a. Obscenity.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Opinion Evid § 76

[§ 76] Obscenity.

In an obscenity trial, where the issue involves the determination of contemporary community standards and the artistic merit and social importance of the publication, experts may testify to these matters. (Landau v. Fording (1966) 245 C.A.2d 820, 824, 54 C.R. 177 [motion picture; literary critic, film program director, psychiatrist, and others]; 18 Hastings L. J. 161.) However, in P.C. 312.1, the 1969 Legislature expressly rejected the view that, in a criminal trial, expert evidence on the obscene or harmful character of the matter or conduct in question must be introduced by either the prosecution or the defense. (See People v. Enskat (1973) 33 C.A.3d 900, 913, 109 C.R. 433.)

II. EXPERT EVIDENCE

C. Subjects of Expert Testimony.

18. Distinctions.

b. Trailing by Trained Dogs.

[§ 77] Trailing by Trained Dogs.

(1) In General. The opinion of a witness qualified as an expert in dog training and handling is admissible on the issue of the ability of a particular dog to follow a trail of a suspected criminal. (See People v. Craig (1978) 86 C.A.3d 905, 915, 150 C.R. 676; People v. Malgren (1983) 139 C.A.3d 234, 238, 188 C.R. 569; 18 A.L.R.3d 1221; 42 Hastings L. J. 15 [Does the Cold Nose Know? The Unscientific Myth of the Dog Scent Lineup].)

(2) Corroboration Requirement. In People v. Malgren, supra, the court, on an examination of the case law (139 C.A.3d 237; see also dissent, 139 C.A.3d 243, 244), followed the majority view that evidence of dog trailing is admissible on the issue of identity of a defendant, but is not sufficient by itself to support a conviction. (139 C.A.3d 239.) The proper practice is for the trial judge to instruct on his or her own motion that "(1) when dog tracking evidence is used to prove the identity of a defendant, there must be some other evidence, either direct or circumstantial, which supports the accuracy of that identification evidence; and (2) in determining what weight to give such evidence, the jury should consider the training, proficiency, experience, and proven ability, if any, of the dog, its trainer, and its handler, together with all the circumstances surrounding the trailing in question." (139 C.A.3d 242.)

In People v. Gonzales (1990) 218 C.A.3d 403, 267 C.R. 138, a police officer saw a man of Mexican ancestry running away from a burglarized house. Approximately 25 minutes later, a pillowcase containing some household items and located near the spot where the running man had last been seen was sniffed by a police dog. About 10 to 12 feet from the pillowcase were footprints leading in the direction taken by the man and the dog. Along the route, more footprints were seen and a clean dime was found. Defendant, a man of Mexican ancestry, was found nine-tenths of a mile from the house, lying prone in tall grass in an unplowed vineyard. He refused to obey the officer's order to come out, but responded after being bitten by the dog. At the trial for burglary, the judge gave the second part of the instruction required by People v. Malgren, supra, but failed to instruct on the necessity of corroboration. Held, this constituted prejudicial error.

(a) The Malgren case held that even if all the factors assuring the trustworthiness of the dog's tracking ability were present, there must still be other evidence aside from what the dog did that demonstrates the accuracy of what he did. Here, the jury was instructed to consider whether the dog was placed on the track shown to have been used by the guilty party and whether the trail had become stale or contaminated. However, such factors, although helping to ensure that the dog has a fresh scent, do not corroborate that the person located was the person who was tracked. "The dog's actions in locating an individual require assurance that the person located is the person pursued, as well as being the person who in fact left the initial scent followed by the dog." (218 C.A.3d 409.)

(c) Here, the failure to instruct on the necessity of corroboration was prejudicial, because there was no unambiguous corroborative evidence supporting the identification of defendant. There was no evidence linking defendant to the footprints seen near the pillowcase, no evidence linking the shiny dime to either defendant or the burglary, and no evidence, other than defendant's Mexican surname, linking him to the fact that the man seen running from the house was of Mexican ancestry. And defendant's lack of cooperation upon being found in the tall grass does not necessarily support the dog-tracking evidence, because the inferences from such behavior are susceptible to too many interpretations. (218 C.A.3d 415.)

CHAPTER V - Opinion Evidence

II. EXPERT EVIDENCE

C. Subjects of Expert Testimony.

18. Distinctions.

c. Mathematical Probability.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Opinion Evid § 78

[§ 78] Mathematical Probability.

Mathematical probability statistics were held to be an improper subject of expert testimony in People v. Collins (1968) 68 C.2d 319, 66 C.R. 497, 438 P.2d 33. Defendant C and his wife were convicted of second degree robbery, and C appealed. The prosecution's evidence was of two kinds: (1) The victim's neighbor heard cries and observed a Caucasian woman with a dark blond ponytail run out of an alley and enter an automobile driven by a black man with a mustache and beard. (2) To support the unsure identification of defendants by the victim and the neighbor, the prosecutor called a mathematics instructor, who testified that there was but one chance in 12 million that any couple possessed the distinctive characteristics of defendants. "Accordingly, under this theory, it was to be inferred that there could be but one chance in 12 million that defendants were innocent and that another equally distinctive couple actually committed the robbery." (68 C.2d 325.) Held, admission of this testimony was error. In an elaborate discussion of statistical theory and the fallacies underlying this approach, the court found no support in the record for the factors used by the witness, no proof that the characteristics selected were mutually independent, and no foundation, in expert knowledge, for the questions asked. (68 C.2d 327, 330.)

The condemnation of this particular misuse of "the mystique of the mathematical demonstration" (68 C.2d 332) was tempered with a recognition of its permissible use: "Although we make no appraisal of the proper applications of mathematical techniques in the proof of facts ... , we have strong feelings that such applications, particularly in a criminal case, must be critically examined in view of the substantial unfairness to a defendant which may result from ill-conceived techniques with which the trier of fact is not technically equipped to cope." (68 C.2d 332.) (See also People v. Cella (1983) 139 C.A.3d 391, 403, 188 C.R. 675 [mathematician's testimony that probability was two or three in 100,000 that list of names in search warrant affidavit would be in same order as one supplied by witness after earlier illegal search did not establish connection between affidavit and search; following People v. Collins]; People v. Louie (1984) 158 C.A.3d Supp. 28, 48, 49, 205 C.R. 247 [doctor charged with preparing false disability certification; admission of prosecution's evidence of statistical comparison of diagnoses by defendant with those of other health practitioners held prejudicial error]; 1 McCormick 5th, §210; 36 A.L.R.3d 1194; 83 Harv. Rev. 1801 [defense of Bayesian analysis]; 103 Harv. L. Rev. 530 [Statistical-Probability Evidence and the Appearance of Justice]; 1983 A.S. 198.)

On the other hand, mathematical probabilities play an important role in the application of certain well-accepted scientific techniques. (See People v. Marx (1975) 54 C.A.3d 100, 112, 126 C.R. 350, supra, §69 [in teeth mark

II. EXPERT EVIDENCE

D. Appointment of Experts by Court.

1. In General.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Opinion Evid § 79

[§ 79] In General.

(1) Criticism of Practice of Party's Expert. In Estate of Dolbeer (1906) 149 C. 227, 86 P. 695, three psychiatrists who had not known the decedent testified in response to carefully slanted hypothetical questions (see 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §194) that she was insane. The court said: "This kind of expert testimony, given under such circumstances, even the testimony of able and disinterested witnesses, as no doubt these were, is in the eye of the law of steadily decreasing value. The remedy can only come when the state shall provide that the courts and not the litigants shall call a disinterested body or board of experts who shall review the whole situation and then give their opinion with their reasons therefor to the court and jury regardless of the consequences to either litigant." (149 C. 243.) This criticism is echoed by many authorities, and the proposed remedy, court-appointed experts, is strongly supported by modern writers, bar groups, and judges. (See 1 McCormick 5th, §17; 2 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §563.)

(2) Statutory Reform: Uniform and Federal Rules. The inherent power of the trial judge to call and examine witnesses (see 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §80) has not been invoked with any great frequency, but it has indicated the proper statutory solution. The Model Code of Evidence (Rule 403 et seq.) and the Uniform Rules of Evidence provided a procedure for obtaining the opinions of court-appointed experts. (See 13B (Part 1B) U.L.A. (Master Ed.), p. 92; on the New York Medical Expert Testimony Project, to make available in personal injury cases court-appointed impartial medical witnesses, see 45 Cal. L. Rev. 572; 8 Stanf. L. Rev. 730; on indigents' right to expert witnesses, see 1967 A.S. 187.)

F.R. Evid., Rule 706 provides for appointment, compensation, and disclosure of appointment, and also preserves the right of parties to call their own experts. (See 3 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §§366, 367.)

(3) Statutory Reform: California. P.C. 1027 was enacted in 1927 to require the court to appoint expert witnesses (originally called "alienists"; the term was replaced by "psychiatrists" in 1965) to investigate the defendant's mental status whenever the defendant pleads not guilty by reason of insanity. As amended in 1978, the statute permits the appointment of either psychiatrists or psychologists. A 1981 amendment further specifies that the "section does not presume that a psychiatrist or psychologist can determine whether a defendant was sane or insane at the time of the alleged offense." (P.C. 1027(c).) The use of experts to determine a criminal defendant's sanity is treated exhaustively in another treatise. (See 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §674.)

Former C.C.P. 1871, applicable in "any action or proceeding, civil, criminal, or juvenile court," and to any kind of issue, established for California a procedure similar, but not identical, to that contained in the Uniform Rules. (See 2 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 366; 95 A.L.R.2d 390; 40 So. Cal. L. Rev. 728 [use of impartial medical testimony in personal injury suits in Los Angeles County].) The Evidence Code retained, without substantial change, the provisions of former C.C.P. 1871, as superior to the comparable Uniform Rules. (See infra, §80 et seq.; on appointment of experts to administer blood test for nonpaternity, see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Demonstrative, Experimental, and Scientific Evidence, §77.)

a. Any Case and Any Issue.

[§ 80] Any Case and Any Issue.

Under Ev.C. 730, "[w]hen it appears to the court, at any time before or during the trial of an action, that expert evidence is or may be required by the court or by any party to the action, the court on its own motion or on motion of any party may appoint one or more experts to investigate, to render a report as may be ordered by the court, and to testify as an expert at the trial of the action relative to the fact or matter as to which such expert evidence is or may be required." However, the statute is not to be construed "to permit a person to perform any act for which a license is required unless the person holds the appropriate license to lawfully perform that act." (See *California v. ## CHAPTER V - Opinion Evidence

II. EXPERT EVIDENCE

D. Appointment of Experts by Court.

2. California Statute.

b. Motion or Court's Own Motion.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Opinion Evid § 81

[§ 81] Motion or Court's Own Motion.

(1) In General. The appointment may be made by the court "on its own motion or on motion of any party." (Ev.C. 730.) The rule of the discovery cases, that a party compelled to submit to a physical or mental examination under C.C.P. 2032 is entitled to have his or her counsel and a reporter present (see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §150), does not apply to an examination ordered by the court on its own motion under Ev.C. 730. "Petitioner does not require protection and suffers no prejudice since the physician is appointed by the court as an impartial expert. He suffers no detriment by the exclusion of both his attorney and the defendant's attorney because the examining physician is not in the position of an adversary." (Durst v. Superior Court (1963) 222 C.A.2d 447, 452, 35 C.R. 143 [psychiatric examination].)

A party cannot complain of the court's failure to act on its own initiative where no request for the appointment is made. (Daly City v. Smith (1952) 110 C.A.2d 524, 533, 243 P.2d 46.)

(2) Discretion of Trial Judge. Refusal to appoint is within the judge's discretion even though the case is one in which the experts of the parties are in radical disagreement. Thus, in Laguna Salada Union Elementary School Dist. v. Pacific Dev. Co. (1953) 119 C.A.2d 470, 259 P.2d 498, a condemnation suit, defendant S, awarded only $ 150 for his lot, claimed error in the court's denial of his motion. He argued that a private expert did not meet his needs, for if he received a low award, he would lose the real value of his land, and if he received a good award, plaintiff might abandon the proceedings. In upholding the trial judge's order, the court pointed out that this reasoning would call for the appointment of an expert in virtually every condemnation suit, and also that upon abandonment, the defendant receives his costs including the expense of the expert's preparation for trial (a large percentage of the latter's fee). (119 C.A.2d 473.) (See also Collins v. Superior Court (1977) 74 C.A.3d 47, 52, 141 C.R. 273 [denial upheld]; People v. Hurley (1979) 95 C.A.3d 895, 899, 157 C.R. 364 [same].)

When an indigent defendant requests appointment of an expert under Ev.C. 730, the trial court has discretion to grant or deny the motion. But if the court grants the motion, the examination and report must be made confidential under Ev.C. 952 (see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §119 et seq.). (Torres v. Municipal Court (1975) 50 C.A.3d 778, 784, 123 C.R. 553.) (On indigent's constitutional right to appointment of ancillary defense experts generally, see 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §173.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. C.C.P. 2032 was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

Department of Health Services* (1998) 67 C.A.4th 117, 127, 78 C.R.2d 802, citing the text; Howard v. Owens Corning (1999) 72 C.A.4th 621, 636, 85 C.R.2d 386 [in personal injury action arising from exposure to asbestos products, jury could reject expert testimony offered by plaintiff even though defendant manufacturer did not offer expert testimony of its own]; C.E.B., Expert Witness Guide 2d, §5.5 et seq.; 14 Cal. L. Rev. 70; 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §230.) (For exceptions in medical and legal malpractice cases, see infra, §86.)

(2) No Arbitrary Rejection. The jury or trial judge may reject the conclusion of an expert even though it is uncontradicted. (See Barker v. Gould (1898) 122 C. 240, 243, 54 P. 845; Layne & Bowler Corp. v. Grogan (1921) 56 C.A. 31, 33, 204 P. 252; People v. Williams (1957) 151 C.A.2d 173, 185, 187, 311 P.2d 117; Lucientes v. Bliss (1958) 157 C.A.2d 565, 571, 321 P.2d 526.) This does not mean, however, that the uncontradicted and unimpeached opinion testimony of an expert may be arbitrarily disregarded; the rule in this respect is the same as that which applies to uncontradicted testimony of an ordinary witness. (Wirz v. Wirz (1950) 96 C.A.2d 171, 176, 214 P.2d 839; Krause v. Apodaca (1960) 186 C.A.2d 413, 417, 9 C.R. 10, quoting the text; In re Marriage of Battenburg (1994) 28 C.A.4th 1338, 1345, 33 C.R.2d 871, citing the text; 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §89 et seq.)

(3) Instructions: Criminal Cases. In criminal cases, an instruction on the effect of expert opinion evidence is provided by statute (P.C. 1127b), and must be given on the court's own motion. (People v. Long (1940) 15 C.2d 590, 607, 103 P.2d 969; People v. Williamson (1933) 134 C.A. 775, 780, 26 P.2d 681; People v. Reeder (1976) 65 C.A.3d 235, 241, 135 C.R. 421 [admission, on stipulation, of expert testimony on results of polygraph examinations indicating that victim was telling the truth and defendant was not; failure to give P.C. 1127b instruction held error because credibility was most significant issue in case]; CALJIC (6th ed.), No. 2.80.)

(4) Instructions: Civil Cases. It is proper to instruct the jury that they are not bound by expert opinion, but may give it the weight to which they feel it is entitled considering the expert's qualifications and credibility and the reasons for the expert's testimony. (BAJI (8th ed.), No. 2.40; see 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §303.)

An earlier version of BAJI, No. 2.40 stated that uncontradicted expert testimony was to be given conclusive effect. In Conservatorship of McKeown, supra, 25 C.A.4th 508, the court held that that portion of the instruction "does not withstand analysis." The instruction was revised in 1995 to delete the criticized language.

II. EXPERT EVIDENCE

E. Effect of Expert Testimony.

2. Medical and Legal Malpractice.

[§ 86] Medical and Legal Malpractice.

(1) Medical Malpractice. An exception to the rule that expert evidence is not conclusive (supra, §85) is made in medical malpractice suits. The issue is the standard of due care that prevails among doctors in the locality. Accordingly, it has been held that only experts, i.e., doctors familiar with that standard, may testify on the issue (see 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §191), and that in the absence of such expert medical testimony, no recovery can be had. Other cases have extended this theory by holding that, when such expert evidence is introduced on either side, it cannot be contradicted by nonexpert evidence. (See Engelking v. Carlson (1939) 13 C.2d 216, 221, 88 P.2d 695; Lawless v. Calaway (1944) 24 C.2d 81, 86, 147 P.2d 604; Cobbs v. Grant (1972) 8 C.3d 229, 104 C.R. 505, 502 P.2d 1; Markart v. Zeimer (1924) 67 C.A. 363, 369, 227 P. 683 [admission of doctor held insufficient to establish liability]; Nicholas v. Jacobson (1931) 113 C.A. 382, 386, 298 P. 505; Williamson v. Prida (1999) 75 C.A.4th 1417, 1424, 89 C.R.2d 868 [rule requiring expert testimony as to standard of care applies in actions for veterinarian malpractice]; C.E.B., Expert Witness Guide 2d, §5.5; 18 So. Cal. L. Rev. 67; 33 Cal. L. Rev. 248, 269; 86 A.L.R.2d 1038.)

In Cobbs v. Grant, supra, plaintiff produced no expert witness to support his claim that defendant negligently performed surgery on an intractable peptic duodenal ulcer. Held, the verdict in plaintiff's favor was not supported by substantial evidence. "Defendant and his expert witnesses gave uncontradicted testimony that injuries not apparent during an operation may subsequently become manifest. In light of this testimony and the additional uncontradicted testimony that the surgery was performed with due care, it would have been improper speculation for the jury to infer the injury should have been apparent to a careful surgeon." (8 C.3d 238.) (See also Folk v. Kilk (1975) 53 C.A.3d 176, 185, 126 C.R. 172 ["the etiology of brain abscesses and the standards of care prevailing in the medical community as concern tonsillectomies are not matters of common knowledge and therefore we are bound by the expert testimony"].)

The foregoing doctrine is, however, subject to an important limitation: Where the injury or treatment is one within the common knowledge of laypersons, neither the requirement of expert evidence nor its conclusive effect is recognized. (Bardessono v. Michels (1970) 3 C.3d 780, 790, 91 C.R. 760, 478 P.2d 480; Inderbitzen v. Lane Hosp. (1932) 124 C.A. 462, 467, 13 P.2d 905 [infection from vaginal examination with unsterilized hands]; Dean v. Dyer (1944) 64 C.A.2d 646, 653, 149 P.2d 288 [injury to eye]; Agnew v. Dresel (1956) 139 C.A.2d 333, 342, 293 P.2d 488 [same injury; X-rays taken of knee but not hip]; Gannon v. Elliot (1993) 19 C.A.4th 1, 10, 23 C.R.2d 86 [defendant left cap from surgical instrument in plaintiff's hip during surgery; jury was erroneously instructed to ignore common knowledge and consider only expert testimony]; see 33 Cal. L. Rev. 248, 272; 14 Pacific L. J. 133 [Common Knowledge in Medical Malpractice Litigation: A Diagnosis and Prescription].)

(2) Legal Malpractice. In Lysick v. Walcom (1968) 258 C.A.2d 136, 156, 65 C.R. 406, the court said: "[T]here is no reason why the rules of evidence for malpractice against a lawyer should not be the same as those governing cases against doctors. ... Accordingly, when the matter in issue is within the knowledge of experts only and not within the common knowledge of laymen, expert evidence is conclusive and cannot be disregarded." (On the requirement of expert testimony, see supra, §22; see also 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §311 et seq.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Medical Malpractice. See Betterton v. Leichtling (2002) 101 C.A.4th 749, 756, 124 C.R.2d 644 [in medical malpractice action in which plaintiff alleged defendant failed to obtain informed consent before going ahead with surgery despite increased risk of bleeding due to plaintiff's aspirin use, rule making expert testimony conclusive as to duty of care did not apply to question whether defendant failed to disclose significant risk, but did apply to question whether significant risk existed].

II. EXPERT EVIDENCE

E. Effect of Expert Testimony.

3. Psychiatric Testimony.

[§ 87] Psychiatric Testimony.

(1) Civil Cases. "The science of psychiatry ... has not reached the plateau of infallibility where courts must cede their powers of adjudication even when a pronouncement has been made by a psychiatrist in answering the ultimate question at issue, that his patient was incompetent." (Mills v. Kopf (1963) 216 C.A.2d 780, 785, 31 C.R. 80 [testimony of psychiatrist that promisor was completely without understanding held not prevailing over convincing testimony of others, including promisor's attorney who drafted the agreement].)

(2) Criminal Cases. Psychiatric testimony is no more conclusive in criminal than in civil cases. In People v. Williams (1957) 151 C.A.2d 173, 311 P.2d 117, defendant, charged with homicide, made several confessions. At the trial, an expert psychiatrist testified that he was a pathological liar and psychopathic personality, wholly unreliable. On appeal, defendant contended that, because this was the only expert evidence on the subject, the confessions should have been excluded. Held, the malpractice rule does not apply and the expert's opinion is to be weighed in the light of the reasons given and the other facts in evidence. (151 C.A.2d 187.)

In People v. Wolff (1964) 61 C.2d 795, 40 C.R. 271, 394 P.2d 959, a homicide case, four psychiatrists testified that defendant suffered from schizophrenia and was legally insane. Defendant's contention that this established his insanity defense was rejected: "Sound mind" and "legal sanity" are not synonymous; and to accept his view would be to create a new defense of "not guilty by reason of schizophrenia." (61 C.2d 815, 816.) The court observed that "strictly speaking, a psychiatrist is not an 'expert' at all when it comes to determining whether the defendant is legally responsible under the terms of the California rule." (61 C.2d 811.)

In People v. Coogler (1969) 71 C.2d 153, 77 C.R. 790, 454 P.2d 686, testimony of a psychiatrist and clinical psychologist supported defendant's then recognized diminished capacity defense (see 1 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Defenses, §23 et seq.). Although the prosecution offered no expert testimony to the contrary, the jury rejected the defense. Held, this was proper. "Although unanimity of expert opinion carries persuasive value, a jury, under certain circumstances, can properly reject such opinions. ... The chief value of an expert's testimony in this field, as in all other fields, rests upon the material from which his opinion is fashioned and the reasoning by which he progresses from his material to his conclusion." (71 C.2d 166.) (See also People v. Drew (1978) 22 C.3d 333, 350, 149 C.R. 275, 583 P.2d 1318; People v. Cruz (1980) 26 C.3d 233, 247, 162 C.R. 1, 605 P.2d 830; People v. Huddleston (1969) 275 C.A.2d 859, 864, 80 C.R. 496; People v. Ruiz (1970) 11 C.A.3d 852, 858, 90 C.R. 110; People v. Neustice (1972) 24 C.A.3d 178, 191, 100 C.R. 783; People v. McCowan (1986) 182 C.A.3d 1, 13, 14, 227 C.R. 23, infra, §94; People v. Skinner (1986) 185 C.A.3d 1050, 1063, 228 C.R. 652 [defendant found sane at time of homicide, despite unanimous psychiatric testimony to the contrary; substantial evidence supported inference that defendant had merely experienced temporary, cocaine-induced psychosis].)

In re Perkins (1958) 165 C.A.2d 73, 331 P.2d 712, a habeas corpus proceeding seeking release of a committed criminal on the ground of recovery of sanity, expresses a contrasting view: "[T]he policy of the state," evidenced by the statutes on insanity proceedings, is that opinions of psychiatrists "are entitled to great weight." (165 C.A.2d 79.) And in People v. Duckett (1984) 162 C.A.3d 1115, 209 C.R. 96, the court held that the jury erred in finding defendant legally sane in the face of unanimous expert opinion that he was insane. (162 C.A.3d 1123.) (See critical dissent, 162 C.A.3d 1128, citing People v. Drew, supra, People v. Wolff, supra, and other cases holding that a jury may reasonably reject expert psychiatric opinion that a defendant is insane; and see also People v. Green (1984) 163 C.A.3d 239, 244, 209 C.R. 255 [disagreeing with Duckett].)

III. OPINION ON ULTIMATE ISSUE

A. Former Rule of Exclusion.

[§ 88] Former Rule of Exclusion.

Many cases purport to state a general rule excluding an opinion on an ultimate basic issue of the case. The theory is that conclusions of this type are for the jury to make, and that offering an opinion that is directly decisive of the case invades the province of the jury. (See Wilkerson v. El Monte (1936) 17 C.A.2d 615, 622, 62 P.2d 790; Estate of Rich (1947) 79 C.A.2d 22, 25, 179 P.2d 373; 2 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 359; 28 So. Cal. L. Rev. 420; 1 McCormick 5th, §12.)

Thus, in Estate of Rich, an intimate acquaintance of the testatrix was allowed to answer, over objection, the question: "Do you have an opinion as to whether or not Maude Rich was mentally competent to make a valid will?" Held, the question was improper (although not, in the light of the record, reversible error). The court emphatically declared that the question must be limited to mental sanity alone, and must not touch upon capacity to make a will. "In allowing a witness to answer the aforesaid question, the province of both the court and jury was invaded and the whole issue of law and fact was determined by the mere opinion of the witness. The vice of the question lies in the fact that capacity to make a will is not a simple question of fact, but is a conclusion which the law draws from certain facts as premises." (79 C.A.2d 26.)

In Thomason v. Hethcock (1935) 7 C.A.2d 634, 637, 46 P.2d 832, it was held improper to ask a doctor whether a certain kind of operation constituted due care or negligence. And in Criss v. Angelus Hosp. Assn. of Los Angeles (1936) 13 C.A.2d 412, 416, 56 P.2d 1274, it was held improper to ask whether the particular defendant doctor exercised ordinary skill in treating the particular patient. (See also Sim v. Weeks (1935) 7 C.A.2d 28, 38, 45 P.2d 350 [quoting Michigan case: "When a result may or may not be occasioned by malpractice, an expert medical witness invades the province of the jury when permitted to go beyond stating that it could and in saying that it did occasion the result"].)

The decisions seem reasonable enough when the answer sought is clearly a conclusion that is for the jury and not the witness to state, e.g., whether the defendant was negligent. (See 1 McCormick 5th, §12; 2 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 359; infra, §91.) But no reliable test of an "ultimate issue" can be devised, and both by statute and case law certain opinions of this type have been sanctioned, e.g., opinions on sanity, handwriting, and value. Most writers have condemned the strict exclusionary rule as unsound in principle, and inconsistent and unworkable in practice. (See 1 McCormick 5th, §12; 7 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1921.)

The trend of modern decisions, in California and elsewhere, is to admit such opinions whenever they are useful; and the strict exclusionary rule was expressly repudiated by the Model Code of Evidence (Rule 401), the Uniform Rules of Evidence (Rule 704), the Federal Rules of Evidence (Rule 704), and the Evidence Code. (See infra, §90; on Unif. Rule 704, see 13B (Part 1B) U.L.A. (Master Ed.), p. 55.)

CHAPTER V - Opinion Evidence

III. OPINION ON ULTIMATE ISSUE

B. Repudiation of Rule.

1. California Case Law.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Opinion Evid § 89

[§ 89] California Case Law.

The modern view is illustrated by the following excerpts from California decisions:

"It is certainly contrary to the unmistakable trend of authority to exclude expert opinion testimony merely upon the ground that it amounts to an opinion upon ultimate facts. The modern tendency is to make no distinction between evidential and ultimate facts subject to expert opinion. The courts consider that it is more important to get to the truth of the matter than to quibble over distinctions in this regard which are in many cases impracticable." (Wells Truckways v. Cebrian (1954) 122 C.A.2d 666, 678, 265 P.2d 557 [quoting Am.Jur.].)

"We believe, therefore, that there is no hard and fast rule that experts may not be asked questions that coincide with the ultimate issue in the case, and that the true rule is that admissibility depends on the nature of the issue and the circumstances of the case, there being a large measure of discretion involved. We believe further that the modern tendency is against making a distinction between evidentiary and ultimate facts as subjects of expert opinion." (People v. King (1951) 104 C.A.2d 298, 304, 231 P.2d 156.)

"Oftentimes an opinion may be received on a simple ultimate issue, even when it is the sole one, as for example where the issue is the value of an article, or the sanity of a person; because it cannot be further simplified and cannot be fully tried without hearing opinions from those in better position to form them than the jury can be placed in." (People v. Wilson (1944) 25 C.2d 341, 349, 153 P.2d 720 [quoting federal case].)

"[I]n this state we have followed the modern tendency and have refused to hold that expert opinion is inadmissible merely because it coincides with an ultimate issue of fact." (People v. Cole (1956) 47 C.2d 99, 105, 301 P.2d 854, supra, §47.)

Similar statements may be found in Burch v. Valley Motor Lines (1947) 78 C.A.2d 834, 838, 179 P.2d 47, infra, §92, reviewing the authorities at great length; California Bank v. Diamond (1956) 144 C.A.2d 387, 391, 301 P.2d 60 [permissible for witness to testify that neither he nor his corporation had been indebted to D--ultimate fact of lack of indebtedness]; Carey v. Lima, Salmon & Tully Mortuary (1959) 168 C.A.2d 42, 45, 335 P.2d 181 [quoting Cole case, supra, but holding exclusion not an abuse of discretion under the circumstances]; People v. Peoples (1963) 212 C.A.2d 581, 583, 28 C.R. 120 [following Cole case]; Magee v. Wyeth Laboratories (1963) 214 C.A.2d 340, 357, 29 C.R. 322, quoting the text; People v. Clay (1964) 227 C.A.2d 87, 99, 38 C.R. 431 [following Cole case]; People v. Arguello (1966) 244 C.A.2d 413, 417, 53 C.R. 245; State Comp. Ins. Fund v. Operated Equipment Co. (1968) 265 C.A.2d 759, 765, 71 C.R. 531, citing the text; Corn v. State Bar (1968) 68 C.2d 461, 67 C.R. 401, 439 P.2d 313, infra, §96; People v. Martin (1971) 17 C.A.3d 661, 668, 95 C.R. 250; People v. Douglas (1987) 193 C.A.3d 1691, 1694, 239 C.R. 252, citing the text [following Cole case]; Paez v. Alcoholic Bev. Control App. Bd. (1990) 222 C.A.3d 1025, 1026, 272 C.R. 272.

The proper approach, according to People v. Arguello, supra, is to permit a question that cannot be further simplified, even if it does touch on the ultimate issue, e.g., value of an article, or sanity; the opinion on the ultimate issue is the only practicable way of obtaining the necessary expert knowledge of the witness. But if the question can be further simplified, it should be, for then the objection is not the empty one of "ultimate issue," but rather that the answer goes beyond the point where the expert can assist the court, and draws conclusions that the jury itself can draw. (244 C.A.2d 418.) (See also Paez v. Alcoholic Bev. Control App. Bd., supra, 222 C.A.3d 1027 [notwithstanding Ev.C. 805, infra, §90, judge retains discretion to disallow question on ultimate issue under Evidence Code provisions relating to undue prejudice, expert witnesses, and proper mode of questioning]; 1 McCormick 5th, §12; 7 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1921; 1967 A.S. 113.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Proper approach: See Mitchell v. United Nat. Ins. Co. (2005) 127 C.A.4th 457, 478, 25 C.R.3d 627, 2 Summary (10th), Insurance, Supp., §225 [citing the text; in breach of contract action against insurer in which insurer defended on ground of insured's misrepresentations, trial judge properly excluded, as containing inadmissible conclusions, declaration of insured's expert to effect that insurer's reliance on insured's representations was not reasonable because underwriter should have carried out certain investigations].

III. OPINION ON ULTIMATE ISSUE

B. Repudiation of Rule.

2. Evidence Code and Federal Rules.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Opinion Evid § 90

[§ 90] Evidence Code and Federal Rules.

(1) Evidence Code. Ev.C. 805 codifies the modern view: "Testimony in the form of an opinion that is otherwise admissible is not objectionable because it embraces the ultimate issue to be decided by the trier of fact." (See McCleery v. Bakersfield (1985) 170 C.A.3d 1059, 1071, 216 C.R. 852; C.E.B., Expert Witness Guide 2d, §5.2.)

In view of this double repudiation of the exclusionary rule by late decisions and the new statute, the earlier cases must be read with caution. Some probably still exemplify the discretion of the trial judge to exclude opinions that might improperly influence the jury to shirk their duty of drawing the ultimate conclusions from the evidence offered; others will no longer be controlling; but it is impossible to sift them successfully at this time. (See infra, §91 et seq.)

(2) Federal Rules of Evidence. F.R. Evid., Rule 704 originally read: "Testimony in the form of an opinion or inference otherwise admissible is not objectionable because it embraces an ultimate issue to be decided by the trier of fact."

The Rule was amended in 1984 to read as follows:

"(a) Except as provided in subdivision (b), testimony in the form of an opinion or inference otherwise admissible is not objectionable because it embraces an ultimate issue to be decided by the trier of fact."

"(b) No expert witness testifying with respect to the mental state or condition of a defendant in a criminal case may state an opinion or inference as to whether the defendant did or did not have the mental state or condition constituting an element of the crime charged or of a defense thereto. Such ultimate issues are matters for the trier of fact alone." (See 3 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §360 et seq.; C.E.B., Expert Witness Guide 2d, §5.11.)

1. Decisions Excluding Opinions.

[§ 91] Decisions Excluding Opinions.

Sampson v. Hughes (1905) 147 C. 62, 67, 81 P. 292, furnishes a simple illustration of the "ultimate issue" type of question: Defendant was asked whether he "wilfully, negligently, or carelessly" did the thing charged; the trial judge erred in overruling an objection. (See also, following the Sampson case, Roberts v. Patterson (1959) 170 C.A.2d 661, 666, 339 P.2d 236 [injury from tripping over folded rug placed at entrance to apartment house; defendant manager was asked whether she realized that rug "could be a hazard"; objection was correctly sustained].)

In Wilkerson v. El Monte (1936) 17 C.A.2d 615, 621, 62 P.2d 790, a personal injury case, plaintiff's engineer testified that the street condition was "a dangerous one," and a contractor said "it is constructed wrong," and is "not safe for travel." These opinions were held inadmissible. (See, following the Wilkerson case, Martindale v. Mountain View (1962) 208 C.A.2d 109, 124, 25 C.R. 148 [whether condition at crossing was hazardous to motorists]; Blinkinsop v. Weber (1948) 85 C.A.2d 276, 283, 193 P.2d 96 [expert could properly testify as to whether steps were built in accordance with standard and accepted construction methods and architectural practice, but could not give opinion that they were safe].)

In Waller v. Southern Calif. Gas Co. (1959) 170 C.A.2d 747, 339 P.2d 577, plaintiff was injured in a collision of his car and the rear of defendant's truck. His expert, a mechanical engineer, relying on an examination of the scene and photographs of the vehicles, testified that the accident could only have happened in a certain way. Held, admission of this testimony on the ultimate issue was reversible error; it was based on "a cumulation of assumptions," some of which were unsupported by any evidence. The court added that "[a]s a general rule such opinions upon the ultimate issue should not be received in automobile accident cases." (170 C.A.2d 754.) (See also Moore v. Norwood (1940) 41 C.A.2d 359, 366, 106 P.2d 939 [opinion as to whether the accident could have been avoided if one of the drivers had acted differently].)

In Schauf v. Southern Calif. Edison Co. (1966) 243 C.A.2d 450, 52 C.R. 518, an intersection collision case, a traffic engineer who had examined photographs of the area was called by plaintiff. He was asked whether the intersection presented a hazard to westbound traffic, and whether a westbound driver "had basis for expectancy of a stop sign." Held, the trial judge did not abuse his discretion in rejecting the evidence; he may have concluded that the subject was within the jurors' experience, and that the unnecessary expert's opinion might have been given undue weight. (243 C.A.2d 456.)

See Piscitelli v. Friedenber (2001) 87 C.A.4th 953, 971, 105 C.R.2d 88 [in legal malpractice action, admission of testimony of plaintiff's expert on ultimate issue of who would have prevailed in underlying arbitration was error; it was jurors' role to step into shoes of arbitrators, consider facts of plaintiff's underlying claims, and determine their merits].

III. OPINION ON ULTIMATE ISSUE

C. Illustrations: Negligence Cases.

2. Decisions Upholding Admissibility.

[§ 92] Decisions Upholding Admissibility.

In Burch v. Valley Motor Lines (1947) 78 C.A.2d 834, 179 P.2d 47, two trailer-trucks collided, following which the cast steel drawbar connecting defendant's truck and trailer was found to have been broken. Defendant's theory was that it had been broken by compression from a rear end collision for which plaintiff was responsible; plaintiff's theory was that it had been broken before the collision, in time for defendant to have avoided the accident. Defendant called a qualified mechanical engineer who would have testified that, from an inspection of the broken pieces of steel, he could give an opinion concerning the type of force necessary to break them in that manner, that it was a compression force such as would be created by a rear end collision, and that the drawbar could not have been broken by the swaying of defendant's vehicles. The trial judge excluded the evidence, and the exclusion was held prejudicial error. The court said: "The ultimate question which the jury had to answer ... was, whose negligence caused this collision or contributed thereto? In seeking such answer the subsidiary and secondary inquiry was relevant and proper, i.e., whether the drawbar was broken by a side-to-side jerking, swaying or whipping motion on the one hand, or by a blow from the rear on the other. ... The rejected testimony would not have been subject to the criticism that it coincided with the ultimate issue, for conceivably the jury might be convinced that the drawbar was fractured by a blow from the rear, and still conclude that appellant was guilty of negligence." (78 C.A.2d 842.)

In Reynolds v. Natural Gas Equipment (1960) 184 C.A.2d 724, 7 C.R. 879, plaintiff sued for injuries resulting from the explosion of a large industrial gas burner. A properly qualified expert was asked whether the burner met with the general engineering standards in the area. The trial judge refused to allow the answer on the ground that the opinion would be speculative, and that the jury should reach its own conclusions on the issue. He also struck out subsequent testimony of the expert as to the proper design of the machine to make it safe. Held, this was prejudicial error; evidence as to the proper equipment or adjustment of machinery, and as to the necessity and feasibility of adding a safety device, is admissible and within the scope of expert opinion. (184 C.A.2d 739, 740.)

Other examples are Alber v. Owens (1967) 66 C.2d 790, 800, 59 C.R. 117, 427 P.2d 781; Lemley v. Doak Gas Engine Co. (1919) 40 C.A. 146, 151, 180 P. 671 [cause of breaking of fly-wheel]; Wallace v. Speier (1943) 60 C.A.2d 387, 394, 140 P.2d 900 [safe life of plumbing fixtures and frequency of necessary inspection]; Magee v. Wyeth Laboratories (1963) 214 C.A.2d 340, 348, 29 C.R. 322 [breach of warranty in sale of drug, judgment for defendant; expert's opinion that warning in direction circular was adequate]; Smith v. Lockheed Propulsion Co. (1967) 247 C.A.2d 774, 783, 56 C.R. 128, citing the text; State Comp. Ins. Fund v. Operated Equipment Co. (1968) 265 C.A.2d 759, 765, 71 C.R. 531 [qualified engineer was asked whether, on evidence presented, release of crane's jib was safe or unsafe practice]; Majetich v. Westin (1969) 276 C.A.2d 216, 219, 80 C.R. 787 [error, though harmless, in excluding expert testimony on whether defendant's failure to meet standard of postoperative care was proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries]; McCleery v. Bakersfield (1985) 170 C.A.3d 1059, 1067, 1070, 1071, 216 C.R. 852, supra, §74.

III. OPINION ON ULTIMATE ISSUE

D. Illustrations: Criminal Cases.

1. Decisions Excluding Opinions.

[§ 93] Decisions Excluding Opinions.

It has been held that the opinion of a lay witness as to whether the defendant could "distinguish right from wrong" is inadmissible. (People v. O'Brien (1932) 122 C.A. 147, 150, 9 P.2d 902; but see People v. Woods (1937) 19 C.A.2d 556, 65 P.2d 940, infra, §95.) And in People v. Mason (1960) 183 C.A.2d 168, 173, 6 C.R. 649, the court, citing the text, held it wholly improper to ask a police officer, who had signed the original complaint against defendant, for his opinion on guilt or innocence. (On inadmissibility of expert testimony on accused's capacity to form necessary specific intent, see infra, §94.)

In People v. Johnson (1947) 81 C.A.2d Supp. 973, 185 P.2d 105, a prosecution under the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act for selling liquor to "an obviously intoxicated person," a police officer was allowed to answer this question: "Officer, based upon your experience and your observation of this man Holalek on that evening, in your opinion was he obviously intoxicated?" Held, this was prejudicial error. The facts concerning his conduct and appearance should have been presented, but whether those facts made him an "obviously" intoxicated person was exclusively for the jury to determine. (81 C.A.2d Supp. 975.)

In People v. Brown (1981) 116 C.A.3d 820, 172 C.R. 221, a police officer defined a "runner" in narcotics transactions as one who assists a dealer, then answered a question directed to the role defendant was playing: "It's my opinion that the defendant, Ben Brown, was working as a runner for Lucille Carson." Held, this was error, since the jurors were as well qualified as the witness to make that determination. (116 C.A.3d 829.) (See also People v. Torres (1995) 33 C.A.4th 37, 45, 39 C.R.2d 103 [in prosecution for murder committed during attempted robbery, police officer was improperly allowed to express opinion on definition of crimes, on whether crime was committed, and on defendant's guilt].)

See People v. Frederick (2006) 142 C.A.4th 400, 412, 48 C.R.3d 585 [in prosecution for operating endless chain scheme, trial judge properly limited testimony of prosecution and defense expert witnesses to prevent them from opining as to whether defendant's organization was in fact endless chain scheme (this would invade jury's province) and from instructing on law of endless chain schemes (this would usurp trial judge's function)].

III. OPINION ON ULTIMATE ISSUE

D. Illustrations: Criminal Cases.

2. Statutory Exclusion of Opinion on Capacity To Form Intent.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Opinion Evid § 94

[§ 94] Statutory Exclusion of Opinion on Capacity To Form Intent.

P.C. 29 prohibits the admission of expert testimony at the guilt phase of a criminal trial on the question whether the defendant had the required mental state. (See 1 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Defenses, §§23, 24.) In People v. McCowan (1986) 182 C.A.3d 1, 227 C.R. 23, defendant was charged with first degree murder, second degree murder, and attempted murder. The trial judge, relying on P.C. 29, refused to permit defense counsel to ask psychiatric experts whether defendant had the capacity to form a mental state in issue on the date he allegedly committed the offenses, and further barred expert testimony on whether defendant had formed the required mental state at the time of the crimes. Held, the ruling was proper. Although P.C. 29 forbids an expert from testifying on the ultimate issue of whether defendant had the requisite mental state, defendant was permitted to present expert testimony suggesting that his mental condition prevented him from forming the required mental state when he committed his offenses. (182 C.A.3d 13, 14.) "The Legislature has determined that judges and jurors are capable of deciding whether a defendant's mental illness resulted in an inability to form the mental state required to sustain the charge. Such testimony is not 'sufficiently beyond common experience that the opinion of an expert would assist the trier of fact.'" (182 C.A.3d 14.) (See 16 A.L.R.4th 666 [admissibility of expert testimony as to whether defendant had requisite specific intent].)

In People v. Molina (1988) 202 C.A.3d 1168, 249 C.R. 273, the court took note of P.C. 28 (which abolished the defense of diminished capacity) and P.C. 29, and said: "The apparent meaning of the statutory language is that evidence of mental problems is inadmissible to show that a defendant lacked the capacity to form the requisite mental state, but is admissible to show that the defendant actually lacked the requisite mental state. An expert may testify regarding the defendant's mental condition so long as the expert gives no opinion on the ultimate question of whether or not the defendant actually had the requisite mental state." (202 C.A.3d 1173.)

In People v. Rangel (1992) 11 C.A.4th 291, 14 C.R.2d 529, a murder prosecution, the trial judge struck a defense expert's opinion testimony that, given defendant's voluntary intoxication, defendant did not deliberate, premeditate, or harbor the requisite specific intent to kill. Held, exclusion of this opinion testimony was proper. P.C. 29 applies to expert testimony encompassing the effects of voluntary intoxication. (11 C.A.4th 302.) Furthermore, even if the statute did not support exclusion of the stricken testimony, any error was harmless in light of the expert's extensive testimony as to the effects of alcohol generally and specifically on defendant's state of mind. (11 C.A.4th 303.)

In People v. Nunn (1996) 50 C.A.4th 1357, 58 C.R.2d 294, a prosecution for attempted murder and assault with a deadly weapon, the defense proposed to present expert testimony to the effect that defendant's "tendency to overreact, coupled with his level of inebriation, resulted in his impulsive firing of the weapon." (50 C.A.4th 1362.) The trial judge ruled this opinion inadmissible under P.C. 28 and 29. Held, the ruling was correct. P.C. 29 "does not simply forbid the use of certain words, it prohibits an expert from offering an opinion on the ultimate question of whether the defendant had or did not have a particular mental state at the time he acted. An expert may not evade the restrictions of section 29 by couching an opinion in words which are or would be taken as synonyms for the mental states involved. Nor may an expert evade section 29 by offering the opinion that the defendant at the time he acted had a state of mind which is the opposite of, and necessarily negates, the existence of the required mental state." (50 C.A.4th 1364.)

In People v. Samayoa (1997) 15 C.4th 795, 64 C.R.2d 400, 938 P.2d 2, a murder case, the court held that the prosecutor did not engage in misleading or otherwise improper conduct by commenting on defendant's failure to present expert testimony as to his mental disorders at the time of the charged crimes: Neither P.C. 28 and 29, nor the trial judge's ruling that defense witnesses should not express their opinion on what was in defendant's mind at the critical moment, would have barred defendant from presenting expert testimony as to his mental disorders, "short of an opinion that as a result of defendant's mental disorders he lacked the capacity to form the intent to kill, or did not in fact have the intent to kill, when committing the crimes." (15 C.4th 837.)

San Nicolas* (2004) 34 C.4th 614, 662, 21 C.R.3d 612, 101 P.3d 509 [in capital murder case in which defendant was accused of murdering his wife and her niece, trial judge did not abuse discretion in excluding psychiatrist's testimony on spillover rage that related to whether defendant actually had requisite mental state, his testimony on general brain physiology that dealt with capacity to form mental state, and his testimony on neurotransmitters and those elements of spillover that amounted to capacity evidence]; People v. Vieira (2005) 35 C.4th 264, 291, 25 C.R.3d 337, 106 P.3d 990 [in capital murder case, testimony of sheriff's detective as to whether defendant was under mind control of cult at time of murders was properly excluded; P.C. 28, 29 would have prevented detective from offering opinion on whether defendant had mental capacity to form mental state required for murder, and trial judge properly found that detective, who was not mental health professional, was not qualified to opine whether defendant suffered from mental illness at time of murders]. West's Key Number Digest, Criminal Law k.474, 474.1

3. Decisions Upholding Admissibility.

[§ 95] Decisions Upholding Admissibility.

In People v. Woods (1937) 19 C.A.2d 556, 65 P.2d 940, at the trial on defendant's insanity plea, psychiatrists were permitted over his objection to give their opinions concerning his ability to distinguish right from wrong. Held, this was not error. There are different legal tests for insanity in criminal cases, probate proceedings, and proceedings for commitment of an insane person; and, if the expert is limited to the mere statement that a person is insane, the jury will be unable to determine whether he applied the correct test. Hence, it is proper in a criminal case for the expert to express an opinion on sanity, coupled with the correct legal test, i.e., ability to distinguish right from wrong. (19 C.A.2d 562.) The court distinguished People v. O'Brien (1932) 122 C.A. 147, 9 P.2d 902, supra, §93, as involving nonexpert witnesses. (19 C.A.2d 563.)

In People v. Martinez (1952) 38 C.2d 556, 241 P.2d 224, a first degree murder case, the court, referring to defendant's attack on a question calling for an opinion on his state of mind, said: "Defendant's argument is based on the erroneous assumption that an expert cannot be asked a question that coincides with the ultimate issue in the case. ... Counsel could properly have asked Dr. Neal whether a man whose blood had a 2.35 alcohol content could understand that the actions he contemplated would culminate in the wrongful death of another human being." (38 C.2d 564.)

In People v. Carter (1997) 55 C.A.4th 1376, 64 C.R.2d 747, a prosecution for possession of cocaine base for sale, a police officer was allowed to render an expert opinion that, based on the quantity of drug possessed, defendant possessed cocaine for purposes of sale. Held, this was proper; People v. Arguello (1966) 244 C.A.2d 413, 53 C.R. 245, which stated a rule excluding expert testimony on this issue, is no longer good law. (55 C.A.4th 1377.)

Other instructive cases are People v. Cole (1956) 47 C.2d 99, 105, 301 P.2d 854, supra, §47 [autopsy surgeon's opinion that wound was probably not self-inflicted]; People v. Polk (1964) 61 C.2d 217, 233, 37 C.R. 753, 390 P.2d 641 [murder penalty trial; even assuming that conclusion of prosecution's psychiatrist, that defendant was severe sociopath whose chances of rehabilitation were "extremely improbable," coincided with ultimate issue, it was not objectionable]; People v. Taylor (1957) 152 C.A.2d 29, 30, 312 P.2d 731 [driving while drunk; police department criminalist, after intoximeter test, answered hypothetical question as to whether defendant was under influence of intoxicating liquor at time of accident]; People v. Harvey (1991) 233 C.A.3d 1206, 1227, 285 C.R. 158, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §49, citing the text [expert testimony about nature of various drug transactions and various roles and levels of culpability of each codefendant was admissible in prosecution for conspiracy to sell drugs]; People v. Valdez (1997) 58 C.A.4th 494, 507, 68 C.R.2d 135 [in murder prosecution in which gang enhancement was alleged, police officer was properly allowed to give opinion on whether defendant acted for benefit of gang, which was ultimate factual issue for jury to decide]. (See also 52 Cal. L. Rev. 560 [psychiatric testimony on ultimate issue].)

In People v. Coddington (2000) 23 C.4th 529, 97 C.R.2d 528, 2 P.3d 1081, a capital murder case, the trial judge and counsel discussed in advance the scope of mental state evidence that would be admitted. The judge ultimately ruled that the defense could offer any relevant evidence on mental defect or disease. However, no questions could be asked of defendant's expert about whether or how any mental defect or disease would affect defendant's mental state, or whether it would impair his ability to form intent, deliberate, or premeditate, unless the expert would testify, out of the jury's presence, that he believed defendant did not premeditate or deliberate the charged killings. Held, the ruling was overly restrictive. "An expert's opinion that a form of mental illness can lead to impulsive behavior is relevant to the existence vel non of the mental states of premeditation and deliberation regardless of whether the expert believed appellant actually harbored those mental states at the time of the killing." (23 C.4th 582.)

See People v. Garcia (2007) 153 C.A.4th 1499, 1513, 1514, 64 C.R.3d 104 [in prosecution for street terrorism and carrying loaded unregistered firearm in public, trial judge did not err in allowing gang expert to testify, in response to hypothetical questions, that under specific circumstances, crimes would be committed to benefit criminal street gang, "even though the topics as to which he rendered an opinion ... were, in fact, the ultimate issues of the case"].

In Corn v. State Bar (1968) 68 C.2d 461, 67 C.R. 401, 439 P.2d 313, petitioner, claiming authority to indorse a check in his client's name pursuant to an agreement giving him half as fees, signed her name and his and took the whole amount. She notified the bank of the forgery. In this disciplinary proceeding, two handwriting experts were asked to compare the handwriting used for her name and his, with an exemplar of his own, and they offered the opinion that he had attempted to disguise his own handwriting, so as to cause a lay person to think the two had been written by different persons. Held, although this question called for an opinion of petitioner's state of mind, one of the ultimate issues, it was admissible. (68 C.2d 466.) (See also Paez v. Alcoholic Bev. Control App. Bd. (1990) 222 C.A.3d 1025, 1027, 272 C.R. 272 [in license suspension proceeding, an officer could give expert opinion that customer to whom defendant bar owner sold alcohol was "obviously" drunk].)

III. OPINION ON ULTIMATE ISSUE

F. Distinction: Opinion on Issue of Law.

[§ 97] Distinction: Opinion on Issue of Law.

In Downer v. Bramet (1984) 152 C.A.3d 837, 199 C.R. 830, plaintiff, former wife of defendant, brought an action to determine a community property interest in the proceeds of a ranch conveyed to her husband by his former employer. The husband claimed that the conveyance was a gift to him, hence his separate property; the wife contended that it was made in recognition of the husband's services, as deferred compensation, hence was community property. The wife called an attorney as an expert witness "to delineate for the jury the standards to use in determining whether the transfer was a gift or deferred compensation." Held, the trial judge properly excluded the testimony. Although evidence is not inadmissible simply because it embraces the ultimate issue, an expert cannot testify to legal conclusions in the guise of expert opinion:

"While in many cases expert opinions that are genuinely needed may happen to embrace the ultimate issue of fact (e.g., a medical opinion whether a physician's actions constitute professional negligence), the calling of lawyers as 'expert witnesses' to give opinions as to the application of the law to particular facts usurps the duty of the trial court to instruct the jury on the law as applicable to the facts, and results in no more than a modern day 'trial by oath' in which the side producing the greater number of lawyers able to opine in their favor wins." (152 C.A.3d 842.)

In Summers v. A. L. Gilbert Co. (1999) 69 C.A.4th 1155, 82 C.R.2d 162, plaintiffs brought a wrongful death action alleging theories of liability based on nondelegable duty and negligent hiring and retention of an incompetent contractor. The action arose from an accident in which a trailer loaded with corn became detached and tipped over onto the decedent's vehicle. The defendants included the owner of the truck and trailer and the owner of the corn. At trial, plaintiffs' counsel called as an expert witness a lawyer who specialized in the field of transportation and practiced primarily before the Public Utilities Commission. He was allowed to give opinions to the effect that the corn owner had a nondelegable duty, the truck owner was hauling illegally, the contracts between the two owners were illegal, the corn owner was legally required to be registered as a contract carrier rather than a private carrier, and he was liable for the truck owner's acts. The jury found both defendants liable. Held, admission of the expert's testimony was error.

(a) California law allows expert testimony that is related "to a subject that is sufficiently beyond common experience that the opinion of an expert would assist the trier of fact." (Ev.C. 801(a).) Although the testimony may embrace an ultimate issue (Ev.C. 805; see supra, §90), it may not contain legal conclusions. Federal law is the same: the federal courts have uniformly held that allowing an expert to voice an opinion on an issue of law usurps the authority of the court to instruct the jury on the law applicable to the case. (69 C.A.4th 1181.) Here, plaintiffs' expert "was advocating, not testifying. In essence, cloaked with the impressive mantle of 'expert,' [he] made plaintiffs' closing argument from the witness stand. This is a misuse of expert witnesses, and renders his testimony inadmissible under Evidence Code section 801." (69 C.A.4th 1185.)

(b) The effect of admitting this testimony was clearly prejudicial and necessitates reversal of the judgment. The trial judge's own instructions on the issue of nondelegable duty were inadequate, and the expert's testimony on this issue both filled the void left by the judge and attempted to dictate the outcome of the case. (69 C.A.4th 1187.) The evidence on the issue of negligent hiring and retention presented a very close question of fact, and "we cannot say it was unlikely the admission of [the expert's] opinion on the subject did not affect the verdict." (69 C.A.4th 1190.) (See also Williams v. Coombs (1986) 179 C.A.3d 626, 638, 224 C.R. 865 [testimony expressing opinion on legal question of probable cause was inadmissible as improper expert opinion].)

The authorities are generally in accord with this view. (See 7 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1952; 1 McCormick 5th, §12; 31A Am.Jur.2d (1989 ed.), Expert and Opinion Evidence §136 et seq.) The strict prohibition has, however, been criticized, and it has been suggested that courts should develop a functional approach of discretionary admissibility to take account of the difference between jury and court trials, and to recognize that much testimony legal in nature is now admitted either openly or in the guise of testimony on mixed questions of law and fact. (See Staten v. Superior Court (1996) 45 C.A.4th 1628, 1635, 1636, 53 C.R.2d 657, 6 Summary (9th), Torts, Supp., §1090C [expert testimony on question of duty owed by skater to fellow skaters was inadmissible under traditional rule; but rule should be reexamined, because issue of duty in unfamiliar sports will often have to be decided by judge in summary judgment context without benefit of helpful factual input]; 97 Harv. L. Rev. 797 [arguing against blanket prohibition of expert legal testimony]; 66 A.L.R.5th 135 [expert testimony on questions of domestic law].)

IV. OPINION ON VALUE OF PROPERTY

A. In General.

1. Law Revision Commission Study.

[§ 98] Law Revision Commission Study.

The Law Revision Commission, as a separate project, made a study of evidence in eminent domain proceedings, which culminated in recommendations for statutory changes. The recommendations were substantially embodied in legislation enacted in 1965 as Title 7.1 of the Code of Civil Procedure, superseded by Ev.C. 810 et seq. on adoption of the Evidence Code. (See infra, §99.) Because of the independent enactment of this legislation, no Comments are found on these sections in the Official Code, but their purposes are explained in Volume 3 of the California Law Revision Commission Reports (cited herein as 3 Com. Reports), p. A-5 et seq.

In deciding to codify the rules, the Commission took note of previous reluctance to legislate in this area, but concluded that such legislation was imperative. The principal reasons assigned were: (1) The existing state of the law was uncertain, with particularly serious problems raised by Los Angeles v. Faus (1957) 48 C.2d 672, 312 P.2d 680, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §116, abrogating the former California rule excluding evidence of other sales on direct examination. (2) Questionable decisions had been rendered concerning permissible and preferable methods of proving market value. (3) Modern concepts of appraising have changed, and legal concepts have not kept pace with business practices. The Report, however, adds a caution: "A good deal of discretion must remain with the courts simply because no definition can cover the wide gamut of situations that arise regarding this subject matter. The science of appraising, as such, cannot be put into legislation. Only limited areas can be controlled." (3 Com. Reports, p. A-22.) (See 18 Hastings L. J. 143 [discussing Commission recommendations and enacted statutes]; 20 Hastings L. J. 431 et seq. [symposium consisting of 17 articles, comments, and notes on eminent domain].)

IV. OPINION ON VALUE OF PROPERTY

A. In General.

2. Original Statute and Subsequent Legislation.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Opinion Evid § 99

[§ 99] Original Statute and Subsequent Legislation.

(1) Original Statute. As originally enacted, Ev.C. 810 et seq. provided special rules "applicable only to eminent domain and inverse condemnation proceedings." (Ev.C. 810.) (On the nature of these proceedings, see 8 Summary (9th), Constitutional Law, §§918 et seq., 1015 et seq.; on valuation evidence prior to the Evidence Code, see 12 Stanf. L. Rev. 766; 3 Com. Reports, p. A-11 et seq.)

(2) Changes in Eminent Domain Law. Former C.C.P. 1237 et seq., which set forth the substantive and procedural aspects of the eminent domain law, were repealed in 1975 and replaced by C.C.P. 1230.010 (see 8 Summary (9th), Constitutional Law, §918 et seq.).

(3) Changes in Evidence Code. The 1978 Legislature, following recommendations of the Law Revision Commission, made a number of changes in the valuation rules by amendments to Ev.C. 810, 811, 812, 813, 817, and 822, and also amended Rev.C. 4986 (cancellation of property tax; 9 Summary (9th), Taxation, §237). (See 14 Cal. Law Rev. Com. Reports 105; 10 Pacific L. J. 545; infra, §100 et seq.)

The 1980 Legislature made changes in Ev.C. 811, 813, 814, and 822, and added Ev.C. 823. (See 12 Pacific L. J. 531; infra, §100 et seq.)

(4) Extension of Provisions to All Actions. Responding to recommendations of the Commission (see 14 Cal. Law Rev. Com. Reports 110; 15 Cal. Law Rev. Com. Reports 301), the 1980 Legislature also amended Ev.C. 810 to extend application of the valuation rules beyond eminent domain and inverse condemnation proceedings. The amended statute makes the valuation rules applicable "to any action in which the value of property is to be ascertained." (Ev.C. 810(a).) The Legislative Committee Comment states that the proceedings covered "include, but are not limited to," the following: eminent domain; breach of contract of sale of real property (see C.C. 3306, 3307); mortgage deficiency judgments (see C.C.P. 580a, 726); fraud in the purchase, sale, or exchange of property (see C.C. 3343); and other cases in which no statutory standard of market value or its equivalent is prescribed but in which the court is required to make a determination of market value, such as marriage dissolution.

The Comment notes also that Ev.C. 810 et seq. apply only where market value is to be determined, whether for computing damages and benefits or for any other purpose.

Two exceptions to the general rule of applicability are stated:

(a) Where another rule is provided by statute. (Ev.C. 810(a).)

(b) Ad valorem property tax assessment or equalization proceedings. (Ev.C. 810(b); see Legislative Com. Comment, pointing out that these are governed by a well-developed and adequate set of rules.) (See also 12 Pacific L. J. 531.)

CHAPTER V - Opinion Evidence

IV. OPINION ON VALUE OF PROPERTY

A. In General.

3. Statutory Scope.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Opinion Evid § 100

[§ 100] Statutory Scope.

(1) Existing Substantive Law Unaffected. Ev.C. 810 et seq. are "not intended to alter or change the existing substantive law, whether statutory or decisional, interpreting the meaning of 'market value,' whether denominated 'fair market value' or otherwise." (Ev.C. 812.)

(2) Value of Property. The "value of property" means "market value of any of the following: (a) Real property or any interest therein. (b) Real property or any interest therein and tangible personal property valued as a unit." (Ev.C. 811.)

The Legislative Committee Comment on a 1978 amendment of Ev.C. 811 explains that the valuation rules do not apply to valuation of intangible personal property that is not an interest in real property, e.g., goodwill of a business. The Committee Comment on a 1980 amendment explains the restrictive phrase "valued as a unit": The rules apply only where personal property is valued together with real property, i.e., in actions involving real and personal property combined. "Actions involving personal property alone are governed by general law, including the general rules of evidence prescribed in this code, although where appropriate the court may look to the special rules prescribed in this article." (See Aetna Life & Cas. Co. v. Los Angeles (1985) 170 C.A.3d 865, 878, 216 C.R. 831 [Ev.C. 811, rather than general rules of evidence, applied in inverse condemnation action against city by homeowners for real and personal property losses resulting from brush fire, even though personal property losses as testified to by homeowners were not lumped with real property].)

(3) Property Without Relevant Market. Ev.C. 823, enacted in 1980, provides: "Notwithstanding any other provision of this article, the value of property for which there is no relevant, comparable market may be determined by any method of valuation that is just and equitable." The Legislative Committee Comment points out that this section, drawn from C.C.P. 1263.320(b) (see 8 Summary (9th), Constitutional Law, §1016), is included because there may be no relevant market for some types of special purpose properties such as schools, churches, cemeteries, parks, and utilities.

In Redevelopment Agency of Concord v. Tobriner (1989) 215 C.A.3d 1087, 264 C.R. 481, plaintiff agency sought to condemn parking easements held by defendants and located in the rear of a shopping center parking lot. Defendants contended that valuation evidence that they sought to introduce was admissible under C.C.P. 1263.320(b) and Ev.C. 823. Held, the statutes are inapplicable. The rule stated in those statutes is aimed at special purpose properties for which there is little or no market. This is not such property: It is not the fair market value of the easements that must be determined; the value of the easements is measured by the fair market value of the defendants' dominant estates before and after the taking. Evidence of the market value of these dominant estates was available and was used by plaintiff's appraiser. (215 C.A.3d 1102, citing the text.)

(4) Nonprofit, Special Use Property. C.C.P. 1235.155 defines "nonprofit, special use property" as property operated for a special nonprofit, tax-exempt use, such as a school, church, cemetery, hospital or similar property, but excluding property owned by a public entity.

Ev.C. 824, added in 1992, provides a just and equitable means of evaluating this property, for which there is no relevant, comparable market: "the cost of purchasing land and the reasonable cost of making it suitable for the conduct of the same nonprofit, special use, together with the cost of constructing similar improvements." (Ev.C. 824(a).) An opinion on the value of reproducing the improvements must be made without taking into consideration any depreciation or obsolescence of the improvements. (Ev.C. 824(b).)

Ev.C. 824 is inapplicable to actions or proceedings commenced by a public entity or utility to acquire real property or any interest in real property for the use of "water, sewer, electricity, telephone, natural gas, or flood control facilities or rights-of-way," where these acquisitions neither require removal or destruction of existing improvements nor render the property unfit for the owner's present or proposed use. (Ev.C. 824(c).)

CHAPTER V - Opinion Evidence

IV. OPINION ON VALUE OF PROPERTY

B. Value Shown Only by Opinion.

1. General Rule.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Opinion Evid § 101

[§ 101] General Rule.

The decision in Los Angeles v. Faus (1957) 48 C.2d 672, 676, 312 P.2d 680, and the statement of its rule in former C.C.P. 1845.5, authorized proof of other sales as substantive evidence. Ev.C. 813(a) does not: "The value of property may be shown only by the opinions" of qualified persons (infra, §102). (See BAJI (8th ed.), No. 11.80; Aetna Life & Cas. Co. v. Los Angeles (1985) 170 C.A.3d 865, 877, 216 C.R. 831.) The reason for this unequivocal position is thus stated:

"The value of property has long been regarded as a matter to be established in judicial proceedings by expert opinion. If this rule were changed to permit the court or jury to make a determination of value upon the basis of comparable sales or other basic valuation data, the trial of an eminent domain case might be unduly prolonged as witness after witness is called to present such testimony. In addition, the court or jury would be permitted to make a determination of value without the assistance of experts qualified to analyze and interpret the facts established by the testimony and to make an award far above or far below what any expert who testified considers the property is worth--even though the court or jury may know little or nothing of property values and may never have seen the property being condemned or the comparable property mentioned in the testimony. The Commission believes that the net result would be lengthened condemnation proceedings and awards which would often not realize the constitutional objective of just compensation. To avoid these consequences, the long established rule that value is a matter to be established by opinion evidence should be reaffirmed and codified." (3 Com. Reports, p. A-6.)

Under this rule, a view of the scene is only illustrative of the testimony. (Ev.C. 813(b), 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Demonstrative, Experimental, and Scientific Evidence, §31.)

CHAPTER V - Opinion Evidence

IV. OPINION ON VALUE OF PROPERTY

B. Value Shown Only by Opinion.

2. Opinions of Expert or Owner.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Opinion Evid § 102

[§ 102] Opinions of Expert or Owner.

(1) General Rule. Ev.C. 813(a) codifies the familiar rule that opinions on value may be given not only by an expert (see supra, §65), but by the owner of the property (see supra, §18). (See Long Beach City High School Dist. of Los Angeles v. Stewart (1947) 30 C.2d 763, 772, 185 P.2d 585; Los Angeles City High School Dist. v. Rodriguez (1955) 135 C.A.2d 760, 765, 287 P.2d 871; People v. Nahabedian (1959) 171 C.A.2d 302, 309, 340 P.2d 1053; San Bernardino County Flood Control Dist. v. Sweet (1967) 255 C.A.2d 889, 898, 63 C.R. 640 [witness with knowledge and experience can give opinion though not a real estate appraiser or broker]; People v. Douglas (1971) 15 C.A.3d 814, 822, 93 C.R. 644 [landowner may properly call state appraiser who made valuation on which security deposit was based]; Padre Dam Mun. Water Dist. v. Burkhardt (1995) 38 C.A.4th 988, 993, 45 C.R.2d 506 [in eminent domain proceeding, although coowner of property had right to testify as to value, it was reversible error to admit that testimony in absence of compliance with exchange requirements of C.C.P. 1258.250; see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §204]; 20 Hastings L. J. 650 [comparison of federal and California practices regarding discovery of expert knowledge and opinion in condemnation proceedings]; 66 A.L.R.4th 213 [right to compel testimony of opponent's expert].)

(2) Who Is Owner. Ev.C. 813(a) originally referred merely to "[t]he owner of the property interest being valued." Amendments in 1978 and 1980 expanded the coverage to include the following:

(a) "A person entitled to possession of the property." (Ev.C. 813(c)(1).) This includes those claiming ownership, e.g., in litigation between a buyer and seller under a contract of sale of real property, or between a landlord and tenant over trade fixtures. (Legislative Com. Comment on 1980 amendment.)

(b) The spouse of the owner. (Ev.C. 813(a)(2).) Thus, either husband or wife may testify to the value of community property and to the value of the separate property of either. This may be useful in cases where the character of the property is in dispute between them, and also where the nonowning spouse may be a more competent valuation witness than the owning spouse. (Legislative Com. Comment on 1980 amendment.)

(c) "Either party in an action or proceeding to determine the ownership of the property between the parties if the court determines that it would not be in the interest of efficient administration of justice to determine the issue of ownership prior to the admission of the opinion of the party." (Ev.C. 813(c)(2).)

testimony was based on informal discussions with brokers whose names she could not recall and a few store owners, there was no showing she had expertise in any valuation methods, and she had not been designated as expert witness under C.C.P. 1258.250; relying on *Padre Dam Mun. B. Value Shown Only by Opinion.

3. Opinions of Knowledgeable Designees.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Opinion Evid § 103

[§ 103] Opinions of Knowledgeable Designees.

In Pleasant Hill v. First Baptist Church (1969) 1 C.A.3d 384, 411, 413, 82 C.R. 1, the pastor of a church was held not to be "an owner" and therefore not qualified to testify to the value of church land.

This holding was nullified by a 1978 amendment to Ev.C. 813, adding the following: "An officer, regular employee, or partner designated by a corporation, partnership, or unincorporated association that is the owner of the property or property interest being valued, if the designee is knowledgeable as to the value of the property or property interest." (Ev.C. 813(a)(3).) The designee may be knowledgeable as a result of being instrumental in its acquisition or management or as a result of being knowledgeable as to its character and use. (Law Rev. Com. Comment to 1978 amendment to Ev.C. 813.)

CHAPTER V - Opinion Evidence

IV. OPINION ON VALUE OF PROPERTY

C. Bases of Opinion.

1. In General.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Opinion Evid § 104

[§ 104] In General.

Ev.C. 814 states a broad general principle concerning the matters upon which an opinion may be based, in terms similar to those in Ev.C. 801(b) (supra, §30), but adding language appropriate to eminent domain. (See 3 Com. Reports, p. A-6.)

The section was amended in 1975 to eliminate as unnecessary the listing of particular matters constituting fair market value (see C.C.P. 1263.320; 8 Summary (9th), Constitutional Law, §1016). As further amended in 1980 to make technical changes in wording, the section reads as follows:

"The opinion of a witness as to the value of property is limited to such an opinion as is based on matter perceived by or personally known to the witness or made known to the witness at or before the hearing, whether or not admissible, that is of a type that reasonably may be relied upon by an expert in forming an opinion as to the value of property, including but not limited to the matters listed in Sections 815 to 821, inclusive, unless a witness is precluded by law from using such matter as a basis for an opinion." (See 18 Hastings L. J. 152.)

The Legislative Committee offered this comment on amended Ev.C. 814: "While the value of property may be determined by reference to matters listed in Sections 815 to 821 where appropriate, an opinion as to value may also be based on any other matter that satisfies the general requirements of Section 814. See, e.g., City of Los Angeles v. Retlaw Enterprises, Inc. 16 Cal.3d 473, 486 n. 8, 546 P.2d 1380, 1388 n.8, 128 Cal. Rptr. 436, 444 n.8 (1976) (price trend data admissible); People ex rel. Dep't of Transp. v. Southern Pac. Transp. Co., 84 Cal. App.3d 315, 325, 148 Cal. Rptr. 535, 541 (1978) (replacement cost of land as opposed to improvements admissible); South Bay Irr. Dist. v. California-American Water Co., 61 Cal. App.3d 944, 980, 133 Cal. Rptr. 166, 191 (1976) (capitalization based on nonrental income admissible); Redevelopment Agency v. Del-Camp Invs., Inc., 38 Cal. App.3d 836, 842, 113 Cal. Rptr. 762, 766-67 (1974) (capitalization based on gross rentals admissible); People ex rel. Dep't of Pub. Works v. Home Trust Inv. Co., 8 Cal. App.3d 1022, 1026, 87 Cal. Rptr. 722, 724 (1970) (noncomparable sales admissible in appropriate circumstances)."

The trial judge is vested with considerable discretion in determining whether to admit or exclude valuation evidence, and where the witness' opinion has both proper and improper bases, the judge may strike it or permit it to remain and consider the impropriety in determining what weight to give it. (County Sanitation Dist. No. 8 v. Watson Land Co. (1993) 17 C.A.4th 1268, 1282, 22 C.R.2d 117.)

IV. OPINION ON VALUE OF PROPERTY

C. Bases of Opinion.

2. Sales.

a. Other Sales of Property Being Condemned.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Opinion Evid § 105

[§ 105] Other Sales of Property Being Condemned.

"When relevant to the determination of the value of property, a witness may take into account as a basis for an opinion the price and other terms and circumstances of any sale or contract to sell and purchase which included the property or property interest being valued or any part thereof if the sale or contract was freely made in good faith within a reasonable time before or after the date of valuation, except that in an eminent domain proceeding where the sale or contract to sell and purchase includes only the property or property interest being taken or a part thereof, such sale or contract to sell and purchase may not be taken into account if it occurs after the filing of the lis pendens." (Ev.C. 815; see Garden Grove School Dist. of Orange v. Hendler (1965) 63 C.2d 141, 145, 45 C.R. 313, 403 P.2d 721; San Diego Gas & Elec. Co. v. 3250 Corp. (1988) 205 C.A.3d 1075, 1084, 252 C.R. 853 [sale of fee interest in 4,000-acre parcel after lis pendens was filed did not include only the property interest taken, which was merely a nonexclusive easement; thus, Ev.C. 815 did not exclude evidence of sale]; 18 Hastings L. J. 146; 55 A.L.R.2d 791 [admissibility, in eminent domain proceeding, of evidence of price paid for subject property in sale occurring prior to proceeding].)

In commenting on the applicability of Ev.C. 815 to cases of project enhancement (see infra, §109), the court said in Los Angeles v. Retlaw Enterprises (1976) 16 C.3d 473, 128 C.R. 436, 546 P.2d 1380: "[A] project enhanced sale of property other than the subject property is not inadmissible per se; its admissibility is committed to the discretion of the trial court. No different rule is required merely because the proffered project enhanced sale is a sale of the subject property itself. The test for the admissibility of sales of the subject property under section 815 is substantially identical to that for the admissibility of comparable properties under section 816; sales are admissible when they illuminate the value of the subject property at the date of valuation." ##### b. Other Sales of Comparable Property.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Opinion Evid § 106

[§ 106] Other Sales of Comparable Property.

(1) Statutory Rule and Test of Comparability. A witness may take into account the price and other terms and circumstances of a normal sale or contract to sell "comparable property." (Ev.C. 816; see Los Angeles v. Faus (1957) 48 C.2d 672, 676, 312 P.2d 680 [abrogating former California rule of exclusion]; 9 Hastings L. J. 101; 5 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 151; 31 So. Cal. L. Rev. 204; 85 A.L.R.2d 110 [admissibility of evidence of sale price of other real property].)

The section spells out the requisites: "In order to be considered comparable, the sale or contract must have been made sufficiently near in time to the date of valuation, and the property sold must be located sufficiently near the property being valued, and must be sufficiently alike in respect to character, size, situation, usability, and improvements, to make it clear that the property sold and the property being valued are comparable in value and that the price realized for the property sold may fairly be considered as shedding light on the value of the property being valued." (See Los Angeles v. Faus, supra, 48 C.2d 678, quoting McCormick to this effect; Covina Union High School Dist. of Los Angeles v. Jobe (1959) 174 C.A.2d 340, 350, 345 P.2d 78 [parcels may be similar though different in size]; People v. Silveira (1965) 236 C.A.2d 604, 623, 46 C.R. 260 [same]; Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. Zuckerman (1987) 189 C.A.3d 1113, 1130, 234 C.R. 630 ["Property cannot be considered comparable where it includes various fixtures, rights, improvements, and personal property which the property being condemned does not include"]; 1 C.E.B., Condemnation Practice 2d, §4.28; 85 A.L.R.2d 130 [criteria of similarity]; 89 A.L.R.4th 456, 493 [testimony of property valuation expert, as to basis for opinion, on matters otherwise excludable as hearsay].)

(2) Judge's Discretion in Determining Comparability. The trial judge's obligation in considering admissibility of evidence on an allegedly noncomparable sale "is to determine whether the sale price of one property could shed light upon the value of the condemned property, notwithstanding the differences that might exist between them. If it resolves that question affirmatively, it can admit the evidence. The jury then, on the basis of all the evidence, determines the extent to which any differences between the condemned property and the comparable property affect their relative values." (Los Angeles v. Retlaw Enterprises (1976) 16 C.3d 473, 482, 128 C.R. 436, 546 P.2d 1380.) (See also San Luis Obispo v. Bailey (1971) 4 C.3d 518, 526, 93 C.R. 859, 483 P.2d 27 [comparable sales 30 to 50 miles away from condemned land; admitted]; People v. Wasserman (1966) 240 C.A.2d 716, 738, 50 C.R. 95; Community Redevelopment Agency of Los Angeles v. Henderson (1967) 251 C.A.2d 336, 342, 59 C.R. 311 [properties much larger, in different areas with different zoning and uses; rejected]; Los Angeles v. Union Distr. Co. (1968) 260 C.A.2d 125, 130, 67 C.R. 107 [property across the street, improved, rented and used, excluded; condemned property was unimproved and vacant for over 40 years]; Pleasant Hill v. First Baptist Church (1969) 1 C.A.3d 384, 415, 82 C.R. 1 [properties less than one mile apart but in different cities; admitted]; Golden Gate Bridge & Highway Trans. Dist. v. Muzzi (1978) 83 C.A.3d 707, 717, 148 C.R. 197 [evidence of sale of similar bayfront property was properly admitted, even though sale was by estate and involved no bidding].)

(3) Distinction: Exchange of Property. A transaction involving only an exchange of properties, with no monetary value fixed for either property, is not admissible as a comparable sale. (People v. Reardon (1971) 4 C.3d 507, 515, 93 C.R. 852, 483 P.2d 20 [harmless error in trial judge's refusal to permit cross-examination to indicate that "trade" was actually "sale"].)

[§ 107] Contract To Sell.

The fact that a sale has not yet been consummated by transfer of the title has no bearing on the circumstances of negotiation which make the sale price useful evidence of value. On the other hand, there is a danger that a landowner anticipating condemnation may hastily conclude a collusive agreement of sale for an artificially high price. The correct approach should be to admit the evidence, subject to challenge by a showing of bad faith. (See 3 Com. Reports, p. A-47.) Ev.C. 815 and 816 establish this rule by allowing consideration of any sale "or contract to sell and purchase," with the usual good faith qualification.

[§ 108] Subsequent Sales.

There is some danger in considering a sale occurring after the condemnation proceeding has begun, for the proceeding may itself affect property values in the area. However, the evidence is too useful to be arbitrarily excluded. Subsequent sales may indicate a trend in the market, and they are particularly important when prior sales are few or more remote from the date of taking. (See 3 Com. Reports, p. A-37; and see also Los Angeles v. Hoe (1955) 138 C.A.2d 74, 79, 291 P.2d 98 [brief statement indicating admissibility].) Ev.C. 815 and 816, supra, §§105, 106, authorize such proof by referring to sales made within a reasonable time "before or after the date of valuation." ## CHAPTER V - Opinion Evidence

IV. OPINION ON VALUE OF PROPERTY

C. Bases of Opinion.

2. Sales.

e. Trend in Sales Prices or Values.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Opinion Evid § 109

[§ 109] Trend in Sales Prices or Values.

The trial judge has discretion to admit evidence of the price trend of neighboring properties, whether comparable or noncomparable, if the evidence can shed light on the value of the condemned property. "To deny such discretionary power would be to sanctify a wooden conception of comparability that would unjustifiably shackle the fact-finding process." (Los Angeles v. Retlaw Enterprises (1976) 16 C.3d 473, 485, 128 C.R. 436, 546 P.2d 1380.) But price-trend data based on dissimilar property is not necessarily relevant. "Consequently, the mere fact that a witness testifies that he thinks evidence of price trends for dissimilar property will serve to illuminate the valuation of the subject property will not insure the admissibility of such evidence. The trial court must consider the objection of the opposing party and admit the evidence only if it concludes that it has probative value." (16 C.3d 487.) (See 65 Cal. L. Rev. 512.)

Enhancement due to speculation based on anticipation of imminent taking of the designated parcel is an improper element, but enhancement due to increase in land values of other property near the project is a proper element. Hence, evidence of other sales of such property is admissible. (Merced Irr. Dist. v. Woolstenhulme (1971) 4 C.3d 478, 499, 501, 93 C.R. 833, 483 P.2d 1.)

IV. OPINION ON VALUE OF PROPERTY

C. Bases of Opinion.

3. Leases.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Opinion Evid § 110

[§ 110] Leases.

(1) Lease of Property Being Condemned. Ev.C. 817 provides that a witness may consider the rent and other circumstances of a lease of the property being condemned, as follows:

(a) Ordinary lease. "[W]hen relevant to the determination of the value of property, a witness may take into account as a basis for an opinion the rent reserved and other terms and circumstances of any lease which included the property or property interest being valued or any part thereof which was in effect within a reasonable time before or after the date of valuation." (Ev.C. 817(a).)

An exception is made to exclude untrustworthy leases (made with knowledge of the pendency of the action), similar to that made for evidence of other sales of the property being condemned (Ev.C. 815, supra, §105): "[I]n an eminent domain proceeding where the lease includes only the property or property interest being taken or a part thereof, such lease may not be taken into account in the determination of the value of property if it is entered into after the filing of the lis pendens." (Ev.C. 817(a).)

(b) Percentage lease. Ev.C. 817(b) applies to a percentage lease providing for a rental fixed by a portion of the gross income from a business conducted on the leased property. But the witness may consider such a lease only for the purpose of arriving at an opinion as to "the reasonable net rental value attributable to the property or property interest being valued as provided in Section 819 or determining the value of a leasehold interest." (See 1 C.E.B., Condemnation Practice 2d, §458; on Ev.C. 819, see infra, §111.)

(2) Lease of Comparable Property. The witness may take into account the rent reserved and other terms and circumstances of "any lease of comparable property," provided that it was "freely made in good faith within a reasonable time before or after the date of valuation." But this may be considered only to determine the capitalized value of the reasonable net rental value or the value of a leasehold interest. (Ev.C. 818.) (See Ontario v. Kelber (1972) 24 C.A.3d 959, 969, 101 C.R. 428 [leases on airport property smaller in size than condemned property and up to 75 miles distant; admitted].)

CHAPTER V - Opinion Evidence

IV. OPINION ON VALUE OF PROPERTY

C. Bases of Opinion.

4. Other Matters.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Opinion Evid § 111

[§ 111] Other Matters.

The Evidence Code specifies three additional matters that may be considered by the witness in reaching an opinion on value:

(1) Capitalization of Income. "[T]he capitalized value of the reasonable net rental value attributable to the land and existing improvements thereon (as distinguished from the capitalized value of the income or profits attributable to the business conducted thereon)." (Ev.C. 819; see 3 Com. Reports, p. A-55; California v. Covich (1968) 260 C.A.2d 663, 666, 67 C.R. 280 [discussing techniques of the "income approach"--"building residual" or "gross multiplier" and "property reversion" or "property residual"]; San Diego Metropolitan Transit Dev. Bd. v. Cushman (1997) 53 C.A.4th 918, 930, 62 C.R.2d 121 [where sole issue was amount of severance damages stemming from reduced ability to expand existing retail building, landowner's income approach, which was based on square-foot value of nonexistent improvements, was improper methodology; Ev.C. 819 does not sanction capitalization of reasonable rental value attributable to planned or future improvements not in existence as of date of value]; 18 Hastings L. J. 151.)

(2) Reproduction Cost. "[T]he value of the property or property interest being valued as indicated by the value of the land together with the cost of replacing or reproducing the existing improvements thereon, if the improvements enhance the value of the property or property interest for its highest and best use, less whatever depreciation or obsolescence the improvements have suffered." (Ev.C. 820; see 3 Com. Reports, p. A-61; 18 Hastings L. J. 150.)

(3) Conditions in Vicinity. "[T]he nature of the improvements on properties in the general vicinity of the property or property interest being valued and the character of the existing uses being made of such properties." (Ev.C. 821, based on former C.C.P. 1845.5.)

The "appraisal trinity," approved by many authorities, was described in California v. Covich, supra, 260 C.A.3d 665, as follows: "This combines three methods of 'approaches' by appraisers to reach the market value of real estate: (1) the current cost of reproducing the property less depreciation from all sources; (2) the 'market data' approach or value indicated by recent sales of comparable properties in the market, and (3) the 'income approach,' or the value which the property's net earning power will support based upon the capitalization of net income. This three-approach means of reaching market value is usually combined." (See also California v. Stevenson (1970) 5 C.A.3d 60, 63, 84 C.R. 742 [Ev.C. 815 et seq. substantially codified "trinity" method].)

CHAPTER V - Opinion Evidence

IV. OPINION ON VALUE OF PROPERTY

D. Improper Bases.

1. In General.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Opinion Evid § 112

[§ 112] In General.

Ev.C. 822(a), expressly applicable to eminent domain and inverse condemnation proceedings, lists a number of improper matters (see infra, §113 et seq.). Ev.C. 822(b), added in 1980, states that in other proceedings, these matters are likewise inadmissible and not a basis for an opinion, "except to the extent permitted under the rules of law otherwise applicable." The Legislative Committee Comment on the 1980 amendment explains the purpose of this subdivision: The express exclusion of these matters in eminent domain and inverse condemnation cases does not imply that they are admissible in other cases; in other cases admissibility is governed by Ev.C. 814 (supra, §104) and the general rules of relevancy, prejudice, etc.

CHAPTER V - Opinion Evidence

IV. OPINION ON VALUE OF PROPERTY

D. Improper Bases.

2. Forced Sale or Sale to Possible Condemnor.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Opinion Evid § 113

[§ 113] Forced Sale or Sale to Possible Condemnor.

(1) Forced Sales in General. The theory on which another sale is admitted necessarily assumes that the circumstances permitted the negotiation of a price based on the fair market value of the property. If the sale was made under compulsion, e.g., by foreclosure or execution, the price is not freely determined. Accordingly, such forced sales are not a proper basis for an opinion on value. (Ev.C. 815, 816, supra, §105 ["If the sale or contract was freely made in good faith"]; 3 Com. Reports, p. A-40; but see Redevelopment Agency of Santa Monica v. Zwerman (1966) 240 C.A.2d 70, 75, 49 C.R. 443 [probate sale is not a forced sale]; San Diego Gas & Elec. Co. v. 3250 Corp. (1988) 205 C.A.3d 1075, 1083, 252 C.R. 853 [following reasoning of Zwerman case; bankruptcy sale of subject property to condemnees was not a forced sale].)

An ordinary private sale, however, cannot be excluded on the theory that necessity "forced" the seller to agree to a lower price than would have been acceptable in the absence of financial difficulties. In Garden Grove School Dist. of Orange v. Hendler (1965) 63 C.2d 141, 45 C.R. 313, 403 P.2d 721, the trial judge allowed plaintiff to show a prior sale of the same property to defendants, and also allowed defendants to show that their vendor was in financial distress, thus leaving for the jury the determination of the weight to be given to the sale price. Held, this was proper. (63 C.2d 145.) (See also 3 Com. Reports, p. A-41.)

(2) Sale to Possible Condemnor. California formerly took the position that a sale to a possible condemnor might be either a forced sale or sufficiently voluntary to constitute a reasonable indication of market value; hence, it could be admitted with a cautionary instruction. (See People v. Murata (1958) 161 C.A.2d 369, 374, 326 P.2d 947; Covina Union High School Dist. of Los Angeles v. Jobe (1959) 174 C.A.2d 340, 345, 347, 345 P.2d 78.) Many courts were opposed, and the Law Revision Commission sided with the opposition: "Such a sale does not involve a willing buyer and a willing seller. The costs, risks and delays of litigation are factors that often affect the ultimate price. Moreover, sales to condemnors often involve partial takings. In such cases valid comparisons are made more difficult because of the difficulty in allocating the compensation between the value of the part taken and the severance damage or benefit to the remainder. These sales, therefore, are not sales in the 'open market' and should not be considered in a determination of market value." (3 Com. Reports, p. A-7; see also p. A-37.)

Accordingly, Ev.C. 822(a)(1) prohibits consideration of "[t]he price or other terms and circumstances of an acquisition of property or a property interest if the acquisition was for a public use for which the property could have been taken by eminent domain." (See 18 Hastings L. J. 155.) A 1987 amendment, however, states an exception for "the price or other terms and circumstances of an acquisition of property appropriated to a public use or a property interest so appropriated ... if the acquisition was for the same public use for which the property could have been taken by eminent domain." In San Francisco v. Golden Gate Heights Inv. (1993) 14 C.A.4th 1203, 1210, 18 C.R.2d 467, an eminent domain proceeding involving a city's condemnation of defendant's property for open space purposes, the court approved the use of this exception to allow consideration of the city's purchase, for the same purpose, of privately owned parcels adjacent to the subject property. (But see 1 C.E.B., Condemnation Practice 2d, §§4.29, 9.54 [criticizing the approach of the Golden Gate Heights court and arguing that the exception was intended to apply only where the sale property was already devoted to a public use]; see also Ventura County Flood Control Dist. v. Campbell (1999) 71 C.A.4th 211, 221, 222, 83 C.R.2d 725 [in condemnation proceedings by flood control district to acquire ranch, which included underground aggregate, Ev.C. 822(a)(1) did not, as means of determining aggregate's value, preclude consideration of open bids to remove it; bids likely reflected aggregate's value on open market rather than any enhanced value resulting from need for removal resulting from district's flood control plans].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Sale to Possible Condemnor. As amended in 2000, Ev.C. 822(a)(1) excludes the price or other terms and circumstances of an acquisition of property or a property interest if the acquisition was for a public use for which the property could have been taken by eminent domain. However, evidence of this type is not inadmissible in a proceeding involving the valuation of all or part of a water system as defined in Pub.Util.C. 240.

According to the Law Revision Commission, the special exception relating to property appropriated to public use (text, p. 659) was deleted "in reliance on general evidentiary principles. See, e.g., Section 823 ('Notwithstanding any other provision of this article, the value of property for which there is no relevant, comparable market may be determined by any method of valuation that is just and equitable.');" see also Code Civ. Proc. §1263.320(b) (fair market value). Thus, evidence of an acquisition that is otherwise inadmissible under subdivision (a)(1) may, in an appropriate case, be admissible under Section 823 if a private market is lacking, e.g., the acquisition involves a special purpose property such as a school, church, cemetery, park, utility corridor, or similar property."

"The new exception added to subdivision (a)(1) is intended to apply in an eminent domain or inverse condemnation proceeding that relates to a public agency's acquisition or taking of all or any part of a water system owned by a water company." (Law Rev. Com. Comment on 2000 amendment of Ev.C. 822.)

See Emeryville Redevelopment Agency v. Harcros Pigments (2002) 101 C.A.4th 1083, 1096, 125 C.R.2d 12 [in eminent domain proceeding by redevelopment agency, trial judge erred in allowing landowner to use agency's purchases of nearby properties as evidence of comparable sales; properties were purchased for public use within meaning of Ev.C. 822(a)(1), and they did not come within former exception for property appropriated to public use (text, p. 659)].

CHAPTER V - Opinion Evidence

IV. OPINION ON VALUE OF PROPERTY

D. Improper Bases.

3. Offer, Option, or Listing.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Opinion Evid § 114

[§ 114] Offer, Option, or Listing.

Offers to buy or sell the same or comparable property are as relevant as actual sales, and their admissibility under appropriate conditions has been recognized. (See Los Angeles City High School Dist. v. Kita (1959) 169 C.A.2d 655, 661, 663, 338 P.2d 60; 1 C.E.B., Condemnation Practice 2d, §4.29; 25 A.L.R.4th 571 [unaccepted offer for purchase of real property]; 25 A.L.R.4th 615 [unaccepted offer to sell or buy comparable real property]; 25 A.L.R.4th 983 [unaccepted offer to sell, or listing of, real property].)

But the Law Revision Commission, following the majority view, thought the dangers of this type of evidence outweighed its usefulness. (See 3 Com. Reports, p. A-41.) The Report (p. A-7) points out that oral offers, not enforceable because of the statute of frauds, are loosely made without risk, and are easy to fabricate; and that written offers, though better evidence, open up too wide a range of collateral inquiry as to the motives of the absent offeror or his or her ability to buy. The recommendation, that offers be entirely excluded as bases for an opinion on market value, and be allowed only as admissions, was carried out in Ev.C. 822(a)(2), making inadmissible the price at which "an offer or option to purchase or lease the property or property interest being valued or any other property was made, or the price at which such property or interest was optioned, offered, or listed for sale or lease, except that an option, offer, or listing may be introduced by a party as an admission of another party to the proceeding." The section further precludes use of an admission "as direct evidence upon any matter that may be shown only by opinion evidence under Section 813." (See 18 Hastings L. J. 156.)

Where the limited admission provision of Ev.C. 822 conflicts with Ev.C. 1152, making offers of compromise inadmissible (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §142), the latter prevails. (See People v. Southern Pac. Trans. Co. (1973) 33 C.A.3d 960, 968, 109 C.R. 525 [condemnor's offer made during settlement negotiations, although admissible under Ev.C. 822(a)(2) as admission that condemnor had opinion as to value, held violative of strong public policy of encouraging settlements expressed in Ev.C. 1152].)

Assessments of property are seldom based on fair market value, and evidence of them is generally excluded. (See 3 Com. Reports, p. A-48.) The California rule allowing assessment valuations to be brought out on cross-examination (see Central Pac. Ry. Co. v. Feldman (1907) 152 C. 303, 310, 92 P. 849) was strongly criticized by the Law Revision Commission (see 3 Com. Reports, p. A-49), and Ev.C. 822(a)(3) states a positive rule of exclusion of "[t]he value of any property or property interest as assessed for taxation purposes or the amount of taxes which may be due on the property."

However, the following proviso is added: "[N]othing in this subdivision prohibits the consideration of actual or estimated taxes for the purpose of determining the reasonable net rental value attributable to the property or property interest being valued."

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Opinion Evid § 117

[§ 117] Other Improper Matters.

Ev.C. 822 lists the following additional matters that are inadmissible and not to be taken into account as the basis for an opinion:

(1) Noncompensable Items. "The influence upon the value of the property or property interest being valued of any noncompensable items of value, damage, or injury." (Ev.C. 822(a)(5); see People v. Curtis (1967) 255 C.A.2d 378, 393, 63 C.R. 138 [concurring opinion]; Sacramento & San Joaquin Drainage Dist. v. Goehring (1970) 13 C.A.3d 58, 65, 91 C.R. 375 [landowner improperly allowed to testify about unenforceable "right" to cross over creek].)

(2) Capitalized Income of Other Property. "The capitalized value of the income or rental from any property or property interest other than that being valued." (Ev.C. 822(a)(6).) (See People v. Andresen (1987) 193 C.A.3d 1144, 1165, 238 C.R. 826, 8 Summary (9th), Constitutional Law, §1020 [capitalization of basalt royalties was not excludable under Ev.C. 822(a)(6) where it related to subject property and not other property]; 23 A.L.R.3d 731 [admissibility, in eminent domain proceeding, of rental value of other real property].)

(2) Capitalized Income of Other Property. Cf. Hurwitz v. Orange (2004) 122 C.A.4th 835, 855, 856, 19 C.R.3d 213 [in eminent domain proceeding, trial judge did not err in allowing property owner's valuation expert to testify to 8% capitalization rate based on expert's own general experience; as long as expert does not rely on particular and identifiable acquisition, Ev.C. 822(a)(6) is not violated].

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

I. IN GENERAL

A. Reasons for Exclusion.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 1

[§ 1] Reasons for Exclusion.

(1) Hearsay Defined. Hearsay evidence is evidence of a statement made out of court and offered to prove the truth of the matter stated. Unless it comes within one of the established exceptions to the hearsay rule, evidence of this type is inadmissible. (Ev.C. 1200, infra, §4; see Unif. Rule 801(c) (13B (Part 1B) U.L.A. (Master Ed.), p. 97); for the history of the rule and its various explanations, see Model Code of Evidence, Int. Note, p. 217; 2 McCormick 5th, §246; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1361; 2 Wharton, Crim. Evidence (14th ed.), §257 et seq.; 40 Harv. L. Rev. 712; 48 Harv. L. Rev. 1138; 62 Harv. L. Rev. 177; 9 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 1; 29 Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §658 et seq.)

(2) Traditional Rationale for Exclusion. The chief reasons for excluding hearsay evidence are said to be: (a) The statements are not made under oath; (b) the adverse party has no opportunity to cross-examine the person who made them; and (c) the jury cannot observe the person's demeanor as he or she makes them. (See Englebreton v. Industrial Acc. Com. (1915) 170 C. 793, 798, 151 P. 421; People v. Nagy (1926) 199 C. 235, 237, 248 P. 906; People v. Bob (1946) 29 C.2d 321, 325, 175 P.2d 12; Korsak v. Atlas Hotels (1992) 2 C.A.4th 1516, 1523, 3 C.R.2d 833, quoting the text; 2 McCormick 5th, §245.) Protection of the constitutional right of confrontation is an additional justification for the exclusion of hearsay. (See People v. Valdez (1947) 82 C.A.2d 744, 749, 187 P.2d 74; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§1365, 1395 et seq.; 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §21.)

(3) Criticism of Traditional Rationale. Courts sometimes add the disparaging observation that hearsay is in its very nature and by common experience a weak and unreliable kind of evidence. This view, which would tend to apply the rule strictly and confine its exceptions within narrow limits, has been strongly criticized by modern writers, who give these answers: (a) The rule was developed for jury trials and is in part based on a questionable distrust of the jury, while today, the majority of cases are tried before judges and administrative tribunals. (b) The numerous and continually expanding exceptions to the rule demonstrate the belief of courts and Legislatures that hearsay evidence is valuable in many situations. (c) The statutory abrogation of the hearsay rule in many kinds of administrative proceedings is a similar demonstration of the need for and usefulness of hearsay evidence. (d) The rule that hearsay admitted without objection is evidence sufficient to sustain a verdict or finding is a further demonstration of the judicial recognition of its value. (See People v. Dalton (1959) 172 C.A.2d 15, 18, 341 P.2d 793, infra, §35; 2 McCormick 5th, §§245, 325; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§1363, 1427; 2 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 43, 45; 1967 A.S. 117 [trend toward liberal application of hearsay rule].)

(4) Modern View. The emphasis today, both as a justification for the rule and as a test for its application, is on the absence of opportunity for cross-examination of the declarant, to expose dishonesty and faulty perception or memory. "The basic theory is that the many possible deficiencies, suppressions, sources of error and untrustworthiness, which lie underneath the bare untested assertion of a witness, may be best brought to light and exposed by the test of cross-examination." (Buchanan v. Nye (1954) 128 C.A.2d 582, 585, 275 P.2d 767.) "The essence of the hearsay rule is that the witness is not in court and subject to cross-examination and is not available for the jury to judge his credibility." (People v. Bob, supra [hearsay objection held sufficiently stated, though word "hearsay" not used, where counsel argued that the declarant should be produced and placed on the stand]; see 2 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 43 [discussing views of noted experts]; 62 Harv. L. Rev. 183 [modern basis for rule]; 87 Harv. L. Rev. 957 [rule's structure and underlying values]; 75 Cal. L. ## CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

I. IN GENERAL B. Evidence Code.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 2

[§ 2] Evidence Code.

(1) Prior California Law. Former California statutes contained no definition of hearsay or statement of the rule, and the exceptions were unclear, poorly organized and incomplete. (See Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1200; People v. Spriggs (1964) 60 C.2d 868, 872, 36 C.R. 841, 389 P.2d 377.)

(2) Division 10. A comprehensive Evidence Code was adopted in 1965, operative January 1, 1967. Division 10 (Ev.C. 1200 et seq.), entitled "Hearsay Evidence," is a combination of the former Uniform Rules, prior California law, and some provisions found in neither source. Adequate definitions are given, and the rule and its exceptions are stated with far greater clarity and precision than in former California statutes and decisions. Most of the clarification and expansion came from the Uniform Rules, as will be indicated in the discussion of particular provisions, but some of that source's innovations were rejected.

(3) Provisions Not Exclusive. Although the Evidence Code contains a comprehensive statement of all generally recognized exceptions, it does not exclude other statutory or case law exceptions:

(a) "Nothing in this division shall be construed to repeal by implication any other statute relating to hearsay evidence." (Ev.C. 1205.) This assures the continued validity of a number of narrowly drawn special exceptions in other codes. (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1205; see, e.g., Dahl v. Dahl (1965) 237 C.A.2d 407, 413, 46 C.R. 881 [report of juvenile probation officer].)

(b) "Except as provided by law," hearsay evidence is inadmissible. (Ev.C. 1200.) Thus, the Legislature may create additional hearsay exceptions, and, because "law" includes "decisional law" (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §17), the courts may do likewise. (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1200; see People v. Spriggs (1964) 60 C.2d 868, 872, 36 C.R. 841, 389 P.2d 377 [recognizing power prior to its affirmation in Evidence Code]; In re Cindy L. (1997) 17 C.4th 15, 22, 31, 69 C.R.2d 803, 947 P.2d 1340, infra, §172 [noting 1996 amendments of Welf.C. 355 providing for admission, in juvenile court jurisdictional hearing, of social study and hearsay evidence contained in it, and approving court-created "child dependency hearsay exception"]; 23 Santa Clara L. Rev. 157 [California's Dormant Hearsay Exception; urging judicial creation of new exceptions for trustworthy and necessary hearsay evidence].)

(4) Definitions. "Hearsay evidence" is defined in Division 10 (Ev.C. 1200, infra, §4). In Division 2, the Code also defines several terms that occur frequently in hearsay problems:

(1) " 'Conduct' includes all active and passive behavior, both verbal and nonverbal." (Ev.C. 125.)

(2) "'Declarant' is a person who makes a statement." (Ev.C. 135.) Thus, a witness on the stand testifies to the content of the statement of a declarant. (Law Rev. Com. Comments on Ev.C. 135, 1200.)

(3) "'Statement' means (a) oral or written verbal expression or (b) nonverbal conduct of a person intended by him as a substitute for oral or written verbal expression." (Ev.C. 225.) This definition is the basis for the distinction between assertive conduct (inadmissible; infra, §7) and nonassertive conduct (admissible; infra, §46). (See Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1200.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(3) Provisions Not Exclusive.

(b) "Except as provided by law": See People v. Demetrulias (2006) 39 C.4th 1, 27, 45 C.R.3d 407, 137 P.3d 229 [even if exception for "critical reliable evidence" in capital cases should be recognized by courts, defendant's capital murder case did not provide suitable occasion, as evidence that victim paid rent shortly before he was murdered (thus making it unlikely defendant stole from him) was neither critical nor entirely reliable].

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

C. Federal and Uniform Rules.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 3

[§ 3] Federal and Uniform Rules.

The Federal Rules of Evidence cover hearsay in the following six parts (see generally 4 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, Chap. 8; 29 Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §658 et seq.):

Rule 801 (Definitions). (See 4 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §368 et seq.; 29 Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §661 et seq.)

Rule 802 (Hearsay Rule). (See 4 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §431 et seq.; 29 Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §659 et seq.)

Rule 803 (Hearsay Exceptions: Availability of Declarant Immaterial). (See 4 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §433 et seq.; 29 Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §679 et seq.)

Rule 804 (Hearsay Exceptions: Declarant Unavailable). (See 4 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §479 et seq.; 29 Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §690 et seq.)

Rule 805 (Hearsay Within Hearsay). (See 4 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §§508, 509; 29 Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §704.)

Rule 806 (Attacking and Supporting Credibility of Declarant). (See 4 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §§510, 511; 29 Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §705.)

Each Rule is quoted at appropriate places in this work.

Rule 807 (a consolidation of former Rules 803(24) and 804(b)(5)) creates a residual or catch-all hearsay exception: "A statement not specifically covered by Rule 803 or 804 but having equivalent circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness, is not excluded by the hearsay rule, if the court determines that (A) the statement is offered as evidence of a material fact; (B) the statement is more probative on the point for which it is offered than any other evidence which the proponent can procure through reasonable efforts; and (C) the general purposes of these rules and the interests of justice will best be served by admission of the statement into evidence. However, a statement may not be admitted under this exception unless the proponent of it makes known to the adverse party sufficiently in advance of the trial or hearing to provide the adverse party with a fair opportunity to prepare to meet it, the proponent's intention to offer the statement and the particulars of it, including the name and address of the declarant." (See 4 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §512; 15 San Diego L. Rev. 239 [scope of federal residual hearsay exceptions]; 51 A.L.R.4th 999 [former Rule 803(24)]; 75 A.L.R.4th 199 [former Rule 804(b)(5)]; 155 A.L.R. Fed 409 [notice requirement under Rule 807, where availability of declarant is immaterial].)

The approach of the 1974 revision of the Uniform Rules is identical to that taken by the Federal Rules of Evidence. (See Prefatory Note to Original 1974 Rules of Evidence, 13A (Part 1A) U.L.A. (Master Ed.), p. 5.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

D. Nature and Scope of Rule.

1. Statement of Rule.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 4

[§ 4] Statement of Rule.

The hearsay rule, set forth in Ev.C. 1200, is in two parts: First, "hearsay evidence" is defined as "evidence of a statement that was made other than by a witness while testifying at the hearing and that is offered to prove the truth of the matter stated." (Ev.C. 1200(a).) Second, an exclusionary rule is stated: "Except as provided by law, hearsay evidence is inadmissible." (Ev.C. 1200(b).)

The Federal Rules of Evidence are similar: "'Hearsay' is a statement, other than one made by the declarant while testifying at the trial or hearing, offered in evidence to prove the truth of the matter asserted." (F.R. Evid., Rule 801(c); see 4 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §369; 29 Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §661.) "Hearsay is not admissible except as provided by these rules or by other rules prescribed by the Supreme Court pursuant to statutory authority or by Act of Congress." (F.R. Evid., Rule 802; see 4 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §431; 29 Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §659.)

These succinct provisions involve several important concepts:

(1) The rule excludes hearsay statements only when they are offered to prove the truth of the matter stated. (See infra, §5.)

(2) The rule excludes only statements made outside of court. The principal justification for exclusion of hearsay is that the statement is not made on the stand by a witness subject to cross-examination. (See supra, §1.) The definition makes it clear that hearsay consists of "extra-judicial" or out-of-court statements. California cases invoking the hearsay rule to exclude testimony of a witness whose supposed knowledge is based solely on hearsay are, under the Evidence Code, inaccurate in analysis, though sound in result. The correct objection is that the witness lacks personal knowledge, hence, is not qualified to testify on the matter. (See 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §47.) Similarly, where a witness testifies to an opinion that lacks a proper basis because it is founded on unreliable hearsay, the objection is a violation of the opinion rule. (See 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Opinion Evidence, §31.)

(3) The phrase "except as provided by law" refers to the numerous exceptions to the rule declared by statute or judicial decision. (See supra, §2; infra, §51 et seq.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Browne v. Turner Const. Co. (2005) 127 C.A.4th 1334, 1349, 26 C.R.3d 433 [in action by worker injured at construction site against property owner and general contractor, deposition testimony, relied on by plaintiff, to effect that defendants wanted safety devices at site removed was not subject to hearsay rule, as it purported neither to recount statement nor to prove what was stated].

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

D. Nature and Scope of Rule.

2. Must Be Offered To Prove Truth.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 5

[§ 5] Must Be Offered To Prove Truth.

The rule excludes hearsay statements only when they are offered for the same purpose as testimony of a witness on the stand and therefore depend for probative value on the credibility of the declarant. (See Unif. Rule 801 (13B (Part 1B) U.L.A. (Master Ed.), p. 97); Model C., Rule 501; People v. Radley (1945) 68 C.A.2d 607, 609, 157 P.2d 426 [quoting Wigmore]; Rogers v. Whitson (1964) 228 C.A.2d 662, 675, 39 C.R. 849, citing the text; Marshall v. Marshall (1965) 232 C.A.2d 232, 254, 42 C.R. 686, citing the text; Am-Cal Inv. Co. v. Sharlyn Estates (1967) 255 C.A.2d 526, 540, 63 C.R. 518, infra, §31; People v. Ireland (1969) 70 C.2d 522, 529, 75 C.R. 188, 450 P.2d 580, infra, §201, citing the text; People v. Sundlee (1977) 70 C.A.3d 477, 482, 138 C.R. 834, infra, §16; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1766; 2 McCormick 5th, §246; 1 Jefferson, California Evidence Benchbook 3d, §1.9 et seq.; 2 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 48; 1956 A.S. 526; 29 Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §661 et seq.)

The importance of this qualification is that out-of-court statements not offered to prove the truth of the matter stated are not regarded as hearsay. No special exception to the hearsay rule need be invoked for their admission; they are not within the hearsay rule at all. (See 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1766 [giving example of statement, "I am the Emperor of Africa," used not to prove assertion is true or false but to prove that declarant is insane]; People v. Radley, supra; People v. Dalton (1959) 172 C.A.2d 15, 20, 341 P.2d 793, infra, §35, quoting the text; *First Western Bank & Trust Co. v. ## CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

D. Nature and Scope of Rule.

3. Multiple Hearsay.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 6

[§ 6] Multiple Hearsay.

(1) Statutory Rule. May an admissible hearsay statement be used to prove another admissible hearsay statement? Former California statutes and case law gave no indication whether "double hearsay" or "hearsay upon hearsay" should be received. Ev.C. 1201 expressly authorizes its admission:

"A statement within the scope of an exception to the hearsay rule is not inadmissible on the ground that the evidence of such statement is hearsay evidence if such hearsay evidence consists of one or more statements each of which meets the requirements of an exception to the hearsay rule."

The Law Revision Commission Comment gives this illustration: A reporter's transcript of the testimony at a previous trial may be received under Ev.C. 1290 (infra, §257) to prove that a party made a statement amounting to an admission receivable under Ev.C. 1220 (infra, §90). "Thus, under Section 1201, the evidence of the admission contained in the transcript is admissible because each of the hearsay statements involved is within an exception to the hearsay rule." (See People v. Collup (1946) 27 C.2d 829, 834, 167 P.2d 714, which, as the Comment points out, tacitly approved this practice; People v. Lew (1968) 68 C.2d 774, 778, 69 C.R. 102, 441 P.2d 942; In re George G. (1977) 68 C.A.3d 146, 155, 137 C.R. 201; People v. Reed (1996) 13 C.4th 217, 224, 225, 52 C.R.2d 106, 914 P.2d 184 [certified transcript of preliminary hearing containing testimony by unavailable witnesses was properly admitted]; 2 McCormick 5th, §324.1; on use of multiple hearsay in preliminary examination, see Whitman v. Superior Court (1991) 54 C.3d 1063, 2 C.R.2d 160, 820 P.2d 262, 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Pretrial Proceedings, §143.)

(2) Prior Inconsistent Statements. In People v. Zapien (1993) 4 C.4th 929, 17 C.R.2d 122, 846 P.2d 704, a capital murder case, the trial judge admitted evidence embodying statements by defendant's niece that defendant had come to her house the day of the murder with bloody hands and clothing and had told her that he had committed the killing. At trial, the niece denied having told her sister about these events, the sister denied having told her friend, and the friend, who, after being told, went to the police, was unable to recall part of what she had earlier said the sister told her. The trial court admitted the evidence under the exception for prior inconsistent statements (Ev.C. 1235, infra, §156). Held, the evidence was properly admitted. "We are unaware of any published decision addressing the precise question whether multiple hearsay is admissible where each hearsay level constitutes a prior inconsistent statement. But none of the decisions addressing similar questions suggests that such evidence is inadmissible." (4 C.4th 952.)

(a) Defendant contended that the multiple hearsay should have been excluded because each declarant denied having made the alleged prior inconsistent statement. However, "[t]his concern, that an alleged prior inconsistent statement, which the declarant denied having made, may have been fabricated, applies equally to single hearsay and to multiple hearsay." (4 C.4th 953, 954.)

(b) Defendant asserted that if this type of hearsay is admissible, a single person may by his own testimony introduce statements inconsistent with statements of any number of prior declarants, each of whom denies ever making the statements. To forestall this occurrence, defendant urged the court to establish a "bright-line" rule that a prior inconsistent statement may be used only to contradict a single prior declarant. However, "[i]f such a rule is desirable, it must be established by the Legislature." (4 C.4th 954.)

(3) Federal Rule. F.R. Evid., Rule 805 is similar to Ev.C. 1201: "Hearsay included within hearsay is not excluded under the hearsay rule if each part of the combined statements conforms with an exception to the hearsay rule provided in these rules." (See 4 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §§508, 509; 29 Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §704.)

(1) Statutory Rule. See Correa v. Superior Court (2002) 27 C.4th 444, 448, 117 C.R.2d 27, 40 P.3d 739, Supp., infra, §125 [translation of witnesses' statements to investigating officers did not constitute extra layer of hearsay; rather, translation by unbiased and adequately skilled translator simply serves as "language conduit"]; People v. Thoma (2007) 150 C.A.4th 1096, 1103, 58 C.R.3d 855 [testimony by police officer at preliminary hearing on prior crime to effect that nurse had said that victim was in surgery for multiple fractures and blunt trauma constituted multiple hearsay when offered in later prosecution to establish nature of prior, and should not have been admitted; officer's statement fell within former testimony exception, but nurse's statement did not fit any exception]; 2 McCormick 6th, §324.1. West's Key Number Digest, Criminal Law k.419(13)

4. Assertive Conduct.

[§ 7] Assertive Conduct.

Acts such as nodding or shaking the head in answer to a question, pointing to an object or person for identification, or using sign language to convey a thought are equivalent to verbal statements, and are equally subject to the hearsay rule when an attempt is made to prove them by testimony of a witness.

This is made clear by the definition of "statement" to include "non-verbal conduct of a person intended by him as a substitute for oral or written verbal expression." (Ev.C. 225, supra, §2; see In re Cheryl H. (1984) 153 C.A.3d 1098, 1126, 200 C.R. 789, infra, §47; 2 McCormick 5th, §250; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1362; 14 Stanf. L. Rev. 682; 25 West L.A. L. Rev. 59, 117 [giving examples of assertive and nonassertive conduct]; on nonassertive conduct as outside hearsay rule, see infra, §46.)

F.R. Evid., Rule 801(a) is similar: "Statement" includes "nonverbal conduct of a person, if it is intended by the person as an assertion." (See 4 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §374; 29 Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §662.)

D. Nature and Scope of Rule.

5. Other Exclusionary Rules and Impeachment.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 8

[§ 8] Other Exclusionary Rules and Impeachment.

(1) Other Exclusionary Rules. The hearsay rule is a rule of exclusion (supra, §4), but its exceptions are not rules of admission. All of the sections of the Evidence Code specifying hearsay exceptions provide that the particular statement "is not made inadmissible by the hearsay rule." In other words, a statement within a hearsay exception satisfies the hearsay rule, but it may be objectionable under other exclusionary rules, such as the opinion rule, the Secondary Evidence Rule, or a claim of privilege. (See Law Rev. Com. Comments on Ev.C. 240, 1200; and Ev.C., Division 10; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1424.)

Thus, a hearsay statement within an exception may be challenged, in the same manner as testimony on the stand, by the opinion rule; and to the extent that it embodies inadmissible conclusions of the declarant, it may be excluded. (See People v. Lanagan (1889) 81 C. 142, 144, 22 P. 482; People v. Taylor (1881) 59 C. 640, 645; McClafflin v. Bayshore Equipment Rental Co. (1969) 274 C.A.2d 446, 455, 79 C.R. 337, infra, §14 [conclusionary recital rendered coroner's record inadmissible]; 14 So. Cal. L. Rev. 99, 107; infra, §193; for an argument to the contrary, see 1 McCormick 5th, §18.) Admissions, however, are not subject to the opinion rule. (See infra, §95.)

Special exclusionary rules also apply to confessions and admissions of the defendant in a criminal case. (See infra, §§52 et seq., 136 et seq.)

(2) Impeachment. A hearsay declarant may be called to the stand and examined as if under cross-examination by the adverse party (see 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §210), and, whether called or not, the declarant may be impeached on the same grounds as a witness (see 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §357).

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

I. IN GENERAL

D. Nature and Scope of Rule.

6. Analysis of Hearsay Problem.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 9

[§ 9] Analysis of Hearsay Problem.

Bearing in mind the rules and distinctions set forth in the preceding sections, there are five principal questions to ask in a practical approach to the admissibility and sufficiency of a relevant statement made out of court:

(1) Is it hearsay subject to the exclusionary rule; i.e., is it offered to prove the truth of the matter stated (hearsay) or offered for some other purpose (nonhearsay)? (See supra, §5; infra, §31 et seq.)

(2) If hearsay, is it within an exception; i.e., if it is offered to prove the truth of the matter stated and is therefore subject to the exclusionary rule, is it within one of the exceptions to the rule? (See infra, §51 et seq.)

(3) If it is within an exception to the hearsay rule, is it nevertheless subject to any other exclusionary rule? (See supra, §8.)

(4) If it is within an exception to the hearsay rule and not subject to any other exclusionary rule, may the declarant be impeached for incompetency, lack of knowledge, bias or interest, inconsistent statement, or on any other ground tending to weaken his credibility? (See 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §357.)

(5) If it is inadmissible hearsay, was it nevertheless admitted without proper objection, so as to become evidence in the case? (See 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §394; see 22 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 1039 [analytical approach to relevance and hearsay].)

D. Nature and Scope of Rule.

7. Illustrations of Inadmissible Hearsay.

a. Self-Serving Statements.

1. In General.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 10

[§ 10] In General.

(1) Informal Statements. Declarations in the interest of the declarant, such as statements made by a grantor after parting with title and in disparagement of it, are ordinarily inadmissible. (See Kershaw v. Madsen (1923) 62 C.A. 11, 15, 216 P. 55; Rulofson v. Billings (1903) 140 C. 452, 457, 74 P. 35; Barcroft v. Livacich (1939) 35 C.A.2d 710, 718, 96 P.2d 951; Carlston v. Shenson (1941) 47 C.A.2d 52, 56, 117 P.2d 408 [self-serving declaration of party in collateral transaction]; Wagner v. Worrell (1946) 76 C.A.2d 172, 181, 172 P.2d 751 [self-serving declarations of decedent in letter written before his death]; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §794.)

(2) Criminal Defendant's Statements. A confession or incriminating admission may be introduced by the prosecution only under the exceptions to the hearsay rule based on the reliability of such serious statements against interest. If the defendant seeks to offer his own prior statement on the theory that it contains some inculpatory facts, but with the real object of putting before the jury other self-serving matters in the statement, it will be excluded. Otherwise, the defendant would be giving the equivalent of his testimony to the jury without submitting to cross-examination. (People v. Williams (1957) 151 C.A.2d 173, 187, 311 P.2d 117; see People v. Swain (1962) 200 C.A.2d 344, 351, 19 C.R. 403, infra, §203; People v. Williamson (1977) 71 C.A.3d 206, 213, 139 C.R. 222.)

In People v. Clay (1984) 153 C.A.3d 433, 200 C.R. 269, defendant H, charged with the rape of Margaret T, did not testify at trial. His counsel sought to introduce evidence that, immediately after the crime, he had made a statement to codefendant V which the jury could have interpreted to implicate V rather than H as the rapist ("man, you sick, doing that old woman that way"). H contended that this statement should have been received as nonhearsay circumstantial evidence of innocence, because it showed that he was revolted by acts of rape and forcible oral copulation. Held, exclusion was proper. The possible probative value was outweighed by its prejudicial impact. It would have made relevant and admissible H's convictions for rape and sodomy of Paula H, committed 6 hours before the assault on Margaret T. (153 C.A.3d 456, 457.)

(3) Statements in Presence of Adverse Party. A statement made in the presence of the adverse party is not necessarily admissible. The only justification for receiving it is that the adverse party's conduct may be proved either (a) as circumstantial evidence--the hearsay rule inapplicable (infra, §36 et seq.), or (b) as an implied or adoptive admission (infra, §102 et seq.). (See People v. White (1941) 44 C.A.2d 183, 186, 112 P.2d 60; People v. Bob (1946) 29 C.2d 321, 325, 175 P.2d 12; 1957 A.S. 544.)

(4) Distinctions. The fact that a statement is self-serving does not preclude its introduction under an appropriate hearsay exception, e.g., a declaration of intent (infra, §212 et seq.), a spontaneous exclamation (infra, §173 et seq.), or an implied admission (infra, §106 et seq.). And when a witness has been impeached by some kinds of attack on his or her credibility, a prior consistent statement is admissible in rehabilitation. (See infra, §161.)

(2) Criminal Defendant's Statements. See People v. Williams (2006) 40 C.4th 287, 317, 52 C.R.3d 268, 148 P.3d 47 [defendant's crying during interview with detective, which defendant wanted admitted to show remorse, was properly excluded because it was intertwined with self-serving hearsay]. West's Key Number Digest, Criminal Law k.413 et seq.; Evidence k.271 et seq.

  - a. Self-Serving Statements.
2. Statements in Judicial Proceedings.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 11

[§ 11] Statements in Judicial Proceedings.

An allegation in a pleading or similar paper, though verified, is not evidence in favor of the pleader. (Mitsuuchi v. Security-First Nat. Bank of Los Angeles (1951) 103 C.A.2d 214, 219, 229 P.2d 376; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §774.)

In Reid v. Overland Machined Products (1961) 55 C.2d 203, 209, 10 C.R. 819, 359 P.2d 251, an action on certain claims, the trial judge instructed plaintiff's counsel to prepare judgment and findings for $ 4,948.95. Plaintiff submitted a "Memorandum After Examining Change Order, Purchase Orders and Invoices," stating that he had reviewed defendant's invoices, and suggesting a different sum, whereupon the judge awarded judgment for $ 11,486.52. Held, judgment reversed; this memorandum, like a statement in a pleading, was incompetent hearsay.

Answers to interrogatories may be used "so far as admissible under the rules of evidence." (C.C.P. 2030(n), 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §102.) But a party cannot use its own self-serving answers to its opponent's interrogatories on its own behalf; they are merely affidavits and incompetent hearsay (infra, §297). (Estate of Horman (1968) 265 C.A.2d 796, 805, 71 C.R. 780; Giesler v. Berman (1970) 6 C.A.3d 919, 929, 86 C.R. 205; Castaline v. Los Angeles (1975) 47 C.A.3d 580, 587, 121 C.R. 786 [improper hearsay use of one defendant's answers against another defendant].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

C.C.P. 2030(n), on the use of interrogatory answers, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.410 in 2004 without substantive change. West's Key Number Digest, Evidence k.271(20)

7. Illustrations of Inadmissible Hearsay.
b. Reports and Similar Writings.

[§ 12] Reports and Similar Writings.

(1) In General. Formal writings and reports, unless made competent evidence by one of the exceptions to the rule, are inadmissible hearsay. (See People v. Murphy (1936) 17 C.A.2d 575, 591, 62 P.2d 592 [unverified report by Corporation Commissioner or his agent]; Oppenheimer v. Clunie (1904) 142 C. 313, 322, 75 P. 899 [report of grand jury]; Moon v. Moon (1944) 62 C.A.2d 185, 188, 144 P.2d 596 [report of court's domestic relations investigator]; Filipino Federation of America v. Repollo (1961) 191 C.A.2d 89, 12 C.R. 467, infra, §241; Conservatorship of Manton (1985) 39 C.3d 645, 647, 217 C.R. 253, 703 P.2d 1147 [conservatorship report, although properly considered at initial hearing on petition for conservatorship, is not admissible at contested trial on issue of whether proposed conservatee is gravely disabled]; 2 McCormick 5th, §248; 10 A.L.R.2d 1035 [written recitals or statements as hearsay]; 85 A.L.R.2d 436 [credit report of mercantile agency]; for possible exceptions, see infra, §90 et seq. [admissions]; §226 et seq. [business records]; §244 et seq. [official records]; §297 [affidavits]; and see Dahl v. Dahl (1965) 237 C.A.2d 407, 413, 46 C.R. 881 [probation officer's report on child custody admissible under former Welf.C. 582 (now Welf.C. 281)].)

Highly persuasive evidence may be wholly excluded when counsel are unfamiliar with the technical nature and scope of the hearsay exceptions. In Bebington v. California Western States Life Ins. Co. (1947) 30 C.2d 157, 160, 180 P.2d 673, plaintiff beneficiary sued on an insurance policy on the life of her son. Defendant relied on the provision excluding liability for death resulting from an airplane accident except where the decedent was a fare-paying passenger on a regular passenger flight. The decedent, an aviation pilot, had been killed in a training flight, as shown by newspaper clippings, a letter from the squadron captain to the decedent's mother, and a certified statement of a general to the effect that Army records showed this as the cause of death. In affirming judgment for plaintiff, the court held that defendant had failed to sustain its burden of proving this affirmative defense. (a) The newspaper clippings and letter were hearsay, and were not adoptive admissions (infra, §102). Although they were sent to defendant by plaintiff as proof of death as required by the policy, plaintiff would not be deemed to have accepted as her own the recitals in papers submitted under such compulsion. (b) The general's statement was not admissible under the Business Records Act (infra, §227) because "it was not a certified copy of a record, but merely an officer's statement of what the record showed." (30 C.2d 161; see criticism, 61 Harv. L. Rev. 535; 1948 A.S. 890; on newspaper articles, see 55 A.L.R.3d 663.)

(2) Proof of Prior Crime. "A document is admissible to prove a prior conviction only if the facts asserted are admissible under the rules of evidence, including hearsay rules." (People v. Lewis (1996) 44 C.A.4th 845, 852, 853, 52 C.R.2d 338 [out-of-state documents were improperly admitted to prove nature of defendant's prior crime, where they contained hearsay and no hearsay exception applied]; see People v. Williams (1990) 222 C.A.3d 911, 918, 272 C.R. 212 [probation report with multiple hearsay, i.e., sheriff said victim said defendant used knife, was inadmissible to prove defendant's personal use of deadly weapon during prior offense]; People v. Reed (1996) 13 C.4th 217, 230, 52 C.R.2d 106, 914 P.2d 184 [statements in probation report were inadmissible to show that defendant used dangerous or deadly weapon in course of prior assault; citing Williams.]

Williams was distinguished in People v. Sohal (1997) 53 C.A.4th 911, 916, 62 C.R.2d 110, where, in a prior trial, the prosecutor stated the factual basis for defendant's plea of guilty to assault with a deadly weapon, with which defense counsel agreed, and defendant then pleaded guilty. This constituted an adoptive admission of the truth of the facts underlying the plea, and the plea transcript could then be relied on in subsequent criminal proceedings in determining the nature of the assault conviction. (See People v. Woodell (1998) 17 C.4th 448, 459, 71 C.R.2d 241, 950 P.2d 85 [out-of-state appellate opinion was admissible to prove that defendant's prior assault conviction qualified as strike; opinion itself came within official records exception, and material within it was not used for hearsay purpose of proving what defendant did, but for nonhearsay purpose of showing what original trial court found was basis of conviction]; People v. Superior Court (Howard) (1999) 70 C.A.4th 136, 153, 82 C.R.2d 481 [prohibition against use of hearsay statements contained in probation report does not apply in probable cause hearing under Sexually Violent Predators Act (see 3 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Punishment, §196); distinguishing People v. Reed]; on proper methods of proving prior conviction generally, see 3 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Punishment, §§343, 377; on use of preliminary hearing transcript, see infra, §260; on use of prior conviction for impeachment, see 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §292 et seq.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. See People v. Zunis (2005) 134 C.A.4th Supp. 1, 5, 36 C.R.3d 489 [in prosecution for speeding in which defendant had been apprehended by highway patrol officer using stopwatch, admission of letter from stopwatch manufacturer concerning accuracy of its stopwatches constituted error, although harmless, as it was offered for truth of matter asserted]; 2 McCormick 6th, §248.(2) Proof of Prior Crime. See In re Cruse (2003) 110 C.A.4th 1495, 1500, 2 C.R.3d 548 [counsel did not render ineffective assistance in advising defendant to plead guilty to possession of marijuana for sale and admit prior conviction of violent or serious felony; great bodily injury element of prior crime was proven by victim's preliminary hearing testimony, and unsworn, unauthenticated medical report included in superior court file of prior case would not have been admissible to contradict victim's testimony]. West's Key Number Digest, Criminal Law k.419(12); Evidence k.318 et seq.

[§ 13] Court's Interlocutory Order.

A court's interlocutory order may be hearsay. In Weak v. Weak (1962) 202 C.A.2d 632, 21 C.R. 9, J, the husband, sued for divorce or annulment of his marriage with P. She asked for temporary alimony and costs, and the judge denied her motion by a minute order reciting that she had been guilty of fraud in marrying while aware of the existence of her prior marriage. In the present action by P against J to establish a half-interest in property acquired jointly by the parties, the minute order was admitted in evidence and relied on by the trial judge in concluding that P was not entitled to the rights of a de facto wife. Held, this was error. (a) The order was not res judicata because the issues of the two proceedings were different, and it was modifiable and therefore not final. (202 C.A.2d 634.) (b) It was not admissible in evidence because it was hearsay not within any recognized exception, and its admission would require the second judge to consider the opinion of the first judge without any of the evidence before the first judge. (202 C.A.2d 636.)

d. Proceedings at Coroner's Inquest.

[§ 14] Proceedings at Coroner's Inquest.

The verdict of a coroner's jury, or the decision of the coroner where no jury is appointed, is inadmissible in any civil or criminal proceeding. (Govt.C. 27502.2; see Estate of Dolbeer (1906) 149 C. 227, 246, 86 P. 695 [verdict of coroner's jury]; Shee v. Maryland Assur. Corp., Baltimore (1922) 190 C. 1, 3, 210 P. 269 [same]; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1671; on required contents of verdict or decision, see Govt.C. 27504.) A transcript of the testimony taken at a coroner's inquest is also inadmissible. (People v. Lessard (1962) 58 C.2d 447, 455, 25 C.R. 78, 375 P.2d 46; see 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1374.)

However, a coroner's death certificate is prima facie evidence of the facts stated in it. (Health & Saf.C. 103550, formerly Health & Saf.C. 10577.)

In McClafin v. Bayshore Equipment Rental Co. (1969) 274 C.A.2d 446, 79 C.R. 337, a coroner's record was correctly excluded, notwithstanding former Health & Saf.C. 10577, where the entry contained a prefatory clause--"When leg of step ladder broke"--which did not state a fact but was the recital of a fact. The statute "does not make the certified copy prima facie evidence of the fact to which the recital refers." Since the conclusionary language affected the entire entry, it was inadmissible. (274 C.A.2d 455.) (See Bohrer v. San Diego (1980) 104 C.A.3d 155, 164, 163 C.R. 419 [trial judge improperly used conclusion of "suicide" on death certificate in sustaining demurrer to complaint in wrongful death action; cases decided under former Health & Saf.C. 10577 deal with admissibility at time of trial].)

[§ 15] Invoice, Bill, and Receipt.

Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. G. W. Thomas Drayage & Rigging Co. (1968) 69 C.2d 33, 69 C.R. 561, 442 P.2d 641, throws some light on a difficult hearsay problem. To prove damages sustained to its turbine rotor, plaintiff offered invoices received from the manufacturer and repairer, the drafts in payment, and testimony that payment had been made. After objection, plaintiff also called a mechanical engineer as a qualified expert on repair of turbines, who testified to the kind of work necessary to repair the damage shown in photographs; then, on a showing of similar repairs listed in the invoices, he testified over objection that the amounts charged were reasonable. Held, this was inadmissible hearsay.

(a) Invoices, bills, and receipts for repairs are hearsay, and cannot independently prove that liability for the repairs was incurred, that payment was made, or that the charges were reasonable. (69 C.2d 42.)

(b) If a party testifies that he did incur or discharge a liability for repairs, those documents may be admitted for the limited purpose of corroborating his testimony. And if payment was made, the testimony and documents are evidence that the charges were reasonable. Here, however, the individual items were read, not to corroborate payment or reasonableness of charges, but to prove that these specific repairs had actually been made. No qualified witness was called to testify that the invoices accurately recorded the work done, and there was no other evidence as to what repairs were made. This use of the invoices was error. (69 C.2d 43.)

(c) The invoice of a third party might come in under the business records exception (infra, §226) if supported by testimony as to identity and mode of preparation, but this showing was not made. (69 C.2d 43.)

(d) Because the expert's testimony as to reasonableness of the charges was based on hearsay inadmissible to prove that the repairs had been made, objection should have been sustained; an expert's opinion must be based either on facts personally observed or on hypotheses that find support in the evidence. (69 C.2d 43.)

The corroboration exception described in the Thomas Drayage case was applied in Jones v. Dumrichob (1998) 63 C.A.4th 1258, 1267, 74 C.R.2d 607, where that court held that bills for defendant's expert witnesses were properly admitted in a hearing to tax costs. Corroboration of expert testimony on the reasonableness of medical treatment is also a proper basis for admitting medical bills. (See Rodgers v. Kemper Const. Co. (1975) 50 C.A.3d 608, 626, 124 C.R. 143 [experts testified that treatment received by plaintiffs was reasonably necessary, and plaintiffs' testimony connected the bills to the treatment and showed the reasonableness of the charges].) And invoices may be admissible as proof of the method of maintaining business records. (See Exclusive Florists v. Kahn (1971) 17 C.A.3d 711, 715, 95 C.R. 325.)

[§ 16] Recording of Nonparty's Statements.

In People v. Sundlee (1977) 70 C.A.3d 477, 138 C.R. 834, defendant was placed under surveillance by state forestry agents after he was suspected of setting fires in wooded foothills near a dam construction site. As the members of the surveillance team watched defendant on the night in question, they exchanged comments and observations by radio, including an identification of defendant as the person under observation and descriptions of his movements. At defendant's trial for arson, the prosecutor laid a foundation and offered in evidence the tape recording and a transcript of the radio observations. Held, the recorded out-of-court conversations, aimed at convincing the jury that the events described had in fact taken place, were inadmissible hearsay. "An electronic voice recording has no more sanctity than the oral testimony of a witness recounting the same extrajudicial declarations. In their recorded conversation the members of the surveillance team were not under oath and could not be tested by cross-examination. The recording could not make their inadmissible statements admissible. The tape recording was 'evidence of a statement that was made other than by a witness while testifying at the hearing and that is offered to prove the truth of the matter stated.'" (70 C.A.3d 483.)

D. Nature and Scope of Rule.

7. Illustrations of Inadmissible Hearsay.

g. Hearsay Introduced by Cross-Examination or Redirect.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 17

[§ 17] Hearsay Introduced by Cross-Examination or Redirect.

As illustrated in the following cases, incompetent hearsay may also appear in cross-examination that, on the surface, does not seem improper, or on redirect following proper cross-examination:

(1) Buchanan v. Nye (1954) 128 C.A.2d 582, 585, 275 P.2d 767. Defendant offered evidence in an automobile accident case that S, an eyewitness, was concealing himself. Plaintiff's counsel testified on cross-examination that, from a reading of S's police statement and coroner's inquest testimony, he considered S unreliable and so did not call him. Defendant thereupon, by further questions directed to plaintiff's counsel, read the entire police report of S. Held, this was error; cross-examination of counsel on the reasons for his failure to call a witness does not justify the injection of a hearsay statement of the absent witness.

(2) Crosby v. Martinez (1958) 159 C.A.2d 534, 539, 324 P.2d 26. In this automobile collision case, the issue was whether defendants or plaintiffs entered against the red light. Plaintiffs and their witnesses testified that it was defendants; defendants alone testified that it was plaintiffs. But defendants called an officer who on cross-examination was asked if he had the name of H as a witness, and said yes. Thereupon, defendants on redirect proceeded to obtain from the officer testimony that a defendant told him that H said plaintiffs had run the red signal. Held, this was inadmissible. Ev.C. 356, permitting introduction of the rest of an act, etc., testified to in part, does not authorize the introduction of incompetent matter not related to the subject of the previous testimony. (See 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §§36, 37.)

(3) People v. Harris (1969) 270 C.A.2d 863, 76 C.R. 130. Defendant, in state prison, participated in a fracas. The prosecution's theory was that defendant intended to join J in assaulting D, the victim. The defense was that he had tried to break up the fight. D, called as a witness for the prosecution, claimed the self-incrimination privilege. The judge then allowed the prosecutor to "impeach" him by asking a series of questions concerning his prior statements to officers that implicated defendant. D answered all by the same claim of privilege, and no officer was called to contradict him. Held, this was reversible error, as in Douglas v. Alabama (1965) 380 U.S. 415, 85 S.Ct. 1074, 13 L.Ed.2d 934, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §532. The cross-examination brought in a quantity of damaging hearsay, and there was no way in which defendant could test the truth of these statements attributed to D but denied by him. (270 C.A.2d 869.)

were properly maintained. Held, the letter was inadmissible hearsay because the attorney did not testify that it said anything other than what it did say. "One letter disagreeing with petitioner on the condition of the runways cannot be used to impeach his testimony since it is not inconsistent with it." (1 C.3d 775.)

(5) People v. Shipe (1975) 49 C.A.3d 343, 122 C.R. 701. In this homicide case, the prosecutor, relying on the forgetful witness theory of People v. Green (1971) 3 C.3d 981, 92 C.R. 494, 479 P.2d 998, infra, §159, contended that when his witnesses claimed the privilege against self-incrimination, he could ask leading questions as a foundation for impeachment. Held, Green was not in point. "[E]ach witness answered a few innocuous preliminary questions but steadfastly refused to answer any inquiry pertaining to the night of the crime or concerning any fact or circumstance relating to the crime. There was no occasion to impeach the witnesses, and the leading questions propounded by the prosecutor were not asked for that purpose." (49 C.A.3d 354.) These questions improperly created the almost irrefutable inference that their statements to the authorities were true. (49 C.A.3d 349.) (See 43 A.L.R.3d 1413 [refusal to testify on self-incrimination grounds as justifying reception of prior statements].)

(6) People v. Blackington (1985) 167 C.A.3d 1216, 213 C.R. 800. Defendant Blackington and codefendant Donald were jointly charged with the murder of Eric. Blackington contended that he shot Eric in self-defense. Donald had made a lengthy postarrest statement to police that incriminated Blackington, and Blackington moved for a severance under People v. Aranda (1965) 63 C.2d 518, 47 C.R. 353, 407 P.2d 265, infra, §59. The prosecutor opposed the motion, stating that he did not intend to offer Donald's statement as evidence, but would use it only if Donald took the stand. The judge denied the severance and Donald did not testify, but the prosecutor, in cross-examining Blackington, constantly and openly referred to Donald's statement in framing a number of leading questions, including the following: "You don't recall you talked to Donald about taking care of Eric?" "You never told Donald, 'Don't worry, just get him outside, and I will take care of him at that point.' " Both defendants then moved for a mistrial, and the judge granted the motion as to Donald, but denied it as to Blackington. Held, Blackington was also entitled to a mistrial.

(b) The prosecutor's misconduct went to the critical issue in the case, i.e., by suggesting planning and an intent to "take care" of Eric, the alleged statements of defendant to Donald both before and after the shooting seriously undermined the claim of self-defense. And, as in Douglas, once Donald's statements were presented to the jury, defendant was denied his right to confront and cross-examine Donald by the latter's invocation of the self-incrimination privilege. (167 C.A.3d 1223.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

I. IN GENERAL

E. Unavailable as a Witness.

1. In General.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 18

[§ 18] In General.

(1) Statutory Grounds. Former statutes contained nonuniform provisions specifying certain kinds of unavailability of a witness for particular hearsay exceptions (e.g., death, insanity, or absence), but the case law sometimes departed from the strict statutory language. The original Uniform Rules established uniformity by defining the phrase "unavailable as a witness" to include all of the kinds of unavailability, and then using the phrase when unavailability was a condition. The Evidence Code does the same, and Ev.C. 240(a) specifies the following bases for a finding of unavailability:

- (a) Privilege. (See infra, §20.)
- (b) Disqualification. (See infra, §19.)
- (c) Death, insanity, or illness. (See infra, §22.)
- (d) Absence. (See infra, §27.)

Ev.C. 240(b) makes it clear that the unavailability must be honest: "A declarant is not unavailable as a witness if the exemption, preclusion, disqualification, death, inability, or absence of the declarant was brought about by the procurement or wrongdoing of the proponent of his or her statement for the purpose of preventing the declarant from attending or testifying." Thus, "a party may not arrange a declarant's disappearance in order to use the declarant's out-of-court statement"; and if one of the parties was the declarant, that party may not create "unavailability" by invoking a privilege. (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 240; see Ev.C. 240(c), infra, §22.)

(2) Nonstatutory Grounds. The courts have not interpreted Ev.C. 240 and the former testimony provision (Ev.C. 1291, infra, §264), which requires unavailability, "so strictly as to preclude unlisted variants of unavailability. Rather, courts have given the statutes a realistic construction consistent with their purpose, i.e., to ensure that certain types of hearsay, including former testimony, are admitted only when no preferable version of the evidence, in the form of live testimony, is legally and physically available." (People v. Reed (1996) 13 C.4th 217, 226, 227, 52 C.R.2d 106, 914 P.2d 184 [statements in preliminary hearing transcript from trial of prior crime were admissible under former testimony provision, because statements were by witnesses who were unavailable by reason of rule precluding proof of prior crime by evidence outside record of conviction]; see People v. Bartow (1996) 46 C.A.4th 1573, 1580, 54 C.R.2d 482 [trial judge erred in refusing to admit trial transcript from prior trial for wilful discharge of firearm in which defendant's companion admitted that gun was hers and that she fired it; under reasoning of Reed, companion was unavailable witness, and thus hearsay exceptions for former testimony and statements against penal interest applied].)

(3) Federal Rule. F.R. Evid., Rule 804(a) defines unavailability to include the following situations:

(a) The declarant "is exempted by ruling of the court on the ground of privilege from testifying concerning the subject matter of the declarant's statement." (F.R. Evid., Rule 804(a)(1).)

(b) The declarant "persists in refusing to testify concerning the subject matter of the declarant's statement despite an order of the court to do so." (F.R. Evid., Rule 804(a)(1).)

(c) The declarant "testifies to a lack of memory of the subject matter of the declarant's statement." (F.R. Evid., Rule 804(a)(1).)

(d) The declarant "is unable to be present or to testify at the hearing because of death or then existing physical or mental illness or infirmity." (F.R. Evid., Rule 804(a)(1).)

(e) The declarant "is absent from the hearing and the proponent of a statement has been unable to procure the declarant's attendance (or in the case of a hearsay exception under subdivisions (b)(2), (3) or (4), his attendance or testimony) by process or other reasonable means." (F.R. Evid., Rule 804(a)(1).)

However: "A declarant is not unavailable as a witness if exemption, refusal, claim of lack of memory, inability, or absence is due to the procurement or wrongdoing of the proponent of a statement for the purpose of preventing the witness from attending or testifying." (F.R. Evid., Rule 804(a).) Moreover, F.R. Evid., Rule 804(b)(6), added in 1997, creates a hearsay exception for a "statement offered against a party that has engaged or acquiesced in wrongdoing that was intended to, and did, procure the unavailability of the declarant as a witness." (See 4 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §486; 29 Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §700.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Nonstatutory Grounds. See People v. Smith (2003) 30 C.4th 581, 624, 134 C.R.2d 1, 68 P.3d 302 [in capital murder case, witness was unavailable within meaning of Ev.C. 240 where she refused to testify unless she was permitted to express her opposition to death penalty; court had no power to incarcerate her for refusing to testify, and was not required to fine her for contempt as prerequisite to finding her unavailable]; People v. Coffman & Marlow (2004) 34 C.4th 1, 79, 17 C.R.3d 710, 96 P.3d 30 [in capital murder case, trial judge did not err in ruling that witness was not unavailable, notwithstanding that judge found her deliberately evasive in claiming that she did not remember certain facts; ruling precluded wholesale reading of witness' testimony from her own trial on charges arising from same facts, but it did not preclude appropriate impeachment on further findings that she was feigning loss of memory].

(3) Federal Rule. See 174 A.L.R. Fed 1 [unavailability within meaning of F.R. Evid., Rule 804]; 193 A.L.R. Fed 703 [F.R. Evid., Rule 804(b)(6)]. West's Key Number Digest, Criminal Law k.662.9

I. IN GENERAL

- E. Unavailable as a Witness.
- 2. Privilege or Disqualification.
- a. Statutory Rule and Distinction.

[§ 19] Statutory Rule and Distinction.

A declarant is unavailable if "[e]xempted or precluded on the ground of privilege from testifying concerning the matter to which his statement is relevant" (Ev.C. 240(a)(1)), or if the declarant is "[d]isqualified from testifying to the matter" (Ev.C. 240(a)(2)). (On privilege, see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §59 et seq.; on disqualification, see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §37 et seq.)

But a distinction must be borne in mind: The hearsay rule may be overcome by an exception where the condition of unavailability is shown, but the statement itself must still meet the test of other exclusionary rules, including those of privilege. Hence, if the declaration is itself a privileged communication, it will be excluded on that ground even if it comes within a hearsay exception. (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 240; see supra, §8.)

I. IN GENERAL

- E. Unavailable as a Witness.
  - 2. Privilege or Disqualification.
    - b. Privilege Against Self-Incrimination.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 20

[§ 20] Privilege Against Self-Incrimination.

Ev.C. 240 was upheld against a constitutional challenge in People v. Williams (1968) 265 C.A.2d 888, 71 C.R. 773. Defendant was convicted of first degree murder, and his conviction was reversed. On the retrial, witness S was called against him, the trial judge advised her of her self-incrimination privilege, and she claimed it. Then the prosecution read her testimony at the first trial. Held, this was not error. Pointer v. Texas (1965) 380 U.S. 400, 85 S.Ct. 1065, 13 L.Ed.2d 923, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §531, recognized that the right of confrontation is protected where the prior testimony was taken at a full-fledged hearing with defendant represented by counsel with adequate opportunity to cross-examine. That was the case here: At the first trial, defendant, represented by able counsel, fully cross-examined witness S. (See People v. Hill (1971) 19 C.A.3d 306, 313, 315, 96 C.R. 813 [witness' preliminary hearing testimony was properly admitted after he refused to testify on self-incrimination grounds; defendant waived his constitutional confrontation right by opposing grant of immunity for witness]; People v. Maxwell (1979) 94 C.A.3d 562, 570, 156 C.R. 630, infra, §21; People v. Malone (1988) 47 C.3d 1, 23, 252 C.R. 525, 762 P.2d 1249 [rejecting argument that, in capital case, former testimony of accomplice who asserts self-incrimination privilege should be inadmissible].)

In People v. Cudjo (1993) 6 C.4th 585, 25 C.R.2d 390, 863 P.2d 635, a capital murder prosecution, the trial judge found defendant's brother to be an unavailable witness based on his assertion of the self-incrimination privilege, and admitted his preliminary hearing testimony. Held, this was proper.

(a) The witness' intent to assert the privilege was adequately demonstrated. At a foundational hearing out of the jury's presence, the prosecutor asked the witness whether he intended to answer any questions about the murder and whether he had conversed with defendant about another crime defendant had committed on the day of the murder. He refused to answer each question on the ground of privilege. Defense counsel then stipulated that the witness would assert the privilege as to any testimony he might give. (6 C.4th 616, 617.)

(b) The witness had been taken into custody as a suspect in the offense, and defendant argued at trial that the evidence was consistent with the hypothesis that the witness himself was the murderer. As it did not "clearly appear" that the witness' proposed testimony could not have tended to incriminate him for the murder, the witness' entitlement to assert the privilege was sufficiently established. (6 C.4th 617.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

I. IN GENERAL

E. Unavailable as a Witness.

2. Privilege or Disqualification.

c. Self-Incrimination Privilege Invoked Because of Fear of Perjury Prosecution.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 21

[§ 21] Self-Incrimination Privilege Invoked Because of Fear of Perjury Prosecution.

In People v. Maxwell (1979) 94 C.A.3d 562, 570, 156 C.R. 630, the victim of a kidnaping testified at the preliminary hearing, but at the trial, refused to testify because of possible conflict with her earlier testimony (on the issue whether she went with defendant voluntarily) and exposure to charges of perjury. The trial judge sustained her claim of privilege and admitted her preliminary hearing testimony. On appeal, defendant contended that the normal rule on the unavailability of a witness because of a claim of self-incrimination privilege should not apply in this situation. Held, the ruling was correct. No authority suggests such an exception to the rule, and the only case in point (a Michigan decision in which perjury charges were pending) found no basis for the distinction. (94 C.A.3d 573.)

In the extraordinary circumstances present in People v. Garner (1989) 207 C.A.3d 935, 255 C.R. 257, however, admission of preliminary hearing testimony under the unavailability rule was improper. At the trial, the prosecution's entire case-in-chief consisted of (a) an autopsy report indicating that the victim had died of gunshot wounds, and (b) preliminary examination testimony of Phillips, the only witness at the examination. Phillips testified that he was a member of a gang present at the scene of the killing, and identified defendant as the shooter. Later, he told the deputy district attorney that he had lied because of antipathy toward defendant; but he refused to testify at trial, asserting that to do so would permit the prosecution to charge him with perjury. The trial judge allowed the preliminary examination testimony to be read, and instructed the jury under CALJIC, No. 2.25 that they were not to draw any inference as to credibility of the witness or guilt or innocence of the defendant from the claim of privilege. Held, admission of the testimony resulted in reversible error.

(a) The CALJIC instruction is appropriate where the witness fears his own potential prosecution, but it was entirely unwarranted in the present unique situation. "[W]hen a witness refuses to respond to relevant questioning upon the express averment that to do so would reveal the falsity of his earlier testimony, it is eminently reasonable and proper for the jury to draw an unfavorable inference therefrom regarding his credibility. In fact, since a witness's intention to commit future perjury could not possibly serve to sustain an invocation of the privilege, only two truly rational inferences are possible, (1) his earlier testimony was, indeed, false, or (2) he is currently lying concerning his reason for refusing to testify." (207 C.A.3d 938.)

(b) "Further, where the witness's earlier avowedly false testimony provides a basis for determining the accused's guilt, the jury ought properly to be instructed that it should, rather than it should not, draw all appropriate inferences regarding the defendant's actual guilt or innocence from the witness's refusal to speak." People v. Maxwell, supra, is "manifestly distinguishable." There, even if the witness' admission that she lied in one particular were deemed true, the remainder of her testimony constituted substantial evidence of defendant's guilt. (207 C.A.3d 939.)

(c) In the present case defendant was completely precluded from questioning his sole accuser concerning a primary issue (admission of false swearing), because the admission occurred after the preliminary examination had been completed. This was a denial both of the constitutional right of confrontation and the right of cross-examination. (207 C.A.3d 940.)

(d) "When the People wish to go forward in reliance upon the testimony of a recanting witness, fundamental fairness would require, at a minimum, that the jury (1) be advised precisely why the witness is being allowed to refuse to testify, i.e., an alleged fear of a perjury prosecution, and (2) be instructed that they should draw all reasonable and appropriate inferences therefrom concerning the witness's credibility and the guilt or innocence of the accused." (207 C.A.3d 941.)

(e) The preferable approach would have been for the judge to condition the prosecution's request to introduce the testimony upon granting Phillips immunity; obviously the prosecution could not have urged that the very testimony on which they relied was so untrustworthy that they wished to retain the right to prosecute the declarant for perjury. (207 C.A.3d 941.) "It is entirely possible, of course, that the reluctant witness may abandon his amended assertions after he once again has been sworn to tell the truth, but even if he does not, the prosecution will be free to demonstrate through its questioning that it is his recantation, rather than his prior testimony, that should be deemed unworthy of belief." (207 C.A.3d 942.)

(f) "Lest there be any confusion concerning the extremely limited nature of the remedy we here recommend, we emphasize that a need therefor will arise if, and only if, (1) the witness's invocation of the privilege is based upon a claimed fear of a perjury prosecution, and (2) it is the People who wish to use this witness's earlier, and assertedly false, testimony as evidence against the accused. While the district attorney may not be required to seek a grant of immunity even in such an instance, his request to make affirmative use of that testimony may be conditioned upon his willingness to expose the witness to full and complete cross-examination before the triers of fact." (207 C.A.3d 942.)

I. IN GENERAL

E. Unavailable as a Witness.

3. Death, Insanity, or Illness.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 22

[§ 22] Death, Insanity, or Illness.

(1) In General. A declarant is unavailable if "[d]ead or unable to attend or to testify at the hearing because of then existing physical or mental illness or infirmity." (Ev.C. 240(a)(3); see People v. Crandall (1941) 43 C.A.2d 238, 241, 110 P.2d 682 [insanity]; People v. Hernandez (1968) 263 C.A.2d 242, 252, 69 C.R. 448 [witness injured and unconscious in hospital]; People v. King (1969) 269 C.A.2d 40, 74 C.R. 679 [witness in hospital in serious condition, unable to speak, condition would not clear up for 8 weeks]; People v. Alcala (1992) 4 C.4th 742, 779, 15 C.R.2d 432, 842 P.2d 1192 [witness' complete inability to recall relevant information amounted to mental infirmity within meaning of Ev.C. 240(a)(3)]; on Ev.C. 1231 et seq., allowing admission of prior statement by declarant, now dead due to unnatural causes, regarding gang-related activity, see infra, §154.)

People v. Williams (1979) 93 C.A.3d 40, 155 C.R. 414, illustrates the type of situation in which Ev.C. 240(a)(3) is not applicable. R, a rape victim, had suffered a severe emotional strain in a prior trial of several defendants. Held, the trial judge erred in finding her unavailable. "At best the evidence established that, understandably, Rebecca, the declarant, did not want to go through another ordeal of testifying, and that it could be anticipated that she would suffer some mental anguish and physical effects from testifying. But the evidence also established that the anguish and physical effects which she suffered from testifying at the first trial were temporary in nature and disappeared upon the conclusion of the first trial." (93 C.A.3d 54.) The applicable test requires that the infirmity be so severe as to render the witness' attendance or testifying relatively impossible and not merely inconvenient. Here, the preliminary-facts evidence showed only a condition rendering her ability to testify merely inconvenient. (93 C.A.3d 54.)

(2) Evidence To Establish Insanity or Illness. There was formerly some uncertainty about the type of evidence needed to establish that the declarant was indeed unavailable because of insanity or other illness. (See People v. Stritzinger (1983) 34 C.3d 505, 518, 525, 194 C.R. 431, 668 P.2d 738 [preliminary hearing testimony of victim of sexual molestation was admitted at trial after victim's mother testified that victim had been suffering from emotional difficulties; majority held this to be error, but dissent argued that lay testimony was not necessarily incompetent on this issue].)

Ev.C. 240(c), enacted in 1984, deals with the problem as follows: "Expert testimony which establishes that physical or mental trauma resulting from an alleged crime has caused harm to a witness of sufficient severity that the witness is physically unable to testify or is unable to testify without suffering substantial trauma may constitute a sufficient showing of unavailability. ... As used in this section, the term 'expert' means a physician and surgeon, including a psychiatrist, or any person described by subdivision (b), (c), or (e) of Section 1010." (See People v. Turner (1990) 219 C.A.3d 1207, 1216, 268 C.R. 686 [clinical social worker's opinion, based on testimony, hypothetical questions and personal contact, that testifying would inflict substantial trauma on rape victim, established medical unavailability under Ev.C. 240(c); on Ev.C. 1010(b), (c), and (e), listing licensed psychologist, licensed clinical social worker, and marriage, family and child counselor as protected by the psychotherapist-patient privilege, see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §211 et seq.)

The introduction of expert testimony to establish witness unavailability due to trauma resulting from a crime will not be deemed "procurement of unavailability" (see supra, §18), in the absence of contrary proof. (Ev.C. 240(c); see 20 Pacific L. J. 648.)

(3) No Requirement of Diligence or Permanent Unavailability. In People v. Gomez (1972) 26 C.A.3d 225, 103 C.R. 80, defendant was convicted of unlawful sexual intercourse with a female under the age of 18, largely on the preliminary hearing testimony of the complaining witness, who was in Camarillo State Hospital under psychiatric care at the time of trial. Held, the testimony was properly admitted.

(a) Ev.C. 240(a)(3) requires no showing of diligence when illness or infirmity is the cause of the absence. "To require proof of reasonable attempts to secure the attendance of a witness who, in any event, could not come to court even if subpoenaed, would be an asinine bow to futility." (26 C.A.3d 228.)

(b) There is no constitutional requirement that the witness be deceased or beyond the reach of court process. "To require proof that a witness's unavailability is permanent would be, except in case of death, to require speculation. ... In like fashion, the witness presently unavailable because of disabling illness ultimately may recover; but if the fact or time of recovery lies only in an uncertain or distant future, no good reason appears for denying the admission of testimony previously given." (26 C.A.3d 229.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Evidence To Establish Insanity or Illness. Ev.C. 1010(e) was amended in 2001 to refer to "marriage and family therapists" instead of "marriage, family, and child counselors".

See People v. Winslow (2004) 123 C.A.4th 464, 471, 19 C.R.3d 872 [trial judge's determination that child molestation victim was unavailable within meaning of Ev.C. 240(a)(3), (c) because he was suffering from posttraumatic stress syndrome as result of charged offense was subject to independent review; relying on People v. Cromer (2001) 24 C.4th 889, 103 C.R.2d 23, 15 P.3d 243, Supp., infra, §29].

I. IN GENERAL

E. Unavailable as a Witness.

4. Contumacious Witness.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 23

[§ 23] Contumacious Witness.

In People v. Sul (1981) 122 C.A.3d 355, 175 C.R. 893, Leon, an apparent accomplice, was granted immunity and testified at the preliminary hearing, implicating defendant. At trial, Leon refused to testify, and was sentenced to 5 days in jail for contempt; the jury deadlocked, and a mistrial was declared. At the second trial, Leon, despite repeated warnings of further sanctions, refused to answer questions without the presence of his attorney, who was currently engaged in another trial. Leon was allowed to telephone his attorney, but continued in his refusal to testify without his attorney present. The trial judge then allowed the reading of the preliminary hearing testimony. Held, this was error.

(a) The question whether a court faced with a contumacious witness has the duty to adjourn proceedings for a reasonable time to determine whether the witness will change his mind is new and difficult. (122 C.A. 362, 363.) People v. Rojas (1975) 15 C.3d 540, 125 C.R. 357, 542 P.2d 229, infra, §24, involved threats and fear; this case does not. (122 C.A.3d 363.)

(b) A federal case offers a test: The former testimony may be admitted "if the court makes a finding of unavailability only after taking reasonable steps to induce the witness to testify unless it is obvious that such steps would be unavailing." (122 C.A.3d 364.)

(c) There were such reasonable steps to be taken here; e.g., (1) the trial could not have been completed on the day Leon was on the stand, and the attorney would have been available shortly thereafter (122 C.A.3d 365), (2) the district attorney knew of the problem, and should have apprised the judge of it, so that the judge could institute coercive contempt proceedings (122 C.A.3d 366).

(d) Here, the judge did nothing directed toward obtaining the witness' testimony other than finding him in contempt and sending him to jail; this was insufficient. (122 C.A.3d 367.) (See concurring opinion, 122 C.A.3d 369, observing that trial judges should not have to take extreme measures, and that adjourning trial to allow Leon to reach his attorney would have been enough.) (See People v. Walker (1983) 145 C.A.3d 886, 894, 193 C.R. 812 [following People v. Sul]; 92 A.L.R.3d 1138.)

In People v. Francis (1988) 200 C.A.3d 579, 245 C.R. 923, defendant was a member of a group of six that committed a murder. Two other members entered into plea bargains in exchange for their testimony against the rest, but refused to testify at the trial. The judge, after extensive efforts to persuade them to testify, found them unavailable and permitted the reading of their preliminary hearing testimony. Held, this was proper. The judge took all of the reasonable steps suggested in People v. Sul. "The purpose behind Evidence Code section 240 is to ensure that a witness is unavailable before the court can determine if the witness's prior testimony can be utilized. Naturally physical unavailability is such a situation, but the witness is no more available when his body is present but he refuses to testify and the court is unable to compel him to do so by its process. There is no reason why a physically available but unwilling to testify witness should not be included as an unavailable witness." (200 C.A.3d 588.)

In *People v. (15 C.3d 551.) ## CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

I. IN GENERAL

E. Unavailable as a Witness.

6. Witness Killed or Kidnaped.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 25

[§ 25] Witness Killed or Kidnaped.

(1) In General. Ev.C. 1350, enacted in 1985, creates an unavailable witness rule for a particular class of criminal proceedings, and specifies conditions of admissibility of the statement as well as the procedure for its introduction. "In a criminal proceeding charging a serious felony, evidence of a statement made by a declarant is not made inadmissible by the hearsay rule if the declarant is unavailable as a witness," and all of six specified conditions "are true." (Ev.C. 1350(a).) "Serious felony" means any of the felonies listed in P.C. 1192.7(c) (see 3 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Punishment, §340 et seq.) or any violation of Health & Saf.C. 11351, 11352, 11378, or 11379 (see 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Public Peace and Welfare, §§81, 94). (Ev.C. 1350(d).) (On conditional examination of the witness, see P.C. 1335, 1336, 1337, 1341, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §66.)

(2) Conditions of Admissibility. The statute applies only if "all of the following are true":

(a) "There is clear and convincing evidence that the declarant's unavailability was knowingly caused by, aided by, or solicited by the party against whom the statement is offered for the purpose of preventing the arrest or prosecution of the party and is the result of the death by homicide or the kidnapping of the declarant." (Ev.C. 1350(a)(1).)

(b) "There is no evidence that the unavailability of the declarant was caused by, aided by, solicited by, or procured on behalf of, the party who is offering the statement." (Ev.C. 1350(a)(2).)

(c) "The statement has been memorialized in a tape recording made by a law enforcement official, or in a written statement prepared by a law enforcement official and signed by the declarant and notarized in the presence of the law enforcement official, prior to the death or kidnapping of the declarant." (Ev.C. 1350(a)(3).)

(d) "The statement was made under circumstances which indicate its trustworthiness and was not the result of promise, inducement, threat, or coercion." (Ev.C. 1350(a)(4).)

(e) "The statement is relevant to the issues to be tried." (Ev.C. 1350(a)(5).)

(f) "The statement is corroborated by other evidence which tends to connect the party against whom the statement is offered with the commission of the serious felony with which the party is charged. The corroboration is not sufficient if it merely shows the commission of the offense or the circumstances thereof." (Ev.C. 1350(a)(6).)

(3) Distinction: Statement by Person Other Than Declarant. If a statement to be admitted under Ev.C. 1350 includes hearsay statements made by anyone other than the declarant who is unavailable under Ev.C. 1350(a), those hearsay statements are inadmissible unless they meet the requirements of an exception to the hearsay rule. (Ev.C. 1350(e).)

(4) Notice of Intention. The prosecution must serve a written notice on the defendant of its intention to offer the statement "at least 10 days prior to the hearing or trial." However, its failure to provide the notice may be excused on a showing of good cause, and in that event, the defendant is entitled to a reasonable continuance. (Ev.C. 1350(b).)

(5) Offer of Statement During Trial. The court's determination (i.e., of the existence of the conditions) must be made out of the presence of the jury. (Ev.C. 1350(c).)

(6) Defendant's Election To Testify at Hearing.

(a) Exclusion of unnecessary persons. If the defendant elects to testify at the hearing on the motion, the court must exclude "every person except the clerk, the court reporter, the bailiff, the prosecutor, the investigating officer, the defendant and his or her counsel, an investigator for the defendant, and the officer having custody of the defendant." (Ev.C. 1350(c).)

(b) Transcript of testimony. If a transcript is made of the defendant's testimony, it must be sealed and transmitted to the clerk of the court in which the action is pending. (Ev.C. 1350(c).)

(c) Testimony inadmissible in other proceeding. "Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the defendant's testimony at the hearing shall not be admissible in any other proceeding." (Ev.C. 1350(c).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Conditions of Admissibility. See People v. Zambrano (2007) 41 C.4th 1082, 1143, 63 C.R.3d 297, 163 P.3d 4 [in prosecution for murder and attempted murder, tape-recorded statements by colleague of defendant to police met conditions for admissibility under Ev.C. 1350, where there was strong evidence that defendant subsequently killed colleague in order to prevent his testimony, and circumstances under which statements were made indicated that they were trustworthy].

I. IN GENERAL

E. Unavailable as a Witness.

7. Elder or Dependent Witness.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 26

[§ 26] Elder or Dependent Witness.

(1) In General. Ev.C. 1380, added in 1999, creates a hearsay exception for certain statements by victims who are elder or dependent adults. Under Ev.C. 1380(a), a hearsay statement is not inadmissible in a prosecution under P.C. 368 (crimes against elder or dependent adults; see 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Sex Offenses and Crimes Against Decency, §168) if the declarant is an unavailable witness, as defined in Ev.C. 240 (supra, §18), and the following conditions are satisfied:

(a) The party offering the statement makes a showing that the statement is trustworthy. In determining whether this showing is sufficient, the judge "may consider only the circumstances that surround the making of the statement and that render the declarant particularly worthy of belief."

(b) There is no evidence that the declarant's unavailability was caused by or procured on behalf of the party offering the statement.

(c) The entire statement has been memorialized in a videotape recording by a law enforcement official prior to the declarant's death or disability.

(d) The statement was made by the victim of the alleged crime.

(e) The statement is supported by corroborating evidence.

(2) Notice. If the prosecution intends to offer a statement under Ev.C. 1380, it must provide written notice to the defendant at least 10 days prior to the hearing or trial where the statement will be offered, unless it can show good cause for failing to do so. If a showing of good cause is made, the defendant is entitled to a reasonable continuance. (Ev.C. 1380(b).)

(3) Hearing on Motion. Where the statement is offered during trial, the judge's determination as to the witness' unavailability must be made outside the presence of the jury. If the defendant testifies at the hearing on the motion, all persons must be excluded from the examination, except the clerk, the court reporter, the bailiff, the prosecutor, the investigating officer, the defendant and his or her counsel, an investigator for the defendant, and the officer having custody of the defendant. The defendant's testimony is not admissible in any other proceeding. Any transcript made of the defendant's testimony must be sealed and transmitted to the clerk of the court in which the action is pending. (Ev.C. 1380(c).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. See People v. Tatum (2003) 108 C.A.4th 288, 298, 300, 133 C.R.2d 267 [in prosecution arising from defendant's beating of elderly victim, admission of victim's videotaped testimony was not error, where victim died of natural causes before trial; although sometimes confused or forgetful, victim appeared to be competent, and his statements were corroborated by DNA evidence].

(4) (New) Statute Unconstitutional. In People v. Pirwani (2004) 119 C.A.4th 770, 14 C.R.3d 673, defendant was charged with embezzlement and grand theft. The victim was a dependent adult in a residential intermediate care facility, and defendant was her caretaker. By the time of trial, the victim had died, and a videotaped statement by her was admitted. In it, she told law enforcement officials that defendant had asked her for a large loan, that defendant was supposed to pay the victim's rent, and that she was not aware that defendant was not doing so. She also reviewed her checkbook register and pointed out that some entries were not in her handwriting and were not for transactions of which she was aware. Defendant was convicted. Held, reversed; the videotaped statement should not have been admitted. The trial judge admitted it under Ev.C. 1380, which incorporates the standards of Ohio v. Roberts (1980) 448 U.S. 56, 100 S.Ct. 2531, 65 L.Ed.2d 597, 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §21. Those standards allow admission of an out-of-court statement, despite the absence of an opportunity for confrontation and cross-examination, if the declarant is unavailable and the statement bears adequate indicia of reliability. The Roberts standards were rendered obsolete by Crawford v. Washington (2004) 541 U.S. 36, 124 S.Ct. 1354, 158 L.Ed.2d 177, 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, Supp., §21. Under Crawford, an out-of-court statement made in a testimonial setting must be excluded unless the declarant is unavailable and there was a prior opportunity for cross-examination. Here, the Attorney General concedes that Ev.C. 1380 is unconstitutional on its face because it fails to meet the requirements of Crawford. (119 C.A.4th 786.) The videotaped statement at issue likewise fails to withstand analysis under Crawford. It was an ex parte, unsworn statement given to law enforcement agents, and it must be considered testimonial because there was a reasonable expectation that it would be used at trial if the declarant became unavailable. As defendant had no opportunity to cross-examine the declarant at the time the statement was made, the Confrontation Clause requires its exclusion. (119 C.A.4th 786, 787.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

E. Unavailable as a Witness.

8. Absence.

b. Witness Out of Jurisdiction.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 28

[§ 28] Witness Out of Jurisdiction.

(1) Out of Jurisdiction but Subject to Process. The earlier cases took the position that a defendant who was out of the jurisdiction was beyond the reach of process and was therefore unavailable. (See People v. Carswell (1959) 51 Cal.2d 602, 605, 335 P.2d 99; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1404.)

This theory is no longer tenable in criminal cases. In Barber v. Page (1968) 390 U.S. 719, 88 S.Ct. 1318, 20 L.Ed.2d 255, codefendant W, at a preliminary hearing, incriminated defendant. At defendant's trial 7 months later, W was in a federal prison in Texas, 225 miles away. The state, on this showing, was allowed over objection to use W's preliminary hearing testimony. Held, reversed. Some courts and writers (including Wigmore) have assumed that absence from the jurisdiction makes the witness unavailable because compulsory process cannot be used. But this is not true today:

(a) For a witness not in prison, the Uniform Act To Secure the Attendance of Witnesses from Without the State in Criminal Cases (2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §9) can be used. (88 S.Ct. 1321, 20 L.Ed.2d 259, footnote 4.)

(b) For a witness in a state prison, the common law writ of habeas corpus ad testificandum (2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §13) can be used on a showing of adequate safeguards to keep the witness in custody. (88 S.Ct. 1321, 20 L.Ed.2d 259, footnote 4.)

(c) For a witness in federal custody, a federal court may issue the writ at the request of state authorities (28 U.S.C., §2241(c)), and it is the policy of the U.S. Bureau of Prisons to permit federal prisoners to testify in state criminal proceedings pursuant to the writ. (88 S.Ct. 1321, 20 L.Ed.2d 259.) Thus, an imprisoned witness is not "unavailable" unless the authorities have made a good faith effort, under these statutes, to obtain his presence. (88 S.Ct. 1322, 20 L.Ed.2d 259.) (See People v. Casarez (1968) 263 Cal.2d 130, 133, 69 Cal.R. 187 [witness--paid informer in narcotic cases--had gone to Chicago; no effort to persuade him to come here or to invoke Uniform Act]; People v. St. Germain (1982) 138 Cal.3d 507, 517, 187 Cal.R. 915 [where witness was permanent legal resident of U.S. in foreign country, prosecution, which made no effort to invoke subpoena procedure of 28 U.S.C., §1783, failed to exercise due diligence]; People v. Blackwood (1983) 138 Cal.3d 939, 947, 188 Cal.R. 359 [failure to use Uniform Act because of belief that state of witness' residence would not issue subpoena was not an excuse; prosecution's duty was to invoke Act, not to decide whether this step would be fruitful]; 2 McCormick 5th, §253; 29 Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §699.)

However, a nonresident of the United States in a foreign country is beyond the reach of process and can be considered per se unavailable. (See Mancusi v. Stubbs (1972) 408 U.S. 204, 92 S.Ct. 2308, 33 L.Ed.2d 293; People v. Ware (1978) 78 C.A.3d 822, 833, 144 C.R. 354; People v. Denson (1986) 178 C.A.3d 788, 792, 224 C.R. 63.) And where a witness, a legal resident of the United States, was served with a state subpoena before going back to his native country and ignoring demands that he return, resort to the procedure of 28 U.S.C., §1783 was not required. (People v. Watson (1989) 213 C.A.3d 446, 453, 454, 261 C.R. 635 [distinguishing St. Germain].)

(2) Unjustified Reliance on Witness' Promise To Appear. In People v. Masters (1982) 134 C.A.3d 509, 185 C.R. 134, the court considered an issue of first impression: "the effect of a broken promise to appear at trial given by a prospective witness who is out-of-state and who has not been subjected to compulsory court process to compel trial attendance." (134 C.A.3d 520.) The witness, the alleged victim and sole witness to a robbery, had left the state, obtained a new job, and repeatedly sought to evade contact with the California authorities, but finally agreed to return and testify if her expenses were paid. (134 C.A.3d 522.) She subsequently repudiated the promise and sought to conceal her location. Held, the showing was inadequate. This was not a case of a promise by a cooperative witness, or one in which it was not feasible to make use of the Uniform Act; her whereabouts were known and she was still amenable to legal process. (134 C.A.3d 526.) "It would be anomalous to conclude in the instant case that the promise to appear made in reluctance, preceded by a broken promise to maintain contact and evasiveness, makes an adequate showing of unavailability simply because the witness was out of state." (134 C.A.3d 528.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Out of Jurisdiction but Subject to Process. See 2 McCormick 6th, §253. Nonresident of United States located in foreign country: See People v. Sandoval (2001) 87 C.A.4th 1425, 1440, 1442, 105 C.R.2d 504, 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, Supp., §21 [in light of recent cooperation between United States and Mexico in criminal matters, trial judge erred in determining that Mexican citizen who had testified at preliminary examination was unavailable simply on basis that he was now in Mexico; defendant's confrontation right required that prosecution make reasonable, good faith effort to obtain his attendance].

E. Unavailable as a Witness.

8. Absence.

c. Diligent Search for Witness.

[§ 29] Diligent Search for Witness.

(1) In General. A considerable body of California case law has accumulated on the issue of reasonable diligence ("due diligence" under the former statute), where the prosecution in a criminal trial seeks to introduce preliminary hearing testimony on the basis of unavailability. It has been held that defendant, ordinarily entitled to confrontation, may insist on strict compliance with the reasonable diligence requirement in attempting to locate the missing witness, and that the burden is on the prosecution to make an adequate showing. (See 3 A.L.R.4th 87 [sufficiency of efforts to locate missing witness to justify admission of former testimony]; on different standards for prosecution and defendant, see People v. Linder (1971) 5 C.3d 342, 348, 96 C.R. 26, 486 P.2d 1226, infra, §30; People v. Forgason (1979) 99 C.A.3d 356, 160 C.R. 263.)

(2) Insufficient Showing of Diligence. The following cases held that the burden had not been met and that it was error to admit the former testimony: People v. Hayes (1925) 72 C.A. 292, 301, 305, 237 P. 390; People v. Redston (1956) 139 C.A.2d 485, 492, 494, 293 P.2d 880 [no check at place of employment, employment agencies, labor unions, hospitals, utility companies, etc., i.e., no showing of "thorough, painstaking and systematic effort to locate the witnesses"]; People v. Enriquez (1977) 19 C.3d 221, 235, 236, 137 C.R. 171, 561 P.2d 261 [17-year-old high school student with uncooperative mother; no effort made to locate him through school or at home or through employer or employee organizations or friends or acquaintances]; People v. Louis (1986) 42 C.3d 969, 974, 232 C.R. 110, 728 P.2d 180 [prosecution witness whose credibility was indisputably minimal and who was "known to be highly unreliable and likely to disappear," was released from custody on own recognizance through efforts of prosecution and "promptly vanished"]; People v. Mendieta (1986) 185 C.A.3d 1032, 1035, 230 C.R. 162 [prosecution, on notice that witness might not appear, failed to show that he could not have been served with subpoena while still in California, and otherwise showed nothing more than desultory and indifferent search]; People v. Walton (1996) 42 C.A.4th 1004, 1010, 49 C.R.2d 917 [defense investigator failed to obtain witness' high school records or ask district attorney for current address, and did not check with Department of Motor Vehicles, hospitals, jails, phone companies, utility companies, voter registration, unions, Social Security, welfare agencies, or the military]. (See 18 Santa Clara L. Rev. 271 [Enriquez].)

former employer, investigated second address obtained from Department of Motor Vehicles, and checked police department and federal government records]; People v. Perez (1989) 207 C.A.3d 431, 435, 254 C.R. 869 [prosecution served witness with subpoena by mail, witness acknowledged receipt and promised to be available, and prosecution later made appropriate attempts to effect personal service]; People v. McElroy (1989) 208 C.A.3d 1415, 1427, 256 C.R. 853 [subpenas issued 24 days before trial, and significant efforts by investigators to locate witnesses]; People v. Robinson (1991) 226 C.A.3d 1581, 1585, 277 C.R. 504 [police officer forwarded subpoena to private subpoena service agency, ran computer check on witness, and issued "Be on the Lookout" bulletin]; People v. Wise (1994) 25 C.A.4th 339, 343, 344, 30 C.R.2d 413 [prosecution did not have duty to keep tabs on witness, who was citizen-victim with no known motive to disappear; its attempts to locate him, including trying repeatedly to serve him at his address and two other addresses, and contacting post office, jail, hospital, and coroner, were adequate].)

(4) Discretion in Allowing Proof Before Jury. No hard and fast rule exists on whether the jury must be excluded while proof of reasonable diligence is being presented. "Thus, the absence of a material witness well may affect the weight which a jury will accord his testimony, given on an earlier occasion, when it is read into the evidence and it is arguable that the prosecution should not be denied the right to explain the witness's unavailability. On the other hand, where the explanatory evidence is of a nature prejudicial to the defendant, the trial court must exercise discretion in determining which side is likely to suffer more from the evidence or from its exclusion." (People v. Rodriguez (1971) 18 C.A.3d 793, 798, 96 C.R. 162.)

(5) Standard of Review. After pointing out that statements in People v. Louis, supra, and People v. Hovey (1988) 44 C.3d 543, 244 C.R. 121, 749 P.2d 776, had created uncertainty with respect to whether "independent review" or "abuse of discretion" was the appropriate standard for reviewing the reasonable diligence issue, People v. McElroy, supra, held that abuse of discretion remained the proper standard.

(a) In considering whether to abandon the abuse of discretion standard confirmed in People v. Jackson (1980) 28 C.3d 264, 168 C.R. 603, 618 P.2d 149, and to substitute the broader standard of independent review, the Louis court indicated that the issue of reasonable diligence was a mixed question of law and fact, and surmised that the proper standard may be independent review. However, it did not impose that standard because, under the facts involved, due diligence was not established under either standard. (208 C.A.3d 1425.)

(b) In People v. Hovey, supra, the court said: "We have held that the question of due diligence is a factual one depending on the circumstances in each case, and that the trial court's determination of the issue will not be disturbed in the absence of a showing of an abuse of discretion. ... In People v. Louis, ... we suggested (but did not decide) that an appellate court should independently review the ... due diligence issue.'" The Hovey court apparently applied the abuse of discretion standard because it concluded that the trial judge's finding of due diligence was supported by substantial evidence. (208 C.A.3d 1426.)

(c) "Thus, the most recent Supreme Court guidance on this issue both reaffirmed the vitality of prior cases applying the 'abuse of discretion' standard, and cautioned that any contrary analysis or suggestions in People v. Louis ... were dicta. We adhere to the Supreme Court's guidance, and therefore apply the abuse of discretion standard to this case." (208 C.A.3d 1426.)

The abuse of discretion standard has been applied in numerous subsequent cases. (See People v. Turner (1990) 219 C.A.3d 1207, 1214, 268 C.R. 686 [following McElroy]; People v. Wright (1990) 222 C.A.3d 1002, 1006, 272 C.R. 219 [same]; People v. Robinson, supra, 226 C.A.3d 1585 [same]; People v. Saucedo (1995) 33 C.A.4th 1230, 1235, 40 C.R.2d 153 [same]; People v. Walton, supra, 42 C.A.4th 1010, 1011 [citing Saucedo].) By contrast, in People v. Watson (1989) 213 C.A.3d 446, 452, 261 C.R. 635, supra, §28, the court cited People v. Louis, supra, and applied the independent review standard without further discussion. (See People v. Lopez (1998) 64 C.A.4th 1122, 1127, 76 C.R.2d 38 [agreeing with Watson, but finding that under either standard reasonable diligence was exercised].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Insufficient Showing of Diligence. See People v. Avila (2005) 131 C.A.4th 163, 170, 31 C.R.3d 441 [trial judge erred in finding that prosecution exercised reasonable diligence in attempting to locate witness who testified against defendant in first trial, which ended in mistrial, and therefore in admitting her testimony in retrial; prosecution gave its confidence that she would be available on short notice as its reason for waiting until first day of retrial to contact her, but this was inconsistent with its expressed reluctance to give her advance warning out of fear she might flee].

(3) Sufficient Showing of Diligence. See People v. Smith (2003) 30 C.4th 581, 610, 611, 134 C.R.2d 1, 68 P.3d 302 [prosecutor's information (witness testified at preliminary hearing that he was Japanese exchange student and planned to leave country before trial; his host parent told district attorney that witness had left country; investigator called witness' number in Japan and person who answered identified himself as witness) may have been legally incompetent, as hearsay, but was sufficient to show that reasonable efforts were made to procure witness' attendance]; People v. Wilson (2005) 36 C.4th 309, 341, 30 C.R.3d 513, 114 P.3d 758 [in retrial of capital murder case, prosecution exercised reasonable diligence in attempting to locate witness who had testified in first trial where, over 2-day period, detective visited witness' last known address, attempted to locate witness' known associates, and checked police, county, and state records with 15 different names witness had used; prosecution was not required to monitor witness once original judgment was reversed]; People v. Diaz (2002) 95 C.A.4th 695, 706, 707, 115 C.R.2d 799 [prosecution exercised due diligence in attempting to secure witness' attendance at trial, where police officer made more than five attempts to personally serve her, spoke to her mother, went to schools she had attended, asked other officers to look for her, and where, given difficulty in obtaining her preliminary hearing testimony, it was clear she would do everything she could to avoid testifying at trial]; People v. Martinez (2007) 154 C.A.4th 314, 324, 64 C.R.3d 580 [prosecution was sufficiently diligent in attempting to obtain presence of witness who had testified at preliminary hearing and then relocated to Canada, where he was involved in Canadian asylum proceedings and would not leave out of fear that he would not be allowed to return; although prosecution did not maintain contact with witness after his preliminary hearing testimony, it had no reason to believe that he had left jurisdiction or would be unavailable].

(5) Standard of Review. In People v. Cromer (2001) 24 C.4th 889, 103 C.R.2d 23, 15 P.3d 243, a robbery prosecution, the trial judge admitted the preliminary hearing testimony of a prosecution witness after determining that she was unavailable and that the prosecution had exercised due diligence in attempting to locate her. The Court of Appeal independently reviewed the reasonable diligence determination, ruled that the preliminary hearing testimony should not have been admitted, and reversed defendant's conviction. Held, Court of Appeal judgment affirmed. Independent review is the appropriate standard to apply to a trial court's determination that the prosecution's failed efforts to locate an absent witness are sufficient to justify an exception to the defendant's constitutionally guaranteed right of confrontation. Without independent review, a policy of sweeping deference would permit, in the absence of any significant difference in the facts, the application of the confrontation right to turn on whether different trial judges draw general conclusions that the facts are sufficient or insufficient to constitute due diligence. "Our conclusion that a trial court's due diligence determination is subject to independent review comports with this court's usual practice for review of mixed question determinations affecting constitutional rights." (24 C.4th 901, disapproving the long line of cases that applied the abuse of discretion standard, including People v. Williams (1973) 9 C.3d 24, 106 C.R. 622, 506 P.2d 998, text, p. 710, People v. Enriquez (1977) 19 C.3d 221, 137 C.R. 171, 561 P.2d 261, text, p. 710, People v. Jackson (1980) 28 C.3d 264, 168 C.R. 603, 618 P.2d 149, text, p. 711, People v. McElroy (1989) 208 C.A.3d 1415, 256 C.R. 853, text, p. 711, People v. Turner (1990) 219 C.A.3d 1207, 268 C.R. 686, text, p. 712, People v. Wright (1990) 222 C.A.3d 1002, 272 C.R. 219, text, p. 712, People v. Robinson (1991) 226 C.A.3d 1581, 277 C.R. 504, text, p. 711, People v. Saucedo (1995) 33 C.A.4th 1230, 40 C.R.2d 153, text, p. 712, People v. Walton (1996) 42 C.A.4th 1004, 49 C.R.2d 917, text, p. 710, and People v. Lepe (1997) 57 C.A.4th 977, 67 C.R.2d 525, text, §30.) "Here, as the Court of Appeal correctly concluded, the undisputed facts do not demonstrate that the prosecution exercised reasonable diligence to secure [the witness'] attendance at defendant's trial." (24 C.4th 904.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

E. Unavailable as a Witness.

8. Absence.

d. When Search for Witness Should Begin.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 30

[§ 30] When Search for Witness Should Begin.

