CHAPTER X - Discovery

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES

F. Time Limits on Discovery.

1. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 23

[§ 23] In General.

(1) 30-Day Time Limit. Most discovery proceedings must be completed on or before the 30th day before the initial trial date and motions must be heard on or before the 15th day before that date. Until those dates, a party is entitled to conduct discovery "as a matter of right." (C.C.P. 2024(a); see Wagner v. Superior Court (1993) 12 C.A.4th 1314, 1318, 16 C.R.2d 534 [trial judge's setting of discovery cutoff date when no trial date had been set denied plaintiffs their statutory right to conduct discovery up to 30 days before trial]; C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §2.18.) Discovery is considered completed on the day a response is due or on the day a deposition begins. (C.C.P. 2024(a).) When the last day to perform or complete a discovery act falls on a Saturday, Sunday, or holiday, the time limit is extended until the next business day. (C.C.P. 2024(g).)

(2) Exceptions. The 30-day and 15-day time limits of C.C.P. 2024(a) are not applicable in the following situations:

(a) Eminent domain proceedings under C.C.P. 1230.010 et seq. (8 Summary (9th), Constitutional Law, §954 et seq.). (C.C.P. 2024(c)(2).)

(b) Summary proceedings to obtain possession of real property under C.C.P. 1159 et seq. (5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §597 et seq.). In these proceedings, discovery must be completed on or before the 5th day before the date set for trial, although the extensions of time provided in C.C.P. 2024(e) and 2024(f) (infra, §24) are available. (C.C.P. 2024(c)(1).)

(c) Proceedings for the exchange of information concerning expert witnesses under C.C.P. 2034 (infra, §178 et seq.). These proceedings must be completed on or before the 15th day before the initial trial date, and corresponding motions must be heard on or before the 10th day before that date. (C.C.P. 2024(d).)

(3) Sequence and Timing of Discovery Methods. In the absence of a contrary Judicial Council rule, local court rule, or local uniform written policy, the methods of discovery may be used in any sequence. The fact that one party is conducting discovery, whether by deposition or another method, must not delay another party's discovery. "However, on motion and for good cause shown, the court may establish the sequence and timing of discovery for the convenience of parties and witnesses and in the interests of justice." (C.C.P. 2019(c), based on F.R. Civ. P., Rule 26(d).)

"This provision ... aims to eliminate any fixed priority in the sequence of discovery, and to make clear and explicit the court's power to establish priority by an order based on the peculiar needs of a particular case. Most particularly, the Commission aims to end any notion that one who first serves deposition notices thereby acquires the power to delay an adversary's discovery until those depositions are concluded." (Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2019(c), in 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) 30-Day Time Limit. C.C.P. 2024(a) was amended in 2000 to provide that when the 15th or 30th day before the initial trial date falls on a Saturday, Sunday, or holiday, the deadline will instead fall on the next successive court day.

C.C.P. 2024 was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2024.010 et seq. in 2004. The portion of the section setting forth the 30-day and 15-day time limits was transferred to C.C.P. 2024.020(a). The portion of the section relating to holidays and weekends was transferred to C.C.P. 2016.060, which provides that when "the last day to perform or complete any act provided for in this title falls on a Saturday, Sunday, or holiday," as specified in C.C.P. 10, the time limit is extended until "the next court day closer to the trial date."

See Fairmont Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (2000) 22 C.4th 245, 247, 92 C.R.2d 70, 991 P.2d 156 [in case of mistrial, order granting new trial, or remand for new trial after reversal on appeal, discovery is reopened and last date for completing discovery is 15 days before date initially set for new trial]; C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 4th, §1.66 et seq.

(2) Exceptions.(a) Eminent domain: C.C.P. 2024(c)(2) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2024.040(b)(2) in 2004 without substantive change.

Cross-Reference: 8 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §1170 et seq.

(b) Summary proceedings for possession of real property: C.C.P. 2024(c)(1) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2024.040(b)(1) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2024(e) and 2024(f) were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2024.050 and 2024.060 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 1170.8, added in 2007, provides that, in any action under C.C.P. 1159 et seq., a discovery motion may be made at any time upon giving 5 days' notice. The Law Revision Commission Comment states that the section is intended to provide for an expedited hearing on a discovery motion in a forcible entry or forcible or unlawful detainer case.

(c) Proceedings for exchange of expert witness information: C.C.P. 2024(d) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2024.030 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2034 was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

(d) Judicial arbitrations: C.C.P. 2024(b) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2024.040(a) in 2004 without substantive change.

(3) Sequence and Timing of Discovery Methods. C.C.P. 2019(c), on the sequence and timing of discovery, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2019.020 in 2004 without substantive change.

See Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2019(d), in Hogan, 2 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, Appendix D.

CHAPTER X - Discovery

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES

F. Time Limits on Discovery.

2. Extensions of Time.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 24

[§ 24] Extensions of Time.

(1) By Agreement. With the consent of an affected party, the parties may agree to extend the time for completing discovery or hearing discovery motions, or may agree to reopen discovery after a new trial date has been set. The agreement may be informal, but must be confirmed in a writing specifying the extended date. It may not require the court to grant a continuance or postponement of the trial. (C.C.P. 2024(f); see Pham v. Nguyen (1997) 54 C.A.4th 11, 18, 62 C.R.2d 422, 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, Supp., §8 [trial judge did not abuse discretion in denying continuance request stipulated to in writing by both parties; although parties claimed they had not had time to depose expert witnesses, request was made only 4 days before trial].)

(2) By Leave of Court. On motion, accompanied by a declaration showing a reasonable and good faith attempt at an informal resolution of each issue presented, the court may allow discovery proceedings to be completed, or a motion concerning discovery to be heard, closer to the initial trial date, or may reopen discovery after a new trial date has been set. (C.C.P. 2024(e); on F.R. Civ. P., Rule 56(f) [permitting court to extend discovery period for party opposing summary judgment motion], see 45 Hastings L. J. 1; on monetary sanctions for failure to attempt informal resolution, see infra, §252.) The court may consider any relevant matter in exercising its discretion to grant or deny the motion for extension of time, including the following:

(a) The need for the discovery. (C.C.P. 2024(e)(1).)

(b) The diligence or lack of diligence of the moving party and the reasons that the discovery was not completed or the motion was not heard earlier. (C.C.P. 2024(e)(2).)

(c) The likelihood that granting the motion will delay the trial, interfere with the trial calendar, or result in prejudice to another party. (C.C.P. 2024(e)(3).)

(d) The length of time elapsed between a previous trial date and the present trial date. (C.C.P. 2024(e)(4).)

The court must impose a monetary sanction under C.C.P. 2023, infra, §252, against a party, person, or attorney who unsuccessfully makes or opposes a motion to extend or reopen discovery. However, the sanction may be avoided if the court finds that the one subject to the sanction acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make imposing the sanction unjust. (C.C.P. 2024(e).)

Except as provided by C.C.P. 2024(e), a continuance or postponement of the trial date does not operate to reopen discovery proceedings. (C.C.P. 2024(a).)

(3) Extensions for Mail. The provisions of C.C.P. 1013 (relating to extensions of time when service is made by mail) are applicable to any discovery method or motion in C.C.P. 2016 et seq. (C.C.P. 2019(e); see California Accounts v. Superior Court (1975) 50 C.A.3d 483, 487, 123 C.R. 304 [defendant's answers to interrogatories served on plaintiff by mail; time for plaintiff's motion to compel further answers was 30 days plus 5 days]; see also Karz v. Karl (1982) 137 C.A.3d 637, 646, 187 C.R. 183 [5-day extension applicable to notice of motion to compel further answers]; on C.C.P. 1013, see 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, §28.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) By Agreement. C.C.P. 2024(f), on agreements to extend or reopen discovery, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2024.060 in 2004 without substantive change. (2) By Leave of Court. C.C.P. 2024(e), on motions to extend or reopen discovery by leave of court, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2024.050 in 2004 without substantive change. As before, the matters to be taken into consideration include:

(a) Need for discovery. (C.C.P. 2024.050(b)(1).)

(b) Diligence. (C.C.P. 2024.050(b)(2).)

(c) Likelihood of delay, interference, or prejudice. (C.C.P. 2024.050(b)(3).)

(d) Length of time between previous and present trial date. (C.C.P. 2024.050(b)(4).)

The portion of C.C.P. 2024(e) relating to monetary sanctions was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2024.050(c) in 2004 without substantive change, and the statute generally authorizing monetary sanctions (C.C.P. 2023) was replaced by C.C.P. 2023.010 et seq.

The portion of C.C.P. 2024(a) relating to the effect of continuances and postponements was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2024.020(b) in 2004 without substantive change.

(3) Extensions for Mail. C.C.P. 2019(e), on extensions of time where service is by mail, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2016.050 in 2004. The former statute referred to both "method of discovery" and "motion for discovery." The new statute refers to "method of discovery" and "motion." This change was intended to make clear that the statute applies to motions for protective orders as well as discovery motions. (Law Rev. Com. Comment.)

CHAPTER X - Discovery

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES

G. Court Implementation of Procedures.

1. Discretion of Trial Judge.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 25

[§ 25] Discretion of Trial Judge.

(1) Areas of Discretion. Where a particular section requires a showing of "good cause" (e.g., C.C.P. 2017(d) regarding sexual history and C.C.P. 2032(d) on physical or mental examination), discretion is obviously involved. Moreover, most of the discovery procedures are subject to protective order provisions (infra, §241), under which the trial judge may limit discovery for good cause shown. (See Greyhound Corp. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 C.2d 355, 379, 15 C.R. 90, 364 P.2d 266; Asbestos Claims Facility v. Berry & Berry (1990) 219 C.A.3d 9, 23, 267 C.R. 896, 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Courts, §245 [trial judges had discretion to designate defense counsel to schedule discovery for defendants in complex litigation].)

(2) Correct Approach to Discretion. In exercising their discretion, trial judges should consider the following:

- (a) The purpose of the information sought;
- (b) The effect that disclosure will have on the parties and on the trial;
- (c) The nature of the objections urged by the party resisting disclosure; and

(d) The ability of the court to make an alternative order granting partial disclosure, disclosure in another form, or disclosure only in the event that the party seeking the information undertakes certain specified burdens that appear just under the circumstances. (Greyhound Corp. v. Superior Court, supra, 56 C.2d 382.)

With these considerations in mind, the judge may grant the request in full, in part, or subject to specified limitations or deny the request in toto. (Greyhound Corp. v. Superior Court, supra, 56 C.2d 382; see C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Discovery §2.13 et seq.) (On continuing validity of Greyhound's discussion of discretion, see C.J.E.R., Judge's Benchbook, Discovery §2.17; for other discussions of discretion, see Suezaki v. Superior Court (1962) 58 C.2d 166, 179, 23 C.R. 368, 373 P.2d 432; Oceanside Union School Dist. v. Superior Court (1962) 58 C.2d 180, 192, 23 C.R. 375, 373 P.2d 439; Hauk v. Superior Court (1964) 61 C.2d 295, 299, 38 C.R. 345, 391 P.2d 825; Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Superior Court (1970) 2 C.3d 161, 171, 84 C.R. 718, 465 P.2d 854 [quoting Greyhound]; Lipton v. Superior Court (1996) 48 C.A.4th 1599, 1612, 56 C.R.2d 341.)

(3) Abuse of Discretion. Disclosure should not be wholly precluded merely because some annoyance or oppression is shown. If the only valid objection is an undue burden, the judge should consider the alternatives of imposing costs or partial approval. (Greyhound Corp. v. Superior Court, supra, 56 C.2d 380.) And the judge should not sustain the technical objection that a party has proceeded under the wrong section. (56 C.2d 381.)

(4) Trial Judge's Opinion. Rather than entering simple orders granting or denying the right to have information disclosed, trial judges should state the reasons for their decisions. Although the judge need not always make findings as a basis of an order, "a careful trial judge, faced with a questionable request for discovery, will find some way to let the record show the basis of [the judge's] determination." (Greyhound Corp. v. Superior Court, supra, 56 C.2d 384; see Steele v. Superior Court (1961) 56 C.2d 402, 405, footnote 1, 15 C.R. 116, 364 P.2d 292 [trial judge denied discovery, and explained in memorandum opinion that he felt bound by prior appellate decision].)

(5) Delegation of Discretion. The trial judge may, on a party's application or the judge's own motion, appoint a referee to hear and determine a discovery motion or dispute. (C.C.P. 639(e); C.R.C., Rule 244.2(e).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Areas of Discretion. C.C.P. 2017(d), requiring a showing of good cause for discovery of plaintiff's sexual conduct with others, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2017.220(a) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2032(d), requiring a showing of good cause in support of a motion for a physical or mental examination, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.320(a) in 2004 without substantive change.

See San Diego Unified Port Dist. v. Douglas E. Barnhart (2002) 95 C.A.4th 1400, 1405, 116 C.R.2d 65 [in action arising from defects in design and construction of airport terminal floor, trial judge abused discretion in ordering all defendants to share costs of destructive testing to be performed on floor, where two defendants did not request testing and did not want it; court's inherent power to exercise reasonable control over discovery does not authorize it to require parties to incur substantial, nonrecoverable costs for unwanted discovery]. (5) Delegation of Discretion. C.C.P. 639(e) was relettered C.C.P. 639(a)(5) in 2000.

C.R.C., Rule 244.2(e) was renumbered C.R.C., Rule 3.920(c) in 2006.

CHAPTER X - Discovery

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES

G. Court Implementation of Procedures.

2. Limitations on Filing of Papers.

[§ 26] Limitations on Filing of Papers.

C.R.C., Rules 201.5 (superior courts) and 501.5 (municipal courts) curtail the filing of specified papers, including the following:

- (1) Subpena.
- (2) Subpena duces tecum.
- (3) Deposition notice, and response.
- (4) Notice of intention to record testimony by audio or video tape.
- (5) Agreement to set or extend time for deposition, agreement to extend time for response to discovery requests, and notice of these agreements.
- (6) Declaration for additional discovery.
- (7) Agreement for physical and mental examinations.
- (8) Demand for delivery of medical reports, and response.
- (9) Stipulation to enlarge the scope or number of discovery requests from that specified by statute, and notice of the stipulation.
- (10) Notice to produce party, agent, or tangible things before a court, and response.

The specified papers, whether offered separately or as attachments to other documents, "may not be filed unless offered as relevant to the determination of an issue in a law and motion proceeding or other hearing, or are ordered filed for good cause." (C.R.C., Rules 201.5(a), 501.5(a).)

Unless the paper served is a response, the party who serves a specified paper must retain the original with the original proof of service affixed. The original of a response must be served, and it must be retained by the person on whom it is served. All original papers must be retained for 6 months after final disposition of the cause, "unless the court on motion of any party and for good cause shown orders the original papers preserved for a longer period."

(C.R.C., Rules 201.5(b), 501.5(b).)

As used in these rules, "papers" include printed forms furnished by the clerk, but not notices filed and served by the clerk. (C.R.C., Rules 201.5(c), 501.5(c).)

C.R.C., Rule 501.5 was repealed in 2001.

Under C.R.C., Rule 201.5(a), as amended in 2002, the filing restriction applies to:

- (1) Subpena.
- (2) Subpena duces tecum.
- (3) Deposition notice, and response.
- (4) Notice to consumer or employee, and objection.
- (5) Notice of intention to record testimony by audio- or videotape.
- (6) Notice of intention to take an oral deposition by telephone, videoconference, or other remote electronic means.
- (7) Agreement to set or extend time for deposition, agreement to extend time for response to discovery requests, and notice of these agreements.
- (8) Interrogatories, and responses or objections to interrogatories.
- (9) Demand for production or inspection of documents, things, and places, and responses or objections to demand.
- (10) Request for admissions, and responses or objections to request.
- (11) Agreement for physical and mental examinations.
- (12) Demand for delivery of medical reports, and response.
- (13) Demand for exchange of expert witnesses.
- (14) Demand for production of discoverable reports and writings of expert witnesses.
- (15) List of expert witnesses whose opinion a party intends to offer in evidence at trial and declaration.
- (16) Statement that a party does not presently intend to offer the testimony of any expert witness.
- (17) Declaration for additional discovery.
- (18) Stipulation to enlarge the scope of number of discovery requests from that specified by statute, and notice of the stipulation.
- (19) Demand for bill of particulars or an accounting, and response.
- (20) Request for statement of damages, and response, unless it is accompanied by a request to enter default and is the notice of special and general damages.
- (21) Notice of deposit of jury fees.

(22) Notice to produce party, agent, or tangible things before a court, and response.

(23) Offer to compromise, unless accompanied by an original proof of acceptance and a written judgment for the court's signature and entry of judgment.

C.R.C., Rule 201.5 was renumbered C.R.C., Rule 3.250 in 2006. C.R.C., Rule 201.5(a), supra, became C.R.C., Rule 3.250(a). C.R.C., Rule 201.5(b) and 201.5(c) became C.R.C., Rule 3.250(b) and 3.250(c), respectively.

3. Modification of Procedures by Agreement.

[§ 27] Modification of Procedures by Agreement.

Unless the court orders otherwise, the parties may, by written stipulation, modify the procedures specified by the Civil Discovery Act of 1986. (C.C.P. 2021, based on F.R. Civ. P., Rule 29.) Court approval for a stipulation is not required, but the court may prohibit or veto a stipulation that C.C.P. 2021 would otherwise permit. (Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2021, in 2 Hogan, Cal. ## I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES

G. Court Implementation of Procedures.

4. Motion To Compel.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 28

[§ 28] Motion To Compel.

(1) Use of Motion. Court involvement with discovery often results from one party making a motion to compel a response to a discovery request or compliance with a demand. (See, e.g., C.C.P. 2025(o), infra, §70 [answer to deposition question or production of documents at deposition], 2030(l), infra, §116 [answers to interrogatories], 2031(m), infra, §138 [demands for inspection], 2033(l), infra, §177 [requests for admissions].)

(2) Format of Motion. A motion to compel further responses to interrogatories, inspection demands, or admission requests and a motion to compel answers to questions propounded at a deposition or to compel production of documents or tangible things at a deposition must be accompanied by a separate document which sets forth each interrogatory, item or category of items, request, question, document or tangible thing to which further response, answer, or production is requested, the response given, and the factual and legal reasons for compelling it. Material may not be incorporated by reference, except that the separate document may incorporate identical responses and factual and legal reasons previously stated in the document. No other statements or summaries can be required as part of the motion to compel. (C.R.C., Rule 335(a); see C.E.B., 2 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §§7.97, 7.98, 8.55, 8.56; 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §2.29.)

(3) Identification of Interrogatories, Demands, or Requests. A motion concerning interrogatories, inspection demands, or admission requests must identify the interrogatories, demands, or requests by set and number. (C.R.C., Rule 335(b).)

(4) Reference to Other Responses. If the response to a particular interrogatory is dependent on the response given to another interrogatory, or if the reasons a further response to a particular interrogatory is deemed necessary are based on the response to another interrogatory, the other interrogatory and its response must be set forth. (C.R.C., Rule 335(c).)

(5) Reference to Other Documents. If the pleadings, other documents in the file, or other items of discovery are relevant to the motion, the party relying on them must summarize each relevant document. (C.R.C., Rule 335(d).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Use of Motion. C.C.P. 2025(o), on motions to compel answers to depositions or produce documents, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.480 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2030(l), on motions to compel answers to interrogatories, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.300 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2031(m), on motions to compel response to an inspection demand, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2031.310 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2033(l), on motions to compel further response to a request for admissions, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.290 in 2004 without substantive change.

(2) Format of Motion. C.R.C., Rule 335 was amended effective July 1, 2001, and was renumbered C.R.C., Rule 3.1020 in 2006.

Under C.R.C., Rule 3.1020(a), any motion involving the content of a discovery request or the responses to a discovery request must be accompanied by a "separate statement," as defined in C.R.C., Rule 3.1020(c), infra, this section. The motions subject to this requirement include: (a) a motion to compel further responses to requests for admission; (b) a motion to compel further responses to interrogatories; (c) a motion to compel further responses to demand for inspection of documents or tangible things; (d) a motion to compel answers at a deposition; (e) a motion to compel or to quash the production of documents or tangible things at a deposition; (f) a motion for a medical examination over objection; and (g) a motion for issue or evidentiary sanctions.

Under C.R.C., Rule 3.1020(b), a separate statement is not required when no response has been provided to the discovery request.

Under C.R.C., Rule 3.1020(c), a separate statement is defined as "a separate document filed and served with the discovery motion that sets forth all the information necessary to understand each discovery request and all the responses to it that are at issue." The statement must be full and complete so that no person need review any other document in order to determine the full request and the full response. Material may not be incorporated into the statement by reference, and the statement must include, for each discovery request to which a further response, answer, or production is requested:

"(1) The text of the request, interrogatory, question, or inspection demand;"

"(2) The text of each response, answer, or objection, and any further responses or answers;"

"(3) A statement of the factual and legal reasons for compelling further responses, answers, or production as to each matter in dispute;"

"(4) If necessary, the text of all definitions, instructions, and other matters required to understand each discovery request and the responses to it;"

"(5) If the response to a particular discovery request is dependent on the response given to another discovery request, or if the reasons a further response to a particular discovery request is deemed necessary are based on the response to some other discovery request, the other request and the response to it must be set forth; and"

"(6) If the pleadings, other documents in the file, or other items of discovery are relevant to the motion, the party relying on them shall summarize each relevant document."

See C.E.B., 2 Civil Discovery Practice 4th, §15.30 et seq.; Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §2.29.(3) Identification of Interrogatories, Demands, or Requests. C.R.C., Rule 335(b) was relettered C.R.C., Rule 335(d) without substantive change, effective July 1, 2001, and was renumbered C.R.C., Rule 3.1020(d) in 2006.

(4) Reference to Other Responses. C.R.C., Rule 335(c) was repealed effective July 1, 2001, and was replaced by an expanded C.R.C., Rule 335(c), incorporating the requirements of the former subdivision into C.R.C., Rule 335(c)(5). C.R.C., Rule 335(c)(5) was renumbered C.R.C., Rule 3.1020(c)(5) (see supra) in 2006.

(5) Reference to Other Documents. C.R.C., Rule 335(d) was repealed effective July 1, 2001. The requirements of the former subdivision were incorporated into C.R.C., Rule 335(c)(6). C.R.C., Rule 335(c)(6) was renumbered C.R.C., Rule 3.1020(c)(6) (see supra) in 2006.

(6) (New) Effect of Failure To Oppose Motion. Failure to file a written opposition or to appear at a hearing, or the voluntary provision of discovery, does not constitute an admission that the motion was proper or that sanctions should be awarded. (C.R.C., Rule 3.1030(b), adopted effective July 1, 2001, and renumbered in 2006.)

II. DEPOSITIONS

A. In General.

1. Nature of Deposition.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 29

[§ 29] Nature of Deposition.

A deposition is a written declaration, made under oath. The adverse party is given notice of the deposition so that the party may attend and cross-examine. (C.C.P. 2004.) A deposition is one of the three modes by which testimony may be taken. (C.C.P. 2002.) (See C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Discovery, Chaps. 10, 11; Cal. Civil Practice, 2 Procedure, §13:19 et seq.; C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, Chaps. 4, 5, 6; 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery 3d, Chaps. 2, 3; 2 C.E.B., Civil Lit. Forms, §24.1 et seq.; 23 Am.Jur.2d (1983 ed.), Depositions and Discovery §108 et seq.; 4 Am.Jur. Trials 119; on use of depositions with other discovery tools, see Dunne on Depositions in California, Chap. 1.)

"The term 'deposition' is now confined in meaning to testimony delivered in writing; testimony which in legal contemplation does not exist apart from a writing made or adopted by the witness. In practice the witness usually does not write out the statements but testifies before a commissioner authorized by the court to receive and transmit it and to act as the transcriber of the oral utterance. Since it is an intermediary who makes the writing which becomes the testimony, it is specially necessary to be certain that this writing shall represent precisely the statements for which the witness stands responsible. ... The witness' signature may be regarded either as necessary to constitute the writing his by adoption, or as symbolically equivalent to a knowing assent to its tenor, or as an additional means of identifying the person of the witness." (Voorheis v. Hawthorne-Michaels Co. (1957) 151 C.A.2d 688, 693, 312 P.2d 51; see 3 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §802; on necessity of signature, see C.C.P. 2025(q), infra, §§74, 75; 8A Am.Jur. P.P. Forms (1996 ed.), Depositions and Discovery, Form 56; on recording by videotape, see infra, §67 et seq.; on right of defendant in criminal contempt proceeding to obtain information by deposition, see 33 A.L.R.5th 761.)

A deposition is said to be a proceeding of the court in which the action is being tried, and under its control. This is so despite the fact that a nonjudicial officer may take the testimony; by giving this authority to such a person, the law makes him or her an ex officio officer of the court for the purposes of the deposition. (See Hays v. Superior Court (1940) 16 C.2d 260, 265, 105 P.2d 975.) However, taking a deposition for discovery purposes should be distinguished from its evidentiary use at the trial. (See 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §153 et seq.; BAJI (8th ed.), No. 2.06 [treatment of testimony read from deposition].)

California recognizes both oral depositions (infra, §39 et seq.) and depositions by written questions (infra, §80 et seq.) as separate and distinct discovery devices. The general rules set out in C.C.P. 2025 et seq. (infra, §30 et seq.) apply to both types of depositions. (See C.C.P. 2028(a).) However, written depositions have special rules governing matters such as notice of the deposition, service of questions, and procedure for taking the deposition. (See C.C.P. 2028, infra, §80.)

II. DEPOSITIONS

A. In General.

2. Whose Deposition May Be Taken.

a. General Rule.

[§ 30] General Rule.

(1) Broad Rule of Discovery. A party may take the oral deposition of any person, including any party to the action. "Person" includes a natural person, a public or private corporation, a partnership, an association, or a government entity. (C.C.P. 2025(a).) A party may also take a deposition using written questions instead of an oral examination. (C.C.P. 2028(a), infra, §80.) No showing of good cause is necessary. (Kramer v. Superior Court (1965) 237 C.A.2d 753, 755, 47 C.R. 317.) (See C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §4.7 et seq.)

(2) Illustrations. The following cases and authorities illustrate the taking of depositions of various parties and witnesses in civil actions.

(b) Coparty. (See Eades v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp. (1919) 43 C.A. 259, 260, 184 P. 884 [one defendant took another defendant's deposition, although held objectionable for lack of notice].)

(c) Ordinary witness. (See Ahern v. Superior Court (1952) 112 C.A.2d 27, 31, 245 P.2d 568; 45 Cal. L. Rev. 486, 499.)

(f) Party taking own deposition. Although the discovery purpose is lacking, a party suing or being sued in another state might wish to introduce his or her testimony by deposition instead of attending trial. California's prior decisions approved the practice without extended discussion. (See Johnston v. McDuffee (1890) 83 C. 30, 32, 23 P. 214; Kay v. Laventhal (1926) 78 C.A. 293, 297, 248 P. 555; see 13 A.L.R.3d 1312 [use of own testimony given in deposition taken by opponent]; on testimony at trial by deposition, see C.C.P. 2025(u)(3), 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §155.)

(g) Corporate or association officer or employee. (See Chronicle Publishing Co. v. Superior Court (1960) 54 C.2d 548, 561, 7 C.R. 109, 354 P.2d 637 [deposition of State Bar of California taken]; Mosier v. Southern Calif. Physicians Ins. Exchange (1998) 63 C.A.4th 1022, 1030, 74 C.R.2d 550 [defendant's employee's deposition used at trial because employee was ill]; 74 Harv. L. Rev. 940, 1026; 98 A.L.R.2d 622; but see Liberty Mut. Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1992) 10 C.A.4th 1282, 1289, 13 C.R.2d 363, infra, §62 [plaintiff could not depose corporate CEO who had no involvement in action].)

(h) Expert witness. (See St. Mary Med. Center v. Superior Court (1996) 50 C.A.4th 1531, 1537, 58 C.R.2d 182 [deposition of expert used in connection with summary judgment motion]; C.C.P. 2034(i), infra, §188; C.E.B., 2 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §11.43 et seq.)

(i) Highly placed public officers. In State Board of Pharmacy v. Superior Court (1978) 78 C.A.3d 641, 144 C.R. 320, a consumer organization was successful in an action against the State Board of Pharmacy and was awarded reasonable attorneys' fees to be later determined. The organization attempted to take the deposition of the Attorney General on the ground that he had special knowledge and unique ability to assess the impact of the case and apply the factors relevant to fixing fees; i.e., his services as an expert witness were sought. (78 C.A.3d 643, 644.) The appellate court granted mandamus to quash the subpoena, observing that a highly placed public officer should not be required to give a deposition in his official capacity in the absence of compelling reasons. (78 C.A.3d 644, citing several federal cases supporting this accepted view.) (See Nagle v. Superior Court (1994) 28 C.A.4th 1465, 1467, 1468, 34 C.R.2d 281 [action against Employment Development Department and current and former directors; directors entitled to protective order prohibiting their depositions, as plaintiff did not contend that they had personal knowledge of material issue, and plaintiff could obtain information through less intrusive means].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Broad Rule of Discovery. C.C.P. 2025(a), defining "person," was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.010 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2028(a) (deposition by written questions) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2028.010 in 2004 without substantive change.

See C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 4th, §5.6 et seq.

(2) Illustrations.(f) Party taking own deposition. C.C.P. 2025(u)(3), on testimony at trial by deposition, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.620(c) in 2004 without substantive change.

(h) Expert witness. C.C.P. 2034(i), on the deposition of expert witnesses, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.410 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

(i) Highly placed public officers. See Westly v. Superior Court (2004) 125 C.A.4th 907, 911, 23 C.R.3d 154 [in action to require state to collect money belonging to state under compacts with Indian tribes and place it in special distribution fund, trial judge abused discretion in denying protection orders preventing deposing of Attorney General and Controller; neither official had personal involvement in action that would preclude application of general rule that agency heads and other top governmental executives should not be subject to deposition absent compelling reasons]. West's Key Number Digest, Pretrial Procedure k.96 et seq.

CHAPTER X - Discovery

II. DEPOSITIONS

A. In General.

2. Whose Deposition May Be Taken.

b. Opposing Counsel.

[§ 31] Opposing Counsel.

In some circumstances, a party may wish to depose counsel for the opposing party. For example, when preparing for a hearing to determine the good faith of a sliding scale settlement under C.C.P. 877.6, the settling parties may seek to depose counsel for the nonsettling defendants to inquire whether the nonsettling defendants may have been guilty of bad faith or unreasonable conduct that impeded the settlement process and thereby made a lower settlement reasonable. (See Spectra-Physics v. Superior Court (1988) 198 C.A.3d 1487, 1490, 244 C.R. 258 [referring to settlement process discussed in Abbott Ford v. Superior Court (1987) 43 C.3d 858, 239 C.R. 626, 741 P.2d 124]; on C.C.P. 877.6 and Abbott Ford, see 5 Summary (9th), Torts, §§80, 81.)

Spectra-Physics explores the policy considerations involved in the settling party's attempt to depose opposing counsel, and concludes that the order permitting the deposition was not justified.

(a) "In the context of establishing the good faith of a settlement, reliance on advice of counsel is not obviously relevant; the objective reasonableness of the settlement is the matter in issue. ... Hence deposing counsel in this context will have limited usefulness at best. We also consider that deposing counsel during the very proceeding in which he is providing representation is plainly a disruptive process. Further, the likelihood the attorney will assert claims of work product and attorney-client privilege is great, and therefore, as already stated, the usefulness of the procedure is questionable." (198 C.A.3d 1496.)

(b) "The circumstances under which opposing counsel may be deposed are limited to those where (1) no other means exist to obtain the information than to depose opposing counsel; (2) the information sought is relevant and not privileged; (3) the information is crucial to the preparation of the case." (198 C.A.3d 1496.)

(c) In the present case, the settling party had other means to obtain information, and the information was not crucial. Hence, "we conclude that the showing made by [the deposing party] up to now simply does not justify this unpalatable procedure which erodes the adversary system and adds to the already burdensome time and costs of the good faith settlement hearing, which already in Abbott Ford's wake threatens to evolve from mini-trial to full dress production approaching in cost and scope the trial to come." (198 C.A.3d 1497.) (See Trade Center Properties v. Superior Court (1960) 185 C.A.2d 409, 411, 8 C.R. 345, infra, §62 [absent showing of "extremely good cause," plaintiff could not depose defendant's attorney to obtain copy of statement taken by attorney from third party]; Estate of Ruchi (1993) 12 C.A.4th 1593, 1601, 16 C.R.2d 151 [in probate proceedings, trial judge properly granted protective order to prevent decedent's son from deposing coexecutors' attorney, where three-part test of Spectra-Physics was not satisfied].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Carehouse Convalescent Hosp. v. Superior Court (2006) 143 C.A.4th 1558, 1564, 50 C.R.3d 129 [in action against skilled nursing facility, trial judge erred in granting plaintiffs' motion to compel counsel for defendant to provide, by deposition if necessary, response to request for information compiled by counsel concerning defendant's staffing logs; information was protected by work product doctrine, and plaintiffs failed to show that they had no other means of obtaining information or that it was crucial to case].

II. DEPOSITIONS

A. In General.

3. Time When Deposition May Be Taken.

a. By Plaintiff.

[§ 32] By Plaintiff.

The former federal rule provided a 20-day waiting period for the plaintiff (except by leave of court), to permit the defendant to obtain counsel and prepare for the inquiry. This waiting period was adopted in California. The plaintiff may serve a deposition notice without leave of court 20 or more days after the service of the summons on, or appearance by, any defendant. However, on motion with or without notice, the court, for good cause shown, may grant a plaintiff leave to serve a deposition notice on an earlier date. (C.C.P. 2025(b)(2); see C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §4.23 et seq.; 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §2.2; on latest time that deposition may be taken, see supra, §23; on notice requirements, which affect time of taking, see infra, §§39, 42, 49; for detailed discussion of matters to be considered when scheduling depositions, see Dunne on Depositions in California, Chap. 3.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

C.C.P. 2025(b)(2), on the time for service of a deposition notice by the plaintiff, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.210(b) in 2004 without substantive change.

II. DEPOSITIONS

A. In General.

3. Time When Deposition May Be Taken.

b. By Defendant.

[§ 33] By Defendant.

The 20-day waiting period does not apply to the defendant. The defendant may serve a deposition notice without leave of court at any time after he or she has been served or has appeared in the action, whichever occurs first. (C.C.P. 2025(b)(1).) Hence, the defendant may ordinarily take depositions before the plaintiff. (On order of taking and priority, see C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §4.24; 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §§2.2, 2.3; 74 Harv. L. Rev. 940, 954; on sequence and timing of discovery generally, see supra, §23.)

II. DEPOSITIONS

A. In General.

3. Time When Deposition May Be Taken. c. Continuance.

[§ 34] Continuance.

(1) Continuance of Main Action or Proceeding. A continuance may be granted in the action to permit a party to take a deposition or to be present at the taking of a deposition instituted by another. (See Levin v. Superior Court (1934) 139 C.A. 693, 696, 34 P.2d 832 [continuance to take]; Neil v. Gane (1932) 124 C.A. 51, 54, 12 P.2d 131 [same]; Bar Assn. v. Superior Court (1923) 64 C.A. 590, 593, 222 P. 185 [continuance so party could appear]; but see Pham v. Nguyen (1997) 54 C.A.4th 11, 17, 62 C.R.2d 422 [court did not abuse its discretion in denying stipulated request for continuance 4 days before trial based on parties' need to depose expert witnesses].)

(2) Continuance or Stay of Deposition. On a motion or ex parte application and a showing of good cause, the court may stay the taking of a deposition until the determination of a motion for a protective order (see infra, §§59 et seq., 82). (C.C.P. 2025(f); see Weisman v. Bower (1987) 193 C.A.3d 1231, 1235, 238 C.R. 756 [deposition stayed pending motion for protective order; order later denied].) A deposition may also be stayed pending determination of a written objection to the procedure specified in the deposition notice. (C.C.P. 2025(g), infra, §48; see Melancon v. Superior Court (1954) 42 C.2d 698, 707, 268 P.2d 1050 [shareholder's derivative suit; postponement pending compliance with order for deposit of security]; on continuance where party, principal witness or attorney is member of Legislature, see C.C.P. 595, 595.1.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Continuance or Stay of Deposition. C.C.P. 2025(f), on stays for the purpose of determining a protective order motion, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.270(c) in 2004 without substantive change. C.C.P. 2025.270(c) was relettered C.C.P. 2025.270(d) in 2007.

C.C.P. 2025(g), on stays for the purpose of ruling on written objections to procedures specified in the deposition notice, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.410(c) in 2004 without substantive change.

II. DEPOSITIONS

A. In General.

4. Before Whom Deposition May Be Taken.

[§ 35] Before Whom Deposition May Be Taken.

(1) Persons Authorized. A deposition in California must be taken by an officer authorized to administer oaths, except that the officer for a deposition seeking only discovery of business records for copying (see infra, §50 et seq.) must be a professional photocopier (C.C.P. 2020(d)(3)). (C.C.P. 2025(k); see C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §4.39; 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §2.21; for definition of professional photocopier, see B. & P.C. 22450.) Officers authorized to administer oaths include judges, court clerks, justices, notaries public, and certified shorthand reporters. (See C.C.P. 2093; see also C.C.P. 128(a)(7) [courts]; C.C.P. 177(4) [judicial officers], 179(3) [judges]; C.C.P. 259(d) [court commissioners]; Govt.C. 24057 [county officers and their deputies].) (On depositions taken in other states or in federal territories or possessions, see C.C.P. 2026(c), infra, §84; on depositions taken in foreign countries, see C.C.P. 2027(c), infra, §84.)

Although judges are authorized to take depositions, their usual role consists instead of responding to motions to compel or motions for protective orders, brought when the parties are unable to manage the deposition process without judicial intervention. (See C.J.E.R., Judges' Benchbook, Discovery §10.1.)

(2) Persons Excluded. The officer may not be financially interested in the action and may not be a relative or employee of a party or a party's attorney. (C.C.P. 2025(k); see C.C.P. 2020(d)(3) [similar provision for professional photocopier serving as deposition officer]; but see infra, §36 [deposition by stipulation].)

(3) Objections. An objection to a deposition officer's qualifications must be made before the deposition begins or as soon thereafter as the ground for the objection becomes known or could be discovered by reasonable diligence. (C.C.P. 2025(k); see C.C.P. 2020(d)(3) [similar provision for professional photocopier serving as deposition officer].)

Taking a deposition before one other than the person named is an inconsequential irregularity. (See Reimel v. House (1969) 268 C.A.2d 780, 786, 74 C.R. 345 [administrative proceeding; petition named notary D, actually taken before notary N, equally qualified].)

(1) Persons Authorized. C.C.P. 179(3) became C.C.P. 179(c) in 2003.

C.C.P. 259(d), authorizing court commissioners to take oaths, was deleted in 2004 as obsolete. Under C.C.P. 2093(a), "every officer or person authorized to take testimony in any action or proceeding, or to decide upon evidence, has the power to administer oaths or affirmations."

C.C.P. 2020(d)(3) (professional photocopier requirement) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2020.420 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2025(k) (requirements applicable to deposition officer) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.320 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2026(c) (depositions taken in other states) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2026.010(d) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2027(c) (depositions taken abroad) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2027.010(d) in 2004 without substantive change.

See C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 4th, §5.72; Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §2.21.(2) Persons Excluded. C.C.P. 2020(d)(3), prohibiting a deposition officer who is a professional photocopier from having a financial interest in the action, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2020.420 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2025(k) was subdivided and amended in 2000 to impose additional restrictions relating to the deposition officer's financial interest. The provision cited in the text was redesignated C.C.P. 2025(k)(1). Under C.C.P. 2025(k)(2), any services and products offered by the officer, or by the entity providing the services of the officer, must be offered to all parties or their attorneys attending the deposition. At the request of any party or any party's attorney attending the deposition, a party or party's attorney attending the deposition must enter in the record all services and products made available to the party or party's attorney, or to a third party who is financing all or part of the action, by the officer or by the entity providing the services of the officer. (C.C.P. 2025(k)(4).) The officer or entity providing the services of the officer may not provide any service or product consisting of the officer's notations or comments regarding the demeanor of any witness, attorney, or party present at the deposition to any party, party's attorney, or third party who is financing all or part of the action; the officer or entity providing the officer's services is also prohibited from collecting any personal identifying information about the witness as a service or product to be provided to any party or third party who is financing all or part of the action. (C.C.P. 2025(k)(3).)

C.C.P. 2025(k) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.320 in 2004 without substantive change.

Any violation of C.C.P. 2025.320 is punishable by a civil penalty of up to $ 5,000. (C.C.P. 2025.320(f), added in 2000 as C.C.P. 2025(v) and repealed and replaced in 2004 without substantive change.)

(3) Objections.

The portion of C.C.P. 2025(k) relating to objections to a deposition officer's qualifications was designated C.C.P. 2025(k)(5) in 2000.

C.C.P. 2025(k) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.320 in 2004 without substantive change. The portion of C.C.P. 2025(k) relating to objections became C.C.P. 2025.320(e). West's Key Number Digest, Pretrial Procedure k.138

A. In General.

5. Deposition by Stipulation.

[§ 36] Deposition by Stipulation.

Attorneys often stipulate to the manner of taking the deposition, thereby avoiding compliance with many of the statutory requirements. The stipulation may be (and preferably is) made in written form in advance, but is sometimes made orally at the time of taking. (See Estate of Short (1935) 7 C.A.2d 512, 516, 517, 47 P.2d 555; Lawson v. Steinbeck (1919) 44 C.A. 685, 689, 186 P. 842; Consolidated Lumber Co. v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland (1911) 161 C. 397, 401, 119 P. 506; Housing Authority v. Gomez (1972) 26 C.A.3d 366, 372, 102 C.R. 657 [defendant's change of residence to Spain furnished no basis for his refusal to appear for deposition on date to which attorney stipulated]; for forms, see C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §§4.43, 4.150; 2 C.E.B., Civil Lit. Forms, §24.5; 8A Am.Jur. P.P. Forms (1996 ed.), Depositions and Discovery §31 et seq.; on stipulations generally, see 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §289 et seq.)

The practice is recognized by C.C.P. 2021: Unless the court orders otherwise, the parties may stipulate in writing that depositions may be taken "before any person, at any time or place, on any notice, and in any manner" and that these depositions may be used like other depositions.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

C.C.P. 2021 was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2016.030 in 2004. C.C.P. 2016.030 provides that the parties may by written stipulation modify the procedures for "any method of discovery" permitted by C.C.P. 2019.010 (Supp., supra, §2).

See 8A Am.Jur. P.P. Forms (2004 ed.), Depositions and Discovery, Form 5 et seq.; C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 4th, §5.50.

CHAPTER X - Discovery

II. DEPOSITIONS

A. In General.

6. Multiple Depositions.

[§ 37] Multiple Depositions.

(1) General Prohibition. Once a party has taken the deposition of a natural person, including another party, neither the party taking the deposition nor any party who received notice of the deposition may take a subsequent deposition of that deponent. (C.C.P. 2025(t); see C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §4.19; 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §2.36.) C.C.P. 2025(t) had no counterpart in the former discovery statutes. "It reflects the Commission's decision that in order to minimize the demands that depositions make on the time and energy of the deponent, a person should normally be subjected to the experience only once during the course of a lawsuit." (Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2025(t), in 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C.)

(2) Exceptions. C.C.P. 2025(t) does not preclude one subsequent deposition of a natural person who was previously deposed (a) as an officer, agent or employee of an organization, or (b) pursuant to a court order under C.C.P. 485.230, for the limited purpose of discovering under that statute, the identity, location, and value of property in which the deponent has an interest. However, this does not authorize the taking of more than one subsequent deposition for the limited purpose of C.C.P. 485.230. (C.C.P. 2025(t); on C.C.P. 485.230, see 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Provisional Remedies, §89.)

For good cause, the court may grant leave to take a subsequent deposition. Moreover, the parties, with the consent of a deponent who is not a party, may stipulate that a subsequent deposition be taken. (C.C.P. 2025(t).) Finally, because C.C.P. 2025(t) applies to natural persons, multiple depositions of organizations are not prohibited.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) General Prohibition. C.C.P. 2025(t), prohibiting subsequent depositions, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.610(a) in 2004 without substantive change.

See C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 4th, §5.15; Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §2.36.

(2) Exceptions. The portion of C.C.P. 2025(t) stating exceptions to the prohibition of subsequent depositions was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.610(b)-(d) in 2004 without substantive change.

II. DEPOSITIONS

A. In General.

7. Costs of Deposition.

[§ 38] Costs of Deposition.

The prevailing party in an action may recover the costs of taking, videotaping, and transcribing depositions, including an original and one copy of depositions taken by the claimant and one copy of depositions taken by the party against whom costs are allowed. Travel expenses to attend depositions are also allowable as costs. (C.C.P. 1033.5(a)(3), 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Judgment, §125; see 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §2.43; 74 Harv. L. Rev. 940, 972; 76 A.L.R.2d 953.) These deposition costs are allowed even if the deposition is ultimately not used for evidentiary purposes. (Simpson v. Gillis (1934) 1 C.2d 42, 55, 32 P.2d 1071.)

B. Oral Depositions.

1. Securing Deponent's Attendance.

a. Party Deponent.

1. Notice Requirements.

[§ 39] Notice Requirements.

(1) Statutory Requirement. A party may depose any party to the action. (See C.C.P. 2025(a), supra, §30.) Before taking the oral deposition of a party, the deposing party must give notice in writing to every party who has appeared in the action. (C.C.P. 2025(c); see Rutter Group, 2 Civil Procedure Before Trial, §8:483 et seq.; C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §4.44; 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §2.4 et seq.; 23 Am.Jur.2d (1983 ed.), Depositions and Discovery §139 et seq.) Because the notice must be given only to parties who have appeared, notice to an adverse party in default is unnecessary.

(2) No Subpena Required. The service of a deposition notice alone is effective to require a party or an officer, director, managing agent or employee of a party to attend and testify and to produce any document or tangible thing for inspection and copying. (C.C.P. 2025(h)(1); on motion to compel party's attendance and production, see infra, §57.) C.C.P. 1986.5 gives a witness who is subpoenaed for a deposition the right to demand mileage and 1 day's fees. Because no subpoena is required for the taking of a party's deposition, the party is not entitled to such compensation. (Di Napoli v. Superior Court (1967) 252 C.A.2d 202, 204, 60 C.R. 394; on subpoena requirements for nonparty deponent, see infra, §42 et seq.; on fees for nonparty deponent, see infra, §46.)

A former provision dispensing with the need for a subpoena for the deposition "of a person for whose immediate benefit an action or proceeding is prosecuted or defended" (former C.C.P. 2019(a)(4)) was not continued in the Civil Discovery Act of 1986. The Commission reasoned that "little is achieved by encumbering the Discovery Act with this language permitting such special treatment for an 'immediate beneficiary.' " (Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2025(h), in 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C.) With or without the provision, subpoenas are not required for unnamed parties in a class action. (See Southern Calif. Edison Co. v. Superior Court (1972) 7 C.3d 832, 840, 103 C.R. 709, 500 P.2d 621, infra, §64 [relying on former provision]; 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §2.11 [outcome of Southern Calif. Edison Co. was not affected by deletion of provision].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Statutory Requirement. C.C.P. 2025(a), providing that a party may depose any other party, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.010 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2025(c), requiring notice in writing, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.220 in 2004 without substantive change.

See C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 4th, §5.52 et seq.; Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §2.4 et seq.; on notice of oral deposition by telephone, videoconference, or other remote electronic means, see Supp., infra, §79A.

(2) No Subpena Required. C.C.P. 2025(h)(1), providing that service of a deposition notice is sufficient to require attendance, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.280(a) in 2004 without substantive change.

See Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §2.11; Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2025(h), in Hogan, 2 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, Appendix D. West's Key Number Digest, Pretrial Procedure k.123 et seq.

II. DEPOSITIONS

B. Oral Depositions.

1. Securing Deponent's Attendance.
  - a. Party Deponent.
2. Contents of Notice.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 40

[§ 40] Contents of Notice.

(1) Requirements. The notice must include the following:

(a) A list of all the parties or attorneys on whom it is served. (C.C.P. 2025(c) [list may be included in the accompanying proof of service].)

(b) The date, time and place of the deposition. (C.C.P. 2025(d)(1), 2025(d)(2).)

(c) The deponent's name. (C.C.P. 2025(d)(3).)

(d) A list of any materials or category of materials to be produced by the deponent, specified "with reasonable particularity." (C.C.P. 2025(d)(4).)

(e) Any intention to make an audiotape or videotape record in addition to the general stenographic record or to record the testimony by stenographic method through instant visual display of the testimony (C.C.P. 2025(d)(5)), and any intention to reserve the right to use at trial a videotaped deposition of a physician or expert witness (C.C.P. 2025(d)(6)). (On audiotaped or videotaped depositions, see C.C.P. 2025(l), infra, §67 et seq.; on use at trial of videotaped deposition of physician or expert witness, see C.C.P. 2025(u)(4), 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §154.)

(2) Private or Public Organization. If the named deponent is not a natural person, the notice must "describe with reasonable particularity the matters on which examination is requested." The deponent must "designate and produce at the deposition those of its officers, directors, managing agents, employees, or agents who are most qualified to testify on its behalf as to those matters to the extent of any information known or reasonably available to the deponent." (C.C.P. 2025(d).)

(3) Forms. There are numerous sources for deposition notice forms. (See Cal. Civil Practice, 2 Procedure, §13:52; 2 C.E.B., Civil Lit. Forms, §24.1; 8A Am.Jur. P.P. Forms (1996 ed.), Depositions and Discovery §251 et seq.; see also C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Discovery §§10.15, 10.16 [discussing motion to quash defective deposition notice]; Cal. Civil Practice, 2 Procedure, §13:59 et seq. [objections to deposition notice and motions to quash].)

(1) Requirements.

(a) List of parties or attorneys: C.C.P. 2025(c) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.240(a) in 2004 without substantive change.

(b) Date, time, and place: C.C.P. 2025(d)(1), 2025(d)(2) were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.220(a)(1), 2025.220(a)(2) in 2004 without substantive change.

(c) Deponent's name: C.C.P. 2025(d)(3) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.220(a)(3) in 2004 without substantive change.

(d) List of materials to be produced: C.C.P. 2025(d)(4) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.220(a)(4) in 2004 without substantive change.

(e) Intention to make audiotape or videotape record: C.C.P. 2025(d)(5) was amended in 2002 to refer to "audio or video technology," rather than "audiotape or videotape," and C.C.P. 2025(d)(6) was amended to refer to "video recording," rather than "videotape."

C.C.P. 2025(d)(5), 2025(d)(6) were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.220(a)(5), 2025.220(a)(6) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2025(l), on audiotaped or videotaped depositions, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.330, 2025.340 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2025(u)(4), on the use at trial of the videotaped deposition of a physician or expert witness, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.620(d) in 2004 without substantive change.

(2) Private or Public Organization. C.C.P. 2025(d), on deponents that are not natural persons, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.230 in 2004 without substantive change.

See Maldonado v. Superior Court (2002) 94 C.A.4th 1390, 1396, 1397, 115 C.R.2d 137 [in employment discrimination action, trial judge erred in denying plaintiffs' motion to compel further responses, after defendant, in response to plaintiffs' deposition notices seeking information about defendant's practices, produced three employees who knew little about practices in question; although defendant was bankrupt and many employees had left, defendant had duty to produce witnesses who had familiarized themselves with information requested].

(3) Forms. See 8A Am.Jur. P.P. Forms (2004 ed.), Depositions and Discovery, Form 178 et seq.

CHAPTER X - Discovery

B. Oral Depositions.

1. Securing Deponent's Attendance.
  - a. Party Deponent.
3. Party Residing at Distant Place.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 41

[§ 41] Party Residing at Distant Place.

(1) Natural Persons. The deposition of a natural person who is a party must be taken (a) within 75 miles of the deponent's residence, or (b) in the county where the action is pending and within 150 miles of the deponent's residence. The choice between these two options belongs to the party giving notice of the deposition. (C.C.P. 2025(e)(1).)

(2) Organizations. The deposition of an organization that is a party must be taken, at the option of the party noticing the deposition, (a) within 75 miles of the organization's principal executive business office in California, or (b) in the county where the action is pending and within 150 miles of that office. If a principal office has not been designated, the deposition may be taken in the county where the action is pending or within 75 miles of any executive or business office in California. (C.C.P. 2025(e)(2).)

(3) Motion and Order for More Distant Location. A court order is required for the deposition of a natural person who is a party, or an officer, director, managing agent, or employee of a party, taken at a place that is more distant than that permitted under C.C.P. 2025(e)(1). The motion for the order must be accompanied by a declaration showing a reasonable and good faith attempt at an informal resolution of any issue presented by the motion. (C.C.P. 2025(e)(3)); on monetary sanctions for failure to attempt informal resolution, see infra, §252.)

When deciding whether to grant the motion, the court must consider whether the interests of justice will be served by allowing the distant deposition. (C.C.P. 2025(e)(3).) The following are among the relevant considerations:

- (a) Whether the moving party selected the forum;
- (b) Whether the deponent will be present to testify at trial;
- (c) The convenience of the deponent;
- (d) The feasibility of conducting a written deposition under C.C.P. 2028 or using some other discovery method;
- (e) The number of distant depositions being sought;
- (f) The expense to the parties of requiring the deposition to be taken within the distance permitted by C.C.P. 2025(e)(1); and

(g) The deponent's location at the time for which the deposition is scheduled.

The court must impose a monetary sanction under C.C.P. 2023, infra, §252, against a party, person, or attorney who unsuccessfully makes or opposes a motion to increase travel limits for a party deponent. However, the sanctions may be avoided if the court finds that the one subject to the sanction acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make imposing the sanction unjust. (C.C.P. 2025(e)(3).)

As a condition for allowing the distant deposition, the court may order the moving party to advance the reasonable expenses and costs that the deponent will incur for travel to the distant location. (C.C.P. 2025(e)(3)); see Glass v. Superior Court (1988) 204 C.A.3d 1048, 1050, 251 C.R. 690 [C.C.P. 2025 acts as implied repeal of C.C.P. 1989, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §3, which provides that only California residents are obliged to attend as witnesses; hence, management of out-of-state corporation suing in California may be required to attend in-state deposition under C.C.P. 2025(e)(3)]; see generally C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §4.33 et seq.; 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §§2.13, 2.14.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Natural Persons. C.C.P. 2025(e)(1), on the place where the deposition of a natural person may be taken, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.250(a) in 2004 without substantive change. (2) Organizations. C.C.P. 2025(e)(2), on the place where the deposition of an organization that is a party may be taken, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.250(b) in 2004 without substantive change.

(3) Motion and Order for More Distant Location. C.C.P. 2025(e)(1), on the place where the deposition of a natural person may be taken, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.250(a) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2025(e)(3), on the procedure for requesting a deposition at a more distant place, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.260 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2028, on depositions by written questions, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2028.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2023, on monetary sanctions, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

See C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 4th, §5.25 et seq.; Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §2.13.

II. DEPOSITIONS

B. Oral Depositions.

1. Securing Deponent's Attendance.

b. Nonparty Deponent.

1. Notice and Subpena Requirements.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 42

[§ 42] Notice and Subpena Requirements.

(1) Deposition of Nonparty Allowed. Discovery may be obtained from a person who is not a party by oral deposition, initiated by the service of a deposition subpena. (C.C.P. 2020(a).)

(2) Notice. The notice requirement for the deposition of a nonparty witness is the same as that for a party. (C.C.P. 2025(c), supra, §39.) The content of the deposition notice is also the same (see C.C.P. 2025(c)), except that the notice must also include the deponent's address and phone number. If the deponent's name is not known, the notice must include a description sufficient to identify the person or class to which the person belongs. (C.C.P. 2025(d)(3), supra, §40.)

(3) Subpena. In addition to notice, the appearance and testimony of a nonparty witness requires the service on the deponent of a deposition subpena under C.C.P. 2020. (C.C.P. 2025(h)(2), 2020(a); see C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §4.46.) The subpena may command (a) only the deponent's attendance and testimony, (b) only the production of business records for copying, or (c) both the deponent's attendance and testimony and the production of business records, other documents and tangible things. (C.C.P. 2020(a); on subpena commanding production of document or tangible things, see infra, §49 et seq.; on distinction between deposition subpena and subpena duces tecum, see infra, §54; on additional, informal efforts that may be taken to ensure deponent's attendance, see Dunne on Depositions in California §6:2.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Deposition of Nonparty Allowed. C.C.P. 2020(a), on deposition of nonparties, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2020.010 in 2004 without substantive change.

(2) Notice. C.C.P. 2025(c), stating the requirement of notice in writing, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.220(a) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2025(d)(3), specifying the contents of a notice of deposition to a nonparty, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.220 in 2004 without substantive change.

On notice of oral deposition by telephone, videoconference, or other remote electronic means, see Supp., infra, §79A.

(3) Subpena. C.C.P. 2020(a) and C.C.P. 2025(h)(2), on deposition subpoenas, were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2020.010(b) and C.C.P. 2025.280(b) in 2004 without substantive change.

[§ 43] Contents of Subpena.

A subpoena that commands only the attendance and testimony of the deponent must specify the time and place of the deposition and summarize (1) the nature of the deposition, (2) the rights and duties of the deponent, and (3) the penalties for disobedience provided by C.C.P. 2020(h). (C.C.P. 2020(c); on penalties, see infra, §§58, 258; on subpoenas that command production of documents, records, and tangible things, see infra, §49 et seq.) If the deposition will be videotaped (see infra, §67 et seq.), the subpoena must so indicate. (C.C.P. 2020(c).)

If the deponent is an organization, the deposition subpoena must (1) "describe with reasonable particularity the matters on which examination is requested," and (2) advise the organization of its duty to designate qualified agents or employees to attend (see supra, §40). (C.C.P. 2020(c), 2025(d).)

C.C.P. 2020(c) supersedes C.C.P. 1985, the general statute for obtaining documentary evidence from a witness, in discovery proceedings. (See Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2020(c), in 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C; on C.C.P. 1985 et seq., see infra, §§54, 217 et seq.)

The Judicial Council has adopted a form deposition subpoena, the use of which is mandatory. (See Judicial Council Form No. 982(a)(15.3) [Deposition Subpena for Personal Appearance].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

C.C.P. 2020(c) was amended in 2002 to delete the reference to "videotape" and substitute "using audio or video technology by, or at the direction of, the noticing party." In addition, the amended statute provides that if the deposition testimony is to be conducted using instant visual display, the deposition subpoena must state that it will be conducted in that manner.

C.C.P. 2020(c) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2020.310 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2025(d), requiring a deposition subpoena to a deponent that is an organization to describe with particularity the matters on which examination is requested, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.230 in 2004 without substantive change. The portion of C.C.P. 2020(c) stating the same requirement is now found in C.C.P. 2020.310(e).

Judicial Council Form No. 982(a)(15.3) has been renumbered Judicial Council Form No. SUBP-015.

See Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2020(c), in Hogan, 2 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, Appendix D.

II. DEPOSITIONS

B. Oral Depositions.

1. Securing Deponent's Attendance.
  - b. Nonparty Deponent.
3. Issuance and Service of Subpena.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 44

[§ 44] Issuance and Service of Subpena.

(1) Issuance. Under C.C.P. 2020(b), a deposition subpoena may be issued in two ways:

(a) On request, the clerk of the court in which the action is pending issues the subpoena in blank, but signed and sealed, to a party who fills it in and serves it.

(b) The attorney of record for a party signs and issues an unsealed subpoena. A copy may be served on the nonparty and the attorney may retain the original.

This provision supersedes C.C.P. 1985 and 1986, the general statutes for obtaining documentary evidence from a witness, in discovery proceedings. (Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2020(b), in 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C; on C.C.P. 1985 et seq., see infra, §§54, 217 et seq.)

(2) Service. Service is accomplished by personal delivery. Any person may deliver a copy of the subpoena to the deponent, if the deponent is a natural person, or, if the deponent is an organization, to an officer, director, or custodian of records, or to an agent or employee authorized to accept service. Service must be accomplished sufficiently in advance of the deposition to allow the deponent enough time to locate and produce designated business records, documents, and tangible things, and a reasonable time to travel to the place of deposition. (C.C.P. 2020(f); on timing of notice of deposition generally, see supra, §32 et seq.; on production of documents, see infra, §49 et seq.)

A copy of the subpoena must be served with the deposition notice to all parties receiving notice (see supra, §§39, 42). (C.C.P. 2025(d); see C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §4.50.)

(3) Effect of Service. Personal service of a deposition subpoena on a California resident is effective to require (a) personal attendance and testimony, if specified, (b) any specified production, inspection, testing or sampling, and (c) attendance at court to consider any issue "arising out of the deponent's refusal to be sworn, or to answer any question, or to produce specified items, or to permit inspection or photocopying, if the subpoena so specifies, or specified testing and sampling of the items produced." (C.C.P. 2020(g); on subpoena commanding production of documents or items or sampling, see infra, §49 et seq.; on consequences of disobeying a deposition subpoena, see infra, §58.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Issuance. C.C.P. 2020(b), on the issuance of deposition subpoenas, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2020.210 in 2004 without substantive change.

See Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2020(b), in Hogan, 2 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, Appendix D.

(2) Service. C.C.P. 2020(f), on the service of deposition subpoenas, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2020.220 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2025(d), requiring a copy of the subpoena to be served on all parties receiving the deposition notice, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.240(c) in 2004 without substantive change.

See C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 4th, §5.69.(3) Effect of Service. C.C.P. 2020(g), on the effect of service, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2020.220(c) in 2004 without substantive change.

B. Oral Depositions.

1. Securing Deponent's Attendance.

b. Nonparty Deponent.

4. Nonparty Residing at Distant Place.

[§ 45] Nonparty Residing at Distant Place.

(1) Natural Persons. The deposition location requirements for nonparty witnesses who are natural persons are the same as those for parties who are natural persons (see supra, §41): the party giving notice of the deposition may choose a location either within 75 miles of the deponent's residence or within the county in which the action is pending and within 150 miles of the deponent's residence. (C.C.P. 2025(e)(1).) However, there is no provision allowing the court to order the deposition of a nonparty who is a natural person to be taken at a more distant location.

(2) Organizations. The deposition of an organization that is not a party must be taken within 75 miles of the organization's principal executive or business office in California, unless the organization consents to a more distant place. If the organization has not designated a principal office, the deposition must be taken, at the option of the party giving notice, either in the county where the action is pending or within 75 miles of any executive or business office of the organization in California. (C.C.P. 2025(e)(2).) There is no provision for a court order allowing an organization's deposition to occur at a more distant location than provided by C.C.P. 2025(e)(2).

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Natural Persons. C.C.P. 2025(e)(1), on the location of the deposition where the deponent is a natural person, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.250(a) in 2004 without substantive change.

(2) Organizations. C.C.P. 2025(e)(2), on the location of the deposition where the organization is not a party, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.250(c) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2025.250(c) was subdivided in 2005. The provision relating to organizations that have not designated an office in California became C.C.P. 2025.250(d).

[§ 46] Fees.

If the deponent's personal attendance is required, the party noticing the deposition must pay the same witness fee and mileage required by Govt.C. 68070 et seq. for attendance and testimony before the court in which the action is pending (see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §15 et seq.). Payment, whether or not demanded by the deponent, must be made, at the option of the party noticing the deposition, either at the time the deposition subpoena is served or the time the deponent appears for the taking of testimony. 1. Securing Deponent's Attendance.
  - c. Amount of Notice Required.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 47

[§ 47] Amount of Notice Required.

(1) Minimum Notice Period. The deposition notice must be served at least 10 days before an oral deposition. (C.C.P. 2025(f); see 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §2.7; cf. F.R. Civ. P., Rule 30(b) [requiring "reasonable notice"]; on 20-day notice requirement for production of personal consumer records, see infra, §52; on timing of service of deposition subpoena, see supra, §44.) The deposition must begin at least 30 days before the initial trial date. (See C.C.P. 2024(a), supra, §23.)

(2) Unlawful Detainer Action. An oral deposition in an unlawful detainer action must be scheduled at least 5 days after service of the deposition notice, but not later than 5 days before trial. (C.C.P. 2025(f).)

(3) Shortening or Extending Time. On the motion or ex parte application of a party or a deponent, and on a showing of good cause, the court may shorten or extend the time for scheduling a deposition, or may stay its taking until the determination of a motion for a protective order under C.C.P. 2025(i) (see infra, §59). (C.C.P. 2025(f).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Minimum Notice Period. C.C.P. 2025(f) (service of notice required at least 10 days before deposition) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.270 in 2004 without substantive change.

The portion of C.C.P. 2024(a) relating to the time by which a deposition must begin was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2024.010 and 2024.020 in 2004 without substantive change.

See Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §2.7.

(2) Unlawful Detainer Action. The portion of C.C.P. 2025(f) relating to the scheduling of a deposition in an unlawful detainer action was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.270(b) in 2004 without substantive change. C.C.P. 2025.270(b) was amended in 2007 to extend its applicability to other proceedings under C.C.P. 1159 et seq. (see 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §757).

(3) Shortening or Extending Time. The portion of C.C.P. 2025(f) relating to shortening or extending the time for the deposition was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.270(c) in 2004 without substantive change. C.C.P. 2025.270(c) was relettered C.C.P. 2025.270(d) in 2007.

C.C.P. 2025(i), relating to motions for a protective order, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.420 in 2004 without substantive change.

II. DEPOSITIONS

B. Oral Depositions.

1. Securing Deponent's Attendance.

d. Objections to Procedure To Secure Deponent's Attendance.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 48

[§ 48] Objections to Procedure To Secure Deponent's Attendance.

(1) Written Objection. A party served with a deposition notice that does not comply with the procedures set forth in C.C.P. 2025(b) through 2025(f) (supra, §39 et seq.) may serve a written objection on the party taking the deposition and on any other attorney or party on whom the notice was served. The objection must be served no less than 3 calendar days before the date scheduled for the deposition and, if made 3 calendar days before the scheduled date, must be personally served on the person noticing the deposition. A deposition taken after the service of the objection may not be used against the objecting party under C.C.P. 2025(u), 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §153, if the party did not attend the deposition and if the court determines that the objection was valid. (C.C.P. 2025(g)); on when written objections are most effective, see Dunne on Depositions in California §4:14.)

(2) Motion To Stay Deposition and Quash Notice. In addition to serving a written objection, a party may move for an order staying the taking of the deposition and quashing the notice. The deposition is stayed pending the determination of the motion. (C.C.P. 2025(g)); see Cal. Civil Practice, 2 Procedure, §13:59 et seq. [objections to deposition notice and motions to quash]; on motion to quash deposition subpoena or subpoena duces tecum, see infra, §226; on when use of motion to quash deposition notice is most advantageous, see Dunne on Depositions in California §4:15.)

(3) Informal Resolution. The motion must be accompanied by a declaration showing a reasonable and good faith attempt at an informal resolution of the issue presented. (C.C.P. 2025(g)); on monetary sanctions for failure to attempt informal resolution, see infra, §252.)

(4) Monetary Sanctions. The court must impose a monetary sanction under C.C.P. 2023, infra, §252, against a party, person, or attorney who unsuccessfully makes or opposes a motion to quash a deposition notice. However, the sanctions may be avoided if the court finds that the one subject to the sanction acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make imposing the sanction unjust. (C.C.P. 2025(g).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Written Objection. C.C.P. 2025(b)-(f) (requirements relating to deposition notices) were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.210 through C.C.P. 2025.270 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2025(u), relating to the use of the deposition at trial, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.620 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2025(g), relating to objections to the deposition notice, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.410 in 2004 without substantive change.

(2) Motion To Stay Deposition and Quash Notice. The portion of C.C.P. 2025(g) relating to motions to stay the deposition and quash notice was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.410(c) in 2004 without substantive change.(3) Informal Resolution. The portion of C.C.P. 2025(g) requiring a meet and confer declaration was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.410(c) in 2004 without substantive change.

(4) Monetary Sanctions. C.C.P. 2023, on monetary sanctions, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

The portion of C.C.P. 2025(g) relating to sanctions was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.410(d) in 2004 without substantive change.

II. DEPOSITIONS

B. Oral Depositions.

2. Securing Production of Documents.

a. Notice Requirements.

[§ 49] Notice Requirements.

(1) Party. Service of a deposition notice under C.C.P. 2025(c) (supra, §39) is sufficient to require a deponent who is a party, or an officer, director, managing agent, or employee of a party, to produce documents or tangible things for inspection or copying. (C.C.P. 2025(h)(1).) (On procedures for objecting to inadequate deposition notice, see C.C.P. 2025(g), supra, §48.)

(2) Nonparty. A nonparty deponent must be served with a deposition subpoena in order to secure production of documents or tangible things by that deponent. (C.C.P. 2025(h)(2).) The deposition subpoena may command (a) the production of business records for copying, or (b) both the deponent's appearance and testimony, and the production of documents and tangible things. (C.C.P. 2020(a).) When, under C.C.P. 2020(d) (infra, §50), only the production by a nonparty of business records for copying is desired, a copy of the deposition subpoena serves as the deposition notice. (C.C.P. 2025(c).) (On production of records alone, see infra, §50 et seq.; on production of records and compelled testimony of deponent, see infra, §53.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Party. C.C.P. 2025(c) (service of deposition notice) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.220 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2025(h)(1) (effect of deposition notice on party) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.280(a) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2025(g) (procedures for objecting to inadequate notice) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.410 in 2004 without substantive change.

(New) Distinction: Party's former employees: When a deposition notice seeks the person most knowledgeable about a particular subject matter within a corporation, the corporation is not required to produce former employees simply because those employees would be the persons most knowledgeable about the particular subject. "Employee," as used in C.C.P. 2025(h)(1) (now C.C.P. 2025.280(a)), means "current employee." The corporation's duty is limited to producing the most knowledgeable person currently in its employ and making certain that this person has access to information and documents reasonably available within the corporation. (Maldonado v. Superior Court (2002) 94 C.A.4th 1390, 1398, 115 C.R.2d 137.)

(2) Nonparty. C.C.P. 2025(h)(2), requiring a nonparty to be served with a deposition subpoena, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.280(b) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2020(a), specifying what a deposition notice may require, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2020.020 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2020(d), on deposition subpoenas that command production of business records from a nonparty for copying, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2020.410(a) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2025(c) (copy of deposition subpoena serves as deposition notice where only production by nonparty of business records for copying is desired) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.220(b) in 2004 without substantive change. West's Key Number Digest, Pretrial Procedure k.130

B. Oral Depositions.

2. Securing Production of Documents.

b. Business Records for Copying.

1. Contents and Service of Subpena.

[§ 50] Contents and Service of Subpena.

(1) Contents. A subpoena commanding only the production of business records for copying is directed to the custodian of the records or another person qualified to certify the records. It must designate the business records to be produced either by specifically describing each individual item or "by reasonably particularizing each category of item." However, specific information identifiable only to the deponent's records system, such as a policy number or the date the consumer interacted with the witness, must not be required. The deposition subpoena need not be accompanied by an affidavit or declaration showing good cause for the production of the designated business records. (C.C.P. 2020(d)(1); see Calcor Space Facility v. Superior Court (1997) 53 C.A.4th 216, 222, 61 C.R.2d 567 [plaintiff failed to meet requirements of specific description and reasonable particularization, where its subpoena asked nonparty to produce all materials relating to gun mounts, failed to identify specific documents and merely described broad categories, and included attachment with three pages each of "definitions" and "instructions"]; Urban Pac. Equities Corp. v. Superior Court (1997) 59 C.A.4th 688, 693, 69 C.R.2d 635 ["business records" means item, collection, or grouping of information about business entity, not business' own product; thus, C.C.P. 2020(d) cannot be used to obtain reporter's transcript of deposition, which is product of reporter's business, without paying reporter's copying fee].)

The Judicial Council has adopted a form deposition subpoena commanding the production of business records; use of the Judicial Council form is mandatory. (See Judicial Council Form No. 982(a)(15.2) [Deposition Subpena for Production of Business Records].)

(2) Service. The deposition subpoena must command compliance no earlier than 20 days after issuance or 15 days after service, whichever is later. (C.C.P. 2020(d)(1).) Subject to that requirement, service must allow "a sufficient time in advance of the deposition to provide the deponent a reasonable opportunity" to locate and produce designated business records, documents and tangible things and, if required, a reasonable time to travel to the deposition place. Service is accomplished by personal delivery. Any person may deliver a copy of the subpoena to the deponent, if the deponent is a natural person, or to "any officer, director, custodian of records" or to any agent or employee authorized to accept service, if the deponent is an organization. (C.C.P. 2020(f); see California Shellfish v. United Shellfish Co. (1997) 56 C.A.4th 16, 23, 64 C.R.2d 797 ["deposition hold" of C.C.P. 2025(b)(2) (supra, §32) applies to deposition subpoena seeking only business records, and therefore plaintiff may not serve deposition notice under C.C.P. 2020(d) until 20 days after service of summons on, or appearance by, any defendant].)

(3) Fees. Service of a deposition subpoena that commands only the production of business records for copying must be accompanied by a payment in cash or by check of the witness fee required by Ev.C. 1563(b)(6), 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Documentary Evidence, §55. (C.C.P. 2020(f); see C.C.P. 1986.5.)

(4) Effect of Service. Personal service of a deposition subpoena on a California resident is effective to require any specified production and the deponent's attendance at court to consider any issue arising out of the deponent's refusal to produce specified items. (C.C.P. 2020(g); on sanctions for disobeying deposition subpoena, see C.C.P. 2020(h), infra, §§58, 258.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Contents. C.C.P. 2020(d)(1), on the contents of a subpoena commanding production of business records for copying, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2020.410 in 2004 without substantive change.

[§ 51] Procedure for Copying.

(1) Delivery by Custodian. Where a deposition subpoena commands only the production of business records, the custodian of the records or other qualified person must, in person, by messenger, or by mail, deliver only to the deposition officer specified in the deposition subpoena (a) "a true, legible, and durable copy of the records" and (b) an affidavit of compliance with Ev.C. 1561, unless the custodian is directed to make the records available for inspection or copying by the subpoenaing party's attorney or the attorney's representative at the witness' business address, as provided in Ev.C. 1560(e). (C.C.P. 2020(d)(4).) The admissibility of the custodian's affidavit is governed by Ev.C. 1562. (C.C.P. 2020(d)(6).) (On deposition officer, see supra, §35; on Ev.C. 1560 et seq., see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Documentary Evidence, §51 et seq.)

(2) Form of Delivered Records. If delivery is made at the deposition officer's office, the records must be enclosed, sealed, and directed as required by Ev.C. 1560(c), 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Documentary Evidence, §51. If delivery is made at the office of the business whose records are subpoenaed, the custodian may permit the deposition officer to copy the original records or may deliver an unsealed copy on receipt of payment of the reasonable costs of preparing the copy, determined under Ev.C. 1563(b), 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Documentary Evidence, §55. (C.C.P. 2020(d)(4).)

(3) Date of Delivery. Unless the parties (and the consumer if the records belong to a consumer as defined in C.C.P. 1985.3 or 1985.6; see infra, §229) stipulate to an earlier date, the custodian may not deliver the requested records to the deposition officer before the date and time specified in the deposition subpoena. The subpoena must contain a statement, in boldface type immediately following the date and time specified for production, that the records are not to be released before that date and time. (C.C.P. 2020(d)(4).)

(4) Copies Supplied by Deposition Officer. Promptly on or after the deposition date and after the receipt or copying of the business records, the deposition officer must provide the copy to the party at whose instance the subpoena was served. Any other party to the action may purchase a copy by notifying the deposition officer within 6 months following the settlement of the case. (C.C.P. 2020(d)(5).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Delivery by Custodian. C.C.P. 2020(d)(4) (delivery requirements) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2020.430 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2020(d)(6) (admissibility of affidavit) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2020.430(f) in 2004 without substantive change.

(2) Form of Delivered Records. C.C.P. 2020(d)(4) (form of records depending on where delivered) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2020.430(b) in 2004 without substantive change.

(3) Date of Delivery. C.C.P. 2020(d)(4) (date and time of delivery) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2020.430(d) in 2004 without substantive change. (4) Copies Supplied by Deposition Officer. C.C.P. 2020(d)(5) (distribution of copies) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2020.440 in 2004 without substantive change.

[§ 52] Personal Consumer Records.

(1) Required Notice to Consumer. If a deposition subpoena seeking the production of business records is directed at a witness and the records described are personal records of a consumer, the subpoena must be accompanied by proof of service of the notice to the consumer required by C.C.P. 1985.3(e) (or C.C.P. 1985.6, as applicable) or the consumer's written release under C.C.P. 1985.3(c) (or C.C.P. 1985.6(c)(2), as applicable). (C.C.P. 2020(d)(2), 2020(e); on C.C.P. 1985.3, see infra, §228 et seq.; on C.C.P. 1985.6, see infra, §236 et seq.) The consumer must be served with (a) a deposition notice, (b) a copy of the deposition subpoena, and (c) notice of the privacy rights specified in C.C.P. 1985.3(e). (C.C.P. 2025(c).) (On similar notice requirements where employee's employment records are sought, see C.C.P. 1985.6, infra, §236 et seq.)

(2) Timing of Deposition. The deposition of someone who has been commanded to produce personal records of a consumer must be scheduled for a date at least 20 days after issuance of the subpoena. (C.C.P. 2025(f).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Required Notice to Consumer. C.C.P. 2020(d)(2) and C.C.P. 2020(e), on subpoenas of consumer records, were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2020.410(d) and C.C.P. 2020.510(c) in 2004 without substantive change.

c. Attendance, Testimony, and Production of Documents.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 53

[§ 53] Attendance, Testimony, and Production of Documents.

(1) Subpena Requirements. A subpoena that requires the appearance and testimony of the deponent and the production of business records, documents or tangible things must comply with C.C.P. 2020(c) (supra, §43) and must (a) "designate the business records, documents, and tangible things to be produced either by specifically describing each individual item or by reasonably particularizing each category of item," and (b) specify any testing or sampling that is being sought. However, the deposition subpoena need not be accompanied by an affidavit or declaration showing good cause for the production of the documents and things designated. (C.C.P. 2020(e).) The Judicial Council has adopted a form subpoena, the use of which is mandatory. (See Judicial Council Form No. 982(a)(15.4) [Deposition Subpoena for Personal Appearance and Production of Documents and Things].) Service of the subpoena is accomplished in the same manner as service of a subpoena that commands only the deponent's appearance and testimony (see C.C.P. 2020(f), supra, §44), and has the same effect (see C.C.P. 2020(g), supra, §44).

(2) Fees. The fees to be paid to a nonparty who is commanded to appear and testify at the deposition and to produce records under C.C.P. 2020(e) are the same as those to be paid to a nonparty who is commanded merely to appear and testify. (See C.C.P. 2020(f), supra, §46.)

II. DEPOSITIONS

B. Oral Depositions.

2. Securing Production of Documents.

d. Applicability of Subpena Duces Tecum.

[§ 54] Applicability of Subpena Duces Tecum.

A subpena duces tecum is the usual means of obtaining documentary evidence from a witness. (See C.C.P. 1985 et seq., infra, §218 et seq.) However, for purposes of depositions, the term subpena duces tecum has been abandoned in favor of the term deposition subpoena, "language more understandable to the one on whom the subpoena is served." (Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2020(a), in 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C.)

Some of the numerous provisions governing deposition subpoenas set forth in C.C.P. 2020 supersede the similar provisions of C.C.P. 1985 et seq. on which they were based. For example, C.C.P. 2020(b), which contemplates that all deposition subpoenas will be issued by the court in which the action is pending, supersedes, in discovery proceedings, C.C.P. 1986(c), which requires subpoenas to be issued by the court of the county where the deposition is to be taken. (Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2020(b), in 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C.) Similarly, a deposition subpoena for production of business records alone or for production of documents and testimony of a deponent need not be accompanied by an affidavit or declaration showing good cause for the production of the designated business records, documents, or things (see C.C.P. 2020(d), supra, §50 and 2020(e), supra, §53), which contrasts with C.C.P. 1985(b) and C.C.P. 1985.7. (See Reporter's Notes to C.C.P. 2020(d) and (e), in 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C.)

However, except as modified by C.C.P. 2020, C.C.P. 1985 et seq. continue to apply (C.C.P. 2020(a)), and the term subpena duces tecum is retained in C.C.P. 1985 et seq. (See Reporter's Notes to C.C.P. 2020(d), in 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C [referring to subpoena in C.C.P. 1985 as trial subpoena duces tecum].) The provisions of Ev.C. 1560 et seq. governing business records (see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Documentary Evidence, §50 et seq.) also apply to a deposition subpoena, except as modified by C.C.P. 2020. (C.C.P. 2020(a).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

C.C.P. 2020(b) (issuance of subpoenas) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2020.210 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2020(d) (subpena requiring production of business records for copying) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2020.410 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2020(e) (subpena requiring attendance and testimony, as well as production of records, documents, or things) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2020.510 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2020(a) (continued applicability of Evidence Code provisions) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2020.030 in 2004 without substantive change.

See Reporter's Notes to C.C.P. 2020(d) and (e), in Hogan, 2 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, Appendix D.

[§ 55] In General.

Any party to an action may attend the deposition of a party or other witness. (See C.C.P. 2025(i)(12) [party cannot be excluded].) However, in lieu of attendance and participation in the oral examination, a party served with notice may send written questions to the deposition officer to propound to the witness after oral examination has been completed. (C.C.P. 2025(l)(3).) The court, on motion and for good cause shown, may order that designated persons, other than the parties, their officers, or their counsel, are excluded from attending the deposition. (C.C.P. 2025(i)(12); on motion for protective order, see infra, §59.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

C.C.P. 2025(l)(3), on submission of written questions in lieu of personal attendance, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.330(e) in 2004 without substantive change.

If the party giving the deposition notice fails to attend or proceed with a deposition or if the deponent fails to appear because the party giving the notice failed to serve a required deposition subpoena, the court must impose a monetary sanction under C.C.P. 2023 (see infra, §252) in favor of any party attending in person or by attorney, and against the party giving the notice or the attorney for that party. However, the sanction may be avoided if the court finds "that the one subject to the sanction acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make the imposition of the sanction unjust." (C.C.P. 2025(j)(1), (j)(2); see Rosen v. Superior Court (1966) 244 C.A.2d 586, 595, 53 C.R. 347 [person who gives notice of deposition has duty to have witness present at set time so that other party or party's attorney may exercise right of cross-examination, or to give timely notice that deposition will not be taken as noticed]; *Poe v. ### II. DEPOSITIONS

B. Oral Depositions.

3. Deposition Proceedings.

a. Attendance of Parties and Witnesses.

2. Failure To Attend.

bb. Party Deponent.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 57

[§ 57] Party Deponent.

(1) Motion To Compel Party Deponent's Attendance. If, after service of a deposition notice, a party, or an officer, director, managing agent, employee, or designated deponent of a party, fails to appear, or testify, or produce documents or tangible things for inspection without having served a valid objection under C.C.P. 2025(g) (supra, §48), the deposing party may move for an order compelling attendance, testimony, and production. The motion must show good cause to justify the production of the document or tangible thing described in the deposition notice. The motion must be accompanied by a declaration showing a reasonable and good faith attempt to informally resolve each issue presented. Or, when the deponent fails to attend the deposition and produce the requested documents or things, the motion must be accompanied by a declaration stating that the petitioner has contacted the deponent to inquire about the nonappearance. (C.C.P. 2025(j)(3); on monetary sanctions for failure to attempt informal resolution, see infra, §252; on format of motion to compel production of documents or tangible things, see supra, §28.)

(2) Sanctions. If the motion is granted, the court must also impose a monetary sanction under C.C.P. 2023 "against the deponent or the party with whom the deponent is affiliated, unless it finds that the one subject to the sanction acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make the imposition of the sanction unjust." The deposing party and any other party who attended at the specified time and place, expecting that the deponent's testimony would be taken, may also move for a monetary sanction under C.C.P. 2023. If the deponent fails to obey the order compelling attendance, testimony and production, the court may impose more severe sanctions, including issue, evidence, or terminating sanctions. (C.C.P. 2025(j)(3); see Dunne on Depositions in California §6:3; on monetary sanctions under C.C.P. 2023, see infra, §252; on severe sanctions for failure to obey order, see infra, §255 et seq.)

C.C.P. 2025(j)(3) discontinues the former practice of imposing severe sanctions for an initial, wilful failure to appear for a deposition. The Commission believed that that approach needlessly created questions about the meaning of "wilfulness," and that in practice most courts were reluctant to impose severe sanctions for a mere failure to respond. Thus, only a monetary sanction is available in the first instance for a party's failure to appear for a deposition. "However, if the court orders that party to appear, and this order is not obeyed, then it becomes more appropriate to deal with disobedience by one of the severe sanctions." (Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2025(j)(3), in 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C.)

(1) Motion To Compel Party Deponent's Attendance. C.C.P. 2025(g), on objection to a deposition notice, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.410 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2025(j)(3), on motions to compel a party deponent to appear, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.450 in 2004 without substantive change.(2) Sanctions. C.C.P. 2023, on monetary sanctions generally, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2025(j)(3), on sanctions for a party's deponent's failure to appear, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.450(c), (d) in 2004 without substantive change.

See Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2025(j)(3), in Hogan, 2 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, Appendix D.

[§ 58] Nonparty Deponent.

If a deponent on whom a deposition subpoena has been served fails to attend a deposition or refuses to be sworn as a witness, the deponent may be punished for contempt under C.C.P. 2023 (infra, §260 et seq.), without a prior court order directing compliance by the witness. (C.C.P. 2025(j)(2), 2020(h), 1991.1.)

The deponent is also subject to a civil action by the aggrieved party, under C.C.P. 1992, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §32, to recover $ 500 and all damages the party sustained because of the deponent's failure to attend or be sworn. (C.C.P. 2025(j)(2); C.C.P. 2020(h).) This remedy seldom has been invoked: the statutory sum ($ 500) and the damages allowable may be too small to justify the expense of an action. (See Dunne on Depositions in California §6:2.)

C.C.P. 2020(h), 2023, and 2025(j)(2), on punishment by contempt, were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2020.240, 2023.010 et seq., and C.C.P. 2025.440(b), respectively, in 2004 without substantive change.

Under C.C.P. 2025(i), a protective order may include, but is not limited to, one or more of the following directions:

- (1) That the deposition not be taken at all (see infra, §62).
- (2) That the deposition be taken at a different time (on stay of proceedings, see infra, §63).
- (3) That a videotaped deposition of a physician or expert witness intended for possible use at trial be postponed until the moving party has had an adequate opportunity to prepare for cross-examination.
- (4) That the deposition be taken at another, authorized place.
- (5) That the deposition be taken only under specified terms and conditions.
- (6) That the deposition be by written examination.
- (7) That written interrogatories be used instead of an oral deposition.
- (8) That a different manner of recording the testimony be used.
- (9) That certain matters not be inquired into.
- (10) That the scope of the examination be limited to certain matters.
- (11) That specified writings or things designated in the notice not be produced, inspected or copied.
- (12) That designated persons, other than the parties, their officers, and their counsel, be excluded. (See Willoughby v. Superior Court (1985) 172 C.A.3d 890, 892, 218 C.R. 486 [parties may not be excluded under unambiguous language of former C.C.P. 2019(b)(1)]; *Lowy Dev. Corp. v. ### II. DEPOSITIONS

B. Oral Depositions.

3. Deposition Proceedings.

b. Protective Orders.

2. Suspension of Deposition.

[§ 61] Suspension of Deposition.

(1) Suspension Pending Motion. There are only two reasons for which a deposition officer may suspend the taking of testimony: (a) when the party conducting the deposition and the deponent stipulate to the suspension, and (b) when a party attending the deposition or the deponent demands a suspension to enable that person to move for a protective order "on the ground that the examination is being conducted in bad faith or in a manner that unreasonably annoys, embarrasses, or oppresses." (C.C.P. 2025(n)); on monetary sanctions for unsuccessfully making or opposing motion for protective order, see infra, §252.)

(2) Attempt at Informal Resolution. The motion for a protective order must be accompanied by a declaration showing a reasonable and good faith attempt at an informal resolution of each issue presented. (C.C.P. 2025(n)); on monetary sanctions for failure to attempt informal resolution, see infra, §252.)

(3) Appropriate Court for Motion. The former provision governing suspension of a deposition pending a motion for a protective order (former C.C.P. 2019(d)) allowed the motion to be made either in (a) the court where the action was pending, or (b) the superior court in the county where the deposition was being taken. C.C.P. 2025(n) eliminated the power of the latter court to rule on the motion. Because the courts have statewide subpoena power in civil cases, the Commission believed that "it is no longer necessary or appropriate for a court other than the one in which the action is pending to rule on a motion for a protective order terminating or limiting the scope of a deposition." (Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2025(n), in 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C.)

(4) Order of Termination or Limitation. On a showing of good cause, the court may terminate the examination or limit the scope and manner of taking the deposition as provided in C.C.P. 2025(i) (supra, §60). If the examination is terminated, it may not be resumed except by court order. (C.C.P. 2025(n).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Suspension Pending Motion. C.C.P. 2025(n), as amended in 2002, specifies that the stipulation must be by "all parties present."

C.C.P. 2025(n) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.470 in 2004 without substantive change.

(2) Attempt at Informal Resolution. The portion of C.C.P. 2025(n) requiring a meet and confer declaration was repealed and replaced by the portion of C.C.P. 2025.470 making C.C.P. 2025.420 applicable. (See Supp., supra, §59.)

(3) Appropriate Court for Motion. C.C.P. 2025(n), on the procedure for suspending a deposition, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.470 in 2004 without substantive change.

See Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2025(n), in Hogan, 2 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, Appendix D.

(4) Order of Termination or Limitation. The portion of C.C.P. 2025(i) relating to termination or limitation of a deposition was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.420 in 2004 without substantive change.

The portion of C.C.P. 2025(n) prohibiting the resumption of the examination except by court order was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.420(b)(16) in 2004 without substantive change.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 62

[§ 62] No Deposition Allowed.

(1) High-Ranking Corporate Official. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1992) 10 C.A.4th 1282, 13 C.R.2d 363, involved the following question of first impression: May the head of a corporation be deposed in the absence of any showing of involvement in a lawsuit against the corporation, and prior to the exhaustion of less intrusive means of discovery?

Plaintiff, the wife of an injured employee, sued the employer's workers' compensation carrier and its president for failing to provide the care set forth in the compensation policy. In support of his motion to prohibit the deposition, defendant president submitted his own declaration stating that he had no knowledge of plaintiff's case, and a declaration of his administrative assistant stating that matters such as plaintiff's claim were regularly sent to lower level employees. Plaintiff argued that defendant had constructive knowledge of her claim based on letters from her attorney showing copies to defendant (identifying him by title, but not by name). The trial judge denied the motion for a protective order, and defendant sought mandamus. Held, writ granted.

(a) It seems sensible to prevent a plaintiff from leapfrogging to the apex of the corporate hierarchy in the first instance: the head of a large national corporation will generally lack knowledge of a specific incident handled several levels down the corporate pyramid, and allowing such an official to be deposed would raise a tremendous potential for discovery abuse and harassment. (10 C.A.4th 1287.) Based on these concerns, the federal decisions generally do not allow plaintiffs' deposition power to automatically reach the pinnacle of the corporate structure. (10 C.A.4th 1288, citing numerous federal decisions.)

(b) "Consistent with these federal decisions, we hold that when a plaintiff seeks to depose a corporate president or other official at the highest level of corporate management, and that official moves for a protective order to prohibit the deposition, the trial court should first determine whether the plaintiff has shown good cause that the official has unique or superior personal knowledge of discoverable information. If not, as will presumably often be the case in the instance of a large national or international corporation, the trial court should issue the protective order and first require the plaintiff to obtain the necessary discovery through less intrusive methods. These would include interrogatories directed to the high-level official to explore the state of his or her knowledge or involvement in plaintiff's case; the deposition of lower level employees with appropriate knowledge and involvement in the subject matter of the litigation; and the organizational deposition of the corporation itself, which will require the corporation to produce for deposition the most qualified officer or employee to testify on its behalf as to the specified matters to be raised at the deposition. ... Should these avenues be exhausted, and the plaintiff make a colorable showing of good cause that the high-level official possesses necessary information to the case, the trial court may then lift the protective order and allow the deposition to proceed." (10 C.A.4th 1289.)

(c) Plaintiff's argument that a high level official's protestation of ignorance of a lawsuit is self-serving and automatically suspect is without merit. It is not implausible that such an official would lack knowledge of a specific claim. And in any event, "the procedure outlined above will prevent undue harassment and oppression of high-level officials while still providing a plaintiff with several less intrusive mechanisms to obtain the necessary discovery, and allowing for the possibility of conducting the high-level deposition if warranted." (10 C.A.4th 1290.) (On who may be deposed generally, see supra, §30.)

(2) Opposing Counsel. In Trade Center Properties v. Superior Court (1960) 185 C.A.2d 409, 8 C.R. 345, plaintiff sued defendant for services in procuring a loan from F and Co. Counsel for defendant took a statement from F, president of F and Co. Plaintiff sought to take the deposition of defendant's attorney and to obtain a copy of the statement by subpoena duces tecum in connection with the deposition. The trial judge granted a protective order against taking of the deposition, and plaintiff applied for mandamus to compel the taking. Held, writ denied. The written statement by F (not a client) was not privileged, but there are strong policy reasons against taking the deposition of opposing counsel on matters pertaining to the trial: "Whether to protect the work product of that attorney or to restrict the picking of his brains, the court clearly should bar such a proceeding except upon a showing of extremely good cause. No such showing is here made. On the contrary, it is clear that Files has responded freely to interviews by petitioner's counsel, and remains available for further interview, or for deposition if required. Lacking strong elements of good cause, it would seem an abuse of discretion for the trial court to refuse an order that the deposition not be taken." (185 C.A.2d 411.) (See Greyhound Corp. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 C.2d 355, 401, 15 C.R. 90, 364 P.2d 266 [dictum approving Trade Center approach]; supra, §31.)

[§ 63] Stay of Deposition.

(1) Pending Inspection. In Rosemont v. Superior Court (1964) 60 C.2d 709, 36 C.R. 439, 388 P.2d 671, plaintiff sued for breach of contract and inducing breach. The parties agreed that plaintiff's deposition be taken October 1 and defendant T's October 24. Plaintiff, however, had 39 recordings of conversations with defendants and their employees, which defendants wanted to inspect. Accordingly, defendants moved for an order requiring production or, in the alternative, a protective order to stay defendant T's deposition pending application for mandamus to compel inspection. Plaintiff then moved for an order requiring defendants to give their depositions before he produced the recordings. The trial judge stayed T's deposition pending his ruling; then, on December 7, he denied defendants' motion for lack of identifying information, but ordered plaintiff to furnish it. Plaintiff filed a declaration listing the recorded conversations, and the judge then ordered that defendants were entitled to inspect them before plaintiff could take their depositions. Held, prohibition denied; the order was proper.

(a) The trial judge has statutory (former C.C.P. 2019(b)(1)) as well as inherent power to stay a deposition pending decision on a motion for a protective order. (60 C.2d 714.)

(b) Plaintiff's argument that he was entitled to the advantage gained by first securing discovery (to take T's deposition before defendants could cure their defective motion) was unacceptable. Parties are entitled to the benefits normally flowing from prompt action, but plaintiff was seeking a one-sided advantage in being able to refresh his recollection before his own deposition while denying this opportunity to defendants. (60 C.2d 714.)

(c) The trial judge could have exercised his discretion in plaintiff's favor, on the ground of defendants' delay in seeking inspection and their inadequate motion; but, in view of plaintiff's own delay in prosecuting the action, he was justified in insisting on the fairness of mutual discovery. (60 C.2d 715.) (See also Poeschl v. Superior Court (1964) 229 C.A.2d 383, 386, 40 C.R. 697 [Rosemont followed on similar facts].)

(2) Pending Exchange of Information. A protective order requiring exchange of expert appraisals before deposition is frequently made in condemnation cases. "The key element is mutuality"; i.e., one party should not be permitted, by deposition or interrogatories, to explore the reports and opinions of the other party's experts without simultaneously divulging those of his or her own. (Swartzman v. Superior Court (1964) 231 C.A.2d 195, 204, 41 C.R. 721.)

In Swartzman, defendants refused offers of mutual exchange of data and of simultaneous depositions of all experts; they would not commit themselves on whether they would use an appraiser at the trial, and insisted on the right to depose the state's appraisal expert without any exchange of valuation data. "Clearly, petitioners sought to play their hand with their cards close to the chest while demanding that their opponent play its cards face up from the table. Such one-way discovery, no give and all take, would quickly drive fairness and mutuality out of pretrial investigation." (231 C.A.2d 205.)

cc. Class Actions.

[§ 64] Class Actions.

Conventional discovery procedures are susceptible of abuse during class actions and require a proper allocation of burdens. In Southern Calif. Edison Co. v. Superior Court (1972) 7 C.3d 832, 103 C.R. 709, 500 P.2d 621, five named plaintiffs, representing themselves and a class of approximately 1,500 Redondo Beach boat owners, alleged that defendant power company damaged the boats through the wrongful discharge of pollutants from a generating plant. Plaintiffs sought $ 5 million in compensatory damages, the same amount in exemplary damages and a permanent injunction. After denying the allegations, defendant began discovery proceedings by selecting 20 names at random from a list of members of the boat owners' association, as supplied by plaintiffs. Depositions were noticed for these 20 persons. Without conceding responsibility, plaintiffs tried to produce the requested deponents but were able to bring in only two such persons. Defendant then noticed the depositions of another 20 randomly selected persons and announced its intention of moving to exclude from the class all those who failed to appear. The named plaintiffs obtained a protective order declaring that it was unfair to require plaintiffs' attorney to produce anyone other than the named plaintiffs, that defendant's notices of deposition should be quashed and that defendant could renounce the depositions through issuance of subpoenas. Held, the trial court did not abuse its discretion.

(a) The issue posed by the trial judge's order is a practical one, dealing with allocation of the burden of securing the unnamed plaintiffs' attendance at depositions. As set forth in Greyhound Corp. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 C.2d 355, 383, 15 C.R. 90, 364 P.2d 266 (supra, §25), the correct test requires the judge to weigh the relative importance of the information against the hardship its production might entail, as well as considering the parties' abilities to obtain the information. Here, good cause existed for issuance of a protective order, because defendant was as able as the named plaintiffs to compel the attendance of the unnamed plaintiffs, the class was loosely knit, and defendant allegedly was planning to continue noticing depositions and moving to exclude the unnamed plaintiffs who did not appear. (7 C.3d 841.)

"We fear that the notice procedure employed by [defendant] is susceptible of great abuse. In essence, plaintiffs' attorneys will be forced to expend extraordinary time and effort to round up persons of a disorganized class with whom they probably have had no prior contact. ... Prospective deponents who do not heed informal efforts on the part of counsel and do not appear will face potential exclusion. Thus, a defendant can effectively stifle a class action at the discovery stage, either by imposing impossibly expensive burdens on the named plaintiffs or by chipping away at the size of the class through exclusion of the unnamed plaintiffs. It is especially vital to prevent such 'chilling' of class actions in light of their new importance as a litigation tool." (7 C.3d 842.) However, the proper allocation of discovery burdens "might be different if the class alleged were a closely organized group, where the members generally knew each other and participated together in the planning of the lawsuit." (7 C.3d 841, footnote 7.)

In Carlson v. Superior Court (1973) 33 C.A.3d 640, 109 C.R. 240, a follow-up case to Southern Calif. Edison Co. v. Superior Court, the trial judge allowed defendant to serve "alternative" deposition subpoenas on unnamed plaintiffs, in which the subpoena was accompanied by a letter informing the prospective deponent of the nature of the case and by a declaration waiving claim, to be executed if he wished to avoid the deposition and waive his rights to recovery as a member of the class. The named plaintiffs sought extraordinary relief to prohibit this procedure. Held, mandamus granted. The procedure was just another device by which a defendant could chip away at the size of the class through exclusion of unnamed plaintiffs. The order "did not allow unnamed plaintiffs to freely 'opt out' of the class but, rather, required them to either submit to deposition proceedings or exclude themselves from the class. In effect, unnamed plaintiffs served with deposition subpoenas are required, under the terms of the trial court's order, to take affirmative action in order to remain as members of the class." (33 C.A.3d 649.)

"If defendant is desirous of taking the depositions of unnamed plaintiffs, remedies are available to it to enforce its subpoenas. The sending of notice to unnamed plaintiffs respecting the nature of the action and their option to exclude themselves from the class should they choose to do so is not, in and of itself, improper. Indeed, this is procedure approved under rule 23, Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, and California Civil Code section 1781 for use at an appropriate time. That which we find objectionable is the either/or nature of the notice used here, reinforced as it is by inclusion of the waiver form, which encourages unnamed plaintiffs to 'opt out' of the class at the discovery stage rather than to submit to deposition proceedings." (33 C.A.3d 651.)

B. Oral Depositions.

3. Deposition Proceedings.

c. Method of Conducting Examination.

1. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 65

[§ 65] In General.

Unless modified by stipulation (supra, §36), deposition procedure is as follows:

(1) Oath and Reporter. The deposition officer must put the deponent under oath. The deponent's testimony must be taken stenographically, unless the parties agree or the court orders otherwise. (C.C.P. 2025(l)(1); see C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §§4.38, 4.39, 5.31; 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §2.22; on use of audiotape or videotape, see infra, §67 et seq.) The usual practice is to have a qualified shorthand reporter, who also acts as the deposition officer. (See C.C.P. 2093(b); supra, §35.)

(2) Examination and Cross-Examination. Examination and cross-examination of a deponent proceeds as permitted at trial under the Evidence Code. (C.C.P. 2025(l)(1); see 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §164 et seq.; C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §5.13 et seq.; 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §2.28; 4 Am.Jur. Trials 119, 161; on strategies for preparing deponents for depositions, see Dunne on Depositions in California, Chap. 5; on procedures and techniques for deposing expert witnesses, see Dunne on Depositions in California, Chap. 8.)

(3) Objections. Stated objections are taken stenographically unless the parties agree or the court orders otherwise. (C.C.P. 2025(l)(1).) The deposition proceeds subject to the objection, unless the objecting party demands that the deposition be suspended to permit a motion for a protective order (see infra, §61). (C.C.P. 2025(m)(2).) (On strategies for making objections, see Dunne on Depositions in California §7:11; on strategies for dealing with objections to questions, see Dunne on Depositions in California §6:14 et seq.; on procedural defects as basis for objection to introduction of deposition at trial, see 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §161; on inadmissibility as basis for objection, see 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §162; on raising objections to deposition notice, see C.C.P. 2025(g), supra, §48.)

(4) Claim of Privilege or Work Product Protection. The protection of information from discovery on the ground that it is privileged or protected by the work product doctrine is waived unless a specific and timely objection is made. (C.C.P. 2025(m)(1).) This provision had no counterpart in the former statute. Its absence, together with the general rule that objections based on competency, relevancy or materiality are not waived (C.C.P. 2025(m)(3); 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §162), might have misled an inexperienced attorney into thinking that objections based on privilege or work product are preserved even when not asserted during the deposition. However, under Ev.C. 912(a) (2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §67), a privilege is waived by failure to make a timely claim. "Since the work product protection is in many ways analogous to a privilege, failure to invoke it should also result in a waiver." (Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2025(m)(1), in 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C; see 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §2.27; on strategies for asserting privileges, see Dunne on Depositions in California §7:17 et seq.; on strategies for dealing with assertion of privilege, see Dunne on Depositions in California §6:17 et seq.)

(5) Failure To Respond. If the deponent fails to answer a question or fails to produce a document or tangible thing under the deponent's control that is requested in the deposition notice or subpoena, the deposing party "may adjourn the deposition or complete the examination on other matters without waiving the right at a later time to move for an order compelling that answer or production" under C.C.P. 2025(o) (infra, §70). (C.C.P. 2025(m)(4).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Oath and Reporter. C.C.P. 2093(b) was subdivided and amended in 2001. The provision concerning the shorthand reporter's acting as deposition officer is contained in C.C.P. 2093(b)(1), and it applies to depositions taken by telephone or other remote electronic means. (C.C.P. 2093(b)(2); see Supp., supra, §§27A, 55.)

C.C.P. 2025(l)(1), outlining the deposition process, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.330 in 2004 without substantive change.

See C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 4th, §5.72; Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §2.22.

(2) Examination and Cross-Examination. C.C.P. 2025(l)(1), on the procedure for conducting the examination, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.330(d) in 2004 without substantive change.

See Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §2.28; C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 4th, §6.23 et seq.

(3) Objections. C.C.P. 2025(l)(1), requiring any objections to be taken stenographically, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.330(b) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2025.330(b) was amended in 2005 to specify that if the testimony or objections are taken stenographically, it must be by a person certified under B. & P.C. 8020 et seq.

C.C.P. 2025(m)(2), requiring the deposition to proceed absent a demand for suspension, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.460(b) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2025(g), on objections to the deposition notice, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.410 in 2004 without substantive change.

(4) Claim of Privilege or Work Product Protection. C.C.P. 2025(m)(1), on waiver of privilege, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.460(a) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2025(m)(3), on nonwaiver of competency, relevancy, or materiality objections, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.460(c) in 2004 without substantive change.

See Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §2.27; Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2025(m)(1), in Hogan, 2 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, Appendix D.(5) Failure To Respond. C.C.P. 2025(m)(4), on the deposing party's options where the deponent fails to respond or produce requested documents, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.460(d) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2025(o), on motions to compel, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.480 in 2004 without substantive change. West's Key Number Digest, Pretrial Procedure k.151 et seq.

[§ 66] No Legal Contention Questions.

In Rifkind v. Superior Court (1994) 22 C.A.4th 1255, 27 C.R.2d 822, one attorney sued another for improperly withdrawing money held in a joint account pending resolution of a fee dispute between them. At a deposition, defendant was asked to state all facts, list all witnesses, and identify all documents that supported the affirmative defenses he had asserted in his answer. Defendant's attorney objected to these questions, but invited plaintiff's attorney to ask the same questions by way of interrogatories. The trial judge granted plaintiff's motions to compel further answers and impose sanctions. Held, writ of mandamus issued. "Legal contention" questions of the type asked defendant, while appropriate for interrogatories (see infra, §105), are not proper in the deposition of a party who is represented by counsel. (22 C.A.4th 1263.) They are unfair, as they call on the deponent to sort out the factual material in the case according to specific legal contentions, and to do this by memory and on the spot. If the deposing party "wants to know what the adverse party is contending, or how it rationalizes the facts as supporting a contention, it may ask that question in an interrogatory. The party answering the interrogatory may then, with aid of counsel, apply the legal reasoning involved in marshaling the facts relied upon for each of its contentions." (22 C.A.4th 1262.)

(1) Former Law. The use of audiotape or videotape in reporting deposition proceedings has been the frequent subject of commentary. (See 24 Hastings L. J. 1, 9; 66 A.L.R.3d 637 [videotape]; 13 A.L.R.4th 775 [audiotape]; see also the Uniform Audio-Visual Deposition Act, 12 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), p. 51; 23 Am.Jur. Trials 95.)

In Bailey v. Superior Court (1977) 19 C.3d 970, 140 C.R. 669, 568 P.2d 394, plaintiff B sued defendant manufacturer of a radial arm saw, alleging negligence as the proximate cause of an injury to his hand sustained while he was operating the saw. Defendant denied its negligence and submitted interrogatories asking for a description of the manner in which the accident had occurred. Contending that the responses did not furnish an adequate description, defendant then sought to take an oral deposition of plaintiff, with a direction that he reenact for videotape his version of the accident, and that the videotape and responses be used as part of the deposition. Plaintiff's counsel objected. Held, order granting defendant's motion reversed. The statutory definition of deposition and the provisions for reading, correcting, and signing made clear the legislative intention that depositions be stenographically recorded and transcribed into a writing unless the parties otherwise agreed. (19 C.3d 974, 976, 977.) (On present law regarding physical reenactment of accident, see infra, §69.)

(2) Present Law. The party noticing a deposition may make a videotape or audiotape record if the deposition notice states an intention to record the testimony by either method or all parties agree to either method. Another party, at his or her own expense, may make a videotape or audiotape record if the party "promptly" gives written notice of an intention to do so, not less than 3 calendar days before the scheduled date of the deposition. If the notice is given 3 calendar days before the deposition date, it must be made by personal service under C.C.P. 1011 (6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, §20). The notice must be served on the party or attorney who noticed the deposition, on all other parties or attorneys on whom the deposition notice was served, and on any deponent whose attendance is being compelled by a deposition subpoena. (C.C.P. 2025(l)(1); see Green v. GTE Calif. (1994) 29 C.A.4th 407, 410, 34 C.R.2d 517 [sanctions properly imposed against plaintiff's attorney, who attempted to videotape defendant's counsel taking plaintiff's deposition; 3-day statutory notice was not given, and "it is questionable whether the statute applies to videotaping opposing counsel instead of the witness"].) (See C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §5.9 et seq.; 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §2.22; 21 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 1199 [federal rule]; 44 Am.Jur. (2) Present Law. C.C.P. 2025(l)(1), as amended in 2002, refers to "audio or video technology," rather than "audiotape or videotape."

C.C.P. 2025(l)(1) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.330(c) in 2004 without substantive change.

(1) Location. The area used for recording a deposition must be "suitably large, adequately lighted, and reasonably quiet." (C.C.P. 2025(l)(2)(A).)

(2) Equipment Operator. The operator of the equipment must be competent to set up, operate, and maintain it (C.C.P. 2025(l)(2)(B)) and must not "distort the appearance or the demeanor of participants in the deposition by the use of camera or sound recording techniques" (C.C.P. 2025(l)(2)(C)).

Unless the operator is also the deposition officer, he or she may be an employee of the attorney taking the deposition. However, if a videotaped deposition of an expert witness or a treating or consulting physician is to be used at trial or at a hearing, the operator must be a person authorized to administer oaths, may not be financially interested in the action, and may not be a relative or employee of an attorney for a party. (C.C.P. 2025(l)(2)(B), 2025(d)(6); on notice of intent to use deposition at trial, see C.C.P. 2025(l)(2)(I), infra, §79.) All parties attending a deposition may agree on the record to waive these restrictions and qualifications. (C.C.P. 2025(l)(2)(B).)

(3) Content of Record. The videotape or audiotape record must include:

(a) At the beginning, a statement including (1) the operator's name and business address, (2) the name and business address of the operator's employer, (3) the date, time, and place of the deposition, (4) the caption of the case, (5) the identities of the deponent and the party taking the deposition, and (6) any stipulations. (b) Personal identification of counsel. (C.C.P. 2025(l)(2)(E).)

(c) The administration of the oath. (C.C.P. 2025(l)(2)(F).)

(d) Where more than one unit of tape is required, an announcement of the beginning and end of each unit. (C.C.P. 2025(l)(2)(G).)

(e) A statement of any stipulations concerning custody of the recording and the exhibits or "concerning other pertinent matters." (C.C.P. 2025(l)(2)(H).)

(f) At the conclusion, a statement that the deposition is ended. (C.C.P. 2025(l)(2)(H).)

II. DEPOSITIONS

B. Oral Depositions.

3. Deposition Proceedings.

c. Method of Conducting Examination.

3. Videotape or Audiotape Recording of Deposition.

cc. Physical Reenactment.

[§ 69] Physical Reenactment.

In Emerson Elec. Co. v. Superior Court (1997) 16 C.4th 1101, 68 C.R.2d 883, 946 P.2d 841, the issue was whether, in the course of a videotaped deposition in a products liability action arising from an accident with a radial arm saw, defendants could require plaintiff to diagram the circumstances of the accident and to reenact it. Concluding that it was bound by the holding in Stermer v. Superior Court (1993) 20 C.A.4th 777, 24 C.R.2d 577, that a trial court has no authority to order a deponent to give nonverbal testimony, the trial judge denied defendants' motion for a sanction that would have precluded plaintiff from reenacting the accident at trial. He also denied their alternative motion for an order compelling plaintiff to provide nonverbal testimony, including a reenactment, at the deposition. The Court of Appeal, expressly disagreeing with the Stermer case, granted writ relief. Held, judgment of Court of Appeal affirmed.

(a) "Answer" includes nonverbal response. C.C.P. 2025(o) authorizes a party to enforce the discovery right when a deponent "fails to answer any question." The first question, therefore, is whether "answer" includes nonverbal as well as verbal responses. The language, context, and legislative history of the statute all indicate that nonverbal responses are included. The plain meaning of "answer" encompasses "saying, writing, or doing something called for in return." (16 C.4th 1106, 1107.) Adopting this ordinary meaning of "answer" serves to harmonize C.C.P. 2025(o) with C.C.P. 2025(l)(1), which provides that examination and cross-examination of the deponent should proceed as permitted at trial: It is undisputed that evidence at trial may include a nonverbal answer to a question, including a physical demonstration or reenactment. Furthermore, one of the purposes of the Civil Discovery Act of 1986 was to bring California discovery procedures closer to federal practice, which then, as now, provided for videotaped depositions, including reenactments. Prior California case law had determined that videotaped depositions were not permitted without the consent of the parties. The legislative history of C.C.P. 2025 indicates that that case law was intended to be superseded. (16 C.4th 1108, 1109.)

(b) Discovery procedures protect against abuse. Construing the statute to require nonverbal responses does not present any dangers that cannot be minimized through the use of already existing discovery procedures. The conditions and techniques of the videorecording are prescribed by statute (C.C.P. 2025(l)(2)), and the deponent may interpose, on the videotaped record, objections to any errors or irregularities (C.C.P. 2025(m)). Moreover, the deponent may seek judicial protection from "unwarranted annoyance, embarrassment, or oppression, or undue burden and expense." (C.C.P. 2025(i).) "In the appropriate case, the court may limit or preclude the request for a reenactment altogether, on safety, feasibility, or other grounds. ... The need for, and nature of, such a protective order will, of course, depend on the circumstances of the individual case." (16 C.4th 1110, 1111.)

(c) Sanctions. Because a deponent may be required to perform a demonstration or reenactment at a party's request, the refusal to do so may subject the deponent to any of the usual discovery abuse penalties, including issue, evidence, or terminating sanctions under C.C.P. 2023. The trial judge, who denied defendants' motions to compel only reluctantly, must hold a new hearing and reconsider defendants' motions, unconstrained by the erroneous holding in Stermer. (16 C.4th 1112, 1113.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

C.C.P. 2025(o), on enforcement of the discovery right where a deponent fails to answer, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.480 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2025(l)(1), requiring the examination and cross-examination to proceed as at trial, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.330(d) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2025(l)(2), on the conditions and techniques of videorecording, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.340 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2025(m), on objections, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.460 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2025(i), on protection from annoyance, embarrassment, undue burden, or expense, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.420(b) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2023, on discovery sanctions, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

II. DEPOSITIONS

B. Oral Depositions.

3. Deposition Proceedings.

c. Method of Conducting Examination.

4. Deponent's Failure To Answer or Produce.

aa. Motion To Compel Answer or Production.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 70

[§ 70] Motion To Compel Answer or Production.

(1) Timing of Motion. If a deponent fails to answer a question or to produce a document or tangible thing under the deponent's control that is specified in the deposition notice or a deposition subpoena, the party seeking discovery may move the court for an order compelling that answer or production. The motion must be made no later than 60 days after completion of the record of the deposition. (C.C.P. 2025(o); on format of motion, see supra, §28.)

(2) Notice of Motion. Notice of the motion to compel an answer or production must be given to all parties, and to the deponent either orally at the examination, or by subsequent service in writing. If notice of the motion is given orally, the deposition officer must direct the deponent to attend a session of the court at the time specified in the notice. (C.C.P. 2025(o).) (On options for setting hearing, see Dunne on Depositions §§6:10 [setting orally at deposition], 6:11 [setting in writing after completion of deposition].)

A nonparty deponent must be personally served with written notice and all moving papers supporting a motion to compel an answer to a deposition question, unless the nonparty deponent agrees to accept service by mail at an address specified on the deposition record. (C.R.C., Rule 337.)

(3) Attempt at Informal Resolution. The motion must be accompanied by a declaration stating facts showing a reasonable and good faith attempt at an informal resolution of each issue presented by the motion. (C.C.P. 2025(o); on monetary sanctions for failure to attempt informal resolution, see infra, §252.)

Although a deposition differs from other discovery mechanisms in that counsel for both parties are present, it is nevertheless subject to the requirement of an attempt at informal resolution prior to any motion to compel. Exchanges between counsel that merely amount to argument, and not an effort at informal negotiation, do not constitute such an attempt. "We do not propose an absolute rule that informal resolution must always await the conclusion of a deposition. Rather, we find that the statute requires that there be a serious effort at negotiation and informal resolution. We leave it to the parties to determine the proper time, manner, and place for such discussion." (Townsend v. Superior Court (1998) 61 C.A.4th 1431, 1436, 1437, 72 C.R.2d 333 [trial judge erred in granting motion and awarding sanctions after plaintiff refused to answer questions; heated debate over appropriateness of objection, interspersed between rounds of further interrogation, did not constitute earnest attempt to resolve impasse].)

(4) Record at Hearing on Motion. Not less than 5 days before the hearing on the motion to compel, the moving party must lodge with the court a certified copy of the relevant parts of the deposition transcript, including the transcript from a videotaped or audiotaped deposition. (C.C.P. 2025(o).)

(5) Monetary Sanctions. The court must impose a monetary sanction under C.C.P. 2023 (infra, §252) against a party, person, or attorney who unsuccessfully makes or opposes a motion to compel an answer or production, unless it finds that the one subject to the sanction acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make the imposition of the sanction unjust. (C.C.P. 2025(o).)

(6) Order Compelling Answer or Production. If the court determines that the answer or production sought is subject to discovery, it must order that the answer be given or the production be made when the deposition resumes. If a deponent fails to obey the order, the failure may be considered a contempt of court. In addition, if the disobedient deponent is a party to the action or an officer, director, managing agent, or employee of a party, the court may impose a monetary sanction, an issue sanction, an evidence sanction, or a terminating sanction, or make other just orders, against the disobedient party, or against the party with whom the disobedient deponent is affiliated. (C.C.P. 2025(o); on various types of sanctions, see C.C.P. 2023, infra, §252 et seq.; on commitment order following finding of contempt, see In re de la Parra (1986) 184 C.A.3d 139, 228 C.R. 864, infra, §262; see also 38 *Stanf. SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Timing of Motion. The portion of C.C.P. 2025(o) relating to the timing of the motion was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.480(b) in 2004 without substantive change.

(2) Notice of Motion. The portion of C.C.P. 2025(o) relating to notice procedures was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.480(c) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.R.C., Rule 337 was renumbered C.R.C., Rule 3.1025 in 2006.(3) Attempt at Informal Resolution. See Stewart v. Colonial Western Agency (2001) 87 C.A.4th 1006, 1016, 1017, 105 C.R.2d 115 [informal resolution attempts of plaintiff's counsel were adequate, even though they did not involve separate in-person or telephonic discussion, where defendant's objections to deposition questions were made at deposition so that counsel had opportunity to discuss matter face-to-face, issue was relatively simple, and there was need for immediate action because of upcoming trial and discovery cutoff dates].

The portion of C.C.P. 2025(o) requiring a meet and confer declaration was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.480(b) in 2004 without substantive change.

(4) Record at Hearing on Motion. The portion of C.C.P. 2025(o) requiring the moving party to lodge a certified copy of the relevant parts of the transcript was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.480(d) in 2004 without substantive change.

(5) Monetary Sanctions. C.C.P. 2023, on monetary sanctions generally, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

The portion of C.C.P. 2025(o) specifying when a monetary sanction must be imposed was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.480(f) in 2004 without substantive change.

(6) Order Compelling Answer or Production. C.C.P. 2023, on sanctions authorized for discovery abuses, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

The portion of C.C.P. 2025(o) relating to orders requiring an answer or production was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.480(e) in 2004 without substantive change.

The portion of C.C.P. 2025(o) relating to contempt and other sanctions was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.480(g) in 2004 without substantive change. West's Key Number Digest, Pretrial Procedure k.221 et seq.

bb. Review Following Motion.

[§ 71] Review Following Motion.

If the trial judge erroneously refuses to order a witness to testify or answer proper questions, this error, like any other, is reviewable on appeal from the final judgment. (See 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Appeal, §17; on federal practice, see 74 Harv. L. Rev. 992, 993.) This remedy, however, is seldom adequate, and the writ of mandamus is usually employed. (See Agnew v. Superior Court (1958) 156 C.A.2d 838, 839, 320 P.2d 158; Carlson v. Superior Court (1961) 56 C.2d 431, 435, 15 C.R. 132, 364 P.2d 308; Chapin v. Superior Court (1966) 239 C.A.2d 851, 854, 49 C.R. 199; 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Extraordinary Writs, §§6, 98 et seq.) Hence, if a witness refuses to testify or answer a proper question, and, after this disobedience is reported, the court fails to order the witness to obey or to punish him or her for refusal, this duty of the court may be enforced by mandamus. (McClatchy Newspapers v. Superior Court (1945) 26 C.2d 386, 394, 159 P.2d 944 ["By refusing to compel a witness to answer proper questions, a trial court may effectively deny a litigant the right to take a deposition"]; I.E.S. Corp. v. Superior Court (1955) 44 C.2d 559, 564, 283 P.2d 700; Agnew v. Superior Court (1958) 156 C.A.2d 838, 839, 320 P.2d 158; Hauk v. Superior Court (1964) 61 C.2d 295, 299, 38 C.R. 345, 391 P.2d 825; Pember v. Superior Court (1966) 240 C.A.2d 888, 890, 50 C.R. 24; Morris Stulsaft Foundation v. Superior Court (1966) 245 C.A.2d 409, 415, 54 C.R. 12; Jonon v. Superior Court (1979) 93 C.A.3d 683, 688, 155 C.R. 822 [noting, however, qualification that writ will issue only to review questions of first impression and general importance]; 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Extraordinary Writs, §§108, 156.)

If the trial judge has affirmatively acted to deny the right of a party to take a deposition, the erroneous order may be reviewed by mandamus for abuse of discretion, and the trial judge may be ordered to vacate or set it aside. Mandamus used in this manner is similar in effect to certiorari, except that the ground is not excess of jurisdiction but mere error (abuse of discretion). (See Carlson v. Superior Court (1961) 56 C.2d 431, 435, 15 C.R. 132, 364 P.2d 308 [this is proper method of obtaining relief; review on appeal from final judgment is inadequate remedy]; Nelson v. Superior Court (1986) 184 C.A.3d 444, 453, 229 C.R. 94 [mandamus denied; no abuse of discretion]; 95 A.L.R.2d 1229 [availability of mandamus or prohibition to compel discovery]; 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Extraordinary Writs, §253.)

1. Transcription.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 72

[§ 72] Transcription.

(1) Requirement. Unless the parties agree otherwise, the stenographic recording of a deposition must be transcribed. (C.C.P. 2025(p).) The party taking the deposition should make the necessary arrangements with the reporter. But if the deposition does not bring out valuable evidence, or for some other reason is not needed or desired, the attorneys may defer or dispense with transcription. (See 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §2.31.)

(2) Costs. The party noticing the deposition normally bears the cost of transcription. The court may, however, on motion and for good cause shown, order that the cost be borne or shared by another party. Another party, at that party's expense, may obtain a copy of the transcript. (C.C.P. 2025(p).) The Commission concluded that "the one insisting on the transcription should be required to bear the cost unless the court orders otherwise." (Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2025(p), in 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C; on strategies for avoiding costs of transcription and copying, see Dunne on Depositions in California §§2:3, 2:5, 2:6, 2:8, 2:9.)

(3) Official Version. If the deposition is recorded both stenographically and by audiotape or videotape, the stenographic transcript is the official record of the deposition testimony for the purposes of the trial, subsequent hearings, or appeal. (C.C.P. 2025(p).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Requirement. The portion of C.C.P. 2025(p) relating to the transcription requirement was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.510(a) in 2004 without substantive change.

See Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §2.31.

(2) Costs. C.C.P. 2025(p) was amended in 2002 to specify that a copy may be obtained by "any other party or the deponent."

The portion of C.C.P. 2025(p) relating to costs was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.510(b) in 2004 without substantive change.

Under C.C.P. 2025.510(h), added in 2007, the "requesting attorney or party appearing in propria persona" must timely pay the deposition officer or entity providing the services of the deposition officer for the transcription or transcription copy and "any other deposition products or services that are requested either orally or in writing." (C.C.P. 2025.510(h)(1).) However, this requirement is inapplicable if responsibility for payment is otherwise provided by law, or if the deposition officer or entity is notified in writing at the time that services or products are requested that the party or "another identified person" is responsible for payment. (C.C.P. 2025.510(h)(2).) Further, C.C.P. 2025.510(h) does not prohibit or supersede an agreement between an attorney and party allocating responsibility for the payment of deposition costs to the party. (C.C.P. 2025.510(h)(3).)

See Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2025(p), in Hogan, 2 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, Appendix D.

(3) Official Version. C.C.P. 2025(p) was amended in 2002 to refer to "audio or video technology," rather than "audiotape or videotape."

The portion of C.C.P. 2025(p) making the stenographic transcript the official record was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.510(g) in 2004 without substantive change. West's Key Number Digest, Pretrial Procedure k.139

B. Oral Depositions.

3. Deposition Proceedings.

d. Procedures Following Examination.

2. Reading, Hearing, or Viewing.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 73

[§ 73] Reading, Hearing, or Viewing.

(1) Transcript. If the deposition testimony is stenographically recorded, the deposition officer must send written notice to the deponent and to all parties attending the deposition when the original transcript for each deposition session is available for reading, correcting, and signing. However, the deponent and the attending parties may agree on the record to waive reading, correcting, and signing the transcript or to handle these matters after the entire deposition has been concluded or at some other specific date. (C.C.P. 2025(q)(1).)

A deposition officer who receives a request for an original or a copy of a deposition transcript from one party must give immediate notice of the request to the other parties that attended the deposition and, on request, make the original or copy available to all parties at the same time. (C.C.P. 2025(p).)

(2) Videotape or Audiotape Record. If there is no stenographic transcript, the deposition officer must send written notice to all the parties attending the deposition when the recording is available for review, unless the deponent and those parties waive review of the tape. (C.C.P. 2025(q)(2).)

On request, a party who records a deposition must promptly allow another party to hear or view the recording and must furnish a copy at reasonable cost. (C.C.P. 2025(p).) Similarly, an operator who retains custody of a tape must, on request, allow the deponent or any party to hear or view the tape and must furnish a copy of it. The operator may first receive compensation for the cost of making a copy or providing facilities for viewing or hearing the tape. (C.C.P. 2025(s)(2).)

(1) Transcript. C.C.P. 2025(q)(1), on the reading, correcting, and signing of the transcript, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.520(a) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2025(p), on requests for the original or copies of the transcript, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.510(d) in 2004 without substantive change. (2) Videotape or Audiotape Record. C.C.P. 2025(p), 2025(q), and 2025(s) were amended in 2002 to refer to "audio or video technology," rather than "audiotape or videotape."

The portion of C.C.P. 2025(p) regarding the obligations of the party who recorded testimony by video or audio technology was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.510(f) in 2004 without substantive change.

The portion of C.C.P. 2025(q)(2) regarding the notice requirement where there was no stenographic transcription was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.530(a) in 2004 without substantive change.

The portion of C.C.P. 2025(s)(2) regarding the obligations of an operator who retains custody of the video or audio record was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.560 in 2004 without substantive change.

II. DEPOSITIONS

B. Oral Depositions.

3. Deposition Proceedings.

d. Procedures Following Examination.

3. Correction and Signing.

aa. Transcript.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 74

[§ 74] Transcript.

(1) Review Period. For 30 days following the deposition officer's notice that the transcript is available (see supra, §73), the deponent may change the form or the substance of the answer to a question. The deponent may either approve the transcript by signing it or refuse to approve the transcript by not signing it. The deponent and the attending parties may agree on the record or in writing to shorten or lengthen the 30-day period, or the court may shorten the period for good cause. (C.C.P. 2025(q)(1); see 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §§2.32, 2.34.)

Alternatively, during the same time period, the deponent may make changes and approve or refuse to approve the transcript by signing and mailing a letter to the deposition officer. The letter must be mailed by certified or registered mail with return receipt requested, and a copy must be sent by first-class mail to all parties attending the deposition. (C.C.P. 2025(q)(1).)

(2) Notification of Deponent's Action. The deposition officer must indicate on the original transcript what action the deponent has taken and whether the deponent has approved, failed to approve, or refused to approve the transcript. The officer must also notify the attending parties in writing of any changes that the deponent timely made in person. (C.C.P. 2025(q)(1).)

(3) Consequences of Failure or Refusal To Approve. If the deponent fails or refuses to approve the transcript within the allotted period, the deposition will be considered approved, subject to the deponent's timely changes. However, on a "seasonable" motion to suppress the deposition, accompanied by a declaration stating facts showing a reasonable and good faith attempt at an informal resolution of each issue presented by the motion, the court may determine that the reasons given for the failure or refusal to approve the transcript require rejection of the deposition in whole or in part. (C.C.P. 2025(q)(1); on monetary sanctions for failure to attempt informal resolution, see infra, §252.)

The court must impose a monetary sanction under C.C.P. 2023 (infra, §252) against a party, person, or attorney who unsuccessfully makes or opposes a motion to suppress a deposition. However, the sanctions may be avoided if the court finds that the one subject to the sanction acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make imposing the sanction unjust. (C.C.P. 2025(q)(1).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Review Period. The portion of C.C.P. 2025(q)(1) regarding the deponent's review period was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.520(b), (c) in 2004 without substantive change.

See Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §§2.32, 2.34.

(2) Notification of Deponent's Action. The portion of C.C.P. 2025(q)(1) regarding notification as to any action taken by the deponent was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.520(e) in 2004 without substantive change.

(3) Consequences of Failure or Refusal To Approve. C.C.P. 2023, on monetary sanctions generally, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

The portion of C.C.P. 2025(q)(1) regarding the deponent's failure or refusal to approve the transcript was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.520(f), (g) in 2004 without substantive change.

The portion of C.C.P. 2025(q)(1) regarding sanctions was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.520(h) in 2004 without substantive change.

(1) Review Period. For 30 days following the deposition officer's notice that the recording is available (see supra, §73), the deponent, personally or by signed letter, may change the substance of any answer. (C.C.P. 2025(q)(2).)

(2) Notification of Deponent's Action. In a writing that accompanies the recording, the deposition officer must identify the changes that the deponent has made. The deponent may sign the writing to identify the deposition as his or her own. Otherwise, the officer must state that the deponent failed to sign or to contact the officer within the allotted period. (C.C.P. 2025(q)(2).)

(3) Consequences of Failure or Refusal To Sign. Where a deponent fails to contact the officer or refuses to sign, the deposition will be given the same effect as though signed. However, on a reasonable motion to suppress the deposition, the court may determine that the reasons given for the refusal to sign require rejection of the deposition in whole or in part. The motion must be accompanied by a declaration showing a reasonable and good faith attempt at an informal resolution of each issue presented. ### 2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 76

[§ 76] Certification and Sealing.

(1) Certification. The deposition officer must certify on the transcript, or in a writing accompanying an audiotaped or videotaped deposition, that the deponent was duly sworn and that the deposition is a true record of the testimony given. (C.C.P. 2025(r)(1)); see 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §2.35.) A rough draft transcript may not be certified, or used, cited, or transcribed as the certified transcript, nor may it be used to rebut or contradict the certified transcript. (C.C.P. 2025(r)(2).)

(2) Sealing and Marking With Name of Witness. The deposition officer must securely seal the transcript in an envelope or package endorsed with the title of the action and marked "Deposition of (here insert name of deponent)." (C.C.P. 2025(s)(1).)

(3) Opening Sealed Deposition. The court, on motion and for good cause shown, may order that a sealed deposition may be opened only by court order. (C.C.P. 2025(i)(15).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Certification. C.C.P. 2025(r)(1) was amended in 2002 to substitute "audio or video record of deposition testimony" for "audiotaped or videotaped deposition."

C.C.P. 2025(r)(1) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.540(a) in 2004 without substantive change.

5. Disposition and Retention.

[§ 77] Disposition and Retention.

(1) Transcript. The certified transcript of a deposition is not filed with the court. The deposition officer transmits the transcript to the attorney for the party who noticed the deposition. The attorney retains custody of the transcript "under conditions that will protect it against loss, destruction, or tampering" until 6 months after final disposition of the action. At that time, the transcript may be destroyed, unless, on the motion of a party and a showing of good cause, the court orders longer preservation. (C.C.P. 2025(s)(1); see 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §2.35.)

(2) Audiotape or Videotape. The taped record is not filed with the court, but is retained by the operator "under conditions that will protect it against loss, destruction, or tampering" and preserve as far as practicable the quality and integrity of the tape. An attorney or operator who has custody of a tape must retain it until 6 months after final disposition of the action. At that time, the tape may be destroyed or erased, unless, on the motion of a party and a showing of good cause, the court orders longer preservation. (C.C.P. 2025(s)(2).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Transcript. C.C.P. 2025(s)(1), regarding disposition and retention of the transcript, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.550 in 2004 without substantive change.

See Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §2.35.

(2) Audiotape or Videotape. C.C.P. 2025(s)(2) was amended in 2002 to delete references to "tape" and refer instead to "audio or video records."

C.C.P. 2025(s)(2) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.560 in 2004 without substantive change.

6. Public Access to Transcript, Videotape, or Audiotape.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 78

[§ 78] Public Access to Transcript, Videotape, or Audiotape.

Unless the court orders to the contrary, and on payment of a reasonable charge, the deposition officer must make available a copy of the transcript, videotape, or other recording of testimony, if it is still in the officer's possession, to any person requesting it. (C.C.P. 2025.5(a).) On receiving such a request, the officer must (1) notify all parties attending the deposition and the deponent that a request has been made, (2) advise them of the name of the person making the request, and (3) inform them of their right to seek a protective order. If the deposition officer is not served with a protective order within 30 days of mailing this notice, the officer must make the copy available to the person requesting it. (C.C.P. 2025.5(b)); on restrictions on dissemination and use of discovered information, see supra, §§21, 22.)

C.C.P. 2025.5(a) was amended in 2002 to apply to "a copy of the transcript of the deposition testimony made by, or at the direction of, any party, or an audio or video recording of the deposition testimony."

C.C.P. 2025.5 was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.570 in 2004 without substantive change. C.C.P. 2025.5(a), on the officer's duty to make a copy available, became C.C.P. 2025.570(a). C.C.P. 2025.5(b), on the steps to be taken by the officer once a copy is requested, became C.C.P. 2025.570(b), (c).

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 79

[§ 79] Intent To Use Videotape or Audiotape at Trial.

A party who intends to offer a recorded deposition in evidence under C.C.P. 2025(u) (3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §154) must notify the court and all parties in writing of this intention. The notice must designate the parts of the deposition to be used and must be made "within sufficient time for objections to be made and ruled on by the judge to whom the case is assigned for trial or hearing, and for any editing of the tape." Objections to all or part of the deposition must be made in writing. "The court may permit further designations of testimony and objections as justice may require," and may order that portions of the recording be suppressed or that an edited version be prepared. However, the original audiotape or videotape must be preserved unaltered. If no stenographic record has been made, the party offering the recording as evidence must accompany the offer with a transcript. (C.C.P. 2025(l)(2)(I).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

C.C.P. 2025(l)(2)(I) was amended in 2002 to refer to "audio or video recording," rather than "audiotaped or videotaped recording."

CHAPTER X - Discovery

II. DEPOSITIONS

C. Deposition by Written Questions.

1. Procedure.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 80

[§ 80] Procedure.

(1) Statutory Authorization. Formerly, written interrogatories could be used in California only for depositions of out-of-state witnesses. C.C.P. 2028 makes the procedure applicable also to depositions of parties or witnesses within the state. (See C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, Chap. 6; C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Discovery, Chap. 11; 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Chap. 3; 23 Am.Jur.2d (1983 ed.), Depositions and Discovery §168 et seq.; 8A Am.Jur. P.P. Forms (1996 ed.), Depositions and Discovery §381 et seq.; 4 Am.Jur. Trials 1, 88; for practical considerations in use of written depositions, see Dunne on Depositions in California, Chap. 12.) The statute uses the phrase "deposition by written questions" to avoid confusion with discovery by interrogatories to a party under C.C.P. 2030 (infra, §87 et seq.). (Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2028(a), in 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C.)

Except as modified by C.C.P. 2028, the procedures for taking oral depositions (see supra, §29 et seq. and infra, §83 et seq.) apply to written depositions. (C.C.P. 2028(a).)

(2) Notice of Deposition. The notice of a written deposition is the same as that for an oral deposition (see C.C.P. 2025(c), supra, §39), except that the deposition officer's name or title and address must be stated and the date, time, and place of the deposition may be left to future determination by the officer. (C.C.P. 2028(b).) (For form notices, see 8A Am.Jur. P.P. Forms (1996 ed.), Depositions and Discovery §384 et seq.)

Cross, redirect, and recross questions must be served on all parties entitled to notice of the deposition. Cross questions must be served within 30 days after direct questions are served, redirect questions must be served within 15 days after cross questions are served, and recross questions must be served within 15 days after redirect questions are served. The court may shorten or extend the periods for good cause. (C.C.P. 2028(c).) The deponent may not preview the form or substance of cross, redirect, or recross questions. (C.C.P. 2028(e).) (See C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §6.30 et seq.; 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §3.6; 8A Am.Jur. P.P. Forms (1996 ed.), Depositions and Discovery §392 et seq. [sample cross questions].)

(4) Court Participation. The court may make an appropriate protective order as provided in C.C.P. 2025(i), supra, §§59, 60. (C.C.P. 2028(f).) In addition, it may order that the deponent's testimony be taken by oral, instead of written, examination (C.C.P. 2028(f)(1)) or that a party may attend the deposition in person or by attorney and orally examine the deponent (C.C.P. 2028(f)(2)). The court may order that the deposition officer be someone other than the one named in the deposition notice. (C.C.P. 2028(f)(4).) (On court's authority to sustain or overrule objections made under C.C.P. 2028(d), see infra, §81.)

(5) Taking of Deposition. The party taking the deposition must deliver a copy of the notice and copies of all questions served under C.C.P. 2028(c), supra, to the designated officer. The officer must "proceed promptly" to ask the questions and record the deponent's responses. (C.C.P. 2028(g)); on asking of questions to which objections have been made, see infra, §81.) (See C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §6.47 et seq.; 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §3.8.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Statutory Authorization. C.C.P. 2028, on depositions by written questions, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2028.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change. C.C.P. 2028(a), making oral deposition procedure applicable, became C.C.P. 2028.010.

C.C.P. 2030, on interrogatories, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

See C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 4th, §5.161 et seq.; Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, Chap. 3; 8A Am.Jur. P.P. Forms (2004 ed.), Depositions and Discovery, Form 258 et seq.(2) Notice of Deposition. C.C.P. 2025(c), on notice of an oral deposition, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.240 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2028(b), on notice requirements for written depositions, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2028.020 in 2004 without substantive change.

(3) Service of Questions. C.C.P. 2028(c), on the service of questions with the notice, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2028.030 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2028(e), allowing the deponent to study the questions prior to the deposition, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2028.060 in 2004 without substantive change.

See Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §§3.3, 3.6.

(4) Court Participation. C.C.P. 2025(i), on protective orders, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.420 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2028(f), on orders the court may make regarding the deposition, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2028.070 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2028(d), on objections to the form of questions, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2028.040 in 2004 without substantive change.

(5) Taking of Deposition. C.C.P. 2028(c), on the service of questions, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2028.030 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2028(g), on the propounding of questions and recording of testimony, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2028.080 in 2004 without substantive change.

CHAPTER X - Discovery

II. DEPOSITIONS

C. Deposition by Written Questions.

2. Objections.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 81

[§ 81] Objections.

(1) Service of Objections. A party who objects to the form of a question or who objects to a question on the ground that the information is privileged or protected under the work product doctrine must serve a specific objection on all parties entitled to notice of the deposition within 15 days after the question is served, or the objection is waived. (C.C.P. 2028(d)(1), (d)(2).)

(2) Obtaining Court Ruling. Where the objection is based on form, the objecting party must promptly move to sustain the objection. Unless the objection has been sustained, the officer asks the question subject to the objection. (C.C.P. 2028(d)(1).) Where the objection is based on privilege or the work product doctrine, the party asking the question may move to overrule the objection. Unless the objection has been overruled, the officer does not ask the question. (C.C.P. 2028(d)(2).) Thus, C.C.P. 2028(d) "allocates the burden of obtaining a court ruling on the objection differently depending on the nature of the objection. The objecting party has the burden where the objection is to the form of the question. Failure to obtain that ruling waives the objection. However, the party propounding the question objected to on the ground of privilege or the work product protection must seek a ruling overruling such objection. The question will not be propounded at the deposition unless the party asking obtains such ruling." (Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2028(d), in 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C; see C.C.P. 2028(f)(3) [court has power to sustain or overrule objection]; see generally 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §3.4.)

The party moving to sustain or overrule an objection must provide a supporting declaration showing a reasonable and good faith attempt to resolve informally the issues presented by the motion. (C.C.P. 2028(d)(1), (d)(2); on monetary sanctions for failure to attempt informal resolution, see infra, §252.)

(3) Monetary Sanctions. The court must impose a monetary sanction under C.C.P. 2023 (infra, §252) against a party, person, or attorney who unsuccessfully makes or opposes a motion to sustain or overrule an objection to a written deposition question. However, the sanctions may be avoided if the court finds that the one subject to the sanction acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make imposing the sanction unjust. (C.C.P. 2028(d)(1), (d)(2).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Service of Objections. C.C.P. 2028(d)(1), (d)(2), on service of objections, were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2028.040(a) and 2028.050(a) in 2004 without substantive change.

(2) Obtaining Court Ruling. C.C.P. 2028(d)(1), (d)(2), on the procedure for obtaining a ruling on objections, were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2028.040(b) and 2028.050(b) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2028(f)(3), on the court's power to rule on objections, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2028.070(c) in 2004 without substantive change.

See Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2028(d), in Hogan, 2 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, Appendix D.

(3) Monetary Sanctions. C.C.P. 2023, on monetary sanctions generally, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2028(d)(1), (d)(2), on sanctions concerning objections to written questions, were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2028.040 and 2028.050 in 2004 without substantive change.

C. Deposition by Written Questions.

3. Motion for Protective Order.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 82

[§ 82] Motion for Protective Order.

In addition to any appropriate orders listed in C.C.P. 2025(i) (supra, §60) for oral depositions, C.C.P. 2028(f) authorizes the following protective orders for written depositions:

- (1) That the testimony be taken orally.
- (2) That one or more of the notified parties be permitted to attend and propound questions by oral examination.
- (3) That objections be sustained or overruled.
- (4) That the deposition be taken before an officer other than the one named or described in the notice.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

C.C.P. 2025(i), on protective orders regarding oral depositions, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.420 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2028(f), on protective orders regarding written depositions, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2028.070 in 2004 without substantive change.

II. DEPOSITIONS

D. Depositions Taken Outside California.

1. Statutory Authority.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 83

[§ 83] Statutory Authority.

A party to a California action may take an oral or written deposition in another state, in a federal territory or insular possession subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, or in a foreign nation. (C.C.P. 2026(a), 2027(a), 2028(a).) The procedures for taking these depositions are the same as those for taking depositions within California (see C.C.P. 2025, supra, §39 et seq.), except as modified by the authorizing statutes. (C.C.P. 2026(a), 2027(a), 2028(a); see C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, Chaps. 12, 13; C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Discovery, Chap. 12; 1 Hogan, Cal. Forms (1996 ed.), Depositions and Discovery §181 et seq.; on strategies for reducing expenses of out-of-state depositions, see Dunne on Depositions in California §2:18 et seq.)

The same broad scope of discovery is permitted as in local depositions. (See Beverly Hills Nat. Bank & Trust Co. v. Superior Court (1961) 195 C.A.2d 861, 867, 16 C.R. 236.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

C.C.P. 2025, on taking oral depositions in California, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2026(a), on taking oral depositions in another state, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2026.010(a) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2027(a), on taking oral depositions abroad, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2027.010(a) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2028(a), on written depositions, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2028.010 in 2004 without substantive change.

II. DEPOSITIONS

D. Depositions Taken Outside California.

2. Deposition Officer.

[§ 84] Deposition Officer.

(1) Within the United States. An oral deposition in another state or in a federal territory or insular possession may be taken by:

(a) A person who is authorized to administer oaths under federal law or the law of the place where the examination is held, and who is not otherwise disqualified under C.C.P. 2025(k) (supra, §35). (C.C.P. 2026(c)(1).)

(b) A person appointed by the court to administer oaths and take testimony. (C.C.P. 2026(c)(2)); see 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §§4.1, 4.2.)

(2) In a Foreign Country. A foreign deposition may be conducted under the supervision of (a) a person authorized to administer oaths or their equivalent under United States or foreign law and not otherwise disqualified under C.C.P. 2025(k) (supra, §35), (b) a person or officer appointed by commission or under letters rogatory, or (c) a person agreed to by all the parties. (C.C.P. 2027(c)); see Volkswagenwerk Aktiengesellschaft v. Superior Court (1973) 33 C.A.3d 503, 508, 109 C.R. 219 [orders appointing commissioner to take deposition of German corporate defendant and allowing inspection of defendant's manufacturing plant would impair Germany's powers to control property and personnel of entity that it created and that has never left its protection; letters rogatory administered by German courts would be appropriate vehicle for discovery]; 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §§4.3, 4.4.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Within the United States. C.C.P. 2025(k), on qualifications of the deposition officer, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.320 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2026(c)(1) was amended in 2000 to add C.C.P. 2025(l)(2)(B) (text and Supp., §68) to the statutes under which the deposition officer must not otherwise be disqualified.

C.C.P. 2026(c) was amended in 2001 to require the clerk, "on request," to issue a commission authorizing the deposition in another state or place. "The commission shall request that process issue in the place where the examination is to be held, requiring attendance and enforcing the obligations of the deponents to produce documents and answer questions."

C.C.P. 2026 was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2026.010 in 2004 without substantive change. C.C.P. 2026(c)(1) became C.C.P. 2026.010(d)(1), and C.C.P. 2026(c)(2) became C.C.P. 2026.010(d)(2).

See Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §§4.1, 4.2; on fee for issuing commission to take deposition under C.C.P. 2026.010, see Govt.C. 70626.

(2) In a Foreign Country. C.C.P. 2025(k), on qualifications of the deposition officer, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.320 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2027(c)(1) was amended in 2000 to add C.C.P. 2025(l)(2)(B) (text and Supp., §68) to the statutes under which the deposition officer must not otherwise be disqualified.

C.C.P. 2027(c) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2027.010(d) in 2004 without substantive change.

The court in American Home Assur. Co. v. Socie'te' Commerciale Toute'lectric (2002) 104 C.A.4th 406, 409, 128 C.R.2d 430, Supp., infra, §85, stated that Volkswagenwerk Aktiengesellschaft v. Superior Court (1973) 33 C.A.3d 503, 109 C.R. 219, text, p. 931, has been superseded by Socie'te' Nationale Industrielle Ae'rospatiale v. United States Dist. Court (1987) 482 U.S. 522, 107 S.Ct. 2542, 96 L.Ed.2d 461, to the extent Volkswagenwerk announced a rule of first resort to the Hague Convention procedures.

II. DEPOSITIONS

D. Depositions Taken Outside California.

3. Securing Deponent's Attendance and Production.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 85

[§ 85] Securing Deponent's Attendance and Production.

(1) Party Deponent. If the deponent is a party or an officer, director, managing agent, or employee of a party, service of the deposition notice is effective to compel the deponent to attend and testify and to produce documents and tangible things for inspection and copying. (C.C.P. 2026(b)(1) [within U.S.]; 2027(b)(1) [outside of U.S.].) (See Societe Nationale Industrielle Aerospatiale v. United States Dist. Court (1987) 482 U.S. 522, 107 S.Ct. 2542, 2546, 96 L.Ed.2d 461, 472 [Hague Convention provides optional, but not exclusive or mandatory, discovery procedures for litigants in federal district court]; 22 Loyola L. Rev. 217 [Societe Nationale]; 71 Am. Jur. Trials 1 [How To Conduct International Discovery; discussing Societe Nationale].) For out-of-state depositions, the notice must specify a place for the deposition within 75 miles of the deponent's residence or business office. (C.C.P. 2026(b)(1).)

(2) Nonparty Deponent. If the deponent is neither a party nor an officer, director, managing agent, or employee of a party, the party serving the deposition notice may use "any process and procedures required and available" under the law of the place where the deposition is taken to compel the deponent's compliance. (C.C.P. 2026(b)(2), 2027(b)(2).) Applicable procedures may include the Uniform Foreign Deposition Act or the Hague Convention on the Taking of Evidence Abroad in Civil or Commercial Matters. (Reporter's Notes to C.C.P. 2026(b) and C.C.P. 2027(b), in 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C.)

In International Ins. Co. v. Montrose Chemical Corp. (1991) 231 C.A.3d 1367, 282 C.R. 783, an insurer and a chemical company were involved in litigation to determine whether various insurance companies were obligated to indemnify the chemical company for hazardous waste pollution problems at several sites in California. The insurer was ordered by a California trial judge to produce documents used by its former claims adjuster to refresh his recollection during a deposition taken in Connecticut. The documents belonged to the insurer and were provided by it to the deponent. The insurer refused to produce the documents on the ground that under C.C.P. 2026(b)(2), the request for the documents had to be made in a Connecticut court in accordance with Connecticut law, which requires a court order as a precondition to production of documents. The judge imposed monetary sanctions against the insurer for its refusal. Held, the insurer was required to produce the documents; hence, the sanctions were properly imposed.

(a) The chemical company did not seek documents belonging to or in the possession of the claims adjuster. The documents belonged to the insurer and it could not immunize itself from California's liberal discovery rules by showing the documents to a non-California resident. (231 C.A.3d 1371.)

(b) "[E]xcept as expressly provided otherwise in the Discovery Act, California law governs discovery in California cases, including depositions." (231 C.A.3d 1371, citing C.C.P. 2025(a), supra, §30.) "Thus, although section 2026 compelled Montrose to follow Connecticut law in noticing Power's deposition, California law governs Montrose's request to International for the documents used by Power to refresh his recollection. International was not the 'deponent' referred to in section 2026, subdivision (b)(2)." (231 C.A.3d 1371.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Party Deponent. The rule of first resort to the Hague Convention announced in Volkswagenwerk Aktiengesellschaft v. Superior Court (1973) 33 C.A.3d 503, 109 C.R. 219, has been superseded by the balancing test provided in Socie'te' Nationale Industrielle Ae'rospatiale v. United States Dist. Court (1987) 482 U.S. 522, 107 S.Ct. 2542, 96 L.Ed.2d 461, text, p. 931. Further, the party proposing discovery under the Convention has the burden of persuasion as to whether considerations of comity favor application of the Convention in a particular case. (American Home Assur. Co. v. Socie'te' Commerciale Toute'lectric (2002) 104 C.A.4th 406, 409, 427, 128 C.R.2d 430 [in action by insurer against French corporation, defendant's tactics in responding to discovery were so inconsistent with Convention procedures that trial judge properly found that defendant had waived its right to insist on those procedures].)

C.C.P. 2026(b)(1) (deposition of party in another state) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2026.010(b) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2027(b)(1) (deposition of party abroad) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2027.010(b) in 2004 without substantive change.

(2) Nonparty Deponent. C.C.P. 2025(a) (taking of depositions under California law) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.010 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2026(b)(2) (deposition of nonparty in another state) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2026.010(c) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2027(b)(2) (deposition of nonparty abroad) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2027.010(c) in 2004 without substantive change.

See Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2026(b) and C.C.P. 2027(b), in Hogan, 2 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, Appendix D.

II. DEPOSITIONS

E. Deposition of California Witness for Out-of-State Proceeding.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 86

[§ 86] Deposition of California Witness for Out-of-State Proceeding.

When a mandate, writ, letters rogatory, letter of request or commission is issued out of a court in another state, a United States territory, a district of the United States, or a foreign nation, or when, on notice or agreement, the oral or written deposition of a natural person in California is required, the deponent may be compelled to appear and testify, and to produce documents and things, in the same manner, and by the same process as may be employed for taking testimony in actions pending in California. (C.C.P. 2029; see 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §4.2; Dunne on Depositions in California §11:10 et seq.)

CHAPTER X - Discovery

III. WRITTEN INTERROGATORIES

A. In General.

1. Nature and Purpose.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 87

[§ 87] Nature and Purpose.

(1) Statutory Authority. A party may obtain discovery by propounding to another party written interrogatories to be answered under oath. (C.C.P. 2030(a); on service and filing, see infra, §§92, 93.) This proceeding, based on F.R. Civ. P., Rule 33, with slight changes, was an innovation in California practice. (See generally Deyo v. Kilbourne (1978) 84 C.A.3d 771, 779, 149 C.R. 499 [elaborate discussion]; 45 Cal. L. Rev. 487, 494; 48 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1221 [guide to practical use of interrogatories]; C.E.B., 2 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, Chap. 7; C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Discovery, Chap. 13; 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Chap. 5; Overly on Electronic Evidence in California §3.08; Cal. Civil Practice, 2 Procedure, §13:78 et seq.; 23 Am.Jur.2d (1983 ed.), Depositions and Discovery §199 et seq.; 4 Am.Jur. Trials 1.)

(2) Advantages. The main advantages of interrogatories are:

(a) They sometimes achieve the same purpose as a deposition without the expense of the procedural forms, the officer, the reporter, or transcription. (See 45 Cal. L. Rev. 487, 494; 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §5.1.)

(b) They are particularly convenient where the other party is a corporation with numerous officers and employees. Instead of trying to determine which of these is a witness whose deposition should be taken, the questions are asked of the corporate party, which must give the information obtainable on deposition from any officer or employee. (See 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §5.4; on selection of answering witness, see infra, §92.)

(c) They enable a party to discover from the other party the existence of prospective witnesses whose depositions may then be taken. (See Bunnell v. Superior Court (1967) 254 C.A.2d 720, 722, 62 C.R. 458 [persons having knowledge of relevant facts]; Kenney v. Superior Court (1967) 255 C.A.2d 106, 112, 63 C.R. 84, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §145 [expert witnesses]; 45 Cal. L. Rev. 487, 497; 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §5.1; infra, §88.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Statutory Authority. C.C.P. 2030(a), authorizing written interrogatories, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.010 in 2004 without substantive change.

See C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 4th, §7.1 et seq.; Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, Chap. 5.

(2) Advantages. See Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §§5.1, 5.4. West's Key Number Digest, Pretrial Procedure k.241 et seq.

CHAPTER X - Discovery

III. WRITTEN INTERROGATORIES

A. In General.

2. Scope of Inquiry.

[§ 88] Scope of Inquiry.

(1) Same Scope as Other Devices. The scope of interrogatories is the same as that provided for other discovery devices by C.C.P. 2017 (supra, §9 et seq.) and is subject to the restrictions of C.C.P. 2019 (infra, §241). (C.C.P. 2030(a); see Coy v. Superior Court (1962) 58 C.2d 210, 217, 23 C.R. 393, 373 P.2d 457, infra, this section; Darbee v. Superior Court (1962) 208 C.A.2d 680, 685, 25 C.R. 520; Chapin v. Superior Court (1966) 239 C.A.2d 851, 854, 49 C.R. 199.) The device's purposes are not, however, identical to those of a deposition. (See Coy v. Superior Court, supra, 58 C.2d 217; Mowry v. Superior Court (1962) 202 C.A.2d 229, 233, 20 C.R. 698, infra, §92.) And interrogatories are not a complete substitute; depositions allow a greater freedom and flexibility in eliciting information.

(2) Discovery of Witnesses. Interrogatories, like depositions, may be used to discover the identity and location of persons who know about discoverable matter (C.C.P. 2017(a)), i.e., persons who might be useful as witnesses. (See West Pico Furniture Co. of Los Angeles v. Superior Court (1961) 56 C.2d 407, 15 C.R. 119, 364 P.2d 295; Unger v. Los Angeles Transit Lines (1960) 180 C.A.2d 172, 179, 4 C.R. 370; Smith v. Superior Court (1961) 189 C.A.2d 6, 11, 11 C.R. 165; 19 A.L.R.3d 1114 [discovery of intended witnesses].) However, one party cannot compel the other to list the nonexpert witnesses the party intends to call to testify at trial. (Long Beach v. Superior Court (1976) 64 C.A.3d 65, 134 C.R. 468, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §146; see 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §13.9; cf. In re Jeanette H. (1990) 225 C.A.3d 25, 37, 275 C.R. 9, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §147 [under inherent power to manage its calendar, juvenile court in dependency proceedings may order exchange of witness lists at trial readiness conference]; on exchange of expert witness list, see infra, §178 et seq.)

(3) Motion Proceedings. Interrogatories on motion proceedings incidental or collateral to the main case are permissible. Thus, in 1880 Corp. v. Superior Court (1962) 57 C.2d 840, 22 C.R. 209, 371 P.2d 985, defendant corporation appeared specially to quash summons on the ground that it was not engaged in business in California. Petitioner then served interrogatories designed to ascertain the facts concerning jurisdiction. Held, mandamus granted to compel order requiring answers. (57 C.2d 842.)

(4) Prior Deposition Covering Same Matters. In Coy v. Superior Court, supra, the trial judge sustained objections to some of the interrogatories on the ground that they had already been answered on deposition. Held, this was an untenable objection. The two procedures differ substantially: (a) A deposition is not final until read, signed, and filed, and until then may be changed; moreover, it is common practice to waive reading and signing until trial, when a party decides whether or not to use it. (b) An interrogatory does two things: It ferrets out relevant information that may lead to other admissible evidence, and it immediately and conclusively binds the answering party to the facts set forth in his or her reply. Hence, even when the same or similar questions are answered, the objection that the question has been previously answered on deposition will not alone justify a refusal to reply. (58 C.2d 219.) (See Bunnell v. Superior Court (1967) 254 C.A.2d 720, 723, 62 C.R. 458 [following Coy].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Same Scope as Other Devices. C.C.P. 2017, on the scope of discovery, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2017.010 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2019, on the methods and sequence of discovery, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2019.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2030(a), on the scope of, and limitations on, interrogatories, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.010 in 2004 without substantive change.(2) Discovery of Witnesses. C.C.P. 2017(a), on the discovery of the identity and location of persons, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2017.010 in 2004 without substantive change.

See Hogan, 2 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §13.9.

(2a) (New) Discovery of Documents. Interrogatories may be used to discover the existence of documents in the other party's possession, and the existence of a document is not privileged simply because the document contains privileged information. Thus, if an interrogatory asks the responding party to identify a document, an adequate response must include a description of the document. (Hernandez v. Superior Court (2003) 112 C.A.4th 285, 293, 4 C.R.3d 883.)West's Key Number Digest, Pretrial Procedure k.271 et seq.

III. WRITTEN INTERROGATORIES

B. Initial Interrogatories.

1. Restrictions on Number of Interrogatories.

[§ 89] Restrictions on Number of Interrogatories.

(1) Limit. A party may propound up to 35 specially prepared interrogatories to another party as a matter of right. (C.C.P. 2030(c)(1); see Catanese v. Superior Court (1996) 46 C.A.4th 1159, 1165, 54 C.R.2d 280 ["rule of 35" was violated where, in five interrogatories, plaintiff asked defendant which answers in plaintiff's 8 days of deposition testimony defendant contended were untruthful; this procedure effectively posed 10,000 separate questions]; 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §5.6.) The Commission's recommendation of a presumptive limit on interrogatories was a response to concerns about "the abuse created by the reflexive filing of unnecessarily voluminous interrogatories." The Commission noted that because each party may propound 35 interrogatories to each other party in the lawsuit, a particular litigant in a multiparty action may propound, and may end up responding to, far more than 35 interrogatories without stipulation or leave of court. (Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2030(c)(1), in 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C.)

(2) Exceptions. The restriction is subject to the following exceptions:

(a) Judicial Council form interrogatories. In addition to the specially prepared interrogatories, a party may propound unlimited official Judicial Council form interrogatories, as described in C.C.P. 2033.5 (infra, §91), as long as they are relevant to the action's subject matter. (C.C.P. 2030(c)(1).)

(b) Supplemental interrogatories. Supplemental interrogatories to elicit later acquired information are authorized by C.C.P. 2030(c)(8) (infra, §94). (C.C.P. 2030(c)(1).)

(c) Declaration for additional discovery. Subject to the right of the responding party to seek a protective order under C.C.P. 2030(e) (infra, §114), a party may propound more than 35 interrogatories if they are warranted by (1) the complexity or quantity of the issues, (2) the financial burden entailed in conducting discovery by oral deposition, or (3) the expedience of using interrogatories to allow the responding party to conduct an investigation or search records to supply information. (C.C.P. 2030(c)(2).) A declaration for additional discovery in substantially the form prescribed by statute must be attached to each set of specially prepared interrogatories exceeding the limit. (C.C.P. 2030(c)(3); for form, see Cal. Civil Practice, 2 Procedure, §13:98.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Limit. C.C.P. 2030(c)(1), allowing up to 35 interrogatories, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.030(a)(1) in 2004 without substantive change.

See Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §5.6.

(2) Exceptions.

(a) Judicial Council form interrogatories. C.C.P. 2030(c)(1) and 2033.5, on Judicial Council form interrogatories, were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.030(a)(2) and 2033.710 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

(b) Supplemental interrogatories. C.C.P. 2030(c)(1) and 2030(c)(8), on supplemental interrogatories, were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.030(b) and 2030.070 in 2004 without substantive change.

(c) Declaration for additional discovery. C.C.P. 2030(e), on protective orders, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.090 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2030(c)(2), (c)(3), on declarations for special interrogatories exceeding the statutory limit, were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.040 and 2030.050 in 2004 without substantive change. West's Key Number Digest, Pretrial Procedure k.248 et seq.

CHAPTER X - Discovery

III. WRITTEN INTERROGATORIES

B. Initial Interrogatories.

2. Form.

a. Statutory Requirements.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 90

[§ 90] Statutory Requirements.

(1) Identification of Set. Each set of interrogatories must be consecutively numbered and the first paragraph must identify the set number and the asking and responding parties. (C.C.P. 2030(c)(4).)

(2) Identification and Content of Interrogatory. Each interrogatory in the set must be separately set forth and identified by number or letter (C.C.P. 2030(c)(4)) and must be "full and complete in and of itself" (C.C.P. 2030(c)(5)). (See Catanese v. Superior Court (1996) 46 C.A.4th 1159, 1164, 54 C.R.2d 280 [requirement of C.C.P. 2030(c)(5) that each interrogatory be full and complete in itself was violated where plaintiff propounded five interrogatories asking whether defendant contended that any of plaintiff's deposition answers was untruthful].) Unless approved under C.C.P. 2033.5 (form interrogatories, infra, §91), a set of interrogatories may not include a preface or instruction, and a specially prepared interrogatory may not contain subparts or a compound, conjunctive, or disjunctive question. (C.C.P. 2030(c)(5).) Specially defined terms must appear in all capital letters. (C.C.P. 2030(c)(5).) (See C.E.B., 2 Civil Lit. Forms §§27.2, 27.3; 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §5.3; Cal. Civil Practice, 2 Procedure, §13:97 et seq.)

Although the Commission did not believe that boilerplate interrogatories, prefaces, instructions, definitions, or subparts were per se abusive, it recognized "the need to control use of these devices lest they become the vehicle for evasion of the 35-question limit." (Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2030(c), in 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Identification of Set. C.C.P. 2030(c)(4), specifying how the sets of interrogatories are to be identified, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.060(a), (b) in 2004 without substantive change.

(2) Identification and Content of Interrogatory. C.C.P. 2030(c)(4), (c)(5), setting forth the identification and form requirements for individual interrogatories, were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.060(c)-(f) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2033.5, on form interrogatories, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.710 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

See Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §5.3; Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2030(c), in Hogan, 2 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, Appendix D. West's Key Number Digest, Pretrial Procedure k.248 et seq.

CHAPTER X - Discovery

III. WRITTEN INTERROGATORIES

B. Initial Interrogatories.

2. Form.

b. Judicial Council Forms.

[§ 91] Judicial Council Forms.

(1) Statutory Mandate. In 1980, the Judicial Council was directed to create official form interrogatories and requests for admission for use in civil actions based on personal injury, property damage, wrongful death, unlawful detainer, breach of contract, or fraud. The Council was to consult with a representative advisory committee and to draft the forms in nontechnical language. (Former C.C.P. 2036.5, now C.C.P. 2033.5.) In 1988, the Council was additionally directed to create forms for use in family law actions. (C.C.P. 2033.5.) (On form interrogatories for use by crime victims who have not received complete payment of restitution, see C.C.P. 2033.5(d), (e).)

(2) Approved Forms. The Council has approved the following forms:

(a) Form Interrogatories. (See Judicial Council Form No. FI-120.)

(b) Form Interrogatories (Unlawful Detainer). (See Judicial Council Form No. FI-128.)

(c) Form Interrogatories (Economic Litigation). (See Judicial Council Form No. FI-129.)

(d) Form Interrogatories (Family Law). (See Judicial Council Form No. 1292.10.)

(e) Schedule of Assets and Debts (Family Law). (See Judicial Council Form No. 1292.11.)

Use of the approved forms is optional. (C.C.P. 2033.5.) However, by using the Judicial Council's "well-drafted, balanced, and fair" form interrogatories, "a party can at once avoid dispute concerning the wording of a particular interrogatory, and greatly expand the amount of information that would otherwise be obtained via counsel-prepared questions." (Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2030(c), in 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Statutory Mandate. C.C.P. 2033.5, as amended in 2001, additionally authorizes the Judicial Council to develop and approve form interrogatories and requests for admission for "any other civil actions the Judicial Council deems appropriate."

C.C.P. 2033.5 was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.710 et seq. without substantive change. C.C.P. 2033.5(d), (e), on forms for use by crime victims, became C.C.P. 2033.720.(2) Approved Forms.

- (a) Judicial Council Form No. FI-120 was renumbered Judicial Council Form No. DISC-001 in 2006.
- (b) Judicial Council Form No. FI-128 was renumbered Judicial Council Form No. DISC-003/UD-106 in 2006.
- (c) Judicial Council Form No. FI-129 was renamed Form Interrogatories--Limited Civil Cases (Economic Litigation) in 2005, and was renumbered Judicial Council Form No. DISC-004 in 2006.
- (d) Form Interrogatories (Family Law). Judicial Council Form No. 1292.10 was renumbered Judicial Council Form No. FL-145 in 2002.
- (e) Schedule of Assets and Debts (Family Law). Judicial Council Form No. 1292.11 was renumbered Judicial Council Form No. FL-142 in 2002.

See Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2030(c), in Hogan, 2 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, Appendix D.

III. WRITTEN INTERROGATORIES

B. Initial Interrogatories.

3. Service.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 92

[§ 92] Service.

(1) Timing. Ten days or more after service of the summons on, or appearance by, another party, the plaintiff may propound interrogatories to that party without leave of court. In an unlawful detainer action, the plaintiff must wait at least 5 days. (C.C.P. 2030(b); cf. similar 20-day waiting period on deposition, supra, §32.) On a showing of good cause, the court may grant the plaintiff leave to serve the interrogatories at an earlier time. The defendant may propound interrogatories at any time without the court's leave. (C.C.P. 2030(b).)

If a demurrer is sustained with leave to amend, the plaintiff is still entitled to serve written interrogatories before filing an amended pleading, "even to disclose facts essential to his stating a cause of action." (Budget Finance Plan v. Superior Court (1973) 34 C.A.3d 794, 798, 110 C.R. 302; see Credit Managers Assn. v. Superior Court (1975) 51 C.A.3d 352, 362, 124 C.R. 242 [plaintiff could properly seek answers to interrogatories to help in amending complaint after demurrer was sustained: "It is not true that a litigant is only entitled to discovery if he does not need it"].)

Because the responding party has 30 days to respond (see C.C.P. 2030(h), infra, §97) and because discovery must be completed at least 30 days before the initial trial date (see C.C.P. 2024(a), supra, §23), interrogatories should be served at least 60 days before the initial trial date, longer if served by mail. (See Heffron v. Los Angeles Transit Lines (1959) 170 C.A.2d 709, 715, 339 P.2d 567 [court has discretion to sustain objection to interrogatories on ground of tardiness]; Greyhound Corp. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 C.2d 355, 380, 15 C.R. 90, 364 P.2d 266 [approving exercise of discretion]; see also 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §5.2; 74 A.L.R.2d 534 [time for filing and serving interrogatories].)

(2) Manner. The party propounding the interrogatories must serve a copy on the party to whom they are directed and on all other parties who have appeared in the action. However, if the court determines that serving all parties would be unduly expensive or burdensome, it may remove this requirement. (C.C.P. 2030(d).)

(3) Party Served: No Right To Choose Answering Witness. In Mowry v. Superior Court (1962) 202 C.A.2d 229, 20 C.R. 698, a district brought a condemnation suit, and obtained immediate possession on an affidavit of D, an appraiser employed for the purpose. Petitioner, claiming an interest in the lands and seeking an increase in the security deposited, filed 70 interrogatories directed not to the district but to D, calling for a wealth of detail concerning his qualifications and every step in the performance of his task. Held, objections were properly sustained.

First, interrogatories must be directed to the party, and a corporate party may select its own officer or agent to answer them, for it is responsible for, and will be bound by, the answers. (202 C.A.2d 233.)

Second, interrogatories must seek objective answers concerning facts available to the party. The subjective questions asked of D could only be answered by him for himself and not the district; by them, petitioner was seeking, as if on deposition, to cross-examine the witness. (202 C.A.2d 233, 236.)

Hence, while ordinarily the trial judge should not deny a petition directed to a particular nonparty witness but should require the party to select an answering agent, no such remedial action was required here, for the questions were not proper interrogatories. (202 C.A.2d 235.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Timing. C.C.P. 2024(a), on the time for completion of discovery, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2024.020 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2030(b), on the timing of service, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.020 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2030(h), on the time for response, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.260 in 2004 without substantive change.

See Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §5.2.

(New) Unlawful detainer: C.C.P. 2030.020(c), added in 2007, provides that in an unlawful detainer action or other proceeding under C.C.P. 1159 et seq. (see 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §757), a plaintiff may propound interrogatories to a party without leave of court "at any time that is five days after service of the summons on, or appearance by, that party, whichever occurs first." (2) Manner. C.C.P. 2030(d), on the manner of service, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.080 in 2004 without substantive change. West's Key Number Digest, Pretrial Procedure k.247-

[§ 93] Filing and Retention.

(1) Filing Not Permitted. Interrogatories and the responses to them are not to be filed with the court. (C.C.P. 2030(j).)

(2) Retention of Originals. The propounding party must retain the original interrogatories, with the original proof of service affixed to them, and the original sworn responses. Six months after final disposition of the action, the originals may be destroyed, unless the court, on a showing of good cause, orders that they be preserved for a longer period. (C.C.P. 2030(j).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Filing Not Permitted. The portion of C.C.P. 2030(j) specifying that the interrogatories and response are not to be filed with the court was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.280(a) in 2004 without substantive change.

(2) Retention of Originals. The portion of C.C.P. 2030(j) requiring the retention of the original interrogatories and responses was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.280(b) in 2004 without substantive change.

CHAPTER X - Discovery

III. WRITTEN INTERROGATORIES

C. Further Interrogatories.

[§ 94] Further Interrogatories.

(1) Subsequent Sets Authorized. The number of original interrogatories is restricted to 35. (See supra, §89.) If the initial set of interrogatories does not exhaust the limit, the balance may be served in subsequent sets. (C.C.P. 2030(c)(1).)

(2) Supplemental Interrogatories Authorized. A party may propound a supplemental interrogatory "to elicit any later acquired information bearing on all answers previously made by any party in response to interrogatories." Supplemental interrogatories are authorized twice before the initial setting of a trial date and, subject to the time limits on discovery proceedings and motions provided by C.C.P. 2024 (supra, §§23, 24), once after the initial setting of a trial date. On motion and a showing of good cause, however, the court may authorize additional supplemental interrogatories. (C.C.P. 2030(c)(8).) (See 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §5.7.)

(3) Format. In each set of supplemental interrogatories, the first paragraph immediately below the title of the case must identify: (a) the propounding party, (b) the responding party, (c) the set number being propounded, and (d) the nature of the paper. (C.R.C., Rule 331(a).) (On format of supplemental response or amended answer, see infra, §100.)

(4) Continuing Interrogatories Prohibited. An interrogatory may not impose a duty on the responding party to supplement an initially correct and complete answer with later acquired information. (C.C.P. 2030(c)(7).) The Commission feared that imposing a duty to supplement on the responding party created the possibility of evidentiary hearings, both before and during the trial, to determine just when an opponent came to possess new information. Moreover, the Commission considered requiring the responding party periodically to review its previous answers to be burdensome. The prohibition against continuing interrogatories is tempered by C.C.P. 2030(c)(8), supra, authorizing supplemental interrogatories to update previous answers. (Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2030(c), in 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Subsequent Sets Authorized. C.C.P. 2030(c)(1), allowing subsequent sets of interrogatories, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.030(b) in 2004 without substantive change.

(2) Supplemental Interrogatories Authorized. C.C.P. 2024, on the time limits for discovery proceedings and motions, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2024.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2030(c)(8), on supplemental interrogatories to elicit later acquired information, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.070 in 2004 without substantive change.

See Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §5.7.

(3) Format. C.R.C., Rule 331(a) was renumbered C.R.C., Rule 3.1000(a) in 2006.

(4) Continuing Interrogatories Prohibited. C.C.P. 2030(c)(7), prohibiting the imposition of a duty to supplement an original answer with later acquired information, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.060(g) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2030(c)(8), authorizing supplemental interrogatories, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.070 in 2004 without substantive change.

III. WRITTEN INTERROGATORIES

D. Responses.

1. In General.

a. Options.

[§ 95] Options.

A party served with interrogatories must respond in writing under oath. The party must submit a separate response to each interrogatory. Each response may take one of the following forms: an answer containing the information sought (see infra, §99 et seq.), an objection (see infra, §103 et seq.), or the production of writings (see infra, §101). (C.C.P. 2030(f); see Cal. Civil Practice, 2 Procedure, §13:103 [form]; C.E.B., 2 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §7.66 et seq. [drafting tips]; 23 Am.Jur.2d (1983 ed.), Depositions and Discovery §211 et seq.; 4 Am.Jur. Trials 1, 89.)

Unless a declaration, as described in C.C.P. 2030(c)(3) (supra, §89), has been made, a party need only respond to the first 35 specially prepared interrogatories served, if the party states a specific objection to the balance, in accordance with C.C.P. 2030(f)(3) (infra, §103), on the ground that the limit has been exceeded. (C.C.P. 2030(c)(1).)

A responding party also has the option of moving for a protective order. (See infra, §114.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

C.C.P. 2030(f), on responses, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.210 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change. C.C.P. 2030(f)(3), on objections, became C.C.P. 2030.240.

C.C.P. 2030(c)(1), authorizing an objection on the ground that the statutory limit has been exceeded, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.030(c) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2030(c)(3), on declarations for additional discovery, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.050 in 2004 without substantive change.

III. WRITTEN INTERROGATORIES

D. Responses.

1. In General.

b. Format.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 96

[§ 96] Format.

(1) Identification of Responses. Responses must use the same identifying number or letter and be in the same sequence as the corresponding interrogatory, but the text of the interrogatory need not be repeated. The identity of the parties and the set number must appear in the first paragraph of the response, immediately below the title of the case. (C.C.P. 2030(f).) (On format generally, see 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §5.15.)

(2) Required Signatures. A response to interrogatories must be signed under oath, unless the response contains only objections. The responding party's attorney must sign any response that contains an objection. If the responding party is a corporation, partnership, association, or governmental agency, one of its officers or agents must sign on the party's behalf. If the officer or agent is an attorney acting in that capacity for the party, "that party waives any lawyer-client privilege and any protection for work product under C.C.P. 2018 (2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §140) during any subsequent discovery from that attorney concerning the identity of the sources of the information contained in the response." (C.C.P. 2030(g)); see Regency Health Services v. Superior Court (1998) 64 C.A.4th 1496, 1501, 76 C.R.2d 95 [trial judge erred in ruling that only plaintiff, not her guardian ad litem, could sign interrogatory responses and that, because she was incompetent, she was exempt from responding; for purposes of signature requirement, "party" includes guardian ad litem].)

1. In General.

c. Timing of Response.

[§ 97] Timing of Response.

(1) General Rule. The responding party must serve the original response on the asking party within 30 days of service of the interrogatories. In unlawful detainer actions, the responding party has 5 days from the date of service to respond. (C.C.P. 2030(h).) If the interrogatories were served on the responding party by mail, the response time is increased by at least 5 days. (See C.C.P. 1013(a), 2019(e).)

The responding party must also serve a copy of the response on all other parties who have appeared, unless the court relieves the party of the requirement on the grounds that it would be unduly expensive or burdensome. (C.C.P. 2030(h).)

(2) Extension of Time. The court, on motion by the propounding party, may shorten the time for response; on the responding party's motion, it may extend the time. (C.C.P. 2030(h).)

Moreover, the parties may agree to extend the time for responding to part or all of a set of interrogatories. The agreement must be confirmed in a writing that specifies the extended date. Unless it expressly provides otherwise, the agreement allows the responding party to respond by answer, objection, or the production of writings. (C.C.P. 2030(i).) A letter from the responding party to the propounding party, with copies to other parties who have appeared, is a sufficient written confirmation. (Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2030(i), in 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) General Rule. C.C.P. 2019(e), on extensions where service is by mail, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2016.050 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2030(h), stating the general rule on the time for response, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.260 in 2004 without substantive change.

(2) Extension of Time. C.C.P. 2030(h), allowing a shortening or extension of the time for response, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.260 in 2004 without substantive change.

Under C.C.P. 2030.260(b), added in 2007, in an unlawful detainer action or other proceeding under C.C.P. 1159 et seq. (12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §757), the party to whom the interrogatories are propounded has 5 days from the date of service to respond, unless, on motion of the propounding party, the court has shortened the time for response, or, on motion of the responding party, the court has extended the time for response.

C.C.P. 2030(i), on agreements to extend the time for response, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.270 in 2004 without substantive change.

1. In General.

d. Effect of Failure To Respond.

[§ 98] Effect of Failure To Respond.

Failure to serve a timely response constitutes waiver of (1) any right to answer by producing writings under C.C.P. 2030(f), and (2) any objection, including one based on privilege or the work product doctrine. A party may be relieved of the waiver, on motion, if the court determines that (1) a response in substantial compliance with C.C.P. 2030(f) has been subsequently served, and (2) failure to serve a timely response was the result of "mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect." (C.C.P. 2030(k).) This provision authorizes relief from waiver "on much the same basis that is presently required for relief from a default under C.C.P. 473, which this subdivision is intended to supersede in this situation." (Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2030(k), in 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C; see 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §5.19.) (On motion to compel response, see infra, §115.)

a. Required Information.

[§ 99] Required Information.

Each answer must be as complete and straightforward as available information permits. If an interrogatory cannot be answered completely, it must be answered "to the extent possible." The responding party must make a "reasonable and good faith effort" to obtain information that is not personally known, unless that information is equally available to the asking party. (C.C.P. 2030(f)(1).) This provision codifies the duty recognized in several cases. (Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2030(f)(1), in 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C; see Sigerseth v. Superior Court (1972) 23 C.A.3d 427, 433, 100 C.R. 185 [defendant was required to supply information about qualifications of expert witness].)

b. Amendment.

[§ 100] Amendment.

(1) Right To Amend. Without leave of court, a party may serve an amended answer containing information subsequently discovered, inadvertently omitted, or mistakenly stated. (C.C.P. 2030(m).)

(2) Format. In each set of amended answers to interrogatories, the first paragraph immediately below the title of the case must identify: (a) the propounding, demanding, or requesting party, (b) the responding party, (c) the set number being propounded or responded to, and (d) the nature of the paper. (C.R.C., Rule 331(a).) Each amended answer must be identified by the same number or letter and must be in the same sequence as the corresponding interrogatory, but the text need not be repeated. (C.R.C., Rule 331(b).)

(3) Binding Effect of Initial Answer. The asking party may move for an order that the initial answer be deemed binding on the responding party. The motion must be accompanied by a declaration showing a reasonable and good faith attempt at resolution of each issue presented. The motion must be granted if the court determines that (a) the asking party has been substantially prejudiced by the initial failure to respond correctly, (b) the responding party has failed to show substantial justification for the initial answer, and (c) prejudice to the asking party cannot be cured either by a continuance or use of the initial answer at the trial or other hearing. (C.C.P. 2030(m); on use of amended answer at trial, see infra, §102; on monetary sanctions for failure to attempt informal resolution, see infra, §252.)

The court must impose a monetary sanction under C.C.P. 2023 (infra, §252) against a party, person, or attorney who unsuccessfully makes or opposes a motion to deem binding an initial answer to an interrogatory, unless the court finds that the one subject to the sanction acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make imposing the sanction unjust. (C.C.P. 2030(m).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Right To Amend. C.C.P. 2030(m), on the answering party's right to amend the response, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.310 in 2004 without substantive change.

(2) Format. C.R.C., Rule 331(a) and 331(b) were renumbered C.R.C., Rule 3.1000(a) and 3.1000(b), respectively, in 2006.

(3) Binding Effect of Initial Answer. C.C.P. 2023, on monetary sanctions, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2030(m), on motions to deem an initial answer binding, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.310 in 2004 without substantive change. West's Key Number Digest, Pretrial Procedure k.304

III. WRITTEN INTERROGATORIES

2. Answers.

c. Answer Derived From Writings.

[§ 101] Answer Derived From Writings.

(1) General Rule. If an answer requires the preparation of a compilation, abstract, audit, or summary of the responding party's documents and the burden or expense of preparation would be substantially the same for the asking party, it is sufficient to specify in detail the writings from which the answer may be ascertained and to afford the asking party an opportunity to inspect and copy the writings. (C.C.P. 2030(f)(2).) A response in this manner must refer to C.C.P. 2030(f)(2).

(2) Inadequate Answer. In Fuss v. Superior Court (1969) 273 C.A.2d 807, 78 C.R. 583, defendant motion picture producer served written interrogatories on plaintiffs, his former attorneys, asking detailed questions about each alleged service for which plaintiffs were demanding compensation. (Defendant sought information on the dates the services were performed, the time spent, the persons involved, etc.) The attorneys responded that the answer would require "a compilation, abstract, audit or summary of business records" which was not available but could be compiled by defendant from relevant parts of Services Performed Sheets, Services Performed Code, Attorneys' Appointment Books, Telephone and Appointment Call Sheets, Legal Files, Employee Codes, Time Records, and recollections of persons who performed the work. The "pertinent and proper portions" of the written materials were offered for inspection at reasonable times on reasonable notice. Held, the interrogatories should have been answered.

(a) The response on its face belied its use as a complete answer because one source mentioned was the recollections of persons who performed the work in dispute. These recollections are not records from which the answer can be derived. (273 C.A.2d 815.)

(b) The response failed to afford reasonable opportunity for defendant to examine, audit and inspect the records, because the offer provided access only to "pertinent and proper portions" of the files. "An opportunity to examine records and files which the opposing party to the litigation deems pertinent and proper is no opportunity at all for the purpose of civil discovery." (273 C.A.2d 815.)

(c) Reference to an exhibit as a "substantially accurate summation" did not remedy the deficiencies because it contained a disclaimer that "there may be some duplication or omission." The summary therefore did not represent plaintiffs' "present best and complete answer," and was valueless for impeachment or use in evaluating the claim or preparing a defense. (273 C.A.2d 816.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) General Rule. C.C.P. 2030(f)(2), on the answering party's right to specify writings from which the answer may be ascertained, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.230 in 2004 without substantive change.

    - d. Use at Trial.

[§ 102] Use at Trial.

At the trial or a hearing, a party other than the responding party may use answers to interrogatories, to the extent admissible under the rules of evidence, only against the responding party. The fact that the responding party is available to testify, has testified, or will testify is not a valid objection to the use of an answer. (C.C.P. 2030(n); see Associates Discount Corp. v. Tobb Co. (1966) 241 C.A.2d 541, 552, 50 C.R. 738 [provision requiring service of copies on all parties (former C.C.P. 2030(a), now C.C.P. 2030(d), supra, §92), did not impose obligation on other parties, nor give them right to participate in proceeding; hence, answers to interrogatories were not admissible in evidence against them]; Castaline v. Los Angeles (1975) 47 C.A.3d 580, 589, 121 C.R. 786 [same; answers to interrogatories are admissible only against answering party]; see also BAJI (8th ed.), No. 2.07 [definition of interrogatory and consideration by jury].) (On effect of answers as limiting answering party's proof at trial, see 86 A.L.R.3d 1089; on inadmissibility of party's own self-serving answers to opponent's interrogatories, see Estate of Horman (1968) 265 C.A.2d 796, 805, 71 C.R. 780, 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §163.)

At trial, any party may use a responding party's initial answer against the responding party; the responding party may then use his or her amended answer. (C.C.P. 2030(m).)

A party may respond to an interrogatory with an objection (C.C.P. 2030(f); supra, §95), but if only part of an interrogatory is objectionable, the remainder must be answered (C.C.P. 2030(f)(3)). The specific ground for the objection must be set forth clearly. If an objection is based on a claim of privilege, the particular privilege invoked must be clearly stated. If an objection is based on the work product doctrine, the claim must be expressly asserted. (C.C.P. 2030(f)(3); see C.E.B., 2 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §7.73 et seq.; 1 Hogan, *Cal. ## III. WRITTEN INTERROGATORIES

D. Responses.

3. Objections.

b. To Form and Competency.

[§ 104] To Form and Competency.

(1) In General. Objections to form are allowed on depositions to protect a witness being orally examined. (See supra, §65.) But a witness answering interrogatories in writing after consultation with counsel needs no such protection. Accordingly, technical objections, e.g., that interrogatories "assume facts not in evidence" or are "compound," should not be sustained. (West Pico Furniture Co. of Los Angeles v. Superior Court (1961) 56 C.2d 407, 421, 15 C.R. 119, 364 P.2d 295; Smith v. Superior Court (1961) 189 C.A.2d 6, 13, 11 C.R. 165.) Moreover, because the test is relevancy and not competency (supra, §9), an objection that the answer calls for hearsay is improper. (Durst v. Superior Court (1963) 218 C.A.2d 460, 465, 32 C.R. 627.)

In Flora Crane Service v. Superior Court (1965) 234 C.A.2d 767, 778, 45 C.R. 79, the interrogatory to defendant corporation was "Describe fully all books and records" and their present custodian. Held, the question was proper; it called for a description by appropriate categories with reasonable particularity, and it served a proper discovery purpose--to give the interrogator sufficient information to make a proper description for inspection or subpoena duces tecum.

On the other hand, the use of "boilerplate" interrogatories (standard printed forms), containing some questions unrelated to any issue in the case, has been condemned as "an imposition upon the witness ... and upon opposing counsel," as well as a trespass on the court's time. (See Wooldridge v. Mounts (1962) 199 C.A.2d 620, 626, 627, 18 C.R. 806.)

(2) Question Calling for Conclusion. A question calling for a "conclusion" or "opinion" is not necessarily bad, where it serves a valid discovery purpose. (See Singer v. Superior Court (1960) 54 C.2d 318, 326, 5 C.R. 697, 353 P.2d 305.) But where the proponent baldly asks for the adverse party's legal contentions or arguments, an objection will be sustained. (See Flora Crane Service v. Superior Court, supra, 234 C.A.2d 781 [interrogatory to defendant, to state "all contentions" forming basis of its affirmative defenses, and to explain how complaint is defective]; infra, §105.)

(3) Argumentative Interrogatories. In Sheets v. Superior Court (1967) 257 C.A.2d 1, 64 C.R. 753, H was a certified public accountant employed by S to audit books. M obtained the audit for inspection, and then submitted an interrogatory with photocopies and the question whether S contended that anything contained in these documents tended to support his allegation of diversion of partnership funds. Held, it was an abuse of discretion to compel an answer. The interrogatory was argumentative, calling on S's counsel to state how he interpreted the report, insofar as it might be helpful to him in presenting his client's case. (257 C.A.2d 13.)

III. WRITTEN INTERROGATORIES

- 3. Objections.
- c. To Content.
- 1. Legal Contentions.

[§ 105] Legal Contentions.

(1) General Rule. "An interrogatory may relate to whether another party is making a certain contention, or to the facts, witnesses, and writings on which a contention is based. An interrogatory is not objectionable because an answer to it involves an opinion or contention that relates to fact or the application of law to fact, or would be based on information obtained or legal theories developed in anticipation of litigation or in preparation for trial." (C.C.P. 2030(c)(6).) This provision codifies the case law stated in Universal Underwriters Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1967) 250 C.A.2d 722, 58 C.R. 870, infra, this section, Burke v. Superior Court (1969) 71 C.2d 276, 78 C.R. 481, 455 P.2d 409, infra, this section, and Singer v. Superior Court (1960) 54 C.2d 318, 5 C.R. 697, 353 P.2d 305, infra, §106. (Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2030, in 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C.) A contrary rule applies to requests for admissions. (See infra, §157.)

(2) Illustrations. In Universal Underwriters Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1967) 250 C.A.2d 722, 58 C.R. 870, P insurance company sued U insurance company for declaratory relief, to determine which had the duty under automobile liability policies to defend an action. U's position was that it had sent an endorsement to its insured, limiting its liability. P submitted interrogatories asking (a) whether there was legal consideration for the endorsement, and (b) if it was contended that none was necessary. U answered no to (a) and yes to (b). Held, the interrogatories were proper, and the lower court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to permit a belated attack on the pretrial order based thereon. The court thought that, under the Singer approach (infra, §106), "an interrogatory calling on one's adversary to state whether or not he makes a particular contention, either as to the facts or as to the possible issues in the case, is not only proper but desirable." (250 C.A.2d 728.) And this was a simple inquiry to determine whether an issue was raised and would have to be met by proof; it was not an improper attempt to preclude the adverse party from producing subsequently discovered facts. (250 C.A.2d 729.)

The same approach was taken in Burke v. Superior Court (1969) 71 C.2d 276, 78 C.R. 481, 455 P.2d 409. R sued W for $ 95,000 on a promissory note, and levied attachment on W's land. W had judgment in the action. W (and his receiver B) then sued defendant F Co., surety on the attachment bond, for damages for wrongful attachment. They alleged that, because the attachment was valid and regular on its face, they had made no motion to discharge or dissolve it, and were forced to defend the main action on the merits, hence sought the expenses of defending the main action as damages. F Co. filed an unverified general denial of the allegations. Petitioners, alleging that they knew of no facts supporting F Co.'s denial of the essential allegation of the complaint, instituted discovery proceedings to discover the company's "contentions on the issues and the facts allegedly supporting such contentions." They made requests for admissions and propounded interrogatories, to which the trial judge sustained objections. Held, mandamus issued to compel respondent court to vacate its orders, reconsider the objections, and make orders for discovery.

(a) One of the purposes of discovery is to test the pleadings (see supra, §1). Accordingly, a defendant may be required to disclose not only evidentiary facts underlying his affirmative defenses or denials, but also "whether or not he makes a particular contention, either as to the facts or as to the possible issues in the case." (71 C.2d 281.) The plaintiff is under a similar duty to disclose. (71 C.2d 282.)

(b) The right to determine an opponent's contentions is particularly important where the answer is an indiscriminate general denial of virtually indisputable matters. (71 C.2d 282.)

(c) The form "Do you contend that?" is not objectionable as calling for a legal opinion. (71 C.2d 283.) (See also Sav-On Drugs v. Superior Court (1975) 15 C.3d 1, 5, 123 C.R. 283, 538 P.2d 739 ["A party's contention may be the subject of discovery, but not the legal reasoning or theory behind the contention"].)

2. Facts Supporting Defenses.

[§ 106] Facts Supporting Defenses.

In Singer v. Superior Court (1960) 54 C.2d 318, 5 C.R. 697, 353 P.2d 305, plaintiff seaman filed a Jones Act suit for personal injuries, and defendant pleaded contributory negligence and assumption of risk in general terms. Plaintiff served interrogatories seeking the facts forming the bases of these defenses, and the trial judge sustained objections. Held, mandamus granted to compel the answers.

(b) The second objection, that a plaintiff is in a better position than a defendant to know these answers, is untenable: The plaintiff may have more knowledge of the facts of the accident, but not necessarily of the facts on which the defendant bases its defenses. "Moreover, no rule or authority is cited which authorizes refusal to answer an interrogatory simply upon the ground that the answer is known to the party seeking the information." (54 C.2d 324.)

(c) The third and main objection, that the defendant was being forced to limit itself at the trial by stating all facts on which it might subsequently rely, is likewise untenable: "The three questioned interrogatories merely call for the facts this defendant now knows that support its pleaded defenses. The answers will not constitute an unfair limitation on defendant. They will not prevent it at the trial, from presenting subsequently discovered facts, or even from presenting facts now known to it but overlooked by it, if it can show such oversight was in good faith. The plaintiff is entitled to the information. Requiring the defendant to answer is not oppressive." (54 C.2d 326.) (See Pember v. Superior Court (1966) 240 C.A.2d 888, 890, 50 C.R. 24 [following Singer]; 48 Cal. L. Rev. 864 [discussing Singer]; 86 A.L.R.3d 1089 [answers to interrogatories as limiting answering party's proof at trial]; for discussion of issue whether party being orally deposed may be asked to state facts supporting contentions in pleadings, see Rifkind v. Superior Court (1994) 22 C.A.4th 1255, 27 C.R.2d 822, supra, §66.)

3. Facts Supporting Cause of Action.

[§ 107] Facts Supporting Cause of Action.

In Los Angeles v. Superior Court (Ferguson) (1973) 33 C.A.3d 778, 109 C.R. 365, plaintiff brought an action for battery against M, a police officer, and against the city of Los Angeles, his employer. Through written interrogatories she sought to learn whether and under what circumstances M had been suspended from duty and whether other persons had made complaints about M's conduct. The trial judge ordered the interrogatories answered. Held, the order was proper only in part.

(a) Relevancy to the subject matter is a broader concept than relevancy to the issues under former C.C.P. 2016(b) (now C.C.P. 2017(a)) "in that relevancy to subject matter is determinable by potential, not actual, issues in the case." (33 C.A.3d 782.)

(b) The interrogatories on suspensions sought discovery of facts that might show that the city had been put on reasonable notice that M was unfit to be a police officer. If this possibility were shown, plaintiff could amend her complaint to add other causes of action. Therefore, the information is relevant to the subject matter of the action and might become relevant to the issues in an amended complaint. Defendant was properly required to answer the interrogatories (although any suspension resulting from the sued-upon incident would not be discoverable, because remedial measures taken after an event cannot be used to prove negligence or culpability). (33 C.A.3d 783.)

(c) Some interrogatories sought to discover whether other persons had complained to the police department "concerning the conduct" of M. "These obtuse interrogatories cover a field of interrogation so broad that they could require the production of information wholly alien to the subject matter of this action. Conduct that provoked complaint might extend, for example, to the manner in which the officer drove a patrol car, wore his uniform, responded to an emergency situation, selected his language, modulated his voice, or employed gesture in the performance of his duties. ... Yet even were we to narrow these interrogatories to complaints by members of the public of assault and battery, evidence of such conduct would be of dubious value ... , for the character or reputation of a defendant is not an issue in a civil action for assault, and evidence of other specific instances of misconduct is not admissible to prove misconduct on the particular occasion." (33 C.A.3d 783.) The lower court should have sustained defendant's objections to these interrogatories as not being relevant to the subject matter of the action.

In Holguin v. Superior Court (1972) 22 C.A.3d 812, 99 C.R. 653, a wrongful death action, plaintiffs directed interrogatories at defendant physicians, asking for facts relating to the autopsy on the decedent. Defendants answered, in effect, that they could not answer because they were not present. One interrogatory asked whether the decedent, during childbirth, had received anesthesia at the level of the first lumbar vertebra; defendants answered that they were not certain (although each had been in attendance). Held, plaintiffs had no right to different answers. Plaintiffs "seem to take the position that the propounding of the interrogatories created a duty in defendants to start an investigation with the various persons in the coroner's office who participated in the autopsy and then to answer in accordance with the information thus gathered, even if the facts learned were antagonistic to their trial posture. We know of no principle of discovery law which thus compels a party not only to prepare his opponent's case, but also to stipulate away his own." (22 C.A.3d 821.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

C.C.P. 2017(a), on the discovery of relevant matter, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2017.010 in 2004 without substantive change.

4. In Class Action.

aa. Interrogatories to Plaintiff and Class Members.

[§ 108] Interrogatories to Plaintiff and Class Members.

(1) Plaintiff. In Alpine Mut. Water Co. v. Superior Court (1968) 259 C.A.2d 45, 66 C.R. 250, plaintiff mutual water companies and others brought a class suit for several kinds of relief, including damages for slander of title. Defendants served interrogatories relating to ownership of the properties and damages allegedly suffered by individual members of the class. Holding some good and some bad, the court in this case of first impression made some general observations about the extent to which discovery is available against a plaintiff who files a class action.

(a) Insofar as the plaintiff represents himself or herself, the scope of discovery is the same as in any ordinary action. (259 C.A.2d 53.)

(b) The difficult question is whether the plaintiff may be required to answer interrogatories about other members. It would be unfair to hold that he or she need not answer any, and equally unfair to hold that he or she must answer detailed questions about each class member--thereby dissipating most of the benefits of the class action. Hence: "We chart a middle course. Absent some specific showing by the objecting party to justify a contrary ruling, such as privilege, a representative plaintiff can be compelled to supply his adversary with the information about his class which is in his possession or readily available to him and which is not equally available to an adversary. A representative plaintiff cannot be compelled to supply information concerning members of his class or their interests in the action which is neither in his possession nor control, unless the interrogatory is directly related to his own standing to maintain the action, to the existence of an ascertainable class, or to the existence of that community of interest which is required to sustain a class action. ... A representative cannot be compelled to respond to interrogatories about any class member's separate claim as distinguished from the common claim of the class which may be tried with or as part of the class action." (259 C.A.2d 54.)

(2) Unnamed Class Members. Interrogatories may be propounded to unnamed class members. (Danzig v. Superior Court (1978) 87 C.A.3d 604, 611, 151 C.R. 185; Spoon v. Superior Court (1982) 130 C.A.3d 735, 745, 746, 182 C.R. 44; see C.E.B., 2 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §7.13; 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §5.5; 4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §288.) They must not, however, be directed to the identity of class members or the amount of each claim, and they must not have the purpose or effect of unduly harassing absent members or decreasing the class size. (Danzig v. Superior Court, supra, 87 C.A.3d 612, 613.)

bb. Interrogatories to Defendant.

[§ 109] Interrogatories to Defendant.

In Budget Finance Plan v. Superior Court (1973) 34 C.A.3d 794, 798, 110 C.R. 302, plaintiff consumers, on behalf of an allegedly defrauded class, sought rescission, damages and other relief against a seller and several lending institutions, and filed interrogatories asking defendants to identify other local residents who were taken in by the same sales scheme. Held, the interrogatories were proper. Plaintiffs "are entitled to have discovery directed towards appropriate parties in order to learn the names of other proper plaintiffs who may be of assistance in the presentation of the case and who may share the burdens of its prosecution." (34 C.A.3d 799.) The lenders' support of the allegedly fraudulent enterprise, though done impersonally, has obliged them to reveal the identities of purchasers whose contracts were assigned, so that an effective class action may be brought. "If it were not so, righting of wrongs could be prevented by assignment by a larcenous purveyor to many financing agencies." (34 C.A.3d 800.)

In Union Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1978) 80 C.A.3d 1, 145 C.R. 316, plaintiff brought a class action against defendant insurer for wrongful reduction of disability benefits under a group disability policy. He sought discovery of names, addresses and other data for every person who suffered such reductions under similar policies, including those residing outside California. Defendant objected that, as to nonresidents, the interrogatories were irrelevant because plaintiff could not maintain a national class action. Held, the interrogatories (with some modifications to avoid undue expense) were relevant and proper. Plaintiff was entitled to obtain information which would permit amendment of his complaint to cover nonresidents in the class; determination of the validity of such a class action should be made in special pretrial proceedings for certification (see 4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §279), not on the challenge of a discovery order. (80 C.A.3d 11, 12.)

[§ 110] Grounds for Protective Order.

The party on whom interrogatories are served is entitled to protection, when justice requires, from "unwarranted annoyance, embarrassment, or oppression, or undue burden and expense." (C.C.P. 2030(e), infra, §114; see Ryan v. Superior Court (1960) 186 C.A.2d 813, 817, 9 C.R. 147 [burden and expense]; Columbia Broadcasting System v. Superior Court (1969) 272 C.A.2d 499, 504, 77 C.R. 354 [not unreasonable burden to require insurer to research whether its agent, the insured's employer, had delivered individual certificate to insured]; cf. Singer v. Superior Court (1960) 54 C.2d 318, 327, 5 C.R. 697, 353 P.2d 305, supra, §106 [where no oppression, no room for judicial discretion]; C.E.B., 2 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §7.75 et seq.; 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §5.14; on judge's discretion generally, see supra, §25.)

Because the remedy of a protective order (infra, §114) is ordinarily adequate, the claim of oppression should be raised in the trial court. (See Durst v. Superior Court (1963) 218 C.A.2d 460, 467, 32 C.R. 627.)

2. Partial Discovery Where Answers Would Be Burdensome.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 111

[§ 111] Partial Discovery Where Answers Would Be Burdensome.

In Borse v. Superior Court (1970) 7 C.A.3d 286, 86 C.R. 559, plaintiff sought to prove that his signature on a personal injury release was induced by the false representations of defendant's claims adjuster. He wished to find other claimants who were similarly misled, and submitted extensive interrogatories about the conduct of defendant's personal injury negotiations for a 6-year period. Although the judge held that the information sought was neither privileged nor within the work product, he sustained defendant's objection that the questioning was burdensome and oppressive. Held, mandamus issued for partial discovery.

(a) Plaintiff's request was excessive, burdensome and oppressive, but unless he received some such information for a shorter time span he might be deprived of all reasonable opportunity to corroborate his claim. (7 C.A.3d 289.)

(b) Because the information, within reasonable limits, was reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence, the trial court's complete denial of plaintiff's request failed to comply with California's liberal discovery policies. The principle set forth in Greyhound Corp. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 C.2d 355, 15 C.R. 90, 364 P.2d 266 (supra, §25) demands partial limitation on discovery rather than its outright denial, and directs courts to weigh the relative importance of the information against the hardship entailed by its production. (7 C.A.3d 289.)

(c) The reviewing court was too far removed from the matter in question to specify appropriate limits. The trial judge should make that determination in consultation with the attorneys and with the aid of additional factual inquiries if necessary. (7 C.A.3d 289.)

3. Information Available to Both Parties.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 112

[§ 112] Information Available to Both Parties.

An interrogatory is improper when it seeks information readily available in recorded public documents. (See Alpine Mut. Water Co. v. Superior Court (1968) 259 C.A.2d 45, 53, 66 C.R. 250, supra, §108; Sav-On Drugs v. Superior Court (1975) 15 C.3d 1, 5, 123 C.R. 283, 538 P.2d 739 [plaintiffs improperly sought by discovery to require that defendants disclose specific statutes and administrative regulations supporting disputed tax deductions: "Both the California Revenue and Taxation Code and the California Administrative Code are as readily available to real party in interest as to petitioner and no purpose of discovery is served by compelling the latter to perform legal research for the former"].)

In Bunnell v. Superior Court (1967) 254 C.A.2d 720, 62 C.R. 458, plaintiff sued defendant for defamation. The first trial ended in a verdict for plaintiff, and a new trial was granted; the second ended in a mistrial for failure of the jury to agree on a verdict. Prior to the third trial, defendant submitted interrogatories requesting the names and addresses of all witnesses who had any relevant knowledge of the case, in order to lay a foundation for exclusion of any unspecified witnesses at the trial. Plaintiff's answer was that he knew of no witnesses other than those mentioned in the prior trials and depositions. The trial judge made an order requiring further answer, imposing a sanction of $ 250 attorneys' fees and the further sanction that, if answers were not filed within 5 days, plaintiff could not present any witnesses at the trial. Held, prohibition granted to prevent enforcement of the order. There was nothing to discover; the issue was simply who should have the burden of researching the transcripts for the names of witnesses to lay a foundation for defendant's proceeding to exclude undisclosed persons. And, "[w]hen the material to be 'discovered' consists, as here, solely of information available to both parties, it defeats the purpose of the Discovery Act to compel one party to perform another party's research, whether such be laborious or not." (254 C.A.2d 723.)

In *Britt v. Defendant district sought extensive discovery of plaintiffs' local political activities. Held, nondisclosure of lawful associational activity is a constitutional right, and defendant failed to meet the burden of demonstrating justification for compelled discovery by showing a sufficient state purpose and a narrowly circumscribed disclosure. 2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 114

[§ 114] Motion for Protective Order.

(1) In General. When interrogatories have been propounded, the responding party, and any other party or affected person or organization, may promptly move for a protective order. On a showing of good cause, the court may make "any order that justice requires" to protect a party, person, or organization from "unwarranted annoyance, embarrassment, or oppression, or undue burden and expense." If the court denies the motion for a protective order in whole or in part, it may order that "the party provide or permit the discovery against which protection was sought on terms and conditions that are just." (2) Attempt at Informal Resolution. The motion for a protective order must be accompanied by a declaration showing a reasonable and good faith attempt at an informal resolution of each issue presented. (C.C.P. 2030(e).) (On monetary sanctions for failure to attempt informal resolution, see infra, §252.)

(3) Permissible Orders. Under C.C.P. 2030(e), a protective order may include, but is not limited to, one or more of the following directions:

- (a) That particular interrogatories or a set of interrogatories need not be answered.
- (b) That, contrary to the representations made in a declaration submitted under C.C.P. 2030(c)(3) (supra, §89), the number of specially prepared interrogatories is unwarranted.
- (c) That the time to respond to particular interrogatories or a set of interrogatories be extended.
- (d) That a response be made only upon specified terms and conditions.
- (e) That an oral deposition be used instead of interrogatories.
- (f) That a trade secret or confidential information not be disclosed or be disclosed only in a certain way.
- (g) That some or all of the answers to interrogatories be sealed and opened only by court order.

E. Motion To Compel Response.

1. No Response Given.

[§ 115] No Response Given.

If the court orders a response to be made, and the responding party fails to obey that order, the court may impose monetary, issue, evidence, or terminating sanctions, or may make other just orders. (C.C.P. 2030(k)); see C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §8.91 et seq.; 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §5.19; 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §15.2; on types of sanctions, see C.C.P. 2023, infra, §252 et seq.)

The Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2030(k) states: "[T]he subdivision takes away the existing power of the trial court to impose severe sanctions for a failure to answer interrogatories, if it finds that the failure was a 'wilful' one. The Commission believes that the present approach needlessly creates issues as to what constitutes 'wilfulness,' and that in practice most courts are reluctant to impose such a severe sanction for a mere failure to respond. ... The Commission recommends that only a monetary sanction be available in the first instance for a failure to respond to interrogatories. However, if the court orders that a response be filed, and this order is not complied with, then it becomes more appropriate to deal with disobedience by one of the severe sanctions." (2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C.)

III. WRITTEN INTERROGATORIES

E. Motion To Compel Response.

2. Inadequate Response Given.

[§ 116] Inadequate Response Given.

(1) Grounds for Motion. The asking party may move for an order compelling a further response if (a) an answer is evasive or incomplete, (b) the production of documents under C.C.P. 2030(f)(2) (supra, §101) is unwarranted or the specification is inadequate, or (c) an objection is without merit or too general. (C.C.P. 2030(l).) (See C.E.B., 2 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §7.93 et seq.; 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §5.20; Cal. Civil Practice, 2 Procedure, §13:104 et seq. [forms]; on format of motion, see supra, §28.)

(2) Time Limit. The right to compel a further response is waived unless notice of the motion is given within 45 days of service of the response, or a supplemental response, or on or before a specific later date agreed to by the parties in writing. (C.C.P. 2030(l).)

In Professional Career Colleges, Magna Institute v. Superior Court (1989) 207 C.A.3d 490, 255 C.R. 5, plaintiff, a former student dissatisfied with the training and courses provided in defendant college's "private security" program, sued for fraud and breach of contract. Plaintiff's first set of interrogatories included a demand that defendant state the addresses of students enrolled in the program during a specified time period. Defendant objected, and plaintiff made no motion to compel a further response. After expiration of the time for compelling a further response, plaintiff served a second set of interrogatories that included a demand for essentially the same information concerning other students, the only difference being that plaintiff specifically sought the names of the students as well as their addresses. When defendant again objected, plaintiff made a timely motion to compel further answers under C.C.P. 2030(l). Held, mandamus issued directing entry of an order denying plaintiff's motion. The 1986 Civil Discovery Act "clearly evinces the legislative intent that discovery proceed not only smoothly, but swiftly as well. ... In the context of this case it would be an absurdity to say that a party who fails to meet the time limits of section 2030 may avoid the consequences of his delay and lack of diligence by propounding the same question again. Such a construction of the statute would obviously encourage delay and provide no incentive to attempt to resolve any dispute with the opposing party. The Legislature has explicitly stated that unless a party moves to compel further response within 45 days of the unsatisfactory response, he waives any right to compel a further response. We hold that this means what it says; plaintiff's motion was therefore untimely." (207 C.A.3d 493, 494.)

(3) Informal Resolution. The motion to compel a further response must be accompanied by a declaration showing a reasonable and good faith attempt at resolution of each issue presented. (C.C.P. 2030(l)); see Obregon v. Superior Court (1998) 67 C.A.4th 424, 428, 432, 79 C.R.2d 62 [plaintiff's attempts at informal resolution were inadequate, where plaintiff propounded "grossly overbroad" interrogatories, and then, after receiving expectable objections, simply sent single brief letter, late in relevant time period]; on monetary sanctions for failure to attempt informal resolution, see infra, §252.)

After finding that a party has failed to attempt an informal resolution, the trial court must consider the appropriate remedy, which may be a complete denial of the requested discovery, or some lesser sanction, such as specifying additional efforts that must be made before the court will turn to the merits of the discovery dispute. (Obregon v. Superior Court, supra, 67 C.A.4th 434, 435 [listing factors that trial court should consider on remand].)

(4) Monetary Sanctions. The court must impose a monetary sanction under C.C.P. 2023, infra, §252, against a party, person, or attorney who unsuccessfully makes or opposes a motion to compel a further response to interrogatories. However, the sanctions may be avoided if the court finds that the one subject to the sanction acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make imposing the sanction unjust. (C.C.P. 2030(l).)

(5) Failure To Obey Order. If a party fails to obey an order compelling further responses, the court may make "those orders that are just," and may impose the monetary and more severe sanctions authorized by C.C.P. 2023 (infra, §255 et seq.). (C.C.P. 2030(l).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Grounds for Motion. C.C.P. 2030(f)(2), on the production of documents, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.230 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2030(l), on the grounds for a motion to compel further response, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.300 in 2004 without substantive change.

See C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 4th, §7.110; Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §5.20.

(2) Time Limit. C.C.P. 2030(l), on the time for serving notice of a motion to compel further response, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.300(c) in 2004 without substantive change. (3) Informal Resolution. C.C.P. 2030(l), on the requirement of a meet and confer declaration, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.300(b) in 2004 without substantive change.

(4) Monetary Sanctions. C.C.P. 2023, on monetary sanctions generally, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2030(l), on monetary sanctions in connection with a motion to compel further response, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.300(d) in 2004 without substantive change.

See Parker v. Wolters Kluwer United States (2007) 149 C.A.4th 285, 294, 57 C.R.3d 18 [in action by employee against employer, trial judge did not err in imposing monetary sanctions against employee under C.C.P. 2030.300(d) based on employee's unsuccessful opposition to motion to compel further responses to interrogatories, even though he had not refused to obey any previous order, and judge was not required to make explicit finding that employee's failure to respond was without substantial justification].

(5) Failure To Obey Order. C.C.P. 2023, on sanctions authorized for discovery abuses, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2030(l), on failure to obey an order compelling further response, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.300(e) in 2004 without substantive change.

III. WRITTEN INTERROGATORIES

E. Motion To Compel Response.

3. Review Following Motion To Compel.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 117

[§ 117] Review Following Motion To Compel.

As with depositions (supra, §71), the appellate remedy is usually deemed inadequate, and mandamus is regularly invoked by the party seeking to compel answers to interrogatories. (See Pettie v. Superior Court (1960) 178 C.A.2d 680, 683, 3 C.R. 267 [trial judge compelled to set aside order sustaining objections to interrogatories and to make order overruling them]; Singer v. Superior Court (1960) 54 C.2d 318, 5 C.R. 697, 353 P.2d 305, supra, §106 [trial judge compelled to set aside order sustaining refusal to answer and to enter order requiring answer]; Chapin v. Superior Court (1966) 239 C.A.2d 851, 854, 49 C.R. 199; People v. Superior Court (Witzerman) (1967) 248 C.A.2d 276, 279, 56 C.R. 393; Burke v. Superior Court (1969) 71 C.2d 276, 277, footnote 1, 78 C.R. 481, 455 P.2d 409.)

The rule announced in Oceanside Union School Dist. v. Superior Court (1962) 58 C.2d 180, 185, footnote 4, 23 C.R. 375, 373 P.2d 439, infra, §247, that writs will be granted only where necessary to lay down guidelines for future cases, applies generally to review of orders in discovery proceedings; i.e., the test must be met not only for writs to prevent improper orders, but also for writs seeking to enforce proper orders. (Burke v. Superior Court, supra, 71 C.2d 278, footnote 2 [test met, and mandamus granted].)

IV. INSPECTION OF DOCUMENTS, TANGIBLE THINGS, AND PLACES

A. Statutory Authorization.

[§ 118] Statutory Authorization.

(1) Former Law. The right of a party on motion and court order to inspect the adverse party's papers was recognized by California's former statutes, but it was defective in two main respects: (a) the test was of admissibility of the papers in evidence, which limited the use of the inspection right for discovery; (b) the inspection was limited to papers, while modern discovery practice allows inspection of other things. (See, on former law, Union Trust Co. of San Diego v. Superior Court (1938) 11 C.2d 449, 462, 81 P.2d 150; Milton Kauffman v. Superior Court (1949) 94 C.A.2d 8, 15, 210 P.2d 88; Holm v. Superior Court (1954) 42 C.2d 500, 505, 267 P.2d 1025; American Federation of Musicians v. Superior Court (1957) 150 C.A.2d 165, 170, 309 P.2d 874.)

(2) Present Law. C.C.P. 2031, based on F.R. Civ. P., Rule 34, cures both defects of the former law. It allows discovery through the inspection of documents, tangible things, and land or other property that are in the possession, custody, or control of another party to the action. (C.C.P. 2031(a); see generally C.E.B., 2 Civil Lit. Forms, §28.1 et seq.; C.E.B., 2 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, Chap. 8; C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Discovery, Chap. 15.1; 1 Hogan, Cal. Forms (1996 ed.), Depositions and Discovery §581 et seq.; 73 A.L.R.2d 12 [pretrial inspection of statements of parties or witnesses].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Present Law. C.C.P. 2031, on inspection of documents, things, and places, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2031.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change. C.C.P. 2031(a), authorizing inspections of this type, became C.C.P. 2031.010.

IV. INSPECTION OF DOCUMENTS, TANGIBLE THINGS, AND PLACES

B. Distinctions.

1. Patient's Discovery of Medical Records.

a. Pending Action.

[§ 119] Pending Action.

(1) Procedure for Exercising Rights. Ev.C. 1158 establishes early discovery rights to a patient's own medical records. Either before an action is filed or before a defendant makes an appearance, an attorney at law, or the attorney's representative, may exercise the patient's rights through the following procedure:

(a) The attorney or the representative presents a written authorization (or a copy), signed by an adult patient, by the guardian or conservator of a patient's person or estate, or by the personal representative or heir of a deceased patient. If the patient is a minor, the authorization is signed by the patient's parent or guardian.

(b) The authorization may be presented to a licensed hospital or pharmacy, or to the following licensed persons: physician, surgeon, dentist, registered nurse, dispensing optician, registered physical therapist, podiatrist, psychologist, osteopath, chiropractor, clinical laboratory bioanalyst, clinical laboratory technologist, and pharmacist. All the patient's records in the custodian's control may be obtained.

(c) "Promptly" on the presentation of the written authorization, the records must be made available for the attorney or the representative to inspect and copy. No copying may be performed by any of the enumerated medical providers or employers, or their agents, if the attorney has employed a photocopier as his or her representative to obtain or review the records.

(d) A failure to make the records available during business hours within 5 days after the presentation of the written authorization may subject the custodian to liability for all reasonable expenses, including attorneys' fees, incurred in a proceeding to enforce Ev.C. 1158.

(e) All "reasonable costs" incurred by the enumerated licensed persons or entities may be charged against the person whose written authorization required the availability of the records. Reasonable costs include (1) 10 cents per page for standard reproduction of documents 8 1/2 by 14 inches or less; (2) 20 cents per page for copying documents from microfilm; (3) the actual cost of reproducing oversize documents or documents requiring special processing; (4) "reasonable clerical costs" incurred in locating and making records available, to be billed at a maximum rate of $ 16 per hour per person, computed on the basis of $ 4 per quarter hour or fraction thereof; (5) actual postage charges; and (6) actual costs, if any, charged by a third person for retrieval and return of records.

