁹¹ⁿ⁹²

If substantial evidence exists that the age given on a federal age certificate is incorrect, the investigating authority may request a determination of the continued acceptability of the age certificate.ⁿ⁹³ The Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division will forward the request to the DLSE for action to establish the minor's age and, if necessary, to revoke the certificate.ⁿ⁹⁴ The Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division has final authority to determine the continued acceptability of a certificate for purposes of the FLSA,ⁿ⁹⁵ and will give notice of any determination to the employer and minor.ⁿ⁹⁶ A revoked certificate has no force and effect after notice of revocation.ⁿ⁹⁷

[b] Waivers for Minors Between Ages of 10 and 12 Years Employed in Hand Harvest Labor

Employers may seek a waiver from the Secretary of Labor permitting the employment of minors between 10 and 12 years old in hand harvest labor for periods not to exceed 8 weeks if certain conditions are met.ⁿ⁹⁸ The agricultural operation involved must be one that is customarily paid on a piece rate basis in the region in which the individuals would be employed.ⁿ⁹⁹ The Secretary may grant such a waiver only after making the following findings, based on objective data submitted by the applicant: (1) the crop to be harvested has a particularly short harvesting season and application of the FLSA child labor provisionsⁿ¹⁰⁰ would cause severe economic disruption in the industry; (2) employment of such minors would not be deleterious to their health and well-being; (3) the level and type of pesticides and other chemicals used will not have a deleterious effect on the health or well-being of the minors; (4) persons over the age of 12 years are not available for such employment; and (5) persons under the age of 12 years have traditionally and substantially been employed for such work without displacing job opportunities for persons over 16 years old.ⁿ¹⁰¹ Any waiver granted by the Secretary must require that the minors covered by the waiver (1) will be employed outside of school hours for the school district where they are living, (2) will commute daily from their permanent residence to the farm on which they are employed; and (3) will be employed under the waiver for not more than 8 weeks between June 1 and October 15 of any calendar year, and in accordance with any other terms and conditions that the Secretary may prescribe for the minors' protection.ⁿ¹⁰² Procedures for obtaining such waivers and further details regarding their issuance are set forth in Title 29 Code of Federal Regulations Sections 575.1-575.9.

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS

CHAPTER 6 Child Labor Laws

Part A. TEXT

1-6 California Employment Law § 6.05

AUTHOR: By Susan Spurlark, J.D.

§ 6.05 Penalties and Enforcement

[1] California Law

[a] Authority to Investigate and Enforce

The DLSE is empowered to enforce the provisions of the Labor Code relating to child labor.ⁿ¹ For general discussion of the investigative and enforcement powers of the DLSE, see Chapter 5.

In addition, a full-time attendance supervisor of a county, city and county, or school district where the employer is located, or a probation officer of such county, may at any time enter the place of employment to examine work permits for minors employed at that place or to investigate violations of the child labor laws or the compulsory education laws.ⁿ² If a violation is found or access is denied, the investigating officer or the Superintendent of Public Instruction must notify the Labor Commissioner in writing within 48 hours that there is good cause to believe that a violation is occurring and must describe the nature of the violation.ⁿ³ On receipt of such a report, the Labor Commissioner must investigate and, if a violation is found, issue a citation pursuant to Labor Code Section 1287.ⁿ⁴

[b] Penalties

[i] Civil

For purposes of assessing civil penalties, the Labor Code and DLSE regulations divide violations of the child labor provisions into "Class A" violations and "Class B" violations.ⁿ⁵

"Class A" violations are the following:ⁿ⁶

1. Any violation of Labor Code Section 1290 (prohibited employment in manufacturing establishment);ⁿ⁷

2. Any violation of Labor Code Sections 1292 and 1293 (prohibited tasks relating to operation of machinery);ⁿ⁸
3. Any violation of Labor Code Section 1293.1 (agricultural zones of danger);ⁿ⁹
4. Any violation of Labor Code Section 1294 (prohibited occupations relating to transportation and other dangerous occupations);ⁿ¹⁰
5. Any violation of Labor Code Section 1294.1 (occupations considered hazardous under, or not meeting limitations of, federal regulations);ⁿ¹¹
6. Any violation of Labor Code Section 1294.5 (prohibited work in gas service stations);ⁿ¹²
7. Any violation of Labor Code Section 1308 (certain other prohibited occupations);ⁿ¹³
8. Any violation of Labor Code Section 1308.1 (certain prohibited employment in door-to-door sales);ⁿ¹⁴
9. Any violation of Labor Code Section 1391 (restrictions on working hours for minors);ⁿ¹⁵
10. Any violation of Labor Code Section 1392 (violation of 8-hour day maximum by person with control of ward or apprentice); and
11. Any other violation that the Labor Commissioner determines presents an imminent danger to minor employees or a substantial probability of death or serious physical harm.

Although Labor Code Section 1288 classifies only the third or subsequent violation of Labor Code Section 1391 as a "Class A" violation and classifies the first and second violations as "Class B" violations, DLSE regulations classify all violations of Labor Code Section 1391 as "Class A" violations.ⁿ¹⁶ This appears to be within the Labor Commissioner's discretion to determine that any violation that "present[s] an imminent danger to minor employees" is a "Class A" violation.ⁿ¹⁷

The civil penalty for a "Class A" violation is a minimum of $5,000 per violation and a maximum of $10,000 per violation.ⁿ¹⁸ Willful or repeated violations are subject to higher penalties (up to $10,000) than those imposed for nonwillful or first violations.ⁿ¹⁹

"Class B" violations are the following:ⁿ²⁰

1. Any violation of Labor Code Section 1299 (requiring employers to maintain certificates and permits on file);ⁿ²¹
2. Any violation of Labor Code Section 1308.5 (requiring Labor Commissioner consent to certain employment of minors in entertainment industry);ⁿ²²
3. A first or second violation of Labor Code Section 1391 (restrictions on working hours for minors);ⁿ²³ and
4. Any other violation that the Labor Commissioner determines has a direct or immediate relationship to the health, safety, or security of minor employees, other than "Class A" violations.

The civil penalty for a "Class B" violation is a minimum of $500 and a maximum of $1000.ⁿ²⁴

Labor Code Section 1308.7 restricts the hours that any minor may work in the entertainment industry.ⁿ²⁵ Violation of these provisions has not yet been classified by the Labor Code or DLSE regulations as either a "Class A" or a "Class B" violation.ⁿ²⁶

The civil penalty for a violation of Labor Code § 1309.5, which prohibits the sale of films, photographs, slides, or magazines depicting a minor engaged in sexual conduct, may not exceed $7,500 per violation.ⁿ²⁷

For purposes of determining the appropriate penalty, a prior violation is one that was not contested or that was upheld in proceedings relating to that violation.ⁿ²⁸ Each citation is treated as a single violation irrespective of the number of minors involved.ⁿ²⁹ A violation is deemed "willful" if it implies a purpose or willingness to engage, employ, or assign minors to activities proscribed by any of the above-listed statutes.ⁿ³⁰

[ii] Criminal

It is a misdemeanor to employ (directly or indirectly through third persons) a minor affected by Labor Code Sections 1285-1312 in violation of those sections, or to permit any minor to be employed in violation of those sections.ⁿ³¹ A parent or guardian of a minor who permits the minor to be employed in violation of those sections is also guilty of a misdemeanor.ⁿ³² It is also a misdemeanor to violate the provisions of Labor Code Sections 1391 and 1392 regarding hours of employment for minors.ⁿ³³

Violations of Labor Code Section 1285-1312 are punishable by a fine of not less than $1,000 and not more than $5,000, or by imprisonment in the county jail for not more than six months, or both.ⁿ³⁴ Willful violations of these sections are punishable by a fine of not more than $10,000, imprisonment in the county jail for not more than six months, or both.ⁿ³⁵

Violations of Labor Code Section 1391 are punishable by a fine of not less than $1,000 and not more than $5,000, or by imprisonment in the county jail for not more than 60 days, or both. Willful violations of this section are punishable by a fine of not more than $10,000, imprisonment in the county jail for not more than six months, or both.ⁿ³⁶

It is a misdemeanor to violate the provisions of Labor Code Section 1308.7 regarding hours of employment for minors in the entertainment industry. Violation of these provisions is punishable by a fine of not less than $500 nor more than $1,000, or by imprisonment in the county jail for not more than 60 days, or both.ⁿ³⁷

Violation of provisions of the Education Code regarding employment of minors and work permits is also a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of not less than $100, nor more than $400, or by imprisonment in the county jail for not more than 60 days, or both.ⁿ³⁸ In addition, any person authorized to sign an age certificate, permit to work, or permit to employ who knowingly certifies to any false statement therein is guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of not less than $10, nor more than $100, or by imprisonment in the county jail for not more than 30 days, or both.ⁿ³⁹

Violation of the child labor provisions of the Labor Code regarding farm labor contractors is also a misdemeanor.ⁿ⁴⁰ For such violations, fines of up to $1000 may be assessed in addition to or in lieu of imprisonment up to 6 months in the county jail.ⁿ⁴¹ Violations of the child labor laws may also constitute violations of various Penal Code provisions.ⁿ⁴²

It is also a misdemeanor to violate the provisions of Labor Code Sections 1308.2 and 1308.3, which require registration by persons employing minors to make door-to-door sales and persons involved in transporting the minors.ⁿ⁴³ First-time convictions are punishable by a fine of $1,000 for each affected minor, second-time convictions are punishable by a fine of $2,500 for each affected minor, and any subsequent convictions are punishable by a fine of $10,000 for each affected minor.ⁿ⁴⁴

[c] Enforcement Procedures[i] Administrative Procedures

If, after inspection or investigation, the Labor Commissioner (or his or her designee or deputy) finds a violation of the laws relating to child labor, he or she may issue a written citation describing the nature of the violation and referring to any statute or regulation allegedly violated.ⁿ⁴⁵ The citation may be served personally or by registered mail in accordance with Government Code Section 11505(c).ⁿ⁴⁶

The recipient of such a citation may contest the citation or proposed penalty assessment by notifying the office of the Labor Commissioner that is listed on the citation of a request for an informal hearing.ⁿ⁴⁷ The request must be made within 15 business days after service of the citation.ⁿ⁴⁸ The request must be in writing.ⁿ⁴⁹

An informal hearing must be conducted within 30 days after that notice,ⁿ⁵⁰ and the DLSE must give the person cited at least 3 days' notice, which may be oral with a confirming letter, of the time of the hearing.ⁿ⁵¹ The hearing is conducted by the Labor Commissioner, or a deputy or agent assigned by the Commissioner.ⁿ⁵² D.L.S.E. Division Management Memo. No. 88-5 describes the procedures for conducting such hearings. The hearing must be recorded on equipment that will produce an audio record of adequate quality to allow a Certified Shorthand Reporter to produce a transcript of the proceedings for use in the event of judicial review.ⁿ⁵³ At the conclusion of the hearing, the civil penalty assessment is modified, affirmed, or dismissed.ⁿ⁵⁴ The Labor Commissioner's decision consists of a notice of findings, findings, and order, which must be served on all parties to the hearing within 15 days after the hearing by regular first-class mail at the last known address of the party on file with the Labor Commissioner.ⁿ⁵⁵

Any amount found due by the Labor Commissioner is due and payable 45 days after the notice, written findings, and order have been mailed to the party assessed.ⁿ⁵⁶ The party assessed may seek judicial review of the Labor Commissioner's decision by writ of mandate in the appropriate superior court within that period, provided that the party agrees to pay any judgment and costs ultimately rendered by the court against the party for the assessment.ⁿ⁵⁷ If the notice, findings, and order are served by mail, the time within which the party must either pay the assessment or seek a writ of mandate is extended by 5 calendar days if the place of address and the place of mailing are both within California, 10 calendar days if either the place of mailing or the place of address is outside California but within the United States, and 20 calendar days if either the place of mailing or the place of address is outside the United States.ⁿ⁵⁸ As in the case of any administrative mandate proceeding, the proceeding is not de novo, and the court reviews only the transcript of the hearing and any evidence introduced at the hearing.ⁿ⁵⁹ If the findings or order affirm or modify a citation or proposed assessment of a civil penalty, a certified copy of the findings and order may be entered by the Labor Commissioner in the office of the clerk of the superior court in any county in which the person assessed has property or in which the person assessed has or had a place of business.ⁿ⁶⁰ Immediately on filing, the clerk must enter judgment for the State of California against the person assessed in the amount shown on the certified order.ⁿ⁶¹

Penalties in cases in which the citation is not contested must be remitted within 15 business days after the issuance of the citation.ⁿ⁶² If no petition objecting to a citation or proposed assessment of civil penalty is filed, a certified copy of the penalty and citation may be filed by the Labor Commissioner in the office of the clerk of the superior court in any county in which the person assessed has property or in which the person assessed has or had a place of business.ⁿ⁶³ The clerk, immediately on filing, must enter judgment for the State of California against the person assessed in the amount shown on the citation of proposed assessment of penalty.ⁿ⁶⁴

Any judgment entered on an assessment or order of the Labor Commissioner bears the same rate of interest and has the same effect as other judgments and must be given the same preference allowed by law on other judgments rendered for claims for taxes.ⁿ⁶⁵ The clerk may make no charge for entering such a judgment.ⁿ⁶⁶

[ii] Judicial Proceedings

The state attorney general or county district attorney may prosecute both civil and criminal actions, either on their own motion or on the complaint of others, for violations of laws relating to employment of minors.ⁿ⁶⁷

No express private right of action exists for violations of the child labor laws. Moreover, the exclusive remedy provisions of the worker's compensation law bar any claim against the employer or co-employees for damages for personal injury or death arising out of employment in violation of the child labor laws, unless an exception to those provisions applies.ⁿ⁶⁸ For discussion of the scope of the workers' compensation law, and the exclusive remedy provisions thereof, see Chapter 20.

