(2) Witness Legally Required To Attend. A witness is entitled to compensation only "when legally required to attend." (Govt.C. 68093, 68096.) But if the witness could have been compelled to attend, and attends at the mere request of the party, without subpoena, he or she is entitled to fees. If the opposing party, he or she suffers no injury by the absence of a subpoena; indeed, the opposing party benefits because his or her liability does not include the cost of serving the subpoena. (Linforth v. San Francisco Gas & Elec. Co. (1908) 9 C.A. 434, 437, 99 P. 716; see Downey v. Gonzales (1968) 262 C.A.2d 563, 569, 69 C.R. 34 [condemnation witness of defendants subpoenaed for 7 days; judge refused to subpoena him for 8th day, but he returned at request of defendants and testified; held that fee for that date also allowable as costs].)

In a civil case, the witness may demand payment of mileage and fees for 1 day in advance, and need not attend until it is paid. (Govt.C. 68097; see C.C.P. 1987 [demand may be made at time of service of subpoena].) (On allowance of fees as costs, see 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Judgment, §128 et seq.; on fees as costs in eminent domain proceeding, see Downey v. Gonzales, supra.)

(3) Reimbursement of Public Entity for Compensation of Public Employee Subpoenaed as Witness in Civil Proceeding. A local agency employee is entitled to compensation if the employee is subpoenaed as a witness at a civil proceeding. The proceeding must involve a matter that the employee perceived or investigated in the course of his or her duties, and must be one in which the local agency is not a party. The employee is entitled to receive his or her normal compensation from the local agency while traveling to and from the proceeding and remaining in attendance, plus reasonable traveling expenses. The party at whose request the subpoena was issued must reimburse the local agency for the employee's compensation. (Govt.C. 68096.1.)

D. Compensation of Ordinary Witnesses.

2. Statutory Fees and Mileage in Civil Cases.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 16

[§ 16] Statutory Fees and Mileage in Civil Cases.

(1) Fees. A witness is entitled to a fee of $ 35 per day regardless of whether the proceeding is in a superior or municipal court. (Govt.C. 68093; see C.E.B., 1 Civil Proc. During Trial 3d, §4.41.)

(2) Mileage. Witnesses in superior and municipal court proceedings are entitled to mileage actually traveled, both ways, at 20 cents per mile. (Govt.C. 68093; see C.E.B., 1 Civil Proc. During Trial 3d, §4.41.) Where a continuance is ordered, witnesses may properly be allowed mileage for attendance on both occasions. (Richards v. Silveria (1929) 97 C.A. 166, 177, 275 P. 478.)

The witness is entitled to mileage "for each day's actual attendance." (Govt.C. 68093.) If there are intervening days of nonattendance during which the witness remains at home, the witness may claim mileage for the new trip to court. In People v. MacFarlane (1945) 71 C.A.2d 535, 536, 162 P.2d 937, it was held that, under the plain language of the statute, a witness can also claim the allowance for mileage actually traveled (a relatively small sum, usually), even where the attendance is on consecutive trial days.

(3) Notice of Right. A witness subpoenaed in any civil or administrative action or proceeding must be given written notice on the subpoena that he may be entitled to receive fees and mileage. The notice must indicate generally the manner in which the request for these should be made. (C.C.P. 2065.)

I. ATTENDANCE AND COMPENSATION

D. Compensation of Ordinary Witnesses.

3. Fees and Mileage in Criminal Cases.

[§ 17] Fees and Mileage in Criminal Cases.

(1) Discretionary. In criminal cases, fees and expenses are discretionary. (P.C. 1329; see Govt.C. 72232 [in municipal court, payment must be made in the manner provided in the county or city and county in which the court is situated].)

(2) Amount. If the judge decides to award fees and expenses, the judge may (a) prescribe a fee of $ 12 per day plus a reasonable sum for necessary expenses, or (b) make any allowance provided by Govt.C. 68070 et seq., with the exception of Govt.C. 68093 (see supra, §16). (P.C. 1329(a).)

The judge also has discretion to authorize payment to a witness who is employed and whose salary is not being paid by his employer during his absence as a witness, "a sum equal to his gross salary for such time," not to exceed $ 18 per day. (P.C. 1329(b).) But a person compensated under P.C. 1329(b) may not receive the witness' fees provided for in P.C. 1329(a).

(3) Notice on Subpena. The subpoena must contain a notice that the witness may be entitled to receive fees and mileage and indicate the manner in which a request or claim should be made. (P.C. 1329.1.)

(4) Out-of-State Witness. When an out-of-state witness is subpoenaed under the Uniform Act (see supra, §9), the judge of the court in which the witness is ordered to appear must order payment of witness fees and reimbursement for additional reasonable and necessary expenses. (P.C. 1334.3(a).)

However, if the witness is an inmate in a penal facility, he or she must be furnished, in lieu of the statutory per diem tendered to other out-of-state witnesses, food and lodging at a penal facility in the county where he or she will be testifying. (P.C. 1334.3(b).)

(5) Detained Material Witness. The duty to disclose knowledge of crime justifies detention of innocent material witnesses, and statutory compensation may reasonably be kept at a minimum. (Hurtado v. United States (1973) 410 U.S. 578, 93 S.Ct. 1157, 1164, 35 L.Ed.2d 508, 518 ["The detention of a material witness, in short, is simply not a 'taking' under the Fifth Amendment, and the level of his compensation, therefore, does not, as such, present a constitutional question"].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Discretionary. Govt.C. 72232 was repealed in 2002 to reflect the unification of the municipal and superior courts. (See 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Courts, Supp., §169.)

D. Compensation of Ordinary Witnesses.

4. Grand Jury, Coroner's Jury, and Juvenile Court.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 18

[§ 18] Grand Jury, Coroner's Jury, and Juvenile Court.

(1) Grand Jury. Witnesses before a grand jury may be compensated under either P.C. 1329 ($ 12 per day and a reasonable sum for necessary expenses; see supra, §17), or Govt.C. 68094 ($ 12 per day and mileage actually traveled, one way only, at 20 cents per mile). (P.C. 1329(a).) Both statutes make payment discretionary.

(2) Coroner's Jury. The fees and mileage for witnesses before a coroner's jury are the same as those prescribed by Govt.C. 68094 (see supra). However, payment is mandatory. (Govt.C. 68095.)

(3) Juvenile Court. A witness attending a juvenile court hearing on a subpoena issued to the probation officer, district attorney, minor, or parent, guardian, or custodian of the minor may be awarded fees in the discretion of the court, pursuant to Govt.C. 68093. ### I. ATTENDANCE AND COMPENSATION

D. Compensation of Ordinary Witnesses.

5. Payment of Extra Compensation.

[§ 19] Payment of Extra Compensation.

A contract to pay witness fees contingent on the outcome of the suit is void for illegality. (Pelkey v. Hodge (1931) 112 C.A. 424, 425, 296 P. 908; Von Kesler v. Baker (1933) 131 C.A. 654, 657, 21 P.2d 1017; Van Norden v. Metson (1946) 75 C.A.2d 595, 599, 171 P.2d 485; see 57 A.L.R.4th 643 [contingent-fee informant testimony in state prosecutions]; 1 Summary (9th), Contracts, §611.)

There is no illegality in an agreement merely to pay larger sums than the compensation fixed by the statute. But such payments have been strongly condemned as offering a temptation to color testimony. In Crutchfield v. Davidson Brick Co. (1942) 55 C.A.2d 34, 37, 130 P.2d 183, the court said:

"The practice of paying witnesses sums greater than the statutory fees on the theory that they are being compensated for their time or that they are being prevented from suffering financial loss is not to be commended. A deep knowledge of human nature is not necessary in order to draw the conclusion that a witness liberally compensated for his time by the party serving him with a subpoena will be apt to color his testimony, or at least to present it in the light most favorable to the party who compensated him. Witnesses who learn of the practice of paying extra compensation are confronted with the temptation to make terms for their testimony. In such a situation there is opportunity for oppressive and corrupt conduct. ... The practice under consideration has been growing in late years and it is now common knowledge that litigants having considerable business in the courts customarily 'take good care of their witnesses.' Numerous instances have occurred in the trial courts where public employees subpoenaed to disclose information gained in the discharge of their duties have received extra-legal fees for attendance in court, notwithstanding their salaries were being paid in full from the public treasury. If testimony by witnesses who have received extra-legal compensation is to be received, liberal cross-examination should be permitted by the trial court on the subject of the compensation to enable the jury to better pass upon their credibility." (55 C.A.2d 37.)

I. ATTENDANCE AND COMPENSATION

E. Compensation of In-Custody Informants.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 20

[§ 20] Compensation of In-Custody Informants.

P.C. 1127a and 4001.1 provide for compensation of "in-custody informant" witnesses. (See 21 Pacific L. J. 421.)

(2) Limited Permitted Compensation. Law enforcement and correctional officials may not give, offer, or promise an in-custody informant monetary payment in excess of $ 50 in return for testimony in a criminal proceeding. However, not prohibited are "payments incidental to the informant's testimony such as expenses incurred for witness or immediate family relocation, lodging, housing, meals, phone calls, travel, or witness fees authorized by law, provided those payments are supported by appropriate documentation demonstrating that the money was used for the purposes for which it was given." (P.C. 4001.1(a).)

(3) Statement of Consideration. When the prosecution calls an in-custody informant as a witness in a criminal trial, it must contemporaneously "file with the court a written statement setting out any and all consideration promised to, or received by, the in-custody informant." (P.C. 1127a(c).) "Consideration" is defined as "any plea bargain, bail consideration, reduction or modification of sentence, or any other leniency, benefit, immunity, financial assistance, reward, or amelioration of current or future conditions of incarceration in return for, or in connection with, the informant's testimony in the criminal proceeding in which the prosecutor intends to call him or her as a witness." (P.C. 1127a(d).) (For mandatory cautionary instruction on request, see 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §109.)

I. ATTENDANCE AND COMPENSATION

F. Attendance and Compensation of Experts.

1. Right to Reasonable and Customary Compensation.
  - a. Former Rule Denying Extra Compensation.

[§ 21] Former Rule Denying Extra Compensation.

It was formerly the California rule that an expert who had knowledge of particular facts or who had already formed particular opinions could be called as a witness and questioned as to those facts or opinions with the same statutory compensation as an ordinary witness. (See McClenahan v. Keyes (1922) 188 C. 574, 583, 584, 206 P. 454 ["in the absence of an express contract to pay a physician for his testimony as an expert, he is only entitled to the statutory fee"]; San Francisco v. Superior Court (1951) 37 C.2d 227, 234, 231 P.2d 26; People v. Barnes (1931) 111 C.A. 605, 609, 295 P. 1045.)

The duty did not, of course, extend to preparation for expert testimony on a particular matter, by investigation, examination, or tests. (See People v. Conte (1912) 17 C.A. 771, 783, 122 P. 450; People v. Barnes, supra; 5 Hastings L. J. 51.) And Ev.C. 730 provides for compensation of court-appointed experts in an amount determined by the judge. (See 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Opinion Evidence, §83.)

The rule denying extra compensation was abrogated in 1968 by the enactment of Govt.C. 68092.5. (See infra, §§22, 23.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

I. ATTENDANCE AND COMPENSATION

F. Attendance and Compensation of Experts.

1. Right to Reasonable and Customary Compensation.
  - b. Abrogation of Rule.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 22

[§ 22] Abrogation of Rule.

(1) Witness and Proceeding. The expert witness fee statute applies to testimony "before any court, tribunal, or arbiter in any civil action or proceeding from any expert witness" (except a party or employee of a party) who is any of the following (Govt.C. 68092.5(a)):

(a) An expert described in C.C.P. 2034(a)(2).

(b) A treating physician and surgeon or other treating health care practitioner who is to be asked to express an opinion.

The deposition of an expert witness is governed by C.C.P. 2034 (see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §188 et seq.). (Govt.C. 68092.5(f).)

(2) Compensation. The expert is entitled to a "reasonable and customary hourly or daily fee" for the actual time consumed by the expert's testimony. The hourly or daily fee may not exceed the fee charged the party who retained the expert, except where the expert donated his or her services to a charitable or other nonprofit organization. A daily fee may only be charged for a full day of attendance at a deposition or where the expert was required by the deposing party to be available for a full day and the expert necessarily had to forgo all business he or she would have otherwise conducted that day. The expert is additionally entitled to reimbursement for preparation and travel expenses. (Govt.C. 68092.5(a).)

(3) Procedure: Subpena and Tender of Fee. The party requiring the expert's attendance must either (a) accompany service of the subpoena or notice with tender of the expert's anticipated fee; or (b) tender that fee at the required time of appearance. The fee must be delivered to the attorney for the party designating the expert. If the expert's appearance takes longer than anticipated, the party serving the subpoena or notice must pay the balance of the fee within 5 days after receiving an itemized statement from the expert. (Govt.C. 68092.5(a).)

Service of a proper subpoena or notice and accompanying fee is effective to require the party employing or retaining the expert to produce the expert. Unless the parties stipulate otherwise, the expert need not appear if the party serving the notice or subpoena fails to tender the required fee. (Govt.C. 68092.5(b).)

(4) Compensation Where Fee Is Unreasonable. If a party requiring the appearance of another party's expert deems that the expert's fee is unreasonable, the party may move for an order setting the expert's compensation. The motion must be accompanied by a declaration stating facts showing a reasonable, good faith attempt at an informal resolution. Notice must be given to the expert. (Govt.C. 68092.5(c).)

Govt.C. 68092.5(c) also specifies the information to be provided in an attempted informal resolution, and sets forth the information to be considered in determining whether the fee is reasonable.

(5) Responsibility for Paying Fee. The party requiring the expert testimony must pay the expert's hourly or daily fee. The party designating the expert is responsible for preparation and travel costs, unless otherwise determined by the court. (Govt.C. 68092.5(a).) The statute formerly stated that the fees were not allowable costs, but this language was eliminated in 1988.

(6) Notification of Continuation or Cancellation. When the proceeding that the expert was asked to attend has been continued or cancelled, the party who called the expert should notify him or her by the quickest and most reliable means available under the circumstances. If not notified, the expert is entitled to compensation even though he or she gives no testimony. (Govt.C. 68092.5(d).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Witness and Proceeding. C.C.P. 2034, on the deposition of expert witnesses, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change. The experts formerly described in C.C.P. 2034(a)(2) are now described in C.C.P. 2034.210(b).

(2) Compensation. See 28 Pepperdine L. Rev. 1 [proposals for guarding against biased testimony where expert witness is testifying in exchange for compensation]. West's Key Number Digest, Witnesses k.28(1)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

I. ATTENDANCE AND COMPENSATION

F. Attendance and Compensation of Experts.

2. Right to Agreed Compensation.

[§ 23] Right to Agreed Compensation.

(1) Agreement To Compensate for Testimony Requiring Preparation. Because the expert cannot be compelled to make a scientific investigation or to undertake other special duties in preparation for his or her testimony without special compensation (see supra, §22), expert witnesses are usually employed by the parties, appear voluntarily, and are compensated by private contract. Such a contract is of course valid unless the payment is based on the contingency of success. (See Van Norden v. Metson (1946) 75 C.A.2d 595, 599, 171 P.2d 485 [invalid contingent agreement with civil engineer]; 64 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1363 [Contingent Expert Witness Fees: Access and Legitimacy]; 6 Corbin §1430; supra, §19.)

(2) Agreement To Compensate for Ordinary Testimony. Our former law was uncertain as to whether an agreement to pay special compensation for the ordinary testimony of an expert, requiring no preparation, was enforceable; some jurisdictions took the position that, because the expert could be compelled to testify for the statutory fee, he or she would be giving no consideration for a promise to pay an additional sum. (See 9 So. Cal. L. Rev. 61.)

Govt.C. 68092.5 (supra, §22) resolved the uncertainty as follows: An express contract relating to compensation between a person and the party requesting or requiring the person to testify is enforceable and prevails over the provisions of the statute. (Govt.C. 68092.5(e).)

Thus, the expert is now assured of an agreed compensation (supra) or reasonable and customary compensation (supra, §22) whenever he or she is required to give expert testimony.

a. Nature and Form.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 24

[§ 24] Nature and Form.

(1) Nature of Process. "The process by which the attendance of a witness is required is the subpoena. It is a writ or order directed to a person and requiring his attendance at a particular time and place to testify as a witness." (C.C.P. 1985(a); see C.C.P. 2064 [witness must attend]; P.C. 1326 et seq. [compelling witnesses in criminal proceedings]; *Linforth v. San Francisco Gas & Elec. Co. In a civil case, a subpoena to require attendance "before a court, or at the trial of an issue therein" is issued by the clerk of the court (or by the judge or justice if there is no clerk). Issuance is "as of course, upon the application of the party desiring it." (C.C.P. 1986.)

(2) Form. The following Judicial Council forms are mandatory:

(a) Civil Subpena for Personal Appearance at Trial or Hearing. (See Judicial Council Forms, Form No. 982(a)(15).) The form includes provisions expressly required by statute. (See C.C.P. 1985.2 [advice to contact attorney requesting subpoena; see 10 Pacific L. J. 346]; C.C.P. 2065 [notice of entitlement to fees and mileage]; on mandatory Judicial Council forms for civil deposition subpoenas, see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §220.)

(b) Subpena (Criminal or Juvenile). (See Judicial Council Forms, Form No. 982(a)(16).) The form incorporates the substance of the one set out in P.C. 1327, and complies with P.C. 1329.1, requiring notice of entitlement to fees and mileage.

A different time of appearance from that specified in either subpoena may be agreed to by the party and the witness subpoenaed. (C.C.P. 1985.1; P.C. 1331.5; see infra, §33.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Nature of Process. C.C.P. 1986 was amended in 2007 to delete as unnecessary language authorizing the judge or justice to issue a subpoena if there is no clerk. (See Law Revision Commission Comment on 2007 amendment of C.C.P. 1986 [noting that C.C.P. 167 authorizes judge to perform any act clerk may perform].)

G. Procedure.

1. Subpena.

b. Issuance.

[§ 25] Issuance.

(1) Issuance by Attorney in Civil Case. Because a party is entitled to a subpoena as a matter of right, the customary practice of the clerk was to deliver blank forms, signed and sealed, to the attorney, who thereafter inserted the title of the case, the name of the witness and the date of the trial. (See Prichard v. Southern Pac. Co. (1935) 9 C.A.2d 704, 706, 51 P.2d 428.) This practice has been codified; the attorney of record may now sign and issue subpoenas for attendance at trial or deposition, or for production of the matters described in the subpoena. (C.C.P. 1985(c).)

(2) Issuance in Criminal Case. In a criminal case, the subpoena may be signed and issued by a magistrate, his clerk, the district attorney and public defender or their investigators, the clerk or judge of the trial court, or the defendant's attorney of record. The clerk must give the defendant as many blank subpoenas as the defendant requires. (P.C. 1326.)

I. ATTENDANCE AND COMPENSATION

G. Procedure.

1. Subpena.

c. Service.

1. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 26

[§ 26] In General.

(1) Who May Serve. In civil cases, any person may serve the subpena. (C.C.P. 1987(a).) In criminal cases, service may be made by any person except the defendant; but, on request, service must be made by a peace officer. (P.C. 1328(a).) Also, in criminal cases, a subpena may be sent by telegraph or teletype, and the officer with the telegraphic copy proceeds in the same manner as if the officer held the original subpena. (P.C. 1328a et seq.)

(2) Method of Service: Civil Cases. C.C.P. 1987(a) provides as follows (see C.E.B., 1 Civil Proc. During Trial 3d, §4.15 et seq.):

(a) Adults. Service on an adult is made "by delivering a copy, or a ticket containing its substance, to the witness personally."

(b) Minors. Service on a minor "shall be made on the minor's parent, guardian, conservator, or similar fiduciary, or if one of them cannot be located with reasonable diligence, then service shall be made on any person having the care or control of the minor or with whom the minor resides or by whom the minor is employed, and on the minor if the minor is 12 years of age or older."

This language is subject to two possible interpretations: (1) a minor 12 years old or older must always be served; or (2) a minor of that age need not be served when it is possible to locate and serve the minor's parent, guardian, conservator, or similar fiduciary. In the absence of an amendment or decision clarifying C.C.P. 1987(a), the safer course would be to serve the minor in all cases if he is at least 12 years old.

(3) Method of Service: Criminal Cases. P.C. 1328 provides as follows:

(a) Adults. Service on an adult is made "by delivering a copy ... to the witness personally." (P.C. 1328(a).)

(b) Minors. Service on a minor is accomplished in the same manner as provided under C.C.P. 1987(a), supra, but with these additional provisions: Service may not be made on a parent, guardian, conservator, fiduciary, or other specified person if he or she is the defendant. The court may appoint a guardian ad litem to receive service or to produce the child. A wilful failure to produce the minor at the time and place designated is punishable as contempt. And the person served is allowed the fees and expenses provided for subpoenaed witnesses. (P.C. 1328(b).)

(4) Compensation of Witnesses. At the time of service, the witness must be given or offered mileage and 1 day's fees, if demanded by him or her. (C.C.P. 1987(a); Govt.C. 68097; see supra, §15 et seq.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Method of Service: Civil Cases.

(b) Minors. C.C.P. 1987(a) was amended in 2002. In the portion of the subdivision quoted in the text, "them" was replaced by "those persons," and "then" was deleted. The amended subdivision further provides that if the minor is alleged to come within Welf.C. 300, 601, or 602 (see 10 Summary (10th), Parent and Child, §§538, 729 et seq.), and the minor is not in the custody of a parent or guardian, then regardless of the minor's age, "service also shall be made upon the designated agent for service of process at the county child welfare department or the probation department under whose jurisdiction the minor has been placed." (3) Method of Service: Criminal Cases.

(b) Minors. P.C. 1328(b), as amended in 2002, additionally provides that if the minor is alleged to come within Welf.C. 300, 601, or 602, and the minor is not residing with a parent or guardian, then regardless of the minor's age, "service also shall be made upon the designated agent for service of process at the county child welfare department or the probation department under whose jurisdiction the child has been placed."

G. Procedure.

1. Subpena.

c. Service.

2. Special Rules.

[§ 27] Special Rules.

(1) Witness Concealed. If the witness is concealed in a building or vessel, any court or judge may, upon affidavit of such concealment and the materiality of the witness, order the sheriff to serve it, breaking in if necessary. (C.C.P. 1988; see People v. Avila (1967) 253 C.A.2d 308, 331, 61 C.R. 441 [failure of defendant to make application under statute precludes asserting error in witness not appearing].)

(2) Service by Mail or Messenger. This type of service is specifically authorized, and is complete when the witness acknowledges receipt of the subpoena by telephone or mail, or in person, and provides his or her date of birth and driver's license number or Department of Motor Vehicles identification card number. (P.C. 1328d.)

(3) Service on Peace Officer's Superior. P.C. 1328 provides as follows:

(a) When a peace officer is required as a witness, the subpoena may be served either on the officer or on his or her immediate superior (or agent designated by the superior). Two copies are served on the superior or agent, who delivers one copy to the peace officer "as soon as possible and in no event later than such time as will enable the peace officer to comply." In those counties where the local agencies have agreed with the marshal's office or sheriff's office to participate, the subpoena may be sent by electronic means to the peace officer's immediate superior, or to an agent designated by the superior to receive service. The superior or agent must acknowledge receipt of the subpoena "by telephone or electronic means to the sender of origin." (P.C. 1328(c).)

(d) Notwithstanding P.C. 1328(c) (supra), if service is made on the superior or agent of a peace officer employed by the California Highway Patrol, the superior or agent must deliver a copy of the subpoena to the peace officer on the officer's first workday following acceptance of service of process. However, the failure of the superior or agent to deliver the subpoena does not constitute a defect in service. (P.C. 1328(g).)

I. ATTENDANCE AND COMPENSATION

G. Procedure.

1. Subpena.

d. Penalties for Failure To Obey.

1. Contempt.

aa. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 28

[§ 28] In General.

Disobedience of a subpoena or refusal to answer proper questions (see infra, §29) is punishable as a contempt by the court that issued it. (C.C.P. 1209(a)(9), 1991; see also P.C. 1331, 1564; on contempt for refusal to testify at deposition, see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §260 et seq.; on tardiness as contempt, see 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §§210, 211.)

Failure to comply with a subpoena delivered by mail or messenger (see supra, §27) may be punished as a contempt. (P.C. 1328d.) And the same sanction is available where the witness fails to obey a written notice to his attorney pursuant to C.C.P. 1987 (infra, §36), or to comply with an agreement to appear pursuant to C.C.P. 1985.1 (infra, §33).

A parent who fails to comply with a subpoena requiring attendance at a wardship hearing in juvenile court is guilty of contempt, unless the court, for good cause, excuses the parent from attending or finds that there was a satisfactory excuse for not attending. (Welf.C. 664(c)(1); see 10 Summary (9th), Parent and Child, Supp., §542.)

The contempt power is also available to enforce an agreement to appear under P.C. 1331.5. (See infra, §33.) But a subpoena that fails to state what the statute mandates, i.e., that the failure to appear is punishable as a contempt, may not be used as the basis for a contempt proceeding. (See In re Garcia (1974) 41 C.A.3d 997, 998, 116 C.R. 503.)

Assisting another to evade service of a subpoena constitutes a violation of P.C. 136.1 (preventing witness from testifying; see supra, §14), and is punishable as a contempt under C.C.P. 1209(a)(8) (any other "unlawful" interference with court proceedings). (In re Holmes (1983) 145 C.A.3d 934, 942, 193 C.R. 790.)

However, the contempt sanction may not be imposed unless the subpoena was personally served on the witness. (In re Abrams (1980) 108 C.A.3d 685, 687, 166 C.R. 749 [methods of service for summons or order to show cause do not apply].)

bb. Refusal To Answer Proper Questions.

[§ 29] Refusal To Answer Proper Questions.

In a contempt proceeding for failure to answer proper questions, the precise questions must be shown. (See Ransom v. Superior Court (1968) 262 C.A.2d 271, 276, 68 C.R. 507 [no showing or finding of what questions were asked; contempt order annulled]; In re Wells (1946) 29 C.2d 200, 201, 173 P.2d 811 [deposition].)

Multiple punishment may be imposed for successive refusals. (See 77 Harv. L. Rev. 1330; 94 A.L.R.2d 1246 [separate contempt for successive refusals to respond to same or similar questions].) However, multiple punishment was held improper where the witness refused to answer a series of questions about an incident, after making it clear that he would answer no questions on that subject. (In re Keller (1975) 49 C.A.3d 663, 667, 123 C.R. 223; see also Yates v. United States (1957) 355 U.S. 66, 78 S.Ct. 128, 132, 2 L.Ed.2d 95, 101 [refusal to answer questions within certain area is only one contempt, despite prosecutor's multiplication of questions].)

d. Penalties for Failure To Obey.

1. Contempt.

cc. Case No Longer Pending.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 30

[§ 30] Case No Longer Pending.

If the case in which a subpena was issued is no longer pending in the court, the court has no power to punish for failure to obey. (Schultz v. Superior Court (1945) 69 C.A.2d 530, 532, 159 P.2d 417.) And it cannot imprison a contemnor for longer than the duration of the trial. (In re McKinney (1968) 70 C.2d 8, 10, footnote 1, 73 C.R. 580, 447 P.2d 972.)

However, even if the litigation has already terminated, a judge has jurisdiction to vindicate the dignity and authority of the court by punishing a witness for criminal contempt that has occurred at an earlier time. (Morelli v. Superior Court (1969) 1 C.3d 328, 332, 82 C.R. 375, 461 P.2d 655.)

d. Penalties for Failure To Obey.

2. Arrest.

[§ 31] Arrest.

Although contempt is the principal remedy of the party aggrieved, the court may make an order for the arrest of the disobedient witness by the sheriff, who then brings the witness in to testify. (C.C.P. 1993, 1994.) And if the trial judge determines that the witness is a material witness, the judge must issue a bench warrant for his or her arrest, and may commit him or her into custody for up to 10 days. (P.C. 881(b), (d).) (See 14 Pacific L. J. 592.)

However, a warrant of arrest or a body attachment may not be issued for a witness who fails to appear in response to a subpoena delivered by mail or messenger (see supra, §27). (P.C. 1328d.)

Unlawful detention of a witness is a contempt. (C.C.P. 1209(a)(7).)

3. Statutory Penalty and Damages.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 32

[§ 32] Statutory Penalty and Damages.

The disobedient witness is liable to the aggrieved party for a statutory penalty of a prescribed amount, and all damages sustained by the failure to attend. These may be recovered in a civil action. (C.C.P. 1992; see 61 A.L.R.3d 1297 [tort or statutory liability for failure or refusal of witness to give testimony]; but see P.C. 1331 [providing only for the penalty, and permitting excuse of "good cause" for nonattendance].)

The remedies of penalty and damages are independent, and either or both may be enforced for the same disobedience. (Church v. Payne (1939) 35 C.A.2d Supp. 752, 755, 92 P.2d 406.)

I. ATTENDANCE AND COMPENSATION

G. Procedure.

1. Subpena.

f. Quashing Subpena.

[§ 34] Quashing Subpena.

Prior to 1976, there was no statutory authority for quashing subpoenas. However, decisions involving subpoenas duces tecum recognized an inherent right to quash under certain circumstances. (See 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §226.) And in People v. Rhone (1968) 267 C.A.2d 652, 657, 73 C.R. 463, it was held that, on a showing that the witness could not offer relevant and competent testimony, an ordinary witness subpoena could be quashed. (See People v. Superior Court (Long) (1976) 56 C.A.3d 374, 378, 126 C.R. 465 [trial judge quashed subpoena served on minor who wished, for sake of reconciliation with her mother, to avoid testifying against her stepfather in sexual abuse case; because minor was material witness, mandamus issued to set aside order].)

C.C.P. 1987.1, enacted in 1976, permits a court to make an order "quashing the subpoena entirely, modifying it, or directing compliance with it upon such terms or conditions as the court shall declare." (See 8 Pacific L. J. 237; C.E.B., 1 Civil Proc. During Trial 3d, §4.45; on procedure, see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §226.)

[§ 35] Compelled Testimony Without Subpena.

The proper issuance and service of the subpena is necessary to compel attendance. But it is not always necessary to compel testimony. The witness may attend voluntarily, at the request of the party, or for other reasons, without subpena (see supra, §15), and C.C.P. 1990 provides: "A person present in court, or before a judicial officer, may be required to testify in the same manner as if he were in attendance upon a subpena issued by such court or officer." ## CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

I. ATTENDANCE AND COMPENSATION

G. Procedure.

3. Notice to Attorney for Party Witness.

[§ 36] Notice to Attorney for Party Witness.

C.C.P. 1987(b) dispenses with a subpoena where the witness is a party or agent of a party, and authorizes the alternative process of notice to his or her attorney, as in deposition proceedings (see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §39).

(1) Witness. The statute applies to the following:

- (a) "A party to the record of any civil action or proceeding."
- (b) A person "for whose immediate benefit" the action or proceeding is prosecuted or defended.
- (c) An officer, director, or managing agent of any such party or person.

(2) Written Notice. The notice must be written, and must request the witness to attend before a court, or at a trial of an issue therein, specifying the time and place.

(3) Service of Notice. The notice must be served at least 10 days before the time required for attendance, unless the court prescribes a shorter time.

In other respects the procedure is the same as that following service of a subpoena: the witness is entitled to fees and mileage on demand; the notice has the same effect as service of a subpoena; and "the court may make such orders, including the imposition of sanctions, as in the case of a subpoena for attendance before the court."

(4) Request for Books and Other Items. C.C.P. 1987(c) authorizes use of the notice to accomplish the purposes of a subpoena duces tecum:

(a) The notice must be served at least 20 days before the time required for attendance (unless the court orders a shorter time).

(b) It may include a request that the person bring with him or her "books, documents or other things." The request must state "the exact materials or things desired" and that the person has them in his or her possession or control. (See Nelson v. Superior Court (1986) 184 C.A.3d 444, 452, 229 C.R. 94 [notice that did not specify documents desired was insufficient to support motion to compel].)

(d) Thereafter, the requesting party may file a noticed motion, with a showing of good cause and of "materiality of the items to the issues," for an order to produce the items to which objection was made.

(e) On such motion, the court may order production, unless the objecting person establishes good cause for nonproduction or production under limitations or conditions.

(f) "The procedure of this subdivision is alternative."

Although a request under C.C.P. 1987(c) has the same effect as a notice to attend under C.C.P. 1987(b), the geographical reach of C.C.P. 1987(c) is limited by C.C.P. 1989 (see supra, §3), which provides that a witness, "including a witness specified in subdivision (b) of Section 1987," is not obliged to attend unless the witness is "a resident within the state at the time of service." (Amoco Chemical Co. v. Certain Underwriters at Lloyd's of London (1995) 34 C.A.4th 554, 559, 40 C.R.2d 80 [disagreeing with suggestion to the contrary in Boal v. Price Waterhouse & Co. (1985) 165 C.A.3d 806, 212 C.R. 42, 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §120; trial judge erred in imposing sanctions for defendant British insurers' failure to comply with notice to appear and produce documents at trial]; on partial, implied repeal of C.C.P. 1089 by C.C.P. 2025, which permits depositions of nonresidents in California, see supra, §3.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(3) Service of Notice. The portion of C.C.P. 1987(b) quoted in the text was amended in 2002 to change "such" to "those".

(4) Request for Books and Other Items. C.C.P. 2025, permitting depositions of nonresidents in California, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

II. COMPETENCY OF WITNESSES A. Abolished Grounds of Disqualification. 1. Common Law Grounds. a. General Rule.

[§ 37] General Rule.

"Except as otherwise provided by statute, every person, irrespective of age, is qualified to be a witness and no person is disqualified to testify to any matter." (Ev.C. 700; see P.C. 1321 [rules of competency same as in civil cases unless otherwise specially provided]; Unif. Rule 601; 1 McCormick 5th, §61 et seq.; 2 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §488; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §163 et seq.; 1 Jefferson, California Evidence Benchbook 3d, Chap. 26; C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Trial §8.3 et seq.; 2 Wharton, Criminal Evidence (14th ed.), §340 et seq.)

Ev.C. 700 carries out the policy of the predecessor statute, which abolished most of the common law grounds of incompetency, such as relationship of parties, pecuniary interest in the suit, conviction of a felony, and lack of religious belief. The first three remain only as matters that the jury may consider in determining credibility. (See Ripperdan v. Weldy (1906) 149 C. 667, 672, 87 P. 276; Estate of Reynolds (1949) 94 C.A.2d 851, 855, 211 P.2d 608 [sole beneficiary under lost holographic will may testify to its provisions subject to challenge of credibility]; People v. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §11.)

Religious belief, or lack of it, is not a ground of incompetency. (Cal. Const., Art. I, §4; see Estate of Malvasi (1929) 96 C.A. 204, 210, 273 P. 1097 [juror]; Unif. - b. Exceptions and Distinctions.

[§ 38] Exceptions and Distinctions.

(1) Traffic Offenses. An arresting officer without a distinctive uniform and distinctive car is incompetent to testify as a witness. (Veh.C. 40804; see supra, §37.) (On incompetency of officer whose testimony is based on speed trap evidence, see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Demonstrative, Experimental, and Scientific Evidence, §883.)

(2) Fundamental Fairness. The courts have also occasionally excluded the testimony of a competent witness to assure a fair trial or orderly proceedings. (See Turner v. Louisiana (1965) 379 U.S. 466, 85 S.Ct. 546, 13 L.Ed.2d 424, 6 *Cal. Crim. (3) Federal Rules of Evidence. "Every person is competent to be a witness except as otherwise provided in these rules. However, in civil actions and proceedings, with respect to an element of a claim or defense as to which State law supplies the rule of decision, the competency of a witness shall be determined in accordance with State law." ## CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

II. COMPETENCY OF WITNESSES A. Abolished Grounds of Disqualification. 2. Dead Man Statute. a. Nature of Former Rule.

[§ 39] Nature of Former Rule.

The "dead man statute" prevented parties or their assignors from testifying against an executor or administrator, on a claim or demand against the estate of a deceased person, as to any matter occurring before the death of the decedent. It produced a great deal of case law on its scope and exceptions, and a brief summary will be helpful in appreciating the importance of the change.

(1) Theory of Disqualification. The dead man statutes were adopted on the assumption that, if the real opponent--the adverse party to the transaction--is dead, there is danger of perjury in permitting the plaintiff to give testimony as to facts which the deceased had no opportunity to contradict. (See Poulson v. Stanley (1898) 122 C. 655, 658, 55 P. 605; Roncelli v. Fugazi (1919) 44 C.A. 249, 251, 186 P. 373; Warren v. Nair (1951) 102 C.A.2d 298, 300, 227 P.2d 515; Adams v. Herman (1951) 106 C.A.2d 92, 103, 234 P.2d 695; Vonchina v. Estate of Turner (1957) 154 C.A.2d 134, 136, 315 P.2d 723; Trabin v. Title Ins. & Trust Co. (1959) 52 C.2d 149, 152, 339 P.2d 136; Corso v. Security-First Nat. Bank (1959) 171 C.A.2d 816, 824, 342 P.2d 56; Hays v. Clark (1959) 175 C.A.2d 565, 568, 346 P.2d 448; Simon v. Bank of America (1962) 209 C.A.2d 21, 25, 25 C.R. 654; 4 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 175; 33 So. Cal. L. Rev. 339; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §557 et seq.; 1 McCormick 5th, §65; 2 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §578; 80 A.L.R.2d 1296 [testimony to facts of automobile accident as testimony to "transaction" or "communication" with decedent within dead man statute]; 84 A.L.R.2d 1356 [competency under dead man statute of witness to testify as to payment or nonpayment of obligation owing to decedent].)

(2) Matter or Fact Occurring Before Death. The statute was construed to cover events or transactions outside the presence of the decedent as well as those taking place in his or her presence. (See Stuart v. Lord (1903) 138 C. 672, 677, 72 P. 142; Corso v. Security-First Nat. Bank, supra, 171 C.A.2d 827, 828; 33 So. Cal. L. Rev. 339.) It was also applied to prevent the survivor of an automobile accident from testifying against the executor or administrator of a decedent killed in the accident, or dying after its commencement. (See Miller v. Du Bois (1957) 153 C.A.2d 310, 312, 314 P.2d 27; 1 McCormick 5th, §65; 77 A.L.R.2d 676 [competency of witness in wrongful death action as affected by dead man statute]; 18 A.L.R.3d 606 [statute excluding testimony of one person because of death of another as applied to testimony about lost or destroyed instrument].)

(3) Exception: Witness Not Party or Assignor. The rule excluded only the testimony of parties to the action or their assignors; it did not disqualify parties to a contract or other persons in interest, or a nominal party who asserted no claim against the estate. (See Arata v. Bank of America (1963) 223 C.A.2d 199, 202, 35 C.R. 703 [nominal party]; Hays v. Clark, supra [spouse witness, subject matter was separate property of other spouse]; Gianotti v. McDonald (1963) 213

C.A.2d 744, 745, 29 C.R. 275 [claim and proceeds relinquished by witness husband to party wife]; on community property problem, see 4 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 195; 10 Hastings L. J. 65.)

(4) Exception: Action Not on Money Claim. The statutory reference to a "claim, or demand" was construed to mean only money claims. Hence, the rule did not apply to actions to recover specific real property, to establish a trust, or others in which no monetary recovery was sought. (See Cohn v. Cohn (1929) 100 C.A. 746, 748, 281 P. 504; Holland v. Bank of Italy (1931) 115 C.A. 472, 485, 1 P.2d 1031; Humes v. Humes (1942) 56 C.A.2d 126, 132, 133 P.2d 39; Estate of Sears (1960) 182 C.A.2d 525, 531, 6 C.R. 148 [statute inapplicable to action by widow claiming that decedent husband's separate property was changed to community property by oral agreement]; Bernkrant v. Fowler (1961) 55 C.2d 588, 592, 12 C.R. 266, 360 P.2d 906 [statute inapplicable to action to have it determined that note made to decedent was discharged].)

(5) Miscellaneous Exceptions. (See Panno v. Russo (1947) 82 C.A.2d 408, 413, 186 P.2d 452 [action against partnership after death of partner]; Trabin v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., supra [codefendant without adverse interest].)

(6) Waiver of Disqualification. Although classified as a rule of incompetency, the dead man statute was construed to permit the executor or administrator to waive its benefits, thus in effect making it a rule of privilege. (See Kinley v. Largent (1921) 187 C. 71, 75, 200 P. 937; McClenahan v. Keyes (1922) 188 C. 574, 577, 206 P. 454; Deacon v. Bryans (1931) 212 C. 87, 90, 298 P. 30; Moul v. McVey (1942) 49 C.A.2d 101, 106, 121 P.2d 83; Thompson v. Hickman (1948) 89 C.A.2d 356, 364, 369, 200 P.2d 893; Hays v. Clark, supra; *Drvol v. ## CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

II. COMPETENCY OF WITNESSES A. Abolished Grounds of Disqualification. 2. Dead Man Statute. b. Repeal of Statute.

[§ 40] Repeal of Statute.

The dead man statute was strongly criticized by nearly all authorities in the field of evidence, and there was a marked tendency of the courts to construe it narrowly against disqualification. (See Trabin v. Title Ins. & Trust Co. (1959) 52 C.2d 149, 152, 339 P.2d 136; Bruce v. Ullery (1962) 58 C.2d 702, 710, 25 C.R. 841, 375 P.2d 833, quoting the text; 4 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 175, 209, 212; 9 So. Cal. L. Rev. 35; 12 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1; 15 So. Cal. L. Rev. 523; 13 Cal. L. Rev. 291; 6 Stanf. L. Rev. 358; 1 McCormick 5th, §65; 2 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§578, 578a; 1948 A.S. 882; 1960 A.S. 564.)

The California Law Revision Commission recommended abolition of the rule, and it was not restated in the Evidence Code, for the following reasons:

"The dead man statute operates unsatisfactorily. It prohibits testimony concerning matters of which the decedent had no knowledge and, hence, to which he could not have testified even if he had survived. It operates unevenly since it does not prohibit testimony relating to claims under, as distinguished from claims against, the decedent's estate even though the effect of such a claim may be to frustrate the decedent's plan for the disposition of his property. ... The dead man statute excludes otherwise relevant and competent evidence--even if it is the only available evidence--and frequently this forces the courts to decide cases with a minimum of information concerning the actual facts." (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1261.)

The Commission's substitute was a new hearsay exception permitting the estate to introduce declarations of the decedent under circumstances affording a guarantee of trustworthiness. (Ev.C. 1261; see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §225.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

II. COMPETENCY OF WITNESSES B. Remaining Grounds of Disqualification. 1. Capacity To Understand and Express. a. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 41

[§ 41] In General.

(1) Grounds for Disqualification. Under Ev.C. 701(a), a person is disqualified to be a witness for either of the following reasons:

(a) The witness is incapable of expressing himself or herself concerning the matter so as to be understood, either directly or through interpretation by one who can understand the witness. (Ev.C. 701(a)(1).)

(b) The witness is incapable of understanding the duty of a witness to tell the truth. (Ev.C. 701(a)(2).)

(2) Procedure for Disqualification. Three procedural rules apply to these grounds for disqualification:

(a) The opponent who challenges a witness' mental capacity to testify, on the ground that the witness is too young or is mentally defective, has the burden of proof on the issue. (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 405; People v. Craig (1896) 111 C. 460, 469, 44 P. 186; People v. Tyree (1913) 21 C.A. 701, 706, 132 P. 784; People v. Gasser (1917) 34 C.A. 541, 543, 168 P. 157; People v. Hall (1984) 157 C.A.3d 538, 545, 223 C.R. 267, citing the text [witness gave impression of being "emotionally unstable" and biased against defendant, but "this does not translate into incompetency"]; see generally 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §187 et seq.; 14 A.L.R.4th 802 [capacity of declarant who was asleep or unconscious]; 50 A.L.R.4th 1188 [capacity of deaf-mute as witness].)

(b) The determination is finally made by the trial judge, without resubmission of the issue to the jury. (Ev.C. 405; Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 701; see People v. Tyree, supra, 21 C.A. 706; People v. Delaney (1921) 52 C.A. 765, 769, 771, 199 P. 896; People v. McCaughan (1957) 49 C.2d 409, 421, 317 P.2d 974; People v. Blagg (1970) 10 C.A.3d 1035, 1039, 89 C.R. 446, citing the text; 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §61.)

(c) In any proceeding held outside the presence of the jury, "the court may reserve challenges to the competency of a witness until the conclusion of the direct examination of that witness." (Ev.C. 701(b).)

(2) Procedure for Disqualification.

(a) Opponent has burden of proof: See People v. Lewis (2001) 26 C.4th 334, 360, 361, 110 C.R.2d 272, 28 P.3d 34

[witness suffered from mental disorders and his testimony was hard to understand, but record did not support claim that he was incapable of expressing himself, and fact that he initially refused to answer defendant's question regarding victim's strangulation did not establish by preponderance of evidence that he did not understand duty to tell truth]; 81 Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Witnesses §183 et seq. West's Key Number Digest, Witnesses k.39 et seq.

II. COMPETENCY OF WITNESSES

B. Remaining Grounds of Disqualification.

1. Capacity To Understand and Express.

b. Children.

1. Former Law: Age 10 Distinction.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 42

[§ 42] Former Law: Age 10 Distinction.

Former C.C.P. 1880(2) treated children over 10 as competent unless incapacity was shown, and children under 10 as competent if found to possess the necessary capacity. In practice, however, children of very tender years were commonly accepted as witnesses. (See People v. Walker (1931) 112 C.A. 146, 147, 296 P. 692 [child of 5]; People v. Watrous (1935) 7 C.A.2d 7, 10, 45 P.2d 380 [child of 4]; Cheeseman v. Cheeseman (1929) 99 C.A. 290, 292, 278 P. 242 [child of 6 1/2]; People v. Harrison (1941) 46 C.A.2d 779, 785, 117 P.2d 19 [child of 9 1/2]; People v. Ernst (1953) 121 C.A.2d 287, 290, 263 P.2d 114 [children of 8 and 9]; *People v. ## CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

II. COMPETENCY OF WITNESSES

B. Remaining Grounds of Disqualification.

1. Capacity To Understand and Express.

b. Children.

2. Abrogation of Age Distinction.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 43

[§ 43] Abrogation of Age Distinction.

The reference to children, with its age distinction (see supra, §42), was eliminated by the Evidence Code. A child's competency is now determined under the general test of Ev.C. 701 (supra, §41). (See generally 2 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §505 et seq.; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §217 et seq.; C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Trial §8.84; 18 Pacific L. J. 3 [research on children as witnesses]; 28 Pacific L. J. 169 [proposed Child Witness Code] 60 A.L.R.4th 369 [child competency statutes]; 35 Proof of Facts 2d 665 [qualifying child witness to testify].) (On instruction regarding child witness, see 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §88; on admissibility of child hearsay statements in dependency proceedings where child is determined to be incompetent, see 10 Summary (9th), Parent and Child, Supp., §§689A, 689B.)

As pointed out in the Law Revision Commission Comment to Ev.C. 701, the liberal attitude of our courts on competency of very young children (supra, §42) makes this change largely one of method rather than result. (See Adamson v. Department of Social Services (1988) 207 C.A.3d 14, 20, 254 C.R. 667, citing the text [child age 5; fact that part of her testimony was unbelievable went to credibility, but did not indicate inability to perceive, recollect, communicate or understand duty to tell truth]; In re Amy M. (1991) 232 C.A.3d 849, 857, 283 C.R. 788 [child age 11 who was molestation victim held competent to testify in dependency proceedings despite her hallucinations, including one during cross-examination]; but see In re Crystal J. (1990) 218 C.A.3d 596, 601, 267 C.R. 105, citing the text [child age 7 held incompetent where he stated that he did not know difference between truth and lie]).

Where a child victim of molestation is called as a witness, the relevant determination is simply whether the victim is competent to testify, i.e., whether the victim has the capacity to understand the oath and to communicate. California does not approve or require a "taint" hearing, in which the court determines whether pretrial events, interviews, or investigations may have been so suggestive as to affect the accuracy of the victim's recollection of facts. (People v Montoya (2007) 149 C.A.4th 1139, 1149, 1150, 57 C.R.3d 770.)

II. COMPETENCY OF WITNESSES

B. Remaining Grounds of Disqualification.

1. Capacity To Understand and Express.

b. Children.

3. Medical Records of Child Witness.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 44

[§ 44] Medical Records of Child Witness.

In People v. Boyette (1988) 201 C.A.3d 1527, 247 C.R. 795, defendant was convicted of burglary, mainly on the testimony of Justin, a 5-year-old boy, that he saw defendant enter the house, remove a china cabinet, load it on his truck, and drive away. Defendant subpoenaed county medical and psychiatric records and moved for their disclosure before trial, arguing their possible relevance to the minor witness' competency and credibility. County counsel opposed disclosure, arguing that the records were confidential under Welf.C. 5328, and that the judge could determine competency without them. The judge denied the motion. Held, this was reversible error.

(a) People v. Reber (1986) 177 C.A.3d 523, 223 C.R. 139, held that the psychotherapist-patient privilege may be overridden to the extent necessary to ensure a defendant's right of confrontation, and therefore that the trial judge erred in failing to review subpoenaed psychotherapy records of victim-witnesses to determine what privileged matters were essential to vindicate defendants' rights of confrontation. Pennsylvania v. Ritchie (1987) 480 U.S. 39, 107 S.Ct. 989, 94 L.Ed.2d 40 (see 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §6), took the same position. And, People v. Caplan (1987) 193 C.A.3d 543, 238 C.R. 478, held that in the light of Reber and Ritchie, it was error to uphold a patient's claim of privilege against a defendant's discovery request without reviewing a psychotherapist's records about a victim-witness. (201 C.A.3d 1532, 1533.)

(b) Although these cases dealt with victims of sexual crimes, "their reasoning applies equally to other crimes and other kinds of witnesses." (201 C.A.3d 1533.)

(c) "We emphasize that we are not requiring disclosure of the witness's medical and psychological records. All we hold is that the trial court must review the records in chambers to determine to what extent they were privileged and whether defendant's constitutional rights to a fair trial might overcome any privilege applicable to any particular record." (201 C.A.3d 1534.)

People v. Hammon (1997) 15 C.4th 1117, 1123, 65 C.R.2d 1, 938 P.2d 986, infra, §235, overruled Boyette, Reber, and Caplan to the extent they held that the Confrontation Clause of the Sixth Amendment required pretrial disclosure of privileged information when the defendant's need for the information outweighed the patient's interest in confidentiality.

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

II. COMPETENCY OF WITNESSES

B. Remaining Grounds of Disqualification.

1. Capacity To Understand and Express.

c. Insane Persons.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 45

[§ 45] Insane Persons.

Our former statute (C.C.P. 1880(1)) making persons "of unsound mind" incompetent was superseded by Ev.C. 701, stating the general test of incompetency (supra, §41). Thus:

(1) A minor degree of mental unsoundness will not necessarily disqualify. (See People v. Crandall (1941) 43 C.A.2d 238, 242, 110 P.2d 682; People v. Tyree (1913) 21 C.A. 701, 707, 132 P. 784; People v. Ives (1941) 17 C.2d 459, 476, 110 P.2d 408; People v. Blagg (1970) 10 C.A.3d 1035, 1039, 89 C.R. 446, citing the text [mentally disordered sex offender who suffered from lapses of memory and had fantasies about little girls was competent to testify about attack in jail cell]; 2 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §492 et seq.; 32 So. Cal. L. Rev. 65.)

(2) The fact that the witness was formerly committed for insanity is not conclusive. (People v. Horowitz (1945) 70 C.A.2d 675, 696, 161 P.2d 833.)

(3) A subsequent adjudication of insanity and confinement to an asylum does not render the prior testimony of the witness incompetent. (People v. Crandall, supra, 43 C.A.2d 242; People v. Jackson (1969) 273 C.A.2d 248, 254, 78 C.R. 20 [no error in reading testimony given by witness at first trial, even though absence at second trial was due to confinement for later developed mental incompetency].)

Although the trial judge determines competency (supra, §41), "sound discretion demands the exercise of great caution in qualifying as competent a witness who has a history of insane delusions relating to the very subject of inquiry in a case in which the question is not simply whether or not an act was done but, rather, the manner in which it was done and in which testimony as to details may mean the difference between conviction and acquittal." (People v. McCaughan (1957) 49 C.2d 409, 421, 317 P.2d 974; see Stanchfield v. Hamer Toyota (1995) 37 C.A.4th 1495, 1506, 1507, 44 C.R.2d 565 [in light of uncontroverted medical evidence concerning witness' organic brain syndrome and dementia, trial judge properly found witness was incompetent].)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

II. COMPETENCY OF WITNESSES B. Remaining Grounds of Disqualification. 2. Personal Knowledge. a. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 46

[§ 46] In General.

(1) Basic Requirement. Except where an expert gives an opinion in justifiable reliance on information from others (Ev.C. 801; see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Opinion Evidence, §31 et seq.), "the testimony of a witness concerning a particular matter is inadmissible unless he has personal knowledge of the matter." (Ev.C. 702(a).) (See People v. Collins (1968) 68 C.2d 319, 328, 66 C.R. 497, 438 P.2d 33, citing the text.)

"Personal knowledge" means "a present recollection of an impression derived from the exercise of the witness' own senses." (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 702, citing Wigmore.) (See 1 McCormick 5th, §10; 2 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§478, 650 et seq.; Unif. Rules, Rule 602; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §178.)

The knowledge requirement also applies to a lay witness' opinion testimony; i.e., such an opinion must be "[r]ationally based on the perception of the witness." (Ev.C. 800(a); see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Opinion Evidence, §4.)

(2) Redetermination by Jury: Capacity Distinguished. Formerly the ability to perceive and recollect was considered an element of competency of the witness, like capacity to communicate. (See People v. Lamb (1953) 121 C.A.2d 838, 844, 264 P.2d 126; People v. McCaughan (1957) 49 C.2d 409, 420, 317 P.2d 974; People v. Pike (1960) 183 C.A.2d 729, 732, 7 C.R. 188.) The Evidence Code treats the ability to perceive and recollect as an element of the knowledge requirement: "Because a witness, qualified under Section 701, must have personal knowledge of the facts to which he testifies (Section 702), he must, of course, have the capacity to perceive and recollect those facts." (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 701.)

The effect of this change in theory is that, while capacity of a witness to communicate is finally determined by the trial judge (supra, §41), the ability of a competent witness to perceive and recollect with respect to the particular matter on which the witness testifies is only preliminarily determined by the trial judge, and ultimately redetermined by the jury. (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 701; Ev.C. 403(a)(2), and Law Rev. Com. Comment; see People v. Blagg (1970) 10 C.A.3d 1035, 1040, 89 C.R. 446, citing the text; People v. Dennis (1998) 17 C.4th 468, 525, 526, 71 C.R.2d 680, 950 P.2d 1035 [in capital murder case, trial judge did not err when, in determining 8-year-old eyewitness' competence to testify, he failed to inquire into her personal knowledge of subject matter of her testimony].)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

II. COMPETENCY OF WITNESSES
B. Remaining Grounds of Disqualification.
2. Personal Knowledge.
b. Hearsay Rule Distinguished.

[§ 47] Hearsay Rule Distinguished.

Frequently, a witness purports to narrate facts that, it develops, were merely related to the witness by another. This testimony is often regarded as "hearsay" in the guise of fact. Thus, in Pinto v. Seely (1913) 22 C.A. 318, 135 P. 43, plaintiff administrator, suing for the value of attorney's services allegedly rendered by decedent P to defendant, testified that she was familiar with some of P's legal business, that she knew P had acted as attorney for defendant, that at the time of his death he was defendant's attorney in a particular case, and that P had told her he had a contract calling for 50% of the recovery. Held, all of this testimony was hearsay, because her "knowledge" of P's professional dealings was only of confidences imparted to her by P. (22 C.A. 322.)

Similarly, in People v. Ware (1924) 67 C.A. 81, 86, 226 P. 956, a police officer testified to the illegal purposes of an organization, but it appeared that his supposed knowledge was derived entirely from declarations of persons whom he believed to be members. And in People v. Smith (1921) 55 C.A. 324, 328, 203 P. 816, a surgeon testified that he performed an autopsy on defendant's wife, but then admitted that he did not know her and merely relied on the statement of the undertaker's assistant as to whose body it was.

Many other cases are to the same effect. (See McGowan v. Los Angeles (1950) 100 C.A.2d 386, 389, 223 P.2d 862, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §240; People v. Gray (1906) 148 C. 507, 509, 83 P. 707 [opinion testimony of witness as to identity of murderer rejected where based solely on statement of another person]; Huyck v. Rennie (1907) 151 C. 411, 415, 90 P. 929 [witness cannot testify to knowledge or belief of another]; Sneed v. Marysville Gas & Elec. Co. (1906) 149 C. 704, 707, 87 P. 376 [wrongful death action; mother's testimony that decedent "had no knowledge" of dangers of electricity]; Harrigan v. Chaperon (1953) 118 C.A.2d 167, 168, 257 P.2d 716 [testimony of fire inspector as to cause of fire, based on statements received from another member of fire department].)

The result reached in all of these cases is, of course, correct; but, under the modern view, the analysis is incorrect. Hearsay evidence is evidence of a statement made "other than by a witness while testifying at the hearing." (Ev.C. 1200; see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §4.) In all of these cases, the witnesses were testifying at the hearing, and the hearsay rule was inapplicable. The true basis of exclusion was that they lacked personal knowledge of the matters. (See 2 McCormick 5th, §247; 2 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §657; 5 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1361.)

defendant had been "touching" his sister since she was 4 years of age, where daughter apparently had no personal knowledge of that touching; personal knowledge requirement applies to hearsay declarations]; 2 McCormick 6th, §247.

II. COMPETENCY OF WITNESSES

- B. Remaining Grounds of Disqualification.
- 3. Examination, Determination, and Review.

[§ 48] Examination, Determination, and Review.

(1) Examination. A witness whose competency or knowledge is challenged may be given a voir dire examination by the judge and counsel to determine the witness' qualifications. (See People v. Delaney (1921) 52 C.A. 765, 767, 199 P. 896; People v. Lamb (1953) 121 C.A.2d 838, 846, 264 P.2d 126; People v. Pike (1960) 183 C.A.2d 729, 731, 7 C.R. 188; People v. McIntyre (1967) 256 C.A.2d 894, 898, 64 C.R. 530; People v. Blagg (1970) 10 C.A.3d 1035, 1039, 89 C.R. 446, citing the text.) It is not necessary to show that an infant witness has religious beliefs or detailed knowledge of the nature of the oath. "As long as the child understands that some earthly evil will follow if he does not tell the truth, that is all that is required." (People v. Lamb, supra, 121 C.A.2d 845.)

(2) Determination. A child's capacity to receive just impressions of the facts relates to the time the events occurred, while the capacity to state them truly relates to the later time of trial. Thus, the child may be competent to testify to occurrences remembered, though they happened at a time when he or she lacked capacity to testify. This distinction is illustrated in Bradburn v. Peacock (1955) 135 C.A.2d 161, 286 P.2d 972, an action for injuries to a young girl run over by defendant's truck. The victim's brother, familiar with defendant and his truck, saw the accident. He was then 3 years and 3 months old, and at the time of trial was slightly over 5 years. The trial judge, without any voir dire examination, refused to permit him to testify. Held, it was reversible error to determine incompetency as a matter of common knowledge or law. "We cannot say that no child of 3 years and 3 months is capable of receiving just impressions of the facts that a man whom he knows in a truck which he knows ran over his little sister. Nor can we say that no child of 3 years and 3 months would remember such facts and be able to relate them truly at the age of 5." (135 C.A.2d 164.)

An unsubstantial challenge does not require a voir dire examination; the granting or denial of a motion to voir dire a witness on competency is within the sound discretion of the trial judge. The judge should deny the motion when it is made "on the basis of nothing more than defense counsel's characterization of the witness' prior statements regarding his fears, or the strangeness or unusualness of the events such as at bench, or when made to inquire into other matters which are the proper subjects of cross examination." (People v. Willard (1983) 155 C.A.3d 237, 240, 202 C.R. 100.)

(2) Determination. People v. Avila (2006) 38 C.4th 491, 589, 43 C.R.3d 1, 133 P.3d 1076 [in capital murder trial, trial judge did not err in determining that witness was capable of communicating so as to be understood and that he understood his duty to tell truth; witness' testimony was difficult to comprehend chiefly because his statements were so contradictory, but determination of his credibility was for jury]; See People v. Augustin (2003) 112 C.A.4th 444, 448, 5 C.R.3d 171 [in prosecution for assault, trial judge's determination that victim, who suffered from cerebral palsy, was competent witness fell within scope of his discretion; victim may have been more difficult to understand than typical witness, but record reflected that she was intelligent, and defense counsel could have asked her to repeat her answers if he did not understand them].

II. COMPETENCY OF WITNESSES

C. Judge Presiding.

1. Disqualification by Objection.

a. Nature of Problem.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 49

[§ 49] Nature of Problem.

(1) Testimony in Case Before Another Judge. Judicial office is not a disqualifying circumstance, and a judge may be freely summoned as a witness in a case before another judge, e.g., to testify concerning a former trial where the judge presided, or as a character witness for a party. (See 1 McCormick 5th, §68; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1909.) And when a judge other than the presiding judge is called as a witness in his or her official capacity, the judge is entitled to representation by counsel. (Govt.C. 68111.)

However, in People v. McGhee (1987) 193 C.A.3d 1333, 239 C.R. 28, where two judges testified for the prosecution as to the bad character of defendant's primary witness, the court offered the following observations:

(a) The commentary to Canon 2 of the Code of Judicial Conduct (see 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Courts, §54) states: "The testimony of a judge as a character witness injects the prestige of his office into the proceedings and may be misunderstood to be an official testimony." (193 C.A.3d 1348.)

(b) Although no cases restrict judges from testifying as character witnesses in cases other than those on which they have worked (193 C.A.3d 1347, citing the text), when the American Bar Association Code (upon which the California Code of Judicial Conduct is modeled) was being discussed, many were concerned with the problem. "They concluded it was best that judges not be voluntary character witnesses. ... We suggest that if a judge's testimony is necessary to a case the proper procedure to follow would be to subpoena him." (193 C.A.3d 1348.)

(2) Testimony in Case Over Which Judge Is Also Presiding. Another policy problem arises where a judge's testimony is necessary in the very case over which he or she is presiding. The testimony is of course admissible, because the judge is a competent witness. But the propriety of continuing to sit, and of accepting the case if he or she knew of the likelihood of being called as a witness, are seriously doubted: "[E]xamination and cross-examination of a judge-witness may be embarrassing and prejudicial to a party. By testifying as a witness for one party, a judge appears in a partisan attitude before the jury. Objections to questions and to his testimony must be ruled on by the witness himself. The extent of cross-examination and the introduction of impeaching and rebuttal evidence may be limited by the fear of appearing to attack the judge personally." (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 703; see Model C., Rule 302; People v. Connors (1926) 77 C.A. 438, 452, 246 P. 1072 [criticizing the practice of testifying to material facts in a criminal case]; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1909; 59 Harv. L. Rev. 512.)

II. COMPETENCY OF WITNESSES

C. Judge Presiding.

1. Disqualification by Objection.
- b. Uniform Rule and Evidence Code.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 50

[§ 50] Uniform Rule and Evidence Code.

Former C.C.P. 1883 authorized the judge, in his or her discretion, to order the trial postponed or suspended, and to take place before another judge.

Ev.C. 703(b) adopted the view of the original Uniform Rule of Evidence: "Against the objection of a party, the judge presiding at the trial of an action may not testify in that trial as a witness. Upon such objection, the judge shall declare a mistrial and order the action assigned for trial before another judge."

In a criminal case, a mistrial granted against the objection of the defendant will give defendant the defense of double jeopardy in an attempted retrial. If, however, the defendant either moves for or consents to a mistrial, that defense is waived. (See 1 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Defenses, §120 et seq.) Ev.C. 703(c) takes care of this problem by providing that the defendant's objection to calling of the judge as a witness "shall be deemed a motion for mistrial," and, in consequence, a waiver of the defense.

II. COMPETENCY OF WITNESSES

C. Judge Presiding.

1. Disqualification by Objection.
- c. Testimony in Subsequent Proceeding.

[§ 51] Testimony in Subsequent Proceeding.

In Merritt v. Reserve Ins. Co. (1973) 34 C.A.3d 858, 110 C.R. 511, plaintiff truck driver contended that defendant insurance carrier had refused in bad faith to settle plaintiff's earlier personal injury claim against the carrier's insured, as a result of which plaintiff's judgment against the insured largely remained unsatisfied. To show the carrier's alleged bad faith, plaintiff called as an expert witness the judge who had presided over the original action. He testified that a defense witness at the earlier trial was not a persuasive witness, thus inferring that the defense had been unskillfully handled. Held, the judge should have been barred from testifying as an expert on matters which took place before him in his judicial capacity. The Evidence Code prohibits him from testifying over objection at the trial of an action over which he presided; "[w]e think it only slightly less prejudicial when a judge expresses his opinion as a witness about events that occurred in an earlier trial over which he had presided." (34 C.A.3d 883.) (See 86 A.L.R.3d 633 [judge as witness in cause not on trial before him].)

The disqualification is now covered by Ev.C. 703.5: "No person presiding at any judicial or quasi-judicial proceeding, and no arbitrator or mediator, shall be competent to testify, in any subsequent civil proceeding, as to any statement, conduct, decision, or ruling occurring at or in conjunction with the prior proceeding, except as to a statement or conduct that could (1) give rise to civil or criminal contempt, (2) constitute a crime, (3) be the subject of investigation by the State Bar or Commission on Judicial Performance, or (4) give rise to disqualification proceedings" against a judge for having personal knowledge or for being biased or prejudiced. (C.C.P. 170.1(a)(1), (a)(6).)

However, Ev.C. 703.5 is inapplicable to mediators with respect to mediation of visitation or custody issues under Family C. 3160 et seq. (see 10 Summary (9th), Parent and Child, Supp., §231M et seq.). (Ev.C. 703.5.) And Ev.C. 703.5 only limits who may testify, not what testimony may be received. (Caro v. Smith (1997) 59 C.A.4th 725, 733, 734, 69 C.R.2d 306, 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, Supp., §521 [where defendant challenged arbitration award on basis that she had not consented to arbitration, Ev.C. 703.5 did not require exclusion of declarations by plaintiff and her attorney detailing colloquy between defendant and arbitrator, where declarations were not by arbitrator].)

C. Judge Presiding.

2. Procedure Where No Objection.

[§ 52] Procedure Where No Objection.

(1) Disclosure to Parties. In the absence of objection, the judge is a qualified witness and "may testify." (Ev.C. 703(d).) But, before he or she may be called, the judge must, outside the presence and hearing of the jury, "inform the parties of the information he has concerning any fact or matter about which he will be called to testify." (Ev.C. 703(a).)

(2) Consent to Mistrial. Calling the judge "shall be deemed a consent to the granting of a motion for mistrial." (Ev.C. 703(c).) This provision, like the one on objection, is principally designed to preclude the defense of double jeopardy on a retrial. (See supra, §50.)

II. COMPETENCY OF WITNESSES

D. Juror.

[§ 53] Juror.

(1) Nature of Problem. The problem of a juror testifying in the very case in which he or she is on the jury is similar to that of the judge. "A juror-witness is in an anomalous position. He manifestly cannot weigh his own testimony impartially. A party affected adversely by the juror's testimony is placed in an embarrassing position. He cannot freely cross-examine or impeach the juror for fear of antagonizing the juror--and perhaps his fellow jurors as well. And, if he does not attack the juror's testimony, the other jurors may give his testimony undue weight." (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 704; see 1 McCormick 5th, §68; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §1910; 86 A.L.R.3d 781 [trial jurors as witnesses in same state court or related case]; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §280.)

(2) Former Law and Evidence Code. Former C.C.P. 1883 left it to the judge's discretion to determine whether the matter should be tried before another jury. Ev.C. 704(b) takes the same approach as the comparable rule on judge's testimony (supra, §49):

"Against the objection of a party, a juror sworn and impaneled in the trial of an action may not testify before the jury in that trial as a witness. Upon such objection, the court shall declare a mistrial and order the action assigned for trial before another jury."

Ev.C. 704 parallels Ev.C. 703 (supra, §49 et seq.) in its implementation:

(a) In the absence of objection, a juror "may be compelled to testify." (Ev.C. 704(d).)

(b) The juror must first, in a proceeding conducted by the judge outside the presence and hearing of the remaining jurors, inform the parties of the information he or she has. (Ev.C. 704(a).)

(c) Calling the juror to testify is deemed a consent to the granting of a mistrial. (Ev.C. 704(c).)

(d) Objection to calling of a juror is deemed a motion for a mistrial. (Ev.C. 704(c).)

(3) Distinctions. Ev.C. 704 deals solely with a juror's testimony before the jury in a trial in which he or she is a juror. Other problems involving jurors are treated elsewhere. (See Ev.C. 1150, 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §392 et seq. [evidence to test a verdict]; on voir dire examination of jurors, see 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §150 et seq.; 5 *Cal. Crim. ##### 1. Civil Cases.

a. Attorney as Witness for Client.

[§ 54] Attorney as Witness for Client.

An attorney may of course be a competent witness. But if called to testify for his or her client (except as to purely formal matters such as attestation of an instrument), the approved practice is to leave the trial to other counsel, to avoid the appearance of being paid a professional fee for favorable testimony. The objection is not one of competency, but of legal ethics. (See Hotaling v. Hotaling (1922) 187 C. 695, 709, 203 P. 745; People v. Smith (1970) 13 C.A.3d 897, 903, 91 C.R. 786, infra, §57, citing the text; *Reynolds v. E. Attorney.

1. Civil Cases.

b. Opposing Attorney Called as Witness.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 55

[§ 55] Opposing Attorney Called as Witness.

An embarrassing and prejudicial situation can arise where a party calls the other party's attorney to give testimony unfavorable to the attorney's client. This may and should be avoided by a stipulation on the matter involved, preferably made outside the presence of the jury. But where the stipulation is sought and rejected without justification, there is no misconduct in forcing an admission on the stand.

Thus, in Romeo v. Jumbo Market (1967) 247 C.A.2d 817, 56 C.R. 26, a personal injury case, Dr. S testified for plaintiff and Dr. N for defendant. Defendant's counsel asked for a stipulation that Dr. S had seen Dr. N's report before testifying. Plaintiff's counsel cited this entirely proper request as misconduct and rashly declared, "I have no knowledge whatsoever about it." He was then called to the stand and admitted that he had sent the report to Dr. S. Held, there was no error in this procedure. ( 247 C.A.2d 821.)

II. COMPETENCY OF WITNESSES

E. Attorney.

2. Criminal Cases.

a. Prosecutor as Witness.

[§ 56] Prosecutor as Witness.

A prosecutor is a competent witness. (See People v. Stokley (1968) 266 C.A.2d 930, 936, 72 C.R. 513; People v. Guerrero (1975) 47 C.A.3d 441, 444, 120 C.R. 732; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §§229, 230; 54 A.L.R.3d 100.)

However, ethical considerations may be involved where the prosecutor interviews a prospective witness without a third party present.

Thus, in People v. Guerrero, supra, defendant G and another were convicted of three sex crimes committed upon a 17-year-old girl. On appeal, the sole issue was the trial judge's ruling that the prosecutor, a deputy district attorney, could testify as a witness. The prosecutor had interviewed C, a possible hostile witness, without an investigator present, and C told him that he had disclosed the victim's age to defendant. At the trial, C testified that he had not communicated that information to defendant, and the prosecutor took the stand, without objection, to impeach him. Held, any error in this procedure was harmless, for it related solely to the unlawful intercourse charge, the least serious, and the jury also found defendant guilty of forcible rape and oral copulation. (47 C.A.3d 444, 448.) But the court, noting that in a number of out-of-state cases there had been reversals on the ground of testimony by the prosecutor (47 C.A.3d 448, footnote 8), undertook to restate the ethical considerations involved.

(a) Although an attorney is a competent witness, the dual role of witness and advocate--particularly the practice of a prosecuting attorney testifying in a case he or she is prosecuting--should be approved only in extraordinary circumstances. (47 C.A.3d 445.)

(b) The relevant ethical canons, incorporated into Rules of Professional Conduct, former Rule 2-111 (now Rule 5-210; see 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §522), elaborately cover the subject. (47 C.A.3d 445, 446.) And the A.B.A. Standards for Criminal Justice stress the preventive law approach: The prosecutor should avoid interviewing a prospective witness except in the presence of a third person unless the prosecutor is prepared to forgo impeachment or withdraw from the case in order to present his or her impeaching testimony. (47 C.A.3d 447.)

(c) The problem presented by cases of this kind would have been avoided if this A.B.A. recommendation were followed; and "[w]e urge that district attorneys familiarize themselves and their staffs with the pertinent provisions of the State Bar rules and the American Bar Association canons and standards, as to the latter particularly those applicable to 'the prosecution function.' " (47 C.A.3d 448.) A footnote adds: "We suggest like action by public defenders and private counsel, with emphasis on ABA standards as to 'the defense function.' " (47 C.A.3d 449, footnote 9.)

II. COMPETENCY OF WITNESSES

E. Attorney.

2. Criminal Cases.

b. Defense Counsel as Witness for Defendant.

[§ 57] Defense Counsel as Witness for Defendant.

In People v. Smith (1970) 13 C.A.3d 897, 91 C.R. 786, on unusual facts, the reviewing court upheld the trial judge's action in barring the defense attorney from the witness stand during defendant's third trial on the same robbery charges. The following sequence of events led to that result:

First trial. Attorney B, a deputy public defender, represented defendant and called J as a witness. After J declined to answer questions on the grounds of self-incrimination, the jury deadlocked and the judge declared a mistrial.

Second trial. Attorney T, another deputy public defender, represented defendant and listed both J and attorney B as prospective witnesses, with indications that B had received significant statements from J. When defendant expressed a lack of confidence in T, the judge suggested that defendant should have an attorney completely divorced from the public defender's office. Defendant, however, insisted on once again having B as his attorney. The judge said: "You realize that if he represents you he won't be able to appear on your behalf as a witness." The judge then declared a mistrial and reappointed B.

Third trial. After the prosecution rested, B made an offer of proof that J committed the robbery, indicating that J should be called as a witness. If J still claimed his Fifth Amendment privileges, B would testify that J "told me that he committed the crime and that Nova Smith, the defendant, did not commit the crime." The judge rejected this offer. Held, the ruling was proper.

(a) B's status as defendant's trial attorney did not disqualify him as a witness. "Evidence Code section 700 declares that 'except as otherwise provided by statute' every person is qualified as a witness. No California statute disqualifies a lawyer from testifying in a trial to which his client is a party. California authorities declare that the inhibition against attorneys' testimony is a problem of professional ethics rather than competence." (13 C.A.3d 903.)

(b) The judge, however, had inherent power to control the proceedings by imposing a pretrial election on the defense, i.e., withdrawal of the attorney if he chose to testify. "The propriety of this kind of intervention is judgmental. It varies with the circumstances, entailing a balance between the integrity of the fact-finding process and the client's need for continuity of representation. The potential for debasement of the trial was large. Viewed in prospect, the attorney's proposed testimony was important; it would describe the alleged confession of a third party to the crime of which defendant stood accused. The testimony might at least kindle a reasonable doubt in the mind of a reasoning juror. The attorney would attempt to shift between the sworn objectivity of the witness and the duty-bound partisanship of the advocate. Because of his professional and official role, his sworn testimony would lay silent claim to a heightened degree of credibility. He would thrust upon his opponent a sticky choice between vigorous cross-examination of his professional colleague and abdication of his own professional responsibility. After cross-examination the witness would doff his hat as witness, pick up his hat as advocate and stand before the jury in summation. The synthetic change of hats would hardly interrupt the flow of impressions and influences emanating from him as a unitary human being. In his role as advocate he would assure the jurors of his own veracity as witness. In justice to his client, he could do no less. His opponent would then be driven to attack his credibility as a witness. In justice to his client, the opponent too could do no less." (13 C.A.3d 907.)

(c) The circumstances here were fully foreseeable. Aside from defendant's subjective preference, there was no compelling need for B to resume his attorney's role in the third case. "The need for the attorney's testimony was discernible in advance of the trial; there was no emergency; the facts of the case were simple, the attorney's professional involvement transitory, the episode to which he would testify of brief duration." (13 C.A.3d 909.) (See People v. Guerrero (1975) 47 C.A.3d 441, 449, footnote 9, 120 C.R. 732, supra, §56; 52 A.L.R.3d 887 [defense attorney as witness for client in state criminal case]; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §228.)

It is error to deny defense counsel's request to withdraw and then refuse to permit counsel to give relevant testimony. In People v. Goldstein (1982) 130 C.A.3d 1024, 182 C.R. 207, defendant's counsel was informed on the afternoon of the trial's commencement that a material witness expected to testify for the defense had recanted and indicated that he would testify for the prosecution. Counsel moved to be relieved because he expected to testify to prior inconsistent statements of the witness, and the judge denied the motion. The witness then gave damaging testimony for the prosecution, defendant's counsel asked permission to give the impeaching testimony, and the judge refused. Held, this was error of constitutional dimension. The first ruling, denying the motion to be relieved as counsel, was based on speculation, and would have called for a continuance in a trial already long delayed. But the second ruling denied the defendant the fundamental right to call a favorable witness to give relevant evidence on the issue of guilt. (130 C.A.3d 1030.) The error, however, was harmless, for, on cross-examination, the witness admitted the prior inconsistent statements and his own devious behavior. (130 C.A.3d 1032, 1033.)

2. Criminal Cases.

c. Defense Counsel Called by Prosecution.

[§ 58] Defense Counsel Called by Prosecution.

It is serious misconduct for the prosecution to call the defendant's attorney as a witness where the facts to be proved could be established in another manner. The effect of such a maneuver is to impair the right of consultation and to subvert the privilege against self-incrimination. (People v. Lathrom (1961) 192 C.A.2d 216, 227, 230, 13 C.R. 325, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §237; see 108 Harv. L. Rev. 775.)

In People v. Rodriguez (1981) 115 C.A.3d 1018, 171 C.R. 798, F, defendant's counsel, at a lineup, was asked by the prosecutor what he thought of it, and he replied: "It's not bad." At the trial F and A, another attorney, represented the defendant, and A extensively cross-examined the identifying witnesses and the police officer who conducted the lineup, in developing the defense of misidentification. The prosecutor then, without warning, called F as a witness. A objected, the judge indicated that he would overrule the objection, no one consulted defendant, and the objection was withdrawn. F then testified to his opinion at the lineup. Held, conviction reversed; the conduct of the prosecutor, coupled with the response of the court and defense counsel, deprived defendant of the effective assistance of counsel. "The jury can hardly avoid inferring the defendant's own attorney does not believe in the defense he himself is presenting." (115 C.A.3d 1021.)