(f) Where the records are delivered to the attorney or the attorney's representative for inspection or photocopying at the custodian's place of business, the fee for complying with the authorization must not exceed $ 15, plus actual costs charged to the custodian by a third person for retrieval and return of records held offsite by the third person. (See 12 A.L.R.5th 577 [pre-action production or inspection of documents, persons, or other evidence, including medical records].)

(2) Broad Applicability. Ev.C. 1158 applies in a labor controversy despite the existence of a collective bargaining agreement that does not specifically authorize discovery; i.e., the California policy supporting a patient's right to inspect his or her medical records outweighs the burdens on administration of federal labor law. (National Football League Management Council v. Superior Court (1983) 138 C.A.3d 895, 899, 903, 188 C.R. 337.)

(3) Order To Show Cause. When a medical provider fails to comply with Ev.C. 1158, the demanding party, in addition to any other available remedy, may apply to the court for an order to show cause. If the court issues an order to show cause, it must be served on the respondent in the same manner as a summons and is returnable no sooner than 20 days after issuance "unless ordered otherwise upon a showing of substantial hardship." The court must impose monetary sanctions under Ev.C. 1158 unless it finds that the person to be sanctioned acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make imposition of sanctions unjust. (C.C.P. 1985.7.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Procedure for Exercising Rights. See Thornburg v. Superior Court (2006) 138 C.A.4th 43, 53, 41 C.R.3d 156 [in action by patient against hospital's agent for overcharges for copying costs in violation of Ev.C. 1158, trial judge erred in sustaining agent's demurrer; because, under terms of agreement between hospital and agent, agent assumed hospital's obligation of responding to requests under Ev.C. 1158 and, in doing so, was pursuing its own financial interests, it was subject to statute's limitations]; Thornburg v. El Centro Regional Med. Center (2006) 143 C.A.4th 198, 204, 48 C.R.3d 840 [cost limitation provisions of Ev.C. 1158 may be enforced directly by patients]; 78 Am.Jur. ## CHAPTER X - Discovery

IV. INSPECTION OF DOCUMENTS, TANGIBLE THINGS, AND PLACES

B. Distinctions.

1. Patient's Discovery of Medical Records.
  - b. Action Not Pending.

[§ 120] Action Not Pending.

(1) Right to Records. An adult patient, a minor patient legally authorized to consent to medical treatment, and any patient representative may gain direct access to patient records from a health care provider, even where there is no pending litigation or court action. (Health & Saf.C. 123110(a); on definition of patient records, see Health & Saf.C. 123105(d); on definition of health care provider, see Health & Saf.C. 123105(a); see also 14 Pacific L. J. 521; 30 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1349, 1368 [proposal for model patient access and information practices statute]; cf. 26 A.L.R.4th 701 [patient's right to disclosure of medical records under state freedom of information act].)

(2) Procedures. Specific procedures govern a patient's inspection of his or her records (see Health & Saf.C. 123110(a)), or the health care provider's furnishing of copies of the records to the patient on request and payment of costs (see Health & Saf.C. 123110(b)). The health care provider is exempt from liability for any consequences resulting from disclosure of the patient's records in accordance with Health & Saf.C. 123100 et seq. (Health & Saf.C. 123110(e).) In furnishing patient records to other providers, a provider may not discriminate against classes of providers. (Health & Saf.C. 123110(e).)

(3) Reasons for Denial of Access Rights. Direct access to the records may be denied to a minor patient's parent or guardian if (a) the minor is legally authorized to consent to the treatment described in the records, or (b) it is determined in good faith that the granting of access would have an adverse effect on the provider's professional relationship with the minor or the minor's physical safety or psychological well-being. (Health & Saf.C. 123115(a).) The provider may also refuse a patient access to mental health records when it determines that there is a substantial risk that disclosure would result in detrimental consequences to the patient. (Health & Saf.C. 123115(b).)

A provider cannot withhold patient records because of an unpaid bill for health care services. (Health & Saf.C. 123110(g); see Person v. Farmers Ins. Group of Cos. (1997) 52 C.A.4th 813, 816, 61 C.R.2d 30 [where patient entered into arbitration with insurer over reimbursement for chiropractic expenses, chiropractor had no right to condition his providing patient with medical records and billing statements on patient's signing lien for chiropractic fees].)

(4) Remedies for Violation of Access Rights. A patient or representative is permitted to pursue any remedy available for violation of the access provisions and to bring an action against the health care provider for enforcement of the provisions. The prevailing party may recover costs and attorneys' fees. (Health & Saf.C. 123120.) A wilful violation is punishable by a fine of not more than $ 100, and may result in disciplinary action by an appropriate licensing authority. (Health & Saf.C. 123110(f).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Right to Records. In addition to the right to inspect his or her records, an adult patient has the right to provide an addendum to the records regarding anything the patient believes is incomplete or incorrect. The health care provider must attach the addendum to the records and include the addendum whenever it discloses that portion of the patient's records to which the addendum pertains. (Health & Saf.C. 123111, added in 2000.)

Health & Saf.C. 123111(d), (e), and (f) were added in 2001 to require a health care provider, within 30 days of receiving a written request from a patient or former patient, to provide a copy of the relevant portion of the patient's records to support an appeal regarding eligibility for a public benefit program. The requirement does not apply where the patient is represented by a private attorney who is paying the patient's appeal costs pending the outcome of the appeal.

B. Distinctions.

2. Other Procedures.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 121

[§ 121] Other Procedures.

(1) Party, Not Witness. Unlike a deposition, the inspection procedure of C.C.P. 2031 is not available against a nonparty witness. Like interrogatories (supra, §87) and requests for admissions (infra, §157), it is available only to inspect things "that are in the possession, custody, or control" of another party. (C.C.P. 2031(a); see 19 A.L.R.3d 1134 [inspection of matter held by nonparty affiliated or subsidiary corporation as dependent on "control" by party].) Documents or things in the possession of a nonparty witness must therefore be sought by subpoena duces tecum or deposition subpoena. (See infra, §218 and supra, §42 et seq.)

(2) Inspection, Not Production in Court. C.C.P. 2031 contemplates inspection, copying, photographing, testing, sampling, measuring, and surveying, to gain information; i.e., it is a discovery proceeding. If the party wishes to introduce documents or other things in evidence, the party must obtain them by the ordinary procedures of subpoena duces tecum and deposition subpoena. (See infra, §218 and supra, §42 et seq.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Party, Not Witness. C.C.P. 2031(a), limiting the inspection right to items in possession of a party, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2031.010 in 2004 without substantive change.

(2) Inspection, Not Production in Court. C.C.P. 2031, authorizing inspections, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2031.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

[§ 124] Illustrations of Discoverable Documents.

In Greyhound Corp. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 C.2d 355, 15 C.R. 90, 364 P.2d 266, plaintiffs were injured in a collision with defendant's bus carrying some interstate passengers. While plaintiffs were awaiting removal to a hospital, an unidentified witness gave them information indicating defendant's liability, and defendant's investigators took written statements of various witnesses. Plaintiffs' attorney was unsuccessful in locating the witnesses, and moved for an order of inspection of all of their written statements. Defendant furnished their names and addresses (many were nonresidents located far away) but refused to supply the statements. The trial judge ordered inspection and defendant sought prohibition. Held, writ denied:

(a) It is unnecessary to show relevancy to the issues; it is enough that the matter sought be relevant to the subject matter, and the statements of eyewitnesses meet the test. (56 C.2d 390.)

(b) The matter sought need not be admissible evidence. Assuming that some of it was not admissible, such cases as Twin Lock v. Superior Court (1959) 171 C.A.2d 236, 340 P.2d 748, "are wrong and should be disapproved insofar as they hold that the material sought (be it by deposition, interrogatory, demand for admission or examination) is not subject to the discovery statutes because the same material would be inadmissible at the trial of the action." (56 C.2d 391.)

(c) Inadmissibility is, however, a factor to be considered by the trial judge in exercising his discretion in ruling on an objection of undue burden. (56 C.2d 392.)

In Steele v. Superior Court (1961) 56 C.2d 402, 15 C.R. 116, 364 P.2d 292, J sued T and A for dissolution of partnership and other relief, and Steele sued the three partners for fraud and breach of contract in the original transaction of formation of the partnership. In J's action, depositions were taken of the three partners, and they were transcribed but never corrected or signed. The attorneys took possession of both the transcriptions and the reporters' shorthand notes, and J dismissed his action. Thereafter, Steele sought inspection of the depositions, but the trial judge denied his motion on the ground that the unsigned writings were not depositions and hence not admissible in evidence. Held, under the Greyhound rule, supra, the objection was untenable. Mandamus was accordingly granted to compel reconsideration of the motion. (56 C.2d 406.) (See also Colonial Life & Acc. Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1982) 31 C.3d 785, 790, 183 C.R. 810, 647 P.2d 86 [plaintiff who alleged unfair claim settlement practices by insured was entitled to discover names, addresses, and records of other insureds whose claims were negotiated by same claims adjuster]; Irvington-Moore v. Superior Court (1993) 14 C.A.4th 733, 739, 18 C.R.2d 49 [defendant in personal injury action was required to produce all insurance policies that it had identified in responses to interrogatories; C.C.P. 2017(b) expressly provides for discovery of insurance information (see supra, §11) and choice of method of discovery is left to party seeking discovery]; Norton v. Superior Court (1994) 24 C.A.4th 1750, 1761, 1762, 30 C.R.2d 217 [in legal malpractice action, defendant was not precluded from discovering terms and conditions of plaintiffs' settlement agreement with insurer, despite collateral source rule (see 6 Summary (9th), Torts, §1388), because information could be or lead to admissible evidence].)

C.C.P. 2017(b), on the discovery of insurance information, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2017.210 in 2004 without substantive change. Collateral source rule:

IV. INSPECTION OF DOCUMENTS, TANGIBLE THINGS, AND PLACES

C. Scope of Inspection.

2. Documents.

c. Illustrations of Nondiscoverable Documents.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 125

[§ 125] Illustrations of Nondiscoverable Documents.

In Hoffman Corp. v. Superior Court (1985) 172 C.A.3d 357, 218 C.R. 355, a products liability action, plaintiff sought production of defendant's customer list so that plaintiff could send each customer a letter, asking whether the customer knew of any accidents involving the product. Plaintiff contended that the information sought was needed to show that a defect caused plaintiff's accident and to establish a basis for punitive damages. Defendant, which had provided information about other accidents, litigation, and complaints, objected. On plaintiff's motion to compel production, the trial court ordered production of the list, and subsequently approved a letter to be sent to the customers. Held, this was an abuse of discretion.

(a) Where the disclosure sought is of "sensitive information which people may wish to keep confidential," the court must weigh and balance the competing factors. (172 C.A.3d 362.) The customer list "is clearly information falling within this sensitive category as evidenced by the fact that a confidential customer list is protected by the courts in the context of a trade secret." (172 C.A.3d 363.)

(b) Plaintiff's showing of need for the list was inadequate. Only accidents known to defendant would be relevant to the issue of punitive damages, and that information has already been provided. While the list was concededly relevant as providing information as to similar accidents, plaintiff had other means of obtaining that material. (172 C.A.3d 363.)

(c) Balanced against plaintiff's showing is the damage to defendant and the overbreadth of the discovery ordered. Plaintiff's letter apparently was to go not only to customers who purchased the product similar to that at issue, but also to customers who purchased a later model not containing the alleged defect. The extent of damage to defendant from having all of its customers informed that the safety of its product has been questioned "is necessarily speculative but the potential for grave damage is abundantly clear." (172 C.A.3d 364, 365.)

In Mead Reinsurance Co. v. Superior Court (1986) 188 C.A.3d 313, 232 C.R. 752, a "bad-faith" action by a city against an insurer and the insurer's corporate claims adjuster, the trial court granted the city's motion to compel the insurer to produce claim files relating to every similar claim for a period of 61/2 years, involving the manual evaluation of over 13,000 claim files currently open and an undetermined number in existence since the initial date of the discovery period, at an expense of over 1,000 personnel-hours and thousands of dollars to the claims adjuster. Held, writ issued; the order was oppressive, in view of the massive extent of the burden that the request entailed and the absence of any provision in the order to mitigate that burden. (188 C.A.3d 321.)

IV. INSPECTION OF DOCUMENTS, TANGIBLE THINGS, AND PLACES

C. Scope of Inspection.

3. Tangible Things.

[§ 126] Tangible Things.

(1) General Rule. One party may demand that another party produce any tangible things that are in the party's possession, custody, or control. The demanding party, or someone acting on its behalf, may then inspect and photograph, test, or sample the things. (C.C.P. 2031(a)(2); see 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §6.8; 13 A.L.R.2d 657 [inspection of article alleged to have caused personal injury or death]; 95 A.L.R.2d 1061 [photographs]; 4 A.L.R.3d 762 [inspection of article alleged to have caused injury other than personal injury or death]; 11 A.L.R.4th 1245 [permissibility of "destructive testing" of chattel in civil case]; 4 Am.Jur. Trials 223, 238.)

(2) No Photographic Reenactments. "Tangible things" include the photographing of a person's face and body to facilitate identification. (Shepherd v. Superior Court (1976) 17 C.3d 107, 118, 130 C.R. 257, 550 P.2d 161; see 19 A.L.R.4th 1236 [pictures of litigant].)

However, in Bailey v. Superior Court (1977) 19 C.3d 970, 140 C.R. 669, 568 P.2d 394, the Supreme Court held that, in the absence of a stipulation, the use of a videotape to reenact the circumstances of an accident in proceedings on deposition was unauthorized. (See supra, §67.) In Bailey v. Superior Court (1978) 79 C.A.3d 444, 144 C.R. 875, defendant attempted to gain the same objective by invoking the inspection statute (former C.C.P. 2031): Its motion sought an order requiring plaintiff to appear and reenact the accident for movie cameras. Held, the order was improperly granted. While it purported to be based on the court's authority to photograph objects or things, in fact it required a nonverbal statement, visually recorded. In Shepherd v. Superior Court, supra, the order called for nontestimonial evidence; here, it required testimonial compliance. "[S]ection 2031 does not authorize the compelled reenactment of an event whatever the proposed means of visual recordation--motion pictures, still photographs, drawings, videotape, or other. It is the testimonial nature of the proposed discovery, not the means of recordation, which causes the instant case to fall outside the scope of section 2031." (79 C.A.3d 447.) (See 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §6.8; for subsequent statutory authorization of deposition by videotape, see supra, §67.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) General Rule. C.C.P. 2031(a)(2), on the demand for inspection of tangible things, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2031.010(c) in 2004 without substantive change.

See Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §6.8.

(2) No Photographic Reenactments. C.C.P. 2031, authorizing inspection demands, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2031.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 127

[§ 127] Land or Other Property.

A party may demand entry onto land or other property that is in the possession, custody, or control of another party. The party making the demand may then inspect, measure, survey, photograph, test, or sample the land or other property, or any designated object or operation on it. (C.C.P. 2031(a)(3); see 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §6.9; 13 A.L.R.2d 657 [inspection of premises alleged to have caused personal injury or death]; 4 A.L.R.3d 762 [inspection of premises alleged to have caused injury other than personal injury or death].)

A condemnor may enter on land to obtain information reasonably related to acquisition of the property. (See C.C.P. 1245.010 et seq.; 8 Summary (9th), Constitutional Law, §982.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

D. Procedure for Demanding Inspection.

1. Form of Demand.

[§ 128] Form of Demand.

(1) Numbering and Identification. A party demanding an inspection must number each set of demands consecutively. The identity of the demanding and responding parties and the set number must appear in the first paragraph immediately below the title of the case. Each demand in a set must be separately set forth and identified by number or letter. (C.C.P. 2031(c), based on F.R. Civ. P., Rule 34(b).)

(2) Contents. The inspection demand must designate the documents, tangible things, or land or other property to be inspected either by specifically describing each individual item or by "reasonably particularizing" each category of items. (C.C.P. 2031(c)(1).) It must specify a reasonable time and place for inspection. (C.C.P. 2031(c)(2), (c)(3); on timing of inspection, see infra, §129.) The demand must specify any related activity demanded in addition to inspection and copying, the manner in which the activity will be performed, and whether the activity will permanently alter or destroy the item involved. (C.C.P. 2031(c)(4).) (See C.E.B., 2 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §§8.36, 8.37; 1 *Hogan, Cal. ## CHAPTER X - Discovery

D. Procedure for Demanding Inspection.

2. Timing.

[§ 129] Timing.

(1) Timing of Demand. The defendant may demand inspection without leave of court at any time. Before demanding inspection without leave of court, the plaintiff must wait 10 days after service of the summons on, or appearance by, the responding party, whichever is earlier. In unlawful detainer actions, the plaintiff must wait 5 days. On motion with or without notice, the court, for good cause shown, may allow a plaintiff to make an inspection demand at an earlier time. (C.C.P. 2031(b).)

(2) Timing of Inspection. Unless the court has granted leave to specify an earlier date, the time for inspection must be at least 30 days, or 5 days in unlawful detainer actions, after service of the demand. (C.C.P. 2031(c)(2).) Thus, because discovery must be completed at least 30 days before the initial trial date (see C.C.P. 2024(a), supra, §23), the inspection demand should be served at least 60 days before the initial trial date, earlier if served by mail, and even earlier to allow time for a subsequent motion to compel (see infra, §137 et seq.), if necessary. (See C.E.B., Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §8.38.)

(3) Supplemental Demand. In addition to the inspection demands permitted by C.C.P. 2031, a party may propound a supplemental demand to inspect later acquired or discovered documents, tangible things or land or other property that are in the possession, custody, or control of the party on whom the demand is made. The demanding party must have previously served a demand for inspection (a) twice before the initial setting of a trial date, and (b) subject to the time limits in C.C.P. 2024, supra, §23, once after the initial setting of a trial date. However, on motion, for good cause shown, the court may allow a party to propound an additional number of supplemental demands for inspection. (C.C.P. 2031(e).)

(1) Timing of Demand. C.C.P. 2031(b), on the timing of the demand for inspection, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2031.020 in 2004 without substantive change.

Under C.C.P. 2031.020(c), added in 2007, in an unlawful detainer action or other proceeding under C.C.P. 1159 et seq. (see 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §757), a plaintiff may make a demand for inspection without leave of court "at any time that is five days after service of the summons on, or appearance by, the party to whom the demand is directed, whichever occurs first."

(2) Timing of Inspection. C.C.P. 2024(a), on the time for completion of discovery, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2024.020 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2031(c)(2), on the timing of the inspection, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2031.030(c)(2) in 2004 without substantive change. C.C.P. 2031.030(c)(2) was amended in 2007 to provide that the demand must specify a reasonable time for the inspection that is at least 30 days after service of the demand, unless the court for good cause has granted leave to specify an earlier date. However, in an unlawful detainer action or other proceeding under C.C.P. 1159 et seq. (see 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §757), the demand must specify a reasonable time that is at least five days after service of the demand, unless the court, for good cause, has granted leave to specify an earlier date.

See C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 4th, §8.52 et seq.

(3) Supplemental Demand. In addition to the inspection demands permitted by C.C.P. 2031, a party may propound a supplemental demand to inspect later acquired or discovered documents, tangible things, or land or other property that is in the possession, custody, or control of the party on whom the demand is made. Such a demand may be made (a) twice prior to the initial setting of a trial date, and (b) subject to the time limits in C.C.P. 2024, text, §23, once after the initial setting of a trial date. However, on motion and for good cause shown, the court may allow a party to propound an additional number of supplemental demands for inspection. (C.C.P. 2031(e), as amended in 2000.)

C.C.P. 2031, authorizing inspection demands, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2031.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change. C.C.P. 2031(e), on supplemental demands, became C.C.P. 2031.050.

C.C.P. 2024, setting discovery time limits, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2024.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change. West's Key Number Digest, Pretrial Procedure k.402

E. Procedure for Responding to Demand.

1. Form of Response.

[§ 131] Form of Response.

(1) Identification of Response. The responding party must respond separately to each item or category of item in the demand using the same sequence and numbering, but the text of the item or category need not be repeated. The identity of the responding and demanding parties and the set number must appear in the first paragraph of the response immediately below the title of the case. (C.C.P. 2031(g).)

(2) Contents. The following responses are authorized:

(a) A statement of compliance providing that the activity demanded will be allowed in whole or in part and that all documents and things demanded that are in the possession, custody, or control of the responding party and to which no objection is being made will be produced. Demanded documents must be produced "as they are kept in the usual course of business" or organized and labeled to correspond to the demand. If necessary, the responding party must convert any data compilations into reasonably usable form, at the reasonable expense of the demanding party. (C.C.P. 2031(g)(1).)

(b) A statement of inability to comply affirming that the responding party has attempted to comply by a diligent search and a reasonable inquiry. The statement must specify whether inability to comply occurs because the item demanded (1) has never existed, (2) has been destroyed, (3) has been lost, misplaced or stolen, or (4) has never been or is no longer in the possession, custody, or control of the responding party. The statement must also include the name and address of any person or organization known or believed to have possession, custody, or control of the item. (C.C.P. 2031(g)(2).)

(c) A statement of objection identifying "with particularity" any document, tangible thing or land to which objection is made and clearly setting forth the extent of the objection and the ground on which it is based. A claim based on the work product doctrine must be expressly asserted and a claim of privilege must identify the particular privilege invoked. If only a part of an item or category is objectionable, a statement of compliance or of inability to comply is required for the remainder. (C.C.P. 2031(g)(3); for forms, see Cal. Civil Practice, 1 Torts, §16:48; Cal. Civil Practice, 2 Procedure, §13:136; 8A Am.Jur. P.P. Forms (1996 ed.), Depositions and Discovery §596.)

(3) Motion for Protective Order. The responding party also has the option of seeking a protective order. (See infra, §135.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Identification of Response. C.C.P. 2031(g), on identification of the response, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P.

(a) Statement of compliance: C.C.P. 2031(g)(1), on statements of compliance, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2031.220 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2031.210 was amended in 2007 to provide that the statement of compliance must indicate that compliance will be by the date set for inspection under C.C.P. 2031.030(c)(2) (Supp., supra, §129). (C.C.P. 2031.210(a)(1).)

If the party is a corporation, partnership, association, or governmental agency, one of its officers or agents must sign the response under oath. (C.C.P. 2031(h); see Blue Ridge Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1988) 202 C.A.3d 339, 344, 345, 248 C.R. 346 [response contained hybrid of objections and other statements; objections effective although response was unverified]; Food 4 Less Supermarkets v. Superior Court (1995) 40 C.A.4th 651, 657, 658, 46 C.R.2d 925 [following Blue Ridge; omission of verification in portion of response containing fact-specific responses merely renders that portion untimely and creates right to move for orders and sanctions only as to those responses].)

The attorney for the responding party must sign any responses that contain an objection. If an officer or agent signing on behalf of a party is an attorney, acting in that capacity for the party, the party waives any lawyer-client privilege and any protection of the work product doctrine in later discovery concerning the identity of the sources of the information contained in the response. (C.C.P. 2031(h).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

C.C.P. 2031(h), requiring a signature under oath on the response, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2031.250 in 2004 without substantive change.

IV. INSPECTION OF DOCUMENTS, TANGIBLE THINGS, AND PLACES

E. Procedure for Responding to Demand.

3. Service and Filing.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 133

[§ 133] Service and Filing.

(1) Timing of Service. The responding party must serve a written response on the demanding party and copies on all other parties who have appeared, within 30 days, or 5 days in unlawful detainer actions, after service of the demand. The period may be shortened or extended by the court on motion. In unlawful detainer actions, the responding party has at least 5 days from the date of service of the demand to respond, unless on motion of the demanding party the court has shortened the time. (C.C.P. 2031(i).)

The parties may agree to extend the time for response to a demand or to particular items in a demand. The agreement must be confirmed by a writing that specifies the extended date. Unless the agreement expressly provides otherwise, the responding party may respond in any manner authorized by C.C.P. 2031(g) (supra, §131). (C.C.P. 2031(j).) A letter from the responding party to the demanding party, with copies to other parties who have appeared, is a sufficient written confirmation. (Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2031(j) (formerly (i)), in 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C.)

(2) No Filing. The original response is not filed with the court. It is retained by the demanding party for 6 months after final disposition of the action. It may then be destroyed unless the court, on motion of any party and for good cause shown, extends the preservation period. (C.C.P. 2031(k).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Timing of Service. C.C.P. 2031(i), on the timing of service, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2031.260 in 2004 without substantive change. C.C.P. 2031.260 was amended in 2007 to provide that, in an unlawful detainer action or other proceeding under C.C.P. 1159 et seq. (12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §757), the party to whom an inspection demand is directed has at least 5 days from the date of service to respond, unless, on motion of the party making the demand, the court has shortened the time for response, or, on motion of the party to whom the demand is directed, the court has extended the time for response.

C.C.P. 2031(g), on authorized methods of responding, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2031.210 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2031(j), on agreements to extend the time for response, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2031.270 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2031.270 was amended in 2007. The demanding and responding parties may agree to extend the date for inspection or the time for service of a response to a set of inspection demands, or to particular items or categories of items, to a date or dates beyond those provided in C.C.P. 2031.030, 2031.210, 2031.260, and 2031.280. (C.C.P. 2031.270(a).) The agreement may be informal, but it must be confirmed in a writing that specifies the extended date. (C.C.P. 2031.270(b).) Unless the agreement expressly states otherwise, it preserves to the responding party the right to respond to any item or category of item in the demand to which the agreement applies in any manner specified in C.C.P. 2031.210, 2031.220, 2031.230, 2031.240, and 2031.280. (C.C.P. 2031.270(c).)

Under C.C.P. 2031.280(b), added in 2007, production of documents in response to an inspection demand must take place on the date specified in the demand under C.C.P. 2031.030(c)(2), unless an objection to that date has been made. If the date for inspection has been extended under C.C.P. 2031.270, the documents must be produced by the date agreed to under that section.

See Reporter's Note to former C.C.P. 2031(i), in Hogan, 2 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, Appendix D.(2) No Filing. C.C.P. 2031(k), specifying that the response is not to be filed with the court, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2031.290 in 2004 without substantive change.

CHAPTER X - Discovery

IV. INSPECTION OF DOCUMENTS, TANGIBLE THINGS, AND PLACES

E. Procedure for Responding to Demand.

4. Effect of Failure To Respond.

[§ 134] Effect of Failure To Respond.

A party who fails to file a timely response to an inspection demand waives any objection to the demand, including an objection based on privilege or the work product doctrine. On motion, the court may relieve a party from its waiver if it determines that the party subsequently served a response "in substantial compliance with" C.C.P. 2031(g), supra, §131, and that "failure to serve a timely response was the result of mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect." (C.C.P. 2031(l).) The court's ability to relieve a party from waiver comes from C.C.P. 473, and the Commission intended that C.C.P. 2031(l) (formerly (k)), and not C.C.P. 473, applies to this form of discovery default. (Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2031(l) (formerly (k)), 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C; on C.C.P. 473, see 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attack on Judgment in Trial Court, §152 et seq.) (See Fresno v. Superior Court (1988) 205 C.A.3d 1459, 1466, 253 C.R. 296 [Legislature intended to employ same standard as C.C.P. 473 in determining "mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect"; counsel's mistake of law on "relatively simple and undebatable matter" not valid ground]; Food 4 Less Supermarkets v. Superior Court (1995) 40 C.A.4th 651, 657, 658, 46 C.R.2d 925 [where response is filed within statutory period and contains both objections and unverified fact-specific responses, only unverified responses are considered untimely; objections are not waived]; Korea Data Systems Co. Ltd. v. Superior Court (1997) 51 C.A.4th 1513, 1516, 59 C.R.2d 925 [plaintiff did not waive attorney-client privilege by filing objections to defendants' inspection requests that were less specific than required by statute and by filing untimely privilege log; C.C.P. 2031(k) (now 2031(l)) does not authorize waiver of privilege for untimely filing of log, and other sanctions were appropriate for nonspecific objections].)

The filing of a timely response does not preserve an objection based on the attorney-client privilege unless a specific objection on that ground is contained in the response. Any other interpretation of C.C.P. 2031(l) "would allow piecemeal and seriatim doling out of objections to legitimate discovery requests whenever a timely response, no matter how insubstantial, is served. It is clear from the [Civil Discovery] Act that the Legislature intended that any and all objections are to be made at the earliest timely response." (Scottsdale Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1997) 59 C.A.4th 263, 273, 275, 69 C.R.2d 112 [in insurer's declaratory relief action, insured homeowners' association sought all documents relating to specific claim and insurer's timely response failed to raise specific objection in expectation that separate motion for protective order would be granted; tactical choices of insurer's counsel did not constitute mistake of law that justified relief from waiver].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

C.C.P. 2031(g), on authorized methods of responding, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2031.210 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2031(l), on the effects of failing to respond, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2031.300 in 2004 without substantive change.

See Deary v. Superior Court (2001) 87 C.A.4th 1072, 1079, 105 C.R.2d 132 [in action against estate, defendant's claim that copies of estate tax returns sought by plaintiff were privileged was not waived, notwithstanding that defendant failed to raise claim in its initial response to notice of deposition and request for production of documents; defendant's doubt that returns were included in request was reasonable]; Best Products v. Superior Court (2004) 119 C.A.4th 1181, 1188, 15 C.R.3d 154 [trial judge erred in finding that defendant waived its attorney-client and work product privileges by failing to file privilege log in response to plaintiff's request to inspect and produce; waiver could be found only under Ev.C. 912 (see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §67) or C.C.P. 2031(l), and latter section was not violated, as defendant timely asserted privileges, albeit in boilerplate fashion]; People v. Superior Court (Cole Nat. Corp.) (2004) 122 C.A.4th 1060, 1074, 19 C.R.3d 324 [where plaintiff's original response to defendants' request for production of documents and deposition notices was timely and contained objections, and plaintiff thereafter produced privilege log, trial judge erred in finding that plaintiff had waived its privilege because its objections, in its response or privilege log, were insufficiently detailed; relying on Best Products, supra, and Korea Data Systems Co. Ltd. v. Superior Court (1997) 51 C.A.4th 1513, 59 C.R.2d 925, text, p. 970]; Reporter's Note to former C.C.P. 2031(k), in Hogan, 2 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, Appendix D.

a. Authorization.

[§ 135] Authorization.

(1) In General. When an inspection of documents, tangible things, or places has been demanded, the party to whom the demand has been directed, and any other party or affected person or organization, may promptly move for a protective order. On a showing of good cause, the court may make "any order that justice requires" to protect a party, person, or organization from "unwarranted annoyance, embarrassment, or oppression, or undue burden and expense." If the court denies the motion for a protective order in whole or in part, it may order that "the party to whom the demand was directed provide or permit the discovery against which protection was sought on terms and conditions that are just." Civil Discovery §6.11; on monetary sanctions for unsuccessfully making or opposing motion for protective order, see infra, §252.)

(2) Attempt at Informal Resolution. The motion for a protective order must be accompanied by a declaration showing a reasonable and good faith attempt at an informal resolution of each issue presented. (C.C.P. 2031(f).) (On monetary sanctions for failure to attempt informal resolution, see infra, §252.)

(3) Permissible Orders. Under C.C.P. 2031(f), a protective order may include, but is not limited to, one or more of the following directions:

- (a) That some or all of the items demanded for inspection not be produced or made available.
- (b) That the time to respond to a particular demand or a set of demands be extended.
- (c) That the place of production be other than that specified in the demand.
- (d) That the inspection be made only on specified terms and conditions.
- (e) That a trade secret or confidential information not be disclosed or be disclosed only to specified persons or in a specified way.
- (f) That items produced be sealed and opened only by court order.

E. Procedure for Responding to Demand.

5. Motion for Protective Order.

b. Illustrations.

[§ 136] Illustrations.

In Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1991) 233 C.A.3d 1138, 286 C.R. 50, an insured sued its insurer for breach of contract and bad faith failure to contribute to a settlement. The trial judge ordered the insurer to produce reinsurance agreements and documents containing communications between the insurer and any reinsurers who might be liable to satisfy a judgment against the insurer. The insured asserted that the reinsurer had attempted to influence or pressure the insurer either to settle or not to settle the insured's claim, and that the communications documents therefore were relevant to bad faith. The insured further contended that disclosure of the reinsurance agreements was necessary to provide the context for the communications documents. Held, mandamus issued to compel vacation of order.

(b) The judge also erred in ordering production of the reinsurance agreements. The insured's desire to review them for "context" was an insufficient ground to justify the production of highly sensitive commercial information. (233 C.A.3d 1141.) (See Lipton v. Superior Court (1996) 48 C.A.4th 1599, 1618, 1619, 56 C.R.2d 341 [holding, on facts similar to those in Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., that in camera review was proper procedure to resolve relevancy of reinsurance and loss reserves information, but disagreeing with that court's seeming extension of qualified privilege of C.C.P. 2031(e) (now 2031(f)) for "confidential information" to "sensitive matter"].)

In Raymond Handling Concepts Corp. v. Superior Court (1995) 39 C.A.4th 584, 45 C.R.2d 885, plaintiff was injured while operating a forklift and sued the forklift manufacturer. Defendant produced certain confidential documents under an interim discovery agreement with plaintiff, but moved for a protective order to prevent plaintiff from sharing the documents with counsel in similar pending litigation. The trial judge issued a protective order directing that the documents not be disclosed to the general public but allowing plaintiff's counsel to share the documents with attorneys in similar cases, provided those attorneys executed a stipulation agreeing to be bound by the protective order. Whenever disclosure of this type was made, notice to defendant's counsel was required. Held, this was proper.

(a) The broad language of C.C.P. 2031(e) (now 2031(f)) indicates that the issuance and formulation of protective orders are to a large extent discretionary. Here, the trial judge "drafted a protective order ... which accommodated the public interest in allowing the sharing of information to litigants in similar cases and the interest of petitioners in protecting confidential information and trade secrets from disclosure to their competitors." (39 C.A.4th 590.)

(b) The order did not violate the principles and procedures of Bridgestone/Firestone v. Superior Court (1992) 7 C.A.4th 1384, 9 C.R.2d 709, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §351, which, in order to protect the trade secret privilege of Ev.C. 1060, articulated a three-step process that must be followed in ordering disclosure subject to a protective order: (1) the privilege holder's showing of the existence of a trade secret, (2) the opposing party's showing of a need for the material, and (3) the privilege holder's demonstration of any disadvantages of a protective order. Here, by disclosing the information to plaintiff and seeking a protective order, defendant in effect conceded that the material was discoverable and thus rendered the first two steps in the process unnecessary. (39 C.A.4th 590.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

C.C.P. 2031(f), authorizing motions for a protective order, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2031.060 in 2004 without substantive change.

F. Compelling Inspections.

1. Order Compelling Response.
- b. Inadequate Response Given.

[§ 138] Inadequate Response Given.

(1) Motion for Order. The demanding party may move for an order compelling further response if it determines that (a) a statement of compliance is incomplete, (b) a statement of inability to comply is inadequate, incomplete or evasive, or (c) an objection is without merit or too general. The right to compel a further response is waived unless notice of the motion is given within 45 days of service of the response, or any supplemental response, or on or before any specific later date to which the parties have agreed in writing. The motion must specify facts showing good cause for the discovery being sought. It must be accompanied by a declaration showing a reasonable and good faith attempt at informal resolution of the issues presented. (C.C.P. 2031(m); see Standon Co. v. Superior Court (1990) 225 C.A.3d 898, 903, 275 C.R. 833 [rejecting contention that 45-day period prescribed by C.C.P. 2031(l) (now 2031(m)) runs from date set for production or inspection, rather than from date of service of response]; Sexton v. Superior Court (1997) 58 C.A.4th 1403, 1404, 68 C.R.2d 708 [where party's motion to compel production of documents under C.C.P. 2031(l) (now 2031(m)) is untimely and responding party fails to raise that objection in written opposition but does so orally at hearing on motion, court is required to deny motion]; C.E.B., Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §8.54; Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery §6.14; on format of motion to compel further response, see supra, §28; on monetary sanctions for failure to attempt informal resolution, see infra, §252.)

In Carter v. Superior Court (1990) 218 C.A.3d 994, 267 C.R. 290, a bad faith action against an insurer, plaintiffs' motion to compel further responses to a demand for inspection of documents was filed after expiration of the 45-day limit set by C.C.P. 2031(l) (now 2031(m)), supra, and hence was denied. When plaintiffs sought to depose defendant's custodian of records under C.C.P. 2025 and requested that he bring the previously withheld documents to the deposition, the trial judge issued a protective order, relying on Professional Career Colleges, Magna Institute v. Superior Court (1989) 207 C.A.3d 490, 255 C.R. 5 (supra, §116) for the proposition that a party may not obtain by a second discovery request what was lost by untimely prosecution of a first request. Held, this was error.

(a) Professional Career Colleges is distinguishable: It involved two discovery requests made under the same section, rather than attempted discovery under two separately authorized procedures, as in this case. "Section 2031, subdivision (l) (now 2031(m)) prescribes a waiver of 'any right to compel a further response to the inspection demand.' ... It does not prescribe a waiver of the party's right to use other discovery methods for obtaining the same documents or information." (218 C.A.3d 997.) Defendant's argument that plaintiffs employed only one discovery "method," which happened to be available under two separate statutes, lacks merit because the inspection of documents procedure differs substantially from a deposition at which a party is required to bring documents, and neither statute suggests that a request for documents under one procedure bars a request under the other for the same documents. (218 C.A.3d 997.)

(b) The silence of both statutes on the question at issue is explainable by the presence elsewhere of general restrictions on abusive discovery, e.g., C.C.P. 2019(b) (infra, §241) and C.C.P. 2025(i) (supra, §59). (218 C.A.3d 998.)

(2) Sanctions. The court must impose a monetary sanction under C.C.P. 2023 (infra, §252) against someone who unsuccessfully makes or resists a motion to compel further response, unless it finds that the person acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make imposing the sanction unjust. If a party fails to obey an order compelling further response, the court may enforce the order through the monetary and more severe sanctions available under C.C.P. 2023 (infra, §252 et seq.). (C.C.P. 2031(m).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Motion for Order. C.C.P. 2031(m), on motions to compel further response, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2031.310 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2019(b), on restrictions on discovery, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2019.030 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2025, on depositions generally, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change. C.C.P. 2025(i), on protective orders, became C.C.P. 2025.420.

F. Compelling Inspections.

2. Order Compelling Compliance.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 139

[§ 139] Order Compelling Compliance.

If the responding party fails to permit inspection under the terms of its statement of compliance, the demanding party may move for an order compelling compliance. Monetary sanctions under C.C.P. 2023 (infra, §252) may be imposed against anyone who unsuccessfully moves for or opposes such an order, and further sanctions under C.C.P. 2023 (infra, §255 et seq.) are available against a party who fails to obey the order. (C.C.P. 2031(n); see Crippen v. Superior Court (1984) 159 C.A.3d 254, 259, 205 C.R. 477 [timeliness of motion for order compelling compliance under former version of statute]; C.E.B., 2 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §8.56; 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §6.15; 38 Stanf. L. Rev. 841 [enforcement of discovery where foreign statutes block document production].)

If the trial court abuses its discretion in erroneously denying a motion for inspection, the remedy of review on appeal from the final judgment is inadequate, and mandamus lies to compel the judge to set aside the order of denial and grant the order compelling compliance. ## CHAPTER X - Discovery

V. PHYSICAL OR MENTAL EXAMINATION

A. Scope of Statute.

1. Examinee's Condition in Controversy.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 140

[§ 140] Examinee's Condition in Controversy.

(1) Evolution of Discovery Method. At an early date, California recognized the inherent power of the court to order a physical examination of the plaintiff in a personal injury case. (See Johnston v. Southern Pac. Co. (1907) 150 C. 535, 540, 89 P. 348; Dodge v. San Diego Elec. Ry. Co. (1949) 92 C.A.2d 759, 769, 208 P.2d 37; Sharff v. Superior Court (1955) 44 C.2d 508, 510, 282 P.2d 896.) C.C.P. 2032, enacted as part of the 1957 Act and continued in the 1986 Act, was based on F.R. Civ. P., Rule 35. It was designed to confirm the court's authority, enlarge the scope of examinations, and establish a uniform procedure. (On federal rule, see 42 Cal. L. Rev. 188; 36 A.L.R.2d 946; 20 Proof of Facts 411 [examination of commercial vehicle driver under F.R. Civ. P., Rule 35 or state counterpart].)

(2) Controversy Requirement. A party may obtain discovery by means of physical or mental examination in an action in which the mental or physical condition (including the blood group) of the person to be examined is in controversy. (C.C.P. 2032(a); see Vinson v. Superior Court (1987) 43 C.3d 833, 839, 239 C.R. 292, 740 P.2d 404, infra, §153 [plaintiff's claim of emotional distress in sexual harassment action placed her mental condition in controversy]; Doyle v. Superior Court (1996) 50 C.A.4th 1878, 1885, 58 C.R.2d 476 [distinguishing Vinson; where employee claimed her supervisor sexually harassed her, resulting in past emotional distress, employee's current mental condition was not "in controversy," and mental examination could not be compelled]; Barrenda L. v. Superior Court (1998) 65 C.A.4th 794, 803, 76 C.R.2d 727 [in action by minors against county and its employees for emotional distress arising from rape and assault suffered by plaintiffs in foster home, trial judge erred in ordering plaintiffs to undergo psychological examination without any limitation as to inquiry into plaintiffs' other sexual activity; there was no declaration from mental health professional establishing relevance of other sexual conduct]; see also C.E.B., 2 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, Chap. 10; C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Discovery, Chap. 16; 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Chap. 8; Cal. Civil Practice, 2 Procedure, §13:170 et seq.; 8A Am.Jur. P.P. Forms (1996 ed.), Depositions and Discovery §701 et seq.; 23 Am.Jur.2d (1983 ed.), Depositions and Discovery §282 et seq.)

The limitation of the discovery device to situations where the examinee's medical condition is actually "in controversy" continued prior law. "This rather drastic and intrusive form of discovery has never been permitted simply by a showing that someone's medical condition is 'relevant to the subject matter.' Hence, this introductory provision [to C.C.P. 2032] differs from its counterpart in each of the other discovery tools in that it does not" refer to the scope of discovery set forth in C.C.P. 2017 (supra, §9). (Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2032(a), in 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C.)

(3) Blood Examinations. The blood group of the person to be examined is among the physical conditions subject to examination, as long as it is in controversy. Nothing in C.C.P. 2032 affects tests under the Uniform Act on Blood Tests

To Determine Paternity (Family C. 7550 et seq., 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Demonstrative, Experimental, and Scientific Evidence, §69). (C.C.P. 2032(a); see 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §8.4; 8A Am.Jur. P.P. Forms (1996 ed.), Depositions and Discovery §751 et seq.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Evolution of Discovery Method. See 34 U.S.F. L. Rev. 295 [implications of court-ordered genetic testing under F.R. Civ. P., Rule 35].

(2) Controversy Requirement. C.C.P. 2017, on the scope of discovery, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2017.010 in 2004 without substantive change.

The portion of C.C.P. 2032(a) authorizing mental and physical examinations was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.020(a) in 2004 without substantive change.

See C.E.B., 2 Civil Discovery Practice 4th, Chap. 10; Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, Chap. 8; Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2032(a), in Hogan, 2 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, Appendix D.(3) Blood Examinations. The portion of C.C.P. 2032(a) providing that tests under the Uniform Act on Blood Tests To Determine Paternity are unaffected was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.010(a) in 2004 without substantive change.

See Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §8.4; 8A Am.Jur. P.P. Forms (2004 ed.), Depositions and Discovery, Form 576 et seq. West's Key Number Digest, Pretrial Procedure k.451 et seq.

V. PHYSICAL OR MENTAL EXAMINATION

A. Scope of Statute.

2. Potential Examinees.

[§ 141] Potential Examinees.

California's prior case law only went so far as to recognize the right of compulsory examination of a party, and the former federal rule was likewise limited. The discovery statutes expanded the list of potential examinees: a party, the agent of a party, or a natural person in the custody or legal control of a party may be examined under C.C.P. 2032. (C.C.P. 2032(a).) (See Schlagenhauf v. Holder (1964) 379 U.S. 104, 85 S.Ct. 234, 240, 13 L.Ed.2d 152, 161 [examination of defendant]; Harabedian v. Superior Court (1961) 195 C.A.2d 26, 31, 15 C.R. 420 [same]; but see William M. v. Superior Court (1990) 225 C.A.3d 447, 451, 275 C.R. 103 [order compelling putative paternal grandparents to submit to blood test in paternity action was improper; their blood group was not in dispute, and they were not proper parties to action]; 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §8.2.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

C.C.P. 2032(a), specifying who may be examined, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.020(a) in 2004 without substantive change.

CHAPTER X - Discovery

V. PHYSICAL OR MENTAL EXAMINATION

A. Scope of Statute.

3. No Right to Autopsy.

[§ 142] No Right to Autopsy.

In Holm v. Superior Court (1986) 187 C.A.3d 1241, 232 C.R. 432, disinherited grandchildren of a testator filed a petition to revoke probate, contesting the will on the grounds of lack of testamentary capacity. They then applied for "an order allowing partial autopsy and analysis," treated by the parties and probate court as a discovery matter. The application sought leave to exhume the corpse, so that medical examiners retained by the applicants could perform an autopsy on the brain to determine whether the decedent had suffered from "Alzheimer's Disease" or some other organic brain disorder. They offered declarations, documentary evidence and testimony from both lay and expert medical witnesses, which showed that the death certificate listed "dementia" as one of the causes of death; that the decedent's behavior over a period of years cast doubt on his mental faculties; and that pathologists were of the opinion that it might be possible to determine whether decedent was suffering at the time of death from a condition that would affect his cognitive abilities. The probate court issued the requested order, and the executors sought mandamus. Held, writ granted.

(a) Statements in a few criminal cases imply that defendants may have a right to conduct an independent examination of a body. But criminal discovery in California is a product of the common law, while civil discovery since 1957 has been statutory; and no statute authorizes a trial court in a civil proceeding to direct the disinterment or autopsy of human remains for the purpose of discovery. (187 C.A.3d 1245.)

(b) The "inherent" authority to order discovery (see Johnston v. Southern Pac. Co. (1907) 150 C. 535, 89 P. 348, supra, §140) was recognized before the 1957 adoption of the discovery statutes. Recent cases make it clear that, in the area of civil discovery, the judiciary has no power to create or sanction types or methods of discovery not based on a reasonable interpretation of statutory provisions. (187 C.A.3d 1247.)

(c) C.C.P. 2032, permitting the trial court to compel a party or a "person" under the legal control of a party to submit to a physical or mental examination, is inapplicable. The words "party" or "person" cannot be construed to include the remains of a deceased person. (187 C.A.3d 1248.)

(d) Decisions from other jurisdictions cited as authority for a court-ordered autopsy are either criminal cases or cases relying on a common law or inherent power of courts in civil proceedings, and are not persuasive. (187 C.A.3d 1248.) (See Walsh v. Caidin (1991) 232 C.A.3d 159, 162, 283 C.R. 326 [no right to autopsy for purposes of discovery in civil action; citing Holm v. Superior Court].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

C.C.P. 2032, providing that a party or person may be examined, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.020(a) in 2004 without substantive change.

CHAPTER X - Discovery

V. PHYSICAL OR MENTAL EXAMINATION

B. Physical Examination of Personal Injury Plaintiff.

1. Leave of Court Not Required.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 143

[§ 143] Leave of Court Not Required.

(1) General Rule. When a plaintiff or cross-complainant seeks recovery for personal injuries, the defendant or cross-defendant may demand, without leave of court, one physical examination of the plaintiff. However, the examination must not include a diagnostic test or procedure that is painful, protracted, or intrusive, and it must be conducted within 75 miles of the examinee's residence. (C.C.P. 2032(c)(1), 2032(c)(2); see C.E.B., Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §10.28 et seq.; 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §8.3.)

(2) Rationale. C.C.P. 2032(c) had no counterpart in former C.C.P. 2032, which required all forms of discovery by medical examination to be conducted under a court order, unless otherwise stipulated. "In practice this discovery method is most frequently employed to obtain a form of medical examination that a court would authorize almost as a matter of course, namely, an (1) initial (2) routine (3) physical examination of a (4) personal injury plaintiff (5) at a site near the examinee's home. Indeed, it is likely that the vast majority of such examinations are arranged by stipulation. By permitting initiation by demand instead of motion in the situation where this discovery device would most often be utilized, this provision makes this method partially self-executing, in that the burden of seeking intervention is shifted from the one desiring such an examination to the one resisting it." (Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2032(c), in 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C.)

(3) Permissible Examination. The phrase "painful, protracted, or intrusive" was construed in Abex Corp. v. Superior Court (1989) 209 C.A.3d 755, 257 C.R. 498. Plaintiff sought recovery for injuries allegedly caused by asbestos-containing products produced by defendants. Plaintiff's medical expert concluded that several small "corns" scattered over the palmar surfaces of plaintiff's hands indicated the presence of asbestos skin disease. Plaintiff was subsequently examined by defendants' expert, a dermatologist, who stated that the lesions appeared to be ordinary viral warts, and that plaintiff told him that he "scrapes them off with a pocket knife" when they get particularly thickened. Plaintiff refused to permit a biopsy of the lesions, however, which would have permitted a definitive diagnosis, on the grounds that the procedure would be painful and intrusive. Held, plaintiff must submit to the biopsy. "The uncontradicted medical evidence is that the procedure will involve little pain or danger. Any procedure involving a local anesthetic arguably will produce some discomfort but given the fact that real party scrapes the warts off himself with a pocket knife, it strains credulity past the breaking point to believe this procedure qualifies as one that is 'painful, protracted, or intrusive' within the meaning of the discovery legislation." (209 C.A.3d 758.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) General Rule. C.C.P. 2032(c)(1), 2032(c)(2), allowing a defendant or cross-defendant to demand one physical examination without leave of court, were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.220(a) in 2004 without substantive change.

See C.E.B., 2 Civil Discovery Practice 4th, §10.30 et seq.; Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §8.3.

(2) Rationale. C.C.P. 2032(c), authorizing physical examinations, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.220 in 2004 without substantive change.

See Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2032(c), in Hogan, 2 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, Appendix D.

CHAPTER X - Discovery

V. PHYSICAL OR MENTAL EXAMINATION B. Physical Examination of Personal Injury Plaintiff. 2. Procedure for Obtaining Examination.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 144

[§ 144] Procedure for Obtaining Examination.

(1) Demand. The demand is without leave of court and may be made after the defendant making the demand has been served or has appeared, whichever occurs first. The demand must specify the time, place, manner, conditions, scope, and nature of the examination and the identity and any specialty of the examiner. (C.C.P. 2032(c)(2); see Cal. Civil Practice, 2 Procedure, §13:183; on conduct of examination, see infra, §148 et seq.) Copies of the demand are served on the plaintiff and all parties who have appeared. (C.C.P. 2032(c)(4).) The original is not filed with the court, but is retained by the defendant for 6 months after final disposition of the action. It may then be destroyed unless the court, on motion and for good cause, orders preservation for a longer period. (C.C.P. 2032(c)(8).)

(2) Response. The plaintiff must respond in writing, stating that he or she will (a) comply as demanded, (b) comply according to specified modifications, or (c) refuse to comply for specified reasons. Unless the court, on motion, has shortened or extended the time to respond, the plaintiff must serve the original response on the demanding party and copies on all other parties who have appeared within 20 days after service of the demand. (C.C.P. 2032(c)(5); see Cal. Civil Practice, 2 Procedure, §13:184.)

(3) Failure To Respond to Demand. If a plaintiff to whom a demand for a physical examination has been directed fails to serve a timely response to it, the plaintiff waives any objection to the demand. However, on motion, the court may relieve the plaintiff from this waiver if the court determines that the plaintiff has subsequently served a response "in substantial compliance with" C.C.P. 2032(c)(5), supra, and that "failure to serve a timely response was the result of mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect." (C.C.P. 2032(c)(6).)

The defendant may move for an order compelling response and compliance with the demand for physical examination. The court must impose a monetary sanction under C.C.P. 2023 (infra, §252) against a party, person, or attorney who unsuccessfully makes or opposes the motion. However, the sanctions may be avoided if the court finds that the one subject to the sanction acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make imposing the sanction unjust. If the plaintiff fails to obey an order compelling a response and compliance, the court may enforce the order through the monetary and more severe sanctions available under C.C.P. 2023 (infra, §252 et seq.). (C.C.P. 2032(c)(6).)

(4) Modification or Refusal To Comply With Demand. If the plaintiff responds by stating that he or she refuses to comply with the demand, or that compliance will be in accordance with certain modifications, the defendant may deem the modified consent or refusal unwarranted and may move for an order compelling compliance with the demand. The motion must be accompanied by a declaration showing a reasonable and good faith attempt at an informal resolution of each issue presented. (C.C.P. 2032(c)(7); on monetary sanctions for failure to attempt informal resolution, see infra, §252.)

The court must impose a monetary sanction under C.C.P. 2023 (infra, §252) against a party, person, or attorney who unsuccessfully makes or opposes the motion. However, the sanctions may be avoided if the court finds that the one subject to the sanction acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make imposing the sanction unjust. (C.C.P. 2032(c)(7).) If the court grants the motion and the plaintiff then fails to submit to the examination, the court may impose monetary, issue, evidence, or terminating sanctions under C.C.P. 2023. (C.C.P. 2032(f); on various sanctions, see infra, §252 et seq.)

(5) Substitution of Other Procedures. The physical examination of a personal injury plaintiff may be arranged and carried out under a written agreement of the parties, in lieu of the procedures and restrictions specified in C.C.P. 2032(c). (C.C.P. 2032(e).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Demand. C.C.P. 2032(c)(2), specifying when the demand may be made and what it must include, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.220(b), (c) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2032(c)(4), on service of copies of the demand, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.220(e) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2032(c)(8), on retention of the original demand, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.260 in 2004 without substantive change.

(2) Response. C.C.P. 2032(c)(5), on the contents and service of the response, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.230 in 2004 without substantive change.

(3) Failure To Respond to Demand. C.C.P. 2023, on sanctions authorized for discovery abuses, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2032(c)(5), on requirements regarding the response, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.230 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2032(c)(6), on failure to serve a timely response, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.240 in 2004 without substantive change. (4) Modification or Refusal To Comply With Demand. C.C.P. 2023, on sanctions authorized for discovery abuses, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2032(c)(7), on the plaintiff's refusal to comply or request for modification, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.250 in 2004 without substantive change.

(5) Substitution of Other Procedures. C.C.P. 2032(c), on the procedures and restrictions applicable to physical examinations, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.210 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2032(e), on agreement of the parties to vary the applicable procedures, was repealed in 2004. C.C.P. 2016.030, added in 2004, allows the parties to modify, by written stipulation, any of the procedures applicable to any of the permissible methods of discovery. (See Supp., supra, §27.)

C. Other Physical or Mental Examinations.

1. Agreement or Leave of Court Required.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 145

[§ 145] Agreement or Leave of Court Required.

(1) Leave of Court. If a party wants to obtain discovery by a physical examination other than the type described in C.C.P. 2032(c) (supra, §143), or by a mental examination, the party must obtain leave of court. The motion for the examination must specify the time, place, manner, conditions, scope, and nature of the examination and the identity and any specialty of the examiner. It must be accompanied by a declaration showing a reasonable and good faith attempt to arrange an examination by agreement under C.C.P. 2032(e) (infra, this section). Notice of the motion must be served on the person to be examined and on all parties who have appeared in the action. (C.C.P. 2032(d); see C.E.B., 2 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §10.38 et seq.; Cal. Civil Practice, 2 Procedure, §13:185 et seq.; 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §8.3; 8A Am.Jur. P.P. Forms (1996 ed.), Depositions and Discovery §707 et seq.)

(2) Agreement of Parties. A physical or mental examination may be arranged and carried out under a written agreement of the parties, in lieu of the procedures and restrictions specified in C.C.P. 2032(d), supra. (C.C.P. 2032(e).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Leave of Court. C.C.P. 2032(c), on types of physical examination for which leave is not required, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.210 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2032(d), on the motion procedure where leave of the court is required, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.310 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

V. PHYSICAL OR MENTAL EXAMINATION

C. Other Physical or Mental Examinations.

2. Required Showing.

[§ 146] Required Showing.

(1) Showing of Good Cause. A motion for a physical or mental examination may be granted only for good cause shown. (C.C.P. 2032(d); see Vinson v. Superior Court (1987) 43 C.3d 833, 840, 239 C.R. 292, 740 P.2d 404, infra, §153 [good cause shown in sexual harassment action where plaintiff alleged that she suffered diminished self-esteem, reduced motivation, sleeplessness, loss of appetite, fear, lessened ability to help others, loss of social contacts, anxiety, mental anguish, loss of reputation, and severe emotional distress].)

(2) Showing of Exceptional Circumstances. A mental examination of a person who is seeking recovery for personal injuries requires a showing of exceptional circumstances, if the person seeking recovery stipulates that (a) he or she is not claiming mental and emotional distress over and above that usually associated with the physical injuries claimed and (b) no expert testimony regarding this usual mental and emotional distress will be presented at trial to support the damages claim. (C.C.P. 2032(d).) "[T]his provision prevents a defendant from using a claim for the normal mental distress connected with a party's physical injury as the springboard for the wide-ranging invasion of privacy that a mental examination usually entails." (Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2032(d), in 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C.)

V. PHYSICAL OR MENTAL EXAMINATION

D. Conduct of Examination.

1. Potential Examiners.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 148

[§ 148] Potential Examiners.

(1) Physical Examination. Only a licensed physician or other appropriate licensed health care practitioner may perform a physical examination. (C.C.P. 2032(b).)

(2) Mental Examination. Only a licensed physician, or a licensed clinical psychologist who holds a doctoral degree in psychology and has had at least 5 years of postgraduate experience in the diagnosis of emotional and mental disorders, may perform a mental examination. (C.C.P. 2032(b).) (See 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §8.9.)

(3) Selection of Examiner by Party. The defendant selects the physician or other health care practitioner who will conduct the physical examination of a personal injury plaintiff under C.C.P. 2032(c), and specifies the physician's identity and specialty, if any, in the demand (see supra, §144). (C.C.P. 2032(c)(2).) Similarly, a party who moves for a physical or mental examination under C.C.P. 2032(d) (supra, §145) specifies the identity and specialty of the person who will perform the examination in the motion, and the court does the same in its order granting the motion. (C.C.P. 2032(d); see Mercury Cas. Co. v. Superior Court (1986) 179 C.A.3d 1027, 1033, 225 C.R. 100 [personal injury case subject to former C.C.P. 2032; "although the court may appoint any physician it chooses to conduct the examination, as a practical matter the court almost always will appoint the physician requested by the moving party"]; 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §8.10.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Physical Examination. The portion of C.C.P. 2032(b) regarding who may perform a physical examination was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.020(b) in 2004 without substantive change.

(2) Mental Examination. The portion of C.C.P. 2032(b) regarding who may perform a mental examination was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.020(c) in 2004 without substantive change.

See Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §8.9.

(3) Selection of Examiner by Party. C.C.P. 2032(c), on the physical examination of personal injury plaintiffs, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.210 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change. C.C.P. 2032(c)(2), on specification of the physician's identity and specialty, became C.C.P. 2032.220(c).

C.C.P. 2032(d), on examinations other than physical examinations of personal injury plaintiffs, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.310 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change. The portion of C.C.P. 2032(c)(2) requiring specification of the examiner's identity and specialty became C.C.P. 2032.310(b).

D. Conduct of Examination.

2. Time and Place of Examination.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 149

[§ 149] Time and Place of Examination.

(1) Personal Injury Plaintiff. The physical examination of a personal injury plaintiff under C.C.P. 2032(c) (supra, §143) must be conducted within 75 miles of the plaintiff's residence. (C.C.P. 2032(c)(2).) Unless the court shortens the time on motion of the demanding party, the examination may not take place until at least 30 days after service of the demand. (C.C.P. 2032(c)(3).)

(2) Other Physical and Mental Examinations. The motion for an examination under C.C.P. 2032(d) must specify the time and place of the examination. If the place of examination is more than 75 miles from the residence of the examined person, the court must determine that there is good cause for the travel involved and the moving party must advance reasonable travel expenses. (C.C.P. 2032(d); 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §§8.11, 8.12.) C.C.P. 2032(d) does not address the timing of the court-ordered examination, but such examinations are subject to the discovery deadline set forth in C.C.P. 2024 (supra, §23).

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Personal Injury Plaintiff. C.C.P. 2032(c), on the physical examination of personal injury plaintiffs, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.210 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change. C.C.P. 2032(c)(2), requiring the examination to take place at a location within 75 miles of the examinee's residence, became C.C.P. 2032.220(a)(2). C.C.P. 2032(c)(3), on the scheduling of the examination, became C.C.P. 2032.220(d).

(2) Other Physical and Mental Examinations. C.C.P. 2024, setting discovery time limits, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2024.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2032(d), on examinations other than physical examinations of personal injury plaintiffs, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.310 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change. The portion of C.C.P. 2032(d) regarding permission to hold the examination more than 75 miles from the examinee's residence became C.C.P. 2032.320(e).

CHAPTER X - Discovery

V. PHYSICAL OR MENTAL EXAMINATION

D. Conduct of Examination.

3. Who May Attend Examination.

b. Mental Examination.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 151

[§ 151] Mental Examination.

(1) Cases Prohibiting Observers. In Durst v. Superior Court (1963) 222 C.A.2d 447, 35 C.R. 143, the court held that a psychiatric examination should be free from the distraction of other persons present. (222 C.A.2d 452.)

The Durst holding was further extended in Whitfield v. Superior Court (1966) 246 C.A.2d 81, 54 C.R. 505. Plaintiff, suing for personal injuries sustained in a fall of a building, was under psychiatric treatment for trauma occasioned by the accident. Defendants moved for an examination by their psychiatrist. The judge granted the motion and denied plaintiff's request for presence of her attorney and a reporter. Held, no abuse of discretion. The fact that, unlike Durst, the doctor was not court-appointed, was not significant; the important factor, as Durst pointed out, is an atmosphere conducive to freedom of expression. And it should be assumed that the psychiatrist selected by defendants would make an examination "which is at least unbiased and objective in order that his testimony, if offered, will convince the jury of petitioner's actual mental condition." (246 C.A.2d 86.)

Whitfield was followed in Edwards v. Superior Court (1976) 16 C.3d 905, 130 C.R. 14, 549 P.2d 846.

(a) Counsel's presence is unnecessary to protect the examinee from "improper" questions. "The analyst in a psychiatric examination seeks by careful direction of areas of inquiry to probe, possibly very deeply, into the psyche, measuring stress, seeking origins, tracing aberrations, and attempting to form a professional judgment or interpretation of the examinee's mental condition. Given such techniques and purposes we do not think that an attorney, no matter how well intentioned, can fairly and objectively monitor such an examination. Psychiatry is a discipline requiring highly specialized skills. Further, while properly objecting to a question on legal grounds, counsel does not necessarily possess the ability to define the psychiatric relevance of elicited answers. Many questions which would be legally objectionable, if posed in a courtroom, might be very relevant in the formulation of a sound psychiatric judgment. Rather than encourage a procedure which would permit counsel to interject his own arguments and objections into the examination, we believe other procedural safeguards adequately protect plaintiff's legitimate interests." (16 C.3d 911.)

(c) Counsel's presence is not required to assure accuracy in reporting the examination. "[A] trial court might reasonably conclude that if the examinee knows his statements are being recorded verbatim, he will react defensively, thereby preventing the free, open and objective communication essential to an effective psychiatric examination. Conflicts regarding the questions and answers elicited at the examination can be resolved through existing procedural methods." (16 C.3d 912.)

(d) Many procedural devices are available to protect a plaintiff. "Examinee's counsel, by way of pretrial discovery, has complete access to all of the notes and records of the examiner. The examiner may be deposed. Counsel may exhaustively test and challenge the examiner's conclusions, carefully exploring the reasons therefor, including the specific questions and answers exchanged between examiner and examinee. During the deposition counsel may have the benefit of his own psychiatric expert at his side to prompt him into every conceivable area of legitimate inquiry. At trial, counsel may by appropriate voir dire and motions exclude or limit statements made by his client. He may introduce contrary expert evidence. By cross-examination he may subject the examiner to a searching and probing inquiry, again with the help of counsel's professional advisor. Plaintiff neither lacks, nor should lack, procedural safeguards. However, at the sensitive point of the psychiatric examination itself, given the need for a special and private rapport between examiner and examinee, we think the purposes of the examination are best served by its conduct on a one-to-one basis." (16 C.3d 912.)

(e) Because plaintiff's own psychiatrist had months, if not years, to analyze and treat plaintiff, fundamental fairness requires a similar unrestricted professional exposure, for a brief period, to the other side. (16 C.3d 912.)

(f) The trial court had broad discretion to determine whether good cause existed for refusing to accept the examining party's choice of a psychiatrist. Plaintiff's general objections about her negative reaction to the defense psychiatrist were insufficient to disqualify him as a matter of law, and the trial court acted within its discretion in refusing to prohibit the designated psychiatrist from examining her. (16 C.3d 913.) (See 65 Cal. L. Rev. 267 [Edwards]; 17 Santa Clara L. Rev. 224 [same].)

In Vinson v. Superior Court (1987) 43 C.3d 833, 239 C.R. 292, 740 P.2d 404, infra, §153, a sexual harassment case, the court approved Edwards, but noted that "trial courts retain the power to permit the presence of counsel or to take other prophylactic measures when needed." (43 C.3d 846.)

(2) Statute Retains Case Law. Nothing in the Civil Discovery Act of 1986 alters, amends, or affects existing case law with respect to the presence of the examinee's attorney or other persons during a mental examination. The statute does, however, permit the examination to be audiotaped. (C.C.P. 2032(g)(2); see 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §8.16; on recording, see infra, §154.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Cases Prohibiting Observers. See Golfand Entertainment Centers v. Superior Court (2003) 108 C.A.4th 739, 748, 133 C.R.2d 828 [in personal injury action by boy who suffered brain damage from near-drowning incident, and by boy's mother, trial judge, in ordering boy to submit to mental examination, erred in permitting presence of plaintiffs' counsel; there was no evidence that counsel's presence was necessary to protect plaintiffs' rights and thus no justification for exception to standard rule barring counsel]. (2) Statute Retains Case Law. C.C.P. 2032(g)(2), on audiotaping of the examination, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.530 in 2004 without substantive change.

V. PHYSICAL OR MENTAL EXAMINATION

D. Conduct of Examination.

4. Scope of Examination.

a. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 152

[§ 152] In General.

(1) Examination of Personal Injury Plaintiff. The physical examination of a personal injury plaintiff under C.C.P. 2032(c) cannot include any diagnostic test or procedure that is painful, protracted, or intrusive (see supra, §143). With that limitation, the defendant's demand for an examination specifies the manner, conditions, scope, and nature of the examination. (C.C.P. 2032(c)(2).)

(2) Other Physical or Mental Examinations. The court's order under C.C.P. 2032(d) must specify the manner, diagnostic tests and procedures, conditions, scope, and nature of the examination. (C.C.P. 2032(d).)

(3) Suspension of Examination. The observer of a physical examination conducted under C.C.P. 2032 may suspend the examination if, in the observer's judgment, the examiner becomes abusive to the examinee or undertakes to engage in unauthorized diagnostic tests and procedures. The party being examined or producing the examinee may then move for a protective order (see infra, §241). (C.C.P. 2032(g)(1).) (On monetary sanctions for unsuccessfully making or opposing motion for protective order, see infra, §252.)

(4) Prohibition Against Additional X-rays. If the person being examined submits or authorizes access to X-rays of an area of the body for the examiner's inspection, the examiner may not take additional X-rays of that area without consent or a court order for good cause. (C.C.P. 2032(g)(1).) (See 8A Am.Jur. P.P. Forms (1996 ed.), Depositions and Discovery §731 et seq.)

(5) Number of Mental Examinations. Despite references to "a" mental examination, C.C.P. 2032 places no limit on the number of examinations that may, on a showing of good cause, be ordered. (Shapira v. Superior Court (1990) 224 C.A.3d 1249, 1254, 274 C.R. 516 [limiting defendant to one examination of plaintiff was error, where neurologist and neuropsychologist testified that additional psychiatric examination was needed].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Examination of Personal Injury Plaintiff. C.C.P. 2032(c), on the physical examination of personal injury plaintiffs, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.210 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change. C.C.P. 2032(c)(2), requiring specification of the time, place, manner, conditions, scope, and nature of the examination, became C.C.P. 2032.220(c).

(2) Other Physical or Mental Examinations. C.C.P. 2032(d), requiring specification of the time, place, manner, conditions, scope, and nature of an examination other than a physical examination of a personal injury plaintiff, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.320(d) in 2004 without substantive change.

See Golfland Entertainment Centers v. Superior Court (2003) 108 C.A.4th 739, 745, 133 C.R.2d 828 [in personal injury action arising from incident in which boy nearly drowned and suffered brain damage, trial judge, in ordering boy to submit to mental examination, erred in prohibiting doctor from eliciting narrative responses; although judge wished to avoid compelling boy to give repetitive responses to questions that had already been asked, order would preclude questions that were necessary to formation of opinion about boy's condition]; Carpenter v. Superior Court (2006) 141 C.A.4th 249, 259, 271, 45 C.R.3d 821 [in personal injury action alleging brain damage, trial judge's order requiring plaintiff to submit to "standardized written psychological tests" violated requirement of C.C.P. 2032.320(d) that order specify diagnostic tests and procedures to be used; trial judge further erred in ruling that it would violate copyright laws to allow plaintiff to obtain copy of testing materials and his written answers].

(3) Suspension of Examination. The portion of C.C.P. 2032(g)(1) providing for suspension of the examination was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.510(d) in 2004 without substantive change.

(4) Prohibition Against Additional X-rays. The portion of C.C.P. 2032(g)(1) prohibiting additional X-rays without consent of the examinee or a court order was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.520 in 2004 without substantive change.

(5) Number of Mental Examinations. C.C.P. 2032, authorizing mental and physical examinations, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

CHAPTER X - Discovery

V. PHYSICAL OR MENTAL EXAMINATION

D. Conduct of Examination.

4. Scope of Examination.

b. Privacy Limitations.

[§ 153] Privacy Limitations.

In Vinson v. Superior Court (1987) 43 C.3d 833, 239 C.R. 292, 740 P.2d 404, plaintiff, a 59-year-old widow, sued defendant district and G, its employment director, for sexual harassment and intentional infliction of emotional distress. The complaint alleged that G had suggested sexual relations as a condition of favorable consideration of her employment application; that she refused G's advances; that she was later hired by another department of the district's program; and that, upon learning of her employment, G had her transferred and then terminated. Defendants moved for an order compelling a psychiatric examination to test the true extent of her injuries and to measure her ability to function in the workplace. Plaintiff opposed the motion as a violation of her right of privacy and, in the alternative, requested a protective order prohibiting any probing by the examiner into her sexual history and allowing her attorney to attend the examination to assure compliance with the order. The trial court granted defendant's motion without conditions, and the Court of Appeal denied plaintiff's petition for a writ. Held, reversed.

(a) Plaintiff urged that, if an examination is ordered, probing into her sexual history, habits or practices would intrude upon her constitutional right of privacy, and would tend to contravene the state's strong interest in eradicating sexual harassment by means of private suits for damages. Defendants answered that plaintiff waived her right to privacy for purposes of the present suit because she claimed emotional and mental damages. But the mere initiation of a sexual harassment suit, even with the extreme emotional damage alleged here, does not constitute a waiver of all privacy interests. As pointed out in Britt v. Superior Court (1978) 20 C.3d 844, 143 C.R. 695, 574 P.2d 766, supra, §113, an implicit waiver of a party's constitutional rights encompasses only discovery directly relevant to the plaintiff's claim and essential to the fair resolution of the lawsuit. (43 C.3d 842.)

(b) "Plaintiff's present mental and emotional condition is directly relevant to her claim and essential to a fair resolution of her suit; she has waived her right to privacy in this respect by alleging continuing mental ailments. But she has not, merely by initiating this suit for sexual harassment and emotional distress, impliedly waived her right to privacy in respect to her sexual history and practices. Defendants fail to explain why probing into this area is directly relevant to her claim and essential to its fair resolution. Plaintiff does not contend the alleged acts were detrimental to her present sexuality. Her sexual history is even less relevant to her claim. We conclude that she has not waived her right to sexual privacy." (43 C.3d 842.)

(c) Former C.C.P. 2036.1, substantially the same as C.C.P. 2017(d) (see supra, §13), required a showing of good cause which called for a balancing of interests; and the Legislature in enacting the measure pointed to the danger of discouraging complaints by subjecting the complainants to the risk of further intrusions into their personal lives in discovery or at trial. (43 C.3d 843.) Defendants here have not established specific facts justifying inquiry into plaintiff's zone of sexual privacy; they have merely made sweeping assertions regarding the need for wide latitude in the examination, and these are not sufficient to establish good cause. (43 C.3d 843.)

"We anticipate that in the majority of sexual harassment suits, a separate weighing of privacy against discovery will not be necessary. It should normally suffice for the court, in ruling on whether good cause exists for probing into the intimate life of a victim of sexual harassment, sexual battery, or sexual assault, to evaluate the showing of good cause in light of legislative purpose in enacting [former C.C.P. 2036.1, now C.C.P. 2017(d)] and the plaintiff's constitutional right to privacy." (43 C.3d 844.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

C.C.P. 2017(d), on the discovery of plaintiff's sexual history, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2017.220 in 2004 without substantive change.

V. PHYSICAL OR MENTAL EXAMINATION

E. Reports of Examination.

1. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 155

[§ 155] In General.

(1) Reports of Examining Party. A party who submits to an examination or produces another for examination may demand in writing (a) "a detailed written report setting out the history, examinations, findings, including the results of all tests made, diagnoses, prognoses, and conclusions of the examiner," and (b) reports of earlier examinations of the same condition of the same person being examined by that or another examiner. The reports must be delivered within the earlier of (a) 15 days of trial, or (b) 30 days after service of the demand. (C.C.P. 2032(h); see Kennedy v. Superior Court (1998) 64 C.A.4th 674, 678, 75 C.R.2d 373 [examined party is entitled, on request, to detailed report containing specified information, even if examining physician did not prepare one]; Cal. Civil Practice, 2 Procedure, §13:191; 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §8.18.)

(2) Reports of Examined Party and Identity of Examiners. The party receiving a demand for reports is entitled to receive in exchange "any existing written report of any examination of the same condition by any other physician, psychologist, or licensed health care practitioner." The party is also entitled to "receive promptly any later report of any previous or subsequent examination of the same condition, by any physician, psychologist, or licensed health care practitioner." (C.C.P. 2032(j); see 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §8.19.)

(3) Failure To Comply. If the reports of the examining party are not timely delivered, the demanding party may move to compel delivery. The motion must be accompanied by a declaration showing a reasonable and good faith attempt at an informal resolution of each issue presented by the motion. (C.C.P. 2032(h); on monetary sanctions for failure to attempt informal resolution, see infra, §252.) Similar provisions apply where the examined party fails to supply reports. (C.C.P. 2032(j); see 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §§8.18, 8.20.)

The court must impose a monetary sanction under C.C.P. 2032 (infra, §252) against a party, person, or attorney who unsuccessfully makes or opposes a motion to compel delivery of medical reports. However, the sanctions may be avoided if the court finds that the one subject to the sanction acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make imposing the sanction unjust. (C.C.P. 2032(h), (j).)

Monetary or more severe sanctions may be imposed for failure to comply with an order to deliver demanded medical reports under C.C.P. 2032(h) or to deliver additional medical reports under C.C.P. 2032(j). The court must exclude at trial the testimony of (a) an examiner who fails to submit an examination report after having been ordered to do so under C.C.P. 2032(h), and (b) a health care practitioner whose report has not been provided as required by C.C.P. 2032(j). (C.C.P. 2032(h), (j).)

(4) No Disclosure of Certification Expert. Nothing in C.C.P. 2032 requires the disclosure of the identity of an expert consulted by an attorney in order to make the certification required in an action for professional negligence under C.C.P. 411.30 and 411.35 (3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §204). (C.C.P. 2032(k).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Reports of Examining Party. C.C.P. 2032(h), on the examined party's demand for reports, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.610 in 2004 without substantive change.

See Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §8.18.(2) Reports of Examined Party and Identity of Examiners. C.C.P. 2032(j), on the right of a party receiving a demand for reports to receive reports from the demanding party in exchange, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.640 in 2004 without substantive change.

See Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §8.19.

(3) Failure To Comply. C.C.P. 2023, on sanctions authorized for discovery abuses, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

Those portions of C.C.P. 2032(h), (j) authorizing sanctions in connection with demands for reports were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.620 and 2032.650 in 2004 without substantive change.

See Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §§8.18, 8.20.

(4) No Disclosure of Certification Expert. C.C.P. 2032(k), on identity of the expert consulted by an attorney for purposes of the certification required in an action for professional negligence against an architect, engineer, or land surveyor, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.010(b) in 2004 without substantive change.

V. PHYSICAL OR MENTAL EXAMINATION

E. Reports of Examination.

2. Waiver of Privileges.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 156

[§ 156] Waiver of Privileges.

By demanding and obtaining the report of an examination under C.C.P. 2032(h) (supra, §155), or by taking the deposition of the examiner, other than under C.C.P. 2034(i) (infra, §188), the examinee or the party who produces the examinee waives the examinee's privilege, if any, "regarding reports and writings, as well as the testimony of every other physician, psychologist, or licensed health care practitioner who has examined or may thereafter examine the party or other examinee in respect of the same physical or mental condition." The waiver applies to the pending action and to another action involving the same controversy. The waiver also applies to any protection afforded by the work product doctrine. (C.C.P. 2032(i); see Queen of Angels Hosp. v. Superior Court (1976) 57 C.A.3d 370, 374, 375, 129 C.R. 282 [plaintiff, who had received examination report of defendant's physician and had deposed him, waived work product privilege with regard to report of plaintiff's consulting expert]; Kennedy v. Superior Court (1998) 64 C.A.4th 674, 678, 679, 75 C.R.2d 373 [examining physician may be deposed even if physician has been withdrawn as expert and redesignated "consultant"; ordinarily party may "hide" expert from deposition by this means, but when expert is also examining physician under C.C.P. 2032, specific terms of that statute, including waiver of work product protections, control]; 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §8.19.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

C.C.P. 2032(h), on demands for examination records, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.610 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2032(i), on the waiver of privileges effected by a demand for examination records, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.630 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2034(i), on the deposition of expert witnesses, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.410 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

CHAPTER X - Discovery

VI. REQUESTS FOR ADMISSION

A. Statutory Authority.

[§ 157] Statutory Authority.

(1) General Rule. A party may obtain discovery by a written request that another party admit the genuineness of specified documents or the truth of specified matters of fact, opinion relating to fact, or application of law to fact. (C.C.P. 2033(a).) (See C.E.B., 2 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, Chap. 9; 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Chap. 9; BAJI (8th ed.), No. 2.08; C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Discovery, Chap. 14; Overly on Electronic Evidence in California §3:09; Cal. Civil Practice, 2 Procedure, §13:110 et seq.; 23 Am.Jur.2d (1983 ed.), Depositions and Discovery §314 et seq.; 8A Am.Jur. P.P. Forms (1996 ed.), Depositions and Discovery §791 et seq.; 4 Am.Jur. Trials 185 [plaintiff's requests], 215 [defendant's requests]; on permissible scope of requests under modern state rules, see 42 A.L.R.4th 489.)

C.C.P. 2033(a) expressly authorizes a request for admission "embracing a matter that is clearly in controversy between the litigants. A request of this type is usually made with little or no expectation that an admission will be made; rather its purpose is to set the stage for the cost-of-proof sanction that is a unique feature of this discovery tool" (see C.C.P. 2033(o), infra, §172). (Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2033(a), in 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C.)

(2) Consideration as "Discovery Device." Before the Civil Discovery Act of 1986, numerous courts were reluctant to label a request for admissions as a discovery device. (See Fredericks v. Kontos Industries (1987) 189 C.A.3d 272, 276, 234 C.R. 395, quoting earlier version of this text ["Although the request for admissions is placed in the discovery statute, it is not a discovery device. Its objective is the same as that of the pretrial conference: To obtain admissions of uncontroverted facts learned through other discovery methods, and thereby to narrow the issues and save the time and expense of preparing for unnecessary proof"]; see also Lieb v. Superior Court (1962) 199 C.A.2d 364, 367, 18 C.R. 705 [distinguished from interrogatories]; Hillman v. Stults (1968) 263 C.A.2d 848, 885, 70 C.R. 295 ["the admission sections ... were enacted to eliminate the necessity of putting on formal proof of essentially uncontroverted facts"]; Able v. Van Der Zee (1967) 256 C.A.2d 728, 64 C.R. 481 [demurrer held properly sustained because of inconsistencies between allegations in complaint and admitted facts]; International Harvester Co. v. Superior Court (1969) 273 C.A.2d 652, 655, 78 C.R. 515 [not a discovery device]; on pretrial conference, see 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §52.)

The 1986 Act, however, refers to requests for admissions as a way to "obtain discovery" (see C.C.P. 2033(a), supra) and lists them among the discovery methods (see C.C.P. 2019(a)(5), supra, §2). This new classification does not, however, "work any change in the fundamental nature of the admission device." (1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §9.1.)

(3) Nonrequesting Party's Reliance on Admissions. Admissions may be relied on by all parties to the action. (See Swedburg v. Christiana Community Builders (1985) 175 C.A.3d 138, 143, 220 C.R. 544 [defendant entitled to rely on deemed admissions (see infra, §174) that resulted from codefendant's requests to plaintiff].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) General Rule. C.C.P. 2033(a), authorizing requests for admissions, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.010 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2033(o), on the failure to admit the genuineness of a document or truth of any matter, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.420 in 2004 without substantive change.

See CACI, No. 210 [effect of answers to requests for admissions]; C.E.B., 2 Civil Discovery Practice 4th, Chap. 9; Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, Chap. 9; Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2033(a), in Hogan, 2 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, Appendix D; 8A Am.Jur. P.P. Forms (2004 ed.), Depositions and Discovery, Form 595.(2) Consideration as "Discovery Device." See Burch v. Gombos (2000) 82 C.A.4th 352, 358, 359, 98 C.R.2d 119, citing the text.

C.C.P. 2019(a)(5), authorizing requests for admissions, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2019.010(e) in 2004 without substantive change.

See Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §9.1. West's Key Number Digest, Pretrial Procedure k.471 et seq.

CHAPTER X - Discovery

VI. REQUESTS FOR ADMISSION

B. Making Requests.

1. Restrictions on Number of Requests.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 158

[§ 158] Restrictions on Number of Requests.

(1) Limited to 35. As a general rule, a party has no right to request more than 35 admissions. If the initial set of admission requests does not exhaust the limit, the balance may be requested in subsequent sets. (C.C.P. 2033(c)(1); see 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §9.4.)

(2) Exceptions. The 35 requests limitation is subject to the following exceptions:

(a) Genuineness of documents: The number of requests for admission of the genuineness of documents is not limited "except as justice requires to protect the responding party from unwarranted annoyance, embarrassment, oppression, or undue burden and expense." (C.C.P. 2033(c)(1).)

(b) Declaration for additional discovery: Subject to the right of the responding party to seek a protective order (infra, §170), the number of requests may be increased if warranted by the complexity or quantity of the issues. If the responding party seeks a protective order on the ground that the number of requests for admission is unwarranted, the propounding party has the burden of justifying the number of requests. (C.C.P. 2033(c)(2).) A declaration for additional discovery in substantially the form set forth in C.C.P. 2033(c)(3) must be attached to each set of requests exceeding the limit. (C.C.P. 2033(c)(3); see Cal. Civil Practice, 2 Procedure, §13:130.) Unless a declaration has been made, a party need only respond to the first 35 admission requests served that do not relate to the genuineness of documents, if that party states an objection to the balance under C.C.P. 2033(f)(2) on the ground that the limit has been exceeded. (C.C.P. 2033(c)(1); on objections, see infra, §169.)

(3) Purpose of Limit. The Commission concluded that the making of voluminous requests for admission had become so widespread as to constitute a discovery abuse in many cases. By imposing the presumptive limit on the number of requests, the Commission sought to "encourage attorneys to be more thoughtful, restrained, and focused in their employment of this discovery device." (Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2033(c)(1), in 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Limited to 35. C.C.P. 2033(c)(1), on the number of requests permitted, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.030 in 2004 without substantive change.

See Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §9.4.(2) Exceptions.

(a) Genuineness of documents: The portion of C.C.P. 2033(c)(1) relating to the exception applicable to requests for admission of the genuineness of documents was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.030(c) in 2004 without substantive change.

(b) Declaration for additional discovery: C.C.P. 2033(c)(2), providing for a declaration for additional discovery, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.040(a) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2033(c)(3), setting forth the form of a declaration for additional discovery, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.050 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2033(f)(2), on objections to requested admissions, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.230 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2033(c)(1), providing that a party need only respond to the first 35 admission requests that do not relate to the genuineness of documents, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.030(b) in 2004 without substantive change.

(3) Purpose of Limit. See Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2033(c)(1), in Hogan, 2 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, Appendix D.

CHAPTER X - Discovery

VI. REQUESTS FOR ADMISSION

B. Making Requests.

2. Timing.

[§ 159] Timing.

A defendant may make requests without leave of court at any time. A plaintiff may make requests without leave of court at any time that is 10 days (5 days in unlawful detainer actions) after service of the summons on the responding party or the appearance of that party, whichever occurs first. On motion for good cause, the court may allow a plaintiff to make requests at an earlier time. (C.C.P. 2033(b).) The responding party usually has 30 days to respond. (See C.C.P. 2033(h), infra, §165.) Thus, because discovery must be completed at least 30 days before the initial trial date (see C.C.P. 2024(a), supra, §23), the request should be served at least 60 days before the initial trial date, earlier if served by mail, and even earlier to allow time for a subsequent motion to compel (see infra, §177), if necessary. (For discussion of tactical considerations for timing of service, see C.E.B., Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §9.31.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

C.C.P. 2024(a), setting the deadline for completion of discovery, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2024.020 in 2004 without substantive change.

The portion of C.C.P. 2033(b) allowing a request to be made by a defendant without leave of court at any time was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.020(a) in 2004 without substantive change. Under C.C.P. 2033.020(b), as amended in 2007, a plaintiff may make requests for admission by a party without leave of court at any time that is 10 days after service of summons on, or appearance by, that party, whichever occurs first. C.C.P. 2033.020(c), added in 2007, provides that, in an unlawful detainer action or other proceeding under C.C.P. 1159 et seq. (see 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §757), a plaintiff may make requests for admission by a party without leave of court at any time that is 5 days after service of the summons on, or appearance by, that party, whichever occurs first.

C.C.P. 2033(h), on the time for response, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.250 in 2004 without substantive change.

See C.E.B., 2 Civil Discovery Practice 4th, §9.12.

VI. REQUESTS FOR ADMISSION

B. Making Requests.

3. Form and Content.

[§ 160] Form and Content.

(1) Requirements. Each set of requests must be consecutively numbered and the first paragraph must identify the set number and the requesting and responding parties. (C.C.P. 2033(c)(4).) Each request in the set must be separately set forth and identified by letter or number (C.C.P. 2033(c)(4)), and must be "full and complete in and of itself" (C.C.P. 2033(c)(5)). Unless approved by the Judicial Council (infra, this section), a set of requests may not include a preface or instruction and a separate request may not contain subparts or a compound, conjunctive, or disjunctive request. (C.C.P. 2033(c)(5).) A specially defined term must appear in all capital letters. (C.C.P. 2033(c)(5).)

A request for admissions may not be combined with another discovery method in a single document. (C.C.P. 2033(c)(7).) If a party requests the admission of the genuineness of a document, a copy of the document must be attached and the original must be made available for inspection by the responding party. (C.C.P. 2033(c)(6)); see 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §9.3; for form, see Cal. Civil Practice, 2 Procedure, §13:129.)

(2) Judicial Council Form. In accordance with C.C.P. 2033.5 (see supra, §91), the Judicial Council has approved an official request for admission form for use in civil actions based on personal injury, property damage, wrongful death, unlawful detainer, breach of contract, fraud, or family law. (See Judicial Council Form No. FI-100.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Requirements. C.C.P. 2033(c)(4), on the numbering and identification of requests, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.060(a)-(c) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2033(c)(5), on the format of requests, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.060(d)-(f) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2033(c)(7), prohibiting the combination of discovery methods, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.060(h) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2033(c)(6), requiring the attachment of the relevant document, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.060(g) in 2004 without substantive change.

See Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §9.3.

(2) Judicial Council Form. C.C.P. 2033.5, on Judicial Council form interrogatories and requests for admissions, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.710 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

Judicial Council Form No. FI-100 was renumbered Judicial Council Form No. DISC-020 in 2006.

4. Service and Retention.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 161

[§ 161] Service and Retention.

(1) Service of Copies. Copies of the request are served on the responding party and on all parties who have appeared in the action. (C.C.P. 2033(d).)

(2) Preservation of Original. The request is not filed with the court. The requesting party retains the original request, with proof of service affixed, for 6 months after final disposition of the action. The original may then be destroyed unless the court, on motion of any party for good cause, orders preservation for a longer period. (C.C.P. 2033(j).) (See 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §9.3.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

VI. REQUESTS FOR ADMISSION

B. Making Requests.

5. No Warning Requirement.

[§ 162] No Warning Requirement.

(1) Former Law. Former C.C.P. 2033(a) required a warning to be placed at the end of a request for admissions advising the responding party that failure to comply with C.C.P. 2033 would cause "each of the matters of which an admission is requested" to be deemed admitted. The placement of this admonition was the subject of a number of decisions. (See Billings v. Edwards (1981) 120 C.A.3d 238, 246, 174 C.R. 722; Hernandez v. Temple (1983) 142 C.A.3d 286, 290, 190 C.R. 853; Hansen v. Superior Court (1983) 149 C.A.3d 823, 829, 197 C.R. 175; Barnett v. American-Calif. Med. Services (1984) 156 C.A.3d 260, 264, 202 C.R. 735; Lopez v. Superior Court (1986) 178 C.A.3d 925, 929, 223 C.R. 798; Steele v. Totah (1986) 180 C.A.3d 545, 551, 552, 225 C.R. 635; Thomas v. Makita, U.S.A. (1986) 181 C.A.3d 989, 993, 994, 995, 226 C.R. 413; Midwest Television v. Scott, Lancaster, Mills & Atha (1988) 205 C.A.3d 442, 454, 252 C.R. 573.)

(2) Present Law. No comparable provision regarding warnings was included in the 1986 Act. All requests for admission must now be answered (C.C.P. 2033(f), infra, §163) and "deemed admissions" now require a court order (C.C.P. 2033(k), infra, §174).

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Present Law. C.C.P. 2033(f), requiring that all requests for admissions be answered, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.210 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2033(k), requiring a court order for "deemed admissions," was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.280 in 2004 without substantive change.

VI. REQUESTS FOR ADMISSION

C. Responses.

1. In General.

c. Timing.

[§ 165] Timing.

(1) Time To Respond. Unless the court, on motion, extends or shortens the time for response, a response is required within 30 days, or within 5 days in unlawful detainer actions, after the request is served. In unlawful detainer actions, the responding party has at least 5 days from the date of service to respond, unless on motion of the requesting party the court has shortened the time. (C.C.P. 2033(h)); on extension of time for service by mail, see C.C.P. 2019(e); on time to respond under former statute, see Gribin Von Dyl & Associates v. Kovalsky (1986) 185 C.A.3d 653, 658, 230 C.R. 50.)

(2) Agreement To Extend Time. The parties may agree to extend the time for responding to part or all of a set of admission requests. The agreement must be confirmed in a writing that specifies the extended date. Unless it expressly provides otherwise, the agreement allows the responding party to respond by answer or objection. The responding party must give notice of the agreement to all other parties who were served with a copy of the request. (C.C.P. 2033(i).) A letter from the responding party to the demanding party, with copies to other parties who have appeared, is a sufficient written confirmation. (Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2033(i), in 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Time To Respond. C.C.P. 2019(e), on extension of time where service is by mail, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2016.050 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2033(h), on the time for response to a request for admissions, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.250 in 2004 without substantive change.

Under C.C.P. 2033.250(b), added in 2007, in an unlawful detainer action or other proceeding under C.C.P. 1159 et seq. (12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §757), the party to whom the request is directed has at least 5 days from the date of service to respond, unless, on motion of the requesting party, the court has shortened the time for response, or, on motion of the responding party, the court has extended the time for response.

(2) Agreement To Extend Time. C.C.P. 2033(i), on agreements to extend time for the response, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.260 in 2004 without substantive change.

a. Options.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 167

[§ 167] Options.

(1) Complete Answer Required. Each answer must "be as complete and straightforward as the information reasonably available to the responding party permits." (C.C.P. 2033(f)(1).)

(2) Admission, Denial, or Lack of Information. An answer must admit as much of the matter as is true, "either as expressed in the request itself or as reasonably and clearly qualified by the responding party," and deny as much of the matter as is untrue. (C.C.P. 2033(f)(1); see Holguin v. Superior Court (1972) 22 C.A.3d 812, 820, 99 C.R. 653 [wrongful death action defendants who clearly denied requests for admission could not be forced to admit any particular facts, despite plaintiffs' contention that certain matters were so unquestionably true that denials were improper].) An answer must specify as much of the matter "as to the truth of which the responding party lacks sufficient information or knowledge." Such an answer must also state that the responding party has made a reasonable inquiry concerning the matter and that "information known or readily obtainable is insufficient to enable that party to admit the matter." (C.C.P. 2033(f)(1); see 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §9.10 et seq.)

VI. REQUESTS FOR ADMISSION

C. Responses.

2. Answers.

b. Amendment or Withdrawal.

[§ 168] Amendment or Withdrawal.

(1) General Rule. A party may withdraw or amend an admission on leave of court granted after notice to all parties. Withdrawal or amendment is authorized only if the court finds that the admission was the result of mistake, inadvertence or excusable neglect and that the party requesting the admission will not be substantially prejudiced. The order may impose "just" conditions, including an order that the requesting party be permitted to pursue additional discovery on the matter and that the costs of additional discovery be borne in whole or in part by the responding party. (C.C.P. 2033(m), based on F.R. Civ. P., Rule 36 and codifying result in Jahn v. Brickey (1985) 168 C.A.3d 399, 404, 214 C.R. 119; see 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §9.18; Cal. Civil Practice, 2 Procedure, §13:139 et seq. [forms]; on relationship to provision allowing relief from waiver of objections following failure to respond, see St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1992) 2 C.A.4th 843, 3 C.R.2d 412, infra, §173 [C.C.P. 2033(m) does not control relief from consequences of total failure to respond].)

(2) Applicability to Deemed Admissions. C.C.P. 2033(m) applies to all admissions, including deemed admissions ordered under C.C.P. 2033(k) (infra, §174). (Wilcox v. Birtwhistle (1999) 21 C.4th 973, 977, 90 C.R.2d 260, 987 P.2d 727, infra, §176.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) General Rule. C.C.P. 2033(m), on withdrawal or amendment of an admission, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.300 in 2004 without substantive change.

See Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §9.18.(2) Applicability to Deemed Admissions. C.C.P. 2033(m), on withdrawal or amendment of an admission, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.300 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2033(k), on deemed admissions, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.280 in 2004 without substantive change.

(3) (New) No Duty To Update Response. Nothing in the text of C.C.P. 2033 (now C.C.P. 2033.010 et seq.) creates any ongoing duty to update responses. Indeed, the statute authorizes amending or withdrawing a response only where the court finds that the original admission was the result of mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect. (Burch v. Gombos (2000) 82 C.A.4th 352, 359, 98 C.R.2d 119 [plaintiff property owners requested admission that defendant logging company had no evidence of recreational use of road across plaintiffs' property, and defendant responded with unqualified admission that it did not; it had no duty to notify plaintiffs when later, before trial, it acquired evidence of recreational use].)

VI. REQUESTS FOR ADMISSION

C. Responses.

3. Objections.

[§ 169] Objections.

(1) Form. The specific ground for an objection must be set forth clearly in the response. If an objection is based on a claim of privilege, the particular privilege invoked must be clearly stated. If an objection is based on the work product doctrine, the claim must be expressly asserted. If only part of a request is objectionable, the remainder must be answered. (C.C.P. 2033(f)(2); see 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §9.14; Cal. Civil Practice, 2 Procedure, §13:132.)

(2) Grounds. Possible grounds for objection include the following:

(a) Excessive number of requests. If the requesting party serves more than 35 requests for admission, the responding party may respond to the first 35 and then object to the balance. (See C.C.P. 2033(c), supra, §158.)

(b) Relevancy. This objection is available, although limited. Under C.C.P. 2033(a), the scope of discovery fixed by C.C.P. 2017 (supra, §9) is applicable to requests for admissions. This provision, codifying the rule in Cembrook v. Superior Court (1961) 56 C.2d 423, 429, 15 C.R. 127, 364 P.2d 303, makes it clear that "relevance to the subject matter, and not to the issues, is the criterion." (Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2033(a), in 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C.)

(c) Conclusions or opinions. Requests for admission may embrace "opinions related to fact," the "application of law to fact," and matters in controversy. (C.C.P. 2033(a), supra, §157; see Cembrook v. Superior Court, supra, 56 C.2d 429 [interpreting predecessor statute; because requests for admission seek to eliminate need to try issues, request that calls for opinion is not necessarily objectionable; if litigant is able to make admission, he or she should do so during discovery and not during trial].) Thus, an objection to a request on the ground that it calls for an opinion is unlikely to be successful. (See 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §9.13.)

(d) Privilege or work product. Objections on these grounds must be clearly asserted. (See supra.)

(3) Review of Order Sustaining Objections. If the lower court erroneously sustains objections to a request for admissions (see infra, §248), mandamus will lie to compel setting aside the order. (See Lieb v. Superior Court (1962) 199 C.A.2d 364, 369, 18 C.R. 705.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Form. C.C.P. 2033(f)(2), on the form of objections, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.230 in 2004 without substantive change.

See Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §9.14.

(2) Grounds.

(a) Excessive number of requests. C.C.P. 2033(c), on objection to requests exceeding the limit of 35, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.030 in 2004 without substantive change.

(b) Relevancy. C.C.P. 2017, on the scope of discovery, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2017.010 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2033(a), imposing scope of discovery requirements on requests for admissions, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.010 in 2004 without substantive change.

See Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2033(a), in Hogan, 2 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, Appendix D.

(c) Conclusions or opinions. C.C.P. 2033(a), on conclusions and opinions, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.010 in 2004 without substantive change.

VI. REQUESTS FOR ADMISSION

C. Responses.

4. Motion for Protective Order.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 170

[§ 170] Motion for Protective Order.

(1) In General. When requests for admission have been made, the responding party may promptly move for a protective order. On a showing of good cause, the court may make "any order that justice requires" to protect a party, person, or organization from "unwarranted annoyance, embarrassment, or oppression, or undue burden and expense." If the court denies the motion for a protective order in whole or in part, it may order that "the responding party provide or permit the discovery against which protection was sought on terms and conditions that are just." (C.C.P. 2033(e); see Cal. Civil Practice, 2 Procedure, §13:131 [form]; 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §9.8; on monetary sanctions for unsuccessfully making or opposing motion for protective order, see infra, §252.)

(2) Attempt at Informal Resolution. The motion for a protective order must be accompanied by a declaration showing a reasonable and good faith attempt at an informal resolution of each issue presented. (C.C.P. 2033(e).) (On monetary sanctions for failure to attempt informal resolution, see infra, §252.)

(3) Permissible Orders. Under C.C.P. 2033(e), a protective order may include, but is not limited to, one or more of the following directions:

(a) That a particular request or set of requests not be answered.

(b) That, contrary to the representations made in a declaration submitted under C.C.P. 2033(c)(3) (supra, §158), the number of admission requests is unwarranted.

(c) That the time to respond to a particular request or set of requests be extended.

(d) That a trade secret or confidential information not be admitted or be admitted only in a certain way.

(e) That some or all of the answers to requests be sealed and opened only by court order.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. C.C.P. 2033(e), relating to motions for protective orders, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.080 in 2004 without substantive change.

See Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §9.8.

(2) Attempt at Informal Resolution. The portion of C.C.P. 2033(e) requiring a meet and confer declaration was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.080(a) in 2004 without substantive change.

(3) Permissible Orders. The portion of C.C.P. 2033(e) specifying what a protective order may include was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.080(b) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2033(c)(3), on declarations for additional discovery, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.050 in 2004 without substantive change.

VI. REQUESTS FOR ADMISSION

C. Responses.

5. Effect of Response.

a. Admission.

[§ 171] Admission.

(1) Limited Effect. An admitted matter is conclusively established against the party making the admission in the pending action, unless the court has authorized amendment or withdrawal of the admission under C.C.P. 2033(m) (supra, §168). The admission is binding only on the party making the admission and applies to the pending action only. It is not an admission by that party for any other purpose, and it must not be used in any manner against that party in another proceeding. (C.C.P. 2033(n), based on F.R. Civ. P., Rule 36(b).)

(2) Court's Discretion To Determine Scope and Effect. In Fredericks v. Kontos Industries (1987) 189 C.A.3d 272, 234 C.R. 395, the court said: "Although admissions are dispositive in most cases, a trial court retains discretion to determine their scope and effect. An admission of a fact may be misleading. In those cases in which the court determines that an admission may be susceptible of different meanings, the court must use its discretion to determine the scope and effect of the admission so that it accurately reflects what facts are admitted in the light of other evidence." (189 C.A.3d 277.) And "[t]he court must have discretion to admit evidence to elucidate and explain an admission, because the admission of a fact does not always reflect the party's reasonable understanding of that fact." (189 C.A.3d 278.) The opinion adds that C.C.P. 2033(n) codifies this rule. (189 C.A.3d 278, footnote 2.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Limited Effect. C.C.P. 2033(n), on the effect of an admitted matter, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.410 in 2004 without substantive change.

See Amex Assur. Co. v. Allstate Ins. Co. (2003) 112 C.A.4th 1246, 1252, 1253, 5 C.R.3d 744 [where plumber defaulted in action against him by homeowner's insurer alleging negligent installation of water heater, and insurer then obtained assignment of plumber's rights and sued plumber's insurer for breach of contract and bad faith, plumber's admissions in first action were binding against homeowner's insurer; because homeowner's insurer was pursuing plumber's cause of action, it was not party separate from plumber within meaning of C.C.P. 2033(n) (now C.C.P. 2033.410)].

(2) Court's Discretion To Determine Scope and Effect. C.C.P. 2033(n), on the effect of an admitted matter, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.410 in 2004 without substantive change.

See Valerio v. Andrew Youngquist Const. (2002) 103 C.A.4th 1264, 1273, 127 C.R.2d 436 [in action by subcontractor against general contractor, trial judge erred in allowing quantum meruit recovery for plaintiff based on finding that no contract existed; plaintiff admitted, in response to requests for admissions, that contract existed, and his admission was unambiguous, leaving no room for interpretation; distinguishing *Fredericks v. 2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 172

[§ 172] Failure To Admit.

(1) Recovery of Fees and Expenses. If a party fails to admit the genuineness of a document or the truth of a matter when requested to do so, and the requesting party later proves the document's genuineness or the matter's truth, the requesting party may obtain an order requiring the responding party to pay the reasonable expenses incurred in making that proof, including reasonable attorneys' fees. (C.C.P. 2033(o); 23 Am.Jur.2d (1983 ed.), Depositions and Discovery §396 et seq.) The court must make the order unless it finds one of the following:

(a) An objection to the request was sustained or a response to it was waived under C.C.P. 2033(l), infra, §177 (C.C.P. 2033(o)(1));

(b) The admission sought was of no substantial importance (C.C.P. 2033(o)(2));

(c) The party failing to make the admission had reasonable ground to believe that that party would prevail on the matter (C.C.P. 2033(o)(3)); or-

(d) There was other good reason for the failure to admit (C.C.P. 2033(o)(4)).

(2) Factors Considered in Awarding Expenses. In Brooks v. American Broadcasting Co. (1986) 179 C.A.3d 500, 224 C.R. 838, the court, upholding an award of sanctions under former C.C.P. 2034(c), the predecessor to C.C.P. 2033(o), made the following observations on the application of the statute, which concerned a "denial," rather than a failure to admit:

(a) The determination of whether there are good reasons for the denial, whether the requested admission was of substantial importance, and the amount of the expenses, if any, are all within the discretion of the trial court. (179 C.A.3d 508.)

(b) The basis for imposing sanctions is directly related to the purpose of requests for admissions, i.e., expediting trial by putting issues to rest. The statute is not a penalty; it is designed to reimburse reasonable expenses incurred in proving a matter encompassed in a request for admission where the admission was of substantial importance "such that trial would have been expedited or shortened if the request had been deemed admitted." (179 C.A.3d 509.)

(c) To be of substantial importance, "as a general rule a request for admission should have at least some direct relationship to one of the central issues in the case, i.e., an issue which, if not proven, would have altered the results in the case." (179 C.A.3d 509.)

(d) In determining whether a party had no good reasons for the denial of a matter of substantial importance, the court should consider a variety of factors, including the following: (1) "whether at the time the request was denied it was reasonably possible for the party making the denial to have appreciated that the requested admission involved a central issue"; (2) whether the party denying the request had personal knowledge, or had available sources of information and failed to make a reasonable investigation to ascertain the facts; (3) the "degree to which the party making the denial has attempted in good faith to reach a reasonable resolution of the matters involved"; (4) whether, if the party subsequent to the refusal to admit learns facts that would have called for an admission, the party advises the requesting party that the denial was in error or should be modified; and (5) "whether at the time the denial was made the party making the denial held a reasonably entertained good faith belief that the party would prevail on the issue at trial." (179 C.A.3d 510, 511.)

Other illustrations of the application of C.C.P. 2033(o) include the following:

Smith v. Circle P Ranch Co. (1978) 87 C.A.3d 267, 275, 150 C.R. 828 [factors under former statute; one need not be prevailing party to be entitled to sanctions].

Wagy v. Brown (1994) 24 C.A.4th 1, 6, 29 C.R.2d 48 [award of attorney fees improper; although defendants denied request for admission that they were negligent, they later admitted it for purposes of arbitration, and thus plaintiff did not have to prove it].

Garcia v. Hyster Co. (1994) 28 C.A.4th 724, 735, 736, 34 C.R.2d 283 [personal injury action against manufacturer of "order picker" machine in which insurer of plaintiff's employer intervened; trial judge could award costs and fees to defendant based on insurer's flat denial of request for admission that employer was negligent, but award should not have covered period preceding denial].

Wimberly v. Derby Cycle Corp. (1997) 56 C.A.4th 618, 634, 638, 65 C.R.2d 532, 5 Summary (9th), Torts, Supp., §51B [in products liability action, sanctions against defendant producer and distributor of bicycle fork assemblies were proper for denying request for admissions on issues of causation and defect; these were issues of substantial importance and defendant had no reasonable belief it could prevail on them].

Rosales v. Thermex-Thermatron (1998) 67 C.A.4th 187, 198, 78 C.R.2d 861 [sanctions against defendant, successor corporation to manufacturer of machine that injured plaintiff, were proper; some of defendant's responses to numerous requests that directly related to successor liability were obviously false and defendant's officer denied knowledge of predecessor even though he had worked for it and its subsidiary].

(3) Amount of Fee. The fee set for the entire case is not necessarily the fee imposed for expenses reasonably required to prove facts improperly denied. (See Hillman v. Stults (1968) 263 C.A.2d 848, 890, 70 C.R. 295 [award of fee set for entire litigation was excessive where certain phases might have been subject to reasonable dispute].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Recovery of Fees and Expenses. C.C.P. 2033(o), on failure to admit the genuineness of a document or the truth of a matter, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.420 in 2004 without substantive change. C.C.P. 2033(o)(1)-(o)(4), on the grounds for denying a request for fees and expenses, became C.C.P. 2033.420(b)(1)-(b)(4).

See Barnett v. Penske Truck Leasing Co., L.P. (2001) 90 C.A.4th 494, 497, 498, 108 C.R.2d 821, citing the text [sanctions under C.C.P. 2033(o) (now C.C.P. 2033.420) may be awarded to party prevailing on summary judgment; statute requires that matter be proved but not necessarily at trial]; American Federation of State, County & Mun. Employees, Local 1902, AFL-CIO v. Metro-politan Water Dist. of Southern Calif. (2005) 126 C.A.4th 247, 268, 24 C.R.3d 285 [recovery of cost-of-proof attorneys' fees was not foreclosed by former C.C.P. 2033(l) (now C.C.P. 2033.290), even though plaintiff union raised objections to some of defendant employer's requests and employer did not move to compel responses, where union, after posing its objections to each request at issue, admitted in part and/or denied entire request, thus leaving nothing to address in motion to compel].(2) Factors Considered in Awarding Expenses. C.C.P. 2033(o), on failure to admit the genuineness of a document or the truth of a matter, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.420 in 2004 without substantive change.

See Denver D. Darling v. Controlled Environments Const. (2001) 89 C.A.4th 1221, 1239, 108 C.R.2d 213 [although subcontractor refused to admit that dock floor was not completed in accordance with contract specifications, trial judge properly denied contractor's motion for expenses, finding that each party had different interpretation of contract and that subcontractor's position was reasonable]; Stull v. Sparrow (2001) 92 C.A.4th 860, 865, 112 C.R.2d 239 [award of expenses under C.C.P. 2033(o) (now C.C.P. 2033.420) was properly denied, where, even though defendants refused to admit liability in response to request for admissions, they did so just before trial; following Wagy v. Brown (1994) 24 C.A.4th 1, 29 C.R.2d 48, text, p. 1002]. Wimberly v. Derby Cycle Corp.:

VI. REQUESTS FOR ADMISSION

C. Responses.

5. Effect of Response.

c. No Response.

1. Waiver of Objection.

[§ 173] Waiver of Objection.

(1) Waiver and Relief From Waiver. Failure to serve a timely response constitutes waiver of any objection, including one based on privilege or the work product doctrine. However, the court, on motion, may relieve the party from this waiver if it determines that (a) the party has subsequently served a response that is in "substantial compliance" with C.C.P. 2033(f), and (b) the party's failure to serve a timely response was the result of "mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect." (C.C.P. 2033(k).)

(2) Relationship to Amendment and Withdrawal Provision. In St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1992) 2 C.A.4th 843, 3 C.R.2d 412, the court rejected the argument that the provision allowing amendment and withdrawal (C.C.P. 2033(m), supra, §168) could be invoked to avoid waiver. "One subdivision, subdivision (k), controls relief when there is failure to serve a timely response, and in that instance allows default relief for excusable neglect after service of a complying response. ... The other subdivision, subdivision (m), controls relief for the purpose of allowing withdrawal or amendment of 'an admission made in response to a request for admission. ...' Plainly, subdivision (k) is intended to control default relief for total failure to respond, and subdivision (m) is intended to control default relief for erroneous or mistaken responses which the responder wishes to correct." (2 C.A.4th 851.)

Wilcox v. Birtwhistle (1999) 21 C.4th 973, 90 C.R.2d 260, 987 P.2d 727, infra, §176, holds that C.C.P. 2033(m) does provide relief from deemed admissions, ordered under C.C.P. 2033(k) following a failure to respond. (21 C.4th 977.) Wilcox disapproves St. Paul to the extent that it conflicts with that decision. (21 C.4th 983, footnote 12.) However, the answering party in Wilcox was seeking relief from deemed admissions, not from a waiver of objections. Wilcox makes clear that the initial penalty for failure to respond remains the waiver of all objections under C.C.P. 2033(k), and that relief under C.C.P. 2033(m) is available following the entry of a deemed admitted order. (21 C.4th 982.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Waiver and Relief From Waiver. C.C.P. 2033(f), on the response to a request for admissions, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.210 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2033(k), on failure to serve a timely response, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.280 in 2004 without substantive change.

VI. REQUESTS FOR ADMISSION

C. Responses.

5. Effect of Response.

c. No Response.

2. Deemed Admission.

aa. General Rule.

[§ 174] General Rule.

(1) Former Law. Under the former version of C.C.P. 2033, if a party failed to respond in a timely manner to a request for admissions, the requesting party could notify the responding party that the genuineness of the documents or the truth of the matters included in the request had been deemed admitted. The Commission was troubled by aspects of this result: "The Commission is sensitive to the need of the party propounding requests for admission to learn promptly and enduringly whether the admission is being made. It also does not want to encourage the recipient of admission requests to treat cavalierly the discovery obligations they impose. However, the Commission is convinced that the present system is imposing a sanction for nonresponse or tardy response that is out of all proportion to the abuse of discovery that such conduct undoubtedly creates. It has concluded that much of the prevailing unsatisfactory situation arises from the fact that under the present law no response is necessary where the recipient is willing to make the admission. Thus, the resulting silence is ambiguous. Does it signify a willingness to make the admission, or, as is more likely, is it simply attributable to oversight or sloth on the part of the attorney for the other side? The Commission proposes that a response always be required." (Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2033(f)(1), in 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C; for discussion of "gamesmanship" under former law, see 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §9.15.)

(2) Present Law. A response to each request for admission is now required. (C.C.P. 2033(f), supra, §163.) A notice from the requesting party is no longer sufficient for a deemed admission; a court order is required. The requesting party may move for an order that the genuineness of a document or the truth of a matter specified in the requests be deemed admitted. The motion must be granted unless the responding party has served, before the hearing on the motion, a proposed response in substantial compliance with C.C.P. 2033(f)(1) (supra, §167). (C.C.P. 2033(k); see Courtesy Claims Service v. Superior Court (1990) 219 C.A.3d 52, 55, 268 C.R. 30 [denying motion "in interest of justice" and giving plaintiffs more time to respond was error; under C.C.P. 2033(k), absence of timely response requires order that matters raised by requests be deemed admitted]; Demyer v. Costa Mesa Mobile Home Estates (1995) 36 C.A.4th 393, 399, 42 C.R.2d 260 [motion to deem matters admitted was improperly granted where plaintiffs submitted responses by time hearing normally would have been held but discovery referee had shortened time for hearing; "before the hearing on the motion" does not mean before hearing on shortened notice]; see also 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §9.16; Cal. Civil Practice, 2 Procedure, §13:133 et seq.; on relief from deemed admissions order under C.C.P. 2033(m) (supra, §168), see Wilcox v. Birtwhistle (1999) 21 C.4th 973, 977, 90 C.R.2d 260, 987 P.2d 727, infra, §176; on deemed admissions following party's failure to obey order compelling further response, see infra, §177.)

The court must impose a monetary sanction under C.C.P. 2023 (infra, §252) on the party whose failure to respond necessitated the motion. (C.C.P. 2033(k); see Appleton v. Superior Court (1988) 206 C.A.3d 632, 635, 636, 253 C.R. 762 [monetary sanction was mandatory; unverified, single response to three requests for admission was tantamount to no response, necessitating motion to have requests deemed admitted].)

C.C.P. 2033(k) makes a major change by abolishing the automatic deemed admission and requiring a court order before an unanswered request is deemed admitted. The Commission recognized that its proposal shifted to the party seeking discovery the task of applying to the court to enforce a response to which the party was already entitled. However, it believed that the former practice was "draconian," and that "the prospect of a mandatory monetary sanction will in most instances provide sufficient incentive for the party to whom the request is directed to comply with the requirements of this discovery method." (Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2033(k), in 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C.)

VI. REQUESTS FOR ADMISSION

C. Responses.

5. Effect of Response.

c. No Response.

2. Deemed Admission.

bb. Court's Discretion To Deny Motion for Deemed Admission.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 175

[§ 175] Court's Discretion To Deny Motion for Deemed Admission.

(1) Substantial Compliance and Service Requirements Met. In Tobin v. Oris (1992) 3 C.A.4th 814, 4 C.R.2d 736, the trial court granted summary judgment for plaintiff based solely on facts deemed admitted pursuant to a request for admissions under C.C.P. 2033(k). Counsel for defendants had in fact served sufficient responses to all of the requests, before the hearing on plaintiff's motion to have the requests deemed admitted. However, the responses were served by mail 20 days after they were due and 9 days after plaintiff's motion. The trial court, following a recommendation by a referee, ruled in favor of plaintiff, relying on the provision in C.C.P. 1013a(3) (see 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, §24) that "[s]ervice made pursuant to this paragraph, upon motion of a party served, shall be presumed invalid if the postal cancellation date or postage meter date on the envelope is more than one day after the date of deposit for mailing contained in the affidavit." Held, reversed.

(a) "What both the trial court and Tobin have overlooked, however, is the precise language and the obvious function of this statutory provision. Subdivision (3) of section 1013a relates to the manner in which a party will prove that service by mail was accomplished where the person signing the affidavit does not have personal knowledge, but can testify as to the business 'practice for collection and processing of correspondence for mailing' of the sender (i.e., the party seeking to establish that a service by mail was accomplished). It is only when a party seeks to prove that service by mail has occurred under these specific and limited circumstances that the paragraph would have any application. Further it would only be a consideration where an issue exists as to the service of a particular document; that is, where proof of the fact of such service is required. It logically would have no application where, as in this case, service has been admitted." (3 C.A.4th 825.)

(b) "The actual receipt of responses prior to the hearing on Tobin's admissions motion, and the absence of any finding as to a lack of substantial compliance with section 2033, subdivision (f)(1), is sufficient, as a matter of law, to defeat it. The Orises were not required to show anything else. Certainly, no showing of 'mistake, inadvertence or excusable neglect' by them was required. Such matters play no part in the resolution of a 'deemed admitted' motion. Such factors are only relevant under section 2033, subdivision (k), to a party's effort to obtain relief from a waiver of the right to object to requests. That is not the issue presented here." (3 C.A.4th 827.) (On showing of mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect after deemed admitted motion is granted, see Wilcox v. Birtwhistle (1999) 21 C.4th 973, 90 C.R.2d 260, 987 P.2d 727, infra, §176 [disapproving Tobin to extent it conflicts with decision in Wilcox].)

(c) "Until we read the record and the briefs in this case, we would not have thought it necessary for a court to have to make explicit what the Legislature so clearly mandated. Under section 2033, subdivision (k), the court is required to grant a deemed admission unless a proposed response is served before the hearing on that motion. ... What the statute does not say, but obviously implies, is that where a proposed response is served prior to the hearing (and there is no finding that the 'substantial compliance' requirement has not been met), then the motion may not be granted." (3 C.A.4th 828.)

(2) Effect of Legally Deficient Response. In Brigante v. Huang (1993) 20 C.A.4th 1569, 25 C.R.2d 354, a personal injury action arising from a traffic accident, defendant could not be located and was served by publication. Her insurer retained a law firm to represent her. Plaintiff served requests for admissions that tracked the complaint and asked defendant to admit or deny each allegation and also asked for admissions that plaintiff had suffered at least $ 500,000 in damages and that defendant had violated two Vehicle Code provisions. Defense counsel responded to the request and verified the responses in defendant's absence. Because C.C.P. 2033 requires verification by the party (see supra, §164), plaintiff moved to have the requests deemed admitted. The trial judge granted this motion, and, then, on the basis of the matters deemed admitted, granted plaintiff's motion for summary judgment. Held, reversed.

(a) A trial judge may grant appropriate relief, on the basis of oppression, from requests for admissions when it is satisfied that the defendant is not evading the lawsuit or the discovery demanded and is unaware of their pendency, and that reasonable efforts have been made and are ongoing to find the defendant. (20 C.A.4th 1583.)

(b) Some of the remedies the trial judge may adopt, other than ordering the entire set of requests admitted or relieving the responding party from answering at all are: (1) order that only some matters be deemed admitted; (2) relieve the defense from admitting or denying the requests on condition that it demonstrate a continuing and vigorous effort to locate the defendant; (3) grant a specific extension of time within which to find the defendant. (20 C.A.4th 1583.) (On relief on grounds of mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect after deemed admitted motion is granted, see Wilcox v. Birtwhistle (1999) 21 C.4th 973, 90 C.R.2d 260, 987 P.2d 727, infra, §176 [disapproving Brigante to extent it conflicts with decision in Wilcox].)

(c) As the trial judge did not exercise a discretion he possessed, reversal and remand are required. Nevertheless, plaintiff's use of the requests, while predatory, was entirely within the statute. "The use of sweeping RFA's in a case where the defendant is, and is known to be, absent and cannot be found, is a far cry from the original purpose of the device: to weed out matters that are not the basis of legitimate dispute, so that the trial may proceed more rapidly, with less consumption of the time of court and counsel, and less expense to the parties." (20 C.A.4th 1588.) The Legislature should reexamine the statute. Perhaps an attorney verification should be allowed in a case such as this, perhaps the scope of the requests should be limited, possibly to exclude the amount of unliquidated damages or other specified issues, and perhaps this discovery method should not be allowed in this kind of case, where other means to discover information are readily available. (20 C.A.4th 1589.)

The Brigante case was distinguished in Allen-Pac., Ltd. v. Superior Court (1997) 57 C.A.4th 1546, 67 C.R.2d 804, an action for fraud and conversion in which defendant's response to plaintiff's request for admissions failed to comply with C.C.P. 2033(g) (supra, §164) because it was not signed by defendant under oath. Although plaintiff moved to deem the matters specified in the request admitted and for monetary sanctions, defendant submitted no other response prior to the hearing on the motion, and did not seek a protective order under C.C.P. 2033(e). At the hearing, the trial judge ruled that she did not lack discretion to deny the motion, and she directed defendant to file a verified response. After defendant did so, the judge denied plaintiff's motion. Held, denial of the motion was in excess of the judge's authority. When a party fails to respond to a request for admissions, or, as here, files a legally deficient response, C.C.P. 2033 provides only two forms of relief: (a) Before the hearing on the motion, the party may file a belated but proper response as permitted by C.C.P. 2033(k); or (b) the party may seek a protective order under C.C.P. 2033(e). Where, as here, neither form of relief is sought, the party propounding the unanswered request for admissions is entitled to the relief specified in C.C.P. 2033(k) regardless of prejudice. The failure to file a timely response is deemed prejudicial by the statute; there is ordinarily no judicial authority to gainsay that presumption, which can be rebutted, if at all, only by a very unusual situation such as that in Brigante, supra, where response was impossible and the party propounding the request knew it. (57 C.A.4th 1556.) (On relief on grounds of mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect after deemed admitted motion is granted, see Wilcox v. Birtwhistle (1999) 21 C.4th 973, 90 C.R.2d 260, 987 P.2d 727, infra, §176 [disapproving Allen-Pac., Ltd. to extent it conflicts with decision in Wilcox].)

(1) Substantial Compliance and Service Requirements Met. C.C.P. 2033(k), on matters deemed admitted, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.280 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2033(f)(1), on requirements for the answer, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.220 in 2004 without substantive change.(2) Effect of Legally Deficient Response. C.C.P. 2033(g), on the requirement of a signature under oath, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.240 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2033(e), on protective orders, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.080 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2033(k), on belated service of a response, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.280 in 2004 without substantive change.

[§ 176] Relief From Deemed Admission Order.

In Wilcox v. Birtwhistle (1999) 21 C.4th 973, 90 C.R.2d 260, 987 P.2d 727, plaintiff sued defendant, a physician, for medical malpractice. Defendant served plaintiff with a request for admissions, asking plaintiff to admit, among other things, that defendant was not negligent in any manner in which he provided medical care to plaintiff and that plaintiff had not suffered any personal injury as a result of the medical care. When plaintiff failed to respond to the request for admissions, defendant moved to have the matters deemed admitted under C.C.P. 2033(k). Before the hearing on the motion, plaintiff served responses to the request for admission, but he failed to verify the responses. The trial court granted the motion and ordered the matters to be deemed admitted. Using new counsel, plaintiff then served verified responses and moved for relief from the deemed admission order. Plaintiff included a declaration from his former counsel explaining that the failure to serve timely responses occurred because of that counsel's own mistake or negligence. The trial judge felt compelled, under St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1992) 2 C.A.4th 843, 3 C.R.2d 412, supra, §173, to deny the motion, and ultimately granted summary judgment for defendant based solely on the deemed admissions. The Court of Appeal reversed. Held, judgment of Court of Appeal affirmed; C.C.P. 2033(m), supra, §168, permits the withdrawal or amendment of admissions deemed admitted for failure to respond.

(a) The statutory language of C.C.P. 2033(m) provides little guidance in determining whether it applies to deemed admissions. Whereas the second sentence of (m) refers to "withdrawal or amendment of an admission" and thus appears to place no restrictions on the scope of the subdivision, the first sentence refers to "an admission made in response to a request" and thus appears to exclude deemed admissions from those subject to withdrawal or amendment. Hence, C.C.P. 2033(m) must be read in light of two other subdivisions in C.C.P. 2033, (k) and (n), and in light of its legislative history. (21 C.4th 978.)

(1) C.C.P. 2033(n), supra, §171, which codified existing case law, establishes that matters admitted in an actual response or those deemed admitted for failure to respond under C.C.P. 2033(k) constitute binding judicial admissions. Thus, "a deemed admitted order establishes, by judicial fiat, that a nonresponding party has responded to the requests by admitting the truth of all matters contained" in the request. This harmonization of the language of C.C.P. 2033 "compels the conclusion that subdivision (m) provides relief from deemed admissions. Like subdivision (n), subdivision (m) refers to admissions "made in response to a request for admission." Because words or phrases given a particular meaning in one part of a statute must be given the same meaning in other parts of the statute, this reference in subdivision (m)--like the analogous language in subdivision (n)--must encompass deemed admissions." (21 C.4th 979.)

(2) The legislative history further supports this interpretation of C.C.P. 2033(m). Prior law had provided the answering party with 30 days to seek relief under C.C.P. 473 after receiving notice from the propounding party that a deemed admission, which occurred automatically without court order, had occurred. This practice was considered "draconian" and removed any incentive for a party that was willing to make the admissions to serve an actual response. (21 C.4th 979.) "Construing subdivision (m) to permit the withdrawal or amendment of deemed admissions is consistent with the Legislature's intention to remedy these problems." (21 C.4th 980.) Subdivision (m) eliminates the time limits on obtaining relief and also allows the trial court to tailor the sanction to the severity of the discovery abuse. Moreover, the sanctions available under both subdivisions (k) and (m) should supply the incentive necessary to ensure a response. "Precluding the withdrawal or amendment of deemed admissions, therefore, amounts to overkill." (21 C.4th 980.)

(3) Finally, the Reporter's Notes to C.C.P. 2033(m) suggest that the subdivision is based on F.R. Civ. P., Rule 36(b), which, when subdivision (m) was enacted, permitted relief from matters deemed admitted for failure to respond. (21 C.4th 980, 981.)

(b) Although "virtually all" Court of Appeal decisions have reached the opposite conclusion, "our interpretation of subdivision (m) is more consistent with the statutory language and legislative history" of C.C.P. 2033, and "the reasoning of these Court of Appeal decisions does not support a contrary result." (21 C.4th 981.)

(1) The conclusion in those cases that C.C.P. 2033(k) controls relief when there is a failure to serve a timely response and C.C.P. 2033(m) controls relief when there is an actual admission is not supported by the statutory language or legislative history. "Indeed, the scheme of section 2033 equally supports the conclusion that subdivision (k) controls when the failure to respond results in a binding judicial admission and subdivision (m) controls when a party may obtain relief from an admission, deemed or otherwise." (21 C.4th 982.)

(2) Interpreting C.C.P. 2033(m) to cover deemed admissions will not render C.C.P. 2033(k) useless or duplicative. Instead, this interpretation complements the enforcement scheme created by subdivision (k), and establishes the following graduated system of enforcement: (1) The initial penalty for failure to respond is the waiver of all objections. (2) Once the propounding party files a motion for a deemed admitted order, the nonresponding party then faces an additional penalty--mandatory monetary sanctions. (3) Failing to respond before the hearing on the motion results in entry of a deemed admitted order. (4) The nonresponding party can only escape a binding admission by establishing "mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect" and no substantial prejudice to the propounding party. (5) The nonresponding party also faces the likely imposition of more sanctions at the discretion of the trial court. (21 C.4th 982.)

(3) Permitting relief under C.C.P. 2033(m) eliminates the undeserved windfalls that occur when the propounding party "gets lucky" and receives no response. It also eliminates the resulting subversion of the policy favoring the resolution of lawsuits on the merits. (21 C.4th 983.)

(4) The following cases are disapproved "to the extent they conflict with our decision here": Courtesy Claims Service v. Superior Court (1990) 219 C.A.3d 52, 268 C.R. 30, supra, §174; St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1992) 2 C.A.4th 843, 3 C.R.2d 412, supra, §173, and Tobin v. Oris (1992) 3 C.A.4th 814, 4 C.R.2d 736, supra, §175; Brigante v. Huang (1993) 20 C.A.4th 1569, 25 C.R.2d 354, supra, §175; Demyer v. Costa Mesa Mobile Home Estates (1995) 36 C.A.4th 393, 42 C.R.2d 260, supra, §174; Allen-Pac., Ltd. v. Superior Court (1997) 57 C.A.4th 1546, 67 C.R.2d 804, supra, §175. (21 C.4th 983, footnote 12.) Although the Legislature has never objected to Courtesy Claims, St. Paul, or their progeny, neither has it adopted their judicial interpretations by repeated enactments. (21 C.4th 983.)

VI. REQUESTS FOR ADMISSION

C. Responses.

5. Effect of Response.

d. Inadequate Response.

[§ 177] Inadequate Response.

(1) Motion To Compel Further Response. If a response is evasive or incomplete or an objection is without merit or too general, the requesting party may move for an order to compel a further response. Notice of the motion must be given within 45 days of service of the response, or any supplemental response, or within a longer period agreed to in writing by the parties. Failure to give timely notice waives any right to compel a further response. (C.C.P. 2033(l); see Cal. Civil Practice, 2 Procedure, §13:138; 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §9.17; on format of motion, see supra, §28.)

(2) Attempt at Informal Resolution. The motion must be accompanied by a declaration showing a reasonable and good faith attempt at an informal resolution of each issue presented. (C.C.P. 2033(l); on monetary sanctions for failure to attempt informal resolution, see infra, §252.)

(3) Monetary Sanctions for Making or Opposing Motion. The court must impose monetary sanctions under C.C.P. 2023 (infra, §252) against a party, person, or attorney who unsuccessfully makes or opposes a motion to compel further response. The sanction may be avoided if the court finds that the person acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make imposing the sanction unjust. (C.C.P. 2033(l).)

(4) Sanctions for Failure To Obey Order. If a party fails to obey an order compelling further response to a request for admission, "the court may order that the matters involved in the requests be deemed admitted." Instead of or in addition to the order, the court may order a monetary sanction under C.C.P. 2023 (infra, §252). (C.C.P. 2033(l).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Motion To Compel Further Response. C.C.P. 2033(l), on motions to compel further response, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.290 in 2004 without substantive change.

See Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §9.17.(2) Attempt at Informal Resolution. The portion of C.C.P. 2033(l) requiring a meet and confer declaration was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.290(b) in 2004 without substantive change.

(3) Monetary Sanctions for Making or Opposing Motion. C.C.P. 2023, on monetary sanctions generally, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

The portion of C.C.P. 2033(l) providing for monetary sanctions in connection with motions to compel further response was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.290(d) in 2004 without substantive change.

(4) Sanctions for Failure To Obey Order. C.C.P. 2023, on monetary sanctions, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

The portion of C.C.P. 2033(l) providing for sanctions for failure to obey an order compelling further response was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.290(e) in 2004 without substantive change.

VII. EXCHANGE OF EXPERT WITNESS INFORMATION

A. Statutory Authority.

[§ 178] Statutory Authority.

(1) Exchange of Names and Reports. A party may demand a mutual and simultaneous exchange by all parties of the names and addresses of natural persons whose expert testimony the parties expect to offer in evidence at trial. (C.C.P. 2034(a)(1).) A party may also demand the mutual and simultaneous production for inspection and copying of all discoverable reports and writings made by experts who are employees of the designating party or who have been retained "for the purpose of forming and expressing an opinion in anticipation of the litigation or in preparation for the trial of the action." (C.C.P. 2034(a)(2), (a)(3); see South Tahoe Public Util. Dist. v. Superior Court (1979) 90 C.A.3d 135, 138, 154 C.R. 1 [construing predecessor to C.C.P. 2034; demand for disclosure of witnesses who might be called, as opposed to those who were expected to be called as of date close to trial, was premature; release of names before preparation for trial would discourage full investigation of facts and could enable party to determine trial strategy without independent efforts, based solely on other party's selection of experts]; Overly on Electronic Evidence in California §3:11; 37 *Hastings L. Civil Practice, 2 Procedure, §13:192 et seq.; 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Chap. 10.)

(2) Exceptions. C.C.P. 2034 does not apply to exchanges of lists of experts and valuation data in eminent domain proceedings under C.C.P. 1258.010 et seq. (infra, §200). (C.C.P. 2034(a).) Moreover, requests for disclosure of the names and addresses of witnesses of any type in economic litigation cases are governed by C.C.P. 93 and 96. (See 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Courts, §§263, 265.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Exchange of Names and Reports. C.C.P. 2034(a)(1), on the demand for the exchange of the names and addresses of expert witnesses, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.210(a) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2034(a)(2) and 2034(a)(3) were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.210(b), (c) in 2004 without substantive change. C.C.P. 2034(a)(3), on the demand for the exchange of discoverable reports and writings by experts, became C.C.P. 2034.210(c).

See C.E.B., 2 Civil Discovery Practice 4th, Chap. 11; Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, Chap. 10.(2) Exceptions. The portion of C.C.P. 2034(a) stating an exception for eminent domain proceedings was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.010 in 2004 without substantive change. West's Key Number Digest, Pretrial Procedure k.39, 40

VII. EXCHANGE OF EXPERT WITNESS INFORMATION

B. Procedure.

1. Demand.

[§ 179] Demand.

(1) Timing and Service. A demand to exchange information about expert trial witnesses may be made without leave of court (C.C.P. 2034(b)) after the initial trial date is set (C.C.P. 2034(a)). The demand must be made "no later than the 10th day after the initial trial date has been set, or 70 days before that trial date, whichever is closer to the trial date." (C.C.P. 2034(b).) A copy of the demand must be served on all parties who have appeared. (C.C.P. 2034(d).)

In Beverly Hosp. v. Superior Court (1993) 19 C.A.4th 1289, 24 C.R.2d 238, a medical malpractice action, the parties engaged in a timely exchange of expert witness information. The case was tried before a jury, the jury was unable to reach a verdict, and the judge declared a mistrial. After a new trial date was set, plaintiff served a new demand for an exchange of expert witness information. Defendant moved for a protective order, arguing that the timeliness of plaintiff's demand was to be calculated with reference to the original trial date and that, so calculated, the demand was late. The trial judge denied the motion. Held, this was proper. In C.C.P. 2034(d), the phrase "initial trial date" was intended to prevent a postponement or continuance of a trial from automatically reopening discovery, but it was not intended to prohibit additional discovery following a mistrial, order granting a new trial, or reversal on appeal. (19 C.A.4th 1295.)

(2) Form and Content. The demand must be in writing, state that it is made under C.C.P. 2034, identify the demanding party, and specify the date of the exchange (infra, §180). (C.C.P. 2034(c); see 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §§10.1, 10.3; Cal. Civil Practice, 2 Procedure, §13:201.)

(3) Preservation of Original Demand. The demand for an exchange, with proof of service affixed, is not filed with the court, but is retained by the demanding party. It may be destroyed 6 months after final disposition of the action unless the court, on motion and for good cause, orders preservation for a longer period. (C.C.P. 2034(n).) However, a demand is "lodged with the court" when its contents become relevant to an issue pending in the action. (C.C.P. 2034(k).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Timing and Service. C.C.P. 2034(a), (b), on the timing of the demand, were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.220 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2034(d), on the service of the demand, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.240 in 2004 without substantive change.

See Fairmont Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (2000) 22 C.4th 245, 250, 251, 92 C.R.2d 70, 991 P.2d 156 [approving construction of C.C.P. 2034 set forth in Beverly Hosp. v. Superior Court (1993) 19 C.A.4th 1289, 24 C.R.2d 238, text, p. 1012].(2) Form and Content. C.C.P. 2034(c), on the form and content of the demand, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.230 in 2004 without substantive change.

See Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §§10.1, 10.3.

(3) Preservation of Original Demand. C.C.P. 2034(n), on retention of the original demand, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.290(a), (b) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2034(k), specifying when a demand must be lodged with the court, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.290(c) in 2004 without substantive change.

CHAPTER X - Discovery

VII. EXCHANGE OF EXPERT WITNESS INFORMATION

B. Procedure.

2. Exchange.

[§ 180] Exchange.

(1) Date. The date of exchange must be 50 days before the initial trial date, or 20 days after service of the demand, whichever is closer to the trial date. The court, on motion and a showing of good cause, may order an earlier or later date of exchange. (C.C.P. 2034(c).)

(2) Means. The parties who have appeared in the action must exchange witness information in writing on or before the date of exchange specified in the demand, either at a meeting of their attorneys or by mail. (C.C.P. 2034(f).) If the demand includes a demand for production of reports and writings, the parties must produce and exchange, at the specified place and on the specified date, all discoverable reports and writings made by the designated experts. (C.C.P. 2034(g)); see C.E.B., 2 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §11.17; 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §10.5; Cal. Civil Practice, 2 Procedure, §13:196; on avoiding compliance by obtaining protective order, see C.C.P. 2034(e), infra, §181.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Date. C.C.P. 2034(c), on the date of the exchange, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.230(b) in 2004 without substantive change.

See Hernandez v. Superior Court (2003) 112 C.A.4th 285, 294, 295, 4 C.R.3d 883 [in wrongful death action involving multiple plaintiffs and defendants, trial judge erred, in case management order, in requiring unilateral early disclosure of plaintiffs' experts and their opinions; although trial court may order mutual exchange on date earlier or later than specified in C.C.P. 2034, statute does not permit early unilateral exchange, notwithstanding court's broad discretion to fashion suitable procedures to manage complex litigation]; Fairfax v. Lords (2006) 138 C.A.4th 1019, 1025, 41 C.R.3d 850 [trial judge erred in allowing, on date plaintiff served his expert witness designation, defendant to serve "First Designation of Expert Witnesses" naming no retained witnesses, and then later to serve "Second Designation of Expert Witnesses" in which defendant named two retained experts; former C.C.P. 2034(a)(1) (now C.C.P. 2034.210) required simultaneous exchange of information].

(2) Means. C.C.P. 2034(f), on the method of exchange, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.260 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2034(g), on the production of reports and writings, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.270 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2034(e), on protective orders, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.250 in 2004 without substantive change.

CHAPTER X - Discovery

VII. EXCHANGE OF EXPERT WITNESS INFORMATION

B. Procedure.

3. Motion for Protective Order.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 181

[§ 181] Motion for Protective Order.

(1) In General. A party who has been served with a demand to exchange information concerning expert trial witnesses may promptly move for a protective order. On a showing of good cause, the court may make "any order that justice requires" to protect a party, person, or organization from "unwarranted annoyance, embarrassment, or oppression, or undue burden and expense." If the court denies the motion for a protective order in whole or in part, it may order that "the responding party provide or permit the discovery against which protection was sought on terms and conditions that are just." (C.C.P. 2034(e); see 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §10.4; on monetary sanctions for unsuccessfully making or opposing motion for protective order, see infra, §252.)

(2) Attempt at Informal Resolution. The motion for a protective order must be accompanied by a declaration showing a reasonable and good faith attempt at an informal resolution of each issue presented. (C.C.P. 2034(e).) (On monetary sanctions for failure to attempt informal resolution, see supra, §252.)

(3) Permissible Orders. Under C.C.P. 2034(e), a protective order may include, but is not limited to, one or more of the following directions:

- (a) That an untimely demand be quashed.
- (b) That the date of exchange be other than that specified in the demand.
- (c) That the exchange be made only on specified terms and conditions.
- (d) That the production and exchange of experts' reports and writings be made at a different place or time than specified in the demand.
- (e) That some or all of the parties be divided into sides on the basis of their identity of interest in the issues in the action, and that the designation of experts under C.C.P. 2034(a)(2) (supra, §178) be made by these created sides.
- (f) That a party or side reduce its list of designated employed or retained experts.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. C.C.P. 2034(e), on protective orders, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.250 in 2004 without substantive change.

See Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §10.4.(2) Attempt at Informal Resolution. The portion of C.C.P. 2034(e) requiring a meet and confer declaration was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.250(a) in 2004 without substantive change.

(3) Permissible Orders. The portion of C.C.P. 2034(e) specifying what protective orders are permissible was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.250(b) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2034(a)(2), on the designation of experts, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.210(a) in 2004 without substantive change.

VII. EXCHANGE OF EXPERT WITNESS INFORMATION

C. Witness Lists and Declarations.

1. Contents of Witness List.

[§ 182] Contents of Witness List.

The exchange must either include a statement that the party does not presently intend to offer the testimony of an expert witness at trial or list the names and addresses of the experts whose testimony the party intends to offer. (C.C.P. 2034(f)(1); 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §10.6.) In many cases, the list must be accompanied by an expert witness declaration. (See C.C.P. 2034(f)(2), infra, §§182, 183.)

VII. EXCHANGE OF EXPERT WITNESS INFORMATION

C. Witness Lists and Declarations.

2. Expert Witness Declarations.

a. For Whom Necessary.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 183

[§ 183] For Whom Necessary.

(1) Party or Party's Retained Expert. If an expert is a party or a party's employee, or is retained for the purpose of "forming and expressing an opinion in anticipation of the litigation or in preparation for the trial," the exchange must include an expert witness declaration. (C.C.P. 2034(a)(2), 2034(f)(2); on content of declaration, see infra, §184.)

(2) Treating Physician as Expert Witness. A treating doctor is not a retained expert for purposes of C.C.P. 2034. Thus, a party in a personal injury action who intends to have his or her treating doctor testify as to the party's injuries, treatment, and prognosis need not provide opposing counsel the expert witness declaration required by C.C.P. 2034(f)(2). (Huntley v. Foster (1995) 35 C.A.4th 753, 754, 756, 41 C.R.2d 358.) Even when the treating physician offers expert opinion on standard of care or causation, he or she is not considered an expert for whom a declaration must be exchanged. (Schreiber v. Estate of Kiser (1999) 22 C.4th 31, 33, 91 C.R.2d 293, 989 P.2d 720.)

In Schreiber, plaintiff sued for damages she sustained in an automobile accident. She designated seven treating physicians as expert witnesses, but did not submit expert witness declarations for them. In response to a motion in limine, the trial judge ruled that the physicians could testify "as percipient witnesses, but not as experts." Plaintiff called two of the physicians as expert witnesses, but they were precluded from giving their opinion that plaintiff's injuries had been caused by the accident. The jury subsequently found that defendant's negligence did not cause plaintiff's damages and returned a verdict for defendant. Held, reversed. A treating physician does not become a "retained" expert within the meaning of C.C.P. 2034(a)(2) whenever the physician gives opinion testimony.

(a) The declaration requirement applies only to "certain" expert witnesses: those who are parties or employees of parties, or are retained by a party for the purpose of forming and expressing an opinion in anticipation of the litigation or in preparation for the trial. A treating physician generally falls into none of these categories. (22 C.4th 35.) The legislative history of C.C.P. 2034 clarifies that what distinguishes a treating physician from a retained expert is not the content of the physician's testimony, but the context in which the physician became familiar with the plaintiff's injuries that are ultimately the subject of litigation and that form the factual basis for the medical opinion. (22 C.4th 35, 36.) A treating physician is not consulted for litigation purposes, but instead learns of the plaintiff's injuries and medical history because of the underlying physician-patient relationship. (22 C.4th 36.)

(b) The conclusion that treating physicians generally are not experts "retained" within the meaning of C.C.P. 2034(a)(2) is supported by C.C.P. 2034(i)(2) (infra, §190 et seq.), and similar language in Govt.C. 68092.5(a) (2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §22). These provisions clearly differentiate between the retained expert described in C.C.P.

2034(a)(2), for whom an expert witness declaration is required, and a treating physician expert witness. (22 C.4th 36.) It would be difficult to interpret C.C.P. 2034(a)(2) in a contrary fashion without rendering C.C.P. 2034(i)(2) superfluous. (22 C.4th 37.)

(c) The conclusion that treating physicians are not retained experts is also consistent with the discovery statutes as a whole. The identity and opinions of a party's retained experts are generally privileged unless the experts are going to testify at trial, allowing a party to "bury" an expert who does not support the party's position. Moreover, the party need not reveal whether a retained expert will testify until shortly before trial. (22 C.4th 37.) "It makes sense in this situation that the Legislature would require the person presenting the expert to submit an expert witness declaration" (22 C.4th 37), which allows the parties to assess within a short time frame whether to take the expert's deposition and to select an expert who can respond with a competing opinion on the deposed expert's subject area (22 C.4th 38). By contrast, the identity and opinions of treating physicians are not privileged and are subject to no special discovery restrictions. They can be identified early in the litigation through interrogatories, production of the plaintiff's medical records, and completion of case questionnaires. "Accordingly, the Legislature has apparently determined that by the time of the exchange of expert witness information, the information required by the expert witness declaration is unnecessary for treating physicians who remain in their traditional role." (22 C.4th 38.)

(d) "Our interpretation avoids assigning trial judges the near impossible task of determining whether an expert witness treating physician is providing percipient or opinion testimony." (22 C.4th 39.) A physician may testify as to any opinions formed on the basis of facts independently acquired and informed by his or her training, skill, and experience, including opinions regarding causation and standard of care, because such issues are inherent in a physician's work. (22 C.4th 39, disapproving, to extent it is inconsistent with this opinion, Plunkett v. Spaulding (1997) 52 C.A.4th 114, 60 C.R.2d 377.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Party or Party's Retained Expert. C.C.P. 2034(a)(2) and 2034(f)(2), on expert witness declarations, were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.210 and 2034.260 in 2004 without substantive change. (2) Treating Physician as Expert Witness. C.C.P. 2034(a)(2) and 2034(f)(2), on expert witness declarations, were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.210 and 2034.260 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2034(i)(2), on the payment of fees to an expert witness who is deposed, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.430 in 2004 without substantive change.

See Fatica v. Superior Court (2002) 99 C.A.4th 350, 353, 120 C.R.2d 904 [treating physician's testimony is not limited to personal observations; following Schreiber v. Estate of Kiser (1999) 22 C.4th 31, 91 C.R.2d 293, 989 P.2d 720, text, p. 1015].

(New) Distinction: Unnamed treating physician: Although a designation of retained experts must be accompanied by an expert witness declaration, no such declaration is required for a treating physician who will be called to testify at trial as an expert witness. "But the transformation from treating physician to expert does not occur unless the treating physician is identified by name and address in the proponent's designation, and it is not enough that a plaintiff has 'designated' as experts 'all past or present examining and/or treating physicians.' " (Kalaba v. Gray (2002) 95 C.A.4th 1416, 1418, 116 C.R.2d 570 [in medical malpractice action, trial judge properly precluded plaintiff's treating physicians from testifying as to standard of care, where her expert witness declaration mentioned all past or present treating physicians but did not name them].)

CHAPTER X - Discovery

VII. EXCHANGE OF EXPERT WITNESS INFORMATION

C. Witness Lists and Declarations.

4. Additions to Lists.

b. Augmented List.

[§ 187] Augmented List.

(1) Former Law. Former C.C.P. 2037.4 permitted a party to augment its expert witness list simply by diligently giving notice of its intent to call an unlisted witness and by making the witness available for deposition. The Commission concluded that this law was "too liberal" and provided "a disincentive to submit a complete list in the first place." (Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2034, in 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C.)

(2) Present Law. Expert witness information may now be augmented or amended as follows:

(a) Motion by party in compliance: A party who has engaged in a timely exchange of expert witness information may move to add the name and address of a subsequently retained witness or to amend the statement of the testimony a previously designated expert is expected to give. The motion must be accompanied by a declaration showing a reasonable and good faith attempt at an informal resolution of each issue presented. (C.C.P. 2034(k); Cal. Civil Practice, 2 Procedure, §13:203 et seq. [forms]; on monetary sanctions for failure to attempt informal resolution, see infra, §252.)

(b) Basis for order: The court may grant the motion, "after taking into account the extent to which the opposing party has relied on the list of expert witnesses," only if it determines that the opposing party will not be prejudiced, and that the moving party:

(1) Either (a) would not in the exercise of reasonable diligence have decided to call that expert witness or to offer the witness' different or additional testimony, or (b) failed to decide to call the witness, or to offer the witness' different or additional testimony, as a result of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect;

(2) Made the motion promptly; and

(3) Promptly served on all other parties a copy of witness lists and declarations described in C.C.P. 2034(f) (supra, §182 et seq.). (C.C.P. 2034(k); see Dickison v. Howen (1990) 220 C.A.3d 1471, 1478, 270 C.R. 188 [doctor's change of testimony on cross-examination during deposition from that given to defendant's counsel during preparation was sufficient "surprise" to allow defendant to add new expert]; Martinez v. Poway (1993) 12 C.A.4th 425, 432, 15 C.R.2d 644, infra, §198 [motion to augment expert witness declaration was properly denied; plaintiff had known of need to augment for several weeks before serving motion, and when motion was heard, trial was to start within 2 weeks]; Guzman v. Superior Court (1993) 19 C.A.4th 705, 707, 708, 23 C.R.2d 585, 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attack on Judgment in Trial Court, §136 [after granting motion for new trial, trial judge abused discretion in denying plaintiff's motion to designate new expert witnesses, where motion was made well before new trial was to commence]; Beverly Hosp. v. Superior Court (1993) 19 C.A.4th 1289, 1295, 24 C.R.2d 238, supra, §179 [new demand for exchange of expert witness information properly allowed after mistrial and scheduling of new trial date]; 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §10.12.)

(c) Conditions: The order must be conditioned on the moving party making the expert available immediately for a deposition under C.C.P. 2034(i) (infra, §188), "and on such other terms as may be just." For example, the order may allow a party opposing the motion to designate additional expert witnesses or to elicit additional opinions from those previously designated, may continue the trial for a reasonable period of time, or may award costs and litigation expenses to a party who opposes the motion. (C.C.P. 2034(k).)

(d) Monetary sanctions: The court must impose monetary sanctions under C.C.P. 2023 (see infra, §252) against someone who unsuccessfully makes or opposes a motion to augment, unless it finds the one subject to sanctions acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make imposing sanctions unjust. (C.C.P. 2034(k).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Former Law. See Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2034, in Hogan, 2 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, Appendix D.

(2) Present Law.

(a) Motion by party in compliance: The portion of C.C.P. 2034(k) relating to motions to augment or amend an expert witness list was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.610 in 2004 without substantive change.

(b) Basis for order: The portion of C.C.P. 2034(k) relating to the basis for the order to augment or amend was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.620 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2034(f), on the information that must be exchanged, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.260 in 2004 without substantive change.

See Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §10.12.(c) Conditions: The portion of C.C.P. 2034(k) relating to conditions on which the order must be based was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.620(d) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2034(i), on the deposition of expert witnesses, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.410 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

(d) Monetary sanctions: The portion of C.C.P. 2034(k) relating to the award of sanctions in connection with motions to augment or amend expert witness information was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.630 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2023, on monetary sanctions generally, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

VII. EXCHANGE OF EXPERT WITNESS INFORMATION

D. Deposition of Other Party's Expert.

1. Applicable Law.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 188

[§ 188] Applicable Law.

(1) Deposition Authorized. A party may take the oral or written deposition of any witness on another party's expert witness list. (C.C.P. 2034(i); see Los Angeles v. Superior Court (Martinez) (1990) 224 C.A.3d 1446, 1457, 274 C.R. 712 [defendant physicians, who had not been designated as experts, were improperly ordered to be deposed concerning their present opinion of propriety of their acts].)

(2) Applicable Procedures. The procedures set forth in C.C.P. 2025 et seq. (supra, §29 et seq.) apply to depositions of expert witnesses, except as otherwise provided in C.C.P. 2034(i). (C.C.P. 2034(i).) The procedures that differ under C.C.P. 2034(i) include those governing the means of securing the deponent's attendance at the deposition (see infra, §195), the place of deposition (see infra, §189), and the fees for an expert's deposition appearance (see infra, §190 et seq.).

(3) Deposition During Summary Judgment Proceedings. C.C.P. 2034 does not preclude depositions of experts who are used in connection with summary judgment or summary adjudication proceedings even when there has not yet been an exchange of experts under that section. Where a party presents evidence that raises a significant question relating to the foundation of an expert's opinion filed in support of or in opposition to a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication, a deposition limited to that subject should be allowed. However, "the process should not be utilized to turn summary proceedings into mini-trials. Whether to grant discovery in a given case falls within the sound discretion of the trial court based upon all of the facts presented. There must be objective facts presented which create a significant question regarding the validity of the affidavit or declaration which, if successfully pursued, will impeach the foundational basis of the affidavit or declaration in question." (St. Mary Med. Center v. Superior Court (1996) 50 C.A.4th 1531, 1540, 58 C.R.2d 182 [distinguishing Los Angeles v. Superior Court, supra, where no summary judgment was pending].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Deposition Authorized. The portion of C.C.P. 2034(i) authorizing the deposition of expert witnesses was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.410 in 2004 without substantive change.

(2) Applicable Procedures. C.C.P. 2025 et seq., on depositions generally, were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

The portion of C.C.P. 2034(i) relating to deposition procedures was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.410 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.(3) Deposition During Summary Judgment Proceedings. C.C.P. 2034, on the exchange of expert witness information, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change. West's Key Number Digest, Pretrial Procedure k.97

[§ 189] Where Taken.

The deposition of a party or a party's retained expert, described in C.C.P. 2034(a)(2) (supra, §183), must be taken within 75 miles of the courthouse where the action is pending. "However, on motion for a protective order by the party designating an expert witness, and on a showing of exceptional hardship, the court may order that the deposition be taken at a more distant place from the courthouse." ## CHAPTER X - Discovery

VII. EXCHANGE OF EXPERT WITNESS INFORMATION

D. Deposition of Other Party's Expert.

3. Fees.

a. To Whom Owed.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 190

[§ 190] To Whom Owed.

(1) Retained Expert. The deposing party pays the fee for any expert, other than a party or employee of a party, who is a retained expert described in C.C.P. 2034(a)(2) (supra, §183). (C.C.P. 2034(i)(2)(A)); on experts' deposition fees generally, see 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §10.10.)

(2) Treating Physician. The deposing party pays the fee for a treating physician and surgeon or other treating health care practitioner, other than a party or employee of a party, who is to be asked during the deposition to express opinion testimony, "including opinion or factual testimony regarding the past or present diagnosis or prognosis made by the practitioner or the reasons for a particular treatment decision made by the practitioner, but not including testimony requiring only the reading of words and symbols contained in the relevant medical record or, if those words and symbols are not legible to the deponent, the approximation by the deponent of what those words or symbols are." (C.C.P. 2034(i)(2)(B).)

This is a change from prior law (former C.C.P. 2037.7(a)), which required payment of the expert's fee only when the deposition was taken "solely for the purpose of obtaining any expert opinion which the deponent [held] upon the basis of his or her special knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education." (See Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2034, in 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C.)

In Brun v. Bailey (1994) 27 C.A.4th 641, 32 C.R.2d 624, a personal injury action arising from an automobile accident, defendant sought to depose a chiropractor who had treated plaintiff. The chiropractor refused to appear unless he was paid expert witness fees. The trial judge granted defendant's motion to compel the chiropractor to appear but limited defendant's questioning to factual matters. After the deposition, the chiropractor moved for a protective order directing defendant to pay him expert witness fees. The trial judge denied the motion. Held, this was proper.

(a) C.C.P. 2034(i)(2) recognizes that a treating physician or health care practitioner may or may not be asked to express an opinion during a deposition; if he is not asked for his expert opinion, he is not entitled to an expert witness fee. (27 C.A.4th 654, 655.)

(b) The statutory entitlement to fees applies even if, as here, the deposition occurs prior to the exchange of expert witness information and therefore the practitioner's name has not been placed on an expert witness list. (27 C.A.4th 656.)

(c) Nevertheless, the chiropractor was not entitled to expert witness fees. Only two questions arguably called for an opinion. The chiropractor had the advice of counsel during the deposition, and counsel frequently objected to questions as calling for an opinion rather than fact. However, counsel did not object to the two questions that might be characterized as calling for an opinion. Furthermore, in the context of a deposition comprising 92 pages of transcript, the two questions were de minimis. (27 C.A.4th 658.)

(3) Design or Survey Professional. The deposing party must pay the fee for an architect, professional engineer, or licensed land surveyor, other than a party or a party's employee, who was involved with the original project design or survey for which the professional is asked to express an opinion that is within his or her expertise and relevant to the action or proceeding. (C.C.P. 2034(i)(2)(C).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Retained Expert. C.C.P. 2034(a)(2), on the designation of retained experts, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.210(b) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2034(i)(2)(A), on the fee for retained experts, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.430(a)(1) in 2004 without substantive change.

See Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §10.10.

(2) Treating Physician. C.C.P. 2034(i)(2)(B), on the fee for treating physicians, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.430(a)(2) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2034(i)(2) (now C.C.P. 2034.430(a)) requires the person taking the treating physician's deposition to pay the physician's reasonable and customary hourly or daily fee. However, it does not convert that fee into a recoverable cost. Under C.C.P. 1033.5(b)(1) (7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Judgment, §129), fees of experts not ordered by the court are not recoverable in the absence of a specific authorizing statute. C.C.P. 2034(i)(2) "is not such a statute." (Baker-Hoey v. Lockheed Martin Corp. (2003) 111 C.A.4th 592, 600, 3 C.R.3d 593 [after defendant obtained summary judgment against several plaintiffs in class action, trial judge properly denied defendant's request for costs of taking deposition of treating physicians for each of those plaintiffs, where physicians were not experts ordered by court].)

VII. EXCHANGE OF EXPERT WITNESS INFORMATION

D. Deposition of Other Party's Expert.

3. Fees.

b. Amount.

[§ 191] Amount.

(1) Time Spent at Deposition. The amount of the fee is the expert's reasonable and customary hourly or daily fee for any time spent at the deposition from the time noticed in the deposition subpoena, or from the time of the arrival of the expert witness should that time be later than the time noticed in the deposition subpoena, until the time the expert witness is dismissed from the deposition, whether or not the expert is actually deposed by a party attending the deposition. The fee may not exceed the fee charged the party retaining the expert, unless the expert donated his or her services to a charitable or other nonprofit organization. (C.C.P. 2034(i)(2); on variable fee schedules, see infra, §192.)

In Marsh v. Mountain Zephyr (1996) 43 C.A.4th 289, 50 C.R.2d 493, the issue was whether the trial judge erred in ordering defendant to pay plaintiff's expert witness, an architect, at the rate of $ 250 per hour, rather than his customary rate of $ 360 per hour, for his deposition testimony. Held, affirmed.

(a) C.C.P. 2034(i)(2) requires the deposing party to pay the "reasonable and customary" hourly or daily fee of the other party's expert for deposition testimony. When the deposing party believes the expert's fee is unreasonable, he may move under C.C.P. 2034(i)(4) (infra, §193) for an order setting the expert's compensation. That provision allows the court to consider the fees usually charged by similar experts for testimonial services and any other factors the court deems appropriate in establishing the "reasonable" fee. The expert is not precluded from charging more than what the court deems reasonable. C.C.P. 2034(i)(2) simply transfers the fee obligation to the deposing party to the extent that the fee is reasonable. "Any fees charged by the expert in excess of the 'reasonable' fee determined by the court remain a matter of negotiation and agreement between the expert witness and the party that designated the expert witness." (43 C.A.4th 300.)

(b) Plaintiff's expert asserts that the trial judge violated his constitutional rights by taking into account a local superior court rule stating that in the collective experience of the court, a fee of $ 200 per hour is representative of the ordinary and customary fees charged for expert testimony by architects in the community. Plaintiff's argument assumes that the rule determines what compensation a private person may charge and receive for his services. But the rule is not a limit on what an expert may be paid. Rather, it simply provides one factor that a trial judge may consider in determining what fee is reasonable under C.C.P. 2034(i)(4). (43 C.A.4th 302.)

(c) The expert also asserts that substantial evidence does not support the trial judge's determination of reasonableness. The substantial evidence rule, however, is inapplicable: It is clearly within the trial judge's discretion to determine what factors he will consider, and it follows that the fee determination itself must be within the judge's discretion. Here, the expert has failed to show that the trial judge abused his discretion. (43 C.A.4th 303, 304.)

(2) Travel and Preparation. The designating party is responsible for the expert's travel expenses and any fee for preparing for the deposition. (C.C.P. 2034(i)(2).) This is a change from previous law, which required the party taking the deposition to reimburse the expert for the cost of travel to the deposition site. (Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2034, in 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C.)

(3) Applicability to Workers' Compensation Action. The fee is payable in a workers' compensation case in which a party desires to depose any expert on another party's expert witness list. (C.C.P. 2034(i)(2).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Time Spent at Deposition. The portion of C.C.P. 2034(i)(2) relating to calculation of the amount of the fee was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.430(b) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2034(i)(4), on motions for an order setting the compensation of an expert, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.470 in 2004 without substantive change. (2) Travel and Preparation. The portion of C.C.P. 2034(i)(2) relating to reimbursement for travel and preparation expenses was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.440 in 2004 without substantive change.

See Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2034, in Hogan, 2 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, Appendix D.

(3) Applicability to Workers' Compensation Action. The portion of C.C.P. 2034(i)(2) making the statute applicable to workers' compensation proceedings was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.430(f) in 2004 without substantive change.

CHAPTER X - Discovery

VII. EXCHANGE OF EXPERT WITNESS INFORMATION

D. Deposition of Other Party's Expert.

3. Fees.

c. Variable Fee Schedule.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 192

[§ 192] Variable Fee Schedule.

In Rancho Bernardo Dev. Co. v. Superior Court (1992) 2 C.A.4th 358, 2 C.R.2d 878, the court construed C.C.P. 2034(i)(2) (supra, §190) in its application to the following situation: One of plaintiff's experts, architect S, devoted a considerable portion of his practice to expert investigation. He adopted a standard fee schedule, charging $ 200 per hour for ordinary services and consultation, and $ 250 per hour for depositions and court appearances. Plaintiff and S contended that he was entitled to charge the $ 250 fee for testimony at petitioner's discovery deposition. Held, the contention was sound; such variations in fee charges are appropriate.

(a) "In reaching this decision we make two subsidiary determinations. The first is that it is not only customary and usual but also reasonable for an expert to demand higher fees for testimonial service than for other service. The process of giving formal testimony under oath, whether it be in court or by deposition, is an obviously more stressful and tense activity than consulting with your client in his office. The fact that the testimony is sworn, and is designed to be preserved for future precise reference, in and of itself makes the service more valuable than other activities of an expert. The existence of several-tier fee schedules, in use by virtually all experts, while perhaps not the ultimate justification for same, at least testifies to the industry consensus in their acceptance." (2 C.A.4th 362.)

(b) "The second determination is that the statute does not preclude the use of variable fee schedules, nor does it limit the fee for deposition services to whatever lower fee might be charged for investigative services." (2 C.A.4th 362.)

(c) "More important, perhaps, is that we follow the basic maxim that words of a statute are, when unambiguous, to be interpreted literally, and given their common and ordinary meaning. ... The entire focus of section 2034(i)(2) is upon the taking of the deposition of an opposing party's expert. The payment required of the opposing party is 'the expert's reasonable and customary hourly or daily fee for the actual time consumed in the examination of that expert. ...' Literally, therefore, the statute specifies that the payment shall be at the rate charged by the expert for deposition testimony. The limit imposed by subsequent language of the subdivision is that this shall not exceed the fee charged the party who retained the expert. Knowing, as we do (and presumably as the all-knowing Legislature also knew) that experts customarily charge more for depositions than for other work, it would be nonsensical to limit the testimonial charge to the amount charged for nontestimonial work. The first measure of compensation (the reasonable fee) would always be then reduced by the second measure (the lower rate charged for ordinary services), thus making the first and presumably principal fee definition inoperative." (2 C.A.4th 363.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

C.C.P. 2034(i)(2), on expert witness fees, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.430 in 2004 without substantive change.

D. Deposition of Other Party's Expert.

3. Fees.

d. Order Setting Compensation.

[§ 193] Order Setting Compensation.

(1) Motion for Order. A party who deems the expert's hourly or daily fee unreasonable may move for an order setting the expert's compensation. Notice of the motion must be given to the expert. The motion must be accompanied by a declaration showing a reasonable and good faith attempt at an informal resolution of each issue presented. The attempt at informal resolution must have included either the party or the expert providing the other with proof of the ordinary and customary fee that the expert has actually charged and received for similar services, the total number of times that the expert has charged and received the presently demanded fee, and the frequency and regularity with which the expert has charged and received that fee over the last 2 years. (C.C.P. 2034(i)(4)); on monetary sanctions for failure to attempt informal resolution, see infra, §252.)

(2) Court's Determination. These same items of proof should be provided to the court to aid in its determination about the reasonableness of the fee. The court may also consider the ordinary and customary fees charged by similar experts for similar services within the relevant community, along with any other necessary or appropriate factors. If the court decides that the expert's demanded fee is unreasonable, it will set the fee. (C.C.P. 2034(i)(4).)

(3) Monetary Sanctions. The court must impose monetary sanctions under C.C.P. 2023 (see infra, §252) against someone who unsuccessfully makes or opposes a motion to set the expert witness fee, unless it finds the one subject to sanctions acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make imposing sanctions unjust. (C.C.P. 2034(i)(4).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Motion for Order. C.C.P. 2034(i)(4), relating to motions for an order setting compensation, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.470 in 2004 without substantive change.

See 20 California Lawyer 70 (May 2000) [how to evaluate reasonableness of, and challenge, expert witness fee].

(2) Court's Determination. The portion of C.C.P. 2034(i)(4) relating to the determination of a motion for an order setting compensation was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.470(c)-(e) in 2004 without substantive change.(3) Monetary Sanctions. C.C.P. 2023, on monetary sanctions generally, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

The portion of C.C.P. 2034(i)(4) relating to the imposition of sanctions in connection with a motion for an order setting an expert witness fee was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.470(g) in 2004 without substantive change.

VII. EXCHANGE OF EXPERT WITNESS INFORMATION

D. Deposition of Other Party's Expert.

4. Party's Obligation To Produce Expert.

[§ 195] Party's Obligation To Produce Expert.

(1) Retained Experts. Service of a proper deposition notice accompanied by tender of the fee described in C.C.P. 2034(i)(2) (supra, §190 et seq.) "is effective to require the party employing or retaining the expert to produce the expert for the deposition." (C.C.P. 2034(i)(3).) Thus, a deposition subpoena (see supra, §42 et seq.) is not required to secure the attendance of the retained "opinion" experts described in C.C.P. 2034(a)(2) (supra, §183). (See Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2034, in 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C [stating that statute codifies holding to that effect in Tahoe Forest Inn v. Superior Court (1979) 99 C.A.3d 509, 160 C.R. 314]; see also C.E.B., 2 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §11.44; 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §10.9; on law that deposition subpoena is not needed for party or party's employee, see supra, §39.)

If the party noticing the deposition fails to tender the expert's fee, the expert may not be deposed at that time unless the parties stipulate otherwise. (C.C.P. 2034(i)(3).)

(2) Other Experts. In Hurtado v. Western Med. Center (1990) 222 C.A.3d 1198, 272 C.R. 324, a medical malpractice action, plaintiff responded to defendants' demand for an exchange of expert witness information by designating three doctors as her treating physicians. After defendants served notice of deposition of the three doctors, the parties were unable to agree on a date, and a conflict developed concerning which party had the burden to produce the experts for deposition. The trial judge ruled that the burden was on plaintiff, because she had designated the doctors as experts, and thus, the trial judge imposed sanctions when the doctors failed to attend. Held, this was error. C.C.P. 2034 distinguishes between percipient witnesses, i.e., those acquiring information by personal observation, and retained experts, and places the burden of producing an expert witness for deposition on the designating party only if the witness is a retained expert and the noticing party has tendered the expert witness fees. Here, the witnesses were not retained for the purpose of forming an opinion, but rather were designated as experts because, as the treating physicians, they might be required to give an expert opinion. (222 C.A.3d 1203.) (See C.E.B., 2 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §11.45; 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §10.9.)

CHAPTER X - Discovery

VII. EXCHANGE OF EXPERT WITNESS INFORMATION

E. Failure To Comply.

1. Exclusion of Testimony.
  - b. Exceptions.

[§ 197] Exceptions.

(1) Pretrial Proceedings. In Kennedy v. Modesto City Hosp. (1990) 221 C.A.3d 575, 270 C.R. 544, the court held that noncompliance with C.C.P. 2034 does not render expert testimony inadmissible in a pretrial summary judgment proceeding. From the use throughout C.C.P. 2034 of such terms as "trial date," "trial witnesses," "evidence at the trial," "testify at trial," etc., and from the express language of the exclusionary provision (C.C.P. 2034(j); see supra, §196), it appears that the Legislature "had in mind the exclusion of expert testimony offered by noncomplying parties at trial, not at a pretrial proceeding." (221 C.A.3d 582.)

(2) Impeachment. A party may call an expert he or she has not designated as a rebuttal witness to impeach the testimony of another party's expert witness. The expert may testify to the falsity or nonexistence of a fact used as the foundation for any opinion by an expert witness called by another party, but an undesignated expert witness may not contradict the opinion itself. (C.C.P. 2034(m).) The Commission noted that the word "impeachment" is "broad enough in its meaning under the Evidence Code to permit the argument that any unlisted expert may be called simply to contradict an opinion expressed at trial by another party's expert." (Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2034, in 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C.) Kennemur v. California (1982) 133 C.A.3d 907, 184 C.R. 393, recognized that if "impeachment" is given such a broad meaning, the purposes behind expert witness exchanges would be substantially undermined. Accordingly, C.C.P. 2034(m) represents the Commission's attempt to prevent the mere contradiction of a designated expert's opinion by an unlisted expert. (Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2034, in 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C.) (See Fish v. Guevara (1993) 12 C.A.4th 142, 146, 15 C.R.2d 329 [following Kennemur]; Howard Contracting v. G. A. MacDonald Const. Co. (1998) 71 C.A.4th 38, 54, 83 C.R.2d 590 [following Kennemur; testimony contradicting opinion expressed by other party's expert about accepted accounting practices for calculating overhead and costs is "explicitly proscribed" by C.C.P. 2034(m)]; C.E.B., 2 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §11.62; 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §10.14.)

(3) Other Party's Deposed Experts. A party may call the expert of another party if that expert has been deposed under C.C.P. 2034(i) (supra, §188). (C.C.P. 2034(m); see Powell v. Superior Court (1989) 211 C.A.3d 441, 443, 259 C.R. 390.)

(2) Impeachment. The portion of C.C.P. 2034(m) relating to the calling of nondesignated impeachment witnesses was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.310(b) in 2004 without substantive change.

See Mizel v. Santa Monica (2001) 93 C.A.4th 1059, 1068, 113 C.R.2d 649 [in personal injury action in which emergency room doctor testified that alcohol he smelled on plaintiff's breath did not necessarily mean plaintiff was drunk, trial judge properly excluded testimony of defendant's undisclosed expert witness intended to impeach doctor's testimony; witness' testimony would not have challenged foundational facts of doctor's testimony but would have merely rendered contrary opinion]; Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2034, in Hogan, 2 Cal. ### VII. EXCHANGE OF EXPERT WITNESS INFORMATION

E. Failure To Comply.

1. Exclusion of Testimony.

c. Illustrations.

[§ 198] Illustrations.

(1) Testimony Not Permitted. In Bonds v. Roy (1999) 20 C.4th 140, 83 C.R.2d 289, 973 P.2d 66, plaintiff sued defendant for medical malpractice, contending that defendant had negligently severed a nerve in plaintiff's arm during surgery. Defendant designated an orthopedic surgeon as an expert and submitted an expert witness declaration describing the expert's expected testimony as relating to damages. At his deposition, the expert testified that he had been retained "to evaluate the disability of plaintiff at the time I saw him" and "to evaluate how much disability he was [having] prior to the surgery, based on the records." The expert specifically confirmed that he did not expect "to be giving any testimony or any opinion concerning the standard of care issues that might be involved in this case." Nevertheless, at trial, defendant's counsel sought permission to expand the scope of the expert's testimony to include whether plaintiff's injury was consistent with a cut nerve or merely a stretched nerve, and the standard of care as to immediate reoperation and consultation with a neurologist. The trial court declined the request. The jury returned a verdict for plaintiff. Held, judgment affirmed.

(a) A trial court may preclude an expert witness from testifying at trial on a subject whose general substance was not previously described in an expert witness declaration.

(1) The phrase "expert witness declaration" in C.C.P. 2034(f)(2) (supra, §184) is a term of art, referring to a declaration that meets each of five separate content requirements (20 C.4th 146), including the requirement that the declaration contain a brief narrative statement of the general substance of the testimony that the expert is expected to give (20 C.4th 145). Hence, a party submits an expert witness declaration under C.C.P. 2034(j)(2) (supra, §196) when it submits a declaration that complies with all these requirements. (20 C.4th 146.)

(2) The elaborate amendment provisions of C.C.P. 2034(k) (supra, §187), which are expressly cross-referenced in C.C.P. 2034(j), would be meaningless if the exclusion sanction of C.C.P. 2034(j) could be invoked only when a party failed to submit an expert witness declaration altogether. C.C.P. 2034(k) requires a party to move to amend the declaration if there are deviations in "the general substance of the testimony that an expert previously designated is expected to give." If the motion is denied, the denial will have no practical effect unless the testimony is excluded. (20 C.4th 146.)

(3) The purpose of C.C.P. 2034 is to give fair notice of what an expert will say at trial (20 C.4th 146), which allows the parties to assess whether to take the expert's deposition, to explore fully the relevant subject area at a deposition, and to select an expert who can respond with a competing opinion on that subject area (20 C.4th 147). When an expert is permitted to testify at trial on a previously undisclosed subject area, opposing parties lack a fair opportunity to prepare for cross-examination or rebuttal. "It makes little practical difference whether the party proffering the expert testimony failed to submit an expert witness declaration or submitted an inaccurate one." (20 C.4th 147.)

(4) The opinions of the Courts of Appeal in Martinez v. Poway (1993) 12 C.A.4th 425, 15 C.R.2d 644, and Castaneda v. Bornstein (1995) 36 C.A.4th 1818, 43 C.R.2d 10, are disapproved to the extent they reach a result contrary to the one here. (20 C.4th 149, footnote 4.) Those courts incorrectly construed an amendment to C.C.P. 2034(j). The subdivision's exclusion sanction originally applied to a party that failed to "state in an expert witness declaration the general substance of the testimony of that expert," but was amended to apply to a party that unreasonably fails to "submit an expert witness declaration." Contrary to the suggestion in Castaneda and Martinez, the amendment, considered in the context of the statute as a whole, is best viewed as an extension of the exclusion sanction to cover any unreasonable failure to comply with the expert witness declaration requirements of C.C.P. 2034(f)(2). (20 C.4th 148.)

(5) Moreover, the suggestion in Castaneda that "remedies short of evidence exclusion" are available when a party fails to comply with the requirement to disclose the general substance of that testimony is not persuasive. The suggested remedies, such as requiring the party to submit a detailed declaration as to the expert's expected testimony, making the expert available for deposition at the designating party's expense, and allowing the opposing party to designate additional experts, are nearly all already required by C.C.P. 2034(f)(2) and (k). (20 C.4th 148.)

(b) If a party wishes to expand the scope of an expert's testimony beyond what is stated in the declaration, it must successfully move for leave to amend the declaration. Defendant concedes that he never moved under C.C.P. 2034(k) to amend the expert witness declaration to include the subject matter of standard of care. Even if defendant's counsel's request to expand the scope of the expert's testimony were considered an implicit motion, the trial court acted well within its discretion in denying it. The expert was the last defense witness, testifying in the afternoon of the last day of testimony. Defendant did not even attempt to expand the scope of the expert's testimony until just before the expert took the stand, and defendant's trial counsel offered no excuse for his failure to do so earlier. Thus, there was no practical opportunity for plaintiff to depose the expert or for plaintiff's own experts to rebut the expert's testimony. (20 C.4th 149.)

Other cases in which the expert's testimony was excluded include:

Richaud v. Jennings (1993) 16 C.A.4th 81, 90, 91, 19 C.R.2d 790 [trial judge properly excluded testimony of plaintiff's new expert witness where plaintiff failed to move under C.C.P. 2034(k) (amendment and augmentation of list; supra, §187) to substitute expert for one already designated].

Province v. Center for Women's Health & Family Birth (1993) 20 C.A.4th 1673, 1683, 1684, 25 C.R.2d 667 [in negligence action against medical center arising from birth complications, trial judge committed reversible error in allowing doctor, called by defendant as percipient witness and not named as expert witness, to give opinion as to when knot in plaintiff's umbilical cord occurred].

(2) Testimony Permitted. Examples of cases in which C.C.P. 2034(j) did not require exclusion of expert testimony include:

Stanchfield v. Hamer Toyota (1995) 37 C.A.4th 1495, 1504, 44 C.R.2d 565 [although defendant's expert was not ready at scheduled deposition, plaintiff acted unreasonably in waiting until expert was scheduled to take stand at trial to voice first objection; motion to exclude testimony was properly denied].

Plunkett v. Spaulding (1997) 52 C.A.4th 114, 60 C.R.2d 377 [instead of excluding testimony under C.C.P. 2034(j), trial court should have allowed plaintiff to submit tardy expert witness declaration under C.C.P. 2034(l), infra, §199].

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Testimony Not Permitted. C.C.P. 2034(f)(2), on expert witness declarations, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P.

2034.260(c) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2034(j), on the exclusion of expert testimony, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.300 in 2004 without substantive change. C.C.P. 2034(j)(2), on exclusion for failure to submit an expert witness declaration, became C.C.P. 2034.300(b).

C.C.P. 2034(k), on augmentation or amendment of the expert witness list, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.610 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

See Jones v. Moore (2000) 80 C.A.4th 557, 564, 565, 95 C.R.2d 216 [where plaintiff's expert testified in deposition as to certain opinions, and said that those were his only opinions and that he would notify defense if he had others, trial judge properly prevented plaintiff from questioning him at trial on other opinions as to which he had not provided notice; plaintiff's conduct in this regard was similar to unreasonably failing to make expert available for deposition within meaning of C.C.P. 2034(j) (now C.C.P. 2034.300)]. (2) Testimony Permitted. C.C.P. 2034(j), on the exclusion of expert testimony, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.300 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2034(l), on motions for late exchange, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.710 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

See Jones v. Moore, supra, 80 C.A.4th 566 [in legal malpractice action, ambit of defendant's expert witness declaration, which stated that expert would testify as family law expert, was sufficiently broad to permit expert to opine that defendant did not fall below standard of care in underlying marital dissolution by failing to join husband's pension plan as party or use plan as security for equalizing promissory note]; DePalma v. Rodriguez (2007) 151 C.A.4th 159, 165, 59 C.R.3d 479 [testimony of defendant's biomechanic expert was properly admitted where it constituted merely expanded description and interpretation of conclusions stated in his deposition testimony; distinguishing Bonds v. Roy (1999) 20 C.4th 140, 83 C.R.2d 289, 973 P.2d 66, text, p. 1027, which involved scope of expert witness declaration, and Jones v. Moore, supra, 80 C.A.4th 564, 565, where expert, after giving opinions in deposition, stated that they were only opinions he would offer at trial].

CHAPTER X - Discovery

VII. EXCHANGE OF EXPERT WITNESS INFORMATION

E. Failure To Comply.

2. Permission To Submit Tardy Information.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 199

[§ 199] Permission To Submit Tardy Information.

(1) Motion for Late Exchange. A party who fails to provide expert witness information by the date of exchange may move to submit the information at a later date. The motion must be made a sufficient time in advance of the time limit for the completion of discovery under C.C.P. 2024 (supra, §23) "to permit the deposition of any expert to whom the motion relates to be taken within that time limit. However, under exceptional circumstances, the court may permit the motion to be made at a later time." The motion must be accompanied by a declaration showing a reasonable and good faith attempt at an informal resolution of each issue presented. (C.C.P. 2034(l); see C.E.B., 2 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §11.39 et seq.; 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §10.13; on monetary sanctions for failure to attempt informal resolution, see infra, §252.)

(2) Basis for Order. The motion must be granted only if the court, "after taking into account the extent to which the opposing party has relied on the absence of a list of expert witnesses," determines that the opposing party will not be prejudiced and that the moving party (a) failed to submit information "as the result of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect," (b) made the motion promptly, and (c) promptly served on all other parties a copy of the proposed witness lists and declarations described in C.C.P. 2034(f) (supra, §182 et seq.). (C.C.P. 2034(l).) This provision is intended to provide relief from default similar to that provided by C.C.P. 473 and is meant to supersede C.C.P. 473 with respect to this discovery device. (Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2034, in 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C.) (See Plunkett v. Spaulding (1997) 52 C.A.4th 114, 136, 137, 60 C.R.2d 377 [refusal to grant motion to submit tardy expert witness declaration was error, where initial failure to file declaration was due to honest mistake of law, plaintiff's counsel acted promptly to attempt to rectify mistake, and defendant's counsel made no specific showing of prejudice]; Williams v. Volkswagenwerk Aktiengesellschaft (1986) 180 C.A.3d 1244, 1256, 226 C.R. 306 [permitting testimony under predecessor to C.C.P. 2034(j) (former C.C.P. 2037.6)]; 58 A.L.R.4th 653 [propriety of allowing testimony of expert witness whose name or address was not disclosed during pretrial discovery proceedings].)

(3) Conditions. The order must be conditioned on the moving party making the expert available immediately for a deposition under C.C.P. 2034(i) (supra, §188), "and on such other terms as may be just." For example, the court may allow a party opposing the motion to designate additional expert witnesses or to elicit additional opinions from those previously designated, continue the trial for a reasonable period of time, or award costs and litigation expenses to a party opposing the motion. (C.C.P. 2034(l).)

(4) Monetary Sanctions. The court must impose monetary sanctions under C.C.P. 2023 (see infra, §252) against someone who unsuccessfully makes or opposes a motion to submit tardy expert witness information, unless it finds the one subject to sanctions acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make imposing sanctions unjust.

(C.C.P. 2034(l).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Motion for Late Exchange. C.C.P. 2024, on discovery time limits, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2024.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

The portion of C.C.P. 2034(l) setting forth the procedure for moving for late exchange was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.710 in 2004 without substantive change.

See C.E.B., 2 Civil Discovery Practice 4th, §11.57 et seq.; Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §10.13.

(2) Basis for Order. C.C.P. 2034(f), on the methods of exchanging expert witness lists and declarations, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.260 in 2004 without substantive change.

The portion of C.C.P. 2034(l) specifying the basis for the order was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.720 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2034(j), on the exclusion of expert testimony, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.300 in 2004 without substantive change.

See Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2034, in Hogan, 2 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, Appendix D.(3) Conditions. C.C.P. 2034(i), on the deposition of expert witnesses, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.410 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

The portion of C.C.P. 2034(l) specifying conditions for the order was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.720(d) in 2004 without substantive change.

(4) Monetary Sanctions. C.C.P. 2023, on monetary sanctions generally, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

The portion of C.C.P. 2034(l) authorizing sanctions in connection with motions to submit tardy expert witness information was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.730 in 2004 without substantive change.

VIII. EXCHANGE OF INFORMATION IN CONDEMNATION

A. Statutory Authorization.

[§ 200] Statutory Authorization.

(1) Former Law. The 1967 Legislature enacted a chapter entitled "Exchange of Information in Eminent Domain Proceedings" (former C.C.P. 1272.01 et seq.), based on experience primarily gained in the Los Angeles Superior Court. (See Swartzman v. Superior Court (1964) 231 C.A.2d 195, 41 C.R. 721, supra, §63; Mack v. Superior Court (1968) 259 C.A.2d 7, 11, 66 C.R. 280, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §145 [work product protected]; Nestle v. Santa Monica (1972) 6 C.3d 920, 929, 101 C.R. 568, 496 P.2d 480 [usefulness of exchanging appraisal reports]; 20 Hastings L. J. 650 [comparison of state and federal practices]; 6 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 447 [mutuality of discovery in California eminent domain].)

(2) Present Law. In 1975, the Legislature repealed former C.C.P. 1272.01 et seq., enacting a new Eminent Domain Law, C.C.P. 1230.010 et seq. (See 8 Summary (9th), Constitutional Law, §953 et seq.) The discovery provisions are in C.C.P. 1258.010 et seq. (See C.E.B., 1 Condemnation Practice 2d, §9.6 et seq.; Cal. Civil Practice, 2 Real Property Litigation, §15.64 et seq.; C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Discovery §18.25 et seq.)

The provisions of C.C.P. 1258.010 et seq. supplement, but do not replace, restrict, or prevent the use of discovery procedures or limit the matters that are discoverable in eminent domain proceedings. (C.C.P. 1258.010.) And nothing in the provisions makes evidence admissible that is not otherwise admissible or permits a witness to base an opinion on a matter that is not a proper basis for the opinion. VIII. EXCHANGE OF INFORMATION IN CONDEMNATION

B. Procedure.

1. Demand.

[§ 201] Demand.

A party may file and serve on another party a demand to exchange lists of expert witnesses and statements of valuation data. This must be done not later than the 10th day after the trial date is selected. On noticed motion and a showing of good cause, the court may permit a party to serve the demand on another party at a later time. (C.C.P. 1258.210(a).)

The demand must describe the property to which it relates, although the description may be by reference to the complaint, and must include a statement in substantially the following form:

"You are required to serve and deposit with the clerk of court a list of expert witnesses and statements of valuation data in compliance with Article 2 ... [C.C.P. 1258.210 et seq.] not later than the date of exchange to be set in accordance with that article. Except as otherwise provided in that article, your failure to do so will constitute a waiver of your right to call unlisted expert witnesses during your case in chief and of your right to introduce on direct examination during your case in chief any matter that is required to be, but is not, set forth in your statements of valuation data." (C.C.P. 1258.210(b); see C.E.B., 1 Condemnation Practice 2d, §9.8; Cal. Civil Practice, 2 Real Property Litigation, §§15.65, 15.71.)

2. Date of Exchange.

[§ 202] Date of Exchange.

The date of exchange is the date to which the party who served a demand and the served party agree for the exchange of their lists of expert witnesses and statements of valuation data. But if no agreement is reached, the date is 60 days before trial commences on the issue of compensation or the date set by the court on noticed motion of either party, for good cause. (C.C.P. 1258.220.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

C.C.P. 1258.220 was amended in 2001 to change the date of exchange from 60 to 90 days before commencement of the trial. The amended statute additionally provides that, unless otherwise agreed by the parties, the date of exchange may not be earlier than 9 months after the date of commencement of the proceeding.

a. Exchange and Deposit.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 203

[§ 203] Exchange and Deposit.

(1) Duties of Parties. Not later than the date of exchange, the parties must take the following actions:

(a) Each party who served a demand and each party on whom a demand was served must deposit with the court clerk a list of expert witnesses and statements of valuation data. (C.C.P. 1258.230(a)(1).)

(b) A demanding party must serve its list and statements on each party on whom it served a demand. (C.C.P. 1258.230(a)(2).)

(c) Each party on whom a demand was served must serve a list and statements on the party who served the demand. (C.C.P. 1258.230(a)(3).)

(2) Duties of Clerk. For each list of expert witnesses and statement of valuation data deposited, the court clerk must make an entry in the register of actions. The lists and statements are not filed, but are available to the trial judge at the beginning of trial for the limited purpose of enabling the judge to apply the statutory provisions. At the trial's end, unless the judge orders otherwise, the clerk must return all lists and statements to the attorneys for the parties who deposited them. Lists or statements retained under court order may later be destroyed or otherwise disposed of like exhibits introduced at the trial. (C.C.P. 1258.230(b); on destruction of exhibits, see C.C.P. 1952 et seq., 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Courts, §382.)

b. Witnesses for Whom Valuation Statement Is Required.

[§ 204] Witnesses for Whom Valuation Statement Is Required.

The number of statements of valuation data will vary according to the number of relevant witnesses. A statement must be exchanged for each person the party intends to call to testify on any of the following matters:

- (1) The value of the property being taken (C.C.P. 1258.250(a));
- (2) The amount of damage, if any, to the remainder of the larger parcel from which the property is taken (C.C.P. 1258.250(b));
- (3) The amount of benefit, if any, to the remainder of the larger parcel from which the property is taken (C.C.P. 1258.250(c)); or
- (4) The amount of other compensation that should be paid (C.C.P. 1258.250(d)). (See Padre Dam Mun. Water Dist. v. Burkhardt (1995) 38 C.A.4th 988, 993, 45 C.R.2d 506 [although property coowner had right to testify as to value of property, it was reversible error to admit his testimony in absence of compliance with exchange requirements].)

B. Procedure.

3. Witness Lists and Valuation Statements.

c. Contents.

[§ 205] Contents.

(1) Expert Witness List. The list of expert witnesses must include the name, business or residence address, and business occupation or profession of each person the party intends to call as an expert, together with a statement of the subject matter to which the expert's testimony relates. (C.C.P. 1258.240; see C.E.B., 1 Condemnation Practice 2d, §9.9; Cal. Civil Practice, 2 Real Property Litigation, §15.67.)

(2) Statement of Valuation Data. The required statement of valuation data is lengthy and specific. Each statement must give the name and business or residence address of the witness, must state whether the witness will testify about a matter listed in C.C.P. 1258.250 (supra, §204), must reveal what the witness' opinion is, and must show specified data (e.g., the highest and best use of the property, zoning, cost of reproducing or replacing improvements on the property) on which the opinion is based. (C.C.P. 1258.260; see C.E.B., 1 Condemnation Practice 2d, §9.10; Cal. Civil Practice, 2 Real Property Litigation, §15.67.)

Although C.C.P. 1258.260 does not explicitly address business goodwill valuation problems, its intent is to expose the expert's opinion on that subject when it is in issue. And the section "should be liberally construed to provide for a general statement of the expert's proposed testimony, with specifics covering the listed factors and any other supporting factors upon which the expert relies." (Fresno v. Harrison (1984) 154 C.A.3d 296, 303, 201 C.R. 219.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Statement of Valuation Data. C.C.P. 1258.260 was amended in 2001 to provide that if the items on which the witness will give an opinion include loss of goodwill, the valuation statement must include the method used by the expert to determine that loss and a summary of the data supporting the opinion. The amendment codifies the rule of Fresno v. Harrison (1984) 154 C.A.3d 296, 201 C.R. 219, text, p. 1034. (Law Rev. Com. Comment.)

[§ 206] Additions.

(1) Duty To Notify. A party who has served a list of expert witnesses and statements of valuation data must "diligently" give notice to the parties served under any of the following circumstances:

(a) If the party decides to call an expert witness not included in the list to testify on direct examination during the party's case in chief.

(b) If the party decides to call a witness to testify on direct examination during the party's case in chief on an opinion or data that should have been listed in the statement of valuation data for that witness but was omitted.

(c) If the party discovers data that should have been listed in a statement of valuation data but was not. (C.C.P. 1258.270; see Cal. Civil Practice, 2 Real Property Litigation, §15.69; on effect of diligent notification, see infra, §207.)

(2) Contents of Notice. The required notice must include the specified information about expert witnesses (C.C.P. 1258.240, supra, §205) and valuation data (C.C.P. 1258.260, supra, §205). The notice must be in writing, unless it is given after trial has begun. (C.C.P. 1258.270.)

VIII. EXCHANGE OF INFORMATION IN CONDEMNATION

B. Procedure.

4. Failure To Comply.

a. Excusable.

[§ 207] Excusable.

If a party should have included a witness, an opinion, or other data in a list of expert witnesses or statements of valuation data, but did not do so, the trial court may nonetheless allow the party to call the witness or permit a witness to testify to that opinion or data on direct examination during the party's case in chief. (C.C.P. 1258.290(a).) The court may do so after making the following findings:

(1) The party made a good faith effort to comply with the statute (C.C.P. 1258.210 et seq.).

(2) The party gave notice in accordance with C.C.P. 1258.270 (supra, §206).

The trial court should grant permission "on terms that may be just," including, but not limited to, continuing the trial for a reasonable time and awarding costs and litigation expenses. (C.C.P. 1258.290(a).)

In making its determination, the trial court must take into account the extent to which the opposing party relied on the list of expert witnesses and statements of valuation data, and consider whether the opposing party would be prejudiced if the witness is called or the testimony given. (C.C.P. 1258.290(b)); for decisions under former law, which was substantially similar to C.C.P. 1258.290, see People v. Douglas (1971) 15 C.A.3d 814, 820, 93 C.R. 644 [lengthy oral argument was adequate notice of intention to use unlisted expert as witness]; Nestle v. Santa Monica (1972) 6 C.3d 920, 929, 101 C.R. 568, 496 P.2d 480 [defendant failed to comply, but plaintiff did not object or request continuance; defendant's failure not ground for reversal]; 6 *Loyola L.A. #### 4. Failure To Comply.

b. Inexcusable.

[§ 208] Inexcusable.

(1) Sanctions. Unless the failure to provide required data is excused (see supra, §207), a party who has complied with the statute may make an objection to protect itself from the other party's default. (C.C.P. 1258.280.) The following sanctions must then be imposed:

(a) No party required to serve a list of expert witnesses on the objecting party may call an expert witness to testify on direct examination during the party's case-in-chief unless the information required by C.C.P. 1258.240 (supra, §205) was included on the list served. (C.C.P. 1258.280(a).)

(b) No party required to serve statements of valuation data on the objecting party may call a witness to give an opinion on direct examination during the case in chief about a matter listed in C.C.P. 1258.250 (supra, §204), unless a statement of valuation data for the witness was served. (C.C.P. 1258.280(b).)

(c) During the case in chief of a party required to serve statements of valuation data on an objecting party, no witness called by the obligated party may testify on direct examination to an opinion or data that should have been, but was not, listed in the statement of valuation data. However, testimony that merely explains or elaborates on the listed data is not inadmissible. (C.C.P. 1258.280(c).) (For decisions under former law, which was substantially similar to C.C.P. 1258.280, see Regents of Univ. of Calif. v. Morris (1968) 266 C.A.2d 616, 629, 72 C.R. 406 [plaintiff's counsel provided only "barebones" information; failure to strike held prejudicial error]; 6 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 460 [discussing Morris]; People v. Los Angeles (1969) 273 C.A.2d 46, 53, 77 C.R. 875 [pretrial order required designation of any expert witness, not just appraisers; proposed testimony by unlisted experts about future zoning changes properly excluded]; People v. Younger (1970) 5 C.A.3d 575, 580, 86 C.R. 237 [pretrial order required exchange of appraisers' reports; subpena for unlisted appraiser properly quashed].)

(2) Other Means of Presenting Excluded Evidence. The Law Revision Commission Comment points out that C.C.P. 1258.280 limits only the presentation of evidence during the case-in-chief; it does not preclude a party from calling a witness in rebuttal or having a witness give proper rebuttal testimony, and it places no limits on proper redirect examination to meet matters brought out on cross-examination of the party's witness. However, a party will not be allowed to defeat the purpose of the rule by reserving witnesses and valuation data for use in rebuttal where the witnesses should have been called and the valuation data presented on direct examination during the case in chief. (See Monterey v. W. W. Leasing Unlimited (1980) 109 C.A.3d 636, 644, 167 C.R. 12.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Sanctions. See Santa Clarita v. NTS Technical Systems (2006) 137 C.A.4th 264, 276, 40 C.R.3d 244 [in eminent domain action, testimony of defendants' expert witness was properly excluded, where appraisal relied on by expert did not comply with date agreed on for exchange of expert witness lists and valuation data, and was not served on date 90 days prior to commencement of trial or date set by court based on good cause; trial judge's findings of lack of good faith, absence of requisite notice, and inexcusable delay were supported by ample evidence].

CHAPTER X - Discovery

VIII. EXCHANGE OF INFORMATION IN CONDEMNATION
C. Related Discovery Procedures.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 209

[§ 209] Related Discovery Procedures.

(1) Alternatives to C.C.P. 1258.010 et seq. The procedures established by C.C.P. 1258.010 are subject to local variation. By court rule, a superior court may provide a procedure for the exchange of valuation data that can be used in lieu of the statutory procedure if the Judicial Council finds that the local procedure "serves the same purpose and is an adequate substitute" for the statutory procedure. (C.C.P. 1258.300.)

(2) Procedures in Addition to C.C.P. 1258.010 et seq. A party to an exchange of lists of expert witnesses and statements of valuation data, as provided in C.C.P. 1258.210 et seq. or pursuant to local court rule under C.C.P. 1258.300, may obtain discovery after the time of the exchange from the other party to the exchange and from any person the other party listed as an expert witness. (C.C.P. 1258.020(b).)

Proceedings under C.C.P. 1258.020(b) may be carried out without a court order and may proceed until not later than 20 days before the trial date on the issue of compensation. This is so notwithstanding any other statute or any court rule relating to discovery. (C.C.P. 1258.020(a); C.E.B., 1 Condemnation Practice 2d, §9.5; Cal. Civil Practice, 2 Real Property Litigation, §15.68.)

On noticed motion by a person subjected to discovery under C.C.P. 1258.020(b), the court may make an order that justice requires to protect the person from annoyance, embarrassment or oppression. (C.C.P. 1258.020(c).)

CHAPTER X - Discovery

IX. PERPETUATION AND PRESERVATION OF EVIDENCE

A. Nature of Proceeding.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 210

[§ 210] Nature of Proceeding.

(1) Former Law. Statutes predating the 1957 Act recognized the equitable proceeding to perpetuate testimony by taking of depositions in anticipation of litigation, where there was danger that the witness might become unavailable. Because of the restrictions on depositions, the perpetuation statute was frequently employed not to preserve testimony in danger of being lost, but for discovery purposes. (See Demaree v. Superior Court (1937) 10 C.2d 99, 103, 73 P.2d 605; Superior Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1951) 37 C.2d 749, 753, 235 P.2d 833; Block v. Superior Court (1963) 219 C.A.2d 469, 475, 33 C.R. 205, quoting the text; 45 Cal. L. Rev. 492; 3 Stanf. L. Rev. 530.)

Former C.C.P. 2017, added in 1957 and based on F.R. Civ. P., Rule 27, authorized a person "to perpetuate his own testimony or that of another person regarding any matter that may be cognizable in any Court of this State." But the section tightened up the conditions of the proceeding so as to restrict it to perpetuation and to eliminate its use for the discovery purposes adequately covered by other statutes. (See Block v. Superior Court, supra, 219 C.A.2d 478; Hunt-Wesson Foods v. Stanislaus (1969) 273 C.A.2d 92, 94, 77 C.R. 832; 23 Am.Jur.2d (1983 ed.), Depositions and Discovery §118 et seq.)

(2) Present Statute. One who expects to be a party in a California action may obtain discovery to perpetuate testimony or preserve evidence in the event an action is subsequently filed. The testimony may be the party's own or that of another natural person or organization. However, the discovery may not be used to ascertain the possible existence of a cause of action or defense, or to identify potential parties to an as yet unfiled action. (C.C.P. 2035(a); see C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §4.128 et seq.; 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Chap. 14; 12 A.L.R.5th 577 [state court's grant or denial of application for preaction production of evidence].) This provision codifies the narrow interpretation of the term "perpetuation" in Block v. Superior Court, supra, and "makes it clear that this type of discovery is not to be used primarily for investigative purposes." (Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2035(a), in 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C.)

(3) Methods. Testimony may be perpetuated and evidence may be preserved by the following methods: (a) oral and written depositions (see supra, §§39 et seq., 80 et seq.); (b) inspections of documents, things and places (see supra, §118 et seq.); and (c) physical and mental examinations (see supra, §140 et seq.). (C.C.P. 2035(b), codifying result in Block v. Superior Court, supra.)

(4) Use of Deposition. A perpetuation deposition taken under C.C.P. 2035 (or under comparable provisions of another jurisdiction) may be used in a California action subsequently brought involving the same subject matter. The deposition may be used in accordance with C.C.P. 2025(u) against a party or its successor in interest named in the petition as an expected adverse party. (C.C.P. 2035(g); see 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §157.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Present Statute. C.C.P. 2035(a), authorizing discovery to perpetuate testimony or preserve evidence, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2035.010 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2035.010 was amended in 2005 to additionally allow one who expects a successor in interest to be a party to obtain discovery to perpetuate testimony or preserve evidence.

See C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 4th, §5.147 et seq.; Hogan, 2 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, Chap. 14; Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2035, in Hogan, 2 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, Appendix D.

(3) Methods. C.C.P. 2035(b), on the methods of perpetuating testimony and preserving evidence, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2035.020 in 2004 without substantive change.

(4) Use of Deposition. C.C.P. 2035, on discovery for the purpose of perpetuating testimony or preserving evidence, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2035.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change. C.C.P. 2035(g), on the use of perpetuation depositions, became C.C.P. 2035.060. West's Key Number Digest, Pretrial Procedure k.61

IX. PERPETUATION AND PRESERVATION OF EVIDENCE

B. Procedure.

1. Petition.

a. Filing Required.

[§ 211] Filing Required.

One desiring to perpetuate testimony or preserve evidence files a verified petition titled in his or her own name in the superior court of the county of residence of one of the expected adverse parties, or, if no expected adverse party is a resident of California, in a county where the action may be filed, requesting a court order authorizing the discovery. (C.C.P. 2035(c), (d); see C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §4.132; 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §14.2; C.E.B., 2 Civil Lit. Forms, §24.15.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

C.C.P. 2035(c), (d), requiring the filing of a verified petition, were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2035.030 in 2004 without substantive change.

See C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 4th, §5.149 et seq.; Hogan, 2 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §14.2.

IX. PERPETUATION AND PRESERVATION OF EVIDENCE

B. Procedure.

1. Petition.

b. Form and Content.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 212

[§ 212] Form and Content.

The petition must set forth all of the following:

- (1) The expectation that the petitioner will be a party to an action cognizable in a California court. (C.C.P. 2035(d)(1).)
- (2) The petitioner's present inability either to bring that action or to cause it to be brought. (C.C.P. 2035(d)(2).)
- (3) The subject matter of the expected action and the petitioner's involvement. (C.C.P. 2035(d)(3).)
- (4) The particular discovery methods that the petitioner desires to employ. (C.C.P. 2035(d)(4); on available methods, see supra, §210.)
- (5) The facts that the petitioner desires to establish by the proposed discovery. (C.C.P. 2035(d)(5).)
- (6) The reasons for perpetuating or preserving these facts before an action has been filed. (C.C.P. 2035(d)(6).)
- (7) The name or a description of those whom the petitioner expects to be adverse parties so far as known. (C.C.P. 2035(d)(7).)
- (8) The names and addresses of those from whom the discovery is to be sought. (C.C.P. 2035(d)(8).)
- (9) The substance of the information expected to be elicited from those from whom discovery is being sought. (C.C.P. 2035(d)(9).) (See C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §4.131; for form of petition, see C.E.B., 2 Civil Lit. Forms, §24.15.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

C.C.P. 2035(d)(1)-(d)(9), on the form and content of the petition, were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2035.030(b)(1)-(b)(9) in 2004 without substantive change.

(1) Expectation that petitioner will be party: C.C.P. 2035.030(b)(1), as amended in 2005, also applies to the petitioner's successor in interest.

(2) Petitioner's inability to bring action: C.C.P. 2035.030(b)(2), as amended in 2005, also applies to the petitioner's successor in interest. "[I]f a person seeks presuit discovery on behalf of a successor in interest, a court may authorize such discovery only if both the petitioner and the petitioner's successor in interest are unable to bring suit." (Law Rev. Com. Comment to 2005 amendment.)

(3) Subject matter of action and petitioner's involvement: C.C.P. 2035.030(b)(3), as amended in 2005, additionally specifies that a copy of any written instrument the validity or construction of which may be called into question, or which is connected with the subject matter of the proposed discovery, must be attached to the petition.

IX. PERPETUATION AND PRESERVATION OF EVIDENCE

B. Procedure.

1. Petition.

c. Notice and Service.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 213

[§ 213] Notice and Service.

(1) Personal Service of Notice. The petitioner must serve notice of the petition, along with a copy of the petition, on each natural person or organization named as an expected adverse party. The notice must state that the petitioner will apply for the perpetuation or preservation order at a specified hearing time and place. Service, accomplished in the same manner as service of a summons, must occur at least 20 days before the specified hearing date. (C.C.P. 2035(e); 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §14.3; for form of notice, see C.E.B., 2 Civil Lit. Forms, §24.14.)

(2) Service by Publication. If a petitioner, despite exercising due diligence, is unable to serve an expected adverse party, the court must order service by publication. If an expected adverse party who has been served by publication fails to appear at the hearing, the court must appoint an attorney to represent that party for all purposes, including the cross-examination of anyone whose testimony is taken by deposition. The petitioner must pay the appointed attorney's reasonable fees and expenses. (C.C.P. 2035(e).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Personal Service of Notice. The portion of C.C.P. 2035(e) providing for personal service of the notice was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2035.040(a)-(c) in 2004 without substantive change.

See Hogan, 2 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §14.3.

(2) Service by Publication. The portion of C.C.P. 2035(e) providing for service by publication was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2035.040(d), (e) in 2004 without substantive change.

B. Procedure.

2. Order.

[§ 214] Order.

If the court determines that all or part of the requested discovery may prevent a failure or delay of justice, it must authorize the discovery. The order must identify (1) witnesses whose depositions may be taken, (2) documents, things, or places that may be inspected, and (3) persons whose physical or mental conditions may be examined. The usual procedures for depositions, inspections, and examinations in pending actions are then followed. (C.C.P. 2035(f); 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §14.4; on oral and written depositions, see supra, §§39 et seq., 80 et seq.; on inspections of documents, things, and places, see supra, §118 et seq.; on physical and mental examinations, see supra, §140 et seq.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

C.C.P. 2035(f), on the order authorizing the requested discovery, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2035.050 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2035.050, as amended in 2005, further specifies that, in determining whether to authorize discovery by a petitioner who expects a successor in interest to be a party, the court must consider, in addition to other appropriate factors, whether the requested discovery could be conducted by the successor in interest instead of by the petitioner. "This factor is significant but not necessarily determinative." (Law Rev. Com. Comment to 2005 amendment.) West's Key Number Digest, Pretrial Procedure k.66

IX. PERPETUATION AND PRESERVATION OF EVIDENCE

C. Pending Appeal.

1. Statutory Authority.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 215

[§ 215] Statutory Authority.

(1) When Available. If an appeal has been taken from a judgment entered by a California court, or if the time for taking an appeal has not expired, a party may obtain discovery for the purpose of perpetuating testimony or preserving information for use in possible further proceedings in that court. (C.C.P. 2036(a); see 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §14.5.)

(2) Scope of Discovery. The scope of the discovery allowed under C.C.P. 2036(a) is governed by C.C.P. 2017 (supra, §9 et seq.) and C.C.P. 2019 (infra, §241). (C.C.P. 2036(a).) It may be accomplished by (a) oral and written depositions (see supra, §§39 et seq., 80 et seq.); (b) inspections of documents, things, and places (see supra, §118 et seq.); and (c) physical and mental examinations (see supra, §140 et seq.). (C.C.P. 2036(b).)

(3) Later Use of Deposition. A deposition to perpetuate testimony taken under C.C.P. 2036 may be used in a later proceeding in accordance with C.C.P. 2025(u) (3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §§153, 155). (C.C.P. 2036(f).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) When Available. C.C.P. 2036(a), authorizing discovery for the purpose of perpetuating testimony or preserving evidence pending appeal, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2036.010 in 2004 without substantive change.

See Hogan, 2 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §14.5.

(2) Scope of Discovery. C.C.P. 2017 and 2019, on the scope of discovery, were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2017.010 et seq. and C.C.P. 2019.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2036(a), referring to the statutes governing the scope of discovery, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2036.010 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2036(b), specifying the methods of discovery, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2036.020 in 2004 without substantive change.

(3) Later Use of Deposition. C.C.P. 2025(u), on the use of depositions at trial, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.620 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2036, authorizing discovery for the purpose of perpetuating testimony or preserving evidence pending appeal, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2036.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change. C.C.P. 2036(f), on use of a deposition to perpetuate testimony in a later proceeding, became C.C.P. 2036.050.

a. Motion.

[§ 216] Motion.

(1) Where and How Made. A party seeking discovery pending appeal must obtain permission from the court that entered the judgment. The notice and service requirements for the motion for leave to conduct discovery pending appeal are the same as those for discovery sought in an action pending in that court. (C.C.P. 2036(c).)

(2) Content of Motion. The motion must set forth (a) the names and addresses of the natural persons or organizations from whom the discovery is being sought, (b) the particular discovery methods for which authorization is being sought (see supra, §215), and (c) the reasons for perpetuating discovery or preserving evidence. (C.C.P. 2036(d).)

CHAPTER X - Discovery

X. SUBPENA DUCES TECUM

A. Nature and Use.

[§ 218] Nature and Use.

(1) Definition. The subpoena duces tecum is a subpoena that requires a witness to bring books, documents, or other things under the witness' control that the witness is legally bound to produce in evidence. (See C.C.P. 1985(a); see also P.C. 1327; F.R. Civ. P., Rule 45(a); 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §18 et seq.; on production from witness on stand without subpoena duces tecum, see 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §150; on subpoena of personal records of consumers, see infra, §228 et seq.; on subpoena of employment records, see infra, §236 et seq.)

(2) Relationship to Other Procedures. The 1986 Civil Discovery Act did not amend C.C.P. 1985 et seq., and those provisions are still applicable to subpoenas and subpoenas duces tecum generally. However, for purposes of depositions and the production of business records and things, the term subpoena duces tecum has been abandoned in favor of the term deposition subpoena. (On relationship between deposition subpoena and subpoena duces tecum, see supra, §54.)

Thus, the following methods to obtain tangible evidence from witnesses are available:

(a) A deposition subpoena (C.C.P. 2020(a)) is used to obtain documentary or other tangible evidence from a nonparty during discovery. C.C.P. 1985 et seq. remain applicable to deposition subpoenas, except as modified by C.C.P. 2020. (C.C.P. 2020(a), supra, §42.)

(b) A deposition notice (C.C.P. 2025(h)(1); supra, §39 et seq.) or a demand for inspection of documents or things (C.C.P. 2031(a), supra, §118) is used to obtain documentary or other tangible evidence from a party during discovery.

(c) A notice to produce (C.C.P. 1987(c), 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §36) is the simplest means of requiring a party witness to produce documentary evidence at trial, although a subpoena duces tecum may be used. (See Rutter Group, 1 Civil Trials and Evidence §1:110 et seq.; C.E.B., 1 Civil Procedure During Trial 3d, §4.36 et seq.)

(d) A subpoena duces tecum (C.C.P. 1985) provides the only means of compelling a nonparty witness to produce tangible evidence at trial. (See Rutter Group, 1 Civil Trials and Evidence §1:122 et seq.; C.E.B., 1 Civil Procedure During Trial 3d, §4.6 et seq.)

(3) Applicability to Nonresidents. Ordinarily, a witness may not be compelled to attend a hearing unless he or she is a resident within the state at the time of service. (C.C.P. 1989.) (See 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §3.) This limitation does not apply when a custodian of records or other qualified witness is served with a subpoena duces tecum as provided in Ev.C. 1560 et seq. (2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Documentary Evidence, §50 et seq.) and the witness' personal appearance is not required. (C.C.P. 1987.3; P.C. 1330; see 82 A.L.R.2d 1403 [production of items held by foreign custodian in another country].)

Personal jurisdiction over a party does not give the court power to compel production of out-of-state records that the party has in its custody only in a representative capacity. Thus, in Coopman v. Superior Court (1965) 237 C.A.2d 656, 47 C.R. 131, plaintiff wife in a California divorce action took the deposition of petitioner, an apparent relative of defendant husband, and by subpoena duces tecum sought to require production of books of a Nevada corporation of which petitioner was president. Petitioner was a California resident, but was not in the state for the purpose of transacting corporate business, the corporation never having done business here. Held, prohibition granted; plaintiff's remedy was to seek the aid of the Nevada courts in taking a deposition out of the state (C.C.P. 2026, supra, §85). (237 C.A.2d 662.)

X. SUBPENA DUCES TECUM

B. Procedure.

2. Form of Subpena.

[§ 220] Form of Subpena.

(1) In General. The Judicial Council has adopted a form subpoena duces tecum, the use of which is mandatory. (See Judicial Council Form No. 982(a)(15.1) [Civil Subpena (Duces Tecum) for Personal Appearance and Production of Documents and Things at Trial or Hearing and Declaration].) A copy of an affidavit that complies with C.C.P. 1985(b) must be served with the subpoena duces tecum. (C.C.P. 1985(b), 1987.5; on exception for deposition subpoena, see infra, §223.) The affidavit describes the matters or things to be produced. Judicial Council Form No. 982(a)(15.1) incorporates a form declaration that may be used instead of an attached affidavit or declaration.

(2) Subpena Directed to Corporation or Partnership. A subpoena may be directed to a corporation or partnership without naming a particular officer; the command to the corporation or partnership is in effect directed to those officially responsible for the conduct of its affairs. (See Fielder v. Berkeley Properties Co. (1972) 23 C.A.3d 30, 42, 99 C.R. 791 [administrative subpoena in aid of investigation]; 47 A.L.R.3d 676 [who has possession of corporate papers for purposes of order to produce].)

CHAPTER X - Discovery

X. SUBPENA DUCES TECUM

B. Procedure.

3. Service.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 221

[§ 221] Service.

(1) In General. The subpoena duces tecum is personally served in the same manner as an ordinary subpoena (C.C.P. 1987; 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §§26, 27), except that a copy of the affidavit on which the subpoena is based (C.C.P. 1985(b), infra, §222) must also be served. (C.C.P. 1987.5; on exception for deposition subpoena, see infra, §223.) (On penalty for disobedience of subpoena, see infra, §227; on protection against improper subpoena, see infra, §226; on payment of fees, where personal attendance is required, see Ev.C. 1563, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Documentary Evidence, §55.)

In Chapman v. Superior Court (1968) 261 C.A.2d 194, 67 C.R. 842, a personal injury case, attorneys procured a subpoena duces tecum for records of Dr. Ronne, who had treated plaintiff. The subpoena was directed to "Custodian of Records of Robert A. Ronne." The process server came to the doctor's office and served it on "Ruth Chapman," his bookkeeper-receptionist. She told Dr. Ronne, who accepted a check for $ 7 witness fees payable to his order. The doctor later sent the records by messenger. But the judge held Ruth Chapman in contempt for failing to make a personal appearance with the records as directed by the subpoena on the date stated. Held, annulled. She was not the custodian of the records, and was not served in such capacity, but only as an individual. Hence, she was not "duly served" (C.C.P. 1987) and could not be punished for contempt. (261 C.A.2d 198.)

(2) Special Provisions on Service. There are various special provisions pertaining to service of subpoenas duces tecum in particular circumstances, including the following:

(a) Production of county officer's books: A subpoena for the production of a county officer's books, papers, or documents relating to county affairs or interests must be served by the county sheriff reading it to the person named in the subpoena, and the sheriff must simultaneously deliver to that person a copy of the subpoena. (Govt.C. 25172.)

(b) Production of medical records in workers' compensation proceeding: The subpoena of medical records in workers' compensation proceedings is governed by Lab.C. 4055.2, which requires that a copy of the subpoena be sent to all parties of record at the same time service is made on the custodian of records.

(c) Production of Department of Motor Vehicles records: Subpoenas for the production of the Department's records must be served on the director or his or her appointed representatives at the Department's headquarters. (Veh.C. 24.5.)

(d) Production of personal consumer or employment records: Subpoenas for the production of personal records of a consumer or employment records are subject to special notice requirements. (See infra, §228 et seq.)

(3) Responses to Service of Subpena. A party, or a witness served with a subpoena duces tecum, may move for an order quashing or modifying the subpoena, or for a protective order. A court may also make the order on its own motion. (C.C.P. 1987.1, infra, §226.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(3) Responses to Service of Subpena. C.C.P. 1987.1 was amended in 2007 to provide that the motion to quash may also be made by an employee described in C.C.P. 1985.6 (text, §236).

B. Procedure.

4. Affidavit Requirement.

a. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 222

[§ 222] In General.

(1) Content. A copy of an affidavit must be served with a subpoena duces tecum issued before trial (a) showing good cause for the production of the matters and things described in the subpoena (infra, §225), (b) specifying the exact matters or things desired to be produced (infra, §224), (c) setting forth in full detail the materiality of those matters or things to the issues involved in the case, and (d) stating that the witness has the matters or things in his or her possession or under his or her control. (C.C.P. 1985(b), 1987.5.) A declaration under penalty of perjury may substitute for the affidavit. (C.C.P. 2015.5; see Rutter Group, 1 Civil Trials and Evidence, Form 1:E; C.E.B., 1 Civil Procedure During Trial 3d, §4.56.)

(2) Affidavit on Information and Belief. An affidavit in which these matters are set forth on information and belief, without supporting facts to indicate the basis of the information and belief, is generally insufficient. (See Smith-Golden v. Superior Court (1940) 41 C.A.2d 512, 515, 107 P.2d 299; Lewis v. Superior Court (1953) 118 C.A.2d 770, 773, 258 P.2d 1084; *Pacific Auto. Ins. Co. v. #### B. Procedure.