[d] Additional Workers' Compensation Benefits Payable to Illegally Employed Minors

An employer (other than the State of California or its political subdivisions or districts) who illegally employs a minor under 16 years of age is liable for additional workers' compensation if the minor employee suffers a work-related injury.ⁿ⁶⁹ This additional amount is equal to 50 percent of the entire compensation otherwise recoverable, but cannot be more than the maximum sum an employer must pay under Labor Code Section 4553 for serious and willful misconduct.ⁿ⁷⁰ The employer must pay these additional benefits at the same time and the same manner as the normal compensation benefits.ⁿ⁷¹

An employer is not liable for the additional benefits if the employee was hired because the employee had a birth certificate, driver's license, or other reasonable evidence that he or she was over 15 years of age.ⁿ⁷² This rule applies even if the employee falsely obtained this evidence of age.ⁿ⁷³

For further discussion of workers' compensation benefits, see Hanna, California Law of Employee Injuries and Workers' Compensation (Matthew Bender).

[2] Federal Law

[a] Authority to Investigate and Enforce

The Secretary of Labor administers all provisions of the FLSA relating to child labor.ⁿ⁷⁴ The Secretary (or an authorized representative) must make investigations and inspections pursuant to Title 29 United States Code Section 211(a) with respect to employment of minors.ⁿ⁷⁵ Subject to the direction and control of the Attorney General, the Secretary must also bring all actions to enjoin any act or practice that is unlawful because it constitutes oppressive child labor.ⁿ⁷⁶

[b] Penalties

Any person who wilfully violates the child labor provisions of the FLSA is subject to criminal prosecution and on conviction may be fined up to $10,000, or imprisoned for not more than 6 months, or both.ⁿ⁷⁷

The FLSA also provides civil penalties for violation of its child labor provisions and regulations.ⁿ⁷⁸ The maximum civil penalty under the FLSA is $11,000 for each employee who is a subject of a violation.ⁿ⁷⁹ The amount of the penalty is determined with consideration for the size of the business, the gravity of the violation charged, and any evidence of willfulness.ⁿ⁸⁰

[c] Enforcement Procedures

[i] Administrative Procedures

The Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division, or an official authorized by the Administrator, has authority to determine whether a person has violated the child labor provisions of the FLSA and whether a civil money penalty for the violation is appropriate.ⁿ⁸¹ If the Administrator decides to impose a civil penalty on any person, the Administrator must issue and serve a notice of the penalty on that person.ⁿ⁸² The amount of the penalty determined by the Administrator and set forth in the notice becomes final and may be collected, unless the person charged with the violation takes a timely exception and requests a hearing.ⁿ⁸³ The exception must be in writing to the official who issued the determination at the Wage and Hour Division address appearing on the determination notice, and must be received no later than 15 days after the date the person charged receives the notice of the penalty. No additional time is added when service of the determination of penalties or of the exception is by mail. If a request for an administrative hearing is timely filed, the Administrator's determination is inoperative unless and until the case is dismissed or the Administrative Law Judge issues a decision affirming the determination.ⁿ⁸⁴ Penalties collected for violations of the child labor provisions must be deposited in the general fund of the United States Treasury.ⁿ⁸⁵

The administrative procedures for imposition, appeal, and collection of a civil penalty for a child labor law violation are the same as those for violations of minimum wage and overtime laws.ⁿ⁸⁶ The procedures are discussed in Chapter 5.

[ii] Judicial Proceedings

Subject to the direction and control of the United States Attorney General, the Secretary may bring actions under Title 29 United States Code Section 217 to enjoin acts of oppressive child labor.ⁿ⁸⁷ For discussion of actions to enjoin violations of the FLSA, see Chapter 5.

The Secretary, as represented by the Solicitor of Labor, may institute a civil action to collect the penalties referred to in [i], above, in any court of competent jurisdiction.ⁿ⁸⁸ Civil or criminal contempt proceedings may be brought against a person who fails to comply with a court order imposing such penalties in a civil or criminal proceeding for violation of the child labor provisions.ⁿ⁸⁹ For further discussion of the collection of civil penalties for violations of the child labor provisions, which are recovered in the same manner as civil penalties for minimum wage and overtime violations, see Chapter 5.

There is no private right of action for personal injury, wrongful death, or other damages caused by violations of the child labor provisions of the FLSA.ⁿ⁹⁰

1-7 California Employment Law Scope

AUTHOR: By Susan Spurlark, J.D.

Scope

By Susan Spurlark, J.D. n SCOPE*

This chapter discusses state and federal requirements regarding posting of notices and recordkeeping under the wage and hour laws. The chapter also discusses the penalties for and effects of noncompliance with recordkeeping obligations.

For discussion of posting and recordkeeping requirements relating to designation of the regular payday, as well as wage statement requirements, see Chapter 4. Chapter 5 discusses the investigatory powers of the Labor Commissioner and the Department of Labor, as well as remedies for violation of wage and hour laws. For an overview of the applicability of the various wage and hour laws, see Chapter 1.

Posting and recordkeeping requirements under equal employment opportunity laws are discussed in Chapter 41.

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS

CHAPTER 7 Posting and Recordkeeping Requirements Under Wage and Hour Laws

Part A. TEXT

1-7 California Employment Law § 7.01

AUTHOR: By Susan Spurlark, J.D.

§ 7.01 Posting Requirements

[1] General Requirements

[a] California Law

[i] Posting of Wage Orders

Labor Code section 1183 requires employers to post Industrial Welfare Commission (IWC) Wage Orders applicable to their industry or to occupations of persons in their employ.n1 The IWC is required to send copies of the relevant orders to all affected employers and to any employer requesting a copy; however, failure to provide the copy does not relieve the employer of its obligation to comply with the order.n2 The provisions of the wage orders further require posting in a location frequented by employees during the workday.n3 When the location of work or other conditions make posting not feasible, a copy of the order may be maintained and made available to employees on request.n4

[ii] Other Posting Requirements

California employers are also required to conspicuously post at the work place (or at the office or nearest agency for payment) a notice of paydays and of the time and place of payment.n5 For discussion of this notice and a sample form, see Chapter 4.

Mining employers, logging and saw mill employers, employers of door-to-door or telephone salespersons, and employers engaged in the business of promoting theatrical industries or enterprises must conspicuously post on the premises where persons are employed a notice specifying the name and address of the financial institution holding cash or securities to secure payment of wages or the name of the surety guaranteeing payment of wages, as required by wage security provisions of the Labor Code.n6

Farm labor contractors must post notices at the site where work is to be performed and on all vehicles used for the transportation of employees (in English and Spanish and in lettering of a size prescribed by the Department of Industrial Relations), specifying the rate of compensation paid by the contractor to his or her employees for their services.ⁿ⁷

Talent agency employers must post conspicuously in their offices a printed copy of the Labor Code provisions governing talent agencies,ⁿ⁸ the name and address of the person charged with enforcing those provisions, and printed copies of such other statutes as the Labor Commissioner may specify.ⁿ⁹

[b] Federal Law

Regulations promulgated under the Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA) require employers to post notices explaining the provisions of the FLSA, as prescribed by the Wage and Hour Division.ⁿ¹⁰ The posting requirement applies to any employer who employs any employees who are subject to the minimum-wage provisions of the FLSA.ⁿ¹¹ The notices must be posted in conspicuous places in every establishment where such employees are employed so that the notice may readily be observed.ⁿ¹²

■ PRACTICE TIP:

If an employer employs employees to whom the overtime provisions of the FLSA are not applicable because of an exemption that is broadly applicable to the particular establishment, the employer may alter or modify the prescribed notice with a legible notation to show that the overtime provisions do not apply.ⁿ¹³ For example, a taxicab service may add a notation to the poster stating that "overtime provisions are not applicable to taxicab drivers," with a citation to the relevant statute setting forth the exemption.ⁿ¹⁴ Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

Regulations under the FLSA relating to the employment of persons at subminimum wages under special certificates (for example, learners, employees in sheltered workshops, patient workers, handicapped workers) also contain posting requirements.ⁿ¹⁵ Finally, regulations issued under the Walsh-Healey Act,ⁿ¹⁶ Davis-Bacon Act,ⁿ¹⁷ Migrant and Seasonal Agricultural Worker Protection Act,ⁿ¹⁸ and Service Contract Actⁿ¹⁹ also contain posting requirements relating to wages and hours of employees. For discussion of the scope of these statutes, see Chapter 1.

[2] Effect of Failure to Post

[a] California Law

Failure to post notices required by Labor Code sections 207 and 1183 and the wage orders is a misdemeanor.ⁿ²⁰ In the event of a willful violation of state labor laws, regulations, or orders, the Division of Labor Standards Enforcement (DLSE) may seek an injunction against further violations.ⁿ²¹ For further discussion of such actions, see Chapter 5.

[b] Federal Law

The FLSA provides no specific criminal or civil penalties for failure to post prescribed notices. Arguably, the provisions of Title 29 United States Code, sections 215(a)(5) and 216(a) are applicable if a violation of the regulation requiring posting can be construed to be a violation of Title 29 United States Code section 211(c). However, section 211(c) refers to maintenance of records and only by implication authorizes promulgation of related regulations requiring posting. Thus, the penalties for violations of that statute would not appear to be applicable.

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS

CHAPTER 7 Posting and Recordkeeping Requirements Under Wage and Hour Laws

Part A. TEXT

1-7 California Employment Law § 7.02

AUTHOR: By Susan Spurlark, J.D.

§ 7.02 Recordkeeping Requirements

[1] California Law

[a] General Requirements

California employers subject to the Labor Code and wage orders must maintain certain information regarding wages and hours separately for each of their employees.ⁿ¹ The following information must be maintained:

1. The employee's full name;ⁿ²
2. The employee's home address;ⁿ³
3. The employee's occupation and social security number;ⁿ⁴
4. The employee's birthdate, if under 18 years, and designation as a minor;ⁿ⁵
5. Time records showing when the employee begins and ends each work period, meal periods (except where operations cease), split shift intervals, and total daily hours worked;ⁿ⁶
6. Total wages paid each payroll period, including value of board, lodging, or other compensation actually furnished;ⁿ⁷
7. Total hours worked by the employee in the payroll period and applicable rates of pay;ⁿ⁸ and
8. Accurate production records for the employee, when a piece rate or incentive plan is in operation.ⁿ⁹

[b] Special Rules

[i] Wage Payments

Employers who pay wages are required to maintain a record of deductions from wages in ink or other indelible form for at least three years.ⁿ¹⁰ For a discussion of required statements of wages and deductions, see Chapter 4.