III. PRIVILEGE: IN GENERAL

A. Nature of Rules of Privilege.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 59

[§ 59] Nature of Rules of Privilege.

(1) Incompetency Distinguished. Incompetency prevents a person from testifying, for reasons which supposedly make the person a bad witness. (See supra, §41 et seq.) Privilege exempts the person from testifying, i.e., allows him or her to refrain if he or she chooses, or if someone else who is entitled to the privilege claims it, for reasons of public policy that have nothing to do with competency to testify. The rules of privilege are designed to protect personal relationships or other interests where the protection of confidentiality is considered more important than the need for the evidence. (See Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 910, infra, §65; 1 McCormick 5th, §72 et seq.; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2285; 98 *Harv. L. Civil Discovery, Chap. 12.)

(2) Types of Privilege. A privilege may be an exemption from the duty to take the stand and testify (criminal defendant, spouse) or an exemption from the duty to testify as to privileged matters (the usual witness' privilege). A privilege also includes the right of the holder to prevent another from disclosing privileged information. (See infra, §66.) (On similar--but distinguishable--protection from disclosure afforded by special privacy statutes, see infra, §503 et seq.)

(3) Right To Claim or Waive Privilege. A privilege is personal to the holder; thus, it must be claimed and may be waived (see infra, §67 et seq.). But the claim is protected from adverse comment or inference. (See infra, §95 et seq.)

(4) Appellate Review. If the trial judge sustains the objection to testimony at the trial, or refuses to order the witness to answer questions on a deposition or to produce records, the ruling or order is of course reviewable on appeal from the final judgment. More commonly, however, mandamus is sought to compel the judge to require the witness to answer or produce records. (See I.E.S. Corp. v. Superior Court (1955) 44 C.2d 559, 564, 283 P.2d 700; 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §71.) (On the effect of overruling a claim, see infra, §93, 94.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

III. PRIVILEGE: IN GENERAL

B. Privileges Statutory.

1. General Rule.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 60

[§ 60] General Rule.

(1) Evidence Code. Unless otherwise provided by statute, no person has a privilege to do any of the following:

(a) To refuse to be a witness. (Ev.C. 911(a).)

(b) To refuse either to disclose a matter or to produce a writing, object, or other thing. (Ev.C. 911(b).)

(c) To insist that another not be a witness, not disclose a matter, or not produce a writing, object, or other thing. (Ev.C. 911(c).)

Ev.C. 911 codifies established law. (See Whitlow v. Superior Court (1948) 87 C.A.2d 175, 184, 196 P.2d 590, infra, §61; Tatkin v. Superior Court (1958) 160 C.A.2d 745, 753, 326 P.2d 201; Chronicle Publishing Co. v. Superior Court (1960) 54 C.2d 548, 565, 7 C.R. 109, 354 P.2d 637, infra, §270, quoting the text; 1 McCormick 5th, §75; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §§2192 et seq., 2286; C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Discovery §4.3.)

Although all of the important privileges are fully stated in the Evidence Code, there is some coverage of the subject in other codes. Ev.C. 920 assures the continuing force of these other sections by providing that "[n]othing in this division shall be construed to repeal by implication any other statute relating to privileges." (For the newsperson's shield law, see infra, §333 et seq.; on privileges that are defenses to tort actions, see 5 Summary (9th), Torts, §§278 et seq., 498 et seq.; for the distinguishable special privacy statutes, see infra, §503 et seq.)

(2) Construction of Privilege Statutes. It is sometimes said that, because privileges operate to keep out relevant evidence and thereby impede the correct determination of issues, they should be strictly construed so as to keep them within the narrow limits of the statutes. (See Dwelly v. McReynolds (1936) 6 C.2d 128, 131, 56 P.2d 1232; Samish v. Superior Court (1938) 28 C.A.2d 685, 695, 83 P.2d 305; Tanzola v. De Rita (1955) 45 C.2d 1, 6, 285 P.2d 897; People v. McGraw (1983) 141 C.A.3d 618, 622, 190 C.R. 461, quoting McCormick; People v. Thompson (1982) 133 C.A.3d 419, 427, 184 C.R. 72; infra, §99.) These observations should not, however, be given undue significance. The modern trend of decisions is to fully protect most of the privileges, particularly the privilege against self-incrimination; and the Evidence Code in a number of instances changes our former law in accordance with this policy.

(3) Federal Rules of Evidence. "Except as otherwise required by the Constitution of the United States or provided by Act of Congress or in rules prescribed by the Supreme Court pursuant to statutory authority, the privilege of a witness, person, government, State, or political subdivision thereof shall be governed by the principles of the common law as they may be interpreted by the courts of the United States in the light of reason and experience. However, in civil actions and proceedings, with respect to an element of a claim or defense as to which State law supplies the rule of decision, the privilege of a witness, person, government, State, or political subdivision thereof shall be determined in accordance with State law." (F.R. Evid., Rule 501; see Trammel v. United States (1980) 445 U.S. 40, 100 S.Ct. 906, 910, 63 L.Ed.2d 186, 192, 193, infra, §170; 2 Mueller & Kirkpatrick, Federal Evidence 2d, §169 et seq.; 1 McCormick 5th, §76.1; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §288; 9 *U.C. ## III. PRIVILEGE: IN GENERAL

B. Privileges Statutory.

2. Illustrations.

a. General Duty To Testify.

[§ 61] General Duty To Testify.

The duty to testify in the absence of a statutory privilege, and the fallacy underlying some popular excuses, were considered in Whitlow v. Superior Court (1948) 87 C.A.2d 175, 196 P.2d 590. Following settlement of a malpractice suit against Dr. W, Mrs. T wrote the superior judge charging that crucial testimony of a witness had been altered in the reporter's transcript, and demanding an investigation. The judge filed the letter, commenced the investigation by taking testimony of the reporter and other witnesses, and sought to examine Mrs. T and Dr. W. Mrs. T declined to answer certain questions because her attorney was not present; Dr. W claimed his "constitutional right as a citizen" to refuse to testify without advice of his counsel, who was not present, stating that his attorney had so advised him and had also told him "to challenge the jurisdiction of the court." Upon being threatened with contempt, both sought a writ of prohibition. Held, writ denied; despite the informality of the accusation, it was the right and duty of the court to inquire into charges of criminal misconduct on the part of its officers. The inquiry was therefore a judicial proceeding in which witnesses (not defendants) could be called and examined, and were required to testify unless incriminating questions were asked. "That a witness may wish his attorney to be present is no excuse. He might name a thousand wishes and name a thousand persons he would like to have present, but he would not for any or all of them be relieved of his duty to give his testimony." (87 C.A.2d 184.)

Simrin v. Simrin (1965) 233 C.A.2d 90, 43 C.R. 376, suggests a questionable distinction. A mother, deprived of custody of her children by a divorce decree, moved to modify, and called a rabbi to give evidence of her rehabilitation. He refused to testify on the ground that he had acted as marriage counselor to the parties under an express agreement with the parties that their communications would be confidential and that neither would call him as a witness. The trial judge ruled that he need not relate the confidential communications, and the wife's motion was denied. Held, the ruling was not erroneous. There is no statutory privilege for a marriage counselor, and the clergyman privilege, limited to confessions in the course of church discipline, does not cover communications made to a religious advisor acting as a marriage counselor. (233 C.A.2d 94.) However, the agreement, though a contract to suppress evidence, also sought to further the policy of counseling as a means of preserving marriages: "One should not be permitted, under cover of suppression of evidence, to repudiate an agreement so deeply affecting the marriage relationship. For the unwary spouse who speaks freely, repudiation would prove a trap; for the wily, a vehicle for making self-serving declarations." (233 C.A.2d 95.) The court also saw helpful analogies in the rule excluding statements made in an offer to compromise, and in the private proceedings of the conciliation court, designed to encourage the spouses to speak freely in the hope of preserving the marriage. (233 C.A.2d 95.) (See 13 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 178.)

This reasoning is a persuasive argument to the Legislature for the creation of a marriage counselor's privilege (see 13 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 186), but it cannot be considered a safe precedent:

(a) Ev.C. 911 permits no such exception.

(b) The conciliation court analogy fails, for its confidentiality is imposed by statute.

(c) The only basis for refusing to compel the rabbi to testify was the agreement of the parties, and this carries the implication that a pseudo-privilege may be created, by such an agreement, for clergymen, social workers, probation officers, arbitrators, schoolteachers, or even family friends. (On the right of an independent expert to refuse to testify as to his expert opinion, see 50 A.L.R.4th 680.)

III. PRIVILEGE: IN GENERAL

B. Privileges Statutory.

2. Illustrations.

b. Nonstatutory Privileges Rejected.

[§ 62] Nonstatutory Privileges Rejected.

In a number of instances, claims of privilege having no foundation in our express statutes have been rejected.

(1) Communications to Probation Officer. There is no statutory privilege protecting communications to a probation officer. (See People v. Carter (1973) 34 C.A.3d 748, 751, 110 C.R. 324 [distinguishing exclusion of admissions made under implied threat or inducement; see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §65 et seq.].) (For exclusion of statements made to probation officers in connection with deferred entry of judgment and pretrial diversion programs, see infra, §265.)

(2) Communications to Social Worker. Psychiatric social workers not covered by Ev.C. 1010 (infra, §215) have no psychotherapist privilege to keep the Department of Social Welfare from establishing information systems about the people they assist. (Belmont v. State Personnel Bd. (1974) 36 C.A.3d 518, 522, 111 C.R. 607.) (For decisions of other states on communications to social worker, see 50 A.L.R.3d 563; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §541 et seq.)

(3) Communications to Parent. A child has no privilege to prevent disclosure of communications made in the course of the parent-child relationship. (In re Terry W. (1976) 59 C.A.3d 745, 747, 130 C.R. 913; 100 Harv. L. Rev. 910 [reviewing case law and statutes and urging establishment of parent-child testimonial privilege]; 1984 A.S. 363 [family privileges].)

In the Terry case, a minor was adjudicated a ward of the juvenile court after his mother, over objection, testified that he confessed a burglary to her. Held, the testimony was properly received. A communication from child to parent falls within a privileged area in certain situations; e.g., where the communication to the parent is to further the child's interest in communication with, or is necessary for transmission of information to, a lawyer, a physician, or a psychotherapist. But the self-incrimination privilege is inapplicable to incriminatory statements made to persons unconnected with government, and the right to privacy does not protect all intrafamily communication from compelled disclosure. (59 C.A.3d 748.) (See 16 San Diego L. Rev. 811 [approving New York case upholding privilege under federal constitutional right of privacy]; 1983 A.S. 196; 62 A.L.R.5th 629 [confidential communications between relatives other than husband and wife].)

(4) Nonmarital Relationship. The husband-wife privilege requires a marriage relationship; there is no privilege for unmarried cohabitants. (People v. Delph (1979) 94 C.A.3d 411, 416, 156 C.R. 422, infra, §173.)

(5) Communications to Jailhouse Lawyer. There is no privilege protecting an inmate's communications to a "jailhouse lawyer." (See People v. Velasquez (1987) 192 C.A.3d 319, 237 C.R. 366, infra, §101.)

(6) Academic Peer Review Materials. F.R. Evid., Rule 501 (supra, §60) does not justify creation of a new privilege of a university to refuse to disclose peer review materials relating to tenure of a former faculty member alleging discrimination on the basis of race and sex. (University of Pennsylvania v. E.E.O.C. (1990) 493 U.S. 182, 110 S.Ct. 577, 582, 107 L.Ed.2d 571, 582.)

(7) Self-Critical Analysis Privilege. The self-critical analysis privilege, recognized by federal courts for analyses conducted by federal contractors pursuant to their equal opportunity obligations, does not exist in California. (Cloud v. Superior Court (1996) 50 C.A.4th 1552, 1558, 58 C.R.2d 365 [in action against employer for gender-based discrimination, defendant's self-critical affirmative action analyses were not protected by self-critical analysis privilege, nor did they come within attorney-client, work product, or trade secret privileges]; see 34 San Diego L. Rev. 93 [discussing self-critical analysis privilege and arguing it should not apply to drug and medical device industry].)

Suggestions are constantly made to create additional statutory privileges. (See 1 McCormick 5th, §§76.2, 77; 98 Harv. L. Rev. 1575, 1588, 1609; 14 San Diego L. Rev. 876 [proposed privilege of academic researcher to refuse disclosure of information obtained under pledge of confidentiality]; 69 Cal. L. Rev. 1538 [proposed academic freedom privilege]; 15 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 473 [proposed extension of federal Privacy Act of 1974 to give confidentiality to personnel files in the private sector]; 45 *U.C.L.A. L. ### III. PRIVILEGE: IN GENERAL

B. Privileges Statutory.

2. Illustrations.

c. Distinction: Consular Privilege Under Treaty.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 63

[§ 63] Distinction: Consular Privilege Under Treaty.

In People v. Corona (1989) 211 C.A.3d 529, 259 C.R. 524, defendant, charged with first degree murder, met with Rodriguez, the Mexican consul, to discuss defendant's eligibility for a prisoner exchange program between Mexico and the United States. During the meeting Rodriguez asked defendant whether he had committed the crime and defendant replied, "Yes, I did it and I'm a sick man and a sick man cannot be judged as the rest of them." At the trial, Rodriguez testified to the conversation. Held, though the communication was privileged, defendant could not raise the error on appeal.

(a) The Vienna Convention on Consular Relations provides that members of a consular post are under no obligation to give evidence concerning matters connected with the exercise of their functions, and that the sending state may waive this privilege only by a written waiver communicated to the receiving state. (211 C.A.3d 538.) In this case, the Mexican Government did not submit a written waiver; but a government official advised the district attorney that the government had no objection to the testimony. And an attorney purporting to represent the government, who appeared informally to advise the judge of the consular privilege, did not assert it. (211 C.A.3d 539.)

(b) The holder of the privilege was the Mexican Government, and Rodriguez had no authority to claim or waive it. But under Ev.C. 916(a), the court on its own motion or on motion of a party must exclude privileged information if the person from whom the information is sought is not authorized to claim it and there is no party so authorized. (211 C.A.3d 539; see infra, §92.) This duty of the court extends to the consular privilege: Although that privilege is not specified in the Evidence Code, Ev.C. 911, providing that there are no privileges except as provided by statute (see supra, §62), must be construed in the light of Ev.C. 230, stating that the word "statute" includes treaties. (211 C.A.3d 540.)

(c) It was therefore error for the trial judge to fail to assert the consular privilege on behalf of Mexico; but defendant, who was not the holder, could not raise the error on appeal. (211 C.A.3d 540, citing Ev.C. 918, infra, §93.) This rule is not unjust as applied to defendant, for the purpose of the privilege is not to benefit individuals but to ensure efficient performance of functions by consuls. And even if a prisoner could raise the claim, the state, as holder of the privilege, could waive it over his objection. (211 C.A.3d 541.)

III. PRIVILEGE: IN GENERAL

B. Privileges Statutory.

3. Nonstatutory Exceptions to Privilege Rejected.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 64

[§ 64] Nonstatutory Exceptions to Privilege Rejected.

In Dickerson v. Superior Court (1982) 135 C.A.3d 93, 185 C.R. 97, the statutory holder of the privilege was the successor of a corporation which originally retained the attorney. Minority shareholders sued the attorney and Dickerson--president and controlling shareholder of the original corporation--for fraud and breach of fiduciary duty. The shareholders then took the attorney's deposition, and sought to question him about the discussions and transactions involved. The attorney claimed privilege, the trial court ordered him to answer, and he sought relief by extraordinary writ. Held, writ granted; the compelled testimony would violate the privilege.

(a) The minority shareholders relied on the 1970 federal Circuit Court of Appeals case of Garner v. Wolfenbarger, which held that the privilege is qualified in litigation between a corporation and its own stockholders, and that the stockholders may show that it should not be invoked in the particular instance. But the Garner court was acting under F.R. Evid., Rule 501 (see supra, §60), which gives federal courts flexibility to develop rules of privilege. (135 C.A.3d 99.) In California, the courts are not free to create new privileges (Ev.C. 911); and they are similarly without power to create an exception to an existing privilege because the area "is one of the few instances where the Evidence Code precludes the courts from elaborating upon the statutory scheme." (135 C.A.3d 99, quoting Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 911.)

(b) The court added that, although the rule of Garner, supra, might be a desirable means of preventing abuse of the attorney-client privilege by corporate fiduciaries, any exception must be made by statute. (135 C.A.3d 99, 100.) However, on a proper showing, the fraud exception to the privilege might be invoked. (135 C.A.3d 100; see infra, §153 et seq.) (See National Football League Properties v. Superior Court (1998) 65 C.A.4th 100, 108, 75 C.R.2d 893 [in professional football club's shareholder action against football league and its corporate marketing arm, trial judge erred in ordering corporate defendant to disclose documents protected by attorney-client privilege, where there was no showing club had independent attorney-client relationship with corporate counsel or that services of counsel had been sought for fraudulent purpose]; following Dickerson.)

In Wells Fargo Bank v. Superior Court (2000) 22 C.4th 201, 91 C.R.2d 716, 990 P.2d 591, a bank, cotrustee of a private express trust, petitioned the probate court to settle its accounts and approve its resignation as cotrustee. The trust beneficiaries, claiming misconduct by both cotrustees, filed objections to the bank's accounts and petitioned for removal of the other cotrustee. In response to the beneficiaries' request for documents relating to the trust, the bank produced documents reflecting confidential communications with its attorneys on the subject of trust administration. However, it asserted the attorney-client privilege as to documents reflecting communications with its attorneys about the beneficiaries' claims of misconduct, and the bank's outside trust administration counsel claimed the protection of the work product doctrine for other documents. The trial judge granted the beneficiaries' motion to compel, but the Court of Appeal reversed, vacating the order compelling production of documents subject to the attorney-client privilege and directing the trial judge to examine in camera the documents as to which outside counsel had claimed protection of the work product doctrine. Held, judgment of the Court of Appeal affirmed.

(a) No statutory exception exists. Prob.C. 16060 imposes a duty on trustees to keep the trust beneficiaries reasonably informed, and under Prob.C. 16064, a beneficiary may request a report of information about the trust (see 13 Summary (10th), Trusts, §85). Neither of these statutes necessarily requires a trustee to disclose privileged communications. "If the Legislature had intended to restrict a privilege of this importance, it would likely have declared that intention unmistakably, rather than leaving it to courts to find the restriction by inference and guesswork in the interstices of the Probate Code." (22 C.4th 207.)

(b) Nonstatutory exceptions may not be created. In some jurisdictions, including the Ninth Circuit, courts have given the trustee's reporting duties precedence over the attorney-client privilege. But California courts do not enjoy the freedom to restrict the attorney-client privilege based on notions of policy or ad hoc justification. (22 C.4th 208, 209.) "The privileges set out in the Evidence Code are legislative creations; the courts of this state have no power to expand them or to recognize implied exceptions. ... The [beneficiaries'] argument is nothing more than a plea for an implied exception." (22 C.4th 206.) Moeller v. Superior Court (1997) 16 C.4th 1124, 69 C.R.2d 317, 947 P.2d 279, text, §107, did not create or recognize any exceptions to the privilege; it simply determined that the privilege was not personal to the trustee but passed from the predecessor trustee to its successor along with the other powers of the office. (22 C.4th 209.)

(c) Privilege was not waived. The bank had no obligation to disclose any confidential communications on the subject of trust administration. The fact that it did disclose certain of those communications does not mean that it waived the privilege as to other documents not yet disclosed. The bank apparently believed in good faith that its disclosures were required, but the law at the time was uncertain. "An honest mistake of law, where the law is unsettled and debatable, both militates against a finding of waiver ... and offers a possible basis for relief from actions taken in connection with pretrial discovery." (22 C.4th 211.)

(d) No joint client relationship existed. The beneficiaries could gain access to the documents they seek if they were joint clients of the bank's attorneys. But the law presumes that the attorney for the trustee represents only the trustee, and any joint client relationship would have to be demonstrated based on the facts of the particular case. Here, the record does not provide the evidence needed to support that relationship; a declaration by one of the beneficiaries even contains strong evidence to the contrary. (22 C.4th 212, citing Lasky, Haas, Cohler & Munter v. Superior Court (1985) 172 C.A.3d 264, 218 C.R. 205, text, §142.)

(e) Protection of work product doctrine may have been waived. Waiver on the basis of nonconfidential disclosure (from outside counsel to the bank) is the only conceivable basis on which the beneficiaries could claim access to outside counsel's work product. The trial judge should examine in camera those documents that were disclosed in order to determine whether they were, in fact, disclosed in confidence. While a court may not require disclosure, even in camera, of information claimed to be privileged (Ev.C. 915; see text, §87), that stricture does not apply to the work product doctrine. (22 C.4th 214, 215.)

Ev.C. 915 was amended in 2001 to make the nondisclosure rule applicable to work product claims as well. (See Supp., infra, §§87, 88.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

III. PRIVILEGE: IN GENERAL C. Scope and Construction of Division 8.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 65

[§ 65] Scope and Construction of Division 8.

(1) All Proceedings. "Except as otherwise provided by statute, the provisions of this division apply in all proceedings." (Ev.C. 910.) And "proceeding" means "any action, hearing, investigation, inquest, or inquiry (whether conducted by a court, administrative agency, hearing officer, arbitrator, legislative body, or any other person authorized by law) in which, pursuant to law, testimony can be compelled to be given." (Ev.C. 901.) The Law Revision Commission Comment to Ev.C. 910 explains the purpose of this broad application:

(a) "Most rules of evidence are designed for use in courts. Generally, their purpose is to keep unreliable or prejudicial evidence from being presented to the trier of fact. Privileges are granted, however, for reasons of policy unrelated to the reliability of the information involved. A privilege is granted because it is considered more important to keep certain information confidential than it is to require disclosure of all the information relevant to the issues in a pending proceeding. Thus, for example, to protect the attorney-client relationship, it is necessary to prevent disclosure of confidential communications made in the course of that relationship."

(b) "If confidentiality is to be protected effectively by a privilege, the privilege must be recognized in proceedings other than judicial proceedings. The protection afforded by a privilege would be insufficient if a court were the only place where the privilege could be invoked. Every officer with power to issue subpoenas for investigative purposes, every administrative agency, every local governing board, and many more persons could pry into the protected information if the privilege rules were applicable only in judicial proceedings."

(2) Where Common Law Rules Relaxed. In administrative hearings and a few other special proceedings, the common law rules of evidence are abandoned or relaxed. (See 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §36 et seq.) But a privilege is not one of the common law rules, and Ev.C. 910 adds a clarifying statement to this effect: "The provisions of any statute making rules of evidence inapplicable in particular proceedings, or limiting the applicability of rules of evidence in particular proceedings, do not make this division inapplicable to such proceedings."

(3) Special Definitions. Division 8 adds special definitions to the list contained in Division 2 (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §17), to apply solely to privileges (Ev.C. 900). Included are the following:

- (a) "Proceeding." (Ev.C. 901, supra.)
- (b) "Civil proceeding," which includes nonjudicial proceedings. (Ev.C. 902.)
- (c) "Criminal proceeding," which includes accusations against public officers. (Ev.C. 903.)

(d) "Presiding officer," who is the person authorized to rule on a claim of privilege, including arbitrators, hearing officers, referees, and similar persons. (Ev.C. 905; see Ev.C. 914 [presiding officer determines claim of privilege in same manner as judge does under Ev.C. 400 et seq.; see 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §62].)

The important concept of "holder of the privilege" is not contained in a single definition, but is separately covered in connection with particular privileges. (See Ev.C. 953, 993, 1013.)

III. PRIVILEGE: IN GENERAL

D. Eavesdroppers and Other Interceptors.

[§ 66] Eavesdroppers and Other Interceptors.

It has been the view of many authorities, particularly in connection with the attorney-client and husband-wife privileges, that a privilege is personal, and that the holder must take precautions to safeguard it. If a third person--eavesdropper, finder, or interceptor--overhears or otherwise receives the confidential communication, he has no privilege and may testify to it. (See People v. Rittenhouse (1922) 56 C.A. 541, 546, 206 P. 86 [attorney-client; dictum]; People v. Peak (1944) 66 C.A.2d 894, 903, 153 P.2d 464 [husband-wife]; People v. Mitchell (1923) 61 C.A. 569, 573, 215 P. 117 [husband-wife]; People v. Morhar (1926) 78 C.A. 380, 387, 248 P. 975 [husband-wife]; 1 McCormick 5th, §§74, 82; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2339; 22 Cal. L. Rev. 573; 10 Stanf. L. Rev. 310; 44 A.L.R.4th 841 [governmental eavesdropping on communications between accused and counsel].)

The original Uniform Rules of Evidence, departing from the Model Code, took a firm position to the contrary. (See 1953 A.S. 792; 1954 A.S. 790.) And the Evidence Code, by identical language in the several privilege sections, repudiated the eavesdropper rule. The person entitled to claim the privilege "has a privilege to refuse to disclose, and to prevent another from disclosing," the confidential communication. (See Ev.C. 954 [attorney-client]; Ev.C. 980 [husband-wife]; Ev.C. 994 [physician-patient]; Ev.C. 1014 [psychotherapist-patient]; Ev.C. 1033 [penitent]; Ev.C. 1040 [official information]; Ev.C. 1041 [identity of informer].) (On voluntary disclosure, see Ev.C. 912(a), infra, §§67, 75, 76; on waiver of privilege by making statement in known presence of unnecessary third party, see infra, §74.)

III. PRIVILEGE: IN GENERAL E. Waiver by Disclosure or Consent. 1. What Constitutes Waiver. a. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 67

[§ 67] In General.

(1) Privileges Subject to Waiver Statute. Except for the privilege against self-incrimination, Ev.C. 912(a) comprehensively states the doctrine of waiver for all of the privileges:

- (a) The lawyer-client privilege (Ev.C. 954).
- (b) The privilege for confidential marital communications (Ev.C. 980).
- (c) The physician-patient privilege (Ev.C. 994).
- (d) The psychotherapist-patient privilege (Ev.C. 1014).
- (e) The privilege of the penitent (Ev.C. 1033).
- (f) The privilege of clergyman (Ev.C. 1034).

(g) The sexual assault victim-counselor privilege (Ev.C. 1035.8). (On waiver of the privilege against self-incrimination, see infra, §§428 et seq., 497 et seq.)

(2) Scope of Statute. Ev.C. 912(a) further defines the contours of the doctrine as follows: "Except as otherwise provided in this section, the right of any person to claim a privilege ... is waived with respect to a communication protected by such privilege if any holder of the privilege, without coercion, has disclosed a significant part of the communication or has consented to such disclosure made by anyone. Consent to disclosure is manifested by any statement or other conduct of the holder of the privilege indicating consent to the disclosure, including failure to claim the privilege in any proceeding in which the holder has the legal standing and opportunity to claim the privilege." (See generally 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §§294, 303, 304, 500 et seq.; Unif. Rules, Rule 510; C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Discovery §4.10 et seq.; 9 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 477 [waiver principles and policies they promote]; 98 Harv. L. Rev. 1629 [same]; 32 Proof of Facts 3d 189 [proof of waiver of attorney-client privilege]; 31 A.L.R.3d 557 [power of bankruptcy trustee to waive privilege available to bankrupt].)

The principal kinds of conduct amounting to a waiver are as follows:

- (a) Advance waiver by contract. (See infra, §§68, 69.)

(b) Failure to claim the privilege. (See infra, §70 et seq.)

(c) Making statements in the known presence of unnecessary third parties. (See infra, §74.)

(d) Voluntary disclosure of the communication to a third person. (See infra, §§75, 76.) (For other illustrations, see infra, §80.)

Although sometimes asked to create a nonstatutory waiver in the interests of "fundamental fairness," courts have generally declined to do so. (See Estate of Kime (1983) 144 C.A.3d 246, 258, 193 C.R. 718.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Privileges Subject to Waiver Statute. Ev.C. 912(a) was amended in 2002 to add the domestic violence-counselor privilege (Ev.C. 1037.5) to the privileges that may be waived.

See Eisendrath v. Superior Court (2003) 109 C.A.4th 351, 363, 134 C.R.2d 716, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, Supp., §153 [Ev.C. 910 et seq. do not apply to mediation confidentiality privilege created by Ev.C. 111 et seq.].

(2) Scope of Statute. Ev.C. 912(a) was amended in 2002. The language quoted in the text was changed to substitute "the privilege" for "such privilege" and to delete "such" before "disclosure."

See 81 Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Witnesses §§282, 291, 292, 480 et seq. West's Key Number Digest, Witnesses k.219(1) et seq.

III. PRIVILEGE: IN GENERAL

E. Waiver by Disclosure or Consent.

1. What Constitutes Waiver.
- b. Advance Waiver by Contract.
  1. Insurance Contracts.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 68

[§ 68] Insurance Contracts.

(1) Consent Clauses. An express waiver may be made by contract. Typical are insurance policy clauses consenting to disclosure by physicians. (See Torbensen v. Family Life Ins. Co. (1958) 163 C.A.2d 401, 404, 329 P.2d 596 [waiver in insurance questionnaire]; Model C., Rule 231; 1 McCormick 5th, §73; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2388; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §504.)

These provisions have been strictly construed to protect the privilege. Thus, in Turner v. Redwood Mut. Life Assn. (1936) 13 C.A.2d 573, 57 P.2d 222, an application for life insurance provided: "I hereby authorize any doctor at any time to give to said association any information he or she may have regarding me." Held, the waiver extended only to past communications, and did not cover those made after the date of the policy. (13 C.A.2d 577.) (See In re De Neef (1941) 42 C.A.2d 691, 693, 109 P.2d 741 [decedent husband waived the doctor-patient privilege in a policy; held, his widow could still assert the husband-wife privilege as to any communications during the marriage and prior to death]; 25 Cal. L. Rev. 109.)

In Roberts v. Superior Court (1973) 9 C.3d 330, 107 C.R. 309, 508 P.2d 309, plaintiff sued for damages for physical injuries allegedly received in an automobile accident. Defendants claimed that she waived her psychotherapist-patient privilege (see infra, §211 et seq.) by signing a consent form which defendants' insurance carrier presented to her 6 days after the collision. Held, no waiver. A form consent must be strictly construed; and the language would have led plaintiff to believe that the authorization applied only to records concerning physical injuries from the accident. (9 C.3d 343.) The court added: "[W]e hesitate to sanction the solicitation of such waivers, which would substantially defeat the privacy afforded by the psychotherapist-patient privilege, and possibly disrupt the confidential relationship sought to be protected in In re Lifschutz." (9 C.3d 343.) (For In re Lifschutz (1970) 2 C.3d 415, 85 C.R. 829, 467 P.2d 557, see infra, §888, 224.)

(2) Distinction: Cooperation Clauses. The cooperation clause in a liability insurance policy is not an implied waiver of the lawyer-client privilege as to communications between the insured and its attorney in furtherance of the insured's duty to cooperate in defending a third-party action. (Rockwell Int. Corp. v. Superior Court (1994) 26 C.A.4th 1255, 1260, 1262, 32 C.R.2d 153, infra, §167.)

III. PRIVILEGE: IN GENERAL

E. Waiver by Disclosure or Consent.

1. What Constitutes Waiver.
- b. Advance Waiver by Contract.
2. Other Contracts.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 69

[§ 69] Other Contracts.

(1) Collective Bargaining Agreements. A liberal interpretation was approved in Crest Catering Co. v. Superior Court (1965) 62 C.2d 274, 42 C.R. 110, 398 P.2d 150. K, administrator of an employee welfare and retirement fund, sued C Co., the employer, to compel payment of contributions allegedly owed under its union contract. K sought discovery of employment records by interrogatories, and C Co. responded that its books and records had been destroyed by fire. K then requested copies of its employment tax returns, and C Co., being directed by the lower court to produce them for inspection, sought prohibition on the ground of privilege under Unemp.Ins.C. 1094 and 2111. Held, writ denied:

(a) The statutory privilege was clear (see infra, §255), but was waived by the union agreement. This provided that C Co. should "promptly furnish all necessary information upon demand," and that an auditor of the union fund could audit the payrolls to determine the correct amount of contributions owed. Although there was no express reference to the statutes creating the privilege, this language was nevertheless a waiver. (62 C.2d 277.)

(b) The waiver, however, was concerned with the payrolls; how did it cover the tax returns? Because (1) destruction of the payrolls left the tax returns as the only source of the required data (62 C.2d 278), and (2) the payrolls and tax returns contained the same information (62 C.2d 279).

(2) Immunity Agreements. In Maas v. Municipal Court (1985) 175 C.A.3d 601, 221 C.R. 245, defendant Sully was charged with murder. Codefendant Trina Livingston, also charged with the murder, entered into a plea bargain in which the murder charge against her was dismissed and she was granted immunity from prosecution for certain other offenses. In exchange she agreed to testify "truthfully and completely in all criminal proceedings" involving defendant Sully and others. Defendant's attorney sought to require Livingston's attorneys to produce documents and records, contending that she had waived her attorney-client privilege by agreeing to testify "completely" in exchange for immunity. Held, the privilege was not waived.

The court said: "While a written immunity agreement might include an unambiguous waiver of the attorney-client privilege among its terms, clearly the agreement at issue in this case did not. ... Read in its entirety, the plain language of the agreement requires Livingston to testify truthfully and completely about the actions and criminal offenses of the named persons, and about her own involvement in those offenses. It does not mention her own confidential communications with her attorneys and does not require her to provide statements or testify about those communications." (175 C.A.3d 607.)

III. PRIVILEGE: IN GENERAL

E. Waiver by Disclosure or Consent.

1. What Constitutes Waiver.

c. Failure To Claim.

1. What Constitutes Waiver.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 70

[§ 70] What Constitutes Waiver.

(1) In General. A waiver results from failure of the holder "to claim the privilege in any proceeding in which the holder has the legal standing and opportunity to claim the privilege." (Ev.C. 912(a), supra, §67; see People v. Slocum (1975) 52 C.A.3d 867, 880, 125 C.R. 442 [failure to object at trial, to move to strike witness' testimony at close of prosecution's case, or to raise issue at new trial motion amounted to waiver on appeal]; 36 A.L.R.3d 1367 [waiver of privilege at trial after exercise of privilege in pretrial discovery proceedings].)

Thus, a client or his or her attorney, called as a witness, may testify to the confidential communications without objection. (See People v. Riordan (1926) 79 C.A. 488, 498, 250 P. 190 [criminal prosecution of attorney; client expressly waived objection and testified fully]; People v. Ottenstorf (1954) 127 C.A.2d 104, 110, 273 P.2d 289; Agnew v. Superior Court (1958) 156 C.A.2d 838, 841, 320 P.2d 158; Cope v. Cope (1964) 230 C.A.2d 218, 235, 40 C.R. 917 [affidavits of attorney introduced in hearing on motion without objection]; People v. Dubrin (1965) 232 C.A.2d 674, 680, 43 C.R. 60; 1 McCormick 5th, §93; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2327; 10 Stanf. L. Rev. 314; 51 A.L.R.2d 521 [waiver by client].)

Likewise, a patient may testify or allow his or her doctor to testify to the confidential communication. (See Wheelock v. Godfrey (1893) 100 C. 578, 587, 35 P. 317; Hirschberg v. Southern Pac. Co. (1919) 180 C. 774, 777, 183 P. 141 [decided prior to 1917 amendment making express exception for personal injury actions; reliance on waiver no longer necessary]; Cope v. Cope, supra [affidavit of doctor introduced without objection]; People v. Clark (1993) 5 C.4th 950, 1006, 22 C.R.2d 689, 857 P.2d 1099 [by calling psychiatrist, appointed to assist defense, at pretrial suppression hearing, defendant waived attorney-client privilege as to his communications with psychiatrist]; 1 McCormick 5th, §103; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §§2389, 2390; 20 Cal. L. Rev. 307, 310; 5 A.L.R.3d 1244 [waiver as to one doctor, effect as to others]; 25 A.L.R.3d 1401 [waiver by disclosure on discovery].)

In People v. Dubrin, supra, defendant was charged with grand theft--knowingly keeping a payment mistakenly sent to him. On the issue of fraudulent intent, he attempted to call his then attorney to give evidence of an offer of restitution; but in response to the judge's query he refused to waive the privilege. Held, objections to questions asked of attorney were properly sustained. If the attorney was unauthorized by defendant to make the offer of restitution, the evidence would be irrelevant. If the attorney was authorized, the communication made through him to a third party was not privileged. And defendant could not call his attorney to testify to privileged matters and then preclude cross-examination on those matters (e.g., to show lack of authorization, or lack of means to restore, or no intent to restore until after knowledge that it might prevent prosecution). (232 C.A.2d 680.)

(2) Equivocal Response. In Calvert v. State Bar (1991) 54 C.3d 765, 1 C.R.2d 684, 819 P.2d 424, a disciplinary proceeding against attorney C for incompetent representation, the complaining client's former attorney F, who had referred the client's case to C, testified. C raised the issue of privilege between F and the client. After consulting with the client, who was present, F said that she was "not sure" whether her testimony had created an attorney-client conflict or jeopardized the client's case. The referee then granted the State Bar's motion to strike F's testimony, over C's objection. Held, this was error, because the privilege that was the basis for the ruling had been waived. F's equivocal statement after consultation with the client amounted to a failure to claim the privilege when the opportunity arose, meeting the conditions of Ev.C. 912(a). (54 C.3d 780.)

[§ 71] Nonparty Client's Failure To Appear.

In Glade v. Superior Court (1978) 76 C.A.3d 738, 143 C.R. 119, plaintiffs, suing for legal malpractice, sought discovery of confidential communications between defendant attorney and certain of his clients. Defendant claimed the privilege, and the judge gave the clients an opportunity to appear at a scheduled hearing to object to discovery. Held, their failure to appear was not a waiver of their privilege. "To find a waiver arising from the MacFarlands' failure to appear at a hearing in an action in which they are not parties and have no interest would place the burden of asserting the attorney-client privilege upon the client. This result would run counter to the rule that the attorney-client privilege is retained, even without express assertion thereof, until the holder voluntarily discloses a substantial part of the privileged communication or otherwise unambiguously manifests his consent for disclosure by others." [§ 72] Disclosure of Subject Matter.

In Lohman v. Superior Court (1978) 81 C.A.3d 90, 146 C.R. 171, plaintiff sued her former conservator, who deposed her former attorney. The trial judge ordered questions answered despite the attorney's claim of privilege. Held, order vacated; plaintiff's disclosure of communications with her other former attorneys did not waive the privilege. "[I]t is not the content of the communication but the relationship that must be preserved and enhanced as a societal value. Thus, if the client discloses certain facts to a third person and subsequently advises his attorney of those same facts in the form of a confidential communication, there has been no waiver since, obviously, the client had not disclosed to the third person the confidential communication to the attorney, i.e., had not disclosed that certain information had been communicated to the attorney." (81 C.A.3d 97.) (See 1967 A.S. 122 [opponent's discovery deposition; no waiver by patient's testimony as to nature and extent of injuries]; 25 A.L.R.3d 1401 [opponent's discovery deposition; no waiver by patient's testimony as to nature of injury or treatment]; 25 A.L.R.3d 1405 [patient's testimony relating to privileged matter given at previous trial; no waiver as to subsequent action].)

The Lohman holding was approved and followed in Miller v. Superior Court (1980) 111 C.A.3d 390, 392, 394, 168 C.R. 589, a malpractice suit by a client against her former attorney; communications between herself and her new attorneys consulted after the alleged malpractice were held privileged. (See also Schlumberger Ltd. v. Superior Court (1981) 115 C.A.3d 386, 392, 171 C.R. 413 [following Lohman and Miller].)

The same result was reached in People v. Tamborrino (1989) 215 C.A.3d 575, 263 C.R. 731. Defendant was charged with first degree residential robbery. The victim testified that she had never met defendant; he testified that he had known her for years, and that she had a motive to frame him because he had sold her bogus cocaine. On cross-examination, the trial judge asked defendant, over defense counsel's objection, whether and when he had told this story to his attorney. On a subsequent motion for mistrial, the trial judge ruled that defendant's testimony about the drug deal was a disclosure that waived the attorney-client privilege. Held, the privilege had not been waived. "Defendant's testimony concerning facts that might have been previously related by him to his counsel is not equivalent to disclosure by him of the actual content of an attorney-client communication." (215 C.A.3d 582.)

And, because a subpoena duces tecum is issued without an adversary hearing, waiver does not result from a patient's failure to object to production of medical records when the subpoena is originally served on the doctor. [§ 74] Presence of Third Parties.

Making statements in the known presence of unnecessary third parties who can overhear is considered a manifestation of intent to make a nonconfidential communication. (See Horowitz v. Sacks (1928) 89 C.A. 336, 344, 265 P. 281; People v. Gomez (1982) 134 C.A.3d 874, 879, 185 C.R. 155; 1 McCormick 5th, §101; on rule that privilege is not lost where statement is overheard by eavesdropper, see supra, §66.)

In People v. Poulin (1972) 27 C.A.3d 54, 103 C.R. 623, the victim of a bomb blast drew a diagram of the instrument while he was testifying. The bailiff, who was seated next to the jury box, saw defendant, seated next to his attorney, gesture with his hands towards the attorney, indicating size, and heard defendant say, "It was not quite like that" or "It wasn't like that." The bailiff testified to this conversation without objection. Held, the testimony was properly admitted. Not only was there a waiver but the privilege does not attach to a statement made in the presence of a third person who is ostensibly present; and there was no indication that the bailiff was eavesdropping. ### III. PRIVILEGE: IN GENERAL

E. Waiver by Disclosure or Consent.

1. What Constitutes Waiver.

e. Voluntary Disclosure to Third Person.

1. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 75

[§ 75] In General.

(1) General Rule of Waiver. Voluntary disclosure of a significant part of the communication to a third person is a waiver of the privilege. (Ev.C. 912(a), supra, §67; see People v. Barnett (1998) 17 C.4th 1044, 1124, 74 C.R.2d 121, 954 P.2d 384 [in murder prosecution, defendant, by testifying about map and directions he gave to defense investigator, and about investigator's failure to find hidden methamphetamine oil, waived attorney-client privilege, and trial judge properly allowed limited questioning of investigator on these subjects]; 1 McCormick 5th, §93; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2327.)

(2) Partial Disclosure. In Jones v. Superior Court (1981) 119 C.A.3d 534, 174 C.R. 148, infra, §209, plaintiff sued a number of pharmaceutical firms claiming injury as a result of her mother's ingestion of diethylstilbestrol (DES) while plaintiff was in utero. One of the defendants deposed her mother, J, who answered questions about her medical history before and up to the time of plaintiff's birth. She refused to answer any questions about her medical history after that time, asserting the statutory privilege, her constitutional right of privacy, and lack of relevance. On defendant's motion the trial judge ordered J to answer. Held, the order was proper.

(a) "By testifying freely that she ingested DES, and as to certain of the circumstances in which she did so, petitioner has disclosed a 'significant part' of her communications with physicians on that subject, and on the inextricably related subject of her pregnancy with plaintiff. Thus, she has waived her statutory privilege as to these matters." (119 C.A.3d 546.)

In Transamerica Title Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1987) 188 C.A.3d 1047, 233 C.R. 825, defendant, sued for bad faith breach of its title insurance contract, cross-complained for declaratory relief. In response to interrogatories, defendant stated that it relied on the defense of advice of counsel to explain the filing of the cross-complaint, and provided plaintiff with a copy of its attorneys' opinion letter. Plaintiff then requested production of all notes, memoranda, etc., relating to any advice defendant had received from its attorneys concerning the action, contending that production of the opinion letter disclosed the significant part of defendant's communication with its attorneys and, hence, was a waiver under Ev.C. 912(a). Held, there was no waiver, for there was no disclosure of a significant part of defendant's communications to its lawyers. The documents sought by plaintiff all postdated the filing of the cross-complaint and pertained to matters concerning the conduct of the litigation. Defendant was relying on the advice of counsel defense only as to the filing of the cross-complaint and not to explain its decision not to pay the claim and to continue to litigate; hence, disclosure would not significantly further plaintiff's case but would impinge on defendant's ability to freely and openly communicate with its attorneys. (188 C.A.3d 1053.)

In People v. Superior Court (Broderick) (1991) 231 C.A.3d 584, 282 C.R. 418, a prosecution for the murder of defendant's former husband and his new wife, defendant admitted to the killings but claimed that they were mitigated or excused by her mental state. Defense experts relied in part on the work of doctors who had treated defendant in the past, some of whom had testified or provided material relied on by other experts in a child custody dispute between defendant and her former husband. After a mistrial caused by a hung jury, the prosecution subpoenaed the records of all the mental health professionals relied on by the defense experts. The trial judge made a general finding that defendant had waived her psychotherapist-patient privilege by disclosing her communications to them, either through their testimony in earlier court proceedings, or through their reports that were relied on by other experts. Held, the waiver issue was inadequately determined: the judge was required to "determine as to each doctor whether the privilege had been waived and as to what material." (231 C.A.3d 595.)

(a) The subpoenas in question were extremely broad, requesting all records from the doctors over a long period. The asserted waivers occurred with respect to different doctors over a 2-year period. Even if defendant had waived the privilege as to certain communications, it did not necessarily follow that any communications made after the waiver were not privileged. (231 C.A.3d 590.)

(b) Also, particularly as to the nontestifying doctors, the disclosure may not have been significant enough to result in a waiver under Ev.C. 912. (231 C.A.3d 590.) (See Travelers Ins. Cos. v. Superior Court (1983) 143 C.A.3d 436, 444, 445, 191 C.R. 871 [answers to interrogatories not wide enough in scope and deep enough in substance to constitute significant part of communication, hence, no waiver].)

1. What Constitutes Waiver.

e. Voluntary Disclosure to Third Person.

2. Distinctions.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 76

[§ 76] Distinctions.

(1) Inadvertent Disclosure. At least two California cases have held that an inadvertent (i.e., unintentional or accidental) disclosure of a privileged communication, at least in the discovery context, is not voluntary, and therefore does not waive the privilege. (See O'Mary v. Mitsubishi Electronics America (1997) 59 C.A.4th 563, 577, 69 C.R.2d 389 [in age discrimination action, defendant employer's inadvertent production, in course of discovery, of termination list prepared at direction of in-house counsel; no waiver of attorney-client privilege]; State Comp. Ins. Fund v. WPS (1999) 70 C.A.4th 644, 652, 82 C.R.2d 799, 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, Supp., §602A [in workers' compensation dispute, plaintiff responded to discovery request by sending defense counsel numerous documents that included, inadvertently, claim summary forms clearly marked as privileged; no waiver of attorney-client privilege]; see C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Discovery §4.11; 18 Pacific L. J. 59 [discussing inadvertent disclosure cases]; 37 Santa Clara L. Rev. 547 [same]; 51 A.L.R.5th 603 [same].)

(2) Marital Privilege. The marital privilege belongs to both spouses (see infra, §188).

There was formerly authority to the effect that a voluntary disclosure by one spouse would authorize testimony by the third party. (See Wolfe v. United States (1934) 291 U.S. 7, 54 S.Ct. 279, 78 L.Ed. 617 [defendant dictated letter to stenographer, addressed to wife; stenographer permitted to testify to contents]; 22 Cal. L. Rev. 573.) Ev.C. 980, the husband and wife eavesdropper section, changes this rule: The only waiver is as to the spouse who makes the disclosure. (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 980.)

(3) Use of Interpreter by Hearing Impaired Person. A person who is deaf or hard of hearing does not waive a valid privilege merely by using an interpreter. (Ev.C. 754.5; see 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §30.)

[§ 77] Refreshing Recollection With Communication.

In Kerns Const. Co. v. Superior Court (1968) 266 C.A.2d 405, 72 C.R. 74, two plaintiffs sued Gas Co. for personal injuries resulting from an explosion. Gas Co. cross-complained against Kerns Co. Kerns Co. took the deposition of R, a Gas Co. employee. He had investigated the accident and written reports on forms labeled "Confidential" and "for the Use of the Company's Attorneys." Under the rules enunciated in D. I. Chadbourne v. Superior Court (1964) 60 C.2d 723, 36 C.R. 468, 388 P.2d 700, infra, §132, the reports were confidentially transmitted to the attorney, and were protected by the attorney-client privilege. (266 C.A.2d 412.) At the deposition, R testified that he had no independent recollection of the facts involved, and used the reports to refresh his memory, both on direct and cross-examination. The reports were furnished to him by Gas Co.'s attorney, and the latter was present at the deposition and made no objection to R's testimony or to the marking of the reports for identification. But when Kerns Co.'s attorney requested that copies of the reports be made available for inspection, Gas Co.'s attorney objected on the ground of privilege and work product. Held, the objection was too late:

"When, with knowledge of their intended use, the privileged records were furnished to the witness, which act was not required to be performed, and the witness gave testimony from them, the privilege was waived. The claim of privilege should have been made at the point when the questions were propounded to the witness which required of the witness a recitation of the material or some of the material contained in the reports. It would be unconscionable to allow a rule of evidence that a witness can testify to material contained in a report, though not verbatim, and then prevent a disclosure of the reports." (266 C.A.2d 414.)

Kerns was distinguished in Sullivan v. Superior Court (1972) 29 C.A.3d 64, 105 C.R. 241, also a personal injury case. Plaintiff conferred with her attorney about the accident, and used a transcription of the recorded conference to refresh her recollection before giving a deposition to opposing counsel. Defense counsel then sought production of that "memorandum," and the trial court granted the motion. Held, prohibition issued.

(a) In reviewing statements made to her attorney in the strictest confidence, the client was in no way consenting to a disclosure of those statements nor "by any statement or other conduct," as specified in Ev.C. 912, was she manifesting a consent to disclosure. (29 C.A.3d 68.) In Kerns, the witness testified at the deposition, using the reports without objection; in the present case, the witness refreshed her memory prior to the deposition and raised the privilege when demand was made that she produce the transcription. (29 C.A.3d 72.)

(b) The apparent conflict between the attorney-client privilege and the production requirements of Ev.C. 771 (see 3

Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §177 et seq.) "may be harmonized" by holding that the word "writing" in Ev.C. 771 was never intended to mean a transcription of a client's original discussion with her attorney. "Particularly is this so when it is realized that had the client refreshed her memory by listening to a replaying of the tape instead of reading its transcription, no claim could be made that she had waived the confidential relationship between her and her counsel. Nor could such claim be made if her attorney had told her what she had told him originally or even read to her his notes of the interview." (29 C.A.3d 73.)

(c) Because the transcription probably also contained the attorney's comments and advice, the opposing parties could not have been entitled to that information. (29 C.A.3d 73.) (For a criticism of Sullivan court's reasoning, see 6 Pacific L. J. 617.)

In Mize v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1975) 46 C.A.3d 436, 120 C.R. 787, defendant's investigator testified under cross-examination that he had refreshed his recollection from his file, which he was then asked to produce. The file contained both privileged and nonprivileged matter. Held, the objection of privilege to the entire file was too broad and therefore properly overruled. However, the mere calling of a witness who has refreshed his recollection from communications to his attorney is not a waiver so long as the privilege is claimed at the first opportunity. (46 C.A.3d 449, citing Kerns and Sullivan.)

E. Waiver by Disclosure or Consent.

1. What Constitutes Waiver.

g. Attorney's Knowledge of Facts.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 78

[§ 78] Attorney's Knowledge of Facts.

(1) Use in Prosecuting Action. In Merritt v. Superior Court (1970) 9 C.A.3d 721, 88 C.R. 337, plaintiff had recovered judgment well in excess of insurance policy limits against two defendants who were largely covered by R insurance carrier, the real party in interest. By acquiring whatever claims the original tortious parties had against R for failing to protect their interests, plaintiff brought an action against R and alleged that R had wrongfully refused to settle plaintiff's claim within the policy limits. The basis of plaintiff's contention was that R had prevented plaintiff's personal injury counsel from settling the case by furnishing them with confusing statements about the available insurance coverage. As part of its discovery procedures, R sent interrogatories to plaintiff, requesting the substance of all communications between plaintiff's allegedly confused attorneys and a workers' compensation carrier that had provided plaintiff with substantial benefits. R also sought information on the effect of the workers' compensation coverage and lien on the attorneys' handling of the litigation. Plaintiff claimed the attorney-client and work product privileges, but the trial judge ordered the questions answered. Held, this was proper.

The theory of plaintiff's lawsuit placed in issue his former attorneys' conduct and state of mind in failing to propose a settlement. While there could have been no waiver of the attorney-client privilege from the mere fact that plaintiff had initiated the lawsuit, it was obvious from the issues framed and the depositions of the former attorneys that plaintiff would be relying heavily on the attorneys' evidence; i.e., they would be proving matters which they could have learned only in the course of their employment. "Thus it was not merely the initiation of the lawsuit but rather the manner of its prosecution which constituted the waiver." (9 C.A.3d 730.)

(2) Disclosure for Client's Benefit. In Klang v. Shell Oil Co. (1971) 17 C.A.3d 933, 936, 95 C.R. 265, plaintiff had been injured in an automobile accident and was too ill to speak to the investigating officer. Instead, to avoid a traffic citation, his then attorney provided a statement of facts on plaintiff's behalf. This statement was damaging to plaintiff's trial theory (with a new attorney) as to the cause of the accident, and was admitted in evidence over objections that it was a confidential communication between attorney and client. Held, no error. Long before the trial, plaintiff's counsel had voluntarily disclosed to the officer information on how plaintiff's car had come to a stop on the freeway. The disclosure was not in confidence and not dependent on court action. When the attorney disclosed the contents of the privileged communication other than in confidence, the attorney-client privilege was lost. Plaintiff's consent was inferred from the fact that disclosure was for plaintiff's benefit in negotiations to prevent assertion of criminal liability against him. (17 C.A.3d 938.)

(3) Corporate Counsel. In Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1985) 174 C.A.3d 1142, 220 C.R. 507, plaintiff

CTI sued defendant bank on causes of action including fraud. The complaint alleged that defendant bank had become aware that R, one of its depositors, and B were using an account at the bank to defraud plaintiff; and that defendant bank, instead of closing the account as recommended by its auditors, had assisted, collaborated and conspired with the perpetrators. Defendant bank sought to depose several of plaintiff's present and former employees including Straw, an attorney who was plaintiff's assistant regional counsel. Claiming attorney-client privilege, plaintiff's attorney instructed the employees not to answer questions concerning communications between Straw and other employees. Held, there was an implied waiver of the privilege.

(b) By alleging detrimental reliance in its cause of action for fraud, plaintiff placed its knowledge of the allegedly fraudulent transactions at issue, and Straw in his dual role of business agent and attorney was the person who most thoroughly could attest to the knowledge of the corporate entity. (174 C.A.3d 1154.)

The opinion adds: "This is not to say that solely by bringing an action in fraud the attorney-client privilege disappears; nor are we asserting that the employment of in-house counsel, standing alone, erodes the privilege. We merely find that given the facts of this case, Straw's merger of business and legal functions, coupled with CTI's assertion of detrimental reliance, has resulted in the implied waiver of the attorney-client privilege." (174 C.A.3d 1154.)

E. Waiver by Disclosure or Consent.

1. What Constitutes Waiver.

h. Attorney's Investigation Used as Defense in Discrimination Case.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 79

[§ 79] Attorney's Investigation Used as Defense in Discrimination Case.

Wellpoint Health Networks v. Superior Court (1997) 59 C.A.4th 110, 68 C.R.2d 844, deals with (a) the extent to which documents produced by an attorney engaged by an employer to conduct a prelitigation investigation of an employee's discrimination claims are protected by the attorney-client and work product privileges, and (b) the issue of waiver that arises once the employer raises the adequacy of its investigation as a defense. Plaintiff, a health insurance employee who was laid off after the work of his department was contracted out, brought an action against his former employer alleging that he had been discriminated against because of his race and because he had filed a complaint with the Department of Fair Employment and Housing. The trial judge sustained demurrers to plaintiff's first and second amended complaints. Plaintiff's attorney then sought discovery of (a) records concerning an investigation conducted by defendant prior to plaintiff's layoff and in response to his claims of discriminatory treatment, and (b) plaintiff's "complete personnel file," which was defined to include the investigation documents. Although the investigation had been conducted by the attorney who was now representing defendant, the trial judge concluded that the attorney had been acting in a nonattorney capacity, and therefore the investigation documents were not protected by the attorney-client privilege. The judge ordered the documents to be produced, but also recommended that defendant prepare a privilege log as to any documents that might qualify for work product protection, and these would be inspected in camera. Held, writ of mandate issued; the discovery order was improper.

(a) Past cases have recognized that attorneys sometimes engage in nonattorney work, and that documents produced in the course of that work may therefore not qualify for attorney-client or work product protection. (59 C.A.4th 121, 122, citing Montebello Rose Co. v. Agricultural Lab. Rel. Bd. (1981) 119 C.A.3d 1, 173 C.R. 856, and Watt Industries v. Superior Court (1981) 115 C.A.3d 802, 171 C.R. 503.) However, these cases cannot be read to support a blanket rule excluding attorney investigations of employer discrimination from the protection of the privileges. Even though an attorney is hired to conduct business that does not require a lawyer, the attorney may be called on to give legal advice during the course of that work, and documents related to that advice should be protected notwithstanding the original purpose of the employment. The trial judge should not have given plaintiff "carte blanche access" to defendant's investigative file, but should have based his ruling on the subject matter of each document. (59 C.A.4th 122.)

simply asserting, as he did in a supplemental memorandum of points and authorities, that the attorney was engaged in a fact-finding mission. "At a minimum, he needed to present evidence concerning his employer's normal method of dealing with internal employment discrimination complaints and whether they were routinely assigned to outside counsel to investigate and deal with." (59 C.A.4th 124.)

(c) The trial judge additionally ruled that production of the documents was required by Lab.C. 1198.5, under which employers must allow employees to inspect those personnel files that are used to determine the employees' qualifications, promotions, raises, and discipline. (See 2 Summary (9th), Agency and Employment, §313.) But the statute does not express a legislative intention to overthrow the traditional protections afforded attorney-client communications and attorney work product, and it should not be read to establish an implied exception to that effect. (59 C.A.4th 124, 125.)

(d) Having found that the investigation documents were for the most part unprotected, the trial judge never addressed the issue of waiver. However, when an employer injects into a lawsuit an issue concerning the adequacy of its investigation, and the investigation was undertaken by an attorney or law firm, a waiver of the traditional protections must be deemed to have occurred. "If a defendant employer hopes to prevail by showing that it investigated an employee's complaint and took action appropriate to the findings of the investigation, then it will have put the adequacy of the investigation directly at issue, and cannot stand on the attorney-client privilege or work product doctrine to preclude a thorough examination of its adequacy." (59 C.A.4th 128.) If plaintiff is able to file an acceptable complaint, and defendant's answer raises an investigation defense, a finding on the waiver issue will be necessary. Thus, the trial judge's discovery order "must be reversed without prejudice to [plaintiff's] ability to reassert a right to discovery of the file at a later time if defendants interject a defense based on the investigation." (59 C.A.4th 129.)

The Wellpoint case was distinguished in Kaiser Foundation Hosp. v. Superior Court (1998) 66 C.A.4th 1217, 78 C.R.2d 543, where the employer's investigation was performed by a nonattorney human resources specialist. When plaintiffs requested discovery of the employer's investigation files, it produced over 90% of its investigation-related documents, but only after obtaining a written stipulation that this production did not constitute a waiver of the attorney-client privilege. It withheld the remainder of the documents on the basis of that privilege or the work product doctrine. The trial judge granted plaintiffs' motion to compel. Held, this was error. "Wellpoint did not make a blanket holding that the attorney-client privilege and the work product doctrine are waived in every case that an employer puts the adequacy of its prelitigation investigation at issue. ... Where a defendant has produced its files and disclosed the substance of its internal investigation conducted by nonlawyer employees, and only seeks to protect specified discrete communications which those employees had with their attorneys, disclosure of such privileged communications is simply not essential for a thorough examination of the adequacy of the investigation or a fair adjudication of the action." (66 C.A.4th 1226, 1227.)

Hiott v. Superior Court (1993) 16 C.A.4th 712, 719, 20 C.R.2d 157 [plaintiff waived privilege as to videotaped conversation with her attorney by informing defendant of existence of tape and indicating that defendant was welcome to a copy].

2. Exceptions to Waiver Rule.

a. Where Privilege Is Joint.

[§ 81] Where Privilege Is Joint.

Where two or more persons are joint holders of the lawyer-client privilege (Ev.C. 954), the physician-patient privilege (Ev.C. 994), the psychotherapist-patient privilege (Ev.C. 1014), or the sexual assault victim-counselor privilege (Ev.C. 1035.8), waiver of the right of one joint holder to claim the privilege does not affect the right of another joint holder to do so. Similarly, in the case of the privilege for confidential marital communications (Ev.C. 980), waiver of the right of one spouse to claim the privilege does not affect the right of the other spouse to do so. (Ev.C. 912(b).) (See 98 Harv. L. Rev. 1648.)

Thus, in People v. Kor (1954) 129 C.A.2d 436, 277 P.2d 94, infra, §168, where the communication was made to a joint attorney by defendant Kor in the presence of defendant Kaufman, Kaufman testified to Kor's statements without objection. Held, this failure to object (for whatever strategic reason) was not a consent to testimony by the attorney. "Kaufman could not waive the privilege for Kor." (129 C.A.2d 444.) (See criticism, 2 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 573; 10 Stanf. L. Rev. 315.)

III. PRIVILEGE: IN GENERAL

E. Waiver by Disclosure or Consent.

2. Exceptions to Waiver Rule.

b. Where Disclosure Itself Privileged.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 82

[§ 82] Where Disclosure Itself Privileged.

"A disclosure that is itself privileged is not a waiver of any privilege." (Ev.C. 912(c).)

The Law Revision Commission Comment makes this explanation: "A privilege is not waived when a revelation of the privileged matter takes place in another privileged communication. Thus, for example, a person does not waive his lawyer-client privilege by telling his wife in confidence what it was that he told his attorney. Nor does a person waive the marital communication privilege by telling his attorney in confidence in the course of the attorney-client relationship what it was that he told his wife. And a person does not waive the lawyer-client privilege as to a communication by relating it to another attorney in the course of a separate relationship. A privileged communication should not cease to be privileged merely because it has been related in the course of another privileged communication. The theory underlying the concept of waiver is that the holder of the privilege has abandoned the secrecy to which he is entitled under the privilege. Where the revelation of the privileged matter takes place in another privileged communication, there has not been such an abandonment. Of course, this rule does not apply unless the revelation was within the scope of the relationship in which it was made; a client consulting his lawyer on a contract matter who blurts out that he told his doctor that he had a venereal disease has waived the privilege, even though he intended the revelation to be confidential, because the revelation was not necessary to the contract business at hand."

III. PRIVILEGE: IN GENERAL

E. Waiver by Disclosure or Consent.

2. Exceptions to Waiver Rule.

c. Necessary Confidential Disclosure.

1. Nature of Exception.

[§ 83] Nature of Exception.

A disclosure in confidence of a communication that is protected by the lawyer-client privilege (Ev.C. 954), the physician-patient privilege (Ev.C. 994), the psychotherapist-patient privilege (Ev.C. 1014), or the sexual assault victim-counselor privilege (Ev.C. 1035.8) does not waive the privilege if the disclosure is reasonably necessary to accomplish the purpose for which the lawyer, physician, psychotherapist, or sexual assault counselor was consulted. (Ev.C. 912(d).)

The Law Revision Commission Comment states: "For example, where a confidential communication from a client is related by his attorney to a physician, appraiser, or other expert in order to obtain that person's assistance so that the attorney will better be able to advise his client, the disclosure is not a waiver of the privilege, even though the disclosure is made with the client's knowledge and consent. Nor would a physician's or psychotherapist's keeping of confidential records necessary to diagnose or treat a patient, such as confidential hospital records, be a waiver of the privilege, even though other authorized persons have access to the records. Similarly, the patient's presentation of a physician's prescription to a registered pharmacist would not constitute a waiver of the physician-patient privilege because such disclosure is reasonably necessary for the accomplishment of the purpose for which the physician is consulted. See also Evidence Code §992. Communications such as these, when made in confidence, should not operate to destroy the privilege even when they are made with the consent of the client or patient. Here, again, the privilege holder has not evidenced any abandonment of secrecy. Hence, he should be entitled to maintain the confidential nature of his communications to his attorney or physician despite the necessary further disclosure."

In Green v. Superior Court (1963) 220 C.A.2d 121, 33 C.R. 604, a divorce case in which the wife placed her fitness in issue by seeking child custody, the husband sought to prove her excessive use of drugs by production of pharmacists' prescription records. The objection, that the pharmacist receives a confidential communication of the nature of the patient's ailment from the prescribing doctor, was rejected. (220 C.A.2d 124.) As the Comment suggests, Ev.C. 912(d) changed the rule of this case. (See Rudnick v. Superior Court (1974) 11 C.3d 924, 932, 114 C.R. 603, 523 P.2d 643 [Green holding "no longer has vitality"].)

Ev.C. 912(d) was amended in 2002 to add the domestic violence-counselor privilege (Ev.C. 1037.5) to the privileges that are not waived when the disclosure is reasonably necessary.

See STI Outdoor v. Superior Court (2001) 91 C.A.4th 334, 341, 109 C.R.2d 865 [privilege was not waived as to documents prepared by counsel for two parties contemplating entering into license agreement and circulated between parties during course of negotiations; disclosure was reasonably necessary to further parties' interests in finalizing negotiations]; Pollock v. Superior Court (2001) 93 C.A.4th 817, 821, 113 C.R.2d 453 [because insured is required to submit claim to disability insurer as prerequisite to coverage, submission of claim does not constitute waiver of psychotherapist-patient privilege]; 25 California Lawyer 45 (June 2005) [STI Outdoor v. Superior Court].

(New) Disclosure for common interest: In OXY Resources Calif. LLC v. Superior Court (2004) 115 C.A.4th 874, 9 C.R.3d 621, two oil and gas companies entered into negotiations for the exchange of interests in oil and gas producing properties, and before the transaction was consummated, they also entered into a joint defense agreement providing that communications between the parties would be privileged and exempt from discovery. Once the transaction was announced, a third party claiming an interest in one of the properties sued and sought discovery of documents exchanged between the two contractual parties both before and after completion of the transaction. The trial judge, relying on STI Outdoor, ruled that the documents exchanged before completion of the transaction were privileged. As to the posttransaction documents, the judge found that their mutual disclosure was not reasonably necessary within the meaning of Ev.C. 912(d) and ordered their production. Held, writ relief was appropriate.

(a) There is no separate common interest privilege in California, and the claim of a party seeking to avoid disclosure on the basis of a common interest theory, therefore, must be analyzed on the basis of the waiver principles normally applied to attorney-client and work product claims. (115 C.A.4th 889.) First, the party must establish that the communicated information would otherwise be protected from disclosure, i.e., it falls within the attorney-client or work product privilege. Second, the party must establish that the disclosure of the information to someone outside the attorney-client relationship did not result in waiver. (115 C.A.4th 890.) A joint defense agreement such as the one entered into by the contracting parties here can evidence a reasonable expectation that any information exchanged will remain confidential. Such an expectation will not prevent waiver, however, unless the exchange was reasonably necessary for the accomplishment of the purpose for which the lawyer was consulted. (115 C.A.4th 891.)

(b) Joint defense agreements are not void as against public policy, but they cannot be the sole basis for withholding documents from disclosure. Here the trial judge relied on the parties' agreement to deny disclosure as to the pre-transaction documents regardless of whether the documents were protected by privilege and whether their exchange effected a waiver. (115 C.A.4th 893.)

(c) The judge's ruling as to the posttransaction documents was also flawed, as there was an inadequate evidentiary basis for concluding that mutual disclosure of the documents was not reasonably necessary. (115 C.A.4th 900.)

(d) On remand, "the trial court must first establish that the documents are protected by either the attorney-client privilege or the attorney work product doctrine. The trial court must then determine that there was a reasonable expectation the communications would be maintained in confidence and that the disclosures were reasonably necessary for the purpose for which attorneys were consulted. This determination will invariably hinge on the content and context of the communication. In order to assess the claims of common interest and the necessity of disclosure, the trial court may conduct an in camera review of the disputed documents." (115 C.A.4th 902.) While in camera review of documents claimed to be protected by the attorney-client privilege is generally prohibited (Ev.C. 915(a); see text, §87), it is permitted where necessary to determine whether an exception to the privilege applies. (115 C.A.4th 896.) (See Roush v. Seagate Technology, LLC (2007) 150 C.A.4th 210, 224, 58 C.R.3d 275 [in action by employee against her employer, employee could not show that information she shared with co-employee who was also suing employer maintained its confidentiality; although they had same attorney, employee and co-employee were not joint clients, and, even if they had overlapping interests, employee did not show that sharing was reasonably necessary to advance her case].)

III. PRIVILEGE: IN GENERAL

E. Waiver by Disclosure or Consent.

2. Exceptions to Waiver Rule.

c. Necessary Confidential Disclosure.

2. Clarifications and Distinctions.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 84

[§ 84] Clarifications and Distinctions.

(1) Cooperation Among Defendants for Nondefense Purpose. In Raytheon Co. v. Superior Court (1989) 208 C.A.3d 683, 256 C.R. 425, plaintiffs sued Raytheon and other defendants on contract and tort claims related to the toxic condition of certain real property. Subsequent to the filing of the suit, the Environmental Protection Agency began an investigation of the contaminated site, and on August 15, 1985, Raytheon and others entered into an administrative consent order that commenced a cooperative administrative investigation. Plaintiffs sought draft reports and related correspondence that were circulated among the defendants during the federal investigation. The trial judge ordered discovery, ruling that, under Williamson v. Superior Court (1978) 21 C.3d 829, 148 C.R. 39, 582 P.2d 126, infra, §149, circulation of the documents among the "adversarial" codefendants waived claims of attorney-client or work product privilege. Held, mandamus issued, directing reconsideration of the matter.

(a) Williamson is not controlling; it turned on the narrow public policy ground that a bargain to suppress evidence is disfavored. Here the issue is simply whether a waiver occurs when adversaries voluntarily share otherwise privileged information. (208 C.A.3d 686.)

(b) No California cases have considered whether common cooperation among defendants, for a purpose other than a common defense of the lawsuit, is a purpose "for which" the defense lawyers were "consulted." (Ev.C. 912(d).) However, Ev.C. 912(d) requires a court to determine (1) whether the parties had a commonality of interest, and (2) whether mutual disclosures were reasonably necessary to accomplish the purpose for which attorneys were consulted. (208 C.A.3d 686.)

(c) Raytheon argues that the disclosures were reasonably necessary, because it was beneficial for all to cooperate in the governmental investigation. Plaintiffs respond that, because the liability of polluters is assessed in proportion to fault, the parties' interests may well have been adverse rather than joint. Remand is necessary because the trial judge, viewing the Williamson decision as controlling, did not give Raytheon the opportunity to meet its burden of showing that the relationship of the defendants when the documents were generated was such that disclosure was reasonably necessary within Ev.C. 912(d). (208 C.A.3d 687, 688, 689.)

(d) There is no statutory provision governing waiver of work product protection; however, language in Fellows v. Superior Court (1980) 108 C.A.3d 55, 166 C.R. 274, "strongly suggests that privilege is not waived except by a disclosure wholly inconsistent with the purpose of the privilege, which is to safeguard the attorney's work product and trial preparation." (208 C.A.3d 689.) Because the trial judge relied exclusively on inapposite authority, no evidence was developed as to whether the work product was disclosed under circumstances inconsistent with the privilege. "There is no detailed description of the nature of the administrative investigation and the various interests each party had at stake during its progress; yet these facts are crucial to determining whether disclosure could reasonably be made with an expectation of confidentiality." (208 C.A.3d 689.)

(2) Distinction: Where Expert Designated as Witness. The lawyer-client privilege embraces statements from counsel to an expert that disclose confidential information communicated by the client when disclosure is reasonably necessary to further the attorney's representation of the client's interests. However, the privilege is lost upon designation of the expert as a witness, because the decision to use the expert as a witness manifests the client's consent to disclosure of the information. (Shadow Traffic Network v. Superior Court (1994) 24 C.A.4th 1067, 1078, 1079, 29 C.R.2d 693, 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §174.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1a) (New) Disclosure to Government Investigators. Ev.C. 912(d) does not prevent waiver where the client hires an attorney to represent it in civil litigation, the attorney conducts interviews and prepares reports in the course of that representation, and then the interviews and reports are shared with a government agency that is conducting a separate investigation, even if the sharing is accomplished pursuant to a confidentiality agreement. Under these circumstances, disclosure is not "reasonably necessary" within the meaning of the statute for the purpose for which the attorney was consulted. (McKesson HBOC v. Superior Court (2004) 115 C.A.4th 1229, 1237, 9 C.R.3d 812, distinguishing Raytheon Co. v. Superior Court (1989) 208 C.A.3d 683, 256 C.R. 425, text, p. 336, where the sharing was between defendants.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

III. PRIVILEGE: IN GENERAL F. Claim and Determination of Privilege. 1. Presumption of Confidentiality. a. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 85

[§ 85] In General.

If the person claiming that a communication was privileged was required initially to establish its confidential character, the purpose of the privilege would frequently be defeated, for the proof would entail the very disclosure that the statute seeks to prevent. It seems appropriate, therefore, to regard communications between persons in the privileged relationships as confidential unless they are proved otherwise.

This view has had judicial approval in connection with the marital privilege. In Blau v. United States (1951) 340 U.S. 332, 71 S.Ct. 301, 95 L.Ed. 306, petitioner, questioned by a federal grand jury and district judge, refused to reveal the whereabouts of his wife (apparently secreting herself to evade process). In reversing a judgment of contempt, the Supreme Court pointed out that petitioner obtained his knowledge from her communication, and applied the presumption that marital communications are confidential. It was not necessary for the witness to prove that the information was privately conveyed, but rather the task of the Government to overcome the presumption of confidentiality. (71 S.Ct. 302, 95 L.Ed. 308.) (See 1 McCormick 5th, §80; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2336; on procedure for judge's in camera inspection of public records for which privilege has been claimed, see infra, §299; on in camera review of claim of confidentiality under newsperson's shield law, see infra, §348.)

Ev.C. 917 adopts this rule for all of the important privileges:

"Whenever a privilege is claimed on the ground that the matter sought to be disclosed is a communication made in confidence in the course of the lawyer-client, physician-patient, psychotherapist-patient, clergyman-penitent, or husband-wife relationship, the communication is presumed to have been made in confidence and the opponent of the claim of privilege has the burden of proof to establish that the communication was not confidential."

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Ev.C. 917 was amended and subdivided in 2002. Under Ev.C. 917(a), the presumption additionally applies to the sexual assault counselor-victim and domestic violence counselor-victim privileges. Under Ev.C. 917(b), a communication made in the course of one of the specified relationships does not lose its privileged character solely because it is made by electronic means or because persons involved in the delivery, facilitation, or storage of electronic communications may have access to the communication's content.

Ev.C. 917 was further amended in 2004 to change "clergyman-penitent" to "clergy-penitent."

III. PRIVILEGE: IN GENERAL

F. Claim and Determination of Privilege.

1. Presumption of Confidentiality.
- b. Necessity of Preliminary Proof That Privilege Exists.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 86

[§ 86] Necessity of Preliminary Proof That Privilege Exists.

The burden imposed by Ev.C. 917 on the opponent of proving that a communication was not confidential (see supra, §85) arises only when the claimant first proves the preliminary fact that a privilege exists. (Mahoney v. Superior Court (1983) 142 C.A.3d 937, 940, 191 C.R. 425 [general objection asserting psychotherapist-patient privilege, without identifying particular psychotherapist and without showing that claimant had consulted him for purposes specified in Ev.C. 1011 which would make him a patient].)

In Gonzalez v. Superior Court (1995) 33 C.A.4th 1539, 39 C.R.2d 896, photographs of a seminude female bearing a striking resemblance to plaintiff, a police radio dispatcher, were placed in the men's locker room at the police station. After the photographs were removed, plaintiff acquired them. When questioned by her superiors, she refused to identify the person who had taken the photographs from a police sergeant's file cabinet and given them to her. This refusal was reflected in a negative performance review, leading plaintiff to quit and file an action for sexual harassment. Defendants served an interrogatory asking for the identity of the person who had given her the photographs. Plaintiff refused to answer, and the trial judge granted defendants' motion to compel. Held, the motion was properly granted.

(a) The information is undoubtedly relevant. Among other things, if plaintiff succeeds in establishing sexual harassment, evidence of any misconduct by her (in stealing or encouraging another to steal the photographs) will be admissible to limit the kind and quality of her damages. (33 C.A.4th 1547.)

(b) None of the established constitutional or statutory privileges are obviously applicable. Where a question calls for information that may or may not be privileged, the party asserting the privilege must establish its application before the interrogator is required to show more than basic discovery relevance. Plaintiff offers nothing to support her claims of privilege based on California's policy of protecting whistleblowers and preventing sexual harassment. "[S]he simply argues that, because Defendants took disciplinary action against her, we must assume they will retaliate against her assistant because he helped her by giving her the photographs. She conveniently ignores the fact that she has presented no evidence at all to establish her assistant's status (as noted, we do not know if he is a coworker), nor does she ever say what sort of retaliation she fears. There is not even any evidence that the photographs were given to her in confidence, with the expectation that the assistant's identity would not be disclosed." (33 C.A.4th 1549.)

(c) Plaintiff's reliance on John Z. v. Superior Court (1991) 1 C.A.4th 789, 2 C.R.2d 556, is misplaced. There the informant whose identity was protected was a traditional whistleblower (he had informed a public utility that some of its contractors were receiving payment for services not actually performed); there was no hint that he was guilty of any wrongdoing; and he filed a lengthy declaration detailing threats to his life. Plaintiff simply speculates that her assistant, if identified, will be disciplined. She has not satisfied her burden of proof. (33 C.A.4th 1552, 1553.)

III. PRIVILEGE: IN GENERAL

F. Claim and Determination of Privilege.

2. Disclosure to Court.

a. General Rule: No Compelled Disclosure.

[§ 87] General Rule: No Compelled Disclosure.

For much the same reason that a communication is presumed to be confidential (supra, §85), the claimant of the important privileges, such as attorney-client and husband-wife, may not be compelled to disclose the information to the judge in order that the judge may rule on the claim. (Ev.C. 915(a).)

In Carlton v. Superior Court (1968) 261 C.A.2d 282, 67 C.R. 568, plaintiff, a guest in defendant's automobile, was injured when defendant ran the car off the road. Plaintiff sued for personal injuries, alleging defendant's intoxication as the cause, which defendant denied in his answer. Plaintiff then sought inspection of hospital records, other than statements by defendant to his doctor, relating to defendant's treatment for intoxication, and the lower court ordered it. The hospital refused, and the lower court, following issuance of a subpoena duces tecum, proposed to examine the records in camera to determine which were subject to inspection. Held, prohibition issued to prevent it from acting.