4. Affidavit Requirement.

b. Conflict With Provisions Governing Deposition Subpenas.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 223

[§ 223] Conflict With Provisions Governing Deposition Subpenas.

A deposition subpoena for production of business records for copying or for production of business records, documents, tangible things, and testimony of a deponent need not be accompanied by an affidavit showing good cause for the production of the designated business records, documents, or things. (See C.C.P. 2020(d), supra, §50, and C.C.P. 2020(e), supra, §53.) Although the last sentence of C.C.P. 1987.5 (supra, §222) acknowledges the section's inapplicability to deposition subpoenas commanding only the production of business records for copying under C.C.P. 2020(d), it fails to do so for deposition subpoenas under C.C.P. 2020(e). Thus, the affidavit requirement set forth in C.C.P. 1985(b) and 1987.5 is an example of a conflict between C.C.P. 2020 and C.C.P. 1985 et seq. In the event of such a conflict, C.C.P. 2020 governs deposition subpoenas. (C.C.P. 2020(a); see Reporter's Notes to C.C.P. 2020(d) and 2020(e), in 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C; but see 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §7.2 [last sentence of C.C.P. 1987.5, added in 1993, has "muddied" situation; sentence could be interpreted as implied repeal of provision in C.C.P. 2020(e) that eliminates affidavit requirement for subpoenas under that subdivision].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

C.C.P. 2020(d) (deposition subpoena for production of business records for copying) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2020.410 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2020(e) (deposition subpoena for production of business records, documents, or things, as well as attendance and testimony of deponent) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2020.510 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2020(a) (deposition subpoena provisions prevail) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2020.010 in 2004 without substantive change.

CHAPTER X - Discovery

X. SUBPENA DUCES TECUM

B. Procedure.

4. Affidavit Requirement.

c. Specificity.

[§ 224] Specificity.

The affidavit must specify "the exact matters or things desired to be produced." (C.C.P. 1985(b).) The test is not so strict as the statutory language ("exact matters") would indicate: A reasonably accurate designation that is as specific as the circumstances permit will normally be upheld. (See, for examples of sufficient designation, Pacific Solvents Co. v. Superior Court (1948) 88 C.A.2d 953, 955, 199 P.2d 740; 23 A.L.R.2d 862; for examples of insufficient specification, see Pacific Auto. Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1969) 273 C.A.2d 61, 68, 77 C.R. 836, infra, §225 [moving party specified no particular documents, records or contents; attempt to obtain all papers in investigative file was too broad]; Grannis v. Board of Med. Examiners (1971) 19 C.A.3d 551, 564, 96 C.R. 863 [quashing subpoena that requested blanket search of board's records].)

A party lacking information for a sufficient specification may get it by first taking the deposition of the person whose papers are sought, or by serving interrogatories. (See McClatchy Newspapers v. Superior Court (1945) 26 C.2d 386, 398, 159 P.2d 944; Union Oil Co. v. Superior Court (1957) 151 C.A.2d 286, 293, 311 P.2d 640; *Flora Crane Service v. ## CHAPTER X - Discovery

B. Procedure.

4. Affidavit Requirement.

d. Good Cause.

[§ 225] Good Cause.

(1) General Requirement. C.C.P. 1985(b) requires a showing of "good cause for the production of the matters and things described." The showing may be made by affidavits or even by the pleadings. But where the pleadings do not contain such "specific facts," and none are set forth in the affidavit, mere incorporation of the pleadings by reference will not suffice. (Flora Crane Service v. Superior Court (1965) 234 C.A.2d 767, 792, 45 C.R. 79.)

(2) Good Cause Not Shown. In Pacific Auto. Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1969) 273 C.A.2d 61, 77 C.R. 836, plaintiff Santa Barbara County provided medical services for an indigent pedestrian who had been run down by defendant's insured driver. Despite an alleged oral agreement between the county and the injured person, to the effect that the driver would not be released unless the county consented, defendant insurer settled the claim and obtained the indigent's release without the county's approval. Contending that the insurer had intentionally interfered with the release agreement, the county sued for recovery of money spent in providing the indigent with services. The county then served the insurer with a subpoena duces tecum demanding production of the entire investigative file of the accident. After the trial judge denied defendant's motion for relief, held, mandamus granted to quash the subpoena.

Plaintiff failed to show good cause. In the supporting declaration by a deputy county counsel, the statement that the insurer's investigator had the material in his possession or under his control was based only on information and belief, without supporting facts. The allegations of subject matter relevancy were legal conclusions, stated in general terms, and the declaration was devoid of factual data necessary to allow the judge to make an informed ruling. The need for the entire file was not shown, and there were no affirmative facts to indicate that the documents would aid the county in its case. (273 C.A.2d 66.) (See also Johnson v. Superior Court (1968) 258 C.A.2d 829, 837, 66 C.R. 134; People v. Younger (1970) 5 C.A.3d 575, 579, 86 C.R. 237 [moving party claimed that independent appraiser had sought-after appraisal report with information available nowhere else, but property in question was open to anyone to inspect and appraise]; on showing necessary to overcome claim of official privilege, see Shepherd v. Superior Court (1976) 17 C.3d 107, 125, 130 C.R. 257, 550 P.2d 161, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §250.)

X. SUBPENA DUCES TECUM

B. Procedure.

5. Resisting Subpena.

[§ 226] Resisting Subpena.

The remedy against a defective deposition subpoena, or a subpoena duces tecum that calls for privileged matter or constitutes an unreasonable search and seizure, is a motion, variously termed motion to quash, vacate, recall, or modify the subpoena. This practice formerly had no statutory basis in California, but was approved in deposition cases and in cases applying the requirements for subpoenas duces tecum. (See Wemyss v. Superior Court (1952) 38 C.2d 616, 618, 241 P.2d 525; Pelton Motors v. Superior Court (1953) 120 C.A.2d 565, 569, 261 P.2d 275; Flora Crane Service v. Superior Court (1965) 234 C.A.2d 767, 775, 45 C.R. 79; People v. Younger (1970) 5 C.A.3d 575, 579, 86 C.R. 237 [motion appropriate method of testing validity of subpoena duces tecum].)

There is now a statutory basis for attacking a subpoena or subpoena duces tecum. When a subpoena requires the attendance of a witness or the production of books, documents or other things before a court, at the trial of an issue or at the taking of a deposition, the court--on motion by a party, a witness, or a consumer described in C.C.P. 1985.3 (infra, §229), or on its own motion after notice and opportunity to be heard--may make an order quashing the subpoena entirely, modifying it, or directing compliance on terms or conditions, including protective orders. The court may also make any appropriate order to protect the parties, the witness, or the consumer from unreasonable or oppressive demands. (C.C.P. 1987.1; see 8 Pacific L. J. 237; on when use of motion to quash deposition subpoena is most advantageous, see Dunne on Depositions in California §4:16; on motion to quash deposition notice and to stay deposition, see supra, §48.)

The court may award the amount of reasonable expenses incurred in making or opposing the motion, including reasonable attorneys' fees, if the motion was made or opposed in bad faith or without substantial justification or if one or more of the subpoena requirements was oppressive. (C.C.P. 1987.2; see First City Properties v. MacAdam (1996) 49 C.A.4th 507, 515, 56 C.R.2d 680 [fairness and effective appellate review require that where court exercises its discretion under C.C.P. 1987.2 to issue sanctions, it must delineate specific acts on which sanctions are based].)

Under general practice, an order inadvertently made or void may be attacked by a motion to vacate. (See 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attack on Judgment in Trial Court, §§152 et seq., 201 et seq.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

C.C.P. 1987.1 was amended in 2007 to provide that the motion to quash may also be made by an employee described in C.C.P. 1985.6 (text, §236).

In Monarch Healthcare v. Superior Court (2000) 78 C.A.4th 1282, 93 C.R.2d 619, the head of an obstetrical medical practice group sued several doctors for unfairly competing to obtain a managed care contract from a health care provider. Plaintiff, under former C.C.P. 2020(d) (now C.C.P. 2020.410), served a deposition subpoena on the provider's custodian of records as a nonparty witness. The provider produced some of the requested documents but raised trade secret and privacy objections as to others. Discovery was temporarily put on hold while a dispute regarding arbitration was resolved. After the provider was named as an additional defendant, plaintiff moved to compel production. The trial judge ruled that the provider, as a nonparty at the time of the discovery request, could only object by means of a motion to quash; having failed to do so, it waived any objections. Held, the ruling was in error. C.C.P. 1987.1 permits the filing of a motion to quash, but does not require it. Under C.C.P. 2025(m) (repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.460 in 2004), waiver occurs by failure to raise a specific objection during the deposition, and that subdivision is applicable to deposition subpoenas under C.C.P. 2020(d). (78 C.A.4th 1287, 1288.) A nonparty should not be held to more onerous requirements than a party. Further, a contrary rule would run afoul of a central principle of discovery: privileges are preserved unless the holder fails to object in a proceeding in which it has standing and an opportunity to claim them. (78 C.A.4th 1289, 1290.) (New) Timeliness of motion: In Lee v. Swansboro Country Property Owners Assn. (2007) 151 C.A.4th 575, 59 C.R.3d 924, a debtor's examination was scheduled, and the judgment creditor obtained a subpoena duces tecum ordering the debtor to bring specified documents to the examination. One week before the examination date, the debtor filed a motion to quash the subpoena. Based on the requirement of C.C.P. 1987.1 that the motion be "reasonably made," the trial judge deemed the motion untimely. Held, reversed. A debtor's examination can be scheduled as soon as 10 days after the date the debtor is served with the order for examination. "If a hearing can be held 10 days after a debtor is served, a motion to quash filed seven days before that hearing must necessarily be deemed timely." (151 C.A.4th 583.) The creditor had ample time to respond to the motion and, in fact, it filed written opposition. The motion was reasonably made within the meaning of the statute. (151 C.A.4th 583.)

(New) Requirement of hearing: Where a party resisting a subpoena makes a prima facie claim of attorney-client privilege, the trial judge must accord a full hearing, with oral argument, before ordering the revelation of client confidences to the other side and, in effect, compelling attorney testimony against a client. The Legislature's use of the term "motion" in C.C.P. 1987.1 means that the notice and hearing requirements generally applicable to motions apply to motions to quash made under that statute. (Titmas v. Superior Court (2001) 87 C.A.4th 738, 740, 743, 104 C.R.2d 803 [where defendant in shareholders' derivative action moved to quash subpoena on ground of attorney-client and work product privileges, trial judge erred in denying motion without first holding hearing].)

B. Procedure.

6. Enforcing Subpena.

[§ 227] Enforcing Subpena.

(1) Trial Court Remedies. In the trial court, the usual remedy of contempt is available for refusal to obey a subpoena. (See C.C.P. 1991; 43 Cal. L. Rev. 102, 106.) The aggrieved party may bring a civil action for a $ 500 statutory penalty and damages the party sustained because of the witness' failure to attend as ordered in the subpoena. (C.C.P. 1992; supra, §58.)

(2) Appellate Court Remedies. If the witness obtains an erroneous order of the trial court quashing the subpoena duces tecum (see supra, §226), the aggrieved party may review the abuse of discretion by mandamus, and the writ may issue to compel the lower court to vacate the order, thus restoring the subpoena duces tecum to full force and effect. (See Strauss v. Superior Court (1950) 36 C.2d 396, 397, 224 P.2d 726; Flora Crane Service v. Superior Court (1965) 234 C.A.2d 767, 775, 45 C.R. 79, citing the text; 8 *Cal. ###### a. Notice Requirement.

1. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 228

[§ 228] In General.

(1) Statutory Rule. A party who is seeking the personal records of a consumer from specified witnesses must notify the consumer that the records are being sought and alert the consumer to his or her options for preventing production of the records. (C.C.P. 1985.3(b), (e); for definitions limiting applicability of requirement, see infra, §229; for form of notice, see infra, §231.)

The notice requirements of C.C.P. 1985.3 also apply to subpoena duces tecum for records containing "personal information," as defined in C.C. 1798.3, that are otherwise exempt from public disclosure under Govt.C. 6254 and that are maintained by a state or local agency as defined in Govt.C. 6252. (C.C.P. 1985.4.)

(2) Purpose. The purpose of C.C.P. 1985.3 is to protect a consumer's right to privacy in the records, but it does not create a special privilege: It merely provides a procedure under which the consumer will be informed that a litigant is seeking discovery of his or her personal records, so that the consumer has an opportunity to move to quash the proposed subpoena. (Sasson v. Katash (1983) 146 C.A.3d 119, 124, 194 C.R. 46.)

(3) Effect of Noncompliance. The effect of failure to comply with the notice requirement is that the witness may refuse to produce the original records sought by the subpoena duces tecum. (C.C.P. 1985.3(k).)

(4) Additional Requirement for Release of Phone Records. A subpoena duces tecum for personal records maintained by a telephone company that is a public utility, as defined in Pub.Util.C. 216, is not valid or effective unless it includes a consent to release, signed by the consumer whose records are requested, as required by Pub.Util.C. 2891. (C.C.P. 1985.3(f).)

C. Special Notice Requirements.

1. Personal Records of Consumer.

a. Notice Requirement.

2. Definitions.

[§ 229] Definitions.

(1) Personal Records. Personal records are the original or a copy of books, documents, other writings, or electronic data pertaining to a consumer. (C.C.P. 1985.3(a)(1); see Sasson v. Katash (1983) 146 C.A.3d 119, 124, 194 C.R. 46 [term is "broadly inclusive," covering records maintained in course of business relationship].)

(2) Witnesses. Only records maintained by the following witnesses are considered personal records: a physician, dentist, ophthalmologist, optometrist, chiropractor, physical therapist, acupuncturist, podiatrist, veterinarian, veterinary hospital, veterinary clinic, pharmacist, pharmacy, hospital, medical center, clinic, radiology or MRI center, clinical or diagnostic laboratory, state or national bank, state or federal association (as defined in Fin.C. 5102), state or federal credit union, trust company, anyone authorized by California to make or arrange loans that are secured by real property, security brokerage firm, insurance company, title insurance company, underwritten title company, escrow agent licensed pursuant to Fin.C. 17000 et seq. or exempt from licensure under Fin.C. 17006, attorney, accountant, institution of the Farm Credit System, as specified in 12 U.S.C., §2002, telephone corporation that is a public utility, as defined in Pub.Util.C. 216, psychotherapist, as defined in Ev.C. 1010, or a private or public preschool, elementary school, secondary school, or postsecondary school as described in Educ.C. 76244. (C.C.P. 1985.3(a)(1).)

(3) Consumer. A consumer is an individual, partnership of five or fewer persons, association, or trust that has transacted business with or has used the services of a witness specified in C.C.P. 1985.3(a)(1) or for whom the witness has acted as agent or fiduciary. (C.C.P. 1985.3(a)(2).)

(4) Subpenaing Party. The party responsible for giving the notice is the person causing a subpoena duces tecum to be issued in a civil action or proceeding commenced under the Code of Civil Procedure. "Subpenaing party," for the purposes of C.C.P. 1985.3, does not include the state or local agencies described in Govt.C. 7465 or an entity provided for under Cal. Const., Art VI. (C.C.P. 1985.3(a)(3); see Lantz v. Superior Court (1994) 28 C.A.4th 1839, 1841, 1842, 34 C.R.2d 358 [county defendant in sexual harassment action that seeks to subpoena medical records of plaintiff-consumer is "subpenaing party" under C.C.P. 1985.3(a)(3) and must therefore give notice to consumer in manner prescribed by statute].)

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 230

[§ 230] Exceptions.

Three exceptions to the notice requirement are stated in C.C.P. 1985.3:

(1) By showing good cause and due diligence, a subpoenaing party may obtain an order waiving the requirements of C.C.P. 1985.3(b), as long as the rights of witnesses and consumers are preserved. (C.C.P. 1985.3(h).)

(2) C.C.P. 1985.3 does not apply to a subpoena duces tecum that does not request the records of a particular consumer or consumers and that requires a custodian of records to delete all information that would identify a consumer whose records are to be produced. (C.C.P. 1985.3(i).)

(3) C.C.P. 1985.3 does not apply to proceedings involving either workers' compensation and insurance (Lab.C. 3200 et seq.; 6100 et seq.) or retraining and rehabilitation of public employees (Lab.C. 6200 et seq.). (C.C.P. 1985.3(j).)

The notice must be in a typeface designed to call attention to it. It must indicate that (1) the records are being sought from the witness named on the subpoena; (2) if the consumer objects to furnishing of the records, the consumer must file papers with the court or serve a written objection under C.C.P. 1985.3(g) before the date for production specified on the subpoena; and (3) if the party seeking the records will not agree in writing to cancel or limit the subpoena, an attorney should be consulted about the consumer's interest in protecting the right of privacy. #### C. Special Notice Requirements.

1. Personal Records of Consumer.

b. Procedure.

2. Service of Notice.

[§ 232] Service of Notice.

(1) Manner of Service on Adults. Before the date of production called for in the subpoena, the subpoenaing party must serve on the consumer whose records are being sought a copy of the subpoena, the supporting affidavit, if any, the notice described in C.C.P. 1985.3(e) (supra, §231), and proof of service as indicated in C.C.P. 1985.3(c)(1) (infra, §234). (C.C.P. 1985.3(b).) Service must be made: (a) to the consumer personally; (b) to the consumer's last known address; (c) in accordance with C.C.P. 1010 et seq.; or (d) if the consumer is a party, to his or her attorney of record. (C.C.P. 1985.3(b)(1).)

(2) Manner of Service on Minor. Service of the notice on a minor consumer must be made on the minor's parent, guardian, conservator, or similar fiduciary, or if one of them cannot be located with reasonable diligence, then service must be made on a person having the care or control of the minor, with whom the minor resides, or by whom the minor is employed, and on the minor if the minor is at least 12 years of age. (C.C.P. 1985.3(b)(1).) This language is subject to two interpretations: (a) a minor 12 years old or older must always be served; or (b) a minor of that age need not be served when it is possible to locate and serve the minor's parent, guardian, conservator, or similar fiduciary. In the absence of an amendment or decision clarifying C.C.P. 1985.3(b)(1), the safer course is to serve the minor in all cases if he or she is at least 12 years old. (See 2 DeMeo, §53.51[2][b] [always serve minor].)

(3) Timing. Service on the consumer must be made not less than 10 days before the production date specified in the subpoena. (C.C.P. 1985.3(b)(2).) The consumer must be served at least 5 days before the custodian of the records is served. (C.C.P. 1985.3(b)(3).) The time provided by C.C.P. 1013 must be added to both of these time periods, if service is by mail. (C.C.P. 1985.3(b)(2), (b)(3).)

C. Special Notice Requirements.

1. Personal Records of Consumer.

b. Procedure.

5. Consumer's Responses.

[§ 235] Consumer's Responses.

(1) Party Consumer's Motion To Quash or Modify. If the consumer whose records are sought is a party to the civil action in which the subpoena duces tecum is served, he or she may bring a motion under C.C.P. 1987.1 (supra, §226) to quash or modify the subpoena. Notice of the motion must be given to the witness and deposition officer at least 5 days before the date for production. The failure to provide notice to the deposition officer does not invalidate the motion, but the officer may raise it as an affirmative defense in an action for liability for improper release of records. No witness or deposition officer is required to produce personal records after receipt of notice of a motion to quash or modify the subpoena, except on order of the court or by agreement of the parties, witnesses, and consumers affected. (C.C.P. 1985.3(g)); on definition of deposition officer, see C.C.P. 1985.3(a)(4); see Slagle v. Superior Court (1989) 211 C.A.3d 1309, 1312, 260 C.R. 122, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §209 [C.C.P. 1985.3(g)], providing that consumer may bring motion to quash before date for production, does not bar court from considering motion to quash brought after that date].)

(2) Nonparty Consumer's Objection. A nonparty consumer whose records are sought may, before the date for production, serve on the subpoenaing party, the witness from whom the records are sought, and the deposition officer, a written objection specifying the grounds on which production of the records should be prohibited. (C.C.P. 1985.3(g).) The Judicial Council has adopted a form objection, the use of which is mandatory. (See Judicial Council Form No. 982(a)(15.5) [Notice to Consumer or Employee and Objection].)

No witness or deposition officer is required to produce personal records after service of a written objection by a nonparty consumer, except on order of the court or by agreement of the parties, witnesses, and consumers affected. A party requesting a consumer's personal records may bring a motion under C.C.P. 1987.1 to enforce the subpoena within 20 days of service of the written objection. The motion must be accompanied by a declaration showing a reasonable and good faith attempt at informal resolution of the dispute. (C.C.P. 1985.3(g).)

(3) Consumer's Protective Order. Any consumer may, without moving to quash or modify, seek an order protecting him or her "from unreasonable or oppressive demands" including unreasonable violations of the consumer's right of privacy. (C.C.P. 1987.1; see supra, §226.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Nonparty Consumer's Objection. Judicial Council Form No. 982(a)(15.5) has been renumbered Judicial Council

(4) (New) Distinction: Post-Production Civil Suit Barred. C.C.P. 1985.3 is a discovery statute designed to establish a method by which consumers are informed of and afforded the opportunity to prospectively challenge a subpoena seeking their confidential information from specified sources. The statute neither contemplates nor provides recourse for a consumer against a custodian of records based on the claim that the custodian released records beyond the scope of the subpoena. (*Foothill Fed. Credit Union v. #### C. Special Notice Requirements.

2. Employment Records.

a. Notice Requirement.

[§ 236] Notice Requirement.

(1) Nature of Requirement. Before the date specified in the subpoena for production, a party seeking specified employment records must serve the employee whose records are being sought with a copy of (a) the subpoena duces tecum, (b) the affidavit supporting issuance of the subpoena, if any, (c) the notice required by C.C.P. 1985.6(e), and proof of service as provided in C.C.P. 1985.6(c)(1) (infra, §237). (C.C.P. 1985.6(b).)

The notice must be in a typeface designed to attract attention. It must indicate that (a) employment records about the employee are being sought from the witness named on the subpoena, (b) the records may be protected by a right of privacy, (c) if the employee objects, he or she must file papers with the court before the date specified for production, and (d) if the subpoenaing party does not agree in writing to cancel or limit the subpoena, an attorney should be consulted about the employee's interest in protecting his or her right of privacy. If a deposition notice (supra, §39) is also served, the two notices may be set forth in a single document. (C.C.P. 1985.6(e).)

The Judicial Council has adopted a form notice, the use of which is mandatory. (See Judicial Council Form No. 982(a)(15.5) [Notice to Consumer or Employee and Objection].)

(2) Exceptions. Like C.C.P. 1985.3 (supra, §230), C.C.P. 1985.6 is inapplicable where the records of a particular individual are not sought and the subpoena requires the records custodian to delete all information that would identify a particular individual whose records are to be produced. (C.C.P. 1985.6(h).) It is also inapplicable to proceedings involving workers' compensation or insurance (Lab.C. 3200 et seq., 6100 et seq.) or the retraining and rehabilitation of public employees (Lab.C. 6200 et seq.). (C.C.P. 1985.6(i).) Moreover, the court may waive the notice requirements for good cause if the subpoenaing party has shown due diligence and if the rights of witnesses and employees are preserved. (C.C.P. 1985.6(g).)

(3) Definitions. The applicability of the notice requirement is limited by the following definitions:

(a) "Employment records" are the original or copies of books, documents, other writings, or electronic data that pertain to the employment of an employee and are kept by the employee's current or former employer. (C.C.P. 1985.6(a)(1).)

(b) An "employee" is any individual who is or has been employed by a witness subject to a subpoena duces tecum. (C.C.P. 1985.6(a)(2).)

(c) A "subpenaing party" is a person causing a subpoena duces tecum to be issued or served in connection with any civil action or proceeding. It does not include: (1) the state or local agencies described in Govt.C. 7465, or (2) any entity provided for under Cal. Const., Art. VI, in any proceeding maintained before an adjudicative body of that entity under B. & P.C. 6000 et seq. (C.C.P. 1985.6(a)(3).)

(4) Effect of Failure To Comply. If the subpenaing party fails to comply with C.C.P. 1985.6, the witness may refuse to produce the employment records. (C.C.P. 1985.6(j).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Nature of Requirement. Judicial Council Form No. 982(a)(15.5) has been renumbered Judicial Council Form No. SUBP-025.(2) Exceptions. C.C.P. 1985.6(k), added in 2005, provides that if the subpenaing party is the employee, and the employee is the only subject of the subpoenaed records, notice to the employee, and delivery of the other documents specified in C.C.P. 1985.6(b) to the employee, are not required.

(3) Definitions.

(a) Employment records: C.C.P. 1985.6(a)(1) was amended and relettered C.C.P. 1985.6(a)(3) in 2004. The amendment expanded the scope of the subsection to include records maintained by a labor organization that has represented or currently represents the employee.

(b) Employee: C.C.P. 1985.6(a)(2) was amended in 2004 to expand the definition of employee to include "any individual who is or has been represented by a labor organization that is a witness subject to a subpoena duces tecum."

(c) Subpenaing party: C.C.P. 1985.6(a)(3) was relettered C.C.P. 1985.6(a)(5) in 2004. West's Key Number Digest, Pretrial Procedure k.378

1. Service of Notice and Subpena.

[§ 237] Service of Notice and Subpena.

(1) Manner of Service of Notice. The notice may be served on the employee personally, or at the employee's last known address, or in accordance with C.C.P. 1010 et seq., or, if the employee is a party, to his or her attorney of record. If the employee is a minor, service must be made on the minor's parent, guardian, conservator, or similar fiduciary, or if one of them cannot be located with reasonable diligence, service must be made on a person having care or control of the minor, or a person with whom the minor resides, and on the minor if the minor is at least 12 years of age. (C.C.P. 1985.6(b)(1).) This language, like the nearly identical language of C.C.P. 1985.3(b)(1) (supra, §232), could be interpreted to require service on a minor who is 12 or older, regardless of whether the minor's parent, guardian, conservator, or fiduciary has been located. In the absence of clearer guidance, such service should be made.

(2) Time of Service of Notice. The documents must be served on the employee not less than 10 days before the date specified in the subpoena for production of the employment records and at least 5 days before service on the custodian of the records, plus the additional time provided by C.C.P. 1013 if the service is by mail. (C.C.P. 1985.6(b)(2), (b)(3).)

(3) Time of Service of Subpena. The subpoena duces tecum must be served in sufficient time to allow the witness a reasonable time, as provided in C.C.P. 2020(d)(1) (supra, §50), to locate and produce the records or copies. (C.C.P. 1985.6(d).) The court may shorten the time for service of a subpoena duces tecum on a showing of due diligence by the subpoenaing party and good cause, as long as the rights of witnesses and employees are preserved. (C.C.P. 1985.6(g).)

(4) Proof of Service or Written Authorization. Before the production of the records, the subpoenaing party must serve the witness with proof of personal service or service by mail, attesting to compliance with the notice requirements of C.C.P. 1985.6(b). (C.C.P. 1985.6(c)(1).) Alternatively, the subpoenaing party may furnish the witness with a written authorization to release the records. The authorization must be signed by the employee or the employee's attorney of record. The witness may presume that the attorney purporting to sign the authorization on behalf of the employee acted with the employee's consent, and that any objection to release of records is waived. (C.C.P. 1985.6(c)(2).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(3) Time of Service of Subpena. C.C.P. 2020(d)(1), on the time for a witness to locate and produce records, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2020.410(c) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 1985.6(d) was amended in 2005 to reflect the replacement of C.C.P. 2020(d)(1) by C.C.P. 2020.410.

Notice of the motion must be given to the witness and the deposition officer at least 5 days before production. The failure to provide notice to the deposition officer does not invalidate the motion, but the officer may raise it as an affirmative defense in an action for liability for improper release of records. Neither the witness nor the deposition officer is required to produce the records once he or she has received notice of a motion to quash or modify, except on order of the court or by agreement of the parties, witnesses, and employees affected. (C.C.P. 1985.6(f).)

(2) Written Objection. A nonparty employee whose records are sought may, before the date for production, serve on the subpoenaing party, the deposition officer, and the witness a written objection specifying the grounds on which production should be prohibited. 2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 239

[§ 239] In General.

(1) Criticism of Discovery Abuse. Courts and commentators have criticized excesses and improper objectives in use of discovery procedures. (See articles cited in Richards v. Superior Court (1978) 86 C.A.3d 265, 271, 150 C.R. 77.) The following comments are illustrative:

"In this era when calendar congestion afflicts the California court system, attorneys could avoid squabbles such as this by recognizing the difference between legitimate and illegitimate discovery and by a modicum of cooperative observance of the spirit of the discovery statutes. Had plaintiff's attorneys utilized discovery as a tool rather than a bludgeon, they would have narrowed their excessive, oppressive and strategically motivated interrogatories. These interrogatories went far beyond plaintiff's legitimate needs and constituted a massive invasion of defendant's business affairs. Had defendant's counsel not felt put upon, they could have recognized plaintiff's legitimate need for a restricted area of discovery. As it was, plaintiff's demand was far too broad and defendant's outright rejection understandably narrow. Recourse to a reviewing court was a sequence of the trial court's failure to recognize a middle ground." (Borse v. Superior Court (1970) 7 C.A.3d 286, 288, 86 C.R. 559, supra, §111.)

"While interrogatories serve useful purposes, they often are abused. Lengthy interrogatories suitable to major litigation, are often needlessly used in small cases. Questions are often repetitious or wholly irrelevant. While our discovery laws were designed to prevent trial by ambush, the most common cry from lawyers is that they are being 'papered to death.' The costs of storage alone are enormous. Indeed, while interrogatories facilitate the search for truth, the enormous expense of discovery tends to deter litigation by persons of moderate means." (Deyo v. Kilbourne (1978) 84 C.A.3d 771, 780, 149 C.R. 499; see 84 C.A.3d 781, footnote 5, citing horrible examples.) (On abuses in class actions see supra, §64; see also 69 Cal. L. Rev. 806 [criticism of Federal Rules of Civil Procedure amendments of 1980 for failure to deal effectively with discovery abuse].)

(2) Legislative Response. The Civil Discovery Act of 1986 specifies activities constituting abuses of the discovery process (infra, §249) and provides for sanctions (infra, §252 et seq.) and protective orders (infra, §241). (On countering discovery abuse, see 26 U.S.F. L. Rev. 189 [specific proposals to amend Federal Rules of Civil Procedure]; 105 Harv. L. Rev. 428 [importance of judges' discretion to issue protective orders]; for statutory reforms resulting from Judicial Council's Economic Litigation Project for municipal courts, see 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Courts, §§261, 264, 265.)

B. Trial Court Remedies.

1. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 240

[§ 240] In General.

Several remedies are available in the trial court to challenge unauthorized or improper discovery requests or orders:

(1) Motion to quash or vacate (supra, §226).

(2) Objection to evidence. "Though initially a party may move to quash a defective subpoena duces tecum, he may also comply with it, and, when the evidence is produced in court, object to its admissibility." (Spencer v. Hibernia Bank (1960) 186 C.A.2d 702, 717, 9 C.R. 867; see 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §§2.24 et seq., 3.5; on objections, see 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §367 et seq.)

(3) Contempt. Instead of complying or moving to vacate, a party may await contempt proceedings and raise its defenses in the hearing. Then, if the ruling is against it, the party may purge itself of contempt by compliance at that time, or seek a review in the appellate court. (See infra, §244.)

(4) Protective order. (See infra, §241.)

(5) Sanctions. (See infra, §249 et seq.)

(6) Tort action. There is some authority supporting a tort action for abuse of process based on misuse of discovery procedures. (See Thornton v. Rhoden (1966) 245 C.A.2d 80, 95, 53 C.R. 706 [assuming, without deciding, that taking of deposition for improper purpose is abuse of process]; 33 A.L.R.4th 650 [misuse of discovery or deposition procedures without seizure of person or property]; 5 Summary (9th), Torts, §461.)

CHAPTER X - Discovery

XI. MISUSE OF DISCOVERY PROCEDURES

B. Trial Court Remedies.

2. Protective Orders.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 241

[§ 241] Protective Orders.

(1) Statutory Authorization. Protective orders are specifically authorized for the following discovery devices:

(a) Depositions: C.C.P. 2025(i) (supra, §§59, 60, 82).

(b) Interrogatories: C.C.P. 2030(e) (supra, §114).

(c) Inspections of documents and things: C.C.P. 2031(f) (supra, §135).

(d) Requests for admissions: C.C.P. 2033(e) (supra, §170).

(e) Exchanges of expert witness information: C.C.P. 2034(e) (supra, §181).

(f) Physical examinations: C.C.P. 2032(g)(1) (supra, §152). (On protective orders generally, see C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §2.63 et seq.; 23 Am.Jur.2d (1983 ed.), Depositions and Discovery §84 et seq.; 70 A.L.R.2d 685 [preventing, limiting, or terminating taking of depositions]; on protective orders under F.R. Civ. P., Rule 26, see Westinghouse Elec. Corp. v. Newman & Holtzinger (1995) 39 C.A.4th 1194, 1204, 1205, 46 C.R.2d 151 [on violation of trade secret agreement incorporated in protective order, injured party may seek sanctions under F.R. Civ. P., Rule 37, but may not bring separate action for breach of order or superseded agreement]; Seattle Times Co. v. Rhinehart (1984) 467 U.S. 20, 104 S.Ct. 2199, 2209, 81 L.Ed.2d 17, 29 [state counterpart of F.R. Civ. P., Rule 26(c); order on good cause held not to offend First Amendment]; 1994 A.S. 245; 26 Golden Gate L. Rev. 183 [determining whether grand jury subpoena prevails over F.R. Civ. P., Rule 26 protective order]; on protective orders where interrogatories seek discovery of financial condition of defendant against whom punitive damages are sought, see supra, §17.)

(2) Showing of Good Cause Necessary. Each of the statutory protective order provisions, supra, requires the party seeking a protective order to make a showing of good cause. (See People v. Superior Court (Witzerman) (1967) 248 C.A.2d 276, 281, 56 C.R. 393 [declaration containing mere conclusions insufficient]; Department of Health Services v. Superior Court (1980) 104 C.A.3d 80, 84, 163 C.R. 414.) And a protective order, like an injunction, is subject to the statutory prohibition against prevention of performance of acts by a public officer under a valid statute (former C.C.P. 526(4), now C.C.P. 526(b)(4); C.C. 3423). (People v. Superior Court (Witzerman), supra, 248 C.A.2d 282.)

(3) Limiting Scope of Discovery. If the court determines on a motion for a protective order by an affected person "that the burden, expense, or intrusiveness of ... discovery clearly outweighs the likelihood that the information sought will lead to the discovery of admissible evidence," it must limit the scope of discovery. The motion must be accompanied by a declaration stating facts showing a good faith attempt at an informal resolution of each issue presented by the motion. (C.C.P. 2017(c), 2019(b); see In re Lifschutz (1970) 2 C.3d 415, 437, 85 C.R. 829, 467 P.2d 557, supra, §224 [suggesting that when inquiry into confidential relationship takes place during pretrial discovery, "the patient or the psychotherapist may apply to the trial court for a protective order to limit the scope of the inquiry or to regulate the procedure of the inquiry so as to best preserve the rights of the patient"]; on protective order in response to request for discovery of electronic evidence, see Overly on Electronic Evidence in California §3:12.)

(4) Limiting Frequency or Extent of Discovery. Under C.C.P. 2019(b), the court must also restrict the frequency or extent of discovery if it determines either of the following:

(a) "The discovery sought is unreasonably cumulative or duplicative, or is obtainable from some other source that is more convenient, less burdensome, or less expensive."

(b) "The selected method of discovery is unduly burdensome or expensive, taking into account the needs of the case, the amount in controversy, and the importance of the issues at stake in the litigation."

C.C.P. 2019(b) "aims to eliminate or at least significantly reduce the incidence of discovery that is either cumulative or disproportionate. It is the expectation of the Commission that by its articulation and underscoring of the power of trial courts to limit the quantity and methodology of discovery for the reasons set forth in the subdivision, these courts will be encouraged to be more active in identifying and curbing repetitive, inappropriate, and unduly protracted use of the methods of discovery." (Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2019(b), in 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C.) (On monetary sanctions for unsuccessfully making or opposing motion for protective order, see infra, §252.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Statutory Authorization. C.C.P. 2031.1, 2031.2, added in 2003, limit the enforceability of stipulated protective orders in civil actions involving elder or dependent adult abuse.

C.C.P. 2031.1, 2031.2 were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2017.310 and 2017.320 in 2004 without substantive change. (See 5 Summary (10th), Torts, §149.)

(a) Depositions: C.C.P. 2025(i) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.420 in 2004 without substantive change.

(b) Interrogatories: C.C.P. 2030(e) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.090 in 2004 without substantive change.

(c) Inspections of documents and things: C.C.P. 2031(f) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2031.060 in 2004 without substantive change.

(d) Requests for admissions: C.C.P. 2033(e) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.080 in 2004 without substantive change.

(e) Exchanges of expert witness information: C.C.P. 2034(e) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.250 in 2004 without substantive change.

(f) Physical examinations: C.C.P. 2032(g)(1) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.510 in 2004 without substantive change.

See C.E.B., 2 Civil Discovery Practice 4th, §15.59 et seq. (3) Limiting Scope of Discovery. C.C.P. 2017(c) and 2019(b), on limitations on the scope of discovery, were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2017.020 and 2019.030 in 2004 without substantive change.

See Perez v. Santa Clara (2003) 111 C.A.4th 671, 678, 3 C.R.3d 867 [in nurse's employment discrimination action, trial judge, in granting county employer's motion for protective order in response to nurse's request for personnel records of employer's other nurses, did not abuse his discretion in impliedly finding that proper balance between nurses' privacy interests and plaintiff's need for information was reached by county's provision of interrogatory answers listing disciplinary actions regarding nurses identified by race but not by name].

(4) Limiting Frequency or Extent of Discovery. C.C.P. 2019(b), on court-imposed restrictions on discovery, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2019.030 in 2004 without substantive change.

CHAPTER X - Discovery

XI. MISUSE OF DISCOVERY PROCEDURES

C. Remedies in Reviewing Court.

1. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 242

[§ 242] In General.

An order granting or enforcing a discovery remedy is not directly appealable. (See Collins v. Corse (1936) 8 C.2d 123, 124, 64 P.2d 137; Gue v. Dennis (1946) 28 C.2d 616, 617, 170 P.2d 887; Holm v. Superior Court (1954) 42 C.2d 500, 505, 267 P.2d 1025; Freidberg v. Freidberg (1970) 9 C.A.3d 754, 763, 88 C.R. 451 ["The extraordinary writs of mandamus and prohibition are the proper remedies to review discovery procedure"]; 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Appeal, §117; 37 A.L.R.2d 586 [appealability of orders pertaining to pretrial examinations, discovery, interrogatories, production of books or papers].)

The order may, of course, be reviewed on appeal from a final judgment in the action, but, as in cases involving denial of discovery (supra, §71), this is usually considered an inadequate remedy, and various extraordinary writs have been used to deal with different steps in the proceedings. (See infra, §243 et seq.; on federal practice, see 74 Harv. L. Rev. 940, 992.)

Before seeking extraordinary relief from the appellate courts, a party should exhaust his or her procedural remedies in the trial court. (See Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Superior Court (1970) 2 C.3d 161, 169, footnote 9, 84 C.R. 718, 465 P.2d 854.)

C. Remedies in Reviewing Court.

2. Certiorari and Habeas Corpus.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 243

[§ 243] Certiorari and Habeas Corpus.

(a) Review of Contempt Order. If a subpoena or subpoena duces tecum is improper, its issuance is in a broad sense beyond the "jurisdiction" of the trial court. The early cases held that the proper remedy for the person served is to refuse to comply, submit to proceedings for contempt, and raise the objection in the contempt hearing. If found guilty, the person may seek release on habeas corpus or seek annulment of the order by certiorari. Thus, the person may be imprisoned for contempt but may secure a prompt release on habeas corpus; or the person may be fined but not imprisoned, and may review the order by certiorari; and no doubt the person may choose to remain in prison under the contempt order and seek certiorari. (See Dreher v. Superior Court (1932) 124 C.A. 469, 474, 12 P.2d 671 [contempt order annulled on certiorari]; Nelson v. Superior Court (1955) 135 C.A.2d 531, 532, 287 P.2d 535 [same]; C. S. Smith Metropolitan Market Co. v. Superior Court (1940) 16 C.2d 226, 229, 105 P.2d 587 [either remedy]; Schultz v. Superior Court (1945) 69 C.A.2d 530, 532, 159 P.2d 417 [same]; Ex parte Jaynes (1886) 70 C. 638, 12 P. 117 [habeas corpus]; cf. Ex parte Clarke (1899) 126 C. 235, 239, 58 P. 546 [order to produce papers on stand; petitioner released on habeas corpus].)

(b) Review of Discovery Order by Certiorari. Some of the cases took the position that the remedy of certiorari is available only when the proceedings have reached the second stage of actual commitment for contempt; i.e., the preliminary order by the trial court directing the witness to obey is not reviewable. (See Howe v. Superior Court (1929) 96 C.A. 769, 772, 274 P. 992; St. Clair Estate Co. v. Superior Court (1940) 41 C.A.2d 389, 393, 107 P.2d 45.) Others, dealing with perpetuation of testimony, authorized the use of certiorari in the first stage, to annul the discovery order. (See Kutner-Goldstein Co. v. Superior Court (1931) 212 C. 341, 345, 298 P. 1001; Malone v. Superior Court (1953) 40 C.2d 546, 551, 254 P.2d 517 [orders for perpetuation of testimony and subpoena duces tecum annulled]; and see infra, §244 et seq., for same type of review by prohibition or mandamus.)

If the aggrieved party elects to challenge the proceedings by inviting contempt proceedings for failure to comply with an order or subpoena duces tecum, the party need not wait until an adjudication of contempt (with review by certiorari or habeas corpus, supra, §243). The party may use prohibition to prevent an adjudication of or punishment for contempt. (See *Kullman, Salz & Co. v. ### XI. MISUSE OF DISCOVERY PROCEDURES

C. Remedies in Reviewing Court.

3. Prohibition.

b. Preventing Discovery Order.

1. Availability of Remedy.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 245

[§ 245] Availability of Remedy.

(1) Former Law. In view of the presumably adequate remedies of contempt hearing followed by certiorari or habeas corpus or prohibition (supra, §§242, 243), early cases held that the aggrieved party could not use prohibition to directly attack the proceedings in the first stage, i.e., to prevent issuance or enforcement of the subpoena or discovery order. (See C. S. Smith Metropolitan Market Co. v. Superior Court (1940) 16 C.2d 226, 229, 105 P.2d 587; Rose v. Superior Court (1941) 44 C.A.2d 599, 600, 112 P.2d 713; Lockheed Aircraft Corp. v. Superior Court (1946) 28 C.2d 481, 487, 171 P.2d 21 [prohibition will not issue to prevent enforcement of subpoena]; Los Angeles Transit Lines v. Superior Court (1953) 119 C.A.2d 465, 468, 259 P.2d 1004 [same; order of inspection].)

(2) Present Law. The theory of the above cases has been repudiated, and prohibition is now available to prevent enforcement of an invalid discovery order or subpoena duces tecum, without going through the steps of disobedience, contempt hearing, and adjudication of contempt. (See Seven Up Bottling Co. v. Superior Court (1951) 107 C.A.2d 75, 76, 236 P.2d 623 [subpoena duces tecum; denial of motion to quash reviewed and prohibition issued to prevent taking of deposition]; Holm v. Superior Court (1954) 42 C.2d 500, 507, 267 P.2d 1025 [prohibition to restrain enforcement of order of inspection of privileged documents]; Carroll v. Superior Court (1954) 42 C.2d 874, 875, 267 P.2d 1073 [same; privileged photographs]; Kaynar Mfg. Co. v. Superior Court (1956) 141 C.A.2d 547, 552, 297 P.2d 502 [same; insufficient designation and showing]; Union Oil Co. v. Superior Court (1957) 151 C.A.2d 286, 290, 311 P.2d 640 [same; privileged documents]; Twin Lock v. Superior Court (1959) 52 C.2d 754, 758, 344 P.2d 788 [prohibition to prevent imposition of sanctions against witnesses who refused to attend deposition outside jurisdictional limits]; City Council v. Superior Court (1962) 204 C.A.2d 68, 71, 21 C.R. 896 [official privilege]; Peck's Liquors v. Superior Court (1963) 221 C.A.2d 772, 775, 34 C.R. 735 [review of order compelling testimony on deposition in violation of self-incrimination privilege]; Lund v. Superior Court (1964) 61 C.2d 698, 712, 39 C.R. 891, 394 P.2d 707 [prohibition to prevent imposition of sanctions against nonparty witnesses who failed to appear for deposition, but over whom court had no personal jurisdiction]; O'Brien v. Superior Court (1965) 233 C.A.2d 388, 391, 43 C.R. 815 [review of order for further interrogatories where motion made too late]; Sav-On Drugs v. Superior Court (1975) 15 C.3d 1, 5, 123 C.R. 283, 538 P.2d 739 ["[W]e may properly entertain a petition for extraordinary relief when the petitioning party asserts ... that to compel an answer would violate a privilege"]; 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Extraordinary Writs, §245; 95 A.L.R.2d 1229 [availability of mandamus or prohibition to prevent discovery].)

(3) Protection of Third Party's Rights. In Irwin Memorial Blood Bank v. Superior Court (1991) 229 C.A.3d 151,

279 C.R. 911, plaintiffs in consolidated transfusion-related AIDS cases against a blood bank obtained a general order permitting anonymous written depositions of AIDS-infected donors. Ten months later, after deposition orders were issued for certain donors, defendant sought a writ of prohibition, claiming that the general order violated donors' privacy rights under former Health & Saf.C. 199.20 (now Health & Saf.C. 120975; see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §522). Plaintiffs contended that the petition was barred by laches. Held, the blood bank was guilty of laches, but the doctrine would not be applied to defeat the privacy rights of third parties on whose behalf the blood bank was acting. "No order directly affecting the individual donors was issued until the orders setting the depositions. Unless this court acts now, the privacy right of the donors under section 199.20 will be lost. We, therefore, exercise our discretion in favor of resolving the issue on its merits." (229 C.A.3d 156.)

3. Prohibition.

b. Preventing Discovery Order.

2. Grounds: Abuse of Discretion.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 246

[§ 246] Grounds: Abuse of Discretion.

Although prohibition is in theory a jurisdictional view (see 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Extraordinary Writs, §§5, 50), the alternative use of mandamus (infra, §248) has had the effect of changing the test from excess of jurisdiction to abuse of discretion. Hence, the discovery order may be prohibited not only where it is wholly invalid, but also where, under the circumstances, it constitutes an abuse of the lower court's discretion. (See O'Brien v. Superior Court (1965) 233 C.A.2d 388, 391, 43 C.R. 815; Bunnell v. Superior Court (1967) 254 C.A.2d 720, 721, footnote 1, 62 C.R. 458; *Volkswagenwerk Aktiengesellschaft v. ##### b. Preventing Discovery Order.

3. Necessity of Important Question.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 247

[§ 247] Necessity of Important Question.

Extraordinary writs were being issued so frequently with regard to discovery orders that the Supreme Court, in Oceanside Union School Dist. v. Superior Court (1962) 58 C.2d 180, 23 C.R. 375, 373 P.2d 439, found it necessary to sound a note of caution:

"The prerogative writs have been used frequently to review interim orders in discovery cases. ... But this does not mean that these discretionary writs will or should issue as of course in all cases where this court may be of the opinion that the interim order of the trial court was erroneous. In most such cases, as is true of most other interim orders, the parties must be relegated to a review of the order on appeal from the final judgment. As inadequate as such review may be in some cases, the prerogative writs should only be used in discovery matters to review questions of first impression that are of general importance to the trial courts and to the profession, and where general guidelines can be laid down for future cases. The present case falls within this category. ... Therefore, it is a proper case for the use of the writ." (58 C.2d 185, footnote 4; see also Rosemont v. Superior Court (1964) 60 C.2d 709, 712, 36 C.R. 439, 388 P.2d 671, supra, §63 ["The lengthy history of this litigation ... demonstrates the need for caution ... lest the basic purpose of pretrial discovery to expedite litigation be thwarted"].)

The Oceanside doctrine of restraint and its major exceptions--violation of privilege and question of first impression--have been the subject of frequent discussion in later cases and by commentators. (See Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Superior Court (1970) 2 C.3d 161, 169, 84 C.R. 718, 465 P.2d 854; Catanese v. Superior Court (1996) 46 C.A.4th 1159, 1161, 1162, 54 C.R.2d 280 [Oceanside exception allowing writ review for important questions of first impression was applicable where issue was whether, by propounding five interrogatories asking which of plaintiff's deposition answers defendant contended were untruthful, plaintiff could force defendant to review eight volumes of deposition testimony]; 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Extraordinary Writs, §§156, 157.)

XI. MISUSE OF DISCOVERY PROCEDURES

C. Remedies in Reviewing Court.

4. Mandamus.

[§ 248] Mandamus.

The tendency in California is to disregard functional distinctions between the extraordinary writs, and particularly to use mandamus to accomplish the effect of prohibition or certiorari. In this manner, a nonappealable order may be reviewed and annulled for abuse of discretion, without the necessity of showing excess of jurisdiction. (See 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Extraordinary Writs, §§248 et seq., 254.)

Thus, in addition to prohibition (supra, §245 et seq.), mandamus may be used to review an improper discovery order and to compel the trial court to vacate or set it aside.

The following are illustrations:

(1) Subpena or Subpena Duces Tecum. After the remedy in the lower court by motion to quash has been exhausted (supra, §226), mandamus will lie to compel the lower court to quash the subpoena. (See Smith-Golden v. Superior Court (1940) 41 C.A.2d 512, 515, 107 P.2d 299 [subpena duces tecum]; Lewis v. Superior Court (1953) 118 C.A.2d 770, 773, 258 P.2d 1084 [same]; Pelton Motors v. Superior Court (1953) 120 C.A.2d 565, 570, 261 P.2d 275 [same]; Wemyss v. Superior Court (1952) 38 C.2d 616, 617, 241 P.2d 525 [deposition subpoena].)

(2) Order of Inspection. Mandamus may issue to prevent enforcement of the order. (See Los Angeles Transit Lines v. Superior Court (1953) 119 C.A.2d 465, 468, 259 P.2d 1004 [petition for prohibition treated as petition for mandamus and writ issued]; Proctor & Gamble Mfg. Co. v. Superior Court (1954) 124 C.A.2d 157, 162, 268 P.2d 199 [same]; Volkswagenwerk Aktiengesellschaft v. Superior Court (1981) 123 C.A.3d 840, 855, 858, 176 C.R. 874 [writ granted where discovery orders authorized inspection of petitioner's manufacturing facilities in West Germany, in violation of the country's sovereignty; proper procedure is under Hague Convention]; Hoffman Corp. v. Superior Court (1985) 172 C.A.3d 357, 362, 218 C.R. 355, supra, §125 [writ issued where trial court abused discretion by ordering discovery of defendant's customer list].)

(3) Deposition. (See Grand Lake Drive In v. Superior Court (1960) 179 C.A.2d 122, 132, 3 C.R. 621 [writ issued to compel vacation of order requiring witness to answer questions protected by lawyer-client privilege].)

(4) Interrogatories. (See O'Brien v. Superior Court (1965) 233 C.A.2d 388, 391, 43 C.R. 815 [writ issued to compel vacation of order, along with prohibition to prevent further proceedings]; South Tahoe Public Util. Dist. v. Superior Court (1979) 90 C.A.3d 135, 137, 139, 154 C.R. 1 [writ issued to compel vacation of order requiring disclosure of expert witnesses who might or might not be called at a then unscheduled trial].)

(5) Physical Examination. (See Sharff v. Superior Court (1955) 44 C.2d 508, 511, 282 P.2d 896, supra, §150 [writ issued to compel lower court to allow action to be tried without compliance with improper order]; Reuter v. Superior Court (1979) 93 C.A.3d 332, 336, 155 C.R. 525; Browne v. Superior Court (1979) 98 C.A.3d 610, 613, 159 C.R. 669.)

In Harabedian v. Superior Court (1961) 195 C.A.2d 26, 30, 15 C.R. 420, the court granted a writ of mandamus to prevent a requested ophthalmological examination of defendant, but for all practical purposes nullified its writ by instructing the trial judge to enter a more specific order compelling defendant to submit to that examination.

CHAPTER X - Discovery

XII. SANCTIONS

A. In General.

1. Availability of Sanctions.

[§ 249] Availability of Sanctions.

(1) Statutory Authorization for Imposing Sanctions. The Civil Discovery Act of 1986 provides for sanctions not only for failure to comply with discovery orders, but for other abuses of the discovery process as well. Unlike the former law, which listed sanctions for noncompliance in one place (former C.C.P. 2034), the 1986 Act sets forth the sanctions available for noncompliance with each particular discovery method as part of the provisions governing that method. (See, e.g., C.C.P. 2020(h), 2025(j), 2025(o) [depositions]; 2030(k), 2030(l) [interrogatories]; 2031(l), 2031(m), 2031(n) [demands for inspection]; 2032(c), 2032(f) [demands for physical and mental examinations]; 2032(h), 2032(j) [delivery of examination reports]; 2033(k), 2032(l) [requests for admissions]; on advantages of present statutory structure, see 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §15.2; on sanctions available under federal rules, see F.R. Civ. P., Rule 37; 156 A.L.R.Fed 601 [sanctions available under F.R. Civ. P., Rule 37 for failure to obey discovery order not related to expert witness].)

To the extent authorized by the provisions governing a particular discovery method, or another provision of the 1986 Act, a court, after proper notice and opportunity for hearing, may impose sanctions against anyone who engages in conduct that is a misuse of the discovery process. The types of sanctions available are: monetary, issue, evidence, terminating, and contempt sanctions. (C.C.P. 2023(b); on particular types of sanctions, see infra, §252 et seq.; on persons against whom sanctions may be imposed, see infra, §250.) (See also C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §2.93 et seq.; C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Discovery, Chap. 6; 23 Am.Jur.2d (1983 ed.), Depositions and Discovery §357 et seq.; 15 Pepperdine L. Rev. 401 [sanctions provisions of 1986 Act]; on sanctions for failure to disclose witnesses or evidence when request for disclosure has been properly made in economic litigation case, see C.C.P. 97, 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Courts, §265.)

(2) List of Discovery Abuses. In addition to providing for discovery sanctions throughout the statute, the 1986 Act contains the following list of discovery misuses:

(a) "Persisting, over objection and without substantial justification, in an attempt to obtain information or materials that are outside the scope of permissible discovery." (C.C.P. 2023(a)(1); on scope of permissible discovery, see supra, §9.)

(b) "Using a discovery method in a manner that does not comply with its specified procedures." (C.C.P. 2023(a)(2).)

(c) "Employing a discovery method in a manner or to an extent that causes unwarranted annoyance, embarrassment, or oppression, or undue burden and expense." (C.C.P. 2023(a)(3).)

- (d) "Failing to respond or to submit to an authorized method of discovery." (C.C.P. 2023(a)(4).)
- (e) "Making, without substantial justification, an unmeritorious objection to discovery." (C.C.P. 2023(a)(5).)
- (f) "Making an evasive response to discovery." (C.C.P. 2023(a)(6).)
- (g) "Disobeying a court order to provide discovery." (C.C.P. 2023(a)(7).)
- (h) "Making or opposing, unsuccessfully and without substantial justification, a motion to compel or to limit discovery." (C.C.P. 2023(a)(8).)
- (i) Failing to confer with an opposing party or attorney "in a reasonable and good faith attempt to resolve informally any dispute concerning discovery," as required by a statutory discovery provision. (C.C.P. 2023(a)(9), infra, §252; see 15 Pepperdine L. Rev. 401, 405.)

The above list of abuses is illustrative, not exhaustive. "It is arguable that, in view of the detailed regulations of the discovery process in the various sections governing the individual methods of discovery, C.C.P. 2023(a) is unnecessary." However, the Commission felt that the subdivision "underscored the importance of conducting discovery in a manner that does not abuse the methods provided to achieve its goals." (Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2023(a), in 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C; see 15 Pepperdine L. Rev. 401, 404.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Statutory Authorization for Imposing Sanctions. C.C.P. 2020(h), on the punishment for failure to obey a deposition subpoena, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2020.240 in 2004 without substantive change.

The portion of C.C.P. 2023(b) providing that the court may impose sanctions "[t]o the extent authorized by the section governing any particular discovery method" does not mean that the procedural requirements of the applicable discovery method statute must be applied, but rather simply that the particular discovery method statute dictates which sanctions may be imposed. Thus, where a party moves for an order to compel further response to an inspection demand, its request for monetary sanctions need not be made within the 45-day period specified in C.C.P. 2031(m) for moving to compel further response to an inspection demand but may be made later. Whether the sanctions motion is timely is subject to the trial judge's discretion. (London v. Dri-Honing Corp. (2004) 117 C.A.4th 999, 1006, 1009, 12 C.R.3d 240, citing the text.)

C.C.P. 2023(b) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.030 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2025(j) and 2025(o), on sanctions for noncompliance with the deposition provisions, were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.430 et seq. and 2025.480 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2030(k) and 2030(l), on sanctions for noncompliance with the interrogatory provisions, were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.290 and 2030.300 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2031(l)-(n), on sanctions in connection with demands for inspection, were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2031.300 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2032(c), (f), on sanctions in connection with demands for mental and physical examinations, were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.240, 2032.250, 2032.410, and 2032.420 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2032(h), (j), on sanctions in connection with delivery of examination reports, were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.620 and 2032.650 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2033(k) and 2033(l) (incorrectly cited in the text as 2032(l)), on sanctions in connection with requests for admissions, were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.280 and 2033.290 in 2004 without substantive change.

See C.E.B., 2 Civil Discovery Practice 4th, §15.85 et seq.; Hogan, 2 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §15.2.(2) List of Discovery Abuses.

(a) Attempt to obtain information outside scope of discovery: C.C.P. 2023(a)(1) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.010(a) in 2004 without substantive change.

(b) Failure to comply with specified procedures: C.C.P. 2023(a)(2) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.010(b) in 2004 without substantive change.

(c) Causing annoyance, embarrassment, oppression, or undue burden: C.C.P. 2023(a)(3) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.010(c) in 2004 without substantive change.

(d) Failure to respond or submit to authorized discovery method: C.C.P. 2023(a)(4) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.010(d) in 2004 without substantive change.

(e) Making unmeritorious objection: C.C.P. 2023(a)(5) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.010(e) in 2004 without substantive change.

(f) Making evasive response: C.C.P. 2023(a)(6) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.010(f) in 2004 without substantive change.

(g) Disobeying court order: C.C.P. 2023(a)(7) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.010(g) in 2004 without substantive change.

(h) Making or opposing, unsuccessfully and without justification, motion to compel or limit discovery: C.C.P. 2023(a)(8) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.010(h) in 2004 without substantive change.

(i) Failure to attempt informal resolution: C.C.P. 2023(a)(9) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.010(i) in 2004 without substantive change.

See Palm Valley Homeowners Assn. v. Design MTC (2000) 85 C.A.4th 553, 563, 564, 102 C.R.2d 350, 9 Summary (10th), Corporations, §75 [list of abuses in C.C.P. 2023 (now C.C.P. 2023.010) is not exclusive; law firm's participation in discovery on behalf of suspended corporation, knowing corporation was suspended, and having reason to know or suspect suspension disabled corporation from participating in litigation, qualified as conduct abusive of discovery process]; Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2023(a), in Hogan, 2 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, Appendix D.(3) (New) Effect of Lack of Opposition. Under the Act, sanctions may be awarded in favor of a party who files a motion to compel, even though no opposition to the motion was filed, or opposition to the motion was withdrawn, or the requested discovery was provided after the motion was filed. (C.R.C., Rule 3.1030(a), adopted effective July 1, 2001, and renumbered in 2006.) West's Key Number Digest, Pretrial Procedure k.44 et seq.

XII. SANCTIONS

A. In General.

2. Persons Subject to Sanctions.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 250

[§ 250] Persons Subject to Sanctions.

(1) Former Law. The former statutes authorized various sanctions against a party. But where a nonparty witness disobeyed an order, the court, lacking personal jurisdiction over the witness, could only proceed in contempt. (Lund v. Superior Court (1964) 61 C.2d 698, 713, 39 C.R. 891, 394 P.2d 707 [order that nonparty witness make payments to opposing attorneys for failure to appear at deposition was void].) Former C.C.P. 2034(d) did allow sanctions against a party's attorney whose conduct interfered with proper discovery procedures (see Weinkauff v. Superior Court (1966) 64 C.2d 662, 665, 51 C.R. 100, 414 P.2d 36), as long as the sanctions were imposed in conformity with due process (Blumenthal v. Superior Court (1980) 103 C.A.3d 317, 320, 163 C.R. 39). (See In re Marriage of Fuller (1985) 163 C.A.3d 1070, 1077, 210 C.R. 73 ["notice prior to imposition of sanctions is mandated not only by statute but also by the due process clauses of both state and federal Constitutions"; following Blumenthal]; In re Bongfeldt (1971) 22 C.A.3d 465, 476, 99 C.R. 428, infra, §262; see also 8 A.L.R.4th 1181 [attorney's conduct in delaying or obstructing discovery as contempt].)

(2) Present Law. The court may impose the various sanctions listed in C.C.P. 2023(b) against "anyone engaging in conduct that is a misuse of the discovery process." (C.C.P. 2023(b).) Sanctions against an attorney are specifically authorized. (See C.C.P. 2023(b), (c).) Notice and an opportunity for hearing must be given to "any affected party, person, or attorney." (C.C.P. 2023(b).)

In addition to the general authorization provided in C.C.P. 2023(b), there are examples throughout the Civil Discovery Act of 1986 of circumstances in which sanctions for specific discovery violations are authorized against parties, their attorneys, or other persons. (See, e.g., C.C.P. 2025(j)(1) [party giving notice of deposition, or party's attorney, can be sanctioned for failure to attend deposition]; C.C.P. 2025(j)(2) [party giving notice, or party's attorney, can be sanctioned for failure to serve required deposition subpoena]; C.C.P. 2020(h) [contempt sanction may be imposed against "a deponent" who disobeys deposition subpoena]; see also Corns v. Miller (1986) 181 C.A.3d 195, 226 C.R. 247, infra, §254 [sanctions against attorney]; Slemaker v. Woolley (1989) 207 C.A.3d 1377, 1382, 255 C.R. 532 [sanctions imposed on attorney who improperly suspended deposition of client under C.C.P. 2025(n), supra, §61; sanction order was not separately appealable final order]; Ghanooni v. Super Shuttle (1993) 20 C.A.4th 256, 261, 24 C.R.2d 501, infra, §253 [monetary sanctions may be imposed against party's attorney who advised conduct at issue; because un rebutted declarations of plaintiff's counsel established that plaintiff's refusal to submit to X-rays was not based on her attorney's advice, sanctions imposed against attorney were not authorized; citing Corns v. Miller]; Brun v. Bailey (1994) 27 C.A.4th 641, 658, 659, 32 C.R.2d 624 [trial judge had jurisdiction to impose monetary sanctions against witness deposed by defendant, even though he was not party; C.C.P. 2025(i) authorizes sanctions under C.C.P. 2023 against any "person"]; 26 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 1125 [attorney's liability where client refuses to produce relevant, nonprivileged document]; for list of numerous violations for which monetary sanctions may be imposed against "any party, person, or attorney," see infra, §252.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Present Law. C.C.P. 2020(h), on the punishment for failure to obey a deposition subpoena, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2020.240 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2023(b), specifying who may be sanctioned and requiring notice and a hearing, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.030 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2023(c), referring to attorneys as persons who may be sanctioned, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.040 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2025(j)(1) (failure to attend by party giving notice of deposition) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.430 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2025(j)(2) (failure to serve deposition subpoena) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.440(a) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2025(i) (sanctions against any "person") was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.420(d) in 2004 without substantive change.

CHAPTER X - Discovery

XII. SANCTIONS

A. In General.

3. Limitations on Court's Power To Impose Sanctions.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 251

[§ 251] Limitations on Court's Power To Impose Sanctions.

(1) No Punishment for Past Violations. Sanctions cannot be invoked as a punishment for past violations or other contemptuous conduct, but only for the purpose of securing compliance with the orders of the court. (See Crummer v. Beeler (1960) 185 C.A.2d 851, 860, 8 C.R. 698; Caryl Richards v. Superior Court (1961) 188 C.A.2d 300, 303, 305, 10 C.R. 377, infra, §259; Fairfield v. Superior Court (1966) 246 C.A.2d 113, 120, 54 C.R. 721 [failure to answer interrogatories; sanctions imposed 5 days after final denial of appellate relief from original order, leaving insufficient time to comply]; Welgoss v. End (1967) 252 C.A.2d 982, 991, 61 C.R. 52; Midwife v. Bernal (1988) 203 C.A.3d 57, 64, 65, 249 C.R. 708 [dismissal for refusal to pay monetary sanctions that had been imposed for earlier failures to attend depositions was purely punitive and abuse of discretion]; Sauer v. Superior Court (1987) 195 C.A.3d 213, 228, 240 C.R. 489 [sanction upheld]; Newland v. Superior Court (1995) 40 C.A.4th 608, 614, 615, 47 C.R.2d 24 [although Midwife case was decided under former C.C.P. 2034, its principle that terminating sanction may not be imposed for failure to pay monetary sanction remains valid under current C.C.P. 2023(b)(4), infra, §257].)

(2) Least Drastic Sanction Preferred. The trial judge does not have unrestricted power to select any of the statutory sanctions, and cannot invoke the penalty of striking out a pleading and entering a default judgment if a less drastic remedy is adequate. A sanction order "cannot go further than is necessary to accomplish the purpose of discovery." (Newland v. Superior Court, supra, 40 C.A.4th 613; see Crummer v. Beeler, supra, 185 C.A.2d 860; Caryl Richards v. Superior Court, supra, 188 C.A.2d 305; Thomas v. Luong (1986) 187 C.A.3d 76, 82, 231 C.R. 631, infra, §259 [default judgment reversed; lesser sanction of stipulating to liability was available]; but see Do It Urself Moving & Storage v. Brown, Leifer, Slatkin & Berns (1992) 7 C.A.4th 27, 36, 37, 9 C.R.2d 396 [trial court did not abuse discretion by not imposing lesser sanction; sanction imposed was properly tailored to particular abuse]; Collisson & Kaplan v. Hartunian (1994) 21 C.A.4th 1611, 1620, 26 C.R.2d 786, infra, §258 [same]; 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §15.5.) (See also MacDonald v. Superior Court (1977) 75 C.A.3d 692, 696, 141 C.R. 667 [trial court's order, on failure of defendants to answer interrogatories, that defendants be barred from prosecuting their appeal was beyond its jurisdiction].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) No Punishment for Past Violations. C.C.P. 2023(b)(4), on terminating sanctions, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.030(d) in 2004 without substantive change.

(2) Least Drastic Sanction Preferred. "Some courts have held that the more serious sanctions may be imposed under Code of Civil Procedure section 2023 even where no specific order has been violated, but those cases have involved repeated and willful refusals to permit discovery or produce documents over a lengthy period of time which resulted in evidence becoming unavailable." (Maldonado v. Superior Court (2002) 94 C.A.4th 1390, 1399, 115 C.R.2d 137 [in employment discrimination action, defendant corporation, in response to plaintiffs' deposition notices seeking to depose persons most knowledgeable about defendant's practices, produced three current employees who knew very little; given that defendant was bankrupt and many of those most knowledgeable had left, and that there was no evidence of egregious conduct, issue-preclusion sanction was not warranted].)(3) (New) Ex Parte Awards Prohibited. Discovery sanctions cannot be awarded ex parte, and a sanctions order so issued is void. C.C.P. 2023.030 (text and Supp., §249) requires notice and the opportunity for a hearing. (Parker v. Wolters Kluwer United States (2007) 149 C.A.4th 285, 296, 57 C.R.3d 18.)

CHAPTER X - Discovery

XII. SANCTIONS

B. Types of Sanctions.

1. Monetary Sanction.

a. Statutory Authority.

[§ 252] Statutory Authority.

(1) General Authorization. The court may order that someone who misuses the discovery process, an attorney who advises that conduct, or both, pay the reasonable expenses, including attorneys' fees, anyone incurs as a result of that conduct. The sanction may also be imposed on someone who unsuccessfully asserts that another person misused the discovery process, on an attorney who advised that assertion, or on both. (C.C.P. 2023(b)(1); see C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §2.102; 23 Am.Jur.2d (1983 ed.), Depositions and Discovery §396 et seq.; 15 Pepperdine L. Rev. 401, 409; C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Discovery §6.6 et seq.; on appealability of monetary sanctions order, see 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Appeal, §65.)

(2) Specific Authorizations Within Act. If a monetary sanction is authorized by a provision of the Civil Discovery Act of 1986, the sanction must be imposed unless the court "finds that the one subject to the sanction acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make the imposition of the sanction unjust." (C.C.P. 2023(b)(1).) In particular, monetary sanctions are authorized against a party, person, or attorney who unsuccessfully makes or opposes one of the following motions:

(a) For a protective order (C.C.P. 2017(c), 2019(b), 2025(i), 2025(n), 2030(e), 2031(f), 2032(g)(1), 2033(e), 2034(e); supra, §241);

(b) For discovery in sexual tort cases (C.C.P. 2017(d), supra, §13);

(c) To extend or to reopen discovery (C.C.P. 2024(e), supra, §24);

(d) To increase travel limits for a party deponent (C.C.P. 2025(e), supra, §41);

(e) To quash a deposition notice (C.C.P. 2025(g), supra, §48);

(f) To compel a deposition answer or production (C.C.P. 2025(o), supra, §70);

(g) To suppress a deposition (C.C.P. 2025(q)(1), (q)(2), supra, §§74, 75);

(h) To sustain or overrule an objection to a question on the grounds of form, privilege or the work product doctrine (C.C.P. 2028(d)(1), (d)(2), supra, §81);

- (i) To compel a response or a further response to interrogatories (C.C.P. 2030(k), (l), supra, §§115, 116);
- (j) To deem binding an initial answer to an interrogatory (C.C.P. 2030(m), supra, §100);
- (k) To compel a response or further response to an inspection demand (C.C.P. 2031(l), (m), supra, §§137, 138);
- (l) To compel compliance with an inspection demand (C.C.P. 2031(n), supra, §139);
- (m) For an order compelling response and compliance with a demand for a physical examination (C.C.P. 2032(c)(6), (c)(7), supra, §144);
- (n) To compel delivery of medical reports (C.C.P. 2032(h), (j), supra, §155);
- (o) To compel further response to a request for admission (C.C.P. 2033(l), supra, §177);
- (p) To set expert witness fees (C.C.P. 2034(i)(4), supra, §193);
- (q) To augment or amend expert witness information (C.C.P. 2034(k), supra, §187); or
- (r) To submit tardy expert witness information (C.C.P. 2034(l), supra, §199).

(3) Informal Conference Requirement. Numerous provisions throughout the 1986 Act require a party to make a reasonable and good faith attempt to resolve a discovery dispute informally before moving the court for an order. (See, e.g., C.C.P. 2025(g) [motion to stay deposition and quash deposition notice]; 2032(c)(7) [motion to compel compliance with demand for physical examination of personal injury plaintiff]; 2033(l) [motion to compel further response to request for admission].) When an attempt at informal resolution is required, the party or the party's attorney must confer in person, by telephone, or by letter with the opposing party or attorney. Regardless of the outcome of the particular discovery motion, the court must impose a monetary sanction under C.C.P. 2023(b)(1) against a party or attorney who fails to confer as required. (C.C.P. 2023(a)(9); see 15 Pepperdine L. Rev. 401, 405.)

(4) Timing of Request for Sanctions. Neither C.C.P. 2023 nor any case law mandates that discovery sanctions be imposed before the verdict is rendered. "[C]ommon sense dictates sanctions cannot be pursued before the affected party finds out about the alleged discovery dereliction of his or her opponent. The true facts may not emerge until the end of the trial." (Sherman v. Kinetic Concepts (1998) 67 C.A.4th 1152, 1163, 79 C.R.2d 641 [trial court erred in denying plaintiffs' motion for sanctions on ground that it could not grant relief after conclusion of trial; defendants had intentionally concealed material information from plaintiffs and had lied throughout trial, and plaintiffs could not have moved to compel production of documents that they did not know existed until after trial was over].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) General Authorization.

C.C.P. 2023(b)(1), authorizing monetary sanctions, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.030(a) in 2004 without substantive change.

See C.E.B., 2 Civil Discovery Practice 4th, §15.93.

(2) Specific Authorizations Within Act.

C.C.P. 2023(b)(1), requiring the imposition of an authorized monetary sanction unless injustice would result, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.030(a) in 2004 without substantive change.

(a) Protective order: C.C.P. 2017(c), 2019(b), 2025(i), 2025(n), 2030(e), 2031(f), 2032(g)(1), 2033(e), and 2034(e), on protective orders, were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2017.020, 2019.030(c), 2025.420, 2025.470, 2030.090, 2031.060, 2032.510, 2033.080, and 2034.250, respectively, in 2004 without substantive change.

(b) Discovery in sexual tort cases: C.C.P. 2017(d), on discovery of plaintiff's sexual history, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2017.220 in 2004 without substantive change. (c) Extension or reopening of discovery: C.C.P. 2024(e), on motions to extend or reopen discovery, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2024.050 in 2004 without substantive change.

(d) To increase travel limits for a party deponent: C.C.P. 2025(e), on motions to increase the travel limits for a party deponent, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.260 in 2004 without substantive change.

(e) To quash a deposition notice: C.C.P. 2025(g), on motions to quash a deposition notice, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.410 in 2004 without substantive change.

(f) To compel a deposition answer or production: C.C.P. 2025(o), on motions to compel a deposition answer or produce documents or items, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.480 in 2004 without substantive change.

(g) To suppress deposition: C.C.P. 2025(q)(1), (q)(2), on motions to suppress a deposition, were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.520 and 2025.530 in 2004 without substantive change.

(h) To sustain or overrule objection: C.C.P. 2028(d)(1), (d)(2), on rulings on objections, were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2028.040 and 2028.050 in 2004 without substantive change.

(i) To compel response to interrogatories: C.C.P. 2030(k), (l), on motions to compel a response or further response to interrogatories, were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.290 and 2030.300 in 2004 without substantive change. (See Sinaiko Healthcare Consulting v. Pacific Healthcare Consultants (2007) 148 C.A.4th 390, 405, 55 C.R.3d 751 [trial judge was not divested of authority to hear plaintiff's motion to compel responses under C.C.P. 2030.290(b), which served as basis for imposing monetary sanction under C.C.P. 2030.290(c), where defendants failed to file response to interrogatories within required time but, after motion to compel was served, filed untimely response that plaintiff deemed inadequate].)

(j) To deem initial interrogatory answer binding: C.C.P. 2030(m), on motions to deem an initial interrogatory answer binding, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.310 in 2004 without substantive change.

(k) To compel response to inspection demand: C.C.P. 2031(l), (m), on motions to compel a response or further response to an inspection demand, were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2031.300 and 2031.310 in 2004 without substantive change.

(l) To compel compliance with inspection demand: C.C.P. 2031(n), on motions to compel compliance with an inspection demand, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2031.320 in 2004 without substantive change.

(m) To compel response and compliance with demand for physical examination: C.C.P. 2032(c)(6), (c)(7), on motions to compel a response and compliance with a demand for physical examination, were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.240 and 2032.250 in 2004 without substantive change.

(n) To compel delivery of medical reports: C.C.P. 2032(h), (j), on motions to compel delivery of medical reports, were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.620 and 2032.650 in 2004 without substantive change.

(o) To compel further response to request for admission: C.C.P. 2033(l), on motions to compel further response to a request for admission, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.290 in 2004 without substantive change.

(p) To set expert witness fees: C.C.P. 2034(i)(4), on motions to set expert witness fees, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.470 in 2004 without substantive change.

(q) To augment or amend expert witness information: C.C.P. 2034(k), on motions to augment or amend expert witness information, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.630 in 2004 without substantive change.

(r) To submit tardy expert witness information: C.C.P. 2034(l), on motions to submit tardy expert witness information, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.730 in 2004 without substantive change.

(3) Informal Conference Requirement. C.C.P. 2023(b)(1), authorizing monetary sanctions, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.030(a) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2025(g), on motions to stay a deposition and quash a deposition notice, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.410 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2032(c)(7), on motions to compel compliance with a demand for physical examination, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.250 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2033(l), on motions to compel further response to a request for admission, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.290 in 2004 without substantive change.

See Leko v. Cornerstone Bldg. Inspection Service (2001) 86 C.A.4th 1109, 1123, 1124, 103 C.R.2d 858 [monetary sanctions were properly imposed against cross-defendants' attorney who, on learning that, through oversight, cross-complainants' counsel and her clients would not be available for scheduled deposition, refused to discuss rescheduling and filed motion to compel].(4) Timing of Request for Sanctions. C.C.P. 2023, the statute authorizing discovery sanctions, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

CHAPTER X - Discovery

XII. SANCTIONS

B. Types of Sanctions.

1. Monetary Sanction.

b. Recovery of Reasonable Expenses.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 253

[§ 253] Recovery of Reasonable Expenses.

(1) Reasonable Expenses Defined. In Ghanooni v. Super Shuttle (1993) 20 C.A.4th 256, 24 C.R.2d 501, the court clarified two issues concerning the application of C.C.P. 2023(b)(1) (supra, §252). Plaintiff was injured while on board a passenger shuttle van and brought a personal injury action against the van company. Defendant demanded that plaintiff submit to a medical examination, but when she appeared for the examination, she refused, without substantial justification, to undergo X-rays. The trial judge imposed monetary sanctions against both plaintiff and her attorney. Held, the award against the attorney was improper, and the award against plaintiff was improper as to amount.

The statutory phrase "pay the reasonable expenses, including attorney's fees, incurred by anyone as a result of that conduct," contemplates the recovery of the costs of compelling the opposing party to submit to proper discovery. Because $ 1,000 of the monetary sanctions imposed against plaintiff was simply an arbitrary amount intended to punish her, the sanctions were required to be reduced by that amount. (20 C.A.4th 262, 263; on award against attorney, see supra, §250.)

(2) Reasonable Expenses "Incurred." In Argaman v. Ratan (1999) 73 C.A.4th 1173, 86 C.R.2d 917, plaintiff attorney, in propria persona, reached a settlement with defendant and proceeded to enforce the resulting stipulated judgment. Plaintiff filed a motion to compel defendant to provide further answers to special interrogatories and for sanctions and attorneys' fees. The trial judge granted the motion to compel in part and ordered defendant and his attorney to pay sanctions of $ 500 under C.C.P. 2030(l) and 2023(b)(1), part of which represented compensation for plaintiff's time expended in connection with the motion. Held, sanctions award must be reduced to $ 24, the amount of expenses plaintiff incurred for filing the motion and duplication.

A monetary sanction for misuse of the discovery process cannot include compensation for time spent by an attorney litigant in propria persona. (73 C.A.4th 1177.) In Trope v. Katz (1995) 11 C.4th 274, 45 C.R.2d 241, 902 P.2d 259, 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Judgment, §154, the Supreme Court held that an attorney litigating in propria persona may not recover reasonable attorneys' fees under C.C. 1717 as compensation for time and effort expended and the professional business opportunities lost as a result. (73 C.A.4th 1175.) The court in Trope reasoned that such an attorney does not incur attorneys' fees because the attorney litigant is not liable to pay consideration for the legal representation. This same rationale applies to an award of monetary sanctions based on attorneys' fees incurred. (73 C.A.4th 1179, 1180 [disagreeing with Abandonato v. Coldren (1995) 41 C.A.4th 264, 48 C.R.2d 429, 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, Supp., §241, which approved monetary sanctions for attorney pro se litigants under C.C.P. 128.5].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Reasonable Expenses Defined. C.C.P. 2023(b)(1), authorizing monetary sanctions, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.030(a) in 2004 without substantive change.

(2) Reasonable Expenses "Incurred." A pro se litigant cannot be awarded attorneys' fees as a discovery sanction, but the litigant can recover the reasonable expenses he or she has incurred, including photocopying, computer-assisted legal research, and other identifiable and allocable costs. "[W]e think that some of the costs that pro se litigants incur, if reasonably identifiable and allocable, are recoverable as sanctions--even though those costs are ones that lawyers ordinarily include in their hourly rates or other fee structures." (Kravitz v. Superior Court (2001) 91 C.A.4th 1015, 1020, 111 C.R.2d 385 [agreeing with Argaman v. Ratan (1999) 73 C.A.4th 1173, 86 C.R.2d 917, text, p. 1072, that pro se lawyer cannot recover attorneys' fees as discovery sanction].) (Cf. Do v. Superior Court (2003) 109 C.A.4th 1210, 1217, 1218, 135 C.R.2d 855 [noting split of authority represented by Kravitz and Abandonato v. Coldren (1995) 41 C.A.4th 264, 48 C.R.2d 429, text, p. 1073, as to whether pro se litigant who is attorney may recover sanctions, but holding, in action for breach of loan agreement, that indigent defendant who was represented on pro bono basis could recover monetary sanctions, where there was no finding that plaintiff's failure to appear was with substantial justification or that other circumstances made sanctions unjust].)

C.C.P. 2023(b)(1), authorizing monetary sanctions, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.030(a) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2030(l), on sanctions in connection with a motion to compel further response to interrogatories, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.300 in 2004 without substantive change.

XII. SANCTIONS

B. Types of Sanctions.

1. Monetary Sanction.

c. Illustrations.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 254

[§ 254] Illustrations.

(1) Sanctions Proper. Examples of cases in which monetary sanctions were awarded and upheld include:

Corns v. Miller (1986) 181 C.A.3d 195, 200, 226 C.R. 247 [monetary sanction against attorney; responding attorney had burden of proving that he did not counsel disobedience].

Appleton v. Superior Court (1988) 206 C.A.3d 632, 635, 636, 253 C.R. 762 [monetary sanction was mandatory; inadequate response to requests for admission necessitated motion to have requests deemed admitted].

Mattco Forge v. Arthur Young & Co. (1990) 223 C.A.3d 1429, 273 C.R. 262, infra, §265 [defendant violated meet and confer requirements and made unmeritorious, blanket objections to demand for inspection of documents; further sanctions were properly imposed after defendant's unsuccessful motion for reconsideration of first sanction award].

Kohan v. Cohan (1991) 229 C.A.3d 967, 971, 280 C.R. 474 [misuse of discovery process need not be wilful to justify imposition of monetary sanctions under C.C.P. 2023(b)(1)].

International Ins. Co. v. Montrose Chemical Corp. (1991) 231 C.A.3d 1367, 1373, 1374, 282 C.R. 783, supra, §85 [sanction of $ 7,500 was reasonable portion to attribute to production request, where opposing party sought $ 19,695 for preparing production motion, supporting declarations, and reply papers].

Green v. GTE Calif. (1994) 29 C.A.4th 407, 410, 34 C.R.2d 517 [monetary sanction was proper against plaintiff's counsel for attempting to videotape defendant's counsel taking plaintiff's deposition without complying with C.C.P. 2025].

California Shellfish v. United Shellfish Co. (1997) 56 C.A.4th 16, 25, 26, 64 C.R.2d 797 [in imposing monetary sanction under C.C.P. 2023(b), 2025(g) (supra, §48), trial judge did not err in failing to make express finding that plaintiff acted without substantial justification in opposing motion to quash deposition subpoena; finding was required only if judge refused to impose sanction because plaintiff acted with substantial justification].

(2) Sanctions Not Proper. Examples of cases in which monetary sanctions were not awarded, or were improperly awarded, include:

In re Marriage of Niklas (1989) 211 C.A.3d 28, 38, 258 C.R. 921 [ordering reconsideration of sanctions of $ 45,000 imposed on attorney and client for refusing to answer questions at deposition; no showing that sanctions reflected reasonable fees and costs incurred by examining party].

Standon Co. v. Superior Court (1990) 225 C.A.3d 898, 904, 275 C.R. 833 [sanction vacated where trial judge failed to consider whether party making unsuccessful motion to compel further response to demand for inspection (C.C.P. 2031(m)) acted with substantial justification or whether other facts made sanction unjust].

Babcock v. Superior Court (1994) 29 C.A.4th 721, 729, 35 C.R.2d 462, supra, §18 [in dissolution proceeding in which wife subpoenaed financial records of husband's nonmarital cohabitant, imposition of sanctions against cohabitant for resisting subpoena was unjust, because there was legitimate difference of opinion between counsel as to whether case law authorized discovery].

Foothill Properties v. Lyon/Copley Corona Associates (1996) 46 C.A.4th 1542, 1558, 54 C.R.2d 488 [in light of defendant's valid claim to protective order regarding documents it had not yet produced, it had substantial justification for withholding them until motion for protective order was determined, and thus defendant was improperly sanctioned for opposing motion to compel].

Townsend v. Superior Court (1998) 61 C.A.4th 1431, 1438, 72 C.R.2d 333 [where counsel for two defendants took plaintiff's deposition in presence of counsel for other defendants, plaintiff refused to answer questions, and motion to compel was granted, trial judge erred in awarding sanctions to nonpropounding, as well as propounding, defendants; parties who are not discovery proponents but simply join in motion requesting sanctions are not entitled to award].

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Sanctions Proper. C.C.P. 2023(b), authorizing monetary sanctions, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.030(a) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2025, on depositions, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

See Espinoza v. Classic Pizza (2003) 114 C.A.4th 968, 975, 8 C.R.3d 381 [monetary sanctions against plaintiff and his attorney were proper where, after trial judge denied application for order compelling discovery of defendants' checking account records, attorney served defendants' bank with subpoena duces tecum for records, defendants moved for order to quash subpoena, judge granted order, and attorney served second subpoena for same records]; Sears, Roebuck & Co. v. National Union Fire Ins. Co. of Pittsburgh (2005) 131 C.A.4th 1342, 1350, 32 C.R.3d 717 [monetary sanctions against attorney for nonparty witnesses were proper, where attorney first contended he complied with plaintiff's document production subpoenas by producing documents to himself in accordance with mistake in subpoenas identifying him as deposition officer to whom he must produce them, and where, through false assurances, he misled plaintiff into waiting until after discovery cutoff date to bring its discovery motion]. (2) Sanctions Not Proper. C.C.P. 2031(m), on motions to compel further response to an inspection demand, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2031.310 in 2004 without substantive change.

CHAPTER X - Discovery

XII. SANCTIONS

B. Types of Sanctions.

2. Issue Sanction.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 255

[§ 255] Issue Sanction.

(1) Authorization. The court may impose an issue sanction, ordering that designated facts will be "taken as established in the action in accordance with the claim of the party adversely affected by the misuse of the discovery process." An issue sanction may also prohibit a party who misuses the discovery process from supporting or opposing designated claims or defenses. (C.C.P. 2023(b)(2); see 15 Pepperdine L. Rev. 401, 413; C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §2.103; C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Discovery §6.15.)

In addition to general authorization in C.C.P. 2023(b)(2), numerous provisions throughout the Civil Discovery Act of 1986 permit the imposition of issue sanctions. (See, e.g., C.C.P. 2025(j)(3), 2025(o) [deponent's failure to obey order compelling attendance, testimony, or production of documents]; 2030(k), 2030(l) [failure to obey order compelling response or further response to interrogatories]; 2031(l), 2031(m), 2031(n) [failure to obey order compelling response or further response to demands for inspection or order compelling inspection]; 2032(f) [failure to submit to, or to produce another for, physical or mental examination]; 2032(h), 2032(j) [failure to obey order compelling delivery of medical reports]; see also C.C.P. 2033(k), 2033(l), supra, §§174, 176 [deemed admission following failure to obey order compelling response to request for admission].)

(2) Illustrations. An issue sanction was imposed in the following actions:

Young v. Rosenthal (1989) 212 C.A.3d 96, 119, 260 C.R. 369 [facts solicited by interrogatories were properly deemed established against party who had wilfully and repeatedly failed to answer].

In re Marriage of Economou (1990) 224 C.A.3d 1466, 1476, 274 C.R. 473 [order precluding husband from presenting evidence on issues other than dissolution, custody and visitation was proper in view of his wilful failure to comply with numerous discovery orders].

Kuhns v. California (1992) 8 C.A.4th 982, 988, 989, 10 C.R.2d 773 [issue sanction for failure to comply with demand for inspection].

Johnson v. Pratt & Whitney Canada (1994) 28 C.A.4th 613, 625, 626, 34 C.R.2d 26 [sanction imposed for defendant's failure to produce documents; order, which precluded defendant from litigating its liability, but not damages, properly deprived it of opportunity to prove comparative fault of others].

Estate of Ivy (1994) 22 C.A.4th 873, 878, 879, 28 C.R.2d 16 [finding that beneficiary's objections to trustee's account were frivolous was proper; her refusal to produce documents prevented determination whether extrinsic fraud excused her from timely raising claim that trustee should have opposed petition by conservator of decedent's widow].

Vallbona v. Springer (1996) 43 C.A.4th 1525, 1547, 1548, 51 C.R.2d 311 [in light of defendants' failure to produce requested documents, their subsequent claim that documents were stolen, and factual admissions by one defendant, trial judge properly instructed jury that defendants never applied for approval of their laser procedure for treatment of cellulite and had no data supporting claim that 20,000 people had undergone treatment in Europe].

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Authorization. C.C.P. 2023(b)(2), authorizing issue sanctions, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.030(b) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2025(j)(3) and 2025(o), on failure by the deponent to obey an order compelling attendance, testimony, or production of documents, were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.450 and 2025.480 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2030(k), (l), on failure to obey an order compelling a response or further response to interrogatories, were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.290 and 2030.300 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2031(l)-(n), on failure to obey an order compelling response or further response to a demand for inspection or order compelling inspection, were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2031.300 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2032(f), on failure to submit to, or produce another for, physical or mental examination, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.410 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2032(h), (j), on failure to obey an order compelling delivery of medical reports, were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.620 and 2032.650 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2033(k), (l), on deemed admissions following failure to obey an order compelling response to a request for admissions, were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.280 and 2033.290 in 2004 without substantive change.

CHAPTER X - Discovery

XII. SANCTIONS

B. Types of Sanctions.

3. Evidence Sanction.

[§ 256] Evidence Sanction.

(1) Statutory Authority. The court may impose an evidence sanction, prohibiting a party who misuses the discovery process from introducing designated matters in evidence. (C.C.P. 2023(b)(3); see 15 Pepperdine L. Rev. 401, 414; C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §2.103; C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Discovery §6.16; 63 A.L.R.4th 712 [propriety of allowing testimony from nonexpert witness who was not disclosed during pretrial discovery]; 151 A.L.R.Fed 561 [use of F.R. Civ. P., Rule 37 to exclude expert testimony as sanction for violation of discovery order].)

In addition to the general authorization in C.C.P. 2023(b)(3), numerous provisions throughout the Civil Discovery Act of 1986 permit the imposition of evidence sanctions. (See, e.g., C.C.P. 2025(j)(3), 2025(o) [deponent's failure to obey order compelling attendance, testimony, or production of documents]; 2030(k), 2030(l) [failure to obey order compelling response or further response to interrogatories]; 2031(l), 2031(m), 2031(n) [failure to obey order compelling response or further response to demands for inspection or order compelling inspection]; 2032(f) [failure to submit to, or to produce another for, physical or mental examination]; 2032(h), 2032(j) [failure to obey order compelling delivery of medical reports]; see also C.C.P. 2034(j), 2034(l), supra, §§195, 198 [exclusion of expert testimony where party has failed to comply with expert witness information exchange provisions].)

(2) Sanction Properly Imposed. An evidence sanction was properly imposed in the following actions:

Thoren v. Johnston & Washer (1972) 29 C.A.3d 270, 274, 105 C.R. 276 [trial court properly excluded plaintiff's witness' proposed testimony on ground that plaintiff had wilfully omitted witness' name in answers to interrogatories].

Crumpton v. Dickstein (1978) 82 C.A.3d 166, 170, 146 C.R. 840 [quoting and following Thoren].

A & M Records v. Heilman (1977) 75 C.A.3d 554, 565, 566, 142 C.R. 390 [conditional order, under former statute, preventing defendant from introducing documents at trial if he persisted in refusing to comply with order to produce them one week before trial; defendant also precluded from testifying at trial on matters covered by deposition questions that defendant had refused to answer on ground that his answers might incriminate him].

Puritan Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1985) 171 C.A.3d 877, 882, 886, 217 C.R. 602 [plaintiff's expert inadvertently lost equipment that defendant had allegedly defectively repaired before defendant's experts could inspect or test equipment; order prohibiting plaintiff from introducing equipment and expert testimony derived from examining it was proper].

Dwyer v. Crocker Nat. Bank (1987) 194 C.A.3d 1418, 1431, 240 C.R. 297 [order, under former statute, limiting plaintiff's testimony at trial following plaintiff's invocation of his privilege against self-incrimination at his deposition and his failure to produce documents, was not abuse of discretion].

Young v. Rosenthal (1989) 212 C.A.3d 96, 119, 260 C.R. 369 [prohibiting party from testifying was proper sanction for wilful, repeated refusal to allow his deposition to go forward; prohibiting use of requested documents was proper sanction for wilful, repeated refusal to identify and produce them for inspection].

Waicis v. Superior Court (1990) 226 C.A.3d 283, 287, 276 C.R. 45 [disqualifying expert from testifying was proper, where he was repeatedly uncooperative in allowing his deposition to be taken, including leaving deposition early].

Do It Urself Moving & Storage v. Brown, Leifer, Slatkin & Berns (1992) 7 C.A.4th 27, 34, 36, 9 C.R.2d 396 [after plaintiffs failed to produce promised audit report and supporting documentation, trial court properly precluded plaintiffs from introducing accounting evidence].

Vallbona v. Springer (1996) 43 C.A.4th 1525, 1545, 51 C.R.2d 311 [evidence sanction was proper where defendants initially failed to respond to request for documents pertaining to whether they had sought independent review board approval for their laser procedure for treatment of cellulite, then claimed documents were stolen, and then brought some of them to trial].

Pate v. Channel Lumber Co. (1997) 51 C.A.4th 1447, 1454, 59 C.R.2d 919 [where, in dispute between commercial tenants and landlord over billings to tenants for common area expenses, landlord assured tenants that it had given them all relevant documents in response to discovery request, and where at trial landlord's manager referred to documents that had never been provided, sanction precluding introduction of these documents was proper].

(3) Sanction Not Warranted. An evidence sanction was not proper in the following cases:

Rangel v. Graybar Elec. Co. (1977) 70 C.A.3d 943, 949, 139 C.R. 191 [where plaintiff's new expert witness was hired only during trial to rebut testimony of defendant's expert, and plaintiff's counsel advised defendant's counsel of intention to call new witness before defense had rested its case, exclusion of rebuttal testimony was reversible error; distinguishing Thoren v. Johnston & Washer].

Grimshaw v. Ford Motor Co. (1981) 119 C.A.3d 757, 782, 174 C.R. 348 [no error in refusing to bar expert where no wilful delay in disclosure; following Rangel].

Puritan Ins. Co. v. Superior Court, supra, 171 C.A.3d 886 [plaintiff's expert inadvertently lost equipment that defendant had allegedly defectively repaired before defendant's experts could inspect or test equipment; order prohibiting plaintiff from introducing photographs of equipment and expert testimony derived from examination of photographs was not required to protect defendant's interests and exceeded what was "appropriate to the dereliction"].

McGinty v. Superior Court (1994) 26 C.A.4th 204, 212, 213, 31 C.R.2d 292 [where attorney for plaintiff inadvertently received information in violation of protective order entered in another action, order imposing preclusive witness and evidence sanction was too severe; quoting People v. Edwards (1993) 17 C.A.4th 1248, 1264, 22 C.R.2d 3, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §85].

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Statutory Authority. C.C.P. 2023(b)(3), authorizing evidence sanctions, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.030(c) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2025(j)(3) and 2025(o), on failure by the deponent to obey an order compelling attendance, testimony, or production of documents, were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.450 and 2025.480 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2030(k), (l), on failure to obey an order compelling a response or further response to interrogatories, were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.290 and 2030.300 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2031(l)-(n), on failure to obey an order compelling response or further response to a demand for inspection or order compelling inspection, were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2031.300 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2032(f), on failure to submit to, or produce another for, physical or mental examination, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.410 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2032(h), (j), on failure to obey an order compelling delivery of medical reports, were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.620 and 2032.650 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2034(j), (l) were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.300 and 2034.710 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change. C.C.P. 2034(j), on exclusion of expert testimony for failure to comply with expert witness information exchange provisions, became C.C.P. 2034.300.

See C.E.B., 2 Civil Discovery Practice 4th, §15.98.(2) Sanction Properly Imposed. See Juarez v. Boy Scouts of America (2000) 81 C.A.4th 377, 390, 97 C.R.2d 12 [in action against national youth organization and church by former organization member who was allegedly molested by organization group leader, trial judge properly imposed evidence sanction, where plaintiff's responses to defendants' repeated requests to identify information he had concerning defendants' knowledge about leader's propensities and background were evasive and uncooperative]; Karlsson v. Ford Motor Co. (2006) 140 C.A.4th 1202, 1219, 45 C.R.3d 265 [in products liability action alleging that defendant minivan manufacturer failed to provide harness for center seat of third row and failed to warn that lap belt was dangerous condition, evidence sanctions against defendant were proper based on pattern of discovery abuse, including failure to produce "person most knowledgeable" on warnings issue, leading to instruction to effect that no warnings were provided; even if owner's manual included warnings, defendant's conduct prevented effective discovery on issue].(3) (New) Sanction Not Warranted. See Biles v. Exxon Mobil Corp. (2004) 124 C.A.4th 1315, 1325, 22 C.R.3d 282 [in personal injury action in which defendant property owner moved for summary judgment, trial judge erred in excluding declaration of one of plaintiff employee's coworkers on ground that coworker had not been identified in answer to previous interrogatory and interrogatory had not been supplemented to include coworker's name; relying on Rangel v. Graybar Elec. Co. (1977) 70 C.A.3d 943, 139 C.R. 191, text, p. 1078]; R & B Auto Center v. Farmers Group (2006) 140 C.A.4th 327, 356, 44 C.R.3d 426 [although three of plaintiff's witnesses had not been identified during discovery process, trial judge erred in excluding their testimony; plaintiff did not discover them until after discovery cut-off date, there was no deliberate concealment of their identity, and exclusion resulted in plaintiff's unfair competition cause of action being dismissed; distinguishing *Thoren v. ### XII. SANCTIONS

B. Types of Sanctions.

4. Terminating Sanction.

a. Authorization.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 257

[§ 257] Authorization.

The court may impose a terminating sanction by making one of the following orders against a party engaging in the misuse of the discovery process:

- (1) Striking out all or part of a pleading. (C.C.P. 2023(b)(4)(A).)
- (2) Staying further proceedings until a discovery order is obeyed. (C.C.P. 2023(b)(4)(B).)
- (3) Dismissing all or part of the action. (C.C.P. 2023(b)(4)(C).)

(4) Rendering a default judgment. (C.C.P. 2023(b)(4)(D).) (See Greenup v. Rodman (1986) 42 C.3d 822, 231 C.R. 220, 726 P.2d 1295, 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, §126 [procedure for default judgment as discovery sanction]; C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §2.104 et seq.; C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Discovery §6.17 et seq.; 8A Am.Jur. P.P. Forms (1996 ed.), Depositions and Discovery §892 [motion for terminating sanction]; 15 Pepperdine L. Rev. 401, 414; 56 A.L.R.3d 1109 [dismissal of action for plaintiff's failure or refusal to answer written interrogatories]; 26 A.L.R.4th 849 [judgment in favor of plaintiff for failure to obey request or order for production of documents or other objects]; 27 A.L.R.4th 61 [dismissal of action for failure or refusal of plaintiff to obey order for production of documents or other objects]; 30 A.L.R.4th 9 [judgment for plaintiff following defendant's failure to obey request or order to answer interrogatories or other discovery sanctions]; 32 A.L.R.4th 212 [dismissal of action for failure or refusal of plaintiff to appear or answer questions].)

In addition to general authorization in C.C.P. 2023(b)(4), numerous provisions throughout the 1986 Act permit the imposition of terminating sanctions. (See, e.g., C.C.P. 2025(j)(3), 2025(o) [deponent's failure to obey order compelling attendance, testimony, or production of documents]; 2030(k), 2030(l) [failure to obey order compelling response or further response to interrogatories]; 2031(l), 2031(m), 2031(n) [failure to obey order compelling response or further response to demands for inspection or order compelling inspection]; 2032(f) [failure to submit to, or to produce another for, physical or mental examination]; 2032(h), 2032(j) [failure to obey order compelling delivery of medical reports].)

The statutory limit on damages in a default judgment (C.C.P. 580; see 6 Cal Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, §124) applies to a default judgment entered as a discovery sanction. (Greenup v. Rodman, supra, 42 C.3d 827, 828.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Striking pleading: C.C.P. 2023(b)(4)(A), authorizing the striking of all or part of a pleading, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.030(d)(1) in 2004 without substantive change.

(2) Staying proceedings: C.C.P. 2023(b)(4)(B), authorizing the staying of proceedings, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.030(d)(2) in 2004 without substantive change.

(3) Dismissing all or part of action: C.C.P. 2023(b)(4)(C), authorizing a dismissal of all or part of the action, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.030(d)(3) in 2004 without substantive change.

See Rail Services of America v. State Comp. Ins. Fund (2003) 110 C.A.4th 323, 332, 1 C.R.3d 700 [where plaintiffs' refusal to comply with discovery was straightforward and unambiguous, dismissal of only remaining cause of action was proper; however, to extent judgment could be construed as dismissing all causes of action, including those on which summary adjudication for defendant had previously been granted, it required modification to state that judgment on those causes of action was in favor of defendant].

(4) Rendering default judgment: C.C.P. 2023(b)(4)(D), authorizing an order rendering a default judgment, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.030(d)(4) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2025(j)(3) and 2025(o), on failure by the deponent to obey an order compelling attendance, testimony, or production of documents, were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.450 and 2025.480 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2030(k), (l), on failure to obey an order compelling a response or further response to interrogatories, were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.290 and 2030.300 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2031(l)-(n), on failure to obey an order compelling a response or further response to a demand for inspection or order compelling inspection, were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2031.300 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2032(f), on failure to submit to, or produce another for, physical or mental examination, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.410 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2032(h), (j), on failure to obey an order compelling delivery of medical reports, were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.620 and 2032.650 in 2004 without substantive change.

XII. SANCTIONS

B. Types of Sanctions.

4. Terminating Sanction.

b. Illustrations.

1. Sanction Upheld.

[§ 258] Sanction Upheld.

(1) Spoliation of Evidence. In R.S. Creative v. Creative Cotton, Ltd. (1999) 75 C.A.4th 486, 89 C.R.2d 353, plaintiffs, a corporation and its sole officer and director, sued defendants for breach of contract. Plaintiffs attached a purported contract as an exhibit to the complaint, but in the course of discovery, that contract was proved to be a forgery. During her deposition, the individual plaintiff stipulated that her desktop or laptop computers would not be operated until defendants' computer expert had an opportunity to examine them for evidence of the forgery. However, the eventual examination revealed that they had been operated and that files had been deleted. The individual plaintiff then repeatedly failed to complete her deposition. Eventually, she filed an amended complaint, removing herself as a plaintiff, and refused to appear for her deposition on the ground that she was no longer a party. The trial judge granted defendants' motion for terminating sanctions. Held, affirmed.

(a) Cedars-Sinai Med. Center v. Superior Court (1998) 18 C.4th 1, 74 C.R.2d 248, 954 P.2d 511, 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §117, which held that there is no tort cause of action for spoliation of evidence against a party to the litigation, emphasized the availability of terminating sanctions for such conduct under C.C.P. 2023. (75 C.A.4th 495.) Although terminating sanctions are to be used sparingly, the record here demonstrates repeated violations of stipulations and court orders, a forged document offered as true, and deliberate destruction of evidence pertaining to exposing that fact. The individual plaintiff acted for the corporate plaintiff and the two plaintiffs were "one and the same." Thus, there is no merit in the corporate plaintiff's argument that dismissal based on the individual plaintiff's conduct was improper. (75 C.A.4th 496.)

(b) Dismissal of plaintiffs' case did not violate due process. Both plaintiffs had ample opportunities to comply with discovery orders, but failed to do so. C.C.P. 2023 authorizes terminating sanctions in the first instance in egregious cases such as this one. (75 C.A.4th 497.)

(2) Persistent Noncompliance. In Collisson & Kaplan v. Hartunian (1994) 21 C.A.4th 1611, 26 C.R.2d 786, an action by a law firm for unpaid legal fees, plaintiff served defendants with form and special interrogatories. Defendants filed verified responses to the form interrogatories, but, in violation of C.C.P. 2030(g), did not verify their responses to the special interrogatories, and as to each interrogatory concerning the facts underlying defendants' general denial and affirmative defenses, defendants repeatedly invoked a stock phrase indicating that they were compiling the information requested. Defendants failed to respond to plaintiff's requests for production of documents. They also objected to all but one of plaintiff's requests for admissions and failed to respond to that one request. Plaintiff moved to compel production of documents and further responses. The trial judge granted the motion and imposed monetary sanctions. After defendants continued to fail to comply with discovery and responded to some interrogatories and requests for admissions from the perspective of an entity that was not even a named defendant, the trial judge struck defendants' answer as a discovery sanction and plaintiff obtained a default judgment. Held, the terminating sanction was proper.

(a) In the face of defendants' persistent refusal to share with plaintiff the facts underlying their denial of liability and their purported affirmative defenses, and an approaching trial date scheduled for less than 2 months after the sanction hearing, the trial judge properly tailored the sanction to the harm caused by the withheld discovery. (21 C.A.4th 1619.)

(b) Defendants asserted that there was a discrepancy between the grounds stated in plaintiff's moving papers and the grounds specified by the trial judge for imposing the sanction. The overriding ground for imposing the sanction, however, was that defendants' further responses did not comply with the trial judge's earlier order compelling discovery. The making of further discovery responses from the perspective of an unnamed party (the ground specified in plaintiff's moving papers) and defendants' failure to verify their responses (mentioned by the trial judge in his ruling) were simply two examples of defendants' general noncompliance. (21 C.A.4th 1619.)

(c) Imposing a lesser sanction would have permitted defendants to continue their stalling tactics. The trial judge did not abuse his discretion in choosing the sanction he did. (21 C.A.4th 1620, quoting Do It Urself Moving & Storage v. Brown, Leifer, Slatkin & Berns (1992) 7 C.A.4th 27, 9 C.R.2d 396, supra, §256.)

In Laguna Auto Body v. Farmers Ins. Exchange (1991) 231 C.A.3d 481, 282 C.R. 530, the trial judge dismissed an action brought under the "fast-track" program (Govt.C. 68600 et seq.; see 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Courts, §438) on the ground that plaintiffs had abused the discovery process. Plaintiffs ignored defendant's interrogatories and other discovery requests, defied a subsequent court order to provide interrogatory responses or produce documents, repeatedly failed to provide discovery by deadlines extended by defendant pursuant to stipulation, did not verify the interrogatory responses they finally did provide, and failed to file any opposition to defendant's motion to dismiss. Held, dismissal was not an abuse of discretion.

(a) Plaintiffs contended that the judge abused his discretion in dismissing the action because the dismissal was under the fast track program. However, the action was not dismissed for failure to comply with the rules of the program, but for wilful misuse of the discovery process. Moreover, no statute or case law proscribes the appropriate use of dismissal as a sanction by a trial judge in the program. (231 C.A.3d 490.)

(b) The judge was not required to substitute a monetary or issue preclusion sanction. "[T]he issue before us is not what sanction we would have imposed, but whether the trial court abused its discretion in ordering dismissal as a sanction. Substantial evidence supports the trial court's conclusion that appellants wilfully obstructed discovery, failed to honor their stipulation with counsel that they would comply with discovery, and defied the court's order to answer all interrogatories and produce all documents." (231 C.A.3d 491.) (See Garcia v. McCutchen (1997) 16 C.4th 469, 478, 66 C.R.2d 319, 940 P.2d 906, 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Courts, Supp., §447 [disapproving Laguna Auto Body to extent it contains dictum inconsistent with conclusion that power of judge to impose sanctions for noncompliance with fast track rules is limited by C.C.P. 575.2(b), which prohibits dismissal as sanction where noncompliance with local rules is fault of counsel, not of litigant].)

(3) Other Examples. Other examples of actions in which a terminating sanction was properly imposed include the following:

Unger v. Los Angeles Transit Lines (1960) 180 C.A.2d 172, 180, 4 C.R. 370, 5 C.R. 71 [information sought by plaintiff's interrogatories was not privileged, as defendant had claimed, and record disclosed persistent course of refusal by defendant to obey judge's valid order].

MacDonald v. Joslyn (1969) 275 C.A.2d 282, 290, 79 C.R. 707 [defendant wilfully refused to appear for deposition; answer properly stricken and default entered].

Scherrer v. Plaza Marina Commercial Corp. (1971) 16 C.A.3d 520, 524, 94 C.R. 85 [default judgment proper after "amazing disregard for the judicial process" in repeated failures to appear for deposition or hearings].

Housing Authority v. Gomez (1972) 26 C.A.3d 366, 371, 102 C.R. 657 [defendant's repeated refusals to appear at deposition made striking his answer and cross-complaint and entry of default proper].

Stein v. Hassen (1973) 34 C.A.3d 294, 302, 109 C.R. 321 [defendant's purported answers to interrogatories reflected "his evasiveness and lack of good faith, arrogant insolent attitude toward the judicial process, dilatory tactics and attempt to play 'fast and loose' with the court"].

Williams v. Travelers Ins. Co. (1975) 49 C.A.3d 805, 810, 123 C.R. 83 [plaintiff's equivocal and incomplete responses to defendant's requests for discovery were attempts to frustrate discovery goals; refusal to answer interrogatories that went to heart of plaintiff's claim].

Kaplan v. Eldorado Ins. Co. (1976) 55 C.A.3d 587, 592, 127 C.R. 699 [arbitration proceeding properly dismissed].

Calvert Fire Ins. Co. v. Cropper (1983) 141 C.A.3d 901, 905, 190 C.R. 593 [dismissal of plaintiff's action for failure to comply with discovery order was proper even though dismissal benefited party defendant who did not initiate discovery].

Alliance Bank v. Murray (1984) 161 C.A.3d 1, 9, 207 C.R. 233 [defendant's wilful failure to attend two properly noticed depositions justified default judgment].

Dalitz v. Penthouse Int. Ltd. (1985) 168 C.A.3d 468, 214 C.R. 254 [dismissal of action for claim of newsman's privilege which prevented discovery of facts necessary for defense].

Hartbrodt v. Burke (1996) 42 C.A.4th 168, 173, 175, 49 C.R.2d 562 [complaint properly dismissed with prejudice where plaintiff, relying on self-incrimination privilege, refused to produce tape recording of relevant conversation between him and defendant; plaintiff could not avoid involuntary dismissal by seeking voluntary dismissal without prejudice].

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Spoliation of Evidence. C.C.P. 2023, authorizing terminating sanctions, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.030 in 2004 without substantive change. (2) Persistent Noncompliance. C.C.P. 2030(g), on the requirement that interrogatory responses be signed under oath, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.250 in 2004 without substantive change.

See Lang v. Hochman (2000) 77 C.A.4th 1225, 1247, 92 C.R.2d 322 [sanctions striking defendant's answer and dismissing his cross-complaint were proper, where both discovery referee and trial court found that defendant's lack of diligence in complying with discovery orders was wilful, tactical, egregious, and inexcusable, and lesser sanctions had not produced requested documents]; American Home Assur. Co. v. Societe' Commerciale Toute'lectric (2002) 104 C.A.4th 406, 436, 128 C.R.2d 430 [in action by insurer against French corporation, defendant's conduct in resisting discovery and then attempting to stand on its rights under Hague Convention at late stage of discovery proceedings constituted wilful obstructive behavior that supported imposition of terminating sanction]; Mileikowsky v. Tenet Healthsystem (2005) 128 C.A.4th 262, 278, 26 C.R.3d 831 [in physician's action against health care providers for breach of contract, terminating sanctions were proper for plaintiff's repeated failures to answer discovery requests; although there was no intervening court order, as ordinarily required for terminating sanction, parties' stipulation essentially waiving plaintiff's right to insist on formal order compelling responses as precursor to issuance of sanctions was tantamount to court order]; Jerry's Shell v. Equilon Enterprises, LLC (2005) 134 C.A.4th 1058, 1069, 36 C.R.3d 637 [in action by franchisees against their franchisor, imposition of terminating sanctions was justified based on plaintiffs' repeated failure to respond to discovery and to comply with court orders; plaintiffs did not respond to discovery requests until more than 10 months later, disregarded two court orders in interim, and also ignored attempts by defense counsel to discuss discovery deficiencies]; Electronic Funds Solutions, LLC v. Murphy (2005) 134 C.A.4th 1161, 1183, 36 C.R.3d 663 [in trade secret misappropriation action, trial judge did not abuse discretion in striking defendants' answer and entering default judgment based on defendants' persistent failure to comply with discovery orders, including their attempt to erase e-mails responsive to previous document request]; Reedy v. Bussell (2007) 148 C.A.4th 1272, 1292, 56 C.R.3d 216 [in probate proceeding, trial judge did not abuse discretion in imposing terminating sanctions based on defendants' wilful and repeated obstruction of discovery; in light of ample opportunities defendants were given to comply with obligations, it was reasonable to assume that lesser sanctions would be insufficient to curb their continued abuses].(3) Other Examples. See Miranda v. 21st Century Ins. Co. (2004) 117 C.A.4th 913, 928, 12 C.R.3d 159 [trial judge properly dismissed uninsured motorist arbitration where plaintiff resisted insurer's attempts to obtain plaintiff's medical records, judge ordered her to sign authorizations for release of records, she failed to obey order, and she later announced that she would not sign them]; Steven M. Garber & Associates v. Eskandarian (2007) 150 C.A.4th 813, 820, 59 C.R.3d 1 [terminating sanctions were properly imposed where defendants failed to comply with order to respond to interrogatories and production demands, failed to pay monetary sanctions, and, at time terminating sanctions were sought, had disappeared].

2. Discretion Abused.

[§ 259] Discretion Abused.

In Brown v. Presley of Southern Calif. (1989) 213 C.A.3d 612, 261 C.R. 779, plaintiff homeowner's action against defendant homebuilder was dismissed when her attorney was late for a hearing on a motion to strike brought by one of defendant's subcontractors. The subcontractor had been brought into the case by way of cross-complaints for indemnity. Plaintiff had earlier failed to appear at a deposition demanded by the subcontractor, who obtained an order requiring compliance and awarding attorneys' fees. When plaintiff's attorney informed the subcontractor that he would be unable to attend the ordered deposition, the subcontractor cancelled the deposition and moved to have plaintiff's complaint against defendant dismissed as a sanction. Plaintiff's attorney then informed the subcontractor that plaintiff would in fact pay the attorneys' fees and appear at the deposition, but the subcontractor refused to withdraw the motion to strike. Plaintiff's attorney then informed the subcontractor's attorney that he would be late, and requested that the hearing be rescheduled from 9 a.m. to 9:45 a.m. The hearing was not rescheduled, and the only party who appeared was defendant's attorney, who moved for dismissal. Held, dismissal reversed. "It is manifest that the court's use of the ultimate sanction of dismissal was excessive. That is to say, if plaintiff's attorney had appeared at 9 a.m. on May 20 expressing a willingness to produce his client for a deposition and to pay the sanctions imposed pursuant to the court's earlier order, it would unquestionably have been an abuse of discretion to strike appellant's complaint and dismiss the action. That he arrived after the order had already been made because [defendant's] attorney had neglected, inadvertently or otherwise, to inform the court [that plaintiff's attorney] would be 45 minutes late, cannot alter this fact." (213 C.A.3d 620.)

In Caryl Richards v. Superior Court (1961) 188 C.A.2d 300, 10 C.R. 377, plaintiff K brought an action against defendant company for damages for injuries to her eye allegedly received from a hair spray manufactured by defendant. One of plaintiff's interrogatories sought the chemical formula of the spray. Defendant, claiming that it was a trade secret, refused to state the exact proportions. On plaintiff's motion, Judge R imposed the sanction of establishing the fact that the product was harmful, together with $ 150 costs and attorneys' fees. On a subsequent motion, Judge M struck defendant's answer and ordered its default to be entered. Held, mandamus granted to compel the lower court to vacate the default and reinstate the answer.

The case involved a number of issues of fact as to whether the spray was actually supplied by defendant to the beauty salon and applied to plaintiff, whether it caused an injury, whether she was guilty of contributory negligence, etc. The particular interrogatory related to only one issue, and a full compliance by defendant with the court's order would at most have established the fact that the spray was injurious. Plaintiff would still have the burden of proving all other issues of fact, and defendant would still be free to establish contributory negligence. Thus the order the court made was not one designed to accomplish the purposes of discovery but to punish defendant for its failure to disclose its secret process. Hence, it was not only an abuse of discretion but a denial of due process. The proper sanction, the court observed, would have been to presume the fact against defendant, as in Judge R's order. (188 C.A.2d 304.)

Other examples of actions in which the trial court abused its discretion in imposing a terminating sanction include the following:

Deyo v. Kilbourne (1978) 84 C.A.3d 771, 797, 149 C.R. 499 [answers to interrogatories not wholly responsive, and court could order filing of further answers, but order striking answer and entering default was unwarranted].

Morgan v. Ransom (1979) 95 C.A.3d 664, 669, 157 C.R. 212 [plaintiff inmate's handwritten answers to defendant's interrogatories were rejected by clerk as not timely and not in proper form, and judge dismissed action without seeing any of plaintiff's papers; judge abused discretion by never considering whether answers were adequate; also, there was no showing of prejudice to defendant, or of relevancy of interrogatories].

Duggan v. Moss (1979) 98 C.A.3d 735, 744, 159 C.R. 425 [trial judge should not have dismissed plaintiff's complaint following plaintiff's failure to answer interrogatories without considering voluminous nature of interrogatories, that parties had at one point apparently agreed to settle case, that plaintiff had to some extent cooperated with earlier discovery requests, that defendant had himself delayed several months in answering plaintiff's interrogatories, and that plaintiff's counsel had requested a continuance and had indicated that he was working on answers].

Lovato v. Santa Fe Int. Corp. (1984) 151 C.A.3d 549, 553, 198 C.R. 838 [trial court denied defendant's due process by entering default judgment with defendant unaware of interrogatories that defendant's suspended attorney had failed to respond to].

Jones v. Otero (1984) 156 C.A.3d 754, 757, 758, 759, 203 C.R. 90 [timely written notice of defendants' motion to dismiss should have been given to plaintiffs, pursuant to statute and in accordance with fundamental principles of due process; prior order directing plaintiffs' attorney to pay sanctions was not directed to plaintiffs, and dismissal on failure of either to pay sanction was an act in excess of jurisdiction; "dismissal can never be an appropriate remedy for an attorney's noncompliance with an order imposing monetary sanctions"].

Trail v. Cornwell (1984) 161 C.A.3d 477, 488, 207 C.R. 679 [dismissal of plaintiff's complaint on grounds of wilful refusal to appear for deposition and to serve answers to interrogatories; cause remanded for consideration of other appropriate sanctions].

Wilson v. Jefferson (1985) 163 C.A.3d 952, 958, 210 C.R. 464 [default judgment was excessive; defendant's discovery misconduct related only to his specious affirmative defense and was not dispositive of other issues that were manifestly part of default judgment].

Thomas v. Luong (1986) 187 C.A.3d 76, 80, 231 C.R. 631 [default judgment entered against defendant who had failed to appear for deposition and to answer form interrogatories; trial court abused its discretion in imposing ultimate sanction where adequate lesser sanctions were available, including accepting defendant's offer to stipulate to liability or striking defendant's pleadings insofar as they contested liability or causation].

Morgan v. Southern Calif. Rapid Transit Dist. (1987) 192 C.A.3d 976, 981, 984, 237 C.R. 756 [although order striking defendant's answer was proper discovery sanction, granting plaintiff default judgment was reversible error where plaintiff failed to serve defendant with notice of amount of damages sought, as required by C.C.P. 425.11 (4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §473)].

McArthur v. Bockman (1989) 208 C.A.3d 1076, 1081, 256 C.R. 522 [default judgment against defendants for failing to appear at deposition that was limited to inquiry as to their wealth for punitive damages purposes was abuse of discretion; more limited sanction was appropriate].

Ruvalcaba v. Government Employees Ins. Co. (1990) 222 C.A.3d 1579, 1583, 272 C.R. 541 [dismissal for plaintiff's failure to respond to demand for inspection was improper in absence of prior order directing him to respond].

Newland v. Superior Court (1995) 40 C.A.4th 608, 614, 615, 47 C.R.2d 24 [terminating sanction may not be imposed for failure to pay monetary discovery sanction].

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Other examples of abuse of discretion in imposing terminating sanction:

Sole Energy Co. v. Hodges (2005) 128 C.A.4th 199, 208, 26 C.R.3d 823 [entry of default against four defendants as discovery sanction violated due process, where two defendants, although they received notice for order shortening time on motion to compel attendance and for monetary and other unspecified sanctions, never received any notice that terminating sanction might be imposed, one defendant was not even named in any motion to compel or any discovery order, and order requiring fourth defendant to appear did not refer to sanctions of any type].

Parker v. Wolters Kluwer United States (2007) 149 C.A.4th 285, 296, 57 C.R.3d 18 [in action by employee against former employer and three of its employees, trial judge abused discretion in imposing terminating sanctions in favor of defendants who did not propound discovery themselves or show how they were prejudiced by plaintiff's failure to comply with discovery requests propounded by others; relying on Townsend v. Superior Court (1998) 61 C.A.4th 1431, 72 C.R.2d 333, text, §254].

Lee v. Blue Shield of Calif. (2007) 154 C.A.4th 1369, 1376, 65 C.R.3d 612 [health insurer violated B. & P.C. 809 (peer review hearing process) by terminating doctor's provider contract on ground that he was not cooperating with discovery requests; in face of repeated discovery misconduct, peer review process may be terminated, but this must be in course of hearing itself after affording doctor notice and opportunity to be heard; distinguishing Mileikowsky v. Tenet Healthsystem (2005) 128 C.A.4th 262, 26 C.R.3d 831, Supp., supra, §258].

5. Contempt Sanction.

a. Authorization.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 260

[§ 260] Authorization.

The court may make an order treating the misuse of the discovery process as a contempt. (C.C.P. 2023(b)(5); see 15 Pepperdine L. Rev. 401, 416; C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Discovery §6.22 et seq.; C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §2.107.)

The following acts, in particular, are punishable as contempt:

(1) Disobeying a deposition subpoena in any manner described in C.C.P. 2020(g) (supra, §§44, 50). (C.C.P. 2020(h), supra, §58; see also C.C.P. 2025(j)(2) and C.C.P. 1991.1, supra, §58.)

(2) Refusing to obey an order compelling a deposition answer or the production of writings or things. (C.C.P. 2025(o), supra, §70.)

A party guilty of both deliberate refusal to appear for a deposition and failure to appear at an order to show cause hearing may be punished by imprisonment for criminal contempt, even though the civil action itself is no longer pending. (Morelli v. Superior Court (1969) 1 C.3d 328, 332, 82 C.R. 375, 461 P.2d 655.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

C.C.P. 2023(b)(5), authorizing contempt sanctions, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.030(e) in 2004 without substantive change.

See C.E.B., 2 Civil Discovery Practice 4th, §15.102.

(1) Disobeying deposition subpoena: C.C.P. 2020(h) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2020.240 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2025(j)(2), on the deponent's failure to attend, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.440 in 2004 without substantive change.

(2) Disobeying order compelling answer or production: C.C.P. 2025(o), on failure to obey an order compelling an answer or to produce documents, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.480 in 2004 without substantive change.

XII. SANCTIONS

B. Types of Sanctions.

5. Contempt Sanction.

b. Procedure.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 261

[§ 261] Procedure.

In re Morelli (1970) 11 C.A.3d 819, 91 C.R. 72, was a habeas corpus proceeding on behalf of an expert witness for the defense who refused to appear at a deposition even though he had acquired knowledge about an alleged mechanical failure which purportedly caused a fatal accident. In upholding a 5-day jail sentence and $ 500 fine, the court rejected a number of technical attacks on the procedure.

(a) Adequacy of supporting papers. The order to show cause for the contempt hearing was properly supported by a combination of documents. The deposition reporter certified that she appeared at the proper time and place to administer the oath and transcribe the testimony, that opposing counsel were present, and that plaintiffs' attorney made an unsworn statement about the expert's having been served and paid the witness fees he had demanded. At 15 minutes past the scheduled time, the attorney stated that the expert apparently was not going to attend. The attorney therefore asked the reporter to file a transcript with the superior court. Under penalty of perjury, the attorney also executed a declaration indicating that the expert had relevant information. Taken together, these papers met statutory requirements. The reporter's certification under her official seal properly reported the expert's disobedience to the subpoena and satisfied former C.C.P. 1191. (11 C.A.3d 829.) Because the reporter was to officiate at the deposition proceeding, she was a "judicial officer" authorized by C.C.P. 1211 to make a statement of the facts that constituted the contempt. (11 C.A.3d 829.) The declaration by plaintiffs' attorney was under penalty of perjury and therefore a substitute for the affidavit required by C.C.P. 1211. (11 C.A.3d 830.) And the attorney's statements, as transcribed in the deposition record, were made as an officer of the court by reason of his status as an attorney. (11 C.A.3d 830.)

(b) Forfeiture of bail. The expert had been arrested on a bench warrant, posted $ 500 bail and suffered a forfeiture when he refused to appear for an order to show cause hearing. In seeking to vacate a later order for his arrest, he argued that the bail forfeiture, which equaled the maximum fine for contempt, should have discharged him. The court disagreed. "Such a position was tantamount to a confession of the offense (nonappearance by a properly served resident) or at least a concession that the offense had been properly charged, including the element of residence." (11 C.A.3d 834, footnote 8.)

(c) Personal service. The expert contended that he should have been personally served with the order to show cause as to his alleged contempt for disobeying the subpoena. This position would have been valid if the expert had never appeared, because in those circumstances the order serves not only as notice but also as a summons giving personal jurisdiction over the individual. (11 C.A.3d 838.) (See 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §874 et seq.) But once personal jurisdiction has been obtained, the order to show cause serves chiefly as a notice. (11 C.A.3d 838.) (See 6 Cal. Proc.

(4th), Proceedings Without Trial, §55 et seq.) It is "sometimes considered the equivalent of a citation, not in the sense of a personal subpoena, but as a direction for an appearance (normally by counsel) to answer the motion being put to the court. Service on the attorney is therefore appropriate." (11 C.A.3d 838.) The attorney, of course, has the duty to apprise his client of the matter, and the expert's attorney did so here. (11 C.A.3d 838.)

"Since the response to the order to show cause (even initially) may be by counsel ... , personal service on the party is not significant. The main thing is that there be an accurate appraisal of the time of the hearing and a fair appraisal of what must be met." (11 C.A.3d 839.)

5. Contempt Sanction.

c. Illustrations.

[§ 262] Illustrations.

(1) Order Upheld. In re Bongfeldt (1971) 22 C.A.3d 465, 99 C.R. 428, had its origin in the accidental death of plaintiff's wife, who was struck and killed by a negligent uninsured motorist. Even though liability was admitted, Allstate, the insurance carrier, with whom plaintiff had uninsured motorist coverage, refused to settle for the $ 15,000 policy limit; only after a contested arbitration did plaintiff receive the full amount. Plaintiff then sued Allstate on the ground that the insurer had fraudulently failed to disclose its intention to pay a sum less than the policy limit in settlement of a claim, even though the insured was entitled to full recovery. To show that Allstate lacked good faith, plaintiff deposed B, its claims evaluator. The key inquiry was whether B could make an evaluation of the wrongful death claim under the policy. B refused to answer. After a court order directing him to answer, B still said he could not do so without a review of the entire file. When plaintiff's counsel suggested a recess to allow B to read the file, which was in defense counsel's possession, the latter refused to allow that procedure. Held, B was properly adjudged in contempt. He was an officer or high level employee of Allstate, and he and Allstate's attorney were engaged in a "high-handed oppressive effort" to defy the order and deny plaintiff the discovery to which he was entitled. (22 C.A.3d 476.)

The opinion adds: "The trial court found Bongfeldt alone to be in contempt. In our view, were the contempt of each to be weighed, that of the attorney would be the greater. In such cases courts should not hesitate also to impose contempt sanctions upon the errant attorney." (22 C.A.3d 476.)

(2) Order Annulled. In Little v. Superior Court (1968) 260 C.A.2d 311, 67 C.R. 77, plaintiff wife sued for divorce, and defendant husband cross-complained seeking custody of a child. He thereby put his fitness in issue, and plaintiff sought to take depositions of a psychoanalyst and psychotherapist whom the husband had consulted. On claim of privilege by defendant's attorney, they refused to testify. The court then made an order that the privilege did not apply (Ev.C. 996(a) and 1016, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §§204, 223), and that if defendant refused to execute a written consent to their answering questions, the county clerk was appointed commissioner to execute the consent. On being notified, defendant's attorney informed plaintiff's attorney that defendant "has elected not to sign a consent." The clerk, as ordered, executed the consent. The deposition of the psychoanalyst was then taken without difficulty, but the psychotherapist, not informed of the clerk's consent, still refused. Thereafter, defendant was held in contempt. Held, annulled. There was no order specifically directing him to perform any act, and no substantial evidence of wilful disobedience. The court's ambiguous order (granting plaintiff's motion to compel consent, but actually ordering alternatives) had to be resolved in favor of the accused, as giving defendant a choice of signing or letting the clerk sign in his behalf. (260 C.A.2d 318, 319.)

In re de la Parra (1986) 184 C.A.3d 139, 228 C.R. 864, involved a defendant who contended that he was constrained by Mexican law to refuse to answer certain interrogatories. The trial court issued a brief commitment order stating that defendant "is found in contempt of Court for failure to comply with court order. Court orders 15 days in custody." Held, order annulled.

(a) The requirements of C.C.P. 1211 et seq. (8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Enforcement of Judgment, §335) apply to discovery sanctions matters. The contempt citation fails to demonstrate on its face that defendant is guilty of contempt, fails to recite the specific facts giving rise to the contempt, and fails to recite a finding of a present ability to perform. Moreover, the commitment order "falls short even of the requirements for imposing less egregious discovery sanctions, which at a minimum call for a statement of explicit reasons for the sanctions." (184 C.A.3d 144.)

(b) "The trial court here had available many alternative solutions other than adding to the already overcrowded jail population. ... Imposition of a jail sentence to enforce civil discovery against a party to the lawsuit strikes us as unnecessary and overbearing. Use of this most extreme sanction should be reserved for situations where the court's dignity is truly compromised and no other suitable penalty can be found." (184 C.A.3d 144, 145.)

C. Procedure.

1. Contents of Motion for Sanctions.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 263

[§ 263] Contents of Motion for Sanctions.

The notice of motion for a sanction must identify every person, party, and attorney against whom the sanction is sought, and specify the type of sanction sought. The notice of motion must be supported by a memorandum of points and authorities, and accompanied by a declaration setting forth facts supporting the amount of any monetary sanction sought. (C.C.P. 2023(c); see 15 Pepperdine L. Rev. 401, 420; for forms, see Rutter Group, 2 Civil Procedure Before Trial, Forms 8:M [motion to compel answers to deposition questions and for award of sanctions], 8:W [interrogatories], 8:FF.2 [production of documents]; C.E.B., 2 Civil Litigation Forms Manual, §§24.20 et seq. [motion to compel answers to deposition questions and production of documents], 27.10 et seq. [interrogatories], 28.6 et seq. [demand for inspection].)

C.C.P. 2023(c), on motions for sanctions, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.040 in 2004 without substantive change.

Under C.C.P. 2023.040, a motion seeking sanctions for misuse of discovery requires only the support of a memorandum of points and authorities and an accompanying declaration setting forth facts justifying the amount of monetary sanctions sought. The motion is not subject to the 45-day time limit that applies to motions to compel further responses to interrogatories (C.C.P. 2030.300(c)), and there is no meet and confer requirement such as applies to motions to compel further responses to interrogatories (C.C.P. 2030.300(b)) and inspection demands (C.C.P. 2031.310(b)(2)). The 45-day time limit and the meet and confer requirement are also inapplicable under C.C.P. 2030.290 (motion to compel answers to interrogatories; see text and Supp., §115). ## CHAPTER X - Discovery

XII. SANCTIONS

C. Procedure.

2. Order Compelling Compliance as Prerequisite to Imposition of Sanctions.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 264

[§ 264] Order Compelling Compliance as Prerequisite to Imposition of Sanctions.

Cases and treatises have interpreted the Civil Discovery Act of 1986 and its predecessors to require that, before being subjected to sanctions harsher than monetary sanctions, a party must have disobeyed a court order compelling discovery. (See, e.g., Deyo v. Kilbourne (1978) 84 C.A.3d 771, 789, 149 C.R. 499; Young v. Rosenthal (1989) 212 C.A.3d 96, 114, 260 C.R. 369; Ruvalcaba v. Government Employees Ins. Co. (1990) 222 C.A.3d 1579, 1583, 272 C.R. 541 [dismissal for plaintiff's failure to respond to demand for inspection was improper in absence of prior order directing him to respond]; Rutter Group, 2 Civil Procedure Before Trial §§8:10, 8:1184 et seq.)

This interpretation has been rejected, however, where obtaining a prior order compelling discovery would be futile. In Do It Urself Moving & Storage v. Brown, Leifer, Slatkin & Berns (1992) 7 C.A.4th 27, 9 C.R.2d 396, an action for breach of contract, negligence, breach of fiduciary duty, and accounting, plaintiffs promised, but failed, to produce an audit report and supporting documentation. On defendant's motion, the trial court precluded plaintiffs from introducing accounting evidence. Held, sanction was properly imposed. Even though the motion for sanctions was the first motion to deal with discovery issues, plaintiffs had conceded that they were unable to provide the promised items of discovery. Accordingly, a formal order to comply would have been futile. (7 C.A.4th 36, 37.) (See Vallbona v. Springer (1996) 43 C.A.4th 1525, 1546, 51 C.R.2d 311 [requiring plaintiffs to seek formal order to compel defendants to comply with discovery would have been futile because defendants had claimed requested documents were stolen; following Do It Urself Moving & Storage].)

Ford Motor Co.* (2006) 140 C.A.4th 1202, 1214, 45 C.R.3d 265 [in products liability action against automobile manufacturer, imposition of evidence and issue sanctions was justified, even in absence of discovery order, where sanctions were based not just on defendant's failure to produce "person most knowledgeable" for deposition on warnings issue, as promised, but on entire pattern of discovery abuse].

XII. SANCTIONS

C. Procedure.

3. Motion for Reconsideration of Sanctions Order.

[§ 265] Motion for Reconsideration of Sanctions Order.

In Mattco Forge v. Arthur Young & Co. (1990) 223 C.A.3d 1429, 273 C.R. 262, defendant responded to plaintiff's demand for inspection of documents with blanket objections, and refused to meet and confer with plaintiff on the ground that to do so was premature because its demurrer was pending. Plaintiff's second request to meet and confer, filed after the trial judge had sustained the demurrer with leave to amend, was also rejected by defendant because the pleading issues were still pending. Plaintiff then filed a motion for an order to compel production and for sanctions under C.C.P. 2031 and 2023, the request for sanctions being based on defendant's refusal to meet and confer and the unmeritorious nature of its objections. After the trial judge granted four-fifths of the motion to compel (8 out of 10 requests were granted) and one-fourth of the request for sanctions ($ 750 awarded instead of the $ 3,062.50 requested), defendant filed a motion for reconsideration of the sanction, and plaintiff filed a written opposition and requested additional sanctions under C.C.P. 128.5 and 2023. The trial judge denied the motion for reconsideration on the ground that it was frivolous, and ordered defendant to pay an additional $ 800 sanction. Defendant challenged the first sanction order by mandamus and the second by appeal. Held, mandamus denied; second order affirmed.

(a) First sanction award was fair and legally correct.

(1) Defendant contended that this award, which was based on the inadequacy of defendant's discovery responses, was erroneous, because plaintiff's notice of request for sanctions referred only to defendant's refusals to meet and confer. However, plaintiff made specific references, in both the title and body of the notice, to C.C.P. 2031 and to defendant's frivolous objections, and defendant clearly was not misled, because its opposition to the motion included an attempt to justify its blanket objections. (223 C.A.3d 1435.)

(2) Under C.C.P. 2031(l) (now 2031(m)), the trial judge was required to impose sanctions in the absence of a finding that defendant acted with substantial justification. Defendant offered nothing to support its claim that the objections to the eight document requests were justified. Instead, it focused solely on the two requests where the objections were found to be legitimate and ignored the fact that the sanction was reduced because the motion was not granted in its entirety. (223 C.A.3d 1436.)

(3) The fact that defendant was given 30 days to comply with the order to produce the requested documents (a date beyond the next scheduled hearing on the still pending demurrer) did not establish the trial judge's agreement with defendant's claim of prematurity. The timing showed only the judge's concern that, at that stage of the proceedings, the demurrer be resolved first; it did not come close to establishing that defendant's refusal to produce the documents in the first place was justified. (223 C.A.3d 1436.)

(b) Second sanction award was proper under the Civil Discovery Act of 1986.

(1) Defendant's contention that this award was insufficient because the trial judge failed to make the findings required by C.C.P. 128.5(c) (7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §248) ignores the fact that the request for sanctions, which was made in opposition to defendant's motion for reconsideration of the first award, was also based on C.C.P. 2023. Because reconsideration, in a discovery dispute as in most other contexts, is simply a continuation of the hearing in which the reconsidered order was rendered, it follows that defendant's motion for reconsideration was part and parcel of the underlying discovery dispute, i.e., a continuation of its opposition to plaintiff's motion to compel production and original request for sanctions. (223 C.A.3d 1437, citing Buchanan v. Buchanan (1979) 99 C.A.3d 587, 595, 160 C.R. 577.) Hence, the trial judge properly awarded discovery sanctions (not C.C.P. 128.5 sanctions) and was not required to make written findings explaining its order. (223 C.A.3d 1438.)

(2) The fact that the trial judge found that the motion for reconsideration was frivolous does not establish that he was applying C.C.P. 128.5 (the wrong statute); an order or judgment that is correct on any theory will be affirmed on appeal. (223 C.A.3d 1440; see 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Appeal, §340.) The use of the word "frivolous" was "factually accurate and legally irrelevant." (223 C.A.3d 1440.)

(3) Defendant's contention that the second award cannot stand under the Discovery Act because C.C.P. 2023 does not include a motion for reconsideration in its list of discovery abuses (supra, §249) lacks merit for two reasons: (a) Under C.C.P. 2023(a)(5), the making of unmeritorious objections to discovery is a misuse of the discovery process. Defendant's motion for reconsideration was a continuation of plaintiff's motion to compel production and the original request for sanctions, which, in turn, was based on defendant's unmeritorious objections. (223 C.A.3d 1440.) (b) Under C.C.P. 2023(a), the misuses of the discovery process "include, but are not limited to," the nine listed abuses. There is no reason why a motion for reconsideration of a sanction award, made without substantial justification and in the absence of other circumstances making the award unjust, should not be viewed as an abuse of the discovery process under C.C.P. 2023(a). (223 C.A.3d 1441.)

(4) To disallow sanctions for unjustified motions for reconsideration of discovery sanction awards would allow such motions to be used to deprive the prevailing party of the costs it had already recovered for making a motion made necessary in the first place only because of the other party's failure to comply with the Discovery Act. "If the sanction provisions of the Discovery Act are to be a credible deterrent to discovery abuses, they must be applied to prevent a losing party from accomplishing indirectly that which it is expressly prohibited from doing directly--forcing a party who deals fairly to pay for the abusive tactics of one who does not." (223 C.A.3d 1441.)

(c) Defendant not subject to additional sanctions for pursuing frivolous appeal. As noted, the second sanction award cannot be salvaged under C.C.P. 128.5. Hence, reliance on that statute would require reversal and remand with instructions to make the appropriate findings or vacate the award. In such event, defendant, as the prevailing party, could hardly be accused of making a frivolous appeal. And the basis for affirming the sanction order, i.e., as a discovery sanction not requiring specific findings, is not one that defendant should indisputably have anticipated. (223 C.A.3d 1442.) (See C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §2.112.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

C.C.P. 2023, authorizing sanctions for discovery abuses, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change. C.C.P. 2023(a), listing discovery abuses, became C.C.P. 2023.010, and C.C.P. 2023(a)(5), specifying that the making of an unmeritorious objection to discovery is an abuse, became C.C.P. 2023.010(e).

C.C.P. 2031, on inspection demands, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2031.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change. C.C.P. 2031(m), authorizing sanctions in connection with a motion to compel further response, became C.C.P. 2031.310.

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

I. PREPARATION FOR TRIAL A. Manuals and Other Practice Works.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 1

[§ 1] Manuals and Other Practice Works.

The steps that occur before counsel arrives at the courtroom, and the many problems faced in preparing a case for trial, are explored from different points of view in a number of books and articles on trial practice. The purpose of this section is to list modern practice manuals, handbooks, and encyclopedic articles that are useful in dealing with problems of trial practice and advocacy.

(1) General Works. American Jurisprudence Trials (cited as Am.Jur. Trials) covers all phases of trial practice (Volumes 1-6) and most kinds of trials (Volumes 7 et seq.). American Jurisprudence Proof of Facts (cited as Proof of Facts) presents sample questions and answers, with interspersed practice pointers, for establishing various specific facts or causes of action.

Other works of a general nature include Cotchett and Elkind, Federal Courtroom Evidence 3d; Danner, Expert Witness Checklists 2d; Hunter, Federal Trial Handbook 3d; Lane, Medical Litigation Guide; McCormick, McCormick on Evidence 5th; Schweitzer, Cyclopedia of Trial Practice 2d; Wharton's Criminal Evidence, 14th and 15th eds.

(2) California Works. The following works cover various aspects of trial practice in the California courts: California Trial Handbook 3d; C.E.B., California Civil Litigation Forms Manual; C.E.B., California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial 3d; C.E.B., California Expert Witness Guide 2d; C.E.B., California Trial Objections 5th; C.E.B., Condemnation Practice in California 2d; C.E.B., Effective Direct and Cross-Examination; C.E.B., Effective Introduction of Evidence in California 2d; C.E.B., Trial Attorney's Evidence Code Notebook 3d; C.E.B., Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook 3d; C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Trial; Haight and Cotchett, California Courtroom Evidence 4th; Jefferson, Synopsis of California Evidence Law; Rutter Group, Civil Trials and Evidence; West's California Judicial Council Forms.

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

II. BASIC EVIDENTIARY RIGHTS

A. Party's Right To Present Evidence.

1. Civil Cases.

[§ 3] Civil Cases.

(1) General Rule. One of the elements of a fair trial is the right to offer relevant and competent evidence on a material issue. Subject to such obvious qualifications as the court's power to restrict cumulative and rebuttal evidence (infra, §67 et seq.), and to exclude unduly prejudicial matter (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §132 et seq.), denial of this fundamental right is almost always considered reversible error. (See Guardianship of Waite (1939) 14 C.2d 727, 730, 97 P.2d 238 ["the right of a party to testify in his own behalf is fundamental"]; Kelly v. New West Fed. Savings (1996) 49 C.A.4th 659, 677, 56 C.R.2d 803 [exclusion of all testimony from plaintiffs' expert witness, which precluded plaintiffs from offering testimony to prove their case, was reversible per se]; 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Jurisdiction, §299; 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Appeal, §§439, 449.) (On right of prisoner, who is defendant in civil case, to appear and testify where his or her testimony is necessary for due process, see Payne v. Superior Court (1976) 17 C.3d 908, 925, 132 C.R. 405, 553 P.2d 565, 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §75.)

In Caldwell v. Caldwell (1962) 204 C.A.2d 819, 22 C.R. 854, plaintiff wife, with custody of children under a divorce decree, made a motion to increase the support award for a change in schools, and her counsel called her as a witness to testify to the child's needs. The judge said, "I understand she is just going to testify as to cause for more money," refused to hear her, and denied the motion. Held, this was reversible error per se. (204 C.A.2d 821; see 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Appeal, §449.)

In Bates v. Stoehr (1964) 229 C.A.2d 628, 40 C.R. 432, plaintiff recovered judgment against defendant guarantor, after the trial judge had excluded evidence in support of defendant's cross-complaint alleging fraud in inducing the guaranty. The judge's explanation was that in the Joint Pretrial Statement of "Issues," fraud was not mentioned, and that the listing of it under "Contentions" of the parties did not make it an issue. Held, reversible error per se. The Pretrial Order included all of the documents, including those labeled "Contentions of Defendants and Cross-Complainants," to be filed under separate cover. Hence, defendant was entitled to introduce evidence on this issue. And, because the judge made an express finding of no fraud, "such error was inherently prejudicial." (229 C.A.2d 633.)

(2) No Exception for Unpleasant Subject Matter. Reasons of delicacy or expediency cannot justify denial or unwarranted curtailment of the right. Thus, in Del Ruth v. Del Ruth (1946) 75 C.A.2d 638, 171 P.2d 34, involving the former divorce law in which fault was material, plaintiff sued for separate maintenance and defendant cross-complained for divorce. Each desired to show numerous instances of cruelty during more than 10 years before the suit, but the trial judge restricted them to certain specifications selected by him, of acts occurring within 3 1/2 years before the separation. Plaintiff was denied a decree, and appealed. Held, the ruling was reversible error. "However distressing and regrettable it may be to have to take evidence as to charges of infidelity, disloyalty, acts of physical violence, name calling, and the use of profane, obscene and disgusting language, it is not within the discretion of the court to arbitrarily refuse to receive competent, relevant and material evidence." (75 C.A.2d 646.)

Similarly, in Bole v. Bole (1946) 76 C.A.2d 344, 172 P.2d 936, also involving the former divorce law, plaintiff wife obtained a divorce on the ground of mental cruelty. (a) Defendant husband subpoenaed his 9-year-old son to testify in rebuttal, but the wife, who had custody, would not produce him, and the court refused to order her to do so. (b) As evidence of cruelty, the wife testified that defendant excluded her mother from their home; defendant's offer of evidence that the mother was immoral and unfit to associate with children was rejected. Held, both rulings were erroneous and constituted reversible error. (76 C.A.2d 345.)

(3) Only Opportunity To Testify is Protected. Goldstein v. Goldstein (1963) 220 C.A.2d 369, 33 C.R. 857, 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §172, makes a distinction: The fact that a party is mentally ill and unable to testify on his or her own behalf does not call for a mandatory continuance; in other words, due process protects the opportunity to testify, but does not make a party's capacity to testify a condition to completion of the trial. (220 C.A.2d 371.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) General Rule. See Elkins v. Superior Court (2007) 41 C.4th 1337, 1357, 1359, 63 C.R.3d 483, 163 P.3d 160, citing the text [local court rule requiring parties in marital dissolution matters to present case by written declarations was inconsistent with traditional concept of trial as reflected in Evidence Code and Code of Civil Procedure; parties' right to testify in their own behalf, call witnesses, and proffer admissible evidence is central to their having day in court].

a. General Rule.

[§ 4] General Rule.

Denial of the right to present evidence is even more serious in criminal trials, and is almost invariably regarded as reversible error. (See Pennsylvania v. Ritchie (1987) 480 U.S. 39, 107 S.Ct. 989, 1000, 94 L.Ed.2d 40, 56, infra, §6 [criminal defendant has "right to put before a jury evidence that might influence the determination of guilt"]; People v. Carter (1957) 48 C.2d 737, 740, 312 P.2d 665, infra, §68; People v. Torres (1964) 61 C.2d 264, 267, 37 C.R. 889, 391 P.2d 161, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §28; People v. Schunke (1934) 140 C.A. 544, 549, 35 P.2d 388 [reversible error to exclude testimony explaining why important alibi witnesses could not conveniently be produced]; cf. People v. Jones (1998) 17 C.4th 279, 305, 70 C.R.2d 793, 949 P.2d 890 [by excluding evidence from three witnesses concerning past statements and criminal activity by defendant's accomplice, trial judge did not deprive defendant of his right to present witnesses but simply precluded him from attempting to prove third-party culpability with time-consuming hearsay and not particularly probative character evidence].) (On right to compulsory process, see infra, §5 et seq.; on defendant's right to testify, see infra, §11; on defendant's right to have favorable evidence produced before a grand jury, see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §25; on intimidation causing defense witness to claim privilege, see infra, §§9, 10.)

Incidental to the right to present evidence is the right to have it considered. In People v. Mizer (1961) 195 C.A.2d 261, 15 C.R. 272, defendant was charged with several sex offenses with a 16-year-old boy. Before trial, defendant's motion to take interrogatories in Texas was granted, and the answers showed that the prosecuting witness had been a troublemaker with a bad reputation for honesty. The parties stipulated to a trial on the preliminary hearing transcript and the interrogatories. However, when the case came to trial, the judge said that he didn't remember the interrogatories, denied a motion to make them part of the trial record, and convicted defendant of the included offense of molesting a child (P.C. 647a, now P.C. 647.6). Thus, by finding defendant not guilty of the more serious charges, the judge indicated that he did not believe the testimony of the prosecuting witness, and, if he had read the omitted matter--which thoroughly impeached the witness--he might well have acquitted the defendant. Describing the result as a "travesty of justice," the court said: "We believe that it is fundamental in our system of jurisprudence that all of a defendant's pertinent evidence should be considered by the trier of fact." (195 C.A.2d 269.)

II. BASIC EVIDENTIARY RIGHTS

A. Party's Right To Present Evidence.

2. Criminal Cases.

b. Right to Compulsory Process.

1. Nature of Right.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 5

[§ 5] Nature of Right.

(1) Due Process Requirement. The right to compulsory process and the right to present evidence are interconnected elements of due process. This appears from the United States Supreme Court's invalidation of a state statute in Washington v. Texas (1967) 388 U.S. 14, 87 S.Ct. 1920, 18 L.Ed.2d 1019. The statute provided that persons charged as principals, accomplices, or accessories in the same crime cannot be offered as witnesses for each other, but can be called by the prosecution, and are no longer disqualified if previously tried and acquitted. Defendant W, jealous of his girlfriend's new date, went to her home with F who had a shotgun. Either W or F fired the gun and killed the other boy. F was first tried, convicted and sentenced to 50 years in prison. Then W was tried, and sought to produce F to testify that W tried to prevent him but that F fired the fatal shot. This testimony was excluded and W was convicted. Held, reversed.

(b) Although the statute did not deny the right to compel attendance, it made the evidence of certain witnesses inadmissible, under arbitrary categories, permitting testimony where there was a great incentive to perjury (for the prosecution, or for the defendant after acquittal). This was the equivalent of a denial of the right to compulsory process: "The Framers of the Constitution did not intend to commit the futile act of giving to a defendant the right to secure the attendance of witnesses whose testimony he had no right to use." (87 S.Ct. 1925, 18 L.Ed.2d 1025.) (On relationship of Compulsory Process Clause and Due Process Clause, see Pennsylvania v. Ritchie (1987) 480 U.S. 39, 107 S.Ct. 989, 94 L.Ed.2d 40, infra, §6.)

(2) Testimony Must Be Material and Favorable. The Washington court found a violation of the Sixth Amendment where the testimony excluded was relevant and vital to the defense. (87 S.Ct. 1922, 18 L.Ed.2d 1023.) This circumstance was treated as a requirement for establishing a violation of the constitutional right in United States v. Valenzuela-Bernal (1982) 458 U.S. 858, 102 S.Ct. 3440, 3446, 73 L.Ed.2d 1193, 1202. The government had deported two illegal aliens, and defendant contended that this act deprived him of the opportunity to interview them as possible witnesses for him at the trial. But he made no showing of what material and favorable evidence they would have given.

Held, his constitutional challenge to the indictment was properly denied.

The court said: "Sanctions may be imposed on the Government for deporting witnesses only if the criminal defendant makes a plausible showing that the testimony of the deported witnesses would have been material and favorable to his defense, in ways not merely cumulative to the testimony of available witnesses. In some cases such a showing may be based upon agreed facts, and will be in the nature of a legal argument rather than a submission of additional facts. In other cases the criminal defendant may advance additional facts, either consistent with facts already known to the court or accompanied by a reasonable explanation for their inconsistency with such facts, with a view to persuading the court that the testimony of a deported witness would have been material and favorable to his defense. Because in the latter situation the explanation of materiality is testimonial in nature, and constitutes evidence of the prejudice incurred as a result of the deportation, it should be verified by oath or affirmation of either the defendant or his attorney." (102 S.Ct. 3449, 73 L.Ed.2d 1206.)

Similarly, there are limits on the right to subpoena witnesses. The Constitution "does not authorize the indiscriminate use of the process of the court to call witnesses whose testimony could not possibly be received or which is grossly cumulative." (People v. Fernandez (1963) 222 C.A.2d 760, 768, 35 C.R. 370.) In Fernandez, defendant attacked the judge's refusal to call 33 witnesses from the county hospital where he had been treated, making no showing as to what testimony he expected. The court said: "Anyone who has had anything to do with the administration of criminal law knows that defendants occasionally express a wish to call many witnesses from all parts of the state who cannot possibly add a single relevant fact to the complex of factors applying to the crime charged; the courts do have inherent power to control the issuance of their own process and they should not permit an abuse of the constitutional right to subpoena witnesses." (222 C.A.2d 769.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Testimony Must Be Material and Favorable. See People v. Harris (2005) 37 C.4th 310, 344, 33 C.R.3d 509, 118 P.3d 545 [in capital murder case, prosecution, by contacting three potential witnesses in another state, did not unconstitutionally interfere with defendant's right to compulsory process; defendant's inability to have witnesses testify was ultimately result of trial judge's exclusion of this evidence, and, in any case, defendant failed to establish that it would have been both material and favorable to him]; People v. Woods (2004) 120 C.A.4th 929, 938, 16 C.R.3d 174 [in murder prosecution, defendant was not denied compulsory process right by prosecutor's refusal to complete plea agreement with witness until after defendant's trial, thereby causing witness to rely on privilege against self-incrimination in refusing to testify; as witness thereby became unavailable, his out-of-court statements were admitted, and thus defendant had opportunity to present his version of facts]. West's Key Number Digest, Witnesses k.2 et seq.

II. BASIC EVIDENTIARY RIGHTS

A. Party's Right To Present Evidence.

2. Criminal Cases.

b. Right to Compulsory Process.

2. Right To Discover Privileged or Protected Material.

aa. In Camera Review.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 6

[§ 6] In Camera Review.

(1) Confidential Records. In Pennsylvania v. Ritchie (1987) 480 U.S. 39, 107 S.Ct. 989, 94 L.Ed.2d 40, defendant was charged with committing various sexual offenses against his 13-year-old daughter. He sought to discover records concerning his daughter kept by CYS, a state protective service agency charged with investigating cases of suspected mistreatment and neglect. The statute made the records confidential, with specified exceptions including disclosure pursuant to court order. The trial judge, without reviewing the entire agency record, denied defendant's request, and he was convicted. Held, reversed.

(a) "This Court has had little occasion to discuss the contours of the Compulsory Process Clause." However: "Our cases establish, at a minimum, that criminal defendants have the right to the Government's assistance in compelling the attendance of favorable witnesses at trial and the right to put before a jury evidence that might influence the determination of guilt." (107 S.Ct. 1000, 94 L.Ed.2d 56.)

(b) "This Court has never squarely held that the Compulsory Process Clause guarantees the right to discover the identity of witnesses, or to require the Government to produce exculpatory evidence. ... Instead, the Court traditionally has evaluated claims such as those raised by Ritchie under the broader protections of the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. ... Although we conclude that compulsory process provides no greater protections in this area than those afforded by due process, we need not decide today whether and how the guarantees of the Compulsory Process Clause differ from those of the Fourteenth Amendment. It is enough to conclude that on these facts, Ritchie's claims more properly are considered by reference to due process." (107 S.Ct. 1001, 94 L.Ed.2d 57.)

(c) The government has the obligation to turn over evidence in its possession that is both favorable to the defendant and material to guilt or punishment. And, although the public interest in protecting the type of sensitive information in these records is strong, disclosure of information therein that is determined by a court to be material to defendant's defense is neither precluded by the statute nor opposed to any apparent state policy. Hence, defendant is entitled to have the CYS file reviewed by the trial judge to determine whether it contains information that probably would have changed the outcome of his trial. If it does, he must be given a new trial. If the records contain no such information, or if nondisclosure was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt, the lower court will be free to reinstate the prior conviction. (107 S.Ct. 1001, 94 L.Ed.2d 55.)

(d) Defendant may not require the trial judge to search through the files without first making some plausible showing that they contain material evidence. Although the obligation to disclose exculpatory material does not depend on the presence of a specific request, the degree of specificity of defendant's request may have a bearing on the trial judge's assessment on remand of the materiality of the nondisclosure. (107 S.Ct. 1002, 94 L.Ed.2d 58, footnote 15.)

(e) A defendant's right to discover exculpatory evidence does not include the unsupervised authority to search through the files, and defense counsel has no constitutional right to conduct his own search of the files to argue relevance. Defendant's interest, as well as that of the state, can be protected fully by requiring that the files be submitted only to the trial court for in camera review. Although this denies defendant the benefits of an "advocate's eye," the trial judge's discretion is not unbounded. If a defendant is aware of specific information contained in the file, he may request it directly from the judge, and argue in favor of its materiality. Moreover, the trial judge has an ongoing duty; information that is deemed immaterial upon original examination must be released if the judge subsequently determines it to be material to the fairness of the trial. (107 S.Ct. 1002, 94 L.Ed.2d 58.) (See 101 Harv. L. Rev. 128.)

(2) Privileged Material. In Rubio v. Superior Court (1988) 202 C.A.3d 1343, 249 C.R. 419, defendant was charged with sexual molestation of 7-year-old Brandie S., while living in her home with his mother, the housekeeper. When arrested, defendant told the police about a videotape which depicted Mr. and Mrs. S. engaging in sexual acts. Brandie later told the police that she had seen her father and stepmother in the tape, doing what defendant did to her. Defendant, by subpoena duces tecum, sought production of the videotape at his preliminary hearing. Mr. and Mrs. S. asserted their marital privilege, and the judge granted a motion to quash; he also granted a similar motion after defendant was held to answer. However, at the preliminary hearing Brandie was cross-examined about what she saw on the tape, without objection. The judge's view was that there was no need for discovery of the privileged tape because of the opportunity to cross-examine Brandie at the trial. Held, writ granted to compel production of the tape for in camera review by the judge.

(a) The marital privilege extends to written as well as oral communications, and a videotape is a writing within the meaning of Ev.C. 250. Hence, although the performance of sex acts was not a privileged communication, the videotape of those acts was. (202 C.A.3d 1347, 1348.) And the parties did not waive the privilege by failing to take more effective steps to secure the tape from other members of the household; they took reasonable steps by secreting it in a closet. (202 C.A.3d 1348.)

(b) Davis v. Alaska (1974) 415 U.S. 308, 94 S.Ct. 1105, 39 L.Ed.2d 347, balanced the defendant's constitutional rights of confrontation and cross-examination against the state's interest in protecting the anonymity of juvenile offenders, and found the defendant's rights paramount. And People v. Reber (1986) 177 C.A.3d 523, 223 C.R. 139, and People v. Caplan (1987) 193 C.A.3d 543, 238 C.R. 478, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §235, followed the Davis approach. But the present case involves a different situation: Here Mr. and Mrs. S. asserted their constitutional right of privacy in sexual relations between married persons, in addition to their statutory marital privilege. Thus, instead of balancing a defendant's constitutional rights against a statutory privilege, this court must balance two competing federal constitutional rights, both of which are also "inalienable" state constitutional rights. (202 C.A.3d 1349.)

(c) People v. Boyette (1988) 201 C.A.3d 1527, 247 C.R. 795, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §44, adopting the analysis of Pennsylvania v. Ritchie, supra, held that an in camera review was necessary; and these cases indicate that a pretrial in camera review of the videotape should be ordered. "There is no way to balance those competing rights without viewing the tape itself." (202 C.A.3d 1350.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Confidential Records. Ev.C. 1045(b)(1) (5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §59), which precludes a criminal defendant's discovery of citizen complaints that were filed more than 5 years before the defendant's criminal act, is not unconstitutional on its face, but it is not an absolute bar to disclosure. A trial judge who, after in camera review, finds such a complaint to be exculpatory may order its disclosure notwithstanding the statutory limitation. (Los Angeles v. Superior Court (Brandon) (2002) 29 C.4th 1, 12, 14, 124 C.R.2d 202, 52 P.3d 129, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, Supp., §59, relying on Pennsylvania v. Ritchie (1987) 480 U.S. 39, 107 S.Ct. 989, 94 L.Ed.2d 40, text, p. 33.) West's Key Number Digest, Criminal Law k.662.4 et seq.

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

II. BASIC EVIDENTIARY RIGHTS

A. Party's Right To Present Evidence.

2. Criminal Cases.

b. Right to Compulsory Process.

3. Validity of Precluding Testimony as Discovery Sanction.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 8

[§ 8] Validity of Precluding Testimony as Discovery Sanction.

(1) Preclusion of Surprise Witness' Testimony. In Taylor v. Illinois (1988) 484 U.S. 400, 108 S.Ct. 646, 98 L.Ed.2d 798, defendant was charged in an Illinois court with attempted murder, and the prosecutor filed a discovery motion requesting a list of defense witnesses. Defense counsel identified some, but on the second day of trial, after the prosecution's two principal witnesses had completed their testimony, counsel made an oral motion to include Wormley, on a representation that he was a witness to the incident. Counsel acknowledged that defendant had told him about Wormley at an earlier time but said he had been unable to locate him. Wormley was produced, and in response to the judge's questions it appeared that he had not been a witness but had first met the defendant over 2 years after the incident. Because this testimony directly contradicted defense counsel's representations, the court concluded that the appropriate sanction for the discovery violation was to exclude his testimony. Held, the sanction was proper.

(a) The state's contention that the Compulsory Process Clause is not implicated by preclusion as a discovery sanction is untenable: "The right to compel a witness' presence in the courtroom could not protect the integrity of the adversary process if it did not embrace the right to have the witness' testimony heard by the trier of fact." (108 S.Ct. 652, 98 L.Ed.2d 810.)

(b) Defendant's claim that the Clause creates an absolute bar to preclusion of the testimony of a surprise witness is equally untenable: "The accused does not have an unfettered right to offer testimony that is incompetent, privileged, or otherwise inadmissible under standard rules of evidence. The Compulsory Process Clause provides him with an effective weapon, but it is a weapon that cannot be used irresponsibly." (108 S.Ct. 653, 98 L.Ed.2d 811.) And the principle that undergirds the defendant's right to present exculpatory evidence is also the source of essential limitations on the right, such as a rule providing for pretrial discovery of witnesses. (108 S.Ct. 653, 98 L.Ed.2d 811.)

(c) Defendant also contended that the sanction of preclusion of the testimony of a previously undisclosed witness is so drastic that it should never be imposed. But there are instances in which alternative sanctions would be inadequate: "If a pattern of discovery violations is explicable only on the assumption that the violations were designed to conceal a plan to present fabricated testimony, it would be entirely appropriate to exclude the tainted evidence regardless of whether other sanctions would also be merited." (108 S.Ct. 655, 98 L.Ed.2d 814.)

(d) Defendant's argument that the judge's voir dire examination of Wormley adequately protected the prosecution from any possible prejudice is not persuasive: "Regardless of whether prejudice to the prosecution could have been avoided in this particular case, it is plain that the case fits into the category of willful misconduct in which the severest sanction is appropriate. After all, the court, as well as the prosecutor, has a vital interest in protecting the trial process from the pollution of perjured testimony." (108 S.Ct. 656, 98 L.Ed.2d 815.)

(e) The final argument, that defendant should not be held responsible for his lawyer's misconduct, "strikes at the heart of the attorney-client relationship." "[G]iven the protections afforded by the attorney-client privilege and the fact that extreme cases may involve unscrupulous conduct by both the client and the lawyer, it would be highly impracticable to require an investigation into their relative responsibilities before applying the sanction of preclusion. In responding to discovery, the client has a duty to be candid and forthcoming with the lawyer, and when the lawyer responds, he or she speaks for the client. Putting to one side the exceptional cases in which counsel is ineffective, the client must accept the consequences of the lawyer's decision to forego cross-examination, to decide not to put certain witnesses on the stand, or to decide not to disclose the identity of certain witnesses in advance of trial. In this case petitioner has no greater right to disavow his lawyer's decision to conceal Wormley's identity until after the trial commenced than he has to disavow the decision to refrain from adducing testimony from the eyewitnesses who were identified in the Answer to Discovery. Whenever a lawyer makes use of the sword provided by the Compulsory Process Clause, there is some risk that he may wound his own client." (108 S.Ct. 657, 98 L.Ed.2d 816.)

Three justices dissented. (See 102 Harv. L. Rev. 143; 25 San Diego L. Rev. 1113.)

(2) Preclusion of Evidence After Failure To Comply With Notice Requirements. The view that the Sixth Amendment does not prohibit the preclusion of evidence as a sanction for a discovery violation was reaffirmed in Michigan v. Lucas (1991) 500 U.S. 145, 111 S.Ct. 1743, 114 L.Ed.2d 205. In a prosecution for criminal sexual conduct, defendant failed to give advance notice of his intention to present evidence of the victim's past sexual conduct, as required by Michigan's rape-shield statute. The statute provided that in order to introduce such evidence a defendant must file a written motion and offer of proof within 10 days of his arraignment. The trial court denied a defense motion at the start of trial for permission to introduce evidence of the past sexual relationship between the victim and defendant. Defendant was convicted, but the Michigan Court of Appeals reversed on the ground the statutory notice-and-hearing requirement violated the Sixth Amendment when used to preclude evidence of past sexual conduct between a rape victim and a criminal defendant. Held, the Sixth Amendment is not so rigid.

(a) In Taylor v. Illinois, supra, the argument that preclusion as a discovery sanction violates the Compulsory Process Clause of the Sixth Amendment was rejected, and it was explicitly stated that there are circumstances in which preclusion is justified, although alternative sanctions are adequate and appropriate in most cases. (111 S.Ct. 1748, 114 L.Ed.2d 214.)

(b) The Michigan court erred in adopting a per se rule against preclusion of evidence of past sexual conduct between a rape victim and a defendant. Michigan's statutory notice-and-hearing requirement served legitimate state interests in protecting against surprise, harassment, and undue delay, and failure to comply with it might in some cases justify the severe sanction of preclusion. The propriety of the preclusion in this case was for the state court to consider on remand. (111 S.Ct. 1748, 114 L.Ed.2d 214.)

c. Impermissible Intimidation of Defense Witness.

1. Causing Witness To Claim Privilege.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 9

[§ 9] Causing Witness To Claim Privilege.

(1) Threat by Judge. In Webb v. Texas (1972) 409 U.S. 95, 93 S.Ct. 351, 34 L.Ed.2d 330, the trial judge, during a recess, warned a prospective defense witness, already serving a prison sentence, of the dangers of perjury and of the judge's intention to see that he would be indicted and probably convicted if he lied. He also added that the witness owed no duty to testify. Held, the threatening remarks "could well have exerted such duress on the witness' mind as to preclude him from making a free and voluntary choice whether or not to testify." (93 S.Ct. 353, 34 L.Ed.2d 333.) (See 88 A.L.R.4th 388 [judge's admonitions to potential defense witness against perjury, inducing refusal to testify, as prejudicial error].)

(2) Threat by Prosecutor. California courts have made similar holdings on threats by prosecutors. (See 88 A.L.R.4th 388 [threats to prosecute potential defense witness, inducing refusal to testify, as prejudicial error].) In re Martin (1987) 44 C.3d 1, 241 C.R. 263, 744 P.2d 374, holds that defendant, convicted of second degree murder on testimony of the actual killer, was entitled to vacation of the judgment where the prosecution interfered with his right to present testimony.

(a) Right to compulsory process. The right to compulsory process is a fundamental element of constitutional due process of law. (44 C.3d 29, quoting Washington v. Texas (1967) 388 U.S. 14, 87 S.Ct. 1920, 18 L.Ed.2d 1019, supra, §5.) The forms of prosecutorial misconduct that violate the right are many and varied, including statements to defense witnesses to the effect that they would be prosecuted for any crimes they reveal or commit in the course of their testimony, statements warning that they would suffer untoward consequences in other cases if they were to testify for the defense, and arresting a defense witness before he or other defense witnesses have given their testimony. (44 C.3d 30, citing People v. Bryant (1984) 157 C.A.3d 582, 203 C.R. 733, infra, §10, People v. Warren (1984) 161 C.A.3d 961, 207 C.R. 912, infra, §10, and federal cases.)

(b) Showing necessary to establish violation.

(1) The defendant is not required to show that the government acted in bad faith or with improper motives; he need only show that the agent "engaged in activity that was wholly unnecessary to the proper performance of his duties and of such a character as 'to transform [a defense witness] from a willing witness to one who would refuse to testify.' " (44 C.3d 31.)

(2) The defendant must also demonstrate interference, i.e., a causal link between the misconduct and his inability to present witnesses on his own behalf. It is enough, however, to show that the conduct was a substantial cause; and it may be deemed a substantial cause if it carries significant coercive force and is soon followed by the witness' refusal to testify. (44 C.3d 31.)

(c) Demonstration of materiality. "Under California law he must show at least a reasonable possibility that the witness could have given testimony that would have been both material and favorable." (44 C.3d 32.)

The court, on an elaborate independent review of the findings of its appointed referee, concluded that the defendant carried his burden of showing a violation of his constitutional right. (44 C.3d 32, 51.) (See People v. Lucas (1995) 12 C.4th 415, 457, 458, 48 C.R.2d 525, 907 P.2d 373 [trial judge initiated inquiry into witnesses' possible exercise of privilege; prosecutor merely supplied information regarding offenses in which witnesses might be implicated; distinguishing Martin].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Threat by Prosecutor. See People v. Kennedy (2005) 36 C.4th 595, 632, 31 C.R.3d 160, 115 P.3d 472 [in penalty phase of capital murder case, prosecutor did not violate defendant's right to compulsory process by arresting potential defense witness, thereby causing him to assert privilege against self-incrimination, where defendant could not show that witness' testimony would have been both material and favorable].

II. BASIC EVIDENTIARY RIGHTS

A. Party's Right To Present Evidence.

2. Criminal Cases.

c. Impermissible Intimidation of Defense Witness.

2. Harmless or Reversible Error.

[§ 10] Harmless or Reversible Error.

(1) Harmless Error. In People v. Robinson (1983) 144 C.A.3d 962, 193 C.R. 92, defense counsel called his witness and, out of the presence of the jury, advised her of her privilege against self-incrimination, and of the possibility that her testimony might be used against her. The prosecutor, however, in cross-examination, added the following: "As a representative of the District Attorney's Office, I need to advise you that charges ... will be filed, should you take the stand." The court then suggested that she consult the public defender, and, after she had done so, she refused to give further testimony. Held, the prosecutor's warning was an improper threat that resulted in depriving the defendant of the testimony of this witness; but, under the circumstances (identical testimony given by another witness), the error was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. (144 C.A.3d 970, 972.)

(2) Reversible Error. In People v. Bryant (1984) 157 C.A.3d 582, 203 C.R. 733, during a probation revocation hearing, defense witness Harris was called to the stand, and the prosecutor said: "I am personally prosecuting Mr. Harris for perjury when he, in my opinion, lied at the preliminary hearing" about the same facts. Harris was sworn, and the prosecutor stated that if he testified in the same way again, he would be facing another count of perjury. Held, the prosecutor's statements were intimidating and effectively deprived defendant of the witness' testimony. Differing with Robinson, supra, the court declared that the loss of Harris' testimony was a violation of due process and could not be treated as harmless error. (157 C.A.3d 593, 594.)

People v. Warren (1984) 161 C.A.3d 961, 207 C.R. 912, reviews the leading cases and principles and strongly supports the view that the error is subject to the Chapman test of reversible error (see 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, §384). Defendant, charged with unlawful taking of a vehicle, intended to call Gamer as his key witness, to testify that he, not defendant, had stolen the vehicle. At the outset of the defense, the judge conducted a voir dire examination of Gamer, advising him at length of his self-incrimination privilege, and his right to be represented by an attorney. The prosecutor then examined Gamer, pointing out that he was in the custody of the Youth Authority, and that the authorities had taken his fingerprints from the stolen vehicles, and that if he admitted the crime, the district attorney would be likely to prosecute him. The prosecutor then summed up: "You can testify or not. If you take the 5th right now, you go back to Y.A. and God bless you. If you start testifying, he asks you questions about this crime, I ask you questions about the crime, and we are going to use everything against you we have got." The witness replied: "I am taking the 5th right now then." Held, this conduct amounted to impermissible intimidation.

(a) Proper admonition by trial judge. When a trial court has reason to believe that a witness may be charged with a crime arising out of events to which he might testify, the court has a duty to insure that the witness is fully advised of his privilege against self-incrimination (see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §498). If the court elects to discharge this duty itself rather than to appoint an attorney to do so, "the court must walk the fine line between, on the one hand, fully advising the witness of the danger of self-incrimination and the right not to testify, and, on the other hand, threatening the witness to an extent which materially impairs the defendant's due process right to present witnesses in his defense." (161 C.A.3d 972.) Here, the witness was confused about his obligation to testify and his right to remain silent, and the judge, with no coercion or mention of perjury penalties, adequately advised him of his rights. (161 C.A.3d 972.)

(b) Improper intimidation by prosecutor. The threats were similar to those condemned in People v. Robinson, supra, and this case "illustrates the almost inherently coercive effect of a prosecutor's advising a defense witness of the privilege." "The only respect in which a prosecutor may arguably be better situated than others to provide such advice is that his office actually makes the decision to prosecute. But it is this very power that infects a prosecutorial admonition of the right of a defense witness not to testify with a perilous potential for improper intimidation; and this is so regardless of the propriety in fact of the prosecutor's motives. ... Accordingly, we hold that, in this situation, a trial judge should recommend that the witness seek advice from separate counsel or, if appropriate, appoint counsel to render such advice. Often, the public defender or regularly appointed private counsel is readily available to undertake such an assignment so that the trial would not be unnecessarily delayed by such a procedure." (161 C.A.3d 974.)

(c) Reversible error. The Bryant view of reversible error is preferable to that of Robinson, but it is not necessary to determine whether the error is reversible per se; it is clearly reversible under the Chapman test (cannot conclude that it was harmless beyond reasonable doubt). Although another witness did testify to what Gamer had told her, and the prosecution had waived the hearsay objection to such testimony, Gamer's testimony against his own interest would have carried far more weight. (161 C.A.3d 974, 975.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Harmless Error. See People v. DePriest (2007) 42 C.4th 1, 55, 63 C.R.3d 896, 163 P.3d 896 [even if detective manipulated and antagonized defendant's mother and cousin while interviewing them, defendant could not establish that he was deprived of material beneficial evidence; mother testified in his favor, and cousin, who did not testify, appeared disgusted about defendant's crimes and reluctant to help him]. (2) Reversible Error. See People v. Woods (2006) 146 C.A.4th 106, 120, 53 C.R.3d 7 [in prosecution for cocaine-related offenses, prosecutor violated defendant's right to compulsory process, where she conditioned potential defense witness' plea agreement on his promise not to testify for defendant, and then threatened to make her best effort to withdraw agreement and proceed to trial against him if he did so].

II. BASIC EVIDENTIARY RIGHTS

A. Party's Right To Present Evidence.

2. Criminal Cases.

d. Defendant's Right To Testify.

[§ 11] Defendant's Right To Testify.

A defendant's right to silence at his or her trial has long been established. (See 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §355 et seq.; 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §658.) The defendant's right to testify in his or her own behalf, however, has received less attention.

In People v. Mosqueda (1970) 5 C.A.3d 540, 545, 85 C.R. 346, the court said that a defendant's right to testify is merely one of many rights guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment to insure a fair trial: "Like the right to produce evidence and to confront and cross-examine adverse witnesses, it must be exercised with caution and good judgment, and with the advice and under the direction of competent trial counsel. It necessarily follows that a trial judge may safely assume that a defendant, who is ably represented and who does not testify is merely exercising his Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination and is abiding by his counsel's trial strategy; otherwise, the judge would have to conduct a law seminar prior to every criminal trial." Accordingly, no express waiver was necessary to show that defendant had given up his right to testify; the question, "if anything, involves the issue of adequate representation by counsel." (5 C.A.3d 545.)

People v. Robles (1970) 2 C.3d 205, 214, 85 C.R. 166, 466 P.2d 710, dealt with a different aspect of the problem. Counsel, on appeal, contended that the trial judge erred in allowing defendant to testify over his own trial attorneys' objections. Held, no error; the attorney's power to control court proceedings may not be exercised to deprive a defendant of fundamental rights: "[T]he right to testify in one's own behalf is of such fundamental importance that a defendant who timely demands to take the stand contrary to the advice given by his counsel has the right to give an exposition of his defense before a jury. ... The defendant's insistence upon testifying may in the final analysis be harmful to his case, but the right is of such importance that every defendant should have it in a criminal case. Although normally the decision whether a defendant should testify is within the competence of the trial attorney ... , where, as here, a defendant insists that he wants to testify, he cannot be deprived of that opportunity." (2 C.3d 214.) (See also People v. Blye (1965) 233 C.A.2d 143, 149, 43 C.R. 231, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §246 [on timely demand to take stand contrary to his attorney's advice, defendant has right to give exposition of his defense before jury]; 3 Hastings Const. L. Q. 517 [defense counsel's unilateral waiver of defendant's right to testify].) (On striking defendant's testimony when he claims privilege on cross-examination, see People v. Reynolds (1984) 152 C.A.3d 42, 199 C.R. 379, infra, §228.) (See 90 A.L.R.4th 586 [necessity that waiver of right to testify be on record].)

A state statute that requires a defendant who wishes to take the stand to do so before calling other defense witnesses is an impermissible restriction on the defendant's rights against self-incrimination and an infringement on his or her due process rights. (See Brooks v. Tennessee (1972) 406 U.S. 605, 92 S.Ct. 1891, 32 L.Ed.2d 358, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §366.)

In People v. Vargas (1987) 195 C.A.3d 1385, 241 C.R. 360, defendant's counsel wanted to call him to the stand at the preliminary hearing, but his client was reluctant, and counsel said: "I don't know whether I have the right to force him to testify as counsel or whether I have to respect his wishes not to put him on the stand." The magistrate then engaged in a lengthy colloquy with defendant which produced vague, equivocal and inconsistent answers, and the magistrate finally declared: "I'm not going to permit you to testify in this case. It seems to me you have not unconditionally waived your right not to incriminate yourself." Defendant was committed, and brought a P.C. 995 motion, contending that he had been denied the right to present an affirmative defense. The superior court granted the motion. Held, reversed.

The court said: "Absent a clear waiver of the right to testify and the right against self-incrimination, the magistrate correctly balanced the defendant's rights not to take the stand, not to testify, and not to incriminate himself over his right to an affirmative defense at the preliminary hearing. This is especially true where, as here, the defendant does not show any desire to testify. It was defense counsel, not the defendant, who wanted to present an affirmative defense. Defense counsel could not waive the defendant's rights not to testify and not to incriminate himself." (195 C.A.3d 1395.)

Nakahara* (2003) 30 C.4th 705, 717, 134 C.R.2d 223, 68 P.3d 1190 [at penalty phase of capital murder trial, defendant had fundamental right to testify despite counsel's opposition, and trial judge did not err in failing to give him as full an array of advisements regarding self-representation before he testified in narrative form as he would have, had defendant sought to conduct his entire defense]; People v. Lancaster (2007) 41 C.4th 50, 100, 58 C.R.3d 608, 158 P.3d 157 [after defendant decided to exercise his right to testify at penalty phase of murder trial, and trial judge urged him to consider his attorney's contrary view, judge was not further required to (a) admonish him about risks of testifying, (b) revisit matter immediately before defendant took stand, (c) hold hearing to explore defendant's disagreement with counsel, or (d) warn him that scope of testimony would be limited].

II. BASIC EVIDENTIARY RIGHTS

B. Party's Right to Confrontation.

1. Civil Cases.

a. General Rule: Witness Examined in Party's Presence.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 12

[§ 12] General Rule: Witness Examined in Party's Presence.

"At the trial of an action, a witness can be heard only in the presence and subject to the examination of all the parties to the action if they choose to attend and examine." (Ev.C. 711.) (See 85 A.L.R.4th 475 [permissibility of testimony by telephone].)

The principal application of this rule is in criminal cases. (See infra, §14 et seq.) Sometimes, however, the problem arises in a civil case, e.g., when the judge in a custody proceeding talks privately with a child in chambers. If this is done with consent of counsel, there is no impropriety, and the information received may be considered in support of the order. (In re Marriage of S. (1985) 171 C.A.3d 738, 745, 217 C.R. 561 [no denial of right to cross-examine; wife agreed to judge's private interview with child, and judge stated essential contents of interview in memorandum of decision]; Smith v. Smith (1955) 135 C.A.2d 100, 105, 286 P.2d 1009; see In re Mary S. (1986) 186 C.A.3d 414, 420, 230 C.R. 726 [limitation on parent's right of confrontation in dependency proceeding].) Even where there is consent, however, "it would be the part of wisdom for the court to make a record of such interviews ... in order to protect itself against any suspicion of unfairness." (Morris v. Morris (1953) 121 C.A.2d 707, 709, 264 P.2d 106.)

Where the private interview with the child is conducted over a party's objection, it is highly improper. (Jenkins v. Jenkins (1954) 125 C.A.2d 109, 113, 269 P.2d 908.) In Jenkins, however, despite its condemnation of the procedure, the appellate court found no prejudice because the findings contained a recital that the judge made them "solely on the basis of the evidence introduced in open Court." (125 C.A.2d 113.)

A conference on legal issues is distinguishable. Thus, in People v. House (1970) 12 C.A.3d 756, 766, 90 C.R. 831, defendant complained that he was not personally present during arguments in chambers on admissibility of evidence, including his prior felony convictions. Held, chambers conferences where issues of law are discussed by counsel do not require the defendant's personal presence unless he can show that his absence thwarted a fair and just hearing. (12 C.A.3d 767.)

II. BASIC EVIDENTIARY RIGHTS

B. Party's Right to Confrontation.

1. Civil Cases.

b. Exception: Exclusion of Testimony of Child Witness From Dependency Hearing.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 13

[§ 13] Exception: Exclusion of Testimony of Child Witness From Dependency Hearing.

In re Jennifer J. (1992) 8 C.A.4th 1080, 10 C.R.2d 813, was a juvenile court proceeding to terminate parental rights over two young children. The mother's request for testimony and examination of Jennifer, aged 7, was denied, and the trial judge ordered termination of the rights. (See 10 Summary (9th), Parent and Child, §717 et seq.) Held, affirmed.

(a) A court may find a child too young to have the capacity to testify (8 C.A.4th 1085, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §48), or a child can be found "unavailable to testify" if the testimonial process would cause substantial emotional trauma (Ev.C. 240(c)). (8 C.A.4th 1085.) Here, however, there was no suggestion that Jennifer was either too young to give reliable testimony or that she could be determined "unavailable." The judge's refusal was based on his conclusion that requiring her testimony would cause psychological stress and injury, and that the possible benefit derivable from her testimony would not warrant the injury it would cause. (8 C.A.4th 1086.)

(b) The mother relied on In re Amy M. (1991) 232 C.A.3d 849, 863, 283 C.R. 788, 10 Summary (9th), Parent and Child, Supp., §662, in which an 11-year-old molested child was held competent to testify in a dependency proceeding. (8 C.A.4th 1086; see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §43.) But the Amy M. holding is not controlling: there, the minor's testimony could have assisted in resolving a disputed issue; here the pivotal factual decision was a matter about which the minor had no knowledge, and the resolution of which would not have been aided by her testimony. (8 C.A.4th 1087, 1088.)

"[W]e are convinced that the juvenile court judge in a proper case may refuse to require the attendance and testimony of the child who is the subject of the litigation. This power derives, we believe, from a recognition of the overriding objective of the dependency hearing--to preserve and promote the best interests of the child. It would be a perversion of the procedure to impose upon it a requirement that the child's testimony always be presented, regardless of the trauma resulting to the child therefrom, and regardless of the necessity of such testimony in the resolution of the issues before the court. The refusal of the court to issue process requiring the attendance and testimony of the child should, assuredly, be a decision made only after a careful weighing of the interests involved. ... Where, however, the child's desires and wishes can be directly presented without live testimony, where the issues to be resolved would not be materially affected by the child's testimony, and where it is shown that the child would be psychologically damaged by being required to testify, we hold the juvenile court judge has the power to exclude such testimony." (8 C.A.4th 1089.)

a. General Right to Confrontation.

[§ 14] General Right to Confrontation.

(1) Federal Constitution. The Sixth Amendment guarantees the accused in all criminal prosecutions the right to be confronted with the witnesses against him or her. This guarantee is binding on the states under the Fourteenth Amendment. (See Pointer v. Texas (1965) 380 U.S. 400, 85 S.Ct. 1065, 1068, 13 L.Ed.2d 923, 926, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §531; Douglas v. Alabama (1965) 380 U.S. 415, 85 S.Ct. 1074, 13 L.Ed.2d 934, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §532; Pennsylvania v. Ritchie (1987) 480 U.S. 39, 107 S.Ct. 989, 94 L.Ed.2d 40, supra, §6; Coy v. Iowa (1988) 487 U.S. 1012, 108 S.Ct. 2798, 101 L.Ed.2d 857, infra, §16; Idaho v. Wright (1990) 497 U.S. 805, 110 S.Ct. 3139, 3152, 111 L.Ed.2d 638, 659; Maryland v. Craig (1990) 497 U.S. 836, 110 S.Ct. 3157, 111 L.Ed.2d 666, infra, §17; Michigan v. Lucas (1991) 500 U.S. 145, 111 S.Ct. 1743, 114 L.Ed.2d 205, supra, §8; 17 Hastings Const. L. Q. 383 [The Supreme Court's Bifurcated Interpretation of the Confrontation Clause]; 35 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 557; 1987 A.S. 829.)

The Confrontation Clause has two purposes: to ensure that the defendant may personally examine or cross-examine the witnesses and to compel the witnesses to stand before the jury so that the jurors have an adequate opportunity to assess their credibility. (People v. Louis (1986) 42 C.3d 969, 982, 232 C.R. 110, 728 P.2d 180.)

(2) California Constitution. Former Cal. Const., Art. I, §13, which provided safeguards for criminal prosecutions, made no express mention of a right to confrontation. Cal. Const., Art. I, §15, which was adopted in 1974 as the new organic provision for those safeguards, specifically states that a defendant in a criminal cause has the right "to be confronted with the witnesses against the defendant." (See People v. Louis (1986) 42 C.3d 969, 982, 232 C.R. 110, 728 P.2d 180.) In People v. Contreras (1976) 57 C.A.3d 816, 129 C.R. 397, defendant contended that the 1974 amendment restricted the scope of Ev.C. 1291(a)(2) (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §265) in criminal proceedings. Held, the 1974 amendment was declaratory of a prior California constitutional right previously incorporated in the due process guarantee of former Cal. Const., Art. I, §13, and of a statutory right from P.C. 686(3) (see 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §531 et seq.). Decisional law antedating the 1974 amendment is therefore still applicable. (57 C.A.3d 818.)

In People v. Archerd (1970) 3 C.3d 615, 637, 91 C.R. 397, 477 P.2d 421, defendant was accused of killing three people by insulin injections. The medical data were voluminous, and the trial judge appointed two attorneys to represent defendant. After defendant was convicted and sentenced to death, the judge sought to have the record reflect the necessity of appointment of cocounsel. He stated that he had recently been at a dinner with many medical men and was amazed at the number of people who had been consulted about insulin. The judge discovered this, he explained, "because I, too, had been making inquiries, but I came against a stone wall. Each of them told me, 'I have been consulted by one side or the other and I can't talk to you.' " A defense attorney responded that at another affair, a doctor said the judge had already consulted him. The judge replied, "I wanted to learn something about insulin ... " Held, the judge's consultations were error, though harmless in view of the extensive evidence presented on the subject. It would have been proper for the judge to consult textbooks on insulin, because he may take judicial notice of the expertise of the doctors testifying at the trial. However: "[W]e disapprove the action of the trial judge in consulting experts outside of court. While in this instance the facts of the case were not involved, the extrajudicial inquiry by the judge gave no opportunity to counsel to examine or cross-examine the experts with whom he spoke. However lofty the motivation of the judge in his desire to be informed, the interviewing of potential witnesses anywhere but on the witness stand should be avoided." (3 C.3d 638.) (See People v. Farmer (1989) 47 C.3d 888, 923, 254 C.R. 508, 765 P.2d 940 [judge may not generally consult experts outside of court, but may ask opinion of colleagues on abstract principles of law].)

[§ 16] When Required.

(1) Defendant's Right To See Accusing Witness. In Herbert v. Superior Court (1981) 117 C.A.3d 661, 172 C.R. 850, defendant was charged with sexual crimes against a 5-year-old girl. At the preliminary examination, the child was initially reluctant to testify, and the judge devised a seating arrangement in which defendant was able to hear but not see the child witness. Held, this was a denial of his constitutional right of confrontation. The child was the only inculpatory witness presented, and defendant was entitled to see as well as hear her: "The historical concept of the right of confrontation has included the right to see one's accusers face-to-face. ... A witness' reluctance to face the accused may be the product of fabrication rather than fear or embarrassment." (117 C.A.3d 671.) (On propriety of examination of absent witness over closed-circuit television, see 80 A.L.R.3d 1212; on permissible use of closed-circuit television in examination of child sex offense victim, see infra, §217 et seq.; on judge's power to relocate persons in courtroom to provide more comfortable setting for child sex offense victim, see infra, §212.)

(2) Defendant's Right To Be Seen by Accusing Witness. In Coy v. Iowa (1988) 487 U.S. 1012, 108 S.Ct. 2798, 101 L.Ed.2d 857, an Iowa statute permitted child witnesses in sexual abuse cases to testify either by closed-circuit television or behind a screen placed between the defendant and the witness, which would enable the defendant to perceive the witnesses without the witnesses seeing the defendant. (For similar California statute, see infra, §217.) Defendant, convicted of lewd acts with two young girls, contended that use of the screen violated his confrontation right. Held, conviction reversed.

(a) Although most of the decisions have involved either admissibility of out-of-court statements or restrictions on cross-examination, the Clause basically guarantees a face-to-face meeting with witnesses appearing before the trier of fact. (108 S.Ct. 2800, 2801, 101 L.Ed.2d 864.) "That face-to-face presence may, unfortunately, upset the truthful rape victim or abused child; but by the same token it may confound and undo the false accuser, or reveal the child coached by a malevolent adult. It is a truism that constitutional protections have costs." (108 S.Ct. 2802, 101 L.Ed.2d 866.)

(b) The right was clearly violated in this case: "The screen at issue was specifically designed to enable the complaining witnesses to avoid viewing appellant as they gave their testimony, and the record indicates that it was successful in this objective. ... It is difficult to imagine a more obvious or damaging violation of the defendant's right to a face-to-face encounter." (108 S.Ct. 2803, 101 L.Ed.2d 866.)

(c) The state's contention that the confrontation interests are outweighed by the necessity of protecting victims of sexual abuse is unacceptable.

(1) Past decisions have indicated that rights protected by the Clause are not absolute; but the rights involved in those cases were those implicit in the Clause--right to cross-examine, right to exclude out-of-court statements, and right to face-to-face confrontation at some point other than the trial. (108 S.Ct. 2802, 101 L.Ed.2d 866.) The present case involves "the irreducible literal meaning" of the Clause--the right "to meet face to face all those who appear and give evidence at trial." (108 S.Ct. 2803, 101 L.Ed.2d 867, quoting California v. Green (1970) 399 U.S. 149, 90 S.Ct. 1930, 26 L.Ed.2d 489, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §157.)

(2) "We leave for another day, however, the question whether any exceptions exist. Whatever they may be, they would surely be allowed only when necessary to further an important public policy." (108 S.Ct. 2803, 101 L.Ed.2d 867.) The cases suggest that, even as to exceptions from the normal implications of the Clause, something more than a generalized finding is needed; and the Iowa statute contains "no individualized findings that these particular witnesses needed special protection." (108 S.Ct. 2803, 101 L.Ed.2d 867.)

Two justices dissented, disagreeing with the characterization of "the irreducible literal meaning of the clause," and quoting Wigmore at length to the contrary. (See 102 Harv. L. Rev. 151; 40 Hastings L. J. 437; 23 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 415; 16 Pepperdine L. Rev. 709; 1988 A.S. 969.)

II. BASIC EVIDENTIARY RIGHTS

B. Party's Right to Confrontation.

2. Criminal Cases.

c. Extent of Right to Face-to-Face Confrontation.

2. Exception: Denial of Right Necessary To Further Important Public Policy.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 17

[§ 17] Exception: Denial of Right Necessary To Further Important Public Policy.

The question left unanswered in Coy v. Iowa (1988) 487 U.S. 1012, 108 S.Ct. 2798, 101 L.Ed.2d 857, supra, §16, i.e., whether there are any exceptions to the requirement of face-to-face confrontation, was answered in the affirmative in Maryland v. Craig (1990) 497 U.S. 836, 110 S.Ct. 3157, 111 L.Ed.2d 666. A Maryland statute permitted child witnesses in sexual abuse cases to testify by one-way closed-circuit television. After the trial judge made a preliminary determination, as required by the statute, that courtroom testimony would result in the child's suffering such serious emotional distress that the child could not reasonably communicate, the child, the prosecutor, and defense counsel withdrew to a separate room, where the child was examined and cross-examined while a video monitor displayed his testimony to those in the courtroom. The defendant remained in electronic communication with defense counsel, and objections could be made and ruled on as if the witness were testifying in the courtroom. Held, this procedure did not violate the Confrontation Clause.

(a) Decisions upholding exceptions to the hearsay rule have established that the right to face-to-face confrontation, although forming the core of the values furthered by the Confrontation Clause, is not absolute. (110 S.Ct. 3165, 111 L.Ed.2d 681.) However, as suggested in Coy, the right to confrontation may be satisfied without face-to-face confrontation only where (1) the denial of such confrontation is necessary to further an important public policy, and (2) the reliability of the testimony is otherwise assured. (110 S.Ct. 3166, 111 L.Ed.2d 682.)

(b) Both requirements were satisfied here. As evidenced by the significant majority of states which have enacted statutes to protect child witnesses from the trauma of giving testimony in child abuse cases, a state's interest in the physical and psychological well-being of child abuse victims may be sufficiently important to outweigh a defendant's right to face-to-face confrontation. (110 S.Ct. 3167, 111 L.Ed.2d 683.) Moreover, the Maryland statute preserved all of the other elements of the confrontation right, i.e., competency and testimony under oath, contemporaneous cross-examination, and observation of demeanor by the defendant and the trier of fact. (110 S.Ct. 3166, 111 L.Ed.2d 682.) "We are therefore confident that use of the one-way closed-circuit television procedure, where necessary to further an important state interest, does not impinge upon the truth seeking or symbolic purposes of the Confrontation Clause." (110 S.Ct. 3167, 111 L.Ed.2d 682.)

(c) The finding of necessity must be a case-specific one. In each case the trial judge must do the following: (1) hear evidence and determine whether the use of the one-way closed-circuit television procedure is necessary to protect the welfare of the particular child involved; (2) find that the child would be traumatized, not by the courtroom generally, but by the presence of the defendant; and (3) find that the emotional distress suffered by the child in the defendant's presence would be more than de minimis, i.e., more than mere nervousness or excitement or some reluctance to testify. However, it is not necessary to determine the minimum showing of emotional trauma required, because the Maryland statute's requirement of "serious emotional distress such that the child cannot reasonably communicate" clearly meets constitutional standards. (110 S.Ct. 3169, 111 L.Ed.2d 685.)

(d) In reversing defendant's conviction, the Maryland court of appeals held that, under Coy, the Maryland statutory procedure could not be utilized until the child had first been questioned in the defendant's presence and the trial judge had determined whether the child would be traumatized by testifying via two-way closed-circuit television. Although such requirements could strengthen the grounds for use of protective measures, it is not necessary, as a matter of federal constitutional law, to establish any such categorical evidentiary prerequisites for the use of the one-way television procedure. All that is required is that the trial judge make a case-specific finding of necessity, as was done here on the basis of expert testimony suggesting that the child witnesses, all of whom had attended defendant's kindergarten and pre-kindergarten center, would have considerable difficulty testifying in defendant's presence. (110 S.Ct. 3171, 111 L.Ed.2d 688.)

Four justices dissented on the ground that face-to-face confrontation, being explicitly guaranteed by the Confrontation Clause, could not be lost through an "interest-balancing" analysis. (110 S.Ct. 3171, 111 L.Ed.2d 688.) (See People v. Sharp (1994) 29 C.A.4th 1772, 1782, 1783, 36 C.R.2d 117 [prosecutor's questioning of child victim, with child looking away from defense table, did not deprive defendant of confrontation right; following Maryland v. Craig and distinguishing and criticizing Herbert v. Superior Court (1981) 117 C.A.3d 661, 172 C.R. 850, supra, §16]; 43 Hastings L. J. 1259 [Maryland v. Craig]; 65 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1993 [same]; 16 J. Juvenile Law 150 [same].)

See People v. Williams (2002) 102 C.A.4th 995, 1006, 125 C.R.2d 884 [in assault prosecution, trial judge did not err in admitting videotape recording of testimony of adult victim on ground that she suffered from physical and mental disabilities and would be traumatized by having to face defendant; relying on Maryland v. Craig (1990) 497 U.S. 836, 110 S.Ct. 3157, 111 L.Ed.2d 666, text, p. 50].

(New) Distinction: Adult victim: In People v. Murphy (2003) 107 C.A.4th 1150, 132 C.R.2d 688, defendant was convicted of oral copulation by force or fear and felony false imprisonment in a trial in which the victim, an adult, was permitted to testify behind a one-way glass. (The jury and defendant could observe the victim, but she could not see them.) Held, reversed; use of the one-way glass violated defendant's constitutional right of confrontation. No authority recognizes a compelling state interest in protecting adult victims of sex crimes from further psychological trauma that might result from testifying face-to-face. (107 C.A.4th 1157, distinguishing Maryland v. Craig.) Moreover, the trial judge was not relying on the state's interest in protecting adult victims but instead predicated the ruling on the state's interest in ascertaining the truth. The governmental interest in ascertaining the truth "historically and traditionally cuts the other way." (107 C.A.4th 1157.) "In any event, the court in this case consented to the prosecution's request to use the one-way glass without holding an evidentiary hearing to determine whether, and to what degree, the testifying victim's apparent anxiety was due to the defendant's presence rather than, for instance, the witness' general emotional fragility or the trauma of testifying in court or revisiting a past experience the witness would rather not recall. Even assuming that, in an appropriate case, the court might allow a testifying adult victim, who would otherwise be traumatized, to use a one-way screen to avoid seeing a defendant without violating the right of confrontation, we do not think a court may do so without making the necessary factual findings based upon evidence." (107 C.A.4th 1157.)

3. Exception: No Interference With Effective Cross-Examination.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 18

[§ 18] Exception: No Interference With Effective Cross-Examination.

(1) Exclusion of Defendant From Witnesses' Competency Hearing. In Kentucky v. Stincer (1987) 482 U.S. 730, 107 S.Ct. 2658, 96 L.Ed.2d 631, defendant was charged with sexually assaulting two young girls. After a jury was sworn, but before presentation of evidence, the court conducted an in-chambers hearing to determine competency of the girls to testify. Defendant was excluded from this hearing. After examination by counsel and the judge concerning the girls' ability to remember basic facts and to distinguish between the truth and a lie, the trial judge found them competent. At trial, the girls were asked the same and similar questions during direct and cross-examination, but defense counsel did not ask the judge to reconsider his finding of competence. Held, there was no violation of the Confrontation Clause.

(a) The right to cross-examination, a primary interest secured by the Confrontation Clause, is essentially a "functional" right designed to promote reliability in the truth-finding functions of a criminal trial. The decisions fall into two broad, albeit not exclusive, categories: cases involving the admission of out-of-court statements, e.g., Ohio v. Roberts (1980) 448 U.S. 56, 100 S.Ct. 2531, 65 L.Ed.2d 597 (infra, §21), and cases involving restrictions imposed by law or by the trial court on the scope of cross-examination, e.g., Davis v. Alaska (1974) 415 U.S. 308, 94 S.Ct. 1105, 39 L.Ed.2d 347 (infra, §269). (107 S.Ct. 2662, 96 L.Ed.2d 641.)

(b) Rather than characterizing the competency hearing as a trial or pretrial proceeding, "it is more useful to consider whether excluding the defendant from the hearing interferes with his opportunity for effective cross-examination." (107 S.Ct. 2664, 96 L.Ed.2d 644.) Defendant's exclusion caused no such interference: The two girls appeared in court, testified and were subjected to full and complete cross-examination in defendant's presence. Defense counsel asked questions concerning competence on cross-examination and could have moved the court to reconsider its ruling on competence. (107 S.Ct. 2666, 96 L.Ed.2d 646.)

(2) Out-of-Court Identification. In United States v. Owens (1988) 484 U.S. 554, 108 S.Ct. 838, 98 L.Ed.2d 951, the Court held that the Confrontation Clause is not violated by the admission of a prior out-of-court identification statement of a witness who is unable, because of memory loss, to explain the basis for the identification.

(a) When a witness testifies to his current belief but is unable to recollect the reason for that belief, it is sufficient that the defendant has the opportunity to bring up such matters as bias, lack of care and attentiveness, poor eyesight, and often the very fact of bad memory. "If the ability to inquire into these matters suffices to establish the constitutionally requisite opportunity for cross-examination when a witness testifies as to his current belief, the basis for which he cannot recall, we see no reason why it should not suffice when the witness's past belief is introduced and he is unable to recollect the reason for that past belief." (108 S.Ct. 842, 98 L.Ed.2d 958.)

(b) The fact that an out-of-court identification would traditionally be categorized as hearsay (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §163) does not call for a different conclusion when, as here, a hearsay declarant is present at trial and subject to unrestricted cross-examination: "We do not think that a constitutional line drawn by the Confrontation Clause falls between a forgetful witness's live testimony that he once believed this defendant to be the perpetrator of the crime, and the introduction of the witness's earlier statement to that effect." (108 S.Ct. 843, 98 L.Ed.2d 959.)

Washington* (2004) 541 U.S. 36, 124 S.Ct. 1354, 158 L.Ed.2d 177, Supp., infra, §21.(2) Out-of-Court Identification. See *People v. In People v. Tran (1996) 47 C.A.4th 759, 54 C.R.2d 905, an attempted murder case, one of the victims was rendered quadriplegic and unable to speak by defendant's alleged attack. The victim was found competent to testify, and, over defendant's objections, he did so by tapping once for "yes" and twice for "no." Held, affirmed; defendant's right to confront the witnesses against him was not violated by this procedure. Although defense counsel was limited in the type of questions he could pose during cross-examination, the confrontation clause does not guarantee that a defendant "has a constitutional right to ask a particular form of question." [§ 20] No Confrontation Right for Discovery.

In Pennsylvania v. Ritchie (1987) 480 U.S. 39, 107 S.Ct. 989, 94 L.Ed.2d 40, supra, §6, the Court held that denying the defendant's request for discovery of confidential records of a state agency did not violate his constitutional right of confrontation. "[T]he right of confrontation is a trial right, designed to prevent improper restrictions on the types of questions that defense counsel may ask during cross-examination. ... The ability to question adverse witnesses, however, does not include the power to require the pretrial disclosure of any and all information that might be useful in contradicting unfavorable testimony. Normally the right to confront one's accusers is satisfied if defense counsel receives wide latitude at trial to question witnesses. ... In short, the Confrontation Clause only guarantees 'an opportunity for effective cross-examination, not cross-examination that is effective in whatever way, and to whatever extent, the defense might wish.' " (107 S.Ct. 999, 94 L.Ed.2d 54.) (For holding on Compulsory Process Clause and due process, see supra, §6.)

II. BASIC EVIDENTIARY RIGHTS

B. Party's Right to Confrontation.

2. Criminal Cases.

f. Hearsay Rule Distinguished.

[§ 21] Hearsay Rule Distinguished.

The Sixth Amendment right to confrontation must be distinguished from evidentiary restrictions on the use of hearsay evidence. (See Dutton v. Evans (1970) 400 U.S. 74, 91 S.Ct. 210, 215, 218, 219, 27 L.Ed.2d 213, 222, 226; California v. Green (1970) 399 U.S. 149, 90 S.Ct. 1930, 26 L.Ed.2d 489, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §157; Ohio v. Roberts (1980) 448 U.S. 56, 100 S.Ct. 2531, 65 L.Ed.2d 597; 85 Harv. L. Rev. 188 [Dutton v. Evans]; 85 Harv. L. Rev. 1378 [Dutton v. Evans and California v. Green]; 45 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1 [same].)

In Ohio v. Roberts, the preliminary hearing testimony of an absent witness was introduced at defendant's trial, and he was convicted. On certiorari, the Court made a detailed examination of the relationship between the Confrontation Clause and the hearsay rule, and determined that the introduction of the testimony was constitutionally permissible.

(a) The Confrontation Clause reflects a preference for face-to-face confrontation at trial, with the right of cross-examination, and was intended to exclude some hearsay. (100 S.Ct. 2537, 65 L.Ed.2d 606.) But the competing interests in effective law enforcement and development of precise rules of evidence for criminal proceedings may warrant dispensing with confrontation at trial. (100 S.Ct. 2538, 65 L.Ed.2d 606.)

(b) The Confrontation Clause restricts the range of admissible hearsay by (1) the requirement of proof of the unavailability of the declarant, and (2) the requirement of trustworthiness of the hearsay admitted. The latter requirement calls for adequate "indicia of reliability"; this can be inferred where the evidence falls within an established hearsay exception, but in other cases must be shown. (100 S.Ct. 2539, 65 L.Ed.2d 607, 608.)

(c) The evidence of unavailability--a good-faith effort by the prosecution to obtain the presence of the witness at the trial--was sufficient. (100 S.Ct. 2543, 2544, 65 L.Ed.2d 613.)

(d) The prior testimony at the preliminary hearing bore sufficient "indicia of reliability" under the test of California v. Green, supra. The Green opinion suggests that the opportunity to cross-examine satisfies the Confrontation Clause. (100 S.Ct. 2541, 65 L.Ed.2d 610.) In this case, however, there was actual, effective cross-examination. (100 S.Ct. 2541, 2542, 65 L.Ed.2d 611.) "[R]espondent in effect asks us to disassociate preliminary hearing testimony previously subjected to cross-examination from previously cross-examined prior trial testimony, which the Court has deemed generally immune from subsequent confrontation attack. Precedent requires us to decline this invitation." (100 S.Ct. 2542, 65 L.Ed.2d 611.) (See 14 Hastings Const. L. Q. 839 [difficulties in applying Confrontation Clause analysis of Ohio v. Roberts]; 35 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 557 ["Restoring the Confrontation Clause"; discussing Roberts and United States]

v. Inadi (1986) 475 U.S. 387, 106 S.Ct. 1121, 89 L.Ed.2d 390, infra, this section].)

Numerous cases have discussed the Confrontation Clause and the hearsay rule:

United States v. Inadi (1986) 475 U.S. 387, 106 S.Ct. 1121, 1124, 89 L.Ed.2d 390, 396 [prosecution may introduce nontestifying coconspirator's statements without showing of declarant's unavailability; discussing Ohio v. Roberts]. (See 21 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 543; 1987 A.S. 829.)

Idaho v. Wright (1990) 497 U.S. 805, 110 S.Ct. 3139, 3152, 111 L.Ed.2d 638, 659 [admission under state residual hearsay exception of 3-year-old sexual abuse victim's statements to examining doctor violated Confrontation Clause; applying Ohio v. Roberts]. (See 104 Harv. L. Rev. 129.)

Lilly v. Virginia (1999) 527 U.S. 116, 119 S.Ct. 1887, 1901, 144 L.Ed.2d 117, 136, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §62 [admission of nontestifying accomplice's entire confession, which contained some statements against accomplice's penal interest and others that inculpated accused, violated accused's right to confrontation].

People v. Chavez (1980) 26 C.3d 334, 161 C.R. 762, 605 P.2d 401.

Virginia*].

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

In People v. Sandoval (2001) 87 C.A.4th 1425, 105 C.R.2d 504, a prosecution of two defendants for murder, attempted robbery, and other crimes, the trial judge admitted the preliminary hearing testimony of a prosecution witness who was now in Mexico. A prosecution investigator had contacted the witness, and the witness had expressed his willingness to attend the trial if he had financial assistance and the prosecution's help in securing a passport and visa. The prosecution made no such efforts, and the trial judge ruled the witness unavailable simply on the basis that he was in another country. Defendants were convicted. Held, reversed. Under the present circumstances, Ohio v. Roberts (1980) 448 U.S. 56, 100 S.Ct. 2531, 65 L.Ed.2d 597, text, p. 54, imposes two requirements for satisfaction of Confrontation Clause concerns: unavailability and trustworthiness. The issue in this case is unavailability. By a treaty that became effective in 1991, the United States and Mexico have agreed to cooperate in criminal matters, including the prosecution of crimes. (87 C.A.4th 1440.) In light of this and other recent developments, "the prosecution had several reasonable alternatives it could have pursued to obtain Zavala's live testimony at trial. Instead of making a good faith effort to obtain any category of contemporary, live testimony, the prosecution threw up its hands and asserted Zavala was unavailable simply because he was a foreign citizen residing outside of the United States. The confrontation clause ... calls for more. In the context of the opinions of the United States Supreme Court ... the alternatives for obtaining constitutionally appropriate testimony have expanded and, therefore, the situations in which the confrontation requirement can be avoided have contracted." (87 C.A.4th 1443.) Because of credibility problems with the testimony of other witnesses at the trial, the preliminary hearing testimony of the Mexican witness was crucial, and the denial of defendants' right to confront him cannot be held harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. (87 C.A.4th 1445.) (On overruling of Roberts, see Crawford v. Washington (2004) 541 U.S. 36, 124 S.Ct. 1354, 158 L.Ed.2d 177.)

The plurality decision in Lilly v. Virginia (1999) 527 U.S. 116, 119 S.Ct. 1887, 144 L.Ed.2d 117, text, p. 55, casts doubt on the validity of the holding in People v. Greenberger (1997) 58 C.A.4th 298, 68 C.R.2d 61, text, p. 55, that a statement falling within the hearsay exception for declarations against penal interest bears sufficient indicia of trustworthiness to satisfy Confrontation Clause concerns. Commentators have interpreted the Lilly opinion in different ways. However, California courts after Lilly have continued to assume that a declarant's statement not coming within an exception to the hearsay rule may nevertheless be admissible if it contains particularized guarantees of trustworthiness. (People v. Schmaus (2003) 109 C.A.4th 846, 856, 859, 135 C.R.2d 521 [in murder prosecution of three defendants, trial judge erred in admitting tape recording of cellmate of one defendant, in which cellmate stated that defendant told him that he, another defendant, and "another guy" had committed charged murder; regardless of trustworthiness of defendant's alleged statement, there were numerous reasons not to trust cellmate's account of it].)

See People v. Otto (2001) 26 C.4th 200, 211, 109 C.R.2d 327, 26 P.3d 1061, 3 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Punishment, Supp., §200 [Welf.C. 6600(a)(3) (in sexually violent predator proceeding, details of predicate offenses may be proved by multiple hearsay in form of victims' statements contained in presentence report) is constitutional; victims' statements possess sufficient indicia of reliability to satisfy due process right of confrontation]; Correa v. Superior Court (2002) 27 C.4th 444, 465, 117 C.R.2d 27, 40 P.3d 739, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, Supp., §125 [at preliminary hearing in assault case, admission of investigating officers' testimony as to out-of-court statements by victim and witness did not violate defendant's right of cross-examination, even though statements, made in Spanish, had been translated to officers by lay interpreters]; People v. Eccleston (2001) 89 C.A.4th 436, 446, 449, 107 C.R.2d 440 [in prosecution for sexual molestation of child under 14 years of age, admission of videotape of statements made by victim under Ev.C. 1360 (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §171) did not violate defendant's rights of confrontation and cross-examination]; People v. Roberto V. (2001) 93 C.A.4th 1350, 1374, 1375, 113 C.R.2d 804, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, Supp., §171 [in prosecution for sexual molestation of 3-year-old child, admission of victim's out-of-court statements by way of her mother's testimony pursuant to Ev.C. 1360 violated defendant's confrontation right; distinguishing Eccleston]; People v. Duran (2001) 94 C.A.4th 923, 935, 114 C.R.2d 595 [in prosecution for conspiring to manufacture methamphetamine, codefendant's false statements, which were made when he was apprehended and were intended to conceal his involvement and existence of lab, were made in furtherance of conspiracy, and thus their admission did not violate defendant's confrontation right; following United States v. Inadi (1986) 475 U.S. 387, 106 S.Ct. 1121, 89 L.Ed.2d 390, text, p. 55]; People v. Wheeler (2003) 105 C.A.4th 1423, 1430, 129 C.R.2d 916 [hearsay exception allowing admission of statements against social interest is firmly enough rooted to satisfy Confrontation Clause concerns]; People v. Koss (2003) 108 C.A.4th 514, 523, 524, 133 C.R.2d 520 [in prosecution for attempted murder and assault with firearm, victim's statement, made 1 or 2 days after shooting, identifying defendant as shooter, was improperly admitted under Ev.C. 1370 (statement concerning injury to declarant; see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §220); Ev.C. 1370 is not firmly rooted hearsay exception for Confrontation Clause purposes, and particularized guarantees of trustworthiness were lacking].

(New) Ohio v. Roberts disapproved: In Crawford v. Washington, supra, defendant was convicted of assault and attempted murder. Before trial, defendant and his wife had separately given statements to the police. Their accounts were similar; both indicated that the victim might have been reaching for a weapon, but the wife's statements were more ambiguous on this point than defendant's. The trial judge determined that the wife was an unavailable witness because of the state's marital privilege, and he admitted her statements after finding them to be trustworthy under Ohio v. Roberts. The conviction was overturned by a state appellate court and then reinstated by the state supreme court. Both courts applied the Roberts analysis but reached different conclusions regarding the statements' trustworthiness. Held, reversed; admission of the wife's statements violated defendant's confrontation rights.

(a) Meaning of Confrontation Clause. The text of the Confrontation Clause does not resolve the scope of its protections. It could be read to apply only to witnesses who actually testify at trial, or only to statements offered at trial, or its meaning could lie somewhere in between. However, the history of the common law, trial practices in the Colonies before the American Revolution, and early court decisions support two inferences about its meaning. First, the Clause was directed primarily at the civil law mode of criminal procedure and particularly at its use of ex parte examinations as evidence against the accused. This leads to the conclusion that the Clause applies to out-of-court statements that the witness might reasonably believe would be available at a later trial. Interrogations by law enforcement officers fall squarely within this class. (124 S.Ct. 1364, 1365, 158 L.Ed.2d 194.) Second, "the Framers would not have allowed admission of testimonial statements of a witness who did not appear at trial unless he was unavailable to testify and the defendant had had a prior opportunity for cross-examination." (124 S.Ct. 1365, 158 L.Ed.2d 194.)

(b) Inadequacy of Roberts test. The test of Ohio v. Roberts leaves the Clause's protections to "the vagaries of the rules of evidence" and "amorphous notions of reliability." (124 S.Ct. 1370, 158 L.Ed.2d 199.) Its biggest vice, however, is that it allows the admission of testimonial statements that the Clause was clearly meant to exclude. Thus, accomplice confessions implicating the accused are routinely admitted, as are other sorts of plainly testimonial statements despite the absence of any opportunity to cross-examine. "The Constitution prescribes a procedure for determining the reliability of testimony in criminal trials, and we, no less than the state courts, lack authority to replace it with one of our own devising." (124 S.Ct. 1373, 158 L.Ed.2d 202.)

(c) Error in this case. The courts below came to conflicting conclusions about the reliability of the statements made by defendant's wife. The state supreme court gave dispositive weight to the "interlocking" nature of defendant's and his wife's statements. It found that they were both ambiguous as to when and whether the victim had a weapon. The prosecutor obviously did not share this view, as he called the wife's statements "damning evidence" that completely refuted defendant's claim of self-defense. Thus, "[f]ar from obviating the need for cross-examination, the 'interlocking' ambiguity of the two statements made it all the more imperative that they be tested to tease out the truth." (124 S.Ct. 1373, 158 L.Ed.2d 202.) The fact that defendant had no opportunity to cross-examine his wife is alone sufficient to make out a Sixth Amendment violation. (124 S.Ct. 1374, 158 L.Ed.2d 203.)

(d) Scope of constitutional protection. "Where nontestimonial hearsay is at issue, it is wholly consistent with the Framers' design to afford the States flexibility in their development of hearsay law--as does Roberts, and as would an approach that exempted such statements from Confrontation Clause scrutiny altogether. Where testimonial evidence is at issue, however, the Sixth Amendment demands what the common law required: unavailability and a prior opportunity for cross-examination. We leave for another day any effort to spell out a comprehensive definition of 'testimonial.' Whatever else the term covers, it applies at a minimum to prior testimony at a preliminary hearing, before a grand jury, or at a former trial; and to police interrogations. These are the modern practices with closest kinship to the abuses at which the Confrontation Clause was directed." (124 S.Ct. 1374, 158 L.Ed.2d 203.)