(1) Trial Setting Date or Date of Trial. "If the prosecution had moved alertly after the setting of the case, it seems clear that it could have had the witness present at the trial, and it is for this reason that we feel that his evidence given at the preliminary examination was not properly introduced at the trial." (People v. Harris (1968) 266 C.A.2d 426, 434, 72 C.R. 423 [6 weeks elapsed after trial date set before district attorney made any effort to have witness available for trial]; see People v. Nieto (1968) 268 C.A.2d 231, 237, 73 C.R. 844 [quoting Harris and holding inexcusable 5-month delay pending trial before district attorney tried to procure witness' attendance through court process].) On the other hand, in People v. Saucedo (1995) 33 C.A.4th 1230, 1236, 40 C.R.2d 153, the prosecution's 8-day long effort to locate a witness was held adequate, even though it began only on the first day of trial, where the trial date had been uncertain due to a pending suppression motion, and the trial might have been continued had the motion been granted. (See People v. Lepe (1997) 57 C.A.4th 977, 986, 67 C.R.2d 525 [following Saucedo].)

A lesser degree of effort to procure the witness is required of the defendant, whose resources and ability to search are more limited than those of the prosecution. (See People v. Linder (1971) 5 C.3d 342, 347, 348, 96 C.R. 26, 486 P.2d 1226; People v. Forgason (1979) 99 C.A.3d 356, 362, 363, 364, 160 C.R. 263 [quoting Linder, pointing out that trial dates in criminal cases are often tentative, and declaring that it would be unreasonable to require subpoenas to be issued and served when it is likely that the trial will not commence].)

(2) Conduct of Witness. The proper date on which to begin a diligent search is affected by "whether it appeared likely to a prosecuting attorney preparing for trial that there would be no difficulty in securing the attendance of the witnesses." (People v. Horn (1964) 225 C.A.2d 1, 8, 36 C.R. 898.) In the following cases, the conduct of the witness affected the court's determination that, under the circumstances, the timing of the prosecution's efforts satisfied the reasonable diligence requirement: People v. Benjamin (1970) 3 C.A.3d 687, 697, 83 C.R. 764 [witness was Viet Nam-bound Marine; although search was slight and began at late date, prior cooperation of witness justified assumption that if he had not been sent away on military service, he would have been available]; People v. Rodriguez (1971) 18 C.A.3d 793, 797, 96 C.R. 162 [witness actively avoiding service; trial judge could have concluded that earlier efforts to complete service would have been unsuccessful]; People v. Smith (1971) 22 C.A.3d 25, 31, 99 C.R. 171 [unsuccessful attempt had been made to subpoena witness for trial of defendant's companion; more timely attempt to subpoena him for defendant's trial would, therefore, have been of no avail].

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Trial Setting Date or Date of Trial. People v. Saucedo (1995) 33 C.A.4th 1230, 40 C.R.2d 153, text, p. 713, and People v. Lepe (1997) 57 C.A.4th 977, 67 C.R.2d 525, text, p. 713, were disapproved in People v. Cromer (2001) 24 C.4th 889, 901, footnote 3, 103 C.R.2d 23, 15 P.3d 243, Supp., supra, §29, to the extent they applied an abuse of discretion standard in reviewing the trial court's reasonable diligence determination.

II. STATEMENTS NOT WITHIN THE RULE

A. Words Part of Issue.

1. General Principle.

[§ 31] General Principle.

"There is a well-established exception or departure from the hearsay rule applying to cases in which the very fact in controversy is whether certain things were said or done and not as to whether these things were true or false, and in these cases the words or acts are admissible not as hearsay but as original evidence." (People v. Henry (1948) 86 C.A.2d 785, 789, 195 P.2d 478, infra, §35; see People v. Rosson (1962) 202 C.A.2d 480, 486, 487, 20 C.R. 833, infra, §45; Russell v. Geis (1967) 251 C.A.2d 560, 571, 59 C.R. 569, quoting the text; Weathers v. Kaiser Foundation Hosp. (1971) 5 C.3d 98, 109, 95 C.R. 516, 485 P.2d 1132, citing the text; People v. Freeman (1971) 20 C.A.3d 488, 492, 97 C.R. 717, citing the text; People v. Patton (1976) 63 C.A.3d 211, 219, 133 C.R. 533, infra, §35, citing the text; Stewart v. Estate of Bohnert (1980) 101 C.A.3d 978, 990, 162 C.R. 126, citing the text; Simon v. Steelman (1990) 224 C.A.3d 1002, 1006, footnote 3, 274 C.R. 218; Anderson v. United States (1974) 417 U.S. 211, 94 S.Ct. 2253, 2260, 41 L.Ed.2d 20, 28.)

In these situations, the words themselves, written or oral, are "operative facts," and an issue in the case is whether they were uttered or written. (See 2 McCormick 5th, §249; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1770; 29 Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §665; 2 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 48; 19 Cal. L. Rev. 246; infra, §32 et seq.)

This rule is, of course, inapplicable where the issue does involve truth. Thus, in Am-Cal Inv. Co. v. Sharlyn Estates (1967) 255 C.A.2d 526, 540, 63 C.R. 518, plaintiff purchaser sued for specific performance of a land contract. To show that he had a legal commitment of funds with which to pay, he called a loan broker to testify that he had received a letter of commitment from Authorized Investors, a lending institution. The letter was never produced. Held, citing the text, the testimony was inadmissible hearsay. The issue was not simply whether an offer of a loan had been made, but rather the truth of the statements therein, i.e., that the lender had the ability to lend and was willing to lend the money for this land. (255 C.A.2d 541.)

II. STATEMENTS NOT WITHIN THE RULE

A. Words Part of Issue.

2. Illustrations: Civil Cases.

a. Formation of Contract or Novation.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 32

[§ 32] Formation of Contract or Novation.

Proof of the oral or written words of offer and acceptance, or other statements constituting a contract or novation, may be made in an action based upon it. (See 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1770; 2 McCormick 5th, §249.) Thus, in Bank of America v. Taliaferro (1956) 144 C.A.2d 578, 581, 301 P.2d 393, S, defaulting conditional buyer of a refrigerator, abandoned her apartment, and defendant landlord took the refrigerator. Plaintiff bank, assignee of the conditional seller, sued the landlord for conversion, and introduced the conditional sales contract and assignment. Held, the objection (that the transaction was between strangers to the suit and that the writing was therefore hearsay) was properly overruled.

In Young v. Benton (1913) 21 C.A. 382, 390, 131 P. 1051, the issue was whether plaintiff Y agreed to a proposed novation substituting defendant B as debtor in place of a corporation. B objected to a question asked of a witness, as to what Y said, on the ground that his self-serving statement made out of B's presence was hearsay. Held, the question was proper, and the answer of the witness--that Y said that he was satisfied with the contemplated arrangement--was admissible. "[T]he court followed the only method of ascertaining whether Young agreed to the substitution of the new debtor and the release of the old. The evidence was not hearsay for the reason that the issue involved the very statement that Young made." (See Zuckerman v. Pacific Savings Bank (1986) 187 C.A.3d 1394, 1404, footnote 2, 232 C.R. 458 [documents offered to show nonexistence of accord and satisfaction were not hearsay; dispute involved legal effect of documents, not truth of material therein].)

II. STATEMENTS NOT WITHIN THE RULE

A. Words Part of Issue.

2. Illustrations: Civil Cases.

b. Defamation or Deceit.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 33

[§ 33] Defamation or Deceit.

In an action for defamation or deceit, the words spoken, written, or printed may be proved. (See 2 McCormick 5th, §249; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1770.)

In Russell v. Geis (1967) 251 C.A.2d 560, 571, 59 C.R. 569, defendant employer made false charges of dishonesty against plaintiff, which resulted in her indictment and trial. After her acquittal, she brought an action for defamation, seeking damages for humiliation and mental suffering. On this issue, she was permitted to testify that her daughter told her that friends called her mother a thief and refused to play with her. (25 C.A.2d 571.)

In Stoneking v. Briggs (1967) 254 C.A.2d 563, 62 C.R. 249, defendant made slanderous statements about plaintiff to newspaper reporters, and newspapers of wide circulation repeated them in a number of articles. Plaintiff sued defendant alone, for slander, seeking damages on the basis of foreseeable republication of the oral statements. The newspaper articles were offered in evidence and held admissible. Although they were hearsay on the truth of the matters recited, plaintiff obviously did not offer them for that purpose; the sole and proper purpose of the offer was to show the extent of circulation of the slander and the aggravated harm caused. (254 C.A.2d 577.)

II. STATEMENTS NOT WITHIN THE RULE

A. Words Part of Issue.

2. Illustrations: Civil Cases.

c. Other Examples.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 34

[§ 34] Other Examples.

(1) Words of Notice. Where the giving of notice is in issue, the words constituting notice may be proved. (See 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1770; People v. Rosson (1962) 202 C.A.2d 480, 486, 487, 20 C.R. 833, infra, §45; see Marshall v. Marshall (1965) 232 C.A.2d 232, 254, 42 C.R. 686 [letter with self-serving hearsay properly offered for limited purpose of showing that it was received].)

(2) Words of Authorization. In Bumb v. Bennett (1958) 51 C.2d 294, 301, 333 P.2d 23, partnership real property was in the names of partners E and B. An assignment was executed by E alone. To prove the necessary authorization, E testified that he had discussed the assignment with B and B had said "Go ahead." Held, this was admissible, for the witness was testifying to the fact that the statement was made.

(3) Words of Relationship. In Rogers v. Whitson (1964) 228 C.A.2d 662, 675, 39 C.R. 849, bills submitted by D to defendant owner were properly offered, not as proof of the matters recited therein, but as evidence of D's relationship as an independent contractor.

(4) Words of Solicitation. Greenblatt v. Munro (1958) 161 C.A.2d 596, 601, 326 P.2d 929, involved review of an order revoking a liquor license for allowing an employee to solicit alcoholic drinks. M, an enforcement agent, testified that Anna, defendant's entertainer, asked him to buy her "mists," which she said contained brandy, vodka, and orange juice. Held, admissible. The evidence was incompetent hearsay on the alcoholic content of the drink, but it was relevant and competent direct evidence of the fact of solicitation.

In Los Robles Motor Lodge v. Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control (1966) 246 C.A.2d 198, 205, 54 C.R. 547, involving review of an order revoking a liquor license for keeping a disorderly house, investigators testified to conversations with females who solicited them on a number of occasions. Held, citing the text, the conversations were admissible on two theories: (a) original evidence on the issue, i.e., the fact of solicitation for prostitution. (b) Adoptive admission: The statements were made in the presence of a bartender, whose conduct manifested his assent (see infra, §103).

(5) (New) Words Imparting Information That Is Acted Upon. In Holland v. Union Pac. R. Co. (2007) 154 C.A.4th 940, 65 C.R.3d 145, the issue was whether plaintiff's failure to file a timely administrative complaint was excusable. He maintained that the Department of Fair Employment and Housing had told him that his submission of a questionnaire was sufficient to make his claim timely. The evidence supporting this argument was excluded as hearsay, and defendant's summary judgment motion was granted. Held, reversed. The excluded evidence was not offered for truth of the facts it contained; rather, it was offered to prove that plaintiff obtained certain information, whether accurate or not, and acted in accordance with it. (154 C.A.4th 947.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

II. STATEMENTS NOT WITHIN THE RULE

A. Words Part of Issue.

3. Illustrations: Criminal Cases.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 35

[§ 35] Illustrations: Criminal Cases.

(1) Aiding and Abetting. In People v. Dalton (1959) 172 C.A.2d 15, 18, 341 P.2d 793, defendant was charged with aiding and abetting a violation of Health & Saf.C. 11502 (selling promised narcotic but delivering another substance). An enforcement agent testified that defendant told him he had no narcotics, but that his man J had them (pointing to J). The agent then spoke to J out of defendant's presence, and J said he would get them, took the agent's money, and returned with the false narcotics. Held, the statements of J were admissible against defendant. They were not offered to prove their truth (that J could or would get narcotics), but they did tend to prove a fact essential to the conviction of defendant for aiding and abetting, namely, J's commission of the crime of selling a narcotic and furnishing a substitute.

(2) Conspiracy. In People v. Collier (1931) 111 C.A. 215, 240, 295 P. 898, a prosecution for conspiracy to commit bribery, the oral conversations constituting the criminal agreement were admitted. "Thus, when, as a part of the agreement, one or more of the conspirators undertakes to ask for a bribe, one or more agrees to accept a bribe, one or more agrees to do or not to do some act for the purpose of effectuating the compact, and one or more of the conspirators gives his assent to the compact either by express words or by actions from which such assent might be implied, evidence of such facts, when the agreement is in parol, is competent evidence of the acts or declarations which form 'a part of the transaction' which is in dispute." (See People v. Curtis (1951) 106 C.A.2d 321, 326, 235 P.2d 51; Anderson v. United States (1974) 417 U.S. 211, 94 S.Ct. 2253, 41 L.Ed.2d 20 [in prosecution for conspiracy to commit election fraud, prior testimony of alleged conspirators was properly admitted to prove they had made the statements]; infra, §132.)

(3) Drug Sales. In People v. Gonzales (1968) 68 C.2d 467, 67 C.R. 551, 439 P.2d 655, police officer M testified that an informer in his presence telephoned a bar, asked for defendant by name, and told the person answering that he wanted to see him in 10 minutes to buy narcotics. At about this time, police officer H saw a man believed to be defendant leave the bar. A few minutes later, police officer M observed defendant arrive, take money from the informer, and deliver the narcotics. Held, the testimony was admissible. It was offered merely to show that the conversation was held; and defendant's connection with the conversation was shown by evidence of his leaving the bar, meeting the informer, and selling the drug, at the approximate time of the conversation. (68 C.2d 471.)

(4) Fraud. In People v. Henry (1948) 86 C.A.2d 785, 789, 195 P.2d 478, a prosecution for obtaining narcotics by fraud, evidence was offered as follows: A pharmacist testified that he received a phone call from a man representing himself to be Dr. L, ordering narcotics to be delivered to Mrs. M; that he called Dr. L who said he had made no such request; that later defendant came in to obtain the prescribed drug. Held, this testimony was admissible although defendant was not a party to the conversations.

(5) Prostitution and Pandering. In People v. Patton (1976) 63 C.A.3d 211, 219, 133 C.R. 533, a prosecution for pandering, a girl arrested as a runaway agreed to telephone defendant about his offer to engage her as a prostitute. She did so, and the police tape recorded the conversation in which he repeated the offer. Held, the tape was admissible. The statements of defendant were not hearsay; they constituted the substantive offense of which he was charged (encouraging a woman to become a prostitute). (See People v. Dell (1991) 232 C.A.3d 248, 258, 283 C.R. 361 [words of solicitation for prostitution are "operative facts or verbal acts"; thus police officers' testimony that escorts offered to perform sex for fee was admissible against escort service operator in prosecution for pimping and pandering].)

(6) Rescue. In People v. Jones (1962) 205 C.A.2d 460, 467, 23 C.R. 418, defendant was charged with rescue and obstructing officers in an attempted arrest and escape of X, an unidentified youth who had been arrested for using lewd language in the presence of women and children. To establish the fact of lawful custody of X (as a necessary basis for the charge of rescue), a police officer was allowed to testify to his conversation with X, reciting the language used by X. Held, quoting the text, this was proper.

(7) Other Situations. Other cases applying the rule are People v. Freeman (1971) 20 C.A.3d 488, 492, 97 C.R. 717 [defendant, Norman Freeman, claimed to be asleep at time in question; witness could properly testify she overheard her daughter greet a man with words, "Hi, Norman," at daughter's home; citing the text]; People v. Reyes (1976) 62 C.A.3d 53, 67, 132 C.R. 848 [witness testified to overhearing persons in bar giving defendant series of numbers; spoken words were part of issue making up elements of bookmaking]; People v. Burnham (1986) 176 C.A.3d 1134, 1144, footnote 10, 222 C.R. 630 ([rape victim's consent is nonhearsay "operative fact"; hence, testimony of defendant that victim uttered words of consent is admissible].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Aiding and Abetting. The crime for which the defendant was being prosecuted in People v. Dalton (1959) 172 C.A.2d 15, 341 P.2d 793, text, p. 717--selling promised narcotic but delivering another substance--is now covered in Health & Saf.C. 11355.

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

II. STATEMENTS NOT WITHIN THE RULE B. Statements Relevant as Circumstantial Evidence. 1. In General.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 36

[§ 36] In General.

Frequently, an utterance may justify an inference concerning a fact in issue, regardless of the truth or falsity of the utterance itself. It is admitted as circumstantial evidence of that independent fact. The distinction between these two uses of the evidence is not always readily apparent. In People v. Williams (1992) 3 C.A.4th 1535, 5 C.R.2d 372, the court held that a fishing license and two checks bearing defendant's name, found by police in an apartment and offered by defendant to establish his standing to contest the propriety of the search, were improperly excluded as hearsay. The court first described Jefferson's analysis of a similar situation: A utility bill is relevant to establish that defendant is the possessor of the premises only by accepting as true the implied statement of the utility company that defendant, as the person named on the utility bill, is the possessor or occupant; therefore, it is hearsay. But the court rejected this view: "[T]he fishing license and two checks at issue here are more likely to be found in the residence of the person named on those documents than in the residence of any other person. Accordingly, regardless of the truth of any express or implied statement contained in those documents, they are circumstantial evidence that a person with the same name as the defendant resided in the apartment from which they were seized. Therefore, when introduced for the purpose of showing that residency, they are admissible nonhearsay evidence." (3 C.A.4th 1542, 1543.)

- B. Statements Relevant as Circumstantial Evidence.
  - 2. Evidence of Mental State of Declarant.
    - a. Inference as to Belief, Intent, or Motive.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 37

[§ 37] Inference as to Belief, Intent, or Motive.

If an utterance, regardless of its truth or falsity, justifies an inference concerning the declarant's mental state (e.g., belief, intent, motive), it may be admissible as circumstantial evidence of that mental state. (See Skelly v. Richman (1970) 10 C.A.3d 844, 858, 89 C.R. 556 [quoting Wigmore: "The Hearsay Rule makes no opposition, because the utterance is not used for the sake of inducing belief in any assertion it may contain. The assertion, if in form there is one, is to be disregarded, and the indirect inference alone regarded"]; Estate of Stevenson (1992) 11 C.A.4th 852, 863, 14 C.R.2d 250, citing the text; 2 McCormick 5th, §§250, 294; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§1715, 1790; 29 Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §667; 1962 A.S. 344.)

There has been much discussion of the application of this theory to public opinion polls or surveys, e.g., in trademark and unfair competition cases. (See 1 McCormick 5th, §208; 66 Harv L. Rev. 498, 501; 98 A.L.R. Fed 20; 18 Proof of Facts 2d 305; 29 Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §683; 1962 A.S. 341; 1963 A.S. 296.)

See Colarossi v. Coty US (2002) 97 C.A.4th 1142, 1150, 119 C.R.2d 131, citing the text [in wrongful termination action alleging that plaintiff was discharged for cooperating in sexual harassment investigation, trial judge erred in excluding statement of another employee that target of investigation (employer's director of merchandising) threatened to get revenge on those who participated in it; statement was not hearsay, as it showed target's mental state, i.e., that she felt wronged and harbored ill will toward those she held responsible]; 2 McCormick 6th, §§250, 294.

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

II. STATEMENTS NOT WITHIN THE RULE B. Statements Relevant as Circumstantial Evidence. 2. Evidence of Mental State of Declarant. b. Civil Cases.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 38

[§ 38] Civil Cases.

(1) In General. One class of utterances, inadmissible for truth but admissible as circumstantial evidence, consists of charges of immorality, wrongdoing, etc., when the issue is the hatred or malice of the declarant. (See Robinson v. McKnight (1930) 103 C.A. 718, 727, 284 P. 1056, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §123; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1790.)

Another class consists of obviously irrational or delusive statements, which, like irrational conduct, are offered to prove the incompetency of the declarant. (See 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1766.)

(2) Illustrations.

(a) Fear of clouded title. In Phillips v. Glazer (1949) 94 C.A.2d 673, 211 P.2d 37, defendant posted disparaging signs in front of plaintiff's property ("Anyone buying No. 20 Malibu is buying law suit ... Title clouded"). Plaintiff, suing for slander of title, called realtors, who testified to declarations of prospective purchasers ("didn't want to get himself into litigation," "I can't go on and make any deal and buy myself a headache," etc.). Held, the evidence was admissible. It was not offered to prove the truth of the declarations that the title was clouded; plaintiff, who offered the evidence, was contending the exact opposite. It was properly offered to prove the state of mind of the prospective purchasers--fear or suspicion that the title was clouded. (94 C.A.2d 676.)

(b) Fear of molesting parent. In re Cheryl H. (1984) 153 C.A.3d 1098, 200 C.R. 789, was a juvenile court proceeding to adjudge a 3-year-old girl a dependent child on findings that she had been sexually molested by her father. Cheryl's declarations that her father had molested her were inadmissible hearsay on the issue whether he had done so, but were admissible nonhearsay on the issue of her state of mind. (153 C.A.3d 1131, citing the text.) And its relevancy was clear. A child's belief that her father had harmed her tends to prove that it is not in the child's best interests to permit his continued contact with her. (153 C.A.3d 1131, 1132.) (See In re Dorinda A. (1992) 10 C.A.4th 1657, 1662, 13 C.R.2d 653, 10 Summary (9th), Parent and Child, Supp., §689A [following In re Cheryl H.].)

In re Clara B. (1993) 20 C.A.4th 988, 998, 25 C.R.2d 56, 10 Summary (9th), Parent and Child, Supp., §689A, distinguished In re Cheryl H. and In re Dorinda A. The Clara B. court explained that in the jurisdictional portion of the proceedings, the minor's out-of-court statements showing that she feared her father were inadmissible hearsay, because there their use was to prove or disprove that he molested her. (20 C.A.4th 999.) (On child dependency hearsay exception, see infra, §172.)

(c) Knowledge of danger or defect. In Taylor v. Centennial Bowl (1966) 65 C.2d 114, 52 C.R. 561, 416 P.2d 793, plaintiff had been assaulted by another patron of defendant's bowling establishment. Plaintiff's theory was that defendant failed to warn or otherwise protect her against the known danger of such attacks. A police officer was called to testify that he had frequently been summoned by defendant to quell violent disturbances. Held, exclusion of this evidence was error; it was relevant to show defendant's knowledge of the danger to patrons and consequently of the nature of his duty. (65 C.2d 125.) (See Magnolia Square Homeowners Assn. v. Safeco Ins. Co. (1990) 221 C.A.3d 1049, 1057, 271 C.R. 1 [complaint was not hearsay where offered to prove that plaintiff had notice or knowledge of structural defects in condominium, rather than that such defects in fact existed]; on knowledge of recipient of statement, see infra, §41.)

(d) Sobriety. In Sandoval v. Southern Calif. Enterprises (1950) 98 C.A.2d 240, 219 P.2d 928, plaintiff sued for compensatory and punitive damages for a beating, false arrest, and prosecution after ejection from a dance hall for alleged intoxication. Over objection, he was allowed to testify to conversations between himself, a physician, and police officers, to show his recollection of what was said. Held, this was admissible on the issue of his mental state, as tending to negate intoxication. (98 C.A.2d 244.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. See Rufo v. Simpson (2001) 86 C.A.4th 573, 591, 103 C.R.2d 492, citing the text [in wrongful death action arising from murder of defendant's wife, telephone call made to battered women's shelter, apparently by victim, was properly admitted to show how she felt about defendant and to explain her termination of relationship, which in turn was alleged to have provoked defendant to murder; statements were not admitted for truth and thus were not hearsay].(2) Illustrations.

(b) Fear of molesting parent.

Cross-Reference: The discussions of In re Dorinda A. and In re Clara B. were deleted from the 10th edition of Summary.

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

II. STATEMENTS NOT WITHIN THE RULE B. Statements Relevant as Circumstantial Evidence. 2. Evidence of Mental State of Declarant. c. Criminal Cases.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 39

[§ 39] Criminal Cases.

(1) Preliminary Distinction. Obviously, a person's express declaration of belief or intent (e.g., "I hate X"; "I am going to kill X"), offered to prove the truth of the matter stated, is hearsay. It is admissible only under the exception allowing declarations of the declarant's state of mind (infra, §198 et seq.). If, however, the statements are not express declarations of belief, intent, or other state of mind, but are nevertheless of such a nature that an inference of the declarant's state of mind may be drawn therefrom, the hearsay rule does not apply at all. (See 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1715.)

(2) Statements Subject to Multiple Classification. Even where statements are express declarations of a mental state and therefore hearsay, they may be received for a distinct, nonhearsay purpose. Thus, statements of a defendant before or after the commission of an alleged criminal act, admitting the act and disclosing knowledge of its wrongfulness, could be both (a) an admission, within the hearsay exception, and (b) circumstantial evidence of a rational mental state, to rebut the defense of insanity. (See People v. Wolff (1964) 61 C.2d 795, 810, 40 C.R. 271, 394 P.2d 959.) And statements of the owner of a vehicle to law enforcement officers giving consent to a search may be admitted as words of authorization, in the same way that words of offer and acceptance are admitted to prove the formation of a contract (see supra, §36). (People v. Nelson (1985) 166 C.A.3d 1209, 1215, 212 C.R. 799, pointing out alternative analysis of People v. Donnell (1975) 52 C.A.3d 762, 772, 125 C.R. 310, where statement of consent was found admissible under state of mind exception.) A similar possibility of multiple classification exists in connection with the complaint of the victim in a rape case. (See infra, §167.)

(3) Illustrations.

(a) Guilty knowledge. In People v. Tahl (1967) 65 C.2d 719, 739, 56 C.R. 318, 423 P.2d 246, defendant was charged with the murder of two persons. Less than 2 hours after the crime, he was with a woman, and they heard a radio announcement of the killing of two persons. She said, "I wonder who that was," and he replied, "That was Vic and his wife." Held, admissible to show his knowledge of the identity of the victims before any member of the public was so informed.

In People v. Putty (1967) 251 C.A.2d 991, 996, 59 C.R. 881, defendant was charged with receiving stolen goods. His statements to a prospective buyer that the goods were "cool" after 7 months was admissible, not to prove that they were stolen (fully established by other evidence), but on the issue of his knowledge that they were.

(b) Intention to form conspiracy. In People v. Sanders (1995) 11 C.4th 475, 517, 518, 46 C.R.2d 751, 905 P.2d 420, a witness' testimony that a codefendant asked him if he wanted to make money by robbing a restaurant was properly admitted for the nonhearsay purpose of establishing the codefendant's intention to form a conspiracy to rob the restaurant.

(c) Victim's fear of strangers. In People v. Arguello (1967) 65 C.2d 768, 773, 56 C.R. 274, 423 P.2d 202, the prosecution was for murder of an elderly widow by defendant, her handyman. The prosecution called a next-door neighbor of the victim to testify to the victim's statement that she did not allow strangers in the house. Held, citing the text, this was admissible to show that she was fearful of strangers, relevant to the theory that the murderer was not a stranger to her.

II. STATEMENTS NOT WITHIN THE RULE B. Statements Relevant as Circumstantial Evidence. 3. Evidence of Mental State of Recipient. a. In General.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 40

[§ 40] In General.

A statement by the declarant may be admitted if it tends to show the mental state or attitude of the person who heard it or read it. (See People v. Marsh (1962) 58 C.2d 732, 737, 26 C.R. 300, 376 P.2d 300; People v. Reeder (1978) 82 C.A.3d 543, 550, 147 C.R. 275; Stewart v. Estate of Bohnert (1980) 101 C.A.3d 978, 990, 162 C.R. 126, citing the text; People v. Bolden (1996) 44 C.A.4th 707, 715, 52 C.R.2d 485, citing the text [in arson prosecution, testimony of defendant's girlfriend that she conveyed her godmother's message to defendant not to come around her house anymore was not hearsay, as it was offered to show that defendant had motive (i.e., anger) to set fire to house]; 1 Jefferson, California Evidence Benchbook 3d, §1.28 et seq.; 2 McCormick 5th, §249; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1789.) This rule applies only where the recipient's reaction to the statement is relevant; if that reaction does not tend to prove any issue in the case, it is excluded as irrelevant. (People v. Scalzi (1981) 126 C.A.3d 901, 906, 907, 179 C.R. 61.)

Typical issues on which these statements are commonly offered are knowledge (infra, §41), belief (infra, §§42, 43), and good faith (infra, §§44, 45).

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

II. STATEMENTS NOT WITHIN THE RULE B. Statements Relevant as Circumstantial Evidence. 3. Evidence of Mental State of Recipient. b. Knowledge.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 41

[§ 41] Knowledge.

(1) Dangerous or Defective Condition. The principle allowing admission of a statement that tends to show the mental state of its recipient (supra, §40) finds frequent application in negligence cases where liability is based on the dangerous condition of the defendant's property. Statements of a third person concerning a dangerous condition are admissible for the limited purpose of showing knowledge on the part of the defendant who heard them, though they are inadmissible hearsay on the issue whether there was in fact a defect or dangerous condition. (Smith v. Whittier (1892) 95 C. 279, 290, 293, 30 P. 529.)

In Westman v. Clifton's Brookdale (1948) 89 C.A.2d 307, 310, 200 P.2d 814, plaintiff, alleging that he fell down defendant's unlighted stairs, offered evidence that defendant's floor manager had admitted to plaintiff's husband that others had fallen on the stairs. Defendant objected that the manager's statement might have been based on hearsay. Held, the evidence was admissible as tending to show knowledge of the condition by an authorized agent, imputable to the principal.

In Jensen v. Southern Pac. Co. (1954) 129 C.A.2d 67, 75, 276 P.2d 703, the issue was whether a grade crossing was sufficiently protected. Plaintiff introduced applications made by the city of Burlingame to the Public Utilities Commission requesting added safeguards, including gates. Held, admissible; this indirect notification to the railroad that the city considered the crossing dangerous tended to show knowledge of the possibility of such danger.

In Hickman v. Arons (1960) 187 C.A.2d 167, 171, 9 C.R. 379, a fire gutted defendant's brick building, leaving an unsupported wall, which fell 15 days later and killed decedent. In this wrongful death action, plaintiffs introduced a notice mailed to defendants by the chief building inspector of the city advising them of the dangerous condition. Held, this was admissible to show knowledge of the condition.

(2) Employee's Harassing Behavior. The same principle was applied in Bihun v. AT&T Information Systems (1993) 13 C.A.4th 976, 16 C.R.2d 787, an action for sexual harassment of plaintiff employee by one of defendant employer's senior officials. The trial judge admitted communications by employees to some of defendant's managers concerning the senior official's sexual misconduct with other female employees. Held, these statements were properly admitted; they demonstrated defendant's knowledge of the official's behavior and complaints about that behavior, which defendant itself had made an issue on the question of liability. (13 C.A.4th 988, 989.)

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 42

[§ 42] Civil Cases.

In Johnson v. Nicholson (1958) 159 C.A.2d 395, 411, 324 P.2d 307, plaintiff and decedent J were injured by an explosion of gasoline with which they were cleaning a floor in close proximity to another workman with a blowtorch. One issue was whether the use of gasoline by the two workmen was directed by defendant contractor's superintendent. Plaintiff sought to testify to what J told plaintiff about directions received by J from the superintendent. Held, admissible, to show that J believed he had been instructed by the superintendent to use gasoline.

In First Western Bank & Trust Co. v. Omizzolo (1959) 176 C.A.2d 555, 563, 1 C.R. 758, decedent had designated her husband as the beneficiary under her retirement fund, and had failed to change the designation on their divorce. The issue was whether their property settlement nevertheless terminated the husband's rights. Decedent's attorney had written a letter to her after the divorce, stating that the money in the fund was, under the agreement, her sole and separate property. Held, this was admissible, not as proof of that fact, but to meet the argument of the husband that her failure to change the beneficiary showed an intent to leave the money to him. The receipt of the letter tended to show her belief that no further act was necessary to divest the husband of his interest.

In San Francisco v. City Inv. Corp. (1971) 15 C.A.3d 1031, 1037, 93 C.R. 690, the agent for a building owner testified that the owner believed an agreement he had with the city permitted him to leave a building vacant and barricaded for an indefinite time. On cross-examination, however, he admitted seeing a letter from the city to the owner's attorney, stating that the agreement was a temporary stopgap measure. Held, the letter was properly admitted to impeach the agent's testimony. (15 C.A.3d 1038, citing the text.)

II. STATEMENTS NOT WITHIN THE RULE

B. Statements Relevant as Circumstantial Evidence.

3. Evidence of Mental State of Recipient.

c. Belief.

2. Criminal Cases.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 43

[§ 43] Criminal Cases.

In People v. Vogel (1956) 46 C.2d 798, 805, 299 P.2d 850, a bigamy prosecution, the statement of defendant's first wife, that she was going to divorce him, was held admissible on the issue of his belief that she had done so (defense of bona fide belief in right to remarry).

In People v. Roberson (1959) 167 C.A.2d 429, 431, 334 P.2d 666, defendant, charged with selling narcotics to S, an undercover police agent, denied the sale, and the evidence consisted solely of testimony of the defendant and S. Because no person would knowingly sell narcotics to an enforcement officer, defendant offered, as circumstantial evidence to support his denial, proof that he believed S to be a policeman. The proof consisted of the testimony of P, that P had told defendant that he, P, had heard that S was an officer. Held, it was reversible error to exclude this testimony. (See People v. Reeder (1978) 82 C.A.3d 543, 551, 147 C.R. 275 [discussing Roberson and other cases].)

In People v. Marsh (1962) 58 C.2d 732, 737, 26 C.R. 300, 376 P.2d 300, a prosecution for obtaining money under false pretenses as to the curative value of a machine, a major defense was that defendants believed the machines possessed the curative powers represented, and hence, lacked intent to defraud. On the issue of good faith belief, they sought to introduce reports and conversations with doctors and scientists commenting on the effectiveness of the machines. The trial judge permitted defendants to testify that they had engaged in conversations and had received communications of this nature, but refused to permit proof of the contents of the conversations and communications. Held, this was reversible error.

In People v. Arguello (1967) 65 C.2d 768, 774, 56 C.R. 274, 423 P.2d 202, defendant handyman was charged with the murder of his employer, an elderly widow. He had tried unsuccessfully to borrow $ 5 from the victim's sister-in-law 2 days before; he told a friend, Mrs. M, the next day that he had only $ 2; about $ 58 was missing from the victim's purse; on the day of the killing, defendant had about $ 35. A prosecution witness testified that, the day before the killing, male and female voices were heard in the victim's home, and that the female voice said, "No, I'm not going to give you any more. You got all you are going to get from me. I am not giving you any more money. ... Get away from me." Held, citing the text, this was admissible. Because there was no evidence of anyone else living in the house, it could be inferred that the female voice was the victim's. Evidence that defendant was a male she would allow in the house, and that he had borrowed from her before and tried to borrow from her sister-in-law, supported the inference that the male voice was his. And the statement was admissible to prove that the man to whom the victim spoke believed she would not voluntarily give him more money, thus furnishing a motive for the killing (robbery).

The principle allowing admission of a statement that tends to show the mental state of its recipient may also be applied in a preliminary hearing of the issue of voluntariness of a confession. In People v. Padden (1965) 238 C.A.2d 708, 48 C.R. 311, one defendant's counsel called him for voir dire purposes only, and asked him whether Officer Jones had made any promises as an inducement to confess. The judge sustained an objection. Held, this was error. "Here there was neither claim nor issue that any promise made by Jones was binding or truthful. What the defense was trying to establish was that the promise had been made and that defendants, believing Jones, had experienced a state of mind inducing them to confess. Thus, the evidence offered by defendants was not to prove the truth of Jones' statements but to show the mental state these statements produced in defendants." (238 C.A.2d 714.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

- II. STATEMENTS NOT WITHIN THE RULE
- B. Statements Relevant as Circumstantial Evidence.
  - 3. Evidence of Mental State of Recipient.
  - d. Good Faith or Reasonableness of Conduct.
    - 1. Civil Cases.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 44

[§ 44] Civil Cases.

Where the good faith or the reasonableness of the conduct of a person is in question, statements of others on the basis of which the person acted may be shown. (See Central Heights Imp. Co. v. Memorial Parks (1940) 40 C.A.2d 591, 609, 105 P.2d 596; Gilbert v. Gilbert (1950) 98 C.A.2d 444, 446, 220 P.2d 573; Weber v. Leuschner (1966) 240 C.A.2d 829, 839, 50 C.R. 86, citing the text; Silva v. Lucky Stores (1998) 65 C.A.4th 256, 265, 76 C.R.2d 382, citing the text [reasonableness of employer's investigation into employee's alleged misconduct before firing him]; 29 Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §666.)

In Aitken v. White (1949) 93 C.A.2d 134, 145, 208 P.2d 788, an action for false arrest and imprisonment, the defense was reasonable and probable cause to believe that plaintiff had committed theft in defendants' store. Defendants sought to introduce the report of a detective agency received by them prior to the arrest, concerning plaintiff's association with S, an ex-convict, who had been seen together with plaintiff in the store on the day of the theft. Held, the report was admissible; plaintiff's reputation and any prior acts of misconduct were relevant to the issue of defendants' grounds of suspicion and the existence of probable cause.

In Dussault v. Condon (1959) 170 C.A.2d 693, 696, 339 P.2d 896, a false imprisonment action was based on defendant's arrest of boys at a racetrack. Defendant officer was allowed to testify that several persons not personally known to him complained that three boys were causing a disturbance. Held, this was admissible to show that defendant could reasonably have believed that the three he found were the only ones disturbing the peace in his presence.

In Castaline v. Los Angeles (1975) 47 C.A.3d 580, 121 C.R. 786, plaintiff was physically able to return to her job in November 1969, but did not do so until April 1970. To support her personal injury claim for lost earnings until the April date, she testified, "I went back to work in November, but I found they didn't want me; they hired a new girl. They told me it was too long to wait." Held, the evidence was admissible (though the last sentence of the testimony might have been vulnerable to a proper objection). "Plaintiff Marilyn was testifying to what occurred when she attempted to go back to her job. She acted on what she heard and observed and her testimony was, for the purpose of establishing that she had not worked for the county for some period after she was physically well, no more hearsay than if she had testified that a supervisor shut the door in her face." (47 C.A.3d 591.)

Another illustration is the use of statements of others on the issue of diligence in attempting to discover a party or witness for purposes of service of process. The process server makes inquiries in various likely places, and receives many negative answers as to the whereabouts of the missing person. Proof of these unsuccessful inquiries is admissible. (See 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1414; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1789; 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §955.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

- II. STATEMENTS NOT WITHIN THE RULE
- B. Statements Relevant as Circumstantial Evidence.
  - 3. Evidence of Mental State of Recipient.
  - d. Good Faith or Reasonableness of Conduct.
  - 2. Criminal Cases.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 45

[§ 45] Criminal Cases.

The rule that statements on which a recipient acted are admissible to show the recipient's good faith or reasonable conduct (see supra, §44) is also applied in criminal cases. (See People v. Nichols (1970) 3 C.3d 150, 157, 89 C.R. 721, 474 P.2d 673 [in murder prosecution in which defendant's estranged wife accused him of setting fire that killed two small girls, wife's testimony that shortly before fire girls told her defendant had been ringing doorbell was properly allowed, as it showed reasonable basis for her testimony, thus rebutting inference of bias raised by defense on cross-examination].)

An out-of-court statement may be admitted to show that police officers had probable cause to make an arrest. (See People v. King (1956) 140 C.A.2d 1, 5, 294 P.2d 972.) However, this rule is applicable only where the legality of police conduct is at issue; if it is not, then the statement is excludable for lack of relevancy. (People v. Lucero (1998) 64 C.A.4th 1107, 1109, 1110, 75 C.R.2d 806.)

In People v. Rosson (1962) 202 C.A.2d 480, 486, 20 C.R. 833, defendant was charged with grand theft as a result of renting a car that he did not return. Because the jury might determine that he had no fraudulent intent at the time of renting, the issue whether he later conceived that intent, sufficient to support a conviction for embezzlement, was crucial. On that issue, he claimed that, unaware of express restrictions on use, he lent the car to C, thought it had been returned, and did not discover the truth until he returned to the locality after having been in custody in Nevada. The evidence consisted of an attempt to show by testimony of Mrs. E that he asked Mrs. E to get the car from C, that C falsely stated to her that he had returned it, and that she reported this answer to defendant. Held, it was error to exclude the questions dealing with Mrs. E's extrajudicial conversations with C and with defendant.

(a) Words part of issue. The questions were asked not to prove the truth of anything said, but merely to show "that words of demand, refusal and notice were uttered," i.e., that defendant made an effort to get the car back to the owner. (202 C.A.2d 486, 487; see supra, §31.)

(b) Mental state (good faith) of recipient. Another purpose of the questions was to show that defendant took no further steps to return the car because he relied on Mrs. E's report to him of C's statement that he had returned the car. (202 C.A.2d 486, 487.)

In People v. Duran (1976) 16 C.3d 282, 294, 127 C.R. 618, 545 P.2d 1322, defendant was charged with assault with a deadly weapon by a life-term prisoner. After prosecution witnesses identified him as the inmate who ran from the stabbing scene, defendant sought to explain the circumstances of his flight. He made an offer of proof that at a time when he had been punished for prison rule infractions, correctional officers had warned him that he could not again afford to become involved in any further incident or investigation while a prisoner, and he fled the scene to avoid involvement. The trial judge allowed him to testify about his reasons for fleeing, but refused to permit him to bolster his testimony by relating the warnings he had previously received. Held, exclusion of the warnings was error. "The extrajudicial statements which he offered are not his statements and are not declarations of his state of mind. They constitute only background material which, with other evidence, accounted for the state of mind testified to by defendant. The warnings were thus not offered to prove the matters asserted in the warnings, i.e., that defendant could not afford to become involved in an investigation, but rather were offered to prove that defendant reasonably entertained the particular state of mind which he claimed. Such extrajudicial statements which lend credibility to an asserted state of mind are relevant, competent evidence." (16 C.3d 295.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

II. STATEMENTS NOT WITHIN THE RULE

C. Nonassertive Conduct.

1. Nature of Problem.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 46

[§ 46] Nature of Problem.

Where conduct is actually a substitute for words (assertive conduct), it is excluded for the same reasons that would call for exclusion of the words. (See supra, §7.) But if the conduct is not intended as a substitute for words, the applicability of the hearsay rule is more questionable. One view is that the conduct is merely circumstantial evidence and outside the rule. The other is that, if the conduct is offered in proof of some fact, in order to draw inferences as to the person's belief in the truth of that fact, the conduct is an implied assertion of the fact and just as objectionable as an express assertion. (See 2 McCormick 5th, §250; 2 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §267; 2 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 45; 62 Harv. L. Rev. 190; 14 Stanf. L. Rev. 682; 1962 A.S. 339; 1964 A.S. 357.) (On whether acts indicative of attempted suicide are assertive or nonassertive conduct, see People v. Salcido (1966) 246 C.A.2d 450, 457, 54 C.R. 820, infra, §216, citing the text.)

No California case prior to the Code had analyzed the problem, but a few expressions indicated acceptance of the second view, that such conduct may be inadmissible hearsay. (See Estate of De Laveaga (1913) 165 C. 607, 624, 133 P. 307 [dictum: "the manner in which a person whose sanity is in question was treated by his family is not, taken alone, competent substantive evidence tending to prove insanity, for it is a mere extra-judicial expression of opinion on the part of the family"]; People v. Mendez (1924) 193 C. 39, 52, 223 P. 65 [circumstances of flight of third persons "are in the nature of confessions by such third persons" and therefore hearsay]; but see People v. Layman (1931) 117 C.A. 476, 478, 4 P.2d 244 [train dispatchers allowed to testify that they had received no report of an accident; "not hearsay, but direct proof" of material fact]; and see cases on proof of telephone calls to suspected bookmaker, infra, §48.)

II. STATEMENTS NOT WITHIN THE RULE

C. Nonassertive Conduct.

2. Uniform Rules and Evidence Code.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 47

[§ 47] Uniform Rules and Evidence Code.

The Evidence Code takes the same position as the Uniform Rules of Evidence in making nonassertive conduct admissible. This is accomplished by limiting the definition of "statement" to verbal expressions, or conduct intended as a substitute. (Ev.C. 225, supra, §2.) Thus, nonassertive conduct is not a "statement" within the hearsay rule (Ev.C. 1200, supra, §4). The Law Revision Commission Comment to Ev.C. 1200 justifies the choice of this view as follows:

"Under the Evidence Code, nonassertive conduct is not regarded as hearsay for two reasons. First, one of the principal reasons for the hearsay rule--to exclude declarations where the veracity of the declarant cannot be tested by cross-examination--does not apply because such conduct, being nonassertive, does not involve the veracity of the declarant. Second, there is frequently a guarantee of the trustworthiness of the inference to be drawn from such nonassertive conduct because the actor has based his actions on the correctness of his belief, i.e., his actions speak louder than words.

"Of course, if the probative value of evidence of nonassertive conduct is outweighed by the probability that such evidence will be unduly prejudicial, confuse the issues, mislead the jury, or consume too much time, the judge may exclude the evidence under Section 352." (See 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1362; 1 Jefferson, California Evidence Benchbook 3d, §1.49; 25 West L.A. L. Rev. 59, 117.)

In People v. Clark (1970) 6 C.A.3d 658, 668, 86 C.R. 106, the court approved the admission of testimony that defendant's wife fainted in reaction to a question put to her by defendant. "[B]ecause it was nonassertive conduct it was not objectionable hearsay." (See People v. Warner (1969) 270 C.A.2d 900, 907, 76 C.R. 160 [citing Ev.C. 1200 and bookmaking cases, infra, §48]; People v. Snow (1987) 44 C.3d 216, 227, 242 C.R. 477, 746 P.2d 452 [citing Clark].)

In re Cheryl H. (1984) 153 C.A.3d 1098, 200 C.R. 789, involved a juvenile court proceeding to declare a 3-year-old girl a dependent child on findings that she had been sexually molested by her father. Dr. P, the court-appointed psychiatrist, testified to conduct of Cheryl during play therapy typical of that exhibited by victims of child molestation. If this conduct was intended by Cheryl as a substitute for verbal expression, it was inadmissible (Ev.C. 225; see supra, §2). But it was not. Her actions were sometimes observed while she was playing alone and sometimes after Dr. P asked her a direct question. "A child playing with dolls and posing them in sexual positions is not trying to substitute her conduct for words to the effect that she has been molested. This conclusion is especially applicable when the child is playing by herself." (153 C.A.3d 1127.)

The evidence was relevant: (a) "When a three-year-old child puts a male doll on top of a female doll or orally copulates a male doll, it can be inferred that the child has been exposed to inappropriate sexual contact." (b) The acts of holding a female doll close to her and rejecting the male doll, and of reverting to a disassociated state when the subject of molestation was broached permit a similar inference. (c) Cheryl's recoil at the mention of her father was likewise nonassertive conduct. An adult might deliberately recoil as a gesture substituting for speech, but the child's recoil was involuntary and not intended as a statement. It was admissible as evidence that her father had molested her, and also as circumstantial proof that she was afraid of him. (153 C.A.3d 1127, 1128.)

II. STATEMENTS NOT WITHIN THE RULE

C. Nonassertive Conduct.

3. Proof of Bookmaking.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 48

[§ 48] Proof of Bookmaking.

Even under prior California law (see supra, §46), one type of nonassertive conduct was regularly admitted in California in prosecutions for violation of P.C. 337a (using premises for illegal horseracing bets). The arresting officer or detective enters the room of the suspected bookmaker, answers the telephone, and later testifies to the statements made by unknown callers who phone to place bets. The inference that the location is a bookmaker's establishment is drawn from the belief of the declarant (the unknown caller) that it is such an establishment; i.e., the caller's conduct in placing the call is used to prove the fact. (See 2 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 46; 1951 A.S. 854; 1957 A.S. 540; 1964 A.S. 357.)

As the court said in People v. Reifentuhl (1940) 37 C.A.2d 402, 405, 99 P.2d 564: "The use of the room occupied by defendant was in issue and the nature of the telephonic call was a circumstance to establish the truth. The uses to which a telephone is put reveal more truthfully the character of the establishment that houses the instrument than do the words of description attached to the listing. When a call comes to one surrounded by paraphernalia in use for the very purposes that would serve the patron so calling, the communication becomes a part of the res gestae." (To the same effect, see People v. Radley (1945) 68 C.A.2d 607, 609, 157 P.2d 426; People v. Klein (1945) 71 C.A.2d 588, 592, 163 P.2d 71; People v. Fischer (1957) 49 C.2d 442, 447, 317 P.2d 967; People v. Carella (1961) 191 C.A.2d 115, 139, 12 C.R. 446; and see 13 A.L.R.2d 1409 [evidence of fact of making or receiving phone call].)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

II. STATEMENTS NOT WITHIN THE RULE

C. Nonassertive Conduct.

4. Proof of Selling Illegal Drugs.

[§ 49] Proof of Selling Illegal Drugs.

(1) Telephonic Orders. People v. Bullock (1990) 226 C.A.3d 380, 277 C.R. 63, 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, §270, held that orders for cocaine, which were received by a police officer when he returned calls that came in on defendant's pager during the booking process, were properly admitted in a prosecution for possession of cocaine and marijuana for sale. The statements constituted nonhearsay circumstantial evidence of defendant's guilt, i.e., they tended to show that he was in the business of selling cocaine. (226 C.A.3d 389.) (See People v. Nealy (1991) 228 C.A.3d 447, 452, 279 C.R. 36 [orders for drugs that police officer executing search warrant received when he answered defendant's telephone and when he returned calls coming in on defendant's beeper were properly admitted in prosecution for possession of drugs for sale]; People v. Ventura (1991) 1 C.A.4th 1515, 1518, 2 C.R.2d 586 [following Nealy on similar facts].)

(2) Telephone Number Displayed on Pager. In People v. Fields (1998) 61 C.A.4th 1063, 72 C.R.2d 255, a prosecution for sale of cocaine, the trial judge admitted, over defendant's hearsay objection, testimony concerning a telephone number displayed on defendant's pager. The telephone number was that of a cocaine dealer who was assisting undercover police investigators. Held, the ruling was proper. Defendant's possession of a pager displaying that particular number was nonassertive conduct indicating both that he had a relationship with a drug dealer and that he was using the pager for the purpose of supplying crack cocaine. (61 C.A.4th 1069, 1070, citing the text.)

(3) Pay-Owe Ledgers. In People v. Harvey (1991) 233 C.A.3d 1206, 285 C.R. 158, defendants were convicted of various offenses arising from a conspiracy to sell or transport cocaine and a conspiracy to possess cocaine for sale. At trial, pay-owe ledgers found in defendants' residences were admitted. Held, the ledgers were properly admitted. They were circumstantial evidence of cocaine sales and possible conspiracies involving cocaine sales, for it is a common practice of narcotics dealers to keep records of their dealings. (233 C.A.3d 1219.) (See 25 West L.A. L. Rev. 59, 92 [criticizing Harvey].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Telephonic Orders. See People v. Morgan (2005) 125 C.A.4th 935, 945, 946, 23 C.R.3d 224 [in prosecution for possession of methamphetamine for sale, admission of evidence that officer who was executing search warrant at defendants' residence answered telephone and caller asked to buy drugs was not error; evidence of this kind has been treated by prior case law as circumstantial evidence rather than hearsay, but is more appropriately treated as hearsay subject to an exception].

II. STATEMENTS NOT WITHIN THE RULE
D. Statements Admitted To Provide Context.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 50

[§ 50] Statements Admitted To Provide Context.

In People v. Turner (1994) 8 C.4th 137, 32 C.R.2d 762, 878 P.2d 521, a murder case, a jailhouse informant testified about a conversation between defendant and a coperpetrator occurring on a county jail bus. The trial judge admitted defendant's statements under the party admissions exception (Ev.C. 1220, infra, §90), and admitted the coperpetrator's part of the conversation for the purpose of giving meaning to defendant's statements. Held, this was proper. Defendant's statements could have referred to another shooting; it was necessary to hear the coperpetrator's statements in order to understand that defendant was referring to the shooting in the present case. Because the coperpetrator's statements were admitted to put defendant's statements in context, they were admitted for a nonhearsay purpose. Furthermore, they were relevant, as they bore on a central issue in the case--the identity of the actual shooter. (8 C.4th 190.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

A. Confession of Defendant.

1. In General.

a. Nature and Admissibility.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 51

[§ 51] Nature and Admissibility.

A statement may be both a confession and an admission. Thus, in People v. Fitzgerald (1961) 56 C.2d 855, 861, 17 C.R. 129, 366 P.2d 481, defendant, accused of murder of Y and B for purposes of robbery, told the sheriff on his arrest that he had robbed them at gunpoint, but had been struck from behind and could not explain their wounds. Held, it was proper to instruct on both confessions and admissions, for the declarations could be regarded as confessions of robbery and deadly assault, but merely as admissions of murder.

(2) Conditions for Admissibility. The admissibility of an extrajudicial confession or admission is subject to two conditions: (a) proof of voluntariness (see infra, §§54, 136); and (b) independent proof of the corpus delicti (see 1 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Elements, §46). After independent proof is found to exist, however, the confession may be considered by the jury to strengthen and fortify it. (People v. McMonigle (1947) 29 C.2d 730, 738, 177 P.2d 745; see CALJIC (6th ed.), No. 2.72; 1 McCormick 5th, §145; 7 Stanf. L. Rev. 378; 14 So. Cal. L. Rev. 475; 79 Harv. L. Rev. 1072 [exhaustive discussion of corpus delicti requirement]; 27 U.S.F. L. Rev. 385 [arguing for abolishment of corpus delicti requirement]; 45 A.L.R.2d 1308 [corroboration of confession or admission]; 33 A.L.R.5th 571 [sufficiency of corroboration of confession as question of law or fact]; on federal "substantial independent evidence" requirement, see Oppen v. United

(3) Establishing Corpus Delicti Where Child Molestation Involved. Ev.C. 1228 makes admissible the statement of a minor to establish the corpus delicti of certain child abuse offenses in order to admit in evidence the confession of the defendant: "Notwithstanding any other provision of law, for the purpose of establishing the elements of the crime in order to admit as evidence the confession of a person accused of violating Section 261, 264.1, 285, 286, 288, 288a, 289, or 647a of the Penal Code, a court, in its discretion, may determine that a statement of the complaining witness is not made inadmissible by the hearsay rule."

Admission of the statement is conditioned on the following:

(a) It must have been made by a child under the age of 12, and its contents must have been included in a written report by a law enforcement official or county welfare department employee.

(b) It must describe the child as a sexual abuse victim.

(c) It must have been made prior to the confession.

(d) There must be no circumstances (such as significant inconsistencies regarding material facts) rendering the statement unreliable.

(e) The child must be unavailable under Ev.C. 240(a)(2) or (a)(3) (see supra, §§19, 22), or refuse to testify.

(f) The confession must be memorialized in a trustworthy fashion by a law enforcement official.

The procedural requirements for admission of the statement include: (a) at least 10 days' notice to the defendant prior to the hearing or trial; (b) if the statement is offered during trial, a determination of admissibility made out of the presence of the jury; and (c) if the statement is found admissible, admission out of the presence of the jury and solely for the purpose of determining the confession's admissibility. (Ev.C. 1228; see Creutz v. Superior Court (1996) 49 C.A.4th 822, 832, 833, 56 C.R.2d 870 [trial judge erred in denying defendant's motion to dismiss charge of lewd and lascivious conduct with child; Ev.C. 1228 did not allow consideration of child's statements, because defendant only made admissions and not full confession, and without statements there was insufficient evidence to support charge]; 17 Pacific L. J. 917 [origin, purpose and need for corpus delicti rule; argument that Sixth Amendment right to confrontation may be violated by Ev.C. 1228].)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

A. Confession of Defendant.

1. In General.

b. Exclusionary Rules.

1. Theories and Grounds.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 52

[§ 52] Theories and Grounds.

The earlier cases excluded some confessions because of the likelihood that they might be false. The later cases are largely concerned with the protection of personal rights and the elimination of illegal police practices, regardless of the possible or probable truth of the confession. (See generally 1 McCormick 5th, §144 et seq.; 3 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §822; 29 Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §714 et seq.; Model C., Rule 505, Comment c; 79 Harv. L. Rev. 954.)

Thus, confessions have been excluded on two basic grounds: (1) incapacity of the defendant; and (2) improper means used to obtain the confession (involuntary confession; see infra, §54). However, Proposition 8, with some exceptions, eliminated independent state grounds for the exclusion of evidence (see supra, §§7, 8). This has made the ground of incapacity largely unavailable. (See infra, §53.)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

A. Confession of Defendant.

1. In General.

b. Exclusionary Rules.

2. Incapacity of Defendant.

[§ 53] Incapacity of Defendant.

(1) In General. Prior to the enactment of Proposition 8, the confession of a defendant who lacked the mental capacity to understand what he or she was doing was regarded as unknowing and involuntary and was therefore inadmissible. (See People v. Boyington (1935) 3 C.A.2d 655, 656, 39 P.2d 867; People v. Johnson (1973) 32 C.A.3d 988, 1000, 109 C.R. 118 [influence of sodium amytal]; 3 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §841; 20 Stanf. L. Rev. 1269 [intoxication, drugs]; 42 Proof of Facts 3d 147 [proving invalidity of confession or Miranda waiver by mentally retarded person]; 1957 A.S. 565 [sedatives]; 8 A.L.R.4th 16 [mental subnormality]; 25 A.L.R.4th 419 [effect of alcohol or drugs].)

The mere fact of voluntary consumption of alcohol, however, did not necessarily establish impairment of capacity; the court could still find that the defendant was able to comprehend and answer the questions posed. (See People v. Hendricks (1987) 43 C.3d 584, 591, 238 C.R. 66, 737 P.2d 1350 [defendant offered to confess to murder if provided with alcoholic beverage and Bible; evidence showed that drinking did not impair his capacity for purposes of admitting his subsequent confession].)

(2) Effect of Proposition 8. In People v. Cox (1990) 221 C.A.3d 980, 270 C.R. 730, defendant argued that even if the police conduct was not coercive, his confession was inadmissible because his mental condition (due to the ingestion of methamphetamine) precluded a knowledgeable and voluntary decision to make incriminating statements. Held, the confession was admissible; under federal law, made applicable by Proposition 8 (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th) Introduction, §§7, 8), it is not unconstitutional to admit the confession of a mentally defective defendant in the absence of police coercion.

(a) Colorado v. Connelly (1986) 479 U.S. 157, 107 S.Ct. 515, 93 L.Ed.2d 473, infra, §54, emphasized the necessity of police coercion as a predicate to a claim of involuntariness arising from a psychotic state. (221 C.A.3d 986.) Earlier California cases, such as People v. MacPherson (1970) 2 C.3d 109, 84 C.R. 129, 465 P.2d 17, and People v. Sultana (1988) 204 C.A.3d 511, 251 C.R. 115, indicated that a confession or admission would be deemed involuntary and inadmissible because of the defective mental condition of the defendant regardless of the existence of coercion. These cases created a standard of constitutional admissibility higher than that required by the federal standard, and hence are no longer viable under Proposition 8. (221 C.A.3d 987.)

(b) Although People v. Markham (1989) 49 C.3d 63, 260 C.R. 273, 775 P.2d 1042, infra, §86, dealt with the burden of proving voluntariness, it followed Connelly in holding that Proposition 8 requires conformity to federal standards of admissibility. (221 C.A.3d 987.)

(c) Connelly specifically preserved to state law the determination whether to exclude noncoerced evidence of questionable reliability. Hence, defendant's confession might have been excludable under Ev.C. 352 (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §17) without reference to federal constitutional protections. However, defendant sought to exclude his confession solely on a constitutional ground, i.e., that his mental state precluded a free and knowing waiver of constitutional rights. (221 C.A.3d 986, footnote 3.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

A. Confession of Defendant.

1. In General.

b. Exclusionary Rules.

3. Involuntary Confession.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 54

[§ 54] Involuntary Confession.

(1) In General. Confessions that are produced by coercion are inadmissible. (See People v. Ditson (1962) 57 C.2d 415, 437, 20 C.R. 165, 369 P.2d 714, infra, §55; People v. Haydel (1974) 12 C.3d 190, 197, 115 C.R. 394, 524 P.2d 866 [involuntary confession made to security guards (private persons) was inadmissible]; People v. Jimenez (1978) 21 C.3d 595, 602, 147 C.R. 172, 580 P.2d 672; Cramer v. Shay (1979) 94 C.A.3d 242, 245, 156 C.R. 303, quoting the text; People v. McElheny (1982) 137 C.A.3d 396, 401, 187 C.R. 39; People v. Benson (1990) 52 C.3d 754, 778, 276 C.R. 827, 802 P.2d 330; Jackson v. Denno (1964) 378 U.S. 368, 84 S.Ct. 1774, 1785, 12 L.Ed.2d 908, infra, §81; 1 McCormick 5th, §148; 75 Harv. L. Rev. 173; 79 Harv. L. Rev. 968; 1961 A.S. 119.)

The rule of exclusion applies equally to confessions and admissions (see infra, §§64 et seq., 136), and to the use of either to impeach the defendant as a witness (see 89 A.L.R.2d 478 [confession]; infra, §136 [admission]).

(2) Rationale for Exclusion. The policies calling for exclusion of involuntary confessions are set forth in Rogers v. Richmond (1961) 365 U.S. 534, 81 S.Ct. 735, 5 L.Ed.2d 760, as follows:

(a) "[C]onvictions following the admission into evidence of confessions which are involuntary, i.e., the product of coercion, either physical or psychological, cannot stand. This is so not because such confessions are unlikely to be true but because the methods used to extract them offend an underlying principle in the enforcement of our criminal law: that ours is an accusatorial and not an inquisitorial system--a system in which the State must establish guilt by evidence independently and freely secured and may not by coercion prove its charge against an accused out of his own mouth." (81 S.Ct. 739, 5 L.Ed.2d 766.)

(b) The court pointed out that in many of the cases the evidence left little doubt of the truth of what the defendant confessed, but held that the state court acted on an erroneous theory when it determined that the circumstances had no tendency to produce a false confession. "The attention of the trial judge should have been focused, for purposes of the Federal Constitution, on the question whether the behavior of the State's law enforcement officials was such as to overbear petitioner's will to resist and bring about confessions not freely self-determined--a question to be answered with complete disregard of whether or not petitioner in fact spoke the truth." (81 S.Ct. 741, 5 L.Ed.2d 768.)

Although this rationale would seem to demand a reversible per se standard on appeal, the test currently applied is whether the erroneous admission of a coerced confession was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. (See People v.

Cahill (1993) 5 C.4th 478, 20 C.R.2d 582, 853 P.2d 1037, infra, §89.)

(3) Coercion Required. In Colorado v. Connelly (1986) 479 U.S. 157, 107 S.Ct. 515, 93 L.Ed.2d 473, defendant approached a police officer and, without prompting, stated that he had murdered someone and wished to talk about it. Defendant, who did not appear to be suffering from any mental illness, was advised of his rights, and thereafter gave a detailed confession. At his preliminary hearing, defendant moved to suppress his statements, and presented psychiatric evidence that he suffered from chronic schizophrenia and had been experiencing "command hallucinations" at the time of his confession, which destroyed his free will and compelled him to confess. Held, neither the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment nor the Fifth Amendment required that defendant's statements be suppressed.

(a) Coercive police activity is necessary to a finding that a confession is not voluntary under the Due Process Clause; the mere taking of defendant's statements, and their subsequent admission into evidence, do not constitute sufficient state action. Here, the police committed no wrongful act related to the confession and thus suppressing it would serve no purpose in enforcing constitutional guarantees. (107 S.Ct. 521, 522, 93 L.Ed.2d 484.) "Respondent would now have us require sweeping inquiries into the state of mind of a criminal defendant who had confessed, inquiries quite divorced from any coercion brought to bear on the defendant by the State. We think the Constitution rightly leaves this sort of inquiry to be resolved by state laws governing the admission of evidence and erects no standard of its own in this area. A statement rendered by one in the condition of respondent might be proved to be quite unreliable, but this is a matter to be governed by the evidentiary laws of the forum ... and not by the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment." (107 S.Ct. 522, 93 L.Ed.2d 484.)

(b) There was no violation of defendant's Fifth Amendment rights. There is no reason to require more of a "voluntariness" inquiry in the context of a Miranda waiver than in the Fourteenth Amendment confession context. (107 S.Ct. 523, 93 L.Ed.2d 486.) "Respondent urges this Court to adopt his 'free will' rationale, and to find an attempted waiver invalid whenever the defendant feels compelled to waive his rights by reason of any compulsion, even if the compulsion does not flow from the police. But ... Miranda protects defendants against government coercion leading them to surrender rights protected by the Fifth Amendment; it goes no further than that. Respondent's perception of coercion flowing from the 'voice of God,' however important or significant such a perception may be in other disciplines, is a matter to which the United States Constitution does not speak." (107 S.Ct. 524, 93 L.Ed.2d 486, 487.)

One justice concurred in part and dissented in part, and two other justices dissented. (See 101 Harv. L. Rev. 179 [Connelly]; 48 A.L.R.5th 555 [resolution of Connelly issue under state statute or Constitution].)

(4) Evidence Code. The original Uniform Rules of Evidence summarized the types of improper coercion or inducement that make a confession involuntary. The Evidence Code made no attempt to restate the elements or to keep up with the flow of decisions, but merely called attention to the constitutional limitations, and thus indirectly incorporated by reference the controlling case law:

"A statement that is otherwise admissible as hearsay evidence is inadmissible against the defendant in a criminal action if the statement was made, either by the defendant or by another, under such circumstances that it is inadmissible against the defendant under the Constitution of the United States or the State of California." (Ev.C. 1204.)

(1) In General. See 1 McCormick 6th, §148; 93 Cal. L. Rev. 465 [Rethinking the Involuntary Confession Rule: Toward a Workable Test for Identifying Compelled Self-Incrimination].

(2) Rationale for Exclusion. See 30 Hastings Const. L. Q. 57 [U.S. Const., Fourth Amendment, as basis for exclusion of coerced confessions]. (3a) (New) Nexus Between Misconduct and Confession Required. In People v. Hall (2000) 78 C.A.4th 232, 92 C.R.2d 687, defendant, while in state prison, wrote a letter to a district attorney's office stating that he wished to confess to a murder, and that the confession was being forced from him. During trial for the murder, the trial judge found that although prison guards may have engaged in some misconduct, they did not threaten or abuse him to get him to confess. In light of this finding, defendant, on appeal from the conviction of murder, did not argue that the guards had attempted to compel him to confess, but rather that his confession was rendered involuntary by the acts of violence instigated against him by the guards. Held, affirmed. Past cases in which an involuntariness claim was made have always involved misconduct directed at compelling a defendant to confess, and the vocabulary used in those cases includes terms such as "extracting" or "wringing" confessions from suspects. "We conclude a confession should be excluded when the process undertaken to secure it involves threats, promises, violence or other forms of improper influence. ... We do not believe that exclusion is required when general governmental misconduct, unrelated to any investigation or process of investigation, results by mere happenstance in a confession." (78 C.A.4th 240, 241, distinguishing People v. McElheny (1982) 137 C.A.3d 396, 187 C.R. 39, text, p. 737, where the alleged misconduct was intimately related to the investigation of the crime.) West's Key Number Digest, Criminal Law k.517.1 et seq., 519 et seq.

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

A. Confession of Defendant.

1. In General.

b. Exclusionary Rules.

4. Evidence Obtained Through Involuntary Confession.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 55

[§ 55] Evidence Obtained Through Involuntary Confession.

(1) Evidentiary Product of Involuntary Confession Also Inadmissible. In People v. Ditson (1962) 57 C.2d 415, 20 C.R. 165, 369 P.2d 714, codefendant C gave a confession. The trial judge found it involuntary, but admitted evidence obtained by the use of it. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the confession was voluntary, and further that the evidence was not its product but a mere lead, and that no proper objection had been made. (57 C.2d 433, 442, 443.) Accordingly, the conviction was affirmed; but, in view of the importance of the question, the court assumed the correctness of the trial judge's theory of coerced confession in order to lay down the rule that evidence secured by means of an involuntary confession is inadmissible. The common law theory of exclusion of a confession was its presumed untrustworthiness; physical facts discovered by use of it were not untrustworthy and were admissible. The present view, that the use of an involuntary confession is a denial of due process (infra, §89), makes this approach untenable. If it offends the sense of fair play to convict by use of an involuntary confession, it must also offend that sense to convict on evidence discovered by extorting it:

"It follows also that the reason for the common-law rule permitting the introduction of real evidence discovered by means of an involuntary confession--that such evidence tends to prove the 'trustworthiness' of the confession--must now be deemed constitutionally indefensible, and hence that the rule itself must be abandoned. The inquiry should instead be directed to the issue of whether the introduction of the challenged evidence--the confession itself or its asserted product--in a criminal prosecution which culminated in a conviction denied the defendant, in the particular circumstances of that case, any essential element of a fair trial or due process of law." (57 C.2d 439.) (See 50 Cal. L. Rev. 723 [Ditson]; 1962 A.S. 364 [same].)

(2) Doctrine Extended. Harrison v. United States (1968) 392 U.S. 219, 88 S.Ct. 2008, 20 L.Ed.2d 1047, greatly extends this "fruit of the poisonous tree" doctrine. Defendant was charged with felony murder. In the first trial, he was convicted on illegally obtained confessions that he and two other armed men had gone to the victim's house to rob him, and had killed him when he resisted. At that trial, defendant testified that he and the others had gone to the victim's home to pawn the shotgun, and that it went off by accident. After reversal, on retrial, the illegal confessions were ignored, but the prosecution introduced defendant's prior exculpatory testimony, which placed him at the scene of the crime with the shotgun. Held, reversed; the prosecution had failed to negate defendant's claim that the confessions impelled and therefore tainted the testimony. The Court of Appeal had reached the opposite conclusion on the theory that defendant had made a conscious tactical decision to testify, on advice of counsel. But the Supreme Court declared that the "question is not whether the petitioner made a knowing decision to testify, but why." (88 S.Ct. 2010, 20 L.Ed.2d 1052.)

Three justices disagreed. The principal dissenting opinion speaks of the court's "fuzzy ideology about confessions" and the "procedural ploy" of switching the burden of proof to the prosecution on the issue when the only person who can tell why he took the stand is the defendant; it concludes that "common sense and policy are squarely opposed" to the decision. (See 82 Harv. L. Rev. 220, 224 [observing that it is unlikely prosecution will ever succeed in carrying burden placed on it, hence, that only in exceptional circumstances may defendant's testimony given after introduction of inadmissible confession be used in subsequent proceeding]; 56 Cal. L. Rev. 579, 611 [confession as "poisonous tree"].)

(3) Other Applications of Doctrine. The "fruit of the poisonous tree" doctrine is also applied to the product of evidence obtained by illegal search and seizure (see 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, §22 et seq.), but is no longer applied to the fruits of noncoercive Miranda violations (see People v. Whitfield (1996) 46 C.A.4th 947, 955, 54 C.R.2d 370, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §97). It has also been held inapplicable to testimony obtained in violation of a defendant's right of self-representation. (See People v. Jones (1998) 66 C.A.4th 760, 770, 78 C.R.2d 265.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Doctrine Extended. Cf. People v. Boyer (2006) 38 C.4th 412, 463, 42 C.R.3d 677, 133 P.3d 581 [mental health expert, presented by defense in trial in which defendant's illegal confession was not introduced, could be impeached with information voluntarily compiled by defense itself, notwithstanding that defense obtained information out of concern that prosecution would introduce confession in earlier trial; tainted fruit doctrine of Harrison v. United States (1968) 392 U.S. 219, 88 S.Ct. 2008, 20 L.Ed.2d 1047, text, p. 740, was inapplicable].

(3) Other Applications of Doctrine. See United States v. Patane (2004) 542 U.S. 630, 124 S.Ct. 2620, 2629, 159 L.Ed.2d 667, 678, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, Supp., §97 [failure to give Miranda warnings does not require exclusion of physical evidence obtained as result of voluntary but unwarned confession].

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

A. Confession of Defendant.

1. In General.

b. Exclusionary Rules.

5. Distinction: Voluntary Second Confession.

[§ 56] Distinction: Voluntary Second Confession.

If a first confession is obtained improperly (see infra, §64 et seq.), a later confession may likewise be excluded where it appears that the improper conduct continued to influence the defendant's mind. (People v. Jones (1944) 24 C.2d 601, 609, 150 P.2d 801; People v. Adams (1983) 143 C.A.3d 970, 991, 192 C.R. 290; Leyra v. Denno (1954) 347 U.S. 556, 74 S.Ct. 716, 98 L.Ed. 948; 1954 A.S. 798.) If, however, a second voluntary confession is made under circumstances which show no remaining coercive effect of the first, it is admissible. (See Lyons v. Oklahoma (1944) 322 U.S. 596, 64 S.Ct. 1208, 88 L.Ed. 1481; Stroble v. California (1952) 343 U.S. 181, 72 S.Ct. 599, 96 L.Ed. 872 [affirming People v. Stroble (1951) 36 C.2d 615, 623, 226 P.2d 330]; 1 McCormick 5th, §159; 66 Harv. L. Rev. 125.)

The test is stated in People v. Jones, supra, as follows: "If a defendant is subjected to threats or violence and within a few days thereafter he makes a confession, it may not be introduced in evidence unless it clearly appears that such improper treatment did not cause him to confess. In a situation such as here presented, there is a presumption that the influence of the prior improper treatment continues to operate on the mind of the defendant and that the subsequent confession is the result of the same influence which rendered the prior confession inadmissible, and the burden is upon the prosecution to clearly establish the contrary. ... The determination of the extent of the influence persisting at the time the subsequent confession is made rests, of course, upon attendant circumstances, and the inquiry is whether, considering the age and intelligence of the defendant, the nature and degree of the influence, and the time intervening between the confessions, it can be said that defendant was not induced to confess by reason of the pressure which motivated him to make the first statement, or was not influenced so to do by reason of the prior confession itself." (24 C.2d 609.)

Thus, in the Jones case, a 17-year-old black defendant was questioned and brutally beaten by Los Angeles police twice a day for 3 days while protesting his innocence, and on the 4th day, under further torture, he made some admissions. He was then taken to San Diego for further questioning by other officers, to whom he confessed again without knowledge that his previous statement could not be used. Held, "the entire situation" was so inherently coercive that the confession could not be regarded as voluntary.

But in People v. Stroble, supra, defendant, of somewhat weakened mentality, was struck and kicked, questioned for 2 hours by many officers and deputy prosecutors, and not allowed to see his attorney. The first confession was therefore "the result of physical abuse or psychological torture or a combination of the two." (36 C.2d 623.) However, it did not affect the fairness of his trial because he made five other confessions after consultation with his counsel. As described in

Stroble, "petitioner was anxious to confess to anybody who would listen--and as much so after he had consulted with counsel as before." (72 S.Ct. 604, 96 L.Ed. 881.)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

A. Confession of Defendant.

1. In General.

c. Limiting Rules.

1. Standing To Challenge Admission of Third Party's Statement.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 57

[§ 57] Standing To Challenge Admission of Third Party's Statement.

In People v. Badgett (1995) 10 C.4th 330, 41 C.R.2d 635, 895 P.2d 877, two brothers were convicted of murder partly on the basis of the testimony of an immunized prosecution witness. The Court of Appeal reversed, concluding that (a) contrary to the finding of the trial judge, defendants did not lack standing to assert that the witness' testimony was the product of earlier involuntary statements she made to the police, and (b) evidence of one defendant's statements to the witness should have been excluded on the basis of the marital communications privilege. Held, judgment of the Court of Appeal reversed.

(a) Standing as to confessions or statements of others. A defendant's involuntary confession is excluded regardless of its reliability, and any statements following it are also excluded unless any "taint" has been attenuated by the passage of time or by other factors. (10 C.4th 347.) However, a defendant seeking to exclude the trial testimony of a third party must allege more than that coercion was applied against the third party, producing an involuntary statement at trial. The defendant must assert a violation of his or her own due process rights, and therefore must allege that the pretrial coercion would actually have affected the reliability of the evidence to be presented at trial. (10 C.4th 344, 350, citing People v. Douglas (1990) 50 C.3d 468, 268 C.R. 126, 788 P.2d 640, and disapproving In re J. Clyde K. (1987) 192 C.A.3d 710, 237 C.R. 550, to the extent it asserted that a defendant's right to exclude his or her own involuntary confession or statement and its fruits is coextensive with the defendant's right to exclude the involuntary confessions or statements of others and their fruits on due process grounds.)

(b) Violation of fair trial right properly asserted. In the present case, defendants adequately asserted a violation of their own right to a fair trial. "Two of the asserted grounds for exclusion were not based on the claimed coercion of the extrajudicial statements, but claimed that later events rendered the witness's testimony coerced. Even as to the claim that the statements were involuntary, it does not appear that the motion sought to exclude trial testimony purely because of the earlier allegedly involuntary statement by the third party. Rather, the motion sought exclusion of trial testimony because the witness was compelled to testify consistently with the allegedly involuntary statement at trial by reason of a coercive immunity agreement and other coercive conduct on the part of the prosecutor." (10 C.4th 345.)

(c) No coercion found. Nevertheless, an examination of the entire record indicates that the witness' trial testimony was not coerced:

(1) The witness was arrested by an officer from one county and transferred to that county for custody, although the offense with which she was charged occurred in another county. However, even assuming that the arrest violated P.C. 830.1 (4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Pretrial Proceedings, §4) and Welf.C. 626 (10 Summary (9th), Parent and Child, §512), these were technical violations and would not have had a coercive effect on her statement or her trial testimony. (10 C.4th 353.)

(2) The offer by police officers to release the witness from custody in return for her statements would not have rendered those statements coerced, and there is no evidence she felt compelled to testify in conformity with those statements. (10 C.4th 354, 355.)

(4) An immunity agreement that requires the witness to testify consistently with a previous statement to police is coercive, and any testimony produced by the agreement is subject to exclusion. Here, however, although there was some mention of consistency in the initial understanding regarding immunity, the agreement under which the witness actually testified did not contain that condition, and it is this latter agreement that is determinative of defendants' claim. (10 C.4th 358.)

(d) Marital communication privilege inapplicable. California does not recognize common law marriages, but it does recognize the validity of a marriage contracted in another state that would be valid by the laws of that state. The trial judge concluded that, under Texas law, the witness and one of the defendants did not have a common law marriage. His ruling displayed an accurate understanding of Texas law, and his factual determinations that the witness and the defendant did not have a serious agreement to be married and had not sufficiently held themselves out as married were supported by the evidence. The privilege for confidential communications between spouses, therefore, did not bar the witness' testimony. (10 C.4th 365.) (See 23 Pepperdine L. Rev. 1401.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

A. Confession of Defendant.

1. In General.

c. Limiting Rules.

2. Voluntary False Confession.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 58

[§ 58] Voluntary False Confession.

A voluntary confession is admissible (see supra, §51) even though it is false. But the effect of a false confession is different from that of a true confession in that it does not justify an inference of its truth.

Thus, in People v. Liss (1950) 35 C.2d 570, 219 P.2d 789, defendant confessed to theft from a store cash register, but later repudiated the confession. The court instructed that, even if the jurors found the confession false, they could nevertheless give it such significance as they might determine under the court's instructions. Held, this was error (though, in view of ample evidence of guilt, not prejudicial). "As is true of any other false evidence, a false confession cannot support an inference of the truth of the matter untruthfully stated. Obviously, the false confession of guilt of a specific act cannot be used as proof of the commission of that act." (35 C.2d 574.) But it may be admissible to impeach, or to prove a fact other than the matter confessed, e.g., the commission of an entirely different act, or the illegal conduct of some third person. (35 C.2d 574.)

A false confession must, however, meet the usual test of voluntariness. (People v. Sigal (1963) 221 C.A.2d 684, 693, 34 C.R. 767.)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

A. Confession of Defendant.

1. In General.

c. Limiting Rules.

3. Confession of Codefendant.

aa. In General.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 59

[§ 59] In General.

(1) Aranda-Bruton Rule. A special problem is presented when one of two or more codefendants has voluntarily confessed. The confession is of course admissible against the defendant who made it, and, if that defendant takes sole responsibility for the crime, introduction of the confession in the joint trial causes no trouble. (See People v. La Peluso (1966) 239 C.A.2d 715, 726, 49 C.R. 85 [defendant has no standing to object to declarations that only affect his nonobjecting codefendant].) But if the confession also implicates a codefendant, the situation is radically changed. The confession is still admissible only against the confessing defendant, and the jury will be so instructed, but the psychological impossibility of the jurors erasing the reference to the codefendant from their minds has been the subject of frequent comment. (See People v. Aranda (1965) 63 C.2d 518, 529, 47 C.R. 353, 407 P.2d 265; 1963 A.S. 312.)

Formerly, California admitted the confession with a limiting instruction. But in People v. Aranda, the court established new rules of practice, essentially requiring that the reference to the codefendant be deleted from the statement introduced, or that the defendants be given separate trials. (63 C.2d 530.)

The Aranda rule became a requirement of federal due process in Bruton v. United States (1968) 391 U.S. 123, 88 S.Ct. 1620, 20 L.Ed.2d 476. The Court held that introduction of the codefendant's confession with its statements incriminating the defendant violated the defendant's right of cross-examination secured by the Confrontation Clause. (See 82 Harv. L. Rev. 231.) However, admission of a confession in these circumstances is not reversible error per se; the Chapman test (whether the court cannot say that the error was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt) applies. (See Harrington v. California (1969) 395 U.S. 250, 89 S.Ct. 1726, 23 L.Ed.2d 284; People v. Fulks (1980) 110 C.A.3d 609, 616, 168 C.R. 203.) (For full discussion of the Aranda-Bruton rule and its applications, see 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §375 et seq.; on application of the rule to admissions, see infra, §142; on methods of editing the confession so that the rule is satisfied, see infra, §60; on the standard for determining the voluntariness of a confession by a codefendant being separately tried, see People v. Leach (1985) 41 C.3d 92, 102, 221 C.R. 826, 710 P.2d 893.)

(2) Limitation to Facially Incriminating Confessions. In Richardson v. Marsh (1987) 481 U.S. 200, 107 S.Ct. 1702, 95 L.Ed.2d 176, defendant was convicted of felony murder and assault to commit murder. At a joint trial, the judge admitted the confession of a codefendant who did not testify. The confession described a conversation between the codefendant and an accomplice that took place as they were driving toward a house where they planned to commit a robbery. During that conversation, the accomplice stated that they would have to kill the residents of the home.

Defendant was present in the car, but the confession was redacted to omit any reference to the presence of a third person. Defendant testified, however, that she had been in the car but had not heard the conversation. The trial judge instructed the jury not to use the codefendant's confession against defendant. Held, admission of the confession with a limiting instruction did not violate the Confrontation Clause.

(a) The codefendant's confession was not incriminating on its face, but became incriminating only when linked with defendant's subsequent testimony placing herself in the car. Thus, the jury was much more likely to obey the instruction to disregard the confession than in a case where a codefendant's confession specifically states that a defendant helped commit the crime. (107 S.Ct. 1707, 95 L.Ed.2d 186.)

(b) Limiting Bruton to facially incriminating confessions permits compliance by redaction, thereby facilitating efficiency and fairness in the criminal justice system by permitting joint trials and the use of codefendant confessions. (107 S.Ct. 1708, 1709, 95 L.Ed.2d 186, 187.)

Three justices dissented, arguing as follows: (a) Certain codefendant confessions are so damaging and difficult to discount that they should be excluded even if they do not specifically mention the defendant. (107 S.Ct. 1710, 95 L.Ed.2d 189.) (b) The interest in maximizing the use of joint trials for the sake of efficiency and convenience does not prevail over the interests of justice, which sometimes require the prosecution to choose between severance and not offering a codefendant's confession. (107 S.Ct. 1712, 95 L.Ed.2d 192.) (See People v. Mitcham (1992) 1 C.4th 1027, 1046, 5 C.R.2d 230, 824 P.2d 1277 [discussing Richardson]; People v. Hampton (1999) 73 C.A.4th 710, 720, 86 C.R.2d 665 [in robbery case, codefendant's statement, with limiting instruction, was properly admitted; it was redacted so that it mentioned no other participants in robbery, and defendant's involvement could be inferred only after statement was linked with other evidence; following Richardson]; 101 Harv. L. Rev. 1876 [Richardson].)

(3) Effect of Proposition 8. People v. Boyd (1990) 222 C.A.3d 541, 271 C.R. 738, held that an additional requirement of Aranda (but not Bruton; see Nelson v. O'Neil (1971) 402 U.S. 622, 91 S.Ct. 1723, 29 L.Ed.2d 222) did not survive Proposition 8 (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §§7, 8). "[T]o the extent Aranda required exclusion of inculpatory extrajudicial statements of codefendants, even when the codefendant testified and was available for cross-examination at trial, Aranda was abrogated by Proposition 8. There is no federal constitutional basis for requiring exclusion of a codefendant's statements when the codefendant testifies at trial and is subject to cross-examination. ... However, to the extent Aranda duplicates the protections available under the federal Constitution, as defined in Bruton and O'Neil, the Aranda rule survives the passage of Proposition 8. The California rule is now coextensive with the federal rule." (222 C.A.3d 562, 563.) (See People v. Walkkein (1993) 14 C.A.4th 1401, 1409, 18 C.R.2d 383 [Proposition 8 abrogates Aranda to extent it prohibited admission of codefendant's statement incriminating accused in trial to court]; In re Jose M. (1994) 21 C.A.4th 1470, 1479, 27 C.R.2d 55, 10 Summary (9th), Parent and Child, Supp., §602 [in juvenile delinquency proceeding arising from rape, taped conversation between codefendant and victim was admissible against defendant; following Walkkein and Boyd].)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

A. Confession of Defendant.

1. In General.

c. Limiting Rules.

3. Confession of Codefendant.

bb. Editing of Confession.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 60

[§ 60] Editing of Confession.

(1) Deletion of Identifying References. In People v. Jacobs (1987) 195 C.A.3d 1636, 241 C.R. 550, the court reviewed the background case law on the Aranda-Bruton rule (supra, §59), and the state and federal practice of redaction (editing). (195 C.A.3d 1648, 1649.) In this case the confession of codefendant O was redacted to delete all identifying references to defendant J. But, as pointed out in Aranda, the editing out of statements of identification may not be enough, and was not enough in this case: Two statements remained that "could be employed against" the defendant, and failure to edit these out was error (though harmless in this case). (195 C.A.3d 1651, 1652.)

In People v. Douglas (1991) 234 C.A.3d 273, 285 C.R. 609, appellant and his brother, B, were charged and jointly tried for murder, and the jury returned verdicts of guilty. On appeal appellant contended that it was error to deny his motion for severance of the trials. The basis of the motion was that the prosecution used a redacted version of appellant's confession without reviewing the verbatim version; i.e., the court failed to first ascertain whether the parts implicating B could be effectively deleted without prejudice to appellant. Held, it was error to admit the statement.

(a) "While Aranda offers as an option the redaction of the confession, it expressly limits that option to cases in which deletions are made without prejudice to the declarant. ... When deletions cannot be made without prejudice to the declarant the court should either grant severance or exclude the statement." (234 C.A.3d 285.)

(b) "[T]he deletion of references to Bobby in appellant's statement clearly, and inaccurately, implied that appellant admitted his involvement in conduct he had explicitly disclaimed. Appellant was then improperly prevented from presenting evidence that his actual statement was exculpatory on major points. The prejudice to him is obvious and serious. If the court had granted the severance motion, deletions of appellant's statement would not have been required to protect Bobby under Aranda/Bruton." (234 C.A.3d 287.) (See People v. Bryden (1998) 63 C.A.4th 159, 176, 73 C.R.2d 554 [defendant's confrontation right was not violated by admission of jailhouse communication between nontestifying codefendant and prosecution witness, where communication was redacted to delete defendant's name and all statements directly implicating him, jury had to use inference to connect communication with defendant, and main adverse impact on defendant was simply to bolster witness' credibility; distinguishing Gray v. Maryland (1998) 523 U.S. 185, 118 S.Ct. 1151, 140 L.Ed.2d 294, and People v. Fletcher (1996) 13 C.4th 451, 53 C.R.2d 572, 917 P.2d 187].)

(2) Replacement of Name With Pronoun or Other Neutral Term. The Court in Richardson v. Marsh (1987) 481 U.S.

200, 107 S.Ct. 1702, 95 L.Ed.2d 176, supra, §59, expressly reserved the question whether the replacement, in a nontestifying codefendant's extrajudicial confession, of the nondeclarant's name with a pronoun or similar neutral and nonidentifying term is sufficient to avoid a Confrontation Clause violation. This question was decided in Gray v. Maryland, supra, a joint homicide prosecution in which one codefendant's confession was admitted with all references to his codefendant replaced by blanks (read in court as "deleted" or "deletion") and with a cautionary instruction that the confession could be used only against the defendant who made it. Held, this was reversible error. "Redactions that simply replace a name with an obvious blank space or a symbol or other similarly obvious indications of alteration ... leave statements that, considered as a class, so closely resemble Bruton's unredacted statements that, in our view, the law must require the same result." (118 S.Ct. 1155, 140 L.Ed.2d 301.) Although Richardson placed outside the scope of the Bruton rule those statements that incriminate inferentially, the holding in Richardson "must depend in significant part upon the kind of, not the simple fact of, inference. Richardson's inferences involved statements that did not refer directly to the defendant himself and which became incriminating 'only when linked with evidence introduced later at trial.' ... The inferences at issue here involve statements that, despite redaction, obviously refer directly to someone, often obviously the defendant, and which involve inferences that a jury ordinarily could make immediately, even were the confession the very first item introduced at trial." (118 S.Ct. 1157, 140 L.Ed.2d 303.) (See People v. Fletcher, supra, 13 C.4th 469, 470 [introduction of codefendant's confession with all references to defendant replaced by pronoun or "another person" was reversible error; even as redacted, confession "powerfully" incriminated defendant]; 112 Harv. L. Rev. 142 [Gray].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Deletion of Identifying References. See People v. Archer (2000) 82 C.A.4th 1380, 1388, 99 C.R.2d 230 [in murder prosecution, admission of codefendant's extrajudicial statement violated defendant's right of cross-examination, even though it was redacted to delete all references to defendant, where it still unmistakably implicated defendant].

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

A. Confession of Defendant.

1. In General.

c. Limiting Rules.

3. Confession of Codefendant.

cc. Interlocking Confessions.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 61

[§ 61] Interlocking Confessions.

In Cruz v. New York (1987) 481 U.S. 186, 107 S.Ct. 1714, 95 L.Ed.2d 162, the issue was whether the holding of Bruton v. United States (1968) 391 U.S. 123, 88 S.Ct. 1620, 20 L.Ed.2d 476, supra, §59, applies where defendant's own confession, corroborating that of his codefendant, is introduced against him. Defendant confessed to N, a friend, that the codefendant (defendant's brother) had killed the victim during the course of an attempted robbery by the defendant and codefendant. The nontestifying codefendant's videotaped confession to the police was consistent with defendant's confession to N, and both confessions were admitted at the trial, although the jury was warned not to use the codefendant's confession against defendant. Held, admission of the codefendant's interlocking confession violated the Confrontation Clause.

(a) In Parker v. Randolph (1979) 442 U.S. 62, 99 S.Ct. 2132, 60 L.Ed.2d 713, the Court held that the Bruton rule does not call for reversal where the defendant himself confesses and his confession "interlocks" with and supports the confession of his codefendant. The basis of that decision was that introduction of a codefendant's confession is not "devastating" where the defendant has himself confessed. "In fact, it seems to us that 'interlocking' bears a positively inverse relationship to devastation. A codefendant's confession will be relatively harmless if the incriminating story it tells is different from that which the defendant himself is alleged to have told, but enormously damaging if it confirms, in all essential respects, the defendant's alleged confession. It might be otherwise if the defendant were standing by his confession, in which case it could be said that the codefendant's confession does no more than support the defendant's very own case. But in the real world of criminal litigation, the defendant is seeking to avoid his confession--on the ground that it was not accurately reported, or that it was not really true when made." (107 S.Ct. 1718, 95 L.Ed.2d 171.)

(b) Defendant sought to establish that N had a motive for falsely reporting a confession that never occurred; thus, a codefendant's confession corroborating defendant's confession significantly harms defendant's case, while one that is incompatible supports defendant's assertion that his alleged confession was nonexistent or false. (107 S.Ct. 1718, 95 L.Ed.2d 171.) Accordingly, it is illogical to believe that a codefendant's confession is less likely to be considered by a jury the more it is corroborated by a defendant's own admissions. (107 S.Ct. 1719, 95 L.Ed.2d 172.)

Four justices dissented, arguing that (a) a defendant's own confession is the most probative and damaging evidence that can be admitted against him; and (b) the jury will not be tempted, in every interlocking confession case, to disobey its instructions and fail to understand that presumptively unreliable evidence must not be used against a defendant. ### III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

A. Confession of Defendant.

1. In General.

c. Limiting Rules.

3. Confession of Codefendant.

dd. Improper Substantive Use Against Defendant.

[§ 62] Improper Substantive Use Against Defendant.

In Lee v. Illinois (1986) 476 U.S. 530, 106 S.Ct. 2056, 90 L.Ed.2d 514, defendant confessed that she and her boyfriend murdered her aunt and another woman. Then defendant was permitted to meet with her boyfriend, she reminded him that he had promised that neither would "take the rap alone," and he gave a statement confessing to the crimes. The boyfriend's confession paralleled defendant's in several respects, but differed by stating that the two had previously discussed murdering the victims and by referring to a conversation immediately prior to the murders that suggested a premeditated plan. Defendant and her boyfriend were tried jointly in a bench trial, at which the judge relied on the boyfriend's confession in finding defendant guilty of premeditated murder. Held, reversed.

(a) Because the codefendant's confession was used as substantive testimony against defendant, this case is similar to Douglas v. Alabama (1965) 380 U.S. 415, 85 S.Ct. 1074, 13 L.Ed.2d 934, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §532, and differs from Bruton v. United States (1968) 391 U.S. 123, 88 S.Ct. 1620, 20 L.Ed.2d 476, supra, §59, where the issue was the effectiveness of limiting instructions. "The danger against which the Confrontation Clause was erected--the conviction of a defendant based, at least in part, on presumptively unreliable evidence--actually occurred." (106 S.Ct. 2063, 90 L.Ed.2d 527.)

(b) Although the presumption of unreliability that attaches to a codefendant's confession may be rebutted if the confession bears sufficient "indicia of reliability," the codefendant's confession does not meet the required standard of being supported by a "showing of particularized guarantees of trustworthiness." (106 S.Ct. 2064, 90 L.Ed.2d 528; quoting Ohio v. Roberts (1980) 448 U.S. 56, 100 S.Ct. 2531, 65 L.Ed.2d 597, 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §21.) He confessed only after being implored to share "the rap," and his unsworn statement was not tested by cross-examination or its equivalent. That the confession was found to be voluntary for Fifth Amendment purposes does not mean that he was free from any desire, motive, or impulse to mitigate the appearance of his own culpability by spreading the blame or to overstate defendant's involvement in retaliation for her having implicated him in the murders. Codefendant not only had a theoretical motive to distort the facts to defendant's detriment, but prior to trial he actively considered becoming defendant's adversary by testifying for the state against her. "This record evidence documents a reality of the criminal process, namely that once partners in a crime recognize that the 'jig is up,' they tend to lose any identity of interest and immediately become antagonists, rather than accomplices." (106 S.Ct. 2064, 90 L.Ed.2d 528.)

(c) That defendant's and codefendant's confessions "interlock" on some points does not mean that codefendant's confession should be deemed trustworthy in its entirety. "If those portions of the codefendant's purportedly 'interlocking' statement which bear to any significant degree on the defendant's participation in the crime are not thoroughly substantiated by the defendant's own confession, the admission of the statement poses too serious a threat to the accuracy of the verdict to be countenanced by the Sixth Amendment. In other words, when the discrepancies between the statements are not insignificant, the codefendant's confession may not be admitted. ... The subjects upon which these two confessions do not 'interlock' cannot in any way be characterized as irrelevant or trivial. The discrepancies between the two go to the very issues in dispute at trial: the roles played by the two defendants in the killing of Odessa, and the question of premeditation in the killing of Aunt Beedie." (106 S.Ct. 2064, 2065, 90 L.Ed.2d 529.)

(d) Although admission of her codefendant's confession violated defendant's Confrontation Clause rights, the error may have been harmless, a matter to be determined in the first instance by the state courts. (106 S.Ct. 2065, 2066, 90 L.Ed.2d 530; see 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §532.)

Four justices dissented, contending that the court's opinion ignored the "realities" of criminal cases, that the indicia of reliability required by Ohio v. Roberts, supra, were provided by the fact that codefendant's statements were thoroughly and unambiguously against his penal interest, and that there was little reason to believe that he was motivated by a desire to shift blame to defendant. (106 S.Ct. 2066, 90 L.Ed.2d 530.)

The Lee case was relied on in Lilly v. Virginia (1999) 527 U.S. 116, 119 S.Ct. 1887, 144 L.Ed.2d 117, a murder trial in which a nontestifying accomplice's confession, containing some statements against the accomplice's penal interest and others inculcating defendant, was admitted against defendant. Defendant's conviction was affirmed by the state's highest court, which reasoned that the concerns of the Confrontation Clause were satisfied because the accomplice's statements fell within a "firmly rooted hearsay exception," and because there were "particularized guarantees" that they were trustworthy. (119 S.Ct. 1899, 144 L.Ed.2d 133.) Held, admission of the confession was improper. (a) Not all statements against penal interest can be considered to fall within a "firmly rooted" exception for Confrontation Clause purposes; an accomplice's statement, like the one here, that shifts or spreads the blame to a criminal defendant is outside the realm of hearsay exceptions that are so trustworthy that adversarial testing can be expected to add little to their reliability. (119 S.Ct. 1898, 144 L.Ed.2d 132.) (b) The particularized guarantees of trustworthiness that would otherwise allow admission of an accomplice's confession in this type of situation cannot be found in other, corroborating evidence; the required indicia of reliability must attend the confession itself. In this case, neither the words the accomplice spoke nor the setting in which he was questioned provided any basis for concluding that his comments needed no adversarial testing. (119 S.Ct. 1901, 144 L.Ed.2d 135, 136.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

A. Confession of Defendant.

1. In General.

d. Confession of Accomplice Offered for Nonhearsay Purpose.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 63

[§ 63] Confession of Accomplice Offered for Nonhearsay Purpose.

In Tennessee v. Street (1985) 471 U.S. 409, 105 S.Ct. 2078, 85 L.Ed.2d 425, defendant, on trial for murder, made a detailed confession to Papantoniou, the sheriff. At trial, defendant maintained that the confession was coercively derived from a written statement given the sheriff by Peele, an accomplice in the murder; i.e., defendant testified that the sheriff read from Peele's statement and directed defendant to say the same thing. In rebuttal, the prosecution called the sheriff, who first contradicted defendant's testimony, and then read Peele's confession, answering questions that emphasized the differences between the two. The trial judge informed the jury that Peele's confession was admitted, not for the purpose of proving its truthfulness, but to rebut defendant's claim that his own confession was a coerced imitation of Peele's. Held, admission of the accomplice's confession was proper.

(a) Before the details of Peele's confession were admitted, the jury could evaluate the reliability of defendant's confession only by weighing the testimony of defendant and the sheriff. When Peele's statement was introduced, the jury could compare the two confessions to determine the plausibility of defendant's account. (105 S.Ct. 2081, 85 L.Ed.2d 430.)

(b) "The nonhearsay aspect of Peele's confession--not to prove what happened at the murder scene but to prove what happened when respondent confessed--raises no Confrontation Clause concerns. ... If respondent's counsel doubted that Peele's confession was accurately recounted, he was free to cross-examine the Sheriff. By cross-examination respondent's counsel could also challenge Sheriff Papantoniou's testimony that he did not read from Peele's statement and direct respondent to say the same thing. In short, the State's rebuttal witness against respondent was not Peele, but Sheriff Papantoniou." (105 S.Ct. 2082, 85 L.Ed.2d 431.)

(c) Unlike the situation in Bruton v. United States (1968) 391 U.S. 123, 88 S.Ct. 1620, 20 L.Ed.2d 476, supra, §59, editing the Peele confession would have been impractical; i.e., if all of Peele's references to defendant had been deleted, it would have been more difficult for the jury to evaluate defendant's testimony that his confession was a coerced imitation. (105 S.Ct. 2082, 85 L.Ed.2d 432.) The trial judge's instructions were the appropriate way to limit the jury's use of the evidence. (105 S.Ct. 2083, 85 L.Ed.2d 432.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

A. Confession of Defendant.

2. Involuntary Confessions.

a. Physical Abuse or Threat of Abuse.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 64

[§ 64] Physical Abuse or Threat of Abuse.

(1) Physical Torture. A confession obtained by physical torture or abuse is inadmissible, and the conviction of a defendant on a confession so obtained is a violation of due process. (See Brown v. Mississippi (1935) 297 U.S. 278, 56 S.Ct. 461, 80 L.Ed. 682; People v. Williams (1942) 20 C.2d 273, 284, 125 P.2d 9; People v. Rodriguez (1943) 58 C.A.2d 415, 422, 136 P.2d 626; People v. Jones (1944) 24 C.2d 601, 610, 150 P.2d 801; People v. McElheny (1982) 137 C.A.3d 396, 402, 187 C.R. 39 [physical abuse of 18-year-old defendant rendered statements inadmissible; following Williams]; 1 McCormick 5th, §148; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §736 et seq.; 4 So. Cal. L. Rev. 83; 6 Stanf. L. Rev. 414; 43 Harv. L. Rev. 617; 79 Harv. L. Rev. 962, 964.)

Where the suspect is physically abused, a subsequent warning of Miranda rights (see infra, §76) does not break the chain, and the confession may be held inadmissible from the totality of the circumstances. (People v. Sanchez (1969) 70 C.2d 562, 576, 75 C.R. 642, 451 P.2d 74.) However, the use of reasonable force in arresting a defendant does not impair the voluntariness of a statement made during or after the arrest. (In re Walker (1974) 10 C.3d 764, 777, 112 C.R. 177, 518 P.2d 1129 ["Although petitioner sustained injuries at the time of his arrest and undoubtedly was in pain during some of the interviews, such pain does not appear from the officers' testimony to have reflected on his competency"].)

(2) Threats of Physical Abuse. The same rule of inadmissibility applies to a confession obtained by threats of harm to the accused or to someone close to the accused. (People v. Loper (1910) 159 C. 6, 17, 112 P. 720; People v. Mellus (1933) 134 C.A. 219, 223, 25 P.2d 237 [threat to lock up defendant's mother under the same charge]; People v. Flores (1936) 15 C.A.2d 385, 405, 59 P.2d 517; People v. Rand (1962) 202 C.A.2d 668, 673, 674, 21 C.R. 89 [threat to put defendant's wife in jail and his children in juvenile detention]; Payne v. Arkansas (1958) 356 U.S. 560, 78 S.Ct. 844, 2 L.Ed.2d 975 [mentally dull black youth held incommunicado for 3 days, denied food for long periods, and told by police chief that there would be 30 or 40 people outside in a few minutes who wanted to get him]; Lynnum v. Illinois (1963) 372 U.S. 528, 83 S.Ct. 917, 920, 9 L.Ed.2d 922 [woman defendant, with no previous criminal experience, "encircled in her apartment by three police officers and a twice convicted felon who had purportedly 'set her up,' " was threatened with termination of state aid for her infant children if she did not "cooperate"]; 3 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §833; 7 So. Cal. L. Rev. 239.)

(3) Torture and Threats by Private Persons. A confession obtained without coercion by the police, but induced by torture and threats by private persons, is inadmissible. In People v. Berve (1958) 51 C.2d 286, 332 P.2d 97, defendant allegedly performed a negligent abortion on M, from which she died. Her husband and other relatives kidnaped defendant, beat him unmercifully for 2 hours, and threatened to kill him and harm his parents unless he confessed.

While he was in a dazed condition and in great pain, a police officer arrived, arrested him, and took him to the station. There, without rest or medical attention, he was interrogated until he confessed. The trial judge found the confession voluntary. In reversing the conviction, the court expressed the strongest condemnation of the conduct of the authorities:

"The actual physical and psychological effects of the beating the defendant absorbed were painfully fresh when he confessed. The police made no effort to assuage his physical suffering by giving him medical attention, opportunity to rest, or even sufficient water to drink or to wash himself. Although there was no threat of further violence by the police, this element was provided by the clear threats of his kidnapers. Torture destroys not only physically but psychologically. Elements of despair, fatigue, craving for companionship, identifying one's interrogator as a friend and source of aid, and suggestions of guilt were all present in a crude, haphazard form in this case. They are the prime elements in the more devious and elaborate systems of menticide employed to obtain confession in totalitarian states." (51 C.2d 292.)

(4) Offer To Protect From Physical Abuse. In Arizona v. Fulminante (1991) 499 U.S. 279, 111 S.Ct. 1246, 113 L.Ed.2d 302, defendant was convicted in a state court of the murder of his 11-year-old stepdaughter. Prior to trial, defendant was incarcerated in federal prison for an unrelated federal crime. While there, defendant was befriended by a fellow inmate, who was a paid F.B.I. informant. The informant stated he was aware that defendant was receiving "tough treatment" from other inmates because of a rumor that he had murdered a child, and offered to protect defendant from his fellow inmates. Defendant then confessed to the informant. Held, based on the totality of the circumstances, the confession was coerced, thus inadmissible.

(a) Unless defendant confessed, there was a credible threat of physical violence from fellow inmates without the informant's protection. (111 S.Ct. 1252, 1253, 113 L.Ed.2d 316, 317.)

(b) These additional facts supported a finding of coercion: (1) Defendant, who possessed a low-average to average intelligence, dropped out of school in the fourth grade; (2) defendant was short in stature and slight in build; (3) although defendant had been in prison before, he had not always adapted well to the stress of prison life; (4) the informant's position as defendant's friend may have made defendant particularly susceptible to the informant's entreaties. (111 S.Ct. 1252, 113 L.Ed.2d 316, footnote 3.)

(c) The informant acted as an agent of the government when he questioned defendant about the murder and elicited the confession. (111 S.Ct. 1253, 113 L.Ed.2d 316, footnote 4.) (See 105 Harv. L. Rev. 152 [Fulminante] ; 19 Hastings Const. L. Q. 911 [same]; 22 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 285 [same].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Physical Torture. See 1 McCormick 6th, §148; 26 Thomas Jefferson L. Rev. 469 [arguing in favor of legalizing and regulating use of torture in situations where greater evil could be prevented]; 16 A.L.R. Fed 2d 257 [admissibility of evidence procured by torture occurring in another country].

(2) Threats of Physical Abuse. Cf. People v. Haley (2004) 34 C.4th 283, 298, 17 C.R.3d 877, 96 P.3d 170 [in capital murder prosecution, defendant's confession was voluntary and thus properly admitted, notwithstanding defendant's claim that detective threatened to kill him and, because he was under influence of cocaine, he was susceptible to threat; evidence supported trial judge's findings that there was no threat and defendant was not under influence of cocaine]. West's Key Number Digest, Criminal Law k.519 et seq.

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

- A. Confession of Defendant.
  - 2. Involuntary Confessions.
    - b. Other Threats or Inducements.
      - 1. General Principle and Distinction.

[§ 65] General Principle and Distinction.

Threats, express or implied, of certain conviction and heavy punishment, are usually accompanied by promises or suggestions of leniency or other advantage if a confession is given. Both methods of procurement render the confession inadmissible. (See 1 McCormick 5th, §148; 3 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§824, 825, 831 et seq.; 4 So. Cal. L. Rev. 90; 79 Harv. L. Rev. 978; 27 A.L.R.3d 1185 [compelling accused to view corpse of victim]; 89 A.L.R.3d 230 [confession made in anticipation of, during, or following polygraph examination]; 51 A.L.R.4th 495 [police statements that suspect's relatives will benefit by confession]; for examples, see infra, §66.)

A distinction must be made for situations in which an exhortation to confess is unaccompanied by either threat or inducement, apart perhaps from an emphasis on the natural psychological relief arising from telling the truth. Exhortations of this type do not render a confession involuntary. (See People v. Haney (1920) 46 C.A. 317, 322, 189 P. 338 [officer told defendant that "the truth would not hurt him and he better come out and tell it," and that "they expected him to tell the truth"; this was permissible admonition, not coupled with either threat or promise]; People v. Nelson (1964) 224 C.A.2d 238, 250, 36 C.R. 385 [officers told defendant he should get himself "straightened out" by telling the truth]; People v. Hill (1967) 66 C.2d 536, 549, 58 C.R. 340, 426 P.2d 908; People v. Spears (1991) 228 C.A.3d 1, 27, 28, 278 C.R. 506 [suggesting to defendant that it was "time [he] got this off [his] chest," and that he would be better off after he gave them "the scoop" were not implied promises of benefit beyond mere psychological relief that would flow from telling truth]; People v. Higareda (1994) 24 C.A.4th 1399, 1409, 29 C.R.2d 763 [detective's statement that if defendant told truth he would talk to district attorney, and any further action would be up to district attorney, did not constitute promise of leniency]; 3 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §832; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §740.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

- A. Confession of Defendant.
  - 2. Involuntary Confessions.
- b. Other Threats or Inducements.
  - 2. Confessions Inadmissible.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 66

[§ 66] Confessions Inadmissible.

In People v. Brommel (1961) 56 C.2d 629, 15 C.R. 909, 364 P.2d 845, defendant, arrested for murder, was continuously questioned for hours and repeatedly denied the crime. Then an officer told him he had been lying, that he could "take it the hard way or ... the easy way," that unless he told them the truth they would write on "a little paper" the word "liar," and that this would be presented to the judge, after which it would be useless for him to ask for any "breaks." Held, the statements were both an implied promise of a "break" and a threat of no leniency, and rendered the confession inadmissible. (56 C.2d 632.)

In People v. Manriquez (1965) 231 C.A.2d 725, 42 C.R. 157, the police, entering defendant's house after an informer purchased heroin there, arrested defendant, his wife, and other persons present. Then, talking privately with defendant, an arresting officer told him that if they searched and found narcotics and nobody claimed ownership, all persons there would have to be arrested. Defendant said: "If I give you the narcotics, you will not take my wife to jail?" The officer said yes, and defendant left the room and got the drugs. Held, defendant's admission that he possessed narcotics in addition to those sold to the informer was induced by the promise of his wife's release, hence, was inadmissible. (231 C.A.2d 730, citing the text.)

People v. Denney (1984) 152 C.A.3d 530, 199 C.R. 623, involved the recital of a hypothetical situation in which the cooperative suspect received a lighter sentence than the other suspects who did not. (152 C.A.3d 541.) The court said: "[I]t is clear that appellant was induced to confess by the officer's hypothetical story and pressured by the implied threat that he would get the gas chamber if he did not confess." (152 C.A.3d 544.)

In People v. Rogers (1943) 22 C.2d 787, 141 P.2d 722, a murder and arson case, S, an acquaintance of defendant, was allowed by the police to confer with defendant on several occasions. Defendant testified that S told him that if he didn't confess, the district attorney was going to charge him with first degree murder and he would be executed; but that if he would confess, they would let him go to a mental institution from which he would shortly be released. The court thought the record justified the inference that S was used by the police to make the inducements, and reversed the conviction. "[N]o court should countenance the use of a confession which was made under the influence of either threats or inducement. ... Moreover, although the promises or inducements are made by one without actual authority to give them effect, if they are made in the presence of one who has such authority under circumstances from which the accused has a right to assume that they were authorized, the confession so obtained is involuntary." (22 C.2d 805.)

In People v. Clark (1921) 55 C.A. 42, 203 P. 781, the record superficially showed mere exhortation without promise (see supra, §65). But the court made this distinction: "[W]here, in a case such as this, a prisoner is denied the benefit of counsel and is repeatedly assured by the police officers and matrons that they are her friends and will do nothing to harm her, and is brought to a weak physical and mental condition by long-sustained examination without food or other nourishment, the statement by one of those in authority that it is the best thing for her to tell the truth could not help but give her the impression that by telling the truth regarding the homicide those who professed to be her friends would aid her in getting a lighter punishment." (55 C.A. 45.)

The case law contains numerous other examples of impermissible inducements or threats. (See People v. Williams (1901) 133 C. 165, 167, 65 P. 323 [suggested promise of freedom if confession, threat of prosecution if none made]; People v. Loper (1910) 159 C. 6, 14, 112 P. 720 [threats, relentless grilling]; *People v. ## CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

- A. Confession of Defendant.
  - 2. Involuntary Confessions.
- b. Other Threats or Inducements.
  - 3. Confessions Admissible.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 67

[§ 67] Confessions Admissible.

In People v. Benson (1990) 52 C.3d 754, 276 C.R. 827, 802 P.2d 330, defendant confessed to a murder after an exchange with a detective during the course of which the detective stated, "There's no death penalty here." Held, the confession was properly admitted. It is unclear whether an objective or subjective standard applies in determining whether police conduct amounts to a "promise," but under either standard, there was no promise in this case. From the objective point of view, the detective's statement was no more than an observation that proved incorrect, and the observation was effectively withdrawn by the subsequent comment of another investigator, "Wait a minute, ... we don't know what happened in that house." From the subjective point of view, defendant's own admissions in the hearing on the matter indicate that he thought the statement reflected that the death penalty was "dormant" in California. (52 C.3d 780, 781.)

In People v. Lindsey (1961) 188 C.A.2d 471, 10 C.R. 488, defendant, charged with robbery and identified by the victim, made an oral confession. At trial, police officers testified that he confessed first, and that afterwards they questioned him on other robberies, advising him that if he cleared them up they would only charge him with this one. Defendant's version was that they accused him of the other robberies and told him that if he would confess to this one they would make it the sole charge. Held, conviction affirmed. (a) If defendant's version were accepted, the confession would probably be inadmissible as having been induced by a promise of immunity. (b) But the jury and trial judge resolved the conflict in the evidence against the defendant; hence, the confession, preceding the promise of immunity, was not induced by it and was properly received in evidence. (188 C.A.2d 476.)

There are numerous other examples. (See People v. Castello (1924) 194 C. 595, 601, 229 P. 855 [officer told defendants "we had the goods on them and that they had just as well come clean"; statement carried no threat or hope of reward]; People v. Morris (1991) 53 C.3d 152, 201, 279 C.R. 720, 807 P.2d 949 [allowing defendant to speak with his girlfriend was insufficient "inducement" to render his murder confession involuntary]; People v. Clark (1993) 5 C.4th 950, 988, 22 C.R.2d 689, 857 P.2d 1099, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §108 [officer's statement regarding defendant's probable amount of prison time constituted neither promise of leniency nor inducement]; People v. Ray (1996) 13 C.4th 313, 340, 52 C.R.2d 296, 914 P.2d 846 [where defendant offered to discuss crimes only if detective could guarantee death penalty would be imposed, detective's statement that prosecution would pursue death penalty did not constitute improper promise]; People v. Massie (1998) 19 C.4th 550, 576, 79 C.R.2d 816, 967 P.2d 29 [confession was voluntary where defendant said he would make statement on condition that he was given separate cell, and officer promised to try and secure one for him but never told him his effort to do so was contingent on defendant's decision to give statement[.])

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See People v. Weaver (2001) 26 C.4th 876, 921, 111 C.R.2d 2, 29 P.3d 103 [substantial evidence supported trial judge's determination that defendant, properly informed of his rights, waived them, and that waiver was not coerced by threats to arrest his family members; as officers did not engage in misconduct, claim that defendant was on medication at time was insufficient to establish involuntariness]; People v. Ramos (2004) 121 C.A.4th 1194, 1203, 18 C.R.3d 167

[detective's statement to defendant that his cooperation in investigation would benefit defendant during judicial process did not amount to improper promise of leniency, and thus defendant's ensuing confession was properly admitted; under circumstances, statement would have been understood to mean that defendant's cooperation might be useful in later plea bargain negotiations].

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

- A. Confession of Defendant.
- 2. Involuntary Confessions.
- c. Psychological Coercion.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 68

[§ 68] Psychological Coercion.

"The question posed by the due process clause in cases of claimed psychological coercion is whether the influences brought to bear upon the accused were 'such as to overbear petitioner's will to resist and bring about confessions not freely self-determined.' " (People v. Hogan (1982) 31 C.3d 815, 841, 183 C.R. 817, 647 P.2d 93 [quoting Rogers v. Richmond (1961) 365 U.S. 534, 81 S.Ct. 735, 5 L.Ed.2d 760]; see 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §731; 22 Proof of Facts 2d 539 [psychological coercion].) Often the coercion takes the form of implied threats (supra, §65) or prolonged questioning (infra, §72). Where police tactics do not appear to have exploited the suspect's particular vulnerabilities to the extent of overcoming his or her free will, the claim of involuntariness is rejected. (See People v. Kelly (1990) 51 C.3d 931, 953, 275 C.R. 160, 800 P.2d 516 [telling defendant that he had violated his religious beliefs and caused grief to his family; confession held voluntary]; People v. Jacobo (1991) 230 C.A.3d 1416, 1423, 281 C.R. 750 [probation officer's admonished defendant to be "responsible for what you do," without even implying it would be better for him to tell the truth].)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

A. Confession of Defendant.

2. Involuntary Confessions.

d. Fraud.

1. Confessions Admissible.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 69

[§ 69] Confessions Admissible.

The traditional view, supported by leading authorities, is that fraud will not render a confession inadmissible unless the misrepresentations are of such a nature as would probably result in an untrue statement. (See People v. Castello (1924) 194 C. 595, 602, 229 P. 855; People v. Connelly (1925) 195 C. 584, 597, 234 P. 374 [dictum; statements probably admissions rather than confessions]; People v. Stadnick (1962) 207 C.A.2d 767, 774, 25 C.R. 30; In re Walker (1974) 10 C.3d 764, 777, 112 C.R. 177, 518 P.2d 1129, citing the text [after defendant was shot during arrest and was en route to hospital, officer said defendant was in pretty bad shape and might not live until destination and that "smart thing" to do was tell about alleged crimes; even if officer's statement about defendant's condition was deception, it was not of type reasonably likely to procure untrue statement]; People v. Felix (1977) 72 C.A.3d 879, 885, 886, 139 C.R. 366; People v. Musselwhite (1998) 17 C.4th 1216, 1240, 74 C.R.2d 212, 954 P.2d 475 [although detectives told defendant that they had lifted his fingerprints from victim's body when, in fact, they did not yet have forensics report, this did not render confession involuntary; it could not be said that misrepresentation was proximate cause of confession]; People v. Chutan (1999) 72 C.A.4th 1276, 1280, 85 C.R.2d 744 [questioning of defendant was not coercive simply because detective failed to reveal that he was conducting criminal investigation relating to sexual molestation and not just asking questions about placement of defendant's children]; 3 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §841; 79 Harv. L. Rev. 958; 31 San Diego L. Rev. 729; 99 A.L.R.2d 772 [admissibility of confession as affected by trickery or fraud].)

Thus, in People v. Castello, supra, officer S told defendants that the officers could introduce them to persons who saw them steal the property. In fact, the officers merely knew (among other facts) persons to whom defendants had sold part of the stolen property. Held, the fact that a confession is procured by a police officer's falsehood, artifice, or deception does not exclude it where, as here, it was not calculated to procure an untrue statement. (194 C. 602.)

Similarly, in People v. Connelly, supra, involving robbery and murder in a saloon, the sheriff falsely stated to defendant that fingerprints taken from a cash register matched his. Held, "[w]hile the indulgence in deceptive methods of false statements is not morally justifiable or a commendable practice, this alone would not render even a confession of guilt inadmissible." (195 C. 597.) (See 1953 A.S. 777 [confession to tampering with rail obtained by concealment of fact that train wreck caused deaths].)

See People v. Farnam (2002) 28 C.4th 107, 182, 121 C.R.2d 106, 47 P.3d 988 [in capital murder prosecution, trial judge did not err in admitting defendant's confession to robbery and assault, which was introduced as aggravating evidence of other violent crimes, even though confession was made after police falsely told defendant that his fingerprints had been found on victim's wallet; deception was not of type likely to produce false confession].

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

A. Confession of Defendant.

2. Involuntary Confessions.

d. Fraud.

2. Confessions Inadmissible.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 70

[§ 70] Confessions Inadmissible.

(1) In General. The cases holding fraudulently obtained confessions inadmissible usually involve something more than fraud. Thus, in Leyra v. Denno (1954) 347 U.S. 556, 74 S.Ct. 716, 98 L.Ed. 948, petitioner, in police custody, suffered a sinus attack, and the police brought him Dr. H for supposed medical treatment. Dr. H, a psychiatrist, gave him no medical advice but continued the questioning. "For an hour and a half or more the techniques of a highly trained psychiatrist were used to break petitioner's will in order to get him to say he had murdered his parents. Time and time again the psychiatrist told petitioner how much he wanted to and could help him, how bad it would be for petitioner if he did not confess, and how much better he would feel, and how much lighter and easier it would be on him if he would just unbosom himself to the doctor. Yet the doctor was at that very time the paid representative of the state whose prosecuting officials were listening in on every threat made and every promise of leniency given." (74 S.Ct. 718, 98 L.Ed. 952.) Held, on habeas corpus, "use of confessions extracted in such a manner from a lone defendant unprotected by counsel is not consistent with due process." (74 S.Ct. 719, 98 L.Ed. 952.) (See 68 Harv. L. Rev. 110; 43 Cal. L. Rev. 114; 2 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 127; and see also People v. Hogan (1982) 31 C.3d 815, 840, 855, 183 C.R. 817, 647 P.2d 93 [police falsely indicated that they had eyewitness evidence of defendant's guilt, and suggested he had committed homicides while "berserk"].)

In Massiah v. United States (1964) 377 U.S. 201, 84 S.Ct. 1199, 1203, 12 L.Ed.2d 246, incriminating statements obtained by trickery (conversations with codefendant, cooperating with police, monitored by police agent) were held inadmissible because defendant was under indictment and entitled to have his attorney present. (For full discussion, see 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §268; and see People v. Goedecke (1967) 65 C.2d 850, 859, 56 C.R. 625, 423 P.2d 777; Milton v. Wainwright (1972) 407 U.S. 371, 92 S.Ct. 2174, 33 L.Ed.2d 1 [violation of Massiah rule as harmless error]; 78 Harv. L. Rev. 217, 221 [Massiah]; 79 Harv. L. Rev. 998 [extension of Massiah rule in subsequent cases]; 40 Stanf. L. Rev. 1593 [police use of trickery in obtaining confession].)

(2) False Promise of Immunity. A confession induced by a false governmental promise of immunity is no more free than one obtained by coercion, and is inadmissible. This proposition was stated in Shotwell Mfg. Co. v. United States (1963) 371 U.S. 341, 83 S.Ct. 448, 453, 9 L.Ed.2d 357, but held inapplicable under the facts. Petitioners, suspected of failure to report income, took advantage of the Treasury's "voluntary disclosure policy," which allows delinquent taxpayers to escape criminal prosecution by full disclosure before any investigation is commenced. Held, their motions to suppress the evidence at the trial were properly denied, for two reasons: (a) The Treasury's policy was addressed to the public generally, and, unlike promises of immunity made directly to suspected persons, was not an attempt to extract confessions of guilt from petitioners as individuals; they were wholly free to act and their disclosure was entirely voluntary. (b) Their purported disclosure was fraudulent, misrepresenting material facts; hence, the Treasury's general offer was impliedly withdrawn as to them. (83 S.Ct. 453, 454, 9 L.Ed.2d 365, 366.) (See 77 Harv. L. Rev. 108; 11 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 302.)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

- A. Confession of Defendant.
  - 2. Involuntary Confessions.
    - e. Prolonged Questioning.
      - 1. Questioning Without Coercion.

[§ 71] Questioning Without Coercion.

It is possible to conduct questioning in such a manner that the accused is able to act freely and to choose to confess voluntarily; therefore, the factor of lengthy questioning, by itself, does not require a conclusion that coercion was exerted. (See 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §735.) This proposition is asserted in a number of cases, although the sharp dissenting opinions show how difficult it is to draw the factual distinctions.

(1) United States Supreme Court Opinions. In Lisenba v. California (1941) 314 U.S. 219, 62 S.Ct. 280, 86 L.Ed. 166 [affirming People v. Lisenba (1939) 14 C.2d 403, 421, 94 P.2d 569], although the court criticized the officers' conduct, no violation of due process was found. "The petitioner has said that the interrogation would never have drawn an admission from him had his confederate not made a statement; he admits that no threats, promises, or acts of physical violence were offered him during this questioning or for eleven days preceding it. Counsel had been afforded full opportunity to see him and had advised him. He exhibited a self-possession, a coolness, and an acumen throughout his questioning ... which negatives the view that he had so lost his freedom of action that the statements made were not his but were the result of the deprivation of his free choice to admit, to deny, or to refuse to answer." (62 S.Ct. 292, 86 L.Ed. 182.)

In Stein v. New York (1953) 346 U.S. 156, 73 S.Ct. 1077, 97 L.Ed. 1522, where the suspects were questioned intermittently for 12 hours over a 32-hour period, the Court observed that "[i]nterrogation is not inherently coercive, as is physical violence" (73 S.Ct. 1092, 97 L.Ed. 1542), that its "limits are not defined merely by calling an interrogation an 'inquisition,' " and that the "relay" technique may sometimes be reasonably employed (73 S.Ct. 1093, 97 L.Ed. 1543). (See 67 Harv. L. Rev. 118; 41 Cal. L. Rev. 672; 6 Stanf. L. Rev. 423.)

In Thomas v. Arizona (1958) 356 U.S. 390, 78 S.Ct. 885, 2 L.Ed.2d 863, petitioner, a person of normal intelligence with an extensive criminal record, confessed under ordinary questioning by the county attorney after being advised of his rights. Some 20 hours before, after apprehension by a sheriff's posse, local ranchers twice lassoed him, but the sheriff promptly had the rope removed and there was no threat of lynching. Held, the confession was admissible.

(2) California Opinions. California cases have upheld confessions obtained in a similar manner. (See People v. Lisenba, supra; People v. Gonzales (1944) 24 C.2d 870, 875, 151 P.2d 251; People v. Mehafeey (1948) 32 C.2d 535, 552, 197 P.2d 12; People v. Cucco (1948) 85 C.A.2d 448, 452, 193 P.2d 86; People v. Millum (1954) 42 C.2d 524, 527, 267 P.2d 1039 [sporadic questioning, interrupted by search and time to eat, not objectionable]; People v. Matlock (1959) 51 C.2d 682, 696, 336 P.2d 505 [criticizing implied threat to accused's family, but holding that under all the circumstances, confession was admissible]; People v. Andersen (1980) 101 C.A.3d 563, 578, 582, 583, 161 C.R. 707 [defendant voluntarily sought dialogue with police in which they commented on realities of her position and courses of conduct open to her; "strong implication that defendant wanted the facts to come out and wanted to be nudged into a confession"]; People v. Maestas (1987) 194 C.A.3d 1499, 1505, 240 C.R. 360 [16-year-old murder suspect was in custody 71/2 hours before confessing, but was interrogated for only 4 hours; providing suspect with food after he started confessing was insignificant under circumstances].)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

A. Confession of Defendant.

2. Involuntary Confessions.

e. Prolonged Questioning.

2. Questioning as Coercion.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 72

[§ 72] Questioning as Coercion.

(1) In General: Ashcraft Rule. Even though no violence or threats are employed, prolonged questioning under some circumstances may constitute such coercion as to render a confession ineffective. This rule was laid down in the leading case of Ashcraft v. Tennessee (1944) 322 U.S. 143, 64 S.Ct. 921, 88 L.Ed. 1192, where 36 hours of continuous questioning by experienced investigators was held inherently coercive and a denial of due process. "[I]ts very existence is irreconcilable with the possession of mental freedom by a lone suspect against whom its full coercive force is brought to bear." (64 S.Ct. 926, 88 L.Ed. 1199.) (See 6 Stanf. L. Rev. 417.)

(2) Subsequent United States Supreme Court Opinions. United States Supreme Court decisions applying the Ashcraft doctrine include Haley v. Ohio (1948) 332 U.S. 596, 68 S.Ct. 302, 92 L.Ed. 224 [15-year-old black boy questioned alone by police from midnight until 5 a.m.]; Watts v. Indiana (1949) 338 U.S. 49, 69 S.Ct. 1347, 93 L.Ed. 1801 [accused questioned persistently by officers in relays, for long hours, during period of 6 days]; Fikes v. Alabama (1957) 352 U.S. 191, 77 S.Ct. 281, 1 L.Ed.2d 246 [Black of low mentality kept isolated for a week and questioned for hours at a time for 5 days]; Payne v. Arkansas (1958) 356 U.S. 560, 78 S.Ct. 844, 2 L.Ed.2d 975; Blackburn v. Alabama (1960) 361 U.S. 199, 80 S.Ct. 274, 279, 4 L.Ed.2d 242 ["A prolonged interrogation of an accused who is ignorant of his rights and who has been cut off from the moral support of friends and relatives is not infrequently an effective technique of terror"]; Reck v. Pate (1961) 367 U.S. 433, 81 S.Ct. 1541, 6 L.Ed.2d 948 [19-year-old boy of subnormal intelligence confessed to murder after 8 days of interrogation without permission to see his father, friends, or a lawyer]; Culombe v. Connecticut (1961) 367 U.S. 568, 81 S.Ct. 1860, 6 L.Ed.2d 1037 [illiterate defendant of low intelligence confessed after repeated questioning and denial of request for counsel]; Davis v. North Carolina (1966) 384 U.S. 737, 86 S.Ct. 1761, 16 L.Ed.2d 895; Greenwald v. Wisconsin (1968) 390 U.S. 519, 88 S.Ct. 1152, 20 L.Ed.2d 77. (See 22 So. Cal. L. Rev. 300 [Haley]; 75 Harv. L. Rev. 158 [Culombe]; 79 Harv. L. Rev. 969 [Ashcraft and Haley].)

In Spano v. New York (1959) 360 U.S. 315, 79 S.Ct. 1202, 3 L.Ed.2d 1265, petitioner was indicted for murder. Accompanied by counsel, he surrendered to the authorities and refused to answer questions on counsel's advice. Persistent interrogation nevertheless continued for 8 hours, during which he was refused several times an opportunity to consult his attorney. At the end, a confession was obtained by bringing in his close friend to play on his sympathies with deliberately contrived falsehoods. Held, conviction reversed. "[P]etitioner's will was overborn by official pressure, fatigue and sympathy falsely aroused." (79 S.Ct. 1207, 3 L.Ed.2d 1272.) The Court observed that the brutality described in earlier cases is today uncommon. "But as law enforcement officers become more responsible, and the methods used to extract confessions more sophisticated, our duty to enforce federal constitutional protections does not cease. It only becomes more difficult because of the more delicate judgements to be made." (79 S.Ct. 1206, 3 L.Ed.2d 1271.) (See 79 Harv. L. Rev. 980.)

In Blackburn v. Alabama, supra, petitioner, a black man 24 years old at the time of the crime, was convicted of robbery. His prior history was one of insanity and insanity commitments; he was in a mental hospital for over 4 years before being declared mentally competent to stand trial, and two of the three psychiatrists agreed that he had probably been incompetent when he made the confession; the other psychiatrist, in an inconsistent report, described him as both insane and sane. The confession itself was obtained by 8 or 9 hours of interrogation in a small room with several officers present. Held, conviction reversed.

(a) First, as in the Fikes and Spano cases, supra, low mentality and emotional instability were important factors. (80 S.Ct. 281, 4 L.Ed.2d 249.) And, considering the long interrogation in a tiny room filled with police officers, the absence of friends, and a confession composed by the deputy sheriff, "the chances of the confession having been the product of a rational intellect and a free will becomes even more remote and the denial of due process even more egregious." (80 S.Ct. 280, 4 L.Ed.2d 249.)

(b) Second, there was a strong probability that the defendant was actually incompetent: "Surely in the present stage of our civilization a most basic sense of justice is affronted by the spectacle of incarcerating a human being upon the basis of a statement he made while insane; and this judgment can without difficulty be articulated in terms of the unreliability of the confession, the lack of rational choice of the accused, or simply a strong conviction that our system of law enforcement should not operate so as to take advantage of a person in this fashion." (80 S.Ct. 280, 4 L.Ed.2d 248.) (See 79 Harv. L. Rev. 976.)

(3) California Opinions. California cases in accord with the Ashcraft rule include People v. Clark (1921) 55 C.A. 42, 45, 203 P. 781 [murder; defendant, a woman in low mental and physical condition, subjected to almost daily grilling for hours at a time by several officers for over 2 weeks; "a relentless sweating process"]; People v. Dye (1931) 119 C.A. 262, 270, 6 P.2d 313 [illegal detention without communication with friends or counsel, continual questioning for several days; "The wearing-out process of inquisition"]; People v. Day (1932) 125 C.A. 106, 108, 13 P.2d 855 [woman defendant kept in custody for about 6 days without charge and regularly questioned, with threats and vague promises]; People v. Speaks (1957) 156 C.A.2d 25, 38, 319 P.2d 709 [epileptic woman confined with drunks and psychopaths and repeatedly questioned for several days; "a calculated endeavor to secure a confession through psychological pressure"]; People v. Alfieri (1979) 95 C.A.3d 533, 545, 157 C.R. 304; People v. Nicholas (1980) 112 C.A.3d 249, 262, 265, 266, 169 C.R. 497; People v. Montano (1991) 226 C.A.3d 914, 931, 277 C.R. 327, infra, §80.

(4) Effect of Miranda. Miranda v. Arizona (1966) 384 U.S. 436, 86 S.Ct. 1602, 16 L.Ed.2d 694, infra, §76, which requires police to give a detailed warning of constitutional rights prior to custodial interrogation, provides a mechanism for cutting off questioning. Today, therefore, the focus of analysis is likely to be on whether the Miranda requirements were observed rather than on whether the length of questioning overbore the accused's free will. (See 1 McCormick 5th, §149.)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

A. Confession of Defendant.

2. Involuntary Confessions.

f. Illegal Detention.

1. In Federal Trials.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 73

[§ 73] In Federal Trials.

(1) McNabb Rule. A confession obtained from a defendant held illegally in custody is inadmissible in the federal courts. (McNabb v. United States (1943) 318 U.S. 332, 63 S.Ct. 608, 87 L.Ed. 819; Upshaw v. United States (1948) 335 U.S. 410, 69 S.Ct. 170, 93 L.Ed. 100; Mallory v. United States (1957) 354 U.S. 449, 77 S.Ct. 1356, 1 L.Ed.2d 1479; see 1 McCormick 5th, §157; 56 Harv. L. Rev. 1008; 71 Harv. L. Rev. 1562; 74 Harv. L. Rev. 1222; 79 Harv. L. Rev. 984; 50 Cal. L. Rev. 348.) "[T]his Court in recent years has enforced a judicially created federal rule of evidence, to which the label 'McNabb rule' has been applied, that confessions shall be excluded if obtained during 'illegal detention due to failure promptly to carry a prisoner before a committing magistrate, whether or not the confession is the result of torture, physical or psychological.' " (United States v. Carignan (1951) 342 U.S. 36, 72 S.Ct. 97, 100, 96 L.Ed. 48.)

But if the detention is not illegal, the fact of custody does not constitute a ground of attack on the confession. So, in United States v. Carignan, supra, a defendant legally arrested and promptly taken before a magistrate on one charge was properly questioned about a different offense. The Court said: "An extension of a mechanical rule based on the time of a confession would not be a helpful addition to the rules of criminal evidence. We decline to extend the McNabb fixed rule of exclusion to statements to police or wardens concerning other crimes while prisoners are legally in detention on criminal charges." (72 S.Ct. 102, 96 L.Ed. 54.) (See 66 Harv. L. Rev. 129; 3 Stanf. L. Rev. 727 [discussing Court of Appeals decision].)

Moreover, where the detention, though illegal, occurs after the confession, the confession is admissible; i.e., the McNabb rule is not a penalty for violation of the duty of prompt commitment. (United States v. Mitchell (1944) 322 U.S. 65, 64 S.Ct. 896, 88 L.Ed. 1140; see 18 So. Cal. L. Rev. 63; 25 So. Cal. L. Rev. 215; 79 Harv. L. Rev. 992.)

(2) Statutory Safe-Harbor Exception. Under 18 U.S.C., §3501(c), a confession made by a person under arrest or other detention is not rendered inadmissible solely because of delay in bringing the person before a magistrate if the confession is found by the trial judge to have been voluntarily made and if the confession was made or given within 6 hours immediately following the arrest or detention. The statute creates a kind of "safe harbor" exception to the McNabb rule. (See 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §732; 4 Wharton, Criminal Evidence 14th, §632.)

However, if "the person is arrested and held on state charges, §3501(c) does not apply, and the safe harbor is not implicated. This is true even if the arresting officers (who, when the arrest is for a violation of state law, almost certainly will be agents of the State or one of its subdivisions) believe or have cause to believe that the person also may have violated federal law. ... As long as the person is arrested and held only on state charges by state or local authorities, the provisions of §3501(c) are not triggered." (United States v. Alvarez-Sanchez (1994) 511 U.S. 350, 114 S.Ct. 1599, 1603, 1604, 128 L.Ed.2d 319, 327, 328.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

A. Confession of Defendant.

2. Involuntary Confessions.

f. Illegal Detention.

2. In State Trials.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 74

[§ 74] In State Trials.

(1) In General. The McNabb rule (supra, §73) deals with federal procedure and not due process. And the United States Supreme Court has held that, so far as state criminal trials are concerned, unlawful arrest and detention do not necessarily render a resulting confession inadmissible. (See Gallegos v. Nebraska (1951) 342 U.S. 55, 72 S.Ct. 141, 96 L.Ed. 86; Crooker v. California (1958) 354 U.S. 908, 77 S.Ct. 1300, 1 L.Ed.2d 1426; 66 Harv. L. Rev. 124; 1951 A.S. 839.) The result has been that few states have shown any inclination to adopt the McNabb doctrine. (See 4 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 138; 28 A.L.R.4th 1121 [delay in arraignment--modern state cases].)

(2) Confession During Illegal Detention. In California, a double problem was presented: Should a confession obtained during illegal detention be rejected under the McNabb doctrine? If not, should it be rejected under People v. Cahan (1955) 44 C.2d 434, 282 P.2d 905, which held that evidence obtained in violation of constitutional guarantees must be excluded? (See 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, §4.) In Rogers v. Superior Court (1955) 46 C.2d 3, 291 P.2d 929, a case dealing with incriminating admissions and treating them as raising the issue of admissibility of confessions, the court answered no to both questions. Defendant was arrested and illegally detained (90 hours until conversation with police, and 8 days until taken before magistrate). The admissions connecting him with the crime were made while under this detention. His petition for prohibition on the ground that the information was based on no competent evidence was denied. The court declared that "none of the states following the rule excluding illegally obtained evidence have adopted the rule of the McNabb case; and we are not disposed to adopt it." (46 C.2d 10.) The distinction, said the court, is that (a) evidence obtained by search and seizure or by a coerced confession is a necessary product of the search or the coercion--the victim cannot select items to be taken; but (b) a voluntary admission is not a necessary product of the illegal detention, for the suspect may remain silent or make any statement that serves his interest. (46 C.2d 10.) (See 4 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 136 [somewhat critical of result, and suggesting (p. 140) that "in a more McNabb-like case, the California court will be more willing to adopt a McNabb-like rule"]; and see cases concerning defendants held incommunicado, infra, §75.)

The Rogers case was followed in subsequent decisions. (See People v. Teitelbaum (1958) 163 C.A.2d 184, 210, 329 P.2d 157; People v. Hanson (1961) 197 C.A.2d 658, 664, 17 C.R. 334, citing the text; In re Walker (1974) 10 C.3d 764, 779, 112 C.R. 177, 518 P.2d 1129; People v. Haydel (1974) 12 C.3d 190, 199, 115 C.R. 394, 524 P.2d 866, citing the text; People v. Thompson (1980) 27 C.3d 303, 329, 165 C.R. 289, 611 P.2d 883; In re Michael E. (1980) 112 C.A.3d 74, 79, 169 C.R. 62.)

But the flagrant disregard of the statutory requirement of promptly taking the accused before a magistrate (P.C. 825) was heartily condemned in People v. Grace (1958) 166 C.A.2d 68, 332 P.2d 811: "The ordinary motive for extended failure to take a prisoner before a magistrate is not unrelated to the purpose of extracting a confession. In the federal courts the illegal detention of a person under arrest is ground for excluding a confession. ... It would seem that the only possible way of stopping the illegal practices of the police is a similar rule in the state courts. But, as an intermediate reviewing court, we are bound by the decisions of the Supreme Court holding that the mere illegal detention of a person under arrest, no matter for how long, is not ground for excluding a confession." (166 C.A.2d 79.)

(3) Distinction: Confession Following Illegal Arrest. A confession made after an illegal arrest may be admissible if the connection between the arrest and the statement has become so attenuated as to dissipate the taint; but, if the confession is obtained by exploitation of the illegal arrest, it must be excluded. (See People v. DeVaughn (1977) 18 C.3d 889, 897, 899, 135 C.R. 786, 558 P.2d 872 [following Brown v. Illinois (1975) 422 U.S. 590, 95 S.Ct. 2254, 2262, 45 L.Ed.2d 416, 428]; In re Jorge S. (1977) 74 C.A.3d 852, 858, 141 C.R. 722; People v. Gonzalez (1998) 64 C.A.4th 432, 446, 447, 75 C.R.2d 272 [where defendant was arrested without probable cause for liquor store robbery, his confession, made within hours of arrest and without intervening events, was inadmissible; but subsequent confession to restaurant robbery, made to officers from different city who were unaware of circumstances of arrest, was properly admitted].)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

- A. Confession of Defendant.
  - 2. Involuntary Confessions.
    - g. Defendant Kept Incommunicado.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 75

[§ 75] Defendant Kept Incommunicado.

Gallegos v. Colorado (1962) 370 U.S. 49, 82 S.Ct. 1209, 8 L.Ed.2d 325, made an enormous but unclear expansion of the classes of involuntary confessions. Petitioner, a child of 14, with another juvenile, assaulted and robbed an elderly man. On January 1, petitioner was picked up by the police and immediately admitted the assault and robbery; on January 2, he was examined by the police in Juvenile Hall and made a confession taken down by an officer; on January 7, he signed a formal confession. The victim died on January 26, and petitioner was then charged with murder, convicted, and sentenced to life imprisonment. Held, reversed; the confession was inadmissible. The principal ground was that petitioner was kept in Juvenile Hall from January 1 to January 7, and, during this 5-day detention, saw neither his parents nor an attorney. This, the court thought, gave the case "an ominous cast," and it was immaterial that there was no prolonged questioning, that he had been advised of his right to counsel, that he did not ask either for a lawyer or his parents, and that he had promptly confessed when arrested (82 S.Ct. 1212, 8 L.Ed.2d 328). The uncertainty of the holding is emphasized by the court's conclusion:

"There is no guide to the decision of cases such as this, except the totality of circumstances that bear on the two factors we have mentioned. The youth of the petitioner, the long detention, the failure to send for his parents, the failure immediately to bring him before the judge of the Juvenile Court, the failure to see to it that he had the advice of a lawyer or a friend--all these combine to make us conclude that the formal confession ... was obtained in violation of due process." (82 S.Ct. 1213, 8 L.Ed.2d 329.) (See critical dissent; and see 50 Cal. L. Rev. 902; 76 Harv. L. Rev. 108; 79 Harv. L. Rev. 977; 1962 A.S. 362.)

Another expansion of uncertain scope was made in Haynes v. Washington (1963) 373 U.S. 503, 83 S.Ct. 1336, 10 L.Ed.2d 513. Defendant, arrested for robbery within a half hour of the crime, orally admitted it to officers while en route to the station and again after his arrival; and on the following morning, he admitted it for a third time and signed a written confession. He testified, however, that during the 16-hour period between the arrest and signing he was denied the right to telephone his wife or anyone else unless he signed, was not advised of his right to remain silent, and was held incommunicado for over 5 days while the police unsuccessfully sought to obtain another statement. Held, the signed confession was inadmissible, having been obtained "in an atmosphere" of substantial coercion and inducement. (83 S.Ct. 1343, 10 L.Ed.2d 521.) "Confronted with the express threat of continued incommunicado detention and induced by the promise of communication with and access to family Haynes understandably chose to make and sign the damning written statement; given the unfair and inherently coercive context in which made, that choice cannot be said to be the voluntary product of a free and unconstrained will." (83 S.Ct. 1343, 10 L.Ed.2d 521.)

Four justices dissented, pointing out that defendant was a mature adult of at least average intelligence, with a criminal record and experience with police procedures, and not unaware of his rights; that none of the typical methods of nonphysical coercion--extended interrogation, deprivation of sleep or food, use of psychiatric techniques, etc.--was shown. (83 S.Ct. 1349, 10 L.Ed.2d 527, 528.)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

A. Confession of Defendant.

2. Involuntary Confessions.

h. Failure To Advise of Miranda Rights.

1. In General.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 76

[§ 76] In General.

(1) Former Law. Originally, it was held that the right to consult with counsel at the time of arrest and police interrogation was not an element of due process, and that, in the absence of some showing of coercion, a confession obtained from a person denied the right to obtain or consult with counsel was admissible. (See Crooker v. California (1958) 357 U.S. 433, 78 S.Ct. 1287, 2 L.Ed.2d 1448 [attempt to obtain a lawyer]; Cicenia v. La Gay (1958) 357 U.S. 504, 78 S.Ct. 1297, 2 L.Ed.2d 1523 [petitioner's attorney came to station and repeatedly requested opportunity to talk to him].)

(2) The Escobedo Case. In Escobedo v. Illinois (1964) 378 U.S. 478, 84 S.Ct. 1758, 1765, 12 L.Ed.2d 977, the Crooker and Cicenia cases were repudiated, and a new doctrine was declared: Where an investigation has begun to focus on a suspect in police custody, the police carry out a process of interrogation that lends itself to eliciting incriminating statements, and the accused has been denied an opportunity to consult with an attorney, the statements are inadmissible unless the accused has been warned of the right to remain silent. The doctrine was further developed in People v. Dorado (1965) 62 C.2d 338, 351, 42 C.R. 169, 398 P.2d 361, holding that a request for counsel was unnecessary; the statements could not be admitted unless the accused was warned as to the right to counsel and the right to remain silent, and both were effectively waived. (See 53 Cal. L. Rev. 337; 38 So. Cal. L. Rev. 156; 79 Harv. L. Rev. 21, 998; 1964 A.S. 329.)

(3) The Miranda Case. The Escobedo holding was expanded in Miranda v. Arizona (1966) 384 U.S. 436, 86 S.Ct. 1602, 16 L.Ed.2d 694. Miranda requires that, prior to custodial interrogation, the accused be advised (a) of the right to remain silent, (b) that anything the accused says can be used against him or her, and (c) of the right to the presence of counsel. The case further requires that questioning cease if, at any time after these warnings are given, the accused invokes the right to remain silent. Any waiver of these rights must be voluntary, knowing, and intelligent. (For a full discussion of the Miranda rule, see 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §89 et seq.; see also 69 Cal. L. Rev. 633 [review of Kamisar, Police Interrogation and Confessions]; 43 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 933 [three articles on impact of Miranda rule].) (On renewed interrogation after suspect invokes right to silence, see infra, §77; on renewed interrogation after suspect invokes right to counsel, see infra, §78; on statement not result of interrogation, see infra, §79; on determination whether suspect invoked rights, see 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §123; on effect of admonition administered by suspect, see People v. Nitschmann (1995) 35 C.A.4th 677, 683, 41 C.R.2d 325.)

(4) Standard of Review. Admission of a confession obtained in violation of the Miranda requirements is subject to the harmless error standard. (People v. Sims (1993) 5 C.4th 405, 447, 20 C.R.2d 537, 853 P.2d 992, infra, §191.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

A. Confession of Defendant.

2. Involuntary Confessions.

h. Failure To Advise of Miranda Rights.

2. Interrogation After Right to Silence Invoked.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 77

[§ 77] Interrogation After Right to Silence Invoked.

(1) Former Rule. People v. Pettingill (1978) 21 C.3d 231, 145 C.R. 861, 578 P.2d 108, involved a defendant, arrested for burglary, who was advised of his rights and refused to talk, was advised a second time of his rights 2 hours later and again refused to talk, and then, 2 days later, confessed following a third advisement. The court held that a statement taken under these circumstances violates not only the Miranda rule but also the self-incrimination privilege of the California Constitution. (21 C.3d 238.)

(2) Effect of Proposition 8. In People v. Warner (1988) 203 C.A.3d 1122, 1126, 1127, 250 C.R. 462, defendant was arrested for rape and after being taken to the police station and advised of his rights, invoked his right to remain silent. The next day, an officer who had reviewed a crime report relating to defendant but was unaware defendant had previously cut off questioning, re-advised him of his rights. Defendant waived his rights and made a statement that was used against him at trial. Held, the statement was properly admitted.

(a) In People v. May (1988) 44 C.3d 309, 243 C.R. 369, 748 P.2d 307, the Supreme Court determined that Proposition 8, which, with some exceptions, eliminated independent state grounds for the exclusion of relevant evidence (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §8), abrogated the rule of People v. Disbrow (1976) 16 C.3d 101, 127 C.R. 360, 545 P.2d 272, that a defendant's extrajudicial statements elicited in violation of the Miranda rule are inadmissible for impeachment. "May's rationale and result apply equally to Pettingill which addressed the same issue of the privilege against self-incrimination as Disbrow 'in a closely related context.' " (203 C.A.3d 1127, disagreeing with People v. Navarez (1985) 169 C.A.3d 936, 215 C.R. 519.)

(b) Pettingill was not preserved by Ev.C. 940, embodying the self-incrimination privilege, because it relates only to substantive, not remedial, rights. The exclusion of evidence for a Miranda violation is a judicially declared remedy. Under the circumstances of this case, federal law does not impose a rule of per se exclusion, and "[i]t is clear to us that the people did not intend to preserve California decisions construing the state constitutional privilege against self-incrimination to afford greater protection than that of the federal privilege under Miranda ... and its progeny." (203 C.A.3d 1128.)

respected in the totality of the circumstances." (203 C.A.3d 1129.) Here, defendant's right to remain silent was respected at the initial interview, and the record is free of any suggestion that either deception or coercion was involved in obtaining his statement after the second advisement. Although in Mosley, unlike the present case, the second interrogation involved an entirely different crime, that is but one factor to be considered in applying Mosley's factual test. The totality of the circumstances suggests that defendant's right to remain silent was respected. (203 C.A.3d 1130, 1131.) (See People v. Harris (1989) 211 C.A.3d 640, 647, 259 C.R. 462 [following People v. Warner]; People v. Montano (1991) 226 C.A.3d 914, 930, 277 C.R. 327, infra, §80.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Effect of Proposition 8. See People v. Peracchi (2001) 86 C.A.4th 353, 361, 362, 102 C.R.2d 921, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, Supp., §110A [defendant's statements to interrogator were improperly admitted; his invocation of right to silence, although initially ambiguous, soon became clear, and it was not "scrupulously honored" within meaning of Michigan v. Mosley (1975) 423 U.S. 96, 96 S.Ct. 321, 46 L.Ed.2d 313, text, p. 772]; *People v. ### III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

- A. Confession of Defendant.
  - 2. Involuntary Confessions.
    - h. Failure To Advise of Miranda Rights.
- 3. Interrogation After Right to Counsel Invoked.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 78

[§ 78] Interrogation After Right to Counsel Invoked.

(1) Edwards Rule. In Edwards v. Arizona (1981) 451 U.S. 477, 101 S.Ct. 1880, 68 L.Ed.2d 378, Edwards, charged with robbery, burglary and murder, was arrested and informed of his rights. He denied involvement in the crime, but sought to make a deal and requested an attorney. The next day the guard said that two detectives wished to speak with him; he replied that he didn't want to talk to anyone, but was told that he had to do so. The detectives informed him of his rights, he asked to hear the taped statement of an accomplice who had implicated him in the crime, and then he made his own confession. The Arizona Supreme Court concluded that his statements were voluntary and admissible. Held, reversed.

(a) Additional safeguards when accused asks for counsel. The Arizona court applied an erroneous standard in holding that Edwards voluntarily waived his right to counsel on the second day after having invoked it on the first day. The waiver must not only be voluntary, but also knowing and intelligent. (101 S.Ct. 1883, 1884, 68 L.Ed.2d 385, 386.) "[A]lthough we have held that after initially being advised of his Miranda rights, the accused may himself validly waive his rights and respond to interrogation, ... additional safeguards are necessary when the accused asks for counsel; and we now hold that when an accused has invoked his right to have counsel present during custodial interrogation, a valid waiver of that right cannot be established by showing only that he responded to further police-initiated custodial interrogation even if he has been advised of his rights. We further hold that an accused, such as Edwards, having expressed his desire to deal with the police only through counsel, is not subject to further interrogation by the authorities until counsel has been made available to him, unless the accused himself initiates further communication, exchanges or conversations with the police." (101 S.Ct. 1884, 68 L.Ed.2d 386.)

(b) Distinction: Valid waiver of counsel where no custodial interrogation. If Edwards had himself initiated the meeting on the second day, the police could have listened to his volunteered statements and used them against him at the trial. "The Fifth Amendment right identified in Miranda is the right to have counsel present at any custodial interrogation. Absent such interrogation, there would have been no infringement of the right that Edwards invoked and there would be no occasion to determine whether there had been a valid waiver." (101 S.Ct. 1885, 68 L.Ed.2d 387, citing Rhode Island v. Innis (1980) 446 U.S. 291, 100 S.Ct. 1682, 64 L.Ed.2d 297, infra, §79.) (See Shea v. Louisiana (1985) 470 U.S. 51, 105 S.Ct. 1065, 1070, 84 L.Ed.2d 38, 47 [Edwards rule applies to cases pending on direct appeal when rule was announced]; People v. Denney (1984) 152 C.A.3d 530, 540, 199 C.R. 623 [interrogation after suspect says that he wants attorney renders resulting confession inadmissible]; People v. Mickey (1991) 54 C.3d 612, 652, 286

C.R. 801, 818 P.2d 84 [Edwards rule was satisfied where defendant told officer he would like to continue discussion at later time; it was not necessary that defendant initiate later meeting]; People v. Sims (1993) 5 C.4th 405, 441, 20 C.R.2d 537, 853 P.2d 992 [defendant did not waive previously invoked rights by asking police officers what was going to happen to him, with reference to extradition]; People v. Bradford (1997) 14 C.4th 1005, 1040, 60 C.R.2d 225, 929 P.2d 544 [effect of Edwards violation on subsequent voluntary statement obtained after knowing waiver of right to counsel].)

(2) Interrogation Concerning Unrelated Offense. In Arizona v. Roberson (1988) 486 U.S. 675, 108 S.Ct. 2093, 100 L.Ed.2d 704, defendant, arrested at the scene of a burglary and informed of his rights, told the arresting officer that he wanted a lawyer before answering any questions. Three days later, while defendant was still in custody, a second officer interrogated him about a different, earlier burglary. The second officer, who was unaware that defendant had previously requested the assistance of counsel, advised defendant of his rights and obtained an incriminating statement from him concerning the earlier burglary. The trial judge in the prosecution for that earlier offense suppressed the statement on the basis of Edwards. Held, affirmed.

"Roberson's unwillingness to answer any questions without the advice of counsel, without limiting his request for counsel, indicated that he did not feel sufficiently comfortable with the pressures of custodial interrogation to answer questions without an attorney. This discomfort is precisely the state of mind that Edwards presumes to persist unless the suspect himself initiates further conversation about the investigation." (108 S.Ct. 2099, 100 L.Ed.2d 715.) (See People v. Morris (1991) 53 C.3d 152, 203, 279 C.R. 720, 807 P.2d 949 [following Arizona v. Roberson].)

Sapp* (2003) 31 C.4th 240, 268, 2 C.R.3d 554, 73 P.3d 433 [in capital murder prosecution, defendant's confessions were voluntary and thus properly admitted; after he unequivocally requested counsel, his rights under Edwards v. Arizona (1981) 451 U.S. 477, 101 S.Ct. 1880, 68 L.Ed.2d 378, text, p. 773, were respected, and confessions came 24 hours later, after he requested that investigators return so that he could confess].

[§ 79] Statement Not Result of Interrogation.

(1) United States Supreme Court Cases. In Rhode Island v. Innis (1980) 446 U.S. 291, 100 S.Ct. 1682, 64 L.Ed.2d 297, defendant, suspected of killing a taxicab driver with a shotgun blast, was arrested, was advised of his rights, and asked for a lawyer. He was placed in a police car to be taken to the station, and en route one of the officers started a conversation with another about the dangers involved in handicapped children of the neighborhood finding a weapon with shells. Defendant interrupted the conversation, telling the officers to turn the car around so he could show them the location of the gun. The officers did so, and prior to a search again advised him of his rights; he replied that he "wanted to get the gun out of the way because of the kids in the area in the school." The gun was found, and defendant was indicted and convicted of murder, but the state Supreme Court set aside the conviction on the ground that defendant's Miranda rights had been violated. On certiorari, held, reversed.

(a) Confessions of a suspect in custody are admissible unless they are the product of "interrogation" in violation of the Miranda rule; and "interrogation" may be either "express questioning or its functional equivalent." Thus, the term refers also "to any words or actions on the part of the police (other than those normally attendant to arrest and custody) that the police should know are reasonably likely to elicit an incriminating response from the suspect. The latter portion of this definition focuses primarily upon the perceptions of the suspect, rather than the intent of the police." (100 S.Ct. 1689, 64 L.Ed.2d 308.) However, "since the police surely cannot be held accountable for the unforeseeable results of their words or actions, the definition of interrogation can extend only to words or actions on the part of police officers that they should have known were reasonably likely to elicit an incriminating response." (100 S.Ct. 1690, 64 L.Ed.2d 308.)

(b) Under this test, defendant was not interrogated. "Given the fact that the entire conversation appears to have consisted of no more than a few off-hand remarks, we cannot say that the officers should have known that it was reasonably likely that Innis would so respond. This is not a case where the police carried on a lengthy harangue in the presence of the suspect. Nor does the record support the respondent's contention that, under the circumstances, the officers' comments were particularly 'evocative.'" (100 S.Ct. 1690, 64 L.Ed.2d 309.)

(2) California Cases. In People v. Dominick (1986) 182 C.A.3d 1174, 227 C.R. 849, defendant, a suspect in a brutal rape, attempted murder, and murder, was taken into custody, and was read his Miranda rights and waived them. At the end of his ensuing narrative, during which he admitted being at the scene of the crime with a codefendant, defendant made statements about seeing bloody people and about a knife or knifing people, and concluded, "I think I should call an attorney." As the officers gathered their materials to leave, one of them told defendant that the codefendant was in custody and that the surviving victim had identified defendant's photograph, the latter statement being untrue. Approximately 5 minutes after requesting an attorney, defendant said that he needed to talk about the case and didn't need an attorney. The officers responded that they could not talk with him further and departed; but, after consulting with a prosecuting attorney, they returned, readvised defendant of his Miranda rights, and, after a waiver, tape-recorded defendant's confession. Held, the recorded confession was self-initiated and properly admitted.

(b) The part of the officer's remarks that was false does not compel a different construction of the facts. "Whether or not the detective's statement was false does not in any way change the actuality of the defendant's state of mind with respect to voluntariness." (182 C.A.3d 1192.)

Other California cases approving the admission of voluntary confessions or statements following the invocation of Miranda rights and not resulting from interrogation are numerous. (See People v. Hayes (1985) 169 C.A.3d 898, 909, 215 C.R. 595 ["Miranda does not proscribe a suspect from changing his mind concerning speaking to the police, when his change of heart is a voluntary one, based on factors that do not involve coercion by the police"]; People v. Stephens (1990) 218 C.A.3d 575, 582, 267 C.R. 66 [defendant's remark, during conversation initiated by him to discuss plea bargain, that he was not the one with the gun, was not result of police interrogation]; People v. Ray (1996) 13 C.4th 313, 337, 52 C.R.2d 296, 914 P.2d 846, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §109 [defendant's statements to correctional official did not result from interrogation where defendant himself initiated contact with official and volunteered information for personal reasons]; People v. Mobley (1999) 72 C.A.4th 761, 792, 85 C.R.2d 474 [defendant's comment about "liking boys," made during casual conversation with police officer, and not as result of questioning, while defendant was being transported in police car, was admissible in prosecution for sodomy and oral copulation, even though he had previously invoked his Miranda rights].)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

  - 2. Involuntary Confessions.
    - h. Failure To Advise of Miranda Rights.
      - 4. Statements Admissible.
        - bb. Second Statement Untainted by Prior Violation.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 80

[§ 80] Second Statement Untainted by Prior Violation.

(1) Failure To Advise of Miranda Rights. Oregon v. Elstad (1985) 470 U.S. 298, 105 S.Ct. 1285, 84 L.Ed.2d 222, rejects application of the "fruit of the poisonous tree" doctrine of Fourth Amendment search and seizure cases (see 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, §22 et seq.) to Miranda violations.

Defendant, arrested at his home, was questioned concerning his involvement in a burglary, and answered, "Yes, I was there." He was then taken to the sheriff's office, his Miranda rights were read, and he gave a full confession. The Oregon court held that the voluntary confession was tainted and rendered inadmissible by the prior questioning without Miranda warnings. Held, reversed.

(a) Failure to administer Miranda warnings creates a rebuttable presumption of compulsion, but the presumption does not require that the statements and their fruits be discarded as inherently tainted. Thus, in Michigan v. Tucker (1974) 417 U.S. 433, 94 S.Ct. 2357, 41 L.Ed.2d 182, the unwarned confession was suppressed, but introduction of testimony of a third-party witness whose identity was discovered as a result of the statement was held not to violate defendant's Fifth Amendment right. "[T]his reasoning applies with equal force when the alleged 'fruit' of a noncoercive Miranda violation is neither a witness nor an article of evidence but the accused's own voluntary testimony." (105 S.Ct. 1293, 84 L.Ed.2d 232.) "It is an unwarranted extension of Miranda to hold that a simple failure to administer the warnings unaccompanied by any actual coercion or other circumstances calculated to undermine the suspect's ability to exercise his free will so taints the investigatory process that a subsequent voluntary and informed waiver is ineffective for some indeterminate period. Though Miranda requires that the unwarned admission must be suppressed, the admissibility of any subsequent statement should turn in these circumstances solely on whether it is knowingly and voluntarily made." (105 S.Ct. 1293, 84 L.Ed.2d 232.)

(b) "This Court has never held that the psychological impact of voluntary disclosure of a guilty secret qualifies as state compulsion or compromises the voluntariness of a subsequent informed waiver. The Oregon court, by adopting this expansive view of Fifth Amendment compulsion, effectively immunizes a suspect who responds to pre-Miranda warning questions from the consequences of his subsequent informed waiver of the privilege of remaining silent. ... This immunity comes at a high cost to legitimate law enforcement activity, while adding little desirable protection to the individual's interest in not being compelled to testify against himself. ... When neither the initial nor the subsequent admission is coerced, little justification exists for permitting the highly probative evidence of a voluntary confession to

(c) "There is a vast difference between the direct consequences flowing from coercion of a confession by physical violence or other deliberate means calculated to break the suspect's will and the uncertain consequences of disclosure of a 'guilty secret' freely given in response to an unwarned but noncoercive question, as in this case. ... We must conclude that, absent deliberately coercive or improper tactics in obtaining the initial statement, the mere fact that a suspect has made an unwarned admission does not warrant a presumption of compulsion. A subsequent administration of Miranda warnings to a suspect who has given a voluntary but unwarned statement ordinarily should suffice to remove the conditions that precluded admission of the earlier statement. In such circumstances, the finder of fact may reasonably conclude that the suspect made a rational and intelligent choice whether to waive or invoke his rights." (105 S.Ct. 1296, 84 L.Ed.2d 234.)

(d) "The Court today in no way retreats from the bright line rule of Miranda. We do not imply that good faith excuses a failure to administer Miranda warnings; nor do we condone inherently coercive police tactics or methods offensive to due process that render the initial admission involuntary and undermine the suspect's will to invoke his rights once they are read to him. A handful of courts has, however, applied our precedents relating to confessions obtained under coercive circumstances to situations involving wholly voluntary admissions, requiring a passage of time or break in events before a second, fully warned statement can be deemed voluntary. Far from establishing a rigid rule, we direct courts to avoid one; there is no warrant for presuming coercive effect where the suspect's initial inculpatory statement, though technically in violation of Miranda, was voluntary. The relevant inquiry is whether, in fact, the second statement was also voluntarily made. As in any such inquiry, the finder of fact must examine the surrounding circumstances and the entire course of police conduct with respect to the suspect in evaluating the voluntariness of his statements. The fact that a suspect chooses to speak after being informed of his rights is, of course, highly probative. We find that the dictates of Miranda and the goals of the Fifth Amendment proscription against use of compelled testimony are fully satisfied in the circumstances of this case by barring use of the unwarned statement in the case in chief." (105 S.Ct. 1298, 84 L.Ed.2d 237.)

Three justices dissented in two opinions. (105 S.Ct. 1298 et seq., 1322 et seq., 84 L.Ed.2d 238 et seq., 268 et seq.) (See People v. Gastile (1988) 205 C.A.3d 1376, 1385, 253 C.R. 283 [because of passage of Proposition 8 (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §8), Elsdad standard applies in California]; People v. Harris (1989) 211 C.A.3d 640, 649, 259 C.R. 462 [same]; People v. Torres (1989) 213 C.A.3d 1248, 1251, 1255, 262 C.R. 323 [following Elsdad]; People v. Sims (1993) 5 C.4th 405, 444, 20 C.R.2d 537, 853 P.2d 992 [same]; People v. Wash (1993) 6 C.4th 215, 240, 24 C.R.2d 421, 861 P.2d 1107 [same]; People v. Thongvilay (1998) 62 C.A.4th 71, 84, 72 C.R.2d 738 [same]; 99 Harv. L. Rev. 141 [Elsdad]; 1985 A.S. 298 [same]; on issue of applicability of Elsdad rule to nontestimonial evidence seized as result of noncoercive Miranda violation, see People v. Whitfield (1996) 46 C.A.4th 947, 956, 957, 54 C.R.2d 370, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §97.)

(2) Edwards Violation. Continued interrogation of a defendant after he has invoked his right to counsel, though violative of Edwards v. Arizona (1981) 451 U.S. 477, 101 S.Ct. 1880, 68 L.Ed.2d 378, supra, §78, does not necessarily so taint the investigatory process that a subsequent voluntary and informed waiver is ineffective for some indeterminate period. Instead, an inquiry along the lines required in Elsdad for Miranda violations must be made: If the statement made after the Edwards violation is voluntary, the admissibility of any subsequent statement should turn solely on whether it is knowingly and voluntarily made. (People v. Bradford (1997) 14 C.4th 1005, 1040, 60 C.R.2d 225, 929 P.2d 544 [defendant's voluntary statement to police detective was admissible where it followed knowing and intelligent waiver of right to counsel, even though it was preceded by two other voluntary statements obtained in violation of Edwards].)

picture of confession to avoid going to hell. The interrogation concluded when one of the interrogating officers gave defendant a business card and told him "if you want to talk with me, give me a call and I'll come down and talk with you." About 4 hours later, defendant told his jailer he wished to speak to that officer. A second interview was commenced, defendant was again read his Miranda rights, and he confessed a second time. The trial judge suppressed defendant's first confession, but refused to suppress the second. Held, this was reversible error.

Defendant's initial confession was obtained by the kind of coercive police tactics condemned in Elstad, and the following factors demonstrate that the taint of those tactics was not dissipated before defendant made his second confession: (a) The Miranda warnings preceding the second confession would have had little effect, because defendant's previous attempts to invoke his Miranda rights were ignored (226 C.A.3d 938); (b) the gap between the two confessions would, under the circumstances, have seemed only a pause in an ongoing interrogation (226 C.A.3d 938); (c) although defendant initiated the second interrogation, he had never been removed from an inherently coercive atmosphere (226 C.A.3d 939); and (d) the officers' activities, aimed at reducing defendant's resistance to confessing, constituted "a glaring example of misconduct" (226 C.A.3d 939). "We therefore conclude that defendant's suppression motion should have been granted in its entirety." (226 C.A.3d 941.)

Law (3d), Criminal Trial, Supp., §138 [defendant's statements were inadmissible where they were obtained under police protocol allowing officers to give no Miranda warnings until interrogation has produced confession, then to give warnings, and then to elicit repetition of confession; distinguishing *Oregon v. (2) Edwards Violation. The Edwards rule is not violated "when the police recontact a suspect after a break in custody which gives the suspect reasonable time and opportunity, while free from coercive custodial pressures, to consult counsel if he or she wishes to do so. ### III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

A. Confession of Defendant.

3. Procedure in Determining Voluntariness.

a. Constitutional Requirements.

[§ 81] Constitutional Requirements.

The defendant has a "constitutional right at some stage in the proceedings to object to the use of the confession and to have a fair hearing and a reliable determination on the issue of voluntariness, a determination uninfluenced by the truth or falsity of the confession." (Jackson v. Denno (1964) 378 U.S. 368, 84 S.Ct. 1774, 1780, 12 L.Ed.2d 908, 915.) In Jackson, the Supreme Court rejected long-approved state procedures and imposed a new requirement of determination of the issue by the judge.

Petitioner robbed a hotel, then fatally shot a policeman who also shot him. At the hospital, at 2 a.m., in response to a detective's question, he admitted both the robbery and killing. At 3:55 a.m., after receiving demerol and scopolamine in preparation for an operation, he was questioned and again admitted the acts. Both statements were introduced at the trial without objection. However, he challenged the confessions by testifying that he had been refused water and was in pain and could not remember what he said. The prosecution countered with ample rebuttal testimony. The trial judge submitted the issue of voluntariness to the jury with the other issues. A verdict of first degree murder with the death penalty was rendered, and the New York Court of Appeals affirmed after passing on voluntariness of the confessions. Held, reversed.

(a) The New York procedure. The trial judge, under this system, makes only a preliminary determination. If there is a fair question as to voluntariness, he cannot resolve conflicting evidence or arrive at an independent determination, but must receive the confession and leave it to the jury to determine the issue. However, the jury returns only a general verdict on the ultimate question of guilt or innocence. Thus: "It is impossible to discover whether the jury found the confession voluntary and relied upon it, or involuntary and supposedly ignored it. Nor is there any indication of how the jury resolved disputes in the evidence concerning the critical facts underlying the coercion issue. Indeed, there is nothing to show that these matters were resolved at all, one way or the other." (84 S.Ct. 1782, 12 L.Ed.2d 917.)

(b) Stein rule repudiated. In Stein v. New York (1953) 346 U.S. 156, 73 S.Ct. 1077, 1089, 97 L.Ed. 1522, the Court sustained the constitutionality of the New York procedure on alternative assumptions: That the jury either found the confession voluntary and relied on it, or found it involuntary and disregarded it as instructed, relying on the other evidence of guilt. Neither assumption is acceptable:

As to the first assumption: The jury, receiving the confession with other evidence indicating its truth, cannot properly assess its voluntariness; they may find it difficult to understand the policy forbidding reliance on a coerced but true confession, and this may generate pressure to find it voluntary if it is believed true. "Under the New York procedure, the evidence given the jury inevitably injects irrelevant and impermissible considerations of truthfulness of the confession into the assessment of voluntariness. ... As a consequence, it cannot be assumed, as the Stein Court did, that the jury reliably found the facts against the accused. This unsound assumption undermines Stein's authority as a precedent and its view on the constitutionality of the New York procedure. The admixture of reliability and voluntariness in the considerations of the jury would itself entitle a defendant to further proceedings in any case in which the essential facts are disputed, for we cannot determine how the jury resolved these issues and will not assume that they were reliably and properly resolved against the accused." (84 S.Ct. 1786, 12 L.Ed.2d 921.)

As to the second assumption: The fact of the confession is solidly implanted in the jury's mind. "If it finds the confession involuntary, does the jury--indeed, can it--then disregard the confession in accordance with its instructions? If there are lingering doubts about the sufficiency of the other evidence, does the jury unconsciously lay them to rest by resort to the confession? Will uncertainty about the insufficiency of the other evidence to prove guilt beyond a reasonable doubt actually result in acquittal when the jury knows the defendant has given a truthful confession?" (84 S.Ct. 1787, 12 L.Ed.2d 922.) With expanded concepts of subtle coercion, there is greater complexity in determining whether the will is overborne, and disputed facts, questions of credibility, and inferences are frequently determinative. This "exceedingly sensitive task" requires facing the issue "in illuminating isolation and unclouded by other issues and the effect of extraneous but prejudicial evidence." (84 S.Ct. 1788, 12 L.Ed.2d 923.)

Four justices dissented, one arguing that the constitutionality of the New York rule was not ripe for decision (84 S.Ct. 1805, 12 L.Ed.2d 943), and the others arguing that the requirements imposed by the majority invaded an area traditionally and properly left to the states and showed a distrust of the jury system. (84 S.Ct. 1807, 12 L.Ed.2d 945.) (See Boles v. Stevenson (1964) 379 U.S. 43, 85 S.Ct. 174, 13 L.Ed.2d 109 [per curiam decision following Jackson rule in West Virginia case]; 78 Harv. L. Rev. 211; 79 Harv. L. Rev. 1059; 1964 A.S. 336; 1 A.L.R.3d 1251 [constitutional aspects of procedure for determining voluntariness].)

An attempt to establish an exception to the rule failed in Sims v. Georgia (1967) 385 U.S. 538, 87 S.Ct. 639, 643, 17 L.Ed.2d 593, 597. The Georgia court thought that the jury could be allowed to determine voluntariness because in that state the confession must not only be voluntary but must also be corroborated. Held, despite this safeguard, the Jackson rule applies. A jury must not be given a confession "unless and until the trial judge has determined that it was freely and voluntarily given"; and, though the judge need not make formal findings of fact or write an opinion, the conclusion that it is voluntary "must appear from the record with unmistakable clarity."

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

A. Confession of Defendant.

3. Procedure in Determining Voluntariness.

b. Former California Practice.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 82

[§ 82] Former California Practice.

The court in Jackson v. Denno (1964) 378 U.S. 368, 84 S.Ct. 1774, 12 L.Ed.2d 908, supra, §81, classifying the three types of procedures used in testing a confession, approved the "Massachusetts" system, under which the judge first independently passes on the issue, and then, if it is resolved against the accused, submits it to the jury for its additional determination. Under this system, the judge's factual findings and conclusions are ascertainable from the record.

Prior to the adoption of Ev.C. 405 (infra, §82), California followed this approved practice: (1) The burden was on the prosecution to show voluntariness. (People v. Berve (1958) 51 C.2d 286, 291, 332 P.2d 97; People v. Trout (1960) 54 C.2d 576, 583, 6 C.R. 759, 354 P.2d 231.) Accordingly, the prosecutor was first required to lay a foundation by preliminary proof of the confession's free and voluntary nature. (2) Then the defendant, on request, was permitted to offer evidence to contradict this showing. (3) The judge then, in the first instance, decided the question and excluded the confession on a finding that it was improperly obtained. (4) If the judge initially found it to be free and voluntary, it could be introduced. But the jurors were required to be informed that they had the final power of determining the voluntariness, and that they could disregard the confession if they believed that it was not properly obtained. (See People v. Gonzales (1944) 24 C.2d 870, 876, 151 P.2d 251; People v. Baldwin (1954) 42 C.2d 858, 866, 270 P.2d 1028; People v. Zarate (1921) 54 C.A. 372, 376, 201 P. 955; In re Schlette (1965) 232 C.A.2d 407, 414, 42 C.R. 708 [California procedure corresponds to Massachusetts practice approved in Jackson].)

Under the Gonzales rule, the defendant on request was required to be allowed to offer evidence to contradict the prosecution's prima facie showing. (People v. Neighbors (1947) 79 C.A.2d 202, 205, 179 P.2d 647; People v. Padden (1965) 238 C.A.2d 708, 713, 48 C.R. 311; People v. Williams (1960) 187 C.A.2d 143, 147, 9 C.R. 540, citing the text.) But violation of this rule was not necessarily reversible error. If the defendant was ultimately given that opportunity, and the testimony the defendant introduced would have made no difference in the determination of voluntariness, the refusal to allow an earlier opportunity was a procedural error and not prejudicial. (People v. Williams, supra, 187 C.A.2d 147.) And failure to lay the foundation was not prejudicial error where the confession was admitted without objection, and the omitted proof of voluntariness was supplied by later testimony. (People v. Grace (1958) 166 C.A.2d 68, 73, 332 P.2d 811.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

A. Confession of Defendant.

3. Procedure in Determining Voluntariness.

c. Final Determination by Judge.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 83

[§ 83] Final Determination by Judge.

(1) In General. The requirements of Jackson v. Denno (1964) 378 U.S. 368, 84 S.Ct. 1774, 12 L.Ed.2d 908, supra, §81, are met by either an independent final determination by the judge, or an independent determination by the judge with resubmission of the issue to the jury if the judge finds the confession voluntary. (See supra, §§81, 82.) California formerly followed the second method. (See supra, §82.) The Evidence Code changed this rule: Confessions are governed by Ev.C. 405, under which the preliminary fact of admissibility is finally determined by the judge without resubmission of the issue to the jury. (See 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §63.) Thus, if the judge finds the confession involuntary, the procedure is the same as before: the confession is withheld from the jury. But if the judge finds it voluntary, it goes to the jury without the former instruction to disregard it if the jury's finding differs from the judge's and the jury believes it to have been involuntary.

The Law Revision Commission explains its choice as follows: "Under existing law, a court that is in doubt may 'pass the buck' concerning such a confession to the jury when there is a difficult factual question to resolve. ... Under the Evidence Code, however, the court is required to withhold a confession from the jury unless the court is persuaded that the confession was made freely and voluntarily. The court has no 'discretion' to avoid difficult decisions by shifting the responsibility to the jury. If the court is in doubt, if the prosecution has not persuaded it of the voluntary nature of the confession, Section 405 requires the court to exclude the confession. Thus, Section 405 makes the procedure for determining the admissibility of a confession the same as the procedure for determining the admissibility of physical evidence claimed to have been seized in violation of constitutional guarantees."

"The existing law is based on the belief that a jury, in determining the defendant's guilt or innocence, can and will refuse to consider a confession that it has determined was involuntary even though it believes that the confession is true. Section 405, on the other hand, proceeds upon the belief that it is unrealistic to expect a jury to perform such a feat. Corroborating facts stated in a confession cannot but assist the jury in resolving other conflicts in the evidence. The question of voluntariness will inevitably become merged with the question of guilt and the truth of the confession; and, as a result of this merger, the admitted confession will inevitably be considered on the issue of guilt. The defendant will receive a greater degree of protection if the court is deprived of the power to shift its fact-determining responsibility to the jury and is required to exclude a confession whenever it is not persuaded that the confession was voluntary." (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 405.)

(2) Questions of Law and Fact. In People v. Carroll (1970) 4 C.A.3d 52, 84 C.R. 60, the trial judge refused to instruct the jurors to disregard any admission or confession unless it was voluntarily made. Defendant contended that this ruling denied him his rights under the Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments. Held, conviction affirmed; in making his contention, defendant misunderstood the import of Ev.C. 405 by failing to distinguish between questions of law and of fact.

(a) The sole issue on a voir dire hearing by the judge is the admissibility of evidence. Because this question is one of law, the procedure does not deny a defendant either trial by jury or due process of law. (4 C.A.3d 60.)

(b) The same evidence offered to prove voluntariness may also be relevant to the integrity of the confession. "Manifestly, to deny a defendant the right to produce evidence before the jury that bears upon the truth or falsity of his confession, that is, the weight to be given such evidence as contrasted with its admissibility, would constitute reversible error." (4 C.A.3d 60.) The jury should therefore be allowed to take into account whether the confession is true, partially true or false, but may not treat the confession as "nonevidence" by disregarding it. (4 C.A.3d 60.)

(c) Even though the same evidence relates to admissibility as to integrity, the jury should not be informed of the judge's factual resolution in the voir dire hearing. In that way, the judge does not impinge on the jury's fact-finding province as to guilt or innocence. (4 C.A.3d 60.) (See People v. Burton (1971) 6 C.3d 375, 389, 99 C.R. 1, 491 P.2d 793 ["The Legislature's finding that a defendant will be better protected by thrusting the full responsibility upon the trial judge is entirely reasonable"].)

(3) Which Judge Makes Determination. Jackson v. Denno, supra, left unresolved the question whether the voir dire hearing on admissibility had to be conducted by a different judge from the one trying the case. In Carroll, the reviewing court declared that the statutory term "the court," as used in Ev.C. 405, includes "any judge of the court in which the case is pending, so that the judge who tries the case need not call in another judge, but himself may hear the voir dire examination." (4 C.A.3d 59.)

Also, when a defendant waives a jury trial, there is no need for a second judge to make preliminary fact determinations. "[I]t is permissible for a trial judge trying a case without a jury to conduct the voir dire hearing and determine the admissibility of a confession." (People v. Acosta (1971) 18 C.A.3d 895, 903, 96 C.R. 234.)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

A. Confession of Defendant.

3. Procedure in Determining Voluntariness.

d. Hearing Without Jury Present.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 84

[§ 84] Hearing Without Jury Present.

(1) Former Law. Prior California cases had held that it is within the judge's discretion to try the preliminary issue of voluntariness without exclusion of the jury. (See People v. Gonzales (1944) 24 C.2d 870, 877, 151 P.2d 251; People v. Oats (1966) 239 C.A.2d 261, 48 C.R. 579; 37 So. Cal. L. Rev. 367.) Whether this practice meets the "fair trial" requirements of Jackson v. Denno (1964) 378 U.S. 368, 84 S.Ct. 1774, 12 L.Ed.2d 908, supra, §81, was not expressly determined in that case. In People v. Oats, supra, the court observed that the desirable practice is to exclude the jury but that that procedure is not required "unless the defendant so requests and accompanies his request with a showing that evidence proffered or to be adduced is inadmissible as to the question of guilt." (239 C.A.2d 261, 268; see People v. Nelson (1964) 224 C.A.2d 238, 243, 36 C.R. 385 [extended hearing in chambers, with examination and cross-examination of police officers and defendant, before returning to court and allowing officer to testify].)