Plaintiff's theory was that the only records he sought to inspect were not privileged, and that the court could separate the privileged material. But the court held that the only exceptions to the nondisclosure rule were those codified in Ev.C. 915. (261 C.A.2d 292.) A strong dissenting opinion argues that in a criminal case a blood test is permitted in the public interest, despite strong constitutional challenge, and that the right of recovery of an innocent victim against an intoxicated driver is entitled to just as much protection. Moreover, an intoxicated driver, charged with felony drunk driving, might well plead guilty, and his plea would be admissible against him in a subsequent civil action by the guest: thus, if the driver is prosecuted the privilege is not available, but if he is sued by the victim it is. "It is inconceivable to me that justice can be obstructed by such patently arbitrary, fictitious and unrealistic reasoning and distinction." (261 C.A.2d 295.)

III. PRIVILEGE: IN GENERAL

F. Claim and Determination of Privilege.

2. Disclosure to Court.

b. Exceptions: Required Disclosure to Judge.

1. Statutory Basis.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 88

[§ 88] Statutory Basis.

(1) Qualified Privilege. Three types of privilege are recognized in qualified form: they are protected only if the interest in secrecy "out-weighs the necessity for disclosure in the interest of justice." These are the official information privilege (Ev.C. 1040, infra, §246), the identity of informer privilege (Ev.C. 1041, infra, §307), and the trade secret privilege (Ev.C. 1060, infra, §350). To apply this qualification intelligently, the judge may have to know what the confidential information is, and the practice has developed of an in camera inspection for this purpose.

Ev.C. 915(b), following this view, states that if the judge "is unable" to rule on such a claim without disclosure, the judge may "require the person from whom disclosure is sought or the person authorized to claim the privilege, or both," to disclose it to the judge in chambers, out of the presence and hearing of all persons except the person authorized to claim it and such others as the person is willing to have present.

As a further safeguard, "[i]f the judge determines that the information is privileged, neither he nor any other person may ever disclose, without the consent of a person authorized to permit disclosure, what was disclosed in the course of the proceedings in chambers." (See Lipton v. Superior Court (1996) 48 C.A.4th 1599, 1619, 56 C.R.2d 341 [in attorney's bad faith action against malpractice insurer, in camera review was proper procedure where plaintiff sought insurer's documents containing both loss reserve and reinsurance information as well as claimed privileged matter].) (On use of same practice to review claim of official information privilege, see infra, §249; to review claim under newperson's shield law, see infra, §348.)

(2) Claim of Privilege Against Search Warrant for Documentary Evidence. A proviso to Ev.C. 915(a) makes the Ev.C. 915(b) in camera inspection available in a hearing under P.C. 1524(c) to determine a claim of privilege against a search warrant for documentary evidence raised by a lawyer (Ev.C. 950), physician (Ev.C. 990), psychotherapist (Ev.C. 1010), or clergyman (Ev.C. 1030), who is not reasonably suspected of criminal activity related to the evidence sought.

(3) Claim of Other Privilege. In re Lifschutz (1970) 2 C.3d 415, 437, footnote 23, 85 C.R. 829, 467 P.2d 557 (infra, §224), contains this dictum: "Although ordinarily a patient cannot be required to disclose privileged information in order to claim the privilege (Evid. Code, §915, subd. (a)), because the privileged status of psychotherapeutic communications under the patient-litigant exception depends upon the content of the communication, a patient may have to reveal some information about a communication to enable the trial judge to pass on his claim of irrelevancy. Upon such revelation, the trial judge should take necessary precautions to protect the confidentiality of these communications; for example, he might routinely permit such disclosure to be made ex parte in his chambers. (Compare the procedure suggested in Evid. Code, §915, subd. (b).)" (For subsequent decisions approving in camera inspection on this theory, see Lemelle v. Superior Court (1978) 77 C.A.3d 148, 160, 143 C.R. 450 [dangerous patient exception (Ev.C. 1024) to psychotherapist-patient privilege]; Mavroudis v. Superior Court (1980) 102 C.A.3d 594, 606, 162 C.R. 724 [same]; infra, §229.)

However, the statutory procedure ordinarily is not necessary where the attorney-client privilege is involved. (See People v. Glen Arms Estate (1964) 230 C.A.2d 841, 847, footnote 1, 41 C.R. 303.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Qualified Privilege. Ev.C. 915(b) was amended in 2001 to add the work product privilege to those qualified privileges for which the judge may order in camera disclosure if the judge is otherwise unable to rule on the privilege claim. The amendment also rendered the subdivision's language gender-neutral.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 89

[§ 89] Constitutional Basis.

In Vela v. Superior Court (1989) 208 C.A.3d 141, 255 C.R. 921, city police officers made statements to members of a special investigation team charged with gathering evidence for use by the city in defending against possible future civil litigation arising out of a shooting incident. Defendants, who were charged with crimes arising out of the same incident, sought to discover the statements. Held, the statements were within the city's attorney-client privilege, but an in camera hearing is necessary to determine whether the privilege must give way to pretrial access to protect the defendants' constitutional rights of confrontation and cross-examination.

The court said: "Conceivably, parts of the officer's statement may not be relevant to the underlying criminal action, and the trial court should, in light of all the facts and circumstances, initially decide how much, if any, must remain confidential. Defendant's entitlement to discovery is not absolute. The attorney-client privilege may be overridden only if, and to the extent, necessary to ensure defendant's constitutional rights of confrontation and cross-examination. Thus, the trial court must weigh defendant's constitutionally based need against the statutory privilege claimed by City and determine which privileged matters, if any, are essential to ensure defendant's right of confrontation and access to matters reasonably required to permit a full and fair cross-examination. The trial court must also create a record of the in camera hearing, and the findings made therein, adequate to permit appellate review of its ruling." (208 C.A.3d 151.)

III. PRIVILEGE: IN GENERAL

F. Claim and Determination of Privilege.

2. Disclosure to Court.

b. Exceptions: Required Disclosure to Judge.

3. Basis in Federal Common Law.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 90

[§ 90] Basis in Federal Common Law.

In United States v. Zolin (1989) 491 U.S. 554, 109 S.Ct. 2619, 105 L.Ed.2d 469, the Court held that, under federal common law, a district court may conduct an in camera review of material allegedly protected by the attorney-client privilege to determine the applicability of the crime-fraud exception (infra, §153 et seq.). The court reasoned as follows:

(a) F.R. Evid., Rule 104(a) (see 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §48) does not categorically prohibit the party opposing the privilege from relying on the results of an in camera hearing. Unlike Ev.C. 915(a) (supra, §87), the federal rule does not provide that all materials claimed to be privileged must be excluded from consideration in ruling on the privilege. (109 S.Ct. 2628, 105 L.Ed.2d 487.)

(b) In camera review does not destroy the privileged nature of the contested communications. That being the case, "the costs of imposing an absolute bar to consideration of the communications in camera for the purpose of establishing the crime-fraud exception are intolerably high," creating "too great an impediment to the proper functioning of the adversary process." (109 S.Ct. 2629, 105 L.Ed.2d 489.)

(c) Before the court may engage in an in camera review, the party opposing the privilege must present relevant evidence, lawfully obtained and not adjudicated to be privileged, sufficient to support a reasonable belief that in camera review may yield evidence that establishes the exception's applicability. (109 S.Ct. 2631, 2632, 105 L.Ed.2d 491, 492.) Once the showing is made, the decision to engage in an in camera review is in the court's sound discretion. (109 S.Ct. 2631, 105 L.Ed.2d 491.)

III. PRIVILEGE: IN GENERAL

F. Claim and Determination of Privilege.

2. Disclosure to Court.

c. Judge's Discretion To Deny In Camera Hearing.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 91

[§ 91] Judge's Discretion To Deny In Camera Hearing.

Ev.C. 915(b) (supra, §88) is permissive, and the decision on whether to hold such a hearing is within the trial court's sound discretion. (In re Muszalski (1975) 52 C.A.3d 475, 482, 125 C.R. 281.)

In the Muszalski case, a prisoner preparing for a parole hearing sought to inspect a probation report which had been submitted to the trial court when he was sentenced and which was filed with the Department of Corrections. The trial judge refused to order an in camera hearing at which a correctional counselor would have testified about the need for confidentiality. Held, ordinarily an in camera hearing should have been conducted but, on the facts here, it was properly denied.

(a) A judge's private perusal of allegedly confidential documents may be insufficient to disclose the Department's reasons for its confidential classification. In many cases, the reasons for confidentiality may not spring from the face of the document but may be based on other factors which the custodian of records could explain. Anything less would have the judge act in a vacuum. (52 C.A.3d 482.)

(b) Because the burden of demonstrating the need for confidentiality rests on the Department, it would be an abuse of discretion to refuse a request for an in camera hearing when that hearing is the only means available for the Department to meet its burden of proof without disclosing the very information claimed to be confidential. (52 C.A.3d 483.)

(c) Here, however, the trial court did not abuse its discretion. The disputed probation report was or should have been supplied to defense counsel and to the defendant at the time of sentencing. Because, by statute, the contents had to be disclosed to defendant then, it would be irrational and serve no useful purpose to classify the document as confidential now and deny defendant access to it. (52 C.A.3d 483.) (See In re Olson (1974) 37 C.A.3d 783, 112 C.R. 579, 3 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Punishment, §619 [proper balance between state's interest in confidentiality and inmate's interest in obtaining liberty by inspecting prison files]; People v. Superior Court (Biggs) (1971) 19 C.A.3d 522, 530, 97 C.R. 118 [Ev.C. 915(b) creates erroneous impression that ruling for or against privilege should be made at close of in camera inquiry; better practice is for adversary hearing after preliminary in camera hearing].)

An in camera hearing is not proper on a claim of official information privilege (Ev.C. 1040; see text, §246) unless the party claiming the privilege explains in open court why the privilege applies or declares that it cannot do so without betraying the privilege. If that showing is made, and the trial court finds that it is unable to evaluate the claim without disclosure of information that the party asserts is privileged, the court is authorized by Ev.C. 915(b) to conduct an in camera hearing to evaluate the existence of the privilege. (Torres v. Superior Court (2000) 80 C.A.4th 867, 870, 95 C.R.2d 686 [in probation revocation proceeding in which defendant sought names of those who accompanied detective on probation search, trial judge erred in setting ex parte in camera hearing on prosecution's claim of official information privilege where prosecution asked for hearing but said nothing more].)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

III. PRIVILEGE: IN GENERAL F. Claim and Determination of Privilege. 3. Exclusion by Presiding Officer.

[§ 92] Exclusion by Presiding Officer.

(1) Duty of Judge To Exclude. The fact that the clerk or secretary of an attorney was present when a confidential communication was made does not rob it of its confidential character. (See infra, §121.) But it may occasionally happen that the clerk or secretary is called to testify without either the attorney or client present. The clerk or secretary is not the holder of the privilege and is helpless. In such a case, Ev.C. 916 provides that the judge or other presiding officer must, on his or her own motion or the motion of any party, exclude the privileged information.

The two conditions under which the judge must act are: (a) the witness is not authorized to claim the privilege, and (b) there is no party authorized to do so.

But if an authorized person instructs the judge to permit disclosure, or the proponent shows that there is no authorized claimant in existence, the judge may not exclude. (Ev.C. 916(b).)

The Law Revision Commission Comment makes this distinction:

"Section 916 is designed to protect only privileged information that the holder of the privilege could protect by claiming the privilege at the hearing. It is not designed to protect unprivileged information. For example, if the statement offered in evidence is a declaration against the penal interest of the declarant, Section 916 does not authorize the presiding officer to exclude the evidence on the ground of the declarant's privilege against self-incrimination. If the declarant were present, his self-incrimination privilege would merely preclude his giving self-incriminating testimony at the hearing; it could not be asserted to prevent the disclosure of previously made self-incriminating statements."

(2) Duty of Judge To Advise Witness of Privilege. In People v. Flores (1977) 71 C.A.3d 559, 139 C.R. 546, defendant contended that it was error for the trial judge to tell a prosecution witness that he could claim privilege as to discussions with his attorney concerning a grant of immunity from prosecution. Held, the advice was mandatory. "Evidence Code section 916 requires that the trial court exclude on its own motion privileged information when the party from whom the information is sought is not a person authorized to claim the privilege and a party who is authorized to claim the privilege is not a party to the proceeding. Inherent with this mandate is the obligation that the court, when aware that a witness is without advice of counsel and uninformed, inform such witness of his right to assert the privilege. To permit the witness to testify under such known circumstances is error." (71 C.A.3d 564.)

III. PRIVILEGE: IN GENERAL

F. Claim and Determination of Privilege.

4. Effect of Overruling Claim.

a. Claim Overruled in Present Proceeding.

[§ 93] Claim Overruled in Present Proceeding.

(1) In Judicial Proceeding. If a party's claim of privilege is rejected, he or she testifies under compulsion, and if judgment is rendered against him or her, the party may obtain a review of the ruling on appeal from the judgment. (See, e.g., People v. Kor (1954) 129 C.A.2d 436, 437, 277 P.2d 94, infra, §168.) But there is no good reason why the wrongful invasion of the privilege of a third person, which results in the introduction of evidence otherwise admissible, should be a ground for challenge by the party. (See People v. Mann (1957) 148 C.A.2d 851, 853, 307 P.2d 684; 1 McCormick 5th, §73.1; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2196; 2 A.L.R.2d 645 [right of one against whom testimony is offered to invoke privilege of communication between others].) Accordingly, Ev.C. 918 states: "A party may predicate error on a ruling disallowing a claim of privilege only if he is the holder of the privilege, except that a party may predicate error on a ruling disallowing a claim of privilege by his spouse under Section 970 or 971."

If the holder of the privilege does not choose to acquiesce in the judge's ruling and test it later on appeal, the party may refuse to answer and, if held in contempt, may review the contempt order by certiorari (or, if imprisoned, by habeas corpus). And other extraordinary writs, such as prohibition and mandamus, have also been employed to protect against invasion of the privilege in discovery proceedings. (See, e.g., Holm v. Superior Court (1954) 42 C.2d 500, 505, 267 P.2d 1025 [prohibition]; 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §242 et seq.)

(2) In Nonjudicial Proceeding. Except where a nonjudicial body has constitutional judicial powers (e.g., Public Utilities Commission, and Workers' Compensation Appeals Board), it cannot directly punish for contempt; it must seek a court order to comply with the direction to testify. (See 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §73.) Thus, a party whose claim of privilege is overruled in an administrative hearing cannot be held in contempt "unless he has failed to comply with an order of a court" that he disclose the information. (Ev.C. 914(b).)

The Legislature and legislative committees, however, have independent power to commit and arrest for contempt. (See Govt.C. 9405, 9406, 9409.)

III. PRIVILEGE: IN GENERAL

F. Claim and Determination of Privilege.

4. Effect of Overruling Claim.

b. Claim Overruled in Prior Proceeding.

[§ 94] Claim Overruled in Prior Proceeding.

It sometimes happens that a claim of privilege is erroneously rejected, disclosure is compelled, and thereafter, in a subsequent proceeding, the improperly coerced disclosure is offered in evidence. In principle, it would seem clear that a privilege is not waived by testimony wrongfully compelled, and that to admit the evidence would sanction its violation. Accordingly, Ev.C. 919(a) makes the evidence inadmissible against a holder of the privilege for either of these reasons:

- (1) A person authorized to claim the privilege claimed it, but disclosure erroneously occurred.
- (2) The presiding officer failed to exclude the privileged information as required by Ev.C. 916 (see supra, §92).

Ev.C. 919(b) adds this caveat: "If a person authorized to claim the privilege claimed it, whether in the same or a prior proceeding, but nevertheless disclosure erroneously was required by the presiding officer to be made, neither the failure to refuse to disclose nor the failure to seek review of the order of the presiding officer requiring disclosure indicates consent to the disclosure or constitutes a waiver and, under these circumstances, the disclosure is one made under coercion." (See 6 Pacific L. J. 433 [pointing out that amendment abrogated principle of Markwell v. Sykes (1959) 173 C.A.2d 642, 649, 343 P.2d 769, infra, §269].)

III. PRIVILEGE: IN GENERAL

G. No Comment or Inference.

1. Former Law.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 95

[§ 95] Former Law.

The Model Code (Rule 233) would have permitted comment on and inference from the exercise of any privilege. The majority view is contra. (See 1 McCormick 5th, §74.1; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2272.) In California, the state Constitution allowed comment on exercise of the self-incrimination privilege (see infra, §432), but the case law took inconsistent positions in criminal and civil cases on the other privileges. The following brief summary of prior law, therefore, will be helpful in understanding the Evidence Code changes (infra, §§96, 97):

(1) Criminal Case: Self-Incrimination Privilege. California's constitutional provision allowing comment and adverse inference was held unconstitutional by the United States Supreme Court; hence, no comment or inference is permissible. (See infra, §433.)

(2) Criminal Case: Lawyer-Client Privilege. Adverse comment has been strongly disapproved, as prejudicial misconduct. (See People v. Lathrom (1961) 192 C.A.2d 216, 222, 13 C.R. 325, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §237.)

(3) Criminal Case: Husband-Wife Privilege. Adverse comment has likewise been denounced as misconduct. (See People v. Klor (1948) 32 C.2d 658, 663, 197 P.2d 705; People v. Wilkes (1955) 44 C.2d 679, 687, 284 P.2d 481 [alibi defense supported by alleged phone call by defendant to his wife; prosecuting attorney asked "why didn't she take the stand and testify for him?"].) The same kind of misconduct is committed by the prosecution calling a defendant's wife as a witness, thus forcing him to object before the jury. (See People v. Ward (1958) 50 C.2d 702, 712, 328 P.2d 777 [held not reversible error under the circumstances]; People v. Solis (1961) 193 C.A.2d 68, 77, 13 C.R. 813; 76 A.L.R.2d 920.) It is even more serious where the trial judge persistently questions the wife in an attempt to induce her to consent. (See People v. Wade (1959) 53 C.2d 322, 332, 1 C.R. 683, 348 P.2d 116.)

(4) Civil Cases: Self-Incrimination Privilege. There have been expressions in California's decisions to the following effect:

(a) An adverse inference may be drawn from a claim of the self-incrimination privilege in a civil case. (See Fross v. Wotton (1935) 3 C.2d 384, 395, 44 P.2d 350.)

(b) A witness in a civil case may be impeached by proof of his exercise of this privilege in a prior proceeding. (See Nelson v. Southern Pac. Co. (1937) 8 C.2d 648, 654, 67 P.2d 682.)

See 1 McCormick 6th, §74.1.(4) Civil Cases: Self-Incrimination Privilege.

(b) Impeachment: The rule stated in Nelson v. Southern Pac. Co. (1937) 8 C.2d 648, 67 P.2d 682, text, p. 347, was characterized as erroneous in People v. Holloway (2004) 33 C.4th 96, 130, 14 C.R.3d 212, 91 P.3d 164, in light of the subsequent enactment of Ev.C. 913 (text, §96).

III. PRIVILEGE: IN GENERAL

G. No Comment or Inference.

2. Evidence Code.

[§ 96] Evidence Code.

The nullification of the California constitutional provision allowing comment on the claim of the self-incrimination privilege in a criminal case, and the decisions holding it misconduct in a criminal case to comment on the exercise of other privileges (see supra, §95), left civil cases as the only area of permissible comment. No good reason for this difference in treatment exists; if the privilege is entitled to protection its protection should be complete and uniform. Accordingly, Ev.C. 913 states a comprehensive rule for civil and criminal cases, prohibiting both comment and inference:

(1) "If in the instant proceeding or on a prior occasion a privilege is or was exercised not to testify with respect to any matter, or to refuse to disclose or to prevent another from disclosing any matter, neither the presiding officer nor counsel may comment thereon, no presumption shall arise because of the exercise of the privilege, and the trier of fact may not draw any inference therefrom as to the credibility of the witness or as to any matter at issue in the proceeding." (Ev.C. 913(a).)

(2) "The court, at the request of a party who may be adversely affected because an unfavorable inference may be drawn by the jury because a privilege has been exercised, shall instruct the jury that no presumption arises because of the exercise of the privilege and that the jury may not draw any inference therefrom as to the credibility of the witness or as to any matter at issue in the proceeding." (Ev.C. 913(b).)

An obvious distinction needs to be drawn: where no privilege is involved, the party's failure to explain or deny evidence against him may be the proper subject of comment or adverse inference. (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 913; see Ev.C. 413, and Law Rev. Com. Comment; BAJI (8th ed.), No. 2.27.)

G. No Comment or Inference.

[§ 97] Illustrations.

(1) Comment Improper. In Buehler v. Sbardellati (1995) 34 C.A.4th 1527, 1541, 41 C.R.2d 104, plaintiff sued defendant attorney for malpractice in connection with a real estate limited partnership in which plaintiff was to be a limited partner and another client of defendant was the general partner. During pretrial discovery, plaintiff sought to obtain the other client's file, but defendant asserted the attorney-client privilege on behalf of the other client, and refused to produce the file. Thereafter, but prior to trial, the other client waived his privilege, resulting in the production of the file. In closing argument, plaintiff sought to claim that defendant's exercise of the privilege impeached his claim that he viewed his role as attorney only for the limited partnership, and that the privilege prohibited him from ever obtaining plaintiff's informed consent to narrow the scope of his representation of plaintiff, because defendant would have had to reveal the very same confidences he refused to reveal based on the privilege. Held, despite this facially appealing argument, Ev.C. 913(a) prohibits comment on the fact that a privilege has been exercised, and there are no exceptions to the rule. Moreover, privileged material other than simply that pertaining to the limited partnership was at stake when defendant exercised the privilege. (34 C.A.4th 1541.)

(2) Comment Permissible. In People v. Ford (1988) 45 C.3d 431, 247 C.R. 121, 754 P.2d 168, the issue was whether Ev.C. 913(a) or any other rule prohibits a prosecutor's comment on the defendant's failure to call former defendants as witnesses to support his alibi defense.

Defendant Ford and his alleged accomplices Bridges, Cooper, and Elder were charged with burglary. Before defendant's trial, Cooper and Bridges had been convicted on pleas of guilty, but had not yet been sentenced, and Elder had not yet been tried. Hence, each, if called, could have exercised the privilege against self-incrimination. Defendant's testimony placed him and Cooper and Elder at a location away from the scene of the crime, and the prosecutor, in closing argument, said: "If the testimony is indeed true, why didn't he bring in Mr. Cooper, Mr. Elder?" The trial judge granted a motion for a new trial on the ground of prosecutorial misconduct, but the Court of Appeal reversed, and the Supreme Court affirmed the Court of Appeal.

(a) "The Court of Appeal held that the mere existence of a privilege did not render Cooper and Elder unavailable as witnesses, noting that although they were charged with the same offenses as defendant, they were competent witnesses who could have been called to determine if they would have exercised their privilege against self-incrimination. The Court of Appeal recognized the possibility, on which the trial court relied, that Cooper and Elder would have asserted a valid claim of privilege, but concluded that it was equally possible that having already pled guilty to being an accessory and therefore risking no further liability, Cooper might have been willing to testify to exculpate defendant if defendant had not been involved in the burglary. The court also reasoned that because Elder had not yet pled guilty, he might have been amenable to giving testimony that confirmed that neither he nor defendant had been involved." (45 C.3d 438.)

(c) Here the evidence that defendant could have been expected to elicit from Cooper and Elder would have established an alibi for both defendant and the witnesses; there is no suggestion that responding to questions designed to corroborate defendant's testimony would have a tendency to incriminate Cooper or Elder. (45 C.3d 442.)

(d) A blanket rule forbidding comment would encourage perjury. "The defendant would be assured that no matter how transparently perjured his testimony, there would be no burden on him to call a witness who might be expected to corroborate it without incriminating themselves, and the prosecutor would be prohibited from commenting on his failure to call those logical witnesses." (45 C.3d 443.)

(e) "We recognize that a rule permitting comment on a defendant's failure to call witnesses is subject to criticism if applied when the reason is ambiguous, or if the defendant is simply standing on the right to have the state prove his guilt. Therefore, the trial court must have discretion to determine when the circumstances of the case are such that comment is not permissible. When a defendant has taken the stand, however, and offered an alibi defense in which he identifies other persons who could support his testimony, and those witnesses are available and subject to subpoena, there should be no question but that comment is appropriate and permissible." (45 C.3d 447.)

The majority opinion concludes:

"Neither principle nor precedent supports the rule which defendant and the dissent seek to establish. Their rule would create a judicial presumption that an entire class of potential witnesses is 'unavailable' and comment on their absence would be prohibited solely because the potential witnesses have been charged with the same offense as the defendant. The presumption would apply regardless of whether the testimony that could logically be expected from the 'unavailable' witness would be incriminating to the witness, and regardless of the actual willingness of the witness to testify. We decline the opportunity to engage in such judicial rulemaking." (45 C.3d 449.) (See People v. Clark (1993) 5 C.4th 950, 1009, 22 C.R.2d 689, 857 P.2d 1099 [prosecutor's references to meetings between defendant and defense psychiatrist did not violate Ev.C. 913; because psychiatrist testified at suppression hearing, there was no longer any privilege with respect to meetings].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Comment Permissible. See People v. Champion (2005) 134 C.A.4th 1440, 1452, 37 C.R.3d 122 [where defendant testified that he had not been allowed to tell whole story and prosecution was then allowed to offer evidence that he had chosen to remain silent in face of police questioning, court's instruction, tailored to fit circumstances, satisfied Ev.C. 913(a): jury could consider prosecution's evidence to rebut defendant's claim of no opportunity to tell his side of story but could not otherwise hold refusal to answer questions against him].

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

A. General Principles.

1. Nature of Privilege.

[§ 98] Nature of Privilege.

(1) Nature and Scope of Statute. Ev.C. 954, the primary statute governing the privilege, provides that a client, whether or not a party, has a privilege to refuse to disclose, and to prevent another from disclosing, a confidential communication between the client and his or her lawyer. The privilege may be claimed only by one of the following:

(a) The holder of the privilege. (Ev.C. 954(a).)

(b) A person authorized by the holder of the privilege to claim it. (Ev.C. 954(b).)

(c) The lawyer at the time of the confidential communication. However, that lawyer may not claim the privilege if there is no holder of the privilege in existence, or if the lawyer is otherwise instructed by a person authorized to permit disclosure. (Ev.C. 954(c).)

The privilege may be waived as provided by Ev.C. 912 (see supra, §67 et seq.), and is subject to more specific provisions governing it (Ev.C. 951 et seq.). (Ev.C. 954.)

To make the privilege applicable, there must be a communication (infra, §108 et seq.), in the course of the relationship (infra, §113 et seq.), intended to be confidential (infra, §119 et seq.).

The privilege belongs to the client (infra, §104), and the lawyer, pursuant to his or her professional obligation under B. & P.C. 6068(e), must claim it for the client whenever the lawyer is present and authorized to make the claim under Ev.C. 954(c). (Ev.C. 955.)

The privilege survives the client's death, even if protected communications are of substantial importance to criminal litigation. (Swidler & Berlin v. United States (1998) 524 U.S. 399, 118 S.Ct. 2081, 2088, 141 L.Ed.2d 379, 388; see 112 Harv. L. Rev. 222 [Swidler]; infra, §107.)

(2) Cases and Commentary. The background, nature, and scope of the privilege have been the subject of much discussion by courts and commentators. (See generally *Upjohn Co. v. ## CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

A. General Principles.

2. Liberal or Strict Construction.

[§ 99] Liberal or Strict Construction.

(1) Liberal Construction. The basic policy of the attorney-client privilege is to promote the relationship between attorney and client by safeguarding the confidential disclosures of the client and the advice given by the attorney, and this policy supports a liberal construction in favor of its exercise. (See generally San Francisco v. Superior Court (1951) 37 C.2d 227, 234, 231 P.2d 26; People v. Kor (1954) 129 C.A.2d 436, 277 P.2d 94, infra, §168; Holm v. Superior Court (1954) 42 C.2d 500, 506, 267 P.2d 1025, infra, §§128, 130; American Mut. Liab. Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1974) 38 C.A.3d 579, 593, 113 C.R. 561, citing the text; People v. Flores (1977) 71 C.A.3d 559, 565, 139 C.R. 546; Lohman v. Superior Court (1978) 81 C.A.3d 90, 94, 146 C.R. 171, supra, §72; Benge v. Superior Court (1982) 131 C.A.3d 336, 344, 182 C.R. 275, citing the text; Shannon v. Superior Court (1990) 217 C.A.3d 986, 994, 266 C.R. 242; 1 McCormick 5th, §87; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2291.)

In San Francisco v. Superior Court, supra, it was pointed out that, although the privilege may result in the suppression of relevant evidence, it is necessary to protect the client in making a full disclosure of the facts to his or her attorney. The court quoted the Model Code as follows: "Unless he makes known to the lawyer all the facts, the advice which follows will be useless, if not misleading; the lawsuit will be conducted along improper lines, the trial will be full of surprises, much useless litigation may result. Thirdly, unless the client knows that his lawyer cannot be compelled to reveal what is told him, the client will suppress what he thinks to be unfavorable facts." (37 C.2d 235.)

Courts sometimes become vehement in defense of this privilege, as in the concurring opinion in People v. Kor, supra, 129 C.A.2d 447: "The privilege of confidential communication between client and attorney should be regarded as sacred. It is not to be whittled away by means of specious argument that it has been waived. Least of all should the courts seize upon slight and equivocal circumstances as a technical reason for destroying the privilege. ... Defendant's attorney should have chosen to go to jail and take his chances of release by a higher court. This is not intended as a criticism of the action of the attorney. It is, however, a suggestion to any and all attorneys who may have the misfortune to be confronted by the same or a similar problem." (See also People v. Singh (1932) 123 C.A. 365, 370, 11 P.2d 73, infra, §115.)

C.R. 473, 369 P.2d 1; 1 McCormick 5th, §87 [observing that benefits are often speculative and suggesting that judge should have discretion to require particular disclosure if necessary in administration of justice]; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2291.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

A. General Principles.

3. Communications by Prisoners.

[§ 100] Communications by Prisoners.

(1) In General. The protection of confidences and secrets of a prisoner is not just a rule of professional conduct; it also involves public policies of paramount importance. Notwithstanding the legitimate interests of prison authorities in the administration of jails, "a prisoner has a right to consult with his attorney in absolute privacy." (In re Jordan (1972) 7 C.3d 930, 941, 103 C.R. 849, 500 P.2d 873; see In re Jordan (1974) 12 C.3d 575, 580, footnote 7, 116 C.R. 371, 526 P.2d 523, citing the text [no matter whether general rule is strict or liberal, liberal construction is mandated as to attorney-inmate privilege of P.C. 2601(b)]; People v. Godlewski (1993) 17 C.A.4th 940, 945, 21 C.R.2d 796 [jailhouse conversation between defendant and his attorney suggesting that, as matter of trial tactics, defendant would admit being killer, was properly barred as within privilege].)

(2) Monitoring of Consultations in Prison Conference Room. In People v. Jordan (1990) 217 C.A.3d 640, 266 C.R. 86, defendant asserted that his right to counsel had been violated by electronic monitoring of his conversations with defense counsel in a prison conference room. The trial judge, after an in camera hearing, determined that no monitoring had occurred, and denied defendant's motion to dismiss the indictment. In affirming the judgment of conviction, the court discussed the burden and standard of proof on this issue:

(a) If the defendant makes a prima facie showing of eavesdropping, the burden of proof shifts to the prosecution to prove the legality of its conduct. (217 C.A.3d 644.)

(b) The standard of proof beyond a reasonable doubt is inappropriate where the issue has no necessary connection with guilt. (217 C.A.3d 645.) The standard of preponderance of the evidence is applied in suppression hearings on alleged violations of the Fourth and Fifth Amendments, and in determination of voluntariness of a confession. (217 C.A.3d 645.) There is precedent, however, in the lineup case of United States v. Wade (1967) 388 U.S. 218, 87 S.Ct. 1926, 18 L.Ed.2d 1149, infra, §392, for the intermediate standard of clear and convincing evidence. (217 C.A.3d 645.)

The present case involves considerations similar to those in Wade: "Both cases concern protection of the same constitutional value--the right of an accused to counsel. Both also involve a factual determination in circumstances that inevitably tend to favor the prosecution. Without having been present at a lineup, defense counsel is at a disadvantage in attacking the reliability of the lineup and demonstrating its probable influence on courtroom identification. In eavesdropping cases, the testimony of law enforcement officials may reflect a self-interest in defending the legality of their conduct. Eavesdropping is a felony under California law. By denying participation in eavesdropping, prison officials may be merely shielding themselves from criminal prosecution. Since prison eavesdropping occurs in a complex bureaucratic sphere that is difficult to investigate, defense counsel cannot easily devise effective strategies for impeachment of suspect testimony, and, as the present case illustrates, faces formidable problems in proving eavesdropping by circumstantial evidence." (217 C.A.3d 646.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE B. Lawyer Licensed or Believed Licensed. 1. General Requirement.

[§ 101] General Requirement.

(1) Licensed Attorney. The privilege is intended to protect the relationship of attorney and client (supra, §99), and ordinarily applies only where the "lawyer" is "a person ... authorized to practice law." (Ev.C. 950; see 1 McCormick 5th, §88; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2300.)

It is sufficient, however, that the "lawyer" be licensed to practice "in any state or nation." (Ev.C. 950.) Thus, even though the lawyer is not admitted in California and may be guilty of unlawful practice (see 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §395 et seq.), the privilege applies. And it is immaterial whether the jurisdiction that licensed the attorney recognizes the privilege: "Legal transactions frequently cross state and national boundaries and require consultation with attorneys from many different jurisdictions. When a California resident travels outside the State and has occasion to consult a lawyer during such travel, or when a lawyer from another state or nation participates in a transaction involving a California client, the client should be entitled to assume that his communications will be given as much protection as they would be if he consulted a California lawyer in California. A client should not be forced to inquire about the jurisdictions where the lawyer is authorized to practice and whether such jurisdictions recognize the lawyer-client privilege before he may safely communicate with the lawyer." (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 950; see 1956 A.S. 548.)

(2) Law Corporation. The 1968 Legislature enacted the Moscone-Knox Professional Corporation Act authorizing the incorporation of persons in certain professions, under which lawyers and medical persons may form corporations to render professional services. (Corp.C. 13400 et seq.; see 9 Summary (9th), Corporations, §33.) In conformity with this statute, Ev.C. 954 was amended to provide that the relationship of attorney and client exists (a) between a law corporation as defined in the statute, and "the persons to whom it renders professional services," and (b) "between such persons and members of the State Bar employed by such corporation to render services to such persons." And the word "persons" includes "partnerships, corporations, limited liability companies, associations and other groups and entities." (Ev.C. 954.)

(3) Distinction: Jailhouse Lawyer. In People v. Velasquez (1987) 192 C.A.3d 319, 237 C.R. 366, defendant was convicted of murder with special circumstances, robbery, and burglary. During the trial, the prosecution introduced the testimony of R, a trustee inmate in the county jail where defendant was held. R, who had read some legal books and pamphlets and prepared seven writs, assisted defendant in preparing a petition to dismiss the public defender. R testified that defendant asked him to research the law on diminished capacity, and, after R told him that to do so he would have to know everything that happened, defendant described the crimes and said that he had fooled the psychiatrists and others by telling them he remembered nothing. Defendant contended that the attorney-client privilege applies to the communications between "jailhouse lawyers" and their inmate "clients." Held, the communications were not privileged.

(a) The Code defines a "lawyer" as "a person authorized, or reasonably believed by the client to be authorized, to practice law in any state or nation." (Ev.C. 950.) No authority has recognized an attorney-client privilege between a "jailhouse lawyer" and his inmate "client," and the federal and state cases that have considered the issue have rejected it. (192 C.A.3d 326.)

(b) Privileges are limited to those created by statute (Ev.C. 911; see supra, §60), and the statutory lawyer-client privilege is to be strictly construed where the issue is whether an attorney-client relationship has been established. (192 C.A.3d 319, footnote 4.)

(c) To come within the privilege, defendant would have had to believe that he was talking to a lawyer or a person he reasonably believed to be a lawyer (see infra, §102); but he never testified that he believed R was an attorney. (192 C.A.3d 328.)

B. Lawyer Licensed or Believed Licensed.
2. Exception: Client's Reasonable Belief.

[§ 102] Exception: Client's Reasonable Belief.

The modern trend is to extend the privilege beyond the strict attorney-client relationship in cases where the client is deceived as to the attorney's lack of professional status. Thus, Ev.C. 950 defines "lawyer" to include a person "reasonably believed by the client" to be authorized to practice law in any state or nation. ### IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

B. Lawyer Licensed or Believed Licensed.

3. Exception: Representative in AFDC Hearing.

[§ 103] Exception: Representative in AFDC Hearing.

In Welfare Rights Organization v. Crisan (1983) 33 C.3d 766, 190 C.R. 919, 661 P.2d 1073, the court created a new privilege, analogous to that of attorney-client, for authorized representatives of welfare claimants and recipients in administrative fair hearings under the Aid to Families With Dependent Children program.

The hearing had been requested by claimants L and G. The county social welfare department obtained a subpoena and subpoena duces tecum directing Beltz, a Welfare Rights Organization worker, to testify and produce documents at the hearing. The information sought consisted of past communications between Beltz and L and G "regarding legal advice" Beltz had given them in connection with an earlier AFDC fair hearing. L and G had authorized him to be their lay representative and had believed and intended their consultation to be confidential. L and G sought injunctive relief in the superior court, but that court gave judgment on demurrer for the county social welfare department. Held, reversed.

(1) Privileges under Evidence Code. The Code prohibits the creation of nonstatutory privileges for court or administrative hearings (33 C.3d 769; see supra, §62). "Thus, unless a privilege is expressly or impliedly based on statute, its existence may be found only if required by constitutional principles, state or federal." (33 C.3d 769.) In the situation presented by this case, "a privilege comparable to the attorney-client is impliedly provided by statute," and the question whether it is also constitutionally required is not reached. (33 C.3d 769.)

(2) Hearing under federal AFDC regulations. AFDC is a federal program in which states may participate by submitting a plan that conforms to the Social Security Act and federal regulations. (33 C.3d 769.) The federal regulations provide for hearings which meet the due process standards of Goldberg v. Kelly (1970) 397 U.S. 254, 90 S.Ct. 1011, 25 L.Ed.2d 287, including an evidentiary hearing with the right to representation by counsel before benefits are terminated. (33 C.3d 369; see 7 Summary (9th), Constitutional Law, §544.) Although Goldberg spoke only of counsel, the federal regulations provide for lay representation: An applicant or recipient "may be represented by an authorized representative, such as legal counsel, relative, friend or other spokesman, or he may represent himself." (33 C.3d 770.)

(3) Hearing under California statute. Consistent with Goldberg and federal regulations, Welf.C. 10950 states that an applicant or recipient is entitled to a hearing "in person or through an authorized representative." Thus the Legislature made it clear that claimants have a right to be represented by lay representatives, and the Department's regulations make this explicit. (33 C.3d 770, and footnote 2.)

(4) Privilege implied in California statute. The vital importance of the attorney-client privilege has been repeatedly declared (33 C.3d 770, 771); and the considerations which support it are so generally accepted that "the Legislature must have implied its existence as an integral part of the right to representation by lay persons." Otherwise the right would be a trap, inducing confidential communications and then allowing them to be used against the claimant. (33 C.3d 771.) The practice of construing a statute to include matter necessarily implied is well established (33 C.3d 771); and the fact that lay representatives are neither licensed nor subject to regulation does not preclude a finding of legislative intent to accord them a confidentiality privilege, for even the lawyer-client privilege applies to a person "reasonably believed by the client" to be authorized to practice law. (33 C.3d 771, 772; see supra, §102.)

"Accordingly, we construe Welfare and Institutions Code section 10950 as including a guarantee of confidentiality in its extension of the right of representation to include representation by lay persons as well as by counsel in connection with welfare fair hearings. The absence of a single earlier case on this issue provides substantial support for our conclusion: during the 17 years in which the right of lay representation in welfare hearings has existed in California, the implicit guarantee of confidentiality has apparently gone unquestioned." (33 C.3d 772.)

(5) Limited nature of holding. This interpretation is also supported by the rule that courts are to construe statutes in a manner which avoids constitutional difficulties; hence the issues of federal supremacy and due process are not considered. (33 C.3d 772.) The scope of the privilege, in view of the limited function of a lay authorized representative, is also left for the future. And, there are other statutes permitting lay representation before certain tribunals (e.g., Unemp.Ins.C. 1957, Lab.C. 5700); but nothing said here with respect to Welf.C. 10950 demands an identical interpretation of other enactments, "each of which will have to be examined against its own statutory, historical and constitutional background." (33 C.3d 772.) (See 15 Pacific L. J. 245; 31 A.L.R.4th 1226 [privilege as to communications between lay representative and client in judicial or administrative proceedings].)

IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

C. Holder of the Privilege.

1. Client.

a. Privilege Belongs to Client.

[§ 104] Privilege Belongs to Client.

(1) General Rule. The "holder of the privilege," i.e., the person entitled to claim it (Ev.C. 954(a)), is the "client" (unless the client has a guardian or conservator). (Ev.C. 953(a).) In other words, the privilege belongs to the client, not the attorney; the client alone may waive it, the attorney in claiming it does so on behalf of the client, and the attorney, unless instructed otherwise, must make the claim. (Ev.C. 953 et seq.; see Abbott v. Superior Court (1947) 78 C.A.2d 19, 21, 177 P.2d 317, infra, §153; Rigolfi v. Superior Court (1963) 215 C.A.2d 497, 501, 30 C.R. 317; *People v. (2) Distinction: Independent Nonparty Witness. The privilege does not extend to communications from an independent nonparty witness to counsel. (See Trade Center Properties v. Superior Court (1960) 185 C.A.2d 409, 411, 8 C.R. 345; Greyhound Corp. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 C.2d 355, 397, 15 C.R. 90, 364 P.2d 266, infra, §139.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

C. Holder of the Privilege.

1. Client.

b. Who Is Client in General.

[§ 105] Who Is Client in General.

(1) Persons. A "client" is "a person who, directly or through an authorized representative, consults a lawyer for the purpose of retaining the lawyer or securing legal service or advice from him in his professional capacity." The term includes an incompetent person who consults a lawyer, or whose guardian or conservator does so on his or her behalf. (Ev.C. 951; see 36 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 997 [availability of privilege to insured persons]; 1 McCormick 5th, §88; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2292; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §§368, 369; on clients of law corporations, see supra, §101.)

"Authorized representative" means a person who is authorized to obtain legal advice on the client's behalf. For example, a corporation president may be authorized to obtain legal advice for the corporation as the corporation's authorized representative. Authority to negotiate contracts is not the same thing as authority to seek legal advice and cannot serve as a basis for piercing the corporate attorney-client privilege. (National Football League Properties v. Superior Court (1998) 65 C.A.4th 100, 111, 75 C.R.2d 893 [in professional football club's shareholder action against football league, fact that league commissioner and league employees acted as agents for member clubs in negotiating contracts did not mean that club had attorney-client relationship with league's counsel so as to entitle it to access to privileged documents].)

(2) Unincorporated Organizations. Because "person" includes corporations and other associations (Ev.C. 175), "such unincorporated organizations as labor unions, social clubs, and fraternal societies have a lawyer-client privilege when the organization (rather than its individual members) is the client." (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 951; see Benge v. Superior Court (1982) 131 C.A.3d 336, 345, 182 C.R. 275, citing the text [labor union as client]; on corporations, see infra, §106.)

(3) Public Entities. A public entity is also a "person" protected by the privilege. (See Ev.C. 175, 200, 951; Holm v. Superior Court (1954) 42 C.2d 500, 267 P.2d 1025, infra, §§128, 130; Vela v. Superior Court (1989) 208 C.A.3d 141, 148, 255 C.R. 921, supra, §89 [city holds attorney-client privilege as to police officers' statements taken by special investigators charged with protecting city in future civil litigation]; Roberts v. Palmdale (1993) 5 C.4th 363, 370, 20 C.R.2d 330, 853 P.2d 496, infra, §294, citing the text [following Vela].)

The attorney-client relationship between a public entity and its counsel is sometimes complicated by the Ralph M. Brown Act requirement of public meetings of local legislative bodies. (See 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Administrative Proceedings, §15 et seq.) However, the entity is just as much in need of confidential legal advice as a private person, and the privilege is equally available to it under proper circumstances. An attempt to resolve this apparent conflict was made in Sacramento Newspaper Guild v. Sacramento County Bd. of Supervisors (1968) 263 C.A.2d 41, 69 C.R. 480, 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Administrative Proceedings, §21: "Public board members, sworn to uphold the law, may not arbitrarily or unnecessarily inflate confidentiality for the purpose of deflating the spread of the public meeting law. Neither the attorney's presence nor the happenstance of some kind of lawsuit may serve as the pretext for secret consultations whose revelation will not injure the public interest. To attempt a generalization embracing the occasions for genuine confidentiality would be rash." (263 C.A.2d 58.)

IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

C. Holder of the Privilege.

1. Client.

c. Corporation as Client.

[§ 106] Corporation as Client.

The attorney-client privilege may be claimed by a corporation; i.e., both for corporations and individuals, the privilege promotes full and frank communication between attorneys and clients. (See Upjohn Co. v. United States (1981) 449 U.S. 383, 101 S.Ct. 677, 66 L.Ed.2d 584, infra, §126; Commodity Futures Trading Com. v. Weintraub (1985) 471 U.S. 343, 105 S.Ct. 1986, 1991, 85 L.Ed.2d 372, 378, infra, §107; 1 McCormick 5th, §87; 20 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 288; 50 So. Cal. L. Rev. 303 [privilege in shareholder litigation]; 14 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 79 [privilege in corporate context]; 98 A.L.R.2d 241 [right of corporation to assert privilege]; 26 A.L.R.5th 628 [determining whether communication is from corporate client]; 28 A.L.R.5th 1 [who may assert or waive privilege]; on who is corporation's authorized representative for purposes of claiming privilege, see National Football League Properties v. Superior Court (1998) 65 C.A.4th 100, 111, 75 C.R.2d 893, supra, §105.)

There is no statutory exception for closely held corporations. (Hoiles v. Superior Court (1984) 157 C.A.3d 1192, 204 C.R. 111.) In Hoiles, plaintiff, a minority shareholder and director of FIN, a closely held family corporation, brought an action to dissolve the corporation, alleging breach of fiduciary duty. He took the deposition of S, corporate counsel, and the latter asserted the attorney-client and work product privileges as to discussions during meetings with various family members to plan prelitigation strategy. Held, the lower court properly upheld the claim of privilege. (157 C.A.3d 1198.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

C. Holder of the Privilege.

2. Representative or Successor.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 107

[§ 107] Representative or Successor.

Ev.C. 953 filled several gaps in our former law concerning the person entitled to claim the privilege when the client is dead or otherwise incapable of doing so:

(1) Guardian or Conservator. The guardian or conservator (see 12 Summary (9th), Wills and Probate, §819 et seq.) is the holder of the privilege of his or her ward or conservatee. (Ev.C. 953(b); see 67 A.L.R.2d 1277 [waiver by guardian of incompetent].) However, when guardianship or conservatorship terminates, e.g., when a minor client reaches majority, the client becomes the holder. (Ev.C. 953(a).)

(2) Successor of Corporation, Association, or Public Entity. "A successor, assign, trustee in dissolution, or any similar representative of a firm, association, organization, partnership, business trust, corporation, or public entity that is no longer in existence" is the holder of the privilege of the organization. (Ev.C. 953(d); see Dickerson v. Superior Court (1982) 135 C.A.3d 93, 98, 185 C.R. 97 [successor of corporation].)

In Commodity Futures Trading Com. v. Weintraub (1985) 471 U.S. 343, 105 S.Ct. 1986, 85 L.Ed.2d 372, the issue was whether the trustee of a corporation in bankruptcy could waive the debtor corporation's privilege with respect to communications that took place before the filing of the petition in bankruptcy. In holding that he could, the court pointed out that the trustee's role was analogous to that of a solvent corporation's management, and that new managers, installed as a result of a takeover, merger, loss of confidence by shareholders, or normal succession, may waive the privilege with respect to communications made by former officers and directors. (105 S.Ct. 1991, 1993, 85 L.Ed.2d 381, 382.) (See 1986 A.S. 717 [discussing Commodity Futures Trading Com.].)

(3) Successor Trustee. In Moeller v. Superior Court (1997) 16 C.4th 1124, 69 C.R.2d 317, 947 P.2d 279, the assets of an express trust were depleted by the costs of toxic cleanup required to be carried out on trust property. After the trustee (a bank) resigned, the successor trustee (the son of the original trustees) objected to the bank's accounting and petition and demanded production and inspection of certain documents and records relating to the bank's administration of the trust. The bank asserted the attorney-client privilege as to this material, and the trial judge denied the successor trustee's motion to compel. The Court of Appeal issued a writ of mandamus to compel production. Held, judgment of the Court of Appeal affirmed; the attorney-client privilege did not permit the bank to withhold the documents from the successor trustee. When a trustee, acting as trustee, secures the advice of an attorney, it becomes the attorney's client and acquires the right to claim the privilege as to confidences made in the course of the attorney-client relationship. (16 C.4th 1130.) But when a successor trustee takes office, it assumes all of the powers of the trustee, including the power to assert the privilege. (16 C.4th 1131.) A contrary rule, "that the attorney-client privilege is personal to the trustee, so that whichever person is the trustee when the confidential communication occurs retains the privilege as long as that person exists--would go far to prevent smooth transitions from one trustee to the next, would disrupt orderly administration of trusts, and would be detrimental to the beneficiaries." (16 C.4th 1136, 1137, citing Commodity Futures Trading Com. v. Weintraub, supra.)

Three justices dissented, pointing out that the only circumstances recognized by the Evidence Code for transfer of the attorney-client privilege are those described in Ev.C. 953, none of which applies to transfers of title to trust property to successor trustees. (16 C.4th 1140.)

(4) Personal Representative of Deceased Client Before Final Distribution. The privilege survives the death of the client, as against strangers; hence, in controversies between persons claiming under the decedent and others not in privity with the estate, the communications of the decedent to his attorney are protected. (See Paley v. Superior Court (1955) 137 C.A.2d 450, 457, 290 P.2d 617; 1 McCormick 5th, §94; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2323; 8 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 618; 40 Harv. L. Rev. 115 [discussing exceptions in will cases].)

The holder in such a case is the personal representative--executor or administrator. (Ev.C. 953(c).) The personal representative may therefore claim the privilege, and may waive it where it is in the interest of the estate to do so. (See Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 953; 67 A.L.R.2d 1268 [waiver of attorney-client privilege by personal representative or heir of deceased client or by guardian of incompetent].)

Our former law did not indicate that the privilege ever terminated. Under the Evidence Code, it ceases to exist when, on final distribution, the personal representative is discharged. When he or she is no longer the personal representative, he or she is no longer the holder of the privilege, and there is no holder left to claim it. (See Ev.C. 954(c).) The Law Revision Commission Comment observes that "there is little reason to preserve secrecy at the expense of excluding relevant evidence after the estate is wound up and the representative is discharged."

(5) Receiver. In Shannon v. Superior Court (1990) 217 C.A.3d 986, 266 C.R. 242, the court held that a receiver appointed under C.C.P. 564 may claim the attorney-client privilege with respect to communications between the receiver and his or her special counsel.

(a) A receiver is a fiduciary who, as an officer and representative of the court, occupies a position analogous to that of an executor or trustee in bankruptcy. (217 C.A.3d 992.) An executor has the right to obtain an attorney, and the attorney-client privilege applies to communications between an executor and the attorney. (217 C.A.3d 993.) The same should be true of the relationship between a receiver and his or her counsel. (217 C.A.3d 994.)

(c) "This conclusion is no astounding proposition. In point of fact, it probably needs no articulation. To hold a receiver is entitled to claim the privilege is to necessarily decide the court is powerless to compel its waiver, irrespective of whether the disclosure would materially advance the interests of certain parties to the receivership or the efficiency of the proceedings. The decisive fact is that neither the estate, the court, nor the collection of persons who may have a claim to, or an interest in, the custodial property is the 'client' of the attorney for the receiver. Though the conscientious performance of the receiver's obligations will in the ultimate analysis inure to the presumed benefit of all concerned, the result is indirect. Along the way, the receiver may come to disagree with one, or a number, or, as the case apparently is here, all of the claimants to the property." (217 C.A.3d 995.)

(d) "The receiver may also be required to defend against an effort by the parties to remove him or her for claimed deficiencies or wrongdoing on his or her part as the receiver. It is conceivable the receiver may come to take issue with, and seek review of, a ruling of the court. The receiver's ability to independently carry out his or her fiduciary responsibilities would be seriously undermined, if not wholly destroyed, were he or she unable to 'freely and fully confer and confide in one having knowledge of the law, and skilled in its practice, in order that the [receiver] may have adequate advice. ... [T]he absence of the privilege would convert the attorney habitually and inevitably into a mere informer for the benefit of the [receiver's] opponent.' " (217 C.A.3d 995, 996, quoting Mitchell v. Superior Court (1984) 37 C.3d 591, 208 C.R. 886, 691 P.2d 642, infra, §152, and San Francisco v. Superior Court (1951) 37 C.2d 227, 231 P.2d 26, infra, §124.)

(1) Guardian or Conservator.

Cross-Reference: 14 Summary (10th), Wills and Probate, §901 et seq.(2) Successor of Corporation, Association, or Public Entity. See Venture Law Group v. Superior Court (2004) 118 C.A.4th 96, 104, 12 C.R.3d 656 [in action by minority shareholders of merged corporation against former officers and directors who were majority shareholders of corporation, trial judge erred in ordering attorney who had represented merged corporation to answer deposition questions; successor corporation, which now held attorney-client privilege, had not waived it, and individual defendants could not waive it by asserting advice of counsel defense as they no longer held it].(4) Personal Representative of Deceased Client Before Final Distribution. HLC Properties, Ltd. v. Superior Court (2005) 35 C.4th 54, 24 C.R.3d 199, 105 P.3d 560, involved 59 written communications pertaining to 3 recording contracts executed by Bing Crosby. Many years after Crosby's death, a company that was formed to manage the interests Crosby left sued several record companies, claiming that defendants had been underpaying royalties under the contracts. Defendants propounded a demand for production of documents. Plaintiff withheld the 59 documents at issue on the basis of the attorney-client privilege. The trial judge determined that Crosby was the client and holder of the privilege, and that the privilege terminated with his death. The Court of Appeal granted plaintiff's writ petition, finding that Bing Crosby Enterprises, an unincorporated organization that Crosby had formed to help him manage his business operations, was the initial holder of the privilege, and that plaintiff, as successor to that organization, was the current holder of the privilege. Held, judgment of the Court of Appeal reversed.

(b) Ev.C. 953(c) states, without qualification, that the holder of a deceased client's attorney-client privilege is the client's personal representative. Ev.C. 954 specifies that, except as otherwise provided by statute, the privilege may be claimed only by the holder of the privilege, by a person whom the holder authorizes to claim the privilege, or by the person who was the attorney at the time of the confidential communication, so long as a privilege holder exists and has not authorized disclosure. Taken together, these two statutes unambiguously provide that only a personal representative may claim the attorney-client privilege in the case of a deceased client. (35 C.4th 65.)

(c) "[W]e do not suggest that entities formed to manage the business affairs of a natural person can never be clients or never hold attorney-client privileges in their own right. Nor do we find that a personal representative's assertion of the privilege categorically forecloses others from claiming it as to the same communications. But the Evidence Code unmistakably provides that the attorney-client privilege belongs only to the client, whether the client is a natural person or a business entity, and the record here amply supports the trial court's determination that Crosby, not [Bing Crosby] Enterprises, was the original client and holder of the privilege with respect to the 59 withheld documents. Under these circumstances, the Evidence Code compels us to find that, when Crosby died, his privilege transferred to the executor of his estate and thereafter ceased to exist upon the executor's discharge." (35 C.4th 68.) (See 11 California Trusts and Estates Quarterly 17 [discussing uncertainties created by California's personal representative rule and proposing ways of maintaining or reviving attorney-client privilege after client's death].)

Superior Court* (1954) 42 C.2d 500, 508, 510, 267 P.2d 1025, infra, §§128, 130 [photographs of accident prepared for counsel's use in anticipated litigation]; People v. Lines (1975) 13 C.3d 500, 507, 119 C.R. 225, 531 P.2d 793, infra, §237 [overlapping of attorney-client and psychotherapist-patient privileges]; 55 A.L.R.3d 1322 [applicability of privilege when attorney is asked to testify about unavailable or nonexistent nontestamentary document that he has drafted]; 75 A.L.R.4th 1144 [disclosure of will prior to client's death]; 1 McCormick 5th, §89; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §§2306, 2320; infra, §122 et seq.)

As the court said in San Francisco v. Superior Court, supra, quoting Wigmore: "[A]lmost any act, done by the client in the sight of the attorney and during the consultation, may conceivably be done by the client as the subject of a communication, and the only question will be whether, in the circumstances of the case, it was intended to be done as such. The client, supposedly, may make a specimen of his handwriting for the attorney's information, or may exhibit an identifying scar, or may show a secret token. If any of these acts are done as part of a communication to the attorney, and if further the communication is intended to be confidential ... the privilege comes into play."

(2) Uncommunicated Legal Opinion. Ev.C. 952 also covers "a legal opinion formed" even though not communicated to the client. The Law Revision Commission Comment observes that this language "will preclude a possible construction of this section that would leave the attorney's uncommunicated legal opinion--which includes his impressions and conclusions--unprotected"; and that such a construction "would virtually destroy the privilege."

(3) Attorney's Display of Public Document to Client. In re Navarro (1979) 93 C.A.3d 325, 155 C.R. 522, arose out of a preliminary hearing of a murder charge. An attorney who was representing defendant in a separate robbery case was held in contempt for refusing to state whether she had shown defendant a robbery arrest report, the contents of which might provide a motive for the murder. Held, order discharging contempt order affirmed. Ev.C. 952 expanded the privilege to cover "information transmitted between a client and his lawyer," eliminating the former limitation to communications originating with the client. The public nature of the report is not dispositive; the privilege attached to the act of handing the document to the client. (93 C.A.3d 328.) (See In re Jordan (1974) 12 C.3d 575, 580, 116 C.R. 371, 526 P.2d 523 [prisoner's statutory right to correspond confidentially with attorney prohibits inspection of enclosures in attorney-inmate mail, in light of Ev.C. 952's broad definition of "confidential communication"].)

IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

D. Communication.

2. Information Acquired Through Communication.

[§ 109] Information Acquired Through Communication.

In People v. Meredith (1981) 29 C.3d 682, 175 C.R. 612, 631 P.2d 46, defendant Scott, on trial for conspiracy to commit robbery and murder, told his former attorney that he had taken the victim's wallet, divided the money with the other defendant, attempted to burn the wallet, and finally put it in a trash can behind his home. That attorney sent F, his investigator, to retrieve the wallet. The attorney examined it and then turned it over to the police. At the trial all parties agreed that the wallet was admissible in evidence, and that the conversation between defendant Scott and his former attorney was not. But the prosecution called F to testify to the location of the wallet, i.e., that he observed it in the trash can behind Scott's home. Held, F's testimony was admissible.

(a) Decisions in other states have recognized that implementation of the policies supporting the attorney-client privilege may require its extension beyond the initial communication to cover any information which the attorney or his investigator may subsequently acquire as a direct result of the communication. (29 C.3d 691, 692, 693.) In some of the cases, defense counsel obtained the evidence from his client or removed it from its original location; in others the attorney did not remove or alter it; but none of the decisions dealt with the effect of such removal or alteration on the privilege as a bar to testimony concerning the original location or condition. (29 C.3d 694.)

(b) When defense counsel alters or removes physical evidence, he deprives the prosecution of the opportunity to observe it in its original condition or location. To bar testimony concerning original condition or location would permit the defense to destroy critical information, and to encourage defense counsel "to race the police to seize critical evidence." (29 C.3d 694.) It is necessary, therefore, to create an exception to the privilege where such removal or alteration has taken place: The prosecution may offer evidence of the original location or condition, in a manner which avoids revealing the content of the communications or the original source of the information. (29 C.3d 695, and footnote 8.) "We thus view the defense decision to remove evidence as a tactical choice. If defense counsel leaves the evidence where he discovers it, his observations derived from privileged communications are insulated from revelation. If, however, counsel chooses to remove evidence to examine or test it, the original location and condition of that evidence loses the protection of the privilege." (29 C.3d 695.) (See People v. Superior Court (Fairbank) (1987) 192 C.A.3d 32, 237 C.R. 158, infra, §155 [applying People v. Meredith to defense counsel's obligation to turn over relevant evidence]; 70 Cal. L. Rev. 1048.)

In Aerojet-General Corp. v. Transport Indem. Ins. (1993) 18 C.A.4th 996, 22 C.R.2d 862, a dispute about insurance coverage between two companies and their liability insurers, an attorney for plaintiffs inadvertently received documents originating from defendants' attorneys, including a memorandum revealing the existence of a witness whom he subsequently deposed. Plaintiffs' attorney did not immediately inform opposing counsel of his receipt of the documents.

In response to defendants' motion for sanctions, the trial court ordered plaintiffs' attorney's firm to pay all expenses incurred by defendants in bringing the sanctions motion and in conducting discovery to determine how the disclosure occurred. Held, reversed.

(a) "The attorney-client privilege is a shield against deliberate intrusion; it is not an insurer against inadvertent disclosure. Further, not all information that passes privately between attorney and client is entitled to remain confidential in the literal sense. The most obvious example is information that is required to be disclosed in response to discovery, such as the identification of potential witnesses." (18 C.A.4th 1004.)

(b) The privilege protects the disclosure of communications but not the underlying facts. It does not extend to independent witnesses or their discovery, and the identity and location of such persons cannot be concealed under the attorney work product rule of C.C.P. 2018 (infra, §140). The existence of the witness was not privileged, and plaintiffs' counsel acquired knowledge of the witness' identity through no fault or misconduct of his own. Thus, plaintiffs and their counsel were entitled to use the information, and defendants were not entitled to sanctions in the form of attorneys' fees expended in preventing that use. (18 C.A.4th 1005.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

C.C.P. 2018 (the attorney work product rule) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2018.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

D. Communication.

3. Distinction: Knowledge Without Communication. a. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 110

[§ 110] In General.

There are some facts of which the attorney obtains knowledge without any communication by the client. But unless there is such a communication ("information transmitted"), the knowledge gained is not protected by the privilege. The following are illustrations:

(1) Impressions of Mental Condition. An attorney's observation and impressions of the mental condition of his or her client are not privileged. (Oliver v. Warren (1911) 16 C.A. 164, 168, 116 P. 312; see 35 So. Cal. L. Rev. 208.)

(2) Independent Fact Related to Communication. In Coy v. Superior Court (1962) 58 C.2d 210, 23 C.R. 393, 373 P.2d 457, a complaint for abuse of process was based on the theory that defendant W and defendant B, his attorney, conspired to file an improper action against plaintiff. Plaintiff's interrogatory to W asked when he first discussed plaintiff's obligation with B. Held, this was permissible. It did not seek to elicit a privileged conversation, but only to set the date at which defendants first conceived the idea of filing the action against plaintiff. This date was a fact, and in no sense a communication by the client to his attorney. Thus, a question is not objectionable, even if it refers to a privileged communication, so long as it does not call for it. (58 C.2d 219, 220.)

To similar effect is Brown v. Superior Court (1963) 218 C.A.2d 430, 32 C.R. 527. Plaintiff sued defendant doctor for malpractice. Pursuant to the master plan embodied in the doctor's insurance policy, a committee of members of the local medical society met with the doctor and his attorney to review the evidence and make recommendations to the attorney. Plaintiff sought by interrogatories to discover the recommendations. Held, although protected on another ground (see infra, §140 et seq.), the privilege did not apply. The doctors were not agents of the client communicating or interpreting his disclosures; they were dealing with open information concerning the case, and their opinions on such discoverable information were not within the attorney-client privilege. (218 C.A.2d 439.)

IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

D. Communication.

3. Distinction: Knowledge Without Communication.

b. Identity of Client.

[§ 111] Identity of Client.

(1) General Rule: No Privilege. The prevailing view is that identity of the client (or the real party in interest) is not privileged, and the attorney cannot refuse to disclose the client's name. One theory is that the attorney learns the fact before the relationship is established; the other is that whatever communication is involved is not intended to be confidential, because the attorney must openly represent the client in dealings with third persons, and the adverse party is entitled to know who his or her opponent is. (See Satterlee v. Bliss (1869) 36 C. 489, 507; Brunner v. Superior Court (1959) 51 C.2d 616, 618, 335 P.2d 484; 1 McCormick 5th, §90; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2313; 98 Harv. L. Rev. 1514; 23 Cal. Western L. Rev. 42 [disclosure of taxpayer client's identity to I.R.S.]; 1965 A.S. 570; 1966 A.S. 407; 1991 A.S. 1047; 16 A.L.R.3d 1047 [disclosure of name, identity, address, occupation, or business of client as violation of attorney-client privilege].)

(2) Exception: Where Disclosure Would Incriminate Client. In Ex parte McDonough (1915) 170 C. 230, 236, 149 P. 566, though the court recognized this general rule, it held that, under the peculiar circumstances, to divulge identity of the clients would tend to incriminate them. (See Willis v. Superior Court (1980) 112 C.A.3d 277, 291, 292, 169 C.R. 301 [holding identity not privileged, but recognizing exception, as in Ex parte McDonough, where disclosure might subject client to prosecution in case in which attorney was consulted]; 49 Cal. L. Rev. 283, 388; 1960 A.S. 573.)

(3) Exception: Where Disclosure Would Reveal Confidential Communication. In Rosso, Johnson, Rosso & Ebersold v. Superior Court (1987) 191 C.A.3d 1514, 237 C.R. 242, defendant law firm had placed an advertisement directed to women who suffered injury from using the Dalkon Shield intrauterine device. Plaintiff, who had responded to the advertisement, sued the firm, alleging that the attorneys were responsible for her having missed the statute of limitations on her claim against the device's manufacturer; and she sought to discover defendants' master list of Dalkon Shield cases. Held, the list was protected by the attorney-client privilege. "As a general rule, the identity of an attorney's clients is not protected by the attorney-client privilege." (191 C.A.3d 1518, citing the text.) However, in this case, which is analogous to doctor-patient privilege cases (see infra, §§202, 220, 221), disclosure of the clients' names would reveal the nature of their medical problem, a confidential communication. Thus, "this is one of the exceptional cases where the identity of the client should be protected." (191 C.A.3d 1519.)

D. Communication.

3. Distinction: Knowledge Without Communication.

c. Knowledge of Client's Agent.

[§ 112] Knowledge of Client's Agent.

In Grand Lake Drive In v. Superior Court (1960) 179 C.A.2d 122, 3 C.R. 621, plaintiff, in a personal injury suit, alleged negligence of defendant in maintaining a slippery apron for its drive-in theatre. Defendant's attorney engaged an engineer to inspect and conduct tests on the sidewalk. Plaintiff then took the engineer's deposition, asking direct questions as to the nature of the surface and the results of his inspection and testing; i.e., the inquiry was as to knowledge, not communications. The trial judge ordered the engineer to answer and defendant sought mandamus, contending that the engineer received his knowledge solely as an intermediary in a confidential communication. Held, there was no privilege. "The object of Cheek's inspection, and the source of the knowledge as to which plaintiff seeks to question him, is the sidewalk area in front of defendant's drive-in. This area is open to the public. It is as readily visible to anyone approaching the building as is the color of the hat or pattern of the shoe a client wears to his lawyer's office. No act which defendant would not have done in the ordinary course of his business was required to make known to Cheek the characteristics of this sidewalk." (179 C.A.2d 126.) And if the sidewalk were destroyed it could hardly be argued that the engineer could not be called to testify as to its condition at a time shortly after the accident. (179 C.A.2d 127.)

The Grand Lake case was followed in People v. Donovan (1962) 57 C.2d 346, 19 C.R. 473, 369 P.2d 1, a condemnation suit, in which the court held that the state appraiser's opinion on fair market value of property was not within the privilege merely because it had been communicated to the state's attorney. Thus, when the state did not call him as a witness, he was properly called by the defendant to give his opinion; i.e., defendant was not inquiring as to a disclosure made by the witness (the client's agent), but only as to his knowledge, which was not privileged. (57 C.2d 355.)

Donovan was followed in People v. Cowan (1969) 1 C.A.3d 1001, 1004, 81 C.R. 713. But C.C.P. 1255.060, enacted in 1975, prohibits use of an appraiser's opinion on value communicated to the condemnor's attorney, and thus nullifies the holding in these cases. ### IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

E. In Course of Relationship.

1. Professional Consultation.

a. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 113

[§ 113] In General.

(1) Statutory Requirement. The information must have been transmitted, or the advice given, "in the course of that relationship." (Ev.C. 952; see Unif. Rules, Rule 502(b); 1 McCormick 5th, §88; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2303; 10 Stanf. L. Rev. 301.)

(2) Consultation Before Employment. The rule does not require that the attorney be actually employed and the relationship of attorney and client thereby created. Ev.C. 951 states the prevailing view that a "client" is a person who "consults a lawyer for the purpose of retaining the lawyer or securing legal service or advice from him in his professional capacity."

In other words, a person may safely discuss a problem with an attorney for the purpose of obtaining advice or representation, and the statements made are privileged, even though no actual employment follows. (Estate of Dupont (1943) 60 C.A.2d 276, 288, 140 P.2d 866 [attorney, after interview, refused employment]; People v. Dorrance (1944) 65 C.A.2d 125, 128, 150 P.2d 10 [attorney declined representation because of conflicting interest of another client]; People v. Abair (1951) 102 C.A.2d 765, 771, 228 P.2d 336; People v. Canfield (1974) 12 C.3d 699, 705, 117 C.R. 81, 527 P.2d 633, infra, §114 ["The lawyer-client privilege is, indeed, so extensive that where a person seeks the assistance of an attorney with a view to employing him professionally, any information acquired by the attorney is privileged whether or not actual employment results"]; see 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2304.)

However, in People v. Heart (1905) 1 C.A. 166, 81 P. 1018, defendant's wife consulted an attorney who refused the case. Held, the wife's communications were not privileged. (1 C.A. 168; but see criticism of Heart in Estate of Dupont, supra, 60 C.A.2d 289; see also infra, §124 [privilege where client communicates through messenger or agent].)

(3) Undelivered Letter to Public Defender. In People v. Gardner (1980) 106 C.A.3d 882, 165 C.R. 415, defendant, one of three persons arrested for murder, was in jail. He wrote a letter addressed to "P.D.," in which he stated that he had committed the crime and the other two were innocent. He added: "Now where do we go from here? I wouldn't talk to anybody in the police department until I talked to somebody from your office." A police officer, informed by the other two suspects that defendant would clear them, went to the cell and seized the letter, despite defendant's protest that it was confidential and intended for his attorney. Held, admission of the letter was reversible error per se. It was written with the reasonable expectation that defendant, having been represented by the county public defender at least seven times previously, would be so represented again; the fact that the communication was in the form of an undelivered letter was immaterial. (106 C.A.3d 887.)

(4) Labor Union Attorney at Union Meeting. In Benge v. Superior Court (1982) 131 C.A.3d 336, 182 C.R. 275, members of a local union working at a battery plant held a union meeting with their retained attorneys to discuss lead dust conditions and to obtain legal advice on their workers' compensation rights. They also received additional advice on their potential rights against third parties, and subsequently filed actions for damages against the plant owner. The latter, on deposition of union members, sought disclosure of the communications made at the meeting. Held, the communications were privileged. The facts (a) that the members did not intend to employ counsel when they went to the meeting, or (b) that the attorneys at the meeting did not represent them, were irrelevant; the discussion was privileged even though no actual employment resulted. (131 C.A.3d 345, 347, citing People v. Canfield, supra, and the text.)

(5) Appointed Counsel Replacing Deceased, Disbarred, or Inactive Counsel. C.R.C., Rule 955 and B. & P.C. 6180 provide for appointment of counsel to replace an attorney who is deceased, disbarred, or inactive. (See 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §111 et seq.) The attorney-client privilege extends to actions taken, and to communications by or to the appointed counsel, to the same extent that it would have applied to communications by or to the replaced attorney. (B. & P.C. 6180.10.)

(1) Statutory Requirement. See 1 McCormick 6th, §88.(5) Appointed Counsel Replacing Deceased, Disbarred, or Inactive Counsel. C.R.C., Rule 955 was renumbered C.R.C., Rule 9.20 in 2006. West's Key Number Digest, Witnesses k.199 et seq.

IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

E. In Course of Relationship.

1. Professional Consultation.

b. Statement of Indigency to Public Defender.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 114

[§ 114] Statement of Indigency to Public Defender.

In People v. Canfield (1974) 12 C.3d 699, 117 C.R. 81, 527 P.2d 633, defendant was charged with auto theft and receiving stolen property. In a confidential interview in jail, he told a public defender's aide that he could not afford private counsel, and he signed a financial statement under penalty of perjury pursuant to Govt.C. 27707. At the trial, defendant testified that he had paid cash for the car and had won about $ 75,000 by gambling during the preceding months. On cross-examination, the prosecutor, over objection, impeached him by using the financial statement. Held, it was error to permit such use.

(a) The United States Supreme Court, in United States v. Kahan (1974) 415 U.S. 239, 94 S.Ct. 1179, 39 L.Ed.2d 297, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §170, did allow introduction of evidence that a defendant had falsely stated at his arraignment that he lacked funds to employ an attorney. But there, the defendant made his statements in open court, without any expectation of confidentiality, and the statements were knowingly false. (12 C.3d 706.)

(b) Here, the prosecutor used the content of defendant's apparently true statement to impeach him, on the theory that under Govt.C. 27707 the form became a public record. This is unsound: the section does not abrogate the attorney-client privilege as to a financial statement given in confidence to the public defender. (12 C.3d 706.)

A concurring opinion in Canfield sought to narrow its scope: "[I]f the procedures followed in situations like the present one are such that the defendant is made aware of their nature and purpose and understands that he will not be represented by the public defender until he has established his indigency, then any information given by him either orally or in writing for that purpose cannot properly be considered a 'confidential communication' covered by the attorney-client privilege." (12 C.3d 708.) (See United States v. Kahan, supra, 94 S.Ct. 1181, 39 L.Ed.2d 301 [protective shield against defendant's having to choose between different constitutional protections "is not to be converted into a license for false representations on the issue of indigency free from the risk that the claimant will be held accountable for his falsehood"].)

Govt.C. 27707 and P.C. 987 were amended in 1980 to make the statement of indigency confidential and inadmissible in any criminal proceeding except a prosecution for perjury based on false material contained in the statement. But the statement may be used in a proceeding under P.C. 987.8 to determine the defendant's present ability to pay all or part of the costs of the defense. Thus, the amended sections create a new statutory privilege specifically precluding use of the statement for impeachment or otherwise by the prosecution in a criminal case.

IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

E. In Course of Relationship.

1. Professional Consultation.

c. Termination or Continuation of Relationship.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 115

[§ 115] Termination or Continuation of Relationship.

(1) Effect of Termination of Employment. In People v. Singh (1932) 123 C.A. 365, 11 P.2d 73, an attorney was consulted and appeared for defendants in preliminary proceedings. Later, at the trial, he testified against them, claiming that the employment terminated when they failed to raise his fee. Held, admission of the testimony was reversible error. The court said: "Conceding that he had the right, for nonpayment of fees or for any other good reason, to repudiate the employment and be relieved from further obligation, he had no right to violate any confidence reposed in him while acting as counsel." (123 C.A. 369.) (See 21 Cal. L. Rev. 67.)

Similarly, in Hardy v. Martin (1907) 150 C. 341, 89 P. 111, plaintiffs sent letters to their attorney containing damaging admissions. Later, plaintiffs made a deed, and subsequently sought to set it aside for fraud and undue influence. Held, although the attorney was no longer representing them when the deed was executed, the letters were privileged. "[I]f the relation existed at the time the communications are given, the subsequent cessation of that relation does not make the communication admissible." (150 C. 344.) (On disclosures made after attorney refuses to undertake representation, see People v. Gionis (1995) 9 C.4th 1196, 40 C.R.2d 456, 892 P.2d 1199, infra, §118.)

(2) Continuation of Relationship. In Littlefield v. Superior Court (1982) 136 C.A.3d 477, 186 C.R. 368, prosecution witness Bianchi was ordered to testify on cross-examination as to the content of confidential conversations between him and his defense counsel, the public defender. The order was made on behalf of counsel for defendant Buono, who wanted evidence to impeach Bianchi by showing that he obtained critical facts secondhand from his counsel. The order was based on the theory that the attorney-client relationship was "attenuated" because Bianchi had pled guilty to five of the murders charged against Buono and to similar murders in Washington. Held, the order was invalid. It was still uncertain where Bianchi would serve his life term; moreover, "unlike the privileges against self-incrimination, the attorney/client privilege continues even after the end of threat of punishment." (136 C.A.3d 482.) "Nothing in the statutes controlling the privilege suggests it is to be limited or diminished in importance as a function of the continuance of the relationship that existed at the time of the confidential communications herein sought." (136 C.A.3d 482.) Thus, the relationship between Bianchi and the public defender "has not, and never can be, 'attenuated' in the sense herein urged on us." (136 C.A.3d 482.)

IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

E. In Course of Relationship.

2. Nonprofessional Employment or Consultation.

a. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 116

[§ 116] In General.

The burden is on the claimant of the privilege to establish the condition of professional consultation. (Collette v. Sarrasin (1920) 184 C. 283, 288, 193 P. 571; Carroll v. Sprague (1881) 59 C. 655, 660.) Thus, where the client merely asked the attorney to witness a business transaction (deposit of funds in a bank), an act which could have been done by any layman, it was held that information as to the name and location of the bank was not a privileged communication. (McKnew v. Superior Court (1943) 23 C.2d 58, 64, 142 P.2d 1; see Solon v. Lichtenstein (1952) 39 C.2d 75, 80, 244 P.2d 907; Henshall v. Coburn (1917) 177 C. 50, 54, 169 P. 1014 [attorney acted as agent to engage another attorney]; Collette v. Sarrasin, supra [attorney employed to draw deed, no legal advice given]; Ferguson v. Ash (1915) 27 C.A. 375, 377, 150 P. 657 [same]; Mitchell v. Towne (1939) 31 C.A.2d 259, 265, 87 P.2d 908 [witness to conversation]; Watt Industries v. Superior Court (1997) 59 C.A.4th 110, 122, 68 C.R.2d 844, supra, §79 [documents produced by attorney engaged by employer to conduct prelitigation investigation of employee's discrimination claims might fall within or outside protection of privilege depending on whether he was called on to give legal advice during course of investigation]; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §§2296, 2297; 17 So. ### IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

E. In Course of Relationship.

2. Nonprofessional Employment or Consultation.

b. Client's Denial of Consultation.