[ii] Gratuities

Employers must maintain records of all gratuities received, whether directly from the employee or indirectly by means of a deduction from wages or otherwise. The record must be open to inspection at all reasonable hours by the DLSE.ⁿ¹¹ For discussion of restrictions on employer collection or crediting of gratuities received by employees, see Chapters 2 and 4.

[iii] Minors' Work Permits

Employers of minors must maintain all permits and certificates issued pursuant to the Labor or Education Codes.ⁿ¹² For further discussion, see Chapter 6.

[iv] Talent Agencies

Talent agencies that receive funds on behalf of any artist must maintain a separate record for each artist of all funds received on behalf of that artist and of the disposition of those funds.ⁿ¹³ In addition, the agency must keep records in a form approved by the Labor Commissioner, containing names and addresses of each artist employing that agency, any fees received from the artist, any employments secured by the artist during the term of the contract between the artist and the agency, the amount of any compensation received by the artist pursuant to such employment, and such other information as the Labor Commissioner may require.ⁿ¹⁴ No talent agency, its agent, or its employees shall make any false entry in any records.ⁿ¹⁵

[v] Public Works

Employers involved in public works projects must keep accurate records of the following information for each person employed in connection with the public works project: (1) name, (2) address, (3) social security number, (4) work classification, (5) straight time and overtime hours worked each calendar day and week, and (6) actual per diem wages paid.ⁿ¹⁶

[vi] Garment Manufacturers

In addition to the records required of all employers,ⁿ¹⁷ garment manufacturers are required to keep accurate records of the following information: (1) daily production sheets, including piece rates;ⁿ¹⁸ (2) contract worksheets indicating the price per unit agreed to between a contractor and the manufacturer;ⁿ¹⁹ and (3) any other conditions of employment.ⁿ²⁰

Under the statutory provisions relating to garment manufacturers, when all employees in a major identifiable work unit take a meal period at a uniform time, a group record of the time taken for meals may be kept.ⁿ²¹ However, if a garment manufacturer permits staggered or intermittent meal periods by its employees, separate records must be maintained showing when each employee begins and ends his or her meal period.ⁿ²² In addition, individual records of the beginning and end of the workday must be maintained pursuant to the requirements of the wage order governing the manufacturing industry generally.ⁿ²³

[vii] Household Occupations

The wage order governing household occupations was amended effective October 1, 2000, to include the same recordkeeping requirements set forth in the other wage orders.ⁿ²⁴ Employers of persons in such occupations now are required to keep the records of the information specified in [a], above.n25

[c] Requirements Regarding Form of Records, Length of Retention, and Location

Records required under the Labor Code and wage orders must be in English, recorded in ink or some other indelible form, and dated to show the month, day, and year.n26 Records must be retained for a period of three years at the place of employment or at a central location in California.n27

[d] Effect of Failure to Keep Records

Failure to maintain the records required by Labor Code section 1174 or the wage orders is a misdemeanor,n28 punishable by a fine of between $100 and $1,000 or by imprisonment of between 30 days and six months, or both.n29 The Labor Commissioner may also seek injunctive relief to remedy the violation.n30 Furthermore, any person employing labor who willfully fails to maintain either the records required by Labor Code section 1174(c), or accurate and complete records required by Labor Code section 1174(d), or to allow any IWC member or DLSE employee to inspect records pursuant to Labor Code section 1174(b), is subject to a civil penalty of $500.n31

Knowing and intentional violation of Labor Code section 226, including its recordkeeping requirements, is also a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment not to exceed one year, or both.n32

In addition, an employer who fails to keep proper records, as required by the Labor Code and wage orders, cannot rely on the lack of precise evidence of the number of hours worked by an employee to defeat an action by the employee to recover unpaid minimum wages and overtime compensation.n33 If the employee proves that he or she worked hours for which he or she was not properly compensated, the burden shifts to the employer to produce evidence of the precise amount of time that the employee worked. If the employer is not able to produce such evidence because of its failure to keep the required records, the court may award damages on the basis of the employee's testimony, even if it is not possible to calculate the precise amount of compensation due to the employee.n34

For further discussion of remedies under wage and hour laws, including criminal penalties, see Chapter 5.

[2] Federal Law

[a] Generally

The FLSA requires that every employer subject to any provision of the FLSA make and retain records of the persons employed by the employer and of the wages, hours, and other conditions and practices of employment in accordance with regulations promulgated by the Secretary of Labor for purposes of enforcing the FLSA.n35 The FLSA recordkeeping requirements apply to all employers who have any employees covered by the FLSA.n36 Certain recordkeeping requirements also apply to employees who are subject to certain exemptions from the FLSA.n37 It is the employer's burden to maintain the required records, and that obligation cannot be delegated to employees so as to avoid employer liability.n38 Nothing in the regulations governing FLSA recordkeeping requirements excuses an employer from complying with any other recordkeeping or reporting requirement imposed by any other federal, state, or local law, ordinance, regulation, or rule.n39

The FLSA regulations require that employers record and maintain the following information separately for each covered employee (i.e., those employees subject to both the minimum wage and overtime provisions of the FLSA):n40

1. Full name as used for social security purposes and, on the same record, the employee's identifying symbol or number if that is used in place of a name on any time, work, or payroll record;
2. Home address, including zip code;

3. Date of birth, if under 19 years old;
4. Sex (which may be designated by prefixes such as Ms. or Mr.);
5. Occupation;
6. Time of day and day of week on which the employee's workweek begins;n41
7. Regular hourly rate of pay for any week during which overtime compensation is due under the FLSA;n42
8. Basis on which wages are paid (for example, amount per hour, per week, per year, or per piece);
9. Amount and nature of each payment that is excluded from the regular rate pursuant to Title 29 United States Code, section 207(e).
10. Hours worked each workday and total hours worked each workweek;n43
11. Total of daily or weekly straight-time earnings or wages for all hours worked before any overtime premium is added;
12. Total amount paid as an overtime premium for each workweek;
13. Total additions to or deductions from wages paid each pay period, including a record of the dates, amounts, and nature of the items which make up the total additions and deductions;
14. Total wages paid each pay period; and
15. Date of payment and pay period covered by the payment.

In the case of retroactive payments made pursuant to Title 29 United States Code, section 216(c), under supervision of the Wage and Hour Administrator, the employer must make and preserve an entry in its payroll records showing the amount of the payment, the period covered by the payment, and the date of the payment.n44 In addition, the employer must report the above information to the Wage and Hour Administrator and preserve a copy of the report.n45

No particular order or form for the records is prescribed.n46 Thus, records may be in the form of computer printouts, automatic processing tape, or microfiche, provided that the records are sufficiently legible, adequate viewing facilities are available, and the employer will make any requested extensions, recomputations, or transcripts.n47 However, the records must be plain, intelligible, objective, and accurate and cannot be based on estimates of hours worked or artificially restrict the number of hours reported.n48

[b] Exceptions and Special Provisions

[i] Executive, Administrative, Professional, and Outside Sales Employees

Employers of "bona fide executive, administrative, or professional" employees (including employees employed in the capacity of academic administrative personnel or teachers in elementary or secondary schools) or outside sales employeesn49 need not maintain the information listed in paragraphs (7)-(13) in subsection [a], above, with respect to those employees.n50 However, employers must maintain records showing the basis on which they pay wages to such employees, in sufficient detail to permit calculation for each pay period of the employee's total remuneration for employment, including fringe benefits and perquisites.ⁿ⁵¹

■ PRACTICE TIP:

Employers may wish to have exempt employees fill out time sheets so that they have an accurate record of the hours these employees have worked. These time sheets can be helpful in determining overtime hours worked if the employee is later reclassified as non-exempt or brings a wage claim for unpaid overtime wages. These time sheets may also be used to determine if the employee has worked the minimum number of hours (1250 hours) to be eligible for family and medical leaves under state or federal law.ⁿ⁵² Commentary by Lori A.M. Middlehurst

[ii] Other Exempt Employees

The regulations contain special recordkeeping requirements for other categories of employees who are exempt from minimum-wage and/or overtime compensation requirements under the FLSA.ⁿ⁵³ These regulations exempt employers from recording and maintaining some of the information listed in [a], above, but in many cases also require additional information to be maintained. For description of the various exemptions from minimum-wage and overtime compensation requirements, see Chapters 2 and 3.

The following categories of exempt employees are subject to special recordkeeping requirements:

1. Employees exempt from both minimum-wage and overtime requirements pursuant to Title 29 United States Code, sections 213(a)(3), (5), (8), (10), (12) or 213(d);ⁿ⁵⁴
2. Employees exempt from overtime pay requirements pursuant to Title 29 United States Code, section 213(b)(1)-(3), (5), (7), (9), (10), (15)-(17), (20), (21), (24), (27), or (28);ⁿ⁵⁵
3. Livestock auction employees exempt from overtime pay requirements pursuant to Title 29 United States Code, section 213(b)(13);ⁿ⁵⁶
4. Country elevator employees exempt from overtime pay requirements pursuant to Title 29 United States Code, section 213(b)(14);ⁿ⁵⁷
5. Local delivery employees exempt from overtime pay requirements pursuant to Title 29 United States Code, section 213(b)(11);ⁿ⁵⁸
6. Commissioned employees of a retail or service establishment exempt from overtime pay requirements pursuant to Title 29 United States Code, section 207(i);ⁿ⁵⁹ and
7. Seamen exempt from overtime pay requirements pursuant to Title 29 United States Code, section 213(b)(6).ⁿ⁶⁰

Special recordkeeping requirements are also imposed on employers of employees who are exempt from overtime compensation while they are receiving remedial education.ⁿ⁶¹

[iii] Other Special Rules

The following categories of employees subject to special overtime rules are also subject to special rules regarding recordkeeping under the FLSA:

1-7 California Employment Law § 7.02

1. Employees employed in certain tobacco, cotton, sugar cane, or sugar beet services, who are subject to special overtime work schedules under Title 29 United States Code, sections 207(m) or 213(h)-(j);n62
2. Employees under certain collective bargaining agreements who are partially exempt from overtime pay requirements as provided by Title 29 United States Code, section 207(b)(1) or (2);n63
3. Bulk petroleum employees partially exempt from overtime pay requirements pursuant to Title 29 United States Code, section 207(b)(3).n64
4. Employees engaged in charter activities for certain carriers pursuant to Title 29 United States Code, section 207(n);n65
5. Hospital employees compensated for overtime work on the basis of a 14-day work period pursuant to Title 29 United States Code, section 207(j);n66
6. Employees employed under "Belo" contracts pursuant to Title 29 United States Code, section 207(f);n67
7. Employees paid for overtime on the basis of "applicable" rates provided in Title 29 United States Code, section 207(g)(1), (2);n68
8. Employees paid for overtime at premium rates computed on a "basic" rate authorized in accordance with Title 29 United States Code, section 207(g)(3);n69
9. Employees receiving "board, lodging, or other facilities," as defined by Title 29 United States Code, section 203(m);n70
10. Tipped employees;n71
11. Employees employed by a private entity operating an amusement or recreational establishment located on certain national park or forest land who are partially exempt from overtime pay requirements pursuant to Title 29 United States Code, section 213(b)(29);n72
12. Learners, apprentices, messengers, students, or handicapped workers employed under special certificates pursuant to Title 29 United States Code, section 214;n73
13. Industrial homeworkers;n74 and
14. Agricultural employees.n75

For discussion of the applicability of the special overtime rules referred to above, see Chapter 3.