Two justices concurred in the judgment, arguing that Roberts should not have been overruled, and that the majority opinion will leave "thousands of federal prosecutors and ... tens of thousands of state prosecutors" in need of answers as to what kinds of testimony are covered by the new rule. (124 S.Ct. 1378, 158 L.Ed.2d 203, 207.)

The holding in Crawford has been the basis for numerous appeals and has engendered considerable commentary:

Law (3d), Criminal Trial, Supp., §538 [two cases: (a) victim's statements in response to 911 operator's questions were not testimonial; (b) victim's statements made to police, who arrived at scene after crime was complete, were taken in course of investigation and hence were testimonial]; Whorton v. Bockting (2007) 549 U.S. ___, 127 S.Ct. 1173, 1181, 167 L.Ed.2d 1, 11 [Crawford does not apply retroactively to cases already final on direct review].

Song* (2004) 124 C.A.4th 973, 984, 22 C.R.3d 118 [in prosecution of three defendants stemming from incident in which victim was forcibly taken from her home, placed in car, driven from place to place, and sexually molested, admission of statements to police by two defendants, who were ultimately acquitted, violated confrontation rights of third defendant, who was convicted; because one statement directly incriminated third defendant, trial judge's limiting instruction could not have eliminated error under Crawford]; People v. Morgan (2005) 125 C.A.4th 935, 946, 23 C.R.3d 224 [in prosecution for possession of methamphetamine for sale, admission of evidence that officer who was executing search warrant at defendants' residence answered telephone and caller asked to buy drugs did not violate defendants' confrontation rights; callers' statements were not testimonial in nature]; People v. Martinez (2005) 125 C.A.4th 1035, 1050, 23 C.R.3d 508 [in prosecution for torture and assault, Crawford was not violated where victim's preliminary hearing testimony and statements to police officers were admitted but she also testified and submitted to cross-examination at trial]; People v. Butler (2005) 127 C.A.4th 49, 58, 59, 25 C.R.3d 154 [in murder prosecution, out-of-court statements by two witnesses who, at trial, denied having made them, were properly admitted; statements were not testimonial, as they were made spontaneously to coworkers and not in presence of government workers, and thus they were not subject to Crawford]; People v. Saffold (2005) 127 C.A.4th 979, 984, 26 C.R.3d 190 [in prosecution for disobeying domestic relations order, evidence of proof of service of order on defendant (offered in order to satisfy requirement of P.C. 273.6(a) that violation be intentional and knowing) was not subject to Crawford; by serving order and completing proof of service, deputy was not giving testimony against defendant, but was merely performing his routine duties]; People v. Rincon (2005) 129 C.A.4th 738, 757, 28 C.R.3d 844 [attempted murder victim's statement, made to civilian shortly after he was shot in ankle, was not testimonial within meaning of Crawford and was properly admitted under spontaneous statement exception to hearsay rule]; People v. Castille (2005) 129 C.A.4th 863, 878, 29 C.R.3d 71, 5 Cal. Crim. Angulo* (2005) 129 C.A.4th 1349, 1368, 30 C.R.3d 189 [in sexually violent predator proceeding, defendant's confrontation right was not violated by admission of police reports of defendant's out-of-state molestations; Crawford does not apply to civil commitment proceedings]; People v. Thomas (2005) 130 C.A.4th 1202, 1210, 30 C.R.3d 582 [notwithstanding Crawford, expert witnesses may continue to testify to information and sources on which they relied in forming their opinions, which may include hearsay]; In re April C. (2005) 131 C.A.4th 599, 610, 31 C.R.3d 804 [Crawford does not apply to juvenile dependency proceedings; minor's hearsay statements claiming that mother's boyfriend sexually abused her were properly admitted]; People v. Gonzales (2005) 131 C.A.4th 767, 774, 32 C.R.3d 172 [admission of preliminary hearing transcript to prove that defendant's prior conviction qualified as strike did not violate Crawford, as defendant had had opportunity at hearing to cross-examine witness whose testimony was used to show that he had used firearm]; People v. Smith (2005) 135 C.A.4th 914, 924, 38 C.R.3d 1 [in murder trial, admission of one defendant's out-of-court statements, made to his girlfriend in motel room, against other defendant under spontaneous statement exception did not violate Crawford; for "nontestimonial statements like those at issue here, Crawford left undisturbed the standard previously set forth in Ohio v. Roberts";]; People v. Fulcher (2006) 136 C.A.4th 41, 55, 38 C.R.3d 702 [Crawford did not extend Sixth Amendment right of confrontation to sexually violent predator proceedings, and, although due process right to confrontation does apply to those proceedings, it is not violated by admission of experts' testimony, based on hearsay, about defendant's past conduct]; People v. Mayo (2006) 140 C.A.4th 535, 554, 44 C.R.3d 497 [victim's statements, whether testimonial or not, were properly admitted under dying declarations exception to hearsay rule; following Monterroso, supra]; People v. Pedroza (2007) 147 C.A.4th 784, 791, 54 C.R.3d 636 [in prosecution for murder and arson arising from incident in which defendant threw gasoline on his wife and burnt her, victim's statements to police, made in response to prolonged questioning moments after she was burned and while she was suffering from intense pain, were nontestimonial within meaning of Davis v. Washington, supra]; People v. Cooper (2007) 148 C.A.4th 731, 742, 56 C.R.3d 6 [trial judge erred in excluding two videotaped interviews on ground that any statement to police is testimonial; one interview was nontestimonial in that its primary purpose was to assess victim's condition and deal with her critical need for assistance, while other interview contained some statements not offered for truth and therefore not subject to Crawford]; People v. Romero (2007) 149 C.A.4th 29, 37, 40, 56 C.R.3d 678 [where defendant admitted killing victim but attempted to use victim's own prior statements to establish his claim of self-defense, he forfeited right to raise Confrontation Clause objection to victim's statement to witness regarding defendant's threats]; People v. Johnson (2007) 150 C.A.4th 1467, 1479, 59 C.R.3d 405 [in prosecution for assault and corporal injury to cohabitant, statement by prior victim of defendant to public safety officer ("He punched me in the face, look at my nose") was not testimonial within meaning of Crawford; circumstances objectively indicated that there was ongoing emergency when victim made statement]; People v. Brenn (2007) 152 C.A.4th 166, 174, 60 C.R.3d 830 [in prosecution for attempted murder, victim's statements to 911 operator and to first police officer on scene were nontestimonial within meaning of Davis v. Washington]; People v. Saracoglu (2007) 152

C.A.4th 1584, 1596, 62 C.R.3d 418 [in prosecution for corporal injury to spouse, victim's statements, made at police station about 30 minutes after physical assault occurred, were nontestimonial; victim's primary purpose for making statements was to gain police protection, and purpose of any questioning was to deal with emergency]; People v. Ramirez (2007) 153 C.A.4th 1422, 1426, 64 C.R.3d 96 [hearsay relied on by gang expert was not testimonial within meaning of Crawford; relying on People v. Thomas, supra].

Criminal cases are governed by P.C. 1093. (See 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §514.)

(2) Right To Open and Close. Ordinarily, the plaintiff, upon whom rests the burden of proof, opens the case and has the closing argument, unless the court "for special reasons" rules otherwise. (C.C.P. 607; see Ferguson v. Dam (1934) 140 C.A. 701, 703, 35 P.2d 1072; McCullough v. Langer (1937) 23 C.A.2d 510, 523, 73 P.2d 649; *Orient Handel v. III. PROCEDURE AT TRIAL

B. Opening Statements.

1. Civil Cases.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 23

[§ 23] Civil Cases.

The opening statement of counsel is a preliminary address to the jury or court, outlining the facts to be proved. Its principal purpose is to acquaint the jury with the nature and theory of the case, thus furnishing the basis for an intelligent and favorable consideration of the evidence. It is not required, but is commonly made by both plaintiff and defendant in civil cases. Statutes seldom cover the method or scope of the statement, but the decisions and practice works offer many suggestions and illustrations. (See Rutter Group, 1 Civil Trials and Evidence, Chap. 6; C.E.B., 1 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, Chap. 9; 1 Schweitzer 2d, §171 et seq.; 5 Am.Jur. Trials 285, 305; on prejudicial effect of appeals to sympathy, see 68 A.L.R.2d 990, 995; on nonsuit or directed verdict on opening statement (disfavored), see Rodin v. American Can Co. (1955) 133 C.A.2d 524, 534, 284 P.2d 530 [granting reversed]; Baber v. Napa State Hosp. (1989) 209 C.A.3d 213, 217, 257 C.R. 55; 5 A.L.R.3d 1405; 7 Cal. Proc. ## CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

III. PROCEDURE AT TRIAL

B. Opening Statements.

2. Criminal Cases.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 24

[§ 24] Criminal Cases.

The prosecution usually makes an opening statement. It should be confined to an outline of the facts to be proved, without deliberate reference to inadmissible matter or argumentative statements. However, prosecutorial misconduct in an opening statement is not grounds for reversal of a judgment unless the misconduct was prejudicial or so egregious as to deny the defendant a fair trial. (See People v. Harris (1989) 47 C.3d 1047, 1080, 255 C.R. 352, 767 P.2d 619; People v. Dennis (1998) 17 C.4th 468, 518, 71 C.R.2d 680, 950 P.2d 1035 [reference to murder victim's young daughter was not prejudicial]; cf. People v. Aragon (1957) 154 C.A.2d 646, 653, 316 P.2d 370 [improper reference to lie detector test was prejudicial error]; 16 A.L.R.4th 810 [prosecutor's reference in opening statement to matters that are not provable or that prosecutor does not attempt to prove]; 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §517 et seq.; see also People v. Stoll (1904) 143 C. 689, 693, 77 P. 818, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §517 [trial judge had no authority to direct acquittal under former P.C. 1118 on prosecution's opening statement]; 75 A.L.R.3d 649.)

The defendant may also make an opening statement, but frequently waives it to avoid informing the prosecution of the facts on which the defense will be based. (See People v. Hayes (1971) 19 C.A.3d 459, 472, 96 C.R. 879; People v. Pangelina (1984) 153 C.A.3d 1, 6, 199 C.R. 916.) The defendant's statement usually should not be made until completion of the prosecution's case. (See People v. Cryder (1949) 90 C.A.2d 194, 204, 202 P.2d 765; People v. Corona (1978) 80 C.A.3d 684, 725, 145 C.R. 894 [defense counsel is "ill-advised" to give statement after prosecution's opening statement]; see also People v. Mitcham (1992) 1 C.4th 1027, 1059, 5 C.R.2d 230, 824 P.2d 1277 ["reasonably competent counsel" may wait to hear prosecution's case before deciding whether to present defense]; 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §520.)

III. PROCEDURE AT TRIAL

C. Oath of Witness.

[§ 25] Oath of Witness.

(1) General Requirement of Oath. Before testifying, a witness must take an oath or make an affirmation or declaration "in the form provided by law." (Ev.C. 710; cf. Unif. Rule 603 ["In a form calculated to awaken his conscience and impress his mind with his duty to do so"].) In other words, the oath is traditional and usual; but, if the witness prefers, an affirmation or declaration is sufficient. (See C.C.P. 2094 [form]; C.C.P. 2097 [optional form of affirmation or declaration]; C.C.P. 2095, 2096 [other permissible forms]; 18 Am.Jur. P.P. Forms (Rev. ed.), Oath and Affirmation, Form 1 et seq.; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §708.)

(2) Exception: Child Witness. A child under the age of 10, in the court's discretion, may be required only to promise to tell the truth. (Ev.C. 710.)

(3) Consequences of Failure To Take Oath. No constitutional provision is violated if unsworn testimony is received, and thus, a party waives its objection to unsworn testimony by failing to object to it at trial. (In re Katrina L. (1988) 200 C.A.3d 1288, 1299, 247 C.R. 754.) Failure to administer the oath is unlikely to constitute prejudicial error. In Estate of Da Roza (1947) 82 C.A.2d 550, 555, 186 P.2d 725, the point was raised on appeal that the record did not show that two witnesses had been sworn. Held, (a) it would be presumed that the officer performed his duty and did swear them; and (b) any error was waived by failure to object to the testimony on that ground. (See Estate of Wilson (1953) 116 C.A.2d 523, 526, 253 P.2d 1011 [hearing on petition to compromise claim against estate; administrator and counsel for both parties presented matters involved without being sworn as witnesses; error waived]; People v. Martinez (1985) 171 C.A.3d 727, 733, 217 C.R. 546.)

In the absence of a waiver, such as a failure to object or a stipulation, unsworn testimony is legally inadmissible. (In re Heather H. (1988) 200 C.A.3d 91, 96, 246 C.R. 38 [testimony of 4-year-old minor on sexual molestation by her father, taken in chambers; case decided before Ev.C. 710 was amended to allow children under 10 to simply "promise to tell the truth"]; People v. Lee (1985) 164 C.A.3d 830, 841, 210 C.R. 799.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) General Requirement of Oath. C.C.P. 2094 was amended in 2000 to provide alternative forms of oath, affirmation, and declaration, and C.C.P. 2095, 2096, and 2097 were repealed.

See 81 Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Witnesses §681; 18B Am.Jur. P.P. Forms (1997 ed.), Oath and Affirmation, Form 1 seq.

(2a) (New) Exception: Dependent Person With Cognitive Impairment. In the discretion of the court, a dependent person with a cognitive impairment may be required only to promise to tell the truth. (Ev.C. 710, as amended in 2004; on definition of dependent person, see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, Supp., §17.)West's Key Number Digest, Witnesses k.227

III. PROCEDURE AT TRIAL

D. Interpreters and Translators.

1. In General.

a. Interpreters.

[§ 26] Interpreters.

Interpreters must be appointed for witnesses who are unable to understand English or express themselves in English (Ev.C. 752(a); see infra, §29), for a deaf person in a civil or criminal action, incompetency proceeding or administrative hearing (Ev.C. 754; see infra, §30), for the defendant in a criminal case who does not understand English (see infra, §31), or for an indigent litigant in the small claims court who does not understand English (see Gardiana v. Small Claims Court (1976) 59 C.A.3d 412, 421, 130 C.R. 675, and C.C.P. 116.550(b), 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Courts, §305; cf. Jara v. Municipal Court (1978) 21 C.3d 181, 185, 145 C.R. 847, 578 P.2d 94 [municipal court properly refused to appoint interpreter at public expense for indigent civil defendant]; distinguishing Gardiana). (See C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Trial §8.92 et seq.; C.E.B., 1 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §11.28 et seq.; Rutter Group, 2 Civil Trials and Evidence §9:217 et seq.; 2 Schweitzer 2d, §391.) Govt.C. 11435.05 et seq. provide for language assistance in adjudicative hearings.

The appointment and compensation of an interpreter are governed by Ev.C. 730 et seq., the statutes applicable to expert witnesses. (Ev.C. 752(b).) (See Govt.C. 68562 [Judicial Council must adopt rules governing certification and competency of interpreters]; C.R.C., Rule 984 [trial court must establish procedures for periodic review of interpreter skills and removal of interpreters who fail to meet standards of professional conduct]; Standards of Judicial Administration, §18 et seq. [standards for determining need for interpreter and ensuring interpreter's familiarity with technical terminology and procedures; standards of professional conduct for interpreters].)

The Law Revision Commission Comment to Ev.C. 752 states that interpreters are treated as expert witnesses and are subject to the same rules of competency and examination. The competence of an interpreter is ordinarily for the trial court to determine. (People v. Roberts (1984) 162 C.A.3d 350, 355, 208 C.R. 461.) Hence, the fact that an interpreter was not on the recommended list under Govt.C. 68562 did not mean that he was unqualified; the statute is mandatory "unless good cause is found by the judge" for appointment of an interpreter not on the list. (162 C.A.3d 355, footnote 4.) (See People v. Estrada (1986) 176 C.A.3d 410, 415, 221 C.R. 922 [competence, not certification, is required; decision to use noncertified interpreter is for trial judge].)

1. In General.

b. Translator of Writings.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 27

[§ 27] Translator of Writings.

When it is impossible to decipher or directly understand the written characters in a writing offered in evidence, a translator who can decipher the characters or understand the language must be sworn to decipher or translate the writing. (Ev.C. 753(a); see 6 Proof of Facts 439.)

Appointment and compensation are governed by Ev.C. 730 et seq. (see supra, §26). (Ev.C. 753(b).) (See C.E.B., 1 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §11.28.)

In People v. Torres (1985) 164 C.A.3d 266, 210 C.R. 375, defendant was charged with sale of heroin, and the trial judge admitted in evidence a translated transcript of tape recordings of conversations setting up the sale. Held, admission of this evidence was error, although harmless under the Chapman test (see 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, §384). Failure to call the original translator to the stand denied the defendant an opportunity to cross-examine him as to his qualifications and the accuracy of the translations. But no prejudice resulted, for a police officer, fluent in Spanish, testified to their accuracy, and defense counsel had the opportunity to challenge the officer's testimony, or to obtain his own expert, but did not do so. (164 C.A.3d 269, 270.)

III. PROCEDURE AT TRIAL

D. Interpreters and Translators.

1. In General.

c. Procedure.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 28

[§ 28] Procedure.

Interpreters and translators take an oath that they will truly interpret or translate. (Ev.C. 751.) They are subject to "all the rules of law relating to witnesses." (Ev.C. 750; see People v. Mora (1984) 153 C.A.3d 18, 22, 199 C.R. 904 [because interpreter was subject to rules of law relating to witnesses, any impropriety in his failure to take oath was waived by defendant's failure to timely object]; C.E.B., 1 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §11.34 et seq.; 8 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 471 [attorney's guide to use of court interpreters, with English and Spanish glossary of criminal law terms].) (On disqualification of interpreter for bias, see 6 A.L.R.4th 158.) When a deaf or hard-of-hearing person is testifying under oath, an interpreter certified as competent by an organization approved by the Judicial Council (Ev.C. 754(f), infra, §30) must advise the court whenever the interpreter is unable to comply with the oath to truly interpret or translate. (Ev.C. 751(b).)

An interpreter regularly employed by the court and certified or registered under Govt.C. 68560 et seq., or a translator regularly employed by the court, may file the required oath with the clerk. Until revoked, this oath is good in all subsequent court proceedings. (Ev.C. 751(d).)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

III. PROCEDURE AT TRIAL

D. Interpreters and Translators.

3. Interpreter for Deaf or Hearing Impaired Person.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 30

[§ 30] Interpreter for Deaf or Hearing Impaired Person.

(1) General Requirement. If a present and participating party or witness is deaf or hearing impaired, an interpreter must be appointed. (Ev.C. 754(b).) A "deaf or hearing impaired person" is one "with a hearing loss so great as to prevent his or her understanding language spoken in a normal tone." It does not include an individual "provided with, and able to fully participate in the proceedings through the use of, an assistive listening system or computer-aided transcription equipment" provided under C.C. 54.8 (see infra, §40). (Ev.C. 754(a); see 9 Pacific L. J. 485.)

(2) Proceedings. The requirement of an interpreter applies in (a) any civil or criminal action, including an action involving a traffic or other infraction, a juvenile court proceeding, a small claims court proceeding, a family court proceeding or service, or a proceeding to determine mental competency; (b) a court-ordered or court-provided alternative dispute resolution, including mediation and arbitration; and (c) an administrative hearing. (Ev.C. 754(b).)

(3) Qualified Interpreter. An "interpreter" includes an "oral interpreter, a sign language interpreter, or a deaf-blind interpreter, depending upon the needs of the individual who is deaf or hearing impaired." (Ev.C. 754(d).) The interpreter must be "qualified" (Ev.C. 754(b)), which means "certified as competent to interpret court proceedings by a testing organization, agency, or educational institution approved by the Judicial Council as qualified to administer tests to court interpreters for individuals who are deaf or hearing-impaired." (Ev.C. 754(f).) Certifying organizations, agencies, and educational institutions must comply with Judicial Council guidelines and must hold a valid, current approval by the Judicial Council to administer the tests. (C.R.C., Rule 984.1.) Each superior court must maintain a current roster of qualified interpreters. (Ev.C. 754(o).)

"Evidence Code section 754 does not require complete or total comprehension by the deaf person. Such a rule would be difficult if not impossible to satisfy and easily manipulated by a person intent on frustrating the judicial process." (In re Bryon S. (1986) 176 C.A.3d 822, 829, 223 C.R. 319 [deaf person who did not "sign," did not read well and relied on lipreading, admitted that no satisfactory interpreter could be found; court provided one of two certified lipreaders with legal experience, and no prejudice resulted].)

(4) Intermediary Interpreter. When the interpreter is unfamiliar with the deaf or hearing impaired individual's use of particular signs or a particular variant of sign language, the court or other appointing authority must, in consultation with the deaf or hearing impaired individual, appoint an intermediary interpreter. (Ev.C. 754(g); for definitions of "appointing authority" and "intermediary interpreter," see Ev.C. 754(c) and (e), respectively.)

(5) Limitation on Admissibility of Deaf Person's Statement to Officer. A written or oral statement by a deaf or hearing impaired person in reply to a question of a peace officer or other law enforcement or prosecutorial individuals may not be used against the person unless (a) the question was accurately interpreted, and (b) the statement was made knowingly, voluntarily, and intelligently, and was accurately interpreted. Otherwise, the court must make special findings that (a) either the individual could not have used an interpreter or an interpreter was not otherwise required by Title II of the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990 (42 U.S.C., §12131 et seq.), and (b) the statement was made knowingly, voluntarily, and intelligently. (Ev.C. 754(k).)

Peace officers or other persons having a law enforcement or prosecutorial function must make a good faith effort to obtain an interpreter, without unnecessary delay, when questioning a victim or witness who demonstrates or alleges deafness or hearing impairment. However, no interpreter is required if (a) the individual affirmatively indicates that he or she does not need or cannot use an interpreter; or (b) an interpreter is not otherwise required by Title II of the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990 (42 U.S.C., §12131 et seq.). (Ev.C. 754(j).)

In obtaining the services of an interpreter for purposes of Ev.C. 754(j) or (k), priority must be given to obtaining a qualified interpreter. (Ev.C. 754(l).) Moreover, nothing in Ev.C. 754(j) or (k) supersedes the requirement of Ev.C. 754(b) that qualified interpreters be used for deaf or hearing impaired individuals participating as parties or witnesses in a trial or hearing. (Ev.C. 754(m).)

(6) Seating of Interpreter at Hearing. Interpreters must be in full view of and spatially situated to ensure proper communication with the persons for whom they are interpreting. (Ev.C. 754(n).)

(7) No Waiver of Privilege. If an otherwise valid privilege exists between a deaf or hearing impaired individual and another person, the privilege is not waived merely because an interpreter was used to facilitate communication. (Ev.C. 754.5.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) General Requirement. See CALJIC, No. 1.08 [presence of sign language interpreter or computer-aided real-time translation reporter in jury room].

(3) Qualified Interpreter. C.R.C., Rule 984.1 was renumbered C.R.C., Rule 2.892 in 2006.

III. PROCEDURE AT TRIAL

D. Interpreters and Translators.

4. Interpreter for Defendant in Criminal Case. a. In General.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 31

[§ 31] In General.

(1) Constitutional Right. Although earlier decisions granting an interpreter to a criminal defendant were based on due process (see People v. Estany (1962) 210 C.A.2d 609, 611, 26 C.R. 757; People v. Annett (1967) 251 C.A.2d 858, 861, 59 C.R. 888), Article I, §14 of the California Constitution was amended in 1974 to declare a specific constitutional right: "A person unable to understand English who is charged with a crime has a right to an interpreter throughout the proceedings." (See People v. Menchaca (1983) 146 C.A.3d 1019, 1023, 194 C.R. 691, infra, §32; People v. Carreon (1984) 151 C.A.3d 559, 566, 198 C.R. 843, infra, §32.) "Proceedings" does not include an interview with a probation officer preparing a presentence report. (People v. Gutierrez (1986) 177 C.A.3d 92, 98, 222 C.R. 699.)

"In the past, trial courts had been afforded broad discretion in determining whether a defendant's comprehension of English was minimal enough to render interpreter services 'necessary.' ... Nothing in the new constitutional provision changes this well established requirement of a finding of necessity by the trial court. Indeed, the provision specifically states that the right to an interpreter is contingent upon a person's being 'unable to understand English.' " (People v. Carreon, supra, 151 C.A.3d 567; see People v. Alvarez (1996) 14 C.4th 155, 209, 58 C.R.2d 385, 926 P.2d 365 [defendant, a native Spanish speaker who chose to testify in English, was not denied right to assistance of interpreter, where judge, although impliedly prohibiting simultaneous translation during defendant's testimony, expressly allowed sequential translation]; 32 A.L.R.5th 149.)

The constitutional right is not satisfied where the defendant's attorney also acts as his interpreter. (People v. Chavez (1981) 124 C.A.3d 215, 227, 177 C.R. 306.)

(2) English-speaking Defendant and Non-English-speaking Witness. In People v. Aranda (1986) 186 C.A.3d 230, 230 C.R. 498, defendant spoke English and did not need an interpreter; but he contended that, when the prosecution uses non-English-speaking witnesses who testify through an interpreter, the defendant has a constitutional right to his own interpreter and that this right cannot be waived by counsel. In rejecting the contention, the court said: "[A]n English-speaking defendant, who is forced to await the 'witness interpreter's' translation, stands in exactly the same position as the prosecutor, defense counsel, the judge and jury. Rather than such a defendant being effectively absent from his own trial, the trial is, in effect, in a state of suspension until the translation is made. The reason article I, section 14 is limited, by its terms, to non-English-speaking defendants is because only they are in need of its protection." (186 C.A.3d 237.)

(3) Functions of Interpreter. "Interpreters may play three different roles in criminal proceedings: (1) They make the questioning of a non-English-speaking witness possible; (2) they facilitate the non-English-speaking defendant's understanding of the colloquy between the attorneys, the witness, and the judge; and (3) they enable the non-English-speaking defendant and his English-speaking attorney to communicate." (People v. Carreon, supra, 151 C.A.3d 565, footnote 1, quoting 63 Cal. L. Rev. 801, 802.)

(4) Standard of Judicial Administration. The Judicial Council's Standard of Judicial Administration (§18(a)), adopted in 1979, states: "An interpreter is needed if upon examination by the court a party or witness is unable to speak English so as to be understood directly by counsel, court, and jury, or if a party is unable to understand and speak English sufficiently to comprehend the proceedings and to assist counsel in the conduct of the case. Separate interpreters may be needed for each non-English speaking party. An additional interpreter may be needed to interpret witness testimony for the court."

(1) Constitutional Right. See People v. Superior Court (Almaraz) (2001) 89 C.A.4th 1353, 1360, 107 C.R.2d 903 [failure to follow former C.R.C., Rule 984.2 (now C.R.C., Rule 2.893), which specifies when noncertified interpreter may be used in criminal proceeding (see 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Courts, §397), does not, alone, give rise to constitutional violation]. (4) Standard of Judicial Administration. Standards of Judicial Administration, Section 18(a) was amended and renumbered Standards of Judicial Administration, Section 2.10(a) in 2006. As amended, the subdivision reads: "An interpreter is needed if, after an examination of a party or witness, the court concludes that:"

"(1) The party cannot understand and speak English well enough to participate fully in the proceedings and to assist counsel; or"

"(2) The witness cannot speak English so as to be understood directly by counsel, court, and jury." West's Key Number Digest, Criminal Law k.642

III. PROCEDURE AT TRIAL

D. Interpreters and Translators.

4. Interpreter for Defendant in Criminal Case.

b. Right to Separate Interpreter.

1. Improper Borrowing.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 32

[§ 32] Improper Borrowing.

In People v. Menchaca (1983) 146 C.A.3d 1019, 194 C.R. 691, the interpreter for witnesses was the only sworn interpreter for defendant at the preliminary hearing and during much of the trial. Held, this did not comply with the California constitutional mandate and was also a denial of due process.

(a) "We take judicial notice that when a witness interpreter is utilized, the interpreter and witness are speaking to each other at relatively close range, after which the interpreter translates for the benefit of counsel and the trial court. Under such circumstances, it cannot be assumed a defendant clearly hears and understands the question and answer exchange in Spanish." (146 C.A.3d 1024.)

(b) Even if defendant could hear and understand the answers given in Spanish, it does not follow that he understood the testimony. In the usual case, there are many monosyllabic answers; and, without a clear understanding of the questions, the testimony is meaningless. "Accordingly, we conclude that a third party witness interpreter cannot effectively discharge the translating responsibilities owed to a defendant." (146 C.A.3d 1024.)

(c) "Moreover, a defendant's 'presence,' his sensibility and comprehension of the criminal trial process, is impaired in other ways by sole reliance on a witness interpreter. When acting in that capacity, an interpreter does not provide the defendant with translations of the court's rulings or of open-court colloquy between the bench and counsel. These are integral parts of 'the proceedings.' " (146 C.A.3d 1025.)

(d) The judge's willingness to permit defense counsel to interrupt the proceedings to communicate with defendant was insufficient compliance with the constitutional mandate: "It is the defendant's ability to instantaneously communicate with counsel upon a spontaneous understanding of the testimony and the proceedings which must be protected." (146 C.A.3d 1025.)

The Menchaca reasoning was approved in People v. Aguilar (1984) 35 C.3d 785, 200 C.R. 908, 677 P.2d 1198, where, without defendant's knowledge, his attorney allowed the court to borrow the interpreter to translate for two prosecution witnesses. The court added:

"In the ethnic richness of California, a multiplicity of languages has been nurtured. Historically, many peoples speaking diverse tongues have formed large portions of our population. The people of this state, through the clear and express terms of their Constitution, required that all persons tried in a California court understand what is happening about them, for them, and against them. Who would have it otherwise?" (35 C.3d 795.)

The same conclusion was reached in People v. Carreon (1984) 151 C.A.3d 559, 198 C.R. 843. Defendant was convicted of robbery and kidnaping. His first language was Spanish and his grasp of English was limited. At the preliminary hearing, the judge borrowed the interpreter who had been provided for the chief prosecution witness--the victim. At the trial, the victim was unavailable, and his preliminary hearing testimony was read into the record in the presence of the jury. Held, this was reversible error.

(a) Courts and commentators have noted that denial of interpreter services impairs defendant's due process right, his right to confront adverse witnesses, his right to effective assistance of counsel, and his right to presence at his trial. (151 C.A.3d 567.)

(b) It is not only constitutionally essential but also eminently reasonable to require a separate interpreter. In this case, when the victim was testifying, the interpreter was chiefly concerned with translating the testimony for the court, and was not readily available to facilitate consultation between defendant and his counsel. The opportunity to interrupt the proceedings was not a satisfactory solution to the problem: "[I]t would require the defendant, in order to accomplish the otherwise simple task of consulting his counsel, to somehow make his intention known to the court and call the interpreter back to the counsel table. During the attorney-client conversation, attention would undoubtedly focus upon the scene at the counsel table, as occurs when counsel approach the bench for a private consultation with the court." (151 C.A.3d 571.) And "the risk of alienating or antagonizing the jury or bench would infuse the mere act of speaking to his client with considerations of strategy and tactics, in contrast to the English-speaking defendant whose consultation would be unobtrusive and likely to go unnoticed." (151 C.A.3d 571.)

(c) "Additionally, the defense interpreter is party to privileged communications in nonstructured conditions which may require something more than mere translation. At times, the interpreter may have to accede to the desires of defense counsel whose work in the courtroom and in private conferences with the defendant may require the interpreter to vary the more routine services he would perform as a witness interpreter. His presence may assist defense counsel in assuring that testimony is being accurately translated." (151 C.A.3d 572.) (See People v. Baez (1987) 195 C.A.3d 1431, 1436, 241 C.R. 435 [to hear borrowed interpreter, defendant moved away from his attorney; witnesses for whom interpreter was borrowed gave significant testimony; conviction reversed].)

[§ 33] Single Interpreter for Several Defendants.

In People v. Rioz (1984) 161 C.A.3d 905, 207 C.R. 903, one interpreter was employed for all four Spanish-speaking defendants, and each defendant was equipped with an earphone/headset. When defendant Rioz took the stand as a witness, the single interpreter was used to interpret for him as a witness. Held, the borrowing at this time, without their consent, was a violation of the constitutional rights of the other three defendants. (161 C.A.3d 912.)

The court observed that it was not holding that there must always be individual interpreters for each of several defendants jointly charged; for example, where the involvement of defendants is serial rather than simultaneous, a single interpreter might reasonably act as defense interpreter and proceedings interpreter. But when witnesses are called and testimony is taken, the fundamental rights of a defendant to understand the proceedings and to immediately communicate with counsel call for an individual interpreter. (161 C.A.3d 913.)

4. Interpreter for Defendant in Criminal Case.

b. Right to Separate Interpreter.

3. Waiver of Right.

[§ 34] Waiver of Right.

In People v. Aguilar (1984) 35 C.3d 785, 200 C.R. 908, 677 P.2d 1198, supra, §32, defendant's interpreter was borrowed for prosecution witnesses with the consent of defendant's counsel, but without any knowledge or approval by defendant. "An exchange took place--entirely in English--between the court, the prosecutor, the interpreter, and defense counsel. The defendant was excluded." (35 C.3d 795.) Held, this was not a valid waiver. "Although prior to 1974, appointment of an interpreter could be waived by failure to request one, this is no longer the case. The right to an interpreter having since been guaranteed in the Constitution, it may not validly be waived without an 'affirmative showing,' on the record, of waiver which was 'intelligent and voluntary' on the part of the affected defendant." (35 C.3d 794, quoting People v. Chavez (1981) 124 C.A.3d 215, 227, 177 C.R. 306; see People v. Nieblas (1984) 161 C.A.3d 527, 530, 207 C.R. 695; cf. People v. Estrada (1986) 176 C.A.3d 410, 416, 221 C.R. 922 [defendant waived right to have personal interpreter interpret all proceedings verbatim].)

In People v. Resendes (1985) 164 C.A.3d 812, 210 C.R. 609, a prosecution of defendant R and his codefendant, the judge, with consent of counsel, appointed one interpreter for both, and advised the defendants that they could raise their hands and stop the proceedings for the purpose of communicating with their attorneys. Held, the procedure was error. (a) As in Aguilar, supra, acquiescence of counsel was not enough for a waiver; personal consent of the defendant is necessary. The judge did not inform defendants of their right to an individual interpreter, but merely asked whether they understood the procedure being used. (164 C.A.3d 816.) (b) The interruption procedure was not a satisfactory substitute for a single interpreter. (164 C.A.3d 817, 818.)

III. PROCEDURE AT TRIAL

D. Interpreters and Translators.

4. Interpreter for Defendant in Criminal Case. c. Reversible Error.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 35

[§ 35] Reversible Error.

(1) Conflict in Former Law. There was previously disagreement as to whether an error in denying or impairing a criminal defendant's right to an interpreter was reversible per se (see People v. Aguilar (1984) 35 C.3d 785, 792, 794, 200 C.R. 908, 677 P.2d 1198, supra, §§32, 34 ["constitutional error" in "borrowing" interpreter; absent waiver, reversal is required]; People v. Menchaca (1983) 146 C.A.3d 1019, 1025, 194 C.R. 691, supra, §32 [court characterized error as denial of due process]; In re Dung T. (1984) 160 C.A.3d 697, 711, 206 C.R. 772) or could be harmless (see People v. Carreon (1984) 151 C.A.3d 559, 198 C.R. 843, supra, §32; People v. Rioz (1984) 161 C.A.3d 905, 913, 207 C.R. 903, supra, §33).

(2) Chapman Standard Governs. In People v. Rodriguez (1986) 42 C.3d 1005, 232 C.R. 132, 728 P.2d 202, two interpreters were provided for two defendants, but one of them also interpreted for witnesses. In reaching the conclusion that there was no reversible error, the court reviewed the case law and rejected the reversible error per se standard.

(a) "Application of the per se standard requiring automatic reversal for a violation of a constitutional right normally is dependent upon the fundamental character of the right invaded or the impossibility of assessing prejudice. ... This test has not been applied to all deprivations of constitutional rights, even federal constitutional rights ... , and we believe that it similarly is unnecessary here. In so concluding, we do not intend to diminish the importance of the right to an interpreter where required. However, our consideration of the panoply of constitutional rights implicated in the use of or denial of an interpreter, and the fact that the violation of these rights does not automatically lead to substantial prejudice, leads us to believe that a different standard is appropriate. Moreover, if a defendant can demonstrate, either on the record or through habeas corpus, that a fundamental right has been infringed, the denial of which as a general rule would lead to automatic reversal, then he may still obtain such relief on that basis." (42 C.3d 1010.)

(b) Several constitutional interests may be implicated in the right to an interpreter, including due process, confrontation, assistance of counsel, and presence at trial. But violation of these rights does not necessarily require automatic reversal; e.g., the burden is on the defendant to demonstrate that his absence prejudiced his case or denied him a fair and impartial trial, and violation of the right to counsel requires reversal only where the breach has had a material effect on the regularity of the trial. (42 C.3d 1011.)

(c) Where violations of state constitutional rights are involved, the Watson probability test is usually applied (whether it is "reasonably probable that a result more favorable to the appealing party would have been reached in the absence of the error"). Here, federal constitutional rights may be affected, and "we therefore adopt a Chapman approach under which a federal constitutional error may be deemed harmless only if the appellate court 'is able to declare a belief that it was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt.' " (42 C.3d 1012; see 6 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Reversible Error, §10.) The United States Supreme Court, in recent decisions involving denial of a defendant's right to be present, failure to permit cross-examination, and other errors of constitutional dimension, has similarly rejected the reversible error per se doctrine and followed the Chapman approach. (42 C.3d 1012.)

(d) The Judicial Council's Standard (see supra, §31) "did not mandate separate interpreters for each party but rather commented that such a service 'may' be necessary." But problems have arisen, and to avoid speculation regarding possible adverse consequences, "[w]e believe that the best and preferred means of avoiding further confusion is to require that each defendant have assigned to him an interpreter who remains at his side throughout the proceedings, unless such assistance has been waived." (42 C.3d 1013.)

(e) In the present case, while both defendants were technically deprived at times of the assistance of separate interpreters, nothing in the record shows that at any point either defendant's ability to communicate or comprehend was impeded. (42 C.3d 1014.) The situation in Aguilar, supra, is distinguishable: There, the use of defendant's interpreter to translate for a witness left the defendant isolated and unable to consult his attorney. (42 C.3d 1014.) And in Menchaca, supra, the court pointed out that defense counsel had objected to the borrowing of the interpreter. (42 C.3d 1015.)

"Thus, among possible indications of actual interference with defendant's rights which may appear on the record are remarks by counsel, the court, or defendants themselves. In other instances, the fact that a defendant who does not speak English has been left without means of communication or comprehension will be equally obvious without reference to express remarks made during the proceedings. Nonetheless, in some cases, even where some deprivation is shown, the absence of a personal interpreter may be found harmless because the proceedings which took place while the interpreter was absent may be insubstantial or concern matters which are not possibly prejudicial to the defendant, or because there is no allegation that the deprivation actually affected any of the defendant's rights." (42 C.3d 1015.)

The opinion concludes: "We hold that the proper standard of review to be utilized where the state constitutional right to an interpreter has been violated is that described in Chapman. Nothing will prevent defendants from raising any additional constitutional claims should they be appropriate. In some instances, where the record does not reveal error or does not reveal any likely material effect caused by an apparent violation, the defendant may wish to proceed via habeas corpus proceedings." (42 C.3d 1019.) (See People v. Baez (1987) 195 C.A.3d 1431, 1435, 241 C.R. 435, supra, §32 [applying Chapman standard and reversing conviction].)

III. PROCEDURE AT TRIAL

D. Interpreters and Translators.

4. Interpreter for Defendant in Criminal Case. d. Failure To Administer Oath.

[§ 36] Failure To Administer Oath.

In People v. Menchaca (1983) 146 C.A.3d 1019, 194 C.R. 691, supra, §32, the court also declared that the failure to administer the oath required by Ev.C. 750 and Ev.C. 751 (supra, §28) "is fatal to the constitutional effectiveness of an interpreter." (146 C.A.3d 1025.)

The court in People v. Carreon (1984) 151 C.A.3d 559, 198 C.R. 843, disagreed. The only oath disclosed by the record was that given to a witness interpreter; there was no record of any defense interpreter being sworn. Defendant contended that the same oath requirements for witness interpreters (Ev.C. 751, 752, supra, §§28, 29) apply to defense interpreters; that in the absence of record proof that an interpreter was sworn, the presumption arises that no oath was given; and that, under the holding in Menchaca, the failure to administer the oath was reversible error. Held, these contentions were unsound.

(a) Properly construed, the Code sections do not require an oath. Ev.C. 751 and Ev.C. 752 refer only to witness interpreters, and Ev.C. 750 provides that an interpreter is subject to all the rules of law relating to witnesses. Superficially, Ev.C. 750 might cover defense interpreters, but this is not the proper interpretation.

(1) In view of the special role of the defense interpreter, the oath may not be required except for the purposes of appearance and solemnity; and the statutory oath for witness interpreters is obviously unsuitable. (151 C.A.3d 578.)

(2) The defense interpreter functions in court and elsewhere during conferences between defense counsel and the defendant; if an oath were required, it would have to be given at the earliest opportunity in order to provide for private conferences. (151 C.A.3d 578.)

(3) The Law Revision Commission Comment to Ev.C. 750 discusses only the witness interpreter; without that section as a basis, no oath requirement for defense interpreters exists. (151 C.A.3d 578.)

(4) A defendant is provided a defense interpreter much as he or she is assigned a private investigator or psychiatrist, and professional licensing by the state may constitute the only requisite to service. (151 C.A.3d 578.)

(5) The work of the defense interpreter, unlike that of the witness interpreter, does not become a part of the record. (151 C.A.3d 578.)

(b) Assuming that an oath is required, it was waived.

(1) Cases dealing with the oath required of a witness are, under Ev.C. 750, applicable to an interpreter. And these cases hold that, where the record does not show whether the witness has been sworn, the presumption is that the duty was performed, and the burden is on the appellant to overcome the presumption. (151 C.A.3d 578, 579.)

(2) Apart from the presumption, failure to swear an interpreter, like failure to swear a witness, is not reversible error. (151 C.A.3d 579; see supra, §25.)

(3) Likewise, as in the case of failure to swear a witness, the error may be waived. (151 C.A.3d 580, 581; see supra, §25.) And here, defendant's counsel, aware of the fact that an interpreter was not sworn, made no timely request or objection. (151 C.A.3d 581, 582.) (See People v. Martinez (1985) 171 C.A.3d 727, 733, 217 C.R. 546 [record silent on swearing, no objection, no improper translation and no unfairness shown; no reversible error; following Carreon]; In re Bryon S. (1986) 176 C.A.3d 822, 830, 223 C.R. 319 [in juvenile court proceeding, failure to administer oath to interpreter for youth's father until after hearing on interpreter's competence, but prior to receipt of evidence against youth, did not materially affect hearing or adjudication and was not reversible error].)

- e. Challenge to Accuracy of Information.

[§ 37] Challenge to Accuracy of Information.

In People v. Johnson (1975) 46 C.A.3d 701, 120 C.R. 372, witness R testified in Spanish through an interpreter at the preliminary examination. At the trial, R was unavailable, and the prosecution sought to use his preliminary examination testimony. Defendants moved to exclude R's testimony, arguing that deficiencies in the translation denied defendants the reasonable opportunity to cross-examine him. To support this contention, defendants proposed to introduce testimony by a person fluent in Spanish and English who was present throughout the preliminary hearing as the investigating officer and who would show significant errors in the translation. The judge refused to hear the proffered evidence and permitted R's testimony to go to the jury. Held, this was error.

(a) If the interpreter was improperly interpreting questions to R and answers from R, defense counsel had no meaningful opportunity to cross-examine R. The evidence proffered by defendants was thus relevant to an issue vital to the preliminary facts which the prosecution had to establish before R's testimony could be received at trial. (46 C.A.3d 704.)

(b) The trial judge was required to receive the proffered evidence unless some special rule precluded it. No such rule applied here. Under Ev.C. 750, interpreters are subject to all rules relating to witnesses. "The most fundamental of laws relating to witnesses generally is that their testimony may be impeached or countered by that of other witnesses." (46 C.A.3d 704.)

(c) The trial judge was not called on to review the preliminary hearing proceedings as on a P.C. 995 motion to dismiss. The proffered evidence was put forward in relation to the prosecution's offer to use R's earlier testimony as original evidence at trial. "The excluded evidence went to a fact of constitutional dimension going to the admissibility of the evidence. It was thus timely when offered, i.e., at the earliest opportunity in rebuttal of the prosecution's effort to carry its burden of establishing that appellants had been afforded a meaningful right of cross-examination at the preliminary hearing." 3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 38

[§ 38] Interpreter for Party in Civil Case.

(1) No Interpreter Required. Ev.C. 755 was added in 1991 to provide for the appointment of an interpreter for any party in a civil action who "does not proficiently speak or understand the English language." (Ev.C. 755(a), (b).) The statute was to remain in effect until January 1, 1993, unless the Legislature acted to extend that date. (Ev.C. 755(f).) Ev.C. 755 was not extended, and thus it was repealed by its own terms, effective January 1, 1993. (On Ev.C. 755, added in 1995, concerning interpreters where domestic violence protective order has been granted or is sought, see infra, §39.)

(2) Exception: Medical Examination. An interpreter must be appointed for any party to a civil action who lacks proficiency in the English language and who is subject to a medical examination (a) that is requested by an insurer or by the defendant, and (b) that is conducted for the purpose of determining damages. (Ev.C. 755.5(a).) The interpreter's fee must be paid by the insurer or the defendant requesting the examination. (Ev.C. 755.5(b).)

If a medical examination is conducted without complying with Ev.C. 755.5(a), the record or testimony concerning the examination is inadmissible in the civil action for which it was conducted or in any other civil action. (Ev.C. 755.5(c).)

The interpreter must be certified under Govt.C. 11435.05 et seq. (Ev.C. 755.5(a).) However, if a certified interpreter is unavailable, the person requesting the interpreter may, on stipulation of the parties, provisionally qualify and utilize other interpreters. (Ev.C. 755.5(e).)

Ev.C. 755.5 does not prohibit the presence of any other person to assist a party. (Ev.C. 755.5(d).)

6. Interpreter Where Protective Order Granted or Sought.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 39

[§ 39] Interpreter Where Protective Order Granted or Sought.

(1) In General. An interpreter must be provided for a party who does not proficiently speak or understand English, if a protective order has been granted or is sought under Family C. 6221 and the action or proceeding is (1) brought under Family C. 6200 et seq. (domestic violence) or the Uniform Parentage Act (Family C. 7600 et seq.), or (2) for dissolution or nullity of marriage or legal separation. The requirement applies whenever the party is present. The interpreter must be certified under Govt.C. 68560 et seq. (see 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Courts, §397), unless the court, in its discretion, appoints an uncertified interpreter. (Ev.C. 755(a).)

(3) Fees. The interpreter's fees are to be paid as provided in Govt.C. 68092(b), but they must be waived if the party who needs the interpreter is appearing in forma pauperis under Govt.C. 68511.3. (Ev.C. 755(b).)

(4) Action Permissible Where Interpreter Not Present. The proceedings may not commence until the interpreter is present and situated near the party and the party's attorney, but this requirement does not prevent the court from (a) issuing an order when the necessity for the order outweighs the necessity for an interpreter, (b) extending a previously issued temporary order if the interpreter is not readily available, or (c) issuing a permanent order where the party requiring the interpreter has failed to make appropriate arrangements for an interpreter after receiving proper notice of the hearing with information about obtaining an interpreter. (Ev.C. 755(c).)

(5) Funding. Local public entities may, and the Judicial Council must, apply to the appropriate state agency for federal or other funds to implement Ev.C. 755, and they need comply with the statute only to the extent those funds are made available. (Ev.C. 755(e).)

(6) Presence of Other Persons. The statute is not intended to prohibit the presence of any other person to assist a party. (Ev.C. 755(d).)

(7) Rules and Forms. To implement the statute, the Judicial Council must draft rules and modify forms, including the petition for a temporary restraining order and related forms, to inform both parties of their right to an interpreter. (Ev.C. 755(f).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

III. PROCEDURE AT TRIAL E. Assistance for Hearing Impaired.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 40

[§ 40] Assistance for Hearing Impaired.

(1) In General. In designated proceedings and hearings (see infra, this section), a party, witness, attorney, judicial employee, judge, juror, or other participant who is hearing impaired must, upon request, be provided with a functioning assistive listening system or a computer-aided transcription system. An individual requiring a system must give advance notice to the appropriate court or agency either at the time the hearing is set or not later than 5 days before the hearing. (C.C. 54.8(a).) The proceeding or hearing may not commence until the system is in place and functioning. (C.C. 54.8(i).)

An "individual who is hearing impaired" means "an individual with a hearing loss, who, with sufficient amplification or a computer-aided transcription system, is able to fully participate in the proceeding." (C.C. 54.8(j).)

(2) Proceedings or Hearings Covered. The requirement of providing an assistive listening system or a computer-aided transcription system applies in any (a) civil or criminal proceeding, including traffic, small claims court, family court proceedings and services, and juvenile court proceedings; (b) court-ordered or court-provided alternative dispute resolution, including mediation and arbitration; and (c) administrative hearing of a public agency. (C.C. 54.8(a).)

(3) Compliance With Federal Standards. C.C. 54.8 may not be construed as prescribing a lesser standard of accessibility or usability than that provided by Title II of the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990 (42 U.S.C., §12131 et seq.) and implementing federal regulations. (C.C. 54.8(k).)

(4) Types of Assistance. "Assistive listening systems" include "special devices which transmit amplified speech by means of audio-induction loops, radio frequency systems (AM or FM), or infrared transmission." Personal receivers, headphones, and neckloops must be available upon request by hearing impaired individuals. (C.C. 54.8(b).)

If a computer-aided transcription system is used, sufficient display terminals must be provided to allow the hearing impaired individual to read the real time transcript of the proceeding without difficulty. (C.C. 54.8(c).)

Each county must have at least one portable assistive listening system for use by any court in the county. The location of the system must be jointly determined by the board of supervisors and the judges. (C.C. 54.8(e).)

(5) Hearing Impaired Juror. If a juror is hearing impaired, the jury deliberation room must, at the juror's request, be equipped with an assistive listening system or a computer-aided transcription system. (C.C. 54.8(g).)

A court reporter may be present in the jury deliberation room during deliberation if a hearing impaired juror requires the reporter's assistance in operating a computer-aided transcription system. (C.C. 54.8(h).)

(6) Notice and Records. A sign must be posted in a prominent place indicating the availability of, and the means of requesting, an assistive listening system or a computer-aided transcription system. Notice of the availability of the systems must be posted with notice of trials. (C.C. 54.8(d).)

The Judicial Council must develop and approve official forms for notifying persons of the availability of assistive listening systems and computer-aided transcription systems. The council must also develop and maintain records showing the utilization of these systems by the courts. (C.C. 54.8(f).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(4) Types of Assistance. C.C. 54.8(e), as amended in 2001, provides that each superior court must have at least one portable assistive listening system for use in any court facility in the county. When the system is not in use, it must be stored in a location determined by the court.

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

III. PROCEDURE AT TRIAL

F. Kinds of Examination.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 41

[§ 41] Kinds of Examination.

The Evidence Code defines each of the established methods of examining witnesses:

(1) Direct Examination. This is "the first examination of a witness upon a matter that is not within the scope of a previous examination of the witness." (Ev.C. 760; see infra, §164 et seq.; Rutter Group, 2 Civil Trials and Evidence, Chap. 9.) Normally, it is the examination by the party who calls the witness; but, under the above definition and standard practice, if the other party thereafter seeks to question the witness on a matter not within the scope of his or her testimony, the rules of direct examination apply. (Ev.C. 760, Comment; see infra, §231.)

(2) Cross-Examination. This is "the examination of a witness by a party other than the direct examiner upon a matter that is within the scope of the direct examination of the witness." (Ev.C. 761; see infra, §224 et seq.; Rutter Group, 2 Civil Trials and Evidence, Chap. 10.) The definition retains the established rule limiting the scope of cross-examination. (See infra, §231.)

(3) Redirect Examination. This is "an examination of a witness by the direct examiner subsequent to the cross-examination of the witness." (Ev.C. 762; see infra, §256; Rutter Group, 2 Civil Trials and Evidence §9:227 et seq.) The definition covers not only redirect immediately following cross-examination, but any subsequent reexamination by the direct examiner. (Ev.C. 762, Comment.)

(4) Recross-Examination. This is "an examination of a witness by a cross-examiner subsequent to a redirect examination of the witness." (Ev.C. 763; see infra, §257; Rutter Group, 2 Civil Trials and Evidence §10:219 et seq.) This, too, includes any subsequent reexamination by a cross-examiner. (Ev.C. 763, Comment.)

(5) Voir Dire Examination. The term "voir dire examination," not defined in the Evidence Code, refers to the preliminary questioning of a prospective witness (or juror) to determine the person's qualifications. (See 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §48; infra, §189; on voir dire examination of jurors, see 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §150 et seq.; 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §472 et seq.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

IV. POWERS AND FUNCTIONS OF TRIAL JUDGE

A. In General.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 43

[§ 43] In General.

The judge's broad authority over the admission and exclusion of evidence is generally recognized by statutes and cases. (See Ev.C. 320 [order of proof]; Ev.C. 352, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §132 et seq. [exclusion of relevant, but prejudicial, evidence]; Engineering Service Corp. v. Longridge Inv. Co. (1957) 153 C.A.2d 404, 417, 314 P.2d 563; Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co. v. Superior Court (1988) 200 C.A.3d 272, 288, 245 C.R. 873; Cottle v. Superior Court (1992) 3 C.A.4th 1367, 1379, 5 C.R.2d 882; Continental Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1995) 32 C.A.4th 94, 107, 108, 37 C.R.2d 843; 63 So. Cal. L. Rev. 937 [judicial discretion, power, and responsibility in evidence law]; C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Trial, §5.43 et seq.; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §§717, 718; 9 Wigmore (Chadbourne Rev.) §2549.)

Particular aspects of this power, considered in subsequent sections, are: order of proof (infra, §44 et seq.); determination of preliminary facts (infra, §48 et seq.); restriction of cumulative evidence (infra, §§67, 68); limiting number of experts (infra, §69); restriction of rebuttal evidence (infra, §70 et seq.); exclusion of witnesses from courtroom (infra, §73 et seq.); examination of witnesses (infra, §76 et seq.); instructions to jury on evidence and witnesses (infra, §87); exclusion of testimony on own motion (infra, §392).

Other aspects already considered are discretion to exclude unduly prejudicial matter (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §132 et seq.) and discretion to order a view of the scene (2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Demonstrative, Experimental, and Scientific Evidence, §25).

Some phases of this subject are considered in other works: on power to reopen case after submission, see 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §180; on power to punish for contempt in trial, see 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §182 et seq.; on misconduct of judge preventing a fair trial, see 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §254 et seq.; 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §557; on power of pretrial judge to limit issues by pretrial order, see 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §55; on appellate review of rulings admitting or excluding evidence, see 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Appeal, §§341, 422, 423, 434, 439; 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §§548, 549.

IV. POWERS AND FUNCTIONS OF TRIAL JUDGE

B. Order of Proof.

1. Civil Cases.

a. In General.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 44

[§ 44] In General.

The sequence of procedural steps in the trial is set forth in C.C.P. 607. (See supra, §22.) As to presentation of evidence, the court in its discretion regulates the order of proof, except as otherwise provided by law. (Ev.C. 320.) However, the order in which each party presents its own evidence and calls its own witnesses is largely a matter of trial strategy, and counsel are usually allowed relatively complete control. (For practice suggestions, see C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Trial §5.8 et seq.; C.E.B., 3 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §24.7; C.E.B., Effective Introduction of Evidence in California 2d, Chap. 5; Rutter Group, 1 Civil Trials and Evidence §1:428 et seq.; for special rules governing particular situations, see infra, §45.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

IV. POWERS AND FUNCTIONS OF TRIAL JUDGE

B. Order of Proof.

1. Civil Cases.

b. Special Rules of Practice.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 45

[§ 45] Special Rules of Practice.

Rules governing the order of proof have been developed in the following situations:

(1) Prior Trial of Special Defenses. Defenses not involving the merits, such as statute of limitations, res judicata, another action pending or other plea in abatement, may, on motion, be separately tried at the outset. (C.C.P. 597; see 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §164 et seq.)

(2) Prior Trial of Equitable Issues. When a proceeding involves both legal and equitable issues, the normal practice is to try the equitable issues first. The court's resolution of the equitable issues may also resolve the legal issues. (Raedeke v. Gibraltar Savings & Loan Assn. (1974) 10 C.3d 665, 671, 111 C.R. 693, 517 P.2d 1157; Dills v. Delira Corp. (1956) 145 C.A.2d 124, 129, 302 P.2d 397; A-C Co. v. Security Pac. Nat. Bank (1985) 173 C.A.3d 462, 473, 219 C.R. 62; Walton v. Walton (1995) 31 C.A.4th 277, 293, 36 C.R.2d 901.)

(3) Prior Trial of Issues of Law. In actions triable by jury for the recovery of specific real or personal property, or for money claimed under a contract or as damages for breach, or for injuries, when there are issues of law and fact, the legal issues are tried first. (C.C.P. 592.)

(4) Prior Trial of Basic Issue. A foundational or basic issue should be tried first, where other proof is dependent on it. (See Smeland v. Renwick (1920) 50 C.A. 565, 574, 196 P. 283 [action against corporation for fraud, proof of representations by officer and falsity before evidence of damage]; Estate of Marshall (1953) 120 C.A.2d 747, 752, 262 P.2d 42 [heirship proceeding by daughter claiming as legitimate pretermitted heir; proof first of cohabitation, which, if established, would lead to conclusive presumption of legitimacy].)

(5) Judge's Discretion To Vary Order. The foregoing rules are not restrictive; the discretion of the judge to permit the introduction of evidence out of its logical or conventional order is exceedingly broad. Thus, under the doctrine of limited admissibility (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §30), evidence that may be irrelevant or incompetent unless connected up with other evidence may be admitted on counsel's assurance that the other evidence will be produced. (Ev.C. 403(b), infra, §52.) If it is not, the court should thereafter strike out the unconnected evidence. (See Avery v. Wiltsee (1918) 177 C. 484, 486, 171 P. 95; Jacobson v. Lamb (1928) 91 C.A. 405, 417, 267 P. 114 [declarations of partner before proof of authority to bind partnership]; Brea v. McGlashan (1934) 3 C.A.2d 454, 466, 39 P.2d 877 [declarations of agent admitted prior to proof of agency]; Salyer Grain & Milling Co. v. Henson (1970) 13 C.A.3d 493, 499, 500, 91 C.R. 847 [court may admit evidence conditionally by either reserving its ruling on objection or by admitting evidence subject to motion to strike]; 1 McCormick 5th, §58; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1871; on motion to strike, see infra, §383.) (For other illustrations of court's discretion, see Estate of Smith (1917) 176 C. 729, 730, 171 P. 289 [will contest; proponents required to offer evidence of execution of will before contestant required to prove interest in estate]; Laguna Salada Union Elementary School Dist. v. Pacific Dev. Co. (1953) 119 C.A.2d 470, 474, 259 P.2d 498 [condemnation suit; jury determination of value before court determination of necessity]; Alton v. Rogers (1954) 127 C.A.2d 667, 676, 274 P.2d 487 [departure from practice of trying equitable issues first; jury carefully instructed that equitable issues were for court].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(5) Judge's Discretion To Vary Order. See 1 McCormick 6th, §58.

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

IV. POWERS AND FUNCTIONS OF TRIAL JUDGE

B. Order of Proof.

2. Criminal Cases.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 46

[§ 46] Criminal Cases.

(1) General Rule of Discretion. The sequence of procedural steps in a criminal trial is stated in P.C. 1093. (See supra, §22.) But P.C. 1094 authorizes the court, in its discretion, to depart from this sequence, and the power of the court to vary the normal order of proof of issues is also well recognized. (See Ev.C. 320; People v. McDermand (1984) 162 C.A.3d 770, 792, 211 C.R. 773.)

Thus, evidence of acts or declarations of a coconspirator are inadmissible against a defendant unless the conspiracy and the defendant's membership therein are independently shown. (See 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §133.) But the court may, where it appears necessary or desirable, permit the evidence to be provisionally introduced, subject to later striking if the conspiracy is not proved. (See People v. Sica (1952) 112 C.A.2d 574, 584, 247 P.2d 72; People v. Fratianno (1955) 132 C.A.2d 610, 625, 282 P.2d 1002; In re David B. (1978) 81 C.A.3d 806, 809, 146 C.R. 815.)

Similarly, a defendant's incriminating admission or confession is not admissible unless the corpus delicti has been proved by independent evidence (see 1 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Elements, §46), but the court may vary the order for good reason. (See People v. Griffin (1950) 98 C.A.2d 1, 47, 219 P.2d 519; People v. Lara (1994) 30 C.A.4th 658, 675, 35 C.R.2d 886; cf. 45 A.L.R.2d 1316, 1338.)

(2) Illustrations. In People v. McDermand, supra, a murder trial, the prosecutor moved to defer cross-examination of defendant until after the defense psychiatrist had finished his testimony. Held, granting of the motion over objection was error, although harmless. The prosecutor's purpose--to make his cross-examination more effective--was not a proper reason for compelling premature revelation of the nature of the defense. (162 C.A.3d 792.) However, the ruling did not prejudice defendant: (a) The defense was diminished capacity, and defense counsel would have called the psychiatrist in any event. (b) The scope of the cross-examination was not broadened, for the court properly confined it to the scope of the direct examination. (c) It is within the trial court's discretion to permit the prosecutor to recall a defendant for further cross-examination even after the defense has rested; hence, there was no prejudice in the court's ruling permitting all of his cross-examination, rather than some of it, to take place at the later time. (162 C.A.3d 794.) (See People v. Marshall (1996) 13 C.4th 799, 835, 836, 55 C.R.2d 347, 919 P.2d 1280 [judge in murder trial, after allowing defense counsel to reopen to present two witnesses after both sides had rested and prosecution had begun guilt phase summation, did not err in refusing to allow defense to present third witness; witness' testimony had slight probative value and would have increased disruption already caused by reopening].)

IV. POWERS AND FUNCTIONS OF TRIAL JUDGE

C. Determination of Questions of Law.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 47

[§ 47] Determination of Questions of Law.

The court must decide all questions of law. These include questions concerning the construction of statutes and other writings, the admissibility of evidence, and other rules of evidence. (Ev.C. 310(a); on construction of statutes and Constitution, see generally 7 Summary (9th), Constitutional Law, §92 et seq.; 1 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Introduction to Crimes, §17 et seq.; on construction of contracts, see 1 Summary (9th), Contracts, §681 et seq.; on construction of deeds, see 4 Summary (9th), Real Property, §235 et seq.; on construction of wills, see 12 Summary (9th), Wills and Probate, §244 et seq.; on review of questions of law, see 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Appeal, §316 et seq.)

Foreign law, formerly considered a question of fact, is a question of law, determined by judicial notice under the procedure prescribed by Ev.C. 450 et seq. (Ev.C. 310(b); see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Judicial Notice, §27.) Whether a writing constitutes an integration subject to the parol evidence rule is also a question of law (see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Documentary Evidence, §68), and the same is true of illegality in obtaining evidence as a ground of exclusion (see 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, §354 et seq.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

IV. POWERS AND FUNCTIONS OF TRIAL JUDGE

D. Determination of Preliminary Facts.

1. In General.

a. Nature of Problem and Code Solution.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 48

[§ 48] Nature of Problem and Code Solution.

(1) Preliminary Determination by Judge. In many situations, the qualification of a witness to testify or to refuse to testify, or the admissibility of a particular item of evidence, is conditional on the showing of preliminary facts as a foundation. Although fact questions are ordinarily for the jury (see infra, §88), this preliminary issue of admissibility is decided by the trial judge. (See Ev.C. 310 [court determines issues of fact preliminary to admission of evidence as provided in Ev.C. 400 et seq., infra, §49 et seq.]; People v. Superior Court (Blakely) (1997) 60 C.A.4th 202, 209, footnote 6, 70 C.R.2d 388, citing the text; Rutter Group, 2 Civil Trials and Evidence §8:3375 et seq.; 1 McCormick 5th, §53; 9 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §2550; 20 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 453 [Preliminary Question of Fact for the Judge: The Standard of Proof for Pretrial Admissibility Problems].)

(2) Redetermination by Jury. In applying this basic rule, an important procedural question arises: When is the judge's determination of the sufficiency of the foundation final and when does the jury redetermine the issue in considering the evidence? Former California statutes were silent on the point, and the case law was meager and confused. One theory distinguished between questions of competency (exclusively for the judge) and relevancy (redetermined by the jury). The Commission chose the more practical solution of classifying all of the types of preliminary questions under one or the other head. (Ev.C. 402, 403, and Comments.) Thus, though a particular classification may be challenged and perhaps eventually changed, a reliable rule is provided for each situation.

(3) Summary of Code Provisions. The Code provisions establishing this procedure are as follows:

Ev.C. 400 and Ev.C. 401 define the terms (infra, §49).

Ev.C. 402(a) states that preliminary facts are determined as provided in Ev.C. 400 et seq.

Ev.C. 402(b) and Ev.C. 402(c) set forth the procedure of hearing and determination (infra, §§50, 51).

Ev.C. 403 lists the preliminary fact questions to be redetermined by the jury (infra, §52 et seq.).

Ev.C. 405 lists those finally determined by the judge (infra, §59 et seq.).

Ev.C. 404 deals specially with determination of the preliminary fact of tendency to incriminate, where the witness claims the self-incrimination privilege. (See 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §495.)

Ev.C. 403(a) and Ev.C. 405(a) allocate the burden of producing evidence and the burden of proof. (See 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Burden of Proof and Presumptions, §33; infra, §§52, 59, 62; and see generally People v. MacIntosh (1968) 264 C.A.2d 701, 707, 70 C.R. 667; People v. Citrino (1970) 11 C.A.3d 778, 783, 90 C.R. 80; People v. Hallman (1989) 215 C.A.3d 1330, 1340, 264 C.R. 215.)

(4) No Need for Formal Findings. Ev.C. 402(c) codifies the established rule that no formal findings are required in ordinary determinations of preliminary facts, and that a ruling on admissibility "implies whatever finding of fact is prerequisite thereto." (People v. Williams (1997) 16 C.4th 153, 196, 66 C.R.2d 123, 940 P.2d 710.) Thus, if the record contains any facts supporting the ruling, it will be upheld on appeal despite the judge's erroneous theory. (See Davey v. Southern Pac. Co. (1897) 116 C. 325, 329, 48 P. 117; D'Amico v. Board of Med. Examiners (1974) 11 C.3d 1, 19, 112 C.R. 786, 520 P.2d 10; J.B. Aguerre v. American Guarantee & Liab. Ins. Co. (1997) 59 C.A.4th 6, 15, 16, 68 C.R.2d 837; 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Appeal, §340 et seq.) (On abolition of findings and substitution of statement of decision, see 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §399.)

(5) Federal Rules of Evidence. The court must determine preliminary questions concerning the qualification of a person to be a witness, the existence of a privilege, or the admissibility of evidence. In making its determination, the court is not bound by the rules of evidence except those concerning privileges. (F.R. Evid., Rule 104(a).) When the relevancy of evidence depends on the fulfillment of a condition of fact, the court must admit the evidence subject to the introduction of evidence that fulfills the condition. (F.R. Evid., Rule 104(b)); see 1 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §24 et seq.; 29 Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §417; 23 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 77 [suggestions for revision of F.R. Evid., Rule 104]; 45 Am.Jur. Trials 1.)

IV. POWERS AND FUNCTIONS OF TRIAL JUDGE

D. Determination of Preliminary Facts.

1. In General.

b. Preliminary Fact and Proffered Evidence.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 49

[§ 49] Preliminary Fact and Proffered Evidence.

The Evidence Code provides a vocabulary for what is generally called "laying the foundation" for admissibility of particular evidence.

(1) Preliminary Fact. When the admissibility of evidence, including whether a person is qualified to be a witness and whether a privilege exists, depends on the existence of a fact, that fact is a "preliminary fact." (Ev.C. 400.)

(2) Proffered Evidence. When the admissibility of evidence depends on the existence of a preliminary fact, the evidence is proffered evidence. (Ev.C. 401.) This includes "the testimony to be elicited from a witness who is claimed to be disqualified, testimony or tangible evidence claimed to be privileged, and any other evidence to which objection is made." (Ev.C. 401, Comment.)

(3) Examples. In a search and seizure case, the validity of which rests on consent, the fruits of the search--the narcotics found--are the "proffered evidence"; consent to the search is the "preliminary fact." (People v. MacIntosh (1968) 264 C.A.2d 701, 708, 70 C.R. 667; see People v. Marshall (1996) 13 C.4th 799, 833, 55 C.R.2d 347, 919 P.2d 1280 [proffered evidence was photographs of reconstruction of homicide scene; finding that conditions represented in photographs were substantially similar to those prevailing at time of offense was preliminary fact].)

IV. POWERS AND FUNCTIONS OF TRIAL JUDGE

D. Determination of Preliminary Facts.

1. In General.

c. Hearing Outside Jury's Presence.

1. Ordinary Cases: Judge's Discretion.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 50

[§ 50] Ordinary Cases: Judge's Discretion.

(1) General Rule. Some types of preliminary facts should be determined outside the presence of the jury, to avoid the prejudicial effects of jurors actually hearing evidence ultimately excluded, or becoming aware of debatable grounds of admissibility. In other situations, the danger of prejudice is slight, and there is little need for this precaution. Accordingly, the prevailing practice, confirmed by the Code, places the matter within the judge's discretion. (Ev.C. 402(b) [court "may" hear matter outside presence of jury]; People v. Williams (1997) 16 C.4th 153, 196, 197, 66 C.R.2d 123, 940 P.2d 710; People v. Glen Arms Estate (1964) 230 C.A.2d 841, 864, 41 C.R. 303, citing the text; People v. Scherr (1969) 272 C.A.2d 165, 169, 77 C.R. 35, quoting the text [statements of defendant to psychiatrists, bearing on his mental condition--not a confession]; Mize v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1975) 46 C.A.3d 436, 120 C.R. 787.)

In Mize, supra, defendants claimed that they were foreclosed from making a necessary proof of privilege as a preliminary fact because the trial judge refused to allow counsel to approach the bench. Held: "Not so. Not only did counsel not indicate to the trial judge why he wished to approach the bench nor ask to present a preliminary matter in the absence of the jury but also he could have presented this evidence in the presence of the jury. Except in certain cases not here involved, Evidence Code section 402 authorizes the trial court to determine preliminary facts governing the admissibility of evidence either in or out of the presence of the jury." (46 C.A.3d 448, citing the text.)

(2) Exceptions. In a few instances, such as determining admissibility of a confession, the hearing must be out of the presence of the jury. (Ev.C. 402(b), infra, §51.) This exception also appears in the Federal Rules of Evidence: Hearings on the admissibility of confessions must be conducted out of the hearing of the jury, as must hearings on other preliminary matters when the interests of justice require, or when an accused is a witness and so requests. (F.R. Evid., Rule 104(c); see 1 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §32.)

In a criminal trial, if the judge ultimately determines that the evidence should be excluded, a jury hearing can be highly prejudicial. But where the judge decides that it is admissible, the fact that the jury heard proof of the preliminary fact cannot be prejudicial. (People v. Scherr, supra, 272 C.A.2d 170.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) General Rule. Where the defendant relies on a defense that is novel and there is a question as to whether there is sufficient evidence to support each element of the defense, a hearing under Ev.C. 402 is justified so that otherwise irrelevant and confusing matter is not placed before the jury. Necessity defenses, which are often novel, particularly risk the presentation of otherwise irrelevant and confusing evidence to the jury if the defense cannot be established. (People v. Galambos (2002) 104 C.A.4th 1147, 1158, 1159, 128 C.R.2d 844 [in prosecution for marijuana cultivation, trial judge did not abuse discretion in holding Ev.C. 402 hearing, where judge, prosecutor, and defense counsel all agreed that application of defendant's defenses (common law necessity and Proposition 215; see 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Public Peace and Welfare, §70) to a supplier of marijuana to a buyer's club was novel].)

See People v. Hoyos (2007) 41 C.4th 872, 897, 63 C.R.3d 1, 162 P.3d 528 [neither Ev.C. 402 nor federal due process required trial judge to hold hearing to determine admissibility of testimony by jailhouse informant; defendant's challenge to reliability of jailhouse informants generally went to weight of their testimony, not its admissibility]. West's Key Number Digest, Trial k.50

D. Determination of Preliminary Facts.

1. In General.

c. Hearing Outside Jury's Presence.

2. Mandatory Hearing Outside Jury's Presence.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 51

[§ 51] Mandatory Hearing Outside Jury's Presence.

(1) Criminal Defendant's Confession. In a criminal trial, the prejudicial effect of the jury listening to evidence on the voluntariness of a confession or incriminating admission that is ultimately excluded is obvious. Early California cases indicated that the usual discretion of the judge could be exercised. (See People v. Gonzales (1944) 24 C.2d 870, 875, 151 P.2d 251.) Ev.C. 402(b) repudiates this view: the court must hear and determine the question of the admissibility of a defendant's confession or admission out of the jury's presence if any party so requests. (See People v. Carroll (1970) 4 C.A.3d 52, 58, 84 C.R. 60, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §83; People v. Gutierrez (1993) 14 C.A.4th 1425, 1437, 18 C.R.2d 371 [harmless error]; F.R. Evid., Rule 104(c), supra, §50; 1 Wigmore (Tillers Rev.) §17.) The defendant may, however, in attacking the credibility of a confession found voluntary and admissible, offer to the jury any relevant evidence including matters presented to the judge in the preliminary hearing. (Ev.C. 406; see Ev.C. 402, Comment.)

(2) Other Circumstances. Ev.C. 1042(d) provides for a hearing outside the presence of the jury in determining whether to require disclosure of the identity of an informer. (See 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §319.) Moreover, such a hearing must be held on the validity of a prior conviction. (People v. Coffey (1967) 67 C.2d 204, 217, 60 C.R. 457, 430 P.2d 15; People v. Curtis (1969) 70 C.2d 347, 360, 74 C.R. 713, 450 P.2d 33, infra, §64; People v. Sumstine (1984) 36 C.3d 909, 923, 206 C.R. 707, 687 P.2d 904 [hearing must be held "in the fashion set forth in Coffey".])

IV. POWERS AND FUNCTIONS OF TRIAL JUDGE

D. Determination of Preliminary Facts.

2. Facts Redetermined by Jury.

a. In General.

1. Rule, Theory, and Procedure.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 52

[§ 52] Rule, Theory, and Procedure.

(1) Rule and Theory. In determining admissibility in cases in which the jury ultimately determines a preliminary fact (infra, §54 et seq.), the judge must admit the proffered evidence if any showing of preliminary facts is made "sufficient to sustain a finding" of their existence. (Ev.C. 403(a).) The judge cannot weigh the opponent's evidence and resolve the conflict against admissibility; this is the jury's function. The judge can only exclude the proffered evidence if the showing of preliminary facts is too weak to support a favorable determination by the jury. (Ev.C. 402, Comment; Ev.C. 403, Comment; on application of rule to prior act evidence, see People v. Simon (1986) 184 C.A.3d 125, 228 C.R. 855, infra, §55.)

The preliminary fact questions in this class of cases are those which have been "traditionally regarded as jury questions." They involve "the credibility of testimony or the probative value of evidence that is admitted on the ultimate issues. It is the jury's function to determine the effect and value of the evidence addressed to it. ... If the judge finally determined the existence or nonexistence of the preliminary fact, he would deprive a party of a jury decision on a question that the party has a right to have decided by the jury." (Ev.C. 403, Comment.) (See Granville v. Parsons (1968) 259 C.A.2d 298, 304, 66 C.R. 149, infra, §272; LeGrand v. Yellow Cab Co. (1970) 8 C.A.3d 125, 132, 87 C.R. 292.)

(2) Burden on Proponent. The proponent has "the burden of producing evidence as to the existence of the preliminary fact," which is accomplished by a showing sufficient to sustain a finding. (Ev.C. 403(a); see People v. Sanders (1995) 11 C.4th 475, 514, 46 C.R.2d 751, 905 P.2d 420 [trial judge properly required defendant to establish foundation regarding alleged collaboration between prison inmate and prosecution witness who identified defendant, before allowing cross-examination of witness on collateral issue of fabrication by witness and inmate of evidence about codefendant].)

(3) Conditional Admissibility. Except for the basic requirement of personal knowledge, which must be shown before testimony may be admitted over objection (Ev.C. 702, infra, §56), the judge may admit the proffered evidence conditionally, "subject to evidence of the preliminary fact being supplied later in the course of the trial." (Ev.C. 403(b); F.R. Evid., Rule 104(b), supra, §48.)

Interpretation of a written contract illustrates this rule. Extrinsic evidence may be offered to prove a meaning of which the language is reasonably susceptible. When objection is made to any item, the judge may not yet be in a position to determine whether, in the light of all of the evidence, that item will be admissible, or should be excluded as tending to prove a meaning of which the language is not reasonably susceptible. In such case, the judge may admit the item conditionally, either by reserving the ruling on the objection or admitting the item subject to a motion to strike.

(Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. G.W. Thomas Drayage & Rigging Co. (1968) 69 C.2d 33, 40, footnote 7, 69 C.R. 561, 442 P.2d 641; Gribaldo, Jacobs, Jones & Associates v. Agrippina Versicherungen A.G. (1970) 3 C.3d 434, 443, footnote 6, 91 C.R. 6, 476 P.2d 406.)

(1) Rule and Theory. See People v. Hinton (2006) 37 C.4th 839, 891, 38 C.R.3d 149, 126 P.3d 981 [trial judge properly found that adequate foundation had been laid for admission of statements, made by "E Money" to defendant's aunt over phone, that he had committed charged crimes; relevance of statements depended on preliminary fact that defendant was E Money, and there was sufficient evidence that this was true, notwithstanding that aunt denied it at trial]; People v. Guerra (2006) 37 C.4th 1067, 1119, 40 C.R.3d 118, 129 P.3d 321 [in capital murder prosecution, admission of substitute hamper for purposes of crime scene recreation was proper under Ev.C. 403(a); there was ample evidence from which jury could determine that substitute resembled original hamper under conditions substantially similar to those prevailing at time of murder]; People v. Herrera (2000) 83 C.A.4th 46, 62, 65, 98 C.R.2d 911 [trial judge properly admitted statement under coconspirator exception to hearsay rule (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §132 et seq.), where there was sufficient independent evidence to sustain jury finding that conspiracy existed at time statement was made]; People v. Jones (2003) 112 C.A.4th 341, 350, 4 C.R.3d 916 [where Compassionate Use Act defense is relied on (see 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Public Peace and Welfare, §70), if defendant produces sufficient evidence at Ev.C. 402 hearing to raise reasonable doubt as to whether defendant had physician's approval to use marijuana, then gate-keeping function of hearing is satisfied and defense should go to jury]; Islas v. D & G Mfg. Co. (2004) 120 C.A.4th 571, 578, 15 C.R.3d 559, quoting the text [in action by employee alleging that his employer's failure to provide operation guards on cutting machine caused him to lose two fingers, trial judge erred in determining under Ev.C. 405 (text, §59) that machine was not power press and that exception of Lab.C. 4558 to exclusive remedy rule of Workers' Compensation Act therefore was inapplicable; issue did not implicate evidentiary rule concerning unreliable evidence or matters of public policy and thus was factual question for jury].

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

IV. POWERS AND FUNCTIONS OF TRIAL JUDGE

D. Determination of Preliminary Facts.

2. Facts Redetermined by Jury.

a. In General.

2. Instructing Jury.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 53

[§ 53] Instructing Jury.

The proffered evidence is admitted on the judge's determination that a sufficient showing has been made to let it go to the jury; the jury must then make the final determination, and, if it finds, from a consideration of the showing by both parties, that the preliminary fact has not been established, it should disregard the proffered evidence. Must the jury be so instructed in all cases?

In some situations, the matter is so clear as to make an instruction superfluous: "For example, if the disputed preliminary fact is the authenticity of a deed, it hardly seems necessary to instruct the jury to disregard the deed if it should find that the deed is not genuine. No rational jury could find the deed to be spurious and, yet, to be still effective to transfer title from the purported grantor." (Ev.C. 403, Comment.)

In other situations, it is not quite so clear: "For example, the theory upon which agent's and co-conspirator's statements are admissible is that the party is vicariously responsible for the acts and statements of agents and co-conspirators within the scope of the agency or conspiracy. Yet, it is not always clear that statements made by a purported agent or co-conspirator should be disregarded if not made in furtherance of the agency or conspiracy. Hence, the jury should be instructed to disregard such statements unless it is persuaded that the statements were made within the scope of the agency or conspiracy." (Ev.C. 403, Comment.)

Hence, the judge may instruct the jury on its proper function: "to determine whether the preliminary fact exists and to disregard the proffered evidence unless the jury finds that the preliminary fact does exist." The instruction is mandatory on request of a party. (Ev.C. 403(c)(1).) If the judge subsequently determines that a jury could not reasonably find that the preliminary fact exists, he or she must instruct the jury to disregard the proffered evidence. (Ev.C. 403(c)(2).) (See People v. Simon (1986) 184 C.A.3d 125, 129, 228 C.R. 855, infra, §55.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See People v. Lewis (2001) 26 C.4th 334, 362, 110 C.R.2d 272, 28 P.3d 34 [in capital murder case in which defendant made no request to instruct jury that they must find witness had capacity to perceive and recollect before it could consider his testimony, trial judge had no sua sponte duty to do so; instruction would simply have told jury the obvious].

IV. POWERS AND FUNCTIONS OF TRIAL JUDGE

D. Determination of Preliminary Facts.

2. Facts Redetermined by Jury.

b. Relevancy.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 54

[§ 54] Relevancy.

(1) Rule. The first classification of preliminary fact questions ultimately determined by the jury deals with those situations in which the proffered evidence's relevance depends on the existence of the preliminary fact. (Ev.C. 403(a)(1).) If the judge admits the evidence, the jury must still consider its relevancy; but the judge will exclude it after finding the showing to be unsubstantial.

(2) Illustrations. In Alvarado v. Anderson (1959) 175 C.A.2d 166, 346 P.2d 73, a 15-year-old boy sued for injuries received in diving off the handrails of a highdiving platform from which the board had been removed for repairs. To support the defense of assumption of risk or contributory negligence (voluntary exposure to known danger), defendant offered to prove that a young girl would testify that another boy had yelled to plaintiff, "Tim, don't do that, you will never make it." The trial judge refused to permit the testimony, on a showing that there were many people present, and a great deal of noise, and it did not appear that plaintiff heard anyone yell. Held, there was no error in the ruling. The testimony was not material (relevant) unless the jury could have determined that plaintiff must have heard the yell; and whether the foundation evidence was sufficiently substantial was a matter within the judge's discretion. (175 C.A.2d 178.)

In People v. Lucas (1995) 12 C.4th 415, 48 C.R.2d 525, 907 P.2d 373, citing the text, the trial judge properly allowed inquiry into whether the defendant had his car cleaned after the alleged murder because this was a preliminary fact to showing guilty knowledge. However, because the defendant denied doing so and there was no other evidence to establish this preliminary fact, the judge should have instructed the jury to disregard the proffered evidence. (12 C.4th 467.)

In People v. Marshall (1996) 13 C.4th 799, 55 C.R.2d 347, 919 P.2d 1280, a murder trial, the judge applied the proper standard under Ev.C. 403(a)(1) in deciding to admit photographs of a reconstructed waterbed. The judge determined that the evidence was sufficient to permit the jury to find the preliminary fact (that the waterbed was set up as it had been at the time of the murder) true by a preponderance of the evidence. (13 C.4th 832.)

Other illustrations are:

(a) Statements of an alleged agent are admissible against the principal only if the preliminary fact of agency is shown. (See 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §120; Brea v. McGlashan (1934) 3 C.A.2d 454, 466, 39 P.2d 877 [order of proof may be varied; supra, §45].)

(b) Statements of an alleged coconspirator are admissible against other members only if the preliminary fact of conspiracy is shown. (See 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §132; People v. Steccone (1950) 36 C.2d 234, 238, 223 P.2d 17.)

(c) Impeachment of a witness by evidence of conviction of a felony depends on proof of the preliminary fact that the witness was the person so convicted. (Ev.C. 403, Comment; see infra, §296 et seq.)

(d) Introduction of prior act evidence may depend on establishing the actor's motive. (See People v. Simon (1986) 184 C.A.3d 125, 129, 228 C.R. 855, infra, §55.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Illustrations. See People v. Tafoya (2007) 42 C.4th 147, 165, 64 C.R.3d 163, 164 P.3d 590 [in capital murder case, trial judge did not err in ruling that defendant could not introduce evidence of prosecution witness' reputation for dangerousness; witness' reputation was relevant to defendant's claim of self-defense only if defendant knew of that reputation and was afraid of him, but defendant presented no evidence of that preliminary fact]; People v. Pizarro (2003) 110 C.A.4th 530, 546, 3 C.R.3d 21 [in murder case, prosecution provided insufficient foundation to establish relevancy of DNA evidence under Ev.C. 403(a); relevance depended on perpetrator's genetic profile and perpetrator's population, but reliance on defendant's personal traits added unproved traits to perpetrator's profile and rendered foundation illegitimate].

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

IV. POWERS AND FUNCTIONS OF TRIAL JUDGE

D. Determination of Preliminary Facts.

2. Facts Redetermined by Jury.

c. Prior Acts.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 55

[§ 55] Prior Acts.

In People v. Simon (1986) 184 C.A.3d 125, 228 C.R. 855, defendant was charged with second degree murder of a man he found in his girlfriend's apartment. The trial judge permitted the prosecution to refute defendant's claim of self-defense by introducing evidence of a prior incident in which defendant had pulled a gun on A, another man defendant found in the girlfriend's apartment. Held, conviction reversed.

(a) Evidence of a defendant's uncharged act is not admissible to show he had the criminal disposition or propensity to commit the crime charged (Ev.C. 1101(a)), but it is admissible under Ev.C. 1101(b) if it has a tendency to prove or disprove a disputed material fact, is not merely cumulative, and the trial judge determines that its probative value outweighs its prejudicial effect. (184 C.A.3d 129; see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §74 et seq.) Ev.C. 1101(b) has been interpreted to allow the admission of "other act" evidence that tends to negate a defendant's claim of self-defense. (184 C.A.3d 129, citing People v. Wells (1949) 33 C.2d 330, 341, 342, 202 P.2d 53, and People v. Sam (1969) 71 C.2d 194, 206, 77 C.R. 804, 454 P.2d 700, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §86.)

(b) Defendant's motive in assaulting A is a critical preliminary factual issue which must be resolved before proof of the incident can be deemed admissible. If, as defendant contends, his assault on A was motivated by the desire to keep his girlfriend away from a drug dealer, the incident is not relevant to probe any disputed factual issue in the case. However, if the assault on A was motivated by jealousy, the two incidents are sufficiently similar to suggest that defendant was the aggressor, thereby negating his self-defense claim. (184 C.A.3d 130; see supra, §54.)

(c) Ev.C. 403(a)(4) provides that, when the proffered evidence is of the conduct of a particular person and the preliminary fact is whether that person so conducted himself, (1) the proponent of the proffered evidence has the burden of producing evidence as to the existence of the preliminary fact, and (2) the proffered evidence is inadmissible unless the trial judge finds there is evidence sufficient to sustain a finding of the existence of the preliminary fact. Ev.C. 403(c)(1) goes on to state that if the trial judge admits the proffered evidence he may, and on request must, instruct the jury to determine whether the preliminary fact exists and to disregard the proffered evidence unless the jury finds that the preliminary fact does exist (see supra, §53). (184 C.A.3d 131.)

(d) The prejudice to defendant from the failure of the judge to give the Ev.C. 403(c)(1) instruction was compounded by the misleading nature of its CALJIC, No. 2.50 instruction telling the jury that evidence of the incident was admitted for the limited purpose of demonstrating defendant's intent and motive. (See 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §75.) This "limiting" instruction could only confuse the jury because it failed to acknowledge the disputed factual issue, thereby suggesting that evidence of the incident was probative of defendant's intent and motive regardless of which version of the facts the jury decided to accept. The instruction is doubly confusing because, even if the prosecution's version is accepted, the incident does not demonstrate defendant's intent or motive but merely tends to negate one proffered motivation, i.e., defendant's claim of self-defense. (184 C.A.3d 131.)

(e) On retrial, the standard of proof to be utilized by both the trial judge and the jury in making their respective preliminary fact evaluations is the preponderance of evidence. (184 C.A.3d 132; see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §80.) Accordingly, the trial judge should first determine whether the evidence of the incident with A is sufficient to allow the jury to determine by a preponderance standard that defendant's assault was motivated by jealousy. If so, the judge may, and if requested must, instruct the jury that unless it determines by a preponderance of the evidence that defendant's motivation was jealousy, it must disregard the evidence of the incident. (184 C.A.3d 134.)

[§ 56] Knowledge of Witness.

Another classification of ultimate jury questions deals with the preliminary fact of a witness' personal knowledge concerning the subject matter of his or her testimony. (Ev.C. 403(a)(2); see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §46.) This includes the requirement of personal perception of a lay witness giving a permissible opinion. (Ev.C. 800(a), 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Opinion Evidence, §4.)

Personal knowledge may be shown by any competent evidence, and it is ordinarily sufficient for the witness to testify to his or her observation of the facts. (See Ev.C. 702(b), and Comment [witness' own testimony may show personal knowledge].) But the requirement is an exception to the rule that the proffered evidence may be received conditionally, subject to later proof of the preliminary fact (supra, §52): "Against the objection of a party, such personal knowledge must be shown before the witness may testify concerning the matter." (Ev.C. 702(a); see People v. Rodriguez (1999) 20 C.4th 1, 10, 82 C.R.2d 413, 971 P.2d 618, infra, §340 [proffered impeachment testimony did not demonstrate impeaching witness' personal knowledge about whether witness to be impeached had done what he claimed to have done; impeachment testimony was properly excluded].)

e. Authenticity of Writing.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 57

[§ 57] Authenticity of Writing.

Another classification of ultimate jury questions covers the preliminary fact of "authenticity of a writing." (Ev.C. 403(a)(3); on distinguishable exemplar cases, see infra, §65.) Whatever method of authentication is used (see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Documentary Evidence, §7 et seq.), the judge must make the preliminary, but not the final, determination of authenticity; i.e., the judge cannot exclude the writing if there is any sufficient evidence to support its authenticity:

"For example, if the question of A's title to land is in issue, A may seek to prove his title by a deed from former owner O. Section 1401 requires that the deed be authenticated, and the judge, under Section 403, must rule on the question of authentication. If A introduces evidence sufficient to sustain a finding of the genuineness of the deed, the judge is required to admit it. If the rule were otherwise and the judge, on the basis of the adverse party's evidence, were permitted to decide that the deed was spurious and not admissible, the judge would be resolving the basic factual issue in the case and A would be deprived of a jury finding on the issue, even though he is entitled to a jury decision and even though he has introduced evidence sufficient to warrant a jury finding in his favor." (Ev.C. 403, Comment.) (On authentication of tape recording, see infra, §148.)

IV. POWERS AND FUNCTIONS OF TRIAL JUDGE

D. Determination of Preliminary Facts.

2. Facts Redetermined by Jury.

f. Identity of Hearsay Declarant.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 58

[§ 58] Identity of Hearsay Declarant.

The final classification of ultimate jury questions deals with proffered evidence of a hearsay statement or other conduct of a particular person. The preliminary fact is "whether that person made the statement or so conducted himself." (Ev.C. 403(a)(4).) This provision involves a subtle distinction, explained by the Commission as follows:

The various conditions for admissibility of hearsay under an exception, imposed to exclude untrustworthy statements, deal with competency of evidence, and determination of existence of these conditions is made by the judge alone. (See infra, §63.) But competency is not the sole issue: It is necessary to determine whether the declarant actually made the statement (its "authenticity"), for if not, the proffered evidence is irrelevant. In the case of some hearsay exceptions, for example, admissions of a party in a civil case (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §90 et seq.) and inconsistent statements of a witness (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §156), the only controversial issue is whether the party or witness made the statement; i.e., the preliminary fact to be determined is the identity of the hearsay declarant. Hence, competency questions (conditions of a hearsay exception) are exclusively for the judge under Ev.C. 405, but the relevancy question of identity of the declarant is to be ultimately resolved by the jury. (Ev.C. 403, Comment; Ev.C. 405, Comment.)

IV. POWERS AND FUNCTIONS OF TRIAL JUDGE

D. Determination of Preliminary Facts.

3. Facts Finally Determined by Judge.

a. In General.

1. Rule, Theory, and Procedure.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 59

[§ 59] Rule, Theory, and Procedure.

(1) Rule and Theory. If the purpose of an exclusionary rule is to keep evidence from the jury "because it is too unreliable to be evaluated properly or because public policy requires its exclusion" (Ev.C. 405, Comment), the judge finally determines the preliminary facts by considering the evidence of both the proponent and the opponent; the jury is not permitted to redetermine the issue. (Ev.C. 405.)

The Evidence Code refers to this large group of situations in general terms: "preliminary fact determinations not governed by Section 403 or 404" (Ev.C. 405), but the Comment to Ev.C. 405 contains a specific listing of the important ones (see infra, §61 et seq.).

(2) Burden of Producing Evidence and Burden of Proof. When the existence of a preliminary fact is disputed, the court must indicate which party has the burden of producing evidence and the burden of proof on the issue. Who has the burden depends on established case law governing particular exclusionary rules. (Ev.C. 405(a).) The Comment to Ev.C. 405 gives two common instances:

(a) Ev.C. 1200 indicates that the burden of proof is usually on the proponent of the evidence to show that the proffered evidence is within a hearsay exception. Thus, if the disputed preliminary fact is whether the proffered statement was spontaneous, as required by Ev.C. 1240, the proponent would have the burden of persuading the judge that the statement was spontaneous.

(b) The privilege rules usually place the burden of proof on the objecting party to show that a privilege is applicable. Thus, if the disputed preliminary fact is whether a person is married to a party, hence, whether their confidential communications are privileged under Ev.C. 980, the party asserting the privilege has the burden of persuading the judge that the marriage existed.

(3) Final Determination by Judge. The court must determine the existence or nonexistence of the preliminary fact and must admit or exclude the proffered evidence as required by the rule of law under which the question arises. (Ev.C. 405(a).) In other words, if the judge is persuaded by the party with the burden of proof, he or she finds in favor of that party in regard to the preliminary fact and either admits or excludes the proffered evidence as required by the rule of law under which the question arises. Otherwise, the judge finds against that party on the preliminary fact and either admits or excludes the proffered evidence as required. (Ev.C. 405, Comment.) (See also F.R. Evid., Rule 104(a), supra, §48.)

D. Determination of Preliminary Facts.

3. Facts Finally Determined by Judge.

a. In General.

2. Preliminary Fact Also in Issue.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 60

[§ 60] Preliminary Fact Also in Issue.

If the factual issue that the judge decides to determine admissibility of proffered evidence is the same one that the jury considers in determining the merits of the action, it would be seriously prejudicial for the jury to learn how the judge decided that issue. The Code therefore prohibits the judge from informing the jury of this determination "as to the existence or nonexistence of the preliminary fact." (Ev.C. 405(b)(1).)

The coinciding of preliminary fact and fact in issue in no way changes the rule of finality of the judge's determination of preliminary fact. Thus, where the proffered evidence is admitted, the jury must not be given the instruction to disregard it if they reach a different determination. (Ev.C. 405(b)(2).) As the Commission says: "The rules of admissibility being applied by the judge under Section 405 are designed to withhold evidence from the jury because it is too unreliable to be evaluated properly or because public policy requires its exclusion. The policies underlying these rules are served only by the exclusion of the evidence. No valid public or evidentiary purpose is served by submitting the admissibility question again to the jury. For example, the interspousal testimonial privilege ... exists to preclude a spouse from being involuntarily compelled to testify against the other spouse. The privilege serves its purpose only if the spouse does not testify. The harm the privilege is designed to prevent has occurred if the spouse testifies." (Ev.C. 405, Comment.)

[§ 61] Competency of Witness.

Although credibility of a witness is a jury question (see infra, §88), the witness' competency to testify is determined exclusively by the judge. 3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 62

[§ 62] Privilege of Witness.

Whether a witness may claim a privilege to refuse to testify is determined solely by the trial judge. (Ev.C. 405, Comment.)

Two different burdens of proof may be involved: First, the burden is on the party claiming the privilege to prove the preliminary facts of its existence. (See Ev.C. 405, Comment; Tanzola v. De Rita (1955) 45 C.2d 1, 6, 285 P.2d 897; People v. Velasquez (1987) 192 C.A.3d 319, 328, 237 C.R. 366.) Second, if the privilege is conceded or proved, but the proponent of the proffered evidence claims that one of the numerous exceptions applies, the burden is on the proponent to show the exception. (See Ev.C. 405, Comment; Wellpoint Health Networks v. Superior Court (1997) 59 C.A.4th 110, 123, 124, 68 C.R.2d 844.)

IV. POWERS AND FUNCTIONS OF TRIAL JUDGE

D. Determination of Preliminary Facts.

3. Facts Finally Determined by Judge.

d. Hearsay.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 63

[§ 63] Hearsay.

(1) General Principle. The identity of the hearsay declarant ("authenticity" of the statement) is governed by Ev.C. 403; in other words, the judge's preliminary determination is subject to redetermination by the jury. (See supra, §58.) But the conditions of admissibility, designed to exclude untrustworthy hearsay, are determined finally by the judge, and the proponent has the burden of proving them. (Ev.C. 405, Comment; on hearsay exceptions, see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §51 et seq.)

(2) Confessions, Criminal Admissions, Dying Declarations and Spontaneous Exclamations. Former California cases established the policy of redetermination of the conditions of admissibility by the jury of such issues as the voluntariness of a confession or admission by a defendant accused of crime, the sense of impending death of the victim who made a dying declaration, and the conditions of excitement and timeliness which justified proof of a spontaneous exclamation. Ev.C. 405 thus works a substantial change in the law. (See 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §§83, 173 et seq., 186 et seq.; People v. Stroud (1969) 273 C.A.2d 670, 674, 78 C.R. 270; People v. Carroll (1970) 4 C.A.3d 52, 58, 84 C.R. 60, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §83; People v. Chapman (1975) 50 C.A.3d 872, 879, 123 C.R. 862 [type of preliminary factual question to be decided by trial judge under Ev.C. 405 includes trustworthiness of admission against penal interest; judge may consider circumstances under which declaration was uttered and may analyze declarant's possible motivation and relationship to defendant]; Vorse v. Sarasy (1997) 53 C.A.4th 998, 1011, 1012, 62 C.R.2d 164 [disagreeing with People v. Chapman, to extent it suggests that, in weighing probative value under Ev.C. 352, trial judge necessarily considers credibility of witness who testifies to proffered evidence].)

The Comment to Ev.C. 405 makes this distinction:

"Of course, Section 405 does not prevent the presentation of any evidence to the jury that is relevant to the reliability of the hearsay statement. ... Thus, a party may present evidence of the circumstances under which a confession, dying declaration, or spontaneous statement was made where such evidence is relevant to the credibility of the statement, even though such evidence may duplicate to some degree the evidence presented to the court on the issue of admissibility. But the jury's sole concern is the truth or falsity of the facts stated, not the admissibility of the statement."

IV. POWERS AND FUNCTIONS OF TRIAL JUDGE

D. Determination of Preliminary Facts.

3. Facts Finally Determined by Judge.

e. Validity of Prior Conviction.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 64

[§ 64] Validity of Prior Conviction.

The validity of a prior conviction charged against a defendant may be challenged on constitutional grounds, usually denial of the right to counsel in the prior trial. (See infra, §300.) The objection is as fundamental as that made to an involuntary confession, and, as in the case of the challenge to a confession (supra, §63), the issue should be determined by the judge, in a pretrial hearing outside the presence of the jury. (People v. Coffey (1967) 67 C.2d 204, 217, 60 C.R. 457, 430 P.2d 15, infra, §300 [specifying procedure in the hearing]; People v. Curtis (1969) 70 C.2d 347, 360, 74 C.R. 713, 450 P.2d 33; People v. Sumstine (1984) 36 C.3d 909, 923, 206 C.R. 707, 687 P.2d 904 [hearing must be held "in the fashion set forth in Coffey"]; People v. Nugent (1971) 18 C.A.3d 911, 914, 96 C.R. 209.)

In People v. Curtis, supra, defendant did not raise the question before trial, hence, there was no pretrial hearing. Instead, he objected, during his direct examination, when the prior was offered for impeachment. But the same rule governs: "California policy clearly requires the question of the constitutionality of a prior conviction to be determined by the court and not by the jury. That the issue arises during and not before trial, so long as the objection is asserted before the case is submitted to the jury, appears to be without significance. Thus if defendant attacks the constitutionality of the first prior on retrial, a hearing outside the presence of the jury as outlined in Coffey will be the appropriate means of determination." (70 C.2d 360.)

In People v. Nugent, supra, the trial judge held a hearing to determine whether three prior felony convictions alleged against defendant were constitutionally valid. After the prosecutor produced records that made a prima facie showing that defendant had been given the assistance of counsel, defendant testified that he had received only perfunctory representation. His testimony was uncontradicted and the prosecutor introduced no further evidence. The judge then ruled that there was no constitutional impairment as to the priors. Held, no error. Neither Ev.C. 550 nor its accompanying Law Revision Commission Comment on the burden of producing evidence (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Burden of Proof and Presumptions, §§2, 4) required the prosecutor to offer evidence in reply to defendant's testimony. When the prosecutor decided not to present further proof, he risked an adverse decision if the trial judge had given credence to the evidence defendant presented. But if the judge disbelieved defendant's evidence, the prosecutor's prima facie showing was sufficient. The conflicting evidence created a factual issue that the judge resolved. (18 C.A.3d 915.)

D. Determination of Preliminary Facts.

3. Facts Finally Determined by Judge.

f. Other Situations.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 65

[§ 65] Other Situations.

(1) Opinion on Sanity or Handwriting. A lay witness' opinion on a person's sanity is admissible on proof of the preliminary fact of the witness' intimate acquaintance or other qualification. (Ev.C. 870, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Opinion Evidence, §7.) Similarly, a lay witness may give an opinion on a person's handwriting after proof of the preliminary fact of personal knowledge of the writing. (Ev.C. 1416, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Documentary Evidence, §11.) In either case, "the expertise of the witness on that limited subject" is involved, and it is determined in the same manner as the qualification of an expert, by the judge alone. (Ev.C. 405, Comment.)

(2) Comparison of Handwriting. Where an exemplar is used to compare with disputed handwriting, the preliminary fact of genuineness of the exemplar is determined by the judge alone. (Ev.C. 1417, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Documentary Evidence, §15; Ev.C. 405, Comment.)

(3) Admissions During Compromise Negotiations. These, formerly admissible in California, are now excluded (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §143). The burden, however, is on the objecting party to prove the preliminary fact that an admission--otherwise good evidence--occurred during the negotiations. (Ev.C. 405, Comment.)

(4) Negating Felony Conviction Used To Impeach. Proof of the fact of conviction, i.e., the identity of the witness as the convicted person, is ultimately a jury issue (see supra, §54), but proof of a pardon or dismissal, negating the effect of the conviction (see infra, §293), is a matter for the judge. (Ev.C. 405, Comment.)

(5) Best Evidence Rule. The burden was on the proponent offering secondary evidence to prove the preliminary fact necessary for an exception to the former best evidence rule, e.g., writing lost or destroyed, or under control of the opponent (former Ev.C. 1501 et seq., 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Documentary Evidence, §27 et seq.). The issue was determined by the judge alone. (Ev.C. 405, Comment [same is true of proof of photographic copy of writing under Ev.C. 1550, 1551]; see Cotton v. Hudson (1941) 42 C.A.2d 812, 815, 110 P.2d 70; Osswald v. Anderson (1996) 49 C.A.4th 812, 819, 820, 57 C.R.2d 23.) Former Ev.C. 1501 et seq. were repealed and replaced in 1998 by Ev.C. 1520 et seq., which create a "secondary evidence rule." (See 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Documentary Evidence, §31 et seq.) Instead of determining the applicability of an exception to the best evidence rule, the judge now must determine whether grounds for the exclusion of secondary evidence exist. (See Ev.C. 1521(a), 1522(a).)

F.R. Evid., Rule 1008, reads as follows: "When the admissibility of other evidence of contents of writings, recordings, or photographs under these rules depends upon the fulfillment of a condition of fact, the question whether the condition has been fulfilled is ordinarily for the court to determine in accordance with the provisions of rule 104. However, when an issue is raised (a) whether the asserted writing ever existed, or (b) whether another writing, recording, or photograph produced at the trial is the original, or (c) whether other evidence of contents correctly reflects the contents, the issue is for the trier of fact to determine as in the case of other issues of fact." (See 5 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §588 et seq.; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §1058.)

(6) Integration of Contract. The question whether a contract is integrated, and therefore within the parol evidence rule, is for the judge to decide. (Brawthen v. H & R Block (1975) 52 C.A.3d 139, 146, 124 C.R. 845; Esbensen v. Userware Int. (1992) 11 C.A.4th 631, 638, footnote 4, 14 C.R.2d 93.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

IV. POWERS AND FUNCTIONS OF TRIAL JUDGE

E. Inherent Power To Preclude Evidence.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 66

[§ 66] Inherent Power To Preclude Evidence.

In Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co. v. Superior Court (1988) 200 C.A.3d 272, 245 C.R. 873, the Corporation Commissioner brought a professional malpractice action in the name of the People against an accounting firm. After complicated proceedings, the trial judge made an order precluding defendant from controverting certain evidence, observing that the history of the case disclosed breach of an attorney-client relationship and placed "a cloud of suspicion over the litigation process." (200 C.A.3d 283.) Held, the order was not an abuse of discretion.

(a) The contention that the preclusion order was tantamount to a dismissal is incorrect; although onerous, it does not amount to a summary adjudication of the issues, and the People must still present evidence on these issues to satisfy their burden of proof. (200 C.A.3d 286.)

(b) "The real question in this case is whether a California trial court has the inherent power to preclude evidence to cure abuses or overreaching involving confidential information, such as the merger with one's opponents' expert. We conclude the trial courts do indeed have such inherent power and do not need a specific statutory authorization to prevent injustice by excluding certain evidence." (200 C.A.3d 286.)

(1) The inherent powers of the court, independent of statute, to control and prevent abuses in the use of their process, have been recognized in many cases. (200 C.A.3d 287; see 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Courts, §177.)

(2) This power extends to the preclusion of evidence; and even without such abuses the trial court has broad authority over the admission and exclusion of evidence. In exercising the power to preclude evidence, the courts generally employ a motion in limine. (200 C.A.3d 288, quoting the text.)

(3) The power to preclude has been exercised in cases involving destruction of evidence, but it is not limited to such cases: "Peat Marwick's conduct in this case, as the trial court found, has seriously damaged the People's case. Faced with this sort of abuse of the litigation process, the trial court may act to prevent the taking of an unfair advantage and to preserve the integrity of the judicial system. The court may invoke its inherent power to preclude a party's evidence on those aspects of its opponent's case which would have been presented in court by the non-compromised expert witness." (200 C.A.3d 289.)

(4) This conclusion finds support in numerous cases disqualifying law firms to prevent an unfair advantage or to avoid the appearance of impropriety, or disqualifying or enjoining the use of parties' experts for similar reasons. (200 C.A.3d 289.)

(c) A preclusion order does not infringe on a litigant's right to due process: "We cannot accept the notion that due process of law entitles a litigant to present certain evidence after it has compromised its opponent's ability to counter that evidence with the sort of litigation abuse found in this case." (200 C.A.3d 290.) Such orders have also been upheld in the "higher-stakes context of a criminal trial." (200 C.A.3d 290, citing Washington v. Texas (1967) 388 U.S. 14, 87 S.Ct. 1920, 18 L.Ed.2d 1019, supra, §5, United States v. Nobles (1975) 422 U.S. 225, 95 S.Ct. 2160, 45 L.Ed.2d 141, and Taylor v. Illinois (1988) 484 U.S. 400, 108 S.Ct. 646, 98 L.Ed.2d 798, supra, §8.)

(d) The contention, based on discovery cases, that preclusion is a "drastic" sanction that cannot be imposed unless lesser sanctions have failed, is unsound: The evidence preclusion order was not a discovery sanction. (200 C.A.3d 291.) "The court's action is thoughtful, well tailored to the evidence and eminently sound. Of course, we only hold the order was not an abuse of discretion in this case, and do not purport to establish criteria for the entry of preclusion orders in different factual contexts." (200 C.A.3d 292.) (Cf. Continental Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1995) 32 C.A.4th 94, 108, 37 C.R.2d 843 [in denying defendants' motion to disqualify plaintiffs' counsel, trial judge abused his discretion in attaching condition that plaintiffs not call witness that counsel had contacted; even if witness (a former employee of one defendant) thought counsel was representing defendant, there was no evidence counsel knowingly made false statements to him].)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

IV. POWERS AND FUNCTIONS OF TRIAL JUDGE

F. Restriction of Cumulative Evidence.

1. Nature of Power.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 67

[§ 67] Nature of Power.

The trial judge may exclude relevant evidence if its probative value is substantially outweighed by the probability that it will consume too much time or confuse the issues. (Ev.C. 352, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §17 et seq.) This recognizes an inherent power of the court to limit the introduction of cumulative evidence or repetitive questioning of witnesses. (See Estate of Wineteer (1917) 176 C. 28, 30, 167 P. 516 [refusal to allow more than four or five depositions of nonexpert witnesses on sanity of deceased]; People v. Mincey (1992) 2 C.4th 408, 439, 6 C.R.2d 822, 827 P.2d 388 [trial court properly excluded cumulative evidence of child abuse inflicted by defendant's girlfriend]; Phenegar v. Paolini (1915) 27 C.A. 381, 391, 149 P. 1008 [further examination properly stopped where exhaustive examination disclosed witness had no definite recollection of contents of letter]; Weller v. Chavarria (1965) 233 C.A.2d 234, 247, 43 C.R. 364, citing the text; People v. Vaughn (1968) 262 C.A.2d 42, 48, 68 C.R. 366, citing the text; Vossler v. Richards Mfg. Co. (1983) 143 C.A.3d 952, 960, 192 C.R. 219 [long trial, proper limitation of cross-examination of plaintiff's witness on subject already well covered by defendant]; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§1865, 1907, 1908; 5 A.L.R.3d 169 [limiting number of witnesses in civil case]; 5 A.L.R.3d 238 [same, criminal case]; 17 A.L.R.3d 327 [limiting number of character or reputation witnesses]; cf. People v. Filson (1994) 22 C.A.4th 1841, 1850, 28 C.R.2d 335, infra, §122 [defendant's tape-recorded statement made shortly after arrest could not be excluded as cumulative; at time of exclusion, arresting officer had not yet testified, so there was no evidence to which the recording could be cumulative]; on problem presented by voluminous unorganized exhibits in "big" cases, see 64 Harv. L. Rev. 497.)

The exclusion of cumulative relevant evidence in the trial judge's discretion, to avoid wasting time, should be sharply distinguished from the exclusion of evidence on an uncontested issue. Such evidence is irrelevant, and must be excluded; the judge has no discretion to admit it. (Fuentes v. Tucker (1947) 31 C.2d 1, 7, 187 P.2d 752, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §10; People v. Hall (1980) 28 C.3d 143, 152, 167 C.R. 844, 616 P.2d 826.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

IV. POWERS AND FUNCTIONS OF TRIAL JUDGE

F. Restriction of Cumulative Evidence.

2. Limitations on Power.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 68

[§ 68] Limitations on Power.

(1) Designation of Issues at Pretrial Conference. The older cases speak of the power of the trial judge in civil cases to designate the issues of fact raised by the pleadings. (See Pastene v. Pardini (1902) 135 C. 431, 433, 67 P. 681 [party can urge error in limitation without further attempt to offer evidence on excluded issue].) Today, the elimination of noncontroversial matters usually takes place in the pretrial conference culminating in a pretrial order. Thus, designation of issues will be mainly the work of the pretrial judge, who may not be the trial judge. (See 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §§52, 55; 22 A.L.R.2d 599.) Hence, the trial judge's power should be exercised to reduce cumulative evidence on those issues, and not, ordinarily, to restrict the issues.

(2) Improper Restriction for Reasons of Delicacy or Expedition. The power must be exercised within the scope of its purpose, namely, the speedy and efficient conduct of a fair trial; the judge cannot exclude a substantial part of the relevant evidence (e.g., under the former divorce law in which fault was material) for reasons of delicacy or expedition. (See supra, §3.)

(3) Improper Exclusion of More Probative Evidence. In People v. Carter (1957) 48 C.2d 737, 312 P.2d 665, a murder trial, the prosecution showed that when officers came to question defendant, he attempted suicide (inference of guilty mind). He had written a suicide note before the murder, with no reason given; later, he made a statement to the district attorney and testified at the trial, giving as his reason the fear of imprisonment as a parole violator, for passing bad checks. In this background, he sought to introduce testimony of Dr. L., attending him when he made the attempt, that he had spoken of this fear and made no mention of the murder or the victim. Held, the doctor's testimony was erroneously excluded. "Although cumulative in the sense that it was identical in subject matter with this other evidence, the testimony was not cumulative in respect to its evidentiary weight. The jury would be more inclined to believe an explanation given immediately after the attempted suicide, when defendant thought he was going to die, than the same explanation given at a time when hope of life had returned and the opportunity for fabrication intervened. Defendant's suicide note to his uncle before the attack on [the victim] was some evidence of motivation for his attempted suicide other than guilty knowledge of the attack. Since the note was written before the attack, however, it could not be so persuasive evidence as the statement to [the doctor]. The note made no mention of the bad checks or any other particular reason for suicide. The reason for the exclusion of merely cumulative evidence, that its slight probative value is outweighed by the disadvantages of confusing the jury and obscuring the fundamental issues ... fails in the present case because the probative value of the excluded testimony was greater than that of the other evidence introduced on the same issue." (48 C.2d 749.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

IV. POWERS AND FUNCTIONS OF TRIAL JUDGE

G. Limitations on Number of Experts.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 69

[§ 69] Limitations on Number of Experts.

The court may, at any time before or during the trial, limit the number of expert witnesses to be called by any party. (Ev.C. 723; see 5 A.L.R.3d 169, 224.)

In Horn v. General Motors Corp. (1976) 17 C.3d 359, 131 C.R. 78, 551 P.2d 398, a personal injury case, defendants called four experts who gave their opinions on the movements plaintiff's body must have made on impact and uniformly concluded that she could not have struck the center area of the automobile steering wheel as she claimed. The trial court then refused to allow defendants to introduce the same expert opinion evidence by a fifth expert who was an employee of defendant manufacturer. Held, no error. The testimony was cumulative and the trial court has discretion to refuse to admit cumulative evidence, as well as to limit the number of expert witnesses. (17 C.3d 371, citing the text.) (See Scalere v. Stenson (1989) 211 C.A.3d 1446, 1454, 260 C.R. 152 [trial court properly exercised its discretion in limiting plaintiff's second medical expert witness to any "area that hasn't been gone into"].)

This power was given a questionable application in Clyne v. Brock (1947) 82 C.A.2d 958, 188 P.2d 263. Counsel for both parties, at the judge's suggestion, allowed the judge to choose a handwriting expert. The expert's testimony was completely adverse to appellants. Appellants then asked permission to call another expert of their own selection, which was refused. The refusal was upheld on the ground that appellants had acquiesced in the court's choice, "gambled on his testimony and lost." (82 C.A.2d 963.) It would seem, however, that appellants had a right to call their own expert in addition to the one appointed. (See F.R. Evid., Rule 706(d) [nothing in Rule 706, which provides for court-appointed experts, limits the parties in calling expert witnesses of their own selection].)

IV. POWERS AND FUNCTIONS OF TRIAL JUDGE

H. Restriction of Rebuttal Evidence.

1. Civil Cases.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 70

[§ 70] Civil Cases.

After the plaintiff and defendant have presented their cases in chief, they may offer rebutting evidence only. The court may, however, "for good reason, in furtherance of justice," permit them to offer evidence on their original case. (C.C.P. 607(6).)

Thus, although the court has great discretion to allow cumulative evidence in rebuttal, the normal practice is to exclude it. (See Pontecorvo v. Clark (1928) 95 C.A. 162, 179, 272 P. 591 [ordinarily "it is improper to allow witnesses to reiterate the testimony previously given by them in the original case under the guise of rebuttal"]; Malone v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp. (1925) 72 C.A. 736, 739, 238 P. 110 [plaintiff, having anticipated a defense in his case in chief, was properly precluded from covering same ground in rebuttal]; Lipman v. Ashburn (1951) 106 C.A.2d 616, 620, 235 P.2d 627 ["a party who has the affirmative may not reserve a portion of his evidence until the opposite party has exhausted his to negative that offered in the first instance"]; People v. Donovan (1962) 57 C.2d 346, 357, 19 C.R. 473, 369 P.2d 1 [condemnation suit]; Diamond Springs Lime Co. v. American River Constructors (1971) 16 C.A.3d 581, 604, 94 C.R. 200 [leave to reopen case to present rebuttal evidence properly denied; "new theory" claim not tenable]; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1873; on practice in offering rebuttal evidence, see supra, §42.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

IV. POWERS AND FUNCTIONS OF TRIAL JUDGE

H. Restriction of Rebuttal Evidence.

2. Criminal Cases.

a. Improper Rebuttal by Prosecution.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 71

[§ 71] Improper Rebuttal by Prosecution.

P.C. 1093(d) states the same rule as C.C.P. 607(6), supra, §70: Only rebuttal evidence is allowed after the parties have presented their cases in chief, unless the trial court allows otherwise for good reason.

In People v. Carter (1957) 48 C.2d 737, 312 P.2d 665, a murder case, the prosecution theory was that defendant had killed the victim with a wrench, and had left the wrench, the victim's wallet and his own red cap in a certain slough. Defendant denied that he had been to the slough or had left anything there. The prosecution, in rebuttal, introduced the red cap, giving no reason for failure to offer it in the case in chief. In reversing the judgment on other grounds, the court expressed disapproval of this tactic and gave the following explanation of the rule:

"In a sense all evidence that tends to establish the defendant's guilt over his protestations of innocence rebuts the defendant's case, but it is not all rebuttal evidence. ... The purpose of the restriction ... is to assure an orderly presentation of evidence so that the trier of fact will not be confused; to prevent a party from unduly magnifying certain evidence by dramatically introducing it late in the trial; and to avoid any unfair surprise that may result when a party who thinks he has met his opponent's case is suddenly confronted at the end of trial with an additional piece of crucial evidence. Thus proper rebuttal evidence does not include a material part of the case in the prosecution's possession that tends to establish the defendant's commission of the crime. It is restricted to evidence made necessary by the defendant's case in the sense that he has introduced new evidence or made assertions that were not implicit in his denial of guilt. ... A defendant's reiterated denial of guilt and the principal facts that purportedly establish it does not justify the prosecution's introduction of new evidence to establish that which defendant would clearly have denied from the start." (48 C.2d 753.) (See People v. Daniels (1991) 52 C.3d 815, 859, 860, 277 C.R. 122, 802 P.2d 906 [quoting from People v. Carter; rebuttal testimony relating statements by defendant that amounted to admission of guilt should have been raised in prosecution's case in chief, hence, were improper].)

In People v. Castro (1960) 182 C.A.2d 255, 5 C.R. 906, defendant, in 1956, was charged with murder and a prior conviction of burglary in Montana in 1955. Several successive judges found doubt as to his present sanity, and he was committed to the state hospital and returned several times. When finally tried, he admitted the prior conviction and was found guilty of voluntary manslaughter. On the subsequent trial of the issue of sanity, the prosecution called an expert to prove by a photograph and fingerprint comparison that defendant had been found guilty of burglary in Montana in 1955, and then recalled its medical witness to testify again to his opinion of sanity. This was done assertedly to rebut defendant's evidence that his mental illness was of long standing. Held, this was error. The prior conviction was charged, the state's medical witness had already testified concerning it in the case in chief, and the only purpose of the deliberately withheld production of the photograph and record of prior conviction was to prejudice the jury against defendant. "The People ... were permitted to dramatically magnify defendant's prior conviction as the closing evidence." (182 C.A.2d 264.) The court added: "The procedure adopted by the district attorney and permitted by the court has become altogether too prevalent. It is unfair and cannot be condoned." (182 C.A.2d 264.) (See also People v. Katz (1962) 207 C.A.2d 739, 750, 24 C.R. 644 [evidence purposely held back, reversible error].)

However, impropriety in the introduction of otherwise admissible evidence as rebuttal is waived by failure to object. (See People v. Alvarez (1963) 212 C.A.2d 406, 409, 28 C.R. 141.) It is not reversible error unless prejudice is shown. (See People v. Fitzgerald (1961) 56 C.2d 855, 861, 17 C.R. 129, 366 P.2d 481; People v. Pike (1962) 58 C.2d 70, 92, 93, 22 C.R. 664, 372 P.2d 656; People v. Dickerson (1972) 23 C.A.3d 721, 725, 726, 100 C.R. 533.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

IV. POWERS AND FUNCTIONS OF TRIAL JUDGE

H. Restriction of Rebuttal Evidence.

2. Criminal Cases.

b. Proper Rebuttal by Prosecution.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 72

[§ 72] Proper Rebuttal by Prosecution.

(1) In General. "The issue of the introduction of proof on rebuttal alleged to be in improper order recalls the requirements for rigid procedure of a past era in American legal history. In the frontier community where opportunities for amusement were limited, the courthouse often took the role of the playhouse. Spectators demanded that the performance of the opponents conform to fixed and known rule. A party could not take advantage of his adversary by introducing in act three, which was reserved for rebuttal, that which should have come in during act one, which served for the presentation of the case in chief. Courts of today are concerned less with the drama of a contest than with the objective of adjudicating the issue in an orderly fashion, in protecting each party against surprise maneuver of the other, and in realistically preserving the opportunity for full and fair presentation." (People v. Marino (1959) 176 C.A.2d 163, 166, 1 C.R. 302.)

Thus, in People v. Contreras (1964) 226 C.A.2d 700, 702, 38 C.R. 338, the rule against withholding a vital part of the case (supra, §71) was held inapplicable where the part was not purposefully withheld, but came in on the prosecution's cross-examination of a witness called by the defense.

Other cases illustrating proper rebuttal by the prosecution include the following:

People v. Wilson (1967) 254 C.A.2d 489, 494, 62 C.R. 240 [court rejected defendant's contention that prosecution improperly saved evidence until second round of rebuttal witnesses for dramatic effect; more likely, this was merely usual courtesy extended by counsel on both sides (e.g., defendant's witness was allowed to testify to matters not proper rebuttal)].

People v. Demond (1976) 59 C.A.3d 574, 587, 130 C.R. 590 ["Defense counsel was not without resources with respect to this rebuttal evidence; he had every opportunity to introduce additional evidence to contradict this testimony and to cross-examine these witnesses, but he did neither"].

People v. Graham (1978) 83 C.A.3d 736, 741, 149 C.R. 6 [cumulative evidence proper where it repeats or fortifies part of prosecution's case in chief after attack by defense evidence].)

People v. Mendibles (1988) 199 C.A.3d 1277, 1302, 245 C.R. 553 [impeachment to meet evidence on specific facts in defense testimony].

People v. Muniz (1989) 213 C.A.3d 1508, 1514, 262 C.R. 743 [rebuttal evidence that defendant had stated that he was "going to get that girl" was allowable on issue put into dispute by defendant's testimony].

People v. Daniels (1991) 52 C.3d 815, 859, 277 C.R. 122, 802 P.2d 906 [prosecution for murder by firearm; rebuttal testimony from medical personnel describing condition and use of defendant's hand was proper, where defendant claimed that bullet wound in hand prevented him from shooting gun].

People v. Mayfield (1997) 14 C.4th 668, 762, 60 C.R.2d 1, 928 P.2d 485 [trial judge did not abuse discretion in allowing prosecution to introduce, in rebuttal, statement of defendant's father recounting defendant's description of shooting; even though prosecution knew of statement before trial, it became clearly useful for impeachment only after defendant's testimony that gun discharged accidentally when he tried to take it from victim].

(2) Refutation of Alibi Defense. Even though proof of the defendant's presence at the place of the crime is an element of the principal case, additional evidence on this issue may also become proper to rebut an alibi defense. Thus, in People v. Marino, supra, defendant, a convict, was charged with stabbing another inmate of the prison in the TV room. Two prosecution witnesses placed him in that room, but their testimony was not strong. Then the defense produced two witnesses who testified that he was not in the room. Held, the prosecution in rebuttal properly produced another inmate who saw defendant enter the room and walk out hurriedly. (176 C.A.2d 166; see People v. Williams (1958) 164 C.A.2d 285, 291, 330 P.2d 942; People v. Jeffrey (1965) 233 C.A.2d 279, 43 C.R. 524 [officer placed defendant at scene of crime; defendant testified, placing himself elsewhere; witness called by prosecution to contradict him].)

In People v. Porterfield (1960) 186 C.A.2d 149, 8 C.R. 897, defendant was charged with grand theft of an automobile from M on or about July 27. M had testified before the grand jury that this was the day he missed the car, but at the trial, was not directly asked about the date. Defendant produced an alibi witness for July 27. Then the prosecution: (a) In rebuttal, called a police officer to testify from the police report that the car was actually stolen on July 26. (b) On the granting of its motion to reopen the case, brought in M to testify that he had refreshed his recollection by looking at the report and talking with his wife and insurance agent, and that the theft occurred on July 26. Defendant was fully advised of these steps and the judge's intended rulings, and rejected an offer of a continuance. Held, the rebuttal evidence was appropriate. (186 C.A.2d 158.)

In People v. Kaurish (1990) 52 C.3d 648, 276 C.R. 788, 802 P.2d 278, photographs of abrasions on defendant's legs linked him to murder and sex offenses. A defense medical expert testified that the abrasions had occurred prior to the offenses. The prosecution then played tape-recorded, extrajudicial statements of defendant claiming that he had sustained abrasions when he fell at a friend's home on the night of the offenses. Held, no error was committed. The evidence was sufficiently related to the main thrust of the rebuttal evidence (discrediting the medical expert's testimony) to be permitted on rebuttal. (52 C.3d 682.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. See People v. Young (2005) 34 C.4th 1149, 1199, 24 C.R.3d 112, 105 P.3d 487 [in capital murder case, trial judge did not err in allowing prosecution to introduce rebuttal evidence to rehabilitate its own witness after defense had impeached him].

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

IV. POWERS AND FUNCTIONS OF TRIAL JUDGE

I. Exclusion of Witnesses.

1. Discretion To Exclude.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 73

[§ 73] Discretion To Exclude.

(1) General Rule. The trial judge has broad discretion to separate witnesses during testimony. The court may exclude from the courtroom any witness not presently under examination so that the witness cannot hear the testimony of other witnesses. (Ev.C. 777(a); see People v. Garbutt (1925) 197 C. 200, 205, 239 P. 1080; People v. Young (1985) 175 C.A.3d 537, 541, 542, 221 C.R. 32; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1837 et seq.; C.E.B., 1 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §§9.13, 11.27; 1 Jefferson, California Evidence Benchbook 3d, §27.151 et seq.; 74 A.L.R.4th 705 [prejudicial effect of improper failure to exclude witnesses in criminal cases]; on magistrate's power in preliminary examination, see P.C. 867; on exclusion of expert during taking of testimony in civil case, see 85 A.L.R.2d 478.)

(2) Limitations on Power To Exclude. The statute also states two established limitations on the court's power to exclude witnesses.

(a) A party to the action cannot be excluded. (Ev.C. 777(b); see Chester v. Bower (1880) 55 C. 46, 48; Pedrow v. Federoff (1926) 77 C.A. 164, 174, 247 P. 212.)

(b) If a party is "other than a natural person," an officer or employee designated by its attorney is entitled to be present. (Ev.C. 777(c).) This right may be claimed on behalf of a corporation or other artificial entity. (Ev.C. 777, Comment.)

In People v. Peters (1983) 143 C.A.3d 597, 192 C.R. 70, a county district attorney brought a civil action in the name of the People and State of California against a member of the county planning commission, to enforce the financial disclosure and reporting requirements of the Political Reform Act of 1974 (Govt.C. 81000 et seq.; see 7 Summary (9th), Constitutional Law, §201 et seq.). On defendant's motion, the trial judge excluded the district attorney's principal investigator from the courtroom. Held, this was error. (a) The plaintiff was the State of California, not the prosecuting official. (143 C.A.3d 601.) (b) The state is a public entity entitled under Ev.C. 777(c) to be present through its officer, here, the investigator. (143 C.A.3d 602.) (c) This right is applicable to civil, as well as criminal, actions. (143 C.A.3d 602.) (d) The error was prejudicial. Because the investigator had supervised the extensive pretrial investigation, it could not be said that his inability to render assistance during the long and complicated trial was not a miscarriage of justice. (143 C.A.3d 602.) (Cf. Watson v. Department of Rehabilitation (1989) 212 C.A.3d 1271, 1288, 261 C.R. 204 [employment discrimination action against state agency; no error in failing to permit agency to have its district administrator present throughout trial, even though administrator was most knowledgeable about case, where administrator had retired months before trial's commencement].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Limitations on Power To Exclude.

(b) Party is other than natural person: See *People v. ## CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

IV. POWERS AND FUNCTIONS OF TRIAL JUDGE

I. Exclusion of Witnesses.

2. Sanctions for Disobeying Exclusion Order.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 74

[§ 74] Sanctions for Disobeying Exclusion Order.

(1) General Reluctance To Disqualify Witness. Despite considerable authority for disqualifying a witness who wilfully disobeys the court's order, particularly if the party connives with the witness (see 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1842; 14 A.L.R.3d 16), California courts have been reluctant to take this step. Although such disobedience may be punished as a contempt, and may affect the witness' credibility, it has been held not to be a ground for rejection of the witness' testimony. (Mintzer v. Wilson (1937) 21 C.A.2d 85, 91, 68 P.2d 370; People v. Tanner (1946) 77 C.A.2d 181, 187, 175 P.2d 26; People v. Ortega (1969) 2 C.A.3d 884, 893, 83 C.R. 260 [victim's wife sat in court while witnesses were excluded; no error in allowing her to testify as unplanned rebuttal witness for prosecution]; People v. Redondo (1988) 203 C.A.3d 647, 654, 250 C.R. 46 [violation of witness exclusion order does not render witness incompetent to testify, and does not furnish grounds to refuse permission to testify, at least where party who seeks to offer testimony was not at fault in causing violation]; People v. Adams (1993) 19 C.A.4th 412, 436, 23 C.R.2d 512.)

(2) Disqualification Allowed. Nevertheless, disqualification remains a possible sanction. In People v. Valdez (1986) 177 C.A.3d 680, 223 C.R. 149, the court stated the facts giving rise to the problem as follows: Defendant had only one expert and wanted to use him for two purposes. "First, he wanted his expert to sit by his counsel's side to assist in the cross-examination of the prosecution expert. Then he wanted his expert to testify as a defense expert witness. However, as the prosecutor prepared to call her expert, the last case-in-chief witness, she moved to exclude witnesses from the courtroom. The appearance of appellant's expert seated with his counsel motivated the prosecution's motion. Although the court granted the motion to exclude, it permitted appellant's expert to remain and assist counsel in cross-examining the prosecution's expert witness. Defense counsel did not later call his expert as a witness." (177 C.A.3d 686.)

Defendant contended that the denial of his right to call any witness infringed on his Sixth Amendment right to present a defense; that the order forced him to the Hobson's choice of having his expert to assist during cross-examination or to testify as part of the defense case; and that the court cannot enforce its exclusion order by depriving the defendant of the testimony of an important witness who remains in court after the order is made. Held, conviction affirmed; the order of exclusion may be enforced by disqualification of the witness.

(a) Exclusion of witnesses from the courtroom is a matter within the trial judge's discretion. (177 C.A.3d 687, citing the text.) Some jurisdictions exempt an expert witness from sequestration when it is made clear that he is required for the management of the case. (177 C.A.3d 687, 688.) Defense counsel's reason was a different one: He wanted his expert by his side to help him understand the testimony of the prosecution's expert and to cross-examine that expert; but there is no rule that an "elbow expert" is a matter of right for cross-examination purposes. (177 C.A.3d 688.)

(b) "Undeniably, trial counsel would feel more comfortable with an elbow expert. Also, there may be some psychological advantage in having one expert facing the other during testimony. Nevertheless, defense counsel failed to show the trial court good cause for his expert's presence during the prosecution's expert testimony. ... [W]e assume defense counsel consulted with his expert and had sufficient knowledge of the subject to present his expert as a witness. Presumably such an attorney should be equally competent to cross-examine the opposition's expert. Competent trial attorneys routinely engage in litigation involving technical information such as forensic medicine, pathology, laboratory testing, prints and mental competence." (177 C.A.3d 688.)

(c) The trial judge simply permitted defense counsel to obtain assistance from his expert during cross-examination; he did not make a general order excluding witnesses and then "except" the expert. And counsel made no attempt to call the witness or obtain relief from the exclusion order. "We must presume if defense counsel later thought it important to call his expert as a witness, that defense counsel would have so moved and the trial court would have listened carefully to defense counsel's offer of proof and explanation as to the importance of the expert's testimony. If this had been done, we also presume the trial court would have carefully reconsidered its prior order." (177 C.A.3d 690.) The record, however, showed that counsel was able to obtain the evidence sought through cross-examination of the prosecution's expert, and therefore had no need for the testimony of his own expert. (177 C.A.3d 691.)

(d) The supposed rule that disobedience of an order of exclusion cannot be enforced by disqualification of the witness "appears to be a dangerous overstatement of California law." (177 C.A.3d 691.) This may be illustrated by the following hypothetical situation: The judge orders all witnesses excluded; defense counsel brings the expert into the courtroom where he remains; during recess, the expert gives defense counsel advice; later, defendant calls the expert as his witness, thus violating the order. What may the judge do?

(1) The judge could reconsider his exclusion order, but may not want to do so because of the flagrant challenge to his authority. (177 C.A.3d 691.)

(2) The judge could refuse to permit the witness to testify. The statement that the remedy for violation of an exclusion order is contempt, not disqualification of the witness, appears frequently in the opinions; but in the early case of People v. Boscovitch (1862) 20 C. 436, the court limited the rule to cases where the defendant was "without fault." And none of the later cases suggest that counsel may defy the exclusion order and assert a constitutional right to the witness' testimony in the absence of good cause. "A party who recognizes the court's authority and chooses to keep a potential witness present presumably does so knowing that except on good cause the witness will no longer be available for testimonial purposes. Later, if the party seeks to call the witness who remained in the courtroom, the prior knowledge of the court order and apparent election to keep the witness present will be deemed 'fault' as in 'you were responsible for keeping the witness present.' " (177 C.A.3d 692.)

(3) "We agree that the rule stated in Boscovitch is a rational one of permitting the testimony when the violation of the order has not been chargeable to the party who wishes to call the witness." (177 C.A.3d 693.) Wigmore, examining the problem and the conflicting views of the courts, stresses the difficulty in proving fault as a justification of the absolute power of the judge to enforce his order (177 C.A.3d 694), but California precedents, in accordance with Boscovitch, call for the "without fault" qualification. (177 C.A.3d 694, 695.)

The opinion concludes: "The Boscovitch conditional enforcement rule does not go so far as Professor Wigmore might have preferred. Nevertheless, under Boscovitch, the trial court may consider the circumstances of the violation of the order, and if warranted, exercise discretion to relieve the party of any penalty. However, an absolute rule limiting the penalty to contempt sanctions could work unfairly to the disadvantage of the party who observes the order. Even-handed justice demands a rule which permits the disqualification of a witness when fault is shared by counsel or the party. Whether counsel recognizes the authority of the court to enforce its order and knowingly keeps the witness present, as in this case, or deviously participates in violating the order, the law will deem a waiver of any previously applicable right to present the witness to have occurred. Only in the 'without fault' case is contempt the sole sanction." (177 C.A.3d 695.)

A strong dissenting opinion argues that the defendant, although permitted to keep his expert in the courtroom to assist in cross-examination, still had a constitutional right to call the expert as a defense witness. (177 C.A.3d 699, 701.) The dissent disagrees with the majority's view that defense counsel was at fault (177 C.A.3d 700), and likewise rejects the majority's suggestion that counsel waived the right to use his expert as part of the defense case because he did not actually try to call him at that time: "Once the trial court had implicitly ruled that by keeping the defense expert in the courtroom, appellant was foreclosed from later calling the expert as a witness, defense counsel was relieved of any further obligation to 'make a record' by calling the witness." (177 C.A.3d 702.) (For majority's answer to dissent, see 177 C.A.3d 690, footnote 5.)

I. Exclusion of Witnesses.

3. Discretion To Allow Witness To Remain.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 75

[§ 75] Discretion To Allow Witness To Remain.

In People v. Boyden (1953) 116 C.A.2d 278, 253 P.2d 773, defendant, charged with burglary and receiving stolen property, obtained an order excluding witnesses, but the judge permitted the investigating police officer to remain. Upholding this as a proper exercise of discretion, the court said: "It has long been the general practice to permit some officer, active in the prosecution of the case, to remain for the purpose of advising the district attorney as to the facts, the interest and character of the witnesses, etc. Such a practice is proper and charges that such officer or witness has abused his privilege should be first brought to the knowledge of the trial court, that they may be corrected, if there be any ground for the charge." (116 C.A.2d 283; see People v. Persky (1959) 167 C.A.2d 134, 139, 334 P.2d 219, citing the text [charge of theft by business manager; no abuse of discretion in allowing owner and his accountant to remain].)

IV. POWERS AND FUNCTIONS OF TRIAL JUDGE

J. Examination of Witnesses.

1. Judge's Control Over Counsel's Examination.
  - a. Order of Examination.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 76

[§ 76] Order of Examination.

(1) Judge's Control. The judge has considerable control over the content of the evidence offered; i.e., the judge determines competency (applying the exclusionary rules), and also may exclude some evidence which is both relevant and competent. (See 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §§7, 8 et seq.) The judge has a similar power over the method of presentation, including the order of proof (see supra, §44 et seq.), the sequence of examinations (Ev.C. 772, 774; infra, this section, and infra, §78), and the mode of interrogation (Ev.C. 765, infra, §77). (See C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Trial §5.43 et seq.)

(2) Phases of Examination. The examination of a witness must proceed in the following phases: direct examination, cross-examination, redirect examination, and recross-examination. It continues thereafter by redirect and recross-examination. (Ev.C. 772(a).) Each phase of the examination of a witness must be concluded before the succeeding phase begins, unless the court directs otherwise for good cause. (Ev.C. 772(b).)

Except in criminal cases (infra, §233), a party may, in the court's discretion, interrupt its cross-examination, redirect examination, or recross-examination of a witness, in order to examine the witness on a matter not within the scope of a previous examination of the witness. (Ev.C. 772(c).) This extended examination is ordinarily governed by the rules of direct examination. (Ev.C. 760; see infra, §§231, 256.)

1. Judge's Control Over Counsel's Examination.
  - b. Mode of Interrogation.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 77

[§ 77] Mode of Interrogation.

(1) Generally. The court must exercise reasonable control over the mode of interrogation of a witness to make the interrogation as rapid, distinct, and effective for ascertaining the truth as possible, and to protect the witness from undue harassment or embarrassment. (Ev.C. 765(a); see infra, §164 et seq.; on questions degrading witness' character, see infra, §348 et seq.; on power of judge to protect modesty of witness called to testify to obscene language, see 18 Stanf. L. Rev. 945.)

(2) Protection of Child Witness. If a witness is under the age of 14, the court must take special care to protect him or her from undue harassment or embarrassment, and to restrict the unnecessary repetition of questions. The court must take special care to ensure that questions are stated in a form appropriate to the age of the witness. In the interests of justice and on objection by a party, the court may forbid the asking of a question in a form not reasonably likely to be understood by a person of the witness' age. (Ev.C. 765(b).)

In re Marriage of Okum (1987) 195 C.A.3d 176, 240 C.R. 458, applies Ev.C. 765(b) to a child support proceeding in which the parents had made allegations of physical assaults and verbal abuse. When the father called the children to testify, the judge interviewed them in chambers with only a court reporter and the parents' attorneys present, and refused to allow either attorney to propound any questions to the children. Held, this was not an abuse of discretion. "The court was obviously concerned that certain testimony by the children in this highly charged proceeding might later affect their relationship with their parents." (195 C.A.3d 183.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2a) (New) Protection of Dependent Person With Cognitive Impairment. Ev.C. 765(b) was amended in 2004 to make the protections applicable to child witnesses (see text, p. 111) also applicable to dependent persons with substantial cognitive impairment. #### J. Examination of Witnesses.

1. Judge's Control Over Counsel's Examination.
  - c. Reexamination and Recall.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 78

[§ 78] Reexamination and Recall.

(1) Reexamination. A witness who has been examined cannot be reexamined about the same matter without leave of the court. The witness may, however, be reexamined as to any new matter on which he or she has been examined by another party to the action. Leave may be granted or withheld in the court's discretion. (Ev.C. 774.)

(2) Recall of Witness. A witness, while on the stand, may be subjected successively to direct, cross, redirect and recross-examination as a matter of course. But once the witness has left the stand, after either direct or cross-examination, to recall him or her for further examination is a different matter, particularly after each party has presented its entire case in chief. Hence, after a witness has been excused from giving further testimony in the action, the witness cannot be recalled without leave of the court. Leave may be granted or withheld in the court's discretion. (Ev.C. 778; see People v. Thomas (1992) 2 C.4th 489, 542, 7 C.R.2d 199, 828 P.2d 101; Litt v. Litt (1946) 75 C.A.2d 242, 244, 170 P.2d 684; People v. Cooks (1983) 141 C.A.3d 224, 327, 190 C.R. 211; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§1898, 1899.)

Nevertheless, refusal to allow recall has sometimes been held an abuse of discretion. (See Belm v. Patrick (1930) 109 C.A. 599, 605, 293 P. 847 [recall of defendant requested by his counsel before resting his case]; People v. Manchetti (1946) 29 C.2d 452, 460, 175 P.2d 533, infra, §229; People v. Raven (1955) 44 C.2d 523, 526, 282 P.2d 866 [trial court erroneously believed it had no power to recall witness].)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

IV. POWERS AND FUNCTIONS OF TRIAL JUDGE

J. Examination of Witnesses.

1. Judge's Control Over Counsel's Examination.
  - d. Attorney's Consultation With Defendant.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 79

[§ 79] Attorney's Consultation With Defendant.

A judge's order forbidding defense counsel to consult with his testifying client during the trial may violate the Sixth Amendment right to counsel. Thus, in Geders v. United States (1976) 425 U.S. 80, 96 S.Ct. 1330, 47 L.Ed.2d 592, defense counsel finished his direct examination of defendant at 4:55 p.m. on a Tuesday. After the jury left, the prosecutor asked the judge for the same order that was directed at every previous witness who had testified, i.e., that the witness not discuss the case overnight with anyone. Defense counsel objected, explaining that he had a right to confer with his client about matters other than the imminent cross-examination. The judge replied that defendant might not be able to confine himself to nontestimonial matters, and added: "I just think it is better that he not talk to you about anything." Held, this was error.

(a) The judge sequestered all witnesses for both prosecution and defense, and before each recess, instructed the testifying witness not to discuss his testimony with anyone. Applied to nonparty witnesses, the orders were within sound judicial discretion. But a defendant is not simply a witness. "A sequestration order affects a defendant in quite a different way from the way it affects a nonparty witness who presumably has no stake in the outcome of the trial. A nonparty witness ordinarily has little, other than his own testimony, to discuss with trial counsel; a defendant in a criminal case must often consult with his attorney during the trial. Moreover, 'the rule' accomplishes less when it is applied to the defendant rather than a nonparty witness, because the defendant as a matter of right can be and usually is present for all testimony and has the opportunity to discuss his testimony with his attorney up to the time he takes the witness stand." (96 S.Ct. 1335, 47 L.Ed.2d 599.)

(b) This is not the case of an embargo order preventing a defendant from consulting his attorney during a brief routine recess in the trial day. (96 S.Ct. 1336, 47 L.Ed.2d 600, footnote 2.) The recess here was overnight, and 17 hours long. During such recesses, a defendant and his counsel commonly discuss trial events, doing intensive work, with tactical decisions to be made and strategies to be reviewed. The lawyer may need to obtain from the defendant information made relevant by the day's testimony or pursue inquiry along undeveloped lines. "At the very least, the overnight recess during trial gives the defendant a chance to discuss with counsel the significance of the day's events. Our cases recognize that the role of counsel is important precisely because ordinarily a defendant is ill equipped to understand and deal with the trial process without a lawyer's guidance." (96 S.Ct. 1335, 47 L.Ed.2d 599.)

(c) Short of putting a barrier between defendant and counsel for 17 hours to prevent possible improper influence or coaching, there are other weapons available to opposing counsel. A prosecutor may cross-examine defendant about the extent of coaching and may develop a record to use in closing argument to raise questions as to defendant's credibility.

"In addition the trial judge, if he doubts that defense counsel will observe the ethical limits on guiding witnesses, may direct that the examination of the witness continue without interruption until completed. If the judge considers the risk high he may arrange the sequence of testimony so that direct and cross-examination of a witness will be completed without interruption. That this would not be feasible in some cases due to the length of direct and cross-examination does not alter the availability, in most cases, of a solution that does not cut off communication for so long a period as presented by this record. Inconvenience to the parties, witnesses, counsel and court personnel may occasionally result if a luncheon or other recess is postponed or if a court continues in session several hours beyond the normal adjournment hour. In this day of crowded dockets, courts must frequently sit through and beyond normal recess; convenience occasionally must yield to concern for the integrity of the trial itself." (96 S.Ct. 1336, 47 L.Ed.2d 600.)

(d) To the extent that conflict remains between the defendant's right to consult with his attorney "about anything" during a long overnight recess in the trial and the prosecutor's desire to cross-examine without counsel's intervention, the conflict must be resolved in favor of the Sixth Amendment right to the assistance and guidance of counsel. (96 S.Ct. 1337, 47 L.Ed.2d 601.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

IV. POWERS AND FUNCTIONS OF TRIAL JUDGE

J. Examination of Witnesses.

2. Examination by Judge.

a. In General.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 80

[§ 80] In General.

The judge in a civil or criminal trial has power to examine witnesses, and consent of the parties is not required. Many decisions deal with the typical situation, where the judge intervenes and interrogates a witness already called to the stand by a party, to bring out new facts or to clarify matters left obscure or uncertain. (See generally 1 McCormick 5th, §8; 3 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §784; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §724 et seq.; 6 A.L.R.4th 951 [civil cases]; on power of judge in trial of traffic infraction, see infra, §84.)

The judge may examine a witness at some length, even though the same testimony would probably have been elicited by counsel. (See People v. Pierce (1970) 11 C.A.3d 313, 321, 89 C.R. 751 [no objection made when questioning occurred]; People v. Rodriguez (1970) 10 C.A.3d 18, 32, 88 C.R. 789 [trial judge properly questioned witness outside jury's presence on pretrial identification of defendant].)

There is no limitation on the time when the judge may exercise the power to question witnesses or call new witnesses (infra, §83). It has been suggested, however, that interruptions are bad practice, and that it is preferable to permit counsel to conclude before the judge begins: "[F]or the court to repeatedly take the defendant as a witness out of the hands of his counsel who, as the record before us shows, was apparently competent, conscientious, and expeditious in his conduct of the case, and proceed along an independent and extensive line of examination and cross-examination is not only not commendable but highly irregular. ... Ordinarily the proper course, and the one generally pursued, is to allow the examination by counsel--direct, cross, redirect and recross--to conclude, and then if anything in the judgment of the trial court remains obscure, which may be material for the jury to know ... the trial court may ... intervene." (People v. Boggess (1924) 194 C. 212, 241, 228 P. 448; see Karwoski v. Grant (1938) 30 C.A.2d 171, 178, 85 P.2d 944; People v. Gates (1979) 97 C.A.3d Supp. 10, 13, 158 C.R. 759; 7 *Cal. ## J. Examination of Witnesses.

2. Examination by Judge.

c. Improper Suggestion of Partisanship.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 82

[§ 82] Improper Suggestion of Partisanship.

The judge should intervene only for such purposes as to clear up misunderstandings or to develop important evidence. The examination should relate to material matters and be conducted impartially, so that the jury will not receive improper inferences as to the judge's opinions on the case. (See Flinn v. Ferry (1900) 127 C. 648, 655, 60 P. 434; People v. Corrigan (1957) 48 C.2d 551, 560, 310 P.2d 953 [dissent]; People v. Carlucci (1979) 23 C.3d 249, 258, 152 C.R. 439, 590 P.2d 15, infra, §84; 1 McCormick 5th, §8; 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §257.)

People v. Corrigan, supra, appears to be a borderline case. In a robbery prosecution, the trial judge examined defendant's alibi witnesses critically and at length; e.g., one was persistently questioned as to why she had not previously gone to the authorities with her story; another was warned, "Don't forget I want you to tell me the truth." The majority justices saw nothing wrong in the questions, although they emphasized the lack of any objection by defense counsel. (48 C.2d 559.) Two dissenters agreed with the Court of Appeal that the judge had taken a partisan position. (48 C.2d 560.)

People v. Rigney (1961) 55 C.2d 236, 10 C.R. 625, 359 P.2d 23, seems also on the borderline. Defendant, a hospital corpsman in the Navy, was convicted of assault with a deadly weapon and assault with a deadly weapon with intent to commit murder. He relied mainly on the defense of lack of memory of the events at the time of the shooting to negative the specific intent to commit murder. He testified himself and also called a naval psychiatrist. The trial judge, over objection, examined defendant extensively as to the events preceding the shooting, interrupting the deputy district attorney's cross-examination to do so, questioning him closely as to inconsistencies between his testimony on the stand and prior statements, and recalling him after he had been excused. The judge also examined the psychiatrist at length on defendant's alleged retrograde amnesia. Held, conviction affirmed. Although the better practice is for the judge to allow counsel to develop the case, the questioning was not improper, for the questions asked were designed to get the truth, and fairly and impartially brought out relevant and material testimony; and the jury was properly instructed that it was the exclusive judge of the effect and value of the evidence. (55 C.2d 243.)

A vigorous dissent asserts that the judge assumed the role of prosecutor, clearly indicated to the jury his disbelief in the main defense, interrupted the two witnesses constantly and exhaustively and argumentatively examined them to the almost complete exclusion of the district attorney, was sarcastic and unfair to the psychiatrist, and, when the defense undertook, on redirect examination, to repair the damage, broke in to ridicule the presentation. (See People v. Williams (1962) 200 C.A.2d 838, 846, 19 C.R. 743 [close question, but held that judge did not overstep bounds of propriety].)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

IV. POWERS AND FUNCTIONS OF TRIAL JUDGE

J. Examination of Witnesses.

3. Judge's Power To Call New Witnesses.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 83

[§ 83] Judge's Power To Call New Witnesses.

(1) Expert Witnesses. The power of the judge to appoint and call expert witnesses is recognized by several statutes. (See Ev.C. 730 et seq., 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Opinion Evidence, §80 et seq.; Family C. 7552, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Demonstrative, Experimental, and Scientific Evidence, §77 [blood test to determine nonpaternity]; P.C. 1027, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §674 [trial of insanity issue]; Marin Water & Power Co. v. Railroad Com. of Calif. (1916) 171 C. 706, 714, 154 P. 864 [approving Commission's calling of expert in condemnation suit]; Citizens State Bank of Santa Monica v. Castro (1930) 105 C.A. 284, 285, 287 P. 559 [handwriting expert]; 1 McCormick 5th, §8.)

(2) Ordinary Witnesses. The power to call ordinary witnesses formerly had no statutory basis in California, and its exercise in civil cases was apparently quite rare. In Travis v. Southern Pac. Co. (1962) 210 C.A.2d 410, 26 C.R. 700, an action for personal injuries resulting from an intersection collision of plaintiff's automobile and defendant's train, S had stopped at the same intersection, and was therefore an important eyewitness. He gave conflicting statements to the investigator and police officer, and, although plaintiff subpoenaed him, neither party wanted to make him its witness. However, on request of defendant and over plaintiff's objection, the judge allowed defendant to call S with the understanding that either party could cross-examine--the equivalent of the court calling him. Held, this was not improper, although it would have been better for the judge to have directly called him: "[W]e have been cited to no case, nor has our independent research disclosed any case, dealing with a civil action in which a witness has been called to the stand by the court, over objection of a party. However, we can see no difference in this respect between a civil and a criminal case. In both, the endeavor of the court and the parties should be to get at the truth of the matter in contest. Fundamentally, there is no reason why the court in the interests of justice should not call to the stand anyone who appears to have relevant, competent and material information." (210 C.A.2d 425.)

The broad power to call witnesses is now statutory. The court, on its own motion or on the motion of any party, may call witnesses and interrogate them as if they had been produced by a party. The parties may object to the questions asked and the evidence adduced as if the witnesses were called and examined by an adverse party. The witnesses may be cross-examined by all parties to the action in the order that the court directs. (Ev.C. 775; see People v. Murray (1970) 11 C.A.3d 880, 884, 90 C.R. 84 [when alibi witness apparently resisted subpoena, trial judge properly called him to insure defendant benefit of that defense, even though testimony may have hurt defendant]; 16 A.L.R.4th 352 [court's witnesses (other than expert) in state criminal prosecution].) (On time of calling witnesses, see People v. Gates (1979) 97 C.A.3d Supp. 10, 13, 158 C.R. 759, infra, §85; on power of judge in trial of traffic infraction, see infra, §84.)

(3) Abuse of Power. A gross abuse of the power was condemned in People v. Handcock (1983) 145 C.A.3d Supp. 25, 193 C.R. 397, a prosecution for hit-and-run driving. The trial judge, during recess, undertook his own investigation of the accident; he then called his own witness to offer evidence derived from the investigation, without notice to either counsel, and interrupted defendant's testimony to examine the new witness. Held, this was reversible error: "[T]he cumulative effect of the court's actions in the manner of presenting the results of its investigation was to telegraph to the jury a message that the defendant's testimony was to be disbelieved and that the court had evidence to prove the defendant's guilt." (145 C.A.3d Supp. 33.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

IV. POWERS AND FUNCTIONS OF TRIAL JUDGE

J. Examination of Witnesses.

4. Court Trial of Infraction.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 84

[§ 84] Court Trial of Infraction.

In People v. Carlucci (1979) 23 C.3d 249, 152 C.R. 439, 590 P.2d 15, defendants were brought to trial for traffic infractions. The prosecuting attorney was unable to be present, and the judge called the prosecution witnesses (peace officers who had issued the citations) and the defendants to the stand. Each was allowed to give a narrative description of the events, each was questioned by the judge, and each defendant cross-examined the officer witnesses. Held, the procedure did not deprive the defendants of due process.

(a) Ev.C. 775 (supra, §83) codifies traditional case law. (23 C.3d 255.) And the judge's power to question witnesses applies to court trials as well as jury trials. He is not a mere umpire presiding over a contest between professional witnesses, but a judicial officer entrusted with the task of determining where justice lies under the law and facts. (23 C.3d 256.)

(b) Public policy considerations support the conclusion that a trial judge at a traffic infraction hearing may call and question witnesses in the absence of a prosecutor.

(1) Such cases ordinarily entail the imposition of small fines, and it is neither economically feasible nor warranted by the relatively limited monetary exposure of the defendant for counsel to be employed or multiple appearances to be made for arraignment and trial. (23 C.3d 257.) Even though there are incidental penalties where the defendant is found guilty (loss of driving privilege, difficulty in obtaining insurance), the courts and the Legislature have repeatedly evidenced their determination to keep these cases free from procedural intricacies. (23 C.3d 257.)

(2) Because counsel will not be appointed for defendants (P.C. 19.6), a requirement that a prosecutor be present would place an unrepresented defendant at a disadvantage; and, because the cost of private counsel would almost invariably be more than the financial penalty, most defendants would not hire counsel. (23 C.3d 258.)

(c) The practice fully protects the defendant's rights. "[T]he citing officer routinely takes the stand and gives a narrative description of the events leading to the issuance of the citation. The defendant will then have full opportunity to cross-examine the officer and then may himself testify, and present such other evidence as may be probative and relevant. Under these circumstances we are satisfied that a trial judge should, within proper limits, be permitted to ask questions for the purpose of clarifying ambiguities and to insure that justice is done both to the accused and to the People, all this without jeopardizing the court's ability to act in a judicious, independent, detached, and neutral manner." (23 C.3d 258.)

IV. POWERS AND FUNCTIONS OF TRIAL JUDGE

J. Examination of Witnesses.

5. Questioning by Jurors.

a. Questions Submitted by Jurors.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 85

[§ 85] Questions Submitted by Jurors.

In People v. Gates (1979) 97 C.A.3d Supp. 10, 158 C.R. 759, a prosecution for petty theft committed in a supermarket, defendant concluded his testimony, and a juror then asked whether the jury could have a point clarified. The judge replied that questions could be submitted in writing, and when two were received, asked counsel if they had any objection to the questions or wished to ask the questions themselves. Defense counsel objected only to the timing, and the judge called the security guard (a prosecution witness) and asked the two questions. Held, the procedure was proper. Although the point was new for California, Arizona and Michigan courts have approved jurors' questions under appropriate supervision. Unrestricted and uncontrolled questioning can be disruptive and prejudicial; but jurors should be afforded the opportunity to direct any questions they may have to the trial judge, and the judge may properly ask the questions after giving counsel the opportunity to do so or object. (97 C.A.3d Supp. 14.) (See People v. McAlister (1985) 167 C.A.3d 633, 644, 213 C.R. 271, infra, §86.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

IV. POWERS AND FUNCTIONS OF TRIAL JUDGE

J. Examination of Witnesses.

5. Questioning by Jurors.

b. Direct Questioning Improper.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 86

[§ 86] Direct Questioning Improper.

In People v. McAlister (1985) 167 C.A.3d 633, 213 C.R. 271, defendant was charged with vehicular manslaughter and drunken driving. During presentation of the evidence, the judge invited the jurors to submit questions, explaining that he would ask those that he deemed proper. Later, however, a juror was allowed to question a witness directly, and thereafter a number of jurors were permitted to engage in direct questioning. Prior to defendant's taking the stand, the district attorney and defense counsel conferred with the judge in chambers. The district attorney expressed some concern about the procedure, and defense counsel moved for a mistrial. The judge observed that the questions appeared to be relevant, and that he found it "refreshing" to see the jurors' "intensity." However, on returning to the courtroom, he admonished the jurors not to become advocates and encouraged them to write out their questions, and this procedure was then followed. Held, allowing direct questions was error, but not prejudicial.

(a) "In a proper case there may be a real benefit from allowing jurors to submit questions under proper control by the court. However, in order to permit the court to exercise its discretion and maintain control of the trial, the correct procedure is to have the juror write the questions for consideration by the court and counsel prior to their submission to the witness." (167 C.A.3d 644.)

(b) "We hold that at least in a criminal case it is unnecessary for counsel to make an objection to the improper nature of the questions propounded by a juror in order to preserve the right to raise the error on appeal. We agree with the courts from other jurisdictions that have held that the risk of prejudice is too great to require counsel to be put to the choice of offending a juror by an objection or of letting improper or prejudicial testimony go in without the right to later review." (167 C.A.3d 644.) It is the duty of the court to see to it that no improper questions are asked. (167 C.A.3d 644.)

(c) Some courts have permitted direct juror questioning, usually for the purpose of clarifying a statement made by a witness; but even where the practice has been encouraged, the cases make it clear that it must be exercised with extreme caution and under strict admonitions from the judge. Other courts have discouraged the practice. (167 C.A.3d 644.)

(d) "Although we hold the view that the practice is inherently dangerous and should be discouraged, we agree that as a reviewing court we are limited to a determination of whether prejudice resulted in this case." (167 C.A.3d 645.) And an examination of the hazards of the procedure is helpful in determining the question of prejudice:

"1. As already noted, counsel is placed in the intolerable position of either offending the juror by objecting or permitting improper and possibly prejudicial testimony to come in without objection."

"2. The involvement of the juror in the process of interrogation may lessen his or her objectivity and cause a premature judgment on some issue in the case."

"3. Personal interaction between juror and witness may produce tension or actual antagonism in the juror." (167 C.A.3d 645.)

The court concluded that there was only one instance in which an objection to a question would have been appropriate, and that the error was not prejudicial. (167 C.A.3d 646.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

IV. POWERS AND FUNCTIONS OF TRIAL JUDGE

K. Instructions to Jury.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 87

[§ 87] Instructions to Jury.

(1) Former Law. Former C.C.P. 2061 set forth a number of cautionary instructions on evidence and witnesses. The statute merely confirmed a recognized common law power, and did not cover all instructions that a judge might or should give on these subjects. (See People v. Sutton (1964) 231 C.A.2d 511, 515, 41 C.R. 912; 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §300; 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §606 et seq.) The Legislature, following the Commission's recommendation, repealed the section. The appropriate instructions are, as before, given pursuant to such power or duty of the judge as the case law determines. (See Comment on repealed C.C.P. 2061.)

(2) Optional Instructions. In addition to the cautionary instructions formerly contained in C.C.P. 2061, there are a number of others that a judge may give the jury to aid them in considering evidence and witnesses. All will be found in BAJI and CALJIC, and are discussed elsewhere. (See 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §§283 et seq., 300 et seq.; 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §§626 et seq., 636 et seq.) Those based on rules in the Evidence Code are also briefly noted in this work. (See infra, §108 et seq.) (See People v. Smith (1989) 214 C.A.3d 904, 912, 263 C.R. 155, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §188 [disapproving instruction emphasizing trustworthiness of dying declaration].)

(3) Required Instructions. In a few instances, the Evidence Code directly calls for instructions: (a) Burden of proof. (Ev.C. 502; see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Burden of Proof and Presumptions, §§3, 6 et seq.) (b) Burden of producing evidence and burden of proof of preliminary facts. (Ev.C. 403, 405, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Burden of Proof and Presumptions, §33.) (c) Preponderance of evidence and reasonable doubt. (Ev.C. 502; see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Burden of Proof and Presumptions, §34.) (d) Judicial notice. (Ev.C. 457, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Judicial Notice, §42.) (e) No unfavorable presumption or inference from claim of privilege. (Ev.C. 913(b), 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §96.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

V. DETERMINATION OF CREDIBILITY AND WEIGHT

A. Role of Jury.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 88

[§ 88] Role of Jury.

(1) Jury Determines Facts. Except as otherwise provided by law, the jury decides all questions of fact. (Ev.C. 312(a).) Subject to the court's control, the jury determines the effect and value of the evidence addressed to it, including the credibility of witnesses and hearsay declarants. (Ev.C. 312(b)); see Morey v. Vannucci (1998) 64 C.A.4th 904, 914, 75 C.R.2d 573 [resolution of meaning of contract terms was properly submitted to jury, because it turned entirely on assessment of credibility of opposing witnesses].)

A party may introduce various types of evidence either impeaching or supporting a witness' credibility (Ev.C. 780, 785, infra, §§259, 356, 360), or evidence relevant to weight and credibility (Ev.C. 406). If the jury is satisfied with the veracity of a witness or the probative value of other evidence, this determination will almost invariably be accepted on appeal. (See Davis v. Sacramento (1994) 24 C.A.4th 393, 405, 29 C.R.2d 232 [finding of negligence]; People v. Salazar (1995) 33 C.A.4th 341, 346, 39 C.R.2d 337 [finding of asportation]; 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Appeal, §359; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §1430 et seq.; 75A Am.Jur.2d (1991 ed.), Trial §714 et seq.; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §1027; F.R. Evid., Rule 104(e) [Rule 104, supra, §48, "does not limit the right of a party to introduce before the jury evidence relevant to weight or credibility"]; 1 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §24 et seq.; see also BAJI (8th ed.), No. 2.06 [depositions].)

(2) Standard Instructions to Jury. The jury's exercise of its important function is guided by a number of standard instructions on the weight and sufficiency of evidence and the credibility of witnesses. (See infra, §89 et seq.; 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §300 et seq.; 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §636 et seq.; see also People v. Echevarria (1992) 11 C.A.4th 444, 450, 13 C.R.2d 840 [court was not required to give requested instruction on viewing immunized witness' testimony with distrust where court added that factor to standard credibility instruction (CALJIC, No. 2.20)]; People v. Hampton (1999) 73 C.A.4th 710, 721, 86 C.R.2d 665 [same].) The most basic are the following general admonitions:

(a) That the jury's duty is to follow the law, determine the effect and value of the evidence, and decide all questions of fact. (See BAJI (8th ed.), No. 1.00.)

(b) That the jurors are not bound to decide in conformity with the testimony of a number of witnesses against a lesser number with more convincing force. (See BAJI (8th ed.), No. 2.01; CALJIC (6th ed.), No. 2.22; 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §311; 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §649.)

(3) Instruction Regarding Child Witness. In a criminal proceeding in which a child 10 years old or younger testifies, P.C. 1127f requires the court, on a party's request, to instruct the jury as follows:

"In evaluating the testimony of a child you should consider all of the factors surrounding the child's testimony, including the age of the child and any evidence regarding the child's level of cognitive development. Although, because of age and level of cognitive development, a child may perform differently as a witness from an adult, that does not mean that a child is any more or less credible a witness than an adult. You should not discount or distrust the testimony of a child solely because he or she is a child."

This instruction has been incorporated into CALJIC (6th ed.), No. 2.20.1. (See People v. Jones (1990) 51 C.3d 294, 315, 270 C.R. 611, 792 P.2d 643; People v. Gilbert (1992) 5 C.A.4th 1372, 1393, 7 C.R.2d 660; 32 A.L.R.4th 1196 [jury instructions regarding credibility of child's testimony in criminal case]; for disapproval of requested argumentative instructions that generally discredited minor witnesses, see People v. Boyette (1988) 201 C.A.3d 1527, 1536, 247 C.R. 795.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Jury Determines Facts. See 75A Am.Jur.2d (2007 ed.), Trial §596 et seq.; 81 Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Witnesses §995 et seq.; CACI, No. 208 [deposition testimony]; 39 U.S.F. L. Rev. 455 [comparison of California and federal rules on determination of witness credibility].

(2) Standard Instructions to Jury. See CACI, No. 5003 [number of witnesses on one side not determinative]; CALCRIM, No. 226 [Witnesses]; CALCRIM, No. 302 [Evaluating Conflicting Evidence].

Following People v. Hampton (1999) 73 C.A.4th 710, 86 C.R.2d 665, text, p. 123, CALJIC, No. 2.20 was modified to add the factor of witness immunity to the factors a jury may consider in determining credibility.

See People v. Long (2005) 126 C.A.4th 865, 870, 24 C.R.3d 654 [in prosecution for inflicting corporal injury on cohabitant, trial judge did not err in refusing to include within CALJIC, No. 2.20 instruction that jury could consider character of witness for honesty or truthfulness or their opposites in judging believability of witness, notwithstanding that expert had testified that victim suffered from borderline personality disorder that could cause her to fabricate information during stressful times; expert's testimony was not evidence of victim's character]; People v. Anderson (2007) 152 C.A.4th 919, 934, 938, 61 C.R.3d 903 [CALCRIM, Nos. 226 and 302 are proper instructions].

Under C.R.C., Rule 2.1050, adopted in 2003, amended in 2005, and renumbered in 2006, use of the Judicial Council's jury instructions "is strongly encouraged." These include Judicial Council of California, Civil Jury Instructions, known as "CACI" (see 7 Cal. Proc. ## B. Sufficiency of One Witness.

1. General Rule and Illustrations.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 89

[§ 89] General Rule and Illustrations.

(1) General Rule. Unless a statute requires additional evidence, the direct evidence of one witness who is entitled to full credit is sufficient to prove any fact. (Ev.C. 411.) In other words, the testimony of a witness normally cannot be disregarded. Unless impeached or contradicted by other testimony or by an inference deducible from the facts proved, or unless it is inherently improbable, the court must accept it as true. (See Sweeney v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. (1937) 30 C.A.2d Supp. 767, 771, 92 P.2d 1043 [where witnesses to accident not contradicted or impeached, "neither the jury nor the court had the privilege of arbitrarily disregarding the positive evidence of actual occurrences"]; Evje v. City Title Ins. Co. (1953) 120 C.A.2d 488, 492, 261 P.2d 279; People v. Allen (1985) 165 C.A.3d 616, 623, 211 C.R. 837 ["absent physical impossibility or inherent improbability, the testimony of a single eyewitness is sufficient to sustain a criminal conviction"]; People v. Leigh (1985) 168 C.A.3d 217, 221, 214 C.R. 61; People v. Vega (1995) 33 C.A.4th 706, 711, 39 C.R.2d 479; 7 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §2034; 2 McCormick 5th, §338; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §§1033, 1036; 62 A.L.R.2d 1191; BAJI (8th ed.), No. 2.01; CALJIC (6th ed.), No. 2.27.)

The same rule applies to the testimony of expert witnesses. (See Wirz v. Wirz (1950) 96 C.A.2d 171, 176, 214 P.2d 839; Krause v. Apodaca (1960) 186 C.A.2d 413, 417, 9 C.R. 10, citing the text [same]; People v. Smith (1995) 31 C.A.4th 1185, 1190, 37 C.R.2d 524 [sign language expert].)

(2) Illustrations. In Dobson v. Dobson (1948) 86 C.A.2d 13, 193 P.2d 794, plaintiff sought annulment of his marriage, testifying, with one corroborating witness, that he had been intoxicated and unable to understand what had taken place. There was no contradictory evidence, but the trial judge denied relief, saying: "I am satisfied that there isn't any minister in the City of Las Vegas or anywhere else that is ordained, that will marry a drunken person that is drunk to that extent." Held, judgment reversed. The uncontradicted and unimpeached testimony was not inherently improbable, for it is common knowledge that occasionally people submit to the marriage ceremony under such circumstances. (86 C.A.2d 15.)

In Kircher v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1948) 32 C.2d 176, 195 P.2d 427, plaintiff, seeking damages for personal injuries caused by stumbling against a train, gave uncorroborated and not entirely consistent testimony that was attacked as incredible in the light of the physical facts. Upholding the verdict for plaintiff, the court, conceding that his version was "most extraordinary," nevertheless observed that strange and astonishing things sometimes happen in the world of physical phenomena, and that a person injured and rendered unconscious by an accident cannot be expected to give a correct account of all that happened. (32 C.2d 184.) (See Peterson v. Peterson (1946) 74 C.A.2d 312, 318, 168 P.2d 474 [circumstances merely unusual, or some inconsistencies in testimony, not ground for disregarding evidence as inherently incredible; rule that conflicts in testimony are to be resolved by trier of fact applies also to conflicts and inconsistencies in testimony of individual witness]; Siege v. York (1948) 84 C.A.2d 383, 388, 191 P.2d 50 [quoting from earlier case: "an appellate court must be careful not to give to dogmatic and undemonstrated conclusions respecting natural laws precedence over the testimony of apparently credible witnesses"]; People v. Gunn (1959) 170 C.A.2d 234, 238, 338 P.2d 592; Teich v. General Mills (1959) 170 C.A.2d 791, 798, 339 P.2d 627; People v. Harlan (1990) 222 C.A.3d 439, 454, 271 C.R. 653 [rejecting contention that California law requires corroboration of testimony of child sexual abuse victims]; DeMiglio v. Mashore (1992) 4 C.A.4th 1260, 1270, 6 C.R.2d 267 [trial court erroneously annulled election based on its rejection of candidate's testimony as to his intent to remain in city after moving there in election year].)

(3) Exceptions. Ev.C. 411 qualifies the general rule to except situations "where additional evidence is required by statute." This refers to the statutory requirements of corroboration of an accomplice (infra, §96), and in cases of treason, solicitation, perjury, and false pretenses (infra, §107).

Several former corroboration requirements have been eliminated by statutory repeal:

- (a) Lost will: former Prob.C. 350, repealed in 1984.
- (b) Destruction of will under testator's direction by another person: former Prob.C. 74(2), repealed in 1984.
- (c) Nuncupative will: former Prob.C. 54, repealed in 1982.
- (d) Divorce: former C.C. 130, repealed by statutes on dissolution of marriage.

V. DETERMINATION OF CREDIBILITY AND WEIGHT

B. Sufficiency of One Witness.

2. When Testimony May Be Disregarded.

a. In General.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 90

[§ 90] In General.

The principal exceptions to the uncontradicted witness rule (supra, §89) were listed in Davis v. Judson (1910) 159 C. 121, 113 P. 147, as follows: "The most positive testimony of a witness may be contradicted by inherent improbabilities as to its accuracy contained in the witness' own statement of the transaction; or there may be circumstances in evidence in connection with the matter, which satisfy the court of its falsity; the manner of the witness in testifying may impress the court with a doubt as to the accuracy of his statement and influence it to disregard his positive testimony as to a particular fact." (159 C. 128.)

A more concrete statement appears in La Jolla Casa de Manana v. Hopkins (1950) 98 C.A.2d 339, 219 P.2d 871: "[A] trial judge has an inherent right to disregard the testimony of any witness, or the effect of any prima facie showing based thereon, when he is satisfied that the witness is not telling the truth or his testimony is inherently improbable due to its inaccuracy, due to uncertainty, lapse of time, or interest or bias of the witness. All of these things may be properly considered in determining the weight to be given the testimony of a witness although there be no adverse testimony adduced. The trial judge is the arbiter of the credibility of the witnesses. A witness may be contradicted by the facts he states as completely as by direct adverse testimony, and there may be so many omissions in his account of particular transactions or of his own conduct as to discredit his whole story. His manner of testifying may give rise to doubts of his sincerity and create the impression that he is giving a wrong coloring to material facts." (98 C.A.2d 346.) (See Boies v. Wylie (1952) 113 C.A.2d 243, 251, 248 P.2d 76; Kurtz v. Kurtz (1961) 189 C.A.2d 320, 323, 11 C.R. 230, infra, §93, citing the text; Camp v. Ortega (1962) 209 C.A.2d 275, 282, 25 C.R. 873; on specific reasons for disregarding testimony, see infra, §91 et seq.; on evidence viewed with distrust, see infra, §108 et seq.; on evidence wilfully suppressed, see infra, §115 et seq.; on impeachment of witnesses, see infra, §258 et seq.)

The superior position of the trier of fact in observing the witness over that of the appellate court in examining the "cold record" is stressed in Riddle v. Fiano (1961) 194 C.A.2d 684, 15 C.R. 248, quoting from a federal case: "For the demeanor of an orally-testifying witness is 'always assumed to be in evidence.' It is 'wordless language.' The liar's story may seem uncontradicted to one who merely reads it, yet it may be 'contradicted' in the trial court by his manner, his intonations, his grimaces, his gestures, and the like--all matters which 'cold print does not preserve' and which constitute 'lost evidence' so far as an upper court is concerned. For such a court, it has been said, even if it were called a 'rehearing court,' is not a 'reseeing court.' Only were we to have 'talking movies' of trials could it be otherwise." (194 C.A.2d 693.) (See Meiner v. Ford Motor Co. (1971) 17 C.A.3d 127, 140, 94 C.R. 702.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

V. DETERMINATION OF CREDIBILITY AND WEIGHT

B. Sufficiency of One Witness.

2. When Testimony May Be Disregarded.

b. Inherent Improbability.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 91

[§ 91] Inherent Improbability.

In rare cases, inherent improbability alone appears as the reason for disregarding uncontradicted testimony. (See, e.g., People v. Headlee (1941) 18 C.2d 266, 267, 115 P.2d 427 [rape; circumstances related by prosecutrix]; Sanan v. Schoenborn (1941) 47 C.A.2d 366, 368, 117 P.2d 731 ["The trial judge may take into account the inherent improbability of a witness' testimony and reject it in its entirety; indeed fantastic tales are frequently so treated"]; People v. Carvalho (1952) 112 C.A.2d 482, 489, 493, 246 P.2d 950, 6 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Appeal, §151; Estate of Goldberg (1962) 203 C.A.2d 402, 409, 21 C.R. 626; cf. Vorse v. Sarasy (1997) 53 C.A.4th 998, 1012, 1013, 62 C.R.2d 164 [in balancing probative value against prejudicial impact under Ev.C. 352, judge may exclude live testimony of witness whom judge disbelieves only in rare instance of demonstrable falsity].)

More commonly, this characterization is made of testimony also challenged on the basis of interest or contradictory circumstances. (See, e.g., Barham v. Khoury (1947) 78 C.A.2d 204, 215, 177 P.2d 579, infra, §93; DeMartini v. Industrial Acc. Com. (1949) 90 C.A.2d 139, 146, 202 P.2d 828; Snell v. Telehala (1969) 274 C.A.2d 61, 67, 78 C.R. 780 [alleged oral agreement by joint tenant husband to give wife sole ownership of property was improbable fabrication designed to defeat creditor of husband; inconsistent testimony and subsequent acts properly considered].)

Two practical limitations on the power to disregard improbable testimony should be borne in mind:

(1) Although the story of a party or other witness may be so unworthy of belief that the trial judge may disregard the testimony, the judge cannot reject it out-of-hand and reach a decision without a fair hearing of the evidence. (Ponce v. Marr (1956) 47 C.2d 159, 163, 301 P.2d 837; supra, §3; see People v. Mayfield (1997) 14 C.4th 668, 735, 60 C.R.2d 1, 928 P.2d 485 [although testimony that is inherently incredible may be insufficient to support conviction, there is no authority for excluding it on that ground].)

(2) The inherent improbability rule, like the clear and convincing evidence rule (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Burden of Proof and Presumptions, §38), is a statement of the power of the trial judge; it is not a doctrine of appellate review. The appellate court will not substitute its evaluation of the credibility of witnesses even though to some triers of fact the evidence "would have seemed so improbable, impossible and unbelievable" as to compel a contrary judgment. (Evje v. City Title Ins. Co. (1953) 120 C.A.2d 488, 492, 261 P.2d 279; People v. Gunn (1959) 170 C.A.2d 234, 240, 338 P.2d 592 ["Unusual circumstances are not necessarily inherently improbable"]; People v. Wilburn (1961) 195 C.A.2d 702, 706, 16 C.R. 97; People v. Swanson (1962) 204 C.A.2d 169, 172, 22 C.R. 178, citing the text; People v. Mayberry (1975) 15 C.3d 143, 149, 125 C.R. 745, 542 P.2d 1337; People v. Cantrell (1992) 7 C.A.4th 523, 538, 9 C.R.2d 188;

Beck Dev. Co. v. Southern Pac. Trans. Co. (1996) 44 C.A.4th 1160, 1204, 52 C.R.2d 518.)

V. DETERMINATION OF CREDIBILITY AND WEIGHT

B. Sufficiency of One Witness.

2. When Testimony May Be Disregarded.

c. Interest of Witness.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 92

[§ 92] Interest of Witness.

Interest of the witness is an obvious reason for challenging uncontradicted testimony, but the attack is usually aided by evidence of other circumstances.

Thus, in Klinker v. Klinker (1951) 108 C.A.2d 122, 238 P.2d 119, plaintiff husband and defendant wife took property in joint tenancy in 1940, and in 1941, defendant was adjudged incompetent. Over 8 years later, plaintiff sued to quiet title, testifying that defendant threatened him with divorce, slander and assault if he did not include her name in the deed. The trial judge's finding against plaintiff was affirmed. It was the duty of the court, in view of the interest of plaintiff, to scrutinize the testimony carefully; the statements attributed to the wife, like those attributed to a dead person, were the weakest and most unsatisfactory kind of evidence; the deed was regular on its face, and plaintiff acquiesced for years before questioning it. (108 C.A.2d 124.) (See Bard v. Kent (1939) 35 C.A.2d 434, 437, 95 P.2d 957 [trial court may disbelieve uncontradicted testimony of defendant that decedent made an oral gift of his interest in certain property]; Barham v. Khoury (1947) 78 C.A.2d 204, 177 P.2d 579, infra, §93; La Jolla Casa de Manana v. Hopkins (1950) 98 C.A.2d 339, 346, 219 P.2d 871 [defendant contended for unusual meaning of contract term on basis of purported conversation with plaintiff's representative]; Ortzman v. Van Der Waal (1952) 114 C.A.2d 167, 170, 249 P.2d 846 [testimony of plaintiff in automobile collision case as to her injuries]; Leonard v. Watsonville Community Hosp. (1956) 47 C.2d 509, 518, 305 P.2d 36 [superintendent of defendant hospital, interested in maintaining favorable relationship and possibly liable for negligence of nurse]; Tidlund v. Seven Up Bottling Co. (1957) 154 C.A.2d 663, 666, 316 P.2d 656 [plaintiff's testimony that beverage bottle contained foreign matter]; Kurtz v. Kurtz (1961) 189 C.A.2d 320, 325, 11 C.R. 230 [wife's testimony in divorce case]; Riddle v. Fiano (1961) 194 C.A.2d 684, 692, 15 C.R. 248; Braewood Convalescent Hosp. v. Work. Comp. App. Bd. (1983) 34 C.3d 159, 167, 193 C.R. 157, 666 P.2d 14 [acknowledging that interest of witness may be factor warranting rejection of even uncontradicted evidence, although it does not automatically render testimony questionable]; Day v. Rosenthal (1985) 170 C.A.3d 1125, 1158, 217 C.R. 89 [witness' "enormous financial interest" in outcome of litigation was sufficiently great to cast doubt on veracity of his testimony]; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §1039; 13 A.L.R.3d 404 [competence of interested witness on handwriting of deceased].)

B. Sufficiency of One Witness.

2. When Testimony May Be Disregarded.

d. Other Circumstances.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 93

[§ 93] Other Circumstances.

In Belser v. American Trust Co. (1932) 125 C.A. 344, 13 P.2d 951, a deed to plaintiff was found in the grantor's papers at his death. Though plaintiff's testimony of delivery to him was uncontradicted, the court nevertheless found against it because of decedent grantor's acts and declarations indicating ownership after the date of the alleged delivery. (125 C.A. 351.)

In Barham v. Khoury (1947) 78 C.A.2d 204, 177 P.2d 579, a physician, the confidential attendant of an elderly woman, gave uncontradicted testimony that prior to her death, she made a gift to him of valuable jewels. Held, such circumstances as the confidential relationship, the donor's weakened condition, the donee's long concealment of his claim and his prior inconsistent position, warranted the lower court's discrediting his testimony and finding that no gift had been made. (78 C.A.2d 211.)

In Kurtz v. Kurtz (1961) 189 C.A.2d 320, 11 C.R. 230, the wife, in a divorce case, testified to a disabling ailment rendering her incapable of working. But she did not produce her doctor or offer an excuse for failure to do so, and the evidence showed that, despite this long continued condition, she worked steadily for many years in the course of six marriages. (189 C.A.2d 323.) (See Davis v. Judson (1910) 159 C. 121, 128, 113 P. 147 [conduct inconsistent with facts asserted in testimony]; Hinshaw v. Hopkins (1940) 37 C.A.2d 230, 239, 99 P.2d 283 [same]; La Jolla Casa de Manana v. Hopkins (1950) 98 C.A.2d 339, 348, 219 P.2d 871 [great lapse of time between purported conversation related by witness and trial, and unreasonable meaning urged for term in contract prepared by the witness]; Ortzman v. Van Der Waal (1952) 114 C.A.2d 167, 172, 249 P.2d 846 [circumstances of accident testified to by all witnesses, plaintiff's conduct at the time (stating that she had not been hurt), her previous extensive medical history]; *Spaulding v. The witness' demeanor while testifying and the manner in which the witness testifies (see Ev.C. 780(a)) "may impress the court with a doubt as to the accuracy of his statement and influence it to disregard his positive testimony as to a particular fact." 3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 95

[§ 95] Opinion Unsupported by Facts.

An opinion, expert or nonexpert, will be rejected or held insufficient to sustain a verdict or finding if unsupported by the facts from which it is derived. (See Estate of Powers (1947) 81 C.A.2d 480, 485, 184 P.2d 319 [assumed facts contrary to record]; Coast Counties Gas & Elec. Co. v. Evidence (4th), Opinion Evidence, §31 et seq.; infra, §201.)

In Guardianship of Waite (1939) 14 C.2d 727, 97 P.2d 238, appellant, an elderly woman, was adjudged mentally incompetent. The probate judge relied on the opinions of two doctors that she was "'over credulous" and lacked judgment, and refused to hear her own testimony. Held, this was reversible error. Appellant's testimony on the issue of mental capacity could not be excluded (see supra, §3), and the recital of instances of bad business judgment did not support the conclusion of mental incompetency. (14 C.2d 731.)

In Bowers v. Olch (1953) 120 C.A.2d 108, 260 P.2d 997, a needle was left in plaintiff's body after a stomach operation. In this malpractice suit, defendant doctor was allowed to offer his opinion that he did not leave the needle there, and that it might have gotten in by having been stuck to a surgical pad. Held, this was prejudicial error. The witness did not state any fact as a foundation for his opinion, and there was no basis for assuming a hypothetical state of facts. If this type of evidence were admissible, plaintiff could call a witness to say that it was perfectly possible for defendant to have dropped the needle in. "Also if such opinion evidence were proper, it would seem that the best witness, in a case similar to this, would be one with the best imagination as to the various combinations of events that could or might 'possibly' cause a needle to be left in a body. The opinion herein of Dr. Olch was merely his conjecture." (120 C.A.2d 114.)

V. DETERMINATION OF CREDIBILITY AND WEIGHT

B. Sufficiency of One Witness.

3. Statutory Requirements of Corroboration.

a. Testimony of Accomplice.

1. Statutory Rule.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 96

[§ 96] Statutory Rule.

A conviction cannot be "had" on the testimony of an accomplice unless that testimony is corroborated by other evidence that tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense. The corroboration is not sufficient if it merely shows the commission of the offense or the circumstances of that commission. (P.C. 1111; see CALJIC (6th ed.), No. 3.11; 7 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §2056 et seq.; 29A Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §1485 et seq.; infra, §97 et seq.) (See People v. Barillas (1996) 49 C.A.4th 1012, 1023, 1031, 57 C.R.2d 166 [lengthy concurring opinion citing the text, reviewing the law of accomplices, and arguing for repeal of P.C. 1111].)

P.C. 1111 applies in a criminal trial. It does not apply in:

(1) A preliminary examination, i.e., a magistrate may hold a defendant to answer on the basis of the accomplice's uncorroborated testimony. (People v. McRae (1947) 31 C.2d 184, 186, 187 P.2d 741, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §21; In re Golia (1971) 16 C.A.3d 775, 780, footnote 2, 94 C.R. 323; see People v. Cooks (1983) 141 C.A.3d 224, 291, 190 C.R. 211 [motion to set aside indictment properly denied; uncorroborated testimony of accomplice may be sufficient to hold defendant to answer].)

(2) A juvenile court proceeding. (See In re Mitchell P. (1978) 22 C.3d 946, 151 C.R. 330, 587 P.2d 1144; 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §38; In re E.L.B. (1985) 172 C.A.3d 780, 783, 218 C.R. 429 [In re Mitchell P. followed, but continued validity of its rationale questioned in view of narrowing gap between criminal and juvenile courts].)

P.C. 1111 applies by its terms to conviction of an offense. Hence, accomplice corroboration is not required to prove a gun use enhancement. (People v. Maldonado (1999) 72 C.A.4th 588, 597, 84 C.R.2d 898.) "Unless the defendant has been properly convicted of the underlying offense under corroborated accomplice testimony, the question of personal use of a firearm for enhancement purposes never arises. But when a defendant has already been found guilty of the underlying offense, the accomplice's credibility as to additional details of the crime, such as which participant used a gun, has at that point been supported by independent corroboration connecting the defendant to the commission of the crime. There is no reason why the trier of fact should not then believe the accomplice's evidence as to the detail of gun use without requiring further specific independent corroboration on that point." (72 C.A.4th 598.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

V. DETERMINATION OF CREDIBILITY AND WEIGHT

B. Sufficiency of One Witness.

3. Statutory Requirements of Corroboration.

a. Testimony of Accomplice.

2. Who Are Accomplices.

aa. In General.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 97

[§ 97] In General.

(1) Statutory Rules. An accomplice is "one who is liable to prosecution for the identical offense charged against the defendant on trial in the cause in which the testimony of the accomplice is given." (P.C. 1111; see People v. Barclay (1953) 40 C.2d 146, 152, 252 P.2d 321 [disconnected offense]; People v. Gordon (1973) 10 C.3d 460, 468, 110 C.R. 906, 516 P.2d 298; People v. Rodriguez (1986) 42 C.3d 730, 759, 230 C.R. 667, 726 P.2d 113; People v. James (1987) 196 C.A.3d 272, 284, 241 C.R. 691; People v. Burns (1987) 196 C.A.3d 1440, 1449, 242 C.R. 573 [as former CALJIC, No. 3.10 states, to be accomplice, aider and abettor must have criminal intent]; CALJIC (6th ed.), No. 3.14.)

Two additional statutory provisions deal with special situations.

(a) Abortees: P.C. 1108 is a special section requiring corroboration of the woman abortee in abortion cases. Its effect is similar to P.C. 1111 on accomplices generally (see supra, §96), and both statutes may be involved in an abortion case. (See People v. Clapp (1944) 24 C.2d 835, 839, 151 P.2d 237; People v. Buffum (1953) 40 C.2d 709, 723, 256 P.2d 317; People v. Gallardo (1953) 41 C.2d 57, 62, 257 P.2d 29; 34 A.L.R.3d 858.)

(b) Woman seduced for purposes of prostitution: The crime of "inveigling, enticing, or taking away an unmarried female of previous chaste character" under 18, cannot be proved by the uncorroborated testimony of the woman. (P.C. 1108.)

(2) Illustrations. The seemingly clear statement in P.C. 1111 is of little aid in solving the complex problems presented by the cases. People v. Wallin (1948) 32 C.2d 803, 197 P.2d 734, illustrates the elasticity of the definition. A mother killed her child and was convicted of murder. Thereafter, defendant was tried and convicted as an accessory, on the mother's testimony that he helped her dispose of the body. Held, judgment reversed for refusal to instruct that the mother was an accomplice and that her testimony required corroboration.

(a) From the facts that the mother invited defendant's assistance and that they disposed of the body together, it was clear that each was guilty of the identical crime of accessory to murder, under P.C. 32. This conclusion could not be overcome by the unusual circumstance that the mother had already been convicted of the murder when she testified; the test is whether she was liable for the same offense at the time of commission of the act (disposal of the body). (32 C.2d 808.)

(b) Nor was the conclusion overcome by the peculiar fact that the mother, if she had acted alone, could not have been separately charged with being an accessory after the fact to the murder she had already committed. By acting with defendant, she did become separately liable, although there was little likelihood of her being charged as accessory after the fact instead of as principal. The court referred to other situations in which a person might be criminally liable for cooperating with another, though personally incapable of committing the offense (woman: pimping; woman: rape). (32 C.2d 807.)

In People v. James, supra, defendant was charged with wilful cruelty toward a child (P.C. 273a(1), now 273a(a)) and her murder by torture (P.C. 187, 189). Defendant contended that the trial judge erred in failing to give accomplice instructions with respect to his wife, the child's mother. Held, this was error--though harmless in light of the evidence. As to the P.C. 273a(1) count, disregarding occasions when she hit the child, the wife would still be liable because there was sufficient evidence that she failed to protect the child knowing that defendant was abusing her (see 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Sex Offenses and Crimes Against Decency, §159 et seq.). Similar reasoning would also support a finding of implied malice, thus making her an accomplice to the murder charge as well (see 1 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against the Person, §§166 et seq., 199). (196 C.A.3d 285.) (See also People v. Wayne (1953) 41 C.2d 814, 826, 264 P.2d 547 [solicitation of bribery; M solicited W, then W solicited M; held M could be accomplice because he actively abetted W to solicit him]; People v. Gullick (1961) 55 C.2d 540, 542, 11 C.R. 566, 360 P.2d 62 [conspirator and aider and abettor in burglary].)

(3) Claim of Duress by Accomplice. The effect of alleged duress on a witness' status as an accomplice under P.C. 1111 was considered in People v. Jacobs (1991) 230 C.A.3d 1337, 281 C.R. 733, a prosecution for being an accessory after a felony. The only evidence supporting defendant's conviction came from a witness who had lied to police officers about the circumstances of the felony underlying the accessory charge when she was questioned in defendant's home. The witness testified that she told the police what defendant had told her to say, and that she had feared for the safety of her daughter, who was with defendant in the house (along with at least six police officers). The defense moved for acquittal, arguing that the accomplice witness' uncorroborated testimony was insufficient for a conviction. The trial judge denied the motion, and submitted to the jury the question of whether the witness was an accomplice, instructing it that an honest but unreasonable belief of duress by the witness could negate the requisite specific intent. Held, the instruction on duress was reversible error. The honest but unreasonable belief doctrine stated in People v. Flannel (1979) 25 C.3d 668, 160 C.R. 84, 603 P.2d 1 (see 1 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Defenses, §77), applies to the negation of malice in homicide cases, not to the negation of specific intent. The witness here "could not be exonerated from responsibility as an accomplice with an honest but unreasonable belief that her actions were required." (230 C.A.3d 1345.)

2. Who Are Accomplices.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 98

[§ 98] Wrongdoers Who Are Not Accomplices.

(1) Suborned Person. In a prosecution for subornation of perjury, the person suborned (induced to testify falsely) is not deemed an accomplice of the suborner. (People v. Nickell (1937) 22 C.A.2d 117, 124, 70 P.2d 659; People v. Jones (1967) 254 C.A.2d 200, 216, 62 C.R. 304.)

(2) Thief. Ordinarily, the thief and the receiver of stolen goods are not accomplices; the receiver usually takes no part in the theft itself, and the thief cannot receive from himself or herself. Hence, the testimony of the thief may be received without an instruction on the rule of corroboration. (People v. Layman (1931) 117 C.A. 476, 479, 4 P.2d 244; People v. Williams (1935) 7 C.A.2d 600, 603, 46 P.2d 796; People v. Burness (1942) 53 C.A.2d 214, 218, 127 P.2d 623; People v. Polsalski (1960) 181 C.A.2d 795, 798, 5 C.R. 762, citing the text; People v. Smith (1972) 26 C.A.3d 404, 408, 102 C.R. 625; People v. McKunes (1975) 51 C.A.3d 487, 493, 124 C.R. 126.)

An exception is recognized, however, where the two conspire, and pursuant to the plan, the thief steals property and delivers it to the receiver. (See People v. Jaramillo (1976) 16 C.3d 752, 759, 129 C.R. 306, 548 P.2d 706; People v. Hinks (1997) 58 C.A.4th 1157, 1161, 68 C.R.2d 440.) In such a case, they are accomplices, and corroboration of the testimony of the thief is necessary. (People v. Lima (1944) 25 C.2d 573, 577, 154 P.2d 698; cf. People v. Coakley (1951) 108 C.A.2d 223, 227, 238 P.2d 633 [error to refuse instruction but no prejudice where corroboration ample].) (See 53 A.L.R.2d 817; 74 A.L.R.3d 560.)

(3) Parties to Bribery. Giving and receiving bribes are distinct and separate offenses. (See P.C. 67 [giving], P.C. 68 [receiving].) Hence, neither party is an accomplice of the other. (People v. Wolden (1967) 255 C.A.2d 798, 803, 63 C.R. 467.)

(4) Buyer and User of Narcotics. The buyer of narcotics cannot be prosecuted for selling them to himself or herself, hence, is not an accomplice of the seller. (People v. Hernandez (1968) 263 C.A.2d 242, 247, 69 C.R. 448.) Similarly, a user of narcotics cannot be charged with administering them, hence, is not an accomplice to the crime of unlawful administration. (People v. Label (1974) 43 C.A.3d 766, 770, 119 C.R. 522.) (See People v. Chrisman (1967) 256 C.A.2d 425, 435, 64 C.R. 733 [defendant charged with furnishing narcotics and witness to whom they were furnished were not accomplices].)

(5) Accessory After the Fact and Aider and Abettor. "In order to be an accomplice, the witness must be chargeable with the crime as a principal ... and not merely as an accessory after the fact. ... An aider and abettor is chargeable as a principal, but his liability as such depends on whether he promotes, encourages, or assists the perpetrator and shares the perpetrator's criminal purpose. ... It is not sufficient that he merely gives assistance with knowledge of the perpetrator's criminal purpose." (People v. Sully (1991) 53 C.3d 1195, 1227, 1228, 283 C.R. 144, 812 P.2d 163, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §92 [witness who was merely present at crime scene (see infra, §100) and drove victim there was not accomplice]; see People v. Horton (1995) 11 C.4th 1068, 1115, 1116, 47 C.R.2d 516, 906 P.2d 478 [readiness of defendant's companion to drive him to drug dealer's apartment to commit robbery did not make him accomplice, where he never did so; his conduct subsequent to robbery might make him accessory but did not subject him to accomplice liability].)

3. Statutory Requirements of Corroboration.

a. Testimony of Accomplice.

2. Who Are Accomplices.

cc. Minor Victims.

[§ 99] Minor Victims.

Some of the most difficult problems of statutory interpretation arise in connection with apparent accomplices who are, in a sense, victims of another's wrong. (See generally 7 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §2060; 31 A.L.R.4th 120 [necessity for corroboration of victim's testimony in prosecution of sexual offenses].)

Children are generally not deemed accomplices to the commission of sexual offenses against them, and they may testify without corroboration. (See People v. Becker (1934) 140 C.A. 162, 165, 35 P.2d 196; People v. Westek (1948) 31 C.2d 469, 473, 190 P.2d 9 [boys admitted knowing acts were wrongful, but testified that they were afraid of defendant and did not willingly participate; held not accomplices to violation of P.C. 286 (sodomy)]; People v. Anderson (1968) 264 C.A.2d 271, 274, 70 C.R. 231 [16-year-old boy, victim of sodomy, threatened with bodily harm by adult with whom he lived]; see also People v. Perez (1973) 9 C.3d 651, 657, 108 C.R. 474, 510 P.2d 1026 [18-year-old victim of sodomy was not accomplice and his testimony was sufficient to find defendant guilty]; People v. Yarber (1979) 90 C.A.3d 895, 908, 153 C.R. 875 [female minor could not commit oral copulation as defined by P.C. 288a and thus could not be accomplice]; 41 Cal. L. Rev. 744.)

But children over age 14 have been considered accomplices. (See People v. McRae (1947) 31 C.2d 184, 186, 187 P.2d 741 [boy of 15, knowing act was wrongful, held accomplice to violation of P.C. 288a (oral copulation), before that statute limited offense to adults who engage in oral copulation with minors or to persons who compel participation of others]; People v. Dobkin (1946) 74 C.A.2d 269, 273, 168 P.2d 729 [boy of 16, held accomplice to act of violation of P.C. 286 (sodomy)]; People v. Hurd (1970) 5 C.A.3d 865, 875, 85 C.R. 718 [leaving open question whether defendant's minor daughter was accomplice as matter of law in sex crimes charged against defendant].)

The victim in a statutory rape case is not considered an accomplice because the statute is designed for his or her protection. (See People v. Murray (1949) 91 C.A.2d 253, 256, 204 P.2d 624; In re Meagan R. (1996) 42 C.A.4th 17, 25, 49 C.R.2d 325; 7 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §2060.) The same is true of a prosecution under Health & Saf.C. 11361 for using a minor to transport narcotics. Because the use of the minor for this purpose necessarily contributes to the minor's delinquency, he or she is a victim and not an accomplice. (People v. De Paula (1954) 43 C.2d 643, 647, 276 P.2d 600.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See People v. Tobias (2001) 25 C.4th 327, 335, 337, 106 C.R.2d 80, 21 P.3d 758 [even child who consents to sex with parent is victim of incest and thus cannot be accomplice for purpose of accomplice corroboration requirement; inconsistent holding of People v. McRae (1947) 31 C.2d 184, 187 P.2d 741, text, p. 136, was "highly questionable" even before it was abrogated by statute].

[§ 100] Distinction: Mere Presence at Scene.

Mere presence at the scene of a crime, knowledge of the crime, or failure to attempt to prevent it is not enough to make one an accomplice. (People v. Moran (1974) 39 C.A.3d 398, 413, 114 C.R. 413; see People v. Marshall (1969) 273 C.A.2d 423, 427, 78 C.R. 16 [merely accompanying abortion victim to defendant's residence or place of business, although with realization of victim's purpose, does not necessarily make someone an accomplice]; *People v. ## 2. Who Are Accomplices.

ee. Distinction: Feigned Accomplice.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 101

[§ 101] Distinction: Feigned Accomplice.

(1) Not an Accomplice. A person who, under direction of police officers, feigns complicity to aid in detection of the perpetrator of a crime, is not an accomplice. "[T]hose who originate and propose a criminal design may not escape conviction merely by reason of the fact that a trap was laid for them or that they were facilitated in the execution of their unlawful enterprises by an officer of the law who acted for the purpose of detecting them." (People v. Griffin (1950) 98 C.A.2d 1, 22, 219 P.2d 519; see People v. Hensling (1962) 205 C.A.2d 34, 40, 22 C.R. 702; People v. Hoover (1974) 12 C.3d 875, 881, 117 C.R. 672, 528 P.2d 760 [where trial judge determines that undercover agent was not accomplice of any kind, issue of whether his complicity with defendant was feigned need not be submitted to jury]; People v. Escamilla (1976) 65 C.A.3d 558, 561, 135 C.R. 446 [addict police operative]; People v. Flores (1982) 128 C.A.3d 512, 523, 180 C.R. 368.)

(2) Where Police Officer Is Actual Accomplice. In People v. Brocklehurst (1971) 14 C.A.3d 473, 92 C.R. 340, a police officer and defendant participated in acts that allegedly violated P.C. 288a (oral copulation). The only competent evidence to convict defendant was the officer's testimony, offered as coming from a feigned accomplice. Held, conviction reversed; the officer was an actual accomplice whose uncorroborated evidence was insufficient to convict.

(a) In specific intent offenses, the state of mind is significant; "a police officer's testimony, if believed, that he did not have the required intent, but feigned participation in order to obtain evidence against the others, would exonerate him from being an accomplice." (14 C.A.3d 478.)

(b) In crimes not requiring specific intent, such as a violation of P.C. 288a (see 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Sex Offenses and Crimes Against Decency, §31 et seq.), intentionally committing the forbidden act is sufficient:

"In the absence of a statute granting immunity, a person of competent age who voluntarily participates in an act which without his participation could not be accomplished, which can be committed only by two persons, which is denounced as a crime by a law that declares both participants to be equally guilty without requiring specific intent, is as to that particular act an accomplice." (14 C.A.3d 480.) (Cf. People v. Bohmer (1975) 46 C.A.3d 185, 192, 120 C.R. 136 [observing that Brocklehurst does not hold that there can be feigned accomplice only in crime requiring specific intent, and citing cases of feigned accomplices in general intent crimes].)

[§ 102] Procedure in Determining Issue.

(1) Burden of Proof. The defendant has the burden of proof to establish that a witness is an accomplice. (People v. Tewksbury (1976) 15 C.3d 953, 962, 127 C.R. 135, 544 P.2d 1335, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Burden of Proof and Presumptions, §44 [preponderance of evidence is applicable standard]; People v. Belton (1979) 23 C.3d 516, 523, 524, 153 C.R. 195, 591 P.2d 485; People v. Williams (1997) 16 C.4th 153, 247, 66 C.R. 2d 123, 940 P.2d 710; People v. Jacobs (1991) 230 C.A.3d 1337, 1342, 281 C.R. 733, citing the text; CALJIC (6th ed.), No. 3.19.) However, when the prosecution introduces evidence during its case in chief that establishes the accomplice status by a preponderance of the evidence, the defendant's burden is satisfied. (People v. Belton, supra; People v. Martinez (1982) 132 C.A.3d 119, 130, 183 C.R. 256.)

(2) Roles of Judge and Jury. The phrase "liable to prosecution" (P.C. 1111, supra, §97) means, in effect, "properly liable." "Any issues of fact determinative of the witness' factual guilt of the offense must be submitted to the jury. Only when such facts are clear and undisputed may the court determine that the witness is or is not an accomplice as a matter of law." (People v. Rodriguez (1986) 42 C.3d 730, 759, 230 C.R. 667, 726 P.2d 113.)

(a) If the evidence shows that the witness is not an accomplice as a matter of law, the trial judge need not submit the issue to the jury. (See People v. Mayberry (1975) 15 C.3d 143, 159, 125 C.R. 745, 542 P.2d 1337; People v. Gibson (1976) 56 C.A.3d 119, 132, 128 C.R. 302; People v. Horton (1995) 11 C.4th 1068, 1114, 47 C.R.2d 516, 906 P.2d 478.)

(b) If the evidence shows that the witness is an accomplice as a matter of law, the issue should not be submitted to the jury. (People v. Robinson (1964) 61 C.2d 373, 394, 38 C.R. 890, 392 P.2d 970, infra, §103; see People v. Zapien (1993) 4 C.4th 929, 982, 17 C.R.2d 122, 846 P.2d 704 [citing Robinson].)

(c) If the facts are disputed or susceptible of different inferences, the question is one for the jury, the defendant is entitled to an instruction on corroboration, and failure to instruct may be reversible error. (See People v. Jones (1964) 228 C.A.2d 74, 95, 39 C.R. 302; People v. Stankewitz (1990) 51 C.3d 72, 90, 270 C.R. 817, 793 P.2d 23; People v. DeJesus (1995) 38 C.A.4th 1, 25, 44 C.R.2d 796 [refusal to give accomplice instruction was improper, because jury could have decided witness' testimony indicated he acted with knowledge of criminal purpose of perpetrator and with intent or purpose of committing, encouraging or facilitating offense; however, under circumstances, error was harmless]; 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §654.)

(3) Codefendant Accomplice. Where the accomplice is a codefendant who makes a judicial confession on the stand, the instruction need not be given; it could be construed by the jurors as imputing the confessing codefendant's foregone guilt to the others. (People v. Hill (1967) 66 C.2d 536, 555, 58 C.R. 340, 426 P.2d 908.)

A "unique, but not unprecedented" situation arose in People v. Valerio (1970) 13 C.A.3d 912, 92 C.R. 82, as the result of contradictory testimony by two codefendants. Codefendant S testified that defendant V bought two bags of marijuana and then, as police signalled their automobile, asked her to throw away a marijuana cigarette and hide the bags. V testified that S herself had produced the cigarette and threw it away before he could speak about it, and that he had not bought marijuana. The trial judge refused V's request for an instruction that S was an accomplice as a matter of law. Held, no error. "If the trial court instructed the jury that the codefendant was an accomplice as a matter of law, he would, in effect, be instructing the jury that the codefendant was guilty of the offenses charged, thereby invading the province of the jury with respect to the determination of her guilt or innocence. Under the circumstances, the trial judge was compelled to leave the matter to the jury." (13 C.A.3d 924.) The judge did give proper aider and abettor instructions. (13 C.A.3d 925.) (See People v. Benjamin (1974) 40 C.A.3d 1035, 1043, 115 C.R. 668 [trial court's failure to give accomplice instructions on its own motion was harmless for two defendants whose participation in burglary was videotaped, but was prejudicial for two other defendants implicated by alleged accomplice].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Roles of Judge and Jury. See People v. Brown (2003) 31 C.4th 518, 557, 3 C.R.3d 145, 73 P.3d 1137 [in capital murder case, trial judge did not err in refusing to instruct jury that prosecution witness was accomplice as matter of law, where witness testified that he got into car with defendant and third person, found out that they intended to commit theft that ultimately led to murder only after he got in, and did not agree to it]; People v. Hinton (2006) 37 C.4th 839, 880, 38 C.R.3d 149, 126 P.3d 981 [assuming failure of trial judge to instruct, with respect to prosecution witness, that accomplice testimony must be corroborated was error, it was harmless, as witness' testimony was sufficiently corroborated by forensic evidence and by testimony of other witnesses, including defendant himself]; People v. Avila (2006) 38 C.4th 491, 565, 43 C.R.3d 1, 133 P.3d 1076 [trial judge properly submitted to jury question whether two witnesses were accomplices; as to one witness, accomplice issue turned on whether, as conspirator or aider or abettor, he was aware that two victims might be killed or was engaged in any other crime that would foreseeably result in murder, and as to second witness, circumstantial evidence did not compel conclusion he was accomplice in light of his denial of involvement in charged crimes].

(3) Codefendant Accomplice. In People v. Avila, supra, a capital murder trial, the court pointed out that the rule regarding the need for accomplice testimony instructions where a codefendant's testimony incriminates the defendant has changed: where such testimony is given, the jury should be instructed that the testimony is to be viewed with care and caution and is subject to the corroboration requirement. (38 C.4th 562; see text and Supp., §108.) The defendant in Avila was tried at a time when it was within the trial court's discretion not to give an instruction of this type, and the trial judge chose not to do so. However, there was no need to decide whether the failure to give the instruction was error because, even if it was, it was harmless. The testimony was sufficiently corroborated by independent evidence, including defendant's initial attempt to conceal from police his involvement in the activities culminating in the murders, which implied consciousness of guilt. (38 C.4th 563.)

3. Statutory Requirements of Corroboration.

a. Testimony of Accomplice.

4. Nature of Corroboration Required.

aa. In General.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 103

[§ 103] In General.

(1) Insufficient Corroboration. The corroboration must, in some way, tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime. If it merely raises a suspicion of guilt, however grave, it is insufficient. (See People v. Robinson (1964) 61 C.2d 373, 399, 38 C.R. 890, 392 P.2d 970; People v. Valardi (1966) 240 C.A.2d 98, 99, 49 C.R. 339; People v. Martinez (1982) 132 C.A.3d 119, 132, 183 C.R. 256; People v. Falconer (1988) 201 C.A.3d 1540, 1543, 248 C.R. 60.)

Thus, in People v. Robinson, supra, two items of evidence were introduced: (a) Fingerprints of defendant found on codefendant's escape car. But the expert could not fix their date, and defendant's association with the car owner made the inference of innocent placement equally permissible; hence, the fingerprints, at most, indicated connection with the codefendant, not with the crime itself. (b) Inconsistent statements by defendant to police concerning his weekend movements. But these merely indicated that he had something to hide from the police, i.e., a guilty frame of mind; they did not afford a reasonable inference of concealing a connection with the particular crime. (61 C.2d 398.)

(2) Instructions. "The corroborating evidence is sufficient if it tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime in such a way as may reasonably satisfy the jury that the witness who must be corroborated is telling the truth." (People v. MacEwing (1955) 45 C.2d 218, 224, 288 P.2d 257 [reversible error to give instruction in alternative form: evidence connects defendant with crime or satisfies jury that witness is telling the truth].) (For proper instructions, see CALJIC (6th ed.), No. 3.10 et seq.; on problem presented where jury is instructed both on CALJIC, No. 2.27 (testimony of single witness sufficient, supra, §89), and CALJIC, No. 3.11 (accomplice testimony must be corroborated, supra, §96), see People v. Noguera (1992) 4 C.4th 599, 630, 631, 15 C.R.2d 400, 842 P.2d 1160 [rejecting defendant's claim that instructions are contradictory].)

In People v. Rodriguez (1994) 8 C.4th 1060, 36 C.R.2d 235, 885 P.2d 1, a murder prosecution, the trial judge gave CALJIC, No. 3.11 (the standard instruction on corroboration of accomplice testimony) but did not give CALJIC, No. 3.13 (one accomplice may not corroborate another). Held, this was proper. One accomplice had testified that defendant and a second accomplice intended to rob the two victims. The surviving victim testified that the second accomplice had asked at the murder scene, "Where do you have it?" Although this question, implying that robbery was defendant's objective, originated with an accomplice, it fell outside the ambit of P.C. 1111. It was not a statement made to law enforcement officials in the hope of leniency or immunity, and it implicated none of the dangers the statute was intended to address. Thus, giving CALJIC, No. 3.13 would have been inappropriate and unnecessary. (8 C.4th 1133.)

(3) Function of Reviewing Court. It is not the duty of the reviewing court in accomplice cases to weigh the corroborative evidence to determine whether it meets the requirements of the statute. An appellate court does not determine "whether the corroborating evidence, by itself, is as compatible with innocence as it is with guilt. That is a question for the trier of fact. All that the appellate court does is to determine whether there is any substantial corroborative evidence, and whether, when error is found, the error committed has led to the verdict reached." (People v. Malone (1947) 82 C.A.2d 54, 60, 185 P.2d 870; see People v. Gallardo (1953) 41 C.2d 57, 63, 257 P.2d 29 [whether corroboration is as compatible with innocence as with guilt is question for trier of fact]; People v. Ruscoe (1976) 54 C.A.3d 1005, 1012, 127 C.R. 6.)

[§ 104] Sufficient Corroboration.

The great majority of the cases find the corroboration adequate. People v. Griffin (1950) 98 C.A.2d 1, 219 P.2d 519, elaborately reviews the authorities and summarizes the rules as follows: The entire conduct of the parties, their relationship, acts, and conduct during and after the crime, may be considered. The corroboration need not extend to all elements of the offense, nor to every detail in the testimony of the accomplice. It need not be strong; it is sufficient if it tends, in some slight degree, to implicate the defendant. It need not be direct; circumstantial evidence is sufficient if the connection of the defendant with the crime may be reasonably inferred therefrom. In brief, the corroborating evidence is sufficient if it connects the defendant with the commission of the crime in such a way as reasonably to satisfy the fact-finder that the accomplice is telling the truth. (98 C.A.2d 25.)

Illustrations are numerous. (See People v. Barclay (1953) 40 C.2d 146, 156, 252 P.2d 321; People v. Gallardo (1953) 41 C.2d 57, 62, 257 P.2d 29; *People v. [§ 105] Use of Accomplice's Testimony.

In People v. Morton (1903) 139 C. 719, 724, 73 P. 609, it was suggested that, for the purpose of evaluating the corroborating evidence, the testimony of the accomplice should be wholly eliminated. This view was followed in People v. Reingold (1948) 87 C.A.2d 382, 393, 197 P.2d 175, where the court laid down the following strict tests: (a) The corroboration "is not sufficient if it requires interpretation and direction to be furnished by the accomplice's testimony to give it value." (b) The evidence "to be sufficient and of the required substantial value must tend directly and immediately to connect the defendant with the offense charged against him." It must connect the defendant with the crime, and not merely with the persons who perpetrated it. (See People v. Rios (1985) 163 C.A.3d 852, 870, 210 C.R. 271, quoting People v. Szeto (1981) 29 C.3d 20, 27, 171 C.R. 652, 623 P.2d 213 [evidence is sufficient "if it does not require interpretation and direction from the testimony of the accomplice"].)

Other decisions suggest that the testimony of the accomplice need not be eliminated and that the corroborative evidence need not independently prove guilt. (See People v. Griffin (1950) 98 C.A.2d 1, 27, 219 P.2d 519, supra, §104; People v. Allen (1951) 104 C.A.2d 402, 413, 231 P.2d 896; People v. Hooker (1954) 126 C.A.2d 394, 399, 272 P.2d 839.) As the court pointed out in People v. Griffin, supra, "if it were required that a complete case for the prosecution be established without reference to the testimony of the accomplice, there would then be no occasion to offer the accomplice as a witness." (98 C.A.2d 25.) (Cf. People v. Goldstein (1955) 136 C.A.2d 778, 787, 289 P.2d 581 [criticizing Griffin view as contrary to expressions in Supreme Court decisions].)

In People v. Bowley (1963) 59 C.2d 855, 31 C.R. 471, 382 P.2d 591, defendant was charged with sex perversion. The only prosecution witness was Joan, who testified that she engaged in the acts with defendant in making a motion picture. The only other evidence was the film, which Joan authenticated as an accurate representation of the events. Held, judgment reversed for lack of corroboration of Joan's testimony.

The court first held that the film itself could be independent evidence (2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Demonstrative, Experimental, and Scientific Evidence, §17), and that Joan, the accomplice, could authenticate it, because the testimony of an accomplice is competent. (59 C.2d 858.) These two propositions appeared to point to the conclusion that the testimony of the accomplice was corroborated by the independent evidence of the film, but they did not, for P.C. 1111 requires corroboration without the aid of any testimony of the accomplice whose testimony is to be corroborated. Hence, (a) the accomplice could authenticate and make the film admissible, but (b) the record could not sustain a conviction, for lack of corroboration apart from any testimony of the accomplice. "To hold otherwise would allow the prosecution to pull itself up by its own bootstraps." (59 C.2d 863.) (See 96 A.L.R.2d 1185 [corroboration of accomplice witness by objective evidence authenticated by same accomplice].)

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 106

[§ 106] Extrajudicial Statement as Testimony.

(1) Statement Requires Corroboration. In People v. Belton (1979) 23 C.3d 516, 153 C.R. 195, 591 P.2d 485, defendant was charged with violation of P.C. 246 (discharging firearm at inhabited dwelling house). In a trial by the court, the prosecution called F, defendant's stepson, as its witness; but F testified that neither he nor his stepfather had anything to do with the shooting. To contradict this exculpatory testimony, the prosecution called deputy sheriff L to testify to F's prior inconsistent statement--that his stepfather drove him by the house and he (F) fired the weapon. L's testimony as to F's prior statement was the only evidence presented by the prosecution in its case in chief. Defendant moved for an acquittal under P.C. 1118, the motion was denied, and defendant was found guilty. Held, reversed.