[§ 117] Client's Denial of Consultation.

A "client" cannot both deny the fact of consultation and claim a privilege resulting from it. In Maier v. Noonan (1959) 174 C.A.2d 260, 344 P.2d 373, Mrs. M, living with her husband, sued defendant to establish paternity and obtain support for her infant child, and received a verdict and judgment. On motion for new trial, an affidavit of attorney S was filed, stating that he tried a personal injury suit against Mrs. M; that thereafter she phoned and asked whether she could get support for her child from defendant; that in the conversation she stated--contrary to her testimony at the trial--that she had regular intercourse with her husband during all the time in question; that S told her she could not collect, declined employment, and suggested that she get a local attorney. Mrs. M filed a counteraffidavit denying that she had ever discussed this subject with attorney S. The motion for new trial was granted but, on the retrial before a new judge, the counteraffidavit was not called to his attention. Hence, he ruled that the affidavit of S could not be introduced (as an admission or prior inconsistent statement) because of the attorney-client privilege. Held, it was reversible error to fail to call the counteraffidavit to the judge's attention:

"It appears to this court that Rosalie [Mrs. M] cannot at the time of the motion for a new trial (after the first trial), deny under oath that she ever talked to Shatford or ever sought or received any advice from him about the matter at hand and then at the third trial claim that the privilege of attorney and client existed between Shatford and herself. The attorney for Rosalie can hardly claim ignorance of the previous proceedings for the file discloses that the affidavit of Rosalie wherein she denied that she ever had even talked to Shatford about this case was prepared on his stationery and he acted as the notary before whom Rosalie swore to the truth of the statements therein contained. Out of fairness to the trial judge the stipulation should have been called to his attention and the matter of whether the relationship of attorney and client existed should have been explored on a voir dire examination. There is obviously great doubt and uncertainty as to whether the communication as made by Rosalie to Shatford (if there was such a conversation) is privileged, and under the circumstances in the interests of justice the question should be settled." (174 C.A.2d 265.)

E. In Course of Relationship.

2. Nonprofessional Employment or Consultation.

c. Attorney's Refusal To Represent Client.

[§ 118] Attorney's Refusal To Represent Client.

In People v. Gionis (1995) 9 C.4th 1196, 40 C.R.2d 456, 892 P.2d 1199, a case involving an alleged conspiracy by defendant to assault his former wife, the trial judge allowed an attorney, who was a friend and business associate of defendant's, to testify about an earlier occasion on which defendant, having been served with divorce papers, had told the attorney about possibly hiring someone to attack his wife. The Court of Appeal concluded that these statements were admitted in violation of the attorney-client privilege. Held, reversed. At the time the statements were made, the attorney had already told defendant unequivocally that he would not represent him in the dissolution proceeding. A person can have no reasonable expectation of being represented by an attorney after the attorney's explicit refusal to undertake representation. "Moreover, evidence of an attorney's express refusal of representation may give rise to a reasonable inference that, in continuing to speak to the attorney, the person is not thereafter consulting with the attorney for advice 'in his professional capacity.' " (9 C.4th 1211.) Under the circumstances, it is reasonable to infer that the conversation between defendant and the attorney was one between friends, and thus the trial judge's determination that no attorney-client relationship existed is adequately supported by the record. (9 C.4th 1212, 1213.) (See 23 Pepperdine L. Rev. 728 [Gionis]; 18 Thomas Jefferson L. Rev. 97 [same].)

IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

F. Confidential Disclosure.

1. General Requirement.

[§ 119] General Requirement.

The communication must have been intended to be confidential. (See Mission Film Corp. v. Chadwick Pictures Corp. (1929) 207 C. 386, 390, 278 P. 855; Mitchell v. Towne (1939) 31 C.A.2d 259, 265, 87 P.2d 908; People v. Hall (1942) 55 C.A.2d 343, 356, 130 P.2d 733; Solon v. Lichtenstein (1952) 39 C.2d 75, 80, 244 P.2d 907 [no privilege where communication made to be conveyed to third person]; Price v. Superior Court (1958) 161 C.A.2d 650, 652, 327 P.2d 203; Gonzales v. Municipal Court (1977) 67 C.A.3d 111, 118, 120, 136 C.R. 475 [statements by arresting officer to police department investigators, made with knowledge that they would be transmitted to city attorney and could be basis for disciplinary proceedings against him]; 1 McCormick 5th, §§89, 91; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §§2306, 2311; 10 Stanf. L. Rev. 307; 1956 A.S. 548.) (On whether privilege extends to confidential part of nonconfidential communication, see 32 So. Cal. L. Rev. 212; on problem of confidentiality in meeting of public agency, see Sacramento Newspaper Guild v. Sacramento County Bd. of Supervisors (1968) 263 C.A.2d 41, 58, 69 C.R. 480, supra, §105; on confidentiality of appointed expert's report, see Torres v. Municipal Court (1975) 50 C.A.3d 778, 123 C.R. 553.)

To be a "confidential communication," it must be "in confidence by a means which, so far as the client is aware, <discloses the information to no third persons other than those who are present to further the interest of the client in the consultation or those to whom disclosure is reasonably necessary for the transmission of the information or the accomplishment of the purpose for which the lawyer is consulted." However, a communication does not lose its confidential character simply because it was transmitted by "facsimile, cellular telephone, or other electronic means between the client and his or her lawyer." (v.C. 952.)>

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

F. Confidential Disclosure.

2. Requirement Excused.

[§ 120] Requirement Excused.

(1) Attorney's Duty To Protect Client. In People v. Vargas (1975) 53 C.A.3d 516, 126 C.R. 88, defendant was present during jury selection on the first day of his trial for a drug offense but failed to appear when court opened on the next day. Outside the jury's presence, defense counsel informed the trial judge that defendant had been present "a little while ago," when defendant and the attorney disagreed about the likelihood of the complaining witness showing up. Defense counsel added, "Just as soon as she did show up ... he said, 'I want to get my sport coat,' and he took off." Held, the attorney breached the attorney-client privilege but the disclosure was excusable.

(a) Defendant's statement concerning his apprehension about the complaining witness' presence arose out of the attorney-client relationship and was a confidential communication, privileged under Ev.C. 954. (53 C.A.3d 527.)

(b) Defendant's statement that he was going to get his sport coat was not confidential and the attorney could properly have revealed it. The revelation did indicate that defendant had been present and had left, ostensibly to go to his car and return. But there was nothing confidential about defendant's whereabouts, which were open for all to observe. (53 C.A.3d 527.)

(c) The confidential aspect of the communication was the revelation which indicated defendant's apprehension, i.e., consciousness of guilt. The statement did not show an intent to commit a crime or fraud (which would have excused disclosure) but, at best, was only circumstantial evidence of flight. (53 C.A.3d 527.) The attorney's disclosure nevertheless may be excused as necessary to protect defendant's interest: "It is arguable that in moving for a continuance the attorney was under a duty to reveal to the court all facts within his knowledge concerning the defendant's disappearance, and that even if he were not under such duty, it was no abuse of discretion, and an exemplary tactical choice, to reveal all the facts to the court in the hopes of securing time to communicate with his client and to induce him to return for trial or change of plea." (53 C.A.3d 528.)

(2) Court's Duty To Control Disclosure. Under Ev.C. 912 and 952, documents containing confidential communications between attorney and client lose the protection of the privilege once they are disclosed. However, when allegedly privileged documents are seized pursuant to a search warrant, the court may itself control disclosure. Based on the court's duty to safeguard disclosure of privileged materials, its power to govern discovery of them, and its power to control its orders so as to make them conform to law and justice, the court has the power to seal such materials and, on a claim of privilege, conduct an in camera review. The owner of the documents may then identify and object to the seizure of those documents believed to be protected and move for the return of those believed to be outside the scope of the warrant under P.C. 1539 (see 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, §139). (PSC Geothermal

(2) Court's Duty To Control Disclosure. See People v. Superior Court (Pfingst) (2000) 83 C.A.4th 387, 401, 402, 99 C.R.2d 646 [court's duty, identified in PSC Geothermal Services Co. v. Superior Court (1994) 25 C.A.4th 1697, 31 C.R.2d 213, text, p. 377, to safeguard disclosure of privileged materials does not apply where search is directed not at obtaining privileged materials but is limited to ongoing investigation of possible wrongdoing of public prosecutor and is carefully confined to searching for evidence and fruits of alleged criminal activity].

F. Confidential Disclosure.

3. Presence of Third Persons.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 121

[§ 121] Presence of Third Persons.

The communication may retain its confidential character even though third persons are present:

(1) Former Law. One view, probably California's former law, is that the privilege remains only where such third persons are necessary for the purpose of communication or consultation; e.g., a lawyer's secretary or clerk. The presence of others, though intimately associated with the client, renders the communication nonconfidential. (See Marshall v. Marshall (1956) 140 C.A.2d 475, 480, 295 P.2d 131 [communications in presence of plaintiff's son]; Mitchell v. Towne (1939) 31 C.A.2d 259, 265, 87 P.2d 908; Sharon v. Sharon (1889) 79 C. 633, 677, 22 P. 26; and see generally 1 McCormick 5th, §91; 10 Stanf. L. Rev. 308, 317; 61 Harv. L. Rev. 717; 96 A.L.R.2d 125, 160 [persons other than client or attorney affected by, or included within, attorney-client privilege].)

(2) Evidence Code. The Evidence Code states a much broader rule, embracing two kinds of third persons whose presence does not destroy the confidentiality of the communication:

(a) Those "to whom disclosure is reasonably necessary for ... the accomplishment of the purpose for which the lawyer is consulted." (Ev.C. 952, supra, §119.) This would cover not only a secretary or clerk, but an expert consultant present to assist the lawyer in advising the client. (Law Rev. Com. Comment.)

(b) Those "who are present to further the interest of the client in the consultation." (Ev.C. 952.) This would cover a spouse, parent, business associate, joint client, etc., or "another person and his attorney who may meet with the client and his attorney in regard to a matter of joint concern." (Law Rev. Com. Comment.)

In Insurance Co. of North America v. Superior Court (1980) 108 C.A.3d 758, 166 C.R. 880, communications were made at a meeting of representatives of a parent company and its wholly owned operating subsidiary. The issue was whether an officer or employee of a holding or affiliated company could receive confidential legal advice from counsel employed by a wholly owned subsidiary or affiliate. Held, the communications were privileged.

(a) "[W]e construe section 952 to mean that attorney-client communications in the presence of, or disclosed to, clerks, secretaries, interpreters, physicians, spouses, parents, business associates, or joint clients, when made to further the interest of the client or when reasonably necessary for transmission or accomplishment of the purpose of the consultation, remain privileged." (108 C.A.3d 771.)

(b) "As part of this general rule, we conclude that an officer or employee of a holding or affiliated company can receive legal advice from counsel employed by a wholly owned subsidiary or affiliate without destroying the confidentiality of the communication." (108 C.A.3d 771.) (See 36 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 151 [applying attorney-client and work product privileges to allied party exchange of information]; 14 A.L.R.4th 594 [communications made in presence of or solely to or by third person; note on Insurance Co. case]; on effect of disclosure to court-appointed psychotherapist, see infra, §231 et seq.)

IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

F. Confidential Disclosure.

4. Communication to Lawyer's Agent.

a. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 122

[§ 122] In General.

(1) General Rule. A communication by a client retains its confidential character, though made to a third person, if the disclosure to that third person "is reasonably necessary for the transmission of the information" to the attorney. (Ev.C. 952, supra, §119.) This broad rule covers various kinds of agents and intermediaries, e.g., the attorney's secretary, a doctor engaged by the attorney to interpret the client's communications, an accountant, or other expert. (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 952; see Unif. Rules, Rule 502(a)(5); San Francisco v. Superior Court (1951) 37 C.2d 227, 236, 231 P.2d 26 [doctor as necessary to interpret the client's condition to the attorney]; In re Ochse (1951) 38 C.2d 230, 232, 238 P.2d 561 [attorney entitled to have psychiatrist examine client privately to interpret mental condition to him]; People v. Lines (1975) 13 C.3d 500, 119 C.R. 225, 531 P.2d 793, infra, §237 [attorney-client privilege may exist even though psychotherapist-patient privilege has been waived]; People v. Clark (1990) 50 C.3d 583, 621, 268 C.R. 399, 789 P.2d 127 [psychologist appointed by court at defense counsel's request to examine defendant]; Rodriguez v. Superior Court (1993) 14 C.A.4th 1260, 1266, 18 C.R.2d 120 [defendant's statement to psychologist retained by defense counsel for purposes of evaluation in preparation of defense]; 1 McCormick 5th, §89; 96 A.L.R.2d 125, 160 [persons other than client or attorney affected by, or included within, attorney-client privilege].)

(2) Distinctions. In Brown v. Superior Court (1963) 218 C.A.2d 430, 32 C.R. 527, infra, §141, a malpractice case against Dr. F, the doctor's statements to a county medical society committee, later delivered to his attorney, were held not privileged. Unlike the lay client in the San Francisco case, supra, Dr. F did not need an intermediary to communicate his condition to his attorney. (218 C.A.2d 439.)

An obvious distinction was made in Jorgensen v. Superior Court (1958) 163 C.A.2d 513, 329 P.2d 550, a malpractice suit. Plaintiff voluntarily submitted to defendant's request for an examination by defendant's doctor, and thereafter, defendant refused to give plaintiff a copy of the doctor's report. Held, there was no privilege: plaintiff was not communicating to the agent of his attorney but to the agent of the opposing attorney, and there was neither an attorney-client relationship nor a communication intended to be confidential. (163 C.A.2d 516.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) General Rule. See People v. Roldan (2005) 35 C.4th 646, 724, 27 C.R.3d 360, 110 P.3d 289 [in capital murder case, trial judge erred in permitting psychologist appointed by court to assist defense to describe threats defendant made to him against prosecutor; at time of trial, no express exception to attorney-client privilege existed for threats of future criminal conduct (see text, §154)]; 1 McCormick 6th, §89.

IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

F. Confidential Disclosure.

4. Communication to Lawyer's Agent.

b. Guardian Ad Litem as Agent.

[§ 123] Guardian Ad Litem as Agent.

In De Los Santos v. Superior Court (1980) 27 C.3d 677, 166 C.R. 172, 613 P.2d 233, J, a 9-year-old boy, was injured when his bicycle collided with an automobile. An action was filed on his behalf by Mrs. S, his mother, as guardian ad litem, and on her own behalf to recover the cost of past and future medical care for J. Defendants--driver and owner of the automobile and manufacturer and seller of the bicycle--served interrogatories on J and deposed Mrs. S. In her deposition, she was questioned about statements made by J to her regarding the circumstances of the accident and the condition of the bicycle. She refused to answer on the ground that J's statements were made in response to questions she had asked at the request of his attorney, for the purposes of answering defendants' interrogatories and preparing for trial. The trial judge granted defendants' motion to compel answers. Held, mandamus issued to prevent discovery; the information was privileged.

(a) In her capacity as guardian ad litem, Mrs. S was the holder of J's lawyer-client privilege and authorized to assert it on his behalf (Ev.C. 953(b)). (27 C.3d 682.) The statements were given in the course of a lawyer-client relationship and were intended to be confidential. (27 C.3d 682.)

(b) The statements retained their confidential character despite their intended use for answering interrogatories, just as statements to an attorney in preparation for testimony at a trial retain confidentiality despite the testimony at the trial. (27 C.3d 682, 683.)

(c) J's privilege was not lost by reason of his disclosure of confidential information to Mrs. S. She, as guardian ad litem, was a third party to whom communication was reasonably necessary for transmission of the information to his attorney (Ev.C. 952). The guardian ad litem has broad powers in the conduct of a case, and should be apprised of matters which the minor communicates to his attorney for the purpose of prosecuting or defending the action. Whether the guardian obtains such knowledge by his or her presence at consultations between the attorney and the minor, or by securing the information from the minor for transmission to the attorney, is of no consequence. And the protection extends to minors of any age. (27 C.3d 684.)

(d) Defendants suggested that Mrs. S may not have communicated all of J's statements to his lawyer, and contended that any such unreported statements were not privileged. But no authority supports the theory that, in order to retain confidential status, the statements must be rendered literally by the intermediary; the client's intent to make a confidential communication controls. Hence, the privilege protects the statements made by J to his mother for the purpose of transmission to his lawyer regardless of whether all of his remarks were communicated in full. (27 C.3d

(e) J answered interrogatories dealing with defects in the bicycle, and Ev.C. 912 provides that the privilege is waived if the holder discloses or consents to disclosure of a significant part of the communication. But, as already pointed out, the nonconfidential answers to interrogatories are distinct from the confidential conversations on which the answers were based; and neither by testifying nor by answering interrogatories does a client waive the confidentiality of those conversations. (27 C.3d 685, 686.) (See 8 Pepperdine L. Rev. 604.)

F. Confidential Disclosure.

5. Communication by Client's Agent.

a. Agent of Natural Person.

[§ 124] Agent of Natural Person.

The client's freedom of disclosure requires protection whether the client communicates with his or her attorney directly or indirectly. "This of course includes communications through an interpreter, and also communications through a messenger or any other agent of transmission, as well as communications originating with the client's agent and made to the attorney." (San Francisco v. Superior Court (1951) 37 C.2d 227, 237, 231 P.2d 26 [quoting Wigmore]; see 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2317; 10 Stanf. L. Rev. 304, 316; 66 A.L.R.4th 1227 [who is "representative of the client" under statute privileging communications between attorney and client's representative].)

Ev.C. 951 (supra, §105) codified this rule by defining "client" as a person who, "directly or through an authorized representative," consults a lawyer. (See Unif. Rules, Rule 502(a)(1) ["person ... who is rendered professional legal services by a lawyer, or who consults a lawyer with a view to obtaining professional legal services from him"].)

[§ 125] In General.

A corporation has the same privilege as an individual (see supra, §106), but the relationship of corporate client and attorney gives rise to a special problem of confidential disclosure. The artificial corporate person must communicate through a natural person--its employee; and the intent to communicate in confidence must be either the actual or imputed intent of that employee. Nearly all the decisions deal with written reports. (See 27 A.L.R.5th 76 [corporate communications entitled to privilege].) In D. I. Chadbourne v. Superior Court (1964) 60 C.2d 723, 36 C.R. 468, 388 P.2d 700, the court, in an elaborate opinion reexamining earlier cases, laid down a series of tests to determine when the necessary intent is present. (See infra, §132.)

The situation of the public entity (defined in Ev.C. 200) is similar, and the Chadbourne principles apply to communications by employees of the public entity. (See People v. Glen Arms Estate (1964) 230 C.A.2d 841, 858, 41 C.R. 303, infra, §133.)

IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

F. Confidential Disclosure.

5. Communication by Client's Agent.
- b. Employee of Corporation or Public Entity.
  2. Control Group Test Repudiated.

[§ 126] Control Group Test Repudiated.

In applying the privilege to a corporation client, several federal court decisions adopted the "control group test," under which only senior management is regarded as having an identity analogous to the corporation as a whole; i.e., the privilege may be claimed only for communications by employees in a position to control or take a substantial part in a decision--they then personify the corporation. (See Upjohn Co. v. United States (1981) 449 U.S. 383, 101 S.Ct. 677, 683, 66 L.Ed.2d 584, 593; 84 Harv. L. Rev. 424.)

This test was repudiated in the Upjohn case. Upjohn, a corporation manufacturing pharmaceuticals, had a number of foreign subsidiaries. An audit by independent accountants disclosed illegal payments by a subsidiary to foreign governmental officials to obtain government business. T, Upjohn's vice-president, secretary and general counsel, conducted an investigation, in which questionnaires were sent to all foreign general and area managers, seeking detailed information on such possibly illegal payments. The managers were instructed to treat the investigation as confidential. T also interviewed recipients of the questionnaire and other officers and employees. The corporation made a report to the S.E.C., with a copy to the I.R.S., and the I.R.S. issued a summons demanding production of "[a]ll files relative to the investigation," with the following specification: "The records should include but not be limited to written questionnaires ... and memoranda or notes of the interviews ... with officers and employees." Upjohn refused to produce these specified documents, on the ground that they were protected by the attorney-client privilege and the work product doctrine. Held, both privileges applied.

(a) Criticism and rejection of control group test.

(1) The privilege protects not only the giving of professional advice by the lawyer but also the giving of information to the lawyer to enable him to give informed advice. (101 S.Ct. 683, 66 L.Ed.2d 593.)

(2) In the case of the individual client, the provider of information and the person who acts on the lawyer's advice are the same. But in the corporate context employees beyond the control group will possess information needed by the corporation's lawyers. "Middle-level--and indeed lower-level--employees can, by actions within the scope of their employment, embroil the corporation in serious legal difficulties, and it is only natural that these employees would have the relevant information needed by corporate counsel if he is adequately to advise the client with respect to such actual or potential difficulties." (101 S.Ct. 683, 66 L.Ed.2d 592.) The control group test thus frustrates the purpose of the privilege by discouraging the communication of relevant information by employees of the client corporation seeking to render legal advice to the client, and by making it difficult for the attorney to convey legal advice to the employees who will put into effect the client's policy. (101 S.Ct. 684, 66 L.Ed.2d 593.)

(3) The control group test is also lacking in certainty and difficult to apply in practice; i.e., conflicting views have resulted on which officers play a substantial role in directing a corporation's legal response. (101 S.Ct. 684, 66 L.Ed.2d 593.)

(b) Attorney-client privilege applies to communications here. Information not available from upper echelon management was needed to supply a basis for legal advice concerning compliance with securities and tax laws, foreign laws, currency regulation, duties to shareholders, and potential litigation in each of these areas. (101 S.Ct. 685, 66 L.Ed.2d 594.)

(c) Untenable objection that discovery will be unduly restricted. The privilege only protects disclosure of communications to the attorney; the employees may be called to testify to facts. Hence, while it might be more convenient for the Government to obtain the results of Upjohn's internal investigation by subpoenaing the questionnaires and notes taken by the attorneys, this consideration does not overcome the policies of the privilege. (101 S.Ct. 686, 66 L.Ed.2d 595.)

(d) No comprehensive standards or rules declared. This case is decided on its facts, and "we ... do not undertake to draft a set of rules" to govern challenges to investigatory subpoenas. However, the narrow control group test cannot govern development of the law in this area. (101 S.Ct. 686, 66 L.Ed.2d 595.) (See 95 Harv. L. Rev. 270; 33 Hastings L. J. 518; 19 Cal. Western L. Rev. 141; 67 A.B.A.J. 1142; 1981 A.S. 193; 1982 A.S. 129, 179; 1983 A.S. 175; for holding on work product privilege, see infra, §138.)

IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

F. Confidential Disclosure.

5. Communication by Client's Agent.

c. Agent Who Is Also Party.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 127

[§ 127] Agent Who Is Also Party.

In Wilson v. Superior Court (1957) 148 C.A.2d 433, 307 P.2d 37, plaintiffs sued for damages to land caused by alleged negligence in excavating by defendant school district pursuant to the plan and supervision of defendant W, an engineer. On deposition, W refused to answer many relevant questions concerning negligence and causation, relying mainly on the district's claim of attorney-client privilege. The theory of the claim was that, after the slide occurred, defendant district (client) employed W (client's agent) to investigate and provide the district's attorney with a confidential report to use in defense of a potential lawsuit against the district. Concededly such a report was a privileged communication, but the deposition merely sought information gained in the investigation, and any expert opinion based thereon. The problem was whether San Francisco v. Superior Court (1951) 37 C.2d 227, 231 P.2d 26, supra, §124, was so analogous as to compel the conclusion that "the client may submit his property to an examination by the engineering expert without fear that the latter will be compelled to reveal the information disclosed." (148 C.A.2d 442.) Held, W should be required to answer: "Here, the agent whom the client selected to investigate and report to its attorney was himself a potential defendant in the litigation which was imminent, the very person upon whose negligence or nonnegligence the imputed negligence or nonnegligence of the district would seem largely, if not wholly, to depend." (148 C.A.2d 442.)

The court then took note of the authorities holding that the policy of nondisclosure yields when the attorney-client relationship is abused, as where the client seeks advice in contemplation of a crime or fraud. (148 C.A.2d 443; see infra, §153 et seq.) Although no corrupt motive was shown here, nevertheless there were, said the court, factors potentially inherent in the situation which made it impolitic to recognize the privilege; in particular, "the inducement, to a defendant who may acquire significant information, to seal his own lips by accepting, perhaps actively seeking, employment as the agent of a codefendant, if the revealing of such knowledge can be controlled by a cooperative principal." (148 C.A.2d 444.) There were, moreover, seven individual defendants in addition to W (his associates and employees), "whom the school district might similarly employ and similarly seal their lips." "How far can this go? Can each of these eight employ each of the others as his agent to aid his attorney in preparing and conducting his defense and thus increase from one to nine the number of client-principals whose consents must be obtained for the release of the knowledge acquired by any of the eight as agents?" (148 C.A.2d 444.) And if so, "it should be permissible for the plaintiffs to do likewise, with similar concealment of information acquired by each plaintiff as agent of a coplaintiff." (148 C.A.2d 444.)

Thus the court reconciled the conflicting policies of the privilege and the duty to testify by holding that (a) in his capacity as agent of the client, W's communications to the attorney and the advice received from the attorney were as confidential and as much within the protection of the privilege as if he had been the client; but that (b) in his capacity as a "principal" and an adverse party he was under the usual duty to testify on deposition or at the trial, answering all legal and pertinent questions which called for his knowledge, however acquired. (148 C.A.2d 445.) (For criticism of some of this language, see Grand Lake Drive In v. Superior Court (1960) 179 C.A.2d 122, 127, 3 C.R. 621, supra, §112.)

IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

F. Confidential Disclosure.

6. Writings Transmitted to Attorney.

a. Existing Papers Not Privileged.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 128

[§ 128] Existing Papers Not Privileged.

(1) In General. Modern discovery proceedings (see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §2) bring into conflict the policy favoring production of evidence and the policies underlying the several privileges. This conflict occurs in connection with oral testimony on deposition, and it is even more serious where documentary evidence is sought by order of inspection or subpoena duces tecum.

No question arises, of course, as to ordinary confidential communications by letter or other writing between the attorney and client. They are protected from disclosure at the trial and from disclosure in discovery proceedings. (See 1 McCormick 5th, §§89, 96; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §§2307, 2318.)

The practical problem is whether documents which are not just communications to an attorney, but which have some independent character, e.g., contracts or reports, become privileged by transmission (or "communication") to the attorney. The answer is now established: if a document has such an independent existence as to be subject to compulsory disclosure while in the client's possession, it remains subject to disclosure despite its physical delivery to the attorney for use in preparing the case. "[A] document, report, or photograph that would otherwise be admissible in evidence does not become privileged merely because the client delivers it to his attorney. Unless a report or photograph is created for the purpose of communicating information to the attorney, it cannot have the character of a privileged communication when it comes into existence and accordingly cannot become privileged if it is later delivered to the attorney." (Holm v. Superior Court (1954) 42 C.2d 500, 511, 267 P.2d 1025, infra, §130 [concurring and dissenting opinion]; see San Francisco Unified School Dist. v. Superior Court (1961) 55 C.2d 451, 457, 11 C.R. 373, 359 P.2d 925; Greyhound Corp. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 C.2d 355, 397, 15 C.R. 90, 364 P.2d 266, infra, §139; Fisher v. United States (1976) 425 U.S. 391, 96 S.Ct. 1569, 48 L.Ed.2d 39, infra, §458 [fact that attorney was client's agent did not prevent enforcement of subpoena duces tecum for accountant's tax workpapers prepared for client and then transmitted to attorney]; 1 McCormick 5th, §§89, 96; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2307; 10 Stanf. L. Rev. 302; 82 A.L.R.2d 1162 [San Francisco Unified School Dist.].)

(2) Illustrations. In Holm v. Superior Court, supra, after an accident involving a city bus driver, the city's claims investigator obtained a signed statement from the injured party (plaintiff) concerning the facts of the accident, and gave her no copy. Held, plaintiff's own statement was in no sense a confidential communication to an attorney, and the document did not become privileged by transmittal to the city's legal staff. (42 C.2d 507.) (For holding that investigator's report and photographs of scene were privileged, see infra, §130.)

In San Francisco Unified School Dist. v. Superior Court, supra, C, a high school student, was injured during athletic events, and sued the school district. He had been operated on and treated by Dr. N, and the district took Dr. N's deposition, at which he answered all questions fully. He had no independent recollection or notes, however, of some five visits; and, when asked for three reports sent to C's attorneys during that period, the attorneys claimed privilege. Held, mandamus issued to compel production of the reports. The privilege can be invoked where the client was sent by the attorneys to the doctor for examination, but not where the client was treated by the doctor before the doctor was thus asked to serve as agent. C's theory was that, although Dr. N was not privileged with respect to knowledge of any facts gained, and fully related those facts on deposition, his reports to the attorneys were privileged. But knowledge otherwise not privileged does not become so merely by being communicated to an attorney:

"Here the real parties in interest would have us apply the attorney-agent-client privilege where the witness whose knowledge of the facts is unprivileged testifies that he has no record or independent recollection of certain of such facts but has made reports to the client's attorneys which, so far as appears, may set forth the otherwise unrecorded facts. As pointed out by petitioner, such a holding would permit, by the deliberate destruction of records after the rendering of reports to counsel, the sealing up of nonprivileged information by the passage of time and the resultant lapse of memory on the part of the witness. ... We hold that the forwarding to counsel of nonprivileged records, in the guise of reports, will not create a privilege with respect to such records and their contents where none existed theretofore." (55 C.2d 456.)

1. Nature of Problem.

[§ 129] Nature of Problem.

Where there is no bald attempt to insulate existing documentary evidence (supra, §128), a stronger case is made for the privilege. The typical situation arises after an automobile accident or other negligent act, where the agent or adjuster of the defendant or the defendant's insurance carrier investigates and obtains written statements from witnesses (often including the plaintiff), takes photographs, and makes written reports to the defendant or insurance carrier. To what extent are these reports of agents of the client privileged?

If the report is not a matter of ordinary business routine, but appears to be specially prepared for the use of the client's attorney in connection with anticipated litigation, it is privileged. (See New York Cas. Co. v. Superior Court (1938) 30 C.A.2d 130, 132, 85 P.2d 965; Holm v. Superior Court (1954) 42 C.2d 500, 508, 267 P.2d 1025, infra, §130; 1 McCormick 5th, §96; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §§2318, 2319; 1 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 605; 1942 A.S. 888; 1954 A.S. 791; 55 A.L.R.4th 336 [insured's communication to insurer privileged as transmission to insurer-assigned attorney for defense of claim].)

In many cases, however, an accident report is required by a transportation company or similar party, as a matter of routine business practice, but for a dual purpose: preparation for anticipated litigation, and improvement of service by elimination of careless or incompetent operators and defective equipment. In other words, the report would be made even though no litigation were threatened or commenced; and, so far as privilege is concerned, it might be held to fall within the general rule requiring disclosure of preexisting documents. (See Holm v. Superior Court, supra, 42 C.2d 511 [dissenting opinion]; 1 McCormick 5th, §96.) But the California court took a different view. (See infra, §130.)

b. Reports Prepared for Litigation.

2. Governing Law: Dominant Purpose Test.

[§ 130] Governing Law: Dominant Purpose Test.

(1) Nature of Test. In Holm v. Superior Court (1954) 42 C.2d 500, 267 P.2d 1025, the court held that, where a report has a dual purpose, it is privileged if its dominant purpose is transmittal to the attorney in the course of professional employment. The question is one of fact for the trial judge, but whose determination is subject to review for abuse of discretion. (42 C.2d 507.)

The action in the Holm case was against defendant city and G, its bus driver, for personal injuries resulting from alleged negligence in operation of a bus. The judge granted an order of inspection of (a) written reports of G, the driver, made to the city, giving his version of the accident, and (b) photographs taken at the scene of the accident by the city's agents. Held, prohibition granted to prevent enforcement of the order; although prepared in the regular course of business, the dominant purpose of collecting these materials was their use in threatened litigation. The court said: "[T]here is no valid basis for a distinction between a communication created for transmittal to an attorney to prepare for threatened litigation following particular accidents, and a communication prepared for an identical purpose under standing rules in the case of all accidents involving personal or property injury. Because the scope of the operations of the defendant city's municipal railway is such as to require communications of this nature as a routine matter, it cannot be said that the attorney-client privilege did not attach." (42 C.2d 508.) (See Jessup v. Superior Court (1957) 151 C.A.2d 102, 109, 311 P.2d 177 [routine report of investigation of drowning of boy in municipal swimming pool, delivered to city manager and then to city attorney; dominant purpose held preparation for litigation, and privileged].)

(2) Abuse of Discretion Standard. The "discretion" test of the Holm case makes the result difficult to predict. In Union Oil Co. v. Superior Court (1957) 151 C.A.2d 286, 311 P.2d 640, plaintiffs, heirs of decedents, sued petitioner for wrongful death from poisonous gas. They sought inspection of written statements made by petitioner's employees and other witnesses concerning the accident, averring that the statements were made pursuant to a petroleum safety order required by statute. Petitioner's affidavits averred that the statements were prepared and delivered to counsel in anticipation of litigation. The trial judge ordered inspection. Held, affirmed; his determination of the dominant purpose (required report) on conflicting affidavits was binding. (151 C.A.2d 289.) (Cf. Jessup v. Superior Court, supra, 151 C.A.2d 110, 111 [discretion held abused, order of inspection improper].)

The Holm and Jessup cases were followed in Heffron v. Los Angeles Transit Lines (1959) 170 C.A.2d 709, 339 P.2d 567, a wrongful death action. Defendant's bus driver, pursuant to company rules, made a report which went to its insurance company and was then transmitted to its attorney. An affidavit stated that the primary purpose of such a report is the preparation of a defense to anticipated litigation. Held, this supported the trial judge's implied finding of dominant purpose, and made the report privileged. (170 C.A.2d 717.) (See Greeneich v. Southern Pac. Co. (1961) 189 C.A.2d 100, 110, 11 C.R. 235; Safeway Stores v. Superior Court (1961) 193 C.A.2d 270, 274, 14 C.R. 243 [reviewing cases and holding dominant purpose not established]; Greyhound Corp. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 C.2d 355, 398, 15 C.R. 90, 364 P.2d 266 [statements taken from independent nonparty witnesses; held not confidential and not privileged]; infra, §131 et seq.)

(3) Holm's Photographs Holding Disapproved. In its holding as to photographs, however, the Holm case was disapproved in Suezaki v. Superior Court (1962) 58 C.2d 166, 176, 23 C.R. 368, 373 P.2d 432, infra, §135.

3. Report Must Emanate From Client.

[§ 131] Report Must Emanate From Client.

In San Diego Professional Assn. v. Superior Court (1962) 58 C.2d 194, 23 C.R. 384, 373 P.2d 448, S Assn. hired plaintiff architects to prepare plans and supervise construction of a building. After completion plaintiffs sued for a balance due for services. S Assn., defendant, answered and cross-complained alleging malpractice and breach of contract, and its attorney retained an engineering firm to make a study of all the documents and to analyze the alleged deficiencies. The firm's report was delivered to the attorney. Plaintiffs then sought an order of inspection, which the trial judge granted. Held, the order was not an abuse of discretion.

Defendant contended that the report was like that of a doctor retained by an attorney to report on the physical or mental condition of the client, but the court saw no similarity:

"[N]either the client's body, mind, nor private and confidential papers were submitted to the engineers for examination and report. They were handed the 'contract documents.' In other words, their primary duty was not to examine and assess the client's building, but to evaluate and report any errors found in certain architectural designs, building specifications and contracts, all of which were part of the documents which constituted the contract between the parties to the lawsuit. Such documents were not private to the client, but were equally available to both parties, both before and during the pendency of the action." (58 C.2d 201.)

Thus, under the test that privileged matters are only those which emanate in confidence from the client, there was no privilege for other information merely because it was reduced to writing and transmitted by a "report" to the attorney. (58 C.2d 202.) (For work product issue, see infra, §139; and see 97 A.L.R.2d 770 [pretrial discovery of opponent's engineering reports].)

4. Where Corporation or Similar Entity Is Client.

aa. Chadbourne Criteria.

[§ 132] Chadbourne Criteria.

In Gene Compton's Corp. v. Superior Court (1962) 205 C.A.2d 365, 23 C.R. 250, the court held that statements of employees taken by the adjuster for the employer's insurance carrier and transmitted to the attorney were privileged as a matter of law. This decision was followed by Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. v. Superior Court (1962) 208 C.A.2d 73, 76, 25 C.R. 54, but both decisions were overruled in D. I. Chadbourne v. Superior Court (1964) 60 C.2d 723, 36 C.R. 468, 388 P.2d 700.

In the Chadbourne case, Mr. and Mrs. S sued for personal injuries sustained in a fall on a sidewalk, alleging negligence of defendant Chadbourne. Answering plaintiff's interrogatories, defendant admitted that it had obtained the written statement of M, an employee who performed work on the sidewalk. In response to plaintiff's motion for inspection, showing good cause (M had failed to appear for a deposition and was on foreign duty with the armed forces), defendant filed a declaration of the adjuster that M's statement had been taken by the adjuster of defendant's insurance carrier, on direction of the attorneys, as part of the preparation of the defense, and that the statement had been given to the adjuster. The judge ordered inspection and defendant sought mandamus. Held, writ denied; the statement was not privileged as a matter of law, and the judge's determination of the factual issue in favor of inspection was binding on the reviewing court. The lengthy opinion proceeds as follows:

(a) Problem where client is corporation. The test, whether the client intended the communication to be confidential, gives rise to two alternative questions: (1) whether the corporate employee who made the statement had such intent, or (2) if he had none and was required by the corporation to make the statement, whether its intent made it privileged. (60 C.2d 732, 733.) The problem is accentuated where the communication passes through several hands (here, e.g., the employee communicated the statement to the adjuster who reported to the adjusting company which reported to the insurance company which transmitted it to the attorney). (60 C.2d 735.)

(b) Governing policy. The artificial corporate person should have the same opportunity as a natural person to communicate with its attorney in confidence. But it should not have greater privileges merely because it must utilize a natural person in order to speak. (60 C.2d 736.)

(c) Basic principles. Pursuant to this policy, the following principles emerge (60 C.2d 736):

(3) "When an employee has been a witness to matters which require communication to the corporate employer's attorney, and the employee has no connection with those matters other than as a witness, he is an independent witness; and the fact that the employer requires him to make a statement for transmittal to the latter's attorney does not alter his status or make his statement subject to the attorney-client privilege."

(4) "Where the employee's connection with the matter grows out of his employment to the extent that his report or statement is required in the ordinary course of the corporation's business, the employee is no longer an independent witness, and his statement or report is that of the employer."

(5) "If, in the case of the employee last mentioned, the employer requires (by standing rule or otherwise) that the employee make a report, the privilege of that report is to be determined by the employer's purpose in requiring the same; that is to say, if the employer directs the making of the report for confidential transmittal to its attorney, the communication may be privileged."

(6) "When the corporate employer has more than one purpose in directing such an employee to make such report or statement, the dominant purpose will control, unless the secondary use is such that confidentiality has been waived."

(7) "If otherwise privileged under the rules stated above, a communication does not lose its privilege merely because it was obtained, with the knowledge and consent of the employer, by an agent of the employer acting under such agency."

(10) "Similarly, where the corporate employer directs the employee, at the request of its insurance carrier, to make such a statement, the intent of the employer controls; and unless the insurance carrier (or its agent) has advised the employer that the employee's statement is to be obtained and used in such manner, it cannot be said that the corporation intended the statement to be made as a confidential communication from client to attorney."

(11) "Finally, no greater liberality should be applied to the facts which determine privilege in the case of a corporation than would be applied in the case of a natural person (or association of persons), except as may be necessary to allow the corporation to speak."

(d) Application to this case. The burden of establishing privilege was not met. M, the employee, was not a defendant, and no attempt was made to show that he could be responsible for the accident. No claim was made that his statement contained any information emanating from him as a spokesman of the corporation, or anything that could not have been known to a nonemployee witness. More important, the declaration was made by the adjuster and was limited to his intent; there was no indication of a confidential intention of M or defendant employer. (60 C.2d 738.) (See 12 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 629.)

In People v. Glen Arms Estate (1964) 230 C.A.2d 841, 41 C.R. 303, a condemnation proceeding, the Chadbourn principles were applied to an employee of a public entity, and the privilege upheld. N, a state right-of-way agent, made a report to D, the district agent, as a basis for an offer of settlement; the report was then transmitted to the state's attorneys. Held: The trial judge was warranted in concluding that the report was prepared for contemplated litigation and thus privileged, although no litigation was as yet instituted.

(a) The client's employee was required to make the report and did so as the speaking agent of the client. (230 C.A.2d 862.)

(b) The dominant purpose of the report was to enable the client (Division of Highways) to communicate its knowledge to its attorneys in preparation for the litigation. (230 C.A.2d 862.)

4. Where Corporation or Similar Entity Is Client.

cc. Illustrations: Report Not Privileged.

[§ 134] Illustrations: Report Not Privileged.

In Alpha Beta Co. v. Superior Court (1984) 157 C.A.3d 818, 203 C.R. 752, plaintiff Sundry was a former employee of defendant Alpha Beta, a corporation. He brought a libel suit against Alpha Beta and its store manager for statements made to a new prospective employer. Kanode, the corporation's vice president and general counsel, engaged attorney Duryea to handle the defense. Duryea prepared an answer denying generally all of the allegations of the complaint and asserting affirmative defenses, and Kanode verified it on information and belief. Plaintiff's counsel then took Kanode's deposition, and Kanode, claiming privilege, refused to answer many questions. Plaintiff contended that the questions did not call for privileged matter, or, if they did, that the privilege was waived by Kanode's verification of the answer. The lower court directed Kanode to answer. Held, applying the criteria established in D. I. Chadbourne v. Superior Court (1964) 60 C.2d 723, 36 C.R. 468, 388 P.2d 700, supra, §132, some matters were privileged and some were not.

(a) Matters privileged.

(1) Questions relating to Kanode's discussions with Alpha Beta's president were privileged; i.e., the communications were made by the corporation's general counsel to its high ranking officer for the purpose of preparing a defense to litigation. (157 C.A.3d 826.)

(2) Questions relating to Kanode's factual basis for verifying the answer were privileged; i.e., the answer was prepared by attorney Duryea, and the information was based on communications with this privileged source. (157 C.A.3d 827.)

(3) Questions relating to Kanode's discussion with "anyone" concerning whether defendant Evans, the store manager, was advised of certain company policies, in part called for privileged communications; hence, the privilege existed unless plaintiff could establish that the answers sought would come from a nonprivileged source. (157 C.A.3d 827.)

(b) Matters not privileged.

(1) Questions seeking what Kanode "meant" by certain affirmative defenses in the answer merely called for personal information and not information based on privileged communications. (157 C.A.3d 828.)

(2) Questions relating to whether Alpha Beta had employed investigators for the case did not call for privileged information, and the identity of the investigators would not be privileged information. (157 C.A.3d 828.)

(3) Questions relating to Alpha Beta's policy regarding release of personnel information were preliminary and foundational, and did not call for disclosure of privileged information. (157 C.A.3d 828, 829.)

In Triple A Machine Shop v. California (1989) 213 C.A.3d 131, 261 C.R. 493, plaintiff Triple A, lessee of space from the Navy at a San Francisco shipyard, was the subject of investigation by the State Department of Health Services and the district attorney for alleged illegal dumping of hazardous waste. Plaintiff filed the present action for injunctive relief, alleging that defendant State of California and the San Francisco district attorney had contacted plaintiff's high level managerial employees without his notice or consent, in violation of the attorney-client privilege and former Rule 7-102 of the Rules of Professional Conduct. The trial judge issued a preliminary injunction, and defendants appealed. The Court of Appeal first granted supersedeas to stay the civil action pending completion of a criminal case against Triple A, and then reversed the order granting a preliminary injunction.

(a) The scope of the privilege is established by Chadbourn. (213 C.A.3d 141, quoting the 11 listed principles.) And not all corporate employees are necessarily within the privilege: "For example, it is possible in any given case that a corporate officer or director covered by rule 2-100 may not be privy to information protected by the attorney-client privilege, while a lower level employee who is not shielded from contact under rule 2-100 may be in possession of substantial privileged information. However, this does not enable corporate counsel to automatically assert the privilege as to every corporate employee and on that basis enjoin opposing counsel from any and all contact with employees not covered by rule 2-100." (213 C.A.3d 143.)

(b) The privilege protects only disclosure of communications between attorney and client, not disclosure of the underlying facts which were communicated; and it does not extend to independent witnesses. (213 C.A.3d 143, citing the text.) Here the information sought by defendants concerned nonprivileged observations by the witnesses, occurring outside any attorney-client relationship. "Respondent's application for injunctive relief is based on little more than the bare assertion that, unless enjoined, appellants may obtain privileged information. The mere possibility that appellants may inadvertently obtain privileged information is an insufficient basis for the present injunction." (213 C.A.3d 143.)

When an employee is no more than a witness to an accident, the employee's statement, made to an attorney for the employer, is not protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege even if it was taken in preparation for litigation, because an employer should not be allowed to silence witnesses when a natural person could not. (Martin v. Workers' Comp. App. Bd. (1997) 59 C.A.4th 333, 346, 347, 69 C.R.2d 138 [board erred in ruling that statements by employees, elicited at request of employer's counsel during investigation of employee's compensation claim, were privileged; remand was necessary to determine whether each statement was by independent witness (hence not protected) or made in scope of employee's duties (protected)].)

IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

F. Confidential Disclosure.

6. Writings Transmitted to Attorney.

c. Distinction: Photograph or Film.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 135

[§ 135] Distinction: Photograph or Film.

In Suezaki v. Superior Court (1962) 58 C.2d 166, 23 C.R. 368, 373 P.2d 432, Henry and Grace sued C and G Co. for personal injuries. Defendants' attorney hired an investigator to take motion pictures of plaintiff Henry without his knowledge. Henry, by interrogatories, compelled defendants over objections to disclose the existence of the films and the fact that they had been taken by an independent investigator and delivered by him to the attorney. Then plaintiffs moved for production and inspection of the films under C.C.P. 2031. The objection was that the films had been "communicated" to defendants' attorney for confidential use in preparation of the defense. The trial judge, satisfied with the showing of good cause for inspection, nevertheless thought that Holm v. Superior Court (1954) 42 C.2d 500, 267 P.2d 1025, supra, §130, and Grand Lake Drive In v. Superior Court (1960) 179 C.A.2d 122, 127, 3 C.R. 621, supra, §112, required denial of the motion. Held, mandamus granted to compel vacating of the order:

(1) Grand Lake, which did not deal with this type of material, is not in point. (58 C.2d 172.)

(2) The Holm case did deal with a photograph, but is distinguishable on its facts, and its supposed rule is no longer acceptable. (a) The "dominant purpose" theory was devised to determine the capacity in which a public employee was acting; it does not apply to a natural person who communicates to an attorney. (58 C.2d 174.) (b) And the photograph was not privileged. "A picture of a public bus on a public street is not a confidential communication. Therefore, insofar as the Holm case may be interpreted to hold that any photograph taken for the purpose of litigation and transmitted to an attorney is privileged, per se, it is disapproved." (58 C.2d 176.)

(b) No privilege in present case. There is no basis in principle for the privilege.

(1) The intention of the parties that a matter be confidential is immaterial, unless there is a communication by the client to the attorney. Here, the film was a physical object, not a communication. Even if deemed a communication, it was not one from the client. Prior cases in which communications made by a client's agent were held privileged usually involved a physical or mental examination or blood test of the client by a specialist, engaged to communicate something from the client which the client would have transmitted himself if able to do so. No such communication occurred here. (58 C.2d 177.)

(2) "The films are not a graphic representation of the defendants, their activities, their mental impressions, anything within their knowledge, or of anything owned by them. The films are representations of the plaintiff, not of the defendants. If they can be said to be a 'communication' in any sense of the word, they represent an unconscious and unintended 'communication' from plaintiff." And there is no privilege in "a communication from a litigant to his adversary's attorney." (58 C.2d 177.) (See 19 A.L.R.4th 1236 [photographs of civil litigant realized by opponent's surveillance as subject to pretrial discovery]; for work product issue, see infra, §139.)

d. Distinction: Expert Opinion.

[§ 136] Distinction: Expert Opinion.

In Oceanside Union School Dist. v. Superior Court (1962) 58 C.2d 180, 23 C.R. 375, 373 P.2d 439, plaintiff brought a proceeding to condemn land of several defendants. Defendants sought by interrogatories to obtain the opinions (not reports) of plaintiff's appraisers as to the market value and severance damages of each parcel. Held, the judge's order to answer was correct.

(a) Under the analysis in Suezaki v. Superior Court (1962) 58 C.2d 166, 23 C.R. 368, 373 P.2d 432, supra, §135, the information required did not emanate from the client but from his adversary, and the determining factor in applying the privilege is not the confidential intent but the source of the information. (58 C.2d 189.)

(b) Nor is there any distinction between factual data gathered by an expert and the opinion he or she forms by studying that data; if the facts are unprivileged because not emanating from the client, the opinion of the expert who gathered them is similarly unprivileged. (58 C.2d 191.) (For work product issue, see infra, §139; on confidentiality of a report by a court-appointed expert to assist in preparing a defense, see Torres v. Municipal Court (1975) 50 C.A.3d 778, 123 C.R. 553 [medical report to public defender should have been protected by privilege under Ev.C. 952]; on overlapping of attorney-client and psychotherapist-patient privileges, where information sought emanated from the client, see People v. Lines (1975) 13 C.3d 500, 507, 119 C.R. 225, 531 P.2d 793, infra, §237; on waiver of privilege under C.C.P. 2032, which deals with mutual discovery about party's physical condition, see *Queen of Angels Hosp. v. ### IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

F. Confidential Disclosure.

7. Attorney's Work Product.

a. Federal Hickman Rule.

1. Statement of Rule.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 137

[§ 137] Statement of Rule.

In Hickman v. Taylor (1947) 329 U.S. 495, 67 S.Ct. 385, 91 L.Ed. 451, a wrongful death action arising out of the sinking of a tug, defendant's attorney obtained both oral and written statements from survivors. Plaintiff served interrogatories seeking production of both. In rejecting his claim, the Court reasoned as follows:

(a) The material was not protected from discovery by the attorney-client privilege. "[T]he protective cloak of this privilege does not extend to information which an attorney secures from a witness while acting for his client in anticipation of litigation. Nor does this privilege concern the memoranda, briefs, communications and other writings prepared by counsel for his own use in prosecuting his client's case; and it is equally unrelated to writings which reflect an attorney's mental impressions, conclusions, opinions or legal theories." (67 S.Ct. 392, 91 L. Ed. 461.)

(b) The work product of a lawyer is not subject to discovery except in cases of necessity (e.g., where witnesses are no longer readily available; no such showing made here). "Proper preparation of a client's case demands that he assemble information, sift what he considers to be the relevant from the irrelevant facts, prepare his legal theories and plan his strategy without undue and needless interference. That is the historical and the necessary way in which lawyers act within the framework of our system of jurisprudence to promote justice and to protect their clients' interests. This work is reflected, of course, in interviews, statements, memoranda, correspondence, briefs, mental impressions, personal beliefs, and countless other tangible and intangible ways--aptly though roughly termed ... the 'Work product of the lawyer.' Were such materials open to opposing counsel on mere demand, much of what is now put down in writing would remain unwritten. An attorney's thoughts, heretofore inviolate, would not be his own. Inefficiency, unfairness and sharp practices would inevitably develop in the giving of legal advice and in the preparation of cases for trial. The effect on the legal profession would be demoralizing. And the interests of the clients and the cause of justice would be poorly served." (67 S.Ct. 393, 91 L. Ed. 462.)

F. Confidential Disclosure.

7. Attorney's Work Product.

a. Federal Hickman Rule.

2. Scope of Rule.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 138

[§ 138] Scope of Rule.

(1) In General. The rule applies to criminal as well as civil cases, but it may be waived. (See United States v. Nobles (1975) 422 U.S. 225, 95 S.Ct. 2160, 2170, 2171, 45 L.Ed.2d 141, 154.)

It also applies to tax summons enforcement proceedings. In Upjohn Co. v. United States (1981) 449 U.S. 383, 101 S.Ct. 677, 687, 66 L.Ed.2d 584, 594, 598, supra, §126, the Court first held that responses to questionnaires and notes reflecting responses to interview questions were protected by the attorney-client privilege. (See supra, §126.) The Court then held that notes and memoranda of interviews going beyond recording responses, to the extent not protected by that privilege, were protected by the work product doctrine. (For other situations, see Goldberg v. United States (1976) 425 U.S. 94, 96 S.Ct. 1338, 47 L.Ed.2d 603 [Jencks Act does not contain work product exception for government lawyers]; 6 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 696; 12 U.S.F. L. Rev. 569 [corporate attorney]; 35 A.L.R.3d 412 [development of work product doctrine since Hickman].)

(2) Necessity Exception. Upjohn added some observations on the necessity exception to the work product doctrine, recognized in Hickman v. Taylor (1947) 329 U.S. 495, 67 S.Ct. 385, 91 L.Ed. 451, supra, §137:

(a) Where production of relevant and nonprivileged facts is essential to the preparation of the case, or witnesses are no longer available or may be reached only with difficulty, discovery may be allowed. (101 S.Ct. 687, 66 L.Ed.2d 594.) But forcing an attorney to disclose notes and memoranda of oral statements of witnesses tends to reveal the attorney's mental processes. F.R. Civ. P., Rule 26 permits disclosure of documents and tangible things on a showing of substantial need and inability to obtain the equivalent without undue hardship, but states that "the court shall protect against disclosure of the mental impressions, conclusions, opinions or legal theories of an attorney." And Hickman emphasizes the need for such protection. (101 S.Ct. 688, 66 L.Ed.2d 598.)

(b) Some courts have concluded that no showing of necessity can overcome protection of work product which is based on oral statements of witnesses; however, "[w]e do not decide the issue at this time." The magistrate below applied the "substantial need" and "without undue hardship" standard of F.R. Civ. P., Rule 26(b)(3); that was wrong:

"While we are not prepared at this juncture to say that such material is always protected by the work-product rule, we think a far stronger showing of necessity and unavailability by other means than was made by the Government or applied by the magistrate in this case would be necessary to compel disclosure." (101 S.Ct. 688, 66 L.Ed.2d 599.)

F. Confidential Disclosure.

7. Attorney's Work Product.

b. California Cases Before 1963 Statute.

[§ 139] California Cases Before 1963 Statute.

Greyhound Corp. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 C.2d 355, 15 C.R. 90, 364 P.2d 266, rejected the contention that an attorney's work product was necessarily immune from normal discovery. The court pointed out that even Hickman v. Taylor (1947) 329 U.S. 495, 67 S.Ct. 385, 91 L.Ed. 451, (supra, §137), included cautions against too strict an application of its theory, and that the principal purpose of the rule was to prevent an incompetent practitioner from taking undue advantage of an adversary's efforts. The court then approved the approach of Trade Center Properties v. Superior Court (1960) 185 C.A.2d 409, 411, 8 C.R. 345, in which the claim is recognized as a good ground for a discretionary protective order (see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §§59 et seq., 82) rather than as a basis for routine exclusion:

"In its essence, the 'work product rule' is a form of federally created privilege. ... The Legislature expressly refused to extend the concepts of privilege when adopting the discovery procedures. Since privilege is created by statute it should not be extended by judicial fiat. While the Hickman case, and any other case from a jurisdiction having a similar discovery statute, may be persuasive, and its reasoning accepted where applicable to California ... , such should not be accepted as creating a privilege where none existed. We are therefore inclined to the view that the work product privilege does not exist in this state. This is not to say that discovery may not be denied, in proper cases, when disclosure of the attorney's efforts, opinions, conclusions or theories would be against public policy (as in the Trade Center situation, supra), or would be eminently unfair or unjust, or would impose an undue burden. The California Legislature has designed safeguards for such situations. The sanctions which protect against the abuse of discovery give the trial court full discretion to limit or deny when the facts indicate that one litigant is attempting to take advantage of the other. Facts which give rise to the work product privilege in other jurisdictions may, in some circumstances, indicate an abusive attempt to 'ride free' on the opponent's industry. Such facts are not even hinted at herein, and, if they were, the respondent court has resolved them in favor of discovery. Petitioner has not only failed to convince us that 'work product' is equated with privilege in California, it has failed to indicate that the reasons underlying that doctrine would be applicable to this proceeding." (56 C.2d 401; see 9 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 223; 49 Cal. L. Rev. 994; 14 Stanf. L. Rev. 606; 18 Stanf. L. Rev. 791.)

In Suezaki v. Superior Court (1962) 58 C.2d 166, 23 C.R. 368, 373 P.2d 432, defendants' investigator took motion pictures of plaintiff, a personal injury claimant, and delivered them to defendants' attorney for use in the trial. (See supra, §135.) Held, defendants' objection to inspection was unsound. "They urge that undoubtedly the films were the result of the work product of the attorney, which is correct, and contend that for that reason alone they are privileged as a matter of law, which is incorrect." (58 C.2d 177.)

(a) Under the Greyhound case, work product is only a factor which the trial judge may consider and not a complete bar to discoverability. (58 C.2d 177.)

(b) The trial judge, exercising discretion under the discovery statutes to prevent abuse and to rule consistently with equity and justice, can protect those portions of the attorney's files disclosing the attorney's mental processes formed while interviewing witnesses. "Such matters should not be discoverable under the California rule." (58 C.2d 178.)

(c) There is nothing even in the federal work product rule which implies that the film calls for such protection. (58 C.2d 179.)

(d) Inspection in these cases should neither be denied nor ordered as a matter of law. "While it would appear that inspection of the films should be permitted, the discretion granted by the statute is the discretion of the trial court, not of this court. Therefore, the matter should be referred back to the trial court to permit it to exercise its discretion as conferred by statute, and to permit it to decide whether on the showing that has or may be made it should deny, grant, or conditionally grant the order." (58 C.2d 179.) (See 10 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 575, 593.)

In San Diego Professional Assn. v. Superior Court (1962) 58 C.2d 194, 23 C.R. 384, 373 P.2d 448, plaintiffs successfully sought inspection of a report on documents in litigation made by an expert for defendant's attorney. (See supra, §131.) The Suezaki approach was employed as follows:

(a) "The report here involved was clearly the work product of petitioner's attorney. For the purpose of preparing for trial, the attorney gathered together the documents on which defendant's case was predicated, took them to the engineers, discussed the same with them, and purchased the evaluation and opinions of such experts regarding the alleged failure of the real party in interest to perform in a professional manner, or in accordance with its contract." (58 C.2d 204.)

(b) The judge determined that the prima facie showing of good cause outweighed the necessity of protecting files from invasion, and that defendant failed to sustain its burden of showing that it would be harmed by the inspection. Hence, the judge's order, with its reasonable limitations on use and provision for sharing costs, was a proper exercise of discretion. (58 C.2d 204, 205.)

Finally, in Oceanside Union School Dist. v. Superior Court (1962) 58 C.2d 180, 192, 23 C.R. 375, 373 P.2d 439, see supra, §136, the court pointed out that the trial judge might well have withheld the desired discovery until the parties were in a position to trade appraisals, but held that it was not an abuse of discretion to accept defendants' explanation as to why they had not yet obtained their own appraisals. (See 18 Stanf. L. Rev. 793.)

IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

F. Confidential Disclosure.

7. Attorney's Work Product.

c. Statutory Work Product Rule.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 140

[§ 140] Statutory Work Product Rule.

Greyhound Corp. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 C.2d 355, 15 C.R. 90, 364 P.2d 266, and Suezaki v. Superior Court (1962) 58 C.2d 166, 23 C.R. 368, 373 P.2d 432, supra, §139, rejecting the work product theory of privilege, met with considerable opposition from lawyers. In 1963, the State Bar sponsored statutory changes designed to give more protection to the work product than these decisions offered. (See former C.C.P. 2016(b); 18 Stanf. L. Rev. 783.) Effective July 1, 1987, these provisions were restated without substantial change as follows:

(1) Underlying Policy. "It is the policy of the state to: (1) preserve the rights of attorneys to prepare cases for trial with that degree of privacy necessary to encourage them to prepare their cases thoroughly and to investigate not only the favorable but the unfavorable aspects of those cases; and (2) to prevent attorneys from taking undue advantage of their adversary's industry and efforts." (C.C.P. 2018(a).) (See 36 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 151 [applying attorney-client and work product privileges to allied party exchange of information]; 39 Proof of Facts 3d 1 [proof that materials are or are not subject to protection]; C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Discovery §4.28 et seq.; Hogan, 2 Cal. Civil Discovery §13.1 et seq.; C.E.B., Jefferson, 2 California Evidence Benchbook 3d, Chap. 41; infra, §141 et seq.)

(2) Qualified Protection. Subject to C.C.P. 2018(c) (infra, this section), "the work product of an attorney is not discoverable unless the court determines that denial of discovery will unfairly prejudice the party seeking discovery in preparing that party's claim or defense or will result in an injustice." (C.C.P. 2018(b); see American Mut. Liab. Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1974) 38 C.A.3d 579, 594, 113 C.R. 561 [construing predecessor statute].)

(3) Absolute Protection. "Any writing that reflects an attorney's impressions, conclusions, opinions, or legal research or theories shall not be discoverable under any circumstances." (C.C.P. 2018(c); see American Mut. Liab. Ins. Co. v. Superior Court, supra, 38 C.A.3d 594 [construing predecessor statute].)

(4) Restatement of Existing Law. C.C.P. 2018 "is intended to be a restatement of existing law relating to protection of work product. It is not intended to expand or reduce the extent to which work product is discoverable under existing law in any action." (C.C.P. 2018(d).)

(5) Discovery in Disciplinary Investigations. "The State Bar may discover the work product of an attorney against whom disciplinary charges are pending when it is relevant to issues of breach of duty by the lawyer, subject to applicable client approval and to a protective order, where requested for good cause, to ensure the confidentiality of work product except for its use by the State Bar in disciplinary investigations and its consideration under seal in State Bar Court proceedings. For purposes of this section, whenever a client has initiated a complaint against an attorney, the requisite client approval shall be deemed to have been granted." (C.C.P. 2018(e).)

(6) Action Between Attorney and Client. "In an action between an attorney and his or her client or former client, no work product privilege under this section exists if the work product is relevant to an issue of breach by the attorney of a duty to the attorney's client arising out of the attorney-client relationship." (C.C.P. 2018(f).)

(7) Definition of "Client." "For purposes of this section, 'client' means a client as defined in Section 951 of the Evidence Code." (C.C.P. 2018(f); see supra, §105.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Underlying Policy. C.C.P. 2018(a) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2018.020 in 2004 without substantive change.

See People v. Coddington (2000) 23 C.4th 529, 606, 97 C.R.2d 528, 2 P.3d 1081 [trial court's decision to permit prosecutor, during cross-examination, to ask mental experts called by defense whether they were aware that other defense experts had examined defendant, and to emphasize in closing argument that experts who testified were engaged months after experts who were not called, violated policy underlying C.C.P. 2018]; Hogan, 2 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, §13.4 et seq.

(2) Qualified Protection. C.C.P. 2018(b) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2018.030(b) in 2004 without substantive change.

(3) Absolute Protection. C.C.P. 2018(c) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2018.030(a) in 2004 without substantive change.

(4) Restatement of Existing Law. C.C.P. 2018(d) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2018.040 in 2004 without substantive change.

(5) Discovery in Disciplinary Investigations. C.C.P. 2018(e) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2018.070 in 2004 without substantive change.

(6) Action Between Attorney and Client. The portion of C.C.P. 2018(f) relating to actions between attorney and client was re-pealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2018.080 in 2004 without substantive change. (7) Definition of "Client." The portion of C.C.P. 2018(f) defining "client" was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2018.010 in 2004 without substantive change.

IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

F. Confidential Disclosure.

7. Attorney's Work Product.

d. Scope and Application of Rule.

1. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 141

[§ 141] In General.

(1) Burden of Proof. Counsel must do more than merely state that something is protected by the work product rule: "The burden is upon him to prove the preliminary facts to show that the privilege applies." (Mize v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1975) 46 C.A.3d 436, 447, 120 C.R. 787; see Fellows v. Superior Court (1980) 108 C.A.3d 55, 66, 166 C.R. 274 [showing of preliminary facts to establish privilege as to documents]; Mack v. Superior Court (1968) 259 C.A.2d 7, 10, 66 C.R. 280, infra, §145 [affidavit asserting privilege need not be made by attorney; party's declaration on personal knowledge is sufficient].)

(2) Privilege Continues After Termination of Litigation. The work product privilege does not cease when the action terminates. The primary purpose of the rule--encouraging full and fair representation of a client and preparation of a case without fear of subsequent scrutiny by opposing parties--calls for extension of the privilege beyond termination of the litigation for which the documents were prepared. (Popelka, Allard, McCowan & Jones v. Superior Court (1980) 107 C.A.3d 496, 502, 165 C.R. 748; Fellows v. Superior Court, supra, 108 C.A.3d 61; see 27 A.L.R.4th 568 [applicability of privilege to material prepared for terminated litigation or for claim that did not result in litigation].)

(3) Work Product Rule and Privilege Distinguished. In Brown v. Superior Court (1963) 218 C.A.2d 430, 32 C.R. 527, plaintiff sued Dr. F for malpractice. Under the master plan of malpractice insurance covering members of the county medical society, a committee of doctors met to review the evidence and assist the insurer's attorney in evaluating the case for settlement or preparation for trial. Investigation reports and statements were furnished to the committee by the insurer; Dr. F was interrogated and explained his actions; and all information obtained was delivered to the attorney for the purpose of assisting him in defense of the suit. Plaintiff sought discovery (by interrogatories) of what occurred at the meeting. Held, the trial judge properly sustained objections; the matter was not privileged (supra, §110), but it was protected by the work product rule. The court made this distinction:

(a) Defendant's knowledge, the doctors' opinions and the reasons for their opinions based on open facts were not privileged, so plaintiff could get this information by deposition, requests for admissions and interrogatories, as well as by inspection of documents in defendant's possession. (218 C.A.2d 442.) "This much, under the facts here present, would seem equitably discoverable in order to put the adversaries on even terms in the opportunity to appraise and evaluate the case for settlement purposes and to prepare for trial. This much also will constitute an acquisition of facts by said plaintiff's counsel through his own industry. To allow less than this would be to permit the defense through the device of the committee meeting to corral all expert testimony available locally, place a gag on these witnesses and throw a cloak of privilege over their opinions, thus defeating the purpose of discovery." (218 C.A.2d 442.)

(b) The additional information sought by plaintiff--what the committee members said, what they recommended and how they voted--would be useful for impeachment purposes. But the right to impeach must be weighed against the privilege of work product; and the judge, pursuant to the statutory directive, properly determined that plaintiff would not be unfairly prejudiced by denial of discovery of the discussion at the meeting. The worthy purpose of the committee was to assist in settlement with a minimum of damaging publicity, and the plan "will not be aided if the attorney or anyone else present must disclose everything which occurred at the conference. ... In fact, it may be confidently predicted that should this court announce a rule requiring such disclosure, it would be the last of such meetings in California." (218 C.A.2d 443.) (See 18 Stanf. L. Rev. 798.)

IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

F. Confidential Disclosure.

7. Attorney's Work Product.

d. Scope and Application of Rule.

2. Attorney Is Holder of Privilege.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 142

[§ 142] Attorney Is Holder of Privilege.

(1) Statement of Rule. In Lasky, Haas, Cohler & Munter v. Superior Court (1985) 172 C.A.3d 264, 218 C.R. 205, trust beneficiaries with future interests petitioned to remove G as trustee, alleging mismanagement of the trust to the prejudice of their interests. They sought discovery from the Lasky firm, representing G, of opinions, theories and other work product not previously communicated to G. Their petition raised a question of first impression: whether trust beneficiaries who are litigation adversaries of their trustee may compel discovery of the uncommunicated work product of the attorney counseling the trustee in administration of the trust. Held, the "absolute" work product privilege belongs exclusively to the attorney.

(a) Former C.C.P. 2016 (now C.C.P. 2018; see supra, §140) is silent on the question, but the cases have construed its language to provide that the attorney generating the work product is the exclusive holder of the privilege. (172 C.A.3d 271, discussing Rumac v. Bottomley (1983) 143 C.A.3d 810, 192 C.R. 104, infra, §148, and other cases.)

(c) Under the law of trusts, the trustee has a fiduciary duty of full disclosure to the trust beneficiaries; but the public policy underlying this duty does not overcome the manifested legislative intent to create an absolute privilege for the attorney's work product. (172 C.A.3d 280, 282.)

(d) The trust beneficiaries are not clients of the trustee's attorneys. (172 C.A.3d 282 et seq., distinguishing joint client cases, infra, §165 et seq.)

The opinion concludes with the following observation to aid the lower court in its in camera determination of what materials qualify for protection: "[S]ubdivision (b) should be construed to protect all internal, oral communications between petitioners that were eventually reduced to written form by them and were not communicated outside petitioners' law firm." (172 C.A.3d 286.) (See Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer v. Superior Court (1994) 25 C.A.4th 242, 247, 30 C.R.2d 371 [discussing Lasky and conflicting line of cases, decided under Rules of Professional Conduct, and holding that privilege belongs to client].)

(2) Distinction: In Pro. Per. Dowden v. Superior Court (1999) 73 C.A.4th 126, 86 C.R.2d 180, involved an issue of first impression: May a litigant appearing in pro. per. assert the work product privilege? In an action seeking recovery for property damage and breach of contract, plaintiff moved to compel defendant's production of a diary. Defendant was not represented by counsel, and the trial judge found that the attorney work product privilege under C.C.P. 2018 does not apply to an in pro. per. litigant. Held, reversed.

(a) C.C.P. 2018 does not define the term "attorney," and because that term has been applied to other statutes without distinguishing between attorneys and unrepresented litigants, the term was ambiguous. (73 C.A.4th 129.) However, a 1963 amendment to the statute, sponsored by the California State Bar, was adopted by the Legislature almost verbatim. The amendment emphasized the need to limit discovery so that a less able or willing practitioner may not take undue advantage of his or her adversary's efforts. This policy is important not only for attorneys, but also for litigants acting in pro. per. (73 C.A.4th 133.)

(b) Relevant case law establishes that the privilege is intended for the protection of litigants, and not just attorneys, and thus supports applying the privilege to an in pro. per. litigant. (73 C.A.4th 133, 134.)

(c) The work product privilege exists to promote the adversary system, and allowing litigants appearing in pro. per. to assert the privilege furthers that purpose. In determining whether a particular matter is privileged as work product, the court should be guided by the policy of promoting diligence in preparing one's own case, rather than depending on an adversary's efforts. Thus, it is necessary to conduct an in camera review of the items sought to be protected, i.e., the diary in the present case, to determine whether it contains matter that is privileged under C.C.P. 2018. (73 C.A.4th 135.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Statement of Rule. C.C.P. 2018 was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2018.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change. (2) Distinction: In Pro. Per. C.C.P. 2018 was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2018.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

- F. Confidential Disclosure.
- 7. Attorney's Work Product.
- d. Scope and Application of Rule.
- 3. Crime-Fraud Exception Inapplicable.

[§ 143] Crime-Fraud Exception Inapplicable.

In BP Alaska Exploration v. Superior Court (1988) 199 C.A.3d 1240, 245 C.R. 682, plaintiff NWEAC, an oil exploration company, brought an action against defendant BPAE, another such company, for damages for breach of contract, unfair competition and other wrongful acts. Plaintiff sought discovery of communications to defendant from its attorneys, contending that the communications had lost their privileged character because they were obtained in furtherance of a fraud. The trial court issued its discovery order and defendant sought prohibition. Held, writ granted; the crime-fraud exception (see infra, §153 et seq.) does not apply to material protected by the work product privilege. (199 C.A.3d 1246, 1249, 1251.)

The court pointed out that the Federal Rule permits penetration of the attorney's "opinion" work product under exceptional circumstances (see supra, §138). However, the California statute provides that an attorney's opinion work product "shall not be discoverable under any circumstances." (199 C.A.3d 1250, quoting former statute [now C.C.P. 2018(c)].) In Lasky, Haas, Cohler & Munter v. Superior Court (1985) 172 C.A.3d 264, 218 C.R. 205, supra, §142, the court emphasized the absolute language of the statute, the legislative intent is clear, and the plain meaning governs. (199 C.A.3d 1251.) (See State Farm Fire & Cas. Co. v. Superior Court (1997) 54 C.A.4th 625, 650, 62 C.R.2d 834, infra, §156 [citing BP Alaska and Lasky].)

F. Confidential Disclosure.

7. Attorney's Work Product.

d. Scope and Application of Rule.

4. Work Product After Delivery to Client.

[§ 144] Work Product After Delivery to Client.

In BP Alaska Exploration v. Superior Court (1988) 199 C.A.3d 1240, 245 C.R. 682, supra, §143, the dissenting justice maintained that the attorney's absolute work product consists only of writings in the attorney's possession, and that once an opinion writing is delivered to the client the attorney has surrendered his or her privacy rights in the writing. Because the client may choose to publish the contents, there is no further need for work product protection; but the writing--a confidential communication between the attorney and the client--is protected by the attorney-client privilege.

The majority rejected this reasoning:

(a) The statute defines absolute work product as "any writing." It does not restrict it to only those writings in the attorney's possession, and it provides that the writing is not discoverable "under any circumstances." The Legislature apparently intended to give attorneys broader protection than the federal courts had given under Hickman v. Taylor (1947) 329 U.S. 495, 67 S.Ct. 385, 91 L.Ed. 451, supra, §137. "Thus, any restriction on the statute's absolute work product definition of 'any writing' must come from the Legislature and not from the courts." (199 C.A.3d 1254.)

(b) The argument for restriction to writings in the attorney's possession assumes that the Legislature believed the attorney's need for privacy ceases on delivery of the writing, but the statute indicates a contrary intent:

"The Legislature presumably intended to protect the attorney's privacy in the opinion writing after its delivery to the client because this would free the attorney from the fear of a subsequent disclosure of the writing to third parties where the client for some reason did not assert the attorney-client privilege to prevent disclosure." (199 C.A.3d 1255.) This legislative purpose furthers the stated policy of preserving the right of attorneys to investigate not only the favorable but the unfavorable aspects of the cases, and encourages the attorney to deliver his or her opinions in writing for the client's further consideration. (199 C.A.3d 1255.)

(c) A federal case holds that an attorney's opinion writing retains its work product status on delivery to the client, and another federal case holds that the delivery of work product documents to "interested" third parties does not constitute a waiver. (199 C.A.3d 1255.) And several California cases have implicitly held that the writing retains its work product character after delivery to the client. (199 C.A.3d 1256, discussing Fellows v. Superior Court (1980) 108 C.A.3d 55, 166 C.R. 274, supra, §141, Mack v. Superior Court (1968) 259 C.A.2d 7, 66 C.R. 280, infra, §145, and Lasky, Haas, Cohler & Munter v. Superior Court (1985) 172 C.A.3d 264, 218 C.R. 205, supra, §142.)

"We conclude from the cited cases that the attorney's absolute work product protection continues as to the contents of a writing delivered to a client in confidence. The protection precludes third parties not representing the client from discovery of the writing. The fact that the client does not object to disclosure of the contents of the writing does not lessen the attorney's need for privacy. The recognition of an attorney's right to assert a work product protection in the contents of a writing after it is delivered to the client strengthens the attorney-client relationship by enabling the attorney to evaluate his client's case and to communicate his opinions to the client without fear that his opinions and theories will thereafter be exposed to the opposing party or to the public in general for criticism or ridicule." (199 C.A.3d 1260.)

IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

- F. Confidential Disclosure.
- 7. Attorney's Work Product.
- d. Scope and Application of Rule.
- 5. Opinion of Expert Consultant.

[§ 145] Opinion of Expert Consultant.

Scotsman Mfg. Co. v. Superior Court (1966) 242 C.A.2d 527, 51 C.R. 511, was an action for injuries resulting from explosion of a butane lamp. Several defendants were sued, including Scotsman, which had installed the lamp, and Roberts, manufacturer of a valve. Scotsman's attorney employed Dr. M to examine the lamp and make a written report to him, and Dr. M did so. Roberts, served much later than the others, was also served with a cross-complaint by Scotsman. Roberts thereupon obtained an order for inspection of Dr. M's report. Held, prohibition granted to prevent enforcement of the order.

(a) If the report was a work product it could be subject to inspection only on a showing of prejudice (former C.C.P. 2016(b), now C.C.P. 2018(b)). The showing here, that Roberts was brought in late and had little time to prepare, was insufficient; the remedy for any such inconvenience is a continuance. (242 C.A.2d 530.)

(b) Roberts contended that it was not a work product because it contained information as to which Dr. M would be a prospective witness. But the protection extends to reports of a dual character which contain information subject to discovery and advisory matters which are not. (242 C.A.2d 531.)

(c) Roberts' remedy was to use interrogatories or a deposition to discover Dr. M's status as a witness. (242 C.A.2d 532.)

Scotsman and Brown v. Superior Court (1963) 218 C.A.2d 430, 32 C.R. 527 (supra, §141), were followed in Kenney v. Superior Court (1967) 255 C.A.2d 106, 63 C.R. 84, a malpractice action. The trial judge correctly required an answer to the interrogatory asking whether defendant doctor had conferred with experts pertaining to plaintiff's case, and which if any would be called; also what experts were known and possibly would be called as witnesses. This would enable plaintiff to investigate their qualifications and prepare for their cross-examination. (255 C.A.2d 112.) But plaintiff was not entitled to information which defendant or defendant's attorney may have imparted to such experts while preparing to defend. (255 C.A.2d 112.) And plaintiff was not entitled to the names of members of the medical committee: the only purpose of this inquiry would be improper--to permit plaintiff's counsel to obtain disclosures which defendant or defendant's attorney made to them under the work product privilege. (255 C.A.2d 113.)

The court took note of possible abuse of the "medical committee" system (particularly in a small community), in cornering by defendant of the supply of "top-drawer" experts, and silencing them as potential plaintiff's witnesses by placing them in a committee to be consulted in defense of every malpractice claim. But the committee serves a useful purpose, and harassment of members would destroy their efficiency. Moreover, the plaintiff may call any doctor as a witness or obtain information from him or her. (255 C.A.2d 114.) (See Matchett v. Superior Court (1974) 40 C.A.3d 623, 629, 115 C.R. 317, infra, §§510, 512 [suggesting that Ev.C. 1157 was enacted in response to Kenney decision, where court had allowed some access to hospital staff records which might have revealed information bearing on defendant doctor's competence]; Sanders v. Superior Court (1973) 34 C.A.3d 270, 278, 109 C.R. 770 [personal injury claimant's medical records protected as attorney's work product; no showing that experts were prospective witnesses rather than advisors for attorney].)