(2) Statutory Rule. The Evidence Code provides that the hearing must be out of the presence of the jury "if any party so requests." (Ev.C. 402(b).) However, in People v. Rowe (1972) 22 C.A.3d 1023, 1029, 99 C.R. 816, the court said: "While no request was made herein for an in camera session, it is a matter of common knowledge in the legal profession that in all instances where the defendant objects to the admission of a confession that the court, whether requested or not, should conduct the hearing outside the presence of the jury, the painfully obvious reason being that in the event the hearing is held in the jury's presence and the court finds the confession to be involuntary, the court would undoubtedly be confronted with a motion for mistrial or a claim of prejudicial error on appeal. While there may be circumstances where a defendant would want his hearing in the presence of the jury, the best rule for the trial court to follow in general is that the hearing should be private." (22 C.A.3d 1030.) (See People v. Blair (1975) 51 C.A.3d 480, 484, 124 C.R. 123 [trial court had discretion to prohibit defendant from conducting voir dire on voluntariness in jury's presence; following Rowe]; People v. Torrez (1987) 188 C.A.3d 723, 733, 734, 236 C.R. 627 [it was error, although harmless, to hold hearing in jury's presence, even though neither party requested in camera hearing and actual substance of defendant's responses to interrogation were not disclosed].)

In Allegrezza v. Superior Court (1975) 47 C.A.3d 948, 121 C.R. 245, defendant was accused of murdering four members of a family, and purportedly confessed to the crimes. At a hearing under Ev.C. 402(b) on the voluntariness of the confession, attended by press and public, defendant moved that the proceedings be held in camera. The trial court denied the motion but allowed defendant time to apply for a writ of mandamus. Held, writ issued. A concern for fairness demands that a confession disallowed as evidence should not reach the eyes or ears of persons who may become jurors in the case. "Any reasonable doubt whether it will should be resolved in favor of the accused." (47

C.A.3d 951.) Here, defendant was charged with several sordid murders. "Few things would more likely deny to him a fair trial of those charges, than a pretrial public media announcement and elaboration of a confession which for good reason is later denied acceptance in evidence." (47 C.A.3d 952.)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

A. Confession of Defendant.

3. Procedure in Determining Voluntariness.

e. Evidence and Ruling.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 85

[§ 85] Evidence and Ruling.

(1) Defendant's Right To Introduce Evidence. In People v. Rice (1971) 16 C.A.3d 337, 94 C.R. 4, after the defense had rested, the prosecutor offered statements that defendant had allegedly made to police officers following his arrest. To determine the admissibility of this rebuttal evidence, the trial judge heard testimony from three officers outside the jury's presence, but declared that defendant could testify to voluntariness only before the jury in surrebuttal, rather than at the preliminary fact determination. Held, the judge's refusal to allow defendant to take the stand during the voir dire hearing was reversible error. This was an attempt to shift the responsibility for the determination to the jury, the very procedure which Ev.C. 405 sought to change. (16 C.A.3d 343.)

In People v. Rowe (1972) 22 C.A.3d 1023, 99 C.R. 816, the trial judge refused defense counsel's offer to call witnesses to attack the voluntariness of defendant's confessions and noted that defendant could do so after the prosecution rested its case-in-chief. Held, this was error.

"It has long been established that once the state has laid a foundation for the introduction of a confession and has made a prima facie showing that it was freely and voluntarily made, it is absolutely incumbent upon the court to permit the defendant an opportunity to overcome the prima facie showing of voluntariness." (22 C.A.3d 1030.) (See Crane v. Kentucky (1986) 476 U.S. 683, 106 S.Ct. 2142, 90 L.Ed.2d 636 [evidence concerning circumstances surrounding confession, properly admitted in hearing on voluntariness, was also required to be admitted at trial, where defense was that confession was unworthy of belief]; People v. Page (1991) 2 C.A.4th 161, 184, 2 C.R.2d 898 [trial judge limited testimony on circumstances surrounding confession but did not impose blanket exclusion; discussing and distinguishing Crane].)

In re Juma P. (1988) 204 C.A.3d 1228, 251 C.R. 739, follows Rowe. Defendant's counsel objected to admission of his statement on the ground of involuntariness, but the judge refused to take evidence or rule on the issue because defendant had not made a motion to suppress. Held, judgment reversed with directions to hold a hearing to determine voluntariness. The court observed that there are two proper ways in which a defendant may seek exclusion: (a) a pretrial common law motion to suppress, not pursuant to P.C. 1538.5, and (b) the more common practice of objection at the trial, without making a motion. (204 C.A.3d 1235, 1236.)

(2) Necessity of Express Ruling on Voluntariness. A defendant is entitled to an express ruling by the trial court on the issue of voluntariness. (See People v. Blair (1975) 51 C.A.3d 480, 485, 124 C.R. 123 [because trial court had been alerted to defense counsel's desire to raise issue of voluntariness, trial court should have ruled on issue despite renewed objection by defendant].)

A. Confession of Defendant.

3. Procedure in Determining Voluntariness.

f. Standard of Proof.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 86

[§ 86] Standard of Proof.

(1) Constitutional Requirement. In Lego v. Twomey (1972) 404 U.S. 477, 92 S.Ct. 619, 626, 30 L.Ed.2d 618, 627, the Court said: "[W]hen a confession challenged as involuntary is sought to be used against a criminal defendant at his trial, he is entitled to a reliable and clear-cut determination that the confession was in fact voluntarily rendered. Thus, the prosecution must prove at least by a preponderance of the evidence that the confession was voluntary. Of course, the States are free, pursuant to their own law, to adopt a higher standard. They may indeed differ as to the appropriate resolution of the values they find at stake." (See Colorado v. Connelly (1986) 479 U.S. 157, 107 S.Ct. 515, 523, 93 L.Ed.2d 473, 485 [when defendant moves to suppress statement on ground that it was obtained in violation of Miranda, state has burden of proving by preponderance of evidence that defendant waived Miranda protections; following Lego]; 1 McCormick 5th, §163; 12 U.S.F. L. Rev. 331 [Lego].)

(2) California Standard. In People v. Jimenez (1978) 21 C.3d 595, 147 C.R. 172, 580 P.2d 672, the court exercised the power, referred to in Lego, to impose a higher standard. In light of the strong policies underlying the privilege against self-incrimination, the court held proof beyond a reasonable doubt is required. (21 C.3d 606, 608.)

Following the passage of Proposition 8 (Cal. Const., Art. I, §28(d); see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §8), the court revisited the issue in People v. Markham (1989) 49 C.3d 63, 260 C.R. 273, 775 P.2d 1042.

(a) People v. May (1988) 44 C.3d 309, 243 C.R. 369, 748 P.2d 307, 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §319, determined that Proposition 8 abrogated judicially declared procedural rules. "The Jimenez rule was likewise a judicially declared rule of criminal procedure adopted in the face of the conflicting, less demanding federal preponderance of the evidence standard of Lego v. Twomey. ... It is not a rule defining a substantive right dealing with the scope of a defendant's Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination, and consequently is not encompassed by Evidence Code section 940 nor exempt from the operation of section 28(d)." (49 C.3d 69.)

(b) "The Jimenez rule reflected a policy decision, a balancing of competing values squarely at odds with that previously arrived at by the United States Supreme Court in Lego v. Twomey, in which case the high court entertained and rejected policy arguments similar to those accepted in Jimenez." (49 C.3d 70.)

(c) "[T]he procedural rule of Jimenez accomplishes what a rule founded on independent state constitutional grounds, in the wake of Proposition 8, cannot--exclusion of relevant evidence based upon a standard of proof of voluntariness more stringent than that mandated by the federal Constitution. We have explained that the intent of the electorate in passing Proposition 8 was to curtail the exclusion of relevant evidence based upon independent state grounds, except as required by the Constitution of the United States. ... The Constitution of the United States requires no more than that the voluntariness of confessions or admissions be proved by a preponderance of the evidence at trial. ... Section 28(d) establishes that standard as the rule in California." (49 C.3d 71.) (See 17 Pepperdine L. Rev. 1074 [Markham].)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

A. Confession of Defendant.

3. Procedure in Determining Voluntariness.

g. Review by California Courts.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 87

[§ 87] Review by California Courts.

(1) Appeal. The normal method of review is on appeal from the judgment of conviction. Formerly, the reviewing court would almost invariably uphold the trial judge's or jury's determination of voluntariness on conflicting evidence. (See People v. Mehaffey (1948) 32 C.2d 535, 548, 553, 197 P.2d 12; People v. Chessman (1951) 38 C.2d 166, 178, 238 P.2d 1001; People v. Jackson (1954) 125 C.A.2d 776, 778, 271 P.2d 196; People v. Crooker (1956) 47 C.2d 348, 352, 303 P.2d 753; People v. Grace (1958) 166 C.A.2d 68, 72, 232 P.2d 811.) The present approach, following that of the United States Supreme Court (infra, §88), is to make an independent examination of the record for uncontradicted facts showing involuntariness. (See People v. Trout (1960) 54 C.2d 576, 583, 6 C.R. 759, 354 P.2d 231; People v. Johnson (1969) 70 C.2d 469, 476, 74 C.R. 889, 450 P.2d 265; People v. Hosner (1975) 15 C.3d 60, 68, 123 C.R. 381, 538 P.2d 1141; People v. Barker (1986) 182 C.A.3d 921, 931, 227 C.R. 578; People v. Howard (1988) 44 C.3d 375, 394, 398, 243 C.R. 842, 749 P.2d 279 [where there is conflicting testimony, court must accept version most favorable to prosecution if supported by the record]; People v. Thompson (1990) 50 C.3d 134, 166, 266 C.R. 309, 785 P.2d 857.)

(2) Failure To Object in Trial Court. The normal requirement of objection to improper evidence (see 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §371) has no application to coerced confessions, the use of which constitutes a denial of federal due process. The appellate court must itself inquire into voluntariness, and make its independent determination in conformity with the rule of Jackson v. Denno (1964) 378 U.S. 368, 84 S.Ct. 1774, 12 L.Ed.2d 908, supra, §81. (See People v. Matteson (1964) 61 C.2d 466, 469, 39 C.R. 1, 393 P.2d 161; In re Cameron (1968) 68 C.2d 487, 503, 67 C.R. 529, 439 P.2d 633; People v. Hinds (1984) 154 C.A.3d 222, 237, 201 C.R. 104; 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §397.)

(3) Habeas Corpus. On a proper showing, habeas corpus will lie to collaterally attack a final judgment of conviction based on an involuntary confession. (See 6 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Writs, §44.)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

A. Confession of Defendant.

3. Procedure in Determining Voluntariness.

h. Review by U.S. Supreme Court.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 88

[§ 88] Review by U.S. Supreme Court.

(1) No Time Limit. In Reck v. Pate (1961) 367 U.S. 433, 81 S.Ct. 1541, 1548, 6 L.Ed.2d 948, 956, petitioner, under coercive interrogation, confessed to a murder, and was convicted and sentenced by an Illinois court to a long term of imprisonment. In this federal habeas corpus proceeding, 25 years later, the judgment was held violative of his constitutional rights, and the federal district court was directed to issue orders to allow the state court a reasonable time to retry the case.

(2) No Need To Exhaust State Remedy. In Jackson v. Denno (1964) 378 U.S. 368, 84 S.Ct. 1774, 12 L.Ed.2d 908, supra, §81, the issue was not seasonably tendered to the New York courts, but was nevertheless held reviewable. Only knowing waiver can defeat the federal remedy for violation of a constitutional right. (84 S.Ct. 1777, 12 L.Ed.2d 912, footnote 1; see Lee v. Mississippi (1948) 332 U.S. 742, 68 S.Ct. 300, 301, 92 L.Ed. 330, 332 [inconsistent positions of no confession and improperly obtained confession did not preclude raising issue of coercion]; Blackburn v. Alabama (1960) 361 U.S. 199, 80 S.Ct. 274, 282, 4 L.Ed.2d 242, 250 [some facts of involuntariness came out during trial after judge's ruling in favor of admissibility, and no request made for reconsideration of ruling; issue nevertheless properly raised in federal review].)

(3) Independent Examination of Record. Earlier cases were in great conflict on whether the United States Supreme Court would overturn a state court's determination on conflicting evidence. The present rule is clear: "[W]e are bound to make our own examination of the record to determine whether the claim is meritorious. 'The performance of this duty cannot be foreclosed by the finding of a court, or the verdict of a jury, or both.' " (Payne v. Arkansas (1958) 356 U.S. 560, 78 S.Ct. 844, 847, 2 L.Ed.2d 975, 978; see Spano v. New York (1959) 360 U.S. 315, 79 S.Ct. 1202, 1208, 3 L.Ed.2d 1265, 1267; Blackburn v. Alabama, supra, 80 S.Ct. 281, 4 L.Ed.2d 249; Jackson v. Virginia (1979) 443 U.S. 307, 99 S.Ct. 2781, 2789, 61 L.Ed.2d 560, 573; Miller v. Fenton (1985) 474 U.S. 104, 106 S.Ct. 445, 451, 88 L.Ed.2d 405, 410 [voluntariness of confession is not state-court finding "presumed to be correct" in federal habeas corpus proceeding under former 28 U.S.C., §2254(d) (now 28 U.S.C., §2254(e)); independent federal review is required].)

(4) Remand for Retrial of Issue. In Jackson v. Denno, supra, the Supreme Court did not determine the issue of voluntariness, but remanded the case to the state court because the state procedure was held improper. The Court pointed out, however, that while New York could grant a complete new trial, due process did not require this. The state could simply grant a proper hearing to determine the issue of voluntariness, and, unless the result was a determination of involuntariness, the matter would end there. Accordingly, the case was remanded to the district court to allow the state a reasonable time to afford the petitioner either a hearing or a new trial, failing which he would be entitled to release. (84 S.Ct. 1790, 1791, 12 L.Ed.2d 925.) (See Boles v. Stevenson (1964) 379 U.S. 43, 85 S.Ct. 174, 176, 13 L.Ed.2d 109, 111 [same].)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

A. Confession of Defendant.

4. Harmless or Reversible Error.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 89

[§ 89] Harmless or Reversible Error.

(1) Federal Standard. Previously, the United States Supreme Court took the view that admission of a coerced confession required reversal: "[W]here, as here, a coerced confession constitutes a part of the evidence before the jury and a general verdict is returned, no one can say what credit and weight the jury gave to the confession. And in these circumstances this Court has uniformly held that even though there may have been sufficient evidence, apart from the coerced confession, to support a judgment of conviction, the admission in evidence, over objection, of the coerced confession vitiates the judgment because it violates the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment." (Payne v. Arkansas (1958) 356 U.S. 560, 78 S.Ct. 844, 850, 2 L.Ed.2d 975, 981.)

However, in Rose v. Clark (1986) 478 U.S. 570, 106 S.Ct. 3101, 92 L.Ed.2d 460, 6 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Reversible Error, §14, the Court stated that there is a strong presumption that constitutional errors are subject to harmless error analysis, rather than being reversible per se, whenever the defendant was represented by counsel and afforded the opportunity to present evidence and argument before an impartial judge and jury. And in Arizona v. Fulminante (1991) 499 U.S. 279, 111 S.Ct. 1246, 1263, 113 L.Ed.2d 302, 329, the Court applied the Rose rationale specifically to coerced confessions, holding that the erroneous admission of such a confession should be evaluated, for purposes of the United States Constitution, under the harmless beyond a reasonable doubt standard.

(2) California View. Prior to 1993, California followed the approach of Payne v. Arkansas. (See People v. Trout (1960) 54 C.2d 576, 583, 6 C.R. 759, 354 P.2d 231; People v. Matteson (1964) 61 C.2d 466, 470, 39 C.R. 1, 393 P.2d 161; In re Cameron (1968) 68 C.2d 487, 503, 67 C.R. 529, 439 P.2d 633; People v. Hinds (1984) 154 C.A.3d 222, 239, 201 C.R. 104.)

In People v. Cahill (1993) 5 C.4th 478, 20 C.R.2d 582, 853 P.2d 1037, 6 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Reversible Error, §12, a capital homicide prosecution, the trial judge admitted defendant's confession, which had been elicited through an implied promise of benefit or leniency. Held, assuming that the confession was involuntary and thus should not have been admitted, the error was not reversible per se.

(a) Because of Fulminante, a state court may now affirm a conviction without violating the federal Constitution, despite the erroneous admission of an involuntary confession, if the error was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. (5 C.4th 487.)

(b) Proposition 8 (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §8) does not compel California's adoption of the federal standard; the proposition relates to the admission of evidence, and does not "purport to affect the standard for determining the prejudicial effect, under state law, of the introduction at trial of evidence that remains inadmissible under California law." (5 C.4th 500.)

(c) Nevertheless, the standard of automatic reversal previously applied in this state seems unjustified. Official misconduct that renders a confession "involuntary" ranges from physical violence to the improper offer of a benefit, and in the latter case the conduct is no more egregious, and often less so, than that involved in obtaining evidence by means of an unreasonable search or other constitutional violations--violations that do not require automatic reversal. Further, if an automatic reversal rule were necessary to deter police misconduct, the rule would be applied to involuntary admissions as well, but such admissions have always been subject to harmless error analysis. (5 C.4th 506, 507.)

(d) "Accordingly ... we overrule the line of California decisions holding that the erroneous admission of a coerced confession is reversible per se under California law. The prejudicial effect of such error is to be determined, for purposes of California law, under the generally applicable reasonable-probability test embodied in article VI, section 13, of the California Constitution. ... Of course, because [that] standard is less demanding than the harmless-beyond-a-reasonable-doubt standard mandated by the applicable constitutional authorities ... , whenever a confession admitted in a California trial has been obtained by means that render the confession inadmissible under the federal Constitution, the prejudicial effect of the confession must be determined under the federal standard." (5 C.4th 509, 510.) (See 22 Pepperdine L. Rev. 251; 27 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 1559; on reasonable probability test, see 6 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Reversible Error, §1 et seq.; and see In re Shawn D. (1993) 20 C.A.4th 200, 24 C.R.2d 395, 10 Summary (9th), Parent and Child, Supp., §595, citing Supreme Court's holding in Cahill [error in admitting minor's confession must be deemed prejudicial, as no other evidence linked him to burglary]; People v. Cahill (1994) 22 C.A.4th 296, 318, 319, 28 C.R.2d 1, infra, §137 [no reasonable possibility that defendant's statements induced by promise of leniency contributed to his felony murder conviction; in light of other evidence, only alternative explanation for victim's death was too incredible to be believed by fair-minded jury].)

Admission of a confession obtained in violation of the Miranda requirements is also subject to harmless error analysis. (People v. Sims (1993) 5 C.4th 405, 447, 20 C.R.2d 537, 853 P.2d 992, citing Supreme Court's holding in Cahill.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

B. Admission of Party.

1. In General.

a. Nature and Theory.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 90

[§ 90] Nature and Theory.

(1) Nature of Admission. An admission consists of a statement or conduct of a party to the action (or a representative of the party) that is offered against the party at the trial. Ev.C. 1220 states the hearsay exception: The statement is admissible "when offered against the declarant in an action to which he is a party in either his individual or representative capacity, regardless of whether the statement was made in his individual or representative capacity." (See People v. Brackett (1991) 229 C.A.3d 13, 18, 20, 280 C.R. 305 [CALJIC, No. 2.71, on admission in criminal case]; People v. Medina (1995) 11 C.4th 694, 752, 47 C.R.2d 165, 906 P.2d 2 [in light of ambiguous nature of defendant's comment to officer, "If I could only cry, but I can't cry. I couldn't even cry when my mother died," trial judge properly admitted it and left it to jury to decide if it was admission]; Model C., Rule 506 et seq.; 2 McCormick 5th, §254 et seq.; 1 Jefferson, California Evidence Benchbook 3d, Chap. 3; C.E.B., Effective Introduction of Evidence 2d, Chap. 10 [Admissions and Confessions]; 1 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 18; 2 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 68; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §760 et seq.)

(2) Theory of Admissibility. Although admissions are hearsay (usually made out of court and not subject to oath or cross-examination), the policy of the exclusionary rule cannot reasonably be invoked by a party who is present and can testify in explanation or contradiction of the prior statement or conduct. (See Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1220; 28 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 221 [arguing that apologies should be excepted from this general rule of admissibility].)

(3) Federal Rules of Evidence. F.R. Evid., Rule 801(d)(2) provides that a statement "is not hearsay" if it "is offered against a party and is (A) the party's own statement, in either an individual or a representative capacity or (B) a statement of which the party has manifested an adoption or belief in its truth, or (C) a statement by a person authorized by the party to make a statement concerning the subject, or (D) a statement by the party's agent or servant concerning a matter within the scope of the agency or employment, made during the existence of the relationship, or (E) a statement by a coconspirator of a party during the course and in furtherance of the conspiracy. The contents of the statement shall be considered but are not alone sufficient to establish the declarant's authority under subdivision (C), the agency or employment relationship and scope thereof under subdivision (D), or the existence of the conspiracy and the participation therein of the declarant and the party against whom the statement is offered under subdivision (E)." (See 4 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §411 et seq.; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §760; 156 A.L.R.Fed 217 [F.R. Evid., Rule 801(d)(2)(B)].)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

B. Admission of Party.

1. In General.

b. Affirmative Evidence.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 91

[§ 91] Affirmative Evidence.

Admissions of a party (including statements and conduct of others admissible against the party; infra, §119 et seq.) are received to prove the truth of the assertions; i.e., they constitute affirmative or substantive evidence that the jury or court may believe as against other evidence, including the party's own contrary testimony on the stand. (Gates v. Pendleton (1925) 71 C.A. 752, 756, 236 P. 365; Langensand v. Obert (1933) 129 C.A. 214, 218, 18 P.2d 725; Lashley v. Koerber M.D. (1945) 26 C.2d 83, 89, 156 P.2d 441; Bonebrake v. McCormick (1950) 35 C.2d 16, 19, 215 P.2d 728; Fibreboard Paper Products Corp. v. East Bay Union of Machinists, Local 1304, United Steelworkers of America, AFL-CIO (1964) 227 C.A.2d 675, 706, 39 C.R. 64; Boogaert v. Occidental Life Ins. Co. (1983) 150 C.A.3d 875, 881, 198 C.R. 357, quoting the text; Estate of Anderson (1997) 60 C.A.4th 436, 441, 70 C.R.2d 266, 11 Summary (9th), Husband and Wife, Supp., §112 ["statement must assert facts which would have a tendency in reason to prove some portion of the proponent's defense, or to rebut some portion of the party declarant's cause of action"]; Model C., Rule 506, Comment; 2 McCormick 5th, §254; 1 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 18; 42 A.L.R.5th 1 [use of defendant's admission in medical malpractice case to establish standard of care and breach].)

In People v. Smith (1984) 151 C.A.3d 89, 96, 198 C.R. 623, defendant, charged with assault with a deadly weapon on a deputy sheriff, had said when taken into custody: "If that fucking pig wouldn't have pulled his gun, I would have done him in." Held, the statement was relevant on the issue of his wilful intent to commit a battery on the officer, and was properly introduced as an admission. (See People v. Hamilton (1985) 41 C.3d 408, 427, 221 C.R. 902, 710 P.2d 981 [murder defendant's statement to deputy, "I'll kill a lot more, too, and you may be first on my list," was relevant to guilt as admission that he had killed someone].)

Admissions are merely evidence, however; they are not conclusive on the party and may be rebutted by contradictory evidence. (See Lewetzow v. Sapiro (1961) 188 C.A.2d 841, 847, 11 C.R. 126; Frankenheimer v. Frankenheimer (1964) 231 C.A.2d 101, 110, 41 C.R. 636, citing the text; for the rule on binding judicial admissions, see infra, §97.)

The substantive aspect of admissions was formerly a significant difference between them and prior inconsistent statements of a nonparty witness; but now the latter statements are also admitted under a hearsay exception. (See infra, §155.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

B. Admission of Party.

1. In General.

c. Classifications and Distinctions.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 92

[§ 92] Classifications and Distinctions.

The apparently simple concept of "admissions" is actually complex and confusing, and the following distinctions should be noted:

(1) Express and Implied Admissions. Admissions may be express statements, or may arise from conduct--acts or silence (infra, §106 et seq.). Express admissions may be oral or written. (For cautionary instruction on oral admissions, see 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §113.) Written admissions are found in many types of informal and formal documents, and the fact that a writing is made pursuant to statute, e.g., an income tax return, does not preclude its use. (See Balkema v. Deiches (1949) 90 C.A.2d 427, 430, 202 P.2d 1068; Shenson v. Shenson (1954) 124 C.A.2d 747, 752, 269 P.2d 170 [action by cotenant for accounting of rents and profits; returns showed that defendant credited amounts to other cotenants but never paid them]; 31 So. Cal. L. Rev. 215; on privileged character of return, see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §255.)

In Sill Properties v. CMAG (1963) 219 C.A.2d 42, 55, 33 C.R. 155, minutes of a board meeting of a lessee corporation, stating the value of the assets purchased from the lessee's predecessor, were offered by the lessor. The minute entry had been made pursuant to former Corp.C. 1112 (now Corp.C. 409(b), (e)), requiring a statement by resolution of the directors' determination of fair value of consideration. Held, citing the text, this was admissible on the same theory as an income tax return; i.e., it was an admission, and there was no statutory privilege against its use.

(2) Personal, Vicarious, and Adoptive Admissions. Admissions may be personal (statements or conduct by the party), vicarious (statements or conduct of another admissible against the party; infra, §119 et seq.), or adoptive (statements or conduct of another adopted as the party's own; infra, §102 et seq.).

A personal admission may be offered against a party who is litigating in either an individual or representative capacity. The original Uniform Rules of Evidence provided that where the party was litigating in a representative capacity, only an admission made while acting in that capacity could be proved. The Evidence Code omitted this limitation as a needless refinement that would engender time-wasting debate; Ev.C. 1220 provides that the statement may be received regardless of whether it was made in an individual or representative capacity. (See 9 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 37 [advocate's guide to personal, adoptive, and judicial admissions].)

(3) Admissions of Criminal Defendant. "Party" includes a defendant in a criminal case. The important distinctions between admissions of parties to civil and criminal actions are that admissions of a defendant in a criminal case are subject to the same condition of voluntariness as confessions (infra, §136); they must meet the test of the Miranda rule requiring information on constitutional rights (supra, §76 and infra, §141); and they cannot be introduced unless the corpus delicti is independently proved (supra, §51). (On proof of admissions made through interpreter, see infra, §125.)

(4) Judicial Admissions: Pleadings, Pretrial Conference, and Discovery. The term "admissions" is also commonly applied to admissions in pleadings, but these are not merely evidentiary. They are conclusive in that they remove the admitted matters from the issues. (See infra, §97.)

Matters admitted in a pretrial, or in a case management conference and embodied in a conference order also have this effect. The order supersedes the pleadings, and an issue raised in the pleadings may be eliminated by the order. (See 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §§54, 56.) And the same is true of matters stated in response to a request for admissions under C.C.P. 2033. (See 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §171.)

(5) Distinction: Rules of Substantive Law. Evidentiary admissions of facts recited in a contract must be distinguished from the conclusive effect of the parol evidence rule establishing the terms of the contract. (See 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Documentary Evidence, §62.) And the substantive effect of a statement as an estoppel, waiver, or warranty must likewise be distinguished. (See 3 Summary (9th), Negotiable Instruments, §2; 3 Summary (9th), Sales, §55; 11 Summary (9th), Equity, §176.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(4) Judicial Admissions: Pleadings, Pretrial Conference, and Discovery. C.C.P. 2033, on requests for admissions, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

(5) Distinction: Rules of Substantive Law.

Cross-References: 4 Summary (10th), Negotiable Instruments, §10; 4 Summary (10th), Sales, §56; 13 Summary (10th), Equity, §193.

(6) (New) Distinction: Other Crimes Requirements Inapplicable. The law does not require an admission relevant to a completed crime, made in part in the form of a threat, to be independently admissible as proof of identity under Ev.C. 1101(b) (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §97), in order to qualify for use at trial. Ev.C. 1101(b) "deals with evidence of a crime or other act that is relevant to prove a fact such as motive, opportunity, intent or identity. In order to prove identity, the act must contain distinctive characteristics that are so unusual as to be like a signature. ... Admissions that tend to prove the declarant committed a charged offense, however, are not offered as other crimes evidence, and instead are offered simply as statements made by a defendant that in and of themselves tend to prove he committed a charged offense. Such statements are admissible to prove identity of the perpetrator regardless of whether they demonstrate 'distinctive characteristics' akin to a signature." (People v. Robinson (2000) 85 C.A.4th 434, 445, 102 C.R.2d 179 [in capital murder case, defendant's statement to woman in car in Oxnard that if something happened to her, he would get rid of her body by dumping it in Los Angeles, was properly admitted as admission, where it was made only 5 days after charged murder, involving Oxnard woman whose body was dumped in Los Angeles; "unique signature" standard for proof of identity under Ev.C. 1101(b) was inapplicable].)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

B. Admission of Party.

1. In General.

d. Declarant's Interest Immaterial.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 93

[§ 93] Declarant's Interest Immaterial.

Admissions are sometimes loosely called "admissions against interest." (See Gates v. Pendleton (1925) 71 C.A. 752, 756, 236 P. 365; Shenson v. Shenson (1954) 124 C.A.2d 747, 752, 269 P.2d 170.) This unfortunate phrase, coupled with the circumstance that prior statements that are useful to an opponent are most likely to be those against the party's interest when made, tend to create the erroneous impression that only dis-serving statements are admissible. The correct rule, however, is that any prior statement of a party may be offered against the party, even though it may not have been against the party's interest or even may have been self-serving when made. (See People v. Zack (1986) 184 C.A.3d 409, 417, 229 C.R. 317, quoting the text; People v. Mendoza (1987) 192 C.A.3d 667, 675, 238 C.R. 1, quoting the text; Model C., Rules 506, 509, Comments; 1 Jefferson, California Evidence Benchbook 3d, §3.20; 1 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 20.)

See People v. Carpenter (1999) 21 C.4th 1016, 1049, 90 C.R.2d 607, 988 P.2d 531 [defendant's out-of-court statement that he was thief was admissible under Ev.C. 1220 even if it was not "admission"; statute is satisfied as long as evidence consists of statement, declarant is party, and statement is offered against party].

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

B. Admission of Party.

1. In General.

e. No Requirement of Personal Knowledge.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 94

[§ 94] No Requirement of Personal Knowledge.

The testimonial qualification of personal knowledge is dispensed with in the case of admissions. The theory is (at least as to the great bulk of admissions against interest when made) that one does not make statements against oneself in the absence of information satisfactory to oneself. (See Abbett Elec. Corp. v. Sullwold (1987) 193 C.A.3d 708, 714, footnote 8, 238 C.R. 496, citing the text [company president's deposition testimony concerning employee's suspected drinking problem, whether speculative or merely evasive, constituted party admission]; Model C., Rule 506, Comment; 2 McCormick 5th, §255; 1 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 19; 54 A.L.R.2d 1069 [party's admissions as to torts occurring when party was absent]; but see Kerr v. Milatovich (1930) 209 C. 765, 766, 290 P. 289 [court seems to assume applicability of knowledge requirement but holds it satisfied].)

Whether statements made by a person lacking minimum mental capacity to testify should be excluded has been a subject of some discussion. (See 2 McCormick 5th, §255; 1 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 20; 12 A.L.R.3d 1051 [admissions by infants].)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

B. Admission of Party.

1. In General.

f. Opinion Rule Not Applicable.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 95

[§ 95] Opinion Rule Not Applicable.

The better modern authorities take the position that, because the party-declarant need not even have had personal knowledge (see supra, §94), it is no ground of objection that the declarant's statement is in a form that, had it been testimony on the stand, would have been excluded as an inadmissible opinion or conclusion. (See Model C., Rule 506, Comment; 2 McCormick 5th, §256; 1 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 19.)

Prior to the adoption of the Evidence Code, the California rule was said to be contra: "[T]he declaration or utterance must be one of fact and not a conclusion of law, opinion, legal contention, or argument." (Fibreboard Paper Products Corp. v. East Bay Union of Machinists, Local 1304, United Steelworkers of America, AFL-CIO (1964) 227 C.A.2d 675, 709, 39 C.R. 64, infra, §101.) If this decision correctly appraises former case law as making the opinion rule applicable to admissions, it is no longer correct. Ev.C. 1220 refers to a "statement," which is broadly defined in Ev.C. 225 to include any "oral or written verbal expression." The language of Ev.C. 1220 was taken without substantial change from the original Uniform Rule, which was in turn based on Model C., Rule 506. The Comment to the Model Code Rule indicates that neither the knowledge requirement nor the opinion rule should apply to admissions. And the Law Revision Commission Comment to Ev.C. 1220 observes that "[t]he statement need not be one which would be admissible if made at the hearing." (See Levy-Zentner Co. v. Southern Pac. Trans. Co. (1977) 74 C.A.3d 762, 787, footnote 19, 142 C.R. 1 [contrary holding in Breidert v. Southern Pac. Co. (1969) 272 C.A.2d 398, 412, 77 C.R. 262, relied on the pre-Code Fibreboard case; citing the text and McCormick]; 1 Jefferson, California Evidence Benchbook 3d, §3.13.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

B. Admission of Party.

1. In General.

g. Statement Containing Additional Matters.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 96

[§ 96] Statement Containing Additional Matters.

(1) Introduction Under Limited Admissibility Doctrine. A statement may be received as an admission even though it contains inadmissible matter. Thus, where the defendant makes a statement that acknowledges responsibility for an accident, it may be introduced in evidence, notwithstanding that the statement makes mention of insurance coverage. (Noble v. Bacon (1933) 129 C.A. 177, 183, 18 P.2d 699; North v. Vinton (1936) 17 C.A.2d 214, 219, 61 P.2d 950 [doctor told to "take care" of victim, that defendant "was insured"; admitted, with reference to insurance stricken out]; McCullough v. Langer (1937) 23 C.A.2d 510, 518, 73 P.2d 649 [defendant doctor denied burning plaintiff in treatment; doctor's letter containing contrary statement was properly admitted, even though it was addressed to his insurance company]; Freeman v. Nickerson (1946) 77 C.A.2d 40, 55, 174 P.2d 688; Kroplin v. Huston (1947) 79 C.A.2d 332, 339, 179 P.2d 575; Nungaray v. Pleasant Valley Lima Bean Growers & Warehouse Assn. (1956) 142 C.A.2d 653, 668, 300 P.2d 285; but see Connor v. Jackson (1949) 94 C.A.2d 462, 467, 210 P.2d 897 [defendant's letter expressing concern over plaintiff's injuries and stating that insurance company would do everything necessary, held not an admission and properly excluded]; see 4 A.L.R.2d 781 [admissibility of fact of insurance coverage as part of party admission].)

Under the same general principle, a statement may be received as an admission against one of several parties, with an instruction limiting its effect to that party. (See Shaver v. United Parcel Service (1928) 90 C.A. 764, 771, 266 P. 606; on codefendant's confession in joint trial, see supra, §59.)

Express exceptions are made by Ev.C. 1152 as to admissions in the course of compromise negotiations (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §140), and by Ev.C. 1116(b) as to admissions in the course of mediation (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §152 et seq.); these are excluded.

(2) Proof of Entire Statement. Where one party offers part of a statement as an admission, the other is entitled to introduce the pertinent parts of the remainder to explain the meaning of the part first introduced. (See 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §§36, 37.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(3) (New) Expressions of Sympathy. Any portion of a statement, writing, or benevolent gesture "expressing sympathy or a general sense of benevolence relating to the pain, suffering, or death of a person involved in an accident and made to that person or to the family of that person" is inadmissible as an admission of liability in a civil action. However, an actual statement of fault that is part of, or accompanies, such a statement, writing, or gesture is not inadmissible. (Ev.C. 1160, added in 2000; see 28 Western State L. Rev. 141.)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

B. Admission of Party.

2. Admissions in Judicial and Administrative Proceedings.

a. Pleadings in Civil Cases.

1. Same Case.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 97

[§ 97] Same Case.

(1) In General. A judicial admission in a pleading (either by affirmative allegation or by failure to deny an allegation) is entirely different from an evidentiary admission. The judicial admission is not merely evidence of a fact; it is a conclusive concession of the truth of a matter and has the effect of removing it from the issues. Nor is a judicial admission treated procedurally as evidence; the particular pleading or allegation is not formally offered in evidence but may nevertheless be relied upon and treated in argument as part of the case. (See Welch v. Alcott (1921) 185 C. 731, 754, 198 P. 626; Lifton v. Harshman (1947) 80 C.A.2d 422, 431, 182 P.2d 222; Garrado v. Collins (1955) 136 C.A.2d 323, 325, 288 P.2d 620; Walker v. Dorn (1966) 240 C.A.2d 118, 120, 49 C.R. 362, quoting the text; Smith v. Walter E. Heller & Co. (1978) 82 C.A.3d 259, 269, 147 C.R. 1, quoting the text; Electronic Equipment Express v. Donald H. Seiler & Co. (1981) 122 C.A.3d 834, 850, 176 C.R. 239, quoting the text; Kirby v. Albert D. Seeno Const. Co. (1992) 11 C.A.4th 1059, 1066, footnote 4, 14 C.R.2d 604, citing the text; 2 McCormick 5th, §257; 9 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §2588 et seq.; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §770 et seq.; 22 Pepperdine L. Rev. 981 [comparison of judicial and evidentiary admissions made by party's counsel]; 49 Hastings L. J. 565 [admissibility of statements in pleadings as means of preventing false or inaccurate pleading]; 4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §415 et seq.)

(2) Distinction: Inconsistent Counts or Defenses. It should be remembered that no judicial admission results from the permissible use of inconsistent counts or defenses unless they involve contradictions of fact in a verified pleading. (See Beatty v. Pacific States Savings & Loan Co. (1935) 4 C.A.2d 692, 697, 698, 41 P.2d 378; Walker v. Dorn, supra; 9 So. Cal. L. Rev. 388; 4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §§372, 414; 2 McCormick 5th, §257.)

(3) Superseded Pleading. An allegation or failure to deny in a pleading superseded by later amendment is of course not a judicial admission. The majority of American jurisdictions, however, treat it as a prior statement of a party, i.e., as an evidentiary admission (unless made by mistake, inadvertence, or inadequate knowledge, which may be shown). (See 2 McCormick 5th, §257; 49 Hastings L. J. 605 [admissibility of factual statements in prior pleadings]; 52 A.L.R.2d 516 [admissibility of withdrawn, superseded, or amended pleading as containing admission against interest].)

In Meyer v. State Bd. of Equalization (1954) 42 C.2d 376, 385, 267 P.2d 257, the court reviewed the decisions and took the extreme minority view that the superseded pleading was not even an evidentiary admission, but was only a prior inconsistent statement that could be used solely for impeachment and not as affirmative evidence. Because prior inconsistent statements are now admissible under their own hearsay exception (see infra, §155), the Meyer rule has lost its significance; and, unless the courts should decide to exclude it altogether, the superseded pleading will have evidentiary effect.

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

B. Admission of Party.

2. Admissions in Judicial and Administrative Proceedings.

a. Pleadings in Civil Cases.

2. Prior Case.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 98

[§ 98] Prior Case.

(1) Admission Against Pleader. A pleading in a prior civil proceeding may be offered as an evidentiary admission against the pleader in a subsequent proceeding. In Dolinar v. Pedone (1944) 63 C.A.2d 169, 176, 146 P.2d 237, a negligence case against an employee and corporation employer, the corporation did not deny that the employee acted within the scope of his employment. In another case arising out of the same accident, in which the corporation did deny the allegation, plaintiff was held entitled to introduce the earlier answer, despite the fact that it had been verified only by the attorney and not by an officer of the corporation client. Under modern pleading theories, the allegations of fact are presumed to be those of the party, and are therefore accepted as admissions, subject to the right of the party to controvert them by showing that they were unauthorized, or were made inadvertently or under mistake of fact. (See 2 McCormick 5th, §257; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §781 et seq.; 1 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 24; 63 A.L.R.2d 412 [admissibility of pleading in one case as evidence against pleader in second case].)

In Jones v. Tierney-Sinclair (1945) 71 C.A.2d 366, 373, 162 P.2d 669, defendant claimed an easement of right of way by prescription over plaintiff's land. Plaintiff offered in evidence defendant's answer in a prior suit against her by a third party, in which defendant was claiming a right of way by grant over the third party's property. In that answer, as one of several separate and inconsistent defenses, defendant had alleged that, unless the easement by grant was found valid, she would have no means of ingress or egress for her land. This allegation was, of course, contrary to her claim in the present case that, during the same period, she had acquired a prescriptive easement over plaintiff's land. Held, the answer was admissible. Inconsistent defenses may be freely pleaded in a case without being regarded as admissions in that case. But "where, as here, a defendant alleges facts in detail in an inconsistent defense in one action and those facts are inconsistent with a position taken by the same party in a subsequent action between such defendant and other parties, the first verified pleading may be used as evidence against the pleader in the subsequent action as an admission against interest." (71 C.A.2d 374.)

(2) Default Judgment: Admission Against Defendant. The failure of a defendant to answer a complaint is conduct (silence) indicating a belief in the truth of the essential allegations, and these may be offered in a subsequent civil proceeding as judicial admissions. (Estate of McCarthy (1932) 127 C.A. 80, 87, 15 P.2d 223; Bohn v. Watson (1954) 130 C.A.2d 24, 33, 278 P.2d 454; 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, §153; but see J. M. Wildman v. Stults (1959) 176 C.A.2d 670, 674, 1 C.R. 651 [default of one defendant is not judicial admission as to answering codefendant].)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

B. Admission of Party.

2. Admissions in Judicial and Administrative Proceedings. b. Guilty Plea in Criminal Case.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 99

[§ 99] Guilty Plea in Criminal Case.

(1) In General. A plea of guilty in a criminal case may be proved as an admission in a subsequent civil proceeding involving the same act or omission, because the plea is obviously inconsistent with a later claim of freedom from fault or wrong. (Olson v. Meacham (1933) 129 C.A. 670, 675, 19 P.2d 527 [plea of guilty to charge of negligent driving, admitted in death action for damages]; Langensand v. Obert (1933) 129 C.A. 214, 218, 18 P.2d 725 [plea of guilty to charge of reckless driving, admitted in personal injury action]; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §783.)

In Langensand, the court said: "If the defendant, in the case before us, had stated to any person that he was driving his car in a reckless manner and without due regard for the safety of others, and regardless of traffic, there would be little question as to the admissibility of the statement. ... Under conditions much more solemn, the defendant did so state, and under pain of penalty, when his every interest lay in stating to the contrary, were it not for the pains of perjury."

There is much controversy over the desirability of allowing evidence, in a subsequent civil action, of a plea of guilty to a traffic offense, in view of the common tendency to make the plea and accept a small fine for reasons of convenience. (See 74 Harv. L. Rev. 1453; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §784; 73 A.L.R.4th 691, 699.)

(2) Subsequent Use in Criminal Case. A defendant's admission that the factual basis for a guilty plea is true may justify use of the plea transcript in a later criminal proceeding to prove the nature of the prior conviction. (See People v. Sohal (1997) 53 C.A.4th 911, 916, 62 C.R.2d 110 [where prosecutor stated factual basis for plea of guilty to assault with deadly weapon and defendant then pleaded guilty, he made adoptive admission of truth of facts underlying plea, and admission could be relied on in subsequent criminal proceeding in determining nature of assault conviction]; on admissibility of plea of guilty to perjury charge in prosecution for subornation of perjury, see 63 A.L.R.2d 825; on methods of proving nature of prior conviction generally, see 3 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Punishment, §378.)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

B. Admission of Party.

2. Admissions in Judicial and Administrative Proceedings.

c. Stipulations and Other Attorneys' Admissions.

1. Judicial Admissions.

[§ 100] Judicial Admissions.

(1) In General. A stipulation is an agreement between attorneys for adverse parties relating to a matter involved in a judicial proceeding. It may relate to evidence or facts, and, if it is not in excess of the attorney's authority, and conforms to procedural requirements, it results in a judicial admission removing issues from the case. (For complete discussion, see 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §289 et seq.; see Palmer v. Long Beach (1948) 33 C.2d 134, 141, 199 P.2d 952 [general discussion of law, but holding that defendant never agreed to stipulation in question]; Gonzales v. Pacific Greyhound Lines (1950) 34 C.2d 749, 754, 214 P.2d 809 [wrongful death; liability stipulated, leaving only issue of damages]; In re Marriage of Hahn (1990) 224 C.A.3d 1236, 1240, 273 C.R. 516, quoting the text [where parties stipulated to value of community home, and there was no intervening sale, forfeiture, or change in its nature, judge was not required to reopen trial to allow husband to prove increased value]; 9 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §2588 et seq.) (On construction of stipulations, and relief where stipulation is entered into by mistake or inadvertence, etc., see Bare v. Parker (1921) 51 C.A. 106, 108, 196 P. 280; Back v. Farnsworth (1938) 25 C.A.2d 212, 219, 77 P.2d 295; Berry v. Chaplin (1946) 74 C.A.2d 652, 656, 169 P.2d 442; Palmer v. Long Beach, supra; 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §304 et seq.; on request for admissions under discovery statutes, see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §157; on related doctrine of judicial estoppel, see Prilliman v. United Air Lines (1997) 53 C.A.4th 935, 956, 62 C.R.2d 142; 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Judgment, §283.)

(2) Implied Stipulation. An unusual situation involving what might be termed an implied stipulation arose in People v. Peters (1950) 96 C.A.2d 671, 216 P.2d 145. Defendant was charged with involuntary manslaughter arising out of the stabbing of a third person who intervened in a quarrel. Defendant correctly contended on appeal that the corpus delicti was not proved by evidence. It appeared that both the prosecution and the defense assumed at the trial that the deceased died from the knife wound inflicted by defendant, and that the only issue was whether defendant could be excused under his claim of self-defense or accident. Held, a defendant cannot mislead the court and jury by seeming to take a position on issues and then repudiating it on appeal. Express admissions of counsel at the trial are binding. "The principle laid down applies equally to the unequivocal conduct of counsel from which the jury could properly and reasonably consider that the fact was conceded." (96 C.A.2d 677.)

(3) Concession Without Agreement. Sometimes, the judicial admission is a result of a concession by one party, in a brief or argument on appeal, without any agreement. (See Browne v. Superior Court (1940) 16 C.2d 593, 597, 107 P.2d 1; 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Appeal, §597; but see Janes v. LeDeit (1964) 228 C.A.2d 474, 487, 39 C.R. 559, 9 Cal. Proc.

Because litigants cannot confer subject matter jurisdiction by consent where none exists by law, a concession as to timeliness of a motion subject to a jurisdictional time limit is not conclusive. (People v. American Bankers Ins. Co. (1991) 227 C.A.3d 1289, 1296, 278 C.R. 314.)

(4) Distinction: Effect of Settling Defendant's Admission on Nonsettling Parties. "[T]he sanctity and solemnity of the judicial process requires that a judicial admission contained in a stipulated judgment be presumptive evidence of the facts stated therein, but the due process rights of nonsettling defendants require that contradictory evidence be permitted unless the nonsettling defendants had notice and a full opportunity to be heard at the time of the initial judicial acceptance of the admission." (Knowles v. Tehachapi Valley Hosp. Dist. (1996) 49 C.A.4th 1083, 1093, 57 C.R.2d 192, 5 Summary (9th), Torts, Supp., §71.)

B. Admission of Party.

2. Admissions in Judicial and Administrative Proceedings.

c. Stipulations and Other Attorneys' Admissions.

2. Evidentiary Admissions.

[§ 101] Evidentiary Admissions.

(1) In Judicial Proceeding. A stipulation made in one trial may constitute an admission in a subsequent proceeding. In Nungaray v. Pleasant Valley Lima Bean Growers & Warehouse Assn. (1956) 142 C.A.2d 653, 300 P.2d 285, plaintiff was injured while backing his employer's truck onto defendant's loading platform. In a prior action by defendant against its insurer to determine rights under its policies, C, defendant's warehouse manager, intervened and received a judgment requiring the insurer to defend him. In the stipulation of facts in that action, signed on behalf of C by his present attorneys, it was stated that if the present plaintiff were called as a witness he would testify that C directed him to back his truck onto the particular platform. In the present trial, C testified that plaintiff selected the platform himself. Held, the statement in the stipulation of facts, not denied by C, and used by his attorneys to gain an advantage for him (judgment against the insurer), was an adoptive admission. (142 C.A.2d 666.) (See 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §§772, 773.)

(2) In Administrative Proceeding. In Fibreboard Paper Products Corp. v. East Bay Union of Machinists, Local 1304, United Steelworkers of America, AFL-CIO (1964) 227 C.A.2d 675, 39 C.R. 64, plaintiff corporation sued defendant labor union and pickets for damages suffered from illegal picketing, contending that its production workers stayed away because of fear of violence. Defendants contended that they stayed away because of union principles. In support of this defense, defendants showed that plaintiff had opposed payment of unemployment compensation to the workers on the ground that they left their work because of a trade dispute, i.e., out of respect for the picket line, and were consequently ineligible under Unemp.Ins.C. 1262. This inconsistent position was taken in appeals from a referee's decision, and in oral argument to the Unemployment Insurance Appeals Board. Held, the documents were admissions and should not have been excluded.

The administrative appeal procedure required the party to set forth "the grounds or reasons for the appeal." Hence, the appeal forms were in the nature of pleadings in a prior case, and could constitute evidentiary admissions. "To hold that a party may plead inconsistent defenses in different proceedings without incurring procedural sanctions would stultify the rule which permits the use of pleadings in prior proceedings as evidentiary admissions in subsequent proceedings." (227 C.A.2d 712.)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

B. Admission of Party.

3. Adoptive Admissions in Civil Cases.

a. Nature of Admission.

[§ 102] Nature of Admission.

A party may expressly or by implication adopt another's declaration as the party's own; in this case, the declaration, although made by another, may be treated as a party admission. Ev.C. 1221 codifies this concept of adoptive admission: "Evidence of a statement offered against a party is not made inadmissible by the hearsay rule if the statement is one of which the party, with knowledge of the content thereof, has by words or other conduct manifested his adoption or his belief in its truth."

"The theory of adoptive admissions is that the hearsay declaration is in effect repeated by the party; his conduct is intended by him to express the same proposition as that stated by the declarant." (Model C., Rule 507, Comment b; see Estate of Gaines (1940) 15 C.2d 255, 262, 100 P.2d 1055 [appellant repeated to witness, without challenge, statement that decedent had previously made to appellant; admissible against appellant]; Nungaray v. Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control (1966) 246 C.A.2d 198, 205, 54 C.R. 547, supra, §34; People v. Richards (1976) 17 C.3d 614, 618, 131 C.R. 537, 552 P.2d 97; *Brown v. L. Rev. 20; 2 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 70; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §796 et seq.; 1963 A.S. 293.)

In J. & J. Builders Supply v. Caffin (1967) 248 C.A.2d 292, 298, 56 C.R. 365, J and C, seeking materials on credit from plaintiff, called on plaintiff's president, and J, in C's presence, said "This is my new partner." Held, J's statement was properly received as an adoptive admission of C, and he was liable as a partner by estoppel.

However, an admission is ordinarily personal, and the mere recital or description of another's statement does not necessarily constitute an adoption of it. "[A] statement describing another's declaration is normally not regarded as an admission of the fact asserted by the other. One does not admit everything he recounts or describes merely by reason of the relating of it." (Estate of Gaines, supra, 15 C.2d 262; People v. Hayes (1999) 21 C.4th 1211, 1258, 91 C.R.2d 211, 989 P.2d 645, quoting the text.)

Nor does an admission result from furnishing required papers. Where, e.g., a life or accident insurance policy requires the submission of proof of death or injury, by a doctor's or coroner's report, the beneficiary, in order to maintain a claim, has no choice but to comply. In that case, there is no voluntary act on the beneficiary's part, and consequently the recitals and declarations in the reports are not admissible as an adoptive admission. (Shee v. Maryland Assur. Corp., Baltimore (1922) 190 C. 1, 6, 210 P. 269; Bebbington v. California Western States Life Ins. Co. (1947) 30 C.2d 157, 161, 180 P.2d 673, supra, §12; see 58 A.L.R.2d 429 [extent to which insured is bound by statements in proof of loss].)

Special considerations apply in criminal cases. (See infra, §§140, 141.)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

B. Admission of Party.

3. Adoptive Admissions in Civil Cases.

b. Adoption by Conduct.

1. In General.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 103

[§ 103] In General.

A person may adopt another's admission not only by express words but by "other conduct" manifesting a "belief in its truth." (Ev.C. 1221, supra, §102.) The theory is stated in Model C., Rule 507, Comment b, as follows: "The party's conduct may be such that no reasonable person could find therefrom an intention to concede the truth of the declarant's statement; indeed, it may indicate a purpose to convey exactly the opposite impression; and yet one might reasonably conclude from it that the party really believed the declaration to be true. Thus his silence, or his attempted explanation, or even a halting or otherwise suspiciously spoken denial, in the face of a damaging accusation, may furnish ample ground for an inference of consciousness of its truth even though it would afford no sufficient basis for an inference of adoption." (See Tibbet v. Sue (1899) 125 C. 544, 546, 58 P. 160; Estate of Snowball (1910) 157 C. 301, 311, 107 P. 598; Baldarachi v. Leach (1919) 44 C.A. 603, 606, 186 P. 1060, infra, §104; Los Robles Motor Lodge v. Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control (1966) 246 C.A.2d 198, 205, 54 C.R. 547, supra, §34; 2 McCormick 5th, §261; 2 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 70; 32 Proof of Facts 2d 253 [conduct or silence as admission]; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §799 et seq.; 1963 A.S. 293; BAJI (8th ed.), No. 2.26.)

Thus, in Tibbet v. Sue, supra, an action on a promissory note, plaintiff's witness gave the following evidence of the loan: In the presence of several others, plaintiff counted out and handed $ 500 to defendant maker and stated that he was lending him the money; defendant took the money and walked away. Held, this was admissible.

An implied admission may result from silence in the face of another's declaration that would normally call for an answer. (See infra, §104.) But the mere fact that a party was present while another's declaration was made does not by itself constitute the basis for proof of the declaration as an implied admission. (See supra, §10.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

B. Admission of Party.

3. Adoptive Admissions in Civil Cases.

b. Adoption by Conduct.

2. Silence or Evasive Response in Negligence Action.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 104

[§ 104] Silence or Evasive Response in Negligence Action.

A troublesome question arises where, after an automobile accident, the defendant is accused by observers of being at fault. Because the defendant may be injured or shocked, or concerned with helping the victim, or intimidated by express or implied threats of reprisal, silence can scarcely be regarded as an admission of negligence. (See generally 2 McCormick 5th, §262; 28 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 337 [adoptive admission by silence]; 70 A.L.R.2d 1099 [silence as admission regarding circumstances of accident]; 1958 A.S. 659; BAJI (8th ed.), No. 2.26.)

The correct result was almost reached in Baldarachi v. Leach (1919) 44 C.A. 603, 186 P. 1060. The witness, a bystander, testified that he told defendant at the time that he "ought to be strung up by the heels for running into a woman in that fashion," and that defendant made no reply. The court observed that "it may be apparent" that the nature of the declaration and surrounding circumstances were such that no fair inference of an admission of negligence could be drawn (44 C.A. 609); that "it is extremely improbable that the jury attached any significance to his silence" ; and that "it may seem clear to us that the significance of defendant's silence in the face of this declaration was practically negligible as evidence of an admission" (44 C.A. 610). Nevertheless, the court held he could have answered, and "many men" would have answered (44 C.A. 608), and "we are not prepared to say that the court was not right in holding it to be a matter for the jury to pass upon" (44 C.A. 610).

This decision can best be explained as an illustration of the reluctance to find reversible error in the admission of a single item of proof. For the purposes of the law of evidence, the following dictum seems more significant than the holding: "It is apparent in the case at bar that the declaration testified to did not entitle the party making it to a reply. He was a mere bystander, with no more interest in the affair than any other one of the crowd that doubtless had already assembled. The nature of his statement was truculent and offensive, and did not in terms call for a response. It was a situation where any self-respecting and self-restraining man in the position of defendant, no matter how conscious of innocence, might properly keep silent and where, if a response had been made, it would most likely have been an angry retort." (44 C.A. 608.)

The instructions given transit company employees to refuse to discuss an accident may lead to unexpectedly unfavorable results under the rule of implied admissions. Thus, in Keller v. Key System Transit Lines (1954) 129 C.A.2d 593, 596, 277 P.2d 869, plaintiff was struck by defendant's train. A police officer testified that he took an accident report from R, the motorman, who answered numerous questions, and then was asked, "Where was the woman when you first saw her when she was struck by the train?" R answered: "You are putting me in an awful spot. I have given you all the information I have been instructed to give by my employers. ... My hands are tied." Held, his evasive answer was properly offered as an admission.

Obviously, no admission results where the question is not accusatory. Thus, in Gilbert v. Los Angeles (1967) 249 C.A.2d 1006, 1009, 58 C.R. 56, plaintiff tripped on a crack in the sidewalk and sued the city. The trial judge permitted the introduction of a statement by a police officer, who asked her after the fall if she had seen the raised portion of the sidewalk on previous occasions. Her only response to this thrice-repeated inquiry was to ask if the city was going to pay for her injuries. Held, it was error to admit the evidence. There was no accusation in asking "if" (not "when") she saw the defect, hence, her allegedly equivocal response raised no inference of any kind.

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

B. Admission of Party.

3. Adoptive Admissions in Civil Cases.

b. Adoption by Conduct.

3. Ignoring Written Communication.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 105

[§ 105] Ignoring Written Communication.

It is sometimes stated as a general rule that an admission is not implied from the failure to reply to a letter; there are many reasons, other than belief in the truth of the matters referred to, why a person does not reply. "Silence, under such circumstances, is never the equivalent of consent; such a doctrine would place the whole world at the mercy of letter writers." (Security-First Nat. Bank of Los Angeles v. Spring Street Properties (1937) 20 C.A.2d 618, 626, 67 P.2d 720; see Hughes v. Pacific Wharf & Storage Co. (1922) 188 C. 210, 225, 205 P. 105; A. B. Leach & Co. v. Peirson (1927) 275 U.S. 120, 48 S.Ct. 57, 72 L.Ed. 194 ["A man cannot make evidence for himself by writing a letter containing the statements that he wishes to prove"]; 2 McCormick 5th, §262; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §801; 32 Proof of Facts 2d 287.)

Nevertheless, the theory of implied admissions can be and is applied in situations where an answer would normally be made denying the statements if they were untrue. "[T]he instances in which such letters have been admitted have usually been cases where they were part of a mutual correspondence, or referred to an existing contract." (Simpson v. Bergmann (1932) 125 C.A. 1, 8, 13 P.2d 531; see 2 McCormick 5th, §262; on failure to dispute an account rendered, and the substantive law doctrine of account stated, see 1 Summary (9th), Contracts, §917 et seq.)

In Simpson, B, owner, sought to hold S Co., a lumber subcontractor, on its bond as surety for a defaulting contractor. B offered evidence that B's attorney wrote to S Co., referring to the bond, stating that S Co. had executed it as surety, and notifying it of default in the contractor's performance. Held, although there was no previous correspondence or contract between the parties, the circumstances were such that the letter reasonably called for some reply.

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

B. Admission of Party.

4. Other Admissions by Conduct.

a. Flight, Resistance, or Escape of Accused.

1. In General.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 106

[§ 106] In General.

Acts of an accused, designed to prevent arrest, may afford an inference of consciousness of guilt, and are receivable against the accused as implied admissions. (See People v. Wong (1973) 35 C.A.3d 812, 830, 111 C.R. 314, citing the text [principle applied to allow evidence that victim's body was concealed]; People v. James (1976) 56 C.A.3d 876, 889, 128 C.R. 733 [defendant's conduct after commission of crime, whether flight, evasion of apprehension, attempted suicide, or escape from custody may be relevant circumstantial evidence to show consciousness of guilt and, by further inference, commission of offense]; 2 McCormick 5th, §263 et seq.; 2 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §276 et seq.; 1 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 22; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §805; 1966 A.S. 397; 22 A.L.R.3d 843 [suicide attempt as analogy to flight].)

The most common examples are flight (see infra, §107) and attempted escape from custody (see infra, §109). Resistance to arrest may also be proved as an implied admission. (See People v. Flannelly (1900) 128 C. 83, 87, 60 P. 670 [shooting at officers to avoid capture]; People v. Dabb (1948) 32 C.2d 491, 499, 500, 197 P.2d 1 [same]; 2 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §276.)

See CALCRIM, No. 372 [Defendant's Flight]; 2 McCormick 6th, §263 et seq.

(New) Distinction: Invocation of Fourth Amendment rights: A defendant's invocation of the constitutional right to insist on a warrant prior to entry onto his or her property may not be used for the purpose of showing that the defendant had something to hide, i.e., demonstrating a consciousness of guilt. (People v. Wood (2002) 103 C.A.4th 803, 809, 127 C.R.2d 132 [in prosecution for animal abuse, trial judge erred in allowing animal control officer to testify that defendant refused officer access to pasture where animal in question was kept; however, error was harmless, as evidence would have been admissible in cross-examination of defendant or as rebuttal, in light of his denial that he owned pasture].)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

B. Admission of Party.

4. Other Admissions by Conduct.

a. Flight, Resistance, or Escape of Accused.

2. Flight.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 107

[§ 107] Flight.

(1) In General. Flight or attempted flight of the accused affords an inference of consciousness of guilt. (See People v. Sanchez (1939) 35 C.A.2d 231, 237, 95 P.2d 169; People v. Waller (1939) 14 C.2d 693, 702, 96 P.2d 344 [defendant also assumed aliases to avoid detection]; People v. Hurd (1970) 5 C.A.3d 865, 876, 85 C.R. 718, citing the text [defendant, charged with sex crimes against his daughter, fled from California when contacted by police after daughter was taken to juvenile hall]; People v. Mulqueen (1970) 9 C.A.3d 532, 543, 88 C.R. 235; People v. Terry (1970) 2 C.3d 362, 395, 85 C.R. 409, 466 P.2d 961; People v. Marchialette (1975) 45 C.A.3d 974, 981, 119 C.R. 816 [defendant left shooting scene hastily without explanation or attempting to render assistance, which innocent law-abiding citizen would normally do, and could not be found when people searched for him moments later]; People v. Bigam (1975) 49 C.A.3d 73, 78, 122 C.R. 252 [defendant's flight when confronted by uniformed police and his spontaneous exclamatory statement--"Jesus Christ, the cops"--coupled with his earlier sale of marijuana, were indicative of consciousness of criminal involvement that constituted probable cause to arrest]; People v. Vargas (1975) 53 C.A.3d 516, 529, 126 C.R. 88 [defendant, on bail, failed to appear for second day of trial; instruction on flight did not violate his Fifth Amendment right to remain silent and to be free of adverse inferences from his failure to testify]; People v. Snyder (1976) 56 C.A.3d 195, 198, 128 C.R. 297 [defendant appeared for first day of trial, but then disappeared until months after verdict was rendered; jurors properly considered his flight as factor in guilt]; People v. Moody (1976) 59 C.A.3d 357, 361, 131 C.R. 923; People v. Sanchez (1978) 86 C.A.3d Supp. 8, 11, 150 C.R. 772; People v. Neely (1993) 6 C.4th 877, 26 C.R.2d 189, 864 P.2d 460 [evidence indicating that defendant was in flight following crime was highly probative of participation in crime and consciousness of guilt]; 2 McCormick 5th, §263; 2 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §276; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §805; on flight from scene of accident, see infra, §118.)

In People v. Jack (1965) 233 C.A.2d 446, 43 C.R. 566, defendant, in a pharmacy attempting to fill a false prescription for dangerous drugs, observed a sheriff's officer, and left for his car parked outside. Held, this justified an instruction on flight. The act of running away, which affords the basis for the inference of consciousness of guilt, "requires neither a physical act of running nor a far-away haven." (233 C.A.2d 458, citing the text.)

(2) Statutory Instruction. Where evidence of a defendant's flight is relied on as tending to show guilt, the jury must be instructed substantially as follows:

"The flight of a person immediately after the commission of a crime, or after he is accused of a crime that has been committed is not sufficient in itself to establish his guilt, but is a fact which if proved, the jury may consider in deciding his guilt or innocence. The weight to which such circumstance is entitled is a matter for the jury to determine." (P.C. 1127c.)

"No further instruction on the subject of flight need be given." (P.C. 1127c.)

The instruction need not be in the exact language of P.C. 1127c, and the judge may inform the jury of the reason why flight is a factor to consider, i.e., that it shows a consciousness of guilt. (People v. Hill (1967) 67 C.2d 105, 120, 60 C.R. 234, 429 P.2d 586.) (See People v. Olea (1971) 15 C.A.3d 508, 515, 93 C.R. 265 ["The very purpose of enacting Penal Code section 1127c was to abolish the rule stated in early California cases that the jury could not be instructed to consider flight as evidence of guilt unless it had been proved the defendant knew he had been accused of the commission of a particular crime"]; People v. Hedrington (1985) 171 C.A.3d 517, 520, 217 C.R. 754 [in voluntary manslaughter prosecution in which defendant claimed that victim was aggressor and defendant fled scene of fight to protect himself, flight instruction was not improper; instruction did not assume that defense of justification was not proved]; People v. Turner (1990) 50 C.3d 668, 694, 268 C.R. 706, 789 P.2d 887 [modification of instruction to provide that "if there was such flight," its weight is for jury determination properly allowed jury to determine whether flight had been proved]; People v. Pensinger (1991) 52 C.3d 1210, 1243, 278 C.R. 640, 805 P.2d 899 [knowledge requirement referred to in Olea case, supra, need not be revived as matter of due process]; CALJIC (6th ed.), No. 2.52.)

Although P.C. 1127c does not contain the word "attempted," the inference may also be drawn from attempted flight. (People v. Kessler (1968) 257 C.A.2d 812, 814, 65 C.R. 248, citing the text.)

(3) Flight Remote in Time From Charged Crime. In People v. Mason (1991) 52 C.3d 909, 277 C.R. 166, 802 P.2d 950, defendant was charged with multiple counts of first degree murder. At trial, the prosecution introduced evidence of a high-speed automobile chase that involved defendant and sheriff's deputies and that took place 4 weeks after, and in the same jurisdiction as, one of the murders. As the chase ended, defendant allegedly abandoned his vehicle and escaped on foot; he was arrested about 1 month later. Held, admission of the flight evidence and issuance of the flight instruction were proper.

(a) Defendant contended that the flight was so remote in time from the charged offenses that it was of marginal probative value. "Common sense, however, suggests that a guilty person does not lose the desire to avoid apprehension for offenses as grave as multiple murders after only a few weeks. Nor do our decisions create inflexible rules about the required proximity between crime and flight. Instead, the facts of each case determine whether it is reasonable to infer that flight shows consciousness of guilt." (52 C.3d 941.) Moreover, contrary to the holding in People v. Newton (1966) 244 C.A.2d 82, 85, 52 C.R. 727, it was not necessary that defendant knew he was charged with the crimes involved. "While the rule ... was good law at the time ... we have long since rejected it." (52 C.3d 941, 942, footnote 11.)

(b) Admission of the flight evidence did not unduly prejudice defendant, even though he was forced to admit two uncharged crimes to explain the flight. The uncharged offenses were no less remote than the charged murder that occurred most proximate to defendant's flight. One uncharged offense was committed in a different jurisdiction and more than a hundred miles from the place where defendant fled from the sheriff's deputies; the other uncharged crime occurred only 4 days after the charged murder. Because the inference that defendant fled to avoid apprehension for the charged murders was at least as strong as the inference that he fled to avoid apprehension for the uncharged offenses, it was within the trial judge's discretion under Ev.C. 352 (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §17 et seq.) to conclude that any danger of undue prejudice associated with the flight evidence did not outweigh the evidence's probative value. (52 C.3d 942.)

[§ 108] Instruction Where Fleeing Person's Identity Is in Issue.

In People v. Mason (1991) 52 C.3d 909, 277 C.R. 166, 802 P.2d 950, the Supreme Court rejected broad dictum in People v. Anjell (1979) 100 C.A.3d 189, 160 C.R. 669, to the effect that if the identity of the person who fled is in issue, an instruction on flight is improper. The court observed:

"If there is evidence identifying the person who fled as the defendant, and if such evidence 'is relied upon as tending to show guilt,' then it is proper to instruct on flight. (§1127c.) 'The jury must know that it is entitled to infer consciousness of guilt from flight and that flight, alone, is not sufficient to establish guilt. ... The jury's need to know these things does not change just because identity is also an issue. Instead, such a case [only] requires the jury to proceed logically by deciding first whether the [person who fled] was the defendant and then, if the answer is affirmative, how much weight to accord to flight in resolving the other issues bearing on guilt. The jury needs the instruction for the second step.' " (52 C.3d 943, quoting People v. London (1988) 206 C.A.3d 896, 254 C.R. 59, and disapproving People v. Anjell and its progeny.) (See People v. Pensinger (1991) 52 C.3d 1210, 1244, 1245, 278 C.R. 640, 805 P.2d 899 [repeating holding and explanation in Mason].)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

B. Admission of Party.

4. Other Admissions by Conduct.

a. Flight, Resistance, or Escape of Accused.

4. Attempted Escape From Custody.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 109

[§ 109] Attempted Escape From Custody.

An attempt to escape from custody also affords an inference of consciousness of guilt. (See People v. Ellis (1922) 188 C. 682, 693, 206 P. 753; People v. Arnold (1926) 199 C. 471, 497, 250 P. 168; People v. Otis (1959) 174 C.A.2d 119, 128, 344 P.2d 342 [hacksaw blades found in defendant's cell while he was awaiting trial for crime of possession of knives]; People v. Morris (1991) 53 C.3d 152, 196, 279 C.R. 720, 807 P.2d 949 [evidence of attempted escape is admissible even when multiple crimes have been charged, despite difficulty of knowing which charge defendant attempted to flee from]; 2 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §276; 3 A.L.R.4th 1085 [evidence of escape or attempted escape occurring while defendant is detained for more than one offense, where trial is on less than all pending charges].)

In People v. Terry (1970) 2 C.3d 362, 85 C.R. 409, 466 P.2d 961, defendant tried to escape from jail 6 months after his arrest on two homicide charges. During the attempt, he fired a revolver and stated to a policeman, "I have killed two men already. It doesn't make any difference to me if I kill you too." Following his conviction, defendant contended on appeal that the probative value of this evidence was slight in relation to its prejudicial effect because it was likely that, after several months in jail, he escaped because he could not bear further incarceration. Held, the evidence was admissible. Defendant's theory was possible, "but it is also probable that only one who expects his guilt to be proved at trial will attempt an escape and that an innocent man will stay for trial in order to clear his name and win lawful liberty." (2 C.3d 395.) The time of an escape affects the weight of the evidence, not its admissibility. (2 C.3d 395.) The escape was also "probably admissible" to show the circumstances surrounding his admission of the two killings. "To say the least, this statement made during the escape tends to demonstrate consciousness of guilt." (2 C.3d 395, footnote 15.)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

4. Other Admissions by Conduct.

b. False Excuse or Alibi.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 110

[§ 110] False Excuse or Alibi.

(1) General Rule. False statements deliberately made by defendants to arresting officers concerning matters within their own knowledge, and relating materially to the issue of guilt or innocence, "cogently evidence consciousness of guilt and suggest that there is no honest explanation for incriminating circumstances." (People v. Osslo (1958) 50 C.2d 75, 93, 323 P.2d 397.) (See People v. Liss (1950) 35 C.2d 570, 576, 219 P.2d 789 [use of false name]; People v. Downs (1952) 114 C.A.2d 758, 761, 251 P.2d 369 [attempt to manufacture alibi by false registration card at hotel]; People v. Cramer (1967) 67 C.2d 126, 131, 60 C.R. 230, 429 P.2d 582, citing the text [sex offense with boy; denial of identity and attempted concealment of relationship with victim]; People v. Showers (1968) 68 C.2d 639, 643, 68 C.R. 459, 440 P.2d 939 [defendant, searching in ivy patch, said he was looking for $ 50 a friend had lost; police immediately found balloon with heroin there]; People v. Louis (1984) 159 C.A.3d 156, 160, 161, 205 C.R. 306 [criticizing former version of CALJIC, No. 2.03 for not including the word "wilfully"; CALJIC (6th ed.), No. 2.03 includes the term]; People v. Zack (1986) 184 C.A.3d 409, 418, 229 C.R. 317 [defendant said he had been fishing in Carmel when murder occurred; in fact, Carmel had experienced severe storm on night in question]; People v. Mendoza (1987) 192 C.A.3d 667, 672, 238 C.R. 1 [defendant said he had been washing truck when attack on victim occurred, but arresting officers observed coating of dust on truck]; People v. Benson (1989) 210 C.A.3d 1223, 1232, 259 C.R. 9 [in murder prosecution, defendant's pretrial statement that third person grabbed at either her or the gun, causing gun to fire, was properly admitted even if it was not inconsistent with her trial testimony; inference of fabrication was provided by inconsistency with statements she made to police and others that victim had grabbed gun]; People v. Kaurish (1990) 52 C.3d 648, 682, 276 C.R. 788, 802 P.2d 278 [evidence of defendant's false statements at time of arrest is admissible whether statements are contradicted by defendant at trial or by statements of other witnesses]; People v. Carrillo (1995) 37 C.A.4th 1662, 1669, 45 C.R.2d 16, citing the text [defendant denied ownership of car in which cocaine was found]; People v. Arias (1996) 13 C.4th 92, 141, 51 C.R.2d 770, 913 P.2d 980 [in light of eyewitness accounts suggesting that defendant deliberately stabbed murder victim, CALJIC, No. 2.03 was properly given regarding defendant's statement to his mother that he did not mean to stab anyone but did so because he was startled, notwithstanding that statement also included expressions of remorse]; 2 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §278.)

Of course, consciousness of guilt is not shown by mere slips or errors in a recital of events, "but by fabrications which, like devious alibis, are apparently motivated by fear of detection, or which, like devious explanations of the possession of stolen goods, suggest that there is no honest explanation for incriminating circumstances." (People v. Albertson (1944) 23 C.2d 550, 582, 145 P.2d 7 [concurring opinion].)

(2) Distinction: Plausible Explanation for Falsehoods. In People v. Blakeslee (1969) 2 C.A.3d 831, 82 C.R. 839, 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §146, defendant was convicted of murdering her mother. On the night of the crime, she gave police a false account of her movements and denied knowledge of her brother's .22 rifle, the suspected (but never located) murder weapon. Held, judgment reversed. Defendant's falsehoods may properly have formed the basis for unfavorable inferences against her. (2 C.A.3d 839, citing the text.) "But inferences of what? The refutation of these falsehoods did not directly implicate defendant in the slaying. Rather their refutation merely destroyed defendant's asserted alibi for the time of the crime and rebutted her claimed ignorance of an accessible weapon which could have been used to commit the crime. This negation of a negative (she was not there) does not amount to affirmation of a positive (she did the shooting). Inferences drawn from her tender of a false alibi do not directly support a murder accusation against the defendant. While it is said that a false alibi tends to establish a consciousness of guilt ... , the logical force of this deduction is weakened when there is some plausibility to the defendant's subsequent explanation of the reason for the falsehood. Here, defendant's explanation was that in giving these falsehoods she was trying to protect her brother Michael." (2 C.A.3d 839.) (See People v. Rankin (1992) 9 C.A.4th 430, 436, 11 C.R.2d 735 [CALJIC, No. 2.03 should not be given if it appears that false statement was made to protect someone else].)

(3) Statement at Time Other Than Arrest. A false statement by the defendant may be found to evidence consciousness of guilt even if it was made at a time other than upon arrest. "The inference of guilt comes from the fact that a falsehood was told in order to mislead the authorities and avoid suspicion, not the time at which the statement was made." (People v. White (1995) 35 C.A.4th 758, 772, 41 C.R.2d 510 [statement, made in open court at hearing on preliminary motion, that defendant was not at motel where killing took place and where he was arrested was properly admitted at trial].)

(4) Civil Cases. A false exculpatory statement "is evidence of a guilty conscience in the context of criminal cases. The underlying principle is that a false statement is evidence of a declarant's state of mind and demonstrates his knowledge he has committed a wrong. Furthermore, from this consciousness of guilt the jury is entitled to infer other facts bearing on a defendant's guilt. The logic of this principle applies as much in civil cases as it does in criminal prosecutions." (Donchin v. Guerrero (1995) 34 C.A.4th 1832, 1841, 41 C.R.2d 192 [citing People v. Mendoza, supra; defendant landlord's false statement that he did not know his tenant had dogs could be used to infer that he had guilty conscience about dogs and his responsibility for injuries they caused]; see Fowler v. Seaton (1964) 61 C.2d 681, 690, 39 C.R. 881, 394 P.2d 697, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Burden of Proof and Presumptions, §116.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) General Rule. See People v. Williams (2000) 79 C.A.4th 1157, 1167, 1168, 94 C.R.2d 727, citing the text [where defendant voluntarily introduced own exculpatory statement made to police following his arrest for robbery, CALJIC, No. 2.03 was properly given, even though statement was made before he received required Miranda advisements; defendant may not introduce own false statement and escape risk that it may be basis for inference of wrongdoing]; People v. Vu (2006) 143 C.A.4th 1009, 1029, 1030, 49 C.R.3d 765 [in murder conspiracy case arising from incident in which victim was killed in mistaken belief he was member of rival gang, defendant's conduct displayed consciousness of guilt where, in hours after killing, he told fellow gang member to say that he was with her watching movie at time of killing, where he repeated this story to police, and where he had no plausible explanation for lying; distinguishing People v. Blakeslee (1969) 2 C.A.3d 831, 82 C.R. 839, text, p. 815]; cf. People v. Fritz (2007) 153 C.A.4th 949, 955, 62 C.R.3d 885 [where defendant was detained outside department store and, after being transported to police station and asked whether he knew his girlfriend had been stealing clothing while inside store, said "no" and further volunteered that he had never stolen anything from store in past, latter statement, which was false, was not admissible to show consciousness of guilt; statement had no relevance except to impeach, and defendant never testified]; CALCRIM, No. 362 [Consciousness of Guilt: False Statements].

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

B. Admission of Party.

4. Other Admissions by Conduct.

c. Attempt To Corrupt Witness or Suppress Evidence.

1. In General.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 111

[§ 111] In General.

An attempt by an accused to corrupt a witness or suppress adverse evidence may be shown. (See People v. Moore (1945) 70 C.A.2d 158, 162, 160 P.2d 857 [defendant's cousin, with defendant's authority, promised to reimburse prosecuting witness if he "would ease up a little" on his testimony]; People v. Wong (1973) 35 C.A.3d 812, 831, 111 C.R. 314 ["[A]ny act proving or tending to prove an effort or desire on the part of a defendant to obliterate or remove evidence of a crime as by his hiding of the decedent's body, if unexplained, warrants an inference of consciousness of guilt on his part and will be given probative force in connection with other facts as a relevant circumstance tending to show guilt"]; People v. Cooper (1991) 53 C.3d 771, 833, 281 C.R. 90, 809 P.2d 865 [CALJIC, No. 2.06 implies that defendant must be aware that items he destroys are evidence in order to show consciousness of guilt; thus there was no requirement to expressly augment instruction to that effect]; People v. Williams (1996) 46 C.A.4th 1767, 1780, 54 C.R.2d 521 [CALJIC, No. 2.06 was properly given where police searched defendant's apartment and found certain clothing items worn by defendant during alleged attacks but could not find shoes and shorts worn by him that day; it was reasonable to assume he hid them to thwart efforts to identify him]; People v. Williams (1997) 16 C.4th 153, 201, 66 C.R.2d 123, 940 P.2d 710 [evidence of attack by third person on prosecution witness was properly admitted as witness intimidation evidence in light of testimony indicating that attack was authorized by defendant]; 2 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §278.)

In a civil case, evidence of spoliation or suppression permits an inference of consciousness of the weakness of the whole case. (See 2 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §278; 2 McCormick 5th, §265; Thor v. Boska (1974) 38 C.A.3d 558, 567, 113 C.R. 296 [quoting Wigmore and McCormick].) In Thor, defendant doctor, sued for malpractice, was unable to produce his original clinical records of treatment of plaintiff. He obtained a ruling prohibiting reference to the missing records by a partial admission of negligence. Held, judgment for defendant reversed; the effect of the evidence of spoliation could not be neutralized by admitting one issue out of several.

In California, there was formerly a statutory presumption that evidence suppressed was adverse. Under the Evidence Code, suppression may be considered by the jury in weighing the evidence. (Ev.C. 413, 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §115.)

B. Admission of Party.

4. Other Admissions by Conduct.

c. Attempt To Corrupt Witness or Suppress Evidence.

2. Threats.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 112

[§ 112] Threats.

"A threat made by a defendant against a prospective prosecution witness whom he expects to testify against him, with the apparent intention of intimidating the witness, is proper evidence; efforts of an accused to suppress testimony against himself indicate a consciousness of guilt." (People v. Slocum (1975) 52 C.A.3d 867, 887, 125 C.R. 442 [threat was admissible even though no indictment had issued when defendant made it; at time, he knew of ongoing investigation probing his Medi-Cal billing practices]; see People v. Manson (1976) 61 C.A.3d 102, 156, 157, 132 C.R. 265, citing the text; People v. Hamilton (1985) 41 C.3d 408, 428, 221 C.R. 902, 710 P.2d 981 [defendant wrote letter from jail, knowing that authorities would copy it, stating that third person had proposed to "take out" witness, two prosecutors, and defense attorney if defendant was convicted; admissible as attempt to intimidate persons named in letter].)

A threat made after the witness has testified is distinguishable. Threats against a prospective witness are admitted on the theory that the defendant is attempting to suppress testimony. If the witness has already testified, no such purpose could be achieved, and the evidence of a threat--highly prejudicial and not supporting an inference of consciousness of guilt--should be excluded. (People v. Cruz (1968) 260 C.A.2d 55, 60, 66 C.R. 772 [noting view of some courts that evidence is admissible if witness is still subject to recall, and therefore could be intimidated]; People v. Foster (1988) 201 C.A.3d 20, 25, 246 C.R. 855 [citing Cruz; evidence of threatening gesture was admissible because witness was subject to recall].)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

B. Admission of Party.

4. Other Admissions by Conduct.

c. Attempt To Corrupt Witness or Suppress Evidence.

3. Attempt by Unauthorized Person.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 113

[§ 113] Attempt by Unauthorized Person.

An attempt to corrupt a witness or suppress evidence constitutes an admission only where the attempt is made by the defendant or someone with authority to represent the defendant. In People v. Weiss (1958) 50 C.2d 535, 553, 327 P.2d 527, an abortion trial, the prosecution examined the abortee witness about a purported telephone call from someone describing himself as defendant's attorney, but in no way identified by the witness as such. Held, this was inadmissible hearsay. "If the attempt is made by a third person, not in the presence of a defendant or shown to have been authorized by him, it should at once be suspect as a mere purporting attempt to suppress evidence and in truth an endeavor to prejudice the defendant before the jury in a way which he cannot possibly rebut satisfactorily because he does not know the true identity of the pretender." (50 C.2d 554.) (See People v. Perez (1959) 169 C.A.2d 473, 477, 337 P.2d 539; People v. Hannon (1977) 19 C.3d 588, 599, 600, 138 C.R. 885, 564 P.2d 1203 ["At the very most the record merely supports the conclusion that some unidentified attorney ordered Brown not to speak with representatives of the People before testifying at trial"]; 79 A.L.R.3d 1156 [authorized and unauthorized persons].)

In People v. Terry (1962) 57 C.2d 538, 21 C.R. 185, 370 P.2d 985, the prosecution introduced a telegram to defendant W from the wife of the brother of defendant T's wife, reading: "Does your cigarette taste different, lately? Switch from hots to Kools." The prosecution's theory was that defendant T had threatened W if he became a witness against him, and that this telegram was corroboration of T's alleged threat. Held, it was inadmissible, for there was no showing--other than the fact of relationship--that the sender was authorized by the defendant to make the attempt to suppress. (57 C.2d 565.)

1. Operating Rules of Carrier.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 114

[§ 114] Operating Rules of Carrier.

When a railroad or other carrier has adopted precautionary rules or regulations to avoid injury, these afford some evidence of the standard of care believed appropriate. Accordingly, if a rule is violated, the plaintiff in a negligence action may introduce it as an implied admission. (See Simon v. San Francisco (1947) 79 C.A.2d 590, 597, 180 P.2d 393 ["the jury could have found that the motorman violated the company rules, and it was entitled to consider that fact in determining whether the motorman's conduct constituted negligence"]; Powell v. Co. (1950) 35 C.2d 40, 46, 216 P.2d 448 ["The rule was properly admitted in evidence as bearing on the standard of care respondent thought appropriate to insure the safety of others at its track crossings"]; Davis v. Johnson (1954) 128 C.A.2d 466, 472, 275 P.2d 563 ["It is well settled that such rules are admissible in evidence and their violation is a circumstance to be considered in determining negligence"]; Herrera v. Southern Pac. Co. (1957) 155 C.A.2d 781, 788, 318 P.2d 784 [company-imposed maximum speed of 35 miles for train is admission that higher speed is improper in that locality]; *Hartford Acc. & Indem. ## CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

B. Admission of Party.

4. Other Admissions by Conduct.

d. Employer's Precautionary Rules.

2. Safety Rules.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 115

[§ 115] Safety Rules.

In Dillenbeck v. Los Angeles (1968) 69 C.2d 472, 72 C.R. 321, 446 P.2d 129, decedent was killed in an automobile collision with a car driven by Officer W of the Los Angeles Police Department in the course of his employment. The accident took place at an intersection, at 2 p.m., on a rainy day. The officer had both his red lights and siren operating, but decedent had his car windows closed, windshield wipers operating, and radio playing. Plaintiffs' witnesses testified that the officer crossed the intersection with the light red, and that his speed was 40-60 miles per hour in a posted limit of 35 miles. The verdict was for the city. On plaintiffs' appeal, the sole issue was the judge's refusal to admit in evidence "Daily Training Bulletins" issued by the police department. One of them stated that an officer is seldom justified in traveling at a speed greater than the district speed, another that an emergency vehicle proceeding against a traffic control device should decelerate to about 15 miles per hour. There was evidence that Officer W violated both rules. Held, exclusion was reversible error.

The city's contention that the bulletins were only informative and instructive, not rules within the meaning of the employer's safety rule doctrine, was held untenable. A "rule" need not be a detailed unequivocal directive; it may be a discretionary guideline, if it indicates the employer's reconciliation of the conflict between maximum efficiency in operations and maximum safety to the public. (69 C.2d 479.)

The further contention that they should be excluded for the policy reason that the employer might not establish safety rules if it feared they would be used against it was likewise rejected. Unlike subsequent repairs (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §163), safety rules almost certainly serve to minimize the employer's total tort liability by controlling employee behavior. (69 C.2d 481, footnote 5.) The employer may, of course, attempt to rebut by explaining that the rule is not an opinion on due care, but is issued solely from an excess of caution, or that it does not apply in a particular situation. (69 C.2d 480.)

(b) Cross-examination of officer on knowledge of rules. Plaintiffs should have been permitted to prove that Officer W, by reason of extensive training and experience, possessed superior knowledge of risks. Cross-examination showing his knowledge of the rules would have justified an instruction that the jury should measure his conduct according to that of a reasonably prudent man possessing similar knowledge. (69 C.2d 482.) This would be like charging a doctor with the standard of a reasonably prudent person with the same training and knowledge. (69 C.2d 483, footnote 10.) Alternatively, if W had indicated ignorance of the rules, this might be evidence of negligence--unawareness of what an officer should know. (69 C.2d 483.)

(c) Safety rules as substantive evidence of lack of contributory negligence. Whether decedent was contributorily negligent in proceeding across the intersection depended on whether a reasonably prudent person would have heard the siren and remained stationary despite the green light. The bulletins contained statements relative to whether a person in a closed car with the radio playing could have heard the siren. These were implied admissions by the city's experts on the operation and effect of sirens. (69 C.2d 484.) (See Grudt v. Los Angeles (1970) 2 C.3d 575, 588, 86 C.R. 465, 468 P.2d 825 [error to exclude police manual prescribing officers' use of firearms; rules were admissible on negligence issue in wrongful death action]; 2 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §282; 58 A.L.R.3d 148 [safety codes or standards]; 82 A.L.R.3d 1285 [safety rules].)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

B. Admission of Party.

4. Other Admissions by Conduct.

d. Employer's Precautionary Rules.

3. Distinction: Labor Code Regulations.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 116

[§ 116] Distinction: Labor Code Regulations.

The provisions of Division 5 of the Labor Code (Lab.C. 6300 et seq.) and occupational safety and health standards and orders promulgated under the Code were intended to be applicable in proceedings against employers "for the exclusive purpose of maintaining and enforcing employee safety." The issuance of, or failure to issue, a citation may not be considered or admitted into evidence in any personal injury or wrongful death action, except between an employer and its employee. (Lab.C. 6304.5.)

The constitutionality of this section was upheld against due process and equal protection challenges in Spencer v. G. A. MacDonald Const. Co. (1976) 63 C.A.3d 836, 134 C.R. 78. Violation of a safety order is negligence per se; the plaintiff need not prove common law negligence. (63 C.A.3d 854.) But the Legislature, in enacting Lab.C. 6304.5, restricted admissibility of this evidence to actions between an employee and the party most directly concerned with the employee's safety (the employer). In other actions (e.g., here, a subcontractor's employee suing the general contractor), it is proper to require that the plaintiff prove the case in the same manner as any other personal injury plaintiff. (63 C.A.3d 855.)

Under a 1999 amendment of Lab.C. 6304.5, however, Ev.C. 452 (optional judicial notice; see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Judicial Notice, §16 et seq.) and Ev.C. 669 (presumption of failure to exercise due care; see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Burden of Proof and Presumptions, §95) "apply to this division and to occupational safety and health standards adopted under this division in the same manner as any other statute, ordinance, or regulation."

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Following the 1999 amendments of Lab.C. 6304.5, "plaintiffs may use Cal-OSHA provisions to show a duty or standard of care to the same extent as any other regulation or statute, whether the defendant is their employer or a third party. The lone exception arises when the state is the defendant based on actions it took or failed to take in its regulatory capacity; in such cases, Cal-OSHA provisions remain inadmissible to show liability based on breach of the statutory duty to inspect worksites and enforce safety rules." (Elsner v. Uveges (2004) 34 C.4th 915, 935, 936, 22 C.R.3d 530, 102 P.3d 915.) However, the amendments should not be applied retroactively. To do so would change the legal consequences of a defendant's past conduct by making the defendant liable for conduct that might have satisfied the applicable 1998 common law standard of care but not specific Cal-OSHA provisions. Nothing in the text of the amendments or their legislative history indicates that the Legislature intended retroactive application. (34 C.4th 938, 939.)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

B. Admission of Party.

4. Other Admissions by Conduct.

e. Contradictions in Testimony.

[§ 117] Contradictions in Testimony.

In some jurisdictions, the deliberate testimony of a party to a fact may be regarded as the equivalent of a judicial admission to which an opponent may hold the testifying party in the same case. (See 2 McCormick 5th, §258; 9 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §2594a; but see Trembley v. Benedetti (1955) 134 C.A.2d 553, 555, 286 P.2d 426 [even if rule applies in California, no admission results from testimony in prior case that opponent then challenged and now insists is conclusive]; on testimony in prior trial, see 42 Cal. L. Rev. 176.)

This view has been criticized by Wigmore (see 9 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §2594a, p. 844), and several California cases take the contrary position. The opinions recognize that contradictions in testimony may be a result of faulty observation or memory, or confusion and perplexity on the stand. As the court said in Weingetz v. Cheverton (1951) 102 C.A.2d 67, 78, 226 P.2d 742 (quoting Wigmore): "Testimony in court is an elusive matter of mental operations. It is the culmination of much talk and reflection and memory-stirring between all concerned. It is full of surprises at the trial. The truth of the case depends upon a comparison of what all the witnesses say and all the circumstances indicate. A rule which binds a party to a particular statement uttered on the stand becomes an artificial rule. It is out of place in dealing with testimony. Let the judge test each case by itself."

To similar effect is Frost v. Los Angeles Ry. Co. (1913) 165 C. 365, 371, 132 P. 442: "A party who testifies in his own behalf does not do so at the peril of having every slip of his tongue taken as conclusively true, if his inadvertently used words causes him to appear to have made a statement which is not true, but is against his own interest in the case. It is the province of the jury to observe the witness, note his manner of speech, and consider his testimony as a whole in connection with other evidence, and it is for it to determine therefrom whether he stated the facts as he intended and understood them to be, or whether he unintentionally used words not expressing his real meaning in any particular utterances he may have made." (See Richey v. Pedersen (1950) 100 C.A.2d 512, 518, 224 P.2d 100; 2 McCormick 5th, §258.)

In an extreme case, however, false testimony may give rise to an implied admission. In People v. Wayne (1953) 41 C.2d 814, 264 P.2d 547, defendant, charged with soliciting M to offer a bribe to the police, testified to a peculiar, unbelievable explanation of a claimed loan to M. Held, this afforded an inference against him. Disbelief of evidence is of course not the equivalent of affirmative evidence to the contrary; e.g., disbelief of a defendant's testimony of no negligence cannot supply proof that he was negligent. "But where a material fact is established by evidence and it is shown that a defendant's testimony as to that fact was wilfully untrue, this circumstance not only furnishes a ground for disbelieving other testimony of this defendant ... but also tends to show consciousness of guilt or liability on his part and has probative force in connection with other evidence on the issue of such guilt or liability. Such false testimony is in the nature of an admission from which with other evidence guilt or liability may be inferred." (41 C.2d 823.)

The court added this caution: "[O]nly where the false statement or testimony is intentional rather than merely mistaken and where such statement or testimony suggests that defendant has no true exculpatory explanation can it be considered as an admission of guilt. ... Here defendant did not simply deny his guilt; he ventured upon an explanation so unusual that the triers of fact could conclude that it was an intentional fabrication indicating consciousness of guilt and the absence of any true exculpatory explanation." (41 C.2d 823.) (See People v. Amador (1970) 8 C.A.3d 788, 791, 87 C.R. 662 [quoting Wayne].)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

B. Admission of Party.

4. Other Admissions by Conduct.

f. Miscellaneous Examples.

[§ 118] Miscellaneous Examples.

(1) Allowing Bail Forfeiture. Allowing bail to be forfeited, like flight of an accused (supra, §107), indicates a consciousness of guilt. (See People v. Robinson (1948) 87 C.A.2d 772, 775, 197 P.2d 776; 2 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §276.) And, possibly, where a defendant is charged with manslaughter arising from a motor vehicle accident, and forfeits a substantial bail, this conduct would be admissible against the defendant in a subsequent civil action for wrongful death, just as the flight of a hit-and-run driver is admitted. (See suggestion, 41 Cal. L. Rev. 338.) But forfeiture of a small amount posted as bail for a traffic violation affords no adverse inference in a subsequent negligence action. It is common practice to handle traffic offenses in this manner without trial as a convenience to all parties. (See 41 Cal. L. Rev. 337; 1951 A.S. 850.)

(2) Disposing of Property Without Consideration. Disposal of property without consideration, during or immediately prior to litigation, is evidence of the transferor's belief that he or she may be liable. (See 2 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §282; 38 A.L.R.3d 996.)

(3) Flight From Scene of Accident. In Brooks v. E. J. Willig Truck Trans. Co. (1953) 40 C.2d 669, 255 P.2d 802, the rule that flight indicates consciousness of guilt (supra, §107) was applied in a negligence case. Defendant truck driver hit decedent and drove on without stopping. The court approved an instruction that driving away from the scene might be considered a circumstance showing consciousness of responsibility for the accident and death. "We have found no case in this state where an instruction of this type has been given in a civil action, but it has been held in other jurisdictions in negligence cases that failure to stop and render aid is some evidence of a consciousness of responsibility for an accident. ... Such an inference appears to be a reasonable one." (40 C.2d 676.) (See Karl v. C. A. Reed Lumber Co. (1969) 275 C.A.2d 358, 362, 79 C.R. 852 [failure to instruct on duty to stop and render aid was error]; 41 Cal. L. Rev. 338 [listing cases from other jurisdictions].)

(4) Noncooperation With Child Welfare Services Case Plan. A parent's or guardian's failure to cooperate, except for good cause, with the provisions of a child welfare services case plan may be used as evidence, if relevant, in a hearing under Welf.C. 366.21, 366.22, or 388, and at a jurisdictional or dispositional hearing on a petition under Welf.C. 300, 342, or 387. (Ev.C. 1228.1(b).) However, neither the parent's or guardian's signature on the case plan, nor the acceptance of services prescribed in the plan, constitutes an admission of guilt, and neither may be used as evidence against the parent or guardian in a court of law. (Ev.C. 1228.1(a); on child welfare services case plans (reunification plans), see 10 Summary (9th), Parent and Child, §703.)

(5) Offer To Sell Property. An owner's offer to sell, or listing of property at a certain price, may be proved as an admission of its value at or near the time of offer or listing. (See Hull v. Sheehan (1952) 108 C.A.2d 804, 239 P.2d 704.)

(6) Possession of False Identification. Possession of a false driver's license and registration report indicates a scheme to avoid apprehension and supports an inference of consciousness of guilt. (See People v. Ott (1978) 84 C.A.3d 118, 127, 148 C.R. 479.)

(7) Possession or Concealment of Stolen Property. The possession or concealment of recently stolen goods without a satisfactory explanation will support an inference of knowledge that they were stolen. (See People v. McClain (1931) 115 C.A. 512, 515, 1 P.2d 1023 [concealment]; People v. Golembiewski (1938) 25 C.A.2d 115, 117, 76 P.2d 717 [possession]; People v. McFarland (1962) 58 C.2d 748, 754, 26 C.R. 473, 376 P.2d 449; People v. Estrada (1965) 234 C.A.2d 136, 157, 44 C.R. 165; People v. Du Bont (1965) 235 C.A.2d 844, 848, 45 C.R. 717; 1A Wigmore (Tillers Rev.) §152; 9 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §2513.)

(8) Refusal To Take Intoxication Test. Refusal of a defendant charged with drunk driving to take an intoxication test has been held to constitute an implied admission of guilt. (See People v. McGinnis (1953) 123 C.A.2d Supp. 945, 267 P.2d 458; People v. Municipal Court (Gonzales) (1982) 137 C.A.3d 114, 117, 186 C.R. 716; 42 Cal. L. Rev. 697; but see People v. Zavala (1966) 239 C.A.2d 732, 742, 49 C.R. 129 [no admission from refusal to take Nalline test for narcotics; statutory right to refuse]; on statutory authorization for using refusal to take blood-alcohol test against defendant, see Veh.C. 23157(a)(4); on self-incrimination issue, see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §427.)

(9) Refusal To Take Voice Identification Test. Refusal to take a voice identification test is similar to escape from custody, false alibi, flight, suppression of evidence, and failure to respond to accusatory statements when not in police custody as indicating consciousness of guilt. (See People v. Ellis (1966) 65 C.2d 529, 536, 55 C.R. 385, 421 P.2d 393, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §389.)

(10) Signature on Car Rental Invoice. In People v. Maki (1985) 39 C.3d 707, 217 C.R. 676, 704 P.2d 743, defendant's probation was revoked on a finding that he had traveled to Chicago without permission from his probation officer. The principal evidence against him was a car rental invoice showing rental of a car at Chicago's O'Hare Airport, found in a search of defendant's home. The judge concluded that defendant, by signing the invoice, adopted its contents. Held, the signature alone, without testimony regarding preparation of the document or its purpose, was insufficient; there would have been an adoptive admission if he had read the document and then signed it. (39 C.3d 712.) (For the holding affirming the order on the ground that revocation could be based on otherwise inadmissible hearsay when accompanied by reasonable indicia of reliability, see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §32.)

(11) Threatening With Gun. Pointing a gun and uttering threats or warnings of its intended use may constitute an admission by conduct that the gun is loaded. (See People v. Mearse (1949) 93 C.A.2d 834, 837, 209 P.2d 960; People v. Rodriguez (1999) 20 C.4th 1, 12, 82 C.R.2d 413, 971 P.2d 618 [defendant's act of putting gun to victim's chin and warning him to keep his mouth shut or "I could do to you what I did to them" could reasonably be interpreted by jury as admission that gun was loaded].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(4) Noncooperation With Child Welfare Services Case Plan.

Cross-Reference: 10 Summary (10th), Parent and Child, §642 et seq.(7a) (New) Refusal To Remove Sunglasses for Purposes of Identification. A defendant's refusal to remove sunglasses so that a witness may better identify him or her may show consciousness of guilt. (See People v. Ramirez (2006) 39 C.4th 398, 456, 46 C.R.3d 677, 139 P.3d 64.)(12) (New) Attempting Suicide. Evidence that the defendant attempted suicide after committing the alleged crime or being arrested may be admitted to show consciousness of guilt. (See People v. Butler (1970) 12 C.A.3d 189, 193, 90 C.R. 497; 73 A.L.R.5th 615.)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

B. Admission of Party.

5. Vicarious Admissions.

a. Persons Authorized.

1. Theory and Test of Admissibility.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 119

[§ 119] Theory and Test of Admissibility.

The admissions of an agent or employee who is a party to the action are, of course, received in evidence against that party. But the introduction of these statements against the principal or employer raises problems of substantive law as well as evidence. (See Markley v. Beagle (1967) 66 C.2d 951, 957, 59 C.R. 809, 429 P.2d 129, infra, §128; Labis v. Stopper (1970) 11 C.A.3d 1003, 89 C.R. 926; 2 McCormick 5th, §259; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §813 et seq.; 9 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 89 [employee admissions in negligence cases]; 19 Hastings L. J. 1395 [Markley]; Rest.2d, Agency, Appendix, Reporter's Notes to §§284, 285, 286; 1963 A.S. 291; 27 A.L.R.3d 966 [admission of fault by agent on issue of principal's secondary liability].)

The general theory is set forth in Miller v. Anson-Smith Const. Co. (1960) 185 C.A.2d 161, 166, 8 C.R. 131, quoting Wigmore: "So, whatever is said by an agent, either in the making of a contract for his principal, or at the time, and accompanying the performance of any act, within the scope of his authority, having relation to, and connected with, and in the course of the particular contract or transaction in which he is then engaged, is, in legal effect, said by his principal. ... But declarations or admissions by an agent, of his own authority, and not accompanying the making of a contract, or the doing of an act, in behalf of his principal, nor made at the time he is engaged in the transaction to which they refer, are not binding upon his principal, not being part of the 'res gestae,' and are not admissible in evidence, but come within the general rule of law, excluding hearsay evidence; being but an account or statement by an agent of what has passed or been done or omitted to be done--not a part of the transaction, but only statements or admissions respecting it." (See Marshall v. Marshall (1965) 232 C.A.2d 232, 257, 42 C.R. 686, citing the text; 1963 A.S. 291; on scope of agent's authority, see infra, §121; for limited rule applied to statements admitting tort liability, see infra, §122; for rule applied to statements admitting contract liability, see infra, §123; for rule applied to statements admitting other types of liability, see infra, §124.)

Partners and joint adventurers are, for certain purposes, mutual agents, and the rule governing admissions of agents also applies to declarations of a partner within the scope of the partnership. (See Swanson v. Siem (1932) 124 C.A. 519, 525, 12 P.2d 1053; 6 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), p. 438; 2 McCormick 5th, §259; 1 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 25.)

Of course, the declarations, to be admissible, must have been made during the existence of the relationship. (Taylor v. Bernheim (1922) 58 C.A. 404, 409, 209 P. 55 [declarations made after termination of agency not admissible]; Taylor v. Socony Mobil Oil Co. (1966) 242 C.A.2d 832, 834, 51 C.R. 764, citing the text.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Thompson v. Los Angeles (2006) 142 C.A.4th 154, 169, 47 C.R.3d 702 [in civil rights action stemming from injuries inflicted on plaintiff by police dog, trial judge properly excluded report by retired judge on use of force by deputy sheriffs, one chapter of which addressed canine unit of sheriff's department; judge did not occupy high-ranking position in county hierarchy, nor did terms of his retention include authorization to speak on county's behalf]; 2 McCormick 6th, §259. West's Key Number Digest, Evidence k.237 et seq.

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

B. Admission of Party.

5. Vicarious Admissions.

a. Persons Authorized.

2. Independent Proof of Authority.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 120

[§ 120] Independent Proof of Authority.

The agent's declarations cannot prove the fact of agency or authority; the existence of the relationship must be shown independently, e.g., by testimony of the agent or another. (See Dooley v. West Amer. Commercial Ins. Co. (1933) 133 C.A. 58, 62, 23 P.2d 766; People v. Frangadakis (1960) 184 C.A.2d 540, 549, 7 C.R. 776 [circumstantial evidence]; Marshall v. Marshall (1965) 232 C.A.2d 232, 257, 42 C.R. 686; Younger v. State Bar (1974) 12 C.3d 274, 285, 286, 113 C.R. 829, 522 P.2d 5 [circumstantial evidence used to establish that "cappers" were working to solicit professional employment for attorneys]; Rochlis v. Walt Disney Co. (1993) 19 C.A.4th 201, 217, 23 C.R.2d 793 [in defamation action, statement about plaintiff was inadmissible where no foundation was laid showing that declarant was authorized to speak on behalf of defendants]; Cruey v. Gannett Co. (1998) 64 C.A.4th 356, 366, 76 C.R.2d 670 [citing O'Mary v. Mitsubishi Electronics America (1997) 59 C.A.4th 563, 69 C.R.2d 389, infra, §124; whether statement is authorized admission is to be determined under substantive law of agency]; 2 McCormick 5th, §259; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §816; 5 So. Cal. L. Rev. 334; 20 Cal. L. Rev. 656; 21 Cal. L. Rev. 620; 2 Summary (9th), Agency and Employment, §38.)

Ev.C. 1222(b) restates this basic condition: The agent's declaration may be offered "either after admission of evidence sufficient to sustain a finding of such authority or, in the court's discretion as to the order of proof, subject to the admission of such evidence."

In practice, however, this rule is subject to some evasion: (1) The agent's statement may be used to impeach testimony the agent gave to the effect that he or she was not an agent. (Carter v. Carr (1934) 139 C.A. 15, 25, 33 P.2d 852.) (2) The agent's statement may perhaps be offered as affirmative circumstantial evidence, e.g., to show that the other party dealt with him or her as an agent, or to show the agent's own intent to act for the principal. (See Carter v. Carr, supra, 139 C.A. 24; 2 McCormick 5th, §259.) (On whether an agent's spontaneous exclamation can be used to prove agency, see 47 Cal. L. Rev. 939; 10 Hastings L. J. 219.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

- B. Admission of Party.
- 5. Vicarious Admissions.
  - a. Persons Authorized.
  - 3. Scope of Authority.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 121

[§ 121] Scope of Authority.

(1) Rejection of Original Uniform Rule Extension. Some writers have contended that the substantive law authority approach is wrong, and that, from an evidentiary standpoint, the agent's declarations against the employer's interest are more likely to be trustworthy than the agent's testimony on the stand. Accordingly, the Model Code of Evidence and the Uniform Rules of Evidence dispensed with the condition of authority, and made admissible any agent's statement if it "concerned a matter within the scope of an agency or employment," e.g., driving a car. (Model C., Rule 508(a); see 2 McCormick 5th, §259; 2 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 70; 1962 A.S. 348; 1963 A.S. 291.) Ev.C. 1222, however, retained the traditional condition; the hearsay exception is only for a statement "made by a person authorized by the party to make a statement or statements for him concerning the subject matter of the statement." (See Crawford v. Sacramento (1966) 239 C.A.2d 791, 800, 49 C.R. 115.)

(2) Statements Directly Authorized. In the infrequent case in which the particular oral or written statement was made at the express direction or express or implied authorization of the principal, it is in practical effect the declaration of the principal, and is received as the principal's admission. (See Guberman v. Weiner (1935) 10 C.A.2d 401, 404, 51 P.2d 1141 [employee-driver's report to insurance carrier made by direction of employer]; Rest.2d, Agency §286; Model C., Rule 507(a).)

(3) Statements Within Scope of Agent's Authority. In most cases, the particular statement is not made under express direction or authorization of the principal. The test then, as laid down in the Agency Restatement, is the same as that governing substantive liability for the agent's acts: The principal is liable (and the statement is admissible against the principal) if the statement was within the scope of the agency or authority, i.e., if the agent had express or implied authority to make that kind of statement for the principal. (See Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1222; O'Mary v. Mitsubishi Electronics America (1997) 59 C.A.4th 563, 572, 573, 69 C.R.2d 389, infra, §124; 2 McCormick 5th, §259; Rest.2d, Agency §§286, 288; 60 Harv. L. 1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 122

[§ 122] Statement Admitting Tort Liability.

The most numerous cases on vicarious admissions are those in which the statements of an agent or employee admit negligence or other tort liability. The substantive law test distinguishes between authority to do acts and authority to make statements (see supra, §121). The employee-driver of a car, mechanic, manager of a store, etc., is employed and authorized to drive the car, operate the machine, or supervise the store business, etc., and not to negotiate or settle claims, or make statements on tort liability. Hence, the cases usually hold the ordinary agent's admissions not competent evidence against the employer. (See Luman v. Golden Ancient Channel Mining Co. (1903) 140 C. 700, 709, 74 P. 307 [declaration of mine superintendent as to condition of mine machinery]; Shaver v. United Parcel Service (1928) 90 C.A. 764, 770, 266 P. 606; Hollander v. Wilson Estate Co. (1932) 214 C. 582, 586, 7 P.2d 177 [elevator operator, hired only to run elevator, told witnesses that it was in bad repair]; Dillon v. Wallace (1957) 148 C.A.2d 447, 452, 306 P.2d 1044 [store manager admitted fault in neglecting slippery floor]; Souza v. Pratico (1966) 245 C.A.2d 651, 664, 54 C.R. 159, quoting the text [hod carrier for masonry subcontractor made statement to doctor indicating negligence of his employer]; Markley v. Beagle (1967) 66 C.2d 951, 957, 59 C.R. 809, 429 P.2d 129, infra, §128.)

A few cases, seemingly contra, have been explained on the theory that an agent high in the "hierarchy," such as a corporate officer, can make binding declarations. (See Shields v. Oxnard Harbor Dist. (1941) 46 C.A.2d 477, 488, 116 P.2d 121 [general manager]; Johnson v. Bimini Hot Springs (1943) 56 C.A.2d 892, 902, 133 P.2d 650 [declarations of assistant manager and assistant secretary of defendant corporation as to slippery condition of floor].) In Crawford v. Sacramento (1966) 239 C.A.2d 791, 800, 49 C.R. 115, a wrongful death action, a statement by a hospital intern regarding use of an anesthetic on the decedent was held inadmissible because the intern was neither present during the administration of the drug nor high enough in the hospital hierarchy to speak for the hospital.

5. Statement Admitting Contract Liability.

[§ 123] Statement Admitting Contract Liability.

The analysis employed in tort liability cases (supra, §122) is also used where contract liability is involved. Thus, in Handley v. Guasco (1958) 165 C.A.2d 703, 708, 332 P.2d 354, defendant store owners advised plaintiffs that W, a realtor, was in charge of leasing. Plaintiffs delivered written proposals to W, who thereafter told them that both defendants had signed and were using the signed agreements to process a loan. W later destroyed the writings, and his statement was the only evidence of defendant husband's signing. Held, it was admissible. Distinguishing Dillon v. Wallace (1957) 148 C.A.2d 447, 306 P.2d 1044, supra, §122, the court said that, although W had no authority to bind defendants on a contract, he did have authority to conduct the negotiations for a lease; hence, his statement in explanation of his failure to return the signed contracts to plaintiffs was within the scope of his agency.

In Miller v. Anson-Smith Const. Co. (1960) 185 C.A.2d 161, 8 C.R. 131, plaintiff painting subcontractor sued defendant general contractor for work done. At the time the job was 98% complete, plaintiff and defendant became engaged in a dispute over progress payments and character of the performance, and the work was finished by others. But at that time, defendant's general superintendent, who supervised the job and had power to approve or reject the work, wrote a letter of recommendation addressed "To Whom It May Concern," in which he stated that plaintiff had performed this particular work to the entire satisfaction of everyone. Held, the letter was properly received as an admission of an authorized agent of defendant principal. The fact that it was contained in a letter of recommendation was immaterial; "the issue is not whether Wright had the authority to write the letter, but rather whether or not Wright had the authority to make a statement as to the quality of the work performed by the plaintiff." (185 C.A.2d 166.)

In People v. Frangadakis (1960) 184 C.A.2d 540, 7 C.R. 776, an action was brought to abate defendants' restaurant as a public nuisance for selling liquor without a license. Conversations between enforcement agents and the doorman and waitresses, in the course of which liquor was purchased and served, were held properly admitted after the following proof of agency (employment) and authority: In the presence of defendants, the doorman collected admission fees and deposited them in the cash register; the doorman took money for liquor and withdrew money from the cash register; the waitresses took and filled liquor orders at the bar.

In W. T. Grant Co. v. Superior Court (1972) 23 C.A.3d 284, 287, 100 C.R. 179, the statement of a retail store manager on the company practice of selling used television sets as new was properly admitted in a criminal prosecution of the company for grand theft.

In O'Mary v. Mitsubishi Electronics America (1997) 59 C.A.4th 563, 69 C.R.2d 389, an action for age discrimination, the trial judge excluded, as hearsay, a deposition statement by a company manager concerning a managers' meeting he had attended. According to the declarant, the meeting was called by a company vice-president, who told those present that, at another meeting, a senior managing director of the company had discussed getting rid of managers over the age of 40 and replacing them with younger, more aggressive managers, and that the company president had concurred. Held, exclusion of this testimony was error. The first level of hearsay--the manager's deposition--was admissible because the manager was now unavailable, and the third level--the statements by the managing director and company president--was admissible as authorized admissions, since those individuals were clearly authorized to speak for the company. (59 C.A.4th 567.) As to the second level--the vice-president's statement--the vice-president may not have had authority to establish or interpret company policy, but it is within the usual and customary authority of a vice-president to convey that policy to subordinate managers. (59 C.A.4th 572, 573.)

7. Interpreter as Agent.

[§ 125] Interpreter as Agent.

In People v. Torres (1989) 213 C.A.3d 1248, 262 C.R. 323, defendant, 3 days after his arrest, telephoned the police from the county jail to give a statement concerning a homicide in which he was an accessory after the fact. Sergeant Greer, who neither spoke nor understood Spanish, was assigned to interview defendant, and Officer Wagner, who had translated for defendant on the night of his arrest, acted as interpreter. At trial, Officer Wagner testified to his qualifications and the accuracy of his translation of the questions and responses. Sergeant Greer then testified to the content of defendant's statements. Defendant made a hearsay objection to the testimony, on the ground that Greer testified not to defendant's statements but merely to the translations. The judge overruled the objection and defendant was convicted. Held, affirmed.

(a) Defendant relied on early Supreme Court opinions (People v. Lee Fat (1880) 54 C. 527, People v. Ah Yute (1880) 56 C. 119, and People v. John (1902) 137 C. 220, 69 P. 1063), in which the prosecution attempted to admit testimony given by the defendant through an interpreter during a previous court proceeding. In each case the court reporters read their transcriptions, and the Supreme Court held that instead of permitting a witness to testify to what the interpreter said that defendant said, the interpreter or some other witness who understood the statements should have testified. (213 C.A.3d 1257.)

(d) The Lee Fat, Ah Yute and John holdings are unrealistic and unworkable, and call for reexamination by the Supreme Court. "Trial courts must employ numerous court interpreters, whose services in many languages and dialects are essential to the proper administration of our judicial system. On any given day, a court interpreter may be summoned to translate in a number of courtrooms and cases, particularly in law and motion matters and preliminary hearings. The role of the interpreter simply is to accurately convey the substance of the communication between interested parties and the court. The interpreter is not asked and should not be expected to memorialize and remember the content of every communication. That is the role of the official court reporter. It would be impractical and virtually impossible to impose such a duty on court interpreters. In fact, to expect and require interpreters to be able to recall every communication they interpret would place upon them an immense burden which could adversely affect their ability to quickly, accurately and intelligibly communicate the statements they translate." (213 C.A.3d 1260.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

People v. Lee Fat (1880) 54 C. 527, People v. Ah Yute (1880) 56 C. 119, and People v. John (1902) 137 C. 220, 69 P. 1063, text, p. 830, were disapproved in Correa v. Superior Court (2002) 27 C.4th 444, 117 C.R.2d 27, 40 P.3d 739, an assault case in which, at the preliminary hearing, the investigating officers related statements made at the scene by the victim and a witness. The statements were made in Spanish and translated for the officers by lay interpreters. Held, the statements did not constitute multiple hearsay and were properly admitted under Proposition 115 (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §24). The court cited People v. Torres (1989) 213 C.A.3d 1248, 262 C.R. 323, text, p. 830, with approval, but rather than relying on that case's interpreter-as-agent theory, the court applied a more widely applicable "language conduit" theory. "[T]he weight of recent authority in this and other jurisdictions does not treat the participation of a translator in such circumstances as interposing a layer of hearsay. Rather, a generally unbiased and adequately skilled translator simply serves as a 'language conduit,' so that the translated statement is considered to be the statement of the original declarant, and not that of the translator." (27 C.4th 448.) In determining whether, in any particular case, the conduit theory applies, a court should consider such factors as (a) which party supplied the interpreter, (b) whether the interpreter had any motive to mislead or distort, (c) the interpreter's qualifications and language skill, and (d) whether actions taken subsequent to the conversation were consistent with the statements as translated. (27 C.4th 458, adopting the approach of federal case law.) Here, "we observe that the translators were not 'supplied' by the police, but ... just happened to be on the scene. Their neutrality is evident from the record, and there is no contrary suggestion of a motive to mislead or distort. The investigating officers observed the process of translation and did not report any apparent hesitation or difficulty in communicating, or any bias. In addition, evidence produced during the investigation tended to corroborate the substance of the translated statements. Moreover, the translators appeared and testified at the preliminary hearing with respect to the course of the translations, their neutrality, and their language skills, and ample evidence supports the conclusion that they were skilled in English and Spanish and were capable of providing accurate translations." (27 C.4th 466.)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

B. Admission of Party.

5. Vicarious Admissions.

a. Persons Authorized.

8. Distinctions.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 126

[§ 126] Distinctions.

(1) Spontaneous Exclamations. Only statements expressly or impliedly authorized can be received as vicarious admissions. In practice, however, many contemporaneous statements of employee-drivers and other agents are admitted under the extremely liberal California application of the hearsay exception for spontaneous exclamations. (See Lane v. Pacific Greyhound Lines (1945) 26 C.2d 575, 582, 160 P.2d 21; Rest.2d, Agency §289; infra, §183.)

The distinction between inadmissibility under the admissions exception and admissibility under the spontaneous exclamations (or res gestae) exception is neatly illustrated by Dillon v. Wallace (1957) 148 C.A.2d 447, 306 P.2d 1044. The action was for damages for injuries from a fall in a market aisle. (a) Defendant K, general manager of the store, was called by another customer and arrived at the scene shortly after the accident. Plaintiff showed him the vegetable on which she had slipped, he examined her knee, and he said: "Don't you worry about this ... we are insured and we will pay your bills." (b) Later, while plaintiff was waiting to be taken to the hospital, a further conversation occurred in which K said, "Now, this is the store's fault, don't you worry about a thing, we will pay all bills." Held: (a) The first statement was properly admitted against defendant employer as a spontaneous exclamation; it was a "declaration at the scene of the fall and under the impact of Kent's first discovery of the facts." (148 C.A.2d 452.) (b) The second was not, and the question whether it was within the scope of his authority should not have been left to the jury. K, as general manager, had a duty to see that an injured customer received the necessary attention; but the negotiation or settlement of legal claims is not part of the ordinary authority of a store manager, and there was no showing of any special authority in K. (148 C.A.2d 452, 453.) (See 10 Hastings L. J. 219.)

(2) State of Mind and Imputed Notice. The agent's statement may sometimes come in under the hearsay exception for declarations of mental state (infra, §198 et seq.) to show the agent's knowledge or notice, in situations where under the substantive law the agent's knowledge or notice is imputed to the principal. Thus, in Van Horn v. Southern Pac. Co. (1956) 141 C.A.2d 528, 535, 297 P.2d 479, a wooden manhole cover, apparently solid, was actually floating in rainwater. On the issue of defendant employer's knowledge of this dangerous condition of the premises, plaintiff offered the statement of defendant's chief clerk: "Don't tell me that thing has flowed over again." Held, it was error to exclude the statement as not part of the res gestae. (See Hollander v. Wilson Estate Co. (1932) 214 C. 582, 586, 7 P.2d 177; Dressel v. Parr Cement Co. (1947) 80 C.A.2d 536, 540, 181 P.2d 962 [quoting Am.Jur.: "Post rem statements of an agent ... may be introduced in evidence against the principal for the purpose of showing his knowledge of the transaction"]; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §818.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

B. Admission of Party.

5. Vicarious Admissions.

b. Declarant Whose Liability Is in Issue.

1. General Principle.

[§ 127] General Principle.

(1) Prior to Adoption of Evidence Code. Where the plaintiff's right to recover against the defendant depends on proof of the liability of a third person (see 6 Summary (9th), Torts, §997 et seq.), any statement of that third person is admissible against the defendant. This principle was recognized by former state statute and case law and the former Uniform Rules of Evidence, and is set forth in the Model Code of Evidence. (See Piggly Wiggly Yuma Co. v. New York Indem. Co. (1931) 116 C.A. 541, 542, 3 P.2d 15; Nye & Nissen v. Central Surety & Ins. Corp. (1945) 71 C.A.2d 570, 576, 163 P.2d 100; Mahoney v. Founders' Ins. Co. (1961) 190 C.A.2d 430, 435, 12 C.R. 114; Model C., Rule 508; 1 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 26; 65 A.L.R.2d 631 [admissibility, in action on employee fidelity bond or policy, of employee's statements where employee is not available as witness].) (For employer tort liability exception, see infra, §128.)

The significance of the carefully chosen language of the Code is explained in the Law Revision Commission's Comment: It is not limited to cases where the third person's "liability" is involved, but extends to those where that person's breach of duty is in issue, "without regard to whether that breach gives rise to a liability of the party against whom the statements are offered or merely defeats a right being asserted by that party." (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1224.)

In a case involving indemnity, Ev.C. 1224 applies where the indemnitor (e.g., an insurance company) is sued and the evidence would be admissible against its indemnitee (the insured). It does not apply in the reverse situation, where the indemnitee is sued. Thus, an accident report prepared by an insurance company investigator cannot be admitted in support of an injured plaintiff in a negligence action against the insured. (Young v. Aro Corp. (1973) 36 C.A.3d 240, 245, 111 C.R. 535.) (See Atlas Assurance Co. v. McCombs Corp. (1983) 146 C.A.3d 135, 146, 194 C.R. 66 [in insurer's declaratory relief action against insured, and cross-action against insurer by insured, who was being sued over property stolen by insured's employee, trial judge properly considered employee's admissions from criminal prosecution in determining that policy exclusion for criminal acts by employee of insured was applicable].)

(3) Distinctions. Two related statutes must be distinguished:

(a) The statement would also be admissible under Ev.C. 1230 as a declaration against interest provided that it was against the declarant's interest when made (infra, §143). As an admission, it need not have been against interest when made (see supra, §93). (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1224.)

(b) If the liability is fixed in a judgment against the third person, it is also admissible under Ev.C. 1302 (infra, §274).

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

B. Admission of Party.

5. Vicarious Admissions.

b. Declarant Whose Liability Is in Issue.

2. Exception for Employer's Tort Liability.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 128

[§ 128] Exception for Employer's Tort Liability.

(1) Nature and Theory of Exception. When an injured person sues an innocent principal or employer for the tort of an agent or employee under the doctrine of respondeat superior, the plaintiff's right to recover against the employer depends on proof of the employee's liability. Hence, the literal language of Ev.C. 1224 would seem to allow the employee's admissions of fault to come in against the employer, and the Law Revision Commission's study of the predecessor statute (former C.C.P. 1851) suggested that this should be the rule, despite the absence of any direct authority. (See 18 Hastings L. J. 114.) This, however, would contradict the long-established rule to the contrary in agency and employment cases (see supra, §119 et seq.).

In Markley v. Beagle (1967) 66 C.2d 951, 59 C.R. 809, 429 P.2d 129, the question was directly presented, and it was held that neither Ev.C. 1224 on admissions nor Ev.C. 1302 on judgments (infra, §274) applies to respondeat superior situations. Similar language in former C.C.P. 1851 had never been invoked in these situations. And this "was not the result of oversight, but reflected a tacit understanding that section 1851 did not change the settled and apparently universally followed rule that hearsay statements of an agent or employee not otherwise admissible against the principal or employer are not made admissible merely because they may tend to prove negligence of the agent or employee that may be imputed to the principal or employer under the doctrine of respondeat superior." (66 C.2d 959.) "The rule that would allow an agent, after a transaction is closed, to admit away the rights of his principal, would be too dangerous to be tolerated for a moment." (66 C.2d 959, quoting Michigan case.)

What, then, is the scope of the statute? It contemplates situations in which "the obligation or duty" of a third person is "an essential operative fact in establishing the cause of action or defense involved"; e.g., where there is privity of interest in property involved, or the party has assumed responsibility for obligations of the declarant (guarantor, surety, insurer, shareholder). In these situations, involving the same interest and motive and means of obtaining knowledge, admissions are reliable. (66 C.2d 959.) (See criticisms, 19 Hastings L. J. 1395; 8 Santa Clara Lawyer 59; 4 Cal. Western L. Rev. 210; 9 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 111.)

testimony was received in evidence. Held, this was proper. "In Markley, the employee did not purport to give any detail of the manner or method of his performance of the work. He said only that his employer had removed and reinstalled the railing there in issue." This statement, which the court in Markley characterized as vague, was made to a private investigator for plaintiff about a year after the accident happened and after the employee was no longer working for defendant. (11 C.A.3d 1005.) Here, "the statement related a specific and detailed act by the employee. It recited only that act, and not the frequent conclusion that 'It was my fault,' or 'I was wrong.' It was made to a police officer acting in the discharge of his public duty to investigate accidents. It was made some three hours after the accident, on the same day, and when declarant's employment by defendant continued upon the very job here involved ... it would be an unfair extension of the true rule of Markley to broaden its language beyond its holding and apply it to reverse the judgment in the case before us." (11 C.A.3d 1005.) (See 8 Cal. Western L. Rev. 355.)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

B. Admission of Party.

5. Vicarious Admissions.

c. Declarant Whose Right or Title Is in Issue.

1. Nature of Rule.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 129

[§ 129] Nature of Rule.

(1) Traditional Rule. The relationship of "privity" is considered a sufficient basis for the introduction of admissions of a predecessor in title against his successor in interest, or of one joint owner against another jointly interested in the property. (See Wilcox v. Berry (1948) 32 C.2d 189, 192, 195 P.2d 414 [joint owners of automobile]; People v. One 1948 Chevrolet Convertible Coupe (1955) 45 C.2d 613, 619, 290 P.2d 538 [forfeiture (in rem proceeding) of automobile used in illegal transportation of narcotics; declarations of person in control admissible against vehicle and all claimants]; Altwater v. Breckenridge (1959) 174 C.A.2d 790, 797, 345 P.2d 358, citing the text [predecessor in title]; 1 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 27; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §824 et seq.) Although the former statute referred only to real property, California followed the general rule admitting declarations against successors to either real or personal property. (Smith v. Goethe (1911) 159 C. 628, 636, 115 P. 223; see 2 McCormick 5th, §260.)

(2) Codification of Rule. The Model Code of Evidence and original Uniform Rules of Evidence treated these statements not as vicarious admissions, but as declarations against interest. (See Model C., Rule 508, Comment, p. 253.)

Ev.C. 1225 codified the conventional rule: "When a right, title, or interest in any property or claim asserted by a party to a civil action requires a determination that a right, title, or interest exists or existed in the declarant, evidence of a statement made by the declarant during the time the party now claims the declarant was the holder of the right, title, or interest is as admissible against the party as it would be if offered against the declarant in an action involving that right, title, or interest." (See Hewitt v. Meaney (1986) 181 C.A.3d 361, 369, 226 C.R. 349 [in action by property owners claiming easement of necessity over defendants' property, disclaimer of easement by agent of common grantor was admissible and relevant to establish grantor's intent].)

Ev.C. 1225 does not apply where the evidence is offered against a party who is not a successor in interest. (See Gordon v. D & G Escrow Corp. (1975) 48 C.A.3d 616, 625, 122 C.R. 150, citing the text [plaintiff sought to introduce statements of his estranged wife against defendant escrow company, which allegedly violated escrow instructions].)

c. Declarant Whose Right or Title Is in Issue.

2. Time of Statements.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 130

[§ 130] Time of Statements.

(1) Statements Made Before Acquiring Title. The rule admits statements made "during the time" the declarant was assertedly the holder of the title; statements made before the declarant's title accrued are not received. (See Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1225; Darnold v. Voges (1956) 143 C.A.2d 230, 252, 300 P.2d 255.)

(2) Statements Made After Parting With Title. Disparaging declarations made by the grantor after parting with title are not competent as admissions. (Kershaw v. Madsen (1923) 62 C.A. 11, 15, 216 P. 55; Rocha v. Rocha (1925) 197 C. 396, 405, 240 P. 1010; Shaver v. Canfield (1937) 21 C.A.2d 734, 740, 70 P.2d 507.) But subsequent statements of the grantor may be admissible as declarations of intent, on the issue of delivery of the deed. (See infra, §212.) And where a fraudulent conveyance is alleged, acts and declarations of the grantor, such as continued possession and claim of ownership, may be shown by the creditor in proof of the fraud. #### 5. Vicarious Admissions.

d. Declarant in Action for Injury or Death.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 131

[§ 131] Declarant in Action for Injury or Death.

(1) Former Law. The wrongful death act, C.C.P. 377.60 et seq., unlike a survival statute, created a new right of action in the heirs and personal representatives. (See 6 Summary (9th), Torts, §1197.) Accordingly, it was held that a statement by the deceased was not admissible against the plaintiffs suing on this wholly distinct cause of action. (See Marks v. Reissinger (1917) 35 C.A. 44, 54, 169 P. 243.)

This view was criticized in a strong dictum in Carr v. Duncan (1949) 90 C.A.2d 282, 285, 202 P.2d 855: "So long as the defense of contributory negligence is permitted in a wrongful death suit, evidence on that subject which would be competent in a personal injury suit by the deceased in his lifetime, it would seem, should also be competent in an action for his wrongful death." (See 2 McCormick 5th, §260.)

(2) Evidence Code: Wrongful Death. Ev.C. 1227 changed the rule and allowed the decedent's statements to be proved. The Law Revision Commission Comment points out that the old technical distinction between the causes of action resulted in unequal treatment of two decedents killed in the same accident. The plaintiff's executor or administrator was entitled to introduce admissions of the defendant's decedent to establish liability under Ev.C. 1224 (supra, §127), but those of the plaintiff's decedent to establish contributory negligence and defeat liability could not be proved.

(3) Evidence Code: Injury to Child. The action by a parent or guardian under C.C.P. 376, for injury to a child (see 5 Summary (9th), Torts, §634), presents the same conflict between procedural technicalities and substance, and Ev.C. 1226 makes the same rule applicable; i.e., the statement of the injured child is admissible against the plaintiff parent or guardian. (See 1 Jefferson, California Evidence Benchbook 3d, §3.57 et seq.)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

B. Admission of Party.

5. Vicarious Admissions.

e. Coconspirators.

1. General Rule.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 132

[§ 132] General Rule.

Ev.C. 1223 codified the established rule making admissible a statement of the declarant "while participating in a conspiracy to commit a crime or civil wrong and in furtherance of the objective of that conspiracy." (See generally People v. Tinnin (1934) 136 C.A. 301, 306, 28 P.2d 951; People v. Kynette (1940) 15 C.2d 731, 756, 104 P.2d 794; People v. Griffin (1950) 98 C.A.2d 1, 33, 219 P.2d 519; People v. Curtis (1951) 106 C.A.2d 321, 325, 235 P.2d 51; People v. Towery (1985) 174 C.A.3d 1114, 1132, 220 C.R. 475 [statement made to police agent defendant believed to be coconspirator was properly admitted; there is no requirement that statement be made to fellow conspirator]; People v. Von Villas (1992) 11 C.A.4th 175, 231, 15 C.R.2d 112 [calendar with date of victim's disappearance blackened out was properly admitted as coconspirator admission]; 2 McCormick 5th, §259; 1 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 25; 72 Harv. L. Rev. 984; 16 Santa Clara L. Rev. 1; 9 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 63; 16 Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Conspiracy §45; CALJIC (6th ed.), No. 6.24; Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1223 ["Section 1223 is a specific example of a kind of authorized admission that is admissible under Section 1222"].)

F.R. Evid., Rule 801(d)(2)(E) achieves the same result by treating statements by conspirators made during the course of and in furtherance of the conspiracy as "not hearsay." (See 4 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §425.)

It is not necessary that the accusatory pleading formally charge a conspiracy. (People v. Wallace (1970) 13 C.A.3d 608, 617, 91 C.R. 643; People v. Jourdain (1980) 111 C.A.3d 396, 404, 168 C.R. 702.) And the rule of People v. Aranda (1965) 63 C.2d 518, 529, 47 C.R. 353, 407 P.2d 265, and Bruton v. United States (1968) 391 U.S. 123, 88 S.Ct. 1620, 20 L.Ed.2d 476, prohibiting use of a defendant's confession implicating a codefendant (see supra, §59), does not apply to statements coming within the conspiracy exception to the hearsay rule. (People v. Morales (1968) 263 C.A.2d 368, 373, 69 C.R. 402, citing the text; People v. Brawley (1969) 1 C.3d 277, 286, 82 C.R. 161, 461 P.2d 361, citing the text.)

Admission of a coconspirator's statements is subject to three conditions: (1) The conspiracy must be independently proved. (See infra, §133.) (2) The statement must have been made during the conspiracy. (See infra, §134.) (3) The statement must have been made in furtherance of the objective of the conspiracy. (See infra, §135.)

5. Vicarious Admissions.

e. Coconspirators.

2. Independent Proof of Conspiracy.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 133

[§ 133] Independent Proof of Conspiracy.

The conspiracy must be independently proved. (Ev.C. 1223(c); see 46 A.L.R.3d 1148.) Ordinarily, proof of the existence of the conspiracy and the fact of the declarant's participation should precede proof of the statement. But this rule yields to convenience, and the trial judge has power to allow the statements to be introduced, subject to a continuing objection and a later motion to strike if the prosecution does not connect them up. (See People v. Ferlin (1928) 203 C. 587, 599, 265 P. 230; People v. Griffin (1950) 98 C.A.2d 1, 47, 219 P.2d 519; 72 Harv. L. Rev. 987; 1963 A.S. 292; 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §46.)

The proof may be by circumstantial evidence. (See People v. Leach (1975) 15 C.3d 419, 430, footnote 10, 124 C.R. 752, 541 P.2d 296; People v. Lipinski (1976) 65 C.A.3d 566, 575, 135 C.R. 451; People v. Perez (1978) 83 C.A.3d 718, 729, 148 C.R. 90; People v. Towery (1985) 174 C.A.3d 1114, 1131, 220 C.R. 475; People v. Longines (1995) 34 C.A.4th 621, 626, 40 C.R.2d 356 [conspiracy to sell marijuana].) And prima facie evidence is sufficient. (See People v. Earnest (1975) 53 C.A.3d 734, 741, 126 C.R. 107; People v. Jourdain (1980) 111 C.A.3d 396, 404, 405, 168 C.R. 702; People v. Jeffery (1995) 37 C.A.4th 209, 215, 43 C.R.2d 526 [conspiracy to manufacture and sell methamphetamine].)

The existence of the conspiracy cannot be proved by declarations of an alleged coconspirator out of the presence of the others. (People v. Linde (1933) 131 C.A. 12, 19, 20 P.2d 704.) But the acts and declarations constituting the agreement are admissible as "part of a transaction" that is in issue and therefore outside the hearsay rule. (People v. Curtis (1951) 106 C.A.2d 321, 326, 235 P.2d 51, 122; see supra, §35.)

Under F.R. Evid., Rule 801(d)(2), the contents of a coconspirator's statement are not alone sufficient to establish the existence of a conspiracy or participation in it by the declarant and the party against whom the statement is offered. This limitation was added by a 1997 amendment, which resolved a question on which the U.S. Supreme Court had reserved decision in Bourjaily v. United States (1987) 483 U.S. 171, 107 S.Ct. 2775, 2781, 97 L.Ed.2d 144, 156.

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

B. Admission of Party.

5. Vicarious Admissions.

e. Coconspirators.

3. Statement Made During Conspiracy.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 134

[§ 134] Statement Made During Conspiracy.

Under the general rule, the statement must have been made during the conspiracy, not before it commenced or after it terminated. (See People v. Oldham (1896) 111 C. 648, 652, 44 P. 312; Del Campo v. Camarillo (1908) 154 C. 647, 653, 98 P. 1049; People v. McFarland (1971) 17 C.A.3d 807, 822, 95 C.R. 369 [on evening of murder by shooting, coconspirators tried to sell pistol; statements made during attempt to dispose of weapon were admissible]; People v. Saling (1972) 7 C.3d 844, 853, 103 C.R. 698, 500 P.2d 610; People v. Leach (1975) 15 C.3d 419, 436, 124 C.R. 752, 541 P.2d 296; People v. Humphries (1986) 185 C.A.3d 1315, 1333, 230 C.R. 536, citing the text [object of conspiracy was not murder, but collection of life insurance proceeds; hence, conspiracy continued after murder]; 72 Harv. L. Rev. 986; 16 Santa Clara L. Rev. 1; 16 Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Conspiracy §45.)

The statute does not directly address this issue, but does specify that the statement must have been made while the declarant was participating in the conspiracy (Ev.C. 1223(a)), and must have been made before or during the time the party was participating (Ev.C. 1223(b)).

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

"In order for a declaration to be admissible under the coconspirator exception to the hearsay rule, the proponent must proffer sufficient evidence to allow the trier of fact to determine that the conspiracy exists by a preponderance of the evidence. A prima facie showing of a conspiracy for the purposes of admissibility of a coconspirator's statement under Evidence Code section 1223 simply means that a reasonable jury could find it more likely than not that the conspiracy existed at the time the statement was made." (People v. Herrera (2000) 83 C.A.4th 46, 62, 63, 98 C.R.2d 911 [characterizing as misleading dicta in earlier cases indicating that, for admission of coconspirator's statement, existence of conspiracy need not be established even by preponderance of evidence].) West's Key Number Digest, Criminal Law k.423(5) et seq.; Evidence k.253(2)

4. Statement Made To Further Objective.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 135

[§ 135] Statement Made To Further Objective.

The statement must have been made "in furtherance of the objective" of the conspiracy. (Ev.C. 1223(a).) This provision codified a limitation not expressly declared in the prior statute, but recognized by the case law. (See People v. Lorraine (1928) 90 C.A. 317, 327, 329, 265 P. 893; Callan v. Superior Court (1962) 204 C.A.2d 652, 664, 22 C.R. 508, citing the text; People v. Sanders (1995) 11 C.4th 475, 515, 516, 46 C.R.2d 751, 905 P.2d 420 [in prosecution for murder and robbery of restaurant, codefendant's statements, made in advance of charged offenses to restaurant employee and third party, that robbery would occur, were made in furtherance of conspiracy]; People v. Jeffery (1995) 37 C.A.4th 209, 216, 43 C.R.2d 526 [coconspirator's statement to undercover officer that defendant was in jail for spousal abuse was in furtherance of conspiracy to make and sell drugs; trier of fact could reasonably infer that it was attempt to forestall officer's anger that drugs were not immediately available]; see Krulewitch v. United States (1949) 336 U.S. 440, 69 S.Ct. 716, 93 L.Ed. 790 [limitation strictly applied in federal courts]; 72 Harv. L. Rev. 985 [reviewing various approaches of state and federal courts].) The Model Code of Evidence and the original Uniform Rules of Evidence rejected this limitation, and allowed declarations "relevant to the plan or its subject matter." (See 2 McCormick 5th, §259; 2 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 71; 1953 A.S. 773; 1957 A.S. 546.)

In People v. Saling (1972) 7 C.3d 844, 103 C.R. 698, 500 P.2d 610, defendant and M were charged with conspiracy to commit first degree murder and the first degree murder of M's wife, through a scheme that also involved C and J. At defendant's separate trial, C was granted immunity and testified that 3 days after the homicide, but before M had fully paid the money that was promised, C and J had a conversation outside defendant's home in which J described how the killing occurred. Defendant was present during part of this conversation and told C to "keep his mouth shut." Held, admission of the testimony about the conversation was proper.

"Clearly the money offered by Murphy for killing his wife motivated defendant and Jerry Carnes to participate in the plan, and the transfer of the money was one of its main objectives as far as defendant and Carnes were concerned. Since payment to either defendant or Carnes had not yet occurred by the time of the conversation between Carnes and Jurgenson only three days after the murder, Jurgenson's statements to Carnes were admissible as being made during the conspiracy." (7 C.3d 852.) C was necessarily being kept informed of a departure from the original scheme so that he could maintain the integrity of the conspirators' security until they received payment for participating in the crime. (7 C.3d 852, footnote 8.)

The effect of Saling was to extend the life of the conspiracy by several days so that incriminating conversations about payment could be introduced against a defendant. The implication seemed to be that any conspiracy involving a hired killer would be deemed to continue until he had been paid. But in People v. Leach (1975) 15 C.3d 419, 124 C.R. 752, 541 P.2d 296, the court gave a narrower interpretation of the Saling rule.

(a) The Saling opinion neither declared that all conspiracies where one conspirator was hired by another were to be deemed as a matter of law to continue until the hireling was paid to his satisfaction, nor did it contradict the explicit language of Ev.C. 1223 with the three-fold requirement of independent proof of preliminary facts. In Saling, before any substantive consideration was given to the content of the proffered declaration, there was ample independent proof of the continuing nature of the conspiracy to establish preliminarily that the evidence was admissible under Ev.C. 1223. (15 C.3d 432.)

(b) "[A] presumption that conspirators who stand in an unenforceable debtor-creditor relationship are going to be motivated by a continuing common desire to make a full and satisfactory accounting, and are going to act in concert towards this objective in continuation of their conspiracy to commit the crime for which payment was promised, belies common sense and adds but another layer of tarnish to the already dull finish of conspiracy doctrine." (15 C.3d 436.) (See 16 Santa Clara L. Rev. 1; and see also People v. Dominguez (1981) 121 C.A.3d 481, 495, 496, 175 C.R. 445 [discussing Saling and Leach, and following Saling in holding that there was a continuing conspiracy when the statements were made].)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

B. Admission of Party.

6. Excluded Admissions in Criminal Cases.

a. Involuntary Admissions.

1. Inadmissible as Evidence or Impeachment.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 136

[§ 136] Inadmissible as Evidence or Impeachment.

(1) In General. A number of earlier California cases held that an admission, less serious than a complete acknowledgment of guilt, did not come within the rule excluding involuntary confessions (supra, §52). (See People v. Cronevitch (1927) 86 C.A. 646, 650, 261 P. 309; People v. Whitaker (1932) 127 C.A. 370, 373, 15 P.2d 883; People v. Wagner (1944) 62 C.A.2d 597, 600, 145 P.2d 646; People v. Kristy (1952) 111 C.A.2d 695, 704, 715, 245 P.2d 547; 79 Harv. L. Rev. 1030.)

This view was repudiated in People v. Atchley (1959) 53 C.2d 160, 170, 346 P.2d 764. "Involuntary confessions are excluded because they are untrustworthy, because it offends 'the community's sense of fair play and decency' to convict a defendant by evidence extorted from him, and because exclusion serves to discourage the use of physical brutality and other undue pressures in questioning those suspected of crime. ... All these reasons for excluding involuntary confessions apply to involuntary admissions as well. ... Accordingly, any statement by an accused relative to the offense charged is inadmissible against him if made involuntarily." (See 48 Cal. L. Rev. 697; 8 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 193; 79 Harv. L. Rev. 1033; 1959 A.S. 645; 1960 A.S. 579; for same rule on admissions obtained without informing accused of constitutional rights to silence and counsel (Miranda rule), see supra, §76 et seq.; on voluntariness as affected by use of alcohol or drugs, see 25 A.L.R.4th 419; on procedure to determine voluntariness (same as that governing confessions), see Ev.C. 405, supra, §83 et seq.)

The Atchley holding has been followed in a number of later cases. (See People v. Moranda (1960) 181 C.A.2d 600, 604, 5 C.R. 522; People v. Brown (1961) 198 C.A.2d 253, 260, 17 C.R. 884, infra, §137; People v. Quinn (1964) 61 C.2d 551, 554, 39 C.R. 393, 393 P.2d 705; People v. MacPherson (1970) 2 C.3d 109, 115, 84 C.R. 129, 465 P.2d 17, supra, §53; People v. Harrington (1970) 2 C.3d 991, 999, 88 C.R. 161, 471 P.2d 961.)

(2) Use for Impeachment. Use of an involuntary admission as impeachment is equally improper. "The credibility of an accused who takes the stand may be of critical importance to the trier of fact in determining whether or not a defense has been established, and we should not permit an accused's credibility to be attacked by use of an involuntary statement which would be inadmissible as affirmative evidence under the rule of People v. Atchley." (People v. Underwood (1964) 61 C.2d 113, 121, 37 C.R. 313, 389 P.2d 937; see 37 So. Cal. L. Rev. 473.)

(3) Standard of Review. Use of an involuntary admission is subject to the test of Chapman v. California (1967) 386 U.S. 18, 87 S.Ct. 824, 17 L.Ed.2d 705, 6 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Reversible Error, §10 (reversible error unless prosecution shows beyond reasonable doubt that error did not contribute to the verdict). This is the same test now applied when an involuntary confession is admitted in violation of federal constitutional rights (supra, §89). (See People v. Maynarich (1978) 83 C.A.3d 476, 483, 147 C.R. 823; People v. Murtishaw (1981) 29 C.3d 733, 175 C.R. 738, 631 P.2d 446; People v. Hogan (1982) 31 C.3d 815, 844, 183 C.R. 817, 647 P.2d 93; People v. Morris (1987) 192 C.A.3d 380, 391, 392, 237 C.R. 402.)

(3) Standard of Review. See People v. Coffman & Marlow (2004) 34 C.4th 1, 60, 62, 17 C.R.3d 710, 96 P.3d 30 [in capital murder trial, even if trial judge erred in finding that statements by both defendants were voluntary, their admission could not have contributed to verdict and thus reversal was not required; evidence of one defendant's guilt was overwhelming, and other defendant's only defense was that he lacked intent to kill but evidence of intent to kill was overwhelming]. West's Key Number Digest, Criminal Law k.412.1 et seq.

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

B. Admission of Party.

6. Excluded Admissions in Criminal Cases.

a. Involuntary Admissions.

2. Illustrations.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 137

[§ 137] Illustrations.

(1) Physical Abuse. Physical brutality necessarily makes the admission involuntary. (See People v. Underwood (1964) 61 C.2d 113, 120, 37 C.R. 313, 389 P.2d 937 [uncontradicted testimony of police pressure and beatings by members of victim's family].)

(2) Threats of Conviction or Punishment or Promises of Leniency. Involuntariness may also result from threats or promises of leniency, express or implied (see supra, §65). Thus, in People v. Cahill (1994) 22 C.A.4th 296, 28 C.R.2d 1, a prosecution for murder with special circumstances, the trial judge admitted statements defendant made when questioned by an officer soon after his arrest. By representing to defendant that he could avoid a charge of murder in the first degree if the killing was not premeditated, the officer was able to persuade defendant to admit that he was inside the house where the murder occurred and that he had knowledge of the killing. Held, admission of the statements was error, although harmless.

(a) The officer's remarks amounted to a threat or false promise of leniency. He also misrepresented the law of murder by failing to refer to the felony-murder doctrine. This omission made more plausible the officer's implicit promise that murder in the first degree could be avoided if there was a confession showing no premeditation. (22 C.A.4th 314, 315.)

(b) Defendant's youth, his limited education, and the initial resistance he offered to the officer's exhortations provided sufficient grounds for a finding that his statements resulted from the officer's implied promise. (22 C.A.4th 316, 317.)

(c) Nevertheless, the error in admitting the statements failed to prejudice defendant. Uncontroverted evidence indicated that he was in the victim's house the night of the murder. The only alternative explanation for the victim's death--that an unrelated third party, with a blood type compatible with defendant's, entered her house the same night--was "so incredible that no honest, fair-minded jury would entertain it as a ground for reasonable doubt of defendant's guilt." (22 C.A.4th 319.)

Admissions have been found involuntary on this basis in a number of cases. (See People v. Quinn (1964) 61 C.2d 551, 554, 39 C.R. 393, 393 P.2d 705 [probation officer's statement to defendant, after he pleaded guilty and before he withdrew plea, that if he was not telling truth he would not be recommended for probation, constituted improper threat or implied promise of leniency]; People v. Honable (1964) 229 C.A.2d 480, 484, 40 C.R. 414 [admission was improperly induced by officer's promise that if defendant talked he would not be prosecuted for other crimes]; People v. Vasila (1995) 38 C.A.4th 865, 873, 45 C.R.2d 355 [interrogators' promises not to institute federal prosecution and to release defendant on own recognizance if he told them location of illegal firearms, and their threats of the converse if he did not, rendered his statement involuntary].)

Often, however, as where the police merely stress the moral or psychological benefits of telling the truth, their statements are not deemed coercive threats or promises. (See People v. Wallace (1992) 9 C.A.4th 1515, 1521, 12 C.R.2d 230 [even assuming that defendant's wife was acting as police agent when she entered his cell, her urging him to tell truth and quit shielding his friend did not constitute coercion]; People v. Steger (1976) 16 C.3d 539, 550, 128 C.R. 161, 546 P.2d 665 [where no threat or promise was made, suspect's belief that cooperation with police would benefit relative did not make statement inadmissible]; People v. Thompson (1990) 50 C.3d 134, 169, 170, 266 C.R. 309, 785 P.2d 857 [interrogators' pointing out that they had two alternative theories (accidental killing, or intentional killing to prevent identification) and that, absent evidence refuting one theory, both would be asserted, constituted accurate statement of circumstances, not improper threat or promise]; People v. Haskett (1990) 52 C.3d 210, 244, 276 C.R. 80, 801 P.2d 323 [even if considered state action, statements by psychiatrist to murder defendant that if he did not confide in him he would probably get death penalty were not coercive, given that psychiatrist's mission was to acquire mitigating evidence for penalty phase].) Where a threat or promise is made, but it is not the motivating cause of the admission, the admission is not considered involuntary. (People v. Williams (1997) 16 C.4th 635, 661, 66 C.R.2d 573, 941 P.2d 752.)

(3) Psychological Coercion. In People v. Adams (1983) 143 C.A.3d 970, 192 C.R. 290, the sheriff, who knew defendant through her church and was aware that she was suffering from nervousness and difficulty in sleeping, played on her religious anxiety and her fear of being placed in a mental institution. (143 C.A.3d 983, 985, 986, 988.) "To bring appellant's profound fears to the surface of her consciousness, he suggested that appellant would be consumed with guilt because she had sinned and refused to conform to God's law." (143 C.A.3d 988.) Held, the admissions of defendant were involuntary and inadmissible. "Religious beliefs are not matters to be used by governmental authorities to manipulate a suspect to say things he or she otherwise would not say. The right to worship without fear is too precious a freedom for us to tolerate an invasion and manipulation of state officials of the religious beliefs of individuals, including those accused of crime." (143 C.A.3d 988.) (See People v. Esqueda (1993) 17 C.A.4th 1450, 1486, 22 C.R.2d 126 [police used lies, accusations, exhaustion, isolation, and threats to overcome defendant's resistance and obtain statements].)

(4) Misrepresentations. Giving false information to a suspect does not by itself render the suspect's resulting statement involuntary, but it is a factor that weighs against a finding of voluntariness. On the other hand, where the police use a misrepresentation to lure a suspect into custody and then reveal the misrepresentation before the suspect makes the statement, the voluntariness of the statement is not called into question. (People v. Jackson (1996) 13 C.4th 1164, 1206, 1207, 56 C.R.2d 49, 920 P.2d 1254.)

(5) Inducement by Private Person. Improper inducement by a person who is not a law enforcement officer may make a confession or admission inadmissible, where the defendant reasonably believes that the person is speaking for the authorities. Thus, in People v. Brown (1961) 198 C.A.2d 253, 17 C.R. 884, the sheriff's inspector took defendant to H, a polygraph expert, explaining that they worked together. Defendant made damaging admissions, on H's promise that he would not be charged. Held, the statements were inadmissible. "The cajoled confession is no less obnoxious because the person who procured it is one step removed from the police or the prosecutor. It is no defense that the authorities only threw a figurative arm around the cajoler but did not make him an official agent. It is enough if the action of the authorities reasonably led the confessor to believe that the word of the persuader would be heeded and his promise probably fulfilled." (198 C.A.2d 263.)

In People v. Atchley (1959) 53 C.2d 160, 346 P.2d 764, although the exclusionary rule was authoritatively declared (supra, §136), the statements were actually held admissible. While defendant was in jail after his arrest, his insurance broker, a former police officer, came there at the request of the police. In their conversations, defendant admitted arming himself, waiting in concealment, surprising his wife, and firing the fatal shot. These statements were secretly tape-recorded according to plan. Defendant contended that the broker held out as an inducement to his disclosures the payment of the proceeds of a policy on the wife's life to her children. Held, conviction affirmed. It was clear that the broker referred to the insurance to explain why he was asking questions and not as an inducement for any particular answers. Hence, though defendant was deceived, he was not mentally coerced. "The deception itself does not render defendant's statements inadmissible, for it was not of a type reasonably likely to procure an untrue statement." (53 C.2d 171, citing People v. Castello (1924) 194 C. 595, 602, 229 P. 855, and People v. Connelly (1925) 195 C. 584, 597, 234 P. 374, supra, §69.)

(6) Statements to Probation Officer. Admissions made to a probation officer in the hope that they will produce a favorable report are excluded (see People v. Harrington (1970) 2 C.3d 991, 999, 88 C.R. 161, 471 P.2d 961); and admissions made by a minor to a Juvenile Court judge or probation officer are excluded in criminal proceedings to avoid frustration of the protective and rehabilitative objects of the Juvenile Court system (Bryan v. Superior Court (1972) 7 C.3d 575, 586, 102 C.R. 831, 498 P.2d 1079). (See also People v. Quinn, supra.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Threats of Conviction or Punishment or Promises of Leniency. See People v. Holloway (2004) 33 C.4th 96, 115, 14 C.R.3d 212, 91 P.3d 164 [officers' mention of possible death penalty and suggestions that defendant would benefit from giving truthful, mitigated version of crimes did not cross line from proper exhortations to tell truth to impermissible threats of punishment or promises of leniency; distinguishing People v. Cahill (1994) 22 C.A.4th 296, 28 C.R.2d 1, text, p. 843]. (3) Psychological Coercion. Cf. People v. Perdomo (2007) 147 C.A.4th 605, 617, 53 C.R.3d 918 [in prosecution for felony vehicular manslaughter while intoxicated, defendant's admission to police officers that he was driver was properly admitted even though it was made at time he was in hospital and under influence of pain medication; nothing in tape of interview indicated defendant's thinking was impaired, and there was no evidence that officers resorted to physical or psychological pressure].

(4) Misrepresentations. See People v. Smith (2007) 40 C.4th 483, 505, 54 C.R.3d 245, 150 P.3d 1224 [defendant's change in his story about events occurring at time of shooting was not rendered inadmissible even though it followed officers' administration of "Neutron Proton Negligence Intelligence Test," fictitious test that supposedly proved defendant had recently fired gun].

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

B. Admission of Party.

6. Excluded Admissions in Criminal Cases.

b. Ineffective or Withdrawn Plea.

1. Penal Code and Case Law.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 138

[§ 138] Penal Code and Case Law.

(1) Conditional Plea. P.C. 1192.4 authorizes a conditional plea to a lesser offense or degree which, if unaccepted, is deemed withdrawn and cannot be received in evidence. (See 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Pretrial Proceedings, §313.) Thus, although the plea would normally be received as an implied admission, the Legislature sought to encourage settlement of criminal cases by removing this hazard. (See People v. Wilson (1963) 60 C.2d 139, 155, 32 C.R. 44, 383 P.2d 452.)

(2) Rejected Offer. It was formerly held that an offer to plead guilty to a lesser offense could be proved as an implied admission. (People v. Cooper (1947) 81 C.A.2d 110, 117, 183 P.2d 67.) But the underlying policy is the same as that involved in the conditional plea, and People v. Wilson, supra, abrogated the rule: "If it is in the public interest to deny admissibility to a plea of guilty to a lesser degree that was formally entered but is 'deemed withdrawn' because it was 'not accepted by the prosecuting attorney' ... it is equally in the public interest to deny admissibility to evidence of an offer to plead guilty to the same lesser degree that was 'not accepted by the prosecuting attorney.'" (60 C.2d 156.) (See also People v. Hamilton (1963) 60 C.2d 105, 113, 32 C.R. 4, 383 P.2d 412; People v. Tanner (1975) 45 C.A.3d 345, 350, 119 C.R. 407.)

(3) Withdrawn Plea. Earlier California cases also took the position that a guilty plea, even though later withdrawn, could be shown at the criminal trial, or in a subsequent civil case. (See People v. Boyd (1924) 67 C.A. 292, 302, 227 P. 783 [opinion of Supreme Court on denial of hearing]; People v. Snell (1929) 96 C.A. 657, 662, 274 P. 560 [plea of guilty before trial]; People v. Sanderson (1933) 129 C.A. 531, 533, 18 P.2d 982 [offer to waive preliminary examination and plead guilty]; People v. Ivy (1958) 163 C.A.2d 436, 438, 329 P.2d 505 [two counts of sale of narcotics; prior plea of guilty to one count]; People v. Caruso (1959) 174 C.A.2d 624, 642, 345 P.2d 282, citing the text; People v. Clay (1962) 208 C.A.2d 773, 777, 25 C.R. 464; 86 A.L.R.2d 326.)

This rule was repudiated in People v. Quinn (1964) 61 C.2d 551, 554, 39 C.R. 393, 393 P.2d 705. The court took note of several reasons for the majority rule of exclusion, and particularly stressed the point that to allow proof of the plea practically nullified the privilege of withdrawal for good cause. (61 C.2d 555.) (See 79 Harv. L. Rev. 1044.)

(4) Plea of Nolo Contendere. This plea, which does not concede guilt, does not support an inference of guilt. Accordingly, P.C. 1016(3), authorizing the plea, provides that it "may not be used against the defendant as an admission in any civil suit based upon or growing out of the act upon which the criminal prosecution is based." (See 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Pretrial Proceedings, §260; Caminetti v. Imperial Mut. Life Ins. Co. (1943) 59 C.A.2d 476, 490, 139 P.2d

However, the prohibition against using the plea in a civil action applies in cases "other than those punishable as felonies." (P.C. 1016(3).) (See Interinsurance Exchange of the Auto. Club of Southern Calif. v. Flores (1996) 45 C.A.4th 661, 672, 53 C.R.2d 18 [insured's plea of nolo contendere to felony charge of aiding and abetting assault with deadly weapon was admissible in insurer's declaratory relief action as admission that he acted with intent to harm another, thus entitling insurer to deny coverage under Ins.C. 533 (1 Summary (9th), Contracts, §632)].)

The rule's application is limited to situations in which the defendant's statements are offered, in the prosecution's case-in-chief or otherwise, as substantive evidence of guilt. It "does not prevent the prosecution from using evidence of those statements for the limited purpose of impeaching the defendant regarding testimony which was elicited either during the direct examination of the defendant or during cross-examination which is plainly within the scope of the defendant's direct examination." (People v. Crow (1994) 28 C.A.4th 440, 452, 33 C.R.2d 624.)

(6) Statement Obtained Under Breached Agreement. There is "a slight precedential tilt" toward the holding that, at least in the absence of an explicit contrary term in the plea bargain agreement, statements obtained as a result of cooperation under the agreement are involuntary and therefore inadmissible to prove guilt of the crimes for which the defendant was originally indicted. However, significant differences exist between using the defendant's statements as evidence of guilt and using them to prove breach of the agreement. In the latter context, "the government is seeking relief from a contractual agreement that the defendant has allegedly breached in order to return to the status quo ante and try the defendant. To rule such evidence inadmissible would not advance the goals and purposes of pleas bargaining." (People v. Collins (1996) 45 C.A.4th 849, 868, 869, 53 C.R.2d 367, 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Pretrial Proceedings, §340 [even accepting premise that plea bargain agreement rendered defendant's statements involuntary, they were admissible in hearing to vacate his sentence and plea on basis of material breach of agreement].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(4) Plea of Nolo Contendere. See People v. Yartz (2005) 37 C.4th 529, 538, 36 C.R.3d 328, 123 P.3d 604 [in sexually violent predator proceeding, defendant's plea of no contest to prior sexually violent offense was not made inadmissible by P.C. 1016(3); sexually violent predator proceeding is not civil suit but rather "special proceeding of a civil nature"]; Rusheen v. Drews (2002) 99 C.A.4th 279, 285, 120 C.R.2d 769 [in action for fraud, conversion, and negligent misrepresentation arising from defendant's having taken plaintiff's car out of state, trial judge erred in excluding defendant's no contest plea to felony grand theft charge arising from same incident, even though charge was ultimately reduced to misdemeanor].

Cross-Reference: The discussion of Ins.C. 533, formerly located in Contracts, has been transferred to 2 Summary (10th), Insurance, §100.

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

B. Admission of Party.

6. Excluded Admissions in Criminal Cases.

b. Ineffective or Withdrawn Plea.

2. Evidence Code and Federal Rules.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 139

[§ 139] Evidence Code and Federal Rules.

(1) Evidence Code. Ev.C. 1153 codifies the statutory and case law rules (supra, §138) as follows: "Evidence of a plea of guilty, later withdrawn, or of an offer to plead guilty to the crime charged or to any other crime, made by the defendant in a criminal action is inadmissible in any action or in any proceeding of any nature, including proceedings before agencies, commissions, boards, and tribunals."

(2) Federal Rules of Evidence. F.R. Evid., Rule 410 is entitled "Inadmissibility of Pleas, Plea Discussions, and Related Statements." It provides that, in any civil or criminal proceeding, the following are not admissible against the defendant:

(1) a plea of guilty by the defendant that is later withdrawn.

(2) a plea of nolo contendere by the defendant.

(3) a statement made by the defendant in the course of proceedings under F.R. Crim. Proc., Rule 11, or comparable state procedure relating to either of the foregoing pleas.

(4) a statement made by the defendant in the course of plea discussions with an attorney for the prosecution, where the discussions do not result either in a guilty plea or a guilty plea that is later withdrawn.

"However, such a statement is admissible (i) in any proceeding wherein another statement made in the course of the same plea or plea discussions has been introduced and the statement ought in fairness be considered contemporaneously with it, or (ii) in a criminal proceeding for perjury or false statement if the statement was made by the defendant under oath, on the record and in the presence of counsel." (F.R. Evid., Rule 410.) (See United States v. Mezzanatto (1995) 513 U.S. 196, 115 S.Ct. 797, 806, 130 L.Ed.2d 697, 710 [agreement by criminal defendant to waive exclusionary provisions of federal plea-statement rules, including Rule 410, is valid and enforceable, lacking affirmative indication that agreement was entered into unknowingly or involuntarily]; 2 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §142 et seq.; 109 Harv. L. Rev. 249 [Mezzanatto]; 29 Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §517 et seq.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Evidence Code. See People v. Leonard (2007) 40 C.4th 1370, 1404, 58 C.R.3d 368, 157 P.3d 973 [defendant's outburst in court ("I am guilty") during murder trial did not constitute offer to plead guilty within meaning of Ev.C. 1153, and thus motion to exclude statement was properly denied]; People v. Brock (2006) 141 C.A.4th 1320, 1324, 46 C.R.3d 896 [in prosecution for escape without force or violence, defendant's statement, made during plea negotiations that did not lead to plea agreement, that he "went out there and smoked crack" and "didn't come back" was inadmissible under Ev.C. 1153; however, because defendant's trial testimony clearly established that he left residential work furlough program, error in admitting statement was harmless].

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

B. Admission of Party.

6. Excluded Admissions in Criminal Cases.

c. Silence or Equivocal Reply to Charge of Crime.

1. Former Law.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 140

[§ 140] Former Law.

Prior to the decisions in Miranda v. Arizona (1966) 384 U.S. 436, 86 S.Ct. 1602, 16 L.Ed.2d 694, supra, §76, and Griffin v. California (1965) 380 U.S. 609, 85 S.Ct. 1229, 14 L.Ed.2d 106, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §433, a large body of law developed on implied admissions resulting from accusatory statements made to defendants. The principles are briefly summarized in this section.

(1) Theory of Admissibility. If a person is accused (e.g., by police, a victim, or an accomplice) of having committed a crime under circumstances fairly affording an opportunity to reply, and the person fails to speak or makes an evasive or equivocal reply, both the accusatory statement and the fact of silence or equivocation may be offered as an implied admission of guilt. The accusatory statement is itself incompetent hearsay, and is not received as proof of its truth. But the conduct of the accused is properly proved on the theory that silence is an admission of the truth or the theory that failure to deny is unnatural and an indication of a guilty conscience. (See People v. Yeager (1924) 194 C. 452, 486, 229 P. 40; People v. Davis (1954) 43 C.2d 661, 670, 276 P.2d 801; People v. Moore (1963) 211 C.A.2d 585, 596, 27 C.R. 526; Model C., Rule 507(b).)

(2) Nature of Accusatory Statement. The statement may be a direct charge of commission of the crime. (See People v. Willmurth (1947) 77 C.A.2d 605, 614, 176 P.2d 102 [charge by accomplice].) But it need not be. (See People v. Moore, supra, 211 C.A.2d 597 [inspector told defendant that police had two others in custody and that one had confessed and implicated the three].)

(3) Conduct of Accused: Denial of Charge. If the person accused immediately denies the accusation, evidence of the charge and denial cannot be introduced. The charge alone is hearsay, and when it is denied there is no admission by conduct. (People v. Goltra (1931) 115 C.A. 539, 550, 2 P.2d 35; People v. Staker (1957) 154 C.A.2d 773, 783, 316 P.2d 725.)

(4) Conduct of Accused: Justifiable Silence or Refusal To Answer. If it appears that the accused was attempting to rely on the constitutional privilege against self-incrimination (now described as the "absolute right to remain silent"), or was following the advice of counsel in refusing to answer the charge, the statement cannot be introduced. (See People v. Simmons (1946) 28 C.2d 699, 715, 172 P.2d 18; Martinez v. Superior Court (1964) 224 C.A.2d 755, 757, 37 C.R. 115 ["A person accused of crime has no duty to discuss the case with his accusers"].) And the same is true if the defendant's physical or mental condition justifies silence. (See People v. Bracamonte (1961) 197 C.A.2d 385, 390, 17 C.R. 62)

[defendant drugged].)

(5) Conduct of Accused: Justifiable Reply. If the accused replies to the charge, and the reply is neither equivocal nor evasive, it does not indicate either acquiescence in the truth of the statement or a consciousness of guilt. In this situation, neither the statement nor the reply is admissible. (See People v. Wochnick (1950) 98 C.A.2d 124, 129, 219 P.2d 70 [told by officer that lie detector machine had "violent reaction" to his responses, defendant replied that "he could not explain it"]; People v. Robinson (1964) 61 C.2d 373, 402, 38 C.R. 890, 392 P.2d 970.)

(6) Conduct of Accused: Equivocal or Evasive Reply. If the accused chooses to reply, and the reply is equivocal or evasive, it may be received as an admission. (See People v. Davis, supra; People v. Moore, supra, 211 C.A.2d 598; People v. Whitehorn (1963) 60 C.2d 256, 262, 32 C.R. 199, 383 P.2d 783.)

(7) Foundation for Proof. A foundation requirement, similar to that required for introduction of a confession, was laid down in People v. Simmons, supra, 28 C.2d 718: The trial judge must decide in the first instance whether the circumstances were such that the accusatory statement might give rise to an admission, and the jury must then decide whether the defendant's reply or silence indicated a consciousness of guilt. (See People v. Moore, supra, 211 C.A.2d 597.)

(8) Failure To Object to Introduction. A number of cases apply the general principle that failure to object to the introduction of the statement is a waiver of any error in admitting it. (See People v. Stepp (1947) 82 C.A.2d 49, 51, 185 P.2d 417; People v. Millum (1954) 42 C.2d 524, 528, 267 P.2d 1039; People v. Vacca (1960) 185 C.A.2d 125, 129, 8 C.R. 64; People v. Gaines (1961) 192 C.A.2d 128, 132, 13 C.R. 359.)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

B. Admission of Party.

6. Excluded Admissions in Criminal Cases.

c. Silence or Equivocal Reply to Charge of Crime.

2. Effect of Miranda and Griffin Rules.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 141

[§ 141] Effect of Miranda and Griffin Rules.

Miranda v. Arizona (1966) 384 U.S. 436, 86 S.Ct. 1602, 16 L.Ed.2d 694, supra, §76, makes inadmissible an incriminating statement at the accusatory stage where the accused has not been informed of the rights of counsel and silence, and Griffin v. California (1965) 380 U.S. 609, 85 S.Ct. 1229, 14 L.Ed.2d 106, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §433, prohibits comment on or inference from claim of the privilege against self-incrimination. The holdings of these cases drastically curtail the doctrine of implied admissions from conduct of an accused.

(1) When Conduct Cannot Be Proved.

(a) If the accusatory stage has been reached, no warning has been given, and the accusation is by police or police agents, silence or an equivocal answer will be excluded under the Miranda rule. (See 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §89 et seq.) Silence after a warning is similarly excluded. (People v. Andrews (1970) 14 C.A.3d 40, 47, 92 C.R. 49; People v. Gaines (1980) 103 C.A.3d 89, 92, 94, 96, 162 C.R. 827 [holding error harmless beyond a reasonable doubt, under standard of Chapman v. California (1967) 386 U.S. 18, 87 S.Ct. 824, 17 L.Ed.2d 705, 6 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Reversible Error, §10].)

(b) Regardless of the stage, silence or an express refusal to answer on advice of attorney or on claim of the privilege is inadmissible under the Griffin rule. Thus, in People v. Cockrell (1965) 63 C.2d 659, 47 C.R. 788, 408 P.2d 116, codefendant P, at the police station, said in defendant's presence that she had bought marijuana from him. The officer asked defendant what he had to say about "that," and defendant did not reply. Held, "[t]he rationale of Griffin implicitly proscribes drawing an inference adverse to the defendant from his failure to reply to an accusatory statement if the defendant was asserting his constitutional privilege against self-incrimination." (63 C.2d 669.) And it is not necessary to make an express claim of the privilege; silence alone makes the accusation inadmissible. (63 C.2d 670.) (See People v. Ridley (1965) 63 C.2d 671, 676, 47 C.R. 796, 408 P.2d 124; People v. Stewart (1965) 236 C.A.2d 27, 31, 45 C.R. 712; People v. Maldonado (1966) 240 C.A.2d 812, 816, 50 C.R. 45; 79 Harv. L. Rev. 1042.)

(2) When Conduct Can Be Proved. Whether any remnants of the old admission doctrine still survive is largely guesswork, but the following possibilities must be considered:

(a) Before the accusatory stage has been reached, an equivocal or evasive explanation may be proved. The Miranda rule is not yet operative, and the accused, by answering, has waived the Griffin rule. (See 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d),

Criminal Trial, §575.)

(b) After the accusatory stage has been reached, if the warning is given, an equivocal or evasive explanation may be proved. The Miranda rule is satisfied, and the Griffin rule is waived. (See People v. Hurd (1998) 62 C.A.4th 1084, 1091, 73 C.R.2d 203, 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §323 [after defendant waived Miranda rights and talked freely about circumstances of his wife's shooting, his refusal to demonstrate shooting and take polygraph examination were insufficient to invoke general right to silence and could be used against him]; 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §135.)

(3) Accusation by Private Person. If the accusation is by a private person, not a police agent, the Miranda rule is inapplicable, and an equivocal reply or silence may be shown. (See People v. Preston (1973) 9 C.3d 308, 313, 107 C.R. 300, 508 P.2d 300, citing the text; People v. Silva (1988) 45 C.3d 604, 624, 247 C.R. 573, 754 P.2d 1070 [following Preston]; People v. Rodrigues (1994) 8 C.4th 1060, 1137, 1138, 36 C.R.2d 235, 885 P.2d 1 [adoptive admission instruction was proper; defendant was party to discussions planning crime and did not refuse to participate or disassociate himself from plans]; People v. Mayfield (1997) 14 C.4th 668, 741, 60 C.R.2d 1, 928 P.2d 485 [hostage's telephone statement to third party that defendant had shot him and was even now threatening him was admissible as adoptive admission, where defendant was able to hear both sides of conversation and would have been able to reply to any untrue or unfair accusations against him]; 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §119.)

In People v. Medina (1990) 51 C.3d 870, 274 C.R. 849, 799 P.2d 1282, the court followed People v. Silva, supra, in holding that, even assuming that defendant had been given his Miranda warning, his silence when asked by his sister why he had killed the three victims was admissible as an adoptive admission. However, the court cautioned that it was not addressing the situation where a defendant is confronted with an accusatory statement by a private person under circumstances justifying a presumption that the conversation is being monitored by the police. (51 C.3d 891.)

(4) Instruction Required. The United States Supreme Court has held that the "no-inference" instruction, when requested by the defendant, must be given. "No judge can prevent jurors from speculating about why a defendant stands mute in the face of a criminal accusation, but a judge can, and must, if requested to do so, use the unique power of the jury instruction to reduce that speculation to a minimum." (Carter v. Kentucky (1981) 450 U.S. 288, 101 S.Ct. 1112, 1120, 67 L.Ed.2d 241, 252.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See 35 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 101 [use at trial of defendant's pretrial silence].

(1) When Conduct Cannot Be Proved.

(b) Silence or express refusal to answer: See People v. Lucero (2000) 23 C.4th 692, 713, 714, 97 C.R.2d 871, 3 P.3d 248 [in penalty phase of murder prosecution, trial judge did not err in denying mistrial motion after sheriff's lieutenant, during cross-examination, mentioned that defendant had invoked his Miranda rights during questioning; there was no danger of impermissible inference of guilt, as guilt had already been established].

In People v. Jennings (2003) 112 C.A.4th 459, 5 C.R.3d 243, a prosecution for murder, a videotape of a police interview with defendant and his codefendant was played for the jury. The interview had been conducted after both defendants were advised of their rights under Miranda v. Arizona (1966) 384 U.S. 436, 86 S.Ct. 1602, 16 L.Ed.2d 694, text, p. 851. During the interview, defendant remained silent in the face of several statements by the codefendant implicating defendant in the crime. Held, the statements were not admissible as adoptive admissions. Although unequivocal, express adoptive admissions resulting from joint custodial interrogations have been found admissible, equivocal conduct, such as defendant's silence here, remains constitutionally protected. (112 C.A.4th 472.) Further, the fact that defendant waived her Miranda rights at the beginning of the interview did not mean that her silence as to some of her codefendant's accusations could be used against her. A rule to that effect would mark a drastic departure from Miranda, in which the high court indicated that its aim was to assure that the individual's right to choose between silence and speech remains unfettered throughout the interrogation process. (112 C.A.4th 473.)(2) When Conduct Can Be Proved.

(a) Before accusatory stage has been reached: See 33 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 449 [use of prearrest silence in prosecution's case-in-chief].

(3) Accusation by Private Person. See People v. Riel (2000) 22 C.4th 1153, 1189, 96 C.R.2d 1, 998 P.2d 969, 3 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Punishment, §373 [statements of defendant's two accomplices to two different women about what "they" did were admissible as adoptive admissions against defendant; circumstances warranted inference that "they" referred to all three]; People v. Carter (2003) 30 C.4th 1166, 1196, 135 C.R.2d 553, 70 P.3d 981 [even if defendant was present during conversation between defendant's coparticipant and third party in which coparticipant described robbery and shooting that formed basis for charged offenses, admission of conversation, as adoptive admission, by way of written statement by third party was error, although harmless, because statement did not directly accuse defendant of anything, and thus there was nothing to deny]; People v. Roldan (2005) 35 C.4th 646, 710, 27 C.R.3d 360, 110 P.3d 289 [in capital murder case, testimony of two witnesses who heard discussion between defendant and two accomplices following murder was properly admitted against defendant under adoptive admissions exception; discussion included incriminating comments, and defendant presented no evidence suggesting that he did not hear comments or that he failed to speak because he was relying on his constitutional rights]; People v. Davis (2005) 36 C.4th 510, 539, 31 C.R.3d 96, 115 P.3d 417 [adoptive admission instruction was not defective for failing to inform jurors that admission must be in response to direct accusation; "it is enough that the evidence showed that the defendant participated in a private conversation in which the crime was discussed and the circumstances offered him the opportunity to deny responsibility or otherwise dissociate himself from the crime, but that he did not do so"]; People v. Geier (2007) 41 C.4th 555, 589, 61 C.R.3d 580, 161 P.3d 104 [in murder prosecution, evidence supported giving adoptive admission instruction, where, during telephone conversation following defendant's arrest, his former girlfriend asked him if he killed victim for insurance money and he remained silent]; CALCRIM, No. 357 [Adoptive Admissions]. West's Key Number Digest, Criminal Law k.412.2 et seq.

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

B. Admission of Party.

6. Excluded Admissions in Criminal Cases.

d. Admissions of Codefendant.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 142

[§ 142] Admissions of Codefendant.

The rule of People v. Aranda (1965) 63 C.2d 518, 529, 47 C.R. 353, 407 P.2d 265, and Bruton v. United States (1968) 391 U.S. 123, 88 S.Ct. 1620, 20 L.Ed.2d 476, supra, §59, was applied to admissions in People v. Anderson (1987) 43 C.3d 1104, 240 C.R. 585, 742 P.2d 1306. Defendant and his codefendant were prosecuted for murder, kidnaping, and robbery. The codefendant did not testify, but presented a diminished capacity defense through three experts who had interviewed her. During cross-examination, the experts recounted statements made by the codefendant that incriminated herself and defendant. Held, admission of these statements was error (though harmless).

(a) The codefendant's statements were the type the Aranda-Bruton rule was designed to bar. The statements were potentially prejudicial, amounting to an accusation by one who claimed to have witnessed defendant's criminal acts and to have participated in them. The statements were also unreliable, for those the codefendant made to the police implicating a man other than the defendant were in conflict with the statements she made to the experts. Further, all of the statements attempted to shift blame from the codefendant to another. (43 C.3d 1122.)

(b) The Aranda-Bruton rule applies not only to formal confessions, but also to any statement that incriminates the defendant as well as the declarant codefendant. "[W]hat is material for Bruton-Aranda analysis is not how the statement under review should be classified in the abstract--as a confession, an admission, or even an exculpatory declaration--but rather whether on the facts of the individual case it operates to inculcate the other defendant." (43 C.3d 1123.)

(c) The Aranda-Bruton rule applies whether the codefendant's statements were admitted for their truth to implicate her in the crimes, or solely to impeach the experts' opinion of her mental state. Neither the unreliability of the codefendant's incriminating statements nor their impact are affected by the purpose for which they are introduced. Whatever the purpose, the statements are "manifestly the kind of evidence that jurors cannot put out of their minds." (43 C.3d 1124.)

One justice concurred in the judgment, but argued that because the codefendant's statements implicating defendant were elicited on cross-examination of the codefendant's psychiatrists for the limited purpose of impeaching their opinions, and because the jury was so advised, defendant was not denied his right of confrontation. (43 C.3d 1151.) A second justice concurred in the judgment, but dissented from the conclusion that Aranda-Bruton error occurred. (43 C.3d 1167.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See People v. Smith (2005) 135 C.A.4th 914, 923, 38 C.R.3d 1 [in murder trial, admission of one defendant's out-of-court statements, made to his girlfriend, did not violate Aranda-Bruton rule, even though statements implicated other defendant as perpetrator of murder, as statements were directly admissible against other defendant under spontaneous statement exception].

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

C. Declarations Against Interest.

1. Modern Expanded Rule.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 143

[§ 143] Modern Expanded Rule.

(1) In General. A declaration of a nonparty against his or her own interest is admitted on the theory that one will not speak falsely or mistakenly where this would be prejudicial to oneself. (See Wallace v. Oswald (1922) 57 C.A. 333, 337, 207 P. 51 [quoting Jones: "It is a fair presumption that men will neither falsify accounts nor commit mistakes, when such falsehoods or mistakes would be prejudicial to their own pecuniary interests"]; Model C., Rule 509, Comment; 2 McCormick 5th, §316; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1455; 1 Jefferson, California Evidence Benchbook 3d, Chap. 6; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §785; 2 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 73; 58 Harv. L. Rev. 1; 9 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 119 [declarations in California and federal courts].)

The traditional rule, as set forth in former overlapping state statutes, was of narrow scope. Admissible declarations were those of a decedent, against his or her pecuniary or proprietary interest. (See Wallace v. Oswald, supra, 57 C.A. 336; Newby v. Gibson (1935) 6 C.A.2d 359, 360, 44 P.2d 468; Wright v. Best (1942) 19 C.2d 368, 379, 121 P.2d 702; People v. Weatherford (1945) 27 C.2d 401, 421, 164 P.2d 753; 13 Cal. L. Rev. 395.) This limited exception was the subject of much criticism, and occasional departures were made. (See People v. Spriggs (1964) 60 C.2d 868, 872, 36 C.R. 841, 389 P.2d 377, infra, §149; 2 McCormick 5th, §317 et seq.; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§1476, 1477; Model C., Rule 509 and Comment.)

(2) Evidence Code. Ev.C. 1230 enacted the expanded form of the exception: A statement "by a declarant having sufficient knowledge of the subject" is admissible "if the declarant is unavailable as a witness," and the statement, when made, "was so far contrary to the declarant's pecuniary or proprietary interest, or so far subjected him to the risk of civil or criminal liability, or so far tended to render invalid a claim by him against another, or created such a risk of making him an object of hatred, ridicule, or social disgrace in the community, that a reasonable man in his position would not have made the statement unless he believed it to be true."

(3) Federal Rule. F.R. Evid., Rule 804(b)(3), also applicable where the declarant is unavailable as a witness, similarly defines an admissible declaration: "A statement which was at the time of its making so far contrary to the declarant's pecuniary or proprietary interest, or so far tended to subject the declarant to civil or criminal liability, or to render invalid a claim by the declarant against another, that a reasonable person in the declarant's position would not have made the statement unless believing it to be true." (See C.E.B., Effective Introduction of Evidence 2d, Chap. 20 [Declarations Against Interest]; 4 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §496; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §785 et seq.)

(4) Overlap With Other Exceptions. The exceptions for declarations against interest and admissions sometimes overlap where the declarant is a predecessor in interest or in some other relationship with the party against whom the statement is offered. (See supra, §119 et seq.; 2 McCormick 5th, §316; Model C., Rule 509, p. 256; 58 Harv. L. Rev. 63; Wright v. Best, supra; Wallace v. Oswald, supra.) And sometimes the same statement may be both a declaration against interest and a spontaneous exclamation (infra, §175).

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

C. Declarations Against Interest.

2. Conditions of Admissibility.

a. Against Interest.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 144

[§ 144] Against Interest.