[c] Requirements Regarding Types of Documents, Length of Retention, and Location of Records

Employers must preserve the following types of records for at least three years from the date of last entry or their last effective date:

1. Payroll and other records containing the information and data required to be maintained pursuant to the FLSA recordkeeping requirements described in [a] and [b], above;n76

1-7 California Employment Law § 7.02

2. Written collective bargaining agreements that are (a) relied on for exclusion of costs for boarding, lodging, or other facilities pursuant to Title 29 United States Code, section 203(m), or (b) used as the basis for partial exemptions from overtime allowed under Title 29 United States Code, section 207(b)(1) or (2) or any amendments or additions thereto;n77
3. Plans, trusts, employment contracts, collective bargaining agreements, and employer-provided stock option plans and other grants of stock rights used to determine exclusions from the employee's "regular rate" under Title 29 United States Code, section 207(e);n78
4. Individual contracts or collective bargaining agreements providing for employment for "irregular hours of work," as used in Title 29 United States Code, section 207(f) or, if no written contract or agreement is available, a written memorandum summarizing the terms of the contract or agreement;n79
5. Written agreements or memoranda summarizing the terms of oral agreements or understandings as allowed by Title 29 United States Code, section 207(g) or (j);n80
6. Certificates and notices listed or named in any applicable section of Title 29 Code of Federal Regulations, Part 516;n81 and
7. Sales and purchase records showing total dollar volume of sales or business and total volume of goods purchased or received during such periods and in such form as the employer maintains in the ordinary course of its business.n82

Employers must preserve the following supplementary records for at least two years from the date of last entry or their last effective date:

1. Basic time and earnings cards or sheets that show (a) daily starting and stopping time of individual employees, or of separate work forces, or (b) the amounts of work accomplished by individual employees on a daily, weekly, or pay period basis, when those amounts determine in whole or in part the pay period earnings or wages of that employee;n83
2. Wage rate tables or schedules that provide the piece rates or other rates used in computing straight-time earnings, wages, or salary, or overtime pay computation;n84
3. Originals or true copies of any and all customer orders or invoices received, incoming or outgoing shipping or delivery records, bills of lading, and all billings to customers (except individual sales slips, cash register tapes, and the like) that the employer retains or makes in the usual course of its business operations.n85
4. Records of additions to, or deductions from, wages of individual employees, as required by Title 29 Code of Federal Regulations, section 516.2(a)(10);n86 and
5. All records used by the employer in determining the original cost, operating and maintenance cost, and depreciation and interest charges, if such costs and charges are involved in the additions to or deductions from wages paid.n87

Employers must maintain all records in a safe and accessible place either at the place or places of employment or at central recordkeeping offices where such records are customarily maintained.n88 If the records are maintained at a central place, they must be made available for inspection within 72 hours after notice from the Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division or his or her duly authorized and designated representative.n89

Difficulty and impracticability are not grounds for a unilateral failure to maintain the required records.ⁿ⁹⁰ If an employer or group of employers, because of the peculiar conditions under which it or they operate, desires authority to maintain records in a manner different from that outlined in the regulations, or to be relieved of some requirement of the regulations, the employer(s) may petition the Wage and Hour Administrator for such authority with a statement of the reasons for the petition.ⁿ⁹¹ The Administrator may grant the petition if he or she finds that the authority requested will not hinder enforcement of the FLSA.ⁿ⁹² The Administrator may grant the petition subject to such conditions as he or she may impose and subject to subsequent revocation.ⁿ⁹³ Submission of a petition, absent favorable action by the Administrator, does not relieve the employer or employers from the obligation to comply with the requirements of the regulations regarding recordkeeping.ⁿ⁹⁴ However, the Administrator must act on all petitions as soon as possible.ⁿ⁹⁵

There are special provisions regarding retention of records related to learners, apprentices, messengers, students, and handicapped workers employed pursuant to special certificates that should be reviewed in case of employment of such persons.ⁿ⁹⁶

[d] Other Federal Laws

Regulations promulgated pursuant to the following federal statutes also contain recordkeeping requirements related to employee wages, hours, and working conditions: Walsh-Healey Act,ⁿ⁹⁷ Davis-Bacon Act,ⁿ⁹⁸ Contract Work Hours and Safety Standards Act,ⁿ⁹⁹ Service Contract Act,ⁿ¹⁰⁰ Copeland Act,ⁿ¹⁰¹ and Migrant and Seasonal Agricultural Workers' Protection Act.ⁿ¹⁰² For discussion of the scope and applicability of these statutes, see Chapter 1.

[e] Effect of Failure to Keep Records

[i] Presumptions

As discussed in Chapter 5, if an employer fails to keep required records or fails to keep accurate records, certain presumptions exist in favor of an employee bringing a claim for unpaid overtime or minimum wages.ⁿ¹⁰³ In such circumstances, if an employee can establish a right to certain wages, the inability to prove the exact amount with certainty will not bar recovery.ⁿ¹⁰⁴

[ii] Penalties

There is no private right of action for violations of federal recordkeeping obligations.ⁿ¹⁰⁵ There are potential criminal penalties that may consist of a fine of up to $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than six months, or both.ⁿ¹⁰⁶ The employer may also be subject to an injunctive action pursuant to Title 29 United States Code, section 217. For further discussion of these remedies, see Chapter 5.

CHAPTER 8 Leaves of Absence

1-8 California Employment Law Scope

AUTHOR: By Christine Curtis, J.D., Judy B. Freeman J.D., Edward Baskauskas, J.D., and Elizabeth W. Mandel, J.D.

Scope

By Christine Curtis, J.D.,^{n*} Judy B. Freeman J.D.,^{n}
Edward Baskauskas, J.D.,^{n} and Elizabeth W. Mandel, J.D.^{n*} SCOPE

This chapter discusses the substantive provisions of California and federal authorities granting and regulating leaves of absence. Among the statutes discussed are the Moore-Brown-Roberti Family Rights Act (CFRA) (Gov. Code § 12945.2), the California pregnancy disability leave provisions of the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) codified in Gov. Code § 12945, the federal Family and Medical Leave Act (FMLA) (29 U.S.C. § 2101 et seq.), the leave provisions of the California Military and Veterans Code Section 394 and Lab. Code § 233. The implementing regulations of CFRA and FMLA, published by the California Fair Employment and Housing Commission and the Department of Labor, respectively, are also discussed. In addition, this chapter discusses the interaction of these statutes and the potential impact of the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) and Title VII on an employer's obligation to grant leave to qualifying employees.

§ 8.01 California Law

Under California law, leaves of absence (up to four months) are available for pregnancy, childbirth or related medical conditions pursuant to the 1992 amendment to the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA).ⁿ¹ Leaves of absence (up to 12 weeks in a 12 month period) are also available for family care and medical leave (excluding pregnancy related disability) under the California Family Rights Act, which is known as the Moore-Brown-Roberti Family Rights Act (CFRA).ⁿ² The provisions of CFRA are to be construed as separate and distinct from the provisions of the FEHA.ⁿ³ Labor Code section 233 provides that, under certain conditions, an employee may use his or her sick leave to attend to an illness of his or her child, parent, spouse, or domestic partner.

§ 8.03 Interaction of Federal and State Laws

Depending upon the size of the employer's workforce and the employee's length of service, one or more of the state and federal laws may govern a given situation. 1-8 California Employment Law § 8.10

§ 8.10 General Standards

Most female employees in California (those working for an employer regularly employing five or more employees) can take up to four months' leave for childbearing and pregnancy-related disability under state law.ⁿ¹ For employers of 50 or more, both federal and state law require family and medical leave. An employee is entitled to take leave for, among other reasons, the birth or adoption of a child or for disability of the employee due to a health condition.ⁿ²

The federal and state acts are in alignment except that in California, a woman can take a four-month pregnancy disability leave,ⁿ³ followed by a three-month family medical leave.

None of these governing laws requires that the employee receive paid leave. However, under certain circumstances an employee may elect to use, or an employer may require the use of, accrued vacation or other accrued leave. Under such an election, the accrued leave runs concurrently with FMLA or CFRA leave.ⁿ⁴ In addition, an employee on pregnancy disability leave may also be eligible for payments under the State Disability Insurance program.

The right to be free of pregnancy discrimination in employment existed under California law prior to amendment of the Fair Employment and Housing Act. Since the California Constitution, Article I, Section 8, proscribes discrimination in employment on the basis of sex,ⁿ⁵ employees not covered under either the federal or state laws may nevertheless have a right to seek pregnancy and childrearing leave on state constitutional grounds.

CHAPTER 8 Leaves of Absence
Part B. PREGNANCY AND CHILDBEARING LEAVE

1-8 California Employment Law § 8.11

AUTHOR: By Christine Curtis, J.D., Judy B. Freeman J.D., Edward Baskauskas, J.D., and Elizabeth W. Mandel, J.D.

§ 8.11 Federal Requirements

[1] Title VII

Congress amended Title VII¹ in response to the holding in *General Electric Co. v. Gilbert*² to expressly include a prohibition against pregnancy discrimination.³ In Gilbert, the Court held that discrimination on the basis of pregnancy was not sex discrimination under Title VII.⁴ The dissenters in Gilbert noted that the grouping between pregnant and non-pregnant persons involved sex-based discrimination because only women could be pregnant.⁵ Congress responded by passing the Pregnancy Discrimination Act of 1978 (PDA), which amended Title VII to expressly clarify that pregnancy was included in the definition of sex-based discrimination. The House Report stated: "It is the Committee's view that the dissenting justices [in Gilbert] correctly interpreted the Act."

Congressional history clarifies that Title VII was always intended to include pregnancy related issues and that the PDA was necessitated by the Supreme Court's interpretations.⁶

The PDA prohibits an employer from treating pregnant employees differently than other disabled employees. In California Federal Savings & Loan Association v. Guerra,⁷ the Supreme Court held that Title VII grants pregnant employees the right to take disability leave if such leave is provided for others with similar ability or disability to work. Thus, an employer must apply its leave policy to pregnant workers on the same terms it applies the policy to other workers. The federal effort is to provide for equality of treatment and non-discrimination on the basis of sex.⁸ The Guerra Court cited with approval the remarks of Senator Williams, one of PDA's sponsors, "The entire thrust of this legislation is to guarantee women the right to participate fully and equally in the workforce, without denying them the fundamental right to full participation in family life."⁹

Additionally, employers must provide the same pregnancy benefits to all employees. In Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock v. EEOC,¹⁰ an employer's health insurance plan, amended after passage of the Pregnancy Disability Act, provided full hospitalization pregnancy health coverage for female employees but not full coverage for spouses of male employees. Other spousal benefits were covered at 100 percent; pregnancy was the only exception. The Court found that the benefit was not provided on an equal basis to dependents of employees and was thus unlawful because the protection afforded to married male employees was less comprehensive than the protection afforded married female employees. The Court found the policy discriminatory and in violation of the PDA of Title VII.ⁿ¹¹

In International Union v. Johnson Controls,ⁿ¹² the Court considered a policy barring women who could be fertile from jobs with potential occupational exposure and found it violative of Title VII. The Court held the policy was not neutral because it did not apply equally to male and female employees, even though the potential exposure might have negatively affected male reproduction. The employer's policy was found to inappropriately classify employees on the basis of gender and childbearing capacity, rather than fertility alone. The Court also held that absence of a malevolent motive did not excuse the practice.

Similarly, in United Teachers v. Board of Education of City of Los Angeles,ⁿ¹³ the Ninth Circuit held that medical benefits for pregnancy-related expenses of spouses of male employees must be provided at the same level as coverage for non-pregnancy related medical expenses provided spouses.ⁿ¹⁴

The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals has held that terminating pregnant workers rather than giving them a leave of absence violates the PDA, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2000e(k), 2000e-2(a).ⁿ¹⁵ Title VII also takes precedence over religious concerns regarding the propriety of sexual relations, and a pregnant employee cannot be discharged based on that pregnancy.ⁿ¹⁶

The implementing EEOC Guidelinesⁿ¹⁷ provide that:

(a) A written or unwritten employment policy or practice which excludes from employment applicants or employees because of pregnancy, childbirth, or related medical conditions is in prima facie violation of Title VII.

(b) Disabilities caused or contributed to by pregnancy, childbirth, or related medical conditions, for all job-related purposes, shall be treated the same as disabilities caused or contributed to by other medical conditions, under any health or disability insurance or sick leave plan available in connection with employment. Written or unwritten employment policies and practices involving matters such as the commencement and duration of leave, the availability of extensions, the accrual of seniority and other benefits and privileges, reinstatement, and payment under any health or disability insurance or sick leave plan, formal or informal, shall be applied to disability due to pregnancy, childbirth, or related medical conditions on the same terms and conditions as they are applied to other disabilities. Health insurance benefits for abortion, except where the life of the mother would be endangered if the fetus were carried to term or where medical complications have arisen from an abortion, are not required to be paid by an employer; nothing herein, however, precludes an employer from providing abortion benefits or otherwise affects bargaining agreements in regard to abortion.

(c) Where the termination of an employee who is temporarily disabled is caused by an employment policy under which insufficient or no leave is available, such a termination violates the Act if it has a disparate impact on employees of one sex and is not justified by business necessity.