In Mack v. Superior Court (1968) 259 C.A.2d 7, 66 C.R. 280, the State Public Works Board sued to condemn defendants' lands, and moved for an order to compel disclosure by answer to interrogatories of a real estate appraisal obtained by defendants' former attorney. Defendants' declaration stated that the information was obtained solely for the purpose of the attorney's preparation of the case, and that they did not plan to call the appraiser as a witness. The judge nevertheless ordered defendants to answer. Held, prohibition granted to restrain enforcement of the order.

(a) Information regarding events provable at trial, or identity and location of physical evidence, cannot be brought within the work product privilege simply by transmitting it to the attorney. (259 C.A.2d 10; see supra, §128.) And the court can require reciprocal disclosure of appraisals intended to be used in evidence. (259 C.A.2d 11; see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §63.)

(b) But material "of a derivative character," such as diagrams prepared for trial, audit reports, appraisals and other expert opinions, developed by initiative of counsel, are protected by the work product rule. The attorney should be allowed to investigate unfavorable as well as favorable aspects of his case, and even clearly relevant evidence--such as an unfavorable opinion of value by an appraiser consulted--may be privileged. (259 C.A.2d 11.)

(c) The privilege must give way on a showing of unfair prejudice, but the State made no such showing here: there is nothing unique about one appraiser's opinion. (259 C.A.2d 11.) (On inadmissibility of appraisal given in connection with deposit or withdrawal of probable amount of compensation, see C.C.P. 1255.060, supra, §112.)

In National Steel Products Co. v. Superior Court (1985) 164 C.A.3d 476, 210 C.R. 535, National was sued in New York for negligence in the manufacture of components of a metal building in New York; National's attorney obtained a report from an expert; the expert was neither deposed nor identified as a witness, and the litigation was settled prior to trial. In the present action by R against National for similar negligence in the manufacture of components of a California metal building, National's attorney obtained the New York expert's report, and also commissioned him to prepare an engineering analysis of the California building, but, although the expert had been identified as an expert witness in the present litigation (former C.C.P. 2037, now C.C.P. 2034; see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §178 et seq.), National did not intend to offer the New York report in evidence. R sought discovery of the report and the trial judge so ordered. Held, mandamus granted to compel setting aside of the order granting unlimited discovery, and directing an in camera inspection to determine the extent of proper discovery.

(a) No violation of attorney-client privilege. By identifying the expert as a witness, National waived the privilege, as held in Sanders v. Superior Court (1973) 34 C.A.3d 270, 109 C.R. 770. The prior report was an opinion of the expert respecting the subject matter of his prospective testimony, and that testimony would necessarily disclose a "significant part" of the privileged communication (Ev.C. 912(a)). (164 C.A.3d 485.)

(b) Work product privilege in part applicable. "The critical distinction in the rule enunciated by Scotsman is that between services rendered in an advisory capacity and services which qualify one as an expert witness. ... [A]n expert's report rendered in an advisory capacity is one designed to assist the attorney in such matters as preparation of pleadings, the manner of presentation of proof, and cross-examination of opposing expert witnesses; matters that are often reflective of the mental processes of the attorney under whose direction the expert works. ... In contrast, we hold that a report which would qualify the author as an expert witness is one containing findings and opinions of the expert that go to the establishment or denial of a principal fact in issue." (164 C.A.3d 489.) Applying this analysis, it will often be necessary for the trial judge to conduct a three step in camera inspection of the report of an expert identified as a witness in order to rule on the claim of work product privilege:

(1) The judgment should determine whether the report, in whole or in part, reflects an attorney's impressions, conclusions, opinions, or legal research or theories (former C.C.P. 2016(b), now C.C.P. 2018(b)). Any severable part that meets this definition is absolutely privileged. (164 C.A.3d 489.)

(2) The portions of the report that are advisory are conditionally privileged; those that are not are discoverable if easily severable. (164 C.A.3d 490.)

(3) As to the advisory portions--which are not absolutely privileged--the judge should determine whether other good cause for discovery outweighs the principles supporting the conditional work product privilege. (164 C.A.3d 490.) In accordance with the liberal policies underlying the discovery procedures, doubts as to relevance should be resolved in favor of permitting discovery. (164 C.A.3d 493.)

In Los Angeles v. Superior Court (Hernandez) (1990) 222 C.A.3d 647, 271 C.R. 698, defendant county removed a pathologist from its designation of expert witnesses, but retained him as a consultant. Plaintiff patient then attempted to add the pathologist to his list of expert witnesses. Held, defendant was entitled to a protective order. "We hold that a party may, for tactical reasons, withdraw a previously designated expert witness, not yet deposed. If that expert continues his or her relationship with the party as a consultant, the opposing party is barred from communicating with the expert and from retaining him or her as the opposing party's expert. To conclude otherwise would produce two undesirable results: a designated expert subsequently withdrawn could 'sell' his or her opinions to the highest bidder and be free of concern about whether his or her previous consultation is protected by the work product privilege; and a party would never withdraw a previously designated expert for fear that the attorney's work product (i.e., the consultations with the withdrawn expert) would become available to the opposition." (222 C.A.3d 657.) (See In re Tabatha G. (1996) 45 C.A.4th 1159, 1167, 53 C.R.2d 93 [in proceeding to terminate mother's parental rights, even assuming that bonding study, obtained by mother's counsel without knowledge of department of social services or foster parents, came within qualified work product privilege, it was discoverable, as disclosure was in minor's best interests and denial would result in injustice].)

C.C.P. 2018(b), on disclosure of work product on a showing of prejudice, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2018.030(b) in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2034, on exchange of expert witness information, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

Superior Court* (2002) 101 C.A.4th 525, 536, 124 C.R.2d 273 [in action by qui tam plaintiff and city power and water department against defendant water distribution parts manufacturers, in which plaintiffs jointly hired expert to test parts acquired by city from defendants, trial judge erred in ordering disclosure of test results to defendants; denial of access would not unfairly prejudice defendants' preparation of their defense in other actions, as they had equivalent opportunity to generate comparable evidence]. Correction: Page 411, second full paragraph, first line, "judgment" should be "judge".

IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

- F. Confidential Disclosure.
- 7. Attorney's Work Product.
- d. Scope and Application of Rule.
- 6. Identity of Lay Witnesses.
  - aa. Conditional Protection.

[§ 146] Conditional Protection.

The identity of nonexpert witnesses is conditionally protected. In Long Beach v. Superior Court (1976) 64 C.A.3d 65, 134 C.R. 468, discovery of a list of the witnesses intended to be called at trial was denied for lack of a showing of unfair prejudice or injustice sufficient to overcome the conditional privilege of former C.C.P. 2016(b) (now C.C.P. 2018(b)). Although the identities of persons having knowledge of relevant facts are clearly discoverable, the selection of trial witnesses is the work product of counsel.

The Long Beach court also denied discovery of "the nature and extent of the testimony which will be offered" through certain witnesses: "Such an interrogatory clearly calls for production of a writing reflecting the attorney's impressions, conclusions and opinions and thus falls within the absolute work product privilege." (64 C.A.3d 80.)

A similar result was reached in Nacht & Lewis Architects v. Superior Court (1996) 47 C.A.4th 214, 54 C.R.2d 575, an action arising from plaintiff's former employment. Defendants objected to and refused to answer interrogatories in which plaintiff sought the identity of, and information regarding (a) individuals interviewed concerning the incident giving rise to the action, and (b) individuals from whom written or recorded statements were obtained concerning the incident. The trial judge granted plaintiff's motion to compel further responses. Held, the motion was improperly granted.

(a) As to the first interrogatory, the court's order clearly violated the work product privilege: compelled production of a list of potential witnesses interviewed by counsel would necessarily reveal counsel's evaluation of the case by disclosing which witnesses or other persons counsel deemed important enough to interview. (47 C.A.4th 217.)

(b) As to the second interrogatory, defendants stated not "that their attorney took notes or otherwise recorded his interviews with employees of Nacht & Lewis, but that their attorney collected information from the interviews. Though imprecise, the language is susceptible to the interpretation that defendants' counsel collected from the employees statements the employees had previously written or recorded themselves. ... [A] list of potential witnesses who turned over to counsel their independently prepared statements would have no tendency to reveal counsel's evaluation of the case. Such a list would therefore not constitute qualified work product." (47 C.A.4th 217, 218.) On the other hand, if the interrogatory is directed at witnesses whose interviews counsel "recorded in notes or otherwise," then the list is qualified work product because it would tend to reveal counsel's evaluation of the case by identifying those persons claiming knowledge of the incident whom counsel deemed it important to interview. "Moreover, any such notes or recorded statements taken by defendants' counsel would be protected by the absolute work product privilege because they would reveal counsel's 'impressions, conclusions, opinions, or legal research or theories' " within the meaning of C.C.P. 2018(c). (47 C.A.4th 217.)

(c) Therefore, the trial judge must vacate that portion of his order granting the motion to compel further response to the first interrogatory, and he should compel further response to the second interrogatory only insofar as he determines that defendants' counsel obtained independently written or recorded statements. (47 C.A.4th 218, 219.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

F. Confidential Disclosure.

7. Attorney's Work Product.

d. Scope and Application of Rule.

6. Identity of Lay Witnesses.

bb. Distinction: Disclosure of Witness Lists at Pretrial Conference.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 147

[§ 147] Distinction: Disclosure of Witness Lists at Pretrial Conference.

In re Jeanette H. (1990) 225 C.A.3d 25, 275 C.R. 9, a dependency proceeding, involved an order, applicable to both the present case and appropriate future cases, that, upon motion by the parties, sealed witness lists be submitted to the court 7 to 10 days prior to trial, and then be distributed to the parties at the trial readiness conference. Held, the order was proper; compelled disclosure of witness lists during discovery violates the work product doctrine, but such disclosure at the pretrial conference is justified under the court's inherent power to manage its calendar.

(a) Discovery issue.

(1) The motion to disclose witness lists was framed as a discovery motion, and the court, under its power to control discovery in juvenile matters (C.R.C., Rule 1420, 10 Summary (9th), Parent and Child, §562 et seq.), ordered the exchange as an "exception" to the work product doctrine. (225 C.A.3d 31.) However, the only exceptions to the doctrine identified by C.C.P. 2018 are prejudice to the party seeking disclosure or resulting injustice if disclosure is not compelled, and there is no authority creating additional exceptions. Although unnecessary delay may cause injustice in juvenile court cases, the record did not reveal how disclosure of witnesses during discovery would prevent injustice. (225 C.A.3d 33.)

(2) The reasoning of Long Beach v. Superior Court (1976) 64 C.A.3d 65, 134 C.R. 468 (supra, §146), which held that the exchange of nonexpert witness lists violates the absolute work product privilege, is persuasive and is adopted here. "[That] decision recognizes the exact witnesses an attorney may call at trial depends on what the attorney considers to be important and relevant facts. The decision to call or not to call a witness is made after consideration of the strengths and weaknesses of a case and the legal theory chosen by the attorney. Selection of the witnesses through whom the attorney wishes to present his or her case is an intimate part of the attorney's mental processes." (225 C.A.3d 32.)

(3) Although Joe Z. v. Superior Court (1970) 3 C.3d 797, 91 C.R. 594, 478 P.2d 26 (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §41), recognized that the discovery statutes are not generally applicable to juvenile matters, that decision neither discussed the work product doctrine nor held that discovery rules are never applicable in juvenile cases. Moreover, the work product doctrine is not limited to the discovery statutes, but rather is founded in case law as well. The juvenile court discovery rule acknowledges the application of recognized privileges (C.R.C., Rule 1420(g), 10

Summary (9th), Parent and Child, §566), and, while favoring disclosure generally, does not specifically permit compelled disclosure of witness lists during discovery. (225 C.A.3d 33.)

(b) Court's inherent administrative power.

(1) In addition to formal local rules of procedure, adopted in accordance with C.R.C., Rule 981 (2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Courts, §202), courts possess inherent power to adopt informal rules that are reasonable and not in conflict with statutes or Judicial Council rules. In determining whether a court policy requiring disclosure of witness lists shortly before trial is reasonable, it must be remembered that, by their very nature, witness lists, unlike other forms of work product, will ultimately be disclosed at trial. (225 C.A.3d 35.) Also, the work product protection for witness lists is qualified, not absolute: Long Beach dealt only with a challenge to compelled disclosure during discovery; it did not hold that a disclosure at a trial setting conference would violate the privilege. (225 C.A.3d 35, 37.)

(2) The compelled mutual exchange of witness lists at the pretrial conference has been utilized in federal pretrial procedure as a reasonable way to force adequate preparation by counsel and to apprise the court of the complexity involved (225 C.A.3d 35); and C.C.P. 96(a) (2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Courts, §265) permits the exchange of witness lists in municipal and justice court cases (now "limited civil cases"; see 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Courts, Supp., §248A) shortly before trial (225 C.A.3d 36). C.R.C., Rule 212(a), providing for pretrial conferences in some superior court cases (7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §54), neither permits nor prohibits disclosure of witness lists, although one commentator has stated that some superior courts have local rules or policies requiring the exchange of witness lists shortly before trial. (225 C.A.3d 36, citing Weil & Brown, California Practice Guide: Civil Procedure Before Trial, §§8:84 et seq., 8:243, 8:244.) And in juvenile court cases, the rules recognize the need for expeditious handling, but they are silent with respect to pretrial disclosure of witness lists. (225 C.A.3d 36.)

(3) The exchange of witness lists in a trial setting conference, as opposed to during discovery, does not frustrate the goals of the work product doctrine of encouraging thorough preparation for trial and preventing one attorney from taking advantage of another's industry and effort. If pretrial disclosure in the municipal court does not violate the doctrine, it will not do so in the juvenile court. (225 C.A.3d 36.)

(4) Hence, the order here does not conflict with any statute, constitutional provision or court rule, and was a reasonable effort by the court to manage its calendar efficiently. Under the court's inherent power, the informal adoption of a policy requiring the mutual exchange of witness lists in appropriate cases is justified even in the absence of a more formal rule, although use of the formal procedure for adopting local rules set forth in C.R.C., Rule 981 is encouraged. (225 C.A.3d 37, and footnote 4.)

The court cautioned that its holding did not cover quasi-criminal juvenile court proceedings under Welf.C. 601 et seq. (see 10 Summary (9th), Parent and Child, §725 et seq.), because an order to disclose witnesses in such cases might implicate the minor's Fifth Amendment rights and might be affected by P.C. 1054.3, a part of Proposition 115 (see 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §30 et seq.). (225 C.A.3d 37.) (See Aerojet-General Corp. v. Transport Indem. Ins. (1993) 18 C.A.4th 996, 1004, 22 C.R.2d 862, supra, §109 [identity of witness disclosed to plaintiffs' attorney when defendants' documents were inadvertently forwarded to him was not protected work product; quoting Long Beach].)

C.C.P. 2018 was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2018.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change. The exceptions to the work product rule are now stated in C.C.P. 2018.030. Power to control discovery: C.R.C., Rule 1420 was renumbered C.R.C., Rule 5.546 in 2006. C.R.C., Rule 1420(g) became C.R.C., Rule 5.546(g).

Adoption of local rules: C.R.C., Rule 981 was renumbered C.R.C., Rule 10.613 in 2006. C.R.C., Rule 212(a) was relettered C.R.C., Rule 212(b), effective July 1, 2002. As amended, the rule requires a "case management conference" in every case. C.R.C., Rule 212(b) became C.R.C., Rule 3.722 in 2006.

7. Writings of Lawyer-Negotiator.

[§ 148] Writings of Lawyer-Negotiator.

In Rumac v. Bottomley (1983) 143 C.A.3d 810, 192 C.R. 104, defendant attorney obtained a protective order to prevent plaintiff from obtaining certain documents and records prepared by the attorney in the course of lease negotiations on behalf of his client. Held, the order was properly issued. "Neither the text of the statute nor the policy underlying the creation of the absolute privilege warrants a class distinction between the lawyer-negotiator and the lawyer-litigator. There is also no valid reason to differentiate between the writings reflecting the private thought processes of a lawyer acting on behalf of a client at the beginning of a business deal and the thoughts of a lawyer when that business deal goes sour with resultant litigation." (143 C.A.3d 812.)

The court declared that protecting the attorney's work product when the attorney acts in a nonlitigation legal capacity "furthers the important goal of reducing the likelihood of litigation." (143 C.A.3d 816.) And counseling need not have a direct connection to litigated matters: "It is the thoughtful and conscientious lawyer carefully examining his or her client's needs in negotiating a transaction who is perhaps best able to avoid or at least reduce the likelihood of litigation. ... The attorney's skill is not only essential to express the terms of the bargain, but the creative lawyer is able to draft appropriate provisions dealing with alternatives to litigation in the event a dispute between the parties does arise." (143 C.A.3d 816.)

Watt Industries v. Superior Court (1981) 115 C.A.3d 802, 171 C.R. 503, holding that the privilege does not apply where the attorney acts merely as a business agent for the client, was distinguished: "[T]he privilege extends to the lawyer only when he or she is acting qua lawyer. ... Here, the complexity of the transaction and the services which Bottomley was called upon to perform were found by the court to be services requiring Bottomley's professional skill and knowledge. Accordingly, this case does not fall within the narrow holding of Watt." (143 C.A.3d 817.) (See Roberts v. Palmdale (1993) 5 C.4th 363, 371, 20 C.R.2d 330, 853 P.2d 496, infra, §294, citing the text [following Rumac].)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

F. Confidential Disclosure.

7. Attorney's Work Product.

e. Rule Inapplicable.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 149

[§ 149] Rule Inapplicable.

A number of cases have held the work product rule inapplicable in various situations.

(1) Use of Material at Trial. In Mize v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1975) 46 C.A.3d 436, 120 C.R. 787, an investigator witness had refreshed his recollection from materials which arguably fell within the work product or attorney-client privilege. In approving the trial judge's action making those papers available to opposing counsel, the court said:

"It seems doubtful if the alleged work product privilege can ever be claimed at the time of trial. It is not one of the privileges enumerated in the Evidence Code. Provisions as to work product found in Code of Civil Procedure section 2016 do not use the word privilege and are in the nature of statutory limitations on pretrial discovery. Also it may well be that even if it be deemed there is in fact a work product privilege concerning a report of an investigator it ceases the moment it is determined to use him as a witness, just as it does with the report of an expert. ... In any event it ceases when the witness uses the report to refresh his recollection and then is called and testifies." (46 C.A.3d 449, citing former work product statute, now C.C.P. 2018.) (See Brokopp v. Ford Motor Co. (1977) 71 C.A.3d 841, 856, 139 C.R. 888 [work product privilege does not preclude order requiring production for trial of results of tests coordinated by defendant's prospective expert witness].)

(2) No Prosecutor's Privilege in Civil Case. "[W]e have not been directed to, nor have we found, any authority holding that a public prosecutor--having completed his investigation and having announced, after failing to obtain an indictment, that no further action would be taken by him--is entitled to rely upon the work product doctrine when the fruits of his investigation become relevant to civil litigation to which he is not a party. The district attorney is not an 'attorney' who represents a 'client' as such. He is a public officer, under the direct supervision of the Attorney General. ... [T]he extent to which the fruits of his investigations are entitled to confidentiality is governed entirely by provisions governing official information." (Shepherd v. Superior Court (1976) 17 C.3d 107, 122, 130 C.R. 257, 550 P.2d 161, infra, §250.)

(3) Facts Forming Basis of Allegations. In Southern Pac. Co. v. Superior Court (1969) 3 C.A.3d 195, 83 C.R. 231, a wrongful death action, plaintiffs alleged that defendant was negligent in various ways but refused to answer interrogatories which sought a detailed statement giving "all facts forming the basis" of these allegations. Held, mandamus issued to compel answers. "The interrogatories did not seek derivative material in the attorney's possession such as statements of witnesses, investigative reports or technical data; did not seek the attorney's legal theories, research or calculations; did not seek information which would not ultimately be disclosed at the trial. Nor did the interrogatories improperly attempt to 'tie down' plaintiffs by calling for all the facts they intend to produce at the trial. ... The facts sought, those presently relied upon by plaintiffs to prove their case, are discoverable no matter how they come into the attorney's possession. ... Plaintiffs will ultimately disclose these facts at the trial. Surprise is the only objective of withholding these facts pending the trial. That objective is contrary to the spirit and letter of the discovery statutes." (3 C.A.3d 198.)

The dictum in Southern Pac. Co., supra, on statements of witnesses, was approved by the same appellate court in Kadelbach v. Amaral (1973) 31 C.A.3d 814, 107 C.R. 720. Plaintiff learned that two witnesses to his accident had given tape-recorded statements to defendants' counsel and sought discovery of their contents. Defendants objected, claiming the work product privilege. The court, emphasizing its prior holding that facts are discoverable no matter how they came into the attorney's possession, rejected the notion that statements of witnesses come within the protection of the work product rule. (31 C.A.3d 823.)

(4) Opinion of Prospective Expert Witness. In Williamson v. Superior Court (1978) 21 C.3d 829, 148 C.R. 39, 582 P.2d 126, plaintiff sued Firestone, a tire manufacturer, and Big Four, manufacturer of a tire-changing machine, for personal injuries. K, Big Four's expert, concluded that the accident was caused by a defect in the tire, not the machine, and so was designated a prospective witness. Just as plaintiff was about to take K's deposition, Big Four withdrew the designation in exchange for Firestone's agreement to indemnify Big Four against liability to plaintiff. Held, discovery of K's report should be allowed. The report was "an expert opinion, developed as a result of the initiative of counsel in preparing for trial," and therefore constituted work product afforded the conditional protection of former C.C.P. 2016(b) (now C.C.P. 2018(b)). (21 C.3d 834.) However, K's designation as a prospective witness constituted good cause for discovery of his report. (21 C.3d 835.) And, though a party may be entitled to withdraw an expert witness, the withdrawal here was pursuant to an attempted illegal agreement to suppress evidence. Therefore, denial of discovery would "result in an injustice" under the statute. (21 C.3d 838.)

In Shadow Traffic Network v. Superior Court (1994) 24 C.A.4th 1067, 29 C.R.2d 693, 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §174, the court held that reports prepared by an expert as a consultant are protected by the work product doctrine until the expert is designated as a witness. Then, the opponent may seek disclosure of the reports upon a showing of good cause, following the procedure set forth in National Steel Products Co. v. Superior Court (1985) 164 C.A.3d 476, 210 C.R. 535, supra, §145. "However, to the extent that said reports embrace counsel's impressions and conclusions, the work-product doctrine gives absolute protection to that information." (24 C.A.4th 1079, citing Williamson v. Superior Court, supra, and Kizer v. Sulnick (1988) 202 C.A.3d 431, 248 C.R. 712.)

(5) Use by Nonparty. In Kizer v. Sulnick, supra, the Director of the Department of Health Services, as part of his investigation of possible health hazards posed by a waste facility in Casmalia, sought production of a medical study of the health effects on persons living near the facility. The study had been commissioned by an attorney representing a group of Casmalia residents in their civil suit against the facility. Claiming that the study was part of his work product, the attorney refused to produce it. Held, the work product rule was inapplicable in this situation.

(a) The director is not a party to the lawsuit and is barred by Govt.C. 11183 from revealing the contents of the study to opposing counsel. Hence, the purposes of the work product rule, i.e., to allow an attorney to prepare his case in privacy and to prevent his adversary from taking undue advantage, are irrelevant in the present context. (202 C.A.3d 441.)

(b) On the other hand, the need for disclosure is significant. The director cannot fulfill his duty to investigate possible health hazards without access to all relevant information, and there was testimony that the Casmalia residents would not participate in a government-sponsored study. (202 C.A.3d 441, footnote 12.)

(1) Use of Material at Trial. C.C.P. 2018, the work product statute, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2018.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.(2a) (New) No Prosecutor's Privilege in Criminal Case. Depending on the circumstances, any possible claims of attorney-client privilege, work product privilege, or privacy regarding documents or statements prepared by a deputy district attorney in the course of his or her employment with the district attorney would belong to the district attorney, not the individual deputy. (People v. Superior Court (Pfingst) (2000) 83 C.A.4th 387, 399, 400, 99 C.R.2d 646 [deputy district attorney who was being investigated by state Attorney General for possible crimes relating to his employment could not assert work product privilege as to materials seized from his home that were generated in course of his employment; relying on Shepherd v. Superior Court (1976) 17 C.3d 107, 130 C.R. 257, 550 P.2d 161, text, p. 417].)(4) Opinion of Prospective Expert Witness. C.C.P. 2018(b), conditionally protecting attorney work product, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2018.030(b) in 2004 without substantive change.(6) (New) Factual Investigations by In-House Claims Adjusters. Where an insured seeks communications between an insurer and its in-house claims adjusters in the course of litigation concerning the insurer's claims handling, and those adjusters happen to be attorneys, the work product privilege is not applicable to material or communications developed by the adjusters in their capacity as claims handlers rather than attorneys. ### IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

F. Confidential Disclosure.

7. Attorney's Work Product.

f. Waiver of Work Product Privilege.

[§ 150] Waiver of Work Product Privilege.

(1) Conduct Amounting to Waiver. The privilege belongs to the attorney (see supra, §142); thus, it may be waived by the attorney without the client's consent. (See Lohman v. Superior Court (1978) 81 C.A.3d 90, 100, 146 C.R. 171, supra, §72 [rejecting plaintiff's petition for suppression of her former attorney's deposition answers disclosing work product]; Raytheon Co. v. Superior Court (1989) 208 C.A.3d 683, 688, 689, 256 C.R. 425, supra, §84 [waiver by attorney found]; Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer v. Superior Court (1994) 25 C.A.4th 242, 249, 30 C.R.2d 371 [action by corporation against its majority shareholders arising from merger transaction; by undertaking representation of shareholders in related case, law firm that represented corporation in merger waived privilege].)

However, a client may, in the absence of the attorney, claim the privilege on his behalf. (Fellows v. Superior Court (1980) 108 C.A.3d 55, 63, 166 C.R. 274.)

The privilege may be waived under the mutual discovery provisions of C.C.P. 2032, dealing with a party's physical condition. (See Queen of Angels Hosp. v. Superior Court (1976) 57 C.A.3d 370, 374, 129 C.R. 282.) And an attorney's release of the information to a news reporter is also a waiver. (Los Angeles v. Superior Court (Friedman) (1985) 170 C.A.3d 744, 754, 216 C.R. 311.)

In Petterson v. Superior Court (1974) 39 C.A.3d 267, 273, 114 C.R. 20, the court first observed that "arguably the work product privilege attaches to the client upon the attorney's death or resignation from the case." However, if it was waived by the first attorney with the client's approval, the waiver remains.

(2) Conduct Not Amounting to Waiver. Where the privilege is properly claimed, a slight delay in furnishing a competent and sufficient specific description of documents substantiating the claim cannot be treated as a waiver of the privilege. (Motown Record Corp. v. Superior Court (1984) 155 C.A.3d 482, 492, 202 C.R. 227.) (See Aronson v. Kinsella (1997) 58 C.A.4th 254, 269, 68 C.R.2d 305, 5 Summary (9th), Torts, Supp., §505 [in libel action, defendant, by raising litigation privilege, did not waive attorney-client or work product privilege; claim that statements in his letter were protected by litigation privilege put his state of mind at issue but not thoughts, conduct, or work product of his attorneys].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Conduct Amounting to Waiver. See Eddy v. Fields (2004) 121 C.A.4th 1543, 1548, 18 C.R.3d 487 [attorney representing two cotrustees waived work product privilege when he turned over assertedly privileged documents to attorney representing one of cotrustees, and thus trial judge did not err in ordering second attorney to turn over documents to successor trustee]; 30 Pepperdine L. Rev. 445 [waiver of privilege in connection with advice-of-counsel defense in patent infringement case].

C.C.P. 2032 (mental and physical examinations) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.(2) Conduct Not Amounting to Waiver. See Armenta v. Superior Court (2002) 101 C.A.4th 525, 533, 124 C.R.2d 273 [where qui tam plaintiff and plaintiff city power and water department hired expert under joint prosecution agreement in their action against defendant water distribution parts manufacturers, city's waiver of work product privilege as to expert's reports did not result in waiver of qui tam plaintiff's privilege]; Laguna Beach County Water Dist. v. Superior Court (2004) 124 C.A.4th 1453, 1459, 22 C.R.3d 387 [by sending letters containing work product to auditors for county water district, in response to auditors' requests for information about pending or threatened litigation against district that might affect its financial condition, district's attorney did not waive right to assert work product protection].

Cross-Reference: 5 Summary (10th), Torts, §571.

(3) (New) Selective Waiver. The selective waiver theory, under which a client may disclose a privileged or protected communication to the Government while continuing to assert the privilege or protection against other parties, is accepted by some federal courts, but it is not part of the work product privilege law in California. (McKesson HBOC v. Superior Court (2004) 115 C.A.4th 1229, 1239, 9 C.R.3d 812 [by disclosing to government agency information obtained and reports prepared by its attorneys concerning internal accounting improprieties, company could no longer assert work product privilege as to same material in civil actions against it by shareholders].)

IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

F. Confidential Disclosure.

8. Waiver of Attorney-Client Privilege.

a. Implied and Express Waiver.

[§ 151] Implied and Express Waiver.

In Southern Calif. Gas Co. v. Public Util. Com. (1990) 50 C.3d 31, 265 C.R. 801, 784 P.2d 1373, plaintiff SoCalGas applied to defendant Public Utilities Commission for authorization to recover costs incurred in buying out a gas supply contract made with Getty. The Commission questioned the reasonableness of the buyout, and sought discovery of documents regarding early termination of the Getty contract. Plaintiff, invoking the privilege, refused to produce confidential memos written by its attorneys. The Commission concluded that by making its application plaintiff had waived the privilege. In this proceeding for review of the Commission's decision, the Supreme Court held that the attorney-client privilege applies in proceedings before the Commission (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §74), and there was no waiver.

(a) Nonstatutory implied waiver.

(1) The theory of implied waiver was first recognized in Merritt v. Superior Court (1970) 9 C.A.3d 721, 88 C.R. 337, supra, §78, where the plaintiff had specifically put the state of mind of his attorney at issue. (50 C.3d 40.) But in Mitchell v. Superior Court (1984) 37 C.3d 591, 208 C.R. 886, 691 P.2d 642, infra, §152, the court concluded that there was no waiver where the substance of the protected communication was not itself tendered in issue. (50 C.3d 40.) And in Aetna Cas. & Surety Co. v. Superior Court (1984) 153 C.A.3d 467, 200 C.R. 471, infra, §167, the court held that no waiver occurred because Aetna was not relying on advice of counsel to show that it acted reasonably. (50 C.3d 41.)

(2) In the present case plaintiff did nothing to place in issue its privileged communications. It expressly stated that it did not rely on its attorneys' advice or state of mind to demonstrate that it acted reasonably when it bought out the Getty contract; and it "has represented that it will demonstrate that its buyout was reasonably based on an examination of the contract itself, the economic analysis it relied on to arrive at its decision, and testimony from appropriate witnesses." (50 C.3d 43.)

(3) The commission further argued that the privileged information is essential for its review of the application "because, pursuant to various statutes and in fundamental fairness to ratepayers, it must be able to examine all relevant sources of information that SoCalGas considered before it bought out the Getty contract." But no statute expressly requires access to a utility's privileged sources of information, and the commission's careful effort to determine reasonableness "does not have to come at the unnecessary expense of trampling on SoCalGas's attorney-client privilege." (50 C.3d 44.)

"If we were to uphold the commission's ruling, it would have the right to demand privileged information from a utility whenever a CAM application or any other application to recover costs involved a legal issue, since legal advice might be one source of information the utility considered. The commission's approach would drastically impinge on a utility's efforts to obtain adequate legal advice because a utility would be much less likely to divulge all pertinent information to its attorneys if it knew that the commission would have access to the communications." (50 C.3d 45.)

(b) Statutory waiver. A waiver of the privilege occurs under Ev.C. 912 when the client has disclosed or consented to a disclosure of a significant part of the communication. (50 C.3d 46; see supra, §70.) In the present case, plaintiff's notes on phone conference state that "our attorneys had gone over the contract several times." But merely revealing that one has consulted an attorney does not constitute a waiver; there must be a disclosure of a significant part of the communication. (50 C.3d 46, discussing Travelers Ins. Cos. v. Superior Court (1983) 143 C.A.3d 436, 191 C.R. 871, Mitchell v. Superior Court, supra, and Transamerica Title Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1987) 188 C.A.3d 1047, 233 C.R. 825, supra, §75.)

"We have considered these authorities and find their reasoning compelling. The attorney-client privilege seeks to protect the conversations and communications between the attorney and client, not merely the conclusions developed by those conversations or the fact that such conversations occurred. Accordingly, we conclude that SoCalGas's disclosure of the fact of its attorneys' review of the Getty agreement and the conclusions arrived at by its attorneys to members of the commission was not an express waiver of the attorney-client privilege." (50 C.3d 49.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

F. Confidential Disclosure.

8. Waiver of Attorney-Client Privilege.

b. Information and Advice From Attorney.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 152

[§ 152] Information and Advice From Attorney.

In Mitchell v. Superior Court (1984) 37 C.3d 591, 208 C.R. 886, 691 P.2d 642, plaintiffs Gary and Bette Mitchell and 100 others filed actions against defendant manufacturers and distributors of DBCP, an agricultural soil fumigant, alleging contamination of the air and ground water in the vicinity of their homes. The complaint set forth seven causes of action for personal injuries and property damage. In the cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress, plaintiffs alleged that the water contamination caused such distress because they were aware that the chemical was highly toxic and carcinogenic.

Defendants propounded interrogatories to Bette seeking the sources of plaintiffs' information, and the nature and content of the warnings which contributed to her emotional distress. A number of these interrogatories dealt with information or documents received from her attorneys, and she invoked the attorney-client privilege. The trial judge ordered her to answer. Held, mandamus granted to compel vacation of the order.

(a) Broad scope of privilege: in general. "[T]he privilege covers the transmission of documents which are available to the public, and not merely information in the sole possession of the attorney or client. In this regard, it is the actual fact of the transmission which merits protection, since discovery of the transmission of specific public documents might very well reveal the transmitter's intended strategy." (37 C.3d 600.)

(b) Scope of privilege: confidential communications. "Each of the questions presuppose a communication between attorney and client, in which the attorney warned the client about the effects of DBCP, and cannot be answered without impliedly affirming that such conversation occurred." (37 C.3d 601.) Thus, the questions clearly involved information transmitted between plaintiff and her attorney in the course of their relationship as client and lawyer, as well as advice given by her attorney in the course of that relationship. (37 C.3d 601.) The contention that the warnings were not privileged because they involved "factual information" as opposed to "legal advice" is unsound: neither the statutes nor the cases make any such distinction, and the attorney transmitted the information "in the context of investigating, preparing and prosecuting a lawsuit; not simply in an abstract lecture to a friend on the health effects of that particular chemical." (37 C.3d 601.)

way revealed a significant part of the substance of the discussions. (37 C.3d 602, 603.)

(d) No implied waiver: cases distinguished. Defendants' contention that plaintiff waived the privilege by tendering a cause of action for emotional distress is based on a number of cases holding that "fundamental fairness" requires disclosure of otherwise privileged information or communications "where the plaintiff has placed in issue a communication which goes to the heart of the claim in controversy." (37 C.3d 604.) These cases are distinguishable:

(1) In re Lifschutz (1970) 2 C.3d 415, 85 C.R. 829, 467 P.2d 557, infra, §224, was based on the specific statutory patient-litigant exception to the psychotherapist-patient privilege (infra, §211 et seq.). No such specific statutory exception applies to the attorney-client privilege. (37 C.3d 604.)

(2) Fremont Indem. Co. v. Superior Court (1982) 137 C.A.3d 554, 187 C.R. 137, infra, §497, involved a claim of the self-incrimination privilege where the testimony sought was "vitally relevant" to an issue necessarily raised by plaintiff's claim. That is not true of the answers sought here. (37 C.3d 605.)

(3) Merritt v. Superior Court (1970) 9 C.A.3d 721, 88 C.R. 337, supra, §78, involved an action against an insurance company for bad faith refusal to settle. Plaintiff's complaint alleged that counsel for the company had so confused plaintiff's counsel as to disable plaintiff from settling the case within the policy limits. The court upheld disclosure on the ground that plaintiff had placed in issue the mental state of his then attorney, who would be called as a witness to prove the allegation. (37 C.3d 605, citing Estate of Kime (1983) 144 C.A.3d 246, 193 C.R. 718, supra, §67, for this limited application of Merritt holding.) Here, the state of mind of plaintiff's attorneys was not in issue. (37 C.3d 605.)

(e) No implied waiver: evidence obtainable by other means.

(1) A number of cases have rejected the claim of waiver where the substance of the protected communication is not itself in issue, but simply represents one of several forms of indirect evidence in the matter. (37 C.3d 606, 607.) Here, plaintiff correctly contends that she will attempt to prove her emotional distress claim without reference to confidential communications with her attorneys, and that the real issues are her knowledge and state of mind, evidence of which may be ascertained directly from her. (37 C.3d 606, 607.)

(2) In Schlumberger Ltd. v. Superior Court (1981) 115 C.A.3d 386, 171 C.R. 413, the court pointed out that privileged communications do not become discoverable merely because they are related to issues raised in the litigation. This is an appropriate answer to defendants' suggestion that much of plaintiff's alleged emotional distress resulted from fear induced by the advice and actions of her counsel, for plaintiff did not allege that the information supplied by her counsel caused her emotional distress: the complaint alleged that the contamination of ground water and air rendered the property unfit for human habitation or farming and caused personal injuries and emotional distress. (37 C.3d 607.)

Defendants also contended that plaintiff, by alleging a cause of action for emotional distress, rendered discoverable the source and substance of all information which she received about DBCP in order to determine the "genuineness" of her claim. This is likewise untenable: "[T]he principal measure of reasonableness is whether her fears square with scientifically proven or suspected effects of DBCP, a relatively objective test which can be applied by a trier of fact without delving into all her sources of information or misinformation." (37 C.3d 608.) And even if the communications were potentially relevant to the issue of damages, the privilege would still operate to exclude them: courts and legislatures have recognized that the privilege will at times exclude otherwise relevant evidence, and "[t]his court has no intention of abandoning that principle here." (37 C.3d 608.)

(f) Public policy considerations.

(1) Disclosure of the sought after confidential communications may have a significant impact on the attorney's work product doctrine (supra, §137 et seq.). Plaintiffs' attorneys have maintained that discovery would reveal much of their investigative efforts and trial strategy. (37 C.3d 609, 610.) "[I]t is logical to expect that in most personal injury cases where emotional distress is alleged by reason of feared future consequences, defense counsel would seek to discover whether those potential consequences had been discussed between client and counsel and if so, whether that discussion had contributed to plaintiff's distress. Since it is likely that such discussions do in fact occur in most cases, the door would then be open for broad discovery of previously privileged communications. While such discovery would nominally be intended to produce evidence relating to the damages issue, it might well reveal much of plaintiff's investigative efforts and trial strategy. Limitations on the scope of this discovery would be very difficult to fashion." (37 C.3d 610.)

(2) The mere knowledge of such potential discovery would make an attorney representing a plaintiff with an emotional distress claim reluctant to even discuss future consequences with a client; and if an attorney cannot freely express opinions and impart knowledge on all issues the value of his or her services is substantially diminished. (37 C.3d 610.)

(3) To permit such discovery "would potentially uphold a harassment tactic whereby defendants such as these are able to shift the focus of the case from damages caused by chemical pollutants to damages caused by allegedly inflammatory or false information provided by self-serving attorneys." (37 C.3d 610.) (See People v. Hayes (1999) 21 C.4th 1211, 1265, footnote 14, 91 C.R.2d 211, 989 P.2d 645 [following Mitchell rule that mere disclosure that there was communication between client and attorney does not amount to disclosure of its specific content].)

IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

G. Exceptions to the Privilege.

1. Contemplated Crime or Fraud.

a. Scope of Exception.

1. Nature of Exception.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 153

[§ 153] Nature of Exception.

The privilege is commonly and appropriately claimed where the client has committed a crime or other wrongful act and consults an attorney to defend him or her in a criminal or civil action. But the "shield" cannot be used as a "sword"; i.e., a person cannot so pervert the purpose of the privilege as to make it safe to seek legal assistance to perpetrate a crime or fraud. "[C]ommunications between attorney and client having to do with the client's contemplated criminal acts, or in aid or furtherance thereof, are not covered by the cloak of this privilege." (Abbott v. Superior Court (1947) 78 C.A.2d 19, 21, 177 P.2d 317; see Wilson v. Superior Court (1957) 148 C.A.2d 433, 443, 307 P.2d 37, supra, §127; Agnew v. Superior Court (1958) 156 C.A.2d 838, 840, 320 P.2d 158; 1 McCormick 5th, §95; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §§2298, 2299; 45 Cal. L. Rev. 75; 77 Harv. L. Rev. 730; 98 Harv. L. Rev. 1509; 1946 A.S. 1171; 1947 A.S. 1077; 1954 A.S. 790; 1956 A.S. 549; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §393 et seq.; 2 A.L.R.3d 861 [communications about contemplated tortious acts]; 64 A.L.R.3d 385 [rights and duties of attorney in criminal prosecution when client states intention to present perjured testimony]; 31 A.L.R.4th 458 [contemplated civil fraud].)

In the Abbott case, supra, petitioner, an attorney, sent communications to his client through the latter's employee. Later the client and attorney were both indicted for criminal conspiracy. Held, neither could object to introduction of the communications. (a) The privilege belongs to the client and cannot be claimed solely for the incidental purpose of protecting the attorney; hence, the attorney could not object unless the client could object. (b) The client could not, for the communication dealt with his contemplated criminal acts. (78 C.A.2d 21.)

The exception applies only where the crime or fraud is contemplated by the client. In Glade v. Superior Court (1978) 76 C.A.3d 738, 143 C.R. 119, plaintiffs claimed that their former attorney had defrauded them by using information obtained in his contemporaneous representation of the adverse interests of other clients. Held, the exception did not apply to the other clients' privilege. The attorney's misuse of confidential information to defraud others will not invoke the exception of Ev.C. 956 (infra, §154) "if the client did not seek legal assistance to further this purpose, and he was unaware of the attorney's contemplated wrongdoing." (76 C.A.3d 746.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

G. Exceptions to the Privilege.

1. Contemplated Crime or Fraud.

a. Scope of Exception.

2. Evidence Code.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 154

[§ 154] Evidence Code.

The original Uniform Rule of Evidence made a significant extension of the exception, using the phrase "crime or a tort." This opened up a large and uncertain area of nullification of the privilege, and presented difficult problems for an attorney consulting with a client. (See Cal. L. Rev. 77, note 15; 77 Harv. L. Rev. 731.)

California retained the conventional rule in Ev.C. 956: "There is no privilege under this article if the services of the lawyer were sought or obtained to enable or aid anyone to commit or plan to commit a crime or a fraud." (See Nowell v. Superior Court (1963) 223 C.A.2d 652, 658, 36 C.R. 21, quoting the text; Unif. Rules, Rule 502(d)(1) ["crime or fraud"].)

The exception stated in Ev.C. 956 does not encompass a mere statement of intent to commit a future crime and to seek legal assistance in planning or perpetrating the crime. (People v. Clark (1990) 50 C.3d 583, 622, 268 C.R. 399, 789 P.2d 127 [defendant's statement that he intended to kill his former wife's employer and his therapist's brother was within the privilege].)

Ev.C. 956.5, enacted in 1993, expands the scope of the offenses included within the exception: There also is no privilege if the lawyer reasonably believes that disclosure is necessary to prevent the client from committing a criminal act the lawyer believes is likely to result in death or substantial bodily harm. (See 28 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 367; 35 Santa Clara L. Rev. 825 [possibility that Ev.C. 956.5 will cause extension of liability to attorneys under Tarasoff v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1976) 17 C.3d 425, 131 C.R. 14, 551 P.2d 334, 6 Summary (9th), Torts, §860].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Ev.C. 956.5 was amended in 2003 to substitute "to prevent a criminal act" for "to prevent the client from committing a criminal act," and to specify that the lawyer's belief that the act is likely to result in death or substantial bodily harm must be reasonable.

See People v. Michaels (2002) 28 C.4th 486, 537, 538, 122 C.R.2d 285, 49 P.3d 1032 [where defendant was tried for murder prior to enactment of Ev.C. 956.5 (text, p. 427), admission at penalty phase of note written by defendant to attorney during preliminary hearing, to effect that one codefendant might be harmed unless kept separate from defendant and another codefendant, was error, although harmless; Ev.C. 956 authorized admission if services of attorney were sought to aid in commission of crime, but defendant's communication was intended to prevent crime]; 73

So. Cal. L. Rev. 139 [arguing for amendment of B. & P.C. 6068(e) (attorney's duty of confidentiality; see 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §118) in order to clarify meaning of Ev.C. 956.5].

In People v. Dang (2001) 93 C.A.4th 1293, 113 C.R.2d 763, defendant was charged with residential burglary, false imprisonment, assault with a firearm or deadly weapon, and dissuading a witness by force or threat. After engaging in most of the conduct that formed the basis of the charges, defendant had told his attorney that he was going to try to "pay off" one or more witnesses and that he would "whack" them if he was not successful in bribing them. In a second conversation, defendant repeated these threats and also threatened the attorney. The attorney reported the threats to the district attorney and was relieved as counsel. At trial, the attorney was permitted to testify about the threats, and defendant was found guilty. Held, affirmed; the attorney's testimony was properly admitted.

(a) Ev.C. 956.5 provides that the attorney-client privilege is inapplicable where "the lawyer reasonably believes that disclosure of any confidential communication relating to representation of a client is necessary to prevent the client from committing a criminal act that the lawyer believes is likely to result in death or substantial bodily harm." Defendant's characterization of his threats as reflecting an attempt to pay off witnesses is simply wrong; defendant threatened both the witnesses and the attorney with death, and those threats are clearly within the statutory exception. (93 C.A.4th 1296, 1297.)

(b) There is a possible conflict between Ev.C. 956.5 and B. & P.C. 6068(e) (1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §118), which requires an attorney to maintain confidences inviolate. The issue on appeal, however, is limited to the admissibility of the attorney's testimony, and thus the conflict need not be resolved. Nevertheless, it is worth noting that the State Bar Court has found that the duty of confidentiality under B. & P.C. 6068(e) is modified by the exceptions to the attorney-client privilege codified in the Evidence Code. (93 C.A.4th 1298, 1299.)

(c) There is no basis for reversal under Ev.C. 352 (weighing of probative value against prejudicial impact; see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §17). The evidence was clearly relevant to the claim of witness intimidation. The fact that defendant made the threats to his attorney provides no grounds for exclusion under Ev.C. 352. "If the Legislature had wished to exclude admissibility of an attorney's testimony against a former client in this context, it could have done so by providing ... that the attorney could report the threat to authorities, but could not testify against the client in a trial. Instead, the Legislature did not qualify the provision." (93 C.A.4th 1299.) Finally, the trial judge told the jury that if it found that defendant made the statements, it could consider them as a circumstance tending to show a consciousness of guilt but that the statements were not sufficient by themselves to prove guilt, and that the weight and significance of the statements were for the jury to decide. There was no abuse of discretion. (93 C.A.4th 1299, 1300.)

Language added to B. & P.C. 6068(e) in 2003 addresses the statutory conflict referred to in People v. Dang, supra: "[A]n attorney may, but is not required to, reveal confidential information relating to the representation of a client to the extent that the attorney reasonably believes the disclosure is necessary to prevent a criminal act that the attorney reasonably believes is likely to result in death of, or substantial bodily harm to, an individual."

IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

G. Exceptions to the Privilege.

1. Contemplated Crime or Fraud.
  - a. Scope of Exception.
3. Physical Evidence of Completed Crime.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 155

[§ 155] Physical Evidence of Completed Crime.

The privilege covers communications dealing with a crime already committed. (See 16 A.L.R.3d 1029; supra, §153.) But it does not permit defense counsel to secrete physical evidence which his or her client has given to him or her. (People v. Lee (1970) 3 C.A.3d 514, 524, 83 C.R. 715; People v. Superior Court (Fairbank) (1987) 192 C.A.3d 32, 34, 237 C.R. 158.)

In People v. Lee, supra, the victim of a beating was unable to identify her assailant because of brain damage (possibly suffered from being kicked in the head). Defendant, arrested for the crime, asked his father to look for a pair of shoes he had hidden on some neighbors' property. The neighbors discovered the shoes first and gave them to defendant's estranged wife. She, in turn, delivered them to an investigator for the public defender's office, who passed them on to the deputy assigned to represent defendant. Before the preliminary hearing, the deputy was replaced by private counsel. To avoid a charge of suppressing evidence, and to prevent its seizure by the district attorney without a prior determination of its arguably privileged character, the deputy delivered the shoes to a municipal court judge. The judge, the district attorney and the deputy agreed that the judge would retain the shoes as a "private citizen" until a judicial decision had been made. Ultimately, the district attorney obtained the shoes by use of a search warrant and proved they were stained with blood of the victim's type. Held, the seizure of evidence did not violate defendant's rights.

(a) It is an abuse of a lawyer's professional responsibility to knowingly take possession of and secrete the instrumentalities of a crime. As a Washington case put it: "The attorney should not be a depository for criminal evidence (such as a knife, other weapons, stolen property, etc.), which in itself has little, if any, material value for the purposes of aiding counsel in the preparation of the defense of his client's case. Such evidence given the attorney during legal consultation for information purposes and used by the attorney in preparing the defense of his client's case, whether or not the case ever goes to trial, could clearly be withheld for a reasonable period of time. It follows that the attorney, after a reasonable period, should, as an officer of the court, on his own motion turn the same over to the prosecution." (3 C.A.3d 526.)

(b) The fact that the client delivered the evidence to his attorney may be privileged, but the physical object does not become privileged merely because it was given to the attorney. (3 C.A.3d 526.)

In People v. Superior Court (Fairbank), supra, the prosecution obtained jailhouse letters from defendant, who was charged with murder, stating that he "foolishly told lawyer where weapons were" and that the attorneys "now have weapons and D.A. doesn't know it yet." The prosecutor moved to compel defense counsel to produce the physical evidence, but the motion was denied after the judge asked defense counsel whether he was "aware" of his duties and received an affirmative response. Held, denial of the motion was error.

(a) Defense counsel may not retain physical evidence pertaining to the crime charged against his or her client. (192 C.A.3d 34, citing Lee.) And if defense counsel removes or alters evidence, the attorney-client privilege "does not bar revelation of the original location or condition of the evidence." (192 C.A.3d 36, quoting from People v. Meredith (1981) 29 C.3d 682, 175 C.R. 612, 631 P.2d 46, supra, §109.)

(b) Defense counsel's argument that defense attorneys cannot be compelled to answer questions about or turn over crime-related physical evidence prior to trial is based on the discussion in Goldsmith v. Superior Court (1984) 152 C.A.3d 76, 199 C.R. 366, infra, §385, of a defendant's right to be free from compelled self-incrimination. But the argument depends entirely on the "false premise" that when defense counsel turns over physical evidence or describes its location before removal he incriminates the defendant. Defense counsel does not necessarily learn the location of evidence from the defendant; and, as explained in Meredith, supra, the defense may preclude the jury from speculating that the defendant provided the information, by stipulating to a limited explanation of how the evidence was recovered (see supra, §109). (192 C.A.3d 38.)

(d) Defense counsel's obligations with respect to relevant physical evidence "should be self-executing and no motion by the prosecution or order by the court should be required to enforce them." (192 C.A.3d 39.) "The defense decision to remove or alter evidence is a tactical choice. If counsel or an agent of counsel chooses to remove, possess, or alter physical evidence pertaining to the crime, counsel must immediately inform the court of the action. The court, exercising care to shield privileged communications and defense strategies from prosecution view, must then take appropriate action to ensure that the prosecution has timely access to physical evidence possessed by the defense and timely information about alteration of any evidence." (192 C.A.3d 39, citing Meredith.)

(e) The prosecution is not required to show need for the evidence: "The obligation to provide the prosecution with access to physical evidence and information about its alteration is absolute. Defense counsel may not use seizure or alteration of evidence as an excuse to pretry the prosecution's case or test the court's sympathies." (192 C.A.3d 40.)

IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

G. Exceptions to the Privilege.

1. Contemplated Crime or Fraud.

a. Scope of Exception.

4. Fraud in Defending Insurance Bad Faith Action.

[§ 156] Fraud in Defending Insurance Bad Faith Action.

In State Farm Fire & Cas. Co. v. Superior Court (1997) 54 C.A.4th 625, 62 C.R.2d 834, an insurer denied plaintiff homeowners' claim for earthquake damage on the ground that plaintiffs' policy did not include earthquake coverage. Plaintiffs then sued the insurer, several of its agents, and several insurance brokers, alleging that defendants had participated in fraudulently misrepresenting that plaintiffs' policy would cover them for earthquake loss. After the trial judge granted the insurer's motion for summary judgment, plaintiffs moved for reconsideration and submitted declarations by a former employee of the insurer, who had worked on plaintiffs' case during the discovery stage. The declarations related to the insurer's litigation strategy and its lack of compliance with discovery requests, and they described conversations with other employees and inside and outside counsel regarding plaintiffs' case. The insurer requested a protective order sealing the declarations and prohibiting plaintiffs' counsel from disseminating any information he had learned from the former employee. The trial judge issued a temporary protective order, but, after hearing argument, he vacated the order and ordered the documents unsealed. Held, writ relief denied; unsealing of the documents was proper.

(a) The attorney-client privilege protects disclosures of communications between the attorney and client but does not protect disclosure of underlying facts referenced within a qualifying communication. "Therefore, to the extent that Ms. Zuniga has knowledge about the practices and procedures of State Farm, or the existence of claims manuals and other documents which are normally utilized by State Farm in the operation of its business, the information is not privileged. ... Also, it would not be a violation of the attorney-client privilege for Ms. Zuniga to divulge that such documents exist but were not produced" in connection with this action. (54 C.A.4th 639.) Under this analysis, some of the materials sought at least arguably fall within the privilege, while some clearly do not. (54 C.A.4th 643.)

sufficient for application of the crime/fraud exception to the privileged materials contained in the Zuniga declarations." (54 C.A.4th 649.) The same conclusion applies to a portion of one of the declarations disclosing the name of a software program that would otherwise qualify for protection under the statutory trade secret privilege: that privilege contains its own fraud exception (see Ev.C. 1060, infra, §350). (54 C.A.4th 651.)

(c) The crime-fraud exception is inapplicable to the work product privilege. When a work product claim is made, the appropriate inquiry is whether, if disclosure is denied, an injustice might occur or the party opposing disclosure would be unfairly prejudiced. Here, the same analysis used for the crime-fraud exception leads to the conclusion that refusal to disclose the information contained in the declarations would unfairly prejudice plaintiffs and result in an injustice. (54 C.A.4th 650.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

G. Exceptions to the Privilege.

1. Contemplated Crime or Fraud.

b. Procedure.

1. Foundation.

[§ 157] Foundation.

In most cases, the communication itself will show that the client contemplated the wrongful acts. But it would be wholly destructive of the privilege to require disclosure by the attorney in any case on the mere assertion of opposing counsel. Accordingly, evidence should be presented to show that this was the client's purpose, before the communication is received. (See Clark v. United States (1933) 289 U.S. 1, 53 S.Ct. 465, 468, 77 L.Ed. 993, 999; Nowell v. Superior Court (1963) 223 C.A.2d 652, 657, 36 C.R. 21, quoting the text; Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 405 [proponent of proffered evidence has burden of proof on preliminary fact of exception to privilege]; Travelers Ins. Cos. v. Superior Court (1983) 143 C.A.3d 436, 446, 447, 191 C.R. 871 [burden not met]; 77 Harv. L. Rev. 736 [discussing "proof dilemma"].)

In Nowell v. Superior Court, supra, S sued N and others for alleged libel in a city election campaign. S took N's deposition, and asked questions as to whether he solicited legal advice, or discussed with his attorney the legal effect of particular conduct or inaction, and whether he relied on his attorney's advice in publishing certain material. N claimed privilege, and S's motion to compel answers was granted. Held, N was entitled to prohibition. Although the questions were innocently phrased so as not to directly call for communications between the attorney and client, the answers would contain implied admissions as to those communications. (223 C.A.2d 656.)

In BP Alaska Exploration v. Superior Court (1988) 199 C.A.3d 1240, 245 C.R. 682, supra, §143, the court held that the crime-fraud exception was inapplicable to material protected by the absolute work product privilege, but the matter was remanded to the trial court for an in camera hearing to determine which documents contained work product, and which were protected only by the attorney-client privilege, and therefore were subject to the crime-fraud exception. (199 C.A.3d 1261.)

The opinion deals with the nature of the prima facie showing under Ev.C. 956 as follows: the mere assertion of fraud is insufficient; there must be a showing that the fraud has some foundation in fact. (199 C.A.3d 1262, citing Nowell, supra.) However, because the statute applies to communications to enable the client to plan to commit a fraud, it is not necessary that the contemplated fraud be successful: "[T]he proponent of the exception need only to prove a false representation of a material fact, knowledge of its falsity, intent to deceive and the right to rely." (199 C.A.3d 1263.) The record contains such a prima facie showing. (199 C.A.3d 1269.)

IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

G. Exceptions to the Privilege.

1. Contemplated Crime or Fraud.
  - b. Procedure.
2. Where Evidence Seized Pursuant to Warrant.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 158

[§ 158] Where Evidence Seized Pursuant to Warrant.

In People v. Superior Court (Bauman & Rose) (1995) 37 C.A.4th 1757, 44 C.R.2d 734, documents were seized from the offices of several attorneys suspected of insurance fraud. The attorneys moved for sealing of the documents until an in camera hearing could be held to determine whether the documents were protected by the attorney-client privilege. The trial judge granted the motion. Held, this was proper.

(a) The attorneys' right to a hearing did not stem from P.C. 1524, which authorizes an in camera hearing pursuant to a special master procedure for nonsuspect privilege holders. (See 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, §83 et seq.) The statute does not apply to attorneys suspected of criminal activity. Nevertheless, nothing in the statute or its legislative history purports to abrogate the attorney-client privilege between a suspect attorney and his client, and the attorney is entitled to assert the privilege on behalf of his client. The trial judge retains authority to hold an in camera hearing to determine the validity of the assertion of the attorney-client privilege by an attorney suspected of criminal activity, notwithstanding the inapplicability of P.C. 1524. (37 C.A.4th 1764, 1767.)

(b) The finding of probable cause to issue the warrant did not imply a determination by the issuing magistrate that the attorney-client privilege had been waived by the crime-fraud exception and thus obviate the need for a hearing. It cannot be presumed, simply because a warrant issues, that all the items seized fall within the crime-fraud exception, or that other items outside the scope of the warrant have not been seized, either by mistake or misapprehension. (37 C.A.4th 1768, citing Geilim v. Superior Court (1991) 234 C.A.3d 166, 174, 285 C.R. 602.) The trial judge correctly ruled that an in camera hearing was required. (37 C.A.4th 1771.) (See Brillantes v. Superior Court (1996) 51 C.A.4th 323, 333, 58 C.R.2d 770, 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, §86 [Bauman holding applies only to attorney-client privilege, and, even where applicable, does not establish absolute right to in camera hearing; rather, trial judge has inherent power to protect privilege holder from improper disclosure by fashioning safeguards as required by particular facts].)

A superior court has an obligation to determine claims of privilege regarding materials seized from attorneys, whether or not the attorneys are suspected of criminal conduct, and the court may properly conduct a hearing to resolve the privilege claims. Although C.C.P. 639 (see 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, §60) does not authorize a compulsory reference in a proceeding to determine whether documents seized from a criminal suspect are privileged (because such a proceeding is not the type of "special proceeding" to which that section applies), the court nevertheless possesses inherent authority to appoint a special master to assist it in examining the seized documents and ruling on the claims of privilege. However, the court lacks either statutory or inherent power to require the parties to bear the cost of a special master's services in this context. (People v. Superior Court (Laff) (2001) 25 C.4th 703, 709, 710, 107 C.R.2d 323, 23 P.3d 563, 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, Supp., §86; approving People v. Superior Court (Bauman & Rose) (1995) 37 C.A.4th 1757, 44 C.R.2d 734, text, p. 431; see P.C. 1524(i), added in 2002 [nothing in P.C. 1524, text, p. 432, is intended to limit ability of attorney to obtain in camera hearing pursuant to holding in Laff].)

Under federal common law, a district court may conduct an in camera review of material allegedly protected by the attorney-client privilege to determine the applicability of the crime-fraud exception, if the party opposing the privilege presents relevant evidence, lawfully obtained and not adjudicated to be privileged, sufficient to support a reasonable belief that an in camera review may yield evidence establishing the exception's applicability. (See United States v. Zolin (1989) 491 U.S. 554, 109 S.Ct. 2619, 2628, 2631, 105 L.Ed.2d 469, 487, 491, supra, §90 [contrasting F.R. Evid., Rule 104(a), 3 *Cal. ### IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

G. Exceptions to the Privilege.

2. Parties Claiming Through Deceased Client.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 160

[§ 160] Parties Claiming Through Deceased Client.

(1) Nature of Exception. Privy furnishes another important exception. "[T]he privilege does not survive the testator's death when the matter of his conversations or instructions arises in will contests, petitions to determine heirship, petitions to construe an ambiguous will, or any other type of controversy involving only the heirs or next of kin and the legatees or devisees of the testator." (Paley v. Superior Court (1955) 137 C.A.2d 450, 457, 290 P.2d 617; see Swidler & Berlin v. United States (1998) 524 U.S. 399, 118 S.Ct. 2081, 2085, 141 L.Ed.2d 379, 385 [existence of testamentary exception does not mean that privilege, in other contexts, does not survive death of client]; Estate of Dominici (1907) 151 C. 181, 186, 90 P. 448; 1 McCormick 5th, §94; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2314; 10 Stanf. L. Rev. 313; 40 Harv. L. Rev. 115; 8 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 618; 1959 A.S. 635; 1966 A.S. 408; 66 A.L.R.2d 1302 [communications to attorney in connection with drawing of will]; 75 A.L.R.4th 1144 [effect of will being disclosed involuntarily prior to testator's death].)

(2) Evidence Code. Ev.C. 957 states the exception in its broadest form: "There is no privilege under this article as to a communication relevant to an issue between parties all of whom claim through a deceased client, regardless of whether the claims are by testate or intestate succession or by inter vivos transaction." (See also Unif. Rules, Rule 502(d)(2).)

The exception was formerly limited in California to persons claiming by testate or intestate succession, i.e., heirs or distributees. (See Paley v. Superior Court, supra, 137 C.A.2d 457.) Ev.C. 957 follows the Uniform Rules of Evidence in extending it to claims based on inter vivos transactions. (See Law Rev. Com. Comment.)

Although Ev.C. 957 does not specify which attorney-client relationship it refers to, the relationship can only be that of the deceased client and his or her attorney. This limitation is implicit in the statute's reference to a "client" who is "deceased." Thus, communications that are subject to disclosure under this exception are those between the decedent and the decedent's attorney. (Fletcher v. Superior Court (1996) 44 C.A.4th 773, 778, 779, 52 C.R.2d 65 [in litigation involving trust, exception did not apply to communications between trustee (sister of deceased trustor) and her attorney, and thus trial judge erred in ordering disclosure].)

IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

G. Exceptions to the Privilege.

3. Breach of Duty.

a. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 161

[§ 161] In General.

If, in litigation between an attorney and the attorney's client or between the client and a third person, or in any other proceeding, the attorney's integrity, good faith, authority, or performance of his or her duties is questioned, the attorney should be permitted to meet this issue with testimony as to the attorney's communications with the client. (See Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Fink (1956) 141 C.A.2d 332, 335, 296 P.2d 843; Fleschler v. Strauss (1936) 15 C.A.2d 735, 739, 60 P.2d 193; People v. Morris (1971) 20 C.A.3d 659, 663, 97 C.R. 817, quoting the text [defendant had alleged false promises by former attorney as inducement for guilty plea; because attorney's good faith, honesty and professional conduct were under attack, attorney was authorized to testify against defendant in perjury prosecution]; People v. Vargas (1975) 53 C.A.3d 516, 525, 126 C.R. 88, supra, §120, citing the text [at sentencing hearing 2 1/2 years after trial, defendant said he fled trial on counsel's advice; attorney could properly contradict that statement]; In re Gray (1981) 123 C.A.3d 614, 615, 616, 176 C.R. 721, infra, §162, citing the text; 1 McCormick 5th, §91; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §400; 1966 A.S. 408.)

This view was embodied in Ev.C. 958: "There is no privilege as to a communication relevant to an issue of breach, by the lawyer or by the client, of a duty arising out of the lawyer-client relationship."

In Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Fink, supra, attorneys for both sides stipulated that judgment should follow the determination of a controlling issue by the Public Utilities Commission in a pending case involving the same parties. The Commission decided in favor of plaintiffs, and judgment was entered against defendants as stipulated. New counsel for defendants then moved to vacate the judgment on the ground of lack of authority of defendants' former attorney to so stipulate, and objected to the attorney's testimony on his authority as a disclosure of confidential communications. Held, the objection was untenable where, as here, the professional conduct of the attorney had been attacked. "It would be a sad commentary upon our boasted concept of fairness and the right to defend one's reputation and integrity, were it possible for the accuser to silence the accused by invoking the doctrine of privileged communication." (141 C.A.2d 335.)

Fleschler v. Strauss, supra, is similar. Defendant instructed his attorney to arrange for settlement of a claim against him. A settlement was reached, but defendant refused to perform and repudiated the authorization. The claimant sued, and at the trial the attorney was permitted to testify as to the instructions. Held, this was proper; to apply the privilege would be unjust to both the attorney and the third party, for the client could authorize the attorney to contract and then nullify the attorney's act by forbidding disclosure of the authorization. (15 C.A.2d 739.)

In Carlson, Collins, Gordon & Bold v. Banducci (1967) 257 C.A.2d 212, 64 C.R. 915, plaintiff attorney, suing for the reasonable value of his services, was permitted to testify to various details of questionable conduct of his client, who was a defendant in a will contest. The purposes were to show the obstacles faced by plaintiff's law firm in reaching a settlement with the contesting relatives, and to rebut defendants' claim that plaintiff exercised undue influence or took advantage of defendants in the fee agreement. There was no violation of privilege, for evidence of the communications was necessary to protect the attorney's rights. (257 C.A.2d 228, citing the text.)

Communications between the attorney and other clients are distinguishable. In Glade v. Superior Court (1978) 76 C.A.3d 738, 143 C.R. 119, supra, §153, plaintiffs, suing for legal malpractice, were properly denied discovery of defendant attorney's communications with other clients not privy to his relationship with plaintiffs. Ev.C. 958 does not entitle a litigant claiming breach of duty relating to his own representation "unilaterally to waive the attorney-client privilege held by other clients of the same attorney." (76 C.A.3d 747.)

For a discussion of the "in issue" doctrine (waiver of privilege where client tenders issue involving substance or content of protected communication), and its inapplicability where the client, an insured, sues its liability insurer for failure to defend, see Rockwell Int. Corp. v. Superior Court (1994) 26 C.A.4th 1255, 1268, 32 C.R.2d 153, infra, §167.

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

G. Exceptions to the Privilege.

3. Breach of Duty.

b. Challenge of Competency of Counsel.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 162

[§ 162] Challenge of Competency of Counsel.

In re Gray (1981) 123 C.A.3d 614, 176 C.R. 721, involved a habeas corpus petition by a defendant found guilty of first degree murder and conspiracy to commit extortion. She alleged that Gray, her attorney, had failed to act as a reasonably competent attorney in failing to offer potentially meritorious defenses of diminished capacity or insanity. At the hearing, she refused to waive privilege and objected to Gray testifying. Held, the privilege was waived. The claim of inadequate representation clearly involves a charge of breach of duty under Ev.C. 958: "[I]f the defendant in a criminal action claims that his lawyer did not provide him with an adequate defense, communications between the lawyer and client relevant to that issue are not privileged." (123 C.A.3d 615, quoting Law Rev. Com. Comment.) As noted in People v. Pope (1979) 23 C.3d 412, 426, 152 C.R. 732, 590 P.2d 859, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §202: "In habeas corpus proceedings, there is an opportunity in an evidentiary hearing to have trial counsel fully describe his or her reasons for acting or failing to act in the manner complained of. ... For example, counsel may explain why certain defenses were or were not presented. Having afforded the trial attorney an opportunity to explain, courts are in a position to intelligently evaluate whether counsel's acts or omissions were within the range of reasonable competence." (123 C.A.3d 616.)

The opinion adds: "[I]f during an evidentiary hearing a defendant discovers that he has opened a real can of worms and that some of the goodies he has imparted to his attorney may come to light, he can protect himself by simply dismissing the petition." (123 C.A.3d 617.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

The purpose of the exception provided by Ev.C. 958 to the attorney-client privilege has been fully met once evidence relating to the attorney's possibly inadequate representation of a defendant at a criminal trial has been presented at a habeas corpus proceeding. Thus, following the proceeding, the exception is no longer applicable, and the privilege continues to apply. To interpret the statute otherwise would raise serious questions as to whether it conflicts with the defendant's constitutional right to counsel, a right that the privilege is intended to promote. (People v. Ledesma (2006) 39 C.4th 641, 694, 47 C.R.3d 326, 140 P.3d 657 [defendant's statements to psychiatrist who had assisted defense counsel, although properly admitted at habeas corpus proceeding challenging adequacy of his attorney's representation regarding mental defenses at first trial, did not fall within exception of Ev.C. 958 for purposes of retrial; however, defendant waived privilege at retrial by presenting testimony of expert witnesses who had reviewed psychiatrist's report and prior testimony].)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

G. Exceptions to the Privilege.

4. Lawyer as Attesting Witness.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 163

[§ 163] Lawyer as Attesting Witness.

The client contemplates the testimony of an attesting witness, and may therefore be thought of as "waiving" the privilege if the client makes his or her attorney such a witness. (See In re Mullin (1895) 110 C. 252, 254, 42 P. 645; In re Wax (1895) 106 C. 343, 347, 39 P. 624; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2315.)

There is no reason, however, to extend the exception beyond the necessity for it. The privilege is waived as to the issues of execution and attestation, i.e., as to those matters on which an attesting witness is called to testify; but communications of the client on other matters should remain within the privilege. California's former law did not recognize this distinction. (See In re Mullin, supra, 110 C. 254, allowing proof of declarations of deceased as to the will, on the issue of mental capacity.) But Ev.C. 959 makes the limited scope of the exception clear:

"There is no privilege under this article as to a communication relevant to an issue concerning the intention or competence of a client executing an attested document of which the lawyer is an attesting witness, or concerning the execution or attestation of such a document." (See similar Unif. Rules, Rule 502(d)(4).)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

G. Exceptions to the Privilege.

5. Deceased Client's Dispositive Instrument.

[§ 164] Deceased Client's Dispositive Instrument.

The considerations supporting the attorney-attesting witness exception (Ev.C. 959, supra, §163) are equally applicable to any dispositive instruments attested by others. "A client ordinarily would desire his lawyer to communicate his true intention with regard to a dispositive instrument if the instrument itself leaves the matter in doubt and the client is deceased. Likewise, the client ordinarily would desire his attorney to testify to communications relevant to the validity of such instruments after the client dies." (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 960.)

Two sections accordingly extend the exceptions as follows:

(1) Intention of Client. There is no privilege as to "a communication relevant to an issue concerning the intention of a client, now deceased, with respect to a deed of conveyance, will, or other writing, executed by the client, purporting to affect an interest in property." (Ev.C. 960.)

(2) Validity of Writing. There is no privilege as to "a communication relevant to an issue concerning the validity of a deed of conveyance, will, or other writing, executed by a client, now deceased, purporting to affect an interest in property." (Ev.C. 961.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

IV. LAWYER-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

G. Exceptions to the Privilege.

6. Joint Clients.

a. General Rule for Civil Proceeding.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 165

[§ 165] General Rule for Civil Proceeding.

(1) Nature of Exception. Where persons "have mutually employed the same counsel and have discussed freely their problems in the presence of one another and their counsel, the reason for the rule of privilege has been destroyed, for each party by such concerted action thereby has waived the right to place such communications under the shield of privilege." (Clyne v. Brock (1947) 82 C.A.2d 958, 965, 188 P.2d 263; see Croce v. Superior Court (1937) 21 C.A.2d 18, 19, 68 P.2d 369; De Olazabal v. Mix (1937) 24 C.A.2d 258, 262, 74 P.2d 787; Murphy v. Waterhouse (1896) 113 C. 467, 470, 45 P. 866; Petty v. Superior Court (1953) 116 C.A.2d 20, 29, 253 P.2d 28; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2312; 10 Stanf. L. Rev. 309; 72 Harv. L. Rev. 766; 1958 A.S. 658; 4 A.L.R.4th 765 [applicability in subsequent action between parties originally represented contemporaneously by same attorney]; Unif. Rules, Rule 502(d)(5).)

Thus, in the Croce case, supra, the attorney represented several associates in a business enterprise, defending them in a suit in which they denied that they were partners. A dispute arose thereafter between them, and the attorney then represented one against the others, the complaint alleging that they were partners. Held, prior communications were not privileged, and any of the parties could compel him to testify. (For criticism and distinguishing of Croce, see Industrial Indem. Co. v. Great Amer. Ins. Co. (1977) 73 C.A.3d 529, 536, 140 C.R. 806, 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §165 ["even if Croce is still good law, it does not apply to a situation where the joint representation of two or more clients with conflicting interests was undertaken or continued without disclosure and written consent"].)

(2) Evidence Code. Ev.C. 962 codifies the exception as follows:

"Where two or more clients have retained or consulted a lawyer upon a matter of common interest, none of them, nor the successor in interest of any of them, may claim a privilege under this article as to a communication made in the course of that relationship when such communication is offered in a civil proceeding between one of such clients (or his successor in interest) and another of such clients (or his successor in interest)." (See Wortham & Van Liew v. Superior Court (1987) 188 C.A.3d 927, 931, 233 C.R. 725 [although party and attorney intended communication to be confidential, communication concerned partnership affairs and was not privileged].)

1. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 166

[§ 166] In General.

Glacier General Assur. Co. v. Superior Court (1979) 95 C.A.3d 836, 157 C.R. 435, involved discovery sought by plaintiffs who had recovered a malpractice judgment against an insured doctor and, as his assignees, were suing his liability insurer for bad faith failure to settle. Over claims of attorney-client and work product privileges, the trial court ordered discovery of the entire litigation file of the attorney who represented both insurer and insured in the malpractice action. Held, discovery was proper under the joint client exception. As the insured's assignees, plaintiffs may discover matters in the attorney's file of "common interest" to the insurer and insured (Ev.C. 962). (95 C.A.3d 840.) The exception is not limited to an attorney's communications with joint clients in the presence of each other. (95 C.A.3d 841.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

G. Exceptions to the Privilege.

6. Joint Clients.

b. Action by Insured Against Insurer.

2. Exception Not Applicable.

[§ 167] Exception Not Applicable.

Glacier General Assur. Co. v. Superior Court (1979) 95 C.A.3d 836, 157 C.R. 435, supra, §166, which upheld the joint client exception in a case involving an attorney who represented both the insurer and the insured in a malpractice action, was distinguished in Houston General Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1980) 108 C.A.3d 958, 166 C.R. 904. In Houston General Ins. Co., the attorney had never been employed by the insurance company to defend its insured. Thus, the court held that "the tripartite relationship which would have imposed on the attorney the dual obligation to the insured and to the insurer never materialized." (108 C.A.3d 967.)

The same distinction was made in Aetna Cas. & Surety Co. v. Superior Court (1984) 153 C.A.3d 467, 200 C.R. 471. P, an insured, sought recovery for a casualty loss from Aetna, his insurer. Aetna retained attorney T to investigate the claim, and then brought a declaratory relief suit against P, claiming that his policy did not cover the loss (destruction of a home by a rainstorm causing a mudslide). To avoid a possible conflict of interest, T withdrew as counsel for Aetna prior to filing of the suit. P resisted the suit by a claim of bad faith denial of insurance coverage, and sought, by subpoena duces tecum and deposition, to obtain T's records of the investigation of P's claim. Aetna moved to quash the subpoenas or for a protective order, asserting the attorney-client and work product privileges, but the trial judge denied the motions. Held, mandamus issued to compel the reconsideration of the motions.

(a) P's theory was that, under language in Egan v. Mutual of Omaha Ins. Co. (1979) 24 C.3d 809, 169 C.R. 691, 620 P.2d 141, 6 Summary (9th), Torts, §1354, and Glacier, supra, the joint client exception applied. But neither case involved a dispute on the basic issue of coverage or the hiring of counsel with respect to that issue. (153 C.A.3d 467.)

(b) Houston, supra, "stands for the proposition that consultations regarding a policy of insurance between an insurance company and its attorney prior to the time the insurance company has accepted its obligations under that policy are protected by the attorney-client privilege vis a vis the person insured by the policy." (153 C.A.3d 474.) This rule is sound: "[A]n insurance company should be free to seek legal advice in cases where coverage is unclear without fearing that the communications necessary to obtain that advice will later become available to an insured who is dissatisfied with a decision to deny coverage." (153 C.A.3d 474.) (See State Farm Fire & Cas. Co. v. Superior Court (1988) 206 C.A.3d 1428, 1432, 254 C.R. 543 [following Houston and Aetna].)

In Rockwell Int. Corp. v. Superior Court (1994) 26 C.A.4th 1255, 32 C.R.2d 153, a corporate insured brought an action against its liability insurers for declaratory relief and breach of contract for failure to defend it in environmental contamination lawsuits. During discovery, plaintiff withheld certain documents and consultants' reports, claiming the lawyer-client and work product privileges. A discovery referee found that the cooperation clause in plaintiff's policies had abrogated the lawyer-client privilege and that the consultants' reports were required to be disclosed despite the work product doctrine. The trial judge approved the referee's recommendations and ordered production of the documents. Held, writ of mandamus issued.

(a) The standard cooperation clause in the insurance policies did not waive the lawyer-client privilege.

(1) The clause did not contain even a hint that communications from the insured to its attorney in furtherance of the insured's duty to cooperate in the defense of the underlying action should occur without an expectation of confidentiality. Moreover, defendants conceded that "at the time the standard cooperation clause was drafted, its drafter did not consider or intend that it would operate as a waiver of the attorney-client privilege in this situation or in any situation." (26 C.A.4th 1262, 1263.)