The basic condition of admissibility is that the statement must be against the declarant's interest. (Ev.C. 1230, supra, §143.) This calls for exclusion of two types of declarations:

(1) Neutral Declarations. In Wicktor v. Los Angeles (1956) 141 C.A.2d 592, 297 P.2d 115, decedent husband left a writing designating his sister, Mrs. S, as beneficiary of his county retirement benefits. Plaintiff, his widow, claimed the pension. She testified that decedent, after marrying her, declared his intention to change the designation to herself, subsequently told her he had made the change, and made calculations of the amount of monthly payments she would get. Held, the evidence was improperly received. (a) If offered to show decedent's belief that he had changed his beneficiary, it was immaterial, for the issue was whether a legally effective change had been made. (b) If offered to prove that decedent had changed the beneficiary, it was hearsay. And, since he could freely change beneficiaries at any time, the statement that he had named plaintiff his beneficiary was in no way against his interest. (141 C.A.2d 597.) (Cf. 68 Harv. L. Rev. 1077 [testator's direction in will].)

In People v. Huggins (1986) 182 C.A.3d 828, 227 C.R. 547, defendant was charged with breaking into a home and stealing money from a letter he found there. In an attempt to exculpate himself by showing third-person culpability (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §21), defendant sought to introduce a hearsay statement of N, a neighbor of the victim, to the effect that, while watering the victim's yard, she had discovered the rear door broken, entered the house, picked up mail from the hallway floor and placed it on a counter, and then attempted to locate the victim. Held, the evidence was properly excluded. The statement contained no admission of criminal conduct, and furnished an explanation for the neighbor's presence on the premises totally inconsistent with criminal intent. A reasonable person in the neighbor's position would not consider that such a statement exposed her to risk of criminal liability. (182 C.A.3d 831, 832.)

(2) Self-serving Declarations. Obviously, a statement in the declarant's own interest is inadmissible hearsay. (See supra, §10.) But a declaration may on its face be partly against interest and partly neutral or self-serving, or extrinsic facts may disclose this dual character. The decisions are in conflict whether to admit the entire statement, or only the parts against interest. (See 2 McCormick 5th, §316; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1465; 58 Harv. L. Rev. 49, 57.) Model C., Rule 509(2) proposed a test of admissibility of such additional parts "as the judge finds to be so closely connected with the declaration against interest as to be equally trustworthy." But the draftsmen of the Uniform Rules dropped this attempt to solve the problem, and the Evidence Code is equally silent.

Application of F.R. Evid., Rule 804(b)(3) requires an examination of the entire statement so as to identify those portions that are not against interest. The rule does not allow admission of non-self-inculpatory statements, even if made within a broader narrative that is generally self-inculpatory. "The district court may not just assume for purposes of Rule 804(b)(3) that a statement is self-inculpatory because it is part of a fuller confession, and this is especially true when the statement implicates someone else." (Williamson v. United States (1994) 512 U.S. 594, 114 S.Ct. 2431, 2435, 129 L.Ed.2d 476, 483.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
(2) Self-serving Declarations. See 2 McCormick 6th, §316.

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

C. Declarations Against Interest.

2. Conditions of Admissibility.

b. Declarant Unavailable.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 145

[§ 145] Declarant Unavailable.

Former California statutes seemingly restricted declarations to those of a decedent. (See supra, §143.) Modern courts have applied the broader test of unavailability of the witness by reason of insanity or absence from the jurisdiction. (See 2 McCormick 5th, §320; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1456; 58 Harv. L. Rev. 2; for meaning of "unavailability," see supra, §18 et seq.) People v. Spriggs (1964) 60 C.2d 868, 875, 36 C.R. 841, 389 P.2d 377, infra, §149, took a further step in holding the declaration admissible regardless of availability of the declarant. (See 12 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 638; 17 Stanf. L. Rev. 322; 37 So. Cal. L. Rev. 621; 2 San Diego L. Rev. 149.)

Ev.C. 1230, departing from Spriggs, limits the declarations to those of unavailable witnesses. The purpose of the condition is "to require the proponent of the evidence to use the in-court testimony of the declarant if it is possible to do so." If the declarant testifies contrary to expectation, "the proponent may then show the prior inconsistent statement as substantive evidence of the facts stated." (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1230; see Ev.C. 1235 and Law Rev. Com. Comment, infra, §156; *People v. #### C. Declarations Against Interest.

2. Conditions of Admissibility.

c. Trustworthiness and Knowledge.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 146

[§ 146] Trustworthiness and Knowledge.

In order to exclude untrustworthy statements, Ev.C. 1230 adopts the general test of Unif. Rule 804(b)(3): The statement must be so far contrary to the declarant's interests "that a reasonable man in his position would not have made the statement unless he believed it to be true." (See People v. Chapman (1975) 50 C.A.3d 872, 878, 123 C.R. 862; People v. Bullard (1977) 75 C.A.3d 764, 769, 142 C.R. 473; People v. Fuentes (1998) 61 C.A.4th 956, 961, 72 C.R.2d 237, quoting the text.)

The remaining condition, that the declarant have had "sufficient knowledge of the subject," is not found in the Uniform Rules; it preserves a traditional requirement of the common law and earlier statutes. (See Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1230; Estate of Huntington (1976) 58 C.A.3d 197, 209, 129 C.R. 787; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1471; 2 McCormick 5th, §316.)

a. Declarations Against Pecuniary Interest.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 147

[§ 147] Declarations Against Pecuniary Interest.

The traditional exception has generally been applied to declarations by decedents, as illustrated in the following situations:

(1) Statement of Indebtedness. A statement admitting or acknowledging indebtedness to another is a declaration against interest and, in some cases, a vicarious admission. (See Newby v. Gibson (1935) 6 C.A.2d 359, 360, 44 P.2d 468 [statement of deceased in deposition in another action that he owed plaintiff's assignor $ 10,000]; Mayfield v. Fidelity & Cas. Co. of New York (1936) 16 C.A.2d 611, 617, 61 P.2d 83 [action by beneficiary of accident insurance policy; statement of deceased insured that he was indebted to defendant insurance company]; Wright v. Best (1942) 19 C.2d 368, 379, 121 P.2d 702 [declaration of deceased predecessor in title that he received money from mine company for privilege of polluting stream; held binding on successors either as declaration against interest or vicarious admission]; 2 McCormick 5th, §317; 58 Harv. L. Rev. 35.)

(2) Pedigree Declaration. In Estate of Weis (1964) 224 C.A.2d 19, 25, 36 C.R. 266, a pedigree declaration (infra, §279), listing a half-sister as an heir and thereby conceding a right that would lessen the declarant's share in the estate, was held admissible also as a declaration against interest.

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

C. Declarations Against Interest.

3. Illustrations.

b. Declaration Against Proprietary Interest.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 148

[§ 148] Declaration Against Proprietary Interest.

(1) In General. Where the declarant is now dead and the statement is to the effect that the declarant did not own land, or that the declarant's interest was less than a fee, the statement is clearly admissible, and often comes in both as a declaration against interest and as an admission of a predecessor in title. (See Horton v. Winbigler (1917) 175 C. 149, 157, 165 P. 423 [declaration of decedent that she had only life interest]; People v. Weatherford (1945) 27 C.2d 401, 421, 164 P.2d 753 [decedent's declaration that she had sold her interest in cafe]; 2 McCormick 5th, §317; 58 Harv. L. Rev. 35; supra, §129.)

On the issue whether a decedent husband's estate was community or separate property, his income tax return, which had reported the property as community and split the income with his wife, was admissible as his declaration against interest. (Estate of Raphael (1949) 91 C.A.2d 931, 939, 206 P.2d 391.) And on the issue whether separate property had been transformed into community property by an executed oral agreement of the spouses, the declarations of the decedent husband, that the property was community, were admissible. (Estate of Cummins (1955) 130 C.A.2d 821, 831, 280 P.2d 128.)

(2) Payment Receipt. Although there is authority supporting the view that a receipt acknowledging payment is admissible as a declaration against interest (see 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§1456, 1460), a contrary conclusion was reached in Plonley v. Reser (1960) 178 C.A.2d Supp. 935, 3 C.R. 551 (doubtless because of the former decedent limitation). Plaintiffs, suing a grading contractor for damages to property caused by dust and dirt, introduced receipted bills for repairs and replacements. Held, it was error to admit them over objection. (a) As between the parties to the transaction, a receipt is admissible as prima facie proof of settlement. (b) As against strangers, it is a hearsay declaration of the signer, and inadmissible, except where it is an official receipt made pursuant to statute, e.g., by a tax officer. (See Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. Thomas Drayage & Rigging Co. (1968) 69 C.2d 33, 43, 69 C.R. 561, 442 P.2d 641, supra, §15 [citing Plonley]; 80 A.L.R.2d 915 [admissibility of receipt by third person].)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

C. Declarations Against Interest.

3. Illustrations.

c. Declaration Involving Criminal Liability.

1. Modern Rule of Admissibility.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 149

[§ 149] Modern Rule of Admissibility.

(1) Abandonment of Traditional Rule. Under the traditional rule, in a criminal prosecution of a defendant, a third person's declaration confessing the commission of the crime was not admissible. (People v. Hall (1892) 94 C. 595, 599, 30 P. 7; Donnelly v. United States (1913) 228 U.S. 243, 33 S.Ct. 449, 57 L.Ed. 820; see 2 McCormick 5th, §318; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§1476, 1477; 58 Harv. L. Rev. 39.)

This limitation was abandoned in People v. Spriggs (1964) 60 C.2d 868, 36 C.R. 841, 389 P.2d 377. Defendant and R were arrested for possession of heroin. Defendant's counsel, cross-examining the arresting officer, elicited the fact that he had inquired of R whether the narcotics were hers. Counsel then asked, "What did she say?" Held, it was error to sustain the prosecutor's objection, for an affirmative answer would have been evidence that she, not defendant, had possession. (60 C.2d 876.) The court thought the test of a hearsay exception--trustworthiness--was met, and overruled People v. Hall, supra. (60 C.2d 874, 875.) (See 12 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 638 [Spriggs]; 17 Stanf. L. Rev. 322 [same]; 37 So. Cal. L. Rev. 621 [same]; 90 A.L.R.3d 1173 [admissibility in civil case]; 92 A.L.R.3d 1164 [admissibility in criminal case].)

(2) Evidence Code. The Evidence Code, following Spriggs, makes the declaration admissible. (Ev.C. 1230, supra, §146; on preliminary finding as to trustworthiness, see infra, §150.)

In People v. Frutos (1984) 158 C.A.3d 979, 205 C.R. 204, a prosecution for murder in a gang killing, G, a gang member, told K, his cellmate in the county jail, that he had participated in the killing by providing weapons and driving two others to the scene. At trial, G invoked his Fifth Amendment privilege, and K testified to the G statement. Held, admission was proper. The statement was clearly inculpatory, G had sufficient knowledge of the facts, and the circumstances of the spontaneous disclosure to a stranger were such that the declarant had no reason to lie. (158 C.A.3d 985.) (See also People v. Leach (1975) 15 C.3d 419, 438, 124 C.R. 752, 541 P.2d 296 [background of exception, views of commentators on scope]; People v. Jackson (1991) 235 C.A.3d 1670, 1677, 1 C.R.2d 778 [declarations against penal interest "must be 'distinctly' against the declarant's penal interest and must be 'clothed with indicia of reliability' "]; People v. Cudjo (1993) 6 C.4th 585, 607, 25 C.R.2d 390, 863 P.2d 635, supra, §20 [testimony that defendant's brother had confessed to murder came within exception for statements against penal interest]; People v. Wilson (1993) 17 C.A.4th 271, 276, 21 C.R.2d 420 [wife's statements implicating husband came within exception because they also implicated her as accessory]; People v. Fuentes (1998) 61 C.A.4th 956, 962, 72 C.R.2d 237 [in murder prosecution, statements of defendant's coparticipants, as carefully limited to information that specifically disserved only their own interests, were properly admitted after coparticipants made themselves unavailable by claiming privilege against self-incrimination].)

(3) Federal Rules of Evidence. The Federal Rules of Evidence add a condition to admissibility of a declaration designed to exculpate the defendant in a criminal case. "A statement tending to expose the declarant to criminal liability and offered to exculpate the accused is not admissible unless corroborating circumstances clearly indicate the trustworthiness of the statement." (F.R. Evid., Rule 804(b)(3); see 4 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §500 et seq.; 66 Cal. L. Rev. 1189; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §789 et seq.)

(4) Admissibility of Statement in Joint Trial. A declaration against interest by one defendant may be admitted in a joint trial, even though it implicates a codefendant, provided that the statement satisfies the statutory definition and otherwise satisfies the constitutional requirement of trustworthiness. There is no litmus test for the determination whether these requirements are met. "The trial court must look to the totality of the circumstances in which the statement was made, whether the declarant spoke from personal knowledge, the possible motivation of the declarant, what was actually said by the declarant and anything else relevant to the inquiry. ... [S]pecial attention must be paid to any statements that tend to inculcate the nondeclarant. This is so because a statement's content is most reliable in that portion which inculcates the declarant. It is least reliable in that portion which shifts responsibility." (People v. Greenberger (1997) 58 C.A.4th 298, 334, 335, 68 C.R.2d 61.) (See People v. Bryden (1998) 63 C.A.4th 159, 73 C.R.2d 554 [jailhouse communication between nontestifying codefendant and prosecution witness lacked sufficient indicia of trustworthiness, where statement may have been embellished or distorted by motivation to please witness, and much of communication was not directly against codefendant's penal interests]; on admissibility of codefendant's extrajudicial confession or statement in joint trial, under party admissions exception, see supra, §§59, 142.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Abandonment of Traditional Rule. See 2 McCormick 6th, §318.(2) Evidence Code. See People v. Lawley (2002) 27 C.4th 102, 154, 115 C.R.2d 614, 38 P.3d 461 [in guilt phase of capital murder prosecution, trial judge properly ruled admissible testimony as to out-of-court statement by defendant's acquaintance to effect that acquaintance was hired and paid to kill victim, and trial judge properly excluded portions of statement indicating that prison gang was party that hired him; nothing about identity of hirer made acquaintance more culpable than other portions of statement]; People v. Samuels (2005) 36 C.4th 96, 120, 121, 30 C.R.3d 105, 113 P.3d 1125 [in capital murder case, witness' testimony as to statement by out-of-court declarant to effect that declarant had committed murder, that third party had helped him, and that defendant had paid him was properly admitted under exception for statements against penal interest; although reference to defendant did not make that portion of statement more inculpatory, it was inextricably tied to overall statement and did not require severance; distinguishing Lawley].

(4) Admissibility of Statement in Joint Trial. See Lilly v. Virginia (1999) 527 U.S. 116, 119 S.Ct. 1887, 1901, 144 L.Ed.2d 117, 135, 136, text, §62; People v. Greenberger (1997) 58 C.A.4th 298, 68 C.R.2d 61, text, p. 861]; People v. Cervantes (2004) 118 C.A.4th 162, 175, 12 C.R.3d 774 [in murder prosecution of three defendants, out-of-court statement by one defendant to neighbor was properly admitted against other two defendants as declaration against interest; statement was made within 24 hours of crime to lifelong friend from whom defendant sought medical treatment, and it attributed blame both to his codefendants and to himself]. West's Key Number Digest, Criminal Law k.416 et seq.

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

C. Declarations Against Interest.

3. Illustrations.

c. Declaration Involving Criminal Liability.

2. Preliminary Fact Determination.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 150

[§ 150] Preliminary Fact Determination.

Ev.C. 1230, codifying the requirement of trustworthiness as a condition to admissibility (see supra, §146), calls for a determination of preliminary fact by the judge (Ev.C. 404, 405, 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §§48, 63). (See People v. Chapman (1975) 50 C.A.3d 872, 878, 123 C.R. 862, citing the text; People v. Bullard (1977) 75 C.A.3d 764, 769, 142 C.R. 473; People v. Rios (1985) 163 C.A.3d 852, 867, 210 C.R. 271; People v. Sanders (1990) 221 C.A.3d 350, 379, 271 C.R. 534 ["confession" was not against declarant's penal interest, where five witnesses said he was innocent and he could retract it on ground he was only trying to help defendant, his brother]; People v. Frierson (1991) 53 C.3d 730, 743, 280 C.R. 440, 808 P.2d 1197, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §449 ["confession" was not against declarant's penal interest, because it was made 14 years after offense, he knew defendant had been found guilty of offense, and defendant was friend whom declarant could aid at little risk to himself]; People v. Jackson (1991) 235 C.A.3d 1670, 1678, 1 C.R.2d 778 [test is objective--"would the statement subject its declarant to criminal liability such that a reasonable person would not have made the statement without believing it true"].)

In making this preliminary determination, the judge may take into account not just the words of the statement but the circumstances under which it was made, "and may analyze the possible motivation of the declarant and his relationship to the defendant on the case." (People v. Chapman, supra, 50 C.A.3d 879.)

In People v. Blankenship (1985) 167 C.A.3d 840, 213 C.R. 666, defendant, charged with robbery and attempted murder, sought to introduce evidence of an oral confession made to defendant by H, to the commission of the charged offenses. At a hearing during trial, H was examined under oath, but when questioned on these crimes, invoked his self-incrimination privilege. The judge ruled that H could not be called, and defense counsel then attempted to call defendant to testify to the statements of H as declarations against penal interest. Held, the statements were inadmissible; the circumstances and possible motivation of the declarant justified the conclusion that the declarations lacked trustworthiness: "As the proposed testimony was to come from defendant himself it was highly suspect both because defendant had a motive to falsify and because accurate details concerning the crime could be explained by defendant's own knowledge and guilt rather than Hahn's." (167 C.A.3d 849.) The record strongly suggested "the existence of a plan by three fellow prisoners to have one person take the blame for another's crime under circumstances where the one taking the blame could not suffer any real detriment to his own interests." (167 C.A.3d 849, quoting Chapman.)

Vorse v. Sarasy (1997) 53 C.A.4th 998, 1011, 1012, 62 C.R.2d 164, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §17, disagreed with one aspect of Chapman and Blankenship--their suggestion that the trial judge may exclude a statement against penal interest because, in applying Ev.C. 352 (weighing of probative value against danger of prejudice; see infra, §151), the judge disbelieves the live witness who is testifying as to the statement.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See People v. Geier (2007) 41 C.4th 555, 585, 61 C.R.3d 580, 161 P.3d 104 [in murder prosecution, trial judge did not err in excluding as untrustworthy videotaped statement by wife of one of victims in which she stated that she killed her husband; statement was one of three in which she gave entirely contradictory versions of what happened, and she was having affair with defendant's confederate and thus had motive to take blame, thereby deflecting it from confederate and, by extension, from defendant]. Judge's disbelief of live witness: See People v. Cudjo (1993) 6 C.4th 585, 608, 610, 25 C.R.2d 390, 863 P.2d 635, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, Supp., §17.

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

C. Declarations Against Interest.

3. Illustrations.

c. Declaration Involving Criminal Liability.

3. Distinctions.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 151

[§ 151] Distinctions.

(1) Statement Both Inculpatory and Exculpatory. A statement that is in part inculpatory and in part exculpatory, e.g., one that admits some complicity but places the major blame on another, does not meet the test of trustworthiness and is inadmissible. (See People v. Shipe (1975) 49 C.A.3d 343, 354, 122 C.R. 701; People v. Coble (1976) 65 C.A.3d 187, 191, 135 C.R. 199; People v. Bullard (1977) 75 C.A.3d 764, 770, 142 C.R. 473.)

Thus, a conspirator's statement may be against the conspirator's own penal interest, but may also incriminate the other conspirators. If the statement does not come within the conspirators' exception (see supra, §132), admissibility is limited to those parts that are against the declarant's interest. (People v. Leach (1975) 15 C.3d 419, 441, 124 C.R. 752, 541 P.2d 296.)

(2) Claim of Fifth Amendment Privilege. Although a claim of the privilege against self-incrimination provides the type of witness unavailability required for introducing the claimant's out-of-court declaration against interest (see People v. Frutos (1984) 158 C.A.3d 979, 205 C.R. 204, supra, §149), it does not ensure that the other requirements of the hearsay exception are met. In People v. Traylor (1972) 23 C.A.3d 323, 100 C.R. 116, defendant contended that he had never been a passenger in an automobile where heroin was found and that he did not know the driver of the car. At trial, he called the driver to testify but was met with a refusal on the ground that the answers would tend to incriminate the witness. The trial judge ruled that the privilege was properly taken. Defendant then put his own attorney on the stand to testify conditionally about a conversation the attorney had with the driver, covering the same ground as the questions the driver had refused to answer. Held, the statements were properly excluded. A witness' claim of the self-incrimination privilege does not automatically make his extrajudicial declarations admissible under Ev.C. 1230. (23 C.A.3d 330.) Wigmore points out that a statement distinctly against one's interest is unlikely to be deliberately false or heedlessly incorrect and is therefore trustworthy. But "[i]t is hard to see how, under all the circumstances, the driver should have realized that the statement he made to defendant's counsel was 'distinctly' against his own penal interest." (23 C.A.3d 331.) (See People v. Johnson (1974) 39 C.A.3d 749, 760, 114 C.R. 545 [citing both Wigmore and Traylor].)

evidence implicated defendant in murder].)

In People v. Leonard (1983) 34 C.3d 183, 193 C.R. 171, 666 P.2d 28, J was arrested at the same time as defendant. J gave a negotiated guilty plea to one count, but, at the time of defendant's trial, J had not been sentenced, and he claimed privilege and was declared unavailable as a witness. His guilty plea was then introduced as a declaration against penal interest, and, despite defense counsel's urging, the trial judge ruled the plea admissible with no indication that he had weighed the probative value against its prejudicial effect. Held, conviction reversed. The probative value of the coarrestee's guilty plea was questionable, and its prejudicial effect--inviting an inference of guilty by association--was great. (34 C.3d 188.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Statement Both Inculpatory and Exculpatory. In People v. Duarte (2000) 24 C.4th 603, 101 C.R.2d 701, 12 P.3d 1110, defendant was charged with shooting at an inhabited dwelling, conspiracy, and assault with a firearm. Citing the hearsay exception for statements against penal interest, the trial judge permitted a police sergeant to relate, in redacted form, postarrest statements made by an alleged accomplice. Before convicting defendant, the jury twice inquired about those statements. Held, reversed. To be admissible under the penal interests exception, a statement must be disserving to the declarant and must carry indicia of trustworthiness. (24 C.4th 612, 614, citing the text.) Here, neither requirement was satisfied. Even as redacted, the statements the trial judge admitted had both self-serving and disserving aspects. Although they admitted the declarant's participation in the events in question, they tended to describe the events in a manner sympathetic to him, to minimize his responsibility, and to imply that there were others who might bear a greater share of responsibility. (24 C.4th 613.) As to trustworthiness, an examination of the full, unredacted version of the statements indicates that they were unmistakably attempts to shift blame or curry favor. And the fact that they were made after the declarant had been taken into custody calls their reliability even further into question. (24 C.4th 617.) In light of the absence of any eyewitnesses, the lack of physical evidence linking defendant to the crime, and the serious impeachment of the one witness the prosecution relied on most heavily, it seems likely that the jury would have reached a result more favorable to defendant had the police sergeant's testimony not been erroneously admitted. (24 C.4th 619.)

C. Declarations Against Interest.

3. Illustrations.

d. Declaration Against Social Interest.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 152

[§ 152] Declaration Against Social Interest.

Ev.C. 1230 covers a declaration that creates a risk of making the declarant "an object of hatred, ridicule, or social disgrace in the community." (See supra, §143; 2 McCormick 5th, §318; 58 Harv. L. Rev. 39; 69 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1427 [arguing for more frequent use of the exception].)

This innovation was, in a sense, anticipated, and a technical limitation in the old rule overcome, in People v. Parriera (1965) 237 C.A.2d 275, 46 C.R. 835. The statement of a victim of a crime, exculpating the defendant, ordinarily is not against the declarant's interest, and is inadmissible under this exception. (See People v. McLaughlin (1872) 44 C. 435; People v. Dalton (1962) 201 C.A.2d 396, 405, 20 C.R. 51; 95 A.L.R.2d 637 [admissibility of homicide victim's statement exculpating accused].) But what if the statement shows that the victim's own conduct in the transaction is disgraceful? Here, defendant was charged with attempted murder of his wife. She testified that defendant shot her, but two hospital nurses testified to her voluntary declaration that she shot herself. The trial judge instructed the jury that the declaration could only be considered as impeachment of the wife, and not as substantive evidence of attempted suicide. Held, this was error. (a) Under the traditional rule, this was not an admissible declaration against interest; and it was not even a declaration against penal interest under the extended rule of People v. Spriggs (1964) 60 C.2d 868, 36 C.R. 841, 389 P.2d 377, supra, §149, for suicide is not a crime in California (see 1 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against the Person, §101). (b) But an attempted suicide might lead to insanity proceedings and possible confinement in an institution, which would subject the declarant to "odium"; and such a declaration is as trustworthy as the one held admissible in Spriggs. (237 C.A.2d 284.) (See People v. Salcido (1966) 246 C.A.2d 450, 461, 54 C.R. 820, infra, §216 [statement by alleged victim of homicide, made while she was being transported to hospital, that she shot herself, held admissible; following Parriera].)

Both the content of the statement and the fact that it was made must be against the declarant's social interest. "Otherwise, each time a witness broke a confidence, he could claim that his revelations were against social interest, because by betraying the trust placed in him, he had incurred social opprobrium." (In re Weber (1974) 11 C.3d 703, 722, 114 C.R. 429, 523 P.2d 229 [declaration by prisoner, seeking to benefit second prisoner at third prisoner's expense, did not make declarant "snitch" whom fellow inmates would regard with social disgrace].)

admitted; statement sufficiently risked making wife object of social disgrace to qualify under social interest exception];

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

D. Sworn Statement Regarding Gang-Related Crime.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 154

[§ 154] Sworn Statement Regarding Gang-Related Crime.

(1) In General. Ev.C. 1231 et seq., added in 1997, create a hearsay exception for a prior statement about gang-related activity by a declarant who is now deceased. (See 29 McGeorge L. Rev. 605.) Under Ev.C. 1231, the proponent of the statement must establish all of the following:

(a) The statement relates to acts or events that are subjects of a criminal prosecution under the California Street Terrorism Enforcement and Prevention Act (P.C. 186.20 et seq.; see 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Public Peace and Welfare, §23).

(b) The statement is preserved in a verbatim transcript, copy, or record (which may be made by means of audio or video recording or equivalent technology).

(c) The acts or events to which the statement relates are within the personal knowledge of the declarant.

(d) The statement was made under oath or affirmation under penalty of perjury in an affidavit, or at a deposition, preliminary hearing, grand jury hearing, or "other proceeding in compliance with law." (See Ev.C. 1231.2 ["A peace officer may administer and certify oaths for purposes of this article"].)

(e) The declarant died from other than natural causes.

(f) The statement was made under circumstances indicating that it is trustworthy and "particularly worthy of belief."

(2) Trustworthiness Determination. Under Ev.C. 1231(f), the following factors, among others, may be considered in determining whether the statement is sufficiently trustworthy:

(a) Whether the statement was made in contemplation of a pending or anticipated criminal or civil matter in which the declarant had an interest, other than as a witness.

(b) Whether the declarant had a bias or motive for fabrication, and if so, the extent of the bias or motive.

(c) Whether the statement is corroborated by evidence other than statements that are admissible only under Ev.C. 1231.

(d) Whether the statement was against the declarant's interest.

(3) Notice. The proponent of the statement must make known to the opposing party the intention to offer the statement, and the statement's particulars, sufficiently in advance to give the opposing party a fair opportunity to prepare to meet it. (Ev.C. 1231.1.)

(4) Testimony by Law Enforcement Officer. A law enforcement officer who testifies as to a hearsay statement admitted under Ev.C. 1231 must have 5 years of law enforcement experience, or must have completed a certified training course that included the investigation and reporting of cases and testifying at preliminary hearings and trials. (Ev.C. 1231.3.)

(5) Statement to Jury. The jury must not be told that the declarant died from other than natural causes, but must be told simply that the declarant is not available. (Ev.C. 1231.4.)

(6) Other Evidentiary Requirements Not Affected. In enacting Ev.C. 1231 et seq., the Legislature did not intend (a) to affect other evidentiary requirements, such as those of relevance (Ev.C. 351; see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §5) and the weighing of probative value against prejudicial impact (Ev.C. 352; see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §17); (b) to impair a party's right to attack the declarant's credibility under Ev.C. 1202 (see 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §357); (c) to affect the defendant's right to discover rebuttal evidence to attack the declarant's credibility; or (d) to impair the defendant's constitutional rights of due process and confrontation. (1997 Stats., Chap. 499, §2.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

E. Prior Statements of Witnesses.

1. Prior Inconsistent and Consistent Statements.
  - a. Former Law and Code Changes.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 155

[§ 155] Former Law and Code Changes.

(1) Former Law. The former rule gave no substantive evidentiary effect to the prior statement of a nonparty witness: (a) If the prior statement was inconsistent with the present testimony, it could be offered only to impeach the witness. (See 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §315.) (b) If the prior statement was consistent with the present testimony, it could be offered, under certain conditions, only to rehabilitate the witness. (See 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §364 et seq.) In neither case, however, was it "affirmative" evidence sufficient to make a case for the jury or to sustain a verdict or finding, and the jury was so instructed. (On inconsistent statements, see Albert v. McKay & Co. (1917) 174 C. 451, 456, 163 P. 666; Kroplin v. Huston (1947) 79 C.A.2d 332, 343, 179 P.2d 575; People v. Orcalles (1948) 32 C.2d 562, 572, 197 P.2d 26; Meyer v. State Bd. of Equalization (1954) 42 C.2d 376, 384, 267 P.2d 257; People v. Ballard (1963) 218 C.A.2d 295, 309, 32 C.R. 233, quoting the text; Fibreboard Paper Products Corp. v. East Bay Union of Machinists, Local 1304, United Steelworkers of America, AFL-CIO (1964) 227 C.A.2d 675, 699, 39 C.R. 64, citing the text; 1 McCormick 5th, §§34, 36; 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1018; 1 Jefferson, California Evidence Benchbook 3d, Chap. 10; 2 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 49; 1947 A.S. 1072; 1948 A.S. 888; 1953 A.S. 771; 1955 A.S. 619; on consistent statements, see Kroplin v. Huston, supra, 79 C.A.2d 343; 1 McCormick 5th, §47; 2 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 49; 78 Harv. L. Rev. 887; 1947 A.S. 1072; 1948 A.S. 888; 1955 A.S. 619; 1957 A.S. 542.)

(2) Proposals for Change. A number of authorities, including a few courts, took the position that the fundamental objection to hearsay is removed when the declarant is available for confrontation and cross-examination, and therefore statements of this type should be admitted as substantive evidence. (Model C., Rule 503, Comment b.) (See 2 McCormick 5th, §251; 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1018; 2 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 49; 62 Harv. L. Rev. 192; 78 Harv. L. Rev. 887; 1947 A.S. 1072; 1948 A.S. 888; 1955 A.S. 619.) The opposing authorities, favoring retention of the restrictive rule, argued that (a) the principal value of cross-examination is lost unless it takes place at the time the witness speaks; and (b) admissibility of prior statements would offer the temptation and opportunity for manufacture of evidence. (See 2 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 51.)

(3) Evidence Code. Ev.C. 1235 and Ev.C. 1236 adopted the view of the Model Code giving substantive evidentiary effect to both kinds of statements. (See 1 Jefferson, California Evidence Benchbook 3d, Chap. 10; infra, §§156, 161.)

(4) Federal Rules of Evidence. F.R. Evid., Rule 801(d)(1) provides that a statement is not hearsay if "[t]he declarant testifies at the trial or hearing and is subject to cross-examination concerning the statement, and the statement is (A) inconsistent with the declarant's testimony, and was given under oath subject to the penalty of perjury at a trial, hearing, or other proceeding, or in a deposition, or (B) consistent with the declarant's testimony and is offered to rebut an express or implied charge against the declarant of recent fabrication or improper influence or motive, or (C) one of identification of a person made after perceiving the person." (See Tome v. United States (1995) 513 U.S. 150, 115 S.Ct. 696, 700, 130 L.Ed.2d 574, 581 [Rule 801(d)(1) embodies common law requirement that, to be admissible, prior consistent statement must have been made before alleged fabrication, or before alleged improper influence or motive arose]; 4 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §402 et seq.; 30 Hastings L. J. 575; 10 Pacific L. J. 1; 10 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 497; 26 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 967; 10 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 985; 29 Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §670 et seq.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

E. Prior Statements of Witnesses.

1. Prior Inconsistent and Consistent Statements.

b. Prior Inconsistent Statements.

1. In General.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 156

[§ 156] In General.

(1) Rule of Admissibility. A prior statement of a witness, inconsistent with the witness' present testimony, is admissible if "offered in compliance with" Ev.C. 770. (Ev.C. 1235.) Ev.C. 770 states the requirement of opportunity to explain or deny. (See 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §333.) (On admissibility of statement of forgetful witness, see 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §338.)

The Law Revision Commission Comment to Ev.C. 1235 makes the following argument in support of this significant change in California law: "[T]he dangers against which the hearsay rule is designed to protect are largely nonexistent. The declarant is in court and may be examined and cross-examined in regard to his statements and their subject matter. In many cases, the inconsistent statement is more likely to be true than the testimony of the witness at the trial because it was made nearer in time to the matter to which it relates and is less likely to be influenced by the controversy that gave rise to the litigation. The trier of fact has the declarant before it and can observe his demeanor and the nature of his testimony as he denies or tries to explain away the inconsistency. Hence, it is in as good a position to determine the truth or falsity of the prior statement as it is to determine the truth or falsity of the inconsistent testimony given in court. Moreover, Section 1235 will provide a party with desirable protection against the 'turncoat' witness who changes his story on the stand and deprives the party calling him of evidence essential to his case."

The Comment further points out that the new section permits a party to introduce inconsistent statements of its own witness, regardless of whether the party is surprised or damaged. (See 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §356.)

(2) Limitations. The rule has its limitations, however. It "does not permit the wholesale admission into evidence of entire works" in which an inconsistent statement appears. (Benson v. Honda Motor Co. (1994) 26 C.A.4th 1337, 1349, 32 C.R.2d 322 [products liability action; trial judge properly admitted only relevant portions of papers coauthored by defendant's expert].) And, in light of the legislative intent to protect the integrity of the judicial arbitration process, a statement made at an arbitration hearing may not be admitted for impeachment as a prior inconsistent statement. (Jimena v. Alesso (1995) 36 C.A.4th 1028, 1030, 1031, 43 C.R.2d 18.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

E. Prior Statements of Witnesses.

1. Prior Inconsistent and Consistent Statements.

b. Prior Inconsistent Statements.

2. Rule in Criminal Cases.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 157

[§ 157] Rule in Criminal Cases.

(1) Former Rule. In People v. Johnson (1968) 68 C.2d 646, 68 C.R. 599, 441 P.2d 111, the court applied the theory of Pointer v. Texas (1965) 380 U.S. 400, 85 S.Ct. 1065, 13 L.Ed.2d 923, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §531, to hold that Ev.C. 1235, applied in a criminal case, was an unconstitutional deprivation of the Sixth Amendment right of confrontation. (68 C.2d 660.) (See 56 Cal. L. Rev. 1727; 6 San Diego L. Rev. 92.) Johnson was followed by a number of Court of Appeal decisions, and by People v. Green (1969) 70 C.2d 654, 665, 75 C.R. 782, 451 P.2d 422. (See 58 Cal. L. Rev. 262.)

(2) New Rule of Admissibility. In California v. Green (1970) 399 U.S. 149, 90 S.Ct. 1930, 26 L.Ed.2d 489, the United States Supreme Court rejected the holding in Johnson, and vacated the California judgment in Green.

(a) Hearsay and confrontation. Hearsay rules and the Confrontation Clause protect similar values, but there is no "congruence" between the concepts. "[M]erely because evidence is admitted in violation of a long-established hearsay rule does not lead to the automatic conclusion that confrontation rights have been denied." (90 S.Ct. 1934, 26 L.Ed.2d 495.) What confrontation does is ensure that the witness will give statements under oath, force the witness to submit to cross-examination and permit the jury to observe the witness' demeanor. (90 S.Ct. 1935, 26 L.Ed.2d 497.) (See 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §21.)

(b) The oath. If the declarant is present and testifying at the trial, and the declarant admits to making the statement or that fact is shown by other evidence, the danger of faulty reproduction is negligible. "[T]he jury can be confident that it has before it two conflicting statements by the same witness. Thus, as far as the oath is concerned, the witness must now affirm, deny or qualify the truth of the prior statement under the penalty of perjury; indeed, the very fact that the prior statement was not given under a similar circumstance may become the witness' explanation for its inaccuracy--an explanation a jury may be expected to understand and take into account in deciding which, if either, of the statements represents the truth." (90 S.Ct. 1935, 26 L.Ed.2d 497.)

(c) Cross-examination. The inability to cross-examine the witness at the time the prior statement was made is not crucial as long as the defendant is assured of full and effective cross-examination at the trial. A defendant "could hardly hope to accomplish more than has already been accomplished by the fact that the witness is now telling a different, inconsistent story, and--in this case--one that is favorable to the defendant." (90 S.Ct. 1935, 26 L.Ed.2d 497.) The main danger in substituting subsequent for timely cross-examination is the possibility that the witness' false testimony will harden. "That danger, however, disappears when the witness has changed his testimony so that, far from 'hardening,' his prior statement has softened to the point where he now repudiates it." (90 S.Ct. 1936, 26 L.Ed.2d 498.) A witness favorable to the defense "should be more than willing to give the usual suggested explanations for the inaccuracy of his prior statement, such as faulty perception or undue haste in recounting the event." (90 S.Ct. 1936, 26 L.Ed.2d 498.)

(d) Demeanor. The trial jury was foreclosed from viewing the declarant's demeanor when the out-of-court statement was made. But the witness who now relates a different story about the events in question "must necessarily assume a position as to the truth value of his prior statement, thus giving the jury a chance to observe and evaluate his demeanor as he either disavows or qualifies his earlier statement. The jury is alerted by the inconsistency in the stories, and its attention is sharply focused on determining either that one of the stories reflects the truth or that the witness who has apparently lied once, is simply too lacking in credibility to warrant its believing either story." (90 S.Ct. 1936, 26 L.Ed.2d 498.)

(e) Prior decisions distinguished. Decisions such as Pointer v. Texas, supra, do not interpret the Confrontation Clause as excluding out-of-court statements of a witness who testifies at trial. Those decisions dealt with the opposite situation, where statements were admitted in the declarant's absence, without any chance to cross-examine the declarant. Where the declarant is present to testify and submit to cross-examination, "our cases, if anything, support the conclusion that the admission of his out-of-court statements does not create a confrontation problem." (90 S.Ct. 1937, 26 L.Ed.2d 499.)

(f) Preliminary hearing testimony. Wholly apart from the confrontation issue, the witness' statements in preliminary hearing testimony were admissible because they were given "under circumstances closely approximating those that surround the typical trial." (90 S.Ct. 1938, 26 L.Ed.2d 501.) The witness had been under oath, defendant was represented by counsel (the same one who represented defendant at the trial), defendant had every opportunity to cross-examine the witness as to the statement, and the proceedings were conducted before a judicial tribunal equipped to provide a judicial record of the hearings. Under these circumstances, the statement would have been admissible at the trial even in the witness' absence if the witness had been actually unavailable, despite the state's good faith efforts to produce him. (90 S.Ct. 1938, 26 L.Ed.2d 501.) (See 84 Harv. L. Rev. 108; 59 Cal. L. Rev. 580; 26 Hastings L. J. 361.)

(3) California Cases Following Green. In People v. Green (1971) 3 C.3d 981, 92 C.R. 494, 479 P.2d 998, on remand from the United States Supreme Court, the prior inconsistent statement was held admissible. (See Clifton v. Ullis (1976) 17 C.3d 99, 104, 130 C.R. 155, 549 P.2d 1251; People v. Morgan (1978) 87 C.A.3d 59, 73, 74, 150 C.R. 712; People v. Buttles (1990) 223 C.A.3d 1631, 1638, 273 C.R. 397; People v. Zapien (1993) 4 C.4th 929, 955, 17 C.R.2d 122, 846 P.2d 704, supra, §6 [multiple hearsay consisting of prior inconsistent statements].) The argument that such evidence should be excluded as violative of the Confrontation Clause of the California Constitution (under the "independent grounds doctrine") was rejected in People v. Chavez (1980) 26 C.3d 334, 356, 358, 360, 161 C.R. 762, 605 P.2d 401. (See 15 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 1093 [Due Process and the Sufficiency of Prior Inconsistent Statements as Evidence for Criminal Convictions]; 30 A.L.R.4th 414 [prior inconsistent statements of witness as substantive evidence--modern state cases].)

(4) Distinction: Statement Not Sufficiently Inconsistent. The Green rule applies when there is a reasonable basis for concluding that the trial testimony and the prior statement are inconsistent; trial testimony that is merely ambiguous, and not necessarily inconsistent with the prior statement, is insufficient. (People v. Johnson (1992) 3 C.4th 1183, 1219, 1220, 14 C.R.2d 702, 842 P.2d 1; see People v. Arias (1996) 13 C.4th 92, 153, 51 C.R.2d 770, 913 P.2d 980 [testimony of defendant's mother, a prosecution witness, was not sufficiently inconsistent with her prior statements to detective; however, erroneous admission of detective's testimony was harmless; to extent it did not differ from mother's testimony, it was merely cumulative].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) New Rule of Admissibility. See CALCRIM, No. 318 [Prior Statements as Evidence]; People v. Solo'rzano (2007) 153 C.A.4th 1026, 1038, 63 C.R.3d 659 [CALCRIM, No. 318, like CALJIC, No. 2.13 before it, allows jury to use prior statements as substantive evidence without finding those statements inconsistent with witness' testimony; it optionally characterizes as inconsistent testimony to effect that witness no longer remembers event if jury disbelieves that testimony].(3) California Cases Following Green. See People v. Ochoa (2001) 26 C.4th 398, 445, 110 C.R.2d 324, 28 P.3d 78 [in capital murder case in which witness' extrajudicial statements were admitted under Ev.C. 1235, trial judge did not err in refusing to instruct that such statements should be viewed with extreme caution; cautionary instruction of this type is required only for extrajudicial statements made by party]; People v. Guerra (2006) 37 C.4th 1067, 1143, 40 C.R.3d 118, 129 P.3d 321 [in capital murder prosecution in which victim of prior offense testified that she recognized defendant as her attacker, trial judge erred in refusing to admit testimony of victim's son that, after attack, victim had said she did not recognize her attacker; however, error was harmless, as on cross-examination victim admitted that she had previously stated that she had not seen attacker's face]; People v. Avila (2006) 38 C.4th 491, 579, 43 C.R.3d 1, 133 P.3d 1076 [in capital trial for murder with rape-murder special circumstance, in which witness testified that defendant was not involved in rape, trial judge did not err in allowing detective to testify that witness had told him that defendant was involved in rape; statement to detective was clearly inconsistent with trial testimony, and witness was still subject to recall, thus satisfying Ev.C. 770].

E. Prior Statements of Witnesses.

1. Prior Inconsistent and Consistent Statements.
  - b. Prior Inconsistent Statements.
  3. Absent Witness.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 158

[§ 158] Absent Witness.

(1) In General. Ev.C. 1235 does not apply to the statements of a person who was not a witness at the trial; i.e., prior inconsistent statements are admissible only when they are contradictory to the declarant's testimony at the trial. (People v. Williams (1976) 16 C.3d 663, 668, 669, 128 C.R. 888, 547 P.2d 1000, disapproving contrary decisions in People v. Bynum (1971) 4 C.3d 589, 94 C.R. 241, 483 P.2d 1193, and People v. Browning (1975) 45 C.A.3d 125, 119 C.R. 420.)

(2) Exception: Witness Unavailable and Former Testimony Admitted. Under Ev.C. 1294, added in 1996, either a videotaped statement properly introduced as a prior inconsistent statement at a preliminary hearing or a prior proceeding concerning the same criminal matter, or a transcript of the preliminary hearing or the prior proceeding containing the prior inconsistent statement is not made inadmissible by the hearsay rule if: (1) the witness is unavailable (see supra, §18); and (2) former testimony of the witness is admitted under Ev.C. 1291 (see infra, §264). (Ev.C. 1294(a).) The party against whom the prior inconsistent statement is offered may examine or cross-examine any person who testified at the preliminary hearing or a prior proceeding as to the prior inconsistent statement. (Ev.C. 1294(b).) Ev.C. 1294 is aimed at situations, particularly common where criminal gangs are involved, in which a witness recants at the preliminary hearing and by the time of trial has hidden, fled, or died. (Assembly Judiciary Committee analysis of A.B. 2483; see 28 Pacific L. J. 809 [Confrontation Clause and Evidentiary Admissions].)

E. Prior Statements of Witnesses.

1. Prior Inconsistent and Consistent Statements.
  - b. Prior Inconsistent Statements.
4. Forgetful or Amnesiac Witness.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 159

[§ 159] Forgetful or Amnesiac Witness.

(1) Witness Present but Forgetful. In People v. Green (1971) 3 C.3d 981, 92 C.R. 494, 479 P.2d 998, the court observed that ordinarily the testimony of a witness that he or she does not remember an event is not inconsistent with the witness' prior statement describing that event. "But justice will not be promoted by a ritualistic invocation of this rule of evidence. Inconsistency in effect, rather than contradiction in express terms, is the test for admitting a witness' prior statement, and the same principle governs the case of the forgetful witness." (3 C.3d 988.) Moreover, the witness in this case stated on cross-examination that when he gave the statement to the officer, he believed he was telling the truth, but defense counsel made no attempt to explore this inconsistency. "Whether or not a witness is actually cross-examined, the fact the defendant has an adequate opportunity to carry out such an inquiry satisfies the confrontation clause." (3 C.3d 990.) (See People v. Petersen (1972) 23 C.A.3d 883, 892, 100 C.R. 590; People v. Loyd (1977) 71 C.A.3d Supp. 1, 8, 10, 139 C.R. 693 [where witness recalls part but not all of given event or statement, proponent must be allowed opportunity to test witness' memory]; People v. O'Quinn (1980) 109 C.A.3d 219, 225, 226, 167 C.R. 141; 99 A.L.R.3d 934 [denial of recollection as inconsistent with prior statement].)

(2) Amnesiac Witness. People v. Green, supra, was distinguished in People v. Simmons (1981) 123 C.A.3d 677, 177 C.R. 17. In Green, the trial judge found the witness to be evasive and uncooperative, and his testimony was held to be an implied denial of the facts contained in his earlier statements. In Simmons, J made a written, signed statement to the police describing how defendant had discussed the crime and boasted of having done it shortly afterwards. Before defendant's preliminary hearing, J received a serious head injury causing amnesia, and at the hearing, he testified that, while able to remember some past events, he had no recall of any admission by defendant, or of making the statement to the police. Held, the statement was inadmissible. (a) The witness was not shown to be evasive; the failure of recollection was legitimate; hence, there was no implied inconsistency. (123 C.A.3d 680, 681.) (b) Admissibility of a prior inconsistent statement without the opportunity to cross-examine would amount to a denial of the constitutional right of confrontation (see supra, §157); cross-examination of the amnesiac witness on what he is incapable of recalling would be meaningless. (123 C.A.3d 681, 682.) (See People v. Levesque (1995) 35 C.A.4th 530, 544, 545, 41 C.R.2d 439 [in prosecution for sexual molestation of child, trial judge properly excluded testimony as to statements made by victim's mother, who, outside jury's presence, testified that she was under influence of drugs at time of statements and did not remember them].)

E. Prior Statements of Witnesses.

1. Prior Inconsistent and Consistent Statements.

b. Prior Inconsistent Statements.

5. Uncooperative Witness.

[§ 160] Uncooperative Witness.

(1) Refusal To Testify. In People v. Rios (1985) 163 C.A.3d 852, 210 C.R. 271, at defendant's trial for murder, two key prosecution witnesses who were to corroborate testimony of an accomplice refused to answer any questions. The trial judge then allowed the prosecution to introduce their prior statements made to a police detective. Held, the evidence was inadmissible hearsay. "[T]here is no relevant legal difference between the situation where the stonewalling witness refuses to answer any questions and the situation where the witness totally recalls no facts, for purposes of determining inconsistency under Evidence Code section 1235. In both situations there is simply no 'statement' in the record which is inconsistent, or for that matter consistent, with prior statements; there is no 'express testimony' at all from which to infer or deduce implied inconsistency." (163 C.A.3d 864.)

(2) Denial of Statement. In People v. Freeman (1971) 20 C.A.3d 488, 492, 97 C.R. 717, defendant was charged with being the getaway man in an armed robbery allegedly committed by F and another accomplice. To show a connection between defendant and F, the prosecution attempted to establish that on the morning of the robbery defendant visited F at the home of F's girlfriend. Mrs. D, the girlfriend's mother, was called as a prosecution rebuttal witness, admitted that she had given some information to a district attorney's investigator, and denied that she had identified defendant as having visited F twice on that morning and having left the home with F. Over objection, the investigator testified that, in an interview, Mrs. D had told him defendant twice visited F on the morning of the robbery and that the men had gone off together. Held, the investigator's testimony was properly admitted as evidence that Mrs. D's interview statements were true.

Defendant argued that the prosecution could not place Mrs. D on the stand to elicit her version of the interview as a device for getting in the investigator's inconsistent version of these statements, ostensibly as impeachment but really to prove the truth of the investigator's testimony. Regardless of which side calls the witness, his availability for cross-examination permits the jury to choose between his former version and his present testimony. (20 C.A.3d 494.) "The witness' recantation permits the inference that he has something to hide, and this inference provides the earlier version a measure of reliability. The jury may choose which version to believe or reject both versions altogether. When a litigant intentionally brings in the declarant for the purpose of eliciting a predictably false version, he is not misusing section 1235 but utilizing it for the very purpose it is designed to fulfill--that is, to open the door to a second witness with a conceivably reliable indicator of the actual events. The technique conforms to the letter and spirit of section 1235, which supplies factfinders with a formerly unavailable means for uncovering the truth." (20 C.A.3d 495.) (See People v. Jenkins (1973) 34 C.A.3d 893, 898, 110 C.R. 465; People v. Brown (1995) 35 C.A.4th 1585, 1597, 42 C.R.2d 155 [witness' prior statements were properly admitted; they were clearly inconsistent with trial testimony, and this was true even though she did not deny making them but only denied their truth; following Freeman.)]

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

E. Prior Statements of Witnesses.

1. Prior Inconsistent and Consistent Statements.
  - c. Prior Consistent Statements.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 161

[§ 161] Prior Consistent Statements.

A prior statement of a witness, consistent with the witness' present testimony, is admissible if "offered in compliance with" Ev.C. 791. (Ev.C. 1236.) Ev.C. 791, the impeachment statute, limits the use of prior consistent statements to situations where the credibility of the witness has been attacked. Two changes were made in existing law by Ev.C. 791 and 1236: (1) Ev.C. 791 broadens the grounds for rehabilitation. (See 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §364 et seq.) (2) Although Ev.C. 1236 does not permit unlimited use of the prior consistent statement (it must meet the conditions of Ev.C. 791), it comes in as affirmative evidence. (See People v. Cannady (1972) 8 C.3d 379, 385, 105 C.R. 129, 503 P.2d 585 [rejecting contentions that Ev.C. 1236 violates federal right of confrontation and California due process]; People v. Bunyard (1988) 45 C.3d 1189, 1208, 249 C.R. 71, 756 P.2d 795; People v. Fair (1988) 203 C.A.3d 1303, 1309, 250 C.R. 486 [after defense counsel implied that victim had fabricated claim that defendant told her she would be taken to hospital and have tube stuck in her if she disclosed molestation, victim's prior consistent statement to her cousin was properly admitted].)

The abandonment of the "subtle distinction" between mere impeachment and affirmative evidence is justified in the Law Revision Commission Comment as follows: "It is not realistic to expect a jury to understand that it cannot believe that a witness was telling the truth on a former occasion even though it believes that the same story given at the hearing is true."

As with prior inconsistent statements (supra, §156), Ev.C. 1236 allows the admission of a prior consistent statement only where the witness testifies at the hearing at which the question of the admissibility of the prior statement arises. (People v. Hitchings (1997) 59 C.A.4th 915, 921, 922, 69 C.R.2d 484 [following People v. Williams (1976) 16 C.3d 663, 128 C.R. 888, 547 P.2d 1000, supra, §158; where murder defendant did not take stand but testimony from his prior trial for same crime was read, recording of his jailhouse conversation with his girlfriend was not admissible as prior consistent statement].)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

E. Prior Statements of Witnesses.

2. Past Recollection Recorded.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 162

[§ 162] Past Recollection Recorded.

(1) In General. Under prior law, the doctrine of "past recollection recorded" was developed to allow a witness to use a previously recorded memorandum on the stand as part of the witness' testimony, when his or her recollection was insufficient. Upon laying the proper foundation to assure trustworthiness, the writing could be read into evidence. (See 3 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §734 et seq.; 9 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 147 [comparison of past recollection recorded and business records].)

Ev.C. 1237 restates former C.C.P. 2047 with some modifications, and provides that the writing can be introduced by the adverse party but not by the proponent. (Ev.C. 1237(b).) The importance of the codification is in the recognition and classification of this type of evidence as a hearsay exception. (See People v. Miller (1996) 46 C.A.4th 412, 423, 424, 53 C.R.2d 773 [trial judge properly concluded that witness' past statements to detective, who recorded them, were reliable and met statutory requirements, where she acknowledged in court having spoken to detective, asserted she had tried to tell him the truth, remembered discussing with him statements she overheard regarding shooting police, but could not recall if she told him that defendant made such a statement]; on foundation requirements, see 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §182 et seq.)

(2) Federal Rule. F.R. Evid., Rule 803(5) is similar to Ev.C. 1237. It excepts from the hearsay rule "[a] memorandum or record concerning a matter about which a witness once had knowledge but now has insufficient recollection to enable the witness to testify fully and accurately, shown to have been made or adopted by the witness when the matter was fresh in the witness' memory and to reflect that knowledge correctly. If admitted, the memorandum or record may be read into evidence but may not itself be received as an exhibit unless offered by an adverse party." (See 4 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §443; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §1258 et seq.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

E. Prior Statements of Witnesses.

3. Prior Identification.

a. Independent Evidence.

[§ 163] Independent Evidence.

(1) Former Restrictive Rule. Victims or observers of crime are often called upon to identify an accused in a police lineup, and later, at trial, either the victim or some other witness testifies to identity. The prior identification is the equivalent of a prior statement--inconsistent if the witness testifies differently at trial, consistent if the same identification is made. Many courts reject this as independent evidence, admitting it only to corroborate a witness' present testimony attacked as a fabrication. And this was originally assumed to be the California rule. (See People v. Slobodion (1948) 31 C.2d 555, 560, 191 P.2d 1; People v. Kerns (1960) 181 C.A.2d 1, 3, 4 C.R. 925; and see generally 4 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1130; 8 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 467; 71 A.L.R.2d 449; 1952 A.S. 738; 1955 A.S. 619; 1956 A.S. 526; 1958 A.S. 649; 1960 A.S. 556; on constitutionality of compulsory lineup, see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §392 et seq.)

(2) Current Rule: Independent Evidence. In People v. Gould (1960) 54 C.2d 621, 626, 7 C.R. 273, 354 P.2d 865, the court repudiated the restrictive language of the Slobodion case: "[E]vidence of an extrajudicial identification is admitted regardless of whether the testimonial identification is impeached, because the earlier identification has greater probative value than an identification made in the courtroom after the suggestions of others and the circumstances of the trial may have intervened to create a fancied recognition in the witness' mind." Moreover, "[t]he failure of the witness to repeat the extrajudicial identification in court does not destroy its probative value, for such failure may be explained by loss of memory or other circumstances." And, "[t]he extrajudicial identification tends to connect the defendant with the crime, and the principal danger of admitting hearsay evidence is not present since the witness is available at the trial for cross-examination." (See People v. Cook (1967) 252 C.A.2d 25, 60 C.R. 133; 8 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 467; 78 Harv. L. Rev. 887; 1964 A.S. 356; 1965 A.S. 564.)

Ev.C. 1238 codified the Gould rule by making a hearsay exception for a prior statement of a witness which would have been admissible if made by the witness while testifying, and which is "an identification of a party or another as a person who participated in a crime or other occurrence."

Thus, if the witness admits the prior identification, it is admissible under Ev.C. 1238; if the witness denies it or testifies contrary to it, the prior identification is admissible as a prior inconsistent statement under Ev.C. 1235, supra, §156. (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1238; see People v. Holmes (1993) 12 C.A.4th 1094, 1097, 1098, 16 C.R.2d 52, infra, §166, citing the text; on overruling of certain aspects of Gould case, see infra, §166.)

(2) Current Rule: Independent Evidence. See People v. Boyer (2006) 38 C.4th 412, 480, 42 C.R.3d 677, 133 P.3d 581 [in capital murder trial, witness' out-of-court identification of defendant, in photographic lineup, as perpetrator of prior murder was sufficient, together with some independent evidence, to support jury's conclusion that defendant committed this crime]. West's Key Number Digest, Criminal Law k.339.11 et seq.; Evidence k.317(14)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

E. Prior Statements of Witnesses.

3. Prior Identification.

b. Conditions of Admissibility.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 164

[§ 164] Conditions of Admissibility.

Ev.C. 1238 lays down the following foundation requirements: (a) The statement must have been made at a time when the crime or other occurrence "was fresh in the witness' memory"; and (b) the witness must first testify "that he made the identification and that it was a true reflection of his opinion at that time."

The statement is inadmissible when the declarant is unavailable. In People v. Mayfield (1972) 23 C.A.3d 236, 100 C.R. 104, deputy sheriff M, who had the only direct knowledge about defendant's alleged drug sales, died after testifying at the preliminary examination but before the trial. At the trial, the prosecutor introduced evidence, over objection, that M had identified a photograph of defendant after the first sale. Held, the evidence was inadmissible. Under Ev.C. 1238(c), the hearsay exception applies where "the statement is offered after the witness testifies that he made the identification." Here, M did not testify to the photographic identification at the preliminary hearing and was not present to testify at the trial. (23 C.A.3d 241.) (See 29 A.L.R.4th 104 [admissibility and weight of pretrial identification where witness is unable or fails to make in-court identification].)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

E. Prior Statements of Witnesses.

3. Prior Identification.

c. Methods of Identification.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 165

[§ 165] Methods of Identification.

The identification is frequently made at a police lineup. (See People v. Slobodion (1948) 31 C.2d 555, 560, 191 P.2d 1; People v. Kerns (1960) 181 C.A.2d 1, 3, 4 C.R. 925.) (On constitutional requirements for police lineup, see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §392 et seq.)

But it need not be. In People v. Ford (1959) 175 C.A.2d 109, 345 P.2d 573, a prosecution for sale of narcotics to a deputy sheriff, the latter testified to the sale; on cross-examination, he stated that he only saw defendant in person once on that day; on redirect, he stated that he saw a photograph of defendant in the "mug" records 1 hour after the arrest, and identified defendant as the man who made the sale. Upholding admission, the court said:

"In examining him extensively concerning his appearance and identity, defendant invited the subsequent effort of the prosecution to show that there could be neither a mistake on the deputy's part, nor a recent contrivance by him in identifying the defendant; and to strengthen the deputy's testimony and reestablish his identification as positive, it offered the defendant's photograph to show that immediately after the commission of the offense, at a time when defendant's appearance was freshest in his mind and the deputy was least subject to suggestion, he positively identified the man as the one shown in the photograph." (175 C.A.2d 112.) (See People v. Lockhart (1962) 200 C.A.2d 862, 868, 19 C.R. 719 [pretrial identification of defendant from photograph in family album, admitted as corroboration]; People v. Leung (1992) 5 C.A.4th 482, 497, 7 C.R.2d 290 [photographic lineup]; People v. Johnson (1992) 3 C.4th 1183, 1215, 14 C.R.2d 702, 842 P.2d 1 [same]; 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §409.)

In People v. Imbler (1962) 57 C.2d 711, 716, 21 C.R. 568, 371 P.2d 304, the witness C saw defendant flee the scene of the crime, and identified him at the lineup. The defense attacked this by showing that it took place only after C had heard other witnesses do so. The prosecution was then allowed to introduce a police artist's drawing of the killer made from C's description, which constituted a reasonable likeness of defendant. This "pictorial embodiment of a physical description" was held admissible for the same purpose as an extrajudicial identification.

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

E. Prior Statements of Witnesses.

3. Prior Identification.

d. Sufficiency and Weight.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 166

[§ 166] Sufficiency and Weight.

(1) Former Rule Requiring Corroboration. People v. Gould (1960) 54 C.2d 621, 7 C.R. 273, 354 P.2d 865, supra, §163, held that a prior identification, though admissible as independent evidence, has insufficient weight to sustain a judgment of conviction. Thus, unless there is other evidence to connect the defendant with the crime, the extrajudicial identification must be "confirmed by an identification at the trial." (54 C.2d 631.) (See 8 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 467.)

The Gould holding was the subject of a number of subsequent decisions, most of which found the prior identification sufficient to sustain the judgment. (See People v. Chavez (1980) 26 C.3d 334, 362, 161 C.R. 762, 605 P.2d 401 [sufficient other evidence to allow jury to credit witness' preliminary hearing testimony over his contradictory trial testimony]; People v. Ford (1981) 30 C.3d 209, 215, 178 C.R. 196, 635 P.2d 1176 [because pretrial identification was made under oath at preliminary hearing, reliability concerns under Gould rule were satisfied]; In re Miguel L. (1982) 32 C.3d 100, 107, 185 C.R. 120, 649 P.2d 703 [Gould rule was not satisfied, where earlier identification was unsworn extrajudicial statement by accomplice and was repudiated at trial]; People v. Garcia (1983) 138 C.A.3d 976, 985, 188 C.R. 353 [sufficient other evidence to support admission of extrajudicial identification].)

The Gould rule was held inapplicable in People v. Holmes (1993) 12 C.A.4th 1094, 16 C.R.2d 52, where the woman whose identification of defendant was at issue was neither a victim of the crime nor a direct witness. Rather, she had been present both when defendant declared his intention to commit a robbery and later when he returned, saying he had accomplished the crime and shot the victim. Held, the trial judge's failure to instruct on the need for independent corroboration was not error; the Gould rule comes into play only when a nonaccomplice witness to a criminal offense--victim or bystander--makes an out-of-court identification of the defendant and subsequently fails to identify the defendant at trial. (12 C.A.4th 1097, 1098, citing the text.)

(2) Corroboration Requirement Abolished. In People v. Cuevas (1995) 12 C.4th 252, 48 C.R.2d 135, 906 P.2d 1290, the Supreme Court abolished the corroboration requirement of Gould. After a shooting incident, one eyewitness identified defendant as the perpetrator, and another eyewitness gave a description of the perpetrator that matched defendant and was consistent with the first witness' description. At trial, both witnesses recanted. Defendant moved for a judgment of acquittal on the ground that there was no in-court identification of him as the shooter and no other evidence linking him to the crimes. The trial judge denied both that motion and defendant's subsequent request to instruct the jury that it could not convict defendant on the basis of an out-of-court identification unless it found that the identification was corroborated by other evidence tending to connect defendant to the offense. The jury found defendant guilty of assault with a firearm. The Court of Appeal concluded that each out-of-court statement corroborated the other, thus there was sufficient evidence to support the conviction, but the court reversed because of the trial judge's prejudicial failure to instruct on the need for corroboration. Held, judgment of the Court of Appeal reversed.

(a) The Gould rule "deems an uncorroborated out-of-court identification insufficient evidence as a matter of law to support a conviction regardless of the identification's probative value or the existence of other evidence in the record." It conflicts with the substantial evidence test normally applied to determine the sufficiency of evidence to support a criminal conviction, and for that reason alone the rule would bear a heavy burden if the question were whether to adopt it for the first time. (12 C.4th 264.)

(b) The Gould opinion offers no convincing justification for adoption of the rule, and the Gould court itself recognized that an out-of-court identification generally has greater probative value than an in-court identification, even when the identifying witness does not confirm the out-of-court identification. Logically, both types of identification should be measured by the same standard in judging their sufficiency to support a conviction. Indeed, no other jurisdiction has adopted a rule as strict as Gould, and numerous courts have held that an out-of-court identification can be sufficient by itself to support a conviction even in the absence of other evidence connecting the defendant to the crime. The circumstances surrounding the out-of-court identification, while not constituting the independent corroboration Gould requires, can themselves adequately demonstrate the accuracy and reliability of the identification. (12 C.4th 266, 267.)

(c) "We conclude that, considerations of stare decisis notwithstanding, this approach--individually assessing the circumstances of the out-of-court identification to determine whether it is sufficient to support a criminal conviction--is a sound one and should be applied to all out-of-court identifications. Accordingly, we hereby overrule that portion of Gould ... holding that an out-of-court identification is in all cases insufficient by itself to sustain a conviction and must be corroborated by other evidence linking the defendant to the crime. Instead, the substantial evidence test ... should be used to determine whether an out-of-court identification is sufficient to support a criminal conviction." (12 C.4th 271, 272; also disapproving: (1) the requirement of People v. Marquez (1993) 16 C.A.4th 115, 121, 20 C.R.2d 365, that the trial judge instruct the jury sua sponte on the corroboration requirement; (2) former CALJIC (5th ed.), No. 3.11.1, which embodied the Marquez holding; and (3) People v. Armijo (1990) 221 C.A.3d 271, 278, 270 C.R. 496, and In re Stephen P. (1983) 145 C.A.3d 123, 193 C.R. 263, to the extent they applied the corroboration requirement.) "[T]he availability of the identifying witness for cross-examination, the opportunity of the defense to present other evidence questioning the reliability of the out-of-court identification and to request appropriate jury instructions, and the requirement that substantial evidence support the conviction are adequate safeguards against the unjust conviction of a defendant solely on the basis of an unreliable out-of-court identification." (12 C.4th 274, 275.)

(d) Here, based on the circumstances of the out-of-court identifications, a reasonable jury could have found that the two witnesses were telling the truth originally and that they recanted their statements in court for gang-related reasons. The out-of-court statements were substantial evidence from which the jury could conclude beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant committed assault with a firearm. (12 C.4th 276, 277.) (See 24 Pepperdine L. Rev. 749 [Cuevas].)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

E. Prior Statements of Witnesses.

4. Complaint of Victim in Sex Case.

a. In General.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 167

[§ 167] In General.

Under the "fresh complaint" doctrine, the fact that the victim of a rape or similar sexual offense complained to someone after the alleged offense may be shown; but the theories of admissibility are conflicting. Some traditional justifications are: (1) making the complaint supports the credibility of the victim's testimony; (2) the complaint is circumstantial evidence tending to show the victim's lack of consent; and (3) the complaint comes within the "res gestae" exception to the hearsay rule. (See 4 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1134 et seq.; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§1760, 1761; 2 McCormick 5th, §272.1.) Freshness of the complaint is no longer a requirement in California. (See People v. Brown (1994) 8 C.4th 746, 35 C.R.2d 407, 883 P.2d 949, infra, §168 [rejecting traditional views and formulating new approach based on current psychological studies of victim behavior].)

The doctrine is applied to male, as well as female, victims of sexual molestation. (See People v. Butler (1967) 249 C.A.2d 799, 805, 57 C.R. 798, citing the text [10-year-old boy].)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

E. Prior Statements of Witnesses.

4. Complaint of Victim in Sex Case.

b. Freshness Requirement Abandoned.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 168

[§ 168] Freshness Requirement Abandoned.

People v. Burton (1961) 55 C.2d 328, 351, 11 C.R. 65, 359 P.2d 433, offered the following explanation for the fresh complaint doctrine: "It is natural to expect that the victim of such a crime would complain of it, and the prosecution can show the fact of complaint to forestall the assumption that none was made and that therefore the offense did not occur." In other words, the complaint is admitted not for the truth of its recitals, but because the fact that it was made is relevant on the issue of whether the offense occurred. (See People v. Meacham (1984) 152 C.A.3d 142, 158, 199 C.R. 586 [instructions to this effect were proper].) Under this reasoning, if it is assumed that a complaint is a natural response to the offense, then the longer the victim remains silent, the greater the likelihood that there was no offense at all. (See People v. Hubbell (1942) 54 C.A.2d 49, 63, 64, 128 P.2d 579; In re Cheryl H. (1984) 153 C.A.3d 1098, 1129, footnotes 33, 34, 200 C.R. 789, and [child molestation victim's declarations were not admissible because they were made 1 to 2 months after the incidents and only in response to questioning by psychologist]; 89 A.L.R.3d 102 [time element as affecting admissibility on theory of res gestae, spontaneous exclamation, or excited utterance].)

This justification for the freshness requirement was rejected in People v. Brown (1994) 8 C.4th 746, 35 C.R.2d 407, 883 P.2d 949, a prosecution for lewd and lascivious conduct with a child. The trial judge admitted evidence of the victim's out-of-court statements in which she disclosed incidents of sexual molestation, even though the statements were not made promptly after the incidents occurred and were made only in response to questioning by an adult friend. Held, affirmed.

(a) Current studies indicate that "it is not inherently 'natural' for the victim to confide in someone or to disclose, immediately following commission of the offense, that he or she was sexually assaulted." (8 C.4th 758.)

(b) Evidence of the victim's complaint may nevertheless be relevant for a number of nonhearsay purposes, regardless of how promptly it was made. If it was made promptly, the circumstances under which it was made may help the jury to determine whether the alleged offense occurred, and may eliminate the risk that the jury will erroneously infer that no prompt complaint was made. On the other hand, if the complaint was delayed, evidence of the circumstances surrounding it, "including those that might shed light upon the reason for the delay, will reduce the risk that the jury, perhaps influenced by outmoded myths regarding the 'usual' or 'natural' response of victims of sexual offenses, will arrive at an erroneous conclusion with regard to whether the offense occurred." (8 C.4th 761, 762.)

(c) Often it is the defendant who believes that the circumstances under which the complaint was made will be helpful, and indeed, the defense, unlike the prosecution, has generally been free to introduce and rely on the contents of the complaint as a prior inconsistent statement. (8 C.4th 762, citing the text.)

(d) Although recently acquired knowledge has undercut the rationale for the fresh complaint doctrine, it does not support a rule excluding all evidence relating to the circumstances under which an alleged sex-offense victim complained. In re Cheryl H., supra, stated limitations on the admission of such evidence that can no longer be justified, but, shorn of those limitations, the doctrine remains viable. (8 C.4th 762, 763.)

(e) Therefore, "under principles generally applicable to the determination of evidentiary relevance and admissibility, proof of an extrajudicial complaint, made by the victim of a sexual offense, disclosing the alleged assault, may be admissible for a limited, nonhearsay purpose--namely, to establish the fact of, and the circumstances surrounding, the victim's disclosure of the assault to others--whenever the fact that the disclosure was made and the circumstances under which it was made are relevant to the trier of fact's determination as to whether the offense occurred." The "freshness" of a complaint, and its "volunteered" nature, should not be viewed as essential prerequisites to admissibility. (8 C.4th 749, 750.)

(f) In the present case, the trial judge did not err in admitting the evidence. The victim testified to a series of sexual offenses occurring over a period of several years during which she failed to report the incidents to anyone. The circumstances under which the alleged molestation came to light were reasonably probative of whether the molestation actually occurred. Furthermore, the testimony relating to the victim's complaint was properly limited to the timing of the complaint and the circumstances under which it was made. The content of the statements and any description of the molestation itself were omitted. (8 C.4th 764.) (See People v. Snyder (1993) 14 C.A.4th 1166, 1172, 18 C.R.2d 496 [testimony of defendant's wife that victim told her about assault was admissible even though victim waited all night to speak to wife]; 23 Pepperdine L. Rev. 255 [Brown]; 17 J. Juvenile Law 226 [same].)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

E. Prior Statements of Witnesses.

4. Complaint of Victim in Sex Case.

c. Inadmissibility of Details.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 169

[§ 169] Inadmissibility of Details.

Whatever may be the proper theory or theories of admission (see supra, §167), it is well settled that only the complaint may be proved; the details of the alleged offense are incompetent hearsay, and the witness should not be allowed to recite those details in testifying to the complaint. (See People v. Wilmot (1903) 139 C. 103, 106, 72 P. 838; People v. Ewing (1925) 71 C.A. 138, 142, 234 P. 917; People v. Gutierrez (1932) 126 C.A. 526, 529, 14 P.2d 838; People v. Adams (1939) 14 C.2d 154, 157, 93 P.2d 146; 1 Jefferson, California Evidence Benchbook 3d, §18.27; 4 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1134 et seq.; on defendant's right to introduce not only fact of complaint, but also its contents, see People v. Brown (1994) 8 C.4th 746, 762, 35 C.R.2d 407, 883 P.2d 949, supra, §168.)

But limiting the testimony to the "bare fact" of the complaint is unwarranted. In People v. Burton (1961) 55 C.2d 328, 11 C.R. 65, 359 P.2d 433, the court disapproved overstrict language in Wilmot and Adams, pointing out that a complaint as to an unspecified subject matter would be meaningless. Hence, "although details cannot be recounted, it can be shown by the People 'that the complaint related to the matter being inquired into, and not a complaint wholly foreign to the subject' ... that is, the alleged victim's statement of the nature of the offense and the identity of the asserted offender, without details, is proper." (55 C.2d 351.) (See People v. Meacham (1984) 152 C.A.3d 142, 159, 199 C.R. 586 [following Burton]; People v. Fair (1988) 203 C.A.3d 1303, 1313, 250 C.R. 486 [statements to doctor concerning nature of possible injuries to guide him in his examination and expert opinion were not recital of details and were admissible for limited purpose].)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

E. Prior Statements of Witnesses.

4. Complaint of Victim in Sex Case.

d. Testimony by Alleged Victim.

[§ 170] Testimony by Alleged Victim.

In People v. Wade (1960) 181 C.A.2d 314, 315, 5 C.R. 63, a prosecution for violation of P.C. 288, the court assumed the basic rule to be that the evidence is merely corroborative of the victim's testimony, and is inadmissible hearsay where the victim does not testify, except where the victim is too young to do so. (See 4 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1136.)

In People v. Nankervis (1960) 183 C.A.2d 744, 7 C.R. 263, on unusual facts, the court referred to this supposed limitation, but left the question open (183 C.A.2d 747). Defendant was charged with statutory rape and lewd conduct with child, committed on his own 14-year-old daughter. A police officer, called to the stand, was asked whether the daughter "made a complaint to you of a sexual nature." He answered "yes." The daughter was then called, and she testified to her age, unmarried status, residence, relationship, and the time when defendant was at home; but she refused to answer questions relating to the offenses, claiming the self-incrimination privilege. Defendant contended that, although the victim did take the stand, she gave no testimony to corroborate. Held, there was no reversible error.

(a) At the time the officer testified to the complaint, the daughter had not yet been called as a witness. Defendant might have challenged the order of proof, but instead raised the untenable objections that the testimony was hearsay, incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial. (183 C.A.2d 737, 748.)

(b) When the daughter did take the stand and refused to testify to the acts, the hearsay objection to the officer's testimony was appropriate; but at that time the evidence was in, and defendant, by failing to move to strike (see 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §385), waived the objection. (183 C.A.2d 748.)

In People v. Meacham (1984) 152 C.A.3d 142, 199 C.R. 586, the children were too young to testify, and it was contended that in such a case, the person testifying can state only that the victim "made a complaint." This contention was rejected and the rule of People v. Burton (1961) 55 C.2d 328, 11 C.R. 65, 359 P.2d 433, supra, §169, was held applicable. (152 C.A.3d 160.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

F. Statement of Victim of Child Abuse or Neglect.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 171

[§ 171] Statement of Victim of Child Abuse or Neglect.

(1) In General. Ev.C. 1360 provides that in a criminal prosecution in which the victim is a minor, a statement made by the victim when under the age of 12 describing any act of child abuse or neglect (as defined in Ev.C. 1360(c)) "performed with or on the child by another, or describing any attempted act of child abuse or neglect with or on the child by another," is not made inadmissible by the hearsay rule. (Ev.C. 1360(a).) The following conditions apply:

(a) The statement is not otherwise admissible under a statute or court rule.

(b) In a hearing outside the presence of the jury, the court finds that the time, content, and circumstances of the statement indicate reliability.

(c) The child either testifies at the proceedings, or is unavailable as a witness, in which case the statement may be admitted only if there is evidence of the child abuse or neglect that corroborates the child's statement. (Ev.C. 1360(a).)

(2) Advance Disclosure Requirement. The proponent of the statement must make known to the adverse party the intention to offer the statement and the particulars of the statement far enough in advance to provide the adverse party with a fair opportunity to prepare to meet the statement. (Ev.C. 1360(b).) (See People v. Brodit (1998) 61 C.A.4th 1312, 1329, 1330, 72 C.R.2d 154, infra, §197 [victim's statements to aunt, social worker, and detective concerning abuse were sufficiently reliable, where they were repeated, with only minor variations, to five adults, there was nothing about victim's mental state indicating unreliability, her knowledge of sexual matters was beyond what would ordinarily be expected of one so young, and she had no motive to invent accusations]; 27 Pacific L. J. 768; on admissibility of statements by child abuse or neglect victim made during course of treatment or diagnosis, see infra, §197; on court-created "child dependency hearsay exception," which, unlike Ev.C. 1360, may be applicable in noncriminal proceeding, see In re Cindy L. (1997) 17 C.4th 15, 69 C.R.2d 803, 947 P.2d 1340, infra, §172.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. In People v. Roberto V. (2001) 93 C.A.4th 1350, 113 C.R.2d 804, defendant was charged with committing lewd acts against his two daughters, aged 3 and 7 at the time of the offenses. After the jury was selected, the prosecutor informed the trial judge and the defense that he intended to introduce the younger daughter's out-of-court statements by way of the mother's testimony. The trial court reserved ruling on the statements' admissibility. After the mother began testifying, the prosecutor requested that the statements be admitted pursuant to Ev.C. 1360. The trial judge ruled the statements admissible, the mother related them in her testimony, and defendant was found guilty. Held, reversed; the statements were improperly admitted.

(b) The trial judge found that the statute's unavailability requirement was met because, at the time of trial, the minor was only 4 years old. However, 4-year-olds are not always unable to qualify as witnesses, and no hearing was held to determine this minor's competence. In the absence of such a determination, the unavailability requirement was not satisfied. (93 C.A.4th 1368, 1369.)

(c) The advance notice requirement was also unmet. The statute requires notice "in advance of the proceedings." For purposes of Ev.C. 1360, the proceedings begin when the jury is sworn. "As a practical matter, the parties need to know what evidence may be offered in order to make opening statements and to prepare for the examination of witnesses." (93 C.A.4th 1372.) Here, the prosecutor did not announce his intention to utilize Ev.C. 1360 until the mother was already midway through her testimony. (93 C.A.4th 1372, 1373.)

(d) Admission of the testimony violated not only Ev.C. 1360, but also defendant's constitutional rights. The Confrontation Clause of the Sixth Amendment precludes the admission of hearsay evidence unless the prosecution demonstrates that the statement possesses adequate indicia of reliability. Reliability may be inferred if the hearsay is admitted under a firmly rooted exception, but Ev.C. 1360 is not a firmly rooted hearsay exception and, in any case, its requirements were not met. Although it appears that the minor had no motive to fabricate, there is little in the record regarding either the circumstances in which the statements were made or the minor's state of mind that would suggest reliability. Because the other evidence in the case was far from conclusive, admission of the minor's statements, which amounted to assertions that defendant had molested her and supported the confusing testimony of the other daughter, must be deemed prejudicial. (93 C.A.4th 1376, 1377.) (3) (New) Constitutionality. In People v. Eccleston (2001) 89 C.A.4th 436, 107 C.R.2d 440, a prosecution for sexual molestation of a child under the age of 14, the prosecution moved under Ev.C. 1360 to admit statements by the victim in a videotaped interview, on the ground that testifying at trial would be harmful to her. The trial judge found the victim to be unavailable within the meaning of the statute and granted the motion. The videotape was played for the jury, and defendant was convicted. Held, affirmed; the videotaped statements were properly admitted.

(a) Ev.C. 1360 is too new to be considered a firmly rooted hearsay exception because it does not reflect longstanding judicial and legislative experience in assessing the trustworthiness of the statements it covers. In order to pass muster under the Confrontation Clause, therefore, any statements admitted under the statute must contain "particularized guarantees of trustworthiness." (89 C.A.4th 445, quoting Idaho v. Wright (1990) 497 U.S. 805, 110 S.Ct. 3139, 111 L.Ed.2d 638.)

(b) Here, the required guarantees were present. The victim's statements regarding the molestation were spontaneously made and consistently repeated. (89 C.A.4th 446.) Although she came into defendant's home as a foster child and still suffered the aftereffects of previous instability, she appeared to have a clear understanding of the basic factual matters she was describing. She also appeared to have a knowledge of sexual matters that was unexpectedly advanced for her age. (89 C.A.4th 447.) She did not have any apparent motive to fabricate her accusations, and the environment in which she made her statements was comforting and calming, and would not have put any undue pressure on her. (89 C.A.4th 448.)

(c) Not only does Ev.C. 1360 ensure that the constitutional trustworthiness guarantees are satisfied, it imposes additional safeguards where, as here, the victim does not testify at the proceedings: the victim must be found to be unavailable, and there must be evidence of abuse or neglect corroborating the victim's statements. The trial judge's findings as to both of these additional requirements were amply supported by the evidence. There was no constitutional violation. (89 C.A.4th 449, 450.)

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 172

[§ 172] Child Dependency Hearsay Exception.

In re Cindy L. (1997) 17 C.4th 15, 69 C.R.2d 803, 947 P.2d 1340, was a child dependency proceeding in which the trial judge admitted the minor's hearsay statements concerning sexual abuse, even though she was found incompetent to testify. The judge did this in reliance on the "child dependency hearsay exception" created by the Court of Appeal in the case of In re Carmen O. (1994) 28 C.A.4th 908, 33 C.R.2d 848, 10 Summary (9th), Parent and Child, Supp., §689B. Held, affirmed. The appellate courts have the authority to create hearsay exceptions, and the Carmen O. court was correct in determining that a child dependency hearsay exception was needed (17 C.4th 26, 28). However, before the exception can be applied, the following requirements must be met: (a) The court must find that the time, content, and circumstances of the statement provide sufficient indicia of reliability; (b) either the child must be available for cross-examination or there must be evidence of child sexual abuse that corroborates the statement; and (c) other interested parties must have adequate notice of the public agency's intention to introduce the statement. (17 C.4th 29.) (See 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §868; 10 Summary (9th), Parent and Child, Supp., §689B.)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

H. Spontaneous Statements.

1. Modern Development of Doctrine.

a. Theory of Admissibility.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 173

[§ 173] Theory of Admissibility.

Statements of any person (participant or observer) made at or near the time of some exciting event under the stress of excitement produced by the event, and relating to the event, are admissible in civil and criminal cases. The theory is that the declarant has had no opportunity to fabricate a false story, and the test laid down by Wigmore has been approved in California: "(1) [T]here must be some occurrence startling enough to produce this nervous excitement and render the utterance spontaneous and unreflecting; (2) the utterance must have been before there has been time to contrive and misrepresent, i.e., while the nervous excitement may be supposed still to dominate and the reflective powers to be yet in abeyance; and (3) the utterance must relate to the circumstance of the occurrence preceding it." (Showalter v. Western Pac. R. Co. (1940) 16 C.2d 460, 468, 106 P.2d 895; see People v. Keelin (1955) 136 C.A.2d 860, 868, 289 P.2d 520; *People v. Commentary on the doctrine is extensive. The early cases used the phrase "declarations part of the res gestae" loosely to describe several sorts of admissible hearsay and nonhearsay statements, including verbal acts (infra, §183) and excited or spontaneous utterances. However, the terminology of Wigmore is now established in California, and the statements coming under this exception are properly described as "spontaneous exclamations," "spontaneous declarations," or "spontaneous statements." (See Showalter v. Western Pac. R. Co., supra; People v. Keelin, supra, 136 C.A.2d 868 [trial judge announced that he would permit introduction of statements as part of the res gestae; "we feel sure the court referred to spontaneous declarations, rather than verbal acts"]; *People v. ## CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

H. Spontaneous Statements.

1. Modern Development of Doctrine.
- b. Evidence Code and Federal Rules.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 174

[§ 174] Evidence Code and Federal Rules.

(1) Evidence Code. Ev.C. 1240 codifies the modern rule, making admissible a statement which "(a) Purports to narrate, describe, or explain an act, condition, or event perceived by the declarant; and (b) was made spontaneously while the declarant was under the stress of excitement caused by such perception." (See People v. Anthony O. (1992) 5 C.A.4th 428, 436, 6 C.R.2d 794, citing the text; infra, §178 et seq.)

Formerly, the judge's preliminary determination of the conditions of admissibility was subject to redetermination by the jury. (People v. Keelin (1955) 136 C.A.2d 860, 872, 289 P.2d 520; 56 A.L.R.2d 372 [question of spontaneity as for court or jury].) Under Ev.C. 405, the issue is finally determined by the judge without resubmission to the jury. (See Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 405; People v. Tewksbury (1976) 15 C.3d 953, 966, footnote 13, 127 C.R. 135, 544 P.2d 1335; 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §63.)

(2) Federal Rules of Evidence. F.R. Evid., Rule 803(2) states the exception for Excited Utterance: "A statement relating to a startling event or condition made while the declarant was under the stress of excitement caused by the event or condition." (See 4 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §435; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §865; 155 A.L.R. Fed 583 [what is excited utterance within meaning of rule].) F.R. Evid., Rule 803(1) states a separate exception for Present Sense Impression: "A statement describing or explaining an event or condition made while the declarant was perceiving the event or condition, or immediately thereafter." (See People v. Hines (1997) 15 C.4th 997, 1036, 64 C.R.2d 594, 938 P.2d 388 [admission of testimony about telephone conversation between witness and murder victim, one portion of which tended to indicate that defendant was with murder victim, came within federal hearsay exception for present sense impressions and therefore could not have violated Confrontation Clause of Sixth Amendment]; 4 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §434; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §864.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

H. Spontaneous Statements.

1. Modern Development of Doctrine.

c. Relation to Other Exceptions.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 175

[§ 175] Relation to Other Exceptions.

The spontaneous exclamation doctrine allows proof of certain important types of utterances that do not meet the tests of other exceptions:

(1) An agent's or employee's admission of fault, not a vicarious admission against the employer because outside the scope of the employment or the agent's authority. "[A] spontaneous declaration made by an employee may be admissible against his employer as an exception to the hearsay rule ... separate and apart from the question of whether it was made in the scope of employment." (Lane v. Pacific Greyhound Lines (1945) 26 C.2d 575, 582, 160 P.2d 21 [bus driver].) (On whether spontaneous declaration of agent may be used to prove fact of agency, or scope of employment, see 2 McCormick 5th, §272; 47 Cal. L. Rev. 939; 10 Hastings L. J. 219.)

(2) A statement of the victim of a homicide, inadmissible as a dying declaration because of lack of the foundation showing of sense of impending death. (See 2 McCormick 5th, §310; 2 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 59, note 56; 1955 A.S. 627; 4 A.L.R.3d 149 [accusatory utterance by homicide victim after the act]; and see People v. Bazaure (1965) 235 C.A.2d 21, 37, 44 C.R. 831 [fatally stabbed prison guard's identification of his assailant was admissible under both exceptions].)

(3) If the conditions of the doctrine are met, self-serving statements. (People v. Haskell (1960) 185 C.A.2d 267, 273, 8 C.R. 228, infra, §181.)

People v. Anthony O. (1992) 5 C.A.4th 428, 436, 6 C.R.2d 794, summarizes the advantages of the spontaneous exclamation doctrine over other hearsay exceptions: (a) Admissibility does not depend on declarant unavailability (citing People v. Jones (1984) 155 C.A.3d 653, 202 C.R. 289, infra, §177); (b) the exclamation need not be made at the time of the event at issue (citing People v. Jones, supra [30-40 minute delay]), and can even be made in response to questions (citing People v. Farmer (1989) 47 C.3d 888, 254 C.R. 508, 765 P.2d 940, infra, §178); (c) the declarant need not be identified (citing People v. Provencio (1989) 210 C.A.3d 290, 258 C.R. 330); (d) unlike an accomplice-witness' statement, a spontaneous exclamation does not need to be corroborated (citing People v. Sully (1991) 53 C.3d 1195, 283 C.R. 144, 812 P.2d 163); (e) the declarant need not satisfy witness qualifications (see infra, §176); (f) the exclamation may alone support a conviction (citing People v. Poggi (1988) 45 C.3d 306, 246 C.R. 886, 753 P.2d 1082, infra, §181); and (g) the exclamation is particularly likely to be truthful, and because of its trustworthiness, is likely to be better evidence than can be obtained from the same person on the stand (citing People v. Hughey (1987) 194 C.A.3d 1383, 240 C.R. 269, infra, §181).

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

H. Spontaneous Statements.

1. Modern Development of Doctrine.

d. Effect of Other Rules.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 176

[§ 176] Effect of Other Rules.

(1) Competency of Declarant. There is some authority supporting a challenge to the declarant's competency. (See 15 A.L.R.4th 1043 [admissibility of spontaneous declarations made by one incompetent to testify at trial]; on attack on declarant's credibility, see 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §357.) But in People v. Butler (1967) 249 C.A.2d 799, 806, 57 C.R. 798, involving the declaration of a 5-year-old girl, the court held that a declarant's incompetency to testify as a witness, for minority or other reasons, does not affect the admissibility of the declarant's spontaneous exclamations. (See People v. Orduno (1978) 80 C.A.3d 738, 745, 145 C.R. 806 [approving Butler]; In re Daniel Z. (1992) 10 C.A.4th 1009, 1022, 13 C.R.2d 139, 10 Summary (9th), Parent and Child, Supp., §689A [citing Orduno]; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1751; on relation of spontaneous statement exception to court-created child dependency hearsay exception, see In re Cindy L. (1997) 17 C.4th 15, 23, 28, 69 C.R.2d 803, 947 P.2d 1340, 10 Summary (9th), Parent and Child, Supp., §689B.)

(2) Right of Confrontation. In People v. Hughey (1987) 194 C.A.3d 1383, 240 C.R. 269, infra, §181, the court, relying on the coconspirator case of United States v. Inadi (1986) 475 U.S. 387, 106 S.Ct. 1121, 89 L.Ed.2d 390, held that unavailability of the declarant need not be shown. The basis of the Inadi holding was that statements made while the conspiracy was in progress provided evidence of the conspiracy's context that could not be replicated even if the coconspirator were to testify to the same matters. Applying that reasoning here, the basis for the spontaneous statement exception to the hearsay rule shows the value of and necessity for that evidence whether or not the declarant is unavailable to testify. A spontaneous statement is particularly likely to be truthful because it is made while under the stress of excitement and without opportunity to contrive or reflect. Thus, as in Inadi, "the victim's spontaneous statements are not a 'weaker substitute for live testimony' but a valuable form of evidence 'that cannot be replicated, even if the declarant testifies to the same matters in court,' and are therefore 'usually irreplaceable as substantive evidence, and of great value in furthering the purpose of the confrontation clause to advance the accuracy of the truth-determining process in criminal trials.'" (194 C.A.3d 1393; quoting Inadi.)

The court added, however, that defendant did have an opportunity to confront the declarant, who was in the courtroom under prosecution subpoena and could have been called as a witness and questioned as if under cross-examination. (194 C.A.3d 1393.) (See People v. Farmer (1989) 47 C.3d 888, 905, 254 C.R. 508, 765 P.2d 940, infra, §178; People v. Sully (1991) 53 C.3d 1195, 1229, 283 C.R. 144, 812 P.2d 163, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §92; People v. Gallego (1990) 52 C.3d 115, 176, 276 C.R. 679, 802 P.2d 169; People v. Pensinger (1991) 52 C.3d 1210, 1266, 278 C.R. 640, 805 P.2d 899 [evidence admitted under traditional hearsay exception does not violate Confrontation Clause if there are sufficient indicia of reliability to allow trier of fact to evaluate truth of statement; spontaneous declarations have that reliability].)

In White v. Illinois (1992) 502 U.S. 346, 112 S.Ct. 736, 116 L.Ed.2d 848, the Court reaffirmed the reasoning of Inadi and added this comment: "We therefore think it clear that the out-of-court statements admitted in this case had substantial probative value, value that could not be duplicated simply by the declarant later testifying in court. To exclude such probative statements under the strictures of the Confrontation Clause would be the height of wrong-headedness, given that the Confrontation Clause has as a basic purpose the promotion of the 'integrity of the factfinding process.' ... Given the evidentiary value of such statements, their reliability, and that establishing a generally applicable unavailability rule would have few practical benefits while imposing pointless litigation costs, we see no reason to treat the out-of-court statements in this case differently from those we found admissible in Inadi." (112 S.Ct. 743, 116 L.Ed.2d 859.)

(3) Opinion Rule. Excited utterances may be excluded on the basis that they are inadmissible opinions. (See Gatlin v. Union Oil Co. of Calif. (1916) 31 C.A. 597, 608, 161 P. 29; People v. Miron (1989) 210 C.A.3d 580, 582, 258 C.R. 494 [spontaneous declarant's opinion as to intruder's motive was properly excluded]; 53 A.L.R.2d 1287 [opinion as to cause of or responsibility for traffic accident]; 4 A.L.R.3d 1987 [victim's accusatory utterance after act of homicide]; on conflict elsewhere on this point, and argument against applying opinion rule, see 2 McCormick 5th, §272; 1955 A.S. 629; 1957 A.S. 547; 1964 A.S. 361.)

(4) Aranda-Bruton Rule. In People v. Jackson (1987) 192 C.A.3d 209, 237 C.R. 373, the Aranda-Bruton editing rule (supra, §59) was applied to a burglary defendant's spontaneous statement. The police spotted a car fleeing the scene of a burglary, and during the ensuing chase the car crashed. Defendant was subsequently found crouched near the freeway. As the police led him back to the accident scene, and before he was given his Miranda warnings, he stated that he was the driver of the car, that he had picked up friends on the street where the burglary occurred, and that he knew nothing about a burglary. The trial judge ruled that the statements were spontaneous utterances, but edited them in accordance with the Aranda-Bruton rule. Held, this was proper. Defendant's statement that he was driving the car was admissible; but in order to avoid improperly prejudicing a codefendant, the trial judge was compelled to exclude the statement that he was merely driving along the street in question and picked up some friends. Defendant could not complain about the exclusion of his statement that he knew nothing about any burglary, because he had requested that his statements be excluded unless the one about picking up some friends was also admitted. (192 C.A.3d 215.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

H. Spontaneous Statements.

2. Statement Related to Act, Condition, or Event.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 177

[§ 177] Statement Related to Act, Condition, or Event.

(1) In General. The statement must purport to "narrate, describe, or explain an act, condition, or event perceived by the declarant." (Ev.C. 1240(a).) Automobile or railroad accidents are common examples. (For accident cases, see infra, §§181, 182; see also People v. Butler (1967) 249 C.A.2d 799, 804, 806, 57 C.R. 798 [statements of boy victim and girl observer concerning defendant's lewd acts]; People v. Hughey (1987) 194 C.A.3d 1383, 1388, 240 C.R. 269, infra, §181; People v. Gallego (1990) 52 C.3d 115, 171, 276 C.R. 679, 802 P.2d 169 [statements by friend of victim that he had seen both victims in defendant's car were admissible, where they were made after friend was sworn at and told to leave by victim and slapped by strange woman]; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1754; 78 A.L.R.2d 300 [statements of bystanders at time of arrest]; 13 A.L.R.3d 1114 [statements relating to origin or cause of or responsibility for fire]; on whether declaration itself is sufficient evidence of occurrence of startling event, see 2 McCormick 5th, §272; 1956 A.S. 535; 38 A.L.R.4th 1237 [necessity, in criminal prosecution, of independent evidence of principal act].)

In People v. Arias (1996) 13 C.4th 92, 150, 51 C.R.2d 770, 913 P.2d 980, testimony relating a statement by a robbery victim to the effect that defendant said, during the robbery, that he was the perpetrator of a prior murder and robbery was held to have been properly admitted. Even though the victim was not a percipient witness to the prior crimes, the "act" or "event" she was describing was defendant's incriminating statement, which she did witness.

(2) Statement by Driver-Employee. The requirement that the statement relate to the act perceived may have a limiting effect in negligence actions against employers for injuries received in automobile accidents. The driver's statement admitting fault relates to the accident, but the driver's statement admitting agency and scope of employment deals with a matter distinct from the accident itself and is excluded. Nor can it be received as a vicarious admission (supra, §119 et seq.), for the agent's own statements of agency are outside the scope of the agent's authority. (See 2 McCormick 5th, §272; 1952 A.S. 737; 1957 A.S. 548; for criticisms of limitation, see 10 Hastings L. J. 219; 47 Cal. L. Rev. 939.)

(3) Statement by Unidentified Declarant. A statement by an unidentified declarant must still meet the test of act, condition, or event "perceived" by the declarant. Thus, in Ungefug v. D'Ambrosia (1967) 250 C.A.2d 61, 68, 58 C.R. 223, plaintiff alleged that decedent was struck by defendant's automobile, negligently driven at a crossing. One defense theory was that she was struck by another car that failed to stop. The ambulance driver, called by defendant, testified that he heard someone say that decedent had been hit twice, once by another car that did not stop. Held, this was error. Ev.C. 1240 presupposes that the declarant "perceived" the event, and, here, there was nothing but speculation. It was not shown that there were eyewitnesses to the accident (as distinguished from the group that gathered afterwards).

(4) Evidence as to Perception by Declarant. In People v. Jones (1984) 155 C.A.3d 653, 202 C.R. 289, defendant was charged with murder of a victim who died from injuries suffered from being burned by gasoline. The victim's treating physician was allowed to testify that he asked the victim what had happened and the latter answered, "The crazy nigger that I live with threw gasoline on me." Defendant contended that there was insufficient proof that the victim perceived the act, because if he had actually seen defendant doing this, he would have attempted to deflect the flow or remove his clothes and would have received burns on his hands, which he did not have. The court said that the victim's statement itself indicated that he observed the event, and also noted that there was direct evidence that the victim was alert and percipient at the time. (155 C.A.3d 661.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. See People v. Phillips (2000) 22 C.4th 226, 236, 237, 92 C.R.2d 58, 991 P.2d 145 [in capital murder case, trial judge did not err in excluding testimony of witness relating statement by defendant's deceased acquaintance concerning circumstances of charged crime, where statement itself did not indicate that acquaintance had personally witnessed crime, and evidence supported trial judge's finding that acquaintance could have been repeating what he heard someone else say]; People v. Roldan (2005) 35 C.4th 646, 714, 27 C.R.3d 360, 110 P.3d 289 [in capital murder case, multiple, nested hearsay (police tape of caller's description of her son's and another witness' observation of robbery and murder) was properly admitted under spontaneous utterance exception; all three persons were acting under stress and excitement, and although mother did not witness crimes, she was witness to statements of others]; 2 McCormick 6th, §272.

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

H. Spontaneous Statements.

3. Spontaneous Statement During Excitement.

a. Statement in Response to Questioning.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 178

[§ 178] Statement in Response to Questioning.

In People v. Farmer (1989) 47 C.3d 888, 254 C.R. 508, 765 P.2d 940, the statements were made by the victim, Schmidt-Till, to Officer Strigotte at the scene of the crime, and by telephone to a police dispatcher. In holding that they met the tests for admissibility, the court said:

(a) "In one sense, a 'spontaneous' utterance is one that is voluntary and is initiated by, or at least not elicited from, the speaker. Under this literal interpretation of spontaneity, few of Schmidt-Till's statements would qualify. The dispatcher urged him to answer her questions, refusing to let him wait until help arrived. While his answers to Strigotte were more voluntary, none of the information was given on his own initiative, but likewise was elicited by specific questions." (47 C.3d 903.)

(b) "But 'spontaneous' may also be used in a slightly different sense: to describe actions undertaken without deliberation or reflection. That is what is intended by Evidence Code section 1240, which codifies the earlier common law exception to the hearsay rule." (47 C.3d 903.)

(c) "The crucial element in determining whether a declaration is sufficiently reliable to be admissible under this exception to the hearsay rule is thus not the nature of the statement but the mental state of the speaker. The nature of the utterance--how long it was made after the startling incident and whether the speaker blurted it out, for example--may be important, but solely as an indicator of the mental state of the declarant. The fact that a statement is made in response to questioning is one factor suggesting the answer may be the product of deliberation, but it does not ipso facto deprive the statement of spontaneity. Thus, an answer to a simple inquiry has been held to be spontaneous. ... More detailed questioning, in contrast, is likely to deprive the response of the requisite spontaneity. ... But ultimately each fact pattern must be considered on its own merits, and the trial court is vested with reasonable discretion in the matter." (47 C.3d 903.)

(d) "On the record before us we conclude that the court did not err in admitting both conversations. It is true that we have rarely held the answers to such extensive questioning to be spontaneous utterances. ... Nonetheless, there is no doubt that Schmidt-Till was excited, or perhaps more accurately, distraught and in severe pain. He was not merely an uninjured witness whose excitement might wane--and would thus be in a position to fabricate answers--through the sobering interrogation of an investigator. His responses were not self-serving. ... Nor were the questions suggestive. ... While he was being questioned, the intense pain of his gunshot wounds and the concern he rightfully had about his survival no doubt preoccupied him so that he could not have contemplated spinning a false tale. In sum, he had so little opportunity and incentive to deliberate that under these unusual circumstances we can dispense with the testimonial requirements of an oath and cross-examination." (47 C.3d 904, citing People v. Poggi (1988) 45 C.3d 306, 246 C.R. 886, 753 P.2d 1082, infra, §181.)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

H. Spontaneous Statements.

3. Spontaneous Statement During Excitement.

b. Importance of Time Element.

[§ 179] Importance of Time Element.

The statement must have been made "spontaneously while the declarant was under the stress of excitement caused by such perception." (Ev.C. 1240(b).) The trustworthiness of this kind of evidence depends on the condition of excitement that gave rise to it; the excited person has no time or opportunity to reflect and contrive or fabricate a false statement. (See supra, §173.)

Under this theory the time element, though not mechanically applied, is important. (See Wiley v. Easter (1962) 203 C.A.2d 845, 854, 21 C.R. 905, infra, §182; 53 A.L.R.2d 1265 [remoteness in time as factor in admitting statement about traffic accident]; 89 A.L.R.3d 102 [time element as affecting admissibility of sex crime victim's statement]; on admissibility of accusatory utterances by homicide victim before the event, see People v. Garcia (1986) 178 C.A.3d 814, 821, 224 C.R. 198; 74 A.L.R.3d 963.) Whether the statement was made "while the declarer's reflective powers are yet in abeyance" is a question of fact. (Showalter v. Western Pac. R. Co. (1940) 16 C.2d 460, 468, 106 P.2d 895, supra, §173 and infra, §180; see Box v. California Date Growers Assn. (1976) 57 C.A.3d 266, 273, 129 C.R. 146, citing the text; People v. Jones (1984) 155 C.A.3d 653, 662, 202 C.R. 289; People v. Peach (1991) 229 C.A.3d 1282, 1290, 280 C.R. 584 [trial judge improperly engaged in speculation as to what event victim was describing, when event occurred, and whether victim was still under its effect]; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1750; 4 A.L.R.3d 149 [homicide victim's statements made after the act].)

The exercise of discretion by the trial judge may lead to different results in closely similar cases dealing with statements made some time after the event:

(1) If statements are made at a time substantially after the event, they are likely to be excluded. (See People v. Perkins (1937) 8 C.2d 502, 516, 66 P.2d 631 [self-serving declarations of defendant made half hour later]; 1960 A.S. 561; infra, §182.)

(2) If the period is accounted for by shock, unconsciousness, or fear, there is authority for admitting belated statements. (See People v. Costa (1953) 40 C.2d 160, 168, 252 P.2d 1, infra, §181; 2 McCormick 5th, §272.)

(3) If the circumstances strongly suggest opportunity to reflect, the statements will be excluded. In People v. Keelin (1955) 136 C.A.2d 860, 870, 289 P.2d 520, statements of the victim of a killing, rejected as dying declarations (because not made with a sense of impending death), were admitted as spontaneous statements. Held, this was error; they were made in response to questions, over a considerable period of time, and indicated reflection and fabrication by the declarant.

(2) Period accounted for by shock: See 2 McCormick 6th, §272.

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

H. Spontaneous Statements.

3. Spontaneous Statement During Excitement.

c. Statement Immediately After Event.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 180

[§ 180] Statement Immediately After Event.

The California cases dealing with time were formerly in conflict. A number of opinions insisted that the statement be contemporaneous, and excluded any made afterwards as narratives of past events. (See, e.g., Williams v. Southern Pac. Co. (1901) 133 C. 550, 554, 65 P. 1100; Losleben v. California State Life Co. (1932) 119 C.A. 556, 558, 6 P.2d 1012; Salvo v. Market Street Ry. Co. (1931) 116 C.A. 339, 345, 2 P.2d 585.) On the other hand, several early cases sanctioned the admission of statements made shortly after the event. (See People v. Vernon (1868) 35 C. 49, 50; Coryell v. Clifford F. Reid (1931) 117 C.A. 534, 536, 4 P.2d 295; 21 Cal. L. Rev. 460.) These early cases were followed by the Supreme Court in Showalter v. Western Pac. R. Co. (1940) 16 C.2d 460, 106 P.2d 895, establishing the California rule in accordance with Wigmore's conditions (supra, §173). (See 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1756; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §865.)

The Showalter case was an action for wrongful death resulting from a fall from a train, and the defense was decedent's contributory negligence. Plaintiff's witness, a fellow brakeman, was allowed to testify that he ran to the scene of the accident, asked what had happened, and decedent replied, "I got knocked off." Held, the statement was properly admitted. Although not contemporaneous, "where a declaration is made under the immediate influence of the occurrence to which it relates and so near the time of that occurrence as to negative any probability of fabrication," it is admissible. (16 C.2d 467.) The court further held that the trial judge has a certain amount of discretion in determining admissibility under this test, and may consider such matters as the spontaneity, opportunity for fabrication, lapse of time, attendant excitement, and mental and physical condition of the declarant. (See Foster v. Pestana (1947) 77 C.A.2d 885, 888, 177 P.2d 54 [defendant, immediately after dropping pipe on plaintiff, exclaimed, "Damn, I didn't see it, it was my fault, I should have looked"]; People v. Butler (1967) 249 C.A.2d 799, 804, 806, 57 C.R. 798 [charge of lewd acts with child; statement of victim to his mother after she called him, and statement of another child present at the time]; People v. Lares (1968) 261 C.A.2d 657, 663, 68 C.R. 144; 50 A.L.R.3d 716 [admissibility of unidentified bystander's statement when testified to by interested party]; 29 Cal. L. Rev. 433; 14 So. Cal. L. Rev. 345; 29 Cal. L. Rev. 433; 14 So. Cal. L. Rev. 345.)

In People v. Cooper (1967) 249 C.A.2d 479, 57 C.R. 588, the exception was applied to the issue of probable cause for an arrest and search. Three robbers escaped in an automobile. A bystander pointed out the direction of their flight to officers, entered their patrol car by invitation, and, during the pursuit, described the getaway car. When they reached defendants' car, the bystander left and was not located for the trial. A search of the car produced a concealable weapon, and defendant C, a former felon, was convicted of its possession. Held, the statement was admissible and conviction affirmed.

(a) The statement concerning flight from the robbery did not relate to the charge on which defendant was convicted--possession of the weapon. But it was relevant on the issue of reasonable cause to stop the car and make the arrest and search. (249 C.A.2d 481.)

(b) Inadmissible hearsay evidence may be relied on for such probable cause, but ordinarily it must come from a reliable informer (see 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, §99 et seq.). The bystander was unknown and untested, hence, an inadmissible hearsay statement from him (e.g., a description furnished hours after the event) would not be sufficient. However, this statement was admissible hearsay. "The same factors which warrant admission of such spontaneous declarations as evidence of the truth of their content serve even more strongly to warrant police reliance upon them. The urgent need for prompt pursuit of fleeing wrongdoers precluded independent investigation of the antecedents and integrity of the bystander passenger, whose obvious agitation in his position of danger carried its own indicia of honesty." (249 C.A.2d 482.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(New) Effect of taking time to write statement: In People v. Gutierrez (2000) 78 C.A.4th 170, 92 C.R.2d 626, defendant was charged with a robbery that occurred in a parking lot. At trial, the judge admitted a slip of paper given to the victim right after the robbery by an unidentified witness. The paper contained the license number of the van used in the commission of the offense and was used by police to locate defendant. Held, the paper was properly admitted. Although no previous California case has considered whether a writing can qualify under the hearsay exception for spontaneous statements, it appears that here all the requirements of the exception were satisfied. "In the court's view the act of reducing an observation to writing a short time after the exciting event makes a statement no less reliable than an identical oral statement made under the same circumstances." (78 C.A.4th 181.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

H. Spontaneous Statements.

3. Spontaneous Statement During Excitement.

d. Statement Some Time Afterward.

1. Statements Held Admissible.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 181

[§ 181] Statements Held Admissible.

(1) Traffic Accident Cases. In White v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp. (1946) 73 C.A.2d 720, 724, 167 P.2d 530, a streetcar accident case, the motorman made a statement to a police officer who arrived shortly after the accident. The court said that the motorman "had just been through the tragic experience of having struck and killed a man, the body was lying in full view at the side of the tracks, and we believe it may be fairly said that his statements were spontaneous."

In People v. Costa (1953) 40 C.2d 160, 252 P.2d 1, the victim of an automobile collision was rendered unconscious for a brief period. He was asked by an officer 5 or 10 minutes after the accident, "What happened?" He replied, "The man hit us in the rear." Held, the statement was admissible. (a) The interval did not allow time for fabrication because he was unconscious. (b) It was spontaneous even though elicited by an inquiry. "The natural reaction of anyone arriving at the place where an accident has occurred is to make such inquiry. ... If the statement otherwise meets the tests of the res gestae rule, it should not be held inadmissible simply because it was prompted by the question of another person." (40 C.2d 168.)

In People v. Haskell (1960) 185 C.A.2d 267, 273, 8 C.R. 228, defendant was charged with felony drunk driving. His wife sought to testify that when she arrived at the scene he was lying against the car, she asked him who was driving, and he answered, "Bruce" (the other occupant). Held, it was error, though not reversible under the circumstances, to exclude this statement as hearsay, without considering the spontaneous exclamation exception. (See Lane v. Pacific Greyhound Lines (1945) 26 C.2d 575, 581, 160 P.2d 21 [trial judge erred in instructing that bus driver's statements, made during period from 2 to 20 minutes after accident, were not binding on his employer].)

(2) Other Cases. In People v. Hughey (1987) 194 C.A.3d 1383, 1388, 240 C.R. 269, defendant was charged with assault and child endangerment arising out of a domestic altercation involving his wife and 3-month-old child. Investigating officers arrived at defendant's residence and heard a woman scream, "Help me." They then saw her run crying from the house, and noticed abrasions on her arm and neck. While standing on the porch, the woman, defendant's wife, told the officers that defendant had struck her and had tried to smother their child. Three or 4 minutes later, while inside the house, the wife said that defendant had stomped her in the stomach, grabbed her around the neck, repeatedly threw her backwards, and hit her breast with his elbow. The wife was subpoenaed by the prosecution and was present at trial, but was not called to testify by either party. The declarations she made after the assault were introduced through testimony of one investigating officer as spontaneous statements. Held, admission of the evidence was proper. The fact that the wife was screaming when the officers arrived clearly indicated that the short interval between the time of the assault and the statements did not destroy their spontaneity. (194 C.A.3d 1388.)

In People v. Poggi (1988) 45 C.3d 306, 246 C.R. 886, 753 P.2d 1082, the murder victim made her statement to a police officer about 30 minutes after she had been stabbed. Held, the trial judge did not abuse his discretion in finding that the statement was spontaneous.

(a) "When the statements were made and whether they were delivered directly or in response to a question are important factors to be considered on the issue of spontaneity." But, as emphasized in People v. Washington (1969) 71 C.2d 1170, 81 C.R. 5, 459 P.2d 259, neither lapse of time nor the fact that the declarations were elicited by questioning deprives them of spontaneity "if it nevertheless appears that they were made under the stress of excitement and while the reflective powers were still in abeyance." (45 C.3d 319, quoting Washington.)

(b) "Under the same reasoning, the fact that the declarant has become calm enough to speak coherently also is not inconsistent with spontaneity. ... To conclude otherwise would render the exception virtually nugatory; practically the only 'statements' able to qualify would be sounds devoid of meaning." (45 C.3d 319.)

(c) "Here the record supports the finding of spontaneity. First, although Musgrove made the statements at issue about 30 minutes after the attack, it is undisputed that she was still under its influence. Second, it is also undisputed that she remained excited as she made the statements, even though she had become calm enough to speak coherently. Finally, the fact that the statements were delivered in response to questioning does not render them nonspontaneous. With one exception, Officer Flores' questions appear to have been simple and nonsuggestive--in substance, 'What happened?', 'What happened then?', and so on." (45 C.3d 319.)

In People v. Bernalley (1960) 185 C.A.2d 326, 330, 8 C.R. 375, the victim of defendant's mayhem was found by a policeman, bloody and incoherent. To the last of several questions, he replied, "Sam cut my eyes." Held, it was not error to admit the officer's testimony as to this statement. (See People v. Walther (1968) 263 C.A.2d 310, 320, 69 C.R. 434 [statements within 10 minutes after defendant hit victim on the head]; People v. Gonzales (1969) 269 C.A.2d 586, 589, 75 C.R. 267 [victim, 10 minutes after fatal stabbing, cried out that "they" chased him and tried to take his money]; People v. Washington, supra, 71 C.2d 1177, citing the text [beaten victim, unconscious for over an hour, regained consciousness for a few minutes and answered questions]; McClafflin v. Bayshore Equipment Rental Co. (1969) 274 C.A.2d 446, 453, 79 C.R. 337, citing the text [statement made within 15 minutes of accident, including period of unconsciousness; length of time lapse, though significant, not controlling; admissibility was question for trial judge]; People v. Jones (1984) 155 C.A.3d 653, 662, 202 C.R. 289 [statement made 30 to 40 minutes after injury; court quotes 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1750 argument that compliance with time condition should be left to discretion of trial judge]; People v. Trimble (1992) 5 C.A.4th 1225, 1234, 7 C.R.2d 450 [facts showed continued state of extreme agitation of child declarant; statements made nearly 2 days after event were admissible]; In re Emily A. (1992) 9 C.A.4th 1695, 1713, 12 C.R.2d 294 [young child's remarks a day or two after event while she was still in pain came within exception].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Other Cases. See People v. Brown (2003) 31 C.4th 518, 526, 541, 3 C.R.3d 145, 73 P.3d 1137 [in capital murder trial, witness' testimony that she heard her brother-in-law say, "I know [defendant] shot her. I know she is hurt bad," was properly admitted under spontaneous utterance exception, even though statement was made 21/2 hours after crime, where brother-in-law was crying and shaking when he spoke]; People v. Pirwani (2004) 119 C.A.4th 770, 789, 14 C.R.3d 673 [in prosecution for em- bezzlement and grand theft, trial judge erred in admitting statement by victim, a dependent adult, to program coordinator at community living center under spontaneous utterance exception; victim telephoned coordinator in excited state, but statement at issue was not made until 2 days later, and by then victim had had time to reflect and regain composure; distinguishing People v. Trimble (1992) 5 C.A.4th 1225, 7 C.R.2d 450, text, p. 899]; People v. Rincon (2005) 129 C.A.4th 738, 751, 28 C.R.3d 844 [statements by attempted murder victim to prosecution witness shortly after violent shoot-out, during which victim was shot in ankle, were properly admitted as spontaneous statements, notwithstanding that it was not known what activities victim engaged in during short time between shooting and his arrival at location where he made statements, and there was no specific evidence of what his emotional state was when he arrived there]; People v. Saracoglu (2007) 152 C.A.4th 1584, 1590, 62 C.R.3d 418 [in prosecution for corporal injury to spouse, victim's statements, made at police station about 30 minutes after physical assault occurred, qualified as excited utterances; even if victim was responding to questions, they were routine and nonsuggestive].

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

H. Spontaneous Statements.

3. Spontaneous Statement During Excitement.

d. Statement Some Time Afterward.

2. Statements Held Inadmissible.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 182

[§ 182] Statements Held Inadmissible.

In Dolberg v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co. (1954) 126 C.A.2d 487, 488, 272 P.2d 527, plaintiff's automobile was struck by defendant's train. The officers arrived about 5 minutes afterward, and 5 or 10 minutes later talked with the motorman, who made statements supporting defendant's position. After a verdict for defendant, the judge granted a new trial for error in permitting the motorman's statement to be introduced. Held, affirmed.

In People v. Fain (1959) 174 C.A.2d 856, 345 P.2d 305, defendant was charged with manslaughter in driving a vehicle and killing his passenger. He offered testimony of a witness that, within 5 minutes after the accident, while defendant was lying in an unconscious or semiconscious condition, a police officer asked defendant who was driving and he replied, "My buddy." Held, the trial judge properly exercised his discretion in refusing to admit the evidence. "Considering the lapse of time here involved, the doubt as to whether the defendant was conscious or unconscious, or even understood the officer's question, the prior convictions for speeding, the loss of license and the recovery thereof the day before, all of which were likely to weigh heavily on the conscious or subconscious mind of the defendant, thus producing strong motives for fabrication and all the other attendant circumstances, we are unable to affirmatively say that the trial court's discretion was abused." (174 C.A.2d 861.)

In Wiley v. Easter (1962) 203 C.A.2d 845, 21 C.R. 905, the statement was inadmissible under the most liberal application of the tests. After an automobile accident, an officer asked defendant a series of questions about what happened, made notes on the questions and answers, and later typed up a report embodying this information. At the trial he was allowed to read from the report, although he had no independent recollection of the conversation, and could not establish the exact time or place, which was admittedly between 20 minutes and an hour after the event. Held, this was reversible error. "[I]t appears that defendant failed to show when or where her statements were made, whether the excitement of the accident had worn off, whether she was under the influence of sedatives at the time, what portions of her statement were volunteered and what were elicited by questions of the officer which were perhaps suggestive, or by questions which required deliberation in answering." (203 C.A.2d 855.)

See People v. Ramirez (2006) 143 C.A.4th 1512, 1525, 50 C.R.3d 110 [it was error, although harmless, to admit statements by victim where, after she was allegedly raped, she returned to hotel room, showered, asked to be driven home, fell asleep in car, and, after awaking in strange apartment, related details of rape; evidence indicated not only that she was able to deliberate and reflect but also that she did so].

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

I. Contemporaneous Explanatory Statement (Verbal Act).

1. Theory of Admissibility.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 183

[§ 183] Theory of Admissibility.

Where a person's conduct is relevant but is equivocal or ambiguous, the statements accompanying it may be admitted to explain and make the conduct understandable. These statements have been called "verbal acts." (See Airola v. Gorham (1942) 56 C.A.2d 42, 50, 133 P.2d 78, infra, §184; People v. Kennedy (1960) 180 C.A.2d 862, 868, 4 C.R. 862; People v. Baranov (1962) 201 C.A.2d 52, 60, 19 C.R. 866; 2 McCormick 5th, §249; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1772 et seq.; 1 Jefferson, California Evidence Benchbook 3d, §13.11 et seq.; 19 Cal. L. Rev. 246, 248; 1960 A.S. 556.)

A verbal act is often regarded as matter "outside the rule," i.e., as nonhearsay. (See 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1772.) The Evidence Code, to avoid doubt as to admissibility of the evidence, classifies it as a hearsay exception. Ev.C. 1241 makes admissible a statement (1) "offered to explain, qualify, or make understandable conduct of the declarant," if (2) it was made "while the declarant was engaged in such conduct." (See Mecchi v. Picchi (1966) 245 C.A.2d 470, 478, 54 C.R. 1, infra, §184; People v. Marchialette (1975) 45 C.A.3d 974, 980, 119 C.R. 816, citing the text [suggesting that authorities disagree on whether evidence is nonhearsay or exception to hearsay rule, and noting that Ev.C. 1241 does not specifically characterize it].)

Self-serving declarations may be introduced under this exception. Thus, declarations of an adverse possessor, made while in possession and before commencement of the action, and tending to show the hostile character of the occupation, are admissible. (Weller v. Chavarria (1965) 233 C.A.2d 234, 245, 43 C.R. 364, citing the text; see Turney v. Sousa (1956) 146 C.A.2d 787, 790, 304 P.2d 1025 [citing 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1778, but holding the rule inapplicable under the facts].)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

I. Contemporaneous Explanatory Statement (Verbal Act).

2. Illustrations: Statements Accompanying Acts.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 184

[§ 184] Illustrations: Statements Accompanying Acts.

In Airola v. Gorham (1942) 56 C.A.2d 42, 133 P.2d 78, an administrator sued to establish a trust against grantees, sons of decedent, to reconvey to decedent grantor. The granddaughter of decedent grantor testified that, after the deed was prepared but a day or two before decedent signed it, decedent said to her that decedent was signing away all the property, but that the grantees "were to make an agreement" protecting decedent's interest. Held, this was admissible as a verbal act. The court pointed out that the inquiry is not whether the conversation was contemporaneous with the physical execution of the deed, but whether it was a part of the transaction culminating in its execution. Here, from the time the deed was given to decedent to execute, and while he was deciding whether or not to do so, the transaction was in progress. (56 C.A.2d 51.)

Similarly, in Sethman v. Bulkley (1937) 9 C.2d 21, 24, 68 P.2d 961, the issue was whether plaintiff's mother, before her death, had made transfers of property to defendants on their promise to pay plaintiff certain sums of money. Plaintiff introduced a letter, written by the mother and bearing the same date as the instruments of transfer, in which the mother stated that arrangements for the payments had been made. Held, the letter was part of the transaction, admissible to show the intent with which the transfers were made. The fact that the letter had not been delivered, but was found in the mother's safe deposit box after her death, did not affect its admissibility.

In People v. Frangadakis (1960) 184 C.A.2d 540, 549, 7 C.R. 776, enforcement agents purchased liquor from a doorman and waitresses in a restaurant that had no liquor license. Held, the conversations with these employees were integral parts of the transaction and admissible as tending to explain the nature of the illegal act of sale.

In Mecchi v. Picchi (1966) 245 C.A.2d 470, 54 C.R. 1, a grantor executed an affidavit, referred to in the deed, setting forth his motive for making grants to his daughters (to right a previous wrong done to them). Held: (a) The statements were inadmissible as evidence of the truth of the past events of wrongdoing (see infra, §185). (245 C.A.2d 479.) (b) They were admissible as declarations connected with the transaction and explaining it, as in Airola and Sethman. (245 C.A.2d 478.) (c) They were also admissible as declarations of intent of a grantor on the issue of delivery. (245 C.A.2d 478.)

In People v. Marchialette (1975) 45 C.A.3d 974, 119 C.R. 816, an "ear witness," C, provided the most damaging testimony against defendant's claim of self-defense. C had telephoned a number that he found in a classified ad and was speaking to an unidentified man when the man and someone else began arguing. The second voice threatened to blow the other's brains out. Then C heard a burglar alarm, screams, shots, and the telephone falling; finally, "everything got quiet and faded away and the guy stopped hollering." At first, C believed someone was playing a game but, after retelephoning the number and learning that an accident had happened, he called the police. Held, the evidence was properly admitted. (a) If C had been in the victim's office at the time, he could testify to what he saw and heard; if C had been present but blind, he could testify to what he heard; if C had been outside the office, he could testify to what he heard through the door or through a public address system or an intercommunication box. "The result does not change merely because what he heard was heard by means of a telephone." (45 C.A.3d 980.) (b) A sufficient foundation--a showing that defendant was the speaker--appeared from "the totality of the evidence": another witness testified that defendant had entered the victim's office before the burglar alarm went off and left while it was still ringing; defendant admitted pumping four shots into the victim, which the autopsy report showed was the cause of death; C had telephoned the victim's number. (45 C.A.3d 980.)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

J. Dying Declaration.

1. In General.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 186

[§ 186] In General.

A declaration made by a person about to die has a substantial guarantee of trustworthiness. "The very solemnity of the circumstances under which a declaration in extremis is made is very justly considered by the law as creating an obligation equal to that which is imposed by a positive oath in a court of justice." (People v. Dallen (1913) 21 C.A. 770, 781, 132 P. 1064; see *People v. ## CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

J. Dying Declaration.

2. Evidence Code and Federal Rules.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 187

[§ 187] Evidence Code and Federal Rules.

(1) Former California Law. The former statute set forth the narrow exception restricted to declarations in homicide prosecutions for the death of the declarant. Hence: (a) The declaration was not admissible in a civil case. (Thrasher v. Board of Med. Examiners of Calif. (1919) 44 C.A. 26, 29, 185 P. 1006; see 47 A.L.R.2d 526 [admissibility in civil case].) (b) It was not admissible in a criminal prosecution for some other crime. (See 2 McCormick 5th, §311.)

(2) Broadened Rule of Evidence Code. The limitations of the traditional rule were condemned by most writers. (See 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1436; 2 McCormick 5th, §311; 2 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 65; 1953 A.S. 795.) The original Uniform Rules of Evidence eliminated them and allowed proof of any dying declaration, even though it was not related to the cause of death. Ev.C. 1242, not quite so radical, dropped the homicide limitation; it permits proof of "a statement made by a dying person respecting the cause and circumstances of his death," if it was made "upon his personal knowledge and under a sense of immediately impending death." (See People v. Smith (1989) 214 C.A.3d 904, 910, 263 C.R. 155, infra, §188 [reviewing history of exception and disapproving trial judge's instruction telling jury what weight it must give declaration]; infra, §189 et seq.)

Formerly, the judge's preliminary determination of the conditions of admissibility was subject to redetermination by the jury. (See People v. Singh (1920) 182 C. 457, 476, 188 P. 987.) Under Ev.C. 405, admissibility is finally determined by the judge without resubmission to the jury. (See Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 405; People v. Tewksbury (1976) 15 C.3d 953, 966, footnote 13, 127 C.R. 135, 544 P.2d 1335; 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §63.)

(3) Federal Rules of Evidence. F.R. Evid., Rule 804(b)(2) provides an exception, in a homicide prosecution or a civil action or proceeding, for "a statement made by a declarant while believing that the declarant's death was imminent, concerning the cause or circumstances of what the declarant believed to be impending death." (See 4 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §495; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §829.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

J. Dying Declaration.

3. Instructions to Jury.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 188

[§ 188] Instructions to Jury.

In People v. Smith (1989) 214 C.A.3d 904, 910, 263 C.R. 155, the judge, over defendant's objection, gave this instruction: "A declaration made by a person about to die has a substantial guarantee of trustworthiness. 'The very solemnity of the circumstances under which the declaration in extremis is made is very justly considered by the law as creating an obligation equal to that which is imposed by a positive oath in a court of justice.' " Held, the instruction was error, although not prejudicial.

(a) "The dying declaration stands as one of the earliest recognized exceptions to the rule excluding most hearsay evidence from trial proceedings, and the foundation for this exception is deeply rooted in policy considerations of human philosophy and psychology. Yet, since well before the enactment of the Evidence Code in 1967, appellate courts have not addressed the question of what instruction, if any, the trial court should provide the jury in its evaluation of such evidence." (214 C.A.3d 908.)

(b) Wigmore explained the nature of the circumstantial guarantee of trustworthiness: "(1) The declarant, being at the point of death 'must lose the use of all deceit'--in Shakespeare's phrase. There is no longer any temporal self-serving purpose to be furthered. (2) If a belief exists in a punishment soon to be inflicted by Higher Power upon human ill-doing, the fear of this punishment will outweigh any possible motive for deception, and will even counterbalance the inclination to gratify a possible spirit of revenge. (3) Even without such a belief, there is a natural and instinctive awe at the approach of an unknown future--a physical revulsion common to all men, irresistible, and independent of theological belief." (214 C.A.3d 910.)

(c) "Despite the substantial guarantee of trustworthiness underlying this exception, courts have warned against uncritical acceptance." (214 C.A.3d 911.) The testimony should be received with the greatest caution; the primary facts upon which admissibility is grounded must be carefully scrutinized; the declaration is subject to the same credibility evaluations as in court testimony; and the trial court should not unduly emphasize this evidence. (214 C.A.3d 911.)

(d) McCormick makes the following observation on instructions: "There has been much theorizing in texts and opinions as to the weight to be given to dying declarations, abstractly or in comparison with the testimony of a witness. In consequence the practice has grown up in some states of requiring or permitting the judge to instruct the jury that these declarations are to be received with caution. In other states such instructions have been held to be improper. Again one court has required that the jury be told that a dying declaration is not to be regarded as having the same value and weight as sworn testimony. ... While there may be merit in a standardized practice of giving cautionary instructions, the direction to give the declaration a predetermined fixed weight seems of questionable wisdom. The weight of particular dying declarations depends upon so many factors varying from case to case that no standardized instruction will fit all situations. Certainly in jurisdictions where the judge retains his common law power to comment on the weight of the evidence, the dying declaration is a most appropriate subject for individualized comment." (214 C.A.3d 912.)

(e) "We find the foregoing commentary persuasive, particularly in light of the general rule resolving conflicts in the law in favor of criminal defendants. In the instant case, laudable as the court's efforts may have been in elucidating a point of law, the instruction tended to draw the jury's attention to this evidence, isolating it and thereby implying some authoritative assessment of its credibility and effect upon the determination of defendant's guilt. As such, it was more than an expression of the court's evaluation of the evidence in the form of sanctioned comment. The hallowed right to trial by jury cannot countenance any invasion of the province occupied exclusively by the trier of fact. To the extent the instruction tended to do so, we disapprove the practice. Once the court makes a preliminary determination to admit a statement as a dying declaration ... , only the jury can assay the weight of that evidence." (214 C.A.3d 912.)

(f) In the present case the error was not prejudicial. "First, the instruction correctly stated the law even if the legal principle should not have been reduced to a specific direction to the jury. ... Second, it did not create a presumption or otherwise require the jury to draw any particular conclusion as to the declarant's veracity. ... Third, the court could have made the same point in the form of comment on the evidence. ... Hence, the instruction did not improperly imply an opinion as to defendant's guilt." (214 C.A.3d 913.) Moreover, defense counsel in closing argument adequately apprised the jury of the factors and considerations appropriate to the credibility assessment of a dying declarant. (214 C.A.3d 913.) (See 2 McCormick 5th, §314.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

J. Dying Declaration.

4. Conditions of Admissibility.

a. Relation to Cause of Death.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 189

[§ 189] Relation to Cause of Death.

The declaration must relate to "the cause and circumstances" of the declarant's death (Ev.C. 1242), sometimes described as the "res gestae" of the death. (See People v. Taylor (1881) 59 C. 640, 648.) "[T]he res gestae embrace, not only the actual facts of the assault and the circumstances surrounding it, but the matters immediately antecedent to and having a direct causal connection with the assault as well as acts, immediately following the assault and so closely connected with it as to form in reality a part of the occurrence." (People v. Cipolla (1909) 155 C. 224, 227, 100 P. 252; see People v. Gatson (1998) 60 C.A.4th 1020, 1025, 1026, 70 C.R.2d 729, citing the text [in murder case, victim's statement, "They robbed me," was admissible even though it did not mention murder, because it was part of comprehensive description of cause of injuries and ultimate death]; 2 McCormick 5th, §311; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1434; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §829.)

Because the statute retains the restriction to statements of the dying person respecting the cause of that person's death, a deathbed confession of a third person that he killed a victim does not qualify as a dying declaration. (See People v. Hall (1892) 94 C. 595, 598, 30 P. 7.) But it will now be admitted as a declaration against penal interest (admitting criminal liability). (Ev.C. 1230, supra, §146.)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

J. Dying Declaration.

4. Conditions of Admissibility.

b. Hope of Life Abandoned.

1. Test.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 190

[§ 190] Test.

The chief condition and characteristic of a dying declaration is the "sense of immediately impending death." (Ev.C. 1242.) The declarant must have abandoned all expectation of living; if the declarant had any lingering hope of recovery at the time the statement was made, it is not admissible. (See People v. Taylor (1881) 59 C. 640, 646, 649; People v. Fuhrig (1899) 127 C. 412, 414, 59 P. 693; People v. Keelin (1955) 136 C.A.2d 860, 873, 289 P.2d 520; People v. Adams (1990) 216 C.A.3d 1431, 265 C.R. 568, infra, §192 [statement made after declarant chose not to prolong life artificially was admissible]; Shepard v. United States (1933) 290 U.S. 96, 54 S.Ct. 22, 78 L.Ed. 196; 2 McCormick 5th, §310; 6 So. Cal. L. Rev. 241; 8 So. Cal. L. Rev. 48; 1963 A.S. 296.)

On the other hand, it is not necessary that death actually take place immediately or even shortly after the statement. If the declarant believed that he or she was about to die, the statement is admissible even though death did not actually occur until days or weeks later, and even though the declarant may have subsequently begun to hope for recovery. (See People v. Cord (1910) 157 C. 562, 566, 108 P. 511 [victim, fatally wounded and believing himself about to die, made statement; held admissible though he lived 2 weeks and was considered on road to recovery]; People v. Ybarra (1924) 68 C.A. 259, 262, 228 P. 868 [declarant did not die until 11 days afterwards]; People v. Hoffman (1925) 195 C. 295, 308, 232 P. 974; People v. Jones (1961) 197 C.A.2d 503, 508, 17 C.R. 252, citing the text; People v. Tahl (1967) 65 C.2d 719, 727, 56 C.R. 318, 423 P.2d 246, infra, §191; 2 McCormick 5th, §310; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1439 et seq.; 53 A.L.R.3d 785 [declarant's statements as showing consciousness of impending death].)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

J. Dying Declaration.

4. Conditions of Admissibility.

b. Hope of Life Abandoned.

2. Foundation.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 191

[§ 191] Foundation.

The belief in impending death will often be shown by the declarant's own statement. (See People v. Bemmerly (1890) 87 C. 117, 119, 25 P. 266 [victim's doctor took notes of what he said, wrote out a statement and read it to the victim, who assented separately to each sentence and signed it]; People v. Cord (1910) 157 C. 562, 566, 108 P. 511; People v. Hoffman (1925) 195 C. 295, 306, 307, 232 P. 974; but see People v. Fuhrig (1899) 127 C. 412, 415, 59 P. 693 [phrase "knowing I am about to die" inserted by stenographer in 184-word statement read to victim; held, no ratification and declaration inadmissible].)

But this is not essential; the belief may be inferred from such circumstances as the declarant's physical condition, the nature of the wounds or injuries, and the declarant's conduct, statements, and knowledge of his or her condition. (See People v. Gray (1882) 61 C. 164, 175; People v. Cipolla (1909) 155 C. 224, 226, 227, 100 P. 252 [shocking wounds, obviously fatal]; People v. Wilson (1942) 54 C.A.2d 434, 441, 129 P.2d 149; 2 McCormick 5th, §310; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1442; 1954 A.S. 779; 53 A.L.R.3d 1196 [circumstances other than declarant's statements to show consciousness of impending death].)

In People v. Tahl (1967) 65 C.2d 719, 56 C.R. 318, 423 P.2d 246, the husband victim said to the officer when he arrived at the scene, "We are dying, help us." The wife victim said, "Please hurry, I'm dying." Each, in response to questions, said that the killer was "Art," "Stahl," or "Tall," a man who worked for the husband, thus identifying him as defendant. Held, the foundation was sufficient. (65 C.2d 727.)

In People v. Sims (1993) 5 C.4th 405, 20 C.R.2d 537, 853 P.2d 992, a capital murder case, the prosecution moved to admit statements by the victim of an unadjudicated murder in another state that defendant was his murderer. When a paramedic found the victim, he was bleeding actively from gunshot wounds. Blood was spewing both from his mouth and from underneath his eye. He pleaded with the paramedic, "Please don't let me die." The paramedic assured him that he would survive, but he rejected these assurances and stated, "I feel like I am going to die." The trial court admitted the statements under the dying declaration exception. Held, the evidence was properly admitted. The victim had the requisite sense of immediately impending death, even though he pleaded for help in saving his life. There is "no incompatibility between the belief of a mortally wounded victim that he is about to die and his desire to receive whatever benefit might be afforded by immediate medical treatment." (5 C.4th 459.) (See People v. Bagwell (1974) 38 C.A.3d 127, 132, 113 C.R. 122 [after being stabbed, victim drove to service station where he appeared to be extremely weak, gasping for air and choking; his statement, "I don't think I'm going to make it," was sufficient basis for admitting declaration that his wife had stabbed him while he was asleep]; People v. Black (1979) 96 C.A.3d 846, 850, 158 C.R. 449 [admissible though declarant did not expressly state that he was going to die ("help me, I don't want to die").]

J. Dying Declaration.

4. Conditions of Admissibility.

b. Hope of Life Abandoned.

3. Where Victim Chooses To Die.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 192

[§ 192] Where Victim Chooses To Die.

In People v. Adams (1990) 216 C.A.3d 1431, 265 C.R. 568, defendant shot Hughes, inflicting wounds so serious that Hughes died 5 days later. At trial, the prosecution introduced statements Hughes made to a detective 2 days before his death, to the effect that defendant intended to kill him. On the issue of belief in impending death, the prosecution introduced the following: (a) On the day of the shooting, following surgery, the attending physician advised Hughes that he would probably be placed on a respirator that would sustain his life only for "days or weeks," and Hughes refused life support. (b) On the day after the shooting, Hughes told his pastor he was suffering and that "I'm not going to make it." (c) Soon thereafter the detective asked Hughes whether he thought he was going to die and Hughes responded "Now? Yeah." On appeal from the conviction of second degree murder, defendant contended that his constitutional right of confrontation was violated by admission of the victim's dying declarations made after the victim chose not to prolong his life through artificial life support. Held, the evidence was admissible.

(a) State had no duty to keep witness alive.

(1) Defendant contended that the state, aware of Hughes' intention to hasten his death, had a duty to ensure that he was kept on a respirator until after the preliminary hearing; and that, by breaching this duty, the state created the necessity for admitting Hughes' statements instead of producing him as a witness. This contention requires a balancing of the right of a witness to refuse life support and defendant's right of confrontation. (216 C.A.3d 1437.)

(2) A competent adult has a constitutional right to die rather than live by artificial means. This right outweighs competing state interests in preserving the patient's life, preventing suicide, protecting innocent third parties, and maintaining the ethical integrity of the medical profession. (216 C.A.3d 1437, 1438; see 5 Summary (9th), Torts, §§276, 277.) This right also prevails over an accused's right to confrontation. "While it may be convenient to insist on artificially continuing a witness's life so the person will be available for cross-examination, 'it is quite another matter to do so at the patient's sole expense and against his competent will.'" (216 C.A.3d 1439, quoting a Florida case.) And the fact that life support would be necessary for only a short time is immaterial. "If this right must be balanced against the number of days in which one desires to override the patient's wish, it would lose its value and meaning." (216 C.A.3d 1439.)

(3) "Accordingly, the state had no power, and consequently no duty, to ensure Hughes's presence at the preliminary examination by compelling him to be placed on a life-support respirator." (216 C.A.3d 1439.)

(b) Trustworthiness of statements made after witness chooses to die. Defendant contended that the statements were "suicide declarations" and untrustworthy, because Hughes committed the "evil" act of suicide. But making the decision to forego living by artificial means is not equivalent to an election to commit suicide, and is neither illegal nor immoral. (216 C.A.3d 1440.) "We find no reason to distinguish Hughes's dying declarations from other such declarations simply because they were made after he decided not to artificially prolong his life. The fact the statements were made after the witness chose to die rather than accept life-support treatment does not render them untrustworthy. The crucial element in determining whether a declaration is sufficiently trustworthy for admission under the dying declaration exception to the hearsay rule is the declarant's sense of impending death--not the precipitating cause of death." (216 C.A.3d 1440.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

J. Dying Declaration.

5. Other Rules Applicable.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 193

[§ 193] Other Rules Applicable.

(1) Competency of Declarant. As with other hearsay exceptions, the competency of the declarant may be challenged. (See 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1445; 1959 A.S. 617 [inquiry into mental condition]; 8 So. Cal. L. Rev. 50; 2 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 66; but see 5 So. Cal. L. Rev. 327 [declarant's lack of religious belief no bar to admissibility].)

(2) Impeachment by Inconsistent Statements. If the declaration is not immediately followed by death, it is subject to impeachment by subsequent inconsistent statements. (See People v. Collup (1946) 27 C.2d 829, 837, 167 P.2d 714; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1446; 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §357 et seq.)

(3) Knowledge Requirement and Opinion Rule. The statement must have been made upon the "personal knowledge" of the declarant. (Ev.C. 1242.) This seemingly codifies prior cases holding both the knowledge requirement and the opinion rule applicable, and excluding matters that would not be admissible as testimony. (See People v. Taylor (1881) 59 C. 640, 644, 645 ["I guess Taylor has poisoned me"]; People v. Wasson (1884) 65 C. 538, 539, 4 P. 555 ["I think that this man ... is the man that shot me"]; People v. Lanagan (1889) 81 C. 142, 144, 22 P. 482.)

There has been some criticism of confusing the knowledge qualification with the opinion rule. The knowledge requirement is generally accepted. (See 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1445.) But it has been said that the better view allows some opinions to come in. (See 2 McCormick 5th, §313; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1447; 1950 A.S. 821; 1962 A.S. 346; 86 A.L.R.2d 905 [dying declaration involving opinion or conclusion].)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE K. Statements of Mental or Physical State. 1. In General.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 194

[§ 194] In General.

(1) Evidence Code. The large and difficult area of hearsay exceptions for declarations of mental state or physical condition is covered by three sections of the Evidence Code:

(b) Declarant's previously existing state. Evidence of "a statement of the declarant's state of mind, emotion, or physical sensation (including a statement of intent, plan, motive, design, mental feeling, pain, or bodily health) at a time prior to the statement" is admissible if "(a) The declarant is unavailable as a witness; and (b) The evidence is offered to prove such prior state of mind, emotion, or physical sensation when it is itself an issue in the action and the evidence is not offered to prove any fact other than such state of mind, emotion, or physical sensation." (Ev.C. 1251.) (See infra, §§196, 202; on statutory exception for statements concerning infliction or threat of physical injury on declarant, see infra, §220.)

(c) Limitation. Any statement offered under Ev.C. 1250 or 1251 is inadmissible if it "was made under circumstances such as to indicate its lack of trustworthiness." (Ev.C. 1252.) (See People v. Hamilton (1961) 55 C.2d 881, 895, 13 C.R. 649, 362 P.2d 473, infra, §210; People v. Cruz (1968) 264 C.A.2d 350, 358, 70 C.R. 603, infra, §213; People v. Howard (1988) 44 C.3d 375, 404, 243 C.R. 842, 749 P.2d 279 [quoting Wigmore, and rejecting defendant's contention that statements he made were untrustworthy because they were merely expressions of his rage at the time]; People v. Karis (1988) 46 C.3d 612, 635, 250 C.R. 659, 758 P.2d 1189 [defendant's statement during conversation with friend, not under any compulsion to speak, properly admitted as trustworthy]; People v. Whitt (1990) 51 C.3d 620, 643, 274 C.R. 252, 798 P.2d 849 [defendant's statements concerning his Christian rebirth, made while appeal of first murder conviction was pending, were excludable as untrustworthy at penalty phase of second trial]; People v. Edwards (1991) 54 C.3d 787, 819, 820, 1 C.R.2d 696, 819 P.2d 436 [defendant's statements, made 9 days after offense when he had compelling motive to deceive and to seek to exonerate himself, were properly excluded as untrustworthy].)

(2) Federal Rules of Evidence. F.R. Evid., Rules 803(3) and 803(4) except from operation of the hearsay rule the following:

(a) Statements as to then existing mental, emotional, or physical condition. "A statement of the declarant's then existing state of mind, emotion, sensation, or physical condition (such as intent, plan, motive, design, mental feeling, pain and bodily health), but not including a statement of memory or belief to prove the fact remembered or believed unless it relates to the execution, revocation, identification, or terms of declarant's will." (F.R. Evid., 803(3); see 4 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §437 et seq.; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §866.)

(b) Statements for purposes of medical diagnosis or treatment. "Statements made for purposes of medical diagnosis or treatment and describing medical history, or past or present symptoms, pain, or sensations, or the inception or general character of the cause or external source thereof insofar as reasonably pertinent to diagnosis or treatment." (F.R. Evid., Rule 803(4); see 4 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §442; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §867; 39 Santa Clara L. Rev. 867 [misapplication of Rule 803(4)]; 38 A.L.R.5th 433.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

K. Statements of Mental or Physical State.

2. Physical Condition.

a. Declarant's Then Existing Condition.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 195

[§ 195] Declarant's Then Existing Condition.

When the "physical sensation" (including pain or bodily health) of a person is relevant, the person's declarations of "then existing" physical sensations are admissible. (Ev.C. 1250.) This section expresses the generally accepted theory that a spontaneous statement descriptive of present pain or other bodily condition is likely to be true. The declarations may consist of inarticulate groans or screams, or voluntary and articulate complaints and descriptions of pain. (See Dow v. Oroville (1913) 22 C.A. 215, 226, 134 P. 197 [plaintiff, after personal injury, declared to witness that he was still suffering physical pain]; Bloomberg v. Lavalent (1919) 179 C. 616, 619, 178 P. 496 [plaintiff, after assault, stated that he had pains in the head and could not sleep]; 2 McCormick 5th, §273; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§1714, 1718 et seq.; 1 Jefferson, California Evidence Benchbook 3d, Chap. 14; 10 Cal. L. Rev. 234; 13 Cal. L. Rev. 468; 2 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 74; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §866; 90 A.L.R.2d 1071 [testimony by lay witness as to another's expression of pain]; 37 A.L.R.3d 778 [statements by patient to physician]; BAJI (8th ed.), No. 2.43 [same].)

A declaration of condition not involving pain or suffering comes within the same principle. (See People v. Wright (1914) 167 C. 1, 8, 138 P. 349 [abortion case; woman's statement that she was pregnant]; People v. Northcott (1920) 45 C.A. 706, 712, 189 P. 704 [same]; People v. Brown (1958) 49 C.2d 577, 587, 320 P.2d 5 [same]; 19 Cal. L. Rev. 238 [Wright]; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1714; but see Thrasher v. Board of Med. Examiners of Calif. (1919) 44 C.A. 26, 29, 185 P. 1006 [rejecting deceased woman's statement of pregnancy on old ground that dying declaration is not admissible in civil case, overlooking exception for declarations of condition].)

In People v. Pike (1960) 183 C.A.2d 729, 7 C.R. 188, a prosecution for lewd act with child, the victim's mother was allowed to testify to the content of the child's complaint, which was inadmissible (see supra, §169). Held, quoting the text, the evidence was nevertheless properly received, because the child told her mother that her rectum hurt, and this declaration of the physical condition of the child's body at a time close to the alleged offense was relevant and competent. (183 C.A.2d 735.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

K. Statements of Mental or Physical State.

2. Physical Condition.

b. Declarant's Previously Existing Condition.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 196

[§ 196] Declarant's Previously Existing Condition.

(1) Former Rule of Exclusion. California cases decided prior to enactment of the Evidence Code held that statements describing previous pain, suffering, or symptoms were not admissible. (See Estate of James (1899) 124 C. 653, 659, 57 P. 578; People v. Bray (1919) 42 C.A. 465, 470, 183 P. 712; 13 Cal. L. Rev. 468; 19 Cal. L. Rev. 240.) A qualification was recognized, however, giving indirect effect to statements of this type: A doctor, testifying as an expert, could give an opinion that in part relied on the patient's statements of condition. (See 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Opinion Evidence, §33.) But the statements, although received as reasons for the expert's opinion, were not directly admissible as affirmative evidence. (See Willoughby v. Zylstra (1935) 5 C.A.2d 297, 300, 42 P.2d 685; Groat v. Walkup Drayage & Warehouse Co. (1936) 14 C.A.2d 350, 357, 58 P.2d 200; People v. Wilson (1944) 25 C.2d 341, 348, 153 P.2d 720; People v. Brown (1958) 49 C.2d 577, 585, 320 P.2d 5; People v. Williams (1960) 187 C.A.2d 355, 365, 9 C.R. 722, citing the text [applying the rule to statements in hospital record].)

(2) Admission Under Evidence Code. Modern writers have pointed out that a patient who consults a doctor for treatment is likely to tell the doctor the truth about the condition, because the success of the treatment may often depend upon full disclosure. Hence, statements of past pain or symptoms, though lacking in spontaneity, have a distinct guarantee of trustworthiness. (See 2 McCormick 5th, §277; 2 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 75.) And the original Uniform Rules of Evidence made admissible, as affirmative evidence, statements of previous pain or symptoms made to a physician.

Ev.C. 1251 goes further; it admits all statements of previously existing physical sensation (including pain or bodily health) on the same basis as statements of previously existing mental state (infra, §202). "Both kinds of statements are equally subjective, and there is no reason to believe that one kind is more unreliable than the other." (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1251; see Gillette v. Work. Comp. App. Bd. (1971) 20 C.A.3d 312, 321, 97 C.R. 542, citing the text [despite insurance carrier's claim that injured worker's description of incident was unbelievable as self-serving, subjective history was admissible]; 37 A.L.R.3d 778, 791, 820 [statements by patient to physician].)

Admissibility, however, is subject to the condition of unavailability of the witness (Ev.C. 1251(a); see infra, §202), and to the rule precluding use of the statement to prove other facts (Ev.C. 1251(b)).

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

K. Statements of Mental or Physical State.

2. Physical Condition.

c. Diagnosis or Treatment of Child Abuse.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 197

[§ 197] Diagnosis or Treatment of Child Abuse.

Subject to the requirement of trustworthiness imposed by Ev.C. 1252 (see supra, §194), a statement is not inadmissible as hearsay if it "was made for purposes of medical diagnosis or treatment and describes medical history, or past or present symptoms, pain, or sensations, or the inception or general character of the cause or external source thereof insofar as reasonably pertinent to diagnosis or treatment." (Ev.C. 1253.) This exception applies only to a statement made by a victim who is a minor at the time of the proceedings and was under the age of 12 when the statement was made; further, the statement must describe an act, or attempted act, of child abuse or neglect. "Child abuse" and "child neglect" have the meanings provided by Ev.C. 1360(c) (see supra, §171), and "child abuse" additionally means any act proscribed by P.C. 281 et seq. (see 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Sex Offenses and Crimes Against Decency, §37 et seq.). (Ev.C. 1253.) (See 27 Pacific L. J. 768; on general hearsay exception in criminal prosecution for statements by victim of child neglect or abuse, see supra, §171; on child dependency hearsay exception, see supra, §172.)

In People v. Brodit (1998) 61 C.A.4th 1312, 72 C.R.2d 154, a prosecution for continuous sexual abuse of a child, the trial judge admitted, under Ev.C. 1253, the victim's statements to a nurse and a therapist. Held, this was proper. Ev.C. 1253 was modeled after F.R. Evid., Rule 803(4) (supra, §194). Even though the victim did not go to the nurse for diagnosis or treatment, the federal courts have consistently admitted a child's statements describing the nature and circumstances of sexual abuse made in the course of a sexual abuse examination such as the nurse performed in this case. The federal courts also admit a child victim's statements identifying the abuser, when the abuser, as here, is a member of the victim's family or household. (61 C.A.4th 1331.) Finally, as to the statements to the therapist, the federal rule mentions only medical diagnosis or treatment but the federal courts have interpreted it to allow admission of a child's statements describing sexual abuse, and the identity of the abuser, which are made to a psychologist for the purpose of obtaining a psychological diagnosis. (61 C.A.4th 1312.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See In re Daniel W. (2003) 106 C.A.4th 159, 164, 130 C.R.2d 412 [in juvenile court proceeding in which minor was accused of sodomy with person under age of 14 and more than 10 years younger than minor, 4-year-old victim's statement, made to five different adults, including doctor, and identifying minor as cause of his rectal injury, was properly admitted under Ev.C. 1253; following People v. Brodit (1998) 61 C.A.4th 1312, 72 C.R.2d 154, text, p. 914].

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

K. Statements of Mental or Physical State.

3. Mental State.

a. General Principles.

1. Nonhearsay and Admissible Hearsay.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 198

[§ 198] Nonhearsay and Admissible Hearsay.

The early California cases explain the admission or exclusion of these declarations in terms of the res gestae doctrine. (See Estate of Gleason (1913) 164 C. 756, 760, 130 P. 872.) But this term, loosely used, embraces two theories of admissibility not always distinguished:

(1) Statements that do not directly declare a mental or emotional state, but are merely circumstantial evidence of it, are outside the hearsay rule. (See supra, §37 et seq.; Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1250; 2 McCormick 5th, §274; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1715; 19 Cal. L. Rev. 245.)

(2) Declarations of mental condition, which directly assert it, are hearsay, and admissible only under this hearsay exception. (See 2 McCormick 5th, §274; 1 Jefferson, California Evidence Benchbook 3d, Chap. 14; 19 Cal. L. Rev. 248.)

This distinction is illustrated, although not explicitly stated by the court, in Adkins v. Brett (1920) 184 C. 252, 193 P. 251. The action was brought for alienation of affections (now abolished in California). Plaintiff husband was allowed to testify to conversations with his wife, in which she stated that she had gone riding with defendant, dined with him, and received flowers from him, that "he was able to give her a good time" and plaintiff was not, that she intended to continue to accept his attentions and plaintiff could do what he pleased, and that plaintiff was distasteful to her. (184 C. 254.) Held, the state of the wife's feelings toward plaintiff and defendant, a material issue, could be shown by these conversations. As to the inadmissible hearsay assertions concerning defendant's acts, the doctrine of limited admissibility (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §30) normally calls for admission of the statements with a limiting instruction to the jury (3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §382), although the judge may sometimes, in his or her discretion, wholly exclude the evidence if its prejudicial character outweighs the advantage of its admission. (184 C. 258.)

The foregoing facts disclose (1) a direct declaration of mental state within the hearsay exception (plaintiff was distasteful to her), and (2) statements that were merely circumstantial evidence of that mental state, and nonhearsay (her acts and defendant's acts). (See People v. Brust (1957) 47 C.2d 776, 785, 306 P.2d 480, infra, §208 [in murder case, victim's statements regarding defendant would have been admissible either under hearsay exception or as circumstantial evidence, but their exclusion was not prejudicial]; Benwell v. Dean (1967) 249 C.A.2d 345, 351, 57 C.R. 394, citing the text; People v. Ireland (1969) 70 C.2d 522, 528, 75 C.R. 188, 450 P.2d 580, infra, §201; Smith v. Slifer (1969) 1 C.A.3d

Donnell* (1975) 52 C.A.3d 762, 772, 125 C.R. 310 [quoting McCormick: Courts "have tended to lump together declarations asserting the declarant's state of mind with those tending to prove the state of mind circumstantially"]; *People v. ## 2. Declarant's Then Existing State.

aa. Present Mental State in Issue.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 199

[§ 199] Present Mental State in Issue.

When the "state of mind" or "emotion" (including "intent, plan, motive, design, mental feeling") of a person is relevant, the person's declarations of "then existing" state of mind are admissible. (Ev.C. 1250.) This principle allows proof of statements indicating present belief, knowledge, intention, feeling, or emotion (affection, hatred, fear, etc.). "The rule is without exception, so far as occurs to us at the moment, that whenever the intention, feeling, belief, or other mental state of a person at a particular time, including his bodily feeling, is material to an issue under trial, evidence of such person's declarations at the time indicative of his then mental state are admissible in evidence. It is wholly immaterial whether such declarations were made in the presence of an adverse party to the litigation or not, or what the character of the litigation is. The sole tests are, is the intention, belief, or other mental state of the declarant at the time material to the issues under trial, and, does the declaration indicate what the declarant's intention, belief, or other mental state at the time was." (Estate of Carson (1920) 184 C. 437, 445, 194 P. 5; see Adkins v. Brett (1920) 184 C. 252, 255, 193 P. 251, supra, §198; People v. Von Villas (1992) 11 C.A.4th 175, 250, 15 C.R.2d 112 [in prosecution arising from contract killing, testimony that defendant had expressed willingness to commit contract killings was admissible as statement of his then existing state of mind]; People v. Sword (1994) 29 C.A.4th 614, 635, 34 C.R.2d 810 [proceeding for outpatient status by defendant found not guilty of murder by reason of insanity and committed to state hospital; hospital records containing statements by defendant and conversations with him were admissible under state of mind exception]; People v. Smithey (1999) 20 C.4th 936, 971, 86 C.R.2d 243, 978 P.2d 1171 [after defendant testified that he had good relationship with murder victim, evidence that victim suspected defendant of having stolen her husband's welder was admissible under Ev.C. 1250 to show her state of mind]; 2 McCormick 5th, §274; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1714, 1725 et seq.; 19 Cal. L. Rev. 240; BAJI (8th ed.), No. 2.43.)

The reasons for admission, as stated by Wigmore, were quoted by the court in People v. Brust (1957) 47 C.2d 776, 785, 306 P.2d 480: "[T]hough the person's testimony on the stand may still be both actually and conveniently practicable, yet the probability of there receiving from him testimony which shall be in value equal or superior to certain hearsay statements is small; thus, while there is hardly a necessity in the strict sense, there is at least a desirability of resorting also to the hearsay statements."

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

K. Statements of Mental or Physical State.

3. Mental State.

a. General Principles.

2. Declarant's Then Existing State.

bb. Continuing Mental State.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 200

[§ 200] Continuing Mental State.

A theory of "continuity" of mental state has been developed by some courts, to permit proof of mental state at a particular time by evidence of prior or subsequent declarations. "When intent is a material element of a disputed fact, declarations of a decedent made after as well as before an alleged act that indicate the intent with which he performed the act are admissible in evidence as an exception to the hearsay rule, and it is immaterial that such declarations are self-serving." (Whitlow v. Durst (1942) 20 C.2d 523, 524, 127 P.2d 530, infra, §214.) "[T]he stream of consciousness has enough continuity so that we may expect to find the same characteristics for some distance up or down the current." (People v. One 1948 Chevrolet Convertible Coupe (1955) 45 C.2d 613, 621, 290 P.2d 538, infra, §205.) (See *Watenpaugh v. ### III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

K. Statements of Mental or Physical State.

3. Mental State.

a. General Principles.

2. Declarant's Then Existing State.

cc. Mental State Not in Issue.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 201

[§ 201] Mental State Not in Issue.

Ev.C. 1250(a)(1) deals with state of mind that is "itself an issue," and Ev.C. 1250(a)(2) with state of mind to "prove or explain acts or conduct of the declarant." (See supra, §194.) Cases decided before the Evidence Code was enacted sometimes treated the two purposes as the same.

In People v. Ireland (1969) 70 C.2d 522, 530, footnote 6, 75 C.R. 188, 450 P.2d 580, the court saw good reason to preserve the distinction. Defendant, embittered by his wife's extramarital affairs, went through quarrels and attempted reconciliations until one evening when he shot and killed her. The details were given by the eyewitness, his 6-year-old daughter, whose statement to the police was admitted by stipulation. Defendant gave testimony about his bad emotional state, and as to drinking a great deal of wine and taking various prescribed medications on the afternoon of the killing. He also related an incident occurring several years before, in which his wife had attacked him with a knife in the course of an argument. In rebuttal, the prosecution called Mrs. B, a longtime family friend, who testified to the substance of a phone conversation with the wife on the morning of the killing, in which the wife said: "I know he's going to kill me. I wish he would hurry up and get it over with. He'll never let me leave." Held, admission of this evidence was reversible error.

(a) The wife's state of mind on the day of her death was not itself an issue; hence, the exception of Ev.C. 1250(a)(1) was inapplicable. (70 C.2d 529.)

(b) The evidence was offered under Ev.C. 1250(a)(2), to explain acts or conduct of the declarant wife. But, unlike People v. Brust (1957) 47 C.2d 776, 306 P.2d 480, infra, §208, and People v. Lew (1968) 68 C.2d 774, 69 C.R. 102, 441 P.2d 942, defendant did not raise any issue of fact as to his wife's conduct immediately preceding her death; the testimony of the eyewitness child was left unchallenged, and the defense was based entirely on defendant's own mental state. (70 C.2d 530.)

(c) Thus the evidence, not within the state of mind exception, was incompetent hearsay--an opinion of the wife that defendant intended to kill her, from which the jury could infer premeditation. (See People v. Johnson (1978) 77 C.A.3d 866, 871, 143 C.R. 852; People v. Coleman (1985) 38 C.3d 69, 84, 211 C.R. 102, 695 P.2d 189, infra, §211; People v. Bunyard (1988) 45 C.3d 1189, 1204, 249 C.R. 71, 756 P.2d 795; People v. Noguera (1992) 4 C.4th 599, 621, 15 C.R.2d 400, 842 P.2d 1160 [admission of murder victim's statements expressing fear and hatred of defendant was error because her state of mind and conduct were not in issue].)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

K. Statements of Mental or Physical State.

3. Mental State.

a. General Principles.

3. Declarant's Previously Existing State.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 202

[§ 202] Declarant's Previously Existing State.

(1) Admissibility. A declaration of mental state of the declarant "at a time prior to the statement" is admissible under the same conditions as a declaration of prior physical sensation; i.e., when that prior state of mind "is itself an issue in the action." (Ev.C. 1251, supra, §194; see People v. One 1948 Chevrolet Convertible Coupe (1955) 45 C.2d 613, 621, 290 P.2d 538, infra, §205; Estate of Truckenmiller (1979) 97 C.A.3d 326, 332, 158 C.R. 699, infra, §203; People v. Bradford (1997) 15 C.4th 1229, 1324, 65 C.R.2d 145, 939 P.2d 259 [murder victim's statements concerning her previous fear of "a man" were not admissible; condition of admissibility is that statement not be used to prove fact other than state of mind or emotion, but defense was seeking to suggest factual basis for victim's state of mind].)

(2) Condition: Declarant Unavailable. Ev.C. 1251(a) requires a showing of unavailability of the witness (see supra, §194) as a condition of admissibility of declarations of past mental state. The reason, says the Law Revision Commission, is that there is "a greater opportunity for the declarant to remember inaccurately or even to fabricate." Hence, declarations of this type should be admitted only when the declarant's unavailability necessitates their use. (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1251.) (See People v. Edwards (1991) 54 C.3d 787, 819, 820, 1 C.R.2d 696, 819 P.2d 436 [criminal defendant who invoked his privilege not to testify was not unavailable for purposes of Ev.C. 1251(a)].)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

K. Statements of Mental or Physical State.

3. Mental State.

a. General Principles.

4. Statement of Memory or Belief Inadmissible.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 203

[§ 203] Statement of Memory or Belief Inadmissible.

A statement "of memory or belief" is not admissible to prove "the fact remembered or believed." (Ev.C. 1250(b).) "This limitation is necessary to preserve the hearsay rule. Any statement of a past event is, of course, a statement of the declarant's then existing state of mind--his memory or belief--concerning the past event. If the evidence of that state of mind--the statement of memory--were admissible to show that the fact remembered or believed actually occurred, any statement narrating a past event would be, by a process of circuitous reasoning, admissible to prove that the event occurred." (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1250.) (See Estate of Jones (1913) 166 C. 108, 117, 135 P. 288; Estate of Anderson (1921) 185 C. 700, 718, 719, 198 P. 407; People v. Lee (1990) 219 C.A.3d 829, 840, 268 C.R. 595 [testimony as to contents of ship's log was properly excluded under Ev.C. 1250(b)]; Shepard v. United States (1933) 290 U.S. 96, 54 S.Ct. 22, 78 L.Ed. 196; 2 McCormick 5th, §276; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1714; 1956 A.S. 533; for exception where memory or belief (past mental state) is in issue, see Ev.C. 1251, supra, §202.)

In People v. Swain (1962) 200 C.A.2d 344, 19 C.R. 403, defendant was charged with wilful burning of his motor vehicle and making a false insurance claim. To rebut motive, he sought to have his wife testify that, some hours after the fire, he telephoned her, saying that he did not know whether he had any insurance, and asking her to call the finance company to find out about it. Held, rejection was proper. "[T]he purported statement of the defendant was not directed at the future false claim but rather at the past fact of his memory at the time the alleged criminally-set fire occurred. It was not part of the res gestae; it was not a statement of future intent; it was a statement relating to the accused's past memory of a past fact in connection with an alleged criminal act already committed." (200 C.A.2d 352.)

In Estate of Truckenmiller (1979) 97 C.A.3d 326, 158 C.R. 699, decedent made a gift of property to himself and Mrs. W, a close friend, as joint tenants. After his death, his administrator sued Mrs. W to set aside the transfer on the ground of undue influence. He offered testimony of Mrs. P and Mrs. S on decedent's declarations that he had been "tricked" into the transaction and that Mr. W caught decedent in bed with Mrs. W. Held, the evidence could have been admitted for a limited purpose.

(a) The decedent's state of mind at the time of the gift was in issue, and his declarations as to that state of mind would be admissible under the "stream of consciousness" theory (supra, §200). (97 C.A.3d 332, 333.)

(b) The question, however, is whether the statements were admissible evidence of decedent's state of mind or inadmissible evidence of past events. "The testator's assertion that a person, named or unnamed, has procured him by fraud or by pressure to execute a will or to insert a provision, is plainly obnoxious to the hearsay rule, if offered as evidence that the fact asserted did occur." (97 C.A.3d 333, quoting Massachusetts case.) Here, decedent's statements were (1) admissible evidence of his state of mind--a belief that he had been tricked--and (2) inadmissible evidence that he had been caught in bed with Mrs. W and that Mr. and Mrs. W had tricked him. (97 C.A.3d 333, 334.)

(c) Thus, under Ev.C. 355 (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §30), the trial judge should have admitted the proffered evidence for its limited purpose. (97 C.A.3d 334, 335.) But this evidence alone (belief of the decedent) would not have been sufficient to sustain a finding of undue influence where there was no admissible evidence of improper conduct of the donee; hence, exclusion of the evidence was nonprejudicial error. (97 C.A.3d 334.)

In People v. Deeney (1983) 145 C.A.3d 647, 193 C.R. 608, defendant was convicted of involuntary manslaughter in the death of his wife, on evidence that she was found dead with bruises on her body. Defendant maintained that his wife, a chronic alcoholic, had died accidentally from a fall. A witness testified that the wife had told her of a previous beating by her husband shortly before her death. Held, admission of this testimony was reversible error. The statements were of the declarant's memory of an event, inadmissible under People v. Hamilton (1961) 55 C.2d 881, 13 C.R. 649, 362 P.2d 473, infra, §210, and Shepard v. United States, supra. "If the evidence in issue here were only that June said she had been bruised, it may have qualified as a statement of physical condition. However, the statement like those in Hamilton and Truckenmiller, principally related to the cause of June's condition and therefore fails the first requirement of section 1250." (145 C.A.3d 652.) (On abrogation of limitations imposed by Hamilton, see People v. Ortiz (1995) 38 C.A.4th 377, 44 C.R.2d 914, infra, §210.)

K. Statements of Mental or Physical State.

3. Mental State.

b. Illustrations: Belief, Knowledge, or Emotion.

1. Belief.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 204

[§ 204] Belief.

In Estate of Carson (1920) 184 C. 437, 194 P. 5, the testator left the bulk of her estate to "my husband J. Gamble Carson." Certain heirs contested the will, claiming that the marriage was void because of Carson's preexisting marriage, and that he had deceived her into thinking it was legal and thereby induced the testamentary disposition to him. They offered evidence of statements by the testator in conversations with others to the effect that she was lawfully married. Held, exclusion of this evidence was error. Her belief was material on the issue of fraudulent inducement, and declarations, indicating her then belief, were competent evidence. (184 C. 445.)

This hearsay exception has been suggested as a basis for admissibility of public opinion surveys; i.e., the recorded answers are evidence of consumer-declarants' belief. (See 66 Harv. L. Rev. 503; 1953 A.S. 766; 1958 A.S. 651; 76 A.L.R.2d 630 ["state of mind" exception as basis for admitting public survey or poll]; for a different theory, see supra, §37.)

In People v. One 1948 Chevrolet Convertible Coupe (1955) 45 C.2d 613, 290 P.2d 538, the driver of a car, shortly after his arrest and seizure of the car, made a statement admitting his knowledge of the presence of narcotics in the vehicle. Held, this statement was relevant and admissible to show that knowledge at the prior time of the arrest and seizure. (See supra, §202.)

In Hall v. San Jose Abstract & Title Ins. Co. (1959) 172 C.A.2d 421, 429, 342 P.2d 362, defendant's title policy recited that the property of a husband and wife was in joint tenancy. Defendant, however, mistakenly made the deed to them as tenants in common. In the surviving widow's action for damages, her son testified to decedent husband's declaration that his wife would be protected because the property was in joint tenancy and he was going to keep it that way. Held, admissible, to show the husband's knowledge of the policy recital and his reliance on it in making his will.

aa. Husband and Wife.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 206

[§ 206] Husband and Wife.

Declarations indicating feelings of affection, dislike, or hatred between spouses were frequently encountered in the now abolished action for alienation of affections. (See Bourne v. Bourne (1919) 43 C.A. 516, 519, 520, 185 P. 489; Adkins v. Brett (1920) 184 C. 252, 193 P. 251, supra, §198; 19 Cal. L. Rev. 241; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1730.)

In an action for wrongful death of a spouse, the monetary benefit of the lost comfort, society, and protection is an element of damages, and evidence concerning the nature of the relationship--affectionate or otherwise--is relevant on that issue. In Benwell v. Dean (1967) 249 C.A.2d 345, 57 C.R. 394, a statement of the decedent husband, made shortly before his death, that he was getting ready to leave plaintiff widow and he could not stand her behavior, was held admissible on two theories: (a) Circumstantial evidence of dislike inferred from his intention to leave (nonhearsay); (b) hearsay within the exception--a direct statement of his dislike. (249 C.A.2d 351.) However, the trial judge excluded the evidence, and his ruling was upheld. While admissible for its limited purpose of showing the husband's state of mind, it was highly prejudicial in its suggestion of the fact of the wife's misconduct--an inadmissible recital of past events. The judge therefore properly exercised his discretion under Ev.C. 352 (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §17) to determine that its probative value was outweighed by the prejudicial effect. The factors supporting his conclusion were (a) there was only a single declaration to this effect, (b) it was introduced in testimony of a hostile witness, (c) there was no corroborating evidence, and (d) plaintiff was not cross-examined on her testimony of an affectionate relationship. (249 C.A.2d 353.)

b. Illustrations: Belief, Knowledge, or Emotion.

3. Affection or Dislike.

bb. Testator.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 207

[§ 207] Testator.

A will contestant charging undue influence ordinarily seeks to show that the will would have favored the contestant had it not been for the improper influence exercised. The testator's affection or lack of affection for the contestant or beneficiaries is relevant on this issue, and that emotional state can be shown by declarations of the testator. These declarations, of course, are admitted only to show the testator's state of mind; they are inadmissible hearsay if offered to prove acts constituting undue influence. (See In re Calkins (1896) 112 C. 296, 300, 44 P. 577; Estate of Arnold (1905) 147 C. 583, 593, 82 P. 252; Estate of Snowball (1910) 157 C. 301, 308, 107 P. 598; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1738; 19 Cal. L. Rev. 242, 380; but see Estate of Gleason (1913) 164 C. 756, 761, 130 P. 872 [evidence of statements made by testator shortly after executing will was admissible on issue of mental capacity but not on undue influence issue]; 19 Cal. L. Rev. 244 [Gleason].)

Thus, in Estate of Trefren (1948) 86 C.A.2d 139, 144, 194 P.2d 574, the surviving husband contested his wife's will leaving her share of community property to a son by a former marriage. Declarations of the testator, some made 6 months before the will and others during her last illness, to the effect that she thought her husband should have their accumulations and that the son's wife wanted her to leave the property to the son, were held admissible to show the effect of any undue influence proved by other evidence, i.e., the declarations related to her mental attitude toward various objects of her bounty.

Similarly, in Estate of Pohlmann (1949) 89 C.A.2d 563, 573, 201 P.2d 446, declarations of the testator prior to signing a will leaving everything to her son, that she had to do it in order to escape from Nazi persecution, were admitted as throwing light on her attitude toward the legatee, her son.

[§ 208] Victim.

In People v. Brust (1957) 47 C.2d 776, 306 P.2d 480, defendant, charged with first degree murder of his wife, raised the defense of a long-continued provocatory course of conduct impairing his capacity for deliberation (i.e., no premeditation). He offered declarations of the wife, months before the killing, as follows: (a) She said, "Some day he [defendant] is going to make me so mad that I will kill him," and (b) "she hated Mr. Brust and didn't know whether she was going back to California with him." (47 C.2d 784.) The declarations were held relevant as circumstantial evidence of hostility toward defendant, tending to show provocation and passion and therefore either excuse or a lesser crime. (47 C.2d 784; see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §119.) As to the hearsay rule: (a) The first declaration was not offered for its truth ("I will kill him") but as circumstantial evidence of hostile feeling of the declarant, and therefore was outside the hearsay rule (supra, §39). (b) The second declaration was admissible under dual theories. It was both circumstantial evidence of her hostile feeling ("didn't know whether she was going back to California with him") and a direct declaration of emotional state ("she hated Mr. Brust"). #### K. Statements of Mental or Physical State.

3. Mental State.

b. Illustrations: Belief, Knowledge, or Emotion.

4. Victim's Fear.

aa. Admissibility.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 209

[§ 209] Admissibility.

(1) General Principle. A victim's fear of the defendant is an emotional state that, if relevant, may be proved by the victim's declarations. (See People v. Atchley (1959) 53 C.2d 160, 172, 346 P.2d 764 [relevant to defendant's claim that victim was aggressor in struggle for gun and he acted in self-defense]; People v. Finch (1963) 213 C.A.2d 752, 763, 29 C.R. 420 [relevant to defendant's theories of self-defense and accidental killing]; People v. Garcia (1986) 178 C.A.3d 814, 822, 224 C.R. 198 [relevant to negate defendant's claims that victim was bad-tempered, violent, and unpredictable and that his behavior caused or contributed to his death]; People v. Thompson (1988) 45 C.3d 86, 103, 246 C.R. 245, 753 P.2d 37; Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1240.)

In People v. Pinn (1971) 17 C.A.3d 99, 94 C.R. 741, a 12-year-old witness testified that on the day before his aunt, B, was stabbed to death, she "told me he [defendant] was going to kill her, and she wanted to get into the house to get some clothes and find my grandmother's gun." Held, the statement was admissible under Ev.C. 1250(a).

(a) Relevancy. Defendant introduced evidence about his conduct with B during the afternoon and evening immediately preceding the murder. He contended that she had willingly engaged in "heavy petting" and accompanied him to an isolated place for voluntary sexual intercourse. But the victim's statement indicated her fear of defendant and thus provided a basis for reasonable inference to contradict defendant's position and show she was probably killed for repelling his advances. (17 C.A.3d 105.)

(b) Reliability of statement. Nothing in the record indicated that B spoke to her nephew in anything but a natural manner. No motive for B to lie was shown, and, on the basis of past relations between B and defendant, it was reasonable for B to foresee the possibility of violence. B's statement was therefore trustworthy. (17 C.A.3d 106.)

(2) Distinction: Threats Not Admissible for Truth. In People v. Merkouris (1959) 52 C.2d 672, 344 P.2d 1, the victims' statements of threats by the defendant were admitted to show the "probability that the fear had been aroused by the victims' knowledge of the conduct of defendant indicating his intent to harm them." (52 C.2d 682.) (See People v. Feasby (1960) 178 C.A.2d 723, 732, 735, 3 C.R. 230; People v. Cooley (1962) 211 C.A.2d 173, 200, 201, 27 C.R. 543.) The Evidence Code repudiates this use of evidence of threats as proof of their truth, i.e., that the defendant made them and carried them out: "The exception [to the principle of Ev.C. 1250(b)] created by Merkouris is not based on any probability of reliability; it is based on a rationale that destroys the very foundation of the hearsay rule." (Law Rev.

Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1250.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) General Principle. In People v. Sakarias (2000) 22 C.4th 596, 94 C.R.2d 17, 995 P.2d 152, a capital murder case, the trial judge allowed an FBI agent to testify that the victim had told him that defendant asked to come to her house and retrieve property, that there was no such property, and that she refused the request because she was frightened of him. Held, the evidence was properly admitted under Ev.C. 1250(a). It was relevant to show that, because of her fear, the victim would not voluntarily have given defendant any of her property, and that he must therefore have obtained it by illegal means. Although defendant offered to stipulate that the victim did not make him a gift of her personal property, the prosecution cannot be forced to accept a stipulation if its effect would be to deprive the prosecution case of its persuasiveness. (22 C.4th 629.)

See People v. Waidla (2000) 22 C.4th 690, 723, 94 C.R.2d 396, 996 P.2d 46 [in capital murder prosecution, trial judge properly admitted testimony regarding statements made by victim indicating that she feared defendant; statements were relevant to prove her lack of consent in burglary and robbery related to her murder]; People v. Burgener (2003) 29 C.4th 833, 868, 129 C.R.2d 747, 62 P.3d 1 [after defense attempted to impeach prosecution witness' testimony at penalty retrial with her inability to recall certain details during her testimony at guilt phase, and witness explained that she was afraid to tell truth at guilt phase, trial judge did not err in allowing prosecution to present evidence of threats defendant had made against witness; threats were not hearsay and were relevant to credibility]; People v. Crew (2003) 31 C.4th 822, 829, 840, 3 C.R.3d 733, 74 P.3d 820 [in capital murder trial, prosecution witness' testimony that, shortly before leaving on trip with defendant, victim had said to her, "If you don't hear from me in two weeks, send the police," was properly admitted, where defense had placed victim's state of mind in issue by asserting that she was troubled person who had disappeared of her own accord]; People v. Guerra (2006) 37 C.4th 1067, 1113, 40 C.R.3d 118, 129 P.3d 321 [in prosecution for murder with attempted rape-murder special circumstance, evidence that victim feared defendant was relevant to issue of lack of consent to sexual intercourse]; People v. Escobar (2000) 82 C.A.4th 1085, 1103, 98 C.R.2d 696 [where defendant claimed that murder victim acted aggressively toward him and he killed her in heat of passion, testimony regarding victim's statements about desire to leave defendant and his threats to kill her if she did was properly admitted to impeach defendant's claims about her state of mind]; People v. Romero (2007) 149 C.A.4th 29, 37, 56 C.R.3d 678 [in light of defendant's reliance on self-defense in murder prosecution, his victim's statements about threats defendant had made against him were admissible]; cf. People v. Jablonski (2006) 37 C.4th 774, 818, 38 C.R.3d 98, 126 P.3d 938 [trial judge erred in admitting, under Ev.C. 1250(a), out-of-court statements by two victims regarding their fear of defendant, as victims' state of mind was not relevant to any disputed issue; however, to extent statement by one victim was admitted to show its effect on defendant, statement was not hearsay and was relevant to his mental state in going to visit victim].

(2) Distinction: Threats Not Admissible for Truth. See People v. Hernandez (2003) 30 C.4th 835, 872, 134 C.R.2d 602, 69 P.3d 446 [in penalty phase of capital murder trial, it was error to permit victim's sister to testify that victim had stated that he feared defendant would kill him; victim's state of mind was not at issue, and victim's fear was only relevant to whether defendant was victim's killer].

[§ 210] Former Limitations Abolished.

(1) The Hamilton Case. A major difficulty with the declarations to show the victim's fear (supra, §209) is that, while they are admissible only to show the state of mind of the declarant victim, they nearly always contain damaging recitals of fact about the defendant. And for the jury to separate mental state from the truth of the charges is a psychological impossibility. Hence, the trial judge must determine (under Ev.C. 352, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §17) whether the probative value of the evidence is substantially outweighed by the probability that its admission will be unduly prejudicial to the defendant.

People v. Hamilton (1961) 55 C.2d 881, 13 C.R. 649, 362 P.2d 473, a murder case, laid down two additional limitations on the admission of declarations of this type: (a) There must be at least circumstantial evidence that the declarations are probably trustworthy and credible; and (b) the declarations should be excluded if they refer to past acts of the defendant. (55 C.2d 895.) The statements at issue in Hamilton (to the effect that defendant had repeatedly threatened the victim with death, beaten her, and forced his attentions on her) lacked indicia of reliability, because the victim made them to authorities while trying to excuse herself for carrying a gun. (55 C.2d 895.) The statements also allowed the prosecutor to tell the jury, through the mouths of the law enforcement witnesses, that defendant had frequently beaten the victim. (55 C.2d 896.) To have admitted the statements under these circumstances was reversible error. (55 C.2d 900.) (See People v. Dalton (1962) 201 C.A.2d 396, 404, 20 C.R. 51 [Hamilton limitations applied to reverse situation; trial judge properly refused to allow defendant to try to show that victim, after deadly assault, was friendly to him in hospital and said that defendant had not previously beaten him]; People v. Lew (1968) 68 C.2d 774, 780, 69 C.R. 102, 441 P.2d 942 [declarations as to defendant's threats to kill victim were inadmissible because they referred to defendant's past conduct and there was no circumstantial evidence of trustworthiness]; People v. Finch (1963) 213 C.A.2d 752, 29 C.R. 420 [Hamilton limitations were satisfied: testimony as to defendant's threats and beatings of victim was by persons close to her, not law enforcement officials; recitals of past brutality would not have been inflammatory, because defendant himself testified to his own brutality; and jury was carefully apprised of limited purpose of evidence].)

and he had to defend himself. The trial judge admitted testimony concerning the following statements by the victim: (a) invitations by the victim to three other females to visit her on the day of the killing; (b) the victim's statement that she was "fed up" with having defendant live in her house because he was "always bothering her"; and (c) specific complaints by the victim concerning defendant's sexual behavior toward her. Held, affirmed; the statements were properly admitted.

(a) Hamilton was rendered invalid by two subsequent events: the enactment of the Evidence Code and the electorate's approval of the Truth-in-Evidence provision of Proposition 8 (Cal. Const., Art. I, §1(d); see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §§8, 9). The Law Revision Commission Comments on the new Evidence Code make clear that Hamilton is repudiated, and the Truth-in-Evidence provision abolished judicially created rules of exclusion, which the Hamilton limitations were. (38 C.A.4th 387, 388.) "Thus, under current authority, the court must be guided by the Evidence Code sections governing hearsay, section 352, and article I, section 28, subdivision (d) of the Constitution, when addressing the admissibility of statements attributed to a deceased victim. Further, to be admissible, the evidence must not violate constitutional provisions ensuring a fair trial." (38 C.A.4th 388, 389.)

(b) The invitations issued by the victim on the day of her murder were not hearsay at all. They were admissible circumstantial evidence tending to show that she had not asked defendant to come to her house on that day for a romantic liaison. (38 C.A.4th 390, 391.)

(c) The statements that the victim was "fed up" with defendant living in her house were classic state of mind hearsay, admissible as direct evidence of her attitude toward him. The portion of the statements indicating that defendant was always bothering her was a reference to past conduct, but it was vague and contained little prejudicial information. (38 C.A.4th 391.)

(d) The victim's statements regarding defendant's prior sexual behavior toward her would have been inadmissible hearsay if offered to prove that behavior. But they were relevant circumstantial evidence of the victim's unwillingness to have consensual sex with defendant, particularly when considered with the witnesses' descriptions of her demeanor as she related these statements. As the statements related to defendant's past conduct, Hamilton would have proscribed their admission; however, "Hamilton is no longer dispositive on the admissibility of such evidence." The concerns addressed by Hamilton are now taken into account when the trial judge weighs potential prejudice against probative value under Ev.C. 352. (38 C.A.4th 391, 392.)