(a) The extrajudicial statement of F was sufficient to establish his status as an accomplice, but the difficult question was whether that statement was "testimony of an accomplice" calling for corroboration. "Testimony" is generally defined as oral evidence given by witnesses under oath. (23 C.3d 524; see supra, §25.) Hence, F's statement did not come within the literal terms of P.C. 1111.

(b) But the cases dealing with the statute have focused on the source of the statements rather than their evidentiary form in articulating the legislative intent. (23 C.3d 525.) And the fact that accomplice F's incriminating out-of-court statement was not part of his testimony at the trial does not lessen the danger that it comes from a tainted source. (23 C.3d 525.)

(c) At the time P.C. 1111 was adopted (1872), a prior inconsistent statement could be used only to impeach; it was not until 1967 that Ev.C. 1235 made it substantive evidence (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §156). When the Legislature gave this enlarged effect to the statement, "it neglected, through apparent oversight, to substitute a more inclusive word for the term 'testimony' so that section 1111 might clearly be applicable to this new form of accomplice evidence." (23 C.3d 526.)

(d) The legislative intent was to eliminate the danger of a defendant being convicted solely upon the suspect, untrustworthy and unreliable evidence coming from an accomplice. The language of the section must be given a construction which, though departing from the literal language, carries out that intent. Hence, "this court concludes that Fouse's prior inconsistent statement constituted 'testimony,' as the term is used in section 1111." (23 C.3d 526.) Because the prosecution produced no corroboration during its case in chief, the motion to acquit should have been granted. (23 C.3d 526.) (See concurring opinion, suggesting a different theory: The conviction was obtained upon the testimony of F because it was that testimony that made the prior inconsistent statement admissible.) (See People v. Andrews (1989) 49 C.3d 200, 214, 260 C.R. 583, 776 P.2d 285 ["Section 1111 applies to an accomplice's out-of-court statements when such statements are used as substantive evidence of guilt"; discussing Belton].)

(2) Distinction: Out-of-Court Statement Not Made Under Suspect Circumstances. "Testimony" within the meaning of P.C. 1111 includes all oral statements made by an accomplice or coconspirator under oath in a court proceeding and all out-of-court statements of accomplices and coconspirators used as substantive evidence of guilt that are made under suspect circumstances. The most obvious suspect circumstances occur when the accomplice has been arrested or is questioned by the police. When out-of-court statements are not given under suspect circumstances, they do not qualify as "testimony," hence, do not need to be corroborated under P.C. 1111. (People v. Jeffery (1995) 37 C.A.4th 209, 218, 43 C.R.2d 526 [distinguishing Belton and Andrews, supra; accomplice's statements to undercover officer in course of drug sales and without knowledge of officer's true identity were neither suspect, untrustworthy, nor unreliable, hence, required no corroboration].)

(3) Distinction: Statements Admissible Under Hearsay Exception. In People v. Sully (1991) 53 C.3d 1195, 283 C.R. 144, 812 P.2d 163, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §92, the court held that the corroboration requirement of P.C. 1111 did not apply to an accomplice's extrajudicial statement that was admissible as an excited utterance. "The usual problem with accomplice testimony--that it is consciously self-interested and calculated--is not present in an out-of-court statement that is itself sufficiently reliable to be allowed in evidence." (53 C.3d 1230.) (See People v. Williams (1997) 16 C.4th 153, 245, 246, 66 C.R.2d 123, 940 P.2d 710 [statements of accomplice, admitted under prior inconsistent statement exception to hearsay rule, were not given under suspect circumstances and thus did not require corroboration; following Sully and approving analysis of Jeffery].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(3) Distinction: Statements Admissible Under Hearsay Exception. See People v. Brown (2003) 31 C.4th 518, 555, 3 C.R.3d 145, 73 P.3d 1137 [in capital murder case, trial judge's failure to instruct jury on accomplice testimony did not constitute error, where accomplice's statements were admitted under hearsay exception for declarations against penal interests].

B. Sufficiency of One Witness.

3. Statutory Requirements of Corroboration.

b. Treason, Solicitation, False Pretenses, and Perjury.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 107

[§ 107] Treason, Solicitation, False Pretenses, and Perjury.

(1) Treason. Evidence of two witnesses is required. (P.C. 37(b); see 7 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §2036 et seq.)

(2) Solicitation. Solicitation generally must be proven by the testimony of two witnesses or one witness and corroborating circumstances. The testimony of one witness and corroborating circumstances is required to prove a violation of P.C. 653f(d) (solicitation of another to violate Health & Saf.C. 11352, 11379, 11379.5, 11379.6, or 11391 [unlawful manufacture, transportation, sale, distribution, or administration of various controlled substances]) or of P.C. 653f(e) (solicitation of another to violate Welf.C. 14014 [false declaration as to eligibility for health care]). (P.C. 653f(f); see 1 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Elements, §32; People v. Hinman (1967) 253 C.A.2d 896, 900, 61 C.R. 609 [corroboration of solicitee was series of tape recordings of conversations with defendant; sufficient].)

(3) Defrauding by False Pretenses. The testimony of two witnesses or one witness and corroborating circumstances is required. (P.C. 532(b); see 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Property, §44; People v. Curran (1938) 24 C.A.2d 673, 676, 75 P.2d 1090 [failure to give instruction on corroboration in false pretenses case held reversible error, though defendant had not specifically requested it]; People v. Fujita (1974) 43 C.A.3d 454, 470, 117 C.R. 757 [corroboration sufficient].)

(4) Perjury. Prior to 1969, perjury had to be proved by two witnesses or one witness and corroborating circumstances. (See former P.C. 1103a; People v. McRae (1967) 256 C.A.2d 95, 110, 63 C.R. 854 [sufficient]; 1 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Governmental Authority, §75 et seq.; 7 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §2040 et seq.) Now conviction of perjury is precluded "where proof of falsity rests solely upon contradiction by testimony of a single person other than the defendant." (P.C. 118(b).)

V. DETERMINATION OF CREDIBILITY AND WEIGHT

C. Evidence Viewed With Distrust.

1. Testimony of Accomplice.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 108

[§ 108] Testimony of Accomplice.

(1) Right to Instruction. Where the evidence would support an inference that a prosecution witness was an accomplice, the defendant is entitled to an instruction that the testimony of an accomplice should be viewed with distrust. (See People v. Barclay (1953) 40 C.2d 146, 153, 252 P.2d 321; People v. Williams (1997) 16 C.4th 635, 679, 680, 66 C.R.2d 573, 941 P.2d 752 [in instructing on accomplice testimony, trial judge did not err in refusing defendant's proposed instruction that two witnesses were accomplices as matter of law; instruction of this type may be given only where facts regarding witness' criminal culpability are clear and undisputed]; People v. Guiuan (1998) 18 C.4th 558, 76 C.R.2d 239, 957 P.2d 928, infra, this section [instruction should be given whenever witness who might be determined by jury to be accomplice testifies]; People v. Jones (1964) 228 C.A.2d 74, 94, 39 C.R. 302; People v. Hill (1993) 12 C.A.4th 798, 808, 15 C.R.2d 806 [failure to give instruction as to accomplice's taped statement to police was error, even though accomplice gave contradictory in-court testimony exculpating defendant and court gave wilfully false witness instruction]; CALJIC (6th ed.), No. 3.18; 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §655; cf. 4 A.L.R.3d 351 [propriety of instruction that accomplice's credibility is to be judged in same manner as for any other witness].) (On failure to give instruction as harmless error, see People v. Gordon (1973) 10 C.3d 460, 472, 110 C.R. 906, 516 P.2d 298 [prosecutor himself advised jury to distrust testimony of his star witness]; People v. Salazar (1977) 74 C.A.3d 875, 881, 141 C.R. 753 [other evidence sufficient]; on requirement that accomplice testimony be corroborated, see supra, §96.)

(2) Former Distinction: Where Accomplice Testifies for Defendant. The instruction was developed in order to make the admission of accomplice testimony against the defendant fair; thus, it was formerly held that where the accomplice gives testimony favorable to the defendant, there is no reason to suspect that the accomplice is attempting to earn clemency or leniency, and the instruction should not be given. This was so whether the accomplice was called by the defendant or by the prosecution. (People v. Graham (1978) 83 C.A.3d 736, 744, 149 C.R. 6; People v. Provencio (1989) 210 C.A.3d 290, 309, 258 C.R. 330 [instruction would have raised inference that accomplice's testimony in favor of defendant was suspect]; cf. People v. Flanders (1979) 89 C.A.3d 634, 638, 152 C.R. 696 [accomplice's testimony only partially favorable to defendant, and judge limited instruction to incriminating aspects; no error]; People v. Franco (1994) 24 C.A.4th 1528, 1537, 1538, 30 C.R.2d 478 [trial judge gave unmodified CALJIC, No. 3.18 even though accomplice testimony was partly favorable and partly unfavorable; defendant who did not object at trial could not claim error on appeal; distinguishing Flanders and Graham].)

In People v. Guiuan (1998) 18 C.4th 558, 76 C.R.2d 239, 957 P.2d 928, the distinction between favorable and unfavorable accomplice testimony was criticized and the rule regarding accomplice testimony was simplified: "[T]he trial court should not be required to parse the testimony of an accomplice to determine whether it may be construed as 'favorable' or 'unfavorable' to the defendant. ... [T]he jury should be instructed to the following effect whenever an accomplice, or a witness who might be determined by the jury to be an accomplice, testifies: 'To the extent an accomplice gives testimony that tends to incriminate the defendant, it should be viewed with caution. This does not mean, however, that you may arbitrarily disregard that testimony. You should give that testimony the weight you think it deserves after examining it with care and caution and in the light of all the evidence in the case.' Such a pretailored instruction is applicable regardless which party called the accomplice. ... [T]he trial court is ... required to give the instruction sua sponte. ... It has long been one of the instructions on the 'general principles of law' that trial courts must give on their own initiative." (18 C.4th 569, disapproving People v. Graham to extent it would require trial judge to determine whether testimony in question is favorable or unfavorable to defendant.) (See CALJIC (6th ed.), No. 3.18, as revised in 1999 to incorporate language suggested in Guian.)

(3) Distinction: Where Each Accomplice-Defendant Incriminates the Other. In People v. Alvarez (1996) 14 C.4th 155, 58 C.R.2d 385, 926 P.2d 365, a capital murder case, each of the two codefendants testified on his own behalf and, at least to some extent, incriminated the other. The trial judge gave a modified version of CALJIC, No. 3.18. Held, this was proper. "[W]hen, as here, a defendant testifies on his own behalf, denies guilt, and incriminates his codefendant, a trial court has authority to instruct the jury that this testimony should be viewed with distrust as that of an accomplice. ... The superior court delivered such an instruction: the testimony of an accomplice-defendant that tends to incriminate his codefendant should be viewed with distrust. Its limitation--the accomplice-defendant's testimony should be viewed with distrust to the extent that it tends to incriminate his codefendant--was altogether proper." (14 C.4th 218.) Defendant understandably did not complain about the instruction to the extent it benefitted him as the incriminated defendant; he complained only insofar as it burdened him as the incriminating accomplice-defendant. But if "an accomplice who testifies against a defendant deserves 'close scrutiny'--and he does--he deserves such scrutiny even if he is himself a defendant. Like any other accomplice, an accomplice-defendant has the motive, opportunity, and means to try to help himself at the other's expense." (14 C.4th 219.)

Slaughter* (2002) 27 C.4th 1187, 1202, 120 C.R.2d 477, 47 P.3d 262 [refusal to give instruction was proper, where person asserted by defendant to be accomplice was victim of defendant's murder attempt and was not liable to prosecution for same offenses as defendant]; People v. Hernandez (2003) 30 C.4th 835, 874, 134 C.R.2d 602, 69 P.3d 446 [in penalty phase of capital murder trial in which prosecution witness, defendant's brother-in-law, testified regarding uncharged murder involving defendant, trial judge erred in failing to give accomplice instruction; evidence was insufficient to show that witness was accomplice in uncharged murder as matter of law, but jury could have concluded by preponderance of evidence that he was]. (3) Distinction: Where Each Accomplice-Defendant Incriminates the Other. See People v. Coffman & Marlow (2004) 34 C.4th 1, 105, 17 C.R.3d 710, 96 P.3d 30, following *People v. C. Evidence Viewed With Distrust.

2. Testimony of In-Custody Informant.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 109

[§ 109] Testimony of In-Custody Informant.

In any criminal trial or proceeding in which an in-custody informant testifies as a witness, the trial judge, on request, must instruct the jury as follows:

"The testimony of an in-custody informant should be viewed with caution and close scrutiny. In evaluating such testimony, you should consider the extent to which it may have been influenced by the receipt of, or expectation of, any benefits from the party calling that witness. This does not mean that you may arbitrarily disregard such testimony, but you should give it the weight to which you find it to be entitled in the light of all the evidence in the case." (P.C. 1127a(b); see P.C. 1127a(a) [in-custody informant defined]; on permitted consideration, see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §20.)

V. DETERMINATION OF CREDIBILITY AND WEIGHT

C. Evidence Viewed With Distrust.

3. Witness False in Part.

a. Nature of Instruction.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 110

[§ 110] Nature of Instruction.

(1) General Rule. An instruction that a witness "false in one part of his or her testimony is to be distrusted in others" is given under the general power of the judge. (BAJI (8th ed.), No. 2.22; see CALJIC (6th ed.), No. 2.21.2 ["willfully false in one material part" of testimony]; People v. Kennedy (1937) 21 C.A.2d 185, 201, 69 P.2d 224; Flemmer v. Monckton (1946) 73 C.A.2d 271, 276, 166 P.2d 380 ["it was not merely the privilege of said court, but indeed his duty, to view with suspicion the testimony of said witness" on the main issue]; Nelson v. Black (1954) 43 C.2d 612, 613, 275 P.2d 473; Ganahl v. Certain Individuals (1962) 204 C.A.2d 571, 581, 22 C.R. 520; People v. Blassingill (1988) 199 C.A.3d 1413, 1418, 245 C.R. 599 [CALJIC, No. 2.21 (now CALJIC (6th ed.), No. 2.21.2) properly given]; People v. Hill (1993) 12 C.A.4th 798, 810, 15 C.R.2d 806 [same]; People v. Savedra (1993) 15 C.A.4th 738, 746, 19 C.R.2d 115 [instruction did not constitute impermissible, argumentative, "pinpoint" instruction]; People v. Murillo (1996) 47 C.A.4th 1104, 1107, 1108, 55 C.R.2d 21 [failure to give instruction was harmless error, because instruction embodies common sense principle that defense counsel could still argue to jury]; Gargir v. B'Nei Akiva (1998) 66 C.A.4th 1269, 1275, 78 C.R.2d 557 [same]; and see generally 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1008 et seq.; 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §312; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §1045; 4 A.L.R.2d 1077.)

(2) Accepting Other Testimony. The jury may reject the witness' whole testimony unless, from all the evidence, the jury believes "the probability of truth favors [the witness'] testimony in other particulars." (CALJIC, No. 2.21.2; BAJI, No. 2.22; see infra, §111.)

In People v. Rivers (1993) 20 C.A.4th 1040, 25 C.R.2d 602, the Court of Appeal expressed concern about giving CALJIC, No. 2.21.2 in a robbery trial in which, on cross-examination, the victim admitted he had not told police officers that the robbery had originated in an arranged drug sale. Because the victim's testimony was crucial to the prosecution's case, the term "probability of truth" in the instruction could have been construed as reducing the prosecution's burden of proving defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. Any error was harmless, however: The only material fact the jury might have found false was the victim's testimony that defendant had jumped him and taken his money by force, before any drug sale took place. If the jury had found this testimony false, it would have acquitted defendant. (20 C.A.4th 1047.) (See People v. Foster (1995) 34 C.A.4th 766, 775, 776, 40 C.R.2d 633 [addressing concerns of Rivers court; "in the context of all the instructions, no reasonable juror would have interpreted CALJIC, No. 2.21.2 to permit a criminal conviction where the evidence showed the prosecution's evidence was 'probably' truthful, hence the defendant was 'probably' guilty, yet not guilty beyond a reasonable doubt"]; People v. Wade (1995) 39 C.A.4th 1487, 1494, 1495, 46 C.R.2d 645 [following Foster as to probability issue and further holding that "material" in CALJIC, No. 2.21.2 need not be defined, as it is used in its common and ordinary sense].)

V. DETERMINATION OF CREDIBILITY AND WEIGHT

C. Evidence Viewed With Distrust.

3. Witness False in Part.

b. Testimony of Single Witness.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 111

[§ 111] Testimony of Single Witness.

The general rule of sufficiency of a single witness (supra, §89) may apply even though the witness has been partly impeached by showing of contradictions or inconsistencies or even false testimony in part. Such inconsistencies are not regarded as judicial admissions (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §117), and the jury may still give credence to the witness. (See discussion in People v. Kennedy (1937) 21 C.A.2d 185, 201, 69 P.2d 224; People v. Bodkin (1961) 196 C.A.2d 412, 415, 16 C.R. 506; People v. Swanson (1962) 204 C.A.2d 169, 173, 22 C.R. 178, citing the text; People v. Maxwell (1979) 94 C.A.3d 562, 575, 156 C.R. 630; People v. Leigh (1985) 168 C.A.3d 217, 221, 214 C.R. 61.) Consequently, the contradictions will not be a ground for reversal on appeal except in the rare situation in which the testimony appears to be inherently improbable. (People v. Holman (1945) 72 C.A.2d 75, 89, 164 P.2d 297; see supra, §91.)

In People v. Bodkin, supra, a court trial for sale of narcotics, the sole witness testified to the facts of the offense in the morning; in the afternoon, he was called by the defense and recanted. Held, it was for the trial judge to determine which testimony was the truth and which the perjury; and the lack of any credible explanation for the sudden change, coupled with circumstantial evidence supporting the first version, amply justified the conclusion that it was the truth. (196 C.A.2d 414.)

c. Rejection Not Substitute for Affirmative Evidence.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 112

[§ 112] Rejection Not Substitute for Affirmative Evidence.

In Estate of Bould (1955) 135 C.A.2d 260, 287 P.2d 8, a will contest on the ground of undue influence, the proponent was evasive and untruthful. The trial judge declared that he placed no reliance on her testimony, and denied probate. But the other testimony and circumstantial evidence fell short of a showing of undue influence. Held, judgment reversed, for "[d]isbelief does not create affirmative evidence to the contrary of that which is discarded." (135 C.A.2d 264.) Where testimony is false or evidence is concealed, an inference arises of concealment of the truth, "but it does not reveal the truth itself or warrant an inference that the truth is the direct converse of the rejected testimony." (135 C.A.2d 265.) (See Edwards v. Freeman (1949) 34 C.2d 589, 593, 212 P.2d 883; Oldenburg v. Sears, Roebuck & Co. (1957) 152 C.A.2d 733, 742, 314 P.2d 33; *People v. ## CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

V. DETERMINATION OF CREDIBILITY AND WEIGHT

C. Evidence Viewed With Distrust.

4. Oral Admissions.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 113

[§ 113] Oral Admissions.

(1) General Rule. Evidence of the "oral admissions" of a party "ought to be viewed with caution." This instruction must be given in a criminal case on the court's own motion. (People v. Carpenter (1997) 15 C.4th 312, 392, 63 C.R.2d 1, 935 P.2d 708; see People v. Carswell (1959) 51 C.2d 602, 608, 335 P.2d 99; 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §650; 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §314; BAJI (8th ed.), No. 2.25; CALJIC (6th ed.), No. 2.70.)

(2) Rationale. The reason for the warning, and its importance, are obvious: "[N]o class of evidence is more subject to error or abuse. Witnesses having the best motives are generally unable to state the exact language of an admission, and are liable, by the omission or the changing of words, to convey a false impression of the language used. No other class of testimony affords such temptations or opportunities for unscrupulous witnesses to torture the facts or commit open perjury, as it is often impossible to contradict their testimony at law, or at least by any other witness than the party himself." (People v. Bemis (1949) 33 C.2d 395, 399, 202 P.2d 82; People v. Livaditis (1992) 2 C.4th 759, 788, 9 C.R.2d 72, 831 P.2d 297 [concurring opinion]; see Crawford v. Alioto (1951) 105 C.A.2d 45, 50, 233 P.2d 148.)

(3) Reversible Error. The circumstances of each case determine whether failure to give cautionary instructions on the court's own motion constitutes reversible error. (See People v. Blankenship (1970) 7 C.A.3d 305, 310, 86 C.R. 651 [error, if any, in failing to give instruction was harmless because ample circumstantial evidence independently connected defendant with crimes]; People v. Matta (1976) 57 C.A.3d 472, 484, 129 C.R. 205 [failure to give instruction, though error, was harmless where corpus delicti was convincingly established independently of extrajudicial admissions, and admissions showing intent to commit assault were mere surplusage]; People v. Padilla (1995) 11 C.4th 891, 921, 922, 47 C.R.2d 426, 906 P.2d 388 [failure to give instruction was harmless; there was no dispute that defendant told jailmate that sawed-off shotgun was recovered from home of girlfriend's daughter, and any purported inaccuracies in testimony went to immaterial details]; People v. Carpenter (1997) 15 C.4th 312, 392, 63 C.R.2d 1, 935 P.2d 708 [error was not reversible where witness' testimony was uncontradicted, defendant's alleged statement consisted of five simple words, spoken when defendant had witness' full attention, and there was no evidence that statement was not made, was fabricated, or was inaccurately remembered or reported].)

(4) Distinctions. The following distinctions should be noted:

(a) Although viewed with caution, an oral admission is nevertheless sufficient to sustain a finding or judgment. (See People v. Kelly (1946) 77 C.A.2d 23, 26, 174 P.2d 342.)

(b) The requirement does not apply where the oral statement is proved not by the recollection of a witness who heard it, but by the reliable means of a tape recording. (See People v. Gardner (1961) 195 C.A.2d 829, 832, 16 C.R. 256 [dictum]; People v. Hines (1964) 61 C.2d 164, 173, 37 C.R. 622, 390 P.2d 398 [no error in failing to instruct; Gardner cited]; People v. Mayfield (1997) 14 C.4th 668, 775, 60 C.R.2d 1, 928 P.2d 485.)

(c) It is error to give any instruction as to the weight of an admission when in fact there has been no testimony regarding an admission. Thus, although the court may instruct that the testimony of a witness which purported to relate an oral admission of the defendant should be viewed with distrust, the court should not instruct, on its own motion, without such testimony from a witness, that an admission or statement "by the defendant" ought to be viewed with distrust. The jury may think that the defendant's testimony, if any, must be mistrusted, or that the defendant had in fact made an admission. (People v. Wheelwright (1968) 262 C.A.2d 63, 69, 70, 68 C.R. 356 [pointing out that there was no easily recognizable admission in record, but holding error not prejudicial in light of strong evidence of guilt].)

(d) There is no sua sponte duty to give the instruction at the penalty phase of a criminal trial (People v. Payton (1992) 3 C.4th 1050, 1064, 13 C.R.2d 526, 839 P.2d 1035); the judge must do so only on defense request (People v. Livaditis (1992) 2 C.4th 759, 783, 9 C.R.2d 72, 831 P.2d 297).

V. DETERMINATION OF CREDIBILITY AND WEIGHT

C. Evidence Viewed With Distrust.

5. Weaker Evidence Offered.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 114

[§ 114] Weaker Evidence Offered.

If a party offers weaker and less satisfactory evidence when it could have produced stronger and more satisfactory evidence, the evidence offered should be viewed with distrust (Ev.C. 412), and the jury may be so instructed (see BAJI (8th ed.), No. 2.02; 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §313; 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §649; cf. Hansen v. Warco Steel Corp. (1965) 237 C.A.2d 870, 876, 47 C.R. 428 [error to instruct where evidence not weaker]).

No such instruction may be given, however, against a criminal defendant relying on the privilege against testifying. (See Griffin v. California (1965) 380 U.S. 609, 85 S.Ct. 1229, 14 L.Ed.2d 106, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §433.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

V. DETERMINATION OF CREDIBILITY AND WEIGHT

D. Evidence Suppressed in Civil Cases.

1. Adverse Inference Permissible.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 115

[§ 115] Adverse Inference Permissible.

(1) Former Law. Former C.C.P. 1963 contained a presumption that "evidence wilfully suppressed would be adverse if produced." This was discontinued as a mandatory presumption, and retained as a permissible inference that the trier of fact may draw and on which the jury may be instructed. (See Ev.C. 412, Comment; Ev.C. 600, Comment.)

(2) Current Rule. In determining what inferences to draw from the evidence or facts in the case against a party, the trier of fact may consider, among other things, (a) the party's failure to explain or to deny the evidence or facts in the case against him or her, or (b) the party's wilful suppression of evidence relating to the facts or evidence, if any. (Ev.C. 413; see BAJI (8th ed.), Nos. 2.03 [wilful suppression], 2.04 [failure to deny or explain]; Neumann v. Bishop (1976) 59 C.A.3d 451, 480, 130 C.R. 786 [court properly instructed jury: "In determining what inferences to draw from the evidence or facts in the case against the party, you may consider, among other things, the party's failure to explain or to deny by his testimony such evidence or facts"]; Willard v. Caterpillar (1995) 40 C.A.4th 892, 907, 48 C.R.2d 607 ["traditional remedies for spoliation of evidence include a discretionary jury inference against the spoliator"; citing Ev.C. 413]; 26 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 1051 [inference in product liability case when product at issue is lost or altered])

It is also permissible for counsel to comment on failure to produce a witness (see Las Palmas Associates v. Las Palmas Center Associates (1991) 235 C.A.3d 1220, 1246, 1 C.R.2d 301), although too much repetition and emphasis, or unfair comment, may constitute misconduct. (See Keena v. United R. of San Francisco (1925) 197 C. 148, 158, 239 P. 1061; Winkie v. Turlock Irr. Dist. (1937) 24 C.A.2d 1, 7, 74 P.2d 302; Boyd v. Theetgee (1947) 78 C.A.2d 346, 351, 177 P.2d 637; see also 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §227; cf. Freitas v. Peerless Stages (1952) 108 C.A.2d 749, 761, 239 P.2d 671 [comment held proper].)

(3) Theory Behind Rule. The theory is explained in Shapiro v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. (1946) 76 C.A.2d 75, 172 P.2d 725, quoting Wigmore as follows: "The failure to bring before the tribunal some circumstance, document, or witness, when either the party himself or his opponent claims that the facts would thereby be elucidated, serves to indicate, as the most natural inference, that the party fears to do so, and this fear is some evidence that the circumstance or document or witness, if brought, would have exposed facts unfavorable to the party. These inferences, to be sure, cannot fairly be made except upon certain conditions; and they are also open always to explanation by circumstances which make some other hypothesis a more natural one than the party's fear of exposure. But the propriety of such an inference in general is not doubted. The nonproduction of evidence that would naturally have been produced by an honest and therefore fearless claimant permits the inference that its tenor is unfavorable to the party's cause." (76 C.A.2d 93.)

Many other opinions contain similar statements. (See Breland v. Traylor Engineering & Mfg. Co. (1942) 52 C.A.2d 415, 426, 126 P.2d 455 ["A defendant is not under a duty to produce testimony adverse to himself, but if he fails to produce evidence that would naturally have been produced he must take the risk that the trier of the fact will infer, and properly so, that the evidence, had it been produced, would have been adverse"]; Talbert v. Ostergaard (1954) 129 C.A.2d 222, 230, 276 P.2d 880 ["A trial is not to be perverted into a game which allows a defendant to refrain, with impunity, from producing evidence of a fact which is uniquely within his knowledge, or that of his agent, when the burden of explanation rests with such defendant"]; Thor v. Boska (1974) 38 C.A.3d 558, 567, 113 C.R. 296 [discussing views of Wigmore and McCormick on spoliation of evidence]; Lumpkin v. Friedman (1982) 131 C.A.3d 450, 456, 182 C.R. 378 ["well-recognized rule permitting an inference, where a party fails to produce evidence which he might reasonably be expected to produce, that the evidence would be unfavorable to that party"]; 2 McCormick 5th, §264; 2 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §285 et seq.; 29 Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Evidence §244 et seq.)

(4) Distinctions. Several distinctions should be noted:

(a) Where the failure to explain or deny is the result of a claim of privilege, neither comment nor inference is permissible. (Ev.C. 913, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §96.) But this section merely prohibits comment on the claim of privilege as such; it does not prevent the drawing of inferences from the evidence (or lack of it). (See Ev.C. 412, Comment.) (On impropriety of either comment or inference against criminal defendant (rule of Griffin v. California (1965) 380 U.S. 609, 85 S.Ct. 1229, 14 L.Ed.2d 106), see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §433.)

(b) Although the presumption is eliminated from the trial, something closely akin to it and much stronger is authorized in discovery proceedings in a civil case: Refusal to comply with a discovery order may result in having the facts taken as established in accordance with the claim of the party seeking discovery. (C.C.P. 2025(o), 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §§70, 255; C.C.P. 2023(b)(2).)

(c) Suppression does not warrant the drastic remedy of dismissal of an action. (See 24 Am.Jur.2d (1983 ed.), Dismissal, Discontinuance, and Nonsuit §41 et seq.; 11 A.L.R.3d 1153.) (On tort action for spoliation of evidence, see infra, §117 et seq.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Current Rule. See CACI, Nos. 204, 205 [wilful suppression of evidence, and failure to explain or deny evidence].

(3) Theory Behind Rule. See 2 McCormick 6th, §264.(4) Distinctions.

(b) Facts taken as established: C.C.P. 2023(b)(2) and 2025(o), on issue sanctions ordering that facts be taken as established, were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2023.030(b) and 2025.480(g) in 2004 without substantive change. West's Key Number Digest, Evidence k.78

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

V. DETERMINATION OF CREDIBILITY AND WEIGHT

D. Evidence Suppressed in Civil Cases.

2. Illustrations of Proper Inference.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 116

[§ 116] Illustrations of Proper Inference.

(1) Early Cases. The opinions in many cases antedating the Evidence Code illustrate the effect of suppression or failure to explain:

In Dierman v. Providence Hosp. (1947) 31 C.2d 290, 188 P.2d 12, the presumption of res ipsa loquitur (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Burden of Proof and Presumptions, §114 et seq.) was given added strength by coupling it with the rule permitting an adverse inference. Plaintiff, undergoing an operation for the removal of a wart from her nose, was given nitrous oxide by defendant T, the anesthetist. Defendant L, the surgeon, removed the wart. When he was cauterizing with an electric needle, an explosion occurred (apparently from contamination of the nitrous oxide), injuring the unconscious plaintiff. In this action, plaintiff relied on res ipsa loquitur and defendants relied on their testimony that they used due care. But defendants did not produce the nitrous oxide tank, nor did they explain why they failed to produce it, and made no showing of any chemical analysis of its contents after the accident. Also, they offered no testimony on how these tanks were kept in the hospital after receipt from the manufacturer. The jury's verdict was for defendants, and the resulting judgment was reversed: "We are constrained to the conclusion that in a res ipsa loquitur case where, in addition to the prima facie showing of negligence, it is admitted or appears without dispute that the defendant has it in his power to produce substantial evidence material to the issue of negligence but fails to do so, it must be presumed that such evidence, if produced, would have been adverse to defendant, and under such circumstances the evidence is insufficient to support a verdict for the defendant and plaintiff is entitled to a directed verdict." (31 C.2d 295; see dissenting opinion, arguing that majority changed burden of proof and imposed something close to absolute liability on members of hospital staffs; and see 22 So. Cal. L. Rev. 84, to same effect.) (See Lewis v. Constitution Life Co. of America (1950) 96 C.A.2d 191, 195, 215 P.2d 55; Hays v. Viscome (1953) 122 C.A.2d 135, 138, 264 P.2d 173; Hagy v. Allied Chemical & Dye Corp. (1953) 122 C.A.2d 361, 372, 265 P.2d 86; Talbert v. Ostergaard (1954) 129 C.A.2d 222, 231, 276 P.2d 880; Burr v. Crellin (1958) 159 C.A.2d 275, 279, 323 P.2d 830.)

(2) Later Cases. Later cases reach similar results. In Bihun v. AT&T Information Systems (1993) 13 C.A.4th 976, 992, 16 C.R.2d 787, an employee's action alleging sexual harassment by a senior official of her employer, the trial court instructed the jury that "If you find that defendant ... wilfully suppressed the personnel file of [the senior official], you may draw an inference that there was something damaging to defendant's case contained in that personnel file. Such an inference may be regarded by you as reflecting defendant's recognition of the strength of plaintiff's case generally and/or the weakness of its own case. The weight to be given such circumstance is a matter for your determination." Held, judgment for employee affirmed. Although the instruction the trial court gave goes beyond the language of BAJI, No. 2.03 and Ev.C. 413, it is a correct statement of the law. Former C.C.P. 1963(5) permitted the jury to infer that evidence wilfully suppressed would be adverse if produced. (See supra, §115.) Ev.C. 413 was not intended as a change in the law. Rather, Ev.C. 413, taken together with Ev.C. 412 (supra, §114), restates in substance the meaning that had been given to the presumptions of former C.C.P. 1963(5). (13 C.A.4th 994.)

Other examples include: Albers v. Greyhound Corp. (1970) 4 C.A.3d 463, 475, 84 C.R. 846 [failure to preserve collapsed box that caused injury to plaintiff]; Westinghouse Credit Corp. v. Wolfer (1970) 10 C.A.3d 63, 69, 88 C.R. 654, citing the text [court was justified in denying defendant's motion to vacate her default on ground that her attorney totally failed to represent her; her declaration was completely silent regarding what actually occurred between her and her attorney following her rejection of settlement]; Thor v. Boska (1974) 38 C.A.3d 558, 565, 113 C.R. 296 [fact that defendant doctor was unable to produce original clinical record showing his treatment of plaintiff created inference of consciousness of guilt on his part; exclusion of evidence as to original records and their unavailability, based on defendant's misleading admission of negligence, was miscarriage of justice]; Walsh v. Caidin (1991) 232 C.A.3d 159, 165, 283 C.R. 326 [defendants in wrongful death action can ask jury to draw adverse inferences from surviving spouse's conduct in cremating decedent]; Las Palmas Associates v. Las Palmas Center Associates (1991) 235 C.A.3d 1220, 1246, 1 C.R.2d 301 [in action by buyers of shopping center, alleging fraud by sellers in their promise to guarantee certain leases without intention to honor guaranties, buyers' counsel could properly comment on why sellers suddenly attempted to suppress testimony of scheduled witness].

(3) Annotations. The following annotations collect cases discussing the presumption or inference arising from the failure to produce specified kinds of evidence or witnesses: 69 A.L.R.4th 906 [relevant medical records]; 77 A.L.R.4th 463 [examining doctor]; 78 A.L.R.4th 571 [party's attorney]; 78 A.L.R.4th 616 [occupant of vehicle involved in accident]; 79 A.L.R.4th 694 [spouse]; 79 A.L.R.4th 779 [friend]; 80 A.L.R.4th 337 [family member other than spouse]; 80 A.L.R.4th 405 [witness with employment relationship to party]; 81 A.L.R.4th 872 [law enforcement personnel]; 81 A.L.R.4th 939 [transferor, transferee, broker or other person involved in transaction at issue].

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Later Cases. See Karlsson v. Ford Motor Co. (2006) 140 C.A.4th 1202, 1219, 45 C.R.3d 265 [in products liability action alleging that defendant minivan manufacturer failed to provide harness for center seat of third row, trial judge properly instructed jurors that defendant had attempted to conceal evidence and that it could consider that fact in determining what inferences to draw from evidence on technical feasibility of harness system; sanctions order did not specify what evidence defendant had concealed, but defendant's own conduct was reason for order's imprecision]. ## CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

V. DETERMINATION OF CREDIBILITY AND WEIGHT

D. Evidence Suppressed in Civil Cases.

3. Tort Action for Spoliation of Evidence.

a. Intentional.

1. Spoliation by Party to Action.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 117

[§ 117] Spoliation by Party to Action.

(1) Recognition of Tort in Court of Appeal. The Court of Appeal in Smith v. Superior Court (1984) 151 C.A.3d 491, 496, 198 C.R. 829, recognized a new tort of intentional spoliation of evidence, holding that plaintiffs stated a cause of action against a car dealer that allegedly destroyed or lost physical evidence (automotive parts) that plaintiffs would need in a personal injury action against the dealer and others. (See Willard v. Caterpillar (1995) 40 C.A.4th 892, 907, 48 C.R.2d 607 [recognizing tort, but holding that it was error to submit cause of action to jury here].)

(2) Rejection of Tort by Supreme Court. In Cedars-Sinai Med. Center v. Superior Court (1998) 18 C.4th 1, 74 C.R.2d 248, 954 P.2d 511, the California Supreme Court, which had not previously heard a case concerning intentional spoliation of evidence, determined that the tort does not exist and disapproved Smith v. Superior Court, supra, and Willard v. Caterpillar, supra. Plaintiff, a child injured during birth, sued a hospital for medical malpractice. When, during the course of pretrial discovery, defendant was unable to produce certain records, including fetal monitoring strips recording plaintiff's heartbeat during labor, plaintiff amended his complaint to include a cause of action for intentional spoliation of evidence. Because a medical malpractice plaintiff may not file a complaint seeking punitive damages without a court order under C.C.P. 425.13 (see 6 Summary (9th), Torts, §1368), plaintiff then moved for leave to file a further amended complaint seeking punitive damages based on the spoliation tort. The trial judge granted the motion, and the Court of Appeal denied defendant's petition for writ relief, ruling that C.C.P. 425.13 does not apply to a claim for intentional spoliation of evidence. Held, a decision on the applicability of C.C.P. 425.13 would be academic and hypothetical, because the tort of intentional spoliation of evidence does not exist. (18 C.4th 7.)

(a) Policy against creating tort remedies for litigation-related misconduct. Recognition of the spoliation tort would conflict with the general policy against creating tort remedies for litigation-related misconduct. Underlying this policy is the need for finality of adjudication. For example, damages may not be recovered against a witness who commits perjury when testifying; a rule to the contrary would lead to unending litigation. For the same reason, there is no civil remedy for the presentation of false documentary evidence, and a final judgment may not be attacked, either directly or collaterally, on the ground that evidence has been suppressed, concealed, or falsified. " 'Endless litigation, in which nothing was ever finally determined, would be worse than occasional miscarriages of justice.' " (18 C.4th 11, quoting Pico v. Cohn (1891) 91 C. 129, 133, 134, 25 P. 970, 27 P. 537, 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attack on Judgment in Trial Court, §242.)

(b) Availability of nontort remedies. There are already numerous nontort remedies that seek to punish and deter intentional spoliation of evidence. Chief among these is the inference that Ev.C. 413 (see supra, §115) allows to be drawn against a party because of the party's wilful suppression of evidence. There are also the numerous discovery sanctions allowed by C.C.P. 2023 (see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §249 et seq.), as well as State Bar disciplinary sanctions that can be imposed against an attorney who participates in the spoliation of evidence. Indeed, the risk that a client's act of spoliation may suggest that his or her attorney was somehow involved encourages attorneys to take steps to ensure against spoliation. Finally, criminal penalties are available under P.C. 135 (see 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Governmental Authority, §4). (18 C.4th 13.)

(c) Uncertainty of harm. A third reason why the tort should not be allowed is that the fact of harm itself is too uncertain. "[E]ven if the jury infers from the act of spoliation that the spoliated evidence was somehow unfavorable to the spoliator, there will typically be no way of telling what precisely the evidence would have shown and how much it would have weighed in the spoliation victim's favor. Without knowing the content and weight of the spoliated evidence, it would be impossible for the jury to meaningfully assess what role the missing evidence would have played in the determination of the underlying action." (18 C.4th 14.)

(d) Unjustified costs of creating tort remedy. The costs of creating a tort remedy would also be greater than can be justified. Because of the uncertainty of the fact of harm, there would be an unusually large risk of erroneous determinations. This risk, combined with the availability of punitive damages, would lead persons and entities to take extraordinary measures to preserve documents and things of no apparent value, simply because those items might turn out to have some potential relevance to future litigation. Further, if the spoliation tort were tried in a separate proceeding, there would necessarily be a duplication of effort and the risk of inconsistent results, as the jury reconsidered the evidence from the underlying action in trying to determine what effect the spoliated evidence would have had. On the other hand, if the spoliation tort were tried in the same proceeding, jury confusion would be inevitable. The spoliated evidence would play a part in jury consideration of the underlying claim, by way of the inference available under Ev.C. 413; but the jury's initial assessment as to whether spoliation occurred would necessarily be revisited when the spoliation claim was dealt with. (18 C.4th 15.)

The opinion concludes: "[W]e hold that there is no tort remedy for the intentional spoliation of evidence by a party to the cause of action to which the spoliated evidence is relevant, in cases in which, as here, the spoliation victim knows or should have known of the alleged spoliation before the trial or other decision on the merits of the underlying action. ... We do not decide here whether a tort cause of action for spoliation should be recognized in cases of 'third party' spoliation (spoliation by a nonparty to any cause of action to which the evidence is relevant) or in cases of first party spoliation in which the spoliation victim neither knows nor should have known of the spoliation until after a decision on the merits of the underlying action." (18 C.4th 17, 18, and footnote 4.)

One justice concurred in the judgment, arguing that because the only issue raised in the Court of Appeal related to the applicability of C.C.P. 425.13, the issue of the viability of a tort claim for intentional spoliation of evidence was not properly before the Supreme Court. (18 C.4th 18.) (On spoliation of electronic evidence, see Overly on Electronic Evidence in California, Chap. 6.)

[§ 118] Spoliation by Third Party.

In Temple Community Hosp. v. Superior Court (1999) 20 C.4th 464, 84 C.R.2d 852, 976 P.2d 223, a hospital patient whose face was burned by an electrocautery tool during the course of a medical procedure brought a tort action against the hospital, two physicians, various manufacturers and distributors of medical equipment, and entities responsible for inspecting and maintaining the equipment. She also alleged that the hospital caused the loss of evidence relevant to all of her claims. The hospital moved to strike her prayer for punitive damages in connection with the spoliation claim on the ground that she had failed to comply with C.C.P. 425.13, which allows a claim for punitive damages to proceed in a medical malpractice case only after the court determines that there is a substantial probability that the plaintiff will prevail on the claim. (See 6 Summary (9th), Torts, §1368.) The trial judge denied the motion, finding C.C.P. 425.13 inapplicable to the spoliation cause of action. The Court of Appeal denied writ relief, agreeing with the trial judge that C.C.P. 425.13 did not apply. Held, judgment of the Court of Appeal reversed; for reasons unrelated to C.C.P. 425.13, the spoliation claim may not go forward.

(a) Intentional spoliation tort does not exist. Cedars-Sinai Med. Center v. Superior Court (1998) 18 C.4th 1, 74 C.R.2d 248, 954 P.2d 511, supra, §117, determined that the tort of intentional spoliation of evidence by a party does not exist. Therefore, the only potentially viable part of plaintiff's spoliation claim is the spoliation allegedly committed by the hospital, insofar as it may have affected her causes of action against the other defendants. (20 C.4th 469.) But for many of the same reasons outlined in the Cedars-Sinai case, creation of a third-party spoliation tort is not warranted. (20 C.4th 471.)

(1) Policy against expanding tort liability for litigation-related misconduct. Past decisions of the court have stressed the importance of encouraging parties to make their best effort to investigate and litigate their claims in a single proceeding. This goal would be undermined if a party who was disappointed in a verdict were permitted to bring a new lawsuit against a new party, claiming that the first suit would have been won but for the new party's destruction or suppression of evidence. (20 C.4th 471.)

(2) Policy of avoiding spiralling lawsuits. Spoliation is analogous to perjury, for which there is no tort remedy. In both cases, a party may be deprived of critical evidence or a defense, or remain uncompensated for an injury. "This potential injustice cannot be avoided, however, if we are to escape what we have identified as the greater harm of subjecting parties, witnesses, and the courts to unending litigation over the conduct and outcome of a lawsuit." (20 C.4th 473.)

(3) Even without a tort remedy, spoliation may be exposed. Often the spoliation will come to light in the course of the lawsuit. The third-party spoliator may not be a true stranger to the litigation. As in the present case, the spoliator's actions as a first party may be subject to exposure, so that the plaintiff will end up with the compensation to which he or she is entitled. (20 C.4th 473.) Alternatively, the spoliator may be acting at the behest of a party, in which case a negative inference may be drawn against that party, and the full panoply of discovery sanctions may become applicable. Even if the spoliator is a true stranger, the plaintiff may be able to bring the evidence of spoliation before the jury in order to rebut any contention that the plaintiff's failure to produce the evidence should result in an inference adverse to his or her cause of action. (20 C.4th 474.)

(4) Uncertain damage. As with first-party spoliation, both the fact of injury and the element of causation might be very difficult to prove. (20 C.4th 474.) In some cases, it could even be difficult to determine which party was damaged most by the spoliation. (20 C.4th 474, 475.)

(5) Burdens and costs of recognizing a tort remedy. Recognizing the tort of third-party spoliation would entail the same disadvantages and dangers identified in the Cedars-Sinai case: jury confusion, the potential for abuse in bringing the action, inaccurate and arbitrary verdicts, and the obvious burden on the judicial system, litigants, and witnesses. Further, the class of potential plaintiffs and defendants would be greatly expanded: either party could become a third-party spoliation victim, and the number of potential defendants would not be limited to the number of parties. "We believe the broad threat of potential liability, including that for punitive damages, might well cause numerous persons and enterprises to undertake wasteful and unnecessary record and retention practices." (20 C.4th 476.)

(b) Third-party spoliation victim has other remedies. Although the negative inference of Ev.C. 413 (see supra, §115) is not applicable where the spoliation is not by a party, the third-party spoliation victim is not entirely helpless. "Some discovery sanctions are available to punish third party spoliation, including monetary and contempt sanctions against persons who flout the discovery process by suppressing or destroying evidence. ... A criminal sanction remains available under Penal Code section 135, as are disciplinary sanctions against attorneys who may be involved in spoliation. As we have pointed out, the victim of third party spoliation may deflect the impact of the spoliation on his or her case by demonstrating why the spoliated evidence is missing. ... It also may be possible to establish a connection between the spoliator and a party to the litigation sufficient to invoke the sanctions applicable to spoliation by a party. ... We do not believe that the distinction between sanctions available to victims of first party and third party spoliation should lead us to employ the burdensome and inaccurate instrument of derivative tort litigation in the case of third party spoliation." (20 C.4th 476, 477.)

One justice concurred, pointing out, as he did in the Cedars-Sinai case, that the question whether the tort exists was raised for the first time in the petition for review and thus should not have been reached. But: "I recognize that this argument was rejected by a majority of the court in Cedars-Sinai for reasons which, if persuasive there, apply with equal force here. To withhold my vote on the merits in the present case would thus serve little purpose." (20 C.4th 480.)

Three justices dissented, arguing in favor of a narrowly drawn tort remedy because "[t]here are no strong and effective nontort remedies that would significantly deter third party spoliation, or that would compensate the victim for the loss caused by the spoliation." (20 C.4th 489.) (See 46 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 631 [argument for recognizing tort liability for spoliation only in "rare case" of intentional spoliation by third party].)

  - b. Negligent.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 119

[§ 119] Negligent.

(1) Before Cedars-Sinai Case. Before the California Supreme Court in Cedars-Sinai Med. Center v. Superior Court (1998) 18 C.4th 1, 74 C.R.2d 248, 954 P.2d 511, disapproved Smith v. Superior Court (1984) 151 C.A.3d 491, 198 C.R. 829 (see supra, §117), the reasoning in Smith was applied to hold that a cause of action may be stated for negligent destruction of evidence. In Velasco v. Commercial Bldg. Maintenance Co. (1985) 169 C.A.3d 874, 877, 215 C.R. 504, the tort was recognized, but the pleading was held insufficient. Plaintiffs were injured by an exploding bottle. They alleged that they took the fragments of the bottle to an attorney, who put them in a paper bag which he left on top of his desk; and that employees of defendant maintenance company negligently disposed of them while cleaning the attorney's office. However, the complaint did not allege that the bag was marked to designate its contents, and this was a fatal defect:

"A reasonably thoughtful maintenance employee should not be expected to believe that he or she would destroy valuable evidence which might decrease a client's chance of recovery in a product liability action when that employee sees on an attorney's desk an unlabeled bag containing a broken bottle. On the contrary, a reasonably thoughtful janitor is entitled to assume that, if an item that seemed to be garbage were actually evidence, its container would be appropriately marked and, quite likely, not left lying about. Absent such a designation, it is reasonable for a maintenance person who sees a bag containing a broken bottle in the course of cleaning an office to remove it in much the same way as he or she would throw away the remains of a mid-morning coffee break. No important policy would be furthered by a holding that maintenance workers have a duty not to throw away what appears to be trash simply because such objects are located in an attorney's office. If loss of evidence dealt with in the manner herein described should have been foreseeable, that loss should have been foreseen by the attorney, not by respondent." (169 C.A.3d 878.) (See Augusta v. United Service Auto. Assn. (1993) 13 C.A.4th 4, 10, 16 C.R.2d 400 [2-year limitations period for obligation or liability not founded on written instrument (C.C.P. 339(1)) is applicable]; Gomez v. Acquistapace (1996) 50 C.A.4th 740, 748, 57 C.R.2d 821 [widow's claim for negligent spoliation against employer of her deceased husband was not barred by exclusive remedy rule of worker's compensation scheme]; Dunham v. Condor Ins. Co. (1997) 57 C.A.4th 24, 27, 66 C.R.2d 747 [where insureds were sued for injuries arising from automobile accident, their insurer had no duty to preserve for plaintiff's use evidence that was in insured's possession, absent specific request from plaintiffs to do so]; 41 Hastings L. J. 1077 [tort of negligent spoliation of evidence as means of avoiding "suit within a suit" requirement of legal malpractice actions].)

(2) After Cedars-Sinai Case. The California Supreme Court in Cedars-Sinai did not address whether negligent spoliation of evidence remains a viable cause of action. After Cedars-Sinai, the Court of Appeal, in Johnson v. United Services Auto. Assn. (1998) 67 C.A.4th 626, 79 C.R.2d 234, chose to "adhere to prior precedent and confirm there is a limited cause of action for negligent spoliation of evidence by a third party spoliator." (67 C.A.4th 629.)

In Johnson, plaintiff, a passenger in the family car, was ejected from the car during an accident and sustained brain damage. Adjusters for defendant insurer noted shortly after the accident that "[t]he shoulder strap of the front passenger seat was torn from its housing, which explains why [plaintiff] was ejected from the insureds' vehicle." Also around that time, a police report received by defendant and a statement from plaintiff's father apparently identified a malfunction in the seat belt. Defendant's adjuster also noted that plaintiff had an attorney, wanted to sue the car's manufacturer, and wanted to look at the car. Plaintiff's counsel then had the car inspected by an accident reconstruction expert who removed a portion of the seat belt to preserve it as evidence. Defendant subsequently transferred title of the car to salvage, and the car was sold. Thus, the car was unavailable as evidence when plaintiff later sued the car manufacturer for product liability. After the manufacturer and plaintiff settled the product liability action for $ 500,000, plaintiff sued defendant for negligent spoliation of evidence, claiming that had the car been preserved, plaintiff's product liability claim against the manufacturer would have been worth more. The trial judge instructed the jury that plaintiff could not prevail on his claim unless the jury found either that defendant agreed to preserve plaintiff's car, that plaintiff specifically requested defendant to preserve the car, or that defendant undertook responsibility for preserving the car and plaintiff relied to his detriment on that undertaking. The jury found for defendant. Held, judgment affirmed.

(a) Cedars-Sinai does not foreclose a cause of action for third party negligent spoliation. Three concerns prompted the conclusion in Cedars-Sinai: (1) a tort remedy for first-party intentional spoliation would run counter to the policy against creating derivative, litigation-engendering tort remedies for litigation-related misconduct; (2) there are sufficient existing nontort remedies for first-party spoliation, particularly within the underlying litigation itself (for example, sanctions or evidentiary inferences against the first-party spoliator); and (3) the fact of harm in spoliation cases is uncertain, and the costs related to those cases are significant, such as inaccuracy, confusion, and duplication in the judicial process, as well as the costs of preservation. (67 C.A.4th 631.) "Of these three concerns, the first two basically are not implicated in the third party spoliation context. The third concern is implicated in that context, however. A similar uncertainty of the fact of harm, though, has been addressed in the prospective economic advantage arena ... and the costs of preservation can be placed on the person seeking preservation." (67 C.A.4th 632.)

(b) The trial judge's instruction correctly indicated the three situations in which a duty can be created in a third-party negligent spoliation of evidence case. In addition, a duty may also be based on some other contractual foundation, or on a statute, a regulation, or some analogous special relationship. Constructive notice of a need to preserve, however, is not enough to create a duty to preserve in this context. (67 C.A.4th 635.) Consequently, the fact that defendant knew (or should have known) that there was a seat belt malfunction, coupled with the notice to defendant that the plaintiff had an attorney, that plaintiff wanted to sue the seat belt manufacturer, and that he wanted his attorney or representative to look at the car, did not create a duty to preserve the car. (67 C.A.4th 636.)

(c) The "specific request" duty basis requires that such a request be accompanied by an offer to pay the cost or otherwise bear the burden of preserving. "We do not think a tort duty to preserve should be created simply by someone specifically requesting a third party to preserve something. Preservation may entail significant burdens. ... Formally adding this condition to the 'specific request' duty basis gives the alleged third party spoliator 'some say' and control in the matter, similar to what the spoliator has in the 'agreement' and the 'undertaking' duty contexts. This condition also places the burden of preservation rightfully where it belongs--on the person or entity requesting preservation." Defendant here had no duty to preserve plaintiff's car. (67 C.A.4th 638.)

The California Supreme Court in Temple Community Hosp. v. Superior Court (1999) 20 C.4th 464, 471, footnote 3, 84 C.R.2d 852, 976 P.2d 223, supra, §118, declined to determine whether the tort of negligent spoliation still exists or to discuss Johnson, supra.

(2) After Cedars-Sinai Case. The same policy considerations that led the California Supreme Court in Cedars-Sinai Med. Center v. Superior Court (1998) 18 C.4th 1, 74 C.R.2d 248, 954 P.2d 511, text, §117, and Temple Community Hosp. v. Superior Court (1999) 20 C.4th 464, 84 C.R.2d 852, 976 P.2d 223, text, §118, to determine that the tort of intentional spoliation of evidence should not be recognized apply with equal force to negligent spoliation. "Moreover, it would be anomalous to impose liability for negligence with respect to conduct that would not give rise to liability if committed intentionally." (Coprish v. Superior Court (2000) 80 C.A.4th 1081, 1088, 1089, 1091, 95 C.R.2d 884 [conclusions of *Johnson v. United Services Auto. ## CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

V. DETERMINATION OF CREDIBILITY AND WEIGHT

D. Evidence Suppressed in Civil Cases.

4. Justifiable Failure To Produce.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 120

[§ 120] Justifiable Failure To Produce.

The mere failure to produce all potential witnesses is not equivalent to a suppression of evidence. There is no general obligation to call every person with knowledge of the facts in controversy, and experienced counsel exercise care in their selection. Where the witness is deemed unreliable, or his or her testimony would be merely cumulative, or if he or she is available to either side, no unfavorable inference should be drawn from failure to call the witness. (See Davis v. Franson (1956) 141 C.A.2d 263, 270, 296 P.2d 600; Provencio v. Merrick (1970) 5 C.A.3d 39, 41, 42, 84 C.R. 882 [personal injury action; police officer did not observe accident but merely investigated it, and was as available to plaintiff as to defendants]; Neumann v. Bishop (1976) 59 C.A.3d 451, 481, 130 C.R. 786 [no showing that persons not called were prepared and qualified to testify to any fact in issue]; 2 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §287.)

In Davis v. Franson, supra, a personal injury action, defendant testified to no recollection of the circumstances and relied on the former presumption of due care (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Burden of Proof and Presumptions, §15). Held, judgment for defendant affirmed despite his failure to call his guest to the stand. The latter being available to either side, there was no wilful suppression. "Counsel for a party to a civil action has not only the right but the duty to exercise discrimination in selecting the witnesses for whom his client vouches. Assuming, of course, his honesty and good faith, an attorney may not believe the account of such a potential witness, or may think that he is inaccurate or prejudiced or otherwise disqualified to testify." (141 C.A.2d 270.)

Obviously, a plaintiff cannot claim suppression by a defendant or recover judgment based on the defendant's failure to produce evidence unless the plaintiff meets the burden of proving a prima facie case. (See Vaughn v. Coccimiglio (1966) 241 C.A.2d 676, 678, 50 C.R. 876.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

V. DETERMINATION OF CREDIBILITY AND WEIGHT

E. Evidence Suppressed in Criminal Cases.

1. Suppression by Prosecution.

a. General Duty To Disclose.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 121

[§ 121] General Duty To Disclose.

(1) General Rule. Where the prosecution suppresses evidence favorable to an accused, much more than an inference is involved: Intentional suppression of material evidence is a denial of due process. (See Brady v. Maryland (1963) 373 U.S. 83, 83 S.Ct. 1194, 1196, 10 L.Ed.2d 215, 218.) Moreover, even the negligent or inadvertent suppression of material evidence may result in denial of a fair trial and constitute reversible error. (People v. Westmoreland (1976) 58 C.A.3d 32, 45, 129 C.R. 554; see Giglio v. United States (1972) 405 U.S. 150, 92 S.Ct. 763, 766, 31 L.Ed.2d 104, 109 [prosecution witness concealed assistant prosecutor's promise that he could avoid prosecution by testifying; whether nondisclosure by different assistant resulted from negligence or design, promise had to be attributed to government and jury was entitled to know of it].) (See generally 77 Harv. L. Rev. 1528 [failure to disclose psychiatric opinion favorable to accused]; 51 Stanf. L. Rev. 567 [discussion of "discovery waivers," in which defendants waive right to additional discovery of potentially favorable evidence as part of plea bargain]; 79 A.L.R.4th 694 [presumption or inference arising from failure to produce or examine spouse]; 80 A.L.R.4th 337 [presumption or inference arising from failure to produce or examine family member other than spouse]; 80 A.L.R.4th 405 [presumption or inference arising from party's failure to produce or examine witness with employment relationship to party]; 80 A.L.R.4th 547 [presumption or inference arising from failure to produce or examine informant]; 81 A.L.R.4th 872 [presumption or inference arising from state's failure to produce or examine law enforcement personnel].)

(2) Requirement of Materiality. There is no rule requiring reversal on all occasions when relevant evidence is withheld; the defendant must make a showing of substantial materiality. "The prosecution does not have to risk reversal simply because a complete accounting of all conceivably exculpatory evidence is not made." (People v. Ruthford (1975) 14 C.3d 399, 409, 121 C.R. 261, 534 P.2d 1341; 4 Hastings Const. L. Q. 715 [Ruthford]; 6 Golden Gate L. Rev. 851 [Ruthford].) The prosecution's duty of disclosure applies only to evidence that is both favorable to the defendant and material on either guilt or punishment. (In re Sassounian (1995) 9 C.4th 535, 543, 37 C.R.2d 446, 887 P.2d 527, infra, §123; and see generally In re Ferguson (1971) 5 C.3d 525, 96 C.R. 594, 487 P.2d 1234, infra, §134; 7 U.S.F. L. Rev. 348 [development of prosecutorial duty to disclose in California]; 34 A.L.R.3d 16 [suppression of evidence as grounds for vitiating criminal conviction]; 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §551.)

(3) Effect of Nondisclosure. In United States v. Agurs (1976) 427 U.S. 97, 96 S.Ct. 2392, 49 L.Ed.2d 342, defendant was convicted of second degree murder for stabbing her victim to death in a motel room. On a motion for new trial, defendant contended that the prosecutor failed to disclose the victim's prior criminal record, which would have been evidence of his violent character. The prosecution opposed the motion on the primary ground that there was no duty to tender the record in the absence of an appropriate request. Held, the prosecution's conduct did not deprive defendant of a fair trial under the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment.

(a) Cases where material was known to the prosecution but unknown to the defense fall into three general categories. First, where the prosecution's case included perjured testimony and the prosecutor knew or should have known that fact; a strict standard of materiality applies because these cases involve a corruption of the truth-seeking function of the trial process. Second, where defense counsel made a pretrial request for specific evidence, but did not receive it; failure to make a response is seldom, if ever, excusable. Third, where exculpatory information in the prosecutor's possession was unknown to defense counsel, who made no request for material or made only a general request; that category includes the present case. (96 S.Ct. 2397, 49 L.Ed.2d 349.)

(b) In advance of trial and sometimes during trial, the prosecutor must decide what, if anything, to submit voluntarily to defense counsel. After trial, a judge may have to determine whether nondisclosure deprived the defendant of due process. "Logically the same standard must apply at both times. For unless the omission deprived the defendant of a fair trial, there was no constitutional violation requiring that the verdict be set aside; and absent a constitutional violation, there was no breach of the prosecutor's constitutional duty to disclose." (96 S.Ct. 2399, 49 L.Ed.2d 352.) But there is a significant practical difference between the pretrial and post-trial decisions. "If everything that might influence a jury must be disclosed, the only way a prosecutor could discharge his constitutional duty would be to allow complete discovery of his files as a matter of routine practice. ... The mere possibility that an item of undisclosed information might have helped the defense, or might have affected the outcome of the trial, does not establish 'materiality' in the constitutional sense." (96 S.Ct. 2400, 49 L.Ed.2d 353.)

(c) The constitutional obligation is not measured by the prosecutor's moral culpability or wilfulness. "If evidence highly probative of innocence is in his file, he should be presumed to recognize its significance even if he has actually overlooked it. ... Conversely, if evidence actually has no probative significance at all, no purpose would be served by requiring a new trial simply because an inept prosecutor incorrectly believed he was suppressing a fact that would be vital to the defense. If the suppression of evidence results in constitutional error, it is because of the character of the evidence, not the character of the prosecutor." (96 S.Ct. 2400, 49 L.Ed.2d 353.)

(d) For evidence that was available to the prosecutor but not submitted to the defense, the defendant should not have to satisfy the severe burden of demonstrating that the newly discovered evidence probably would have resulted in acquittal. If the standard for newly discovered evidence from the prosecutor were the same as from a neutral source, there would be no special significance to the prosecutor's obligation to serve the cause of justice. But not every nondisclosure is error. "[I]f the omitted evidence creates a reasonable doubt that did not otherwise exist, constitutional error has been committed. This means that the omission must be evaluated in the context of the entire record. If there is no reasonable doubt about guilt whether or not the additional evidence is considered, there is no justification for a new trial. On the other hand, if the verdict is already of questionable validity, additional evidence of relatively minor importance might be sufficient to create a reasonable doubt." (96 S.Ct. 2401, 49 L.Ed.2d 355.) (See 94 Harv. L. Rev. 887 [prosecutor's duty to disclose promises of favorable treatment made to prosecution witnesses; criticism of Agurs standards]; 4 Pepperdine L. Rev. 435 [Agurs impact on prosecutorial disclosure].)

(4) Duty To Disclose After Trial. The prosecutor's duty to disclose material exculpatory evidence extends to evidence that may reflect on the credibility of a material witness, and the duty does not end when the trial is over. (People v. Garcia (1993) 17 C.A.4th 1169, 1179, 1183, 22 C.R.2d 545 [at time of negotiating stipulated partial reversal, prosecutor improperly withheld exculpatory evidence as to credibility of prosecution's accident reconstruction expert].)

pretrial statement]; 24 A.L.R.6th 1 [failure to disclose exculpatory tape-recorded evidence].(1a) (New) Distinction: Rule Inapplicable at Plea Agreement Stage. The prosecution is not constitutionally required to disclose material impeachment evidence prior to entering into a plea agreement with a criminal defendant. (United States v. Ruiz (2002) 536 U.S. 622, 122 S.Ct. 2450, 2457, 153 L.Ed.2d 586, 597.)

(1b) (New) Distinction: Doubts About Validity of Expert Witness' Testimony. In People v. Seaton (2001) 26 C.4th 598, 110 C.R.2d 441, 28 P.3d 175, a capital murder trial, a pathologist testified for the prosecution during the guilt phase. After the jury returned a guilty verdict, the district attorney's office gave defendant three internal memoranda critical of the witness. One of them was by the prosecutor in this case, and the other two concerned his testimony in other cases. Held, the prosecutor did not engage in misconduct in relying on the witness' testimony in his closing argument, and did not have a duty to disclose the information in the memoranda that was critical of the witness. A prosecutor's personal doubts about a theory expounded by an expert witness are not a form of impeaching evidence that must be disclosed to the defendant. If the prosecution becomes aware of information casting doubt on the accuracy of the testimony of one of its expert witnesses, it must disclose that evidence if it is material. In this case, however, there was nothing to suggest that the prosecutor was aware of any such information before trial. His doubts arose after he heard the conflicting testimony of a defense witness. (26 C.4th 649.) As to the memoranda concerning other cases, the criticisms contained in them were not material. They concerned the witness' accuracy as to factual observations, but defendant did not object to the witness' factual testimony in his case, only to the conclusions he drew from those facts. (26 C.4th 648, 649.) (See People v. Morales (2003) 112 C.A.4th 1176, 1196, 5 C.R.3d 615 [in murder case in which defendant testified that he was in bedroom selling drugs when murder occurred on front porch, and in which one prosecution witness testified, contrary to all other witnesses, that there was no drug sale, prosecutor did not knowingly use false testimony in violation of defendant's right to due process, where, in closing argument, he stated personal belief that witness was lying, and defendant was unable to demonstrate that witness' testimony was in fact false; relying on Seaton].)

(2) Requirement of Materiality. See *People v. ### V. DETERMINATION OF CREDIBILITY AND WEIGHT

E. Evidence Suppressed in Criminal Cases.

1. Suppression by Prosecution.

b. Reversible Error.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 122

[§ 122] Reversible Error.

In People v. Ruthford (1975) 14 C.3d 399, 121 C.R. 261, 534 P.2d 1341, the prosecution secretly made arrangements for lenient treatment of a witness' wife in an unrelated case if the witness testified against defendant. Defendant denied participation in the crime and presented an alibi defense, and the case was closely balanced. Held, suppression of the evidence that the key prosecution witness had a motive to lie was reversible error under the harmless-beyond-a-reasonable-doubt standard of Chapman v. California (1967) 386 U.S. 18, 87 S.Ct. 824, 17 L.Ed.2d 705 (6 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Reversible Error, §10). (14 C.3d 408.) (But see In re Sassounian (1995) 9 C.4th 535, 545, footnote 7, 37 C.R.2d 446, 887 P.2d 527, infra, §123 [disapproving use of harmless error analysis in Ruthford].)

In re Brown (1998) 17 C.4th 873, 72 C.R.2d 698, 952 P.2d 715, was a capital murder case in which defendant did not deny shooting the victim, a police officer, but asserted a defense of diminished capacity, claiming that he was under the influence of methamphetamine at the time of the killing. The prosecution rebutted this claim with blood test results that showed the absence of any drug. A laboratory worksheet, however, never forwarded to the prosecutor, revealed that a preliminary test had shown the presence of phencyclidine. Held, reversed; defendant was denied a fair trial.

(a) The crime laboratory's failure to apprise the prosecution of the worksheet did not relieve the prosecutor of his obligation to review the laboratory's files for exculpatory evidence. He was ultimately responsible when the defense did not receive a copy. "Any other rule would leave the defendant's due process rights to the fortuity of a subordinate agency's procedural protocol, which the Supreme Court has squarely rejected." (17 C.4th 880, 881.)

(b) A reviewing court's determination as to whether the undisclosed evidence was material in the constitutional sense rests on principles articulated in United States v. Bagley (1985) 473 U.S. 667, 105 S.Ct. 3375, 87 L.Ed.2d 481: (1) Only a "reasonable probability" of a different result is required; (2) the defendant need not demonstrate that, after discounting the inculpatory evidence in light of the undisclosed evidence, there would not have been enough left to convict; (3) once constitutional error is found, there is no need for further harmless error review, because one test subsumes the other; (4) although the importance of the undisclosed evidence is evaluated item by item, its cumulative effect must be considered collectively; and (5) the reviewing court may consider any adverse effect that the failure to disclose may have had on the preparation or presentation of the defendant's case, which might have taken a different course if the error had not occurred. (17 C.4th 886, 887.)

(c) Here, although defendant claimed methamphetamine intoxication, defense counsel indicated that the positive phencyclidine results would have refocused their defense on intoxication of that sort, especially because defendant had an extensive history of drug abuse, including phencyclidine. Any rebuttal evidence presented by the prosecution could have been countered with expert testimony indicating that the differing test outcomes were not necessarily incompatible. Thus the result could have been a battle of experts, with significant points of agreement between the two sides. The prosecution does not dispute the conclusion that defendant could have presented a credible diminished capacity defense along these lines, and it makes no claim that the phencyclidine results would have been inadmissible. "On this record, we conclude the positive ... finding was material. ... As outlined above, this 'favorable evidence could reasonably be taken to put the whole case in such a different light as to undermine confidence in the verdict.' " (17 C.4th 889, 891, quoting Kyles v. Whitley (1995) 514 U.S. 419, 115 S.Ct. 1555, 1566, 131 L.Ed.2d 490, 506.)

In People v. Westmoreland (1976) 58 C.A.3d 32, 129 C.R. 554, the prosecutor knew that a prosecution witness' negative answer to the question of whether he had been given the chance to plead guilty to a lesser offense was false. But the prosecutor kept silent and foreclosed further defense inquiry into the matter. Held, the prosecutor's omission was a failure to disclose material evidence about the credibility of a key prosecution witness and was prejudicial. The witness was an eyewitness whose idea of the truth was the ability to tell the same story more than once. (58 C.A.3d 45.) Even though the prosecutor's failure to clarify the misleading testimony might have been inadvertent, the result was improper. "Where, as here, two or more persons are accused, and then charged, of complicity in the same offense, and where the district attorney plans to call one of them as a prosecution witness, he must disclose to all other defendants any offer he has made to the prospective witness concerning a plea of guilty to a lesser offense, or other lenient treatment, regardless of his reasons for making the offer. The district attorney also must disclose to all defendants any discussions he may have had with the potential witness as to the possibility of leniency in exchange for favorable testimony even though no offer actually was made or accepted. Second, the district attorney must correct any false or misleading testimony that he knows a prosecution witness has created as to discussions or offers of leniency, or other inducements for testifying, regardless as to whether he has any affirmative part in creating the false or misleading impressions." (58 C.A.3d 46.)

In People v. Filson (1994) 22 C.A.4th 1841, 28 C.R.2d 335, a prosecution charging three counts of sexual molestation of two minors, defendant contended that he was too intoxicated to form the requisite specific intent. The prosecutor asked for a ruling that defense counsel could not ask witnesses whether defendant had made a statement to them. The trial judge granted this request, and he allowed his ruling to stand, even after defense counsel told him about a tape-recorded statement made by defendant shortly after his arrest, which the prosecution had not previously disclosed. The prosecution presented the testimony of the arresting officer regarding defendant's mental state at the time of arrest, the defense presented no evidence, and defendant was convicted of one count of the charged offense. Held, reversed.

(a) Defense counsel clearly demonstrated that the taped statement could have been favorable to the defense by impeaching the arresting officer's testimony regarding the extent of defendant's intoxication. The statement met the test for material evidence, the prosecutor had a duty under the Due Process Clause to disclose it to the defense, even in the absence of a request, and the trial judge erred in failing to order the prosecutor to produce it. (22 C.A.4th 1848, 1849.)

(b) Although the trial judge may exclude probative evidence under Ev.C. 352 (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §17), neither ground asserted by the prosecutor justified exclusion. The tape could not have been deemed cumulative at the time it was excluded: the arresting officer had not yet testified, so there was no other evidence to which the recording could be cumulative. As to the danger of prejudice, nothing suggested that the tape would arouse the emotions of the jurors or be used in some unwarranted manner, and any collateral misuse could be minimized by editing, a limiting instruction, or argument by the prosecution concerning its evidentiary weight. (22 C.A.4th 1850, 1851.)

(c) The trial judge's erroneous rulings were not harmless. "The jury deliberated long and hard, troubled (as evidenced by its request for additional instructions) by the matter of defendant's intent, the very issue the defense would have developed but for the trial court's rulings. After deliberating longer than the evidentiary phase of the trial, the jury was able to reach a verdict on only one of the three charges against defendant. Clearly, the scope for doubt and misgivings is substantial." (22 C.A.4th 1852.)

Numerous other cases have resulted in reversal due to prosecutorial suppression of evidence. (See DeMarco v. United States (1974) 415 U.S. 449, 94 S.Ct. 1185, 39 L.Ed.2d 501, 503 [if witness had lied about prosecutor's promise before his testimony, defendant's conviction should be reversed, but trial court is appropriate forum to make that determination]; Kyles v. Whitley (1995) 514 U.S. 419, 115 S.Ct. 1555, 1569, 131 L.Ed.2d 490, 510 [prosecution's nondisclosure of several items of evidence favorable to defendant necessitated new trial, where net effect of evidence raised reasonable probability that its disclosure would have produced different result at trial]; People v. Shaparnis (1983) 147 C.A.3d 190, 196, 195 C.R. 39 [failure to disclose report containing correct name, birthdate, Social Security number and whereabouts of witness who had given police officers reason to believe that he knew who killed victim]; People v. Kasim (1997) 56 C.A.4th 1360, 1379, 1384, 66 C.R.2d 494, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §551 [whether intentional or inadvertent, prosecution's failure to disclose that key witnesses received benefits for testifying and had been government informers in past, and that they testified falsely about these matters, necessitated vacation of conviction, because there was reasonable probability jury's judgment was affected; following Ruthford, supra]; In re Pratt (1999) 69 C.A.4th 1294, 1315, 82 C.R.2d 260 [habeas corpus was properly granted after prosecution failed to disclose that key witness, who testified that defendant had confessed crime to him, had been police informant; evidence was favorable and material because it could have been used to undermine credibility of witness whose testimony was crucial to conviction].)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

V. DETERMINATION OF CREDIBILITY AND WEIGHT

E. Evidence Suppressed in Criminal Cases.

1. Suppression by Prosecution.

c. Not Reversible Error.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 123

[§ 123] Not Reversible Error.

In People v. Wright (1985) 39 C.3d 576, 217 C.R. 212, 703 P.2d 1106, a first degree murder case, defendant sought a dismissal and mistrial on the ground that the prosecution suppressed police reports of interviews with the widow of the victim, which could have been used to impeach her testimony at the trial. In upholding the trial judge's denial of the motions, the court explained its reasons for concluding that defendant was not deprived of a fair trial:

(a) The failure to make the police reports available was inadvertent. Local practice called for forwarding all such reports to the district attorney, who would make them available to defense counsel, and the failure was due to an oversight by the officer. (39 C.3d 590.)

(b) In the usual case, suppression is not discovered until the trial is over and a verdict is reached. Here, defendant discovered the missing evidence before jury deliberations had begun, and the trial judge explained the situation to the jury and allowed defense counsel to reopen his case to present the additional evidence. This was an appropriate procedure to remedy the error, and the trial judge properly concluded that the circumstances did not warrant the sanctions of dismissal or mistrial. (39 C.3d 590, 591.)

In re Sassounian (1995) 9 C.4th 535, 37 C.R.2d 446, 887 P.2d 527, involved a claim that the prosecution, in a murder case, failed to disclose evidence that could have been used to impeach a prosecution witness. The Supreme Court's decision denying habeas corpus relief clarified California law on this issue in two respects:

(a) The prosecution's duty of disclosure applies only to evidence that is both favorable to the defendant and material on either guilt or punishment. This is what federal constitutional law requires, and to the extent California cases have construed the Due Process Clause more broadly, they are erroneous. Further, evidence is material only if there is a reasonable probability that, had it been disclosed, the result would have been different. (9 C.4th 543, footnote 5, citing United States v. Bagley (1985) 473 U.S. 667, 105 S.Ct. 3375, 87 L.Ed.2d 481, and disapproving People v. Morris (1988) 46 C.3d 1, 249 C.R. 119, 756 P.2d 843.)

(b) The harmless error analysis of Chapman v. California (1967) 386 U.S. 18, 87 S.Ct. 824, 17 L.Ed.2d 705, with its harmless-beyond-a-reasonable-doubt standard, is inapplicable. Rather, if defendant demonstrates that the evidence was both favorable to him and material, he has necessarily established prejudice. (9 C.4th 545, footnote 7, disapproving People v. Ruthford (1975) 14 C.3d 399, 121 C.R. 261, 534 P.2d 1341, supra, §122, and its progeny to extent they found harmless error analysis to be implicated.)

Here, defendant's claim fails because he cannot establish materiality. At best, the impeachment evidence he claims should have been disclosed would have rendered the prosecution witness' testimony a nullity. But in light of the overwhelming evidence against defendant, it is not reasonably probable a different result would have been obtained even if this witness' testimony had been entirely absent. (9 C.4th 550.)

Other cases in which the prosecutor's failure to disclose evidence was not sufficient to require reversal of the defendant's conviction include the following: Wood v. Bartholomew (1995) 516 U.S. 1, 116 S.Ct. 7, 10, 11, 133 L.Ed.2d 1, 7, 8 [reversal of murder conviction was not warranted on basis of prosecution's failure to disclose results of polygraph examination of prosecution witness, where results would not have been admissible at trial, defendant's counsel admitted disclosure would not have changed his cross-examination of witness, and evidence of guilt was overwhelming]; Strickler v. Greene (1999) 527 U.S. 263, 119 S.Ct. 1936, 1952, 144 L.Ed.2d 286, 307 [prosecution's failure to disclose materials in police files that cast serious doubt on significant portions of witness' testimony was not prejudicial; other evidence strongly supported conclusion that accused would have been convicted of capital murder and sentenced to death even if witness had been severely impeached or if her testimony had been excluded entirely]; People v. Padilla (1995) 11 C.4th 891, 929, 47 C.R.2d 426, 906 P.2d 388 [minor inaccuracies in prosecution witness' testimony relating to his past convictions, which defendant claimed prosecution had duty to correct, were not material; citing In re Sassounian]; In re Malone (1996) 12 C.4th 935, 976, 977, 50 C.R.2d 281, 911 P.2d 468 [prosecutor's suppression of implied promises of leniency made to witness in exchange for his testimony was not substantially material under Sassounian, because it did not bear reasonable probability of affecting result]; People v. Martin (1983) 150 C.A.3d 148, 168, 197 C.R. 655 [prosecutor's failure to alert trial court after two prosecution witnesses erroneously testified that they had not been promised lenient treatment in their own criminal cases was suppression of substantial material evidence, but disclosure of promised lenient treatment would not have affected guilty verdict].

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See People v. Salazar (2005) 35 C.4th 1031, 1052, 29 C.R.3d 16, 112 P.3d 14 [even if evidence that could have been used to impeach prosecution witness was favorable to defendant and was improperly suppressed, it was not material and thus no reversible error occurred; equivalent testimony was supplied or could have been supplied by other witnesses]; People v. Hoyos (2007) 41 C.4th 872, 897, 63 C.R.3d 1, 162 P.3d 528 [even if prosecution failed to disclose evidence that could have been used to impeach potential prosecution witness, whose testimony would have incriminated codefendant, defendant failed to show that evidence was material; possibility that, because defendant and codefendant had joint defense strategy under which either both would testify or would decline to testify, disclosure of evidence would have led codefendant to testify, and thus defendant to testify as well, was insufficient to establish materiality]; People v. Zambrano (2007) 41 C.4th 1082, 1133, 63 C.R.3d 297, 163 P.3d 4 [defendant's disclosure rights were not violated where, after defendant's testimony had commenced, defense counsel announced it had obtained letter, written years earlier by defendant's sister and sent to deputy sheriff, in which she expressed fear of defendant and said he had tried to kill her and other family members; prosecution had not been in possession of letter, sheriff's office was not acting as agent for prosecution, and letter was not remotely favorable to defense]; People v. Bohannon (2000) 82 C.A.4th 798, 806, 807, 98 C.R.2d 488 [in prosecution for sexual offenses against multiple victims, failure to disclose to defense counsel addresses of two victims at pretrial hearing did not constitute reversible error, where there was no reasonable probability that outcome of trial would have been different had addresses been disclosed in timely manner].

V. DETERMINATION OF CREDIBILITY AND WEIGHT

E. Evidence Suppressed in Criminal Cases.

2. Destruction of Physical Evidence.

a. Duty To Preserve Evidence.

1. Former California Law.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 124

[§ 124] Former California Law.

(1) Hitch Created Duty To Preserve. In People v. Hitch (1974) 12 C.3d 641, 117 C.R. 9, 527 P.2d 361, involving the routine destruction of evidence of an intoxication test, the court made the following definitive pronouncement: "[T]he test ampoule, its contents and the reference ampoule customarily used in the test constitute material evidence on the issue of the driver's guilt or innocence of the charge of driving a vehicle under the influence of intoxicating liquor. We conclude that the investigative agency involved in the test has a duty to preserve and disclose such evidence. Accordingly we hold that, where ... such evidence cannot be disclosed because of its intentional but nonmalicious destruction by the investigative officials, sanctions shall in the future be imposed for such nonpreservation and nondisclosure unless the prosecution can show that the governmental agencies involved have established, enforced and attempted in good faith to adhere to rigorous and systematic procedures designed to preserve the test ampoule and its contents and the reference ampoule used in such chemical test. The prosecution shall bear the burden of demonstrating that such duty to preserve the ampoules and their contents has been fulfilled. If the prosecution meets its burden and makes the required showing, then the results of the breathalyzer test shall be admissible in evidence, even though the ampoules and their contents have been lost. If the prosecution fails to meet its burden then the court shall apply sanctions for nondisclosure. Finally we hold that in such latter event due process shall not require a dismissal of the action but shall require merely that the results of the breathalyzer test be excluded from evidence." (12 C.3d 653.) (See 64 Cal. L. Rev. 649 [discussion of Hitch]; see also People v. Swearingen (1978) 84 C.A.3d 570, 574, 148 C.R. 755 [following Hitch]; Health & Saf.C. 100775 [ampoules and their contents may be destroyed 1 year after date of collection]; 19 A.L.R.4th 509 [destruction of ampoule as warranting suppression of test results].)

(2) Hitch Extended to Other Physical Evidence. The Hitch rule was applied in many situations with varying results. Cases in which the rule was violated include the following: People v. Moore (1983) 34 C.3d 215, 223, 193 C.R. 404, 666 P.2d 419 [probation department's failure to preserve and disclose urine sample that was used as basis for revoking probation; preservation of samples for only 90 days unless request was made for particular sample was inadequate]; People v. O'Hearn (1983) 142 C.A.3d 566, 570, 191 C.R. 481 [sheriff's failure to segregate 84 marijuana plants confiscated from defendants; compliance with Health & Saf.C. 11479 (governing destruction of excess quantities of controlled substances) might have enabled defendants to impeach sheriff's testimony as to quantity and quality of marijuana; no attempt to adhere to "rigorous and systematic procedures" to preserve evidence]; People v. Jones (1983) 145 C.A.3d 751, 753, 759, 760, 193 C.R. 663 [failure to preserve police officer's field notes of interview with criminal suspect was proper basis for Hitch motion to suppress].

Cases in which Hitch did not apply, or in which its application did not require reversal, include the following: People v. Nation (1980) 26 C.3d 169, 177, 161 C.R. 299, 604 P.2d 1051 [on charge of sexual offense against woman where police recover semen sample of assailant, authorities must take reasonable measures to preserve it; here, however, sample was delivered to defense in pretrial discovery request, and no showing was made that deterioration was caused by state's inaction]; People v. Lee (1974) 38 C.A.3d 749, 757, 113 C.R. 641 [while jurors were sequestered overnight during deliberations, janitor threw out exhibits from jury room; loss of evidence, though "deplorable and alarming," was not prosecutor's responsibility, was not shown to be prejudicial by defendant, and did not deprive defendant of fair trial]; People v. James (1976) 56 C.A.3d 876, 890, 128 C.R. 733 [codefendant's wallet was "ordered destroyed" by police before trial; codefendant testified he lost it about 9 days before burglary, but defendant argued that receipts within wallet would have shown later date; while evidence would have damaged codefendant's credibility, missing evidence could not have exculpated defendant, who therefore was not denied fair trial under Hitch rule]; People v. Vera (1976) 62 C.A.3d 293, 299, 132 C.R. 817 [failure to preserve or photograph defendant's latent fingerprints or object on which they were found; possibility of Hitch rule applying discussed, but no showing that defendant was deprived of material evidence]; People v. Harris (1976) 62 C.A.3d 859, 863, 133 C.R. 352 [careless or inadvertent destruction of object of little evidentiary importance]; People v. Garnica (1981) 121 C.A.3d 727, 732, 175 C.R. 521 [tape recording of key prosecution witness had been lost by police, but 25-page transcript of it, with over 100 blanks for omitted words, was offered in evidence; no error in absence of showing that lost tape had substantial materiality above and beyond that of transcript]; People v. Perkins (1981) 126 C.A.3d Supp. 12, 15, 179 C.R. 431 [destruction of printouts from quality control samples of blood test not violation of Hitch rule]; People v. Savage (1982) 129 C.A.3d 1, 2, 180 C.R. 761 [routine destruction of handwritten notes of police interview, contents of which were later incorporated into formal report; no Hitch error]; People v. Bailes (1982) 129 C.A.3d 265, 270, 180 C.R. 792 [lost police photograph of bent screen from which burglar's fingerprint had been taken; no Hitch error]; People v. Newsome (1982) 136 C.A.3d 992, 1006, 186 C.R. 676 [duty to preserve does not embrace correlative duty to test in absence of request by defense]; People v. Roehler (1985) 167 C.A.3d 353, 383, 213 C.R. 353 [prosecution did not take steps to preserve bodies of victims after autopsy, but defendant made no showing of potential value of reexamination of corpses]; People v. Lawrence (1985) 172 C.A.3d 1069, 1078, 218 C.R. 345 [bullets lost during 11 years defendant was fugitive from justice; "application of sanctions would be inappropriate and a miscarriage of justice"]; People v. Givens (1985) 175 C.A.3d 396, 399, 220 C.R. 756 [dismissal of charges as sanction for negligent loss or destruction of tape of witness interview that defense counsel had heard and found not relevant reversed]; see also People v. Huston (1989) 210 C.A.3d 192, 225, 258 C.R. 393 [Hitch dismissal is not considered a 'final judgment on the merits' having binding collateral estoppel effect].

[§ 125] Federal Law.

(1) Trombetta Standard. In California v. Trombetta (1984) 467 U.S. 479, 104 S.Ct. 2528, 81 L.Ed.2d 413, defendants moved to suppress the results of intoxilyzer tests because the arresting officers had failed to preserve the breath samples used in the tests. Their motions were denied, but the Court of Appeal, relying heavily on People v. Hitch (1974) 12 C.3d 641, 117 C.R. 9, 527 P.2d 361, supra, §124, ruled that the intoxilyzer results should not be admitted into evidence against defendants. Held, reversed. The Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment does not require that law enforcement agencies preserve breath samples in order to introduce the results of breath-analysis tests at trial.

(a) Defendant's right of access to exculpatory evidence. To safeguard a defendant's right to present a complete defense, the Supreme Court has developed "the area of constitutionally guaranteed access to evidence." Thus, the defendant may request and obtain from the prosecution evidence material to guilt or relevant as to punishment (Brady v. Maryland (1963) 373 U.S. 83, 83 S.Ct. 1194, 10 L.Ed.2d 215); the prosecution, without request, must turn over exculpatory evidence that would raise a reasonable doubt of guilt (United States v. Agurs (1976) 427 U.S. 97, 96 S.Ct. 2392, 49 L.Ed.2d 342, supra, §121); the prosecution must also reveal the contents of plea agreements with key government witnesses (Giglio v. United States (1972) 405 U.S. 150, 92 S.Ct. 763, 31 L.Ed.2d 104); and under some circumstances, may be required to disclose the identity of undercover informants who possess evidence critical to the defense (Roviaro v. United States (1956) 353 U.S. 53, 77 S.Ct. 623, 1 L.Ed.2d 639, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §310). (104 S.Ct. 2532, 81 L.Ed.2d 420.)

(b) Guaranteeing defendants access to evidence not in government's possession. The government may offend the Due Process Clause if, by deporting potential witnesses, it diminishes a defendant's opportunity to put on an effective defense (United States v. Valenzuela-Bernal (1982) 458 U.S. 858, 102 S.Ct. 3440, 73 L.Ed.2d 1193, supra, §5). (104 S.Ct. 2533, 81 L.Ed.2d 420.)

(c) Duty to preserve evidence.

(1) The Court has never squarely addressed the question of duty to take affirmative steps to preserve evidence for criminal defendants. The difficulties are (a) determining the import of materials whose contents are unknown and very often disputed; and (b) fashioning remedies for illegal destruction. "In nondisclosure cases, a court can grant the defendant a new trial at which the previously suppressed evidence may be introduced. But, when evidence has been destroyed in violation of the Constitution, the court must choose between barring further prosecution or suppressing--as the California Court of Appeal did in this case--the State's most probative evidence." (104 S.Ct. 2533, 81 L.Ed.2d 421.)

(2) Killian v. United States (1961) 368 U.S. 231, 82 S.Ct. 302, 7 L.Ed.2d 256, held that destruction by F.B.I. agents of preliminary notes made while interviewing witnesses did not rise to the level of constitutional violation. Here, the breath samples were taken for the limited purpose of providing raw data to the intoxilyzer; the evidence to be presented at the trial was not the breath but the intoxilyzer results; in Killian, the agent's notes were sought in order to impeach their final reports, and here the breath samples are sought to challenge the test results. (104 S.Ct. 2533, 81 L.Ed.2d 421.)

(3) The failure to retain the breath samples was not a violation of the federal Constitution. (a) There was no calculated effort to circumvent the disclosure requirements of Brady v. Maryland; the officers acted in good faith and in accord with normal practices. (b) There is little chance that the preserved samples would have been exculpatory. (c) Even if it is assumed that the intoxilyzer results were inaccurate, they could be challenged in other ways, e.g., by inspection of the machine or cross-examination of the officer who administered the test. (104 S.Ct. 2534, 2535, 81 L.Ed.2d 422, 423.)

(2) Youngblood Standard. In Arizona v. Youngblood (1988) 488 U.S. 51, 109 S.Ct. 333, 102 L.Ed.2d 281, defendant was convicted of child molestation, sexual assault and kidnaping, based on the 10-year-old victim's identification. On the day of the crime, the examining doctor collected semen samples which, along with the victim's underwear and T-shirt, were turned over to the police. The samples were refrigerated, but the clothing was not. During the trial, the state's criminologist performed an ABO blood grouping test on a semen sample in an attempt to ascertain the blood type of the assailant, but the test failed to detect any blood group substances in the sample. Approximately 15 months after the crime, the criminologist performed an ABO test on semen stains on the victim's clothing, but again failed to obtain blood group substances. The criminologist also performed a P-30 protein molecule test on the stains, but the results were inconclusive as to the assailant's identity. In connection with his defense of wrongful identification by the victim, defendant presented expert testimony concerning what might have been shown by tests performed on the semen samples shortly after they were gathered, or by later tests performed on the clothing stains had the clothing been properly refrigerated. The state Court of Appeals reversed the conviction on the ground that properly conducted tests could have produced results that might have completely exonerated defendant. Held, reversed; there was no denial of due process.

(a) The state complied with the requirements of Brady v. Maryland (1963) 373 U.S. 83, 83 S.Ct. 1194, 10 L.Ed.2d 215, and United States v. Agurs (1976) 427 U.S. 97, 96 S.Ct. 2392, 49 L.Ed.2d 342, supra, §121, by informing defendant of the existence of the semen samples and the clothing, and of the victim's hospital examination. It also provided defendant's expert with the reports and notes of the state's criminologist, as well as with access to the samples and the clothing. (109 S.Ct. 336, 102 L.Ed.2d 288.)

(b) The Due Process Clause, as interpreted in Brady v. Maryland, supra, makes the state's good or bad faith irrelevant when it fails to disclose to the defendant material exculpatory evidence. However, due process requires a different result where, as here, the state fails to preserve evidentiary material whose only value is that it could have been subjected to tests, the results of which might have exonerated the defendant. (109 S.Ct. 337, 102 L.Ed.2d 289.) "We think that requiring a defendant to show bad faith on the part of the police both limits the extent of the police's obligation to preserve evidence to reasonable bounds and confines it to that class of cases where the interests of justice most clearly require it, i.e., those cases in which the police themselves by their conduct indicate that the evidence could form a basis for exonerating the defendant. We therefore hold that unless a criminal defendant can show bad faith on the part of the police, failure to preserve potentially useful evidence does not constitute a denial of due process of law." (109 S.Ct. 337, 102 L.Ed.2d 289.)

(c) Here, the failure of the police to refrigerate the clothing and to perform tests on the samples can at worst be described as negligent. No information was concealed from defendant, and the evidence was made available to defendant's expert, who declined to perform any tests. Because there was no suggestion of any bad faith on the part of the police, there was no violation of due process. (109 S.Ct. 337, 102 L.Ed.2d 289.)

(d) In reversing the conviction, the state Court of Appeals referred to the state's failure to test certain semen samples with the newer P-30 test. However, due process is not violated by police failure to use a particular investigatory tool. The situation here is analogous to a drunk driving prosecution that rests on police observation alone: The defendant can argue that a breathalyzer test might have been exculpatory, but the police have no constitutional duty to perform any particular test. (109 S.Ct. 338, 102 L.Ed.2d 290.)

Three justices dissented. (See 103 Harv. L. Rev. 157; People v. Huston (1989) 210 C.A.3d 192, 213, 258 C.R. 393 [discussing retroactive application of Youngblood].)

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 126

[§ 126] Current California Law.

(1) Differences Between Hitch and Trombetta. In People v. Epps (1986) 182 C.A.3d 1102, 227 C.R. 625, the court pointed out that the formulation of the "duty-to-preserve test" in California v. Trombetta (1984) 467 U.S. 479, 104 S.Ct. 2528, 81 L.Ed.2d 413, supra, §125, differs substantially from the standard in People v. Hitch (1974) 12 C.3d 641, 117 C.R. 9, 527 P.2d 361, supra, §124. (182 C.A.3d 1112.) While California v. Trombetta leaves open the duty to preserve and the analysis of methods employed by the state in so doing, it clearly states a test of materiality more tolerant than Hitch: Hitch adopts "a relatively neutral attitude toward the materiality of the evidence," asking whether it existed and whether it is possible that it could have benefited the defendant; California v. Trombetta, on the other hand, requires that the evidence possessed "exculpatory value that was apparent before the evidence was destroyed." (182 C.A.3d 1115, 1116.)

(2) Trombetta/Youngblood Nullify Hitch. In People v. Trombetta (1985) 173 C.A.3d 1093, 219 C.R. 637, decided after the reversal of the previous decision by California v. Trombetta, supra, the court declared that the Hitch rule rested on the federal Constitution, and that neither federal due process nor equal protection required the preservation of breath samples from an intoxilyzer test. (173 C.A.3d 1100, 1103.) Then, in People v. Johnson (1989) 47 C.3d 1194, 1233, 255 C.R. 569, 767 P.2d 1047, the court concluded that, under the analysis in People v. Trombetta, supra, and the Truth-in-Evidence provision of Proposition 8 (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §8), Hitch did not survive California v. Trombetta. Moreover, in People v. Cooper (1991) 53 C.3d 771, 811, 281 C.R. 90, 809 P.2d 865, the court stated that "the reasons that caused us to adopt Trombetta [as a matter of state law] in Johnson also apply" to Arizona v. Youngblood (1988) 488 U.S. 51, 109 S.Ct. 333, 102 L.Ed.2d 281, supra, §125. (See People v. Zapien (1993) 4 C.4th 929, 964, 17 C.R.2d 122, 846 P.2d 704 ["applicable law no longer found in Hitch"]; People v. Kimble (1988) 201 C.A.3d 726, 733, 248 C.R. 41 ["The Hitch standard is no longer applicable as it has been effectively overruled by the combined effect of California v. Trombetta ... and section 28(d)" (Proposition 8)].)

(3) Current Standard. The State's duty to preserve evidence is limited to evidence that (a) possesses an exculpatory value that was apparent before the evidence was destroyed, and (b) is of such a nature that the defendant would be unable to obtain comparable evidence by other reasonably available means. Moreover, unless the defendant can show bad faith on the part of the police, failure to preserve potentially useful evidence does not violate due process. (People v. Cooper, supra, 53 C.3d 810, citing California v. Trombetta and Arizona v. Youngblood; on application of Hitch and California v. Trombetta to administrative proceedings, see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §86.)

(4) Standard of Review as to Bad Faith. The defendant has the burden of proving that the prosecution acted in bad faith in destroying evidence. Because the trial court's inquiry into this issue is essentially factual, the proper standard of review is substantial evidence. (People v. Memro (1995) 11 C.4th 786, 831, 47 C.R.2d 219, 905 P.2d 1305 [trial judge's determination of no bad faith was supported by substantial evidence: police personnel records were destroyed pursuant to statute, and police department would not have realized they might be needed after court in prior trial denied defendant's motion to discover them].)

Since California v. Trombetta (1984) 467 U.S. 479, 104 S.Ct. 2528, 81 L.Ed.2d 413 (supra, §125), and Arizona v. Youngblood (1988) 488 U.S. 51, 109 S.Ct. 333, 102 L.Ed.2d 281 (supra, §125), many cases have considered the extent of the prosecutor's duty to preserve evidence for use by the defendant.

(1) Where Evidence Lacked Apparent Exculpatory Value. Numerous cases have found that the evidence lacked apparent exculpatory value or otherwise failed to meet the standards of materiality required by the federal cases. (See People v. Beeler (1995) 9 C.4th 953, 978, 39 C.R.2d 607, 891 P.2d 153 [even if prosecution's test firing of rifle made impossible further testing that could have shown rifle was fired on day of killing, exculpatory value of further testing would not have been reasonably apparent]; People v. Hines (1997) 15 C.4th 997, 1042, 64 C.R.2d 594, 938 P.2d 388 [videotape of search of premises where defendant was arrested was properly admitted, even though police had taped over portion showing officers arguing about how search should proceed, because erased portion did not possess exculpatory value that was apparent before it was destroyed]; People v. Roybal (1998) 19 C.4th 481, 509, 79 C.R.2d 487, 966 P.2d 521 [defendant was not entitled to instruction regarding police department's loss of doorjamb from victim's residence containing "orangish-red" fingerprint; doorjamb did not have exculpatory value that was apparent before it disappeared; print may or may not have been defendant's and may or may not have been perpetrator's]; People v. Tierce (1985) 165 C.A.3d 256, 264, 211 C.R. 325 [officer who followed department procedures and normal practice in destroying preliminary notes acted in good faith; holding in People v. Jones (1983) 145 C.A.3d 751, 193 C.R. 663, supra, §124, conflicts with Trombetta and is no longer law in California]; People v. Gonzales (1986) 179 C.A.3d 566, 572, 224 C.R. 853 [failure to preserve paper on which robbery victim wrote word tattooed on perpetrator's arm; paper did not meet federal subjective materiality test]; People v. Superior Court (Calamaras) (1986) 181 C.A.3d 901, 905, 226 C.R. 636 [marijuana seized from three separate plots destroyed except for random samples; no showing that destroyed marijuana met federal standard of materiality]; People v. Garcia (1986) 183 C.A.3d 335, 348, 228 C.R. 87 [lost notes of postarrest interview not shown to be material]; People v. Richbourg (1986) 185 C.A.3d 1098, 1102, 1103, 230 C.R. 166 [conviction for vehicular manslaughter affirmed; destroyed vehicle had no apparent exculpatory value]; People v. Lopez (1988) 198 C.A.3d 135, 143, 243 C.R. 590, infra, §131 [testimony of deported witnesses was not material because they were far from defendant at time of crime]; People v. Medina (1990) 51 C.3d 870, 893, 274 C.R. 849, 799 P.2d 1282 [loss of Perrier bottle containing defendant's fingerprint did not require exclusion of evidence, because exculpatory value was not obvious when print was taken]; People v. Von Villas (1992) 10 C.A.4th 201, 241, 13 C.R.2d 62 [in robbery prosecution, loss of diamond bindle found in defendant's home was not due process violation, as bundle did not possess exculpatory value at time it was lost]; People v. Pastor Cruz (1993) 16 C.A.4th 322, 325, 20 C.R.2d 13 [no due process violation owing to loss of knife, which had inculpatory rather than exculpatory value]; People v. Sixto (1993) 17 C.A.4th 374, 397, 21 C.R.2d 264 [failure to preserve defendant's blood sample for alcohol testing, following defendant's first trial, did not violate due process; "cannot reasonably be said the sample possessed an exculpatory value that was apparent before it was destroyed"].)

(2) Where Comparable Evidence Available. In People v. Sassounian (1986) 182 C.A.3d 361, 226 C.R. 880, defendant, on trial for first degree murder with special circumstances, charged the prosecution with wilfully destroying a jail record that allegedly indicated that defendant had been kept in a "closed" rather than "open" cell, hence, that he could not have confessed to a jail trustee who later became a key prosecution witness. Held, the court properly refused to declare a mistrial or give the jury a directive instruction regarding the contents of the record. Absence of the record did not prejudice the defendant, because all the information it could have provided was supplied by the testimony of a deputy sheriff, who recalled the record and its contents. (182 C.A.3d 394.)

(3) Where Defendant Fails To Show Bad Faith. In People v. Galindo (1991) 229 C.A.3d 1529, 281 C.R. 155, defendant's motion for sanctions and instruction on failure to preserve evidence was properly denied, where he showed neither materiality under California v. Trombetta, nor bad faith by prosecution under Arizona v. Youngblood. (229 C.A.3d 1538.) (See People v. Roybal, supra, 19 C.4th 510 [nothing in defendant's offer of proof disputed conclusion that police department's loss of doorjamb containing possible bloody fingerprint, which was removed during search of victim's residence, was inadvertent].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Where Evidence Lacked Apparent Exculpatory Value. See People v. Cook (2006) 39 C.4th 566, 591, 47 C.R.3d 22, 139 P.3d 492 [in capital murder case, defendant's constitutional rights were not violated by failure to take photographs of footprints leading up to house at location where victim was killed, or by loss of photos taken of 11 persons who were in that house; footprints neither implicated nor exonerated defendant, and although photos of occupants could not be located, defense was supplied with list of names]; People v. Cook (2007) 40 C.4th 1334, 1348, 58 C.R.3d 340, 157 P.3d 950 [in murder prosecution, trash bag that had contained bloodstained tennis shoes that were subjected to electrophoretic testing had no apparent exculpatory value, and argument that original version of parolee photo book used to identify defendant was material and favorable evidence was entirely speculative]; People v. Coles (2005) 134 C.A.4th 1049, 1055, 36 C.R.3d 484 [no constitutional or statutory rights were violated where, following standard procedure, police officer destroyed interview notes that she used to prepare her report concerning arson; notes were destroyed before any charges were filed against defendant, and no exculpatory value was apparent before their destruction]. (2) Where Comparable Evidence Available. See People v. Cook, supra, 40 C.4th 1349 [preservation of gel plates used in electrophoretic testing of bloodstained tennis shoes would have served no useful purpose because of flaking, fading, or other degradation, and there were sufficient remaining stains that defense could have chosen to test].

(3) Where Defendant Fails To Show Bad Faith. See People v. Carter (2005) 36 C.4th 1215, 1246, 32 C.R.3d 838, 117 P.3d 544 [in capital murder case in which burglary charge and lying-in-wait special circumstance were premised on theory that defendant unlawfully entered victim's apartment, trial judge did not err in admitting photographs of wood chips lying around entrance to apartment, notwithstanding that prosecution failed to preserve wood chips; defendant made no showing of bad faith in failure to preserve evidence, and nothing in record suggested that chips had exculpatory value that was apparent prior to their disappearance].

E. Evidence Suppressed in Criminal Cases.

2. Destruction of Physical Evidence.

b. Authorized Destruction.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 128

[§ 128] Authorized Destruction.

(1) Release of Victim's Body. The release of a victim's body to his or her family is not regarded as a suppression of evidence. Thus, in People v. McNeill (1980) 112 C.A.3d 330, 169 C.R. 313, defendant, charged with murder, testified that the victim lunged at him and grabbed his wrist, causing his gun to discharge accidentally. He contended that the prosecution failed to preserve crucial evidence by omitting to take fingernail scrapings from the victim. Held, the prosecuting authorities acted within the law in releasing the victim's body to his family for cremation immediately after the autopsy. Moreover, the victim's hands and fingernails had been examined by police officers and the autopsy surgeon without discovery of any significant evidence. (112 C.A.3d 337, 338.) (See People v. Roehler (1985) 167 C.A.3d 353, 382, 383, 213 C.R. 353, discussing People v. McNeill.) (On cremation of homicide victim's body as violation of accused's rights, see 70 A.L.R.4th 1091.)

(2) Postconviction Destruction of Evidence. Destruction of evidence after a conviction has become final is likewise a proper procedure. In People v. Chapman (1975) 47 C.A.3d 597, 121 C.R. 315, defendant pleaded guilty to felonious assault. Believing the case finished, the district attorney authorized disposal of the physical evidence. The sheriff unsuccessfully tried to contact the owners of the evidence and then threw away the material. Thereafter, on habeas corpus, defendant obtained a new trial on the ground of inadequate representation, and the judge allowed the prosecutor to introduce photographs of the unavailable physical objects. Held, no error. (47 C.A.3d 607.)

(3) Destruction Authorized by Statute. Recordings of telephone and radio communications may be destroyed by a local governmental entity after 100 days unless they are evidence in "any pending litigation." (Govt.C. 26202.6.) In Fowler v. Superior Court (1984) 162 C.A.3d 215, 208 C.R. 408, defendant, charged with possession of a firearm and narcotics, moved to dismiss an information against him because the police had a tape of a phone call reporting a burglary at his residence. His theory was that the pending felony complaint was "pending litigation" that required preservation of the tape. The court pointed to the difficulties involved in monitoring local criminal cases and the relatively slight value of such tapes, and said: "To require police to track litigation would impose an enormous, if not impossible, burden. But it is little to ask of a litigant that he simply advise the department of the pendency of a matter in which the tape will be desired before the time runs. We believe a procedure which permits destruction of the tapes after they have been retained for the 100-day period, in the absence of some action by a party to a lawsuit to notify the department to preserve the tapes, complies with the statute and Hitch." (162 C.A.3d 219.) (See People v. Wilson (1987) 191 C.A.3d 161, 165, 236 C.R. 280 [substantial compliance with Health & Saf.C. 11479, requiring that only representative sample be retained, notwithstanding failure to preserve entire marijuana plant].)

(4) Destruction Where Evidence Must Be Consumed. "When a piece of evidence in the possession of the prosecution is destroyed because the prosecution finds it necessary to consume the evidence in order to test it, there is no due process violation. The prosecution must be allowed to investigate and prosecute crime, and due process does not require that it forego investigation in order to avoid destroying potentially exculpatory evidence." (People v. Griffin (1988) 46 C.3d 1011, 1021, 251 C.R. 643, 761 P.2d 103; on consumption or destruction of physical evidence in analysis or testing by prosecution's expert, see 40 A.L.R.4th 594.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(3) Destruction Authorized by Statute. See Nelson v. Superior Court (2001) 89 C.A.4th 565, 574, 107 C.R.2d 469 [government tort claim filed with county in conformance with Govt.C. 911.2 constitutes actual notice that "claim" is pending within meaning of Govt.C. 26202.6, thus triggering duty to preserve recordings until pending litigation is resolved].

(4) Destruction Where Evidence Must Be Consumed. See People v. Houston (2005) 130 C.A.4th 279, 303, 29 C.R.3d 818 [in murder prosecution, trial judge did not err in denying defendant's pretrial motion to exclude evidence of defendant's DNA found on bullet recovered from crime scene, even though in testing bullet, police biologist found it necessary to put bullet in plastic tube with digestion material that digested all of DNA off bullet; she tested only portion of biological material obtained, remainder was preserved and could still be tested, and there was no assertion of bad faith].

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 129

[§ 129] Duty To Advise of Destruction.

(1) No Constitutional Duty To Advise. California v. Trombetta (1984) 467 U.S. 479, 104 S.Ct. 2528, 81 L.Ed.2d 413, supra, §125, did not reach the question whether the police have a duty to advise arrestees choosing a breath test that no sample will be retained for independent testing. In People v. Mills (1985) 164 C.A.3d 652, 656, 657, 210 C.R. 669, the court held that no such duty was constitutionally required, and that the statutory duty imposed by Veh.C. 13353.5, now Veh.C. 23614 (see 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Public Peace and Welfare, §229), was not applicable to tests occurring prior to its effective date (September 15, 1983). (See People v. Trombetta (1985) 173 C.A.3d 1093, 1100, 219 C.R. 637, supra, §126 [following Mills].)

(2) Failure To Advise When Required by Statute. Although some statutes require police or other officials to advise suspects about whether samples taken for testing will be retained for their later use, noncompliance with the statutes is unlikely to lead to suppression of the test results. (See People v. Lyon (1985) 171 C.A.3d Supp. 20, 218 C.R. 290 [no suppression for failure to advise]; In re Garinger (1987) 188 C.A.3d 1149, 1153, 233 C.R. 853 [under California v. Trombetta, failure to advise pursuant to Veh.C. 23157.5, now Veh.C. 23614, does not violate due process, hence, Proposition 8 (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §8) precludes exclusion].) (For codification of rule that failure to advise does not affect admissibility, see Veh.C. 23614(d), 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Public Peace and Welfare, §229.)

V. DETERMINATION OF CREDIBILITY AND WEIGHT

E. Evidence Suppressed in Criminal Cases.

3. Making Witness Unavailable.

a. Standards of Materiality.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 130

[§ 130] Standards of Materiality.

(1) Former Law: Mejia Standard. In People v. Mejia (1976) 57 C.A.3d 574, 129 C.R. 192, material witnesses arrested with defendant were foreign nationals who were not subpoenaed but were turned over to federal authorities for deportation, without notifying the defendant. Answering the prosecution's argument that the state officers merely complied with federal law, the court declared that "state action initiated and was at least partially responsible" for the unavailability of the witnesses, for the witnesses would not have been deported had they been under subpoena, and failure to notify defendant deprived him of the opportunity to subpoena them. (57 C.A.3d 581, 582.) (See strong dissent, 57 C.A.3d 583, criticizing the "sweepingly broad new declaration of prosecutorial obligation.")

The Mejia holding was followed in Cordova v. Superior Court (1983) 148 C.A.3d 177, 195 C.R. 758. Defendant and others, including four illegal aliens, were arrested on various drug counts. Twenty-seven days later, without notice to defendant, the charges against the aliens were dismissed and they were turned over to federal immigration authorities, who deported them that day. Held, defendant's motion to dismiss should have been granted.

(a) The prosecution contended that the test of materiality of the testimony of the unavailable witness, as enunciated in Mejia, had been changed by United States v. Valenzuela-Bernal (1982) 458 U.S. 858, 102 S.Ct. 3440, 73 L.Ed.2d 1193, supra, §5. But the California rule may be based on the independent ground of the California Constitution, and would thus be unaffected by the federal rule. (148 C.A.3d 183.)

(b) The prosecution further contended that Mejia was distinguishable because in that case, the witnesses were not available at any time, while here they were in custody for 27 days, and defendant made no effort to contact their counsel or interview them. This contention ignores the practical situation: Counsel for the alien witnesses would not have permitted an interview prior to dismissal of the charges. It would not have been a significant burden on the prosecution to give notice to defense counsel of the impending release from jail of a material alien witness, and "we commend such practice to prosecutors." (148 C.A.3d 186.)

(2) Federal Standards of Materiality. Subsequent to Mejia, the United States Supreme Court issued two opinions that could be considered to set the standard for measuring the materiality of unavailable witnesses' testimony. United States v. Valenzuela-Bernal, supra, requires the defendant to make a plausible showing that the testimony of the unavailable witnesses would have been material and favorable to the defense, in ways not merely cumulative to the testimony of available witnesses. (102 S.Ct. 3449, 73 L.Ed.2d 1206.) Meanwhile, California v. Trombetta (1984) 467 U.S. 479, 104 S.Ct. 2528, 2530, 81 L.Ed.2d 413, 417 (supra, §125), involving the destruction of physical evidence, requires a defendant to show that the evidence (a) possesses an exculpatory value that was apparent before the evidence was destroyed, and (b) is of such a nature that the defendant would be unable to obtain comparable evidence by other reasonably available means. (104 S.Ct. 2534, 81 L.Ed.2d 422.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

V. DETERMINATION OF CREDIBILITY AND WEIGHT

E. Evidence Suppressed in Criminal Cases.

3. Making Witness Unavailable.

b. Applicable Standard in California.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 131

[§ 131] Applicable Standard in California.

The federal standard, rather than the one in People v. Mejia (1976) 57 C.A.3d 574, 129 C.R. 192, supra, §130, must be used in California to determine the materiality of an unavailable witness. (People v. Lopez (1988) 198 C.A.3d 135, 144, 243 C.R. 590; People v. Valencia (1990) 218 C.A.3d 808, 819, 267 C.R. 257.) However, there is disagreement about whether United States v. Valenzuela-Bernal (1982) 458 U.S. 858, 102 S.Ct. 3440, 73 L.Ed.2d 1193, supra, §5, or California v. Trombetta (1984) 467 U.S. 479, 104 S.Ct. 2528, 2530, 81 L.Ed.2d 413, 417, supra, §125, states the correct federal standard:

(1) Trombetta Applies in Both Physical Evidence and Unavailable Witness Cases. In People v. Lopez (1988) 198 C.A.3d 135, 243 C.R. 590, a robbery case in which five witnesses were deported, the court attempted to reconcile the standards enunciated in Mejia, People v. Hitch (1974) 12 C.3d 641, 117 C.R. 9, 527 P.2d 361, supra, §124, Trombetta, and Valenzuela-Bernal, in light of Proposition 8 (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §8).

(a) Mejia held that an unavailable witness is material if he either participated in the crime, or was an eyewitness in a position to perceive what took place from a sufficiently proximate vantage point. Hitch held that unavailable demonstrative evidence is material if there is a reasonable probability that it would constitute favorable evidence on the issue of guilt or innocence. Although the wording is slightly different, these cases establish the same standard of materiality for both testimonial and demonstrative evidence. (198 C.A.3d 143.)

(b) Because of this sameness in the standard of materiality, consistency demands that Proposition 8 be construed as requiring the use of the federal standard in both Mejia and Hitch situations. (198 C.A.3d 144.)

(c) The federal standard is derived from Trombetta and Valenzuela-Bernal. Under Trombetta, in order for evidence to be material, it must " 'possess an exculpatory value that was apparent before the evidence was destroyed, and be of such a nature that the defendant would be unable to obtain comparable evidence by other reasonably available means.' " (198 C.A.3d 144.) Valenzuela-Bernal, which dealt specifically with witness deportation, enunciated a somewhat different standard, i.e., no requirement that the exculpatory nature be apparent prior to the loss of the evidence. (198 C.A.3d 144.) However, "[f]rom the breadth of the discussion in Trombetta, which included mention of Valenzuela-Bernal ... , we conclude that the United States Supreme Court intended to state in Trombetta a more definitive and precise formulation of the constitutional standard of materiality in all loss of evidence cases. We hold that Trombetta states the standard of materiality applicable in both Mejia and Hitch contexts." (198 C.A.3d 145.)

(d) In the present case, the testimony of the deported witnesses was not material under either the Trombetta or Mejia standard, because they were approximately 50 meters from defendant at the time of the crime and were focusing primarily on a stalled vehicle. (198 C.A.3d 146.) (See People v. Acuna (1988) 204 C.A.3d 602, 610, 611, 251 C.R. 387 [prosecution for theft of van; defendant knowingly waived right to detain illegal aliens found in vehicle, and failed to demonstrate, under either Mejia or Trombetta standard, that they would have offered material, favorable testimony].)

(2) Valenzuela-Bernal Applies in Unavailable Witness Cases. The attempted reconciliation put forth by People v. Lopez, supra, was criticized in People v. Valencia (1990) 218 C.A.3d 808, 267 C.R. 257, insofar as it made the Trombetta standard applicable in all loss of evidence cases.

In People v. Valencia, defendant was charged with one count of possession of cocaine for sale, with an enhancement for being armed with a firearm during commission of the offense. However, in response to defendant's motion under Mejia, the trial judge dismissed both the count and enhancement when the prosecution failed to produce witness Alcala, a juvenile who, after being arrested with defendant for possession of narcotics for sale, was deported to Mexico without prior notice to defendant or his counsel. Held, under the standard of materiality enunciated in United States v. Valenzuela-Bernal, supra, the enhancement was properly dismissed, but the count was improperly dismissed.

(a) Effect of Proposition 8. In re Lance W. (1985) 37 C.3d 873, 210 C.R. 631, 694 P.2d 744, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §8, People v. May (1988) 44 C.3d 309, 243 C.R. 369, 748 P.2d 307, infra, §319, and People v. Johnson (1989) 47 C.3d 1194, 255 C.R. 569, 767 P.2d 1047, supra, §126, illustrate the broad application of Proposition 8 to require federal standards for the exclusion of evidence in cases other than those involving search and seizure. And, reasoning that dismissal amounts to exclusion of all of the evidence against the defendant, People v. Epps (1986) 182 C.A.3d 1102, 227 C.R. 625, supra, §126, and People v. Lopez, supra, support the application of Proposition 8 to Mejia motions, even though the requested remedy is dismissal of all charges, rather than exclusion of evidence. Hence, "Proposition 8 abrogated Mejia and its state standard of materiality applicable to deported witnesses." (218 C.A.3d 819.)

(b) Federal standard of materiality.

(1) People v. Lopez, supra, held that the standard adopted in California v. Trombetta, rather than that stated in Valenzuela-Bernal, supra, must be applied in determining the materiality of both demonstrative evidence and testimony. And the prosecution proposed not only the adoption of Trombetta as the appropriate federal standard, but also the inclusion of Arizona v. Youngblood (1988) 488 U.S. 51, 109 S.Ct. 333, 102 L.Ed.2d 281, supra, §125, as an additional test of materiality. This proposal must be declined for the following reasons:

First, neither Trombetta nor Youngblood indicated that it was overruling Valenzuela-Bernal. In stating that it was entering an area it had "never squarely addressed," Trombetta implied that it was dealing with concerns entirely separate from those involved in Valenzuela-Bernal. (218 C.A.3d 822.)

Second, subsequent federal and California decisions (with the exception of Lopez) have applied Trombetta and Youngblood exclusively in the area of demonstrative evidence. (218 C.A.3d 822, citing People v. Huston (1989) 210 C.A.3d 192, 258 C.R. 393, and People v. Martinez (1989) 207 C.A.3d 1204, 255 C.R. 691.)

Third, the analysis of the materiality of lost evidence differs in each case. Valenzuela-Bernal, which analyzed the materiality issue based on the defendant's having been denied the opportunity to interview a deported witness, required that the defendant make a plausible showing that the witness' testimony would have been material and favorable to his defense. Trombetta, whose analysis focused on problems presented by the destruction of physical evidence, emphasized the defendant's ability to obtain comparable evidence by other reasonably available means. And Youngblood, which focused on the importance of the state's good or bad faith in destroying physical evidence, referred to the fact that it was only dealing with the loss of evidence that might have been subjected to tests, the results of which might have exonerated the defendant. (218 C.A.3d 823.)

(2) "In summary, Trombetta and Valenzuela-Bernal address two different aspects of the state's duty to preserve exculpatory evidence. While Trombetta certainly presents an in-depth discussion of the constitutional duty to preserve physical evidence, there is nothing in the opinion to indicate that it intended to supersede Valenzuela-Bernal's examination of unavailable deported witnesses. The rationale of each case is supported by the distinctive aspects of physical evidence (Trombetta) and unavailable witnesses (Valenzuela-Bernal). Youngblood presents the most obvious distinction when it refers to evidence which may be subjected to tests." (218 C.A.3d 824.) Hence, the appropriate federal standard of materiality for witness deportation cases is Valenzuela-Bernal. (218 C.A.3d 825.)

(c) Application of standard: possession for sale charge.

(1) Under Valenzuela-Bernal, defendant was required to make a plausible showing that Alcala's testimony would have been material and favorable to defendant in ways not merely cumulative to the testimony of available witnesses. However, the police report, which constituted the only evidence concerning Alcala's testimony as it related to the possession for sale charge, showed that Alcala stated that many people visited defendant in their apartment, but that he (Alcala) neither knew the purpose of the visits nor had knowledge of narcotics being sold there. Because this showing, which is more incriminatory than exculpatory, fell far short of that required by Valenzuela-Bernal, the trial judge erred in dismissing the possession for sale charge. (218 C.A.3d 825.)

(2) It should be noted that defendant made no effort to state the nature of any favorable testimony that Alcala might have given, such as who owned either the cocaine or the jacket in which it was found, although under Valenzuela-Bernal he was encouraged to do so. (218 C.A.3d 825.)

(d) Application of standard: firearm enhancement.

(1) Because Alcala's police report statement that the firearm belonged to a third person constituted an adequate showing that his anticipated testimony on the firearm enhancement would be material and favorable under the Valenzuela-Bernal standard, the trial judge was correct in dismissing the enhancement. (218 C.A.3d 826.)

(2) Even though logically the trier of fact could accept as true Alcala's statement about the gun and still find the enhancement to be true (because one may be "armed with a firearm" without owning it), defendant was only required to show that the anticipated testimony would have aided his defense, not that it would have negated the charges against him. Here, although the weight to be accorded Alcala's statement was within the discretion of the trier of fact, it was clearly consistent with defendant's claim that he was not armed or in possession of a weapon. (218 C.A.3d 826.)

(3) It is noteworthy that although the prosecution's good or bad faith in making deportation decisions may have a bearing on the application of the Valenzuela-Bernal standard, the prosecution here made no effort to prove absence of bad faith. Instead of providing an explanation for its failure to give defendant or his counsel advance notice of Alcala's deportation, the prosecution merely argued that there was no reasonable possibility that Alcala's testimony could be favorable to defendant. (218 C.A.3d 826.) (See People v. Jenkins (1987) 190 C.A.3d 200, 205, 206, 235 C.R. 268 [deportation of men on premises when defendant was arrested for pimping no bar to retrial of defendant; no showing of reasonable possibility that their testimony would have been material to defendant's guilt; on retrial, defendant would have to meet Valenzuela-Bernal standard, which is "much stricter" than state standard].)

The prosecution need not call all persons appearing to have some knowledge of the crime. Hence, where there is no evidence of intentional concealment, neither the adverse inference nor the due process challenge will be successful. (See Moore v. Illinois (1972) 408 U.S. 786, 92 S.Ct. 2562, 2568, 33 L.Ed.2d 706, 713 ["We know of no constitutional requirement that the prosecution make a complete and detailed accounting to the defense of all police investigatory work on a case"]; In re Imbler (1963) 60 C.2d 554, 569, 35 C.R. 293, 387 P.2d 6 [authorities "are under no duty to report sua sponte to the defendant all that they learn about the case and about their witnesses"]; In re Lessard (1965) 62 C.2d 497, 507, 42 C.R. 583, 399 P.2d 39; *People v. ## CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

E. Evidence Suppressed in Criminal Cases.

5. Failure To Gather Evidence.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 133

[§ 133] Failure To Gather Evidence.

(1) No Duty To Gather Evidence Under Hitch. "To date there is no authority for the proposition that sanctions should be imposed for a failure to gather evidence as opposed to a failure to preserve evidence. ... Thus under present law the failure to record telephone conversations and the failure to record transmissions from a body microphone were not the grounds for sanctions." (People v. Harris (1985) 165 C.A.3d 324, 329, 211 C.R. 493; see People v. Bradley (1984) 159 C.A.3d 399, 408, 205 C.R. 485 [investigating officer failed to collect and preserve bloodstained articles found at scene of crime]; People v. Ventura (1985) 174 C.A.3d 784, 794, 220 C.R. 269 [police, in arresting defendant, noticed that he had alcoholic breath but was not intoxicated; they had no duty to administer intoxication tests and preserve results for trial].)

In re Michael L. (1985) 39 C.3d 81, 216 C.R. 140, 702 P.2d 222, reaches the same conclusion. Appellant Michael L., a minor, was adjudicated a ward under Welf.C. 602, on a finding that he robbed a store. The robbery was recorded on an automatic store surveillance camera, and witnesses who viewed the videotape identified the minor as the perpetrator. The police officers asked the store owners to preserve the tape but did not seize it, and later the owners inadvertently erased it. At the trial, appellant's counsel unsuccessfully sought to exclude evidence of the videotape and all identifications derived from it. Held, admission of the videotape was proper.

(a) The test for duty to preserve evidence, as set forth in California v. Trombetta (1984) 467 U.S. 479, 104 S.Ct. 2528, 81 L.Ed.2d 413, supra, §125, differs substantially from the California test established in People v. Hitch (1974) 12 C.3d 641, 117 C.R. 9, 527 P.2d 361, supra, §124. Because the robbery occurred prior to the effective date of Proposition 8 (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §8), the Hitch test governs. (39 C.3d 86; on subsequent nullification of Hitch, see supra, §126.)

(b) The issue of whether the police have a duty to seize evidence is "complex and provocative," but in this case, the failure of the officers to seize the tape does not warrant the sanction of exclusion of the evidence. (1) Although the officers may have been negligent in failure to obtain the tape, they did not act in bad faith or with any intent to deprive appellant of the evidence; they anticipated that the tape would be preserved. (2) Exclusion of the identification testimony would impose a sanction totally out of proportion to the alleged police failing: Reliability of the witnesses' identification was well established, and appellant made no showing of lack of quality of the tape or accuracy of the identification. (39 C.3d 87.)

A concurring justice, on an examination of California and out-of-state cases, asserted that there is no authority for a duty to seize evidence in the possession of third persons. (39 C.3d 88.) Such a duty would, as a practical matter, be impossible to perform: "Unless the scene of every crime is to be preserved in a time capsule pending the final resolution of the question of guilt, decisions must be made to exclude certain evidence from collection." (39 C.3d 89.) Also, an exclusionary rule could not be imposed in a case to which Proposition 8 applies. (39 C.3d 89, footnote 3.) However, exceptions to the no-duty rule may arise where investigating officers intentionally or in bad faith decline to seize material, potentially exculpatory evidence, realizing the likelihood that it will be lost or destroyed. (39 C.3d 89.)

An elaborate dissenting opinion argued that a limited duty to seize is a logical extension of the Hitch duty to preserve (39 C.3d 90), that the Hitch duty rests on independent state grounds (39 C.3d 101), and that to hold an accused to the higher standard of Trombetta would undermine the state's interest in an accurate and reliable process (39 C.3d 104).

(2) No Duty To Gather: Cases After Hitch's Nullification. Several cases decided after the Hitch duty to preserve evidence was discredited have declined to impose a duty to gather evidence. (See People v. Douglas (1990) 50 C.3d 468, 513, 268 C.R. 126, 788 P.2d 640 [officer who preserved names and phone numbers of witnesses claiming to have seen murder victims after alleged date of crime and who turned information over to defense investigator on request was not required to conduct further investigation]; People v. Daniels (1991) 52 C.3d 815, 855, 277 C.R. 122, 802 P.2d 906 [murder involving use of firearm; police had no duty to test witness for gunshot residue where defendant presented no evidence that witness had fired gun]; People v. Frye (1998) 18 C.4th 894, 943, 944, 77 C.R.2d 25, 959 P.2d 183 [even assuming that failure to collect evidence comes within scope of California v. Trombetta (1984) 467 U.S. 479, 104 S.Ct. 2528, 81 L.Ed.2d 413, text, §125, officers' failure to gather certain bloodstained items at murder scene did not violate Trombetta standards, because exculpatory value of items was matter of speculation and would not have been apparent to officers]; People v. Von Villas (1992) 10 C.A.4th 201, 248, 13 C.R.2d 62 [prosecutor's direction to investigator to stop taping interview with witness was not due process violation; police have no duty to generate evidence for impeachment purposes via tape recording]; People v. Sanchez (1998) 62 C.A.4th 460, 473, 474, 72 C.R.2d 782 [in prosecution for operation of endless chain scheme, prosecutor had no duty to discover existence of pyramid charts first mentioned and turned over to her by prosecution witnesses during trial].)

(3) Distinction: Duty To Provide Impeachment Evidence. The prosecution is constitutionally required to disclose the felony convictions of all material prosecution witnesses, even if it does not have actual knowledge of those convictions, provided the conviction records are "reasonably accessible." (People v. Little (1997) 59 C.A.4th 426, 433, 434, 68 C.R.2d 907.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) No Duty To Gather: Cases After Hitch's Nullification. See People v. Jordan (2003) 108 C.A.4th 349, 361, 362, 133 C.R.2d 434 [in prosecution for possession of cocaine base for sale, defendant's constitutional rights were not violated by prosecution's failure to disclose that charges of official misconduct involving fabrication of evidence had been raised against prosecution witness, a police officer, in unrelated criminal cases in same county; "the fact the People may have been a party to every criminal case prosecuted in the county does not give rise to a duty to collect evidence for the defense"].

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 134

[§ 134] Defendant's Obligations.

(1) No Request Necessary. The prosecution's duty to disclose material evidence favorable to an accused is not dependent on a request by the accused. (In re Ferguson (1971) 5 C.3d 525, 532, 96 C.R. 594, 487 P.2d 1234; People v. Ruthford (1975) 14 C.3d 399, 406, 121 C.R. 261, 534 P.2d 1341.) In Ferguson, the court said: "[T]o condition the duty to disclose upon request would provide a trap for the unwary and place substantial additional burdens on our busy trial courts. The general practice of making the district attorney's file available to defense counsel in Orange County is also followed in many other counties in this state, and this practice can only serve to provide a trap for the unwary if the prosecuting attorney does not know that he is under a duty to disclose evidence favorable to the defense but instead feels that he is free to omit such favorable evidence from his file. On the other hand, if the prosecutor has no such duty, defense counsel in the exercise of due caution to protect his client's interests can be expected to refuse to rely upon the prosecutor's file and to make in every case long and complex motions for discovery to ascertain whether the prosecution is hiding anything. To adopt rules so greatly increasing the burden of our already busy criminal courts would not serve the efficient administration of justice." (5 C.3d 532.) (See People v. Filson (1994) 22 C.A.4th 1841, 1848, 28 C.R.2d 335 [child molestation prosecution in which defendant claimed he was too intoxicated to form specific intent; prosecutor was required to disclose defendant's tape-recorded statement made shortly after arrest, even in absence of defense request].)

(2) Waiver by Failure To Object. Although no procedural rule sets forth the manner and timing of motions to bar evidence (such as test results) related to improperly suppressed evidence, once the evidence has been received without objection, a belated motion made thereafter is too late. (People v. Taylor (1977) 67 C.A.3d 403, 409, 410, 136 C.R. 640; see People v. Phillips (1985) 41 C.3d 29, 54, 222 C.R. 127, 711 P.2d 423; People v. Mayorga (1985) 171 C.A.3d 929, 941, 218 C.R. 830, infra, §135 [untimely to raise issue on motion for new trial].) (On failure to make objection as ineffective representation by counsel, calling for reversal of judgment of conviction, see People v. Jones (1983) 145 C.A.3d 751, 760, 193 C.R. 663.)

6. Raising Suppression Issue.

b. Procedure for Raising Issue.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 135

[§ 135] Procedure for Raising Issue.

(1) Preliminary Examination or Trial. Where the suppression is disclosed in the preliminary examination, a motion to set aside the information may be made; where it is shown at the trial, the conviction will be reversed on appeal. Either procedure gives the reviewing court a record of evidentiary inquiry into the character, materiality and exculpatory potential of the suppressed evidence. (McCullar v. Superior Court (1968) 264 C.A.2d 1, 8, 70 C.R. 21 [denying prohibition to prevent trial, where no such record made].) (See In re Lessard (1965) 62 C.2d 497, 42 C.R. 583, 399 P.2d 39 [habeas corpus denied on suppression issues]; 20 Hastings L. J. 974 [Lessard]; In re Ferguson (1971) 5 C.3d 525, 535, 96 C.R. 594, 487 P.2d 1234 [habeas corpus granted after conviction]; 7 U.S.F. L. Rev. 348, 352 [Ferguson]; People v. Davis (1971) 20 C.A.3d 890, 896, 98 C.R. 71 [dismissal not warranted where new trial would be appropriate remedy]; People v. Swearingen (1978) 84 C.A.3d 570, 574, 148 C.R. 755 [Hitch motion to bar testimony relating to suppressed material evidence]; People v. Goss (1980) 109 C.A.3d 443, 167 C.R. 224 [discussion of Hitch motion, sanctions available to trial court where material evidence suppressed, review of ruling on appeal, and harmless error].)

(2) Motion Before Trial Preferred. In People v. Mayorga (1985) 171 C.A.3d 929, 218 C.R. 830, defendant presented the issue on a motion for new trial. Held, the motion was properly denied.

(a) There are three procedural methods for properly raising the issue of prosecutorial suppression of evidence before a trial court, which preserve the issue for appeal. The first and most common method is by motion made before trial. "Certainly, this method is preferred. It allows for a full evidentiary hearing without the time pressures and inefficiencies inherent in interrupting a jury trial; it apprises the court and prosecutor of precisely the evidence which defendant claims has been destroyed; and it affords the prosecutor the opportunity to resist the claim that the evidence is material and to demonstrate that the police had established legally sufficient safeguards. It also provides the court with the best opportunity to fashion the most appropriate sanction." (171 C.A.3d 937, 938; see infra, §368 et seq.)

(b) A second, but less preferable, alternative is to object to the admission of evidence at trial. An evidentiary hearing can be held outside the presence of a jury. However, "such a hearing requires the interruption of the trial, with the obvious attendant inefficiencies." (171 C.A.3d 938; see infra, §367 et seq.)

(c) The final, and "significantly less favored method" of raising the issue is by motion to strike testimony. This method suffices to preserve the issue on appeal, but it is less desirable, in part because of the interruption in the trial, but also because the evidence has already been placed before the trier of fact. "An instruction that evidence has been stricken and, therefore, to be disregarded can never be more effective than not admitting the evidence in the first place."

(171 C.A.3d 938; see infra, §383 et seq.)

(d) The trial judge properly denied defendant's motion under the two-prong test for a nonstatutory new trial motion (see 6 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Judgment, §90 et seq.). Although defendant satisfied the first prong by showing the suppression of material evidence, defendant failed to satisfy the second prong by showing that he could not have raised the issue earlier. To the contrary, defendant failed to avail himself of the opportunity to raise the issue under any of the above methods. (171 C.A.3d 938.)

(3) Allegation Stricken Under Nonstatutory Motion. In Stanton v. Superior Court (1987) 193 C.A.3d 265, 239 C.R. 328, defendant was charged in an information with a felony violation of P.C. 192(c) (vehicular manslaughter with gross negligence). At the preliminary hearing, three eyewitnesses testified that defendant's automobile ran a red light and struck the decedent's automobile without attempting to stop or avoid the collision. Immediately before the trial, the prosecution provided defendant with an investigative report it had obtained prior to the preliminary hearing from the civil attorney representing the deceased victim's family. The report contained statements the eyewitnesses made to the investigator that directly contradicted their testimony at the preliminary hearing about defendant's failure to attempt to stop. Defendant made a P.C. 995 motion to have the information set aside and a nonstatutory motion to dismiss, both of which the trial judge denied. Held, defendant was not entitled to have the information set aside, but was entitled to have the "gross negligence" element stricken and the charge reduced to a misdemeanor.

(a) Defendant sought to have the felony charges reduced to a misdemeanor by persuading the magistrate that she was guilty of ordinary, rather than gross, negligence; and the undisclosed report contained exculpatory evidence on this focal issue. Had the report been available for cross-examination and the prosecution's key witnesses impeached, the magistrate might well have stricken the gross negligence allegation or granted defendant's motion to reduce the charge to a misdemeanor. (193 C.A.3d 272.)

(b) The prosecution's failure to produce this material evidence was not discovered until after the preliminary hearing; hence, the record of the preliminary hearing did not disclose the deprivation, and defendant was not entitled to relief under P.C. 995 (see 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Pretrial Proceedings, §228 et seq.). (193 C.A.3d 269.) But the nonstatutory motion to dismiss (see 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Pretrial Proceedings, §§228, 235 et seq.) was a proper device by which to raise the issue, and defendant is entitled to have the gross negligence allegation stricken and the charge reduced to a misdemeanor. (193 C.A.3d 271, 272.)

V. DETERMINATION OF CREDIBILITY AND WEIGHT

E. Evidence Suppressed in Criminal Cases.

7. No Sanction Other Than Suppression of Related Evidence.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 136

[§ 136] No Sanction Other Than Suppression of Related Evidence.

In People v. Griffin (1988) 46 C.3d 1011, 251 C.R. 643, 761 P.2d 103, a rape and murder case, a sample of vaginal fluid on which tests had been performed was destroyed, and the trial judge granted defendant's motion to suppress the test results. Defendant argued that, under People v. Zamora (1980) 28 C.3d 88, 167 C.R. 573, 615 P.2d 1361 (5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §62), the trial judge was also required to instruct the jury that they could infer from the destruction that the results were favorable to him. Held, Zamora is not applicable in this situation. In that case the destroyed evidence had no value to the prosecution, hence, it was not possible to impose the sanction of suppression. Here, however, important prosecution evidence was suppressed, and that sanction was sufficiently harsh to have a curative effect on future police practice concerning how long to preserve samples. (46 C.3d 1023.)

In People v. Medina (1990) 51 C.3d 870, 274 C.R. 849, 799 P.2d 1282, a Perrier bottle containing a fingerprint was inadvertently lost or destroyed. At trial, there was conflicting expert testimony on whether the print was defendant's. Defendant argued that the trial judge was required to instruct, sua sponte, that because of the police's negligent failure to preserve the bottle, the jury should (a) draw any conflicting inferences regarding the prints in favor of defendant, and (b) view the print evidence with distrust. Held, no such instructions were necessary. They are not required by either California v. Trombetta (1984) 467 U.S. 479, 104 S.Ct. 2528, 81 L.Ed.2d 413, supra, §125, or Arizona v. Youngblood (1988) 488 U.S. 51, 109 S.Ct. 333, 102 L.Ed.2d 281, supra, §125, "and we are reluctant to impose such an instructional sanction for mere negligence in failing to preserve evidence whose exculpatory value was unapparent to the officers when their omission occurred." (51 C.3d 894.)

8. Suppression by Defendant.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 137

[§ 137] Suppression by Defendant.

An adverse inference may be drawn from the defendant's suppression of evidence bearing on an issue that the defendant raises and on which he or she has the burden of proof. In People v. Vaughn (1968) 262 C.A.2d 42, 54, 68 C.R. 366, defendant sought coram nobis on the ground of insanity at the time of the offense and the trial. At the hearing, he did not introduce the reports of an examination by a clinical psychologist, furnished at his request. Held, an inference against him on this issue was proper. (See People v. Moran (1970) 1 C.3d 755, 760, 83 C.R. 411, 463 P.2d 763 [defendant's failure to call go-between in LSD sale "supports an inference that his testimony would not be favorable to defendant"]; People v. Baker (1974) 39 C.A.3d 550, 556, 113 C.R. 248 [prosecution was properly allowed to prove that incriminating exhibits were destroyed during preliminary hearing, even though only circumstantial evidence was presented to link defendant with destruction; defendant was last person seen with exhibits, he had motive and opportunity to destroy them, and it is rationally inferable that he purloined them and arranged for their destruction]; People v. Echevarria (1992) 11 C.A.4th 444, 451, 13 C.R.2d 840 [court properly instructed jury on defendant's attempt to suppress evidence where defendant had shaved off beard and mustache and cut hair after murder]; People v. Hill (1995) 34 C.A.4th 727, 737, 41 C.R.2d 39 [evidence of defendant's attempt, while he awaited trial, to have victim killed was properly admitted, even though defendant admitted robbing and shooting victim and identity therefore was not at issue; evidence was relevant to refute claim that shooting was accidental and to show it was motivated by attempt to eliminate witness]; 2 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §285 et seq.) (On obligation of defense counsel to turn over incriminating physical evidence to prosecution, see People v. Lee (1970) 3 C.A.3d 514, 524, 83 C.R. 715, 2 Cal. ## CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

V. DETERMINATION OF CREDIBILITY AND WEIGHT

F. Sufficiency of Circumstantial Evidence.

1. Civil Cases.

a. Test of Sufficiency.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 138

[§ 138] Test of Sufficiency.

Evidence of circumstances may be offered if it is relevant, i.e., if it can provide any rational inference in support of the issue. (See 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §26.) A stricter standard applies to its sufficiency, and circumstantial evidence that may be admissible will not necessarily be of sufficient strength to sustain a judgment. (See People v. Graves (1934) 137 C.A. 1, 10, 29 P.2d 807, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §§26, 28; 1 Wigmore (Tillers Rev.) §12.)

The difference, however, is one of degree only. Thus, it is frequently said that a judgment may be based on inferences drawn from circumstantial evidence, even though there is opposing direct testimony; it is not necessary that the circumstantial evidence in a civil case rise to such a degree of certainty that it excludes every other reasonable conclusion. (See generally Hasson v. Ford Motor Co. (1977) 19 C.3d 530, 548, 138 C.R. 705, 564 P.2d 857; Chalmers v. Hawkins (1926) 78 C.A. 733, 738, 248 P. 727; Kerner v. Peacock Dairies (1933) 129 C.A. 686, 689, 19 P.2d 283 [automobile collision; jury could draw inferences from physical facts, such as tire marks and position and appearance of cars after accident, contrary to direct testimony of eyewitnesses]; Hilson v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1933) 131 C.A. 427, 431, 21 P.2d 662; Vaccarezza v. Sanguinetti (1945) 71 C.A.2d 687, 691, 163 P.2d 470, infra, §140; Dougherty v. Lee (1946) 74 C.A.2d 132, 135, 168 P.2d 54; Ybarra v. Spangard (1949) 93 C.A.2d 43, 46, 208 P.2d 445; Spolter v. Four-Wheel Brake Service Co. (1950) 99 C.A.2d 690, 694, 222 P.2d 307, infra, §139; Sanders v. MacFarlane's Candies (1953) 119 C.A.2d 497, 500, 259 P.2d 1010 ["in civil cases the rule of decision is a rule of probability only"]; *Halstead v. ## CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

F. Sufficiency of Circumstantial Evidence.

1. Civil Cases.

b. Conflicting Inferences.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 139

[§ 139] Conflicting Inferences.

(1) General Rule. Some confusion appears in cases where the circumstantial evidence gives rise to conflicting inferences of apparently equal weight. It is frequently declared that plaintiffs cannot recover merely on a showing that the circumstances are consistent with their theories; they must show that the inferences favorable to them are more reasonable or probable than those against them. (See generally Estate of Moore (1923) 65 C.A. 29, 33, 223 P. 73; San Joaquin Grocery Co. v. Trewitt (1926) 80 C.A. 371, 375, 252 P. 332; Leslie G. v. Perry & Associates (1996) 43 C.A.4th 472, 483, 50 C.R.2d 785.)

(2) Qualifications. This theory is subject to three qualifications:

First, the party's proof need not wholly exclude all unfavorable inferences; i.e., the party is not required to show that, under the circumstances, the inference in his or her favor is the only one that can reasonably be drawn. (Campbell v. General Motors Corp. (1982) 32 C.3d 112, 121, 184 C.R. 891, 649 P.2d 224; West Coast Life Ins. Co. v. Crawford (1943) 58 C.A.2d 771, 788, 138 P.2d 384; Estate of Rowley (1967) 257 C.A.2d 324, 334, 65 C.R. 139; Short v. Nevada Joint Union High School Dist. (1985) 163 C.A.3d 1087, 1099, 210 C.R. 297.)

In Spolter v. Four-Wheel Brake Service Co. (1950) 99 C.A.2d 690, 222 P.2d 307, plaintiff recovered judgment for wrongful death against defendant, which had replaced a car wheel a few weeks before the accident. Held, the jury could conclude that the wheel had not been removed in the interim and that defendant's employees had negligently replaced it with loose lugs. The court pointed out that jurors may call upon their own experience in matters within the realm of common experience, and added: "In this day and place when the ownership and operation of automobiles has become an almost indispensable commonplace of our normal life the jurors from their common experience are in a position to draw the inference that a new tire mounted on a wheel from two to three weeks before the accident would in the meantime with reasonable probability not have to be replaced." (99 C.A.2d 694.)

Second, the theory has practical effect only in the trial court. On appeal, the reviewing court will uphold the judgment if any inferences support it, even though they may not be the more probable ones. (See McKinney v. Kull (1981) 118 C.A.3d 951, 955, 173 C.R. 696; State Farm Fire & Cas. Co. v. Jioras (1994) 24 C.A.4th 1619, 1626, 29 C.R.2d 840 [all conflicts in inferences to be drawn from evidence are to be resolved in favor of prevailing party]; Foothill Properties v. Lyon/Copley Corona Associates (1996) 46 C.A.4th 1542, 1547, footnote 4, 54 C.R.2d 488 [reviewing court generally resolves conflicting evidence in favor of prevailing party]; 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Appeal, §370.)

Third, the result may be influenced by a policy that makes the action favored or disfavored. In Umbesen v. Crocker First Nat. Bank of San Francisco (1949) 33 C.2d 599, 203 P.2d 752, a claimant of presumptively abandoned property (a bank deposit on which a check had been drawn and certified but never cashed, and since lost) had the burden of proving ownership. In view of the total lack of evidence as to what happened to the check, the trial court drew the permissible inference that it had been delivered to the payee, thus effecting an assignment of the funds. On appeal, the judgment against the claimant was reversed, the reviewing court selecting the "more probable" inference, which was "consistent with the purpose" of the statute, that the check had not been delivered. (33 C.2d 602.) (See Dimond v. Caterpillar Tractor Co. (1976) 65 C.A.3d 173, 183, 134 C.R. 895, citing the text.)

V. DETERMINATION OF CREDIBILITY AND WEIGHT

F. Sufficiency of Circumstantial Evidence.

1. Civil Cases.

c. Inference Based on Inference.

1. General Rule of Admissibility.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 140

[§ 140] General Rule of Admissibility.

(1) Former Law. A former statute described an inference as a deduction founded "on a fact legally proved," and some courts thought that this language precluded an inference founded on another inference. (See Hamilton v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co. (1939) 12 C.2d 598, 602, 86 P.2d 829; People v. Smith (1921) 55 C.A. 324, 333, 203 P. 816; Walsh v. American Trust Co. (1935) 7 C.A.2d 654, 659, 47 P.2d 323; Hubbert v. Aztec Brewing Co. (1938) 26 C.A.2d 664, 689, 80 P.2d 185, 1016; Primm v. Joyce (1948) 87 C.A.2d 288, 292, 196 P.2d 829 ["An inference may not be based on an inference much less a suspicion"].)

This proposition is unsound and has been repudiated by well-considered cases here and elsewhere. "The statement ... does not and cannot mean that an inference cannot be based upon a fact which is itself based upon circumstantial evidence. If that were the rule it would mean that few cases based on circumstantial evidence could ever be tried because it is seldom indeed that but one fact, in such a case, is based on circumstantial evidence. ... The true rule is and should be that an inference cannot be based on an inference that is too remote or conjectural." (Vaccarezza v. Sanguinetti (1945) 71 C.A.2d 687, 698, 163 P.2d 470.)

(2) Present Law. The better authorities and the later California cases clearly hold that an inference may be based on an inference where the first inference is properly drawn from sufficient evidence, and the second inference is not too remote. (People v. Graves (1934) 137 C.A. 1, 14, 29 P.2d 807; West Coast Life Ins. Co. v. Crawford (1943) 58 C.A.2d 771, 774, 138 P.2d 384; Brown-Forman Distillers Corp. v. Walkup Drayage & Warehouse Co. (1945) 71 C.A.2d 795, 799, 163 P.2d 878 ["when a fact is first proved all reasonable deductions may be drawn from it. Reasoning does not stop when one deduction has been made"]; Vaccarezza v. Sanguinetti, supra; Ybarra v. Spangard (1949) 93 C.A.2d 43, 46, 208 P.2d 445 [criticizing view expressed in Stewart v. Norsigian (1944) 64 C.A.2d 540, 545, 149 P.2d 46, as too narrow]; Savarese v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. (1957) 150 C.A.2d 518, 520, 310 P.2d 142; Abrams v. Stone (1957) 154 C.A.2d 33, 39, 315 P.2d 453; People v. Vignoli (1963) 213 C.A.2d 855, 857, 29 C.R. 260, citing the text; People v. Davis (1965) 235 C.A.2d 214, 225, 45 C.R. 297, citing the text; Louis & Diederich v. Cambridge European Imports (1987) 189 C.A.3d 1574, 1584, 234 C.R. 889, quoting the text; see 1A Wigmore (Tillers Rev.) §41; 5 A.L.R.3d 100 [rule against basing inference on inference].)

Ev.C. 600(b) is consistent with this view: The inference may be drawn from "another fact or group of facts found or otherwise established in the action." (See S. C. Anderson v. Bank of America (1994) 24 C.A.4th 529, 538, footnote 12, 30 C.R.2d 286, citing Ev.C. 600(b) [whether trier of fact may draw inference depends on whether the proposed conclusion is "reasonable, logical, and nonspeculative deduction from the facts proved"].)

(3) Illustrations. In Vaccarezza v. Sanguinetti, supra, plaintiffs, suing for damages for breach of warranty in a sale of infected pork, offered the following evidence: (a) a doctor's testimony that plaintiffs had unmistakable symptoms of trichinosis, though no actual germs had been found in a test; (b) plaintiffs' testimony that they had purchased their pork products exclusively from defendants. Held, the inferences that they had trichinosis, that they contracted it from eating pork, and that the pork from which they contracted it had been obtained from defendants, were properly drawn. (71 C.A.2d 697.)

In Savarese v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., supra, defendant insurer denied liability on an automobile policy, asserting cancellation prior to the accident. Defendant proved its copy of the letter to the insured and its established practice of mailing notices, relying on the former presumption that the ordinary course of business was followed and the presumption of Ev.C. 641 (receipt of letter). Held, the lower court's finding of cancellation was proper, despite the fact that the mailing was evidenced by one presumption, and the insured's receipt of the letter by another presumption. (150 C.A.2d 520.)

In People v. Vignoli, supra, defendant was charged with driving under the influence of narcotic drugs. He had been arrested at 1 p.m. and examined by a medical expert at 5:15 p.m. (a) On the basis of observed facts (fresh needle mark, pupils constricted, drowsiness), the doctor inferred, and gave his opinion, that defendant was under the influence of a narcotic drug at the time of the examination. (b) The doctor also testified that the average span of observable influence of a narcotic injection is 4-6 hours; this supported the further inference that defendant was under the influence 5 hours earlier while driving. (213 C.A.2d 856.)

In People v. Warner (1969) 270 C.A.2d 900, 76 C.R. 160, defendant was charged with conspiracy to commit bookmaking. The evidence showed that defendant rented an apartment and arranged for telephone service, and C, his fellow conspirator, attempted to arrange for police protection. Defendant's testimony was that C had tried to interest him in the conspiracy and that he had refused, following which C became cold and indifferent. The prosecution, in rebuttal, introduced evidence that, after defendant's arrest in his apartment, defendant's wife telephoned C twice, advising him of her husband's arrest, and telling him to watch his step and find out who the stool pigeon was. Held, this was admissible. From the timing of the calls and the statements made, it could reasonably be inferred that the wife knew defendant was involved in bookmaking with C, and this made more probable the further inference that he was a coconspirator. (270 C.A.2d 908, citing the text.)

[§ 141] Exception: Remote or Conjectural Inference.

In Savarese v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. (1957) 150 C.A.2d 518, 310 P.2d 142, the court added a word of caution: "Of course, the building of inference upon inference may often result in a progressive weakening of logical sequence, and lead to an ultimate conclusion which is untenable on the basis of the facts proven. When an ultimate inference is thus remote from the evidence, it should be rejected." (150 C.A.2d 520.)

This qualification of the rule is repeated in cases holding that an inference must ultimately rest on evidence, not on speculative possibility or conjecture. (See Marshall v. Parkes (1960) 181 C.A.2d 650, 655, 5 C.R. 657; Estate of Kuttler (1960) 185 C.A.2d 189, 204, 8 C.R. 160; *Krause v. ### V. DETERMINATION OF CREDIBILITY AND WEIGHT

F. Sufficiency of Circumstantial Evidence.

2. Criminal Cases.

a. Cautionary Instruction Required.

1. Nature and Purpose.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 142

[§ 142] Nature and Purpose.

The defendant in a criminal trial is protected by the presumption of innocence (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Burden of Proof and Presumptions, §20), and, therefore, the jury should be informed of the effect of circumstantial evidence offered by the prosecution. (See 36 A.L.R.4th 1046 [modern status of rule].) (On when evidence is circumstantial so as to call for instruction, see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §§1, 2.)

(1) Where Evidence Wholly or Substantially Circumstantial. If the prosecution's case rests entirely or substantially on circumstantial evidence, the required instruction is that such evidence must be irreconcilable with the theory of innocence. (See People v. Wiley (1976) 18 C.3d 162, 174, 133 C.R. 135, 554 P.2d 881; People v. Hatchett (1944) 63 C.A.2d 144, 155, 146 P.2d 469; People v. Ryan (1981) 116 C.A.3d 168, 177, 171 C.R. 854; People v. Fuentes (1986) 183 C.A.3d 444, 454, 237 C.R. 465, citing the text; CALJIC (6th ed.), No. 2.01 [jury must find that the proved circumstances "are not only (1) consistent with the theory that the defendant is guilty of the crime, but (2) cannot be reconciled with any other rational conclusion"].)

A similar instruction is required where the only element resting substantially or entirely on circumstantial evidence is specific intent or mental state. (CALJIC (6th ed.), No. 2.02 [circumstances must be consistent with theory that defendant had requisite specific intent or mental state and irreconcilable with any other rational conclusion]; see People v. Gordon (1982) 136 C.A.3d 519, 531, 186 C.R. 373; People v. DeLeon (1982) 138 C.A.3d 602, 607, 188 C.R. 63; People v. Honig (1996) 48 C.A.4th 289, 341, 55 C.R.2d 555, 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Governmental Authority, §105 [requested instruction based on CALJIC, No. 2.02 was properly refused, as defendant's mental state did not rest substantially on circumstantial evidence: his knowledge of all facts giving rise to offense was overwhelmingly established and for most part was conceded in his testimony].)

The precise form of the traditional instruction is not essential, as long as the doctrine is plainly stated. (See People v. Bender (1945) 27 C.2d 164, 177, 163 P.2d 8; People v. Koenig (1946) 29 C.2d 87, 92, 173 P.2d 1; People v. Navarro (1946) 74 C.A.2d 544, 550, 169 P.2d 265 ["Words of equal import may be substituted if the principle is substantially but clearly and fairly set forth"]; People v. Mansour (1951) 103 C.A.2d 592, 597, 230 P.2d 52.)

(2) Where Two Different Interpretations Are Possible. A part of CALJIC (6th ed.), No. 2.01, used where two opposing conclusions can be drawn from the evidence, states that the jury should "adopt that interpretation that points to the defendant's innocence, and reject that interpretation that points to his guilt." (See People v. Merkouris (1956) 46

C.2d 540, 560, 297 P.2d 999; People v. Yokum (1956) 145 C.A.2d 245, 253, 302 P.2d 406; see also CALJIC (6th ed.), No. 2.02 [where opposing conclusions can be drawn as to existence of specific intent or mental state, jury must adopt interpretation pointing to absence of such intent or state].)

(3) Each Essential Fact Proved. CALJIC (6th ed.), No. 2.01 further provides that "each fact which is essential to complete a set of circumstances necessary to establish the defendant's guilt must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt." (See People v. Watson (1956) 46 C.2d 818, 830, 299 P.2d 243; People v. Yokum, supra, 145 C.A.2d 254; People v. Shea (1995) 39 C.A.4th 1257, 1271, 46 C.R.2d 388 [where case is based on direct, not circumstantial, evidence, giving instruction is error, as jury could be led to believe that each of crime's circumstances, e.g., victim's bruises, torn clothes, etc., must be proved beyond reasonable doubt].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Dunkle* (2005) 36 C.4th 861, 928, 32 C.R.3d 23, 116 P.3d 494 [in penalty phase of capital murder case, trial judge did not err in failing to instruct jury with CALJIC, Nos. 2.01 and 2.02 with regard to evidence of other violent offenses; prosecution relied primarily on direct, rather than circumstantial, evidence, and to extent evidence of defendant's mental state was circumstantial, it was not equally consistent with rational finding of innocence]; People v. Burch (2007) 148 C.A.4th 862, 872, 55 C.R.3d 892, 5 *Cal. Crim. ## 2. Failure To Instruct.

[§ 143] Failure To Instruct.

Where the evidence is circumstantial, refusal to instruct is serious error, and failure to instruct is likewise error. In other words, the instruction is a mandatory requirement in a proper case, and the court must give it of its own motion. (People v. Bender (1945) 27 C.2d 164, 175, 163 P.2d 8 ["In unequivocal language it should be declared to the jury in every criminal case wherein circumstantial evidence is received"]; People v. Yrigoyen (1955) 45 C.2d 46, 49, 286 P.2d 1; People v. Chenault (1946) 74 C.A.2d 487, 497, 169 P.2d 29; People v. Tholke (1946) 75 C.A.2d 857, 860, 171 P.2d 904; People v. Fuentes (1986) 183 C.A.3d 444, 454, 237 C.R. 465 [circumstantial evidence relied on to identify defendant, conflicting evidence presented and jury did not find case "easy"; trial judge's refusal to give CALJIC, No. 2.01 instruction held prejudicial error]; cf. People v. Barkoff (1958) 163 C.A.2d 639, 644, 329 P.2d 1005 [instruction on former CALJIC, No. 27 (now CALJIC (6th ed.), No. 2.02) should have been given, but no reversible error in view of giving of former CALJIC, No. 26 (now CALJIC (6th ed.), No. 2.01)]; People v. Rodrigues (1994) 8 C.4th 1060, 1142, 36 C.R.2d 235, 885 P.2d 1 [because trial court delivered more inclusive instruction under CALJIC, No. 2.01, its refusal to additionally instruct with CALJIC, No. 2.02 clearly was not prejudicial error].)

In People v. Salas (1976) 58 C.A.3d 460, 129 C.R. 871, a robbery case, defendant contended that the trial court should have specifically instructed the jury that defendant could not be found guilty of inflicting great bodily harm on the victim, unless the proved circumstances not only were consistent with the hypothesis that defendant had the specific intent, but were irreconcilable with any other rational conclusion. Held, the contention was well taken.

(a) Where one element of the crime charged is sought to be proved by direct evidence, while other elements are based on circumstantial evidence, the circumstantial evidence instruction becomes crucial. This is so, however, only when the basic proof of an essential element consists of circumstantial evidence. Then, "it is unequivocally essential that such an instruction be given." (58 C.A.3d 473.)

(b) Here, the trial court gave CALJIC, Nos. 2.01 and 2.02, but the specific intent referred to dealt only with the robbery charge, i.e., with the defendant's specific intent to permanently deprive the owner of his property. The cautionary instruction was not repeated for the issue of specific intent to inflict great bodily injury. This lack was prejudicial error. The trial court's failure to give CALJIC, No. 2.02, as to the bodily injury allegation might well have led the jurors to conclude that they could find defendant possessed the intent by the circumstantial evidence introduced, without considering whether the proved circumstances were irreconcilable with any other rational conclusion.

Pinpointing was necessary in the instructions. (58 C.A.3d 473.)

See People v. Rogers (2006) 39 C.4th 826, 885, 48 C.R.3d 1, 141 P.3d 1353 [in capital murder case, trial judge erred in failing to give circumstantial evidence instruction (CALJIC, No. 2.01), where prosecution's case rested principally on two items of circumstantial evidence; however, error was harmless because judge did give CALJIC, No. 2.02 (circumstantial evidence of specific intent or mental state; see text, §142), and thus error could only have affected issue of identity, on which there was strong circumstantial evidence of defendant's guilt].

V. DETERMINATION OF CREDIBILITY AND WEIGHT

F. Sufficiency of Circumstantial Evidence.

2. Criminal Cases.

b. Exceptions and Distinctions.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 144

[§ 144] Exceptions and Distinctions.

(1) Circumstantial Evidence Incidental. The earlier statement of the rule called for the instruction where the evidence is "wholly circumstantial." Later, it was said that, where circumstantial evidence is "substantially relied upon for proof of guilt," and particularly "where criminal knowledge is shown only by circumstantial evidence," the instruction must be given. (People v. Yrigoyen (1955) 45 C.2d 46, 49, 286 P.2d 1.)

But where there is direct evidence connecting the defendant with the commission of the crime, and the circumstantial evidence is "only incidental or corroborative," the instruction is not required. (See People v. Jerman (1946) 29 C.2d 189, 197, 173 P.2d 805; People v. Malbrough (1961) 55 C.2d 249, 251, 10 C.R. 632, 359 P.2d 30; People v. Wiley (1976) 18 C.3d 162, 175, 133 C.R. 135, 554 P.2d 881; People v. Harmon (1948) 89 C.A.2d 55, 60, 200 P.2d 32; People v. Klinkenberg (1949) 90 C.A.2d 608, 632, 204 P.2d 47; People v. Moore (1961) 196 C.A.2d 91, 98, 16 C.R. 294; People v. Pruitt (1969) 269 C.A.2d 501, 504, 75 C.R. 125; People v. Baldwin (1979) 97 C.A.3d 396, 402, 159 C.R. 15; People v. Williams (1984) 162 C.A.3d 869, 874, 208 C.R. 790; People v. Thongvilay (1998) 62 C.A.4th 71, 86, 72 C.R.2d 738; 36 A.L.R.4th 1046.)

(2) Defendant's Admissions. Testimony to an extrajudicial admission was described as "indirect evidence" by former C.C.P. 1832. Neither the term "indirect evidence" nor this classification of admissions is used in the Evidence Code; but, even under the old law, the circumstantial evidence instruction was not required in all cases involving reliance on "indirect evidence." The instruction was designed only for the case "in which the defendant's guilt must be inferred from a pattern of incriminating circumstances." (People v. Gould (1960) 54 C.2d 621, 629, 630, 7 C.R. 273, 354 P.2d 865 [distinguishing and disapproving of contrary implications in People v. Koenig (1946) 29 C.2d 87, 173 P.2d 1, supra, §142]; see People v. Wright (1990) 52 C.3d 367, 406, 276 C.R. 731, 802 P.2d 221 [circumstantial evidence instruction was not required where prosecution placed primary reliance on defendant's postarrest inculpatory admissions; citing People v. Wiley, supra].)

Thus, in Gould, defendants G and M were convicted of burglary. The case against G consisted mainly of a weak identification by the victim (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §166), and his own admissions after arrest. He contended that, in view of the equivocal identification, his admissions were necessary to the conviction, and that it was error to deny the circumstantial evidence instruction. The court said: "The requested instructions on circumstantial evidence clearly do not refer to the problem of evaluating hearsay. They are unnecessary, and may be misleading, when the jury is to consider only whether the admission was made, and if made, whether it was true." (54 C.2d 629.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

V. DETERMINATION OF CREDIBILITY AND WEIGHT

F. Sufficiency of Circumstantial Evidence.

2. Criminal Cases.

c. Review on Appeal.

1. Affirmance on Substantial Evidence.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 145

[§ 145] Affirmance on Substantial Evidence.

(1) Conflicting Statements in Early Cases. In People v. Staples (1906) 149 C. 405, 425, 86 P. 886, the court mistakenly applied the trial rule (supra, §142) to an appeal, and declared that, to support a criminal judgment, the circumstantial evidence "must be not only consistent with the hypothesis of guilt, but inconsistent with any other rational hypothesis." This mistake was repeated in People v. Lamson (1934) 1 C.2d 648, 661, 36 P.2d 361.

The correct rule had been authoritatively stated in People v. Woo (1919) 181 C. 315, 326, 184 P. 389: "[I]t is the function of the jury in the first instance, and of the trial court after verdict, to determine what facts are established by the evidence, and before the verdict of the jury, which has been approved by the trial court, can be set aside on appeal ... it must be made clearly to appear that upon no hypothesis whatever is there sufficient substantial evidence to support the conclusion reached in the court below ... We must assume in favor of the verdict the existence of every fact which the jury could have reasonably deduced from the evidence, and then determine whether such facts are sufficient to support the verdict."

(2) Clarification. Subsequently, the doctrine of the Staples and Lamson cases was repudiated in two stages:

The first dealt with the situation in which, unlike Staples and Lamson, the crime was admitted and the circumstantial evidence related solely to the identity of the defendant. In People v. Perkins (1937) 8 C.2d 502, 66 P.2d 631, K, a gambler with whom defendant had been living, was robbed and murdered one morning. Defendant claimed that he also was attacked by assailants who fled. Defendant said that he had not been in a fight the night before, but blood was found on his clothes, and scratches and cuts on his face, neck and body, while skin and blood were found under the fingernails of the deceased. Some time later, paper money resembling that known to have been in the deceased's possession was found concealed in a tree near a house to which defendant had gone for help on the morning. Held, the evidence was sufficient to sustain the conviction; even though the appellate court is of the opinion that the circumstances might be reasonably reconciled with the innocence of the defendant, this does not warrant interference with the determination of the jury. (8 C.2d 511.)

In the second stage, where the circumstantial evidence, as in the Staples and Lamson cases, related to the commission of the crime, the rule of People v. Woo, supra, was again approved. (See People v. Green (1939) 13 C.2d 37, 42, 87 P.2d 821 ["A conviction may not be set aside because the evidence is susceptible of two reasonable inferences, one looking to the guilt of the defendant and the other to his innocence"]; People v. Newland (1940) 15 C.2d 678, 681, 104 P.2d 778; People v. Hills (1947) 30 C.2d 694, 701, 185 P.2d 11 [circumstantial evidence furnishing inference of premeditation held to support verdict of first degree murder]; People v. Daugherty (1953) 40 C.2d 876, 885, 256 P.2d 911; People v. Redrick (1961) 55 C.2d 282, 289, 10 C.R. 823, 359 P.2d 255; People v. Reilly (1970) 3 C.3d 421, 425, 90 C.R. 417, 475 P.2d 649; People v. Johnson (1980) 26 C.3d 557, 575, 162 C.R. 431, 606 P.2d 738; People v. McNeese (1940) 40 C.A.2d 97, 101, 104 P.2d 370; People v. Navarro (1946) 74 C.A.2d 544, 549, 169 P.2d 265; People v. Klinkenberg (1949) 90 C.A.2d 608, 626, 204 P.2d 47; People v. Camargo (1955) 130 C.A.2d 543, 549, 279 P.2d 194.)

(3) California Rule Consistent With Federal Standard. In People v. Johnson, supra, the court reviewed the authorities and found the California rule consistent with the standards for review set forth in Jackson v. Virginia (1979) 443 U.S. 307, 99 S.Ct. 2781, 61 L.Ed.2d 560.

(a) "In determining whether a reasonable trier of fact could have found defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, the appellate court 'must view the evidence in a light most favorable to respondent and presume in support of the judgment the existence of every fact the trier could reasonably deduce from the evidence.' ... The court does not, however, limit its review to the evidence favorable to the respondent. ... [O]ur task ... is twofold. First, we must resolve the issue in the light of the whole record--i.e., the entire picture of the defendant put before the jury--and may not limit our appraisal to isolated bits of evidence selected by the respondent. Second, we must judge whether the evidence of each of the essential elements ... is substantial; it is not enough for the respondent simply to point to 'some' evidence supporting the finding, for 'Not every surface conflict of evidence remains substantial in the light of other facts.' " (26 C.3d 577, quoting from People v. Bassett (1968) 69 C.2d 122, 70 C.R. 193, 443 P.2d 777.)

(b) Some Court of Appeal decisions contain language suggesting that a conviction should be sustained if any evidence taken in isolation might appear substantial. This is not the proper approach: "A formulation of the substantial evidence rule which stresses the importance of isolated evidence supporting the judgment ... risks misleading the court into abdicating its duty to appraise the whole record. As Chief Justice Traynor explained, the 'seemingly sensible' substantial evidence rule may be distorted in this fashion, to take 'some strange twists.' 'Occasionally,' he observes, 'an appellate court affirms the trier of fact on isolated evidence torn from the context of the whole record. Such a court leaps from an acceptable premise, that a trier of fact could reasonably believe the isolated evidence, to the dubious conclusion that the trier of fact reasonably rejected everything that controverted the isolated evidence. Had the appellate court examined the whole record, it might have found that a reasonable trier of fact could not have made the finding in issue. One of the very purposes of review is to uncover just such irrational findings and thus preclude the risk of affirming a finding that should be disaffirmed as a matter of law.' " (26 C.3d 577, quoting Traynor, The Riddle of Harmless Error.)

(c) "We do not believe it necessary to disapprove past decisions merely because they contain language which could be misconstrued to permit affirmance based on a standard of review which might contravene Jackson v. Virginia. ... We think it sufficient to reaffirm the basic principles which govern judicial review of a criminal conviction challenged as lacking evidentiary support: the court must review the whole record in the light most favorable to the judgment below to determine whether it discloses substantial evidence--that is, evidence which is reasonable, credible, and of solid value--such that a reasonable trier of fact could find the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt." (26 C.3d 578.) (See People v. Oyaas (1985) 173 C.A.3d 663, 668, 219 C.R. 243 [following People v. Johnson]; 26 West L.A. L. Rev. 101 [sufficiency of evidence standard of Jackson v. Virginia].)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

V. DETERMINATION OF CREDIBILITY AND WEIGHT

F. Sufficiency of Circumstantial Evidence.

2. Criminal Cases.

c. Review on Appeal.

2. Reversal Where Evidence Not Substantial.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 146

[§ 146] Reversal Where Evidence Not Substantial.

(1) Reversal Not Common. Under the theory of appellate review declared in the preceding section, insufficiency of evidence is seldom an express ground of reversal; the practice is rather to emphasize the probable prejudice from errors committed in a "close case." (See 6 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Appeal, §§152, 153; 6 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Reversible Error, §45.) In rare instances, however, the court, unable to find errors of sufficient substance to justify their characterization as "prejudicial," places its reversal squarely on the ground of insufficiency of evidence. (See 6 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Appeal, §152; People v. Hall (1964) 62 C.2d 104, 41 C.R. 284, 396 P.2d 700, infra, this section; People v. Redmond (1969) 71 C.2d 745, 756, 79 C.R. 529, 457 P.2d 321 [identification of defendant not positive, fingerprint evidence not substantially incriminating]; People v. Hunt (1971) 4 C.3d 231, 238, 93 C.R. 197, 481 P.2d 205 [expert opinion as to possession of methedrine for sale not substantial]; People v. Reyes (1974) 12 C.3d 486, 497, 500, 116 C.R. 217, 526 P.2d 225; In re Johnny G. (1979) 25 C.3d 543, 547, 159 C.R. 180, 601 P.2d 196 [extrajudicial identification of defendant that cannot be confirmed by identification at trial is insufficient to sustain conviction; following People v. Gould, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §166]; People v. Briggs (1967) 255 C.A.2d 497, 63 C.R. 111, 6 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Appeal, §153; People v. Blakeslee (1969) 2 C.A.3d 831, 837, 82 C.R. 839; People v. Johnson (1984) 158 C.A.3d 850, 855, 856, 204 C.R. 877 [thumbprint on bottle containing illegal drug insufficient to prove defendant's possession of drug].)

(2) Illustrations. In People v. Hall, supra, decedent, a prostitute, was stabbed to death. In her rooms, police found blood trails, soleprints and heelprints of a man's shoes, a broken window, and a bloody handprint. Witnesses heard talking between decedent and an unidentified man, with the name "Monroe" mentioned (defendant's name was Monroe Hall). There was further evidence that defendant's shoes had been recently scrubbed. Defendant was convicted of second degree murder in a nonjury trial. Held, reversed. In holding the evidence insufficient, the court reviewed each supposedly incriminating item:

(a) The mention of "Monroe" was equivocal. Although some witnesses testified he was the only "Monroe" she knew, she undoubtedly knew many persons, and it was unclear whether the name was used at the beginning or end of the statements, i.e., to name the person she was addressing or otherwise. (62 C.2d 110.)

(b) The chemical tests provided no convincing evidence of recent blood on his shoes, and the cleaning of his shoes was not an incriminating fact, because scrubbing would tend to spread any blood and the tests would have discovered it. (62 C.2d 110, 111.)

(c) No expert evidence connected glass in his shoes with the glass found near the broken window, no cuts were found on his arms, and none of the prints was linked to him. (62 C.2d 112.)

The opinion concludes as follows:

"Every attempt to connect defendant with the details of the killing failed. To justify a criminal conviction, the trier of fact must be reasonably persuaded to a near certainty. The trier must therefore have reasonably rejected all that undermines confidence. This case presents a mass of undisputed evidence and unexplained facts that destroys confidence in any inference pointing to guilt. Each item of evidence against defendant is so weak and inconclusive that together they are insufficient to constitute proof beyond a reasonable doubt." (62 C.2d 112.)

In People v. Blakeslee, supra, the "totality of proof" that defendant killed her mother consisted of the following facts: She was at the crime scene about the time when the crime was committed; she had an opportunity to commit the crime; she and her mother had "friction" in the past (though neither past physical violence nor a present quarrel was shown); on the night of the crime, she gave the police a false account of her movements and denied knowing that her brother owned a .22 rifle. Held, conviction of second degree murder reversed.

(a) Test of sufficiency. The test is whether proof of guilt is substantial, is of solid value, and reasonably inspires confidence. "We think it follows that the more serious the charge--and murder is considered the most serious charge of all--the more substantial the proof of guilt should be in order to reasonably inspire confidence." (2 C.A.3d 837.)

(b) Inferences from falsehoods. Defendant's falsehoods might form the basis for unfavorable inferences against her. "But inferences of what? The refutation of these falsehoods did not directly implicate defendant in the slaying. Rather their refutation merely destroyed defendant's asserted alibi for the time of the crime and rebutted her claimed ignorance of an accessible weapon which could have been used to commit the crime. This negation of a negative (she was not there) does not amount to affirmation of a positive (she did the shooting). Inferences drawn from her tender of a false alibi do not directly support a murder accusation against the defendant. While it is said that a false alibi tends to establish a consciousness of guilt ... , the logical force of this deduction is weakened when there is some plausibility to the defendant's subsequent explanation of the reason for the falsehood. Here, defendant's explanation was that in giving these falsehoods she was trying to protect her brother Michael." (2 C.A.3d 839, citing the text.)

(c) Lack of ordinarily expected evidence. In a murder prosecution based on circumstantial evidence, certain evidence is ordinarily expected. It was absent here. "The absence of evidence, like Sherlock Holmes' curious incident of the dog in the nighttime which did not bark, may have as great an impact on the substantiality of a case as any which is produced, for the absence of evidence which would normally be forthcoming can undermine the solidity of the proof relied on to support a finding of guilt." (2 C.A.3d 839.) The "missing evidence" was not peripheral, but was central to the murder charge. "It consists of (1) evidence of a murder weapon, which we do not have; (2) evidence linking the bullets which caused the victim's death to a particular weapon, which we do not have; (3) in the absence of the first two items, evidence of the type or caliber of weapon used for the murder, which we do not have; (4) evidence to establish a connection between a murder weapon and the defendant, either tangible evidence such as fingerprints, palm prints, or powder burns, or testimonial evidence linking the defendant in some manner to a weapon, which evidence we do not have." (2 C.A.3d 840.)

(d) Evidence susceptible of manipulation. When evidence is susceptible of such manipulation that it could be used against another person (e.g., the defendant's brother) as plausibly as against defendant, it lacks substantial probative value and does not reasonably inspire confidence in defendant's guilt. The evidence therefore did not constitute proof beyond a reasonable doubt. (2 C.A.3d 840.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

VI. INTRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTARY AND DEMONSTRATIVE EVIDENCE

- A. Documentary Evidence.
  - 1. Foundation by Authentication.
    - a. In General.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 147

[§ 147] In General.

Except where authenticity is admitted (2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Documentary Evidence, §21) or presumed (2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Documentary Evidence, §22 et seq.), introduction of a document in evidence requires a foundation by proof of authenticity (2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Documentary Evidence, §3 et seq.). The normal procedure is to call a witness to testify to the preliminary facts showing authenticity. (See Ev.C. 1400 et seq.; 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Documentary Evidence, §8 et seq.; on the practice, see C.E.B., 2 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §13.65 et seq.; Rutter Group, 2 Civil Trials and Evidence §8:326 et seq.; 35 Proof of Facts 2d 147 [foundation for admission of secondary evidence]; 2 McCormick 5th, §218 et seq.) (On foundation for business records, see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §243; on admission of prepared testimony as documentary exhibit in economic litigation case, see C.C.P. 98, 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Courts, §266.)

The writing must be shown to opposing counsel, who may challenge the sufficiency of the showing of preliminary facts. But the objection to lack of foundation must be specific (infra, §380). Thus, in Bank of America v. Taliaferro (1956) 144 C.A.2d 578, 301 P.2d 393, plaintiff bank, to prove a conditional sales contract and assignment to it, merely had an employee testify that the contract was acquired by the bank. Because no showing of due execution and delivery was made, an objection on that ground would have been good. But the only objection was that the contract "purportedly signed" by the conditional buyer was "hearsay, incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial" as to the defendant. Held, this did not inform the court and proponent of the defect to be corrected, and it was waived. (144 C.A.2d 582.)

Similarly, in People v. Alves (1954) 123 C.A.2d 735, 267 P.2d 858, the action was against a highway carrier for violation of a Public Utilities Commission minimum rate decision. To make the necessary proof of service of the decision on the carrier, the prosecution offered a "Certificate of Service" by C, an employee of the Commission, reciting that "I ... hereby certify that it appears from said records" that service was made by mail. This was plainly insufficient as authentication, being merely the conclusion of the custodian as to what the records showed, instead of a certified copy of the record of service. But defendant's objection was that service could only be proved by a certificate of the person making the service, i.e., that the Commission's records could not be used to prove service. Because such an official record is prima facie evidence of the facts recited therein (2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Documentary Evidence, §44), this objection was untenable; and, having failed to object to the improper manner of proving the official record (a defect easily correctable), he waived the defect. (123 C.A.2d 737.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

VI. INTRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTARY AND DEMONSTRATIVE EVIDENCE

A. Documentary Evidence.

1. Foundation by Authentication.

b. Tape Recording.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 148

[§ 148] Tape Recording.

A tape recording is a writing under Ev.C. 250. (See 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Documentary Evidence, §12; 48 Am.Jur. Trials 1 [admission and use of audio recordings as evidence]; 23 Proof of Facts 3d 315 [foundation for audio recordings].)

In People v. Fonville (1973) 35 C.A.3d 693, 111 C.R. 53, the prosecution offered a tape recording which was surreptitiously made at the jail where defendant was confined and which supposedly was between defendant and his uncle. The foundation for admission consisted of the following facts: When the uncle arrived at the jail, his name, address and relationship to defendant were taken; defendant and the uncle were assigned to phone No. 30, which was part of the intercom phone set-up in the visiting area and which allowed the two to talk while separated by a glass partition; the jail personnel notified the recording room to record the conversation in accordance with prior instructions from the district attorney; a sheriff's employee recorded the conversation. No one was called to identify the voices or to testify that the tape accurately reproduced the conversation. The tape was admitted. Held, a sufficient foundation for admission was established.

(a) The usual way of laying a foundation for the playing of a recording is to call a participant or monitor to testify that the conversation was accurately recorded. But this method is not exclusive. Ev.C. 1410 et seq. set forth methods to establish a writing's authenticity; Ev.C. 250 includes a tape recording as a writing; and Ev.C. 1421 provides that a writing may be authenticated by evidence that the writing refers to matters unlikely to be known by anyone other than the author. Here, the recorded conversation includes statements about what defendant had denied to the police, what he told the police about his state of intoxication, what quantity of intoxicants he took, and when the victim left a cafe. "They are matters that are unlikely to have been known by anyone other than the appellant. In effect, the conversation proves itself." (35 C.A.3d 709.)

(b) As to the identification of defendant's voice, the judge and jury had previously heard another recorded statement made by defendant on the night of his arrest. By comparison, they had a basis for authenticating the fact that defendant's voice was on both tapes. "There are other ways of identifying a voice than by seeing the speaker ... , and we have concluded that comparing the two tapes is one such acceptable method." (35 C.A.3d 709.) (See People v. Williams (1997) 16 C.4th 635, 662, 66 C.R.2d 573, 941 P.2d 752 [foundation laid when witness testified that tape was record of his conversation with defendant]; People v. Estrada (1979) 93 C.A.3d 76, 100, 155 C.R. 731 [recording of defendant's jailhouse conversation with his brother-in-law was properly authenticated; investigator who monitored conversation identified tape as same one on which he recorded conversation].)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

VI. INTRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTARY AND DEMONSTRATIVE EVIDENCE

A. Documentary Evidence.

2. Offer in Evidence.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 149

[§ 149] Offer in Evidence.

The writing should be offered in evidence and given an identifying exhibit number. (See C.E.B., 2 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §13.45 et seq.; 5 Am.Jur. Trials 553.) But failure to use express words of formal offer in evidence is not necessarily fatal. In Walsh v. Walsh (1952) 108 C.A.2d 575, 239 P.2d 472, at a hearing of an order to show cause why respondent husband should not pay costs pending a divorce action, his counsel produced a document described as a property settlement agreement and handed it to the judge. Counsel for both sides asked questions concerning it on direct, cross and redirect examination, but it was not offered in evidence or marked as an exhibit. Held, nevertheless, for purposes of the appeal, it was in evidence, because the offering party (respondent), the court, and the appellant treated it as if it were. (108 C.A.2d 578.)

On the other hand, in Pringle v. Hunsicker (1957) 154 C.A.2d 789, 316 P.2d 742, a creditor's suit seeking to disregard the entity of a corporation, many important facts were shown by the record of the Corporation Commissioner "brought into court, briefly referred to and received in evidence by reference," after which it was taken away. Held, although other proof was sufficient for reversal, appellant's failure to follow the rules could have been disastrous, for the record was not even on file in the lower court and could not be brought up under the augmentation rule. (154 C.A.2d 796.) (The court did not consider the possibility of judicial notice of the administrative officer's records; see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Judicial Notice, §19.)

See People v. Thuss (2003) 107 C.A.4th 221, 232, 133 C.R.2d 149 [in prosecution for possession of marijuana for sale, trial judge did not err in failing to admit 23 search warrant affidavits, where they were never marked for identification or offered in evidence; counsel's remark, "we have 23 search warrants that essentially say identical things," did not constitute offer in evidence].

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

VI. INTRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTARY AND DEMONSTRATIVE EVIDENCE

A. Documentary Evidence.

3. Production by Witness on Stand.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 150

[§ 150] Production by Witness on Stand.

(1) General Rule. A witness already in court and on the stand may, as part of the examination, be compelled to produce admissible papers or other documents that the witness has available. Production is thus accomplished without a subpoena duces tecum and is simply part of the testimony. As the court said in Ex parte Clarke (1899) 126 C. 235, 58 P. 546, "It may be assumed, however, that--although we have no express affirmative statutory provisions on the subject--when a witness is in court, no matter how brought there, and discloses the fact that he has a paper, document, or book which would be evidence in favor of the party desiring it, he may, in a proper case, be rightfully ordered to produce it." (126 C. 239.) (On subpoena duces tecum under C.C.P. 1985 et seq., see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §218 et seq.; on alternative procedure using notice to produce documents under C.C.P. 1987(c), see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §36.)

(2) Limitation: Requirements of Specificity and Materiality. However, because this is merely one means of producing evidence from the adverse party or that party's witness, the examining party must make the necessary showing to comply with the tests of specification and materiality. (See 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §224 et seq.) Thus, in Ex parte Clarke, supra, petitioner, secretary of a corporation defendant, was directed by the court to produce all of its books, on plaintiff's statement that he intended to prove the "general course of business" of the corporation, and the authority of its president to make a certain contract. Held, the order was improper. "It is quite evident that these books were not required to be produced for the direct purpose of introducing them in evidence. Plaintiff would not have offered them or any part of them in evidence unless he found something in the part offered that was relevant and material in support of his side of the case. ... He merely intended to draw his dragnet of inspection through all these books under the ostensible motive of trying to catch something. ... In the meantime, all the private business of the defendant--all its dealings with persons other than plaintiff, its methods of conducting its affairs, perhaps its financial condition and other matters vitally important to its welfare--would have been exposed." (126 C. 241.)

Similarly, in Kullman, Salz & Co. v. Superior Court (1911) 15 C.A. 276, 114 P. 589, a wife sued her husband for divorce and alimony, and alleged that petitioner corporation and others had conspired fraudulently to transfer his stock in the corporation. The corporation's answer alleged a valid pledge sale of the stock, and the evidence supported this allegation. At a hearing on an application for temporary alimony, the secretary was asked to produce the records of the corporation showing its profits earned during the past 5 years. Held, he was entitled to refuse. Plaintiff might have asked for records that would tend to show that her husband still owned stock in the corporation, notwithstanding the sale, and if such ownership was shown, the further order to produce books showing profits would have been warranted. But in the state of the evidence, there was no showing that the husband owned the stock any longer, and consequently, the books called for were not material to the issue before the court. (15 C.A. 280.)

(3) Limitation: Due Process Considerations. Oksner v. Superior Court (1964) 229 C.A.2d 672, 40 C.R. 621, emphasizes another limitation. Plaintiff, a judgment creditor, wanted to reach a promissory note which was an asset of his judgment debtor. The note was about to be sold at a pledge sale by a nonparty. Plaintiff could not raise the bond for an injunction against the sale, and conceived of an inexpensive substitute: He served a subpoena duces tecum on the nonparty's attorney; the latter appeared with the note but objected to jurisdiction; the judge then ordered him to surrender the note to the clerk and held him in contempt for refusal. Held, contempt order annulled. The judge could have required production of the note for a proper evidentiary purpose, but to seize and impound it would be a violation of due process. (229 C.A.2d 682.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

VI. INTRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTARY AND DEMONSTRATIVE EVIDENCE

A. Documentary Evidence.

4. Request To Seal Documents.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 151

[§ 151] Request To Seal Documents.

(1) In General. In Champion v. Superior Court (1988) 201 C.A.3d 777, 247 C.R. 624, the underlying action was between petitioner, a member of C law firm who resigned and undertook the representation of eight former clients of the firm, and the remaining partners. The issue involved was the manner in which the partnership and a departing partner were to share fees under a provision in the partnership agreement. (See 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §57.) In this proceeding in mandamus to review the trial court's determination, the parties and amici curiae lodged a great many exhibits with the Court of Appeal which were described in general terms as sensitive and confidential, and requests for sealing the documents were filed. The "quandary" in which the court found itself is thus described:

"At the time of this opinion, our file contains some sealed documents, some public documents, and many documents not yet designated as sealed or public. Most documents blend together discussions of confidential and public materials. Requests to seal all the documents are pending. Nowhere in any of the requests do we find an explanation of why anything provided to us deserves such treatment." (201 C.A.3d 786.)

The court concluded that all the applications to seal should be granted, but outlined procedures to be followed in the future to counteract the "increasing trend by litigants to assume that when the parties stipulate below or convince the trial court of the need for confidentiality, no showing of need must be made in this court." (201 C.A.3d 785.)

(a) The Rules of Court offer no guidance, but Estate of Hearst (1977) 67 C.A.3d 777, 136 C.R. 821, is informative: It recognizes the inherent power of the court to restrict the ordinary free access to court records where individual security, personal liberty or the public good may be served by sealing. (201 C.A.3d 786, 787.) However, without such a showing, it is improper, even on stipulation of the parties, to order sealing. (201 C.A.3d 788, citing Mary R. v. B. & R. Corp. (1983) 149 C.A.3d 308, 196 C.R. 871.) "[A] party seeking to lodge or file a document under seal bears a heavy burden of showing the appellate court that the interest of the party in confidentiality outweighs the public policy in favor of open court records." (201 C.A.3d 788.)

(b) The appropriate procedures are as follows:

(1) The party must segregate the confidential or arguably confidential documents or portions of documents from the public documents or portions, and in the public documents say nothing that discloses the contents of the confidential ones. (201 C.A.3d 788.)

(2) A request to seal must be filed publicly and separately from the object of the request. (201 C.A.3d 788.)

(3) The request must be supported by a factual declaration or affidavit explaining the particular needs of the case. "Where the contents of the to-be-sealed document become a focus of the argument for sealing, the request must refer the court to the to-be-sealed document, where the court may review its contents and any content-specific declarations and arguments about sealing it." (201 C.A.3d 788.)

(4) "Public documents that argue the merits of the case must refer to sealed or to-be-sealed documents without disclosing their contents, and where possible should, at least when referring to to-be-sealed documents, stand on their own, and not depend upon the contents of the to-be-sealed documents. (This will avoid complications if the court declines to seal the documents and permits the proffering party to withdraw them.)" (201 C.A.3d 788.)

(5) "Arguments on the merits which cannot be made publicly without disclosing confidential information should be made in separate documents accompanied by requests to seal." (201 C.A.3d 789.)

(6) "Parties should be advised, however, that, more often than not, they can argue effectively to an appellate court by disclosing only the general nature of the confidential information. Thus, a request to seal must explain why the confidential information needs to be presented to the appellate court." (201 C.A.3d 789.)

(7) "Parties must also be careful not to enter into stipulations in trial courts or to acquiesce to trial court confidentiality requests expecting that the stipulations or rulings will control the filing or lodging of documents in the appellate courts. A document may be necessary to the appellate court's determination of a petition for extraordinary relief. ... The petitioner, who has the burden of presenting the document, will not be excused from doing so if open filing is prevented by an unjustified stipulation or order entered below and if the appellate court returns the document because petitioner has not shown that it warrants sealing." (201 C.A.3d 789.)

(8) "Where documents have been sealed by order of the lower court, over a petitioner's objection, the petitioner's obligation to present them to the appellate court does not change. When pertinent to the writ petition, they should be presented separately, labeled as confidential, and accompanied by petitioner's objections. Real party in interest must then move for an order sealing the documents in the appellate court and shoulder the burden of proving the need for sealing." (201 C.A.3d 789.) (See Copley Press v. Superior Court (1998) 63 C.A.4th 367, 376, 74 C.R.2d 69 [court record of settlement between insurer for school district and student who was sexually assaulted should not have been sealed; damage award, whatever its size, is not private fact deserving protection, and secrecy in public education is not in public interest; applying principles of Hearst, supra]; on nonparty's request for subsequent unsealing, see Wilson v. Science Applications Int. Corp. (1997) 52 C.A.4th 1025, 60 C.R.2d 883, 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, Supp., §46.)

(2) Family Law Proceedings. Generally, court files in family law cases should be treated no differently than the court files in any other cases for purposes of considering the appropriateness of granting a motion to seal any of those files. However, Family C. 214 (10 Summary (9th), Parent and Child, Supp., §2F) provides authority under which a court may order some proceedings before it closed to the public, including the press. An order properly entered under that section would necessarily protect from public scrutiny not only the proceeding itself, but also any transcript of it and documents introduced into the court's files at or in connection with it, including pleadings and exhibits. (In re Marriage of Lechowick (1998) 65 C.A.4th 1406, 1414, 1415, 77 C.R.2d 395, 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Courts, Supp., §38.)

VI. INTRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTARY AND DEMONSTRATIVE EVIDENCE B. Demonstrative Evidence.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 152

[§ 152] Demonstrative Evidence.

(1) General Procedure. The practice in presenting real or demonstrative evidence, including photographs (see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Demonstrative, Experimental, and Scientific Evidence, §1 et seq.), is similar to that followed in the introduction of writings (supra, §147 et seq.). A foundation must be laid by calling an authenticating witness (see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Demonstrative, Experimental, and Scientific Evidence, §16), and opposing counsel must be allowed to inspect the exhibit. If admitted, it should be given an exhibit number, and if denied admission, it should be marked for identification. (For practice suggestions, see 2 McCormick 5th, §212 et seq.; Rutter Group, 2 Civil Trials and Evidence §8:470 et seq.; C.E.B., 2 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §13.85 et seq.; 5 Am.Jur. Trials 553.) (On foundation for videotape, see People v. Moran (1974) 39 C.A.3d 398, 411, 114 C.R. 413, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §268.)

(2) Establishing Chain of Custody. The party offering real evidence has the burden of showing to the satisfaction of the trial court that, taking all the circumstances into account, including the ease or difficulty with which the particular evidence could have been altered, it is reasonably certain that there was no alteration. "The requirement of reasonable certainty is not met when some vital link in the chain of possession is not accounted for, because then it is as likely as not that the evidence analyzed was not the evidence originally received. Left to such speculation the court must exclude the evidence. ... Conversely, when it is the barest speculation that there was tampering, it is proper to admit the evidence and let what doubt remains go to its weight." (People v. Lucas (1995) 12 C.4th 415, 444, 48 C.R.2d 525, 907 P.2d 373.)

(3) Examination by Jury. Exhibits introduced in evidence may be taken into the jury room and examined by the jurors in their deliberations. (See 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §334; People v. Walker (1957) 150 C.A.2d 594, 599, 310 P.2d 110 [sound tape recording of confession introduced; held no error in jury obtaining recorder to play record again]; 2 McCormick 5th, §217; 10 A.L.R.2d 918 [X-ray picture].)

VII. INTRODUCTION OF DISCOVERY MATERIAL

A. Depositions.

1. How Deposition May Be Used.
  - a. Deposition of Ordinary Witness.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 153

[§ 153] Deposition of Ordinary Witness.

(1) Former Law. The rules for introducing depositions at trial were formerly found in C.C.P. 2016(e). The discovery statutes were repealed and reenacted in 1986, effective July 1, 1987. (See 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §5.) Most of the substance of former C.C.P. 2016(e) was continued in C.C.P. 2025(u).

(2) General Rule. Subject to specified provisions (infra, this section and §§155, 156), all or part of a deposition may be used, at trial or at a hearing, against any party (a) who was present or represented at the deposition, or (b) who had notice and did not serve a valid objection under C.C.P. 2025(g) (2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §48). (C.C.P. 2025(u); see C.E.B., 2 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §12.32 et seq.; C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Trial §6.2 et seq.; Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery §2.37 et seq.; Rutter Group, 1 Civil Trials and Evidence §1:27 et seq.; 2 Civil Trials and Evidence §8:811 et seq.; Dunne on Depositions in California, Chap. 13; see also F.R. Civ. P., Rule 32; on objections to use of deposition based on lack of notice, see infra, §161.)

(3) Adverse Party. An adverse party may use the deposition of a party, or someone who was an officer, director, agent, designee, or employee of a party at the time the deposition was taken, for any purpose. Use of a party's deposition by an adverse party is not objectionable on the ground that the deponent "is available to testify, has testified, or will testify." (C.C.P. 2025(u)(2); see C.E.B., 2 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §12.54 et seq.; Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery §2.38; Rutter Group, 2 Civil Trials and Evidence §8:812; cf. Ev.C. 776, infra, §202 et seq. [parties subject to examination as adverse witnesses].) Thus, C.C.P. 2025 "simply applies specifically to the use of depositions the same treatment that the Evidence Code already provides generally for all statements of a party-opponent." (Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery §2.38; see Ev.C. 1236 (prior consistent statements; 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §161) and Ev.C. 1235 (inconsistent statements; 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §156).)

(4) Nonparty or Party Other Than Adverse Party. Because depositions are hearsay evidence, generally a party cannot make unlimited use of the deposition of a nonadverse coparty or a nonparty. (See Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery §2.38.) However, any party may use a deposition to contradict or impeach the testimony of the deponent as a witness, "or for any other purpose permitted by the Evidence Code." (C.C.P. 2025(u)(1); see Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery §2.39 [second clause means that "whenever a portion of a deposition is received in evidence to impeach the deponent's credibility, the trier of fact may also use that testimony substantively"].) Also, use for any purpose may be permitted under exceptional circumstances or where the deponent is far away or unavailable. (See infra, §155.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Former Law. C.C.P. 2025(u), on the use of depositions at trial, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.620 in 2004 without substantive change.

(2) General Rule. C.C.P. 2025(g), on objections to a deposition notice, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.410 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2025(u), on the use of depositions at trial, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.620 in 2004 without substantive change.

See Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §2.37.

(3) Adverse Party. C.C.P. 2025(u)(2), on the use of depositions by adverse parties, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.620(b) in 2004 without substantive change.

See Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §2.38.(4) Nonparty or Party Other Than Adverse Party. C.C.P. 2025(u)(1), on the use of the depositions of nonparties or nonadverse coparties, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.620(a) in 2004 without substantive change.

See Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §2.38.West's Key Number Digest, Criminal Law k.662.30; Pretrial Procedure k.201 et seq.

VII. INTRODUCTION OF DISCOVERY MATERIAL

A. Depositions.

1. How Deposition May Be Used.
- b. Deposition of Physician or Expert.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 154

[§ 154] Deposition of Physician or Expert.

A party may introduce into evidence a videotaped deposition of a treating or consulting physician or an expert witness, even though the deponent is available to testify, if the deposition notice reserved the right to use the deposition at trial, and if that party complied with C.C.P. 2025(l)(2)(I) (2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §79). (C.C.P. 2025(u)(4).) This provision reduces both the costs of litigation and the disruption of the practice of doctors and other experts. (See Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery §2.41.) (On suggestions for using videotaped deposition of expert at trial, see Dunne on Depositions in California §§10:16, 10:17; on protective order to postpone videotaped deposition of expert until moving party has had an opportunity to prepare by ordinary discovery methods, see C.C.P. 2025(i), 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §60.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

C.C.P. 2025(u)(4), as amended in 2002, refers to "a video recording of the deposition testimony," rather than "a videotape deposition".

C.C.P. 2025(u)(4) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.620(d) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2025(l)(2)(I), on procedures for offering a video or audio recording of a deposition in evidence, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.340(m) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2025(i), on protective orders in connection with videotaped depositions, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.420 in 2004 without substantive change.

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

VII. INTRODUCTION OF DISCOVERY MATERIAL

A. Depositions.

1. How Deposition May Be Used.
  - c. Special Circumstances.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 155

[§ 155] Special Circumstances.

(1) Remote Deponent. A party may use any person's deposition for any purpose if the court finds that the deponent resides more than 150 miles from the place of trial or hearing. (C.C.P. 2025(u)(3)(A).)

(2) Unavailable Deponent. Furthermore, use for any purpose is permitted when the court finds that the deponent is one of the following:

(a) Exempted or precluded on the ground of privilege from testifying about the matter to which the deponent's testimony is relevant (C.C.P. 2025(u)(3)(B)(i));

(b) Disqualified from testifying (C.C.P. 2025(u)(3)(B)(ii));

(c) Dead or unable to attend or testify because of existing physical or mental illness or infirmity (C.C.P. 2025(u)(3)(B)(iii));

(d) Absent from the trial or other hearing and the court is unable to compel the deponent's attendance by its process (C.C.P. 2025(u)(3)(B)(iv));

(e) Absent from the trial or other hearing and the proponent of the deposition, despite exercising reasonable diligence, has been unable to procure the deponent's attendance by the court's process (C.C.P. 2025(u)(3)(B)(v)).

The court must also find that the deponent's unavailability for any of the above reasons is not due to the procurement or wrongdoing of the proponent of the deposition for the purpose of preventing testimony in open court. (C.C.P. 2025(u)(3)(B).) (See Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery §2.40.)

(3) Exceptional Circumstances. A party may use a deposition for any purpose if the court finds that exceptional circumstances "make it desirable to allow" the deposition's use "in the interests of justice and with due regard to the importance of presenting the testimony of witnesses orally in open court." (C.C.P. 2025(u)(3)(C).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Remote Deponent. C.C.P. 2025(u)(3)(A), on use of a remote deponent's deposition, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.620(c)(1) in 2004 without substantive change. (2) Unavailable Deponent. C.C.P. 2025(u)(3)(B), on use of an unavailable deponent's deposition, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.620(c)(2) in 2004 without substantive change. C.C.P. 2025(u)(3)(B)(i)-(u)(3)(B)(v) became C.C.P. 2025.620(c)(2)(A)-(c)(2)(E).

See Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §2.40.

(3) Exceptional Circumstances. C.C.P. 2025(u)(3)(C), on use of a deposition based on exceptional circumstances, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.620(c)(3) in 2004 without substantive change.

A. Depositions.

1. How Deposition May Be Used.

d. Extent of Admissibility.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 156

[§ 156] Extent of Admissibility.

(1) General Rule. The deposition may be used "so far as admissible under the rules of evidence applied as though the deponent were then present and testifying as a witness." (C.C.P. 2025(u).)

(2) Exclusion of Cumulative Matter. The general power of the trial judge to limit the introduction of cumulative or repetitive matter (see supra, §67) may be exercised to exclude a deposition. Thus, in Wulferdinger v. Pickwick Stages System (1930) 105 C.A. 509, 288 P. 93, defendant took plaintiff's deposition and offered it in evidence, but admission was refused. Then defendant called plaintiff personally and examined her as an adverse witness (infra, §202). It appeared that the only intended use of the deposition was for the purpose of impeachment, and this purpose was fully realized by the oral examination. The court said: "The permission to read the deposition of a witness ... when he is a party to the action and all the material evidence therein contained has been fully covered by an examination of the witness at the trial is discretionary with the court." (105 C.A. 512.) (See also California Canning Peach Growers v. Williams (1938) 11 C.2d 221, 232, 78 P.2d 1154 [trial court excluded depositions of defendants; held not reversible error where both had been examined as adverse witnesses at the trial]; Estate of Murphy (1976) 15 C.3d 907, 919, 126 C.R. 820, 544 P.2d 956 [trial court did not err in refusing claimant's deposition, which was in part cumulative to her trial testimony].)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

VII. INTRODUCTION OF DISCOVERY MATERIAL

A. Depositions.

1. How Deposition May Be Used.

e. Substitution and Subsequent Proceedings.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 157

[§ 157] Substitution and Subsequent Proceedings.

(1) Use of Deposition Against Substituted Parties. Substitution of parties does not affect the right to use depositions that were previously taken. (C.C.P. 2025(u)(6); see McKee v. Lynch (1940) 40 C.A.2d 216, 226, 104 P.2d 675 [death of party and substitution of personal representatives].)

(2) Use of Deposition From Related Action. When an action has been brought in any federal or state court, and another action involving the same subject matter is subsequently brought between the same parties or their representatives or successors in interest, all depositions "lawfully taken and duly filed" in the initial action may be used in the subsequent action as if they had been originally taken in the subsequent action. A deposition that was previously taken may also be used as permitted by the Evidence Code. (C.C.P. 2025(u)(7); see Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery §2.42; see also Ev.C. 1290(c) [hearsay exception for former testimony] and Comment; 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §262.)

(3) Deposition Taken in Perpetuation Proceeding. If a deposition to perpetuate testimony has been taken under C.C.P. 2035 (2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §210) or under comparable provisions of the law of another jurisdiction, the deposition may be used in any California action involving the same subject matter, in accordance with C.C.P. 2025(u), against any party, or the successor in interest of any party, named in the petition as an expected adverse party. (C.C.P. 2035(g).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Use of Deposition Against Substituted Parties. C.C.P. 2025(u)(6), permitting the use of depositions against substituted parties, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.620(f) in 2004 without substantive change.

(2) Use of Deposition From Related Action. C.C.P. 2025(u)(7), permitting the use of depositions in related actions, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.620(g) in 2004 without substantive change.

See Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §2.42.

(3) Deposition Taken in Perpetuation Proceeding. C.C.P. 2025(u), governing the use of depositions at trial, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.620 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2035, on discovery for the purpose of perpetuation of testimony or preservation of evidence, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2035.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change. C.C.P. 2035(g), on the use of a deposition taken in a perpetuation proceeding, became C.C.P. 2035.060.

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

VII. INTRODUCTION OF DISCOVERY MATERIAL

A. Depositions.

2. Procedure for Introducing Deposition.

a. Reading Questions and Answers.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 158

[§ 158] Reading Questions and Answers.

(1) Rule Against Introduction Without Reading. A deposition is not an instrument and, unlike documentary evidence, it cannot be offered in evidence as a whole, without reading it. The reason is that the examination ordinarily takes place before an officer without the qualifications or the authority to hear objections or rule out inadmissible matter. "No one familiar with the practice of law need be informed of the vast amount of irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent matter which finds its way as evidence into such depositions." (Estate of Martin (1915) 170 C. 657, 665, 151 P. 138.) (See Gammell v. Gammell (1979) 90 C.A.3d 90, 95, 153 C.R. 169; C.E.B., 2 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §12.48 et seq.; Rutter Group, 1 Civil Trials and Evidence §1:36 et seq.; 2 DeMeo, Cal. Deposition and Discovery Practice §50.31; on reading of prepared testimony into record in economic litigation cases, see C.C.P. 98, 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Courts, §266.) For the same reason (the inclusion of inadmissible matter), depositions cannot be taken into the jury room. (C.C.P. 612; P.C. 1137; Higgins v. Los Angeles Gas & Elec. Co. (1911) 159 C. 651, 656, 115 P. 313; see 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §337.)

Whether objections are made at the taking of the deposition or reserved for the trial, the inadmissible questions and answers will be included. Hence, in introducing a deposition, it is necessary that the parties be given an opportunity to object to or move to strike out individual questions or answers, and the court must rule on the objections. This usually necessitates reading of the deposition into the record, and introduction of the entire deposition without reading is improper.

(2) Illustrations. Thus, in Estate of Doyle (1932) 126 C.A. 446, 14 P.2d 909, counsel said, "I will introduce the depositions and consider them read, your Honor," and the trial judge, over objections of opposing counsel, declared that he would not permit the depositions to be read in open court. Held, they should have been read. "Doubtless there are occasions when the heavy demands upon the time of a busy trial court render it inexpedient and impracticable to permit ... the reading in extenso of depositions in open forum in all cases where the court is sitting without a jury. Nevertheless, in the absence of express or implied agreement thereto by counsel, the reception of depositions by the trial court in the manner above outlined constitutes a departure from the correct procedure and practice." (126 C.A. 452.)

On the other hand, in Simpson v. Randolph (1956) 140 C.A.2d 571, 295 P.2d 528, plaintiff's counsel, cross-examining defendant by use of his deposition, wanted to read each question and have defendant state whether or not he made the particular answer even though it did not appear to be impeaching. Held, the trial judge properly avoided this useless waste of time by suggesting that counsel offer the entire deposition in evidence. (140 C.A.2d 575.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

VII. INTRODUCTION OF DISCOVERY MATERIAL

A. Depositions.

2. Procedure for Introducing Deposition.

b. Ruling on Objections.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 159

[§ 159] Ruling on Objections.

It is not enough that the questions and answers be read in full (supra, §158); unless the court rules on each objection before the inadmissible matter is permitted to go into the record, the benefits of the procedure are lost.

In Estate of Martin (1915) 170 C. 657, 151 P. 138, one counsel read the direct examination, and opposing counsel the cross-examination. The latter urged the judge to examine the depositions as they were being read and to rule on the objections, which the judge refused to do, with the result that much incompetent matter went to the jury. On appeal, this practice was held highly improper. The court said that a witness often gives an improper answer to a proper question, and in oral examination, there is no way to prevent this; but the trial judge, with the deposition before him, has the opportunity to consider and rule on admissibility of matters before they are read, and it is his duty to do so. (170 C. 664.) (See also Meyer v. Hellman Commercial Trust & Savings Bank (1927) 83 C.A. 578, 581, 257 P. 103 ["the better course would have been to make any desired objection as a question was read, rather than to wait for the reading of a series of questions and answers and then move to strike out that portion of the deposition upon the ground that the irrelevancy of the answers could not have been anticipated"]; Estate of Short (1935) 7 C.A.2d 512, 518, 47 P.2d 555 [approved practice is to present deposition to trial judge and make objections, thus permitting preliminary examination by judge before reading it to jury].)

VII. INTRODUCTION OF DISCOVERY MATERIAL

A. Depositions.

2. Procedure for Introducing Deposition.

c. Introduction of Part of Deposition.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 160

[§ 160] Introduction of Part of Deposition.

(1) Former Law. It was formerly improper for a party to introduce selected portions of the deposition of its own witness, omitting the balance. (See Bank of Orland v. Finnell (1901) 133 C. 475, 477, 65 P. 976.) This rule was of questionable effect; error could scarcely be prejudicial because the other party could offer the remaining part. (See Metteer v. Smith (1909) 156 C. 572, 573, 105 P. 735 [error harmless].)

(2) Rule Changed. Subject to the requirements of C.C.P. 2025, "a party may offer in evidence all or any part of a deposition, and if the party introduces only part of the deposition, any other party may introduce any other parts that are relevant to the parts introduced." (C.C.P. 2025(u)(5); see C.E.B., 2 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §12.42; Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery §2.37; Rutter Group, 2 Civil Trials and Evidence §8:813.10.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Rule Changed. C.C.P. 2025, on oral depositions, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change. C.C.P. 2025(u)(5), permitting the use of only part of a deposition, became C.C.P. 2025.620(e).

VII. INTRODUCTION OF DISCOVERY MATERIAL

A. Depositions.

3. Objections and Grounds of Exclusion.

a. Advance Objections.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 161

[§ 161] Advance Objections.

C.C.P. 2025 codifies the general principle of the early decisions: If, in spite of improprieties in the procedure, a deposition is actually taken, and the witness or party thereafter seeks to prevent its use, the objection must be raised at the earliest opportunity after taking, or it will be deemed waived. (See Bollinger v. Bollinger (1908) 153 C. 190, 196, 94 P. 770; C.E.B., 2 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §12.35; 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §§2.7, 2.21, 2.25 et seq., 3.4; 2 DeMeo, Cal. Deposition and Discovery Practice §50:31[a]; 8A Am.Jur. P.P. Forms (1996 ed.), Depositions and Discovery §411 et seq.; see also F.R. Civ. P., Rule 32(d).)

(1) As to Notice. A party has 3 calendar days in which to serve written objection to an error or irregularity concerning a deposition notice. (See C.C.P. 2025(g), 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §48.) Of course, a total failure to give notice to a party makes the deposition inadmissible against that party. (See C.C.P. 2025(u), supra, §153 [deposition admissible against party who had due notice of it]; Eades v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp. (1919) 43 C.A. 259, 261, 184 P. 884 [deposition of one defendant taken by stipulation with another defendant; not admissible against plaintiff]; N.N.V. v. American Assn. of Blood Banks (1999) 75 C.A.4th 1358, 1394, 89 C.R.2d 885 [deposition of plaintiff's father, who died before trial, was inadmissible against defendant nurse who had not received proper notice of hearing on deposition and had not appeared at deposition; defendant nurse was not employee of institutional defendants who were given notice and who did appear, and institutional defendants had interests adverse to nurse defendant's and would not have had same motives in cross-examining deponent]; cf. Estate of Short (1935) 7 C.A.2d 512, 518, 47 P.2d 555 [suggesting that limited admissibility depends on whether action is such as to allow separate verdicts or judgments].)

(2) As to Disqualification of Officer. The objection is waived unless made before the deposition begins or as soon thereafter as the ground for the objection becomes known or could be discovered with reasonable diligence. (C.C.P. 2025(k), 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §35.)

(3) As to Taking of Deposition.

(a) Errors and irregularities that might be cured if promptly presented are waived unless a specific and timely objection is made. Irregularities of this type include, but are not limited to, "those relating to the manner of taking the deposition, to the oath or affirmation administered, to the conduct of a party, attorney, deponent, or deposition officer, or to the form of any question or answer." Unless the objecting party demands that the deposition be suspended to permit a motion for a protective order (see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §61), the deposition proceeds subject to the objection. (C.C.P. 2025(m)(2).) (See Kyle v. Craig (1899) 125 C. 107, 114, 57 P. 791 [leading questions]; Brown v. Ball (1932) 123 C.A. 758, 767, 12 P.2d 28 [conclusion of witness called for].)

(b) To avoid waiving an objection to the form of a question in a written deposition, the objecting party must serve a specific objection within 15 days after service of the question. (C.C.P. 2028(d), 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §81.)

(c) If counsel was not afforded an adequate opportunity for cross-examination at the taking of the deposition, the trial court has discretion to refuse to admit it in evidence. (Sprague v. Equifax (1985) 166 C.A.3d 1012, 1042, 213 C.R. 69 [properly excluded where counsel for person being deposed stated that his client was under stress and that questioning should end; over objection, deposition was terminated and never resumed, and deposed person did not attend trial].)

(4) As to Signing of Deposition. Formerly, an unsigned deposition was treated as ineffective and inadmissible in evidence when objection was made at the trial. (See Bennett v. Superior Court (1950) 99 C.A.2d 585, 593, 222 P.2d 276; Voorheis v. Hawthorne-Michaels Co. (1957) 151 C.A.2d 688, 693, 312 P.2d 51.) However, C.C.P. 2025(q) sets forth a procedure whereby an unsigned deposition is treated like a signed one unless the court, on a motion to suppress, determines that the reasons for not signing the deposition require its rejection. (See 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §74; see also Chavez v. Zapata Ocean Resources (1984) 155 C.A.3d 115, 121, 201 C.R. 887 [unsigned deposition was admissible even though exact statutory procedure (then in C.C.P. 2019(e)) was not followed].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

C.C.P. 2025, on oral depositions, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

See Hogan, 1 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §§2.21, 2.25 et seq.; 8A Am.Jur. P.P. Forms (2004 ed.), Depositions and Discovery, §274 et seq.

(1) As to Notice. C.C.P. 2025(g), on objections to deposition notices, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.410 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2025(u), on the effect of failure to give notice, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.620 in 2004 without substantive change.

(2) As to Disqualification of Officer. The portion of C.C.P. 2025(k) relating to objections to a deposition officer's qualifications was designated C.C.P. 2025(k)(5) in 2000.

C.C.P. 2025(k) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.320 in 2004 without substantive change.

(3) As to Taking of Deposition.

(a) Curable errors and irregularities: C.C.P. 2025(m)(2), on the need to object to curable errors and irregularities, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.460(b) in 2004 without substantive change. (b) Objection to form of question: C.C.P. 2028(d), on the need to object to the form of a question, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2028.040 in 2004 without substantive change.

(4) As to Signing of Deposition. C.C.P. 2025(q), on unsigned depositions, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.520 in 2004 without substantive change.

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

VII. INTRODUCTION OF DISCOVERY MATERIAL

A. Depositions.

3. Objections and Grounds of Exclusion.

b. Objections at Trial.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 162

[§ 162] Objections at Trial.

(1) Right To Object at Trial. In general, defects that are not easily curable are not waived by failure to object at the deposition hearing. "Objections to the competency of the deponent, or to the relevancy, materiality, or admissibility at trial of the testimony or of the materials produced are unnecessary and are not waived by failure to make them before or during the deposition." (C.C.P. 2025(m)(3).) (See 2 DeMeo, 50:31[4]; see also Estate of Short (1935) 7 C.A.2d 512, 518, 47 P.2d 555.)

(2) Form of Objection. The form and sufficiency of the objection are governed by the rules applicable to testimony at a trial; i.e., the objection must be specific and directed to the particular testimony. (Lucy v. Davis (1912) 163 C. 611, 615, 126 P. 490; Estate of Doyle (1932) 126 C.A. 446, 453, 14 P.2d 909; Chavez v. Zapata Ocean Resources (1984) 155 C.A.3d 115, 121, 201 C.R. 887 [plaintiff's deposition testimony was improperly excluded; objection to it was not sufficiently specific]; see infra, §375.) If the question is improper, objection must be made to it; if the question is proper but the answer is improper, a motion to strike is necessary and is sufficient. (Short v. Frink (1907) 151 C. 83, 86, 90 P. 200; see infra, §383.) In Gassen v. Hendrick (1887) 74 C. 444, 16 P. 242, there was an objection accompanied by a motion to strike the entire deposition as not complete because the witness had "refused to answer the interrogatories." The witness had answered all fully except one. Held, the objection was too general; "it was the right of the judge below to have his attention called to the particular interrogatory which the witness had 'refused to answer,' or her answer to which was evasive or not fully responsive." (74 C. 447.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Right To Object at Trial. C.C.P. 2025(m)(3), on objections that may be made at trial, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.460(c) in 2004 without substantive change.

VII. INTRODUCTION OF DISCOVERY MATERIAL

B. Answers to Interrogatories.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 163

[§ 163] Answers to Interrogatories.

Answers to interrogatories may be used "so far as admissible under the rules of evidence" at trial or another hearing in the action. They may not be used by the responding party, only against that party by another party. It does not matter that the responding party is available to testify, has testified, or will testify. (C.C.P. 2030(n), 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §102.) (See C.E.B., 2 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §12.98 et seq.; Rutter Group, 1 Civil Trials and Evidence §1:40 et seq.; 13 A.L.R.3d 1323 [inadmissibility of answers to interrogatories offered on behalf of answering party].)