(c) The "in issue" doctrine creates an implied waiver of the privilege when the client tenders an issue involving the substance or content of a protected communication, but it does not have this effect when the privileged communication simply represents one of several forms of indirect evidence in a particular case. "There is nothing in the record before us to suggest that Rockwell has tendered any privileged communication or any issue which cannot be proved or disproved by other, more direct evidence." (26 C.A.4th 1268; for discussion of the "in issue" exception in the context in which it most frequently applies, the physician-patient privilege, see infra, §204.)

(d) The referee found that the work product doctrine did not bar disclosure of the consultants' reports, but a discovery referee's report is advisory, not determinative, and the record indicates that the trial judge abdicated his judicial responsibility by simply entering an order on the referee's report as if it were a binding decision of the court itself. On remand, the trial judge must consider plaintiff's objections and make an informed decision about whether to accept the referee's recommendations. (26 C.A.4th 1269, 1270.)

Superior Court* (2003) 113 C.A.4th 1377, 7 C.R.3d 197, a developer sued a title insurer for breach of contract and bad faith in handling the developer's claim. The title insurer admitted liability but would not agree to the amount of damages sought. The developer then amended the complaint to seek punitive damages based on the insurer's refusal to accept the developer's claim. The developer sought documents from the insurer's claims files and also sought to depose the insurer's in-house claims adjusters, who were attorneys. The insurer resisted this discovery on the ground that the developer was not entitled to confidential communications between its claims adjusters and the insurer. The trial judge denied the developer's motion to compel documents and its motion to compel answers to the deposition questions. Held, this was error. As to the attorney-client privilege, evidence reflecting the factual investigations of the claims adjusters was subject to discovery, and only those communications reflecting the requesting of, or rendering of, legal advice were protected. (113 C.A.4th 1397, 1399, disagreeing with Aetna Cas. & Surety Co. v. Superior Court (1984) 153 C.A.3d 467, 200 C.R. 471, text, p. 439, insofar as it can be read to hold that any factual claims investigation work by an in-house attorney claims adjuster is privileged.) As to the work product privilege, only the handlers' legal impressions, conclusions, opinions, and legal research and theories were protected. (113 C.A.4th 1397, 1401.) Remand to the trial court was necessary for application of these standards to each deposition question posed and each document sought. (113 C.A.4th 1401.)

[§ 168] No Waiver in Criminal Case.

A communication by one of several criminal defendants is privileged. In People v. Kor (1954) 129 C.A.2d 436, 444, 277 P.2d 94, supra, §81, Kor and Kaufman, jailed on a charge of unlawful possession of narcotics, together consulted R, as attorney for both. Kor made incriminating statements to R, and, at the trial, the judge compelled R to testify thereto on the theory that the presence of Kaufman resulted in a waiver of Kor's privilege. Held, this was error; the state was a stranger and could not require a joint attorney to disclose information received from either defendant. (See People v. Abair (1951) 102 C.A.2d 765, 772, 228 P.2d 336; 2 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 573.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

V. HUSBAND-WIFE PRIVILEGE
A. Privilege Not To Testify Against Spouse.
1. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 169

[§ 169] In General.

At common law, the husband and wife were incompetent to testify in each other's actions. Although this disqualification has been abandoned or substantially curtailed in most states, privileges of more limited scope remain, chiefly grounded on the theory that compelled testimony of a spouse is disruptive of family harmony. (See generally 1 McCormick 5th, §78 et seq.; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §§2228, 2334; C.E.B., Jefferson, 2 California Evidence Benchbook 3d, §36.1 et seq.; C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Discovery §4.41 et seq.; 19 Cal. L. Rev. 390, 407; 24 Cal. L. Rev. 472; 44 Cal. L. Rev. 945; 10 So. Cal. L. Rev. 94; 9 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 569 [improvements and uncertainties in marital privileges]; 8 Stanf. L. Rev. 420, 433 et seq.; 98 Harv. L. Rev. 1563; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §296 et seq.)

Many authorities consider the theory unsound and the privilege undesirable. "The whole concept of marital privilege, immunity or competency has been the subject of almost violent criticism by Wigmore ... and is also damned by most modern writers. ... The purposes of the privilege, preservation of marital harmony, the repugnance of making one spouse an instrument in the condemnation of the other, the danger of perjury and the encouragement of free communication, have been more and more considered obstructive and sentimental." (Young v. Superior Court (1961) 190 C.A.2d 759, 764, 12 C.R. 331.) (See also Tanzola v. De Rita (1955) 45 C.2d 1, 6, 285 P.2d 897 [privilege strictly construed, with burden on party seeking to suppress evidence].) (On existence of privilege where marriage was entered into for purpose of barring testimony, see 13 A.L.R.4th 1305.)

The Model Code and the Uniform Rules of Evidence support this view by wholly omitting the privilege against testifying, retaining only the privilege for confidential communications (infra, §187 et seq.). (See Model C., Rule 215, Comment a.) California's former statute contained both privileges, and the Evidence Code retained them. (Ev.C. 970 et seq., 980 et seq.) As to the privilege against testifying or being called, the Law Revision Commission Comment to Ev.C. 970 says: "Society stands to lose more from such disruption than it stands to gain from the testimony which would be available if the privilege did not exist." (On distinction between privilege not to testify and privilege not to reveal confidential communications, see People v. Bradford (1969) 70 C.2d 333, 342, 74 C.R. 726, 450 P.2d 46.)

The privilege, of course, is only against testimony in court. Extrajudicial declarations of a spouse that come within an exception to the hearsay rule cannot be excluded. (First Nat. Bank v. De Moulin (1922) 56 C.A. 313, 323, 205 P. 92; 8 Stanf. L. Rev. 428.) (On whether privilege should apply to spouse's extrajudicial statement to third party, see 18 Hastings L. J. 222.)

V. HUSBAND-WIFE PRIVILEGE

A. Privilege Not To Testify Against Spouse.

2. Federal Rule: Hawkins and Trammel.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 170

[§ 170] Federal Rule: Hawkins and Trammel.

In Hawkins v. United States (1958) 358 U.S. 74, 79 S.Ct. 136, 3 L.Ed.2d 125, petitioner's wife voluntarily testified against him in a Mann Act prosecution, over his objection. The Government made no argument for compulsory testimony of one spouse against the other, but urged that the privilege should be relaxed to allow either to testify against the other if he or she wished to do so. But the court thought that the ill effects of voluntary testimony would be the same as those of compulsory testimony, and restated the policy as follows: "The basic reason the law has refused to pit wife against husband or husband against wife in a trial where life or liberty is at stake was a belief that such a policy is necessary to foster family peace, not only for the benefit of husband, wife and children, but for the benefit of the public as well. Such a belief has never been unreasonable and is not now." (79 S.Ct. 138, 3 L.Ed.2d 128.) The court further observed that, despite modifications of the privilege in America and England, "there is still a widespread belief, grounded on present conditions, that the law should not force or encourage testimony which might alienate husband and wife, or further inflame existing domestic differences." (79 S.Ct. 139, 3 L.Ed.2d 129.)

The Hawkins rule was modified in Trammel v. United States (1980) 445 U.S. 40, 100 S.Ct. 906, 63 L.Ed.2d 186. Petitioner's conviction was based on his wife's voluntary adverse testimony, given over his objection. Held, conviction affirmed. The trend in state law has been against the accused's privilege to bar adverse spousal testimony; and, in light of the independent privilege protecting confidential marital communications, the Hawkins rule "seems far more likely to frustrate justice than to foster family peace." (100 S.Ct. 913, 63 L.Ed.2d 196.) Thus, "the witness spouse alone has a privilege to refuse to testify adversely; the witness may be neither compelled to testify nor foreclosed from testifying." (100 S.Ct. 914, 63 L.Ed.2d 196.) (See 1980 A.S. 507; 1981 A.S. 187; 1983 A.S. 187; 98 Harv. L. Rev. 1568.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

A. Privilege Not To Testify Against Spouse.

3. Condition: Valid Marriage.

a. General Rule on Void Marriage.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 171

[§ 171] General Rule on Void Marriage.

The privilege belongs to "a married person" (Ev.C. 970), and may be claimed only if there is a valid marriage in existence at the time the witness is called to testify. Thus, it does not apply where a purported marriage is wholly void. (See People v. Glab (1936) 13 C.A.2d 528, 534, 57 P.2d 588 [bigamous]; People v. Gallego (1990) 52 C.3d 115, 176, 177, 276 C.R. 679, 802 P.2d 169 [same]; People v. MacDonald (1938) 24 C.A.2d 702, 708, 76 P.2d 121 [incestuous]; People v. McIntyre (1931) 213 C. 50, 54, 1 P.2d 443 [failure to procure license]; 98 Harv. L. Rev. 1565.) But where the marriage is merely voidable, it is good until annulled, and testimony prior to final judgment of annulment is privileged. (People v. Livingston (1928) 88 C.A. 713, 714, 263 P. 1036; see 26 So. Cal. L. Rev. 452.)

Regardless of validity or invalidity, where a marriage is entered into solely for fraudulent purposes, the privilege is inapplicable. (Lutwak v. United States (1953) 344 U.S. 604, 73 S.Ct. 481, 487, 97 L.Ed. 593, 601 [sham marriage so spouse could gain illegal entry into country].)

The determination of this issue is made by the trial judge. In People v. MacDonald, supra, defendant, charged with an incestuous marriage with his daughter, admitted the marriage but denied that the girl was his child. The prosecution introduced considerable evidence of paternity, the daughter was then sworn, and defendant's objection to her testifying was overruled. On appeal, defendant contended that the court thereby ruled that she was his daughter, taking this important fact question from the jury. Held, the ruling was proper. A mixed question of law and fact was involved, and the trial judge had to decide preliminarily whether there was paternity; if there was, the marriage would be void and she could testify. (24 C.A.2d 705.) (On finality of judge's determination of admissibility, see Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 405(b); 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §59.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(New) Distinction: No longer viable marriage: There is no exception to the marital privilege for marriages that are no longer viable, and such an exception cannot be created by judicial interpretation. "Only the Legislature could choose to add such an exception to the existing express statutory marital privilege exceptions listed in section 972." (Jurcoane v. Superior Court (2001) 93 C.A.4th 886, 889, 113 C.R.2d 483 [in murder prosecution, defendant's wife could not be called to testify against him so long as she continued to exercise privilege and couple remained married, even though charged murders occurred 17 years earlier, defendant immediately fled to Mexico, and defendant and wife had no further contact].) West's Key Number Digest, Witnesses k.189

3. Condition: Valid Marriage.

b. Divorce or Annulment.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 172

[§ 172] Divorce or Annulment.

The relationship privilege terminates on divorce or annulment; after that, the prior confidential communications remain privileged (infra, §189), but as to other matters, either of the former spouses may testify freely and may be compelled to testify for or against each other without consent. (See People v. Loper (1910) 159 C. 6, 12, 112 P. 720 [divorce]; People v. Godines (1936) 17 C.A.2d 721, 726, 62 P.2d 787 [annulment]; People v. Dorsey (1975) 46 C.A.3d 706, 716, 120 C.R. 508 [privilege may not have existed because wife may have obtained final decree of divorce at some point]; *People v. V. HUSBAND-WIFE PRIVILEGE

A. Privilege Not To Testify Against Spouse.

3. Condition: Valid Marriage.

c. Nonmarital Relationship.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 173

[§ 173] Nonmarital Relationship.

In People v. Delph (1979) 94 C.A.3d 411, 156 C.R. 422, defendant challenged the trial judge's ruling that the women he lived with must testify, invoking the holding in Marvin v. Marvin (1976) 18 C.3d 660, 134 C.R. 815, 557 P.2d 106, on property rights in a nonmarital relationship (see 11 Summary (9th), Community Property, §233). Held, the ruling was correct. The court in Marvin did not resurrect common law marriage or elevate meretricious relationships to the level of marriages for all purposes; and whether a privilege should be established for such relationships is a matter for legislation. (94 C.A.3d 416.) (See 4 A.L.R.4th 422 [communication between unmarried couple living together as privileged]; 98 Harv. L. Rev. 1566.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

A. Privilege Not To Testify Against Spouse.

4. Scope.

a. Witness Spouse Alone Privileged.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 174

[§ 174] Witness Spouse Alone Privileged.

(1) Former Law: Privilege of Party Spouse. California's former Code of Civil Procedure and Penal Code sections made a confusing distinction between civil and criminal cases:

(a) In civil cases, the privilege belonged to the party spouse; if the party spouse objected, the witness spouse could not testify. (See Marple v. Jackson (1920) 184 C. 411, 413, 193 P. 940 [action by wife to enjoin execution sale of land obtained from husband by gift deed; husband could not testify against her].) But if the party spouse consented, the witness spouse had no privilege under the statutory language.

(b) In criminal cases, the privilege belonged to both, and could be claimed by either the defendant spouse or the witness spouse. (See People v. Langtree (1883) 64 C. 256, 259, 30 P. 813.)

(2) Evidence Code: Privilege of Witness Spouse. Ev.C. 970 eliminates the privilege of the party spouse, and gives it exclusively to the witness spouse: "[A] married person has a privilege not to testify against his spouse in any proceeding." The Law Revision Commission states: "[T]he witness spouse ... is more likely to determine whether to claim the privilege on the basis of the probable effect of his testimony on the marital relationship. Because of his interest in the outcome of the action, a party spouse would be under considerable temptation to claim the privilege even if the marriage were already hopelessly disrupted, whereas a witness spouse probably would not." (Law Rev. Com. Comment to repealed C.C.P. 1881; see People v. Chavez (1968) 262 C.A.2d 422, 429, 68 C.R. 759, citing the text; People v. Dorsey (1975) 46 C.A.3d 706, 716, 120 C.R. 508.) (For similar federal rule, see Trammel v. United States (1980) 445 U.S. 40, 100 S.Ct. 906, 63 L.Ed.2d 186, supra, §170.)

Cases prior to the Evidence Code held the privilege inapplicable where the party spouse was only a nominal party or had no interest in the subject of inquiry. (See Johnston v. St. Sure (1920) 50 C.A. 735, 737, 195 P. 947; Sylvester v. Kirkpatrick (1947) 79 C.A.2d 443, 451, 180 P.2d 36; Dean v. Superior Court (1951) 103 C.A.2d 892, 893, 230 P.2d 362.)

(3) Spouse of Judgment Debtor. In a postjudgment debtor proceeding to locate the debtor's assets, the privilege is inapplicable. (C.C.P. 708.130(b).)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

V. HUSBAND-WIFE PRIVILEGE

A. Privilege Not To Testify Against Spouse.

4. Scope.

b. Privilege Not To Be Called.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 175

[§ 175] Privilege Not To Be Called.

(1) General Rule. It has been pointed out that to call a spouse as a witness, and force the witness spouse to claim privilege before the jury, may be highly prejudicial to the party spouse. (See People v. Wade (1959) 53 C.2d 322, 1 C.R. 683, 348 P.2d 116, supra, §95.) Ev.C. 971 prohibits this practice by creating a distinct privilege: "[A] married person whose spouse is a party to a proceeding has a privilege not to be called as a witness by an adverse party ... without the prior express consent of the spouse having the privilege." (See supra, §174.) The section makes an exception where the adverse party calls the spouse "in good faith without knowledge of the marital relationship."

The Law Revision Commission Comment points out that this privilege only applies where the other spouse is a party to the proceeding. A person under investigation by a grand jury is not a party to the grand jury proceeding; hence, the suspect's spouse may be called as a witness. But the witness spouse still has the other privilege, under Ev.C. 970 (supra, §174), to refuse to answer questions which would constitute testimony against the other spouse, for this privilege applies "in any proceeding."

(2) Calling Spouse To Prove Marital Relationship. In People v. Villarino (1970) 7 C.A.3d 56, 86 C.R. 338, defendant was charged with forgery. Several of the allegedly forged checks had been cashed by a woman whom the prosecutor suspected was defendant's wife. He accordingly subpoenaed her to appear as a witness at defendant's trial. Out of the jury's presence, defense counsel requested a ruling that the wife need not respond to the subpoena. In opposition, the prosecutor stated he did not intend to have the wife do anything more than produce herself as physical evidence and to state whether she was defendant's wife. The judge ruled that the wife should appear and that the privilege should be asserted after she had been sworn. Only on giving sworn testimony that she was defendant's wife was she excused. Based on her appearance, a prosecution witness identified her as the woman for whom he had cashed the check. Held, this was proper.

(a) When the prosecutor subpoenaed the wife, he apparently knew that the witness would identify her. The witness could not have testified that the woman was defendant's wife because he had not known her in that capacity. "Her physical presence in the courtroom was the most direct and simple manner of proving, for what it was worth, that defendant's wife was the woman in question. Actually, it was the fact of the close association with defendant that was the ultimate matter to be proved rather than the relationship out of which the association grew." (7 C.A.3d 62.) On the question of whether the means employed were proper to compel the wife to bring herself to court to be observed, no statutory or judicial authority was available, but Wigmore takes the position that for production of a witness' living body, the trial court's discretion--and not a privilege of nondisclosure--determines the necessity and suitable conditions.

(b) The claim of privilege can be sustained only on proof of the marital relationship. It was thus doubtful that "merely asking the witness if she was the wife of defendant violated the privilege." (7 C.A.3d 65.) Because the prosecutor had represented that he wanted only to establish the wife's identity, "it may be that the questioning would have been terminated without its being necessary for defendant to assert the privilege before the jury." (7 C.A.3d 65.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

V. HUSBAND-WIFE PRIVILEGE
A. Privilege Not To Testify Against Spouse.
4. Scope.
c. Witness Must Testify for Spouse.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 176

[§ 176] Witness Must Testify for Spouse.

California's former law allowed a witness spouse to refuse to testify even though the party spouse sought the testimony for his or her own benefit. This aspect of the privilege was abolished by the Code for both civil and criminal actions. Ev.C. 970 only gives a privilege not to testify "against" the party spouse.

As the Law Revision Commission states: "If a case can be imagined in which a party would wish to avail himself of this privilege [i.e., as to testimony for him], he could achieve the same result by simply not calling his spouse to the stand. Nor does it seem desirable to continue the present privilege of the nonparty spouse not to testify in favor of the party spouse in a criminal action. It is difficult to imagine a case in which this privilege would be claimed for other than mercenary or spiteful motives, and it precludes access to evidence which might save an innocent person from conviction." (Law Rev. Com. Comment to repealed C.C.P. 1881.)

5. Exceptions to the Privilege.
a. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 177

[§ 177] In General.

A number of exceptions to the privilege against testifying were developed at common law and codified in our former statutes. (See 8 Stanf. L. Rev. 431.) The Evidence Code retained them, with some revision, to achieve consistency with the exceptions to the communication privilege (infra, §193 et seq.). (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 972.)

The exceptions fall under four heads:

- (1) Certain civil proceedings. (Ev.C. 972(a), (b), (c); see infra, §178 et seq.)
- (2) Juvenile court proceedings. (Ev.C. 972(d).)
- (3) Certain criminal proceedings. (Ev.C. 972(e), infra, §§181, 182.)
- (4) Proceedings arising from criminal acts committed prior to marriage. (Ev.C. 972(f), infra, §183.)

[§ 178] Proceeding Between Spouses.

The privilege may not be claimed in a "proceeding brought by or on behalf of one spouse against the other spouse." (Ev.C. 972(a); see Savings Union Bank & Trust Co. v. Crowley (1917) 176 C. 543, 547, 169 P. 67 [action by husband's executor against surviving wife; wife could testify]; Estate of Gillett (1946) 73 C.A.2d 588, 594, 166 P.2d 870 [estate of deceased husband asserted claim against surviving wife]; on divorce cases, see 19 *Cal. An exception to the spousal privilege is also set forth in the Uniform Interstate Family Support Act (see Family C. 4930(h)) and in the Uniform Civil Liability for Support Act (see Family C. 3551).

b. Civil Proceedings.

3. Proceeding by Former Spouse, Other Parent, or Guardian.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 180

[§ 180] Proceeding by Former Spouse, Other Parent, or Guardian.

The privilege is also inapplicable in the following proceedings (Ev.C. 972(g)):

(1) "A proceeding brought against the spouse by a former spouse" (a) "so long as the property and debts of the marriage have not been adjudicated," or (b) "in order to establish, modify, or enforce a child, family or spousal support obligation arising from the marriage to the former spouse."

(2) "A proceeding brought against a spouse by the other parent in order to establish, modify, or enforce a child support obligation for a child of a nonmarital relationship of the spouse."

(3) "A proceeding brought against a spouse by the guardian of a child of that spouse in order to establish, modify, or enforce a child support obligation of the spouse."

Ev.C. 972(g) removes the privilege of the married person to refuse to give information regarding the "income, expenses, assets, debts, and employment of either spouse." However, he or she may still assert the privilege if other information is requested by the former spouse, guardian, or other parent.

A person who demands information now available under Ev.C. 972(g), and who is also obligated to support the child for whom an order to establish, modify, or enforce is sought waives his or her marital privilege to the same extent as the spouse.

A. Privilege Not To Testify Against Spouse.

5. Exceptions to the Privilege.

c. Criminal Proceedings.

1. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 181

[§ 181] In General.

Criminal proceedings in which "one spouse is charged with" certain crimes are excepted by Ev.C. 972(e). (On whether this class is confined to actual prosecutions for the acts testified to, see discussion, People v. Mathis (1965) 63 C.2d 416, 430, 46 C.R. 785, 406 P.2d 65, and dissent, 63 C.2d 434; 1966 A.S. 409.)

Ev.C. 972 lists the following:

(1) Crime Against Other Spouse, Child, Parent, Relative, or Cohabitant. (Ev.C. 972(e)(1), infra, §182.)

(2) Crime Incidentally Committed Against Third Person. "A crime against the person or property of a third person committed in the course of committing a crime against the person or property of the other spouse, whether committed before or during marriage." (Ev.C. 972(e)(2); see People v. Pittullo (1953) 116 C.A.2d 373, 377, 253 P.2d 705; 74 A.L.R.4th 277 [competency of one spouse to testify against other in prosecution for offense against third party as affected by fact that offense against spouse was involved in same transaction].)

Merely charging one spouse with such crimes does not render the exception applicable; under Ev.C. 405 (see 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §59), "the prosecution bears the burden of proof on the issue and must, at the least, make a prima facie showing of violation of the offense or offenses giving rise to the exception." (Fortes v. Municipal Court (1980) 113 C.A.3d 704, 711, 170 C.R. 292.)

In Fortes, defendant husband entered his wife's home, which he had shared with her until about 3 weeks earlier, and killed a male visitor. When the wife refused to testify against defendant, the prosecution invoked the exception on the theory that defendant had committed the murder in the course of committing burglary against his wife. Held, the claim of privilege was good. The prosecution failed to show that defendant could validly be convicted of burglary, i.e., stipulations established that the residence was a family dwelling, and there was no evidence that defendant's right to access was limited; there was no evidence that the residence was the wife's separate property; and a temporary restraining order denying defendant access had expired prior to his entry. (113 C.A.3d 713.)

(3) Bigamy. (Ev.C. 972(e)(3).)

(4) Criminal Nonsupport of Child or Wife. "A crime defined by Section 270 or 270a of the Penal Code." (Ev.C.

972(e)(4); see 10 Summary (9th), Parent and Child, §326; 11 Summary (9th), Husband and Wife, §18; 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Sex Offenses and Crimes Against Decency, §143 et seq.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Crime Incidentally Committed Against Third Person. The exception contained in Ev.C. 972(e)(2) does not require that an accusatory pleading have been filed charging the defendant with a crime against his or her spouse. Further, it is not inapplicable simply because the crime against the spouse is incidental to the crime against the third party. Rather, the exception applies "whenever the crime against the third person and the crime against the spouse (1) are part of a continuous course of criminal conduct, and (2) bear some logical relationship to each other." (People v. Sinohui (2002) 28 C.4th 205, 212, 220, 120 C.R.2d 783, 47 P.3d 629 [in prosecution in which defendant was charged with kidnaping and murdering wife's former boyfriend, trial judge properly compelled wife to testify, where defendant committed uncharged crime of false imprisonment of wife at same time he committed charged kidnaping and murder]).(4) Criminal Nonsupport of Child or Wife.

2. Crime Against Other Spouse, Child, Parent, Relative, or Cohabitant.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 182

[§ 182] Crime Against Other Spouse, Child, Parent, Relative, or Cohabitant.

Ev.C. 972(e)(1) excepts a crime by one spouse, whether committed before or during the marriage, against the person or property of any of the following:

(1) Other spouse. (See In re Kellogg (1940) 41 C.A.2d 833, 837, 107 P.2d 964 [husband permitted to testify in prosecution of wife for grand theft, based on unauthorized withdrawal of funds from their joint tenancy account]; People v. Tidwell (1943) 61 C.A.2d 58, 61, 141 P.2d 969 [prosecution of husband for selling wife for immoral purposes, P.C. 266f]; People v. Schlette (1956) 139 C.A.2d 165, 167, 293 P.2d 79 [prosecution of husband for burning house and shop of wife (community property); wife, as an owner, could testify]; Young v. Superior Court (1961) 190 C.A.2d 759, 762, 12 C.R. 331 [felonious assault by wife on husband, husband compelled to testify]; 1955 A.S. 640; Wyatt v. United States (1960) 362 U.S. 525, 80 S.Ct. 901, 902, 4 L.Ed.2d 931, 932 [Mann Act prosecution; see 74 Harv. L. (2) Child of either spouse. (See People v. James (1935) 9 C.A.2d 162, 164, 48 P.2d 1011 [husband committed lewd act with daughter (P.C. 288); wife competent]; People v. Kasunic (1950) 95 C.A.2d 676, 677, 213 P.2d 778 [husband-stepfather committed sexual offenses against children; wife-mother competent]; People v. Vera (1955) 131 C.A.2d 669, 673, 281 P.2d 65 [wife-mother committed mayhem on her child; husband-stepfather competent]; People v. Gibson (1957) 152 C.A.2d 149, 153, 312 P.2d 705 [husband committed lewd act (P.C. 288a) with wife's daughter]; Dunn v. Superior Court (1993) 21 C.A.4th 721, 724, 725, 26 C.R.2d 365 [exception applied to foster child who had only lived in home for 5 months].)

(3) Parent of either spouse.

(4) Relative of either spouse.

(5) Cohabitant of either spouse. The exception applies as long as the cohabitant-victim lives in the same household as the spouse, regardless of the nature of the relationship. (People v. Siravo (1993) 17 C.A.4th 555, 562, 21 C.R.2d 350 [assault by defendant on his wife's housemate]; People v. Bogle (1995) 41 C.A.4th 770, 782, 783, 48 C.R.2d 739 [following Siravo].)

5. Exceptions to the Privilege.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 183

[§ 183] Proceedings Arising From Premarital Criminal Acts.

Ev.C. 972(e) (see supra, §182) creates an exception to the privilege where one spouse is charged with specified crimes against the other spouse, or the child, parent, relative, or cohabitant of either spouse. Ev.C. 972(f) extends the exception to proceedings resulting from a criminal act.

The exception applies under the following conditions: (1) the criminal act must have occurred prior to the spouses' legal marriage; (2) the proceeding must be in regard to knowledge acquired prior to marriage; and (3) prior to the marriage the witness spouse must have been aware that his or her spouse had been arrested for, or formally charged with, the crime about which the spouse is called to testify. ## CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

A. Privilege Not To Testify Against Spouse.

6. Waiver by Testimony or Interest.

a. Testimony by Spouse.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 184

[§ 184] Testimony by Spouse.

Under Ev.C. 973(a), two kinds of voluntary testimony ("unless erroneously compelled"; see infra, this section) result in a waiver of the privilege for "the proceeding in which such testimony is given":

(1) Proceeding where other spouse is a party. "[A] married person cannot call his spouse as a witness to give favorable testimony and have that spouse invoke the privilege provided in Section 970 to keep from testifying on cross-examination to unfavorable matters; nor can a married person testify for an adverse party as to particular matters and then invoke the privilege not to testify against his spouse as to other matters." (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 973; see People v. Lucas (1995) 12 C.4th 415, 490, 48 C.R.2d 525, 907 P.2d 373 [citing the text and People v. Resendez (1993) 12 C.A.4th 98, 15 C.R.2d 575].) (On the extent of the waiver under California's former law, see People v. Odmann (1958) 160 C.A.2d 693, 696, 325 P.2d 495; People v. Mathis (1965) 63 C.2d 416, 426, 46 C.R. 785, 406 P.2d 65.)

(2) Testimony by a witness spouse against other spouse in any proceeding. Where the other spouse is not a party, the witness spouse may ordinarily testify without losing the privilege; but the witness spouse waives it "as to all matters if he testifies against his spouse as to any matter." (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 973.)

"Proceeding" includes civil and criminal proceedings (Ev.C. 901), and the waiver extends to the entire proceeding. "For example, if a civil action involves issues being separately tried, a wife whose husband is a party to the litigation may not testify for her husband at one trial and invoke the privilege in order to avoid testifying against him at a separate trial of a different issue. Nor may a wife testify against her husband at a preliminary hearing of a criminal action and refuse to testify against him at the trial." (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 973.) (See People v. Lankford (1976) 55 C.A.3d 203, 210, 127 C.R. 408 [if wife's testimony at husband's preliminary hearing was not improperly compelled, under Ev.C. 973 she waived her privilege for all future proceedings in that action].)

A witness spouse who testifies against the other spouse at that spouse's preliminary hearing waives the privilege, even if the witness spouse was not advised of the privilege and its potential loss. (People v. Resendez, supra, 12 C.A.4th 108, 109 [declining opportunity to precisely define "erroneously compelled," but concluding that testimony did not satisfy that definition, even though witness spouse told trial court, "I didn't want to testify. ... But they told m[e] that I had to"].)

V. HUSBAND-WIFE PRIVILEGE

A. Privilege Not To Testify Against Spouse.

6. Waiver by Testimony or Interest.

b. Direct Interest in Proceeding.

1. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 185

[§ 185] In General.

California's prior case law developed rules of waiver where the husband and wife joined in an action, either as plaintiffs or defendants. Thus:

(1) The privilege was waived where, under California's former rule classifying personal injury damages as community property, the spouses joined in an action for damages for injuries to one of them. (See In re Strand (1932) 123 C.A. 170, 171, 11 P.2d 89; 6 So. Cal. L. Rev. 336; 8 Stanf. L. Rev. 430; cf. Credit Bureau of San Diego v. Smullen (1952) 114 C.A.2d Supp. 834, 840, 249 P.2d 619 [privilege for confidential communications held waived where plaintiff husband sued alone but relied on contract between himself and his wife and defendant].)

(2) The privilege was waived where a third party joined both spouses as defendants, and by a joint answer they placed in issue the validity of a transaction, or asserted a joint title or interest. (See Tobias v. Adams (1927) 201 C. 689, 699, 258 P. 588 [action against spouses to set aside fraudulent conveyance from husband to wife; defense of husband's relinquishment of community property to wife; both could testify]; Schwartz v. Brandon (1929) 97 C.A. 30, 35, 275 P. 448 [similar action; defense of deed of community property by defendant husband to wife; both could testify]; Hagen v. Silva (1956) 139 C.A.2d 199, 202, 293 P.2d 143; Rinehart v. First Cupertino Co. (1957) 154 C.A.2d 842, 844, 317 P.2d 30; 44 Cal. L. Rev. 947.)

In Hagen, plaintiff maker of a note sued defendant holders, husband and wife, to quiet title thereto, alleging full payment. Plaintiff's evidence was testimony of defendant wife that payment was made to C as agent of defendants for collection. Held, admission of the wife's testimony, over the husband's objection, was proper. "To permit defendants to assert their claim and at the same time to permit the husband to prevent questioning of his wife about that claim, if not 'monstrous' (as was described the possibility of immunity from scrutiny of a transaction by which one spouse took property from another in alleged defraud of creditors, in Tobias v. Adams ... ) would at least be incongruous and unfair." (139 C.A.2d 203.)

Ev.C. 973(b) codified the underlying principle of these cases by eliminating the privilege "in a civil proceeding brought or defended by a married person for the immediate benefit of his spouse or of himself and his spouse." (On what constitutes immediate benefit, see infra, §186.)

However, the mere fact that one spouse acted as agent of another in the transaction or business involved does not give rise to a waiver. (Ayres v. Wright (1930) 103 C.A. 610, 619, 284 P. 1077.)

V. HUSBAND-WIFE PRIVILEGE

A. Privilege Not To Testify Against Spouse.

6. Waiver by Testimony or Interest.

b. Direct Interest in Proceeding.

2. "Immediate Benefit."

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 186

[§ 186] "Immediate Benefit."

The "immediate benefit" phrase of Ev.C. 973(b) was construed in Duggan v. Superior Court (1981) 127 C.A.3d 267, 179 C.R. 410. Plaintiff, a partner in a real estate venture, sued defendants to establish a 15% ownership interest in real property acquired on behalf of the partnership and held of record by defendants. Defendants obtained an order compelling the deposition of plaintiff's wife, on the theory that she had an ultimate community property interest in any recovery that plaintiff might obtain. Held, prohibition issued; the order violated the marital privilege.

(a) Ev.C. 973(b) was based on prior case law; and, though the particular section has not been construed, similar language in other statutes (Ev.C. 776, former C.C.P. 2019) has been narrowly interpreted: "These cases appear to limit the application of 'immediate benefit' to persons who are represented by a nominal plaintiff or defendant (as where a corporation serves as the alter ego of its sole shareholder) or who themselves have the right to act or defend against the adverse party on the issues involved." (127 C.A.3d 272.) (See 29 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 1243 [defining immediate benefit in light of current community property law].)

(b) The wife here was not named as a party to the action, or as a signer of the partnership agreement, or as a record holder of any of the real property; and any claim of a community property interest would not be to the property (former Corp.C. 15025(2)(e), partner's right in specific partnership property is not community property), and would be against plaintiff husband and not the other partners. (127 C.A.3d 272.)

V. HUSBAND-WIFE PRIVILEGE

B. Privilege for Confidential Marital Communications.

1. Nature and Distinctions.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 187

[§ 187] Nature and Distinctions.

(1) In General. "Subject to Section 912 [waiver] and except as otherwise provided in this article, a spouse (or his guardian or conservator when he has a guardian or conservator), whether or not a party, has a privilege during the marital relationship and afterwards to refuse to disclose, and to prevent another from disclosing, a communication if he claims the privilege and the communication was made in confidence between him and the other spouse while they were husband and wife." (Ev.C. 980; Unif. Rules, Rule 504(b) [privilege limited to criminal proceedings]; see 1 McCormick 5th, §85; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §§2334, 2341; C.E.B., Jefferson, 2 California Evidence Benchbook 3d, §36.15 et seq.; C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Discovery §4.46 et seq.; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §296 et seq.)

(2) Relationship Privilege Distinguished. The relationship privilege is against testifying at all (supra, §169), but it may be claimed only during an existing valid marriage (supra, §171). The communications privilege applies during the marriage and after it is dissolved, and protects any communication made between the spouses during the marriage. (See People v. Bradford (1969) 70 C.2d 333, 342, 74 C.R. 726, 450 P.2d 46; People v. Dorsey (1975) 46 C.A.3d 706, 717, 120 C.R. 508.)

The underlying policy of both privileges is the same--promotion of marital harmony. But the somewhat different theory advanced in support of the communications privilege is that it encourages free confidential communication between the spouses. Most of the critics of the other privilege are satisfied that the social considerations which support the communications privilege are substantial and that it should be retained. (See Model C., Rule 215 and Comment; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.), §2332; but see 1 McCormick 5th, §86 [arguing that judge should have discretion to allow evidence in cases of necessity]; 19 Cal. L. Rev. 411 [arguing for abolition of privilege]; 9 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 569 [improvements and uncertainties in marital privileges].)

B. Privilege for Confidential Marital Communications.

2. Scope.

a. Both Spouses May Claim.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 188

[§ 188] Both Spouses May Claim.

The somewhat obscure language of California's former statute was replaced by a clear grant of the privilege to both spouses: "A spouse" has the privilege to refuse to disclose and to prevent another from disclosing a confidential communication. (Ev.C. 980; see Law Rev. Com. Comment; People v. Dorsey (1975) 46 C.A.3d 706, 717, 120 C.R. 508, citing the text; 98 Harv. L. Rev. 1571.)

The guardian or conservator of an incompetent spouse may claim the privilege for him or her. (Ev.C. 980.) But a deceased spouse has no privilege, and a claim can only be made on behalf of the surviving spouse. (Law Rev. Com. Comment.)

V. HUSBAND-WIFE PRIVILEGE

B. Privilege for Confidential Marital Communications.

2. Scope.

b. During Marriage and Afterwards.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 189

[§ 189] During Marriage and Afterwards.

The Model Code (Rule 215) followed the generally accepted rule that the privilege continues after termination of the marriage. (See 8 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 608; 1960 A.S. 573.) The original Uniform Rules of Evidence limited the privilege to the duration of the marriage, but the Evidence Code retained the general rule, recognizing the privilege "during the marital relationship and afterwards." (Ev.C. 980.)

In People v. Godines (1936) 17 C.A.2d 721, 727, 62 P.2d 787, a marriage was annulled for fraud. Thereafter, in this criminal prosecution of the former wife for perjury, (a) the former husband could testify, because the relationship privilege had ended (supra, §172); but (b) it was error to admit a letter written by defendant to him before the annulment decree, because this was a privileged communication "during the marriage." The court proceeded on the theory that, for some purposes at least, a voidable marriage is nevertheless valid until annulled. (See 25 Cal. L. Rev. 619; People v. Dorsey (1975) 46 C.A.3d 706, 717, 120 C.R. 508, citing the text [privilege exists even though marriage has been terminated by divorce]; but see People v. Badgett (1995) 10 C.4th 330, 363, 41 C.R.2d 635, 895 P.2d 877, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §57 [defendant and witness did not have valid common law marriage under laws of Texas, and therefore privilege was inapplicable]; on effect of separation, see 98 A.L.R.3d 1285.)

Of course, there is no privilege for a communication made before the marriage or after its dissolution. (Ev.C. 980 [made "while they were husband and wife"]; 1 McCormick 5th, §81; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2335.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

V. HUSBAND-WIFE PRIVILEGE

B. Privilege for Confidential Marital Communications.

2. Scope.

c. Communication.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 190

[§ 190] Communication.

The privilege protects "a communication" (Ev.C. 980), and, by the better view, this covers only written or oral statements, or signs which carry a message. (See Rubio v. Superior Court (1988) 202 C.A.3d 1343, 1347, 249 C.R. 419, 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §6 [videotape is "writing" subject to privilege; here, videotape of sexual acts performed by husband and wife in private]; People v. Bogle (1995) 41 C.A.4th 770, 784, 48 C.R.2d 739 [in murder prosecution, suicide note written by defendant to wife was never "communicated" and therefore did not come within privilege, where, after writing it, defendant tore it up and threw it in trash].) This sufficiently carries out the policy of encouraging the free exchange of confidences without suppressing other useful evidence. (See 1 McCormick 5th, §79; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2337; for same principle applied to attorney-client privilege, see supra, §110.) Thus, the privilege does not apply in two situations:

(1) Fact of communication. Where one spouse testifies not to the content of a conversation or letter, but merely to the fact that the parties conversed at a certain time, or that a letter was sent or received. "[T]he purpose of the inquiry being to show the act of communicating and not the disclosures involved in the communications, the testimony does not come within the inhibition of the statute." (Estate of Pusey (1919) 180 C. 368, 374, 181 P. 648; see Tanzola v. De Rita (1955) 45 C.2d 1, 7, 285 P.2d 897; People v. Bradford (1969) 70 C.2d 333, 342, footnote 2, 74 C.R. 726, 450 P.2d 46; People v. Saidi-Tabatabai (1970) 7 C.A.3d 981, 986, 86 C.R. 866.)

In People v. Saidi-Tabatabai, defendant's husband was permitted to testify, over objection, that the handwriting which accompanied certain pictures was his wife's. (The relevant fact was whether defendant had those photographs after her brother-in-law was shot to death.) Held, the evidence was properly received. The address on the mailed package was not a confidential communication because various post office employees were expected to read it. (7 C.A.3d 986, footnote 3.) And, "[e]very court that ever analyzed the problem has held that a spouse may identify the handwriting of the other spouse." (7 C.A.3d 986.)

(2) Acts. Where the testimony relates to acts that are not communications. On this point, there is a strong conflict of authority, many courts treating nonverbal conduct which is private or confidential as covered by the privilege. (See 1 McCormick 5th, §79; 1949 A.S. 993; 1953 A.S. 779; 1964 A.S. 375; 10 A.L.R.2d 1389.) But California follows Wigmore's view that this evidence is not privileged.

Thus, in Tanzola v. De Rita, supra, plaintiff lent money to decedent husband, the checks being received and deposited by decedent's wife acting as decedent's business manager. In this action, the wife testified over objection to the facts that the checks were left with her, indorsed and deposited by her. Held, the testimony was admissible. No communication from the husband to the wife was involved in his placing the checks on her desk. (See Pereira v. United States (1954) 347 U.S. 1, 74 S.Ct. 358, 361, 98 L.Ed. 435, 443; People v. Bradford, supra, 70 C.2d 342, footnote 2 [wife's testimony admissible to show that she received victim's jewelry from defendant and saw him place sulfuric acid in garage]; People v. Dorsey (1975) 46 C.A.3d 706, 717, 120 C.R. 508, citing the text [privilege does not extend to observed physical facts, which are not "communications"]; 1 McCormick 5th, §79; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2337; 1954 A.S. 792.)

See 1 McCormick 6th, §79.

(2) Acts. See People v. Cleveland (2004) 32 C.4th 704, 743, 11 C.R.3d 236, 86 P.3d 302 [in capital murder prosecution, trial judge did not err in allowing witness who was married to defendant at time of charged murders to testify that when defendant returned home after murders, she observed him wearing watch and possessing cocaine; observations were not communications within meaning of privilege]; 1 McCormick 6th, §79; 23 A.L.R.6th 1 [privilege as including knowledge derived from observation by one spouse of acts of other; superseding 10 A.L.R.2d 1389, text, p. 457].

V. HUSBAND-WIFE PRIVILEGE

B. Privilege for Confidential Marital Communications.

2. Scope.

d. Confidential Disclosure.

1. Statutory Requirement.

[§ 191] Statutory Requirement.

(1) In General. California's former statute referred to "any communication," giving some support to the view that all communications between husband and wife during the marriage are within the privilege. (See People v. Mullings (1890) 83 C. 138, 140, 23 P. 229.) But it is generally held that the protection extends only to those communications which are intended as private or confidential. (See Wolfe v. United States (1934) 291 U.S. 7, 54 S.Ct. 279, 280, 78 L.Ed. 617, 620; 1 McCormick 5th, §80; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2336; 1959 A.S. 634; 8 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 611; 98 Harv. L. Rev. 1572; and see Tanzola v. De Rita (1955) 45 C.2d 1, 6, 7, 285 P.2d 897, supra, §190 [disapproving Mullings on burden of proof and intimating approval of the requirement of confidentiality].)

Ev.C. 980 clarified the law by referring to a communication "made in confidence between him and the other spouse." (See People v. Dorsey (1975) 46 C.A.3d 706, 718, 120 C.R. 508 [wife properly testified to communications made to third person in her presence].) (On privilege where third person has been eavesdropping as a result of betrayal or connivance of spouse to whom communication was addressed, see 3 A.L.R.4th 1104; on privilege where communication was inadvertently obtained by third person, see 32 A.L.R.4th 1177; on presence of child as destroying confidentiality, see 39 A.L.R.4th 480.)

(2) Jailhouse Communications. The privilege extends to jailhouse communications between spouses under circumstances creating an expectation of privacy. (See North v. Superior Court (1972) 8 C.3d 301, 308, 104 C.R. 833, 502 P.2d 1305, 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, §351 [secretly recorded conversation in arresting officer's office after he left room and closed door was privileged]; People v. Von Villas (1992) 11 C.A.4th 175, 221, 15 C.R.2d 112 [loud jailhouse conversation was not privileged].)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

V. HUSBAND-WIFE PRIVILEGE

B. Privilege for Confidential Marital Communications.

2. Scope.

d. Confidential Disclosure.

2. Loss of Confidentiality.

[§ 192] Loss of Confidentiality.

In People v. Johnson (1991) 233 C.A.3d 425, 284 C.R. 579, a murder case, defendant asserted the privilege for marital communications to prevent his wife, Lenora, from testifying that while inflicting a severe beating on her, he told her that what had happened to the murder victim would happen to her. Lenora had previously so testified at the preliminary hearing, at which time defense counsel made no attempt to assert the privilege, because it does not exist in a criminal proceeding where one spouse is charged with committing a crime against the other (see infra, §194). Because the charge resulting from the beating was dismissed before defendant's murder trial, defendant claimed that his statements during that incident should have been afforded the privilege at trial. Held, the statements were properly admitted.

(a) "Once disclosed during Lenora's testimony at the preliminary hearing, the statements lost their confidential character. ... The reason for the privilege--to encourage confidences between spouses for the benefit of the marital relationship--ceased to operate when confidentiality was lost." (233 C.A.3d 437.)

(b) "We doubt, too, whether the statements assumed the mantle of confidentiality when they were first made, inasmuch as defendant, in abusing Lenora, abused the relationship on which the privilege is predicated." (233 C.A.3d 438.)

(c) "Our conclusion that defendant's statements to his wife lost their confidentiality in her preliminary hearing testimony makes it unnecessary to address another rationale for admission ... : that the statements were not intended to be confidential when made, due to the presence of Clarice Johnson somewhere in the home at the time when defendant was assaulting Lenora and making the statements. We merely note that although California law recognizes no privilege for marital communications 'in the hands of a third party,' such as an eavesdropper ... we have identified no case holding that a mere possibility that the third party listened to the communication, absent any showing that the spouse is aware that the third party may be able to overhear, suffices to overcome the privilege." (233 C.A.3d 438.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

V. HUSBAND-WIFE PRIVILEGE

B. Privilege for Confidential Marital Communications.

3. Exceptions to the Privilege.

a. Civil Proceedings.

[§ 193] Civil Proceedings.

Ev.C. 982 et seq. establish exceptions to the communications privilege similar to those established by Ev.C. 972 for the relationship privilege (supra, §178 et seq.):

(1) Proceeding Between Spouses. There is no privilege in:

(a) A proceeding by or on behalf of one spouse against the other. (Ev.C. 984(a).)

(b) A proceeding between a surviving spouse and one who claims through the deceased spouse, regardless of whether the claim is by testate or intestate succession or by an inter vivos transaction. (Ev.C. 984(b); see Estate of Gillett (1946) 73 C.A.2d 588, 594, 166 P.2d 870.)

(2) Commitment Proceeding. There is no privilege in "a proceeding to commit either spouse or otherwise place him or his property, or both, under the control of another because of his alleged mental or physical condition." (Ev.C. 982.)

(3) Competency Proceeding. There is no privilege in "a proceeding brought by or on behalf of either spouse to establish his competence." (Ev.C. 983.)

As to the last two exceptions, the Law Revision Commission Comment to Ev.C. 982 states: "Commitment and competency proceedings are undertaken for the benefit of the subject person. Frequently, much or all of the evidence bearing on a spouse's competency or lack of competency will consist of communications to the other spouse. It would be undesirable to permit either spouse to invoke a privilege to prevent the presentation of this vital information inasmuch as those proceedings are of such vital importance both to society and to the spouse who is the subject of the proceedings."

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

V. HUSBAND-WIFE PRIVILEGE

B. Privilege for Confidential Marital Communications.

3. Exceptions to the Privilege.

b. Criminal Proceedings.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 194

[§ 194] Criminal Proceedings.

(1) Statutory List. The principal exceptions for criminal proceedings are set forth in Ev.C. 985 (on comparable exception for relationship privilege, see Ev.C. 972(e), supra, §§181, 182). There is no privilege in a criminal proceeding in which one spouse is charged with:

(a) A crime committed at any time against the person or property of the other spouse or of a child of either spouse. (Ev.C. 985(a); see People v. Johnson (1991) 233 C.A.3d 425, 437, 284 C.R. 579, supra, §192.)

(b) A crime, committed at any time against the person or property of a third person, that is committed during a crime against the person or property of the other spouse. (Ev.C. 985(b).)

(c) Bigamy. (Ev.C. 985(c).)

(d) A crime defined by P.C. 270 (nonsupport of child) or P.C. 270a (nonsupport of spouse). (Ev.C. 985(d); P.C. 270e.)

The argument that Ev.C. 985 does not apply to communications made after commission of a crime and institution of criminal proceedings was summarily rejected in People v. Daniels (1969) 1 C.A.3d 367, 377, 81 C.R. 675.

(2) Crime Committed Against Adult Child. In People v. McGraw (1983) 141 C.A.3d 618, 190 C.R. 461, defendant was convicted of the murder of his stepson, aged 22. He contended that the word "child" means a minor, i.e., a person under 18; hence, the trial judge erroneously allowed his wife, mother of the child, to testify to his inculpatory statements made to her after the killing. Held, the evidence was not privileged. No light is shed on the meaning of "child" in the Law Revision Commission Report, Model Code, or the Uniform Rules of Evidence; the word was never interpreted in former P.C. 1322; and none of the commentators have discussed its meaning. (141 C.A.3d 621, and footnote 5.) However, statutes must be given a reasonable construction that leads to a wise policy and avoids absurd results. Using this approach: (a) The word "child" connotes a family relationship without any age limitations; the Legislature has used the word "minor" when it meant a minor child. (b) The purpose of the marital communications privilege is to preserve confidence and marital harmony; and such harmony would be nonexistent in criminal actions where a child of either spouse is the victim. "A parent is no less outraged, and marital harmony is no less obliterated because the child who was murdered was past his 18th birthday." (141 C.A.3d 622.)

(3) Threats Against Third Persons. In People v. Carter (1973) 34 C.A.3d 748, 110 C.R. 324, defendant followed his estranged wife to Chicago, where he assaulted her and demanded to know who had helped her get away from him. On learning that neighbors had provided the help, he said, "I'm going to kill them all." He then returned to Los Angeles and murdered the victim. At his trial, his wife testified about his threat. Held, no error. Although Ev.C. 985 does not include this type of statement, the exceptions listed are germane to a consideration of whether the statement was given in confidence. (34 C.A.3d 752.) And the policy considerations (preserving confidence and tranquility of marital relationship) "would not be served by shielding as confidential and privileged threats against third persons made by one spouse in the course of criminally victimizing the other spouse." (34 C.A.3d 753.)

(4) Defendant's Right To Testify to Communication From Spouse. The original Uniform Rules of Evidence introduced an innovation, giving the defendant in a criminal case the right to testify on his or her own behalf to a relevant communication from the defendant's spouse which might aid in the defendant's defense. (See also Model C., Rule 216, Comment; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2338.)

Ev.C. 987 adopted this exception: There is no privilege where "the communication is offered in evidence by a defendant who is one of the spouses between whom the communication was made." As the Law Revision Commission Comment states, the defendant's spouse or former spouse should not be privileged to withhold evidence material to the defendant's defense.

V. HUSBAND-WIFE PRIVILEGE

B. Privilege for Confidential Marital Communications.

3. Exceptions to the Privilege.

c. Other Exceptions.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 195

[§ 195] Other Exceptions.

(1) Juvenile Court Proceeding. Ev.C. 986 parallels the exception in Ev.C. 972(d), supra, §177.

(2) Aiding Crime or Fraud. Ev.C. 981 introduces an exception to the marital communications privilege which is also recognized in somewhat different form in connection with other privileges (see supra, §153 et seq.; infra, §§207, 223): There is no privilege "if the communication was made, in whole or in part, to enable or aid anyone to commit or plan to commit a crime or a fraud."

The limited nature of this exception is stressed in the Law Revision Commission Comment to Ev.C. 981: "It does not permit disclosure of communications that merely reveal a plan to commit a crime or fraud; it permits disclosure only of communications made to enable or aid anyone to commit or plan to commit a crime or fraud. Thus, unless the communication is for the purpose of obtaining assistance in the commission of the crime or fraud or in furtherance thereof, it is not made admissible by the exception provided in this section." (See People v. Dorsey (1975) 46 C.A.3d 706, 718, 120 C.R. 508 [wife could properly testify about communications which defendant husband made to third person, giving instructions during commission or attempted commission of crime, but could not testify about husband's statements to wife alone when they were not made to enable him to commit or plan crime]; People v. Von Villas (1992) 11 C.A.4th 175, 222, 15 C.R.2d 112 [jailhouse conversation between defendant and wife was not privileged where defendant's statements could be construed as attempt to obstruct justice]; 62 A.L.R.4th 1134 [communications between spouses as to joint participation in crime].)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

VI. PHYSICIAN-PATIENT PRIVILEGE

A. General Principles.

1. Nature of Privilege.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 196

[§ 196] Nature of Privilege.

(1) Statutory Basis. Unlike the typical privileges of husband-wife and attorney-client, the doctor-patient privilege did not exist at common law. It was established by statute in about half of the states, and was made a part of the original Code of Civil Procedure. (See Unif. Rules, Rule 503; Kramer v. Policy Holders' Life Ins. Assn. (1935) 5 C.A.2d 380, 384, 42 P.2d 665; 1 McCormick 5th, §98 et seq.; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2380; C.E.B., Jefferson, 2 California Evidence Benchbook 3d, Chap. 37; C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Discovery §4.53 et seq.; 98 Harv. L. Rev. 1532; 9 So. Cal. L. Rev. 149; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §436; 45 Proof of Facts 2d 595 [establishing privilege])

California's former brief statute (C.C.P. 1881(4)) was replaced by the more detailed Ev.C. 994. That statute provides that a patient, whether or not a party, has a privilege to refuse to disclose, and to prevent another from disclosing, a confidential communication between the patient and his or her physician. The privilege may be claimed only by one of the following:

(a) The holder of the privilege. (Ev.C. 994(a).)

(b) A person authorized by the holder of the privilege to claim it. (Ev.C. 994(b).)

(c) The physician at the time of the confidential communication. However, that physician may not claim the privilege if there is no holder of the privilege in existence, or if the physician is otherwise instructed by a person authorized to permit disclosure. (Ev.C. 994(c).)

(2) Scope of Privilege. The privilege only arises out of the relationship of physician and patient. Thus, a doctor who performs an autopsy must testify, for the dead man is not a patient. (Harrison v. Sutter Street Ry. Co. (1897) 116 C. 156, 166, 47 P. 1019; see 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2382.) (On privilege of medical corporation, see infra, §198; on person authorized to claim privilege by holder of privilege, see Rudnick v. Superior Court (1974) 11 C.3d 924, 932, 114 C.R. 603, 523 P.2d 643, infra, §200; on whether action for damages may be brought by patient against physician who wrongfully discloses privileged information outside courtroom, see 79 Harv. L. Rev. 1723; 1967 A.S. 123; on extension of privilege to alternative health practitioners, see 48 Hastings L. J. 633.)

Like the lawyer-client privilege, this one is protected against eavesdroppers or other interceptors (Ev.C. 994; see supra, §66); but it must be claimed by an authorized person (Ev.C. 994), and it may be waived (Ev.C. 912, supra, §67). Also, the physician must claim the privilege when present and not instructed otherwise. (Ev.C. 995; see similar Ev.C.

955 [lawyer-client, supra, §§98, 104].)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

VI. PHYSICIAN-PATIENT PRIVILEGE

A. General Principles.

2. Liberal or Strict Construction.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 197

[§ 197] Liberal or Strict Construction.

The policy of the physician-patient privilege is similar to that underlying the lawyer-client privilege: to encourage free disclosure by the patient of facts which may aid in the treatment of his or her illness or injury or the maintenance of his or her general health. (See McRae v. Erickson (1905) 1 C.A. 326, 331, 82 P. 209; 1 McCormick 5th, §98; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2380a.) To promote this policy, some cases declare a rule of liberal construction and application. (See McRae v. Erickson, supra; Kramer v. Policy Holders' Life Ins. Assn. (1935) 5 C.A.2d 380, 385, 394, 42 P.2d 665; Turner v. Redwood Mut. Life Assn. (1936) 13 C.A.2d 573, 576, 57 P.2d 222; Carlton v. Superior Court (1968) 261 C.A.2d 282, 289, 67 C.R. 568; Marcus v. Superior Court (1971) 18 C.A.3d 22, 95 C.R. 545, infra, §202.)

Other authorities take the opposite position and recommend abolition or drastic restriction of the privilege. (See 1 McCormick 5th, §§98, 105; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2380a; 47 Cal. L. Rev. 783; 2 Hastings L. J. 38; 16 Pacific L. J. 787; 9 So. Cal. L. Rev. 149; 25 So. Cal. L. Rev. 238; 8 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 625; 1983 A.S. 193.)

Nevertheless, both the Model Code (Rules 220, 221, 223) and the Uniform Rules of Evidence (Rule 503) include the privilege, and the Evidence Code restates it without undue restrictions (supra, §196).

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

VI. PHYSICIAN-PATIENT PRIVILEGE B. Physician Licensed or Believed Licensed.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 198

[§ 198] Physician Licensed or Believed Licensed.

(1) In General: Reasonable Belief. California's former statute referred expressly to a "licensed physician or surgeon," and did not apply to unlicensed persons. (See Estate of Mossman (1931) 119 C.A. 404, 406, 6 P.2d 576 [Christian Science practitioner]; 1 McCormick 5th, §99; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2382.)

Ev.C. 990 makes the same provision for reasonable belief as the Code does for lawyers (supra, §102): "Physician" means a person authorized "or reasonably believed by the patient to be authorized, to practice medicine in any state or nation." The Law Revision Commission Comment states: "[I]f this privilege is to be recognized, it should protect the patient from reasonable mistakes as to unlicensed practitioners. The privilege also should be applicable to communications made to a physician authorized to practice in any state or nation. When a California resident travels outside the State and has occasion to visit a physician during such travel, or when a physician from another state or nation participates in the treatment of a person in California, the patient should be entitled to assume that his communications will be given as much protection as they would be if he consulted a California physician in California. A patient should not be forced to inquire about the jurisdictions where the physician is authorized to practice medicine and whether such jurisdictions recognize the physician-patient privilege before he may safely communicate with the physician." (See similar Unif. Rule 503(a)(2).)

(2) Medical Corporations. A 1968 amendment to Ev.C. 994 had the practical effect of expanding the definition of "physician" to include a medical corporation and its physician employees and a 1980 amendment added podiatry corporations. The section now provides as follows:

(a) The "relationship of a physician and patient" (see Ev.C. 992, infra, §§202, 203) exists between a medical or podiatry corporation as defined in the Medical Practice Act and the patient to whom it renders professional services, as well as between such patients and the corporation's physician employees.

(b) The "person" entitled to claim the privilege as "physician" (Ev.C. 994(c), supra, §196) "includes partnerships, corporations, limited liability companies, associations, and other groups and entities."

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

VI. PHYSICIAN-PATIENT PRIVILEGE

C. Holder of the Privilege.

1. Patient, Representative, or Successor.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 199

[§ 199] Patient, Representative, or Successor.

Ev.C. 993, defining "holder of the privilege," states rules similar to those in Ev.C. 953 (lawyer-client, supra, §104 et seq.):

(1) Patient. Normally, the patient is the holder. (Ev.C. 993(a).) If the patient, with an opportunity to claim the privilege, does not do so, the physician cannot assert it. (See San Francisco v. Superior Court (1951) 37 C.2d 227, 233, 231 P.2d 26; 1 McCormick 5th, §102; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2386; 20 Cal. L. Rev. 307; 67 Harv. L. Rev. 1273; 1955 A.S. 641 [doctor may invoke it for patient confined in mental hospital]; on duty of physician to claim privilege on client's behalf, see Ev.C. 995, supra, §196.)

(2) Guardian or Conservator. The guardian or conservator is the holder where the patient is under guardianship or conservatorship. (Ev.C. 993(b).) If the patient has separate guardians of his or her estate and person, either guardian may claim it. (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 993.)

(3) Personal Representative. The personal representative is the holder if the patient is dead. (Ev.C. 993(c); see Rittenhouse v. Superior Court (1991) 235 C.A.3d 1584, 1588, 1590, 1 C.R.2d 595; Hale v. Superior Court (1994) 28 C.A.4th 1421, 1423, 1424, 34 C.R.2d 279 [citing Rittenhouse; estate of deceased defendant was holder of privilege and could freely communicate with her doctors, even though when they treated decedent in hospital she could not communicate with them]; 8 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 627, 630; 97 A.L.R.2d 393 [who may waive privilege of confidential communication to physician by person since deceased].) The personal representative may waive the privilege in the interest of the estate; and after final distribution and discharge the privilege terminates. (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 993.)

(4) Distinction: Mother's Assertion of Child's Privilege in Dependency Proceeding. In re Troy D. (1989) 215 C.A.3d 889, 263 C.R. 869, involved a proceeding to declare Troy D. a dependent child of the juvenile court, on the basis that he was born under the influence of harmful drugs. Evidence of the mother's and son's medical records was offered, and the mother contended that this was a violation of the physician-patient privilege. In upholding admissibility, the court took the position that the mother was not entitled to invoke the privilege as to the son's medical records. "Under ordinary circumstances, it would be reasonable for a parent to be able to assert the privilege on behalf of his child. ... But we question the appropriateness of Mother asserting a privilege to prevent the disclosure of Troy's medical records during his dependency hearing when his and her interests are potentially conflicting. ... We see no legitimate public policy being served by allowing Mother to prevent disclosure. ... Troy was represented by counsel at the jurisdictional hearing, and his attorney made no objection to admitting his medical records." (215 C.A.3d 900.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Patient. See Johnson v. Superior Court (2000) 80 C.A.4th 1050, 1063, 95 C.R.2d 864 [in action by parents and their child against sperm bank arising from alleged transmission of kidney disease to child from sperm donor, donor could not rely on physician-patient privilege to resist discovery of his personal information; he had visited bank with sole purpose of selling sperm and thus was not patient within meaning of privilege]; 1 McCormick 6th, §102; 31 *Golden Gate L. ## CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

VI. PHYSICIAN-PATIENT PRIVILEGE

C. Holder of the Privilege.

2. Third-Party Recipient of Communication.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 200

[§ 200] Third-Party Recipient of Communication.

In Henard v. Superior Court (1972) 26 C.A.3d 129, 102 C.R. 721, plaintiff allegedly suffered a cerebral thrombosis as a side effect of using an oral contraceptive tablet manufactured by defendants. Her personal injury complaint alleged that defendants should have anticipated this complication. After obtaining copies of drug reaction reports which defendants had received from doctors (identified only by initials) who previously prescribed the drug, plaintiff requested the doctors' names and addresses. Defendants contended that the reports were based on confidential information acquired by the doctors from their patients (see infra, §§202, 203), and that they (defendants) could invoke the privilege on behalf of the doctors. Held, mandamus granted to compel defendants to answer plaintiff's interrogatories. "The confidential information has already been disclosed to petitioners and, if anything, it is the patient's identity, not the doctor's identity, that needs protection. However, it is conceivable that petitioners, if permitted to interview the doctors, will obtain information relevant to their lawsuit other than the names of the patients; what, if any, warnings or cautionary instructions the doctors may have received on the propensities of 'Norinyl' to cause blood clots is a good example. It is also conceivable that some patients will not object to the disclosure of their identities; and for patients who wish to remain anonymous, the privilege can be effectively asserted by the doctor if and when he is interviewed." (26 C.A.3d 133.)

In Rudnick v. Superior Court (1974) 11 C.3d 924, 114 C.R. 603, 523 P.2d 643, the trial judge, relying on Henard, ordered defendants, the manufacturers, producers and marketers of a drug, to produce the names and addresses of doctors who had submitted drug reaction reports to them; but he denied plaintiff's request that the reports be produced in full. Held, mandamus issued, with directions to the judge to reconsider his ruling in accordance with guidelines set forth for the "novel question" of whether a third-party recipient of confidential information from a physician may assert the physician-patient privilege.

(a) Implied authorization by patients. Because defendants were not expressly authorized to claim the privilege by the patients mentioned in the doctors' reports, the issue is whether the patients impliedly authorized defendants to do so. The contents of the reports were confidential communications between the patients and their physicians at the time the information was communicated to or ascertained by the physicians, and remain confidential unless the patients waive the privilege. "As a result we are concerned solely with the effect of the disclosure of this privileged material by the respective physicians to defendants." (11 C.3d 930.)

patient, such disclosure even if consented to by the patient would not constitute a waiver of the privilege." (11 C.3d 930.)

(c) Third person as holder of privilege where necessary to accomplish purpose for which physician was consulted. "We therefore hold that a disclosure in confidence by a physician, with or without the consent of the patient, of communications protected by the physician-patient privilege to a third person to whom disclosure is reasonably necessary for the accomplishment of the purpose for which the physician is consulted confers upon the third person the right to claim the physician-patient privilege on behalf of the patient. In other words, that third person thereby becomes '[a] person who is authorized to claim the privilege by the holder of the privilege' within the meaning of section 994." (11 C.3d 932; see supra, §196.)

(d) Where disclosure not necessary to accomplish desired purpose. But if disclosure is not necessary to accomplish the desired purpose, three situations ensue.

(1) If the patient expressly or impliedly consents to disclosure, the patient has waived the privilege and the communications are subject to discovery. (11 C.3d 932.)

(2) If the patient does not consent by word or deed to disclosure, the patient has not waived the privilege. "Thus if the patient is a party to the court proceeding he may claim the privilege to prevent disclosure in court by such third person of the confidential communications between patient and physician disclosed by the physician without the patient's consent. If the patient is not a party to the court proceedings, the appropriate court, in its discretion and on its own motion, may protect an absentee holder of the privilege who has not waived it." (11 C.3d 932.)

(3) The third party to whom the confidential communication was disclosed, however, may not claim the privilege. "Where the disclosure to the third party is not reasonably necessary to accomplish the purpose for which the physician was consulted, there is nothing in the Evidence Code, its history or interpretation, or in reason, to warrant the conclusion that such unconsented-to disclosure to a third person makes the latter 'a person who is authorized to claim the privilege by the holder of the privilege' within the meaning of section 994. Therefore, the decision to deny admission of confidential information so disclosed in order to protect the absentee holder of the privilege lies within the discretion of the court." (11 C.3d 933.)

Subsequent cases have applied the Rudnick test. (See Blue Cross v. Superior Court (1976) 61 C.A.3d 798, 801, 132 C.R. 635 [upholding privilege for claim files of prepaid health care plan]; Board of Med. Quality Assur. v. Gherardini (1979) 93 C.A.3d 669, 675, 679, 156 C.R. 55 [hospital could assert its patients' privileges against production of its records (citing Rudnick); constitutional right of privacy also provided proper basis for denial of investigative subpoenas]; Pating v. Board of Med. Quality Assur. (1982) 130 C.A.3d 608, 618, 182 C.R. 20 [Gherardini rule, requiring good cause for production of medical records, and further requiring showing that request for records can be granted without violating right of privacy, held nonretroactive].) (For Confidentiality of Medical Information Act (C.C. 56 et seq.), restricting third persons' acquisition and disclosure of information, see infra, §518 et seq.)

VI. PHYSICIAN-PATIENT PRIVILEGE

D. Confidential Communication.

1. In Course of Relationship.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 201

[§ 201] In Course of Relationship.

(1) Creation of Relationship. The relationship of doctor and patient is established for the purpose of the privilege when a person "consults" a physician or "submits to an examination" by a physician. (Ev.C. 991; see 1 McCormick 5th, §99; 46 Proof of Facts 2d 373 [Existence of Physician and Patient Relationship].) The relationship does not depend on contract, nor is it necessary that the patient either call or pay the doctor. (Kramer v. Policy Holders' Life Ins. Assn. (1935) 5 C.A.2d 380, 386, 42 P.2d 665; Carlton v. Superior Court (1968) 261 C.A.2d 282, 288, 67 C.R. 568 [established between defendant and physicians at community hospital to which he was taken in an ambulance after accident].)

Ev.C. 991 abandoned this limitation, and covers consultation or examination "for the purpose of securing a diagnosis or preventive, palliative, or curative treatment of his physical or mental or emotional condition." As the Law Revision Commission Comment points out: "Persons do not ordinarily consult physicians from idle curiosity. ... They may seek diagnosis from one physician to check the diagnosis made by another. They may seek diagnosis from one physician in contemplation of seeking treatment from another. Communications made under such circumstances are as deserving of protection as are communications made to a treating physician."

In Kizer v. Sulnick (1988) 202 C.A.3d 431, 248 C.R. 712 (supra, §149), the court made the following distinction between participation in a public health study and private consultation with one's physician: "While the exceedingly brief description of the health effects study in the record before us suggests that participation by the Casmalia residents might constitute consultation with a physician, there is no evidence that the purpose of this communication was to obtain a diagnosis of the subjects' condition. It appears more likely that the purpose was to determine whether a statistically significant portion of the residents of Casmalia shared similar medical complaints in order to determine whether the presence of the waste facility was the cause of these symptoms. Participation in such a group study does not invoke the same considerations of confidentiality as an individual's communication with his or her doctor." (202 C.A.3d 439.)

(3) Reasonable Belief of Patient. In Kramer v. Policy Holders' Life Ins. Assn., supra, the court held the privilege applicable where the patient was justified in believing that he was giving information necessary to diagnosis or treatment, even though the doctor was there simply as a scientific observer for a medical foundation to study the effects of a cancer treatment administered by other doctors. (5 C.A.2d 384.) The Evidence Code does not directly deal with this situation, but perhaps Ev.C. 990, on reasonable belief that the physician is authorized to practice (supra, §198), can be stretched to cover reasonable belief that the particular doctor is acting as a physician.

Frederick v. Federal Life Ins. Co. (1936) 13 C.A.2d 585, 590, 57 P.2d 235, held that the privilege did not apply to interns taking the history of a patient for hospital records. (See criticism, 25 Cal. L. Rev. 108; and see 14 So. Cal. L. Rev. 108, 110.) Either under the more liberal Kramer holding or the statutory language, such communications ought to be privileged.

VI. PHYSICIAN-PATIENT PRIVILEGE

D. Confidential Communication.

2. Confidential Information.

a. Information Transmitted or Obtained.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 202

[§ 202] Information Transmitted or Obtained.

(1) In General. California's prior statute and the Evidence Code cover information acquired or obtained as well as communications (see infra, §203). Thus, Ev.C. 992 defines "confidential communication" as "information, including information obtained by an examination of the patient, transmitted between a patient and his physician in the course of that relationship." And it includes "a diagnosis made and the advice given by the physician in the course of that relationship." (See Torres v. Superior Court (1990) 221 C.A.3d 181, 185, 270 C.R. 401 [specialist who examined plaintiff's test results could testify for defendants in suit brought 6 years later for negligence during surgery, because information requested was not part of confidential communications with plaintiff]; Hale v. Superior Court (1994) 28 C.A.4th 1421, 1424, 34 C.R.2d 279 [deceased defendant's inability to communicate with treating physicians shortly before her death did not defeat exercise of privilege by her estate, because statute protects information obtained by examination of patient].) (On protection of hospital records, see Confidentiality of Medical Information Act (C.C. 56 et seq.), infra, §518 et seq.; on observations of patient's mental condition, see 100 A.L.R.2d 648.)

(2) Names of Other Patients. In actions against doctors for medical malpractice, or against drug manufacturers, the plaintiffs often seek discovery of the names of other patients who were given similar treatment or who took the same drug. If the disclosure of the patient's name reveals nothing of any confidential communication concerning his or her ailments, there is no violation of the privilege; but if such disclosure does include confidential information concerning the patient's ailments, it is privileged. (See Marcus v. Superior Court (1971) 18 C.A.3d 22, 25, 95 C.R. 545 [privileged: "it is not merely the disclosure of the name and address, but the joining of that information with the limitation in the question that these were patients who had received the specified tests"]; Rudnick v. Superior Court (1974) 11 C.3d 924, 933, footnote 13, 114 C.R. 603, 523 P.2d 643, supra, §200; 67 Harv. L. Rev. 1272; 66 A.L.R.5th 591.)

(3) Photographs of Patient's Body. In Binder v. Superior Court (1987) 196 C.A.3d 893, 242 C.R. 231, an action for wrongful death based on medical negligence, defendant dermatologist was ordered by the trial judge to produce all photographs in his possession "depicting a lesion suspected or diagnosed as melanoma." Pursuant to his customary practice, defendant had photographs taken of all skin lesions on his more than 25,000 patients. The photographs were "for a general frame of reference," were not intended to be diagnostic, and were not indexed by diagnosis. Held, compelling disclosure would violate the physician-patient privilege.

(a) The photographs constitute "confidential communications" within the express meaning of Ev.C. 992. They were taken in conjunction with and as part of defendant's examination of his patients, strictly in the course of the physician-patient relationship, and both defendant and the patient understood the photographs would not be disclosed except as reasonably necessary for the patient's treatment. (196 C.A.3d 897.)

(b) Disclosure of the subject photographs would subvert the objectives of the physician-patient privilege. It would shock and humiliate present and former patients to learn that pictures of their bodies and ailments would be turned over to strangers, whether or not their identities are disclosed. Dictum in Rudnick v. Superior Court, supra, to the effect that disclosure of ailments without disclosure of the patient's identity is not within the physician-patient privilege is inapplicable to this case. "[I]t is one thing to have a description of one's ailment read, but quite another to have that ailment actually depicted in a photograph." (196 C.A.3d 899.)

(c) Furthermore, Rudnik did not consider the effect of disclosure on the second purpose of the privilege, which is to encourage full disclosure by patients. Many physicians regularly take pictures of their patient's disease processes in order to follow the disease's progress or the effect of treatment. "In our view, a rule compelling disclosure of patient photographs would discourage patients from allowing physicians to photograph their ailments or other conditions." (196 C.A.3d 899.)

(d) Disclosure of the pictures would also violate defendant's patient's right of privacy as guaranteed by Cal. Const., Art. I, §1 (see 7 Summary (9th), Constitutional Law, §454 et seq.), which defendant as custodian of the pictures has a duty to assert. As medical records, the pictures are protected by this right of privacy. They may be disclosed after a "careful balancing" of the "compelling public need" against this right, but only if they are directly relevant to issues in the lawsuit. Plaintiffs have not shown this direct relevance. (196 C.A.3d 899.)

Ev.C. 992 further describes the confidentiality requirement in the same terms as Ev.C. 952 does for the lawyer-client privilege: The information must be transmitted "in confidence by a means which, so far as the patient is aware, discloses the information to no third persons other than those who are present to further the interest of the patient in the consultation or those to whom disclosure is reasonably necessary for the transmission of the information or the accomplishment of the purpose for which the physician is consulted." ## VI. PHYSICIAN-PATIENT PRIVILEGE

E. Exceptions to the Privilege.

1. Patient-Litigant.

a. Issue Tendered by Patient.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 204

[§ 204] Issue Tendered by Patient.

(1) Background and Nature of Exception. California's former statute provided an exception where the patient brought an action for damages for personal injuries. As the court said in San Francisco v. Superior Court (1951) 37 C.2d 227, 232, 231 P.2d 26: "The whole purpose of the privilege is to preclude the humiliation of the patient that might follow disclosure of his ailments. When the patient himself discloses those ailments by bringing an action in which they are in issue, there is no longer any reason for the privilege. The patient-litigant exception precludes one who has placed in issue his physical condition from invoking the privilege on the ground that disclosure of his condition would cause him humiliation. He cannot have his cake and eat it too." (See Kizer v. Sulnick (1988) 202 C.A.3d 431, 439, 248 C.R. 712, supra, §§149, 201 [following San Francisco v. Superior Court]; 1 McCormick 5th, §103; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2389; 25 So. Cal. L. Rev. 237; 25 A.L.R.2d 1429 [construction and effect of statute removing or modifying, in personal injury action, patient's privilege against disclosure by physician]; Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 996.) The same result was reached by judicial decision where an inmate of a state medical facility petitioned for habeas corpus. (See In re Cathey (1961) 55 C.2d 679, 691, 12 C.R. 762, 361 P.2d 426.)

(2) Evidence Code. Ev.C. 996(a) extends the theory of our former statute and rule into a broad exception applicable to any kind of proceeding in which the patient--whether plaintiff, defendant, petitioner, etc.--tenders the issue of his or her condition: A communication relevant to that issue is not privileged. (See also Ev.C. 1005, infra, §206 [issue of mental competence].)

An action by a patient is a waiver not only for trial, but also for discovery proceedings. (See In re Lifschutz (1970) 2 C.3d 415, 85 C.R. 829, 467 P.2d 557, infra, §224 [limited waiver as to psychiatric treatment]; 21 A.L.R.3d 921 [commencing action involving physical condition of plaintiff or decedent as waiving physician-patient privilege as to discovery proceedings]; 50 A.L.R.4th 714 [on whether defense counsel may interview injured plaintiff's treating physician ex parte on theory of waiver of privilege].) But even though a medical privilege (e.g., psychotherapist-patient) has been waived, an attorney-client privilege may remain. (See People v. Lines (1975) 13 C.3d 500, 119 C.R. 225, 531 P.2d 793, infra, §237.) And an action by a patient against one physician does not necessarily waive the privilege as to a communication with the defendant's associate. (See Heller v. Norcal Mut. Ins. Co. (1994) 8 C.4th 30, 44, footnote 5, 32 C.R.2d 200, 876 P.2d 999, infra, §520.)

Issues are ordinarily tendered by an allegation, e.g., in a complaint. A defendant's denial is merely a joinder in issue, and the defendant patient does not lose his or her privilege. (Carlton v. Superior Court (1968) 261 C.A.2d 282, 289, 67 C.R. 568; see Koshman v. Superior Court (1980) 111 C.A.3d 294, 298, 168 C.R. 558 [father sought modification of child custody order and served subpoena duces tecum on custodian of mother's medical records; wife, who did not tender her medical condition as an issue, could claim privilege]; Simek v. Superior Court (1981) 117 C.A.3d 169, 175, 176, 172 C.R. 564 [Koshman followed in case involving visitation rights].)

VI. PHYSICIAN-PATIENT PRIVILEGE

E. Exceptions to the Privilege.

1. Patient-Litigant.

b. Issue Tendered by Others.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 205

[§ 205] Issue Tendered by Others.

The theory of the exception is equally applicable in several situations where the issue of the patient's condition is involved, even though the patient is not an actual party to the action. Ev.C. 996 covers these in three subdivisions, excluding the privilege where the issue has been tendered by any of the following:

(1) A party claiming through or under the patient. (Ev.C. 996(b).)

(2) Any party claiming as a beneficiary of the patient through a contract to which the patient is or was a party. (Ev.C. 996(c).)

(3) The plaintiff in an action brought under C.C.P. 376 (action by parents of injured child) or C.C.P. 377.60 et seq. (wrongful death action) for damages for the injury or death of the patient. (Ev.C. 996(c).)

In Palay v. Superior Court (1993) 18 C.A.4th 919, 22 C.R.2d 839, plaintiff brought a medical malpractice action as guardian ad litem on behalf of her child, and asserted the physician-patient privilege as to her prenatal medical records. The trial judge ordered production of the records. Held, the records were not privileged.