(e) There is nothing in federal case law that would reimpose the Hamilton limitations as a means of protecting the constitutional right to confrontation. Indeed, under F.R. Evid., Rule 803(3), evidence of state of mind is admissible unless it is a statement of memory or belief offered to prove the fact or event remembered. There is no separate requirement that the statement not refer to defendant's past conduct. (38 C.A.4th 393.)

(f) Although in his initial ruling the trial judge found the victim's statements admissible as hearsay under Ev.C. 1250(a)(1), (a)(2), rather than as statements not offered for truth, when he admitted them during the trial he correctly and repeatedly admonished the jury that the statements were admitted only to show her state of mind. The prosecutor did, at one point in her closing argument, suggest that the truth of one statement's content had been established. "However, the prosecutor's comment was brief, especially in the context of a lengthy argument, and is clearly distinguishable from the repeated transgressions described in Hamilton." (38 C.A.4th 396.) (On Ev.C. 1370, which creates a separate hearsay exception for statements concerning the infliction or threat of physical injury on a now unavailable declarant, see infra, §220.)

4. Victim's Fear.

cc. Adequacy of Limiting Instructions.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 211

[§ 211] Adequacy of Limiting Instructions.

(1) Coleman Case. In People v. Coleman (1985) 38 C.3d 69, 211 C.R. 102, 695 P.2d 189, defendant was convicted of murdering of his wife, son, and niece. The sentence was life imprisonment without possibility of parole, and the jury found him sane. The major issue on appeal involved the admission in evidence of three hearsay letters written by the wife a substantial period of time before her death, which referred to alleged prior threats against her by defendant and her fear of future violence. The trial judge admitted them for the limited purposes of impeaching defendant's credibility and to explain and challenge the basis for the opinions of the psychiatric experts. Held, admission of this evidence was reversible error; the judge's instructions could not adequately insure that the letters would not be considered as proof of the truth of the hearsay accusations.

(c) In the present case, the judge correctly ruled that the wife's state of mind was not in issue, and that the letters did not tend to prove the state of mind of the defendant at the time of the alleged crime; hence, they were not admissible under any exception to the hearsay rule. However, the prosecutor was allowed to use them for two limited purposes: (1) The expert witnesses had considered the letters in reaching their opinions and were subject to cross-examination on the materials. (2) The prosecutor could cross-examine defendant to cast doubt on the truth of defendant's testimony pertaining to the "To Whom It May Concern" letter, in which the wife described her feelings of hopelessness and despair. Defendant testified that he had not thought of killing his family before the killings occurred; the prosecutor, outside the presence of the jury, proved that defendant had found the "To Whom" letter a month before. (38 C.3d 85.)

(d) Although in Hamilton the evidence was admitted under the state of mind exception, the judge's attempt to limit the jury's consideration of the letters was equally futile in this case. The true danger is that the jury cannot separate the state of mind of the declarant from the truth of the facts contained in the declarations, and that danger is also present when the hearsay is offered for the ostensibly limited purpose of undermining the veracity of an expert or other witnesses. (38 C.3d 85, 86.) Thus, in the cross-examination of defendant, by a series of largely unsuccessful attempts to fashion proper questions, the prosecutor was able to bring the most prejudicial portions of the hearsay letters before the jury. (38 C.3d 86, 87.)

(e) An expert may rely on inadmissible hearsay in forming a psychiatric opinion. (38 C.3d 90, discussing Board of Education of Pasadena Unified School Dist. v. Haas (1978) 82 C.A.3d 278, 147 C.R. 88, and Board of Trustees v. Porini (1968) 263 C.A.2d 784, 70 C.R. 73, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Opinion Evidence, §31.) But neither in Haas nor Porini was the hearsay itself presented to the trier of fact to explain the expert's opinion. And in People v. Chapman (1975) 50 C.A.3d 872, 123 C.R. 862, the hearsay statement relied on by a defense psychiatric expert was itself excluded from evidence. In other words, the expert may state on direct examination the matters relied on, but the expert may not testify to their details if they are otherwise inadmissible. (38 C.3d 92.)

(f) Ordinarily, a limiting instruction cures the hearsay problem, but in aggravated situations it will not; the judge must then exercise his or her discretion under Ev.C. 352 to exclude portions of the inadmissible hearsay not related to the expert opinion. (38 C.3d 92.) In some cases, the risk of improper use is so great that it may be necessary to exclude the evidence altogether. (38 C.3d 93, citing People v. Modesto (1963) 59 C.2d 722, 31 C.R. 225, 382 P.2d 33, and People v. Reyes (1974) 12 C.3d 486, 116 C.R. 217, 526 P.2d 225.) In the present case, the judge abused his discretion in permitting extensive questioning of the expert witnesses on the contents of the letters: (1) Accusatory statements "from the grave" have a great potential to unfairly prejudice the defendant. (2) The letters were only a small portion of the material on which the psychiatrists based their opinions and were not cited by them as items of major significance. (3) The portions that were legitimately offered could have been selected and presented in a fashion that would have lessened their emotional impact and avoided the improper inference that the accusations were true. (38 C.3d 93.) (See People v. Thompson (1988) 45 C.3d 86, 246 C.R. 245, 753 P.2d 37 [victim, only hours before her death, made statement indicating her personal fear of defendant; statement was directly relevant to her subsequent conduct and recounted no past conduct of defendant: "Coleman's conclusion as to the inadequacy of limiting instructions just does not apply in this context"].)

(2) Statutory Enactment. Situations such as those described in Coleman, Hamilton, and Thompson will sometimes come within Ev.C. 1370, enacted in 1996. That section creates a separate hearsay exception for statements concerning the infliction or threat of physical injury on an unavailable declarant. (See infra, §220.)

K. Statements of Mental or Physical State.

3. Mental State.

c. Illustrations: Intent.

1. Declarations of Grantor or Donor.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 212

[§ 212] Declarations of Grantor or Donor.

Where the declarations are not contemporaneous with the acts of handing over an instrument or other property, the verbal act doctrine does not apply. Moreover, in a strict sense, the declarations do not come within the exception for declarations of present mental state: i.e., they are made either before or after the time at which intent is relevant. But the rule is well established that the state of mind before or after execution or delivery is circumstantial evidence of the intent at the time of execution or delivery. Older cases often speak vaguely of "res gestae"; writers and modern courts use such phrases as "continuity of state of mind" and "stream of consciousness" to explain the rule. (See generally 2 McCormick 5th, §274; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1734 et seq.; 19 Cal. L. Rev. 242, 249, 367; 26 Cal. L. Rev. 631; 34 A.L.R.2d 588; 51 A.L.R.2d 820.)

California cases have held admissible both prior and subsequent declarations. (On prior declarations, see Kyle v. Craig (1899) 125 C. 107, 113, 57 P. 791; Casey v. Casey (1950) 97 C.A.2d 875, 879, 218 P.2d 842 [declarations a year or more prior to making deed]; Fahrney v. Wilson (1960) 180 C.A.2d 694, 697, 4 C.R. 670, citing the text; on subsequent declarations, see Williams v. Kidd (1915) 170 C. 631, 648, 151 P. 1; Schooler v. Williamson (1923) 192 C. 472, 478, 221 P. 195; Dinneen v. Younger (1943) 57 C.A.2d 200, 205, 134 P.2d 323; Katz v. Enos (1945) 68 C.A.2d 266, 275, 156 P.2d 461 [declarations 2 years after signing deed]; Hansen v. Bear Film Co. (1946) 28 C.2d 154, 174, 168 P.2d 946; Pailhe v. Pailhe (1952) 113 C.A.2d 53, 63, 247 P.2d 838; Mecchi v. Picchi (1966) 245 C.A.2d 470, 478, 54 C.R. 1, supra, §184; Alocco v. Fouche (1961) 190 C.A.2d 244, 252, 11 C.R. 818 [declarations of grantor before and after time of execution of deed to show mental capacity and susceptibility to influence].)

(2) Self-Serving Declarations on Deed as Mortgage. In Wilcox v. Salomone (1953) 118 C.A.2d 704, 711, 258 P.2d 845, the action was brought to have a deed declared a mortgage. The trial judge admitted oral and written declarations of plaintiff's deceased wife on the nature of the transaction, all supporting the contention that a loan and mortgage were intended by defendants. Thus, they were all self-serving, but were held admissible as declarations of intent. (See

Schnepfe v. Schnepfe (1953) 120 C.A.2d 463, 466, 261 P.2d 321 [similar declarations of decedent grantor admitted, following Wilcox.]

2. Self-Serving Declarations of Defendant.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 213

[§ 213] Self-Serving Declarations of Defendant.

The general feeling that self-serving statements are subject to suspicion and should not be admitted (see supra, §10) has led some courts to exclude proof of a criminal defendant's own prior exculpatory declaration, e.g., that the defendant did not intend to attack the victim, or that the defendant's feeling toward the victim was friendly. (See People v. Smith (1940) 15 C.2d 640, 648, 104 P.2d 510 [murder of wife; defendant's affectionate letters to her written several days prior to homicide excluded as self-serving and remote].) This attitude is denounced by Wigmore, and there is some authority for admission of this type of evidence. (See People v. Farr (1967) 255 C.A.2d 679, 63 C.R. 477; 2 McCormick 5th, §270; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1732, p. 160; 19 Cal. L. Rev. 255; 1954 A.S. 775; see supra, §204 et seq., for other self-serving declarations admitted under state of mind exception.)

In People v. Farr, supra, defendant was charged with murder of his wife. He had previously written a long memorandum covering his relationship with her. The mood was love and compassion, and was relevant to prove his state of mind--inconsistent with an intention to kill her. The court held that, on the retrial after reversal for other reasons, the memorandum would be admissible unless there was evidence to indicate lack of trustworthiness. "Such cases as People v. Smith, ... which flatly reject such evidence as 'self-serving' must be deemed no longer valid. Their inflexibility has been replaced by the more elastic standards of section 1252." (255 C.A.2d 688.)

In People v. Cruz (1968) 264 C.A.2d 350, 70 C.R. 603, defendant killed a woman in his apartment with two shots from a rifle. He immediately told his landlady that he had shot her but did not know why, and an hour later gave police an exculpatory statement. In affirming his conviction of second degree murder, the court analyzed the admissibility of the tape-recorded statement as follows: (a) It was not admissible under the state of mind exception (supra, §199) because, applying the trustworthiness limitation of Ev.C. 1252 (supra, §194), there was an obvious motive for misstatement. (264 C.A.2d 358.) (b) There is no special hearsay exception for exculpatory statements showing lack of consciousness of guilt (Wigmore's proposed "consciousness of innocence"). (264 C.A.2d 361.)

3. Other Declarations.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 214

[§ 214] Other Declarations.

(1) Declarations of Possessor of Land. On the issue of adverse possession, the possessor's declarations of intent in occupying the land, i.e., whether the possessor claims as owner or otherwise, are admissible. (Stockton Savings Bank v. Staples (1893) 98 C. 189, 192, 32 P. 936; see 19 Cal. L. Rev. 254.)

(2) Declarations as to Residence or Domicile. Because domicile is based on intent to make a permanent home, a person's declarations of intent, like testimony on this matter (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Opinion Evidence, §8), are admitted. (See Estate of Brady (1918) 177 C. 537, 539, 171 P. 303; Kopasz v. Kopasz (1951) 107 C.A.2d 308, 310, 237 P.2d 284; Guardianship of Mosier (1966) 246 C.A.2d 164, 172, 54 C.R. 447 [statements of elderly person under conservatorship, originally from Texas, that he regarded Los Angeles as his residence, coupled with act of leaving Texas and coming to California to stay]; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1727, 1784; 61 Harv. L. Rev. 1237.)

(3) Declarations of Spouse on Reconciliation. In Whitlow v. Durst (1942) 20 C.2d 523, 524, 127 P.2d 530, the issue was whether a property settlement agreement had been revoked by a reconciliation between the wife and husband before his death. Held, declarations of the husband, shortly after the time of the alleged reconciliation, to the effect that they would never be reconciled, were admissible. They tended to show his intent, and therefore the probability that no reconciliation did occur. The court, following the deed cases (supra, §207), approved the admissibility of both prior and subsequent declarations.

(4) Decedent's Intention To Work After Retirement. In Foss v. Anthony Industries (1983) 139 C.A.3d 794, 189 C.R. 31, a wrongful death action, plaintiff sought to introduce a statement of the decedent to a witness that decedent intended to take a job after he retired from the Navy. Held, exclusion of the evidence was prejudicial error. An expert testified that the decedent's children would have received $ 200,000 in support if he did not take a new job, but $ 100,000 more if he did. The jury awarded only $ 200,000; i.e., they fixed damages on the assumption that he would not have continued working after retirement. (139 C.A.3d 801.)

K. Statements of Mental or Physical State.

3. Mental State.

d. Intention as Evidence of Future Act.

1. General Rule of Admissibility.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 215

[§ 215] General Rule of Admissibility.

In Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Hillmon (1892) 145 U.S. 285, 12 S.Ct. 909, 36 L.Ed. 706, an action on H's life insurance policy, defendant insurer set up the defense of conspiracy by H and B to make a false claim of death. To corroborate its evidence that the body found in Colorado was that of W, the company introduced letters of W to others stating that he was going to Colorado with H. These declarations were held admissible as evidence that the declarant, W, went there, and also that he went there with H. This case has been the subject of much discussion, and its broad implication that the declaration is admissible not only to prove the declarant's future act, but the future act of another person who was with the declarant, has been criticized. (See 19 Cal. L. Rev. 367, 371; 35 Harv. L. Rev. 444; 38 Harv. L. Rev. 709.)

The issue involved in this type of case is whether an act occurred. Intent is not directly in issue, but the statement of present intention, plan, or design is offered as circumstantial evidence that the intention, plan, or design was carried out, i.e., that the planned or intended act was done. The admissibility of such declarations, with some qualifications, is now well established. (See People v. Alcalde (1944) 24 C.2d 177, 185, 148 P.2d 627, infra §218; People v. Watson (1961) 198 C.A.2d 707, 721, 18 C.R. 234; 19 Cal. L. Rev. 372; 2 McCormick 5th, §275; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1725; 1962 A.S. 342.)

The Hillmon doctrine was fully explored in People v. Alcalde, supra, where the court rejected the explanation in terms of res gestae (24 C.2d 187), and stated the rule as follows: "From the declared intent to do a particular thing an inference that the thing was done may fairly be drawn. Such declarations have been deemed admissible where they possessed a high degree of trustworthiness. Where they are relevant to an issue in the case and the declarant is dead or otherwise unavailable the necessity for their admission has been recognized." (24 C.2d 186.) "No attempt need be made here to define or summarize all the limitations or restrictions upon the admissibility of declarations of intent to do an act in the future or to indicate what degree of unavailability or corroboration should exist in every case. Elements essential to admissibility are that the declaration must tend to prove the declarant's intention at the time it was made; it must have been made under circumstances which naturally give verity to the utterance; it must be relevant to an issue in the case." (24 C.2d 187.)

Ev.C. 1250(a)(2) codifies the rule, allowing proof of declarations of state of mind (including intent) "to prove or explain acts or conduct of the declarant." (See Smith v. Slifer (1969) 1 C.A.3d 748, 752, 753, 81 C.R. 871, quoting the text; People v. Earnest (1975) 53 C.A.3d 734, 743, 126 C.R. 107 [statements of R, a boy allegedly hired by defendant to burn down defendant's house for insurance proceeds, that R intended to burn the house and how he intended to do it];

People v. Williams (1997) 16 C.4th 153, 205, 66 C.R.2d 123, 940 P.2d 710 [citing Alcalde, defendant's statement to cellmate about suppressing testimony was not inadmissible even though it disclosed future intent to do so rather than completed act]; People v. Majors (1998) 18 C.4th 385, 404, 405, 75 C.R.2d 684, 956 P.2d 1137 [murder victim's statements to third parties that he intended to conduct drug deal on night he was killed were properly admitted; even though statements did not mention defendant, there was ample evidence linking defendant to planned deal].)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

K. Statements of Mental or Physical State.

3. Mental State.

d. Intention as Evidence of Future Act.

2. Intention To Commit Suicide.

[§ 216] Intention To Commit Suicide.

In an action on a life insurance policy, where the fact of death is challenged, the insured's declaration of intention to commit suicide is admissible to prove death. (Rogers v. Manhattan Life Ins. Co. (1903) 138 C. 285, 289, 291, 71 P. 348; Benjamin v. District Grand Lodge (1915) 171 C. 260, 267, 152 P. 731; see 4 Cal. L. Rev. 145; 19 Cal. L. Rev. 375.)

A suicide declaration of the alleged victim in a homicide case is also admissible on behalf of the defendant to support his denial of unlawful killing, because it suggests the probability of the alleged victim's self-destruction. (See People v. Tugwell (1915) 28 C.A. 348, 359, 152 P. 740; People v. Taylor (1980) 112 C.A.3d 348, 362, 364, 169 C.R. 290, citing the text; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1726, p. 139; but see 1954 A.S. 777 [discretion to exclude where too remote].) Once a declaration expressing suicidal intentions has been admitted, the prosecution may offer declarations of a state of mind inconsistent with those intentions. (People v. Selby (1926) 198 C. 426, 430, 245 P. 426.) (See 19 Cal. L. Rev. 377.)

The alleged victim's prior unsuccessful attempt to commit suicide is also admissible as evidence of suicidal intent, and therefore of probable suicide. In People v. Salcido (1966) 246 C.A.2d 450, 54 C.R. 820, defendant, riding in the back seat of a car with the victim, his paramour, quarreled with her and threatened her with his gun. Later, a shot was fired, and the witness in the front seat saw the victim wounded and defendant wiping his gun. Defendant's conviction of first degree murder was, however, reversed, for exclusion of the following evidence: (a) The victim's declaration to defendant and the ambulance driver, made on the way to the hospital, that she had shot herself (see supra, §149); (b) prior attempts by the victim to commit suicide, as evidence of a predisposition and indicating a probability of suicide. As to the latter evidence, the theory of exclusion was remoteness, i.e., that on the day of the killing she was happy and looking forward to an impending marriage with defendant, hence, that the "stream of consciousness" had been broken. The court's answer was that the evidence showed the victim's inclination or propensity to take her own life under emotional stress, and that this was "highly significant," even though the acts took place many months prior to her death. (246 C.A.2d 460.)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

K. Statements of Mental or Physical State.

3. Mental State.

d. Intention as Evidence of Future Act.

3. Intention To Go to or Leave Place.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 217

[§ 217] Intention To Go to or Leave Place.

In People v. Chenault (1946) 74 C.A.2d 487, 495, 169 P.2d 29, defendant, charged with a robbery in Fresno, claimed an alibi. He called a witness to testify to his self-serving declarations made to her in Fresno shortly before the time of the alleged offense, to the effect that he was coming from Los Angeles and on his way to San Francisco. Held, exclusion of the testimony was error. (See People v. Fong Sing (1918) 38 C.A. 253, 258, 175 P. 911 [declaration of defendant that he intended to go to certain place admissible to show that he did not go to scene of crime]; 19 Cal. L. Rev. 379.)

In People v. Horace (1954) 127 C.A.2d 366, 368, 273 P.2d 923, the issue was whether due diligence had been exercised in trying to locate the complaining witness. The witness had told a California officer that he intended to leave California and had given him a Minneapolis phone number of the place he intended to visit. The officer called the number and asked for the witness, a man identified himself by that name, and a conversation was had. Held, this was sufficient proof that he was the missing witness.

The principle was given an expanded application in People v. Weatherford (1945) 27 C.2d 401, 164 P.2d 753. Defendant was charged with murdering a woman tenant of his cafe. The prosecution's theory was that he wanted to get her out of the premises. Defendant, in support of his claim that the victim had promised to leave voluntarily, produced a witness to testify that the victim had said that she was going to leave town on a trip. The trial court excluded the evidence, reasoning that, because her body was found on the premises, she had not in fact gone away. Held, the exclusion was reversible error. The declarations of intent to leave were relevant in support of defendant's denial of the prosecution's theory of motive, i.e., they tended to disprove the claim that he killed her to get rid of her. Thus, the case holds that declarations of intention to do an act are admissible not only to prove that the act was done but for any other purpose for which any declarations of intent or state of mind might be relevant. "The declarations of the intent are admissible not only as evidence of the probable doing of the act, but also as evidence of the intent itself even if the act has not been done." (27 C.2d 422.) "This case is the converse of the Alcalde case. There the evidence of intent led to an inference of identity of the defendant as the murderer; here the evidence of intent leads to the inference that defendant lacked any motive and may not have been the murderer." (27 C.2d 423, referring to People v. Alcalde (1944) 24 C.2d 177, 148 P.2d 627; see infra, §218.) (See 19 So. Cal. L. Rev. 449.)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

K. Statements of Mental or Physical State.

3. Mental State.

d. Intention as Evidence of Future Act.

4. Intention To Go With Person.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 218

[§ 218] Intention To Go With Person.

In People v. Alcalde (1944) 24 C.2d 177, 148 P.2d 627, defendant Frank Alcalde was charged with murder of a woman. The evidence of identity of the killer was circumstantial. Over defendant's objection, the prosecution offered the declaration of the victim, made on the date of the crime, that she was going out with Frank that evening. Held, this was admissible for the limited purpose of showing the victim's intention, from which an inference could be drawn that she was with defendant. "Unquestionably the deceased's statement of her intent and the logical inference to be drawn therefrom, namely, that she was with the defendant that night, were relevant to the issue of the guilt of the defendant." (24 C.2d 188.)

This decision raises the disturbing problem of Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Hillmon (1892) 145 U.S. 285, 12 S.Ct. 909, 36 L.Ed. 706, supra, §215--whether one person's declaration of intention to do an act with another person should be admitted when it is inadmissible hearsay as to the other. The dissenting opinion in the Alcalde case points up the danger: "The declaration of the deceased in this case that she was going out with Frank is also a declaration that he was going out with her, and it could not be admitted for the limited purpose of showing that she went out with him at the time in question without necessarily showing that he went with her. ... Such a declaration could not be admitted without the risk that the jury would conclude that it tended to prove the acts of the defendant as well as of the declarant, and it is clear that the prosecution used the declaration to that end. There is no dispute as to the identity of the deceased or as to where she was at the time of her death. Since the evidence is overwhelming as to who the deceased was and where she was when she met her death, no legitimate purpose could be served by admitting her declarations of what she intended to do on the evening of November 22d. The only purpose that could be served by admitting such declarations would be to induce the belief that the defendant went out with the deceased, took her to the scene of the crime and there murdered her. Her declarations cannot be admitted for that purpose without setting aside the rule against hearsay." (24 C.2d 189.)

The Alcalde rule was applied in People v. Hawkins (1960) 177 C.A.2d 714, 718, 2 C.R. 524. The victim of an abortion had told her sister that she was going to see defendant and the sister so testified. Defendant correctly contended on appeal that the declaration was only admissible to establish her condition of pregnancy and the avowed purpose of her visit, and was inadmissible hearsay on the issue of actual commission of the abortion. But failure to request a limiting instruction was a waiver of the objection. (See People v. Chambers (1982) 136 C.A.3d 444, 451, 452, 186 C.R. 306 [discussing dissent in Alcalde, but pointing out that decision is still binding precedent]; People v. Jones (1996) 13 C.4th 535, 548, 54 C.R.2d 42, 917 P.2d 1165 [in murder prosecution, testimony of victim's daughter that victim said she was going with defendant and to call her aunt if she did not return was properly admitted "to prove or explain acts or conduct of the declarant"; citing Alcalde; 24 Pepperdine L. Rev. 1416 [Jones].)

d. Intention as Evidence of Future Act.

5. Threats of Accused or Victim.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 219

[§ 219] Threats of Accused or Victim.

(1) Declarations of Defendant. On a charge of homicide or assault, to meet the defense of lack of criminal intent, the prosecution may introduce prior threats of the defendant to kill or attack the victim, on either of two theories: (a) proof of the mental state of the defendant (i.e., criminal intent) at the time of the killing or assault. (See People v. Craig (1896) 111 C. 460, 465, 44 P. 186; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1732; 19 Cal. L. Rev. 255.) (b) Proof of intention to commit the future act threatened. (See People v. Wilt (1916) 173 C. 477, 482, 160 P. 561; People v. Karis (1988) 46 C.3d 612, 636, 637, 250 C.R. 659, 758 P.2d 1189 [statements "reflecting intent to kill a particular category of victims in specific circumstances"]; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1732; 19 Cal. L. Rev. 255; on statutory exception for victim's statements concerning defendant's threats of physical abuse, see infra, §220.)

(2) Declarations of Victim. If the victim of a homicide or assault threatened the defendant and the latter knew of the threat, this is circumstantial evidence of the defendant's fear of attack (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §59). But even if the threat was not communicated so that the declaration is not relevant for this purpose, it may nevertheless be offered by the defendant on the issue of self-defense, as circumstantial evidence that the victim carried out his threat and became the aggressor. (See People v. Thomson (1891) 92 C. 506, 510, 28 P. 589; 2 McCormick 5th, §275; 19 Cal. L. Rev. 372; 25 Cal. L. Rev. 461; 98 A.L.R.2d 195 [admissibility of uncommunicated threats on self-defense issue in assault prosecution]; but see People v. Spraic (1927) 87 C.A. 724, 729, 262 P. 795 [some other evidence must show that deceased was aggressor]; on threats by victim's associates, see People v. Minifie (1996) 13 C.4th 1055, 1065, 56 C.R.2d 133, 920 P.2d 1337, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §60.)

It would appear equally proper for the prosecution to offer peaceful declarations of the victim, i.e., statements that the victim did not intend to attack the defendant, on this same issue. But an early California case, mechanically applying the res gestae test, held such statements inadmissible except as rebuttal. (People v. Carlton (1880) 57 C. 83, 85; see 19 Cal. L. Rev. 374.)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE
L. Statements Concerning Physical Abuse.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 220

[§ 220] Statements Concerning Physical Abuse.

(1) In General. Ev.C. 1370, added in 1996, creates a hearsay exception for statements purporting to narrate, describe, or explain the infliction or threat of physical injury on the declarant if the following requirements imposed by Ev.C. 1370(a) are met:

(a) The declarant is an unavailable witness under Ev.C. 240 (see supra, §18).

(b) The statement was made at or near the time of the injury or threat. Statements made more than 5 years before the action or proceeding was filed are inadmissible.

(c) The statement was made under circumstances indicating its trustworthiness.

(d) The statement was made in writing, was electronically recorded, or was made to a law enforcement official.

(2) Factors Relevant to Trustworthiness Determination. Under Ev.C. 1370(b), the factors relevant to the determination whether the statement is trustworthy include, but are not limited to:

(a) Whether the statement was made in contemplation of litigation in which the declarant was interested.

(b) Whether there was a bias or motive for fabricating the statement, and, if so, the extent of the bias or motive.

(c) Whether the statement is corroborated by evidence admissible other than under Ev.C. 1370.

(3) Notice. The proponent of the statement must make known to the adverse party the intention to offer the statement, along with the particulars of the statement, far enough in advance of the proceedings to provide the adverse party with "a fair opportunity to prepare to meet the statement." (Ev.C. 1370(c).) (See Guardianship of Simpson (1998) 67 C.A.4th 914, 937, 79 C.R.2d 389 [in guardianship proceeding arising out of same facts that were basis for murder prosecution that caused Legislature to enact Ev.C. 1370, trial judge erred in excluding decedent mother's diary entries on ground that they referred to financial rather than physical threats; entries should have been admitted, with each side permitted to argue its own interpretation]; People v. Hernandez (1999) 71 C.A.4th 417, 422, 424, 83 C.R.2d 747 [statute is constitutional; due process is satisfied because reciprocity is provided, and statute is similar to spontaneous statement exception, which is firmly rooted exception to hearsay rule]; 110 Harv. L. Rev. 805 [arguing that admission of personal diaries and other statements by victim may violate Confrontation Clause]; 28 Pacific L. J. 809 [same]; 27 Golden Gate L. Rev. 497 [describing statute as response to O. J. Simpson case and assessing its utility in future cases].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. See People v. Quitiquit (2007) 155 C.A.4th 1, 9, 65 C.R.3d 674 [in murder prosecution in which it was alleged that defendant twisted his wife's neck, causing her to die several months later, trial judge erred in admitting wife's statement to doctor and police officer to effect that defendant had twisted her neck; statement was made nearly two months after injury and was not substantiated by other admissible evidence].

(d) Form of statement or to whom made: Ev.C. 1370(a) was amended in 2000 to provide that the statement may be made to physicians, nurses, and paramedics as well as law enforcement officials.

(2) Factors Relevant to Trustworthiness Determination. See People v. Price (2004) 120 C.A.4th 224, 239, 15 C.R.3d 229 [in light of Crawford v. Washington (2004) 541 U.S. 36, 124 S.Ct. 1354, 158 L.Ed.2d 177, 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, Supp., §21, trustworthiness prong of Ev.C. 1370 must be interpreted as requiring prior opportunity to cross-examine declarant]; People v. Pantoja (2004) 122 C.A.4th 1, 11, 13, 18 C.R.3d 492 [in murder prosecution, admission of declaration by victim in support of application for restraining order against defendant was error, as trustworthiness requirement was not met; there was no information indicating time, place, and circumstances under which declaration was prepared, it was unclear who wrote it, and it was prepared "in contemplation of pending or anticipated litigation" within meaning of Ev.C. 1370(b)].

(3) Notice. See People v. Kons (2003) 108 C.A.4th 514, 523, 133 C.R.2d 520 [disagreeing with suggestion in People v. Hernandez (1999) 71 C.A.4th 417, 83 C.R.2d 747, text, p. 940, that Ev.C. 1370 passes constitutional muster simply because it is akin to firmly rooted spontaneous declaration hearsay exception].

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

M. Testator's Statements Concerning Will.

1. In General.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 221

[§ 221] In General.

(1) Development of Rule. The policy against admitting recitals of past acts (supra, §203) has been subjected to an exception in cases dealing with a testator's declarations. These may concern either the testator's will or the lack of a will. The influential considerations have been necessity (declarant deceased and issue of vital importance) and trustworthiness (special knowledge of testator, unlikelihood of false statements). (See infra, §222.) It is difficult to explain these cases consistently with others excluding declarations of past acts, and it was suggested that a new exception to the hearsay rule should be formulated for will cases. (See 2 McCormick 5th, §276; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1736, p. 169; 19 Cal. L. Rev. 381.) (On admissibility of declarations to show state of mind on ambiguous provisions, see Estate of Fries (1963) 221 C.A.2d 725, 730, 34 C.R. 749; see also 5 A.L.R.3d 360 [testator's declarations on issue of mistake of fact].)

(2) Evidence Code. Ev.C. 1260, codifies the case law, creating a specific will exception, along with its own trustworthiness limitation: Evidence of "a statement made by a declarant who is unavailable as a witness that he has or has not made a will, or has or has not revoked his will, or that identifies his will," is admissible, unless "made under circumstances such as to indicate its lack of trustworthiness." (Ev.C. 1260.) (See infra, §222 et seq.)

It should be remembered, however, that broadening the hearsay exception does not necessarily result in admissibility of relevant declarations; the parol evidence rule may still be a barrier. (See 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Documentary Evidence, §59.)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

M. Testator's Statements Concerning Will.

2. Declaration on Making or Revocation.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 222

[§ 222] Declaration on Making or Revocation.

(1) Declaration on Making of Will. The testator's subsequent declaration that the will has been made is admissible. (Estate of Morrison (1926) 198 C. 1, 7, 242 P. 939; see 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1736; 19 Cal. L. Rev. 384.) It may be noted also that a prior declaration of intent to make a will is admissible under the distinct doctrine of intention as evidence of a future act. (See Estate of Spitzer (1925) 196 C. 301, 306, 237 P. 739; supra, §215; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1735; and see generally 21 A.L.R.2d 355.)

(2) Declaration on Nonrevocation. Where the issue is whether a lost will or one defaced was intentionally revoked, the testator's declarations made prior to death that a certain will is in effect are admissible. (See Estate of Thompson (1927) 200 C. 410, 417, 253 P. 697; Estate of Janes (1941) 18 C.2d 512, 516, 116 P.2d 438; Estate of Thompson (1941) 44 C.A.2d 774, 776, 112 P.2d 937 [order admitting lost will fraudulently destroyed by surviving spouse]; Estate of Boyer (1944) 67 C.A.2d 83, 85, 153 P.2d 793 [same]; Estate of Ronayne (1951) 103 C.A.2d 852, 858, 230 P.2d 423; Estate of Zalud (1972) 27 C.A.3d 945, 954, 104 C.R. 329, citing the text [decendent's statements in 1970 about her 1967 will and codicil were admissible to show that her state of mind was such that 1967 will had not been revoked, despite existence of purported will dated in 1969]; 3 A.L.R.2d 960 [testator's declarations as to nonrevocation]; 59 A.L.R.2d 157 [testator's declarations as to first will, where later will or codicil is executed]; but see Estate of Smith (1948) 31 C.2d 563, 568, 191 P.2d 413 [under parol evidence rule, unambiguous express revocation clause cannot be overcome by extrinsic evidence].)

(3) Declaration on Revocation. Similarly, where a will was made, but is shown to have been mutilated by the testator, or cannot be found, subsequent declarations of purposes inconsistent with the will or of intent to revoke should be admissible. (See 2 McCormick 5th, §276, p. 849; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1737.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

M. Testator's Statements Concerning Will.

3. Declaration on Kind of Will or No Will.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 223

[§ 223] Declaration on Kind of Will or No Will.

On the issue whether the writing was a forgery, the decedent's declarations to the effect that he or she did make a will of the tenor of the questioned document are admitted. (See Estate of Morrison (1926) 198 C. 1, 13, 242 P. 939; Estate of Thompson (1927) 200 C. 410, 417, 253 P. 697; Estate of Janes (1941) 18 C.2d 512, 516, 116 P.2d 438 [duplicate writings, issue of revocation; decedent's deathbed declaration that he had made testamentary disposition in accord with instrument]; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1736, p. 169; 19 Cal. L. Rev. 384; 62 A.L.R.2d 855 [admissibility of testator's declarations on issue of genuineness or due execution].)

The testator's declarations are also received to show that no will was made or that a particular writing was not intended to constitute a will. This rule was applied in Estate of Sargavak (1950) 35 C.2d 93, 96, 216 P.2d 850, where an apparently testamentary instrument was attacked as sham, i.e., intended for a different nontestamentary purpose. Declarations of the testator indicating that this was so were held admissible as evidence of the intent with which the instrument was executed (although ultimately, the will was held good).

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

M. Testator's Statements Concerning Will.

4. Distinction: Declaration on Contract.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 224

[§ 224] Distinction: Declaration on Contract.

In Estate of Tassi (1961) 196 C.A.2d 494, 16 C.R. 616, petitioner, surviving spouse of decedent, claimed a share in the will under former Prob.C. 70 (now Prob.C. 21610 et seq.). The beneficiary resisted, contending that, although not mentioned in the will, petitioner was provided for in a marriage contract. Proof of the contract was offered in the form of declarations of the decedent that he had entered into such an agreement. Held, the evidence was inadmissible. "Where the declaration is as to the making of a will, the situation is one where the testator alone has special knowledge, since the making or revoking of a will is an act completely within his control and is one which he may perform wholly unaided. Indeed, in many situations, no one other than the testator could possibly have knowledge of whether the testator revoked a specific will. In the case of a marriage contract, however, it is necessary that the consent of both contracting parties be manifested. Where, as in the case at bar, the declaration of a testator provides the only evidence that such a contract exists, such a declaration must of necessity support two inferences--that the testator himself consented to the contract, and that a third party, whose acts were certainly not within the testator's control, also assented to the contract. The statement of the testator thus serves as evidence of his own acts and those of another person as well. It would be most illogical to extend the hearsay exception relating to the testator's will to encompass such a situation." (196 C.A.2d 506.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

N. Decedent's Statement in Action Against Estate.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 225

[§ 225] Decedent's Statement in Action Against Estate.

Formerly, under California's "dead man statute," a party suing on a claim against a decedent's estate could not testify to any fact occurring prior to the decedent's death. The basic theory was that it would be unfair to permit the living plaintiff to testify to facts that the decedent could not rebut.

This much criticized statute was eliminated by the Evidence Code (see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §§39, 40). But to equalize the positions of the parties as much as possible, Ev.C. 1261 creates a new hearsay exception, allowing the decedent's declaration to come in, subject to strict limitations. It is admissible if it was made "upon the personal knowledge of the declarant at a time when the matter had been recently perceived by him and while his recollection was clear." (Ev.C. 1261(a).) And it is inadmissible if "made under circumstances such as to indicate its lack of trustworthiness." (Ev.C. 1261(b).) (See 1 Jefferson, California Evidence Benchbook 3d, §15.7 et seq.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

O. Business Records.

1. In General.

a. Common Law.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 226

[§ 226] Common Law.

(1) Account Books. At common law, a party was incompetent as a witness, but was allowed to offer account books in evidence under the "shop-book rule," an exception to the hearsay rule permitting delivery of goods and performance of services to be proved by entries in the party's books. The shop book rule persisted for some time even after abolishment of the party-witness disability, but development of a broader rule of regular business entries eventually rendered it unimportant. (See 14 Cal. L. Rev. 263; 35 Cal. L. Rev. 435; 2 McCormick 5th, §285; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1517 et seq.; 1 Proof of Facts 89.)

(2) Business Entries. The modern doctrine of entries in the regular course of business, today more succinctly termed the business records exception to the hearsay rule, allows proof of any regularly kept records (not merely books of account), including those kept by third parties (not merely the party's own books). The guarantee of trustworthiness lies in the habit or practice of accurate and systematic bookkeeping by trained persons. Accordingly, the courts (prior to the Uniform Business Records as Evidence Act, infra, §227) required a showing of the following conditions of admissibility of the books or records offered: (a) that they were kept in the regular course of business; (b) that it was customary in that business to keep books; (c) that the entries were the original or first permanent ones; (d) that they were made close to the time of the transactions; (e) that the person making the entries had personal knowledge of the transactions, or obtained knowledge from a regular report of one who had; and (f) that the person who made the entries or the person who had knowledge of the transactions was unavailable as a witness. (See Chan Kui Sing v. Gordon (1915) 171 C. 28, 31, 151 P. 657; Warren v. Hiltcher (1931) 111 C.A. 318, 320, 295 P. 536; 14 Cal. L. Rev. 263, 273; 35 Cal. L. Rev. 434; 2 McCormick 5th, §286; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §1292 et seq.; on admission of electronic documents under this exception, see Overly on Electronic Evidence in California §10.04.)

(3) Other Bases of Admissibility. Even if an entry failed to meet the requisite conditions, it could often be used in various ways independent of this exception, e.g., as an admission of a party, a declaration against interest, or a means of refreshing the memory of a witness. (See London v. Guberman (1963) 214 C.A.2d 215, 220, 29 C.R. 279, quoting the text [admission]; 2 McCormick 5th, §284; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1557.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

O. Business Records.

1. In General.

b. Uniform Act, Evidence Code, and Federal Rules.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 227

[§ 227] Uniform Act, Evidence Code, and Federal Rules.

(1) Former Uniform Business Records as Evidence Act. This Act was approved in 1936 and was adopted in California in 1941, but it was withdrawn in 1966. The purpose of the Act was to eliminate the impractical refinements of the common law doctrine, with the inevitable accompanying differences in application in the different states, and to enlarge the scope of the doctrine. (See Loper v. Morrison (1944) 23 C.2d 600, 607, 145 P.2d 1; People v. Gorgol (1953) 122 C.A.2d 281, 296, 265 P.2d 69; People v. Torres (1962) 201 C.A.2d 290, 296, 20 C.R. 315, citing the text; 2 McCormick 5th, §286; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1520; 35 Cal. L. Rev. 434; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §1296 et seq.; 21 A.L.R.2d 773 [Uniform Act and similar model acts].)

(2) Other Acts. A prior and somewhat similar Commonwealth Fund Act was adopted in a few states and was the basis of a federal statute. (See Palmer v. Hoffman (1943) 318 U.S. 109, 63 S.Ct. 477, 87 L.Ed. 645, infra, §233; 2 McCormick 5th, §286; 47 Harv. L. Rev. 1044; 22 So. Cal. L. Rev. 190.) And the Uniform Photographic Copies of Business and Public Records as Evidence Act allows substitution of photographs or microfilms for original records and the introduction of reproductions or enlargements in evidence. (See 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Documentary Evidence, §45.)

(3) Evidence Code. Ev.C. 1270, 1271, and 1272 retain the provisions of the Uniform Act formerly found in C.C.P. 1953e et seq. Under Ev.C. 1271, evidence of "a writing made as a record of the act, condition, or event" is admissible "to prove the act, condition, or event" if all of the following circumstances apply:

(a) "The writing was made in the regular course of a business." (Ev.C. 1271(a).)

(b) "The writing was made at or near the time of the act, condition, or event." (Ev.C. 1271(b).)

(c) "The custodian or other qualified witness testifies to its identity and the mode of its preparation." (Ev.C. 1271(c).)

(d) "The sources of information and method and time of preparation were such as to indicate its trustworthiness." (Ev.C. 1271(d).) (See People v. Campos (1995) 32 C.A.4th 304, 309, 38 C.R.2d 113 [in proceeding to review defendant's classification as mentally disordered offender, reports of nontestifying medical experts and defendant's probation report did not qualify for admission under business records exception, as they were records of conclusions, not "act, condition, or event"].)

(4) Federal Rules of Evidence. F.R. Evid., Rule 803(6), entitled Records of Regularly Conducted Activity, makes the following admissible: "A memorandum, report, record, or data compilation, in any form, of acts, events, conditions, opinions, or diagnoses, made at or near the time by, or from information transmitted by, a person with knowledge, if kept in the course of a regularly conducted business activity, and if it was the regular practice of that business activity to make the memorandum, report, record, or data compilation, all as shown by the testimony of the custodian or other qualified witness, unless the source of information or the method or circumstances of preparation indicate lack of trustworthiness. The term 'business' as used in this paragraph includes business, institution, association, profession, occupation, and calling of every kind, whether or not conducted for profit." (See 4 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §444 et seq.; 20 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 473 [Confrontation Clause and F.R. Evid., Rule 803(6)]; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §1300 et seq.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Former Uniform Business Records as Evidence Act. See 2 McCormick 6th, §286.

(2) Other Acts. See 2 McCormick 6th, §286.(4) Federal Rules of Evidence. F.R. Evid., Rule 803(6) was amended in 2000 to provide that, as an alternative to presenting a foundation witness, the foundational requirements of the rule may be met "by certification that complies with Rule 902(11), Rule 902(12), or a statute permitting certification." (On F.R. Evid., Rule 902(11) and 902(12), added in 2000, see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Documentary Evidence, Supp., §26.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

O. Business Records.

2. Business, Profession, or Other Activity.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 228

[§ 228] Business, Profession, or Other Activity.

(1) Scope of Statute. The record must have been made in the regular course of "a business." (Ev.C. 1271(a).) But the term "business" includes "every kind of business, governmental activity, profession, occupation, calling or operation of institutions, whether carried on for profit or not." (Ev.C. 1270.) Under this broad language, the records of various types of business and professional organizations, including nonprofit institutions, are admissible. (See People v. Gorgol (1953) 122 C.A.2d 281, 296, 265 P.2d 69; 35 Cal. L. Rev. 437; 2 Hastings L. J. 11; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1523; 1 Jefferson, California Evidence Benchbook 3d, Chap. 4.)

"The definition is sufficiently broad to encompass institutions not customarily thought of as businesses. For example, the baptismal and wedding records of a church would be admissible under the section to prove the events recorded." (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1270.)

(2) Public Agencies. In situations in which the exception for official records does not clearly apply, or perhaps overlapping that exception (see infra, §245), the business records doctrine has been successfully invoked to obtain admission of the records of various public agencies. (See Brown v. Los Angeles (1947) 77 C.A.2d 814, 817, 176 P.2d 753 [account of deceased indigents with county, for welfare aid]; Nichols v. McCoy (1952) 38 C.2d 447, 449, 240 P.2d 569, infra, §240 [coroner's office record of blood test for alcohol in body of deceased]; Fox v. San Francisco Unified School Dist. (1952) 111 C.A.2d 885, 892, 245 P.2d 603 [personnel reports of school board on work of probationary schoolteacher]; People v. Crosslin (1967) 251 C.A.2d 968, 976, 60 C.R. 309 [fingerprint card made up for arrested person by sheriff's office]; 1944 A.S. 1135 [autopsy in homicide case]; 57 A.L.R.4th 1111 [admissibility of school records].) Ev.C. 1270 now includes "governmental activity" within the definition.

(3) Applicability to Criminal Cases. Despite contentions that the business record provisions violate a criminal defendant's right to confrontation, the greater certainty of trustworthy business records over fallible human memories benefits criminal defendants and is otherwise in the interest of justice. Hence, Ev.C. 1270, 1271, and 1272 "when properly applied are without constitutional fault." (People v. Gambos (1970) 5 C.A.3d 187, 194, 84 C.R. 908.) (See People v. Aguilar (1971) 16 C.A.3d 1001, 94 C.R. 492, infra, §239.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

O. Business Records.

3. What Is Admissible Business Record.

a. Any Kind of Record.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 229

[§ 229] Any Kind of Record.

The common law rule called for "original entries" or "books of original entry," on the theory that these were more likely to be accurate than copies subsequently entered. Business practices, however, often made literal compliance with this requirement impossible. And modern cases, both before and after the former Uniform Act (which eliminated the requirement), tend to admit records kept under any kind of bookkeeping system, whether original or copied, and whether in book, looseleaf, card, or other form. (On computer records, see infra, §230.) (See Patrick v. Tetzlaff (1920) 46 C.A. 243, 245, 189 P. 115 [automobile repair shop; work cards transcribed by bookkeeper]; Arques v. National Superior Co. (1945) 67 C.A.2d 763, 777, 155 P.2d 643 [lien claimant's informal "composition book" containing his entries of hours worked and materials used]; *Oakland Calif. Towel Co. v. ## CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

O. Business Records.

3. What Is Admissible Business Record.

b. Computer Records.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 230

[§ 230] Computer Records.

(1) In General. Records stored in computer files are admissible under the business records exception, provided they meet the requirements imposed by that exception on all business records. (See People v. Lugashi (1988) 205 C.A.3d 632, 638, 252 C.R. 434; 1965 A.S. 564; 13 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 345; 7 A.L.R.4th 8 [computerized private business records]; 14 Proof of Facts 2d 173 [same]; on special foundation problems, see 2 McCormick 5th, §294.)

(2) Testimony on Hardware and Software Not Required. In People v. Lugashi, supra, involving allegedly fraudulent credit card transactions, defendant merchant's convictions were based in part on computer-generated evidence. This evidence was derived from a bank program (a "dump") that reordered credit card transaction entries by customer and merchant account numbers. A tape was then made, from which a microfiche record was prepared. Printed copies of the microfiche were introduced to show merchant queries and system responses involving the transactions. The authenticating witness was Norris, a bank employee specializing in credit card fraud. Held, the evidence was properly admitted under Ev.C. 1271.

(a) Rejection of defendant's proposed test. Defendant urged the adoption of a test requiring, as a prerequisite to admissibility under Ev.C. 1271, that the proponent of computer evidence introduce testimony on the acceptability and reliability of the hardware and software involved, as well as on internal maintenance and accuracy checks. This proposal is rejected for the following reasons:

(1) The proposed test incorrectly presumes that computer data is unreliable. (205 C.A.3d 640.)

(2) The test would require the proponent of computer data to disprove the possibility of error, not in order to convince the trier of fact to accept it, but merely to meet the minimal showing required for admissibility. This would be the equivalent of requiring the proponent of conventional hand-entered records to introduce not only the testimony of the custodian, but also that of an expert in accounting theory that the particular system used, if properly applied, would yield accurate information. (205 C.A.3d 640.)

(3) The test would require production of a "horde of witnesses," representing each department of a company's data processing system, merely to meet the minimal requirement of admissibility. Here, for example, it would in all probability require at least three additional witnesses: one who operated the program, one who created the microfiche, and one who maintained the microfiche records. Hence, with no real benefit gained, it would burden the state's already crowded trial courts, and would be especially hard on small businesses, which lack the resources to produce a phalanx of witnesses without ceasing normal operations. (205 C.A.3d 640.)

(b) Norris was a qualified authenticating witness. Defendant contended that Norris was unqualified because she could not explain the bank's hardware or software, could not physically perform each step involved, and was forced to rely on hearsay, rather than personal knowledge. This is incorrect. "Norris was an experienced credit card fraud investigator familiar with merchant authorization terminals, counterfeit cards, credit card sales, and the manner in which sales are recorded. She personally produced the printed records from the microfiche. Although she did not do the 'dump' or physically convert the resulting tape into microfiche, she worked and spoke with those who did. She understood the records and interpreted them in great detail, she assembled the bank copies of the actual charges and compared them with the computer records. That some of her knowledge came from 'hearsay' discussions with fellow workers ... no more renders her testimony incompetent than if it resulted from reading 'hearsay' information manuals from the hardware or software manufacturers or Wells Fargo computer management. If appellant were correct, only the original hardware and software designers could testify since everyone else necessarily could understand the system only through hearsay." (205 C.A.3d 641.) Any question concerning the competency of the bank's other employees could be resolved by subpoena and examination. And much of the information on the printout could be verified by comparison with the bank's copy of the actual charges. Hence, while Norris' testimony might not convince a jury of the data's accuracy beyond a reasonable doubt, it was more than adequate to render it admissible. (205 C.A.3d 641.)

(3) Use of Printouts. Printouts are admissible and presumed to be an accurate representation of the data in the computer. (See 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Documentary Evidence, §48.) When offered for truth, however, they must qualify under a hearsay exception, and often the applicable exception is the one for business records. In Aguimatang v. California State Lottery (1991) 234 C.A.3d 769, 797, 286 C.R. 57, the printouts containing the number of winners in the State Lottery were challenged on the ground that they were not made at or near the time of the event, as required by Ev.C. 1271(b); instead, they were printed out only on an as needed basis. In rejecting the contention, the court said: "[A]lthough to qualify as a business record the 'writing' must be made at or near the time of the event, 'writing' is not limited to the commonly understood forms of writing but is defined very broadly to include all 'means of recording upon any tangible thing any form of communication or representation, including letters, words, pictures, sounds or symbols, or combinations thereof.' (Evid. Code, §250.) Here, the 'writing' is the magnetic tape. The data entries on the magnetic tapes are made contemporaneously with the Lotto transactions, hence qualify as business records." (234 C.A.3d 798.)

(New) Distinction: Computer's internal operations. A printout of the results of a computer's internal operations is not hearsay evidence at all, and thus the business records exception is inapplicable. Such a printout does not represent the output of statements placed in the computer by an out-of-court declarant. With a machine, there is no possibility of conscious misrepresentation. "[T]he true test for admissibility of a printout reflecting a computer's internal operations is not whether the printout was made in the regular course of business, but whether the computer was operating properly at the time of the printout." (People v. Hawkins (2002) 98 C.A.4th 1428, 1449, 1450, 121 C.R.2d 627 [in prosecution arising from defendant's having taken source code from computer system of former employer, trial judge did not err in admitting computer printouts showing when computer files were last accessed, where evidence was introduced showing that computer was functioning properly and its clock was accurate].)

c. Special Reports.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 231

[§ 231] Special Reports.

The statute refers to the record of "an act, condition or event" (Ev.C. 1271); i.e., its coverage goes beyond bookkeeping entries of debit and credit. A special report, or record of a nonrecurring act or event, may be received if it was made in the course of business or professional duty. Thus, in De Hart v. Allen (1945) 26 C.2d 829, 831, 161 P.2d 453, an action by a landlord against a defaulting tenant, proof that the landlord gave notice to the tenant of reletting for the latter's benefit was made by offering in evidence an affidavit of service of such notice, signed by the process server (who died before trial) but not notarized. Held, the writing was admissible, for it had been prepared by the process server in the usual course of his occupation or calling. (See Carruth v. Madera (1965) 233 C.A.2d 688, 694, 43 C.R. 855 [letter by mayor of city to Real Estate Commissioner advising him that city would install water facilities, etc., in a subdivision]; 2 McCormick 5th, §288.) ##### d. Hospital Records.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 232

[§ 232] Hospital Records.

There was formerly a tendency to classify the entries of doctors, nurses or other attendants, in hospital records, as inadmissible hearsay. (See Lusardi v. Prukop (1931) 116 C.A. 506, 508, 2 P.2d 870; 14 So. Cal. L. Rev. 100; 27 Cal. L. Rev. 466.) One of the chief liberalizing effects of the former Uniform Act (see supra, §227) was to make it clear that records of this type are admissible if properly authenticated. (See People v. Gorgol (1953) 122 C.A.2d 281, 296, 265 P.2d 69, infra, §238; People v. Moore (1970) 5 C.A.3d 486, 492, 85 C.R. 194, citing the text [admissible to show that defendant had been committed to mental institutions and diagnosed while there as mentally ill]; In re Troy D. (1989) 215 C.A.3d 889, 902, 903, 263 C.R. 869 [dependency petition alleged that minor was born under influence of harmful drugs; hospital records concerning minor and his mother were properly admitted]; 2 McCormick 5th, §293; 27 Cal. ### III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

O. Business Records.

3. What Is Admissible Business Record.

e. Accident Reports Prepared for Litigation.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 233

[§ 233] Accident Reports Prepared for Litigation.

Next to hospital records (supra, §232 and infra, §238), one of the most useful special records is the report of an accident by an employee or investigator. Its admissibility, however, was sharply limited by the leading case of Palmer v. Hoffman (1943) 318 U.S. 109, 63 S.Ct. 477, 87 L.Ed. 645, decided under a federal act (supra, §227). The action arose out of a grade crossing accident, and defendant railroad offered a written statement of the deceased train engineer, made to an assistant superintendent of the road and a representative of the state Public Utilities Commission. In holding this statement correctly excluded, the Court said:

"It is not a record made for the systematic conduct of the business as a business. An accident report may affect that business in the sense that it affords information on which the management may act. It is not, however, typical of entries made systematically or as a matter of routine to record events or occurrences, to reflect transactions with others, or to provide internal controls. The conduct of a business commonly entails the payment of tort claims incurred by the negligence of its employees. But the fact that a company makes a business out of recording its employees' versions of their accidents does not put those statements in the class of records made 'in the regular course' of the business within the meaning of the Act. If it did, then any law office in the land could follow the same course, since business as defined in the Act includes the professions. We would then have a real perversion of a rule designed to facilitate admission of records which experience has shown to be quite trustworthy. Any business by installing a regular system for recording and preserving its version of accidents for which it was potentially liable could qualify those reports under the Act. The result would be that the Act would cover any system of recording events or occurrences provided it was 'regular' and though it had little or nothing to do with the management or operation of the business as such. Preparation of cases for trial by virtue of being a 'business' or incidental thereto would obtain the benefits of this liberalized version of the early shop book rule. ... In short, it is manifest that in this case those reports are not for the systematic conduct of the enterprise as a railroad business. Unlike payrolls, accounts receivable, accounts payable, bills of lading and the like these reports are calculated for use essentially in the court, not in the business. Their primary utility is in litigating, not in railroading." (63 S.Ct. 480, 87 L.Ed. 649.)

The broad language of the Palmer case has been criticized on the theory that investigation of the probable causes and effects of an accident is an act in the regular course of the railroad or other transportation business. But the result was probably justified by the obviously partisan purpose and self-serving nature of the statement. (See 2 McCormick 5th, §288; 56 Harv. L. Rev. 458; 59 Harv. L. Rev. 565; 4 Stanf. L. Rev. 288; 17 So. Cal. L. Rev. 165; 23 A.L.R.2d 1360 [report on airplane accident].) And the case has been followed in two California decisions. (Reisman v. Los Angeles City School Dist. (1954) 123 C.A.2d 493, 503, 267 P.2d 36 [wrongful death of child playing on blacktop surfaced playground; subsequent report prepared for school department praising blacktop]; Hoel v. Los Angeles (1955) 136 C.A.2d 295, 309, 288 P.2d 989.) But in Levy-Zentner Co. v. Southern Pac. Trans. Co. (1977) 74 C.A.3d 762, 142 C.R. 1, the court approved the admission of a "final accident report" prepared by an assistant terminal superintendent of defendant railroad, in which the source of the terminal fire that caused plaintiffs' property damage was identified as activity by transients on defendant's property. The report was offered by plaintiffs, and, in holding it admissible, the court relied in part on its character as an admission against interest. (74 C.A.3d 786.) (On admissibility of reports required by federal law, see 18 Hastings L. J. 181; for other problems of admissibility of accident reports, see infra, §239.)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

O. Business Records.

3. What Is Admissible Business Record.

f. Absence of Business Entry.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 234

[§ 234] Absence of Business Entry.

(1) Uniform Rules and Evidence Code. The original Uniform Rules of Evidence resolved an uncertainty in the former Uniform Act (see supra, §227) on which the few cases were conflicting. Subject to the usual test--that it was the regular course of business to make a record of the acts, events, or conditions--the Rules made admissible evidence of the absence of a memorandum or record to prove that an act or event did not occur or that a condition did not exist. (See 2 McCormick 5th, §287; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1531.)

People v. Torres (1962) 201 C.A.2d 290, 297, 20 C.R. 315, approved this extension of the Act. "[I]f a business record is otherwise admissible ... we see no reason why it should not be equally as admissible to disprove an affirmative as to prove an affirmative, just as competent to prove the falsity of a fact affirmed as to prove the truth of the fact affirmed."

Ev.C. 1272 enacted the Uniform Rule with minor changes. Evidence of "the absence from the records of a business of a record of an asserted act, condition, or event" is admissible "to prove the nonoccurrence of the act or event, or the nonexistence of the condition," if both of the following conditions exist:

(a) "It was the regular course of that business to make records of all such acts, conditions, or events at or near the time of the act, condition, or event and to preserve them." (Ev.C. 1272(a).)

(b) "The sources of information and method and time of preparation of the records of that business were such that the absence of a record of an act, condition, or event is a trustworthy indication that the act or event did not occur or the condition did not exist." (Ev.C. 1272(b).)

People v. Dickinson (1976) 59 C.A.3d 314, 320, 130 C.R. 561, points out that records may be introduced or a qualified officer may testify to the absence of particular items from voluminous or otherwise unproduceable records; but in a criminal case, affidavits cannot be used by the prosecution in violation of the defendant's right of confrontation.

(2) Federal Rules of Evidence. F.R. Evid., Rule 803(7) makes the following admissible: "Evidence that a matter is not included in the memoranda reports, records, or data compilations, in any form, kept in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (6), to prove the nonoccurrence or nonexistence of the matter, if the matter was of a kind of which a memorandum, report, record, or data compilation was regularly made and preserved, unless the sources of information or other circumstances indicate lack of trustworthiness." (See 4 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence

2d, §452; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §1319.)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

O. Business Records.

3. What Is Admissible Business Record.

g. Miscellaneous Inadmissible Entries.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 235

[§ 235] Miscellaneous Inadmissible Entries.

(1) Statement Not Constituting a Record. A letter or statement that is not itself a record, but merely refers to the record, is inadmissible. (Bebbington v. California Western States Life Ins. Co. (1947) 30 C.2d 157, 161, 180 P.2d 673, supra, §12; Fuller v. White (1948) 33 C.2d 236, 242, 201 P.2d 16 [letter from insurance company's supervisor of claims interpreting statements in another record].)

(2) Private Memorandum. Several cases decided before the former Uniform Act (see supra, §227) excluded records as mere private memoranda not amounting to regular business entries. (See Thompson v. Orena (1901) 134 C. 26, 30, 66 P. 24; Creighton v. Creighton (1935) 6 C.A.2d 270, 271, 43 P.2d 1104 ["ledger" with a few entries of personal loans by plaintiff who was not regularly engaged in business]; Gough v. Security Trust & Savings Bank (1958) 162 C.A.2d 90, 94, 327 P.2d 555; but see Franco Western Oil Co. v. Fariss (1968) 259 C.A.2d 325, 333, 66 C.R. 458 [decided under predecessor of Ev.C. 1271; where president of plaintiff corporation kept diary of daily business events, entry he made regarding conversation concerning oil and gas leases that were subject of dispute should have been admitted]; 94 A.L.R.3d 975 [memorandum of telephone conversation].)

(3) Oral Reports. Although some courts have admitted oral reports made in the regular course of business (see 2 McCormick 5th, §287; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1528), the former Uniform Act did not mention them, and Ev.C. 1271 expressly refers to "a writing made as a record."

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(3) Oral Reports. See 2 McCormick 6th, §287.

(4) (New) Records of Family Violence Clinic. In People v. Ayers (2005) 125 C.A.4th 988, 23 C.R.3d 242, a prosecution for spousal battery, the trial judge admitted records maintained by a family violence clinic stemming from the victim's 911 call and her later visit to the clinic. Held, this was error, although harmless. The records involved double hearsay. The information in them was recorded by clinic employees under a duty to do so in an accurate fashion, and thus came within the business records exception, but the underlying layer of hearsay was supplied by the victim herself, who had no such duty. Because the records were offered to prove their contents (the violent incident the victim reported), their admission was improper. (125 C.A.4th 995.) However, the jury did not see the records, the prosecutor only briefly mentioned them, and there was overwhelming evidence of defendant's guilt. (125 C.A.4th 996.)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

O. Business Records.

4. Time of Entry.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 236

[§ 236] Time of Entry.

(1) General Rule. The common law requirement of prompt recording (supra, §226) is retained in the statutory provision, "at or near the time of the act, condition, or event," and in the further provision that the court must find that the "time of preparation" was such as to indicate trustworthiness. (Ev.C. 1271(b), (c).) (See Reisman v. Los Angeles City School Dist. (1954) 123 C.A.2d 493, 503, 267 P.2d 36 [accident report made 2 years and 2 months after accident, too late]; People v. Champion (1995) 9 C.4th 879, 916, 39 C.R.2d 547, 891 P.2d 93 [testimony of fingerprint expert who had been employed at lab where fingerprint report was prepared was sufficient to establish that preparer of report was obligated to prepare it at or near time she did acts described in report]; 2 McCormick 5th, §289; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1550.)

(2) Distinction: Decedent's Account Books. In Robinson v. Puls (1946) 28 C.2d 664, 668, 171 P.2d 430, the general rule was virtually abandoned with respect to account books of a decedent, the court holding that "evidence that the books of account were in his handwriting, and that they were kept correctly, is sufficient foundation for their admission." The opinion also relied on the statutory presumption, that "a writing is truly dated" (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Burden of Proof and Presumptions, §77) and the former presumption that "the ordinary course of business has been followed" (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §68) as obviating the necessity for any showing of the contemporaneous nature of the entry. This argument begs the question, for if contemporaneous entry is established by a presumption it need never be established, despite the language of Ev.C. 1271(b). (See 35 Cal. L. Rev. 439; 19 So. Cal. L. Rev. 453.) Moreover, a presumption is no longer evidence. (See 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Burden of Proof and Presumptions, §52.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) General Rule. See Prato-Morrison v. Doe (2002) 103 C.A.4th 222, 229, 126 C.R.2d 509 [in action by plaintiff couple seeking to prove that they were genetic parents of defendant couple's daughters, trial judge properly excluded list made by fertility clinic biologist indicating that defendant wife received eggs supplied by plaintiff wife, where list was made 8 years after events in question, and biologist did not attempt to establish her personal knowledge of information contained in list]; 2 McCormick 6th, §289.

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

O. Business Records.

5. Sources of Information and Method of Preparation.

a. In General.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 237

[§ 237] In General.

The business records exception (supra, §227) was not devised to allow unreliable hearsay to be introduced merely because it was reduced to writing in a book of records. The theory of admissibility is that either the "entrant" (who entered the record, e.g., the bookkeeper or accountant) or an "informant" (e.g., a salesman, mechanic, or other person handling the transaction) had knowledge of the facts from personal observation. (See 2 McCormick 5th, §290; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1530.) "The statute ... merely provides a method of proof of an admissible 'act, condition or event.' It does not make the record admissible when oral testimony of the same facts would be inadmissible." (McGowan v. Los Angeles (1950) 100 C.A.2d 386, 392, 223 P.2d 862.)

The former Uniform Act (see supra, §227) provided that "the sources of information" must have been "such as to justify its admission." Ev.C. 1271(d) enacted the version used in the Uniform Rules of Evidence: "The sources of information and method and time of preparation were such as to indicate its trustworthiness." The Law Revision Commission Comment observes that "[t]he language of Section 1271 is more accurate, for the cases hold that admission of a business record is not justified when there is no preliminary showing that the record is reliable or trustworthy." (See People v. Williams (1973) 36 C.A.3d 262, 274, 111 C.R. 378 [trustworthiness of monthly profit guidebook was established even though witness could not testify as to who filled out gasoline storage forms on weekend of alleged embezzlement]; 1 A.L.R.4th 316 [authentication of bills and invoices]; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §1307.)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

O. Business Records.

5. Sources of Information and Method of Preparation.

b. Hospital Records.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 238

[§ 238] Hospital Records.

Hospital records are business records (see supra, §232), but, like police reports (infra, §239), frequently contain matters learned from the patient or victim that are not within the personal knowledge of the entrant (doctor, nurse or other attendant), as well as opinions of the entrant. (See People v. Williams (1960) 187 C.A.2d 355, 363, 9 C.R. 722 [murder; hospital records of victim's psychotic behavior, consisting largely of hearsay statements of victim and police officers, rejected].)

However, as the court said in People v. Gorgol (1953) 122 C.A.2d 281, 300, 265 P.2d 69: "[I]f a proper foundation is laid, the fact that the records are hearsay and that the particular nurse, doctor or person making the record has not been called, does not preclude their admission. Nor does the fact that they contain inadmissible matter prevent their admission. Such parts should be omitted or proper instruction of the court given concerning them. Admissible matter seems to be such matter as is customarily contained in a hospital record, for example, the data required by the above mentioned Hospital Manual, and such matter as would be admissible were the person making the record present in court." (See 2 McCormick 5th, §293; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §1315; 55 A.L.R.2d 1031 [physician's opinion whether patient is malingering or feigning injury]; 80 A.L.R.3d 456 [hospital records relating to patient's intoxication or sobriety]; on laying foundation, see 38 Proof of Facts 2d 145; 44 A.L.R.2d 567.)

If a medical witness refers a patient to another doctor, who sends back a report that the witness uses as part of the case history in arriving at a diagnosis and then includes in the patient's hospital records for other doctors to see, the report is admissible even though the reporting doctor is not called to the stand. Like a patient's history of an accident, however, the report is not independent proof of the facts stated. (Springer v. Reimers (1970) 4 C.A.3d 325, 338, 84 C.R. 486.) (See People v. O'Tremba (1970) 4 C.A.3d 524, 527, 84 C.R. 336 [cases are in conflict on whether hospital record may be received as evidence of medical diagnosis it contains]; F.R. Evid., Rule 803(6) ["diagnoses" are admissible].)

Where the doctor's report is offered against the patient, the latter may invoke the statutory physician-patient privilege to exclude it. (See 14 So. Cal. L. Rev. 108; 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §196.)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

O. Business Records.

5. Sources of Information and Method of Preparation.

c. Police and Other Accident Reports.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 239

[§ 239] Police and Other Accident Reports.

(1) Inadmissible Reports. The requirement of personal knowledge as the basis of a record is the chief barrier to the introduction of a police report of an accident. The report is a "record of an act, condition, or event" (see supra, §227), but is often made by an officer who did not see the accident and includes both hearsay statements of others and opinions of the officer. If so, it is inadmissible. (See Hoel v. Los Angeles (1955) 136 C.A.2d 295, 309, 288 P.2d 989 [accident reports "based on statements of participants, bystanders, measurements, deductions and conclusions of their own"]; Taylor v. Centennial Bowl (1966) 65 C.2d 114, 126, 52 C.R. 561, 416 P.2d 793; Carlton v. Department of Motor Vehicles (1988) 203 C.A.3d 1428, 1432, 1433, 250 C.R. 809, citing the text; People v. Hernandez (1997) 55 C.A.4th 225, 240, 63 C.R.2d 769 [crime analyst's testimony concerning data contained in in-house police sex crimes data base identifying crimes with modus operandi matching defendant's was improperly admitted, because data were based on police reports containing observations by persons with no official duty to observe and report relevant facts]; 2 McCormick 5th, §290; 4 Stanf. L. Rev. 288; 1966 A.S. 404; 69 A.L.R.2d 1148 [report as to cause of or responsibility for accident, injury, or damage]; 77 A.L.R.3d 126 [cases not admitting police reports as business records].)

In MacLean v. San Francisco (1957) 151 C.A.2d 133, 311 P.2d 158, the report stated that defendant city's bus was unable to stop in the bus zone because another vehicle was parked there, and that a woman passenger alighted and slipped on wet mortar apparently washed down from a construction job at a designated location. (151 C.A.2d 141.) This report did not show on its face whether it was based on the officers' own observations or those of third parties, and was therefore excluded; but the officers who prepared it were called as witnesses, and were properly allowed to use the report to refresh their recollections (3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §177) on all matters of which they had knowledge and as to which the report would have been admissible. (151 C.A.2d 143.)

In Reisman v. Los Angeles City School Dist. (1954) 123 C.A.2d 493, 506, 267 P.2d 36, a wrongful death action arising out of a child's death on a blacktop-surfaced school playground, the school department, after the suit was commenced, procured a lengthy report on playground surfacing. It was designed to make out a case for blacktop hardsurfacing as the best and safest kind, and it contained a great many individual opinions of school principals and others favoring this method. Held, it was reversible error to admit the report.

(2) Admissible Reports or Records. In People v. Aguilar (1971) 16 C.A.3d 1001, 94 C.R. 492, an undercover agent bought balloons of heroin from defendant and delivered them to Officer B. B took the balloons to police headquarters, made a quick test and placed them in envelopes, on which he made notations. He then stored the envelopes in a police evidence locker for a few days, until he found time to bring them to a nearby state narcotics bureau depository.

Chemists made appropriate tests and kept the material in an evidence vault. Except for the officer's removing the envelopes from the police evidence locker and placing them in the chemists' depository, his other acts were corroborated. For the uncorroborated link, however, only B's notations on the face of the envelope indicated what he had done. Because B died before trial, defense counsel objected to introduction of the notations to remedy this hiatus in the chain of possession, contending that the hearsay deprived him of his constitutional right to confrontation. (See 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §14.) Held, the notations were properly received. The officer had followed "a practical procedure developed by the police, a procedure that has had to stand the scrutiny of defense counsel in the many narcotics cases that have been before the court." Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §340* [arrest records, reflecting direct observations of officers, were admissible]; 77 A.L.R.3d 124 [cases admitting police reports as business records].)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

O. Business Records.

5. Sources of Information and Method of Preparation.

d. Report of Test.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 240

[§ 240] Report of Test.

In McGowan v. Los Angeles (1950) 100 C.A.2d 386, 390, 223 P.2d 862, an action for negligent injury in a collision with a police automobile, defendant city claimed that decedent driver, Cox, was intoxicated. Toxicologists of the county coroner's office testified that a bottle labeled "Charles Cox" was received from a mortuary for blood-alcohol determination, and that the test was made. The writing containing the record of the test was then offered in evidence. Held, it was properly excluded. There was no showing that the blood was taken from the body of Cox, or of the identity of the person taking it, or when it was taken--before or after the injection of embalming fluid containing alcohol; and neither the label nor the bottle was introduced. (See Madden v. Madden (1958) 160 C.A.2d 422, 325 P.2d 538 [blood test for nonpaternity rejected where blood not identified; McGowan followed].)

The McGowan case should not, however, be given undue significance. It seems more than likely that the blood was that of Cox, that the test was properly performed, and that the record could have been admitted; but, as the court observed, "No excuse, explanation or justification was given for failure to lay the necessary foundation." (100 C.A.2d 392.) And the decision was distinguished on that ground in Nichols v. McCoy (1952) 38 C.2d 447, 449, 240 P.2d 569. In Nichols, evidence was admitted of a record of the Los Angeles County coroner's office stating that a blood test of decedent indicated the presence of 0.11 alcohol. The foundation was as follows: testimony that as a part of the regular operation of the office blood samples were collected from undertakers and analyses made; testimony of the embalmer that he took the sample before embalming, labeled the bottle, and was informed of the name of the decedent at the time of embalming and again the next day. (There was additional identification in the fact that decedent's body was the only one in the mortuary on the night the sample was taken.) Held, the record was properly admitted; the trial judge was justified in concluding that the embalmer's sources of information were accurate and that he would not label a bottle unless reasonably sure of its identity. (See Wagner v. Osborn (1964) 225 C.A.2d 36, 43, 37 C.R. 27 [report of blood-alcohol content was properly admitted; distinguishing McGowan]; Sonoma v. Grant W. (1986) 187 C.A.3d 1439, 232 C.R. 471, infra, §242; People v. Champion (1995) 9 C.4th 879, 915, 39 C.R.2d 547, 891 P.2d 93 [report of testing for fingerprints; testimony by tester's colleague sufficiently established that report was trustworthy]; 19 A.L.R.3d 1008 [report of test carried out by independent third party].)

In Rodwin Metals v. Western Non-Ferrous Metals (1970) 10 C.A.3d 219, 88 C.R. 778, the total price for a disputed contract depended on the exact weight and metallic content of lead fume delivered by plaintiff to defendant. The only evidence as to weight and quality was presented by plaintiff's president, who offered a signed report purporting to be on the letterhead of an assayist whom the president described as "the most respected man in his field in the City of Philadelphia." Plaintiff had ordered the assay by telephone without any of its representatives having seen the actual sample that was tested. When the trial judge pointed out that plaintiff had not adequately proven the mode of preparation to qualify the report as a business record under Ev.C. 1271, defense counsel stated he did not claim the report was "fictitious." The judge then said, "This is enough for me. ... If you are trying to show it is fraudulent, that's different. But a record like this is an ordinary business record. It is something from a neutral party, a person who has an organization as a chemist and assayer and their report is entitled to great weight, especially in a field as simple as this one." Held, admission of the report was prejudicial error; counsel did not have to claim fraud to insist that hearsay be rejected unless a proper foundation for an exception was established. Although the trial judge had some discretion in determining just how much proof is required for the mode of preparation of a chemical analysis, in the present case, there was none at all. (10 C.A.3d 225.)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

O. Business Records.

5. Sources of Information and Method of Preparation.

e. Other Records and Reports.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 241

[§ 241] Other Records and Reports.

(1) Letter Warning of Product's Dangers. In Gall v. Union Ice Co. (1951) 108 C.A.2d 303, 239 P.2d 48, the action was for wrongful death arising out of an explosion of a drum of sulphuric acid purchased by Union Ice Co. from defendant B and stored outside. B's sales manager testified that 4 years before the accident his company sent a warning letter to customers (including Union) about the dangers of the acid, and then B's counsel attempted to introduce the letter. Held, "assuming" that this came within the business records statute, the only proof offered that the letters were actually sent was testimony as to the custom of the office and the presence of a copy of the letter in the files; hence, the trial judge did not abuse his discretion in excluding the document. (108 C.A.2d 315.)

(2) Corporate Minutes. In Filipino Federation of America v. Repollo (1961) 191 C.A.2d 89, 12 C.R. 467, the court observed that former Corp.C. 832 (now Corp.C. 314), making certified minutes of a corporation admissible to show action taken at a meeting, did not make the minutes admissible for all purposes. As pointed out in Reisman v. Los Angeles City School Dist. (1954) 123 C.A.2d 493, 267 P.2d 36, supra, §239, and McGowan v. Los Angeles (1950) 100 C.A.2d 386, 390, 223 P.2d 862, supra, §240, the test is whether the contents would have been admissible as oral testimony. Here, the issue was whether plaintiff corporation, as it contended, lent defendant money for adding a room to his home, or whether, as he contended, the money was given to create a place for plaintiff's president to stay when in the area. Held, it was reversible error to admit, against defendant, plaintiff's minutes stating that the money was a loan. (191 C.A.2d 92, 93.)

(3) School Records. School records are admissible when made in the regular course of school business, but this does not mean that everything contained in the records is admissible. Those portions of a school record that would be inadmissible if the person making the record was called as a witness and examined concerning it remain inadmissible. (People v. Arauz (1970) 5 C.A.3d 523, 532, 85 C.R. 266 [school vice principal, called to testify from school records that defendant had been suspended, at which time he appeared sleepy and unable to talk plainly, was properly prevented from testifying that defendant was suspected of being under the influence of depressant].)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

O. Business Records.

6. Laying Foundation by Authenticating Witness. a. Custodian or Other Qualified Witness.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 242

[§ 242] Custodian or Other Qualified Witness.

(1) Former Law. The early common law rule allowed the introduction of the business record as a matter of necessity when all the entrants were dead or otherwise unavailable. The later cases relaxed the requirement of producing entrants or showing unavailability as wholly impracticable in modern large business establishments, and permitted authentication of the records by persons familiar with them who were not the actual entrants. (See Patrick v. Tetzlaff (1920) 46 C.A. 243, 245, 189 P. 115; Warren v. Hiltcher (1931) 111 C.A. 318, 320, 295 P. 536; Storm & Butts v. Lipscomb (1931) 117 C.A. 6, 19, 3 P.2d 567; 2 McCormick 5th, §292; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1530.)

(2) Evidence Code. The liberal modern view is contained in the Evidence Code provision that "the custodian or other qualified witness" may testify to the conditions of admissibility. (Ev.C. 1271(c); see Doyle v. Chief Oil Co. (1944) 64 C.A.2d 284, 292, 148 P.2d 915; People v. Fowzer (1954) 127 C.A.2d 742, 747, 274 P.2d 471 [forgery; assistant bank cashier, having had access to records despite not being custodian, properly testified to deposit]; People v. Lugashi (1988) 205 C.A.3d 632, 641, 252 C.R. 434, supra, §230; C.E.B., Effective Introduction of Evidence 2d, Chap. 13 [Business Records].)

(3) Testimony of Technician Conducting Test Not Required. In Sonoma v. Grant W. (1986) 187 C.A.3d 1439, 232 C.R. 471, a paternity action, results of a blood test (see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Demonstrative, Experimental, and Scientific Evidence, §74 et seq.) were offered on the testimony of Dr. Geyer, the director of the paternity testing department of Roche, the national laboratory that performed the test. Defendant objected on the ground that, without testimony of the technicians who performed the test, there was no proper foundation as to the chain of custody of the blood samples tested. Held, the evidence was properly admitted.

(a) The absence of the testimony of the technicians who performed the test did not preclude admission of the tests. "Dr. Geyer testified to the chain of custody—including the identification of the individuals who witnessed the drawing of the blood samples and packaged them for transmission to Roche, and who received the package at Roche and unpacked it—and how this chain of custody was documented. All normal bookkeeping entries in the chain of custody had been completed; all appropriate records and worksheets had been filled out, completed, and signed by the appropriate technologist; and the names and numbers on the test tubes used for the blood samples corresponded with the names and numbers on the technologists' worksheet." (187 C.A.3d 1449.) This testimony provided a sufficient basis for the trial court's conclusion that the laboratory's "procedures were so inherently reliable and trustworthy that a proper foundation was established as to the chain of custody of the blood samples." (187 C.A.3d 1450.)

(b) The report meets the requirements of Ev.C. 1271. "It records an act (blood analysis) and is offered to prove the occurrence of that act. It was made in the regular course of Roche's business and was produced at or near the time of the act. A custodian or 'other qualified witness' has testified as to the identity of the report and its mode of preparation, and his testimony provided substantial evidence of the trustworthiness both of the sources of information and the procedures employed in preparing the report." (187 C.A.3d 1450, 1451.) (See Nichols v. McCoy (1952) 38 C.2d 447, 449, 240 P.2d 569 [coroner's record of blood test of decedent; unnecessary to call person who supplied embalmer with information]; People v. Crosslin (1967) 251 C.A.2d 968, 976, 60 C.R. 309 [fingerprint card of sheriff's office, authenticated by officer in charge of fingerprint section; no need to produce officer who actually took prints]; People v. Beeler (1995) 9 C.4th 953, 979, 39 C.R.2d 607, 891 P.2d 153 [in admitting autopsy of murder victim, trial judge did not abuse discretion in allowing testimony by pathologist working in same office as doctor who conducted autopsy and who apparently left coroner's office under unfavorable conditions].)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

O. Business Records.

6. Laying Foundation by Authenticating Witness.

b. Laying the Foundation.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 243

[§ 243] Laying the Foundation.

To lay the foundation for introduction of a record, the witness must testify "to its identity and the mode of its preparation." (Ev.C. 1271(c).) The following are illustrative of this requirement:

(1) Cases holding foundation properly laid. (See Doyle v. Chief Oil Co. (1944) 64 C.A.2d 284, 289, 292, 148 P.2d 915; Nichols v. McCoy (1952) 38 C.2d 447, 449, 240 P.2d 569; People v. Gorgol (1953) 122 C.A.2d 281, 301, 265 P.2d 69; Cole v. Ames (1957) 155 C.A.2d 8, 13, 317 P.2d 662; People v. Woods (1958) 157 C.A.2d 617, 621, 321 P.2d 477; People v. Williams (1973) 36 C.A.3d 262, 275, 111 C.R. 378; Sonoma v. Grant W. (1986) 187 C.A.3d 1439, 1448, 232 C.R. 471, supra, §242.)

(2) Cases excluding record for lack of proper foundation. (See McGowan v. Los Angeles (1950) 100 C.A.2d 386, 392, 223 P.2d 862, supra, §240; Pruett v. Burr (1953) 118 C.A.2d 188, 202, 257 P.2d 690; Gee v. Timineri (1967) 248 C.A.2d 139, 148, 56 C.R. 211 [not prepared in normal course of business, but in anticipation of lawsuit]; People v. Matthews (1991) 229 C.A.3d 930, 939, 280 C.R. 134 [rap sheets used to prove defendant's prior conviction were inadmissible as business records, where custodian neither compiled information in them nor described their mode of preparation].)

A special statute enacted in 1959 streamlined the methods for production of hospital records in response to a subpoena duces tecum (see Ev.C. 1560 et seq., 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Documentary Evidence, §50). And in 1969, these same procedures were authorized for the records of "every kind of business" described in Ev.C. 1270. (Ev.C. 1560(a)(1); see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Documentary Evidence, §50.) However, as pointed out in Taggart v. Super Seer Corp. (1995) 33 C.A.4th 1697, 1706, 40 C.R.2d 56, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Documentary Evidence, §53, a custodian's declaration may fully comply with Ev.C. 1560, 1561, and yet fail to provide a sufficient foundation for admission of the records under Ev.C. 1271.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Cases holding foundation properly laid. See People v. Martinez (2000) 22 C.4th 106, 113, 126, 91 C.R.2d 687, 990 P.2d 563 [approving People v. Dunlap (1993) 18 C.A.4th 1468, 23 C.R.2d 204, text, §246, which disagreed with People v. Matthews (1991) 229 C.A.3d 930, 280 C.R. 134, text, p. 962, as to admissibility of computer printout of criminal history records to prove prior convictions].

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

P. Official Records and Writings.

1. In General.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 244

[§ 244] In General.

(1) Theory of Admissibility. A long-established hearsay exception makes admissible the statement of a public official, provided the official was under a duty to make it and it was based on facts within the official's personal knowledge. The regular practice of the public office and the official duty make the statement trustworthy, and public functions could not be conveniently performed if officers and deputies were constantly called as witnesses to testify to the matters covered by official statements. (See 2 McCormick 5th, §295; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1630 et seq.; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §1351; 80 A.L.R.3d 414 [admissibility of public record in absence of express statutory authorization].)

(2) Former California Statutes. The admissibility of official records was formerly covered in many sections of the Code of Civil Procedure and other codes, some dealing with authentication, i.e., the method of proving the record, and some with official records as evidence, i.e., their admissibility under this exception to the hearsay rule as proof of the facts recited.

(3) Evidence Code. The Code of Civil Procedure provisions were superseded by Ev.C. 1280 et seq., entitled "Official Records and Other Official Writings." (See infra, §245 et seq.) The principal section, Ev.C. 1280, deals with a record by a public employee (see infra, §245 et seq.); others deal with special types of records (see infra, §250 et seq.), and with absence of a record (see infra, §254). (See Fisk v. Department of Motor Vehicles (1981) 127 C.A.3d 72, 76, 179 C.R. 379, infra, §247; 1 Jefferson, California Evidence Benchbook 3d, Chap. 5; C.E.B., Effective Introduction of Evidence 2d, Chap. 36 [Official Records and Writings]; 6 Santa Clara Lawyer 1; on admission of electronic documents under this exception, see Overly on Electronic Evidence in California §10.04.)

(4) Federal Rules of Evidence. F.R. Evid., Rule 803(8), entitled Public Records and Reports, makes admissible "[r]ecords, reports, statements, or data compilations, in any form, of public offices or agencies, setting forth (A) the activities of the office or agency, or (B) matters observed pursuant to duty imposed by law as to which matters there was a duty to report, excluding, however, in criminal cases matters observed by police officers and other law enforcement personnel, or (C) in civil actions and proceedings and against the Government in criminal cases, factual findings resulting from an investigation made pursuant to authority granted by law, unless the sources of information or other circumstances indicate lack of trustworthiness." (See Beech Aircraft Corp. v. Rainey (1988) 488 U.S. 153, 109 S.Ct. 439, 450, 102 L.Ed.2d 445, 463 [portions of investigatory reports otherwise admissible under Rule 803(8)(C) are not inadmissible merely because they state a conclusion or opinion]; 29 A.L.R.5th 534 [admissibility of government factfinding under Rule 803(8) and similar state rules in products liability actions]; 4 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §453 et seq.; 96 Harv. L. Rev. 492 [The Trustworthiness of Governmental Evaluative Reports Under Federal Rule of Evidence 803(8)(C)]; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §1352 et seq.)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

P. Official Records and Writings.

2. Report of Public Employee.

a. What Constitutes Official Record.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 245

[§ 245] What Constitutes Official Record.

(1) In General. "Evidence of a writing made as a record of an act, condition, or event," made "by and within the scope of duty of a public employee," is admissible in any civil or criminal proceeding to prove the act, condition, or event. (Ev.C. 1280; for illustrations under former statutes, see Ames v. Empire Star Mines Co. (1941) 17 C.2d 213, 224, 110 P.2d 13 [official reports of the Mineral Resources of the Public Domain to the Secretary of the Treasury]; People v. Williams (1959) 174 C.A.2d 364, 390, 345 P.2d 47 [murder; coroner's autopsy record admitted as prima facie evidence of cause of death]; and see People v. Flaxman (1977) 74 C.A.3d Supp. 16, 22, 141 C.R. 799 [engineering and traffic survey]; People v. Parker (1992) 8 C.A.4th 110, 117, 10 C.R.2d 38 [laboratory reports detailing test and procedures used by criminalists employed by county regional laboratory]; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1639 et seq.; on whether records of public hospital come within this classification as well as under the business records exception, see 14 So. Cal. L. Rev. 104.)

(2) Record of Conviction. An official record of conviction certified under Ev.C. 1530(a) (see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Documentary Evidence, §41) is admissible under Ev.C. 1280 to prove "the commission, attempted commission, or solicitation of a criminal offense, prior conviction, service of a prison term, or other act, condition, or event recorded by the record." (Ev.C. 452.5(b).) (See People v. Woodell (1998) 17 C.4th 448, 458, 71 C.R.2d 241, 950 P.2d 85 [out-of-state appellate opinion was admissible under official records exception to prove that defendant's out-of-state assault conviction qualified as strike because it was based on personal use of weapon].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Record of Conviction. Ev.C. 452.5 "does not define the term 'official record of conviction,' but ... there seems little doubt that a minute order reflecting a guilty plea must fall within any definition of the record of conviction." (People v. Duran (2002) 97 C.A.4th 1448, 1462, 119 C.R.2d 272 [in robbery prosecution in which street gang enhancement was alleged, certified minute order documenting that another member of defendants' gang suffered felony conviction was properly admitted to prove predicate offenses needed to establish pattern of criminal activity within meaning of enhancement statute].) West's Key Number Digest, Evidence k.333 et seq.

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

P. Official Records and Writings.

2. Report of Public Employee.

b. Conditions of Admissibility.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 246

[§ 246] Conditions of Admissibility.

(1) Statutory Requirements. Although the former statutes were unclear, the cases tended to require much the same showing of trustworthiness as required by the Business Records Act (Ev.C. 1270 et seq.). (See supra, §227.) The Evidence Code codified the requirement by stating two conditions of admissibility:

(a) The writing must have been made "at or near the time of the act, condition, or event." (Ev.C. 1280(b).)

(b) "The sources of information and method and time of preparation" must have been such as "to indicate its trustworthiness." (Ev.C. 1280(c).)

The Law Revision Commission Comment to Ev.C. 1280 notes a distinction between the business records and official records exceptions: "The evidence that is admissible under this section is also admissible under Section 1271, the business records exception. However, Section 1271 requires a witness to testify as to the identity of the record and its mode of preparation in every instance. In contrast, Section 1280, as does existing law, permits the court to admit an official record or report without necessarily requiring a witness to testify as to its identity and mode of preparation if the court takes judicial notice or if sufficient independent evidence shows that the record or report was prepared in such a manner as to assure its trustworthiness."

(2) Illustrations. Cases finding the conditions satisfied are numerous. (See People v. Flaxman (1977) 74 C.A.3d Supp 16, 20, 141 C.R. 799 [certified copy of engineering and traffic survey, justifying admission of radar evidence of speeding, met trustworthiness requirement]; Snelgrove v. Department of Motor Vehicles (1987) 194 C.A.3d 1364, 1374, 240 C.R. 281 [arresting officer's sworn statement was admissible at suspension hearing under Veh.C. 13353 without officer's testimony]; People v. Dunlap (1993) 18 C.A.4th 1468, 1476, 23 C.R.2d 204 [California Law Enforcement Telecommunications System rap sheet was admissible under Ev.C. 1280 to prove prior convictions]; Jackson v. Department of Motor Vehicles (1994) 22 C.A.4th 730, 736, 737, 27 C.R.2d 712 [in administrative suspension hearing, driver's statement, contained in arresting officer's unsworn arrest report, that he had been driving, was competent evidence of that fact under hearsay exceptions for public employee records and party admissions]; *People v. At an administrative per se review hearing conducted by the Department of Motor Vehicles, the department may, in addition to considering the arresting officer's sworn statement, also consider any unsworn statement by the same officer. Veh.C. 13380 provides that the arresting officer's sworn report will contain "all information relevant to the enforcement action." Thus, "the Legislature clearly anticipates the sworn report will contain all or nearly all of the information necessary to remove the offender's license. In light of this legislative intent, the sworn report cannot be wholly devoid of relevant information. However, so long as a sworn report is filed, it is consistent with the relaxed evidentiary standards of an administrative per se hearing that technical omissions of proof can be corrected by an unsworn report filed by the arresting officer." (MacDonald v. Gutierrez (2004) 32 C.4th 150, 153, 159, 8 C.R.3d 48, 81 P.3d 975 [after driver was arrested for driving with illegal blood-alcohol level and department, at administrative hearing, upheld license suspension, trial judge erred in setting aside suspension on ground that unsworn statements of arresting officer were inadmissible and sworn statement did not by itself provide reasonable cause for stop; disapproving Solovij and Dibble, supra, to extent they suggested that department may not consider unsworn report by arresting officer that is intended to supplement officer's sworn report].)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

P. Official Records and Writings.

2. Report of Public Employee.

c. Relation to Presumption of Official Duty.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 247

[§ 247] Relation to Presumption of Official Duty.

In Fisk v. Department of Motor Vehicles (1981) 127 C.A.3d 72, 179 C.R. 379, F was arrested by a highway patrol officer for driving while drunk, and the officer, in accordance with the implied consent statute (2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §427), submitted to the Department of Motor Vehicles a document entitled "Officer's Statement, Section 13353 Vehicle Code," reciting his observations of F's driving, appearance, speech, walking and odor of alcohol, and also reciting the officer's warning on the effect of refusal to submit to a test and F's refusal to do so. At the administrative hearing, the officer testified that he had prepared the document when the events were fresh in his mind, though he had no independent recollection of the incident. Held, the document was admissible and sufficient to sustain a license suspension. The conditions of Ev.C. 1280 were satisfied, and the presumption of official duty regularly performed under Ev.C. 664 (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Burden of Proof and Presumptions, §89) was also applicable, and could help lay the foundation for admissibility. (127 C.A.3d 77.) Although Ev.C. 664 is expressly inapplicable on an issue as to lawfulness of a warrantless arrest, it does apply to other issues involved in this proceeding. (127 C.A.3d 78.) Hence, Fisk has the burden of showing that the officer failed in his duty to observe the events and describe them correctly. (127 C.A.3d 78.)

The opinion adds: "Commentators have recognized the interrelationship between the official records hearsay exception and the presumption of proper performance of official duty. Thus, Wigmore points out that the essential 'circumstantial probability of trustworthiness' justifying the common law exception to the hearsay rule for official statements 'is related in its thought to the presumption that public officers do their duty. When it is a part of the duty of a public officer to make a statement as to a fact coming within his official cognizance, the great probability is that he does his duty and makes a correct statement. ... It is the influence of the official duty, broadly considered, which is taken as the sufficient element of trustworthiness, justifying the acceptance of the hearsay statement.' " (See Snelgrove v. Department of Motor Vehicles (1987) 194 C.A.3d 1364, 1375, 240 C.R. 281 [following Fisk]; Jackson v. Department of Motor Vehicles (1994) 22 C.A.4th 730, 738, 739, 27 C.R.2d 712 [following Fisk and Snelgrove]; Poland v. Department of Motor Vehicles (1995) 34 C.A.4th 1128, 1136, 40 C.R.2d 693 [no extrinsic evidence needed to show that documents were in fact made by public employee; under Ev.C. 1453 (2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Documentary Evidence, §24), highway patrol officer's signature provided sufficient authentication].)

In Shea v. Department of Motor Vehicles (1998) 62 C.A.4th 1057, 72 C.R.2d 896, a driver challenged the administrative suspension of his license for driving with an illegal blood-alcohol concentration. Because the forensic alcohol tests were performed by unsupervised, and therefore unqualified, trainees, the trial judge set aside the suspension. Held, this was proper. Under the circumstances, the official duty presumption could not be used to bring the test results in under the official records exception. "Since a trainee has no official duty to report the test results, his or her results are not entitled to the presumption that official duty was performed." (62 C.A.4th 1061.) (See Manning v. Department of Motor Vehicles (1998) 61 C.A.4th 273, 275, 276, 71 C.R.2d 647 [forensic report was inadmissible where computer printout stated that urine sample was not submitted to laboratory until day after test was supposedly performed, and test was performed by trainee, with no indication she was supervised].)

Department of Motor Vehicles* (2002) 100 C.A.4th 416, 422, 122 C.R.2d 520 [driver's license suspension was properly set aside; DMV conceded that document entitled "Forensic Alcohol Analysis," which showed driver's blood-alcohol level was beyond legal limit, was hearsay, and official duty presumption could not apply, as department provided no foundational evidence to support finding that criminalist who signed report had official duty to perform test and record results]; Shannon v. Gourley (2002) 103 C.A.4th 60, 65, 126 C.R.2d 327 [distinguishing Shea v. Department of Motor Vehicles (1998) 62 C.A.4th 1057, 72 C.R.2d 896, text, p. 966; DMV produced substantial evidence that trainee who performed blood-alcohol test was adequately supervised]; Hernandez v. Gutierrez (2003) 114 C.A.4th 168, 175, 7 C.R.3d 307 [in driver's license suspension proceeding, driver failed to rebut presumption that breath test results were obtained in compliance with applicable regulations; although officer, rather than test operator, observed driver for required 15 minutes before test was performed, regulations do not require observation to be by operator; distinguishing Shea]; Glatman v. Valverde (2006) 146 C.A.4th 700, 705, 53 C.R.3d 319 [trial judge did not err in ordering Department of Motor Vehicles to set aside license suspension on ground that blood-alcohol test results were not timely recorded as required by Ev.C. 1280(b); timely recordation could not be presumed under Ev.C. 664, as no particular statute or regulation imposed timeliness duty that could be presumed to have been met].

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

P. Official Records and Writings.

2. Report of Public Employee.

d. Public Employee Record Containing Other Employee's Observations.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 248

[§ 248] Public Employee Record Containing Other Employee's Observations.

In Gananian v. Zolin (1995) 33 C.A.4th 634, 39 C.R.2d 384, the court disagreed with prior holdings or dicta to the effect that the public employee records exception is applicable only if the person making the record has personal knowledge of the recorded facts. Plaintiff petitioned the superior court to set aside the suspension of his driver's license. In administrative proceedings concerning the suspension, the Department of Motor Vehicles had relied on the sworn report of a Highway Patrol officer containing observations of a deputy sheriff as to plaintiff's erratic driving. The trial judge granted the petition, finding that the sworn report qualified under the public records exception only insofar as it reported the personal observations of the Highway Patrol officer, and without the unsworn observations of the deputy sheriff there was insufficient evidence that plaintiff had been driving. Held, reversed.

(a) The Highway Patrol officer's report qualified as an admissible public employee record under Ev.C. 1280 even to the extent that it reported the deputy sheriff's personal observations. Imachi v. Department of Motor Vehicles (1992) 2 C.A.4th 809, 3 C.R.2d 478, states a contrary rule, but neither of the cases it relies on (Fisk v. Department of Motor Vehicles (1981) 127 C.A.3d 72, 179 C.R. 379, and Snelgrove v. Department of Motor Vehicles (1987) 194 C.A.3d 1364, 1375, 240 C.R. 281, supra, §247) establishes that personal knowledge is a prerequisite to application of the public employee records exception. In both cases, the court simply found that the sworn statement at issue was trustworthy because it contained the firsthand observations of the reporting officer. (33 C.A.4th 642.)

(b) The court in Cantrell v. Zolin (1994) 23 C.A.4th 128, 28 C.R.2d 238, asserted that a sworn statement by one officer reporting another officer's observations of the licensee's driving would be insufficient to support a finding that the licensee was driving, as the second officer's observations were hearsay. However, this assertion was not supported by any analysis and, in any event, was dictum because the licensee did not object to the report's introduction as proof that he was driving. (33 C.A.4th 644.)

(c) In the present case, plaintiff offered no evidence contradicting the deputy sheriff's observations. Because those observations were admissible under the public employee records exception, there was sufficient evidence that plaintiff was driving and the department's action should have been upheld. (33 C.A.4th 641.) (See McNary v. Department of Motor Vehicles (1996) 45 C.A.4th 688, 695, 53 C.R.2d 55 [following Gananian]; on admissibility of reports containing observations by third parties who are not officials, see infra, §249.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

P. Official Records and Writings.

2. Report of Public Employee.

e. Inadmissible Reports and Statements.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 249

[§ 249] Inadmissible Reports and Statements.

(1) In General. The general tendency of the courts is to exclude matters that would not be permitted as testimony if the official were appearing personally. Thus, where the statement contains the observations of persons other than the official making the report, application of the trustworthiness requirement (supra, §246) may result in the report's exclusion. Reports containing conclusions are also subject to exclusion. (See McGowan v. Los Angeles (1950) 100 C.A.2d 386, 391, 223 P.2d 862 [verdict of coroner's jury cannot be offered to prove cause of death]; Reisman v. Los Angeles City School Dist. (1954) 123 C.A.2d 493, 506, 267 P.2d 36, supra, §239; Behr v. Santa Cruz (1959) 172 C.A.2d 697, 705, 342 P.2d 987 [official report of fire ranger on cause of fire, based primarily on statements made to him by others]; People v. Baeske (1976) 58 C.A.3d 775, 781, 130 C.R. 35 [source of information was telephone call from witness to robbery, giving license number of getaway car; witness was not public employee with duty to observe facts correctly or report observations accurately to police department]; Elsworth v. Beech Aircraft Corp. (1984) 37 C.3d 540, 554, 208 C.R. 874, 691 P.2d 630 [report to congressional subcommittee, author unknown, did not meet test]; People v. Campos (1995) 32 C.A.4th 304, 309, 38 C.R.2d 113 [in proceeding to review defendant's classification as mentally disordered offender, reports of nontestifying medical experts and defendant's probation report did not qualify for admission under official records exception, as they were records of conclusions, not "act, condition, or event"]; on admissibility of police officer's report, containing observations by other officers, to support driver's license suspension, see supra, §247.)

(2) Conclusions as to Cause of Injury. The exclusionary rule is strictly applied where the report states the cause of and responsibility for injury to person or property. In Pruett v. Burr (1953) 118 C.A.2d 188, 257 P.2d 690, plaintiff sued for damage to his cotton crop caused by contaminated spray used by defendant. The trial judge admitted in evidence a letter and memorandum written by officers of the State Department of Agriculture, reciting the facts of their investigation of the damage, their conferences with interested parties, inspection and tests, etc., and tending to show the presence of a contaminant. Held, this was prejudicial error. "[R]ecords of investigations and inquiries conducted either voluntarily or pursuant to requirement of law by public officers concerning causes and effects, and involving the exercise of judgement and discretion, expressions of opinion, and the making of conclusions, are not admissible in evidence as public records." (118 C.A.2d 200, quoting Am.Jur.) (See 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §1363 et seq.; 69 A.L.R.2d 1148 [official report as to cause of accident or injury].)

(3) Proof of Contents Not Proof of Truth. In re Shannon C. (1986) 179 C.A.3d 334, 224 C.R. 516, a proceeding to declare a child free from defendant father's custody and control, analyzes Ev.C. 1280 and Ev.C. 1530 (2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Documentary Evidence, §41). Defendant had been on active duty with the United States Navy when his daughter was made a dependent of the juvenile court. A plan of family reunification called for defendant to visit his daughter whenever possible and to become as involved as he could with programs that met her needs. Defendant testified that his involvement had been limited because he had been at sea much of the time. The trial judge relied on Ev.C. 1530 to admit copies of what were allegedly the originals of employment plans or schedules of defendant's ship showing its whereabouts for the months in question. Based on those naval records, the judge concluded that defendant had failed to comply with the reunification plan. Held, reversed.

(a) Ev.C. 1530 did not authorize admission of the copies of the naval records to prove the truth of the matters stated therein; the section deals with the use of a copy of a writing in official custody to prove the content of the original. (179 C.A.3d 342.)

(b) In order to overcome the hearsay rule and establish the truth of the information contained in the writing, the foundational requirements of Ev.C. 1280 must be satisfied, and there was no testimony to establish those requirements. "The records do not show who prepared them, when they were prepared, or the method of preparation. Indeed, although the records were admitted for the purpose of showing the whereabouts of the U.S.S. Carpenter between April and July 1979, the records are described on their face as 'employment schedules' and by the certificate of authenticity as 'planned employment schedules.' If language is given its ordinary meaning, the documents are schedules showing where the ship was supposed to go, not where it actually went." (179 C.A.3d 343.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. See Alvarez v. Jacmar Pac. Pizza Corp. (2002) 100 C.A.4th 1190, 1206, 122 C.R.2d 890 [in premises liability action against restaurant by survivors of patron who was murdered on premises, records of 911 calls from restaurant concerning previous incidents at restaurant were multiple hearsay and were properly excluded because individuals who placed calls had no duty to correctly observe and reports facts; relying on People v. Baeske (1976) 58 C.A.3d 775, 130 C.R. 35, text, p. 968].

3. Report of Vital Statistics.

a. Admissible Public Records.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 250

[§ 250] Admissible Public Records.

Marriage, birth, and death certificates by clergy and physicians, when recorded or filed, are admissible public records. (See 2 McCormick 5th, §297; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1642 et seq.; on death certificate, see 21 A.L.R.3d 418; on census records, see 2 Hastings L. J. 9.)

Health & Saf.C. 103550 expressly provides for admissibility of California records of vital statistics. Ev.C. 1281 goes further, making admissible reports of this type from other jurisdictions. Evidence of "a writing made as a record of a birth, fetal death, death, or marriage" is admissible "if the maker was required by law to file the writing in a designated public office and the writing was made and filed as required by law."

F.R. Evid., Rule 803(9) makes admissible "records or data compilations, in any form, of births, fetal deaths, deaths, or marriages, if the report thereof was made to a public office pursuant to requirements of law." (See 4 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §459; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §1372 et seq.)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

P. Official Records and Writings.

3. Report of Vital Statistics.

b. Knowledge and Opinion Rule.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 251

[§ 251] Knowledge and Opinion Rule.

The personal knowledge requirement and the opinion rule have sometimes been held to exclude that part of a doctor's death certificate that attempts to state the cause of death on the basis of hearsay or conjecture. (See 2 McCormick 5th, §297; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1646.) There is similar authority regarding coroner's records. (See Pacific Freight Lines v. Industrial Acc. Com. (1945) 26 C.2d 234, 238, 157 P.2d 634 [Arizona certificate of coroner's jury held mere opinion, dependent on facts]; McClafflin v. Bayshore Equipment Rental Co. (1969) 274 C.A.2d 446, 455, 79 C.R. 337, supra, §14 [coroner's death record; conclusory statement--"when leg of step ladder broke"--excluded].)

However, statutes requiring a statement of the cause may make the certificate prima facie evidence of the facts stated therein. (See Health & Saf.C. 102825, 102860, 103550.)

In People v. Holder (1964) 230 C.A.2d 50, 40 C.R. 655, defendant, charged with manslaughter by vehicle, stipulated to submit the case on the record of the preliminary examination. Then, when found guilty, he appealed, challenging sufficiency of the proof that the collision was the proximate cause of death of the two victims. The prosecution relied mainly on the death certificates. The court found the evidence otherwise sufficient; but, in a strong dictum, it questioned the use of a death certificate to establish the cause of death in a criminal case, where the defendant is entitled to confrontation of witnesses against him, and the author of the document is not available for cross-examination. (230 C.A.2d 54.)

4. Federal Finding of Presumed Death.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 252

[§ 252] Federal Finding of Presumed Death.

(1) The Statute. Ev.C. 1252 provides a convenient method of proof of death of persons covered by the Federal Missing Persons Act. "A written finding of presumed death made by an employee of the United States authorized to make such finding pursuant to the Federal Missing Persons Act ... as enacted or as heretofore or hereafter amended, shall be received in any court, office, or other place in this state as evidence of the death of the person therein found to be dead and of the date, circumstances, and place of his disappearance." (On administration of estates of missing persons presumed dead, see 12 Summary (9th), Wills and Probate, §350 et seq.)

The Federal Missing Persons Act was repealed in 1966 and replaced by a "missing employees" statute (5 U.S.C., §5561 et seq.) and a "missing service members" statute (37 U.S.C., §551 et seq.).

(2) Distinction: Date of Death. The statute gives evidentiary effect to the finding of the date of disappearance, but not the date of death. This is explained by the Law Revision Commission: "The determination by the federal employee of the date of the presumed death is a determination ordinarily made for the purpose of determining whether the pay of a missing person should be stopped and his name stricken from the payroll. The date so determined should not be given any consideration in the California courts since the issues involved in the California proceedings require determination of the date of death for a different purpose. Hence, Section 1282 does not make admissible the finding of the date of presumed death. On the other hand, the determination of the date, circumstances, and place of disappearance is reliable information that will assist the trier of fact in determining the date when the person died and is admissible under this section. Often the date of death may be inferred from the circumstances of the disappearance." (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1282.)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

P. Official Records and Writings.

6. Statement of Absence of Public Record.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 254

[§ 254] Statement of Absence of Public Record.

(1) Evidence Code. The absence of a public record in a public office may be proved by a "writing made by the public employee who is the official custodian of the records." The writing must recite "diligent search and failure to find" the record. (Ev.C. 1284.)

The justifications for this provision are the likelihood of accuracy of the statement, and the necessity of providing a simple and inexpensive method of proof. (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1284.)

(2) Federal Rules of Evidence. F.R. Evid., Rule 803(10) makes the following admissible: "To prove the absence of a record, report, statement, or data compilation, in any form, or the nonoccurrence or nonexistence of a matter of which a record, report, statement, or data compilation, in any form, was regularly made and preserved by a public office or agency, evidence in the form of a certification in accordance with rule 902, or testimony, that diligent search failed to disclose the record, report, statement, or data compilation, or entry." (See 4 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §460; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §1376 et seq.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

Q. Former Testimony.

1. In General.

a. Nature and Theory of Exception.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 255

[§ 255] Nature and Theory of Exception.

The "former testimony" exception to the hearsay rule permits the introduction of evidence of the testimony of a witness at a former civil or criminal action or proceeding where the witness is unavailable and cannot be produced at the present trial. The common law rule is usually codified by statutes varying in language and calling for interpretation to give them scope and effect. (See generally Ev.C. 1290 et seq.; Model C., Rule 511; Unif. Rule 804(b)(1); People v. Bird (1901) 132 C. 261, 263, 64 P. 259 [discussing statute prior to 1911 amendment allowing prosecution and defendant to offer testimony at former criminal trial]; Gates v. Pendleton (1925) 71 C.A. 752, 758, 236 P. 365 [former statute construed in accordance with common law rule]; Werner v. State Bar (1944) 24 C.2d 611, 616, 150 P.2d 892 [purpose of former requirement of same parties and subject matter]; 2 McCormick 5th, §301 et seq.; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1372 et seq.; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §891; 28 Proof of Facts 2d 1; 74 A.L.R.2d 521.)

Because the major policy underlying the hearsay rule is the need for cross-examination to test credibility (supra, §1), former testimony subject to cross-examination is a highly reliable kind of evidence, and it is sometimes said that the evidence is admitted because the rule "is satisfied." (See 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1370; People v. Bianchi (1934) 140 C.A. 698, 700, 35 P.2d 1032 [quoting Wigmore]; 8 So. Cal. L. Rev. 247.)

The conventional approach, however, treats former testimony as hearsay because the witness is not subject to cross-examination in the present trial. The evidence is then received under this exception to the hearsay rule. (2 McCormick 5th, §301; Ev.C. 1291.) It may also be used as a prior inconsistent statement to impeach the witness. (See 2 McCormick 5th, §301; 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §315 et seq.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

Q. Former Testimony.

1. In General.

b. Former Law.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 256

[§ 256] Former Law.

Former C.C.P. 1870(8) narrowly restricted the scope of this exception as follows:

(1) Requirement of Identity of Parties (Mutuality). The present parties--the proponent of the evidence and the opponent--had to be parties to the former action. (See Redwing v. Moncravie (1934) 138 C.A. 432, 434, 32 P.2d 408; Smith v. Schwartz (1939) 35 C.A.2d 659, 664, 96 P.2d 816.)

The cases liberalized the requirement so that substantial identity sufficed. (See People v. Bianchi (1934) 140 C.A. 698, 700, 35 P.2d 1032; Werner v. State Bar (1944) 24 C.2d 611, 616, 150 P.2d 892; 2 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 56; 5 So. Cal. L. Rev. 209; 5 Stanf. L. Rev. 535.) And where both proponent and opponent were parties to the prior action, the fact that there were also additional parties to either action was not an objection. (See Gates v. Pendleton (1925) 71 C.A. 752, 756, 236 P. 365; People v. Bianchi, supra.)

A further liberalization was made by applying the "privity" theory to satisfy the requirement where a present party was a successor in interest or otherwise related in interest to a former party. (See Fredericks v. Judah (1887) 73 C. 604, 608, 15 P. 305; Briggs v. Briggs (1889) 80 C. 253, 256, 22 P. 334; 5 So. Cal. L. Rev. 209.)

(2) Requirement of Identity of Issues (Same Subject Matter). The prior action must have related to "the same matter," so that the issues were the same in both cases. (See Werner v. State Bar, supra; Kuck v. Raftery (1931) 117 C.A. 755, 762, 4 P.2d 552; Redwing v. Moncravie, supra; Smith v. Schwartz, supra; 70 A.L.R.2d 494.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

Q. Former Testimony.

1. In General.

c. Evidence Code and Federal Rules.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 257

[§ 257] Evidence Code and Federal Rules.

(1) Evidence Code. Both of the restrictions in former C.C.P. 1870(8) (supra, §256) were criticized. (See 2 McCormick 5th, §§303, 304; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1388; 5 Stanf. L. Rev. 535; 2 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 57; 1953 A.S. 774; 1954 A.S. 773; 1963 A.S. 294.) Both were eliminated by the Uniform Rules of Evidence, which substituted the test of identity of interest and motive, and Ev.C. 1291 and 1292 followed the Uniform Rule. (See infra, §264 et seq.)

The Code covers the exception in four sections: (1) Ev.C. 1290, defining "former testimony" by listing the types of prior proceedings (see infra, §258 et seq.); (2) Ev.C. 1291, on former testimony offered against a party to the former proceeding (see infra, §§264, 265); (3) Ev.C. 1292, on former testimony offered against a person not a party to the former proceedings (see infra, §266); and (4) Ev.C. 1293, on former testimony of a minor child victim of a crime (see infra, §261). (1 Jefferson, California Evidence Benchbook 3d, Chap. 8; C.E.B., Effective Introduction of Evidence 2d, Chap. 28 [Former Testimony]; see 9 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 167.)

Former testimony can only be offered when the witness is unavailable. (Ev.C. 1291, 1292.) The reasons for this condition are that present cross-examination is a valuable right, and that the judge or jury should, if possible, "obtain the elusive and incommunicable evidence of a witness' deportment while testifying." (Blache v. Blache (1951) 37 C.2d 531, 535, 233 P.2d 547 [quoting Wigmore]; see Williams v. Hartford Ins. Co. (1983) 147 C.A.3d 893, 899, 195 C.R. 448; People v. Pitts (1990) 223 C.A.3d 1547, 1557, 273 C.R. 389 [unavailability not established]; L & B Real Estate v. Superior Court (1998) 67 C.A.4th 1342, 1348, 79 C.R.2d 759 [unavailability requirement applied in summary judgment proceeding in wrongful death action in which defendant attempted to introduce transcript testimony from prior criminal proceeding arising from same incident]; 2 McCormick 5th, §302; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§1395, 1396, 1402 et seq.; on what constitutes unavailability, see supra, §18 et seq.)

(2) Federal Rules of Evidence. F.R. Evid., Rule 804(b)(1) makes admissible the following: "Testimony given as a witness at another hearing of the same or a different proceeding, or in a deposition taken in compliance with law in the course of the same or another proceeding, if the party against whom the testimony is now offered, or, in a civil action or proceeding, a predecessor in interest, had an opportunity and similar motive to develop the testimony by direct, cross, or redirect examination." (See United States v. Salerno (1992) 505 U.S. 317, 112 S.Ct. 2503, 2507, 120 L.Ed.2d 255, 262 [construing "similar motive" requirement]; 4 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §488 et seq.; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §891 et seq.; 149 A.L.R. Fed 231 [admissibility of grand jury testimony by unavailable witness under federal rules].)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

- Q. Former Testimony.
- 2. Former Proceeding.
- a. Prior Civil Proceeding.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 258

[§ 258] Prior Civil Proceeding.

The first class of proceedings listed in Ev.C. 1290 includes "another action" or "a former hearing or trial of the same action." (Ev.C. 1290(a).) This makes admissible former testimony taken in the prior trial of a civil action. (See Gates v. Pendleton (1925) 71 C.A. 752, 758, 236 P. 365; 2 McCormick 5th, §305; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1401; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §891.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

- Q. Former Testimony.
- 2. Former Proceeding.
- b. Prior Criminal Proceeding.
- 1. Prior Criminal Trial.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 259

[§ 259] Prior Criminal Trial.

(1) Former Law. P.C. 686(3)(a), which formerly covered this subject, provided: "Hearsay evidence may be admitted to the extent that it is otherwise admissible in a criminal action under the law of this state." (On the former law, see People v. Murphy (1872) 45 C. 137, 143; People v. Bianchi (1934) 140 C.A. 698, 700, 35 P.2d 1032; Werner v. State Bar (1944) 24 C.2d 611, 614, 150 P.2d 892 [former criminal prosecution, subsequent disbarment proceeding]; People v. Carswell (1959) 51 C.2d 602, 605, 335 P.2d 99; People v. Lint (1960) 182 C.A.2d 402, 420, 6 C.R. 95 [coroner's inquest not a former trial, testimony not admissible in criminal trial].)

(2) Evidence Code. Because "action" includes "criminal action" (Ev.C. 105), Ev.C. 1291, dealing with evidence against a former party (infra, §264), is applicable. And, as stated by the Law Revision Commission: "Section 1291 will also permit a broader range of hearsay to be introduced against the defendant in a criminal action than has been permitted under Penal Code Section 686. Under that section, former testimony has been admissible against the defendant in a criminal action only if the former testimony was given in the same action--at the preliminary examination, in a deposition, or in a prior trial of the action. Likewise, Section 1291 will permit a broader range of hearsay to be introduced against the prosecution in a criminal action since the people of the State of California are a party to all criminal actions." (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1291; see People v. Ashford (1968) 265 C.A.2d 673, 678, 71 C.R. 619 [witness at first trial away on trip at time of second trial, and 60-day period for speedy trial would expire shortly]; People v. Williams (1968) 265 C.A.2d 888, 892, 71 C.R. 773, supra, §20; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1397 et seq.; 70 A.L.R.2d 1179 [use of criminal action testimony in later civil case].)

Ev.C. 1292, dealing with evidence against a person not a former party (infra, §266), permits use of former testimony from a civil or criminal action in a subsequent civil action, but does not permit former testimony to be used in a subsequent criminal action. It would be a serious, and doubtless unconstitutional, violation of the defendant's right of confrontation. (See Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1292; on constitutional right of confrontation, see Pointer v. Texas (1965) 380 U.S. 400, 85 S.Ct. 1065, 1068, 13 L.Ed.2d 923, 926, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §531; Barber v. Page (1968) 390 U.S. 719, 88 S.Ct. 1318, 1322, 20 L.Ed.2d 255, 260.)

Another limiting rule applies to the defendant's testimony at a probation revocation hearing held before disposition of criminal charges arising from the same activities. At the subsequent criminal proceedings, the defendant's former testimony is inadmissible except for impeachment or rebuttal and, even then, only if the direct testimony is so clearly inconsistent with the revocation hearing testimony that perjury is probable. (People v. Coleman (1975) 13 C.3d 867, 889, 120 C.R. 384, 533 P.2d 1024, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §380.)

In People v. O'Connell (1984) 152 C.A.3d 548, 199 C.R. 542, defendant was charged with burglary, defendant testified, and the jury was unable to agree. In a second trial, he did not testify, but a police officer testified to incriminating admissions made by defendant in his earlier testimony. Held, the testimony was admissible. (a) Testimony by a probationer at a probation revocation hearing is not admissible at the subsequent trial on the related criminal charge; the probationer is not forced to choose between his privilege against self-incrimination and his opportunity to be heard in the revocation proceeding. Similarly, testimony given by a defendant in support of a motion to suppress cannot later be used against him over objection, because he cannot be required to waive his Fifth Amendment privilege in order to assert a Fourth Amendment claim. (b) However, defendant was not put to such a choice when he decided to testify at the first trial, and his voluntary testimony was a waiver of his Fifth Amendment privilege. (152 C.A.3d 553, 554.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Evidence Code. See People v. Marlow (2004) 34 C.4th 131, 150, 17 C.R.3d 825, 96 P.3d 126 [in penalty phase of capital murder prosecution, trial judge did not err in admitting, under Ev.C. 1291, defendant's testimony from prior murder trial; notwithstanding that defendant testified in former trial only because of assertions made by codefendant that reflected on him, his decision to testify was tactical choice, and thus testimony was not "impelled" so as to make it unusable at later proceeding].

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

- Q. Former Testimony.
- 2. Former Proceeding.
- b. Prior Criminal Proceeding.
- 2. Preliminary Examination.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 260

[§ 260] Preliminary Examination.

(1) In General. The introduction of preliminary examination testimony was formerly covered by P.C. 686(3)(a). (See People v. Crandall (1929) 100 C.A. 785, 790, 281 P. 81; People v. Crandall (1941) 43 C.A.2d 238, 241, 110 P.2d 682; People v. Horace (1954) 127 C.A.2d 366, 368, 273 P.2d 923; People v. Terry (1960) 180 C.A.2d 48, 55, 4 C.R. 597; People v. Dozier (1965) 236 C.A.2d 94, 102, 45 C.R. 770 [constitutional right of confrontation not impaired].) It is now covered by the Evidence Code (see supra, §259). (See People v. Banks (1966) 242 C.A.2d 373, 379, 51 C.R. 398; People v. Moran (1974) 39 C.A.3d 398, 406, 114 C.R. 413, infra, §268; People v. Johnson (1975) 46 C.A.3d 701, 704, 120 C.R. 372; 38 A.L.R.4th 378 [use of preliminary hearing testimony in criminal trial].)

It must appear, however, that the defendant had an opportunity to cross-examine. In People v. Brock (1985) 38 C.3d 180, 211 C.R. 122, 695 P.2d 209, the preliminary hearing of a key prosecution witness was taken in a hospital where the witness was being treated for terminal diseases. She had been given synthetic opiates, was fatigued, uncomfortable, and forgetful, and her recollections were contradictory. However, because of her condition, the magistrate restricted defense counsel's cross-examination to a few questions. Held, the witness' testimony, read to the jury after her death, was inadmissible; defendant was denied a meaningful opportunity for cross-examination as a result of the restrictions imposed and the witness' difficulty in communicating. (38 C.3d 198.) (See People v. Robinson (1991) 226 C.A.3d 1581, 1587, 277 C.R. 504 [witness' preliminary hearing testimony was admissible; defense counsel at preliminary hearing cross-examined both witness' identification of defendant as perpetrator and witness' perception of events occurring on day of crime]; People v. Ceja (1994) 26 C.A.4th 78, 87, 88, 31 C.R.2d 475 [although a defendant must have had opportunity for effective cross-examination at preliminary hearing, defendant failed to show that he was denied that opportunity by ineffective assistance of counsel]; People v. Lepe (1997) 57 C.A.4th 977, 982, 67 C.R.2d 525 [changes effectuated by Proposition 115 (see 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Pretrial Proceedings, §142) did not so alter nature of preliminary hearing that it no longer meets requirement of Ev.C. 1291(a)(2) that party against whom former testimony is offered has had opportunity to cross-examine declarant at prior proceeding].)

(2) To Prove Nature of Prior Conviction. In People v. Castellanos (1990) 219 C.A.3d 1163, 269 C.R. 93, defendant pleaded guilty to first degree residential burglary and admitted that he was the person involved in the four prior burglary convictions alleged as enhancements. The prosecution then introduced the transcripts of the preliminary hearings for each of the priors to prove that they also involved burglary of inhabited dwellings. Held, the transcripts were admissible for this purpose even though unavailability of the witnesses was not shown. "If this were a proceeding where a defendant's guilt on the offense bound over from the preliminary hearing was being litigated or his probation or parole was being revoked on the basis of a new offense, the lack of a specific showing of unavailability of the witnesses would certainly preclude the admission of the preliminary hearing transcripts. ... However, the nature of the proceeding here, to determine whether a defendant has suffered a prior serious felony conviction (not to determine whether he is guilty of the earlier offense), is a different breed of animal. Because the preliminary hearing transcript testimony and other relevant court documents, albeit hearsay, are not being offered against the defendant in the traditional sense, but are merely being offered for the neutral inquiry as to the nature of the earlier offense, i.e., to explain the defendant's conduct which comprised the crime he admitted to have suffered in the earlier proceeding, they are admissible as exceptions to the hearsay rule to explain his admissions." (219 C.A.3d 1174.) (See People v. Goodner (1990) 226 C.A.3d 609, 616, 276 C.R. 542 [defendant's statements in entire preliminary hearing transcript were admissible to determine residential nature of defendant's two alleged prior burglary convictions; adopting reasoning of Castellanos]; People v. Reed (1996) 13 C.4th 217, 223, 229, 52 C.R.2d 106, 914 P.2d 184 [finding that statements in preliminary hearing transcript reliably reflected conduct for which defendant was convicted and were admissible on basis of witness' unavailability (under rule that proof of prior crime is restricted to record of conviction and may not be by live testimony) but declining to adopt "neutral inquiry" rationale of Castellanos]; People v. Best (1997) 56 C.A.4th 41, 46, 64 C.R.2d 809 [in proceeding to determine nature of defendant's prior assault, police officer's preliminary hearing testimony was admissible for reasons stated in Reed, but hearsay statements contained in that testimony were inadmissible because they fit into no recognized hearsay exception].)

In People v. Houck (1998) 66 C.A.4th 350, 77 C.R.2d 837, the Court of Appeal applied the reasoning of the Reed case, to reach a different result: Where a defendant pleads guilty, as in Reed, the preliminary hearing transcript is part of the record of conviction in that it reliably reflects the conduct of which the defendant was convicted; where, as here, the defendant pleads not guilty, the transcript is not reliable as to what evidence was presented to or relied on by the jury in reaching its verdict. (66 C.A.4th 356, 357.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. See People v. Carter (2005) 36 C.4th 1114, 1173, 32 C.R.3d 759, 117 P.3d 476 [in capital murder case, trial judge properly admitted preliminary hearing testimony of prosecution witness who died before trial, where defendant's motive and interest in cross-examining witness at preliminary hearing were closely similar, if not identical, to his objectives at guilt phase of trial (to attempt to discredit prosecution's theory as to date on which defendant initially encountered witness' girlfriend, an uncharged murder victim of defendant's)]; People v. Gonzales (2005) 131 C.A.4th 767, 774, 32 C.R.3d 172 [admission of preliminary hearing transcript to prove that defendant's prior conviction qualified as strike was proper; defendant had had opportunity at hearing to cross-examine witness whose testimony was used to show that he had used firearm, and his interest and motive at both proceedings were similar, i.e., to prevent finding that he had personally discharged firearm].

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

- Q. Former Testimony.
- 2. Former Proceeding.
- b. Prior Criminal Proceeding.
- 3. Testimony of Minor Victim.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 261

[§ 261] Testimony of Minor Victim.

(1) In General. Ev.C. 1293 creates a hearsay exception for "former testimony made at a preliminary examination by a minor child who was the complaining witness." (Ev.C. 1293(a).) (See 21 Pacific L. J. 487.) A "complaining witness" is defined as "the alleged victim of the crime for which a preliminary examination was held." (Ev.C. 1293(e).)

(2) Conditions for Admissibility. (a) The former testimony must be offered in a dependency proceeding (see 10 Summary (9th), Parent and Child, §648 et seq.); and (b) the issues must be such that a defendant in the preliminary examination had the right and opportunity to cross-examine the minor with an interest and motive similar to that possessed by the parent or guardian against whom the testimony is offered in the dependency proceeding. (Ev.C. 1293(a).)

(3) Objections. The admissibility of the minor's former testimony is subject to the same limitations and objections as though the minor were testifying at the dependency proceeding. (Ev.C. 1293(b).) And the attorney for the parent or guardian against whom the former testimony is offered or, if none, the parent or guardian himself or herself, may challenge admissibility by showing that new substantially different issues are present in the dependency proceeding. (Ev.C. 1293(c).)

(4) Statute Upheld. In re Elizabeth T. (1992) 9 C.A.4th 636, 12 C.R.2d 10, rejected a father's constitutional challenge to Ev.C. 1293 based on the right of confrontation: "In enacting section 1293, the Legislature incorporated as nearly as possible the exact language of Evidence Code sections 1291 and 1292, which have never been held to infringe impermissibly on the due-process right of confrontation and cross-examination. Section 1293 differs materially from sections 1291 and 1292 in only one respect: it requires no showing that the witness whose former testimony is to be used is unavailable. ... Given that the court's main purpose is to protect the minors ... , and that the United States Supreme Court has determined that a state's interest in protecting child sex-crime victims from further trauma may outweigh the right of confrontation even in criminal cases ... , the Legislature could properly find it unnecessary to require a showing of unavailability before a juvenile court may admit the preliminary hearing testimony of a minor in a section 300 proceeding." (9 C.A.4th 641.)

The court also rejected the father's contention that Ev.C. 1293 denies due process because it deprives the juvenile court of the means to determine the minors' credibility. The basis for the contention was that the judge presiding over a Welf.C. 300 proceeding will normally not be the same judge who presided over the preliminary hearing in the criminal case. "This argument proves too much; if it were correct, then it would equally bar the use of former testimony in any type of proceeding, even where the witness was shown to be unavailable. ... No such condition has been grafted onto Evidence Code sections 1291 and 1292, the predecessors of section 1293, and we see no reason to graft on such a condition here. The presumption underlying section 1293, like its predecessor statutes, is that the testimony and cross-examination in the former proceeding, as recorded in the transcript thereof, provide a sufficient means for the court to assess the credibility of the nontestifying witness." ### III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

Q. Former Testimony.

2. Former Proceeding.

c. Deposition in Civil or Criminal Case.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 262

[§ 262] Deposition in Civil or Criminal Case.

(1) Deposition in Civil Case. "A deposition taken in compliance with law in another action" is admissible under this exception. (Ev.C. 1290(c); see Briggs v. Briggs (1889) 80 C. 253, 608, 22 P. 334 [subsequent action involving successors in interest]; 5 Stanf. L. Rev. 535; 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §157.) The use of depositions taken in the same action is governed by the discovery statutes (C.C.P. 2025(u), 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §153).

(2) Deposition in Criminal Case. "Another action" in Ev.C. 1290(c) includes a criminal action (Ev.C. 105). P.C. 686(3)(b), which formerly covered this subject, now provides merely that a deposition taken in the action may be read "to the extent that it is otherwise admissible under the law of this state." In other words, depositions taken in the same criminal action will be governed by P.C. 1345 and P.C. 1362 (5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §§66, 67), but depositions taken in a prior criminal action to which the defendant was a party will be governed by Ev.C. 1291. (See Law Rev. Com. Comments on Ev.C. 1290, 1291.)

(1) Deposition in Civil Case. C.C.P. 2025(u) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.620 in 2004 without substantive change.

Q. Former Testimony.

2. Former Proceeding.

d. Administrative or Arbitration Proceeding.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 263

[§ 263] Administrative or Arbitration Proceeding.

There is some authority for the use of testimony given at a former proceeding other than a trial before a judicial tribunal. (See 2 McCormick 5th, §305; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1373.) The prior statute was silent on this matter, but the Evidence Code covers two kinds of nonjudicial proceedings:

(a) "A proceeding to determine a controversy conducted by or under the supervision of an agency that has the power to determine such a controversy and is an agency of the United States or a public entity in the United States." (Ev.C. 1290(b).)

(b) An arbitration proceeding if the evidence of the former testimony is a verbatim transcript. (Ev.C. 1290(d).)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

Q. Former Testimony.

3. Parties.

a. Evidence Against Former Party.

1. In General.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 264

[§ 264] In General.

Ev.C. 1291 deals with former testimony of an unavailable witness offered against a person who was a party to the former proceeding. "For example, if a series of cases arises involving several plaintiffs and but one defendant, Section 1291 permits testimony given in the first trial to be used against the defendant in a later trial if the conditions of admissibility stated in the section are met." (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1291.)

Where the present opponent is the party who offered the testimony in the former trial, the party's previous direct and redirect examination of the witness ought to compensate for the deprivation of the right to cross-examine the witness. (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1291.) Accordingly, Ev.C. 1291(a)(1) authorizes introduction of former testimony "against a person who offered it in evidence in his own behalf on the former occasion or against the successor in interest of such person."

In People v. Salas (1976) 58 C.A.3d 460, 129 C.R. 871, defendant called witness T at the preliminary examination and developed facts harmful to the defense case, apparently to provide material for T's impeachment at the trial itself. When T later became unavailable as a witness, however, the prosecution was permitted to introduce the preliminary examination testimony. Held, this was proper, despite defendant's contention that his motive and interest in the preliminary examination testimony were different from those in examining the witness at trial. Ev.C. 1291(a) contains no requirement for similarity of interest and motive when the former testimony is being presented against the party who originally offered it. Furthermore, it would be speculation to ascribe to defense counsel any particular reason for calling T as a witness and, at the preliminary hearing, defense counsel conducted a searching, direct examination of T, including use of leading questions. (58 C.A.3d 469.) Under Ev.C. 1291(a)(1), a party's previous direct and redirect examination of the party's own witness is an adequate substitute for a present right to cross-examine the witness-declarant. Like Ev.C. 1291(a)(2) (infra, §265), Ev.C. 1291(a)(1) is constitutionally valid. (58 C.A.3d 469.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

Q. Former Testimony.

3. Parties.

a. Evidence Against Former Party.

2. Evidence Offered Against Opponent.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 265

[§ 265] Evidence Offered Against Opponent.

Ev.C. 1291(a)(2) deals with the situation where the present opponent is the party against whom the testimony was offered in the former trial, and "had the right and opportunity to cross-examine the declarant with an interest and motive similar to that which he has at the hearing."

The Commission explains the purpose and operation of this rule as follows: "Since the party has had his opportunity to cross-examine, the primary objection to hearsay evidence--lack of opportunity to cross-examine the declarant--is not applicable. On the other hand, paragraph (2) does not make the former testimony admissible where the party against whom it is offered did not have a similar interest and motive to cross-examine the declarant. The determination of similarity of interest and motive in cross-examination should be based on practical considerations and not merely on the similarity of the party's position in the two cases. For example, testimony contained in a deposition that was taken, but not offered in evidence at the trial, in a different action should be excluded if the judge determines that the deposition was taken for discovery purposes and that the party did not subject the witness to a thorough cross-examination because he sought to avoid a premature revelation of the weakness in the testimony of the witness or in the adverse party's case. In such a situation, the party's interest and motive for cross-examination on the previous occasion would have been substantially different from his present interest and motive." (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1291; see Wahlgren v. Coleco Industries (1984) 151 C.A.3d 543, 546, 547, 198 C.R. 715 [depositions in former trial were properly excluded where present defendant's interest and motive in cross-examination were not similar].)

In People v. Ogen (1985) 168 C.A.3d 611, 215 C.R. 16, defendant was charged with murder. At trial, the murder victim's preliminary hearing testimony at an earlier assault and rape prosecution of defendant was admitted to show defendant's intent and motive for the killing. Held, the evidence was admissible. Defendant's interest and motive were similar in both proceedings: "In both, the victim's testimony was adverse to Ogen's claim of innocence. Regardless of the specific defense involved, his primary motive was to undermine the victim's credibility and to exploit weaknesses in her testimony bearing on his culpability. The 68 transcript pages of cross-examination reveal close, methodical and penetrating questioning of the victim's characterization of Ogen's dogged pursuit of her and his histrionic displays of anger and hostility." (168 C.A.3d 617.) (See People v. Sul (1981) 122 C.A.3d 355, 367, 175 C.R. 893 [actual cross-examination need not have taken place as long as the opportunity existed]; People v. Sanders (1995) 11 C.4th 475, 525, 46 C.R.2d 751, 905 P.2d 420 [witness' testimony at suppression hearing was properly excluded at trial under Ev.C. 1291(a)(2), because prosecution did not have opportunity at hearing to cross-examine witness with same interest and motive it had at trial]; People v. Samayoa (1997) 15 C.4th 795, 850, 851, 64 C.R.2d 400, 938 P.2d 2 [in penalty phase of murder prosecution, preliminary hearing testimony of victim of prior rape and burglary committed by defendant was properly admitted, where victim was unavailable due to death, and defendant's motive and interest in cross-examining her at preliminary hearing were closely similar to his objectives at present trial]; People v. Jones (1998) 66 C.A.4th 760, 768, 78 C.R.2d 265 [although defendant was denied self-representation right at previous trial, testimony by now unavailable witnesses was admissible at retrial because constitutional defect was not directly related to effectiveness of cross-examination, which was conducted by appointed counsel].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See People v. Harris (2005) 37 C.4th 310, 333, 33 C.R.3d 509, 118 P.3d 545 [in capital murder case, trial judge did not err in admitting preliminary hearing testimony of witness who was subsequently murdered and therefore was unavailable to testify at trial, even if information about witness' drug dealing coming to light after his murder might have altered way defense counsel cross-examined him at hearing; "interest and motive" referred to in Ev.C. 1291(a)(2) simply need be similar, not identical].

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

Q. Former Testimony.

3. Parties.

b. Evidence Against Person Not Former Party.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 266

[§ 266] Evidence Against Person Not Former Party.

Ev.C. 1292(a) permits the introduction, in a civil action, of former testimony of an unavailable witness, given in a prior civil or criminal action, against a stranger to that prior action. "For example, if one occurrence gives rise to a series of cases involving one defendant and several plaintiffs, Section 1292 permits testimony given against the plaintiff in the first action to be used against a different plaintiff in a subsequent action if the conditions of admissibility stated in the section are met." (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1292; see 1958 A.S. 652; on inapplicability of exception in criminal case, see supra, §259.)

The conditions are stated in Ev.C. 1292(a)(3): "The issue is such that the party to the action or proceeding in which the former testimony was given had the right and opportunity to cross-examine the declarant with an interest and motive similar to that which the party against whom the testimony is offered has at the hearing." (See Wahlgren v. Coleco Industries (1984) 151 C.A.3d 543, 547, 198 C.R. 715 [depositions were properly excluded where party to former proceeding did not have similar interest]; Gatton v. A. P. Green Services (1998) 64 C.A.4th 688, 692, 693, 75 C.R.2d 523 [same].)

At first glance this is a radical step, for the party against whom the testimony is offered never had an opportunity either to examine or cross-examine the witness. But this is not a fundamental objection; hearsay exceptions authorize admission of statements by declarants never subject to any cross-examination. The principal justifications for a hearsay exception are the need for the evidence and its trustworthiness (see supra, §2), and these support the rule: "The trustworthiness of the former testimony is sufficiently guaranteed because the former adverse party had the right and opportunity to cross-examine the declarant with an interest and motive similar to that of the present adverse party. Although the party against whom the former testimony is offered did not himself have an opportunity to cross-examine the witness on the former occasion, it can be generally assumed that most prior cross-examination is adequate if the same stakes are involved. If the same stakes are not involved, the difference in interest or motivation would justify exclusion. Even where the prior cross-examination was inadequate, there is better reason here for providing a hearsay exception than there is for many of the presently recognized exceptions to the hearsay rule." (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1292.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Rufo v. Simpson (2001) 86 C.A.4th 573, 606, 607, 103 C.R.2d 492, citing the text [in wrongful death action arising from murder of defendant's wife, trial judge properly refused to permit defendant to present prior testimony given by now unavailable police officer in murder prosecution arising from same facts; officer's prior direct examination by prosecution in criminal case was no substitute for plaintiffs' right to cross-examine him in present case]; Byars v. SCME Mortg. Bankers (2003) 109 C.A.4th 1134, 1150, 135 C.R.2d 796 [in action by borrower against lender, trial judge properly excluded deposition testimony by expert witness, offered by plaintiff, from prior, similar case against different lender; as deponent was witness for defendant in earlier case, that defendant would not have had same incentive to cross-examine deponent as would defendant in present action]; O'Neill v. Novartis Consumer Health (2007) 147 C.A.4th 1388, 1403, 55 C.R.3d 551 [in products liability action against pharmaceutical manufacturer, testimony by two of defendant's experts in prior case against it, offered by plaintiffs to show that drug at issue in present case could cause strokes, was not admissible under Ev.C. 1292(a); prior case involved different drug and at that time defendant had motive to suggest that drug involved in present case might have been cause of injuries giving rise to prior case].

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

Q. Former Testimony.

4. Methods of Proof.

a. In General.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 267

[§ 267] In General.

In the usual case, the testimony of the witness will have been reported. It may then be offered either by introducing a transcript properly certified by the reporter (see C.C.P. 273(a)), or by placing the reporter on the stand to read his or her notes. (See People v. Stevenson (1978) 79 C.A.3d 976, 990, 145 C.R. 301 [improper to give each juror copy of the transcript to follow reading by reporter; unduly emphasizes testimony]; 28 Proof of Facts 2d 1 [foundation for offering deposition or other former testimony].) But the older cases established the rule that a transcript or reporter's notes are not essential; proof may be made by the oral testimony of a person present at the former trial, whose recollection (with or without notes to refresh it) is sufficient. (See People v. Murphy (1872) 45 C. 137, 145 [relatively impossible to give exact language of former testimony, substance is enough]; Meyer v. Foster (1905) 147 C. 166, 169, 81 P. 402; 2 McCormick 5th, §307.)

Even where a transcript is available, a witness may ordinarily give the substance of the former testimony. The former best evidence rule (replaced in 1998 by the Secondary Evidence Rule; see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Documentary Evidence, §31) was generally held to be inapplicable. (See 4 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1330; 23 So. Cal. L. Rev. 113; 11 A.L.R.2d 36; 28 Proof of Facts 2d 45.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

Q. Former Testimony.

4. Methods of Proof.

b. Videotape of Preliminary Examination.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 268

[§ 268] Videotape of Preliminary Examination.

In People v. Moran (1974) 39 C.A.3d 398, 114 C.R. 413, P, a prosecution witness in a murder case, was dying of cancer. He testified under immunity at defendant's preliminary examination, and his testimony was videotaped. At trial, after his death, the videotape was offered in evidence after an extensive foundation on the qualifications of the technicians and the procedures used. Held, the tape was properly admitted.

(a) No specific provisions of California law expressly authorize use of videotapes, but Ev.C. 250 (2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Documentary Evidence, §32) includes photographing and every other means of recording on a tangible thing any form of communication, e.g., words, pictures, sounds or symbols. Although videotape recording differs from ordinary recording methods in that an image is recorded electronically rather than photographically, with the liberal concept of a writing under the statute, the Legislature has recognized the widespread use of videotape in our society and its relevance to legal proceedings. (39 C.A.3d 407.)

(b) As to the alleged technical distortions and inaccurate transmission of the witness' demeanor, "the advantages and disadvantages of the 'filtering' effect of the medium fall equally on both sides. Therefore, its use is 'fair' and there is no inherent unfairness. ... Conceding that testimony through a television set differs from live testimony, the process does not significantly affect the flow of information to the jury. ... Videotape is sufficiently similar to live testimony to permit the jury to properly perform its function. Fair new procedures that facilitate proper factfinding are allowable, although not traditional. ... In any event, we do not comprehend defendant's contention that the tape is less valid or less reliable than the reading of the written transcript of the preliminary hearing." (39 C.A.3d 410.)

The court concluded by noting with approval the observation of a federal court that "video tape is a modern technique that better protects the rights of all concerned." (39 C.A.3d 411.) (See People v. Ware (1978) 78 C.A.3d 822, 827, 144 C.R. 354 [videotape was properly admitted under authority of Moran]; but see People v. Watkins (1996) 45 C.A.4th 485, 491, 492, 53 C.R.2d 13 [disagreeing with Ware to extent it suggests that videotape of conditional examination (5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §66) may be admitted at trial]; and see generally 25 Hastings L. J. 1017 [videotape in criminal proceedings]; 26 Hastings L. J. 975 [juror responses to prerecorded videotape trial presentations in California and Ohio]; 26 Hastings L. J. 999 [social and psychological concerns about videotaped trials]; 1 Western State L. Rev. 104 [videotape in drunk driving case]; 23 Am.Jur. Trials 95 [use of videotape in the preparation and trial of civil cases].) (On statutory authorization of videotape of sex victim's preliminary examination testimony, see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §23; on Ev.C. 1294, permitting, under specified conditions, admission of videotaped statement properly introduced as prior inconsistent statement at preliminary hearing or prior proceeding concerning same criminal matter, see supra, §158.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

Q. Former Testimony.

5. Objections.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 269

[§ 269] Objections.

(1) Objections to Form of Questions. The former testimony is admitted "subject to the same limitations and objections as though the declarant were testifying at the hearing." (Ev.C. 1291(b), 1292(b); see 2 McCormick 5th, §306; 40 A.L.R.4th 514 [availability of ordinary objections and exceptions where former testimony is used at subsequent trial].) But an obvious distinction is made. An opponent who was a party to the former proceeding either put the questions to his or her own witness or had an opportunity to object to questions put to the other party's witness. The opponent's failure to object to the form of the questions at that time constitutes a waiver of those objections, and they may not be raised at the new trial. (Ev.C. 1291(b)(1); 15 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 118.) If the opponent was not a former party, there was no waiver and proper objections can be made. (Ev.C. 1292(b).)

(2) Objections Based on Competency or Privilege. These are determined as of the time of the former proceeding. Hence, if grounds for the objection did not exist at that time, the objection cannot be made in the new proceeding. (Ev.C. 1291(b)(2), 1292(b).)

However, if grounds for the objection existed at the time of the former proceeding, the failure to object does not constitute a waiver. In People v. Lyons (1992) 10 C.A.4th 837, 13 C.R.2d 112, a prosecution witness was permitted to testify at the preliminary hearing over defendant's objection, under Ev.C. 702 (2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §46), that she lacked the ability to recall. At trial, the witness was disqualified, under Ev.C. 701 (2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §41), on the ground that she was incapable of appreciating her duty to tell the truth. However, her preliminary hearing testimony was admitted under Ev.C. 1291, i.e., her unavailability to testify, even though defendant objected on the ground that her inability to tell the truth also existed at the preliminary hearing. Held, admission of the preliminary hearing testimony was error.

(a) The record supports defendant's contention that the witness was incapable of telling the truth at the preliminary hearing. And no ruling was made on this issue, because the competency objection at the preliminary hearing was based on Ev.C. 702, not on Ev.C. 701. Hence, People v. Liddicoat (1981) 120 C.A.3d 512, 174 C.R. 649, relied on by the prosecution, is distinguishable; there, the objection at both the preliminary hearing and at trial was based on Ev.C. 701. (10 C.A.4th 844.)

(b) The prosecution's argument that defendant waived the Ev.C. 701 objection by not making it at the preliminary hearing is without merit. "[W]here the examination of a record indicates a witness is incompetent, it is manifestly unfair to affirm a conviction merely because his counsel failed to make the proper objection." (10 C.A.4th 844, citing People v. Burton (1961) 55 C.2d 328, 11 C.R. 65, 359 P.2d 433, 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §345.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

R. Judgments.

1. Judgment of Felony Conviction.
  - a. Traditional Rule of Exclusion.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 270

[§ 270] Traditional Rule of Exclusion.

Under certain circumstances, a judgment in a criminal case may be res judicata (i.e., a collateral estoppel) in a subsequent civil action involving an issue necessarily determined. (See Teitelbaum Furs v. Dominion Ins. Co. (1962) 58 C.2d 601, 605, 606, 25 C.R. 559, 375 P.2d 439; 36 So. Cal. L. Rev. 416; 10 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 942; 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Judgment, §332.)

If the conditions for application of the doctrine of collateral estoppel are not present, the judgment is nevertheless evidence of the facts determined. But it is hearsay--the statement of a jury or judge in a different proceeding. If based on a plea of guilty, it is, by reason of that plea, an admission. (See supra, §99.) But if it is the result of a contested trial on a plea of not guilty, the majority rule, previously followed in California, excludes it. (See *Marceau v. Travelers' Ins. Co. (1894) 101 C. 338, 344, 35 P. 856; Board of Education of Long Beach v. King (1947) 82 C.A.2d 857, 859, 187 P.2d 427; American Fire Protection Service v. ## CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

R. Judgments.

1. Judgment of Felony Conviction.
- b. Evidence Code and Federal Rules.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 271

[§ 271] Evidence Code and Federal Rules.

(1) Evidence Code. The Model Code of Evidence and the Uniform Rules of Evidence allow evidence of a judgment of felony conviction to come in. (See Model C., Rule 521, Comment; Unif. Rule 803(22); 2 McCormick 5th, §298; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1671a; 40 Cal. L. Rev. 225, 248; 1950 A.S. 825; 1957 A.S. 541.)

Ev.C. 1300 is in accord, but also covers a judgment based on a plea of nolo contendere: "Evidence of a final judgment adjudging a person guilty of a crime punishable as a felony is not made inadmissible by the hearsay rule when offered in a civil action to prove any fact essential to the judgment whether or not the judgment was based on a plea of nolo contendere."

The Comment states: "[T]he evidence involved is peculiarly reliable. The seriousness of the charge assures that the facts will be thoroughly litigated, and the fact that the judgment must be based upon a determination that there was no reasonable doubt concerning the defendant's guilt assures that the question of guilt will be thoroughly considered." (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1300; see People v. One 1964 Chevrolet Corvette Convertible (1967) 251 C.A.2d 424, 428, footnote 1, 59 C.R. 594, citing the text; Miller v. Superior Court (1985) 168 C.A.3d 376, 381, 214 C.R. 125; In re L.S. (1987) 189 C.A.3d 407, 414, 234 C.R. 508 [Ev.C. 1300 requires final judgment; hence, father's conviction of child molestation that was on appeal was improperly considered as evidence in dependency proceeding involving father's child].)

(2) Federal Rules of Evidence. F.R. Evid., Rule 803(22) states the exception but excludes a judgment based on a plea of nolo contendere: "Evidence of a final judgment, entered after a trial or upon a plea of guilty (but not upon a plea of nolo contendere), adjudging a person guilty of a crime punishable by death or imprisonment in excess of one year, to prove any fact essential to sustain the judgment, but not including, when offered by the Government in a criminal prosecution for purposes other than impeachment, judgments against persons other than the accused. The pendency of an appeal may be shown but does not affect admissibility." (See 4 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §472; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §1343 et seq.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

R. Judgments.

1. Judgment of Felony Conviction.

c. Scope of Statutory Rule.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 272

[§ 272] Scope of Statutory Rule.

Two limitations on the scope of this hearsay exception should be noted:

(1) It applies only to civil actions. In criminal prosecutions, a prior judgment rarely operates as a collateral estoppel against the defendant (see 1 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Defenses, §207), and the defendant's right of confrontation and fundamental objections of policy preclude its evidentiary use to prove any element of the crime charged. (See Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1300; on use of judgment to prove independent issue of prior conviction for purposes of increased penalties, see 3 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Punishment, §378.)

A judgment of acquittal in a criminal trial of a codefendant is necessarily an adjudication of some issues adversely to the prosecution. But it is neither a collateral estoppel nor evidence admissible on behalf of the remaining defendant on a retrial. (People v. Collins (1966) 242 C.A.2d 626, 634, 51 C.R. 604.)

(2) Only felony convictions come within the statute. The Model Code of Evidence went so far as to allow evidence of a misdemeanor conviction, but the Uniform Rules of Evidence rejected this innovation, and the Evidence Code followed the Uniform Rule, with this difference: The test is whether the crime was "punishable" as a felony, i.e., whether it comes within the class of felonies or felony-misdemeanors. Certain crimes are punishable either as felonies or misdemeanors, and as to those crimes the judgment of conviction is admissible even though the sentence is for the misdemeanor. (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1300; see 1 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Introduction to Crimes, §72; on inadmissible misdemeanor conviction, see Manes v. Wiggins (1967) 247 C.A.2d 756, 757, 56 C.R. 120, quoting the text [evidence of misdemeanor conviction for assault and battery inadmissible in later tort action for assault and battery]; Rousseau v. West Coast House Movers (1967) 256 C.A.2d 878, 888, 64 C.R. 655 [evidence of three convictions of plaintiff for misdemeanor drunk driving to show reason for not driving, contradicting his claim that injuries from accident prevented him; inadmissible].)

The rule against use of misdemeanor convictions was limited, without reference to Ev.C. 1300, in Leader v. California (1986) 182 C.A.3d 1079, 226 C.R. 207, 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §340, an action for assault and battery in which plaintiff alleged that defendants used excessive force in arresting him. While not disagreeing with the result in Manes v. Wiggins, supra, the Leader court held that the admissibility of a misdemeanor conviction for collateral estoppel purposes in a subsequent civil trial must be determined on a case-by-case basis. Upon satisfaction of the following conditions, the conviction should be admitted: (a) the conviction was for a serious offense, so that the defendant was motivated to litigate the charges fully; (b) a full and fair misdemeanor trial actually occurred; and (c) the issue on which the prior conviction is offered was of necessity decided in the criminal trial. (182 C.A.3d 1087.) Because all of these conditions were satisfied in plaintiff's case, his misdemeanor convictions for resisting arrest and battery of a police officer should have been admitted to collaterally estop him on issues decided against him in the criminal trial. (182 C.A.3d 1088.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

R. Judgments.

2. Judgment Against Person Entitled to Indemnity.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 273

[§ 273] Judgment Against Person Entitled to Indemnity.

(1) In General. Ev.C. 1301 permits a judgment debtor to introduce the underlying judgment in a subsequent action by the judgment debtor against others "to prove any fact which was essential to the judgment." Three kinds of subsequent actions by the judgment debtor are specified:

(a) To recover partial or total indemnity or exoneration for money paid or liability incurred because of the judgment. (Ev.C. 1301(a).)

(b) To enforce a warranty to protect the judgment debtor against the liability determined by the judgment. (Ev.C. 1301(b).)

(c) To recover damages for breach of warranty substantially the same as the warranty determined by the judgment to have been breached. (Ev.C. 1301(c).)

(2) Limitations. The principle is obviously sound, but its application may be quite limited:

(a) Normally, a defendant who is protected by a right of indemnity or warranty should give notice to the indemnitor or warrantor to come in and conduct or participate in the defense. The indemnitor or warrantor is thereafter bound by the judgment. (See C.C.P. 1912; C.C. 2778(5); Pezel v. Yerex (1922) 56 C.A. 304, 307, 205 P.475; Rest.2d, Judgments §§57, 58.)

(b) If the defendant fails to give the notice and thereby loses the benefit of the doctrine of res judicata, the defendant may still, under Ev.C. 1301, use the judgment as evidence of the liability to be indemnified, subject to the right of the indemnitor or warrantor, in the new action, to challenge it by contradictory evidence.

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

R. Judgments.

3. Judgment Determining Liability of Third Person.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 274

[§ 274] Judgment Determining Liability of Third Person.

When the defendant's liability or duty is based on the liability or duty of a third person, the statement of that third person is admissible against the defendant under Ev.C. 1224 (supra, §127).

Ev.C. 1302 supplements Ev.C. 1224 by making a similar exception for a judgment against the third person: "When the liability, obligation, or duty of a third person is in issue in a civil action, evidence of a final judgment" against the third person is admissible to prove that liability, obligation, or duty. (See Nordin v. Bank of America (1936) 11 C.A.2d 98, 100, 52 P.2d 1018.)

Ev.C. 1302 does not apply to judgments against an employee in a subsequent action against an employer based on respondeat superior. (See Markley v. Beagle (1967) 66 C.2d 951, 59 C.R. 809, 429 P.2d 129, supra, §128.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

S. Family History.

1. In General.

a. Necessity of Hearsay.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 275

[§ 275] Necessity of Hearsay.

Family history may, of course, be proved, as any other fact, by testimony of a witness with knowledge. (See Estate of Ross (1921) 187 C. 454, 467, 202 P. 641; 12 Proof of Facts 2d 459 [determination of inheritance rights]; 45 Proof of Facts 2d 631 [age]; on requirement of personal knowledge, see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §46.) Often, however, there is no available witness with personal knowledge of birth, death, marriage, descent, relationship, etc., and this essential information must be furnished through the medium of declarations, records, or reputation. The admissibility of hearsay of this type (and multiple hearsay, where the declarant, lacking personal knowledge, relies on family reputation) has long been recognized. The older term "pedigree," applied to these declarations, is being replaced by the more inclusive and accurate term "family history." (See generally Model C., Rule 524, Comment; 2 McCormick 5th, §322; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§1481 et seq., 1602; 29 Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §691; 2 Hastings L. J. 1; 31 A.L.R.2d 989.)

In Estate of Hartman (1910) 157 C. 206, 213, 107 P. 105, infra, §279, the court said of these declarations: "They are admitted from reasons of necessity, because otherwise it would frequently be impossible to prove the kinship of members of a family after those who knew the facts are dead. Their evidential value comes not from their being admissions against the interest of the person making them, but, as Wigmore points out, from 'the probability that the "natural effusions" ... of those who talk over family affairs when no special reason for bias or passion exists are fairly trustworthy.' " (See Estate of Flood (1933) 217 C. 763, 782, 21 P.2d 579, infra, §277; Estate of Nidever (1960) 181 C.A.2d 367, 372, 5 C.R. 343, infra, §293; Estate of Berg (1964) 225 C.A.2d 423, 431, 37 C.R. 538, citing the text.)

Usually, the declarations are offered in a "case of pedigree" or "genealogical controversy," i.e., a proceeding in which birth, marriage, relationship, etc., is directly in issue. And there is considerable early authority restricting admissibility of declarations to controversies of this sort. (See 2 Hastings L. J. 4.) The modern view, however, is that the declarations are admissible in any type of case in which the fact is relevant. (See Estate of Paulsen (1918) 179 C. 528, 532, 178 P. 143; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1503; 2 Hastings L. J. 4.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

S. Family History.

1. In General.

b. Evidence Code and Federal Rules.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 276

[§ 276] Evidence Code and Federal Rules.

(1) Evidence Code. The following Evidence Code provisions deal with the family history hearsay exceptions:

- (a) Ev.C. 1310, infra, §278 [statement concerning declarant's own family history].
- (b) Ev.C. 1311, infra, §§279, 280 [statement concerning family history of another].
- (c) Ev.C. 1312, infra, §282 [entries in family records and the like].
- (d) Ev.C. 1313, infra, §283 [reputation in family concerning family history].
- (e) Ev.C. 1314, infra, §284 [reputation in community concerning family history].
- (f) Ev.C. 1315, infra, §285 [church records concerning family history].
- (g) Ev.C. 1316, infra, §286 [marriage, baptismal, and similar certificates].

The former statute (C.C.P. 1870(4)) referred only to the declaration of a deceased person; Ev.C. 1310 and 1311 follow the modern view, making the declaration admissible if the declarant "is unavailable as a witness." (See Estate of Paulsen (1918) 179 C. 528, 178 P. 143 [declarations in Denmark]; 2 McCormick 5th, §322; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1481; on meaning of "unavailable witness," see supra, §18 et seq.)

(2) Federal Rules of Evidence. F.R. Evid., Rule 804(b)(4) covers the following: "(A) A statement concerning the declarant's own birth, adoption, marriage, divorce, legitimacy, relationship by blood, adoption, or marriage, ancestry, or other similar fact of personal or family history, even though declarant had no means of acquiring personal knowledge of the matter stated; or (B) a statement concerning the foregoing matters, and death also, of another person, if the declarant was related to the other by blood, adoption, or marriage or was so intimately associated with the other's family as to be likely to have accurate information concerning the matter declared." (See 4 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §504; 29 Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §691.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

S. Family History.

1. In General.

c. Facts of Family History.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 277

[§ 277] Facts of Family History.

(1) In General. "There is no definite or formal limitation as to the kind of fact that may be the subject of the statement. The general inquiry ... should be: Were the circumstances named in the statement such a marked item in the ordinary family history and so interesting to the family in common that statements about them in the family would be likely to be based on fairly accurate knowledge and to be sincerely uttered?" (Estate of Berg (1964) 225 C.A.2d 423, 431, 37 C.R. 538, quoting 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1502.)

Ev.C. 1310(a) and 1311(a) list the following: "birth, marriage, divorce, a parent and child relationship, relationship by blood or marriage, race, ancestry, or other similar fact" of family history.

(2) Fact of Birth, Death, Marriage, or Relationship. In Estate of Flood (1933) 217 C. 763, 767, 21 P.2d 579, petitioner, claiming as a pretermitted heir, sought to prove that she was the illegitimate daughter of the testator, "legitimated" by reception into the family. The testimony showed that the testator and his wife had taken the girl into their household; that the testator had addressed her as "daughter"; and that she was known as "Constance M. Flood." Held, these acts and declarations were admissible to show paternity as well as reception into the family. (See Estate of Paulsen (1918) 179 C. 528, 532, 178 P. 143 [to prove death of B in Denmark for purposes of special administration, cablegram and letters from B's sister and children admitted]; Lam Ong v. Pacific Motor Trucking Co. (1935) 10 C.A.2d 329, 331, 51 P.2d 1112 [decendent's declarations admitted to show relationship of heirs seeking damages for wrongful death]; Estate of Connors (1942) 53 C.A.2d 484, 487, 128 P.2d 200 [decendent's declaration to her sister that claimant was her illegitimate child]; Estate of Smith (1949) 33 C.2d 279, 282, 201 P.2d 539 [testator's declaration that he was divorced from respondent and that she was his "ex-wife"]; Estate of Monticelli (1951) 107 C.A.2d 90, 91, 236 P.2d 661 [testator's will gave legacy to "Antonia Cataldi (Mother)"; held equivalent to statement that Antonia was his mother, so that Antonia's other children would take under antilapse statute]; Estate of Stevenson (1992) 11 C.A.4th 852, 863, 14 C.R.2d 250 [decendent's intention to adopt stepchildren]; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1500 et seq.; 31 A.L.R.2d 989 [parentage].)

Even a "nonpedigree declaration" may be received, e.g., a statement by a decedent that he had no living relatives; this is, in effect, a declaration on death. (Estate of Friedman (1918) 178 C. 27, 35, 172 P. 140; Estate of Morgan (1928) 203 C. 569, 575, 576, 265 P. 241.)

(3) Place of Birth, Death, or Marriage. The place, as well as the fact of birth, death, or marriage, may be shown, by way of identification of a person or family. (Estate of Strong (1942) 54 C.A.2d 604, 608, 129 P.2d 493.)

In Estate of Berg, supra, the issue was whether decedent, remarried, had been divorced from his first wife. This could be resolved by an examination of the records in the places where he had lived. The trial judge accordingly allowed evidence of decedent's statement to his son of his previous places of residence. Held, this was proper.

"Where a man has deserted his family for an extended period of time and has not kept them informed of his movements, his declarations as to his subsequent places of residence may offer the only basis for the acquisition of information with respect to whether he has altered his family relationships by acts having legal consequences. ... The places in which a man has resided form an important part of his personal history and his declarations with respect thereto may ordinarily be assumed to have been sincere and trustworthy." (225 C.A.2d 432.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

S. Family History.

2. Declarations.

b. Declarant Related to Family.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 279

[§ 279] Declarant Related to Family.

(1) Reason for Foundation Requirement. Subject to the lack of trustworthiness restriction (infra, §281), "evidence of a statement concerning the birth, marriage, divorce, death, parent and child relationship, race, ancestry, relationship by blood or marriage, or other similar fact of the family history of a person other than the declarant" is admissible if the declarant is unavailable as a witness and "was related to the other by blood or marriage." (Ev.C. 1311(a).)

Where the declarant's own family history is the subject of the statement, the only condition to admission is the declarant's unavailability. (Ev.C. 1310(a), supra, §278.) But where the declaration concerns the family history of another, an additional foundation must be laid. It must be shown that the declarant is related to the family whose history is involved. The reason is that the knowledge requirement is dispensed with in pedigree declarations only because a member of or person related to the family is considered likely to be well informed on family matters. (See 2 McCormick 5th, §322; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1491; 2 Hastings L. J. 2.)

Thus, in Estate of Hartman (1910) 157 C. 206, 210, 107 P. 105, Annie Hartman Burns claimed a share in William Hartman's estate, as the daughter of the testator's brother, Peter Hartman. In addition to other evidence, she relied on Peter's declarations, first testifying that Peter was her father, thus establishing her relationship to the declarant, and then introducing declarations of Peter that he had a brother named William.

(2) Relationship by Birth or Marriage. The declaration is admissible if the declarant is related by "blood or marriage" to the person who is the subject of the declaration. (Ev.C. 1311(a).) This permits proof of declarations of any relatives, including persons not actually members of the immediate family. Thus, in Estate of Flood (1933) 217 C. 763, 782, 21 P.2d 579, the court held that declarations of relatives of the testator's wife, with whom petitioner had lived for a time, to the effect that she was the testator's daughter, were admissible, either on the theory that they were made by members of the testator's family connected by marriage, or as evidence of common reputation in the family in which petitioner had lived (infra, §283). (See Estate of Weis (1964) 224 C.A.2d 19, 25, 36 C.R. 266, citing the text; 2 Hastings L. J. 3.)

c. Declarant Intimately Associated With Family.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 280

[§ 280] Declarant Intimately Associated With Family.

The strict common law requirement of actual relationship excludes declarations of such well-informed persons as family housekeepers and doctors. The Uniform Rules of Evidence follow Wigmore's liberalizing suggestion in admitting the declarations of one intimately associated with the other's family. (Unif. Rule 804(b)(4); see 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§1486, 1487; 1952 A.S. 737; 15 A.L.R.2d 1412.)

Ev.C. 1311(a)(2) adopted the Uniform Rule: The statement is admissible if "[t]he declarant was otherwise so intimately associated with the other's family as to be likely to have had accurate information concerning the matter declared and made the statement (i) upon information received from the other or from a person related by blood or marriage to the other or (ii) upon repute in the other's family."

Under this provision, a family housekeeper, doctor, or close friend, included by the family in discussions of the subject, is a competent declarant. (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1311.)

Ev.C. 1310(b) and 1311(b) phrase it more generally: "Evidence of a statement is inadmissible under this section if the statement was made under circumstances such as to indicate its lack of trustworthiness." As the Law Revision Commission Comment to Ev.C. 1310 observes, this language "permits the judge to consider the declarant's motives to tell the truth as well as his reasons to deviate therefrom in determining whether the statement is sufficiently trustworthy to be admitted as evidence."

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

S. Family History.

3. Admissible Evidence.

a. Entries in Family Records.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 282

[§ 282] Entries in Family Records.

"Evidence of entries in family Bibles or other family books or charts, engravings on rings, family portraits, engravings on urns, crypts, or tombstones, and the like," is admissible when offered to prove "the birth, marriage, divorce, death, parent and child relationship, race, ancestry, relationship by blood or marriage, or other similar fact of the family history of a member of the family by blood or marriage." (Ev.C. 1312.)

F.R. Evid., Rule 803(13) is similar: "Statements of fact concerning personal or family history contained in family Bibles, genealogies, charts, engravings on rings, inscriptions on family portraits, engravings on urns, crypts, or tombstones, or the like." (See 4 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §463; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §1255 et seq.)

Entries of this type are admitted without an identified declarant on the theory that they are evidence of common reputation in the family. (See Model C., Rule 524, Comment, p. 287; People v. Ratz (1896) 115 C. 132, 134, 46 P. 915 ["The admissibility of the book did not depend upon proof of the handwriting or authorship of the entries"]; 2 *Hastings L. ## CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

S. Family History.

3. Admissible Evidence.

b. Reputation in Family.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 283

[§ 283] Reputation in Family.

It has been pointed out that even a specific declaration of pedigree is seldom based on personal knowledge, and that, like pedigree entries in family records, the declarations are simply evidence of what is reputed and believed to be true in the family. Accordingly, reputation in the family may be shown in proof of a fact of family history, even though it is multiple hearsay, because the determination of pedigree issues would be seriously hampered without it. (See Ev.C. 1313; Estate of Flood (1933) 217 C. 763, 783, 21 P.2d 579; Estate of Newman (1939) 34 C.A.2d 706, 712, 94 P.2d 356; Estate of Connors (1942) 53 C.A.2d 484, 487, 128 P.2d 200; Estate of Nidever (1960) 181 C.A.2d 367, 372, 5 C.R. 343, infra, §293; 2 Hastings L. J. 4; C.E.B., Effective Introduction of Evidence 2d, Chap. 25 [Family History: Statements, Reputation, and Records]; 2 Jefferson, California Evidence Benchbook 3d, §16.13 et seq.)

The former statute limited reputation to that which existed "previous to the controversy." The Evidence Code omits this restriction: "[I]t is unlikely that a family reputation on a matter of pedigree would be influenced by the existence of a controversy even though the declaration of an individual member of the family, covered in Sections 1310 and 1311, might be." (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1313.)

F.R. Evid., Rule 803(19), entitled Reputation Concerning Personal or Family History, makes admissible "[r]eputation among members of a person's family by blood, adoption, or marriage, or among a person's associates, or in the community, concerning a person's birth, adoption, marriage, divorce, death, legitimacy, relationship by blood, adoption, or marriage, ancestry, or other similar fact of personal or family history." ### III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

S. Family History.

3. Admissible Evidence.

c. Community Reputation.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 284

[§ 284] Community Reputation.

(1) Marriage. Former C.C.P. 1963(30) contained a presumption of marriage from proof of cohabitation and repute. Although the presumption has been eliminated, Ev.C. 1314 codifies what was in effect a hearsay exception, allowing evidence of "reputation in a community" to prove the fact of marriage "of a person resident in the community at the time of the reputation." (See Estate of Baldwin (1912) 162 C. 471, 488, 123 P. 267 [pointing out that this was the explanation of the disputable presumption]; Estate of Gill (1937) 23 C.A.2d 212, 214, 72 P.2d 771; People v. Vogel (1956) 46 C.2d 798, 805, 299 P.2d 850 [in bigamy prosecution, general repute admissible to prove marriage and honest belief in marriage]; People v. Bailey (1961) 55 C.2d 514, 517, 11 C.R. 543, 360 P.2d 39 [prosecution for obtaining welfare aid by false pretenses]; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1602; 26 Cal. L. Rev. 270; 10 So. Cal. L. Rev. 98; 2 Hastings L. J. 7; 11 Summary (9th), Husband and Wife, §50; and see F.R. Evid., Rule 803(19), supra, §283.)

However, In re Marriage of Sasson (1982) 129 C.A.3d 140, 180 C.R. 815, upholding the trial judge's exclusion of evidence of remarriage, expresses doubt as to the weight of such evidence: "[E]vidence of community repute, standing alone, must be accorded little significance where the solemnization of marriage is required; to do otherwise would be to render the necessity for solemnization a practical nullity." (129 C.A.3d 145.)

(2) Other Facts of Family History. Former statutory provisions were construed as excluding community reputation to prove other pedigree facts. (See Estate of Heaton (1902) 135 C. 385, 388, 67 P. 321.) Wigmore's suggestion was adopted by the Uniform Rules of Evidence, which admitted evidence of community reputation as to facts "which the judge finds likely to have been the subject of a reliable reputation in that community." (See 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1605; 15 A.L.R.2d 1432.) Ev.C. 1314 is not so broad; it permits evidence of community reputation to prove only four facts: marriage (supra), birth, divorce, or death. (See C.E.B., Effective Introduction of Evidence 2d, Chap. 25 [Family History: Statements, Reputation, and Records]; 2 Jefferson, California Evidence Benchbook 3d, §16.17 et seq.; for F.R. Evid., Rule 803(19), see supra, §283.)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

S. Family History.

3. Admissible Evidence.

d. Church Records.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 285

[§ 285] Church Records.

A church record could be an admissible business record under Ev.C. 1271 (supra, §228) to prove church activities known to the person making the entries. But to prove facts of family history not known to the church officer or employee though commonly recorded in its baptismal, confirmation, marriage or funeral records, a special hearsay exception is necessary. (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1315.)

"Evidence of a statement concerning a person's birth, marriage, divorce, death, parent and child relationship, race, ancestry, relationship by blood or marriage, or other similar fact of family history which is contained in a writing made as a record of a church, religious denomination, or religious society" is admissible under the following conditions:

(a) "The statement is contained in a writing made as a record of an act, condition, or event that would be admissible as evidence of such act, condition, or event" under Ev.C. 1271. (Ev.C. 1315(a).)

(b) "The statement is of a kind customarily recorded in connection with the act, condition, or event recorded in the writing." (Ev.C. 1315(b).) (See Estate of Bell (1926) 198 C. 32, 44, 243 P. 423 [baptismal records of church, and books of account of convent]; on use of baptismal certificate or other church record as documentary evidence to establish record of birth, see Health & Saf.C. 102580.)

F.R. Evid., Rule 803(11) is similar: "Statement of births, marriages, divorces, deaths, legitimacy, ancestry, relationship by blood or marriage, or similar facts of personal or family history, contained in a regularly kept record of a religious organization." (See 4 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §461; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §1282.)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

S. Family History.

3. Admissible Evidence.

e. Marriage, Baptismal, and Similar Certificates.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 286

[§ 286] Marriage, Baptismal, and Similar Certificates.

Ev.C. 1316 is broader than former C.C.P. 1919a, which covered only church records, and the original Uniform Rules of Evidence, which contained a provision covering only marriage certificates. Ev.C. 1316 provides for admission of a statement on family history (birth, marriage, divorce, death, parent and child relationship, race, ancestry, relationship by blood or marriage, or other similar fact) under the following conditions:

- (1) The statement "is contained in a certificate that the maker thereof performed a marriage or other ceremony or administered a sacrament."
- (2) "The maker was a clergyman, civil officer, or other person authorized to perform the acts reported in the certificate by law or by the rules, regulations, or requirements of a church, religious denomination, or religious society."
- (3) "The certificate was issued by the maker at the time and place of the ceremony or sacrament or within a reasonable time thereafter."

F.R. Evid., Rule 803(12) reads as follows: "Statements of fact contained in a certificate that the maker performed a marriage or other ceremony or administered a sacrament, made by a clergyman, public official, or other person authorized by the rules or practices of a religious organization or by law to perform the act certified, and purporting to have been issued at the time of the act or within a reasonable time thereafter." ## CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

T. Reputation.

1. Community History.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 287

[§ 287] Community History.

(1) Nature and Scope of Exception. Common (community) reputation is admitted on certain subjects as to which community discussion would be likely to produce an accurate general opinion. There is some conflict as to the scope of the exception, and as to the requirement in many jurisdictions that the reputation be "ancient," e.g., going back to a former generation or 30 years. (See Jordan v. Worthen (1977) 68 C.A.3d 310, 318, 137 C.R. 282 [use of this evidence "is of doubtful validity where private rights are concerned"]; 2 McCormick 5th, §322; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1580 et seq.)

(2) Evidence Code. "Evidence of reputation in a community" is admissible if the reputation concerns "an event of general history of the community or of the state or nation of which the community is a part and the event was of importance to the community." (Ev.C. 1320.) (See C.E.B., Effective Introduction of Evidence 2d, Chap. 18.)

The Evidence Code dropped the former 30-year-old limitation: "The important question would seem to be whether a community reputation on the matter involved exists; its age would appear to go more to its venerability than to its truth. Nor is it necessary to include in Section 1320 the requirement that the reputation existed previous to controversy. It is unlikely that a community reputation respecting an event of general history would be influenced by the existence of a controversy." (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1320.)

(3) Federal Rules of Evidence. F.R. Evid., Rule 803(20) makes admissible "[r]eputation in a community, arising before the controversy, as to boundaries of or customs affecting lands in the community, and reputation as to events of general history important to the community or State or nation in which located." (See 4 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §470.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

T. Reputation.

2. Public Interest in Property.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 288

[§ 288] Public Interest in Property.

"Evidence of reputation in a community" is admissible if it concerns "the interest of the public in property in the community." (Ev.C. 1321.) But title to property cannot be so proved. (Simons v. Inyo Cerro Gordo Mining & Power Co. (1920) 48 C.A. 524, 531, 192 P. 144; for discussion of similar provisions in other jurisdictions, see 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1626.)

As in the exception for community history (supra, §287), the 30-year-old limitation is abandoned, but another limitation is added: The reputation must have arisen before there was a "controversy" concerning the matter. (Ev.C. 1321.)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

T. Reputation.

3. Boundary or Custom Affecting Land.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 289

[§ 289] Boundary or Custom Affecting Land.

"Evidence of reputation in a community" is admissible if it concerns "boundaries of, or customs affecting, land in the community." (Ev.C. 1322.) (See F.R. Evid., Rule 803(20), supra, §287; Muller v. Southern Pac. Branch Ry. Co. (1890) 83 C. 240, 242, 23 P. 265; Ames v. Empire Star Mines Co. (1941) 17 C.2d 213, 224, 110 P.2d 13 [original location of mine]; 2 McCormick 5th, §322; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1587; 79 A.L.R.4th 1044 [admissibility under Unif. Rule 803(20), and similar formulations].)

As with the exception for community reputation concerning public interest in property (supra, §288), the reputation as to boundaries or customs must have arisen "before controversy." (Ev.C. 1322.)

4. Character.

[§ 290] Character.

When character of a party or a witness is relevant (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §38 et seq.), it may be proved in several ways (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §43). One of the methods of proof is by "common" or community reputation. "Evidence of a person's general reputation with reference to his character or a trait of his character at a relevant time in the community in which he then resided or in a group with which he then habitually associated" is admissible. (Ev.C. 1324.) (On impeachment by evidence of reputation, see 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §288 et seq.)

F.R. Evid., Rule 803(21) is similar: "Reputation of a person's character among associates or in the community." (See 4 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §471.)

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

U. Statement Concerning Boundary.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 291

[§ 291] Statement Concerning Boundary.

Ev.C. 1323 codifies a case law exception making admissible "[e]vidence of a statement concerning the boundary of land." (See Morcom v. Baiersky (1911) 16 C.A. 480, 117 P. 560 [surveyor's map]; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1563.) Three conditions are specified:

- (1) The declarant must be unavailable as a witness.
- (2) The declarant must have had sufficient knowledge of the subject.
- (3) The statement is not admissible if made under circumstances indicating lack of trustworthiness.

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

V. Recitals in Dispositive Instruments.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 292

[§ 292] Recitals in Dispositive Instruments.

"Evidence of a statement contained in a deed of conveyance or a will or other writing purporting to affect an interest in real or personal property" is admissible if (1) the matter stated "was relevant to the purpose of the writing," and (2) the matter stated "would be relevant to an issue as to an interest in the property." (Ev.C. 1330(a), (b).)

No limitation relating to age is imposed: "There is a sufficient likelihood that the statements made in a dispositive document, when related to the purpose of the document, will be true to warrant the admissibility of such documents without regard to their age." (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1330.) But another condition is specified: that "the dealings with the property since the statement was made have not been inconsistent with the truth of the statement." (Ev.C. 1330(c).)

F.R. Evid., Rule 803(15) is similar. It provides for admission of a "statement contained in a document purporting to establish or affect an interest in property if the matter stated was relevant to the purpose of the document, unless dealings with the property since the document was made have been inconsistent with the truth of the statement or the purport of the document." (See 4 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §465; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §§1244, 1249.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

W. Recitals in Ancient Writings.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 293

[§ 293] Recitals in Ancient Writings.

(1) Former Law. California law formerly covered ancient documents (more than 30 years old) by a statutory presumption (former C.C.P. 1963(34)). It was clear that this dispensed with authentication of the document by presuming its genuineness (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Burden of Proof and Presumptions, §80), but whether it also overcame the hearsay rule so as to give evidentiary effect to its recitals was uncertain. (See Gwin v. Calegaris (1903) 139 C. 384, 389, 73 P. 851 [age merely establishes genuineness, does not import verity to recitals]; cf. Kirkpatrick v. Tapo Oil Co. (1956) 144 C.A.2d 404, 411, 301 P.2d 274 ["Ancient documents would have no effect or potency as evidence unless they served to import verity to the facts written therein"]; Estate of Nidever (1960) 181 C.A.2d 367, 376, 5 C.R. 343 [following Kirkpatrick]; Devereaux v. Frazier Mountain Park & Fisheries Co. (1967) 248 C.A.2d 323, 331, 56 C.R. 345 [following Kirkpatrick and Nidever]; 2 McCormick 5th, §323.)

(2) Evidence Code. Ev.C. 1331 resolved the conflict by making a hearsay exception for a statement "contained in a writing more than 30 years old." But it retained the requirement of the old presumption statute, sometimes ignored in the cases, that "the statement has been since generally acted upon as true by persons having an interest in the matter." The Comment states: "The age of a document alone is not a sufficient guarantee of the trustworthiness of a statement contained therein to warrant the admission of the statement into evidence." (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1331; see C.E.B., Effective Introduction of Evidence 2d, Chap. 21 [Dispositive Instruments and Ancient Writings]; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1573a [discussing California statute]; 39 Santa Clara L. Rev. 719 [applicability of rule against multiple hearsay to statements in ancient documents]; 50 Proof of Facts 2d 321 [Ancient Documents]; 46 A.L.R.2d 1318 [ancient maps and the like].)

(3) Federal Rules of Evidence. The federal time period is shorter: F.R. Evid., Rule 803(16), provides for admission of "[s]tatements in a document in existence twenty years or more the authenticity of which is established." (See 4 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §466; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §§1211, 1253; 63 A.L.R.5th 331 [Unif. Rule 803(16)].)

(4) No-Controversy Requirement Inapplicable. There is no requirement that the recitals have been made "ante litem motam," i.e., before a controversy. Thus, in Estate of Nidever, supra, the issue was whether Joseph was legally married to Anna after his divorce from Hester. The trial judge admitted declarations in writing by Anna and by Hester, each claiming a pension from the United States as widow of Joseph. Appellants contended that, because a controversy already existed between them (supra, §281), the declarations were not admissible under the family history exception as it then read. However, they were held admissible as ancient documents (made about 1880), not subject to the controversy limitation. (181 C.A.2d 377.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

X. Commercial and Similar Lists.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 294

[§ 294] Commercial and Similar Lists.

"Evidence of a statement, other than an opinion, contained in a tabulation, list, directory, register, or other published compilation" is admissible if "the compilation is generally used and relied upon as accurate in the course of a business as defined in Section 1270." (Ev.C. 1340.) (On Ev.C. 1270, see supra, §228.)

F.R. Evid., Rule 803(17) is similar, providing for admission of "[m]arket quotations, tabulations, lists, directories, or other published compilations, generally used and relied upon by the public or by persons in particular occupations." (See 4 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §467; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §1429.)

The importance of the statutory condition of reliability is pointed out in Miller v. Modern Business Center (1983) 147 C.A.3d 632, 636, 195 C.R. 279: "Commercial lists and other compilations often derive different types of information from different sources. The same publication may assemble some classes of information from reliable sources yet have to look to less dependable sources for other data. Businesses thus may have learned to place great faith in some portions of a publication but to approach other sections with great skepticism."

The following are illustrative of such publications:

(1) Market reports in trade journals. "Whenever the prevailing price or value of any goods regularly bought and sold in any established commodity market is in issue, reports in official publications or trade journals or in newspapers or periodicals of general circulation published as the reports of such market shall be admissible in evidence. The circumstances of the preparation of such a report may be shown to affect its weight but not its admissibility." (U.C.C. 2724; see 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1704; 7 A.L.R.4th 638 [professional directories].)

(2) Mortality and annuity tables. In a wrongful death action, mortality tables of life insurance companies may be used to show the life expectancy of a decedent in years, and annuity tables may be used to determine the present value of prospective pecuniary loss. (See Christiansen v. Hollings (1941) 44 C.A.2d 332, 340, 112 P.2d 723; Emery v. Southern Calif. Gas Co. (1946) 72 C.A.2d 821, 824, 165 P.2d 695; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1698; 19 So. Cal. L. Rev. 451; 7 Proof of Facts 220; 79 A.L.R.2d 275 [testimony of actuary or mathematician as to present value of loss or impairment of injured person's general earning capacity]; BAJI (8th ed.), No. 14.69 [life expectancy instruction]; BAJI (8th ed.), No. 14.70 [present value instruction]; BAJI (8th ed.), Appendix A [life expectancy table], Appendix B [present value table].)

(3) Ingredients listed on product label. In re Michael G. (1993) 19 C.A.4th 1674, 24 C.R.2d 260, was a juvenile court proceeding under Welf.C. 602 in which it was alleged that the minor had possessed a substance containing toluene with the intent to inhale for the purpose of intoxication in violation of P.C. 381(a) (see 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Public Peace and Welfare, §79). The spray paint can and other items seized from the minor were not chemically analyzed, but the label on the can stated that toluene was an ingredient. The trial judge took judicial notice of the fact that the public relies on the dangers and antidotes listed on a can label, and admitted the label into evidence under Ev.C. 1340. Held, affirmed. A label listing a dangerous substance is inherently trustworthy, because a manufacturer would have no interest in proclaiming that the product contains a dangerous substance if it does not. Thus, the trial judge was entitled to take judicial notice of public reliance on such labels and to conclude that the label was generally used and relied on as accurate in the course of a business within the meaning of the hearsay exception contained in Ev.C. 1340. (19 C.A.4th 1678.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

Y. Treatises, Maps, and Charts.

2. Medical Texts.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 296

[§ 296] Medical Texts.