(d) (2) Any fringe benefit program implemented after October 31, 1978, must comply with the provisions of § 1604.10(b) upon implementation.

[2] Family and Medical Leave Act (FMLA)

[a] Purposes

The purposes of the Family and Medical Leave Act (FMLA) are:¹⁸

1. To balance the demands of the workplace with the needs of families, to promote the stability and economic security of families, and to promote national interests in preserving family integrity;
2. To entitle employees to take reasonable leave for medical reasons, for the birth or adoption of a child, and for the care of a child, spouse, or parent who has a serious health condition;
3. To accomplish the purposes [of the act] in a manner that accommodates the legitimate interests of employers;
4. To accomplish the purposes [of the act] in a manner that, consistent with the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, minimizes the potential for employment discrimination on the basis of sex, by ensuring generally that leave is available for eligible medical reasons (including maternity-related disability) and for compelling family reasons, on a gender-neutral basis; and
5. To promote the goal of equal employment opportunity for women and men ...

[b] Leave Entitlement

The FMLA expressly provides, among other things, leave of up to 12 workweeks in a 12 month period because of the serious health condition of an employee, including pregnancy disability, and the birth of the employee's child or the placement of a child with the employee for adoption or foster care.¹⁹ Because the FMLA also provides for leave to care for a spouse, parent, or child with a serious health condition, the act may also apply in cases of the pregnancy disability of a qualifying family member.

Spouses employed by the same employer may take a combined total of 12 workweeks for the birth or placement of a child for adoption or foster care.²⁰ Leave for birth of the employee's child or because of placement of a child for adoption or foster care must conclude within 12 months from the date of the birth or placement.²¹

The FMLA also provides for leave of either 12 or 26 weeks, depending on the situation, for family members of those in the Armed Forces.^{21.1}

[c] Covered Employers

FMLA applies to (1) all private employers that have employed 50 or more employees in 20 or more workweeks in the current or preceding calendar year and that are engaged in commerce or in any industry or activity affecting commerce, including joint employers and successors of covered employers, and (2) public agencies, including state, local, and federal employers, and local education agencies.²²

[d] Eligible Employees

To be eligible for benefits, an employee must (1) work for a covered employer, (2) have worked for the employer for a total of at least 12 months, (3) have worked at least 1,250 hours over the previous 12 months, and (4) work at a location where at least 50 employees are employed by the employer within 75 miles of that location.²³

The FMLA also includes family and medical leave rights for the spouses, children, or parents of military service members on active duty.²⁴

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS

CHAPTER 8 Leaves of Absence

Part B. PREGNANCY AND CHILDBEARING LEAVE

1-8 California Employment Law § 8.12

AUTHOR: By Christine Curtis, J.D., Judy B. Freeman J.D., Edward Baskauskas, J.D., and Elizabeth W. Mandel, J.D.

§ 8.12 California Requirements

[1] Governing Statutes

[a] Moore Brown Roberti Family Rights Act (CFRA)

The California Family Rights Act (also known as the Moore Brown Roberti Family Rights Act or CFRA) provides for leave for the birth of a child of the employee, the placement of a child with an employee in connection with the adoption or foster care of the child by the employee, and the care of a parent, child, or a spouse who has a serious health condition.ⁿ¹ Although CFRA provides leave for the employee's own serious health condition, CFRA leave is not available for the employee's own pregnancy disability.ⁿ²

Employee eligibility for CFRA leave is the same as employee eligibility for FMLA leave except that under CFRA, an employee must have worked for an employer for more than 12 months (not "at least").ⁿ³

In most respects, pursuant to amendments passed in 1993, the coverage regarding eligible employees and eligibility requirements are the same as those of the FMLA. For a discussion of the provisions of the FMLA, see § 8.11[2].

[b] Pregnancy Disability Leave (FEHA)

The Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) grants eligible pregnant employees the right to take a pregnancy disability leave for a reasonable period of time, not to exceed four months.ⁿ⁴ Eligible pregnant employees are those employed by employers of five or more employees, whether they are employed full-time or part-time. However, employees of nonprofit religious associations or corporations are not eligible.ⁿ⁵

Fair Employment and Housing Commission (FEHC) regulations interpreting the FEHA include specific regulations applicable to pregnancy disability leave.ⁿ⁶ For purposes of these regulations, a "pregnancy disability leave" is any leave, whether paid or unpaid, taken by an employee, for any period up to a total of four months during which she is disabled by pregnancy or related medical condition.ⁿ⁷ A "reasonable" period of time for purposes of the CFRA is the period during which the female employee is disabled on account of pregnancy, childbirth, or related medical conditions.ⁿ⁸

There is no length of service requirement before an employee disabled by pregnancy is entitled to a pregnancy disability leave.ⁿ⁹ An employee may elect to use any accrued sick leave during the leave.ⁿ¹⁰ A woman may also use any accrued vacation leave or other accrued paid leave during that period of time.ⁿ¹¹

An employer may require any employee who plans to take such a leave to give the employer reasonable notice of the date the leave will commence and its estimated duration.ⁿ¹² An employer that provides a more generous leave policy for other temporary disabilities must provide the same amount of leave to employees temporarily disabled by pregnancy.ⁿ¹³

Although Title VII does not expressly provide for pregnancy leaves of absence, the United States Supreme Court held in California Federal Savings & Loan Association v. Guerra that Title VII nevertheless does not preempt the California law requiring pregnancy disability leave.ⁿ¹⁴

One federal court has distinguished the pregnancy leave required by FEHA from a one-year "childrearing" leave required by a collective bargaining agreement and available only to female employees. Holding that the agreement's "childrearing" leave provision violated Title VII, the Third Circuit Court of Appeals explained that in Guerra, the United States Supreme Court emphasized that FEHA covers only the period of physical disability caused by pregnancy. By contrast, the collective bargaining agreement did not require that a female be disabled to obtain "childrearing" leave, and thus was "per se void for any leave granted beyond the period of actual physical disability on account of pregnancy, childbirth, or related medical condition."ⁿ¹⁵

After FEHA pregnancy leave, an employee may be entitled to additional leave to care for her baby or herself or a close relative with a serious illness under the Family Medical Leave Act (FMLA)^{n15.1} and Moore-Brown-Roberti Family Rights Act (CFRA).^{n15.2} Pregnancy disability leave under FEHA is a distinct and additional entitlement to that granted by FMLA and CFRA.^{n15.3}

[2] Covered Employers

Under the FEHA, the definition of "employer" as one regularly employing five or more employees does not mean five or more employees every day, or five or more employees at the time of discrimination, but rather an employer "regularly employing" five employees. Thus, five part-time employees at work on one day will bring an employer under the act. This construction effectuates the broad and remedial intent of the law.ⁿ¹⁶

[3] "Disabled by Pregnancy" Requirement

The FEHA, implemented by FEHC regulations, provides that all employers must provide a leave of up to four months, as needed, for the period of time a woman is actually disabled by pregnancy, even if an employer has a policy or practice that provides less than four months of leave for other similarly situated temporarily disabled employees.ⁿ¹⁷ A woman is "disabled by pregnancy" if, in the opinion of her health care provider, she is unable because of pregnancy to work at all or is unable to perform one or more of the essential functions of her job or to perform these functions without undue risk to herself, the successful completion of her pregnancy, or to other persons.ⁿ¹⁸ A woman is also considered to be "disabled by pregnancy" if she is suffering from severe "morning sickness" or needs to take time off for prenatal care.ⁿ¹⁹

[4] Calculation of Four-Month Period

A woman can take the four months at one time or in increments as required by her medical condition. The regulations define a "four-month leave" as the number of days the employee would normally work within four months.ⁿ²⁰ For a full-time employee who works five eight-hour days per week, this would mean 88 working or paid eight-hour days of leave entitlement, based on an average of 22 working days per month for four months.ⁿ²¹ Pregnancy disability leave may also be taken intermittently or on a reduced work schedule when medically advisable, as determined by the employee's health care provider.ⁿ²²

[5] Payment During Leave

An employer is not required to pay an employee during a pregnancy disability leave unless the employer pays for other temporary disability leaves.ⁿ²³ However, a non-Title VII employer with five to 14 employees is only required to pay an employee disabled by a normal pregnancy six weeks of accrued, paid leave, regardless of the leave policy for other disabled employees.ⁿ²⁴ An employee may elect, at her option, to use any vacation time or other accrued personal time off (including undifferentiated paid time off) that the employee is otherwise eligible to take during the otherwise unpaid portion of the pregnancy disability leave.ⁿ²⁵

An employer may require an employee to use, or an employee may elect to use, accrued sick leave during the otherwise unpaid portion of her pregnancy disability leave.ⁿ²⁶

An employer subject to the Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA) that "docks" the pay of an exempt employee who takes pregnancy leave of less than a full day may jeopardize the exempt status of that employee.ⁿ²⁷ The regulations promulgated under the FMLA provide for a special exception to the salary basis exemption of the FLSA by allowing employers to dock the pay of exempt employees taking intermittent FMLA leave. However, if the leave being taken does not qualify as FMLA leave, the employer must either (1) pay the exempt employee for leaves of less than one day taken or (2) treat the employee as nonexempt, in which case it may dock his or her pay but must pay for overtime hours.ⁿ²⁸

[6] Notice of Leave

[a] Notice Informing Employee of Right to Take Leave

Employers must give notice to employees of their right to request pregnancy disability leave by posting a notice in a conspicuous place where employees congregate, by providing a pregnant employee with a copy of such a notice as soon as practicable after learning of the pregnancy, and by including a description of pregnancy disability leave in any employee handbook.ⁿ²⁹

[b] Arranging Leave--Employee's Notice of Intent to Take Leave

An employer may require that employees who plan to take pregnancy disability leave provide the employer with at least verbal notice sufficient to make the employer aware of the employee's need of a pregnancy disability leave and the anticipated time and duration of the leave.ⁿ³⁰ If the need for the leave is foreseeable, the employee must provide at least 30 days' advance notice before the leave is to begin.ⁿ³¹ When 30 days' notice is not practicable, for example because the employee lacks knowledge of when the leave will need to begin or because of a medical emergency, the employee must give notice as soon as practicable.ⁿ³² In such a situation, the employer may not deny leave for failure to provide advance notice.ⁿ³³ An employer's failure to inform employees concerning any notice requirements it adopts precludes it from taking any adverse action against the employee, including denying the leave for the employee's failure to furnish advance notice.ⁿ³⁴

The employer must attempt to respond to the leave request as soon as practicable and before the employee's requested commencement date for the leave, and in any event no later than ten calendar days after the employer receives the request. Once given, approval is retroactive to the date of the first day of the leave. Employers may require written medical confirmation of the disability before granting pregnancy disability leave if there is a similar policy or practice for other temporarily disabled employees. Note that for pregnancy-related disabilities, there is no process for obtaining more than one medical opinion, and there is no reinstatement exception for key employees.ⁿ³⁵

[7] Arranging Return From Leave

When an employee who has taken pregnancy disability leave of up to four months is able to return to her job, the employer must return her to her original job unless either (1) the job has ceased to exist because of legitimate business reasons unrelated to the employee's pregnancy disability leave (such as layoff or plant closure), or (2) each means of preserving the job for the employee (such as leaving it unfilled or filling it with a temporary employee) would substantially undermine the employer's ability to operate the business safely and efficiently.ⁿ³⁶ If the employer is excused by any of the above reasons from returning the employee to her original job, the employer must provide the employee with a comparable position, unless either (1) there is no comparable position available, or (2) a comparable position is available, but filling the available position with the returning employee would substantially undermine the employer's ability to operate the business safely and efficiently.ⁿ³⁷ An employee who takes a pregnancy disability leave of longer than four months must be afforded the same right to reinstatement as any other employees who have taken a disability leave of similar length.ⁿ³⁸

The employee's right to reinstatement is different if, at the expiration of a pregnancy disability leave, the employee takes a family care leave for the reason of the birth of her child under the Moore-Brown-Roberti Family Rights Act (CFRA);ⁿ³⁹ in that case, the employee's right to reinstatement will be governed by CFRA and not by the regulations governing pregnancy disability leave.ⁿ⁴⁰ Under CFRA, an employer may reinstate an employee either to her same job or to a comparable job.ⁿ⁴¹ Additionally, any employer in California subject to the FEHA and Title VII is required to transfer a pregnant employee to a less strenuous or hazardous position for the duration of her pregnancy if she so requests.ⁿ⁴²

When an employer and employee agree at the beginning of the leave to a definite date of reinstatement, the employer must reinstate the employee by the agreed date.ⁿ⁴³ If the employer and employee did not agree on a specific date, the employer must reinstate the employee within two business days, if feasible, after the employee notifies the employer of her readiness to return.ⁿ⁴⁴

If the employer has a similar policy with regard to other temporarily disabled employees, it may require a written medical verification that the employee's disability has ceased before allowing the employee to return to work.ⁿ⁴⁵

[8] Effect on Seniority and Benefits

A pregnancy disability leave does not constitute a break in service for purposes of longevity and/or seniority.ⁿ⁴⁶ During the period of the leave, the employee is entitled to accrual of seniority and to participate in health plans and any other benefit plans to the same extent as any other employee on an unpaid disability leave granted by the employer for other reasons.ⁿ⁴⁷ Benefits must be resumed on the employee's reinstatement in the same manner and at the same levels as provided when the leave began, without any new qualification period, physical exam, or other prerequisite.ⁿ⁴⁸

§ 8.20 General Standards

[1] Applicability of CFRA and FMLA

Both California and federal law require certain employers to provide eligible employees with family care and medical leave under specified circumstances. The governing statutes are the Moore-Brown-Roberti Family Rights Act (CFRA),ⁿ¹ which is part of the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA), and the federal Family and Medical Leave Act (FMLA).ⁿ² CFRA provisions conform to those of FMLA.ⁿ³ Regulations pertaining to CFRA are set forth in Title 2, California Code of Regulations, Section 7297.0 et seq. FMLA regulations are set forth in Title 29, Code of Federal Regulations, Part 825.