(a) The child himself waived the privilege by filing the action. In view of this waiver and the doctrine of inseparability, under which the prenatal records were shared records belonging to both the child and the mother, the mother could not assert the privilege even though she was not a party to the action but appeared only as the child's guardian ad litem. (18 C.A.4th 927, 928.)

(b) Discovery of the records was not precluded by the constitutional right of privacy (7 Summary (9th), Constitutional Law, §454 et seq.). Defendants had an interest in the records, which were material to issues in the case, and they had no other means of obtaining the needed information. Thus, their legitimate interest in preparing their defense outweighed the mother's privacy rights. (18 C.A.4th 933, 934.) (See Jones v. Superior Court (1981) 119 C.A.3d 534, 174 C.R. 148, supra, §75 and infra, §209 [Ev.C. 996(b), (c) did not apply to drug liability case based on ingestion of DES by plaintiff's mother during her pregnancy].)

VI. PHYSICIAN-PATIENT PRIVILEGE

E. Exceptions to the Privilege.

2. Criminal, Disciplinary, and Competency Proceedings.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 206

[§ 206] Criminal, Disciplinary, and Competency Proceedings.

The privilege is excluded in several kinds of proceedings in which its recognition would not serve a justifiable purpose.

(1) Criminal Proceedings. There is no privilege in "a criminal proceeding." (Ev.C. 998; see People v. Lane (1894) 101 C. 513, 516, 36 P. 16; People v. Combes (1961) 56 C.2d 135, 149, 14 C.R. 4, 363 P.2d 4; 7 A.L.R.3d 1458 [excepted criminal proceedings in general]; 44 A.L.R.4th 649 [exception for proceedings relating to child abuse or neglect].)

(2) Disciplinary Proceedings. There is no privilege in "a proceeding brought by a public entity to determine whether a right, authority, license, or privilege (including the right or privilege to be employed by the public entity or to hold a public office) should be revoked, suspended, terminated, limited, or conditioned." (Ev.C. 1007.) This innovation applies to those administrative proceedings which, though classified as civil, are "quasi-criminal" in effect, and are properly subject to the rule governing criminal proceedings. (See Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1007.)

(3) Commitment and Other Proceedings Involving Competency. Another innovation, derived from the original Uniform Rules of Evidence, eliminates the privilege in "a proceeding to commit the patient or otherwise place him or his property, or both, under the control of another because of his alleged mental or physical condition." (Ev.C. 1004.) This covers commitments of persons mentally ill and also appointment of a conservator under Prob.C. 1801. As the Law Revision Commission Comment observes, these proceedings are conducted for the benefit of the patient, and "he should not have a privilege to withhold evidence that the court needs in order to act properly for his welfare."

A similar exception applies to a proceeding brought "by or on behalf of the patient" to establish his or her competence. (Ev.C. 1005.)

(4) Medi-Cal Fraud Investigation. Where a physician is suspected of Medi-Cal fraud and patient files are seized from the physician's office pursuant to a search warrant, "the disclosure and reporting provisions of the Medi-Cal program restrict, and may invalidate, [the physician's] right to assert the privilege on behalf of his patients." (Brillantes v. Superior Court (1996) 51 C.A.4th 323, 339, 58 C.R.2d 770, 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, §86.)

VI. PHYSICIAN-PATIENT PRIVILEGE

E. Exceptions to the Privilege.

3. Contemplated or Committed Crime or Tort.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 207

[§ 207] Contemplated or Committed Crime or Tort.

The same policy which justifies an exception to the lawyer-client privilege (supra, §153 et seq.) applies to the physician-patient privilege, and it is stated in Ev.C. 997. (See similar Model C., Rule 222, Comment; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2385; but see Unif. Rules, Rule 503 [no crime or tort exception to physician-patient privilege].)

But the two provisions differ in scope. As pointed out above, there are dangers in nullifying the privilege when a client consults a lawyer on matters which might ultimately involve liability in tort; hence, the lawyer-client exception is phrased in the more limited form of crime "or fraud." (See supra, §154.) There is no need, however, to protect such discussions with a physician; thus, Ev.C. 997 refers to any tort: There is no privilege "if the services of the physician were sought or obtained to enable or aid anyone to commit or plan to commit a crime or a tort or to escape detection or apprehension after the commission of a crime or a tort."

E. Exceptions to the Privilege.

4. Damage Suit: Good Cause for Disclosure.
a. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 208

[§ 208] In General.

Ev.C. 999 originally introduced a new exception for a civil action to recover damages based on "conduct of the patient which constitutes a crime." The Law Revision Commission gave the following reason for the innovation: If the criminal trial took place first, the evidence in that trial would be admissible in a subsequent civil trial under the former testimony hearsay exception (Ev.C. 1290 et seq.; see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §259), but would not be available if the civil action were tried first. "This exception is provided, therefore, so that the same evidence is available in the civil case without regard to when the criminal case is tried." (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 999.)

But the criminal conduct exception proved to be burdensome and difficult to administer, and the section was amended in 1975 to eliminate the specific reference to criminal conduct and substitute a good cause exception. (See Law Rev. Com. Comment; 7 Pacific L. J. 337.) The amended statute reads as follows:

"There is no privilege under this article as to a communication relevant to an issue concerning the condition of the patient in a proceeding to recover damages on account of the conduct of the patient if good cause for disclosure of the communication is shown."

E. Exceptions to the Privilege.

4. Damage Suit: Good Cause for Disclosure.

b. Illustrations.

[§ 209] Illustrations.

(1) Exception Applicable. In Slagle v. Superior Court (1989) 211 C.A.3d 1309, 260 C.R. 122, plaintiff brought an action for personal injuries alleging that one defendant negligently backed her car out of a parking space and hit his car. Defendants filed an answer alleging contributory negligence and a cross-complaint for equitable contribution and indemnity. They then sought to discover plaintiff's medical records from a doctor and a hospital, asserting that the records were relevant because one defendant had overheard plaintiff tell the doctor at the hospital following the accident that he was blind 6 months prior to the accident. The trial judge ordered production of the records, and plaintiff sought relief by extraordinary writ. Held, the records were discoverable. Under the policy of liberal construction in favor of disclosure (see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §7), and in view of the legislative history of Ev.C. 999 as reflected in the comments of the Law Revision Commission (see supra, §208), "we interpret the section to include within its scope medical records of a plaintiff where the plaintiff's conduct is shown to be relevant to the issue of proximate causation if 'good cause for disclosure' is shown." (211 C.A.3d 1314.)

(2) Exception Not Applicable. In Jones v. Superior Court (1981) 119 C.A.3d 534, 174 C.R. 148, supra, §75, plaintiff sued for injuries caused by her mother's ingestion of the drug DES during pregnancy, and defendant pharmaceutical firm, invoking the exception of Ev.C. 999, sought disclosure of the mother's medical history subsequent to plaintiff's birth. Held, the exception was inapplicable. "Plaintiff in this case sues, not 'on account of the conduct of' her mother, but on account of the conduct of defendants, who are alleged to have acted wrongfully in relation to her." (119 C.A.3d 544.)

VI. PHYSICIAN-PATIENT PRIVILEGE

E. Exceptions to the Privilege.

5. Other Exceptions.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 210

[§ 210] Other Exceptions.

(1) Parties Claiming Through Deceased Patient. There is no privilege as to a communication between parties "all of whom claim through a deceased patient, regardless of whether the claims are by testate or intestate succession or by inter vivos transaction." (Ev.C. 1000, similar to Ev.C. 957 on lawyer-client, supra, §160.)

(2) Breach of Duty. There is no privilege as to a communication "relevant to an issue of breach, by the physician or the patient, of a duty arising out of the physician-patient relationship." (Ev.C. 1001, similar to Ev.C. 958 on lawyer-client, supra, §161.)

(3) Deceased Patient's Dispositive Instrument. There is no privilege as to a communication "relevant to an issue concerning the intention of a patient, now deceased, with respect to a deed of conveyance, will, or other writing, executed by the patient, purporting to affect an interest in property." (Ev.C. 1002, similar to Ev.C. 960 on lawyer-client, supra, §164.) Likewise, there is no privilege as to a communication "relevant to an issue concerning the validity of a deed of conveyance, will, or other writing, executed by a patient, now deceased, purporting to affect an interest in property." (Ev.C. 1003, similar to Ev.C. 961 on lawyer-client, supra, §164.) Both are based on prior law.

(4) Required Report. There is no privilege as to "information that the physician or the patient is required to report to a public employee, or as to information required to be recorded in a public office, if such report or record is open to public inspection." (Ev.C. 1006.) As the Law Revision Commission Comment points out, no purpose is served by preventing use of the information when the law requires it to be publicly reported. (See 85 A.L.R.3d 1196 [wound required to be reported to public authority].)

(5) Coroner's Inquiry into Decedent's Death. A coroner may enforce a subpoena or subpoena duces tecum for records of confidential communications of a decedent subject to the physician-patient privilege. (Govt.C. 27491.8; see infra, §236.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

VII. PSYCHOTHERAPIST-PATIENT PRIVILEGE

A. Nature of Privilege.

1. Former Law and Criticism.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 211

[§ 211] Former Law and Criticism.

The Psychology Certification Act of 1957, regulating the practice of psychology, created a privilege for patients of psychologists, with the scope of the lawyer-client privilege and broader than that of physician-patient. (Former B. & P.C. 2904; see People v. Spigno (1957) 156 C.A.2d 279, 289, 319 P.2d 458.) Psychiatrists had only the protection of the narrow physician-patient privilege.

Modern law recognizes the psychotherapist-patient privilege. (See Unif. Rule 503; 98 Harv. L. Rev. 1539; 49 Hastings L. J. 945 [federal common law privilege]; 49 Hastings L. J. 969 [same]; 49 Hastings L. J. 999 [The Psychotherapist Privilege and the Supreme Court's Misplaced Reliance on State Legislatures]; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §§445, 452, 484.) The California Law Revision Commission saw no rational basis for the distinction between psychologists and psychiatrists:

"A broad privilege should apply to both psychiatrists and certified psychologists. Psychoanalysis and psychotherapy are dependent upon the fullest revelation of the most intimate and embarrassing details of the patient's life. Research on mental or emotional problems requires similar disclosure. Unless a patient or research subject is assured that such information can and will be held in utmost confidence, he will be reluctant to make the full disclosure upon which diagnosis and treatment or complete and accurate research depends."

"The Law Revision Commission has received several reliable reports that persons in need of treatment sometimes refuse such treatment from psychiatrists because the confidentiality of their communications cannot be assured under existing law. Many of these persons are seriously disturbed and constitute threats to other persons in the community. Accordingly, this article establishes a new privilege that grants to patients of psychiatrists a privilege much broader in scope than the ordinary physician-patient privilege. Although it is recognized that the granting of the privilege may operate in particular cases to withhold relevant information, the interests of society will be better served if psychiatrists are able to assure patients that their confidences will be protected."

"The Commission has also been informed that adequate research cannot be carried on in this field unless persons examined in connection therewith can be guaranteed that their disclosures will be kept confidential." (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1014.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

VII. PSYCHOTHERAPIST-PATIENT PRIVILEGE

A. Nature of Privilege.

2. Evidence Code Restatement.

a. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 212

[§ 212] In General.

Ev.C. 1014, setting forth the psychotherapist-patient privilege, applies to all psychotherapists, i.e., psychologists and psychiatrists, unless other statutes governing the privilege provide otherwise. Under the statute, the patient, whether or not a party, has a privilege to refuse to disclose, and to prevent another from disclosing, a confidential communication between the patient and the psychotherapist. The privilege may be claimed by any of the following:

(1) The holder of the privilege. (Ev.C. 1014(a).)

(2) A person authorized by the holder of the privilege to claim it. (Ev.C. 1014(b).)

(3) The person who was the psychotherapist at the time of the confidential communication. However, the psychotherapist may not claim the privilege if there is no holder of the privilege in existence or if the psychotherapist is otherwise instructed by a person authorized to permit disclosure. (Ev.C. 1014(c).)

A "psychotherapist" is a person or entity described in Ev.C. 1010. (See infra, §215.)

The privilege is protected against eavesdroppers and other interceptors (Ev.C. 1014; see supra, §66), but it must be claimed by an authorized person (Ev.C. 1014), and it may be waived (Ev.C. 912, supra, §67). Also, the psychotherapist (like the lawyer or physician) must claim the privilege when present and not instructed otherwise. (Ev.C. 1015.) (See generally C.E.B., Jefferson, 2 California Evidence Benchbook 3d, Chap. 38; C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Discovery §4.58 et seq.; 47 Proof of Facts 2d 721 [establishing privilege].)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

VII. PSYCHOTHERAPIST-PATIENT PRIVILEGE

- A. Nature of Privilege.
- 2. Evidence Code Restatement.
  - b. Criminal Proceedings.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 213

[§ 213] Criminal Proceedings.

Under former Ev.C. 1028, the privilege was available in criminal proceedings only for communications with psychiatrists (or those reasonably believed by the patient to be so) and licensed psychologists. (See Lemelle v. Superior Court (1978) 77 C.A.3d 148, 158, 143 C.R. 450.) The 1985 repeal of the statute extended the privilege in criminal proceedings to all persons within the definition of "psychotherapist" (see infra, §215).

In People v. Clark (1990) 50 C.3d 583, 619, 268 C.R. 399, 789 P.2d 127, defendant's therapist revealed defendant's murder threats to the potential victims. Held, defendant could not invoke the privilege to exclude the threats at his penalty trial. The purpose underlying Ev.C. 1014 is not to prevent the use of a defendant's statements against him or her in legal proceedings, but rather to protect the patient's right to privacy and promote the therapeutic relationship. Hence the reasons for the privilege, and the privilege itself, disappear once the communication is no longer confidential. (50 C.3d 620.)

For a decision limiting the Clark holding to the situation where a psychotherapist informs a person of a patient's threat against that person, see Menendez v. Superior Court (1992) 3 C.4th 435, 11 C.R.2d 92, 834 P.2d 786, infra, §228.

c. No Exception for Lanterman-Petris-Short Act Records.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 214

[§ 214] No Exception for Lanterman-Petris-Short Act Records.

In re S. W. (1978) 79 C.A.3d 719, 145 C.R. 143, was a mother's appeal from an order terminating her custody of her sons. She asserted the privilege against admission of records of her treatment in a public mental health facility. Welf.C. 5328 provides that such records "shall be confidential" and may be disclosed only under certain circumstances, including "[t]o the courts, as necessary to the administration of justice." (Welf.C. 5328(f).) Held, the privilege applied. Welf.C. 5328 is a general prohibition against disclosure of information, subject to defined exceptions; but the listing of exceptions does not make admissible records which are inadmissible under the Evidence Code. (79 C.A.3d 722.) (See also Mavroudis v. Superior Court (1980) 102 C.A.3d 594, 602, 162 C.R. 724, infra, §229; People v. Pack (1988) 201 C.A.3d 679, 685, 248 C.R. 240.)

The following persons and entities are considered to be a "psychotherapist" for purposes of the privilege:

(1) Psychiatrist. A person authorized, or reasonably believed by the patient to be authorized, to practice medicine in any state or nation who devotes, or is reasonably believed by the patient to devote, a substantial portion of his or her time to the practice of psychiatry. (Ev.C. 1010(a).)

(2) Psychologist. A person licensed as a psychologist under B. & P.C. 2900 et seq. (Ev.C. 1010(b)), licensed as an educational psychologist under B. & P.C. 4986 et seq. Also included within the term is a person exempt from the Psychology Licensing Law because he or she possesses a doctoral degree in psychology and has completed at least 1 year of appropriate professional experience (see B. & P.C. 2909(d)), provided that he or she practices under the supervision of a licensed or certified psychotherapist. (Ev.C. 1010(h).)

(6) Psychiatric Nurse. A person licensed as a registered nurse under B. & P.C. 2700 et seq. and who possesses a master's degree in psychiatric mental health nursing. (Ev.C. 1010(k).)

(7) Provider of Mental Health Services to Minors. A person rendering mental health treatment or counseling services to minors under Family C. 6924 (see 1 Summary (9th), Contracts, Supp., §356J). (Ev.C. 1010(l).)

(8) Professional Corporation. A psychological corporation (see B. & P.C. 2995 et seq.), a marriage, family, and

Ev.C. 1010 was amended in 2001 to make the phrase "a person who is, or is reasonably believed by the patient to be" applicable to all the enumerated categories.

(1) Psychiatrist. Ev.C. 1010(a) was amended in 2001 to delete the phrase "or reasonably believed by the patient to be authorized."

(2) Psychologist. B. & P.C. 4986 et seq., relating to educational psychologists, were repealed and replaced by B. & P.C. 4989.10 et seq. in 2006.

(4) Marriage, Family, and Child Counselor. Ev.C. 1010(e) was amended in 2001 to refer to marriage and family therapists licensed under B. & P.C. 4980 et seq.(7) Provider of Mental Health Services to Minors.

Cross-Reference: 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §45.

(8) Professional Corporation. Ev.C. 1014 and B. & P.C. 4987.5 were amended in 2002 to refer to marriage and family therapy corporations, rather than marriage, family, and child counseling corporations.

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

VII. PSYCHOTHERAPIST-PATIENT PRIVILEGE

C. Definition of Patient.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 216

[§ 216] Definition of Patient.

A patient, for purposes of the privilege, is "a person who consults a psychotherapist or submits to an examination by a psychotherapist for the purpose of securing a diagnosis or preventive, palliative, or curative treatment of his mental or emotional condition or who submits to an examination of his mental or emotional condition for the purpose of scientific research on mental or emotional problems." (Ev.C. 1011.)

In re Tabatha G. (1996) 45 C.A.4th 1159, 53 C.R.2d 93, involved a proceeding to terminate a mother's parental rights. Held, a study of bonding between the minor and her mother and grandmother, obtained by the mother's counsel without knowledge of the social services department or the minor's foster parents, did not fall within the privilege. The minor was not seeking diagnosis or treatment, nor was there any scientific research involved, and thus she was not a patient for purposes of Ev.C. 1011. (45 C.A.4th 1168.)

In People v. Cabral (1993) 12 C.A.4th 820, 15 C.R.2d 866, a prosecution for sexual offenses, the trial judge admitted a letter defendant had written while in custody to a psychologist at a sex offender treatment program, in which defendant admitted molesting his daughter. Other prisoners had told defendant that if he was admitted to the program, he could receive a lesser sentence, but he would have to admit the sexual molestation allegations. Held, the letter was properly admitted. For the privilege to be applicable, the dominant purpose of the confidential communication must have been to obtain treatment. Defendant's asserted purpose was to avoid a prison sentence. Even assuming that part of his purpose was to obtain treatment, it could not be concluded he had met his burden of proving that treatment was his dominant purpose. (12 C.A.4th 828.)

See Story v. Superior Court (2003) 109 C.A.4th 1007, 1016, 135 C.R.2d 532 [because goal of defendant's psychotherapy was to treat his emotional problems and thereby aid his rehabilitation, his psychotherapy records were confidential, even if he undertook therapy as condition of probation; disagreeing with "dominant purpose" test of *People v. ## CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

E. Confidential Communication.

1. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 218

[§ 218] In General.

A confidential communication, for purposes of the privilege, is "information, including information obtained by an examination of the patient, transmitted between a patient and his psychotherapist in the course of that relationship and in confidence by a means which, so far as the patient is aware, discloses the information to no third persons other than those who are present to further the interest of the patient in the consultation, or those to whom disclosure is reasonably necessary for the transmission of the information or the accomplishment of the purpose for which the psychotherapist is consulted, and includes a diagnosis made and the advice given by the psychotherapist in the course of that relationship." (Ev.C. 1012.)

In Luhdorff v. Superior Court (1985) 166 C.A.3d 485, 489, 212 C.R. 516, a licensed clinical social worker, who was supervised by a licensed psychologist or psychiatrist, diagnosed defendant's emotional problem, determined the appropriate treatment, and treated defendant for 3 months. Held, written records relating to conversations between defendant and the clinical social worker were confidential communications under Ev.C. 1012. Under the statute, communications made by patients to persons reasonably necessary to assist psychiatrists and psychologists in the treatment of the patient's mental disorder are within the privilege. Although the social worker was not a therapist to whom the privilege attached, he worked under such a person, and defendant's case was ultimately controlled and supervised by persons to whom the privilege attached. These persons approved the treatment plan devised for defendant by the social worker and met with him to review the treatment plan and evaluate his performance. Therefore, the social worker fell within the category of persons reasonably necessary for the transmission of information or the accomplishment of the purpose for which a psychotherapist is consulted. (166 C.A.3d 489.)

In Farrell L. v. Superior Court (1988) 203 C.A.3d 521, 250 C.R. 25, petitioner was charged with forcible sex offenses committed on his minor daughter. At the preliminary hearing the magistrate ruled that defense counsel could not cross-examine the prosecutrix regarding persons in her therapy group at Napa State Hospital to whom she had revealed details of the offenses committed against her. Held, the ruling was correct; the communications came within the psychotherapist-patient privilege. " 'Group therapy' is designed to provide comfort and revelation to the patient who shares similar experiences and or difficulties with other like persons within the group. The presence of each person is for the benefit of the others, including the witness/patient, and is designed to facilitate the patient's treatment. Communications such as these, when made in confidence, should not operate to destroy the privilege." (203 C.A.3d 527.) (For holding that exercise of privilege was not unconstitutional denial of right of confrontation, see infra, §235.)

VII. PSYCHOTHERAPIST-PATIENT PRIVILEGE

E. Confidential Communication.

2. Communication by Parent of Patient.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 219

[§ 219] Communication by Parent of Patient.

In Grosslight v. Superior Court (1977) 72 C.A.3d 502, 140 C.R. 278, plaintiff sued B, a 16-year-old girl, for personal injuries, and joined her parents as defendants on the theory that they had knowledge of her dangerous propensities and failed to exercise adequate control. Plaintiff then sought inspection of the records of a psychiatric hospital where B had been treated, to discover statements given by B's parents to the doctor which might include admissions of the alleged knowledge. Held, the statements were privileged. Although the patient is the holder of the privilege, a communication from the parent to the hospital is for the purpose of furthering the child's interest in communicating with the psychotherapist and to facilitate the diagnosis and treatment. (72 C.A.3d 506, 507.) Thus, applying the rule of liberal construction in support of the underlying policy of Ev.C. 1014 (see Law Rev. Com. Comment, supra, §211), "we hold that the privilege established by that section includes all relevant communications to psychotherapists and to psychiatric personnel, by intimate family members of the patient." (72 C.A.3d 508.)

VII. PSYCHOTHERAPIST-PATIENT PRIVILEGE

E. Confidential Communication.

3. Identity of Patient Privileged.

a. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 220

[§ 220] In General.

In Smith v. Superior Court (1981) 118 C.A.3d 136, 173 C.R. 145, a marital dissolution case, the husband was a licensed psychologist. The wife, asking for spousal support, tried to discover the husband's income by interrogatories seeking names and addresses of his patients and the money received from them during the past year. Held, the discovery order was improper. "The patient's purpose would be inhibited and frustrated if his psychotherapist could be compelled to give up his identity without his consent. Public knowledge of treatment by a psychotherapist reveals the existence and, in a general sense, the nature of the malady." (118 C.A.3d 141.) The attorney-client cases (see supra, §111) are distinguishable: disclosure of the identity of the client does not reveal the reason for legal counsel or the content of the communication with the attorney. (118 C.A.3d 142.) And the wife had other means of obtaining evidence of the husband's income; e.g., examination of his receptionist or professional associates on the number of patients he ordinarily counsels and his customary fees and gross receipts. (118 C.A.3d 142.)

In Scull v. Superior Court (1988) 206 C.A.3d 784, 254 C.R. 24, defendant psychiatrist was charged with sexually molesting a patient. The district attorney moved to have the names, addresses and telephone numbers of defendant's female patients for the prior 10 years released to him for the purpose of contacting them to determine whether they had been molested during treatment. The trial judge ordered a special master to compile the information sought and, to minimize the intrusion on the former patients' privacy, required that a psychiatrist or psychologist be appointed to initiate any contacts. The judge further ordered that the patients be informed that they had the right to make no statements, and that unless they chose to testify, any information would be disclosed only to defendant and his attorney. Held, the order violated the psychotherapist-patient privilege.

(a) The evidence sought did not appear to be crucial. Use of evidence demonstrating similar acts of misconduct for the purpose of corroboration, even if admissible, would be of marginal value. (206 C.A.3d 792.)

(b) Unlike Tarasoff v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1976) 17 C.3d 425, 131 C.R. 14, 551 P.2d 334, infra, §227, or Alameda v. Superior Court (1987) 194 C.A.3d 254, 239 C.R. 400, infra, §221, this case did not involve discovery concerning dangerous patients. Thus, discovery was unnecessary to protect the public from harm. Defendant was not seeing any of his former patients; any injuries had already taken place; and there was no evidence that injury was likely to occur in the future. (206 C.A.3d 792, 793.)

(c) There was no showing that the potential benefits of contacting former patients would outweigh the harm caused by the intrusion. "Presumably, most of petitioner's former patients consulted him because they were emotionally distressed. Possibly, a number of these individuals remained so even after therapy had been completed. Considerable harm could be visited upon any one of these emotionally troubled people were she to be contacted by the authorities in the context of a criminal investigation. Those who have been cured could have old wounds reopened. Indeed, the very fact of the authorities' knowledge of the patient's having sought the assistance of a psychiatrist could prove to be embarrassing. Such embarrassment may well nigh be compounded by the caller's innuendo that the former patient was possibly the victim of sexual molestation." (206 C.A.3d 793.)

(d) The evidence sought could be obtained by less intrusive means. Here, the district attorney had had some success contacting former patients by using the media to request assistance from persons having information concerning any offenses defendant committed upon other patients. (206 C.A.3d 794.)

VII. PSYCHOTHERAPIST-PATIENT PRIVILEGE

E. Confidential Communication.

3. Identity of Patient Privileged.

b. Distinction: Where Need for Disclosure Is Great.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 221

[§ 221] Distinction: Where Need for Disclosure Is Great.

The impact of Smith v. Superior Court (1981) 118 C.A.3d 136, 173 C.R. 145, supra, §220, was limited in Alameda v. Superior Court (1987) 194 C.A.3d 254, 239 C.R. 400. Defendant mental hospital was sued by a patient who alleged that as a result of its negligent supervision she was raped by another patient. Plaintiff obtained an order compelling the hospital to disclose the name, address and telephone number of the male patient discovered with her in a locked men's bathroom. Held, disclosure was properly ordered.

(a) "[T]he Smith rule declaring the patient's identity to be a privileged communication should not rigidly apply in every case. In extraordinary cases of need for disclosure, a court retains discretion to order the patient's identity revealed. Revelation of the patient's identity raises only the broadest inference of mental or emotional problems. That inference, moreover, remains static from one case to the next. On the other side, a particular litigant's need for disclosure can range from mere desire for corroborating or cumulative proof to, as in this case, facts essential to the cause of action and to the ability to conduct meaningful discovery. Unlike the situation in Smith, the information may be crucial and there may be no other way of obtaining it." (194 C.A.3d 261.)

(b) This limitation on Smith will have "narrow application," will not undermine its "policy considerations," and is consistent with the Legislature's directive in Ev.C. 911 that "courts should avoid elaborating upon the statutory scheme wherever possible" (see supra, §§60, 62). (194 C.A.3d 263.)

(c) In this case, the need for disclosure of the alleged rapist's identity is crucial to plaintiff's case: plaintiff "is effectively deprived of her day in court without it, stymied in her efforts at meaningful discovery and perhaps hampered in proving that the assault even took place." (192 C.A.3d 261.) Moreover, the case involves "compelling policy considerations" for it "implicates both her personal constitutional right to pursue and obtain safety ... and public concern for the safety of committed patients in general." (194 C.A.3d 261, discussing Tarasoff v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1976) 17 C.3d 425, 131 C.R. 14, 551 P.2d 334, infra, §227.)

(d) While the trial judge correctly ordered disclosure of the alleged rapist's name, address and telephone number, it is directed "[i]n the interest of minimizing unnecessary invasion of the man's privacy interests ... to protect the information from disclosure to anyone other than real party in interest." (194 C.A.3d 264.)

VII. PSYCHOTHERAPIST-PATIENT PRIVILEGE

E. Confidential Communication.

4. Patient's Constitutional Right of Privacy.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 222

[§ 222] Patient's Constitutional Right of Privacy.

In Cutter v. Brownbridge (1986) 183 C.A.3d 836, 228 C.R. 545, Cutter's former wife, in a pending legal action, sought to suspend Cutter's right to visit his children. Brownbridge, Cutter's therapist, voluntarily executed a declaration for use by the former wife's attorney, containing details of Cutter's therapy. Plaintiff Cutter then filed the present suit against Brownbridge for damages for emotional distress suffered from this violation of his right of privacy. Defendant Brownbridge, by demurrer, raised the judicial proceeding immunity of former C.C. 47(2) (now C.C. 47(b); see 5 Summary (9th), Torts, §324), and the demurrer was sustained. Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer reversed.

(a) The constitutional right of privacy (Cal. Const., Art. I, §1; see 7 Summary (9th), Constitutional Law, §454 et seq.) has a broad reach (183 C.A.3d 842); and defendant's impressions and diagnosis, and other details of his professional relationship with plaintiff, fall within the zone of privacy protected (183 C.A.3d 843).

(b) The right is not absolute; and the necessity of ascertaining the truth is sufficiently compelling to justify disclosure when narrowly limited to information directly relevant to the issues, and when good cause and materiality to the action establish that the need for disclosure outweighs the right to privacy. (183 C.A.3d 843.)

(c) C.C. 47(2), denying a remedy in damages when an invasion of privacy occurs in a judicial proceeding, does not call for a blanket immunity for voluntary disclosure of constitutionally protected information. (183 C.A.3d 845.) The psychotherapist-patient privilege statutes (Ev.C. 1010 et seq.) provide "a comprehensive scheme by which the need for ascertaining the truth in judicial proceedings can be balanced with a patient's right to privacy." (183 C.A.3d 845.) Compliance with this procedure avoids the concerns that access to the courts and the search for truth in judicial proceedings will be chilled by a threat of litigation over actual issues of malice, truth, or other details involved in defamation and other tort actions.

Thus: "[W]hen disclosure of constitutionally protected material is contemplated, compliance with the Evidence Code requirements for claiming the privilege when that disclosure is sought and resort to the protective procedures provided are necessary prerequisites to protection of section 47, subdivision 2, immunity. Thus, a psychotherapist who volunteers information concerning a patient obtained in connection with their relationship, does so at his or her peril." (183 C.A.3d 846.)

VII. PSYCHOTHERAPIST-PATIENT PRIVILEGE

F. Exceptions to the Privilege.

1. Those Similar to Physician-Patient Exceptions.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 223

[§ 223] Those Similar to Physician-Patient Exceptions.

Most of the exceptions closely parallel those stated in the physician-patient discussion (see supra, §204 et seq.):

(1) Patient-litigant. (Ev.C. 1016; see supra, §204; Grey v. Superior Court (1976) 62 C.A.3d 698, 703, 133 C.R. 318 [exception held inapplicable; see concurring opinion arguing for narrow construction of Ev.C. 1016]); Alhambra v. Superior Court (1980) 110 C.A.3d 513, 519, 168 C.R. 49 [broad patient-litigant exception of Ev.C. 999, supra, §208, not applicable to psychotherapist privilege]; In re Lifschutz (1970) 2 C.3d 415, 432, 85 C.R. 829, 467 P.2d 557, infra, §224; Boling v. Superior Court (1980) 105 C.A.3d 430, 438, 164 C.R. 432 [commencement of action where plaintiff is living and literally a "patient-litigant" is automatic waiver; but this is not true of action for wrongful death where patient has died (Ev.C. 1016(d))]; People v. Mickle (1991) 54 C.3d 140, 190, 284 C.R. 511, 814 P.2d 290 [capital murder defendant waived privilege as to communications in psychiatric hospital records by testifying in penalty phase about his mental problems and his treatment in hospitals; citing In re Lifschutz].)

(2) Proceeding to establish competence. (Ev.C. 1025; see supra, §206.)

(3) Contemplated or committed crime or tort. (Ev.C. 1018; see supra, §207.)

(4) Parties claiming through deceased patient. (Ev.C. 1019; see supra, §210.)

(5) Breach of duty arising out of relationship. (Ev.C. 1020; see supra, §210.)

(6) Deceased patient's dispositive instrument. (Ev.C. 1021, 1022; see supra, §210.)

(7) Required report. (Ev.C. 1026; see supra, §210.)

(8) Where child under age 16 is crime victim. Ev.C. 1027 states an additional exception: Where (a) the patient is a child under the age of 16; and (b) the psychotherapist has reasonable cause to believe that the patient has been the victim of a crime, and that disclosure of the communications is in the best interest of the child. (See People v. Caplan (1987) 193 C.A.3d 543, 556, 238 C.R. 478; People v. Castro (1994) 30 C.A.4th 390, 396, 397, 35 C.R.2d 839 [in prosecution for lewd conduct on child, trial judge properly excluded opinion of victim's family's therapist as to truth of victim's claim; exception was inapplicable, because therapist did not believe crime occurred].)

The physician-patient exception for damage actions arising out of the patient's criminal conduct (supra, §208) was not carried over into the psychotherapist-patient privilege, because the latter privilege applies to criminal cases. (Law

Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1014; see infra, §225.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Patient-litigant. See People v. One Ruger .22-Caliber Pistol (2000) 84 C.A.4th 310, 314, 315, 100 C.R.2d 780 [in proceeding under Welf.C. 8102 for return of firearms to defendant, testimony of psychiatrist who examined defendant under Welf.C. 5150 (mental evaluation of person taken into custody as danger to self or others; see 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §30) was admissible under Ev.C. 1016; policy underlying privilege was required to yield to extent necessary to avert danger to others].

VII. PSYCHOTHERAPIST-PATIENT PRIVILEGE

F. Exceptions to the Privilege.

2. Partial Waiver Through Litigation.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 224

[§ 224] Partial Waiver Through Litigation.

In re Lifschutz (1970) 2 C.3d 415, 85 C.R. 829, 467 P.2d 557, involved a personal injury action by H against A. H alleged that A had caused him "physical injuries, pain, suffering and severe mental and emotional distress." (2 C.3d 420.) On deposition, H said he had received treatment from petitioner, a psychiatrist, over a 6-month period approximately 10 years earlier, but did not describe his treatment or conversations with petitioner. When petitioner was subpoenaed for a deposition, he refused to produce any of his medical records, to answer any questions about his treatment of patients or to disclose whether H had consulted him or been his patient. (H never expressly claimed or waived the psychotherapist-patient privilege.) On the ground that the filing of personal injury litigation waived the privilege, the judge ordered petitioner to answer the deposition questions. Petitioner refused, was ordered jailed, and sought habeas corpus. Held, writ denied.

(a) Protected interests are those of patient. The concern over compelled disclosure depends on the depth and intimacy of the patient's revelations, rather than the psychotherapist's own deep involvement in the treatment. A psychotherapist does not have significant privacy interests independent of the patient's interests. (2 C.3d 424.) Arguments based on economic loss are also unavailing because "the compelled disclosure is reasonable in light of a related and important governmental purpose." (2 C.3d 425.) Even though psychotherapists and clergymen sometimes perform similar functions and serve similar needs, the Legislature has not denied psychotherapists equal protection of the laws by allowing a broader nondisclosure privilege to clergymen. (2 C.3d 429.)

(b) Waiver effective only as to directly relevant matters. Because H--the holder of the privilege--disclosed at a deposition that he had consulted petitioner for psychiatric treatment, he waived his privilege. But because he did not disclose "a significant part of the communication" (Ev.C. 912), he did not waive the right to later claim the privilege for communications other than the fact that petitioner had treated him. (2 C.3d 430.) "[T]he patient-litigant exception allows only a limited inquiry into the confidences of the psychotherapist-patient relationship, compelling disclosure of only those matters directly relevant to the nature of the specific 'emotional or mental' condition which the patient has voluntarily disclosed and tendered in his pleadings or in answer to discovery inquiries. Furthermore, when confidential information falls within this exception, trial courts, because of the intimate and potentially embarrassing nature of such communications, may utilize the protective measures at their disposal to avoid unwarranted intrusions into the confidences of the relationship." (2 C.3d 431.)

proceedings." (2 C.3d 432.) Because the patient-litigant exception to the privilege compels disclosure only when initiated by the patient's own action, "intrusions" into a patient's privacy remain under his or her control. "As such, we find no constitutional infirmity in it." (2 C.3d 433.)

This exception, however, is not an automatic total waiver whenever a patient institutes a claim for physical or mental injury. Ev.C. 1016 must be construed as "a limited waiver concomitant with the purposes of the exception." (2 C.3d 435.) Communications not directly relevant to the specific conditions disclosed by the patient-litigant remain privileged. "Disclosure cannot be compelled with respect to other aspects of the patient-litigant's personality even though they may, in some sense, be 'relevant' to the substantive issues of litigation. The patient thus is not obligated to sacrifice all privacy to seek redress for a specific mental or emotional injury; the scope of the inquiry permitted depends upon the nature of the injuries which the patient-litigant himself has brought before the court." (2 C.3d 435.)

(d) Patient has burden of showing irrelevance of questioning. Because only the patient knows both the nature of the ailments for which he or she seeks damages and the general content of his or her psychotherapeutic communications, the burden rests on the patient initially "to submit some showing that a given confidential communication is not directly related to the issue he has tendered to the court." (2 C.3d 436.) A patient-litigant may have to limit his or her alleged "mental or emotional distress" or explain, in general terms, the object of the psychotherapy to illustrate that it is not reasonably probable the information sought is directly relevant to the mental condition in issue. In determining whether to require disclosure, courts should then heed the basic privacy interests involved and liberally construe the privilege in the patient's favor. (2 C.3d 437.) The patient may have to reveal part of the communication to enable the trial judge to pass on the claim of irrelevancy. But the trial judge should take necessary precautions to protect the confidentiality of these communications; e.g., the judge might routinely permit such disclosure to be made ex parte in the judge's chambers. (2 C.3d 437, footnote 23.) At a trial, where the danger of publicity and embarrassment is increased, the careful exercise of judicial discretion should protect the patient's legitimate interests. Without this supervision, "intensive examinations of psychotherapists and patients may often ultimately result in substantially more harm than benefit." (2 C.3d 438.) (See 59 Cal. L. Rev. 30 [praising "highly desirable balance" struck in Lifschutz case]; 10 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 695 [federal case following Lifschutz]; 44 A.L.R.3d 24 [privilege, in judicial or quasi-judicial proceedings, arising from relationship between psychiatrist or psychologist and patient].)

The Lifschutz principles supporting the privilege were emphasized in Roberts v. Superior Court (1973) 9 C.3d 330, 107 C.R. 309, 508 P.2d 309, a personal injury action in which plaintiff sought damages for physical injuries but not for emotional distress or mental suffering. There was thus no reasonable probability that the psychotherapeutic communications sought by defendant were directly relevant to a specific mental condition placed in issue by plaintiff. The court said:

"We must of course recognize that any physical injury is likely to have a 'mental component' in the form of pain suffered by the injured person, at least insofar as he is conscious of the physical injury. Presumably, the perception of pain from a particular injury will vary among individuals. Thus, in every lawsuit involving personal injuries, a mental component may be said to be at issue, in that limited sense at least. However, to allow discovery of past psychiatric treatment merely to ascertain whether the patient's past condition may have decreased his tolerance to pain or whether the patient may have discussed with his psychotherapist complaints similar to those to be litigated, would defeat the purpose of the privilege." (9 C.3d 339.) Therefore, "where there is no specific mental condition of the patient at issue, and discovery of the privileged communications is sought merely upon speculation that there may be a 'connection' between the patient's past psychiatric treatment and some 'mental component' of his present injury, those communications should remain protected by the privilege." (9 C.3d 339.) (See 62 Cal. L. Rev. 604; People v. Superior Court (Kaufman) (1974) 12 C.3d 421, 426, 115 C.R. 812, 525 P.2d 716 ["Interpreted broadly, Lifschutz recognizes that discretion rests in the trial court to control the scope and use of a deposition where a claim of privilege has been tendered and the limits of an exception to the privilege are at issue"]; Huelter v. Superior Court (1978) 87 C.A.3d 544, 547, 151 C.R. 138 [following Lifschutz and Roberts].)

In re Edward D. (1976) 61 C.A.3d 10, 132 C.R. 100, held that the privilege was waived in special circumstances arising in a juvenile court dependency proceeding involving two boys. The county Department of Public Social Services referred the boys' mother to a psychologist for evaluation, and the judge permitted the psychologist to testify as to his diagnosis despite the mother's claim of privilege. Held, the ruling was correct. "Appellant understood that she was to be examined by Dr. Cramer to provide a diagnosis or evaluation which would be considered in determining whether she would be given custody of the minors. She knew that the juvenile court judge was the one who would make that decision. Her voluntary participation can only be interpreted as reflecting her consent that Dr. Cramer's evaluation be communicated both to DPSS and to the court for that purpose. Thus, while the information remained confidential as between appellant and the world generally, the transmission of the information to the juvenile court judge was proper in order to accomplish her purpose." (61 C.A.3d 15.) (See lengthy dissent.)

In Patterson v. Superior Court (1983) 147 C.A.3d 927, 193 C.R. 99, plaintiffs' son had been diagnosed as schizophrenic and had made two suicide attempts in a hospital which thereafter transferred him to defendant Cordilleras Center. Defendants, aware of his suicidal tendencies, at first placed him under close observation, but then allowed him more freedom, and he hung himself. Plaintiffs sued for damages for wrongful death, alleging that defendant and the treating physician failed to take proper measures to protect the decedent from his suicidal urges. Defendants moved for production of all medical records pertaining to decedent's prior care or treatment at a number of hospitals. Plaintiffs opposed the motion on the ground that they did not claim that defendants caused or aggravated his condition, that they sought damages only for loss of society, not for loss of prospective financial support, and that the decedent's medical history was not relevant on the issue of defendants' negligence in failing to protect him from himself. Held, order granting affirmed. The mere filing of a lawsuit does not trigger application of the patient-litigant exception, but here, the issue of the decedent's psychiatric condition was at the heart of the lawsuit.

(a) The fact that defendants knew of the decedent's suicidal condition did not remove that condition as an issue; it merely suggests that defendants will have a difficult task if they try to prove either that they did not know this or that there was no reason to suspect that he would actually commit suicide. And defendants should not be required to defend this psychiatric malpractice case solely on what they learned about the patient during his short stay at their facility. (147 C.A.3d 931.)

(b) Defendants also were entitled to view records that might reveal negligence attributable to the referring hospital, which could become the basis for a cross-complaint. (147 C.A.3d 931, footnote 1.)

(c) Defendants could further attempt to set up the defense of causation; i.e., that the decedent's suicide was inevitable and could not have been prevented. (147 C.A.3d 931.)

In brief, the nature of the suit called for a full inquiry into the decedent's medical and psychiatric history in order to determine how to defend the action; hence, to deprive the defendants of the opportunity to review the records would require them to defend a psychiatric malpractice case with only partial knowledge of the patient's condition. (147 C.A.3d 931.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(New) Distinction: Disclosures in prior unrelated proceeding. "[A]ny waiver of the psychotherapist-patient privilege which has occurred in one proceeding must be carefully limited with respect to its later use in entirely unrelated proceedings. ... Because among other reasons nontestimonial pretrial disclosures of privileged communications are not usually made in a public setting, are not otherwise widely disseminated and in fact may be subject to judicial protection from wide dissemination, a pretrial disclosure of such a communication may not suggest to a patient the possibility that the information disclosed will be available to anyone who, at anytime in the future, believes he needs the information. Of concern here also is the impact the uncontrolled use of information disclosed in one setting might have on a litigant's behavior: in the absence of some limitation as to later use of confidential information psychotherapeutic patients will be unnecessarily discouraged from asserting compensation for emotional injuries for fear that any disclosure needed to obtain compensation will haunt them in perpetuity." (San Diego Trolley v. Superior Court (2001) 87 C.A.4th 1083, 1093, 105 C.R.2d 476; citing In re Lifschutz (1970) 2 C.3d 415, 85 C.R. 829, 467 P.2d 557, text, p. 489 [in personal injury action against trolley company in which plaintiff deposed trolley driver, neither driver's testimony, fact that she had made stress-related worker's compensation claim against employer, nor any disclosure she made in that proceeding deprived her of power to prevent disclosure of confidential communications with psychiatrist[.]

VII. PSYCHOTHERAPIST-PATIENT PRIVILEGE

F. Exceptions to the Privilege.

3. Insanity Defense in Criminal Action.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 225

[§ 225] Insanity Defense in Criminal Action.

Unlike the physician-patient privilege (supra, §206), the psychotherapist privilege is not limited to civil proceedings but applies in criminal proceedings. "This difference in the scope of the two privileges is based on the fact that the Law Revision Commission has been advised that proper psychotherapy often is denied a patient solely because he will not talk freely to a psychotherapist for fear that the latter may be compelled in a criminal proceeding to reveal what he has been told. The Commission has also been advised that research in this field will be unduly hampered unless the privilege is available in criminal proceedings." (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1014.)

If the defendant tenders the issue of his or her mental or emotional condition the privilege is lost. (Ev.C. 1016.) Thus, there is no privilege where a criminal defendant raises the issue of present insanity as an objection to trial, or pleads insanity as a defense. (Ev.C. 1023.) "In such a proceeding, the trier of fact should have available to it all information that can be obtained in regard to the defendant's mental or emotional condition. That evidence can often be furnished by the psychotherapist who examined or treated the patient-defendant." (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1014.) (See People v. Superior Court (Broderick) (1991) 231 C.A.3d 584, 590, 282 C.R. 418, supra, §75 [directing trial judge to reconsider extent of murder defendant's waiver of psychotherapist-patient privilege under Ev.C. 912, resulting from disclosures in prior murder trial where defenses based on mental state were raised].)

However, a defendant may lose the psychotherapist-patient privilege but nonetheless be protected by the attorney-client privilege. (See People v. Lines (1975) 13 C.3d 500, 119 C.R. 225, 531 P.2d 793, infra, §237.)

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 226

[§ 226] Nature of Exception.

The broad exception for commitment and guardianship proceedings in the physician-patient statute (see supra, §206) is considerably reduced for patients of psychotherapists: The privilege is denied only "if the psychotherapist has reasonable cause to believe that the patient is in such mental or emotional condition as to be dangerous to himself or to the person or property of another and that disclosure of the communication is necessary to prevent the threatened danger." (Ev.C. 1024; see People v. Gomez (1982) 134 C.A.3d 874, 880, 881, 185 C.R. 155 [rejecting contention that, although threat to kill victim was not privileged when made, it became privileged by time of trial because victim was then dead and disclosure was no longer necessary to prevent danger]; Luhdorff v. Superior Court (1985) 166 C.A.3d 485, 494, 212 C.R. 516 [exception inapplicable where no evidence in record indicating that accused who was interviewed was a danger to alleged victim]; In re Kevin F. (1989) 213 C.A.3d 178, 182, 261 C.R. 413 [juvenile confessed to arson during mandatory counseling session while committed to residential treatment program; confession revealed threat to residents]; 62 *Cal. ##### b. Balancing Test: Tarasoff Case.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 227

[§ 227] Balancing Test: Tarasoff Case.

In Tarasoff v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1976) 17 C.3d 425, 131 C.R. 14, 551 P.2d 334, the court held that a cause of action could be stated by plaintiff parents of a murder victim against defendant therapists for negligent failure to warn the victim that a psychiatric patient had threatened to kill her. The court made the following observations on the privilege and dangerous-patient exception:

(a) Legislative balance. "[T]he public interest in supporting effective treatment of mental illness and in protecting the rights of patients to privacy" must be weighed against "the public interest in safety from violent assault." In Ev.C. 1014 and 1024 the Legislature undertook the difficult task of balancing these countervailing concerns. (17 C.3d 440.)

(b) Confidentiality. "We realize that the open and confidential character of psychotherapeutic dialogue encourages patients to express threats of violence, few of which are ever executed. Certainly a therapist should not be encouraged routinely to reveal such threats; such disclosures could seriously disrupt the patient's relationship with his therapist and with the persons threatened. To the contrary, the therapist's obligations to his patient require that he not disclose a confidence unless such disclosure is necessary to avert danger to others, and even then that he do so discreetly." (17 C.3d 441.)

(c) Duty to warn endangered party. "We conclude that the public policy favoring protection of the confidential character of patient-psychotherapist communications must yield to the extent to which disclosure is essential to avert danger to others. ... If the exercise of reasonable care to protect the threatened victim requires the therapist to warn the endangered party or those who can reasonably be expected to notify him, we see no sufficient societal interest that would protect and justify concealment." (17 C.3d 442.) (For an extended discussion of the case, law review comments, and later decisions following or distinguishing it, see 6 Summary (9th), Torts, §860; and see Lemelle v. Superior Court (1978) 77 C.A.3d 148, 159, 143 C.R. 450 [averment in declaration supporting discovery motion insufficient to show that psychotherapist had reasonable cause to believe patient was dangerous and disclosure of communication was necessary].)

VII. PSYCHOTHERAPIST-PATIENT PRIVILEGE

F. Exceptions to the Privilege.

4. Dangerous Patient.

c. Other Illustrations.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 228

[§ 228] Other Illustrations.

In People v. Hopkins (1975) 44 C.A.3d 669, 119 C.R. 61, an 89-year-old woman was beaten and robbed by two men who broke into her apartment. Later that day, defendant went to a Veterans Administration Hospital, asked to see a psychiatrist and, on meeting one, asked whether everything said would be confidential. When the psychiatrist said yes, defendant described his participation in the crime. The psychiatrist sent him to another branch of the hospital and repeated defendant's story to two nurses, one of whom informed hospital security, which then notified the police. This information led to defendant's arrest and confession. Held, defendant's motion to suppress was properly denied. Under Ev.C. 1024, the psychotherapist had reasonable cause to believe that defendant was in a mental or emotional condition that made him dangerous to himself or the person or property of another, and that disclosure of the communication was necessary to prevent the threatened danger. Under those circumstances, there is no privilege of confidentiality under Ev.C. 1014. (44 C.A.3d 674.)

In People v. Wharton (1991) 53 C.3d 522, 280 C.R. 631, 809 P.2d 290, defendant was convicted of first degree murder for the killing of his girlfriend, and was sentenced to death. On appeal, he argued that the trial judge had misconstrued the dangerous patient exception (Ev.C. 1024) to the psychotherapist-patient privilege (Ev.C. 1014, supra, §212 et seq.), in permitting the prosecutor to examine defendant's two psychotherapists. More than 2 weeks before the murder, defendant had voluntarily sought mental health counseling. Both doctors who examined him had warned the victim that she was in danger, as they were obligated to do by Tarasoff v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1976) 17 C.3d 425, 131 C.R. 14, 551 P.2d 334, supra, §227. After an in camera hearing at which the doctors testified, the trial judge ruled that the prosecution could examine the doctors as to their conversations with the victim and as to the statements by defendant in the course of his therapy that had prompted their warnings. Held, judgment affirmed.

(a) Although the psychotherapist-patient privilege is liberally construed in favor of the patient (see Roberts v. Superior Court (1973) 9 C.3d 330, 107 C.R. 309, 508 P.2d 309, and In re Lifschutz (1970) 2 C.3d 415, 85 C.R. 829, 467 P.2d 557, supra, §224), and exceptions to the privilege are narrowly construed (see People v. Stritzinger (1983) 34 C.3d 505, 194 C.R. 431, 668 P.2d 738, infra, §234), the trial judge complied with these requirements by specifically excluding from disclosure any statements that did not trigger the doctors' warnings to the victim. (53 C.3d 554.)

(b) Defendant's argument that Ev.C. 1024 should not apply after the victim is dead, because the goal of preventing harm to others has become irrelevant, leads to the absurd result that a dangerous patient could regain the privilege by killing his or her victim. (53 C.3d 554.) The same argument was properly rejected in People v. Gomez (1982) 134 C.A.3d 874, 185 C.R. 155, and Mavroudis v. Superior Court (1980) 102 C.A.3d 594, 162 C.R. 724, infra, §229. Because defendant made statements leading his doctors to reasonably believe that he posed a threat to the victim, those statements were not privileged under Ev.C. 1024. Hence, the doctors were free to communicate them to the victim, and they were admissible at defendant's trial. (53 C.3d 558.)

(c) This interpretation of Ev.C. 1024 does not violate public policy by discouraging those in need of help from seeking mental health counseling. Instead, it "vindicates the Legislature's careful balance between the need for confidentiality in the psychotherapeutic relationship on the one hand, and public safety concerns on the other." (53 C.3d 558, citing Tarasoff.)

(d) The argument that Ev.C. 1024 does not remove the psychotherapist-patient privilege for communications that were not disclosed to the victim misperceives the nature of the statute. If the therapist believes that disclosure is necessary to prevent the danger posed to the victim by the patient, the statute does not provide that the privilege is waived; it provides that there is no privilege. Ev.C. 1024 does not involve voluntary disclosure and the concept of waiver. (53 C.3d 560.)

(e) Interpreting Ev.C. 1024 to permit therapists to warn potential victims, but to forbid other uses of the patient's disclosures, is inconsistent with the Legislature's intent. Once a court determines that a case falls within the scope of Ev.C. 1024, there simply is no privilege. (53 C.3d 561.) Moreover, once confidential communications are revealed to the potential victim, they lose their confidential status. Here, although defendant's doctors did not reiterate defendant's exact statements when they warned the victim, they did reveal to her his confidential communications. (53 C.3d 562.)

(f) Defendant's right to privacy was not violated by this interpretation of Ev.C. 1024. The right to privacy is not absolute, but may yield to compelling state interests. (53 C.3d 563, citing Stritzinger, supra.) A patient's privacy is preserved to the extent consistent with the purpose of Ev.C. 1024, when revelation of confidential communications during therapy that did not trigger a Tarasoff warning is prohibited. (53 C. 3d 561.)

Three justices dissented, one on the ground that Ev.C. 1024 applies only while injury to the victim may be averted (53 C.3d 607), and two on the ground that Ev.C. 1024 applies only to statements that must themselves be disclosed by the therapist in order to prevent danger (53 C.3d 615).

In Menendez v. Superior Court (1992) 3 C.4th 435, 11 C.R.2d 92, 834 P.2d 786, petitioners Lyle and Erik--two brothers--were charged with the murder of their parents. Petitioners had a number of sessions with Dr. Oziel, a psychotherapist. The police obtained a search warrant under P.C. 1524 authorizing a search of the offices of Dr. Oziel, and seizure of specified items including audiotape recordings containing information relating to the killings. Dr. Oziel delivered the materials, but claimed the psychotherapist-patient privilege on behalf of petitioners as to the items seized. The superior court rejected the claim, but the Supreme Court, on review, sustained the claim in part. The opinion discusses the effect of People v. Clark (1990) 50 C.3d 583, 268 C.R. 399, 789 P.2d 127, supra, §213, in the light of the later decision in People v. Wharton, supra.

(a) "Considered within its context, Clark holds only that when a psychotherapist discloses a patient's threat to the patient's intended victim in a so-called 'Tarasoff warning' ... , the disclosed threat is not covered by the privilege." (3 C.4th 447.) "[T]he superior court read Clark to hold broadly that the privilege requires the communication to be and remain 'confidential.' " (3 C.4th 447.) This is incorrect: the privilege can cover a communication that was never "confidential" so long as it was made in confidence; it can cover a communication that has lost its "confidential" status; it can bar testimony by anyone; and "outside" third persons are included within the scope of the protection. (3 C.4th 447, 448.) "Clark impliedly accepts the patient's control of waiver of the privilege." (3 C.4th 449.)

(b) Clark is inapplicable here: "Dr. Oziel did not disclose any threat by Lyle and/or Erik to any intended victim in a Tarasoff warning because neither Lyle nor Erik threatened anyone other than Dr. Oziel himself." (3 C.4th 449.)

(c) "Wharton is different. Its applicability cannot be doubted. It bears directly on the crucial issue of the 'dangerous patient' exception. As pertinent here, Wharton holds in substance that a psychotherapist's Tarasoff warning to the patient's intended victim is not covered by the privilege even if it relates an otherwise protected communication, provided that the conditions of the exception are satisfied, viz., there is reasonable cause for the psychotherapist to believe that (1) the patient is dangerous and (2) disclosure of the communication is necessary to prevent any harm." (3 C.4th 449.)

(d) "We emphasize that the 'dangerous patient' exception requires only reasonable cause for belief by the psychotherapist in the dangerousness of the patient and the necessity of disclosure. Certainly, it does not demand that the patient must be dangerous to a person other than the psychotherapist--although here the patients were. Nor does it demand that the psychotherapist must actually disclose the relevant communication or even issue a warning. Indeed, in Wharton we made plain that the exception was 'not keyed to ... disclosure' or warning, but to the 'existence of the specified factual predicate,' viz., reasonable cause for belief in the dangerousness of the patient and the necessity of disclosure." (3 C.4th 451.) This view is also supported by Tarasoff. (3 C.4th 451, 452.) (See 20 Pepperdine L. Rev. 415 [discussing Clark, Wharton, and Menendez]; 20 Pepperdine L. Rev. 1640 [discussing Menendez].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

In People v. Martinez (2001) 88 C.A.4th 465, 105 C.R.2d 841, defendant was committed as a sexually violent predator in a proceeding in which the prosecution's psychological experts relied in part on defendant's psychological records from a prior mentally disordered sex offender proceeding. Held, commitment order affirmed; there was no violation of the psychotherapist-patient privilege. The Sexually Violent Predators Act (Welf.C. 6600 et seq.; see 3 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Punishment, §193 et seq.) "protects the public from sexual predators by detaining them and providing treatment until the mental condition causing their disorder has abated. The determination that a disorder has abated requires a full assessment of the person's current mental condition, including reference to treatment records and progress in therapy. To this end, we conclude that the psychotherapist-patient privilege did not preclude [the experts] from considering defendant's therapy records because the privilege never attached to his communications" with staff during the prior treatment. (88 C.A.4th 484.) Defendant concedes that one of the reports was not privileged in the prior proceeding, but argues that this "waiver" applied only to that proceeding and not to subsequent ones. This is incorrect: If the preliminary facts making Ev.C. 1024 applicable are present, the privilege never attaches in the first place and there is nothing to waive. (88 C.A.4th 484, 485.) (See Story v. Superior Court (2003) 109 C.A.4th 1007, 1018, 135 C.R.2d 532 [distinguishing Martinez; defendant granted probation is not comparable to person committed under Sexually Violent Predators Act, and thus dangerous patient exception is not generally applicable to records of probation-conditioned psychotherapy; however, partial disclosure of those records may be necessary for court to monitor defendant's progress].)

VII. PSYCHOTHERAPIST-PATIENT PRIVILEGE

F. Exceptions to the Privilege.

4. Dangerous Patient.

d. In Camera Inspection.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 229

[§ 229] In Camera Inspection.

In Mavroudis v. Superior Court (1980) 102 C.A.3d 594, 162 C.R. 724, plaintiffs' son, a psychiatric patient of defendant hospitals, attacked them, causing physical injuries. They brought an action for damages, alleging that defendants knew or reasonably should have known that he posed the danger, and asked that the records of his treatment be either produced or delivered to their psychiatric expert for examination under a protective order. The trial judge inspected the records in camera and denied the discovery motion on the ground that the records contained no information indicating a serious danger of violence to plaintiffs. Held, the motion must be reconsidered under different standards.

(a) Under Tarasoff v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1976) 17 C.3d 425, 131 C.R. 14, 551 P.2d 334, supra, §227, petitioners were entitled to discovery not only on the basis of indication in the records that defendants knew, but also that they reasonably should have known, of the danger. (102 C.A.3d 599.)

(c) Despite the restriction in Ev.C. 915 on requiring disclosure of information claimed to be privileged in order to rule on the claim (see supra, §87), the court may require disclosure in camera when an exception depends on the content of a communication (In re Lifschutz (1970) 2 C.3d 415, 437, footnote 23, 85 C.R. 829, 467 P.2d 557, supra, §§88, 224). (102 C.A.3d 606.)

(d) In some instances, the trial judge may be competent to determine the applicability of the exception without expert assistance; e.g., where the patient has made an actual threat of violence or the psychotherapist has determined the existence of such danger or, conversely, where the plaintiffs are not readily identifiable as potential victims or the records are devoid of any indication of possible violence. In all other cases, the court must receive expert testimony to establish the standard of care in the profession. Such testimony should be given in camera by a court-appointed expert (Ev.C. 730; see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Opinion Evidence, §80) rather than by an expert retained by a party. (102 C.A.3d 605.) (See Lemelle v. Superior Court (1978) 77 C.A.3d 148, 160, 143 C.R. 450 [defendant not precluded from presenting motion and seeking in camera inspection]; 15 San Diego L. Rev. 265; supra, §88 et seq.)

e. Statutory Authority and Duty.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 230

[§ 230] Statutory Authority and Duty.

When a patient, in the opinion of his or her psychotherapist (see Ev.C. 1010, supra, §215), presents a serious danger of violence to a reasonably foreseeable victim, specified information or records may be released to that person and to law enforcement agencies as the psychotherapist determines is needed for the protection of that person. (Welf.C. 5328(r).)

The monetary liability of a psychotherapist for failing to warn a victim of a patient's threatened violent behavior is limited to situations "where the patient has communicated to the psychotherapist a serious threat of physical violence against a reasonably identifiable victim or victims." (C.C. 43.92(a).) And the psychotherapist's duty to warn is discharged if he or she makes reasonable efforts to communicate the threat to the victim and a law enforcement agency. (C.C. 43.92(b).)

VII. PSYCHOTHERAPIST-PATIENT PRIVILEGE

F. Exceptions to the Privilege.

5. Psychotherapist Appointed by Court or Prison Board.

a. Applicability of Exception.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 231

[§ 231] Applicability of Exception.

(1) Where Exception Applies. There is no privilege where the psychotherapist is appointed by the judge to examine the patient. (Ev.C. 1017(a).) The reasons are that (a) the court appointment does not create a sufficiently confidential relationship to warrant the privilege, and (b) the purpose of the appointment is usually to have the psychotherapist testify concerning the patient's condition. (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1017; see 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §674.)

Similarly, the privilege does not apply where the psychotherapist is appointed by the Board of Prison Terms to examine a patient under P.C. 2900 et seq. (disposition of mentally disordered prisoners upon discharge; see 3 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Punishment, §638 et seq.).

(2) Where Exception Does Not Apply. The exception does not apply to a juvenile court referral of a parent for counseling. The referral is not equivalent to a court-ordered examination within the meaning of Ev.C. 1017(a). (In re Eduardo A. (1989) 209 C.A.3d 1038, 1041, 261 C.R. 68.)

And different rules govern a prosecution or defense request in a criminal case for an appointment of a psychotherapist. (See infra, §§232, 233.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

VII. PSYCHOTHERAPIST-PATIENT PRIVILEGE

F. Exceptions to the Privilege.

5. Psychotherapist Appointed by Court or Prison Board.
  - b. Where Criminal Defendant Requests Appointment.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 232

[§ 232] Where Criminal Defendant Requests Appointment.

Ev.C. 1017(a) contains a proviso restoring the privilege where the court appointment is on request of the defendant's lawyer for the purpose of providing him or her with information needed to advise on whether to enter or withdraw an insanity plea or to present a defense based on mental or emotional condition. The Law Revision Commission says: "If the defendant determines not to tender the issue of his mental or emotional condition, the privilege will protect the confidentiality of the communication between him and his court-appointed psychotherapist. If, however, the defendant determines to tender this issue--by a plea of not guilty by reason of insanity, by presenting a defense based on his mental or emotional condition, or by raising the question of his sanity at the time of the trial--the exceptions provided in Sections 1016 and 1023 make the privilege unavailable to prevent disclosure of the communications between the defendant and the psychotherapist." (See People v. Haskett (1990) 52 C.3d 210, 243, 276 C.R. 80, 801 P.2d 323 [privilege under Ev.C. 1017 was waived for purposes of second death penalty trial, where defense called doctor at first trial and did not object to testimony about admissions by defendant].)

The Comment adds that the words "or withdraw" were added to make it clear that the privilege applies "in a case where the defendant in a criminal proceeding enters a plea based on insanity, submits to an examination by a court-appointed psychotherapist, and later withdraws the plea based on insanity prior to the trial on that issue." In such case, the defendant does not tender the issue of mental or emotional condition and the privilege should remain.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(New) Distinction: Sexually violent predator proceeding: The rule set forth in Ev.C. 1017(a), that the psychotherapist-patient privilege applies to an expert appointed by the court at the defendant's request, does not apply in a sexually violent predator proceeding. Confidentiality is extended to an expert evaluation in the criminal context because if the defense lawyer decides, based on the evaluation, not to proceed with a plea or defense based on mental condition, the defendant's mental condition is no longer in issue in the proceeding. Conversely, if the defendant proceeds with a mental plea or defense, he tenders the issue of his mental condition and waives any claim of confidentiality, including the psychotherapist-patient privilege. In a sexually violent predator proceeding, by contrast, there is no such thing as an insanity plea or a mental condition defense. The defendant's mental condition is always in issue. A defense evaluation concurring in the prosecution's evaluations would merely be cumulative and therefore would not be excludible. If it disagreed with the prosecution's evaluations, it would benefit the defendant, and there would be no reason for the defense to want to keep it confidential. (People v. Angulo (2005) 129 C.A.4th 1349, 1366, 30 C.R.3d 189.)

VII. PSYCHOTHERAPIST-PATIENT PRIVILEGE

F. Exceptions to the Privilege.

5. Psychotherapist Appointed by Court or Prison Board.

c. Where Prosecution Requests Appointment.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 233

[§ 233] Where Prosecution Requests Appointment.

In People v. Danis (1973) 31 C.A.3d 782, 107 C.R. 675, defendant relied solely on diminished capacity as a defense against a charge of auto theft, and obtained court appointment of a psychiatrist who testified that defendant probably lacked specific intent to deprive the vehicle owner of its possession. After this testimony, the prosecution obtained an order for appointment of another psychiatrist to examine defendant. The prosecution psychiatrist was prohibited from testifying about incriminating statements defendant made during the examination, but was permitted to give his evaluation of defendant and to state that in his opinion defendant could have formed the requisite specific intent. Held, no error.

(a) Psychiatric testimony is not analogous to real or physical evidence like handwriting exemplars, chemical tests or the trying on of clothing; in California, psychiatric tests are communicative or testimonial in character. (31 C.A.3d 785.) While an order appointing a psychiatrist does not in itself violate the constitutional right against self-incrimination, a defendant can, nevertheless, assert the privilege to remain silent, either by refusing to submit to the examination or to answer questions. (31 C.A.3d 785.) However, by presenting psychiatric testimony in support of his diminished capacity defense, defendant waived this privilege, "at least to the extent of foreclosing any objection to the testimony of a court-appointed psychiatrist relating to the diminished capacity issue." (31 C.A.3d 786.)

(b) All three conditions for admissibility of this evidence were met here, i.e., assistance of counsel, placing of mental condition in issue and instructing that defendant's incriminating statements were to be considered only to show the information on which the psychiatrist based his information. (See In re Spencer (1965) 63 C.2d 400, 46 C.R. 753, 406 P.2d 33.) "In fact, as to the third condition, the court took a more stringent step than instructing the jury concerning incriminating statements. It specifically precluded Dr. Bramwell from testifying to any of such statements made by defendant during the interview." (31 C.A.3d 786.)

VII. PSYCHOTHERAPIST-PATIENT PRIVILEGE

F. Exceptions to the Privilege.

6. Report of Child Abuse or Neglect.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 234

[§ 234] Report of Child Abuse or Neglect.

The Child Abuse and Neglect Reporting Act (P.C. 11164 et seq.; see 5 Summary (9th), Torts, §283 et seq.) states that "[n]either the physician-patient privilege nor the psychotherapist-patient privilege applies to information reported pursuant to this article." (P.C. 11171(b).) This exception to the privilege was examined and limited in its application in People v. Stritzinger (1983) 34 C.3d 505, 194 C.R. 431, 668 P.2d 738.

Defendant was convicted of child molestation, based on various sexual activities with his stepdaughter Sarah. When Sarah's mother--defendant's wife--learned of these activities she arranged counseling for both her daughter and husband with Dr. W, a licensed clinical psychologist. Dr. W reported his conversation with the child to the authorities. Dr. W then met with defendant, who discussed his sexual relations with Sarah. Deputy B of the sheriff's office then phoned Dr. W to ask about his conversation with defendant and read P.C. 11171(b) to him. Dr. W then recounted the conversation, which was tape-recorded and summarized in a written report. At the trial, Dr. W testified to the conversation over objection. Held, admission of the testimony was reversible error.

(a) The psychotherapist-patient privilege is an aspect of the patient's constitutional right to privacy. But the right is not absolute, and a compelling state interest may justify an exception to the privilege. (34 C.3d 511, citing In re Lifschutz (1970) 2 C.3d 415, 85 C.R. 829, 467 P.2d 557, supra, §224.) The Child Abuse and Neglect Reporting Act creates such an exception: the Act imposes on psychotherapists an affirmative duty to report, explicitly providing an exception to the privilege. And no constitutional challenge to the exception was made here. (34 C.3d 512.)

(b) An exception must, however, be narrowly construed (In re Lifschutz, supra); and the exception was erroneously applied in this case. Dr. W had already reported the communications from Sarah (under the exception of Ev.C. 1027--patient under 16 and victim of crime), and was under no statutory obligation to make a second report concerning the same activity. Had he learned from defendant of additional incidents of child abuse he would have been required to report these new suspicions, or if he had first learned of the abuse from defendant himself he would have been bound to report that information. But there was no obligation to reiterate his suspicion following his consultation with defendant. He did so only when deputy B misled him into believing that the law required him to do so. (34 C.3d 514.)

(c) The value of psychiatry is based on a confidential relationship, and the doctor can be of assistance only if the patient may freely relate his or her thoughts and actions, fears and fantasies, and strengths and weaknesses. "If the psychiatrist is compelled to go beyond an initial report to authorities regarding a suspected child abuse and must thereafter repeat details given to him by the adult patient in subsequent sessions, candor and integrity would require the doctor to advise the patient at the outset that he will violate his confidence and will inform law enforcement of their discussions. Under such circumstances it is impossible to conceive of any meaningful therapy. Ironically, in this case medical help was initially what this distraught family sought as a result of these tragic events." (34 C.3d 514.) (See 16 Pacific L. J. 335.)

In People v. Battaglia (1984) 156 C.A.3d 1058, 1063, 203 C.R. 370, the court, relying on Stritzinger, rejected constitutional challenges to the admission of testimony of the child victim, after a report by a licensed clinical social worker to the police, pursuant to P.C. 11166.

Many other cases have discussed the exception. (See People v. John B. (1987) 192 C.A.3d 1073, 1078, 237 C.R. 659 [P.C. 11171(b) suspends psychotherapist-client privilege only as to information actually reported; unreported but reportable information is privileged]; In re Troy D. (1989) 215 C.A.3d 889, 901, 902, 263 C.R. 869 [child born under influence of illegal drugs; P.C. 11166 applied, notwithstanding that mother's acts took place prior to child's birth]; Roe v. Superior Court (1991) 229 C.A.3d 832, 844, 280 C.R. 380, 5 Summary (9th), Torts, Supp., §284A [P.C. 11171(b) applied to permit libel plaintiff to depose defendant's psychotherapist regarding allegedly false information in child abuse report filed by psychotherapist]; and see 44 A.L.R.4th 649 [limitation of physician-patient privilege in proceedings relating to child abuse or neglect].)

VII. PSYCHOTHERAPIST-PATIENT PRIVILEGE

F. Exceptions to the Privilege.

7. Criminal Defendant's Confrontation Rights.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 235

[§ 235] Criminal Defendant's Confrontation Rights.

In Farrell L. v. Superior Court (1988) 203 C.A.3d 521, 250 C.R. 25, supra, §218, communications made by the prosecutrix in a group therapy session were held privileged under Ev.C. 1012. The court also rejected defendant's contention that the privilege must give way to his right of confrontation. (a) The identification of persons in the group would only have been relevant in a subsequent attempt to impeach the testimony of the prosecutrix at the trial; hence, prevention of the cross-examination would only affect the weight of the direct evidence, and would not deny the defendant a fair hearing. (b) Defense counsel failed to establish good cause for seeking the privileged information: he gave no indication that he intended to pursue the questioning or to call the identified persons as witnesses. (203 C.A.3d 528.)

In People v. Hammon (1997) 15 C.4th 1117, 65 C.R.2d 1, 938 P.2d 986, defendant, who was charged with lewd and lascivious acts on a minor under age 14, served pretrial subpoenas duces tecum on several psychotherapists who had treated the complaining witness. The prosecution moved to quash the subpoenas on the basis of the psychotherapist-patient privilege. Opposing the motion to quash, defense counsel argued that the witness' psychological records were needed to test her credibility, and that they would provide evidence as to whether the alleged molestations actually occurred. The trial judge acknowledged that, on a showing of good cause, People v. Reber (1986) 177 C.A.3d 523, 223 C.R. 139, would require the judge to review the records in camera. He declined to conduct such a review, however, and granted the motion to quash, explaining that defense counsel had failed to identify any particular information that would be of benefit to defendant. The Court of Appeal affirmed, agreeing that there had been no showing of good cause. Held, affirmed, but for reasons other than those given by the trial judge and the Court of Appeal.

(a) People v. Reber and cases following it held that the right of confrontation guaranteed by the Sixth Amendment of the United States Constitution required the pretrial disclosure of privileged information if the defendant's need for it outweighed the patient's interest in confidentiality. These cases relied on Davis v. Alaska (1974) 415 U.S. 308, 94 S.Ct. 1105, 39 L.Ed.2d 347, but that case addressed trial rights. In the later case of Pennsylvania v. Ritchie (1987) 480 U.S. 39, 107 S.Ct. 989, 94 L.Ed.2d 40, 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §6, seven members of the United States Supreme Court spoke to, but were unable to reach a consensus on, the issue of whether the Davis principle extended to pretrial discovery. Reber and its progeny incorrectly decided that it did. (15 C.4th 1123, 1124, disapproving People v. Reber; People v. Dancer (1996) 45 C.A.4th 1677, 53 C.R.2d 282; People v. Boyette (1988) 201 C.A.3d 1527, 247 C.R. 795; People v. Pack (1988) 201 C.A.3d 679, 248 C.R. 240; and People v. Caplan (1987) 193 C.A.3d 543, 238 C.R. 478.)

(b) "We do not ... see an adequate justification for taking such a long step in a direction the United States Supreme Court has not gone. Indeed, a persuasive reason exists not to do so. When a defendant proposes to impeach a critical prosecution witness with questions that call for privileged information, the trial court may be called upon, as in Davis, supra, to balance the defendant's need for cross-examination and the state policies the privilege is intended to serve. ... Before trial, the court typically will not have sufficient information to conduct this inquiry; hence, if pretrial disclosure is permitted, a serious risk arises that privileged material will be disclosed unnecessarily." (15 C.4th 1127.)

(c) The present case illustrates this point. Defendant's request for the witness' psychological records indicated that they would help determine whether any molestations occurred. Yet at trial, he conceded that he had had sex with her, and the main question for the jury became whether this had occurred before or after her 14th birthday. (15 C.4th 1121, 1127.)

(d) The defense's right to issue subpoenas duces tecum to private persons remains unquestioned. It is implicit in P.C. 1326, 1327 (see supra, §24), and has been recognized by the courts for at least two decades. (15 C.4th 1128, citing Millaud v. Superior Court (1986) 182 C.A.3d 471, 227 C.R. 222, and Pacific Lighting Leasing Co. v. Superior Court (1976) 60 C.A.3d 552, 131 C.R. 559, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §69.) "However, this more general right provides no basis for overriding a statutory and constitutional privilege." (15 C.4th 1128.)

Two justices, concurring separately, would have upheld the Reber rule, but agreed with the trial judge that a good cause showing for in camera review had not been made. (15 C.4th 1128, 1131.) (See Nielsen v. Superior Court (1997) 55 C.A.4th 1150, 1156, 64 C.R.2d 566 [murder defendant's confrontation right did not require codefendant to turn over his psychiatric records to him; any possibility that codefendant would testify was speculative, and codefendant could not be required to indicate his decision as to whether he would testify in order to litigate his motion to quash].)

VII. PSYCHOTHERAPIST-PATIENT PRIVILEGE

F. Exceptions to the Privilege.

8. Coroner's Inquiry Into Decedent's Death.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 236

[§ 236] Coroner's Inquiry Into Decedent's Death.

Govt.C. 27491.8 specifies a procedure by which a coroner may enforce a subpoena or subpoena duces tecum for records of confidential communications of a decedent subject to the physician-patient privilege (see supra, §196 et seq.) or the psychotherapist-patient privilege, where sought (1) for the purpose of inquiry into, and determination of, the circumstances, manner, and cause of violent, sudden, unusual, or other suspicious deaths (Govt.C. 27491; see 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Introduction to Criminal Procedure, §43); or (2) for the sole purpose of being introduced as evidence at a coroner's inquest.

(2) Delivery by Custodian. The custodian must deliver the records to the presiding judge in a confidential manner, and the judge must examine them in camera. If there is good cause, the judge must direct the custodian to disclose to the coroner those portions of the records that the judge determines are relevant to the coroner's inquiry or inquest. (Govt.C. 27491.8(a).)

(3) Confidentiality. A communication made available to the coroner is confidential except as it is introduced into evidence at a coroner's inquest, and may not be distributed or made available to any other person, agency, firm, or corporation. (Govt.C. 27491.8(b).) Moreover, this communication is not admissible as former testimony (see Ev.C. 1290 et seq., 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §255 et seq.). (Govt.C. 27491.8(c).) After the investigation or inquest has ended, the court must order the records sealed as necessary to protect the confidentiality of the decedent's medical or mental health information. (Govt.C. 27491.8(d).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Notice To Deliver Records. Govt.C. 27491.8(a) was amended in 2000 to change the time for providing notice from 15 to 7 days. Under the amended statute, if no personal representative has been appointed by the court, the notice must be given to the person who has the right to control disposition of the decedent's remains, "to the extent known."

(3) Confidentiality. Govt.C. 27491.8(b) was amended in 2000. Under the amended statute, a communication made available to the coroner is confidential and may not be distributed or made available to any other person, agency, firm, or corporation, except: (a) when introduced into evidence at a coroner's inquest proceeding; (b) when included in a coroner's official report for the purpose of establishing the cause, manner, and circumstances of death; and (c) when otherwise required by law.

Govt.C. 27491.8(c) was amended in 2000 to provide that the communication may not be admitted as former testimony, "unless otherwise admissible by law."