(1) In General. The broad category of "books of science" could include medical books. The original Uniform Rules of Evidence allowed the introduction of a "published treatise" on "a subject of ... science," if the judge took judicial notice, or an expert witness testified, that it is a reliable authority. This rule was expected to overcome the objection to introducing medical works. (See 2 McCormick 5th, §321; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1690.)

F.R. Evid., Rule 803(18) also supports admissibility. It provides for admission, "[t]o the extent called to the attention of an expert witness upon cross-examination or relied upon by the expert witness in direct examination," of statements in "published treatises, periodicals, or pamphlets on a subject of history, medicine, or other science or art, established as a reliable authority by the testimony or admission of the witness or by other expert testimony or by judicial notice." Statements that are admitted "may be read into evidence but may not be received as exhibits." (See 4 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §468; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §§1416, 1417.)

(2) Evidence Code. The objection was repeatedly declared in negligence cases in California and elsewhere that medical works are controversial statements of the author and therefore undesirable hearsay. (See Gallagher v. Market Street Ry. Co. (1885) 67 C. 13, 15, 6 P. 869; People v. Conrad (1973) 31 C.A.3d 308, 321, footnote 9, 107 C.R. 421, [exclusion of Physicians' Desk Reference book to show uses and side effects of drugs administered to defendant was proper]; Intoximeters v. Younger (1975) 53 C.A.3d 262, 272, 125 C.R. 864, quoting the text [rejected evidence consisted of hearsay writings found in medical journals; "Experience has shown that isolated reports of this nature are as often as not rebutted by the opinions and experiences of other writers, and that they are unreliable as proof"]; 12 So. Cal. L. Rev. 424; 23 So. Cal. L. Rev. 403; 2 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 252; 9 Stanf. L. Rev. 742; 72 A.L.R.2d 931 [counsel's right, in argument, to read medical or other text to jury]; 84 A.L.R.2d 1338 [medical book or treatise as independent evidence].)

By rejecting the former Uniform Rule and restating the former statute in Ev.C. 1341 (supra, §295), the Legislature retained the exclusionary rule. But a 1997 addition to Ev.C. 721, on the cross-examination of expert witnesses, brought the California approach into harmony with that of F.R. Evid., Rule 803(18), supra. (See 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §255; on expert's indirect use of medical texts in reaching opinion on which expert testifies, see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Opinion Evidence, §34.)

CHAPTER VI - Hearsay

III. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

Z. Affidavits.

1 Witkin Cal. Evid. Hearsay § 297

[§ 297] Affidavits.

(1) Affidavit as Hearsay. In the absence of statutory permission, an affidavit is not competent evidence; though made under oath, it is hearsay because there has been no opportunity to cross-examine the affiant. (See C.C.P. 2003 [defining affidavit]; Fewel v. Fewel (1943) 23 C.2d 431, 438, 144 P.2d 592; Moon v. Moon (1944) 62 C.A.2d 185, 188, 144 P.2d 596; Estate of Fraysher (1956) 47 C.2d 131, 135, 301 P.2d 848 [rule stated, but no error where admitted by consent or without objection]; People v. Dickinson (1976) 59 C.A.3d 314, 319, 130 C.R. 561; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourne Rev.) §1709.)

(2) Statutory Authorization. Because affidavits are admissible only in particular situations under express statutory authorization, no general hearsay exception for them was stated in the Evidence Code. The existing statutes remain, and Ev.C. 1205 (supra, §2) recognizes their continued validity. The following are the principal situations:

(a) To verify a pleading or a paper in a special proceeding. (C.C.P. 2009.) But this is no longer essential; an unsworn, unnotarized verification is now permissible under C.C.P. 446. (See 4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §423.)

(b) To prove the service of a summons, notice, or other paper in an action or special proceeding. (C.C.P. 2009; see Conservatorship of Jones (1986) 188 C.A.3d 306, 309, 310, 232 C.R. 600, citing the text [affidavit as proof of service of citation and petition for conservatorship].)

(c) To obtain a provisional remedy, the examination of a witness, or a stay of proceedings. (C.C.P. 2009; see 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Provisional Remedies, §2.)

(d) Upon a motion. (C.C.P. 2009; see 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, §39.)

(e) In any uncontested proceeding to establish a record of birth. (C.C.P. 2009; see Health & Saf.C. 103450 et seq.)

(f) In any other case expressly permitted by other provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. (C.C.P. 2009.)

(g) In an application for a default judgment, in the discretion of the court. (C.C.P. 585(d); see 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, §147.)

(h) In economic litigation cases, as prepared testimony. (C.C.P. 98; see 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Courts, §266.)

(i) In an uncontested probate proceeding. (Prob.C. 1022; see Prob.C. 210(a) [establishment of fact of death]; Prob.C. 8220 [evidence of subscribing witnesses]; 12 Summary (9th), Wills and Probate, §§93, 361; and see Estate of Fraysher, supra [no statutory authority for use in contested proceeding for settlement of account].)

(j) In a criminal trial, to show, by means of a nurse's or laboratory technologist's affidavit, the technique used in taking blood samples. (Ev.C. 712; see 10 Pacific L. J. 435.)

(k) In administrative proceedings. (Govt.C. 11514, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §69.)

(3) Administrative Mandamus Proceedings. The use of affidavits as evidence in administrative proceedings is authorized by statute (Govt.C. 11514, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §69). C.C.P. 1094.5, providing for judicial review of agency decisions by administrative mandamus (see 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Extraordinary Writs, §262), authorizes the court to admit evidence that "could not have been produced or which was improperly excluded" at the administrative hearing. (C.C.P. 1094.5(e).) In Windigo Mills v. Unemp. Ins. App. Bd. (1979) 92 C.A.3d 586, 598, 155 C.R. 63, the court said: "If an affidavit should be wrongly excluded at the administrative hearing, it would be admissible in the superior court. Similarly, if by the exercise of due diligence a party was unable to present evidence at the administrative hearing which could have been admitted by way of affidavit, he should be permitted to introduce the same evidence in the superior court by affidavit. ... We conclude therefore that Code of Civil Procedure section 1094.5, subdivision (e) constitutes statutory authority for the use of affidavits as direct evidence at administrative mandamus hearings in the superior court, subject of course, to the rules governing the right of cross-examination and to the prohibition against double hearsay." (92 C.A.3d 598.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Statutory Authorization. On fee for taking affidavit, see Govt.C. 70626.(d) Upon a motion: Cf. Elkins v. McGrath (2005) 128 C.A.4th 1093, 1107, 27 C.R.3d 741, citing the text [although declaration presented by water agency in support of its summary judgment motion would have been admissible in and of itself, it included two further levels of hearsay (attachment that was not incorporated into declaration, and description of "amount owed" derived from bills for which no foundation had been laid), and thus hearsay objection was properly sustained].

CHAPTER VII - Demonstrative, Experimental, and Scientific Evidence

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES A. Definitions and Classification.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 1

[§ 1] Definitions and Classification.

(1) Demonstrative or Real Evidence. The statutory definition of "evidence" covers "material objects, or other things presented to the senses." (Ev.C. 140.) And the Law Revision Commission Comment to the statute points out that this includes "sights (such as a jury view or the appearance of a person exhibited to a jury), sounds (such as the sound of a voice demonstrated for a jury), and any other thing that may be presented as a basis of proof."

This kind of evidence is commonly termed "demonstrative evidence" or "real evidence." It usually consists of physical objects such as clothing, weapons, machines, photographs, or models, introduced for examination by the judge and jury. Its evidentiary value lies in considerable part in demonstration of matters that are readily perceived by the senses. (See infra, §3 et seq.)

Former C.C.P. 1954 contained an express declaration of admissibility of relevant objects, in the court's discretion. In view of the definition in Ev.C. 140, the relevancy rules of Ev.C. 210 and 351, and the discretion rule of Ev.C. 352, C.C.P. 1954 was deemed superfluous and was not restated.

(2) Experimental Evidence. This is evidence of the result of an experiment conducted either out of court or in the courtroom, under conditions similar to those that gave rise to the controverted issue, and offered as circumstantial evidence on that issue. (See infra, §35 et seq.)

(3) Scientific Evidence. This is a nontechnical term that refers loosely to evidence produced by expert scientific techniques such as experiments and chemical and other tests. (See infra, §§35 et seq., 41 et seq.)

(4) Practice Works and Commentary. The use of demonstrative, experimental, and scientific evidence has expanded enormously in recent years, and a considerable body of literature deals with the techniques. (See generally 2 McCormick 5th, §212 et seq.; 4 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1150 et seq.; 3 Wharton, Crim. Evidence (14th ed.), §585 et seq.; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §934 et seq.; C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Trial, Chap. 7 [exhibits and demonstrations].)

The U.C. Davis Law Review, Volume 25, No. 4 (Summer 1992), contains a comprehensive analysis of this subject under the title "The Derivative Relevance of Demonstrative Evidence: Charting Its Proper Evidentiary Status." (25 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 957.)

The article covers the subject under the following headings:

(a) The Nature of Demonstrative Evidence. (25 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 967.)

(b) The Disjunctive History of Demonstrative Evidence. (25 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 986.)

(c) Modifying the Rules of Relevancy. (25 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 1018.)

The article concludes with a proposed revision of F.R. Evid., Rule 401 (definition of relevant evidence; see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §4) and the Advisory Committee's Note. (25 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 1023.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

CHAPTER VII - Demonstrative, Experimental, and Scientific Evidence

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES

B. Relation to Rules of Evidence.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 2

[§ 2] Relation to Rules of Evidence.

The lumping together of demonstrative and scientific evidence in this chapter serves a practical purpose, for a great deal of demonstrative evidence is scientific in nature, and much scientific evidence is presented by way of demonstration. But this kind of evidence is not governed by a distinct set of rules; the usual rules apply in the following manner:

(1) Relevancy of Circumstantial Evidence. In a few situations (e.g., exhibition of a person's body in a personal injury case, infra, §33), demonstrative evidence is direct. But in most cases, the objects are introduced as circumstantial evidence or as illustrative of testimony, and are subject to the usual tests of relevancy, and to the objections of undue prejudice and undue consumption of time. (See 2 McCormick 5th, §212; 4 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§1151, 1154, 1157, 1158; 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §§17 et seq., 26.)

(2) Opinion Rule. Evidence of experiments or scientific tests is usually produced and offered in court by an expert witness, whose qualifications and testimony are subject to the rules relating to examination of experts. (See 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Opinion Evidence, §38 et seq.; 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §189 et seq.)

(3) Knowledge Requirement. Where an expert relies on facts in reaching an opinion, the expert's testimony must show knowledge of those facts. (See 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Opinion Evidence, §31.)

(4) Evidence Illegally Obtained. Demonstrative evidence obtained by illegal search and seizure (see 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, §1 et seq.) or by brutal body examination (2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §413 et seq.) will be excluded. But the privilege against self-incrimination does not apply to compulsory production of nontestimonial real evidence. (See 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §385 et seq.) Nor does the Miranda rule apply. (See People v. Graves (1966) 64 C.2d 208, 210, 49 C.R. 386, 411 P.2d 114, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §387.)

(5) General Acceptance of Scientific Principle. Before expert testimony may be offered about a scientific technique or test, there must be a preliminary showing of its general acceptance in the relevant scientific community. (See infra, §42 et seq.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Relevancy of Circumstantial Evidence. See 2 McCormick 6th, §212.

CHAPTER VII - Demonstrative, Experimental, and Scientific Evidence

II. REAL OR DEMONSTRATIVE EVIDENCE

A. Admission of Relevant Objects.

1. General Rule.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 3

[§ 3] General Rule.

"Material objects, or other things presented to the senses," are admissible. (Ev.C. 140, supra, §1.) (See generally 2 McCormick 5th, §212; 4 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1152; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §936 et seq.; 68 A.L.R.2d 903 [clothing of deceased in homicide case]; 95 A.L.R.2d 681 [samples of article or substance of which quality or condition is involved in litigation].)

Most of the California cases deal with criminal prosecutions. And, although the courts occasionally explain the admissibility of demonstrative evidence in terms of the "res gestae" rule (see People v. Lisenba (1939) 14 C.2d 403, 412, 94 P.2d 569), the test is the same as that for circumstantial evidence generally, namely, relevancy: The object must be connected with the issues. (See People v. McCall (1935) 10 C.A.2d 503, 505, 52 P.2d 500, infra, §7; People v. Riser (1956) 47 C.2d 566, 577, 305 P.2d 1, infra, §7; supra, §2.)

A. Admission of Relevant Objects.

2. Illustrations.

a. Instruments Used To Commit Crimes.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 4

[§ 4] Instruments Used To Commit Crimes.

(1) Weapons. Numerous cases hold that evidence relating to a weapon used to commit a crime is relevant:

People v. Peete (1921) 54 C.A. 333, 347, 202 P. 51 [revolver and cartridges, one empty, of about same caliber as that probably inflicting fatal wound, and found in defendant's room after killing].

People v. Bannon (1922) 59 C.A. 50, 56, 209 P. 1029 [bank passbook, taken from body of deceased, to show course and direction of bullet that had pierced it].

People v. Radovich (1932) 122 C.A. 176, 180, 9 P.2d 542 [gun found in defendant's trunk, shown to be similar to one used in commission of crime].

People v. Trujillo (1948) 32 C.2d 105, 115, 194 P.2d 681 [hammer with initials of defendant and other tools found near body of deceased whose head and face were severely lacerated].

People v. Player (1958) 161 C.A.2d 360, 361, 327 P.2d 83 [rape; pocket knife found on defendant, prosecutrix testified that it looked very similar to knife used in threatening her].

People v. Tahl (1967) 65 C.2d 719, 741, 56 C.R. 318, 423 P.2d 246 [sap (bludgeoning device), related to attack on murder victim by circumstantial evidence].

People v. Spencer (1972) 22 C.A.3d 786, 798, 99 C.R. 681 ["weapon found in defendant's possession when he is arrested, but not identified as the one used in the commission of the underlying offense, can properly be admitted on the issue of the minimum penalty"].

People v. DeVaney (1973) 33 C.A.3d 630, 635, 109 C.R. 276 [prosecution's evidence was circumstantial as to exact weapon used in robbery; three handguns connected with defendant were properly admitted "as an implement by means of which it is likely that a crime was committed"].

In People v. Rinegold (1970) 13 C.A.3d 711, 92 C.R. 12, a witness testified that he saw defendant place a revolver in a knapsack the day before the victim was shot. There was no showing that the weapon seen was the one that had been fired, and no weapon was placed in evidence. Held, admission of this testimony was proper. Where the prosecution's evidence is circumstantial, an implement likely to have been used is admissible if connected with the defendant; testimony to that effect is similarly admissible. (13 C.A.3d 720, restating the distinction made in People v. Riser (1956) 47 C.2d 566, 305 P.2d 1, infra, §7.)

(2) Other Instruments. Courts have held that the following other types of instruments of a crime are relevant evidence:

People v. Stone (1949) 89 C.A.2d 853, 863, 873, 202 P.2d 333 [conspiracy to commit abortion; caustic soap and surgical instruments taken from possession of coconspirator].

People v. Wilson (1965) 238 C.A.2d 447, 461, 48 C.R. 55 [plastic strips used by burglars to slip lock on door].

People v. Darling (1989) 210 C.A.3d 910, 912, 258 C.R. 588 [screwdriver carried by burglar, who was caught on premises holding stolen items, was relevant to rebut his argument that he was too drunk to form specific intent to commit larceny or felony].

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Weapons. See People v. Cox (2003) 30 C.4th 916, 956, 957, 135 C.R.2d 272, 70 P.3d 277 [in capital murder case, admission of evidence that defendant kept guns in his car was proper, even though cause of death of the three victims was unknown, where guns were possible murder weapons or could have been used to coerce victims into defendant's car or otherwise subdue them]; People v. Roldan (2005) 35 C.4th 646, 709, 27 C.R.3d 360, 110 P.3d 289 [in capital murder case, admission of 2 Uzi-like weapons was proper even though they were not weapons used by defendant; foundation was laid to establish that one Uzi was substantially similar to actual weapon used by defendant, and evidence would have helped jury understand prosecution's theory that defendant's weapon had jammed, making metal-on-metal clicking sound and causing him to manually eject live rounds later found by police]; People v. Prince (2007) 40 C.4th 1179, 1248, 57 C.R.3d 543, 156 P.3d 1015 [in murder prosecution, it was not error to admit evidence of knives found in defendant's car when he was arrested; although they were apparently not used in murders, it was reasonable to conclude that they were used in one or more of charged burglaries or attempted burglaries that occurred subsequent to murders; distinguishing People v. Riser (1956) 47 C.2d 566, 305 P.2d 1, text, §7]. West's Key Number Digest, Criminal Law k.404.50; Evidence k.193

Evidence of property stolen or otherwise taken from a victim or a crime scene and linked to the defendant has been held relevant:

People v. Adamson (1946) 27 C.2d 478, 485, 165 P.2d 3 [woman's stocking tops found in defendant's room; identifying factor in murder and burglary prosecution].

In People v. Coffman (1969) 2 C.A.3d 681, 82 C.R. 782, a bar was burglarized of four boxes of cigars (one unopened, three partially filled) and four to six "six-packs" of beer. Witnesses placed defendant at the scene. Approximately 7 weeks later, a police search of defendant's station wagon and apartment revealed four boxes of cigars (one filled, three partially filled) and an empty beer case. Defendant contended that this evidence was inadequate to convict him because the articles were of "fungible" character and could be purchased anywhere. Held, defendant's possession of articles corresponding to the stolen property and the eyewitness testimony of his activities outside the burglarized premises amounted to substantial evidence of his guilt. (2 C.A.3d 686.) The prosecution may prove the defendant's possession of items resembling, and that may actually be, the stolen ones; and here the brands and shapes of the four varieties of cigar "corresponded precisely" with the missing items. (2 C.A.3d 686.)

[§ 6] Other Objects.

(1) Controlled Substances. In People v. Salas (1936) 17 C.A.2d 75, 61 P.2d 771, a prosecution for possession and transportation of morphine, defendant, driving erratically, was pursued by officers. The next day a box of morphine tablets, similar to morphine found in the car, was discovered about 100 feet away from the place the pursuing officers first sounded their siren. Held, the box was admissible; the jury might have concluded that it was thrown there by defendant. (17 C.A.2d 77.)

(2) Body Parts of Murder Victim. In People v. Thomas (1992) 2 C.4th 489, 7 C.R.2d 199, 828 P.2d 101, teeth and bone fragments of a murder victim were held relevant, because they corroborated testimony that they were found at the crime scene, and clarified the testimony of an expert. ## CHAPTER VII - Demonstrative, Experimental, and Scientific Evidence

B. Exclusion of Irrelevant Objects.

1. Weapons.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 7

[§ 7] Weapons.

Courts have excluded as irrelevant evidence of a weapon used to commit a crime, where the weapon is not sufficiently connected to the defendant:

In People v. Smith (1921) 55 C.A. 324, 203 P. 816, a trial for murder by cyanide poisoning, it was held error to introduce a can of cyanide kept in a tool room at defendant's place of employment. There was no evidence that defendant ever saw the can or knew it was there. (55 C.A. 332.)

In People v. McCall (1935) 10 C.A.2d 503, 52 P.2d 500, defendant testified that, in a quarrel in deceased's car, he struck the deceased in self-defense, and that the latter fell to the pavement, fracturing his skull. The prosecution introduced an auto crank, wrench, hammer handle and tire iron, all found in the car, as possible weapons used against the victim. Held, this was error; it was not defendant's car, there were no bloodstains or fingerprints on the implements, and consequently there was nothing to connect them with the defendant. (10 C.A.2d 505.)

In People v. Riser (1956) 47 C.2d 566, 305 P.2d 1, the court made the following distinction: (a) If the specific type of weapon used to commit a homicide is not known, any weapons found in the defendant's possession after the crime that could have been employed are admissible. (b) But if the prosecution relies on a specific weapon or type, it is error to admit evidence that other weapons were found in defendant's possession; this tends to show not that he committed the crime but only that he is the sort of person who carries deadly weapons. (47 C.2d. 577.)

In People v. Vaiza (1966) 244 C.A.2d 121, 52 C.R. 733, defendant was charged with assault with a deadly weapon on a peace officer. The officer testified that defendant pointed "a gun" at him, saying, "stick 'em up," then turned and ran. The defense was that the weapon was a toy. The prosecution then introduced a real gun for "illustrative purposes only." Held, this was reversible error. The officer had seen defendant's gun in poor light for only a second and heard no metallic sound; also, his testimony showed dissimilarities between the weapon seen and the one offered in evidence. (244 C.A.2d 126.)

People v. Lo Cigno (1961) 193 C.A.2d 360, 379, 381, 14 C.R. 354 [error to introduce guns not connected with crime or defendant].

People v. Henderson (1976) 58 C.A.3d 349, 360, 129 C.R. 844 [same; "Evidence of possession of a weapon not used in the crime charged against a defendant leads logically only to an inference that defendant is the kind of person who surrounds himself with deadly weapons--a fact of no relevant consequence to determination of the guilt or innocence of the defendant"].

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See People v. Barnwell (2007) 41 C.4th 1038, 1056, 63 C.R.3d 82, 162 P.3d 596 [in murder prosecution, trial judge erred in admitting, as relevant to identity, testimony of police officer indicating that year before charged murders, defendant possessed handgun similar to murder weapon, where prosecution did not claim that weapon found by officer was murder weapon; however, error was harmless, as another officer saw defendant shoot two of victims of current offenses and precisely described weapon he used].

CHAPTER VII - Demonstrative, Experimental, and Scientific Evidence

II. REAL OR DEMONSTRATIVE EVIDENCE

B. Exclusion of Irrelevant Objects.

2. Other Objects.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 8

[§ 8] Other Objects.

(1) Controlled Substances. Courts have excluded evidence relating to controlled substances as irrelevant in criminal prosecutions for a variety of reasons. The following are illustrative:

People v. Morgan (1958) 157 C.A.2d 756, 757, 321 P.2d 873 [narcotics supposedly obtained from defendant by unidentified informer while out of sight of officers].

In People v. Wong (1973) 35 C.A.3d 812, 111 C.R. 314, defendant sought to exhibit his arms to the jury, to show that he had no needle marks and thereby to contradict a witness' testimony that he had a fresh needle mark the day after a homicide. Held, the offer was properly rejected. "The arm was being offered on May 12, 1971, to show the condition of defendant's arm on June 5, 1970." (35 C.A.3d 835; on exhibition of accused generally, see infra, §33.)

(2) Photographs of Crime Scene. In People v. Turner (1984) 37 C.3d 302, 208 C.R. 196, 690 P.2d 669, a murder case, four photographs of the crime scene, depicting bodies of the victims, were introduced. The pictures were not gruesome, but they were unnecessary to prove any part of the prosecution's case, which was based on felony murder, and the only probative value could be on intent to kill, a nonissue. Held, admission of the irrelevant evidence was error, although harmless in this case. (37 C.3d 321.)

People v. Turner does not purport to create a broad rule rejecting or limiting the admissibility of crime scene photographs in all felony-murder cases. Rather, the usual principles of relevance prescribed in Ev.C. 210 apply to evidence of this type. (People v. Scheid (1997) 16 C.4th 1, 17, 18, 65 C.R.2d 348, 939 P.2d 748 [crime scene photos showing victims handcuffed together, one dead and other badly injured, were properly admitted even though defendant had departed scene before shootings took place and was being prosecuted on felony-murder theory; photos were relevant to corroborate testimony of witnesses].)

CHAPTER VII - Demonstrative, Experimental, and Scientific Evidence

II. REAL OR DEMONSTRATIVE EVIDENCE

C. Inflammatory Matter.

1. General Rule.

a. Admission Despite Some Prejudice.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 9

[§ 9] Admission Despite Some Prejudice.

In some cases, e.g., personal injury or wrongful death actions or murder prosecutions, relevant photographs or physical objects may be so gruesome or shocking as to prejudice a party before the jury. Thus, the trial judge has discretion to exclude them. (Ev.C. 352; see Akers v. Miller (1998) 68 C.A.4th 1143, 1147, 80 C.R.2d 857 [in elder abuse action against nursing home, any error in excluding autopsy photographs depicting bedsores was harmless, because objective jury would not have reached different result had photographs been admitted]; 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §17; infra, §§12, 13.) However, the general practice is to let them come in: "[E]xcept in rare cases of abuse, demonstrative evidence that tends to prove a material issue or clarify the circumstances of the crime is admissible despite its prejudicial tendency." (People v. Adamson (1946) 27 C.2d 478, 486, 165 P.2d 3; see generally 4 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§1157, 1158; 4 Stanf. L. Rev. 589; 58 A.L.R.2d 689 [skeleton or model of human body or part]; 68 A.L.R.2d 903 [clothing of deceased victim].)

As the court observed in People v. Long (1974) 38 C.A.3d 680, 113 C.R. 530, a murder prosecution involving the admission of allegedly prejudicial photographs, many attorneys underestimate a jury's stability. "A juror is not some kind of a dithering nincompoop, brought in from never-never land and exposed to the harsh realities of life for the first time in the jury box. There is nothing magic about being a member of the bench or bar that makes these individuals capable of dispassionately evaluating gruesome testimony that, it is often contended, will throw jurors into a paroxysm of hysteria. Jurors are our peers, often as well educated, as well balanced, as stable, as experienced in the realities of life as the holders of law degrees. The average juror is well able to stomach the unpleasantness of exposure to the facts of a murder without being unduly influenced. The supposed influence on jurors of allegedly gruesome or inflammatory pictures exists more in the imagination of judges and lawyers than in reality." (38 C.A.3d 689.) (See People v. Thompson (1992) 7 C.A.4th 1966, 1973, 10 C.R.2d 15 [quoting People v. Long]; for a criticism of the Long court's reserved ruling on admissibility of prejudicial physical evidence introduced by the prosecution, see People v. Bowen (1971) 22 C.A.3d 267, 291, 99 C.R. 498, 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §387.)

II. REAL OR DEMONSTRATIVE EVIDENCE

C. Inflammatory Matter.

1. General Rule.

b. Illustrations: Photographic Evidence.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 10

[§ 10] Illustrations: Photographic Evidence.

In People v. Reese (1956) 47 C.2d 112, 301 P.2d 582, a murder case, the prosecution first introduced photographs of the mutilated body of the female victim (breasts amputated and abdomen cut from vagina to navel), obviously relevant on the intent, motive and circumstances of the killing. Defendant complained, however, of the subsequent testimony of doctors and police officers describing these mutilations. Held, there was no error in admitting this cumulative relevant evidence. (47 C.2d 119.)

In People v. Carter (1957) 48 C.2d 737, 312 P.2d 665, a trial for murder, colored slides of the victim were introduced, showing the head, face, and neck, and the wounds. Held, this was a proper part of the testimony of the autopsy surgeon on the kind of weapon that probably caused the death (an instrument like that belonging to defendant). The court restated the rule as follows: "If the principal effect of demonstrative evidence such as photographs is to arouse the passions of the jury and inflame them against the defendant because of the horror of the crime, the evidence must of course be excluded. ... On the other hand, if the evidence has probative value with respect to a fact in issue that outweighs the danger of prejudice to the defendant, the evidence is admissible even if it is gruesome and may incidentally arouse the passions of the jury." (48 C.2d 751.)

In People v. Atchley (1959) 53 C.2d 160, 346 P.2d 764, defendant was found guilty of first degree murder by lying in wait and shooting his wife once in the head, once in the left breast, three times under the left arm, and once in the back. His defense was that he and his wife struggled, the gun went off, and then he fired it several more times. Photographs were admitted of (a) the deceased as found in the yard with bullet holes and bloodstains on her dress and face--to show the relative positions in which the body and items of evidence were discovered; and (b) the deceased on a table at the mortuary, naked above the waist with blood on her face--to show the location and nature of the wounds and to explain the basis for expert opinions on the position of the gun when the shots were fired. Held, there was no abuse of discretion in admitting this evidence. (53 C.2d 168.)

In People v. Mathis (1965) 63 C.2d 416, 46 C.R. 785, 406 P.2d 65, a murder case, defendant claimed self-defense. To discredit this theory the prosecution introduced color photographs of the victim's body as discovered, showing brutal beating and severe blows struck after he had been disabled. Held, this was not improper, even though black and white pictures might have been less inflammatory. (63 C.2d 423.)

In People v. Cruz (1968) 264 C.A.2d 350, 70 C.R. 603, a murder case, gruesome pictures of the nude body of the victim, with many cuts and abrasions, were held admissible despite defendant's stipulation that the cause of death was gunshot wounds. The photographs of wounds inflicted before the killing were probative on defendant's state of mind, and supported the prosecution's theory of premeditation, necessary for first degree murder. (264 C.A.2d 356.)

Many other cases are to the same effect:

People v. Davis (1930) 106 C.A. 179, 190, 289 P. 194 [photographs taken in morgue].

People v. Burkhart (1931) 211 C. 726, 732, 297 P. 11 [although photograph showing position and condition of murder victim's body when found was obscene and shocking, and its introduction by prosecution was not necessary, it was nevertheless admissible].

People v. Sisson (1934) 1 C.2d 510, 511, 36 P.2d 116 [photograph of partially nude woman].

People v. Love (1960) 53 C.2d 843, 852, 3 C.R. 665, 350 P.2d 705 [color photographs of nude body on hospital table, with 4" hole in back and blood all over, to show how shooting occurred--shotgun at close range].

People v. Lindsey (1961) 56 C.2d 324, 328, 14 C.R. 678, 363 P.2d 910 [photographic evidence of body of crime victim, to show wounds]; People v. Darling (1962) 58 C.2d 15, 20, 22 C.R. 484, 372 P.2d 316 [same]; People v. Harrison (1963) 59 C.2d 622, 627, 30 C.R. 841, 381 P.2d 665 [same].

People v. Campbell (1965) 233 C.A.2d 38, 43, 43 C.R. 237 [murder and attempt to dispose of body by burning; photographs of body in burned condition to establish that three areas on it were subjected to humanly induced fires].

People v. Talbot (1966) 64 C.2d 691, 706, 51 C.R. 417, 414 P.2d 633 [color photograph of murder victim's body was relevant to aid pathologist in testifying to the cause of death].

People v. King (1966) 240 C.A.2d 389, 403, 49 C.R. 562 [murder; photographs of victim's body].

People v. Ray (1967) 252 C.A.2d 932, 956, 61 C.R. 1 [murder victim was smothered and thrown over sea cliff; photographs properly admitted where used by pathologist to illustrate her testimony on condition of body as she first saw it, and on injuries incurred before death, and where gruesomeness was due to natural exposure and not to human agency].

People v. Stanworth (1969) 71 C.2d 820, 838, 80 C.R. 49, 457 P.2d 889 [in penalty phase of murder prosecution, admission of photographs of nude body of victim was relevant to issue of aggravation].

People v. Brawley (1969) 1 C.3d 277, 295, 82 C.R. 161, 461 P.2d 361 [nude color photographs of victim admissible to illustrate and clarify autopsy surgeon's testimony, provide circumstantial evidence of malice, and show facts in aggravation of penalty].

People v. Seastone (1969) 3 C.A.3d 60, 66, 82 C.R. 907 [photographs of infant's body revealed brutal injuries indicative of abandoned and malignant heart (one test of implied malice) and supported prosecution's theory of sexual motivation].

People v. Terry (1970) 2 C.3d 362, 402, 85 C.R. 409, 466 P.2d 961 ["hideous and grotesque" photographs of nude, bloodstained victim admissible as aid in understanding medical testimony, though of little use in determining how victim died].

People v. Long (1974) 38 C.A.3d 680, 689, 113 C.R. 530, supra, §9 [where photographs were "neither 'better' nor 'worse' than those in the average murder case," admission of photographs that were "fair, if unpleasant, representations of an unpleasant situation which happened to be brought on by this defendant's actions" was proper].

People v. Moran (1974) 39 C.A.3d 398, 412, 114 C.R. 413 ["Although counsel on both sides admitted that some of the photographs were gory, the nature of the case precluded the possibility of any other kinds of evidence"].

People v. Burden (1977) 72 C.A.3d 603, 611, 613, 140 C.R. 282 [photographs of child's emaciated body, relevant on issue of defendant's understanding that child was starving to death].

People v. Phillips (1985) 41 C.3d 29, 53, 222 C.R. 127, 711 P.2d 423 [photographs of murder victim's charred remains].

People v. Williamson (1985) 172 C.A.3d 737, 746, 747, 218 C.R. 550 [photographs of victim's body disclosing and corroborating manner in which homicide was committed; relevant to malice].

People v. Allen (1986) 42 C.3d 1222, 1255, 232 C.R. 849, 729 P.2d 115 [color photographs of murder victims, relevant to corroborate and illustrate testimony of autopsy surgeon concerning nature and extent of wounds; though cumulative and subject to discretionary exclusion, they were not exceptionally gruesome, and error, if any, was harmless].

People v. Hendricks (1987) 43 C.3d 584, 594, 238 C.R. 66, 737 P.2d 1350 [murder prosecution; two photographs of victim's body showing wounds were relevant to malice and not unduly gruesome].

People v. Turner (1990) 50 C.3d 668, 706, 268 C.R. 706, 789 P.2d 887 [murder prosecution; videotape of crime scene and photos of victim's wounds supported prosecution's theory of murder for robbery].

People v. Pitts (1990) 223 C.A.3d 1547, 1557, 273 C.R. 389 [mayhem prosecution; photograph of victim's wounds were not unduly gruesome given nature of crime].

People v. Ashmus (1991) 54 C.3d 932, 974, 2 C.R.2d 112, 820 P.2d 214, infra, §15 [admission of photographs and slides of murder victim in death and photographs of victim shortly before crime and defendant shortly afterwards was not unduly prejudicial].

People v. Zapien (1993) 4 C.4th 929, 983, 17 C.R.2d 122, 846 P.2d 704 [photograph of attractive, well-dressed victim prior to murder was admissible; victim was carrying on affair with defendant's brother-in-law, and defendant's sister's anger was motivating factor in murder].

People v. Wader (1993) 5 C.4th 610, 655, 20 C.R.2d 788, 854 P.2d 80 [murder prosecution; photograph of person whom defendant had raped 12 years before murdering victim, taken 5 to 7 days after reconstructive surgery, was admissible as relevant to defendant's use of force or violence].

People v. Wash (1993) 6 C.4th 215, 245, 24 C.R.2d 421, 861 P.2d 1107 [murder prosecution; autopsy slides of victims were relevant to prosecution's theory of deliberation and premeditation and not unduly cumulative or gruesome].

People v. Crittenden (1994) 9 C.4th 83, 134, 36 C.R.2d 474, 885 P.2d 887 [photographs of murder victims' wounds, although unpleasant, were highly probative, indicating kind and degree of force used and establishing intent to cause cruel suffering and actual causation of extreme pain].

People v. Scheid (1997) 16 C.4th 1, 19, 20, 65 C.R.2d 348, 939 P.2d 748, supra, §8 [in murder prosecution, photos of bloodied victims were not so unduly gruesome as to have impermissibly swayed jury, in light of testimony detailing every fact relevant to crime scene and victims].

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See People v. McDermott (2002) 28 C.4th 946, 998, 123 C.R.2d 654, 51 P.3d 874 [in capital murder prosecution, admission of 18-minute videotape of crime scene made by police shortly after they arrived was not error, even though it contained 30-second view of victim's mutilated groin area]; People v. Heard (2003) 31 C.4th 946, 973, 976, 4 C.R.3d 131, 75 P.3d 53 [in capital murder case, photographs of victim, who had been beaten, molested, bitten, and strangled, were properly admitted as relevant to establishing injuries, savageness of attack, and ferocious nature of struggle; although scenes depicted were bloody, they were not unduly gory or inflammatory].

[§ 11] Illustrations: Physical Objects.

Cases involving relevant physical objects alleged to be unduly prejudicial are far fewer in number than are cases involving photographic evidence, but they are no less subject to the general practice of allowing their admission. The following are illustrative:

People v. Besold (1908) 154 C. 363, 368, 97 P. 871 [garments and skull were properly admitted].

People v. Lisenba (1939) 14 C.2d 403, 411, 94 P.2d 569 [murder; poisonous snakes in boxes, identified by witness as used to bite victim, were not unduly prejudicial].

People v. King (1966) 240 C.A.2d 389, 404, 49 C.R. 562 [murder; victim's clothing that bore holes showing 16 stab wounds was relevant, material, and had clear probative value outweighing any prejudicial effect].

People v. Pitts (1990) 223 C.A.3d 1547, 1557, 273 C.R. 389 [mayhem prosecution; victim's bloodstained clothes were not unduly gruesome given nature of crime].

CHAPTER VII - Demonstrative, Experimental, and Scientific Evidence

II. REAL OR DEMONSTRATIVE EVIDENCE

- C. Inflammatory Matter.
- 2. Discretionary Exclusion.
  - a. Harmless Error.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 12

[§ 12] Harmless Error.

Occasionally, an appellate court, upholding a criminal conviction obtained with the aid of inflammatory evidence (supra, §9 et seq.), has criticized the practice where the necessity of the evidence was slight or nonexistent. (See People v. Burkhardt (1931) 211 C. 726, 732, 297 P. 11; People v. Sisson (1934) 1 C.2d 510, 511, 36 P.2d 116; People v. Logan (1953) 41 C.2d 279, 284, 260 P.2d 20.)

The same view was expressed in People v. Cavanaugh (1955) 44 C.2d 252, 282 P.2d 53, affirming a first degree murder conviction. The victim's body was found decomposed. Identification could have been made by testimony of a fingerprint expert, but instead the prosecution introduced fingers cut off at the autopsy, photographs of the decomposed body, a bloodstained sleeve, and other horrible objects. Held, no useful purpose was served by this evidence, it was error to admit it, and in a close case (which this was not) the admission would justify a reversal. (44 C.2d 267.) (See dissenting opinion, 44 C.2d 271, asserting that prosecutor deliberately sought to inflame the jury, and adding: "I cannot say that he did not succeed in this purpose or that a different verdict would have been improbable had the evidence been excluded.")

In People v. Smith (1973) 33 C.A.3d 51, 108 C.R. 698, the prosecution introduced three photographs of the semi-nude, mutilated body of a murder victim. The court said:

"Not infrequently, evidentiary resort to such vivid horrors is rationalized by the statement that they tend to prove malice ... or that they are relevant in relation to aggravation of the crime and the penalty. ... Such pictures are always offered as parts of an evidentiary mosaic; thus it is more appropriate to appraise their probative value as cumulative, not isolated, evidence. To say, moreover, that an exhibit bears upon aggravation of the penalty impliedly admits that it infuses the finding of guilt with the inadmissible element of moral condemnation. In this case there were ample descriptions of the positions and appearances of these two bodies. There was autopsy testimony regarding the precise location and nature of the wounds, which needed no clarification or amplification. ... The record does not reveal what evidentiary purpose was expressed by the district attorney in presenting these pictures to the jury. The Attorney General points to no added probative value possessed by these exhibits. They supplied no more than a blatant appeal to the jury's emotions. Their prejudice-arousing effect heavily outweighed their probative value. The trial court erred in admitting them." However, because of other overwhelming evidence of defendant's guilt, "[t]he error nevertheless did not cause a miscarriage of justice and furnishes no ground for reversal." (33 C.A.3d 69.)

Similarly, in People v. Marsh (1985) 175 C.A.3d 987, 221 C.R. 311, defendant was convicted of second degree murder of a 2-year-old child who died from multiple head injuries. Seven autopsy photographs in vivid color were blown up and projected onto a screen for the jurors to see. The photographs, which the prosecution admitted were "terribly gruesome and terribly upsetting," included (a) an almost full view of the victim's nude body, with a closeup shot of his exposed brain and bloody scalp, and a background shot of his blood-spattered torso "field dressed" with the ribcages rolled back to expose his bowels; and (b) various other pictures showing the victim's brain and skull with dangling or "peeled" scalp. Held, admission of the inflammatory photographs was error, and only "the lack of any viable defense" prevented reversal.

(a) Because defendant contended that the child's death had resulted from an accidental fall, the photographs were relevant to the cause of death; but their probative value was outweighed by their prejudicial effect. "[T]he jury was not enlightened one additional whit by viewing these seven gory autopsy photographs. The oral testimony of the autopsy surgeon describing his findings comprehensively advised the jury of his observations and why he concluded there were multiple fatal impact sites that could not have been caused by a fall from the sofa to the hearth. The primary cause of death, i.e., intercranial brain swelling, was never disputed. There was no expert medical testimony contradicting the autopsy surgeon's conclusions and various other medical witnesses testified to the cause of death without referring to the autopsy photographs." (175 C.A.3d 998.)

(b) It was not necessary to show the autopsy photographs to prove malice or to justify aggravation of the crime and penalty. (175 C.A.3d 998.)

(c) Unlike those cases where the photographs merely depict the victim's wounds, the inflammatory nature of the photographs here was "greatly enhanced" by the work of the autopsy surgeon, who had removed the victim's skull, exposed the victim's body cavity, and covered the victim's face with the exposed underside of the bloody scalp. (175 C.A.3d 999.)

(d) However, the erroneous admission of the photographs was not reversible error. (1) There was overwhelming evidence of guilt. (2) The showing was brief. (3) "Most importantly, the photographs were shown in sequence with numerous other photographs of the child before removing the life supports and, after they were removed, while lying on the autopsy table. The inflammatory nature of these other photographs, the admission of which is not an issue on appeal, diminishes the prejudicial impact of the other seven." (175 C.A.3d 998, 999.)

[§ 13] Reversible Error.

In People v. Burns (1952) 109 C.A.2d 524, 241 P.2d 308, a particularly flagrant case, reversible error was found: "Surely, there is a line between admitting a photograph which is of some help to the jury in solving the facts of the case and one which is of no value other than to inflame the minds of the jurors. That line was crossed in this case. ... There was an abuse of discretion here." (109 C.A.2d 542.)

In the Burns case, a prosecution for murder, there was no dispute as to the fact that the victim suffered bruises, defendant having claimed that they resulted from a fall. Nevertheless, the prosecution, over objection, was allowed to offer revolting photographs of the deceased, taken after the autopsy, showing a shaved head, incisions, punctures, flesh held apart, and instruments. "[I]t is obvious that the only purpose of exhibiting them was to inflame the jury's emotions against defendant." (109 C.A.2d 541.) (See People v. Redston (1956) 139 C.A.2d 485, 490, 293 P.2d 880 [similar photographs, no relevant purpose; held, with other errors, ground for reversal]; 4 Stanf. L. Rev. 589 [discussing Burns].)

D. Photographic Evidence.

1. Admissibility in General.

a. Statement of Rule.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 14

[§ 14] Statement of Rule.

(1) In General. The admissibility of authenticated photographs of places, persons, or things relevant to an issue is well established. (See generally 2 McCormick 5th, §214; 3 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§790, 792; 8 Hastings L. J. 310; 53 Harv. L. Rev. 291; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §960 et seq.; 9 Proof of Facts 147 [Photographs as Evidence]; 3 Am.Jur. Trials 1 [photographic evidence in civil cases], 335 [photographic evidence in criminal cases]; 11 A.L.R.2d 870, 895 [photographs of accused to show prior conviction]; 23 A.L.R.2d 112, 142 [photographs of tire tracks or marks]; 35 A.L.R.2d 874 [photographs of footprints]; 73 A.L.R.2d 769 [corpse in homicide or wrongful death case]; 23 A.L.R.3d 825 [photographs of property condemned; eminent domain proceeding]; 94 A.L.R.3d 357 [photographs of stolen property]; infra, §17 et seq.; on discretion to admit or exclude inflammatory photographs, see supra, §9 et seq.)

(2) Types of Photographic Evidence. The conventional black and white picture taken by an ordinary camera is, of course, only one type of photographic evidence used in trials. Other types include the following:

(a) Motion pictures and videotape. (See infra, §20 et seq.)

(b) Enlarged photographs or photostatic copies. (See 72 A.L.R.2d 308.)

(c) Aerial pictures. (See 3 Am.Jur. Trials 1, 289; 9 Proof of Facts 147, 199; 57 A.L.R.2d 1351.)

(d) Color pictures. (See 53 A.L.R.2d 1102.)

II. REAL OR DEMONSTRATIVE EVIDENCE

D. Photographic Evidence.

1. Admissibility in General.

b. Illustrations of Rule.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 15

[§ 15] Illustrations of Rule.

Cases upholding the rule that photographs relevant to an issue are admissible are legion:

People v. Crandall (1899) 125 C. 129, 133, 57 P. 785 [photographs of places with prosecutor's marks showing where crime was committed and victim's body was found].

Berkovitz v. American River Gravel Co. (1923) 191 C. 195, 201, 215 P. 675 [personal injuries; photographs of wrecked automobile].

People v. Isby (1947) 30 C.2d 879, 891, 186 P.2d 405 [homicide; enlarged photograph of locale of crime, with deceased's body lying in foreground].

Olson v. Meacham (1933) 129 C.A. 670, 673, 19 P.2d 527 [wrongful death; photographs of victim's wounds to support theory that defendant's automobile was cause of death].

People v. Mondshine (1933) 132 C.A. 395, 397, 22 P.2d 779 [photographs of fires in other buildings under similar conditions, to illustrate effect of insufficient oxygen in closed room].

Miller v. Silvester (1934) 140 C.A. 345, 347, 35 P.2d 387 [automobile accident; pictures of intersection showing skid marks].

People v. Jackson (1946) 74 C.A.2d 22, 25, 167 P.2d 776 [homicide; photograph showing position of deceased on bed where he had been found in dying condition].

Barone v. Jones (1947) 77 C.A.2d 656, 660, 176 P.2d 392 [automobile collision; photographs of scene, showing highway and ditch, admissible though taken after slight changes had been made in conditions, where witnesses fully explained changes].

People v. Sassounian (1986) 182 C.A.3d 361, 401, 226 C.R. 880 [first degree murder prosecution; photographs picturing defendant in fatigues and holding guns showed knowledge and means to commit crime, and corroborated testimony of prosecution witness to whom defendant had confessed].

People v. Sanders (1990) 51 C.3d 471, 514, 273 C.R. 537, 797 P.2d 561 [murder prosecution; photographs showing location of victim's body and nature of her head wound].

People v. Kelly (1990) 51 C.3d 931, 963, 275 C.R. 160, 800 P.2d 516 [murder prosecution; photographs showing placement of wounds and powder burns to support theory that murder was cold-blooded and intentional].

People v. Kaurish (1990) 52 C.3d 648, 683, 276 C.R. 788, 802 P.2d 278 [murder prosecution; photographs of victim's corpse depicting various wounds and other marks to identify perpetrator].

People v. Benson (1990) 52 C.3d 754, 786, 276 C.R. 827, 802 P.2d 330 [murder prosecution; photographs depicting victims in death to show circumstances of crimes and thus demonstrate appropriateness of death penalty].

People v. Mason (1991) 52 C.3d 909, 944, 277 C.R. 166, 802 P.2d 950, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §107 [murder prosecution; photographs showing victims and crime scenes to corroborate defendant's detailed confession after he had repudiated it].

People v. Cooper (1991) 53 C.3d 771, 821, 281 C.R. 90, 809 P.2d 865 [murder prosecution; photographs showing four victims while alive and depicting their relative physical size to prove that one person could have killed all of them].

People v. Spears (1991) 228 C.A.3d 1, 28, 278 C.R. 506 [murder and robbery prosecution; autopsy photographs of victim to corroborate and illustrate testimony of autopsy surgeon and to establish malice].

In People v. Ashmus (1991) 54 C.3d 932, 2 C.R.2d 112, 820 P.2d 214, a capital murder case, the trial judge admitted photographs and slides of the victim in death, and photographs of the victim shortly before the crime and defendant shortly afterwards. Held, this was proper.

(a) Photographs and slides of victim in death. This evidence was relevant, because it had "at least some tendency" to prove malice. Moreover, the evidence, though unpleasant, was not unduly prejudicial, because it was not gruesome. (54 C.3d 974.)

(b) Photographs of victim before crime and of defendant after crime. This evidence was also relevant. At the time of the judge's ruling, the prosecution intended to, and subsequently did, call a number of witnesses to give testimony bearing directly on identity and indirectly on intent to kill. The prosecution intended to, and did, use the photographs, at least in part, to support the witnesses' credibility. The testimony linked defendant and the victim, and defendant had changed in appearance since the crime. Identity and intent to kill were material, as was the credibility of the witnesses testifying thereon. Moreover, the evidence was not unduly prejudicial: it threatened no unfair detriment to defendant and its admission did not implicate defendant's constitutional rights. (54 C.3d 974.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See People v. Carey (2007) 41 C.4th 109, 126, 59 C.R.3d 172, 158 P.3d 743 [in murder prosecution, autopsy photographs depicting victim's wounds were properly admitted; they were relevant to prove how crime occurred and to prove malice, and, although unpleasant, they were more probative than prejudicial].

II. REAL OR DEMONSTRATIVE EVIDENCE

D. Photographic Evidence.

2. Foundation.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 16

[§ 16] Foundation.

To authenticate a photograph, a foundation must be laid by showing that the picture is a faithful representation of the objects or persons depicted. The showing must be made by a competent witness who can testify to personal knowledge of the correctness of the representation. But it is not essential that the photographer be produced; any witness with such personal knowledge may lay the foundation. (See Berkovitz v. American River Gravel Co. (1923) 191 C. 195, 202, 215 P. 675; Holland v. Kerr (1953) 116 C.A.2d 31, 37, 253 P.2d 88; People v. Bowley (1963) 59 C.2d 855, 859, 31 C.R. 471, 382 P.2d 591, 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §105, and infra, §17; People v. Bowley (1964) 230 C.A.2d 269, 270, 40 C.R. 859, infra, §17; 9 Proof of Facts 147 [Photographs as Evidence]; 9 A.L.R.2d 899 [authentication or verification of photograph as basis for introduction in evidence].)

The foundation was held insufficient in People v. Vaiza (1966) 244 C.A.2d 121, 52 C.R. 733, supra, §7, citing the text. Pictures were introduced to show lighting conditions at the scene of the crime; but the crime took place at 2 a.m. and the pictures were taken at 7:30 p.m. under far different conditions. Held, this was reversible error. (244 C.A.2d 126.)

CHAPTER VII - Demonstrative, Experimental, and Scientific Evidence

II. REAL OR DEMONSTRATIVE EVIDENCE

D. Photographic Evidence.

3. "Silent Witness" Theory.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 17

[§ 17] "Silent Witness" Theory.

A photograph is often said to be "illustrative" of the testimony of a witness on the stand. But this does not mean that it can never have independent effect as "substantive" evidence. An authenticated photograph may be "a silent witness," i.e., evidence of the facts depicted independent of testimony to those facts by a witness. (See People v. Bowley (1963) 59 C.2d 855, 859, 860, 861, 31 C.R. 471, 382 P.2d 591; South Santa Clara Valley Water Conservation Dist. v. Johnson (1964) 231 C.A.2d 388, 397, 41 C.R. 846, citing the text; 8 Hastings L. J. 310 [pointing out necessity of this rule where there are no eyewitnesses].)

The "silent witness" theory was approved in People v. Bowley, supra, where the court said: "There is no reason why a photograph or film, like an X-ray, may not, in a proper case, be probative in itself. To hold otherwise would illogically limit the use of a device whose memory is without question more accurate and reliable than that of a human witness. It would exclude from evidence the chance picture of a crowd which on close examination shows the commission of a crime that was not seen by the photographer at the time. It would exclude from evidence pictures taken with a telescopic lens. It would exclude from evidence pictures taken by a camera set to go off when a building's door is opened at night. ... We hold, therefore, that a photograph may, in a proper case, be admitted into evidence not merely as illustrated testimony of a human witness but as probative evidence in itself of what it shows." (59 C.2d 861.)

In People v. Doggett (1948) 83 C.A.2d 405, 188 P.2d 792, defendants, husband and wife, conducted a business of producing obscene pictures. In a prosecution for violation of P.C. 288a, the sole proof of the criminal act was a picture of defendants engaged in it, found in their apartment along with considerable photographic equipment and other pictures. As a foundation, the landlord and a police officer testified that the picture accurately portrayed the room and the articles therein, and an expert gave his opinion that the picture was genuine and not composite or faked. Held, it was admissible. Thus, the photograph was used not merely to illustrate testimony but as proof of the corpus delicti and the identity of defendants as the guilty persons. (83 C.A.2d 407.)

In People v. Bowley, supra, a moving picture showing lewd acts of defendant and his accomplice was excluded because the only authentication was by uncorroborated testimony of the accomplice. (See 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §105.) On the retrial (People v. Bowley (1964) 230 C.A.2d 269, 271, 40 C.R. 859), the prosecution called a police photographic expert, who testified that he had examined the film, that it showed no tampering, and that it correctly represented "what the camera saw." Held, the foundation was sufficient. The only thing he could not testify to was the time when the film was taken; but this, in the particular circumstances (no statute of limitations issue, e.g.) was not material.

Other uses of photographs as independent evidence are the admission of photographic copies of public or private records in lieu of originals or certified copies (see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Documentary Evidence, §46), and of motion pictures or videotape as evidence of the voluntariness of a confession (see infra, §22).

II. REAL OR DEMONSTRATIVE EVIDENCE

D. Photographic Evidence.

4. Photographic Identification of Absent Defendant.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 18

[§ 18] Photographic Identification of Absent Defendant.

In People v. Yonko (1987) 196 C.A.3d 1005, 242 C.R. 269, defendant was charged with robbery and sexual battery, and was present in court only on the first day of trial when a jury was selected. He did not appear thereafter, and the trial judge determined that he was voluntarily absenting himself, and granted the prosecutor's motion to conduct the trial under P.C. 1043(b)(2). At the trial the victim and a security guard who had helped to apprehend defendant identified him from his booking photograph. On appeal defendant contended that the identification procedure was impermissibly suggestive. Held, the procedure was proper.

(a) Ordinarily a criminal defendant can be required to be present in the courtroom for purpose of identification unless counsel stipulates to the issue of identity (P.C. 1043); and where the defendant cannot be found, some other means of identification must be used. (196 C.A.3d 1008.) A single person photographic showup is not inherently unfair (see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §405); and showing the witness a single photograph of the defendant is no more impermissibly suggestive than an in-court identification of the defendant personally sitting at the defense counsel table. (196 C.A.3d 1008.)

(b) Defendant's suggestion that the prosecution should have been required to assemble a photographic showup would impose unreasonable burdens on the judge, prosecution, witnesses and jury. And in this case there was no reasonable likelihood of misidentification. The perpetrator of the crime was chased as he fled the scene with the victim's purse in his hand, and was immediately captured one block away; the victim and the security guard identified him at the preliminary hearing; and on several occasions thereafter defendant approached the security guard and made statements concerning the event. (196 C.A.3d 1009.)

D. Photographic Evidence.

5. Posed Photograph or Film.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 19

[§ 19] Posed Photograph or Film.

(1) In General. Sometimes the photograph or film offered is not a picture of the actual condition of a person, object or place, but is an attempted reconstruction or reenactment to illustrate graphically the scene and acts involved in a crime, collision or other event. Though the cases are conflicting, the better view seems to be that such a posed picture is admissible where relevant and where a proper foundation is laid by testimony that shows that the reconstruction or reenactment is accurate. (See People v. O'Brien (1976) 61 C.A.3d 766, 780, 132 C.R. 616, quoting the text; DiRosario v. Havens (1987) 196 C.A.3d 1224, 1232, 242 C.R. 423 [no reversible error in showing videotape recreating automobile accident; tape was made under conditions "substantially similar" to accident conditions]; People v. Rodrigues (1994) 8 C.4th 1060, 1114, 1115, 36 C.R.2d 235, 885 P.2d 1 [in murder prosecution, videotaped reenactment of what witness saw was properly admitted; witness confirmed that videotape accurately showed where she was and what she saw, and would aid jurors in determining facts notwithstanding claimed inaccuracies]; 2 McCormick 5th, §214; 3 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §798; 19 A.L.R.2d 877 [admissibility of posed photograph based on recollection of position of persons or movable objects]; 9 Proof of Facts 147, 212 [Photographs as Evidence]; but see People v. Logan (1953) 41 C.2d 279, 284, 260 P.2d 20 [brief criticism of unnecessary use of picture of defendant taken with officers and bleeding victim, but held not reversible error]; on posed reenactments of crime as part of confession, see infra, §22.)

(2) Slanted or Misleading Pictures. In Anello v. Southern Pac. Co. (1959) 174 C.A.2d 317, 344 P.2d 843, plaintiff sued for wrongful death from a railroad crossing collision of decedent's automobile with defendant's freight train. Instead of a photograph of the black steam locomotive involved, defendant introduced colored slides of a diesel switch engine with the entire front painted a bright orange, an orange strip along its side, and the words "Southern Pacific" in large orange letters. Although the reversal of judgment for defendants was based on an erroneous instruction, the court left no doubt of its opinion that admission of the misleading colored slides was error. (174 C.A.2d 323.)

But in Greeneich v. Southern Pac. Co. (1961) 189 C.A.2d 100, 11 C.R. 235, the court took a different view. Decedent passenger was killed when his driver, with poor eyesight, tried to cross defendant's tracks at night. The trial judge permitted introduction of colored sound motion pictures of a train running over the crossing, although the picture was taken in daytime, the sound of the train whistle and bell in the courtroom had a spectacular effect, and the evidence was offered as a final dramatic conclusion to defendant's case. Held, despite these dissimilarities, admission was not an abuse of the trial judge's discretion. (189 C.A.2d 108.)

II. REAL OR DEMONSTRATIVE EVIDENCE

D. Photographic Evidence.

6. Motion Pictures and Videotape.

a. Admissibility in General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 20

[§ 20] Admissibility in General.

Motion pictures and videotape are admissible on the same basis as still photographs, namely, where relevant, and after a foundation is laid by testimony that the picture or videotape is a true representation of the scene. (See Heiman v. Market Street Ry. Co. (1937) 21 C.A.2d 311, 315, 69 P.2d 178; People v. Dabb (1948) 32 C.2d 491, 498, 197 P.2d 1; People v. Mayfield (1997) 14 C.4th 668, 747, 60 C.R.2d 1, 928 P.2d 485 [foundation was sufficient for admission of video recording of crime scene, even though it was made almost 18 months after relevant events and during daylight, while crime occurred at night, where purpose of recording was simply to show heights of walls and fences, and testimony indicated these had not changed]; 2 McCormick 5th, §214; 3 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §798a; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §979 et seq.; 9 A.L.R.2d 899, 921 [authentication or verification of motion picture as basis for introduction in evidence]; 41 A.L.R.4th 812 [visual recording of event or matter giving rise to litigation or prosecution]; 41 A.L.R.4th 877 [visual recording of event or matter other than that giving rise to litigation or prosecution]; 58 Am.Jur. Trials 481 [Videotape Technology]; 8 Proof of Facts 153 [Motion Pictures as Evidence].)

However, the foundation must be laid with care, because of the greater danger of falsification. As an early decision opined: "Moving pictures should be received as evidence with caution, because the modern art of photography and the devices of an ingenious director frequently produce results which may be quite deceiving. ... Telescopic lenses, ingenious settings of the stage, the elimination of unfavorable portions of a film, an angle from which a picture is taken, the ability to speed up the reproduction of the picture and the genius of a director may tend to create misleading impressions." (Harmon v. San Joaquin Light & Power Corp. (1940) 37 C.A.2d 169, 174, 98 P.2d 1064; see People v. Boyd (1990) 222 C.A.3d 541, 566, 271 C.R. 738 [insufficient showing that lighting conditions displayed on film were similar to lighting conditions on night of crime].)

II. REAL OR DEMONSTRATIVE EVIDENCE

D. Photographic Evidence.

6. Motion Pictures and Videotape.

b. Use in Civil Cases.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 21

[§ 21] Use in Civil Cases.

Videotape or motion pictures are commonly used in personal injury actions. The following are illustrative:

(1) To Minimize Plaintiff's Injuries. A film that shows the plaintiff engaging in normal activities may be introduced in support of the defendant's contention that the plaintiff was malingering. (See Heiman v. Market Street Ry. Co. (1937) 21 C.A.2d 311, 314, 69 P.2d 178 [plaintiff claimed to be confirmed invalid; pictures showed her driving automobile in traffic, shopping, carrying grocery bundles].)

However, in Harmon v. San Joaquin Light & Power Corp. (1940) 37 C.A.2d 169, 173, 98 P.2d 1064, supra, §20, a particular film introduced after plaintiff's accident tending to minimize the effect of his alleged deafness and limitation of vision was criticized as not probative. The film merely created a conflict in the evidence, and it was the province of the jury to reconcile the conflict, if possible, or to determine the weight and sufficiency of the evidence in that regard.

(2) "Day in the Life" Films. In Jones v. Los Angeles (1993) 20 C.A.4th 436, 24 C.R.2d 528, an action arising from an automobile accident in which plaintiff was rendered a paraplegic, plaintiff sought to introduce a 20-minute-long videotape of her daily activities after the accident. The videotape showed plaintiff being moved from her bed by attendants, being bathed, being placed in her wheelchair, and attempting to move around in the chair. Over defendant city's objection that the videotape was more prejudicial than probative, the trial judge ruled it admissible. Held, the ruling was proper.

(a) The videotape was highly probative of the extent of plaintiff's injuries. It also had substantial probative value on the extent of her pain and suffering and was therefore helpful to the jury in calculating damages. "Day in the Life" videotapes, such as plaintiff's, "can uniquely demonstrate the nature and extent of an accident victim's injuries." (20 C.A.4th 442.) Because both plaintiff and her nurse (who narrated the videotape) could be cross-examined at trial, the risk of any prejudice was greatly reduced. (20 C.A.4th 445.)

(b) Despite the nurse's oral testimony in narrating the videotape, the videotape could not be considered cumulative evidence. Rather, it "best describes the problems Ms. Jones encounters on a daily basis in a way mere oral testimony may not convey to the jurors." (20 C.A.4th 446.) (See 39 Am.Jur. Trials 261 [Planning and Producing a "Day-in-the-Life" Videotape in a Personal Injury Lawsuit].)

II. REAL OR DEMONSTRATIVE EVIDENCE

D. Photographic Evidence.

6. Motion Pictures and Videotape.

c. Use in Criminal Cases.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 22

[§ 22] Use in Criminal Cases.

(1) In General. As the following criminal cases illustrate, motion pictures and videotape have been used for a variety of purposes:

People v. Green (1956) 47 C.2d 209, 215, 302 P.2d 307 [as part of prosecutor's opening statement].

People v. Bowley (1963) 59 C.2d 855, 859, 860, 861, 31 C.R. 471, 382 P.2d 591, supra, §17 [as substantive evidence of commission of criminal acts].

People v. Perry (1976) 60 C.A.3d 608, 612, 131 C.R. 629, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Opinion Evidence, §6 [film from concealed surveillance camera used to identify defendant as perpetrator of robbery].

People v. Sims (1993) 5 C.4th 405, 451, 20 C.R.2d 537, 853 P.2d 992 [videotape of murder scene, showing victim in bathtub with face submerged, to establish malice and intent to kill, and to corroborate testimony as to appearance of crime scene].

People v. Carpenter (1997) 15 C.4th 312, 386, 63 C.R.2d 1, 935 P.2d 708 [videotape used to depict scenes relating to shootings, one of them fatal]; see 37 A.L.R.5th 515 [visual recording of homicide scene].

(2) To Show Voluntariness of Confession. Pictures with sound have been approved as an appropriate means of receiving and recording a confession. But in such cases, a double foundation must be laid, showing that the picture was an accurate reproduction and that the confession was voluntary. (See People v. Hayes (1937) 21 C.A.2d 320, 321, 71 P.2d 321; People v. Dabb (1948) 32 C.2d 491, 498, 197 P.2d 1; People v. Walker (1957) 150 C.A.2d 594, 599, 310 P.2d 110 [tape recording admitted with film, and jury allowed to play recording again in jury room]; People v. Long (1974) 38 C.A.3d 680, 689, 113 C.R. 530 [filmed reenactment of crime; People v. Dabb, supra, followed]; People v. Moran (1974) 39 C.A.3d 398, 114 C.R. 413, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §268 [videotaped confession]; 58 A.L.R.2d 1024 [sound recordings]; 10 A.L.R.4th 1092 [same]; 100 A.L.R.2d 1257 [film of accused's reenactment of crime]; 66 A.L.R.3d 637 [use of videotape to take deposition for presentation at civil trial in state court]; 41 A.L.R.4th 812, 877 [visual recording of event or matter giving rise to prosecution].)

In People v. Dabb, supra, defendants, after making oral and written confessions, agreed to reenact the crime before the camera. A rehearsal was first held, then the scene was shot, and the resulting film, with sound, was exhibited to the jury, after a foundation was laid by testimony of defendants' consent and of the authenticity of the film. The court said: "It is argued that a motion picture is susceptible of fabrication, but the same objection has been made to still photographs, which have long been used as evidence, and no valid ground for distinction between still and sound motion pictures presents itself. Protection against falsification or misrepresentation lies in the requirement of preliminary proof that the picture is an accurate reproduction of the scene or event that it depicts, and in the opportunity for cross-examination of the witnesses making such proof." (32 C.2d 498.)

The opinion further gives both a warning and additional approval of the practice as follows: "A motion picture of the artificial recreation of an event may unduly accentuate certain phases of the happening, and because of the forceful impression made upon the minds of the jurors by this kind of evidence, it should be received with caution. As pointed out by Wigmore, such a portrayal of an event is apt to cause a person to forget that 'it is merely what certain witnesses say was the thing that happened' and may 'impress the jury with the convincing impartiality of Nature herself.' ... However, when the events that are being photographed consist of a voluntary reenactment by the accused of what occurred, there is little, if any, danger of misleading emphasis that is unfavorable to him. Moreover, as a method of presenting confessions, sound motion pictures appear to have a unique advantage in that, while presenting the admission of guilt, they simultaneously testify to facts relevant to the issue of volition." (32 C.2d 498.)

Marks* (2003) 31 C.4th 197, 225, 226, 2 C.R.3d 252, 72 P.3d 1222 [videotape of daily activities of brain-damaged victim of attempted murder; even if portions of 37-minute tape were cumulative and should not have been played, any error was harmless]; People v. Harrison (2005) 35 C.4th 208, 234, 25 C.R.3d 224, 106 P.3d 895 [in capital murder case in which evidence of attempted murder by defendant was admitted to show consciousness of guilt, videotaped reenactment of route to location where murder attempt occurred was properly admitted, even though reenactment took place during day and actual murder attempt occurred at night; trial judge instructed jurors that tape was not intended to show lighting conditions but rather to show route taken, as described by victim]; People v. Pedroza (2007) 147 C.A.4th 784, 794, 54 C.R.3d 636 [in prosecution for murder and arson in which it was alleged that defendant threw gasoline on his wife and burnt her, trial judge did not err in admitting videotaped demonstration of investigator, with gas-doused hands, lighting paper towel and throwing it to ground; tape rebutted defense claims that towel would extinguish in midair, and that defendant could not have been in kitchen at time of fire because he was covered with gas and would have ignited]; People v. Ibarra (2007) 151 C.A.4th 1145, 1151, 61 C.R.3d 22 [in prosecution for attempted murder, trial judge did not abuse discretion in allowing playing of reality show videotape showing victim being rescued by police; tape was relevant to rebut defendant's claim that he acted out of heat of passion, and it indicated that until he was forcefully restrained he was intent on causing victim's death].

II. REAL OR DEMONSTRATIVE EVIDENCE

D. Photographic Evidence.

7. X-Ray Pictures and Similar Imaging.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 23

[§ 23] X-Ray Pictures and Similar Imaging.

It has been observed that X-ray photographs and similar imaging call for a somewhat different foundation from that of an ordinary photograph. Its very function is to portray an internal part of the body that cannot be seen by the eye, and therefore cannot be verified by an eyewitness as a portrayal of something seen. But when a proper foundation is laid by testimony as to the competency of the operator, the accuracy of the machine, and the standard procedure used in taking the picture, an X-ray photograph is admitted on the same basis as an ordinary photograph. (See Sim v. Weeks (1935) 7 C.A.2d 28, 40, 45 P.2d 350 [enlargement of X-ray photograph held properly admitted]; Wilburn v. United States Gypsum Co. (1936) 16 C.A.2d 111, 113, 60 P.2d 188 [X-rays taken 4 years after accident to show permanent injuries]; 49 Stanf. L. Rev. 1249 [on use of neuroimaging evidence]; 2 McCormick 5th, §214; 3 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §795; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §§977, 978; 5 A.L.R.3d 303 [exhaustive note on authentication].)

X-rays of strangers may also be offered for purposes of comparison. (See DeMartini v. McDonnell (1936) 14 C.A.2d 405, 406, 58 P.2d 170 [X-ray of normal limb].)

CHAPTER VII - Demonstrative, Experimental, and Scientific Evidence

II. REAL OR DEMONSTRATIVE EVIDENCE E. Diagrams, Maps, Models, and Computer Animation.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 24

[§ 24] Diagrams, Maps, Models, and Computer Animation.

(1) In General. Distinct from photographs of actual persons or things (supra, §14 et seq.), but admissible under similar principles, are prepared diagrams, maps, models, or computer animations designed to give visual effect to testimony. Their use "as testimony to the objects represented rests fundamentally on the theory that they are the pictorial communications of a qualified witness who uses this method of communication instead of or in addition to some other method." (People v. Kynette (1940) 15 C.2d 731, 755, 104 P.2d 794; St. George v. Superior Court (1949) 93 C.A.2d 815, 816, 209 P.2d 823 [map or plat used by a witness "is as much a part of the witness' testimony as his oral statements"]; see generally 2 McCormick 5th, §213; 3 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§790, 791; 15 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 951 [use of computer simulation to predict future physical events or to explain past ones]; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §988 et seq.; 44 Proof of Facts 2d 707 [Foundation for Admission of Map, Diagram, or Chart]; 2 Am.Jur. Trials 669 [maps]; 3 Am.Jur. Trials 377 [models]; 9 A.L.R.2d 1044 [maps, plats, and other drawings to illustrate or express testimony]; 69 A.L.R.2d 424; 80 A.L.R.2d 1270 [chart, diagram, or blackboard in condemnation suit]; 86 A.L.R.2d 239 [same, personal injury case]; 23 A.L.R.3d 825 [eminent domain proceeding; model of property condemned]; 9 A.L.R.3d 976 [charts showing braking distance, reaction times, etc. in automobile litigation]; 23 A.L.R.5th 672 [composite picture or sketch prepared for police to identify offender]; on handwriting exemplars, see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Documentary Evidence, §14 et seq.)

(2) Evidence Admissible. Diagrams, maps, models, and computer animations were held admissible in the following cases:

People v. Williams (1997) 16 C.4th 153, 214, 66 C.R.2d 123, 940 P.2d 710 [in murder prosecution, plastic foam head pierced with knitting needles to illustrate trajectory of bullets was not unduly prejudicial].

People v. Glab (1936) 15 C.A.2d 120, 123, 59 P.2d 195 [maps and photographs to show premises where murder was committed].

Haase v. Central Union High School Dist. (1938) 27 C.A.2d 319, 322, 80 P.2d 1044 [diagram showed that bus driver had acted negligently on leaving narrow bridge by turning bus so sharply to right that its overhanging rear protruded over center of roadway and into path of truck].

Pleasant Hill v. First Baptist Church (1969) 1 C.A.3d 384, 400, 82 C.R. 1 [condemnation action; defendant church produced plan and large scale model that depicted appearance of property before condemnation and also portrayed how it could be used for future church purposes].

People v. Sassounian (1986) 182 C.A.3d 361, 400, 401, 226 C.R. 880 [first degree murder prosecution; map of area where homicide took place, prepared by jail trustee to whom defendant had allegedly confessed, tended to corroborate trustee's testimony].

People v. Hood (1997) 53 C.A.4th 965, 969, 62 C.R.2d 137 [in murder prosecution, computer animation of shooting, based on information from witness and experts, was properly admitted without being held to requirements of People v. Kelly (1976) 17 C.3d 24, 130 C.R. 144, 549 P.2d 1240, infra, §42; animation was tantamount to drawing by expert to illustrate testimony]; see 32 U.S.F. L. Rev. 561, 581 [Hood].

In People v. Kynette, supra, the charges were, in part, conspiracy to commit murder and malicious use of explosives. Prosecution experts testified as to the facts concerning bomb fragments at the scene of the crime, then gave opinions as to the kind of bomb used, and finally were allowed to offer a model bomb in evidence, as being approximately the type used. (15 C.2d 755.)

In People v. Robillard (1960) 55 C.2d 88, 98, 10 C.R. 167, 358 P.2d 295, a prosecution for murder by shooting, the county pathologist testified concerning the wounds in the victim's body and the trajectory of the bullets. He was then allowed to use a prepared manikin to illustrate the testimony. (See 83 A.L.R.2d 1097 [use of skeleton or model of human body or part].)

In People v. Ham (1970) 7 C.A.3d 768, 86 C.R. 906, a prosecution for armed robbery and assault with a deadly weapon, the prosecutor showed a .22 caliber pistol to various witnesses to determine if the weapon used by the robber was similar in appearance. Held, this was proper. In clarifying a witness' testimony, a pistol may be admitted in evidence if a foundation is laid to show that it was substantially similar to the weapon it is supposed to illustrate. (7 C.A.3d 780, citing the text.)

In People v. McDaniel (1976) 16 C.3d 156, 127 C.R. 467, 545 P.2d 843, a trial for assault with intent to commit murder, defendant had befriended P after her male companion had beaten her up outside a tavern, but P declined defendant's offer to get rid of her lover-attacker. Soon afterwards, defendant borrowed a clothespin from P. The next morning, when P's companion and another person opened a house trailer door, they were severely injured by an explosion. At the trial, an expert witness testified that an explosive charge had been placed inside the screen door and triggered with a pull-type device. Over objection, the expert was permitted to demonstrate a model bomb that incorporated a clothespin as part of a triggering device. The model was meant to illustrate how pressure on a triggering device would cause an electrical circuit to close and a dynamite cap to detonate and explode a dynamite charge. According to the witness, several mechanisms (e.g., a mercury switch, a metal washer, a mousetrap or a clothespin) could be employed as a trigger, but the witness had used a clothespin in his model only because it was easily available to him. The witness testified that he did not know what device was actually used in the bomb. Defense evidence showed that no clothespin or portion had been found in the debris at the trailer site, that defendant had borrowed the clothespin to attach a road map to the dashboard of his car, and that when he was arrested a clothespin was attached to his dashboard in a manner that would serve his claimed purpose. Held, under the conditions imposed by the trial court there was no abuse of discretion in allowing use of the model. "The role of the clothespin was not emphasized, and the court carefully kept the use of the model and implications therefrom in proper perspective." (16 C.3d 175.)

(3) Evidence Excluded. The court, of course, has discretion to exclude this type of evidence for lack of proper foundation or possible misleading or prejudicial effects. Thus, in San Mateo v. Christen (1937) 22 C.A.2d 375, 378, 71 P.2d 88, a condemnation suit, the judge's refusal to admit a model of a tract was upheld on the ground that disparity in size may make it misleading. (22 C.A.2d 378.)

Other cases are to the same effect. (See People v. Jones (1962) 205 C.A.2d 460, 467, 23 C.R. 418, citing the text [map drawn by counsel excluded]; Dameron v. Ansbro (1918) 39 C.A. 289, 298, 178 P. 874 [trial judge could grant or deny right to illustrate testimony with human skeleton].)

CHAPTER VII - Demonstrative, Experimental, and Scientific Evidence

II. REAL OR DEMONSTRATIVE EVIDENCE

F. View of the Scene.

1. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 25

[§ 25] In General.

(1) View by Jury. The jury may be conducted to a place where a relevant fact can be observed, to obtain a view of the scene. (C.C.P. 651 [civil cases]; P.C. 1119 [criminal cases]; see People v. Milner (1898) 122 C. 171, 182, 54 P. 833; Shields v. Oxnard Harbor Dist. (1941) 46 C.A.2d 477, 489, 116 P.2d 121; People v. Pompa (1923) 192 C. 412, 422, 221 P. 198; Nunneley v. Edgar Hotel (1950) 36 C.2d 493, 501, 225 P.2d 497; 2 McCormick 5th, §216; 4 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1162 et seq.)

(2) View by Judge. The trial judge may likewise view the scene. (C.C.P. 651 [view by "trier of fact"]; People v. Jackson (1990) 218 C.A.3d 1493, 1505, 267 C.R. 841 [in criminal case, C.C.P. 651 governs view by judge unaccompanied by jury]; [see 4 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1169]; 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Courts, §223.)

(3) Discretionary Power of Judge. The order is discretionary (C.C.P. 651), and the judge's determination to grant or deny a request, in a civil or criminal case, is seldom disturbed. (See People v. Pompa, supra.) Thus, where conditions have changed since the accident or incident, a view may be ordered under proper instructions to the jury to disregard the changes. (See Nunneley v. Edgar Hotel, supra; 85 A.L.R.2d 512 [propriety of permitting view by jury in civil personal injury or death action as affected by claimed change of conditions since accident or incident].) And a view may be denied where other measures, such as diagrams, would be more convenient and would avoid security problems. (People v. Fudge (1994) 7 C.4th 1075, 1104, 1105, 31 C.R.2d 321, 875 P.2d 36.)

The Legislative Committee Comment to C.C.P. 651 observed that, in making the determination, "the court should weigh the need for the view against such considerations as whether the view would necessitate undue consumption of time or create a danger of misleading the trier of fact because of changed conditions."

CHAPTER VII - Demonstrative, Experimental, and Scientific Evidence

II. REAL OR DEMONSTRATIVE EVIDENCE

F. View of the Scene.

2. Scope of View.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 26

[§ 26] Scope of View.

(1) View by Trier of Fact in Civil Case or by Judge in Criminal Case. Former C.C.P. 610 limited the view of a scene to the place where an offense was committed, where property in litigation was located, or where any other material fact occurred. The section was repealed in 1975, and its replacement, C.C.P. 651, enlarged the possibilities for a view. The court may order a view when it finds that the view would be proper and would aid the trier of fact in its determination of the case. (C.C.P. 651(a).) As previously mentioned (see supra, §25), C.C.P. 651 governs a view by a judge unaccompanied by a jury in a criminal prosecution. (See People v. Jackson (1990) 218 C.A.3d 1493, 1505, 267 C.R. 841.) The view may be ordered for any of the following:

(a) Property that is the subject of litigation. (C.C.P. 651(a)(1).)

(b) The place where any relevant event occurred. (C.C.P. 651(a)(2).)

(c) An object, demonstration, or experiment that is relevant and admissible in the case, and that cannot with "reasonable convenience" be viewed in the courtroom. (C.C.P. 651(a)(3).)

(2) View by Jury in Criminal Case. P.C. 1119, dealing with jury views in criminal cases, is more restricted: "[T]he place in which the offense is charged to have been committed, or in which any other material fact occurred, or any personal property which has been referred to in the evidence and cannot conveniently be brought into the courtroom."

CHAPTER VII - Demonstrative, Experimental, and Scientific Evidence

II. REAL OR DEMONSTRATIVE EVIDENCE

F. View of the Scene.

3. Procedure: View by Trier of Fact in Civil Case or by Judge in Criminal Case.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 27

[§ 27] Procedure: View by Trier of Fact in Civil Case or by Judge in Criminal Case.

(1) On Party's or Court's Own Motion. The view may be ordered on the court's own motion or on motion of a party. (C.C.P. 651(a).)

(2) Presence of Judge, Jury, and Court Officers. Because the court is "in session" during the view (C.C.P. 651(b)), the judge, jury (if there is one), and necessary court officials, including the court reporter, must be present. (Legislative Committee Comment to C.C.P. 651(b); see Rau v. Redwood City Woman's Club (1952) 111 C.A.2d 546, 554, 245 P.2d 12 [judge should accompany jury as part of judge's duty to be present at all times during trial].) The Legislative Committee adds: "It is anticipated that ordinarily the jury will go to and return from the view in a body under the charge of an officer. However, this is a matter left to the court's discretion, and the court may direct that the jury be permitted to assemble at the view and leave separately."

(3) Presence of Parties and Counsel. Ordinarily, parties and counsel are allowed to be present (see 2 McCormick 5th, §216), and cases decided under California's former statute recognized their presence as a right or privilege that could be waived by failure to object. (See People v. White (1912) 20 C.A. 156, 159, 128 P. 417; South Santa Clara Valley Water Conservation Dist. v. Johnson (1964) 231 C.A.2d 388, 405, 41 C.R. 846.) Although C.C.P. 651(b) is silent on the point, the Legislative Committee calls attention to the decisions holding that counsel should be present.

However, the former requirement in a court-tried case, that all of the parties had to consent to the view in order for the information to be considered independent evidence (Noble v. Kertz & Sons Feed & Fuel Co. (1945) 72 C.A.2d 153, 158, 164 P.2d 257), was not continued. (Legislative Committee Comment to C.C.P. 651.)

(4) Court in Session. "The court shall be in session throughout the view." (C.C.P. 651(b).) Thus, the view "is a session of court, essentially the same as a session inside the courtroom." (Legislative Committee Comment.) Hence, under the judge's general authority to control the proceedings (C.C.P. 128), the judge may appoint a person to show the premises, and may allow or refuse to allow the jurors to question witnesses at the view. (Legislative Committee Comment.)

(5) Examination of Witnesses. "At the view, the court may permit testimony of witnesses." (C.C.P. 651(b).) "Thus, where appropriate, the court should provide the parties with the opportunity to examine witnesses (direct and cross-examination) at the view and to note crucial aspects of the view for the record. Yet there may be occasions where it will be inconvenient or unnecessary to permit testimony outside the courtroom." (Legislative Committee Comment.)

(6) Proceedings Recorded. "The proceedings at the view shall be recorded to the same extent as the proceedings in the courtroom." (C.C.P. 651(b).)

(7) Effect of Noncompliance. If a view is ordered or conducted in violation of C.C.P. 651, the view is not independent evidence sufficient to support a finding. However, the court is not required to follow the statutory procedure where it is proper to take judicial notice of facts obtainable at a view. (Legislative Committee Comment.)

II. REAL OR DEMONSTRATIVE EVIDENCE

F. View of the Scene.

4. Procedure: View by Jury in Criminal Case.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 28

[§ 28] Procedure: View by Jury in Criminal Case.

(1) General Requirements. P.C. 1119 sets forth the following procedure for a view by a jury in a criminal case:

(a) The jury must be "conducted in a body" in the custody of a sheriff or marshal.

(b) The place or property to be viewed must be shown to the jury by a person appointed by the court for that purpose.

(c) That officer "must be sworn to suffer no person to speak or communicate with the jury, nor to do so himself or herself, on any subject connected with the trial."

(d) The officer must return the jury to court "without unnecessary delay, or at a specified time." (See People v. Pampa (1923) 192 C. 412, 422, 221 P. 198 [objections to shower, if not made at time of defendant's designation, are waived].)

(2) Defendant's Right To Attend. A defendant's right to be present when evidence is taken before the trier of fact (see P.C. 977(b), 1043) includes the right to be present during a jury view of the premises. (See People v. Benjamin (1975) 52 C.A.3d 63, 76, 124 C.R. 799.) However, this right may be waived. (See People v. Lindsay (1964) 227 C.A.2d 482, 506, 38 C.R. 755 [any irregularity in fact that defendant was 100 yards away while jury was viewing premises was waived by his failure to object]; People v. Benjamin, supra, 52 C.A.3d 76 [defendant's express waiver of right to be present during view was implied waiver of right to be present during preliminary determination (by questioning witness) that lighting conditions were same as those on night of crime].) And, although confrontation of witnesses is now recognized as an element of due process (see 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §531 et seq.), an earlier case held that the right of the defendant to accompany the jury to a view was not. (Snyder v. Massachusetts (1934) 291 U.S. 97, 54 S.Ct. 330, 332, 78 L.Ed. 674, 677.)

(3) Judge's Duty To Attend. A view by the jury is considered a part of the trial, and thus the judge should be present at the view. (People v. Yut Ling (1888) 74 C. 569, 16 P. 489 [failure to attend was prejudicial error]; People v. White (1907) 5 C.A. 329, 336, 90 P. 471; People v. Akens (1914) 25 C.A. 373, 376, 143 P. 795.) However, the judge's absence is an irregularity that may be waived by the defendant's failure to timely object. Or, it may be cured by a jury instruction to disregard the view and the conducting of a second view in the judge's presence. (People v. White, supra, 5 C.A. 337.) (See generally 47 A.L.R.2d 1227 [necessity for presence of judge at view by jury in criminal case].)

(2) Defendant's Right To Attend. See People v. Garcia (2005) 36 C.4th 777, 802, 31 C.R.3d 541, 115 P.3d 1191, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, Supp., §552 [when jury has visited crime scene during presentation of evidence at trial and, after jury deliberations have begun, requests and is permitted to revisit scene, defendant and counsel have right to be present as well]. Correction: Page 38, line 11 of section, "Pampa" should be "Pompa".

F. View of the Scene.

5. View as Independent Evidence.

a. View by Judge.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 29

[§ 29] View by Judge.

The definition of "evidence" covers a view (Ev.C. 140), and a proper view by the trial judge is considered independent evidence on which a finding may be made and sustained. (See Brugger v. Lee Yim (1936) 12 C.A.2d 38, 50, 55 P.2d 564; Pohl v. Anderson (1936) 13 C.A.2d 241, 244, 56 P.2d 992.) The following cases are illustrative:

Otey v. Carmel Sanitary Dist. (1933) 219 C. 310, 312, 26 P.2d 308 [court's observation of effect of artificial agencies on deposit of sands, in case involving claim of title by accession].

Ethel D. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Com. (1934) 219 C. 699, 704, 28 P.2d 919 [referee in Industrial Accident Commission hearing visited scene of accident].

White v. Walsh (1951) 105 C.A.2d 828, 831, 234 P.2d 276 [issue whether amount of gravel placed on road unreasonably interfered with plaintiffs' farming land by preventing drainage of surface or flood water].

Formosa Corp. v. Rogers (1951) 108 C.A.2d 397, 411, 239 P.2d 88 [issue whether partition of property in kind could be made without prejudice to owners].

Stegner v. Bahr & Ledoyen (1954) 126 C.A.2d 220, 225, 272 P.2d 106 [issue whether quarry constituted nuisance].

Key v. McCabe (1960) 54 C.2d 736, 739, 8 C.R. 425, 356 P.2d 169 [action to enforce equitable servitudes; judge's view of premises held substantial evidence in support of finding of changed conditions].

Wade v. Campbell (1962) 200 C.A.2d 54, 62, 19 C.R. 173, citing the text [dairy enjoined as nuisance].

South Santa Clara Valley Water Conservation Dist. v. Johnson (1964) 231 C.A.2d 388, 399, 41 C.R. 846 [issue of existence of watercourse].

[§ 30] View by Jury.

A view by the jury is also considered independent evidence. (See MacPherson v. West Coast Transit Co. (1928) 94 C.A. 463, 466, 271 P. 509; *Neel v. ### II. REAL OR DEMONSTRATIVE EVIDENCE

F. View of the Scene.

5. View as Independent Evidence.

c. Exceptions.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 31

[§ 31] Exceptions.

(1) View by Judge: Irrelevant and Cumulative. The following cases are illustrative of the grounds on which a view by a judge will not be considered as independent evidence:

Sylva v. Kuck (1966) 240 C.A.2d 127, 136, 49 C.R. 512 [under circumstances, view was irrelevant].

Specialty Restaurants Corp. v. Los Angeles (1977) 67 C.A.3d 924, 941, 136 C.R. 904 [issue whether floating ship was fixture and taxable as real property; judge's remarks showed that his view was merely illustrative of testimonial and documentary evidence and was not independent substantial evidence sufficient to uphold judgment].

(2) View by Jury: Value in Condemnation Proceeding. In People v. McCullough (1950) 100 C.A.2d 101, 223 P.2d 37, a condemnation suit, the jury gave more than the highest value placed by any of the witnesses. Defendant owner contended that, because the jury viewed the scene, their knowledge could justify the finding. Held, a new trial on the issue of value was properly granted. "The true rule appears to be that a jury cannot disregard the evidence as to value and render a verdict in excess of that shown by the testimony of the witnesses. The view of the premises cannot be the sole basis for an award. Value must be arrived at from the opinion of well-informed persons based upon the purposes for which the property is suitable. While the view of the premises is evidence in a condemnation proceeding, it is merely corroborative of the quantitative oral testimony." (100 C.A.2d 105.)

The theory of this case has been codified: A view of property being valued, or other admissible evidence (including the character of the improvement proposed to be constructed by the plaintiff in an eminent domain proceeding), is admissible for the limited purpose of enabling the court, jury, or referee to understand and weigh expert testimony as to the property's value. Except in the case of an eminent domain proceeding, this type of evidence is subject to impeachment and rebuttal. (Ev.C. 813(b).)

II. REAL OR DEMONSTRATIVE EVIDENCE

G. Physical Examination and Exhibition.

1. Physical Examination.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 32

[§ 32] Physical Examination.

Physical examination is in part a discovery procedure (see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §140 et seq.), and, in part, a matter of demonstrative evidence:

(1) Autopsies. In both criminal and civil cases (e.g., homicide and wrongful death), an examination of the body of the deceased by a trained pathologist is sometimes made, and the pathologist's testimony given on issues relating to the cause of death. (See 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2221; 16 So. Cal. L. Rev. 143; 21 A.L.R.2d 538 [power of court to order disinterment and autopsy or examination in civil case]; 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Introduction to Criminal Procedure, §43 [coroner].)

(2) Physical Examination: Defendant in Criminal Case. Examination of the body of the defendant in a reasonable manner is not considered violative of the accused's constitutional right of privacy or privilege against self-incrimination; but a brutal body examination is a denial of due process and the resulting evidence is inadmissible. (See 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §413 et seq.)

(3) Physical Examination: Plaintiff in Personal Injury Case. A compulsory pretrial physical examination of the plaintiff to determine the nature and extent of his or her injuries, designed to furnish information for later testimony, is generally held to be within the court's power, and is now expressly authorized by California's discovery statutes. (See Harabedian v. Superior Court (1961) 195 C.A.2d 26, 31, 15 C.R. 420; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2220; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §§952, 953; 36 A.L.R.2d 946 [F.R. Civ. P., 35(b)]; 62 A.L.R.2d 1291 [right to physically examine victim in personal injury action by victim's parent or spouse]; 33 A.L.R.3d 1012 [defendant's right to choose physician]; 84 A.L.R.4th 558 [right of party to have attorney present during physical or mental examination]; 2 *Cal. ## CHAPTER VII - Demonstrative, Experimental, and Scientific Evidence

G. Physical Examination and Exhibition.

2. Exhibition.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 33

[§ 33] Exhibition.

(1) Exhibition of Body or Injury in Civil Case. The Comment to Ev.C. 140 points out that "evidence" includes "the appearance of a person exhibited to the jury."

Thus, in a personal injury action the plaintiff may exhibit an injured arm, leg or other part of his or her body, as demonstrative evidence of the nature and extent of the injury. (See Willoughby v. Zylstra (1935) 5 C.A.2d 297, 301, 42 P.2d 685 [medical witness manipulated plaintiff's neck and pinched cervical vertebrae in presence of jury]; 2 McCormick 5th, §215; 4 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1158; 82 A.L.R.4th 980 [in-court demonstration to show effect of injury in action for bodily injury].)

In a filiation proceeding by a child of unmarried parents, the court may require the alleged father to stand close to the child to enable the jury to compare their physical features. (Berry v. Chaplin (1946) 74 C.A.2d 652, 665, 169 P.2d 442; see 1A Wigmore (Tillers Rev.) §166; 1951 A.S. 278 [statutory rape; baby born to girl produced for comparison of features and characteristics]; 55 A.L.R.3d 1087 [exhibition of child to jury to show family resemblance, or lack of it, on issue of paternity]; on genetic test for nonpaternity or paternity, see infra, §68 et seq.)

(2) Exhibition of Accused or Victim in Criminal Case. In a criminal case, the accused may show his or her body as evidence of violence in obtaining a confession. (See 72 A.L.R.2d 1322.) It has been held that a criminal defendant may be required to exhibit himself or herself and to perform a physical act during the trial. (See People v. Turner (1971) 22 C.A.3d 174, 181, 99 C.R. 186 [modeled scarf and sunglasses]; People v. Holt (1972) 28 C.A.3d 343, 350, 104 C.R. 572 [wore certain hat, stood and held gun in left hand, and repeated words uttered by robber]; People v. Breckenridge (1975) 52 C.A.3d 913, 936, 125 C.R. 425 [exhibited himself to witness at same distance separating witness and suspect at time of crime]; People v. Sims (1976) 64 C.A.3d 544, 552, 134 C.R. 566 [read statements for voice identification]; 3 A.L.R.4th 374 [propriety of requiring criminal defendant to exhibit self, or perform physical act, or participate in demonstration, during trial and in presence of jury]; 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §385.)

And in a prosecution for rape of a person incapable of giving consent because of mental disease, defect, or disorder (P.C. 261(a)(1)), the alleged victim, without being sworn, could be questioned while sitting in the spectator section by the prosecution about her name, its spelling, her age, and the color of a purse she was shown. The reason is that the victim was not a witness, but an exhibit, demonstrative evidence of an essential element of the crime charged: that she was incapable of consenting to sexual intercourse and this was or should have been known to the defendant. (People v. Morgan (1987) 191 C.A.3d 29, 38, 236 C.R. 186.)

(3) Reenactment of Crime. A crime may be reenacted for the jury by a motion picture or videotape (see supra, §22) or by a live visual demonstration. (See People v. Buttles (1990) 223 C.A.3d 1631, 1639, 273 C.R. 397 [witness' demonstration of how defendant pointed gun out of car window before firing it allowed jury to conclude that he was aiming at passing vehicle]; 100 A.L.R.2d 1257 [admissibility of evidence of accused's reenactment of crime].)

H. Samples.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 34

[§ 34] Samples.

Samples may be admitted in evidence to show the quality and condition of the entire lot or mass from which they were taken. (See 2 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §439; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §§943, 944.)

Admissibility, however, is subject to certain conditions: (1) the samples must be properly identified as to source; (2) they must be shown to be in the same or substantially the same condition as they were at the time that condition became material to the issues involved; (3) where offered to show the condition of a large amount of material, they must appear fairly representative of the whole; and (4) the circumstances and uses of the sample, at the time of its taking, must be similar to the circumstances and uses of the mass. (People v. Porpora (1979) 91 C.A.3d Supp. 13, 20, footnotes 3, 4, 154 C.R. 400.)

In the Porpora case, the court reviewed and found sufficient the foundation evidence of the technique involved (taking samples of fish from a conveyor belt unloading a fishing boat's catch to determine whether an excessive amount of Pacific mackerel had been caught). (91 C.A.3d Supp. 18, 19, 20.) The court also pointed out that sampling is not a scientific analysis of an experimental nature, nor a novel technique; "[i]n essence, sampling is an assay." (91 C.A.3d Supp. 21.)

CHAPTER VII - Demonstrative, Experimental, and Scientific Evidence

III. EXPERIMENTS

A. Experiments Before Trial.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 35

[§ 35] Experiments Before Trial.

(1) In General. The principal use of experimental evidence is to test theories of the case by performing controlled experiments out of court and then calling an expert witness to testify about the results. The experiment is thus merely the basis of the expert testimony as to facts and opinions, and demonstrative evidence is only incidentally involved, as where the expert offers in evidence physical objects connected with the experiment. (See generally 1 McCormick 5th, §202 et seq.; 2 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §441 et seq.; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §996 et seq.; 76 A.L.R.2d 354, 402 [determining chemical or physical qualities of substance]; 78 A.L.R.2d 152, 218 [showing visibility or line of vision]; 11 A.L.R.5th 497 [ascertaining distance from gun to victim when gun was fired].)

(2) Authority To Conduct Experiments. Sometimes a statute or rule expressly governs whether an experiment may be conducted. For example, Ev.C. 1159 prohibits the admission of evidence pertaining to live animal experimentation (including injury, impact, or crash experimentation) in a products liability action involving a motor vehicle. (See 24 Pacific L. J. 881.)

In the absence of statute or rule, experiments are conducted entirely on the initiative of the parties, and often without notice to the other side. This practice often presents serious questions concerning the similarity of the conditions and the accuracy of the observations. Some experiments, moreover, have a tendency to confuse rather than clarify the issue. For these reasons, the trial judge has a broad discretion to admit or exclude experimental evidence. (See People v. Ely (1928) 203 C. 628, 633, 265 P. 818; Martin v. Angel City Baseball Assn. (1935) 3 C.A.2d 586, 590, 40 P.2d 287 [injuries from fall on stairway; experiments made by witness walking up and down excluded as too individual to be probative]; People v. Roberts (1953) 40 C.2d 483, 490, 254 P.2d 501; People v. Skinner (1954) 123 C.A.2d 741, 750, 267 P.2d 875; Long v. California-Western States Life Ins. Co. (1955) 43 C.2d 871, 882, 279 P.2d 43 [experiments of ballistics expert on tripping and falling with pistol, to show where bullet wound occurs, excluded as speculative and not proper subject of expert testimony]; Odell v. Frueh (1956) 146 C.A.2d 504, 511, 304 P.2d 45; Holling v. Chandler (1966) 241 C.A.2d 19, 23, 50 C.R. 219; People v. Williams (1973) 36 C.A.3d 262, 272, 11 C.R. 378, infra, §37; People v. Terry (1974) 38 C.A.3d 432, 444, 113 C.R. 233, infra, §37; People v. Roehler (1985) 167 C.A.3d 353, 385, 213 C.R. 353, infra, §37; 2 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§442, 443, 444; 19 A.L.R.3d 1008 [hearsay; report of test or experiment performed by independent third party].) (On application of the Kelly test to exclude improper experimental evidence, see People v. Dellinger (1984) 163 C.A.3d 284, 293, 209 C.R. 503, infra, §42.)

In Schauf v. Southern Calif. Edison Co. (1966) 243 C.A.2d 450, 52 C.R. 518, an automobile collision occurred at an intersection. To show that a stop sign was obstructed by a utility pole so as not to become visible in time to serve as a warning to traffic, the father of one injured party went to the scene. He was not allowed to testify, however, as to how the sign and pole appeared as he drove toward the intersection. This was not testimony as to facts observed, but an experiment; and the differences between conditions of the accident and the experiment, e.g., speed and position of vehicle, observer's position in the vehicle, illumination and acuteness of vision, would have made the result confusing rather than clarifying. (243 C.A.2d 455, citing the text.) (See People v. Manson (1977) 71 C.A.3d 1, 43, 139 C.R. 275 [denial of defendant's request to conduct "screaming lineup" to test truthfulness of witness' testimony that she heard screams of victim; People v. Spencer (1922) 58 C.A. 197, 208 P. 380, distinguished].)

(3) Suggested Procedure. To make scientific evidence of this kind more often available and more reliable, a procedure similar to that employed in discovery proceedings has been suggested (see 1 McCormick 5th, §202; 16 So. Cal. L. Rev. 124):

(a) Notice to the adverse party of the intention to conduct the experiment, with an opportunity to be present and perhaps to make suggestions as to method.

(b) Discretionary power in the court to appoint an impartial expert to conduct or supervise the experiment (this might be done at the pretrial conference).

III. EXPERIMENTS

B. Experiments in Courtroom.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 36

[§ 36] Experiments in Courtroom.

(1) Discretion To Permit. The judge may permit experiments in court that do not unduly delay the trial or confuse or prejudice the jury. (See People v. McDaniel (1976) 16 C.3d 156, 174, 127 C.R. 467, 545 P.2d 843, supra, §24 [demonstration of how bomb operates, with light bulb substituted for explosives in model]; 2 McCormick 5th, §215; 2 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §445; 4 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§1154a, 1160; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §997; 76 A.L.R.2d 354, 402 [to determine chemical or physical qualities of substance]; 78 A.L.R.2d 1281 [to test qualifications of expert].)

(2) Discretion To Refuse. The discretion to refuse permission is very broad. (See People v. Skinner (1954) 123 C.A.2d 741, 750, 267 P.2d 875 [too many variables involved]; People v. King (1951) 104 C.A.2d 298, 307, 231 P.2d 156 [unlikely that conditions would be same]; People v. Sherman (1950) 97 C.A.2d 245, 252, 217 P.2d 715 [arson; defense request to perform experiment with fire rejected for dissimilarity of conditions and danger]; *Grupe v. (3) Experiments by Jury. It is, of course, serious misconduct for jurors to carry on private experiments. (Higgins v. Los Angeles Gas & Elec. Co. (1911) 159 C. 651, 656, 115 P. 313, 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §339.) However, jurors may conduct experiments in the jury room if done in the presence of all jurors and if the experiments relate to exhibits received in evidence. (Comment to BAJI (8th ed.), No. 1.00.5; People v. Bogle (1995) 41 C.A.4th 770, 778, 779, 48 C.R.2d 739.) [§ 37] Illustrations.

No classification of the innumerable subjects appropriate for experimental evidence is possible, but valuable suggestions will be found in some of the texts and law reviews. (See 1 McCormick 5th, §202 et seq.; 4 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1160; 54 A.L.R.2d 922 [experiments in actions against electric power companies]; 76 A.L.R.2d 354 [to determine chemical or physical qualities of material]; 76 A.L.R.2d 402 [explosion]; 64 A.L.R.4th 125 [to disprove defect in motor vehicle]; 82 A.L.R.4th 980 [to show effect of injury in action for bodily injury].)

The following cases are also instructive:

People v. Spencer (1922) 58 C.A. 197, 228, 208 P. 380 [murder; test of hearing woman's scream at certain place from certain distance under similar atmospheric conditions].

People v. Willis (1924) 70 C.A. 465, 472, 233 P. 812 [murder; firearms expert experimented with gun that killed deceased to test defendant's theory of self-defense].

People v. Halbert (1926) 78 C.A. 598, 606, 248 P. 969 [vehicle killing; test of visibility of path of car at street intersection].

People v. Crawford (1940) 41 C.A.2d 198, 205, 106 P.2d 219 [murder by automobile assertedly out of control; prosecution's experiments with similar cars descending same grade to show different stopping point].

Chambers v. Silver (1951) 103 C.A.2d 633, 637, 230 P.2d 146 [automobile accident; test run of similar car with similar defects (unfastened spring) to show stability].

Beresford v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1955) 45 C.2d 738, 748, 290 P.2d 498 [experiment by electrical engineers to see whether power escaping down telephone lines into telephone switchboard could cause fire].

People v. Modell (1956) 143 C.A.2d 724, 300 P.2d 204, infra, §40 ([vehicle killing; experiment with alcohol swabbed arm and arm with alcohol evaporated, to determine effect of alcohol swab on alcoholic content of blood test].)

People v. Carter (1957) 48 C.2d 737, 749, 312 P.2d 665, supra, §10 and infra, §§39, 91 [murder by beating; experimental beating of bloody objects with various instruments to determine relationship between blood spots and their causes].

In Culpepper v. Volkswagen of America (1973) 33 C.A.3d 510, 109 C.R. 110, plaintiff sought to show that a defective design in her VW Bug caused it to roll over when she attempted a lane change maneuver. Over defendant's objection, the trial judge permitted her to exhibit a film that depicted a test known as the Bungee Cord Experiment, designed to use a driverless car to eliminate human error in the measurement of rollovers. Held, the film was properly admitted. "[T]he main issue in the lawsuit involved the capability of the VW to hold the road when the front wheels were subjected to a sharp turning maneuver. Although the Corvair-VW test involved a driverless car, the driver was omitted to eliminate the human error factor. The test was conducted on a dry, flat, smooth-surfaced road--the exact kind of surface as that involved at the accident scene." (33 C.A.3d 522.)

In People v. Williams (1973) 36 C.A.3d 262, 111 C.R. 378, defendant truck driver was charged with embezzling gasoline from his employer after he allegedly made an unauthorized stop and delivery of gas while en route to his proper destination. The truck he used was equipped with a tachograph, i.e., a device attached to the speedometer cable that measured the engine revolutions, the vehicle's speed, the distance the vehicle traveled, and the time. Using the tachograph data, a company expert sought to determine the location of a supposed "coffee stop" on the truck's chart. After analyzing the chart, the expert used his own car and a map and, by a trial and error method, determined where defendant had driven and that the location of the "coffee stop" was a service station that presumably received the unauthorized delivery. Defendant argued that the expert's method of calculating this location was in the nature of a scientific test like blood testing, fingerprinting, and voiceprinting, and that the tachograph interpretation was neither generally accepted in the scientific community nor reliable. Held, the expert's testimony was properly admitted and defendant's analogy to scientific tests was fallacious.

The court said: "What appellant really objects to is not Martineau's conclusions about the speed and distance traveled by appellant, but rather Martineau's experiment with a car and a map which indicated that the described route to Crenshaw and Adams was consistent with the chart. What Martineau did was not a scientific test which had to be validated by experts in the field. He read a map, read an odometer, and used his eyes to observe whether freeway ramps and other intersections existed on a route of travel--perfectly ordinary investigative techniques. Moreover, the reliability of Martineau's method was confirmed by the fact that he was not given the suspected location to work backwards from and yet after he arrived at his conclusions three other tachograph charts showing trips by other drivers from the terminal to Han Ho Choe's service station revealed the same pattern." (36 C.A.3d 273.)

In People v. Terry (1974) 38 C.A.3d 432, 444, 113 C.R. 233, defendants were charged with the armed robbery of a South San Francisco finance company. They offered an alibi to show they were in the vicinity of Fifth Street, San Francisco, at the relevant time. To rebut this evidence, the prosecution offered the testimony of a detective that, 8 months after the robbery, he drove between the two locations in 13 minutes without exceeding the speed limit. Held, the evidence was properly admitted. "[T]here was a sufficient showing that the conditions of the experiment were substantially similar to those existing on the date of the robbery. The robbery occurred on a weekday, and the fact that the experiment took place on a Thursday rather than on a Wednesday is not significant since the traffic conditions should be substantially similar on both days at the same hour. The fact that the experiment took place some eight months after the robbery is equally insignificant since it is not contended that the subject highway and traffic conditions at each of these times were dissimilar." (38 C.A.3d 445.)

In People v. Roehler (1985) 167 C.A.3d 353, 213 C.R. 353, defendant was charged with murder of his wife and stepson. The deaths occurred while defendant and the victims were in a dory, and defendant claimed that the boat accidentally capsized. But the evidence showed premortem head injuries resulting in death by drowning, and the prosecution was allowed to introduce evidence of two experiments, which were held admissible.

(a) Testing of the dory. Dr. H, a professor of mechanical engineering with experience as a swimmer and sailor, conducted tests of the boat with individuals of size and weight similar to those of defendant and the victims. The tests showed that there was no way to overturn the dory by accidental means; that only concentrated and purposeful effort would cause it to turn over; and that it then capsized so slowly that persons in the boat had time to swim free of it. (167 C.A.3d 369.) This evidence met the basic requirements of Culpepper, supra; "What the dory testing tended to show was that it was very unlikely that the dory had capsized accidentally; that it had been deliberately turned over, intentionally so. Further, it was established that the slowness with which it turned over should have allowed the persons in the boat to swim free of it." (167 C.A.3d 387.) And it was significant that the test was conducted with the identical boat used by defendant: "Use of the identical equipment is not a requirement to introduce experimental evidence, but it does produce evidence more solid and credible." (167 C.A.3d 387.)

(b) Testing of the dummy. Dr. W, an engineer specializing in biomechanics, performed tests with a dummy to determine the maximum force that could be applied to the head of the stepson victim if the dory capsized and the child was hit by the boat while rising from the water. The conclusion was that the maximum force would have resulted in from 210-240 pounds of pressure on the skull--a relatively small amount. (167 C.A.3d 370.) This experiment, using new rather than well established techniques, nevertheless produced admissible evidence.

(1) The issue was different from that involved in People v. Kelly (1976) 17 C.3d 24, 130 C.R. 144, 549 P.2d 1240, infra, §42; "[w]e are not asked here to analyze and deliver an opinion on the emerging field of biomechanics, the application of engineering principles to biology." (167 C.A.3d 388.) The test of the potential force applied to the head of the dummy and the dory was only a small part of the evidence; and the trial judge ruled that, although the engineering experts could testify concerning engineering principles, only qualified medical experts could testify concerning the head injuries involved. (167 C.A.3d 388.)

(2) A live subject could not be used for the test; it was necessary to use an anthropomorphic dummy designed to have the same weight and mass distribution as the victim, and the test demonstrated that the maximum force generated by the experimental collisions could not produce a force sufficient to produce the injuries. (167 C.A.3d 389.)

(3) People v. Dellinger (1984) 163 C.A.3d 284, 209 C.R. 503, infra, §42, is distinguishable: here, engineering principles to establish velocity figures were used, and there was adequate expert evidence supporting the reliability of the method used to measure the velocity. Moreover, the evidence of the dummy experiment was not the basis for the conclusion that the boy's head injuries were the result of premeditated murder, but was offered as corroboration of the conclusions of the medical examiner pathologist. (167 C.A.3d 390.)

CHAPTER VII - Demonstrative, Experimental, and Scientific Evidence

III. EXPERIMENTS

D. Foundation: Showing of Similar Conditions.

1. Necessity of Showing.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 38

[§ 38] Necessity of Showing.

The relevancy of experimental evidence ordinarily depends upon a showing that the conditions of the experiment were substantially similar to those that gave rise to the issue on which the evidence is offered. Thus, a foundation must be laid by testimony as to the manner in which the experiment was performed. (See Cervantes v. Maco Gas Co. (1960) 177 C.A.2d 246, 251, 2 C.R. 75 [insufficient]; Andrews v. Barker Bros. Corp. (1968) 267 C.A.2d 530, 537, 73 C.R. 284 [insufficient]; Culpepper v. Volkswagen of America (1973) 33 C.A.3d 510, 521, 109 C.R. 110, supra, §37 [sufficient]; Hasson v. Ford Motor Co. (1977) 19 C.3d 530, 548, 550, 138 C.R. 705, 564 P.2d 857 [sufficient]; Ehrhardt v. Brunswick (1986) 186 C.A.3d 734, 740, 231 C.R. 60 [insufficient]; People v. Turner (1994) 8 C.4th 137, 198, 32 C.R.2d 762, 878 P.2d 521, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §50 [sufficient]; People v. Bradford (1997) 15 C.4th 1229, 1326, 65 C.R.2d 145, 939 P.2d 259 [sufficient]; 1 McCormick 5th, §202; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §1002 et seq.)

In Andrews v. Barker Bros. Corp., supra, plaintiff sued for injuries suffered from collapse of a chair on which he sat in defendant's store. To show contributory negligence, defendant produced an engineer who testified to experiments: he sat with the chair tilted back, and succeeded in collapsing it. Held, admission was error. Although this may have been a logical explanation of the accident, it was based entirely on speculation: there was no evidence that plaintiff sat on the chair in that manner. (267 C.A.2d 537.) (For other cases in which experimental evidence was excluded for lack of such showing, see supra, §§35, 36.)

The requirement is only of substantial similarity, not identity, of conditions. (See People v. Spencer (1922) 58 C.A. 197, 228, 208 P. 380 [conditions of experiment even more strict than those of crime]; Chambers v. Silver (1951) 103 C.A.2d 633, 641, 230 P.2d 146; Odell v. Frueh (1956) 146 C.A.2d 504, 512, 304 P.2d 45; Yecny v. Eclipse Fuel Engineering Co. (1962) 210 C.A.2d 192, 203, 204, 205, 26 C.R. 402 [determination for trial judge, but judge may instruct jury to consider matter of similarity in giving it evidentiary value]; 2 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §442.)

CHAPTER VII - Demonstrative, Experimental, and Scientific Evidence

III. EXPERIMENTS

- D. Foundation: Showing of Similar Conditions.
- 2. Distinction: Relevant Without Similar Conditions.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 39

[§ 39] Distinction: Relevant Without Similar Conditions.

The relevancy of some experiments does not depend on proof of similarity of conditions, and in that event, a different foundation is appropriate. (See 1 McCormick 5th, §202.)

Thus, in People v. Carter (1957) 48 C.2d 737, 750, 312 P.2d 665, a trial for murder by beating the victim to death, Dr. K, a prosecution witness, was permitted to testify to his general knowledge of chemistry, physics and "blood dynamics," and also that he had conducted experiments in beating bloody objects with various instruments to determine the relationship between blood spots and their causes. Then he testified to blood spots at the murder scene and on defendant's clothes, and gave his opinion on the conditions of the murder. Held, this was admissible.

The court made this distinction: (a) "It may be that" when a specific experiment is the sole basis for an expert opinion, the same showing of similar conditions is required as in a case in which the results of an experiment are offered as direct evidence. (b) But here the experiments were offered "to qualify him as an expert in blood dynamics, to show that by training and experience he was able from an analysis of the size and shape of blood spots to determine their source with some degree of accuracy, and to enable the jury to test the reliability of his opinions by revealing their foundation." (48 C.2d 750.) (See People v. Guillebeau (1980) 107 C.A.3d 531, 550, 166 C.R. 45 [following Carter].)

CHAPTER VII - Demonstrative, Experimental, and Scientific Evidence

III. EXPERIMENTS

D. Foundation: Showing of Similar Conditions.

3. Necessity of Specific Objection.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 40

[§ 40] Necessity of Specific Objection.

Objections to evidence must be specific, and a general objection does not raise the specific defect of lack of a proper foundation. (See 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §380.)

People v. Modell (1956) 143 C.A.2d 724, 300 P.2d 204, goes a step further, requiring informative precision in the objection to lack of a proper foundation for experimental evidence where the alleged defect is curable. Defendant, arrested for a vehicle killing at 6:30 a.m., voluntarily submitted to a blood test for alcohol at 10:30 a.m. The expert, testifying that the test showed the influence of intoxicating liquor, nevertheless admitted that sterilizing the skin with an alcohol swab would increase the alcoholic content of the test blood. The prosecution then offered the result of an experiment with blood taken from different arms, one just swabbed and one with the alcohol evaporated, to support the result of the original blood test. Defendant objected that a "proper foundation has not been laid" in that "there is no proper showing ... that the conditions were the same in the test." On appeal, defendant suggested that the needle may have been larger or smaller, or a pure or weak solution of alcohol used, in the two tests. Held, these objections were waived by failure to refer to the precise alleged defects.

The court said: "There is an obvious difference between the receipt of evidence of an experiment made under conditions materially different from those of the occurrence sought to be illustrated and the present case, in which the conditions might have been substantially the same. In the former there is a factual basis upon which to rest a claim of prejudice; in the present case there is none. Any question as to the reliability of the experiment could have been answered readily in the trial court. Upon the appeal unreliability can be urged only as a remote possibility. We can only conclude that appellant's failure to register a sufficient objection amounted to a waiver of the right to claim error in the admission of the evidence." (143 C.A.2d 731.)

IV. CHEMICAL AND PHYSICAL TESTS

A. Nature and Scope of Subject.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 41

[§ 41] Nature and Scope of Subject.

The use of scientific tests in the investigation and preparation of cases for trial, and sometimes in trial, has become increasingly popular. Although case law is somewhat conservative in regard to admissibility, the literature on the subject is not. (See generally 1 McCormick 5th, §202 et seq.; 108 Harv. L. Rev. 1482 [new challenges of scientific evidence]; 110 Harv. L. Rev. 941 [proposing use of technical advisors to help court in making pretrial decisions on admissibility]; 46 Stanf. L. Rev. 1 [jurors' problems in properly assessing complex scientific evidence]; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §996 et seq.; 1 Jefferson, California Evidence Benchbook 3d, §21.45 et seq.; 56 A.L.R.4th 1105 [use of thermography to detect cancer and soft tissue injuries]; 22 Proof of Facts 385 [instrumental analysis; identifying substances by chemical composition]; 29 Proof of Facts 461 [identifying substances by thin layer and paper chromatography]; 24 Proof of Facts 3d 609 [admissibility and reliability of laboratory analysis of soil, water, and air samples in environmental litigation].)

The following are illustrative of tests frequently encountered in the cases:

- (1) Tests for intoxication. (See infra, §48 et seq.)
- (2) Tests for narcotics. (See infra, §56.)
- (3) Genetic tests to prove identity. (See infra, §57 et seq.)
- (4) Genetic tests to establish nonpaternity and paternity. (See infra, §68 et seq.)
- (5) Radar speedmeter. (See infra, §82 et seq.)
- (6) Polygraph. (See infra, §87 et seq.)
- (7) Truth serum. (See infra, §§96, 97.)
- (8) Voiceprint. (See infra, §§98, 99.)
- (9) Hypnosis. (See infra, §100 et seq.)
- (10) Penile plethysmograph. (See infra, §107.)
- (11) Dolls used to detect child abuse. (See infra, §108.)

CHAPTER VII - Demonstrative, Experimental, and Scientific Evidence

IV. CHEMICAL AND PHYSICAL TESTS

B. Scientific Basis and Reliability.

1. California's Kelly Rule.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 42

[§ 42] California's Kelly Rule.

(1) Statement of Rule. It has long been the rule in California that evidence of a scientific test will not be admitted unless its scientific basis and reliability are generally recognized by competent authorities. (See People v. Spigno (1957) 156 C.A.2d 279, 290, 319 P.2d 458; People v. Williams (1958) 164 C.A.2d Supp. 858, 860, 331 P.2d 251; Huntingdon v. Crowley (1966) 64 C.2d 647, 653, 51 C.R. 254, 414 P.2d 382.)

But a specific, three-pronged test for establishing scientific basis and reliability, first set forth in the federal district court case of Frye v. United States, was approved by the California Supreme Court in People v. Kelly (1976) 17 C.3d 24, 31, 130 C.R. 144, 549 P.2d 1240, as follows:

(a) The reliability of the method must be generally accepted by recognized authorities in the scientific field in which the test belongs. This is usually established by expert testimony. (On clarifications of and distinctions to term, see infra, §43 et seq.; on appellate review of trial court's determination, see infra, §43.)

(b) A witness giving expert testimony must be qualified as an expert on the subject.

(c) It must be shown that correct scientific procedures were used in administering the method.

California courts initially referred to the test as the Frye-Kelly rule, but shortly after the United States Supreme Court abrogated the Frye formulation in federal trials in 1993 (see infra, §47), California decisions began calling the test by its more accurate name: the Kelly rule. (See People v. Leahy (1994) 8 C.4th 587, 591, 34 C.R.2d 663, 882 P.2d 321, infra, §43.)

(2) Purpose of Rule. The Kelly opinion makes this observation about the test:

"Rather than permitting the trial judge to admit such evidence in his sound discretion, the Frye line of decisions have assigned the task of determining reliability to members of the scientific community from which the new method emerges. This should promote a degree of uniformity of decision; i.e., judges whose particular conclusion may differ may discover substantial agreement and consensus in the scientific community." (17 C.3d 31.) And the test is essentially conservative, supporting "a posture of judicial caution," for "[l]ay jurors tend to give considerable weight to 'scientific' evidence when presented by 'experts' with impressive credentials." (17 C.3d 31.)

(3) Illustration of Rule. In People v. Dellinger (1984) 163 C.A.3d 284, 209 C.R. 503, defendant was charged with murder of his 2-year-old stepdaughter, who died from swelling of the brain due to blunt force trauma to the head, with a skull fracture. To contradict the defense contention that the child's injuries resulted from a fall down the stairs, the prosecution called Dr. W, a biomedical engineer, as an expert witness. She testified to the following:

(a) An experiment with an anthropomorphic dummy similar to the child in height and weight. The dummy was dropped down the stairs from different positions, and, from indentations on its metal head, Dr. W determined the amount of force the head sustained on impact; then, using a chart prepared by General Motors, she concluded that the child could not have sustained the injuries from a fall.

(b) A finite element analysis, in which the characteristics of the brain and skull were fed into a computer, a force was mechanically applied, and the computer then predicted the pressures and stresses in the brain and skull. Dr. W concluded that the stress received from a fall could not have resulted in the brain injury or skull fracture.

In holding admission of this evidence prejudicial error, the court applied the Kelly three-part test as follows:

First prong: Reliability of method must be established. There was no evidence of prior experiments conducted with an anthropomorphic dummy in a fall situation, and Dr. W was the only witness to the acceptability of the finite element computer analysis. This uncorroborated testimony of a single witness was insufficient to show acceptance by the scientific community. (163 C.A.3d 293, 294.)

Second prong: Witness must be qualified as an expert on the subject. Dr. W had a degree in biomedical engineering and had done research with animals and cadavers, but she had no medical background or experience with variances attributable to the brain and skull of a child, and no expertise in fall-related injuries. (163 C.A.3d 294, 295.)

Third prong: Showing that correct scientific procedures were used. Dr. W neglected to consider such factors as the mass of the child's body and the compressibility of the carpet, skull and scalp, and did not offer a rational or scientific basis for her decision not to use such factors. These foundational omissions invalidated the scientific conclusions offered to the jury. (163 C.A.3d 296.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Purpose of Rule. The Kelly test is intended to forestall the jury's uncritical acceptance of scientific evidence or technology that is so foreign to everyday experience as to be unusually difficult for laypersons to evaluate. But where a procedure isolates physical evidence whose existence, appearance, nature, and meaning are obvious to the senses of a layperson, the Kelly standards do not apply. (People v. Ayala (2000) 24 C.4th 243, 281, 99 C.R.2d 532, 6 P.3d 193 [where, for comparison purposes, both bullet in victim's body and bullet taped to body were X-rayed, and radiologist testified that X-ray would not have distorted their appearance, Kelly rule was inapplicable].)

[§ 43] General Scientific Acceptance.

(1) Judicial Notice. In determining whether a new scientific test or process has passed from the experimental into the demonstrable stage and has received general acceptance by recognized experts in the scientific field to which it belongs, so as to warrant receiving expert testimony based on the procedure, a court may, and should, take judicial notice of the case law and comments on the particular field of scientific endeavor and of articles from reliable sources that appear in scientific journals and other publications that suggest either the possibility of error in tests and experiments (People v. Law (1974) 40 C.A.3d 69, 75, 114 C.R. 708) or their reliability (People v. Palmer (1978) 80 C.A.3d 239, 252, 145 C.R. 466). And, the trial judge may take judicial notice of earlier Kelly hearings held within the same court. (People v. Smith (1989) 215 C.A.3d 19, 25, 263 C.R. 678.)

(2) General Acceptance as Consensus. The Kelly rule requirement of general acceptance means a consensus drawn from a typical cross-section of the relevant, qualified scientific community. People v. Shirley (1982) 31 C.3d 18, 55, 56, 181 C.R. 243, 723 P.2d 1354, infra, §100, which indicated that "considerations of judicial economy" could permit a court to scrutinize "published writings in scholarly treatises and journals" in lieu of live testimony, did not modify or abandon the Kelly rule's insistence on ascertaining, if possible, whether the technique has become generally accepted by a typical cross-section of the relevant scientific community. (People v. Leahy (1994) 8 C.4th 587, 611, 612, 34 C.R.2d 663, 882 P.2d 321.)

(3) Appellate Review. "The question of how to characterize the 'general acceptance' issue under Kelly/Frye for purposes of defining appellate review of a trial court's determination has not been clearly stated in the case law. We believe, however, that 'general acceptance' is best described as a mixed question of law and fact subject to limited de novo review. ... The trial court's determination cannot be sustained, for example, on a mere finding that the record contains 'sufficient evidence' of the reliability of the challenged method." (People v. Reilly (1987) 196 C.A.3d 1127, 1134, 242 C.R. 496, infra, §61.)

The Reilly opinion points out that (a) the court may go outside the record and consider the scientific literature; (b) it should examine relevant decisions from other jurisdictions, bearing in mind, however, that the needed consensus is that of scientists, not courts; and (c) it should review the trial court's determination with deference to "findings of 'historical' fact or credibility, and then decide as a matter of law, based on those assumptions, whether there has been general acceptance." (196 C.A.3d 1134, 1135.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) General Acceptance as Consensus. See Geffcken v. D'Andrea (2006) 137 C.A.4th 1298, 1309, 41 C.R.3d 80 [in action alleging that defendants caused plaintiffs to be exposed to mold mycotoxins at their residence or workplace, trial judge did not err in excluding, on ground of lack of scientific acceptance, both blood serology test to assess human exposure to toxogenic mold and mycotoxin antibody test; in each case, lab that supplied results was only lab performing test].

[§ 44] Distinction: Established Scientific Technique.

The Kelly rule is limited to new scientific methods of proof. Thus, because the urine test for blood-alcohol content (see infra, §48) is an established scientific procedure that has been routinely used in California for decades, and because of the lack of any new scientific data concerning the test's reliability, it cannot be challenged. (People v. Municipal Court (Sansone) (1986) 184 C.A.3d 199, 201, 228 C.R. 798.)

The rule is similarly inapplicable to "blood spatter" tests. (People v. Clark (1993) 5 C.4th 950, 1018, 22 C.R.2d 689, 857 P.2d 1099.) (On criticism of distinction, see 28 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 417.)

Bui* (2001) 86 C.A.4th 1187, 1195, 103 C.R.2d 908 [in prosecution for vehicular manslaughter resulting from driving under influence of methamphetamine, expert's testimony that use of methamphetamine in greater than therapeutic doses causes impaired driving was not subject to Kelly rule; testimony was based on epidemiological studies, which are common, valid, and accepted scientific tools]; O'Neill v. Novartis Consumer Health (2007) 147 C.A.4th 1388, 1398, 55 C.R.3d 551 [in products liability action against pharmaceutical manufacturer, trial judge did not err in allowing defendant to challenge validity of study that found ingredient in defendant's nasal decongestants to be unsafe by asserting that some cases in study were misclassified; evidence of misclassification was not based on new scientific methodology but rather was challenge to professionalism with which methodology was applied, and thus Kelly was inapplicable].

B. Scientific Basis and Reliability.

2. Clarifications and Distinctions.

c. Distinction: Expert Opinion.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 45

[§ 45] Distinction: Expert Opinion.

In People v. Mendibles (1988) 199 C.A.3d 1277, 245 C.R. 553, a prosecution for lewd conduct with children, the prosecution called Dr. H, who had examined the victims and formed the opinion that they had suffered injuries consistent with sexual abuse. Dr. H relied primarily on patterns of scarring, deformities and other non-normal changes in the hymens of the children; and for part of her examination she used a colposcope (a binocular device allowing microscopic examination of the area). Defendant objected that this was the use of a new scientific technique subject to the requirements of the Kelly rule, and that the prosecution had failed to demonstrate that it was accepted as reliable in the scientific community. Held, admission of Dr. H's medical opinion was proper.

(a) There is a scientific difference between the development of a new scientific technique and the development of a body of medical knowledge and expertise; and an expert medical opinion is not subject to the Kelly rule. Illustrative are opinions that (1) death resulted from strangulation; (2) rectal abrasions indicate anal intercourse without the use of a lubricant; (3) death was caused by a blunt instrument similar to or consistent with a baseball bat; (4) a wound was self-inflicted; (5) death was caused by a heavy instrument such as a bolo machete; (6) certain bruises were not caused by a fall. (199 C.A.3d 1294.) Less typical, but still within the realm of expert medical opinion, is the diagnosis of an esoteric form of mental illness known as "Munchausen's syndrome," based on the existence of a body of literature on such cases. (199 C.A.3d 1294.)

(b) Here, Dr. H was well versed in the growing body of literature that describes the changes in the hymen of prepubescent females resulting from sexual abuse. No novel device was involved; the colposcope is in general use in the medical community, and is nothing more than a weak microscope. Nor did Dr. H's methodology involve the application of a new scientific technique: her opinion was based entirely on visual examination, and was similar to the analysis of any other wound or injury. (199 C.A.3d 1294, 1295.)

Other cases are to the same effect. (See People v. Luna (1988) 204 C.A.3d 726, 733, 250 C.R. 878, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Opinion Evidence, §54 [following Mendibles; testimony of physician, who examined victim, about child abuse accommodation syndrome]; People v. Harlan (1990) 222 C.A.3d 439, 449, 271 C.R. 653 [social worker's testimony on reactions of child molestation victims]; Texaco Producing v. Kern (1998) 66 C.A.4th 1029, 1048, 1049, 78 C.R.2d 433 [in action challenging assessment of oil producing property, ratios developed by assessor's expert to analyze sales of other properties and to compare them to subject property]; Wilson v. Phillips (1999) 73 C.A.4th 250, 253, 86 C.R.2d 204 [psychologist's testimony about effects of repressed memory on victims of childhood sexual abuse]; on applicability of Kelly rule to psychologist testifying as to defendant's mental condition, see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Opinion Evidence, §58.)

d. Distinction: Administrative Proceeding Where Issue Is Test Results.

[§ 46] Distinction: Administrative Proceeding Where Issue Is Test Results.

In Harris Trans. Co. v. Air Resources Bd. (1995) 32 C.A.4th 1472, 38 C.R.2d 431, a mandamus proceeding challenging enforcement of the Heavy-Duty Vehicle Inspection Program, plaintiff heavy vehicle owners alleged that they were denied a fair hearing at the administrative level because results of the "snap-idle" test, used by the inspection program to measure the opacity of vehicle emissions, were received over their Kelly objection. The trial judge denied relief, ruling that the Kelly test was inapplicable. Held, affirmed.

(a) As a general matter, the test applies in administrative proceedings. (32 C.A.4th 1478, citing Seering v. Department of Social Services (1987) 194 C.A.3d 298, 239 C.R. 422.)

(b) If the dispositive issue in the present case were the particular opacity level of plaintiffs' vehicles, proof of general scientific acceptance of the snap-idle test would be required. However, Air Resources Board regulations prohibit the operation of heavy duty motor vehicles that fail the snap-idle test, and therefore the dispositive issue was simply whether plaintiffs' vehicles failed the test. In this context, the Kelly test was inapplicable. (32 C.A.4th 1478.)

(c) Although plaintiffs had the right to challenge the regulations by which the snap-idle test was adopted, they expressly abandoned that challenge in the trial court. (32 C.A.4th 1480.)

CHAPTER VII - Demonstrative, Experimental, and Scientific Evidence

IV. CHEMICAL AND PHYSICAL TESTS

B. Scientific Basis and Reliability.

3. Federal Rule.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 47

[§ 47] Federal Rule.

(1) Frye Abrogated by Federal Rule. In Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals (1993) 509 U.S. 579, 113 S.Ct. 2786, 125 L.Ed.2d 469, a products liability action against a drug manufacturer, the United States Supreme Court determined that the "general acceptance" test announced in the federal district court case of Frye v. United States (see supra, §42 et seq.) had been superseded by F.R. Evid., Rule 702 (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Opinion Evidence, §26):

"Given the Rules' permissive backdrop and their inclusion of a specific rule [Rule 702] on expert testimony that does not mention 'general acceptance', the assertion that the Rules somehow assimilated Frye is unconvincing. Frye made 'general acceptance' the exclusive test for admitting expert scientific testimony. That austere standard, absent from and incompatible with the Federal Rules of Evidence, should not be applied in federal trials." (113 S.Ct. 2794, 125 L.Ed.2d 480.)

The court noted several factors that might bear on a judge's determination as to the admissibility of novel scientific evidence at trial: whether the theory or technique can be or has been tested; whether it has been subjected to peer review and publication; its known or potential rate of error; and its general acceptance in the scientific community. This last factor comes from Frye and can yet "be an important factor in ruling particular evidence admissible. ... '[A] known technique that has been able to attract only minimal support within the community,' ... may properly be viewed with skepticism." (113 S.Ct. 2797, 125 L.Ed.2d 483.) However, " '[g]eneral acceptance' is not a necessary precondition to the admissibility of scientific evidence," and the Federal Rules of Evidence "assign to the trial judge the task of ensuring that an expert's testimony both rests on a reliable foundation and is relevant to the task at hand." (113 S.Ct. 2799, 125 L.Ed.2d 485.)

The trial court may consider one or more of the Daubert factors where doing so will help it determine the testimony's reliability, but the test of reliability is flexible, and the list of specific factors in Daubert is not exclusive and does not necessarily apply in every case. (Kumho Tire Co. v. Carmichael (1999) 526 U.S. 137, 119 S.Ct. 1167, 1175, 143 L.Ed.2d 238, 251.)

The trial court's decision to admit or exclude expert testimony under Daubert is reviewed under the abuse of discretion standard. (General Elec. Co. v. Joiner (1997) 522 U.S. 136, 118 S.Ct. 512, 517, 139 L.Ed.2d 508, 517; see 112 Harv. L. Rev. 232 [Joiner]; 48 Hastings L. J. 969 [same]; 32 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 289 [same].) The same standard of review applies to the trial court's determination of how to test an expert's reliability and to what proceedings (such as a special briefing) are necessary in investigating reliability. Thus, the trial court has broad latitude to determine whether the Daubert factors are reasonable measures of an expert's reliability in a particular case. (Kumho Tire Co. v.

Carmichael, supra, 119 S.Ct. 1176, 143 L.Ed.2d 252.)

The Daubert holding applies not only to testimony based on "scientific" knowledge, but also to testimony based on "technical" and "other specialized" knowledge. (Kumho Tire Co. v. Carmichael, supra, 119 S.Ct. 1174, 1176, 143 L.Ed.2d 249, 253 [Daubert factors applied to exclude testimony of automobile tire failure analyst that particular tire failed due to manufacturing or design defect]; but see 84 Cal. L. Rev. 1657 [Daubert should not be extended to apply to "specialized" knowledge that is not scientific].)

(2) Commentary on Federal Rule. Commentary on the Daubert case has been extensive. (See 107 Harv. L. Rev. 254; 46 Hastings L. J. 555; 27 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 1513; 21 Pepperdine L. Rev. 1391; 34 San Diego L. Rev. 1719 [Daubert principles should apply to all expert evidence]; 37 Santa Clara L. Rev. [same]; 36 Santa Clara L. Rev. 1187 [post-Daubert problems]; 69 So. Cal. L. Rev. 487; 21 Western State L. Rev. 605; 60 Am.Jur. Trials 1 [challenging scientific evidence under federal rules and Daubert].)

(3) California's Kelly Rule Unaffected. California's Kelly rule (see supra, §42) survives Daubert. (People v. Leahy (1994) 8 C.4th 587, 604, 34 C.R.2d 663, 882 P.2d 321, supra, §43; see 22 Pepperdine L. Rev. 1274 [Leahy].)

IV. CHEMICAL AND PHYSICAL TESTS

C. Tests for Intoxication.

1. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 48

[§ 48] In General.

(1) Blood, Breath, Urine, and Saliva Tests. Traditionally, intoxication has been scientifically determined by testing the subject's blood, breath, urine, or saliva. (See People v. Conterno (1959) 170 C.A.2d Supp. 817, 823, 339 P.2d 968; 1 McCormick 5th, §205; 53 Harv. L. Rev. 288; 6 Hastings L. J. 212; 1 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 610; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §§1021, 1022; 77 A.L.R.2d 971 [qualification of expert]; 16 A.L.R.3d 748 [statutory presumption of intoxication based on percent of alcohol in system]; on breath test, see infra, §49 et seq.; on blood test, see infra, §§53, 54; on procedures to take blood, breath, or urine tests, see Pub.Util.C. 21407.2 [aircraft operators], Veh.C. 23158 [motor vehicle operators; see 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Public Peace and Welfare, §231]; on constitutionality of those tests, see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §422 et seq.)

The urine test consists of obtaining a urine sample and subjecting it to chemical analysis to determine its alcoholic content. (See generally Quesada v. Orr (1971) 14 C.A.3d 866, 92 C.R. 640; People v. Municipal Court (Sansone) (1986) 184 C.A.3d 199, 228 C.R. 798, supra, §44.)

(2) Field Sobriety Tests. The traditional field sobriety test requires the suspect to walk heel to toe on an imaginary line, touch a finger to his or her nose, and do balancing exercises. The test is ordinarily performed before the arresting officer near the place where the vehicle was stopped. (See Whalen v. Municipal Court (1969) 274 C.A.2d 809, 810, 79 C.R. 523; 9 Proof of Facts 3d 459 [proof of alcohol induced driving impairment through evidence of observable intoxication and coordination testing]; 68 A.L.R.4th 776 [physical inability to take tests as justification for refusal].)

Under a more recent field sobriety test, the suspect is asked to look, while stationary, at a particular object in front of the suspect's face and to follow that object with only his or her eyes. An inability of the eyes to maintain visual fixation as they are turned from side to side (in other words, jerking or bouncing) is known as horizontal gaze nystagmus (HGN), and is exhibited by intoxicated persons. (See People v. Williams (1992) 3 C.A.4th 1326, 1330, 1335, 5 C.R.2d 130; 60 A.L.R.4th 1129 [use of HGN in impaired driving prosecution]; 4 Proof of Facts 3d 439 [same].) The HGN test is subject to the Kelly requirement of general acceptance in the scientific community, and a police officer's testimony regarding the mere administration of the test is insufficient to establish that acceptance. (People v. Leahy (1994) 8 C.4th 587, 608, 609, 34 C.R.2d 663, 882 P.2d 321, supra, §43.) However, once the HGN test has been shown by other expert testimony to have met that requirement, the arresting police officer may then use HGN findings as a basis for his opinion that the defendant was driving while under the influence. (People v. Joehnk (1995) 35 C.A.4th 1488, 1507, 1508, 42 C.R.2d 6.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Blood, Breath, Urine, and Saliva Tests. The holding of People v. Bransford (1994) 8 C.4th 885, 35 C.R.2d 613, 884 P.2d 70, text, §51, was premised on a statute allowing the offense to be proved simply by evidence of breath-alcohol level, and thus it has no application where the defendant's blood-alcohol level is determined by a urine test. A defendant whose prosecution is based on a urine test for blood-alcohol has the right to present evidence of individual variation in partition levels. (People v. Acevedo (2001) 93 C.A.4th 757, 764, 766, 113 C.R.2d 437.)

See 1 McCormick 6th, §205; 119 A.L.R.5th 379 [use of extrapolation evidence in prosecutions for driving under influence]. West's Key Number Digest, Criminal Law k.388.2

IV. CHEMICAL AND PHYSICAL TESTS

C. Tests for Intoxication.

2. Breath Tests.

a. Alcoholic Concentration Tests.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 49

[§ 49] Alcoholic Concentration Tests.

There are two basic types of tests for capturing the subject's breath in a sealed container for later testing for alcoholic concentration:

(1) The "wet" type, the most common of which employs the "breathalyzer." This device determines blood-alcohol content by measuring the results of a chemical reaction between a solution contained in an ampoule and the alcohol found in the suspect's breath. Except for New York, very few jurisdictions continue to use this type of device. (20 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 247, 253; see People v. Hitch (1974) 12 C.3d 641, 644, 117 C.R. 9, 527 P.2d 361 [describing operation of breathalyzer test to show evidentiary significance of ampoules used in determining blood-alcohol level].)

(2) The "dry" type, the most common of which employs the "intoxilyzer" and the "intoximeter." These devices use infrared radiation to measure a breath sample to determine alcohol concentration. Most jurisdictions, including California, use dry devices. (20 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 247, 253; see Intoximeters v. Younger (1975) 53 C.A.3d 262, 267, 125 C.R. 864 [discussing alleged shortcomings of intoximeters in context of manufacturer attacking award of state contract to rival manufacturer]; People v. Miller (1975) 52 C.A.3d 666, 668, 125 C.R. 341 [describing operation of intoxilyzer test]; People v. French (1978) 77 C.A.3d 511, 517, 143 C.R. 782 [same].)

All of these breath machines are simple and portable; the test itself may be given by a police officer; and the chemical analysis made by a qualified expert is admissible. (See People v. Kiss (1954) 125 C.A.2d 138, 140, 269 P.2d 924; People v. Conterno (1959) 170 C.A.2d Supp. 817, 823, 339 P.2d 968; Covington v. Municipal Court (1969) 273 C.A.2d 470, 78 C.R. 563; 6 *Hastings L. ##### b. Preliminary Alcohol Screening Test.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 50

[§ 50] Preliminary Alcohol Screening Test.

In Coniglio v. Department of Motor Vehicles (1995) 39 C.A.4th 666, 46 C.R.2d 123, the license of a 20-year-old driver was suspended under the zero tolerance law (Veh.C. 23136 et seq.) based on preliminary alcohol screening (PAS) test results indicating a blood-alcohol concentration of 0.01% or more. The driver petitioned for a writ of mandamus, and the trial judge granted the petition, finding that the screening device did not meet the breath-alcohol analysis standards set forth in the California Code of Regulations and that the department failed to show the reliability of the test. Held, affirmed.

(a) The trial judge erred in finding that the screening test did not meet standards imposed by the California Code of Regulations. Those standards are applicable to breath testing instruments used to determine the concentration of alcohol in the blood (see supra, §49). The PAS test is used for a different purpose--to detect the mere presence of alcohol. The 0.01% threshold level specified in Veh.C. 23136(a) simply represents a recognition that a lower level is tantamount to a finding of no alcohol. (39 C.A.4th 679.)

(b) The zero tolerance law specifically mandates use of the PAS test, and this constitutes a legislative determination that the PAS test is generally a reliable means of enforcing that law. (39 C.A.4th 677.) Nevertheless, due process requires that the reliability of the particular device used be demonstrated before the test results can be admitted. The official duty presumption cannot be relied on, because there are no governing statutes or regulations regarding the testing and reliability of the PAS test. Thus, in this case, the department had the burden of showing that (1) the device used was in proper working order, (2) the test was properly administered, and (3) the operator was competent and qualified. (39 C.A.4th 683, 684.) The police officer's testimony met none of these requirements: there was no testimony about how the device was maintained or whether the standards for calibration were established; there was no evidence showing that the test was properly administered or explaining how it should be administered; and the testimony did not prove that the officer was competent and qualified. "Accordingly, we conclude that the reliability of the PAS test was not established." (39 C.A.4th 684, 685.)

In People v. Bury (1996) 41 C.A.4th 1194, 1201, 1202, 49 C.R.2d 107, the court followed the Coniglio court's holding that the PAS test is scientifically reliable, but disagreed with its suggestion that regulations do not apply to any PAS device used by law enforcement. (On use of PAS test to determine if there is probable cause to arrest for a drunk driving violation, see 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Public Peace and Welfare, §226.)

C. Tests for Intoxication.

2. Breath Tests.

c. Challenges to Test.

1. Partition Ratio Variability.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 51

[§ 51] Partition Ratio Variability.

Prior to 1990, California's driving while under the influence statute (Veh.C. 23152(b)) defined the offense solely in terms of blood-alcohol concentration (grams of alcohol per 100 milliliters of blood). Thus, the prosecution was required to convert breath test readings to equivalent blood-alcohol concentration levels using a standard "partition ratio," representing an average ratio for the general public (2100 to 1; see 17 Cal. Code Reg. §1220.4(f)). Because an individual's actual ratio may vary (see 20 San Diego L. Rev. 301, 327; 20 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 247, 256; 90 A.L.R.4th 155 [challenges to breath tests based on inaccurate partition ratio]), courts initially allowed defendants to prove only that their personal ratio differed from the standard ratio (People v. Pritchard (1984) 162 C.A.3d Supp. 13, 17, 209 C.R. 314; People v. Herst (1987) 197 C.A.3d Supp. 1, 3, 243 C.R. 83). Subsequently, defendants were also permitted to show that partition ratios differ among individuals generally. (People v. Lepine (1989) 215 C.A.3d 91, 101, 263 C.R. 543.) (For an historical overview, see People v. Bransford (1994) 8 C.4th 885, 888, 35 C.R.2d 613, 884 P.2d 70.)

However, Veh.C. 23152(b) was amended in 1990 to provide that the percent, by weight, of alcohol in a person's blood is based on grams of alcohol per 100 milliliters of blood or 210 liters of breath. In People v. Bransford, supra, the Supreme Court concluded that the amendment was intended to prohibit a defendant from presenting evidence that his or her particular partition ratio is different from the state standard, thereby avoiding conviction for driving with a blood-alcohol level of .08% or higher.

(a) The 1990 amendment effected a substantive change: it allows the prosecution to prove the offense "solely by proof of a prohibited breath-alcohol level." Doing so promotes the state interest in reducing the danger presented by drunk drivers by increasing the likelihood of conviction, because the prosecution need not prove actual impairment. (8 C.4th 891.)

(b) The statute does not create an unconstitutional conclusive presumption that the alcohol in 210 liters of breath is the same as that in 100 milliliters of blood. Rather, it defines the substantive offense as driving with a specified concentration of alcohol in the body. (8 C.4th 892.)

(c) Because the statute defines the offense as it does, evidence of the variability of individual partition ratios is irrelevant. (8 C.4th 893.) (See Kerollis v. Department of Motor Vehicles (1999) 75 C.A.4th 1299, 1304, 89 C.R.2d 826 [Bransford rule applies to administrative hearings to suspend or revoke driver's license on basis of breath-alcohol

[§ 52] Other Challenges.

As in the case of blood tests (see infra, §§53, 54), the manner in which the test was administered and the reliability of the machine must be considered in interpreting breath test results (People v. Bransford (1994) 8 C.4th 885, 893, 35 C.R.2d 613, 884 P.2d 70, supra, §51), including the machine's margin of error (People v. Pritchard (1984) 162 C.A.3d Supp. 13, 15, 209 C.R. 314; People v. Gineris (1984) 162 C.A.3d Supp. 18, 22, 209 C.R. 317).

However, in People v. Randolph (1989) 213 C.A.3d Supp. 1, 262 C.R. 378, defendant was convicted under Veh.C. 23152(b) of driving with .10% or more of alcohol in his blood (now .08%; see infra, §54). Two breath tests taken after defendant's arrest resulted in readings of .10%. An expert witness testified that the test instrument's accuracy was plus or minus .010%, and the .10% results could reasonably be interpreted as .09% or .11%. Defendant therefore contended that his conviction should be reversed on the authority of People v. Campos (1982) 138 C.A.3d Supp. 1, 188 C.R. 366, infra, §54. Held, conviction affirmed. People v. Campos was decided before Burg v. Municipal Court (1983) 35 C.3d 257, 198 C.R. 145, 673 P.2d 732, infra, §55, which held that circumstantial evidence other than test results is admissible to establish that a defendant did or did not have the proscribed level of blood alcohol. The jury was not required to assume that defendant's blood-alcohol level was at the low end of the margin of error. (213 C.A.3d Supp. 10, 12.)

IV. CHEMICAL AND PHYSICAL TESTS

C. Tests for Intoxication.

3. Blood Test.

b. California Statute.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 54

[§ 54] California Statute.

Veh.C. 23610 specifies the evidentiary effect of the blood test, in a "criminal action" or "preliminary proceeding in a criminal action," as follows:

(1) Presumption Where Test Shows .08%. It is presumed that the suspect was under the influence of an alcoholic beverage at the time of the alleged violation of driving under the influence of alcohol (Veh.C. 23152(a)) or causing bodily injury while doing so (Veh.C. 23153(a)) if, at the time of the test, there was .08% or more by weight of alcohol in the suspect's blood. (Veh.C. 23610(a)(3).)

(2) Contrary Presumption Where Test Shows Less Than .05%. If the test shows less than .05% by weight of alcohol in the suspect's blood, it is presumed that the suspect was not under the influence. (Veh.C. 23610(a)(1).) However, the presumption is rebuttable, not conclusive. By affecting the burden of proof, it places a further burden on the party adversely affected by the presumption to go forward with sufficient proof to defeat it. (People v. Gallardo (1994) 22 C.A.4th 489, 496, 27 C.R.2d 502 [presumption sufficiently rebutted by evidence of conduct before and after accident, objective blood-alcohol level and symptoms of alcohol use].)

(3) Evidentiary Effect of Test Showing .05%-.08%. If the test shows .05% or more but less than .08%, no presumption arises, but the fact may be considered with other competent evidence. (Veh.C. 23610(a)(2).)

In People v. Wood (1989) 207 C.A.3d Supp. 11, 255 C.R. 537, decided under a prior version of the statute establishing a .05% to .10% range, defendant's blood test produced results of .089 and .090%, and he was convicted of driving under the influence. Despite the fact that defendant came within former Veh.C. 23155(a)(2) (now Veh.C. 23610(a)(2)), i.e., no presumption arose concerning whether he was under the influence, the jury instruction quoted former Veh.C. 23155(a)(1), (a)(3), and (a)(2) (now Veh.C. 23610(a)(1), (a)(3), and (a)(2), respectively). Held, reversed. The trial judge erred by injecting the concept of presumption into this case. "The vice in the reading of the instruction is that it allowed the jury to theoretically borrow the .10-percent level." (207 C.A.3d Supp. 15.) And because it cannot be said beyond a reasonable doubt that the jurors did not borrow the scant one-hundredth of 1% to "presume" defendant guilty, the error was prejudicial. (207 C.A.3d Supp. 16.)

(4) Other Evidence Admissible. The statute does not limit the introduction of "any other competent evidence" on the issue. (Veh.C. 23610(c).)

(5) Nature of Presumptions. All of the presumptions specified in Veh.C. 23610 affect the burden of proof. (Veh.C. 23610(a).)

Veh.C. 109 sets forth a chemically precise definition of an alcoholic beverage that includes an intoxicating liquor along with other specifically described liquids and beverages. (See People v. Lachman (1972) 23 C.A.3d 1094, 1097, 100 C.R. 710 [presumption is founded on scientifically established relationship between blood-alcohol level and degree of intoxication]; People v. Schreiber (1975) 45 C.A.3d 917, 921, 923, 119 C.R. 812 [statute is constitutional]; 20 San Diego L. Rev. 201; 16 U.S.F. L. Rev. 817.)

The statutory presumptions apply only in driving cases. (People v. Roberts (1975) 51 C.A.3d 125, 135, 123 C.R. 893 [murder case; level of intoxication impairing ability to drive vehicle not relevant on issue of diminished capacity].)

In interpreting test results, the margin of error of the test must be considered. Thus, in People v. Campos (1982) 138 C.A.3d Supp. 1, 188 C.R. 366, a reading of .10% on a test having a margin of error of .005% did not establish beyond a reasonable doubt that the actual amount of alcohol in the blood was .10% (triggering the presumption of intoxication under a prior version of the statute), because it was just as likely that the amount was below .10% as that it was above. (138 C.A.3d Supp. 3.) However, People v. Randolph (1989) 213 C.A.3d Supp. 1, 262 C.R. 378, supra, §52, a case involving breath test readings, declined to follow Campos, holding that a margin of error of .010% was insufficient to require the jury to exonerate the defendant. (213 C.A.3d Supp. 5.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Presumption Where Test Shows .08%. See CALCRIM, No. 2100 [Driving Under the Influence Causing Injury (Veh. Code, § 23153(a))].

IV. CHEMICAL AND PHYSICAL TESTS

C. Tests for Intoxication.

4. Constitutionality of Statute.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 55

[§ 55] Constitutionality of Statute.

In Burg v. Municipal Court (1983) 35 C.3d 257, 198 C.R. 145, 673 P.2d 732, the court reviewed the history of drunk driving legislation and rejected constitutional challenges to the similar, prior version of the present statute (Veh.C. 23152(b)).

(a) The problem. Nearly half of the traffic deaths in California between 1976-1980 involved drinking drivers, and nearly one-quarter of all traffic accidents resulting in injury involved the use of alcohol. Traffic deaths in the United States exceed 50,000 annually, and approximately one-half of these fatalities are alcohol-related. (35 C.3d 261.) "The monstrous proportions of the problem have often been lamented in graphic terms by this court and the United States Supreme Court." (35 C.3d 262, citing leading cases.)

(b) The legislative response. State legislatures early in the century attempted to regulate such conduct by prohibiting driving while intoxicated. With the development of scientific measurement of blood-alcohol levels, statutes were enacted that created a presumption of being under the influence of alcohol where the level was 0.10% or more. (35 C.3d 263.) These laws, however, proved inadequate, for the ultimate question was defined in terms of the defendant's subjective behavior and condition; i.e., was the defendant under the influence of alcohol when he or she drove? As a result, most states enacted additional legislation fashioned after the "Scandinavian model," defining the substantive offense not by the subjective term "driving under the influence," but instead by the act of driving with a specified blood-alcohol level. "The statutes represent a legislative determination that public safety is endangered when a person drives a motor vehicle while having a specified percentage (typically 0.10) or more by weight of alcohol in his blood." (35 C.3d 264.)

(c) Nature of offense under Veh.C. 23152(b). Veh.C. 23152, as revised in 1981, retained the "driving under influence" provision in subdivision (a), and added subdivision (b), providing that it is unlawful for a person who has 0.10% (now .08%; see supra, §54) or more of alcohol in his or her blood to drive a vehicle. Similar statutes have been enacted in 28 states and the District of Columbia--some creating a new offense, others an alternative definition of driving under the influence. (35 C.3d 264.) "Our statute establishes a new and separate offense." (35 C.3d 265.) In other words, Veh.C. 23152(b) does not create a conclusive presumption of intoxication and does not eliminate the prosecutor's burden of proof: instead, "the statute defines, in precise terms, the conduct proscribed." (35 C.3d 265.) And, though the prosecutor need not prove that the defendant was under the influence, the prosecutor must still prove beyond a reasonable doubt that at the time of driving, the defendant's blood-alcohol level was 0.10% or more. (35 C.3d 265.) (See People v. Bransford (1994) 8 C.4th 885, 892, 893, 35 C.R.2d 613, 884 P.2d 70, supra, §51 [construing current statute and reaching same conclusion about amendment defining offense based on specified alcoholic concentration determined from breath test].)

(d) Valid exercise of police power. The scientific evidence of threat to the safety of the public and the driver where the level exceeds 0.10%, and the legislative determination to that effect, make it clear that the figure fixed by Veh.C. 23152(b) is rationally related to the exercise of the state's police power. (35 C.3d 266, 267, 268.)

(e) No unconstitutional uncertainty. Due process requires a statute to be definite enough to provide a standard of conduct for those whose activities are proscribed and a standard for police enforcement and for ascertainment of guilt. (35 C.3d 269; see 7 Summary (9th), Constitutional Law, §104.) The statute could not be more precise as a standard for law enforcement. (35 C.3d 270.) It is also adequate in giving "fair notice" to potential violators. The fact that it is impossible to determine by one's senses whether one's blood-alcohol level is a legal 0.09% or an illegal 0.10% is not a valid constitutional objection: fair notice requires only a "reasonable degree of certainty," which gives "fair warning," and the consumption of a quantity of alcohol gives a person of ordinary intelligence notice of the possibility of violating the statute. (35 C.3d 270, 271.) Moreover, charts, readily available to the public, show with reasonable certainty the number of different alcoholic beverages necessary for a particular individual to reach the prohibited blood-alcohol level. (35 C.3d 272.) (See People v. Lewis (1983) 148 C.A.3d 614, 196 C.R. 161 [decided before Burg, and reaching same conclusion on constitutional issue of certainty].)

D. Tests for Narcotics.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 56

[§ 56] Tests for Narcotics.

(1) Nalline Test. The Nalline test to determine narcotic addiction consists of an injection of Nalline ("a synthetic opiate antinarcotic in action") under the skin, and measurement of the pupils of the eyes. If the person tested has opiates in his or her system, the pupils will dilate. (See People v. Williams (1958) 164 C.A.2d Supp. 858, 860, 331 P.2d 251 [test voluntarily taken by defendant admissible]; People v. Zavala (1966) 239 C.A.2d 732, 737, 49 C.R. 129; People v. Sarkissian (1978) 81 C.A.3d 660, 664, 146 C.R. 508; 48 Cal. L. Rev. 282.)

(2) Statutory Authorization of Other Tests. Probationers, parolees, and suspected addicts may be tested for addiction to controlled substances by "whatever means is available." (Health & Saf.C. 11551 and 11552; see People v. Mendoza (1977) 76 C.A.3d Supp. 5, 8, 143 C.R. 404; 47 Proof of Facts 3d 203 [hair sample analysis to prove illegal drug use]; 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Public Peace and Welfare, §76.)

(3) Refusal and Improper Comment. Arrestees suspected of drug addiction must give their written consent before they can be tested. (Health & Saf.C. 11552.) Thus, where the suspect refuses to give such consent, it is error to admit the fact of the refusal in evidence, or to comment thereon. (People v. Zavala, supra, 239 C.A.2d 741.)

However, in People v. Sarkissian, supra, defendant, charged with being under the influence of a controlled substance (Health & Saf.C. 11550; 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Public Peace and Welfare, §73), refused to submit to a urine test. The fact of refusal was admitted in evidence despite defendant's contention that the ruling violated Health & Saf.C. 11552. Held, admission was proper. "[T]he applicability of section 11552 turns upon the giving of a test to determine addiction. In the absence of medical authority or evidence that addiction can be determined by urine testing, the request for a urine sample is not within the statute. As a consequence, ... [defendant] did not have the right to refuse to furnish the urine sample, and his refusal may be used against him at trial." (81 C.A.3d 664.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Statutory Authorization of Other Tests. See People v. Nolan (2002) 95 C.A.4th 1210, 1214, 116 C.R.2d 331 [testing of probationer's urine with ADX Abbott Bench Analyzer was not new scientific technique; urinalysis is medically accepted method of drug testing, and fact that machine was designed for use by drug counselors instead of laboratory technicians did not make it subject to Kelly rule (see text, §42)]; 22 California Lawyer 38 (December 2002) [effective examination regarding drug test results]. West's Key Number Digest, Criminal Law k.388.2

1. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 57

[§ 57] In General.

A number of scientific tests have been employed to analyze human blood, semen, saliva, tissue, hair, and other genetic material. Typically, these tests are performed in a criminal prosecution where the genetic material of a suspected perpetrator or victim is discovered at the crime scene, or in a civil action involving paternity or a claim of inheritance by a child born out of wedlock. (See 29 Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §560 et seq.) The most important and commonly used tests today are the following:

- (1) Blood group test. (See infra, §58.)
- (2) Electrophoresis. (See infra, §59 et seq.)
- (3) DNA typing. (See infra, §62 et seq.)

Other less frequently utilized tests include the agglutination inhibition test and presumptive tests to detect the presence of blood or other bodily fluids. (See infra, §67.)

2. Blood Group Test.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 58

[§ 58] Blood Group Test.

Blood, semen, saliva, and other bodily fluids may be typed or grouped by antigens classified under the traditional ABO blood grouping system as type A, AB, B, or O. (2 A.L.R.4th 500, 505 [Blood Grouping Tests--Criminal Cases]; see generally 3 Wharton, Criminal Evidence (14th ed.), §594; 40 Proof of Facts 2d 1 [Blood Typing].) In the case of bodily fluids other than blood, this grouping may only be performed if the fluid's source was a secretor, i.e., the subject secreted his or her blood type into his or her bodily fluids. Approximately 75% to 80% of humans are considered to be secretors. (See 75 A.L.R.4th 897, 903 [admissibility in prosecution for sex-related offense of results of tests on semen or seminal fluids].) Although the results of blood grouping tests can establish that a sample is not the blood of a particular person, it cannot conclusively establish that the sample is the blood of a particular person. (See 2 A.L.R.4th 500, 506.) This limitation has led to the use of the test primarily in paternity cases. (See infra, §68 et seq.; on use of test in criminal case not involving paternity, see infra, §81.)

[§ 59] Nature of Test.

Electrophoresis consists of the sophisticated typing of individual proteins and enzymes. A sample of blood stains or other bodily fluids is placed on a gel medium in an ionized buffer solution. When an electric current is run through the solution, the sample separates and migrates on the medium into characteristic patterns. These are then fixed, dyed, and read visually by the analyst. Although these patterns are not unique for each individual, their possible sources are more limited than those of other tests, such as the traditional blood grouping test (see supra, §58). Also, the test is a useful tool in crime scene analysis because only small samples of dried stains are needed. (People v. Yorba (1989) 209 C.A.3d 1017, 1022, footnote 1, 257 C.R. 641; see generally 66 A.L.R.4th 588 [electrophoresis of bloodstains]; 75 A.L.R.4th 897 [electrophoresis of semen stains]; 29 Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §573; 1 Jefferson, California Evidence Benchbook 3d, §21.61.)

b. Former Law: Reliability of Test Unproven.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 60

[§ 60] Former Law: Reliability of Test Unproven.

In People v. Brown (1985) 40 C.3d 512, 230 C.R. 834, 726 P.2d 516, defendant was convicted of rape and first degree murder. Two criminalists from the state Department of Justice were permitted to compare their genetic analyses of dried fluid and stain samples obtained from the victim's body and clothing with the results of electrophoretic blood grouping tests they had run on blood samples from the defendant and the victim. The crime scene stain samples were collected 8 to 12 hours after the victim's death, and in one instance, testing occurred 2 1/2 months later. Although the criminalists reported inconclusive results in certain instances, they determined that the crime scene stains were semen, the typing of which matched defendant's blood in certain of the categories tested, and that no test excluded defendant as a potential donor. Held, admission of the evidence was error, although harmless in view of an overwhelming amount of valid incriminating evidence.

(a) The prosecution failed to demonstrate the scientific acceptance of the electrophoretic stain test evidence. The criminalists, who were competent, well credentialed forensic technicians, testified that the tests were accepted and reliable. However: (1) These witnesses were unqualified to state the view of the relevant community of impartial scientists inasmuch as both had an identification with law enforcement, a career interest in acceptance of the tests, and a lack of formal training in the applicable scientific disciplines. (2) Neither witness backed up his opinion with a discussion of relevant scientific literature. (3) The witnesses' testimony indicated that procedures for testing the samples varied substantially from laboratory to laboratory and from analyst to analyst, with little attention to scientific confirmation of reliability. (4) The witnesses conceded that aged, dried, or contaminated samples could produce misleading results, and failed to explain how their test procedures overcame these dangers. (40 C.3d 533.)

(b) Electrophoretic stain testing is a technically complex, recent development, and the vast amount of literature on the subject could not be assimilated by lay judges without the help of expert testimony. Thus, the absence at trial of the interpretive assistance of qualified experts precluded an independent judicial determination that a consensus existed among the scientific community concerning the reliability of the test. (40 C.3d 533, 534.) "We do not suggest that such a consensus is lacking. We simply conclude that the answer must abide an adequate future trial record made with the help of live witnesses qualified in the applicable scientific disciplines. We therefore do not foreclose future attempts to admit stain-typing evidence based on a foundation such as we have described." (40 C.3d 534, 535.) (On reversal of People v. Brown by United States Supreme Court on other grounds, see California v. Brown (1987) 479 U.S. 538, 107 S.Ct. 837, 93 L.Ed.2d 934, 3 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Punishment, §495.)

IV. CHEMICAL AND PHYSICAL TESTS

E. Genetic Tests To Prove Identity.

3. Electrophoresis.

c. Current Law: Reliability of Test Established.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 61

[§ 61] Current Law: Reliability of Test Established.

In People v. Reilly (1987) 196 C.A.3d 1127, 242 C.R. 496, a murder case, the issue concerned the testing of dried bloodstains found in the house in which the crime took place, which were typed through electrophoresis and other processes as excluding any of the victims and statistically including defendant as a source. Held, the prosecution met its burden of showing that electrophoretic testing had gained general acceptance and that the technique was properly used.

(a) Relevant scientific community. "The important point with regard to disinterest is that the court had before it a broad range of backgrounds. It was able to assess general acceptance through their combined testimony regardless of any shortcomings that any of them would have suffered as a sole spokesperson for the general scientific community. The court did not limit its inquiry to particular witnesses but, instead, found that the 'totality' of witnesses constituted the relevant field. We agree. It would be a strange perversion of Kelly/Frye to exclude the opinions of analysts, at least well-credentialed ones. Those who work closest to a technique may be uniquely aware of inherent reliability problems. Also, it was particularly important to have actual analysts testify in this case because a major part of defendant's challenge was to the ability of analysts to differentiate between reliable and unreliable results." (196 C.A.3d 1140.)

(b) General acceptance. The trial court found no significant dispute in the scientific community, despite the testimony of a defense expert who "stands virtually alone in his opposition" to this kind of evidence. The Kelly test is met if use of the technique is supported by a clear majority of the members of that community. (196 C.A.3d 1148.)

(c) Expert's qualifications and use of correct scientific procedures. The Kelly standard also requires a showing that the expert presenting the scientific evidence is qualified to give an opinion and that correct scientific procedures were used. "The fact that our courts impose this case-specific burden bolsters our conclusion that potentially unresolved questions of deterioration or contamination do not invalidate the technique as a whole. Rather, if those questions are serious enough on the facts of a particular case, they can be addressed in the second phase of Kelly/Frye and, of course, before the trier of fact at trial should the evidence be ruled admissible. The trial court in this case observed, and we agree, that competent attorneys will be able to absorb enough of the relevant literature to effectively cross-examine on the subject. The record before us confirms that." (196 C.A.3d 1153.)

Following the Reilly case, a succession of decisions from the California Courts of Appeal upheld the scientific validity of electrophoretic testing of dried bloodstains and other bodily fluids. (See People v. Morris (1988) 199 C.A.3d 377, 383, 245 C.R. 52; People v. Yorba (1989) 209 C.A.3d 1017, 1022, 1024, 257 C.R. 641; People v. Ashmus (1991) 54 C.3d 932, 2 C.R.2d 112, 820 P.2d 214, supra, §15.)

The court in People v. Smith (1989) 215 C.A.3d 19, 26, 263 C.R. 678, observed that appellate endorsement of electrophoretic multisystem testing of stains eliminates the need for further case by case adjudication. And this view ultimately was adopted by the California Supreme Court. (See People v. Morris (1991) 53 C.3d 152, 207, 279 C.R. 720, 807 P.2d 949; People v. Cooper (1991) 53 C.3d 771, 812, 281 C.R. 90, 809 P.2d 865; People v. Fierro (1991) 1 C.4th 173, 214, 3 C.R.2d 426, 821 P.2d 1302.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See People v. Bolden (2002) 29 C.4th 515, 545, 127 C.R.2d 802, 58 P.3d 931 [because prior appellate decisions have found electrophoretic multisystem testing of blood to be scientifically accepted technique, trial judge in murder prosecution did not err in limiting Kelly hearing to whether person who performed test at issue used correct scientific procedures]; *People v. ### IV. CHEMICAL AND PHYSICAL TESTS

E. Genetic Tests To Prove Identity.

4. DNA Typing.

a. Nature and Types of Tests.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 62

[§ 62] Nature and Types of Tests.

(1) Nature of Tests. Deoxyribonucleic acid (DNA) typing is based on fundamental principles of human genetics, and was originally developed by molecular biologists to determine the genes responsible for a variety of inherited diseases. The methodology involves the isolation, identification, and comparison of certain highly distinguishing characteristics in the genetic structure of individuals, as revealed by an analysis of DNA extracted from bodily fluid or tissue samples, and a statistical calculation of the frequency with which these characteristics may be expected to appear in the population. (84 A.L.R.4th 313, 318 [admissibility of DNA profiling evidence]; see 22 Hastings Const. L. Q. 1 [DNA mapping and matching; legal complications of classifying individuals by group]; 18 Pepperdine L. Rev. 123 [DNA profiling: the case for caution]; 22 Pepperdine L. Rev. 1288 [admissibility of DNA profiling evidence]; 26 San Diego L. Rev. 377 [DNA profiling]; 42 Stanf. L. Rev. 465 [same]; 8 Proof of Facts 3d 749 [Foundation For DNA Fingerprint Evidence]; 36 Proof of Facts 3d 1, 18 [proof of identity or paternity by use of Polymerase Chain Reaction test].)

DNA typing is based on the universally accepted principle that no two people (other than identical twins) share exactly the same genetic configuration; that the length and composition of certain DNA base-pair sequences varies from one individual to another at several million sites along the human chromosome; and that by examining the sizes of enough fragments at different sites on different chromosomes, statistical procedures based on known sequence frequencies in the population may be employed to establish the uniqueness of any one person's DNA pattern. (29 Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §574.)

DNA testing, which is currently performed by several commercial laboratories and the Federal Bureau of Investigation, may become an issue in a criminal prosecution where human bodily fluids or tissue from a suspected perpetrator or a victim are discovered at a crime scene, or in a civil action involving paternity (see infra, §68 et seq.) or a claim of inheritance by a child born out of wedlock. (84 A.L.R.4th 313, 319; 36 Proof of Facts 3d 1, 18; see 108 Harv. L. Rev. 1557 [DNA evidence and criminal defense]; 22 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 609 [DNA fingerprinting and paternity testing].)

(2) Types of Tests. Two kinds of DNA tests are now in forensic use:

(a) Restriction fragment length polymorphism (RFLP) analysis generally is considered to be the DNA typing method of choice because it employs a greater number of genetic markers in producing the DNA typing, which provides a higher level of discrimination from one person to the next. (36 Proof of Facts 3d 1, 30.) RFLP testing has three discrete steps: (1) processing of a DNA sample from a relevant source (e.g., suspected genetic material found at a crime scene) and a DNA sample from a relevant subject (e.g., genetic material of criminal defendant) to produce X-ray films (autorads) that indicate the lengths of the polymorphic fragments of each sample; (2) examination of the autorads of both samples to determine whether any sets of fragments match; and (3) if there is a match, determination of the match's statistical significance. (People v. Venegas (1998) 18 C.4th 47, 60, 74 C.R.2d 262, 954 P.2d 525, infra, §65; see infra, §63 et seq.)

(b) Polymerase chain reaction (PCR) amplification analysis is utilized for forensic DNA typing where the DNA in a sample is so minuscule or degraded, or is of such poor genetic quality, that standard RFLP analysis, which requires a substantially large and environmentally undegraded sample of DNA, cannot be employed. PCR testing first requires that the sample be cleaned and purified to remove foreign debris and noncellular material. Thereafter, the sample is subjected to a three-step process of denaturation, primer annealing, and amplification. Lastly, a three-step methodology, similar to that used in RFLP testing, is conducted. (36 Proof of Facts 3d 1, 16, 30; see infra, §66.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Nature of Tests. See P.C. 680 [Sexual Assault Victims' DNA Bill of Rights]; 74 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1275 [how DNA-match statistics may be used to seem impressive or insufficient]; 23 California Lawyer 40 (April 2003) [practical applications of DNA analysis]; 97 Proof of Facts 3d 249 [identification of seminal fluids].(3) (New Distinction: DNA Database as Investigative Tool. Use of a DNA database to identify a possible suspect (i.e., a "cold hit") is an investigative technique and is not subject to the Kelly rule (text, §42). Kelly is concerned with the effect of scientific evidence on the jury. The fact that the perpetrator's features appear to match those of someone in the database does not affect the strength of the evidence against the eventual defendant; it is simply a starting point for the investigation. (People v. Johnson (2006) 139 C.A.4th 1135, 1150, 1151, 43 C.R.3d 587 [submission of sperm cells found on vaginal smear to FBI's Combined DNA Index System led to "hit" on defendant, then in state prison, and further investigation led to his being charged with rape; opinion did not address situation where fact of preliminary, "cold hit" match from offender database is offered as evidence of guilt].)

IV. CHEMICAL AND PHYSICAL TESTS

E. Genetic Tests To Prove Identity.

4. DNA Typing.

b. RFLP Test.

1. Uncertainty in Court of Appeals.

aa. Test Found Reliable.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 63

[§ 63] Test Found Reliable.

"The issue presented is one of first impression in this state: does DNA typing evidence meet the legal requirements for admissibility of novel scientific evidence and, if so, whether the basis for the calculation of statistical probability employed by the testing laboratory, Cellmark in this case, satisfied the foundation requirements of People v. Collins. We answer both questions in the affirmative." (People v. Axell (1991) 235 C.A.3d 836, 842, 1 C.R.2d 411, citing People v. Collins (1968) 68 C.2d 319, 66 C.R. 497, 438 P.2d 33, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Opinion Evidence, §78.)

The elaborate opinion in People v. Axell covers the scientific and legal background of this subject, as follows:

(a) The nature of DNA. (235 C.A.3d 844.)

(b) DNA "fingerprinting." (235 C.A.3d 846.)

(c) Statistical analysis. (235 C.A.3d 847.)

(d) Expert witnesses. (235 C.A.3d 848.)

(e) Standard of review. (235 C.A.3d 853.)

(f) Relevance of decisions in other jurisdictions. (235 C.A.3d 854.)

(g) Qualifications of experts. "Since DNA profiling is an amalgamation of primarily two disciplines, molecular biology and population genetics ... , it appears logical to consider its acceptance by those communities for forensic use." (235 C.A.3d 857.) "Here, the trial court heard the opinion of a wider spectrum of scientists than simply molecular biologists and population geneticists. Evidence disclosed that where forensic scientists, molecular biologists, population geneticists, attorneys, and government policymakers gathered at a multidisciplinary conference in December 1988, they concluded that DNA typing was usable in the analysis of forensic evidence." (235 C.A.3d 857.)

(h) Procedures used by testing laboratory. "It is the weaknesses both in actual procedures followed and in statistical calculations revealed by concerted defense challenges that have prevented introduction of this new technique in some criminal trials." (235 C.A.3d 861.) "Due to the complexity of the DNA multisystem identification tests and the powerful impact that this evidence may have on a jury, satisfying Frye alone is insufficient to place this type of evidence before a jury without a preliminary critical examination of the actual testing procedures performed. ... Accordingly, we adhere to the traditional view that the third prong of the Kelly test is also the subject of a pretrial hearing on the question of admissibility." (235 C.A.3d 862.)

"We hold that the procedures used in this case were the ones generally accepted as reliable in the scientific community. That defense witnesses found fault with particular aspects of the test or thought the protocol could have been improved did not invalidate the testimony of prosecution witnesses, especially since some of the improvements suggested, such as the ASCLD and CACLD guidelines, are not mandatory and suggestions such as the 'mixing' experiment were not shown to be generally acceptable to forensic scientists." (235 C.A.3d 862.)

(i) Foundation for calculating statistical probability. Because a match between two DNA samples means little without data on probability, the calculation of statistical probability is an integral part of the process and the underlying method of arriving at that calculation must pass muster under Kelly. (235 C.A.3d 866.) In People v. Collins, supra, the technique suffered from two basic and pervasive defects--an inadequate evidentiary foundation and an inadequate proof of statistical independence which is essential to the proper application of the "product" or "multiplication" rule. (235 C.A.3d 865.) Here the prosecution showed that the method used by Cellmark to arrive at its database and statistical probabilities was generally accepted in the scientific community. "Any question or criticism of the size of the data base or the ratio pertains to weight of the evidence and not to its admissibility." (235 C.A.3d 868.) (See People v. Barney (1992) 8 C.A.4th 798, 811, 814, 10 C.R.2d 731, infra, §64 [DNA processing and matching steps have achieved general acceptance, but "product rule" of statistical analysis had not achieved general acceptance]; People v. Taylor (1995) 33 C.A.4th 262, 269, 40 C.R.2d 132 [ceiling frequency approach of statistical analysis step discussed in Barney has achieved general acceptance].)

The California Supreme Court ultimately approved the use of DNA evidence as a tool in identifying the perpetrator in a criminal case (see People v. Venegas (1998) 18 C.4th 47, 74 C.R.2d 262, 954 P.2d 525, infra, §65), and held that the "unmodified product rule" approach of calculating statistical probability discussed in Barney has now achieved general acceptance (People v. Soto (1999) 21 C.4th 512, 518, 88 C.R.2d 34, 981 P.2d 958, infra, §65).

[§ 64] Test Not Found Reliable.

People v. Barney (1992) 8 C.A.4th 798, 10 C.R.2d 731, covers the scientific and legal background of DNA testing (8 C.A.4th 805), and agrees with some of the conclusions reached in People v. Axell (1991) 235 C.A.3d 836, 1 C.R.2d 411, supra, §63. (8 C.A.4th 811, 817, 823.) But the court nevertheless held that one element of DNA analysis--the then current "unmodified product rule" of determining the statistical significance of a match between a defendant's DNA and the DNA in bodily material found at the crime scene--did not satisfy the Kelly test. (8 C.A.4th 802, 817, 820, 822.)

The opinion contains a number of comments on this issue:

(a) "To end the Kelly-Frye inquiry at the matching step, and leave it to jurors to assess the current scientific debate on statistical calculation as a matter of weight rather than admissibility, would stand Kelly-Frye on its head. We would be asking jurors to do what judges carefully avoid--decide the substantive merits of competing scientific opinion as to the reliability of a novel method of scientific proof. We cannot reasonably ask the average juror to decide such arcane questions as to whether genetic substructuring and linkage disequilibrium preclude use of the Hardy-Weinberg equation and the product rule, when we ourselves have struggled to grasp these concepts. The result would be predictable. The jury would simply skip to the bottom line--the only aspect of the process that is readily understood--and look at the ultimate expression of match probability, without competently assessing the reliability of the process by which the laboratory got to the bottom line." (8 C.A.4th 817.)

(b) "Whatever the merits of the prior decisions on the statistical calculation process--including Axell--the debate that erupted in Science in December 1991 changes the scientific landscape considerably, and demonstrates indisputably that there is no general acceptance of the current process. It has become irrelevant how Axell addressed this issue at the time of the decision's filing in October 1991. The situation is somewhat analogous to a 'change in the attitude of the scientific community' which undermines a previously correct judicial determination of general acceptance. ... Simply put, Axell has been eclipsed on this point by subsequent scientific developments. In reaching a conclusion different from that in Axell, we do not express disagreement with Axell's reasoning at the time, but rather have progressed to a point on the continuum of scientific debate which neither the Axell court nor the two trial courts in the present cases could have anticipated." (8 C.A.4th 820.)

(c) The National Research Council (NRC) report on DNA analysis appears to point the way to a common ground as to which there is general scientific agreement. "The report proposes a method of statistical calculation which accounts for the possibility of population substructuring, eliminates ethnicity as a factor in the calculation process, and permits the use of the product rule while ensuring that probability estimates are appropriately conservative. The report proposes a 'ceiling frequency' approach, in which DNA samples from 15 to 20 homogeneous populations will be analyzed for allele frequencies. In subsequent analysis of the DNA of a suspect or crime scene sample, each allele will be assigned the highest frequency that appears in the tested populations, or 5 percent, whichever is greater. These frequencies will then be multiplied together using the product rule." (8 C.A.4th 821.) Until the ceiling approach is in place, the report suggests interim methods that should be used. (8 C.A.4th 822.) (See People v. Wallace (1993) 14 C.A.4th 651, 660, 17 C.R.2d 721 [following Barney]; 30 Cal. Western L. Rev. 145, 170 [Barney]; 24 Western State L. Rev. 115 [describing case law conflict created by Barney and suggesting methods for avoiding inconsistent admission of scientific evidence].)

In People v. Pizarro (1992) 10 C.A.4th 57, 12 C.R.2d 436, defendant, an Hispanic, was convicted of rape and murder partly on the basis of DNA testing establishing that DNA from semen taken from the victim matched defendant's known blood sample. An expert witness testified that the likelihood of finding another unrelated Hispanic individual with a similar profile was approximately 1 in 250,000. The testing had been performed by the FBI, which used a different methodology from that employed by Cellmark, the laboratory which had performed the testing in People v. Axell, supra.

Defendant objected to the introduction of the test results, but presented no rebuttal evidence. However, on appeal he submitted numerous articles criticizing the use of DNA identification. Held, judgment reversed, and case remanded with directions to determine whether the testing procedure and database used by the FBI are generally accepted by the scientific community.

(a) DNA identification evidence.

(1) "In the context of the Axell case, the reviewing court and the trial court concluded that the test performed by Cellmark passed Kelly/Frye muster. Assuming the manner in which Cellmark performs the RFLP tests has passed Kelly/Frye scrutiny then, under the Kelly case, the proponent of such evidence in subsequent cases would not need to re-address the Kelly/Frye foundation. ... However, assuming the RFLP test were to come up before a different trial court having the benefit of the Axell decision, and the protocol for performing the test was distinct from the Cellmark procedure, then the trial court would not be relieved from Kelly/Frye scrutiny of that distinct protocol." (10 C.A.4th 77.) And the reason that this would not be merely an issue of weight, but instead would be one of admissibility, "is because the question would not be whether a particular method deemed reliable was followed, but whether the particular method followed may be deemed reliable." (10 C.A.4th 77.)

(2) Defendant argued that the protocols, restraining enzymes, probes, matching criteria and data bases used by the FBI were different from those used by Cellmark. In the absence of proof that the FBI's protocol for performing the RFLP test is the same as Cellmark's, it is impossible to determine whether the FBI protocols enjoy the same acceptance in the scientific community as did the Cellmark protocol at the time Axell was decided. And from the record here it is impossible to evaluate whether the purported differences between the two protocols have any scientific consequences with respect to the reliability of the process or are nothing more than the distinction between using a brand name drug and its generic equivalent. (10 C.A.4th 78.)

(3) The only testimony regarding the procedures used by the FBI was presented by Dr. Adams, an FBI agent who had been assigned to the DNA unit since its inception. Despite Dr. Adams' stellar qualifications, his testimony was insufficient to establish general acceptance in the scientific community. "Prior to admitting testimony as potentially damaging as DNA forensic identification, the prosecutor should have been required to demonstrate through the testimony of at least one impartial expert witness that the protocols and/or procedure of the FBI were generally accepted within the scientific community as reliable. This is particularly so since the resolution of the Kelly/Frye issue regarding the FBI DNA test will resolve that issue for the trial courts." (10 C.A.4th 80.)

(b) Viability of database study.

(1) In order to establish the significance of a match, within a particular racial or ethnic population, between the DNA bands of the perpetrator and the suspect, tests are performed to determine the frequency of appearance of the different bands within the target population, i.e., the population to which the suspect belongs. "The underlying theory behind all of this is that the ratio of band patterns will vary among different racial and ethnic groups. In other words, while a band pattern may not be distinct to particular racial or ethnic groups, it may occur with different frequency within different racial or ethnic groups. For purposes of illustration, a particular band pattern may appear 3 percent of the time in the Black population, 5 percent of the time in the Hispanic population and 7 percent of the time in the non-Hispanic Caucasian population." (10 C.A.4th 81.)

(2) However, there is a dispute within the scientific community on the effect of subgrouping. "Generally speaking, the selection of a data base from a general population group (Black) as opposed to a subgroup (Blacks of Nigerian descent, for illustration purposes) is predicated on a concept of random mating within the general group without regard to religion, ethnicity and geography. ... The concept of subgrouping assumes that within each ethnic/racial population group there are subgroups that tend to mate within the specific subgroups ... based upon such factors as religion or like ethnicity or geographical differences, etc. Subgrouping would assume that based upon actual mating practices, as opposed to general mating practices, that genetic differences would develop between subgroups. Therefore, subgroups (Puerto Rican Hispanics, for example) within a general population (Hispanic, for example) would show significant differences in the frequency of a given allele pattern which is reflected in the banding pattern." (10 C.A.4th 81.) Within the scientific community, some experts argue that there is a need to account for subcultural deviation within the general population, while others contend that such deviation is of relatively little importance in determining how common or rare an event is within a particular population. (10 C.A.4th 84, 86.)

(3) Axell utilized an ethnic database to reach a statistical probability, but did not specifically resolve the question whether the effect or lack of effect of subgrouping is generally accepted in the scientific community. This issue must be resolved by a Kelly analysis; i.e., "[i]n order for the data base to be reliable the theory of genetics upon which it is predicated must be an established scientific principle which we assess by its having gained general acceptance in the particular field to which it belongs." (10 C.A.4th 83.)