The CFRA regulations provide that they incorporate by reference the FMLA regulations to the extent they are not inconsistent with CFRA regulations, other state law, or the California Constitution.ⁿ⁴ FMLA states that "[n]othing in this Act or any amendment made by this Act shall be construed to supersede any provision of any State or local law that provides greater family or medical leave rights than the rights established under this Act or any amendment made by this Act."ⁿ⁵ Further, FMLA regulations state that FMLA does not modify or affect any federal or state antidiscrimination law and that employers must, therefore, comply with whichever law provides the greater rights to employees.ⁿ⁶ Thus, CFRA is not preempted by FMLA to the extent that the state law provides equal or greater family care and medical leave rights. Accordingly, when faced with a leave request for a purpose governed by both CFRA and FMLA, a covered employer must analyze both statutes on a provision-by-provision basis to determine which one provides the greater benefit to the employee on each aspect of the request.ⁿ⁷ FMLA regulations provide a number of examples of the effect of this nonpreemption principle.ⁿ⁸

When the provisions of both laws apply, FMLA and CFRA leaves run concurrently and may be simultaneously counted against the employee's entitlements under both laws.ⁿ⁹ If an employee takes leave for a purpose that is recognized under only one of the two laws, only that law governs the leave rights and obligations, and the amount of leave is charged according to that law only.ⁿ¹⁰

The 1993 amendments to CFRA, which largely conformed it to FMLA,ⁿ¹¹ have greatly reduced the differences between the two acts, thereby simplifying such a comparative analysis. One of the most significant differences between the two laws arises from the distinctions made under California law between pregnancy disability leave and birth-bonding leave. For discussion of the interaction between California's pregnancy disability leave lawⁿ¹² and the state and federal family leave laws, see § 8.33.

[2] General Requirements

Both CFRA and FMLA provide that a private employer of 50 or more employees must grant a request by any employee with 12 months of service, and who has at least 1,250 hours of service with the employer during the previous 12-month period, to take up to a total of 12 workweeks in any 12-month period for family care and medical leave. An employer will not be deemed to have granted leave under CFRA or FMLA unless the employer provides the employee, on granting the leave request, a guarantee of employment in the same or a comparable position on termination of the leave.ⁿ¹³

The FMLA and the CFRA make it unlawful for an employer to interfere with, restrain, or deny an employee's exercise of, or attempt to exercise, any right they provide.ⁿ¹⁴ Thus, for example, an employer normally may not consider an employee's use of FMLA leave as a factor in making an adverse employment decision.ⁿ¹⁵ However, an employer may still terminate an employee during FMLA leave if the employer would have made the same decision had the employee not taken leave.^{n15.1} The prohibition against interference or restraint, however, is distinct from the prohibitions against retaliation and discrimination under the FMLA.ⁿ¹⁶ It is the employer's responsibility, not the employee's, to determine whether a leave request is likely to be covered by the FMLA.ⁿ¹⁷

Thus, to prevail on FMLA or CFRA interference claims, an employee need not satisfy the burden-shifting paradigm applicable to EEO claims,^{n17.1} but need only show by a preponderance of the evidence that taking FMLA-protected leave constituted a negative factor in the adverse employment decision. The employee can prove this claim by direct or circumstantial evidence, or both.ⁿ¹⁸ Under the FMLA, the employer's good faith or lack of knowledge that its conduct violates the Act is, as a general matter, pertinent to only the question of damages, not to liability.ⁿ¹⁹ Of course, the FMLA is not implicated and does not protect an employee against disciplinary action if the employee's absences are for reasons other than those enumerated in the Act.ⁿ²⁰

The FMLA provides that employee rights under it "shall not be diminished by any collective bargaining agreement," nor does FMLA diminish the obligation of employers under any collective bargaining agreement that provides greater family or medical leave rights than FMLA.ⁿ²¹

An employer complies with the FMLA by meeting or exceeding the minimum requirements.ⁿ²² But an employer may freely change its program, even if the change results in a reduction in benefits.ⁿ²³ Thus, the FMLA does not require an employer to "lock-in" a particular benefits package.ⁿ²⁴

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

Employers should note that the holding in Asmus v. Pacific Bell ⁿ²⁵ may limit the freedom to modify some benefit plans. In that case, the California Supreme Court found that an employer could unilaterally modify a mandatory policy (the opportunity to transfer to avoid layoff), provided that the employer effected the change after a reasonable time, on reasonable notice, and without interfering with employees' vested benefits. The scope of the holding in Asmus is not entirely clear. Until further case guidance is available, employers must attempt to determine whether benefits that they seek to change unilaterally are akin to--or different than--the benefits at issue in Asmus. Commentary by Kirby Wilcox

[3] Effect of Other Laws

An employee may be able to assert rights under FMLA, a state antidiscrimination statute, or both.ⁿ²⁶ Additionally, if an employee is a qualified individual with a disability within the meaning of the Americans With Disabilities Act (ADA),ⁿ²⁷ the employer must make reasonable accommodations in accordance with the ADA, while at the same time affording an employee his or her rights under FMLA.ⁿ²⁸ FMLA may also interact with state workers' compensation law, with which it may run concurrently. However, with regard to offers to return to light-duty assignment, an employee who declines to do so might be disqualified from receiving further workers' compensation benefits but might still be entitled to unpaid leave under FMLA.ⁿ²⁹

DIVISION I WAGE AND HOUR LAWS
CHAPTER 8 Leaves of Absence
Part C. FAMILY CARE AND MEDICAL LEAVE

1-8 California Employment Law § 8.21

AUTHOR: By Christine Curtis, J.D., Judy B. Freeman J.D., Edward Baskauskas, J.D., and Elizabeth W. Mandel, J.D.

§ 8.21 Reasons for Leave

[1] Birth or Adoption of Child; Foster Care Placement

Both CFRA and FMLA allow family leave for the birth of a child of the employee or for the adoptive or foster-care placement of a child with the employee.ⁿ¹

FMLA allows an expectant mother to take leave before the actual date of birth of the child for prenatal care or if the mother's condition makes her unable to work.ⁿ² Birth leave under FMLA also includes time to care for the newborn child.ⁿ³

In the case of an adoptive or foster-care placement of a child with an employee, FMLA allows the employee's leave to begin before the actual placement if necessary to allow the placement to proceed.ⁿ⁴ For example, the employee's absence from employment may be necessitated by attendance at counseling sessions, court proceedings, consultations with the employee's attorney or with attorneys and doctors representing the birth parent, or physical examinations. However, the source of an adopted child (that is, whether from a licensed placement agency or otherwise) is not a factor in determining eligibility for leave for this purpose.ⁿ⁵

Effective January 16, 2009, the Department of Labor reorganized rules and changed the definition of "serious medical condition" under the FMLA, in part to make it easier to find information in the regulations. In earlier versions of the regulations, there was no single place in the regulations addressing leave taken for the birth of a child or placement with the employee of a child for adoption or foster care.^{n5.1} The regulations now address leave taken prior to the birth of a child or placement with the employee of a child for adoption or foster care in sections that cover pregnancy, birth, adoption and foster care.^{n5.2}

CFRA leave for the birth of a child may be used solely for purposes of bonding with the child. Therefore, CFRA entitlement for this purpose is distinct from pregnancy disability leave.ⁿ⁶

[2] Serious Health Condition of Family Member or Employee

[a] Medical Leave for Employee's Serious Health Condition

Both CFRA and FMLA allow medical leave for an employee's own serious health condition that renders the employee unable to perform the functions of his or her position.ⁿ⁷ For discussion of the definition of "serious health condition," see [c], below.

An employee is "unable to perform the functions of the position" if the employee's health care providerⁿ⁸ finds that the employee is unable to work at all or is unable to perform any of the essential functions of the employee's job within the meaning of the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA).ⁿ⁹ For example, an employee who must be absent from work to receive medical treatment for a serious health condition is considered to be unable to perform the essential functions of the position during the absence for treatment.^{n9.1} An employer has the option, in requiring certification from a health care provider, to provide a statement of the essential functions of the employee's position for the health care provider to review. A sufficient medical certification must specify what functions of the employee's position the employee is unable to perform so that the employer can then determine whether the employee is unable to perform one or more essential functions of the employee's position. For purposes of FMLA, the essential functions of the employee's position are to be determined with reference to the position the employee held either at the time notice is given or at the time leave commenced, whichever is earlier.ⁿ¹⁰

If a full-time employee, during the period in which medical leave was sought, continues to perform a similar job for another employer on a part-time basis, that does not conclusively establish the ability to do the job for the original employer; the part-time job is evidence of ability to do similar work for the original employer from whom the employee has sought medical leave, but that evidence is not conclusive.ⁿ¹⁰

To qualify an employee for medical leave, his or her serious health condition need not have a job-related cause.ⁿ¹¹

In contrast to FMLA, leave taken under CFRA for the employee's own serious health condition excludes leave taken for pregnancy disability, which is subject to separate disability leave rights.ⁿ¹² For discussion of those rights, see § 8.12.