In Estate of Horman (1968) 265 C.A.2d 796, 71 C.R. 780, claimants were foreign citizens absent from a hearing in which the state claimed escheat. They sought to use, in their own favor, their own answers to interrogatories propounded by the state. Held, this was improper; the self-serving answers were, in effect, merely affidavits, which are incompetent hearsay (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §297). The court observed that, under discovery statutes of other states and under the federal rules, a party cannot use its own answers. (265 C.A.2d 805.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

C.C.P. 2030(n), on the use of answers to interrogatories, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.410 in 2004 without substantive change. West's Key Number Digest, Criminal Law k.662.30; Pretrial Procedure k.306 et seq.

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

VIII. ORAL EXAMINATION A. Specific Answers or Narration.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 164

[§ 164] Specific Answers or Narration.

(1) Counsel Chooses Method of Questioning. Subject to the judge's reasonable control over the mode of interrogation (Ev.C. 765, supra, §77), counsel may use their own methods of questioning witnesses. (See generally C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Trial §8.37 et seq.; C.E.B., Effective Direct and Cross-Examination, Chap. 2; C.E.B., 1 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §11.47 et seq.; Rutter Group, 2 Civil Trials and Evidence §9:33 et seq.; 1 McCormick 5th, §5 et seq.; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §743 et seq.; Wharton, 2 Criminal Evidence 14th, §379 et seq.; 61 Am.Jur. Trials 269 [preparing witnesses]; 47 Hastings L. J. 1381, 1423 [advice to prosecutors using informers as witnesses].)

(2) Form of Direct Examination. The direct examination will usually take either of the following forms:

(a) A series of specific questions calling for specific answers about each particular fact that makes up the total testimony sought. (See 1 McCormick 5th, §5; 3 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §766.)

(b) Preliminary questions directing the attention of the witness to the time, place and other circumstances, and then a general question seeking the witness' narration of whatever occurred. Specific questions may later call for answers to fill in the gaps. (See 1 McCormick 5th, §5 [with capable witness, this is preferable method]; 3 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §767.) If incompetent matter comes in as a part of this free narrative, the only remedy of the adverse party is a motion to strike (infra, §385).

(3) Witness Has No Duty To Be More Specific. When counsel elicits the testimony of a witness by a series of specific questions calling for specific answers about each fact, the witness should respond to the question and should neither evade nor volunteer matters not specifically asked for. If, therefore, a witness' answers are literally true, the witness may not be faulted for failing to volunteer more explicit information. "Although such testimony may cause a misleading impression due to the failure of counsel to ask more specific questions, the witness' failure to volunteer testimony to avoid the misleading impression does not constitute perjury because the crucial element of falsity is not present in his testimony." (In re Rosoto (1974) 10 C.3d 939, 949, 112 C.R. 641, 519 P.2d 1065, citing the text.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

VIII. ORAL EXAMINATION

B. Form of Questions.

1. Leading Question.

a. Nature and Rule of Exclusion.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 165

[§ 165] Nature and Rule of Exclusion.

(1) Definition. A leading question is one that "suggests to the witness the answer that the examining party desires." (Ev.C. 764.) The dangers of improper suggestion are obvious, and such questions are normally excluded on direct examination and redirect examination. (Ev.C. 767(a)(1); see 1 McCormick 5th, §6; 3 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §769; cf. Model C., Rule 105(g) and Comment.)

The test of a leading question is stated in the statutory definition above, and the rule is clearly violated by a question in such form as "did she" do something (recited in detail) or "did" a specified event take place, i.e., a question that includes an assumption of the truth of a fact in controversy. (See People v. Williams (1997) 16 C.4th 635, 672, 66 C.R.2d 573, 941 P.2d 752, citing McCormick and Wigmore; People v. Whitehead (1957) 148 C.A.2d 701, 704, 307 P.2d 442; 1 McCormick 5th, §6; 3 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §771; C.E.B., 1 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §11.54; Rutter Group, 2 Civil Trials and Evidence §9:35 et seq.)

(2) Illustrations. People v. Whitehead, supra, shows how, in a criminal case, a leading question may be seriously prejudicial. Defendant was charged with lewd conduct with a child. The prosecuting witness testified that "He put his hands on me," and was asked to point to the place. When she did, the judge asked, "Are you indicating between the legs?" Held, this was misconduct and reversible error: It was a direction to the child giving the jury the clear impression that the judge believed defendant had committed the lewd act. (148 C.A.2d 704.)

But there is one type of partly suggestive question that may be allowed: Where it starts out by asking "What is the fact" or "State whether or not," and then recites alternatives. Thus, in Estate of Melvin (1927) 85 C.A. 691, 259 P. 980, a will contest, it was held error to sustain objections to such questions as the following: "How was he as to being able to carry on a connected conversation, whether he would talk about one thing connectedly straight through or whether he would branch off on other subjects?" "What is the fact as to whether she became apparently more devoted to him than she had prior to that time?" "What is the fact as to whether or not that seemed to be the chief topic on his mind when you would visit him?" (85 C.A. 696.) (See 1 McCormick 5th, §6; cf. 3 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §772.)

(3) "Yes" or "No" Questions. It is often loosely said that a question that can be answered by a simple "yes" or "no" is leading, for the content of the answer must be in the question. But this is not invariably true, and there is no rigid rule of exclusion. (See People v. Williams (1997) 16 C.4th 635, 672, 66 C.R.2d 573, 941 P.2d 752, quoting Jefferson, Cal. Evidence Benchbook ["question calling for a 'yes' or 'no' answer is a leading question only if, under the circumstances, it is obvious that the examiner is suggesting that the witness answer the question one way only"]; People v. Tober (1966) 241 C.A.2d 66, 69, 50 C.R. 228, infra, §167, citing 3 Wigmore, §772 [now 3 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §772].)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

VIII. ORAL EXAMINATION

B. Form of Questions.

1. Leading Question.

b. Exception: Cross-Examination.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 166

[§ 166] Exception: Cross-Examination.

(1) General Rule. Where the witness is presumably hostile, there is little danger of false suggestion. Hence, leading questions are proper in the following kinds of examination:

(a) Cross-examination, or recross-examination of a witness called by the other party. (Ev.C. 767(a)(2); see Rutter Group, 2 Civil Trials and Evidence §10:57 et seq.; 1 McCormick 5th, §§6, 20; 3 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §773, 774.)

(b) Examination of an adverse witness, which is governed by the rules of cross-examination. (See Koeberle v. Friganza (1924) 66 C.A. 323, 327, 226 P. 35; infra, §202.)

(2) Exception Where Witness is Biased in Favor of Cross-Examiner. However, the judge may forbid the asking of leading questions where it appears that the witness is biased in favor of the cross-examiner and would be unduly influenced by questions that suggest the desired answer. (See 3 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §773; Ev.C. 767, Comment approving Wigmore's observation; People v. Spain (1984) 154 C.A.3d 845, 854, 201 C.R. 555.)

In People v. Spain, supra, defendant was charged with second degree murder. The prosecution called his mother as a witness; she admitted lying to the officers in an effort to protect her son, and the judge ruled that she was a hostile witness and that the prosecutor could use leading questions. On cross-examination, defense counsel also sought to use leading questions and the judge sustained objections. Held, the ruling was not an abuse of discretion.

(a) If the prosecution is permitted to ask a hostile witness leading questions on direct examination, does the defendant have the same right on cross-examination? The answer may not be the same in all cases; the witness may be hostile to the prosecution for a reason other than favoritism to the defense. "The problem, of course, is that a limitation on the use of leading questions affects the defendant's ability to confront and cross-examine the witness. The technique of leading is often the defendant's most valuable weapon in his or her effort to discredit the prosecution's case." (154 C.A.3d 853.)

(b) However, a restriction on leading questions is not an impairment of the constitutional right of confrontation; the defendant is still permitted to confront and cross-examine the witness, with a limitation only on the form of the question. (154 C.A.3d 853, 854.) Thus, the matter is within the discretion of the judge, and here, that discretion was properly exercised: Defendant's mother had demonstrated her obvious and natural bias in favor of defendant. (154

C.A.3d 854.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

VIII. ORAL EXAMINATION

B. Form of Questions.

1. Leading Question.

c. Discretionary Exceptions and Nonprejudicial Error.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 167

[§ 167] Discretionary Exceptions and Nonprejudicial Error.

(1) Discretionary Exceptions. The rule against leading questions on direct examination is subject to practical exceptions where the danger of improper suggestion is not great, or where this form of questioning is necessary in order to obtain relevant evidence. (See generally 1 McCormick 5th, §6; Rutter Group, 2 Civil Trials and Evidence §9:41 et seq.; 3 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §773 et seq.) Ev.C. 767(a) recognizes this by its proviso, "Except under special circumstances where the interests of justice otherwise require." The principal situations are as follows:

(a) Preliminary Matters. Noncontroversial matters such as identification of the witness and his occupation can be presented by leading questions. "It is usually the proper way to conduct the examination until the attention of the witness is brought to the point to which he is expected to testify. It saves time and tends to make the testimony clearer." (Bruce v. Western Pipe & Steel Co. (1917) 177 C. 25, 27, 169 P. 660; see also 3 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §775.)

(b) Refreshing Recollection. Where a witness cannot remember a matter without some suggestion, leading questions may be permitted to the extent necessary to stimulate or revive his or her recollection. (See People v. Williams (1997) 16 C.4th 635, 672, 673, 66 C.R.2d 573, 941 P.2d 752, citing the text [leading questions were properly used to refresh prosecution witness' memory about statement by one of alleged murderers regarding intention to kill all occupants of house]; 1 McCormick 5th, §6; 3 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §777; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §769.)

(c) Children or Mentally Disabled Witnesses. When examining children or persons who are mentally disabled, it is usually permissible to assist them with leading questions. (Mead v. Mead (1919) 41 C.A. 280, 284, 182 P. 761 [aged man]; People v. Hinrich (1921) 53 C.A. 186, 187, 199 P. 1058 [child]; People v. Tober (1966) 241 C.A.2d 66, 69, 50 C.R. 228; see 3 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §778; cf. Estate of Cesare (1955) 130 C.A.2d 557, 569, 279 P.2d 607 [real estate transactions, witness vague, uncertain, confused, and "not very intelligent"].)

In People v. Tober, supra, a prosecution for lewd acts against a 10-year-old child, defendant contended that the prosecutor should not have asked questions that called for a "yes" or "no" or "I don't remember" answer. In holding that no error was committed, the court first pointed out that such questions are not necessarily leading (supra, §165), but then fell back on the discretionary exception for an immature witness in a sex case. (241 C.A.2d 69.)

The judge, in the interests of justice, may permit leading questions to children under 10 in prosecutions involving the following offenses against children: wilful cruelty (P.C. 273a); wilful infliction of cruel or inhuman corporal punishment (P.C. 273d); wilful lewd or lascivious act (P.C. 288); continuous sexual abuse (P.C. 288.5). (Ev.C. 767(b).)

(d) Expert Witness. It is also permissible, ordinarily, to ask leading questions in interrogating an expert. (See Chula v. Superior Court (1952) 109 C.A.2d 24, 38, 240 P.2d 398; Chavez v. Zapata Ocean Resources (1984) 155 C.A.3d 115, 124, 201 C.R. 887.)

(2) Nonprejudicial Error. In a number of cases, the allowance of leading questions has not been ground for reversal; either the court acted within its discretion in permitting the questions or no prejudice appeared. (See Moran v. Abbey (1883) 63 C. 56, 58; California Wine Assn. v. Commercial Union Fire Ins. Co. (1910) 159 C. 49, 55, 112 P. 858; Eaton v. Locey (1913) 22 C.A. 762, 768, 136 P. 534; Imperial Water Co. No. 1 v. Imperial Irr. Dist. (1923) 62 C.A. 286, 293, 217 P. 88; Latky v. Wolfe (1927) 85 C.A. 332, 346, 259 P. 470; People v. Mora (1956) 139 C.A.2d 266, 272, 293 P.2d 522; People v. Campbell (1965) 233 C.A.2d 38, 44, 43 C.R. 237; cf. 3 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§770, 776, 777.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Discretionary Exceptions. See People v. Augustin (2003) 112 C.A.4th 444, 450, 5 C.R.3d 171 [in prosecution for assault, trial judge did not abuse discretion in allowing prosecutor to use leading questions with victim, who had cerebral palsy, on ground that this was most efficient way to allow her to communicate her testimony]; 1 McCormick 6th, §6.

(b) Refreshing Recollection. See 81 Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Witnesses §742; 1 McCormick 6th, §6.

(c) Children or Mentally Disabled Witnesses. Ev.C. 767(b) was amended in 2004 to apply to dependent persons with substantial cognitive impairment, as well as to children under the age of 10. The amended subdivision applies in prosecutions under P.C. 273a (wilful harm or injury to a child), P.C. 273d (corporal punishment or injury of a child), P.C. 288.5 (continuous sexual abuse of a child), P.C. 368 (crimes against elder or dependent adults), or for any of the acts described in P.C. 11165.1, 11165.2 (defining "sexual abuse" and "neglect" for purposes of the Child Abuse and Neglect Reporting Act). West's Key Number Digest, Witnesses k.240(2) et seq.

B. Form of Questions.

2. Argumentative Question.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 168

[§ 168] Argumentative Question.

Argumentative or badgering questions, usually occurring in cross-examination, are improper. Thus, in Estate of Loucks (1911) 160 C. 551, 117 P. 673, a witness was confronted with his prior inconsistent statement, and counsel asked: "Well, now, can you reconcile the two statements?" Held, an objection was properly sustained; "[t]he two statements were clearly not reconcilable, and the question was doubtless asked for the purpose of involving the witness in an argument." (160 C. 558.) (On permissible question whether prior statement was true, see infra, §335.)

Similarly, in Schuh v. Oil Well Supply Co. (1920) 50 C.A. 588, 195 P. 703, after pointing out to plaintiff the difference between allegations of the first and second complaint, counsel for defendant asked: "Then why did you not allege in your complaint that the belt was defective?" Held, this was properly excluded. (50 C.A. 590.) (See also People v. Harlan (1901) 133 C. 16, 21, 65 P. 9 ["How is it you can recollect a date as long ago as that, and you cannot remember the day of the week?"]; People v. Alexander (1926) 77 C.A. 231, 236, 246 P. 147 ["Q. Then you were mistaken a moment ago? A. I was. Q. When you were so positive?"]; People v. Hudson (1981) 126 C.A.3d 733, 735, 179 C.R. 95 [defendant was deprived of right to fair trial by prosecutor's trial tactics, which included vulgar and argumentative questions designed to prejudice jury against defendant].) (See also 3 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §781; C.E.B., 1 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §11.61; 1 McCormick 5th, §7.)

The court may also refuse to permit questions that have already been asked and answered in substantially the same form. "Where a question is asked and answered in a manner which, as here, indicates that no different answer could probably be given to the same question, the trial court is not bound to have its time consumed by having such question uselessly repeated." B. Form of Questions.

4. Uncertain or Unintelligible Question.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 170

[§ 170] Uncertain or Unintelligible Question.

In Spinks v. Clark (1905) 147 C. 439, 82 P. 45, an action to rescind an exchange for fraud, defendant was asked whether he had "any arrangement whatever with any of the other stockholders relative to the delivery of shares of stock or the manipulation or management or sale of shares of stock or the fixing of prices of shares of stock in that company, upon the market." Held, the question was too general and indefinite, and its object and relevancy were not apparent. "If plaintiff had in mind any particular kind of arrangement or action of Clark in this regard which would have thrown light upon the questions involved he should have asked specifically regarding the same." (147 C. 453.) (See also Schuur v. Rodenback (1901) 133 C. 85, 89, 65 P. 298 ["Q. What happened after Mr. Rodenback left on that day?" held too general; court could not say whether an answer would be pertinent]; Chavez v. Zapata Ocean Resources (1984) 155 C.A.3d 115, 124, 201 C.R. 887, citing the text.)

VIII. ORAL EXAMINATION

B. Form of Questions.

5. Omnibus or Compound Question.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 171

[§ 171] Omnibus or Compound Question.

In Doudell v. Shoo (1912) 20 C.A. 424, 451, 129 P. 478, defendant, on the stand, said that some matters testified to by plaintiff "occurred and some didn't." He was then asked by his counsel, "What part did, and what part didn't?" Held, the trial judge was justified in refusing to permit a large amount of testimony involving various specific topics in response to this omnibus question. (20 C.A. 451.) Counsel "should have questioned him particularly about the several matters" and not have left it entirely to the witness to recall all of them and to separate the correct and the incorrect parts. (20 C.A. 452.)

Similarly, in Godfrey v. Miller (1889) 80 C. 420, 22 P. 290, the question was: "Did you know, or did you have any cause to believe, that the transfer of this horse and buggy by Mr. Gilbert to yourself was made with a view to prevent the same from coming to his assignee in insolvency, or to prevent the same from being distributed ratably among his creditors, or to defeat the object of, or in any way to hinder, impede, or delay the operation of, or to evade any of the provisions of the insolvency act?" Held, improper, amounting to five questions in one. (80 C. 423.)

In Wiese v. Rainville (1959) 173 C.A.2d 496, 343 P.2d 643, plaintiff was an engineer employed by a manufacturer interested in machine wrapping for its products. On invitation, he attended the showing of a machine manufactured by defendant R and demonstrated at the plant of defendant Pearce Plastics. He was injured through alleged negligent operation of the machine by R. In an effort to prove himself an invitee of Pearce Plastics so as to hold it liable as well as R, he asked these questions of R: "(1) Does Pearce Plastics or did Pearce Plastics, at the time of this accident, produce items that your company would be likely to purchase? (2) Is your company in any business, or were they in any business relationship to the Pearce Plastics Company in relation to purchase or vendee or vendor relationship? (3) Did the Pearce Plastic Company, at the time the loss occurred, at the time you went over to the Pearce Plastic Company, produce any item that your company would be interested in purchasing?" Held, all three were bad compound questions and objections were properly sustained. They dealt with both past and present times, the present (time of trial) being immaterial; and the third likewise dealt both with relevant time (the accident) and irrelevant times (defendant R had gone to Pearce Plastics on other occasions). (173 C.A.2d 506.) (See also Chavez v. Zapata Ocean Resources (1984) 155 C.A.3d 115, 124, 201 C.R. 887, citing the text; C.E.B., 1 Civ. Proc. ### VIII. ORAL EXAMINATION

B. Form of Questions.

6. Question Assuming Fact in Issue.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 172

[§ 172] Question Assuming Fact in Issue.

A question that in its statement assumes the existence of certain facts that are actually in issue and not proved or admitted may be excluded. On direct examination of a friendly witness, it is objectionable as leading (supra, §165); on cross-examination or examination of a hostile witness, it is often misleading and unfair in putting unintended words into the witness' mouth, and in bringing before the jury facts that cannot be proved. (See Hand v. Scodeletti (1900) 128 C. 674, 676, 61 P. 373; McDonald v. Price (1947) 80 C.A.2d 150, 152, 181 P.2d 115; People v. Heldenburg (1990) 219 C.A.3d 468, 472, 268 C.R. 255 [prosecutor's question concerning defendant's awareness of Amsterdam gem market assumed fact not in evidence (existence of market), thereby possibly establishing unwarranted, prejudicial nexus between jewelry robbery and defendant's hurried trip to Amsterdam; asking of question raised issue of prosecutorial misconduct, but issue was waived]; 1 McCormick 5th, §7; 3 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §780; C.E.B., 1 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §11.58.)

The "do you know" type of question on cross-examination is a common example of this error. In People v. Lillard (1963) 219 C.A.2d 368, 33 C.R. 189, a freeway condemnation case, plaintiff's witness was being cross-examined on the effect of bypassing the town of Arbuckle. The question, relating to the effect on service stations and restaurants, was, "Did you know their business dropped 50% and some went broke and closed up?" The judge, interrupting, said: "Do you know it? You are assuming something not in evidence. ... You don't know what is happening in Arbuckle." (219 C.A.2d 379.) (See also People v. Auburn Ski Club (1966) 241 C.A.2d 781, 788, 50 C.R. 859.)

Such questioning may amount to serious misconduct. In Love v. Wolf (1964) 226 C.A.2d 378, 38 C.R. 183, an action for damages for illness (aplastic anemia) following use of defendant pharmaceutical company's antibiotic, plaintiff's counsel cross-examined a company witness by apparently reading from a paper. He asked whether the witness remembered a survey of Dr. W showing many deaths from aplastic anemia. On demand for production of the document, counsel disclaimed any reading of a survey and produced no such report. This, among other errors, led to a reversal of judgment for plaintiff. (226 C.A.2d 390.)

However, the "Isn't it a fact" technique of interrogation is improper only where the question is based on facts not in evidence. There is nothing wrong with the form where it concerns facts in evidence. (Marcus v. Palm Harbor Hosp. (1967) 253 C.A.2d 1008, 1015, 61 C.R. 702.)

VIII. ORAL EXAMINATION

C. Form of Answers.

1. Opinion or Conclusion of Witness.
  - a. Exclusionary Rule and Exceptions.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 173

[§ 173] Exclusionary Rule and Exceptions.

Under the opinion rule, a nonexpert witness must ordinarily testify to facts. Hence, a question that calls for the witness' opinion or conclusion is objectionable, and an answer giving an inadmissible opinion may be stricken. (See 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Opinion Evidence, §§1, 20 et seq.; 1 McCormick 5th, §11; Rutter Group, 2 Civil Trials and Evidence §§8:643 et seq., 9:63.) But there are some qualifications and exceptions to this rule:

(1) The subject may be one on which the opinion of a lay witness is received. (See 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Opinion Evidence, §5 et seq.)

(2) Where the question deals with a matter that is not in issue, a conclusion may be accepted in order to save the time that might be consumed in covering the background of fact from which it could be deduced. In Winslow v. Glendale Light & Power Co. (1913) 164 C. 688, 130 P. 427, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Opinion Evidence, §20, the court explained this exception as follows: "[I]n many instances--as where the agency or the ownership of property is not in issue, it is permissible, for the purpose of curtailing the inquiry, to allow questions to be asked and answered, which questions and answers would be to the last degree improper were issue joined upon the question of agency or ownership. Instances come readily to mind, and, indeed, in the courts are of daily or even of hourly occurrence. If the ownership of a piece of land is not in issue, it is not objectionable to ask the witness who owns that land. If the agency or employment is not in question, it is equally permissible to ask the witness whose agent he was, or for whom he was working. It is but a time-saving method of presenting the truth upon a matter not controverted." (164 C. 689.)

(3) A witness who is not positive of the facts may state his or her "best recollection." (See infra, §174.)

(4) Although an objection to a question calling for a conclusion should and usually will be sustained, error in allowing the question to be answered is almost never reversible, partly because of the court's discretion in determining the propriety of the question, and partly because cross-examination will nearly always be sufficient to counteract any possible prejudice from the improper answer. (See Kreuzberger v. Wingfield (1892) 96 C. 251, 256, 31 P. 109; Nolan v. Nolan (1909) 155 C. 476, 480, 101 P. 520; People v. Mixon (1982) 129 C.A.3d 118, 127, 180 C.R. 772 [admission of lay opinion testimony is in trial court's discretion and will not be disturbed unless clear abuse of discretion appears].)

VIII. ORAL EXAMINATION

C. Form of Answers.

1. Opinion or Conclusion of Witness.
  - b. Best Recollection or Thought.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 174

[§ 174] Best Recollection or Thought.

The knowledge requirement (2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §46) and the rule against opinions or conclusions (supra, §173) do not set impossible standards either of certainty or factual expression. So a witness may give the results of his or her observation in less than positive terms, and the answer will be admissible unless it is clear that the witness has no firsthand knowledge of the matter at all, and is merely indulging in speculation or repeating hearsay. (Weingetz v. Cheverton (1951) 102 C.A.2d 67, 73, 226 P.2d 742 ["The law does not require that the result of a witness' observation be positive or absolute knowledge"]; Quiroz v. Stuzane (1954) 124 C.A.2d 534, 538, 269 P.2d 103; see also 1 McCormick 5th, §10; 2 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §658; 3 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§726 et seq., 728.)

Thus, in Weingetz v. Cheverton, supra, the witness testified that an agreement was signed by both parties, in such language as "I do. But will not state too definitely," "I think so, but I am not positive," and "I believe." Held, the answers were admissible. (102 C.A.2d 73.)

Similarly, in Quiroz v. Stuzane, supra, a witness, describing defendant truck driver's negligent driving, was asked whether he saw what part of the car hit plaintiff. His answer was, "I am not sure, but I think it was the ..." Objection was sustained, the trial judge saying, "You may tell what you saw, not what you think you saw." Held, this was error. (124 C.A.2d 538.)

In Schwenger v. Gaither (1948) 87 C.A.2d 913, 914, 198 P.2d 108, plaintiff testified that defendant's car, in his opinion, was going 40 miles per hour. On cross-examination, he was asked: "But you don't know as to miles per hour; forty miles an hour is just a guess, is that right?" Answer: "That is right." Held, denial of a motion to strike the testimony was proper. "More than one court has recognized that 'in common parlance, 'suppose' and 'guess' are frequently used as expressions of the speaker's enlightened opinion.'" (87 C.A.2d 914.)

In People v. Otis (1959) 174 C.A.2d 119, 344 P.2d 342, a police officer testified to overhearing defendant talking with others. In response to the prosecutor's question whether defendant was "discussing his case," the officer replied, "As far as I could gather I would say yes." Held, it was within the judge's discretion to admit the answer. (174 C.A.2d 126.) (See also People v. Soap (1899) 127 C. 408, 410, 59 P. 771 [witness said "I presume"; asked what he meant, he replied "That was my best information"]; People v. Schoon (1918) 177 C. 678, 682, 171 P. 680 ["I thought then I saw somebody lying on the sidewalk"]; People v. Waller (1939) 14 C.2d 693, 700, 96 P.2d 344 [identification need not be in positive terms; "looked like him" and "resembled him" are sufficient]; People v. Harris (1948) 87 C.A.2d 818, 824, 198 P.2d 60, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Opinion Evidence, §5 [same].)

In People v. Hurlic (1971) 14 C.A.3d 122, 92 C.R. 55, defendant was convicted of first degree murder, largely on the basis of his statements to a police officer during an interrogation. As a foundation for admitting the incriminating statements, the officer testified that he read the Miranda rights to defendant on the morning after the arrest. According to the officer, defendant "indicated" or "acknowledged" that he understood those rights, though the officer could not recall whether defendant made the response verbally or by nodding. Defendant contended that the purported waiver was ineffective because of the officer's lack of specificity. Held, judgment affirmed.

(a) "[E]ven if we had a tape recording of the conversation and could hear the defendant say loud and clear that he understood his rights, we could reach a finding that he did so only by inference. All that happened here is that the trial court relied on a different inference: since the 'acknowledgment' to which the officer testified may have been a mere nod of the head it can hardly be interpreted as more than a statement that defendant heard, rather than that he understood the warnings. Thus we conclude that defendant understood because he said he heard, rather than that he understood because he said he understood. The jump may be longer, but the difference is not of constitutional magnitude." (14 C.A.3d 127.)

(b) The objection that the testimony should have been excluded because it was an opinion or conclusion rested on a "misconception" of how the opinion rule (Ev.C. 800) affects testimony by nonexperts. "That rule merely requires that witnesses express themselves at the lowest possible level of abstraction. ... Whenever feasible 'concluding' should be left to the jury; however, when the details observed, even though recalled, are 'too complex or too subtle' for concrete description by the witness, he may state his general impression." (14 C.A.3d 127.) That problem was not presented here. Had the officer been able to recall whether defendant spoke or nodded, he could have testified about which it was. "The problem presented is a different one: the extent to which an indistinct recollection of matters personally observed by a witness is an impediment to his testimony." The admissibility of this testimony is well established. (14 C.A.3d 127, citing Wigmore and the text.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

VIII. ORAL EXAMINATION

C. Form of Answers.

2. Nonresponsive Answer.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 175

[§ 175] Nonresponsive Answer.

(1) Motion by Examiner. Obviously, a witness should answer the question as put, and not evade or volunteer matters not specifically asked for. If the witness does depart from the question, the nonresponsive answer may be stricken out on motion of the questioner, who is entitled to elicit testimony in his or her own way and to confine the scope of the direct examination as he or she sees fit. (See In re Rosoto (1974) 10 C.3d 939, 949, 112 C.R. 641, 519 P.2d 1065, citing the text; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §759 et seq.; cf. People v. Curtis (1965) 232 C.A.2d 859, 867, 43 C.R. 286 [defense counsel, cross-examining prosecution witness, received reply "And I also knew of his criminal record"; held error, but not prejudicial, to fail to strike answer].)

(2) Motion by Opposing Party. The questioner may want to retain the matter in the nonresponsive answer to save having to ask another question on the point. If he or she does not move to strike, may the opposing party make the motion? On principle, it would seem that the opponent can only object if the answer contains matter inadmissible on other grounds; the nonresponsive answer does no harm. (See Hirshfeld v. Dana (1924) 193 C. 142, 147, 223 P. 451; Holzer v. Read (1932) 216 C. 119, 122, 13 P.2d 697; Westman v. Clifton's Brookdale (1948) 89 C.A.2d 307, 314, 200 P.2d 814 [briefly observing that it was error for trial judge to strike out nonresponsive answer that included relevant matter]; Van Horn v. Southern Pac. Co. (1956) 141 C.A.2d 528, 536, 297 P.2d 479 [following Westman]; 3 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §785.)

However, the Legislature has established the opposite rule: The nonresponsive answer "shall be stricken on motion of any party." (Ev.C. 766.) It is difficult to see any purpose in this statute, and its effect is slight: If the motion is granted, the examiner will merely have to reframe the question; but denial of the motion, for the reasons just discussed, cannot constitute prejudicial error.

IX. DIRECT EXAMINATION: SPECIAL PROBLEMS

A. Examination of Witness on Writing.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 176

[§ 176] Examination of Witness on Writing.

A witness may be questioned on the content of a writing when the examination does not violate the secondary evidence rule (2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Documentary Evidence, §31 et seq.) or the parol evidence rule (2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Documentary Evidence, §59 et seq.). The writing need not be shown, read, or disclosed to the witness. (Ev.C. 768(a); for rule on impeachment, see infra, §334.) However, if the examining party does show the writing to the witness, "all parties to the action must be given an opportunity to inspect it before any question concerning it may be asked of the witness." ### IX. DIRECT EXAMINATION: SPECIAL PROBLEMS

B. Use of Memorandum by Witness.

1. Refreshing Recollection by Writing.
  - b. Any Writing.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 178

[§ 178] Any Writing.

(1) Former Law. The strict requirements to assure trustworthiness of past recorded recollection (infra, §182) were applied in California, under former C.C.P. 2047, to writings used merely for refreshing recollection. Thus, the writing had to be made by the witness or under his or her direction; it had to be made when the fact was fresh in the witness' memory; and he or she had to know that the fact was correctly stated. (See McGowan v. McDonald (1896) 111 C. 57, 68, 43 P. 418 [bank passbook to refresh memory of depositor; admissible]; McEwen v. New York Life Ins. Co. (1921) 187 C. 144, 148, 201 P. 577 [doctor's report of medical examination made 9 years after event; inadmissible]; Steinhofer v. Georgeson (1921) 54 C.A. 550, 558, 202 P. 350 [use of account book improper for lack of personal knowledge of truth]; People v. McNichol (1950) 100 C.A.2d 554, 556, 224 P.2d 21 [report of defendant's statements about circumstances of crime, made to his psychologist under "truth serum," rejected].)

(2) Evidence Code. Ev.C. 771(a) departs from the former rule by allowing present recollection to be revived by "a writing," with no express restrictions on the types of writings or the means used to refresh recollection. (See Ev.C. 771, Comment; see also Rutter Group, 2 Civil Trials and Evidence §9:178; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §789.) Ev.C. 771 relies on the procedure governing its use to protect against false or manufactured evidence or other abuses. (See infra, §179.)

Thus, in People v. Hess (1970) 10 C.A.3d 1071, 90 C.R. 268, a witness was allowed to refresh her memory by use of a written memorandum she had prepared a few days before the trial and over a year after some of the events referred to in the memorandum had taken place. Defendants contended that the use of these notes was error because Ev.C. 1237 (infra, §181) requires the writing to be made when the recorded fact actually occurred or was fresh in the witness' memory. Held, no error. Ev.C. 771, not Ev.C. 1237, governs the use of a writing to refresh a witness' recollection, whether used by the witness while testifying or prior to trial. (10 C.A.3d 1080, citing the text.)

IX. DIRECT EXAMINATION: SPECIAL PROBLEMS

B. Use of Memorandum by Witness.

1. Refreshing Recollection by Writing.

c. Production, Inspection, and Cross-Examination.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 179

[§ 179] Production, Inspection, and Cross-Examination.

(1) Production at the Hearing. The writing must be produced at the hearing at an adverse party's request, or else the witness' testimony concerning the matter must be stricken. (Ev.C. 771(a).) However, production is excused and no striking will be ordered if, without fault of the witness or party, production is impossible. This exception applies when the writing (a) is not in the possession or control of the witness or the party who produced the witness' testimony concerning the matter; and (b) was not reasonably procurable by that party through the use of the court's process or other available means. (Ev.C. 771(c).)

(2) Inspection and Cross-Examination by Adverse Party. If the writing is produced, the adverse party may inspect it and cross-examine the witness concerning it. (Ev.C. 771(b); see generally People v. Sieber (1927) 201 C. 341, 350, 257 P. 64; Souza v. Joseph (1913) 22 C.A. 179, 189, 133 P. 981; Inouye v. McCall (1939) 35 C.A.2d 634, 637, 96 P.2d 386; Kelliher v. Ray (1941) 43 C.A.2d 252, 254, 110 P.2d 712 [reversible error to deny right of inspection]; 3 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §762; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §793 et seq.; 82 A.L.R.2d 473, 557; Rutter Group, 2 Civil Trials and Evidence §9:186 et seq.)

(3) Writing Used Prior to Testifying. Formerly, production was required only where the memorandum was actually used by the witness to refresh his or her memory while on the stand. (People v. Gallardo (1953) 41 C.2d 57, 67, 257 P.2d 29 [prosecution witness used notes before testifying; no error in refusing defendant's request for production]; see 3 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §762, favoring production.) But the Gallardo holding was inconsistent with the right of criminal discovery recognized in People v. Estrada (1960) 54 C.2d 713, 7 C.R. 897, 355 P.2d 641, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §77. Accordingly, the Commission changed the rule, for both criminal and civil cases, by requiring production of a writing used by the witness "while testifying or prior thereto." (Ev.C. 771(a); Rutter Group, 2 Civil Trials and Evidence §9:187.) As the Comment states, "[T]he adverse party's right to inspect the writing should not be made to depend upon the happenstance of when the writing is used." (See International Ins. Co. v. Montrose Chemical Corp. (1991) 231 C.A.3d 1367, 1372, 282 C.R. 783, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §85 [Ev.C. 771 required production of documents used to refresh deponent's memory as to any matter about which he testified; it did not require examining attorney to establish which of several documents actually refreshed deponent's memory on particular point].)

(4) Writing Within Attorney-Client Privilege. The word "writing" in Ev.C. 771 was not intended to cover a transcription of a client's original discussion with an attorney; hence, the transcript need not be turned over to opposing counsel. (Sullivan v. Superior Court (1972) 29 C.A.3d 64, 105 C.R. 241, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §77.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Inspection and Cross-Examination by Adverse Party. See 81 Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Witnesses §765 et seq.

(3) Writing Used Prior to Testifying. See People v. Smith (2007) 40 C.4th 483, 509, 54 C.R.3d 245, 150 P.3d 1224 [in capital murder trial, it was proper to require disclosure to prosecution of doctor's notes, test data, and test materials, where doctor stated during his testimony that he used those items to refresh his recollection in preparing to testify that defendant's statements to police were involuntary].

IX. DIRECT EXAMINATION: SPECIAL PROBLEMS

B. Use of Memorandum by Witness.

1. Refreshing Recollection by Writing.

d. Introduction by Adverse Party.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 180

[§ 180] Introduction by Adverse Party.

(1) Examining Party Cannot Introduce. The writing is used by the witness solely to assist him or her in giving oral testimony. It has no independent evidentiary value for the party calling the witness, and is not admissible in evidence at that party's instance. (See Estate of De Laveaga (1913) 165 C. 607, 631, 133 P. 307; Estate of Packer (1913) 164 C. 525, 530, 129 P. 778 ["To permit this to be done by the party producing the witness would open the door to the admission of hearsay and manufactured evidence without limit"]; Hawkins v. Sanguinetti (1950) 98 C.A.2d 278, 284, 220 P.2d 58; People v. McNichol (1950) 100 C.A.2d 554, 558, 224 P.2d 21; People v. Keelin (1955) 136 C.A.2d 860, 876, 289 P.2d 520; Vogelsang v. Wolpert (1964) 227 C.A.2d 102, 126, 38 C.R. 440, quoting the text; Frio v. Superior Court (1988) 203 C.A.3d 1480, 1492, 250 C.R. 819; People v. Lee (1990) 219 C.A.3d 829, 840, 268 C.R. 595, quoting the text; Rutter Group, 2 Civil Trials and Evidence §9:198 et seq.; 3 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §763; see also 3 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 616, 617.)

This restriction was circumvented in a questionable manner in People v. Allen (1941) 47 C.A.2d 735, 118 P.2d 927. The prosecutor, questioning an aged and confused woman, first allowed her to read portions of her testimony at prior preliminary hearings, next read her former testimony aloud, and then asked if that refreshed her recollection and if the former testimony was true. Held, this was proper. (47 C.A.2d 743.)

(2) Adverse Party Can Introduce Pertinent Parts. Former C.C.P. 2047 provided that the cross-examiner could read the writing to the jury. There was no authorization for its introduction in evidence, although reading gave it much the same effect as an admitted document.

Ev.C. 771(b) changed this rule, by enlargement and restriction: The cross-examiner may "introduce in evidence such portion of it as may be pertinent to the testimony of the witness." Thus, the distinction between reading and offering the writing in evidence is abolished, but there is no right to introduce parts wholly unrelated to the testimony and the purpose of its use. (See Ev.C. 771, Comment.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

IX. DIRECT EXAMINATION: SPECIAL PROBLEMS

B. Use of Memorandum by Witness.

2. Past Recollection Recorded.

a. Nature of Rule.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 181

[§ 181] Nature of Rule.

The doctrine of past recollection recorded differs in important respects from that of refreshing recollection. Here, the witness is not, strictly speaking, refreshing his or her recollection; reference to the writing does not recall the facts to the witness' mind. But if the witness does remember that the memorandum was correct when made, he or she will be permitted to give testimony from it. (Ev.C. 1237; see generally Estate of Moore (1919) 180 C. 570, 583, 182 P. 285; People v. Dennis (1998) 17 C.4th 468, 530, 531, 71 C.R.2d 680, 950 P.2d 1035, citing the text; People v. Deckert (1926) 77 C.A. 146, 151, 246 P. 157; Boyajian v. Balian (1935) 7 C.A.2d 174, 177, 46 P.2d 199; People v. Davis (1968) 265 C.A.2d 341, 71 C.R. 242, infra, §184; Sherrell v. Kelso (1981) 116 C.A.3d Supp. 22, 31, 172 C.R. 667, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §274; Rutter Group, 2 Civil Trials and Evidence §§8:1361 et seq., 9:204 et seq.; 2 McCormick 5th, §279 et seq.; 3 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §734 et seq.; 3 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 616; cf. Model C., Rule 504 and Comment; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §782 et seq.; 82 A.L.R.2d 473, 520; 10 Proof of Facts 251, 277.)

Thus, in Estate of Moore, supra, the issue involved the mental capacity of the testator at a certain time. His attorney, called as a witness, identified a bill of exceptions prepared by him containing testimony of the testator during this period, which was lucid and indicative of sound mentality. The attorney testified: "I prepared this document myself while its contents were fresh in my memory, using the court reporter's notes to check it. ... It is a correct statement of what Mr. Moore said on the witness-stand. Looking at the document does not sufficiently refresh my memory to cause me to remember and narrate what Mr. Moore testified to, ... but I know that the document is a correct statement of what occurred." Held, the testimony was admissible. (180 C. 584.)

In Anderson v. Souza (1952) 38 C.2d 825, 243 P.2d 497, one plaintiff read verbatim into the record a memorandum he had prepared on his observation of low flying planes. He had described the planes and their numbers, etc., on scratch paper or fence posts, then collected them into a permanent memorandum. Held, it was proper to allow him to read it even though he retained no recollection. (38 C.2d 832.)

In People v. Gentry (1969) 270 C.A.2d 462, 76 C.R. 336, defendant, paramour of Mrs. C., was charged with beating her young child. R, 8, oldest of Mrs. C's children, testified that she had heard noises after she went to bed on the night of the beating. She was unable to relate what followed, either because she could not recollect or was frightened by bullying conduct of defense counsel. But she testified that she had been questioned by officers, and that everything she told them was the truth. Officer T then testified that R had made a statement to him about defendant coming from the victim's room with the victim in his arms, and that he had written it down in a report shortly after it was given. Held, T's testimony was admissible; the statement was recorded by another who was available for cross-examination (infra, §184). (270 C.A.2d 468.)

The admonition in former C.C.P. 2047, that "such evidence must be received with caution," was not repeated in Ev.C. 1237.

IX. DIRECT EXAMINATION: SPECIAL PROBLEMS

B. Use of Memorandum by Witness.

2. Past Recollection Recorded.

b. Foundation.

1. In General.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 182

[§ 182] In General.

Several foundation requirements are imposed for the offer of past recollection recorded, designed to preclude the use of self-serving hearsay that has no guarantee of trustworthiness. Ev.C. 1237, less strict than former C.C.P. 2047, covers the following: (1) timeliness of recording (see infra, §183); (2) recording by witness or another (see infra, §184); (3) testimony by witness to truth of facts (see infra, §185); and (4) authenticity of recording (see infra, §186). (See also Rutter Group, 2 Civil Trials and Evidence §§8:1364 et seq., 9:205 et seq.)

Some courts, viewing the doctrine of past recollection recorded as one of necessity, refuse to apply it where the witness has an independent recollection of the facts. (See People v. Keelin (1955) 136 C.A.2d 860, 877, 289 P.2d 520; 2 McCormick 5th, §282; see criticism, 3 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §738; 3 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 616, 633.) Ev.C. 1237 does not list this as one of the four foundation requirements, but the section commences by referring to a statement concerning a matter "as to which the witness has insufficient present recollection to enable him to testify fully and accurately." It would seem, therefore, that the witness may be required to show a lack of present recollection. (See C.E.B., 1 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §11.70.)

IX. DIRECT EXAMINATION: SPECIAL PROBLEMS

B. Use of Memorandum by Witness.

2. Past Recollection Recorded.

b. Foundation.

3. Recording by Witness or Another.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 184

[§ 184] Recording by Witness or Another.

(1) By Witness. It is usually a condition that the writing have been made by the witness, or under his or her direction. (See People v. Deckert (1926) 77 C.A. 146, 151, 246 P. 157 [stenographic notes of defendant's statement, taken by stenographer at request of witness]; 3 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §748; 82 A.L.R.2d 473, 530; cf. 3 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 616, 623 [criticism of condition]; on requirement of original writing if procurable, see 3 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §749; 3 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 616, 625; and see Anderson v. Souza (1952) 38 C.2d 825, 832, 243 P.2d 497, supra, §181 [many fragmentary original notes copied by witness in memorandum form; properly used].)

(2) By Another. Ev.C. 1237(a)(2) allows, as an alternative, a writing made by another person for the purpose of recording the witness' statement at the time it was made. (See Stoneking v. Briggs (1967) 254 C.A.2d 563, 569, 62 C.R. 249, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §33 [slander case; newspaper reporters testified that parts of articles purporting to be quotations of defendant's statements were substantially accurate record of what he said].)

In People v. Davis (1968) 265 C.A.2d 341, 71 C.R. 242, Mr. W's store was robbed. Mrs. S saw a man running away and got the license number of his car. She then called Mr. W and read him the number, which she had written down, and later gave him the paper. Mr. W testified to the number that he had received over the phone from Mrs. S. But he admitted that the note he had in court was not his original; it was based on telephonic information from his bookkeeper as to his original notation. Held:

(a) This was not refreshing recollection, because he had no actual recollection. Hence, the information received from the bookkeeper was not competent evidence of the license number given him by Mrs. S, and this testimony should have been stricken. (265 C.A.2d 348.)

(b) But failure to strike was not prejudicial, for Mr. W was recalled to testify that he had the original paper on which he had written the number that Mrs. S gave him on the phone. This was proper past recollection recorded--the joint product of two persons. (265 C.A.2d 348.)

b. Foundation.

4. Testimony by Witness to Truth of Facts.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 185

[§ 185] Testimony by Witness to Truth of Facts.

(1) In General. Because trustworthiness of the writing depends on the same considerations as oral testimony, the witness must have had knowledge of the facts and must have honestly stated them. Accordingly, the witness must testify that the statement he or she made was a true statement of the facts. (Ev.C. 1237(a)(3).) The witness may do this either by testimony of his or her recollection or of the circumstances, i.e., of his or her habit or practice. (See Estate of Moore (1919) 180 C. 570, 583, 182 P. 285, supra, §181 [testimony as to recollection]; People v. Deckert (1926) 77 C.A. 146, 151, 246 P. 157 [same]; Anderson v. Souza (1952) 38 C.2d 825, 832, 243 P.2d 497 [testimony that he made a copy of original notes held sufficient, although better practice is to ask directly whether copy is correct]; People v. Parks (1971) 4 C.3d 955, 95 C.R. 193, 485 P.2d 257; People v. Cummings (1993) 4 C.4th 1233, 1294, 18 C.R.2d 796, 850 P.2d 1 [trial judge was within her discretion to determine that witness' testimony that his statement was true was reliable]; 2 McCormick 5th, §283; 3 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§746, 747; 3 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 616, 622; 82 A.L.R.2d 473, 528.)

(2) Amnesiac Witness. In People v. Simmons (1981) 123 C.A.3d 677, 177 C.R. 17, J made a written, signed statement to the police that defendant had admitted the commission of the crime with which he was later charged. Before the preliminary hearing, J received a head injury causing amnesia, and when called as a witness, could not recall either defendant's admission or his own statement. The statement was held inadmissible as a prior inconsistent statement. (See 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §159.) The prosecution, however, contended that it could come in as prior recollection recorded, relying on the following as a foundation: (a) He admitted that he would have had no reason to lie to the police; (b) he recognized his signature; and (c) he was asked the question, "To the best of your knowledge and recollection, is that statement true at this time," and he responded, "To the best of my knowledge." Held, the foundation was insufficient.

(a) Ev.C. 1237 creates a hearsay exception with a foundational requirement to insure trustworthiness: The declarant must appear and swear to the truth of the statement at a time when he is available for cross-examination. Here, the witness was unable to attest to his accuracy, and a basic justification for admissibility was lacking. (123 C.A.3d 682.)

(b) When J said that he had no reason to lie when the statement was prepared, "he could have stated with equal conviction to the best of his (nonexistent) knowledge that he had had ample reason to lie." (123 C.A.3d 682.) And his answer to the question, "[I]s that statement true at this time," was likewise based on no knowledge and was of no evidentiary value. (123 C.A.3d 683.)

Thus, "the indicia of reliability required to satisfy the confrontation clause, oath, cross-examination and an opportunity to examine demeanor, are completely lacking as to admissibility under section 1237 as well as section 1235." (123 C.A.3d 683.)

[§ 186] Authenticity of Recording.

The final requirement is that the writing be "authenticated as an accurate record of the statement." (Ev.C. 1237(a)(4).)

Here again, the Evidence Code relaxes a requirement of former California law: Normally, the witness will so testify, and under superseded C.C.P. 2047, he or she was the only person who could. But Ev.C. 1237 permits the recording to be made by another person (see supra, §184), and also allows its authentication by that person. "Sufficient assurance of the trustworthiness of the statement is provided if the declarant is available to testify that he made a true statement and if the person who recorded the statement is available to testify that he accurately recorded the statement." #### 3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 187

[§ 187] Reading by Witness and Introduction by Adverse Party.

(1) Reading by Witness. The writing may be read into evidence (Ev.C. 1237(b)), with the usual right of the adverse party to inspect (Ev.C. 768(b)), supra, §176) and cross-examine. Thus, a court reporter or stenographer may be permitted to use his or her shorthand notes, or transcript of testimony or statements, reading directly from them. (Burbank v. Dennis (1894) 101 C. 90, 104, 35 P. 444 [defendant's deposition taken, but he failed to subscribe it, hence, not admissible as a deposition; reporter read his transcribed notes].) (See also Johnson v. Babcock (1921) 55 C.A. 84, 85, 202 P. 898 [process server testified from affidavit of service]; People v. Deckert (1926) 77 C.A. 146, 149, 246 P. 157 [stenographer's transcribed notes]; People v. Gardner (1957) 147 C.A.2d 530, 538, 305 P.2d 614 [same]; 3 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §753; 82 A.L.R.2d 473, 544.)

(2) Introduction by Adverse Party. Many courts admit the writing itself in evidence (see 3 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §754), and the original Uniform Rules, following the suggestion of some authorities, made it admissible under a new hearsay exception. (See 2 McCormick 5th, §279; 3 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 616, 620; 82 A.L.R.2d 473, 537.)

The Evidence Code adopted the Uniform Rule theory of a hearsay exception (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §162), but rejected the unrestricted admissibility view and prescribed a rule similar to that applicable to a memorandum refreshing recollection: Only the adverse party may offer it in evidence. (Ev.C. 1237(b)); see People v. Davis (1968) 265 C.A.2d 341, 350, 71 C.R. 242 [error to receive it, but not prejudicial in this case].) However, the limitation of Ev.C. 771(b) to matters pertinent (see supra, §180) is not repeated in Ev.C. 1237.

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

IX. DIRECT EXAMINATION: SPECIAL PROBLEMS

- B. Use of Memorandum by Witness.
- 3. Notes Obtained by Illegal Recording.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 188

[§ 188] Notes Obtained by Illegal Recording.

In Frio v. Superior Court (1988) 203 C.A.3d 1480, 250 C.R. 819, F, an independent record producer, entered into a marketing agreement with I, and after a dispute arose I sued F to terminate the relationship. During discovery F produced 671 pages of typed notes of his telephone conversations with parties to the litigation and others. He admitted that he had tape-recorded some and used the recordings to "reinforce" his notes, and that he had reviewed these notes before testifying at his deposition. The trial court granted a motion by I to preclude offering the contents of the notes into evidence, on the ground that the evidence was obtained as a result of eavesdropping in violation of P.C. 632(d) (see 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, §342). Held, mandamus issued, directing trial court to vacate its order.

(a) Nature and Scope of Privacy Act (P.C. 630 et seq.). The statutory purpose was to prohibit wiretapping or electronic eavesdropping without the consent of all parties to the communication, and there was no such consent here. (203 C.A.3d 1487, 1488.) The statute protects a "confidential communication," and F contended that, because the conversations related to business matters and pending litigation, neither party could have considered them confidential. But many businesses employ extensive security measures to prevent disclosure of business strategy, and each of the tape-recorded parties reasonably expected that the communications would be private. (203 C.A.3d 1489.) "In sum, under section 632 'confidentiality' appears to require nothing more than the existence of a reasonable expectation by one of the parties that no one is 'listening in' or overhearing the conversation. Clearly, the communications in issue meet this threshold standard." (203 C.A.3d 1490.)

(b) Exclusionary Sanction. P.C. 632(d) renders inadmissible evidence obtained in violation of the section; but in excluding all use of the recordings the trial court failed to consider the distinction between past recollection recorded and present recollection refreshed (see supra, §§177, 181). (1) If the evidence is offered as past recollection recorded, neither the tainted recordings nor the notes derived from them can be read in evidence. (203 C.A.3d 1492.) (2) But use of the materials to refresh recollection would not be a violation of the statute: "The witness's recollection of the communications derives in the first instance not from the illegal tape recordings or the notes prepared from them, but from the 'independent source' of the witness's lawful firsthand participation in the conversations. The testimony thus remains the witness's independent recollection of the event." (203 C.A.3d 1492.) Hence, on remand, the trial court must determine those matters as to which Frio has a present recollection, refreshed or otherwise, and those as to which he does not. (203 C.A.3d 1495.)

(c) Use of Notes for Impeachment. If F is allowed to relate his present recollection there is no need to use the tapes to impeach a witness who was recorded; but if F is precluded from giving testimony because of the evidentiary sanction of P.C. 632, the party asserting the sanction should not be permitted to use it as a shield for perjury. As in the cases on evidence obtained in violation of Miranda used to impeach (see People v. May (1988) 44 C.3d 309, 243 C.R. 369, 748 P.2d 307, infra, §319), the evidentiary sanction of P.C. 632(d) "cannot be construed so as to confer upon a testifying witness the right to commit perjury." (203 C.A.3d 1497.)

IX. DIRECT EXAMINATION: SPECIAL PROBLEMS

C. Examination of Expert Witness.

1. Qualification of Witness.

a. In General.

1. Laying Foundation.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 189

[§ 189] Laying Foundation.

(1) Necessity of Foundation. A person testifying as an expert must be qualified by special knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education. (Ev.C. 720(a), 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Opinion Evidence, §38.) The parties may stipulate to the expert's qualifications and thereby avoid the necessity of showing them. (See McGuire v. Baird (1937) 9 C.2d 353, 356, 70 P.2d 915.) In the absence of a stipulation, the foundation must be laid: "Against the objection of a party, such special knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education must be shown before the witness may testify as an expert." (Ev.C. 720(a); see Crooks v. Pirrone (1964) 228 C.A.2d 549, 553, 39 C.R. 622; Rutter Group, 2 Civil Trials and Evidence §8:732 et seq.; C.E.B., Expert Witness Guide 2d, §13.2 et seq.; C.E.B., 1 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §11.130 et seq.; 33 Proof of Facts 2d 179.)

(2) Voir Dire Examination. The witness' special knowledge or other qualifications may be shown by any otherwise admissible evidence, including the witness' own testimony. (Ev.C. 720(b).) Usually, counsel, in a voir dire or preliminary examination to qualify the witness, will ask questions, the answers to which will disclose the witness' expertise (or lack of it). (See Crooks v. Pirrone, supra, 228 C.A.2d 552; C.E.B., Expert Witness Guide 2d, §14.4 et seq.; 1 McCormick 5th, §13 et seq.; 2 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§485, 654, 655.)

Opposing counsel may elect to postpone challenging the witness' qualifications until the general cross-examination after the witness has testified (see infra, §250 et seq.), or counsel may immediately cross-examine on qualifications. In the latter event, the judge will rule on the matter before the witness is allowed to give any evidence. (See Vallejo & Northern R. Co. v. Reed Orchard Co. (1915) 169 C. 545, 575, 147 P. 238; Eble v. Peluso (1947) 80 C.A.2d 154, 157, 181 P.2d 680; C.E.B., Expert Witness Guide 2d, §§11.1 et seq. [depositions], 15.6 et seq. [cross-examination at trial]; cf. People v. Hinkle (1923) 64 C.A. 375, 380, 221 P. 693 [although better practice is to allow cross-examination first, trial judge has discretion to postpone it until witness has testified].)

1. Qualification of Witness.

a. In General.

2. Determination and Review.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 190

[§ 190] Determination and Review.

The qualifications of an expert witness are finally determined by the trial judge, without resubmission of the issue to the jury. (Ev.C. 720, Comment; Ev.C. 405, Comment.) However, though the judge finds the expert qualified and admits his or her testimony, the jury may consider the expert's qualifications in determining the weight to be given the testimony. (See Ev.C. 406, and Comment; Pfingsten v. Westenhaver (1952) 39 C.2d 12, 20, 244 P.2d 395; Gerwin v. Southeastern Calif. Assn. of Seventh Day Adventists (1971) 14 C.A.3d 209, 218, 92 C.R. 111; see also Jeffer, Mangels & Butler v. Glickman (1991) 234 C.A.3d 1432, 1439, 286 C.R. 243, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Opinion Evidence, §40 [qualifications standard for expert in legal malpractice action is same as that applied in medical malpractice action].)

The judge's discretion in determining qualifications is very broad, and is seldom disturbed on appeal. (See Vallejo & Northern R. Co. v. Reed Orchard Co. (1915) 169 C. 545, 575, 147 P. 238; Huffman v. Lindquist (1951) 37 C.2d 465, 476, 234 P.2d 34; People v. Kelly (1976) 17 C.3d 24, 38, 130 C.R. 144, 549 P.2d 1240, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Demonstrative, Experimental, and Scientific Evidence, §99, citing the text [general rule restated, but court implied that trial judge erroneously ruled that law enforcement officer technician was qualified as scientist to testify about acceptance of voiceprint technique in scientific community]; People v. Chavez (1985) 39 C.3d 823, 828, 829, 218 C.R. 49, 705 P.2d 372 ["Although the matter is not entirely free from doubt," expert held qualified]; Coast Counties Gas & Elec. Co. v. Miller & Lux (1931) 118 C.A. 140, 143, 5 P.2d 34; Bennett v. Los Angeles Tumor Institute (1951) 102 C.A.2d 293, 296, 227 P.2d 473; Pfingsten v. Westenhaver, supra; Crooks v. Pirrone (1964) 228 C.A.2d 549, 553, 39 C.R. 622; People v. Murray (1967) 247 C.A.2d 730, 735, 56 C.R. 21, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Opinion Evidence, §43, citing the text; People v. Law (1974) 40 C.A.3d 69, 74, 114 C.R. 708, citing the text [general rule restated, but with observation that "[t]he actual extent of appellate review of such matters, however, has received minimal analysis in the cases touching on the point"]; Osborn v. Irwin Memorial Blood Bank (1992) 5 C.A.4th 234, 274, 7 C.R.2d 101, citing the text.)

There are some reversals, however, principally for error in excluding testimony of a properly qualified expert. (See, e.g., Seneris v. Haas (1955) 45 C.2d 811, 832, 291 P.2d 915; People v. Davis (1965) 62 C.2d 791, 800, 44 C.R. 454, 402 P.2d 142; Brown v. Colm (1974) 11 C.3d 639, 647, 114 C.R. 128, 522 P.2d 688; *Jeffer, Mangels & Butler v. ## IX. DIRECT EXAMINATION: SPECIAL PROBLEMS

C. Examination of Expert Witness.

1. Qualification of Witness.

b. Doctor in Malpractice Case.

1. Familiarity With Local Practice.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 191

[§ 191] Familiarity With Local Practice.

(1) Earlier Strict View. A narrow rule, developed in a number of decisions, made it extremely difficult to obtain medical experts for the plaintiff in a malpractice action: It was held that the doctor must be familiar with medical standards and practice in the particular locality at the time of treatment, and the opinion of a practitioner from another locality without such familiarity, even on well-established and generally accepted techniques, was rejected. The theoretical justifications for the rule were that (a) the doctor defendant in a small community without the opportunity to keep abreast of developments should not be held to the same standards of skill and care as doctors in metropolitan areas; and (b) it is improper generally to apply standards of widely separated places with different practices. (See Soady v. Washburn (1931) 114 C.A. 82, 84, 299 P. 560 [witness never practiced in California]; McNamara v. Emmons (1939) 36 C.A.2d 199, 207, 97 P.2d 503 [San Bernardino doctors could not testify to standards in Ontario, a short distance away]; Wheeler v. Barker (1949) 92 C.A.2d 776, 787, 208 P.2d 68 [Los Angeles physician could not testify to standards in Ventura]; 14 Stanf. L. Rev. 884.) (On general problem of obtaining competent medical testimony in malpractice case, see 9 Stanf. L. Rev. 733; 14 Stanf. L. Rev. 884; 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Burden of Proof and Presumptions, §136.)

(2) Liberal View. The tendency in later decisions is to apply this rule more reasonably. In Lewis v. Johnson (1939) 12 C.2d 558, 86 P.2d 99, the judge excluded testimony of doctors practicing in Los Angeles on the ground that they could not testify to the standard of care in Long Beach, both cities being in the same county, contiguous, and metropolitan in character. Held, this was error: "[T]o make the exclusion rest arbitrarily upon a geographical line separating two cities of the same county, with almost identical kinds of medical service, would be a misuse of the rules of evidence and an unjustifiable emphasis on empty technicalities." (12 C.2d 561.) (To the same effect, see Warnock v. Kraft (1938) 30 C.A.2d 1, 3, 85 P.2d 505 [Pasadena and Los Angeles]; Sales v. Bacigalupi (1941) 47 C.A.2d 82, 86, 117 P.2d 399 [Oakland and San Francisco].)

The liberal view was established for California in the definitive case of Sinz v. Owens (1949) 33 C.2d 749, 205 P.2d 3. Defendant, a doctor in Lodi, a small town 12 miles north of Stockton, was sued for malpractice in the treatment of a fractured leg. Plaintiff called Dr. M, who practiced in Oakdale and adjacent small towns, also near Stockton. Held, the trial judge did not abuse his discretion in allowing the latter to testify. The earlier emphasis upon medical standards in the "same" or "similar" locality confuses the purpose of the rule. Here, the evidence showed that, as to medical treatment of fractures, the conditions in the two towns and adjoining areas were sufficiently alike to make Dr. M a competent witness. "This conclusion is not based exclusively upon geographical proximity, and necessarily there can be no hard and fast rule laid down as a test for experience requisite as a basis for testimony as to custom and practice. But where all of the towns in which a physician practices are tributary to a city, such as Stockton, and there is testimony that the degree of care at the place of treatment is equal to that in the city, the evidence is sufficient to support a finding of similar circumstances. The essential factor is knowledge of similarity of conditions; geographical proximity is only one factor to be considered." (33 C.2d 756; see also concurring opinion, 33 C.2d 766; and see generally 23 So. Cal. L. Rev. 138; 5 Cal. Western L. Rev. 124; 7 U.S.F. L. Rev. 163; 36 A.L.R.3d 440 [expert on local hospital standards]; 37 A.L.R.3d 420 [competency of doctor from one locality to testify on standard of care in another locality]; 99 A.L.R.3d 1133 [modern status of "locality rule"].)

[§ 192] Cases Holding Doctor Qualified.

The decisions disclose considerable uncertainty as to the proper qualification of a doctor witness in an action concerned with a special field of medicine. It has been held, however, that different basic training is not necessarily a disqualifying factor; a physician trained in one medical school or branch of medicine may testify in a case involving a physician of another school, where the testifying witness is familiar with the particular treatment involved. (Hutter v. Hommel (1931) 213 C. 677, 681, 3 P.2d 554 [homeopathic physician and surgeon testified in action against allopathic surgeon]; Seneris v. Haas (1955) 45 C.2d 811, 832, 291 P.2d 915; Mann v. Cracchiolo (1985) 38 C.3d 18, 37, 38, 210 C.R. 762, 694 P.2d 1134; Abos v. Martyn (1939) 31 C.A.2d 705, 713, 88 P.2d 797 [malpractice of chiropractor, testimony of allopathic physician]; Agnew v. Los Angeles (1950) 97 C.A.2d 557, 566, 218 P.2d 66; Estate of Gore (1953) 119 C.A.2d 796, 800, 260 P.2d 859, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Opinion Evidence, §39; see 2 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §569; 52 A.L.R.2d 1384 [chiropractor]; 85 A.L.R.2d 1028; 46 A.L.R.3d 275; 99 A.L.R.3d 1133.) Furthermore, where the allegations of negligence concern matters within the knowledge and observation of every physician and surgeon, the testimony of a nonspecialist physician may be admissible. (Miller v. Silver (1986) 181 C.A.3d 652, 661, 226 C.R. 479.)

In Miller, a malpractice action against a plastic surgeon for failure to administer prophylactic antibiotics to an implant patient, plaintiff's psychiatrist was not competent to give expert testimony concerning the highly specialized surgical technique, but could give an opinion on the necessity of presurgical antibiotics for high-risk surgical patients who have experienced life-threatening complications from recent surgery. (181 C.A.3d 657, 661.)

In Agnew, supra, the question was whether defendant doctor's failure to take X-rays of plaintiff's hip fracture (hastily diagnosed as a bruise by the receiving hospital) was the proximate cause of later serious crippling effects. Plaintiff called Dr. A, a specialist in pathology and a consultant of other physicians. The trial judge refused to allow his testimony because he was not an orthopedic surgeon. Held, reversible error; the issue did not deal with setting of a fracture but with aseptic necrosis, a subject within his professional knowledge. (97 C.A.2d 566.) (See also Cline v. Lund (1973) 31 C.A.3d 755, 765, 107 C.R. 629 [following Seneris and Agnew]; Chadock v. Cohn (1979) 96 C.A.3d 205, 208, 157 C.R. 640 [podiatrist qualified as expert on standard of practice of orthopedic surgeon]; Mann v. Cracchiolo, supra, 38 C.3d 39 ["As a diplomate of surgery and neurosurgery, Dr. Fox is qualified to testify as to the standard of care in reading X-rays, in submitting X-ray reports, and in diagnosing"].)

IX. DIRECT EXAMINATION: SPECIAL PROBLEMS

C. Examination of Expert Witness.

1. Qualification of Witness.
  - b. Doctor in Malpractice Case.
  2. Experience in Special Field.
- bb. Cases Holding Doctor Not Qualified.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 193

[§ 193] Cases Holding Doctor Not Qualified.

(1) Early Decisions. In actions against specialists involving matters within their special fields, earlier decisions tended to reject plaintiffs' doctors whose experience did not cover the specialty. (See Moore v. Belt (1949) 34 C.2d 525, 532, 212 P.2d 509; Huffman v. Lindquist (1951) 37 C.2d 465, 476, 234 P.2d 34; Bennett v. Los Angeles Tumor Institute (1951) 102 C.A.2d 293, 296, 227 P.2d 473 [chiropracist not qualified to testify that injury to plaintiff's foot was X-ray burn; no experience in X-ray treatments, only X-ray diagnosis]; 25 So. Cal. L. Rev. 218; 85 A.L.R.2d 1022; 46 A.L.R.3d 275.)

In Huffman v. Lindquist, supra, plaintiffs' son died as a result of a mistaken diagnosis by defendant doctor of the nature of a head injury in an automobile collision. Plaintiffs' expert, Dr. Webb, was in general practice, and had been a railroad doctor treating traumatic injuries, a teacher of anatomy, and an autopsy surgeon for the coroner's office, dealing there with numerous head injuries. But he was not a member of the county medical association, had never been on any hospital staff during his Los Angeles practice, for the past 25 years, had never operated on a living patient, and in the past 10 years, had never actively participated in the treatment of a head injury. Held, he was lacking in active practice and "occupational experience" in treatment of living patients suffering comparable brain injuries, and the trial judge did not abuse his discretion in holding him unqualified. (37 C.2d 478.) (See Pearce v. Linde (1952) 113 C.A.2d 627, 630, 248 P.2d 506, following Huffman [in action involving heel bone injury, expert who was specialist in internal medicine, with no experience in orthopedics or surgery, who referred orthopedic surgery patients to others, and whose knowledge of proper treatment came from what he had read or heard would be no more persuasive than layman who had read and heard what was proper professional practice].)

A vigorous dissent in Huffman challenged the opinion by a detailed comparison of the somewhat similar experience of Dr. Webb and the defendant doctor (37 C.2d 480), and expressed grave concern over the practical consequences of this strict test: "It is a matter of common knowledge that members of any county medical society are extremely loath to testify against each other in a malpractice case. It would be very difficult for plaintiff to produce, at a moment's notice, a panel of doctors whose qualifications might satisfy the standards which apparently had to be met in this case. As a result of the disqualification of Dr. Webb, the plaintiff here was effectively precluded from producing any evidence as to the proper and customary practice and procedure in the treatment and care of an injury such as the one received by her son." (37 C.2d 483.) (See Seneris v. Haas (1955) 45 C.2d 811, 832, 291 P.2d 915 [trial court abused discretion in excluding testimony of Dr. Webb (same doctor as in Huffman) on matters of anatomy, pathology and causation].)

The court in Agnew v. Parks (1959) 172 C.A.2d 756, 343 P.2d 118, commented on the problem raised in the Huffman dissent: "[O]ur trial courts have encouraged local medical societies to cooperate in the formation of a panel of impartial qualified medical doctors from which they may with confidence appoint experts to examine claimants involved in negligence actions against doctors and give their unbiased opinion, which endeavor has recently been adopted by our state legislature authorizing the new so-called Impartial Medical Testimony plan. Perhaps the medical profession, having previously tried to cope with the problem of malpractice litigation in a variety of ways with obviously not too much success, will find that its faithful cooperation with the trial courts in this regard will result in the destruction of the ill-reputed 'conspiracy of silence.' " (172 C.A.2d 763.)

(2) Liberal Trend. In Mann v. Cracchiolo (1985) 38 C.3d 18, 210 C.R. 762, 694 P.2d 1134, the court, reviewing the earlier decisions, quoted from Brown v. Colm (1974) 11 C.3d 639, 645, 114 C.R. 128, 522 P.2d 688, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Opinion Evidence, §34, as follows: "The unmistakable general trend in recent years has been toward liberalizing the rules relating to the testimonial qualifications of medical experts." (38 C.3d 38.)

(3) Statutory Restrictions. In Jutzi v. Los Angeles (1987) 196 C.A.3d 637, 242 C.R. 74, plaintiff broke her ankle and was taken to a hospital emergency room where her injury was evaluated but not treated. Four hours later, plaintiff was transferred to defendant county hospital and treated by an emergency room physician rather than by an orthopedic specialist. Plaintiff sued defendant for malpractice after she developed gangrene that necessitated amputation of her leg. The trial judge precluded two of plaintiff's experts from testifying under Health & Saf.C. 1799.110, which provides that only those physicians having recent and substantial emergency care experience may testify in malpractice actions against emergency care physicians. Held, exclusion of this testimony was proper. The medical services rendered by defendant constituted "emergency care" notwithstanding plaintiff's transfer from another hospital. (196 C.A.3d 649.) Plaintiff's decision not to name the allegedly negligent physician as a defendant did not render the statute inapplicable, because its purpose was to encourage emergency care. Failure to apply the statute to protect a physician's employer could inhibit an emergency physician from taking quick, decisive action in the same manner as the threat of personal liability. (196 C.A.3d 651.) (See also Sigala v. Goldfarb (1990) 222 C.A.3d 1450, 1455, 266 C.R. 96 [following Jutzi]; cf. Baxter v. Alexian Bros. Hosp. (1989) 214 C.A.3d 722, 726, 262 C.R. 867 [agreeing with Jutzi, but holding Health & Saf.C. 1799.110 inapplicable to action against hospital based on failure to provide essential services, rather than on negligence of emergency physician].)

In Zavala v. Board of Trustees (1993) 16 C.A.4th 1755, 20 C.R.2d 768, plaintiff claimed defendant physician's failure to properly diagnose and treat her in a hospital emergency room led to a delay in necessary brain shunt and abdominal surgery, resulting in permanent injury. The trial judge found one of plaintiff's proposed expert witnesses unqualified to testify under Health & Saf.C. 1799.110, and plaintiff made no attempt to show her other expert was qualified. Thus, the trial judge excluded plaintiff's proposed expert testimony and granted defendants' motion for nonsuit. Held, affirmed. The court in Jutzi, supra, was wrong to begin its analysis by asking whether the actual treatment rendered constituted emergency medical care. The real issue was whether defendant physician was acting as an emergency physician in an emergency department when he did the allegedly negligent acts. (16 C.A.4th 1762, 1763.) As the physician was responsible for providing emergency medical services in an emergency department and was acting in that capacity when the alleged negligence occurred, Health & Saf.C. 1799.110 governed the admissibility of expert testimony. Plaintiff's first expert stated that he was not an emergency room physician, and that he had not acted as an emergency room physician in the last 5 years. (16 C.A.4th 1763.)

In James v. St. Elizabeth Community Hosp. (1994) 30 C.A.4th 73, 35 C.R.2d 372, the court followed Zavala, supra, and, like the Zavala court, disagreed with Jutzi, supra. Health & Saf.C. 1799.110(c) makes the statute's requirements applicable in actions against physicians "providing emergency medical coverage for a general acute care hospital emergency department." This means that the statute applies whenever a physician's territory or field of activity includes a general acute care hospital's emergency department. The plaintiff in James was treated in a hospital emergency room by an emergency room physician, but she argued that she did not need an expert qualified to testify under Health &

Saf.C. 1799.110 because the care actually rendered was not emergency medical service. Held, judgment of nonsuit affirmed. "Under our interpretation, the question is simply whether the defendant physician was acting as an emergency physician in a certain emergency department when the allegedly negligent acts occurred; if the answer is yes, subdivision (c) applies. ... Under the Jutzi standard, by contrast, a plaintiff will be forced to speculate whether 'emergency medical services' were actually provided, and if the negligence arose out of those services." (30 C.A.4th 82.)

In Miranda v. National Emergency Services (1995) 35 C.A.4th 894, 41 C.R.2d 593, the Court of Appeal agreed with the Zavala and James courts that, for purposes of determining what treatment calls the statute into play, "emergency medical coverage" means treatment provided in the emergency department of a general acute care hospital by a physician who is "on-duty" in the emergency department at the time. (35 C.A.4th 900.) The court then construed the same phrase for the additional purpose of determining who may qualify as an expert witness. "We give the words 'emergency medical coverage' the same meaning throughout subdivision (c) of section 1799.110. ... Thus, a proposed expert witness satisfies the standard of subdivision (c) of section 1799.110 if he or she is a physician who has had 'substantial professional experience,' within the five years preceding the trial, while employed or otherwise engaged by a general acute care hospital to provide treatment in its emergency room as an 'emergency room physician.' " (35 C.A.4th 905.) As the proposed witness in Miranda was an orthopedic specialist who was only "on call" to the emergency room to consult on and treat orthopedic injuries, the trial judge properly found that he was unqualified to give expert medical testimony in the case. (35 C.A.4th 907.)

(3) Statutory Restrictions. The holdings of Zavala v. Board of Trustees (1993) 16 C.A.4th 1755, 20 C.R.2d 768, text, p. 256, and Miranda v. National Emergency Services (1995) 35 C.A.4th 894, 41 C.R.2d 593, text, p. 257, were qualified in Petrou v. South Coast Emergency Group (2004) 119 C.A.4th 1090, 15 C.R.3d 64, a medical malpractice action in which the 5-year period referred to in Health & Saf.C. 1799.110 was at issue. Both Zavala and Miranda spoke of the 5-year period as being the 5 years preceding the trial, but that was not the actual issue in either case, and the court in Petrou decided that, although the statutory language could be viewed as referring to either the 5-year period preceding trial or the 5-year period preceding the alleged malpractice, the latter interpretation was what the Legislature intended. (119 C.A.4th 1096.)

IX. DIRECT EXAMINATION: SPECIAL PROBLEMS

C. Examination of Expert Witness.

2. Form of Questioning.

a. Hypothetical Question.

1. In General.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 194

[§ 194] In General.

(1) Acceptable Method. The traditional method of taking the opinion evidence of an expert is the hypothetical question. This may be framed on any theory that can be deduced from the evidence, and the questioner may assume any facts within the limits of the evidence and omit any facts not deemed material. (See Barefoot v. Estelle (1983) 463 U.S. 880, 103 S.Ct. 3383, 3399, 77 L.Ed.2d 1090, 1106 [asked of psychiatrists, on future dangerousness of defendant, permissible in death penalty case]; People v. Sims (1993) 5 C.4th 405, 436, 20 C.R.2d 537, 853 P.2d 992 [citing text; hypothetical question as to whether autopsy evidence was consistent with finding that victim was placed in bathtub while still alive and held under water until dead was proper]; Waller v. Southern Pac. Co. (1967) 66 C.2d 201, 207, 57 C.R. 353, 424 P.2d 937 [asked of doctor, concerning foreseeability that person with plaintiff's symptoms would have conditions aggravated by assignment to job involving responsibility and tension; reproduced at length in footnote]; People v. Obie (1974) 41 C.A.3d 744, 756, 116 C.R. 283 [because medical witness was testimonially qualified, and because matter about which he testified, i.e., that injuries were caused by repeated blows from short blunt instrument, was proper subject of expert testimony, prosecutor could elicit his special knowledge through use of hypothetical question]; BAJI (8th ed.), No. 2.42; 1 McCormick 5th, §14; 2 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §672 et seq.; C.E.B., 1 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §11.141 et seq.; C.E.B., Expert Witness Guide 2d, §13.9 et seq.; 31A Am.Jur.2d (1989 ed.), Expert and Opinion Evidence §98 et seq.; 56 A.L.R.3d 300; on the form of questions and practice, see 2 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §681 et seq.; 5 Am.Jur. Trials 675; 6 Proof of Facts 159.)

(2) Criticism of Method. The use of hypothetical questions has been denounced by leading authorities. "The hypothetical question, misused by the clumsy and abused by the clever, has in practice led to intolerable obstruction of truth. In the first place, it has artificially clamped the mouth of the expert witness, so that his answer to a complex question may not express his actual opinion on the actual case. This is because the question may be so built up and contrived by counsel as to represent only a partisan conclusion. In the second place, it has tended to mislead the jury as to the purport of actual expert opinion. This is due to the same reason. In the third place, it has tended to confuse the jury, so that its employment becomes a mere waste of time and a futile obstruction." (2 Wigmore, §686, now 2 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §686; see 1 McCormick 5th, §16; 2 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 356, 364.)

Equally scorching is the description in a leading California case: "Such questions themselves are always framed with great particularity to meet the views of the side which presents the expert. They always eliminate from consideration the countervailing evidence which may be of a thousand-fold more strength than the evidence upon which the question is based. They are astutely drawn, and drawn for a purpose, and that purpose never is the presentation of all the evidence. It is never to present the fair and accurate view, but the purpose always is to frame a question such that the answer will announce a predetermined result. ... In the case at bar the hypothetical question presented to these experts eliminated all the facts overwhelmingly proved in favor of Miss Dolbeer's sanity, bore with emphasis upon and threw into prominence trifling circumstances, and contained many statements not justly borne out by the evidence itself. ... All perspective was eliminated, all proportion destroyed, and the picture was as untrue to the original as is a fantastic and distorted shadow cast by a flickering and uncertain light a false portrayal of the reflected object." (Estate of Dolbeer (1906) 149 C. 227, 243, 86 P. 695; see also People v. Bassett (1968) 69 C.2d 122, 143, footnote 21, 70 C.R. 193, 443 P.2d 777 ["Although the hypothetical question has traditionally been the method used for taking opinion evidence of an expert witness, it has long been damned with faint praise"]; Estate of Collin (1957) 150 C.A.2d 702, 713, 310 P.2d 663, infra, §196.)

Wigmore's solution to the problem, to allow but not require the hypothetical form except in the trial judge's discretion, was adopted by the Model Code, Model Act, §4, and the original Uniform Rule. But the Commission, disapproving the Uniform Rule (Commission Report, p. 916), made no mention of the practice in the Evidence Code.

IX. DIRECT EXAMINATION: SPECIAL PROBLEMS

C. Examination of Expert Witness.

2. Form of Questioning.

a. Hypothetical Question.

2. Objecting to Hypothetical Questions.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 195

[§ 195] Objecting to Hypothetical Questions.

The principal grounds of challenge of a hypothetical question are directed toward its assumptions of fact, e.g., that it improperly assumes facts not in evidence, or assumes inconsistent facts, or does not include all proper matters. (See Estate of Gould (1922) 188 C. 353, 356, 205 P. 457 [assumed facts in conflict with undisputed facts and inconsistent with other assumed facts]; People v. McCaughan (1957) 49 C.2d 409, 418, 317 P.2d 974; Citron v. Fields (1938) 30 C.A.2d 51, 57, 85 P.2d 534 [did not include all proper matters, assumed matters not in evidence]; Bickford v. Lawson (1938) 27 C.A.2d 416, 428, 81 P.2d 216 [same]; Rudat v. Carithers (1934) 137 C.A. 92, 96, 30 P.2d 435 [similar]; Hyatt v. Sierra Boat Co. (1978) 79 C.A.3d 325, 338, 145 C.R. 47; Coe v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. (1977) 66 C.A.3d 981, 994, 995, 136 C.R. 331, citing the text; People v. Hayes (1985) 172 C.A.3d 517, 522, 218 C.R. 362, citing the text; C.E.B., Expert Witness Guide 2d, §12.8; 2 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §682.)

In framing the questions, counsel may inadvertently omit or even misstate a significant fact and thus elicit an inappropriate opinion; but unless opposing counsel objects and thereby gives the questioner an opportunity to correct the error, the defect cannot be raised on appeal. (Waller v. Southern Pac. Co. (1967) 66 C.2d 201, 210, 57 C.R. 353, 424 P.2d 937.) (See also Arellano v. Moreno (1973) 33 C.A.3d 877, 886, 109 C.R. 421 [trial judge improperly excluded question that included fact that was established by impeaching evidence; error was harmless]; People v. Stamp (1969) 2 C.A.3d 203, 209, footnote 2, 82 C.R. 598 [hypothetical question need not have stated all evidence as long as it did not omit essential facts and issues].)

See People v. Boyette (2002) 29 C.4th 381, 451, 127 C.R.2d 544, 58 P.3d 391 [in penalty phase of capital murder trial, denial of defense objection to prosecutor's hypothetical questioning of psychiatrist was error; prosecutor asked psychiatrist to assume defendant had assaulted Caucasian individual on street for no apparent reason and to opine as to whether that was antisocial behavior, but there was no evidence of such assault, and questions implied existence of additional aggravating evidence as to which defendant had no notice]; People v. Halvorsen (2007) 42 C.4th 379, 412, 64 C.R.3d 721, 165 P.3d 512 [in murder prosecution in which defense counsel asked defense toxicologist what blood-alcohol level of male weighing 180 to 190 pounds would be, assuming he had his last drink 11/2 to 2 hours prior to testing, trial judge properly sustained objection on ground that question assumed fact not yet in evidence, i.e., that defendant had not drunk anything after specific time].

IX. DIRECT EXAMINATION: SPECIAL PROBLEMS

C. Examination of Expert Witness.

2. Form of Questioning.

a. Hypothetical Question.

3. Question Based on Previous Testimony.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 196

[§ 196] Question Based on Previous Testimony.

(1) Goal of Simplifying Questions. The extreme length and occasional incomprehensibility of the typical hypothetical question (see supra, §194) has led to attempts to simplify the procedure. One method is to eliminate the detailed hypothetical recital of all the material facts, and to ask the expert to state his or her opinion on the basis of prior testimony given by other witnesses and heard or read by the expert. (See generally 1 McCormick 5th, §14; 2 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§681, 686; 2 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 356, 365; 6 Proof of Facts 159, 183.)

(2) Criticism of Method. In California, a leading case condemned this type of question on the ground that the jury cannot determine what facts formed the basis of the expert's opinion. (People v. Le Doux (1909) 155 C. 535, 554, 102 P. 517 ["Now, doctor, assuming each and all of the facts and circumstances testified to by these gentlemen I have named as true, what in your opinion was the cause of the death?"].)

In some jurisdictions, however, the question has been held proper where the prior testimony is not in conflict. Estate of Collin (1957) 150 C.A.2d 702, 310 P.2d 663, accepted this view, distinguishing People v. Le Doux, supra, on the ground that in the Collin case, there were no contradictions or conflicts in the prior testimony and exhibits referred to in the question. Dr. L, called by will contestants, read and considered the transcript of testimony of certain witnesses, together with letters written by decedent and introduced in evidence. He was then asked: "Not basing your opinion or founding your opinion upon the opinion of any witness in this case as to the mental capacity of Mr. Verneuil, but solely based upon the testimony which was given by Miss Ryan and Miss Devynck as to the conversations had with Mr. Verneuil and the correspondence that you have examined, I will ask you if you have an opinion as to his mental capacity." An objection was overruled, the doctor testified, and on cross-examination, he related in detail the precise evidence on which his opinion was based. Held, the objection was properly overruled. Had the question been put in the usual hypothetical form, nothing of importance would have been included that was not before the doctor in the transcript and the exhibits examined, a great deal more time would have been consumed, and the doctor would not have been in a better position to have given an intelligent opinion. (150 C.A.2d 712.)

[§ 197] Testimony From X-Ray or Photograph.

In Poggetto v. Owen (1960) 187 C.A.2d 128, 9 C.R. 395, decedent (plaintiff's husband), a motorcycle police officer, was killed in a collision while pursuing a speeder. The crucial issue was whether he came within the "authorized emergency vehicle" exemptions from traffic rules (Veh.C. 21055, 21056) by having his red lights on and sounding his siren. Defendants called Dr. M as an expert engineer, and he testified from a photograph of the smashed motorcycle that one of the lights was broken. Held, judgment for defendants affirmed. If the witness is qualified and the photograph is descriptive and clear, the situation is not unlike that of a doctor testifying from X-rays. "An expert can express an opinion from a photograph just as he can from a hypothetical question stating the facts which appear in a photograph." (187 C.A.2d 137.) (See People v. Obie (1974) 41 C.A.3d 744, 757, 116 C.R. 283 [expert witness was entitled to use photograph of embankment to support opinion that murder victim died from blunt instrument blows rather than by injuries sustained when truck rolled down embankment; citing Poggetto].)

IX. DIRECT EXAMINATION: SPECIAL PROBLEMS

C. Examination of Expert Witness.

2. Form of Questioning.

c. Direct Question on Facts Observed.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 198

[§ 198] Direct Question on Facts Observed.

If the expert has knowledge of the actual facts of the case derived from his or her own observation, the expert may give an opinion on the facts observed. In this situation, a hypothetical question on assumed facts is permissible, but is not as useful as a direct question and is not required. (Zelayeta v. Pacific Greyhound Lines (1951) 104 C.A.2d 716, 721, 724, 232 P.2d 572 [automobile collision case; proper to allow state traffic officer, who arrived on scene, to testify from his observations as to point of impact]; Wells Truckways v. Cebrian (1954) 122 C.A.2d 666, 676, 265 P.2d 557 ["either form of such evidence has been held admissible when complying with the tests indicated"]; Lemley v. Doak Gas Engine Co. (1919) 40 C.A. 146, 152, 180 P. 671; Schreidel v. American Honda Motor Co. (1995) 34 C.A.4th 1242, 1252, 40 C.R.2d 576 [proper testimony of plaintiff's expert concerning cause of defect in plaintiff's car; expert had personally examined plaintiff's car, and examined repair order history, defendant's service manual and independent service manuals]; Ev.C. 801(b) [opinion may be based on matter "perceived by or personally known to the witness"]; see 1 McCormick 5th, §14; 2 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§675, 678; 6 Proof of Facts 159, 192.)

In Wells Truckways v. Cebrian, supra, involving a collision of tractors and trailers, the officer examined the scene shortly after the accident. On the basis of gouge marks, location of trucks, tracks of tires, position and damage to tractors and trailers after the collision (the witness drew many diagrams on the board illustrating what he saw), he was allowed to testify to the degree of angulation of the trailer (i.e., that it was on the wrong side of the road). ## CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

C. Examination of Expert Witness.

3. Answer and Basis for Opinion.

a. Right To Give Reasons.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 199

[§ 199] Right To Give Reasons.

(1) General Rule. An expert is always entitled to give the reasons for his or her opinion, and undue restriction of the answer may be serious error. (See McGuire v. Baird (1937) 9 C.2d 353, 355, 70 P.2d 915 [long hypothetical question read to doctor, describing certain method of treatment, and doctor forced to answer yes or no, without explanation or qualification, thereby either completely approving or completely condemning method]; Ev.C. 802; see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Opinion Evidence, §30; C.E.B., 1 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §11.140; C.E.B., Expert Witness Guide 2d, §13.8; 6 Am.Jur. Trials 109 [basis of medical testimony].)

(2) Applicable to Direct Testimony. It is sometimes said that on direct examination, the expert must give his or her opinions alone, and not the reasons for the opinions, the latter being proper only under cross-examination. This view has been justly criticized as greatly weakening the value of the testimony, and there is no certainty that the cross-examination will even call for those reasons. As the court said in People v. Martin (1948) 87 C.A.2d 581, 197 P.2d 379, "A medical expert is entitled to express his opinion on a medical question presented in issue and then he may support that opinion by giving the reasons assigned in support of it. ... Expert evidence is really an argument of an expert to the court, and is valuable only in regard to proof of the facts and the validity of the reasons advanced for the conclusions." (87 C.A.2d 584.) (See also Tierney v. Charles Nelson Co. (1937) 19 C.A.2d 34, 37, 64 P.2d 1150 [plaintiff's doctor may be allowed to testify to history of accident given him by the patient; although self-serving, the statements are proper for limited purpose of showing basis for doctor's opinion on injuries; see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Opinion Evidence, §§33, 34].)

In 1937, former C.C.P. 1872 was enacted to permit the expert to give reasons on direct examination, and this is now the rule for all witnesses--expert and lay:

"A witness testifying in the form of an opinion may state on direct examination the reasons for his opinion and the matter (including, in the case of an expert, his special knowledge, skill, experience, training, and education) upon which it is based, unless he is precluded by law from using such reasons or matter as a basis for his opinion." (Ev.C. 802.) (See People v. Aguilar (1990) 218 C.A.3d 1556, 1567, 267 C.R. 879 [where experts' opinions were based on testing of defendant and statements by his family, rather than on what defendant said, defendant's statements to the experts were not made admissible by Ev.C. 802].)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

IX. DIRECT EXAMINATION: SPECIAL PROBLEMS

- C. Examination of Expert Witness.
  - 3. Answer and Basis for Opinion.
    - b. Basis Stated Before Opinion.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 200

[§ 200] Basis Stated Before Opinion.

(1) California Rule. The portion of Ev.C. 802 quoted, supra, §199, establishes the right of the witness to give his or her reasons on direct examination. The remaining questions are whether these reasons must be stated (a) on direct examination, and (b) before the opinion is given.

Where a hypothetical question is asked, it is clear that the basis of the opinion--the assumed facts--must be stated before the opinion is given. (See discussion, Lemley v. Doak Gas Engine Co. (1919) 40 C.A. 146, 152, 180 P. 671; Ev.C. 802, Comment; supra, §§194, 195.)

Where, however, the question is based on facts observed by the witness, there is no requirement that the witness state his or her reasons, i.e., the factual basis for the answer, before the witness gives his or her opinion, nor is there any requirement that the witness state them on direct examination: The opponent may bring them out on cross-examination. (See Lemley v. Doak Gas Engine Co., supra, 40 C.A. 151; Lumbermen's Mut. Cas. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Com. (1946) 29 C.2d 492, 500, 175 P.2d 823; Hart v. Olson (1945) 68 C.A.2d 657, 664, 157 P.2d 385; Ev.C. 802, Comment.)

Thus, in Lemley v. Doak Gas Engine Co., supra, a wrongful death suit, decedent, a machinist's helper, was killed when a flywheel disintegrated. Plaintiff asked his expert, "Will you state to the jury what, in your opinion, caused that flywheel to break?" Over objection, the witness answered, "I think the heat done it." Held, the objection of lack of foundation was untenable; the facts were properly brought out on cross-examination. (40 C.A. 151.)

Nevertheless, there are situations in which it would be more helpful to have the facts brought out first; hence, the court in its discretion may require that a witness before testifying in the form of an opinion be first examined concerning the matter upon which his or her opinion is based. (Ev.C. 802.)

(2) Federal Rule. An expert may testify in the form of opinion or inference, and may give his or her reasons for the opinions or inferences, without first testifying to the underlying facts or data, unless the court requires otherwise. The expert may be required to disclose the underlying facts or data on cross-examination. (F.R. Evid., Rule 705; see 3 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d §363.)

IX. DIRECT EXAMINATION: SPECIAL PROBLEMS

- C. Examination of Expert Witness.
  - 3. Answer and Basis for Opinion.
    - c. Opinion Based on Improper Matter.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 201

[§ 201] Opinion Based on Improper Matter.

The standards for bases of expert opinions have already been considered. (See Ev.C. 801, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Opinion Evidence, §30 et seq.) The court may, and on objection must, exclude opinion testimony that is based in whole or in significant part on matter that is not a proper basis for the opinion. In that case, the witness may then, if there remains a proper basis for the opinion, state the opinion after excluding the improper matter from consideration. (Ev.C. 803; see Gilroy v. Filice (1963) 221 C.A.2d 259, 271, 34 C.R. 368; Elder v. Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. (1977) 66 C.A.3d 650, 664, 136 C.R. 203 [expert witness may properly testify as to custom and practice in construction safety, but may not state interpretation of law, including safety orders relating to demolition work]; San Diego v. Sobke (1998) 65 C.A.4th 379, 398, 76 C.R.2d 9 [in eminent domain proceeding, trial judge properly excluded defendant landowners' expert opinion testimony on loss of goodwill, where expert's methodology was inadequate to measure value of any pretaking goodwill or to compare it with value of posttaking goodwill].) This rule is applicable to lay as well as expert witnesses.

Where the opinion is based on both proper and improper matter, the judge has discretion to deny a motion to strike. (San Bernardino County Flood Control Dist. v. Sweet (1967) 255 C.A.2d 889, 902, 63 C.R. 640.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

IX. DIRECT EXAMINATION: SPECIAL PROBLEMS

D. Examination as If Under Cross-Examination.

1. Adverse Witness.

a. Rule and Theory.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 202

[§ 202] Rule and Theory.

(1) Rule. In a civil action, a party may, at any time during its presentation of evidence, call an adverse party or person identified with the adverse party, and examine him or her "as if under cross-examination." (Ev.C. 776, restating former C.C.P. 2055.) (On former C.C.P. 2055, see Lawless v. Calaway (1944) 24 C.2d 81, 99, 147 P.2d 604 [liberal construction to permit fullest inquiry into any relevant issue]; Estate of Carson (1920) 184 C. 437, 447, 194 P. 5 [refusal to permit such examination held "a flagrant denial of a common, everyday right of every litigant"]; Scott v. Del Monte Properties (1956) 140 C.A.2d 756, 759, 295 P.2d 947 [reversible error to refuse to permit examination in this manner]; Rowan v. San Francisco (1966) 244 C.A.2d 308, 314, 53 C.R. 88, infra, §207; and see generally 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1884; Rutter Group, 2 Civil Trials and Evidence §9.80 et seq. [tactical considerations]; C.E.B., Effective Introduction of Evidence in California 2d, Chap. 6 [Calling Adverse Party or Witness]; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §731 et seq.; 35 A.L.R.2d 756.)

(2) Significance of Rule. This provision is still quite useful in situations where the examining party, in presenting his or her case, needs evidence that can only be given by the adverse party or someone connected with that party. But it has lost some of its former importance:

First, under old California law, if the examining party called a witness in the usual manner and the witness gave adverse testimony, the examiner would, in a sense, be "bound" by it, because of the former rule against impeachment of one's own witness (see infra, §355). The adverse witness exception of former C.C.P. 2055 allowed examination "as if under cross-examination," and further declared that the examiner would "not be bound by his testimony," so that the witness could be cross-examined, impeached and contradicted by rebuttal evidence to the fullest extent. (See Estate of Lances (1932) 216 C. 397, 404, 14 P.2d 768; Daggett v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1957) 48 C.2d 655, 662, 663, 313 P.2d 557; First Nat. Bank of Petersburg, Illinois v. Shipley (1930) 109 C.A. 194, 200, 292 P. 996.) Under the Evidence Code, a party may freely impeach its own witness (see infra, §356); hence, this effect of the old statute is obsolete.

Second, under the old law, the testimony of an adverse witness was not considered as having been produced by the party calling the witness so as to dispel a statutory presumption, such as the presumption of due care. (See Smellie v. Southern Pac. Co. (1931) 212 C. 540, 561, 299 P. 529; McKinley v. Southern Pac. Co. (1947) 80 C.A.2d 301, 310, 181 P.2d 899; Green v. Uarte (1948) 87 C.A.2d 75, 78, 196 P.2d 63.) Under the Code, a presumption is not evidence (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Burden of Proof and Presumptions, §52), and the former presumption of due care has been restated as a rule of burden of proof of negligence (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Burden of Proof and Presumptions, §15).

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

IX. DIRECT EXAMINATION: SPECIAL PROBLEMS

D. Examination as If Under Cross-Examination.

1. Adverse Witness.

b. Scope of Statute.

1. Adverse Party.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 203

[§ 203] Adverse Party.

(1) Who Is Adverse Party. In the first class of adverse witnesses is the adverse party ("A party to the record of any civil action"). (Ev.C. 776(a); see Johnston v. St. Sure (1920) 50 C.A. 735, 737, 195 P. 947 [joint answer by husband and wife, either may be examined]; Koeberle v. Friganza (1924) 66 C.A. 323, 327, 226 P. 35 [one defendant denied liability, alleged that she acted as agent for other defendant]; Dohrman v. J. B. Roof (1930) 108 C.A. 456, 466, 291 P. 879 [party named as defendant, who was not served and did not appear in action]; Simon v. San Francisco (1947) 79 C.A.2d 590, 593, 180 P.2d 393 [streetcar accident; motorman called without having been substituted in place of Doe; amendment, and then examination under statute, held proper]; MacGregor v. Kawaoka (1955) 132 C.A.2d 407, 409, 282 P.2d 130 [plaintiff, suing K, maker, and C, accommodation maker, could call K as adverse witness].)

For the purpose of Ev.C. 776, parties represented by the same counsel are deemed to be a single party. (Ev.C. 776(c).)

(2) Defendant Examined as Expert. In Lawless v. Calaway (1944) 24 C.2d 81, 89, 147 P.2d 604, a malpractice suit requiring expert testimony to establish the standard of care, it was held that plaintiff had a right to examine defendant doctor as an expert on this issue, and that refusal to permit the questioning was reversible error. (See 88 A.L.R.2d 1186.)

(3) Who Are Not Adverse Parties. In Peterson v. Peterson (1946) 74 C.A.2d 312, 168 P.2d 474, plaintiff sued to quiet title and cancel a deed of trust, and for damages for fraud. Defendant B disclaimed any interest in the property. Held, denial of the right to examine B under the statute was not prejudicial error because, at that time, only the equitable issues (quiet title and cancellation) were being tried. Of course, B would be subject to such examination in the trial on the cause of action for damages for fraud. (74 C.A.2d 313.)

In Pleasant Hill v. First Baptist Church (1969) 1 C.A.3d 384, 425, 82 C.R. 1, a condemnation action, plaintiff city complained because it was not permitted to call defendant's former appraiser as an adverse witness subject to cross-examination. Held, no error. "A literal application of the statute shows that the witness was an employee of the church at the time he obtained knowledge of the matter concerning which he was sought to be examined under this section. Analysis, however, indicates that the prime matter with respect to which he was being examined was the knowledge and opinion which he applied to facts which were open to any member of the public. ... Since the church disclaimed the use of his knowledge and opinion, and no longer employed him for that matter, the mere fact that the witness instituted some inquiry and compiled data at the request of the church did not perpetuate his status as 'a person identified with' that party. The court properly required the city to make the appraiser its own witness." (1 C.A.3d 426, citing the text.)

The fact that a witness brought a similar but separate action against the same defendant and prevailed therein did not make the witness an adverse party as to the plaintiff. (Petersen v. Donegani (1938) 27 C.A.2d 431, 432, 80 P.2d 1001.) And a person who, as equity receiver of a defendant, filed an answer in its behalf, was held not to be an adverse party. (Howland v. Doyle (1935) 6 C.A.2d 311, 315, 44 P.2d 453.)

IX. DIRECT EXAMINATION: SPECIAL PROBLEMS

D. Examination as If Under Cross-Examination.

1. Adverse Witness.
  - b. Scope of Statute.
2. Witness Identified With Adverse Party.
  - bb. Officer, Agent, or Employee.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 205

[§ 205] Officer, Agent, or Employee.

(1) Current Officer, Agent, or Employee. A person is also "identified with" the party if he or she is:

(a) A director, officer, superintendent, member, agent, employee, or managing agent of the party or of a benefited person (see supra, §204);

(b) A public employee of a public entity if the public entity is the party. (Ev.C. 776(d)(2); see 56 A.L.R.2d 1108 [who is "employee" for purposes of statute].) (On whether statute should be held inapplicable where employee is in fact friendly witness, see Parlier Fruit Co. v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. (1957) 151 C.A.2d 6, 16, 311 P.2d 62 [question raised but not decided]; 38 A.L.R.2d 952.)

(2) Former Officer, Agent, or Employee. In Wells v. Lloyd (1939) 35 C.A.2d 6, 94 P.2d 373, the court said of former C.C.P. 2055: "The section was undoubtedly intended to provide for cross-examination of any officer whose official position with the corporation put him in possession of any matters material to the cause on trial. Such a corporate official cannot deprive the adverse party to a lawsuit of the right ... by simply terminating his official connection with the corporation. To hold otherwise would enable a corporation to evade cross-examination under this section by the mere subterfuge of discharging an officer prior to the trial of a cause and then reinstating him at the conclusion of such proceeding." (35 C.A.2d 12.) (See also Scott v. Del Monte Properties (1956) 140 C.A.2d 756, 760, 295 P.2d 947 [personal injury action, witness an employee of defendant at time of accident].)

The present statute codifies this rule by including a person who was in any of these relationships "at the time of the act or omission giving rise to the cause of action." (Ev.C. 776(d)(3).) It also includes a person who was in any of these relationships "at the time he obtained knowledge of the matter concerning which he is sought to be examined." (Ev.C. 776(d)(4).)

IX. DIRECT EXAMINATION: SPECIAL PROBLEMS

D. Examination as If Under Cross-Examination.

1. Adverse Witness.

c. Procedure.

1. Time and Manner of Calling.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 206

[§ 206] Time and Manner of Calling.

(1) Any Time During Presentation of Case. There were conflicting expressions in prior California cases as to whether the trial judge, under the power to control the order of proof (see supra, §44), could require a party to call its own witnesses before examining adverse witnesses. (See Fuchs v. Southern Pac. Co. (1935) 5 C.A.2d 409, 411, 42 P.2d 704 [describing this as general practice]; MacGregor v. Kawaoka (1955) 132 C.A.2d 407, 410, 282 P.2d 130 [opposite view: "Whenever it was material to her case or whenever she desired before the close of the case ... it was her privilege under the statute to do so"]; Daggett v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1957) 48 C.2d 655, 663, 313 P.2d 557 [noting, without disapproval, that plaintiffs had called defendant engineer and another employee of defendant railway as their first two witnesses]; cf. Murry v. Manley (1959) 170 C.A.2d 364, 366, 338 P.2d 976 [reversible error to refuse to permit such examination before making out prima facie case].)

Ev.C. 776(a) makes it clear that there is no such requirement: The adverse witness may be called "at any time during the presentation of evidence by the party calling the witness."

(2) No Announcement or Offer of Proof Required. In putting an adverse witness on the stand, it is unnecessary to announce that he or she is called under the statute; the benefits of the section are available regardless. (Worthington v. Peoples State Bank (1930) 106 C.A. 238, 241, 288 P. 1086.) If the right is erroneously denied, it is not necessary to make an offer of proof as a basis for urging prejudicial error on appeal. (Lawless v. Calaway (1944) 24 C.2d 81, 91, 147 P.2d 604; MacGregor v. Kawaoka, supra, 132 C.A.2d 408.)

IX. DIRECT EXAMINATION: SPECIAL PROBLEMS

D. Examination as If Under Cross-Examination.

1. Adverse Witness.

c. Procedure.

2. Examination and Cross-Examination.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 207

[§ 207] Examination and Cross-Examination.

(1) Direct Examination as If Under Cross-Examination. The party examining an adverse witness may use leading questions, as in a cross-examination. (Ev.C. 776; see Ev.C. 767, supra, §166.) There are no limitations on the scope of the examination: Any relevant matter in issue may be brought out. (See Lawless v. Calaway (1944) 24 C.2d 81, 90, 147 P.2d 604; Daggett v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1957) 48 C.2d 655, 663, 313 P.2d 557; Murry v. Manley (1959) 170 C.A.2d 364, 365, 338 P.2d 976; Rowan v. San Francisco (1966) 244 C.A.2d 308, 314, 53 C.R. 88; 35 A.L.R.2d 757.)

In Rowan v. San Francisco, supra, plaintiff, injured in a fall on a sidewalk, called defendant city's ambulance driver as an adverse witness, and asked questions about the location of the accident and his observation of the conditions. Held, the objection that an employee may only be examined as to matters relating to his duties was properly overruled. (244 C.A.2d 314.)

(2) Cross-Examination by Other Parties. After the initial examination, the adverse witness may be cross-examined by the other parties to the action in whatever order the court directs. (Ev.C. 776(b).) "For example, a party whose interest in the action is identical with that of the party who called the witness for examination under this section has a right to cross-examine the witness fully because he, too, has the right to call the witness for examination under this section. Similarly, a party whose interest in the action is adverse to the party who calls the witness for examination under this section has the right to cross-examine the witness fully unless he is identified with the witness." (Ev.C. 776, Comment.)

(3) Limited or Full Cross-Examination. The full right of cross-examination (with leading questions) is denied, and the cross-examination must be conducted as on redirect, in two situations: (a) Where the witness is a party, and the cross-examination is by his or her own counsel or counsel for a party not adverse to the witness. (Ev.C. 776(b)(1).) (b) Where the witness is identified with a party, and the cross-examination is by counsel for that party or counsel for a party who is not adverse to that party. (Ev.C. 776(b)(2).)

However, the restriction of Ev.C. 776(b)(2) was thought to be unfair in situations where the "adverse" witness is not really adverse, e.g., where a plaintiff employee, in an action against his or her employer, calls a coemployee as a witness. The coemployee may actually be in sympathy with the plaintiff's case, and if so, the employer ought to be permitted to use leading questions in cross-examination. Therefore, where the party calling the witness is also "a person identified with the same party with whom the witness is identified," or is the personal representative, heir, successor, or assignee of such a person, full cross-examination is allowed. (Ev.C. 776(e).)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

IX. DIRECT EXAMINATION: SPECIAL PROBLEMS

D. Examination as If Under Cross-Examination.

1. Adverse Witness.
- d. Effect of Evidence.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 208

[§ 208] Effect of Evidence.

(1) On Motion for Nonsuit or Directed Verdict. The testimony of the adverse witness cannot ordinarily be considered against the party in determining a motion for nonsuit or directed verdict; only the evidence produced by the party in his or her favor may be considered. (Dempsey v. Star House Movers (1934) 2 C.A.2d 720, 722, 38 P.2d 825 [nonsuit]; Estate of Lances (1932) 216 C. 397, 400, 14 P.2d 768 [directed verdict]; Karstensen v. Western Trans. Co. (1949) 93 C.A.2d 435, 438, 209 P.2d 47 [nonsuit]; Ashcraft v. King (1991) 228 C.A.3d 604, 611, 278 C.R. 900 [nonsuit]; cf. Leonard v. Watsonville Community Hosp. (1956) 47 C.2d 509, 517, 305 P.2d 36 [testimony of defendant doctors held to overcome presumption of res ipsa loquitur, as to one doctor].)

(2) On Motion for Judgment. A motion for judgment under C.C.P. 631.8 is analogous to a motion for a nonsuit. Hence, a trial judge improperly considered defense exhibits on a defendant's motion for judgment, where the exhibits had been introduced during defendant's "redirect" examination by his own attorney following his testimony as an adverse witness called by plaintiffs. (Miller v. Dussault (1972) 26 C.A.3d 311, 103 C.R. 147, 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §442.)

(3) Evidence in the Case. The testimony, even if unfavorable, is evidence in the case, which may be considered by the judge or jury in determining the issues, and should receive its proper weight. (Figari v. Olcese (1921) 184 C. 775, 782, 195 P. 425; Daniels v. San Francisco (1953) 40 C.2d 614, 625, 255 P.2d 785 [proper to instruct to this effect]; Leonard v. Watsonville Community Hosp., supra, 47 C.2d 516; Goehring v. Rogers (1924) 67 C.A. 260, 262, 227 P. 689; Green v. Newmark (1933) 136 C.A. 32, 37, 28 P.2d 395; Joseph v. Vogt (1939) 35 C.A.2d 439, 441, 95 P.2d 947; Frymire v. Brown (1949) 94 C.A.2d 334, 341, 210 P.2d 707; Dorn v. Pichinino (1951) 105 C.A.2d 796, 800, 234 P.2d 307; Lavine v. Davis (1959) 175 C.A.2d 647, 648, 346 P.2d 426, citing the text.)

In Goehring v. Rogers, supra, a suit against two negligent drivers, plaintiff examined both as adverse witnesses, and the trial judge instructed the jury that the testimony of each defendant was binding only on him, and not against the other defendant. Held, this was prejudicial error. "[W]here one of two or more joint defendants is called under the section, his testimony, if material to the issues involved, is evidence for all purposes of the case and is binding upon him as well as upon his codefendants." (67 C.A. 262.)

2. Person Relied on by Expert.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 209

[§ 209] Person Relied on by Expert.

(1) Rule. An expert may give an opinion based on reliable matter furnished by another person. (Ev.C. 801(b), 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Opinion Evidence, §31.) In this situation, cross-examination of the witness may not be as effective as cross-examination of the person furnishing the basis of the witness' opinion. Accordingly, if a witness testifying as an expert testifies that his or her opinion is based on another person's opinion or statement, the other person may be called and examined by any adverse party as if under cross-examination concerning the opinion or statement. (Ev.C. 804(a).)

(2) Exceptions. There are three exceptions to the application of Ev.C. 804(a): Where the person relied on is (a) a party, (b) a person identified with a party, or (c) a witness who has testified in the action concerning the subject matter of the opinion or statement relied on. (Ev.C. 804(b).)

(3) Effect of Unavailability. Ev.C. 804 is merely a protective provision, not an exclusionary rule. Hence, the circumstance that the other person is unavailable for cross-examination does not make the expert's opinion inadmissible. (Ev.C. 804(d).)

D. Examination as If Under Cross-Examination.

3. Hearsay Declarant.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 210

[§ 210] Hearsay Declarant.

(1) Rule. Hearsay evidence is admitted under exceptions to the hearsay rule, where necessary or desirable, despite the fundamental objection to any statements offered without opportunity to cross-examine. If, however, the hearsay declarant is available and can be found, the opposing party should be entitled to call the declarant and treat him or her as, in effect, an adverse witness. (Ev.C. 1203, Comment.) Accordingly, "the declarant of a statement that is admitted as hearsay evidence may be called and examined by any adverse party as if under cross-examination concerning the statement." (Ev.C. 1203(a).)

(2) Exceptions. Exceptions are made where the declarant is a party, a person identified with a party, or a witness who testified concerning the subject matter, or where the statement is an admission or a judgment. (Ev.C. 1203(b), (c).) Counsel for a party may not examine his or her own client as if under cross-examination merely because a hearsay statement of the client has been admitted. Moreover, because a party should not have the right to cross-examine its own witness merely because the adverse party has introduced a hearsay statement of the witness, witnesses who have testified in the action concerning the subject matter of the statement are not subject to examination. (Ev.C. 1203, Comment.)

Ev.C. 1203 is inapplicable if the hearsay statement is offered at a preliminary examination, as provided by P.C. 872 (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §24). (Ev.C. 1203.1, added by Proposition 115, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §30 et seq.) Ev.C. 1203.1 does not limit the application of P.C. 866 (defendant's right to produce and examine defense witnesses at preliminary hearing; see 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Pretrial Proceedings, §141 et seq.) to witnesses the defense wishes to call other than the hearsay declarants whose statements were introduced as a part of the prosecution's case. (People v. Erwin (1993) 20 C.A.4th 1542, 1550, 25 C.R.2d 348 [in child molestation case, magistrate erred in refusing to allow defendant to call victim or her mother after the prosecution, under P.C. 872, introduced detective's testimony incorporating interviews with both].)

(3) Effect of Unavailability. Unavailability of the declarant for cross-examination does not make the declaration inadmissible. (Ev.C. 1203(d).) (On impeachment of declarant by extrinsic evidence, see infra, §357 et seq.)

IX. DIRECT EXAMINATION: SPECIAL PROBLEMS

E. Examination of Minor Witness.

1. Criminal Cases.

a. Legislative Findings and Intent.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 211

[§ 211] Legislative Findings and Intent.

"Faced with growing public awareness of the difficulties of prosecuting child sex abuse cases, state legislatures have acted to strengthen the prosecutor's hand while easing the burden that the judicial system places on the child victim." (98 Harv. L. Rev. 806, 808 [legislative innovations involving testimony of child victims in sex abuse prosecutions].) The California Legislature has adopted a number of statutes of this type. (See infra, §§212 [protections during trial or hearing]; 213 [support persons]; 217 et seq. [televised testimony].) (On videotaped testimony of child victim at preliminary examination, see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §23; on Ev.C. 767(b), authorizing leading questions to children under 10 in prosecutions for specified offenses, see supra, §167.)

In the enacting statutes amending P.C. 868.8 (infra, §212) (Stats. 1985, Chaps. 1172 and 1174), the following declaration appears:

"The Legislature hereby finds and declares that it is necessary to provide alleged child molestation victims with additional consideration and different treatment from that which is afforded to adults. The Legislature intends, by this act, to provide minors under the age of 11 who are alleged sexual offense victims with certain additional rights and protections during their involvement with criminal proceedings. The Legislature also urges the news media to use restraint in revealing the identity of these alleged victims, especially in particularly sensitive cases."

"The Legislature further finds and declares that some researchers believe that the alleged child molestation victim who is required to testify in court may experience psychological stress in discussing the alleged offense, that traditional court procedures may fail to take into account the potential damage to the child witness, that these procedures might exacerbate any damage already done to the child, and that judges who deal with child molestation cases should receive training in the psychological and social issues of child molestation, the basic principles of child protection and development, and techniques that may make the child more cooperative and thus aid the truth-gathering process."

"The Legislature further finds and declares that innovative approaches in the legal system's handling of alleged child sexual abuse cases should be adopted to prevent additional trauma to the child. The Legislature finds that some researchers believe that traditional courtroom settings intimidate child witnesses and thus may hinder the truth-gathering process; that in order to elicit information most effectively and to maintain the child's cooperation it may be necessary to create new courtroom configurations, designed to respond to the child's size, limited capacity to communicate, and special needs for comfort, support, and reassurance."

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

IX. DIRECT EXAMINATION: SPECIAL PROBLEMS

E. Examination of Minor Witness.

1. Criminal Cases.

b. Protections During Trial or Hearing.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 212

[§ 212] Protections During Trial or Hearing.

(1) Applicable Proceedings. The trial court must take special precautions to comfort and support the minor and to protect the minor from coercion, intimidation, or undue influence as a witness in specified criminal proceedings: those in which the defendant is charged with a violation of P.C. 243.4, 261, 273a, 273d, 285, 286, 288, 288a, 288.5, 289, 314(1), or 647.6, "committed with or upon a minor under the age of 11." (P.C. 868.8; for specified crimes, see 1 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against the Person, §§26, 74 et seq. [P.C. 243.4, sexual battery]; 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Sex Offenses and Crimes Against Decency, §§164, 165 [P.C. 273d, corporal punishment of child resulting in traumatic condition]; 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Sex Offenses and Crimes Against Decency, §1 et seq. [P.C. 261, rape]; 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Sex Offenses and Crimes Against Decency, §138 et seq. [P.C. 285, incest]; 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Sex Offenses and Crimes Against Decency, §25 et seq. [P.C. 286, sodomy]; 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Sex Offenses and Crimes Against Decency, §31 [P.C. 288a, oral copulation]; 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Sex Offenses and Crimes Against Decency, §37 et seq. [P.C. 288, lewd act with child]; 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Sex Offenses and Crimes Against Decency, §51 et seq. [P.C. 288.5, continuous sexual abuse of child]; 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Sex Offenses and Crimes Against Decency, §47 et seq. [P.C. 289, penetration of anal or genital openings by foreign object]; 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Sex Offenses and Crimes Against Decency, §109 [P.C. 314(1), public exposure of private parts]; 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Sex Offenses and Crimes Against Decency, §159 et seq. [P.C. 273a, wilfully endangering life or health of child]; 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Public Peace and Welfare §§59, 60 [P.C. 647.6, annoying or molesting child].)

(2) Special Precautions. The special precautions include, but are not limited to, the following:

(a) Position of Persons in Courtroom. In the court's discretion, the judge, parties, witnesses, support persons, and court personnel may be relocated within the courtroom to facilitate a more comfortable and personal environment for the minor witness. (P.C. 868.8(c).) (On support persons, see infra, §§213, 214.)

(b) Judge Presiding Without Robe. The judge, in his or her discretion, may remove his or her robe if the judge believes that this formal attire intimidates the minor. (P.C. 868.8(b).)

(c) Periods of Relief. The court may allow the witness reasonable periods of relief from examination and cross-examination during which the witness may retire from the courtroom. (P.C. 868.8(a).)

(d) Examination During School Hours. The court may limit the taking of the child's testimony to the hours during which the child is normally in school, unless there is good cause to take the child's testimony during other hours. (P.C.

868.8(d).)

(e) Special Courtroom. In order to provide a nonthreatening environment for minors to better enable them to testify freely and accurately, counties are encouraged to provide a room in or near the courthouse for minors under 16 years of age. In addition, if a county constructs, substantially remodels, or refurbishes a courthouse or facility used as a courthouse on or after January 1, 1988, the facility must contain a room of this type. (P.C. 868.6.)

(f) Closed Proceedings in Molestation Cases. On motion by the prosecution in any case involving an offense specified in P.C. 868.8 on a minor under 16, the trial judge must hold a hearing to determine whether the testimony of, and testimony relating to, a minor should be closed to the public in order to protect the minor's reputation. (P.C. 859.1(a).)

In making this determination, the judge must consider (1) the nature and seriousness of the offense; (2) the minor's age; (3) the extent to which the community's size would preclude the victim's anonymity; (4) the likelihood of public opprobrium due to the victim's status; (5) whether the public has an overriding interest in having an open hearing; (6) whether the prosecution has demonstrated a substantial probability that the witness' identity would otherwise be disclosed during the proceeding and would cause serious harm to him or her; (7) whether the witness has provided information concerning the case to the public; and (8) any other factor deemed necessary to protect the interests of justice. (P.C. 859.1(b).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Applicable Proceedings. P.C. 868.8 was amended in 2001 to make the statute applicable to disabled persons as well as minors. As amended, the quoted portion reads "committed with or upon a person with a disability or a minor under the age of 11."

P.C. 868.8(e), added in 2001, provides that for purposes of P.C. 868.8, "disability" has the meaning given it in Govt.C. 12926(i). (See 8 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §916.)

(2) Special Precautions.

(a) Positions of Persons in Courtroom. P.C. 868.8(c) was amended in 2001 to refer to disabled persons as well as child witnesses. (b) Judge Presiding Without Robe. P.C. 868.8(b) was amended in 2001 to refer to disabled persons as well as minors.

(d) Examination During School Hours. As amended in 2001, P.C. 868.8(d) provides that, in the court's discretion, the taking of the testimony of the minor or disabled person may be limited to "normal school hours" if there is no good cause to take it at another time.

(f) Closed Proceedings in Molestation Cases. P.C. 859.1(a) was amended in 2004 to expand the scope of the statute to include dependent persons with a substantial cognitive impairment. In accordance with this change, P.C. 859.1(b) was amended to allow the court to consider the dependent person's level of cognitive development.

IX. DIRECT EXAMINATION: SPECIAL PROBLEMS

E. Examination of Minor Witness.

1. Criminal Cases.

c. Presence of Support Person or Other Representative.

1. Support Persons.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 213

[§ 213] Support Persons.

(1) Prosecuting Witness' Option. In proceedings involving specified serious offenses (including murder, mayhem, rape, robbery, assault, battery, and child abuse), a prosecuting witness is entitled to have up to two support persons of his or her own choosing in attendance during his or her testimony. One of the support persons may be a witness (see infra, §214). (P.C. 868.5(a); see generally 82 A.L.R.4th 1038 [propriety of third person accompanying or supporting witness during testimony].) The term "prosecuting witness," as used in P.C. 868.5 both as to the witness who is testifying and as to the support person, includes witnesses for the prosecution who are neither victim nor complainant. (Ortega v. Superior Court (1982) 135 C.A.3d 244, 252, 185 C.R. 297 [child witness]; People v. Kabonic (1986) 177 C.A.3d 487, 492, 223 C.R. 41 [support person].) Although the statute originally allowed support persons only for prosecuting witnesses who were 16 years old or younger, that age limitation has been eliminated.

(2) Applicable Proceedings. The support persons may attend preliminary hearings, trials, and juvenile court proceedings. (P.C. 868.5(a).)

(3) Presence on Stand. Only one of the support persons may accompany the witness to the witness stand, although the other may remain in the courtroom during the witness' testimony. (P.C. 868.5(a).)

(4) Newspersons Ineligible. The chosen support person cannot be a person described in Ev.C. 1070 (news reporter, publisher, or editor), unless the person is related to the prosecuting witness as a parent, guardian, or sibling and does not make notes during the hearing or proceeding. (P.C. 868.5(a).) (On Ev.C. 1070, see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §334.)

(5) Admonition of Support Person. The judge in a juvenile court proceeding must inform the support persons that juvenile court proceedings are confidential and may not be discussed with anyone not in attendance at the proceedings. In all cases, the judge must admonish the support persons against prompting, swaying, or influencing the witness in any way. (P.C. 868.5(b).)

(6) Removal of Support Person. Nothing in P.C. 868.5 precludes a judge from removing a support person from the courtroom whom the judge believes is prompting, swaying, or influencing the witness. (P.C. 868.5(b).)

(7) Finding of Need. Because the statutory procedure affects the constitutional right of confrontation, there must be a case-specific finding of need before it can be utilized. (People v. Adams (1993) 19 C.A.4th 412, 442, 443, 23 C.R.2d 512; see People v. Lord (1994) 30 C.A.4th 1718, 1722, 36 C.R.2d 453 [defendant waived any claim of error in court's failure to make finding of need by failing to request hearing or otherwise object to presence of support person]; People v. Johns (1997) 56 C.A.4th 550, 554, 65 C.R.2d 434 [disagreeing with People v. Adams, supra, to the extent it suggests that any impact on any component of confrontation right--face-to-face confrontation, oath, cross-examination, and jury's observation of witness' demeanor--constitutes violation that must be justified by necessity of furthering important public policy].)

E. Examination of Minor Witness.

1. Criminal Cases.

c. Presence of Support Person or Other Representative.

2. Support Person Who Is Witness.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 214

[§ 214] Support Person Who Is Witness.

(1) Required Showing. If a chosen support person is also a prosecuting witness, the prosecution must present evidence that the person's attendance is both desired by the prosecuting witness for support and will be helpful to the prosecuting witness. On that showing, the court must grant the request unless the defendant presents information or the court notices that the support person's attendance during the prosecuting witness' testimony "would pose a substantial risk of influencing or affecting the content of that testimony." (P.C. 868.5(b).)

(2) Exclusion From Courtroom. The testimony of a chosen support person who is also a prosecuting witness must be presented before the testimony of the prosecuting witness. The prosecuting witness must be excluded from the courtroom during that testimony. Whenever the evidence given by a support person would be subject to exclusion because it was given before the corpus delicti was established, the evidence must be admitted subject to the court's or the defendant's motion to strike it from the record if the corpus delicti is not later established by the prosecuting witness' testimony. (P.C. 868.5(c).)

(3) Exception to Exclusionary Rule. The requirement that a support person who is also a prosecution witness must testify before the prosecuting witness testifies, with the prosecuting witness excluded from the courtroom, is subject to an important exception. In People v. Redondo (1988) 203 C.A.3d 647, 250 C.R. 46, defendant was charged with lewd conduct with 9-year-old Mariano. Mariano's mother, present as a support person, testified prior to Mariano, but was not asked any questions concerning statements made to her by Mariano shortly after the assault. After Mariano had begun to testify, the prosecutor was informed by the mother that Mariano had told her that defendant had attacked him. The prosecutor attempted to question Mariano concerning the statement, but a hearsay objection was sustained (statement was to mother, not Mariano). After the session, the prosecutor recalled the mother and she testified to the statement. Held, admission of the testimony was proper.

(a) The statutory requirement was intended to guard against the possibility that the support person will tailor his or her testimony to match that of the complaining witness. "Nevertheless, we believe a blanket rule which prevents a support person from being recalled in any circumstances after the victim has testified is a far less desirable alternative. Such a rule would keep relevant, admissible, and perhaps important evidence from the jury even where the prosecution in good faith fails to discover the evidence until after the support person and victim have testified. In such circumstances, the marginal benefit gained by preventing a support person from testifying on recall after the victim has testified is vastly outweighed by the cost of keeping admissible evidence from the jury." (203 C.A.3d 654.)

(b) This conclusion finds support in cases dealing with the analogous situation of violation of a witness exclusion order: This does not render the witness incompetent to testify, and does not furnish grounds to refuse permission to testify, "at least where the party who seeks to offer the testimony was not 'at fault.' " (203 C.A.3d 654; see supra, §74.)

(1) Applicable Proceedings. Counties were allowed to establish a 3-year pilot project by July 1, 1987, whereby the court, in prosecutions for child abuse or molestation brought against a member of a child's immediate family, may appoint a children's representative to represent the interests of the victim or witness who is under 14 years of age. (P.C. 1348.5(a).)

(2) Duties. The representative's duties include accompanying the child through all proceedings, explaining their nature and progress and telling the child what is expected of him or her, and consulting with the court regarding any special needs the child might have. (P.C. 1348.5(k).)

(3) Limitations. A representative may not discuss the facts and circumstances of the case with the child witness (P.C. 1348.5(i), (p)), and may not be involved in investigatory interviewing (P.C. 1348.5(s)). Moreover, no privilege is created between the child and the representative. (P.C. 1348.5(q).)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

IX. DIRECT EXAMINATION: SPECIAL PROBLEMS

E. Examination of Minor Witness.

1. Criminal Cases.

d. Televised Testimony.

1. Former Law: Unauthorized.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 216

[§ 216] Former Law: Unauthorized.

In Hochheiser v. Superior Court (1984) 161 C.A.3d 777, 208 C.R. 273, defendant was charged with lewd conduct with two minors, one 10 years old and one nearly 9 years old. The children testified at the preliminary hearing, but their parents thought they suffered great psychological harm, and at the trial, the prosecutor moved that they be allowed to testify over closed-circuit television from the jury room. The trial judge granted the motion over strong objection, and defendant sought prohibition to prevent enforcement of the order. Held, writ granted.

(a) No inherent power to order the procedure. Reynolds v. Superior Court (1974) 12 C.3d 834, 117 C.R. 437, 528 P.2d 45, and People v. Collie (1981) 30 C.3d 43, 177 C.R. 458, 634 P.2d 534, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §28, emphasized the restraint that must be exercised in using inherent power to adopt novel criminal procedures, and these decisions indicate the proper result here.

(1) The order raises federal and state constitutional issues, potentially affecting the defendant's rights to a public trial, confrontation of witnesses against him, and due process. (161 C.A.3d 786.)

(2) There are significant differences between testimony face-to-face and testimony by closed-circuit television, because of distortion by camera lens, angle, and lighting, which may affect the jurors' impressions of the witness' demeanor and credibility. (161 C.A.3d 786.) Also, the credibility of the witness testifying by closed-circuit television "may be enhanced by the phenomenon called status-conferral; it is recognized that the media bestows prestige and enhances the authority of an individual by legitimizing his status." (161 C.A.3d 787.)

(3) The televised presentation may affect the presumption of innocence by creating prejudice against the defendant similar to that created by physical restraints on him. (161 C.A.3d 787.)

(4) The generalized minute order of the court contained no details concerning the actual arrangements. (161 C.A.3d 788.)

(b) No statutory power under Ev.C. 765. The trial court's power under Ev.C. 765 to protect a witness from undue harassment or embarrassment (see supra, §77) was intended to govern the type and form of questioning, and must be exercised in the context of questioning of witnesses within the courtroom. (161 C.A.3d 789, 790.)

(c) No statutory power under P.C. 288(c). P.C. 288(c) (now P.C. 288(d)) directs the court to "consider the needs of the child victim" of lewd conduct, and to do "whatever is necessary and constitutionally permissible to prevent psychological harm to the child victim." This language cannot be read as a legislative mandate to introduce a fundamental change that would abrogate the traditional right to the presence of witnesses in the courtroom. "Indeed, were we to read subdivision (c) as literally and broadly as the People urge, it would authorize wholesale revision in the entire procedural format of a criminal trial, especially since every sex crime against a minor under age 14 can be charged as a Penal Code section 288 violation." (161 C.A.3d 791.)

(d) Insufficient showing of necessity. Even if it were assumed that P.C. 288(c) permits the use of closed-circuit television, this exception to the constitutional right of confrontation can be justified only by a compelling state interest. (161 C.A.3d 792, citing Ohio v. Roberts (1980) 448 U.S. 56, 100 S.Ct. 2531, 65 L.Ed.2d 597, supra, §21.) None has been shown: "In our research of the professional literature on the matter, we have not discovered any study, based on empirical data, which deals with the damaging psychological effect of giving testimony in the presence of the jury and the accused, on the sexually abused child." (161 C.A.3d 793.) And before a child victim is excused from testifying in the presence of the jury and the defendant on the premise that he will suffer additional injury, "the basis for such a premise must be established both in fact as well as in logic, and its dimensions must be spelled out in terms of its nature, degree and potential duration." (161 C.A.3d 793.) The parents' testimony on the issue of the children's mental health was insufficient to support a finding of necessity. (161 C.A.3d 794.)

A concurring justice agreed that the parents' testimony was not sufficient to show necessity and that the bare minute order did not protect the defendant's rights, but disagreed with the holding on lack of statutory power under P.C. 288(c). (161 C.A.3d 795.) (On legislative authorization of admission of child's statements under special hearsay exception, and testimony by videotape, see 98 Harv. L. Rev. 806; on legislative authorization of televised testimony, see infra, §217 et seq.)

d. Televised Testimony.

2. Statutory Authorization.

aa. Rule and Legislative Intent.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 217

[§ 217] Rule and Legislative Intent.

(1) Rule. The court, in any criminal proceeding, may order that the testimony of a minor 10 years of age or younger at the time of the motion be taken by contemporaneous examination and cross-examination in another place and out of the presence of the judge, jury, defendant, and attorneys, and communicated to the courtroom by means of closed-circuit television. (P.C. 1347(b).) (See 17 Pacific L. J. 720; 23 Cal. Western L. Rev. 52, 56 [background and legislative intent of P.C. 1347]; 13 Pepperdine L. Rev. 157, 180 [constitutional problems under Hochheiser v. Superior Court (1984) 161 C.A.3d 777, 208 C.R. 273, supra, §216]; 27 *Santa Clara L. Generally, two-way closed circuit television will be used, but in certain cases, the court can further limit the impact on the minor by ordering the use of one-way closed circuit television. (See P.C. 1347(c), infra, §219.) (On videotaping of preliminary hearing testimony of minor, see P.C. 1346; 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §261; on legislation in other states, see 98 Harv. L. Craig (1990) 497 U.S. 836, 110 S.Ct. 3157, 111 L.Ed.2d 666, supra, §17.)

(2) Legislative Intent. P.C. 1347 is meant to allow courts to employ unusual procedures to protect the rights of a child witness, the rights of the defendant, and the integrity of the judicial process. In exercising their discretion, courts necessarily will be required to balance the defendant's rights against the need to protect a child witness and to preserve the integrity of the court's truthfinding function. "This discretion is intended to be used selectively when the facts and circumstances in the individual case present compelling evidence of the need to use these unusual procedures." (P.C. 1347(a).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Rule. P.C. 1347(b) was amended in 1998 to raise the maximum age of the minor to 13 years.

See 37 McGeorge L. Rev. 294 [constitutional issues raised by P.C. 1347]; 48 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 185 [law and policy issues concerning use of videoconferencing technology in trial proceedings]. (2) Legislative Intent. The portion of P.C. 1347(a) quoted in the text was amended in 2005 to change the word "unusual" to "alternative."

IX. DIRECT EXAMINATION: SPECIAL PROBLEMS

E. Examination of Minor Witness.

1. Criminal Cases.

d. Televised Testimony.

2. Statutory Authorization.

bb. Motion, Hearing, and Order.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 218

[§ 218] Motion, Hearing, and Order.

(1) Noticed Motion or Court's Own Motion. The order granting televised testimony may be made upon the prosecutor's written notice. The notice must be made at least 3 days prior to the date of the preliminary hearing or trial date on which the testimony of the minor is scheduled. Alternatively, the court may make the order on its own motion during the course of the proceeding. (P.C. 1347(b).)

(2) Necessary Findings by Court. The order may be made if the court makes all of the following findings:

(a) The minor's testimony will involve reciting facts (1) of an alleged sexual offense committed on or with the minor, or (2) that show that the minor is a victim of a violent felony, as defined in P.C. 667.5(c). (P.C. 1347(b)(1); on P.C. 667.5(c), see 3 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Punishment, §336.) Beginning January 1, 2001, the minor's testimony must involve reciting facts of an alleged sexual offense committed on or with the minor. The second part of P.C. 1347(b)(1) will no longer be operative.

(b) The impact on the minor of one or more of the following factors is shown by clear and convincing evidence to be so substantial that the minor would be "unavailable as a witness" unless closed-circuit television is used:

(1) Threats of serious bodily injury to be inflicted on the minor or a family member, of incarceration or deportation of the minor or a family member, or of removal of the minor from the family or dissolution of the family, in order to dissuade the minor from attending or giving testimony, or to prevent the minor from reporting the alleged sexual offense or from assisting in a criminal prosecution. (P.C. 1347(b)(2)(A).)

(2) Use of a firearm or another deadly weapon during the commission of the crime. (P.C. 1347(b)(2)(B).)

(3) Infliction of great bodily injury on the victim during the commission of the crime. (P.C. 1347(b)(2)(C).)

(4) Conduct on the part of the defendant or defense counsel during the hearing or trial that causes the minor to be unable to continue his or her testimony. (P.C. 1347(b)(2)(D).)

(c) The closed-circuit television equipment available would accurately communicate the minor's image and demeanor to the judge, jury, defendant, and attorneys. (P.C. 1347(b)(3).)

(3) Matters To Be Considered by Court. When determining whether to order televised testimony, the court must consider (a) the age of the minor, (b) the relationship between the minor and the defendant or defendants, (c) any handicap or disability of the minor, and (d) the nature of the acts charged. The minor's refusal to testify will not alone constitute sufficient evidence that televised testimony is necessary. (P.C. 1347(b).)

(4) Hearing. The hearing on the motion must be conducted out of the presence of the jury. (P.C. 1347(d)(1).) In determining the merits of the motion, the court may neither compel the minor to testify at the hearing, nor deny the motion on the ground that the minor has not testified. (P.C. 1347(d)(2).)

(5) Procedure for Determining Impact of Factors. In determining whether the impact on the minor of one or more of the four factors set forth above (see P.C. 1347(b)(2)(A)-(b)(2)(D), supra) is so substantial that the minor is unavailable as a witness unless closed-circuit television is used, the procedure, set forth in P.C. 1347(d)(3), is as follows:

(a) The court may question the minor in chambers, or at some other "comfortable place" other than the courtroom, on the record for a reasonable period of time with the support person, the prosecutor, and defense counsel present.

(b) The defendant must not be present.

(c) The court must conduct the questioning of the minor and must not permit the prosecutor or defense counsel to examine the minor. The prosecutor and defense counsel must be permitted, however, to submit proposed questions to the court before the session in chambers.

(d) Defense counsel must be afforded a reasonable opportunity to consult with the defendant before the session in chambers concludes.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Necessary Findings by Court.

(a) Recitation of facts: Under P.C. 1347(b)(1), as amended in 2001, 2002, and 2005, the minor's testimony must involve recitation of any of the following: (1) an alleged sexual offense committed on or with the minor; (2) an alleged violent felony, as defined in P.C. 667.5(c), of which the minor is a victim; (3) an alleged felony offense specified in P.C. 273a or P.C. 273d of which the minor is a victim. (b) Impact on minor: Under P.C. 1347(b)(2), as amended in 2005, the factors showing impact on the minor are:

(1) Testimony by the minor in the presence of the defendant would result in the minor suffering serious emotional distress so that the minor would be unavailable as a witness. (P.C. 1347(b)(2)(A).)

(2) The defendant used a deadly weapon in the commission of the offense. (P.C. 1347(b)(2)(B).)

(3) The defendant threatened serious bodily injury to the minor or the minor's family, threatened incarceration or deportation of the minor or a family member, threatened removal of the minor from the minor's family, or threatened the dissolution of the minor's family, in order to prevent or dissuade the minor from attending or giving testimony, or to prevent the minor from reporting the alleged sexual offense, or from assisting in criminal prosecution. (P.C. 1347(b)(2)(C).)

(4) The defendant inflicted great bodily injury on the minor in the commission of the offense. (P.C. 1347(b)(2)(D).)

(5) The defendant or his or her counsel behaved during the hearing or trial in a way that caused the minor to be unable to continue his or her testimony. (P.C. 1347(b)(2)(E).)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

IX. DIRECT EXAMINATION: SPECIAL PROBLEMS

E. Examination of Minor Witness.

1. Criminal Cases.

d. Televised Testimony.

2. Statutory Authorization.

cc. Taking of Testimony.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 219

[§ 219] Taking of Testimony.

P.C. 1347 outlines the procedure to be followed when the motion is granted and the court orders the testimony of the minor to be taken in another place outside of the courtroom.

(1) Court's Statement of Reasons. The court must make a brief statement on the record, outside of the presence of the jury, of the reasons supporting its order. Although the statement need not include traditional findings of fact, the reasons must be specified sufficiently to permit meaningful review and to demonstrate that discretion was exercised in a careful, reasonable, and equitable manner. (P.C. 1347(e)(1).)

(2) Chambers Meeting Before Taking Testimony. The minor must come to the judge's chambers before the taking of his or her testimony to meet for a reasonable period of time with the judge, the prosecutor, and defense counsel. A support person for the minor (see P.C. 868.5, supra, §213) must also be present. The purpose of the meeting is to explain the court process to the minor and to allow the attorneys an opportunity to establish rapport with the minor to facilitate later questioning by closed-circuit television. The participants must not discuss the defendant or any of the facts of the case with the minor during this meeting. (P.C. 1347(g).)

(3) Minor in Courtroom for Identification. The court may order the minor to be brought into the courtroom for a limited purpose, including the identification of the defendant, as the court deems necessary. (P.C. 1347(h).)

(4) One-Way or Two-Way Circuit. If the court orders the use of closed-circuit television, two-way closed-circuit television will be used. However, if the impact on the minor of one or more of the factors enumerated in P.C. 1347(b)(2)(A)-(b)(2)(D) (see supra, §218) is shown by clear and convincing evidence to be so substantial as to make the minor unavailable as a witness even if two-way closed-circuit television is used, then one-way closed-circuit television may be used. The prosecution must give the defendant at least 30 days' written notice of its intent to seek the use of one-way television or show that good cause justifies otherwise. (P.C. 1347(c), applicable only to offenses alleged to have been committed on or after January 1, 1992 (see Stats. 1991, Chap. 948, §2).)

(5) Examination. The examination must be under oath, and the defendant must be able to see and hear the minor witness. If two-way closed-circuit television is used, the defendant's image must be transmitted live to the witness. (P.C. 1347(i).)

(6) Persons Who May Be Present. Only the minor, a support person, a nonuniformed bailiff, and, after consultation with the prosecution and the defense, a representative appointed by the court, may be physically present for the testimony. One videotape will record the minor's image and testimony, and a separate videotape will record the support person's image. (P.C. 1347(f).)

(7) Instructions to Jury, Counsel, and Support Person. The court must instruct the jurors that they are to draw no inferences from the use of the closed-circuit television as a means of facilitating the minor's testimony. (P.C. 1347(e)(2).) The court must instruct respective counsel, outside the jury's presence, that they are not to comment during the trial on the use of closed-circuit television procedures. (P.C. 1347(e)(3).) The court must instruct the support person, outside the jury's presence, that he or she is not to coach, cue, or attempt to influence the minor's testimony. (P.C. 1347(e)(4).)

(8) Record of Examination. The court must order that a complete record of the minor's examination, including the images and voices of everyone who participates in the examination, be made and preserved on video tape in addition to being stenographically recorded. The videotape must be transmitted to the clerk of the court, and must be made available for viewing to the prosecutor, the defendant, and the defendant's attorney during ordinary business hours. The videotape must be destroyed 5 years after the date of entry of judgment; but if an appeal is filed, it must not be destroyed until final judgment on appeal. The videotape is subject to a protective order of the court for the purpose of protecting the witness' privacy. (P.C. 1347(e)(5).) P.C. 1347(e)(5) does not affect P.C. 868.7(b), providing for exclusion of the public during testimony of a minor at a preliminary hearing (see 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Pretrial Proceedings, §137).

(9) Disqualification of Witnesses. Nothing in P.C. 1347 affects the disqualification of witnesses under Ev.C. 701. (P.C. 1347(j); on Ev.C. 701, see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §41.)

(10) Cost of Examination. The court must bear the cost of examination by contemporaneous closed-circuit television out of its existing budget. (P.C. 1347(k).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(6) Persons Who May Be Present. P.C. 1347(f) was amended in 2005 to add "any technicians necessary to operate the closed-circuit equipment" to those who may be present.

(11) (New) Representation of Defendant During Testimony. "Nothing in this section shall be construed to prohibit a defendant from being represented by counsel during any closed-circuit testimony." (P.C. 1347(l), added in 2005.)

IX. DIRECT EXAMINATION: SPECIAL PROBLEMS

E. Examination of Minor Witness.

2. Child Custody Termination and Dependency Proceedings.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 220

[§ 220] Child Custody Termination and Dependency Proceedings.

A minor's testimony may be taken in chambers in two kinds of proceedings involving improper parental custody. (See 17 Pacific L. J. 753.)

(1) Proceeding To Declare Child Under 18 Free From Parental Custody. (Family C. 7892, 10 Summary (9th), Parent and Child, §181 et seq.) The child's testimony may be taken in chambers and outside the presence of the child's parent or guardian if the child's parent or guardian is represented by counsel, the counsel is present, and any of the following circumstances exist:

(a) The court determines that testimony in chambers is necessary to ensure truthful testimony. (Family C. 7892(a)(1), (b).)

(b) The child is likely to be intimidated by a formal courtroom setting. (Family C. 7892(a)(2), (b).)

(c) The child is afraid to testify in front of the child's parent or guardian. (Family C. 7892(a)(3), (b).)

A finding under Family C. 7892 must be supported by clear and convincing evidence. (Family C. 7892(c).) (See In re Amber D. (1991) 235 C.A.3d 718, 722, 286 C.R. 751 [court is not required to hear testimony to make determination regarding necessity of in-chambers testimony; construing language of former C.C. 232(b), predecessor to Family C. 7892].)

After testimony in chambers, the parent or parents of the child may elect to have the court reporter read back the testimony or have the testimony summarized by counsel for the parent or parents. (Family C. 7892(d).)

(2) Juvenile Court Dependency Proceeding. (Welf.C. 350(b), 10 Summary (9th), Parent and Child, §665 et seq.) Welf.C. 350(b) contains essentially the same provision on testimony in chambers as Family C. 7892. (See In re Mary S. (1986) 186 C.A.3d 414, 422, 230 C.R. 726.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

IX. DIRECT EXAMINATION: SPECIAL PROBLEMS

F. Other Special Circumstances for Examining Witnesses.

1. Adult Prosecuting Witness in Case Involving Sex Crime.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 221

[§ 221] Adult Prosecuting Witness in Case Involving Sex Crime.

An adult prosecuting witness in cases involving certain sexual offenses is entitled to have support persons in attendance under the same conditions as a child prosecuting witness in those cases (see supra, §213). (P.C. 868.5.)

In People v. Patten (1992) 9 C.A.4th 1718, 12 C.R.2d 284, defendant was charged with rape and oral copulation. Under P.C. 868.5, Kathy, the adult victim, was allowed to have two support persons with her as she testified, one of whom was her sister Karen, who was also a prosecution witness. Karen testified before Kathy did. Defendant, who was convicted of both charges, contended that P.C. 868.5 is inherently prejudicial. Held, judgment affirmed.

(a) Statute not inherently prejudicial.

(1) Defendant argued that a case-specific showing that support persons serve an essential state interest is necessary because their presence encroaches upon the fundamental right to a fair trial by clothing the victim in a "mantle of veracity," and by informing the jury that the victim is so emotionally shattered that she cannot testify without assistance. This argument is without merit. (9 C.A.4th 1725.)

(2) In analyzing statutes that provide for the exclusion of the press and public when a minor victim of specified sex crimes testifies or that allow minor victims to testify via closed-circuit television or behind a screen, the United States Supreme Court held that the mere use of those procedures violated a constitutional right, hence, required a case-specific finding of necessity based on the victim's need for special protection. (9 C.A.4th 1726, citing Globe Newspaper Co. v. Superior Court (1982) 457 U.S. 596, 102 S.Ct. 2613, 73 L.Ed.2d 248, 7 Summary (9th), Constitutional Law, §299, Coy v. Iowa (1988) 487 U.S. 1012, 108 S.Ct. 2798, 101 L.Ed.2d 857, supra, §16, and Maryland v. Craig (1990) 497 U.S. 836, 110 S.Ct. 3157, 111 L.Ed.2d 666, supra, §17.)

(3) However, the fact that P.C. 868.5 does not require a case-specific showing of necessity does not make it unconstitutional per se. "The statute clearly encompasses circumstances when the support persons are present in the audience section of the courtroom and without having any particular attention drawn to them. Such a procedure would result in minimal, if any, influence on a jury and would not rise to a level of possible infringement on the constitutional guarantee of due process." (9 C.A.4th 1727.) Hence, "[t]he utilization of support persons is not by itself a practice that presents an unacceptable risk that impermissible factors will come into play which might erode the presumption of innocence." (9 C.A.4th 1733.)

(b) Factors influencing right to fair trial. Where the actual procedures employed in the use of a support person might unfairly influence the jury's determination of credibility, the trial judge should explore, on the record, both the necessity of the procedure and the viability of alternatives. (9 C.A.4th 1733.) The factors that affect fairness include the following:

(1) The relationship of the support person to the victim. An unrelated person is likely to be viewed by the jury as vouching for the victim's veracity, while a relative is likely to be viewed as merely providing support. Here, the jury was aware from Karen's testimony that she believed her sister's version of the events. Hence, any possible influence on the jury resulting from her presence as a support person was minimal. (9 C.A.4th 1731.)

(2) The location of the support person in relation to the victim. The closer the support person is located to the victim the higher the risk that the jury might be influenced. And the risk is especially high if the person has actual physical contact with the victim. However, the younger that the victim is the more likely that the jury would understand the need for a support person under any circumstances. (9 C.A.4th 1732.)

(3) Whether the support person does anything, such as crying, nodding the head, or hand motions, that might influence the victim or the jury. (9 C.A.4th 1732.)

(4) The nature of the defense. The credibility of the victim is more important, for example, where the defense is consent rather than alibi. And, as a tactical matter, the defendant may want the jury to view the victim as an emotionally unstable individual who needs to rely on a support person. (9 C.A.4th 1732.)

(5) Whether the trial judge has given a warning concerning the presence of a support person. If the presence is clearly known to the jury, the trial judge might admonish the jury to disregard it as a collateral matter unrelated to guilt or innocence. However, admonishment might not be desirable if it would draw undue attention to the presence of an otherwise unobtrusive support person. (9 C.A.4th 1732.)

(c) No showing of unacceptable risk. Without a record detailing how the procedure was actually carried out, it is impossible to identify particular factors demonstrating that the jury may have been unfairly influenced by the presence of support persons. Here, the record was devoid of any information regarding the utilization of the support persons, other than that they were identified, their presence was requested by Kathy, and Karen testified before Kathy. Defendant presented no facts that this practice posed an unacceptable risk or that the trial judge should have required a showing of necessity for the procedure. (9 C.A.4th 1733.) Nor did he present any facts supporting a finding that Karen posed a substantial risk of influencing or affecting the content of Kathy's testimony, or in fact did so. (9 C.A.4th 1728.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

IX. DIRECT EXAMINATION: SPECIAL PROBLEMS F. Other Special Circumstances for Examining Witnesses.

2. Examination of Disabled Person. a. In General.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 222

[§ 222] In General.

(1) Rule. Courts may make reasonable accommodations for disabled persons who have been the victims of sexual or other specified offenses in order to ensure that they are able to participate effectively in criminal proceedings. (P.C. 1347.5(a).) The applicable criminal proceedings are those in which the defendant is charged with violating P.C. 220, 243.4, 261, 261.5, 264.1, 273a, 273d, 285, 286, 288, 288a, 288.5, 289, 314(1), 647.6, or with an attempt to violate one of those statutes, and the alleged victim is a person with a disability. (P.C. 1347.5(b).)

(2) Disability Defined. For purposes of P.C. 1347.5, "disability" has the same meaning as in Govt.C. 11135(c)(1), (c)(2), i.e., the person has a physical or mental impairment that substantially limits one or more of the person's major life activities, or has a record of such an impairment. (P.C. 1347.5(a)(1).)

(3) Accommodations. The accommodations a court may make include but are not limited to:

(a) Allowing the person reasonable periods of relief from examination and cross-examination, during which the person may retire from the courtroom. (P.C. 1347.5(b)(1).)

(b) Allowing the person to use a support person, a regional center representative providing services to developmentally disabled individuals, or another person necessary to facilitate the communication or physical needs of developmentally disabled individuals. (P.C. 1347.5(b)(2).)

(c) Removal by the judge of his or her robe if the judge believes this formal attire prevents full participation of the person with a disability because it is intimidating to the person. (P.C. 1347.5(b)(3).)

(d) Relocation within the courtroom of the judge, parties, witnesses, support persons, and court personnel to facilitate a more comfortable and personal environment, as well as accommodating any specific requirements for communication by the disabled person. (P.C. 1347.5(b)(4).)

(4) Videotaping. The prosecutor may apply for an order that the disabled person's testimony at the preliminary hearing, in addition to being stenographically recorded, be recorded and preserved on videotape. The application must be in writing and made 3 days before the hearing. If the application is timely received, the judge must order the testimony to be videotaped, and the videotape must be transmitted to the court clerk. (P.C. 1347.5(c)(1), (c)(2).)

At the time of trial, the videotape may be admitted as former testimony under Ev.C. 1291, if the court finds that further testimony would cause the disabled person emotional trauma so that he or she is medically unavailable or otherwise unavailable within the meaning of Ev.C. 240. (P.C. 1347.5(c)(3).)

The videotape is subject to a protective order for the purpose of protecting the disabled person's privacy. P.C. 1347.5(c) does not affect the provisions of P.C. 868.7(b), requiring the availability to the public of the transcript of a witness' testimony taken in a proceeding in which public access was restricted during the witness' examination. (P.C. 1347.5(c)(4).)

(5) Contemporaneous Viewing of Testimony. Examination of the disabled person must be under oath, and the defendant must be able to see and hear the disabled person. If two-way closed-circuit television is used (see infra, §223), the defendant's image must be transmitted live to the disabled person. (P.C. 1347.5(h).)

(6) Traditional Grounds for Disqualifying Witness Retained. The statute is not intended to affect the disqualification of witnesses for incompetence under Ev.C. 701. (P.C. 1347.5(i); on Ev.C. 701, see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §41.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Rule. P.C. 868.8 (Supp., supra, §212) was amended in 2001 to make the protections of that statute applicable to disabled as well as minor witnesses.

P.C. 1347.5(b) was amended in 2004 to add criminal proceedings under P.C. 368 (crimes against elder or dependent adults).

(2) Disability Defined. Govt.C. 11135(c), as amended in 2001, no longer directly defines "disability" but adopts the definition contained in Govt.C. 12926. (See 8 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §§916, 936.)

(3) Accommodations. P.C. 868.8 (Supp., supra, §212) was amended to make the protections of that statute applicable to disabled as well as minor witnesses.

(b) Allowing use of support person: P.C. 1347.5(b)(2) was amended to substitute "physical needs of the person with a disability" for "physical needs of developmentally disabled individuals."

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

IX. DIRECT EXAMINATION: SPECIAL PROBLEMS

F. Other Special Circumstances for Examining Witnesses.

2. Examination of Disabled Person.

b. Testimony by Closed-Circuit Television.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 223

[§ 223] Testimony by Closed-Circuit Television.

(1) In General. On written notice by the prosecutor at least 3 days before the date of the preliminary hearing or trial date on which the testimony of the disabled person is scheduled, or during the course of the proceeding on the court's own motion, the court may order that the disabled person's testimony be taken by "contemporaneous examination and cross-examination in another place and out of the presence of the judge, jury, and defendant, and communicated to the courtroom by means of two-way closed-circuit television." (P.C. 1347.5(d).)

(2) Findings. The court's order must be based on the following findings:

(a) The disabled person will be called on to testify as to facts concerning an alleged sexual offense, or other crime specified in P.C. 1347.5(b) (supra, §222), committed on or against the disabled person. (P.C. 1347.5(d)(1).)

(b) The impact on the disabled person of one or more of the factors enumerated, infra, this section, is shown by clear and convincing evidence to be so substantial as to make the person unavailable as a witness unless closed-circuit television is used. The disabled person's refusal to testify does not by itself constitute sufficient evidence that the closed-circuit television procedure is necessary, but the court may take into account the relationship between the disabled person and the defendant or defendants. (P.C. 1347.5(d)(2).)

(3) Basis for Finding of Impact. Under P.C. 1347.5(d)(2), the following factors may be relied on for a finding that the impact of testifying without the closed-circuit television procedure will render the disabled person unavailable as a witness:

(a) Threats of serious bodily injury to be inflicted on the disabled person or a family member, of incarceration, institutionalization, or deportation of the disabled person or a family member, or of removal of the disabled person from his or her residence by withholding needed services when the threats come from a service provider, in order to prevent or dissuade the disabled person from attending or giving testimony at any trial or court proceeding or to prevent the person from reporting the alleged offense or from assisting in criminal prosecution.

(b) Use of a firearm or any other deadly weapon during commission of the crime.

(c) Infliction of great bodily injury on the disabled person during commission of the crime.

(d) Conduct by the defendant or defense counsel during the hearing or trial that causes the disabled person to be unable to continue his or her testimony.

(4) Hearing. The hearing on the motion must be conducted out of the jury's presence, and the disabled person may not be compelled to testify, nor may his or her refusal to testify be used to justify denial of the motion. In determining the question of impact (see P.C. 1347.5(d)(2), supra), the judge may question the disabled person in chambers or some other comfortable place, on the record and for a reasonable period of time, with the prosecutor, defense counsel, and support person (as allowed under P.C. 1347.5(b)(2), supra, §222) present. The defendant may not be present, but must be given the opportunity to observe the proceedings by closed-circuit television, and defense counsel must be given an opportunity to consult with the defendant prior to the conclusion of the session in chambers. During the hearing, the judge must explain the process to the disabled person. (P.C. 1347.5(e).)

(5) Steps Required Where Application Approved. Where the court approves use of the closed-circuit television procedure, it must do all of the following (P.C. 1347.5(f)):

(a) Make a brief statement, on the record and outside the jury's presence, of the reasons supporting the order. The reasons must be "set forth with sufficient specificity to permit meaningful review and to demonstrate that discretion was exercised in a careful, reasonable, and equitable manner."

(b) Instruct the jurors that "they are to draw no inferences from the use of closed-circuit television as a means of assuring the full participation of the victim who is a person with a disability by accommodating that individual's disability."

(c) Instruct counsel, outside of the jury's presence, that they may make no comment during the trial on the use of closed-circuit television procedures.

(d) Instruct any support person that he or she may not coach, cue, or in any way influence or attempt to influence the testimony of the disabled person.

(e) Order that the examination be videotaped. The videotape must be transmitted to the court clerk and made available for viewing to counsel and the defendant. It must be destroyed after 5 years have elapsed from the date of entry of judgment, but, if an appeal is taken, not until the final judgment on appeal is ordered.

(6) Disabled Person's Appearance in Court. Even where the application for closed-circuit television testimony is approved, the judge may order the disabled person to appear in court for limited purposes, including identification of the defendant. (P.C. 1347.5(g).)

(7) Cost of Examination. The cost of examination by closed-circuit television is to be borne by the court out of its existing budget. (P.C. 1347.5(j).)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

X. CROSS-EXAMINATION

A. In General.

1. Nature and Purposes.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 224

[§ 224] Nature and Purposes.

(1) Nature. Cross-examination is "the examination of a witness by a party other than the direct examiner upon a matter that is within the scope of the direct examination of the witness." (Ev.C. 761.) And "each other party" may cross-examine "in such order as the court directs." (Ev.C. 773.) (On use of leading questions, see supra, §166.)

(2) Dual Purposes. The chief purpose of cross-examination is to test the credibility, knowledge and recollection of the witness. (Sharp v. Hoffman (1889) 79 C. 404, 408, 21 P. 846; Razzo v. Varni (1889) 81 C. 289, 292, 22 P. 848 ["to sift, explain, or modify what has been said on the examination in chief, and to discredit the witness"]; Neal v. Neal (1881) 58 C. 287, 288; People v. Guthreau (1980) 102 C.A.3d 436, 445, 162 C.R. 376 [testing credibility of witness]; see infra, §238 et seq.)

The other purpose is to elicit additional evidence. In People v. Whitehead (1952) 113 C.A.2d 43, 48, 247 P.2d 717, the court said, quoting 5 Wigmore, §1368 (now 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1368): "The remaining and qualifying circumstances of the subject of testimony will probably remain suppressed or undisclosed, not merely because the witness frequently is a partisan, but also and chiefly because his testimony is commonly given only by way of answers to specific interrogatories ... and the counsel producing him will usually ask for nothing but the facts favorable to his party. If nothing more were done to unveil all the facts known to this witness, his testimony (for all that we could surmise) might present half-truths only. Someone must probe for the possible (and usual) remainder. The best person to do this is the one most vitally interested, namely, the opponent. Cross-examination, then, i.e., further examination by the opponent, has for its first utility the extraction of the remaining qualifying circumstances, if any, known to the witness, but hitherto undisclosed by him." (See generally 1 McCormick 5th, §19 et seq.; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1367 et seq.; C.E.B., 1 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §11.82 et seq.; C.E.B., Effective Direct and Cross-Examination, Chap. 5; Rutter Group, 2 Civil Trials and Evidence §10:90 et seq.; 25 U.C.L.A. L. 3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 225

[§ 225] Civil Cases.

The right of cross-examination is fundamental, and its denial or undue restriction is frequently held to be reversible error. (See Jackson v. Feather River & Gibsonville Water Co. (1859) 14 C. 18, 23; Estate of Kasson (1900) 127 C. 496, 505, 59 P. 950 [in heirship proceeding, with several parties, each has independent right of cross-examination of any witness]; Estate of Lagersen (1959) 169 C.A.2d 359, 364, 337 P.2d 102 [undue restriction held serious error though not reversible under circumstances]; Graham v. Graham (1959) 174 C.A.2d 678, 686, 345 P.2d 316 [same; proceeding by husband to modify alimony and child support award, judge made order without allowing wife's attorney to cross-examine husband on needs of himself and his new wife]; McCarthy v. Mobile Cranes (1962) 199 C.A.2d 500, 506, 509, 18 C.R. 750 [reversible error per se]; Mueller v. J. C. Penney Co. (1985) 173 C.A.3d 713, 722, 219 C.R. 272 [husband was improperly denied right to cross-examination in action for loss of consortium, which had been consolidated with wife's action for assault and battery; however, error was harmless in unique circumstances of case]; 1 McCormick 5th, §19; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§1367, 1397; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §802 et seq.; for similar rule in administrative proceedings, see 1 Cal. In *McCarthy v. ##### a. Denial or Restriction by Court.

2. Criminal Cases.

aa. In General.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 226

[§ 226] In General.

The right of cross-examination is particularly important in criminal cases, for it is considered implicit in the constitutional right of confrontation (supra, §14 et seq.). (See Alford v. United States (1931) 282 U.S. 687, 51 S.Ct. 218, 219, 75 L.Ed. 624, 627; Douglas v. Alabama (1965) 380 U.S. 415, 85 S.Ct. 1074, 1076, 13 L.Ed.2d 934, 957, 5 Cal. Crim. Mississippi* (1973) 410 U.S. 284, 93 S.Ct. 1038, 1045, 35 L.Ed.2d 297, 308 [trial court improperly restricted defendant's cross-examination of witness who had previously confessed to charged crime but repudiated confession on stand]; People v. Manchetti (1946) 29 C.2d 452, 461, 175 P.2d 533, infra, §229; People v. Murphy (1963) 59 C.2d 818, 831, 31 C.R. 306, 382 P.2d 346 [impeachment of prosecuting witness]; People v. Sadow (1933) 133 C.A. 559, 565, 24 P.2d 521; People v. Flores (1936) 15 C.A.2d 385, 401, 59 P.2d 517 [not a matter of privilege but of absolute right]; People v. Hume (1942) 56 C.A.2d 262, 267, 132 P.2d 52; People v. Whitehead (1952) 113 C.A.2d 43, 48, 247 P.2d 717; People v. Spinosa (1953) 115 C.A.2d 659, 664, 252 P.2d 409; People v. Redwine (1958) 166 C.A.2d 371, 377, 333 P.2d 188; People v. Scholl (1964) 225 C.A.2d 558, 564, 37 C.R. 475; In re Anthony P. (1985) 167 C.A.3d 502, 507, 213 C.R. 424, infra, §278, citing the text; People v. Ducu (1991) 226 C.A.3d 1412, 1414, 277 C.R. 464, infra, §230; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §803.)

In People v. Redwine, supra, defendant was charged with deadly assault on his stepdaughter J (Count 1) and his wife (Count 2). He waived a jury trial, stipulating that the preliminary examination transcript could be introduced, but reserved the right to further cross-examine J. J, though ordered to attend and once arrested for failure to do so, was absent again at the trial, and defendant sought to be relieved of his waiver. Held, denial was reversible error, and his conviction on Count 2 could not stand. The charge grew out of an altercation involving both his wife and J, and J was a prosecution witness at the preliminary; hence, he had an absolute right to cross-examine her further, and the lower court's order striking her testimony and finding defendant not guilty on Count 1 did not cure the fundamental error. (166 C.A.2d 375.)

In People v. Scholl, supra, defendant, charged with sex offenses (P.C. 288, 288a) against an 8-year-old girl, sought to cross-examine the child's mother by asking if she had complained of advances made to her by various men. Held, refusal was reversible error. Other false accusations of the prosecutrix may be shown (infra, §242), and the mother of an alleged child victim is "a second prosecutrix." Her concern for the child may take an aggravated form; and, if abnormally oriented toward sexual conduct, she may implant ideas in the child's mind. Hence:

"For the same reasons that require a broad freedom of exploration of the child's propensities to fabricate or to imagine sexual crimes, we think a defendant should be allowed to explore, within reasonable range, the possibility of similar propensities or motivation on the part of the adult from and through whom the charge to authority emanates in alleged crimes of this nature." (225 C.A.2d 564.)

"Reasonable latitude in cross-examination is likewise indicated in a case, such as here, where four witnesses, none of whom was acquainted with defendant, testified that the reputation of the mother for truthfulness was not good. In such instances, the possibilities of fabrication are enormous and the resulting detriment to the accused is irreparable." (225 C.A.2d 564.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

In People v. Foss (2007) 155 C.A.4th 113, 65 C.R.3d 790, a child molestation case, the defense moved for permission to cross-examine a witness, the victim's stepmother, on her possible morbid fear of sexual matters, which, the defense asserted, may have caused her to influence the victim to make her claims that defendant molested her. The trial judge denied the motion, and defendant was convicted. Held, affirmed; the motion was properly denied. "Just as the testimony of victims of sexual crimes is no longer deemed inherently suspect, we conclude the testimony of a noncomplaining witness in a sex crime case who may have been a victim herself of unwanted sexual attention or advances, likewise should not be inherently distrusted." (155 C.A.4th 128.) People v. Scholl (1964) 225 C.A.2d 558, 37 C.R. 475, text, p. 294, which held to the contrary, does not accurately reflect current law and should not be followed. First, the Scholl court made no attempt to apply the appropriate standard of review, which was abuse of discretion. Second, the Scholl court apparently failed to require an offer of proof from the defense. "And third, the assumptions and reasoning underlying the Scholl court's conclusion are no longer valid because they are outdated and have been disproved." (155 C.A.4th 124.)

a. Denial or Restriction by Court.

2. Criminal Cases.

bb. Where Foreign Language Involved.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 227

[§ 227] Where Foreign Language Involved.

In People v. Gutierrez (1982) 137 C.A.3d 542, 187 C.R. 130, defendant was charged with forcible rape. Police officer C, fluent in English and Spanish, had made the arrest, advised defendant of his rights in Spanish, and, after defendant's waiver, taken his oral confession. On the stand, C testified that defendant stated that he took the prosecutrix "forcibly" from her apartment. Counsel for defendant then sought to cross-examine on the Spanish words used by defendant. The trial judge, pointing out that the court reporter would be unable to take down the foreign words, refused to permit any question calling for a response in Spanish. Held, conviction reversed; the ruling was reversible error.

(a) The burden on the court reporter did not warrant the blanket ruling. The parties could have stipulated that the bilingual witness or the interpreter write out the answer for insertion in the reporter's transcript at a later time, or the reporter could report the answer phonetically. And if this case were free of the dual language problem, clearly counsel would have been entitled to ask about the inculpatory words actually used by the defendant. (137 C.A.3d 546.)

(b) The limitation on the right of cross-examination was prejudicial: A substantially different connotation could have been drawn by the jury, and defendant said that he was only trying to force his affections on the prosecutrix (instead of physically forcing himself on her). (137 C.A.3d 547.)

A concurring justice, citing Wigmore and other authorities, stated the established rule that, where the gist of the case involves uttering of words in a foreign language, it may be necessary to have the actual words repeated in court in the language in which they were spoken. (137 C.A.3d 549.) A dissenting justice contended that no impairment of the right of cross-examination occurred, for defendant made no effort to show by his testimony or that of an interpreter that there was a different meaning for the word: "His own testimony was that he never told the officer he used 'force' against [the prosecutrix]. The issue was clearly not one of different interpretations of the word [defendant] used but, rather, whether he said it at all. The argument there are two meanings is clearly a smoke screen." (137 C.A.3d 553.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

X. CROSS-EXAMINATION

A. In General.

2. Effects of Denial or Undue Restriction.

b. Refusal or Failure of Witness To Answer.

1. Refusal.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 228

[§ 228] Refusal.

(1) Direct Testimony Struck. In either a civil or criminal case, where a party is deprived of the benefits of cross-examination of a witness by refusal of the witness to answer, the trial court may strike out the direct examination. (People v. Price (1991) 1 C.4th 324, 421, 3 C.R.2d 106, 821 P.2d 610 [trial court properly concluded that witness' unwillingness to reveal names of persons whose statements formed basis of opinions witness proposed to give on direct examination would so impair effective cross-examination that testimony should not be admitted]; see People v. McGowan (1926) 80 C.A. 293, 297, 251 P. 643 [defendant, on direct examination, testified that on night of crime, he took woman home (alibi), but refused to give her name and address]; 1 McCormick 5th, §19; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1391; 35 Cal. L. Rev. 299; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §804; 4 A.L.R.3d 545.)

The rule is also applied where the refusal to answer is based on a valid claim of privilege. (See People v. King (1932) 122 C.A. 50, 53, 10 P.2d 89 [dictum; police officer testified to identification of stolen car by secret motor number in hidden place on body, but refused to divulge location, claiming official privilege]; People v. Barthel (1965) 231 C.A.2d 827, 834, 42 C.R. 290 [witness claimed privilege against self-incrimination]; but cf. People v. Parham (1963) 60 C.2d 378, 381, 33 C.R. 497, 384 P.2d 1001, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §70 [inability of prosecution to produce privileged F.B.I. reports containing statements of witnesses; motion to strike their testimony properly denied].)

Striking the testimony is the appropriate remedy in most cases; a mistrial will not be granted unless incurable prejudice is shown. (See People v. Woodberry (1970) 10 C.A.3d 695, 708, 89 C.R. 330; Gallaher v. Superior Court (1980) 103 C.A.3d 666, 673, 162 C.R. 389, citing the text.)

(2) Trial Court's Discretion To Let Direct Testimony Remain. The refusal to answer some questions may not be as seriously prejudicial as a total refusal to submit to cross-examination, and the judge has discretion to let the direct examination stand where the unanswered question was relatively unimportant. (See People v. Robinson (1961) 196 C.A.2d 384, 390, 16 C.R. 484; People v. Abner (1962) 209 C.A.2d 484, 490, 25 C.R. 882.)

In People v. Reynolds (1984) 152 C.A.3d 42, 199 C.R. 379, defendant, charged with attempted escape from jail, denied intent to escape, and testified that he broke the window glass in his room in order to smuggle drugs into the jail after having been pressured to do so by four other inmates who had threatened physical injury. The prosecutor asked the names of these inmates, and defendant refused to disclose them "for the reason I'm going to prison and I will have a snitch jacket on me." Defense counsel suggested that a partial striking of that part of defendant's testimony would be appropriate, but the judge, after admonishing defendant, struck all of his testimony. Held, the ruling was not an abuse of discretion.

(a) The right of a defendant to testify in his own defense is fundamental (see supra, §11); and, in addition, the jurors are entitled to have the benefit of the defense theory before them. Here, defendant's claim of smuggling drugs was not inherently improbable, and his motive in refusing to answer for fear of retaliation was not baseless. (152 C.A.3d 46.)

(b) However, there is no legal exemption from cross-examination by reason of this fear, and defendant's constitutional right to testify must be considered in light of the right of the prosecution to cross-examine and the authority of the court to strike the testimony where such cross-examination is prevented. (152 C.A.3d 46, 47, citing People v. McGowan, supra.) Here, in view of the short period of time involved in the events, partial striking that would allow effective cross-examination would be extremely difficult. (152 C.A.3d 47.)

(c) In view of the effect of such a ruling on the fundamental right of the defendant, the following recommendations are offered to the trial judge:

(1) A full record should be made establishing the basis for the ruling. (152 C.A.3d 47.)

(2) The less drastic option of partial striking should be considered, as in People v. Robinson, supra. (152 C.A.3d 48.)

(3) Another option is that the defendant's failure to respond to cross-examination may be considered by the jury in evaluating his credibility; e.g., in a federal case where the court held that the prosecutor's continued questioning on matters when he knew that the defendant would refuse to answer was a proper method of impeachment, intended to present to the jury the prosecution's interpretation of his credibility. (152 C.A.3d 48.)

[§ 229] Unavailability of Witness.

The same rule (striking the testimony; supra, §228) is applied, although perhaps more subject to the judge's discretion, where the party is deprived of the opportunity for cross-examination by death or illness of the witness after the direct examination. (See 1 McCormick 5th, §19; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1390; 35 Cal. L. Rev. 299; see also *Gallaher v. In People v. Manchetti (1946) 29 C.2d 452, 175 P.2d 533, a shell-shocked veteran, a key witness against defendant, was excused with only slight cross-examination by defendant's associate counsel who was relatively unfamiliar with the case. Later, defendant's chief counsel requested permission to recall him for further cross-examination, and, upon refusal of this request, moved that the testimony be stricken. The motion was denied. The Supreme Court criticized this procedure as an abuse of discretion. (29 C.2d 461.) (Cf. Polk v. Polk (1964) 228 C.A.2d 763, 772, 39 C.R. 824 [witness voluntarily left before completion of cross-examination, did not reappear; failure to strike was error, though not prejudicial here].)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

X. CROSS-EXAMINATION

A. In General.

3. Discretion of Judge To Limit.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 230

[§ 230] Discretion of Judge To Limit.

(1) General Theory. To apply the somewhat conflicting notions of the fundamental right to cross-examine (supra, §225 et seq.), the restriction to the scope of the direct (infra, §231 et seq.), and the wide latitude in testing credibility (infra, §238 et seq.) necessarily calls for a large measure of discretion in the trial judge. This is particularly true where incompetent or prejudicial matter is introduced as impeachment under the limited admissibility rule (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §30, and infra, §239). (See generally 1 McCormick 5th, §§24, 29; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §849.)

The theory was stated in East Bay Mun. Util. Dist. v. Kieffer (1929) 99 C.A. 240, 278 P. 476, as follows: "The field of inquiry in cross-examination for the purpose of testing the credibility of a witness and the weight of his testimony is so extensive that the trial court must be given a wide discretion in order to keep such examination within reasonable bounds; otherwise the trial of cases would be overlong. When an appellate court is called upon to decide whether such discretion has been abused, the inquiry is whether a sufficiently wide range has been allowed to test such credibility and weight rather than whether some particular question should have been allowed." (99 C.A. 261.) (See also Roche v. Baldwin (1904) 143 C. 186, 190, 76 P. 956; Tuolumne Water Power Co. v. Frederick (1910) 13 C.A. 498, 505, 110 P. 134; People v. Garcia (1959) 174 C.A.2d 525, 533, 344 P.2d 855, citing the text.)

(2) Limiting to Matters Raised in Case in Chief. The trial judge's discretion should not be "given such elasticity as to permit an adversary party to prove his own case under the guise of cross-examination, by thus propounding questions which are neither directly nor collaterally related to the subject matter of the original examination. The truth sought by a cross-examination must, of course, be in respect of and limited to the material matters to which the witness has testified in chief." (Manuel v. Flynn (1907) 5 C.A. 319, 325, 90 P. 463; see infra, §231 et seq.)

(3) Limiting Repetitive or Collateral Matters. The judge should refuse to permit questioning on time-wasting irrelevant matters, or on matters already fully covered. "[W]hen questions ... are asked of witness after witness, who disclaim any knowledge of the matters, and the questions are continued down to the intimate details of the life of the deceased and his relations with his children and his grandchildren, it becomes manifest that their purpose is not to elicit any facts, but to make weight, to create an atmosphere before the jury." (Estate of Martin (1915) 170 C. 657, 670, 151 P. 138.) (See also Doudell v. Shoo (1912) 20 C.A. 424, 450, 129 P. 478; Dollinger v. San Gabriel Lanes (1962) 205 C.A.2d 705, 710, 23 C.R. 194 [no showing that answers would be material]; Garcia v. Hoffman (1963) 212 C.A.2d 530, 536, 28 C.R. 98 [collateral matters that would tend to confuse]; People v. St. Andrew (1980) 101 C.A.3d 450, 461, 161 C.R. 634 [no examination on collateral matters for purpose of eliciting something to be thereafter contradicted].)

(4) Limiting Dual Representation. In People v. Clemmons (1990) 224 C.A.3d 1500, 274 C.R. 623, defendant was charged with felonies in two informations. Private counsel was retained for defense in the first, and court-appointed counsel represented him in the second. The informations were consolidated for trial, and defendant continued to be represented by separate counsel for each information. After cross-examination of several witnesses by the defense attorney representing defendant on the count to which the witness was testifying, the trial judge announced that only one of the defense attorneys would be permitted to cross-examine a particular prosecution witness; and that, if one attorney wanted to cross-examine a witness where the other attorney was attorney of record, he would have to be associated as counsel in that case. Both counsel and defendant expressed understanding and acquiescence. Held, the procedure did not deprive defendant of his constitutional right to counsel.

(a) "Although he was not afforded dual cross-examination of witnesses, defendant was otherwise afforded the benefit of two skilled attorneys dedicated solely to his cause throughout his trial, a benefit normally reserved for defendants facing a possible death penalty." (224 C.A.3d 1505.)

(b) Neither defendant nor his attorneys objected, and there was no indication that they disagreed with the procedure. (224 C.A.3d 1505.)

(c) "The defense asserted by each counsel on defendant's behalf was identical. Nothing in the record suggests that either counsel had any conflict of interest in representing defendant in both cases. Each prosecution witness was cross-examined by one of the attorneys." (224 C.A.3d 1506.)

(5) Limiting Length. In People v. Ducu (1991) 226 C.A.3d 1412, 277 C.R. 464, a prosecution for sex crimes, the court held that it was within the trial judge's discretion to limit defense counsel's cross-examination of a complaining witness based on time constraints imposed by the witness' need to return to Japan. The witness claimed that delay in her departure would arouse the suspicions of her parents, who were unaware that she had been raped or was testifying against defendant. The judge had placed no limitation on the substance of the cross-examination, only on the time available to defense counsel, who had agreed in advance to the limitation. Hence, any limitation on questioning in particular areas was the result of counsel's choices in conducting the cross-examination. (226 C.A.3d 1415.)

X. CROSS-EXAMINATION

B. To Elicit Facts: Scope of Direct.

1. Restrictive Rule.

a. Nature of Rule.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 231

[§ 231] Nature of Rule.

The common law "wide-open" rule, which survives in England and a few American states, allows cross-examination on any matter relevant to the issues of the case, regardless of whether the matter was raised on the direct examination. This rule has much scholarly support. (See 1 McCormick 5th, §§21, 27; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1885 et seq.)

California, however, follows the federal and majority state rule restricting cross-examination to the scope of the direct examination. (Ev.C. 761, 773(a), supra, §224; see Overstreet v. Merritt (1921) 186 C. 494, 508, 200 P. 11; People v. Price (1991) 1 C.4th 324, 474, 3 C.R.2d 106, 821 P.2d 610 [cross-examination proper]; Wechsler v. Capitol Trailer Sales (1963) 220 C.A.2d 252, 259, 33 C.R. 680, quoting the text; Marshall v. Marshall (1965) 232 C.A.2d 232, 255, 42 C.R. 686; Nienhouse v. Superior Court (1996) 42 C.A.4th 83, 93, 49 C.R.2d 573 [officer called by prosecution did not testify on direct examination as to any conversations with defendant; thus, defendant's inquiry to officer about defendant's hearsay statements was not proper cross-examination]; 1 McCormick 5th, §21; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1885 et seq.; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §818; infra, §232; for application of rule to cross-examination of adverse witness by his or her own counsel, see supra, §207.)

The rule is not inflexible; the judge has discretion to allow the cross-examiner to go outside the scope of the direct. In doing so, however, counsel "interrupts" the cross-examination and is subject to the rule governing direct examination, i.e., no leading questions unless the witness is one who can be examined "as if under cross-examination." (Ev.C. 772(c) and Comment; Ev.C. 760 and Comment; supra, §202 et seq.)

But only the party calling the witness may complain that the cross-examination exceeds its proper limitations. Hence, a codefendant cannot object on that ground to questions asked of the plaintiff's witness when the plaintiff does not object. (Burke v. Dillingham (1927) 84 C.A. 736, 741, 258 P. 627.)

B. To Elicit Facts: Scope of Direct.

1. Restrictive Rule.

b. Illustrations.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 232

[§ 232] Illustrations.

In Haines v. Snedigar (1895) 110 C. 18, 42 P. 462, a suit on a promissory note, defendant set up the affirmative defense of a new contract made in settlement of the obligation. Plaintiff's witness proved the execution of the note and nonpayment. On cross-examination, he was asked about the new contract, and thereupon, its execution was proved and it was admitted in evidence over objection. Held, this was error. Though the court might, as a matter of convenience, permit the defendant to prove the agreement by plaintiff's witness on the stand, it was not proper to admit the agreement in evidence at that time. "It was in effect to inject into the case of the plaintiffs a portion of the defense." (110 C. 21.)

Similarly, in McClung v. Camp (1933) 132 C.A. 55, 22 P.2d 238, plaintiff payee, on the stand, proved a note and nonpayment. Held, defendant was properly prevented from asking whether plaintiff gave value for the note. (132 C.A. 56.)

In Alkus v. Davies (1927) 86 C.A. 355, 361, 260 P. 894, an automobile accident case, plaintiff testified on direct examination as to where she was sitting and how she was injured. On cross-examination, she was questioned as to the speed of the car, and then was asked whether she remembered seeing a car ahead. Held, this was properly excluded; she was called only to prove her injuries. (86 C.A. 361.)

In Smellie v. Southern Pac. Co. (1933) 128 C.A. 567, 18 P.2d 97, plaintiffs called a codefendant as an adverse witness. Defendant company cross-examined, asking whether decedent had used intoxicating liquor that day, a matter not touched upon in direct examination. The purpose of the questioning was to establish the affirmative defense of contributory negligence. Held, this was not legitimate cross-examination. (128 C.A. 573.)

In Wechsler v. Capitol Trailer Sales (1963) 220 C.A.2d 252, 259, 33 C.R. 680, plaintiff agent, alleging wrongful discharge, sued for salary and commissions. On direct examination, he testified to a May 20 meeting and discussion of the discharge with defendant's president. Defendant's counsel then questioned him on various kinds of alleged misconduct during the employment, but prior to the May 20 meeting. Held, objection was properly sustained; counsel could have attained his object later by examining plaintiff as an adverse witness.

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

X. CROSS-EXAMINATION

B. To Elicit Facts: Scope of Direct.

2. Where Criminal Defendant Testifies.

a. Nature of Rule.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 233

[§ 233] Nature of Rule.

The restriction to the scope of the direct examination (supra, §231) is particularly important where the witness is the defendant in a criminal case. The defendant's privilege allows him or her to refrain from testifying at all, and by taking the stand, the defendant waives the privilege only to the extent of the scope of the direct examination. (See 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §428.) The rule is therefore stated in positive terms: The judge has no discretion to allow the defendant, over objection, to be cross-examined beyond the scope of the matters to which he or she voluntarily testified on direct examination. (Ev.C. 772(d); Ev.C. 761, Comment; see People v. McCarthy (1948) 88 C.A.2d 883, 886, 200 P.2d 69; People v. Malicoat (1949) 89 C.A.2d 742, 744, 201 P.2d 850; People v. Farnell (1957) 156 C.A.2d 393, 400, 319 P.2d 749; People v. Sims (1958) 165 C.A.2d 108, 113, 331 P.2d 799, infra, §351; People v. Robinson (1964) 61 C.2d 373, 392, 38 C.R. 890, 392 P.2d 970, infra, §234; People v. Tealer (1975) 48 C.A.3d 598, 604, 122 C.R. 144 [even when defendant testifies on his own behalf, privilege against self-incrimination prevents prosecution from questioning him on case generally, and in effect, making him prosecution witness]; 1 McCormick 5th, §26; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2278; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §818.)

The federal rule is similar: The accused does not, by testifying on a preliminary matter, become subject to cross-examination as to other issues in the case. (F.R. Evid., Rule 104(d); see 1 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §§24, 33.)

X. CROSS-EXAMINATION

B. To Elicit Facts: Scope of Direct.

2. Where Criminal Defendant Testifies.

b. Illustrations.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 234

[§ 234] Illustrations.

In People v. Watson (1956) 46 C.2d 818, 828, 299 P.2d 243, a police officer testified on direct concerning his inspection of an apartment and the deceased's body, and a conversation with defendant. Defendant then sought to cross-examine him on anything he may have heard from third persons while he was in the apartment. Held, this was not only outside the scope of the direct examination, but was inadmissible hearsay.

People v. Robinson (1964) 61 C.2d 373, 38 C.R. 890, 392 P.2d 970, is an extreme illustration of how technically the restriction can be applied in a criminal case. R, D and H were charged with first degree murder in a killing accompanying a robbery. When the prosecution rested, H was called by his counsel and asked the single question whether his extrajudicial confession was involuntary. He reiterated his voir dire testimony that it was. The prosecutor, on the theory that the jury could infer voluntariness from truth, first recited each part of the confession, asking whether it was true, and received affirmative answers. But then the prosecutor asked leading questions as to the truth of the facts without reference to the confession. Held, it was reversible error to permit this latter inquiry, clearly beyond the scope of the direct examination. (61 C.2d 393.)

The dissent persuasively argues that the error, if any, was not a ground for reversal: (a) The switch in the inquiry came about through a nonresponsive answer, volunteered by H, that everything in his confession was true, and H never objected (and did not appeal). (b) The scope was not exceeded because, despite the change in form of the questions, no new fact was developed. It would have been time wasting for the prosecutor to repeat a ritualistic formula, "Is it true that, as you said in your prior statement," etc. (61 C.2d 411.)

In People v. Bagwell (1974) 38 C.A.3d 127, 113 C.R. 122, defendant was charged with murder for stabbing her husband in his sleep. Toward the close of the prosecution's case in chief, the prosecutor offered to prove that about a year earlier, defendant had committed a similar assault which resulted in the victim's death, thus indicating an intent to kill in the present case. The trial judge excluded the evidence under Ev.C. 352 (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §17), but gave an equivocal response to defense counsel's inquiry on whether defendant would be subjected to cross-examination about the prior incident if she took the stand. On cross-examination, however, the trial judge allowed the prosecutor to ask questions about the prior event. Held, this was error. From the trial judge's earlier remarks, "We'll see how the testimony goes on her direct examination," defendant may have been led to believe that if she, on direct examination, made no mention of the earlier affair, no cross-examination on the subject would be allowed. (38 C.A.3d 139.) "And there can be no doubt of the gross prejudice ensuing from the improper questions, defendant's refusal to answer on the grounds of self-incrimination and her unguarded exculpatory answer." (38 C.A.3d 140.)

X. CROSS-EXAMINATION

B. To Elicit Facts: Scope of Direct.

3. Rule Relaxed Where Subjects Opened Up. a. Civil Cases.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 235

[§ 235] Civil Cases.

The restrictive rule does not prevent the cross-examiner from seeking new facts concerning the matters raised in the direct. Testimony on direct of a very general character may open up a broad field of inquiry, and the same is true of testimony on direct that contains a broad denial of an issue of the case. It is sometimes said that the direct examination, by touching on one phase of a matter, "opens the door" to the fullest inquiry concerning it. (See McFadden v. Santa Ana, Orange & Tustin Street Ry. Co. (1891) 87 C. 464, 469, 25 P. 681; Jackson v. Feather River & Gibsonville Water Co. (1859) 14 C. 18, 23; Zane v. De Onativia (1903) 139 C. 328, 329, 73 P. 856; Huyck v. Rennie (1907) 151 C. 411, 415, 90 P. 929; Meyer v. McNutt Hosp. (1916) 173 C. 156, 158, 159 P. 436; Del Monte Ranch Dairy v. Bernardo (1917) 174 C. 757, 760, 164 P. 628; Brown v. Chevrolet Motor Co. (1919) 39 C.A. 738, 739, 179 P. 697; Broderick v. Broderick (1919) 40 C.A. 550, 556, 181 P. 402; Butters v. The Brawley Star (1920) 48 C.A. 57, 61, 191 P. 987; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1885 et seq.; 59 A.L.R.3d 659 [rebuttal of mother's claim of chastity in paternity suit].)

Thus, in Del Monte Ranch Dairy v. Bernardo, supra, defendant filed a counterclaim and took the stand to establish it. On cross-examination, plaintiff sought to elicit the fact that defendant had assigned the claim to a third person. Held, it was error to exclude the questions. (174 C. 760.)

In Meyer v. McNutt Hosp., supra, the action was for injuries from burns. Defendant's doctor testified that there was no necessity for hot applications, to indicate the probability that none were used. Held, it was proper to cross-examine on the custom of the hospital to use hot water bottles to warm beds even though they were not necessary as hot applications. (173 C. 158.)

B. To Elicit Facts: Scope of Direct.

3. Rule Relaxed Where Subjects Opened Up.

b. Criminal Cases.

1. Nature of Rule.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 236

[§ 236] Nature of Rule.

In a criminal case, the defendant "cannot, by testifying to a state of things contrary to and inconsistent with the evidence of the prosecution, thus indirectly denying the testimony against him, but without testifying expressly with relation to the same facts, limit the cross-examination to the precise facts concerning which he testifies. He can be cross-examined with respect to facts or denials which are necessarily implied from the testimony in chief, as well as with respect to facts which he expressly states." (People v. Teshara (1904) 141 C. 633, 638, 75 P. 338.)

Ev.C. 773 (supra, §231) does not mean that cross-examination "must be confined to a mere categorical review of the matters, dates or times mentioned in the direct examination." Moreover, if a defendant takes the stand and makes a general denial of the crime with which he or she is charged, "the permissible scope of cross-examination is very wide." (People v. Zerillo (1950) 36 C.2d 222, 228, 223 P.2d 223; see People v. Atchley (1959) 53 C.2d 160, 173, 346 P.2d 764, infra, §237; *People v. #### 3. Rule Relaxed Where Subjects Opened Up.

b. Criminal Cases.

2. Illustrations.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 237

[§ 237] Illustrations.

(1) Defendant Opens Subject. In People v. Atchley (1959) 53 C.2d 160, 346 P.2d 764, defendant, charged with murder of his wife, testified that the gun had fired while he and the victim were struggling for it. On cross-examination, he was required to put on the shirt he wore on the night of the killing, to show how he carried the gun, and to demonstrate with an assistant district attorney his and his wife's movements during the alleged struggle. Held, this was permissible cross-examination, for he voluntarily raised these matters on direct. (53 C.2d 173.)

In People v. Wrigley (1968) 69 C.2d 149, 70 C.R. 116, 443 P.2d 580, the prosecution was for lewd act with a child. The prosecuting witness testified to numerous talks with defendant about sex and sexual activities. Defendant testified that he had never talked about sex with her and had never been alone with her. During direct examination of defendant, his attorney referred to two books in defendant's library seized by the police--The Psychology of Sex and The Encyclopedia of Sexual Behavior--which defendant said had been used by him as a student. The prosecutor, in the cross-examination of defendant, read passages from the books. Held, this was proper. Ownership of the books and familiarity with their contents supported an inference that defendant was conversant with various sexual aberrations which the prosecuting witness said she heard about from him. This tended to overcome his testimony that he had never discussed sex with her, and to corroborate her testimony that she had learned about deviate sex behavior from him. (69 C.2d 162.)

In People v. Lynn (1971) 16 C.A.3d 259, 94 C.R. 16, both defendants took the stand to deny that they had planned to escape from custody in a courthouse struggle that resulted in the fatal shooting of a deputy sheriff. On cross-examination, over objection, the prosecutor questioned them about a successful escape nearly 3 weeks before the charged crime, and also about an unsuccessful escape attempt a week earlier. Held, no error. Because a general denial of the crime charged gives a very wide scope for cross-examination, it was proper for the prosecutor to refer back to all preceding events that tended to show a preplanned escape scheme. The evidence controverted defendants' denials as to their purpose, motive and general plan on the day of the shooting (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §92). (16 C.A.3d 272.)

In People v. James (1976) 56 C.A.3d 876, 128 C.R. 733, defendant offered an alibi defense to charges of burglary, robbery and rape. On cross-examination, he was questioned about his activities for the nearly 6 months from the date of the crime to the date when he was apprehended out-of-state. Held, the interrogation was proper because it tended to negate the alibi testimony and his implied denial of guilt, and also to cast doubt on the supportive testimony of other defense witnesses.

(a) If, by inference, the facts to which a defendant testifies on direct examination amount to a denial of the charge, he may then be cross-examined on any matter tending to prove his guilt. "An implied denial of guilt is considered as testimony denying the existence of any evidence relevant on the issue of guilt, which makes cross-examination about the subject of any such evidence properly within the scope of the direct examination." (56 C.A.3d 888.)

(b) The prosecution elicited from defendant, his wife and another witness denials of prosecution implications that defendant had discovered the police were looking for him and left the state to avoid them. In view of the defendant's express alibi testimony, which was an implied denial of guilt, the cross-examination was proper. The prosecution was then able to introduce rebuttal testimony tending to establish that defendant was occasionally visited by his wife so he could receive money while avoiding detection. (56 C.A.3d 889.) (See also People v. Cartwright (1980) 107 C.A.3d 402, 414, 415, 166 C.R. 37 [defendant, on direct examination, testified to alibi; on cross-examination, he was properly asked whether he had told police about alibi at time of his arrest].)

(2) Prosecution Witness Opens Subject. A prosecution witness may also open the door to a broader cross-examination by the defendant. Thus, in People v. Whitehead (1952) 113 C.A.2d 43, 247 P.2d 717, witness E testified on direct to the observed circumstances of the shooting of deceased, but was deliberately not asked any question concerning conversations that occurred at the time. On cross-examination, defense counsel sought to elicit the conversations, but was precluded by a ruling that the cross-examination would have to be confined to the scope of the direct--movements and location. The lower court thus supported the prosecution strategy of compelling defendant to call E as his own witness if he wanted to bring in the conversation. Held, this was reversible error. "The proper rule would appear to be that physical acts testified to cannot be arbitrarily separated from the verbal acts accompanying them and made at the same time and place. Such 'verbal acts' also must be considered to be admissible in order to prevent the false coloring of the event, to rebut, explain, qualify and possibly to impeach the testimony concerning the physical acts also occurring at that time and place. In other words when testimony has been introduced relative to an occurrence all parts of that occurrence, verbal as well as physical, are properly within the scope of the cross-examiner's probe. ... Therefore since the prosecution examined the witness as to the occurrence during which the deceased was shot, it may not so limit such examination so as to preclude the cross-examiner from eliciting conversation which was a part of the same occurrence. By examining the witness as it did it thereby voluntarily opened a door which it cannot arbitrarily close, and the cross-examiner may bring out all the facts within the knowledge of such witness as had transpired at the occurrence testified to in chief, and which are material to a thorough understanding thereof." (113 C.A.2d 49.)

In Gallaher v. Superior Court (1980) 103 C.A.3d 666, 162 C.R. 389, defendant was accused of murder. At the preliminary examination, the prosecution called L, defendant's principal accuser, stating that he would be questioned only as to the facts leading up to the shooting and defendant's statement immediately afterwards, after which L would "take the Fifth." Over defendant's objection, the magistrate acquiesced in the arrangement, and defendant's attorney was not permitted to cross-examine on events following the shooting (defendant and L leaving the scene together, conversations between the two). Held, this was error of constitutional dimension, and prohibition issued to compel setting aside of the information. "[W]hen a prosecution witness testifies to facts tending to establish the guilt of one criminally accused, that witness may be cross-examined on all relevant and material matters preceding, concurring with, or following the criminal event, within his knowledge and reasonably related to the issue of guilt or innocence." (103 C.A.3d 672.)

X. CROSS-EXAMINATION C. To Test Credibility: Wide Latitude. 1. In General.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 238

[§ 238] In General.

The rule restricting cross-examination to the scope of the direct (supra, §231) cannot reasonably be applied to cross-examination designed to impeach the witness. Hence, it is often declared that a wide latitude should be allowed in cross-examination testing observation, recollection, and credibility. (See Jackson v. Feather River & Gibsonville Water Co. (1859) 14 C. 18, 24; Sharp v. Hoffman (1889) 79 C. 404, 408, 21 P. 846; Santa Ana v. Harlin (1893) 99 C. 538, 549, 34 P. 224; Estate of Kasson (1900) 127 C. 496, 500, 59 P. 950 ["a liberal latitude should have been given appellant on cross-examination to test her intelligence, knowledge, accuracy of memory, disposition to tell the truth, bias, relation to the parties, interest, motive, etc."]; Estate of Strong (1916) 172 C. 441, 443, 156 P. 1026 [undue restriction held reversible error]; Estate of Flood (1933) 217 C. 763, 785, 21 P.2d 579; Strauss v. Buckley (1937) 20 C.A.2d 7, 9, 65 P.2d 1352; In re Anthony P. (1985) 167 C.A.3d 502, 507, 213 C.R. 424, infra, §278, citing the text; 1 McCormick 5th, §22; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1891; C.E.B., 1 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §11.83; infra, §239 et seq.; for grounds of impeachment, see infra, §259; for limiting rule against impeachment on collateral matters, see infra, §341 et seq.)

This policy is particularly important where the witness is a party to the action. (Neal v. Neal (1881) 58 C. 287, 288; Stromerson v. Averill (1940) 39 C.A.2d 118, 125, 102 P.2d 571; Quackenbush v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp. (1915) 28 C.A. 173, 176, 151 P. 755.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

X. CROSS-EXAMINATION

C. To Test Credibility: Wide Latitude.

2. Civil Cases.

a. Rule Allowing Otherwise Inadmissible Evidence.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 239

[§ 239] Rule Allowing Otherwise Inadmissible Evidence.

Under the rule of limited admissibility (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §30), cross-examination to test accuracy of observation or other matters affecting credibility may be proper even though it brings in matters otherwise inadmissible. Thus, in Wagner v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1930) 210 C. 526, 292 P. 645, an action for damages for personal injuries resulting from a collision of an automobile and a train, defendant called its claims adjuster and fireman to testify to their observations made of conditions at the scene of the accident. On cross-examination, counsel for plaintiff questioned them on surrounding streets, asking in several questions whether they had noticed wigwag signals at the crossings. Defendant objected that this was intended to convey to the jury the inadmissible fact that these other streets had such signals while the street where the accident occurred had none. Held, there was no error; the questions were proper on cross-examination to test the accuracy of the observations made by defendant's witnesses. And, because they were admissible for that purpose, they could not be rendered inadmissible by reason of some possible prejudicial effect that the court could correct by a proper instruction. (210 C. 529.)

In Inyo Chemical Co. v. Los Angeles (1936) 5 C.2d 525, 55 P.2d 850, an action for damages sustained by the breaking of defendant city's aqueduct, defendant's maintenance engineer testified that he had previously inspected the area, and it was his opinion, at the time, that no overhead or underground drainage was necessary. On cross-examination, he was asked whether he had authorized construction of many spillways after the break. Held, though clearly improper on the issue of negligence (subsequent precautions, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §163), the questions were properly allowed "for the purpose of weakening the testimony of defendant's expert witness by showing that he had subsequently changed his opinion as to the necessity of drainage." (5 C.2d 543.)

Similarly, in Daggett v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1957) 48 C.2d 655, 313 P.2d 557, a suit was brought for wrongful death arising out of a collision at a railway crossing. The train had been going at approximately the railroad speed limit of 90 miles an hour, and the crossing had a single wigwag signal. After the accident, the speed limit was reduced to 50 miles an hour and a flashing light signal was installed at the request of the Public Utilities Commission. These subsequent precautions, inadmissible on the issue of negligence, were brought out in the following manner:

(a) Plaintiff's counsel called defendant motorman as an adverse witness, and the latter testified that 90 miles an hour was the limit. Further questions relating to speed limits in various places in the area were phrased in the present tense, and the witness voluntarily stated that the speed limit "is" (at time of trial) 90 miles an hour. (48 C.2d 665; cf. dissent, 48 C.2d 667, contending that witness was confused by the questions.) Held, it was proper thereafter to ask him the impeaching question, whether the speed limit "is" now 50 miles an hour, which he answered affirmatively.

(b) Plaintiff similarly called defendant's signal engineer who qualified as an expert and testified that he was "absolutely sure" that the single wigwag signal in use at the time of the accident was "the safest type of signal" for that crossing. Held, it was proper to ask him the impeaching question concerning the newly installed flashing light signals, for this tended to show that he had subsequently changed his opinion as to the safety of the conditions at the time of the accident. (48 C.2d 664.) (See 9 Hastings L. J. 316; Love v. Wolf (1967) 249 C.A.2d 822, 831, 58 C.R. 42 [following Daggett].)

X. CROSS-EXAMINATION

C. To Test Credibility: Wide Latitude.

2. Civil Cases.

b. Rule Held Inapplicable.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 240

[§ 240] Rule Held Inapplicable.

Inyo Chemical Co. v. Los Angeles (1936) 5 C.2d 525, 55 P.2d 850, Daggett v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1957) 48 C.2d 655, 313 P.2d 557, and similar cases (supra, §239) have inspired numerous attempts to bring into negligence trials the inadmissible fact of subsequent precautions, in questions directed to a defense witness either on cross-examination or under Ev.C. 776 (supra, §202). In Pierce v. J.C. Penney Co. (1959) 167 C.A.2d 3, 334 P.2d 117, the court made it clear that this can be done only where the question is clearly impeaching:

First, in the Inyo case, the expert witness was in charge of maintenance and was asked whether he had authorized the subsequent precautionary construction. This evidence of his own conduct, inconsistent with the opinion asserted on the stand, was proper impeachment. (167 C.A.2d 8.)

Second, in the Daggett case, the defendant's safety engineer had expressed an opinion that a former signal was the safest type, and was impeached by evidence that defendant, after the accident, changed to a different type. A similar situation was presented in Laird v. Mather (1958) 51 C.2d 210, 219, 331 P.2d 617, infra, §253. (167 C.A.2d 12.)

Third, in the present case, plaintiff slipped and fell on defendant's polished terrazzo steps. After the accident, an abrasive stripping was applied. Plaintiff, cross-examining defendant's witness L, section manager, asked whether he had testified that the steps were not slippery, and, upon receiving the answer "Yes," asked whether the strips had been applied. The witness, over objection, answered "Yes." The legal issue, said the court, is whether such evidence is admissible to impeach a nonexpert witness who testifies concerning his or her observations, but who had nothing to do with the making of the changes. (167 C.A.2d 6.) And the answer, on principle and authority, is that this is not proper impeachment because it does not involve any conduct on the witness' part inconsistent with his or her testimony. (167 C.A.2d 8.)

The court emphasized that this was not a proper case for impeachment by contradictory evidence (see infra, §340) because the contradictory evidence--subsequent precautions--was not competent. (167 C.A.2d 9.) And the objections of policy were summed up as follows: "If the present ruling were to be sustained, then the clearest dictates of logic would require a holding in the next case that the same impeaching (contradictory) type of evidence here elicited on cross-examination may properly be elicited from witnesses called in rebuttal. Such a holding would mean that whenever a defendant in this type of case calls any witness to testify to any observation tending to prove the safety of, or the lack of danger or defectiveness, in his premises at the time of an accident, the door is automatically opened to plaintiff to prove (by way of impeachment) every subsequent repair made or precaution taken. Indeed the defendant could not avoid this result merely by refraining from calling any witness for the purpose of proving the safety of his premises, because plaintiff could call his employees for cross-examination ... and thereafter impeach them in the same manner." (167 C.A.2d 11.) (See also Sanchez v. Bagues & Sons Mortuaries (1969) 271 C.A.2d 188, 191, 76 C.R. 372 [following J.C. Penney Co.]; 18 Hastings L. J. 677.)

In Westbrooks v. Ball (1967) 248 C.A.2d 209, 216, 56 C.R. 422, plaintiff invoked the exception where defendant's employee in charge of safety testifies and is then cross-examined on his adoption of new safety measures. Held, the exception did not apply here. Z, defendant's general superintendent, did not direct the changes; some undisclosed person, lower in authority, did so.

X. CROSS-EXAMINATION

C. To Test Credibility: Wide Latitude.

3. Criminal Cases.

a. In General.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 241

[§ 241] In General.

The necessity of a wide latitude is also stressed in criminal cases. (See People v. Ormes (1948) 88 C.A.2d 353, 359, 198 P.2d 690 [prosecution for perjury, limitation of cross-examination held reversible error]; Chula v. Superior Court (1952) 109 C.A.2d 24, 36, 240 P.2d 398 [wide latitude permitted defense counsel in cross-examining court-appointed alienist on insanity issue]; People v. Duran (1976) 16 C.3d 282, 293, 127 C.R. 618, 545 P.2d 1322 [trial court erred in denying defendant right to cross-examine prisoner witness on possible inducement, i.e., favorable parole consideration, for his testimony]; People v. Stewart (1983) 145 C.A.3d 967, 976, 977, 193 C.R. 799 [error in preventing cross-examination of accomplice on her feelings of revenge and bias].)

The trial judge, however, has discretion to limit cross-examination intended only to discredit the prosecution's evidence rather than to develop evidence supporting a defense. (See People v. Woodberry (1970) 10 C.A.3d 695, 709, 89 C.R. 330; see also People v. Alfaro (1976) 61 C.A.3d 414, 421, 423, 132 C.R. 356 [basis of proposed cross-examination speculative and without evidentiary support].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

A defendant's right to cross-examine a witness for the purpose of testing the witness' credibility is not absolute. The defendant should be given wide latitude in this regard, but the trial court may impose reasonable limits on the inquiry based on concerns about harassment, confusion of the issues, or relevance. (People v. Brown (2003) 31 C.4th 518, 545, 3 C.R.3d 145, 73 P.3d 1137 [in capital murder trial, trial judge did not deny defendant his constitutional right of cross-examination by prohibiting him from raising pending rape charges as evidence of witness' motive for testifying; any slight impeachment effect of remote possibility that witness was testifying in hopes of leniency was outweighed by undue consumption of time]; see People v. Sapp (2003) 31 C.4th 240, 290, 2 C.R.3d 554, 73 P.3d 433 [in penalty phase of capital murder trial, denial of defendant's proposed cross-examination of prosecution witness regarding Medi-Cal fraud charges brought against him several years earlier did not violate defendant's constitutional rights; charges were only nominally relevant to subject matter of witness' testimony regarding defendant's criminal behavior].) West's Key Number Digest, Witnesses k.277(3)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

X. CROSS-EXAMINATION

C. To Test Credibility: Wide Latitude.

3. Criminal Cases.

b. Cross-Examination of Prosecutrix in Cases Involving Sex Crimes.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 242

[§ 242] Cross-Examination of Prosecutrix in Cases Involving Sex Crimes.

(1) Former Approach. Traditionally, the courts have emphasized the wide latitude in prosecutions for rape and similar crimes committed against a young girl, where the prosecutrix has the sympathy of the usual jury. The defendant has been allowed, on cross-examination, to go fully into the circumstances, motive and reason for her conduct. (People v. Vaughn (1933) 131 C.A. 265, 271, 21 P.2d 438 [failure to complain to close relative shortly after crime had been committed]; People v. Brown (1934) 138 C.A. 748, 751, 33 P.2d 460 [request by victim that charges be dismissed]; People v. Hume (1942) 56 C.A.2d 262, 267, 132 P.2d 52 [prior inconsistent statement]; People v. Hurlburt (1958) 166 C.A.2d 334, 343, 333 P.2d 82 [false accusations against other men]; People v. Neely (1964) 228 C.A.2d 16, 18, 39 C.R. 251 [same]; 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §963; 71 A.L.R.4th 469 [impeachment of prosecuting witness by showing that similar charges were made against other persons].)

As the court said in Hurlburt, supra: "[W]here the state of mind of the prosecutrix is relevant, showings of possible motives for the charge, instances of extortion by the prosecutrix against the defendant, animosity of the prosecutrix, and the possibility that the witness has been coached, all have been held admissible. None of these is of as great probative value or relevancy as evidence of prior false accusations of the same charge involved in the main case. Such evidence is not offered for the purpose of impeaching or discrediting the general character or reputation of the witness, but is offered to disprove the very charge before the court. It is relevant as to the state of mind of the prosecutrix. Because of its high degree of relevancy and its high probative value, such evidence should be admitted. From the very character of the offense involved the jury has very little to go on in such cases. They have usually nothing more than the testimony of a young child and the denials of the defendant. This fact, which, as already pointed out, has frequently been recognized by the courts and text writers, indicates that a liberal rule should be adopted so that the jury have before it as much relevant information as is legally permissible so that it can reach a just verdict." (166 C.A.2d 342.)

The court added a warning against abuse of the privilege, but concluded that, weighing all the possibilities, "the ends of justice will best be served if the jury is permitted to know that in the past this seemingly young and innocent child has made false charges about such matters." (166 C.A.2d 343.)

(2) Present Approach. Ev.C. 782 now imposes strict procedural safeguards on the defendant's introduction of evidence of sexual conduct to impeach the credibility of the prosecutrix. There must be a motion and offer of proof of relevancy, a hearing, and a court order specifying the evidence that may be introduced and the nature of the questions. (See 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §62.)

D. Cross-Examination of Defendant's Character Witness.

1. In General.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 243

[§ 243] In General.

When a defendant in a criminal case calls witnesses who testify to his or her good character for the traits involved (e.g., honesty or peace and quiet; see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §51), these witnesses may be cross-examined on the bases of their testimony. But the scope of such cross-examination to impeach a character witness is restricted, and care must be exercised in the questioning:

(1) The question must deal with the correct character trait, or it is irrelevant. (See infra, §244.)

(2) The Evidence Code permits direct testimony in the form of an opinion (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §55); the cross-examination will doubtless follow the form of cross-examination of any lay opinion witness.

(3) The traditional method of proving character is by reputation; and, if the witness testifies to the defendant's reputation, the cross-examination must be limited to matters affecting the witness' knowledge of it. (See infra, §245 et seq.) (See 9 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 365.)

X. CROSS-EXAMINATION

D. Cross-Examination of Defendant's Character Witness.

2. Character Trait Involved.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 244

[§ 244] Character Trait Involved.

If the defendant offers evidence as to his or her good character (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §51), the cross-examination must relate to the trait of character about which the witness testified. (See People v. Marsh (1962) 58 C.2d 732, 745, 26 C.R. 300, 376 P.2d 300; People v. Clair (1992) 2 C.4th 629, 684, 7 C.R.2d 564, 828 P.2d 705; People v. Hernandez (1941) 47 C.A.2d 132, 134, 117 P.2d 394; People v. Tucker (1958) 164 C.A.2d 624, 627, 331 P.2d 160; People v. Roberson (1959) 167 C.A.2d 429, 431, 334 P.2d 666; People v. Pic'l (1981) 114 C.A.3d 824, 891, 171 C.R. 106; 13 A.L.R.4th 796.)

In People v. Hernandez, supra, a prosecution for robbery, witnesses testified to defendant's good reputation for honesty. Cross-examination as to their knowledge of his previous arrest for assault with a deadly weapon, and his imprisonment for carrying concealed weapons, was held improper; "the crimes of assault with a deadly weapon and carrying concealed weapons are not acts inconsistent with a good reputation for honesty." (47 C.A.2d 134.) (The questions were also objectionable in inquiring as to knowledge of acts, infra, §248.)

In People v. Tucker, supra, a trial for conspiracy to commit arson, defendant took the stand. To impeach him (see infra, §280), the prosecution put on rebuttal testimony of his bad reputation for truth. Defendant, in surrebuttal, offered witnesses to bolster his reputation for "truth, honesty and veracity" (his counsel carefully and unnecessarily eliminating "integrity" to avoid any issue of trait other than veracity). The prosecutor, in cross-examination, asked these surrebuttal witnesses if they had heard or knew of specific acts of misconduct, consisting of a wide variety of crimes (violation of vice laws, white slavery, encouragement of prostitution, friendship with gangsters, malicious mischief, arson, juvenile delinquency). Held, reversible error; these activities and associations had no direct bearing on the traits involved. (164 C.A.2d 627.) (See also People v. Marsh, supra, 58 C.2d 745 [witnesses testified to good reputation for truth; cross-examiner asked whether they knew that defendant had been excommunicated from Mormon church for immoral conduct with women; morals charges not necessarily inconsistent with reputation for truth].)

In People v. Roberson, supra, a trial for sale of narcotics, defendant's character witness, his former employer, testified to his reputation for truth and veracity (the evidence consisting solely of the testimony of defendant and an undercover police agent). On cross-examination, the witness was examined, over objection, about defendant's narcotics and petty theft convictions. Held, error; a character witness can be asked only about specific misconduct inconsistent with the trait to which he testified, and these crimes were not. (167 C.A.2d 431.) (See also People v. Pic'l, supra, 114 C.A.3d 891 [error, although harmless, to permit cross-examination of character witnesses on reports of defendant's financial matters (bankruptcy, nonpayment of rent) that were irrelevant to dispute defendant's character traits (honesty, truthfulness, integrity) in issue].)

X. CROSS-EXAMINATION

D. Cross-Examination of Defendant's Character Witness.

3. Reputation Witness.

a. Limiting Rule.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 245

[§ 245] Limiting Rule.

When a character witness testifies to the defendant's reputation with respect to a relevant character trait (supra, §244), the witness may be asked whether he or she has heard rumors or reports of the defendant's wrongful acts inconsistent with the character trait, because the witness' knowledge of reputation is derived from community talk and opinion. The witness cannot be asked whether he or she knows as a fact that the defendant has committed particular wrongful acts or has been guilty of other improper conduct. If the latter sort of question were allowed, the effect would be to bring before the jury irrelevant and highly prejudicial evidence of other crimes, actual or asserted. Nevertheless, it has been pointed out that the distinction is a subtle one, and that the jury is as likely to gain the damaging impression from the correct as from the incorrect question. Hence, the courts tend to impose a requirement of good faith, holding that the prosecutor must possess information that reasonably leads him or her to believe that the acts or conduct by defendant have in fact been committed or the reports of their commission have been generally circulated. (See generally Michelson v. United States (1948) 335 U.S. 469, 69 S.Ct. 213, 93 L.Ed. 168; People v. Payton (1992) 3 C.4th 1050, 1066, 13 C.R.2d 526, 839 P.2d 1035; People v. Pic'l (1981) 114 C.A.3d 824, 891, 171 C.R. 106; 1 McCormick 5th, §191; 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §988; 13 A.L.R.4th 796 [reference to particular acts or crimes--modern state rule]; infra, §246 et seq.)

In Michelson, supra, the court first reviewed the principles governing good character evidence, pointing out that the witness is only allowed to testify to reputation, i.e., to summarize what he or she has heard in the community ("opinion-based-on-hearsay"), and then said: "Thus the law extends helpful but illogical options to a defendant. Experience taught a necessity that they be counterweighted with equally illogical conditions to keep the advantage from becoming an unfair and unreasonable one. The price a defendant must pay for attempting to prove his good name is to throw open the entire subject which the law has kept closed for his benefit and to make himself vulnerable where the law otherwise shields him. The prosecution may pursue the inquiry with contradictory witnesses to show that damaging rumors, whether or not well-grounded, were afloat--for it is not the man that he is, but the name that he has which is put in issue. Another hazard is that his own witness is subject to cross-examination as to the contents and extent of the hearsay on which he bases his conclusions, and he may be required to disclose rumors and reports that are current even if they do not affect his own conclusion. It may test the sufficiency of his knowledge by asking what stories were circulating concerning events, such as one's arrest, about which people normally comment and speculate. Thus, while the law gives defendant the option to show as a fact that his reputation reflects a life and habit incompatible with commission of the offense charged, it subjects his proof to tests of credibility designed to prevent him from profiting by a mere parade of partisans." (69 S.Ct. 220, 93 L.Ed. 175.)

The court added: "Wide discretion is accompanied by heavy responsibility on trial courts to protect the practice from any misuse. The trial judge ... took pains to ascertain, out of presence of the jury, that the target of the question was an actual event, which would probably result in some comment among acquaintances if not injury to defendant's reputation. He satisfied himself that counsel was not merely taking a random shot at a reputation imprudently exposed or asking a groundless question to waft an unwarranted innuendo into the jury box." (69 S.Ct. 221, 93 L.Ed. 176.)

The trial judge should inquire into good faith outside the presence of the jury. (See People v. Eli (1967) 66 C.2d 63, 77, 56 C.R. 916, 424 P.2d 356; People v. Gonzales (1967) 66 C.2d 482, 500, 58 C.R. 361, 426 P.2d 929, citing the text; People v. Kramer (1968) 259 C.A.2d 452, 467, 66 C.R. 638; People v. Hempstead (1983) 148 C.A.3d 949, 953, 196 C.R. 412; cf. People v. Wrigley (1968) 69 C.2d 149, 166, 70 C.R. 116, 443 P.2d 580 [no error where judge gave defendant opportunity to challenge good faith and defendant's counsel didn't]; People v. Hurd (1970) 5 C.A.3d 865, 880, footnote 9, 85 C.R. 718 [prosecutor's good faith not in issue because trial judge and counsel had discussed disputed questions out of jury's presence before questions were asked].)

1. "Have You Heard."

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 246

[§ 246] "Have You Heard."

(1) General Rule. The witnesses may be asked, in good faith on the basis of information in the hands of the prosecution, whether they had heard reports or rumors of wrongful acts or misconduct committed by the defendant and inconsistent with the traits of good character attributed to him or her. (See People v. Burke (1912) 18 C.A. 72, 88, 122 P. 435 [explosion with intent to injure; whether they had heard that doctor defendant made a practice of committing abortions and having immoral relations with female patients]; People v. Stennett (1921) 51 C.A. 370, 382, 197 P. 372 [whether they had ever heard that he had been previously convicted of petty larceny]; People v. Stevens (1935) 5 C.2d 92, 99, 53 P.2d 133 [murder; whether they heard report that he had been discharged from police department for violence, had shot woman, had been intoxicated on duty, had committed assaults and thefts]; People v. White (1954) 43 C.2d 740, 744, 278 P.2d 9 [infamous crime against nature; whether they had heard of reports to police of his homosexual activities]; People v. Buchanan (1932) 119 C.A. 523, 526, 6 P.2d 538 [inquiries included arrests and charges while defendant was a minor, and proceedings were in juvenile court]; People v. Gin Shue (1943) 58 C.A.2d 625, 633, 137 P.2d 742 [whether they had heard that defendant had been arrested or charged with possession of still, manufacture of whiskey, visiting or conducting gambling place, vagrancy]; People v. Boone (1954) 126 C.A.2d 746, 751, 273 P.2d 350 [lewd conduct; whether they had heard that defendant lived with woman not married to him and was ejected from place of residence for pimping]; People v. Cummings (1956) 141 C.A.2d 193, 199, 296 P.2d 610 [attempted abortion; whether they had heard he had been performing abortions since 1942 and had done several specified abortions]; People v. Malloy (1962) 199 C.A.2d 219, 226, 18 C.R. 545, citing the text; *People v. Rev. 365; 13 A.L.R.4th 796; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §840.)