(4) Nothing in the record before the trial judge, which consisted only of Dr. Adams' testimony as to the validity of both the RFLP test and the database, deals with this controversy. And based upon the submitted documents, which serve only to make it clear that sharp controversy exists, it would be inappropriate for an appellate court to conclude that there is or is not general acceptance in the scientific community of the genetic theory underlying the database employed by the FBI. In cases of this complexity, the issue of general scientific acceptance must first be resolved by the trial court. (10 C.A.4th 89.)

(5) Even assuming that there is a consensus as to the genetic theory upon which the database is predicated, it must be remembered that the validity of the database is also dependent upon the DNA test utilized to analyze the individual allele pattern of each of the persons in the population chosen to make up the database. "Thus, the DNA testing aspect of the data base cannot escape foundational scrutiny." (10 C.A.4th 90.)

(c) Validity of statistical method utilized.

(1) The DNA identification of defendant as the perpetrator of the crime was based on the following reasoning: (a) defendant's DNA banding patterns matched the patterns obtained from the semen samples taken from the victim; (b) the frequency of that banding pattern in the Hispanic population is 1 in 250,000; (c) defendant is Hispanic; (d) hence, the chance that the semen came from someone other than defendant is 250,000 to 1. The problem with this reasoning is that the relevance of the statistical probability depends on the perpetrator being the same racial or ethnic background as the suspect. But, because all population groups share common allele patterns, it is impossible to determine the perpetrator's race or ethnicity from evidence left at the crime scene. (10 C.A.4th 92.)

(2) In terms of Ev.C. 403 (3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §54), the proffered evidence is the result of a statistical analysis which utilizes ratios assigned to particular racial or ethnic databases, and the preliminary fact upon which the relevance of this evidence depends is the racial or ethnic background of the perpetrator, not the suspect. "If the only way you can conclude that the perpetrator fits a racial/ethnic category is to assume the perpetrator was the same race/ethnic background as the suspect then the reasoning is circular, i.e.: proof of the racial/ethnic background of the perpetrator depends on the racial/ethnic background of the suspect from which we infer a statistical probability that the perpetrator is the suspect. Absent proof sufficient under Evidence Code section 403 to support the preliminary fact as to the racial/ethnic background of the perpetrator, we see no relevancy to a data base selected because of the racial/ethnic background of the suspect/defendant." (10 C.A.4th 94.) Whether such proof exists in this case must be determined on remand. (10 C.A.4th 94.)

(3) The Ev.C. 403 problem does not occur if the general population database, which has been created without regard to race or ethnic background, is utilized. This approach establishes a degree of probability that the suspect is the perpetrator, but it does so without assuming that the suspect and the perpetrator belong to the same ethnic/racial background. And the probative value of DNA matches using the general population may well be substantial, e.g., one in 5,000 or even one in 5 million. (10 C.A.4th 94.)

In closing, the court directed the trial judge to reinstate the conviction and sentence if, after a "full blown" Kelly hearing, the judge determines that the procedures employed by the FBI as well as the database in question are generally accepted in the relevant scientific community. (10 C.A.4th 95.)

The California Supreme Court ultimately approved the use of DNA evidence as a tool in identifying the perpetrator in a criminal case, criticized, in part, the Pizarro opinion (see People v. Venegas (1998) 18 C.4th 47, 74 C.R.2d 262, 954 P.2d 525, infra, §65), and held that the "unmodified product rule" approach of calculating statistical probability discussed in Barney has now achieved general acceptance (People v. Soto (1999) 21 C.4th 512, 518, 88 C.R.2d 34, 981 P.2d 958, infra, §65).

Pizarro* (1992) 10 C.A.4th 57, 12 C.R.2d 436, text, p. 78; improper reliance on defendant's traits to establish facts necessary to render DNA evidence relevant provided insufficient foundation for admission, resulting in jury's receiving unreliable and irrelevant evidence regarding match between perpetrator's and defendant's genetic profiles and rarity of perpetrator's profile in population]; on disapproval of one aspect of this holding, see *People v. [§ 65] Reliability of Test Established.

In People v. Venegas (1998) 18 C.4th 47, 74 C.R.2d 262, 954 P.2d 525, the California Supreme Court reversed defendant's conviction but generally approved the use of DNA evidence as a tool in identifying the perpetrator in a criminal case. Defendant was found guilty of rape based on evidence that his DNA profile matched the DNA profile of semen recovered from the victim's body and from the crime scene, and that the probability of a match between those profiles and the profile of a person chosen at random from the general population was 1 in 65,000. The Court of Appeal reversed, finding (a) that the prosecution failed to prove that the methodology used by the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) in performing its DNA analysis had gained general scientific acceptance; and (b) that the FBI had failed to comply with procedures recommended by the National Research Council (NRC) for determining the statistical probability of a random match. Held, judgment of the Court of Appeal affirmed; the FBI's failure to use correct procedures in this case required exclusion of the DNA evidence.

(a) Kelly requirements satisfied by processing and matching of DNA fragments. The technique used by the FBI in this case--restriction fragment length polymorphism (RFLP) analysis--has three discrete steps: (1) processing of DNA from the suspect and crime scene to produce X-ray films (autorads) indicating the lengths of the polymorphic fragments; (2) examination of the autorads to determine whether any sets of fragments match; and (3) if there is a match, determination of the match's statistical significance. (18 C.4th 60.) As to the first two of these steps, the cases of People v. Axell (1991) 235 C.A.3d 836, 842, 1 C.R.2d 411, supra, §63, and People v. Barney (1992) 8 C.A.4th 798, 10 C.R.2d 731, supra, §64, have already established that the general scientific acceptance requirement of People v. Kelly (1976) 17 C.3d 24, 130 C.R. 144, 549 P.2d 1240, supra, §42, is satisfied. The Court of Appeal erred in concluding that Axell established scientific acceptance of the RFLP procedures used by Cellmark (the laboratory in that case), but not the FBI's. The record of the Kelly hearing held in the trial court also supports the trial judge's determination that, at least up through the matching of defendant's known DNA samples with the questioned DNA samples, another of the Kelly requirements--that the procedures actually used in the case be in compliance with the methodology and technique as generally accepted by the scientific community--was satisfied. (18 C.4th 78, 79, criticizing the opinion in People v. Pizarro (1992) 10 C.A.4th 57, 12 C.R.2d 436, supra, §64, for overlooking the distinction between these two Kelly requirements and subjecting the actual FBI procedures used to their own scientific acceptance test.)

(b) General scientific acceptance of statistical probability methodology. The statistical phase of the DNA analysis is subject to the same Kelly requirements: the methodology used must be generally accepted in the scientific community, and the calculations in the particular case must follow correct scientific procedures. Application of the "product rule" is the most straightforward method for determining the statistical probability that the DNA profile of any one person selected at random from the relevant population will match the features of the evidentiary sample. However, the product rule, used in conjunction with the separate racial or ethnic databases maintained by each laboratory engaging in DNA analysis, has been criticized for failing to take into account the existence of genetically distinct subpopulations within each racial or ethnic category. For this reason, the FBI applied a "modified ceiling principle," which is specifically designed to avoid any possible prejudice to a suspect resulting from an unmodified product rule approach. (18 C.4th 67, 68.) "Based on our review of the NRC reports, legal commentaries, scientific literature, and consideration and acceptance of the modified ceiling method in the published decisions of several California appellate courts as well as courts of many other jurisdictions, we conclude such methodology has been generally accepted in the relevant scientific community, and that statistical probability calculations of random matches of DNA profiles computed under that methodology are admissible under the Kelly test." (18 C.4th 89.)

(c) Failure to follow correct scientific procedures. At the Kelly hearing in the trial court, an expert witness for the defense testified that the FBI's "floating bins" (the ranges that the database bands representing the size of DNA fragments were sorted into, for purposes of producing the statistical probabilities) were too narrow. The trial judge ruled that this testimony raised only factual questions going to the weight of the evidence. This was error. "The Court of Appeal should have recognized the trial court's error in this regard, and held instead that the FBI's use of improperly sized floating bins was a failure to follow correct scientific procedures" under the Kelly test. As testimony from both sides confirmed the defect pointed out by the defense expert, "[t]here was no substantial evidence upon which to base a contrary conclusion, and therefore the trial court abused its discretion in not excluding the flawed statistical approach." (18 C.4th 92, 93.)

(d) Prejudice and retrial. The prosecutor conceded below that without the DNA evidence there was insufficient evidence for a finding of guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, and the Attorney General did not argue to the contrary on appeal. Therefore, it is reasonably probable that defendant would have had a more favorable verdict in the absence of the erroneously admitted DNA evidence, and the conviction must be reversed.

"In the event of a retrial, the prosecution will be free to introduce one or more recomputed analyses of the relevant DNA data in this case after demonstrating that such statistical results were generated by either of the following means: (1) recalculation of statistical probabilities under the NRC's modified ceiling approach, arrived at through use of correct scientific procedures consistent with the views expressed herein, or (2) recalculation made by using correct scientific procedures under any other statistical methodology that is otherwise demonstrated to have gained general acceptance in the relevant scientific community, within the purview of the Kelly test, since the first trial." (18 C.4th 95.)

In People v. Soto (1999) 21 C.4th 512, 88 C.R.2d 34, 981 P.2d 958, the Supreme Court revisited the "unmodified product rule" approach of calculating statistical probability discussed in Barney. The Barney court correctly observed that substantial debate was ensuing at the time of its decision over the effects, if any, of population substructuring on probability calculations made using the unmodified product rule. (21 C.4th 537.) However, subsequent to Barney, it is evident from "the clear weight of judicial authority, and the published scientific commentary, that the unmodified product rule, as used in DNA forensic analysis in this case, has gained general acceptance in the relevant scientific community and therefore meets the Kelly standard for admissibility." (21 C.4th 541.)

In People v. Morganti (1996) 43 C.A.4th 643, 657, 50 C.R.2d 837, defendant challenged the admission of the results of DNA typing using polymerase chain reaction (PCR) analysis. Although this type of stain testing had not previously been approved in any published California opinion, the court, after conducting "a fair overview of the literature," approved the trial judge's findings that "there is no significant controversy or dispute with respect to the reliability of this method and that the evidence did not indicate any flaw in the method or its use." (43 C.A.4th 663.) (See People v. Wright (1998) 62 C.A.4th 31, 41, 72 C.R.2d 246 [following Morganti as to scientific acceptance of PCR analysis; defendant's contentions regarding possible contamination of samples and lack of rigorousness of lab procedures went to weight of evidence, not admissibility]; *People v. ## CHAPTER VII - Demonstrative, Experimental, and Scientific Evidence

E. Genetic Tests To Prove Identity.

5. Other Tests.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 67

[§ 67] Other Tests.

(1) Agglutination Inhibition Test. This process detects the presence of specific genetic markers in the bloodstream. Samples are dissolved in a saline solution and centrifuged to remove debris. A chemical known as an "agglutinator" is added to a liquid that remains to determine the presence of a specific genetic marker. If the marker is present, the agglutinator will chemically bind with it and neutralize. To discover whether this has occurred, antigen coated indicator cells are added to the extract; these cells react only to the specific agglutinator used. There is no reaction if the agglutinator has neutralized. If it has not, however, the indicator cells clump together; and it is then known that the sample does not contain the particular genetic marker tested. Separate tests determine the presence of other genetic markers. (People v. Yorba (1989) 209 C.A.3d 1017, 1024, footnote 5, 257 C.R. 641.)

Scientific acceptance of the test has been established, and the results obtained are admissible. (People v. Yorba, supra; People v. Morganti (1996) 43 C.A.4th 643, 657, 50 C.R.2d 837, supra, §66.)

(2) Presumptive Tests To Detect Blood and Other Bodily Fluids. Presumptive tests to detect the presence of blood and other bodily fluids have been admissible in California for more than 50 years. (See People v. Alcalde (1944) 24 C.2d 177, 182, 148 P.2d 627 [type of test not identified]; People v. Talbot (1966) 64 C.2d 691, 708, 51 C.R. 417, 414 P.2d 633 [same]; People v. Burgener (1986) 41 C.3d 505, 526, 224 C.R. 112, 714 P.2d 1251 [same]; 1 Am.Jur. Trials 555 [benzidine tests]; 22 Proof of Facts 385, 429 [infrared absorption analysis]; 29 Proof of Facts 461, 500 [thin layer and paper chromatography].)

However, in People v. Coleman (1988) 46 C.3d 749, 251 C.R. 83, 759 P.2d 1260, the court, though acknowledging the general admissibility of these tests, held that the results of a "hemostick" blood test were not admissible because there was no evidence as to the type of presumptive test performed. "[W]e cannot simply assume it is ... generally accepted." (46 C.3d 775.)

And neutron activation analysis, which is a method using radiation to detect trace elements in samples of materials for the purpose of identifying the source of those materials, is not a reliable scientific technique to identify bodily fluids because of sample contamination problems. (See 59 Cal. L. Rev. 997, 1057; 50 A.L.R.3d 117, 120; 15 Proof of Facts 115, 134; on permissible uses of neutron activation analysis, see infra, §109.)

IV. CHEMICAL AND PHYSICAL TESTS

F. Genetic Tests for Nonpaternity or Paternity.

1. Tests for Nonpaternity.

a. Nature of Test and Former Law.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 68

[§ 68] Nature of Test and Former Law.

The Landsteiner classification of blood groups, as improved by later scientific studies, is the basis of a widely recognized test of nonpaternity of a person asserted to be the father of a child. The medical profession generally regards this test, when properly conducted, as practically conclusive on that issue. And this is the present view of courts and commentators: "As far as the accuracy, reliability, dependability--even infallibility--of the test are concerned, there is no longer any controversy. The result of the test is universally accepted by distinguished scientific and medical authority. There is, in fact, no living authority of repute, medical or legal, who may be cited adversely. ... [T]here is now ... practically universal and unanimous judicial willingness to give decisive and controlling evidentiary weight to a blood test exclusion of paternity." (Little v. Streater (1981) 452 U.S. 1, 101 S.Ct. 2202, 2206, 68 L.Ed.2d 627, 633, quoting Schatkin, Disputed Paternity Proceedings; see 2 McCormick 5th, §211; 1A Wigmore (Tillers Rev.) §165a; 43 A.L.R.4th 579 [admissibility and weight of blood grouping tests in disputed paternity cases]; 87 A.L.R.4th 572 [admissibility and compellability of blood test to establish testee's nonpaternity for purpose of challenging testee's parental rights]; on DNA typing to prove identity, see supra, §62 et seq.)

In Arais v. Kalensnikoff (1937) 10 C.2d 428, 432, 74 P.2d 1043, a finding of paternity, based on evidence of frequent sexual relations and other facts, was upheld despite a court-appointed physician's report that the Landsteiner test showed that defendant could not be the father. The court pointed to former C.C.P. 1978 ("no evidence is by law made conclusive or unanswerable unless so declared" by the Code), and held that the weight of the expert testimony was a matter for the trier of fact. (See Berry v. Chaplin (1946) 74 C.A.2d 652, 664, 169 P.2d 442 [following Arais case]; 39 Cal. L. Rev. 277.)

The Arais case is no longer law, and C.C.P. 1978 was repealed in 1965. (See infra, §69.)

IV. CHEMICAL AND PHYSICAL TESTS

F. Genetic Tests for Nonpaternity or Paternity.

1. Tests for Nonpaternity.

b. Uniform Act and Family Code.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 69

[§ 69] Uniform Act and Family Code.

(1) In General. The Uniform Act on Blood Tests To Determine Paternity was approved by the Commissioners in 1952, and in 1960 was incorporated into the Uniform Act on Paternity (9B U.L.A. (Master Ed.), p. 347), which was withdrawn in 1973. As of 1973, the Uniform Act on Blood Tests To Determine Paternity had been enacted in nine jurisdictions, and the Uniform Act on Paternity in four jurisdictions. (See 9B U.L.A. (Master Ed.), p. 347.) The Uniform Act on Blood Tests to Determine Paternity was adopted in California in 1953 and now is Family C. 7550 et seq. It applies in civil actions in which paternity is a "relevant fact" (Family C. 7551), and in criminal cases (Family C. 7556). (See infra, §76 et seq.; for rule of uniform construction, see Family C. 3.)

(2) Civil Paternity Proceedings. The basic provision of the statute is as follows:

In a civil action or proceeding in which paternity is a relevant fact, the court may, on its own initiative, or on the suggestion of a person who is involved, order the mother, child, and alleged father to submit to genetic tests. The court must issue the order on a timely motion of a party. If a party refuses to submit to the tests, the court may resolve the question of paternity against that party, or enforce its order if the rights of others and the interests of justice so require. A party's refusal to submit also is admissible in evidence in a proceeding to determine paternity. "Genetic tests" means any genetic test that is generally acknowledged as reliable by accreditation bodies designed by the United States Secretary of Health and Human Services. (Family C. 7551.)

Although ordinarily the "alleged father" is the defendant, the statute does not expressly exclude others. Hence, the test may be requested for other men where the defendant offers evidence of their possible paternity. (Huntingdon v. Crowley (1966) 64 C.2d 647, 651, 51 C.R. 254, 414 P.2d 382.)

(3) Support Enforcement Proceedings by District Attorney. In a case in which the district attorney's office is providing support enforcement services, the district attorney may issue an administrative order requiring the mother, child, and alleged father to submit to genetic testing, providing one of several enumerated conditions exists. However, any person ordered to submit to testing may seek judicial relief, in which case the court must proceed as specified in Family C. 7551 to determine whether testing should be ordered. If, after being ordered to submit to testing, a person refuses to do so and fails to seek judicial relief either prior to testing or within 10 days after the tests are scheduled, the court may resolve the paternity question against that person or enforce the administrative order "if the rights of others or the interest of justice so require." (Family C. 7558.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. The Uniform Act on Paternity is now found at 9C U.L.A. (Master Ed.), p. 1.

(2) Civil Paternity Proceedings. See In re Joshua R. (2002) 104 C.A.4th 1020, 1025, 128 C.R.2d 241 [in dependency proceeding, paternity was not "relevant fact" within meaning of Family C. 7551, and thus trial judge did not err in denying alleged father's request for paternity testing, where alleged father did not qualify as presumed father; relying on In re Zacharia D. (1993) 6 C.4th 435, 24 C.R.2d 751, 862 P.2d 751, 10 Summary (10th), Parent and Child, §644].

(3) Support Enforcement Proceedings by District Attorney. Family C. 7558 was amended in 2000 to substitute "local child support agency" for "district attorney" throughout the section.

IV. CHEMICAL AND PHYSICAL TESTS

F. Genetic Tests for Nonpaternity or Paternity.

1. Tests for Nonpaternity.

c. Applicable Where Conclusive Presumption Involved.

1. Former Law and Uniform Act.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 70

[§ 70] Former Law and Uniform Act.

(1) Former Law. The Uniform Act, §5, stated that the presumption of legitimacy of a child born during wedlock could be overcome by evidence of the test. In California, the strong policy favoring the conclusive presumption where the parties are living together (see Family C. 7540, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Burden of Proof and Presumptions, §278) influenced the Legislature to delete §5 from California's version of the Act. Blood test evidence was therefore not admissible to challenge the conclusively presumed fact of parentage. (See Kusior v. Silver (1960) 54 C.2d 603, 617, 7 C.R. 129, 354 P.2d 657; Wareham v. Wareham (1961) 195 C.A.2d 64, 68, 15 C.R. 465; 48 Cal. L. Rev. 852; 35 So. Cal. L. Rev. 437; 7 Stanf. L. Rev. 388.)

(2) Presumption May Be Overcome. The 1980 Legislature restored the rule set forth in §5 of the Uniform Act. The conclusive presumption now may be overcome: "[I]f the court finds that the conclusions of all the experts, as disclosed by the evidence based upon blood tests" performed pursuant to Family C. 7550 et seq. "are that the husband is not the father of the child, the question of paternity of the husband shall be resolved accordingly." (Family C. 7541(a); see 12 Pacific L. J. 369.)

(3) Exceptions. Family C. 7541(a) does not apply to any of the following (see 13 Pacific L. J. 671):

(a) A case that had reached final judgment of paternity on September 30, 1980 (the effective date of the 1980 legislation). (Family C. 7541(e)(1).)

(b) A case coming within the provisions of C.C. 7005 (husband treated as father after consent to artificial insemination by another man). (Family C. 7541(e)(2).)

(c) A case in which the wife, with the consent of the husband, conceived by means of a surgical procedure. (Family C. 7541(e)(3).)

[§ 71] Procedure.

Family C. 7541 sets forth the following procedure for seeking blood tests to establish nonpaternity:

(1) The husband, the presumed father (as defined in Family C. 7611 and 7612; see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Burden of Proof and Presumptions, §204), or the child (through or by a guardian ad litem) may file a notice of motion within 2 years of the child's date of birth. (Family C. 7541(b).)

(2) The mother may file a notice of motion within 2 years of the child's date of birth if the biological father has filed an affidavit acknowledging paternity. (Family C. 7541(c).)

(3) The notice of motion must be supported by the moving party's declaration under oath stating the factual basis for placing the issue of paternity before the court. (Family C. 7541(d).)

[§ 72] Illustration: Presumption Overcome.

In Alicia R. v. Timothy M. (1994) 29 C.A.4th 1232, 34 C.R.2d 868, an action for child support by a mother against a man she alleged was the biological father of her child, the trial judge refused to apply the conclusive presumption, which would have established that a man other than defendant was the father. Even though more than 2 years had passed since the child's birth, the judge ordered blood tests, and when these indicated that defendant was the biological father, the judge so found. Held, affirmed.

(a) There are times when application of the presumption would not further its underlying policies; in such circumstances, the court must balance the competing private and state interests. (29 C.A.4th 1237, citing Orange v. Leslie B. (1993) 14 C.A.4th 976, 17 C.R.2d 797, 10 Summary (9th), Parent and Child, Supp., §416, and In re Lisa R. (1975) 13 C.3d 636, 119 C.R. 475, 532 P.2d 123, 10 Summary (9th), Parent and Child, §404.)

(b) Here, blood tests established that defendant was the biological father and that the man presumed under the statute to be the father was not. Furthermore, there had been a judgment of nullity of the marriage between the mother and the presumed father and a finding by the trial judge that there were no children from their union. The presumed father no longer resided with the mother, and there was no longer a parent/child relationship between him and the child. "While the state has a legitimate interest in promoting marriage and not impugning a family unit, that interest cannot be served here where there is no marital union or family unit to disrupt. Additionally, the state's interest in ensuring that the child is supported would be furthered by refusing to apply the presumption of former Evidence Code section 621 (now Family C. 7540) and requiring M. to support the child he fathered." ##### 2. Tests for Paternity.

a. Former Law: Inadmissible.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 73

[§ 73] Former Law: Inadmissible.

The blood grouping test is now considered conclusive in its showing of nonpaternity. (Family C. 7554, supra, §68.) It is also highly persuasive in some situations (where the blood type is rare) as an indication of probable paternity. The Uniform Act, §4, contained the provision that, if the experts find a possibility of the alleged father's paternity, this evidence may be admitted in the discretion of the court, "depending upon the infrequency of the blood type." And the Uniform Parentage Act, §12, permits evidence of paternity to include "blood test results, weighed in accordance with evidence, if available, of the statistical probability of the alleged father's paternity." (9B U.L.A. (Master Ed.), p. 347.)

The foregoing provisions were without precedent in statute or case law, and were not included in the California statute. And originally, most authorities took the position that blood test evidence to show paternity should be excluded as dangerously prejudicial. (See Dodd v. Henkel (1978) 84 C.A.3d 604, 608, 148 C.R. 780, citing the text; Everett v. Everett (1984) 150 C.A.3d 1053, 1065, 201 C.R. 351; 2 McCormick 5th, §211; 1A Wigmore (Tillers Rev.) §165a; 39 Cal. L. ## IV. CHEMICAL AND PHYSICAL TESTS

F. Genetic Tests for Nonpaternity or Paternity.

2. Tests for Paternity.

b. Current Rule of Admissibility.

1. HLA Test.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 74

[§ 74] HLA Test.

In Cramer v. Morrison (1979) 88 C.A.3d 873, 153 C.R. 865, the court held that the newly developed HLA (human leucocyte antigen) test is admissible to establish parentage in a civil paternity suit.

The action was brought by the district attorney, and defendant, the alleged father, made a motion in limine to exclude the results of the test. The trial judge granted the motion mainly on the ground that, though available data indicated reliability of the test, under present California law it was not admissible. Held, reversed.

(a) Under the general rule that all relevant evidence is admissible except as otherwise provided by statute (Ev.C. 351, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §5), the results of the test are admissible because they reveal a very high probability of paternity. (88 C.A.3d 879, 880.)

(b) The contention that the Legislature, in omitting §4 of the Uniform Act (see supra, §73), intended to exclude all blood tests for paternity is unsound. The terminology of the Act, the language used in the opinions, and the writings of commentators, made it clear that the reference was to the common Landsteiner red cell blood grouping tests. (88 C.A.3d 880, 881, and footnote 13, quoting the text.) The later developed HLA test is not a red cell blood grouping test; it consists of tissue typing of the white blood cells, employs a much larger number of factors, and shows a 90% probability of parentage. (88 C.A.3d 878, 881.) Moreover, the Uniform Act expressly stated that it does not prevent the production of "other expert evidence" (see Family C. 7557, infra, §77), and the omission of §4 must be interpreted as intended to exclude only the existing Landsteiner test then in general use in this state in 1975, and not the HLA test that was not used here at that time. (88 C.A.3d 882, 883.)

(c) The trial judge also rejected the evidence as unduly prejudicial (Ev.C. 352; see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §17 et seq.). This was an abuse of discretion.

"We are not aware of any public policy which would require exclusion of highly probative scientific evidence on the issue of paternity in the absence of a statutory mandate. On the contrary, all the policy considerations advanced by California commentators and case law argue for broad inclusion of such evidence in paternity proceedings. These considerations include protecting children from the stigma of illegitimacy, preservation of the family, and insuring that individuals rather than the government bear responsibility for child support. ... Further, we note that the recent and growing recognition of the right of illegitimates to equal protection with legitimates before the law has served to heighten the significance of paternity litigation throughout the United States." (88 C.A.3d 885.)

The use of the test in a criminal case was approved in Shults v. Superior Court (1980) 113 C.A.3d 696, 170 C.R. 297. Petitioner, mother of a young child (Tanya) was charged with welfare fraud and perjury, in part on the ground of failure to report the presence of Tanya's father in her home. The trial court, on motion of the district attorney, ordered petitioner to present herself and Tanya for an HLA blood test in order to compare blood samples with those previously obtained from Tanya's alleged father. Held, the order was valid. "First, the type of blood test ordered yields scientifically reliable results. ... Second, fraud and perjury, while not life-threatening crimes, are certainly serious offenses violative of the basic fabric of modern society. Third, the 'law enforcement suspicions' that the tests will reveal the paternity of the alleged father are supported by testimony at the preliminary examination that he and petitioner lived together since the spring of 1976 and referred to Tanya as their daughter. Fourth, although the evidence will not be determinative of the ultimate issues of fraud and perjury, it is relevant to the threshold issue of Tanya's paternity and thus petitioner's alleged false reporting. Fifth, we conceive of no possible alternative means less violative of Fourth Amendment freedoms than the drawing of blood samples to obtain the evidence sought." (113 C.A.3d 699.)

In Ventura v. Marcus (1983) 139 C.A.3d 612, 189 C.R. 8, an HLA paternity test resulted in a report that, in the opinion of the experts, there was an 85.95% probability that M was the father of the child. The court, citing several medical authorities, pointed out that only 95% or higher is considered useful evidence of likelihood of paternity, and added: "[T]he reported probability of 85.95 percent with respect to defendant does little more than determine that he is not excluded as a possible father of the minor. It is totally indecisive and places him in the category of putative fathers whose parentage is 'not resolvable.' It is therefore equally valid to infer therefrom that he is not the father as to infer that he is the father." (139 C.A.3d 618.) Accordingly, the trial judge's determination of nonpaternity was affirmed. (139 C.A.3d 619.)

[§ 75] Statutory Authorization.

The use of genetic tests on the issue of paternity was authorized by the Legislature in 1981. (See generally 1A Wigmore (Tillers Rev.) §165a; 13 Pacific L. J. 670 [suggesting that, in view of lack of certainty of Landsteiner tests, they should be excluded under Ev.C. 352]; 22 Santa Clara L. Rev. 667; 37 A.L.R.4th 167 [admissibility, weight, and sufficiency of HLA tissue typing tests in paternity cases]; 43 A.L.R.4th 579 [admissibility and weight of Landsteiner blood grouping tests]; on DNA typing, see supra, §62 et seq.) The relevant statute provides as follows:

If the court finds that the conclusions of all the experts are that the alleged father is not the child's father, the question of paternity must be "resolved accordingly." (Family C. 7554(a).) If the experts disagree in their findings or conclusions, or if the tests show the probability of the alleged father's paternity, the question, if not unduly prejudicial under Ev.C. 352 (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §17 et seq.), must be submitted on all the evidence, including that based on the tests. (Family C. 7554(b); see Sonoma v. Grant W. (1986) 187 C.A.3d 1439, 1447, 232 C.R. 471, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §242 [statute permits all blood test results, both inclusionary or exclusionary ones and probability-of-paternity percentages, to be admitted on issue of paternity]; on rebuttable presumption of paternity from "paternity index" finding, see Family C. 7555, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Burden of Proof and Presumptions, §204.)

All hospitals, local child support agencies, welfare offices, and family courts must facilitate genetic testing. This may include having a health care professional available to extract samples for testing. (Family C. 7551.5.)

F. Genetic Tests for Nonpaternity or Paternity.

3. Procedure in Civil Cases.

a. Request and Order.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 76

[§ 76] Request and Order.

(1) In General. The procedure for requesting the court to order genetic tests to prove paternity, and sanctions for failure to comply with the order, are the same as that for a request for an order for genetic tests to disprove paternity. (See Family C. 7551, supra, §69; Michael B. v. Superior Court (1978) 86 C.A.3d 1006, 1010, 150 C.R. 586 [trial court erred in failing to order blood test on alleged father's motion]; Huntingdon v. Crowley (1966) 64 C.2d 647, 652, 51 C.R. 254, 414 P.2d 382 [trial judge has discretion to deny untimely motion]; William M. v. Superior Court (1990) 225 C.A.3d 447, 450, 275 C.R. 103 [putative paternal grandparents could not be required to submit to blood tests in paternity action]; San Francisco v. Cartagena (1995) 35 C.A.4th 1061, 1069, 41 C.R.2d 797 [child and mother could not be forced to undergo blood test while stipulated judgment of paternity was in effect, but only if judgment was vacated].)

(2) Constitutionality of Sanctions for Refusal To Comply. In El Dorado v. Schneider (1987) 191 C.A.3d 1263, 237 C.R. 51, plaintiff county, seeking to establish defendant's paternity of a minor child for child support purposes, obtained an order requiring that defendant submit to a variety of blood tests. Upon defendant's refusal to submit to the tests, the trial judge invoked former Ev.C. 892, the substantially similar predecessor to Family C. 7551, and entered an order declaring defendant to be the child's father. Held, the order establishing paternity did not violate defendant's constitutional rights.

(a) The paternity action was civil, not criminal, and neither the federal nor the California Constitution requires a jury trial of the issue. (191 C.A.3d 1270, 1272, 1280.)

(b) The claim that there was a violation of due process by denial of the right to confront witnesses at a hearing is untenable. Former Ev.C. 892 is properly viewed as a discovery statute that establishes procedures for obtaining information in a civil action, and provides sanctions for refusing to supply the information. (191 C.A.3d 1272.) And determination of the paternity issue adversely to defendant was a "just" sanction specifically related to the claim at issue:

(1) Defendant's wrongful refusal to take the test deprived the court of the opportunity to evaluate the probative value of the blood test evidence; accordingly, it was proper to assume that the test results would have had "potent probative value" in establishing defendant's paternity. (191 C.A.3d 1276.)

(2) The trial judge was not required to give defendant repeated warnings concerning potential sanctions, because defendant, who had been put on notice by plaintiff's moving papers and at the hearing on plaintiff's motion to establish paternity, failed to indicate at any time a willingness to take the blood tests. (191 C.A.3d 1277.)

3. Procedure in Civil Cases.

b. Experts.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 77

[§ 77] Experts.

(1) Tests by Accredited Laboratories. The genetic tests must be performed by a laboratory approved by an accreditation body that has been approved by the United States Secretary of Health and Human Services. (Family C. 7552; on service of test results and foundation for admission, see infra, §79.)

(2) Experts Called by Parties. A party or person at whose suggestion the tests were ordered may demand that experts "qualified as examiners of blood types," their number and qualifications to be determined by the court, perform independent tests, and the results may be offered in evidence. (Family C. 7552.) The demanding party need not show good cause for a more precise test that is available, and the trial judge has no discretion to deny an HLA test (see supra, §74) on demand of a party at whose suggestion an original test was ordered. (Fresno v. Superior Court (1979) 92 C.A.3d 133, 137, 154 C.R. 660.)

(3) Compensation of Experts. An expert witness appointed by the court is entitled to compensation fixed at a reasonable amount. It must be paid by the parties, or by the county if so directed, in the proportions and at the times the court prescribes. The court may order that all or part or none of it be taxed as costs in the proceeding. (Family C. 7553.)

Where the alleged father is indigent and the child and the mother are receiving public assistance, the court must order compensation paid by the county, subject to its being later taxable to the parties as costs; the court cannot order prepayment by the indigent defendant. (Michael B. v. Superior Court (1978) 86 C.A.3d 1006, 1010, 150 C.R. 586; see Little v. Streater (1981) 452 U.S. 1, 101 S.Ct. 2202, 2204, 2211, 68 L.Ed.2d 627, 631, 632, 638, 639 [Connecticut statute requiring party requesting test to bear costs held denial of due process to indigent defendant who denies paternity]; 95 Harv. L. Rev. 132.)

Any party may produce other expert evidence, but must pay the fees of his or her experts, and only ordinary witness fees for them are taxable as costs. (Family C. 7557.)

IV. CHEMICAL AND PHYSICAL TESTS

F. Genetic Tests for Nonpaternity or Paternity.

3. Procedure in Civil Cases.

c. Additional Tests on Request.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 78

[§ 78] Additional Tests on Request.

In Everett v. Everett (1984) 150 C.A.3d 1053, 201 C.R. 351, the court held that the trial judge has power, under the broad language of former Ev.C. 892 (now Family C. 7551; see supra, §69) to order additional blood tests on request of a party. (150 C.A.3d 1064.) The opinion also offers guidance to trial courts in interpreting the requirements of the section.

(a) Background of scientific developments and case law. At the time of California's adoption of the Uniform Act, only the Landsteiner series of red cell blood grouping tests were deemed acceptable, and the results were held inadmissible as affirmative proof of paternity. (150 C.A.3d 1065, citing the text.) By 1984, there were 62 blood typing procedures that, if applied in combination, would establish nonpaternity for approximately 98% of mistakenly accused men. In 1979, Cramer v. Morrison (1979) 88 C.A.3d 873, 153 C.R. 865, held admissible the results of an HLA test to prove paternity (see supra, §74); and Fresno v. Superior Court (1979) 92 C.A.3d 133, 154 C.R. 660, held that under Cramer and former Ev.C. 893 (now Family C. 7552), the trial court has no discretion to deny an HLA test on demand (see supra, §77). In 1981, the Legislature removed any uncertainty by amending former Ev.C. 895 (now Family C. 7554; see supra, §75) to permit affirmative use to prove paternity. (150 C.A.3d 1066.)

(b) Mandatory tests on request of party, or tests on own motion.

(1) As to traditional extended blood factor tests and HLA tests, the trial court has little discretion to refuse to order them on a timely request of a party. (150 C.A.3d 1067.) As to other tests yet to be developed or fully accepted in the scientific community, "we interpret the provisions of section 892 to be mandatory in requiring the trial court to order the mother, child, and alleged father to submit to any blood tests requested by a party upon a timely motion, and discretionary only when the trial court orders blood tests on its own initiative." (150 C.A.3d 1067.)

(2) However, with the numerous procedures available and to be developed, application of all is neither feasible nor cost effective; and "the trial court must strike a balance between the costs involved, the danger of harassment, the inconvenience to the parties on the one hand, and the increased ability to determine paternity based on the cumulative effect of the results from a number of tests on the other hand." (150 C.A.3d 1067.) If an objection is made to a request for a specific test, the requesting party "must make a minimal showing that the probative value of the results will outweigh the financial burden and inconvenience to the party sought to be tested; if such showing is not made, the trial court may properly reject the request." (150 C.A.3d 1067.) And repeated requests for additional tests, which are calculated to harass rather than to produce reliable evidence, may also be denied, just as oppressive discovery motions are denied. (150 C.A.3d 1067.)

(3) "By requiring trial courts to order more than one blood test, we are by no means ruling on the admissibility of such tests." The results are still subject to the usual rules of evidence, including a showing of relevance and laying of an adequate foundation by a pretrial evidentiary hearing on scientific acceptance of the test. (150 C.A.3d 1068.)

(4) Former Ev.C. 895 required submission of the question of paternity on all the evidence, including that based on the tests. "There is no requirement in section 895 or elsewhere that the preliminary fact question whether intercourse occurred be submitted upon evidence which assumes the answer that it purports to prove." (150 C.A.3d 1072.)

The results of genetic tests performed under Family C. 7552 (supra, §77) or 7558 (supra, §69) must be served on all parties no later than 20 days before the hearing at which the test results may be admitted into evidence. (Family C. 7552.5(a).) The test results must be accompanied by the following declaration, executed under penalty of perjury:

(1) The declaration must state that the declarant is the duly authorized custodian of the records or other qualified employee of the laboratory and has authority to certify the records. (Family C. 7552.5(a)(1).)

(2) The declaration must include statements (a) establishing the chain of custody of all genetic samples collected (Family C. 7552.5(a)(2)); (b) that the procedures used by the laboratory to conduct the tests are used in the laboratory's ordinary course of business to ensure accuracy and proper identification of genetic samples (Family C. 7552.5(a)(3)); and (c) that the results were prepared at or near the time of completion of the genetic tests by personnel qualified to perform genetic tests in the ordinary course of business (Family C. 7552.5(a)(4)).

If a genetic test reflects a paternity index of 100 or more, the test results must be accompanied by a voluntary declaration of paternity form prepared according to Family C. 7552. (Family C. 7552.5(d).)

The genetic tests may then be admitted into evidence without foundation testimony of authenticity and accuracy, unless a written objection is filed and served. (Family C. 7552.5(b), (c).)

The statute applies to criminal actions with the following limitations: (a) an order for tests may be made only on a party's application or the court's initiative; (b) the expert's compensation must be paid by the county; (c) the court may direct a verdict of acquittal on the conclusions of all the experts under Family C. 7554 (supra, §75); otherwise, the case must be submitted for determination on all the evidence. (Family C. 7556.)

(2) Indigent's Right to Test at Public Expense. The defendant's right to a blood test at public expense was affirmed in People v. Bynon (1956) 146 C.A.2d 7, 303 P.2d 75. Defendant was charged with lewd conduct (P.C. 288) with his 12-year-old adopted daughter, who had given birth to a child. The daughter testified that her sexual relations were only with defendant. Defendant, an indigent represented by the public defender, requested an order for a blood test. Held, denial of the request was reversible error. Although paternity of the child was not a main issue, the daughter's testimony was highly prejudicial to defendant, and a blood test favorable to him would have effectively impeached that testimony. (146 C.A.2d 11.)

[§ 81] Cases Not Involving Paternity.

In People v. Lindsey (1978) 84 C.A.3d 851, 149 C.R. 47, a prosecution for forcible rape, the prosecution introduced evidence that defendant's blood type was the same as that found on vaginal slides taken from the victim. On a review of the case law in other jurisdictions, the court followed the majority rule that such evidence is admissible under the general rule of relevancy in cases where the issue of paternity is not involved. (84 C.A.3d 863, 866.) The Uniform Act provisions and the rules developed under it apply only to criminal actions involving the paternity issue, e.g., child desertion. (84 C.A.3d 866.)

The Lindsey opinion, however, approved the limitation set forth in a Pennsylvania decision that blood type evidence can be used only to corroborate other evidence. Proof that a criminal defendant shares a blood type with that of samples found near the crime scene is not admissible unless there is additional, independent evidence "tending to show either (1) that the man who committed the crime did lose blood in the process or (2) that the defendant was present at the scene." (84 C.A.3d 866.) (See 2 A.L.R.4th 500 [admissibility, weight, and sufficiency of blood grouping tests in criminal cases].)

[§ 82] Admissibility of Evidence.

The Radar Speedmeter is a machine that beams electromagnetic waves at a moving object, and thereby measures the speed of a motor vehicle for the purpose of enforcing speed laws. "[B]asically it consists of an ultrahigh frequency radio transmitter and receiver operating on a frequency of 2445 megacycles, a visual speed indicator calibrated to show miles per hour, and a graphic recorder on which speed in miles per hour is recorded." (People v. Beamer (1955) 130 C.A.2d Supp. 874, 875, 279 P.2d 205; see In re Beamer (1955) 133 C.A.2d 63, 67, 283 P.2d 356; 1 McCormick 5th, §204; 43 Cal. L. Rev. 710; 29 So. Cal. L. Rev. 240.)

The scientific accuracy of the device, properly handled, is now established. (See In re Beamer, supra, 133 C.A.2d 68; *People v. ## IV. CHEMICAL AND PHYSICAL TESTS

G. Radar Speedmeter.

2. Inadmissibility of Speed Trap Evidence.

a. Primary Definition of Speed Trap.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 83

[§ 83] Primary Definition of Speed Trap.

A speed trap consists of either of the following:

(1) Highway Measured as to Distance To Allow Calculation of Vehicle's Speed. A section of a highway "measured as to distance and with boundaries marked, designated, or otherwise determined" so that a vehicle's speed may be calculated by ascertaining the time it takes the vehicle to travel that distance. (Veh.C. 40802(a)(1).)

(2) Highway With Prima Facie Speed Limit Not Justified By Survey. A section of highway with a prima facie speed limit that is not justified by an engineering and traffic survey conducted within 5 years before the date of the violation, and that is enforced by using radar or other electronic device that measures the speed of moving objects. A "prima facie" speed limit is one provided by the Vehicle Code or by local ordinance under Veh.C. 22352(a)(2)(A) or established under Veh.C. 22354, 22357, 22358, or 22358.3. (Veh.C. 40802(a)(2), further specifying that it does not apply to a local street, road, or school zone, as defined in Veh.C. 40802(b).)

The prosecution must produce the survey even without the defendant's request. (People v. DiFiore (1987) 197 C.A.3d Supp. 26, 28, 30, 243 C.R. 359.) An original survey or certified copy must be produced; a summary of the survey or the testimony of the citing officer regarding the survey does not suffice. (People v. Earnest (1995) 33 C.A.4th Supp. 18, 21, 23, 40 C.R.2d 304; People v. Ellis (1995) 33 C.A.4th Supp. 25, 29, 40 C.R.2d 111.) And, the survey is required whenever radar is used to enforce the posted speed limit, even if the citing officer only testifies as to his or her visual determination of speed. (People v. Conzelman (1994) 33 C.A.4th Supp. 6, 9, 39 C.R.2d 156.)

However, the survey is not necessary where the violation is for exceeding the 25 miles per hour speed limit of a marked and posted school zone (Veh.C. 22350). (People v. Goodrich (1994) 33 C.A.4th Supp. 1, 4, 39 C.R.2d 154.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Highway With Prima Facie Speed Limit Not Justified By Survey. See People v. Huffman (2000) 88 C.A.4th Supp. 1, 3, 4, 106 C.R.2d 820 [conviction of violating Veh.C. 22350(a) (basic speed law) for driving 66 miles per hour in area posted as 50-miles-per-hour zone was not supported by substantial evidence, where settled statement referred to area being "surveyed" for 50 miles per hour but failed to indicate that prosecution introduced required traffic and engineering survey and, if so, when it was prepared and whether it justified posted limit]; People v. Singh (2001) 92 C.A.4th Supp. 13, 17, 112 C.R.2d 74 [speed trap rules did not apply where radar established that defendant was traveling in excess of 65 miles per hour, but officer cited him for exceeding maximum speed law and not for exceeding lower, posted, prima facie limit].

G. Radar Speedmeter.

2. Inadmissibility of Speed Trap Evidence.

b. Alternate Definition of Speed Trap.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 84

[§ 84] Alternate Definition of Speed Trap.

(1) When Alternate Definition Applies. When all of the following criteria are met, an alternate definition of speed trap applies in lieu of the definition under Veh.C. 40802(a) (see supra, §83):

(a) When radar is used, the officer issuing the citation has successfully completed a certified course on use of police traffic radar.

(b) When laser or other electronic device is used, the officer issuing the notice to appear has completed a certified course on use of police traffic radar and an additional certified training course of not less than 2 hours.

(c) The prosecution has proved (1) that the officer complied with the training requirements mentioned above; (2) that an engineering and traffic survey was conducted in accordance with Veh.C. 40802(c)(2)(B) (see infra, this section); (3) that, prior to issuing the notice to appear, the officer established that the radar or other device met or exceeded the minimal standards of the National Traffic Highway Safety Administration and was independently calibrated within the previous 3 years; and (4) that the accused's speed was unsafe for the conditions present at the time of the violation, unless the citation was for a violation of Veh.C. 22349, 22356, or 22406 (see 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Public Peace and Welfare, §253). (Veh.C. 40802(c)(1).)

(2) Statement of Alternate Definition. If the above criteria are met, a speed trap consists of either of the following:

(a) Highway measured as to distance to allow calculation of vehicle's speed. "A particular section of a highway measured as to distance and with boundaries marked, designated, or otherwise determined in order that the speed of a vehicle may be calculated by securing the time it takes the vehicle to travel the known distance." (Veh.C. 40802(c)(2)(A).)

(b) Highway with prima facie speed limit not justified by survey. A section of a highway or state highway with a prima facie speed limit that is enforced by using radar or other electronic device that measures the speed of moving objects, and that is not justified by an engineering and traffic survey conducted within one of the following time periods: (1) 10 years, where an engineering and traffic survey was conducted more than 7 years prior to the date of the alleged violation, and a registered engineer evaluates the section of highway and determines that no significant changes in roadway or traffic conditions have occurred; (2) otherwise, 7 years. A "prima facie" speed limit is one provided by the Vehicle Code or by local ordinance under Veh.C. 22352(a)(2)(A) or established under Veh.C. 22354, 22357, 22358, or 22358.3. (Veh.C. 40802(c)(2)(B), further specifying that it does not apply to a local street, road, or school zone, as defined in Veh.C. 40802(b); on prosecution's obligation to produce survey, see supra, §83.)

IV. CHEMICAL AND PHYSICAL TESTS

G. Radar Speedmeter.

2. Inadmissibility of Speed Trap Evidence.

c. Statutory Prohibition.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 85

[§ 85] Statutory Prohibition.

(1) In General. Veh.C. 40800 et seq. prohibits speed trap evidence as follows:

(a) A speed trap may not be used to arrest a person or secure evidence for the purpose of arrest or prosecution. (Veh.C. 40801.)

(b) Speed trap evidence is inadmissible in a prosecution under the Vehicle Code of a charge involving the vehicle's speed. (Veh.C. 40803(a).)

(c) An officer whose testimony is based on speed trap evidence is incompetent as a witness. (Veh.C. 40804(a).)

(d) A court is deprived of jurisdiction to convict if speed trap evidence is admitted. (Veh.C. 40805.)

(2) Purpose of Statute. The purpose of the speed trap statute is to prevent the local establishment of unreasonably low speed zones as an adjunct revenue source and to encourage observance of the traffic laws by a visible police presence. Nevertheless, a close reading of the statute indicates that "the Legislature's antipathy toward any radar-based prosecution of any speed law violation in any posted zone, where the prima facie speed limit is not justified by proof of a timely engineering survey, is absolute and unequivocal." (People v. Studley (1996) 44 C.A.4th Supp. 1, 3, 52 C.R.2d 461 [where traffic and engineering survey was not proved at trial, exclusion of all evidence of speed was compelled even though motorist was cited, by use of radar, for speed in excess of 50 miles per hour posted speed limit on nonlocal road].)

(3) Burden of Proof on Prosecution. Originally, case law promulgated the rule that violation of the speed trap provisions of the Vehicle Code was not an affirmative defense; the burden was placed on the prosecution to disclose any material evidence bearing on the potential applicability of the prohibitory legislation. (See People v. Halopoff (1976) 60 C.A.3d Supp. 1, 5, 7, 131 C.R. 531; People v. Sterritt (1976) 65 C.A.3d Supp. 1, 3, 135 C.R. 522; People v. Flaxman (1977) 74 C.A.3d Supp. 16, 19, 141 C.R. 799.)

A 1981 amendment codifies this rule: In a prosecution involving excessive speed as determined by the use of radar or similar electronic device, the prosecution must establish, as part of its prima facie case, that the evidence or testimony is not based on a speed trap. (Veh.C. 40803(b).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. See People v. Hardacre (2004) 116 C.A.4th 1292, 1299, 11 C.R.3d 214, 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, Supp., §244A [speed trap exclusionary rules do not apply in prosecution for Vehicle Code offenses other than speeding violations, even if initial stop of vehicle that led to charges being brought was for speeding].

(2) Purpose of Statute. See People v. Singh (2001) 92 C.A.4th Supp. 13, 16, 17, 112 C.R.2d 74 [disagreeing with People v. Studley (1996) 44 C.A.4th Supp. 1, 52 C.R.2d 461, text, p. 101, to extent it would make speed trap rules applicable where officer, not relying on prima facie or posted speed limit, testifies that defendant was clocked on radar at speed in excess of maximum lawful limit].

IV. CHEMICAL AND PHYSICAL TESTS

G. Radar Speedmeter.

2. Inadmissibility of Speed Trap Evidence.

d. Effect of Proposition 8.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 86

[§ 86] Effect of Proposition 8.

(1) Abrogation by Proposition 8. Speed trap evidence originally was prohibited by statute in California in 1923. (See People v. Johnson (1972) 29 C.A.3d Supp. 1, 3, 105 C.R. 212; People v. Halopoff (1976) 60 C.A.3d Supp. 1, 5, 131 C.R. 531; 14 Hastings L. J. 427; 43 Cal. L. Rev. 710; 29 So. Cal. L. Rev. 240.)

However, in People v. Sullivan (1991) 234 C.A.3d 56, 58, 285 C.R. 553, the court said: "We hold that Vehicle Code section 40803, subdivision (a), rendering evidence derived from a speed trap inadmissible, was abrogated by the Proposition 8 'Right to Truth in Evidence' provision contained in article I, section 28, subdivision (d), of the California Constitution." (On Proposition 8, see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §§8, 9.)

The court explained its holding as follows:

"We can find no principled way to avoid the plain effect of section 28(d) upon the remedial provision at issue here. Section 40803, subdivision (a), purports to exclude evidence of the speed of a vehicle derived from a speed trap in all prosecutions under the Vehicle Code--despite the fact that such evidence may be relevant and otherwise admissible (Evid. Code, §210). Although the speed trap statutes may have once been 'firmly rooted in California law,' ... the explicit language of section 28(d) necessitates the conclusion that the constitutional amendment abrogated section 40803, subdivision (a)." (234 C.A.3d 63.)

(2) Reenactment of Speed Trap Law. In People v. Sullivan, supra, the court pointed out that the decision did not constitute the last word: "Should the Legislature deem it appropriate, it may, with the requisite majority and with a clear manifestation of its intent, reenact the longstanding remedial provisions of the speed trap laws and thereby override the mandate of section 28(d)." (234 C.A.3d 65.)

The 1992 Legislature responded by the enactment of Veh.C. 40808, stating that "Subdivision (d) of Section 28 of Article I of the California Constitution shall not be construed as abrogating the evidentiary provisions of this article." (See People v. Goulet (1992) 13 C.A.4th Supp. 1, 14, 17 C.R.2d 801 [with enactment of Veh.C. 40808, speed trap rules apply only to charges involving speed of a vehicle, and are not abrogated by Proposition 8]; People v. Munoz (1992) 11 C.A.4th 1190, 1192, 15 C.R.2d 21 [Veh.C. 40808 applies to cases pending before its passage].)

IV. CHEMICAL AND PHYSICAL TESTS

H. Polygraph ("Lie Detector").

1. Nature of Test.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 87

[§ 87] Nature of Test.

The polygraph, popularly known as the lie detector, is an electrical device that, when attached to a person, registers and charts the person's changes in blood pressure and pulse, respiration, and perspiration while under questioning. Its principal use is in criminal investigation. More recently, a "lie detector" has additionally been defined as including a "deceptograph, voice stress analyzer, psychological stress evaluator, or any similar device." (Govt.C. 3307 [right of private and public employees to refuse to take employer mandated test]; see 2 Summary (9th), Agency and Employment, §§197, 312.)

The theory is that the subject (usually a suspect or accused) undergoes emotional excitement when lying, and that, under skillful questioning by an expert, the lie detector record affords a reliable, though far from conclusive, indication of truthfulness or falsehood. (See 1 McCormick 5th, §206; 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §999; 49 Hastings L. J. 895 [admissibility in light of Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals (1993) 509 U.S. 579, 113 S.Ct. 2786, 125 L.Ed.2d 469, supra, §47]; 49 Hastings L. J. 925 [arguing that courts are reluctant to admit results even if they are reliable]; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §1007 et seq.; 14 Proof of Facts 2d 14 [Reliability of Polygraph Examination]; 42 Am.Jur. Trials 313 [Uses, Techniques, and Reliability of Polygraph Testing]; 11 A.L.R.4th 733 [right of defendant to obtain test at public expense where necessary to prepare defense]; 89 A.L.R.4th 527 [employee's tort action against party administering test at request of actual or prospective employer]; 7 A.L.R.5th 143 [admissibility of polygraph or similar lie detector test results, or willingness to submit to test, on issues of coverage under insurance policy, or insurer's good faith belief that claim was not covered]; 10 A.L.R.5th 663 [admissibility of evidence of polygraph test results, or offer or refusal to take test, in action for malicious prosecution]; 140 A.L.R. Fed. 525 [admissibility in federal criminal cases postdating Daubert]; on regulation of polygraph examiners, see B. & P.C. 9300 et seq.)

The majority of the courts as yet find insufficient certainty in the test to justify admission of its results as scientific evidence. (See infra, §89 et seq.) (On prohibition of compulsory polygraph examination of complaining witness in case involving force or threat in commission of sex offense as prerequisite to filing accusatory pleading, see P.C. 637.4; on validity of imposing submission to test as probation condition, see People v. Miller (1989) 208 C.A.3d 1311, 1314, 256 C.R. 587.)

2. Admission by Stipulation.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 88

[§ 88] Admission by Stipulation.

(1) Criminal Cases. Because almost any incompetent evidence may be received when offered without objection (see 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §393), in a criminal case the prosecution and defendant may stipulate to the taking of the test and the admission in evidence of its results. (See People v. Houser (1948) 85 C.A.2d 686, 694, 193 P.2d 937; People v. Reeder (1976) 65 C.A.3d 235, 239, 135 C.R. 421 [attorney's authority to stipulate, and defendant's "personal imprimatur" by signing it]; *People v. (2) Civil Cases. The rule governing criminal cases is equally applicable to civil cases. (See Robinson v. Wilson (1974) 44 C.A.3d 92, 99, 118 C.R. 569 [trial judge properly considered results of polygraph examination, even against minor plaintiff in paternity action, when stipulation on admissibility was properly made]; 39 Cal. [§ 89] Evidence of Test.

"It is not at all unlikely that a popular belief has been formed from press, radio, television, stage and screen that the lie detector is an accomplishment of modern science the results of which are as reliable as those of fingerprinting, blood tests and ballistics. However, this is not correct. It is general knowledge among those familiar with the lie detector machines that the results are greatly dependent upon the training, experience and skill of the operators and that the results vary with different types of subjects." (People v. Aragon (1957) 154 C.A.2d 646, 658, 316 P.2d 370.)

The foregoing quotation states the generally accepted view of the authorities that the test lacks the necessary scientific acceptance for use of its results as proof. (See *People v. [§ 90] Admissions Connected With Test.

In People v. Aragon (1957) 154 C.A.2d 646, 316 P.2d 370, a bribery case, the charge was that defendant boxer had offered a bribe to another fighter to throw a fight. At the request of a boxing commissioner, defendant voluntarily took a test, and then held a conversation with the commissioner in which he made certain admissions. At the trial, in opening statement and examination of witnesses, the prosecutor repeatedly, over strong objection, brought up the conversation and mentioned the test that preceded it. Held, this was reversible error. "If the result of the lie detector test is inadmissible in the first instance, surely no one would contend that the results can be cloaked in the raiment of an accusatory statement and then slipped into evidence. If we were to hold that such a course is proper we would have sanctioned the receipt of damaging evidence that, but for such masking, could not be heard by the jury. We believe that the prosecution should not be permitted to introduce into evidence by indirection what would be highly improper if done directly." (154 C.A.2d 658.)

However, the court in People v. McHenry (1962) 204 C.A.2d 764, 769, 22 C.R. 621, held that admissions that defendant had voluntarily made in a conversation preparatory to a polygraph test were properly received into evidence.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 91

[§ 91] Evidence of Refusal To Take Test.

Since an accused cannot be compelled to take the test, it is error to refer to the accused's refusal to submit to it. (People v. Wochnick (1950) 98 C.A.2d 124, 127, 219 P.2d 70; People v. Carter (1957) 48 C.2d 737, 752, 312 P.2d 665, supra, §§10, 39; see 95 A.L.R.2d 819 [propriety and prejudicial effect of comment or evidence as to accused's willingness to take lie detector test].)

In the Carter case, on a trial for murder, a previous suspect was allowed to testify that he had been willing to take a lie detector test (the implication being that defendant had refused and thereby indicated guilt). Held, this was error; because the test is not considered reliable enough to justify proof of its result, a defendant's unwillingness to take the test is without substantial probative value. "The suspect may refuse to take the test, not because he fears that it will reveal consciousness of guilt, but because it may record as a lie what is in fact the truth. A guilty suspect, on the other hand, may be willing to hazard the test in the hope that it will erroneously record innocence, knowing that even if it does not the results cannot be used as evidence against him." (48 C.2d 752.)

In *People v. ## e. Evidence Inadmissible for Defendant.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 93

[§ 93] Evidence Inadmissible for Defendant.

(1) Inadmissible on Direct Examination. The same objection of lack of scientific recognition (see supra, §89) applies to use of the test on behalf of the defendant in either a civil or criminal case. (See United States v. Scheffer (1998) 523 U.S. 303, 118 S.Ct. 1261, 1266, 140 L.Ed.2d 413, 421 [military rule excluding all polygraph evidence in court-martial proceedings does not abridge defendant's right to present defense; rule is "rational and proportional means of advancing the legitimate interest in barring unreliable evidence"]; People v. Porter (1950) 99 C.A.2d 506, 510, 222 P.2d 151 [no error to deny request of defendant that court submit him to test]; People v. Spigno (1957) 156 C.A.2d 279, 280, 319 P.2d 458; Gideon v. Gideon (1957) 153 C.A.2d 541, 546, 314 P.2d 1011 [divorce; defendant husband contended that lie detector tests he took established truth of his testimony]; People v. Thornton (1974) 11 C.3d 738, 763, 114 C.R. 467, 523 P.2d 267 [evidence of defendant's willingness to take test, offered as "badge of innocence," was properly excluded under reasoning of People v. Carter (1957) 48 C.2d 737, 312 P.2d 665, supra, §§10, 39, 91]; People v. Adams (1975) 53 C.A.3d 109, 112, 125 C.R. 518 [evidence of defendant's successful taking of test excluded; great majority of decisions in all jurisdictions hold tests inadmissible]; In re Joaquin S. (1979) 88 C.A.3d 80, 85, 151 C.R. 508 [test results showing that minor had not participated in robberies that were basis for his commitment to Youth Authority held inadmissible in proceeding to vacate order of commitment].)

The court in the Gideon case, supra, commented on the danger that each witness could repeat his or her testimony to an expert: "Then the expert could testify that that witness' testimony was true when tested by the lie detector. And then the judge or jury charged with finding the truth could be confounded by as many lie-detector opinions as to whether or not witnesses who gave conflicting testimony told the truth as there were conflicts." (153 C.A.2d 546.)

(2) Inadmissible on Cross-Examination. An unsuccessful attempt was made to evade the rule by cross-examination in People v. Paul (1978) 78 C.A.3d 32, 144 P.2d 431. The prosecution introduced a tape recording of defendant's police interrogation that included statements indicating that he was willing to take a test and had voluntarily done so. On cross-examination of the interrogating officer, defense counsel sought to have the test results admitted on the ground that the prosecution had opened up the issue. The judge rejected the offer, struck out all references to the test, and instructed the jury that no consideration of the test should enter into their deliberations. Held, the error in originally allowing reference to the test, with no objection from defense counsel, was not prejudicial. "It would appear that the trial strategy of defense counsel backfired." (78 C.A.3d 38.)

CHAPTER VII - Demonstrative, Experimental, and Scientific Evidence

IV. CHEMICAL AND PHYSICAL TESTS

H. Polygraph ("Lie Detector").

4. Witherspoon Rule and Legislative Repudiation.

a. Witherspoon Case: Blanket Exclusion Rule Rejected.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 94

[§ 94] Witherspoon Case: Blanket Exclusion Rule Rejected.

The "unbroken line of appellate decisions in California stating a blanket exclusion" of polygraph evidence was challenged in Witherspoon v. Superior Court (1982) 133 C.A.3d 24, 183 C.R. 615. Petitioner, awaiting trial for armed robbery, moved under Ev.C. 402 for a pretrial evidentiary hearing on the preliminary fact of voluntariness of a confession alleged to have been made by him. He proposed to prove the validity and admissibility of a polygraph examination administered to him on that issue. The trial judge denied the motion on the ground that the results of any such examination would be inadmissible, and petitioner sought mandamus to compel the trial court to hold the hearing. Held, writ granted; on a proper showing such evidence may be admitted.

(a) The California rule is based on the declaration in the 1923 case of Frye v. United States (supra, §42 et seq.) that reliability of the results of a polygraph examination has not been established. But in none of the California cases is there any detailed discussion of the basis for this conclusion. The case law has failed to identify the "scientific field" in which acceptance must be achieved, and suggests a lack of understanding of a test that is widely accepted for use in many areas of government and society. (133 C.A.3d 28, 29.)

(b) The California Evidence Code contains no positive rule that provides a blanket exclusion of such evidence. (133 C.A.3d 29, 30, 31.) "The consistent and persistent rejection of polygraph evidence by the courts appears at this time to be based more on considerations of policy rather than any demonstrated lack of reliability of the test. These policy considerations in turn appear to be based on the fear that evidence of the results of polygraph examinations will tend to usurp the function of the trier of fact, and that lay juries would tend to be overly impressed with the results of polygraph examinations. Whatever may be the validity of those considerations they are more properly matters for legislative rather than judicial determination." (133 C.A.3d 31.)

(c) Petitioner offered to show "that a qualified polygraph examiner can express a professional, expert and reliable opinion concerning the analysis of the examination, based on broad experience in examining a large number of individuals and verifying the results against objective criteria." He also offered the results of a number of studies demonstrating the accuracy and significance of such examinations. (133 C.A.3d 33.) There is no sound legal basis for denying him the opportunity "to persuade a trial judge of the expert qualifications of the polygraph examiner and of the validity of the basic premises upon which the examiner's opinion is based." (133 C.A.3d 33.) Ev.C. 801 et seq. provide adequate machinery for exclusion of opinion testimony of unqualified persons or the proffering of opinions that lack a proper basis or foundation; Ev.C. 400 et seq. provide adequate procedure for barring evidence that proceeds from unproven necessary preliminary facts; and Ev.C. 352 provides the court with ample ability "to prevent esoteric ventures into the unknown." (133 C.A.3d 34.)

The opinion adds: "We are not unmindful of the fact that the use of the results of polygraph examinations as evidence may pose some procedural problems which will have to be dealt with. Those problems, however, can be resolved by legislation which either totally excludes evidence of the results of polygraph examinations or, on the other hand, establishes a procedure which prescribes when and under what circumstances such evidence may be used. Until such legislation is forthcoming, however, it is our opinion that evidence of the results of a polygraph examination can be dealt with under the provisions of the Evidence Code and the procedures which presently exist for other types of physical and mental examinations of individuals involved in litigation." (133 C.A.3d 35.) (See 14 Pacific L. J. 1130.)

H. Polygraph ("Lie Detector").

4. Witherspoon Rule and Legislative Repudiation.

b. Legislative Repudiation.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 95

[§ 95] Legislative Repudiation.

(1) Criminal Proceedings. Proposition 8 (the "Victim's Bill of Rights") allows the Legislature by a two-thirds vote of each house to provide for exclusion of relevant evidence in a criminal proceeding or juvenile court hearing on a criminal offense. (See 14 Pacific L. J. 1128; 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §§8, 9.) Pursuant to this authorization, the 1983 Legislature added Ev.C. 351.1 nullifying the holding in Witherspoon v. Superior Court (1982) 133 C.A.3d 24, 183 C.R. 615, supra, §94 (see 15 Pacific L. J. 588) as follows:

(a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the results of a polygraph examination, the opinion of a polygraph examiner, or a reference to an offer to take, failure to take, or the taking of a polygraph examination are inadmissible in criminal proceedings. Included in this exclusionary rule are pretrial and postconviction motions and hearings and trials or hearings of juveniles for criminal offenses (whether heard in juvenile or adult court). However, the exclusionary rule does not apply if all parties stipulate to the admission of the polygraph. (Ev.C. 351.1(a); see In re Aontae D. (1994) 25 C.A.4th 167, 173, 30 C.R.2d 176 [statute applicable in proceeding under Welf.C. 602 (adjudication of wardship based on criminal violation; see 10 Summary (9th), Parent and Child, §728 et seq.)].)

(b) The statute is not intended to exclude "statements made during a polygraph examination which are otherwise admissible." (Ev.C. 351.1(b).)

People v. Seldomridge (1984) 154 C.A.3d 362, 365, 201 C.R. 377, pointing out that the statute merely changed a rule of evidence, held that it could properly be applied to cases arising prior to its enactment without violating the constitutional provision on ex post facto laws.

(2) Civil Proceedings. Although Ev.C. 351.1 applies only to criminal proceedings specifically, its enactment by the Legislature nullifying the Witherspoon decision "reflects a continuing doubt in the law about the reliability of polygraph examination results." (Arden v. State Bar (1987) 43 C.3d 713, 723, 239 C.R. 68, 739 P.2d 1236 [attorney's proffered polygraph examination evidence in State Bar disciplinary proceeding inadmissible in absence of stipulation between attorney and State Bar].)

(3) Constitutionality. Ev.C. 351.1 is constitutional. (See People v. Kegler (1987) 197 C.A.3d 72, 89, 242 C.R. 897 [no violation of defendant's due process right to present exculpatory evidence or his right to compulsory process]; In re Aontae D., supra, 25 C.A.4th 176 [no violation of accused minor's due process right to present exculpatory evidence]; *People v. no violation of defendant's right to present all relevant mitigating evidence[.])

Ayala* (2000) 23 C.4th 225, 263, 96 C.R.2d 682, 1 P.3d 3 [in capital murder prosecution, trial judge did not err in refusing defendant's request to compel prosecution witness to undergo polygraph examination; results would not be admissible under Ev.C. 351.1, and thus requiring test would be idle act]; People v. Basuta (2001) 94 C.A.4th 370, 390, 114 C.R.2d 285 [in prosecution of day care operator for fatal assault on child, police officer's testimony to effect that defendant's housekeeper had agreed to take polygraph examination resulted in prejudicial error; housekeeper's credibility was crucial to prosecution's case, and, under circumstances, reasonable juror could conclude that housekeeper had passed examination and therefore was worthy of belief]; People v. Lee (2002) 95 C.A.4th 772, 790, 115 C.R.2d 828 [in murder prosecution, trial judge erred in admitting polygraph examination of witness and officer's subsequent interrogation of witness based on examination results; admission was purportedly to show witness' state of mind when he changed story and admitted seeing defendant commit killing, but there is no state of mind exception in Ev.C. 351.1].

(a) General rule of exclusion:

[§ 96] Nature of Test.

Another method of lie detection is by the use of drugs (chiefly sodium amytal and sodium pentothal) that deprive the subject of power to conceal or fabricate while undergoing questioning. Like the polygraph (supra, §87 et seq.), truth serum is not yet accepted as a scientific technique that uniformly produces truthful answers. Thus, the statements of the subject are not admissible against him or her, and cannot be offered by the subject for the additional reason that they are self-serving hearsay. (See People v. McNichol (1950) 100 C.A.2d 554, 556, 224 P.2d 21; People v. Cullen (1951) 37 C.2d 614, 626, 234 P.2d 1; People v. Johnson (1973) 32 C.A.3d 988, 1001, 109 C.R. 118 [confession given under influence of sodium amytal should have been excluded]; 1 McCormick 5th, §206; 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §998; 42 Cal. L. Rev. 880; 69 Harv. L. Rev. 683.)

The general rule excluding the answers is reaffirmed in People v. Jones (1959) 52 C.2d 636, 343 P.2d 577, where defendant's offer to repeat his testimony under truth serum was rejected. "The courts have consistently held that whether the test is a polygraph test, or a sodium amytal or sodium pentothal test, the results are not such as to be admissible for or against the defendant because of a lack of scientific certainty about the results." (52 C.2d 653, citing the text.)

Similarly, in Ramona v. Superior Court (1997) 57 C.A.4th 107, 66 C.R.2d 766, defendant was entitled to summary judgment in an action by his daughter alleging childhood sexual abuse. The only evidence of abuse was based on memories the daughter claimed to have recalled following sodium amytal therapy, or memories she recalled 2 years later, which also may have been tainted. (57 C.A.4th 121, 123.)

[§ 97] Distinction: Opinion Based on Test.

A dent in the exclusionary rule was made in People v. Jones (1954) 42 C.2d 219, 225, 266 P.2d 38. Defendant, charged with lewd acts with a child, offered opinion testimony of a psychiatrist that he was not a sexual deviate. This was held admissible even though the doctor's opinion was formed after an examination of the defendant under sodium pentothal. Defendant's answers were of course inadmissible and were not offered for proof of their truth; the evidence admitted was the doctor's expert analysis of those answers. "The inference that Jones did not commit the offenses charged was to be drawn, if at all, from the psychiatrist's opinion in regard to the sexual propensities of Jones and not from any answers given by him while under the influence of the drug. Jones' responses were the means to an end, the end being proof of the fact that Jones was not a sexual deviate." (42 C.2d 226.)

The principle of the Jones case was followed in People v. Cartier (1959) 51 C.2d 590, 335 P.2d 114. Defendant offered to prove that Dr. L examined him under sodium pentothal and would testify that, from this examination, he was of the opinion that defendant was insane at the time of the crime. Held, it was error to sustain an objection. (51 C.2d 601.) (See People v. Hiser (1968) 267 C.A.2d 47, 61, 72 C.R. 906 [medical expert was allowed to testify to reasons for his opinions, but tape recordings of sodium pentothal and hypnotic interviews were properly excluded in judge's discretion]; 41 A.L.R.3d 1369 [admissibility of results of truth serum and other tests to support physician's testimony]; 1 Cal. 2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 98

[§ 98] Nature of Test.

Voiceprint identification is based on the comparison of graphic representations ("spectrograms") made of human voices. A spectrograph separates the voice sounds into three component elements--time, frequency and intensity--and plots these variables across electronically sensitive paper. The result is a spectrogram of the speaker's acoustical signal, with certain cue words, e.g., "the," "me," "on," "is," "I" and "it," serving as a basis of comparison for a known voice and an unknown voice. "An examiner then visually compares the spectrograms of the same words, as spoken, and also listens to the two voices. Based upon these visual and aural comparisons, the examiner states his opinion whether or not the voices, known and unknown, are the same. ... Since the identification process is essentially an exercise in pattern matching, the examiner's opinion is to a large extent a subjective one based upon the relative aural similarity or dissimilarity of the two voices and visual comparison of their spectrograms. ... In some instances, the examiner is unable to declare positively either that there is a match or nonmatch of the sample tests, in which event no opinion is rendered." (People v. Kelly (1976) 17 C.3d 24, 29, 130 C.R. 144, 549 P.2d 1240, supra, §42; see 1 McCormick 5th, §207; 19 Proof of Facts 423 [voicegram identification evidence]; 54 Am.Jur. ### IV. CHEMICAL AND PHYSICAL TESTS

J. Voiceprint.

2. Admissibility of Evidence.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 99

[§ 99] Admissibility of Evidence.

(1) Conflicting Decisions. Admissibility of voiceprint evidence has been the subject of conflicting decisions in California and elsewhere. (See People v. King (1968) 266 C.A.2d 437, 456, 460, 72 C.R. 478 [rejecting testimony as founded on experimental technique not generally accepted by scientific community]; Hodo v. Superior Court (1973) 30 C.A.3d 778, 780, 786, 106 C.R. 547 [admitting testimony on theory that technique had gained sufficient acceptance by experts]; People v. Law (1974) 40 C.A.3d 69, 84, 114 C.R. 708 [King view reaffirmed, and voiceprint testimony inadmissible to identify disguised or mimicked voice]; People v. Kelly (1976) 17 C.3d 24, 32, 34, 130 C.R. 144, 549 P.2d 1240, supra, §42 [review of California, out-of-state, and federal cases]; 97 A.L.R.3d 294 [admissibility and weight of voiceprint evidence].)

(2) Kelly Test Governs. In People v. Kelly, supra, the court first laid down a conservative test for determining reliability of a new scientific technique, and then held the evidence inadmissible because of three infirmities in the testimony of Nash, the sole expert witness on the reliability issue:

(a) "[W]e think it questionable whether the testimony of a single witness alone is ever sufficient to represent, or attest to, the views of an entire scientific community regarding the reliability of a new technique. Ideally, resolution of the general acceptance issue would require consideration of the views of a typical cross-section of the scientific community, including representatives, if there are such, of those who oppose or question the new technique." (17 C.3d 37.)

(b) A serious question existed about the witness' ability fairly and impartially to assess the position of the scientific community because he was one of the leading proponents of voiceprint analysis; "he has virtually built his career on the reliability of the technique." (17 C.3d 38.)

(c) There was doubt as to whether he possessed the necessary academic qualifications to express a competent opinion on the issue of whether the voiceprint technique was generally accepted in the scientific community; his credentials were those of a technician and law enforcement officer, not a scientist. (17 C.3d 39.) "In considering the position of the scientific community, a court is bound to let scientists speak for themselves." (17 C.3d 40.)

The opinion concluded with the statement that the prosecution failed to establish reliability of the evidence in this case, but added: "We emphasize, however, that our decision is not intended in any way to foreclose the introduction of voiceprint evidence in future cases. We simply circumscribe, carefully and deliberately, the admission of evidence born of new techniques until the time when there is demonstrated solid scientific approval and support of the new methods.

... Although the present record is insufficient to justify the admissibility of voiceprint evidence, the future proponent of such evidence may well be able to demonstrate in a satisfactory manner that the voiceprint technique has achieved that required general acceptance in the scientific community." (17 C.3d 41.)

[§ 100] Promulgation of Rule.

In People v. Shirley (1982) 31 C.3d 18, 181 C.R. 243, 723 P.2d 1354, the court laid down a strict rule excluding testimony of a witness who has undergone hypnosis for the purpose of restoring his or her memory of the events in issue.

Defendant was charged with rape and forcible oral copulation, and convicted of rape. C, the complaining witness, gave testimony that was in many instances vague, changeable, self-contradictory, or prone to unexplained lapses of memory. Prior to the trial, and more than 3 months after the events in question, the deputy district attorney had C hypnotized by another deputy district attorney, and she made statements under hypnosis that differed significantly from her testimony at the preliminary hearing. Counsel for defendant then moved to exclude all of her testimony that resulted from the hypnosis, but the trial judge denied the motion, ruling that hypnosis affects only the weight of the testimony. C then testified to a number of matters which she had been unable to recall when she gave statements to the police and when she testified at the preliminary hearing. The defense called Dr. S, a psychiatrist with extensive training in hypnosis, who gave his expert opinion that there is no way of assessing the reliability of something produced by hypnosis. The prosecution did not discredit S's opinion and did not call any experts. Held, conviction reversed.

(a) Preliminary note on inadmissibility of exculpatory statements. Evidence of statements made under hypnosis that are favorable to the defendant have uniformly been excluded, and People v. Blair (1979) 25 C.3d 640, 665, 159 C.R. 818, 602 P.2d 738, adopted this rule for California. (31 C.3d 33.) The opinions generally rely on the Kelly approach, holding that the scientific community has not accepted such evidence as reliable. (31 C.3d 34; see supra, §42 et seq.)

(b) Inadmissibility of testimony of witness whose memory has been refreshed.

(1) In the last 2 decades, a considerable body of case law has been developed on this issue. The early cases held that the fact of hypnosis goes only to the weight of the evidence; later cases, taking notice of the dangers of using hypnosis, devised elaborate safeguards. (31 C.3d 36, 37, 38.)

(2) These safeguards do not avoid all of the risks, and even adequate requirements could inject undue delay and confusion into the judicial process. (31 C.3d 39, 40.) Hence: "[W]e join instead a growing number of courts that have abandoned any pretense of devising workable 'safeguards' and have simply held that hypnotically induced testimony is so widely viewed as unreliable that it is inadmissible under the Frye test. This disposition, of course, is consistent with the above-discussed case law uniformly excluding evidence of the truth of statements made under hypnosis." (31 C.3d

40.) From a review of the later cases (31 C.3d 40 et seq.), it appears that the correct analysis of the problem is to determine whether hypnotically recalled testimony is subject to the Kelly rule, and if so, whether it meets the test of that rule. (31 C.3d 51.)

(3) The contention that hypnotizing a witness to improve his or her memory is like any other method of refreshing a witness' recollection is unsound. "[T]he hypnotic process does more than permit the witness to retrieve real but repressed memories; it actively contributes to the formation of pseudomemories, to the witness' abiding belief in their veracity, and to the inability of the witness (or anyone else) to distinguish between the two. ... And if the testimony is thus only as reliable as the hypnotic process itself, it must be judged by the same standards of admissibility." (31 C.3d 53.) People v. Diggs (1980) 112 C.A.3d 522, 530, 169 C.R. 386, properly used this approach, but improperly determined that the evidence was reliable on the opinion of one expert. (31 C.3d 53, 54, and footnote 32, disapproving that part of Diggs.)

(4) To determine whether such evidence satisfies the Kelly standard it is necessary to examine the published writings in scholarly treatises and journals. "From this review it clearly appears that major voices in the scientific community oppose the use of hypnosis to restore the memory of potential witnesses, with or without procedural safeguards, on the ground of its intrinsic unreliability. This unreliability is due both to certain properties of human memory and to factors inherent in the nature of hypnosis." (31 C.3d 56; see 31 C.3d 57 et seq. for detailed analysis of published writings.) "We therefore hold, in accord with the decisions discussed above ... , that the testimony of a witness who has undergone hypnosis for the purpose of restoring his memory of the events in issue is inadmissible as to all matters relating to those events, from the time of the hypnotic session forward." (31 C.3d 66.)

(c) Limitations on rule.

(1) A previously hypnotized witness is not incompetent in the strict sense of being unable to express himself or herself comprehensibly or understand his or her duty to tell the truth, or of lacking the general capacity both to perceive and remember. "Accordingly, if the prosecution should wish to question such a witness on a topic wholly unrelated to the events that were the subject of the hypnotic session, his testimony as to that topic would not be rendered inadmissible by the present rule." (31 C.3d 67.)

(2) When the defendant submits to pretrial hypnosis he or she may elect to take the stand and the resulting testimony will be admissible. This exception is necessary to protect the fundamental right of an accused to testify in his or her own behalf. (31 C.3d 67; see infra, §103.)

(3) The use of hypnosis by the police for investigative purposes is not foreclosed, and evidence discovered by such an investigation is not ipso facto inadmissible. However, a person who has been hypnotized for investigative purposes will not be allowed to testify as a witness to the events that were the subject of the hypnotic session. (31 C.3d 67, 68.)

(d) Test of reversible error. The effect of error in admitting such testimony is judged under the probability test of People v. Watson (1956) 46 C.2d 818, 299 P.2d 243, 6 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Reversible Error, §7. (31 C.3d 68, 70.) Applying that test, the error in admitting C's testimony was prejudicial, because it constituted virtually the sole incriminating evidence against defendant. (31 C.3d 70.)

One justice concurred in the judgment solely because the hypnotic session was conducted by a deputy district attorney rather than a trained neutral professional. (31 C.3d 72.) Another justice, also concurring in the judgment, nevertheless felt that the majority should not have adopted the sweeping "per se" rule laid down. (31 C.3d 74, 75, 76.) He also saw no basis for the exception allowing the testimony of previously hypnotized defendants. (31 C.3d 77.) (See 1 McCormick 5th, §206; 20 Cal. Western L. Rev. 332; 21 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 635 [use of hypnosis in criminal trials]; 14 Southwestern U. L. ### IV. CHEMICAL AND PHYSICAL TESTS

K. Hypnosis.

1. Exclusion of Testimony of Hypnotized Witness.
  - b. Reaffirmation of Rule.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 101

[§ 101] Reaffirmation of Rule.

In People v. Guerra (1984) 37 C.3d 385, 208 C.R. 162, 690 P.2d 635, the court rejected a challenge to the exclusionary rule based on the contention that subsequent developments in the scientific literature and the case law had undermined its foundations.

(a) Recent scientific literature. It is not the function of the court to resolve disputes within the scientific community or to determine whether posthypnotic testimony is reliable as a matter of scientific fact. The courts view the professional literature on hypnosis as evidence, not of the actual reliability of the new scientific technique, but of its acceptance in the scientific community. (37 C.3d 418.) And a review of recent scientific studies by two distinguished scholars identifies four principal effects of using hypnosis to restore memory that render it inherently unreliable:

(1) "[T]he demand characteristics of the process cannot be eliminated; for example, when as frequently occurs, the police ask to hypnotize a witness whom they have already questioned in some detail, the witness naturally infers there must be additional useful information 'stored' in his memory that can be 'retrieved' by the hypnosis." (37 C.3d 422.)

(2) "[T]he subject (and often the police hypnotist as well) shares a widespread but erroneous belief that hypnotized persons always tell the truth." (37 C.3d 422.)

(3) The videotape technique commonly used by law enforcement hypnotists "gives the subject an apparently 'scientific' rationale for believing the reality of every 'memory' that may occur to him during hypnosis." (37 C.3d 422.)

(4) "[E]ven if the hypnotist does not know all the facts of the crime under investigation, he will normally have a hypothesis about what happened in the case that it may be difficult for him to avoid communicating to the subject." (37 C.3d 422.)

The court concluded on this point that "it is evident in the light of the recent literature that the consensus of the scientific community on the reliability of hypnotically induced testimony remains unchanged since Shirley." (37 C.3d 424.)

(b) Recent case law. Although the courts of several states have declined to follow People v. Shirley (1982) 31 C.3d 18, 181 C.R. 243, 723 P.2d 1354, supra, §100, they sharply disagree among themselves as to their holdings, and offer no rationale that has not already been considered and rejected by other cases. (37 C.3d 425.) In contrast, the basic rule adopted in Shirley "continues to draw new adherents." (37 C.3d 426, listing a number of decisions.) (See People v. Brown (1985) 40 C.3d 512, 527, 230 C.R. 834, 726 P.2d 516 [following Shirley and Guerra; on reversal by United States Supreme Court on other grounds, see California v. Brown (1987) 479 U.S. 538, 107 S.Ct. 837, 93 L.Ed.2d 934, 3 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Punishment, §495]; People v. Miller (1990) 50 C.3d 954, 984, 269 C.R. 492, 790 P.2d 1289 [admission of witness' posthypnosis identification of defendant was improper under Shirley, but constituted harmless error]; 77 A.L.R.4th 927 [hypnotically refreshed or enhanced testimony].)

IV. CHEMICAL AND PHYSICAL TESTS

K. Hypnosis.

1. Exclusion of Testimony of Hypnotized Witness.
  - c. Rule Retroactive.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 102

[§ 102] Rule Retroactive.

(1) Conflict in Courts of Appeal. People v. Shirley (1982) 31 C.3d 18, 181 C.R. 243, 723 P.2d 1354, supra, §100, left open the question of retroactive or prospective operation of the exclusionary rule: "The principles stated in this opinion will govern the admissibility of the testimony of any witness who submits to pretrial hypnosis after the date of this decision. We take no position at this time as to the application of those principles to witnesses hypnotized before the date of this decision." (31 C.3d 67, footnote 53.)

Several Court of Appeal opinions dealt inconclusively with the issue. (See People v. Williams (1982) 132 C.A.3d 920, 925, 183 C.R. 498 [favoring view that it should not be given a retroactive application]; People v. Parrison (1982) 137 C.A.3d 529, 538, 187 C.R. 123 [noting Williams decision and pendency of issue before Supreme Court and rejecting defendant's reliance on Shirley]; People v. Glaude (1983) 141 C.A.3d 633, 639, 190 C.R. 479 [assuming that rule was retroactive, admission of evidence was harmless].)

(2) Resolution by Supreme Court: Rule Retroactive. In People v. Guerra (1984) 37 C.3d 385, 208 C.R. 162, 690 P.2d 635, supra, §101, the court, on a review of all of the significant cases dealing with the determination of retroactive or prospective operation (37 C.3d 399 et seq.), and an analysis of the relevant factors as applied to the Shirley rule (37 C.3d 406 et seq.), concluded that the rule should apply to all cases not yet final; i.e., neither good faith reliance on prior law or accepted practice, nor severe impact on the administration of justice, required prospective application. (37 C.3d 413.) People v. Williams, supra, was disapproved. (37 C.3d 413, footnote 24.) The court added:

"We find further support for our holding in the fact that in virtually every sister state in which hypnotically induced testimony has been declared inadmissible, the rule has also been applied in cases pending on appeal at the time it was adopted." (37 C.3d 413.) (See People v. Brown (1985) 40 C.3d 512, 527, 230 C.R. 834, 726 P.2d 516 [applying Guerra rule, but holding that admission of hypnotized witness' testimony was harmless error; on reversal by United States Supreme Court on other grounds, see California v. Brown (1987) 479 U.S. 538, 107 S.Ct. 837, 93 L.Ed.2d 934, 3 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Punishment, §495].)

One justice dissented, quoting extensively from People v. Williams, supra, on the "devastating" effect of the retroactive rule on pending cases. (37 C.3d 434, 435.) He also expressed apprehension concerning the majority's refusal to rule out the possible application of the holding in a collateral attack on a final judgment. (See majority opinion, 37 C.3d 413, footnote 24: "we do not reach the question whether the Shirley rule applies on collateral attack to cases now final.")

IV. CHEMICAL AND PHYSICAL TESTS

K. Hypnosis.

2. Hypnotized Defendant's Right To Present Evidence.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 103

[§ 103] Hypnotized Defendant's Right To Present Evidence.

In Rock v. Arkansas (1987) 483 U.S. 44, 107 S.Ct. 2704, 97 L.Ed.2d 37, defendant, charged with manslaughter in the death of her husband, was unable to remember the precise details of the shooting. At her attorney's suggestion, she was hypnotized twice by a licensed neuropsychologist, who recorded the sessions on tape. She did not relate any new information during the sessions, but subsequently remembered that, although she had not held her finger on the trigger, the handgun had discharged during a scuffle with her husband. The defense introduced testimony by a gun expert that the gun was defective and prone to fire without the trigger being pulled. The trial judge ruled that, under Arkansas law, no hypnotically refreshed testimony would be admitted, and thus limited defendant's description of the events surrounding the shooting to a reiteration of the sketchy information contained in the neuropsychologist's prehypnosis notes. Held, Arkansas' per se rule excluding all posthypnosis testimony violated the accused's constitutional right to testify on her own behalf.

(a) An accused's right to testify is derived from the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, the Compulsory Process Clause of the Sixth Amendment, and the Fifth Amendment. (107 S.Ct. 2709, 2710, 97 L.Ed.2d 46, 47.) State restrictions on that right, designed to ensure trustworthy evidence, must not be arbitrary or disproportionate to the purposes they are designed to serve. (107 S.Ct. 2711, 97 L.Ed.2d 49.) The Arkansas rule, which prohibits the admission of hypnotically refreshed testimony on the ground that such testimony is always unreliable, limits an accused's testimony to matters that can be recalled before hypnosis. "This rule operates to the detriment of any defendant who undergoes hypnosis, without regard to the reasons for it, the circumstances under which it took place, or any independent verification of the information it produced." (107 S.Ct. 2712, 97 L.Ed.2d 49.)

(b) Application of the Arkansas rule here had a significant adverse effect on petitioner's ability to testify: "It virtually prevented her from describing any of the events that occurred on the day of the shooting, despite corroboration of many of those events by other witnesses. Even more importantly, under the court's rule petitioner was not permitted to describe the actual shooting except in the words contained in Doctor Back's notes. The expert's description of the gun's tendency to misfire would have taken on greater significance if the jury had heard petitioner testify that she did not have her finger on the trigger and that the gun went off when her husband hit her arm." (107 S.Ct. 2712, 97 L.Ed.2d 49, 50.)

(c) The inaccuracies of hypnosis can be reduced by certain procedural safeguards, such as requiring that it be performed by a psychologist or psychiatrist having special training and who is independent of the investigation; conducting the session in a neutral setting with no one present but the hypnotist and subject; and recording all interrogations before, during, and after the sessions. And the "more traditional means of assessing accuracy of testimony" remain applicable: verification by corroborating evidence of information recalled as a result of hypnosis; cross-examination; expert testimony concerning the risks of hypnosis; and cautionary instructions. Here, the defective condition of the gun corroborated defendant's posthypnosis recollection, and the tape recordings provided grounds for concluding that the neuropsychologist had not suggested responses with leading questions. (107 S.Ct. 2714, 97 L.Ed.2d 51, 52.) "Those circumstances present an argument for admissibility of petitioner's testimony in this particular case, an argument that must be considered by the trial court." (107 S.Ct. 2714, 97 L.Ed.2d 52, 53.)

(d) "We are not now prepared to endorse without qualifications the use of hypnosis as an investigative tool; scientific understanding of the phenomenon and of the means to control the effects of hypnosis is still in its infancy. Arkansas, however, has not justified the exclusion of all of a defendant's testimony that the defendant is unable to prove to be the product of prehypnosis memory. ... The State would be well within its powers if it established guidelines to aid trial courts in the evaluation of posthypnosis testimony and it may be able to show that testimony in a particular case is so unreliable that exclusion is justified. But it has not shown that hypnotically enhanced testimony is always so untrustworthy and so immune to the traditional means of evaluating credibility that it should disable a defendant from presenting her version of the events for which she is on trial." (107 S.Ct. 2714, 97 L.Ed.2d 52.) (See 101 Harv. L. Rev. 119 [Rock]; 21 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 696 [same].)

Four justices dissented, arguing that (a) nothing in the Constitution justifies a rule requiring state trial courts to make their own case-by-case scientific assessment of the reliability of hypnotically induced testimony; (b) an accused's right to present evidence on the accused's own behalf is not absolute, and should give way to an evidentiary rule designed to exclude testimony that is inherently untrustworthy; and (c) the deference traditionally accorded state criminal trial rules and procedures should be "at its highest in an area such as this, where, as the Court concedes, 'scientific understanding ... is still in its infancy.'" (107 S.Ct. 2716, 97 L.Ed.2d 55.)

However, in People v. Parnell (1993) 16 C.A.4th 862, 869, 870, 20 C.R.2d 302, the court held that a psychologist's opinion as to defendant's mental state at the time of the alleged crimes was not admissible where it was based on statements that defendant had made under hypnosis.

IV. CHEMICAL AND PHYSICAL TESTS

K. Hypnosis.

3. Admissibility of Prehypnotic Evidence.

a. Nature of Problem.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 104

[§ 104] Nature of Problem.

The question whether the exclusionary rule should bar a victim from testifying about facts or memories that were not created during the hypnotic session was raised but not decided in People v. Guerra (1984) 37 C.3d 385, 208 C.R. 162, 690 P.2d 635, supra, §101.

(a) "There is a superficially appealing simplicity to this view: because the evidence in question is recalled before the hypnotic experience, the argument goes, it must ipso facto be untainted by that experience. The rub, however, is that the testimony by which that evidence is put before the jury is given after the witness has been hypnotized." (37 C.3d 427.)

(b) "The soundness of an exception for prehypnotic evidence has already been questioned in the scientific community. The proposed exception has also been vigorously attacked in the scholarly literature. ... In addition to the obvious hearsay problems presented by most types of prehypnotic evidence ... , the proposal raises constitutional issues of impairment of the right to confrontation and potential denial of a fair trial that may be different in degree but are not different in kind from those presented by the use of pretrial hypnosis in general." (37 C.3d 428.)

(c) "We decline to render an advisory opinion answering those difficult questions in the case at bar. ... It will be time enough to grapple with such questions in a case in which they are presented as dispositive issues on a satisfactory record and after full briefing." (37 C.3d 429.)

Two justices joined in an opinion taking a strong position on admissibility:

(a) "[T]here is a special need to ensure that in our zeal to protect the citizenry from the hazards of hypnosis, we do not create a greater injustice by an after-the-fact disqualification of crucial witnesses who have relevant--frequently vital--information that is not tainted by the hypnosis." (37 C.3d 431.)

(b) "[V]irtually all of the other states that have adopted a 'per se' rule excluding hypnotically induced testimony, have at the same time expressly declared that a witness is not necessarily barred from testifying to events which the witness recalled and related to others before undergoing hypnosis." (37 C.3d 431.)

b. Statutory Authorization.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 105

[§ 105] Statutory Authorization.

The testimony of a witness who has previously undergone hypnosis for the purpose of recalling events that are the subject of the witness' testimony may be admitted in a criminal proceeding under specified conditions. (Ev.C. 795(a).) All of the following must be satisfied:

(1) Subject of Testimony. The testimony is limited to matters that the witness recalled and related prior to the hypnosis. (Ev.C. 795(a)(1).)

(2) Preservation of Memory. "The substance of the prehypnotic memory was preserved in written, audiotape, or videotape form prior to the hypnosis." (Ev.C. 795(a)(2).)

(3) Procedure in Hypnosis. The hypnosis was conducted under all of the following procedures:

(a) Prior to hypnosis, a written record was made documenting the subject's description of the event and the information provided to the hypnotist concerning the subject matter of the hypnosis. (Ev.C. 795(a)(3)(A).)

(b) "The subject gave informed consent to the hypnosis." (Ev.C. 795(a)(3)(B).)

(c) The hypnosis session, including the pre- and posthypnosis interviews, was videotaped for later review. (Ev.C. 795(a)(3)(C).)

(d) The hypnosis was performed by a psychologist or by a licensed medical doctor, clinical social worker, or marriage, family, and child counselor. The expert must be experienced in the use of hypnosis and the hypnosis session must be independent, and not conducted in the presence, of law enforcement, the prosecution, or the defense. (Ev.C. 795(a)(3)(D)); see People v. Burroughs (1987) 188 C.A.3d 1162, 1167, 233 C.R. 872 [law enforcement officer is not statutorily qualified hypnotist, and evidence obtained at session conducted by officer is not admissible].)

(4) Hearing on Admissibility. Before admission of the testimony, the court holds a hearing under Ev.C. 402 (determination of preliminary facts; see 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §48 et seq.). The proponent of the evidence must prove by clear and convincing evidence (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Burden of Proof and Presumptions, §§160, 161) that the hypnosis (a) did not make the witness' prehypnosis recollection unreliable or (b) substantially impair the ability to cross-examine the witness about his or her prehypnosis recollection. Each side is entitled to present expert testimony and to cross-examine witnesses. (Ev.C. 795(a)(4).)

(5) Impeachment of Witness and Other Grounds of Admission or Exclusion. Ev.C. 795 does not prevent a party from attacking the credibility of a hypnotized witness or from raising other legal grounds to admit or exclude the witness' testimony. (Ev.C. 795(b).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(3) Procedure in Hypnosis.

(d) Who may perform hypnosis: Ev.C. 795(a)(3)(D) was amended in 2002 to substitute "marriage and family therapist" for "marriage, family, and child counselor".

c. Clarifications and Distinctions.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 106

[§ 106] Clarifications and Distinctions.

(1) Statute Not Retroactive. In People v. Hayes (1989) 49 C.3d 1260, 265 C.R. 132, 783 P.2d 719, the court, relying on the concurring opinion in People v. Guerra (1984) 37 C.3d 385, 208 C.R. 162, 690 P.2d 635, supra, §101, and sister state and federal cases, held that a witness who has undergone hypnosis is not barred from testifying to events that the court finds were recalled and related to others prior to the hypnotic session. (49 C.3d 1270, 1272, 1273.) "In turn, the opposing party is permitted to introduce evidence of the fact and method of hypnosis, and its potential effects on the witness's recollection." (49 C.3d 1273.) This standard, and not the regulatory provisions of Ev.C. 795, governs the admissibility of all prehypnotic evidence predating January 1, 1985, the effective date of the statute, regardless of when the evidence was or may be introduced at trial. (49 C.3d 1273, 1274.) (See People v. Alcala (1992) 4 C.4th 742, 771, 772, 773, 15 C.R.2d 432, 842 P.2d 1192 [discussing and following People v. Hayes].)

(2) Statute Not Applicable in Civil Cases. The rules of People v. Shirley (1982) 31 C.3d 18, 181 C.R. 243, 723 P.2d 1354, supra, §100, and People v. Hayes, supra, continue to govern the admissibility of hypnotically restored testimony in civil cases. "Thus, when faced with an evidentiary challenge in a civil case based upon Shirley-Hayes, a trial court must necessarily conduct a hearing to determine (a) whether the witness underwent hypnosis, (b) for the purpose of restoring memory about the subject of the hypnotic session, and (c) if applicable, whether any proposed testimony is about events recalled and related to others prior to the hypnotic session." (Schall v. Lockheed Missiles & Space Co. (1995) 37 C.A.4th 1485, 1492, 44 C.R.2d 191 [in sexual harassment case, plaintiff's testimony regarding harassment was inadmissible, as she did not remember harassment until she underwent hypnosis].)

(3) Statute Not Applicable to Testimony of Hypnotized Defendant. In People v. Aguilar (1990) 218 C.A.3d 1556, 267 C.R. 879, the court explained its holding that Ev.C. 795 was inapplicable to the testimony of a defendant who testifies in his or her own behalf, as follows: "Shirley established that a defendant's submission to pretrial hypnosis will not render his testimony inadmissible. Proposition 8 did not affect this holding as it enlarged, rather than diminished, the scope of admissible evidence. By its terms, Evidence Code section 795 imposes limits on the admissibility of posthypnosis testimony. Unless and until our Supreme Court modifies its holding in Shirley, that decision controls admissibility of the posthypnosis testimony of a defendant in this state." (218 C.A.3d 1563.)

L. Penile Plethysmograph.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 107

[§ 107] Penile Plethysmograph.

In People v. John W. (1986) 185 C.A.3d 801, 229 C.R. 783, defendant was convicted of committing a lewd and lascivious act upon a child, and of engaging in unlawful sexual intercourse. The trial judge excluded testimony by defendant's psychologist that the results of an electronic physiological test, known as a penile plethysmograph, indicated that defendant did not exhibit behavior characteristics consistent with those of persons likely to commit sexual crimes against children. Held, the testimony was properly excluded.

(a) The test, which involves measuring erectile response to slides of nude girls and women and tapes describing sexual activity with children and adults, was not shown to have been generally accepted in the relevant scientific community as a reliable means of diagnosing sexual deviancy. (185 C.A.3d 805.)

(b) The psychologist, who was a proponent of this new test and therefore likely to be biased, was the only witness who testified as to the test's general acceptance. In addition, the inherent reliability of the test was questionable in view of the psychologist's admission that 20% of the men tested (including defendant) failed to respond at all to any of the stimuli. (185 C.A.3d 805, 806.)

CHAPTER VII - Demonstrative, Experimental, and Scientific Evidence

IV. CHEMICAL AND PHYSICAL TESTS

M. Dolls Used To Detect Child Abuse.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 108

[§ 108] Dolls Used To Detect Child Abuse.

In re Amber B. (1987) 191 C.A.3d 682, 236 C.R. 623, involved the psychological technique of detecting child abuse by observing a child's behavior with anatomically correct dolls and analyzing the child's report of abuse. At a proceeding to declare two minors dependent children, petitioner county Department of Social Services was allowed to present testimony by a psychologist that, in his opinion, the older child had been sexually molested and she believed that she had been molested by her father. The opinion was based on the older child's description of the abuse, and on her behavior with an anatomically correct female doll in the psychologist's office. The juvenile court judge declared both children dependents of the juvenile court. Held, reversed.

(a) The purpose of the Kelly rule (see supra, §42) is to prevent fact finders from being misled by an "aura of infallibility" that might surround unproven scientific methods. (191 C.A.3d 690.) "Accordingly, a scientific procedure, technique or theory should be characterized as a 'new scientific method of proof,' " subject to the requirement that there be a showing of general acceptance within the relevant scientific community if fact finders would tend to ascribe to it "an inordinately high degree of certainty." (191 C.A.3d 690, 691.)

(b) "We conclude that the practice of detecting child sexual abuse by (1) observing a child's behavior with anatomically correct dolls, and (2) analyzing the child's reports of abuse, is ... 'a new scientific process operating on purely psychological evidence' ... and is subject to the Kelly-Frye test. The specific causes of age-inappropriate child sexual behavior, and indeed the entire field of child sexuality since the theories of Sigmund Freud, are beyond the scope of critical analysis by the average lay person. Thus a psychologist's examination and analysis employing the technique used by Dr. Raming may be surrounded by an 'aura of infallibility,' and a trier of fact would tend to ascribe 'an inordinately high degree of certainty' to the technique." (191 C.A.3d 691.)

(c) The failure to show general scientific acceptance of the reliability of the technique was not harmless error, because petitioner's entire case was based upon the psychologist's analysis of the child's reports of abuse and her behavior with the dolls. (191 C.A.3d 691.)

The opinion adds the following observation:

"We recognize that unique problems of proof are presented whenever it is claimed that a young child was the victim of sexual abuse by a parent. The child may be incompetent to testify, the act of testifying could be as traumatic as the abuse itself, and the child may be subjected to strong parental influences. The trial judge, the parties, and society in general would greatly benefit from reliable expert testimony addressing the question whether the child was abused, either in lieu of or in addition to testimony by the child. However, we cannot approve such expert testimony until its reliability is shown pursuant to Kelly-Frye." (191 C.A.3d 691.) (See In re Christie D. (1988) 206 C.A.3d 469, 477, 253 C.R. 619 [In re Amber B. followed].)

In re Christine C. (1987) 191 C.A.3d 676, 236 C.R. 630, dealing with the same issue, found the erroneous admission of the psychiatric testimony to be harmless error, because the children gave believable testimony and the judge provided a detailed oral explanation of the order declaring the children dependent. (191 C.A.3d 680.)

CHAPTER VII - Demonstrative, Experimental, and Scientific Evidence

IV. CHEMICAL AND PHYSICAL TESTS

N. Other Tests.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Demo Evid § 109

[§ 109] Other Tests.

Results of the following scientific tests have been held to be admissible evidence:

(1) Gunshot Residue Test. This process uses a scanning electron microscope to detect the presence of particles of gunshot residue. (See People v. Palmer (1978) 80 C.A.3d 239, 250, 145 C.R. 466; 1 A.L.R.4th 1072 [Results of Residue Detection Tests].)

(2) Bite Mark Identification. This is a technique to prove identity from similarities between bite marks, usually found on a victim, and the dentition of a suspect. (See People v. Marx (1975) 54 C.A.3d 100, 107, 126 C.R. 350; People v. Slone (1978) 76 C.A.3d 611, 619, 143 C.R. 61.)

(3) Probability Extrapolation. This is a method to calculate the statistical likelihood of a theory by using randomly selected samples. In a leading California case involving a drug prosecution, a criminalist using probability extrapolation testified that there was less than a 1 in 300,000 chance that the amount of cocaine seized in a shipment contained less than 100 pounds. This constituted sufficient and admissible evidence that the amount of cocaine was at least 100 pounds, even though the calculation was based on a random sampling of the total shipment. (See People v. Peneda (1995) 32 C.A.4th 1022, 1030, 38 C.R.2d 312.)

(4) Photographic Segmentation. This technique involves using computers to extract the boundaries and regions of a photograph based on their color or luminance. The image is then "mapped" through a mathematical formula to create a more discernible image. Segmentation has primarily been used in the medical field, e.g., locating the precise boundaries of brain tumors and tracking their development, and in the environmental field, e.g., locating pollution or hazardous waste sites. However, it has also been used to enhance crime scene photographs. (See People v. Williams (1996) 46 C.A.4th 1767, 1777, 54 C.R.2d 521 [defendant had rose tattoo on his arm; enhanced photograph taken during commission of crime depicted undefined mark on perpetrator's arm].)

(5) Neutron Activation Analysis. This method uses radiation to detect trace elements in samples of materials for the purpose of identifying the source of those materials. Although not a reliable method for identifying bodily fluids because of sample contamination problems (see supra, §67), it has been held to be a valid test to identify other substances, including hair, thread, bomb fragments, and various fibers. (See 59 Cal. L. Rev. 997; 15 Proof of Facts 115; 50 A.L.R.3d 117.)

(6) Ringlemann Chart Observations of Air Pollution. Estimates of the density and opacity of smoke may be made by comparing it to this chart, which by optical illusion creates a series of gray rectangles of differing color densities.

(See People v. International Steel Corp. (1951) 102 C.A.2d Supp. 935, 939, 226 P.2d 587; People v. Plywood Mfrs. of Calif. (1955) 137 C.A.2d Supp. 859, 869, 871, 291 P.2d 587, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Judicial Notice, §34; 51 A.L.R.3d 1026.)

(7) Electrocardiogram and Electroencephalogram Tests. An electrocardiograph (EKG) and an electroencephalograph (EEG) are diagnostic tools that electronically measure and record heartbeats and brain waves, respectively, to detect illness or injury. (See Hays v. Viscome (1953) 122 C.A.2d 135, 137, 264 P.2d 173 [EEG]; 4 Proof of Facts 641 [EEG]; 4 Proof of Facts 3d 73 [EKG]; 66 A.L.R.2d 536 [EKG and EEG].)

(8) Syncrometer Tests. A syncrometer is a device that detects the presence of carcinogenic chemicals in people or products. (See Melaleuca v. Clark (1998) 66 C.A.4th 1344, 1357, 78 C.R.2d 627, 5 Summary (9th), Torts, Supp., §573.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Bite Mark Identification. See 1 A.L.R.6th 657 [identification of accused from bite mark evidence].

(2a) (New) Forensic Hair Comparison. Hair comparison evidence that identifies a suspect or victim as a possible donor "has been routinely admitted." (People v. Huggins (2006) 38 C.4th 175, 200, 41 C.R.3d 593, 131 P.3d 995 [in capital murder prosecution with rape-murder special circumstance, there was no error in admitting criminalist's testimony that hairs found on victim's body were consistent with defendant's pubic hair, where criminalist acknowledged that such evidence is of limited significance].)(8) Syncrometer Tests.

Cross-Reference: 5 Summary (10th), Torts, §650.

(9) (New) Speedometer Readings. Where a police officer paced the defendant and the officer's speedometer showed that the defendant was traveling at speeds above the legal limit, the officer's testimony to that effect can be considered reliable evidence of the defendant's speed, even in the absence of speedometer calibration test results. (See People v. Lowe (2002) 105 C.A.4th Supp. 1, 6, 130 C.R.2d 249.)

(New) Results of following scientific tests held inadmissible or subject to Kelly test: A scent transfer unit, used in the preparation of gauze pads employed in a canine scent lineup, is a novel device, and, therefore, evidence produced with the aid of the unit cannot be admitted without a Kelly hearing (see text, §42). (People v. Mitchell (2003) 110 C.A.4th 772, 789, 2 C.R.3d 49; People v. Willis (2004) 115 C.A.4th 379, 385, 9 C.R.3d 235.) West's Key Number Digest, Criminal Law k.388.2; Evidence k.150-

CHAPTER VIII - Documentary Evidence

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES

A. Nature and Kinds of Writings.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 1

[§ 1] Nature and Kinds of Writings.

(1) Classification. Former C.C.P. 1887 et seq. described documents or writings as either public or private; and public writings were classified as laws, judicial records, other official documents, and public records kept in this state of private writings. These sections were repealed in 1968 and replaced by the California Public Records Act. (See Govt.C. 6250 et seq., 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §278 et seq.)

The Act defines "public records" to include various specified writings (Govt.C. 6252(e)), and further defines "writing" (Govt.C. 6252(f)). It does not define private writings, which are elsewhere classified as either sealed or unsealed (C.C.P. 1929), although there is no legal significance in the seal (C.C.P. 1932). (See generally 2 McCormick 5th, §218 et seq.; 3 Wharton, Crim. Evidence (14th ed.), §469 et seq.)

(2) Expanded Code Definition. Ev.C. 250 defines "writing" more broadly than any of California's prior statutes, and includes forms of expression seldom thought of as writings: The term covers "handwriting, typewriting, printing, photostating, photographing, and every other means of recording upon any tangible thing any form of communication or representation, including letters, words, pictures, sounds, or symbols, or combinations thereof." (On tape recordings, see infra, §§12, 13; on writings within meaning of the secondary evidence rule, see infra, §32 et seq.)

(3) Federal Rules of Evidence. " 'Writings' and 'recordings' consist of letters, words, or numbers, or their equivalent, set down by handwriting, typewriting, printing, photostating, photographing, magnetic impulse, mechanical or electronic recording, or other form of data compilation." (F.R. Evid., Rule 1001(1).) "Photographs" include "still photographs, X-ray films, video tapes, and motion pictures." (F.R. Evid., Rule 1001(2); see 5 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §551 et seq.; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §1023.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Classification. Govt.C. 6252(f), defining "writing," was relettered Govt.C. 6252(g) in 2004 without substantive change.

See 2 McCormick 6th, §218 et seq.

(2) Expanded Code Definition. Ev.C. 250 was amended in 2002 to add "photocopying" and "transmitting by electronic mail or facsimile" to the definition of writing. Additionally, a writing includes "any record thereby created, regardless of the manner in which the record has been stored."

See 103 Am.Jur. Trials 123 [admissibility of e-mail evidence in civil trials].(3) Federal Rules of Evidence. See 41

CHAPTER VIII - Documentary Evidence

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES
B. Applicable Rules of Evidence.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 2

[§ 2] Applicable Rules of Evidence.

The following are the primary evidentiary rules that apply to documentary evidence:

(1) Relevancy. Documentary evidence must, of course, meet the usual test of relevancy. (See 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §26.)

(2) General Exclusionary Rules. Documentary evidence is subject to general exclusionary rules such as the opinion rule (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Opinion Evidence, §1) and the hearsay rule (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §4).

(3) Specific Exclusionary Rules. Documentary evidence may be excluded under the secondary evidence rule (replacing the best evidence rule; see infra, §31 et seq.) and the parol evidence rule (see infra, §59 et seq.).

(4) Privileges and Constitutional Guarantees. Admission of a party's documents may also be opposed on a claim of privilege (see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §59), or because they were illegally obtained by an unconstitutional search and seizure (see 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, §1 et seq.). And a writing containing a defendant's involuntary confession or admission is inadmissible in a criminal case (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §§54, 136).

(5) Authentication. Introduction of a writing in evidence requires a foundation by authentication (see infra, §3 et seq.), and a number of presumptions deal with authenticity or effect of writings (infra, §22 et seq.).

(6) Translators. Writings in a foreign language may require a translator. (See 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation At Trial, §27.)

(7) Judicial Notice. Introduction in evidence is unnecessary where a writing is judicially noticed. (See 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Judicial Notice, §1 et seq.)

CHAPTER VIII - Documentary Evidence

II. AUTHENTICATION

A. Requirement of Authentication.

1. Nature and Purpose.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 3

[§ 3] Nature and Purpose.

(1) California Law. Ev.C. 1400 provides that "authentication" of a writing means either of the following:

(a) The introduction of evidence sufficient to sustain a finding that it is the writing that the proponent of the evidence claims it is.

(b) The establishment of these facts "by any other means provided by law."

Thus, even though a writing is relevant and not subject to an exclusionary rule (see supra, §2), a foundation must be laid by authentication before it can be introduced into evidence. (Ev.C. 1401(a); see Ten Winkel v. Anglo Calif. Sec. Co. (1938) 11 C.2d 707, 720, 81 P.2d 958; Magee v. Wyeth Laboratories (1963) 214 C.A.2d 340, 355, 29 C.R. 322 [photostatic copy of printed congressional committee report, not certified, inadmissible]; Continental Baking Co. v. Katz (1968) 68 C.2d 512, 526, 67 C.R. 761, 439 P.2d 889 [hearing on preliminary injunction; counsel offered letters of purported predecessor in interest of adverse party, as admissions, said "I can have a witness testify," but never got any; error to receive documents]; 2 McCormick 5th, §219 et seq.; 7 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §2128 et seq.; 1 Jefferson, California Evidence Benchbook 3d, Chap. 30; C.E.B., Effective Introduction of Evidence 2d, Chap. 11; 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation At Trial, §147.)

(2) Federal Rules of Evidence. Federal practice is governed by similar F.R. Evid., Rule 901 et seq. (See 28 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 1259, 1265; 5 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §512 et seq.; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §1032 et seq.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) California Law. See Stockinger v. Feather River Community College (2003) 111 C.A.4th 1014, 1027, 1028, 4 C.R.3d 385 [distinguishing between authentication requirement and hearsay rule]; Simons, Cal. Evidence Manual, §8:1 et seq.; 2 McCormick 6th, §221 et seq.

(New) Distinction: petition to compel arbitration: For purposes of a petition to compel arbitration, the normal procedures of document authentication need not be followed. C.C.P. 1281.2 (6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, §496) "does not require the petitioner to introduce the agreement into evidence. A plain reading of the statute indicates that as a preliminary matter the court is only required to make a finding of the agreement's existence, not an evidentiary determination of its validity." CHAPTER VIII - Documentary Evidence

A. Requirement of Authentication.

2. Writing Not Genuine.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 4

[§ 4] Writing Not Genuine.

(1) In General. "Authentication" is generally thought to be related to authenticity and due execution, and in this narrow sense, authentication involves a showing that the writing is genuine, i.e., actually made or signed by the person who appears as the maker. Ev.C. 1400 (supra, §3) defines the term more broadly, to cover proof of the nature or source of a writing that is relevant even though it is not genuine.

Thus, in People v. Adamson (1953) 118 C.A.2d 714, 720, 258 P.2d 1020, a letter was offered to prove that P had acted pursuant thereto. Held, authentication was not required. "Whether it be genuine or a forgery, it was merely offered to show that Mr. Pugh was motivated by it in his actions." (See 7 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §2132.)

The conclusion in the Adamson case, that proof of genuineness is not required where genuineness is not in issue, is of course sound. But the court's statement that "authentication" was not required was based on the narrow definition of the term. "The writing involved in the Adamson case was a letter that a witness claimed he had received and acted upon. Under the Evidence Code, the requirement of authentication would require a showing that the letter offered in evidence was in fact the one received and acted upon; and this is the preliminary showing that was found sufficient in the Adamson case." (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1401.)

(2) Writing Signed by Agent. If the writing is not signed by a party but by another as his or her agent, a double foundation must be laid by proof of the genuineness of the agent's signature and proof of the agent's authority. (See 2 McCormick 5th, §218.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Writing Signed by Agent. See 2 McCormick 6th, §221.

CHAPTER VIII - Documentary Evidence

II. AUTHENTICATION

A. Requirement of Authentication.

3. For Admission of Secondary Evidence.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 5

[§ 5] For Admission of Secondary Evidence.

(1) In General. "Authentication of a writing is required before secondary evidence of its content may be received in evidence." (Ev.C. 1401(b), 1521(c); see C.E.B., 2 Civil Proc. During Trial 3d, §13.65.) In other words, the secondary evidence rule (see infra, §31 et seq.) authorizes the introduction of the writing, but not its authentication. "[T]herefore, if a person offers in evidence a copy of a writing, he must make a sufficient preliminary showing of the authenticity of both the copy and the original (i.e., the writing sought to be proved by the copy)." (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1401; see Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1521 ["Under Section 1401, the proponent must not only authenticate the original writing, but must also establish that the proffered evidence is secondary evidence of the original"].)

(2) Recorded Deed. Where a copy of a recorded deed is offered, authentication of the copy, by attestation or certification of the official custodian (Ev.C. 1530, infra, §41 et seq.), also authenticates the original: The authenticated copy is prima facie evidence of the existence and content of the official record (Ev.C. 1530), and the official record is prima facie evidence of the existence, content and execution of the original (Ev.C. 1600). "Thus, the duly attested or certified copy of the record meets the requirement of authentication for the copy itself, for the official record, and for the original deed." (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1401; see infra, §41.)

(3) Transcript of Tape Recording. In O'Laskey v. Sortino (1990) 224 C.A.3d 241, 273 C.R. 674, a personal injury action, the trial judge refused to admit a transcript of a taped telephone conversation between defendant and a private investigator hired by plaintiff to determine whether defendant had left the state for more than 8 days during the year following the accident. (According to the transcript, defendant had gone to Las Vegas for 2 weeks, and under C.C.P. 351, the statute of limitations would be tolled during this time.) Held, exclusion was proper; although there was no violation of P.C. 632 (4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, §343 et seq.), the transcript was properly excluded because the tape was not authenticated.

(a) A tape recording is a "writing" that must be authenticated before it can be received into evidence, and without authentication of the tape, the transcript is irrelevant. (224 C.A.3d 249, citing the text; see infra, §§12, 19.)

(b) In offering the transcript, plaintiff submitted a declaration by his attorney stating that counsel had retained a private investigator from whom he had received the transcript and the tape; that he had listened to the tape, and the transcript was an accurate record of it; and that the voice on the tape was defendant's, which he recognized from defendant's deposition. (224 C.A.3d 249.)

(c) The declaration is insufficient to authenticate the tape for the following reasons:

(1) It does not show whether the tape was what plaintiff claimed it to be, because no sworn testimony of the investigator was offered to describe when, where, how, or by whom the tape was made. (224 C.A.3d 249.)

(2) There is nothing in either the transcript or declaration identifying the investigator as the second party to the conversation. (224 C.A.3d 249.)

(3) There is no evidence regarding the completeness or accuracy of the tape. Although counsel, in his declaration, attested to the accuracy of the transcript, the investigator was the only person competent to testify to the accuracy of the tape, i.e., whether it had been altered or edited or included the entire conversation. (224 C.A.3d 250.)

(4) Electronic Record or Signature. The Uniform Electronic Transactions Act (C.C. 1633.1 et seq. ; see 1 Summary (9th), Contracts, Supp., §3A et seq.) provides that "evidence of a record or signature may not be excluded solely because it is in electronic form." (C.C. 1633.13.)

CHAPTER VIII - Documentary Evidence

II. AUTHENTICATION

A. Requirement of Authentication.

4. For Admission of Altered Writing.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 6

[§ 6] For Admission of Altered Writing.

A party producing a writing as genuine, which has or appears to have been altered after its execution as to a material fact, must account for the alteration. "If he does that, he may give the writing in evidence, but not otherwise." (Ev.C. 1402; see King v. Tarabino (1921) 53 C.A. 157, 165, 199 P. 890.)

Ev.C. 1402 specifies the kinds of showing that will meet the requirement:

(1) That the alteration "was made by another, without his concurrence."

(2) That it "was made with the consent of the parties affected by it."

(3) That it "was otherwise properly or innocently made."

(4) That it "did not change the meaning or language of the instrument." (See Consolidated Loan Co. v. Harman (1957) 150 C.A.2d 488, 491, 310 P.2d 450 [mere identification of intended obligee not a material alteration, and instrument unaffected]; 29 Proof of Facts 3d 549 [proving alteration of document].)

In People v. Morris (1991) 53 C.3d 152, 279 C.R. 720, 807 P.2d 949, the court held that defendant's letter to his girlfriend, which contained damaging admissions, was properly authenticated. Defendant claimed that the letter was an inadmissible altered document because a page was missing. A handwriting expert acknowledged the possibility of a missing page based on certain features of the letter. However, the girlfriend testified that the copy offered by the prosecution was true and accurate (she had destroyed the original in jail), and that defendant had often written fragmented letters. (53 C.3d 205.)

II. AUTHENTICATION

B. Methods of Authentication.

1. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 7

[§ 7] In General.

(1) List of Methods. A writing may be authenticated by "evidence" or "by any other means provided by law." (Ev.C. 1400, supra, §3.) Ev.C. 1410 et seq. specify the principal methods of authentication by evidence, direct or circumstantial. (See infra, §8 et seq.; on authentication of graffiti in a vandalism prosecution, see infra, §20.) Other methods are:

- (a) Admission in the pleadings, in discovery proceedings, or at pretrial conference. (See infra, §21.)
- (b) Presumptions. (See infra, §22 et seq.)

The statutory listing of evidentiary means is not exclusive: "[I]t would be impossible to specify all of the varieties of circumstantial evidence that may be sufficient in particular cases to sustain a finding of the authenticity of a writing." (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1410.) Thus, Ev.C. 1410 states that "[n]othing in this article shall be construed to limit the means by which a writing may be authenticated or proved." (See C.C. 1633.13, supra, §5 ["evidence of a record or signature may not be excluded solely because it is in electronic form"]; People v. Olquin (1994) 31 C.A.4th 1355, 1372, 37 C.R.2d 596 [rap lyrics found in defendant's home were properly authenticated as his creation based on their location and references they contained, even though means of authentication listed in Ev.C. 1410 et seq. were not employed]; 35 Proof of Facts 3d 567 [use of ink analysis to date handwriting].)

(2) Foundation of Authentication. The foundation of authentication is laid by "the introduction of evidence sufficient to sustain a finding." (Ev.C. 1400; on similar federal practice, see F.R. Evid., Rule 901(a); 5 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §512; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §1032.) In other words, the preliminary fact of authenticity is first determined by the judge in ruling on admissibility, but is then subject to redetermination by the jury. (Ev.C. 1400; People v. Fonville (1973) 35 C.A.3d 693, 708, 111 C.R. 53, infra, §19; see 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation At Trial, §57.) The lack of a sufficient foundation, however, must be raised by a specific objection, or the defect is waived. (See Bank of America v. Taliaferro (1956) 144 C.A.2d 578, 582, 301 P.2d 393; 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation At Trial, §380.)

Law (3d), Sex Offenses and Crimes Against Decency, Supp., §67 [in prosecution for pimping, two manuscripts seized from defendant's premises were properly authenticated based on location where they were found and references contained in them, even if authentication methods enumerated in Ev.C. 1410 et seq. were not used].

B. Methods of Authentication.

2. Testimony.

a. Subscribing Witness.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 8

[§ 8] Subscribing Witness.

(1) Definition. "A subscribing witness is one who sees a writing executed or hears it acknowledged, and at the request of the party thereupon signs his name as a witness." (C.C.P. 1935; see C.E.B., 2 Civil Proc. During Trial 3d, §13.65.)

(2) Ordinarily Not Essential. At common law, all subscribing witnesses ("attestors") had to be called or a showing made of their unavailability. This requirement is now quite generally abolished except where attestation is a statutory condition. Thus, while production of the subscribing witness is desirable, it is not required, "[e]xcept as provided by statute." (Ev.C. 1411; see Ev.C. 1413, infra, §9; Estate of Cecala (1949) 92 C.A.2d 834, 839, 208 P.2d 436 ["That a will may be proved otherwise than by the subscribing witnesses is definitely settled"]; 2 McCormick 5th, §220.)

F.R. Evid., Rule 903 is to the same effect: "The testimony of a subscribing witness is not necessary to authenticate a writing unless required by the laws of the jurisdiction whose laws govern the validity of the writing." (See 5 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §§549, 550; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §1039.)

(3) When Required by Statute. The principal statutory requirement is in the proof of wills: if there is no contest, and if a subscribing witness is available, the evidence of one subscribing witness as to the due execution of the will in all particulars is sufficient. (Prob.C. 8220; see 12 Summary (9th), Wills and Probate, §516.) However, if a required subscribing witness "denies or does not recollect the execution of the writing," authentication by other evidence is permissible. (Ev.C. 1412.) (On the presumption of due execution, see 12 Summary (9th), Wills and Probate, §204.)

e. Witness to Tape Recording.

1. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 12

[§ 12] In General.

(1) California Law. A tape recording of a conversation or interrogation is a "writing" within the definition of Ev.C. 250 (supra, §1). Authenticity of the recording may be established by a person who listened to the oral statements and can testify that the recording is an accurate reflection of them. (See People v. Ketchel (1963) 59 C.2d 503, 518, 30 C.R. 538, 381 P.2d 394; People v. Spencer (1963) 60 C.2d 64, 77, footnote 5, 78, 31 C.R. 782, 383 P.2d 134 [district attorney examined interrogating officer on time, place, recording apparatus, accuracy of recording, etc.; questions reproduced]; 52 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1273 [criticizing liberal California standards for admission in criminal cases and proposing stricter standards]; 48 Am.Jur. Trials 1 [admission and use of audio recordings as evidence]; 23 Proof of Facts 3d 315 [same].) (On authentication by content, see People v. Fonville (1973) 35 C.A.3d 693, 709, 111 C.R. 53, infra, §19.)

It is not necessary that the tape recording be transcribed by the reporter; it is admitted in evidence after being played, and a reviewing court may--as in People v. Spencer, supra--listen to it. However, if a transcription is to be used, "it would be preferable to have it prepared prior to trial or outside the presence of the jury so that the tape could be stopped and portions replayed to facilitate accurate transcription." (People v. Bowie (1977) 72 C.A.3d 143, 152, 140 C.R. 49; see supra, §5.)

(2) Federal Rules of Evidence. "Identification of a voice, whether heard firsthand or through mechanical or electronic transmission or recording," may be made by "opinion based upon hearing the voice at any time under circumstances connecting it with the alleged speaker." (F.R. Evid., Rule 901(b)(5); see 5 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §§523, 524; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §§1221 et seq., 1227.)

2. Testimony.

e. Witness to Tape Recording.

2. Effect of Partially Unintelligible Tape.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 13

[§ 13] Effect of Partially Unintelligible Tape.

To be admissible, a tape recording need not be completely intelligible for the entire conversation so long as enough of it is intelligible to be relevant without creating an inference of speculation or unfairness. (See 57 A.L.R.3d 746 [omission or inaudibility of portions of tape as affecting admissibility].) "Thus, a partially unintelligible tape is admissible unless the audible portions of the tape are so incomplete the tape's relevance is destroyed." (People v. Polk (1996) 47 C.A.4th 944, 952, 956, 54 C.R.2d 921 [in murder trial, tape recording of defendants' conversation in back of police car was properly admitted even though portions were inaudible, and trial judge did not abuse discretion in admitting transcript of recording based on finding that it was substantially complete and accurate]; see People v. Von Villas (1992) 11 C.A.4th 175, 225, 15 C.R.2d 112 [tape recording of jailhouse conversation between defendant and wife was properly admitted even though portions were unintelligible].)

In People v. Spencer (1963) 60 C.2d 64, 31 C.R. 782, 383 P.2d 134, the recording was played to the jury. On appeal, defendant challenged its authentication by pointing out that the reporter's transcript contained 162 instances listed "unintelligible." The record on appeal also contained the tape as an exhibit, and the Supreme Court had it played and compared with the transcript, finding it clear and comprehensible in all of these instances. The explanation was that the reporters took down the words from their seats in the courtroom, some distance away from the place where the recording was played so the jurors could hear it best. Because no juror complained of lack of understanding, and trial counsel made no such objection, the challenge was unfounded. (60 C.2d 79, 80.) The court observed, however, that the better practice is for the trial judge to listen to recordings before allowing them to be played to the jury, in order to rule in advance on objections to completeness, accuracy and intelligibility. (60 C.2d 80, footnote 9.)

3. Circumstantial Evidence.

a. Comparison With Exemplar.

1. Nature of Proof.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 14

[§ 14] Nature of Proof.

A common method of proof is by comparison of the offered writing with some other admittedly genuine writing, called an "exemplar." The comparison may, of course, be made by an expert witness (supra, §10) in order to form his or her opinion. (Ev.C. 1418.) But the two writings--the disputed and the exemplar--may be offered in evidence, and considered by the jury or other trier of fact as circumstantial evidence to prove genuineness or lack thereof. (Ev.C. 1417; see Castor v. Bernstein (1906) 2 C.A. 703, 705, 84 P. 244; People v. Storke (1900) 128 C. 486, 488, 60 P. 1090; People v. Gaines (1934) 1 C.2d 110, 115, 34 P.2d 146; People v. Davis (1944) 65 C.A.2d 255, 257, 150 P.2d 474 [prosecution for maintaining illegal betting establishment; comparison of questioned betting marker with admittedly genuine loan application]; C.E.B., 2 Civil Proc. During Trial 3d, §13.74; 2 McCormick 5th, §221; 41 A.L.R.2d 575 [mode and degree of proof required to establish genuineness of handwriting]; 80 A.L.R.2d 272 [comparison by trier of fact without expert testimony].)

Federal practice is similar. (See F.R. Evid., Rule 901(b)(3) ["Comparison by the trier of fact or by expert witnesses with specimens which have been authenticated"]; 5 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §516; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §1215.)

B. Methods of Authentication.

3. Circumstantial Evidence.

a. Comparison With Exemplar.

2. Foundation: Requisites of Exemplar.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 15

[§ 15] Foundation: Requisites of Exemplar.

(1) In General. The foundation for this type of circumstantial evidence is proof of the preliminary fact of genuineness of the exemplar. The court must find that it was "admitted or treated as genuine" by the adverse party, or it must be "otherwise proved to be genuine to the satisfaction of the court." (Ev.C. 1417.)

The exemplar must be one which was written naturally and independently of the purposes of the litigation. A specimen writing or signature prepared specially for the use of an expert after litigation has commenced ("post litem motam") is not admissible. (People v. Sauer (1958) 163 C.A.2d 740, 745, 329 P.2d 962 [holding, however, that admission was not reversible error because other proper specimens were used and other sufficient evidence of forgery was introduced]; see 72 A.L.R.2d 1274 [competency, as standard of comparison to establish genuineness of handwriting, of writings made after controversy arose].)

And a defendant cannot offer exemplars of his or her handwriting, made at the trial or after his arrest, because of the possibility of fraud in allowing the defendant to corroborate his or her own testimony by a prepared specimen. (People v. Briggs (1931) 117 C.A. 708, 711, 4 P.2d 593; People v. Golembiewski (1938) 25 C.A.2d 115, 119, 76 P.2d 717.)

(2) Ancient Writings. The foundation requirement is relaxed for proof of ancient writings, i.e., those that are more than 30 years old. For these writings, the comparison may be made "with a writing purporting to be genuine, and generally respected and acted upon as such, by persons having an interest in knowing whether it is genuine." (Ev.C. 1419; see Devereaux v. Frazier Mountain Park & Fisheries Co. (1967) 248 C.A.2d 323, 330, 56 C.R. 345 [both documents over 30 years old].)

a. Comparison With Exemplar.

3. Exemplars Requested by Opposing Party.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 16

[§ 16] Exemplars Requested by Opposing Party.

Ordinarily, a witness who denies that a particular signature is his or hers is prohibited from writing his or her name in the jury's presence and offering the result as a standard of handwriting comparison. If a witness could corroborate his or her own testimony with his or her own written specimens, the risk of fraud would be too great. (See supra, §15.) But despite this exclusion on direct examination, compelled preparation of current handwriting exemplars is proper on cross-examination. The witness may be required to write the disputed name and give other written samples for comparison with the signature in question. (People v. Villarino (1970) 7 C.A.3d 56, 66, 86 C.R. 338 [defendant's wife testified on direct examination that she had filled in and signed checks her husband was accused of forging; district attorney entitled to obtain samples of her handwriting on cross-examination]; People v. Najera (1972) 8 C.3d 504, 513, 105 C.R. 345, 503 P.2d 1353 [it is not improper to use post litem motam exemplar (i.e., one made after commencement of litigation) against party who made it].)

In People v. Hess (1970) 10 C.A.3d 1071, 90 C.R. 268, the prosecution obtained an order requiring defendant to furnish a sample of her writing with a backhand slant in addition to her already-furnished normal handwriting. (The allegedly forged bills of sale and loss claims were written in that backhand way.) On advice of counsel, who stressed the unfairness of compelling her to write in an unnatural hand, disguised in the same manner as the forged writing, she refused. Evidence of this refusal was introduced. In a related move, to rebut an inference that a witness, Mrs. T, had committed the forgeries, the prosecutor introduced expert testimony that an analysis of the forged documents showed that the handwriting was different from specially prepared samples made by Mrs. T. The prosecutor then argued to the jury that defendant's refusal raised an inference of guilt. Held, no error.

(a) If defendant had prepared a backhand exemplar, the result would have facilitated either her identification or her elimination as the author of the forged documents. (10 C.A.3d 1077.)

(b) Because none of the persons on whom suspicion focused wrote naturally in backhand, it was proper to compare the forged documents with a sample of Mrs. T's handwriting, given after the litigation had begun. The rule excluding post litem motam samples presupposes that existing samples, adequate for comparison purposes, will normally be available. "[W]e doubt the rule should be applied where the questioned writing is in a disguised style precluding the pre-existence of samples which will enable an expert to make a definitive analysis." (10 C.A.3d 1078.)

[§ 17] Evidence That Writing Was Reply.

If a letter or telegram is sent to a person and a reply is received in due course purporting to come from that person, this is sufficient evidence of genuineness. (House Grain Co. v. Finerman & Sons (1953) 116 C.A.2d 485, 492, 253 P.2d 1034 ["A reply-telegram authenticates itself"]; see 2 McCormick 5th, §225; 7 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§2153, 2154; C.E.B., 2 Civil Proc. [§ 18] Letter or Other Writing.

(1) California Law. The authenticity of a letter or other writing may appear from its contents, as where it states facts that would be known to the person whose letter it purports to be, or appears to be part of a series of letters between two parties. "If its tenor, subject-matter, and the parties between whom it purports to have passed make it fairly fit into an admitted or proved course of correspondence and constitute an evident connecting link or part thereof, these circumstances justify its admission." (Chaplin v. Sullivan (1945) 67 C.A.2d 728, 734, 155 P.2d 368; see *McAllister v. c. Authentication by Content.

2. Tape Recording.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 19

[§ 19] Tape Recording.

A tape recording also may be authenticated by content. Thus, in People v. Fonville (1973) 35 C.A.3d 693, 111 C.R. 53, defendant was visited in jail by his uncle. Unknown to them, as they communicated through a telephone intercom, the sheriff's office was recording their conversation at the district attorney's request. The conversation included incriminating statements which the prosecutor sought to introduce at trial, but without calling any witness to identify the voices or testify that the tape was an accurate reproduction of the conversation. Held, the evidence was properly admitted.

The recorded statements dealt with matters that defendant had both denied and told to the police about his state of intoxication, the quantity of intoxicants taken and the time the victim left a cafe, thus indicating that in fact it was defendant whose words were on the recording. "They are matters that are unlikely to have been known by anyone other than the appellant. In effect, the conversation proves itself." (35 C.A.3d 709.) (See 52 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1290, 1298, criticizing "laxity" of Fonville holding.)

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 20

[§ 20] Graffiti in Vandalism Prosecution.

For purposes of our authentication statute, a writing includes graffiti consisting of written words, insignia, symbols, or other markings that convey a particular meaning. (Ev.C. 1410.5(a).) Graffiti, or a photograph of it, may be admitted into evidence in an action for vandalism to prove that it was made by the defendant. (Ev.C. 1410.5(b).)

The admissibility of facts offered to prove that the graffiti was made by the defendant must, upon motion of the defendant, be ruled on outside the jury's presence, and is subject to the testimonial and circumstantial evidence requirements of Ev.C. 1416, 1417, and 1418 (see supra, §§11, 14 et seq.). #### 4. Admission by Adverse Party.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 21

[§ 21] Admission by Adverse Party.

(1) Before Trial. The authenticity of an instrument relied on by the plaintiff or defendant may be established prior to the trial, in discovery proceedings (request for admissions; see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §157 et seq.) or at a pretrial conference (see 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §52 et seq.; 9 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §2597).

(2) During Trial. A writing may be authenticated at trial by evidence of either of the following (see C.E.B., 2 Civil Proc. During Trial 3d, §13.77):

(a) That the adverse party "has at any time admitted its authenticity." (Ev.C. 1414(a).)

(b) That the writing "has been acted upon as authentic" by the adverse party. (Ev.C. 1414(b); see Vista v. Sutro & Co. (1997) 52 C.A.4th 401, 412, 413, 60 C.R.2d 488 [client agreement between city and brokerage firm requiring city to arbitrate claims against firm was properly authenticated based on evidence agreement had been acted on by city as authentic].)

II. AUTHENTICATION

C. Presumptions of Authenticity.

1. Private Writings.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 22

[§ 22] Private Writings.

The foundation for authentication may be furnished by a presumption that places the burden of producing evidence challenging the writing on the adverse party and requires a finding of authenticity if the burden is not met. (Ev.C. 1450; on effect of this type of presumption, see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Burden of Proof and Presumptions, §177.) There are five important situations:

(1) Acknowledged Writing. Except for wills, which require special proof (see supra, §8), a certificate "of the acknowledgment" or "of the proof" of a writing, pursuant to C.C. 1180 et seq., "is prima facie evidence of the facts recited in the certificate and the genuineness of the signature of each person by whom the writing purports to have been signed." (Ev.C. 1451; see Thomas v. Fursman (1918) 177 C. 550, 553, 171 P. 301; Thomas v. Peterson (1931) 213 C. 672, 674, 3 P.2d 306; 4 Summary (9th), Real Property, §165 et seq.) (On federal practice, see F.R. Evid., Rule 902(b)(8).)

(2) Ancient Instrument. (Ev.C. 643; see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Burden of Proof and Presumptions, §199.)

(3) Document of Title. The Uniform Commercial Code provides that a document in due form purporting to be a bill of lading, policy or certificate of insurance, official weigher's or inspector's certificate, consular invoice, "or any other document authorized or required by the contract to be issued by a third party," is presumed to be authentic and genuine. (U.C.C. 1202.) The statute is designed to supply judicial recognition for documents "which have traditionally been relied upon as trustworthy by commercial men." (Official Comment to U.C.C. 1202.) (On federal practice, see F.R. Evid., Rule 902(9).)

(4) Corporate Instrument. Instruments signed by specified corporate officers are presumptively valid as to the corporation. (Corp.C. 313; see Associates Discount Corp. v. Tobbs Co. (1966) 241 C.A.2d 541, 547, 50 C.R. 738 [discussing predecessor statute]; 9 Summary (9th), Corporations, §§86, 115.)

(5) Book, Newspaper, or Periodical. Books and printed materials purporting to be particular newspapers or periodicals are presumed to have been published and to be those publications, and books purporting to contain case reports are presumed to contain correct reports. (Ev.C. 644 et seq.; see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Burden of Proof and Presumptions, §200 et seq.)

C. Presumptions of Authenticity.

2. Public Writings.

a. Seal of Entity or Official.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 23

[§ 23] Seal of Entity or Official.

Formerly, official seals were judicially noticed in California. (See People v. Hollander (1958) 163 C.A.2d 379, 382, 329 P.2d 740 [conviction for issuing bad checks drawn on Arizona bank, evidence of protest admitted and judicial notice taken of seal of Arizona notary].) But matters judicially noticed cannot be controverted (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Judicial Notice, §3), and there are occasions when the authenticity of official documents is in dispute. Thus, Ev.C. 1452 substitutes a presumption, which normally dispenses with proof but which safeguards the right to contest. Under the statute, a seal is presumed to be genuine and its use authorized if it purports to be the seal of any of the following entities or officials:

- (1) The United States or a department, agency, or public employee of the United States. (Ev.C. 1452(a).)
- (2) A public entity in the United States or a department, agency, or public employee of that public entity. (Ev.C. 1452(b).)
- (3) A nation recognized by the executive power of the United States or a department, agency, or officer of that nation. (Ev.C. 1452(c).)
- (4) A public entity in a nation recognized by the executive power of the United States or a department, agency, or officer of such public entity. (Ev.C. 1452(d).)
- (5) A court of admiralty or maritime jurisdiction. (Ev.C. 1452(e).)
- (6) A notary public within a state of the United States. (Ev.C. 1452(f).)

II. AUTHENTICATION

C. Presumptions of Authenticity.

2. Public Writings.

c. Signature of Foreign Officer.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 25

[§ 25] Signature of Foreign Officer.

Under Ev.C. 1454, a signature is presumed to be genuine and authorized if it purports to be the signature, affixed in the official capacity, of an officer (or the officer's deputy) of a nation (or a public entity therein) recognized by the Executive Branch of the United States. The writing to which the signature is affixed must be accompanied by a final statement made only by a secretary of an embassy or legation, consul general, consul, vice consul, consular agent, or other officer in the foreign service of the United States stationed in the nation and authenticated by the seal of the person's office. The final statement must certify the genuineness of the signature and the official position of either of the following:

(1) The person who executed the writing. (Ev.C. 1454(a).)

(2) A foreign official who has certified either (a) the genuineness of the signature and the official position of the person executing the writing, or (b) the genuineness of the signature and the official position of another foreign official who has executed a similar certificate in a chain of certificates beginning with a certificate of the genuineness of the signature and the official position of the person executing the writing. (Ev.C. 1454(b).)

The Law Revision Commission Comment states: "The procedure ... is necessary for the reason that a United States foreign service officer may not be able to certify to the official position and signature of a particular foreign official. Accordingly, this section permits the original signature to be certified by a higher foreign official, whose signature can in turn be certified by a still higher official, and such certifications can be continued in a chain until a foreign official is reached as to whom the United States foreign service officer has adequate information upon which to base his final certification."

d. Federal Rules of Evidence.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 26

[§ 26] Federal Rules of Evidence.

F.R. Evid., Rule 902 provides that extrinsic evidence of authenticity as a condition precedent to admissibility is not required with respect to the following (see 5 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §538 et seq.; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §1180 et seq.):

(1) Domestic Public Documents Under Seal. A document bearing a seal purporting to be that of the United States, a state, district, commonwealth, territory, or insular possession of the United States, the Panama Canal Zone, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, or a political subdivision, department, officer, or agency of these entities and a signature purporting to be an attestation or execution. (F.R. Evid., Rule 902(1).)

(2) Domestic Public Documents Not Under Seal. A document purporting to bear the signature, without seal, of a person acting in the official capacity of an officer or employee of an entity mentioned in F.R. Evid., Rule 902(1). The document must be accompanied by a statement under seal, as prescribed, attesting to the veracity of the signer's official capacity and the genuineness of the signature. (F.R. Evid., Rule 902(2).)

(3) Foreign Public Documents. A document purporting to be executed or attested by a person acting in the official capacity to do so under the laws of a foreign country, and accompanied by a proper final certification. The final certification may be made by a secretary of an embassy or a legation, the consul general, consul, vice consul, or consular agent of the United States, or a diplomatic or consular official of the foreign country assigned or accredited to the United States. A proper final certification must attest to the genuineness of the signature and the official position of the (a) executing or attesting person, or of (b) a foreign official whose final certification relates to the execution or attestation, or is in a chain of final certificates relating to the execution or attestation. However, if reasonable opportunity has been given to all parties to investigate the authenticity and accuracy of official documents, the court may, for good cause shown, order that they be treated as presumptively authentic without final certification, or permit them to be evidenced by an attested summary with or without final certification. (F.R. Evid., Rule 902(3).)

(4) Certified Copies of Public Records. An apparent copy of a public record or any document recorded or filed in a public office as authorized by law, when accompanied by proper certification that the copy is true and correct. Proper certification means a certificate satisfying the criteria of F.R. Evid., Rule 902(1), (2), or (3), a federal statute, or a United States Supreme Court rule. (F.R. Evid., Rule 902(4).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(5) (New) Domestic Records of Regularly Conducted Activity. F.R. Evid., Rule 902(11), added in 2000, provides for self-authentication of domestic records of regularly conducted activity "that would be admissible under Rule 803(6) if accompanied by a written declaration of its custodian or other qualified person, in a manner complying with any Act of Congress or rule prescribed by the Supreme Court pursuant to statutory authority, certifying that the record (A) was made at or near the time of the occurrence of the matters set forth by, or from information transmitted by, a person with knowledge of those matters; (B) was kept in the course of the regularly conducted activity; and (C) was made by the regularly conducted activity as a regular practice." (On F.R. Evid., Rule 803(6), see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §227.)

(6) (New) Foreign Records of Regularly Conducted Activity. F.R. Evid., Rule 902(12), added in 2000, provides for self-authentication of foreign records of regularly conducted activity "that would be admissible under Rule 803(6) if accompanied by a written declaration by its custodian or other qualified person certifying that the record (A) was made at or near the time of the occurrence of the matters set forth by, or from information transmitted by, a person with knowledge of those matters; (B) was kept in the course of the regularly conducted activity; and (C) was made by the regularly conducted activity as a regular practice. The declaration must be signed in a manner that, if falsely made, would subject the maker to criminal penalty under the laws of the country where the declaration is signed."

CHAPTER VIII - Documentary Evidence

III. SECONDARY EVIDENCE

A. Former Best Evidence Rule.

1. Nature of Rule.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 27

[§ 27] Nature of Rule.

(1) Statement of Rule. California's former best evidence rule, concerned solely with proof of writings, was stated as follows: "Except as otherwise provided by statute, no evidence other than the original of a writing is admissible to prove the content of a writing." (Former Ev.C. 1500; see generally Model C., Rule 602; Unif. Rule 1002; Lawrence v. Premier Indem. Assur. Co. (1919) 180 C. 688, 697, 182 P. 431; 2 McCormick 5th, §229 et seq.; 4 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1177 et seq.; 3 Wharton, Crim. Evidence (14th ed.), §489 et seq.; C.E.B., 2 Civil Proc. During Trial 3d, §13.122 et seq.; 35 Proof of Facts 2d 147 [foundation for admission of secondary evidence]; on similar federal rule, see F.R. Evid., Rule 1002; 5 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §567 et seq.; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §1049.)

(2) Purpose of Rule. The reasons for the former rule are stated in the Model Code: "Slight differences in written words or other symbols may make vast differences in meaning; there is great danger of inaccurate observation of such symbols, especially if they are substantially similar to the eye. Consequently there is opportunity for fraud and likelihood of mistake in proof of the content of a writing unless the writing itself is produced. Hence it should be produced if available." (Model C., Rule 602, Comment, p. 300; see 2 McCormick 5th, §231; 4 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1179; Law Rev. Com. Comment to former Ev.C. 1500.)

(3) Repeal and Replacement by Secondary Evidence Rule. The 1998 Legislature repealed the best evidence rule and replaced it with the secondary evidence rule (Ev.C. 1520 et seq.). (See infra, §31 et seq.; for transitional provisions, see infra, §31.)

CHAPTER VIII - Documentary Evidence

III. SECONDARY EVIDENCE

A. Former Best Evidence Rule.

2. Exceptions to Rule.

a. Original Lost or Destroyed.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 28

[§ 28] Original Lost or Destroyed.

(1) In General. The most important exception to the former best evidence rule was dictated by necessity: When the original writing had been "lost or destroyed," secondary evidence of its contents was admissible. (Former Ev.C. 1501; see Kenniff v. Caulfield (1903) 140 C. 34, 40, 73 P. 803; Guardianship of Levy (1955) 137 C.A.2d 237, 249, 290 P.2d 320; 2 McCormick 5th, §237; 4 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1192 et seq.; on similar federal rule, see F.R. Evid., Rule 1004(1); 5 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §577; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §1054.)

(2) Good Faith Requirement. For the exception to apply, the loss or destruction must have been "without fraudulent intent on the part of the proponent of the evidence." (Former Ev.C. 1501; see Hibernia Savings & Loan Soc. v. Boyd (1909) 155 C. 193, 199, 100 P. 239 [judgment in foreclosure suit, destroyed in San Francisco fire of 1906]; People v. Guasti (1952) 110 C.A.2d 456, 462, 243 P.2d 59 [destruction by third person]; People v. Morris (1991) 53 C.3d 152, 205, 279 C.R. 720, 807 P.2d 949, supra, §6 [same; defendant's letter to girlfriend destroyed by her in jail].)

(3) Establishing Loss. It was sufficient to show exhaustion of ordinary sources of information and means of discovery, and the matter was largely committed to the discretion of the trial judge. "The general rule concerning proof of a lost instrument is, that reasonable search shall be made for it in the place where it was last known to have been, and, if such search does not discover it, then inquiry should be made of persons most likely to have its custody, or who have some reason to know of its whereabouts." (Kenniff v. Caulfield (1903) 140 C. 34, 41, 73 P. 803; see Ulm v. Prather (1920) 49 C.A. 141, 144, 192 P. 878; Cotton v. Hudson (1941) 42 C.A.2d 812, 814, 110 P.2d 70; People v. Jackson (1937) 24 C.A.2d 182, 198, 74 P.2d 1085; Cheek v. Whiston (1958) 159 C.A.2d 472, 477, 323 P.2d 1028; 2 McCormick 5th, §237; 4 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1194 et seq.)

(4) Intentional Innocent Destruction. Writings are often intentionally destroyed for wholly innocent reasons unconnected with any contemplation of litigation, and proof of that occurrence was a sufficient foundation for offer of secondary evidence. (See Guardianship of Levy (1955) 137 C.A.2d 237, 249, 290 P.2d 320; People v. King (1950) 101 C.A.2d 500, 507, 225 P.2d 950.)

(5) Statutory Restoration Proceeding. C.C.P. 1953.10 et seq. establishes a proceeding for proof and restoration of a writing made unavailable by public calamity. (See infra, §56.)

CHAPTER VIII - Documentary Evidence

III. SECONDARY EVIDENCE

A. Former Best Evidence Rule.

2. Exceptions to Rule.

b. Original Under Control of Opponent.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 29

[§ 29] Original Under Control of Opponent.

(1) Notice To Produce: Civil Action. A special type of impracticability occurs where the writing is in the control of the adverse party. If the proponent wishes to inspect or introduce the original in evidence, the proponent may employ the discovery procedure of inspection or serve a subpoena duces tecum. (See 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §§118 et seq., 218 et seq.) But if the proponent merely wishes to lay a foundation for the introduction of secondary evidence of its contents, he or she may give the adverse party a simple notice to produce it, which need not be in any particular form and may be oral or written.

Thus, former Ev.C. 1503 made a copy admissible "if, at a time when the writing was under the control of the opponent, the opponent was expressly or impliedly notified, by the pleadings or otherwise, that the writing would be needed at the hearing, and on request at the hearing the opponent has failed to produce the writing." (See Harloe v. Lambie (1901) 132 C. 133, 136, 64 P. 88 [pleadings alleged execution and defendant and his attorney did not produce it when requested]; 2 McCormick 5th, §239; 4 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§1199 et seq., 1202 et seq.; 35 Proof of Facts 2d 147, 171, 200 [foundation for admission of secondary evidence]; on similar federal rule, see F.R. Evid., Rule 1004(3); 5 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §579; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §1057.)

(2) Notice To Produce: Criminal Action. Originally, the prosecution was probably not required to give the defendant a notice to produce a document that was in his or her possession. The theory of the excuse was that the defendant could withhold the writing under the self-incrimination privilege. (See People v. Chapman (1921) 55 C.A. 192, 200, 203 P. 126; 2 McCormick 5th, §239; 4 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1207.)

The Evidence Code took the position that the defendant was entitled to the notice, but should be protected against the possible prejudice from the jury hearing the prosecution's request for the original; also, the prosecution should be protected against the jury hearing the defendant's request for a privileged writing. Accordingly, no excuse for failure to give notice to produce was recognized; but, "[i]n a criminal action, the request at the hearing to produce the writing may not be made in the presence of the jury." (Former Ev.C. 1503(a); see People v. Enskat (1971) 20 C.A.3d Supp. 1, 4, 98 C.R. 646.)

[§ 30] Other Exceptions.

(1) Printed Representations of Computer Information and Programs and Images Stored on Video or Digital Media. Former Ev.C. 1500.5 created an exception to the best evidence rule by making computer recorded information or computer programs, or copies of them, admissible. Former Ev.C. 1500.6 created a similar exception for printed representations of images stored on video or digital media.

(2) Original Unavailable. The best evidence rule was inapplicable if the writing "was not reasonably procurable by the proponent by use of the court's process or by other available means." (Former Ev.C. 1502; see People v. Powell (1925) 71 C.A. 500, 515, 236 P. 311; 2 McCormick 5th, §238; 4 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1211 et seq.) (On similar F.R. Evid., Rule 1004(2), see 5 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §578; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §1056.)

(3) Writing Only Collaterally Involved. The best evidence rule applied when an attempt was made to prove the contents of a writing. There were situations, however, in which the terms of the writing were not directly in issue. The writing was then said to be "only collaterally involved," and secondary evidence was admissible. (Former Ev.C. 1504; see Marriner v. Dennison (1889) 78 C. 202, 213, 20 P. 386, infra, §40; People v. Royce (1895) 106 C. 173, 180, 39 P. 524; Lawrence v. Premier Indem. Assur. Co. (1919) 180 C. 688, 697, 182 P. 431, infra, §40; Ponce v. Marr (1956) 47 C.2d 159, 162, 301 P.2d 837; People v. Sweeney (1960) 55 C.2d 27, 9 C.R. 793, 357 P.2d 1049, infra, §38; People v. Kulwin (1951) 102 C.A.2d 104, 109, 226 P.2d 672, infra, §38; Vickter v. Pan Pac. Sales Corp. (1952) 108 C.A.2d 601, 603, 239 P.2d 463; People v. Johnson (1974) 39 C.A.3d 749, 763, 114 C.R. 545; 2 McCormick 5th, §234; 4 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§1242 et seq., 1252 et seq.) (On similar F.R. Evid., Rule 1004(4), see 5 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §580.)

(4) Public Records and Recorded Writings. A copy was admissible if the writing was "a record or other writing that is in the custody of a public entity." (Former Ev.C. 1506; see 2 McCormick 5th, §240; 4 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1269.)

A copy also was admissible if (a) the writing had been recorded, and (b) "the record or an attested or a certified copy thereof is made evidence of the writing by statute." (Former Ev.C. 1507; see 2 McCormick 5th, §240; 4 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1215 et seq.)

Where the writing was a public record in the custody of a public entity, or a recorded private writing (former Ev.C.

1506 and 1507), other secondary evidence could be offered if the proponent "could not in the exercise of reasonable diligence have obtained a copy." (Former Ev.C. 1508; see People v. Bizieff (1991) 226 C.A.3d 1689, 1697, 277 C.R. 678.)

Where an original private writing was lost or destroyed (former Ev.C. 1501, supra, §28), was unavailable (former Ev.C. 1502, supra), was under the control of the adverse party (former Ev.C. 1503, supra, §29), or was only collaterally involved (former Ev.C. 1504, supra), the proponent who did not have a copy could offer other secondary evidence such as oral testimony of its contents. (Former Ev.C. 1505; see People v. Bizieff, supra.) The difference between this section and former Ev.C. 1508 (supra) was that no showing of diligence to obtain a copy was necessary.

F.R. Evid., Rule 1005 is similar to former California law. (See 5 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §§581, 582; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §1090.)

(5) Voluminous Writings. There was another exception where papers were "numerous accounts or other writings that cannot be examined in court without great loss of time, and the evidence sought from them is only the general result of the whole." (Former Ev.C. 1509; see Globe Mfg. Co. v. Harvey (1921) 185 C. 255, 261, 196 P. 261; People v. Doble (1928) 203 C. 510, 514, 265 P. 184; Exclusive Florists v. Kahn (1971) 17 C.A.3d 711, 714, 95 C.R. 325; Vanguard Recording Soc. v. Fantasy Records (1972) 24 C.A.3d 410, 418, 100 C.R. 826; Wolfen v. Clinical Data (1993) 16 C.A.4th 171, 182, 19 C.R.2d 684; Eaton v. Brock (1954) 124 C.A.2d 10, 15, 268 P.2d 58; 4 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1230; 80 A.L.R.3d 405 [requirement of notice as condition for admission of summary]; 59 A.L.R.4th 971 [admissibility of summary].) (On federal practice, see F.R. Evid., Rule 1006; 5 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §583 et seq.; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §1060 et seq.)

(6) Original Produced at Hearing. Another exception gave a desirable alternative to the party whose original business records could not be left with the court as exhibits for an indefinite time without great inconvenience. He or she could produce the original writing and make it available for the adverse party's inspection, along with the copy; then he or she could take the original back and leave only the copy. (Former Ev.C. 1510.)

(7) Admissibility of Duplicates. A duplicate was admissible to the same extent as an original unless a genuine question was raised as to the authenticity of the original, or if it would have been unfair to admit the duplicate in lieu of the original. (Former Ev.C. 1511; see 2 McCormick 5th, §236; 4 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1233; 64 Harv. L. Rev. 1369.) (On continuation of exception under current secondary evidence rule, see infra, §36; on identical F.R. Evid., Rule 1003, see 5 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §572 et seq.; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §1085 et seq.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Original Unavailable. See 2 McCormick 6th, §237.

(3) Writing Only Collaterally Involved. Where both a tape recording of a conversation and a witness to the conversation are available at trial, the testimony of the witness is not barred by the best evidence rule. This is because the witness is not testifying as to what the recording contains but rather as to what he or she observed or knows. The witness' testimony is primary evidence, whether or not part of the same matter is incorporated into a sound recording. (People v. Samuels (2005) 36 C.4th 96, 129, 30 C.R.3d 105, 113 P.3d 1125 [detective could testify as to prearrest conversation that took place at police station between defendant and third party, even though conversation was recorded; best evidence rule, and not secondary evidence rule, applied because trial commenced prior to effective date of secondary evidence rule].)

CHAPTER VIII - Documentary Evidence

III. SECONDARY EVIDENCE

B. Current Secondary Evidence Rule.

1. Nature of Rule.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 31

[§ 31] Nature of Rule.

(1) Enactment of Secondary Evidence Rule. Acting on the recommendation of the California Law Revision Commission, the 1998 Legislature repealed the statutes incorporating the former best evidence rule and its exceptions (former Ev.C. 1500 et seq.; see supra, §27 et seq.) and replaced them with a new Article of the Evidence Code (Ev.C. 1520 et seq.) entitled "Proof of the Content of a Writing." This Article sets forth the new secondary evidence rule. (See 1 Jefferson, California Evidence Benchbook 3d, Chap. 31.)

(2) Statement of New Rule. Like its predecessor, the new rule permits proof of the content of a writing by "an otherwise admissible original." (Ev.C. 1520, and Law Rev. Com. Comment.) As was the case under prior law, an "original" means the writing itself or any counterpart intended to have the same effect by a person executing or issuing it. An original of a photograph includes the negative or a print made from it. If data is stored in a computer or similar device, a printout or other output readable by sight, shown to reflect the data accurately, is also an "original." (Ev.C. 255; on similar F.R. Evid., Rule 1001(3), see 5 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §556 et seq.)

But unlike the former best evidence rule, the new rule does not make secondary evidence presumptively inadmissible to prove the content of a writing. Instead, the new rule makes that evidence generally admissible. (See 26 Cal. Law Rev. Com. Reports, pp. 376, 377.) Thus, Ev.C. 1521, entitled the "Secondary Evidence Rule" (Ev.C. 1521(d)), expressly permits proof of the content of a writing "by otherwise admissible secondary evidence." (Ev.C. 1521(a).) "The nature of the evidence offered affects its weight, not its admissibility." (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1521.)

However, the court must exclude secondary evidence if it determines either that a "genuine dispute exists concerning material terms of the writing and justice requires the exclusion," or that admission of the evidence would be unfair. (Ev.C. 1521(a); see infra, §36.) Oral testimony that is otherwise inadmissible to prove the content of a writing under Ev.C. 1523 (infra, §39) is not made admissible by Ev.C. 1521. (Ev.C. 1521(b).) Authentication under Ev.C. 1401 is still required. (Ev.C. 1521(c); see In re Kirk (1999) 74 C.A.4th 1066, 1071, 88 C.R.2d 648 [Ev.C. 1521(c) requires that psychological evaluations of defendant's mental disorder for purposes of commitment under Sexually Violent Predators Act (see 3 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Punishment, §193 et seq.) must be certified (see Ev.C. 1530 and 1531, infra, §41)]; supra, §3.) And a limited exception to the rule applies in criminal proceedings. (See Ev.C. 1522, infra, §§37, 38.)

(3) Purpose of New Rule. The Law Revision Commission explained the purpose of the new legislation when it recommended its enactment in 1996:

"The Best Evidence Rule is unnecessary in a system with broad pretrial discovery. Its intended functions are to guard against fraud and prevent misinterpretation of writing. In civil cases, those functions are satisfactorily served by existing pretrial opportunities to inspect original documents, coupled with the proposed Secondary Evidence Rule and the normal motivation of the parties to present convincing evidence. In criminal cases, discovery is narrower, so the Secondary Evidence Rule would incorporate a limited exception to address that difference."

"Because the Best Evidence Rule has many exceptions, most secondary evidence is already admissible to prove the content of a writing. Adoption of the Secondary Evidence Rule would, however, simplify the law, avoid difficulties in interpretation, and reduce injustice and waste of resources, including scarce judicial resources." (See 26 Cal. Law Rev. Com. Reports, pp. 371, 372.)

(4) Transitional Provisions. Ev.C. 1520 et seq. apply to an action or proceeding commenced before, on, or after January 1, 1999. However, evidentiary determinations made under the former law are not invalidated. If an action or proceeding is pending on January 1, 1999 (the effective date of Ev.C. 1520 et seq.), the proponent of evidence excluded under the former law may, before entry of judgment, make a new request for admission of the evidence under the new law. (Stats. 1998, Chap. 100.)

(5) Federal Practice. Federal law continues to be governed by the best evidence rule. (See F.R. Evid., Rule 1002, supra, §27.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Statement of New Rule. See Penny v. Wilson (2004) 123 C.A.4th 596, 602, 20 C.R.3d 212 [in action involving dispute over decedent's transfer of property from family trust into trust benefiting one of his children, trial judge did not err in admitting unsigned copy of trust document, where original signed by decedent could not be located; copy was authenticated through testimony of attorney who prepared document, there was no dispute as to contents, and admission of copy was not unfair].

(New) Insurance policies: There is no special rule applicable to lost insurance policies requiring that their actual language be proved. Where "it is undisputed that there was an insurance policy covering the relevant time period and that the policy was lost in good faith and not recovered after diligent search, there is no reason either in the law of contract or of evidence why secondary evidence that attests to the substance but not the precise language of an insurance policy should be insufficient as a matter of law to establish the insurer's contractual obligations." (Dart Industries v. Commercial Union Ins. Co. (2002) 28 C.4th 1059, 1073, 1074, 124 C.R.2d 142, 52 P.3d 79 [insured could prove, by way of oral and documentary evidence, that lost policy was occurrence-based, covered claims for injuries caused by exposure to diethylstilbestrol (DES), and had policy limits of $ 100,00 per person and $ 300,000 per occurrence].)

c. Films and Videotapes.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 34

[§ 34] Films and Videotapes.

(1) Films. A single photographic transparency is a writing under Ev.C. 250 because it is a picture recorded on a tangible thing, i.e., the celluloid; a motion picture film is a series of pictures recorded on a celluloid filmstrip, and each one is a writing. (See, construing former best evidence rule, People v. Enskat (1971) 20 C.A.3d Supp. 1, 3, 98 C.R. 646 [obscenity case; because content of film is always in issue, best evidence rule applied]; *People v. During Trial 3d, §13.94 et seq.)

(2) Videotapes. Although videotape differs from ordinary methods of recording in that the image is recorded electronically rather than photographically, it is regarded as a "writing" under Ev.C. 250. ## CHAPTER VIII - Documentary Evidence

III. SECONDARY EVIDENCE

B. Current Secondary Evidence Rule.

2. Writings Within Rule.

d. Distinction: Inscribed Chattels.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 35

[§ 35] Distinction: Inscribed Chattels.

Ev.C. 250 defines writing to include words or symbols recorded "upon any tangible thing." The authorities, however, were in conflict as to the applicability of the former best evidence rule to inscribed chattels. (See 2 McCormick 5th, §232; 4 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1182; 94 A.L.R.3d 824 [applicability of rule to proof of ownership of allegedly stolen personal property in theft prosecution].) Those authorities are relevant in considering whether the secondary evidence rule applies. (See 1 Jefferson, California Evidence Benchbook 3d, §§31.12, 31.15.)

In People v. Mastin (1981) 115 C.A.3d 978, 171 C.R. 780, defendant was charged with burglary, and the police found stolen property in his home, including four guns and a knife inscribed with the owner's initials. At the trial, to prove the victim's ownership of the chattels, the prosecution introduced photographs of them. Defendant objected that the inscriptions on the chattels were writings and that the original chattels should be produced. Held, the photographs were admissible. They were not secondary evidence of writings because the inscriptions (owner's initials) were not visible in the pictures; they were properly admitted to illustrate the testimony of the victim. Thus, application of the best evidence rule was not really an issue, but the court nevertheless discussed the state of the law on the assumption that the initials were visible, i.e., that secondary evidence had been offered of an inscribed chattel. (115 C.A.3d 983.)

(a) Secondary evidence of inscribed chattels has been sanctioned by both federal and state courts. (115 C.A.3d 978, 979, citing cases dealing with shirt with laundry marks, photocopies of $ 20 bills, license plates, plastic credit cards.) A 1972 federal case (United States v. Duffy) states the rule and test approved by most commentators: (1) When the evidence is an object bearing a mark or inscription, and is therefore a chattel and a writing, the trial judge has discretion to treat it as either. (2) In reaching a decision, the judge should consider the policy of the best evidence rule. In Duffy, the evidence--a marked laundry shirt--did not require treatment as a writing, for the inscription was simple (thus the chance of inaccuracy in perception or memory was minimal) and was not a critical part of the case against the defendant. (115 C.A.3d 983.)

(b) Practical difficulties in connection with production are pointed out by McCormick; e.g., where the inscription is on a piece of heavy equipment, or an item of personal property which should be promptly returned to the owner, or a sign on a house or a name on a tombstone. (115 C.A.3d 984.)

(c) The discretionary approach is the proper rule for California. "The more critical the fact to be proved by the inscription, and the lesser the quantity and quality of other evidence to prove that fact, the greater is the importance of the inscribed chattel's production. The more difficult the production or the more inconvenience to the owner by temporary loss of the chattel, the greater must be the importance of examining the original before production is required." (115 C.A.3d 985.) "Where the fact to be proved is critical, the inscription lengthy, and the secondary and other evidence weak, the inscribed chattel's production should be required to insure the reliability of the fact finding process." (115 C.A.3d 985.) Applying these considerations to the facts of this case, production of the originals was not required. The inscriptions were simple, and highly probative circumstantial evidence of the victim's ownership was presented; there was little danger of misinterpretation in the use of secondary evidence. (115 C.A.3d 986.)

In People v. Bizieff (1991) 226 C.A.3d 1689, 277 C.R. 678, defendant was convicted of three counts of robbery. At a minimart, which was the scene of the third robbery, Gilbert, defendant's accomplice, used a credit card belonging to Verduzco, the victim of the second robbery. A minimart employee showed the credit card receipt to a police officer. At trial, the officer testified that the receipt contained the imprint of the name of the victim of the second robbery. Held, admission of the receipt did not violate the former best evidence rule. "A credit card falls under California's best evidence rule as an inscribed chattel, an object that is both a writing and a chattel." (226 C.A.3d 1696, citing the text.) "In this case, the 'writing' which connected appellant to both the second and third robbery was the Verduzco credit card. The contents of the card--the name Yvonne Verduzco--were in issue. The receipt was evidence that Miss Gilbert had Verduzco's credit card. But the credit card, not the receipt, was the object that directly tied appellant to both crimes. Thus, the trial court correctly concluded the credit card itself was the original writing in issue." (226 C.A.3d 1696.)

III. SECONDARY EVIDENCE

B. Current Secondary Evidence Rule.

3. Exceptions to Rule.

a. General Exceptions.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 36

[§ 36] General Exceptions.

There are two general mandatory exceptions to the secondary evidence rule: A court must exclude secondary evidence if it determines either (1) that a "genuine dispute exists concerning material terms of the writing and justice requires the exclusion" (Ev.C. 1521(a)(1)), or (2) that admission of the evidence would be unfair (Ev.C. 1521(a)(2)).

These exceptions are based on former Ev.C. 1511 and on identical F.R. Evid., Rule 1003, both of which authorize the admission of a duplicate to the same extent as the original. (See supra, §30.) Cases interpreting those statutes provide guidance in applying Ev.C. 1521(a)(1), (a)(2). (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1521, discussing federal cases and People v. Garcia (1988) 201 C.A.3d 324, 328, 330, 247 C.R. 94, citing the text [claim of unfairness "must be based on substance, not mere speculation that the original might contain some relevant difference"]; see also People v. Atkins (1989) 210 C.A.3d 47, 55, 258 C.R. 113 [photostatic copies of Department of Correction records, and of certification by custodian that copies were from department's files, were admissible to prove defendant's prior prison term]; Osswald v. Anderson (1996) 49 C.A.4th 812, 819, 57 C.R.2d 23 [photocopy of quitclaim deed, proffered by trust beneficiary to show that trust was properly funded, was not admissible, because trustee raised genuine questions as to authenticity of both deed and copy].)

The Law Revision Commission further advises that when ruling on these exclusions, "[c]ourts may consider a broad range of factors, for example: (1) whether the proponent attempts to use the writing in a manner that could not reasonably have been anticipated, (2) whether the original was suppressed in discovery, (3) whether discovery conducted in a reasonably diligent (as opposed to exhaustive) manner failed to result in production of the original, (4) whether there are dramatic differences between the original and the secondary evidence (e.g., the original but not the secondary evidence is in color and the colors provide significant clues to interpretation), (5) whether the original is unavailable and, if so, why, and (6) whether the writing is central to the case or collateral." (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1521, also observing that a "classic circumstance for exclusion" under Ev.C. 1521(a)(2) "is if the proponent destroyed the original with fraudulent intent or the doctrine of spoliation of evidence otherwise applies.")

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 37

[§ 37] Nature of Exception.

(1) In General. In addition to the general exceptions specified in Ev.C. 1521 (supra, §36), the court in a criminal action must exclude secondary evidence if it determines "that the original is in the proponent's possession, custody, or control, and the proponent has not made the original reasonably available for inspection at or before trial." (Ev.C. 1522(a).)

The Law Revision Commission Comment observes: "Section 1522 sets forth a mandatory exception applicable only in criminal cases, which are governed by narrower discovery rules than civil cases. ... Section 1522 does not expand discovery obligations, it simply conditions use of secondary evidence on making the original reasonably available for inspection if the proponent has it. In determining whether the proponent of secondary evidence has made the original 'reasonably available,' the court should examine specific circumstances, such as the time, place, and manner of allowing inspection. The concept is fluid, not rigid. For example, making the original available moments before using secondary evidence may in general suffice if a defendant is rebutting a surprise contention, but not if the prosecution is presenting its case in chief. Similarly, what constitutes reasonable access to computer evidence may vary from system to system."

(2) Request Must Be Made Outside of Jury's Presence. The request to exclude the secondary evidence, "under this section or any other law," may not be made in the jury's presence. (Ev.C. 1522(b).) The Law Revision Commission Comment notes that this provision continues a requirement of former Ev.C. 1503 (copy of writing under control of opponent admissible notwithstanding best evidence rule; see supra, §29), "but applies it to all requests for exclusion of secondary evidence in a criminal trial."

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 38

[§ 38] When Inapplicable.

Th exception does not apply to any of the following types of secondary evidence:

(1) Duplicates. A duplicate is admissible. (Ev.C. 1522(a)(1), based on former Ev.C. 1511, supra, §30.) A "duplicate" is a counterpart produced by the same impression as the original, from the same matrix, by means of photography (including enlargements and miniatures), by mechanical or electronic rerecording, by chemical reproduction, or by other equivalent technique that accurately reproduces the original. (Ev.C. 260.) (See People v. Marcus (1973) 31 C.A.3d 367, 370, 107 C.R. 264 [decided before statute and holding rerecording admissible].)

(2) Collateral Writings. A writing that is not closely related to the controlling issues in the action is admissible. (Ev.C. 1522(a)(2).) This exception is based on former Ev.C. 1504, supra, §30 (see Law Rev. Com. Comment), and the following cases construing that statute are instructive:

In People v. Kulwin (1951) 102 C.A.2d 104, 226 P.2d 672, a prosecution for conspiracy to violate the bookmaking law, a police officer listened to conversations of defendants from a hidden microphone connected with a recording instrument (before the exclusionary rule had been declared). He was allowed to testify to what he heard, over the objection that the recordings were the best evidence. "Where one testifies to what he has seen or heard such testimony is primary evidence, regardless of whether such fact or facts are reduced to writing or incorporated in a record or document. In other words, the witness is not testifying as to what the writing contains, but as to what he observed and knew because he heard it." (102 C.A.2d 109.)

The Kulwin case was followed in People v. Sweeney (1960) 55 C.2d 27, 9 C.R. 793, 357 P.2d 1049. An officer, to whom defendant offered a bribe, had a concealed miniphone with him. The record, however, proved unintelligible, and the prosecution did not introduce it but called the officer to testify to the conversation. (55 C.2d 38.) (See People v. Royce (1895) 106 C. 173, 180, 39 P. 524 [in prosecution for embezzling proceeds of bank draft, testimony describing draft cashed by bank was admissible to identify it as draft received by defendant and delivered to bank]; People v. Johnson (1974) 39 C.A.3d 749, 763, 114 C.R. 545 [defendant gave statements to police officer after his arrest; although statements had been tape-recorded, officer was properly allowed to give detailed testimony about what defendant had said to him]; on construction of similar exception to exclusion of oral testimony of content of writing, see infra, §40.)

(3) Writings in Custody of Public Entity. A copy of a writing in the custody of a public entity is admissible. (Ev.C.

1522(a)(3), based on former Ev.C. 1506, supra, §30.)

(4) Writings Recorded in Public Records. A copy of a writing that is recorded in the public records is admissible, if the record or a certified copy of it is made evidence of the writing by statute. (Ev.C. 1522(a)(4), based on former Ev.C. 1507, supra, §30.)

1. Nature of Exception.

[§ 39] Nature of Exception.

Oral testimony is inadmissible to prove the content of a writing "[e]xcept as otherwise provided by statute." (Ev.C. 1523(a).)

The Law Revision Commission Comment explains that the exception "preserves former law" and "is based on an assumption that oral testimony as to the content of a writing is typically less reliable than other proof of the content of a writing."

III. SECONDARY EVIDENCE

B. Current Secondary Evidence Rule.

3. Exceptions to Rule.

c. Oral Testimony Exception.

2. When Inapplicable.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 40

[§ 40] When Inapplicable.

Under the following circumstances, the general rule of inadmissibility does not apply:

(1) No Possession or Control and Original Lost or Destroyed. The proponent does not have possession or control of a copy of the writing, and the original is lost or has been destroyed without fraudulent intent on the part of the proponent. (Ev.C. 1523(b), based on former Ev.C. 1501, and 1505, supra, §§28, 30.)

(2) No Possession or Control and Original Unavailable. The proponent does not have possession or control of the original or a copy, and neither one was reasonably procurable using the court's process or by other available means. (Ev.C. 1523(c)(1), based on former Ev.C. 1502, 1503, 1505, 1506, 1507, and 1508, supra, §§29, 30.)

(3) No Possession or Control and Writing Collateral. The proponent does not have possession or control of the original or a copy, the writing is not closely related to the controlling issues, and it would be inexpedient to require its production. (Ev.C. 1523(c)(2).) This exception is based on former Ev.C. 1504 and 1505, supra, §30 (see Law Rev. Com. Comment), and the following cases construing prior law are instructive:

In Marriner v. Dennison (1889) 78 C. 202, 20 P. 386, a suit for breach of contract to convey, defendant vendor contended that plaintiff had agreed to accept other consideration because defendant had previously contracted to sell to S. Plaintiff put S on the stand to testify that his contract of purchase from defendant was made after plaintiff's contract. Held, this was proper without production of S's contract, for the issue was not the contents of that contract but only whether and when it was made. (78 C. 213.)

In Lawrence v. Premier Indem. Assur. Co. (1919) 180 C. 688, 182 P. 431, an action by plaintiff to establish ownership of stock, the defense was that plaintiff had not performed conditions precedent to its issuance. Plaintiff introduced the corporation minutes to support his claim. Defendant was then allowed to prove that the minutes did not cover the entire transaction, and to introduce evidence that conditions were agreed upon at the meeting. Held, admission of this evidence was proper. Defendant could not show the contents of the minutes by testimony, because the written minutes would be the best evidence thereof; but it could offer oral testimony of the facts of the transaction which occurred at the meeting, because this would not be an attempt to prove the contents of a writing. (180 C. 697.)

A number of cases construing this former best evidence rule exception have held that a party may testify to the fact of payments made and the amount thereof, notwithstanding the fact that there is a writing (such as a receipt, account book, or cancelled note) that also discloses that fact. (Vickter v. Pan Pac. Sales Corp. (1952) 108 C.A.2d 601, 603, 239 P.2d 463 [testimony of sums paid for merchandise, though business records would show complete transaction]; Ponce v. Marr (1956) 47 C.2d 159, 162, 301 P.2d 837 [testimony that loan was repaid, though cancelled note might also show that fact]; on construction of similar exception in criminal proceedings, see supra, §38.)

(4) Voluminous Writings. The writing consists of "numerous accounts or other writings that cannot be examined in court without great loss of time, and the evidence sought from them is only the general result of the whole." (Ev.C. 1523(d), based on former Ev.C. 1509, supra, §30.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(4) Voluminous Writings. In Heaps v. Heaps (2004) 124 C.A.4th 286, 21 C.R.3d 239, a dispute concerning the assets of a living trust, the trial judge admitted a schedule of assets, even though it was based partially on nonadmitted evidence. Held, this was proper because the schedule was a general compilation of documents that could not be examined individually without great loss of time. (124 C.A.4th 293.) The court appeared to rely on Ev.C. 1523(d) and quoted language from that subdivision, which actually makes clear that it applies to oral testimony. (124 C.A.4th 293, 294.) However, its predecessor, former Ev.C. 1509 (see text, §30), was not so limited.

CHAPTER VIII - Documentary Evidence

III. SECONDARY EVIDENCE C. Official and Recorded Writings. 1. Writing in Official Custody. a. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 41

[§ 41] In General.

(1) Former Law and Evidence Code. The Code of Civil Procedure formerly contained a great many provisions on authentication and proof of public writings. Ev.C. 1530 substitutes two simple rules, one applicable to all writings in official custody within the United States (infra, §42), and the other applicable to all of those writings found outside the United States (infra, §43). (See generally In re Shannon C. (1986) 179 C.A.3d 334, 341, 342, 224 C.R. 516, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §249.)

The Law Revision Commission Comment to Ev.C. 1530 points out that the statute deals with three evidentiary problems:

- (a) The former best evidence rule (now the secondary evidence rule), i.e., the content of an original writing is proved by means of an accurate representation.
- (b) Authentication, i.e., the copy must be authenticated as a copy of the original.
- (c) The hearsay exception, i.e., the certification or attestation, made out of court, is nevertheless offered to prove the truth of its statement.

In re Kirk (1999) 74 C.A.4th 1066, 88 C.R.2d 648, noted that all three evidentiary concerns of the Law Revision Commission justified the conclusion that the 1998 repeal of the best evidence rule and its replacement by the secondary evidence rule (Ev.C. 1520 et seq.; see supra, §31 et seq.) did not obviate the certification requirements of Ev.C. 1530 and 1531. Thus, the court held that the trial judge erred in admitting uncertified psychological evaluations of defendant's mental disorder during a probable cause hearing to commit him under the Sexually Violent Predators Act (see 3 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Punishment, §193 et seq.). (74 C.A.4th 1071.)

(2) Presumption of Existence and Content. Ev.C. 1530 establishes a presumption where "[a] purported copy of a writing" is "in the custody of a public entity," "[t]he copy purports to be published by the authority of the nation or state, or public entity therein in which the writing is kept," and it is properly attested or certified. Such a copy, or a copy of an entry in the writing, "is prima facie evidence of the existence and content of such writing or entry." (On attestation and certification, see infra, §§42, 43.) The "prima facie evidence" provision creates a presumption affecting the burden of producing evidence. (Ev.C. 1530(b); on effect of this type of presumption, see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Burden of Proof and Presumptions, §177.)

(3) Form of Certificate or Attestation. "For the purpose of evidence, whenever a copy of a writing is attested or certified, the attestation or certificate must state in substance that the copy is a correct copy of the original, or of a specified part thereof, as the case may be." (Ev.C. 1531; see Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1530; Harting v. Cebrian (1935) 10 C.A.2d 10, 17, 51 P.2d 195 [no particular words required]; In re Smith (1949) 33 C.2d 797, 801, 205 P.2d 662 [same]; but see People v. Gabriel (1943) 57 C.A.2d 788, 794, 135 P.2d 378 [insufficient certificate containing mere conclusion of officer].)

(4) Right To Inspect and Copy. This subject is covered by the California Public Records Act (Govt.C. 6250 et seq.). (See 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §278 et seq.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Presumption of Existence and Content. See Ambriz v. Kelegian (2007) 146 C.A.4th 1519, 1529, 53 C.R.3d 700 [in legal malpractice action, trial judge erred in excluding copy of city ordinance and copy of declaration of restrictions applicable to apartment complex on ground that plaintiff's attorney failed to provide sufficient authentication and foundation; plaintiff included certification of deputy city clerk on both documents, thus bringing into play presumptions of Ev.C. 1530 et seq. that documents were what they purported to be, and defendants offered no contrary evidence]. Correction: Page 167, last line of subdivision (2), "$177" should be "$55". West's Key Number Digest, Criminal Law k.400(2), 400(3); Evidence k.162 et seq.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 42

[§ 42] In United States.

Ev.C. 1530(a)(2) deals with writings kept in offices within the United States, the Panama Canal Zone, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, or the Ryukyu Islands. It provides that the copy may be attested or certified as a correct copy of the writing or entry "by a public employee, or a deputy of a public employee, having the legal custody of the writing." Thus, the custodian alone may certify, without the signature of a higher official certifying the custodian's authority and signature. (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1530.)

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 43

[§ 43] Outside United States.

Ev.C. 1530(a)(3) deals with writings kept in offices outside the places listed in the preceding subdivision (supra, §42). Following F.R. Civ. P., Rule 44, it authorizes attestation of the copy "by a person having authority to make attestation." Because, in foreign countries, the attester is not necessarily the custodian, certification of the attester's signature and official position is required. The attestation must be accompanied by a final statement certifying the genuineness of the signature and the official position of either of the following:

(1) The person who attested the copy as a correct copy. (Ev.C. 1530(a)(3)(i).)

(2) A foreign official who has certified either (a) the genuineness of the signature and the official position of the person attesting the copy, or (b) the genuineness of the signature and the official position of another foreign official who has executed a similar certificate in a chain of certificates beginning with a certificate of the genuineness of the signature and the official position of the person attesting the copy. (Ev.C. 1530(a)(3)(ii).)