[b] Leave to Care for Family Member With Serious Health Condition

Both CFRA and FMLA allow leave for an employee to care for his or her parent, child, or spouse who has a serious health condition.ⁿ¹³ "Caring for" encompasses both physical and psychological care and involves some level of participation in the ongoing treatment of a serious health condition.ⁿ¹⁴ The term "needed to care for" also includes situations in which the employee may be needed to substitute for others who normally care for the family member, or to make arrangements for changes in care, such as transfer to a nursing home. The employee need not be the only individual or family member available to care for the family member.^{n14.1} For purposes of the FMLA, an employee is not "caring for" her child when she moves him, not to seek medical attention, but to remove him from an unwholesome and physically violent social environment.ⁿ¹⁵ An employee's cross-country trip to retrieve the family car to reassure his pregnant wife she would soon have reliable transportation and his phone calls to her while he drove back did not provide care to a family member as required by the FMLA.^{n15.1} Similarly, when an employee took leave to help her elderly mother move from one home to another, that did not qualify as leave to care for a parent under CFRA.ⁿ¹⁶ The court held CFRA required that participation in providing care for a parent be warranted during a period of treatment, and although plaintiff's mother was under medical supervision, none of the mother's various conditions had flared into incapacity.ⁿ¹⁷ On the other hand, a plaintiff in an action under the FMLA raised a genuine issue of material fact as to whether his activities (talking with his father about his sister's death, performing various household chores, and driving his father to counseling) were necessary to care for his father's basic needs because of severe depression after his daughter's murder by her ex-husband.ⁿ¹⁸

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

In Marchischeck v. San Mateo County,ⁿ¹⁹ the Ninth Circuit interpreted both the FMLA and CFRA to exclude from their coverage a trip by the plaintiff to the Philippines to remove her child from a violent community and to place him under the custody of her brother. The panel based its decision on both a lack of proof that the child suffered from "a serious health condition" and a lack of proof that the plaintiff's trip to the Philippines was an act of "caring for" her child. The discussion of the definition of "serious health condition" is exclusively fact-dependent, but the discussion of the "care for" standard has broad application. In brief, "caring for" an individual must involve some level of participation in the treatment of a serious health condition. The only mention of transport in the regulations pertains to transportation to or from a doctor. Thus, Marchisheck makes it clear that it is one thing to take a leave to "care for" an ill parent, spouse or child and another thing to take a leave to "be with" an ill parent, spouse or child for reasons unrelated to direct participation in care-giving activity. Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

For purposes of CFRA and FMLA, an employee's "parent" includes an individual who stood in loco parentis to the employee when that employee was a child.ⁿ²⁰ An employee's parent-in-law is not considered the employee's parent for this purpose.ⁿ²¹

A "child" of an employee is a biological, adopted, or foster child; a stepchild; a legal ward; or a person for whom the employee stands in loco parentis.ⁿ²² However, a person age 18 or over does not qualify as a child for purposes of family leave unless he or she is incapable of self-care because of a mental or physical disability.ⁿ²³ "Incapable of self-care because of a mental or physical disability" under the FMLA means that the child requires active assistance or supervision to provide daily self-care in three or more of the "activities of daily living" (ADLs) or "instrumental activities of daily living" (IADLs). Activities of daily living include adaptive activities such as caring appropriately for one's grooming and hygiene, bathing, dressing and eating. Instrumental activities of daily living include cooking, cleaning, shopping, taking public transportation, paying bills, maintaining a residence, using telephones and directories, using a post office, etc.^{n23.1} "Physical or mental disability" means a physical or mental impairment that substantially limits one or more of the major life activities of an individual.^{n23.2}

Regulations issued by the Department of Labor under the FMLA now define terms related to leave to care for a child. "In loco parentis" includes day-to-day responsibilities to care for and financially support a child, or, in the case of an employee who is the child, responsibility for the employee when the employee was a child. A biological or legal relationship is not necessary.^{n23.3} "Adoption" means legally and permanently assuming the responsibility of raising a child as one's own; the source of an adopted child, such as whether from a licensed placement agency or otherwise, is not a factor in determining eligibility for FMLA leave.^{n23.4} "Foster care" is 24-hour care for children in substitution for, and away from, their parents or guardian. The placement is made by or with the agreement of the state as a result of a voluntary agreement between the parent or guardian that the child be removed from the home, or pursuant to a judicial determination of the necessity for foster care, and involves agreement between the state and foster family that the foster family will take care of the child. Although foster care may be with relatives of the child, state action is involved in the removal of the child from parental custody.^{n23.5}

For purposes of confirmation of family relationship, the employer may require the employee giving notice of the need for leave to provide reasonable documentation or statement of family relationship. This documentation may take the form of a simple statement from the employee, or a child's birth certificate, a court document, etc. The employer is entitled to examine documentation such as a birth certificate, etc., but the employee is entitled to the return of the official document submitted for this purpose.^{n23.6}

[c] "Serious Health Condition" Defined

A "serious health condition" under FMLA and CFRA is an illness, injury, impairment, or physical or mental condition that involves either of the following:ⁿ²⁴

- Inpatient care, which means an overnight stay in a hospital, hospice, or residential medical care facility. "Inpatient care" includes any period of incapacity (that is, an inability to work, attend school, or perform other regular daily activities due to the serious health condition, treatment for it, or recovery from it) and any subsequent treatment in connection with such inpatient care.n25

■ Continuing treatment by a health care provider.n26 For purposes of the FMLA, the term "treatment" includes (but is not limited to) examinations to determine if a serious health condition exists and evaluations of the condition. Treatment does not include routine physical examinations, eye examinations, or dental examinations. A regimen of continuing treatment includes, for example, a course of prescription medication, such as an antibiotic, or therapy requiring special equipment to resolve or alleviate the health condition, such as oxygen. A regimen of continuing treatment that includes the taking of over-the-counter medications such as aspirin, antihistamines, or salves (or bed-rest, drinking fluids, exercise, and other similar activities that can be initiated without a visit to a health care provider) is not, by itself, sufficient to constitute a regimen of continuing treatment for purposes of FMLA leave.n26.1

Conditions for which cosmetic treatments are administered, such as most treatments for acne or plastic surgery, are not "serious health conditions" unless inpatient hospital care is required or unless complications develop. Ordinarily, unless complications arise, the following are examples of conditions that do not meet the definition of "serious health condition" and do not qualify for FMLA leave:n26.2

- The common cold.
- The flu.
- Ear aches.
- Upset stomach.
- Minor ulcers.
- Headaches other than migraine.
- Routine dental or orthodontia problems, periodontal disease.

On the other hand, restorative dental or plastic surgery after an injury or removal of cancerous growths are serious health conditions, provided all the other conditions of the regulations promulgated under the FMLA are met. Mental illness or allergies may be serious health conditions, but only if all the conditions of the regulations are met.n27

Substance abuse may be a serious health condition under the FMLA if the conditions of the FMLA regulations are met.n27.1 However, FMLA leave may be taken only for treatment for substance abuse by a health care provider or by a provider of health care services on referral by a health care provider. On the other hand, absence because of the employee's use of the substance, rather than for treatment, does not qualify for FMLA leave.n27.2 While treatment for substance abuse does not prevent an employer from taking employment action against an employee, the employer may not take action against the employee because the employee has exercised his or her right to take FMLA leave for treatment. But if the employer has an established policy (applied in a non-discriminatory manner) that has been communicated to all employees, that provides under certain circumstances an employee may be terminated for substance abuse, an employee may be terminated pursuant to that policy whether or not the employee is presently taking FMLA leave. An employee also may take FMLA leave to care for a covered family member who is receiving treatment for substance abuse. The employer may not take action against an employee who is providing care for a covered family member receiving treatment for substance abuse.n27.3

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

The CFRA incorporates the FMLA Regulations promulgated by the U.S. Department of Labor in 1995 ("FMLA regulations of 1995" or "1995 FMLA regulations") to the extent they are not inconsistent with the CFRA.n27.4 The California Fair Employment and Housing Commission (FEHC) has declined to incorporate the new FMLA regulations into the CFRA.n27.5 Until the CFRA regulations are amended, where the CFRA is silent, the FMLA regulations of 1995 will continue to apply.

A serious health condition involving continuing treatment by a health care provider includes any one or more of the following:n27.6

- A period of incapacity of more than three consecutive, full calendar days, and any subsequent treatment or period of incapacity relating to the same condition, that also involves treatment two or more times, within 30 days of the first day of incapacity, unless extenuating circumstancesn27.7 exist,n27.8 by a health care provider, by a nurse under direct supervision of a health care provider, or by a provider of health care services, e.g., a physical therapist, under orders of, or on referral by, a health care provider;n27.9 or treatment by a health care provider on at least one occasion, which results in a regimen of continuing treatment under the supervision of the health care provider.n27.10 This requires an in-person visit to a health care provider, and the first or only in-person treatment visit must take place within seven days of the first day of incapacity.n27.11 Whether additional treatment visits or a regimen of continuing treatment is necessary within the 30-day periodn27.11.1 will be determined by the health care provider.n27.12

- Any period of incapacity due to pregnancy, or for prenatal care.n27.13

- Any period of incapacity or treatment for incapacity due to a chronic serious health condition. A chronic serious health condition is one that meets each of the following conditions:n27.14

[Circled ring operator] Requires periodic visits, defined as at least twice a year, for treatment by a health care provider or by a nurse under direct supervision of a health care provider.n27.15

[Circled ring operator] Continues over an extended period of time, including recurring episodes of a single underlying condition.n27.16

[Circled ring operator] May cause episodic rather than a continuing period of incapacity, such as asthma, diabetes, epilepsy, etc.n27.17

- A period of incapacity that is permanent or long-term due to a condition for which treatment may not be effective. The employee or family member must be under the continuing supervision of, but need not be receiving active treatment by, a health care provider. Examples include Alzheimer's, a severe stroke, or the terminal stages of a disease.n27.18

- Any period of absence to receive multiple treatments, including any period of recovery from the treatments, by a health care provider or by a provider of health care services under orders of, or on referral by, a health care provider, for either restorative surgery after an accident or other injury or a condition that would likely result in a period of incapacity of more than three consecutive, full calendar days in the absence of medical intervention or treatment, such as cancer (chemotherapy, radiation, etc.), severe arthritis (physical therapy), or kidney disease (dialysis).n27.19

Absences attributable to incapacity due to pregnancy or prenatal care or for chronic conditions qualify for FMLA leave even though the employee or the covered family member does not receive treatment from a health care provider during the absence, and even if the absence does not last more than three consecutive, full calendar days. For example, an employee with asthma may be unable to report for work due to the onset of an asthma attack or because the employee's health care provider has advised the employee to stay home when the pollen count exceeds a certain level. As a further example, an employee who is pregnant may be unable to report to work because of severe morning sickness.^{n27.20}

In Marchisheck v. San Mateo County ⁿ²⁸ the Ninth Circuit held that the plaintiff's son's injuries from being beaten, his chronic behavioral problems and his combined psychological and physical condition did not qualify as "serious health conditions" under the FMLA.ⁿ²⁹ On the other hand, in Scamihorn v. Gen. Truck Drivers, Local 952, ⁿ³⁰ the court found a genuine question of material fact precluding summary judgment because plaintiff's father's depression after the murder of his daughter by her ex-husband resulted in an incapacity, i.e., more than three consecutive days' absence from work or other daily activities and continuing treatment by a psychologist and two psychiatrists constituted a serious medical condition under the FMLA.

One district court case has held that a child's ear infection was not a serious health condition, where the condition did not require the child's absence from day care for three days, the child was not under the continuing treatment of a physician, and the potential dangers of improper treatment were not relevant to the actual incapacity or treatment involved in the case.ⁿ³¹ On the other hand, if the child is seen by a health care provider, receives prescribed medication, and is incapacitated for more than three days, the child may be deemed to have a serious health condition.ⁿ³²

The FMLA defines "health care provider" as a doctor of medicine or osteopathy authorized to practice medicine or surgery as appropriate by the state in which the doctor practices, or any other person determined by the Secretary of Labor to be capable of providing health care services.^{n32.1} Others "capable of providing health care services" include only the following:

- Podiatrists, dentists, clinical psychologists, optometrists, and chiropractors, who are limited to treatment consisting of manual manipulation of the spine to correct a subluxation as demonstrated by X-ray to exist, authorized to practice in the state and performing within the scope of their practice as defined under state law.^{n32.2}
- Nurse practitioners, nurse-midwives, clinical social workers and physician assistants authorized to practice under state law and performing within the scope of their practice as defined under state law.^{n32.3}
- Christian Science Practitioners listed with the First Church of Christ, Scientist in Boston, Massachusetts. When an employee or family member receives treatment from a Christian Science practitioner, an employee may not object to any requirement from an employer that the employee or family member submit to examination, but not treatment, to obtain a second or third certification from a health care provider other than a Christian Science practitioner except as otherwise provided under applicable state or local law or collective bargaining agreement.^{n32.4}
- Any health care provider from whom an employer or the employer's group health plan's benefits manager will accept certification of the existence of a serious health condition to substantiate a claim for benefits.^{n32.5}
- A health care provider listed above who practices in a country other than the United States, who is authorized to practice in accordance with the law of that country, and who is performing within the scope of his or her practice as defined under that law.^{n32.6}

"Authorized to practice in the state" as used in the regulations means that the provider must be authorized to diagnose and treat physical or mental health conditions.^{n32.7}

[3] Leave Given For Reasons Not Covered by Statutes

Both CFRA and FMLA are minimum standards, not maximum limits. Employers may adopt leave policies that are more generous than those mandated by the two acts.ⁿ³³

However, an employer that provides more generous benefits than those mandated by CFRA and FMLA cannot count such additional leave against the 12-week entitlement under CFRA and FMLA. For example, paid sick leave used for a medical condition that is not a serious health condition does not count against the 12-week entitlement, and the employee will still have 12 weeks of leave available if the employee or a family member subsequently develops a serious health condition.ⁿ³⁴

■ CONSULTANT'S COMMENT:

If an employer chooses to provide its employees with additional uses of "family leave" that are not required by CFRA or FMLA, such as leave to care for a sibling with a serious health condition, the employer must still provide employees with 12 weeks of unpaid leave for the uses that are specifically provided for by CFRA or FMLA. In other words, leave to care for a sibling, for example, is in addition to the 12 weeks of unpaid leave to which the employee is entitled under CFRA or FMLA. Commentary by Kirby Wilcox.