(2) Illustrations. In People v. Hurd, supra, a prosecution for incest, oral copulation and sodomy, Father H appeared as a character witness and testified that defendant was of good moral character, honest, upright and fair. On cross-examination, the prosecutor asked whether the witness had heard of defendant's arrests for car thefts, attempted burglary, armed robbery, use of fraudulent checks, forcible rape and child beating. Defendant contended that this questioning was improper because Father H had given his opinion about defendant's character, not reputation, and because the rumored acts were not inconsistent with the character traits testified to by the witness. Held, no error. When a witness states his opinion of a defendant's character, there may be "some logic" to excluding "have you heard" questions designed to test his knowledge of defendant's reputation. (5 C.A.3d 879.) But the witness' opinion must have had some basis, and the prosecution must be permitted to test that basis and bring the opinion's validity into question. (5 C.A.3d 880.)

"Father [H] testified that in his opinion defendant was of 'good moral character' and that he was 'honest,' 'upright' and 'fair.' Obviously, all of the rumors of the specified acts asked about on cross-examination would be inconsistent with good moral character; most would be inconsistent with honesty and uprightness, and the rumor of child beating would be, at least, inconsistent with fairness." (5 C.A.3d 880.)

In People v. Qui Mei Lee (1975) 48 C.A.3d 516, 122 C.R. 43, a defense witness testified, on direct examination, that defendant's reputation for truth and honesty was and is above reproach. On cross-examination, the prosecutor asked the witness whether he had heard that defendant committed acts for which she was then on trial. Held, this was proper.

(a) Under Ev.C. 1102, the character witness may give an opinion or his or her knowledge of a defendant's reputation either before and at the time of the alleged offense or at the time the witness is testifying. "The time frame used on direct examination determines the extent of the cross-examination." (48 C.A.3d 527.) Hence, if the witness had testified that as of the time of the alleged offenses or even before he was aware of the offenses, defendant was honest or had a good reputation for honesty, any cross-examination about whether he had heard of the charged offense would have exceeded the scope of direct examination and been improper. That questioning could not test the witness' credibility on the subject matter of his direct testimony. Adverse comments involving the charged offense could not cast doubt on the integrity of the past opinion. (48 C.A.3d 527.)

(b) But the result is different when the witness testifies in the present tense. Whatever the defendant's reputation might have been before the charge, after the charge, it is at least dubious. "Thus where the character witness nonetheless states under oath that such defendant's reputation for honesty is presently good, there is a strong suggestion (to say the least) that he is not a credible witness. And on cross-examination, such lack of credibility may be demonstrated by asking him whether he in fact has heard of the commission of the offense for which the defendant is on trial. Such a question is highly relevant, and therefore proper. ... Similarly, if the character witness gives his personal opinion that the defendant is presently honest, the same question on cross-examination is most relevant; for if he has heard of the offense charged, the validity of his opinion may be affected thereby." (48 C.A.3d 527.)

(c) Defense counsel may avoid the problem by limiting the scope of inquiry on direct examination and directing his or her questions to the time of, and reasonably before, the alleged offense. But if the defendant offers character evidence directed to the time of trial, rebuttal evidence on the subject may be similarly directed. (48 C.A.3d 527.)

D. Cross-Examination of Defendant's Character Witness.

3. Reputation Witness.

b. Permissible Questions.

2. "Would Your Opinion Have Changed."

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 247

[§ 247] "Would Your Opinion Have Changed."

In a number of cases, prosecutors have added a further question: Whether, if the witness had heard a negative report, the witness' opinion as to the defendant's good reputation would have changed. This seems objectionable as calling for an opinion on hypothetical facts instead of testing the witness' knowledge of the defendant's actual reputation. (See People v. Weber (1906) 149 C. 325, 343, 86 P. 671; People v. Neal (1948) 85 C.A.2d 765, 771, 194 P.2d 57, infra, §248; People v. Beltran (1949) 94 C.A.2d 197, 210, 210 P.2d 238; *People v. However, in People v. McKenna (1938) 11 C.2d 327, 335, 79 P.2d 1065, the question was approved without discussion. And in People v. Boone (1954) 126 C.A.2d 746, 751, 273 P.2d 350, the court, noting the conflict in decisions, nevertheless felt bound by the McKenna case, and sanctioned the following: "If you had heard such a report would you still think that defendant had a good reputation?" (See also People v. Malloy (1962) 199 C.A.2d 219, 229, 18 C.R. 545, noting conflict and holding McKenna case controlling; *Smith v. ### X. CROSS-EXAMINATION

D. Cross-Examination of Defendant's Character Witness.

3. Reputation Witness.

c. Improper Questions.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 248

[§ 248] Improper Questions.

(1) Knowledge of Acts. The question must be limited to reports (supra, §§246, 247). A deliberate attempt by the prosecutor to introduce evidence of specific wrongful acts by inquiries as to knowledge of such acts is misconduct and is often held reversible error. (See People v. McDaniel (1943) 59 C.A.2d 672, 677, 140 P.2d 88 [witness was asked whether he knew defendant gave narcotic injections, performed abortions, etc.; "There is a vast difference between inquiring about reports, rumors and the like ... and questions as to what the witness knows of defendant"]; People v. Neal (1948) 85 C.A.2d 765, 194 P.2d 57; People v. Beltran (1949) 94 C.A.2d 197, 210, 210 P.2d 238; cf. People v. Boone (1954) 126 C.A.2d 746, 751, 273 P.2d 350 ["The fact that he and she were living together, if you knew that fact, you would still say he had a good reputation for morality?"; held improper, but not prejudicial, where witness said it wouldn't change his opinion]; People v. Marsh (1962) 58 C.2d 732, 745, 26 C.R. 300, 376 P.2d 300 [improper to ask witness, "did you know"]; 13 A.L.R.4th 796.)

In People v. Caldaralla (1958) 163 C.A.2d 32, 329 P.2d 137, defendant, charged with assault with a deadly weapon, called character witnesses who testified that he had a good reputation for "peace and quiet." On cross-examination, they were asked if they knew about several arrests for violation of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act. Defendant, on appeal, contended that this inquiry would only be relevant on whether he was a "law-abiding citizen" and not on his reputation for "peace and quiet." The court said: "[E]ven if the crimes charged had no relevance to the character trait testified to by the witness, his knowledge of the community rumors concerning an arrest would always be relevant to his qualifications to speak on the defendant's reputation. Therefore, the subject of the questions here appears to be proper. But they were not properly put. The witnesses were all asked whether they knew of the arrests, an improper form of the question since the inquiry is general talk about the defendant, not the truth of the rumors." (163 C.A.2d 41.)

(2) Details of Acts. It is also improper to pursue the inquiry so as to produce details of specific wrongful acts. Thus, in People v. Neal, supra, a trial for violation of P.C. 288, the prosecutor, over objection, repeatedly asked character witnesses whether they knew that defendant had pleaded guilty to rape and to contributing to the delinquency of a minor on prior occasions. The questions went into detail as to plea, change of plea, sentence and probation, and he offered to produce court records of these events. The court said: "The cross-examination should have been restricted to questions which would test the sufficiency of the foundation for the direct testimony, and should not have been extended to include inquiries as to what the witnesses might think defendant's general reputation in the community would be, or what the witnesses individually might think of him, if they had additional information." (85 C.A.2d 771.)

In People v. Grimes (1957) 148 C.A.2d 747, 749, 307 P.2d 932, the charge was also sex perversion. Defendant produced witnesses to his good reputation for chastity, virtue and morality. The prosecutor asked each whether he had heard of an alleged arrest with a sailor under sordid circumstances. On receiving negative answers, he continued questioning on what transpired on this hypothetical occasion, bringing the supposed facts to the jury's attention by repetition and emphasis. Held, conviction reversed.

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

X. CROSS-EXAMINATION

D. Cross-Examination of Defendant's Character Witness.

4. Opinion Witness.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 249

[§ 249] Opinion Witness.

In People v. Hempstead (1983) 148 C.A.3d 949, 196 C.R. 412, a prosecution for second degree murder with a firearm and assault with a deadly weapon, the defense was accidental discharge of the gun. Defense counsel intended to call eight witnesses to give opinion testimony on defendant's character based on their contact with him during the previous 5 to 15 years; and he made a motion in limine to preclude the prosecutor from cross-examining the witnesses about defendant's prior acts of misconduct (an unprosecuted 1974 battery and an unprosecuted 1973 assault with a deadly weapon and kidnapping). The prosecutor believed in good faith that the acts had occurred, but defense counsel represented, and offered to prove outside the presence of the jury, that none of the character witnesses had heard about either incident. The judge ruled that the cross-examination would be permitted, and counsel then decided not to call the witnesses. Held, the ruling was correct.

(a) People v. Eli (1967) 66 C.2d 63, 56 C.R. 916, 424 P.2d 356, People v. Gonzales (1967) 66 C.2d 482, 58 C.R. 361, 426 P.2d 929, and People v. Kramer (1968) 259 C.A.2d 452, 66 C.R. 638, supra, §245, involved reputation testimony, but the same danger of showing prior misconduct by innuendo rather than by proof is present where, as here, opinion testimony is involved. (148 C.A.3d 953.) However, where a witness gives an opinion on good character of the defendant, the prosecution must have the opportunity to let the jury test the validity of the opinion or its weight, even if the witness has no knowledge of events or acts which did occur. If allowing the questions would create a substantial danger of undue prejudice, the judge has discretion to preclude them under Ev.C. 352; and where the questions are permitted, the jury should be instructed that the questions and answers are to be considered only for the purposes of determining the weight to be given to the opinion (see CALJIC, No. 2.42 (1979 Revision), now CALJIC (6th ed.), No. 2.42.) (148 C.A.3d 954.)

(b) There was some merit in defendant's contention that the motion should have been granted under Ev.C. 352 because the prior acts were remote in time; and the record is silent on whether the judge did in fact weigh prejudice against probative value. This procedural omission was error, but in view of the strong case against defendant, was not prejudicial. (148 C.A.3d 955.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

X. CROSS-EXAMINATION

E. Cross-Examination of Expert Witness.

1. In General.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 250

[§ 250] In General.

(1) Method. Any permissible method of cross-examination of an ordinary witness may be used in cross-examining an expert witness. It is proper to use a hypothetical question. (See People v. Tallman (1945) 27 C.2d 209, 214, 163 P.2d 857; People v. Busch (1961) 56 C.2d 868, 874, 16 C.R. 898, 366 P.2d 314; C.E.B., 1 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §11.146 et seq.; C.E.B., Effective Direct and Cross-Examination, §7.9 et seq.; C.E.B., Expert Witness Guide 2d, §15.6; 31A Am.Jur.2d (1989 ed.), Expert and Opinion Evidence §91 et seq.; 71 A.L.R.2d 6.)

(2) Scope. The scope of cross-examination is also broad: "Once an expert offers his opinion, ... he exposes himself to the kind of inquiry which ordinarily would have no place in the cross-examination of a factual witness." (Hope v. Arrowhead & Puritas Waters (1959) 174 C.A.2d 222, 230, 344 P.2d 428, infra, §253; see Dillenbeck v. Los Angeles (1968) 69 C.2d 472, 482, 72 C.R. 321, 446 P.2d 129, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §115 [police officer, on department safety rules]; Grimshaw v. Ford Motor Co. (1981) 119 C.A.3d 757, 796, 174 C.R. 348.) Thus, a witness testifying as an expert may be cross-examined to the same extent as any other witness. The witness may be fully cross-examined as to (a) his or her qualifications, (b) the subject to which his or her expert testimony relates, and (c) the matter on which his or her opinion is based and the reasons for that opinion. (Ev.C. 721(a); see 11 A.L.R.5th 1 [questioning expert witness about allegations of expert's unprofessional conduct or professional negligence].)

2. Qualifications and Court Appointment.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 251

[§ 251] Qualifications and Court Appointment.

(1) Qualifications. The expert may be cross-examined as to his or her qualifications (Ev.C. 721(a)(1)), i.e., as to the expert's special knowledge or skill in the particular field. This may take place either on voir dire, after the foundation is laid and before the witness testifies on the issues, or after the witness' direct examination is completed. (See In re Mullin (1895) 110 C. 252, 255, 42 P. 645; San Joaquin Light & Power Co. v. Barlow (1919) 43 C.A. 241, 243, 184 P. 899; *People v. ## CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

X. CROSS-EXAMINATION

E. Cross-Examination of Expert Witness.

3. Compensation.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 252

[§ 252] Compensation.

(1) Inquiry Into Compensation by Party Permissible. Although recognized by statute in condemnation cases, the right to inquire into compensation of experts generally was uncertain in California until the adoption of the Evidence Code. It is now, however, clear: An adverse party may inquire into the compensation and expenses paid or to be paid to an expert witness by the party calling the expert. The inquiry may be made "as relevant to the credibility of the witness and the weight of" the witness' testimony. (Ev.C. 722(b); see C.E.B., Expert Witness Guide 2d, §15.14.)

The compensation paid an expert witness in a capital case is a proper subject of inquiry under Ev.C. 722(b), even if the expert is being paid under P.C. 987.9, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §174, which provides that the fact that an application to the court for funds for the payment of investigators, experts, and others has been made must be confidential. (People v. Berryman (1993) 6 C.4th 1048, 1071, 25 C.R.2d 867, 864 P.2d 40.)

(2) Inquiry Into Compensation by Nonparties Restricted. Ev.C. 722(b) authorizes inquiry into the compensation paid to the witness by the party calling the witness. A more controversial issue relates to the court's discretion to permit inquiry into the expert's status as a "professional witness," i.e., into the extent of his or her employment and compensation by parties and insurance companies in other litigation. (See Allen v. Superior Court (1984) 151 C.A.3d 447, 198 C.R. 737; 39 A.L.R.4th 742; 21 Proof of Facts 2d 73.)

In Allen v. Superior Court, plaintiff sued defendant Allen for injuries sustained in an automobile accident. By stipulation at defendant's request, plaintiff was examined by Dr. S. Plaintiff noticed a deposition of Dr. S, and served him with a subpoena duces tecum calling for records indicating the sources of his income where examinations were made at the request of insurance companies or defense lawyers over the last 5 years, and for records that would reveal what portion of his income was from treatment of patients as opposed to evaluation of persons for the defense during that period. Defendant sought a protective order on the basis of Dr. S's statement that compliance would require examination of all of his patient records, and that rather than comply, he would withdraw as a medical expert. The judge granted a limited protective order that still permitted plaintiff to require the records of reports and evaluations over the 5-year period. Held, mandamus granted to compel vacation of the order insofar as it required disclosure of records concerning other patients and examinees.

(a) Although Ev.C. 722(b) expressly refers only to the compensation paid by the party, the general provisions of the Code authorizing evidence relevant to the credibility of a witness permit a more expansive impeachment. The Law Revision Commission observed that Ev.C. 722 was desirable because of "[t]he tendency of some experts to become advocates for the party employing them." "Just as payment in the instant case is some evidence of advocacy, so too would be evidence that the particular expert usually or always testifies for one side of a particular class of lawsuit. Nothing in the Evidence Code suggests that such advocacy may be proven only by evidence of payment in the instant case." (151 C.A.3d 451.)

(b) Defendant did not object to questions asked at a deposition or trial; he conceded that Dr. S would be asked about the amount of defense practice performed and the relationship between treating patients and examining persons for insurance companies and the defense. (151 C.A.3d 451, 452, and footnote 2.) But his objection to the burden imposed by the subpoena duces tecum called for a weighing by the trial judge of the inconvenience to and right of privacy of the doctor with the right of the plaintiff to show bias. Here, plaintiff made no showing that the information sought could not be obtained through other means, e.g., conducting a deposition without production of the records. Thus, at deposition, the medical expert may be asked questions concerning what percentage of his practice involves examining patients for the defense and how much compensation he derives from defense work. Plaintiff need not learn the details of the expert's billing and accounting or the specifics of his prior testimony and depositions; publications that index the testimony of medical units are available to him. "Exact information as to number of cases and amounts of compensation paid to medical experts is unnecessary for the purpose of showing a bias." (151 C.A.3d 453.) Hence, the judge abused his discretion when he failed to require a less intrusive method of discovery. (151 C.A.3d 453.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Inquiry Into Compensation by Nonparties Restricted. A plaintiff is entitled to know what percentage of the practice of the defendant's medical expert involves examining patients for the defense and how much compensation derives from defense work. However, this right is not unfettered and unconditional, and a court should not order disclosure of the expert's private affairs without first carefully balancing the expert's privacy interests against the litigant's interest in discovering relevant facts. (Stony Brook I Homeowners Assn. v. Superior Court (2000) 84 C.A.4th 691, 698, 699, 101 C.R.2d 67 [defense medical expert could be required to provide description of his practice sufficient to permit inquiry into possible bias, but judge erred in ordering expert to allow temporary personnel access to his files in order to compile precise information about number of cases in which he testified and amount of compensation he received].)

X. CROSS-EXAMINATION

E. Cross-Examination of Expert Witness.

4. Bases and Reasons for Opinion.

a. In General.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 253

[§ 253] In General.

The most important inquiry of an expert witness concerns the matter on which the witness' opinion is based and the reasons for the opinion. (See Ev.C. 721(a)(3); see also Laird v. Mather (1958) 51 C.2d 210, 219, 331 P.2d 617; People v. Nye (1969) 71 C.2d 356, 373, 78 C.R. 467, 455 P.2d 395 [prosecution's cross-examination of defendant's psychiatric witness]; People v. Coleman (1985) 38 C.3d 69, 88, 211 C.R. 102, 695 P.2d 189, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §211; Hope v. Arrowhead & Puritas Waters (1959) 174 C.A.2d 222, 230, 344 P.2d 428; F.R. Evid., Rule 705, supra, §200.)

Thus, in Laird v. Mather, supra, on the issue of whether a Pasadena stairway handrail was negligently constructed, defendant's engineer testified that it conformed to "standard engineering practice" in Pasadena. On cross-examination, being asked whether he limited his opinion to that area, he volunteered the answer that this would be true "anywhere in the world." Held, it was permissible to impeach him by cross-examination on the contrary provisions of the Los Angeles building code. (51 C.2d 219.)

In Hope v. Arrowhead & Puritas Waters, supra, a personal injury action, plaintiff's doctor was asked, on cross-examination, whether he had received a report from a neurosurgeon who had examined plaintiff. He replied that he had, and took it into consideration in forming his opinion. Held, it was permissible then to quote from the neurosurgeon's report, including the opinion therein that plaintiff was malingering and exaggerating his symptoms. "It is proper to draw from an expert testimony showing whether he has relied on or considered any authority in formulating his opinion and, if he has done so, to confront him with it if it contradicts him." (174 C.A.2d 230.)

If an expert valuation witness has arrived at an opinion by comparing the values of other land, opposing counsel must be allowed to inquire into relevant differences between the condemned land and the property that was the subject of a comparable sale. The factors to be explored include differences in the size or location of the parcels, in project enhancement, and in dates of valuation. (People v. Reardon (1971) 4 C.3d 507, 512, 93 C.R. 852, 483 P.2d 20.)

An expert witness may also be impeached by proof that on a former occasion, he or she expressed a different opinion or made statements inconsistent with the opinion expressed. (People v. Murata (1958) 161 C.A.2d 369, 379, 326 P.2d 947 [condemnation suit; state sought to show different value testimony of defendant's expert on prior occasion]; see also Contra Costa v. East Bay Mun. Dist. (1959) 175 C.A.2d 834, 836, 1 C.R. 60, infra, §331.)

In California v. Stevenson (1970) 5 C.A.3d 60, 63, 84 C.R. 742, the condemnor's valuation witness appraised defendants' land value at $ 8 a square foot. Over the condemnor's objection, defendants showed by cross-examination that the expert had, in an unrelated condemnation case, appraised nearby property at $ 16 a square foot. The condemnor contended that such testimony was barred by Ev.C. 822(d) (now Ev.C. 822(a)(4)), providing that an opinion on the value of other property is inadmissible (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Opinion Evidence, §116). Held, the cross-examination was proper:

"No reported cases have been referred to us construing this section. Plaintiff would have us construe 'inadmissible in evidence' in the first sentence as being all-encompassing. It would preclude the giving of any opinion by any expert bearing any relation to value whether such relation was indirect and only involved one element among many which are combined by the appraiser to arrive at an opinion of market value of the whole; it would also proscribe cross-examination as well as direct examination. We are convinced, however, that the Legislature had no intention of changing existing law. All of the Evidence Code provisions relating to eminent domain were the work of the California Law Revision Commission, and there is not a word in any of that body's reports to indicate either that it was its intent to abolish a rule historically well settled or to emasculate a principle firmly entrenched as a fundamental part of the right of cross-examination. We are convinced that the limit of the intent evinced by section 822, subdivision (d) [now Ev.C. 822(a)(4)] was to exclude a party who produces an expert appraiser from using his opinion of the value of property X as a whole as a prop in proving the value of the subject property." (5 C.A.3d 64.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See People v. Alfaro (2007) 41 C.4th 1277, 1325, 63 C.R.3d 433, 163 P.3d 118 [in capital murder case, trial judge did not err in allowing prosecutor to cross-examine two defense expert witnesses based on rough notes and data prepared by third expert, and in allowing prosecutor to call third expert to testify in rebuttal; first two experts acknowledged having reviewed notes and data, even though they did not rely on them, and because they questioned their usefulness, rebuttal was appropriate]. West's Key Number Digest, Evidence k.558(9)

E. Cross-Examination of Expert Witness.

4. Bases and Reasons for Opinion.

b. Books or Other Publications.

1. Nature of Problem.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 254

[§ 254] Nature of Problem.

The question whether the cross-examiner may impeach an expert's opinion by the use of statements in scientific books or professional publications arises usually, though not invariably, in connection with medical works. It has been pointed out that a medical treatise is ordinarily inadmissible hearsay and cannot be directly offered in evidence. (See 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §296.) To allow its use by the cross-examiner does not directly violate the hearsay rule, but it does, to some extent, circumvent the rule by bringing before the jury the incompetent matter in the book. On the other hand, if the expert relies on a particular book, it would unfairly tie the hands of the cross-examiner to prevent him or her from showing that the opinion of the witness lacked support in its stated source. (See Ev.C. 721, Comment; 60 A.L.R.2d 77; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1700; C.E.B., Expert Witness Guide 2d, §15.23 et seq.; 31A Am.Jur.2d (1989 ed.), Expert and Opinion Evidence §125 et seq.; 31 Proof of Facts 2d 443.)

E. Cross-Examination of Expert Witness.

4. Bases and Reasons for Opinion.

b. Books or Other Publications.

2. Rules Governing Use.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 255

[§ 255] Rules Governing Use.

(1) Conditions. If an expert witness testifies in the form of an opinion, he or she may not be cross-examined in regard to the content or tenor of any scientific, technical, or professional text, treatise, journal, or similar publication unless one of three conditions is met:

(a) The witness referred to, considered, or relied on the publication in arriving at or forming his or her opinion. (Ev.C. 721(b)(1).) "If an expert witness has relied on a particular publication in forming his opinion, it is necessary to permit cross-examination in regard to that publication in order to show whether the expert correctly read, interpreted, and applied the portions he relied on. Similarly, it is important to permit an expert witness to be cross-examined concerning those publications referred to or considered by him even though not specifically relied on by him in forming his opinion. An expert's reasons for not relying on particular publications that were referred to or considered by him while forming his opinion may reveal important information bearing upon the credibility of his testimony." (Ev.C. 721, Comment.)

In People v. Clark (1993) 5 C.4th 950, 22 C.R.2d 689, 857 P.2d 1099, a capital murder prosecution, the prosecutor used a scholarly article entitled "With Malice Aforethought" in cross-examining a defense expert, who had testified that defendant had suffered a rage reaction at the time of the charged crimes. Held, there was no violation of defendant's federal or state constitutional or statutory rights arising from the use of this article. "In light of (1) [the expert's] testimony that he considered or relied upon all of his training in arriving at his conclusions, (2) the relationship of the abolished defenses of diminished capacity and irresistible impulse to his opinion that defendant lacked the intent to commit his crimes due to a rage reaction, and (3) [the expert's] former association with [the article's author] and his familiarity with [the author's] works, including the article in question, the cross-examination of the witness using the scholarly work was permissible." (5 C.4th 1013.)

(b) The publication has been admitted in evidence. In the rare situation in which the book or other publication is already in evidence for some distinct purpose, there is little danger in permitting the cross-examiner to use it, even though the expert has not relied on it or referred to it. Hence, Ev.C. 721(b)(2) sanctions its use.

(c) The publication has been established as a reliable authority by the testimony or admission of the witness or by other expert testimony or by judicial notice. (Ev.C. 721(b)(3); see F.R. Evid., Rule 803(18) [learned treatises exception to hearsay rule], 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §296.)

(2) Evidence, Not Exhibit. If admitted, relevant portions of the publication may be read into evidence but may not be received as exhibits. (Ev.C. 721(b).)

(3) Publications to Which Rules Apply. In McGarity v. Department of Trans. (1992) 8 C.A.4th 677, 10 C.R.2d 344, plaintiffs sued the State Department of Transportation for personal injury and death resulting from an automobile accident in which a truck hit a fuel tank, and the fuel ignited and engulfed the cab in flames. Defendant's expert gave testimony on the estimated speed of the vehicle, and plaintiffs' counsel, on cross-examination, unsuccessfully attempted to use a crash test report prepared by General Motors, which the witness had not referred to, considered or relied on. Plaintiffs contended that "similar publications" mean only formal publications for mass consumption, such as the "text, treatise, or journal" listed as examples in Ev.C. 721(b). Held, the purpose of Ev.C. 721(b) supports a broad construction of the term. (8 C.A.4th 683.) Here: "[P]laintiffs' attorney intended to use the report for the very purpose against which section 721(b) guards--to put hearsay opinion before the jury. We conclude section 721(b) applies to the General Motors crash test report." (8 C.A.4th 684.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

X. CROSS-EXAMINATION

F. Redirect and Recross-Examination.

1. Redirect Examination.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 256

[§ 256] Redirect Examination.

Once a witness has been examined, he or she cannot be reexamined as to the same matter without leave of the court. The witness may, however, be reexamined as to any new matter on which the witness has been examined by another party to the action. The court may grant or withhold leave in its discretion. (Ev.C. 774.)

Redirect examination is "an examination of a witness by the direct examiner subsequent to the cross-examination of the witness." (Ev.C. 762.) Its principal purposes are to explain or rebut adverse testimony or inferences developed on cross-examination, and to rehabilitate a witness whose credibility has been impeached. (See Kimic v. San Jose-Los Gatos Interurban Ry. Co. (1909) 156 C. 379, 392, 104 P. 986; Packard v. Moore (1937) 9 C.2d 571, 577, 71 P.2d 922; People v. Kynette (1940) 15 C.2d 731, 751, 104 P.2d 794; Hale Bros. v. Milliken (1907) 5 C.A. 344, 363, 90 P. 365; Myers v. Rose (1938) 27 C.A.2d 87, 89, 80 P.2d 527; People v. Adamson (1953) 118 C.A.2d 714, 719, 258 P.2d 1020; People v. Penrice (1961) 195 C.A.2d 360, 364, 15 C.R. 733, citing the text; 1 McCormick 5th, §32; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1896; C.E.B., 1 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §11.126; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §737 et seq.; on practice, see Rutter Group, 2 Civil Trials and Evidence §9:227 et seq.)

Redirect examination is subject to a limiting rule comparable to that governing cross-examination: It must ordinarily be confined to the scope of the cross-examination. (See Ellsworth v. Palmtag (1914) 168 C. 360, 363, 143 P. 602; People v. Barnes (1947) 30 C.2d 524, 528, 183 P.2d 654; Moore v. Re (1933) 131 C.A. 557, 560, 22 P.2d 45.) But the court may in its discretion relax this limitation, and permit questions which are outside the scope of the cross-examination and should have been asked on direct examination. (See Majors v. Connor (1912) 162 C. 131, 136, 121 P. 371; 1 McCormick 5th, §32.)

F. Redirect and Recross-Examination.

2. Recross-Examination.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 257

[§ 257] Recross-Examination.

After a redirect examination has been concluded, the trial judge may allow recross-examination. (Ev.C. 763.) Its purpose is to overcome, if possible, the effects of the redirect examination in reestablishing the redirect examiner's case or in rehabilitating the witness. (See Kimic v. San Jose-Los Gatos Interurban Ry. Co. (1909) 156 C. 379, 392, 104 P. 986; People v. Hale (1927) 81 C.A. 734, 736, 254 P. 639; 1 McCormick 5th, §32; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1897; C.E.B., 1 Civ. ## CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XI. IMPEACHMENT

A. In General.

1. Methods of Impeachment.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 258

[§ 258] Methods of Impeachment.

(1) Impeachment of Witness. A witness may be impeached, i.e., discredited, by two chief methods: (a) cross-examination of the witness; (b) rebuttal, using other witnesses to impeach the witness, or introducing other impeaching evidence. (See generally In re Anthony P. (1985) 167 C.A.3d 502, 511, 213 C.R. 424, infra, §278; Rutter Group, 2 Civil Trials and Evidence, §8:2991 et seq.; 1 McCormick 5th, §33 et seq.; 3 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §868 et seq.; BAJI (8th ed.), No. 2.20 et seq.; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §864; Wharton, 2 Criminal Evidence 14th, §420 et seq.)

(2) Impeachment of Impeaching Witness. An impeaching witness may be impeached in the same manner. Thus, in People v. Keyes (1930) 103 C.A. 624, 643, 284 P. 1096, P, a prosecution witness, was impeached by M, a defense witness, who testified to P's declarations of hostility. Then M was impeached by prosecution witnesses who testified to M's statements showing bias toward defendants. (See also Grover v. Morrison (1920) 47 C.A. 521, 530, 190 P. 1078, infra, §265; 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §894.)

Impeaching the impeaching witness naturally tends to rehabilitate the impeached witness, but there are also other methods of rehabilitation. (See infra, §360 et seq.)

(3) Prior Restrictions Eliminated. Prior California law restricted the method of impeachment on certain grounds, e.g., on those relating to capacity to observe, recollect and communicate; cross-examination was permitted, but not proof by extrinsic evidence such as other witnesses. The Evidence Code, following the original Uniform Rules, abandoned this limitation. (See infra, §261 et seq.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XI. IMPEACHMENT

A. In General.

2. Grounds.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 259

[§ 259] Grounds.

(1) Former Law. The Code of Civil Procedure (former C.C.P. 1847, 2049 et seq.), set forth a number of specific grounds for impeachment, and the opinions often stated that the statutory rules were exclusive. (See Estate of Gird (1910) 157 C. 534, 547, 108 P. 499; People v. Champion (1924) 193 C. 441, 448, 225 P. 278; People v. Vanderburg (1960) 184 C.A.2d 33, 40, 7 C.R. 287.) These sweeping declarations were, however, ignored when such unlisted matters as lack of knowledge, mental incapacity, or bias were shown. (See infra, §§261, 267.)

(2) Uniform Rules. The original Uniform Rule dispensed with specific recital of grounds and merely provided that, subject to certain limitations, "for the purpose of impairing or supporting the credibility of a witness, any party ... may examine him and introduce extrinsic evidence concerning any conduct by him and any other matter relevant upon the issues of credibility." (See 2 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1, 7; 2 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 32, 38.)

(3) Evidence Code. The relevant Evidence Code provision is as broad in scope as the original Uniform Rule, but uses a different approach: It retains the idea of specific listing and restates former California statutory grounds with some expansion, but the listing is only by way of recital, and does not operate as a limitation. Unless a statute provides otherwise, the court or jury may consider in determining a witness' credibility "any matter that has any tendency in reason to prove or disprove the truthfulness of the witness' testimony at the hearing." (Ev.C. 780; see BAJI (8th ed.), No. 2.20; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §967 et seq.) These matters include, but are not limited to, the following:

(a) The witness' demeanor while testifying and the manner in which he or she testifies. (Ev.C. 780(a).)

(b) The character of the witness' testimony. (Ev.C. 780(b).)

(c) The extent of the witness' capacity to perceive, to recollect, or to communicate a matter about which he or she testifies. (Ev.C. 780(c).)

(d) The extent of the witness' opportunity to perceive any matter about which he or she testifies. (Ev.C. 780(d).)

(e) The witness' character for honesty or veracity or their opposites. (Ev.C. 780(e).)

(f) The existence or nonexistence of a bias, interest, or other motive. (Ev.C. 780(f).)

(g) A statement previously made by the witness that is consistent with his or her testimony at the hearing. (Ev.C. 780(g).)

(h) A statement made by the witness that is inconsistent with any part of his or her testimony at the hearing. (Ev.C. 780(h).)

(i) The existence or nonexistence of any fact testified to by the witness. (Ev.C. 780(i); see Leader v. California (1986) 182 C.A.3d 1079, 1089, 226 C.R. 207, infra, §340.)

(j) The witness' attitude toward the action in which he or she testifies or toward the giving of testimony. (Ev.C. 780(j).)

(k) The witness' admission of untruthfulness. (Ev.C. 780(k).)

Because all relevant evidence is admissible unless expressly made inadmissible (Ev.C. 351, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §5), Ev.C. 780 is in a sense superfluous. But it has a practical purpose: "[T]his section makes it clear that matters that may not be 'evidence' in a technical sense can affect the credibility of a witness, and it provides a convenient list of the most common factors that bear on the question of credibility." (Ev.C. 780, Comment.) (For detailed discussion of grounds, see infra, §261 et seq.; and see supra, §90 et seq.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XI. IMPEACHMENT

A. In General.

3. Limitations.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 260

[§ 260] Limitations.

Despite the expanded list of Ev.C. 780 (supra, §259), there are a few constitutional and statutory limitations on the use of evidence to impeach a witness:

(1) Religious Belief or Lack of Belief. The constitutional guarantee of freedom of religion (see 7 Summary (9th), Constitutional Law, §371) precludes any questioning of the witness' faith. Hence, evidence of a witness' religious belief or lack of belief is inadmissible to attack or support the witness' credibility. (Ev.C. 789; see 1 McCormick 5th, §46; 76 A.L.R.3d 539 [propriety and prejudicial effect of impeaching witness by reference to religious belief or lack of it]; F. R. Evid., Rule 610.)

(2) Nationality, Race, and Alienage. These are generally considered improper grounds; there is no reasonable basis upon which members of any particular nationality or race can be said to lack credibility. (See 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§936, 937; 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §37 [do not affect competency]; infra, §274 [race or other relationship as indication of bias].)

(3) Character. Bad character is a proper ground (Ev.C. 780(e)), but impeachment is limited to the proper trait (infra, §280) and the permitted methods (infra, §285 et seq.). A nonexpert opinion about the veracity of particular statements is not proper character evidence. (People v. Melton (1988) 44 C.3d 713, 744, 244 C.R. 867, 750 P.2d 741, citing People v. Sergill (1982) 138 C.A.3d 34, 187 C.R. 497, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Opinion Evidence, §23.)

(4) Claim of Privilege. A witness' claim of privilege in a prior proceeding can no longer be shown to impeach the witness. (See 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §96.)

(5) Rape Victim. Ev.C. 1103 and Ev.C. 782 limit impeachment of the complaining witness in a rape case. (See 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §§62, 63.)

B. Capacity To Observe, Recollect, and Communicate.

1. Incompetency.

a. In General.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 261

[§ 261] In General.

(1) Permissible Ground. Despite lack of statutory authority, California cases recognized insanity or other mental disease as a ground of impeachment. (See People v. La Rue (1923) 62 C.A. 276, 284, 216 P. 627.) Ev.C. 780(c) broadly covers this and similar grounds: The trier of fact may consider the extent of the witness' capacity to perceive, recollect, or communicate any matter about which he or she testifies. (See generally Rutter Group, 2 Civil Trials and Evidence, §8:2994 et seq.; 1 McCormick 5th, §44; 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§931, 932; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §868; 23 Pepperdine L. Rev. 387 [ways multiple personality disorder may affect witness' performance]; 44 A.L.R.3d 1203 [cross-examination on mental state or condition]; 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §45.) (2) Proof by Cross-Examination or Extrinsic Evidence. The former California rule limited such impeachment to cross-examination; other witnesses could not be produced to testify to testimonial incapacity from mental derangement or disease. (See People v. Dye (1947) 81 C.A.2d 952, 963, 185 P.2d 624.) The Evidence Code, following the original Uniform Rule, contains no such restriction, and consequently made a significant change in California law. (On cross-examination, see People v. Newton (1966) 244 C.A.2d 82, 88, 52 C.R. 727 [rape; cross-examination to show that prosecutrix had been consulting a psychiatrist for 2 years before the trial]; Rutter Group, 2 Civil Trials and Evidence, §10:100 et seq.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Permissible Ground. See 81 Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Witnesses §834; 1 McCormick 6th, §44.

The effect of Ev.C. 780(c) was to change the former inflexible rule of exclusion to a rule of discretion to be exercised by the trial judge. The statute allows the witness' capacity to perceive, recollect, or communicate to be tested, but the trial judge retains the authority to exclude collateral evidence. (People v. Thornton (2007) 41 C.4th 391, 428, 61 C.R.3d 461, 161 P.3d 3 [in capital murder case, trial judge did not abuse discretion in refusing to allow defense to explore issue of letter regarding family problems that witness was composing on day she observed defendant and victim struggling in car].)

(3) (New) No Sua Sponte Duty To Order Psychiatric Evaluation. A trial judge is not required, on his or her own motion, to order and consider the psychiatric evaluation of a potential witness where that witness' competence, an issue for the court, is challenged on grounds of mental or emotional impairment. Further, as far as the jury issue of credibility is concerned, the Confrontation Clause confers no right to pretrial discovery of a witness' psychiatric records that would override a statutory or constitutional privilege, and "[n]o case has remotely held that the confrontation clause, or any other constitutional guarantee, could compel a witness to undergo a new court-ordered psychiatric examination, or impose on the trial court a sua sponte duty to order such an examination." (People v. Anderson (2001) 25 C.4th 543, 576, 577, 106 C.R.2d 575, 22 P.3d 347.) West's Key Number Digest, Witnesses k.327-

XI. IMPEACHMENT

B. Capacity To Observe, Recollect, and Communicate.

1. Incompetency.
- b. Expert Opinion.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 262

[§ 262] Expert Opinion.

Expert testimony concerning a particular witness' testimonial incapacity has been permitted for impeachment in sex cases. Thus, in People v. Neely (1964) 228 C.A.2d 16, 39 C.R. 251, D, the prosecutrix, a mental patient at Napa State Hospital, testified to attempted rape by defendant. Defendant called Dr. G, not a psychiatrist but the hospital doctor in charge of D's case, to testify to her tendency to exaggerate and distort. Held, it was error to exclude this testimony; defendant "was entitled to have the jury informed of the mental and emotional instability of the prosecuting witness." (228 C.A.2d 20.) (See People v. Castro (1994) 30 C.A.4th 390, 396, 35 C.R.2d 839 [rule in sex violation cases allowing admission of psychiatric evidence as to mental and emotional condition of complaining witness for impeachment purposes was inapplicable, where defendant's offer of proof was narrowly directed at truth of victim's molestation allegation]; on use of psychiatric opinions, see 1 McCormick 5th, §44; 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§935, 990; 48 Cal. L. Rev. 648; 20 A.L.R.3d 684, 701 [testimony as to insanity and mental derangement]; on expert testimony about factors affecting accuracy of eyewitness identification, see People v. McDonald (1984) 37 C.3d 351, 208 C.R. 236, 690 P.2d 709, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Opinion Evidence, §70.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

In People v. Espinoza (2002) 95 C.A.4th 1287, 116 C.R.2d 700, a prosecution for lewd conduct with a child, the defense moved to admit testimony by a psychiatrist regarding the victim's credibility. The proposed testimony was based on the psychiatrist's review of the records of the case. The trial judge excluded the evidence under Ev.C. 352 (balancing of probative value against potential for prejudice; see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §17). Held, the ruling was correct. The cases allowing a court to order the complaining witness in a sex offense case to undergo a psychiatric examination were overruled by a 1980 amendment of P.C. 1112 (text, §263). That overruling also extinguished any case authority for the admission of expert psychiatric evidence regarding the credibility of a sex crime victim. There is now no authority for distinguishing between complaining witnesses in sex offense cases and witnesses in other criminal cases. Because the psychiatric expert's testimony was largely inadmissible and, in any case, had little probative value, exclusion of the testimony under Ev.C. 352 was proper. (95 C.A.4th 1312.) (See People v. Chatman (2006) 38 C.4th 344, 374, 42 C.R.3d 621, 133 P.3d 534 [where defense subjected prosecution witness to psychological testing without notice to prosecution or awareness on part of court, trial judge properly excluded expert testimony intended to impeach witness on basis of psychological problems; witness was subjected to full cross-examination and impeachment by traditional methods, and exclusion was fully consistent with general policy disfavoring testimony of this nature]; 1 McCormick 6th, §44.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XI. IMPEACHMENT

B. Capacity To Observe, Recollect, and Communicate.

1. Incompetency.

c. No Psychiatric Examination in Sexual Assault Case.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 263

[§ 263] No Psychiatric Examination in Sexual Assault Case.

(1) Former Law. In Ballard v. Superior Court (1966) 64 C.2d 159, 49 C.R. 302, 410 P.2d 838, the court held that the trial judge, in a rape case, could order a psychiatric examination of the prosecuting witness to aid the jury in its assessment of her credibility. (64 C.2d 173.) Ballard was followed in People v. Russel (1968) 69 C.2d 187, 70 C.R. 210, 443 P.2d 794. (See 19 Cal. Western L. Rev. 236 [criticism of Wigmore's view that sex victims are unreliable and should be examined]; cf. People v. Pierce (1970) 11 C.A.3d 313, 317, 89 C.R. 751 [examination without court order improper, and psychiatrist's testimony excluded]; People v. Mills (1978) 87 C.A.3d 302, 308, 151 C.R. 71 [interpreting Ballard opinion as allowing comment on refusal of prosecutrix to cooperate, but not use of contempt process to force her to submit to examination].)

(2) Present Law. Ballard and Russel were partially nullified by P.C. 1112: The trial court cannot order a prosecuting witness, complaining witness, or any other witness, or a victim in a sexual assault prosecution to submit to a psychiatric or psychological examination for the purpose of assessing the witness' credibility. (See 12 Pacific L. J. 340; 15 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 973; 45 A.L.R.4th 310 [permissibility of psychiatric examination of complainant in sex case].)

The provision has been applied to dependency hearings. In re Dolly A. (1986) 177 C.A.3d 195, 222 C.R. 741, held that P.C. 1112 barred a psychiatric examination of a 7-year-old child who was the subject of a dependency hearing based on allegations that her father had sexually molested her during visits in his home. "[T]he dependency proceeding was, in this instance, more nearly criminal than civil." (177 C.A.3d 203.)

(3) Statute Held Constitutional. People v. Armbruster (1985) 163 C.A.3d 660, 210 C.R. 11, rejected a constitutional due process attack on P.C. 1112: "Ballard prompted increased exercise by trial courts of the authority to order the prosecutrix in a sex case to undergo a mental examination testing her credibility. The Legislature halted that trend by enacting section 1112, the evident purpose of which is to spare victims of sex crimes the inconvenience and embarrassment of a mental examination, a procedure of debatable value to the ascertainment of the truth in such cases ... and a probable disincentive to more widespread reporting of sex offenses. The enactment of section 1112 represents the Legislature's sound assessment of the practice given impetus by Ballard and the resulting prohibition bears a reasonable relationship to the evident legislative purpose to counteract that practice." (163 C.A.3d 664.)

(4) Effect of Proposition 8. Armbruster also rejected the contention that Proposition 8 (Cal. Const., Art. I, §28(d), 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §8) nullified P.C. 1112. The constitutional provision supersedes statutes that exclude relevant evidence; P.C. 1112 does not directly deal with admissibility or inadmissibility of evidence; it merely divests trial courts of discretion to order mental examinations to test the witness' credibility. (163 C.A.3d 665.) (See also People v. Hagerman (1985) 164 C.A.3d 967, 975, 213 C.R. 286 [same holding].)

The 1984 Legislature confirmed the Armbruster holding by amending P.C. 1112, to clarify that the statutory prohibition applies "[n]otwithstanding the provisions of subdivision (d) of Section 28 of Article I of the California Constitution." The enacting statute adds: "It is not the intent of the Legislature in enacting this provision to suggest or imply that subdivision (d) of Section 28 of Article I of the California Constitution has limited the application of Section 1112 of the Penal Code in any way."

(5) Examination for Purposes Other Than To Assess Credibility. In People v. Taylor (1986) 180 C.A.3d 622, 225 C.R. 733, defendant, an orderly at a home for developmentally handicapped persons, was convicted of raping one of the residents. His motion for a psychiatric examination of the prosecuting witness to determine whether she suffered from "lunacy or other unsoundness of mind" or whether she was capable of consenting to sexual intercourse was denied. Held, the ruling was correct.

(a) Defendant's discovery motion was subject to the standard of Ballard v. Superior Court, supra, which remains viable except as nullified by P.C. 1112; hence, the determination of whether circumstances indicated the necessity for an examination was a matter for the court's discretion. In view of the extensive psychiatric record of the prosecuting witness, there was no abuse of that discretion in denying defendant's motion for an independent examination. Moreover, consent was not a tendered defense, and defendant's sole claim was that no intercourse occurred. (180 C.A.3d 634, 635.)

(b) Proposition 8 prohibits exclusion of evidence; it does not compel the court to order discovery so that the defendant may obtain such evidence. "To the extent that defendant's motion requested a psychiatric examination for purposes other than prohibited by Penal Code section 1112, Proposition 8 has no application." (180 C.A.3d 634, 635.)

XI. IMPEACHMENT

B. Capacity To Observe, Recollect, and Communicate.

2. Poor Memory.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 264

[§ 264] Poor Memory.

(1) Permissible Ground. It is proper to show that the witness has a poor memory, because this tends to cast doubt on the witness' recollection of the particular facts to which he or she has testified. (See Ev.C. 780(c).)

(2) Cross-Examination. This defect is usually proved by questioning the witness on his or her recollection of other matters. Thus, in Davis v. California Powder Works (1890) 84 C. 617, 24 P. 387, the validity of a Mexican land grant was in question, there being no official record of it. The witness Alvarado testified to signing the same as governor on a particular date some 40 years before. He was cross-examined as to many other events in his life of great importance, but was unable to recollect any dates. Held, this was a proper means of cross-examination to test his recollection and to indicate the possibility that he was mistaken as to the date of the grant. The court quoted the following observation: "A shrewd witness, who is swearing falsely to something which cannot be disproved by direct testimony, will confine his recollection wholly to that single fact, professing a want of recollection of all the facts and circumstances attending it. An inexperienced witness, whose willingness to oblige his friend exceeds his judgment, will endeavor to give verisimilitude to his tale by a recital of imaginary circumstances. A stringent cross-examination will generally involve the latter in a web of contradictions, which will be in a measure evaded by the other, with the answer that he 'does not recollect'." (84 C. 625.) (See also Sharp v. Hoffman (1889) 79 C. 404, 408, 21 P. 846; 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§935, 995; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §871.)

(3) Proof by Extrinsic Evidence. Former California cases held, consistently with those on mental derangement (supra, §261), that other witnesses could not be called to testify to defective memory. (Ah Tong v. Earle Fruit Co. (1896) 112 C. 679, 682, 45 P. 7; People v. Champion (1924) 193 C. 441, 448, 225 P. 278.) Here again, the Evidence Code, making no such restriction, changed the California law. (See 20 A.L.R.3d 684, 708 [medical testimony].)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XI. IMPEACHMENT

B. Capacity To Observe, Recollect, and Communicate.

3. Intoxication.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 265

[§ 265] Intoxication.

(1) Intoxication at Time of Events. It may be shown, in cross-examination or by extrinsic evidence, that the witness was intoxicated at the time of the events about which the witness is testifying, and was therefore unable to observe or comprehend correctly what he or she claims to have seen or heard. (People v. Salladay (1913) 22 C.A. 552, 554, 135 P. 508 [reversible error to prevent showing that prosecuting witness was continuously intoxicated for 16 days, including day of crime]; Grover v. Morrison (1920) 47 C.A. 521, 530, 190 P. 1078; Silvey v. Harm (1932) 120 C.A. 561, 572, 8 P.2d 570 [Q. "Had you had anything to drink?" held proper]; People v. Singh (1937) 19 C.A.2d 128, 129, 64 P.2d 1149; In re D. L. (1975) 46 C.A.3d 65, 74, 120 C.R. 276 [evidence of intoxication is relevant to witness' capacity to observe, recollect and communicate]; cf. People v. Acosta (1937) 21 C.A.2d 57, 63, 68 P.2d 298 [general question as to intoxication on certain day, without reference to time or place of events, is improper]; see 1 McCormick 5th, §44; 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §933; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §872; 8 A.L.R.3d 749.)

In Grover v. Morrison, supra, an automobile accident case, D, witness for plaintiffs, was asked on cross-examination whether he was drunk at the time, and denied it; W was then called by defendant to testify that D had been drunk, then plaintiffs were denied permission to ask W whether he was drunk himself at the time. Held, this was improper. W was subject to impeachment on the same theory that D was; i.e., it could be shown that W's condition rendered him incapable of determining whether D was drunk, or that "experiencing the usual effects of such a condition, his brain was susceptible to the impression that every person he met or saw, and not he, was in a state of alcoholic intoxication." (47 C.A. 530.)

(2) Prior Acts of Intoxication. Prior acts of intoxication, or habitual intemperance, are regarded as remote and not proper impeachment. (People v. Stanley (1962) 206 C.A.2d 795, 798, 24 C.R. 128; see 1 McCormick 5th, §44; 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §933.)

In Springer v. Reimers (1970) 4 C.A.3d 325, 84 C.R. 486, there was no evidence that plaintiff was intoxicated or suffering from delirium tremens when he fell from the top of a moving trailer. Defendants, however, showed that within a year before the accident, he was warned about drinking before coming to work. In argument, defendants claimed that this habitual intemperance affected his credibility. Held, chronic alcoholism was an improper basis for impeachment; even if evidence of plaintiff's drinking habits had some relevancy to the issue of damages, defendants could not properly have used it to disparage his credibility and establish indirectly that the accident was his fault. (4 C.A.3d 339.)

XI. IMPEACHMENT

B. Capacity To Observe, Recollect, and Communicate.

4. Narcotic Addiction.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 266

[§ 266] Narcotic Addiction.

(1) General Rule of Admissibility. Evidence of habitual use of narcotics is admitted in many jurisdictions, either on cross-examination or by testimony of a medical expert, to show weakened powers of perception, memory and narration. (See 1 McCormick 5th, §44; 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §934; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §§874, 875; 20 A.L.R.3d 684, 709; 65 A.L.R.3d 705.)

California cases are in accord, where the evidence relates to the time of observation of the facts or testimony. (See People v. Bell (1955) 138 C.A.2d 7, 11, 291 P.2d 150; People v. Buono (1961) 191 C.A.2d 203, 232, 12 C.R. 604 [discussion]; People v. Perez (1965) 239 C.A.2d 1, 6, 48 C.R. 596; People v. Viniegra (1982) 130 C.A.3d 577, 581, 181 C.R. 848 [prosecution was properly allowed to ask defense witness whether she was under influence of prescription drugs].) (On proof of addiction to impeach veracity, see infra, §282.)

(2) Good Faith in Asking Question. In People v. Rocha (1971) 3 C.3d 893, 92 C.R. 172, 479 P.2d 372, the prosecutor contended that defendant was cross-examined about smoking a marijuana cigarette in order to demonstrate that he was unable to clearly perceive and recall the events on the evening of the knifing. When making an offer of proof, however, the prosecutor failed to produce necessary expert testimony about the effect of marijuana on the cerebral processes, and also failed to show that the substance defendant smoked actually was marijuana or that he was under its influence when the crime was committed. Defendant claimed prejudicial misconduct. Held, the prosecutor's failure was not conclusive evidence of bad faith. "His explanation of the reason for the question and his argument that the admissibility of evidence of intoxication caused by smoking marijuana should parallel the introduction of evidence of alcoholic intoxication (which requires no expert testimony) demonstrates a sincere attempt to impeach the witness." (3 C.3d 901.)

(3) Addiction Related to Significant Period. Like habitual intemperance (see supra, §265), narcotic addiction not related to the significant period cannot be admitted, at least in the absence of expert testimony showing a detrimental effect on testimonial capacity. (See People v. Pargo (1966) 241 C.A.2d 594, 600, 50 C.R. 719; People v. Balderas (1985) 41 C.3d 144, 191, 222 C.R. 184, 711 P.2d 480.)

In People v. Bennett (1969) 276 C.A.2d 172, 80 C.R. 706, defendant was an ex-felon whose sister was dating police officer R. At various times, all three persons used the sister's car, but defendant was alone in the vehicle when it was searched after a routine traffic stop. Hidden under the left front seat was R's fully loaded revolver. At defendant's trial for being an ex-felon in possession of a concealable firearm, he attempted to show that R was a heavy drinker and consumer of narcotics, to suggest that R could have placed the gun there while in a stupor. The proffered evidence, however, was rejected as irrelevant. Held, this was error. The "specified occasion" on which interest centered was the 2-week period during which R failed to report his loss. "It is quite clear from the offers made by defendant that he thought he could prove a habit of drinking and pill taking sufficiently regular so that there should have been several occasions during that period when Officer R.'s condition would cause him not to remember all of his actions." (276 C.A.2d 175.) The evidence was directed to the relevant time period and, "for what it was worth, counsel wanted to lay the foundation for a permissible inference which, if drawn by the jury, would negative the People's theory that his client stole the gun. He should have been permitted to present his proof." (276 C.A.2d 176.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XI. IMPEACHMENT

C. Bias or Other Improper Motive.

1. In General.

a. Ground of Impeachment.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 267

[§ 267] Ground of Impeachment.

(1) Former Law. Although former California statutes were not explicit, the case law supported impeachment by inquiry into motives. (See People v. Homan (1930) 103 C.A. 161, 163, 284 P. 252 [refusal to permit inquiry into motives of prosecution witnesses held reversible error]; People v. Vanderburg (1960) 184 C.A.2d 33, 41, 7 C.R. 287, infra, §350, quoting the text.)

(2) Present Law. The existence of a bias, interest, or other motive is a ground of impeachment. (Ev.C. 780(f); see People v. Allen (1978) 77 C.A.3d 924, 931, 144 C.R. 6, citing the text; People v. Fatone (1985) 165 C.A.3d 1164, 1173, 211 C.R. 288; In re Anthony P. (1985) 167 C.A.3d 502, 507, 213 C.R. 424, infra, §278; and see generally Rutter Group, 2 Civil Trials and Evidence, §8:3005 et seq.; 1 McCormick 5th, §39; 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §940 et seq.; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §876 et seq.; 62 A.L.R.2d 610; on methods of challenging witness for bias on cross-examination, see Rutter Group, 2 Civil Trials and Evidence, §10:106 et seq.) Moreover, the Federal Rules of Evidence clearly contemplate the use of this ground of impeachment. (See United States v. Abel (1984) 469 U.S. 45, 105 S.Ct. 465, 468, 83 L.Ed.2d 450, 456, infra, §275.)

In People v. Fatone, supra, defense counsel, cross-examining a deputy sheriff, asked if he had talked to another deputy sheriff who had the same last name as the victim. Counsel was seeking to show bias of the witness, but the judge demanded an offer of proof. When counsel explained that he was unable to see the witness before trial and only wanted to find out whether the event had occurred, the judge declared that the question was asked in bad faith, and admonished counsel before the jury. Held, the question was proper and the judge was guilty of prejudicial misconduct. "Defense counsel has an absolute right to explore avenues of potential bias with a prosecution witness, particularly a police officer. And he can hardly be required to know the answer to every question in advance; he cannot compel witnesses to submit to pretrial interviews or to tell the truth if they do." (165 C.A.3d 1173.) The court added the following comment:

"We recognize leading authorities on the subject of cross-examination suggest counsel should never ask a question without knowing the answer in advance ... ; but this is a tactical restriction, not a legal one by any means." (165 C.A.3d 1174.)

(3) Scope of Inquiry. For practical reasons, the inquiry for impeachment is usually confined to the prominent motives for untruthful testimony: interest in the suit, which necessarily tends to bias, and other circumstances showing bias that are not too remote. (See 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §945.) And a witness who admits prejudice is not allowed to give reasons to justify the prejudice. (People v. Zemavasky (1942) 20 C.2d 56, 63, 123 P.2d 478.)

(4) Constitutional Right to Inquiry. A trial judge's ruling prohibiting inquiry into bias of a prosecution witness is a violation of the defendant's constitutional right of confrontation; but the error is subject to the Chapman harmless error test (whether the error was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt). (Delaware v. Van Arsdall (1986) 475 U.S. 673, 106 S.Ct. 1431, 1435, 1438, 89 L.Ed.2d 674, 683, 686; see People v. Dyer (1988) 45 C.3d 26, 48, 246 C.R. 209, 753 P.2d 1 [distinguishing Van Arsdall on its facts, but approving harmless error analysis]; People v. Adames (1997) 54 C.A.4th 198, 209, 62 C.R.2d 631 [in prosecution for sexual abuse of minor, trial judge did not violate defendant's confrontation right by excluding evidence of past molestation of victim's mother, which was offered to show bias affecting mother's tendency to believe daughter's accusations; potential for confusion of issues outweighed marginal relevance of collateral inquiry].)

XI. IMPEACHMENT

C. Bias or Other Improper Motive.

1. In General.

b. Abolition of Foundation Requirement.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 268

[§ 268] Abolition of Foundation Requirement.

Under former California law, the fact of hostility or interest could be shown by circumstances without laying any foundation, but, if shown by declarations of the witness, the rule governing prior inconsistent statements applied: A foundation had to be laid by asking the witness if he or she made the statements and giving the witness an opportunity to explain them. (See Silvey v. Hodgdon (1874) 48 C. 185, 188; Fagan v. Lentz (1909) 156 C. 681, 689, 105 P. 951; Estate of Bedford (1910) 158 C. 145, 147, 110 P. 302; Ash v. Soo Sing Lung (1918) 177 C. 356, 358, 170 P. 843; People v. Sweeney (1960) 55 C.2d 27, 36, 9 C.R. 793, 357 P.2d 1049; on rule in other jurisdictions, see 1 McCormick 5th, §39; 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§953, 964; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §§881, 882; 87 A.L.R.2d 407.)

The Evidence Code abolished the foundation requirement for inconsistent statements (see infra, §333) and thus abrogated this rule.

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XI. IMPEACHMENT

C. Bias or Other Improper Motive.

2. Fear or Susceptibility to Pressure.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 269

[§ 269] Fear or Susceptibility to Pressure.

(1) General Rule of Admissibility. In People v. Yeats (1984) 150 C.A.3d 983, 198 C.R. 268, defendant was charged with hit-and-run driving, based on a collision with a car driven by deputy sheriff P. P was the only identification witness. To impeach his testimony, defendant called H, who testified that he had been at the scene, that the officer was in shock and passing in and out of consciousness, and that the other man at the scene was not defendant. To impeach H, the prosecutor introduced evidence that H had been approached by a stranger who sought by threat to pressure him into testifying falsely that the officer's headlights were off at the time of the accident. The judge instructed the jury that the threat could be considered only on the issue of credibility. Held, admission of this evidence was not error. Where the threat comes not from the defendant but from a stranger, the inquiry is into the state of mind of the witness, and the prosecution must first establish that as relevant. Here, H's testimony conflicted with that of P, and raised a question concerning P's mental competence and ability to identify defendant as the driver of the car. Thus, H's credibility was in issue, and the evidence was properly admitted to show that he was fearful, and had a motive not to tell the truth. (150 C.A.3d 986.)

In Davis v. Alaska (1974) 415 U.S. 308, 94 S.Ct. 1105, 39 L.Ed.2d 347, the court held that the trial judge improperly restricted cross-examination of a witness on his probationary status as a juvenile delinquent; the defendant was entitled to show susceptibility of the witness to undue pressure. (94 S.Ct. 1110, 39 L.Ed.2d 354.)

Similarly, in People v. Adams (1983) 149 C.A.3d 1190, 197 C.R. 623, W, the only witness to give direct testimony against defendant, was on juvenile probation at the time of the alleged crime, and at the time of his first discussion of the case with the police, he was in custody for another matter. Held, it was error to prevent questioning on his status as a juvenile probationer. As in Davis, supra, it was not enough that the witness was questioned about bias; defendant was entitled to go into the facts from which the jurors could draw inferences relating to reliability. W was not simply a past misdemeanor; he was on probation and aware of the consequences of noncooperation. "Thus, his status as a probationer was relevant to impeach his testimony for bias, prejudice, and his possible motive to cooperate with the authorities, regardless of the act that got him on probation in the first place." (149 C.A.3d 1193.) (Cf. People v. Carpenter (1999) 21 C.4th 1016, 1050, 90 C.R.2d 607, 988 P.2d 531 [court properly ruled that defense counsel could not ask witness whether she was on probation in juvenile matter or question her about facts underlying her juvenile adjudication, in which she allegedly used gun; defendant was allowed to ask whether witness had juvenile case, whether promises had been made to her regarding her juvenile matter, and whether she was familiar with guns; distinguishing Davis].)

(2) Exception: Speculative Evidence. If the theory behind the alleged motive is speculative, the evidence may be excluded. Thus, in People v. Johnson (1984) 159 C.A.3d 163, 205 C.R. 427, a probation revocation hearing was held after defendant's arrest for robbery, and T, the key prosecution witness, identified defendant. Defense counsel, in cross-examination, sought to ask T whether he ran a "fencing operation" out of his retail store, whether he "charged working prostitutes money to enter his hotel" and whether he had "contact" with officers in the vice squad. Counsel's theory was that evidence of T's illegal activities showed a motive to fabricate his testimony. Held, it was not error to sustain objections to these questions. (a) The theory that T wanted to "please the police" was untenable; there was no indication that he was being investigated, and he had nothing to gain from the police or district attorney by fabricating testimony. (b) The theory that T would testify falsely to protect himself against defendant's disclosure of T's alleged criminal conduct to the police was absurd; such a fear would provide a motive to help, not hurt, defendant. "Indeed, the fact that Mr. Tang became the key prosecution witness suggests that he had nothing to hide from the police and nothing to fear from defendant." (159 C.A.3d 168, 169.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XI. IMPEACHMENT

C. Bias or Other Improper Motive.

3. Financial Interest in Outcome.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 270

[§ 270] Financial Interest in Outcome.

"It is always proper for a party against whom a witness has given damaging testimony to show out of the mouth of the witness himself, if he can, or by other sources, if necessary, that such witness has an unusual interest in the outcome of the case." (People v. Sacramento Butchers' Protective Assn. (1910) 12 C.A. 471, 494, 107 P. 712; see Ev.C. 780(f); 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§966, 969; 21 Proof of Facts 2d 73 [financial interest of expert witness].)

Thus, it may be shown that the witness is paying some or all of the expenses of the litigation. (People v. Sacramento Butchers' Protective Assn., supra, 12 C.A. 494.) In Gould v. Stafford (1891) 91 C. 146, 27 P. 543, the witness testified that he was president of a company that paid the expenses. He was asked why the company was doing so, and the court sustained an objection. Held, the question should have been allowed. (91 C. 156.)

Any other circumstances tending to show financial interest may also be brought out, or the fact of interest may be ascertained by a direct question. (Balcom v. Growers Warehouse Co. (1921) 55 C.A. 474, 481, 204 P. 39 [attorney witness had contingent fee contract]; H. W. Smith v. Swenson (1930) 105 C.A. 60, 65, 286 P. 1050 [witness had assigned notes to plaintiff for collection, recovery to be shared equally].)

In Calvert v. State Bar (1991) 54 C.3d 765, 1 C.R.2d 684, 819 P.2d 424, a disciplinary proceeding against an attorney for incompetent representation, the court held that the referee had erroneously refused to allow the attorney to impeach the complaining client regarding the client's financial interest in the outcome of the proceeding. The client had a fee dispute with the attorney, and a pending malpractice action. "Generally, any fact or circumstance tending to show that a witness has a financial interest in the outcome of a legal proceeding is a proper ground for impeachment." (54 C.3d 777, citing the text.)

On the other hand, in National Oil Refining & Mfg. Co. v. Producers Refining Co. (1915) 169 C. 740, 147 P. 963, an action for breach of contract, plaintiff's manager was cross-examined on his financial interest as stockholder and otherwise. But the court refused to permit inquiry into alleged trouble he was having with the stockholders which had allegedly influenced him to file this suit to obtain an unjustified recovery and thus quiet their complaints. Held, the ruling was proper. (169 C. 742.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XI. IMPEACHMENT

C. Bias or Other Improper Motive.

4. Benefits Received or Contemplated.

a. General Rule of Admissibility.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 271

[§ 271] General Rule of Admissibility.

(1) Proper Impeachment. A witness may be impeached by showing that he or she has received or will receive money or other benefits from the party for whom the witness testifies.

Thus, where two persons are injured in an automobile accident, and in an action brought by one where the other testifies for the defendant, the plaintiff may, on cross-examination, show that the witness has made a settlement with the defendant. (Bluemel v. Kroizy (1931) 114 C.A. 205, 207, 299 P. 756; Luis v. Cavin (1948) 88 C.A.2d 107, 114, 198 P.2d 563; Zelayeta v. Pacific Greyhound Lines (1951) 104 C.A.2d 716, 728, 232 P.2d 572; see 1 McCormick 5th, §§39, 266.)

Similarly, the fact that a witness has been continually employed by the same party, or is receiving more than the statutory witness fees, may be brought out. (See People v. Tomalty (1910) 14 C.A. 224, 235, 111 P. 513; Moniz v. Bettencourt (1938) 24 C.A.2d 718, 724, 76 P.2d 535 [notwithstanding incidental reference to insurance company employer]; Causey v. Cornelius (1958) 164 C.A.2d 269, 280, 330 P.2d 468 [same: employment of insurance company investigator]; 1 McCormick 5th, §39; 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §961; 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §19; infra, §273.)

In a criminal case, it is proper for the defense to ask a prosecution witness whether he or she has been promised immunity from punishment for criminal charges brought against him or her; and it is also permissible to inquire into the mere fact that charges are pending against the witness as a circumstance to show that he or she may, by testifying, be seeking favor or leniency. (People v. Pantages (1931) 212 C. 237, 258, 297 P. 890 [witness previously arrested on various charges, but released from custody and not yet tried]; People v. Sweeney (1960) 55 C.2d 27, 9 C.R. 793, 357 P.2d 1049, infra, §344; People v. Phillips (1985) 41 C.3d 29, 45, 222 C.R. 127, 711 P.2d 423 [inquiry as to any agreement affecting witness' credibility is proper, even if terms of agreement are not communicated to witness]; People v. Blackwell (1927) 81 C.A. 417, 419, 253 P. 964 [charge pending]; People v. Allen (1978) 77 C.A.3d 924, 931, 144 C.R. 6, citing the text; see 1 McCormick 5th, §39; 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§967, 968.)

(2) Distinction: Exclusion on Relevance Grounds. The trial judge has wide discretion to limit cross-examination on the grounds of marginal relevance. Although the defense is entitled to elicit evidence that a witness is motivated by an expectation of leniency or immunity, if there is no evidence of an agreement that might furnish a bias or motive to testify against the defendant, limitation for lack of relevance may be proper. (People v. Bento (1998) 65 C.A.4th 179, 194, 195, 76 C.R.2d 412 [following People v. Dyer (1988) 45 C.3d 26, 246 C.R. 209, 753 P.2d 1; denial of request to cross-examine prosecution witness concerning four crimes he was involved in was proper, where there was no evidence that witness might receive some benefit for testifying, and there was large amount of other evidence defendant could use to impeach him].)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XI. IMPEACHMENT

C. Bias or Other Improper Motive.

4. Benefits Received or Contemplated.

b. Discretionary Exclusion of Settlement.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 272

[§ 272] Discretionary Exclusion of Settlement.

The rule of Zelayeta v. Pacific Greyhound Lines (1951) 104 C.A.2d 716, 232 P.2d 572 (supra, §271) is subject to the qualification that settlement evidence may be excluded where its probative value is outweighed by its prejudicial effect. (See Ev.C. 352, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §132.) In Granville v. Parsons (1968) 259 C.A.2d 298, 66 C.R. 149, defendant P rear-ended B. S, following behind, applied his brakes, lost control, veered into the center of the freeway and collided with plaintiff's car, injuring her and killing decedent. Plaintiff sued B, S and P. B paid $ 1,000 in settlement, S paid $ 38,500 in settlement, and both were dismissed. In the trial against P alone, on the sole issue of liability, P conceded negligence, taking the position that S was also negligent and that his negligence was a superseding cause. S, testifying on direct examination for plaintiff, said that his brakes had been in good condition. Defense counsel, on cross-examination, questioned him about the settlement, and made much of it in argument to the jury. Verdict was for defendant P. Held, reversed.

(a) The questions were relevant to credibility under the Zelayeta rule, but under the Evidence Code, relevancy is not enough, and prior decisions are not always controlling: "Section 352 tells [trial courts] that in the field of relevance stare decisis takes a back seat to justice." (259 C.A.2d 305.)

(b) Evidence of money paid to a former plaintiff (Zelayeta) or a dismissal given to a former defendant (this case) does not necessarily indicate bias when the ex-litigant becomes a witness. The former plaintiff may have been forced by economic circumstances to take a paltry sum, and the former defendant may have been coerced into an excessive payment by considerations foreign to the litigation. (259 C.A.2d 304.) The trial judge should, outside the presence of the jury, inquire into the circumstances, to make the preliminary ruling on whether the evidence tends to affect credibility. (259 C.A.2d 304; see supra, §50 et seq.)

The court concluded that, assuming the evidence was admissible, defense counsel made an improper use of it in argument. (259 C.A.2d 304.) (See BAJI (8th ed.), No. 2.28 [instruction on limited purpose of evidence of settlement (impeachment only)].)

XI. IMPEACHMENT

C. Bias or Other Improper Motive.

5. Personal or Other Relationship.

a. In General.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 273

[§ 273] In General.

The fact of relationship--family, fraternal, national, etc.--may always be shown as a means of developing an inference of bias. (See People v. Krug (1935) 10 C.A.2d 172, 176, 51 P.2d 445 [defendant was Armenian; held proper to cross-examine witnesses as to their nationality on theory that fellow Armenians might be inclined to favor defendant]; People v. Pierce (1969) 269 C.A.2d 193, 200, 75 C.R. 257, citing the text [defense witnesses were all close relatives; prosecutor could show that they had changed their stories under pressure of affection, fear or familial relationship]; People v. Ruiz (1998) 62 C.A.4th 234, 240, 72 C.R.2d 572, citing the text; 1 McCormick 5th, §39; 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §949; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §886.) (On group relationship, see infra, §§274, 275; on meretricious relationship, see infra, §276.)

Business relationship may also be shown, e.g., that the witness is employed by a party or representative of a party, and therefore looks to that person for compensation or continued employment. (People v. Burch (1920) 46 C.A. 391, 396, 189 P. 716; see 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §949.) This is so despite the fact that in many cases, it may result in the incidental disclosure of insurance, which would ordinarily be improper. Thus, in Levy v. Berner (1930) 110 C.A. 65, 293 P. 896, a doctor called by defendant testified to examining plaintiffs after the accident, and said that their injuries were less serious than they claimed. Held, it was proper to show that he was employed to make the examination by an insurance company. (110 C.A. 69.) (See Moniz v. Bettencourt (1938) 24 C.A.2d 718, 724, 76 P.2d 535; Causey v. Cornelius (1958) 164 C.A.2d 269, 280, 330 P.2d 468; cf. Eldridge v. Clark & Henery Const. Co. (1925) 75 C.A. 516, 634, 243 P. 43 [approving principle, but referring to older California cases on reference to insurance]; 1 McCormick 5th, §39; 4 A.L.R.2d 761, 779.)

XI. IMPEACHMENT

- C. Bias or Other Improper Motive.
  - 5. Personal or Other Relationship.
- b. Evidence of Group Relationship Improper.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 274

[§ 274] Evidence of Group Relationship Improper.

In People v. Perez (1981) 114 C.A.3d 470, 170 C.R. 619, the court took note of a statement in People v. Zammora (1944) 66 C.A.2d 166, 214, 152 P.2d 180, that use of the word "gang" referred only to an ordinary association of young people in a particular neighborhood. But the Perez opinion held that admission of evidence of gang membership was prejudicial error: "Thirty-six years have passed since Zammora. It is fair to say that when the word "gang" is used in Los Angeles County, one does not have visions of the characters from the 'Our Little Gang' series. The word gang as used in the case at bench connotes opprobrious implications." (114 C.A.3d 479.)

The prejudicial nature of reference to a "gang" was more fully explored by a plurality opinion in People v. Cardenas (1982) 31 C.3d 897, 184 C.R. 165, 647 P.2d 569. Defendant was prosecuted for felonies including attempted robbery, and produced a number of alibi witnesses. The prosecutor attacked their credibility by eliciting testimony that they and defendant were members of a youth "gang" or "group" known as El Monte Flores; two of the male witnesses were asked to exhibit to the jury their gang tattoos; and the prosecutor also sought to introduce evidence that members of other "groups" were not welcome to "join" the El Monte Flores gang. Held, admission of this evidence, together with another serious error, was prejudicial and called for reversal of the conviction.

(a) The probative value of the gang membership was minimal; the fact that the witnesses lived in the same neighborhood and were friends of defendant had already been established by other testimony. (31 C.3d 904.)

(b) The evidence created a substantial danger of undue prejudice. In Southern California, Chicano youth gangs have received widespread media publicity for purported criminal activities, and the jury might improperly infer defendant's criminal disposition from membership in such a group. (31 C.3d 905.) This danger was increased by questions suggesting that hostilities existed between the two youth gangs, and by questions giving the impression that the attempted robbery was a gang operation. (31 C.3d 905.)

Two justices dissented, asserting that the record did not show any reference to "gangs" or "violent crimes," and that in re Wing Y. (1977) 67 C.A.3d 69, 79, 136 C.R. 390, though distinguishable on its facts, affirmed the general rule that a witness may be asked about group association. (31 C.3d 915.) (See People v. Maestas (1993) 20 C.A.4th 1482, 1495, 1497, 25 C.R.2d 644, citing the text and following Cardenas [trial judge erred in admitting evidence of defendants' common gang membership to show that one of them was biased; evidence was weak and cumulative of other evidence showing close personal relationship between defendants]; People v. Davis (1996) 42 C.A.4th 806, 813, 49 C.R.2d 890 [admission of cumulative testimonial evidence as to bias of defendants' fellow gang members constituted abuse of discretion, but error was harmless in light of "ironclad" nature of prosecution's case; citing Maestas and Cardenas].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See People v. Avitia (2005) 127 C.A.4th 185, 192, 24 C.R.3d 887 [in prosecution for discharge of firearm in grossly negligent manner and possession of assault weapon, admission of evidence of gang graffiti found in defendant's room was improper, where no gang enhancement was alleged, there was no evidence that charged crimes were related to gang activity, and there was no real dispute that weapons found in defendant's room belonged to him].

- C. Bias or Other Improper Motive.
  - 5. Personal or Other Relationship.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 275

[§ 275] Evidence of Group Relationship Proper.

In People v. Munoz (1984) 157 C.A.3d 999, 204 C.R. 271, the trial judge permitted the prosecutor to question defense witnesses on Mexican youth group membership, but directed him to refrain from using the word "gang" in any questions. Defendant contended that this "semantic solution" permitted "equally devastating" terms to be used (association, group, club, and brothers). Held, no prejudicial error occurred.

(a) With defense counsel's acquiescence and consistent with In re Wing Y. (1977) 67 C.A.3d 69, 136 C.R. 390, the prosecutor limited his inquiry to possible bias or prejudice flowing from a common club or association relationship. The prosecutor did not "add any fillips relating to violence or hostilities between competing groups." (157 C.A.3d 1012, distinguishing People v. Cardenas (1982) 31 C.3d 897, 184 C.R. 165, 647 P.2d 569, supra, §274.)

(b) After witness R testified to being defendant's friend, any evidence of club affiliation became cumulative, and would be improper if it created a substantial danger of undue prejudice; but here, the questions were limited and the responses were neutral, and it was not reasonably probable that a different verdict would have been rendered if the evidence had been excluded. (157 C.A.3d 1013.)

In United States v. Abel (1984) 469 U.S. 45, 105 S.Ct. 465, 83 L.Ed.2d 450, Abel and Ehle were charged with robbery. Ehle pleaded guilty and testified against defendant Abel, identifying him as a participant in the robbery. Defendant then called Mills, who had served time in prison with Ehle, to testify that Ehle told him that he planned to implicate defendant falsely. The prosecutor, on cross-examination of Mills, asked if he and defendant were members of a "secret type of prison organization" which had a creed requiring members to deny its existence and lie or kill for each other. Mills denied knowledge of such an organization, and the prosecutor then recalled Ehle, who testified that Mills and he were indeed members of a secret prison organization with that creed, and that it would have been "suicide" for Ehle to have told Mills what Mills attributed to him. Held, the district judge acted within his discretion in admitting Ehle's testimony.

(a) Ehle's testimony about the prison gang made the existence of Mills' bias toward defendant more probable; i.e., the gang membership supported the inference that Mills' testimony was slanted or perhaps fabricated in defendant's favor: "A witness' and a party's common membership in an organization, even without proof that the witness or party has personally adopted its tenets, is certainly probative of bias." (105 S.Ct. 469, 83 L.Ed.2d 457.)

(b) Defendant contended that the judge should not have permitted Ehle's precise description of the gang as a lying and murderous group; but this argument ignores the fact that the type of organization may be relevant to show bias. "If the organization is a loosely knit group having nothing to do with the subject matter of the litigation, the inference of bias arising from common membership may be small or nonexistent. ... The attributes of the Aryan Brotherhood--a secret prison sect sworn to perjury and self-protection--bore directly not only on the fact of bias but also on the source and strength of Mills' bias. The tenets of this group showed that Mills had a powerful motive to slant his testimony towards respondent, or even commit perjury outright." (105 S.Ct. 470, 83 L.Ed.2d 458.) (See People v. Harris (1985) 175 C.A.3d 944, 957, 221 C.R. 321 [evidence of gang membership was admissible as relevant on possible threats to prosecution witnesses that resulted in obvious bias during their testimony]; People v. Sanchez (1997) 58 C.A.4th 1435, 1450, 69 C.R.2d 16 [in murder trial, evidence that defendant was gang member was properly admitted because of its relevance to witness credibility, where two witnesses had initially refused to identify defendant out of fear of retaliation by defendant's gang]; People v. Ruiz (1998) 62 C.A.4th 234, 242, 72 C.R.2d 572 [evidence that defendant and third party who, in interview with police, confessed to defendant's crime, were both members of same gang was admissible on issue of third party's bias and also to prove direct inconsistency in his interview statements (that he did not even know defendant)].)

XI. IMPEACHMENT

C. Bias or Other Improper Motive.

6. Declarations or Acts of Friendship.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 276

[§ 276] Declarations or Acts of Friendship.

Particular acts or declarations showing a friendly disposition toward a party are admissible for impeachment. (See People v. Lindsey (1949) 90 C.A.2d 558, 565, 203 P.2d 572 [friendship]; cf. People v. Vertrees (1915) 169 C. 404, 411, 146 P. 890 [after ascertainment of fact of friendly interest, improper to inquire into details of transaction prejudicial to defendant]; see also 1 McCormick 5th, §39; 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§950, 951.)

Thus, a meretricious relationship between the witness and a party may be shown. (People v. Sweeney (1960) 55 C.2d 27, 41, 9 C.R. 793, 357 P.2d 1049, infra, §344; People v. Payton (1939) 36 C.A.2d 41, 54, 96 P.2d 991 [prosecution allowed to ask defendant's witness whether she had lived with him and borne him children]; People v. Warren (1959) 175 C.A.2d 233, 241, 346 P.2d 64 [alibi witness for defendant asked whether she had been "sleeping with appellant"]; People v. Dukes (1966) 241 C.A.2d 488, 493, 50 C.R. 609 [homosexual relationship]; People v. Ogg (1968) 258 C.A.2d 841, 845, 66 C.R. 289 [defendant's character witness, a woman, was asked if she and defendant lived together; following Sweeney]; People v. James (1976) 56 C.A.3d 876, 886, 128 C.R. 733 [defendant's cross-examination concerning whether prosecution witness lived with and was financially dependent on prosecutrix should have been allowed]; see 25 A.L.R.3d 537 [cross-examining witness about illicit relationship with defendant in criminal case].)

Acts condoning brutal conduct of a defendant may be shown. In People v. Lint (1960) 182 C.A.2d 402, 6 C.R. 95, the mother of a murdered child lived with defendant. She was asked whether, in a conversation with a neighbor, she had said that the child got two black eyes falling down the steps, and whether the child had interrupted and said "Daddy hit me." On her denial, the neighbor was called in rebuttal and so testified. Held, admissible, to impeach the credibility of the paramour (mother) by indicating her knowledge of defendant's brutal conduct and her condoning of it. (182 C.A.2d 417.)

XI. IMPEACHMENT

C. Bias or Other Improper Motive.

7. Hostility Toward Adverse Party.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 277

[§ 277] Hostility Toward Adverse Party.

"The credibility of an adverse witness may be assailed by proof that he cherishes a feeling of hostility towards the party against whom he is called; and it may be established by proof of the acts or declarations of the witness." (Silvey v. Hodgdon (1874) 48 C. 185, 188; see People v. Hannon (1977) 19 C.3d 588, 601, 138 C.R. 885, 564 P.2d 1203, citing the text; People v. Keyes (1930) 103 C.A. 624, 643, 284 P. 1096, supra, §258; People v. Sandow (1933) 133 C.A. 559, 563, 24 P.2d 521; Byrd v. Savage (1963) 219 C.A.2d 396, 401, 32 C.R. 881; 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §950; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §§883, 884.) Thus, in Newman v. Los Angeles Transit Lines (1953) 120 C.A.2d 685, 690, 262 P.2d 95, a personal injury action, defendant, cross-examining plaintiff, properly sought to develop her accusations of spying and frameup, to show her suspicious nature and hatred of defendant.

Such hostility may be inferred from a previous quarrel. In Anderson v. Southern Pac. Co. (1933) 129 C.A. 206, 211, 18 P.2d 703, a wrongful death action, plaintiff's expert witness was properly questioned on the possible bias resulting from his discharge from a position as a result of information furnished by defendant. (On right to cross-examine prosecuting witness as to pending or contemplated civil action against accused for damages arising out of same transaction, see 98 A.L.R.3d 1060; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §887.) But the examiner should not go beyond the fact of the quarrel, and the detailed circumstances should be excluded. (See 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §951.)

The impeaching evidence must show hostility toward the party; the rule does not permit a showing of hostility toward another witness. (People v. Vandenburg (1960) 184 C.A.2d 33, 41, 7 C.R. 287, infra, §350; see Webster v. Orr (1917) 174 C. 426, 428, 163 P. 361 [plaintiff not entitled to show that defendants' witness had been discharged by defendants after accident; evidence could not be used to establish witness' hostility either to plaintiff or to employer]; Eye v. Kafer (1962) 202 C.A.2d 449, 456, 457, 20 C.R. 841 [impeaching evidence improper on two grounds: hostility toward nonparty witness, and attempt to show specific acts degrading witness to explain hostility].)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XI. IMPEACHMENT

C. Bias or Other Improper Motive.

8. Bias Against Racial Group.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 278

[§ 278] Bias Against Racial Group.

In re Anthony P. (1985) 167 C.A.3d 502, 213 C.R. 424, decides a question of first impression in California: The propriety and extent of cross-examination to expose a bias against the racial group to which a defendant or other party belongs. Defendant Anthony P., a 17-year-old black high school student, was charged with molesting Deborah M., a 15-year-old white girl student, on the school grounds. He testified that he did not touch or otherwise molest her, and the case hinged entirely on the credibility of Deborah M. On cross-examination, defendant's counsel first asked her whether she had "a prejudice against black people," and she answered in the negative. Counsel then asked, "Would it offend you if a black person asked you for a date?" The prosecution objected and the objection was sustained. Held, refusal to allow this question was a violation of defendant's constitutional right of cross-examination and reversible error per se.

(a) Proof of a witness' hostility toward a specific individual who is a party to the litigation is clearly admissible. (167 C.A.3d 508, citing the text.) "But what if the bias or prejudice is against the racial group of which the party happens to be a member rather than the party himself? Is the logical connection between attitude and testimony too attenuated to affect the witness' credibility?" (167 C.A.3d 508.) Several cases from other jurisdictions have answered this question by holding that, in balancing considerations of unfair prejudice with the probative value of the questions, they may be allowed as proper impeachment. (167 C.A.3d 508, 509.) And some courts have extended the rule to permit inquiry into bias against other groups (e.g., mentally retarded persons, police officers). (167 C.A.3d 510.)

(b) The broad language of Ev.C. 780 supports the position taken by these courts: "The test under this code provision is whether the kind of bias involved has 'any tendency in reason' to affect the issue of credibility. It seems difficult to argue a witness could never be so influenced by racial prejudice that it clouded his perceptions or shaded his testimony or led him to deliberately lie." (167 C.A.3d 510.)

(c) The existence of bias can be established in several ways: "First, under cross-examination, the witness may directly admit her bias. 'Yes, I am prejudiced against blacks' is a straightforward example of this form of proof. Secondly, the witness may admit making past statements which are circumstantial evidence of the presence of bias. Thus, the witness' admission she has said things like 'I don't think blacks should go to the same schools as whites' would tend to demonstrate the existence of such bias. Thirdly, the witness may have acted in ways which are consistent with the presence of bias. For example, an admission the witness had changed seats because a black sat down next to her would be an indication she entertained a bias against blacks. Fourth, a witness may admit that if confronted with a hypothetical situation she would act or speak in a certain way which an unbiased person would not be expected to do. 'If a black asked me for a date, I would slap him,' is an example of this form of evidence. Fifth, the witness may have had some personal experience which provides a motive to be biased. If a witness admits she has been continually teased by a group of black students, in her own mind this might give her reason to be biased against all blacks. Sixth, a witness may come from a family or social environment which encourages bias against certain groups. A witness who concedes her mother and father had spoken derogatorily about blacks throughout her formative years also has supplied some evidence suggesting she may have been influenced to be biased against blacks." (167 C.A.3d 511.)

(d) It is proper cross-examination to seek to develop any or all of these six kinds of evidence of racial bias, as well as others; and a defendant is not afforded his or her constitutional right if he or she is denied the right to pursue one of these discrete avenues of inquiry: "For instance, merely because a witness denies having had experiences which would give her a motive for bias against a given racial group does not mean further cross-examination won't lead her to admit she has acted or spoken in ways indicating she indeed has such a bias. Or under further cross-examination she may outright admit she is prejudiced against members of this race or that she was brought up to dislike them." (167 C.A.3d 512.) Here, counsel was allowed to ask only one question seeking one form of evidence of bias; at least five other discrete avenues of inquiry were barred. This was a clear abuse of discretion. (167 C.A.3d 512.)

(e) The trial judge has discretion to limit and control the inquiry, but a threshold level of cross-examination is constitutionally required; and cross-examination does not step over this threshold until the witness' various possible biases have been thoroughly explored. Here the cross-examination never came near the threshold. "This is not a situation where, for instance, the cross-examiner already has struck out with three or four of the fundamental lines of inquiry and now seeks to start out on another. Nor had this cross-examiner already asked a large number of questions in pursuit of one of these lines of inquiry without yielding any results and then sought to continue along the same path. It is not even the case where the cross-examiner has been pursuing several lines of inquiry without success for an hour, or a half hour, or even 15 minutes. And it most certainly is not a case where the cross-examiner elicited ample evidence of racial bias and now seeks to draw out cumulative testimony on the same topic." (167 C.A.3d 513.)

(f) The trial judge's ruling denied defendant the constitutional right of effective cross-examination; and, under the rule laid down in Davis v. Alaska (1974) 415 U.S. 308, 94 S.Ct. 1105, 1110, 39 L.Ed.2d 347, 354, supra, §269, was constitutional error which no showing of lack of prejudice would cure. Hence, it was reversible error per se. (167 C.A.3d 514.)

D. Bad Character.

1. Admissibility of Character Traits.
  - c. Distinction: Narcotic Addiction.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 282

[§ 282] Distinction: Narcotic Addiction.

It has been pointed out that drug addiction at the relevant time may be shown to attack the witness' capacity to observe, recollect and communicate. (See supra, §266.) A distinct problem is whether it may be shown to impeach the veracity of the witness. (See 16 So. Cal. L. Rev. 333; 48 Cal. L. Rev. 653, 676.)

People v. Bell (1955) 138 C.A.2d 7, 291 P.2d 150, upheld the trial judge's exclusion of the evidence on the ground that, like mental incompetency, it could be shown only on cross-examination, and not by the production of other witnesses. (138 C.A.2d 12.) Because the restrictive rule has been eliminated by the Evidence Code (see supra, §261), this part of the Bell holding is not an obstacle to admission. (See also, for discussions of Bell and suggestions that evidence of addiction may be admitted in judge's discretion, People v. Buono (1961) 191 C.A.2d 203, 232, 12 C.R. 604, citing the text; People v. Gonzales (1963) 217 C.A.2d 41, 48, 31 C.R. 540.)

However, the court in the Bell case also observed that there is no substantial medical authority to support the conclusion that addiction causes "a general predilection toward untruthfulness." (138 C.A.2d 12.) And both the weight of authority and the California rule exclude such evidence as collateral matter tending to degrade (see infra, §348), unless it is followed by testimony tending to show that the witness was under the influence while testifying or when the events occurred, or that his or her mental faculties were actually impaired by the addiction. (See People v. Ortega (1969) 2 C.A.3d 884, 899, 902, 83 C.R. 260; People v. Smith (1970) 4 C.A.3d 403, 412, 84 C.R. 412 [following Ortega]; *People v. ### XI. IMPEACHMENT

D. Bad Character.

1. Admissibility of Character Traits.

d. Distinction: Address and Occupation.

1. Alford Rule of Admissibility.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 283

[§ 283] Alford Rule of Admissibility.

In Alford v. United States (1931) 282 U.S. 687, 51 S.Ct. 218, 75 L.Ed. 624, defendant's counsel questioned a government witness on his address and occupation, seeking to show that he was in the custody of federal authorities. Held, such an inquiry is proper for several purposes, e.g., to identify the witness with his community so that reputation evidence may be obtained, to develop facts which might tend to show bias, and to enable the jury to interpret his testimony with knowledge of his environment. (51 S.Ct. 219, 75 L.Ed. 627.)

The Alford case was followed in People v. Lain (1943) 57 C.A.2d 123, 134 P.2d 284. Defendant was charged with robbery. B, the alleged victim and chief prosecuting witness, testified on direct examination that he was a railroad patrolman. Defendant, on cross-examination, tried to show that his principal occupation was that of a gambler. Held, it was error to prevent this inquiry. (57 C.A.2d 135.) (See also, holding that identity or address of witness was essential to fair trial, People v. Brandow (1970) 12 C.A.3d 749, 754, 90 C.R. 891 [true identity, home town, name of doctor and address of grandmother]; People v. Mascarenas (1971) 21 C.A.3d 660, 666, 98 C.R. 728 [address of 16-year-old volunteer undercover narcotics agent]; and see 1 McCormick 5th, §29, footnote 8; 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §949, p. 791; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §§952, 953; 85 A.L.R.3d 541 [residence].)

In Smith v. Illinois (1968) 390 U.S. 129, 88 S.Ct. 748, 19 L.Ed.2d 956, defendant was charged in an Illinois court with illegal sale of narcotics. The principal witness, who testified that he bought heroin from defendant in a restaurant with marked money furnished by police, was "James Jordan." On cross-examination, Jordan admitted that this was not his real name, but when he was asked for his correct name and address, objections were sustained. Held, conviction reversed. When credibility of a witness is in issue, the very starting point of cross-examination is to ask who he is and where he lives; this opens up countless avenues of in-court examination and out-of-court investigation. "To forbid this most rudimentary inquiry at the threshold is effectively to emasculate the right of cross-examination itself." (88 S.Ct. 750, 19 L.Ed.2d 960, citing Alford v. United States, supra.) A concurring opinion refers to the exception recognized in Alford for questions which tend to harass, annoy or humiliate, and would place in the same category questions which tend to endanger the personal safety of the witness; here, however, the State made no showing to come within any such exception. (88 S.Ct. 751, 19 L.Ed.2d 960.)

The dissenting opinion destroys any rational foundation for the majority's holding: Defense counsel knew the witness because he had previously represented him; defendant himself had known the witness for a few years, and knew that he was a narcotic addict; defense counsel never said that he lacked the requested information, and did not pursue the matter when objections were sustained. "The inference seems to be patent that counsel was asking routine questions, to which he already knew the answers, and that his failure to get answers in court was of no consequence." ## CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XI. IMPEACHMENT

D. Bad Character.

1. Admissibility of Character Traits.
- d. Distinction: Address and Occupation.
2. Where Disclosure Is Not Required.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 284

[§ 284] Where Disclosure Is Not Required.

(1) Not Necessary for Fair Trial. Smith v. Illinois (1968) 390 U.S. 129, 88 S.Ct. 748, 19 L.Ed.2d 956, supra, §283, was distinguished in People v. Patejdl (1973) 35 C.A.3d 936, 940, 111 C.R. 191. The court observed that disclosure of address and identity of an informer has been required where his testimony is the primary evidence of guilt; but, where there is no substantial conflict between the testimony of the defendant and that of the informant on the issues determinative of guilt, impeachment would have no effect and disclosure of the address is not required. (35 C.A.3d 943.) (See also People v. Mardian (1975) 47 C.A.3d 16, 40, 121 C.R. 269 [denial of defense inquiry into witness' address is not error where defense counsel has already placed witness in his or her proper setting; distinguishing Alford]; People v. Benjamin (1975) 52 C.A.3d 63, 73, 75, 124 C.R. 799 [no error in precluding inquiry into home addresses of four prosecution witnesses where addresses were not essential to fair trial of defendant].)

(2) Peace Officer's Residence. Where a peace officer's testimony in a criminal action will become a matter of public record, the officer may state his or her business address in lieu of his or her place of residence. (P.C. 1328.5; see People v. Lewis (1982) 133 C.A.3d 317, 322, 184 C.R. 31 [applying P.C. 1328.5 to deny defendant's request to discover arresting officers' home addresses for purpose of investigating officers' reputations in their communities].)

(3) Danger to Law Enforcement Employees and Experts. Specified witnesses in a criminal proceeding in connection with an event perceived or investigated by the witnesses in the course of their official duties may state their business addresses instead of their places of residence. These witnesses include specialists and experts employed by law enforcement agencies and employees of the county welfare department or the department administering a county's public social services program. However, if the court finds, after an in camera hearing, that the probative value of a witness' residential address outweighs the creation of substantial danger to the witness, the witness must give the residential address. (P.C. 1328.6.) The statute does not abridge a defendant's right to discover the information, and it does not apply to confidential informants.

(4) Danger to Victim of Sex Crime. Ev.C. 352.1 establishes a procedure for exclusion of evidence of the current address and telephone number of the victim of specified sex crimes (rape, sodomy or oral copulation) in which the defendant is alleged to have compelled the participation of the victim by force, violence, duress, menace, or threat of great bodily harm. (a) The district attorney, by noticed motion made within a reasonable time prior to the hearing, seeks exclusion. (b) The court may grant the motion if it finds that the probative value of the evidence is outweighed by substantial danger to the victim. (c) However, nothing in Ev.C. 352.1 abridges or limits the defendant's right to discover or investigate that information. (See 9 Pacific L. J. 460.)

In order to make it effective after Proposition 8 (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §8), the 1985 Legislature repealed and reenacted Ev.C. 352.1 by a two-thirds vote. (Stats. 1985, Chap. 335, §1.)

D. Bad Character.

2. Methods of Proving Character Traits.

a. Specific Acts.

1. General Rule.

aa. Civil Action.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 285

[§ 285] Civil Action.

Except for proof of a felony conviction (infra, §292), particular wrongful or criminal acts, or particular instances of untruthfulness, cannot be offered in evidence in a civil action to prove the bad character of the witness for honesty or veracity. (Ev.C. 787; see Estate of James (1899) 124 C. 653, 657, 662, 57 P. 578 [evidence that one witness had written and another had read an immoral book, and that one woman witness had had illicit relations with a man]; Steen v. Santa Clara Valley Mill & Lumber Co. (1901) 134 C. 355, 356, 66 P. 321 [evidence that witness had attempted to defraud his employer]; Grudt v. Los Angeles (1970) 2 C.3d 575, 591, 86 C.R. 465, 468 P.2d 825; 1 McCormick 5th, §41; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §§901, 905; 20 A.L.R.2d 1421.)

In Grudt v. Los Angeles, supra, plaintiff, suing for wrongful death, contended that municipal police officers had intentionally shotgunning her husband to death. After plaintiff's witnesses gave testimony conflicting with that of officers on the scene, defense counsel, over objection, impeached them with evidence of their own and their families' prior criminal arrests, purportedly to show bias against the officers on trial. Held, the impeachment was improper. Under the guise of suggesting bias, the jury was encouraged to disbelieve the witnesses because they were men of "bad character" who had been "in trouble" with the police. (2 C.3d 591.) The court added: "Were we to approve the trial judge's acceptance of this impeachment evidence, we would erect an insurmountable barrier to an aggrieved citizen's ability to gain proper civil redress against errant peace officers. Parties electing to sue any policeman--for damages in tort, for contract reparations, or merely to collect a debt--would be obliged to produce witnesses willing to be subjected to the degradation of a courtroom examination of their prior arrest records and the records of all members of their families to show bias against police generally. And even if such witnesses were found, their credibility in the eyes of the jury would be seriously impaired by evidence of prior criminal arrests, not because of the likelihood of actual bias, but because of the 'bad character' suggested by the mere arrests. Furthermore, the principle advocated by defendants could not be limited to cases in which police officers are parties. Presumably, under defendants' theory, whenever any person testifies contrary to the testimony of a police officer witness, the arrest record of that person or of members of his family would be admissible to imply that he so testified because he was biased against policemen generally. To state the proposition is to compel its rejection." (2 C.3d 592.)

The exclusionary rule of Ev.C. 787 does not apply where evidence is offered to prove that the witness testified falsely on his or her direct examination. (See People v. Reyes (1976) 62 C.A.3d 53, 61, 62, 132 C.R. 848; Leader v.

D. Bad Character.

2. Methods of Proving Character Traits.

a. Specific Acts.

1. General Rule.

bb. Criminal Action.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 286

[§ 286] Criminal Action.

Ev.C. 787 was nullified by Proposition 8 (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §8) for criminal actions. (People v. Mickle (1991) 54 C.3d 140, 168, 284 C.R. 511, 814 P.2d 290 [under Proposition 8, evidence that prosecution witness had threatened witnesses in proceedings against him was admissible; traits of willingness to harm others and to subvert truth-finding process indicated morally lax character and readiness to lie]; People v. Harris (1989) 47 C.3d 1047, 1082, 255 C.R. 352, 767 P.2d 619; People v. Wheeler (1992) 4 C.4th 284, 295, 14 C.R.2d 418, 841 P.2d 938; People v. Adams (1988) 198 C.A.3d 10, 18, 243 C.R. 580, infra, §287; People v. Lankford (1989) 210 C.A.3d 227, 236, 258 C.R. 322; on impeachment using evidence of past criminal conduct that did not result in conviction, see infra, §314.) Nevertheless, evidence of particular acts to show character for honesty or dishonesty is still subject to exclusion under Ev.C. 352 (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §17). (See People v. Von Villas (1992) 10 C.A.4th 201, 268, 13 C.R.2d 62 [even if trial judge erred in applying Ev.C. 787 in excluding evidence offered to impeach prosecution witness, error was harmless since evidence was inadmissible under Ev.C. 352].)

In People v. Wheeler, supra, a prosecution for sale of cocaine, the trial judge, over defendant's objection, allowed admission of a defense witness' recent misdemeanor conviction for grand theft to impeach her testimony. The Court of Appeal affirmed, and the Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the Court of Appeal.

(a) Proposition 8.

(1) Ev.C. 786 prohibits the use of evidence showing traits of a witness' character other than honesty or veracity, and Ev.C. 787 states the rule that specific instances of conduct relevant only as tending to prove a trait of character are inadmissible for impeachment; but Ev.C. 788 permits impeachment by evidence of conviction of a felony. (4 C.4th 290.)

(2) Before 1982 it was clear that Ev.C. 787 precluded the use of misdemeanors for impeachment. But Cal. Const., Art. I, §28(d) supersedes all California restrictions on the admission of relevant evidence except those preserved or permitted by the express words of the section. (4 C.4th 291.) "By its plain terms, section 28(d) requires the admission in criminal cases of all 'relevant' proffered evidence unless exclusion is allowed or required by an 'existing statutory rule of evidence relating to privilege or hearsay, or Evidence Code, [s]ections 352, 782 or 1103,' or by new laws passed by two-thirds of each house of the Legislature. ... The limitations on impeachment evidence contained in Evidence Code sections 787 and 788 do not fall within any of section 28(d)'s stated exceptions to its general rule that relevant evidence is admissible. It follows that Evidence Code sections 787 and 788 no longer preclude the introduction of relevant misdemeanor misconduct for impeachment in criminal proceedings." (4 C.4th 292.) "We therefore conclude that if past criminal conduct amounting to a misdemeanor has some logical bearing upon the veracity of a witness in a criminal proceeding, that conduct is admissible, subject to trial court discretion, as 'relevant' evidence under section 28(d)." (4 C.4th 295.)

(b) Standard of admissibility.

(1) "The voters have expressly removed most statutory restrictions on the admission of relevant credibility evidence in criminal cases, including the rule that felony convictions are the only form of conduct evidence admissible for impeachment. Hence, they have decreed at the least that in proper cases, nonfelony conduct involving moral turpitude should be admissible to impeach a criminal witness." (4 C.4th 295.)

(2) Section 28(d) does preserve the trial court's discretion to exclude evidence where its probative value is substantially outweighed by its potential for prejudice, confusion, or undue consumption of time (Ev.C. 352). (4 C.4th 295.) And the admissibility of any past misconduct for impeachment is limited at the outset by the relevance requirement of moral turpitude. (4 C.4th 296; see infra, §305 et seq.) "Beyond this, the latitude section 352 allows for exclusion of impeachment evidence in individual cases is broad. That statute empowers courts to prevent criminal trials from degenerating into nitpicking wars of attrition over collateral credibility issues. By expressly preserving this authority, section 28(d) makes clear the voters' determination to prevent such consequences." (4 C.4th 296.)

(3) In exercising its discretion under Ev.C. 352 a court must always take into account the factors traditionally deemed pertinent in this area. "But additional considerations may apply when evidence other than felony convictions is offered for impeachment. In general, a misdemeanor--or any other conduct not amounting to a felony--is a less forceful indicator of immoral character or dishonesty than is a felony. Moreover, impeachment evidence other than felony convictions entails problems of proof, unfair surprise, and moral turpitude evaluation which felony convictions do not present. Hence, courts may and should consider with particular care whether the admission of such evidence might involve undue time, confusion, or prejudice which outweighs its probative value." (4 C.4th 296.)

(4) In this case the trial court consciously exercised its discretion and did so soundly. It concluded that the defense witness' relatively recent conviction for grand theft, an offense necessarily involving both moral turpitude and dishonesty, was highly relevant to the witness' credibility. (4 C.4th 297.)

(c) Hearsay.

(1) A misdemeanor conviction itself is inadmissible hearsay when offered as evidence that a witness committed misconduct bearing on credibility. (4 C.4th 297.) As part of the 1965 recodification of evidentiary rules, the Legislature enacted certain exceptions to the hearsay rule for felony convictions. (4 C.4th 298, citing Ev.C. 1300, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §271.) At the same time the Legislature retained both the existing prohibition against use of prior conduct for impeachment (Ev.C. 787) and the exception for felony convictions (Ev.C. 788). Thus, the hearsay objection to the evidence specified in Section 788 is overcome by the declaration in the section that such evidence may be shown for the purpose of attacking a witness' credibility. (4 C.4th 298.)

(2) No similar statutory exception exists for the use of misdemeanor convictions, and nothing in Proposition 8 changes the long-established understanding that a misdemeanor conviction comes within the statutory rule of inadmissible hearsay when offered for the truth of the charge. (4 C.4th 298.) Here the evidence of the witness' misdemeanor conviction was admitted through her personal concession that she had suffered it. But even if her testimony was competent to establish the fact of conviction, the conviction itself was inadmissible hearsay evidence of underlying criminal conduct relevant to impeachment. "We therefore conclude that evidence of a misdemeanor conviction, whether documentary or testimonial, is inadmissible hearsay when offered to impeach a witness' credibility." (4 C.4th 300.)

(3) "However, defendant waived any hearsay claim by making no trial objection on that specific ground." (4 C.4th 300, citing the text.)

Two justices dissented. (4 C.4th 301, 305.)

[§ 287] Prior Nonsexual Conduct of Rape Prosecutrix.

In People v. Adams (1988) 198 C.A.3d 10, 243 C.R. 580, a prosecution for rape and related offenses, the defense was consent. Defendant offered a witness to testify that the prosecutrix had falsely accused others of rape, and the judge excluded the evidence. Held, conviction reversed.

(a) People v. Wall (1979) 95 C.A.3d 978, 157 C.R. 587, holding such evidence admissible under Ev.C. 1103(a)(1), is in conflict with People v. Jones (1984) 155 C.A.3d 153, 202 C.R. 162, holding it inadmissible under Ev.C. 787. In People v. Taylor (1986) 180 C.A.3d 622, 225 C.R. 733, supra, §263, the court held that the Truth-in-Evidence provision of Proposition 8 had repealed Ev.C. 790 (infra, §362), but left open the question whether Ev.C. 787 remained valid. (198 C.A.3d 17.)

(b) Under the reasoning of Taylor, supra, and in accord with Wall, supra, it was error to exclude otherwise admissible evidence that the prosecutrix had on two previous occasions falsely accused others of rape. (198 C.A.3d 18.) (See People v. Franklin (1994) 25 C.A.4th 328, 336, 30 C.R.2d 376 [in prosecution for sexual abuse of child, trial judge erred in excluding evidence that victim falsely accused another of sexual misconduct; following Adams]; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §959; 71 A.L.R.4th 469 [showing that witness made similar charges against other persons]; cf. *People v. #### D. Bad Character.

2. Methods of Proving Character Traits.

b. Reputation.

1. Reputation in Community.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 288

[§ 288] Reputation in Community.

The traditional method of proving a relevant trait of character is by evidence of reputation. (See Ev.C. 1100, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §54.) And the theory of impeachment by proof of bad reputation necessarily assumes some locality in which the witness circulates and in which his or her reputation is likely to be known. Hence, it has been customary in the past to restrict the showing to evidence of reputation in the community or neighborhood in which the witness lives. "The reason for limiting such proof to the neighborhood of one's residence is that he there usually spends most of his time and most frequently comes into social and business contact with others." (Khan v. Zemansky (1922) 59 C.A. 324, 329, 210 P. 529, infra, §289.) And "the witness to such reputation must, at least, be acquainted with the prevailing impression in the community, as disclosed by actions, conduct, or conversations relating to the character in issue, although it is not necessary that the witness testifying should know that the majority of the community have that impression." (People v. Cord (1910) 157 C. 562, 572, 108 P. 511; see also People v. Markham (1883) 64 C. 157, 163, 30 P. 620 ["he must have reached the bad eminence of notoriety as a liar"; reputation among local police officers is insufficient]; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1615; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §897; 49 Proof of Facts 2d 649 [general reputation of person in community]; Ev.C. 1324, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §290 ["in the community in which he then resided"].)

Whether reputation at a place of former residence is too remote is a matter within the court's discretion. (See People v. Cord, supra, 157 C. 572; Broderick v. Broderick (1919) 40 C.A. 550, 560, 181 P. 402.) The same should be true of reputation in the same place at a former or later time. (See People v. Hendrix (1923) 192 C. 441, 450, 221 P. 349; 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §927 et seq.; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§1617, 1618.)

2. Methods of Proving Character Traits.

b. Reputation.

2. Reputation in Group.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 289

[§ 289] Reputation in Group.

(1) Former Restrictive Rule. In Khan v. Zemansky (1922) 59 C.A. 324, 210 P. 529, defendants, to impeach plaintiff as a witness, called two police officers who testified that his reputation in the community was bad. On cross-examination, each admitted that he did not know where plaintiff lived, but only where he did business. Held, the testimony was properly stricken out. (59 C.A. 329.) (See also Cosler v. Norwood (1950) 97 C.A.2d 665, 667, 218 P.2d 800 [witness who knew reputation of defendant at cafeteria where she worked, rejected].)

(2) Modern View: Reputation in Business Circles. The modern trend is to permit evidence of reputation in business circles in proof of character, on a proper foundation showing that the person had acquired a general reputation in those circles. (See 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1616; 1 McCormick 5th, §43.)

This rule was established for California in People v. Workman (1955) 136 C.A.2d 898, 289 P.2d 514. The impeaching witness, on recross-examination, stated that she had heard the reputation discussed, not in the community at large, but only by fellow workers. It was held error (though not reversible under the circumstances) to strike out her testimony. The court declared that the rule of People v. Cobb (1955) 45 C.2d 158, 192, 287 P.2d 752, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §54, on evidence of good reputation, should apply also to evidence of bad reputation. The opinion quotes Wigmore as follows: "[E]specially in large cities, a man may have one reputation in the suburb of his residence and another in the office or the factory at his place of work; or he may have one reputation in his place of technical domicile in New York and another in the region of the mines of Michigan or the steelmills of Ohio where his investments call him for supervision for portions of time. There may be distinct circles of persons, each circle having no relation to the other, and yet each having a reputation based on constant and intimate personal observation of the man." (136 C.A.2d 901, 902.) (See also People v. Paisley (1963) 214 C.A.2d 225, 232, 29 C.R. 307, dictum, quoting the text.)

(3) Evidence Code: Reputation in Group. Ev.C. 1324, following the original Uniform Rule, broadens the scope of the rule still further: Reputation in a group with which the witness "then habitually associated" may be shown. The "group" may consist of the witness' business associates or of others. (Cf. 1963 A.S. 302 [Washington case rejecting reputation for truthfulness of witness "in her church," or "among the church people"].)

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 290

[§ 290] Foundation and Impeachment.

(1) Foundation: Qualification of Impeaching Witness. The first question must lay the foundation, by showing that the impeaching witness is acquainted with the reputation of the person being impeached. The typical method is to ask whether the impeaching witness knows the general reputation of the person being impeached for truth, honesty and integrity in the particular community in which the person being impeached resides, or, under the modern rule, in the business circle or other group with which he or she is habitually associated. (See Khan v. Zemansky (1922) 59 C.A. 324, 328, 210 P. 529 [witness was asked whether he knew "his reputation for truth, honesty, and integrity in the city of Sacramento"; held improper, should have asked for his general reputation in such community]; Rios v. Chand (1955) 130 C.A.2d 833, 838, 280 P.2d 47; People v. Paisley (1963) 214 C.A.2d 225, 232, 29 C.R. 307, quoting the text [conversation with one or two persons not enough to qualify witness to reputation in the community]; People v. Mendoza (1974) 37 C.A.3d 717, 724, 112 C.R. 565 [police officer who did not profess knowledge of witness' reputation for honesty and veracity in community did not qualify as competent witness on witness' credibility]; cf. People v. McAlpin (1991) 53 C.3d 1289, 1311, 283 C.R. 382, 812 P.2d 563 [rule that lay opinion testimony must be based on witness' personal observation does not apply to reputation testimony]; People v. Woodson (1964) 231 C.A.2d 10, 15, 41 C.R. 487, citing the text, and commenting on "highly stylized methods," but holding inexact questions not prejudicial; 1 McCormick 5th, §43; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §§896, 898.)

It is not necessary that the impeaching witness reside in the community to qualify as a witness to community reputation. Such residence is, of course, the normal method by which knowledge of reputation is gained, but it is not the only one. "[I]t may, and frequently does, happen that one person who goes into a community for the purpose of ascertaining the general reputation of a person in that community may by diligent inquiry from the representative people gain a fairly accurate estimate of the general reputation of that person in the community." (Rios v. Chand, supra, 130 C.A.2d 839 [U.S. immigration inspector in sole charge of witness' case for 4 months, visited area frequently and heard reputation discussed].)

(2) Impeaching Question and Answer. The second question calls for the reputation: Q. "What is that reputation?" A. "It is bad." (See Cameron v. Evans Sec. Corp. (1931) 119 C.A. 164, 173, 6 P.2d 272; Rutter Group, 2 Civil Trials and Evidence, §8:2948.) A variation, usually allowed, is the additional question: "Knowing that reputation, would you believe him under oath?" Although essentially this calls for an opinion, it has been permitted as an exception to the opinion rule. (See People v. Tyler (1868) 35 C. 553, 555 [pointing out that though this question is proper, it is not an essential question that must be asked]; 1 McCormick 5th, §43; 7 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1985; and see infra, §291, on admissibility of opinion on character.)

(3) Cross-Examination of Impeaching Witness. The impeaching witness, like any other character witness, may be cross-examined as to his or her qualifications, e.g., as to his or her knowledge of where the person lives, or his or her knowledge of the person's general reputation. (See Khan v. Zemansky, supra; on cross-examination of defendant's character witness, see supra, §243 et seq.)

D. Bad Character.

2. Methods of Proving Character Traits.

c. Opinion.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 291

[§ 291] Opinion.

Opinion evidence on character was formerly held inadmissible except in the form sanctioned by People v. Tyler (1868) 35 C. 553, 555, supra, §290. Ev.C. 1100 allows proof of a character trait by opinion evidence of persons intimately familiar with the witness and qualified to give an opinion. (See 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §43.) There is no limiting provision in the impeachment sections, and, accordingly, such opinions may now be offered. (Ev.C. 780, Comment.)

In People v. Fatone (1985) 165 C.A.3d 1164, 211 C.R. 288, defendant wife was charged with attempted murder of her husband. The husband testified as a witness for the prosecution, and defense counsel wanted to call a retired court commissioner, who had presided over hearings involving domestic conflicts between defendant wife and her husband, to give his opinion on the husband's character for truth and veracity. The court said: "We know of no established rule of law which could preclude a judge, with sufficient foundation, from testifying to an opinion concerning the character or reputation of a prosecution witness in a criminal trial, based on matters previously disclosed in another proceeding. For example, after hearing repeated admissions of perjury, a judge would obviously have grounds for an adverse opinion of the credibility of a witness. Or, having heard numerous upstanding citizens swear a witness has a poor reputation for truthfulness, a judge would also qualify as one capable of testifying to that fact." (165 C.A.3d 1183.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XI. IMPEACHMENT

E. Conviction of a Felony.

1. In General.

a. Nature of Rule.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 292

[§ 292] Nature of Rule.

(1) Civil Actions. In general, specific wrongful acts of a witness in a civil action cannot be used to impeach. (See supra, §285.) The exception is that for the purpose of attacking a witness' credibility, it may be shown that he or she has been convicted of a felony. (Ev.C. 788; see 1 McCormick 5th, §42; 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §980; 78 Cal. L. Rev. 1313 [using prior corporate convictions to impeach]; 19 Hastings L. J. 919; 21 Hastings L. J. 968; 1984 A.S. 372; C.E.B., Effective Introduction of Evidence 2d, Chap. 26 [use of felony convictions to impeach in civil trials]; 36 Proof of Facts 2d 747; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §917 et seq.; 9 A.L.R.4th 897 [jury instruction]; 37 A.L.R.5th 319 [prior conviction for drug dealing]; on federal rule, see Green v. Bock Laundry Machine Co. (1989) 490 U.S. 504, 109 S.Ct. 1981, 1993, 104 L.Ed.2d 557, 575 [F.R. Evid., Rule 609(a)(1) permits impeachment of civil witness by prior felony conviction, regardless of prejudice to witness or party offering testimony]; 103 Harv. L. Rev. 300.)

If a proper objection to use of the conviction is made, the trial judge must carry out the weighing process required by Ev.C. 352 to determine whether the prejudicial effect of admitting the conviction outweighs its probative value. (Robbins v. Wong (1994) 27 C.A.4th 261, 274, 32 C.R.2d 337, infra, §308; on trial judge's discretion under Ev.C. 352 to exclude evidence that is more prejudicial than probative, see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §17.)

(2) Criminal Actions. Any witness in a criminal case, including the defendant if he or she testifies, also may be impeached with a prior felony conviction. However, only felonies involving "moral turpitude" may be used to impeach, and those are subject to discretionary exclusion where their probative value is outweighed by their prejudicial effect. (People v. Castro (1985) 38 C.3d 301, 314, 211 C.R. 719, 696 P.2d 111, infra, §303; C.E.B., Effective Introduction of Evidence in California 2d, Chap. 27 [use of felony convictions in criminal trials]; but cf. Robbins v. Wong, supra, 27 C.A.4th 274 [no moral turpitude requirement in civil actions].)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XI. IMPEACHMENT

E. Conviction of a Felony.

1. In General.

b. Exceptions: Pardon or Dismissal.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 293

[§ 293] Exceptions: Pardon or Dismissal.

(1) Pardon Based on Innocence. The former rule was that, notwithstanding a pardon, the witness could be impeached, but could offer evidence of the pardon in rehabilitation. (See People v. Hardwick (1928) 204 C. 582, 588, 269 P. 427; 16 Cal. L. Rev. 161; 25 So. Cal. L. Rev. 231; 30 A.L.R.2d 893.) Now, impeachment is precluded if the jurisdiction in which the witness was convicted has granted the witness a pardon based on his or her innocence. (Ev.C. 788(a); see 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §915.)

(2) Pardon Based on Rehabilitation. Impeachment is precluded where the witness has received a pardon based on a certificate of rehabilitation granted under P.C. 4852.01 (see 3 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Punishment, §671). (Ev.C. 788(b); see 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §915.)

(3) Probation and Dismissal. It was originally held that, if the witness had been given probation and subsequently obtained a dismissal of the charge under P.C. 1203.4 (see 3 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Punishment, §601), the conviction could not be used to impeach. (See People v. Mackey (1922) 58 C.A. 123, 131, 208 P. 135; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §915.) P.C. 1203.4 was amended to permit impeachment of a defendant witness in a criminal case. (See People v. James (1940) 40 C.A.2d 740, 746, 105 P.2d 947; People v. O'Brand (1949) 92 C.A.2d 752, 756, 207 P.2d 1083.) Hence, an ordinary witness in a civil or criminal trial cannot be impeached with such a conviction, but a defendant in a criminal trial who takes the stand can be. (Ev.C. 788(c).)

(4) Conviction in Another Jurisdiction. If a witness has been convicted in another jurisdiction and has received a pardon based on rehabilitation or probation and dismissal under procedures "substantially equivalent" to P.C. 4852.01 et seq. or P.C. 1203.4, impeachment is precluded. (Ev.C. 788(d); 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §914.)

In People v. Field (1995) 31 C.A.4th 1778, 37 C.R.2d 803, a murder case, the trial judge prohibited the defense from impeaching a prosecution witness with a conviction he had received in Oklahoma for pointing a firearm at another, because the conviction had been expunged under Oklahoma law. Held, this was proper under Ev.C. 788(c) and (d).

(a) Under Ev.C. 788(d), a witness convicted under the laws of another jurisdiction may not be impeached if the conviction was expunged pursuant to a procedure that is "substantially equivalent" to that referred to in Ev.C. 788(c), and Ev.C. 788(c) refers to P.C. 1203.4, which allows a successful probationer to petition to have his or her record expunged. Although in Oklahoma expungement is automatic upon successful termination of probation, and in California the probationer must apply, that is not a substantive difference. The expungement statutes "are substantially equivalent in that both were enacted to eradicate the record of conviction for certain purposes when a probationer has successfully completed probation. ... It is unrealistic to expect the legislatures of every state to adopt identical provisions for such procedures as expungement of convictions." (31 C.A.4th 1788, 1789.)

(b) Cal. Const., Art. I, §28(d) and (f) had the effect of superseding all California restrictions on the admission of relevant evidence for impeachment except those preserved or permitted by the express words of the provision itself. However, this did not remove expungement as a viable ground for exclusion: "[T]he very fact of expungement prevents a prior conviction from being relevant evidence on the issue of one's credibility." (31 C.A.4th 1790.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XI. IMPEACHMENT
E. Conviction of a Felony.
2. Felony.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 294

[§ 294] Felony.

(1) Felony Requirement. The proof must show conviction of a felony, not a misdemeanor. (People v. Lent (1975) 15 C.3d 481, 484, 124 C.R. 905, 541 P.2d 545; People v. Griffin (1962) 209 C.A.2d 125, 128, 25 C.R. 667, citing the text; People v. Covert (1967) 249 C.A.2d 81, 90, 57 C.R. 220, citing the text; Grudt v. Los Angeles (1970) 2 C.3d 575, 591, 86 C.R. 465, 468 P.2d 825, supra, §285; cf. People v. Sutton (1964) 231 C.A.2d 511, 514, 41 C.R. 912 [highly improper to evade rule by indirection, by question "Where are you presently staying?", getting the answer, "at the County Farm" (jail)].) A misdemeanor conviction is inadmissible hearsay when offered to impeach a witness' credibility; however, conduct amounting to a misdemeanor is admissible in a criminal case, subject to the trial court's discretion, if it has a logical bearing on veracity. (People v. Wheeler (1992) 4 C.4th 284, 300, 14 C.R.2d 418, 841 P.2d 938, supra, §286; see People v. Lomeli (1993) 19 C.A.4th 649, 655, 24 C.R.2d 5 [trial judge, who instructed jury that felony conviction could only be used for credibility, should have given similar instruction regarding misdemeanors; citing Wheeler]; People v. Santos (1994) 30 C.A.4th 169, 178, 179, 35 C.R.2d 719 [trial judge erred in not allowing defendants to discover prosecution witnesses' misdemeanor convictions, as convictions would have helped defendants obtain direct evidence of misdemeanor conduct to use for impeachment; citing Wheeler]; People v. Cloyd (1997) 54 C.A.4th 1402, 1407, 1408, 64 C.R.2d 104 [evidence that witness had two misdemeanor cases pending against her for possession of drug paraphernalia was properly excluded as irrelevant to her credibility, and her failure to appear for those two trials was also properly excluded, as there was no evidence this was "conduct amounting to a misdemeanor"].) (For law elsewhere, see 88 A.L.R.3d 74 [use of unrelated traffic offense conviction to impeach general credibility of witness in civil case]; 97 A.L.R.3d 1150 [use of unrelated misdemeanor convictions other than traffic offenses]; on admissibility of prior misconduct that did not result in conviction, see infra, §314.)

(2) California Conviction. The test laid down in the substantive criminal law--the nature of the punishment--determines whether a conviction is a felony conviction. Hence, where a defendant had been convicted of second degree burglary, but was sentenced to a county jail term, it was error to introduce the record of his conviction. (People v. Hamilton (1948) 33 C.2d 45, 49, 198 P.2d 873.) However, where a minor pleaded guilty to burglary, a felony, and was committed to the Preston School of Industry, it was held that this amounted to conviction of a felony and was properly shown for impeachment purposes; the crime was a felony unless the trial court, in its discretion, imposed only a county jail sentence, and the trial court did not so exercise its discretion. (People v. Williams (1945) 27 C.2d 220, 228, 163 P.2d 692; see People v. Ramsey (1962) 202 C.A.2d 856, 859, 21 C.R. 406 [felony-misdemeanor, probation granted; felony because no sentence to county jail, and impeachment proper]; 1 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Introduction to Crimes, §71.)

(3) Out-of-State Conviction. The rule is different where the felony is committed elsewhere: The test depends on the law of the jurisdiction where the conviction took place. Thus, in People v. Theodore (1953) 121 C.A.2d 17, 262 P.2d 630, the prosecution proved a conviction of mail fraud in the federal district court of Missouri. Defendant objected that he received only 60 days' imprisonment. Held, the evidence was admissible. Under federal law, the length of possible sentence is determinative, and the crime was punishable by a maximum of 5 years' imprisonment. (121 C.A.2d 29.)

If the defendant was convicted of a felony but was placed on probation, and under the state law the offense became a misdemeanor, impeachment is improper. (Truman v. Thomas (1980) 27 C.3d 285, 296, 165 C.R. 308, 611 P.2d 902.)

(4) Military Offense. In People v. Mathews (1958) 163 C.A.2d 795, 804, 329 P.2d 983, the court listed the conflicting out-of-state decisions on whether the fact of conviction of a military offense (e.g., desertion) can be used to impeach, but found it unnecessary to decide the point for California. (See 7 A.L.R.4th 468 [conviction by court martial].)

(5) Timing of Felony. A prior felony for purposes of Ev.C. 788 means any conviction suffered before trial, regardless of the offense date. Thus, a felony conviction may be admitted for impeachment purposes even though the conduct underlying it occurred after the conduct underlying the charged offense. (People v. Halsey (1993) 21 C.A.4th 325, 328, 26 C.R.2d 701.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Felony Requirement.

Conduct amounting to misdemeanor: See People v. Chavez (2000) 84 C.A.4th 25, 30, 100 C.R.2d 680 [in robbery prosecution, facts of crime of misdemeanor sexual battery were properly admitted to impeach defendant]; People v. Rivera (2003) 107 C.A.4th 1374, 1381, 133 C.R.2d 176 [in prosecution for assault with deadly weapon, conduct underlying defendant's prior juvenile adjudication for misdemeanor possession of deadly weapon with intent to commit assault was properly admitted for impeachment; act of carrying deadly weapon while intending to assault another involves moral turpitude].(5) Timing of Felony. ## CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XI. IMPEACHMENT

E. Conviction of a Felony.

3. Conviction.

a. Necessity of Conviction.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 295

[§ 295] Necessity of Conviction.

(1) Arrest or Charge Without Conviction. Cases decided before the passage of Proposition 8 (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §8) held that even though a witness may have committed a felony, this was not enough and could not be shown; the proof had to show a conviction, not merely an arrest or trial. Thus, in Long v. Barbieri (1932) 120 C.A. 207, 7 P.2d 1082, the question "In 1918 you were tried in San Francisco for shooting and killing a woman?" was improper, because it related only to trial. (120 C.A. 218.) (See People v. Duvernay (1941) 43 C.A.2d 823, 826, 111 P.2d 659 [improper to inquire into previous arrests or "trouble" with police]; People v. Chandler (1957) 152 C.A.2d Supp. 916, 920, 313 P.2d 223 [prosecutor's questioning, in obvious bad faith, about prior charge without conviction against defendant for drunkenness and prior petty theft conviction in Texas was reversible error]; 1 McCormick 5th, §42; 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §980a; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §911; 20 A.L.R.2d 1421; 28 A.L.R.4th 505.)

Cases decided after passage of Proposition 8 have deemed past criminal conduct involving moral turpitude, even when it did not result in a felony conviction, to be admissible to impeach criminal witnesses in a proper case. (See People v. Wheeler (1992) 4 C.4th 284, 14 C.R.2d 418, 841 P.2d 938, supra, §286; People v. Lepolo (1997) 55 C.A.4th 85, 89, 63 C.R.2d 735, infra, §314.) Hence, the holdings in Long v. Barbieri and the other early cases may no longer accurately state the law.

(2) Verdict of Guilty Without Judgment. The authorities are divided on the propriety of evidence of a verdict of guilty on which no judgment has been entered or sentence passed. (See 28 A.L.R.4th 647.) But an early California case holds that the verdict constitutes a conviction and may be shown. (People v. Ward (1901) 134 C. 301, 307, 66 P. 372; see People v. Williams (1945) 27 C.2d 220, 228, 163 P.2d 692 [citing Ward].)

(3) Juvenile Court Adjudications. An adjudication by the juvenile court is not deemed a conviction of a crime and cannot be the basis for impeachment. (Welf.C. 203; People v. Gomez (1957) 152 C.A.2d 139, 143, 313 P.2d 58; People v. Sanchez (1985) 170 C.A.3d 216, 218, 216 C.R. 21; see 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §980, p. 834; 22 Santa Clara L. Rev. 419; 63 A.L.R.3d 1112.)

However, under People v. Wheeler, supra, at least in cases that do not fall under Welf.C. 1772 (honorable discharge by Youthful Offender Parole Board; see 10 Summary (9th), Parent and Child, §822), prior conduct evincing moral turpitude may be introduced even if it was the subject of a juvenile adjudication, "subject, of course, to the restrictions imposed under Evidence Code section 352 and other applicable evidentiary limitations." (People v. Lee (1994) 28 C.A.4th 1724, 1740, 34 C.R.2d 723.) (See 1 Jefferson, California Evidence Benchbook 3d, §22.31.)

(4) Wobbler Offense Where Sentence Not Yet Imposed. "[T]he term 'convicted' includes otherwise qualifying felony convictions suffered even though sentence has not yet been imposed on the charge. Further, the fact the felony conviction is a wobbler does not change the result since a wobbler is regarded as a felony for every purpose until judgment is entered." (People v. Martinez (1998) 62 C.A.4th 1454, 1456, 73 C.R.2d 358.)

(5) Judgment Not Final. It is not necessary to show a final and unqualified judgment; the witness may be asked the question even when an appeal from the conviction is pending. (People v. Braun (1939) 14 C.2d 1, 6, 92 P.2d 402; see People v. Scrivens (1969) 276 C.A.2d 429, 434, 81 C.R. 86, citing the text [impeachment proper even though conviction still subject to motion for new trial or appeal]; 16 A.L.R.3d 726 [appeal or motion for new trial pending]; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §912; on constitutionally defective conviction, see infra, §300.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Arrest or Charge Without Conviction. See 81 Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Witnesses §877; 1 McCormick 6th, §42.(3) Juvenile Court Adjudications. Welf.C. 1772 was amended in 2003 to refer to the Youth Authority Board rather than the Youthful Offender Parole Board.

Cross-Reference: 10 Summary (10th), Parent and Child, §961.(5) Judgment Not Final. See 81 Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Witnesses §878. West's Key Number Digest, Witnesses k.345(4) et seq.

1. In General: Impeaching Question.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 296

[§ 296] In General: Impeaching Question.

Ev.C. 788 authorizes only two methods of proof of a prior felony conviction for impeachment purposes. The first is the "examination" of the witness, and the case law has developed limitations on the method of inquiry. (On second method, see infra, §299.)

The witness may be asked whether he or she was convicted of a felony. (People v. David (1939) 12 C.2d 639, 646, 86 P.2d 811; People v. Jacobs (1925) 73 C.A. 334, 347, 238 P. 770, 776 [testimony that he had pleaded guilty is equivalent to proof of conviction]; see People v. Bauweraerts (1913) 164 C. 696, 702, 130 P. 717; 36 Proof of Facts 747; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §§926, 970.)

It is also permissible to go one step further and ask the nature of the crime, i.e., the particular felony. (People v. David, supra, 12 C.2d 646; People v. Smith (1966) 63 C.2d 779, 790, 48 C.R. 382, 409 P.2d 222; People v. Jacobs, supra, 73 C.A. 347; cf. People v. Muchupoff (1926) 79 C.A. 306, 309, 249 P. 240 [extended questioning held permissible where witness did not understand English and had interpreter]; People v. Boehm (1969) 270 C.A.2d 13, 17, 75 C.R. 590 [defendant answered, "injuring a child"; prosecutor then asked, "felony child beating, is that correct?"]; see 67 A.L.R.3d 761, 775 [questions relating to nature and extent of punishment]; but cf. People v. Terry (1974) 38 C.A.3d 432, 446, 113 C.R. 233 [defendant charged with armed robbery of finance company; after he admitted prior robbery convictions, prosecutor asked if they involved finance companies; questions about finance companies should have been excluded].)

XI. IMPEACHMENT

E. Conviction of a Felony.

3. Conviction.

b. Proof by Cross-Examination.

2. Requirement of Good Faith.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 297

[§ 297] Requirement of Good Faith.

The cross-examination must be conducted in good faith; i.e., the prosecutor must be prepared to show that the witness had suffered a prior conviction. (People v. Perez (1962) 58 C.2d 229, 238, 23 C.R. 569, 373 P.2d 617; see People v. Williams (1991) 228 C.A.3d 146, 152, 278 C.R. 801 [prosecution's reliance on defendant's rap sheet establishes good faith]; 3 A.L.R.3d 965.)

In People v. Bryson (1967) 257 C.A.2d 201, 64 C.R. 706, the prosecutor asked J whether he had been convicted of burglary in Bakersfield. The question was based on a telephone call to the district attorney's office there. J said he had served 10 months in jail on a misdemeanor conviction. The prosecutor thought the service was as a condition of probation, but queried by the judge, he admitted that he had not sought or received the records. Held, this was improper; the prosecutor should be prepared to show documentary evidence of felony conviction. (257 C.A.2d 208.)

The requirement of "good faith," i.e., possession of documentary or other competent evidence to prove the prior conviction, is sometimes stated as a basic requirement for even the simple question itself. (See People v. Conover (1966) 243 C.A.2d 38, 53, 52 C.R. 172.) This theory was challenged in People v. Foster (1969) 271 C.A.2d 763, 766, 76 C.R. 775. Defendant, charged with escapes, called a number of witnesses in his sanity trial. Most of them were county jail inmates whom he had met in jail, and some admitted prior convictions. In two instances, however, the witnesses answered equivocally, claiming that they had served their time in the county jail. The judge then admonished the district attorney that he should not ask the question unless prepared to prove conviction of a felony. Held, asking the question was not error; or, if it was error, there was a waiver by failure to object; and also, under the circumstances, no prejudice resulted. (271 C.A.2d 766.) Thus, the holding that the question was proper was only an alternative ground of the decision, but the discussion is illuminating: (a) In some of the cases relied on in People v. Conover, supra, the question was accusatory in form or suggestive. There is reason for the requirement of good faith in such situations, where the question might plant the seeds of suspicion. (b) Where the question is not accusatory or suggestive, and the witness gives a negative answer, no harm is done. (c) The prosecution cannot always know what witnesses the defendant will call, if any, and has no chance to investigate the backgrounds of all. (271 C.A.2d 768.)

harmless, in preventing defendant from questioning her about prior during cross-examination, even though he may not have had evidence to controvert denial by her].

3. Conviction.

b. Proof by Cross-Examination.

3. Inquiry Into Circumstances.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 298

[§ 298] Inquiry Into Circumstances.

(1) Improper Inquiry. In People v. Wynn (1941) 44 C.A.2d 723, 112 P.2d 979, defendant, under cross-examination, admitted a conviction of forgery and added that he was later cleared and released. The district attorney then asked whether he had not skipped parole, whether the warden wanted him back, whether he owed 6 months on the term, whether he had pleaded guilty, etc. Held, the inquiry went far beyond the permissible limits of the facts of conviction and nature of the crime. (44 C.A.2d 731.) (See People v. Chenault (1946) 74 C.A.2d 487, 494, 169 P.2d 29 [criticizing repeated questions, after defendant's denial, as to whether he had been given probation with a short jail sentence, and had escaped]; People v. Hollander (1961) 194 C.A.2d 386, 396, 14 C.R. 917.)

In People v. Gomez (1957) 152 C.A.2d 139, 313 P.2d 58, the prosecutor, apparently with knowledge that the term served in the state hospital for the insane was by order of the juvenile court, nevertheless seized upon defendant's "No" answer to query him at length on the details and elicit the fact that he was convicted as a psychopathic delinquent. Held, the inquiry was not in good faith, and the error was not cured by striking out the testimony. (152 C.A.2d 144.)

In People v. Malloy (1974) 41 C.A.3d 944, 116 C.R. 592, defendant denied a prior narcotics conviction by failing to admit it. Over his objection, the prosecution proved the prior by testimony from a narcotics agent who described the earlier purchase, by introduction of the drug which was purchased, and by a chemist's testimony that the drug was LSD. Held, this was error (though harmless). "To permit proof of a prior by 'retrying' a defendant for that offense could not only involve undue consumption of judicial time but could result in substantial risk of prejudice to a defendant. In the case at bench the documentary evidence showed that defendant had pleaded guilty to the prior. Knowledge of the contraband character of the items sold could be reasonably inferred from that evidence without retrying the prior. Moreover, defendant never challenged his identity as the one who had suffered the prior conviction. In the foregoing circumstances, the trial judge should have exercised his discretion under Evidence Code section 352 and sustained defendant's objection to the introduction of the questioned evidence." (41 C.A.3d 952.)

(2) Further Inquiry in Good Faith. The foregoing cases have sometimes been thought to stand for the proposition that, if the defendant does not admit the conviction after the simple questions, cross-examination should stop and proof be made by introduction of the record of conviction (infra, §299). (See People v. Chenault, supra, 74 C.A.2d 494.) But a different view was taken in People v. Linyard (1957) 151 C.A.2d 50, 311 P.2d 57. Defendant, having answered "No" to the simple question, was asked whether he had not been convicted of possession of heroin. He answered that "It was a misdemeanor," and was then asked whether he had not been given probation on condition of a county jail term. Held, the prosecution, if in good faith, has this limited right to seek the facts on cross-examination. And good faith was here shown by the fact that defendant had admitted three prior convictions of violations of narcotics laws; the prosecutor was entitled to believe that at least one was a felony conviction because the narcotics law requires a state prison sentence after any prior conviction. (151 C.A.2d 54.) (See also People v. Smith (1966) 63 C.2d 779, 790, 48 C.R. 382, 409 P.2d 222 ["Did you serve a term of imprisonment?" held proper].)

E. Conviction of a Felony.

3. Conviction.

c. Proof by Record of Judgment.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 299

[§ 299] Proof by Record of Judgment.

Except for the limited right to seek the facts on cross-examination (see supra, §296), the prosecution is confined to proof by introduction of a certified copy of the judgment of conviction. (Ev.C. 788; see People v. Craig (1925) 196 C. 19, 28, 235 P.2d 721; Pacific Indem. Co. v. Hargreaves (1939) 36 C.A.2d 338, 345, 98 P.2d 217; *People v. However, while it is the usual practice to ask the witness first, and then to introduce documentary evidence if he or she denies the conviction, it is not improper to make the documentary proof without asking the impeaching question. ## CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XI. IMPEACHMENT

E. Conviction of a Felony.

3. Conviction.

d. Constitutionally Defective Conviction.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 300

[§ 300] Constitutionally Defective Conviction.

(1) Raising Issue in Trial Court. A prior conviction obtained in violation of constitutional due process is invalid either for substantive (e.g., habitual criminal adjudication) or procedural purposes, and the constitutional right to counsel applies retrospectively to any past conviction. Thus, if a prior conviction is offered to impeach, the defendant may raise the constitutional defect of lack of counsel and no intelligent waiver of the right in the prior trial. This may be done by collateral attack on the final judgment. (See 6 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Writs, §40.) But in the interest of efficient judicial administration, the issue should be presented to the trial court for determination there; and a motion to strike that part of the accusatory pleading that charges the prior conviction is an appropriate means. (People v. Coffey (1967) 67 C.2d 204, 215, 60 C.R. 457, 430 P.2d 15.)

In the Coffey case, the court laid down the rules to govern the hearing and determination of this issue: "First, when a defendant, whether by motion to strike the prior conviction or convictions on constitutional grounds, or by denial of such prior conviction or convictions on constitutional grounds at the time of entering his plea to the same, raises the issue for determination, the court shall, prior to trial, hold a hearing outside the presence of the jury in order to determine the constitutional validity of the charged prior or priors in issue. Second, in the court of such hearing the prosecutor shall first have the burden of producing evidence of the prior conviction sufficient to justify a finding that defendant 'has suffered such previous conviction.' (Pen. Code §1025.) Third, when this prima facie showing has been made, the defendant shall thereupon have the burden of producing evidence that his constitutional right to counsel was infringed in the prior proceeding at issue. Fourth, if defendant bears this burden, the prosecution shall have the right to produce evidence in rebuttal. Fifth, the court shall make a finding on the basis of the evidence thus produced and shall strike from the accusatory pleading any prior conviction found to be constitutionally invalid." (67 C.2d 217.)

Because the trial judge in the Coffey case erroneously refused to consider the motion to strike, the Supreme Court had to determine the effect of the error in permitting impeachment: "[W]e are of the view that such error is of federal constitutional dimension. It is clear that a conviction of crime, no matter when sustained, is constitutionally invalid if it was obtained in violation of the Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments. ... We think it equally clear that the utilization of such a conviction, at the trial of a subsequent offense, for any purpose leading to a conviction for such subsequent offense, is violative of the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. Therefore, in assessing the prejudicial effect of such erroneous utilization, we are required to apply the test recently set forth by the United States Supreme Court in Chapman v. California." (67 C.2d 218.)

The judgment was accordingly reversed on two counts and affirmed on two counts. (See also In re Dabney (1969)

71 C.2d 1, 6, 76 C.R. 636, 452 P.2d 924 [error not reversible per se, but governed by Chapman test; following Coffey]; People v. Bowen (1971) 22 C.A.3d 267, 284, 99 C.R. 498 [once constitutional objections to prior convictions are raised, defendant need not renew objections at time of impeaching cross-examination]; People v. Reeves (1981) 123 C.A.3d 65, 69, 176 C.R. 182 [interpreting Coffey as permitting challenges only on basis of denial of right to counsel]; 56 Cal. L. Rev. 1732 [Coffey]; for federal rule that use of prior void conviction for impeachment deprives criminal defendant of due process when it might have influenced outcome of case, see Loper v. Beto (1972) 405 U.S. 473, 92 S.Ct. 1014, 31 L.Ed.2d 374.)

(2) Burden of Proof. People v. Knighton (1967) 250 C.A.2d 221, 58 C.R. 700, decided before People v. Coffey, held that a defendant challenging the use of a prior conviction for impeachment purposes had the burden of proof on the issue of constitutionality. (250 C.A.2d 228.) The Coffey case holds otherwise: The burden of proof remains with the prosecution; only the burden of producing evidence shifts. (67 C.2d 217, footnote 15.) (Cf. People v. Vienne (1973) 30 C.A.3d 266, 271, 105 C.R. 584 [prosecution's production of certified copies of abstract of judgment makes out prima facie showing of validity; defendant then has burden of producing evidence that his right to counsel was infringed]; People v. Conley (1968) 268 C.A.2d 47, 58, 73 C.R. 673 [prosecution produced certified copy of Oregon judgment reciting waiver of counsel; defendant then had burden of going forward with evidence to prove waiver's falsity or inadequacy].)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XI. IMPEACHMENT

E. Conviction of a Felony.

4. Discretionary Exclusion.

a. Before Proposition 8.

1. People v. Beagle: Discretion Required.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 301

[§ 301] People v. Beagle: Discretion Required.

In People v. Beagle (1972) 6 C.3d 441, 99 C.R. 313, 492 P.2d 1, a prosecution for arson, the court held that Ev.C. 352 (discretionary exclusion for policy reasons; see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §17) applies to impeachment under Ev.C. 788, and that the judge must exercise discretion to prevent impeachment when the probative value of the evidence is substantially outweighed by the risk of undue prejudice.

Defendant, on trial for arson, was impeached by a showing that he suffered a felony conviction some 4 years earlier for issuing a check without sufficient funds. He contended that the conviction bore no necessary relationship either to the charged offenses or to his veracity, and thus improperly restricted his freedom to choose whether to testify. Held, the conviction was properly used because the reasonable exercise of discretion by the trial judge could not have justified its exclusion.

(a) Permissive statutory language. Ev.C. 788 is the only exception to the rule that specific instances of conduct are inadmissible to prove a witness' credibility. (See supra, §285.) "In providing this exception the Legislature used the permissive word 'may' rather than a mandatory word such as 'shall.' We conclude that the choice of language leaves the trial court with discretion to exclude proof of prior felony convictions offered in impeachment." (6 C.3d 452.) And nothing in Ev.C. 788 exempts it from the general rule of Ev.C. 352. (6 C.3d 452.)

(b) Factors to be considered. Rigid standards should not be adopted to govern what "in each instance must depend upon the sound exercise of judicial discretion." (6 C.3d 453.) Among the more important factors to be considered are those recognized as relevant by some federal courts. So, for example, convictions for dishonest conduct relate to credibility while those for violent or assaultive crimes generally do not; yet even a fraud or theft conviction, if it occurred long ago and was followed by a legally blameless life, should generally be excluded for remoteness. Convictions for the same crime should be used sparingly because of the pressure on jurors to believe that "if he did it before he probably did so this time." And even if the prior convictions are relevant to credibility and the risk of prejudice does not warrant their exclusion, the judge may conclude that it is more important for the jury to have the defendant's version of the case than to have him silent for fear of impeachment. (6 C.3d 453.) But this last factor calls for a word of caution: "We do not propose to encourage or countenance a form of blackmail by defendants. No witness including a defendant who elects to testify in his own behalf is entitled to a false aura of veracity. The general rule is that felony convictions bearing on veracity are admissible." (6 C.3d 453.)

The court concluded that the risk of prejudice from such impeachment did not raise an issue of constitutional dimensions, and that, because prosecutors and courts had relied on contrary prior decisions, the new standards would be applied prospectively to trials begun after January 5, 1972. (6 C.3d 455, footnote 2.) (See 9 Pacific L. J. 985 [criticizing decision as contrary to legislative intent]; 61 Cal. L. Rev. 515 [suggesting that legislative intent is unclear]; 9 U.S.F. L. Rev. 491 [argument for total prohibition of use of prior convictions to impeach]; 5 Pepperdine L. Rev. 135 [proposing limitation on application of Beagle rule].)

[§ 302] Expansion of Beagle.

The following cases after People v. Beagle (1972) 6 C.3d 441, 99 C.R. 313, 492 P.2d 1, supra, §301, expanded on its holding, emphasizing the trial court's duty to balance prejudice and probative value under Ev.C. 352 and discussing the factors that bear on the balancing test:

People v. Antick (1975) 15 C.3d 79, 99, 123 C.R. 475, 539 P.2d 43 [trial for 1973 burglary, circumstantial evidence of guilt not strong; evidence of forgery convictions in 1955 and 1957 should have been excluded].

*People v. People v. Rollo (1977) 20 C.3d 109, 118, 141 C.R. 177, 569 P.2d 771 [trial judge should have weighed probative value of prior conviction for soliciting another to commit murder against its prejudicial effect, rather than allowing prosecutor to ask whether defendant had been convicted of prior felony without identifying its nature; judge's attempt to strike even balance between competing interests of prosecution and defense directly contravened Beagle rule].

People v. Woodard (1979) 23 C.3d 329, 338, 152 C.R. 536, 590 P.2d 391 [discretion called for by Ev.C. 352 and by Beagle line of decisions must be exercised "whenever a party--plaintiff or defendant, in a civil or criminal case--moves for the exclusion of a witness' prior felony conviction"; weighing process is applicable to all cases].

People v. Fries (1979) 24 C.3d 222, 230, 231, 155 C.R. 194, 594 P.2d 19 [risk of prejudice substantial where prior conviction is similar or identical to crime charged; identical prior conviction should have been excluded].

People v. Spearman (1979) 25 C.3d 107, 115, 157 C.R. 883, 599 P.2d 74 [admission of prior conviction for possession of heroin for sale was error; "Only a conviction which has as a necessary element an intent to deceive, defraud, lie, steal, etc., impacts on the credibility of a witness"].

People v. Barrick (1982) 33 C.3d 115, 125, 127, 187 C.R. 716, 654 P.2d 1243 [in prosecution for theft of vehicle, trial judge improperly used technique of "sanitizing" defendant's prior felony conviction of automobile theft by allowing

E. Conviction of a Felony.

4. Discretionary Exclusion.

b. After Proposition 8.

1. Establishment of Moral Turpitude Test.

aa. People v. Castro.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 303

[§ 303] People v. Castro.

In People v. Castro (1985) 38 C.3d 301, 211 C.R. 719, 696 P.2d 111, defendant was charged with receiving stolen property. She moved to bar impeachment on then unspecified prior convictions, and the trial judge denied the motion on the basis of Cal. Const., Art. I, §28(f) (Proposition 8, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §8). At the trial, evidence of prior convictions of possession of heroin and possession of heroin for sale was admitted to impeach. Defendant's conviction was affirmed, but the court was divided on the issues of error and prejudice from error.

The lead opinion (three justices) reasons as follows:

(a) Proposition 8 retained discretion to exclude under Ev.C. 352.

(1) The history of Ev.C. 352 shows that it was intended to operate "across the board." People v. Beagle (1972) 6 C.3d 441, 99 C.R. 313, 492 P.2d 1, supra, §301, confirmed this view, holding that the court had discretion to exclude evidence of prior convictions to impeach, despite Ev.C. 788. And subsequent decisions, commencing with People v. Antick (1975) 15 C.3d 79, 123 C.R. 475, 539 P.2d 43, supra, §302, delineated the boundaries of permissible discretion. (38 C.3d 306, 307, 308.) In each of the cases, a dissenting opinion expressed the view that the guidelines of Beagle had become rigid limitations on the trial judge's discretion. (38 C.3d 308.)

(2) The drafters of Cal. Const., Art. I, §28 "wanted a change" and "the voters legislated it." The question remains, "did they intend to throw out the baby with the bath?" "Assuming that the framers and voters were attempting to revitalize section 788 to counter the effect of the Antick line of cases, as decried by the dissenters, is there hard evidence that they intended to go further--to abrogate entirely the discretion of the trial court under section 352, a traditional, inherent and, in truth, indispensable tool of the law of evidence?" (38 C.3d 308, 309.)

(3) Subdivision (f) applies to all witnesses in criminal cases. "Did the drafters really intend that all persons who choose or are compelled to testify, either for the defense or the prosecution, will inevitably be impeachable by prior convictions? Did they really intend that an elderly victim of a mugging cannot avoid being impeached by a conviction for conspiracy to disturb the peace ... suffered in her youth? Did the framers really intend that a witness to a crime who, as a good citizen, comes forward to aid the police, must anticipate that any felony conviction suffered years before will be used against him if he testifies at a criminal trial? The prosecutor, of course, must disclose the prior criminal record of prosecution witnesses. ... If the framers intended that the trial court was to have no discretion to prevent impeachment with ancient offenses, have they not--to switch metaphors--cut off their noses to spite their faces? Even convicted felons may make a contribution to the search for truth." (38 C.3d 309.)

(4) Subdivision (f), with its absolute language, must be reconciled with subdivision (d), which states that "Nothing in this section shall affect" Ev.C. 352. But the extrinsic evidence (the voter's pamphlet and the legislative committee reports by legislators who were not the drafters) do not indicate that the electorate was informed of the conflict. It should, therefore, be resolved as follows:

"The intention of the drafters of the initiative was to restore trial court discretion as visualized by the Evidence Code and to reject the rigid, black letter rules of exclusion which we had grafted onto the code by the Antick line of decisions. ... Nevertheless, the initiative itself expressed continued trust in the discretion of the trial courts; despite the mandatory admonitions, that discretion under section 352 was expressly retained." (38 C.3d 312.)

(b) Felonies involving moral turpitude may be used to impeach.

(1) Although subdivision (f) is absolute in terms, the United States Supreme Court has held that, to satisfy due process, inferences (not just presumptions) must be based on a rational connection between the fact proved and the fact to be inferred. The question is: "Can it be said with substantial assurance that the credibility of a witness is adversely affected by his having suffered this conviction?" And, if the answer is "no," impeachment is prohibited: "An important element of a fair trial is that the jury consider only relevant and competent evidence bearing on the issue of guilt or innocence." (38 C.3d 313.)

(2) "[T]he modern justification for the practice must be that prior felony convictions may, somehow, be relevant to the witness' veracity." In Justice Holmes' language, the only ground for disbelieving the witness is "the general readiness to do evil which the conviction may be supposed to show." (38 C.3d 314.) It follows that, if the felony does not show " 'readiness to do evil'--moral turpitude, if you will"--the Due Process Clause prevents its use for impeachment. (38 C.3d 314.) (On what crimes involve moral turpitude, see 38 C.3d 315; infra, §306.)

One justice, concurring and dissenting, reasoned as follows: (a) Subdivision (f) is sufficiently clear, and, as a specific provision, should control over the general provision of subdivision (d). (b) Beagle relied in part on a federal case, the holding of which was nullified by legislation, and Proposition 8 was intended to have a similar effect. (c) Nevertheless, evidence so potentially prejudicial must meet the constitutional standard of relevance, "and in the absence of legislative guidance I accept the 'moral turpitude' test." (d) However, difficult problems of judicial administration will arise in applying the moral turpitude test and the standards for review of trial court discretion, and "I suggest that the optimum solution may lie in action by the Legislature enumerating or defining the offenses which it believes to have sufficient relevance to veracity to be admissible for purposes of impeachment." (38 C.3d 319, 320, 321, 322.)

A second justice, concurring and dissenting, made two points: (a) He agreed with the first dissenter that subdivision (f) abrogated all judicially created restrictions on admissibility of prior convictions to impeach. (b) He disagreed with the creation of a "moral turpitude" exception, and argued that, rather than burden the trial courts with that uncertain standard, the court should, in the absence of any restrictions imposed by the federal courts, "allow admission of all prior felonies on the theory that the commission of a felony offense necessarily bears on one's credibility regardless of the nature of that offense." (38 C.3d 322, 323.)

Two justices joined in a lengthy opinion, concurring and dissenting, as follows: (a) The majority correctly holds that trial courts retain discretion to exclude under Ev.C. 352. (b) The Beagle factors should continue to guide their exercise of discretion. (c) The moral turpitude standard is neither proper nor workable: The term lacks legal precision, will incorporate into the criminal law vast bodies of noncriminal law, and will give trial courts no clear guidance. (38 C.3d 323, 333, 334.) (See 18 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 681 [exhaustive analysis of Castro and standards for admissibility of prior felonies]; 15 *Pacific L. [§ 304] Subsequent Cases.

Subsequent Court of Appeal cases have attempted to delineate the parameters of People v. Castro (1985) 38 C.3d 301, 211 C.R. 719, 696 P.2d 111, and its effect on rules developed before Proposition 8:

People v. Stewart (1985) 171 C.A.3d 59, 63, 215 C.R. 716 [from analysis of Castro: all prior felonies involving moral turpitude are admissible to impeach, but trial judge retains discretion under Ev.C. 352 to exclude].

People v. Miles (1985) 172 C.A.3d 474, 480, 218 C.R. 378 [analyzing separate opinions in Castro, and concluding that "six justices favored the retention of trial court discretion even with respect to relevant prior convictions pursuant to Evidence Code section 352"].

People v. Foreman (1985) 174 C.A.3d 175, 180, 181, 219 C.R. 759 [pointing out that Castro repudiated former inflexible black letter rules of exclusion in People v. Antick (1975) 15 C.3d 79, 123 C.R. 475, 539 P.2d 43 and its progeny (see supra, §302), and that rule of sanitization in People v. Barrick (1982) 33 C.3d 115, 187 C.R. 716, 654 P.2d 1243, supra, §302, did not survive Proposition 8].

People v. Burns (1987) 189 C.A.3d 734, 736, 234 C.R. 547 [remoteness of prior conviction remains factor to consider in exercising discretion under Ev.C. 352].

People v. Muldrow (1988) 202 C.A.3d 636, 647, 248 C.R. 891 [discussion of remoteness and conclusion that systematic occurrence of priors over 20-year period created pattern relevant to defendant's credibility].

People v. Ballard (1993) 13 C.A.4th 687, 695, 16 C.R.2d 624, infra, §306 [noting many cases have questioned precedential authority of Castro lead opinion in excluding impeachment by felonies not involving moral turpitude].

XI. IMPEACHMENT

E. Conviction of a Felony.

4. Discretionary Exclusion.

b. After Proposition 8.

2. Application of Moral Turpitude Test.

aa. People v. Castro.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 305

[§ 305] People v. Castro.

In People v. Castro (1985) 38 C.3d 301, 211 C.R. 719, 696 P.2d 111, supra, §303, the lead opinion briefly explained the moral turpitude test and applied it to the crimes involved in the case.

(a) The original draft of Ev.C. 788 proposed by the Law Revision Commission limited felony-impeachment to felonies with respect to which an essential element was dishonesty or false statement. This limitation was rejected by the Legislature. (38 C.3d 315, footnote 10.) And there is some basis for inferring that a person who has committed a crime that involves moral turpitude other than dishonesty is more likely to be dishonest than a witness about whom no such thing is known. (38 C.3d 315.) The practical problem, however, is the necessity of determining whether each felony conviction offered for impeachment involves moral turpitude. "If it does not, that is the end of it. If it does, it is prima facie admissible, subject to the exercise of the court's discretion. Naturally, the more tenuous the court finds the connection between moral defect shown by the conviction and the only defect directly relevant--dishonesty--the more likely it is to disallow impeachment." (38 C.3d 316.)

(b) Does the trial court look only to the elements of the offense or may it go behind the fact of the conviction and receive evidence on the underlying facts? Under the reasoning of People v. Crowson (1983) 33 C.3d 623, 633, 190 C.R. 165, 660 P.2d 389, a prior conviction should be admissible for impeachment only "if the least adjudicated elements of the conviction necessarily involve moral turpitude." And "[w]e reemphasize that even such admissibility is subject to trial court discretion under section 352." (38 C.3d 317.)

Simple possession of heroin does not necessarily involve moral turpitude; possession for sale does (the intent is to corrupt others). "Defendant should, therefore, not have been impeached with the conviction for simple possession at all, and the trial court erred in stating it had no discretion with respect to either conviction." (38 C.3d 317.) In the light of the record, however, the errors were not prejudicial. (38 C.3d 319; see infra, §313.)

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 306

[§ 306] Moral Turpitude Found.

In People v. Fulcher (1987) 194 C.A.3d 749, 753, 236 C.R. 845, the trial judge denied defendant's motion to bar his 1978 statutory rape conviction for impeachment purposes. Held, the crime is necessarily one involving moral turpitude. People v. Hernandez (1964) 61 C.2d 529, 39 C.R. 361, 393 P.2d 673, modified the statutory definition of statutory rape--sexual intercourse with a female not the wife of the perpetrator, where the female is under the age of 18 years--by providing for the defense of a good faith, reasonable belief that the female is over 18 years of age. In so doing, the Hernandez court categorized the crime as "infamous." (194 C.A.3d 753.) "It may thus be said that at the time of Fulcher's earlier act and conviction (and now) the Penal Code, as interpreted by People v. Hernandez, supra, proscribed sexual intercourse with a female under the age of 18 years by one without a good faith and reasonable belief that the female was of the age of consent, and that such is an 'infamous' crime. ... [I]t is thus necessarily a crime involving 'moral turpitude.' " (194 C.A.3d 753.) In People v. Flanagan (1986) 185 C.A.3d 764, 230 C.R. 64, infra, §309, defendant's conviction for statutory rape was prior to Hernandez. (194 C.A.3d 754.)

In People v. Rodriguez (1992) 5 C.A.4th 1398, 7 C.R.2d 495, the defendant's prior conviction was under P.C. 273.5 (inflicting corporal injury on spouse or cohabitant). The court said:

"We perceive the crux of Castro's definition to be the requisite animus of the felon: Must the crime be attended by knowledge of circumstances and a conscious decision to exploit them sufficient to signify readiness to do evil? To violate section 273.5 the assailant must, at the very least, have set out, successfully, to injure a person of the opposite sex in a special relationship for which society rationally demands, and the victim may reasonably expect, stability and safety, and in which the victim, for these reasons among others, may be especially vulnerable. To have joined in, and thus necessarily to be aware of, that special relationship, and then to violate it wilfully and with intent to injure, necessarily connotes the general readiness to do evil that has been held to define moral turpitude." (5 C.A.4th 1402.)

In People v. Ballard (1993) 13 C.A.4th 687, 16 C.R.2d 624, a prosecution for indecent exposure in which the trial judge allowed defendant to be impeached with prior felony convictions for indecent exposure, the court noted that "[a] substantial body of authority has implicitly or explicitly questioned the precedential value of the Castro lead opinion in excluding impeachment by felonies not involving moral turpitude, despite the plain language of [Cal. Const., Art. I, §28(f)]." (13 C.A.4th 695.) However, "even under the Castro 'moral turpitude' limitation," the court found no abuse of discretion, because indecent exposure is a crime of moral turpitude. (13 C.A.4th 695, 696.)

A number of other Court of Appeal decisions have found moral turpitude in various felonies. (See People v. Olmedo (1985) 167 C.A.3d 1085, 213 C.R. 742 [assault with intent to commit murder]; People v. Bonilla (1985) 168 C.A.3d 201, 205, 214 C.R. 191 [rape]; People v. Almarez (1985) 168 C.A.3d 262, 267, 268, 214 C.R. 105 [forgery and burglary]; People v. Hunt (1985) 169 C.A.3d 668, 675, 215 C.R. 429 [burglary]; *People v. [§ 308] Not Applicable in Civil Cases.

In Robbins v. Wong (1994) 27 C.A.4th 261, 32 C.R.2d 337, a personal injury action, defendants sought to introduce, for impeachment purposes, plaintiff's prior conviction of a drug-related felony. The trial judge allowed the evidence, agreeing with defendants' argument that, because the conviction involved "moral turpitude," it was admissible under Cal. Const., Art. I, §28(f) as interpreted by People v. Castro (1985) 38 C.3d 301, 211 C.R. 719, 696 P.2d 111, supra, §303. Held, affirmed.

(a) The trial judge erred in relying on Cal. Const., Art. I, §28(f). That provision does not apply to civil litigants, nor may the Supreme Court's decisions concerning felony impeachment in criminal decisions be construed as direct holdings on felony impeachment in civil proceedings. However, the trial judge in a civil case may utilize such decisions to formulate guidelines for the judicial weighing of probative value against prejudicial effect under Ev.C. 352. (27 C.A.4th 271, 274.)

(b) Earlier civil cases interpreting former C.C.P. 2051 as requiring the mandatory admission of felony impeachment evidence without regard to probative value or prejudice were also inapplicable, as they were superseded by the adoption of Ev.C. 352, and Ev.C. 788 (supra, §292). As a result, in a civil case, once a proper objection is made, the trial judge must carry out the weighing process required by Ev.C. 352. (27 C.A.4th 274.)

(c) In the present case, the trial judge weighed probative value against prejudice. Because, as a preliminary matter, he also applied the "moral turpitude" test of People v. Castro, supra, he applied a stricter standard than the civil case law requires. Thus, plaintiff was not disadvantaged, and the felony conviction was properly admitted. (27 C.A.4th 274.)

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 309

[§ 309] Showing on Record.

(1) Showing Required. In People v. Boyd (1985) 167 C.A.3d 36, 212 C.R. 873, the court, upholding the impeachment, quoted from the record of the proceeding on the motion to exclude (167 C.A.3d 40, footnote 2), observing that an analysis of the colloquy between the court and counsel "discloses that the trial judge engaged in the weighing process that is contemplated by Evidence Code section 352." (167 C.A.3d 43.) The court then said:

"The trial court did not here recite the magic words that its decision was based on '352' nor did it intone that the probative value of the evidence, if admitted, was not outweighed by creating substantial danger of undue prejudice, or comments of similar import. The important point is, and we so find, that the court made apparent on the record that prior to exercising its discretion it did, in fact, weigh prejudice against probative value, using a Beagle analysis." (167 C.A.3d 45.) (See also People v. Navarez (1985) 169 C.A.3d 936, 950, 215 C.R. 519 [record must affirmatively show that trial judge did requisite weighing]; People v. Flanagan (1986) 185 C.A.3d 764, 771, 230 C.R. 64; on People v. Beagle (1972) 6 C.3d 441, 99 C.R. 313, 492 P.2d 1, see supra, §301.)

(2) Showing Not Required. In People v. Johnson (1987) 193 C.A.3d 1570, 239 C.R. 190, defendant contended that the trial judge failed to demonstrate on-the-record exercise of discretion under Ev.C. 352. Held, the record was adequate. The entire colloquy before the trial judge on defendant's motion, which his counsel described as "being made under" Ev.C. 352, was focused on the exercise of discretion under that section and covered all the factors identified in the Beagle case, supra. Moreover, the judge decided to permit the use of only two of three priors notwithstanding that all were concededly relevant. (193 C.A.3d 1575.) Hence, although the trial judge did not explicitly state the factors and his assessment of them in making his decision, the content and context of the argument that preceded the judge's ruling, and the nature of the ruling itself, adequately demonstrated a reflection and weighing of Ev.C. 352 factors. (193 C.A.3d 1577.)

The issue of a record showing exercise of discretion was reexamined in People v. Clarida (1987) 197 C.A.3d 547, 249 C.R. 363.

(a) People v. Flanagan, supra, relying on prior Supreme Court and Court of Appeal decisions, held that the trial court commits Castro error if the record does not affirmatively show that it engaged in the weighing process. (197 C.A.3d 552.)

(b) People v. Johnson, supra, relying on People v. Montiel (1985) 39 C.3d 910, 924, 218 C.R. 572, 705 P.2d 1248, rejected the Flanagan theory. (197 C.A.3d 552.)

(c) "The signals from the high court are somewhat confusing." But People v. Montiel, supra, states the correct approach: "No doubt it would be better practice for a trial judge to make a clear record of its weighing process; but to establish error on appeal, an appellant should show more than a silent record. He or she should make an affirmative showing of error, something Clarida has not done." (197 C.A.3d 553.) (See dissent, arguing that prior Supreme Court decisions support the Flanagan theory.)

In People v. Hoze (1987) 195 C.A.3d 949, 241 C.R. 14, the court, analyzing People v. Green (1980) 27 C.3d 1, 164 C.R. 1, 609 P.2d 468, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §23, and People v. Frank (1985) 38 C.3d 711, 214 C.R. 801, 700 P.2d 415, neither of which dealt with prior convictions for impeachment, came to this conclusion: "[W]here the reasonable exercise of discretion by the trial court could not have justified the exclusion of the evidence for impeachment purposes (as held in Beagle), it is harmless error for the trial court to fail to state on the record its reasons for denying a motion to exclude impeaching convictions under Evidence Code section 352. That is the teaching of Green and Frank. If there is any contrary implication in People v. Flanagan, ... we decline to follow it." (195 C.A.3d 955.) (See also People v. Gutierrez (1993) 14 C.A.4th 1425, 1435, 1436, 18 C.R.2d 371 [although trial court should have had record reflect exercise of discretion, "we are satisfied the error was harmless"].)

[§ 310] Illustrations of Proper Balancing.

In People v. Pitts (1990) 223 C.A.3d 1547, 273 C.R. 389, defendant argued that the trial judge, rather than exercising discretion under Ev.C. 352, improperly applied an inflexible rule that any crime more than 10 years old cannot be used for impeachment. Held, there was no error. The judge listened attentively to defendant's arguments, but found no basis for changing his view that when the question is purely a matter of time, 10 years is a reasonable place to draw the line. "In our view establishing 10 years as the presumptive cut off date for prior convictions is an exercise of discretion. It is preferable that the trial court have in mind a presumptive standard of remoteness rather than have no concept of remoteness and issue inconsistent rulings each time the issue comes up." (223 C.A.3d 1554.)

There are numerous illustrations of trial judges properly exercising their discretion in balancing the probative value and prejudicial effect of admitting evidence of prior convictions. (See People v. Morris (1991) 53 C.3d 152, 194, 279 C.R. 720, 807 P.2d 949 [7- and 9-year-old convictions for kidnaping, attempted rape, assault and car theft were not too remote; offenses were crimes of moral turpitude and were not identical to charged offenses so as to suggest present guilt]; People v. DeCosse (1986) 183 C.A.3d 404, 411, 412, 228 C.R. 114 [trial judge, exercising discretion under Ev.C. 352, ruled that prior offense committed 12 years ago was not too remote; held not an abuse of discretion]; People v. Lewis (1987) 191 C.A.3d 1288, 1295, 237 C.R. 64 [no abuse of discretion in ruling that rape and robbery priors would be admissible for impeachment in defendant's rape trial]; People v. Massey (1987) 192 C.A.3d 819, 825, 237 C.R. 734 [prior conviction not too remote; defendant was incarcerated for most of intervening period]; People v. Plager (1987) 196 C.A.3d 1537, 1544, 242 C.R. 624 [record showed trial judge exercised discretion and balanced probative value against prejudice in ruling that prior burglary convictions could be used to impeach]; People v. Campbell (1994) 23 C.A.4th 1488, 1496, 1497, 28 C.R.2d 716 [discretion properly exercised in admitting felony vandalism conviction, which tended to shake confidence in defendant's honesty; although conviction was 10 years old, defendant had had others since, and withholding facts underlying the conviction avoided prejudice]; People v. Green (1995) 34 C.A.4th 165, 183, 40 C.R.2d 239 [in prosecution for unlawful taking of vehicle, systematic occurrence of defendant's prior auto theft convictions over 20-year period was relevant to credibility and thus they were properly admitted; they were not automatically inadmissible simply because they were same as present offense]; People v. Kwolek (1995) 40 C.A.4th 1521, 1533, 48 C.R.2d 325 [defendant charged with attempting to murder wife; admission of prior conviction of possession of marijuana for sale was more probative than prejudicial, allowing jury to infer that defendant lied when he denied demanding that wife obtain marijuana]; cf. People v. Williams (1991) 228 C.A.3d 146, 152, 278 C.R. 801 [where defense counsel conceded that assault conviction was admissible, trial judge had no obligation to weigh its prejudicial effect against its probative value].)

Smith* (2007) 40 C.4th 483, 513, 54 C.R.3d 245, 150 P.3d 1224 [in capital murder trial, trial judge did not abuse discretion in permitting defendant to impeach witness against him with only one incident from his juvenile record; defendant did not identify other incidents that so demonstrated moral turpitude that it would be error to exclude them, and further impeachment based on juvenile record would not have produced significantly different impression of witness' testimony]; *Boeken v. ## CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XI. IMPEACHMENT

E. Conviction of a Felony.

4. Discretionary Exclusion.

b. After Proposition 8.

4. Timing of Decision To Exclude or Admit Conviction.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 311

[§ 311] Timing of Decision To Exclude or Admit Conviction.

In People v. Washington (1989) 211 C.A.3d 207, 259 C.R. 307, the issue was whether the trial judge may postpone the ruling on a motion to exclude the use of prior convictions for impeachment until after the defendant testifies. Held, although such procedure is neither customary nor recommended, it is not improper.

(a) There are several reasons for requiring the trial judge to make his or her ruling before the defendant testifies:

(1) Under People v. Beagle (1972) 6 C.3d 441, 99 C.R. 313, 492 P.2d 1, supra, §301, and People v. Castro (1985) 38 C.3d 301, 211 C.R. 719, 696 P.2d 111, supra, §303, the chance that the defendant will not testify is one of the factors that the trial judge should use when weighing the relative prejudice and probative value of a prior conviction. Postponing a ruling on a motion to exclude until after the defendant testifies effectively ignores this factor. (211 C.A.3d 212.)

(2) The defendant cannot knowingly and intelligently assess the risks and benefits of exercising the constitutional right to testify on his or her own behalf without knowing whether the trier of fact will learn of the defendant's past crimes. (211 C.A.3d 213.)

(3) As a practical matter, the probative value of a prior conviction with respect to the defendant's veracity can be determined independently of his or her testimony. The prejudicial effect of a prior conviction can also be evaluated without hearing the defendant's testimony if, as is often the case, it is obvious what that testimony would be. And if prejudicial effect cannot be evaluated without judicial knowledge of the testimony, the defendant can make an offer of proof or testify at an in camera hearing, as described in People v. Delgado (1973) 32 C.A.3d 242, 108 C.R. 399. (211 C.A.3d 213.)

(b) Despite these compelling reasons for requiring the trial judge to rule on the admissibility of prior convictions before the defendant testifies, People v. Collins (1986) 42 C.3d 378, 228 C.R. 899, 722 P.2d 173, infra, §312, adopting language used by Luce v. United States (1984) 469 U.S. 38, 105 S.Ct. 460, 83 L.Ed.2d 443, infra, §312, declared that in order to balance a prior conviction's probative value against its prejudicial effect, the trial judge " 'must know the precise nature of the defendant's testimony, which is unknowable when ... the defendant does not testify.' " (211 C.A.3d 213.) And the Collins court rejected the idea of substituting an offer of proof for the defendant's testimony, pointing out that the testimony can, for numerous reasons, differ from the offer. (211 C.A.3d 213.) Hence, while neither Collins nor

Luce contains any genuine analysis of the postponement issue, it appears that both cases deliberately permitted postponement. "While this is not the customary practice and in our view should not be encouraged, it would exceed our authority to hold that a California trial judge cannot do that which our own high court and that of the United States have manifestly authorized." (211 C.A.3d 214.) (On whether defendant must testify to preserve alleged error as to admissibility of prior conviction, see infra, §312.)

XI. IMPEACHMENT

E. Conviction of a Felony.

4. Discretionary Exclusion.

b. After Proposition 8.

5. Preserving Right To Review.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 312

[§ 312] Preserving Right To Review.

(1) Adoption of Luce Rule. In People v. Collins (1986) 42 C.3d 378, 228 C.R. 899, 722 P.2d 173, defendant was charged with burglary and a prior burglary conviction, and he denied the prior. At the start of trial, the prosecution disclosed out of the presence of the jury that defendant had a prior conviction of robbery on which sentence had been stayed. After the prosecution rested, defendant moved to prohibit use of either prior to impeach, but the judge declared that he was bound by Cal. Const., Art. I, §28(f) (Proposition 8) and had to admit both if defendant testified. Defense counsel then advised the court that, although defendant had intended to testify, he would not do so; and defendant rested without calling any witnesses. The jury found him guilty of second degree burglary, and the Court of Appeal affirmed. On review, the Court of Appeal judgment was reversed with directions.

(a) In Luce v. United States (1984) 469 U.S. 38, 105 S.Ct. 460, 83 L.Ed.2d 443, the court unanimously held that denial of a motion to exclude a prior conviction offered for impeachment is not reviewable on appeal if the defendant fails to testify, for the reviewing court cannot intelligibly weigh the probative value of the conviction against its prejudicial effect. (42 C.3d 384.)

(b) Although Luce is a rule of federal criminal procedure adopted pursuant to the Supreme Court's advisory power, the California Supreme Court also has power to adopt such rules, as it did in People v. Beagle (1972) 6 C.3d 441, 99 C.R. 313, 492 P.2d 1, supra, §301. (42 C.3d 385.) The federal rule of evidence implemented in Luce is similar in effect to the provision of the California Evidence Code at issue in Beagle and People v. Castro (1985) 38 C.3d 301, 211 C.R. 719, 696 P.2d 111, supra, §303; the reasoning in Luce is sound and equally applicable to California practice; and other states have been virtually unanimous in adopting the Luce rule. (42 C.3d 385.) "For all these reasons we likewise adopt the Luce rule as a judicially declared rule of criminal procedure in California." (42 C.3d 385.)

(c) Defendant's argument that the Luce rule infringes on the privilege against self-incrimination by making its assertion too costly does not withstand analysis. Defendant wants the right to testify without being impeached by prior felony convictions, but no witness has that right: "The procedure of impeaching by proof of prior felony conviction originated at common law, and has long been authorized by our Legislature. ... It is settled that such impeachment does not violate the due process clause of either the federal or the state Constitution ... , or the federal privilege against self-incrimination." (42 C.3d 387.) Thus, the rule is not inconsistent with any constitutional mandate, and should be part of the law of this state. (42 C.3d 388.) (On other states that have adopted Luce rule, see 80 A.L.R.4th 1028.)

Three justices dissented from the holding on the Luce rule.

(2) Rule Applies Prospectively Only. The court in Collins went on to consider the applicability of the Luce rule to existing cases:

Under prior decisions, a defendant was not required to testify (or even make an offer of proof) in order to preserve a claim of improper impeachment on appeal; and no such sweeping procedural change was stated or implied in Proposition 8 or its ballot materials. "Thus our decision to adopt the Luce requirement establishes a new rule of law when there was a previous rule to the contrary; in such circumstances we have the option of giving it prospective effect on policy grounds." (42 C.3d 388.) And considerations of fairness compel exercise of that option: "To deny defendants their right to appeal on this issue because they failed to testify--after we repeatedly told them they need not do so--would be to change the rules after the contest was over." (42 C.3d 388.) Hence, the rule will apply only prospectively to trials beginning after this decision is final. (42 C.3d 388.) (See People v. Mickle (1991) 54 C.3d 140, 173, 284 C.R. 511, 814 P.2d 290 [requirement that defendant must testify in order to raise Castro claim on appeal applies only prospectively]; People v. Sims (1993) 5 C.4th 405, 455, 20 C.R.2d 537, 853 P.2d 992 [citing Luce and Collins].)

Because it is only prospective in effect, Collins sets forth a procedure to be followed by appellate courts in applying Castro to cases tried before March 11, 1985 (the date of the Castro decision) in which the defendant was charged with a crime committed after June 9, 1982 (the date on which Proposition 8 became effective). (See 42 C.3d 489; for subsequent cases on Collins-mandated procedure, see People v. Mickle, supra, 54 C.3d 173; People v. Littrel (1986) 185 C.A.3d 699, 703, 230 C.R. 83 [remand to enable trial judge to exercise discretion]; People v. Flanagan (1986) 185 C.A.3d 764, 773, 230 C.R. 64 [although case was post-Castro and Collins did not control, remanded pursuant to "the spirit" of Collins]; People v. Payne (1988) 202 C.A.3d 933, 939, 249 C.R. 67 [despite some confusion, court both understood and complied with its obligation under Collins to exercise discretion].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Adoption of Luce Rule. See Ohler v. United States (2000) 529 U.S. 753, 120 S.Ct. 1851, 1855, 146 L.Ed.2d 826, 832 [where judge rules in limine that defendant's prior conviction is admissible for impeachment and defendant preemptively introduces prior on direct examination, defendant waives claim on appeal that admission of prior was error; relying on Luce v. United States (1984) 469 U.S. 38, 105 S.Ct. 460, 83 L.Ed.2d 443, text, p. 391]; *People v. #### E. Conviction of a Felony.

4. Discretionary Exclusion.

b. After Proposition 8.

6. Effect of Error.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 313

[§ 313] Effect of Error.

(1) Watson Test Adopted. In People v. Castro (1985) 38 C.3d 301, 211 C.R. 719, 696 P.2d 111, supra, §303, the court, applying the probability test of People v. Watson (1956) 46 C.2d 818, 299 P.2d 243, 6 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Reversible Error, §7, declared that "[a]fter a review of the entire record we are of the opinion that it is not reasonably probable that a result more favorable to defendant would have occurred in the absence of error." (38 C.3d 319.)

Many Court of Appeal decisions on failure to exercise discretion under Ev.C. 352 apply the Watson probability test and hold the error harmless. (See People v. Bonilla (1985) 168 C.A.3d 201, 205, 214 C.R. 191; People v. Hunt (1985) 169 C.A.3d 668, 676, 215 C.R. 429; People v. Dossman (1985) 171 C.A.3d 843, 850, 217 C.R. 728; People v. Rogers (1985) 173 C.A.3d 205, 210, 211, 218 C.R. 494; People v. Zataray (1985) 173 C.A.3d 390, 401, 219 C.R. 33; People v. Statler (1985) 174 C.A.3d 46, 54, 56, 219 C.R. 713; People v. Jackson (1985) 174 C.A.3d 260, 266, 220 C.R. 39; People v. Armendariz (1985) 174 C.A.3d 674, 683, 220 C.R. 229; People v. Mazza (1985) 175 C.A.3d 836, 844, 221 C.R. 640; People v. Martinez (1985) 175 C.A.3d 881, 890, 221 C.R. 258; People v. Rodriguez (1986) 177 C.A.3d 174, 179, 222 C.R. 809; People v. Coad (1986) 181 C.A.3d 1094, 1113, 226 C.R. 386; People v. Clarida (1987) 197 C.A.3d 547, 554, 249 C.R. 363, supra, §309; see also People v. Lang (1989) 49 C.3d 991, 1013, 264 C.R. 386, 782 P.2d 627 [trial judge's failure to exercise discretion].)

(2) Former Distinction Where Defendant Did Not Testify. In People v. Almarez (1985) 168 C.A.3d 262, 214 C.R. 105, the court pointed out that the Watson standard has been regularly applied where the defendant testifies (as in Castro, supra). But where the defendant does not testify, the court cannot determine the degree of prejudice, and reversal is required under People v. Rist (1976) 16 C.3d 211, 127 C.R. 457, 545 P.2d 833 and other Supreme Court decisions. (168 C.A.3d 268, 269.) The Almarez opinion treated these decisions as prescribing the standard of reversible error per se. (168 C.A.3d 268.) (See also People v. Navarez (1985) 169 C.A.3d 936, 948, 215 C.R. 519 [quoting People v. Barrick (1982) 33 C.3d 115, 187 C.R. 716, 654 P.2d 1243, supra, §302, and reversing judgment where trial judge did not engage in weighing process required by Ev.C. 352].)

However, in People v. Forster (1985) 169 C.A.3d 519, 215 C.R. 218, where defendant did not testify, the court nevertheless applied the Watson test and held the error harmless: "Although in such an instance the evaluation of the prejudicial effect of the error is more difficult because in many cases there is no clue as to what the defendant's testimony would have been had he testified ... , nonetheless the harmless error test applies and the judgment must be affirmed if the evidence against the defendant is so airtight and convincing that it is all but obvious that any testimony by the defendant would not have affected the outcome of his trial." (169 C.A.3d 526.)

In People v. Brown (1985) 169 C.A.3d 800, 215 C.R. 494, the court attempted to reconcile conflicting expressions in the cases. The standard set forth in People v. Fries (1979) 24 C.3d 222, 230, 231, 155 C.R. 194, 594 P.2d 19, supra, §302, was described as "a reverse Watson test," announcing "something akin to a rebuttable presumption of prejudice." (169 C.A.3d 807.) People v. Spearman (1979) 25 C.3d 107, 157 C.R. 883, 599 P.2d 74, supra, §302, although citing Watson, "states a nearly per se reversal rule." (169 C.A.3d 807.) But People v. Castro, supra, "labels Rist, Fries and Spearman as part of the Antick line of cases," which were countered by Proposition 8. (169 C.A.3d 807.) The opinion then states:

"This conclusion is supported by the Castro court itself which uses a 'pure' Watson test in determining the prejudicial effect of the trial court's error. ... Unlike the present case, the defendant in Castro did testify; however, the court makes no distinction between testifying and nontestifying defendants. Absent further guidance from the Supreme Court, we conclude that the effect of the error in the present case must be evaluated under the Watson standard." (169 C.A.3d 807.) (See also People v. Parrish (1985) 170 C.A.3d 336, 353, 217 C.R. 700.)

The effect of error in cases in which the defendant did not testify will rarely be an issue now that a defendant who fails to testify is precluded from obtaining appellate review of the trial court's decision to allow admission of a prior conviction for impeachment. (See People v. Collins (1986) 42 C.3d 378, 383, 228 C.R. 899, 722 P.2d 173, supra, §312.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XI. IMPEACHMENT

E. Conviction of a Felony.

5. Extension of Rule to Misconduct Not Resulting in Conviction.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 314

[§ 314] Extension of Rule to Misconduct Not Resulting in Conviction.

Past criminal conduct involving moral turpitude that has some logical bearing on the veracity of a witness in a criminal proceeding is admissible to impeach the witness, subject to the trial court's discretion under Ev.C. 352. (People v. Wheeler (1992) 4 C.4th 284, 288, 295, 14 C.R.2d 418, 841 P.2d 938, supra, §286; People v. Lepolo (1997) 55 C.A.4th 85, 89, 63 C.R.2d 735.) In applying the moral turpitude test to misconduct that did not result in a conviction, the trial judge is not required to give a particular penal label to the offense. Whether the evidence should be admitted turns solely on whether the misconduct in question evinces moral turpitude, not on what it would be called if it were a charged offense. (People v. Lepolo, supra, 55 C.A.4th 89 [evidence of incident in which defendant brandished machete at police officer evinced moral turpitude and was properly admitted in murder prosecution, regardless of whether conduct was characterized as brandishing weapon or making terrorist threat or was given no label at all].)

XI. IMPEACHMENT
F. Inconsistent Statements.
1. General Rule.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 315

[§ 315] General Rule.

(1) Present Law. A witness may be impeached by evidence of a statement the witness made that is inconsistent with any part of his or her testimony at the hearing. (Ev.C. 780(h).) This familiar rule of impeachment of a witness by self-contradiction casts doubt on the truth of both statements. (See generally Gackstetter v. Market Street Ry. Co. (1930) 104 C.A. 89, 94, 285 P. 409 [refusal to permit impeachment held reversible error under the circumstances]; People v. Murray (1967) 247 C.A.2d 730, 735, 56 C.R. 21, citing the text; 1 McCormick 5th, §34 et seq.; 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1017 et seq.; 10 Pacific L. J. 1 [use of prior inconsistent statement]; 9 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 285 [California theory and practice]; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §929 et seq.; 49 Am.Jur. Trials 501; 21 Proof of Facts 2d 101; 152 A.L.R. Fed 375 [use of prior inconsistent statements for impeachment under F. R. Evid., Rule 613].)

(2) Former Law Compared. The Evidence Code makes substantial changes in former California law governing this kind of evidence: (a) The foundation requirement is abolished. (See infra, §332 et seq.) (b) A party may impeach its own witness in this manner. (See infra, §356.) (c) The statement is affirmative evidence under a hearsay exception. (See 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §156.)

Special considerations may affect admissibility of inconsistent statements in criminal cases: (a) Involuntary statements are inadmissible. (See 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §136.) (b) Statements obtained in violation of the Miranda rule are admissible, but a defendant's post-Miranda silence cannot be used to impeach. (See infra, §321 et seq.) (c) Testimony at a suppression hearing may be used to impeach. (See infra, §327.)

XI. IMPEACHMENT

F. Inconsistent Statements.

2. Nature of Statement.

a. Prior Statements.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 316

[§ 316] Prior Statements.

(1) Definition. The broad definition of "statement" in Ev.C. 225 covers any "oral or written verbal expression" and even assertive conduct (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §7). And the cases disclose the use of many kinds of statements, oral or written, formal or informal. (See 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1040; 9 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 285, 289.)

(2) Illustrations. The following are illustrations:

(a) An affidavit or sworn statement not admissible under the limited hearsay exception (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §297). (See 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1040; 14 *A.L.R.*4th 828.)

(b) Former testimony not admissible under the limited exception of former California law. (See Loop Bldg. Co. v. Fredenhagen (1934) 3 C.A.2d 151, 152, 39 P.2d 222 [testimony on supplemental proceedings before referee]; Kyne v. Kyne (1940) 38 C.A.2d 122, 130, 100 P.2d 806; 11 A.L.R.2d 30, 89; see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §256.)

(c) An unsigned deposition. (Bennett v. Superior Court (1950) 99 C.A.2d 585, 593, 222 P.2d 276.)

(e) An abandoned or superseded pleading, not regarded as a judicial admission. (See Williams v. Seiglitz (1921) 186 C. 767, 773, 200 P. 635; Meyer v. State Bd. of Equalization (1954) 42 C.2d 376, 385, 267 P.2d 257; Cornwell v. Mulcahy (1923) 62 C.A. 658, 661, 217 P. 568; Gajanich v. Gregory (1931) 116 C.A. 622, 629, 3 P.2d 389; 4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §419.) (On statements in superseded pleadings as evidentiary admissions under Evidence Code, see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §97; on right of defendant to introduce contents of sex-offense victim's complaint as prior inconsistent statement, despite limitations imposed on prosecution's use of that evidence, see People v. Brown (1994) 8 C.4th 746, 762, 35 C.R.2d 407, 883 P.2d 949, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §168.)

(f) Statements made in course of plea bargaining negotiations. (People v. Crow (1994) 28 C.A.4th 440, 452, 33 C.R.2d 624, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §138.)

(g) A statement by a witness to his or her probation officer. In People v. Allen (1989) 216 C.A.3d 208, 264 C.R. 621, defendant and DeLaney were originally charged as codefendants in a trial for assault on Williams. Before trial,

DeLaney pleaded guilty to robbery, and at defendant's trial, the prosecution called him as a witness. He described his participation in the robbery and assault, but testified that the man who shot Williams was M, not defendant. The prosecution then introduced DeLaney's prior statement to his probation officer that defendant was the killer. Defense counsel sought to exclude the statement relying on cases holding that statements by a defendant to his probation officer are protected by use immunity, pursuant to the policy encouraging a defendant to enter into frank discussion with his probation officer (see People v. Harrington (1970) 2 C.3d 991, 88 C.R. 161, 471 P.2d 961). Held, the statement was properly admitted.

"The case before us ... presents no conflict between self-incrimination and candor requiring extension of this judicially created use immunity. ... DeLaney's statements to his probation officer were not being used against him in his own criminal trial. He was not a defendant, but merely a witness in appellant's criminal trial. The policy of promoting an accused's candor and cooperation with his probation officer was adequately served by DeLaney's protection from use of any such statements against him in his own criminal trial. ... [W]e find no justification for extending the privilege to also protect appellant from incrimination by DeLaney." (216 C.A.3d 212.)

(3) Distinction: Statement Made at Arbitration Hearing. C.R.C., Rule 1616(c), providing that evidence adduced at an arbitration hearing may not be used for impeachment at a subsequent trial (see 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, §577), takes precedence over Evidence Code provisions permitting impeachment by use of prior inconsistent statements. (Jimena v. Alesso (1995) 36 C.A.4th 1028, 1030, 1031, 43 C.R.2d 18.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XI. IMPEACHMENT

F. Inconsistent Statements.

2. Nature of Statement.

b. Subsequent Statements.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 317

[§ 317] Subsequent Statements.

The impeachment rule is generally applied to prior inconsistent statements. But this is not a limitation: Statements made after the testimony may also be shown, even though the witness has left the court and is no longer available to exercise the right to explain. (See Ev.C. 770, Comment, on "interests of justice exception," see infra, §333.)

Thus, in People v. Collup (1946) 27 C.2d 829, 167 P.2d 714, the prosecution was allowed to read the testimony of a witness at the preliminary examination on a showing that she had left the state permanently and was no longer available as a witness. One of the two defendants sought to testify to subsequent statements made by that witness to the effect that the testimony at the preliminary examination had been misleading and untrue. Held, the trial judge's order excluding this was reversible error. Because the inconsistent statements were made by the witness subsequent to her testimony, they were not known in time to be used in cross-examination of the witness; and the prosecution should bear the burden of surprise when introducing former testimony of an absent witness. "The defendants are helpless in meeting the testimony by a method which may refute it entirely or cast serious doubts upon its veracity, namely, subsequent contradictory statements or admissions by the witness that the testimony was false. Justice and fairness compel one of two results, that the testimony at the former trial be excluded or that the impeaching evidence be admitted." (27 C.2d 836.) (See also People v. Redston (1956) 139 C.A.2d 485, 496, 293 P.2d 880 [following Collup].)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XI. IMPEACHMENT

F. Inconsistent Statements.

2. Nature of Statement.

c. Statements Obtained in Violation of Miranda Rule.

1. Use of Statements.

aa. General Rule of Admissibility.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 318

[§ 318] General Rule of Admissibility.

(1) Admissible Under Federal and California Law. Statements obtained by police from an accused in violation of the Miranda rule (see 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §89 et seq.) are admissible for the limited purpose of impeachment. (Harris v. New York (1971) 401 U.S. 222, 91 S.Ct. 643, 645, 28 L.Ed.2d 1, 4.) The Court said that a defendant who takes the stand has an obligation to speak truthfully and accurately, and that the Miranda shield "cannot be perverted into a license to use perjury by way of a defense, free from the risk of confrontation with prior inconsistent utterances." (91 S.Ct. 646, 28 L.Ed.2d 5.) (See 5 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 193.)

The same conclusion was reached in Oregon v. Hass (1975) 420 U.S. 714, 95 S.Ct. 1215, 43 L.Ed.2d 570, where the Miranda warnings were given, but the interrogation continued after defendant said he wanted to telephone an attorney. The Court observed that, though the warnings in the Harris case were defective while those here were proper, the effect on admissibility is the same: "inadmissibility would pervert the constitutional right into a right to falsify free from the embarrassment of impeachment evidence from the defendant's own mouth." (95 S.Ct. 1221, 43 L.Ed.2d 578.)

In California, the Harris rule was recognized as the governing law in People v. May (1988) 44 C.3d 309, 315, 243 C.R. 369, 748 P.2d 307, infra, §319. (See also People v. Baker (1990) 220 C.A.3d 574, 579, 269 C.R. 475 [People v. May followed, even though police admitted violating defendant's Miranda rights for express purpose of obtaining evidence to be used against him should he testify]; 19 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 57 [People v. May]; People v. Pacchioli (1992) 9 C.A.4th 1331, 1340, 12 C.R.2d 156 [statements made to probation officer after guilty plea were not compelled, hence, could be used for impeachment in trial held after withdrawal of guilty plea]; on comparable rule for statements obtained in violation of Public Safety Officers Procedural Bill of Rights Act (Govt.C. 3300 et seq.), see Los Angeles v. Superior Court (Labio) (1997) 57 C.A.4th 1506, 67 C.R.2d 775, 8 Summary (9th), Constitutional Law, Supp., §774.)

(2) Requirement of Limiting Instruction. In People v. Duncan (1988) 204 C.A.3d 613, 620, 251 C.R. 355, the court added that the judge must, on his or her own motion, instruct the jury that the statements may be used only in passing on the defendant's credibility and not as evidence of the defendant's guilt. (204 C.A.3d 621.) However, People v. Wyatt (1989) 215 C.A.3d 255, 263 C.R. 556, disagreed with People v. Duncan, and followed the holding in People v. Nudd (1974) 12 C.3d 204, 115 C.R. 372, 524 P.2d 844, that, in the absence of a request from a party, there is no duty to give the limiting instruction. (215 C.A.3d 258.) (See People v. Baker, supra, 220 C.A.3d 580; People v. Torrez (1995) 31 C.A.4th 1084, 1090, 37 C.R.2d 712 [following People v. Wyatt, supra].)

(3) Distinction: Involuntary Statements. In People v. Bey (1993) 21 C.A.4th 1623, 27 C.R.2d 28, under circumstances similar to those in People v. Baker, supra, the court held that defendant's statements to police should not have been admitted for impeachment. Noting that involuntary statements are inadmissible for all purposes, the court found that the continued questioning of defendant after he had indicated an unwillingness to talk without an attorney rendered his subsequent statements involuntary. (21 C.A.4th 1627, 1628.)

(4) Application of Harris to Other Evidence. The rule in Harris was extended to permit the use of evidence obtained in violation of the Fourth Amendment to impeach. (See United States v. Havens (1980) 446 U.S. 620, 100 S.Ct. 1912, 1916, 64 L.Ed.2d 559, 566 [relying on Harris and Hass]; People v. Johnson (1989) 211 C.A.3d 392, 395, 259 C.R. 388 [under Havens, illegally seized pipe containing cocaine residue was admissible to impeach witness' testimony that he had never possessed cocaine]; 94 Harv. L. Rev. 77 [Havens]; but see James v. Illinois (1990) 493 U.S. 307, 110 S.Ct. 648, 652, 107 L.Ed.2d 676, 684 [impeachment exception to exclusionary rule does not permit prosecution to impeach testimony of all defense witnesses with illegally obtained evidence].)

(1) Admissible Under Federal and California Law. See People v. Jablonski (2006) 37 C.4th 774, 816, 38 C.R.3d 98, 126 P.3d 938 [officers' repeated refusal to honor defendant's invocation of his Miranda rights did not render his statement involuntary, and thus statement was admissible for impeachment]; People v. DePriest (2007) 42 C.4th 1, 34, 63 C.R.3d 896, 163 P.3d 896 [trial judge did not err in ruling that defendant's statements to California police while jailed in Missouri could be used for impeachment even if he was not read his Miranda rights or questioning continued after he asserted those rights; questioning was short and relaxed, and officer's assurance that defendant's statements could not be used in case-in-chief was accurate as far as it went; relying on Jablonski]; People v. Riskin (2006) 143 C.A.4th 234, 242, 49 C.R.3d 287 [in child molestation prosecution, statements made by defendant to daughter during pretext call were properly admitted for impeachment; as to constitutional right to silence, statements fell within exception of Harris v. New York (1971) 401 U.S. 222, 91 S.Ct. 643, 28 L.Ed.2d 1, text, p. 398, and as to right to counsel, pretext call was made before right attached].

(2) Requirement of Limiting Instruction. See People v. Coffman & Marlow (2004) 34 C.4th 1, 63, 17 C.R.3d 710, 96 P.3d 30 [in capital murder trial in which defendants' extrajudicial statements were admitted for impeachment purposes, trial judge did not err in failing to instruct jurors sua sponte that statements obtained in violation of Miranda may be used only for impeachment; following People v. Nudd (1974) 12 C.3d 204, 115 C.R. 372, 524 P.2d 844, text, p. 399]; CALCRIM, No. 356 [Miranda-Defective Statements]; People v. Pilster (2006) 138 C.A.4th 1395, 1406, 42 C.R.3d 301 [in assault prosecution in which defendant's prearrest statements to police officer, obtained in violation of Miranda, were admitted for impeachment, trial judge's error in denying defendant's request to instruct jurors that they could use statements only on issue of credibility was harmless; verdict demonstrated that jury disbelieved defendant's entire testimony, and his admission to officer that it was possible he had hit victim added little to substantive conclusion of guilt]. (3) Distinction: Involuntary Statements. See People v. Gutierrez (2002) 28 C.4th 1083, 1132, 124 C.R.2d 373, 52 P.3d 572 [defendant's statement to detective, obtained in violation of Miranda rule, was admissible for impeachment under People v. May (1988) 44 C.3d 309, 243 C.R. 369, 748 P.2d 307, text, p. 398, even though it was obtained after detective stated it would not be used for any purpose; detective's subjective belief in his representation did not preclude involuntariness finding, but representation was not motivation for defendant's statement, which turned out to be false]; *People v. #### 3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 319

[§ 319] Former California Law Abrogated.

(1) Former Law. In People v. Disbrow (1976) 16 C.3d 101, 127 C.R. 360, 545 P.2d 272, the Supreme Court, overruling its prior decision in People v. Nudd (1974) 12 C.3d 204, 115 C.R. 372, 524 P.2d 844, invoked the independent California constitutional grounds doctrine (see 7 Summary (9th), Constitutional Law, §90), and held evidence obtained in violation of Miranda inadmissible for impeachment. (See 65 Cal. L. Rev. 393; 9 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 771; 12 Cal. Western L. Rev. 512.)

The Disbrow holding was reaffirmed in People v. Rucker (1980) 26 C.3d 368, 389, 162 C.R. 13, 605 P.2d 843, where the court ruled inadmissible lengthy booking interviews obtained from defendant in violation of Miranda. (See People v. Farris (1981) 120 C.A.3d 51, 58, 174 C.R. 424 [following Rucker]; cf. People v. Robinson (1997) 53 C.A.4th 270, 279, 61 C.R.2d 587 [even under Disbrow rule, applicable because of date of charged crimes, defendant, whose conviction was reversed because of Miranda violation, could not state during retrial, without fear of impeachment, that he had never confessed].)

(2) Disbrow Abrogated by Proposition 8. Following the passage of Proposition 8 (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §8), several Court of Appeal decisions took the position that the holdings in Disbrow and Rucker, although in conflict with the federal rule under Harris v. New York (1971) 401 U.S. 222, 91 S.Ct. 643, 28 L.Ed.2d 1, supra, §318, survived the passage of Proposition 8. (See People v. Jacobs (1984) 158 C.A.3d 740, 750, 204 C.R. 849; People v. Barrios (1985) 166 C.A.3d 732, 739, 741, 745, 212 C.R. 644; see also 17 Pacific L. J. 1337.) This position was rejected in People v. May (1988) 44 C.3d 309, 243 C.R. 369, 748 P.2d 307. (See People v. Kimble (1988) 201 C.A.3d 726, 731, 248 C.R. 41 [People v. May abrogated holding in Disbrow]; People v. Lanfrey (1988) 204 C.A.3d 491, 509, 251 C.R. 189, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §307 [same]; People v. Duncan (1988) 204 C.A.3d 613, 620, 251 C.R. 355 [same]; People v. O'Sullivan (1990) 217 C.A.3d 237, 245, 265 C.R. 784 [reasoning of Jacobs did not survive People v. May].)

In People v. May, defendant made a Disbrow motion to bar the prosecution from using his extrajudicial statements for impeachment. The trial judge concluded that Proposition 8 and its Truth in Evidence component (Cal. Const., Art. I, §28(d), 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §8) had abrogated the Disbrow rule, and the Court of Appeal reached the same conclusion. On review the Supreme Court first held, in a 5-2 opinion, that Disbrow survived the adoption of Proposition 8 and should not be overruled. On rehearing, the court in a 4-3 opinion held that Disbrow had been abrogated by Proposition 8, and therefore did not reach the prosecution's alternative argument that Disbrow should be overruled. (44 C.3d 311.) The new Supreme Court opinion adopted in part the opinion of the Court of Appeal.

(a) Crucial to the question of whether the Disbrow rule survived is the savings clause in Art I, §28(d), reading in part: "Nothing in this section shall affect any existing statutory rule of evidence relating to privilege or hearsay." Defendant contended that Ev.C. 940, California's statutory recognition of the constitutional privilege against self-incrimination (see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §357), is an "existing statutory rule relating to privilege." However, the question is not whether a defendant has a constitutional right under Miranda to refuse to disclose any information during a police interrogation: "The question is rather, given that defendant's constitutional privileges against self-incrimination and right to counsel were violated by the interrogation, what remedy is available to him?" (44 C.3d 316.)

(b) In re Lance W. (1985) 37 C.3d 873, 210 C.R. 631, 694 P.2d 744, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §7, involved exclusionary remedies for violation of constitutional rights to counsel and rights against self-incrimination, but its reasoning and result are equally applicable: "Both kinds of exclusionary rules are addressed to evidence obtained by police conduct in violation of constitutional provisions. Both are based on the same rationale of deterring unlawful police conduct." (44 C.3d 316.)

(c) Disbrow did not purport to define the scope of the California constitutional privilege against self-incrimination; it created a new remedy for violations of Miranda, but did not reinterpret or extend the scope of the substantive rights protected by the Constitution. "Consequently, section 940, which relates only to substantive, not remedial, rights cannot be relied upon to save the exclusionary rule set forth in Disbrow." (44 C.3d 317.)

(d) Ramona R. v. Superior Court (1985) 37 C.3d 802, 210 C.R. 204, 693 P.2d 789 (2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §370), does not support defendant's position. That court held that the use-immunity privilege was compelled by the California constitutional privilege against self-incrimination, codified in Ev.C. 940. "It consequently was a privilege specifically exempted from the all-relevant-evidence provision of section 28(d)." (44 C.3d 317.)

(e) "Given the probable aim of the voters in adopting section 28(d), namely, to dispense with exclusionary rules derived solely from the state Constitution, it is not reasonably likely that the California voters intended to preserve, in the form of a 'statutory' privilege, a judicially created exclusionary rule expressly rejected by the United States Supreme Court under the federal Constitution. ... [I]t seems very likely that Proposition 8 was crafted for the very purpose, among others, of abrogating cases such as Disbrow, which had elevated the procedural rights of the criminal defendant above the level required by the federal Constitution, as interpreted by the United States Supreme Court." (44 C.3d 318.)

(f) It is not reasonably likely that the voters deemed the Disbrow rule a "statutory rule of evidence relating to ... hearsay" (Cal. Const., Art. I, §28(d)). Ev.C. 1204 states that an otherwise admissible hearsay statement is inadmissible in a criminal action if it would be inadmissible under the federal or California Constitution (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §54). "In other words, section 1204 (in much the same manner as section 940) simply acknowledges the existence of judicial decisions under the state or federal Constitutions which bear upon the admissibility issue. As we have previously explained in the context of our analysis of section 940, in adopting section 28(d) and its exception for 'statutory rules of evidence,' the voters probably intended to preserve legislatively created evidentiary rules, while abrogating judicial decisions which had required the exclusion of evidence solely on state constitutional grounds. We would wholly frustrate this intent were we to hold that the Disbrow rule survived merely because the Legislature had acknowledged the existence of judicial rules such as Disbrow in statutes such as sections 940 and 1204." (44 C.3d 319.)

One of the four justices concurring in the majority holding on Disbrow expressed disagreement with the opinion's discussion of Ramona R., supra. (44 C.3d 320.)

The author of the original opinion (superseded by the granting of a rehearing) filed a lengthy dissent, disagreeing with the majority on all major points; and two justices joined in the dissent. (44 C.3d 320.)

(3) Applicable Date. In People v. Aguilar (1990) 218 C.A.3d 1556, 267 C.R. 879, defendant argued that application of the federal rule to statements made prior to February, 8, 1988, the date of the May decision, constituted an ex post facto use of the May rule. Held, defendant's focus on the date of the May decision is misplaced. The Disbrow rule was abrogated by the passage of Proposition 8, effective June 9, 1982. Hence, the federal rule applies to all statements made on or after that date. (218 C.A.3d 1568.)

cc. Impeachment Use Permissible Even Where Misconduct Deliberate.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 320

[§ 320] Impeachment Use Permissible Even Where Misconduct Deliberate.

In People v. Peevy (1998) 17 C.4th 1184, 73 C.R.2d 865, 953 P.2d 1212, a murder case in which defendant took the stand in his own defense, the trial judge allowed a police officer to testify in rebuttal that statements defendant made during his interrogation contradicted his trial testimony. The officer admitted that he had continued questioning defendant even after defendant requested an attorney, and that he deliberately ignored the request because he believed statements made by defendant during the continued interrogation would be admissible for impeachment. The question presented, therefore, was whether the rule of Harris v. New York (1971) 401 U.S. 222, 91 S.Ct. 643, 28 L.Ed.2d 1, supra, §318, allowing impeachment use of statements obtained in violation of Miranda, should apply when the officer deliberately fails to honor a suspect's request for counsel, with the objective of securing evidence for impeachment purposes. Held, the rule applies.

(a) Statements taken in violation of Miranda are excluded from evidence only to the extent required by the United States Constitution, and thus the issue must be resolved by an examination of United States Supreme Court precedent. (17 C.4th 1188, citing People v. May (1988) 44 C.3d 309, 243 C.R. 369, 748 P.2d 307, supra, §319.)

(b) The holdings in Harris v. New York, supra, and subsequent United States Supreme Court cases allowing impeachment use of illegally obtained evidence, are premised on the need for a balance between deterring police misconduct and exposing defendants who commit perjury at trial. " 'Assuming that the exclusionary rule has a deterrent effect on proscribed police conduct, sufficient deterrence flows when the evidence in question is made unavailable to the prosecution in its case in chief. ... The shield provided by Miranda cannot be perverted into a license to use perjury by way of a defense, free from the risk of confrontation with prior inconsistent utterances.' " (17 C.4th 1193, 1194, quoting Harris v. New York.)

(c) Other applications of the Miranda rule generally do not turn on the officer's subjective state of mind, but instead on the accused's perception of his or her circumstances, and it would be anomalous to hold that the Harris rule operates differently. "The question whether the suspect knowingly and intelligently has waived the right to counsel of which he or she has been informed is not answered by examining the silent purposes of the interrogating officer. Rather, evidence of deliberation on the part of the police and--as apparent in this case--of a purpose to violate the suspect's rights in order to secure evidence, implicates the balance struck by the high court in Harris and subsequent cases between deterrence of police misconduct and exposure of perjury. Such evidence may call into question the accuracy of the high court's conclusion in Harris that police misconduct will be deterred adequately by excluding improperly obtained evidence from the prosecution's case-in-chief, but such evidence does not render the Harris rule inapplicable." (17 C.4th 1200, 1201.)

The court concluded by emphasizing that the misconduct the prophylactic rules of Miranda and its progeny were devised to control remains illegal, and that impeachment use is allowed only because any additional deterrence to be gained from disallowing it is not worth the loss that would result if a defendant's perjury could not be exposed. (17 C.4th 1204, 1205.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(New) Distinction: Involuntary statements: In People v. Neal (2003) 31 C.4th 63, 1 C.R.3d 650, 72 P.3d 280, defendant, then 18 years old, was suspected of murdering a much older man with whom he had been living. While defendant was in custody, a police officer, in order to be able to impeach defendant, deliberately violated Miranda by continuing to question him even after he repeatedly invoked his right to remain silent and his right to counsel. During this encounter, the officer threatened to drop defendant off "closer to Timbuktu than to home" if he did not cooperate, and promised to "make it as good for him as he could" if he cooperated. (31 C.4th 85.) Nevertheless, defendant did not admit his guilt. He remained in custody overnight, and the next morning he asked to speak to the officer. Questioning resumed, and ultimately the officer obtained two confessions. At trial, defendant moved to suppress his initial exculpatory statement and the two subsequent confessions. The trial judge ruled that parts of the initial statement were inadmissible because of the Miranda violation, but that the confessions were admissible because they were voluntarily made after a break in questioning. The prosecution introduced both confessions at trial but did not use the initial exculpatory statement. Defendant was convicted and the conviction was affirmed by the Court of Appeal. Held, reversed. "[I]n light of all the surrounding circumstances--including the officer's deliberate violation of Miranda; defendant's youth, inexperience, minimal education, and low intelligence; the deprivation and isolation imposed on defendant during his confinement; and a promise and a threat made by the officer--defendant's initiation of further contact with the officer was involuntary, and his two subsequent confessions were involuntary as well." (31 C.4th 68, distinguishing People v. Peevy (1998) 17 C.4th 1184, 73 C.R.2d 865, 953 P.2d 1212, text, p. 402.) The confessions were inadmissible in the prosecution's case-in-chief because they were obtained in violation of Edwards v. Arizona (1981) 451 U.S. 477, 101 S.Ct. 1880, 68 L.Ed.2d 378, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §78, but they were also inadmissible for any purpose because they were involuntary. (31 C.4th 85.)

c. Statements Obtained in Violation of Miranda Rule.

2. Use of Defendant's Silence After Miranda Warnings.

aa. General Rule Against Use of Silence.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 321

[§ 321] General Rule Against Use of Silence.

If the defendant, after the Miranda warning that he or she may remain silent, does not speak, his or her silence (after the Miranda implied assurance that it will not be used against the defendant) cannot be used to impeach the defendant's testimony at the trial. (Doyle v. Ohio (1976) 426 U.S. 610, 96 S.Ct. 2240, 2245, 49 L.Ed.2d 91, 98.) (See also People v. Schindler (1980) 114 C.A.3d 178, 186, 170 C.R. 461 [following Doyle]; People v. Givans (1985) 166 C.A.3d 793, 796, 798, 212 C.R. 762 [following Doyle].)

In People v. Eshelman (1990) 225 C.A.3d 1513, 275 C.R. 810, a murder trial, the prosecution impeached defendant by eliciting from him that, after he was given his Miranda warning, he refused to tell Susan, his lover and the decedent's mother, why he had killed her son, even though she repeatedly asked him why he had done it. Defendant testified that his refusal stemmed from his attorney's order not to talk to Susan before the trial and from his desire to protect her emotionally. Held, use of defendant's post-Miranda silence violated Doyle.

(a) Doyle and the majority of cases interpreting it concerned a defendant's post-Miranda failure to explain his conduct to the police, rather than to a private person. However, based on its rationale, Doyle should also apply whenever the evidence shows that the defendant's silence in front of a private party resulted primarily from the conscious exercise of his constitutional rights. (225 C.A.3d 1520.)

(b) Here, while defendant's second reason for his refusal to explain the killing to Susan, i.e., to protect her emotionally, was insufficient to call Doyle into play, his reliance on his attorney's admonition not to talk to Susan clearly exhibited a reliance on his constitutional rights to silence and counsel. Hence, it was error for the prosecutor, through cross-examination and closing argument, to challenge defendant's post-Miranda refusal to discuss the crime with Susan. (225 C.A.3d 1521.)

In People v. Evans (1994) 25 C.A.4th 358, 31 C.R.2d 20, the prosecutor, during cross-examination, asked defendant why he had not given an exculpatory response during an interrogation by police officers after he was arrested and advised of his constitutional right to remain silent. The trial judge overruled defense counsel's objection. Held, this was improper.

(a) Whether error under Doyle, supra, occurred must be considered in light of Greer v. Miller (1988) 483 U.S. 756,

107 S.Ct. 3102, 97 L.Ed.2d 618, infra, §322. Under Greer, a Doyle violation has two components: the prosecution makes use of the defendant's postarrest silence for impeachment purposes, and the trial court permits that use. In Greer, the trial judge sustained defense counsel's objection and instructed the jury to ignore the question. In the present case, by contrast, the trial judge, by overruling defense counsel's objection, gave his "approval to the prosecutor's improper inquiry and as much as told the jury that the subject of the prosecutor's question was legitimate." (25 C.A.4th 368, 369.)

(b) Although defendant had mentioned his postarrest silence before the prosecutor's question, this did not function as a waiver of any Doyle violation. "The only qualification to Doyle is that it will permit a defendant who presents exculpatory testimony at trial to be questioned about a post-Miranda statement if that statement is inconsistent with the version unveiled at trial." Because defendant was silent after receiving his Miranda warnings, there could be no inconsistency. (25 C.A.4th 369, 370.)

(c) It did not matter that, as a result of defendant's failure to answer the question, no evidence went before the jury. Doyle can be violated by a mere reference. (25 C.A.4th 370.)

(d) Although the violation of Doyle was clear, it was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt: the record showed an exceptionally persuasive prosecution case confronting an exceptionally feeble showing by defendant. Furthermore, the prosecutor made no reference in her closing argument to defendant's postarrest silence. (25 C.A.4th 370, 372.)

In the view of a concurring justice, a Doyle analysis was unnecessary because defendant was the first to introduce evidence concerning his post-Miranda silence, and even under a Doyle analysis, there was no violation. (25 C.A.4th 372, 373.)

In Greer v. Miller (1988) 483 U.S. 756, 107 S.Ct. 3102, 97 L.Ed.2d 618, defendant testified that he had not participated in the murder committed by his codefendants. On cross-examination the prosecutor asked, "Why didn't you tell this story to anybody when you got arrested?" Defense counsel immediately objected, and the trial judge sustained the objection and instructed the jury to disregard the question. The prosecutor made no further reference to the matter, and defense counsel did not request any additional instruction; the judge, however, further instructed the jury to disregard questions to which objections were sustained. Held, there was no Doyle violation. In Doyle and in each of the cases in which the United States Supreme Court has applied Doyle, the trial judge permitted specific inquiry or argument respecting the defendant's post-Miranda silence. (107 S.Ct. 3108, 97 L.Ed.2d 629.) In this case, the fact of defendant's "postarrest silence was not submitted to the jury as evidence from which it was allowed to draw any permissible inference, and thus no Doyle violation occurred." (107 S.Ct. 3108, 97 L.Ed.2d 630.) Nor, under the facts of this case, did the prosecutor's improper question violate defendant's due process rights. (107 S.Ct. 3109, 97 L.Ed.2d 630.) ### XI. IMPEACHMENT

F. Inconsistent Statements.

2. Nature of Statement.

c. Statements Obtained in Violation of Miranda Rule.

2. Use of Defendant's Silence After Miranda Warnings.

dd. Effect of Error.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 324

[§ 324] Effect of Error.

In Brecht v. Abrahamson (1993) 507 U.S. 619, 113 S.Ct. 1710, 123 L.Ed.2d 353, the Court considered the effect of the erroneous use of defendant's post-arrest silence and stated as follows:

"In Chapman v. California, ... we held that the standard for determining whether a conviction must be set aside because of federal constitutional error 'was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt.' In this case we must decide whether the Chapman harmless-error standard applies in determining whether the prosecution's use for impeachment purposes of petitioner's post-Miranda silence, in violation of due process under Doyle v. Ohio, ... entitles petitioner to habeas corpus relief. We hold that it does not. Instead, the standard for determining whether habeas relief must be granted is whether the Doyle error 'had substantial and injurious effect or influence in determining the jury's verdict.' ... The Kotteakos harmless-error standard is better tailored to the nature and purpose of collateral review than the Chapman standard, and application of a less onerous harmless-error standard on habeas promotes the considerations underlying our habeas jurisprudence. Applying this standard, we conclude that petitioner is not entitled to habeas relief." (113 S.Ct. 1713, 123 L.Ed.2d 363, citing Chapman v. California (1967) 386 U.S. 18, 87 S.Ct. 824, 17 L.Ed.2d 705, and Kotteakos v. United States (1946) 328 U.S. 750, 66 S.Ct. 1239, 90 L.Ed. 1557.)

(a) Doyle error fits squarely into the category of constitutional violations which this Court has characterized as "trial error." Trial error occurs during the presentation of the case to the jury, and it is amenable to harmless-error analysis because it may be quantitatively assessed in the context of other evidence to determine the effect it had on the trial. At the other end of the spectrum lie structural defects in the constitution of the trial mechanism; such defects, e.g., deprivation of the right to counsel, require automatic reversal of the conviction because they infect the entire trial process. (113 S.Ct. 1717, 123 L.Ed.2d 367.)

(b) Chapman reached this Court on direct review; the applicability of the Chapman standard on collateral review by habeas has not been squarely addressed. (113 S.Ct. 1718, 123 L.Ed.2d 368.) But "[t]he principle that collateral review is different from direct review resounds throughout our habeas jurisprudence." (113 S.Ct. 1719, 123 L.Ed.2d 370.)

(c) "Overturning final and presumptively correct convictions on collateral review because the State cannot prove that an error is harmless under Chapman undermines the States' interest in finality and infringes upon their sovereignty over criminal matters. ... Retrying defendants whose convictions are set aside also imposes significant 'social costs,' including the expenditure of additional time and resources for all the parties involved, the 'erosion of memory' and 'dispersion of witnesses' which accompany the passage of time and make obtaining convictions on retrial more difficult, and the frustration of 'society's interest in the prompt administration of justice.' " (113 S.Ct. 1721, 123 L.Ed.2d 372, 373.)