As an exception to the general provision, Ev.C. 1530(a)(3) provides: "If reasonable opportunity has been given to all parties to investigate the authenticity and accuracy of the documents, the court may, for good cause shown, (i) admit an attested copy without the final statement or (ii) permit the writing or entry in foreign custody to be evidenced by an attested summary with or without a final statement."

2. Official Record of Recorded Writing.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 44

[§ 44] Official Record of Recorded Writing.

A certified copy of the record may be offered to prove the official record, i.e., the recorded writing or entry therein. (Ev.C. 1530; see supra, §41.) The official record "is prima facie evidence of the existence and content of the original recorded writing," if (1) the record "is in fact a record of an office of a public entity," and (2) a statute "authorized such a writing to be recorded in that office." (Ev.C. 1532(a).) (On official writings affecting real property, see infra, §§57, 58.)

The "prima facie evidence" provision creates a presumption affecting the burden of producing evidence. (Ev.C. 1532(b); on effect of this type of presumption, see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Burden of Proof and Presumptions, §177.)

CHAPTER VIII - Documentary Evidence

III. SECONDARY EVIDENCE

D. Photographic Copies and Printed Representations of Writings.

1. Nature of Uniform Act in Evidence Code.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 45

[§ 45] Nature of Uniform Act in Evidence Code.

The modern trend, both in keeping and certifying private and public records, is toward use of photographic copies, either full-size or on nonerasable optical imaging such as microfilm (see Com. Note, Uniform Photographic Copies of Business and Public Records as Evidence Act, 14 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), p. 185), and more recently, toward use also of printed representations of computer programs and of images stored on video or digital media. But a photograph or printout of an existing writing is obviously a copy, and, apart from statute, was inadmissible secondary evidence under the former best evidence rule without a showing of unavailability of the original. (See supra, §27 et seq.)

The Uniform Photographic Copies of Business and Public Records as Evidence Act was drafted to meet this problem. The Act is now (as of 1998) in force in 30 jurisdictions (see 14 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), 1998 Supp., p. 43). (See Federal Business Records Act as amended, 28 U.S.C., §1732 [similar]; 2 McCormick 5th, §236.)

The Act was adopted in California in 1951 (former C.C.P. 1953e et seq.), and was incorporated, with a slight change, in Ev.C. 1550 et seq. California's statute was recast in 1998 to (1) reflect the replacement of the best evidence rule by the secondary evidence rule (see supra, §31 et seq.), and (2) add two sections dealing with printed representations of computer information and programs and of images stored on video or digital media (infra, §§48, 49). (See 26 Cal. Law Rev. Com. Reports, p. 396.)

III. SECONDARY EVIDENCE

D. Photographic Copies and Printed Representations of Writings.

2. Photographic Copies as Business Records.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 46

[§ 46] Photographic Copies as Business Records.

(1) In General. "A nonerasable optical image reproduction ... , a photostatic, microfilm, microcard, miniature photographic, or other photographic copy or reproduction, or an enlargement thereof," of a writing is as admissible as the writing itself if the copy or reproduction was made and preserved as a part of the records of a "business" (as defined by Ev.C. 1270, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §228) in the regular course of that business. The introduction of the copy, reproduction, or enlargement does not preclude admission of the original writing if it is still in existence. An optical image reproduction is admissible only if additions, deletions, or changes to the original document are not permitted by the technology, and a court may require introduction of a hard copy printout of the document. (Ev.C. 1550; see People v. Jones (1998) 17 C.4th 279, 308, 70 C.R.2d 793, 949 P.2d 890 [in murder case, bank's microfiche records showing that someone tried to make automatic teller withdrawals from victim's account the day after murder and shortly before defendant's arrest were admissible under Ev.C. 1550]; 23 Proof of Facts 3d 621 [examination and identification of photocopies and photocopiers].)

(2) Applicable to Admissible Writing. The Uniform Act (supra, §45) limits its application to records of a business or governmental agency. Ev.C. 1550 removes this limitation for the following reason: "As long as the original writing is admissible under any exception to the hearsay rule, its trustworthiness is sufficiently assured; and the requirement that the photographic copy be made in the regular course of business sufficiently assures the trustworthiness of the copy. If the original is admissible not as an exception to the hearsay rule but as evidence of an ultimate fact in the case (e.g., a will or a contract), a photographic copy, the trustworthiness of which is sufficiently assured by the fact that it was made in the regular course of business, should be as admissible as the original." (Law. Rev. Com. Comment.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. Ev.C. 1550 was amended and subdivided in 2002. Under the amended statute, the following types of evidence are as admissible as the writing itself, if they were made and preserved as a part of the records of a business as defined in Ev.C. 1270 (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §228): (a) a nonerasable optical image reproduction or any other reproduction of a public record by a trusted system (as defined in Govt.C. 12168.7), if additions, deletions, or changes to the original document are not permitted by the technology; (b) a photostatic copy or reproduction; (c) a microfilm, microcard, or miniature photographic copy, reprint, or enlargement; (d) any other photographic copy or reproduction, or an enlargement thereof. (Ev.C. 1550(a).) However, the introduction of evidence of a writing under Ev.C. 1550(a) does not preclude admission of the original writing if it is still in existence, and a court may require the introduction of a "hard copy printout of the document." (Ev.C. 1550(b).) (2a) (New) Criminal Justice Records. Reproductions of "files, records, writings, photographs, fingerprints or other instruments in the official custody of a criminal justice agency that were microphotographed or otherwise reproduced" in accordance with P.C. 11106.1 et seq. (standards for reproduction and storage of criminal justice files and records) are admissible to the same extent and under the same circumstances as the original would be admissible. (Ev.C. 1550.1, added in 2004.)

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 47

[§ 47] Photographic Copies Where Original Lost or Destroyed.

Where records are microfilmed and then destroyed (a common practice in large organizations), the objection of intentional destruction might be raised when the enlargement is offered under the secondary evidence rule (supra, §31 et seq.). This objection has been overcome by statutes taking photographs and microfilm enlargements out of the rule in such cases. The California statute (Ev.C. 1551) provides as follows:

(1) "A print, whether enlarged or not, from a photographic film (including a photographic plate, microphotographic film, photostatic negative, or similar reproduction) of an original writing destroyed or lost after such film was taken or a reproduction from an electronic recording of video images on magnetic surfaces is admissible as the original writing itself" if the film or electronic recording was taken in compliance with the certification requirement.

(2) The certification requirement specifies that the person under whose direction and control the film or electronic recording was taken must, at the time of taking, attach to the film or electronic recording or to its sealed container, or incorporate in the film or electronic recording, a certification complying with Ev.C. 1531 (supra, §41) and stating the date and fact of the taking.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 48

[§ 48] Computer Information and Programs.

A printed representation of computer information or a computer program is presumed to be an accurate representation of the computer information or program that it purports to represent. The presumption is one affecting the burden of producing evidence. If a party introduces evidence indicating that the printed representation of the information or program is inaccurate or unreliable, the proponent of the printed representation has the burden of proving, by a preponderance of evidence, that it is "an accurate representation of the existence and content of the computer information or computer program that it purports to represent." (Ev.C. 1552(a)), based on former Ev.C. 1500.5(a), supra, §30; see *Aguimatang v. California State Lottery (1991) 234 C.A.3d 769, 797, 286 C.R. 57, 1 Cal. The presumption does not apply to computer generated official records certified under Ev.C. 452.5 (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Judicial Notice, §23) or Ev.C. 1530 (see supra, §41 et seq.). (Ev.C. 1552(b).)

D. Photographic Copies and Printed Representations of Writings.

5. Video or Digital Images.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 49

[§ 49] Video or Digital Images.

Ev.C. 1553, based on former Ev.C. 1500.6 (see supra, §30), is similar to Ev.C. 1552 (supra, §48). Under the statute, a printed representation of images stored on a video or digital medium is presumed to be an accurate representation of the images it purports to represent. The presumption is one affecting the burden of producing evidence. If a party introduces evidence indicating that a printed representation of this type is inaccurate or unreliable, the party introducing the representation must prove, by a preponderance of the evidence, that it is "an accurate representation of the existence and content of the images that it purports to represent." (See 20 Thomas Jefferson L. Rev. 303 [authentication of photographic evidence in digital age].)

CHAPTER VIII - Documentary Evidence

III. SECONDARY EVIDENCE

E. Business Records.

1. Nature of Statute.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 50

[§ 50] Nature of Statute.

(1) In General. To alleviate the burden on businesses of requiring an officer or employee to testify in court to the authenticity of a business record, the 1959 Legislature authorized a simpler procedure for the ordinary case: introducing a copy of the record, with an affidavit in lieu of authenticating testimony. (See Ev.C. 1560 et seq.)

(2) Applicability of Statute. The statute originally covered only hospitals, which are continually called upon to furnish records for personal injury cases. However, the statute was revised in 1969 to make it applicable to records of every kind of "business," as described in Ev.C. 1270 (broad definition of business in hearsay exception; see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §228). (Ev.C. 1560(a)(1).) The special procedure is not available, however, if the business is a party to the action or is the place where a cause of action is alleged to have arisen. (Ev.C. 1560(b).) "Record" includes every kind of record maintained by a business. (Ev.C. 1560(a)(2).)

The statute applies "in any proceeding in which testimony can be compelled." (Ev.C. 1566.) And Ev.C. 1567 authorizes the admission, in a proceeding to modify or terminate child, family, or spousal support, of an income and benefit form described in Family C. 3664 completed by an employer (see 10 Summary (9th), Parent and Child, Supp., §326-I) if:

(a) The form complies with Ev.C. 1561 and 1562. (Ev.C. 1567(a); see infra, §51 et seq.)

(b) A copy of the completed form and notice was served on the employee as required by Family C. 3664. (Ev.C. 1567(b).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Applicability of Statute. P.C. 1326(b), (c), added in 2004, make the procedures of Ev.C. 1560(b) (text, §51) applicable in a criminal case in which business records are sought by means of a subpoena. (See 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, Supp., §530.)

CHAPTER VIII - Documentary Evidence

III. SECONDARY EVIDENCE

E. Business Records.

2. Procedure.

a. Delivery of Copy and Affidavit.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 51

[§ 51] Delivery of Copy and Affidavit.

(1) Delivery of Sealed Copy. Except as provided in Ev.C. 1564 (personal attendance and production, infra, §54), on service of a subpoena duces tecum, "the custodian of records or other qualified witness" may deliver to the clerk (or judge if there is no clerk) or to the officer taking a deposition, by mail or otherwise, "a true, legible and durable copy of all the records described." (Ev.C. 1560(b).)

The time of delivery is specified as follows: (a) Within 5 days after receipt of the subpoena in a criminal action. (b) Within 15 days after such receipt in a civil action. However, in either a criminal or civil action, the party serving the subpoena and the custodian or other qualified witness may agree on the time. (Ev.C. 1560(b).)

The copy must be separately enclosed in a sealed inner envelope or wrapper, inscribed with the title and number of the action, the name of the witness, and the date of the subpoena. The sealed envelope or wrapper must then be enclosed in an outer envelope or wrapper, sealed, and directed to the proper officer (clerk, judge if no clerk, officer before whom deposition is to be taken, or officer, body, or tribunal conducting the hearing). (Ev.C. 1560(c).)

Unless the parties otherwise agree, or the sealed envelope or wrapper is returned to a witness who is to appear personally, the copy remains sealed, and is opened only at the time of trial, deposition, or other hearing, on direction of the judge, officer, body, or tribunal conducting the proceeding, in the presence of all parties who have appeared. Records not introduced in evidence or required as part of the record must be returned to the person or entity from whom they are received. (Ev.C. 1560(d).)

(2) Affidavit of Sender. The records must be accompanied by an affidavit of the custodian or other qualified witness, stating the facts essential to a foundation (Ev.C. 1561(a)):

(a) The affiant is the duly authorized custodian or other qualified witness and has authority to certify the records.

(b) The copy is a true copy of all records described in the subpoena duces tecum, or, under Ev.C. 1560(e), the records were delivered to the attorney, the attorney's representative, or a deposition officer for copying at the custodian's or witness' place of business.

(c) The records were prepared in the ordinary course of business at or near the time of the act, condition, or event.

(d) The identity of the records.

(e) A description of the mode of preparation of the records.

If the business has none or only part of the records, the affidavit must so state, and such records as are available must be delivered. (Ev.C. 1561(b).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Delivery of Sealed Copy. Under Ev.C. 1560(b), as amended in 2005, the copy may be delivered to the court clerk or to "another person described in" C.C.P. 2026.010(d) (see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, Supp., §§35, 84).

Ev.C. 1560(c) was amended in 2005 to delete the judge as one of the persons to whom the copy might be sent.(2) Affidavit of Sender. See Cooley v. Superior Court (2006) 140 C.A.4th 1039, 1045, 45 C.R.3d 183 [trial judge erred in granting motion to enforce subpoena duces tecum against nonparty district attorney; as district attorney did not prepare or generate any of documents sought, he was not in position to attest that documents were prepared in ordinary course of business at or near time of event in question, and thus he was not custodian within meaning of Ev.C. 1561].

III. SECONDARY EVIDENCE

E. Business Records.

2. Procedure.

b. Alternative: Inspection or Copying and Affidavit.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 52

[§ 52] Alternative: Inspection or Copying and Affidavit.

(1) Inspection or Copying by Attorney, Representative, or Deposition Officer. As an alternative to the procedures described in Ev.C. 1560(b), (c), and (d) (supra, §51), the subpoenaing party may direct the witness to make the records available for inspection or copying by the party's attorney, the attorney's representative, or a professional copier serving as a deposition officer under C.C.P. 2020(d)(3) (see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §*35). The inspection or copying must take place at the witness' business address under reasonable conditions during normal business hours (defined as "those hours that the business of the witness is normally open for business to the public"). When provided with at least 5 business days' notice, the witness must designate at least 6 continuous hours on "a date certain" for copying the records subject to the subpoena. It is the responsibility of the attorney's representative to deliver any copy of the records as directed in the subpoena. Disobedience of the subpoena may be punished under C.C.P. 2020(h) (see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §260 et seq.). (Ev.C. 1560(e).)

(2) Affidavit of Attorney, Representative, or Deposition Officer. In addition to the affidavit required by Ev.C. 1561(a) (supra, §51), where the records were delivered to the attorney, his or her representative, or the deposition officer for copying at the custodian's or witness' place of business, the records must be accompanied by an affidavit by the attorney, representative, or deposition officer stating that the copy is a true copy of all records delivered to the attorney, representative, or deposition officer. (Ev.C. 1561(c).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Inspection or Copying by Attorney, Representative, or Deposition Officer. Ev.C. 1560(e) was amended in 2004 to specify that the alternative procedure applies "in a civil action."

C.C.P. 2020(d)(3), concerning professional photocopier services, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2020.420 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2020(h), concerning punishment for disobedience of a subpoena, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2020.240 in 2004 without substantive change. Ev.C. 1560(e) was amended in 2005 to reflect the replacement of C.C.P. 2020(d)(3) with C.C.P. 2020.420, and C.C.P. 2020(h) with C.C.P. 2020.240.

CHAPTER VIII - Documentary Evidence

III. SECONDARY EVIDENCE

E. Business Records.

2. Procedure.

c. Admissibility of Copy or Affidavit.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 53

[§ 53] Admissibility of Copy or Affidavit.

(1) Admissibility of Copy. The copy is admissible if (a) the original records would be admissible if the custodian or other qualified witness had been present and testified to the matters stated in the affidavit, and (b) the requirements of Ev.C. 1271 (business records hearsay exception; see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §228 et seq.) have been met. (Ev.C. 1562; see 28 Pacific L. J. 816.)

In Taggart v. Super Seer Corp. (1995) 33 C.A.4th 1697, 40 C.R.2d 56, a motorcycle rider was injured in an accident. He and his wife sued the manufacturer of the helmet he had been wearing for product liability, negligence, and loss of consortium. Plaintiffs sought to introduce reports of tests conducted by a research institute showing that a helmet model similar to plaintiff's failed certain "impact attenuation tests." The reports were supplied along with a declaration complying with Ev.C. 1560 and 1561. Initially the trial judge admitted one page of the reports, finding that the remainder did not come within the business records exception to the hearsay rule. Later he reversed himself and excluded the reports in their entirety. Held, the second ruling was proper.

(a) "It will readily be seen that a custodian's declaration may state all the matters it is required to state under section 1561, yet fail to provide a sufficient foundation for admission of the records under section 1271. ... Most significantly, the custodian's declaration is not required to state the 'identity' or 'mode of preparation' of the records." Thus it will usually fail to show that the sources of information and method and time of preparation of the records indicate their trustworthiness. (33 C.A.4th 1706; see supra, §51, for 1996 amendment of Ev.C. 1561, requiring affidavit to state identity of records and describe mode of preparation.)

(b) Although In re Troy D. (1989) 215 C.A.3d 889, 263 C.R. 869, held that a custodian's declaration in compliance with section 1561 provided sufficient foundation for admission of the underlying records, a 1989 amendment of Ev.C. 1562 makes clear that that is not the case: a copy of the records is admissible based on the custodian's declaration only "if the requirements of Section 1271 have been met." The new language indicates that Ev.C. 1562 is not a hearsay exception. (33 C.A.4th 1707.)

(c) Here, the custodian's declaration complied with Ev.C. 1561, but it contained no evidence as to what the reports were, how they were prepared, or what sources of information they were based on. It offered no evidence that the reports were trustworthy. The reports therefore failed to qualify for admission as business records under Ev.C. 1271. (33 C.A.4th 1706.)

(2) Admissibility of Affidavit. The affidavit is admissible as evidence of the foundation facts, "and the matters so stated are presumed true." The presumption, however, only affects the burden of producing evidence. (Ev.C. 1562.)

d. Personal Attendance and Official Records.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 54

[§ 54] Personal Attendance and Official Records.

A party may require personal attendance of the witness by including the following clause in the subpoena duces tecum: "The personal attendance of the custodian or other qualified witness and the production of the original records are required by this subpoena. The procedure authorized pursuant to subdivision (b) of Section 1560, and Sections 1561 and 1562, of the Evidence Code will not be deemed sufficient compliance with this subpoena." (Ev.C. 1564.)

If more than one subpoena duces tecum is served and personal attendance is required, the witness is deemed to be the witness of the party serving the first subpoena. (Ev.C. 1565.)

III. SECONDARY EVIDENCE

E. Business Records.

2. Procedure.

e. Fees and Costs.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 55

[§ 55] Fees and Costs.

Ev.C. 1563 covers costs and fees as follows:

(1) One Fee. Unless otherwise agreed, only one witness and mileage fee need be tendered or paid. (Ev.C. 1563(a).)

(2) Reasonable Costs. "All reasonable costs incurred in a civil proceeding by any witness which is not a party with respect to the production of all or any part of business records the production of which is requested pursuant to a subpoena duces tecum may be charged against the party serving the subpoena duces tecum." (Ev.C. 1563(b).) Ev.C. 1563(b) also includes an elaborate statutory scheme for costs and expenses incurred in complying with the subpoena:

(a) "Reasonable costs" means (1) 10 cents per page for documents eight and one-half by fourteen inches or smaller; (2) 20 cents per page for copying documents from microfilm; (3) actual costs of reproducing oversize documents and those requiring special handling; (4) clerical costs incurred in locating and making the records available, billed at $ 24 per hour per person and computed on the basis of $ 6 per quarter hour or fraction thereof; (5) actual postage charges; and (6) actual costs charged to the witness by a third party for retrieval and return of records stored off-site by the third party. (Ev.C. 1563(b)(1).)

(b) The witness may demand payment of charges simultaneously with the actual delivery of the subpoenaed records and is allowed to withhold delivery until the charges are paid. (Ev.C. 1563(b)(2).)

(c) The requesting party or a deposition officer is entitled to an itemized statement of the clerical, reproduction, and other costs charged by the witness for complying with the subpoena. If the costs exceed those authorized in Ev.C. 1563(b)(1), or if the witness refuses to produce the itemized statement of costs, the requesting party or the deposition officer may demand that the witness furnish a statement detailing the actions the witness took in justification of the costs. (Ev.C. 1563(b)(3).)

(d) Claims of excessive charges may be determined by the court at an order to show cause hearing with an allowance of costs and attorneys' fees to the prevailing party. (Ev.C. 1563(b)(4).)

(e) The witness may seek recoupment of costs and charges where the subpoena is withdrawn, quashed, modified, or limited. (Ev.C. 1563(b)(5).)

(f) Where the records are delivered to the attorney, his or her representative, or a deposition officer for inspection or photocopying at the witness' place of business, the fee for complying with the subpoena must not exceed $ 15, plus actual costs charged to the witness by a third person for retrieval and return of records held offsite. If the records are retrieved from microfilm, the reasonable cost (defined in Ev.C. 1563(b)(1)) also applies. (Ev.C. 1563(b)(6).)

(3) When Personal Attendance Required. In a civil proceeding in which the custodian or other qualified witness must personally attend, he or she is entitled to the same witness fees and mileage as a witness required to attend and testify, plus any additional costs incurred as provided by Ev.C. 1563(b). (Ev.C. 1563(c).)

III. SECONDARY EVIDENCE F. Statutory Restoration Procedure.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 56

[§ 56] Statutory Restoration Procedure.

The 1961 Legislature created the following proceeding (C.C.P. 1953.10 et seq.) for proof and restoration of a writing made unavailable by public calamity:

(1) Subject Matter. Covered originals consist of "any memorandum, book, map, chart, manuscript, writing, account, entry, record, print, document, representation, or combination thereof." (C.C.P. 1953.10.)

(2) Conditions. To be covered, an original must be "damaged, rendered wholly or partially illegible, destroyed in whole or in part or lost by explosion, conflagration, earthquake, disaster or other public calamity." (C.C.P. 1953.10.)

(3) Parties. The proceeding may be brought by a "person, corporation, copartnership, organization, institution, business, member of profession or calling" interested in restoring the writing. (C.C.P. 1953.10.) Notice of hearing is given "to such persons, if any, as the court shall designate by its order." (C.C.P. 1953.11.)

(4) Procedure. The interested person files a verified petition. (C.C.P. 1953.10.) Notice of hearing is given to the persons (C.C.P. 1953.11, supra), and in the manner directed by the court (publication, posting, personal service or otherwise). (C.C.P. 1953.11.)

At the hearing, proof of notice is made and evidence is received. (C.C.P. 1953.11, 1953.12.) If satisfied with the proof, the court makes an order referring to the writing, reciting its "existence, substance, genuineness or authenticity." (C.C.P. 1953.12, 1953.13.) The order "shall be deemed in lieu of the original and have the same effect as if the original had not been damaged, destroyed or otherwise rendered wholly or partially illegible." (C.C.P. 1953.13; see Daddario v. Snow Valley (1995) 36 C.A.4th 1325, 1338, 43 C.R.2d 726 [once statutory procedure was complied with, former best evidence rule did not apply].)

CHAPTER VIII - Documentary Evidence

IV. OFFICIAL WRITINGS AFFECTING PROPERTY

A. Nature and Scope of Provisions.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 57

[§ 57] Nature and Scope of Provisions.

Ev.C. 1600 et seq. give added effect to certain writings covered by Ev.C. 1532 (supra, §44): "The provisions of some sections provide hearsay exceptions; other sections provide exceptions to the best evidence rule; still others provide authentication procedures." (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1600.) (On duty to disclose written evidence in action involving land patented or granted by state, see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §123.)

(1) Official Record of Document Affecting Property Interest. The official authorized record of a "document purporting to establish or affect an interest in property" is prima facie evidence of the existence and content of the original recorded document "and its execution and delivery by each person by whom it purports to have been executed." (Ev.C. 1600(a); see Thomas v. Peterson (1931) 213 C. 672, 674, 3 P.2d 306.) The presumption established by this section is one affecting the burden of proof. (Ev.C. 1600(b).)

(2) Deed by Officer in Pursuance of Court Process. A deed purporting to have been executed by a proper officer under legal process of a court of record of this state and acknowledged and recorded in the county where the real property is situated is prima facie evidence that the property or interest described "was thereby conveyed to the grantee named in such deed." The same is true of a record of that deed or a certified copy of the record. (Ev.C. 1603.) This also is a presumption affecting the burden of proof. (Ev.C. 1603.)

(3) Certificate of Purchase or of Location of Lands. A certificate of purchase or location of lands in this state, issued pursuant to federal or California law, is prima facie evidence that the holder or assignee is the owner of the described land. However, this presumption may be overcome by proof that, at the time of the location or of filing a preemption claim, (a) the land was in the adverse possession of the opponent (or those under whom the opponent claims), or (b) the opponent is holding the land for mining purposes. (Ev.C. 1604.)

(4) Authenticated Spanish Title Records. Duplicate copies and authenticated translations of original Spanish title papers, prepared and authenticated pursuant to an old statute, are admissible as evidence with the effect of originals and without proving execution of the originals. (Ev.C. 1605.)

IV. OFFICIAL WRITINGS AFFECTING PROPERTY

B. Lost Official Record Affecting Property.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 58

[§ 58] Lost Official Record Affecting Property.

Ev.C. 1601 authorizes secondary evidence of the contents of "the official record of any writing lost or destroyed by conflagration or other public calamity" as follows:

(1) Foundation: Proof of Loss or Destruction. The proponent must offer "proof of such loss or destruction" (Ev.C. 1601(a)); but no proof of loss of the original is required other than the fact that the original is not known by the proponent to be in existence (Ev.C. 1601(b)).

(2) Secondary Evidence To Prove Contents. Two kinds of evidence are authorized:

(a) An abstract of title made, issued, and certified as correct prior to its loss or destruction, and purporting to have been made in the ordinary course of business by a person engaged in the business. (Ev.C. 1601(a)(1).)

(b) An abstract of title or other instrument affecting title that is made, issued, and certified as correct by a person engaged in the business of insuring titles or issuing abstracts of title. This is true whether this occurs before or after the instrument's loss or destruction, and whether the instrument was made from the original records or from the abstract and notes taken in the ordinary course of the insurer's or issuer's business. (Ev.C. 1601(a)(2).)

(3) Pretrial Notice and Inspection. The proponent must give "reasonable notice in writing" of his or her intention to use the evidence to all other parties who have appeared. The proponent must also give them "a reasonable opportunity to inspect the evidence, and also the abstracts, memoranda, or notes from which it was compiled, and to take copies thereof." (Ev.C. 1601(c).)

CHAPTER VIII - Documentary Evidence

V. PAROL EVIDENCE RULE

A. Nature of Rule.

1. General Principles.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 59

[§ 59] General Principles.

(1) In General. The parol evidence rule, with certain exceptions, prohibits the introduction of any extrinsic evidence (oral or written) to vary or add to the terms of an integrated written instrument (a contract, deed, or will). (See generally Estate of Gaines (1940) 15 C.2d 255, 264, 100 P.2d 1055; Imbach v. Schultz (1962) 58 C.2d 858, 860, 27 C.R. 160, 377 P.2d 272, citing the text; Masterson v. Sine (1968) 68 C.2d 222, 227, 65 C.R. 545, 436 P.2d 561, infra, §88; Tahoe Nat. Bank v. Phillips (1971) 4 C.3d 11, 23, 92 C.R. 704, 480 P.2d 320, infra, §64, citing the text; Price v. Wells Fargo Bank (1989) 213 C.A.3d 465, 486, 261 C.R. 735, citing the text; Alling v. Universal Mfg. Corp. (1992) 5 C.A.4th 1412, 1433, 7 C.R.2d 718, citing the text; 9 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§2425 et seq., 2443 et seq.; 3 Corbin §573 et seq.; 11 Williston 4th, Chap. 33; 25 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 1 [analyzing recent cases and arguing for abolishment of rule]; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §1092 et seq.; 69 A.L.R.3d 1353 [parol evidence rule in action on contract for architect's services]; 36 Proof of Facts 3d 331 [introducing evidence over parol evidence objection]; C.E.B., Effective Introduction of Evidence 2d, Chap. 37; 2 Jefferson, California Evidence Benchbook 3d, Chap. 32.)

(2) Nature of Rule. Although the various statements (see infra, §§60, 61) are usually thought of as expressing the parol evidence rule, Wigmore has asserted that there are several distinct propositions involved, including the following (see 9 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §2401):

- (a) A rule determining whether there was a valid legal act. (See infra, §95.)
- (b) The "integration" rule, determining whether that act was intended to supersede all other negotiations and constitute the complete expression of the intentions of the parties. (See infra, §65.)
- (c) A rule relating to the interpretation of the act. (See infra, §74.)
- (d) A rule of solemnization or form, e.g., the statute of frauds. (See infra, §63.)

The parol evidence rule is not regarded as a rule of evidence and is not covered in the Evidence Code. (See infra, §62.)

(3) Relevant Inquiry. The application of the rule and its exceptions has given rise to many difficult distinctions and much debate by text writers. The practicing lawyer's chief question, however, is whether extrinsic evidence is or is not admissible in a particular case. Thus, the following questions should be asked:

- (a) Is the writing one to which the rule applies, i.e., an integration? (See infra, §65 et seq.)

(b) Was the extrinsic evidence admissible because it was not inconsistent with the writing (evidence to interpret, or consistent collateral agreement)? (See infra, §§74 et seq., 86, 87.)

(c) Was the extrinsic evidence admissible, though inconsistent, under one of the exceptions to the rule? (See infra, §93 et seq.)

V. PAROL EVIDENCE RULE

A. Nature of Rule.

2. Statements of Rule.

a. Restatement and U.C.C.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 60

[§ 60] Restatement and U.C.C.

(1) Second Restatement of Contracts. The Second Restatement of Contracts, §213, states the rule as follows:

- (a) "A binding integrated agreement discharges prior agreements to the extent that it is inconsistent with them."
- (b) "A binding completely integrated agreement discharges prior agreements to the extent that they are within its scope."
- (c) "An integrated agreement that is not binding or that is voidable and avoided does not discharge a prior agreement. But an integrated agreement, even though not binding, may be effective to render inoperative a term which would have been part of the agreement if it had not been integrated."

Subsequent sections of the Restatement deal with various aspects of the rule's application: §214 [Evidence of Prior or Contemporaneous Agreements and Negotiations]; §215 [Contradictions of Integrated Terms]; §216 [Consistent Additional Terms]; §217 [Integrated Agreement Subject to Oral Requirement of a Condition]; §218 [Untrue Recitals; Evidence of Consideration].

(2) Uniform Commercial Code. This Code states the rule with express recognition of several of the situations in which extrinsic evidence is admissible. (U.C.C. 2202 and Official Comments.) U.C.C. 2202 reads as follows:

"Terms with respect to which the confirmatory memoranda of the parties agree or which are otherwise set forth in a writing intended by the parties as a final expression of their agreement with respect to such terms as are included therein may not be contradicted by evidence of any prior agreement or of a contemporaneous oral agreement but may be explained or supplemented"

"(a) By course of dealing or usage of trade (Section 1205) or by course of performance (Section 2208); and"

"(b) By evidence of consistent additional terms unless the court finds the writing to have been intended also as a complete and exclusive statement of the terms of the agreement." (See 2 Anderson 3d (1997 ed.), §2-202:1 et seq.; 71 A.L.R.3d 1059 [parol evidence rule of U.C.C. 2202 on fraud in sale of goods].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Uniform Commercial Code. U.C.C. 2202(a) was amended in 2006 to read: "(a) By course of dealing, course of performance, or usage of trade (Section 1303); and".

CHAPTER VIII - Documentary Evidence

V. PAROL EVIDENCE RULE

- A. Nature of Rule.
- 2. Statements of Rule.
  - b. California Statute.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 61

[§ 61] California Statute.

C.C.P. 1856, as revised in 1978 to conform to the Uniform Commercial Code formulation, states the parol evidence rule as follows:

(1) Final Agreement Cannot Be Contradicted. "Terms set forth in a writing intended by the parties as a final expression of their agreement with respect to such terms as are included therein may not be contradicted by evidence of any prior agreement or of a contemporaneous oral agreement." (C.C.P. 1856(a); see Law Rev. Com. Comment; on integration rule, see infra, §65 et seq.)

(2) Consistent Additional Terms. The terms of the final agreement "may be explained or supplemented by evidence of consistent additional terms unless the writing is intended also as a complete and exclusive statement of the terms of the agreement." (C.C.P. 1856(b); see Law Rev. Com. Comment; infra, §86 et seq.)

(3) Evidence of Dealing, Usage, or Performance. The terms of the final agreement "may be explained or supplemented by course of dealing or usage of trade or by course of performance." (C.C.P. 1856(c); see Law Rev. Com. Comment; infra, §85.)

(4) Court Determines Finality of Agreement. The court must determine whether the writing is intended by the parties as a final expression of their agreement as to the terms included in the writing, and whether the writing is intended as a complete and exclusive statement of those terms. (C.C.P. 1856(d); see Law Rev. Com. Comment; infra, §§68, 69.)

(5) Evidence of Mistake or Imperfection. Relevant evidence is admissible to clarify or explain a mistake or imperfection in the writing that is put in issue by the pleadings. (C.C.P. 1856(e); see infra, §96.)

(6) Evidence of Invalidity. Where the validity of the agreement is in dispute, evidence relevant to that issue is admissible. (C.C.P. 1856(f); see infra, §95 et seq.)

(7) Evidence To Interpret or Establish Illegality or Fraud. Other evidence of the circumstances under which the agreement was made or to which it relates, to explain an extrinsic ambiguity or otherwise interpret the terms of the agreement, or to establish illegality or fraud is admissible. (C.C.P. 1856(g); see Law Rev. Com. Comment; infra, §§74 et seq., 95 et seq.)

(8) Agreements Covered by Rule. The parol evidence rule covers deeds, wills, and contracts. (C.C.P. 1856(h).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Final Agreement Cannot Be Contradicted.

(New) Distinction: Subsequent promises are not barred: C.C.P. 1856(a) bars resort to evidence of a prior agreement or a contemporaneous oral agreement to contradict a plain and unambiguous term in a fully integrated agreement. It is inapplicable to promises made subsequent to the execution of the integrated agreement. (Charnay v. Cobert (2006) 145 C.A.4th 170, 186, 51 C.R.3d 471 [client's fraud claim against former attorney, based on assurances by attorney that she would recoup her attorneys' fees in property dispute, was not barred by parol evidence rule, even though parties' retainer agreement included "no guarantees" clause, where assurances were made subsequent to retainer agreement].)

V. PAROL EVIDENCE RULE

A. Nature of Rule.

3. Rule of Substantive Law.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 62

[§ 62] Rule of Substantive Law.

It is almost universally agreed that the parol evidence rule is not a mere rule of evidence concerned with the method of proving an agreement. "It does not exclude evidence for any of the reasons ordinarily requiring exclusion, based on the probative value of such evidence or the policy of its admission. The rule as applied to contracts is simply that as a matter of substantive law, a certain act, the act of embodying the complete terms of an agreement in a writing (the 'integration'), becomes the contract of the parties. The point then is, not how the agreement is to be proved, because as a matter of law the writing is the agreement. Extrinsic evidence is excluded because it cannot serve to prove what the agreement was, this being determined as a matter of law to be the writing itself." (Estate of Gaines (1940) 15 C.2d 255, 264, 100 P.2d 1055; see Guerin v. Kirst (1949) 33 C.2d 402, 410, 202 P.2d 10; Hale v. Bohannon (1952) 38 C.2d 458, 465, 241 P.2d 4; *Buffalo Arms v. ## CHAPTER VIII - Documentary Evidence

V. PAROL EVIDENCE RULE

A. Nature of Rule.

4. Statute of Frauds Distinguished.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 63

[§ 63] Statute of Frauds Distinguished.

The statute of frauds requires a writing as evidence of certain kinds of contracts. And, because both it and the parol evidence rule may operate to exclude oral evidence of contractual terms, the two rules are sometimes confused in contract cases. (See Ellis v. Klaff (1950) 96 C.A.2d 471, 477, 216 P.2d 15; Riley v. Bear Creek Planning Committee (1976) 17 C.3d 500, 509, 131 C.R. 381, 551 P.2d 1213, infra, §83, citing the text; 3 Corbin §575; 9 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §2454; 1 Summary (9th), Contracts, §261 et seq.) The following distinctions should be borne in mind:

(1) Different Purposes and Scope. The object of the statute of frauds is to prevent perjured testimony in proof of purported contracts of important types, and the statute applies only to those enumerated types. (See 1 Summary (9th), Contracts, §282 et seq.) The parol evidence rule applies to any type of contract, and its purpose is to make sure that the parties' final understanding, deliberately expressed in writing, shall not be changed. (See supra, §59 et seq.)

(2) Different Kinds of Writings. To meet the requirements of the statute of frauds, a written memorandum that refers to the essential elements of the contract is sufficient; it need not be complete and its details may be filled in by parol evidence. (See 1 Summary (9th), Contracts, §269 et seq.) To bring the parol evidence rule into operation, however, there must be a final writing or integration, completely covering the agreement of the parties. (See infra, §65 et seq.)

(3) Parol Evidence May Not Establish Essential Elements of Memorandum. Even though there is an integration, parol evidence of oral terms not inconsistent with the contract may be admitted. (See infra, §86.) But no essential element of a memorandum required by the statute of frauds can be supplied by parol evidence. (See Ellis v. Klaff, supra, 96 C.A.2d 477; 1 Summary (9th), Contracts, §269 et seq.)

(4) Estoppel Does Not Overcome Parol Evidence Rule. Estoppel may preclude the defense of the statute of frauds (see 1 Summary (9th), Contracts, §322 et seq.), but this doctrine may not serve to overcome the parol evidence rule. Thus, in Alameda County Title Ins. Co. v. Panella (1933) 218 C. 510, 24 P.2d 163, defendant asserted that plaintiff wrongfully sold his property at a trustee's sale, because, prior to the execution of the note and deed of trust, plaintiff orally agreed to "hold and carry" the obligation until defendant could dispose of the property advantageously, and defendant signed the instruments in reliance on this oral promise. Defendant's contention was that plaintiff should be estopped to deny the oral agreement. Held, this was not a defense. A party may be estopped to plead the statute of frauds, under certain circumstances, where there is no writing. Here, however, there was a formal writing, which, under the parol evidence rule, superseded prior understandings. (218 C. 516.)

(New) Distinction: Use of means or key to define land: The statute of frauds may be satisfied where the contract provides that a buyer will select and acquire certain lands after the original written contract is executed. Extrinsic evidence may then be considered to show which lands were acquired, and their boundaries. This result is in accord with the general principle that a "means" or "key" may be used to define the relevant land, so as to avoid invalidity under the statute of frauds. (Alameda Belt Line v. Alameda (2003) 113 C.A.4th 15, 22, 5 C.R.3d 879 [parol evidence coming into existence after execution of written contract containing option to repurchase could be used to show boundaries of land subject to option; contractual language, "said belt line railroad including all extensions thereof," was adequate key].)

CHAPTER VIII - Documentary Evidence

V. PAROL EVIDENCE RULE

A. Nature of Rule.

5. Objection in Lower Court.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 64

[§ 64] Objection in Lower Court.

The question whether violation of the parol evidence rule may be raised for the first time on appeal has been the subject of conflicting decisions both in California and elsewhere. (See 81 A.L.R.3d 249 [modern status of rules governing legal effect of failure to object].)

(1) Theory of Waived Objection. This theory stresses the fundamental policy requiring the raising of issues in the lower court as a prerequisite to appellate review, and the courts that invoke the theory hold that incompetent evidence admitted without objection, including parol evidence varying the terms of an integration, may sustain a judgment. A number of California cases followed this view. (See Pao Ch'en Lee v. Gregoriou (1958) 50 C.2d 502, 505, 326 P.2d 135; Tsarnas v. Bailey (1960) 179 C.A.2d 332, 338, 3 P.2d 629; Santa Clara Properties Co. v. R. L. C. (1963) 217 C.A.2d 840, 854, 32 C.R. 333; Martin v. Town & Country Dev. (1964) 230 C.A.2d 422, 427, 41 C.R. 47; Crummer v. Zalk (1967) 248 C.A.2d 794, 797, 57 C.R. 185; San Francisco v. City Inv. Corp. (1971) 15 C.A.3d 1031, 1038, 93 C.R. 690.)

(2) Repudiation of Waiver View. Many cases decided prior to Pao Ch'en Lee, supra, stressed the substantive nature of the rule, and held that parol evidence contradicting an integration should be disregarded on appeal as of no probative force in determining the sufficiency of the evidence to support the judgment. (See Dollar v. International Banking Corp. (1910) 13 C.A. 331, 343, 109 P. 499; Harding v. Robinson (1917) 175 C. 534, 540, 166 P. 808; Rottman v. Hevener (1921) 54 C.A. 474, 479, 202 P. 329; Middlecamp v. Zumwalt (1929) 100 C.A. 715, 723, 280 P. 1003; Hanrahan-Wilcox Corp. v. Jenison Machinery Co. (1937) 23 C.A.2d 642, 645, 73 P.2d 1241; Lifton v. Harshman (1947) 80 C.A.2d 422, 432, 182 P.2d 222; El Zarape Tortilla Factory v. Plant Food Corp. (1949) 90 C.A.2d 336, 344, 203 P.2d 13.)

This substantive approach was adopted and the contrary view of Pao Ch'en Lee was rejected in Tahoe Nat. Bank v. Phillips (1971) 4 C.3d 11, 92 C.R. 704, 480 P.2d 320. Defendant executed an instrument involving her home entitled "Assignment of Rents and Agreement Not to Sell or Encumber Real Property." Plaintiff bank sought foreclosure, offering extrinsic evidence to show that the purported assignment, on its own form, was an equitable mortgage. Defendant did not object to the evidence, and the trial judge sustained the bank's contention. On appeal, defendant contended that the assignment was not reasonably susceptible of this construction. Held, judgment decreeing foreclosure reversed; the instrument could not properly be construed as a mortgage. (See 3 Summary (9th), Security Transactions in Real Property, §15.)

Plaintiff bank, relying on Pao Ch'en Lee, argued that the extrinsic evidence admitted without objection supported its construction. The court's answer made this distinction: Extrinsic evidence may be admitted provisionally in order that the judge may determine if it is relevant to establish an interpretation to which the writing is reasonably susceptible; but extrinsic evidence cannot support a construction contrary to its terms. (4 C.3d 22.)

"If we treat the parol evidence rule as one of substantive law, we cannot consistently subjugate that rule to the principles of objection and waiver codified in the Evidence Code. ... To be sure, a party who has not objected to the introduction of extrinsic evidence cannot complain if that evidence is considered by the trier of fact. But in determining whether substantial evidence supports a judgment, extrinsic evidence inconsistent with any interpretation to which the instrument is reasonably susceptible becomes irrelevant; as a matter of substantive law such evidence cannot serve to create or alter the obligations under the instrument. Irrelevant evidence cannot support a judgment." (4 C.3d 23.)

Thus, defendant, not having objected at the trial, cannot contend on appeal that it was error to admit the extrinsic evidence; but "she may argue on appeal that such extrinsic evidence conflicts with any interpretation to which the instrument is reasonably susceptible." (4 C.3d 23.)

CHAPTER VIII - Documentary Evidence

V. PAROL EVIDENCE RULE

B. Integration Rule Excluding Extrinsic Evidence.

1. What Constitutes Integration.

a. Writing Intended as Final Expression.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 65

[§ 65] Writing Intended as Final Expression.

(1) Second Restatement of Contracts. "An integrated agreement is a writing or writings constituting a final expression of one or more terms of an agreement." (Rest.2d, Contracts §209(1).) "No particular form is required for an integrated agreement. Written contracts, signed by both parties, may include an explicit declaration that there are no other agreements between the parties, but such a declaration may not be conclusive. The intention of the parties may also be manifested without explicit statement and without signature. A letter, telegram or other informal document written by one party may be orally assented to by the other as a final expression of some or all of the terms of their agreement." (Rest.2d, Contracts §209, Comment b.)

(2) California Statute. C.C.P. 1856(a), without using the term "integration," refers to "[t]erms set forth in a writing intended by the parties as a final expression of their agreement with respect to such terms as are included therein." (See supra, §61.)

Thus, if there has been a legally effective act (i.e., a legally effective instrument was intended and there are no invalidating factors such as mistake, fraud, or lack of consideration; see infra, §96 et seq.), the exclusionary aspect of the parol evidence rule comes into operation when the parties have adopted a writing or writings as a final and complete expression of their understanding. (See Estate of Gaines (1940) 15 C.2d 255, 264, 100 P.2d 1055; Pollyanna Homes v. Berney (1961) 56 C.2d 676, 679, 16 C.R. 345, 365 P.2d 401, citing the text; *Imbach v. ### V. PAROL EVIDENCE RULE

B. Integration Rule Excluding Extrinsic Evidence.

1. What Constitutes Integration.

c. Partial Integration.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 67

[§ 67] Partial Integration.

The parties may reduce only a part of their agreement to writing, leaving the rest to their oral understanding. In such a case, the integrated part is protected by the parol evidence rule in the same manner as if the whole contract were integrated. (See Rest.2d, Contracts §209(1) ["final expression of one or more terms of an agreement"]; §214(b) [evidence to establish "that the integrated agreement, if any, is completely or partially integrated"]; Schwartz v. Shapiro (1964) 229 C.A.2d 238, 250, 40 C.R. 189, quoting the text; Goodman v. Citizens Life & Cas. Ins. Co. (1967) 253 C.A.2d 807, 815, 61 C.R. 682; Slivinsky v. Watkins-Johnson Co. (1990) 221 C.A.3d 799, 805, 270 C.R. 585 [evidence that plaintiff's employment was terminated without good cause was inadmissible where integrated termination provision defined employment as being at will]; Haggard v. Kimberly Quality Care (1995) 39 C.A.4th 508, 520, 46 C.R.2d 16 [citing Slivinsky case; where written employment agreement contained at will provision with integration clause, implied oral agreement to terminate only for cause was not admissible, even if written agreement did not cover other employment terms such as salary, hours, or benefits]; 9 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §2430.)

However, one commentator has argued that where there is no complete integration of an entire agreement, courts should be slow in finding that the parties intended a partial writing to be conclusive as to anything. (See 3 Corbin §§581, 587.)

CHAPTER VIII - Documentary Evidence

V. PAROL EVIDENCE RULE

B. Integration Rule Excluding Extrinsic Evidence.

2. Determination of Intent.

a. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 68

[§ 68] In General.

(1) Nature of Problem and Former Test. A writing is an integration when the parties manifest or express their intention that it shall be a final statement of their agreement. (See supra, §65.) In the absence of an express statement to that effect (infra, §70), how that manifested intent is ascertained is one of the most controversial problems in the application of the parol evidence rule. (See 9 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §2429; Rest.2d, Contracts §209, Comment b.)

California courts formerly applied the "face of the document test," making finality determinable from the document itself. Under this test, if the document on its face purports to be a complete expression of the agreement, it is conclusively presumed to contain all of the agreed terms, and extrinsic evidence should be excluded. (See Harrison v. McCormick (1891) 89 C. 327, 330, 26 P. 830; Germain Fruit Co. v. J. K. Armsby Co. (1908) 153 C. 585, 594, 96 P. 319; Johnson v. D. H. Bibb Lumber Co. (1903) 140 C. 95, 98, 73 P. 730; United Iron Works v. Outer Harbor Dock & Wharf Co. (1914) 168 C. 81, 84, 141 P. 917; Thoroman v. David (1926) 199 C. 386, 390, 249 P. 513; Morgan v. Green (1927) 86 C.A. 216, 222, 260 P. 596; El Zarape Tortilla Factory v. Plant Food Corp. (1949) 90 C.A.2d 336, 343, 203 P.2d 13; Pollyanna Homes v. Berney (1961) 56 C.2d 676, 679, 16 C.R. 345, 365 P.2d 401, citing the text.)

This test was strongly criticized and later repudiated. (See infra, §69.)

(2) Determination by Judge. The integration doctrine, which brings the parol evidence rule into operation, raises a question of law for the judge, not a question of fact for the jury. (See C.C.P. 1856(d), supra, §61; U.C.C. §2202(b), and Comment 3; Harrison v. McCormick, supra, 89 C. 330; Stephan v. Lagerqvist (1921) 52 C.A. 519, 523, 199 P. 52; *Brawthen v. ## CHAPTER VIII - Documentary Evidence

V. PAROL EVIDENCE RULE

B. Integration Rule Excluding Extrinsic Evidence.

2. Determination of Intent.

b. Admissibility of Parol Evidence.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 69

[§ 69] Admissibility of Parol Evidence.

The strict "face of the document test" has been criticized by writers as inadequate. It operates correctly when it holds the parol evidence rule inapplicable to informal writings which clearly do not purport to be integrations. (See infra, §72.) But a writing may be formal or complete in appearance without necessarily indicating the intention of the parties to cover all aspects of the subject matter therein and to supersede other written or oral transactions; and, as to such a writing, the "face of the document" test would operate to exclude parts of the actual agreement of the parties. There is, therefore, both principle and authority for the introduction of evidence of the surrounding circumstances and prior negotiations for the limited purpose of determining whether the writing in question was intended to supersede all other transactions. (See Schwartz v. Shapiro (1964) 229 C.A.2d 238, 251, footnote 8, 40 C.R. 189; Wagner v. Glendale Adventist Med. Center (1989) 216 C.A.3d 1379, 1386, 1387, 265 C.R. 412, citing the text; Wedek v. Unocal Corp. (1997) 59 C.A.4th 848, 863, 69 C.R.2d 501, citing the text [in personal injury action by temporary worker against oil refinery owner, trial judge properly admitted extrinsic evidence to determine that, despite plaintiff's claim that it was integrated, ambiguous terms on back of purchase order generated by defendant and signed by temporary agency employee were not intended to vary prior agreement that made plaintiff special employee of defendant]; 9 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§2430, 2431; 3 Corbin §582.)

Where more than one writing is offered, parol evidence is clearly admissible to show that the several papers were intended to constitute a single contract. (See Torrey v. Shea (1916) 29 C.A. 313, 316, 155 P. 820; cf. Mayers v. Loew's (1950) 35 C.2d 822, 827, 221 P.2d 26; Roberts v. Reynolds (1963) 212 C.A.2d 818, 824, 28 C.R. 261; and see 1950 A.S. 423.) And in Shelley v. Hart (1931) 112 C.A. 231, 240, 297 P. 82, evidence was admitted to show that the promisor, in signing a filled-in printed contract form, did so on the express understanding that he was not to be bound by the additional printed matter on the bottom and back of the page, following his signature. The terms before the signature did not refer to the other provisions, and the court declared that "extrinsic evidence is competent to determine just what portion of the document constitutes the real contract."

In Masterson v. Sine (1968) 68 C.2d 222, 226, 65 C.R. 545, 436 P.2d 561, infra, §88, the court reviewed the conflicting expressions in California cases and repudiated the face of the document test. Birsner v. Bolles (1971) 20 C.A.3d 635, 637, 97 C.R. 846, is to the same effect.

CHAPTER VIII - Documentary Evidence

V. PAROL EVIDENCE RULE

B. Integration Rule Excluding Extrinsic Evidence.

3. Merger Clause.

a. General Rule: Parol Evidence Inadmissible.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 70

[§ 70] General Rule: Parol Evidence Inadmissible.

Written agreements (particularly those between sellers and buyers of real or personal property, negotiated by sellers' agents) often contain a standard "merger clause" to the effect that the writing shall constitute the entire contract, and that there are no agreements, warranties, or representations other than those expressly mentioned. (See 3 Corbin §578; 1 Summary (9th), Contracts, §410 et seq.)

This type of clause has been held conclusive on the issue of integration, so that parol evidence to show that the parties did not intend the writing to constitute the sole agreement will be excluded. (See Hanrahan-Wilcox Corp. v. Jenison Machinery Co. (1937) 23 C.A.2d 642, 646, 73 P.2d 1241; Salyer Grain & Milling Co. v. Henson (1970) 13 C.A.3d 493, 501, 91 C.R. 847, infra, §90; Blumenfeld v. R.H. Macy & Co. (1979) 92 C.A.3d 38, 44, 154 C.R. 652; Malmstrom v. Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. (1986) 187 C.A.3d 299, 315, 231 C.R. 820; Haggard v. Kimberly Quality Care (1995) 39 C.A.4th 508, 518, 519, 46 C.R.2d 16 [admission of evidence as to implied oral agreement to terminate plaintiff's employment only for cause was improper; at will provision in written contract stated that there were no express or implied agreements to the contrary, and provision was not reasonably susceptible of interpretation that cause was required]; Rest.2d, Contracts §216, Comment e [such a clause "if agreed to is likely to conclude the issue whether the agreement is completely integrated"].)

CHAPTER VIII - Documentary Evidence

V. PAROL EVIDENCE RULE

B. Integration Rule Excluding Extrinsic Evidence.

3. Merger Clause.

b. Exceptions.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 71

[§ 71] Exceptions.

(1) Invalidity Exceptions. The merger clause (supra, §70) has no effect on the invalidity exceptions to the parol evidence rule (infra, §95 et seq.). Thus, it cannot prevent the introduction of evidence of fraud, mistake, or other invalidating matters, because a showing of invalidity nullifies the clause along with the rest of the contract. (See Rothstein v. Janss Inv. Corp. (1941) 45 C.A.2d 64, 68, 113 P.2d 465; 3 Corbin §578; 1 Summary (9th), Contracts, §410.)

(2) Policy Exceptions. The same is true of the policy exceptions to the parol evidence rule. (See infra, §106 et seq.) Thus, in Beeler v. American Trust Co. (1944) 24 C.2d 1, 147 P.2d 583, plaintiff executed a deed, and at the same time, signed an affidavit stating that the instrument was intended as an absolute conveyance and not as security. Held, parol evidence was nevertheless admissible to show that the instrument was intended as a mortgage. (24 C.2d 7.)

(3) Interpretation Exceptions. It would seem clear also that evidence to interpret the contract (infra, §74 et seq.) does not contravene the merger clause. (See 3 Corbin §578; Rest.2d, Contracts §216, Comment e ["such a clause does not control the question whether the writing was assented to as an integrated agreement, the scope of the writing if completely integrated, or the interpretation of the written terms"].)

CHAPTER VIII - Documentary Evidence

V. PAROL EVIDENCE RULE

B. Integration Rule Excluding Extrinsic Evidence.

4. What Are Not Integrations.

a. Noncontractual Writings.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 72

[§ 72] Noncontractual Writings.

Although the intent of the parties governs in each case, certain types of writings are, by their nature, not designed as final and complete expressions of an understanding. (See Wagner v. Glendale Adventist Med. Center (1989) 216 C.A.3d 1379, 1385, 1386, 265 C.R. 412, citing the text; 9 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§2429, 2432, 2451; 3 Corbin §588.) Typical examples include the following:

(1) Minutes of meeting. (See Lawrence v. Premier Indem. Assur. Co. (1919) 180 C. 688, 697, 182 P. 431, supra, §40.)

(2) Receipt. An ordinary receipt is a mere admission and rarely intended as a contract. (See Lawrence v. Premier Indem. Assur. Co., supra; Bevis v. Murphey (1932) 127 C.A. 518, 520, 16 P.2d 178; Haidinger-Hayes v. Marvin Hime & Co. (1962) 206 C.A.2d 46, 52, 23 C.R. 455.)

Of course, the term "receipt" is sometimes applied to written contracts which are integrations, such as a deposit receipt evidencing an agreement to purchase real property. (See 1 Summary (9th), Contracts, §273; 9 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §2432; 42 A.L.R.2d 600 [admissibility of extrinsic evidence to explain or contradict bank deposit slips, deposit entries in passbooks, certificates of deposit, or similar instruments].)

(3) Offer. (See Lawrence v. Premier Indem. Assur. Co., supra.)

(4) Book account. (See Epley v. Cunningham (1955) 134 C.A.2d 769, 770, 286 P.2d 380.)

(5) Automobile registration certificate. (See Lynn v. Herman (1946) 72 C.A.2d 614, 616, 165 P.2d 54 [rejecting plaintiff's contention that certificate, showing plaintiff to be legal owner, was conclusive by virtue of Veh.C. 5600 and therefore free from contradiction by parol evidence].)

V. PAROL EVIDENCE RULE

B. Integration Rule Excluding Extrinsic Evidence.

4. What Are Not Integrations.

b. Incomplete Contractual Writings.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 73

[§ 73] Incomplete Contractual Writings.

A writing contractual in form may, nevertheless, show on its face that the parties did not intend it to express their entire agreement. (See 3 Corbin §588.) As the following cases illustrate, informal letters or memoranda, or separate writings not complete or not expressly assented to, are examples:

Weil v. California Bank (1933) 219 C. 538, 540, 27 P.2d 904 [written agreement referred to defendant's obligation as "part of the consideration"; plaintiff could prove oral agreement imposing further obligation upon defendant].

Crawford v. France (1933) 219 C. 439, 443, 27 P.2d 645 [agreement to pay architect percentage of cost of construction; oral evidence of agreed limit on cost admissible, the contract being silent on this matter].

Kohl v. Lytle Creek Water & Imp. Co. (1938) 24 C.A.2d 353, 357, 75 P.2d 71 [letters, deed and bill of sale, no indication that they covered all elements of agreement].

India Paint & Lacquer Co. v. United Steel Products Corp. (1954) 123 C.A.2d 597, 604, 267 P.2d 408 [informal shipping document described as "invoice," held mere memorandum and its printed disclaimer of warranty not conclusive].

Bowman v. Santa Clara (1957) 153 C.A.2d 707, 712, 315 P.2d 67 [memorandum: "Dig ditch for 18" x 21" x 24" pipe at 50 cent per foot"].

Bert G. Gianelli Distr. Co. v. Beck & Co. (1985) 172 C.A.3d 1020, 1038, 219 C.R. 203 ["short form" beer distribution agreements were intended primarily to satisfy filing requirements of the Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control, and were not intended as complete terms of beer distributors' relationship with brewery].

McLain v. Great Amer. Ins. Cos. (1989) 208 C.A.3d 1476, 1485, 256 C.R. 863 [standardized application form omitted key aspects of employment and stated that terms could be changed; plaintiff could prove implied contract requiring cause for termination].

CHAPTER VIII - Documentary Evidence

V. PAROL EVIDENCE RULE

C. When Extrinsic Evidence Is Admissible.

1. Evidence To Interpret Integration.

a. Nature and Scope of Interpretation.

1. General Principles.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 74

[§ 74] General Principles.

(1) Parol Evidence Admissible To Interpret Meaning of Writing. If there is a legally effective act expressed in a final and complete writing or integration, parol evidence is not admissible to contradict its terms. (See supra, §59.) But the meaning of the instrument must still be ascertained, and parol evidence is admissible, within certain limitations, to interpret it. (See Bartel v. Associated Dental Supply Co. (1952) 114 C.A.2d 750, 752, 251 P.2d 16; Schmidt v. Macco Const. Co. (1953) 119 C.A.2d 717, 730, 260 P.2d 230; Masterson v. Sine (1968) 68 C.2d 222, 225, 65 C.R. 545, 436 P.2d 561, infra, §88; Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. G. W. Thomas Drayage & Rigging Co. (1968) 69 C.2d 33, 39, 69 C.R. 561, 442 P.2d 641, infra, §80; Delta Dynamics v. Arioto (1968) 69 C.2d 525, 530, 72 C.R. 785, 446 P.2d 785, infra, §82; Diamond v. Insurance Co. of North America (1968) 267 C.A.2d 415, 419, 72 C.R. 862, infra, §82; Estate of Gilliland (1969) 276 C.A.2d 258, 261, 80 C.R. 876; People v. West-A-Rama (1973) 35 C.A.3d 786, 790, 111 C.R. 197; Riley v. Bear Creek Planning Committee (1976) 17 C.3d 500, 508, 131 C.R. 381, 551 P.2d 1213, infra, §83; Garcia v. Truck Ins. Exchange (1984) 36 C.3d 426, 435, 204 C.R. 435, 682 P.2d 1100; Heston v. Farmers Ins. Group (1984) 160 C.A.3d 402, 412, 413, 206 C.R. 585; Mobil Oil Corp. v. Exxon Corp. (1986) 177 C.A.3d 942, 947, 948, 223 C.R. 392; Esbensen v. Userware Int. (1992) 11 C.A.4th 631, 636, 637, 14 C.R.2d 93, infra, §89, citing the text; WYDA Associates v. Merner (1996) 42 C.A.4th 1702, 1713, 50 C.R.2d 323 [extrinsic evidence was properly admitted to determine when financing period in real estate option began to run]; Rest.2d, Contracts §214(c), and Comment b; 9 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §2458 et seq.; 3 Corbin §579; 11 Williston 4th, §33:38 et seq.)

(2) Standards and Sources of Interpretation. These subjects are considered at length in texts on contracts and wills. (See 9 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§2458 et seq., 2470 et seq.; 3 Corbin §532 et seq.; 1 Summary (9th), Contracts, §681 et seq.; 12 Summary (9th), Wills and Probate, §244 et seq.; on review of trial court's interpretation, see Parsons v. Bristol Dev. Co. (1965) 62 C.2d 861, 866, 44 C.R. 767, 402 P.2d 839, 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Appeal, §377.)

(3) Scope of Interpretation. U.C.C. 2202 (supra, §60) broadens the scope of admissible extrinsic evidence by rejecting (a) the premise that the language used has the meaning attributable to it by legal rules of construction "rather than the meaning which arises out of the commercial context in which it was used"; (b) the requirement of an original determination that the language used is "ambiguous" before evidence to interpret may be received. (U.C.C. 2202, Comment 1.) (On evidence of business customs or usage under U.C.C. 2202(a), see Hegglblade-Marguleas-Tenneco v. Sunshine Biscuit (1976) 59 C.A.3d 948, 954, 131 C.R. 183; see also C.C.P. 1856(c), supra, §61.)

In Stockton v. Stockton Plaza Corp. (1968) 261 C.A.2d 639, 68 C.R. 266, a lease made no provision for the lessor's right to terminate if the lessee were unable to obtain financing. Prior drafts, containing such a provision, were held admissible to show that omission of the right was intentional. (261 C.A.2d 643, citing the text.)

In Garcia v. Truck Ins. Exchange, supra, the action involved the interpretation of a policy of malpractice insurance for a hospital, with an exclusion of coverage of a physician sued by his own patient. The trial judge admitted testimony of L, general counsel to the California Hospital Association, who represented the hospitals in negotiating the policy. Held, the testimony was properly admitted, and supported the judge's determination that coverage was excluded. (36 C.3d 439.) Two justices, concurring in the judgment, agreed that the interpretation of the policy was proper, but strongly condemned admission of the testimony of the negotiating attorney, pointing out that the parol evidence rule states that execution of the written contract "supersedes all the negotiations." (36 C.3d 440.)

CHAPTER VIII - Documentary Evidence

V. PAROL EVIDENCE RULE

C. When Extrinsic Evidence Is Admissible.

1. Evidence To Interpret Integration.
  - a. Nature and Scope of Interpretation.
2. Evidence of Intention Excluded.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 75

[§ 75] Evidence of Intention Excluded.

(1) Statement of Rule. There is a fundamental limitation on the admissibility of evidence to interpret a writing: Once it is accepted as a final expression of a contract or a will, any declarations or testimony of intention contrary to its express terms do not give it meaning but substitute a different meaning, and they are consequently excluded. (See Fraters Glass & Paint Co. v. Southwestern Const. Co. (1927) 200 C. 688, 696, 254 P. 1097 [agreement expressly waived mechanic's lien; could not show additional waiver of right of action on bond]; Brant v. California Dairies (1935) 4 C.2d 128, 134, 48 P.2d 13 ["one party is not permitted to escape from its obligations by showing that he did not intend to do what his words bound him to do"]; Kunz v. Anglo & London Paris Nat. Bank of San Francisco (1931) 214 C. 341, 347, 5 P.2d 417 [instrument expressly assigned claims for purpose of collection only; evidence to establish absolute, beneficial assignment excluded]; Estate of Watterson (1933) 130 C.A. 741, 745, 20 P.2d 772; Gore v. Bingaman (1938) 29 C.A.2d 460, 470, 85 P.2d 172; Estate of Pagel (1942) 52 C.A.2d 38, 42, 125 P.2d 853; Crow v. P.E.G. Const. Co. (1957) 156 C.A.2d 271, 277, 319 P.2d 47; Imbach v. Schultz (1962) 58 C.2d 858, 860, 27 C.R. 160, 377 P.2d 272, citing the text; Waverly Productions v. RKO General (1963) 217 C.A.2d 721, 730, 32 C.R. 73, quoting the text; Wm. E. Doud & Co. v. Smith (1967) 256 C.A.2d 552, 558, 64 C.R. 222, citing the text; Houghton v. Kerr Glass Mfg. Corp. (1968) 261 C.A.2d 530, 537, 68 C.R. 43; Larsen v. Johannes (1970) 7 C.A.3d 491, 500, 86 C.R. 744; Sunniland Fruit v. Verni (1991) 233 C.A.3d 892, 898, 284 C.R. 824 [grower's testimony that he understood that crop advance was payment from corporation under contract to pick, pack and market grapes, rather than loan as stated in agreement, was inadmissible statement of grower's subjective intent]; 9 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §2471.)

Properly applied, this limitation would have compelled a different result in Hansen v. Bear Film Co. (1946) 28 C.2d 154, 168 P.2d 946. A son, acting on legal advice as to the proper procedure, executed a writing transferring "all his right, title and interest" in certain shares of stock to his mother, "for value received." The document further recited that he thereby intended "to divest himself of title ... and vest such title absolutely" in the transferee. Appropriate entries were later made in the corporation books, and the certificates were delivered to the transferee. Held, nevertheless, the "circumstances" and "inferences" therefrom supported the trial judge's determination that the son intended to transfer only the bare legal title to his mother in trust, and to retain for himself the full beneficial ownership. The court said: "Here the written instrument purported only to divest the transferor of title. ... It contained no recital that the transferee was to hold the property for her own benefit, nor did it mention a trust or beneficial interest." (28 C.2d 175.) However, the language used by the transferor could not be interpreted as conveying the bare legal title in trust, and, therefore, the extrinsic evidence was used not to explain but to contradict the unambiguous terms of the delivered instrument.

(2) Distinction: To Explain Meaning of Contract. Statements of intention and even positive promises are admissible to show the meaning of a written contract. (See Masterson v. Sine (1968) 68 C.2d 222, 227, 65 C.R. 545, 436 P.2d 561, infra, §88; Delta Dynamics v. Arioto (1968) 69 C.2d 525, 528, 72 C.R. 785, 446 P.2d 785, infra, §82; Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. G. W. Thomas Drayage & Rigging Co. (1968) 69 C.2d 33, 39, 69 C.R. 561, 442 P.2d 641, infra, §80; Diamond v. Insurance Co. of North America (1968) 267 C.A.2d 415, 418, 72 C.R. 862, infra, §82; Rest.2d, Contracts §212(1), Comment c [noting that contrary rule applies to wills]; 3 Corbin §543 [same]; infra, §§76 et seq., 79 et seq.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Distinction: To Explain Meaning of Contract. See Fischer v. First Int. Bank (2003) 109 C.A.4th 1433, 1449, 1 C.R.3d 162, citing the text [in borrowers' action against bank for breach of loan agreement, parol evidence was admissible to resolve ambiguity as to whether parties to agreement intended to permit cross-collateralization].

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 76

[§ 76] Former Rule: Latent-Patent Distinction.

(1) Parol Evidence May Explain Latent Ambiguity. Although the instrument is clear on its face, evidence may be offered to show that the description of a person or property does not accurately apply to anyone or anything. Extrinsic evidence is necessary and has long been admissible to disclose both the existence of this latent ambiguity and to explain it. (See C.C.P. 1856(g), supra, §61; Estate of Donnellan (1912) 164 C. 14, 17, 127 P. 166; Estate of Dominici (1907) 151 C. 181, 184, 90 P. 448; Estate of Greenwald (1937) 19 C.A.2d 291, 296, 65 P.2d 70; Pacific Indem. Co. v. California Elec. Works, Ltd. (1938) 29 C.A.2d 260, 272, 84 P.2d 313; Blumenthal v. Neider (1960) 183 C.A.2d 419, 421, 6 C.R. 317, citing the text; 9 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§2472, 2474, 2476, 2477; 12 Summary (9th), Wills and Probate, §302 et seq.)

(2) Parol Evidence May Not Explain Patent Ambiguity. A patent ambiguity is one that appears on the face of the instrument. According to an old theory, it could be explained only by other parts of the writing itself, and not by extrinsic evidence. Although this theory is almost universally repudiated, some early California cases, pointing out that the Code distinguishes between patent and latent ambiguities, seem to hold that ordinarily parol evidence is not admissible to explain a patent ambiguity. (See Payne v. Commercial Nat. Bank of Los Angeles (1917) 177 C. 68, 72, 169 P. 1007; Scott v. Woodworth (1917) 34 C.A. 400, 167 P. 543; *Lundin v. [§ 77] Current Rule: No Distinction.

The correct rule would seem to be that in any case, parol evidence may be freely offered to explain an ambiguity, whether latent or patent, and that is what current law provides. (See C.C.P. 1856(g), supra, §61 [does not exclude evidence to explain "an extrinsic ambiguity"]; Estate of Dean (1945) 68 C.A.2d 86, 92, 155 P.2d 901 [inconsistency between caption and body of agreement]; Decter v. Superior Court (1991) 228 C.A.3d 672, 680, 681, 279 C.R. 173, citing the text [extrinsic evidence was admissible to determine whether dealer who sold vehicle to buyer was agent and leasing company was principal in selling of service contract to buyer, even though contract referred to company as "administrator"]; John B. Douglas Furniture of Calif. (1993) 21 C.A.4th 26, 34, 25 C.R.2d 752, 2 Summary (9th), Agency and Employment, Supp., §278 [ambiguity as to broker's entitlement to commission for extension of occupancy by tenant originally procured by him]; 9 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §2473.)

In Von Rohr v. Neely (1946) 76 C.A.2d 713, 173 P.2d 828, a lease was made of premises described by street number, "together with the appurtenances," for use as a lunch room. The lessee claimed that the "appurtenances" included an unoccupied area of parking space for the patrons. Held, evidence offered by lessee of prior and subsequent use of the property as a "drive-in" restaurant was admissible. ## 2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 78

[§ 78] Wills.

(1) Former Rule: Proof of Circumstances Admissible, but Testator's Oral Declarations Excluded. Former Prob.C. 105 permitted explanation of ambiguities by evidence of the circumstances surrounding the execution of the will, the nature and condition of the estate, the testator's relations with his or her family and others, and similar matters. (See Estate of Winbigler (1913) 166 C. 434, 437, 137 P. 1; Estate of Flint (1919) 179 C. 552, 555, 177 P. 451; Estate of Kurtz (1922) 190 C. 146, 149, 210 P. 959 [will made day before marriage; evidence of engagement admissible to show that clause giving $ 1 to any person "who if I died intestate would be entitled to any part of my estate" was intended to include wife and unborn child]; Estate of Wolf (1932) 128 C.A. 305, 308, 17 P.2d 1052 [ungrammatical holographic will; evidence admissible to show that named street and house numbers referred to real property when owned by testatrix]; Estate of Olsen (1935) 9 C.A.2d 374, 381, 50 P.2d 70 [testator of foreign birth, not particularly familiar with English language; "personal property" taken as including real property]; Estate of Hollingsworth (1940) 37 C.A.2d 432, 436, 99 P.2d 599 [will, drawn by experienced draftsman, left legacies to employees "based on salary or wage"; evidence of employment and commissions paid a salesman admissible to prove status as legatee]; Estate of Jones (1961) 55 C.2d 531, 536, 11 C.R. 574, 360 P.2d 70; 12 Summary (9th), Wills and Probate, §250 et seq.)

However, former Prob.C. 105 excluded, with some exceptions, "the oral declarations of the testator as to his intentions." (See 12 Summary (9th), Wills and Probate, §246.)

(2) Criticism and Legislative Abrogation of Exclusionary Rule. "The rule embodied in section 105 excluding the testator's oral declarations is perhaps the last remnant of the old common law policy, now repudiated by the California Supreme Court, which excluded extrinsic evidence in most probate cases on the basis of the omnipotence of the written word. With the demise of this outdated concept, our courts have understandably attempted to circumvent section 105 by creating exceptions and making subtle and often tenuous distinctions." (Estate of Kime (1983) 144 C.A.3d 246, 263, 193 C.R. 718.) The Kime opinion concluded with a recommendation that the Legislature abolish the rule, and the Legislature responded by doing so in its 1983 revision and by renumbering the statutes governing wills and intestate succession. Former Prob.C. 105 was repealed effective January 1, 1985, and new Prob.C. 105 deals with a different subject. (See 12 Summary (9th), Wills and Probate, §5 et seq.) (On admissibility of evidence "contrary to plain meaning" to explain will, see infra, §84.)

CHAPTER VIII - Documentary Evidence

V. PAROL EVIDENCE RULE

C. When Extrinsic Evidence Is Admissible.

1. Evidence To Interpret Integration.

c. Evidence Contrary to Plain Meaning.

1. Former Rule Excluding Parol Evidence.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 79

[§ 79] Former Rule Excluding Parol Evidence.

(1) Statement of Former Rule. Earlier cases followed the rule that, if no ambiguity or uncertainty is asserted, and the writing has a clear meaning on its face, parol evidence is inadmissible to interpret it. The underlying theory was that unless there is some ambiguity or uncertainty there is no need for the extrinsic evidence; the plain meaning of the words should be accepted and not disturbed by evidence showing that they were used in a different sense. (See Barnhart Aircraft v. Preston (1931) 212 C. 19, 23, 297 P. 20; Holliday v. Porter (1934) 136 C.A. 480, 483, 29 P.2d 276; Palm Springs-La Quinta Dev. Co. v. Palm Springs Land & Irr. Co. (1940) 36 C.A.2d 730, 735, 98 P.2d 530; Nourse v. Kovacevich (1941) 42 C.A.2d 769, 771, 109 P.2d 999; Laux v. Freed (1960) 53 C.2d 512, 523, 2 C.R. 265, 348 P.2d 873; William B. Logan & Associates v. Monogram Precision Industries (1960) 184 C.A.2d 12, 15, 7 C.R. 212.)

(2) Analysis and Criticism of Rule. Able critics have attacked the "plain meaning" rule as unsound, for (a) words have no such absolute meaning, but must always derive their sense from the objects to which they refer, and (b) words which have a "plain" ordinary meaning are sometimes used by the parties in a special, technical or local sense. The exclusionary rule is properly applicable only where the intention of the parties with respect to their obligations and rights is clearly stated in the writing, and parol evidence of a contrary intention is offered (see supra, §75). Accordingly, the modern tendency is to hold that evidence is admissible to show the meaning of words used even though no ambiguity is asserted. (See Paley v. Superior Court (1955) 137 C.A.2d 450, 456, 290 P.2d 617; Anderson v. Tahoe Keys (1962) 202 C.A.2d 640, 642, 20 C.R. 891; Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. G. W. Thomas Drayage & Rigging Co. (1968) 69 C.2d 33, 37, 69 C.R. 561, 442 P.2d 641, infra, §80; Estate of Russell (1968) 69 C.2d 200, 209, 70 C.R. 561, 444 P.2d 353, infra, §84; U.C.C. 2202, supra, §74; Rest.2d, Contracts §212, Comment b; 9 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§2461, 2462; 3 Corbin §542; supra, §75.)

(3) Exceptions to Rule. Even where, as in California, the courts were ostensibly committed to the "plain meaning rule," exceptions and qualifications were recognized which robbed it of much of its controlling force:

(a) Parol evidence is always admissible to explain a latent ambiguity, which may exist though the writing is plain on its face. (See supra, §§76, 77.)

(b) Even though the words in an instrument, taken in their ordinary sense, are entirely certain, parol evidence is admissible to show that by a custom or usage they were used in a different sense. (See infra, §85.)

(c) The rule was often ignored in effect by first declaring the language "ambiguous," a relatively simple matter in view of the variety of meanings which legal terminology may have. (See Wachs v. Wachs (1938) 11 C.2d 322, 325, 79 P.2d 1085; Universal Sales Corp. v. California Press Mfg. Co. (1942) 20 C.2d 751, 761, 128 P.2d 665; Wells v. Wells (1946) 74 C.A.2d 449, 456, 169 P.2d 23; Union Oil Co. of Calif. v. Union Sugar Co. (1948) 31 C.2d 300, 306, 188 P.2d 470; Nofziger v. Holman (1964) 61 C.2d 526, 528, 39 C.R. 384, 393 P.2d 696; Hulse v. Juillard Fancy Foods Co. (1964) 61 C.2d 571, 573, 39 C.R. 529, 394 P.2d 65; Connell v. Zaid (1969) 268 C.A.2d 788, 793, 74 C.R. 371.)

CHAPTER VIII - Documentary Evidence

V. PAROL EVIDENCE RULE

C. When Extrinsic Evidence Is Admissible.

1. Evidence To Interpret Integration.
- c. Evidence Contrary to Plain Meaning.
  2. Repudiation of Former Rule.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 80

[§ 80] Repudiation of Former Rule.

In Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. G. W. Thomas Drayage & Rigging Co. (1968) 69 C.2d 33, 69 C.R. 561, 442 P.2d 641, the court made a number of general observations about this confused subject:

(a) A judge who interprets a contract on the basis of its "plain meaning" does so in accordance with the judge's own linguistic education and experience, and under a judicial belief in the possibility of perfect verbal expression. "This belief is a remnant of a primitive faith in the inherent potency and inherent meaning of words." But words "do not have absolute and constant referents," and contractual obligations do not flow from the mere use of certain words. (69 C.2d 38.)

(b) The source of contractual rights and duties is the intention of the parties expressed in the contract, and the judge must ascertain and give effect to this intention by determining what the parties meant by the words they used. (69 C.2d 38.) And, although extrinsic evidence is not admissible to vary the terms, the terms must first be ascertained before it can be determined whether the evidence is offered for a prohibited purpose. (69 C.2d 39.)

(c) Extrinsic evidence is often admitted on the ground that the contract is ambiguous (see supra, §76 et seq.). "This statement of the rule is harmless if it is kept in mind that the ambiguity may be exposed by extrinsic evidence that reveals more than one possible meaning." (69 C.2d 40, footnote 8.)

(d) The correct test of admissibility of extrinsic evidence is not whether the meaning appears plain and unambiguous on the face of the instrument, but whether the evidence is relevant to prove a meaning to which the language is reasonably susceptible. (69 C.2d 37.)

In this case, defendant agreed to remove and replace the cover of plaintiff's steam turbine. The contract provided that defendant would indemnify plaintiff against all loss resulting from "injury to property" connected with the performance. The cover fell and injured the exposed rotor. Plaintiff contended that the indemnity covered liability for injury to plaintiff's own property. The trial judge thought this was the "plain meaning" of the language, and excluded defendant's offer of evidence of admissions of plaintiff's agents, defendant's conduct under similar contracts, and other proof that the parties intended to cover injury to property of third parties only. Held, this was error. The extrinsic evidence was admissible to show that the indemnity clause was reasonably susceptible of the restricted meaning urged by defendant, and, because this was so, it was also admissible to show that the clause did have that meaning. (69 C.2d 40.) (See 58 Cal. L. Rev. 196; 31 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 557, 576 [discussing Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. and federal case criticizing its rejection of plain meaning rule]; 40 A.L.R.3d 1384 [use of extrinsic evidence to establish and clarify ambiguities]; on current approach applied to other contracts, see infra, §§81, 82; on application to deeds, see infra, §83; on application to wills, see infra, §84; for statutory statement of this approach, see C.C.P. 1856(c), infra, §85, and C.C.P. 1856(g), supra, §61.)

V. PAROL EVIDENCE RULE

C. When Extrinsic Evidence Is Admissible.

1. Evidence To Interpret Integration.
- c. Evidence Contrary to Plain Meaning.
3. Illustrations of Current Approach.
- aa. Parol Evidence To Explain Settlement Agreement.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 81

[§ 81] Parol Evidence To Explain Settlement Agreement.

(1) Marriage Settlement Agreement. Hynum v. First Nat. Bank of San Diego (1968) 267 C.A.2d 540, 73 C.R. 507, follows Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. G. W. Thomas Drayage & Rigging Co. (1968) 69 C.2d 33, 69 C.R. 561, 442 P.2d 641, supra, §80, but is actually supportable on the long established ambiguity exception. Plaintiff and his wife were divorced, and a division of community property was made in which she received a $ 150,000 promissory note. But to avoid discharge in bankruptcy, the note expressly provided that it was given "as alimony." On the wife's death, plaintiff sought a declaration that it was alimony and terminated on her death. Held, judgment for defendant executor affirmed. Evidence of the circumstances surrounding the making showed that the parties intended it as part of a property settlement. The court pointed out that the instrument was uncertain on its face: It is unusual to express an alimony agreement in the form of a promissory note; the instrument included a number of matters not ordinarily incident to pure alimony, e.g., interest, acceleration on default, attorney fees and security; and it referred to the divorce action, thus inviting examination of the proceedings to determine the intention of the parties in using the note form. (267 C.A.2d 544.)

In re Marriage of Benson (1985) 171 C.A.3d 907, 217 C.R. 589, held that when a marital settlement agreement is incorporated into a judgment, it no longer exists as an independent contract, and parol evidence concerning the intentions of litigants is of no use in interpretation of a court's judgment. (171 C.A.3d 912.)

In re Marriage of Trearse (1987) 195 C.A.3d 1189, 241 C.R. 257, takes the opposite position:

"We respectfully disagree with Benson's conclusion that parol or extrinsic evidence is categorically inadmissible to determine the intentions of the parties to a marital settlement agreement incorporated in a judgment of dissolution of marriage." Relevant cases either appear to sanction the introduction of extrinsic evidence or are decided narrowly on the ground that former C.C. 4811(b) (now Family C. 3590 and 3591) requires that nonmodifiability of support be set forth "specifically" in writing. "There is no legal ground upon which to jettison the long history of California law allowing the courts to receive extrinsic evidence to ascertain the intent of the parties to a marital settlement agreement even where it is incorporated and merged in a judgment." (195 C.A.3d 1194.)

The opinion adds that Benson's broad prohibition leaves trial courts without a rational way to resolve ambiguity in their judgments. Unless admission of extrinsic evidence is precluded by a statute, such as former C.C. 4811, "such evidence should be admissible to ascertain the intent of an agreed interlocutory judgment of dissolution of marriage to the same extent such evidence would be admissible to ascertain the meaning of any other written agreement." (195 C.A.3d 1194.)

(2) Other Settlement Agreements. Winet v. Price (1992) 4 C.A.4th 1159, 6 C.R.2d 554, involved the scope of a general release-of-claims provision contained in a settlement agreement between defendant attorney and plaintiff client. Held, the trial court properly granted summary judgment in favor of defendant, despite parol evidence offered by plaintiff to show that he had an intent contrary to the literal meaning of the words of the release (see supra, §75). The issue of whether a specific later-discovered claim was intended to be covered by a broad release cannot always be made a disputable issue of fact. A general release may not necessarily be avoided merely by the releasor testifying that he or she was unaware of a claim and did not intend to waive the right to pursue that claim. The parties to the provision at issue declared their intention in three distinct places in the agreement to release each other from all claims. Parol evidence is not admissible to flatly contradict the express terms of an agreement, and plaintiff sought to prove that his release of unknown or unsuspected claims was not intended to include those claims. (4 C.A.4th 1165, 1167.) (See General Motors Corp. v. Superior Court (1993) 12 C.A.4th 435, 441, 15 C.R.2d 622, citing the text [following Winet]; but see Neverkovec v. Fredericks (1999) 74 C.A.4th 337, 349, 87 C.R.2d 356, 5 Summary (9th), Torts, Supp., §59 [extrinsic evidence was admissible to explain ambiguous clause of general release and to determine whether parties intended release to cover third party].)

In Dewart v. Berkeley Forge & Tool (1992) 9 C.A.4th 1087, 1094, 11 C.R.2d 865, defendants claimed that under the express terms of their settlement agreement in a personal injury action, they were entitled to an offset for an advance payment they made to plaintiff. Held, the agreement was also reasonably susceptible to plaintiff's interpretation that the advance had been factored into the settlement, and thus parol evidence was admissible to prove that meaning. (9 C.A.4th 1094.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Other Settlement Agreements. See Butler v. The Vons Cos. (2006) 140 C.A.4th 943, 949, 45 C.R.3d 151 [where employee, employer, and union signed "Compromise and Release Settlement Agreement" following resolution of altercation between employee and fellow employee, language included in waiver was ambiguous as to whether it was intended to extend to other claims by employee, and thus when employee brought new, unrelated claim against employer, extrinsic evidence was admissible on this issue]. *Neverkovec v. ##### 3. Illustrations of Current Approach.

bb. Parol Evidence To Explain Other Contract.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 82

[§ 82] Parol Evidence To Explain Other Contract.

(1) Extrinsic Evidence Admissible. In the following cases, the rule of Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. G. W. Thomas Drayage & Rigging Co. (1968) 69 C.2d 33, 69 C.R. 561, 442 P.2d 641, supra, §80, was applied to hold that parol evidence was admissible to explain contract language:

In Delta Dynamics v. Arioto (1968) 69 C.2d 525, 72 C.R. 785, 446 P.2d 785, plaintiff Delta manufactured a device. It entered into a written contract with defendant Pixey, a partnership, under which Pixey was appointed exclusive distributor for the United States for 5 years with a renewal option. Pixey promised to sell not less than 50,000 units within 1 year, and, in the event of its failure to do so, "this agreement shall be subject to termination" by Delta, on 30 days' notice. Pixey failed to meet the quota by 30,000. Delta terminated and also brought this action for damages. The judge interpreted the contract as requiring Pixey to buy 50,000 the first year, excluding extrinsic evidence offered to show that termination was the exclusive remedy. Held, reversed. The termination clause may have been included to spell out a condition of Delta's excuse from its own performance, or to set forth an exclusive remedy, or for both purposes; thus, it was susceptible of the meaning urged by Pixey, and the extrinsic evidence should have been considered in determining the meaning. (69 C.2d 528.)

In Diamond v. Insurance Co. of North America (1968) 267 C.A.2d 415, 72 C.R. 862, plaintiff had a fire insurance policy providing for payment of "actual cash value" of the loss. He obtained an endorsement giving him the election of receiving, in addition, the further amount of replacement cost, but with an express proviso that the insurer should not be liable unless the property was actually repaired or replaced within a reasonable time after the loss. Plaintiff suffered a loss and was paid the actual cash value. He then sued for the additional amount of replacement cost, though he did not plead actual replacement. The trial judge, following the plain meaning of the contractual language, gave defendant judgment on demurrer. Held, reversed. Plaintiff had alleged that by the endorsements, the parties intended for plaintiff to recover replacement cost without replacement. Thus, despite the appearance of a clear meaning to the judge, extrinsic evidence was admissible where relevant to prove a meaning to which the language was reasonably susceptible. (267 C.A.2d 419.)

Connell v. Zaid (1969) 268 C.A.2d 788, 791, 74 C.R. 371 [refinancing clause in trust deed purporting to be conventional agreement to subordinate encumbrances could also be interpreted as agreement to consolidate or substitute encumbrances; parol evidence admissible to resolve ambiguity].

In Warner Const. Corp. v. Los Angeles (1970) 2 C.3d 285, 85 C.R. 444, 466 P.2d 996, plaintiff sued defendant city for breach of warranty and fraudulent concealment in connection with a construction contract. Held, plaintiff was entitled to offer extrinsic evidence that certain general notes in the plans and specifications prohibited rotary mud drilling of holes required on the job without a change order, where the language of the notes was reasonably susceptible of that meaning. (2 C.3d 293.)

Southern Pac. Land Co. v. Westlake Farms (1987) 188 C.A.3d 807, 815, 233 C.R. 794; Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. Zuckerman (1987) 189 C.A.3d 1113, 1141, 234 C.R. 630, citing the text [refusal to admit extrinsic evidence in disputes involving interpretation of oil and gas leases was reversible error].

Wallis v. Farmers Group (1990) 220 C.A.3d 718, 731, 269 C.R. 299 [extrinsic evidence was admissible to ascertain whether integrated provision permitting termination of agency on 3 months' notice required showing of good cause for termination; but see criticism infra, this section].

Southern Calif. Edison Co. v. Superior Court (1995) 37 C.A.4th 839, 848, 851, 44 C.R.2d 227, 1 Summary (9th), Contracts, Supp., §689 [extrinsic evidence was admissible to determine which time period governed long-term electricity contracts under which rate varied depending on period].

Southern Pac. Trans. Co. v. Santa Fe Pac. Pipelines (1999) 74 C.A.4th 1232, 1241, 88 C.R.2d 777 [failure to admit extrinsic evidence of proper formula for calculating rent payable for hydrocarbon pipeline easements was reversible error].

(2) Parol Evidence Excluded. In the following cases, courts held that parol evidence was not admissible to explain contract language:

In Blumenfeld v. R.H. Macy & Co. (1979) 92 C.A.3d 38, 45, 154 C.R. 652, plaintiff, the lessee of a shopping center, sued defendants--the owner and the lessor of the shopping center--seeking a determination that plaintiff had not assigned to defendant lessor, under a written contract calling for defendant lessor to purchase plaintiff's leasehold interest, any right of action that plaintiff might have had against defendant owner for breach of an agreement to sublease space in the shopping center. Held, the terms of the contract were not reasonably susceptible to plaintiff's interpretation, and thus extrinsic evidence was not admissible for that purpose. (92 C.A.3d 45.)

Curry v. Moody (1995) 40 C.A.4th 1547, 1555, 48 C.R.2d 627 [trial judge erred in admitting extrinsic evidence on question whether promissory note required payment of compound interest from date of inception of loan; note was not reasonably susceptible of that interpretation, and, in any case, "extrinsic evidence of the parties' intent is not admissible to show that a loan bears compound interest"].

Bionghi v. Metropolitan Water Dist. of Southern Calif. (1999) 70 C.A.4th 1358, 1363, 83 C.R.2d 388 [parol evidence was not admissible to show that employment contract was terminable only for good cause, where contract was integrated and unambiguously provided for termination only on 30 days' notice, with or without cause; disagreeing with Wallis v. Farmers Group, supra].

Jackson* (2002) 97 C.A.4th 377, 384, 385, 118 C.R.2d 349 [indemnity agreement unambiguously covered any bond executed and delivered by indemnitee; as it was not susceptible to interpretation that it did not apply to bonds incurred in connection with certain tracts of land, parol evidence to that effect was inadmissible]; Founding Members of the Newport Beach Country Club v. Newport Beach Country Club (2003) 109 C.A.4th 944, 960, 135 C.R.2d 505 [where club's regulations granted "right of first offer" to member organization "then in existence," and where club agreed to sell stock to third party, letter written by club officers after club was founded, stating that founding members had right of first offer, was not admissible in founding members' breach of contract action; regulations were not susceptible of interpretation that founding members, who, at time of sale, had not formed organization, enjoyed right of first offer]; 250 L.L.C. v. PhotoPoint Corp. (USA) (2005) 131 C.A.4th 703, 726, 32 C.R.3d 296 [in consolidated actions arising from dispute between lessor and lessee, trial judge properly excluded parol evidence concerning whether security deposit could be applied against future as well as past due rent, where lease clearly stated that deposit could be used in accordance with C.C. 1950.7 to satisfy past due rent; these words could not be taken to refer to future rent]; Wagner v. Columbia Pictures Industries (2007) 146 C.A.4th 586, 592, 52 C.R.3d 898 [in action alleging actor was entitled to profits from motion pictures based on television series in which he starred, evidence of history of negotiations between actor and studio was not admissible to show actor's entitlement to profits "from all sources" without limitation, where it directly contradicted final agreement between parties, which entitled actor to share only in profits from exhibition of photoplays of original series and from exploitation of "ancillary, music and subsidiary rights in connection therewith"].

V. PAROL EVIDENCE RULE

C. When Extrinsic Evidence Is Admissible.

1. Evidence To Interpret Integration.
- c. Evidence Contrary to Plain Meaning.
3. Illustrations of Current Approach.
- cc. Parol Evidence To Explain Deed.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 83

[§ 83] Parol Evidence To Explain Deed.

(1) Parol Evidence Admissible. Where otherwise proper, parol evidence is admissible to explain the terms of a deed. (See Masterson v. Sine (1968) 68 C.2d 222, 228, 65 C.R. 545, 436 P.2d 561, infra, §88 [option in grant deed was meant to be personal in nature]; Continental Baking Co. v. Katz (1968) 68 C.2d 512, 521, 67 C.R. 761, 439 P.2d 889 [easement was intended to be appurtenant to granted parcel and to another parcel owned by grantee]; Murphy Slough Assn. v. Avila (1972) 27 C.A.3d 649, 653, 655, 104 C.R. 136; Scruby v. Vintage Grapevine (1995) 37 C.A.4th 697, 705, 43 C.R.2d 810 [easement granted owner of servient tenement right to place improvements on easement]; 46 Proof of Facts 2d 695 [Intent of Parties to Ambiguous Deed].)

In Murphy Slough Assn. v. Avila, supra, an unincorporated association of water users contended that the disputed deed was clear and unambiguous on its face and conveyed a clear title, resulting in defendant landowners' loss of riparian rights. The trial court admitted extrinsic evidence which showed that the language of the deed was susceptible to an interpretation that the interest conveyed was a right of way rather than a fee interest. Under that interpretation, the deed neither conveyed a riparian interest to the grantee nor severed riparian rights from the grantors' remaining lands. Held, extrinsic evidence and the deed itself properly supported the trial court's judgment. (27 C.A.3d 658.)

(2) Exceptions. The foregoing rule is subject to a substantive exception where a deed is made without restrictions or reference to any recorded declaration of restrictions. Under the rule of Werner v. Graham (1919) 181 C. 174, 184, 183 P. 945, 4 Summary (9th), Real Property, §500, extrinsic evidence cannot be admitted to establish such restrictions. Masterson v. Sine, supra, did not impliedly overrule Werner. The Werner holding was based on the statute of frauds as well as the parol evidence rule and is supported by practical considerations involving the recording statutes. (Riley v. Bear Creek Planning Committee (1976) 17 C.3d 500, 511, 131 C.R. 381, 551 P.2d 1213, 4 Summary (9th), Real Property, §499; see 65 Cal. L. Rev. 438.)

A similar view has been expressed where the issue is whether language in a deed constitutes a condition subsequent giving the grantor a right of reentry for breach. In Springmeyer v. South Lake Tahoe (1982) 132 C.A.3d 375, 381, 183 C.R. 43, the court said that in such cases, the law requires a clear expression of intent, and extrinsic evidence is not admissible to resolve a latent ambiguity. (132 C.A.3d 381.)

In contrast, Mason v. Superior Court (1985) 163 C.A.3d 989, 210 C.R. 63, involving a patent ambiguity, states that the question "must be resolved and can only be resolved on the basis of evidence of what the parties said, both orally and in writing, and from evidence of the circumstances surrounding the conveyance." (163 C.A.3d 999.) (On evidence to explain latent and patent ambiguities, see supra, §§76, 77.)

CHAPTER VIII - Documentary Evidence

V. PAROL EVIDENCE RULE

C. When Extrinsic Evidence Is Admissible.

1. Evidence To Interpret Integration.

d. Evidence of Dealing, Usage, or Performance.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 85

[§ 85] Evidence of Dealing, Usage, or Performance.

(1) Case Law. Many cases hold that, though the words in an instrument, taken in their ordinary sense, are entirely certain, parol evidence is admissible to show that by a custom or usage they were used in a different sense. (See Ermolieff v. R.K.O. Radio Pictures (1942) 19 C.2d 543, 550, 122 P.2d 3 [evidence admissible that words "United Kingdom" in a moving picture distribution contract, by usage in the industry, include Eire]; Body-Steffner Co. v. Flotill Products (1944) 63 C.A.2d 555, 558, 147 P.2d 84; Beneficial Fire & Cas. Ins. Co. v. Kurt Hitke & Co. (1956) 46 C.2d 517, 524, 297 P.2d 428; Paramount Television Productions v. Bill Derman Productions (1968) 258 C.A.2d 1, 10, 65 C.R. 473; Hayter Trucking v. Shell Western E & P (1993) 18 C.A.4th 1, 20, 21, 22 C.R.2d 229 [evidence of custom or usage was admissible to supplement termination provisions of service contract]; 9 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§2463, 2464; 3 Corbin §555 et seq.; 30 Cal. L. Rev. 679; 1 Summary (9th), Contracts, §696.)

(2) Codification. C.C.P. 1856(c), comparable to U.C.C. 2202(a) (supra, §60), states this rule in expanded form: It permits explanation or supplementation of a final agreement by "course of dealing or usage of trade or by course of performance." (See supra, §61.)

The Law Revision Commission comments as follows: "Such writings are to be read on the assumption that the course of prior dealings between the parties and the usages of trade were taken for granted when the document was phrased. Unless carefully negated, they have become an element of the meaning of the words used. Similarly, the course of actual performance by the parties is considered the best indication of what the parties intended the writing to mean. Subdivision (c) thus definitely rejects (1) the premise that the language used has the meaning attributable to such language by rules of construction existing in the law rather than the meaning which arises out of the context in which it was used and (2) the requirement that a condition precedent to the admissibility of the type of evidence specified in the subdivision is an original determination that the language used is ambiguous. ... It is expected that the courts will look to the definitions in Commercial Code Sections 1205 and 2208 for guidance in interpreting the meaning of the terms 'course of dealing,' 'usage of trade,' and 'course of performance.' "

(3) Second Restatement of Contracts. The Second Restatement of Contracts also follows the Commercial Code definition (U.C.C. 1205) and rule (U.C.C. 2202). (See Rest.2d, Contracts §219 [Usage]; §220 [Usage Relevant to Interpretation]; §221 [Usage Supplementing an Agreement]; §222 [Usage of Trade]; §223 [Course of Dealing].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Case Law. See Wolf v. Superior Court (2004) 114 C.A.4th 1343, 1358, 8 C.R.3d 649 [in action by author against entertainment company to recover royalties allegedly owed to him, trial judge erred in rejecting extrinsic evidence and in concluding "gross receipts," as used in parties' contract, was not reasonably susceptible to plaintiff's interpretation that it included noncash consideration; plaintiff's extrinsic evidence of trade usage exposed latent ambiguity in contract language and presented interpretation to which term was reasonably susceptible].

Cross-Reference: 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §755.

(2) Codification. U.C.C. 1205 and 2208, on course of dealing, usage of trade, and course of performance, were repealed and replaced by U.C.C. 1303 in 2006.(3) Second Restatement of Contracts. U.C.C. 1205 was repealed and replaced by U.C.C. 1303 in 2006.

CHAPTER VIII - Documentary Evidence

V. PAROL EVIDENCE RULE

C. When Extrinsic Evidence Is Admissible.

2. Evidence of Collateral Agreement.

a. Consistent Collateral Agreement.

1. Nature of Exception.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 86

[§ 86] Nature of Exception.

(1) In General. An apparent exception, though in accord with the purposes of the rule, is that a prior or contemporaneous collateral oral agreement may sometimes be shown where it is not inconsistent with the terms of the integration, even though it relates to the same subject matter. (See C.C.P. 1856(b), supra, §61; U.C.C. 2202, supra, §60; Whittier v. Home Savings Bank of Los Angeles (1911) 161 C. 311, 315, 119 P. 92; Greathouse v. Riverside Cement Co. (1938) 29 C.A.2d 588, 592, 85 P.2d 136; American Industrial Sales Corp. v. Airscope (1955) 44 C.2d 393, 397, 282 P.2d 504; Simmons v. California Institute of Technology (1949) 34 C.2d 264, 274, 209 P.2d 581 [determinative question is "whether the writing was intended to cover a certain subject of negotiation; for if it was not, then the writing does not embody the transaction on that subject"]; Crumley v. Walter M. Ballard Corp. (1950) 100 C.A.2d 698, 703, 224 P.2d 455; Graddon v. Knight (1956) 138 C.A.2d 577, 580, 292 P.2d 632; Mangini v. Wolfschmidt, Ltd. (1958) 165 C.A.2d 192, 198, 331 P.2d 728; Pollyanna Homes v. Berney (1961) 56 C.2d 676, 679, 16 C.R. 345, 365 P.2d 401; Amco Plastic Pipe Co. v. Jet Specialties Co. (1961) 194 C.A.2d 32, 36, 14 C.R. 712; Carruth v. Madera (1965) 233 C.A.2d 688, 699, 43 C.R. 855; Masterson v. Sine (1968) 68 C.2d 222, 227, 65 C.R. 545, 436 P.2d 561, infra, §88; Skone v. Quanco Farms (1968) 261 C.A.2d 237, 243, 68 C.R. 26, citing the text; 9 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §2442; 3 Corbin §§583, 584, 594; 11 Williston 4th, §33:23 et seq.; 60 A.L.R.2d 1135 [applicability of parol evidence rule to agreement between stockbroker and customer]; 85 A.L.R.2d 1331 [admissibility of oral agreement as to duration of employment or agency where written contract is silent].)

(2) Second Restatement of Contracts View. The Second Restatement of Contracts makes evidence of "a consistent additional term" admissible unless the court finds that the agreement was "completely integrated." (Rest.2d, Contracts §216(1).) And the agreement is not completely integrated if the writing "omits a consistent additional agreed term" which is "(a) agreed to for separate consideration, or (b) such a term as in the circumstances might naturally be omitted from the writing." (Rest.2d, Contracts §216(2).)

The Restatement conditions are separate and independent factors; i.e., either a separate consideration or a kind of agreement that might naturally be made separately satisfies the requirement. (See Birsner v. Bolles (1971) 20 C.A.3d 635, 638, 97 C.R. 846.)

CHAPTER VIII - Documentary Evidence

V. PAROL EVIDENCE RULE

C. When Extrinsic Evidence Is Admissible.

2. Evidence of Collateral Agreement.

a. Consistent Collateral Agreement.

2. Illustrations.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 87

[§ 87] Illustrations.

In Simmons v. California Institute of Technology (1949) 34 C.2d 264, 209 P.2d 581, a written contract between plaintiff inventor and defendant Institute provided that royalties received from a license of plaintiff's invention should be paid to the Institute. Plaintiff sued to rescind, offering evidence that the Institute's agent had falsely promised that the royalties would be used by the Institute for research in his particular field. Held, the extrinsic evidence was admissible. If the false promise had conflicted with the written terms the evidence would have been excluded (infra, §98, and see dissent, 34 C.2d 291). The court held, however, that it did not contradict the terms of the writing, for the writing dealt with the form of payment (to the Institute), while the evidence related to the use of the money. (34 C.2d 274.) (See American Industrial Sales Corp. v. Airscope (1955) 44 C.2d 393, 397, 282 P.2d 504 [contract silent on place of payment, crucial on right of plaintiff to attach].)

In Graddon v. Knight (1956) 138 C.A.2d 577, 292 P.2d 632, a mortgaged and uninsured home was destroyed by fire. The mortgage contained the usual provision obligating the mortgagor to procure fire insurance. The trial judge, however, allowed the mortgagor to introduce parol evidence of a typical contemporaneous oral agreement of the mortgagee-bank to act as the mortgagor's agent to obtain the insurance. Held, this was proper; there was no inconsistency in the one agreement imposing the obligation and the other delegating the duty to perform the physical act; i.e., the mortgage did not require the mortgagor personally to procure the insurance. (138 C.A.2d 580.)

In Schmidt v. Cain (1928) 95 C.A. 378, 272 P. 803, a contract to manufacture and sell contained the words "in accordance with ... verbal understanding," and was silent on the question of warranty. Held, a parol warranty could be shown. Because the general rule is that where the contract is silent on express warranties, they are deemed intentionally excluded, this case seems to rest more properly on the reference to a "verbal understanding," and therefore is a case of no integration (supra, §73). (95 C.A. 380.)

In Mangini v. Wolfschmidt, Ltd. (1958) 165 C.A.2d 192, 331 P.2d 728, plaintiff orally agreed to represent defendant liquor manufacturer exclusively in certain California territory for a specified commission. The oral agreement was confirmed by a letter from defendant which was silent on duration, and, less than a year later, defendant attempted to terminate. Plaintiff, in this action for damages, sought to prove an oral understanding that at least 3 years would be necessary to build up the desired sales volume, and that this period was assumed to be the minimum duration. Held, the evidence was admissible. (165 C.A.2d 198.) (See 85 A.L.R.2d 1269 [oral agreement as to specific time for performance]; 85 A.L.R.2d 1331 [oral agreement to show duration of employment or agency]; 84 A.L.R.2d 1324 [oral limitation on cost of structure where builder has cost-plus-fee construction contract].)

CHAPTER VIII - Documentary Evidence

V. PAROL EVIDENCE RULE

C. When Extrinsic Evidence Is Admissible.

2. Evidence of Collateral Agreement.

b. Collateral Agreement Contrary to Implied Term.

1. Nature of Exception.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 88

[§ 88] Nature of Exception.

Masterson v. Sine (1968) 68 C.2d 222, 65 C.R. 545, 436 P.2d 561, went far beyond prior decisions in admitting evidence of an oral collateral agreement contrary to an implied term of the integration (see supra, §65).

Dallas Masterson and his wife owned a ranch as tenants in common. They conveyed it to Dallas' sister and her husband (Mr. and Mrs. Sine) by grant deed, reserving an option in the grantors to purchase for the same consideration plus the depreciation value of improvements made by the grantees. Dallas became bankrupt, and his trustee and his wife sought declaratory relief to establish their right to enforce the option, relying on the rule that such an interest is assignable by law unless expressly made unassignable (see 1 Summary (9th), Contracts, §925). Defendants offered extrinsic evidence to show that the parties wanted the property kept in the Masterson family and that the option was therefore personal to the grantors. This evidence, consisting of the testimony of Dallas himself, was excluded. Held, this was reversible error.

(a) Test for determining admissibility of collateral agreement. In determining whether a writing is an integration, the appearance of completeness on the face of the document (supra, §68) is not controlling. (68 C.2d 226.) Parol evidence should be excluded only when the fact finder is likely to be misled; the Contracts Restatement (Rest.2d, Contracts §240(1)(b)) suggests that proof of a collateral agreement should be admitted if it is one which "might naturally be made as a separate agreement" by parties so situated. (68 C.2d 227.) Applying this test, the evidence was admissible: It is difficult to accommodate the formal structure of a deed to collateral agreements; the statement of a reserved option might have been placed there solely to preserve the grantors' rights against possible future purchasers; this function would be served without any mention of an agreement to make the option personal; and there was no indication that the parties to this family transaction had any warning of the disadvantages of failing to put the entire agreement in the deed. (68 C.2d 228.)

(b) Collateral agreement contrary to term implied by law. Plaintiffs relied on cases holding that parol evidence cannot be admitted to prove a collateral agreement contrary to a term which the law presumes in the absence of agreement (see supra, §68). But these cases deal with writings found to be complete integrations, thus merely applying the basic parol evidence rule. (68 C.2d 229, footnote 3.) In the absence of statute, parties may expressly agree that a contract right is personal and nontransferable; and even without express agreement an intent to that effect may be effectuated if the circumstances indicate that performance by a substituted person would be different from that contracted for. (68 C.2d 230.)

The lengthy dissenting opinion restates the origin and development of the parol evidence rule and strikes hard at the weak point of the main opinion--its lack of authority or reasoning to support the conclusion that a collateral agreement may be proved contrary to a term implied by law. It also points out that the transaction was carried out through a title company on escrow instructions without any indication that the option was intended to be personal, and warns of the dangers involved in the result approved here: The bankrupt was allowed, by his own testimony, to deprive his creditors of an asset. (68 C.2d 231.) (See 56 Cal. L. Rev. 1671; for the revised statute, see C.C.P. 1856(b), supra, §61.)

Masterson v. Sine (1968) 68 C.2d 222, 65 C.R. 545, 436 P.2d 561, supra, §88, has been followed in a number of cases:

Birsner v. Bolles (1971) 20 C.A.3d 635, 637, 638, 97 C.R. 846 [promissory note between family members; parol evidence admissible to show collateral agreement for conditional payment; note was formal document that did not lend itself to express inclusion of collateral agreement].

Brawthen v. H & R Block (1972) 28 C.A.3d 131, 138, 104 C.R. 486 [written employment agreement had uncertain termination provision; oral agreement as to nontermination if manager did good job might naturally be made as separate agreement].

In Bank of Beverly Hills v. Catain (1982) 128 C.A.3d 28, 180 C.R. 67, defendants, about to engage in a new business, borrowed $ 40,000 from plaintiff bank, and executed a promissory note for payment on demand or on September 20. On that date, the note was unpaid and plaintiff sued to collect. Defendants alleged that plaintiff had represented that on maturity, a quarterly or monthly repayment schedule would be adopted and the terms of the note renegotiated. In summary judgment proceedings brought by plaintiff, defendants relied on the declaration of D, formerly Chairman of the Board and Chief Loan Officer of the bank, and on a "Loan Approval Sheet" in the bank's files. D's declaration confirmed defendants' allegation of a repayment agreement, stated that it followed normal, customary and generally accepted practices in the banking industry under the circumstances involved, and added D's opinion that the agreement would have been carried out had his association with the bank not been terminated. The "Loan Approval Sheet" likewise referred to a quarterly repayment program. The trial court rejected this evidence and granted summary judgment. Held, reversed; the proffered evidence came within the twin-pronged test of Masterson v. Sine.

(a) The collateral agreement was one that might naturally be made in a separate agreement by the parties: a bank was lending $ 40,000 to set up a new business, and D's declaration indicated that it would be entirely appropriate to have future payment terms set forth in a separate agreement. (128 C.A.3d 37.)

(b) The collateral agreement was not of a type that would certainly have been included in the written instrument: D's declaration indicated that the agreement would be appropriately left to the bank's records, for it could impair negotiability of a note if it was disclosed in the note itself. (128 C.A.3d 37.)

In Esbensen v. Userware Int. (1992) 11 C.A.4th 631, 14 C.R.2d 93, a wrongful termination action, plaintiff sought to introduce parol evidence of oral assurances that plaintiff's employment contract would be perpetually renewed as long as plaintiff performed his job competently. The written contract itself provided for a term of 1 year. The trial judge found that the written contract was an integrated 1-year agreement and that plaintiff was therefore precluded from introducing parol evidence relating to continued employment based on his performing capably. Held, the parol evidence was admissible.

(a) The written contract, which did not state that it constituted the complete agreement and was silent as to grounds for termination, was only partially integrated. "Because it is only by implication that we can determine what the parties intended with regard to the proper bases for termination, that reasoning process ought to be informed by whatever relevant extrinsic evidence exists which casts light on the parties' intent." (11 C.A.4th 638.)

(b) The 1-year term provision must have had some meaning, but there were possible reasons for its inclusion other than simply to allow for plaintiff's termination at the end of the year for any reason. If the written contract was supplemented by an oral understanding that employment would be continued absent good cause, then the 1-year term might merely reflect the interval between salary reviews. The failure of the contract to specify grounds might imply that any reason for termination was acceptable. However, "the fact that something is presumed or implied in the absence of an express statement to the contrary does not preclude a party to an incomplete written contract from attempting to demonstrate an express oral agreement contrary to the term which would otherwise be presumed or implied." (11 C.A.4th 640.)

CHAPTER VIII - Documentary Evidence

V. PAROL EVIDENCE RULE

C. When Extrinsic Evidence Is Admissible.

2. Evidence of Collateral Agreement.

c. Distinction: Unnatural Collateral Agreement.

1. Nature of Distinction.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 90

[§ 90] Nature of Distinction.

Masterson v. Sine (1968) 68 C.2d 222, 65 C.R. 545, 436 P.2d 561, supra, §88, allowed proof of a collateral agreement which might "naturally" have been made as a separate agreement in connection with the basic written understanding. In Salyer Grain & Milling Co. v. Henson (1970) 13 C.A.3d 493, 91 C.R. 847, the court held that extrinsic evidence of an "unnatural" collateral agreement was inadmissible.

Plaintiff farming company entered into a written agreement with defendant trucker for defendant to haul grain in semi-trailers furnished by plaintiff. The agreement provided that defendant was to maintain insurance coverage for liability and workers' compensation, but was silent on insurance for damage to the trailers, their cargo or loss of their use, and also made no mention of defendant's liability or exculpation from liability for damages caused by his employees' negligence. The agreement expired in 1 year, and was extended for another year with a recital that the terms and conditions remained unchanged.

The trailer and its cargo were damaged through the negligence of defendant's employee. In plaintiff's action for damages, defendant offered evidence of conversations with plaintiff's president before the original agreement was completed and again before the extension was executed. In these conversations, the parties discussed responsibility for collision damage, and the president stated that plaintiff assumed responsibility for damage to the trailers and would continue to bear the cost of insurance. Held, the evidence was properly excluded.

(a) Cases in which there is an ambiguity in the instrument or a clause susceptible of more than one interpretation (see Delta Dynamics v. Arioto (1968) 69 C.2d 525, 72 C.R. 785, 446 P.2d 785, supra, §82), or where there is a necessary missing term (see Consolidated Theatres v. Theatrical Stage Employees Union, Local 16 (1968) 69 C.2d 713, 724, 73 C.R. 213, 447 P.2d 325), are distinguishable. The present case deals with a purported agreement separate from or additional to the original one. The basic question, therefore, is "whether the written agreement was intended at the time of its execution by the parties to be the whole of their agreement, integrating all previous agreements and negotiations." (13 C.A.3d 499, footnote 4.)

(b) Substantial evidence indicated that the written extension agreement was integrated: The parties dealt at arm's length and were experienced businessmen presumed to know the effect of written agreements; the alleged oral agreements came up in conversations before execution of both the original and the extension agreement, so the parties had two opportunities to include the oral discussions if they were meant as binding agreements; even though the original agreement was filed with the Public Utilities Commission and used as a basis for rate approval, risk of loss (which affects rates) was not mentioned in the filed data; no evidence about loss of cargo or loss of use was offered, despite the fact that these were risks as obvious as damage to the trailers and that it would be illogical to make an agreement about one risk and not the others. (13 C.A.3d 501.) In addition, the merger clause (see supra, §§70, 71), reasonably construed, indicated an absence of antecedent or intervening collateral agreements. (13 C.A.3d 501.)

(c) An agreement about collision insurance would not naturally have been made in a collateral oral agreement, because the written agreements "carefully provided for liability insurance in specified amounts and for workmen's compensation insurance and for the furnishing of certificates in connection therewith." Insurance was thus a subject treated in detail in the written agreements. It would have been unnatural for the parties to have had a separate agreement with regard to one particular type of insurance and one particular risk of loss, omitting other obvious risks such as cargo insurance. (13 C.A.3d 502.)

2. Evidence of Collateral Agreement.

c. Distinction: Unnatural Collateral Agreement.

2. Illustrations.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 91

[§ 91] Illustrations.

The following cases have followed the rule of Salyer Grain & Milling Co. v. Henson (1970) 13 C.A.3d 493, 91 C.R. 847, supra, §90:

American Nat. Ins. Co. v. Continental Parking Corp. (1974) 42 C.A.3d 260, 116 C.R. 801, upheld the exclusion of defendant lessee's offer to prove a collateral agreement by the lessor to construct an office building on top of a leased garage and to renegotiate or terminate the lease if revenues dropped below previous levels. The court said that the alleged collateral agreement "first, totally contradicted the written lease; second, dealt with a matter on which the lease was explicit--the effect of loss of business on the lease; third, 'would certainly have been included in the document itself'--since that document on its face, imposes an ironclad obligation on defendant for 25 years; and, finally, for the same reason, would not 'naturally be made as a separate agreement,' since it leaves nothing of the pertinent clauses of the written agreement." (42 C.A.3d 266.)

Mobil Oil Corp. v. Handley (1978) 76 C.A.3d 956, 962, 143 C.R. 321 [(renewal provisions of lease would almost inevitably be found in lease itself, not in a collateral agreement, and were dealt with in the lease involved).]

Marani v. Jackson (1986) 183 C.A.3d 695, 703, 704, 228 C.R. 518 [terms of commission agreement were covered so explicitly and extensively in written contract that they would not naturally be made as separate oral agreement].

In Banco Do Brasil v. Latian (1991) 234 C.A.3d 973, 285 C.R. 870, the trial court ruled that the parol evidence rule did not bar evidence of a bank's alleged oral agreement to extend a $ 2 million line of credit to two guarantors as a condition of their guaranty of an outstanding loan secured by a company's inventory they had purchased. Held, this was error; the collateral agreement was not one that naturally would be the subject of a separate agreement. The guarantors were sophisticated businessmen who were represented by counsel, and while they contended the line of credit was a significant part of the transaction, it was not mentioned in the documents or any contemporaneous writings or correspondence. It was inconceivable that the bank, having made such an effort to document the transaction, would have made a cavalier oral promise to extend further credit. Although language in one document stated that the debtor agreed to certain terms to induce the bank from time to time make a line of credit available to the borrowers, that language anticipated extension of a line of credit not to the guarantors, but to the seller of the inventory they purchased, which was the "borrower" defined by the document. (234 C.A.3d 1005.)

Software Design & Application, Ltd. v. Price Waterhouse (1996) 49 C.A.4th 464, 470, 471, 57 C.R.2d 36 [citing Banco Do Brasil case; in action by investors in corporation against corporation's accounting firm, trial judge properly excluded alleged oral agreement making plaintiffs third-party beneficiaries of defendant's letters of engagement with corporation: those letters constituted complete agreement and alleged oral agreement was not one that might naturally have been made separately].

CHAPTER VIII - Documentary Evidence

V. PAROL EVIDENCE RULE

C. When Extrinsic Evidence Is Admissible.

2. Evidence of Collateral Agreement.

d. Distinction: Oral Condition Inconsistent With Admissions.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 92

[§ 92] Distinction: Oral Condition Inconsistent With Admissions.

In FPI Dev. v. Nakashima (1991) 231 C.A.3d 367, 282 C.R. 508, an action on a promissory note, plaintiffs moved for summary judgment. Defendants contended that they had set up a triable issue of material fact: whether their obligation to pay the note was subject to a condition (sale of certain real property) embodied in a collateral oral agreement. Held, the evidence of the oral condition was inadmissible because it was inconsistent with defendant's admissions that the note was enforceable.

The court undertook an elaborate examination of Masterson v. Sine (1968) 68 C.2d 222, 65 C.R. 545, 436 P.2d 561, supra, §88, and its codification in 1978 (C.C.P. 1856, supra, §61), and then discussed the role of the court in dealing with a parol evidence question in a summary judgment proceeding.

(a) Prior to Masterson a party to a written contract was precluded from employing evidence of a collateral oral agreement which conditioned the terms of the writing; integration was determined solely from the face of the instrument. (231 C.A.3d 387, 388.) Masterson rejected this doctrine, and advanced two normative tests of credibility, the first taken from Rest.2d, Contracts §240, and the second from the Unif.Com.C. §2-202. "An oral agreement is creditable if it might naturally have been made as a separate agreement by parties similarly situated. It is also creditable unless it can be said with certainty that the parties would have included the oral agreement in the writing." (231 C.A.3d 388.)

(b) Defendants' claim that enforcement of the note was conditioned upon the sale of the optioned property is inconsistent with their assertions that they obtained the assignment in return for executing the note, and that the note would be given an "extension" if they found a buyer before the due date. "A note that is unenforceable in the absence of a sale needs no extension. ... Defendants' assertions amount to admissions that the note was enforceable, even if there is not a sale of the property. These assertions, coupled with the terms of the note, do contradict their claim of an unstated condition." (231 C.A.3d 396.) And the admissions of a party are binding in summary judgment proceedings unless there is a credible explanation for the inconsistent positions taken by the party. (231 C.A.3d 396; see 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, §207.)

CHAPTER VIII - Documentary Evidence

V. PAROL EVIDENCE RULE

C. When Extrinsic Evidence Is Admissible.

3. Evidence of Different Consideration.

a. Different Executed Consideration.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 93

[§ 93] Different Executed Consideration.

If a contract recites, e.g., that a consideration of $ 100 was received, evidence may be admitted to show that instead only $ 10 or a used car was received; i.e., the true consideration, different from that recited, may be shown. (See Andrews v. De Lorm (1929) 102 C.A. 623, 627, 283 P. 393; Johnston v. Courtial (1932) 216 C. 506, 509, 14 P.2d 771; Lewis v. McWhirter Petroleum Co. (1948) 89 C.A.2d 453, 455, 200 P.2d 856; Kennerson v. Salih Bros. (1954) 123 C.A.2d 371, 373, 266 P.2d 871 [true consideration shown to establish illegality]; Feinberg v. Teitelbaum Furs (1965) 236 C.A.2d 744, 751, 46 C.R. 428; 3 Corbin §§585, 586; 1 Summary (9th), Contracts, §212.)

The Second Restatement of Contracts points out that a recital of fact in an integrated agreement may be shown to be untrue (in the absence of an estoppel), and that an incorrect statement of consideration does not prevent proof either of no consideration or a different consideration. (Rest.2d, Contracts §218, and Comment e.) (On admissibility of evidence of lack or failure of consideration, see infra, §99.)

CHAPTER VIII - Documentary Evidence

V. PAROL EVIDENCE RULE

- C. When Extrinsic Evidence Is Admissible.
  - 3. Evidence of Different Consideration.
    - b. Distinction: Different Executory Promises.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 94

[§ 94] Distinction: Different Executory Promises.

One party cannot by parol evidence prove additional or different promises or obligations of the other party merely on the theory that they are part of the true consideration. The distinction is that parol evidence is admissible to contradict a recital of executed consideration, i.e., money, property or services which the contract states have been received; but where the contract states the executory promises of the parties, no evidence can be received to vary or add to those promises and thus change the fundamental character of the agreement. "Where the statement in a written instrument as to the consideration is more than a mere statement of fact or acknowledgment of payment of a money consideration, and is of a contractual nature, as where the consideration consists of a specific and direct promise by one of the parties to do certain things, this part of the contract can no more be changed or modified by parol or extrinsic evidence than any other part." (Harding v. Robinson (1917) 175 C. 534, 542, 166 P. 808; see First Fed. Trust Co. v. Stockfleth (1929) 98 C.A. 21, 27, 276 P. 371; W. Ross Campbell Co. v. Sears, Roebuck & Co. (1934) 136 C.A. 765, 768, 29 P.2d 910; Koeberle v. Hotchkiss (1935) 4 C.A.2d 252, 255, 40 P.2d 911 [unconditional agreement to pay money for acts performed; evidence that promise was contingent upon performance of future services inadmissible]; Mulholland v. Parker (1938) 26 C.A.2d 107, 110, 78 P.2d 1045 [property settlement agreement between husband and wife, stating promises in full; improper to admit parol evidence of alleged additional promise by husband to leave property by will]; Molybdenum Corp. of America v. Kasey (1959) 176 C.A.2d 357, 363, 1 C.R. 400, citing the text; 9 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §2433.)

Shiver v. Liberty Bldg.-Loan Assn. (1940) 16 C.2d 296, 106 P.2d 4, appears to depart from this principle. Plaintiff debtor and defendant mortgagee entered into a refinancing plan with Home Owners' Loan Corporation, and a written agreement was made whereby defendant agreed to accept $ 1,579 "in full settlement" and to "release" its claim against the property. But defendant, by a separate transaction, received a $ 300 note and second deed of trust from plaintiff for its consent to the plan. Plaintiff relied on the written agreement as an accord and satisfaction, contending that the additional promise to pay $ 300 was without consideration. Held, the statements in the writing were recitals of consideration, and parol evidence of the other transaction was admissible to show the true consideration. Thus, the court permitted the addition of a promise to a written instrument which in terms purported to express the complete agreement of the parties. (16 C.2d 299.) (See dissent, 16 C.2d 301, and criticism, 29 Cal. L. Rev. 249.)

V. PAROL EVIDENCE RULE

C. When Extrinsic Evidence Is Admissible.

4. Evidence That Writing Is Invalid or Ineffective.

a. Theory and Scope of Exception.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 95

[§ 95] Theory and Scope of Exception.

Evidence to prove that the instrument is void or voidable for mistake, fraud, duress, undue influence, illegality, alteration, lack of consideration, or other invalidating cause is admissible. This evidence does not contradict the terms of an effective integration, because it shows that the purported instrument has no legal effect. (See C.C.P. 1856(e), (f), and (g), supra, §61; 3 Corbin §580; Rest.2d, Contracts §214(d), and Comment c; infra, §96 et seq.)

Comment c of Rest.2d, Contracts §214, supra, explains: "What appears to be a complete and binding integrated agreement may be a forgery, a joke, a sham, or an agreement without consideration, or it may be voidable for fraud, duress, mistake, or the like, or it may be illegal. Such invalidating causes need not and commonly do not appear on the face of the writing. They are not affected even by a 'merger' clause."

Rest.2d, Contracts §214(e) also makes admissible evidence to establish "ground for granting or denying rescission, reformation, specific performance, or other remedy." Comment d describes this exception as follows: "A contract which is fully enforceable in an action for damages may be subject to equitable remedies such as rescission or reformation by reason of fraud, mistake or the like. Specific performance may be denied by reason of oppression or unfairness, or other remedies may be withheld or limited where the contract or a term is unconscionable. ... Evidence of the circumstances in which the contract was made may be relevant to such remedial issues, even though it also shows an agreement or proposal superseded by a later integrated contract."

V. PAROL EVIDENCE RULE

C. When Extrinsic Evidence Is Admissible.

4. Evidence That Writing Is Invalid or Ineffective.

c. Fraud.

2. False Promise.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 98

[§ 98] False Promise.

(1) Independent Promise Without Intention To Perform. If, to induce the plaintiff to enter into an agreement, the defendant makes an independent promise without intention to perform, this separate false promise is fraud, and it may be shown in order to avoid or nullify the main agreement. (See Coast Bank v. Holmes (1971) 19 C.A.3d 581, 591, 592, 97 C.R. 30; Ron Greenspan Volkswagen v. Ford Motor Land Dev. Corp. (1995) 32 C.A.4th 985, 995, 38 C.R.2d 783 [parol evidence is admissible to prove fraud in inducement even when contract recites that all conditions and representations are embodied therein]; 37 Santa Clara L. Rev. 1031 [arguing that merger clause should preclude claim for fraud in inducement]; 1 Summary (9th), Contracts, §393 et seq.; 5 Summary (9th), Torts, §685 et seq.)

(2) Distinction: False Promise Covered by Main Agreement. However, a plaintiff who attempts to show a false promise with respect to a matter covered by the main agreement contradicts the terms of the agreement in direct violation of the rule, and this cannot be permitted. (See Lindemann v. Coryell (1922) 59 C.A. 788, 791, 212 P. 47; W. Ross Campbell Co. v. Sears, Roebuck & Co. (1934) 136 C.A. 765, 769, 29 P.2d 910; Bank of America v. Pendergrass (1935) 4 C.2d 258, 263, 48 P.2d 659 [oral promise to extend or postpone payments under note which contained unconditional promise to pay on demand]; Cobbs v. Cobbs (1942) 53 C.A.2d 780, 784, 128 P.2d 373; Newmark v. H. & H. Products Mfg. Co. (1954) 128 C.A.2d 35, 37, 274 P.2d 702; Abbot v. Stevens (1955) 133 C.A.2d 242, 246, 284 P.2d 159; Shyvers v. Mitchell (1955) 133 C.A.2d 569, 572, 284 P.2d 826; Bank of America v. Lamb Finance Co. (1960) 179 C.A.2d 498, 502, 3 C.R. 877 [defendant signed as guarantor of corporation note, sought to testify that bank officer told her she would not be personally liable]; Green v. Del-Camp Inv. (1961) 193 C.A.2d 479, 482, 14 C.R. 420, citing the text ["Where, as here, the claimed fraud consists of a false promise with respect to a matter covered by the agreement itself, the oral evidence would contradict the terms of the agreement, in direct contravention of the rule"]; Glendale Fed. Savings & Loan Assn. v. Marina View Heights Dev. Co. (1977) 66 C.A.3d 101, 160, 135 C.R. 802; Continental Airlines v. McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1989) 216 C.A.3d 388, 419, 421, 264 C.R. 779, citing the text; Price v. Wells Fargo Bank (1989) 213 C.A.3d 465, 484, 486, 261 C.R. 735; West v. Henderson (1991) 227 C.A.3d 1578, 1583, 278 C.R. 570; Alling v. Universal Mfg. Corp. (1992) 5 C.A.4th 1412, 1436, 7 C.R.2d 718.)

In Coast Bank v. Holmes, supra, the court took note of criticisms of the rule against admitting evidence of an inconsistent false promise (see, e.g., 49 Cal. L. Rev. 877), and added the dictum that "recent decisions liberalizing the parol evidence rule cast some doubt on the continued validity of the distinction." (19 C.A.3d 592.) But in Price v. Wells Fargo Bank, supra, the court also took note of this criticism, as well as the doubt of continued vitality of Pendergrass, supra, expressed by the Coast Bank court (213 C.A.3d 484), and nevertheless concluded that the case still represents the governing law (213 C.A.3d 485), and "is based on an entirely defensible decision favoring the policy considerations underlying the parol evidence rule over those supporting a fraud cause of action." (213 C.A.3d 485.) (To the same effect, see Glendale Fed. Savings & Loan Assn. v. Marina View Heights Dev. Co., supra, 66 C.A.3d 161; West v. Henderson, supra, 227 C.A.3d 1583, 1584; Banco Do Brasil v. Latian (1991) 234 C.A.3d 973, 1009, 1010, 285 C.R. 870.)

(3) Tort Action for Damages. It has been assumed that the preceding rule applies, i.e., the parol evidence rule is a bar, where the plaintiff sues in tort to recover damages for the fraud. "If it were not so, one party to a written contract could change its terms, adding to the promises made by the other party, by the device of bringing his action in tort rather than on contract, and alleging an inducing promise made without intention of performance." (Kett v. Graeser (1966) 241 C.A.2d 571, 574, 50 C.R. 727 [dictum; recovery allowed on basis of collateral agreement; parol evidence rule not violated].)

This view may, however, be questioned today in the light of a decision of the Supreme Court on contracts within the statute of frauds. It was formerly the rule that a tort action for damages could not be based on a false promise where the promise itself was unenforceable under the statute of frauds. (Kroger v. Baur (1941) 46 C.A.2d 801, 803, 117 P.2d 50, 5 Summary (9th), Torts, §687.) The Kroger rule was followed for more than 40 years by Court of Appeal decisions, but was criticized in Southern Calif. Dist. Council, Assemblies of God v. Shepherd of the Hills Evangelical Lutheran Church (1978) 77 C.A.3d 951, 958, footnote 3, 144 C.R. 46, citing Rest.2d, Torts §530, Comment c, as contra. And in Tenzer v. Superscope (1985) 39 C.3d 18, 29, 216 C.R. 130, 702 P.2d 212, 5 Summary (9th), Torts, §688, the Supreme Court took note of the criticism and disapproved Kroger v. Baur.

The Restatement Comment states that the tort action for damages is available "whether or not the promise is enforceable as a contract." If, e.g., the agreement is without consideration, the tort action for fraud may be brought; and "[t]he same is true when the agreement is oral and made unenforceable by the statute of frauds, or when it is unprovable and so unenforceable under the parol evidence rule. ... In all of these cases, it is immaterial to the tort liability that the damages recoverable are identical with, or substantially the same as, those which could have been recovered in an action of contract if the promise were enforceable." (Rest.2d, Torts §530, Comment c.)

The judicial limitation stated in Bank of America v. Pendergrass (1935) 4 C.2d 258, 48 P.2d 659, text, p. 219, "should not be further extended to preclude parol evidence of a misrepresentation of fact over the content of the physical document at the time of signing. Such an extension would conflict with the Legislature's express and unqualified statutory exception for fraud--a policy judgment that we have no power to overrule--and is unnecessary to safeguard the vitality of the parol evidence rule (which was Pendergrass's purpose in narrowing the scope of the fraud exception)." Greene* (2003) 110 C.A.4th 375, 379, 390, 394, 1 C.R.3d 739, citing the text [in action by bank against guarantor of loans by bank to construction company, trial judge erred in excluding declaration stating that bank employee told guarantor several times that guaranties applied only to one loan, where guaranty agreement referenced only one loan number but, in fine print, defined indebtedness to include "all of Borrower's liabilities"; disagreeing with *Bank of America v. ### V. PAROL EVIDENCE RULE

C. When Extrinsic Evidence Is Admissible.

4. Evidence That Writing Is Invalid or Ineffective.

d. Lack or Failure of Consideration.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 99

[§ 99] Lack or Failure of Consideration.

(1) Lack of Consideration. Because an instrument lacking in consideration is invalid, this fact may be shown by extrinsic evidence (see C.C.P. 1856(f)), and a recital of consideration in the written agreement is ordinarily not binding (Ev.C. 622). Hence, even though a contract recites that a consideration was received, it may be shown by parol evidence that none was in fact received. (See Ruess v. Baron (1932) 217 C. 83, 88, 17 P.2d 119; Braselton v. Vokal (1921) 53 C.A. 582, 584, 200 P. 670; Doria v. International Union, Allied Industrial Workers of America, AFL-CIO (1961) 196 C.A.2d 22, 39, 16 C.R. 429, citing the text; Walter E. Heller Western v. Tecrim Corp. (1987) 196 C.A.3d 149, 155, 158, 241 C.R. 677 [extrinsic evidence admissible concerning what, if anything, constituted consideration for subordination agreement]; Rest.2d, Contracts §214(d); 9 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §2433; 3 Corbin §586; 1 Summary (9th), Contracts, §§211, 212; on admissibility of evidence of different consideration, see supra, §§93, 94.)

(2) Failure of Consideration. Subsequent failure of a promised consideration may be shown, not only because it renders the instrument ineffective (by discharge), but also because it does not contradict the terms of the instrument. (See Lewis Publishing Co. v. Henderson (1930) 103 C.A. 425, 428, 284 P. 713; Coast Bank v. Holmes (1971) 19 C.A.3d 581, 590, 97 C.R. 30; 3 Corbin §591; 1 Summary (9th), Contracts, §757.)

e. Illegality.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 100

[§ 100] Illegality.

Parol evidence is always admissible to show a consideration or object in violation of law which renders the purported agreement void. (See C.C.P. 1856(g), supra, §61; De Armas v. Dickerman (1952) 108 C.A.2d 548, 551, 239 P.2d 65; Kennerson v. Salih Bros. (1954) 123 C.A.2d 371, 374, 266 P.2d 871; May v. Herron (1954) 127 C.A.2d 707, 711, 274 P.2d 484; *Geffen v. f. Alteration.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 101

[§ 101] Alteration.

Parol evidence is admissible to show that an instrument has been nullified by a material alteration. (See Akopoff v. Mesropian (1929) 96 C.A. 128, 129, 273 P. 604 [evidence that note did not bear figure $ 606 at time of execution]; Smith v. Lagerstrom (1950) 34 C.2d 858, 861, 215 P.2d 450 [payee filled in blanks; evidence admissible to show that he acted in excess of authority given him]; on alteration generally, see 3 Summary (9th), Negotiable Instruments, §§92 et seq., 231.)

V. PAROL EVIDENCE RULE

C. When Extrinsic Evidence Is Admissible.

4. Evidence That Writing Is Invalid or Ineffective.

g. Writing Not Intended To Be Effective.

1. Sham Instrument.

aa. Parol Evidence Admissible.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 102

[§ 102] Parol Evidence Admissible.

(1) Statement of Rule. Even though a writing purports on its face to be a complete agreement, it may be shown that it was not intended to take effect at all. Thus, in P. A. Smith Co. v. Muller (1927) 201 C. 219, 256 P. 411, the purported contract was a mere sham, intended to deceive third parties, and not to bind the parties at all. The court said: "Such evidence does not change a written contract by parol, but serves to establish that such contract had no force, efficacy, or effect." (201 C. 222.) (See Texas Co. v. Berry Garage (1932) 121 C.A. 455, 458, 9 P.2d 241; Boies v. Wylie (1952) 113 C.A.2d 243, 246, 248 P.2d 76; San Diego v. Vilorio (1969) 276 C.A.2d 350, 354, 80 C.R. 869; 9 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §2406; 3 Corbin §577; 71 A.L.R.2d 382 [oral evidence to show that writing was sham agreement]; 1 Summary (9th), Contracts, §130 et seq.)

(2) Writing Intended as Different Instrument. The same principle has been applied to a writing intended to take effect, but as a different kind of instrument. In Halldin v. Usher (1958) 49 C.2d 749, 321 P.2d 746, a writing signed by a husband and wife declared that they "herewith agree" that the survivor should have their property, and that, on their death, it should go to their children in a certain manner. After death of the husband, plaintiff son sued for a declaration that this was a third-party beneficiary contract. Held, parol evidence (mainly testimony of the widow concerning conversations with her husband) was properly received to show that the instrument was to be effective only on death, i.e., as a will and not as a contract. (49 C.2d 752.) (See Haidinger-Hayes v. Marvin Hime & Co. (1962) 206 C.A.2d 46, 51, 23 C.R. 455 [following the Halldin case; evidence admissible to show that purported contract was only a receipt].)

g. Writing Not Intended To Be Effective.

1. Sham Instrument.

bb. Distinctions.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 103

[§ 103] Distinctions.

(1) Parol Evidence May Not Vary Terms of Instrument. The sham instrument exception may only be invoked to negate the existence of the agreement. Thus, in Yarus v. Yarush (1960) 178 C.A.2d 190, 203, 3 C.R. 50, plaintiff wife claimed that the parties had intended by their agreement to provide for alimony, but used the form of a property division because of income tax advantages to the wife. Held, this evidence was inadmissible. Instead of attacking the entire instrument as sham, she was attempting to exclude part of it as sham, i.e., to enforce the agreement but to vary its terms. (See also Nelkin v. Marvin Hime & Co. (1964) 228 C.A.2d 744, 747, 39 C.R. 701, 1 Summary (9th), Contracts, §122.)

(2) Parol Evidence May Not Deny Execution of Instrument. In FPI Dev. v. Nakashima (1991) 231 C.A.3d 367, 282 C.R. 508, supra, §92, plaintiffs brought an action on a promissory note, and moved for summary judgment. Defendants denied execution of the note, and contended that their denial raised the triable issue of sham agreement. But the facts necessary to establish that the note was not intended as a jural act were not encompassed in the denial of the ultimate fact of execution alleged in the complaint. "Where a party participates in a sham the intention is that the note be taken as a jural act by the one upon whom the sham is perpetrated. It will not lie in the mouth of the participant to say there was no execution of the note. The defense, if any, is that there was an execution but that the plaintiff cannot take advantage of it. For that reason a denial of the execution does not put such a theory in issue." (231 C.A.3d 403.)

V. PAROL EVIDENCE RULE

C. When Extrinsic Evidence Is Admissible.

4. Evidence That Writing Is Invalid or Ineffective.

g. Writing Not Intended To Be Effective.

2. Conditional Writing.

aa. External Condition Precedent Admissible.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 104

[§ 104] External Condition Precedent Admissible.

(1) Statement of Rule. It may be shown that the writing was not intended as a final act because it is not to become effective until some condition happens. (See 9 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§2410, 2435; 3 Corbin §589; Rest.2d, Contracts §217, and Comment b.) Thus, in Gleeson v. Dunn (1931) 113 C.A. 347, 298 P. 119, plaintiff, an architect, sued on a contract of employment to render services in connection with certain property. Held, it was error to exclude evidence offered by defendant that the agreement was not to become binding until the latter obtained title to the described property. (113 C.A. 351.)

Other cases are to the same effect. (See Harper v. French (1938) 29 C.A.2d 214, 216, 84 P.2d 216 [defendant makers could show that delivery of a promissory note was conditional, the obligation not to become effective until condition precedent happened]; Unger v. Hall (1943) 61 C.A.2d 535, 537, 143 P.2d 497; Paratore v. Scharetg (1942) 53 C.A.2d 710, 713, 128 P.2d 560; Embassy Realty Associates v. Walsh (1967) 248 C.A.2d 513, 515, 56 C.R. 617.)

(2) Distinction: Deeds. A different rule applies to deeds: The common law doctrine that a deed cannot be conditionally delivered to the grantee is followed in California. (See C.C. 1056; 9 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §2408; 4 Summary (9th), Real Property, §177.)

V. PAROL EVIDENCE RULE

C. When Extrinsic Evidence Is Admissible.

4. Evidence That Writing Is Invalid or Ineffective.

g. Writing Not Intended To Be Effective.

2. Conditional Writing.

bb. Condition Precedent to Term or Condition Subsequent Excluded.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 105

[§ 105] Condition Precedent to Term or Condition Subsequent Excluded.

(1) In General. In applying the principle just considered (supra, §104), it is necessary to keep clearly in mind this distinction: The condition must be one which renders the entire purported agreement inchoate, so that the parol evidence proves that there is no legal act, e.g., no contract. If, on the other hand, an attempt is made to show that one of the terms of a contract is not to take effect until the condition happens, or that the obligations in whole or in part are to be absolved by the operation of a condition subsequent, the parol evidence rule is a bar; for once the existence of a legally effective contract is admitted, its terms cannot be varied or defeated by any extrinsic evidence. (See Seth v. Lew Hing (1932) 125 C.A. 729, 736, 14 P.2d 537 [maker of note cannot prove oral agreement not to hold maker liable on note]; Scatena v. Lawson (1928) 95 C.A. 720, 724, 273 P. 592 [note and mortgage expressly made payable on certain date; maker could not show that payment was contingent upon sale of certain assets]; McArthur v. Johnson (1932) 216 C. 580, 582, 15 P.2d 151 [negotiable note, same holding; court discusses distinction between proper showing of conditional delivery (instrument does not become effective) and conditions of payment in conflict with terms of instrument]; Hanrahan-Wilcox Corp. v. Jenison Machinery Co. (1937) 23 C.A.2d 642, 644, 73 P.2d 1241; L. B. Williams Organization v. Winter (1951) 106 C.A.2d 604, 605, 235 P.2d 407; Stafford v. Filice (1967) 252 C.A.2d 613, 625, 60 C.R. 832, citing the text; 9 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §2435.)

(2) Illustration. In Hanrahan-Wilcox Corp. v. Jenison Machinery Co., supra, plaintiff contracted to rent a machine from defendant. Later, he returned the machine and sought to avoid the obligation by proving an oral agreement that, if the machine did not do satisfactory work, the contract would not be binding. Held, the evidence was inadmissible, being in conflict with the provisions of the contract calling for rent to begin on its delivery. In other words, plaintiff was trying to prove an oral condition subsequent as a means of escaping his express obligations under the contract.

(3) Second Restatement of Contracts View. The Second Restatement of Contracts takes a different position: "A major rationale expressed by courts for the rule of this Section is that it has to do with an oral condition that must occur before the written contract comes into existence. Thus, if the oral condition is not met there is no subsequent and superseding agreement and no reason to apply the parol evidence rule. ... [T]his approach is of limited use. It is not the rationale expressed in this Comment, and is often not the rationale expressed by courts. In addition, oral conditions have been admitted merely to modify a later written contract, not to prevent it from coming into effect." (Rest.2d, Contracts

§217, Comment b.)

CHAPTER VIII - Documentary Evidence

V. PAROL EVIDENCE RULE

C. When Extrinsic Evidence Is Admissible.

5. Evidence of Discharge or Modification of Contract.

a. Mutual Rescission or Novation.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 106

[§ 106] Mutual Rescission or Novation.

Although an integration supersedes prior and contemporaneous negotiations, agreements made afterwards are effective. Thus, parol evidence is admissible to establish mutual rescission or novation. (See Haberman v. Sawall (1925) 72 C.A. 576, 581, 237 P. 776 [rescission]; Grant v. Aerodraulics Co. (1949) 91 C.A.2d 68, 74, 204 P.2d 683 [rescission]; *McKeon v. ## CHAPTER VIII - Documentary Evidence

V. PAROL EVIDENCE RULE

C. When Extrinsic Evidence Is Admissible.

5. Evidence of Discharge or Modification of Contract. b. Oral Modification.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 107

[§ 107] Oral Modification.

Parol evidence is admissible to prove an oral modification of a written contract under C.C. 1698 as follows:

(1) To the extent that the oral agreement is executed by the parties. (C.C. 1698(b); see Coldwell Banker & Co. v. Pepper Tree Office Center Associates (1980) 106 C.A.3d 272, 280, 165 C.R. 51; Conley v. Matthes (1997) 56 C.A.4th 1453, 1465, 1466, 66 C.R.2d 518 [exchange of promissory note and second trust deed for cash loan constituted executed oral modification of original real property sale agreement, which had precluded second trust deeds].)

(2) Unless the contract otherwise expressly provides, if the oral agreement is supported by new consideration. (C.C. 1698(c); see Beggerly v. Gbur (1980) 112 C.A.3d 180, 188, 189, 190, 169 C.R. 166 [evidence of oral modification properly stricken where contrary to written agreement and no new consideration]; Marani v. Jackson (1986) 183 C.A.3d 695, 704, 228 C.R. 518 [same].) (On oral modification of contracts generally, see 1 Summary (9th), Contracts, §911 et seq.)

Chohon v. Kersey Kinsey Co. (1959) 173 C.A.2d 548, 343 P.2d 614, deals with distinguishable facts. Plaintiff alleged that defendant orally agreed to build two buildings for him; that the air conditioning of one proved inadequate and they orally agreed that plaintiff should give a note for the full sum and defendant would allow him an offset for the cost of correcting it; that plaintiff delivered the note, repaired the system, and offered payment of the note less the cost, which defendant refused. Plaintiff had to pay the full sum to release the escrow, and sued for the agreed offset. The trial judge sustained an objection to all evidence on the theory that plaintiff was trying to modify a written agreement by an oral agreement. Held, reversed; plaintiff was not suing on the note but on the collateral agreement for the discharge of defendant's obligation arising from his original breach. (173 C.A.2d 551.)

CHAPTER VIII - Documentary Evidence

V. PAROL EVIDENCE RULE

C. When Extrinsic Evidence Is Admissible.

6. Miscellaneous Exceptions to Rule.

a. Absolute Deed as Mortgage.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 108

[§ 108] Absolute Deed as Mortgage.

A deed or other instrument absolute in form and apparently transferring title may be shown to be intended as a mortgage, creating a security interest only. This exception to the parol evidence rule applies to any kind of deed except a deed of trust (the substantial equivalent of a mortgage). (See C.C. 2888, 2924; Beeler v. American Trust Co. (1944) 24 C.2d 1, 7, 147 P.2d 583, supra, §71; Wilcox v. Salomone (1953) 118 C.A.2d 704, 710, 258 P.2d 845; Sherman v. Panno (1954) 129 C.A.2d 375, 381, 277 P.2d 80; 9 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §2437; 11 Williston 4th, §33:44; 3 Summary (9th), Security Transactions in Real Property, §9.)

The following distinction may be noted: The deed-as-mortgage exception applies even though the borrower-grantor, not acting under fraud or mistake, voluntarily uses the deed form, so long as both parties intend it to operate only as security. If, however, the borrower-grantor is induced by fraudulent representations to sign a grant deed, believing it to be a deed of trust or mortgage, he or she is entitled to reformation. And the borrower-grantor may prove his or her case by parol evidence not under this special exception, but under the general exception allowing evidence of fraud to attack the validity of the instrument. (See Massow v. Gianacis (1953) 120 C.A.2d 24, 27, 260 P.2d 655.)

V. PAROL EVIDENCE RULE

C. When Extrinsic Evidence Is Admissible.

6. Miscellaneous Exceptions to Rule.

b. Absolute Transfer as Limited Transfer.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 109

[§ 109] Absolute Transfer as Limited Transfer.

(1) Absolute Transfer as Trust. An apparently absolute transfer may be shown to have been a transfer in trust, and a resulting or constructive trust may be imposed. (Brison v. Brison (1888) 75 C. 525, 533, 17 P. 689; Nishi v. Downing (1937) 21 C.A.2d 1, 3, 67 P.2d 1057; Hansen v. Bear Film Co. (1946) 28 C.2d 154, 168 P.2d 946, supra, §75; Jarkieh v. Badagliacco (1946) 75 C.A.2d 505, 511, 170 P.2d 994; 9 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §2437; but see Estate of Gaines (1940) 15 C.2d 255, 265, 100 P.2d 1055 [evidence of trust held insufficient].)

But the converse is not true; an instrument which in terms is a pledge, mortgage or assignment for collection cannot by parol evidence be shown to be an absolute transfer of title or beneficial interest; "the right to defeat an expressed equity by destructive parol proof is not comprehended within the rule." (Keifer v. Myers (1910) 14 C.A. 338, 340, 111 P. 1038; Kunz v. Anglo & London Paris Nat. Bank of San Francisco (1931) 214 C. 341, 347, 5 P.2d 417.)

(2) Other Absolute Transfers Limited. In Huber v. Huber (1946) 27 C.2d 784, 167 P.2d 708, a divorce action, the husband was allowed to testify that land taken by himself and wife as joint tenants, but purchased with his separate funds, was not intended to create a joint tenancy. The court said: "Parol evidence is admissible to establish the absence of an intention to make a gift of either separate or community property, although the instrument of conveyance is made by the husband to the wife alone or as joint tenant with him or is from a third person to the wife or to both as joint tenants at the husband's direction in cases where there is no showing of fraud, mistake or undue influence." (27 C.2d 788.) (See 33 A.L.R.2d 381 [bill of sale as chattel mortgage]; 11 Summary (9th), Community Property, §188 et seq.; but see Wells v. Wells (1946) 74 C.A.2d 449, 169 P.2d 23 [apparently absolute assignment interpreted as separation agreement].)

CHAPTER VIII - Documentary Evidence

V. PAROL EVIDENCE RULE

- C. When Extrinsic Evidence Is Admissible.
  - 6. Miscellaneous Exceptions to Rule.
    - c. Undisclosed Principal or Party in Interest.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 110

[§ 110] Undisclosed Principal or Party in Interest.

Except as to negotiable instruments, extrinsic evidence may be admitted to show that a party to a contract acted as agent for an undisclosed principal, who is bound by and may enforce the contract. (See Geary Street, Park & Ocean R. Co. v. Rolph (1922) 189 C. 59, 65, 207 P. 539 [principal liable]; Anglin v. Conway (1953) 41 C.2d 683, 688, 263 P.2d 1 [same]; Pratt v. Hopper (1936) 12 C.A.2d 291, 293, 55 P.2d 517 [negotiable instruments exception]; Purviance v. Shostak (1949) 90 C.A.2d 295, 297, 202 P.2d 755 [principal may enforce]; Sumner v. Flowers (1955) 130 C.A.2d 672, 674, 279 P.2d 772 [same]; 9 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §2438; 2 Summary (9th), Agency and Employment, §107; 3 Summary (9th), Negotiable Instruments, §§99 et seq., 216 et seq.)

This doctrine goes beyond strict agency cases: Identity of parties in interest may be shown by extrinsic evidence "when it appears that the agreement has been made in the name of a partnership or joint venture, or an agent, especially when the nature of the entity named as a party or the names of the parties to the partnership or venture do not affirmatively appear in the writing." (Greenwood v. Mooradian (1955) 137 C.A.2d 532, 543, 290 P.2d 955; see 70 A.L.R.3d 1276 [parol evidence to show whether guaranty was made in representative or individual capacity].)

The converse, however, is not true; parol evidence is not admissible to relieve from liability an agent who signs personally without disclosing (on the face of the instrument) the name of the principal. (See Otis Elevator Co. v. Berry (1938) 28 C.A.2d 430, 432, 82 P.2d 704; Van Haaren v. Whitmore (1934) 2 C.A.2d 632, 635, 38 P.2d 829; Firestone v. Wahl (1955) 133 C.A.2d 501, 504, 284 P.2d 499; 2 Summary (9th), Agency and Employment, §146 et seq.)

CHAPTER VIII - Documentary Evidence

V. PAROL EVIDENCE RULE

D. Contract Between Party and Stranger.

1. Rule Under Former Statute.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 111

[§ 111] Rule Under Former Statute.

C.C.P. 1856 formerly contained this introductory phrase: "between the parties and their representatives, or successors in interest." Pursuant to this statutory limitation, the parol evidence rule was held inapplicable in an action between one party to the contract and a stranger, and both were permitted to introduce evidence contradicting the terms of the writing. (See Luckie v. Diamond Coal Co. (1919) 41 C.A. 468, 478, 183 P. 178; Spraul v. Garliepp & Mack (1934) 138 C.A. 491, 494, 32 P.2d 657; Mayfield v. Fidelity & Cas. Co. of New York (1936) 16 C.A.2d 611, 619, 61 P.2d 83; Lynn v. Herman (1946) 72 C.A.2d 614, 617, 165 P.2d 54; Jegen v. Berger (1946) 77 C.A.2d 1, 8, 174 P.2d 489; Broder v. Epstein (1950) 101 C.A.2d 197, 198, 225 P.2d 10; Penberthy v. Vahl (1950) 101 C.A.2d 1, 4, 224 P.2d 907; Mason v. Rolando Lumber Co. (1952) 111 C.A.2d 79, 82, 243 P.2d 814 [bill of lading, contract between shipper and carrier; defendant buyer could show true title to goods]; Jackson v. Donovan (1963) 215 C.A.2d 685, 690, 30 C.R. 755; Kassianov v. Raissis (1962) 200 C.A.2d 573, 575, 19 C.R. 614; 13 A.L.R.3d 313 [person not party to contract of release].)

The exception was applied in Nichols v. Arthur Murray (1967) 248 C.A.2d 610, 612, 56 C.R. 728, to establish liability of defendant corporation to third persons on contracts made by its local licensees. The contracts disclaimed any agency relationship, but extrinsic evidence was admissible to show control sufficient to support an inference of agency. (See also Gordon v. D & G Escrow Corp. (1975) 48 C.A.3d 616, 626, 122 C.R. 150, quoting the text [plaintiff was improperly prevented from explaining or interpreting circumstances under which he entered into stipulation with estranged wife on which property was separate property, when he claimed escrow company wrongly disposed of community property].)

The limitation was given as one reason for the inapplicability of the rule in a criminal case: The state, prosecuting for a crime committed in relation to a contract, is not a party to it and can show the true nature of the transaction. (People v. Chait (1945) 69 C.A.2d 503, 519, 159 P.2d 445.) Thus, in People v. Frankfort (1952) 114 C.A.2d 680, 700, 251 P.2d 401, a prosecution for obtaining money under false pretenses, defendant attempted to set up the exculpatory (merger) clause of the agreement between himself and the defrauded investors. This was properly held no defense. (See People v. Bennett (1953) 122 C.A.2d 244, 250, 264 P.2d 664; People v. Nesseth (1954) 127 C.A.2d 712, 716, 274 P.2d 479; People v. Woolson (1960) 181 C.A.2d 657, 668, 5 C.R. 766; 94 A.L.R.2d 570 [merger clause as precluding conviction for false pretenses based on earlier oral false representations].)

But a successor in interest has the same right as a party to invoke the parol evidence rule. Thus, plaintiff, a debtor-trustor, could not vary the terms of a note and deed of trust against defendants, who purchased at the trustee's sale and were therefore successors in interest of the trustee. (Stafford v. Russell (1953) 117 C.A.2d 326, 330, 255 P.2d 814.)

CHAPTER VIII - Documentary Evidence

V. PAROL EVIDENCE RULE

D. Contract Between Party and Stranger.

2. Deletion of Statutory Language.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Doc Evid § 112

[§ 112] Deletion of Statutory Language.

This limitation on the operation of the rule (supra, §111) was criticized on principle. (See 9 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §2446; 3 Corbin §596.) And the Law Revision Commission's amendment of C.C.P. 1856 deleted the quoted phrase. (See supra, §61).

The Commission Report does not comment on the omission. However, it would seem that the purpose of the deletion was to change the rule and thereby to preclude the introduction of evidence contradicting the terms of a writing even though the action is between a party to the contract and a stranger, and at least two courts have stated that this is so. (See Kern County Water Agency v. Belridge Water Storage Dist. (1993) 18 C.A.4th 77, 86, 22 C.R.2d 354, citing the text; Neverkovec v. Fredericks (1999) 74 C.A.4th 337, 350, footnote 8, 87 C.R.2d 856, 5 Summary (9th), Torts, Supp., §59, citing the text [stating rule, but holding extrinsic evidence nevertheless was admissible under circumstances of case]; 10 *Pacific L. CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

I. ATTENDANCE AND COMPENSATION

A. Who May Compel Attendance.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 1

[§ 1] Who May Compel Attendance.

(1) Court or Judicial Officer. A court has inherent power to compel the attendance of witnesses in an action or proceeding before it, and to punish as contempt the refusal to attend. (See generally C.C.P. 128(a)(6); Walker Mining Co. v. Industrial Acc. Com. (1939) 35 C.A.2d 257, 262, 95 P.2d 188; Burns v. Superior Court (1903) 140 C. 1, 4, 73 P. 597; see also Prob.C. 800 [power of probate court]; on penalty of contempt, see infra, §28 et seq., 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §260 et seq.; on practice, see C.E.B., 1 Civil Proc. During Trial 3d, Chap. 4; C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Trial §8.13 et seq.; 2 Wharton, Criminal Evidence (14th ed.), §459 et seq.)

The Code of Civil Procedure further provides that every judicial officer has the same power. (C.C.P. 177(3).)

(2) Administrative Agency. By statute, many administrative bodies and officers have power to summon witnesses, but ordinarily not to punish for contempt. (See 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §73.)

(3) Legislature. The Legislature has power to summon witnesses and to punish for contempt. (Govt.C. 9401 et seq.; see In re Coon (1941) 44 C.A.2d 531, 540, 112 P.2d 767 [prosecution under P.C. 87].)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

I. ATTENDANCE AND COMPENSATION

B. When Witnesses Must Attend.

1. Civil Cases.

a. Witness Residing in County.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 2

[§ 2] Witness Residing in County.

A witness who is served with a subpoena must attend at the time appointed and bring any papers under his or her control that are lawfully required by the subpoena. The witness must answer all pertinent and legal questions and, unless discharged sooner, must remain until the testimony is closed. (C.C.P. 2064.)

There is no territorial limitation on attendance of a resident witness. (See C.C.P. 1989.) Thus, the witness can be compelled to attend a proceeding within the county of his or her residence no matter how far away it is, and residence is a question of fact to be determined by the court. (See Hall v. Superior Court (1932) 124 C.A. 603, 605, 12 P.2d 1057 [here, however, contempt order annulled for failure of affidavit to allege place of residence].) (On attendance of law enforcement officers, see infra, §4; on attendance of other state employees, see infra, §5; on attendance of prisoners, see infra, §13.)

B. When Witnesses Must Attend.

1. Civil Cases.

b. Witness Residing Outside County.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 3

[§ 3] Witness Residing Outside County.

(1) Abolition of Territorial Limitations. C.C.P. 1989 formerly provided that a witness was not obliged to attend out of the county of his or her residence unless the distance was less than a specified number of miles from that residence. The original distance of 30 miles (in 1872) was constantly increased, and a 1980 amendment made it 500 miles. But in 1981, the Legislature dropped the territorial limitation, and the section now simply states that the witness need not attend unless he or she "is a resident within the state at the time of service." Effective July 1, 1987, the statute was partially and impliedly repealed by C.C.P. 2025 (see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §41), which permits depositions of nonresidents in California. (Glass v. Superior Court (1988) 204 C.A.3d 1048, 1051, 1052, 251 C.R. 690.) (See generally C.E.B., 1 Civil Proc. During Trial 3d, §4.18.)

(2) What Constitutes Place of Residence. Residence under C.C.P. 1989 is "residence in fact and not domicile"; the subpoena section "envisages nothing more than an abode, possibly combined with a professional base of operations, which gives the 'resident' a sojourning connection with the area of a type and duration related to the status of a witness and which makes it not a hardship for him to attend the legal proceedings at which he is commanded to appear." (In re Morelli (1970) 11 C.A.3d 819, 831, 91 C.R. 72.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Abolition of Territorial Limitations. C.C.P. 2025, allowing depositions of nonresidents in California, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change. West's Key Number Digest, Witnesses k.6

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

I. ATTENDANCE AND COMPENSATION

B. When Witnesses Must Attend.

1. Civil Cases.

c. Law Enforcement Officers.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 4

[§ 4] Law Enforcement Officers.

(1) Statutory Listing. Govt.C. 68097 et seq. provide for attendance, compensation, and deposit of compensation for specified law enforcement officers, as well as for other state employees (see infra, §5), when called as witnesses. However, some of these provisions apply exclusively to law enforcement officers. (See C.E.B., 1 Civil Proc. During Trial 3d, §4.27.) The following law enforcement officers are covered (Govt.C. 68097):

- (a) Department of Justice peace officers or technical analysts.
- (b) Peace officers of the Department of the California Highway Patrol (including vehicle inspection specialists).
- (c) Peace officer members of the State Fire Marshal's Office.
- (d) Sheriffs and deputy sheriffs.
- (e) Marshals and deputy marshals.
- (f) District attorney inspectors.
- (g) Probation officers.
- (h) Building inspectors.
- (i) Firefighters (including volunteer firefighters).
- (j) City police officers.

(2) Subject of Testimony. The officer may be called "in connection with a matter regarding an event or transaction which he or she has perceived or investigated in the course of his or her duties." (Govt.C. 68097.1(a).)

(3) Service of Subpoena. The subpoena may be served either by delivering a copy to the officer personally, or by delivering two copies to his or her immediate superior or to an agent designated by the superior. (Govt.C. 68097.1(a).)

(4) Deposit and Reimbursement. The officer receives his normal salary and all reasonable traveling expenses from the public entity. (Govt.C. 68097.2(a).) These costs must be reimbursed in full by the summoning party. Prior to issuance of the subpoena, the summoning party must deposit with the clerk the subpoena, together with a specified sum for each day the officer's attendance is required. (Govt.C. 68097.2(b).) Depending on the amount of the actual expenses, the summoning party will be entitled to a refund or required to make additional payment. (Govt.C. 68097.2(c), (d).)

However, a party may be relieved of the duty to make a deposit or payment "upon good cause shown, including the fact that the party is proceeding in forma pauperis." (Govt.C. 68097.55.) And the prepayment requirement is inapplicable where the governmental agency that employs the officer is itself a party in the proceeding. (Fox v. State Personnel Bd. (1996) 49 C.A.4th 1034, 1041, 1042, 57 C.R.2d 279 [in disciplinary proceeding involving corrections department employee, department was itself a party and thus could not demand witness fees for correctional peace officers subpoenaed by employee; demand was also improper because Govt.C. 68097.2 is conditioned on Govt.C. 68097.1 and correctional peace officers are not listed in latter section].)

(5) Return for Subsequent Proceedings. A new deposit must be made before the officer can be ordered to return for subsequent proceedings beyond either the date stated in the subpoena or an alternative date agreed to by the party (see Govt.C. 68097.9). (Govt.C. 68097.5.) However, if the court continues a proceeding on its own motion, no additional witness fee may be required prior to issuance of a subpoena or making of an order directing the officer to appear on the new date. (Govt.C. 68097.2(e).)

(6) Depositions. The above sections are also applicable to depositions of the officers. (Govt.C. 68097.6.)

(7) Payment of Officer Prohibited. It is a misdemeanor for a person to offer or pay, or for an officer to ask or receive, "any money or other form of consideration" in return for the officer's testimony. (Govt.C. 68097.7.)

[§ 5] Other State Employees.

(1) Statutory Listing. Govt.C. 68097 was amended in 1992 to add "other state employees" to the list of witnesses subject to the statute previously covering only the attendance and compensation of law enforcement officers. (See Govt.C. 68097 et seq., supra, §4.) However, as discussed previously, some of the provisions were not amended and remain applicable only to law enforcement officers. (See Govt.C. 68097.5, 68097.55, 68097.6, 68097.7, 68097.9; supra, §4.)

(2) Subject of Testimony. The employee may be called "in connection with a matter, event, or transaction concerning which he or she has expertise gained in the course of his or her duties." (Govt.C. 68097.1(b).)

(3) Service of Subpena. The subpoena may be served either by delivering a copy to the employee personally, or by delivering two copies to his or her immediate superior or to an agent designated by the superior. (Govt.C. 68097.1(b).)

(4) Deposit and Reimbursement. The employee receives his or her normal salary and all reasonable traveling expenses from the public entity, which is reimbursed in full by the summoning party. A specified sum, together with the subpoena, must be tendered to the person accepting the subpoena for each day that the employee is required by the subpoena to remain in attendance. Depending on the amount of the actual expenses, the summoning party will be entitled to a refund or required to make additional payment. (Govt.C. 68097.2.)

(5) Continuance. If the court continues a proceeding on its own motion, no additional witness fee may be required prior to issuing a subpoena or making an order directing the employee to appear on the new date. (Govt.C. 68097.2(e).)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

I. ATTENDANCE AND COMPENSATION

B. When Witnesses Must Attend.

2. Criminal Cases.

b. Territorial Limitations on Compulsory Attendance.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 7

[§ 7] Territorial Limitations on Compulsory Attendance.

(1) Statutory Rule. A person may not be compelled to appear before a court located out of the county where he or she resides or is served, unless the distance from the place of residence to the place of trial is less than 150 miles. But on affidavit of the prosecutor or defendant stating a belief that the evidence is material and attendance is necessary, the judge must endorse on the subpoena an order for attendance. The limitations on attendance are inapplicable to a subpoena duces tecum that does not require the witness' personal attendance. (P.C. 1330.)

(2) Constitutionality of Affidavit of Belief. The statute's requirement of an affidavit of belief in materiality of the evidence as a condition to the judge's endorsement on the subpoena was upheld against constitutional attack in Lucas v. Superior Court (1988) 203 C.A.3d 733, 250 C.R. 76.

(a) Petitioner contended that, because witnesses in civil cases may be compelled to attend anywhere in the state without a showing of materiality (C.C.P. 1989, supra, §§2, 3), P.C. 1330 denies equal protection of the law to criminal defendants. The statute, however, does not distinguish between criminal and civil litigants, but between civil and criminal witnesses; and the difference in treatment is rationally based:

"Civil witnesses are entitled to demand mileage and a one-day fee be paid in advance and may not be compelled to attend (except for certain government employees), unless those costs are paid by the party requesting the subpoena. The witness has no such protection in criminal cases. Further, although witnesses who testify in civil cases are entitled to mileage and fees, those who are improvidently subpoenaed in criminal cases may be denied fees altogether in the discretion of the court, and those whose testimony is not material or who appear and are not permitted to testify may not be paid. ... Thus witnesses in criminal cases face potential economic hardships not confronting civil witnesses if their testimony is deemed immaterial, while being forced under court compulsion to attend the trial without any preliminary ascertainment of materiality. Witnesses in civil cases need not attend court if their demand for advance fees and mileage is not met and, whether they testify or not, merely appearing and presenting the subpoena to the court clerk entitles them to daily fees and return mileage. We believe it significant also that witness fees and mileage in civil cases are direct costs to the litigant, a value factor to be weighed in determining whether the benefit of subpoenaed witnesses' testimony justifies the economics in producing them. No such restraining factor is inherent in the subpoenaing of criminal witnesses who, if paid at all, derive their stipend from the county treasury, a fisc a trial court may be inclined to protect when exercising its discretion to award fees to persons improvidently subpoenaed." (203 C.A.3d 739.)

(b) The endorsement requirement also serves the necessary purpose of preventing abuse of the process of the court by screening out witnesses who can offer only immaterial and cumulative testimony. (203 C.A.3d 740.) And "[t]here cannot be a denial of due process by preventing the compulsory attendance of witnesses who cannot supply material evidence because they can contribute nothing of evidentiary value." (203 C.A.3d 741.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

I. ATTENDANCE AND COMPENSATION

B. When Witnesses Must Attend.

2. Criminal Cases.

c. Undertaking To Appear.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 8

[§ 8] Undertaking To Appear.

A court may require a material witness for the prosecution or defense to enter into a written undertaking to appear whenever the court finds that the witness would not appear and testify unless security is required. Refusal to comply with such an order may result in the witness being taken into custody until he complies or is legally discharged. An undertaking is forfeited on the witness' failure to appear in the same manner as undertakings of bail. (P.C. 1332.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

In re Francisco M. (2001) 86 C.A.4th 1061, 103 C.R.2d 794, involved two minors who had been detained under P.C. 1332 for approximately 10 weeks as material witnesses in a murder prosecution. The minors petitioned for habeas corpus. Held, petitions denied insofar as they seek the minors' immediate release.

(a) Constitutionality of Statute. Cal. Const., Art. I, §10, provides that a witness may not be unreasonably detained. P.C. 1332 does not, on its face, violate this provision. The Government's authority to arrest and imprison material witnesses was a long-established feature of English law at the time the United States became a nation, and material witness statutes similar to California's are common among the states. The United States Supreme Court has accepted their validity under the federal Constitution. (86 C.A.4th 1071, citing Hurtado v. United States (1973) 410 U.S. 578, 93 S.Ct. 1157, 35 L.Ed.2d 508, text, §17.) "Since section 1332 may be applied fairly, with adequate procedural safeguards, we see no reason to declare the statute unconstitutional on its face." (86 C.A.4th 1072.)

(b) Explicit Refusal To Appear Not Required. On a proper showing under oath that the witness will not appear unless security is required, P.C. 1332 empowers the court to: (1) require the witness to submit a written undertaking in which the witness promises to appear and testify, and further promises to forfeit the required security should the witness fail to appear; (2) set a reasonable bail amount as the required security; and (3) detain the witness if he or she refuses to enter such an undertaking. The witness' refusal to comply with an order to enter the undertaking need not follow a formal, on-the-record inquiry from the court. When a person is remanded to custody in lieu of bail, that person is implicitly ordered--if he or she wishes to be released--to submit a written undertaking containing a promise to appear or to forfeit the bail amount that must be posted. The witness' refusal to enter the undertaking, for whatever reason, is implicit from the failure to post bail. (86 C.A.4th 1073.)

(c) Initial Hearing. Nevertheless, the right of witnesses not to be "unreasonably detained" requires procedural safeguards allowing their interests to be heard in conjunction with those of the state. The statute clearly contemplates an initial hearing at which the witness is entitled to notice of the basis on which his or her detention is sought. At this hearing the witness should have counsel, either retained or appointed. Further, the witness is entitled to controvert the allegations seeking his or her detention, and to be heard on all relevant issues, including whether the witness will agree to return if released and whether other alternatives to incarceration in lieu of security are feasible and adequate. "We do not mean to imply that the hearing must take on the formal aspects of a trial, with the calling of witnesses and full cross-examination. The trial court retains discretion to limit the form and manner of proof as appropriate to the individual case." (86 C.A.4th 1076.)

(d) Factors Providing Foundation for Exercise of Discretion. In determining whether to order the witness to enter a written undertaking to the effect that he or she will appear and testify or forfeit an amount the court deems proper (P.C. 1332(a)), some or all of the following circumstances are appropriate for consideration: (1) the nature of the charges in the underlying prosecution; (2) the nature of the witness' proposed testimony and its importance; (3) the length of the proposed detention; (4) evidence relevant to whether the witness will or will not appear and testify, including testimony of the witness; (5) the age and maturity of the witness; (6) the harm to the witness and his or her family flowing from incarceration; (7) the witness' financial resources; (8) the circumstances of any continuance of the underlying prosecution that will prolong the incarceration; and (9) whether steps short of incarceration, possibly including a conditional examination under P.C. 1335 and 1336 (see 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §66), are feasible and adequate to protect the interests of all parties. (86 C.A.4th 1076, 1077, 1078.) "While not exclusive, the foregoing factors provide a foundation for the court's exercise of discretion in determining whether to require the witness to post security to secure his attendance at trial, and if so, the amount of security to be required." (86 C.A.4th 1079.)

(e) Periodic Reviews. The statute also provides for a 2-day and a 10-day review. At these reviews, the court should consider any relevant change in circumstances in determining whether to continue the detention, including whether the witness credibly has changed his or her attitude toward appearing at trial, or toward accepting a lesser, feasible alternative to custody. Further, P.C. 1332(d) must be construed to provide a review every 10 days. (86 C.A.4th 1079.)

(f) Remand Required in This Case. A review of the entire record in this case indicates that the immediate release of the minors is not warranted. Nevertheless, on remand, the minors should be given the benefit of the procedures and considerations set forth in this opinion. "The appellate court is not the proper forum to resolve all the various factors that must inform the decision whether to continue to detain petitioners in lieu of bail, or whether to reduce or eliminate the requirement of posting bail altogether." (86 C.A.4th 1079.) (See In re D.W. (2004) 123 C.A.4th 491, 499, 20 C.R.3d 274 [woman who was ordered incarcerated as uncooperative material witness was illegally deprived of her liberty, where she was denied counsel and proper hearings required by P.C. 1332].)

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 9

[§ 9] Nature of Act.

Under the Uniform Act to Secure the Attendance of Witnesses from Without the State in Criminal Cases (P.C. 1334 et seq.; 11 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), p. 1), if a judge of a court of record in this state issues a certificate, a judge in a foreign state will order a material witness to attend a criminal trial. (P.C. 1334.3.) The statute, while doubtless intended chiefly for the use of prosecuting officials, seems clearly available to the defendant as well. (See generally 11 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), p. 2 et seq.; People v. Cavanaugh (1968) 69 C.2d 262, 70 C.R. 438, 444 P.2d 110, infra, §11; *Vannier v. (On sufficiency of evidence to support or require finding that out-of-state witness is "material" witness, justifying certificate to secure attendance, see 12 A.L.R.4th 742; on sufficiency of evidence to support or require finding that witness is "material and necessary," justifying issuance of summons directing attendance, see 12 A.L.R.4th 771.)

Indigent defendants are entitled to obtain material witnesses at public expense. (People v. Cavanaugh, supra, 69 C.2d 269.)

[§ 10] Certificate as Prima Facie Evidence.

In Vannier v. Superior Court (1982) 32 C.3d 163, 185 C.R. 427, 650 P.2d 302, petitioners challenged certificates issued in Florida to require their appearance before a county grand jury, as material and necessary witnesses. Held, the certificates were valid.

(a) Although the affidavit on which they were based did not indicate the testimony expected, to require such a showing would greatly impair the applicability of the Uniform Act. Florida officials, unaware of the testimony to be obtained, are not in a position to show that they cannot secure similar testimony from other sources. (32 C.3d 173.)

(b) The claim of petitioners that the affidavit was a product of illegal electronic surveillance can and should be raised in the requesting state, where it is far more likely to have occurred; a hearing in the rendering state would often require transportation of witnesses, delaying and rendering ineffective the Uniform Act. (32 C.3d 176, 177.)

2. Criminal Cases.

d. Out-of-State Witnesses: Uniform Act.

3. Limitation of Cumulative Evidence.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 11

[§ 11] Limitation of Cumulative Evidence.

In People v. Cavanaugh (1968) 69 C.2d 262, 70 C.R. 438, 444 P.2d 110, defendant, charged with armed robbery, sought to have 11 alibi witnesses brought from Massachusetts to testify that he was there at the time of the charged offense. His affidavit was vague as to the proposed testimony of some and silent as to the remainder. The trial judge allowed his counsel to take depositions of all on written interrogatories, with the public defender of Boston as commissioner. Seven gave answers, defendant moved that four be brought here, but the judge thought there was considerable overlapping, and allowed only two. At the trial, these two testified, defendant was permitted to read the interrogatories of the absent ones, and the judge fully explained the circumstances to the jury and instructed them not to discount deposition testimony. Held, there was no abuse of discretion.

(a) The constitutional right to compulsory process runs only to persons who can be compelled, i.e., persons within the jurisdiction. (69 C.2d 265.)

(b) Under the Uniform Act to Secure the Attendance of Witnesses, the judge of the requesting state must first determine that a proposed witness would be material, and then the judge may demand; i.e., even bringing a material witness is within the judge's sound discretion. (69 C.2d 262.)

(c) Here, the factor of cost, out of proportion to the benefit of the cumulative testimony, was not given undue weight. Even a wealthy defendant, who might be able to pay for an out-of-state witness' transportation, cannot compel the witness to come; discretion must still be exercised by the judge. And, even if witnesses are willing to come, their testimony may be excluded under the general power to limit cumulative evidence (see 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §67). (69 C.2d 269.)

[§ 12] No Attorneys' Fees for Successful Resistance.

In M.C.A. v. California (1982) 128 C.A.3d 225, 181 C.R. 404, an order under P.C. 1334.2 compelling plaintiff to appear before a Florida grand jury was reversed on appeal, with costs to plaintiff. On remand, he made a motion for reimbursement by the state for all expenses and attorneys' fees incurred at both the trial and appellate levels. Held, the motion was properly denied. The Uniform Act to Secure the Attendance of Witnesses from Without the State in Criminal Cases contains no provision for an award of attorneys' fees, and C.C.P. 1987.2, a civil discovery statute (see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §226), cannot be applied to proceedings under the Act, for a number of reasons:

(a) C.C.P. 1987.2 authorizes an award against a party litigant who seeks a subpoena without adequate justification; California did not seek to subpoena plaintiff, but merely processed Florida's request. (128 C.A.3d 228.)

(b) The Act mandated the court receiving the certificate to direct the witness to appear at a hearing, and the court merely performed its statutory duty. (128 C.A.3d 228, 229.)

(c) Proceedings under the Act require a hearing before issuance of the subpoena, and a reluctant witness necessarily incurs expenses in resisting its issuance; this inevitable cost reflects the nature of the proceeding, not a court's bad faith. (128 C.A.3d 229.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

I. ATTENDANCE AND COMPENSATION

B. When Witnesses Must Attend.

3. Prisoners.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 13

[§ 13] Prisoners.

In either civil or criminal proceedings, procedures are available to bring in witnesses who are confined in state prison or a county jail. (On appearance of federal prisoners, see Barber v. Page (1968) 390 U.S. 719, 88 S.Ct. 1318, 1321, 20 L.Ed.2d 255, 259, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §28.)

(1) Live Testimony or Deposition. In civil proceedings, the witness may be produced if in the county jail; otherwise his deposition must be taken. (C.C.P. 1995 et seq.; see P.C. 1567 [form of order to bring prisoner before court]; C.E.B., 1 Civil Proc. During Trial 3d, §4.32; on right of indigent prisoner defendant in civil case to appearance by appointed counsel, see Payne v. Superior Court (1976) 17 C.3d 908, 132 C.R. 405, 553 P.2d 565, 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §75.)

In criminal proceedings, if the court does not order personal attendance of the prisoner witness, his or her deposition may be taken. (P.C. 2620 et seq.; see P.C. 1567, supra.)

(2) Electronic Audiovisual Testimony. In a preliminary hearing or a criminal or civil trial, the court may order an incarcerated witness to testify by way of two-way electronic audiovisual communication. However, this procedure may be used in criminal trials only with the consent of both parties expressed in open court and on waiver of the defendant's right to compel the witness' physical presence. The waiver may be rescinded on a showing of good cause. No inducement may be given, or penalty imposed, in connection with the defendant's consent to this procedure. (P.C. 2624.)

(4) Writ of Habeas Corpus Ad Testificandum Superseded. The statutory procedures above cover the field, superseding the common law writ of habeas corpus ad testificandum. (In re Bagwell (1938) 26 C.A.2d 418, 79 P.2d 395.) In the foregoing case, petitioner, an inmate of the state prison, filed a civil suit and sought the common law writ to enable him to appear and testify in his action. Held, the writ did not lie, and he was not entitled to relief under the statutes. The court pointed out that, under C.C.P. 1997, the attendance of a prisoner in the county jail may be required; but, here, he was in the state prison, and personal production was in the court's discretion. (26 C.A.2d 419.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

I. ATTENDANCE AND COMPENSATION

C. Protection Against Reprisal.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 14

[§ 14] Protection Against Reprisal.

The duty of a person properly served to testify (supra, §2), and the rule that privileges to refuse are strictly limited to those set forth in express statutes (infra, §60), necessarily imply that the witness who performs his duty will receive adequate legal protection. The principal safeguards are as follows:

(1) Testimonial Privilege. Testimony is absolutely privileged and cannot be the basis of a tort action for defamation. (See 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §§2192, 2195f; 5 Summary (9th), Torts, §504 et seq.; see also Briscoe v. LaHue (1983) 460 U.S. 325, 103 S.Ct. 1108, 75 L.Ed.2d 96, 5 Summary (9th), Torts, §321 [convicted person may not recover damages under federal Civil Rights Act from police officer witness who allegedly gave perjured testimony at criminal trial].)

A similar protection against improper reprisals was discussed in Bernstein v. Alameda-Contra Costa Med. Assn. (1956) 139 C.A.2d 241, 293 P.2d 862. Petitioner was expelled from a county medical association for violation of the American Medical Association Principles of Medical Ethics. One charge was based on a disparaging statement about another physician made by petitioner in a medical report for use in an Industrial Accident Commission proceeding. Held, the same policy which gives an absolute privilege for such evidence against a defamation suit "should ban a medical association by-law which holds over each of the members the threat of expulsion if in his testimony (oral or written) before a court or other judicial body he 'disparages, by comment or insinuation,' another physician. ... It is inconceivable that the law could tolerate the holding of such a sword of Damocles over any medical witness in any judicial proceeding." (139 C.A.2d 246.) The court declared that the Canon should be construed as inapplicable to witnesses, observing, "We are loath to read into the Principles of Medical Ethics an intent upon the part of the American Medical Association to interfere with the judicial process." (139 C.A.2d 247.) (See 77 Harv. L. Rev. 339.)

(2) Criminal Penalties and Sanctions. Both the federal Victim and Witness Protection Act of 1982 (18 U.S.C., §1512 et seq.) and California law (P.C. 136 et seq.; see generally 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Governmental Authority, §5 et seq.) provide criminal penalties and other sanctions to prevent intimidation of witnesses.

(3) Witness Protection Programs. In an official proceeding concerning an organized crime or other serious offense, the federal Witness Security Reform Act of 1984 (18 U.S.C., §3521 et seq.) authorizes the Attorney General to provide for relocation or other measures to protect government witnesses against crimes of violence or obstruction of justice. (18 U.S.C., §3521(a)(1).) However, no protection is authorized if the risk of danger to the public outweighs the need for the witness' testimony. (18 U.S.C., §3521(c).) (See 36 Stanf. L. Rev. 1017.)

The protective measures that may be taken include furnishing documents to enable the witness to establish a new identity; providing the witness with housing, transportation for his or her property, and money for basic living expenses; and assisting the witness in obtaining employment. (18 U.S.C., §3521(b)(1).)

California's Witness Protection Act (P.C. 14020 et seq.), enacted in 1997, also provides for the protection and relocation of a witness in a criminal proceeding where credible evidence establishes that there is a substantial danger that the witness may suffer intimidation or retaliatory violence. (See 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Governmental Authority, §5.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

I. ATTENDANCE AND COMPENSATION

D. Compensation of Ordinary Witnesses.

1. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 15

[§ 15] In General.

(1) Right Dependent on Statute. It is within the state's power to compel witnesses to attend without compensation; thus, the right to compensation is limited by statute. (See Govt.C. 204; Naylor v. Adams (1911) 15 C.A. 353, 356, 114 P. 997; Fabricant v. Superior Court (1980) 104 C.A.3d 905, 908, 163 C.R. 894 [special fees cannot be awarded to attorney witnesses either as witness fees or as sanctions under the inherent powers of the court]; C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Trial §8.19.) Conversely, where the statute gives compensation, the court cannot by a local practice deny it. (Engel v. Ehret (1913) 21 C.A. 112, 115, 130 P. 1197 [practice of San Francisco court to deny mileage to witnesses residing in San Francisco].) (On right of witness in custody, see 50 A.L.R.2d 1439; on witness in deposition proceeding, see C.C.P. 1986.5, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §39.)

Unless he or she is a party or an expert witness, a public employee subpoenaed as a witness is entitled to a leave of absence with pay for the difference between the employee's regular earnings and the amount received for the appearance. (Govt.C. 1230.1.)