[4] Family of Armed Forces Members

[a] Leave Based on Contingency Operation

Subject to the medical certification requirements of 29 U.S.C. § 2613,ⁿ³⁵ an eligible employee is entitled to a total of 12 workweeks of leave during any 12-month period because of any qualifying exigency as the Secretary of the Department of Labor determines by regulation,^{n35.1} arising out of the fact that the spouse, child, or parent of the employee is on covered active duty, or has been notified of an impending call or order to active duty, in the Armed Forces.ⁿ³⁶

In addition to the general medical certification requirements under the FMLA, an employer may require that a request for this type of leave be supported by a certification issued at a time and in a manner as the Secretary of Labor may prescribe by regulation. If the Secretary issues a regulation requiring certification, the employee must provide in a timely manner a copy of the certification to the employer.ⁿ³⁷

For these purposes, "active duty" means either of the following:ⁿ³⁸ⁿ³⁹

- In the case of a member of a regular component of the Armed Forces, duty during the deployment of the member with the Armed Forces to a foreign country.
- In the case of a member of a reserve component of the Armed Forces, duty during the deployment of the member with the Armed Forces to a foreign country under a call or order to active duty under a provision of law referred to in 10 U.S.C. § 101(a)(13)(B).

This leave may be taken on an intermittent or reduced leave schedule.ⁿ⁴⁰

In any case in which the necessity for this leave is foreseeable, whether because the spouse, child, or parent of the employee is on covered active duty, or because of notification of an impending call or order to active duty, the employee must provide notice to the employer as is reasonable and practicable.ⁿ⁴¹

[b] Leave Based on Serious Injury or Illness

Subject to the medical certification requirements of 29 U.S.C. § 2613,ⁿ⁴² an eligible employee who is the spouse, child, parent, or next of kinⁿ⁴³ of a covered member of the Armed Forces is entitled to a total of 26 workweeks of leave during a 12-month period to care for the servicemember.ⁿ⁴⁴ This leave is only available during a single 12-month period.ⁿ⁴⁵ During this single 12-month period, an eligible employee is entitled to a combined total of 26 workweeks of leave, whether the leave is based on a qualifying contingencyⁿ⁴⁶ or because of the service member's serious injury or illness.ⁿ⁴⁷ However, this does not limit the availability of leave under the FMLA during any other 12-month period.ⁿ⁴⁸

For these purposes, a "covered member" of the Armed Forces is defined as either of the following:ⁿ⁴⁹

- A member of the Armed Forces, including a member of the National Guard or Reserves, who is undergoing medical treatment, recuperation, or therapy, is otherwise in outpatient status, or is otherwise on the temporary disability retired list, for a serious injury or illness.
- A veteran who is undergoing medical treatment, recuperation, or therapy, for a serious injury or illness and who was a member of the Armed Forces, including a member of the National Guard or Reserves, at any time during the period of five years preceding the date on which the veteran undergoes that medical treatment, recuperation, or therapy.

"Serious injury or illness" for these purposes means either of the following:^{n49.1}

- In the case of a member of the Armed Forces, including a member of the National Guard or Reserves, an injury or illness that was incurred by the member in the line of duty on active duty in the Armed Forces, or that existed before the beginning of the member's active duty and was aggravated by service in the line of duty on active duty in the Armed Forces, and that may render the member medically unfit to perform the duties of the member's office, grade, rank, or rating.
- In the case of a veteran who was a member of the Armed Forces, including a member of the National Guard or Reserves, at any time during a period described in 29 U.S.C. § 2611(15)(B) (defining veterans who are "covered members"), a qualifying injury or illness (as defined by the Secretary of Labor) that was incurred by the member in the line of duty on active duty in the Armed Forces, or that existed before the beginning of the member's active duty and was aggravated by service in the line of duty on active duty in the Armed Forces, and that manifested itself before or after the member became a veteran.

For these purposes, "veteran" is defined by the meaning given the same term under 38 U.S.C. § 101.^{n49.2} "Outpatient status," with respect to a covered servicemember, means the status of a member of the Armed Forces assigned to either of the following:ⁿ⁵⁰

- A military medical treatment facility as an outpatient.
- A unit established for the purpose of providing command and control of members of the Armed Forces receiving medical care as outpatients.

This leave may be taken on an intermittent or reduced leave schedule.ⁿ⁵¹ Further, an eligible employee may elect or an employer may require the employee to substitute accrued paid vacation leave, personal leave, family leave, or medical or sick leave of the employee for this leave for any part of the 26-week period, except that nothing requires an employer to provide paid sick leave or paid medical leave in any situation in which the employer would not normally provide any such paid leave.ⁿ⁵²

Under the Uniformed Services Employment and Reemployment Rights Act of 1994 (USERRA),ⁿ⁵³ veterans are entitled to receive all rights and benefits of employment that they would have obtained if they had been continuously employed. Therefore, under USERRA, a returning service member would be eligible for FMLA leave if the months and hours that he or she would have worked for the civilian employer during the period of military service, combined with the months employed and the hours actually worked, meet the FMLA eligibility threshold of 12 months and 1,250 hours of employment.ⁿ⁵⁴

§ 8.22 Covered Employers

[1] Under FMLA

Under FMLA, an "employer" is any person engaged in commerce or in any industry or activity affecting commerce who employs 50 or more employees within 75 miles for each working day during each of 20 or more calendar workweeks in the current or preceding calendar year.ⁿ¹ The "engaged in commerce" requirement differs from CFRA, which has no such requirement.ⁿ² Also, unlike CFRA, FMLA includes in its definition of employer any person acting, directly or indirectly, in the interest of an employer toward any of the employees of that employer, any successor in interest to an employer, and any public agency.ⁿ³

In determining whether an employer has employed 50 or more employees for each working day for 20 calendar workweeks, Department of Labor regulations provide that each employee whose name appears on the employer's payroll during a given calendar week will be counted as being employed during each day of that week, regardless of whether he or she received any compensation for that week.ⁿ⁴ Furthermore, it is not necessary that every employee actually perform work on each working day.ⁿ⁵ Finally, because FMLA uses a "continuing employment relationship" principle,ⁿ⁶ part-time employees and employees on paid or unpaid leave are counted, as long as there is a reasonable expectation that the employee will later return to active employment. Employees that are laid off, however, are not counted.ⁿ⁷ FMLA regulations provide examples of when an employer satisfies the 50-employee/20-workweek test for purposes of determining whether an employer is covered by FMLA.ⁿ⁸

When two or more businesses exercise some control over the work or working conditions of an employee, the businesses may be joint employers under the FMLA. Joint employers may be separate and distinct entities with separate owners, managers and facilities. When the employee performs work that simultaneously benefits two or more employers, or works for two or more employers at different times during the workweek, a joint employment relationship generally will be considered to exist in the following situations:ⁿ⁹

- (1) The employers have an arrangement to share an employee's services or to interchange employees;

- (2) One employer acts directly or indirectly in the interest of the other employer in relation to the employee;
- (3) The employers are not completely disassociated with respect to the employee's employment and may be deemed to share direct or indirect control of the employee, because one employer controls, is controlled by, or is under common control with the other employer.

Whether a joint employment relationship exists is not determined by the application of any single criterion. The entire relationship is viewed in its totality. For example, joint employment will ordinarily be found when a temporary or leasing agency supplies employees to a second employer.ⁿ¹⁰ The Department of Labor has promulgated a new rule^{n10.1} to clarify how the joint employment rules apply to "Professional Employer Organizations" (PEOs). PEOs that contract with client employers merely to perform administrative functions--including payroll, benefits, regulatory paperwork, and updating employment policies--are not joint employers with their clients, provided that they do not have the right to exercise control over the activities of the client's employees, and do not have the right to hire, fire or supervise them, or determine their rates of pay, and that they do not benefit from the work the employees perform. On the other hand, if a particular PEO has the right to hire, fire, assign, or direct and control the employees, or benefits from the work that the employees perform, that PEO would be a joint employer with the client employer. The Department has also changed the determination of the "worksite" for purposes of employee eligibility with respect to employees who are placed by a primary employer at the worksite of a secondary employer for more than 12 months.^{n10.2} In joint employment relationships, only the primary employer is responsible for giving required notices to employees, providing FMLA leave, and maintenance of health benefits. Factors considered in determining which is the primary employer include authority/responsibility to hire and fire, assign/place the employee, make payroll and provide employment benefits.ⁿ¹¹ If a joint employment relationship exists, employees jointly employed by two employers must be counted by both employers, whether or not maintained on one of the employers' payroll, in determining employer coverage and employee eligibility under the FMLA.ⁿ¹²

In Moreau v. Air France,ⁿ¹³ the Ninth Circuit addressed the issue of joint employment under the FMLA for the first time. In doing so, the court looked to joint employer cases arising under the Fair Labor Standards Act and the Migrant and Seasonal Agricultural Worker Protection Act.ⁿ¹⁴ The court found that under the totality of circumstances and economic realities, Air France was not a joint employer with a company providing ground handling services at San Francisco International Airport, such as ramp and towing service, baggage handling, and aircraft cleaning; a company providing catering services for return flights to France; or a company providing cargo handling services, and thus was not subject to the FMLA as to its San Francisco International Airport employees.ⁿ¹⁵ Air France did not directly control any of the other companies' employees. Indirect supervision or control exercised to ensure compliance with safety and security regulations is not control or supervision of employees so as to constitute joint employment.ⁿ¹⁶

Once a private employer meets the 50 employees/20 workweeks threshold, the employer remains covered until it no longer has employed 50 employees for 20 workweeks in the current and preceding calendar year.ⁿ¹⁷ The Department of Labor views employer manipulation of workforce levels in an effort to deny employees' eligibility for leave as a violation of the FMLA.ⁿ¹⁸

States and state agencies are subject to private actions for violation of the provisions of the FMLA regarding sick leave to care for family members.ⁿ¹⁹

[2] Under CFRA

Under CFRA, a "covered employer" is any person or individual engaged in any business or enterprise in California who directly employs 50 or more persons within any state of the United States, the District of Columbia, or any U.S. territory or possession.ⁿ²⁰ Unlike the FEHA, CFRA does not exempt religious nonprofit organizations from the definition of employer. The CFRA definition of employer also includes state and local government employers, but not federal employers.ⁿ²¹ There is no requirement that the 50 employees work at the same location (rather, the requirement is only that they be employed within a 75-mile radius),ⁿ²² or that they work full time.ⁿ²³ The employer must maintain an aggregate of at least 50 part-time or full-time employees on its payroll for each working day during each of 20 or more calendar workweeks in the current or preceding calendar year (i.e., the calendar year in which the employee requests the leave or the calendar year preceding the request).ⁿ²⁴ The workweeks need not be consecutive.

The CFRA is silent on the issue of joint employment. Therefore, the FMLA regulations of 1995 govern.ⁿ²⁵ The 1995 FMLA regulations did not specifically address the treatment of PEOs.ⁿ²⁶ Consequently, for leaves under the CFRA, the question of whether a PEO is a joint employer should be analyzed in accordance with the test laid out in the 1995 FMLA regulations.ⁿ²⁷ The 1995 regulations also did not contain the new FMLA regulations' revised definition of "worksites."ⁿ²⁸ Accordingly, for purposes of leave under the CFRA, joint employment should be analyzed under the 1995 FMLA regulations' definition of worksite which provided, in relevant part, "when an employee is jointly employed by two or more employers (citation omitted), the employee's worksite is the primary employer's office from which the employee is assigned or reports."ⁿ²⁹