(d) For these and other reasons "we hold that the Kotteakos harmless-error standard applies in determining whether habeas relief must be granted because of constitutional error of the trial type." (113 S.Ct. 1722, 123 L.Ed.2d 373.) Here defendant admitted shooting the victim, but claimed that it was an accident. The principal question before the jury, therefore, was whether the State met its burden in proving beyond a reasonable doubt that the shooting was intentional. The inquiry here is whether, in the light of the record as a whole, the State's improper use for impeachment purposes of defendant's post-Miranda silence "had substantial and injurious effect or influence in determining the jury's verdict." (113 S.Ct. 1722, 123 L.Ed.2d 373.) "We think it clear that it did not." (113 S.Ct. 1722, 123 L.Ed.2d 373.) (See People v. Earp (1999) 20 C.4th 826, 857, 85 C.R.2d 857, 978 P.2d 15 [even if prosecutor's comments regarding defendant's failure to mention other man as suspect to friends and relatives constituted Doyle error, it was not prejudicial; fact that defendant recounted several versions of cause of victim's injuries to his family and friends impeached his testimony; prosecutor's comments did not].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See People v. Hinton (2006) 37 C.4th 839, 867, 38 C.R.3d 149, 126 P.3d 981 [prosecutor's reference to defendant's invocation of Miranda rights on one occasion resulted in harmless error; although jury could in theory have relied on defendant's unwillingness to speak to infer that he was fabricating defense, there was no reasonable possibility it did so, as defendant gave police concededly false versions of circumstances surrounding murders both before and after invocation].

XI. IMPEACHMENT

F. Inconsistent Statements.

2. Nature of Statement.

d. Statements Obtained in Violation of Right to Counsel.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 326

[§ 326] Statements Obtained in Violation of Right to Counsel.

In People v. Brown (1996) 42 C.A.4th 461, 49 C.R.2d 652, defendant, wanted on child molestation charges, was apprehended in Utah, waived extradition, and was transported back to California. A detective then conducted a tape-recorded interview with him, during which he admitted certain acts of oral copulation with the victim but denied any acts of intercourse or sodomy. Defendant moved in limine to suppress the interview on the ground that it was obtained in violation of his rights under the Fifth and Sixth Amendments. The trial judge determined that defendant had invoked his right to counsel midway through the interview; that, as to his Fifth Amendment claim, he had impliedly waived his right to remain silent; and that, as to the Sixth Amendment claim, the statements occurring after the right to counsel was invoked were voluntary and could be used for impeachment. Defendant chose not to testify and was convicted. Held, affirmed.

(a) The question whether defendant was required to testify in order to preserve his challenge to the trial judge's ruling on the impeachment use of statements obtained in violation of the right to counsel is one of first impression in California. However, a majority of courts in other jurisdictions have allowed the appeal to go forward, and in two California cases, in a slightly different context--statements obtained in violation of the prophylactic Miranda rules (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §76)--the defendant was not required to testify in order to preserve the issue for appeal. "[W]e conclude that when the defendant raises a pure issue of law concerning a fundamental constitutional right, the defendant need not testify to preserve error in the trial court's rulings on impeachable evidence." (42 C.A.4th 471, citing People v. May (1988) 44 C.3d 309, 243 C.R. 369, 748 P.2d 307, supra, §319, and People v. Kimble (1988) 201 C.A.3d 726, 248 C.R. 41.)

(b) Defendant's position that his statements following invocation of his right to counsel should have been suppressed for all purposes is supported by two published California cases and rulings in a minority of other jurisdictions. (42 C.A.4th 471, 472, citing People v. Cribas (1991) 231 C.A.3d 596, 282 C.R. 538, and People v. Harper (1991) 228 C.A.3d 843, 279 C.R. 204.) The majority position, allowing impeachment use in this context, is premised on the notion that reliable and probative evidence should not be excluded for all purposes unless it is derived from coerced or involuntary statements: The exclusionary rules should not be perverted into a license to commit perjury. "We agree with [this] reasoning. ... Thus, we reject the rule of Cribas and Harper, and we hold that the exclusion of a defendant's voluntary statements, obtained in violation of the Sixth Amendment right to counsel, from the case-in-chief sufficiently vindicates the defendant's Sixth Amendment rights. However, when the defendant takes the stand and testifies inconsistently with those statements, protection of the truth-finding purpose of a criminal trial requires that such statements be admissible for impeachment. We find no error in the trial court's ruling." (42 C.A.4th 473, 474.)

[§ 327] Testimony at Suppression Hearing.

In Simmons v. United States (1968) 390 U.S. 377, 88 S.Ct. 967, 19 L.Ed.2d 1247, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §431, the Court held that the testimony of defendant on a pretrial motion to suppress evidence as illegally obtained was inadmissible at the trial on the issue of guilt, but the opinion did not consider the question whether it might be admissible for the limited purpose of impeachment. In People v. Douglas (1977) 66 C.A.3d 998, 136 C.R. 358, the court concluded that such testimony can be used for impeachment where the defendant takes the stand and testifies in a manner inconsistent with his or her pretrial testimony. (66 C.A.3d 1005.) The opinion found persuasive support in the dictum in People v. Coleman (1975) 13 C.3d 867, 120 C.R. 384, 533 P.2d 1024, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §380, that testimony at a probation revocation hearing is inadmissible in subsequent proceedings on the criminal charge "save for purposes of impeachment." ## CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XI. IMPEACHMENT

F. Inconsistent Statements.

3. Inconsistency.

a. Inconsistency in Effect.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 328

[§ 328] Inconsistency in Effect.

The statement must be clearly inconsistent. If the supposed contradiction does not really exist, it is not proper impeachment. (See Froeming v. Stockton Elec. R. Co. (1915) 171 C. 401, 408, 153 P. 712.) But inconsistency in effect rather than contradiction in express terms is the test. Even though no particular contradiction is found, if the general purport of the testimony is compared with the whole statement, and they appear to be the result of inconsistent beliefs, the prior statement is admissible. (See Worley v. Spreckels Bros. Commercial Co. (1912) 163 C. 60, 71, 124 P. 697; Gregoriev v. Northwestern Pac. R. Co. (1928) 95 C.A. 428, 438, 273 P. 76; Fibreboard Paper Products Corp. v. East Bay Union of Machinists, Local 1304, United Steelworkers of America, AFL-CIO (1964) 227 C.A.2d 675, 702, 39 C.R. 64, citing the text; 1 McCormick 5th, §34; 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1040; 9 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 285, 293; 10 Pacific L. J. 1, 13; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §933 et seq.)

Thus, in Gregoriev v. Northwestern Pac. R. Co., supra, an action for personal injuries and wrongful death resulting from a collision with a train at a crossing, a landowner testified for defendant that a particular crossing near his place was clear and unobstructed. On cross-examination, a letter sent by him to the railroad company some years before the accident, requesting a crossing sign for purposes of safety, was properly introduced. The impression created by his testimony was that the place was safe without a crossing sign, and the letter was substantially inconsistent. (95 C.A. 438.)

In Worley v. Spreckels Bros. Commercial Co., supra, the question was whether Vargas, a Mexican workman, understood English sufficiently to discharge his duties, and defendant's witness testified that he had never had any difficulty with him. In rebuttal, plaintiff testified that the witness had once said, "I wouldn't hire a man like Vargas unless I had to." Held, this was admissible, because the statement implied that Vargas was not a competent workman. It was immaterial that on some conceivable theory, the two statements might be reconciled (e.g., the witness might have disliked the man on account of his nationality, rather than his lack of ability). (163 C. 71.) (See also In re Deon D. (1989) 208 C.A.3d 953, 962, 256 C.R. 490 [testimony of witness in rape case who answered some questions, but refused to answer others on ground that he was no "snitch," held inconsistent with prior statement given to police].)

On the other hand, in People v. Epps (1981) 122 C.A.3d 691, 176 C.R. 332, a prosecution of a male nursing assistant for annoying or molesting a minor female inmate at a mental health center, defendant testified he had never kissed the inmate. The court admitted the defendant's prior statement that he had kissed another minor inmate. Held, this was inadmissible, because defendant had not made a "blanket denial" of any prior misconduct of this type. (122 C.A.3d 696.)

F. Inconsistent Statements.

3. Inconsistency.

b. Conduct: Prior Silence on Matter.

1. In General.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 329

[§ 329] In General.

"A failure to assert a fact, when it would have been natural to assert it, amounts in effect to an assertion of the non-existence of the fact. ... There may be explanations, indicating that the person had in truth no belief of that tenor; but the conduct is 'prima facie' an inconsistency." (People v. Brophy (1954) 122 C.A.2d 638, 649, 265 P.2d 593 [quoting Wigmore]; see People v. Goldberg (1952) 110 C.A.2d 17, 26, 242 P.2d 116; 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1042; 9 U.C. Davis L. However, in Brooks v. E. J. Willig Truck Trans. Co. (1953) 40 C.2d 669, 255 P.2d 802, defendant F, a truck driver, hit decedent and drove on without stopping. In this action for wrongful death, defendants unsuccessfully sought to impeach the arresting officer by showing that on a prior naval inquiry and preliminary hearing, he had not mentioned F's statement that he had been drinking. Held, the court's refusal to permit this was proper because on the prior occasions, the officer was not specifically questioned on this point. "A witness may not be impeached by showing that he omitted to state a fact or stated it less fully at a prior proceeding unless his attention was called to the matter at that time and he was then asked to testify concerning the very facts embraced in the questions propounded at the trial." ## CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XI. IMPEACHMENT

F. Inconsistent Statements.

3. Inconsistency.

b. Conduct: Prior Silence on Matter.

2. Witness' Failure To Report to Police.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 330

[§ 330] Witness' Failure To Report to Police.

In People v. Ratliff (1987) 189 C.A.3d 696, 234 C.R. 502, defendant, charged with robbery, offered testimony of Felice, his sister, and Canister, his friend, that defendant was at his sister's home on the night of the robbery and that Canister saw him there. The prosecutor was permitted on cross-examination to ask them why they had not given this exculpatory information to the police prior to trial. Held, there was no error.

(a) "There is nothing inherently improper about cross-examining a defense witness as to his failure to come forward at an earlier date. In fact, the information discovered during this type of questioning may well aid the trier of fact in its effort to determine whether the testimony is an accurate reflection of the truth or a recent fabrication." (189 C.A.3d 701, citing People v. Cartwright (1980) 107 C.A.3d 402, 166 C.R. 37 [holding question proper in cross-examination of defendant on his alibi testimony].)

(b) "Although a citizen ordinarily has no legal obligation to offer exculpatory information to law enforcement officials, there are many situations where the natural response of a person would be to come forward in order to avoid a mistaken prosecution of a relative or friend. In that situation a witness's silence may be akin to a 'prior inconsistent statement,' and therefore, has probative value." (189 C.A.3d 701.)

(c) There are other situations in which this would not be natural; e.g., where the witness believes that any disclosure would be futile, where the witness has been told by the defendant's attorney not to discuss the case, or where the witness was not aware that he or she possessed exculpatory information; under these circumstances the witness' failure to speak is consistent with his or her trial testimony. Hence, to ensure that the pretrial silence was not a natural consequence of the circumstances, the prosecution must lay a foundation "by first establishing that the witness knew of the pending charges in sufficient detail to realize that he possessed exculpatory information, that the witness had reason to make the information available, that he was familiar with the means of reporting it to the proper authorities, and that the defendant or his lawyer, or both, did not ask the witness to refrain from doing so." (189 C.A.3d 701, quoting from Massachusetts case.)

(d) The prosecutor laid the foundation. (1) In cross-examination of Canister, he established the facts that Canister was a good friend, and knew he possessed the information weeks before the trial. (2) In cross-examination of Felice, he showed that she had discussed the date of the robbery with defendant and knew that she possessed the information over a month before trial. (189 C.A.3d 701.)

(e) Despite the prejudicial effect of the evidence, there was no abuse of discretion in allowing it to reach the jury. The witnesses were able to explain their silence, either to the prosecutor or to defense counsel on redirect examination; and the judge could weigh the information and determine whether the testimony was consistent with the prior behavior and assertions of the witness. (189 C.A.3d 702.)

In People v. Tauber (1996) 49 C.A.4th 518, 56 C.R.2d 656, the Court of Appeal agreed with the conclusion in Ratliff that "the fact a witness is aware of the potentially exculpatory nature of facts but fails to reveal that evidence to the authorities before trial is relevant to the witness's credibility." (49 C.A.4th 524.) However, in light of the strong constitutional policy favoring the admission of relevant evidence (Cal. Const., Art. I, §28(d); see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §8), the court held that the factors stated as foundational requirements in Ratliff should instead simply be matters going to the weight of the evidence. If there is substantial evidence that a witness was aware before trial of information that he or she understood tended to exculpate the defendant, "then the failure to report the information before trial is relevant and admissible subject to a prejudice evaluation" under Ev.C. 352. (49 C.A.4th 525, 526.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XI. IMPEACHMENT

F. Inconsistent Statements.

3. Inconsistency.

c. Inconsistent Opinion.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 331

[§ 331] Inconsistent Opinion.

Since the opinion rule does not apply to admissions (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §95), it should not apply to prior inconsistent statements used to impeach; and this is the modern rule. (See 1 McCormick 5th, §35; 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1041; 9 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 285, 310; 10 Pacific L. J. 1, 14; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §936.)

Thus, in Hanton v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co. (1918) 178 C. 616, 174 P. 61, a personal injury suit, plaintiff's witness testified that she saw plaintiff close to, and walking fast toward, the car, lost sight of him, and about 15 seconds later, the car started. On cross-examination, her prior written statement was produced in which she had said, "The car had started and I am sure it was moving before he could have gotten to it." Held, this was admissible. Her testimony was intended to support the inference that plaintiff had time enough to board the train before it started; the prior statement justified the opposite inference. "Certainly, the statement objected to, under the circumstances, was but an expression of opinion, and as a general rule witnesses must testify to facts and not to opinions or inferences. But even opinions expressed by a witness may sometimes be given in evidence if their tendency be to impeach the testimony of the witness given on the stand." (178 C. 619.)

In Contra Costa v. East Bay Mun. Dist. (1959) 175 C.A.2d 834, 1 C.R. 60, a condemnation suit, defendant's expert testified to a value of $ 4,211. On cross-examination, he was asked about his testimony in a prior condemnation suit, 7 months before, involving a comparable piece of property. Over objection, he answered that he had valued the other property at 10 cents per square foot as against 43 cents in the present case, and that he had valued the easement in the other property at $ 1, while here, he had given it a value equal to the fee. Held, this was proper impeachment. An expert who testifies as to the value of land states under oath that his opinion is in fact what he says it is. This can be attacked by showing a different opinion previously expressed about the same land, and the same should be true where the opinion concerns other land, provided it is comparable and the difference in time is not too great. (175 C.A.2d 837.) (See also People v. Murata (1958) 161 C.A.2d 369, 379, 326 P.2d 947; California v. Stevenson (1970) 5 C.A.3d 60, 65, 84 C.R. 742, supra, §253 [appraiser's valuation of condemned land properly impeached by showing he previously valued nearby land at much higher rate].)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XI. IMPEACHMENT

F. Inconsistent Statements.

4. Abolition of Foundation Requirements.

a. Oral Statements.

1. Former Law.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 332

[§ 332] Former Law.

An explanation of the former foundation requirement will make clear the significance of the Evidence Code rule:

(1) No Foundation Required for Simple Cross-Examination. The belief that a witness could not be asked any question concerning his or her prior statement without a foundation of "time, place and persons present" and an opportunity to explain was widely held, but was erroneous. Such questions are not necessarily intended as a basis for impeachment: "Frequently, they are designed to test the recollection of the witness, and, frequently, as in the instance before us, the question is proper, though ultimately and according to the answer which may be made it will or will not be followed by a strictly impeaching question. Thus, it was proper to ask the witness if he had so testified. His answer might have been that he did not, when an impeaching question would properly follow. His answer might have been that he did so testify with explanation of the variance between his answers, in which case no impeaching question would be necessary." (People v. Jones (1911) 160 C. 358, 365, 117 P. 176; see also People v. Kidd (1961) 56 C.2d 759, 765, 16 C.R. 793, 366 P.2d 49; LeCyr v. Dow (1939) 30 C.A.2d 457, 464, 86 P.2d 900 [no need to lay foundation before party can be asked if he or she had conversation, or what conversation was, or, if he or she made statement, what statement was]; Shallenberger v. Duncan (1966) 244 C.A.2d 197, 202, 53 C.R. 77, dictum citing the text.)

(2) Foundation Required if Extrinsic Evidence To Be Offered. If the cross-examiner ended his or her inquiry into the prior statement with the cross-examination, no foundation problem would arise. But if the prosecutor intended to prove the inconsistent statement by extrinsic evidence, there was danger of unfairness and undue consumption of time. If the witness were given the opportunity to refresh his or her memory, and admit and explain while on the stand, the calling of other witnesses to impeach the witness might be unnecessary or futile. Hence, former C.C.P. 2052 required that a foundation be laid, while the witness was on the stand, by (a) relating the statements, the times, places and persons present, and (b) asking whether the witness made them and, if so, allowing him or her to explain.

As the court said in People v. Singh (1912) 20 C.A. 146, 128 P. 420: "The rule requiring such foundation was designed for the purpose of fully informing the assailed witness of the particulars of the alleged contradictory statement, together with the circumstances of the time and place of its making, and the persons present, in order that the witness, in justice to himself and the party in whose behalf he was called, might fairly and intelligently deny, affirm, or explain the statements attributed to him." (20 C.A. 149.) (See also People v. Nonella (1893) 99 C. 333, 335, 33 P. 1097; Rignell v. Font (1928) 90 C.A. 730, 735, 266 P. 588; People v. Greenwell (1937) 20 C.A.2d 266, 267, 66 P.2d 674; Lewis v. Western Truck Line (1941) 44 C.A.2d 455, 465, 112 P.2d 747; People v. Young (1945) 70 C.A.2d 28, 34, 160 P.2d 132;

People v. Holman (1945) 72 C.A.2d 75, 96, 164 P.2d 297; Burns v. California Milk Transport (1948) 89 C.A.2d 70, 74, 200 P.2d 43; People v. Malicoat (1949) 89 C.A.2d 742, 745, 201 P.2d 850; 1 McCormick 5th, §37; 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1025 et seq.)

Considerable latitude was, however, allowed in the framing of the foundation questions. (See Plass v. Plass (1898) 122 C. 3, 16, 54 P. 372 [where only witness and person to whom he talked were present, not necessary to state explicitly that no other persons were present]; People v. Hovermale (1925) 76 C.A. 91, 94, 243 P. 878 [failure to state place not necessarily prejudicial]; People v. Singh, supra, 20 C.A. 149 [sufficient to name person to whom statement was made without naming all others, if conversation was fully identified]; cf. 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1029 [criticizing inflexible approach of most cases].)

XI. IMPEACHMENT

F. Inconsistent Statements.

4. Abolition of Foundation Requirements.

a. Oral Statements.

2. Evidence Code.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 333

[§ 333] Evidence Code.

The foundation requirement was criticized as arbitrary and unrealistic, often working to the disadvantage of the cross-examiner and to the benefit of a dishonest witness. (See 1 McCormick 5th, §§28, 37; 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1027.) Former Unif. Rule 22(b) made it discretionary with the trial judge to admit or exclude the extrinsic evidence where the witness had not had an opportunity to explain. (See 2 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 32, 41.) The Evidence Code, adopting some of the language of the Uniform Rule, deals with the problem in similar fashion.

(1) Restatement of Cross-Examination Rule. The former rule, that simple cross-examination can proceed without a foundation (supra, §332), is preserved: "In examining a witness concerning a statement or other conduct by him that is inconsistent with any part of his testimony at the hearing, it is not necessary to disclose to him any information concerning the statement or other conduct." (Ev.C. 769.) There may, however, be circumstances under which the information must be given to opposing counsel. (See Kadelbach v. Amaral (1973) 31 C.A.3d 814, 821, 107 C.R. 720, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §149.)

(2) Abolition of Foundation Requirement for Extrinsic Evidence. To allow a witness to be impeached by extrinsic evidence of his or her apparently inconsistent statement without giving the witness an opportunity to explain would be most unfair, and the witness' right to do so is protected. But the Code also seeks to strengthen the hand of the cross-examiner by removing the obligation to advise the witness in advance that he or she is going to be so impeached (thereby giving the witness time to contrive a false explanation). "Permitting a witness to explain or deny an alleged inconsistent statement is desirable, but there is no compelling reason to provide the opportunity for explanation before the inconsistent statement is introduced in evidence." (Ev.C. 770, Comment.)

Hence, this rule: Extrinsic evidence of the inconsistent statement is admissible if the witness (a) was given the opportunity to explain or deny while under cross-examination (as the old rule required), or (b) even if not given that opportunity while under cross-examination, if the witness still has the opportunity to take the stand; i.e., he or she "has not been excused from giving further testimony in the action." (Ev.C. 770.) As the Commission observes: "Section 770 will permit more effective cross-examination and impeachment of several collusive witnesses, since there need be no disclosure of prior inconsistency before all such witnesses have been examined." (Ev.C. 770, Comment; see 18 Hastings L. J. 210; 9 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 285, 313; 10 Pacific L. J. 1, 3.)

(3) Exclusionary Rule and Exception. The converse of the above stated rule is that if the witness was unconditionally excused without ever having had an opportunity to explain, the extrinsic impeaching evidence must be excluded. (Ev.C. 770.) In People v. Garcia (1990) 224 C.A.3d 297, 273 C.R. 666, a prosecution involving the writing of "bad bonds," a prosecution witness answered in the negative when asked whether she had ever told anyone that unless defendant gave her a certain amount of money, she would get him in trouble. The trial judge refused to allow a defense witness to testify that the prosecution witness had made a prior inconsistent statement to her. Held, this was correct; the prosecution witness was not given a realistic opportunity to explain or deny the inconsistent statement, as required by Ev.C. 770. Such an opportunity requires reference to more than one of the following: (a) the people involved in the conversation, (b) its time and place, or (c) the specific statements that were made during it. Here, the foundational question completely missed the first two categories. (224 C.A.3d 304.)

But the exclusionary rule is subject to a broad discretionary exception: "[u]nless the interests of justice otherwise require." (Ev.C. 770.) As the Commission says: "An absolute rule forbidding introduction of such evidence where the specified conditions are not met may cause hardship in some cases. For example, the party seeking to introduce the statement may not have learned of its existence until after the witness has left the court and is no longer available to testify." (Ev.C. 770, Comment.) (See supra, §317.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See 1 McCormick 6th, §§28, 37.

(2) Abolition of Foundation Requirement for Extrinsic Evidence. See Colarossi v. Coty US (2002) 97 C.A.4th 1142, 1151, 119 C.R.2d 131 [in action alleging that plaintiff was wrongfully fired for cooperating in sexual harassment investigation, trial judge erred in refusing to consider, at summary judgment stage, another employee's declaration that investigation target (employer's marketing director) stated that she wanted to take revenge on investigation participants; statement was inconsistent with her deposition testimony, and, although she had no opportunity in deposition to explain or deny statement, she would have that opportunity at trial].

F. Inconsistent Statements.

4. Abolition of Foundation Requirements. b. Written Statements.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 334

[§ 334] Written Statements.

(1) Former Law. Former C.C.P. 2052 provided that if the inconsistent statement was in writing, it had to be shown to the witness before any question concerning it was put to him or her. This statute codified the holding of Queens Case in 1820. In California, it was even applied to oral statements made in the course of an official proceeding, which were later transcribed and the transcription signed by the witness. (See People v. Orosco (1925) 73 C.A. 580, 594, 239 P. 82 [coroner's inquest]; Umemoto v. McDonald (1936) 6 C.2d 587, 592, 58 P.2d 1274 [same]; cf. People v. Young (1945) 70 C.A.2d 28, 35, 160 P.2d 132 [dictum that oral statements made informally did not become writings by later transcription].)

This rule received almost universal condemnation as unsound in principle and undesirable in practice. (See 1 McCormick 5th, §§28, 37; 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1026; 4 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1259 et seq.; 2 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 32, 41.) As the Comment to Ev.C. 769 observes: "The disclosure of inconsistent written statements ... limits the effectiveness of cross-examination by removing the element of surprise. The forewarning gives the dishonest witness the opportunity to reshape his testimony in conformity with the prior statement."

(2) Evidence Code. The original Uniform Rule abolished the mandatory foundation requirement, and the Evidence Code does likewise, by making the same rules applicable to oral and written inconsistent statements. Thus, Ev.C. 769, eliminating any foundation requirement on cross-examination (supra, §333), applies to "a statement," which, under Ev.C. 225, includes both oral and written expressions. And Ev.C. 770, calling for an opportunity to explain but not as a foundation requirement (supra, §333), also applies to "a statement." (See Ev.C. 769, Comment.)

a. Cross-Examination.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 335

[§ 335] Cross-Examination.

(1) Use of Only Part of Statement Prohibited. The impeaching question should include substantially all of the prior statement, and the use of only a part of it, in a manner calculated to mislead or trick the witness, will not be permitted. Thus, in Umemoto v. McDonald (1936) 6 C.2d 587, 58 P.2d 1274, an action for wrongful death, the question was whether the decedent had gone outside the pedestrian crosswalk. The witness said that decedent had not done so. At the coroner's inquest, she had replied to the same question: "I don't know; I couldn't see, but I think she was; maybe she was trying to get away." Counsel for defendant asked if she had previously so testified, but he omitted the italicized portion of her answer, and after objection, still refused to include it on the ground that it was a mere conclusion. Held, an objection was properly sustained; the statement in its incomplete form failed to comply with the statutory requirements, and was unfair in omitting the clause that explained the uncertain first part of the sentence. (6 C.2d 591.) (On the practice, see 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1045; 10 Pacific L. J. 1, 25; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §942.)

(2) Inquiry About Truth of Prior Statement Proper. May the cross-examiner ask the witness whether the prior statement was true? The question has been criticized as argumentative, but was held to be proper, in the judge's discretion, in People v. Southack (1952) 39 C.2d 578, 248 P.2d 12. The charge was manslaughter. Defendant's daughter, wife of the victim, was questioned on the circumstances, her prior statement to the sheriff was recited to her, she answered that she had been half out of her mind, and the prosecutor then said: "And you are telling us, are you, that when [the sheriff] asked these questions and you gave these answers, you were not telling the truth; is that right?" Held, there was no prejudicial error: "Control of cross-examination of a witness as to which of his conflicting statements is true should be in the sound discretion of the trial judge. The purpose of such cross-examination is ascertainment of the truth, and if, as here, that purpose can be furthered by direct questioning as to the truth or falsity of prior statements, such questioning may be permitted; the trial court, however, must be ever alert to protect the witness against being badgered or tricked into statements unintended by the witness." (39 C.2d 590.)

XI. IMPEACHMENT

F. Inconsistent Statements.

5. Proof.

b. Extrinsic Evidence.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 336

[§ 336] Extrinsic Evidence.

The same completeness and accuracy in setting forth the statement are required in questioning the impeaching witness as in the cross-examination of the witness who is to be impeached. "The proper method of impeachment is to formulate the question so as to embrace the very statement, at least in substance, which the witness whom it is desired to impeach has denied making, and to ask the impeaching witness for a categorical answer whether the statement was made, giving the circumstances of times, places and persons present." (McLaughlin v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp. (1919) 180 C. 527, 539, 182 P. 44; see also Barsotti v. Imperatrice (1929) 97 C.A. 569, 574, 275 P. 892 [counsel asked impeaching witness whether she had conversation, then asked her to relate it; held reversible error]; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §949.)

Earlier cases furnish many illustrations of the practice, although they stress the now abandoned foundation rule (supra, §333). (See Western Union Oil Co. v. Newlove (1905) 145 C. 772, 775, 79 P. 542; Keyes v. Geary Street, Park & Ocean R. Co. (1907) 152 C. 437, 441, 93 P. 88; People v. Raven (1955) 44 C.2d 523, 282 P.2d 866; *People v. ## CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

F. Inconsistent Statements.

5. Proof.

c. Where Witness Admits Making Statement.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 337

[§ 337] Where Witness Admits Making Statement.

If the witness admits the inconsistent statement, the witness is impeached by his or her own testimony, and this may end the inquiry. But there is some room for discretion of the judge, and some distinctions must be borne in mind:

(1) If the admission is unequivocal, the trial judge may properly restrict further cross-examination or extrinsic evidence. (See People v. Kennedy (1937) 21 C.A.2d 185, 200, 69 P.2d 224; People v. Perez (1961) 189 C.A.2d 526, 536, 11 C.R. 456; 1 McCormick 5th, §37; but see 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1037, urging contrary rule.)

(2) The witness may, on redirect examination, explain apparent inconsistencies. (Hale Bros. v. Milliken (1907) 5 C.A. 344, 363, 90 P. 365; see supra, §256; cf. Cornwell v. Mulcahy (1923) 62 C.A. 658, 661, 217 P. 568 [no error in refusing to permit explanation on cross-examination].)

(3) If the witness, after admitting to making the prior statement, offers an explanation, evidence contradicting the explanation has nothing to do with the issues, and will normally be excluded. And in a criminal case, to allow such evidence against the defendant may be seriously prejudicial. Thus, in People v. Perez, supra, a narcotics case, to show knowledge, the prosecution brought L, an 18-year-old boy in custody of the Youth Authority for narcotics possession, to testify to a prior purchase from defendant. But L, on direct examination, said he had never seen defendant. The prosecution, claiming surprise, was allowed, over objection, to impeach L by asking him if he had told officers that he had bought heroin from defendant, and he answered that he had, but did so under the inducement of a promise of release from custody. Then the prosecution called officer P to testify that he never held out any such inducement, and introduced a lengthy tape recording of L's conversation with the officers in which L stated that he had purchased both from defendant and his brother and would so testify. Held, reversible error. (189 C.A.2d 536.)

However, People v. Perez was distinguished in People v. Barnett (1998) 17 C.4th 1044, 74 C.R.2d 121, 954 P.2d 384, a murder case in which defendant's friend acknowledged on cross-examination having told both the prosecutor and his own attorney that he had seen defendant's legs smeared with blood. On redirect, however, defense counsel elicited testimony from him to the effect that he had been pressured by his attorney to make the previous statement. The trial judge then allowed the prosecutor to call the witness' attorney, who testified that the witness had told him on two occasions that he had seen blood on defendant. Held, this was proper. People v. Perez "preceded the enactment of California's Evidence Code and additionally has been disapproved to the extent it purported to bar the introduction of evidence contradicting a material witness's claim that prior inconsistent statements were made as a result of improper police pressures. ... In any event, its holding does not bar the type of evidence challenged here. Unlike the situation in

People v. Perez, the testimony in this case did not pertain to an unrelated offense and was not likely to mislead or otherwise confuse the jury. The prior inconsistent statement at bar--Burgess' statement that he observed what appeared to have been blood on defendant the morning after Eggett's murder--was evidence pointing to defendant's involvement in the charged murder and special circumstance allegations. ... By eliciting testimony from Burgess that his attorney had pressured him to lie, the defense evidently sought to cast doubt on the truthfulness of the prior statement and to neutralize its effect. Under these circumstances, the trial court properly allowed the prosecution to offer Vasquez's testimony to rebut the damaging impression." (17 C.4th 1139, 1140.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XI. IMPEACHMENT

F. Inconsistent Statements.

5. Proof.

d. Where Witness Has No Recollection.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 338

[§ 338] Where Witness Has No Recollection.

(1) General Rule of Inadmissibility. Ordinarily, the testimony of a witness that he or she has forgotten an event is not inconsistent with a prior statement describing that event. In enacting Ev.C. 1235, "the Legislature has retained the fundamental requirement that the witness' prior statement in fact be 'inconsistent with his testimony at the hearing' before it can be admitted." (People v. Sam (1969) 71 C.2d 194, 210, 77 C.R. 804, 454 P.2d 700 [impeachment improper; "a two-year interval and considerable liquor have intervened between incident and trial"]; see People v. Johnson (1992) 3 C.4th 1183, 1219, 14 C.R.2d 702, 842 P.2d 1 [witness' "momentary expression of uncertainty" during cross-examination was not inconsistent with statement during preliminary hearing].)

(2) Distinction: Evasive or Untruthful Answers. The general rule applies in "normal circumstances"; a deliberately evasive "I don't remember" answer is an implied denial of the fact and inconsistent in effect with the prior statement. (See People v. Green (1971) 3 C.3d 981, 988, 92 C.R. 494, 479 P.2d 998, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §159 [impeachment proper; "here the delay was only two months, and even during that brief interval the facts must have been kept uppermost in (the witness') mind by such events as the continuing police investigation, his own arrest and detention, his appearance at defendant's hearing, and the preparation for this trial"]; see also Clifton v. Ullis (1976) 17 C.3d 99, 104, 130 C.R. 155, 549 P.2d 1251 ["Fairly stated, Sam stands for no more than the proposition that 'prior statements are not admissible to impeach a witness whose answers to questions are exclusively of the 'I-don't-remember' variety' "; evidence properly excludable may become admissible when witness no longer says "I don't remember," and expressly denies disputed matters]; People v. Young (1945) 70 C.A.2d 28, 34, 160 P.2d 132; People v. O'Quinn (1980) 109 C.A.3d 219, 224, 167 C.R. 141; 9 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 285, 295; 10 Pacific L. J. 1, 16.)

In People v. O'Quinn, supra, a murder trial, S made statements to the police on January 7 and 19 concerning the circumstances of the killing. When called as a prosecution witness at the preliminary examination on January 31, she professed not to remember either the circumstances of the killing or the prior statements she had made to the police. The magistrate ruled that the prior statements were admissible. Held, the ruling was correct in the light of the following: (a) The short period between the prior statements and the hearing; (b) the fact that the witness, on two occasions, said "I don't remember" before the prosecutor had completed the question, and in all other cases, the "I don't remember" response was immediate without any attempt to ponder; (c) the fact that the witness was the sister of two defendants and the girlfriend of the third. (109 C.A.3d 224.)

The court also, citing federal cases, rejected the contention that to hold the prior statements admissible where the witness asserts lack of recollection is a denial of the defendant's constitutional right of confrontation. "[A]lthough

Sledge was ostensibly unable to remember the circumstances of the crime or her statements to the police, she was nevertheless on the stand and available for cross-examination. The defense was able to cross-examine her about her use of drugs and their effect on her memory, and could have questioned her about possible bias. ... It is possible that further probing by cross-examination might have jogged the witness' memory." (109 C.A.3d 228.)

In People v. Plasencia (1985) 168 C.A.3d 546, 223 C.R. 786, the witnesses M and C had made prior statements linking defendant with gang activities on the night of a criminal assault, but at the trial, gave evasive denials and "I don't remember" answers. In holding the prior statements admissible under the tests laid down in People v. Green, supra, the court said: "Although the memories of the witnesses faltered when asked if they recalled the details of the attack or the statements given to the investigating officers, both were able to recount in detail the allegedly coercive tactics of the police and that they were nowhere near the scene when the crime occurred." (168 C.A.3d 552.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Distinction: Evasive or Untruthful Answers. See People v. Ervin (2000) 22 C.4th 48, 84, 85, 91 C.R.2d 623, 990 P.2d 506 [in light of witness' apparent evasions and unwillingness to testify against defendant at trial, her earlier testimony was properly admitted as prior inconsistent statement]; People v. Sapp (2003) 31 C.4th 240, 296, 297, 2 C.R.3d 554, 73 P.3d 433 [in penalty phase of capital murder trial, witness' prior statements regarding disappearance of defendant's mother several years earlier were properly admitted, where her claim that she did not remember statements amounted to deliberate evasion]; People v. Perez (2000) 82 C.A.4th 760, 764, 98 C.R.2d 522 [following People v. O'Quinn (1980) 109 C.A.3d 219, 167 C.R. 141, text, p. 422]; People v. Gunder (2007) 151 C.A.4th 412, 418, 59 C.R.3d 817 [evidence supported trial judge's implicit conclusion that witness' testimony that he did not remember event "because of medication" was not credible, and thus his prior extrajudicial statement was properly admitted; it was not probable that witness would forget defendant's shooting himself through leg after dropping gun in close proximity to witness but could recall threatening message from one of victims merely because he had written it down].

The rule that the corpus delicti of a crime must be established independently of the accused's extrajudicial admissions (see 1 *Cal. Crim. ### XI. IMPEACHMENT

G. Contradictory Evidence on Relevant Matter.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 340

[§ 340] Contradictory Evidence on Relevant Matter.

(1) General Rule. A witness may be impeached by evidence of the "nonexistence of any fact" testified to by the witness. (Ev.C. 780(i).) In other words, if a witness is shown to have testified erroneously as to any particular relevant matter, an inference of untrustworthiness may be drawn as to the rest of his or her testimony. (See supra, §110.) Hence, evidence may be introduced to contradict or expose the error or falsity of the particular testimony. (See 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1008 et seq.; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §992.)

(2) Evidence Admissible. In Khan v. Zemansky (1922) 59 C.A. 324, 210 P. 529, the action was for recovery of a ring, and defendant's witness testified that on March 19, he was in defendant's store and saw him deliver it to plaintiff. The witness fixed the date by a sale of stock he made there to M. In rebuttal, plaintiff called M, who testified to only one purchase of stock from the witness on May 10. Held, this was admissible as tending to discredit the statement of the witness that he was in the store. (59 C.A. 326.)

In Moody v. Peirano (1906) 4 C.A. 411, 88 P. 380, plaintiff sued for breach of warranty of quality in the sale of seed wheat. Defendant testified that he sold seed to Main and Myall on the same conditions, without warranty. In rebuttal, plaintiff called Main, who testified that he had bought seed from the same lot with a warranty. Held, this was proper contradiction on a relevant matter, as tending to show defendant's course of business and bearing on the probability of a warranty in the sale to plaintiff. (4 C.A. 416.) (See Firlotte v. Jessee (1946) 76 C.A.2d 207, 210, 172 P.2d 710, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §112 [following Moody v. Peirano in somewhat similar situation].)

In Greenleaf v. Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. (1919) 43 C.A. 691, 185 P. 872, plaintiff's theory was that defendant's janitor, depositing ashes in a can near plaintiff's building, set it on fire. The janitor testified that he knew he poured water over the ashes because he did so every night. Plaintiff then called another witness, a former employee of defendant, to testify that he had observed, on some occasions during the past month, that the janitor did not wet the ashes. Held, this should have been allowed, because it would weaken the janitor's testimony as to his invariable habit. (43 C.A. 694.) (See also Gadbury v. Ray (1959) 171 C.A.2d 150, 157, 340 P.2d 66; 1 McCormick 5th, §49; 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1000 et seq.; supra, §239 [evidence of subsequent precautions to contradict opinion as to safety].)

In Rousseau v. West Coast House Movers (1967) 256 C.A.2d 878, 64 C.R. 655, a personal injury action, plaintiff claimed that head injuries changed him from a sober, reliable worker into a victim of traumatic epilepsy, and he denied any past or present history of drunkenness. Defendant introduced evidence of plaintiff's arrests for drunkenness before and after the accident, consisting of reports of arresting officers describing the facts of intoxication directly observed by them. (See 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §239.) Held, admissible: First, to refute plaintiff's claim that his difficulties were recent and caused by the accident. Second, to rebut his claim of the cause of epilepsy, by showing that it resulted from excessive drinking. (256 C.A.2d 886.)

In People v. Ogg (1968) 258 C.A.2d 841, 66 C.R. 289, a homicide case, defendant, in support of his claim of self-defense, testified to his state of mind: He believed that decedent victim had been drinking, and he feared him when he was drinking. The prosecutor asked him about a conversation with P, 2 weeks after the incident, in which defendant had said, "I'll knock that punk out again." Defendant denied it, and the prosecution called P, who testified to the statement. Held, this was admissible, tending to disprove a consequential disputed fact--whether defendant feared the decedent. (258 C.A.2d 847.) (See also People v. Schumacher (1967) 256 C.A.2d 858, 864, 64 C.R. 494 [to impeach defendant's denial that he knew what heroin looked like, undercover officer called to prove purchase of heroin from defendant on date after offense charged].)

In Leader v. California (1986) 182 C.A.3d 1079, 226 C.R. 207, plaintiff brought an action for assault and battery, alleging that police officers used excessive force to arrest him. In the criminal prosecution, he was convicted of the misdemeanors of resisting arrest and battering an officer. In the civil action, the trial judge refused to allow proof of the misdemeanor convictions, and the jury returned a verdict for plaintiff. Held, judgment reversed.

(a) The misdemeanor convictions for a serious offense, after a full and fair hearing, could be used as collateral estoppel on the issue involved in the present civil suit. (182 C.A.3d 1084, 1088, 1089; see 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Judgment, §333.)

(b) The convictions were also admissible under Ev.C. 780(i) for the limited purpose of proving the nonexistence of facts testified to by him (that he was not belligerent or uncooperative and that he never struck the officer or resisted arrest). (182 C.A.3d 1089, 1090, 1091.)

(3) Evidence Inadmissible. In People v. Rodriguez (1999) 20 C.4th 1, 82 C.R.2d 413, 971 P.2d 618, a prosecution witness testified that, while walking his dog on the roof of his apartment building, he had seen defendant shoot the victim. Defendant proffered impeachment testimony by the female apartment manager that she had not granted the witness permission to go on the roof. Held, the trial judge properly excluded the testimony.

The relevant issue is whether the witness was actually on the roof at the time of the murder. The manager's testimony that she had not granted the witness permission to use the roof "plainly had little, if any, tendency in reason to prove that [the witness] in fact had not gone on the roof and, hence, that he testified untruthfully." (20 C.4th 10.) First, the manager's testimony did not directly meet the witness' testimony, which was, in effect, that a male apartment manager had allowed him to walk his dog on the roof. The proffered testimony did not encompass the question whether the female manager's husband, who was also a manager, had granted permission. Second, the proffer did not demonstrate any personal knowledge by the female manager about whether the witness had gone on the roof. The fact that she allegedly possessed no information that the witness had done so did not impeach his testimony that he had. Finally, counsel's representation that the female manager "might" testify that she had herself gone on the roof and had noticed no trace of dog excrement or urine stains was both uncertain and vague as to the time of the observations. (20 C.4th 10.)

XI. IMPEACHMENT

H. Impeachment on Collateral Matter.

1. In General.

a. Former Exclusionary Rule.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 341

[§ 341] Former Exclusionary Rule.

Proof that a witness was in error in some statement tends to show that the witness is untrustworthy. (See supra, §110.) And where the statement concerns a matter that is relevant and therefore could be proved or disproved independently of the impeachment, admissibility of contradictory evidence or of prior inconsistent statements is unquestioned. (See supra, §340.) But if it deals with a matter that is not relevant and could not be the subject of proof independently of the impeachment, i.e., "a collateral matter," there are sound policy objections to admitting the impeaching evidence: the possibility of unfair surprise, confusion of issues, and undue consumption of time. (See 1 McCormick 5th, §49; 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§1001, 1002.)

There are indications in prior California cases that the trial judge had some measure of discretion to allow or prevent cross-examination on collateral matters. (See People v. Atchley (1959) 53 C.2d 160, 172, 173, 346 P.2d 764, citing the text.) But extrinsic evidence was held inadmissible, pursuant to an inflexible rule of exclusion. (See People v. Burness (1942) 53 C.A.2d 214, 220, 127 P.2d 623; People v. Vanderburg (1960) 184 C.A.2d 33, 41, 7 C.R. 287; People v. Singer (1963) 217 C.A.2d 743, 760, 32 C.R. 701; 1 McCormick 5th, §§36, 49; 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1001.)

XI. IMPEACHMENT

H. Impeachment on Collateral Matter.

1. In General.

b. Evidence Code.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 342

[§ 342] Evidence Code.

(1) Rule of Discretion. The Evidence Code, following the approach of the original Uniform Rules, eliminated the inflexible rule, and substituted the broad discretion of the judge. This was accomplished as follows: (a) No mention is made of "collateral" as a ground of exclusion. (b) The general discretion of the judge under Ev.C. 352 to exclude any evidence in order to prevent confusion of issues or undue consumption of time (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §17) applies; hence, the judge may either allow or refuse to permit impeachment on a collateral matter in any particular situation. (See Ev.C. 780, Comment; see People v. McHenry (1962) 204 C.A.2d 764, 768, 22 C.R. 621, infra, §353, quoting McCormick; People v. Pierce (1969) 269 C.A.2d 193, 199, 75 C.R. 257, citing the text; People v. Fusaro (1971) 18 C.A.3d 877, 885, 96 C.R. 368, citing the text; People v. Benjamin (1974) 40 C.A.3d 1035, 1041, 115 C.R. 668, citing the text [right to cross-examine witness does not mandatorily make admissible every effort to impeach witness on collateral matter]; People v. Wall (1979) 95 C.A.3d 978, 986, 157 C.R. 587; People v. Benson (1982) 130 C.A.3d 1000, 1006, 180 C.R. 921 [testimony that defendant and P had committed uncharged robbery few days before charged robbery was admissible to impeach defendant's testimony that he had not seen P for few years; impeaching witness could give details of uncharged robbery because it tended to establish her credibility]; 9 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 285, 305; 10 Pacific L. J. 1, 18.)

In Smith v. Lewis (1975) 13 C.3d 349, 118 C.R. 621, 530 P.2d 589, a legal malpractice case, defendant testified that he always attempted to achieve the best possible result for his client, no matter how tenuous he viewed a useful theory, and that if he personally had doubts that an asset belonged to the community in a marriage dissolution action, he would still assert his client's interest to the asset. Held: "Such testimony may legitimately be impeached by showing that defendant had made contradictory statements in the past and had conducted himself in an inconsistent manner, though the impeachment may relate to a collateral matter." (13 C.3d 363, citing the text.)

(2) Effect on Prior Case Law. The rule affects California case law as follows: (a) The existing test of "collateral matter" remains. (See infra, §343.) (b) Decisions upholding or directing exclusion under the inflexible rule may be persuasive but not controlling on the proper exercise of discretion. (See infra, §346 et seq.) (c) Cases that found exceptions justifying impeachment even under the inflexible rule should be considered controlling authority for permitting it under the discretionary rule. (See infra, §352 et seq.)

(3) Newly Discovered Evidence on Collateral Matter. In Lubeck v. Lopes (1967) 254 C.A.2d 63, 62 C.R. 36, the court distinguished the problem of discretion to admit (citing the text) from the question whether newly discovered evidence to impeach on a collateral matter is a sufficient basis for granting a new trial. Plaintiff in one automobile was injured in a collision with defendant L's automobile. L testified to good vision, and mentioned an eye examination by Dr. M. On motion for new trial, plaintiff filed an affidavit showing inability to discover a doctor of that name. Since L's eyesight was never made an issue in the trial, the name was a collateral matter. The new evidence would have been of slight importance, and did not justify a new trial; hence, the order granting the new trial was reversed. (254 C.A.2d 68, 69.)

XI. IMPEACHMENT

H. Impeachment on Collateral Matter.

2. What Are Not Collateral Matters.

a. Independently Provable Matters.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 343

[§ 343] Independently Provable Matters.

(1) Matters Relevant to an Issue. Obviously, a matter relevant to an issue cannot be called "collateral," and may always be proved, to establish the issue, or to impeach an opposing witness, or for both purposes. (See supra, §340.)

In People v. Pollock (1939) 31 C.A.2d 747, 89 P.2d 128, a trial for murder with a claim of self-defense, defendant's wife was asked if defendant had told her that, if he went to prison, he would kill the victim's baby. She denied this. The prosecution then called a witness who testified that defendant's wife had informed him of such a threat by defendant. Held, this was admissible. The question was relevant to the issue of malice or ill will toward the deceased and his family, and had a bearing on consciousness of guilt. (31 C.A.2d 757.) (See also Western Union Oil Co. v. Newlove (1905) 145 C. 772, 775, 79 P. 542.)

In Huntingdon v. Crowley (1966) 64 C.2d 647, 51 C.R. 254, 414 P.2d 382, plaintiff mother, in a paternity suit against defendant, testified that she had no relations with any other men during the conception period. Defendant, on cross-examination and by witness W, developed the fact that plaintiff had spent nights with W during the period. Held, the evidence was admissible. Ordinarily, the mother's chastity is not in issue, and degrading questions indicating immorality should not be permitted (infra, §349). But here, the evidence was properly received: (a) as impeachment of plaintiff's assertion of devotion to defendant, and (b) as affirmative evidence indicating that W, not defendant, was the father. (64 C.2d 657.)

(2) Other Matters Independently Provable. The converse of the above stated proposition is not true; i.e., the early suggestion that matters not relevant to an issue are collateral (see People v. Devine (1872) 44 C. 452, 458) has been disapproved. The test is broader: If the matter could have been proved without any statement of the witness to contradict, it can also be proved to contradict his or her statement. (See People v. Chin Mook Sow (1877) 51 C. 597, 600; Moody v. Peirano (1906) 4 C.A. 411, 416, 88 P. 380 ["If the answer of the witness is a matter which would be allowed on your part to prove in evidence ... , then it is a matter on which you may contradict him"]; People v. Factor (1932) 125 C.A. 618, 621, 13 P.2d 984; Mendez v. Superior Court (1988) 206 C.A.3d 557, 577, 253 C.R. 731, quoting the text; 1 McCormick 5th, §§36, 49; 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§1003 et seq., 1020 et seq.; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §994.)

XI. IMPEACHMENT

H. Impeachment on Collateral Matter.

2. What Are Not Collateral Matters.

b. Matters Affecting Credibility.

1. Bias, Interest, or Other Improper Motive.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 344

[§ 344] Bias, Interest, or Other Improper Motive.

A witness may be asked on cross-examination whether he or she is biased, interested, has a hostile feeling, or had offered to suppress evidence. (See supra, §267 et seq.) If the witness' answer is a denial, other witnesses can be called in rebuttal to contradict him or her. These questions relate to the witness' credibility, and the facts of such improper motive or bias can be shown in any event. Hence, they are not collateral matters, and may be proved by extrinsic evidence. (See Lewis v. Steiger (1885) 68 C. 200, 201, 8 P. 884 [offer to procure evidence]; Barkly v. Copeland (1890) 86 C. 483, 486, 25 P. 1; People v. Wong Chuey (1897) 117 C. 624, 627, 49 P. 833; People v. Sweeney (1960) 55 C.2d 27, 41, 9 C.R. 793, 357 P.2d 1049; People v. Keyes (1930) 103 C.A. 624, 643, 284 P. 1096; Kelley v. Bailey (1961) 189 C.A.2d 728, 736, 11 C.R. 448; 1 McCormick 5th, §§36, 49; 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§1005, 1022; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §999.)

Thus, in Barkly v. Copeland, supra, a witness for defendant, on cross-examination, was asked whether she had not made an offer to N to suppress her testimony in this case for a certain consideration. Plaintiff's intention was to call N to give the facts if she denied them. Objection was sustained. Held, the question should have been allowed. (86 C. 486.)

In People v. Sweeney, supra, a conviction for giving a narcotic to a hospital patient, W, the patient, testified for defendant that he had never given her any. On cross-examination, she was asked if defendant had ever given her money, if she had lived with him and if she claimed that he was the father of her two children. She answered "No" to all questions. In rebuttal, Mrs. M, a deputy probation officer, testified that W had told her that she lived with defendant as a common-law wife, that the two children were his and that defendant paid her rent and gave her money for food. Birth certificates signed by her and naming defendant as the father were also introduced. Held: "The challenged evidence was properly admissible as bearing on the interest and bias of Willi Williams and was not rendered improper because it disclosed defendant's extra-marital relationship. The state of mind of a witness as to bias, prejudice, interest involved, friendship or hostility toward a party are all proper subjects for investigation in the trial of a case." (55 C.2d 41.) (See also People v. Dukes (1966) 241 C.A.2d 488, 493, 50 C.R. 609 [homosexual relationship].)

In Kelley v. Bailey, supra, a personal injury case, defendant, cross-examining plaintiff's doctor, asked him if his testimony had ever been influenced by the person who paid him. The doctor said no. Then defendant, over repeated objection, asked him whether in a certain case he had prepared a report showing serious injury and sent it to the plaintiff, thereafter discovering that he had been hired by the defendant, and changing the report to show no injury. The doctor denied this, and defendant then read from the transcript of that case to show the fact and the doctor's insistence that he had actually changed his mind about the injuries. Held, the evidence was admissible to show bias and prejudice of the witness. (189 C.A.2d 736.)

XI. IMPEACHMENT

H. Impeachment on Collateral Matter.

2. What Are Not Collateral Matters.

b. Matters Affecting Credibility.

2. Other Grounds.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 345

[§ 345] Other Grounds.

"Any fact may be called out in cross-examination which a jury might deem inconsistent with the direct testimony of a witness, and a defendant testifying in his own behalf is in this respect put upon the same plane with other witnesses." (People v. Linyard (1957) 151 C.A.2d 50, 56, 311 P.2d 57.)

In Linyard, defendant, charged with illegal possession of narcotics, explained his presence in a rooming house as for the purpose of seeing his wife and children who lived there. Held, the prosecutor properly asked whether he had been separated from his wife and had been jailed for nonsupport, as discrediting the explanation he gave for his presence there. (151 C.A.2d 56.)

In People v. Burton (1961) 55 C.2d 328, 11 C.R. 65, 359 P.2d 433, defendant was convicted of a sex offense with W, a 7-year-old girl. His wife testified that she did not tell Miss B that W had complained of a prior molestation by defendant 2 years ago. Miss B was called in rebuttal to testify that the wife told her that the child said he had put her hand on his body. This did not relate to an issue, but it was admissible to aid in determining the credence to be given to the wife, who contradicted several prosecution witnesses on material matters. (55 C.2d 353.) (See also Davis v. California Powder Works (1890) 84 C. 617, 633, 24 P. 387, supra, §264 [contradiction of testimony concerning date of another collateral document, to show poor memory or recollection on vital issue of date of document involved in suit].)

The Evidence Code makes admissibility of this kind of evidence abundantly clear by defining "relevant evidence" to include "evidence relevant to the credibility of a witness." (Ev.C. 210.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XI. IMPEACHMENT

H. Impeachment on Collateral Matter.

3. What Constitutes Collateral Impeachment.

a. Cross-Examination.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 346

[§ 346] Cross-Examination.

The cases discussed or cited in this and the following section include many decided before the adoption of the Evidence Code. These are no longer controlling on their basic premise of a positive rule of exclusion, but they illustrate the kind of evidence that the courts regard as collateral, and now subject to discretionary admission or exclusion (see supra, §342).

In People v. Dye (1888) 75 C. 108, 16 P. 537, defendant, charged with murder, pleaded self-defense. While testifying to his wife's improper relations with the victim, he made the irrelevant observation that his wife went to visit her mother in San Francisco. In cross-examination (as well as in rebuttal), the prosecution was allowed to show that she went to Los Angeles instead; that she saw C, with whom she had had illicit relations, in a saloon; and that her husband sent her there. Held, this was reversible error. "A party cannot cross-examine his adversary's witness upon irrelevant matters, for the purpose of eliciting something to be contradicted. And if such matters are drawn out, the court should stop the inquiry there. ... The introduction of irrelevant evidence by one side does not justify the introduction of further irrelevant evidence by the other." (75 C. 112.)

Similarly, in Khan v. Zemansky (1922) 59 C.A. 324, 210 P. 529, plaintiff sued for recovery of a ring, and he and his wife testified to their marriage in Montana. Defendant sought to impeach by showing that in another action, they had testified that they were married in California. Held, this was improper. (59 C.A. 326.)

In Crosby v. Martinez (1958) 159 C.A.2d 534, 324 P.2d 26, a personal injury action, plaintiff woman was cross-examined, over objection, on her lack of a California driver's license, on the fact that she had secured a Michigan license under a fictitious name, and on the fact that she had been convicted of some undefined felony under a fictitious name. Held, this was error; all the questions were foreign to the issues (lack of a driver's license is not evidence of negligence). (159 C.A.2d 542.)

In People v. Golden (1961) 55 C.2d 358, 11 C.R. 80, 359 P.2d 448, defendant was previously twice tried for statutory rape of P, the first trial ending in a mistrial and the second in a hung jury. In these trials, defendant's stepdaughter W, who was present at the crucial times, was not called as a witness by either side, defendant contending that he wanted to protect her from unpleasantness. In the third trial, the prosecuting attorney delayed calling W until the 4th day, and then, with defendant's wife on the stand as a witness for him, questioned her and elicited her assurance that her daughter would be home for service of a subpoena. The next day, the prosecutor claimed that his server could not locate W, and in argument, stressed the wife's failure to tell the truth about her daughter being available. Held, this questioning of the wife was not proper cross-examination; the issue of W's availability had nothing to do with the events testified to in chief. Obviously, the prosecution delayed calling W to allow defendant to produce her so they could cross-examine; then they undertook a "grand stand play" which the court should have halted. (55 C.2d 368.)

In People v. Ross (1969) 276 C.A.2d 729, 81 C.R. 296, at defendant's second trial for robbery, he was identified by a salesman whom he had allegedly forced to lie down at gunpoint. Defense counsel questioned the witness about his recollection of court personnel at the first trial. When the salesman said he was not positive but thought the same clerk was present, counsel made an offer of proof that the first clerk was a white woman and the second a black man. Held, the trial judge did not abuse his discretion in rejecting the offer. The "test instance," i.e., the in-court test of a witness' ability to observe and recollect a fact not material to the case but illustrative of his general ability to make observations and then recall and relate them, was improper. It did not fairly measure the salesman's power to observe and remember, because a layman would be less likely to remember a court clerk than a robber committing a crime in the store in his presence. (276 C.A.2d 734.)

In People v. Laverne (1971) 4 C.3d 735, 94 C.R. 405, 484 P.2d 77, a robbery prosecution, defense counsel cross-examined O, a confessed accomplice, as to where O had gotten the automobile used in the robbery. Over the prosecution's objection, O testified that he had bought the car, and denied that it was stolen. The defense then sought to impeach O's credibility by showing that the automobile actually had been stolen, but the trial judge sustained an objection under Ev.C. 352 (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §17). Held, no error. "The fact that the car was stolen had nothing to do with the facts at issue in the trial. Oliver admitted that he used the car in the robbery. How he came to be possessed of the vehicle had no bearing on Laverne's guilt or innocence and furnished Oliver no motive for falsely implicating Laverne." (4 C.3d 742.) Two additional factors supported the judge's exercise of discretion: (a) "A witness may have a strong reason to lie about the collateral fact which reason would furnish no motive to lie in his other testimony. Where such a situation exists, the possible inference that a witness false in part of his testimony is not to be trusted as to other parts is weakened." (4 C.3d 743.) Here, O apparently had not been charged or convicted of car theft and so had a motive to lie about his ownership, but not about his other testimony. (4 C.3d 743.) (b) Defendant deliberately elicited O's testimony for impeachment purposes. "It seems apparent that the defense knew the origin of the Cadillac in advance. If the witness answered truthfully that he had stolen the vehicle, the defendant would have had the benefit of the admission of an irrelevant fact which would affect the witness' credibility. But the witness denied it was stolen and defendant now wishes to bring otherwise inadmissible testimony in to impeach him. A party may not cross-examine a witness upon collateral matters for the purpose of eliciting something to be contradicted. ... This is especially so where the matter the party seeks to elicit would be inadmissible were it not for the fortuitous circumstance that the witness lied in response to the party's questions." (4 C.3d 744.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XI. IMPEACHMENT

H. Impeachment on Collateral Matter.

3. What Constitutes Collateral Impeachment. b. Rebuttal Witnesses.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 347

[§ 347] Rebuttal Witnesses.

The former inflexible exclusionary rule (supra, §341) was most positively declared when the cross-examiner sought to bring in rebuttal witnesses to contradict an answer elicited on cross-examination.

Thus, in Trabing v. California Navigation & Imp. Co. (1898) 121 C. 137, 53 P. 644, an action for damages for injuries resulting from plaintiff's ejection from a boat, his mother was asked, on cross-examination, whether she had previously told P that plaintiff admitted he had not paid the fare. On her denial, P was called to relate the conversations. Held, this evidence was properly excluded. "What she may have said to Mr. Parker was a purely collateral matter, and did not bind or affect the plaintiff; and no rule of evidence is better settled than that collateral matters cannot be elicited for the purposes of impeachment, and that a party putting such collateral question is bound by the answers of the witness." (121 C. 144.)

In Tellefsen v. Key System Transit Lines (1958) 158 C.A.2d 243, 322 P.2d 469, a personal injury suit, plaintiff's surgeon testified that he was on the staffs of two hospitals. On cross-examination, he was asked "have you attempted to get on the staff" of another hospital, and answered "No, not recently." Defendants thereafter sought to prove by the business manager of the other hospital that the surgeon had applied and had been refused. Held, the offer was properly rejected. (a) If in some way relevant to the doctor's qualifications as an expert, the offered evidence was incompetent hearsay. (b) It did not go to his credibility because he had not claimed such membership on direct. (c) Hence, the cross-examination was merely designed to elicit an answer that could be contradicted on an irrelevant collateral matter. (158 C.A.2d 246.)

In People v. Smith (1967) 249 C.A.2d 395, 57 C.R. 508, a homicide case, Mrs. H was a witness to the killing. In her testimony, she referred to a theft by one C from one H, 5 days before the killing. Defendant sought to impeach her by proof that she had observed the theft and shared in the proceeds. Held, the offer of proof was properly rejected, for whether C robbed H and whether Mrs. H observed this act were immaterial to the issue of whether defendant shot the victim. (249 C.A.2d 406.)

XI. IMPEACHMENT

H. Impeachment on Collateral Matter.

4. Collateral Impeachment Degrading Character.

a. Theory of Exclusion.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 348

[§ 348] Theory of Exclusion.

(1) Former Law. Former C.C.P. 2065 recited a privilege of a witness not to answer a question that would have a direct tendency to degrade his or her character, unless the question involved a fact in issue. The privilege was designed to protect the witness against disclosure of discreditable facts that were irrelevant, and thus would simply injure the witness without accomplishing any legitimate purpose of proof. If, however, the evidence was actually relevant, its degrading effect was not a proper basis of objection. (See In re Black (1937) 21 C.A.2d 359, 360, 69 P.2d 200; San Chez v. Superior Court (1957) 153 C.A.2d 162, 165, 314 P.2d 135 [separate maintenance; defendant required to answer questions concerning adulterous relations with other women]; 88 A.L.R.3d 304 [privilege of witness to refuse to give answers tending to disgrace or degrade witness or witness' family].)

(2) Present Law. This privilege has disappeared in most jurisdictions, its purposes being substantially served by the rule against impeachment on collateral matters. (See 1 McCormick 5th, §40; 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§984, 986; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §§2215, 2255.)

The Evidence Code omits it as sufficiently covered by other rules: Ev.C. 350, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §6 [exclusion of irrelevant evidence]; Ev.C. 787, supra, §285 [specific acts not admissible to prove character]; Ev.C. 765, supra, §77 [court must protect witness against "undue harassment or embarrassment"]. (See also A.B.A. Model Rules of Professional Conduct, Rules 3.4 [in trial, lawyer must not allude to any matter that lawyer does not reasonably believe is relevant], 4.4 [in representing client, lawyer must not use means that have no purpose other than to embarrass third person]; 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §§445, 454.)

Decisions relying on both the privilege and the collateral matter rule in cross-examination cases, and on the collateral matter rule in rebuttal witness cases, should be unaffected by the elimination of the so-called privilege. It would appear, also, that in this class of cases, the judge's discretion (supra, §342) should almost invariably be exercised to exclude the degrading collateral evidence, for whatever value it might have is substantially outweighed by its prejudicial effect. Putting it another way, the decisions holding that admission of such evidence was a violation of the privilege or of the former collateral matter exclusionary rule may now be cited to the point that its admission constitutes an abuse of discretion.

In Steen v. Santa Clara Valley Mill & Lumber Co. (1901) 134 C. 355, 66 P. 321, an action for damages for destruction of cord-wood, plaintiff's foreman testified to the origin of the fire and extent of damages. On cross-examination, he was asked whether he had told D that he wanted to dispose of some of plaintiff's wood under D's name, and whether he had told C that he was disposing of wood and falsifying reports. He denied this, and D and C were called to testify to that effect. Held, admission of the statements was improper. (134 C. 356.)

In Stickel v. San Diego Elec. Ry. Co. (1948) 32 C.2d 157, 195 P.2d 416, plaintiff was suing for wrongful death of his wife. Defendant sought to question him as to his identity and the date and fact of his marriage, although it was admitted that he was the husband of deceased. Held, objections were properly sustained, for it appeared that the purpose was to show that he had used aliases, and had been arrested or convicted of misdemeanors under various names. (32 C.2d 164.)

In Dastagir v. Dastagir (1952) 109 C.A.2d 809, 241 P.2d 656, an action by a mother to establish the paternity of her child, it was held error to admit evidence of immorality of the mother at periods prior to the time of probable conception. This evidence was too remote to be relevant on the issue of paternity, and it merely tended to degrade her. (109 C.A.2d 814.)

In Browning v. King (1958) 159 C.A.2d 326, 324 P.2d 14, a personal injury action by husband and wife arising out of an automobile collision, both plaintiffs testified. Impeaching testimony was directed at plaintiff husband, who had alleged a fractured right arm. (a) Defendant produced testimony of a deputy sheriff to the husband's assaults shortly before the accident, for the ostensible purpose of showing injury to the right arm. (b) The husband was questioned about a subsequent accident, then about prior accidents and fights, and his denial of an industrial accident was contradicted by introducing an Industrial Accident Commission file. Held, admission of this evidence, tending to show the husband as accident-prone and a brawling character, was prejudicial error; the jury "was permitted to listen to a long series of evidential items calculated, intentionally or unintentionally, to provide a somewhat unsavory character picture of the plaintiff." (159 C.A.2d 329.)

XI. IMPEACHMENT

H. Impeachment on Collateral Matter.

4. Collateral Impeachment Degrading Character.

c. Illustrations: Criminal Cases.

1. Ordinary Witness.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 350

[§ 350] Ordinary Witness.

In People v. Vanderburg (1960) 184 C.A.2d 33, 7 C.R. 287, defendant, charged with unlawful furnishing of marijuana, testified, and called friends and associates to testify, in flat contradiction of the state's witnesses. With the issue of credibility of the witnesses thus crucial, the prosecuting attorney deliberately and repeatedly sought, on cross-examination of defendant's witnesses, to show criminal and immoral conduct; and, as to some of the matters denied, produced affirmative evidence. Held, this was reversible error. The prosecutor's theory that he was entitled to show the hostility of defendant's witnesses toward the state's principal witness, an undercover agent, was untenable (see supra, §277). The court added:

"A party must be allowed to subpoena and to produce on the witness stand any person who has knowledge of facts material to the issues being tried. He certainly cannot be expected to be ready to combat evidence that a witness sometime in his life has been a bad man, nor can a witness be reasonably subjected to such an abrupt and surprising attack. That is why matters affecting his morality and his past life are limited by the statute to evidence 'that his general reputation for truth, honesty, or integrity is bad' and, conversely, 'that evidence may not be given of particular wrongful acts.' " (184 C.A.2d 42.)

In People v. Thomas (1962) 204 C.A.2d 292, 22 C.R. 78, defendant, charged with robbery, called Dr. D as his witness to establish an injury to his right hand shortly before the crime, to support the inference that he could not have delivered the blows of which the prosecution witness testified. The prosecutor then drew out from the doctor, by questioning him on his report, that 8 years before, defendant had received a medical discharge from military service for a single instance of asthma. The obvious purpose of the questioning was to elicit the doctor's statement that this was not usual, and that defendant was malingering then, and therefore could be malingering now. Held, this evidence was no more admissible than evidence of prior criminal acts merely to show criminal disposition. (204 C.A.2d 299.)

In People v. Souza (1970) 11 C.A.3d 873, 90 C.R. 54, the prosecution sought to establish defendant's knowledge of the narcotic nature of marijuana by extensively cross-examining several of his close friends about their dealings in narcotics. Held, this was improper. The "very vivid" picture which the prosecution painted to show defendant's involvement "far exceeded the quantum of proof required to show knowledge." The evidence "suffered the double vice of establishing (a) guilt by association, and (b) an attempt to prove a disposition on appellant's part to use and traffic in narcotics." (11 C.A.3d 878.) The court said:

"We do not hold that the prosecution is forbidden to examine a defendant or his witnesses for the purpose of establishing defendant's knowledge of the narcotic nature of marijuana. We hold only that such examination must be limited to establishing that fact alone, and must not be extended to extraneous matters designed, as here, to improperly and unfairly influence the jury to draw inferences of guilt of the crimes charged from proof of knowledge of the narcotic nature of marijuana." (11 C.A.3d 878.) (See also People v. Phillips (1985) 41 C.3d 29, 49, 222 C.R. 127, 711 P.2d 423 [evidence of acts of prostitution by witness, who lived with defendant and who had been charged but not tried as accomplice, properly excluded; questionable relevance outweighed by prejudice (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §17 et seq.)]; People v. Ortiz (1979) 95 C.A.3d 926, 930, 935, 157 C.R. 448 [homicide trial, victim's wife questioned concerning religious cult to which she and defendant belonged, which practiced animal sacrifices in which defendant participated]; People v. Hill (1995) 34 C.A.4th 727, 738, 41 C.R.2d 39 [defendant sought to impeach prosecution witness pursuant to People v. Wheeler (1992) 4 C.4th 284, 14 C.R.2d 418, 841 P.2d 938, supra, §286, with evidence of acts of moral turpitude; trial judge properly excluded, as collateral matters, details of sex offenses committed while witness was present but in which she did not participate].)

Before the enactment of statutory restrictions on cross-examination of the prosecutrix in a rape case (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §61 et seq.), it was held that she could be questioned as to prior acts of intercourse, but not as to other kinds of misconduct, such as intoxication. (People v. Mangum (1939) 31 C.A.2d 374, 379, 382, 88 P.2d 207; People v. Burnette (1940) 39 C.A.2d 215, 227, 102 P.2d 799.)

H. Impeachment on Collateral Matter.

4. Collateral Impeachment Degrading Character.

c. Illustrations: Criminal Cases.

2. Defendant.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 351

[§ 351] Defendant.

The protection against collateral impeachment degrading character is especially important where a criminal defendant becomes a witness. Irrelevant inquiries about misconduct, criminal or otherwise, are a highly prejudicial means of injecting the defendant's bad character into the case. The cases on this point are numerous.

In People v. Smith (1922) 189 C. 31, 207 P. 518, defendant, charged with inducing a minor to frequent a gambling house, was asked on cross-examination if he had not, some time before, been employed to deal blackjack at a certain club. A police officer was later called to contradict his denial. Held, this was error; proof of his occupation was irrelevant, and was an improper method of introducing evidence of a prior wrongful act unconnected with the crime charged. (189 C. 34.)

In People v. Burness (1942) 53 C.A.2d 214, 127 P.2d 623, defendant, an automobile wrecker, was charged with receiving stolen property. The prosecutor asked him if he had kept certain wheels at his place of business which he said he was going to hold until the "heat" was over, and whether he went there after release from arrest to get them. On his denial, a witness was called to testify to that effect. Held, this was reversible error; there was no proof that the wheels were stolen or that they had any connection with the crime, and the effect of the contradiction was merely to degrade and prejudice the defendant in the eyes of the jury. (53 C.A.2d 220.)

In People v. McCarthy (1948) 88 C.A.2d 883, 200 P.2d 69, a prosecution for bookmaking, cross-examination of defendant and testimony by impeaching witnesses dealt with possession of betting materials a year prior to the time of the present arrest. Held, this was improper. (88 C.A.2d 888.)

In People v. Geibel (1949) 93 C.A.2d 147, 208 P.2d 743, a prosecution of defendant attorney for forgery of a client's will and contract of employment, defendant testified to a period of performance of legal services for the client, with a 1-year interim in which he was "out of the state." On cross-examination, he was asked: "Isn't it a fact that during that period of time you were suspended from practicing law?" Held, the question was highly improper, and it was error to overrule defendant's objection. (93 C.A.2d 172.)

In People v. Watson (1956) 46 C.2d 818, 299 P.2d 243, defendant, on trial for second degree murder, was cross-examined as to his height. The prosecution offered to prove that he had tried to stretch it to get above Army maximum height, and argued that he was wearing an Army uniform to gain sympathy. Held, the casting of aspersions on his reasons for wearing a uniform that he was entitled to wear had no bearing on his motive or credibility, its only purpose was to degrade, and allowance of the questions was error. (46 C.2d 833.)

In People v. Giani (1956) 145 C.A.2d 539, 302 P.2d 813, defendant, charged with violation of P.C. 288a on the person of a boy, took the stand and denied the charge. On cross-examination, the prosecutor was allowed, over objection, to ask, "On May 23d [date of crime charged] were you a homosexual?" Held, prejudicial error, and order granting a new trial affirmed. In his direct examination, defendant did not testify as to his sexual makeup, and there was no legal authority or medical data indicating that every homosexual is predisposed to commit the act charged. (145 C.A.2d 541.)

In People v. Sims (1958) 165 C.A.2d 108, 331 P.2d 799, a murder trial, defendant took the stand to testify on the issue of self-defense. On cross-examination, the prosecutor asked, over objection, about instances of threatening to kill, carrying knives, cutting people and assaults. On redirect, his counsel tried to have him explain the answers and deny the implications, whereupon the prosecutor asked about other arrests, threats and fights, producing "arrest reports" to "refresh" defendant's memory, all over objection and motion for mistrial. Thereafter, the prosecutor proceeded to impeach defendant's testimony by producing witnesses who had arrested him, and witnesses who heard him threaten, and also a witness to testify to the "authenticity" of the arrest reports. Held, reversible error. (165 C.A.2d 114.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

H. Impeachment on Collateral Matter.

5. Where Witness "Opens The Gates."

a. General Principles.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 352

[§ 352] General Principles.

A practical problem on which the authorities are difficult to reconcile arises as follows: A witness, on direct or even cross-examination, makes a statement on an irrelevant matter. The adverse party may have it excluded on objection or motion to strike, but sometimes does not do so. If the evidence were relevant and merely incompetent (e.g., hearsay or inadmissible opinion), the failure to object would be a waiver of its inadmissibility (see infra, §393). On the other hand, failure to object cannot give irrelevant evidence any probative effect (see infra, §396). May the adverse party nevertheless take advantage of the error in the testimony and the party's own failure to object, and impeach the witness, by cross-examination or rebuttal, on the collateral matter?

In support of such a right, it has been said that the offering party on direct examination opened the "door" or the "gates," and that the adverse party is "fighting fire with fire," but the metaphors explain nothing. The real question seems to be whether the matter improperly admitted on any examination was prejudicial and not curable by objection or motion to strike. If so, the adverse party should be permitted to contradict it, under the doctrine of "curative admissibility" (infra, §§353, 354). If it is not prejudicial, there seems no reason to permit the adverse party to capitalize on the blunder or accident by offering impeaching evidence on a collateral matter. (See generally People v. McDaniel (1943) 59 C.A.2d 672, 677, 140 P.2d 88; 1 McCormick 5th, §57; 1 Wigmore (Tillers Rev.) §15, p. 740.)

In the McDaniel case, supra, the court approved the view that such irrelevant matter should be excluded by the judge on his or her own motion. The opinion states: "Legitimate cross-examination does not extend to matters improperly admitted on direct examination. Failure to object to improper questions on direct examination may not be taken advantage of on cross-examination to elicit immaterial or irrelevant testimony. The so-called 'open the gates' argument is a popular fallacy." (59 C.A.2d 677.)

In People v. Matlock (1970) 11 C.A.3d 453, 89 C.R. 862, defendant was asked, on cross-examination, whether he enjoyed beating the victim. He answered, "I don't enjoy beating no one at no time." By a faulty recollection, the trial judge later said defendant had volunteered information that he had never beaten anyone at any time. The prosecutor was thus permitted to cross-examine defendant extensively about his six misdemeanor battery convictions. Held, the "flood of inflammatory evidence" was prejudicial. The court said: "It would be a curious rule indeed that would place a person charged with crime in a position where he must admit that he 'enjoys beating' another or suffer the penalty of a parade of his otherwise inadmissible past misdeeds before the jury." (11 C.A.3d 461.)

A number of other cases support this view. (See Dastagir v. Dastagir (1952) 109 C.A.2d 809, 815, 241 P.2d 656, supra, §349; People v. Heckford (1957) 149 C.A.2d 250, 255, 308 P.2d 497; People v. Chandler (1957) 152 C.A.2d Supp. 916, 919, 313 P.2d 223; People v. Arends (1957) 155 C.A.2d 496, 508, 318 P.2d 532, infra, §386; People v. Parrella (1958) 158 C.A.2d 140, 147, 322 P.2d 83; Fortner v. Bruhn (1963) 217 C.A.2d 184, 189, 31 C.R. 503; People v. Gambos (1970) 5 C.A.3d 187, 192, 84 C.R. 908, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §12 ["open the gates" argument is fallacious when objectionable evidence is allowed in so nonobjecting party can bring in its own objectionable evidence].)

XI. IMPEACHMENT

- H. Impeachment on Collateral Matter.
- 5. Where Witness "Opens The Gates."
- b. Curative Admissibility: Criminal Cases.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 353

[§ 353] Curative Admissibility: Criminal Cases.

Where failure to rebut would be highly damaging to the adverse party's case, the doctrine of curative admissibility is recognized, sometimes by the indirect method of finding that the issue has been raised, and the collateral matter has therefore become relevant.

Thus, in People v. Westek (1948) 31 C.2d 469, 190 P.2d 9, defendant, on trial for sodomy and lewd conduct with boys, volunteered the statement that he had never committed a sexual crime with any boy. The prosecution, in rebuttal, was allowed to prove such crimes with boys not named in the charge. "[A]ppellant's voluntary declaration of his good character and unimpeachable moral status in relation to his prior conduct with boys was material to the issue involved." (31 C.2d 479.)

People v. Clark (1965) 63 C.2d 503, 47 C.R. 382, 407 P.2d 294, is similar. The 11-year-old prosecutrix in a rape case testified that she had never had any other sexual experience or seen the sex organs of a boy or man. Defendant offered testimony of four boys that they had engaged in intimate sex play with her. Held, citing the text, exclusion of this testimony was reversible error; it supported other impeaching testimony by tending to show fabrication or fantasy. (63 C.2d 507.)

In People v. McHenry (1962) 204 C.A.2d 764, 22 C.R. 621, an incest case, defendant's counsel asked the victim whether a schoolmate had accused teacher S of the same offense, and whether the victim had conceived the idea from the incident. Defendant himself testified that the victim knew of the incident. On cross-examination, defendant was asked whether a school board meeting to consider the charge involved himself, and in rebuttal, the school superintendent testified that the pupil had made a charge of molesting, but not against S. Held, this was proper impeachment. Defendant's counsel brought the incident up in an attempt to prove that the charges against defendant had been inspired by it; it was permissible to contradict the statement concerning S, even though it incidentally implicated defendant in another sex crime. (204 C.A.2d 767.)

In other words: "The accused may not overemphasize his claims of utter innocence by saying that he never at any time committed an offense of the kind on trial, or never met his accuser or an adversary witness in his lifetime and claim that he has thereby disproved the accusation and overwhelmed his contradictory witnesses. Having chosen to extend the scope of the inquiry by a resort to superlatives, the accused must expect to be met with contrary proof." (People v. Lindsey (1949) 90 C.A.2d 558, 566, 203 P.2d 572; see People v. Downs (1952) 114 C.A.2d 758, 762, 251 P.2d 369; People v. Waggoner (1961) 195 C.A.2d 385, 387, 15 C.R. 687, citing the text; People v. Crume (1976) 61 C.A.3d 803, 812, 132 C.R. 577 [defendant unequivocally denied "at any time" committing sexual crime with complaining witnesses; prosecution, in rebuttal, called the witnesses to testify to many uncharged incidents of sexual misconduct]; People v. Reyes (1976) 62 C.A.3d 53, 61, 132 C.R. 848.)

The rebuttal, however, must be responsive to the defendant's claim, and this limitation was strictly applied in People v. Davis (1965) 233 C.A.2d 156, 43 C.R. 357. Defendant, a minor, was convicted of first degree robbery on a disputed identification. He and his mother testified that he was at home on the night of the crime, and he further testified that he earned $ 71 per week. On cross-examination, he was asked whether he had been under the influence of narcotics at the time of his arrest, and on his denial, the arresting officer testified that he was. The prosecution's theory was that his direct testimony on earnings negated a motive for robbery, and that the cross-examination and rebuttal showed abnormal needs and furnished such a motive. The court held, however, that the inference of an expensive narcotic habit (e.g., heroin) rather than an inexpensive one (marijuana) was tenuous, and that it was reversible error to introduce this highly prejudicial evidence on so thin a ground: "The law entitled appellant to stand before the jury presumptively innocent and of good character. In characterizing him as a narcotics user, a charge he was unprepared to meet except by his own denial, the prosecution branded him as a habitual lawbreaker, a loathsome, unworthy person, predisposed to rob or steal to support his habit." (233 C.A.2d 162.)

The court distinguished People v. Westek, supra, on the ground that defendant "did not raise any issue as to his use or nonuse of narcotics." (233 C.A.2d 161.)

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 354

[§ 354] Curative Admissibility: Civil Cases.

Although most of the cases involving curative admissibility are criminal (see supra, §353), the same principle applies in civil cases. Thus, in Travis v. Southern Pac. Co. (1962) 210 C.A.2d 410, 26 C.R. 700, plaintiff, a passenger in an automobile driven by his son, was injured in a collision with defendant's train. On direct examination as to his speed at the time, the son asserted that he was "always conscious of speed laws." On cross-examination, he reiterated this claim of habit. Held, the cross-examiner could bring out the facts of repeated arrests for speeding, even though ordinarily, evidence of prior violations of speed laws is not admissible to prove negligence on the particular occasion. (210 C.A.2d 422.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XI. IMPEACHMENT

I. Impeachment of Party's Own Witness.

1. Former Rule Limiting Impeachment.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 355

[§ 355] Former Rule Limiting Impeachment.

Former California law, based on an application and implementation of former C.C.P. 2049, greatly limited a party's power to impeach its own witness, as follows:

(1) There could be no impeachment for bad character, bias or interest. This limitation was based on two theories: that the party calling the witness "vouches" for the witness' credibility, and that the party would be in a position to coerce the witness by the threat of impeachment. (See generally People v. Newson (1951) 37 C.2d 34, 41, 230 P.2d 618; People v. Zammora (1944) 66 C.A.2d 166, 215, 152 P.2d 180; 1 McCormick 5th, §38; 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §896 et seq.; 40 Cal. L. Rev. 609; 42 Cal. L. Rev. 178.)

(2) The witness could be impeached by proof of prior inconsistent statements, but only after laying a double foundation, consisting of a showing of surprise and damage. (See People v. Le Beau (1952) 39 C.2d 146, 148, 245 P.2d 302; People v. Kidd (1961) 56 C.2d 759, 766, 16 C.R. 793, 366 P.2d 49, citing the text; People v. Flores (1940) 37 C.A.2d 282, 286, 99 P.2d 326; Sandoval v. Southern Calif. Enterprises (1950) 98 C.A.2d 240, 245, 219 P.2d 928; People v. Spinosa (1953) 115 C.A.2d 659, 668, 252 P.2d 409; People v. Wilson (1958) 156 C.A.2d 728, 742, 320 P.2d 117; People v. Pickens (1961) 190 C.A.2d 138, 147, 11 C.R. 795; 40 Cal. L. Rev. 609; 42 Cal. L. Rev. 178; 48 A.L.R.2d 1239.)

The limiting rules did not apply, however, to an adverse witness (see supra, §202), or to a required witness, i.e., one who must be called because his or her testimony is essential. (See People v. McFarlane (1901) 134 C. 618, 620, 66 P. 865; Chichester v. Mason (1941) 43 C.A.2d 577, 583, 111 P.2d 362; 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §917.) And they were of course inapplicable where the object of the question was not to impeach but to refresh the witness' recollection by calling attention to a prior statement and giving the witness an opportunity to correct and explain his or her testimony, instead of allowing it to stand and be attacked on cross-examination. (See Cummins v. Yellow & Checker Cab Co. (1932) 127 C.A. 170, 179, 15 P.2d 536; People v. Curtis (1939) 36 C.A.2d 306, 322, 98 P.2d 228; People v. Porterfield (1960) 186 C.A.2d 149, 158, 8 C.R. 897, quoting the text.)

Another former practice was to ask a prosecution witness whether the defendant had made certain statements and, on the witness' denial, introducing other evidence of the statements. The statements were inadmissible hearsay, which the prosecution tried to get into the record in this devious manner. (See People v. Flores, supra, 37 C.A.2d 286; People v. Williams (1951) 104 C.A.2d 323, 327, 231 P.2d 554; People v. Wilson, supra, 156 C.A.2d 743.) Because the defendant's prior statements are now admissible as substantive evidence (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §156), the practice would no longer be objectionable.

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XI. IMPEACHMENT

I. Impeachment of Party's Own Witness.

2. Rule of Unlimited Impeachment.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 356

[§ 356] Rule of Unlimited Impeachment.

The limiting rule (supra, §355) was widely condemned by authoritative writers, who argued that (1) a party does not necessarily have free choice of witnesses but must take those who know the facts, and therefore cannot "vouch" for them; (2) the supposed improper coercive power over the witness is largely illusory, for the common ground of impeachment is prior inconsistent statements, and attacks on character are rare. (See 1 McCormick 5th, §38; 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§898, 899; Ev.C. 785, Comment ["Expanded opportunity for testing credibility is in keeping with the interest of providing a forum for full and free disclosure"]; People v. Porterfield (1960) 186 C.A.2d 149, 157, 8 C.R. 897, quoting the text.)

These criticisms proved persuasive; hence, the present rule: The credibility of a witness may be attacked or supported by any party, including the party calling the witness. (Ev.C. 785; see People v. Stanley (1967) 67 C.2d 812, 816, footnote 1, 63 C.R. 825, 433 P.2d 913 [defense can impeach own witness]; People v. Chacon (1968) 69 C.2d 765, 779, 73 C.R. 10, 447 P.2d 106 [prosecution can impeach own witness]; People v. Gordon (1973) 10 C.3d 460, 474, footnote 8, 110 C.R. 906, 516 P.2d 298, citing the text [same]; People v. Stokley (1968) 266 C.A.2d 930, 936, 72 C.R. 513, citing the text [same]; People v. Ross (1979) 92 C.A.3d 391, 400, 154 C.R. 783, citing the text; 56 Cal. L. Rev. 1736 [Stanley]; 9 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 285, 307.)

In People v. Stokley, supra, defendant was tried for forgery by cashing a forged money order with a stolen I.D. card. On cross-examination, the prosecutor asked him if he had stated to H, a bail bondsman, that he had cashed it but expected to beat the charge because the teller had described someone not resembling him. Defendant denied any such conversation. The prosecutor in rebuttal called H, who confirmed a conversation about the charge; but H denied that defendant had made the above statement and also denied that he, H, had told the prosecutor that defendant had. The prosecutor then took the stand and testified that H had told him this. Held, this was proper. (a) The prosecutor was a competent witness. (See 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §56.) (b) When H testified contrary to expectations, he could be impeached. (266 C.A.2d 936.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XI. IMPEACHMENT

J. Impeachment of Hearsay Declarant.

1. Nature of Problem.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 357

[§ 357] Nature of Problem.

A statement admitted under an exception to the hearsay rule is affirmative evidence; and its probative value, like that of testimony on the stand, depends on the credibility of the declarant. Evidence attacking (or supporting) the credibility of the declarant is therefore relevant and admissible. (Ev.C. 210; see Ev.C. 1202, Comment [pointing out that judge has usual power under Ev.C. 352 to restrict inquiry that is too remote].)

Problems remain, however, in connection with the most typical form of impeachment--prior inconsistent statements: (1) If, as is often the case, the declarant is unavailable, shall impeachment be permitted despite the declarant's lack of opportunity to deny or explain? (2) Prior inconsistent statements of a witness are now admissible as substantive evidence (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §156); should the same be true of prior inconsistent statements of a hearsay declarant?

California case law on this subject was so meager as to offer little guidance, and the Evidence Code bases its broad rule of impeachment on former Unif. Rule 65. (Ev.C. 1202; see 22 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 452 [problem of laying proper foundation]; 9 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 285, 308; infra, §358.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XI. IMPEACHMENT

J. Impeachment of Hearsay Declarant.

2. Impeachment Without Opportunity To Answer.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 358

[§ 358] Impeachment Without Opportunity To Answer.

(1) Impeachment on Any Ground. "Evidence of a statement or other conduct by a declarant that is inconsistent with a statement by such declarant received in evidence as hearsay evidence" is admissible "for the purpose of attacking the credibility of the declarant." And "[a]ny other evidence offered to attack or support the credibility of the declarant is admissible if it would have been admissible had the declarant been a witness at the hearing." (Ev.C. 1202.) (See Am-Cal Inv. Co. v. Sharlyn Estates (1967) 255 C.A.2d 526, 542, 63 C.R. 518 [contradictory evidence]; People v. Ross (1979) 92 C.A.3d 391, 406, 154 C.R. 783.)

(2) Opportunity To Answer Not Required. The right of impeachment by prior inconsistent statements exists even though the declarant "is not given and has not had an opportunity to explain or to deny such inconsistent statement or other conduct." (Ev.C. 1202.) The theory is that, if the hearsay declarant is available, the burden of calling the declarant to explain is not on the impeaching party but on the party who used the hearsay statement. (Ev.C. 1202, Comment.)

(3) Deponent Deemed Hearsay Declarant. Testimony at a deposition and testimony at a former trial are admitted under the same hearsay exception for the same reasons (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §262). Accordingly, the same rule of impeachment is provided by Ev.C. 1202: "For the purposes of this section, the deponent of a deposition taken in the action in which it is offered shall be deemed to be a hearsay declarant."

(4) Impeachment of Hearsay Declarant by Party Calling Declarant. In People v. Beyea (1974) 38 C.A.3d 176, 113 C.R. 254, defendants were Hell's Angels who were charged with beating a victim to death. The case against them depended in large part on the preliminary examination testimony of witnesses unavailable at the time of trial, but the same witnesses had also made statements that helped the defense. The prosecution, therefore, relied on the prior testimony to help convict defendants, while using other inconsistent hearsay statements by the absent witnesses to impeach those parts of their prior testimony that aided defendants. Defendants argued that they were denied their constitutional rights to confrontation. Held, the impeaching hearsay was improperly admitted.

(a) Read literally, Ev.C. 1202 appears to permit the impeachment of a witness, through use of a prior inconsistent statement, by the party who called the witness. But the Law Revision Commission's Comment indicates that if the hearsay declarant is unavailable, it is the party against whom the evidence is admitted who has the right to impeach even though the declarant has not had the opportunity to explain or deny the impeaching statement. Here, defendants--and not the prosecution--were the parties against whom the impeaching statements were admitted. (38 C.A.3d 193, discussing the text.)

(b) The proper time for the prosecution to have introduced the impeaching statements was at the preliminary hearing where the witnesses testified. The witnesses would then have had the opportunity to explain any apparent inconsistencies. Here, the prosecution had actual or constructive knowledge of the impeaching statements before the preliminary examination and should not have been permitted to further its own case as it did. But the error was harmless. (38 C.A.3d 194.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Impeachment on Any Ground. In People v. Jacobs (2000) 78 C.A.4th 1444, 93 C.R.2d 783, defendant was convicted of receiving stolen property. At the time of his arrest, he had admitted that he owned the vehicle containing the property but stated that he purchased the property from "Will." At trial a codefendant sought to introduce defendant's admission of vehicle ownership in order to exculpate himself. Defendant argued that if the court permitted introduction of the admission of vehicle ownership, it should admit the entire statement. Ultimately, the trial judge ruled the entire statement admissible and also allowed the prosecution to impeach the statement by means of defendant's prior felony convictions. Held, affirmed.

(a) Impeachment by prior convictions. Ev.C. 788 provides for impeachment by means of prior felony convictions, and, under Ev.C. 1202, a hearsay declarant's statement may be attacked by a "statement or other conduct" that is inconsistent with the evidence presented by the declarant. Ev.C. 1202 further provides that "[a]ny other evidence offered to attack or support the credibility of the declarant is admissible if it would have been admissible had the declarant been a witness at the hearing." Taken together, Ev.C. 788 and 1202 authorize the admission of prior felony convictions to attack the credibility of a hearsay declarant. Nothing in Ev.C. 1202 "indicates or even remotely implies that its application is to be limited to hearsay statements which take the form of prior testimony, and we decline to read such a limitation into that section." (78 C.A.4th 1450.)

(b) Impeachment by party against whom statement is admitted. People v. Beyea (1974) 38 C.A.3d 176, 113 C.R. 254, text, p. 446, held that under Ev.C. 1202, it is the party against whom the evidence is admitted who has the right to impeach. But even assuming that this limitation applies where the impeaching evidence is a prior felony conviction, admission of defendant's prior convictions was not error. Although, technically, defendant's story about "Will" came in under Ev.C. 356 (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §36) to "explain or make clear" the statement about vehicle ownership, it was defendant who argued for its admission. If believed, the story would have exonerated defendant. Thus, it was proper for the prosecution to try to impeach it. (78 C.A.4th 1452.)

See People v. Corella (2004) 122 C.A.4th 461, 470, 18 C.R.3d 770 [in prosecution for corporal injury to spouse, trial judge erred in refusing to allow defendant to impeach out-of-court statements by his wife inculcating him with subsequent contradictory statements she made at preliminary hearing; even though she ultimately exercised her privilege against self-incrimination at hearing and her testimony was stricken, statements, once uttered, were available for impeachment].

XI. IMPEACHMENT

J. Impeachment of Hearsay Declarant.

3. Prior Inconsistent Statement Not Evidence.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 359

[§ 359] Prior Inconsistent Statement Not Evidence.

Under a hearsay exception, the prior inconsistent statement of a witness is affirmative evidence to prove the truth of the matter stated. (Ev.C. 1235, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §156.) Ev.C. 1202 makes no such provision for admission of prior inconsistent statements of a hearsay declarant; hence, their only effect is to weaken credibility of the declarant. The Comment to Ev.C. 1202 says: "If the declarant is not a witness and is not subject to cross-examination upon the subject matter of his statements, there is no sufficient guarantee of the trustworthiness of the statements he has made out of court to warrant their reception as substantive evidence unless they fall within some recognized exception to the hearsay rule." (See O'Gan v. King City Joint Union High School Dist. (1970) 3 C.A.3d 641, 645, 83 C.R. 795.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XI. IMPEACHMENT

K. Rehabilitation of Impeached Witness.

1. In General.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 360

[§ 360] In General.

(1) Right To Rehabilitate. Where the attempt has been made to discredit a witness by any of the foregoing methods of impeachment (see supra, §258 et seq.), the party who called the witness is allowed, subject to certain limitations, to "rehabilitate" the witness, i.e., to restore his or her credibility, by rebutting the discrediting evidence, or by introducing evidence favorable to credibility. Except in criminal cases, such evidence is not permitted unless there has been an attempt at impeachment; until the witness' credibility is attacked there is nothing to rehabilitate, and consequently evidence favorable to credibility is excluded. (See generally Ev.C. 790, 791; infra, §361 et seq.; 1 McCormick 5th, §47; 4 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1124; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §928.)

(2) Grounds and Limitations. The grounds of rehabilitation, i.e., the matters that may be shown, are, in theory, the same as those that may be shown to impeach: The court or jury may consider, in determining a witness' credibility, any matter that has any tendency in reason to prove or disprove the truthfulness of the witness' testimony at the hearing. (Ev.C. 780, supra, §259; see People v. Di Blasi (1964) 228 C.A.2d 338, 343, 39 C.R. 416 [showing that witness took stand with knowledge of danger of incriminating himself, i.e., had nothing to gain and something to lose].) And the proviso, "Except as otherwise provided by statute" (Ev.C. 780) applies to rehabilitation as well as impeachment. (See Ev.C. 789, supra, §260 [religious belief cannot be shown]; 27 A.L.R.4th 1167 [same]; Ev.C. 786, supra, §281 [no character trait except honesty or veracity may be shown in civil action]; Ev.C. 787, supra, §285 [specific acts inadmissible to show good character in civil action].)

In practice, however, rehabilitation usually consists of (a) contradictory evidence (infra, §361), (b) good character (infra, §362), or (c) prior consistent statements (infra, §364 et seq.). (On psychiatric rehabilitation, see infra, §363.)

(3) Affirmative Evidence. The former rule that prior consistent statements were admissible only to rehabilitate has been abrogated. A new hearsay exception makes them admissible as substantive evidence. (Ev.C. 1236, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §161.)

(4) Distinction: Evidence Relating to Qualifications of Expert. In Grimshaw v. Ford Motor Co. (1981) 119 C.A.3d 757, 174 C.R. 348, a strict products liability action against an automobile manufacturer, plaintiff called C, a former engineer and executive in charge of defendant's crash testing program, as an expert witness. On direct examination, C testified that he had been forced to take an early retirement because he spoke out on matters of safety. Defendant objected that this testimony was an attempt to support the witness' credibility before any impeachment had been attempted. Held, the evidence was properly admitted. Why he left defendant's employ was part of the background information concerning his professional experience, and admissible even though it may also have tended to enhance his credibility. (119 C.A.3d 786.)

XI. IMPEACHMENT

K. Rehabilitation of Impeached Witness.

2. Contradiction of Bias or Interest.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 361

[§ 361] Contradiction of Bias or Interest.

If the impeachment is on the ground of bias or hostility, evidence to show absence of such a state of mind is admissible. (See People v. Nichols (1970) 3 C.3d 150, 157, 89 C.R. 721, 474 P.2d 673, citing the text [hearsay admissible to rebut claim of bias]; 1 McCormick 5th, §47; 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §952; 4 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1119; Ev.C. 780(f).)

In People v. Woodberry (1970) 10 C.A.3d 695, 89 C.R. 330, T, a prosecution witness in jail on an unrelated charge, was threatened by other prisoners for testifying against defendant. In court, out of the jury's presence, he took the stand to say that, because of the threats, he would not answer further questions on cross-examination by the defense. Held, the prosecutor could read this statement to the jury to counteract the possible inference that T's refusal was caused by antagonism toward defendant, by a desire or need to favor the prosecution, or was induced by the prosecution. (10 C.A.3d 710.)

But the rehabilitation must be confined to contradiction; i.e., the only permissible countershowing in rehabilitation is that no such prejudice or hostility exists. If the witness actually admits the prejudice, it is wholly improper to permit him or her to recite instances of purported misconduct of the party by way of justification. (People v. Zemavasky (1942) 20 C.2d 56, 63, 123 P.2d 478; People v. Mullen (1953) 115 C.A.2d 340, 344, 252 P.2d 19 ["The causes for his bias are not material to the issue at hand, i.e., whether his testimony is colored, for the bias is admitted"]; 3A Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §952.)

K. Rehabilitation of Impeached Witness.

3. Good Character.

(1) Impeachment Through Attack on Character. If the impeachment amounts to an attack on the character of the witness, by evidence of bad reputation for veracity or conviction of a felony, evidence of good character may be offered in rebuttal. (People v. Amanacus (1875) 50 C. 233, 235; see 1 McCormick 5th, §47; 4 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§1105, 1106; 9 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 285, 361.) This theory perhaps extends to allowance of good character evidence to rehabilitate a witness impeached by a showing of corrupt activities in the case (supra, §279). (See People v. Ah Fat (1874) 48 C. 61, 64 [prosecution witness had offered to testify for defendant if paid]; 4 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1107.)

(2) Impeachment Through Other Methods: Civil Cases. Where the impeachment is by other methods, such as proof of prior inconsistent statements, contradictory evidence or a showing of bias or interest, character evidence is regarded, in civil cases, as "collateral" and improper. (Ev.C. 790; see Title Ins. & Trust Co. v. Ingersoll (1908) 153 C. 1, 9, 94 P. 94; People v. Sellas (1931) 114 C.A. 367, 372, 300 P. 150; People v. Mitchell (1984) 161 C.A.3d 254, 257, 207 C.R. 334 ["If the mere telling of conflicting stories, the essence of litigation, could overcome Evidence Code section 790, the rule would rarely prevail over the exception"].)

(3) Impeachment Through Other Methods: Criminal Cases. Ev.C. 790 was nullified as to criminal cases by the "Right to Truth-in-Evidence" provision of Proposition 8 (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §8); hence, a criminal defendant's reputation for honesty is admissible unless subject to exclusion under Ev.C. 352 (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §17 et seq.). (People v. Taylor (1986) 180 C.A.3d 622, 632, 225 C.R. 733; see People v. Adams (1988) 198 C.A.3d 10, 18, 243 C.R. 580, supra, §287 [following Taylor reasoning in case involving P.C. 787, supra, 285 et seq., which excludes evidence of specific acts to prove bad character of witness].)

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 363

[§ 363] Medical or Psychiatric Condition.

In People v. Blakesley (1972) 26 C.A.3d 723, 102 C.R. 885, defendant was convicted of contributing to the delinquency of a minor, based on the testimony of a young boy who described several homosexual encounters with him. Through extensive cross-examination, defendant sought to portray the witness as a mentally sick individual. Over objection, the prosecution called as a witness a psychiatrist who had examined the minor pursuant to an earlier court order. The psychiatrist was allowed to testify that the minor was mentally disturbed in the sense that "adolescents are all mentally disturbed people," but that he did not show any serious psychopathology and that homosexuality did not indicate a serious mental disturbance. Held, admission of the testimony was proper. The attack on the witness' credibility included depicting him as a mentally sick individual. "The purpose of calling Doctor Wodinsky was merely to put his sickness into proper psychiatric perspective." (26 C.A.3d 728.) (On use, during prosecution's case-in-chief, of expert testimony on rape victim's mental condition in order to support her credibility, see People v. Herring (1993) 20 C.A.4th 1066, 1072, 1073, 25 C.R.2d 213.)

XI. IMPEACHMENT

K. Rehabilitation of Impeached Witness.

5. Prior Consistent Statement.

a. Where Charge of Improper Motive.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 364

[§ 364] Where Charge of Improper Motive.

(1) Admissibility of Prior Consistent Statement. Where the impeachment has been on the grounds of bias or other improper motive, a consistent statement made prior to the time the bias or motive was alleged to have arisen tends to show that the witness was not influenced by it in testifying on the stand. Accordingly, the prior consistent statement is admissible in rehabilitation. (Ev.C. 791(b); see Barkly v. Copeland (1887) 74 C. 1, 4, 15 P. 307; California Elec. Light Co. v. California Safe Deposit & Trust Co. (1904) 145 C. 124, 128, 78 P. 372; People v. Kynette (1940) 15 C.2d 731, 753, 104 P.2d 794; People v. Cannady (1972) 8 C.3d 379, 388, 105 C.R. 129, 503 P.2d 585 [failure to object waived error but, in addition, "That there may always have existed another motive for fabricating did not deprive the prosecution of its right to show that a motive shown by the evidence did not affect the witness' testimony"]; People v. Andrews (1989) 49 C.3d 200, 210, 260 C.R. 583, 776 P.2d 285; People v. Doetschman (1945) 69 C.A.2d 486, 491, 159 P.2d 418; People v. Duvall (1968) 262 C.A.2d 417, 420, 68 C.R. 708; People v. Gentry (1969) 270 C.A.2d 462, 472, 76 C.R. 336; 58 A.L.R.4th 1014 [criminal cases]; 59 A.L.R.4th 1000 [civil cases]; cf. People v. Walsh (1956) 47 C.2d 36, 41, 301 P.2d 247, infra, §365; and see 4 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1128; 50 So. Cal. L. Rev. 109 [criticism of Ev.C. 791, review of case law, and proposed statutory changes].)

Thus, in Kynette, supra, a trial for conspiracy to commit murder, prosecution witness S was shown on cross-examination to have been under police protection and to have received $ 50 weekly from the district attorney for a time. On redirect examination and by rebuttal witnesses, the prosecutor was allowed to prove that S had previously made statements to two persons consistent with his trial testimony. (15 C.2d 753.)

In People v. Neely (1958) 163 C.A.2d 289, 329 P.2d 357, an accomplice codefendant testified against defendant, and on cross-examination was asked many questions intimating that he was improperly influenced by hope of leniency. Held, it was proper to offer his own prior consistent statements. (163 C.A.2d 311.)

(2) Exception: Statement Made After Motive Arose. The prior statement, to be admissible, must have been made before the bias or improper motive is alleged to have arisen. (Ev.C. 791(b); see Tome v. United States (1995) 513 U.S. 150, 115 S.Ct. 696, 700, 130 L.Ed.2d 574, 581; People v. Coleman (1969) 71 C.2d 1159, 1166, 80 C.R. 920, 459 P.2d 248; People v. Doetschman, supra, 69 C.A.2d 491; People v. Hitchings (1997) 59 C.A.4th 915, 921, 69 C.R.2d 484 [murder defendant's jailhouse conversation with his girlfriend was not admissible as prior consistent statement where it took place after his arrest, which provided motive for bias or fabrication].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Exception: Statement Made After Motive Arose.

(New) Distinction: Multiple motives alleged: A prior consistent statement may be admitted for rehabilitation purposes if it was made before one of the alleged grounds for bias came into existence, even if at the time it was made, other grounds may have existed. (People v. Jones (2003) 30 C.4th 1084, 1106, 135 C.R.2d 370, 70 P.3d 359 [after defense presented evidence of prosecution witness' favorable plea bargain, prosecution was properly allowed to present witness' prior consistent statement, which predated bargain, even though at time of statement, witness may have feared being prosecuted for charged murder and had motive to put blame on defendant].) West's Key Number Digest, Witnesses k.414(2)

[§ 365] Where Charge of Recent Fabrication.

The charge, express or implied, that the testimony was recently fabricated by the witness, is similar to the charge that it was influenced by improper motives (supra, §364). And rehabilitation by proof of prior consistent statements is equally proper, subject to the same limitation, i.e., that the consistent statement was made before the motive for fabrication is alleged to have arisen. (Ev.C. 791(b); see Tome v. United States (1995) 513 U.S. 150, 115 S.Ct. 696, 700, 130 L.Ed.2d 574, 581; People v. Welch (1972) 8 C.3d 106, 116, 104 C.R. 217, 501 P.2d 225 [tape recording of victim's statements on morning she was shot was relevant and material to rebut implied defense charge of recent fabrication about attempted robbery and attempted rape]; People v. Hayes (1990) 52 C.3d 577, 609, 276 C.R. 874, 802 P.2d 376 [prior consistent statement is admissible if it was made before existence of any one or more of multiple motives to fabricate]; People v. Noguera (1992) 4 C.4th 599, 629, 15 C.R.2d 400, 842 P.2d 1160 [following People v. Hayes]; People v. Bolin (1998) 18 C.4th 297, 320, 321, 75 C.R.2d 412, 956 P.2d 374 [where defense attempted to undermine prosecution witness' credibility by suggesting that his attorney had encouraged him to fabricate accusations against defendant, testimony of woman to whom witness had made same accusations regarding defendant before he could have had any motive to fabricate was properly admitted]; Loser v. E. R. Bacon Co. (1962) 201 C.A.2d 387, 393, 20 C.R. 221; People v. Utter (1972) 24 C.A.3d 535, 553, 101 C.R. 214; Box v. California Date Growers Assn. (1976) 57 C.A.3d 266, 272, 129 C.R. 146, citing the text [while impeachment may be treated as charge of recent fabrication to come within hearsay exception, cross-examination which attacks credibility does not necessarily give rise to such inference; but error in admitting evidence of prior consistent statement was harmless]; People v. McCowan (1978) 85 C.A.3d 675, 681, 149 C.R. 611; People v. Deletto (1983) 147 C.A.3d 458, 479, 195 C.R. 233; 1 McCormick 5th, §47; 4 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1129; 50 So. Cal. L. Rev. 109, 116; 58 A.L.R.4th 1014 [criminal cases]; 59 A.L.R.4th 1000 [civil cases]; on evidence of prior identification, see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §163.)

In Davis v. Tanner (1927) 88 C.A. 67, 262 P. 1106, a wrongful death case, plaintiffs' witness H testified to the negligence of defendant's taxi driver. On cross-examination defendants disclosed a conference between H and plaintiffs' attorneys, strongly suggesting that it resulted in fabrication of the trial testimony at the urgent inducement of the attorneys. To impeach H on that basis, defendants offered a former statement by H that was somewhat inconsistent with her trial testimony. Held, a statement given by H at the coroner's inquest, which was consistent with her trial testimony and which was made just after the accident and prior to both the inconsistent statement and the conference with plaintiffs' counsel, was properly proved. (88 C.A. 76.)

The Davis case makes it clear that impeachment will be treated as a charge of recent fabrication if that is its evident purpose, even though the impeaching party does not expressly so state. (88 C.A. 78.) Thus, here, the ostensible purpose of the examiner was to test the recollection of the witness, but his innuendoes gave a different impression. (88 C.A. 74.) (To same effect, see People v. Walsh (1956) 47 C.2d 36, 43, 301 P.2d 247.)

In People v. Deletto (1983) 147 C.A.3d 458, 195 C.R. 233, defendant was charged with unlawful sexual acts committed with his 6-year-old daughter. The child victim's foster mother was permitted to testify that she observed the child engaging in sexual acts with a child and a dog, and asked her what she was doing; and that the child replied that she was doing the same thing that her Dad did to her. Held, the testimony was properly admitted. It was, of course, objectionable if offered to prove that the father did those acts; but it was admissible to rebut the inference, created by cross-examination of the minor, that at the trial, she had told a false story fabricated by her foster mother. (147 C.A.3d 479.)

The flexibility of the "recent fabrication" exception, and its tendency to merge with the "statement before alleged motive arose" exception (supra, §364), are well illustrated in People v. Walsh, supra. Defendants W and S, building inspectors, were charged with bribery--taking money from contractors to fix violations. Cross-examination of the contractor witnesses showed their past and present hostility to defendants and friendliness with the police. The prosecutor was then allowed to introduce the contractors' checks (to defendants) and prior oral statements to the effect that the money was used for bribes. The Court of Appeal held the rehabilitation improper because the witnesses were as much biased against the defendants at the time of the prior consistent statements as at the time of the trial; i.e., the statements were not made before the alleged motive arose. But the Supreme Court, without extended discussion, treated the cross-examination as an implied charge of recent fabrication, observing that "inferences of fabrication since the alleged bribes could be fairly drawn by the jurors." (47 C.2d 43.) (See 45 Cal. L. Rev. 202 [criticism of Walsh].)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XI. IMPEACHMENT

K. Rehabilitation of Impeached Witness.

5. Prior Consistent Statement.

c. Where Prior Inconsistent Statement Introduced.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 366

[§ 366] Where Prior Inconsistent Statement Introduced.

(1) Former Exclusionary Rule. The fact that a witness told the same story before does not necessarily add force to his testimony. Hence, prior consistent statements have traditionally been restricted: They have been allowed to rebut a charge of improper motive or recent fabrication (supra, §§364, 365), but not to rebut impeachment for bad character or prior inconsistent statements. (See Bohn v. Gruver (1931) 111 C.A. 386, 395, 295 P. 891; Davis v. Tanner (1927) 88 C.A. 67, 76, 262 P. 1106; cf. People v. Vera (1956) 145 C.A.2d 649, 656, 302 P.2d 887 [concurring opinion]; and see also 1 McCormick 5th, §47; 4 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1125 et seq.; 45 Cal. L. Rev. 202; 50 So. Cal. L. Rev. 109, 118.)

(2) Expansion of Recent Fabrication Exception. The exclusionary rule was undermined by decisions which stretched the flexible recent fabrication theory to cover what ordinarily would be regarded as simple prior inconsistent statements. Thus, in Bickford v. Mauser (1942) 53 C.A.2d 680, 128 P.2d 79, a personal injury action, H, defendant's friend and passenger, testified to what happened; on cross-examination he denied having told police officers that he had been resting in the car and did not see the accident; the officers were called and testified to such statements. Defendant was then allowed to introduce a written consistent statement signed by H the day after the accident, and given to the investigator for defendant's counsel. (53 C.A.2d 686.) And in People v. Bias (1959) 170 C.A.2d 502, 339 P.2d 204, the court was quite candid in recognizing the change: "The very fact that defendant sought to impeach her on an important circumstance of the crime, proving a statement at the preliminary examination contrary to that made at the trial, is in effect a charge of recent fabrication." (170 C.A.2d 512.) (See also People v. Basnett (1960) 186 C.A.2d 108, 121, 8 C.R. 804.)

(3) Code Rule of Admissibility. Ev.C. 791(a) gives effect to these decisions by abandoning the limitation, and allowing proof of a prior consistent statement of a witness when "[e]vidence of a statement made by him that is inconsistent with any part of his testimony at the hearing has been admitted for the purpose of attacking his credibility." But the consistent statement must have been made before the inconsistent statement. (Ev.C. 791(a); see People v. Ainsworth (1988) 45 C.3d 984, 1015, 248 C.R. 568, 755 P.2d 1017; Sprague v. Equifax (1985) 166 C.A.3d 1012, 1036, 213 C.R. 69, citing the text; see also 58 A.L.R.4th 1014 [criminal cases]; 59 A.L.R.4th 1000 [civil cases].)

XII. OBJECTIONS TO INADMISSIBLE EVIDENCE

A. Requirement of Proper Objection.

1. Right To Object and Practice.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 367

[§ 367] Right To Object and Practice.

(1) Right To Object. Under the adversary system of trial, it is the right and responsibility of counsel to object to inadmissible evidence: "[H]is objection to prohibited evidence (or his failure to waive an objection) cannot in any way be construed to his disadvantage, since by hypothesis the evidence is prohibited, not for his personal sake on grounds independent of the value of his evidence, as privileged evidence is ... but because of the untrustworthiness of the evidence. No doubt a party usually does take advantage of such rules because the forbidden evidence is unfavorable, and no doubt the opponent constantly seeks by innuendo to give an unfavorable meaning to such objections. But the rules of evidence could never be enforced if parties were not guaranteed free scope in calling attention to the impending violation of the rules; and it is universally assumed and understood that no inference can lawfully be urged in consequence of such objections." (Thompson v. Hickman (1948) 89 C.A.2d 356, 365, 200 P.2d 893, quoting Wigmore.) (See also 1 McCormick 5th, §52; 1 Wigmore (Tillers Rev.) §18.)

Counsel are also commonly accorded the privilege of arguing the merits of the objection before the court rules on it. (See Bennett v. Superior Court (1946) 73 C.A.2d 203, 216, 220, 166 P.2d 318.)

(2) Practice. Because failure to make a proper, specific and timely objection is normally a waiver of the right (see infra, §371), and incompetent evidence received without objection will sustain a verdict or judgment (see infra, §393), counsel should be alert to object to incompetent, harmful evidence. But experienced trial attorneys have warned of the dangers of irritating the jury and trial judge by repeated objections on purely technical or formal grounds, where the defect is readily curable and the only result is to delay the proceedings. (For discussions of advantages and disadvantages of objecting, see 1 McCormick 5th, §52; C.E.B., California Trial Objections 6th, Chap. 4; C.E.B., 2 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §15.32 et seq.; C.E.B., Effective Direct and Cross-Examination, Chap. 11; 6 Am.Jur. Trials 605.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XII. OBJECTIONS TO INADMISSIBLE EVIDENCE

- A. Requirement of Proper Objection.
- 2. Objection by Motion in Limine.
  - a. Purpose and Scope of Motion.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 368

[§ 368] Purpose and Scope of Motion.

(1) Purpose of Motion. A motion in limine is made to exclude evidence before the evidence is offered at trial, on grounds that would be sufficient to object to the evidence. Although not expressly authorized by statute, the motion is recognized as a proper request that the trial court has inherent power to entertain and grant. (See People v. Morris (1991) 53 C.3d 152, 188, 279 C.R. 720, 807 P.2d 949, infra, §370, citing the text [general discussion of purposes and advantages of motions in limine]; Sacramento & San Joaquin Drainage Dist. v. Reed (1963) 215 C.A.2d 60, 66, 67, 68, 29 C.R. 847; Charbonneau v. Superior Court (1974) 42 C.A.3d 505, 507, 116 C.R. 153; Hyatt v. Sierra Boat Co. (1978) 79 C.A.3d 325, 337, 145 C.R. 47; Dong v. Board of Trustees of Leland Stanford Junior University (1987) 191 C.A.3d 1572, 1584, 236 C.R. 912; Clemens v. American Warranty Corp. (1987) 193 C.A.3d 444, 451, 238 C.R. 339, quoting the text [dismissal following granting of six motions in limine that were, in net effect, objections to all evidence on grounds of failure to state cause of action (see 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, §177)]; Edwards v. Centex Real Estate Corp. (1997) 53 C.A.4th 15, 26, 61 C.R.2d 518, citing the text [contrasting motion in limine with "objection to all evidence" (see 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, §176)]; Mechanical Contractors Assn. v. Greater Bay Area Assn. (1998) 66 C.A.4th 672, 676, 677, 78 C.R.2d 225 [same; because granting of motion to exclude all evidence was "tantamount to a nonsuit," it was subject to standard of review for nonsuits]; C.E.B., 1 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, Chap. 7; C.E.B., California Trial Objections 6th, §2.3 et seq.; C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Trial §3.72 et seq.; Cal. Civil Practice, 3 Procedure, §24:1 et seq.; C.E.B., Expert Witness Guide 2d, §14.2; Rutter Group, 1 Civil Trials and Evidence, §4.217 et seq.; 1 Wigmore (Tillers Rev.) §18, p. 801; 20 Am.Jur. Trials 441; 63 A.L.R.3d 311 [rules for using motion in limine].)

The purpose of the motion is "to avoid the obviously futile attempt to 'unring the bell' in the event a motion to strike is granted in the proceedings before the jury." (Hyatt v. Sierra Boat Co., supra, 79 C.A.3d 337.) The motion requests that opposing counsel and witnesses be instructed not to mention before the jury certain objectionable matters that might create an improper inference in the jurors' minds despite a subsequent instruction to disregard those matters. In other words, the motion seeks to avoid the prejudicial effect of questions asked or statements made in connection with the offer of objectionable evidence. (See Charbonneau v. Superior Court, supra, 42 C.A.3d 507; C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Trial §3.72.)

(2) Scope of Motion. The motion may be made to exclude any kind of evidence that could be objected to at the trial, either as irrelevant or subject to discretionary exclusion as unduly prejudicial (Ev.C. 352, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §17 et seq.). (For illustrations of objectionable evidence commonly subject of motion in civil cases, see C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Trial §9.8; Rutter Group, 1 Civil Trials and Evidence, §§4.240 [plaintiff's examples], 4.258 [defendant's examples]; for motion used in criminal proceedings to prohibit improper impeachment by proof of prior felony conviction (supra, §301 et seq.), see People v. Rist (1976) 16 C.3d 211, 223, 127 C.R. 457, 545 P.2d 833; People v. Barrick (1982) 33 C.3d 115, 123, 124, 187 C.R. 716, 654 P.2d 1243; People v. Smith (1984) 151 C.A.3d 89, 93, 198 C.R. 623; People v. Boyd (1985) 167 C.A.3d 36, 40, footnote 3, 212 C.R. 873.)

The motion may also be used to obtain a temporary order excluding evidence until the court is in a position to rule on admissibility. (See C.E.B., California Trial Objections 6th, §2.13; C.E.B., 2 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §7.3.)

In Kelly v. New West Fed. Savings (1996) 49 C.A.4th 659, 56 C.R.2d 803, plaintiffs, who were injured when they stepped out of an elevator that had "mislevelled," brought a personal injury action against the building owner and manager and the elevator maintenance company. The building had two elevators, and during her deposition, one plaintiff testified that it was the smaller of the elevators that caused her injury. When further discovery revealed that the larger elevator might have been involved, defendants brought a motion in limine to preclude plaintiffs from presenting any evidence relating to the larger elevator, and a second motion to preclude plaintiff's expert, whose deposition testimony had related mostly to the smaller elevator, from testifying regarding the larger elevator. The trial judge granted the first motion, broadened its ruling on the second motion to preclude plaintiff's expert from testifying at all, and then granted defendants' nonsuit motion. Held, reversed and remanded.

(a) A party may be precluded from introducing evidence based on a response to a request for admissions, but the other discovery tools, including depositions and interrogatories, have a different function, i.e., assisting counsel to prepare for trial. "It is a misuse of a motion in limine to attempt to compel a witness or a party to conform his or her trial testimony to a preconceived factual scenario based on testimony given during pretrial discovery." (49 C.A.4th 672, 673, distinguishing Campain v. Safeway Stores (1972) 29 C.A.3d 362, 104 C.R. 752, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §10.) The mere fact that plaintiff initially identified the smaller elevator as the one she thought she was riding on did not render evidence relating to the larger elevator irrelevant. Her deposition testimony indicated that she had witnessed malfunctions in both elevators, and the jury could find that plaintiffs were in fact riding on the larger elevator. The appropriate remedy for any alleged "surprise" to defendants would have been a continuance. (49 C.A.4th 674, 675, citing the text.)

(b) The granting of the second motion in limine was also improper because the trial judge, without notice or adequate warning to plaintiffs' counsel, turned the hearing on that motion into an Ev.C. 402 hearing on the expert's competence. (See supra, §50.) The judge's conclusion that the expert's proposed opinions were not based on competent evidence was beyond the limited scope of the in limine proceeding. (49 C.A.4th 675, 677.) The error as to both motions was reversible per se, as it prevented plaintiffs from offering evidence to establish their case. (49 C.A.4th 677.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Purpose of Motion. See Rufo v. Simpson (2001) 86 C.A.4th 573, 608, 103 C.R.2d 492 [motion in limine is additional protective device for party wishing to exclude evidence, to prevent proponent from even mentioning potentially prejudicial evidence to jury; but making motion in limine is not prerequisite to objecting at trial]; 21 California Lawyer 65 (March 2001) [effective use of motion in limine]. (2) Scope of Motion. See Silva v. Union Pac. R. Co. (2000) 85 C.A.4th 1024, 1030, 102 C.R.2d 668 [in wrongful death action arising from teenager's being hit by defendant's train, trial judge erred in ruling, in response to competing in limine motions concerning whether defendant could offer evidence on whether it had duty to fence, that defendant had no such duty; ruling of this type can be made on in limine motion but requires clear factual basis, which parties had not provided]; Ulloa v. McMillin Real Estate & Mortg. (2007) 149 C.A.4th 333, 338, 57 C.R.3d 1 [in action for specific performance in which defendant sellers cross-complained for fraud, trial judge did not err in granting cross-defendants' motion in limine to exclude evidence that cross-defendant real estate agent had signed counteroffer on client's behalf; even if agent's conduct was improper, it was irrelevant to any damages suffered by defendants, and they did not even learn of it until after pleading was filed]. West's Key Number Digest, Pretrial Procedure k.3

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XII. OBJECTIONS TO INADMISSIBLE EVIDENCE

- A. Requirement of Proper Objection.
  - 2. Objection by Motion in Limine.
    - b. Procedure.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 369

[§ 369] Procedure.

(1) Time for Making Motion. The usual and most desirable time for making the motion is before the jury selection begins or the trial is commenced. If the motion is not made in advance of trial, counsel risks the danger that the opponent will refer to the objectionable matter in the voir dire of the jury or opening statement. (See C.E.B., 1 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §7.13 et seq.; C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Trial, §3.75.)

However, the motion may be made during the trial when counsel has reason to believe that the opponent will attempt to introduce objectionable evidence. (See Hyatt v. Sierra Boat Co. (1978) 79 C.A.3d 325, 337, 145 C.R. 47 [after plaintiff rested his case in chief, motion made to exclude testimony of defendant's expert for lack of foundational evidence]; C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Trial, §9.6; C.E.B., 1 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §7.16.)

(2) Form: Written Motion. Where the objectionable evidence could have a seriously prejudicial effect, a written motion, supported by points and authorities, is the most desirable method of seeking the court's order. Because the motion is nonstatutory, there is no required format; but it is considered good practice not only to submit points and authorities, but to provide the judge with a proposed written order. (See C.E.B., 1 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §7.23; C.E.B., California Trial Objections 6th, §2.11; C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Trial, §3.74; for forms, see Cal. Civil Practice, 3 Procedure, §24:19; C.E.B., California Trial Objections 6th, §2.19.)

(3) Oral Motion. Where the prejudicial matter appears at the trial without advance warning, the motion may be made orally and considered either at a bench conference or at a recess in chambers. (See C.E.B., 1 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §7.18; C.E.B., California Trial Objections 6th, §2.12.)

(4) Hearing. The motion may be presented in open court outside the hearing of the jury, or, at the court's invitation, in chambers. (See C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Trial, §9.9.) In a chambers hearing, counsel should request that a reporter be present to ensure a record for appellate review. (See C.E.B., California Trial Objections 6th, §2.12.)

(5) Ruling and Order. The order commonly sought is one that prohibits counsel, parties, and witnesses from mentioning or referring to the prejudicial matters. (See C.E.B., 1 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §7.38 et seq.)

If the judge does not dispose of the matter at the hearing but takes it under submission, he or she may make an interim order prohibiting reference to the evidence until the ruling is made. (See C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Trial, §9.9; C.E.B., California Trial Objections 6th, §§2.13, 2.14.) Counsel and the court should keep track of the pending undecided motions. (See C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Trial, §§3.76, 9.9; Cal. Civil Practice, 3 Procedure, §24:20; on necessity of objection at trial, see infra, §370; on effect of trial judge's failure to rule on motion, see infra, §391.)

(6) Sanctions for Violation of Order. Reference to objectionable matter covered by the judge's order may be sanctioned in several ways: (a) assignment of misconduct and admonition to the jury to disregard the evidence (see infra, §386); (b) motion for mistrial; (c) adjudication of contempt. (See C.E.B., California Trial Objections 6th, §2.17.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XII. OBJECTIONS TO INADMISSIBLE EVIDENCE

- A. Requirement of Proper Objection.
- 2. Objection by Motion in Limine.
- c. Necessity of Further Objection at Trial.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 370

[§ 370] Necessity of Further Objection at Trial.

People v. Jennings (1988) 46 C.3d 963, 251 C.R. 278, 760 P.2d 475, held that when an in limine ruling that evidence is admissible has been made, the party seeking exclusion must object when the evidence is actually offered to preserve the issue for appeal. "The reason for this rule is that until the evidence is actually offered, and the court is aware of its relevance in context, its probative value, and its potential for prejudice, matters related to the state of the evidence at the time an objection is made, the court cannot intelligently rule on admissibility." (46 C.3d 975, footnote 3.)

The Jennings rule was substantially relaxed in People v. Morris (1991) 53 C.3d 152, 279 C.R. 720, 807 P.2d 949. The defendant in a capital murder prosecution moved in limine to exclude the testimony of two female accomplices, claiming that their plea agreements were coercive. On appeal, the prosecution argued that defendant had waived any error by failing to object when the witnesses testified. Held, the issue was preserved for appeal.

(a) "Under appropriate circumstances, a motion in limine can serve the function of a 'motion to exclude' under Evidence Code section 353 by allowing the trial court to rule on a specific objection to particular evidence." (53 C.3d 188.)

(b) Sacramento & San Joaquin Drainage Dist. v. Reed (1963) 215 C.A.2d 60, 67, 29 C.R. 847 held that no objection at trial is necessary to preserve the ruling for appeal. The conflict between the Jennings rule and that of Sacramento & San Joaquin Drainage Dist. can be reconciled by focusing on the requirements of Ev.C. 353: "[A] motion in limine to exclude evidence is a sufficient manifestation of objection to protect the record on appeal when it satisfies the basic requirements of Evidence Code section 353, i.e.: (1) a specific legal ground for exclusion is advanced and subsequently raised on appeal; (2) the motion is directed to a particular, identifiable body of evidence; and (3) the motion is made at a time before or during trial when the trial judge can determine the evidentiary question in its appropriate context." (53 C.3d 190.)

(c) "Notwithstanding our holding, the better practice in handling motions in limine is undoubtedly for the parties to stipulate to the effect of the court's rulings ... or for the trial judge to make it clear to counsel at the end of in limine arguments not only what the ruling on the motion is, but whether further objection or argument is desired when the evidence is presented. If this is done, the stipulation or order of the trial court will be respected in the appellate court's determination whether error has been properly preserved." (53 C.3d 190.) (See People v. Crittenden (1994) 9 C.4th 83, 127, 36 C.R.2d 474, 885 P.2d 887 [following People v. Morris]; C.E.B., 1 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §7.43 et seq.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XII. OBJECTIONS TO INADMISSIBLE EVIDENCE

A. Requirement of Proper Objection.

3. Waiver.

a. Failure To Object.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 371

[§ 371] Failure To Object.

(1) General Rule. Where inadmissible evidence is offered, the party who desires to raise the point of erroneous admission on appeal must object at the trial, specifically stating the grounds of the objection, and directing the objection to the particular evidence that the party seeks to exclude. Obviously, failure to object at all waives the defect. (Perry v. McLaughlin (1931) 212 C. 1, 6, 297 P. 554; Sublett v. Henry's Turk & Taylor Lunch (1942) 21 C.2d 273, 275, 131 P.2d 369; People v. Corrigan (1957) 48 C.2d 551, 556, 310 P.2d 953 [rule applies also to error or unfairness in question asked by the judge]; People v. Gates (1987) 43 C.3d 1168, 1185, 240 C.R. 666, 743 P.2d 301 [purported improper question by prosecutor on cross-examination]; Standley v. Feather River Pine Mills (1952) 112 C.A.2d 101, 104, 245 P.2d 657; People v. Alvidrez (1958) 158 C.A.2d 299, 300, 322 P.2d 557 [use of unidentified informer-participant; objection waived by failure to demand identification]; People v. Prado (1961) 190 C.A.2d 374, 378, 12 C.R. 141, citing the text; Russell v. Geis (1967) 251 C.A.2d 560, 570, 59 C.R. 569, quoting the text; People v. Keel (1969) 272 C.A.2d 275, 277, 77 C.R. 298, citing the text; People v. Nugent (1971) 18 C.A.3d 911, 917, 96 C.R. 209, citing the text; People v. Harris (1978) 85 C.A.3d 954, 957, 149 C.R. 860, quoting the text; Estate of Silverstein (1984) 159 C.A.3d 221, 225, 205 C.R. 294, quoting the text; 1 McCormick 5th, §52; 1 Wigmore (Tillers Rev.) §18; C.E.B., 2 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §15.24 et seq.; F.R. Evid., Rule 103(a), infra, §372; on insufficient or belated objection, see infra, §372; for exceptions to waiver rule, see infra, §396 et seq.)

(2) Waiver of Constitutional Claims. The waiver rule applies to evidence obtained in violation of constitutional guarantees. For example:

(a) Evidence obtained by unlawful search and seizure. (See Robison v. Superior Court (1957) 49 C.2d 186, 187, 316 P.2d 1; People v. Clark (1990) 50 C.3d 583, 625, 268 C.R. 399, 789 P.2d 127 [in face of express statute on admissibility, party may not excuse failure to object on ground that he did not anticipate later decision holding that statute means just what it says, but limiting its application]; People v. Flores (1968) 68 C.2d 563, 567, 68 C.R. 161, 440 P.2d 233; People v. Gee (1975) 52 C.A.3d 100, 103, 124 C.R. 735 [P.C. 1538.5(m) makes review of search and seizure on appeal dependent on defendant's moving for return of property or suppression of evidence at some stage of proceedings before conviction]; People v. Smith (1986) 180 C.A.3d 72, 79, 225 C.R. 348; 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, §381 et seq.)

(b) Evidence obtained in violation of Miranda rule. (See People v. Castro (1968) 257 C.A.2d 643, 646, 65 C.R. 62; People v. Meyers (1968) 262 C.A.2d 307, 310, 68 C.R. 636; 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §133.)

(3) Summary Judgment Proceedings. Although the waiver rule formerly did not apply in summary judgment proceedings (see Dugar v. Happy Tiger Records (1974) 41 C.A.3d 811, 817, 116 C.R. 412), the present rule is that evidentiary objections not raised in writing or orally at the hearing on the motion for summary judgment are deemed waived. (C.C.P. 437c(b); see Haskell v. Carli (1987) 195 C.A.3d 124, 129, 240 C.R. 439, citing the text; 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, §§211, 219.) Moreover, objections based on failure to comply with the requirements of C.C.P. 437c(d) (that supporting or opposing affidavits be made on personal knowledge, set forth admissible evidence, and show that the affiant is competent to testify) are waived if they are not made at the hearing. (C.C.P. 437c(d); see 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, §202 et seq.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) General Rule. See People v. Seijas (2005) 36 C.4th 291, 301, 30 C.R.3d 493, 114 P.3d 742 [in murder prosecution, defendant, by failing to object, forfeited for appeal purposes the issue whether trial judge erred in permitting witness to assert privilege against self-incrimination and thus in admitting witness' preliminary hearing testimony]; People v. Partida (2005) 37 C.4th 428, 433, 35 C.R.3d 644, 122 P.3d 765, 6 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Reversible Error, Supp., §36 [where defendant objected at trial to admission of gang evidence on ground that it was more prejudicial than probative (Ev.C. 352), his due process assertions on appeal regarding that ruling were limited to argument that error under Ev.C. 352 was so severe that it violated his due process rights]; People v. Viray (2005) 134 C.A.4th 1186, 1208, 36 C.R.3d 693, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, Supp., §269 [where defendant failed to object to admission of evidentiary fruits of her interrogation, which was obtained in violation of her right to counsel, any objection on this ground was waived for purposes of appeal]; 1 McCormick 6th, §52.(2) Waiver of Constitutional Claims.

(c) (New) Confrontation Clause violations. A general hearsay objection is insufficient to preserve the claim that admission of a testimonial statement violates Crawford v. Washington (2004) 541 U.S. 36, 124 S.Ct. 1354, 158 L.Ed.2d 177, Supp., supra, §21. (People v. Chaney (2007) 148 C.A.4th 772, 777, 56 C.R.3d 128.) West's Key Number Digest, Criminal Law k.692, 698 et seq.; Trial k.105 et seq.

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XII. OBJECTIONS TO INADMISSIBLE EVIDENCE

A. Requirement of Proper Objection.

3. Waiver.

b. Insufficient or Belated Objection.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 372

[§ 372] Insufficient or Belated Objection.

(1) California Rule. A waiver occurs where an objection is made but (a) it is insufficient in form, i.e., it does not clearly state a proper ground (infra, §375 et seq.); or (b) it is not made at the earliest opportunity, i.e., before the improper question is answered, or, if this is not feasible, by motion to strike immediately thereafter (infra, §383 et seq.). (Ev.C. 353(a); see Rupp v. Summerfield (1958) 161 C.A.2d 657, 662, 326 P.2d 912; People v. Horn (1960) 187 C.A.2d 68, 77, 9 C.R. 578, citing the text; Wagner v. Osborn (1964) 225 C.A.2d 36, 43, 37 C.R. 27; People v. Valdez (1966) 239 C.A.2d 459, 464, 48 C.R. 840; People v. Ogg (1968) 258 C.A.2d 841, 846, 66 C.R. 289 [qualifications of opinion witness on character]; People v. Gutierrez (1993) 14 C.A.4th 1425, 1434, 18 C.R.2d 371 [objection on ground of vagueness was insufficient to make appealable the issue whether hypothetical questions to gang expert were beyond proper scope of expert testimony]; 1 McCormick 5th, §52; 1 Wigmore (Tillers Rev.) §18; C.E.B., California Trial Objections 6th, §4.17 et seq.) An objection, however, is enough; a formal exception to the court's ruling is not required. (C.C.P. 647; 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Appeal, §395.)

An objection at a prior proceeding is not sufficient. In People v. Clark (1990) 50 C.3d 583, 268 C.R. 399, 789 P.2d 127, the court rejected the contention that no objection to the introduction of photographs at a second penalty trial was necessary where the judge had overruled an objection to the same photographs at the first penalty trial. "Not only might a party elect different trial tactics at a second trial, but the trial court being more fully informed must be given the opportunity to reconsider the prior ruling. A defendant may not acquiesce in the admission of possibly excludable evidence and then claim on appeal that rulings made in a prior proceeding render objection unnecessary." (50 C.3d 624.)

(2) Federal Rule. F.R. Evid., Rule 103 covers both objections to inadmissible evidence and offers of proof after exclusion of admissible evidence (see infra, §401). (On Rule 103 generally, see 1 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §4 et seq.; see also F.R. Civ. P., Rule 46 and F.R. Crim. P., Rule 51 ["exception" not required].)

Error may not be predicated on a ruling to admit or exclude evidence unless a substantial right of the party is affected. Moreover, if the ruling was to admit evidence, a timely objection or motion to strike must appear of record, stating the specific ground of objection, unless that ground was apparent from the context. (F.R. Evid., Rule 103(a)(1).) If the ruling was to exclude evidence, the substance of the evidence must have been made known to the court by offer or must have been apparent from the context within which questions were asked. (F.R. Evid., Rule 103(a)(2).) An exception to this rule occurs in the case of "plain errors affecting substantial rights," which may be noticed even when they were not properly brought to the court's attention. (F.R. Evid., Rule 103(d).)

The court may add to the record a further statement showing the character of the evidence, the form in which it was offered, the objection made, and the ruling. The court may require the offer of proof to be made in question and answer form. (F.R. Evid., Rule 103(b).)

In jury cases, proceedings must be conducted, "to the extent practicable," to prevent inadmissible evidence from being suggested to the jury, avoiding, for example, making statements or offers of proof or asking questions in the jury's hearing. (F.R. Evid., Rule 103(c).)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XII. OBJECTIONS TO INADMISSIBLE EVIDENCE

A. Requirement of Proper Objection.

3. Waiver.

c. Other Acts Constituting Estoppel or Waiver.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 373

[§ 373] Other Acts Constituting Estoppel or Waiver.

(1) Inadmissible Evidence Offered by Party: Estoppel. A party who is responsible for the introduction of inadmissible matter is estopped to complain of its admission, for the error was "invited" by the party. This is true, for example, when the party offers the evidence on direct examination (Gjurich v. Fieg (1913) 164 C. 429, 433, 129 P. 464; People v. Moran (1970) 1 C.3d 755, 762, 83 C.R. 411, 463 P.2d 763, citing the text), or where the party brings it out by questions on cross-examination with knowledge of the likelihood of an objectionable answer (Zarafonitis v. Yellow Cab Co. (1932) 127 C.A. 607, 609, 16 P.2d 141). (See C.E.B., California Trial Objections 6th, §4.8.)

(2) Party's Objection to Striking Inadmissible Evidence: Estoppel. If a party introduces inadmissible evidence and then seeks to cure the error by having it stricken out, the opposing party should not object. If the opposing party does object, and is successful in preventing the withdrawal, he or she is estopped to raise the error on appeal. (See Sellers v. Wood Hydraulic Hoist & Body Co. (1928) 205 C. 519, 523, 271 P. 1055; Kahn v. Triest-Rosenberg Cap Co. (1903) 139 C. 340, 346, 73 P. 164.)

(3) Acquiescence in Theory of Ruling: Waiver. If a party introduces inadmissible evidence over objection, and later the opposing party offers the same kind of evidence, the opposing party waives the prior objection and loses the right to complain of error. (Heiman v. Market Street Ry. Co. (1937) 21 C.A.2d 311, 315, 69 P.2d 178; see 1 Wigmore (Tillers Rev.) §18, p. 837.)

The same is true if the party first objects and then expressly waives the objection. Thus, in Buchanan v. Nye (1954) 128 C.A.2d 582, 586, 275 P.2d 767, counsel first objected to a coroner's inquest transcript as hearsay, then stated that he withdrew his objection. On appeal he contended that there was no effective waiver because his purpose was to mitigate the damage to his case by using parts of the transcript favorable to him. The court said: "We cannot be concerned with the mental processes employed by counsel in selecting his trial tactics. In this instance, counsel could have preserved his record by objecting to the entire line of inquiry, but upon reflection chose not to do so. He may not now renege on his decision." (128 C.A.2d 587.) (But see infra, §374 [conduct not constituting estoppel].)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XII. OBJECTIONS TO INADMISSIBLE EVIDENCE

A. Requirement of Proper Objection.

3. Waiver.

d. Conduct Not Constituting Waiver or Estoppel.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 374

[§ 374] Conduct Not Constituting Waiver or Estoppel.

(1) Failure To Object to Similar Evidence. If a party offers some inadmissible evidence of a certain type without objection by the opposing party, this should not make similar evidence admissible for the rest of the trial. In other words, a party may properly elect, for strategic reasons, to allow comparatively harmless, incompetent or irrelevant matter to go in without waiving the right to object to seriously prejudicial matter that may follow it. (See 1 McCormick 5th, §55.)

The same is true where the sequence is reversed; e.g., the overruling of a proper objection to incompetent hearsay may be raised as error on appeal even though the appellant later acquiesced in the admission of other hearsay. (Buchanan v. Nye (1954) 128 C.A.2d 582, 587, 275 P.2d 767.)

(2) Cross-Examination or Rebuttal After Objection Overruled. Even though a party believes his or her overruled objection is good, it is hardly safe to stake everything on the possibility of reversal on appeal. Usually, the party will meet the challenge of the inadmissible evidence, by cross-examination and, if necessary, by rebuttal evidence on the issue. No waiver results from this necessary defensive action. (See Jameson v. Tully (1918) 178 C. 380, 384, 173 P. 577 [cross-examination]; Warner Const. Corp. v. Los Angeles (1970) 2 C.3d 285, 299, footnote 17, 85 C.R. 444, 466 P.2d 996, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §§31, 146; Fernandez v. Western Fuse & Explosives Co. (1917) 34 C.A. 420, 423, 167 P. 900 [rebuttal]; Moore v. Norwood (1940) 41 C.A.2d 359, 368, 106 P.2d 939 [cross-examination]; De Roulet v. Mitchel (1945) 70 C.A.2d 120, 125, 160 P.2d 574 [rebuttal]; 1 Wigmore (Tillers Rev.) §18, p. 838.)

As the court remarked in the Jameson case, supra: "[A] party, after rightfully objecting to the admission of evidence, may by his cross-examination lay the foundation for an obviously proper motion to strike it out, or may compel its contradiction or withdrawal, or may utterly destroy its effect, and thus render unnecessary his remedy by appeal from the court's erroneous action." (178 C. 384.)

(3) Inadvertent Failure To Object: New Trial. In Clark v. Bradley (1951) 106 C.A.2d 537, 235 P.2d 439, a paternity suit, defendant claimed to have worked nights at the time conception allegedly occurred. Plaintiff introduced payroll records of defendant's employer, including a discharge card which on the back contained highly prejudicial matter (e.g., "unreliable"). Held, a new trial was properly granted. The inadmissible evidence was overlooked by both counsel and the failure to object was excusable. The court emphasized the point that this was not an attempt to raise an objection for the first time on appeal from a judgment, but rather a review of the trial judge's determination that a fair trial had not been had. (106 C.A.2d 544.) (See Hoel v. Los Angeles (1955) 136 C.A.2d 295, 307, 288 P.2d 989 ["Even if the moving party was technically estopped to claim error, that fact would not impair the power of the court to do justice by granting the new trial"].)

(4) Justifiable Reliance on Contemplated Instruction. An unusual exception was recognized in Khanoyan v. All Amer. Sports Enterprises (1964) 229 C.A.2d 785, 793, 40 C.R. 596, a personal injury suit. Defendant's evidence of absence of similar accidents was introduced without objection by plaintiff's counsel because he reasonably expected a res ipsa loquitur instruction that would make the evidence admissible. (See 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §106.)

(5) Defensive Acts. In People v. Turner (1990) 50 C.3d 668, 268 C.R. 706, 789 P.2d 887, defense counsel, assuming that Proposition 8 (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §8) made defendant's prior felony convictions admissible for impeachment purposes, elicited the existence and nature of the convictions during his direct examination of defendant. On appeal, defendant argued that the trial judge erred in not weighing the prior convictions' probative value against their potential for unfair prejudice, as required by People v. Castro (1985) 38 C.3d 301, 211 C.R. 719, 696 P.2d 111 (supra, §303), which was decided after completion of the trial. Held, defendant did not waive his right to raise this issue on appeal. "Given the apparent futility of an effort to exclude the prior convictions, ... prudent counsel would be well advised to minimize their 'sting' by eliciting them himself. Such defensive acts do not waive an objection on appeal." (50 C.3d 704, footnote 18.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

A. Requirement of Proper Objection.

4. General Objection.

a. Insufficient.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 375

[§ 375] Insufficient.

The typical general objection--that the evidence is "incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial"--is ordinarily insufficient and a waiver of the defect. But any other form that does not specify the particular defect may be called a general objection and is equally futile. (See Ev.C. 353(a); People v. Morris (1991) 53 C.3d 152, 195, 196, 279 C.R. 720, 807 P.2d 949 [defendant's objection to witness' testimony, on grounds that "jailhouse informants are unreliable witnesses" was not sufficiently specific]; People v. Jacobs (1925) 73 C.A. 334, 345, 238 P. 770, 776 ["I object to its being introduced in evidence in respect to this case"]; Estate of Wahlefeld (1930) 105 C.A. 770, 772, 288 P. 870 ["I want to call your attention to section 1880 of the Code of Civil Procedure"]; People v. Boehm (1969) 270 C.A.2d 13, 18, 75 C.R. 590, citing the text ["I wish to make the strongest objection. I want to make it at the bench"; no showing as to what objection, if any, was made at bench]; People v. Smith (1970) 13 C.A.3d 897, 910, 91 C.R. 786, citing the text [defense counsel specified no ground when objecting]; 1 McCormick 5th, §52; 1 Wigmore (Tillers Rev.) §18, p. 818; C.E.B., 2 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §15.39; C.E.B., California Trial Objections 6th, §§4.18, 4.19; on defective specific objections, see infra, §378 et seq.)

The reason for the rule is set forth in Bundy v. Sierra Lumber Co. (1906) 149 C. 772, 87 P. 622: "Had attention been called directly in the court below to the particular objection ... that court would have had a concrete legal proposition to pass on, and counsel for plaintiff would have been advised directly what the particular complaint against the question was, and, if he deemed it tenable, could have withdrawn the inquiry or reframed his question to obviate the particular objection. Trial judges are not supposed to have the numerous, varied, and complex rules governing the admissibility of evidence so completely in mind and of such ready application that under [a general] objection to a question they can apply with legal accuracy some particular principle of law which the objection does not specifically present." (149 C. 776.) (See also Crocker v. Carpenter (1893) 98 C. 418, 421, 33 P. 271; Eachus v. Los Angeles Consol. Elec. Ry. Co. (1894) 103 C. 614, 623, 37 P. 750; Estate of Pusey (1919) 180 C. 368, 373, 181 P. 648; King v. Green (1908) 7 C.A. 473, 479, 94 P. 777 [general objection to depositions]; Resetar v. Leonardi (1923) 61 C.A. 765, 767, 216 P. 71; Donian v. Danielian (1928) 90 C.A. 675, 681, 266 P. 817; Estate of Doyle (1932) 126 C.A. 446, 452, 14 P.2d 909 [general objection to depositions]; cf. Toomes v. Nunes (1938) 24 C.A.2d 395, 397, 75 P.2d 94 [same rule governs motion to strike]; People v. Tolmachoff (1943) 58 C.A.2d 815, 826, 138 P.2d 61; 1 Wigmore (Tillers Rev.) §18, p. 818.)

Thus, in Bundy v. Sierra Lumber Co., supra, the general objection was made to expert testimony. On appeal it was urged that the subject was not appropriate for an expert, and that the witness was not properly qualified. Held, the point could not be raised. (149 C. 776.) (See also Satterlee v. Bliss (1869) 36 C. 489, 507 [insufficient to raise attorney-client privilege]; Crinella v. Northwestern Pac. R. Co. (1927) 85 C.A. 440, 446, 259 P. 774 [insufficient to raise best evidence rule]; *People v. ## CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XII. OBJECTIONS TO INADMISSIBLE EVIDENCE

A. Requirement of Proper Objection.

4. General Objection.

b. Sufficient.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 376

[§ 376] Sufficient.

There is one important exception to the requirement of a specific objection on the right ground: If the question is objectionable from every standpoint, and the answer could not have been admissible under any theory, a general objection that it is irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial is sufficient. In such a case, the reason for requiring a particular objection is not present: even if counsel's attention were specifically directed to the defect, he or she could not cure it, hence, is not prejudiced by the form of the objection.

Thus, in Short v. Frink (1907) 151 C. 83, 90 P. 200, the court said: "The question upon its face called for matter that was not within the issues made by the pleadings, and that was wholly immaterial and irrelevant. No possible answer favorable to plaintiff has been suggested, and none has occurred to us, that would be proper evidence. ... If a question is objectionable from every standpoint, if on its face there appears no purpose whatever for which the evidence asked could be admissible, a general objection of irrelevancy, incompetency and immateriality is sufficient." (151 C. 86.)

A similar statement was made in Swan v. Thompson (1899) 124 C. 193, 56 P. 878: "In certain cases specific objections should be made to questions, in order that the court and opposing counsel may know exactly the particular vice lurking in the question which is relied upon by the party objecting. Especially in fairness to the court should this be the law. This is essentially the rule when the vice in the question is a latent one. But if the question is objectionable from every standpoint, the court is not aided in making an intelligent ruling by a specific objection, and then the specific objection is not demanded. There is no reason for it, and where the reason is not present the rule fails." (124 C. 195.) (See also Morehouse v. Morehouse (1903) 140 C. 88, 94, 73 P. 738; 1 Wigmore (Tillers Rev.) §18, p. 824.)

There is danger, however, in overstating this exception: A general objection will not be good merely because the complaint is lacking in some essential allegation and the evidence is therefore technically immaterial, i.e., outside the issues; a specific objection is necessary where the adverse party could have obviated the difficulty by amending the complaint.

Thus, in Drullinger v. Erskine (1945) 71 C.A.2d 492, 163 P.2d 48, an action for specific performance, plaintiff failed to allege adequacy of consideration and fairness, and defendants made general objections ("incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial" and "not within the scope of the issues raised by the complaint") to evidence. Held, judgment for plaintiff affirmed. Defendants did not demur or object to all evidence on the ground of failure to state a cause of action, and the case was tried on the theory that these issues were raised. Hence, the particular curable defect of pleading was not properly raised in the trial court. (71 C.A.2d 500.) (See 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §§754, 911 et seq.; Granberg v. Turnham (1958) 166 C.A.2d 390, 397, 333 P.2d 423 [contention that special damages not particularly alleged; general objection did not raise defect]; cf. Morehouse v. Morehouse, supra [complaint could not have been amended to make evidence admissible].)

There is another danger in the common practice of coupling the general objection with a specific objection; e.g., incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial, "in this," etc., or "for the reason that," etc. If the specific objection is on an untenable ground, the defect is waived even though the evidence might have been excluded under a general objection; i.e., the objection will be treated as specific, and confined to the reasons stated. (See Fagan v. Lentz (1909) 156 C. 681, 690, 105 P. 951; Soares v. Ghisletta (1934) 1 C.A.2d 402, 404, 36 P.2d 668.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XII. OBJECTIONS TO INADMISSIBLE EVIDENCE

A. Requirement of Proper Objection.

5. Specific Objection.

a. Necessity and Form.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 377

[§ 377] Necessity and Form.

The statement that a general objection is ordinarily insufficient is merely another way of saying that ordinarily the objection must, in fairness to the court and opposing counsel, be specific. (See supra, §375.)

What is a good "specific" objection? No set form of words is required (see People v. Morris (1991) 53 C.3d 152, 188, 279 C.R. 720, 807 P.2d 949, supra, §370), but the following must appear clearly from the objection:

(1) The ground that is being urged; e.g., hearsay, opinion or conclusion of the witness, or privileged communication. Because the rules of evidence are so complex, this often becomes a difficult and burdensome requirement. (See Ev.C. 353(a); People v. Gibson (1976) 56 C.A.3d 119, 136, 137, 128 C.R. 302 [reasonable interpretation of counsel's words indicated that he was invoking Ev.C. 352 (discretionary exclusion) and judge so understood objection]; 1 McCormick 5th, §52; C.E.B., 2 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §15.37 et seq.; C.E.B., California Trial Objections 6th, §4.18; infra, §§378, 379.)

(2) The particular item or part of evidence that is objected to on this ground; e.g., where part of a writing or statement is admissible and part is inadmissible. (See Ballos v. Natural (1928) 93 C.A. 601, 608, 269 P. 972; People v. Lang Trans. Corp. (1941) 43 C.A.2d 134, 141, 110 P.2d 464; Fibreboard Paper Products Corp. v. East Bay Union of Machinists, Local 1304, United Steelworkers of America, AFL-CIO (1964) 227 C.A.2d 675, 712, 39 C.R. 64; People v. Harris (1978) 85 C.A.3d 954, 957, 149 C.R. 860; 1 McCormick 5th, §52; 1 Wigmore (Tillers Rev.) §18, p. 834.)

(3) If, under the doctrine of limited admissibility (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §30) the evidence is admissible for some purpose or against some party, the issue or against which party the evidence is inadmissible. (See 1 McCormick 5th, §52; infra, §382 [request for limiting instruction].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Ground that is being urged: See 1 McCormick 6th, §52.

(2) Particular item objected to: See In re Joy M. (2002) 99 C.A.4th 11, 21, 120 C.R.2d 714 [in dependency proceeding in which reunification services for father were denied, even assuming argument of counsel for father could be construed as evidentiary objection, it failed to satisfy Ev.C. 353: it was untimely, and, although it indicated belief that psychologist who had written evaluation report was unqualified, it did not specifically indicate that report should be excluded]; 1 McCormick 6th, §52.

XII. OBJECTIONS TO INADMISSIBLE EVIDENCE

A. Requirement of Proper Objection.

5. Specific Objection.

b. Defective Specific Objections.

1. Objection on Wrong Ground.

aa. Civil Cases.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 378

[§ 378] Civil Cases.

It is often said that an objection that specifies the wrong ground is as bad as an insufficient general objection; i.e., urging of the one ground is a waiver of any others. (See Estate of Huston (1912) 163 C. 166, 173, 124 P. 852 [point that testimony privileged; objection was only to form of question, and to knowledge of doctor as to condition of person]; Griffin v. Jacobsen (1936) 17 C.A.2d 68, 71, 61 P.2d 350; Kirkpatrick v. Tapo Oil Co. (1956) 144 C.A.2d 404, 410, 301 P.2d 274; Bank of America v. Taliaferro (1956) 144 C.A.2d 578, 582, 301 P.2d 393, supra, §147; Frampton v. Hartzell (1960) 179 C.A.2d 771, 776, 4 C.R. 427, quoting the text; Miller v. Anson-Smith Const. Co. (1960) 185 C.A.2d 161, 167, 8 C.R. 131, citing the text.)

Thus, in Kirkpatrick v. Tapo Oil Co., supra, an ancient document was offered without a proper foundation (showing that it had been generally acted on as genuine, explaining custody; 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §293). The objection was: irrelevant, incompetent and immaterial, and hearsay. Held, this was insufficient; ancient documents come in under an exception to the hearsay rule, and the curable defect of lack of foundation was waived by failure to raise it. (144 C.A.2d 410.)

Similarly, in Griffin v. Jacobsen, supra, an admission by defendant J was competent against defendant J but not against defendant H. Held, the objection, "hearsay and not the best of evidence," did not properly raise the point of limited admissibility. (17 C.A.2d 71.) (See also Kinney v. Contra Costa (1970) 8 C.A.3d 761, 771, 87 C.R. 638, citing the text [false arrest and imprisonment suit; plaintiff's objections to jail supervisor's testimony were improperly based on lack of foundation and inquiry on ultimate fact; objection might have been proper on grounds of immateriality or irrelevancy].)

A. Requirement of Proper Objection.

5. Specific Objection.

b. Defective Specific Objections.

1. Objection on Wrong Ground.

bb. Criminal Cases.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 379

[§ 379] Criminal Cases.

(1) Waiver. A defective specific objection is a waiver in criminal as well as civil cases. (See, e.g., People v. Modell (1956) 143 C.A.2d 724, 730, 300 P.2d 204, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Demonstrative, Experimental, and Scientific Evidence, §40; People v. Wignall (1932) 125 C.A. 465, 474, 13 P.2d 995; People v. Wright (1938) 26 C.A.2d 197, 207, 79 P.2d 102; People v. Lint (1960) 182 C.A.2d 402, 414, 6 C.R. 95 [objection to evidence of prior offense on relevancy ground (insufficient), held waiver of hearsay objection]; People v. Escollias (1968) 264 C.A.2d 16, 19, 70 C.R. 65, citing the text; People v. Nugent (1971) 18 C.A.3d 911, 917, 96 C.R. 209, citing the text; People v. Lopez (1978) 81 C.A.3d 103, 108, 146 C.R. 165, citing the text; People v. Adams (1988) 198 C.A.3d 10, 17, 243 C.R. 580, citing the text.)

In People v. Gamble (1970) 8 C.A.3d 142, 87 C.R. 333, defendants were charged with perjury for providing false testimony at another person's trial on theft charges. Part of the evidence against them consisted of a reading of testimony that had been given by various witnesses at the theft prosecution. Defendants objected to the reading, but only on the grounds of irrelevancy and immateriality. The objections were overruled. Held, no error. The testimony was obviously relevant and material, and the only defect was incompetency. "A proper objection on either statutory (hearsay) or constitutional (right to confrontation) grounds would have been sufficient to require the production of the proffered witnesses if their testimony was being offered to prove the truth of the contents thereof." (8 C.A.3d 149.) By failing to raise the constitutional issue through proper trial court objections, defendants waived their rights on appeal. (8 C.A.3d 149.)

In People v. Stuller (1970) 10 C.A.3d 582, 89 C.R. 158, a fingerprint expert was asked, "You don't know if anyone put it [a drinking glass] there at some time after you got in the apartment, do you?" He answered, "No, with an explanation. I don't know that they didn't, but I certainly don't believe they did considering the time I was in the kitchen and the living room area." Defense counsel moved to strike the answer on the grounds it was not responsive and was conjectural. Held, no error in denial of motion. "As counsel on appeal concedes, the proper objection would have been that the answer was conclusionary. Inasmuch as defense counsel did not make the proper objection, defendant may not raise the objection on appeal." (10 C.A.3d 599.)

In People v. Castaneda (1975) 52 C.A.3d 334, 125 C.R. 9, defendant made extrajudicial statements to the police. After he testified, the prosecution offered the statements as rebuttal. On appeal, defendant contended that introduction of the statements was misconduct. Held, no error. Defendant failed to object to the introduction of the statements on the specific ground that they were not proper rebuttal or impeachment evidence. "As the order of proof lies within the sound discretion of the trial court . . . , the absence of a specific objection to the rebuttal testimony constitutes a waiver of the right to claim the trial court abused its discretion." (52 C.A.3d 339.)

In People v. Reid (1982) 133 C.A.3d 354, 184 C.R. 186, defendant, charged with robbery, admitted a prior narcotics conviction. At the trial, his counsel, outside the presence of the jury, pointed out that evidence of defendant's prior conviction could not be introduced, and argued that any reference to defendant's being on parole for the narcotics offense should also be excluded as not relevant and "excessively prejudicial." Held, this was not a sufficient objection to evidence of the use of narcotics. (a) A relevancy objection to proffered evidence is normally not construed as a request that the judge exercise discretion under Ev.C. 352 to exclude relevant evidence. (133 C.A.3d 360.) (b) Here, the judge reasonably understood the prejudice objection as referring only to evidence of parolee status; and, because the other crimes objection referred only to relevancy, it was a waiver of the ground that the prejudicial effect of the evidence outweighed its probative value. (133 C.A.3d 361.)

(2) No Waiver. Where the error in admission is too serious to be cured or waived, e.g., use of a coerced confession or unduly prejudicial matter, the point may be raised on appeal regardless of the nature of the objection or even total failure to object. (See infra, §397.) And in any case involving a serious crime, and particularly a capital case, the requirement of a proper objection may be greatly relaxed.

Thus, in People v. Bob (1946) 29 C.2d 321, 175 P.2d 12, two persons had committed a crime. In the trial of one, an accusatory statement of the other, part of which the defendant had denied, was offered in evidence. Defendant's counsel made a wordy objection to the effect that the accuser ought to be produced and brought to testify before the jury, and that the statement was "secondary evidence." Held, this was sufficient to raise the objection of the hearsay rule, though the term "hearsay" was not used; and, despite the failure to call the court's attention to the particular part of the statement which was inadmissible, it was the court's duty to exclude that part. The extreme liberality of this holding is made clear by the dissenting opinion: Nearly all of the statement was admissible because the accusations were not denied, and no objection was made on the ground that a particular portion of the generally admissible statement was inadmissible, nor did the defendant move to strike or seek a limiting instruction. (29 C.2d 325.) (See People v. Frank (1985) 38 C.3d 711, 736, 737, 214 C.R. 801, 700 P.2d 415 [concurring opinion discussing People v. Bob and quoting the text].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Waiver. See People v. Demetrulias (2006) 39 C.4th 1, 21, 45 C.R.3d 407, 137 P.3d 229 [in capital murder prosecution, defendant waived character evidence objection to admission of evidence of peaceful nature of his two victims by failing to object on that ground; his relevance objection was not sufficient to preserve character evidence claim, and, although his later objection impliedly raised character issue, it was untimely]; Levin v. Ligon (2006) 140 C.A.4th 1456, 1464, 45 C.R.3d 560 [in action by husband against former wife for civil partition of financial assets, husband's challenge, on ground of lack of authenticity, to admission of documents from English court proceeding was waived for purposes of appeal; in his opposition to summary judgment motion, he objected only on basis that documents were records of foreign court, inadmissible hearsay, and irrelevant, and at summary judgment hearing he conceded that documents' authenticity was not being challenged].

A. Requirement of Proper Objection.

5. Specific Objection.

b. Defective Specific Objections.

2. Objection of No Foundation Laid.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 380

[§ 380] Objection of No Foundation Laid.

A vague challenge such as "hearsay" will not raise the specific objection of lack of proper foundation. (See supra, §378.) It does not necessarily follow that the bare statement, "no proper foundation laid," or "the proper foundation has not been laid," is specific and sufficient to raise any failure to establish the conditions for admissibility of evidence conditionally admissible. The various foundation requirements are so dissimilar that such statements are, in some instances, no more informative than the general objection. (See, e.g., People v. Modell (1956) 143 C.A.2d 724, 729, 300 P.2d 204, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Demonstrative, Experimental, and Scientific Evidence, §40.)

But the cases on objections to expert evidence appear to make a distinction between qualifications of the expert and the form of the question:

In Lemley v. Doak Gas Engine Co. (1919) 40 C.A. 146, 151, 180 P. 671, defendant's employee, a machinist, testified to the facts of an accident, and then was asked to state his opinion as to the cause of the breaking of a flywheel. The objection was general, and also "that the proper foundation has not been laid." The Court of Appeal thought that this did not raise the matter of his qualifications as an expert. (40 C.A. 152.) But the Supreme Court, on denial of hearing, disapproved this part of the opinion, and declared that the above objection "fairly presented the question of the sufficiency of the evidence as to the expert qualifications of the witness." (40 C.A. 155.) (See also, following the Supreme Court's view, Taylor v. Fishbaugh (1938) 26 C.A.2d 300, 303, 79 P.2d 174.)

In Parlier Fruit Co. v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. (1957) 151 C.A.2d 6, 311 P.2d 62, defendants objected to a hypothetical question on the ground of no foundation laid. Held, this did not raise the point that the question omitted material facts essential to a fair opinion; any such omitted facts should have been pointed out in the objection. (151 C.A.2d 15.)

The Evidence Code introduced new terminology. The foundation is laid by proof of "preliminary facts" to make admissible the "proffered evidence." (Ev.C. 400, 401, supra, §49.) Presumably, the objection may now be that the "proffered evidence" is inadmissible because there has been no proof of a necessary "preliminary fact," specifying that fact. On the other hand, there is nothing in the Code to suggest that use of the old "foundation" language will not do just as well, provided that the particular matter lacking (the preliminary fact) is specified. (See C.E.B., California Trial Objections 6th, §21.20.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XII. OBJECTIONS TO INADMISSIBLE EVIDENCE

A. Requirement of Proper Objection.

6. Objection to Line of Questions.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 381

[§ 381] Objection to Line of Questions.

Where a good objection is made to a particular question and is overruled by the court, it need not be renewed if the same question is asked again. (Balcom v. Growers Warehouse Co. (1921) 55 C.A. 474, 482, 204 P. 39; Ev.C. 353, Comment; cf. Douglas v. Alabama (1965) 380 U.S. 415, 85 S.Ct. 1074, 1078, 13 L.Ed.2d 934 [repetitious futile objections to confession not required to safeguard review in United States Supreme Court]; C.E.B., 2 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §15.39; C.E.B., California Trial Objections 6th, §4.10.)

The practical problem is more difficult, however, where the objection is applicable to a further line of questions directed to the same or a different witness. It is time-wasting and a source of irritation for counsel to repeat mechanically the stated grounds in detail or even in abbreviated form ("the same objection"). It would seem reasonable to assume that the ruling would be the same and that further objection would therefore be futile. Thus, in Green v. Southern Pac. Co. (1898) 122 C. 563, 55 P. 577, objection to the testimony of one witness was overruled, and later another witness testified to substantially the same matter, without objection. The court said: "Where a party has once formally taken exception to a certain line or character of evidence, he is not required to renew the objection at each recurrence thereafter of the objectionable matter arising at each examination of other witnesses; and his silence will not debar him from having the exception reviewed." (122 C. 565.) (See also People v. Antick (1975) 15 C.3d 79, 95, 123 C.R. 475, 539 P.2d 43, citing the text [once issue of admissibility of uncharged burglary evidence was resolved against defendant in hearing out of jury's presence, defense counsel was not required to repeat objection when burglary victim actually testified and items of property were admitted in evidence]; People v. Driggs (1909) 12 C.A. 240, 243, 108 P. 62; 1 McCormick 5th, §52; 1 Wigmore (Tillers Rev.) §18, p. 815; Ev.C. 353, Comment.)

Similarly, in Sharon v. Sharon (1889) 79 C. 633, 22 P. 26, 131, objection was made to an improper question, and the court in response to the objection stated just what might be asked. The improper questioning then continued as authorized by the court. Held, it was not necessary for defendant to renew his objections. (79 C. 674.)

But in W. C. Cook & Co. v. White Truck & Transfer Co. (1932) 124 C.A. 721, 13 P.2d 549, the original objection, on a single point involving damages, was overruled, and thereafter the witness without direction or authorization by the court testified at length as to various elements of damages, without objection. Held, the original objection did not go to the subsequent questions. (124 C.A. 729.)

In order to avoid any possibility of waiver, counsel often seek a stipulation from opposing counsel and a statement of the court to the effect that the same objection and same ruling will be deemed made to the entire line of testimony. (See 1 McCormick 5th, §52; C.E.B., 2 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §15.39; C.E.B., California Trial Objections 6th,

§4.11.)

XII. OBJECTIONS TO INADMISSIBLE EVIDENCE

B. Other Requirements.

1. Request for Limiting Instruction.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 382

[§ 382] Request for Limiting Instruction.

(1) Request by Counsel. Under the doctrine of "limited admissibility" (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §30), certain evidence may be admissible for one purpose or against one party and inadmissible for another purpose or against another party. Because it cannot be excluded, an objection to its admissibility will be futile. Counsel is entitled only to an instruction to the jury, informing them of the limited purpose for which the evidence may be considered, and the fact that it went in without limitation is unappealable unless the instruction was requested. (See People v. Findley (1901) 132 C. 301, 306, 64 P. 472; Liebrandt v. Sorg (1901) 133 C. 571, 573, 65 P. 1098; Hatfield v. Levy Bros. (1941) 18 C.2d 798, 810, 117 P.2d 841; Daggett v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1957) 48 C.2d 655, 665, 313 P.2d 557, supra, §239; People v. White (1958) 50 C.2d 428, 430, 325 P.2d 985; People v. Nudd (1974) 12 C.3d 204, 209, 115 C.R. 372, 524 P.2d 844; Barsha v. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer (1939) 32 C.A.2d 556, 562, 90 P.2d 371 [hearsay offered for impeachment purposes]; Rupp v. Summerfield (1958) 161 C.A.2d 657, 662, 326 P.2d 912; People v. Hawkins (1960) 177 C.A.2d 714, 718, 2 C.R. 524, citing the text; Stathos v. Lemich (1963) 213 C.A.2d 52, 57, 28 C.R. 462; People v. Wyatt (1989) 215 C.A.3d 255, 258, 263 C.R. 556; 1 McCormick 5th, §59; 1 Wigmore (Tillers Rev.) §13; C.E.B., 2 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §15.61 et seq.; C.E.B., California Trial Objections 6th, §§2.4, 20.9, 32.8.)

(2) Instruction Without Request. Even without a request, the trial court should instruct the jury that evidence of other crimes is admissible only for a limited purpose, should explain that limitation, and should caution against a misuse of that evidence. (See People v. Williams (1970) 11 C.A.3d 970, 978, 90 C.R. 292 [failure of trial court to give limiting instruction was harmless]; CALJIC (6th ed.), No. 2.50.)

In People v. Hughes (1975) 50 C.A.3d 749, 123 C.R. 767, the court recognized that there is authority requiring a judge to give a limiting instruction even without request to admonish the jury about using evidence of defendant's prior felony convictions only for impeachment purposes. "However, no case holds that such an instruction must be given immediately after a defendant admits prior convictions. In the instant case, at the close of trial, the jury was adequately apprised of the limited purpose for which the evidence of the prior felony convictions could be considered." (50 C.A.3d 754.)

(3) Protection Beyond Requested Instruction. In some situations, a limiting instruction may not be a sufficient protection. The party is entitled to the protection that is reasonable under the circumstances, a matter that is largely within the trial court's discretion. In Adkins v. Brett (1920) 184 C. 252, 193 P. 251, the court said: "If the point to prove which the evidence is competent can just as well be proven by other evidence, or if the evidence is of but slight weight or importance upon that point, the trial judge might well be justified in excluding it entirely, because of its prejudicial and dangerous character as to other points. ... This would emphatically be true where there is good reason for believing that the real object for which the evidence is offered is not to prove the point for which it is ostensibly offered and is competent, but is to get before the jury declarations as to other points, to prove which the evidence is incompetent. The same thing would be true as to the introduction of repeated declarations, when once the point for which they are competent has been amply shown. ... The point of the matter is that the opponent of such evidence, so likely to be misused against him, is entitled to such protection against its misuse as can reasonably be given him without impairing the ability of the other party to prove his case, or depriving him of the use of competent evidence reasonably necessary for that purpose." (184 C. 258.)

a. Nature of Requirement and Form of Motion.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 383

[§ 383] Nature of Requirement and Form of Motion.

Sometimes an objection is not practicable or not sufficient, and a motion to strike may be the correct means of raising the point of inadmissibility of the evidence. (See infra, §385; for instruction on evidence stricken out, see BAJI (8th ed.), No. 1.02.)

But wherever a motion to strike is required or is proper, it is subject to the same rule of form as an objection, namely, it must point to the specific ground of the objection, and the particular portion of the evidence deemed objectionable. (Ev.C. 353(a); see Lucy v. Davis (1912) 163 C. 611, 615, 126 P. 490 ["A motion to be available must be directed with precision to the testimony which the moving party desires the court to eliminate"]; Rose v. State (1942) 19 C.2d 713, 742, 123 P.2d 505 [motion to strike all of witness' testimony was properly denied where some was admissible]; Toomes v. Nunes (1938) 24 C.A.2d 395, 397, 75 P.2d 94 [motion to strike answer referring to insurance of defendant on ground that it was "improper"; held ineffectual]; Bates v. Newman (1953) 121 C.A.2d 800, 804, 264 P.2d 197 [answer in part nonresponsive, motion to strike entire answer was properly denied]; People v. Loop (1954) 127 C.A.2d 786, 800, 274 P.2d 885 [motion directed at voluminous testimony of condemnation experts for property owner; held error to grant where reviewing court was unable to determine what part was stricken and what remained]; *People v. ##### 2. Motion To Strike.

b. Bad Question: Motion Insufficient and Unnecessary.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 384

[§ 384] Bad Question: Motion Insufficient and Unnecessary.

A party must ordinarily object to the question. The party cannot wait, speculating on the chance of a favorable answer, and then move to strike after he or she discovers that the answer is unfavorable. Hence, if there is an opportunity to object, i.e., where it is apparent on the face of the question that the answer will necessarily contain inadmissible matter, an objection is necessary and a motion to strike is not sufficient. (People v. Scalamiero (1904) 143 C. 343, 345, 76 P. 1098; Loeb v. Kimmerle (1932) 215 C. 143, 154, 9 P.2d 199; People v. Serleto (1943) 61 C.A.2d 672, 692, 143 P.2d 956; 1 McCormick 5th, §52; 1 Wigmore (Tillers Rev.) §18, p. 796; C.E.B., 2 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §15.36; C.E.B., California Trial Objections 6th, §4.16.)

The converse of the above proposition is also true: If a proper objection to the question is made and overruled, it is unnecessary to move to strike the answer. (Short v. Frink (1907) 151 C. 83, 87, 90 P. 200; Balcom v. Growers Warehouse Co. (1921) 55 C.A. 474, 482, 204 P. 39; Dolton v. Green (1945) 72 C.A.2d 427, 440, 164 P.2d 795; People v. Robinson (1958) 166 C.A.2d 416, 423, 333 P.2d 120 [counsel, from abundance of caution, advised court that he would not object again and trial judge approved].)

XII. OBJECTIONS TO INADMISSIBLE EVIDENCE

B. Other Requirements.

2. Motion To Strike.

c. Bad Answer: Motion Necessary.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 385

[§ 385] Bad Answer: Motion Necessary.

If the question is not bad on its face, i.e., it is not apparent that it calls for inadmissible evidence, there is ordinarily no reason to object. It is only when the improper answer is given that the adverse party has cause for complaint. In this situation, the motion to strike the answer is sufficient and is necessary, and a prior objection is unnecessary and insufficient. So a party who fails to make the motion cannot raise the point of inadmissibility on appeal. (People v. Lawrence (1904) 143 C. 148, 156, 76 P. 893; Short v. Frink (1907) 151 C. 83, 88, 90 P. 200; De Bock v. De Bock (1919) 43 C.A. 283, 298, 184 P. 890; Ballos v. Natural (1928) 93 C.A. 601, 608, 269 P. 972; People v. Glass (1954) 127 C.A.2d 751, 753, 274 P.2d 430; People v. Gilbert (1992) 5 C.A.4th 1372, 1386, 7 C.R.2d 660, citing the text; 1 McCormick 5th, §52; 1 Wigmore (Tillers Rev.) §18, pp. 800, 817; C.E.B., 2 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §15.44; C.E.B., California Trial Objections 6th, §51.3 et seq.)

Thus, in De Bock v. De Bock, supra, counsel asked plaintiff, "did you have a conversation with your husband at that time," and "what was it?" During the course of her answer she injected inadmissible matter. Opposing counsel at one point interrupted her answer to object, but did not move to strike. Held, the question itself was proper, and an objection to it would have been correctly overruled. Hence, a motion to strike the inadmissible matter was necessary, and the failure to make it was a waiver of the error. (43 C.A. 298.)

In Johnston v. Beadle (1907) 6 C.A. 251, 91 P. 1011, a personal injury case, the issue involved loss of time and earnings of plaintiff, a dressmaker. The court refused to permit her to answer the question, "Are you a woman of means?" Her counsel then asked her to "state the means by which you have supported yourself." She answered, "I have no other means or resources." Defendant's motion to strike out this reference to her poverty was denied. Held, no prior objection was necessary because it did not appear that counsel was attempting to obtain this improper answer. "It was only when the answer had been given that it could be known that it was immaterial and in violation of the previous ruling of the court." (6 C.A. 254.)

Occasionally, though the question is objectionable on its face, the witness answers before counsel has a chance to object. A prompt motion to strike will then suffice. (See 1 McCormick 5th, §52; C.E.B., 2 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §15.44; C.E.B., California Trial Objections 6th, §51.4; cf. Wysock v. Borchers Bros. (1951) 104 C.A.2d 571, 581, 232 P.2d 531 [slight delay; implied finding that delay occurred under circumstances that negated waiver].)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XII. OBJECTIONS TO INADMISSIBLE EVIDENCE

B. Other Requirements.

3. Assignment of Misconduct.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 386

[§ 386] Assignment of Misconduct.

(1) General Practice. Where the evidence is not merely irrelevant, immaterial or incompetent under some technical exclusionary rule, but is subject to the objection of undue prejudice (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §132 et seq.), a special remedy is provided. If counsel in a civil case by a statement or question brings out facts regarding the defendant's insurance or wealth, the defendant's offer to compromise, or the plaintiff's poverty, a bare motion to strike is of little value. The same is true where the prosecutor in a criminal case brings out inadmissible collateral matters affecting character or otherwise prejudicing the defendant before the jury. It is necessary that the jury be promptly and clearly informed of the impropriety of considering these matters. Accordingly, the practice is to "assign" the statement or question as misconduct and ask that the jury be instructed to disregard it. (See C.E.B., California Trial Objections 6th, §29.10 et seq.; 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §223 et seq.; 6 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Reversible Error, §38 et seq.)

(2) Civil Cases. The following rules govern the practice in civil cases:

(a) If the adverse party makes the assignment and the court instructs, the error will normally be "cured" by the instruction, and will not be a ground for reversal on appeal. (See Baroni v. Rosenberg (1930) 209 C. 4, 6, 284 P. 1111; McCullough v. Langer (1937) 23 C.A.2d 510, 522, 73 P.2d 649; Ades v. Brush (1944) 66 C.A.2d 436, 445, 152 P.2d 519; Jonte v. Key System (1949) 89 C.A.2d 654, 659, 201 P.2d 562.) But if the improper matter is deemed too seriously prejudicial to be cured by an instruction (particularly where it is intentionally and deliberately introduced), it may be held reversible error on appeal. (Gee v. Fong Poy (1928) 88 C.A. 627, 638, 264 P. 564; Deibler v. Wright (1931) 119 C.A. 277, 283, 6 P.2d 344; Stevenson v. Link (1954) 128 C.A.2d 564, 574, 275 P.2d 782.)

(b) If the adverse party fails to make the assignment, the error will normally be waived and will not be a ground for reversal. (See Aydrott v. Key System Transit Co. (1930) 104 C.A. 621, 628, 286 P. 456; Wills v. J. J. Newberry Co. (1941) 43 C.A.2d 595, 607, 111 P.2d 346; Cain v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. (1975) 47 C.A.3d 783, 800, 121 C.R. 200.) But if the misconduct is deemed too serious to be cured, the failure to seek the cure will not preclude the aggrieved party from obtaining a reversal. (Dastagir v. Dastagir (1952) 109 C.A.2d 809, 816, 241 P.2d 656.)

(3) Criminal Cases. The requirement also applies in criminal cases; i.e., the normal remedy is to assign the prosecutor's statement or question, or the answer of a witness, as misconduct and ask for an admonition and instruction. But intentional introduction of prejudicial matter is more likely to be deemed "incurable" and reversible error in a criminal than in a civil case. (See People v. Evans (1952) 39 C.2d 242, 248, 246 P.2d 636; People v. Chojnacky (1973) 8 C.3d 759, 765, 106 C.R. 106, 505 P.2d 530; People v. Hill (1998) 17 C.4th 800, 820, 72 C.R.2d 656, 952 P.2d 673)

[reversible error despite lack of request for assignment; additional objections by defense counsel would have been futile and counterproductive to defendant]; People v. Simon (1927) 80 C.A. 675, 678, 252 P. 758; People v. Brophy (1954) 122 C.A.2d 638, 652, 265 P.2d 593; People v. Arends (1957) 155 C.A.2d 496, 506, 318 P.2d 532; People v. Cabrellis (1967) 251 C.A.2d 681, 688, 59 C.R. 795, citing the text; 6 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Reversible Error, §40.)

Thus, in People v. Arends, supra, a grand theft prosecution, a deputy district attorney was called by the prosecution to testify to defendant's offer to plead guilty (then held admissible). On cross-examination and on redirect, the deputy declared that he had studied the case, was convinced of defendant's guilt, and that his office would dismiss a case unless convinced of guilt. Held, the deliberate introduction of this inadmissible personal opinion of guilt was reversible error, despite the fact that (a) it was first brought out by questions asked by defendant's own counsel, and (b) defendant made no objection, motion to strike, or request for instruction. (155 C.A.2d 506.)

XII. OBJECTIONS TO INADMISSIBLE EVIDENCE

C. Effect of Court's Failure To Rule.

1. Objection.

a. Ruling Expressly Reserved.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 387

[§ 387] Ruling Expressly Reserved.

(1) Procedure Discouraged. Sometimes the court does not rule on an objection, but admits the evidence provisionally, "reserving" its ruling. This cautious procedure has been frequently criticized as unfair to counsel, and it has the serious disadvantage of permitting the jury to hear the inadmissible matter. In some cases, the practice "may work substantial injustice to a litigant. In any case where it can be shown that such a result follows, the error is of sufficient gravity to call for a reversal." (Stanwood v. Carson (1915) 169 C. 640, 644, 147 P. 562; Piercy v. De Fillipes (1963) 215 C.A.2d 284, 289, 30 C.R. 62, citing the text; Estate of Horman (1968) 265 C.A.2d 796, 806, 71 C.R. 780 [judge did not rule in time to permit appellants to seek continuance to get needed evidence; reversible error]; People v. Bowen (1971) 22 C.A.3d 267, 291, 99 C.R. 498; cf. People v. Vuksanovich (1982) 136 C.A.3d 65, 74, 185 C.R. 842 [citing Bowen; magistrate properly reserved rulings on defendant's objections to admission of approximately 150 exhibits of documents until end of preliminary hearing]; see C.E.B., 2 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §15.66; C.E.B., California Trial Objections 6th, §4.20.)

In People v. Bowen, supra, the prosecution proposed to introduce bloodstained clothing that the victim allegedly wore when she was stabbed to death. Defendant asked the trial judge to view the exhibits for a ruling on prejudice under Ev.C. 352, but the judge denied a hearing and instructed the prosecutor to proceed. When the defendant objected that the clothing was so bloodstained as to be prejudicial, the judge withheld a ruling until the prosecutor offered the items in evidence and then overruled the objection. The appellate court criticized this improper procedure in the following language:

"The trial judge's observation--'that is the way all evidence comes into Court. It is marked for Identification right before the jury'--displays an inept understanding of exclusionary rules. If a question is raised as to the relevancy, competency or prejudicial effect of an item of evidence which is prejudicial in nature, it is absurd to exhibit it to the jury before the question of its admissibility is resolved. In many instances, where there is merely delay in laying a full foundation, no prejudice can result, but at least the exhibition of the article should be prefaced with an offer of proof of the facts which will authorize its admission." (22 C.A.3d 292.)

This procedure should, therefore, be resorted to only in cases of great necessity, and a ruling should be made before the trial is concluded, so that the party objecting may have the opportunity to present rebutting evidence in the event the objection is overruled. (See Clopton v. Clopton (1912) 162 C. 27, 32, 121 P. 720; DeTray v. Higgins (1939) 31 C.A.2d 482, 487, 88 P.2d 241; 1 McCormick 5th, §§58, 60; 1 Wigmore (Tillers Rev.) §19.)

(2) Appeal of Reserved Ruling. Where the court reserves its ruling, but does not decide the point, the failure to rule formally is an implied ruling against the objection and in favor of admissibility. Hence, the point may be raised on appeal without a motion to strike. (See Clopton v. Clopton, supra; Raymond v. Glover (1898) 122 C. 471, 476, 55 P. 398; Stanwood v. Carson, supra; Harris v. Reingold (1929) 98 C.A. 709, 711, 277 P. 750; cf. DeTray v. Higgins, supra, 31 C.A.2d 489.)

In Harris v. Reingold, supra, plaintiff sued on a promissory note. Defendant pleaded lack of consideration and generally denied the indebtedness. At the trial, defendant offered evidence of an accord and satisfaction, to which plaintiff objected as outside the issues. The judge said: "I will hear the testimony and strike it out in the event it is not admissible." No motion to strike was made, and the judge never ruled. In reversing judgment for defendant, the court said: "We must assume that he (plaintiff) came into court prepared to try the case upon the issues which had been framed and unprepared to try any other or different issues." (98 C.A. 713.)

XII. OBJECTIONS TO INADMISSIBLE EVIDENCE

C. Effect of Court's Failure To Rule.

1. Objection.

b. Admission Subject to Motion To Strike.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 388

[§ 388] Admission Subject to Motion To Strike.

A similar problem arises where the court, in doubt as to the propriety of a question, instead of sustaining or overruling the objection, or expressly reserving its ruling, admits the evidence subject to a motion to strike in the event that it later appears that the evidence is inadmissible. This practice may involve the same unfairness as the practice of reserving the ruling (supra, §387), but it is within the court's power, and a motion to strike is essential. Failure to make the motion results in a waiver of the right to object on appeal.

In Tarpey v. Veith (1913) 22 C.A. 289, 134 P. 367, the court criticized "the lower court's cautious but far from commendable method of repeatedly ruling against the objections of the defendant, with the privilege of moving to strike out later." But the opinion added: "While such method of conducting a trial is ordinarily more conducive to confusion than to a correct conclusion as to the merits of the points presented by an objection, nevertheless it cannot be said that the method pursued in the present case was tantamount to a refusal to rule at all upon the objections as they were made. ... [I]t was the duty of the defendant to avail himself of the privilege of moving to strike out, and failing in this it will be presumed that ultimately he was satisfied with the rulings as originally made." (22 C.A. 294, 295.) (See also Estate of Wempe (1921) 185 C. 557, 564, 197 P. 949; Conte v. Busby (1931) 115 C.A. 732, 735, 2 P.2d 458; Schwartz v. Shapiro (1964) 229 C.A.2d 238, 247, 40 C.R. 189, infra, §389, dictum citing the text; 1 McCormick 5th, §58; 1 Wigmore (Tillers Rev.) §§14, 19, p. 847; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourne Rev.) §1871; 88 A.L.R.2d 12 [renewal of objection to, or offer of, evidence admitted or excluded conditionally].)

In Ault v. International Harvester Co. (1974) 13 C.3d 113, 117 C.R. 812, 528 P.2d 1148, defendant did not make a motion to strike a hearsay expert opinion but moved instead for a mistrial after plaintiff had rested his case. Defendant asserted that it deliberately failed to make the motion because the evidence was too prejudicial to be corrected and an admonition to the jury would have served only to recall the testimony to the jury's mind. Held, the contention lacks merit. (a) The trial judge overlooked plaintiff's earlier promise to lay a foundation for the hearsay opinion; a motion to strike would have reminded plaintiff of his failure to elicit direct testimony about that opinion so that plaintiff would have had the opportunity to supply the necessary foundational testimony. Instead, defendant delayed until plaintiff rested his case and then belatedly moved for a mistrial. (b) The opinion was not so prejudicial that an admonition to the jury would have been without effect. (13 C.3d 123.) (See also People v. Lang (1989) 49 C.3d 991, 1020, 264 C.R. 386, 782 P.2d 627, citing Ault.)

C. Effect of Court's Failure To Rule.

1. Objection.

c. Ruling Neglected.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 389

[§ 389] Ruling Neglected.

Another variation of this problem is presented where the court, through inadvertence or neglect, neither rules nor reserves its ruling. In such a case, the party who objected must make some effort to have the court actually rule. If the point is not pressed and is forgotten, the party may be deemed to have waived or abandoned it, just as if he or she had failed to make the objection in the first place. (See Goodale v. Thorn (1926) 199 C. 307, 315, 249 P. 11 [after objection and discussion, court said "proceed," and counsel abandoned further examination on point without making certain of meaning of court's ruling, i.e., whether to proceed along that line or some other]; Campbell v. Genshlea (1919) 180 C. 213, 220, 180 P. 336; People v. Staver (1953) 115 C.A.2d 711, 724, 252 P.2d 700; Fibreboard Paper Products Corp. v. East Bay Union of Machinists, Local 1304, United Steelworkers of America, AFL-CIO (1964) 227 C.A.2d 675, 698, 39 C.R. 64, citing the text [contract offered, defendants objected that it was not binding on them, judge suggested laying of foundation, offer later renewed without objection]; Waller v. Waller (1970) 3 C.A.3d 456, 464, 83 C.R. 533, citing the text; People v. Obie (1974) 41 C.A.3d 744, 750, 116 C.R. 283, quoting the text; Haskell v. Carli (1987) 195 C.A.3d 124, 129, 240 C.R. 439, citing the text; People v. Rhodes (1989) 212 C.A.3d 541, 554, 261 C.R. 1, quoting the text; People v. Heldenburg (1990) 219 C.A.3d 468, 475, 268 C.R. 255, quoting the text [trial judge agreed to admonish jury to disregard prosecutor's improper question but forgot to do so, and defense counsel failed to remind him]; C.E.B., 2 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §15.67; C.E.B., California Trial Objections 6th, §4.20.)

On a somewhat related problem, the court, in People v. Ranney (1931) 213 C. 70, 1 P.2d 423, disapproved the practice of counsel securing an advance ruling on the propriety of questions by stating the purpose of the question, adding: "The better practice is to ask the direct question and thus secure a direct ruling on it. The rulings of the trial court should not be made in colloquies between itself and counsel as to how it would rule if the specific question were propounded. The trial court should refuse thus to rule in advance as to whether a specific question would be proper, if asked, and counsel should not be satisfied with anything less than a direct ruling on the question." (213 C. 74.)

But the objection may be saved without an actual ruling. In Schwartz v. Shapiro (1964) 229 C.A.2d 238, 40 C.R. 189, defendants' counsel, at the conclusion of the trial, stated that they were reserving "all of our rights," and the trial judge responded that "[y]ou have not given up any rights at all." Held, there was no waiver. (229 C.A.2d 247.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(New) Distinction: Objection fruitless: Where written objections have been filed, the objector has twice orally raised the issue of securing a ruling, and the court nevertheless neglects to rule, the waiver rule does not apply. The issues are deemed to be preserved for appellate review on the ground that any further objection would be fruitless or an idle act.

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XII. OBJECTIONS TO INADMISSIBLE EVIDENCE

C. Effect of Court's Failure To Rule.

2. Motion To Strike.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 390

[§ 390] Motion To Strike.

If a motion to strike is made, and the court fails to rule on it due to confusion or inadvertence, the error will generally be considered waived.

Thus, in Bennett v. Hoge (1930) 108 C.A. 180, 291 P. 444, plaintiff assignee sued for the reasonable value of dental work. The only evidence of satisfactory work came from testimony of the dentist himself in a nonresponsive answer. Defendant's counsel moved to strike out the answer, but after a colloquy said, "I will repeat the question." He never stated the grounds of his motion and never renewed it. Held, the evidence was properly in the case, for counsel's actions would lead the trial judge and plaintiff's counsel to believe that the objection was withdrawn. (108 C.A. 183.) (See also D'Avanzo v. Manno (1936) 16 C.A.2d 346, 348, 60 P.2d 524; Dimond v. Caterpillar Tractor Co. (1976) 65 C.A.3d 173, 180, 134 C.R. 895; C.E.B., California Trial Objections 6th, §52.14.)

In People v. Curtis (1965) 232 C.A.2d 859, 867, 43 C.R. 286, the court saw no prejudice in the trial judge's failure to grant a motion to strike a nonresponsive answer, where the judge instructed the jury to disregard the statement; i.e., the instruction was held the equivalent of a ruling.

[§ 391] Motion in Limine.

In People v. Morris (1991) 53 C.3d 152, 279 C.R. 720, 807 P.2d 949, a murder case, defendant moved in limine to exclude the testimony of a jailhouse informant. The trial judge held a pretrial hearing on the motion, but made no ruling. Defendant did not request a ruling or object when the informant's testimony was offered at trial. Held, defendant had waived any claim of error in the introduction of the testimony. He was obligated to press for a ruling on his motion, and to object to the informant's testimony until he obtained one. (53 C.3d 195.) ## CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XII. OBJECTIONS TO INADMISSIBLE EVIDENCE

D. Exclusion on Court's Own Motion.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 392

[§ 392] Exclusion on Court's Own Motion.

The trial judge may prevent improper questions or exclude inadmissible matter on the judge's own motion without any objection by counsel, and the same is true where counsel does object but the objection is insufficient. (Davey v. Southern Pac. Co. (1897) 116 C. 325, 330, 48 P. 117; Kimic v. San Jose-Los Gatos Interurban Ry. Co. (1909) 156 C. 379, 390, 104 P. 986; People v. White (1954) 43 C.2d 740, 747, 278 P.2d 9 [argumentative questions]; People v. Clark (1992) 3 C.4th 41, 10 C.R.2d 554, 833 P.2d 561, citing People v. White; Laugharn v. Chamberlain (1934) 139 C.A. 601, 603, 34 P.2d 756; People v. Williams (1936) 17 C.A.2d 122, 125, 61 P.2d 813; People v. Neustice (1972) 24 C.A.3d 178, 190, 100 C.R. 783.) It has been suggested that this power should be exercised only where the evidence is irrelevant, unreliable, misleading or prejudicial, and that relevant and useful evidence that is merely incompetent under technical exclusionary rules ought to be received in the absence of objection by counsel. (See 1 McCormick 5th, §55.)

The power may sometimes become a duty in a criminal case, i.e., where highly prejudicial matters are offered, the judge probably should act to protect the defendant's right to a fair trial. (See People v. Arends (1957) 155 C.A.2d 496, 508, 318 P.2d 532, supra, §386 ["We think the trial judge should have stopped the discourse ... without waiting for an objection or motion to strike"]; 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §547.)

Even though the court acted on an improper ground, the party who offered the evidence has no basis for a claim of error on appeal if the evidence was inadmissible; i.e., the reason for the court's decision is immaterial if the result is correct. (Careaga v. Moore (1925) 70 C.A. 614, 623, 234 P. 121; 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Appeal, §341.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XII. OBJECTIONS TO INADMISSIBLE EVIDENCE E. Use of Evidence Admitted Without Proper Objection. 1. Sufficient To Sustain Judgment. a. General Principle.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 393

[§ 393] General Principle.

Material and relevant evidence that is technically incompetent and inadmissible under the exclusionary rules, if offered and received without a proper objection or motion to strike, will be considered in support of the judgment. This principle is recognized in the Evidence Code's definition of "evidence" (see Ev.C. 140, Comment), and it has been applied to a wide range of evidentiary topics, including hearsay, secondary evidence violating the former best evidence rule, inadmissible opinions, lack of foundation, incompetent, privileged or unqualified witnesses, illegally obtained evidence and even violation of the parol evidence rule. (See infra, §§394, 395; People v. Alexander (1963) 212 C.A.2d 84, 98, 27 C.R. 720, citing the text; People v. Moore (1970) 13 C.A.3d 424, 435, 91 C.R. 538, citing the text; 1 McCormick 5th, §54; for distinctions and exceptions, see infra, §396 et seq.)

The same principle applies to admission of incompetent evidence by express stipulation. (See Noon v. Noon (1948) 84 C.A.2d 374, 381, 191 P.2d 35 [court investigator's report]; Exley v. Exley (1951) 101 C.A.2d 831, 839, 226 P.2d 662 [same: probation officer investigated home conditions of remarried mother, his two letters treated as evidence in case].)

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 395

[§ 395] Other Illustrations.

Other types of inadmissible evidence that may be considered in support of a judgment include the following:

(1) Secondary evidence violating former best evidence rule, now the secondary evidence rule. (See Gille v. Anderson (1917) 34 C.A. 237, 238, 167 P. 193; Crinella v. Northwestern Pac. R. Co. (1927) 85 C.A. 440, 446, 259 P. 774; Sublett v. Henry's Turk & Taylor Lunch (1942) 21 C.2d 273, 275, 131 P.2d 369; Hausen v. Goldman (1954) 124 C.A.2d 25, 30, 267 P.2d 852; Martin v. Evidence (4th), Documentary Evidence, §31 et seq.)

(2) Inadmissible opinions. (See Pfingst v. Goetting (1950) 96 C.A.2d 293, 307, 215 P.2d 93 [but "it may be assumed that the court disregarded it"]; Berry v. Chrome Crankshaft Co. (1958) 159 C.A.2d 549, 552, 324 P.2d 70.)

(3) Documentary or other evidence lacking foundation. (See Fishel v. F. M. Ball & Co. (1927) 83 C.A. 128, 133, 256 P. 493 [market price lists, unidentified and unauthenticated]; *People v. ### E. Use of Evidence Admitted Without Proper Objection.

2. Insufficient Despite Failure To Object.

a. Irrelevant Matter.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 396

[§ 396] Irrelevant Matter.

The definition of "relevant evidence" to include the concept of materiality (Ev.C. 210, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §§3, 4) can be confusing, and the following distinction should be made:

(1) Immaterial evidence may sometimes support a judgment; i.e., relevant evidence may be considered even though it is technically outside the issues made by the pleadings or pretrial order, if the case is tried on the theory that the matter is in issue. (See Gray v. Janss Inv. Co. (1921) 186 C. 634, 641, 200 P. 401; Standley v. Feather River Pine Mills (1952) 112 C.A.2d 101, 104, 245 P.2d 657; 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Appeal, §402; 1 McCormick 5th, §54.)

(2) Irrelevant evidence will not support a judgment; i.e., if it has no tendency to prove a material issue, it makes no difference whether it is excluded or comes in without objection. (See Tahoe Nat. Bank v. Phillips (1971) 4 C.3d 11, 23, 92 C.R. 704, 480 P.2d 320; Kitchel v. Acree (1963) 216 C.A.2d 119, 124, 30 C.R. 714, citing the text; *White v. b. Fundamental Error.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 397

[§ 397] Fundamental Error.

If the inadmissible matter was so seriously prejudicial that an objection would have been ineffective to remedy the harm, failure to object does not preclude assertion of the error on appeal. (See supra, §386 [evidence involving undue prejudice]; 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Appeal, §444; 6 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Reversible Error, §40.)

The same is true where admission of the inadmissible matter in a criminal trial is considered a denial of due process; e.g., involuntary confession, involuntary admission, and evidence obtained by brutality. ## c. Supervening Change in Law.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 398

[§ 398] Supervening Change in Law.

Occasionally, new exclusionary rules, based on constitutional rights, develop in criminal cases. At the time of their announcement by the United States Supreme Court or the California Supreme Court, evidence may have already been admitted in the trial of pending cases which would have been subject to objection if the new and unanticipated rule had been known at the time. In cases in which the judgment of conviction has not become final, the failure to object does not waive the error in admission of the evidence, and the point may be raised on appeal. (See O'Connor v. Ohio (1966) 385 U.S. 92, 87 S.Ct. 252, 253, 17 L.Ed.2d 189, 191 [failure to raise rule set forth in *Griffin v. In People v. Groves (1969) 71 C.2d 1196, 80 C.R. 745, 458 P.2d 985, the court emphasized the distinction between a change in the law and the first opportunity for a state court to apply federal constitutional standards. In holding that defendant could not raise a defective warrant point for the first time on appeal, the court said that a significant warrant decision (People v. Sesslin (1968) 68 C.2d 418, 67 C.R. 409, 439 P.2d 321) "did not change the law. It was merely the first case in which this court was called upon to apply the foregoing decisions of the United States Supreme Court." (71 C.2d 1198.)

E. Use of Evidence Admitted Without Proper Objection.

2. Insufficient Despite Failure To Object.

d. Incompetency of Counsel.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 399

[§ 399] Incompetency of Counsel.

Where the failure to object to significant inadmissible evidence in a criminal trial is due to the inexcusable ignorance or incapacity of the defendant's attorney, the judgment may be reversed for incompetency of counsel. (See People v. Ibarra (1963) 60 C.2d 460, 466, 34 C.R. 863, 386 P.2d 487, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §201; People v. Nation (1980) 26 C.3d 169, 161 C.R. 299, 604 P.2d 1051, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §217 [failure to challenge photographic identification that was so suggestive as to taint and invalidate subsequent live lineup identification]; People v. Williams (1970) 11 C.A.3d 970, 979, 90 C.R. 292, quoting the text [objection not waived but error harmless]; People v. Dorsey (1975) 46 C.A.3d 706, 719, 120 C.R. 508 [failure to assert applicable privilege]; People v. Sundlee (1977) 70 C.A.3d 477, 485, 138 C.R. 834 [failure to object to tape recordings and transcripts of conversations as inadmissible hearsay]; People v. Borba (1980) 110 C.A.3d 989, 994, 168 C.R. 305 [failure to object to incriminating admissions under Miranda]; People v. Rodriguez (1981) 115 C.A.3d 1018, 1021, 171 C.R. 798 [withdrawal of objection to prosecutor's calling of associate defense counsel as witness to propriety of pretrial police live lineup].)

In People v. Coffman (1969) 2 C.A.3d 681, 82 C.R. 782, defense counsel not only failed to object to the introduction of seized evidence but also advised the judge of a precedent that supposedly justified its admissibility. Although the defense of unlawful search and seizure was thus "lost" because of the failure to object, the attorney's conduct was deemed a misinterpretation of the law rather than a tactical choice. Held, conviction reversed because of inadequate representation by counsel. (2 C.A.3d 689.)

Earlier California cases, treating the parol evidence rule as a rule of evidence, held that inadmissible extrinsic evidence admitted without objection could support a judgment. But the modern view that the rule is one of substantive law led to the repudiation of the waived objection rule in Tahoe Nat. Bank v. Phillips (1971) 4 C.3d 11, 23, 92 C.R. 704, 480 P.2d 320. ## CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XIII. EXCLUSION OF ADMISSIBLE EVIDENCE: OFFER OF PROOF

A. Necessity of Offer.

1. Preservation of Issue for Appeal.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 401

[§ 401] Preservation of Issue for Appeal.

If a question is asked, and it is not clear on its face that it is pertinent (e.g., it is general or preliminary), and the court sustains an objection to it, counsel must either reframe the question, or show the pertinency of the question and the materiality of the answer, so as to give the court an opportunity to correct its ruling. Such a showing is called an "offer of proof": counsel disclosing what he or she intends to prove by the line of questioning. (See Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. Hacienda Mobile Home Park (1975) 45 C.A.3d 519, 531, 119 C.R. 559, citing the text [inadequate offer of proof justified trial court in ruling proffered evidence inadmissible]; 1 McCormick 5th, §51; 1 Wigmore (Tillers Rev.) §20a; 89 A.L.R.2d 279; F.R. Evid., Rule 103, supra, §372; C.E.B., 2 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §15.50; C.E.B., California Trial Objections 6th, §5.4.)

Failure to make such an offer precludes consideration of the error on appeal. (Ev.C. 354(a); see Marshall v. Hancock (1889) 80 C. 82, 84, 22 P. 61 [witness was asked "what the conversation was," and objection sustained; no offer to show that conversation related to issues]; Snowball v. Snowball (1913) 164 C. 476, 479, 129 P. 784; MacDonnell v. California Lands (1940) 15 C.2d 344, 348, 101 P.2d 479; People v. Danielly (1949) 33 C.2d 362, 376, 202 P.2d 18; Helfend v. Rapid Transit Dist. (1970) 2 C.3d 19, 26, 84 C.R. 184, 465 P.2d 72, citing the text; People v. Whitt (1990) 51 C.3d 620, 649, 274 C.R. 252, 798 P.2d 849 [at penalty phase, objections sustained when defendant was asked whether he wanted to live and why he deserved to live; no offer to show relevance]; People v. Ramos (1997) 15 C.4th 1133, 1178, 64 C.R.2d 892, 938 P.2d 950 [after trial judge sustained hearsay objections to testimony about codefendant's writings that would have been used to show defendant was acting under codefendant's influence, defendant waived issue by failing to make offer of proof; offer of proof requirement applies to establishing hearsay exceptions]; Merz v. Poole (1927) 82 C.A. 12, 15, 254 P. 914 [question whether defendant had "any other transactions" with plaintiff; objection sustained, too broad]; People v. Asta (1967) 251 C.A.2d 64, 76, 59 C.R. 206, citing the text; Pugh v. See's Candies (1988) 203 C.A.3d 743, 758, 250 C.R. 195, citing the text; People v. Honig (1996) 48 C.A.4th 289, 345, 55 C.R.2d 555, 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Governmental Authority, §105 [state official, convicted of making official contracts in which he had financial interest, was not entitled to reversal on basis that testimony of private donors to defendant and wife's nonprofit corporation was not allowed, where he did not seek to call those donors or inquire whether their testimony was within court's ruling on admissibility of financial evidence]; Gutierrez v. Cassiar Mining Corp. (1998) 64 C.A.4th 148, 161, 75 C.R.2d 132 [in personal injury action against supplier of asbestos fiber, defendant's failure to make offer of proof after trial judge ruled it could not call plaintiff's coworker as witness defeated its claim on appeal that exclusion was error; although judge questioned need for offer, this did not constitute refusal to hear one].)

Similarly, if a party seeks to introduce documentary evidence, and the court temporarily or tentatively excludes it for lack of connection, or pending decision on its admissibility, with the statement that the offer may be made again later, failure to renew the offer or to seek a final ruling may be a waiver of any error. (Spanfelner v. Meyer (1942) 51 C.A.2d 390, 391, 124 P.2d 862 [document offered, marked for identification, court stating that "it will probably be admitted but I will defer it" to see whether there was any evidence to tie it in]; Warren v. Pacific Intermountain Express Co. (1960) 183 C.A.2d 155, 162, 6 C.R. 824.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XIII. EXCLUSION OF ADMISSIBLE EVIDENCE: OFFER OF PROOF

A. Necessity of Offer.

2. Form of Offer.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 402

[§ 402] Form of Offer.

Where required, the offer of proof must consist of matter that would be admissible. If a general offer is made to prove a number of things, without segregation, and it includes some inadmissible matter, the entire offer may be rejected. (Swafford v. Board of Education (1900) 127 C. 484, 488, 59 P. 900; Rose v. Doe (1907) 4 C.A. 680, 686, 89 P. 135; Lewis v. Western Truck Line (1941) 44 C.A.2d 455, 465, 112 P.2d 747; Estate of Stark (1941) 48 C.A.2d 209, 213, 119 P.2d 961 [counsel "was not entitled to use an offer of proof, as a dragnet, to obviate asking the witness the particular questions to which he desired answers from the witness' own personal knowledge"].)

The offer of proof must be specific in its indication of the purpose of the testimony, the name of the witness, and the content of the answer to be elicited. The judge may properly reject a general or vague offer that does not indicate with precision the evidence to be presented and the witnesses who are to give it. (See Douillard v. Woodd (1942) 20 C.2d 665, 670, 128 P.2d 6; Stickel v. San Diego Elec. Ry. Co. (1948) 32 C.2d 157, 162, 195 P.2d 416; Moore v. Rogers (1958) 157 C.A.2d 192, 197, 320 P.2d 524; Braly v. Midvalley Chemical Co. (1961) 192 C.A.2d 369, 380, 13 C.R. 366 [too general]; Byrd v. Savage (1963) 219 C.A.2d 396, 401, 32 C.R. 881 ["vague, shotgun" proposal, with no showing of ability to call as witnesses the persons named, and containing much inadmissible matter]; People v. Hyatt (1971) 18 C.A.3d 618, 624, 96 C.R. 156; People v. Sperl (1976) 54 C.A.3d 640, 657, 126 C.R. 907, citing the text; Semsch v. Henry Mayo Newhall Memorial Hosp. (1985) 171 C.A.3d 162, 166, 216 C.R. 913, quoting the text [offer failed to provide specificity as to testimony to be offered, necessary for appropriate evidentiary objections]; In re Mark C. (1992) 7 C.A.4th 433, 444, 8 C.R.2d 856 [after objection to results of penile plethysmograph test and numerous sexual inventory and diagnostic tests, general oral statement concerning the standardized tests was insufficient offer of proof]; 1 McCormick 5th, §51; C.E.B., 2 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §15.55 et seq.; C.E.B., California Trial Objections 6th, §5.10 et seq.; 89 A.L.R.2d 279, 288.)

An offer of proof setting forth the substance of facts to be proved does not comply with Ev.C. 354(a): "The substance of evidence to be set forth in a valid offer of proof means the testimony of specific witnesses, writings, material objects, or other things presented to the senses, to be introduced to prove the existence or nonexistence of a fact in issue." (United Savings & Loan Assn. v. Reeder Dev. Corp. (1976) 57 C.A.3d 282, 294, 129 C.R. 113; see McCleery v. Bakersfield (1985) 170 C.A.3d 1059, 1073, 216 C.R. 852.)

XIII. EXCLUSION OF ADMISSIBLE EVIDENCE: OFFER OF PROOF

B. Where Offer Is Unnecessary.

1. Question Clearly Disclosing Admissibility.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 403

[§ 403] Question Clearly Disclosing Admissibility.

Where the error consists of excluding admissible evidence, sustaining an objection to admissible evidence, or granting a motion to strike, ordinarily no further act at the trial is required of a party as a basis for raising the error on appeal. In this situation, the party asks the question in a form that clearly discloses its purpose, relevancy and materiality, and the trial court sustains the objection or strikes out the answer. The party need not repeat the question to obtain another exclusionary ruling, argue the legal principles governing its admission, or make an offer of proof. (See Ev.C. 354(a); see also People v. McGee (1947) 31 C.2d 229, 242, 187 P.2d 706 [questions, together with colloquies with trial judge, clearly disclosed purpose]; Delta Dynamics v. Arioto (1968) 69 C.2d 525, 527, footnote 1, 72 C.R. 785, 446 P.2d 785, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Documentary Evidence, §82 [question, together with pretrial conference order, disclosed purpose]; People v. Pereles (1932) 125 C.A. Supp. 787, 792, 12 P.2d 1093; C.E.B., 2 Civ. ### XIII. EXCLUSION OF ADMISSIBLE EVIDENCE: OFFER OF PROOF

B. Where Offer Is Unnecessary.

2. Judge's Ruling Making Offer Futile.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 404

[§ 404] Judge's Ruling Making Offer Futile.

If the trial judge expressly limits the issues or otherwise indicates a refusal to receive evidence on a certain subject, an offer of proof relating to the excluded issues would be futile and is excused. (See Ev.C. 354(b); see also Caminetti v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. (1943) 23 C.2d 94, 100, 142 P.2d 741 [court announced applicable legal measure of damages, thus preventing evidence relating to any other measure]; Lawless v. Calaway (1944) 24 C.2d 81, 90, 147 P.2d 604 [plaintiff in malpractice suit called defendant doctor as adverse witness, court ruled that he could not be interrogated as expert, thus foreclosing examination on issues that could be proved solely by expert evidence]; Heimann v. Los Angeles (1947) 30 C.2d 746, 757, 185 P.2d 597; Beneficial Fire & Cas. Ins. Co. v. Kurt Hitke & Co. (1956) 46 C.2d 517, 522, 297 P.2d 428 ["Where an entire class of evidence has been declared inadmissible or the trial court has clearly intimated it will receive no evidence of a particular class or upon a particular issue, an offer of proof is not a prerequisite to raising the question on appeal, and an offer, if made, may be broad and general"]; Ponce v. Marr (1956) 47 C.2d 159, 163, 301 P.2d 837; Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. G.W. Thomas Drayage & Rigging Co. (1968) 69 C.2d 33, 36, footnote 1, 69 C.R. 561, 442 P.2d 641 [judge repeatedly ruled that he would not admit extrinsic evidence to interpret contract]; Westman v. Clifton's Brookdale (1948) 89 C.A.2d 307, 314, 200 P.2d 814; Chambers v. Silver (1951) 103 C.A.2d 633, 642, 230 P.2d 146; DiMaria v. Mitchell (1952) 112 C.A.2d 691, 698, 247 P.2d 60; Carroll v. Beavers (1954) 126 C.A.2d 828, 838, 273 P.2d 56; MacGregor v. Kawaoka (1955) 132 C.A.2d 407, 410, 282 P.2d 130; People v. Bennett (1969) 276 C.A.2d 172, 175, 80 C.R. 706 [judge made flat statement that proffered evidence was irrelevant]; Montez v. Superior Court (1970) 10 C.A.3d 343, 350, 88 C.R. 736 [judge made it clear that he would not receive the proffered evidence]; In re Eric. H. (1997) 54 C.A.4th 955, 962, 63 C.R.2d 230, citing the text; C.E.B., 2 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §15.53; C.E.B., California Trial Objections 6th, §5.6.)

The same is true where the judge refuses to allow a witness to testify at all, on an erroneous theory of incompetency, without regard to the admissibility of the testimony the witness might give, and the record indicates that the testimony would be material. (People v. Duane (1942) 21 C.2d 71, 81, 130 P.2d 123; cf. Caldwell v. Caldwell (1962) 204 C.A.2d 819, 821, 22 C.R. 854, citing the text [judge refused to hear wife on motion to increase child support].)

The theory that a supervening change in the law may permit an objection to inadmissible evidence on appeal that was not made below (see supra, §398) may also be applied to the exclusion of admissible evidence where no offer of proof was made below. Thus, in People v. Nigri (1965) 232 C.A.2d 348, 42 C.R. 679, the defense in statutory rape cases, of reasonable belief that the female was over the age of consent (see 1 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Defenses, §45), was announced by the Supreme Court after the trial judge rejected defendant's evidence to this effect. Held, quoting People

v. Kitchens (1956) 46 C.2d 260, 294 P.2d 17, the judgment of conviction should be reversed to permit defendant to offer this proof. (232 C.A.2d 350.)

CHAPTER XI - Presentation At Trial

XIII. EXCLUSION OF ADMISSIBLE EVIDENCE: OFFER OF PROOF

B. Where Offer Is Unnecessary.

3. Cross-Examination.

3 Witkin Cal. Evid. Presentation § 405

[§ 405] Cross-Examination.

(1) Nature and Purpose of Exception. If counsel in cross-examination were required to disclose the object of a line of questioning, the witness would often be forewarned and the cross-examiner seriously hampered. Therefore, an offer of proof is not necessary where the evidence is sought by questions asked during cross-examination. (Ev.C. 354(c).)

In People v. Jones (1911) 160 C. 358, 117 P. 176, the trial judge sustained a general objection to a question asked of a prosecution witness, on the ground that it did not appear that the answer would be material. Held, the question should have been allowed. An inadmissible answer can be stricken out; "[b]ut to rule out a pertinent question asked on cross-examination because the court and cross-examiner cannot know what the answer will be, is to destroy every purpose of a cross-examination and render it a vain and empty thing." (160 C. 363.) (See also Lawless v. Calaway (1944) 24 C.2d 81, 91, 147 P.2d 604 [examination of adverse party "is often exploratory" and offer of proof would be unreasonable requirement]; Tossmen v. Newman (1951) 37 C.2d 522, 525, 233 P.2d 1; MacGregor v. Kawaoka (1955) 132 C.A.2d 407, 409, 282 P.2d 130; C.E.B., 2 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §15.53; C.E.B., California Trial Objections 6th, §5.5.)

(2) Unusual Circumstances Making Exception Inapplicable. In People v. Coleman (1970) 8 C.A.3d 722, 729, 87 C.R. 554, a trial for robbery, the prosecuting witness was a 17-year-old Canadian boy who had arrived in the Haight-Ashbury district of San Francisco with $ 3.50 and, 10 days later, was hitchhiking to Vancouver with $ 55.00 which defendants allegedly robbed from him. Defense counsel established that the victim had earned money in San Francisco, and then asked, "What did you do for that?" The prosecutor objected that the question was irrelevant and immaterial. Notwithstanding a defense contention that "it's important we establish a basis where this money came from," the objection was sustained. No further argument took place at the trial and no offer of proof was made. On appeal, defendants argued that the victim was unlikely to have possessed the money he claimed was taken, and that the excluded question was the beginning of an attack on his credibility. In support of the ruling, the Attorney General suggested that the trial judge may have relied on either of two principles: That the crime of robbery did not depend on the value of the property taken, or that the inquiry meant to establish that the victim had acquired the money in some illicit or socially undesirable way, and that he was entitled to protection against these efforts. Held, there was no abuse of discretion:

"The opposing contentions emphasize the fact that the question which provoked the prosecutor's objection was at least ambiguous, if not capable of several meanings; the trial judge was therefore entitled to be apprised of the direction of counsel's inquiry." (8 C.A.3d 729.) "In the face of an objection by the prosecutor and the statement of defense counsel, it should have been clear that the judge was unaware of the materiality of the question if, indeed, it had a material purpose; the judge did not suggest that counsel refrain from further related inquiry; and defense counsel made no offer of proof or other attempt to explain a relevant purpose of the question, but abandoned the direct line of inquiry and moved on to proper and related questions touching upon the amount and denominations of money on the victim's person on his departure from San Francisco." (8 C.A.3d 730.) (See Nienhouse v. Superior Court (1996) 42 C.A.4th 83, 93, 49 C.R.2d 573 [cross-examination exception to offer of proof requirement was inapplicable in preliminary hearing on drug and firearm charges; police officer did not testify on direct examination regarding any statements defendant made, and therefore defendant's inquiry to him about those statements was not cross-examination but attempt to offer affirmative evidence]; C.E.B., 2 Civ. Proc. During Trial 3d, §15.53; C.E.B., California Trial Objections 6th, §5.5.)