Govt.C. 27491.8(d) was amended in 2000 to provide that after the investigation or inquest has terminated, the court must order the records produced to the coroner containing the confidential communication to be sealed or destroyed if necessary to protect the confidentiality of the decedent's medical or mental health information.

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

VII. PSYCHOTHERAPIST-PATIENT PRIVILEGE

G. Overlapping of Privileges.

[§ 237] Overlapping of Privileges.

The psychotherapist-patient privilege and the attorney-client privilege occasionally overlap. When they do, waiver of the medical privilege may nevertheless leave the examined individual protected by his or her privilege as a client who disclosed confidential information to his or her attorney's agent (see supra, §122). (See People v. Saidi-Tabatabai (1970) 7 C.A.3d 981, 987, footnote 4, 86 C.R. 866; People v. Goldbach (1972) 27 C.A.3d 563, 568, 103 C.R. 800; Finley v. Superior Court (1972) 29 C.A.3d 342, 347, 104 C.R. 699; People v. Lines (1975) 13 C.3d 500, 507, 119 C.R. 225, 531 P.2d 793.)

The Lines case, supra, dealt with a defendant who, after pleading not guilty to a murder charge, requested appointment of psychiatrists under Ev.C. 730 (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Opinion Evidence, §79 et seq.) and Ev.C. 1017 (supra, §232), to provide defendant with information on whether to enter an insanity plea or present a defense based on an emotional or mental condition. The trial judge appointed Dr. T and Dr. M. Several months later, defendant entered an additional plea of not guilty by reason of insanity. Pursuant to Ev.C. 730 and P.C. 1026 et seq. (see 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §669 et seq.), the court appointed Dr. B and reappointed Dr. T and Dr. M. (Under P.C. 1027, any psychiatrist so appointed to investigate a defendant's sanity may be called as a witness by either party or the court itself.) Soon after the case was called for trial, the court doubted that defendant understood the nature of the proceedings or could cooperate rationally with defense counsel and, accordingly, suspended criminal proceedings. Dr. C was appointed and Dr. M was reappointed to examine defendant. By stipulation, the court read the reports of Dr. M, Dr. T and Dr. C, found defendant insane under P.C. 1368, suspended criminal proceedings and committed defendant to a state hospital. Later that year, trial resumed. On his arraignment, defendant again entered pleas of not guilty and not guilty by reason of insanity. Pursuant to Ev.C. 730 and 1017, Dr. W and Dr. A were appointed to examine defendant and prepare confidential reports. (A total of six psychiatrists had thus been chosen to examine defendant for various purposes.) At the sanity phase of the trial, after defendant was found guilty of second degree murder during the guilt phase, defendant called only one witness, Dr. C (who had been appointed to help determine his capacity to stand trial). The prosecution called four psychiatrists--Dr. A, Dr. M, Dr. W and Dr. T. Defendant objected to the entire testimony of Dr. A on the ground that he would reveal confidential communications protected by the attorney-client privilege, and objected to that part of Dr. M's testimony based on confidential examinations but not that based on the examination to determine defendant's capacity to stand trial. The trial judge admitted the testimony of Dr. A and Dr. M. Held, this was error; the disputed testimony violated the attorney-client privilege.

(a) The attorney-client privilege of confidentiality persists despite disclosure of the communications to third persons (including physicians) to whom disclosure is reasonably necessary to accomplish the purpose for which the lawyer was consulted. (13 C.3d 510; see supra, §122.) Here, Dr. A and Dr. M were appointed to examine defendant for his own benefit and to fully inform defense counsel about the nature and extent of defendant's mental condition. Through the doctor as an intermediate agent, defendant communicated information about his mental condition to his attorney. "[A]ll information obtained by the doctors from their examination of defendant and the reports thereof furnished to his attorney constituted confidential communications protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege. The fact that the psychiatrists were appointed by the court rather than privately employed by counsel in no way affects the confidentiality of these communications since they were appointed to prepare a confidential report for defendant." (13 C.3d 510.)

(c) Generally speaking, there is no psychotherapist-patient privilege when the therapist is appointed by court order, except when the appointment is made at the defendant's request to provide counsel with information to help in the plea and trial process. This exception is no longer applicable when the patient places his or her mental or emotional condition in issue, as by pleading not guilty by reason of insanity. However, the attorney-client privilege remains, for it has no client-litigant exception. (13 C.3d 512.) Thus, "the results of such examination, including any report thereof, and all information and communications relating thereto, are protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege notwithstanding the fact that the defendant has theretofore or thereafter tendered in said proceeding the issue of his mental or emotional condition." (13 C.3d 514, disapproving contrary view of People v. Aikin (1971) 19 C.A.3d 685, 696, 97 C.R. 251.)

(d) By contrast, when a defendant pleads not guilty by reason of insanity, P.C. 1027 requires appointment of two psychiatrists to examine defendant. "The information gained from these examinations and communicated to the court, either by written medical report or in court testimony of the psychiatrist called as a witness by either party or by the court itself is clearly not protected by the attorney-client privilege. The psychiatrists so appointed are not appointed as agents of the attorney, but of the court; the communications are not made in confidence and are not made to the attorney." (13 C.3d 515.)

(e) Even when an examination under P.C. 1027 follows an examination under Ev.C. 1017, the results of the first examination still retain the attorney-client privilege. However: "[W]e can conceive of situations where such information cannot be so precisely compartmentalized and where it may be an impossible task for the psychiatrist to report or testify as to unprivileged information without drawing upon and utilizing that which is privileged. ... [I]n view of the risk of disclosure of privileged information, we seriously question the wisdom of 'reappointing' without appropriate waiver by the defendant a psychiatrist, whose earlier examination is protected by privilege, to make a subsequent examination under circumstances which carry no protection of privilege, and accordingly we disapprove of such practice." (13 C.3d 515; adding that here, no prejudice resulted because the erroneously admitted testimony was essentially the same as that of psychiatrists who testified without defense objection.)

VIII. CLERGY-PENITENT PRIVILEGE

A. Nature of Privilege.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 238

[§ 238] Nature of Privilege.

The privilege of "confessor and confessant," or "priest and penitent," was not recognized at common law, but is established by statute in a majority of jurisdictions, and is stated in Model C., Rule 219 and Unif. Rules, Rule 505. (See also 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2394 et seq.; C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Discovery §4.81 et seq.; C.E.B., Jefferson, 2 California Evidence Benchbook 3d, §39.1 et seq.; 98 Harv. L. Rev. 1555 [history and developments]; 30 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 177 [issues facing clergy, including scope of privilege]; 23 Santa Clara L. Rev. 95 [The History and Current Status of the Clergy-Penitent Privilege]; 9 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 523 [Catholic sisters, irregularly ordained women and clergy-penitent privilege]; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §513 et seq.; 49 A.L.R.3d 1205 [who is entitled to clergyman's privilege?]; 71 A.L.R.3d 794 [extent of privilege].)

Former C.C.P. 1881(3) limited the privileged matter to a "confession" made in the course of discipline enjoined by the church. The Evidence Code extends its coverage to other communications and to a wider group of church denominations:

(1) Penitential communication. A "penitential communication" is one "made in confidence, in the presence of no third person so far as the penitent is aware, to a clergyman who, in the course of the discipline or practice of his church, denomination, or organization, is authorized or accustomed to hear such communications and, under the discipline or tenets of his church, denomination, or organization, has a duty to keep such communications secret." (Ev.C. 1032.)

(2) Clergyman. A "clergyman" is a "priest, minister, religious practitioner, or similar functionary of a church or of a religious denomination or religious organization." (Ev.C. 1030.)

(3) Penitent. A "penitent" is a "person who has made a penitential communication to a clergyman." (Ev.C. 1031.)

Both the old and the current statute, however, embody the same requirement of communication. (See Estate of Toomes (1880) 54 C. 509, 516 [priest's testimony as to mental condition of testatrix, based on his observation prior to determining whether to administer sacraments, held admissible].)

See 39 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 1339 [arguing for abandonment of clergy-penitent privilege]; 81 Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Witnesses §§493, 494; 93 A.L.R.5th 327 [subject matter and waiver of privilege], superseding 71 A.L.R.3d 794, text, p. 509; 101 A.L.R.5th 619 [who is entitled to privilege], superseding 49 A.L.R.3d 1205, text, p. 509.

(1) Penitential communication. Ev.C. 1032 was amended in 2002 to substitute "member of the clergy" for "clergyman," to substitute "those" for "such," and to make the statute gender-neutral.

There is no requirement that a communication have as its purpose the confession of a flawed act to receive religious consolation and guidance in return in order to be privileged. As long as the discipline or practice of a church authorizes a member of the clergy to hear particular communications and imposes a duty of secrecy on the clergy member for those communications, a communication is privileged from disclosure even though it is not a confession. (Doe 2 v. Superior Court (2005) 132 C.A.4th 1504, 1518, 1519, 34 C.R.3d 458.)

(2) Clergyman. Ev.C. 1030 was amended in 2002 to substitute "member of the clergy" for "clergyman".

(3) Penitent. Ev.C. 1031 was amended in 2002 to substitute "member of the clergy" for "clergyman". West's Key Number Digest, Witnesses k.215

VIII. CLERGY-PENITENT PRIVILEGE

B. Privileges of Penitent and Clergyman.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 239

[§ 239] Privileges of Penitent and Clergyman.

(1) Penitent's Privilege. Subject to the waiver rule (Ev.C. 912, supra, §67), "a penitent, whether or not a party, has a privilege to refuse to disclose, and to prevent another from disclosing, a penitential communication if he claims the privilege." (Ev.C. 1033.) This language gives the usual protection against eavesdroppers (see supra, §66).

(2) Clergyman's Privilege. Subject to the waiver rule (Ev.C. 912, supra, §67), "a clergyman, whether or not a party, has a privilege to refuse to disclose a penitential communication if he claims the privilege." (Ev.C. 1034.) Two aspects of this provision are discussed in the Law Revision Commission Comment to the statute:

(a) The clergyman has a separate privilege, which the clergyman may claim even if the penitent waives his or her own. The principal reason is that the law will not compel a clergyman to violate church tenets that require him or her to maintain the secrecy of confidential statements. (See 1 McCormick 5th, §76.2; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2396.)

(b) Unlike the lawyer or physician, the clergyman is under no duty to claim the privilege on behalf of the penitent. If the penitent is dead, incompetent, absent, or fails to claim his or her privilege, the clergyman might, for good reasons, elect to testify. "The extent to which a clergyman should keep secret or reveal penitential communications is not an appropriate subject for legislation; the matter is better left to the discretion of the individual clergyman involved and the discipline of the religious body of which he is a member."

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Penitent's Privilege. Ev.C. 1033 was amended in 2002 to make the statute gender-neutral.

(2) Clergyman's Privilege. Ev.C. 1034 was amended in 2002 to substitute "member of the clergy" for "clergyman" and otherwise make the statute gender-neutral.

VIII. CLERGY-PENITENT PRIVILEGE

C. Communications Not Privileged.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 240

[§ 240] Communications Not Privileged.

People v. Johnson (1969) 270 C.A.2d 204, 75 C.R. 605, makes it clear that not every communication to a minister is privileged. Defendant, fleeing from a robbery, entered the church office of P, a minister. Defendant said he was in trouble, and made statements concerning the event. P advised calling the police, they went out together, and P related to the officers the story told by defendant. Held, Ev.C. 1032 did not apply.

(a) Defendant was a stranger to P, P had no ministerial vestments on, and both sought the police; thus there was no suggestion of confidentiality. (270 C.A.2d 207.)

(b) No showing was made that P had authority to hear communications or a duty to keep them secret under the discipline or practice of his church. (270 C.A.2d 207.)

In People v. Thompson (1982) 133 C.A.3d 419, 184 C.R. 72, defendant confessed a murder to Ward, a member of the Church of Scientology (see 133 C.A.3d 424, footnote 1), who had received some training as an "ethics officer." But he was not ordained as an "auditor" or minister of the church, and was employed solely as a business consultant by defendant's employer, to improve sales. Held, Ward did not function as a clergyman when he received the confession. (133 C.A.3d 426, 427.)

In People v. Edwards (1988) 203 C.A.3d 1358, 248 C.R. 53, defendant, treasurer of an Episcopal church guild, embezzled its funds over a long period. She sought an urgent meeting with Father R, rector of the church, asking for help in stopping payment on checks she had drawn, to enable her to make restitution. In accordance with his suggestion, she consulted two wardens of the church and disclosed her criminal activities. At her trial for grand theft, the trial judge determined that the privilege did not apply to her confidential statements to Father R. Held, the ruling was correct.

(a) Father R testified that he believed defendant's statements to him were in the nature of a secular request seeking counseling and not absolution; and that when he offered to assist her by divulging the substance of their confidential discussion to the wardens, she agreed. (203 C.A.3d 1363.) "He emphasized that the conversation did not even 'remotely resemble' a religious confession; rather, that the mutual encounter involved a 'problem solving' entreaty under a promise of confidence from which defendant ultimately released him." (203 C.A.3d 1364.)

(b) The trial judge, after considering the conflicting evidence, reached a factual determination that the questioned statement "was not a penitential communication within legal contemplation," and therefore no privilege attached. This determination was supported by substantial evidence. (203 C.A.3d 1365.)

IX. SEXUAL ASSAULT VICTIM-COUNSELOR PRIVILEGE

A. Nature of Privilege.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 241

[§ 241] Nature of Privilege.

(1) In General. Ev.C. 1035 et seq. create a privilege for confidential communications between sexual assault victims and trained counselors in rape crisis centers (see Health & Saf.C. 1598.1; P.C. 13837). (See generally 12 Pacific L. J. 341; 15 Pacific L. J. 584; 68 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1335 [admission of rape crisis counselor records in acquaintance rape trials]; 43 A.L.R.4th 395 [constitutionality of statute making communications between sex crime victim and counselor confidential]; C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Discovery §4.70 et seq.)

A "sexual assault victim" is one who consults the counselor "for the purpose of securing advice or assistance concerning a mental, physical, or emotional condition caused by a sexual assault." (Ev.C. 1035.) (For definition of "sexual assault victim counselor," see Ev.C. 1035.2; for definition of "sexual assault," see Ev.C. 1036.2.)

(2) Confidential Communication. This includes "all information regarding the facts and circumstances involving the alleged sexual assault and also includes all information regarding the victim's prior or subsequent sexual conduct, and opinions regarding the victim's sexual conduct or reputation in sexual matters." (Ev.C. 1035.4.)

(3) Claim and Waiver of Privilege. The privilege protects disclosures reasonably necessary to the purpose of the communication (Ev.C. 1035.4), and may be invoked to prevent unauthorized disclosure by others (Ev.C. 1035.8). It may be claimed by the "holder," i.e., the victim or the victim's guardian, conservator, or personal representative (Ev.C. 1035.6); and it must be claimed by the counselor unless otherwise instructed by an authorized person or no holder exists (Ev.C. 1035.8(c), 1036). (See People v. Gilbert (1992) 5 C.A.4th 1372, 1390, 7 C.R.2d 660 [trial judge erred in ruling that privilege was applicable, but error was harmless].)

The privilege may be waived. (Ev.C. 912; see supra, §67.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. Ev.C. 1035.2 was amended in 2006 to change "sexual assault victim counselor" to "sexual assault counselor."

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

IX. SEXUAL ASSAULT VICTIM-COUNSELOR PRIVILEGE
B. Procedure for Disclosure.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 242

[§ 242] Procedure for Disclosure.

(1) Balancing Procedure. The trial judge may compel disclosure of information received by the counselor that constitutes relevant evidence involving the sexual assault that is the subject of a criminal proceeding, on determining that the probative value outweighs the effect of disclosure on the victim. The same balancing procedure may be applied to compel disclosure in proceedings related to child abuse. (Ev.C. 1035.4.)

(2) Disclosure Procedure. On determining that information is to be disclosed, the court must so order and inform the defendant. (Ev.C. 1035.4.)

On finding that there is a reasonable likelihood that information is subject to disclosure under the balancing test, the trial judge must (a) inform the defendant of the nature of the information; (b) order a hearing outside the presence of the jury at which the counselor may be questioned regarding the information; and (c) rule on which items of information, if any, must be disclosed. (Ev.C. 1035.4.) Also, the court may issue an order specifying the evidence which the defendant may introduce and the nature of questions to be permitted. (Ev.C. 1035.4.)

The defendant may offer evidence pursuant to the court's order, but admission of evidence concerning the sexual conduct of the complaining witness is subject to Ev.C. 352, 782, and 1103 (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §§17, 61 et seq.). (Ev.C. 1035.4.)

X. DOMESTIC VIOLENCE VICTIM-COUNSELOR PRIVILEGE

A. Nature of Privilege.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 243

[§ 243] Nature of Privilege.

(1) In General. Ev.C. 1037 et seq. create a privilege for confidential communications between victims of domestic violence and trained counselors employed by domestic violence centers (see Welf.C. 18290 et seq., 11 Summary (9th), Husband and Wife, §28). (See generally C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Discovery §4.75 et seq.)

A victim is a person who suffers "domestic violence," as that term is defined in Family C. 6211 (see 11 Summary (9th), Husband and Wife, Supp., §36A). (Ev.C. 1037, 1037.7.) (For definition of "domestic violence counselor," see Ev.C. 1037.1.)

(2) Confidential Communication. This includes information transmitted in confidence between the victim and counselor in the course of their relationship "regarding the facts and circumstances involving all incidences of domestic violence, as well as all information about the children of the victim or abuser and the relationship of the victim with the abuser." (Ev.C. 1037.2.)

(3) Claim and Waiver of Privilege. The privilege protects disclosures reasonably necessary to the purpose of the communication (Ev.C. 1037.2), and may be invoked to prevent unauthorized disclosures by others (Ev.C. 1037.5). It may be claimed by the "holder," i.e., the victim or the victim's guardian or conservator (Ev.C. 1037.4), and it must be claimed by the counselor unless otherwise instructed by an authorized person or no holder exists (Ev.C. 1037.5(c), 1037.6).

(4) Obligation To Report Child Abuse. Ev.C. 1037 et seq. do not limit the obligation to report child abuse as required by P.C. 11166 (see supra, §234). (Ev.C. 1037.3.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. Govt.C. 1037.8, added in 2002, requires a domestic violence counselor to inform a domestic violence victim of any applicable limitations on the confidentiality of their communications. The information may be given orally.

Welf.C. 18290 et seq. were repealed in 2006 and replaced by new Welf.C. 18290 et seq., The Domestic Violence Shelter-Based Programs Act. (See 11 Summary (10th), Husband and Wife, Supp., §371.)

Cross-Reference: 11 Summary (10th), Husband and Wife, §371.

Definition of domestic violence:

Cross-Reference: 11 Summary (10th), Husband and Wife, §374.

(3) Claim and Waiver of Privilege. The domestic violence-counselor privilege is subject to the same waiver rules as the other major privileges. (See Ev.C. 912, as amended in 2002, Supp., supra, §67.)

Ev.C. 1037.4 was amended in 2007 to specify that "holder of the privilege" does not include the victim's guardian or conservator if the guardian or conservator is accused of perpetrating domestic violence against the victim.

(1) Balancing Procedure. The court may compel disclosure of information received by the counselor that constitutes relevant evidence involving alleged domestic violence that is the subject of a criminal proceeding, on determining that the probative value outweighs the effect of disclosure on the victim, the counseling relationship, and the counseling services. The same balancing procedure may be applied to compel disclosure in proceedings related to child abuse. ## CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XI. PRIVILEGE FOR OFFICIAL INFORMATION

A. Nature and Purpose of Privilege.

2. Official Information.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 246

[§ 246] Official Information.

(1) In General. Both federal and state statutes create additional privileges to withhold official information when its disclosure would be harmful to the public interest. Some statutes are general in form (e.g., Ev.C. 1040), while others deal specifically with a particular kind of governmental record or report to a governmental agency (see infra, §255 et seq.). (See generally People v. Superior Court (Biggs) (1971) 19 C.A.3d 522, 526, 97 C.R. 118, citing the text; Department of Trans. v. Superior Court (1996) 47 C.A.4th 852, 857, 55 C.R.2d 2 [23 U.S.C., §409 preempts state law and protects from disclosure reports or data compiled or collected for purpose of identifying or alleviating roadway hazards, but scope of preemption is narrow and extends only to information collected under federal provisions specified in §409]; RLI Ins. Co. Group v. Superior Court (1996) 51 C.A.4th 415, 436, 437, 59 C.R.2d 111 [Ev.C. 1040 does not, in combination with "deliberative process" privilege recognized by federal courts, provide basis for protecting mental process underlying administrative decision where decision is not undergoing direct judicial review]; 1 McCormick 5th, §112; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2377; C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Discovery §4.86 et seq.; C.E.B., Jefferson, 2 California Evidence Benchbook 3d, Chap. 42; 22 Cal. L. Rev. 667; 54 Cal. L. Rev. 1650 [access to governmental information in California]; 85 Harv. L. Rev. 861 [disclosure of warnings from Department of Agriculture]; 86 Harv. L. Rev. 1047 [intra-agency memoranda]; 9 Santa Clara Lawyer 301 [interagency information sharing]; 12 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1288; 7 U.S.F. L. Rev. 282 [privilege as roadblock to discovery]; 36 A.L.R.2d 1318 [privilege of custodian in civil action not to disclose official police records and reports]; 54 A.L.R.3d 768 [confidentiality of records as to public welfare recipients].)

(2) Policies Justifying Privilege. The underlying policies supporting these privileges for minor government secrets appear to be (a) to encourage full disclosure by various private persons to regulatory governmental agencies, and (b) to safeguard necessary confidential disclosures between governmental officials. (See Runyon v. Board of Prison Terms & Paroles (1938) 26 C.A.2d 183, 185, 79 P.2d 101, infra, §264; Markwell v. Sykes (1959) 173 C.A.2d 642, 645, 343 P.2d 769, infra, §269, citing the text; City Council v. Superior Court (1962) 204 C.A.2d 68, 77, 21 C.R. 896; 47 Cal L. Rev. 3.)

(3) California Statutes. Former C.C.P. 1181(5), California's general statute governing the privilege, was superseded by Ev.C. 1040; the specific statutes protecting particular kinds of official information (infra, §255 et seq.) were untouched by the revision. (See Ev.C. 920.)

In Pitchess v. Superior Court (1974) 11 C.3d 531, 538, 113 C.R. 897, 522 P.2d 305, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §50, the court observed that Ev.C. 1040 represents the exclusive means by which a public entity may assert a claim of governmental privilege based on the necessity for secrecy. (See also Shepherd v. Superior Court

"Official information" is defined by California's general statute as "information acquired in confidence by a public employee in the course of his or her duty and not open, or officially disclosed, to the public prior to the time the claim of privilege is made." (Ev.C. 1040(a).) Two kinds of privilege--absolute and conditional--are then stated. (Ev.C. 1040(b); see infra, §247.) (On requirement that Employment Development Department disclose certain information to law enforcement agencies where a felony has been charged, see Ev.C. 1040(c).) (On privilege for official information under California Public Records Act, see infra, §278 et seq.; under federal Freedom of Information Act, see infra, §302.)

Kramer* (2000) 22 C.4th 531, 542, 93 C.R.2d 497, 994 P.2d 343, Supp., infra, §505 [Department of Health Services investigator's report concerning incident that gave rise to medical malpractice action was privileged as official information and was not admissible in that action, where it was based on hospital peer review committee records; policy of encouraging candid evaluations of physicians by their peers outweighed necessity of disclosure in interest of justice]. West's Key Number Digest, Witnesses k.216 et seq.

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XI. PRIVILEGE FOR OFFICIAL INFORMATION

A. Nature and Purpose of Privilege.

3. Absolute and Conditional Privilege.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 247

[§ 247] Absolute and Conditional Privilege.

(1) Absolute Privilege. Ev.C. 1040(b)(1) recognizes an absolute privilege where disclosure is forbidden by "a statute of this state." (See Richards v. Superior Court (1968) 258 C.A.2d 635, 65 C.R. 917, infra, §263; Kleitman v. Superior Court (1999) 74 C.A.4th 324, 335, footnote 9, 87 C.R.2d 813, 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Administrative Proceedings, Supp., §24A [Ev.C. 1040(b)(1)] "necessarily includes the Brown Act's prohibition of disclosure of closed session proceedings except as provided by the Act".)

(2) Conditional Privilege. Ev.C. 1040(b)(2) states a conditional privilege under which the judge must weigh public and private interest and consider the consequences of disclosure and nondisclosure. The privilege may be claimed if the disclosure of the information "is against the public interest because there is a necessity for preserving the confidentiality of the information that outweighs the necessity for disclosure in the interest of justice." (See People v. Montgomery (1988) 205 C.A.3d 1011, 1017, 252 C.R. 779, infra, §254, citing the text [discussing balancing test].) But the statute adds two qualifications:

(a) The privilege may not be claimed if a person authorized to do so has consented to the disclosure of the information in the proceeding.

(b) In determining whether disclosure is against the public interest, "the interest of the public entity as a party in the outcome of the proceeding may not be considered."

In San Diego v. Superior Court (Tri-City Hospital District) (1986) 176 C.A.3d 1009, 222 C.R. 484, Tri-City Hospital District applied to San Diego County for designation under Health & Saf.C. 1797 et seq. as a regional trauma center. After it was rejected by the county's Proposal Review Committee in favor of Palomar/Pomerado Hospital, Tri-City petitioned for mandamus against the county and sought to discover documents connected with the review process. The county claimed statutory privilege under Ev.C. 1040 and 1157.7 (infra, §517). Held, petitioner was entitled to all the raw data examined by members of the committee, their detailed findings on each proposal, the standard by which each factor was measured, and ratings as to each factor evaluated. However, Tri-City was not entitled to production of transcripts of the committee members' discussions during deliberations or other memoranda of those discussions.

(a) Ev.C. 1157.7, which by its terms applies to a committee monitoring, evaluating, and reporting on "a general acute care hospital which has been designated" as qualified to render specialty health care services, is inapplicable to the trauma center designation process; thus the absolute privilege of Ev.C. 1040(b)(1) does not apply. (176 C.A.3d 1023.)

(b) In determining whether the conditional privilege of Ev.C. 1040(b)(2) prevents disclosure, the necessity for preserving confidentiality must be weighed against the need for disclosure in the interest of justice. The fact that Tri-City submitted an application in accordance with a notice of confidentiality, although not equivalent to a contractual agreement, is relevant to the weighing process. However, the county's interest in the outcome of the lawsuit is not a factor in determining public interest under Ev.C. 1040(b)(2); the public's interest is that the trial court have the ability to intelligently evaluate the legal issues. "This can be accomplished only if the raw data considered is discoverable. We are cited to no strong public interests in keeping this data confidential." (176 C.A.3d 1026.)

(c) Tri-City is not entitled to production of transcripts of the committee members' discussions during deliberations or other memoranda of those discussions. "[T]he public has a substantial interest in insuring that qualified professionals will not be discouraged from serving on trauma care proposal review committees. It is likely the better qualified the professionals composing the committee, the more accurate will be their evaluations of the competing hospitals. It is important to the public that the most qualified hospital be selected to provide this care even where the differences between the competing hospitals may be slight and subtle. Here, the six trauma care experts utilized were not County employees. Each contracted to perform these studies and evaluations with the understanding all deliberations would remain confidential. While knowledge that a professional's informal notes and recorded deliberations may become public knowledge may not deter all qualified persons from participating in the evaluation process, it unquestionably would deter some and, perhaps, most." (176 C.A.3d 1027.) (See Azusa v. Superior Court (1987) 191 C.A.3d 693, 696, 236 C.R. 621 [in civil rights and tort action against city and police officers, conditional privilege applied to plaintiff's request for copies of citizen complaints against defendant officers].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Conditional Privilege. See Marylander v. Superior Court (2000) 81 C.A.4th 1119, 1124, 97 C.R.2d 439 [in civil action, trial judge erred in denying plaintiff's motion to compel production of memoranda from state agency to Governor's office on ground they were absolutely privileged under Govt.C. 6254(l) and common law deliberative process privilege; only official information privilege was applicable and it required applying balancing test of Ev.C. 1040(b)(2)]; Department of Motor Vehicles v. Superior Court (2002) 100 C.A.4th 363, 374, 377, 122 C.R.2d 504 [in prosecution for vehicular manslaughter, trial judge properly ordered Department of Motor Vehicles to disclose medical records relating to defendant; Veh.C. 1808.5 (confidentiality of DMV records) does not forbid disclosure within meaning of Ev.C. 1040(b)(1), and under weighing test of Ev.C. 1040(b)(2), prosecution's and defense's need for documents outweighed DMV's interest in confidentiality]; White v. Superior Court (2002) 102 C.A.4th Supp. 1, 6, 7, 126 C.R.2d 207 [in prosecution for assault and battery by public officer, Inspector General was properly ordered to disclose report in separate investigation that allegedly cast doubt on honesty of officer investigating defendant's case; in camera review would allow trial judge to balance defendant's fair trial right against Inspector General's interest in maintaining confidentiality of records]; Suarez v. Office of Administrative Hearings (2004) 123 C.A.4th 1191, 1195, 20 C.R.3d 618 [where real estate broker was accused of fraud by Department of Real Estate, with some charges arising out of audit, administrative law judge abused his discretion in granting broker's motion to compel production of department's audit manual; confidentiality would protect department's ability to investigate and would thus advance public interest, while disclosure would not enable broker to determine validity of way in which audit was carried out].

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XI. PRIVILEGE FOR OFFICIAL INFORMATION B. Claim and Waiver.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 248

[§ 248] Claim and Waiver.

(1) General Principles. "The privilege belongs to the Government and must be asserted by it; it can neither be claimed nor waived by a private party. It is not to be lightly invoked. There must be a formal claim of privilege, lodged by the head of the department which has control over the matter, after actual personal consideration by that officer. The court itself must determine whether the circumstances are appropriate for the claim of privilege, and yet do so without forcing a disclosure of the very thing the privilege is designed to protect." (United States v. Reynolds (1953) 345 U.S. 1, 73 S.Ct. 528, 532, 97 L.Ed. 727, 733, infra, §249.) "The privilege is for the benefit of the state ... or its agencies and the cloak of testimonial immunity is thrown only around such public officials. ... Whether there can be any waiver is often a difficult question ... ; when the right of waiver exists it cannot be exercised by a subordinate employee in the exercise of his own discretion. ... In any event the existence of a privilege in the state presents a question for the court ... , not for the head of the department, to determine ... ; on a parity with that question is the further one whether the public interest would suffer by a disclosure." (Markwell v. Sykes (1959) 173 C.A.2d 642, 647, 343 P.2d 769.)

(2) Privilege of Public Entity. A "public entity" (see broad definition, Ev.C. 200, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §17) has a privilege "to refuse to disclose official information, and to prevent another from disclosing official information, if the privilege is claimed by a person authorized by the public entity to do so." (Ev.C. 1040(b).) Two aspects of this provision are emphasized in the Law Revision Commission Comment to the statute:

(a) The privilege may be claimed by the authorized representative of a public entity, and therefore may be waived by an authorized representative.

(b) The public entity may claim the privilege when its officer or employee is called to testify, and also when anyone else who has official information is about to disclose it.

(3) Privilege of Private Person. In some instances, where a specific statute requires a report from a person to a governmental agency and makes the communicated information privileged (see infra, §255 et seq.), the privilege may be claimed by either the public entity or the person reporting. But the knowledge of the person making the report is not privileged, and the governmental agency cannot prevent the person from testifying to it merely because of the report. (See Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1040.)

C. Determination and Sanction.

1. Civil Case: Disclosure to Judge.

a. General Rule: Showing of Necessity Required.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 249

[§ 249] General Rule: Showing of Necessity Required.

A practical problem confronts the courts in dealing with governmental privileges: when the claimant asserts that the information sought is privileged, how can the issue be resolved without requiring disclosure of the very information which must be kept secret? One extreme view would make the governmental officer's claim of privilege conclusive and free from judicial inquiry; another would invariably call for confidential disclosure to the judge to determine whether the matter is a state secret. (See 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2379.) In United States v. Reynolds (1953) 345 U.S. 1, 73 S.Ct. 528, 533, 97 L.Ed. 727, 734, both extremes were rejected, and the court, relying mainly on self-incrimination cases (see infra, §496), authoritatively declared a compromise formula: "Judicial control over the evidence in a case cannot be abdicated to the caprice of executive officers. Yet we will not go so far as to say that the court may automatically require a complete disclosure to the judge before the claim of privilege will be accepted in any case. It may be possible to satisfy the court, from all the circumstances of the case, that there is a reasonable danger that compulsion of the evidence will expose military matters which, in the interest of national security, should not be divulged. When this is the case, the occasion for the privilege is appropriate, and the court should not jeopardize the security which the privilege is meant to protect by insisting upon an examination of the evidence, even by the judge alone, in chambers." (See 70 Harv. L. Rev. 935; 72 Harv. L. Rev. 781 [federal court in camera trial of patent claim despite secrecy order].)

In the Reynolds case, an Air Force plane, on a flight testing secret electronic equipment, burned and crashed, killing three civilian observers and all but three of the crew. Suits for death of the civilians were brought under the Federal Tort Claims Act, and plaintiffs sought inspection (under F.R. Civ. P., Rule 34) of the Air Force official accident investigation report and statements taken from the surviving crew members. The Government claimed privilege but offered to produce without cost the three surviving crew members for examination on all matters except those classified, thus making their testimony available on the negligence and causation issues. Plaintiffs declined the offer; the district judge ordered delivery of the documents to him to determine whether they contained privileged matter; and, on the Government's refusal, the judge imposed the sanction of F.R. Civ. P., Rule 37(b)(2)(i), taking the fact of negligence as established. Judgment for plaintiffs followed. Held, reversed. Applying the formula set forth above, the Court said: "In each case, the showing of necessity which is made will determine how far the court should probe in satisfying itself that the occasion for invoking the privilege is appropriate. Where there is a strong showing of necessity, the claim of privilege should not be lightly accepted, but even the most compelling necessity cannot overcome the claim of privilege if the court is ultimately satisfied that military secrets are at stake. A fortiori, where necessity is dubious, a formal claim of privilege, made under the circumstances of this case, will have to prevail. Here, necessity was greatly minimized by an available alternative, which might have given respondents the evidence to make out their case without forcing a showdown on the claim of privilege. By their failure to pursue that alternative, respondents have posed the privilege question for decision with the formal claim of privilege set against a dubious showing of necessity." (73 S.Ct. 533, 97 L.Ed 735.)

The Reynolds theory is incorporated in Ev.C. 915(b), calling for disclosure in chambers where this is necessary. (See supra, §88.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XI. PRIVILEGE FOR OFFICIAL INFORMATION

C. Determination and Sanction.

1. Civil Case: Disclosure to Judge.
  - b. Procedure.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 250

[§ 250] Procedure.

In Shepherd v. Superior Court (1976) 17 C.3d 107, 130 C.R. 257, 550 P.2d 161, a wrongful death case, plaintiff sought to compel the district attorney to disclose certain information which he had developed in the course of an investigation into the fatal shooting of plaintiff's decedent. The district attorney claimed absolute privilege under Govt.C. 6254(f), which forbids disclosure of certain law enforcement investigatory material (see infra, §289 et seq.). Held, the privilege of nondisclosure was conditional rather than absolute and must be evaluated by the trial judge.

(a) The effect of the Public Records Act (Govt.C. 6250 et seq.) is limited to that act and does not apply to procedures outside the act. (17 C.3d 123.) (See infra, §278 et seq.)

(b) The only applicable privilege is the conditional privilege set forth in Ev.C. 1040(b)(2) (supra, §247). This conditional privilege, like the absolute privilege, applies only to information acquired in confidence. Some of the material sought, e.g., statements by defendant police officers, was not acquired in confidence within the meaning of Ev.C. 1040(a) (supra, §246). "Manifestly, it cannot be maintained that voluntary statements of a criminal suspect to investigating authorities are 'confidential.'" (17 C.3d 124.)

(c) Even material acquired in confidence by the district attorney may be made available if disclosure is within the public interest, a determination which the trial judge must make before denying discovery. With respect to each item of material found to be discoverable within the provisions of C.C.P. 1985 (see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §218 et seq.), the trial judge must consider whether there is a need to preserve confidentiality which outweighs the need for disclosure in the interest of justice. If the judge decides that question in the affirmative, then disclosure is against the public interest and the particular item is privileged. If the judge decides otherwise, production should be ordered. The weighing procedure will thus entail a separate assessment of the necessity for disclosure in the interest of justice and the necessity for preserving the confidentiality of the information. (17 C.3d 125.)

(d) Each assessment should include a consideration of the consequences to the litigant of nondisclosure and to the public of disclosure. Considering consequences to the litigant will involve matters similar to those in issue in the determination of materiality and good cause under C.C.P. 1985, including the importance of the material sought to the fair presentation of the litigant's case, the availability of the material to the litigant by other means, and the effectiveness and relative difficulty of such other means. Considering consequences to the public will involve the effect of disclosure on the integrity of public processes and procedures. (17 C.3d 126.)

In summary, the following procedures should be followed: "First, the trial court should undertake to determine, without respect to possible privilege, whether and to what extent the moving papers are in compliance with the requirements of specificity, materiality, and good cause set forth in section 1985 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Second, with respect to each of the items sought which meet with those requirements the trial court should determine whether it comprehends 'information acquired in confidence' which may be subject to the privilege for official information set forth in section 1040 of the Evidence Code; items which qualify for production under the standards of section 1985 but which do not consist of 'information acquired in confidence' should be ordered to be produced. Third, with respect to items which qualify for production under the standards of section 1985 but which consist of 'information acquired in confidence' within the meaning of section 1040 of the Evidence Code, the trial court should proceed to determine whether they qualify for the conditional privilege of subdivision (b)(2) of that section in that their disclosure is against the public interest; all items which do not so qualify should be ordered to be produced." (17 C.3d 127.) (See also Parnes v. Superior Court (1978) 81 C.A.3d 831, 834, 836, 146 C.R. 818 [mandamus issued to compel trial court to engage in weighing process under Shepherd guidelines]; Dominguez v. Superior Court (1980) 101 C.A.3d 6, 11, 161 C.R. 407 [same].)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

C. Determination and Sanction.

1. Civil Case: Disclosure to Judge.
  - c. No Dismissal of Action.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 251

[§ 251] No Dismissal of Action.

"This case presents an issue of first impression concerning the power of the trial court to create a nonstatutory, local state secrets privilege that functions as a special defense to bar or abate an action under Code of Civil Procedure section 597." (Rubin v. Los Angeles (1987) 190 C.A.3d 560, 566, 235 C.R. 516.)

The Jewish Defense League (JDL) and one of its officers claimed that their constitutional rights of privacy, freedom of association and freedom of speech had been violated by an undercover police officer who infiltrated the organization. Plaintiffs alleged that the officer went beyond the scope of legitimate surveillance, incited the organization to violence and took other actions "designed to destroy the group's legitimate First Amendment activities." Defendants, claiming privilege as an affirmative defense, did not admit or deny these allegations, refused to respond to interrogatories, and moved for dismissal of the action. The trial judge combined the bifurcated trial procedure for special defenses (C.C.P. 597; see 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §164 et seq.) with the in camera procedure of Ev.C. 1040 privilege claims to try the affirmative defense prior to a trial of plaintiff's complaint. Following the in camera hearing, the judge denied plaintiffs' motion to compel answers to their interrogatories and dismissed the action. Held, reversed.

(a) C.C.P. 597 inapplicable. An evidentiary privilege has never been held to constitute a special defense that bars or abates an action. (190 C.A.3d 575.)

(b) State secrets privilege inapplicable.

(1) The state secrets privilege, though absolute when successfully invoked (see supra, §245), does not require the blanket dismissal of all actions; dismissal is warranted only when no amount of effort and care on the part of the court and the parties will safeguard the privileged material; e.g., when military secrets are so central to the subject matter of the litigation that any attempt to proceed will threaten their disclosure. (190 C.A.3d 578, 579.)

(2) Courts have relied on Totten v. United States (1875) 92 U.S. 105, 23 L.Ed. 605, in dismissing complaints where the maintenance of the action would inevitably lead to the disclosure of secret information. In the instant case, however, plaintiffs may be able to prove their allegations that the alleged surveillance exceeded the limits of proper police investigative work, without discovery of any information from defendants. Hence, plaintiffs can proceed without the use of any privileged evidence, particularly because plaintiffs are not challenging the propriety of the infiltration of the JDL. Moreover, plaintiffs do not have any secret information in their possession that they could unwittingly disclose in an attempt to prove a prima facie case. Dismissal of the action was therefore improper under federal law. (190 C.A.3d 579.)

(c) Ev.C. 1040 not a dismissal statute. Ev.C. 1040 " 'represents the exclusive means by which a public entity may assert a claim of governmental privilege based on the necessity for secrecy.' " (190 C.A.3d 583, quoting Shepherd v. Superior Court (1976) 17 C.3d 107, 130 C.R. 257, 550 P.2d 161, supra, §250.) "Section 1040, however, does not allow the dismissal of a civil action based on a threatened disclosure of local state secrets. By its terms, section 1040 only allows for the exclusion of the privileged official information; it does not provide for the dismissal of an action brought by a private party." (190 C.A.3d 583.)

(d) Motion to compel responses to interrogatories improperly denied. In denying plaintiffs' discovery motion, the trial judge "failed to make the threshold determination of whether the information claimed to be privileged was 'acquired in confidence by a public employee in the course of his or her duty and not open, or officially disclosed, to the public prior to the time the claim of privilege is made.' " (190 C.A.3d 586; see Ev.C. 1040(a) and Shepherd.) On remand, in balancing the need for preserving confidentiality with the necessity for disclosure, the trial judge should consider, as one factor, the passage of time since the end of the alleged infiltration. (190 C.A.3d 587.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XI. PRIVILEGE FOR OFFICIAL INFORMATION

C. Determination and Sanction.

2. Criminal Case: Dismissal or Adverse Finding.

a. General Rule.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 252

[§ 252] General Rule.

United States v. Reynolds (1953) 345 U.S. 1, 73 S.Ct. 528, 97 L.Ed. 727, supra, §249, recognized and reaffirmed a different principle applicable to a criminal case: "[S]ince the Government which prosecutes an accused also has the duty to see that justice is done, it is unconscionable to allow it to undertake prosecution and then invoke its governmental privileges to deprive the accused of anything which might be material to his defense." (73 S.Ct. 534, 97 L.Ed. 735.)

Ev.C. 1042(a) carries out this principle by providing that if a claim of privilege is sustained, "the presiding officer shall make such order or finding of fact adverse to the public entity bringing the proceeding as is required by law upon any issue in the proceeding to which the privileged information is material."

This section is limited, however, to cases in which the privilege is asserted by the State of California or its public entity. If (1) the disclosure is absolutely forbidden by a federal statute, or (2) the information is withheld by the federal Government or by another state, there is no unconscionable conduct by this state or its agencies, hence, no reason for imposition of the sanctions. (Ev.C. 1042 and Law Rev. Com. Comment; see People v. Parham (1963) 60 C.2d 378, 382, 33 C.R. 497, 384 P.2d 1001.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

C. Determination and Sanction.

2. Criminal Case: Dismissal or Adverse Finding.

b. Illustrations.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 253

[§ 253] Illustrations.

In Hines v. Superior Court (1988) 203 C.A.3d 1231, 251 C.R. 28, defendant was charged with sale of narcotics. At the preliminary hearing, Officer W testified that he was working on covert surveillance and, watching the corner of Fifth and Grove with binoculars, he observed a number of defendant's narcotics transactions. On cross-examination, Officer W was asked where he and his partner were located when they made their observations, and he claimed the privilege of Ev.C. 1040(b) (supra, §247). The magistrate ruled that the privilege applied, and limited the cross-examination to questions regarding any obstructions or limitations on his observations. Held, the privilege applied, but the adverse finding required by Ev.C. 1042(a) was required.

(a) The adverse finding is required only if the privileged information is material, and the prosecution argued that the location of the surveillance is not material on the question of guilt or innocence. But the purpose of the defense in learning the location was to test the officer's clear and unobstructed view of the scene, and on that issue the privileged information was material. Hence failure of the magistrate to make the finding required reversal. (203 C.A.3d 1235.)

(b) For the guidance of magistrates faced with similar decisions, the Law Revision Commission Comments to Ev.C. 1042 suggest that, if the privileged information is material to the defendant's guilt or innocence, the consequences of invocation of the privilege should be dismissal; but if the information relates to a narrower issue, such as the legality of a warrantless search, striking of the testimony or some other order might be proper. (203 C.A.3d 1235, 1236.) In the instant case, the appropriate order should have been to strike the testimony, and without it there was insufficient evidence to support the holding order. (203 C.A.3d 1236.) (See People v. Montgomery (1988) 205 C.A.3d 1011, 1022, 252 C.R. 779, infra, §254 [following Hines under nearly identical facts].)

In People v. Walker (1991) 230 C.A.3d 230, 282 C.R. 12, defendant was convicted of selling cocaine based on the eyewitness testimony of an officer who had observed the transaction from a location he refused to reveal at trial, asserting the official information privilege (Ev.C. 1040). Defendant contended that the officer's location was a material issue, and that he had been deprived of a fair trial by the trial judge's failure to make an adverse finding under Ev.C. 1042(a), striking the officer's testimony after he asserted the privilege. Held, conviction affirmed.

(a) An officer's surveillance location is privileged information under Ev.C. 1040(b). (230 C.A.3d 235, citing Montgomery and Hines.) Here, the privilege was properly sustained under the balancing process required by Ev.C. 1040(b)(2): the officer testified that the transaction took place in a gang area and that reprisals might result from disclosure; and defendant had no support for his claim of need for the information. (230 C.A.3d 236.)

(b) Under Ev.C. 1042(a) and United States v. Reynolds (1953) 345 U.S. 1, 73 S.Ct. 528, 97 L.Ed. 727, supra, §249, official information must be material in order for the government to suffer consequences for its nondisclosure. Contrary to defendant's argument, a surveillance location is not always material. (230 C.A.3d 237.)

(c) Unlike the situations in Montgomery and Hines, where the officer had made observations at a substantial distance under questionable circumstances, here the observation was made only 15 feet away from the transaction, under good lighting conditions. There was no basis for concluding that the officer's exact location would have been material on the issue of guilt. (230 C.A.3d 239.) (See In re Sergio M. (1993) 13 C.A.4th 809, 813, 814, 16 C.R.2d 701 [following Walker]; People v. Garza (1995) 32 C.A.4th 148, 154, 155, 38 C.R.2d 11 [same]; People v. Haider (1995) 34 C.A.4th 661, 668, 40 C.R.2d 369 [same; contrary to suggestion in Garza, Walker court did not hold that materiality is necessarily shown by evidence that at some point within area surveilled officer could not have viewed defendant because of some obstruction].)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

C. Determination and Sanction.

2. Criminal Case: Dismissal or Adverse Finding. c. Balancing Process.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 254

[§ 254] Balancing Process.

Ev.C. 1040 imposes a balancing process on the courts, implicitly recognizing that some kinds of governmental secrecy "must be locked away from the most necessitous litigant," but not explicitly requiring that the litigant establish the information's materiality, relevance or even admissibility. "In a criminal case the defendant must at least show how the information affects the preparation or presentation of his defense." The trial judge must then consider alternative evidence offered by the state. "An alternative which fulfills the demanding litigant's actual needs minimizes or eliminates necessity for fulfilling the original demand and avoids a showdown on the claim of privilege." (People v. Superior Court (Biggs) (1971) 19 C.A.3d 522, 530, 534, 97 C.R. 118.)

In the Biggs case, defendant, charged with having sold methedrine to an undercover operator of the Bureau of Narcotics Enforcement, claimed that he was also an active undercover operator for the Bureau and was checking on the activities of a roommate who actually sold the methedrine. Through a subpoena duces tecum, defendant sought production of notebooks and diaries kept by Bureau agents, in hopes of establishing his connection with the Bureau. The Bureau invoked the privilege against harmful disclosure of official information (e.g., contacts with informers) and moved to quash the subpoena. After sustaining the claim of privilege, the trial judge ruled that it would order dismissal of the charges because the information was material and bore on defendant's guilt or innocence. To avoid that result, the prosecution offered to supply defendant with those parts of the notebooks and diaries describing reports made by defendant; other matters would be masked out. Defendant did not accept the offer, the trial judge stood by his ruling and the prosecution applied for a writ of prohibition to prevent entry of an order of dismissal. On receiving a stay order from the reviewing court, the trial judge allowed the trial to continue. Defendant was found guilty but the judge deferred sentencing until disposition of the petition for prohibition. Held, petition denied; "the absence of a statutory prosecution appeal expresses a legislative policy against exposing the accused to a possible retrial, even though the policy transmutes an erroneous trial court ruling into an erroneous dismissal." (19 C.A.3d 535.)

(a) Without some probing by a neutral tribunal a government claim of privilege would be impregnable. To surface appearances, Ev.C. 915(b) supplies the probing mechanism, "an in camera inquiry by the trial judge and the government, culminating in a ruling for or against disclosure." If the judge upholds the privilege, the judge enters the protective order required under Ev.C. 1042(a). (19 C.A.3d 530.)

"Viewed in these literal terms, section 915, subdivision (b), is apt to lure court and counsel into error. The in camera hearing is far too constricted to permit an enlightened determination. Shared only by the court and government, it provides no means for assessing the defendant's claim. It is paradoxical to hold a hearing for balancing the conflicting interests of two sides when only one is represented. Deprived of the three-way communication habitual to an adversary setting, the judge cannot simultaneously perform the tasks of inspecting and identifying the material, measuring the government's claim to withhold it and assessing the defendant's need to get it. The ex parte process places too much confidence in judicial prescience and invites error, even unfairness." (19 C.A.3d 530.)

(b) Ev.C. 915(b) leads to all-or-nothing rulings when better solutions might be available, and supplies no record on appeal from a conviction. Because the in camera hearing is adapted to no more than a preliminary inquiry, the trial court "should continue its inquiry in an adversary setting, probing the information's relevance to the defense, exploring with counsel the availability of other alternatives and, if necessary, hearing testimony voir dire. Only at the conclusion of an adversary inquiry is the court in a position to assess the counter-balancing weight of the defendant's need, to appraise the possibility of reasonable alternatives and to determine what cost shall be exacted of the prosecution. Only at the conclusion of an adversary inquiry is the court qualified to rule for or against the government's claim of privilege." (19 C.A.3d 531.)

(c) The in camera hearing under Ev.C. 915(b) is not exclusive but permissive. "A wider inquiry is offered by other Evidence Code provisions, which authorize hearings outside the jury's presence for the purpose of determining preliminary or foundational facts, including the existence or nonexistence of a privilege." (19 C.A.3d 531.)

(d) Here, the prosecution offer (actually a counteroffer) to supply the relevant information, with other entries masked out, included the very information the defense assertedly needed. "Biggs' attorney should have accepted it. He did not. The trial court should have ascertained whether the offer reasonably fulfilled the defendant's needs and, if it did, should have forced the defense to accept the offer on pain of an adverse ruling. The court did not do so. At this point error occurred. It was traceable not to intrinsic error in the court's earlier ruling of nondisclosure, but rather to the ruling's prematurity." (19 C.A.3d 533.) The disclosure ruling should have been withheld pending inquiry into a possible middle ground. "The court should have ruled after and not before the state's counteroffer." (19 C.A.3d 534.)

(e) Despite the fact that the parties and counsel were misled by the draftmanship of Ev.C. 915(b), "which creates the erroneous impression that a ruling for or against privileges should be made at the close of the court's in camera inquiry," the reviewing court was without power to grant prohibition because the writ would expose the accused to a possible retrial. (19 C.A.3d 535.) (See In re Olson (1974) 37 C.A.3d 783, 112 C.R. 579, 3 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Punishment, §619 [suggesting procedures for establishing privileged nondisclosure of inmate's file or compelling release of information to inmate seeking parole]; In re Muszalski (1975) 52 C.A.3d 475, 125 C.R. 281, supra, §91 [in camera hearing may properly include testimony to explain significance of document for which privilege is claimed]; People v. Alexander (1983) 140 C.A.3d 647, 657, 658, 189 C.R. 906 [discussing Muszalski and holding that government had made sufficient showing to support judge's determination that notes of interviews with prison inmates should not be disclosed]; People v. Marghzar (1987) 192 C.A.3d 1129, 1134, 239 C.R. 130 [defendant presented no evidence as to how disclosure of "check digit" formula used to detect counterfeit vehicle identification numbers would aid defense; necessity for preserving confidentiality outweighed defendant's interest]; People v. Walker (1991) 230 C.A.3d 230, 236, 282 C.R. 12, supra, §253.)

People v. Montgomery (1988) 205 C.A.3d 1011, 252 C.R. 779, involved Officer W's refusal to disclose his surveillance location, under circumstances nearly identical to those existing in Hines v. Superior Court (1988) 203 C.A.3d 1231, 251 C.R. 28 (supra, §253). In reversing defendant's convictions for possession and sale of marijuana, the court elaborated on the balancing procedure outlined in the Biggs decision as follows:

(a) "The correct procedure in these cases is for the court first to ask the defendant to make a prima facie showing for disclosure. ... If defendant does so, the court should then proceed under section 915 and hold an in camera hearing attended by the party claiming the privilege. ... The defendant should be given an opportunity to propose questions to be asked at this hearing. The in camera hearing is a preliminary inquiry into whether the claim of privilege should be upheld. If the People succeed in camera, the adversary process should be utilized, 'probing the information's relevance to the defense, exploring with counsel the availability of other alternatives, and, if necessary, hearing testimony voir dire.' ... The hearing should conclude with the trial court making findings sufficient to enable the appellate court to review its decision." (205 C.A.3d 1021.)

(b) A full inquiry of this nature did not occur here. (1) The trial judge did not engage in an Ev.C. 915 hearing to determine the preliminary fact of the nature of the surveillance location. (2) The trial judge did not engage in the required balancing process. Instead, he concluded that, although the surveillance location was material to defendant's case, it was privileged as a matter of law, because Officer W testified that the location was still in use and its disclosure might endanger lives. (3) The trial judge failed to make the adverse finding, under Ev.C. 1042 (see supra, §252), which is required whenever the prosecution withholds information which is unquestionably material. (205 C.A.3d 1022.)

(c) A full-scale hearing should explore any available alternatives. For example, the surveillance location could be revealed to defense counsel, subject to the condition that he not reveal it to anyone else. Or the prosecution could use a videotape of the crime scene, taken from the surveillance location, to establish the unobstructed nature of the view. (205 C.A.3d 1022.)

(d) Because the convictions were based in large part on what was observed from the surveillance location, they cannot stand without a proper resolution of the question of privilege. (205 C.A.3d 1023.)

The opinion concludes by noting that, as in cases involving the identity of an informer (see infra, §§325, 326), no adverse finding under Ev.C. 1042 would be required if Officer W's observations merely formed the basis for a search warrant or for probable cause to make an arrest. (205 C.A.3d 1023, footnote 8.)

XI. PRIVILEGE FOR OFFICIAL INFORMATION

D. Privilege for Taxpayer's Statements and Returns.

1. Privileged Matters.

a. Original Statements and Returns.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 255

[§ 255] Original Statements and Returns.

A property owner's statement to the tax assessor is secret. (Rev.C. 451, 833; see Gallagher v. Boller (1964) 231 C.A.2d 482, 489, 41 C.R. 880.) The same is true of information furnished by a retailer under the Sales and Use Tax Law. (Rev.C. 7056 [disclosure prohibition]; Rev.C. 7056.5 ["willful unauthorized inspection or unwarranted disclosure or use" of information as misdemeanor]; see McCabe v. Snyder (1999) 75 C.A.4th 337, 345, 89 C.R.2d 315 [Rev.C. 7056 prohibited disclosure of names and addresses of those who paid motor vehicle smog impact fee on vehicles registered out of state].)

The federal and state income tax acts normally prohibit disclosure by tax officials of information contained in the taxpayer's return. (Rev.C. 19542 [disclosure prohibition]; Rev.C. 19542.1 ["willful unauthorized inspection or unwarranted disclosure or use of confidential information" as misdemeanor]; see Franchise Tax Bd. v. Superior Court (1950) 36 C.2d 538, 547, 225 P.2d 905; *Garner v. The Unemployment Insurance Code contains similar provisions. (Unemp.Ins.C. 1094 [disclosure prohibition]; Unemp.Ins.C. 13018 ["willful unauthorized inspection or unwarranted disclosure or use" of information as misdemeanor].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

With some exceptions, C.C. 1799.1a, added in 2000, prohibits the disclosure of "information obtained from a federal or state income tax return or any information obtained from a tax schedule submitted with the return by a consumer in connection with a financial or other business-related transaction." (C.C. 1799.1a(a).) "Unrelated use" of the information is also prohibited; a use is "unrelated" if it is not necessary to effect, administer, or enforce the financial or other business-related transaction with the consumer, or is beyond the scope of the stated purpose to which the consumer consented for the use of the return or any other information he or she submitted. (C.C. 1799.1a(b).) Each violation of the statute constitutes a separate cause of action for which damages are recoverable. (C.C. 1799.1a(e).) (See *Firestone v. ## CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XI. PRIVILEGE FOR OFFICIAL INFORMATION

D. Privilege for Taxpayer's Statements and Returns.

1. Privileged Matters.
- b. Copies of Tax Returns.

[§ 256] Copies of Tax Returns.

There is considerable authority to the effect that the privilege against disclosure of income tax returns covers only the original returns, and that in ordinary litigation a copy of a return may be demanded and its production required in discovery proceedings. (See 1 McCormick 5th, §112; 31 So. Cal. L. Rev. 212; 70 A.L.R.2d 240 [discovery and inspection of income tax returns in actions between private individuals].)

However, Rev.C. 19542 et seq. prohibit disclosure except in a few special situations (see infra, §258 et seq.). Accordingly, Webb v. Standard Oil Co. (1957) 49 C.2d 509, 319 P.2d 621, which construed substantively similar predecessor statutes, held that in civil litigation a party cannot be compelled to produce a copy of his or her return:

"The purpose of the amended statutory provisions prohibiting disclosure is to facilitate tax enforcement by encouraging a taxpayer to make full and truthful declarations in his return, without fear that his statements will be revealed or used against him for other purposes. If the information can be secured by forcing the taxpayer to produce a copy of his return, the primary legislative purpose of the secrecy provisions will be defeated. The effect of the statutory prohibition is to render the returns privileged, and the privilege should not be nullified by permitting third parties to obtain the information by adopting the indirect procedure of demanding copies of the tax returns." (49 C.2d 513.) (See 31 So. Cal. L. Rev. 211.)

The Webb court also held that, because both the federal and state returns contained substantially the same information on the issue involved, production of the federal returns could not be required. "Under the circumstances, forcing disclosure of the information in the federal tax return would be equivalent to forcing disclosure of the state returns and would operate to defeat the purposes of the state statute." (49 C.2d 513.) (See 31 So. Cal. L. Rev. 211.)

Later cases have followed the Webb rule. (See Aday v. Superior Court (1961) 55 C.2d 789, 796, 13 C.R. 415, 362 P.2d 47; Sav-On Drugs v. Superior Court (1975) 15 C.3d 1, 6, 123 C.R. 283, 538 P.2d 739 [if Rev.C. 7056 (confidentiality of sales and use tax information) protects sales tax returns themselves, statute also protects information contained in returns; thus, pretrial discovery about specific sales tax deductions was improper]; Brown v. Superior Court (1977) 71 C.A.3d 141, 143, 139 C.R. 327 [privilege covers copies of W-2 forms required to be attached to returns]; In re Marriage of Brown (1979) 99 C.A.3d 702, 707, 160 C.R. 524, infra, §259; Sammur v. Sammur (1980) 103 C.A.3d 557, 163 C.R. 193, infra, §259; Rifkind v. Superior Court (1981) 123 C.A.3d 1045, 1048, 177 C.R. 82 [wife in marital dissolution proceeding improperly sought extensive discovery of tax returns of husband's law corporation and investment partnerships]; King v. Mobile Home Rent Review Bd. (1989) 216 C.A.3d 1532, 1537, 265 C.R. 624 [privilege applicable in administrative proceeding]; and see 74 Harv. L. Rev. 1010.)

More recently, however, the Supreme Court has limited the application of Webb by holding that in a marital dissolution proceeding, one spouse may discover corporate tax returns and payroll tax returns of the other spouse. (See Schnabel v. Superior Court (1993) 5 C.4th 704, 722, 723, 21 C.R.2d 200, 854 P.2d 1117, infra, §259 [disapproving Rifkind v. Superior Court, supra, insofar as it held that all tax returns are absolutely privileged]; and see 38 A.L.R.4th 145 [spouse's right to discovery of closely held corporation records during divorce proceeding]; 29 Hastings L. J. 775 [Case for Abrogation of Taxpayer Privilege in California; urging that Webb be overruled].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Deary v. Superior Court (2001) 87 C.A.4th 1072, 1078, 105 C.R.2d 132 [extending rationale of Webb v. Standard Oil Co. of Calif. (1957) 49 C.2d 509, 319 P.2d 621, text, p. 530, to copies of estate tax returns; Rev.C. 14251 renders returns privileged, and privilege should not be nullified by permitting third parties to demand copies]; Firestone v. Hoffman (2006) 140 C.A.4th 1408, 1419, 1420, 45 C.R.3d 534 [although Webb extended tax return privilege from state to federal returns, there is no reason for further extension to foreign tax returns]; 1 McCormick 6th, §112.

D. Privilege for Taxpayer's Statements and Returns.

1. Privileged Matters.

c. Information From Tax Consultants.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 257

[§ 257] Information From Tax Consultants.

Persons who assist taxpayers in the preparation of state or federal income tax returns are prohibited from disclosing any information obtained in the process. Exceptions are allowed when disclosure is: (1) consented to by the taxpayer in a separate document; (2) expressly authorized by state or federal law; (3) necessary to the preparation of the return; or (4) pursuant to court order. (B. & P.C. 17530.5.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Firestone v. Hoffman (2006) 140 C.A.4th 1408, 1418, 45 C.R.3d 534 [B. & P.C. 17530.5 does not create or codify privilege shielding litigant from discovery of litigant's own tax returns, nor does it apply to foreign tax returns].

To the extent a communication between a federally authorized tax practitioner and a client would be considered a privileged communication if it were between an attorney and client, the communication is entitled to the same protections enjoyed by attorney-client communications. However, this privilege may be asserted only in noncriminal tax matters before the State Board of Equalization, and it does not apply to any written communication between a federally authorized tax practitioner and a director, shareholder, officer, or employee, agent, or representative of a corporation in connection with promoting "the direct or indirect participation of the corporation in any tax shelter, or in any proceeding to revoke or otherwise discipline any license or right to practice by any governmental agency." (Rev.C. 7099.1(b).) Further, communications made before the effective date of the statute creating this privilege are not protected by it. (Rev.C. 7099.1, added in 2000; see similar provisions regarding Franchise Tax Board (Rev.C. 21028, added in 2000) and Employment Development Department (Unemp.Ins.C. 13019, added in 2000).)

XI. PRIVILEGE FOR OFFICIAL INFORMATION

D. Privilege for Taxpayer's Statements and Returns.

2. Exceptions.

a. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 258

[§ 258] In General.

(1) General Rule of Disclosure. Most statutes requiring secrecy contain express authorization for disclosure in exceptional situations. The most common examples are as follows:

(a) Rev.C. 408(c), Govt.C. 15612 [duty of local assessors to disclose records to certain governmental agencies]; see State Bd. of Equalization v. Watson (1968) 68 C.2d 307, 311, 66 C.R. 377, 437 P.2d 761.

(b) Rev.C. 7056 [Sales and Use Tax; Governor may order examination by state or federal officers].

(c) Rev.C. 19545 [franchise and personal income tax; disclosure permitted, under specified conditions, in judicial or administrative proceeding pertaining to tax administration].

(d) Rev.C. 19553 [disclosure of welfare applicants' tax returns].

(2) Welfare Exemption Affidavit. In Gallagher v. Boller (1964) 231 C.A.2d 482, 41 C.R. 880, plaintiff's client, a laundry, complained that a church, tax-exempt under the welfare exemption (see 9 Summary (9th), Taxation, §150 et seq.), was operating a commercial laundry in competition with it. Plaintiff was refused permission to inspect the church's affidavit and the assessor's ruling thereon. Held, mandamus granted. A compulsory property statement is secret (see supra, §255), but the voluntary application for the welfare exemption is not:

"Such contrasting circumstances, i.e., a statutory requirement of confidentiality as to a required property statement and a lack of such statutory requirement as to voluntary application for welfare tax-exemption, indicate a legislative intent that information furnished by a welfare organization in seeking the special privilege or benefit of tax exemption shall not be confidential. Such circumstances also indicate a public policy that a welfare organization, which contemplates applying for such special privilege, must elect whether it will forego the matter of keeping its property affairs confidential in order to be classified as a nontaxpaying owner of property." (231 C.A.2d 491.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

D. Privilege for Taxpayer's Statements and Returns.

2. Exceptions.

b. Family Law Proceedings.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 259

[§ 259] Family Law Proceedings.

(1) Support Proceedings. In Miller v. Superior Court (1977) 71 C.A.3d 145, 149, 139 C.R. 521, the court recognized an implied statutory exception for a child support proceeding seeking payment of arrearages. In re Marriage of Brown (1979) 99 C.A.3d 702, 709, 160 C.R. 524, distinguishing Miller, denied discovery where the purpose was imposition of a new support obligation; and Sammut v. Sammut (1980) 103 C.A.3d 557, 562, 163 C.R. 193, denied discovery in an action by a former wife seeking an increase in spousal support.

The Legislature solved the problem by the enactment of former C.C. 4700.7, which was repealed and replaced in 1994 by similar Family C. 3552:

(a) In a proceeding involving child, family, or spousal support, no party may refuse to submit copies of his or her state and federal income tax returns to the court, whether individual or joint. (Family C. 3552(a).)

(b) The tax returns may be examined by the opposing party and are discoverable by him or her. A party may also be examined by the opposing party about the contents of a tax return submitted pursuant to the statute. (Family C. 3552(b).)

(c) If the judge finds that it is relevant to the case to retain the tax return, the return must be sealed and maintained as a confidential court record. However, if the judge finds that the tax return is not relevant to disposition of the case, all copies of the tax return must be returned to the party who submitted it. (Family C. 3552(c).)

(2) Paternity Actions. Family C. 3552 does not apply in a paternity action until the issue of paternity is finally adjudicated; a court's finding of paternity for the limited purpose of making an award of interim support is not a finding of paternity for the purposes of the statute. (Thomas B. v. Superior Court (1985) 175 C.A.3d 255, 264, 220 C.R. 577 [construing predecessor statute].)

(3) Marital Dissolution Proceedings. In Schnabel v. Superior Court (1993) 5 C.4th 704, 21 C.R.2d 200, 854 P.2d 1117, the wife in a marital dissolution proceeding sought to discover the business records and corporate and quarterly payroll tax returns of a close corporation in which 30% of the stock was community property. She served a deposition subpoena for production of business records on the custodian of the corporate records, and the trial court denied the corporation's motion to quash the subpoena. Held, the wife was entitled to corporate business records and tax returns regarding the husband himself, but not payroll tax information identifying third persons. All tax returns are not absolutely privileged. The marital community and the corporation were closely related, and the corporation was not a public corporation whose shares had a readily ascertainable market value. "These facts, combined with the legislatively declared public policy in favor of full disclosure in a marital dissolution proceeding, warrant an exception to the privilege in this case limited to those tax returns that are reasonably related to the purpose for which they are sought." (5 C.4th 722.) (See 21 Pepperdine L. Rev. 266 [Schnabel].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Support Proceedings. See In re Marriage of Sachs (2002) 95 C.A.4th 1144, 1161, 116 C.R.2d 273, 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Enforcement of Judgment, Supp., §275 [at judgment debtor examination of former husband who had accumulated considerable arrearages of child and spousal support, wife was entitled to copy of husband's tax returns and had right to examine him about their contents to extent allowed by Family C. 3552, notwithstanding husband's invocation of self-incrimination privilege; statute strikes appropriate balance between conflicting interests of supported spouse and supporting spouse].

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

D. Privilege for Taxpayer's Statements and Returns.

2. Exceptions.

c. IRS Examination of Accountant's Audit.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 260

[§ 260] IRS Examination of Accountant's Audit.

In United States v. Arthur Young & Co. (1984) 465 U.S. 805, 104 S.Ct. 1495, 79 L.Ed.2d 826, the Court upheld the statutory power of the Internal Revenue Service to examine tax accrual workpapers prepared by a corporation's independent certified public accountant in the course of a regular financial audit.

(a) The auditor may assess opinions, speculations, and projections of management with regard to unclear, aggressive, or questionable tax positions that may have been taken on prior returns, and the tax accrual workpapers record the process of examination and analysis. "In short, tax accrual workpapers pinpoint the 'soft spots' on a corporation's tax return by highlighting those areas in which the corporate taxpayer has taken a position that may, at some later date, require the payment of additional taxes." (104 S.Ct. 1500, 79 L.Ed.2d 833.)

(b) Although the workpapers may not be relevant in an evidentiary sense, the intent of the federal statute is to allow the IRS to obtain items of potential relevance to an ongoing investigation; records that "illuminate any aspect of the return" are highly relevant to legitimate IRS inquiry. (104 S.Ct. 1501, 1502, 79 L.Ed.2d 833, 834.)

(c) The Court of Appeals "fashioned a work-product immunity doctrine for tax accrual workpapers prepared by independent auditors." (104 S.Ct. 1499, 79 L.Ed.2d 831.) The statutory language does not support such a doctrine, and no accountant-client privilege exists under federal law. (104 S.Ct. 1503, 79 L.Ed.2d 835.) Nor does the attorney work product doctrine of Hickman v. Taylor (1947) 329 U.S. 495, 67 S.Ct. 385, 91 L.Ed. 451, supra, §137, provide a persuasive analogy. That doctrine was founded on the private attorney's role as the client's confidential advisor and advocate; the independent certified public accountant performs a different role: "By certifying the public reports that collectively depict a corporation's financial status, the independent auditor assumes a public responsibility transcending any employment relationship with the client. The independent public accountant performing this special function owes ultimate allegiance to the corporation's creditors and stockholders, as well as to investing public. This 'public watchdog' function demands that the accountant maintain total independence from the client at all times and requires complete fidelity to the public trust." (104 S.Ct. 1503, 79 L.Ed.2d 836.) (See 98 Harv. L. Rev. 295; on Court of Appeals opinion, see 14 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 356.)

XI. PRIVILEGE FOR OFFICIAL INFORMATION

D. Privilege for Taxpayer's Statements and Returns.

3. Waiver.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 261

[§ 261] Waiver.

(1) General Rule: Privilege May Be Waived. The privilege against disclosure of confidential tax records may be waived in advance by a contract requiring one party to furnish information to the other. (See Crest Catering Co. v. Superior Court (1965) 62 C.2d 274, 42 C.R. 110, 398 P.2d 150, supra, §69.)

In Wilson v. Superior Court (1976) 63 C.A.3d 825, 134 C.R. 130, a taxpayer sued her accountants for damages suffered from negligent and improper advice on the tax consequences of a sale of real property in 1972. Defendants' motion for discovery of plaintiff's income tax returns from 1965 through 1973 was denied. Held, discovery should be allowed; plaintiff waived the privilege when her complaint placed in issue the existence and content of her tax returns and their tax consequences. "[E]stablishment of all the essential elements of plaintiff's case will be impossible without proof of statements and computations in her tax returns. To permit plaintiff to produce evidence of the contents of those returns ... while successfully resisting their disclosure on grounds of privilege would be manifestly unfair to defendants. Accordingly, plaintiff can either maintain her lawsuit or the confidentiality of her returns, but not both." (63 C.A.3d 830.)

(2) Clarifications and Distinctions. Where joint tax returns are filed the privilege is held by both taxpayers, and a waiver by only one is insufficient to permit disclosure. (Coate v. Superior Court (1978) 81 C.A.3d 113, 115, 144 C.R. 350.)

And there is no automatic waiver by a plaintiff suing for loss of income as a result of personal injuries. (See Brown v. Superior Court (1977) 71 C.A.3d 141, 144, 139 C.R. 327.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Clarifications and Distinctions. A taxpayer who submits copies of his or her tax returns to a bank in connection with a loan application should not be considered to have waived the privilege so that a third party suing the taxpayer can obtain a copy simply by subpoenaing it from the bank. "The purpose of the tax-return privilege is to encourage voluntary filing of tax returns and truthful reporting of income, and thus to facilitate tax collection. ... It does this by assuring the taxpayer that such voluntary filing and truthful reporting will not result in a loss of confidentiality. ... Routinely forcing a taxpayer to produce a copy of his or her tax returns in litigation would effectively defeat the legislative purpose. ... Given the well-recognized practice of requiring tax returns as part of a loan application, it follows that forcing a bank to produce those returns routinely in litigation would have the same effect as forcing the taxpayer to produce them directly, and that, too, would effectively defeat the legislative purpose." (Fortunato v. Superior Court (2003) 114 C.A.4th 475, 482, 8 C.R.3d 82.)

E. Privilege for Confidential Business Information.

1. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 262

[§ 262] In General.

(1) General Rule Prohibiting Disclosure. A statute may require information from business institutions, to serve some useful public purpose, and may, to facilitate that purpose, validly prohibit disclosure of the information. (See 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2377 [accident reports].) "The courts generally have concluded that the public interest in preserving confidential information outweighs in importance the interest of a private litigant in the absence of considerations involving life or liberty." (San Francisco v. Superior Court (1951) 38 C.2d 156, 163, 238 P.2d 581.)

In the foregoing case, the city's salary standardization ordinances provided for schedules of compensation in accord with the generally prevailing rates in private or comparable governmental employment. Certain employees obtained a trial court order of inspection of all documents and data. An employer sought prohibition, showing that the civil service commission had solicited information from private employers by promising that the source would be held in confidence; that without such a pledge it would be impossible to obtain voluntary cooperation of private employers in making the survey; and that disclosure would create unrest in industrial employment relations and interfere with competitive activities of employers in private industry. Held, writ granted.

(2) Exceptions. The Director of Employment Development must permit the use of information to the extent necessary to enable federal, state, and local departments or agencies to verify or determine eligibility for public social services under Welf.C. 10000 et seq. or the aid to families with dependent children program. (Unemp.Ins.C. 1095(f).)

Another exception has been enacted to assist a district attorney's investigation of consumer fraud: the district attorney must be given access to any complaint against a person subject to regulation by a consumer oriented state agency and any investigation of such a person by the agency. If the district attorney takes no action on the complaint or investigation, the material remains confidential; and where release of the material would jeopardize an investigation or other duties of the agency, it has discretion to delay the release of such information. (Govt.C. 25509, listing, without limitation, a large number of boards classified as "consumer oriented" state agencies.)

E. Privilege for Confidential Business Information.

2. Reporting Party May Not Waive Privilege.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 263

[§ 263] Reporting Party May Not Waive Privilege.

With limited exceptions, Unemp.Ins.C. 2111 and 2714 provide that information and medical records are confidential and not open to public inspection.

In Richards v. Superior Court (1968) 258 C.A.2d 635, 65 C.R. 917, plaintiff filed a personal injury action against defendants. After the accident, plaintiff had claimed disability benefits, and the Department of Employment had referred her to Dr. C for a medical examination. Plaintiff gave written consent to defendants' counsel to inspect and copy Dr. C's records, and defendants obtained a subpoena for Dr. C's deposition and production of the records. But the Department moved to quash, claiming privilege. Held, the claim was good.

(a) Plaintiff waived her doctor-patient privilege by bringing the action. (258 C.A.2d 638.)

(b) The privilege claimed here, however, was that of the public entity. The legislative intent was to preserve confidentiality of information on the nature and cause of the claimant's disability, so as not to impede a complete and honest report by fear of its use against the claimant in a later lawsuit (258 C.A.2d 638), and defendants' contention that such statutes are for the benefit of the reporting party or claimant was untenable under Ev.C. 1040(b)(1), making the privilege absolute, and leaving no discretion in the judge. (258 C.A.2d 639.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

The court in Department of Motor Vehicles v. Superior Court (2002) 100 C.A.4th 363, 122 C.R.2d 504, pointed out that the conclusion of Richards v. Superior Court (1968) 258 C.A.2d 635, 65 C.R. 917, that Unemp.Ins.C. 2111 and 2714 created an absolute privilege, was inconsistent with the comment in the same case that a different result might be reached if the subject of the medical records were seeking the records for her own benefit. "We do not agree with Richards's conclusion that 'whether a statute prohibits disclosure is a matter of interpretation of that statute as applied to the case in which disclosure is sought.' ... In our view, whether disclosure of specified official information is prohibited by statute is a matter of statutory construction, and the weighing of interests is the essence of a conditional, not an absolute, privilege." (100 C.A.4th 376.)

XI. PRIVILEGE FOR OFFICIAL INFORMATION

F. Privilege for Criminal History Records and Related Matters.

1. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 264

[§ 264] In General.

(1) General Rule Prohibiting Disclosure. The official information privilege (Ev.C. 1040, supra, §246 et seq.), and some additional specific statutes, have the general effect of preventing disclosure of reports and records of law enforcement agencies dealing with crime and criminals. In Runyon v. Board of Prison Terms & Paroles (1938) 26 C.A.2d 183, 184, 79 P.2d 101, petitioner's demand for inspection of letters and other documents sent by individuals to the state parole board dealing with applications for parole was refused. The court pointed out that public records of this type have consistently been treated as free from inspection, and added: "Included in this class are documents and records kept on file in public institutions, concerning the condition, care and treatment of the inmates thereof, and the files in the offices of those charged with the execution of the laws relating to the apprehension, prosecution and punishment of criminals." (See People v. Wilkins (1955) 135 C.A.2d 371, 377, 287 P.2d 555 [prosecution for pandering; defendants sought production of police department records of arrest of individuals for activities connected with prostitution, for use in cross-examination; held properly denied]; People v. King (1932) 122 C.A. 50, 56, 10 P.2d 89 [prosecution for auto theft; secret motor number of car known only to manufacturer and National Auto Theft Bureau]; 22 Cal. L. Rev. 672; 36 A.L.R.2d 1318 [privilege of custodian in civil action not to disclose official police records and reports].)

(2) Exceptions. In People v. Curry (1950) 97 C.A.2d 537, 547, 218 P.2d 153, the prosecution called a juvenile probation officer to testify to a conversation with defendant in the city prison, in which defendant made statements contrary to his testimony at the trial. Held, admissible. The statute makes the record of a probation officer's report secret except as ordered by the probation officer or judge; it says nothing about communications to such an officer. (On similar rule on statements of automobile driver to highway patrolman, see infra, §274.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) General Rule Prohibiting Disclosure. See Orange v. Superior Court (2000) 79 C.A.4th 759, 767, 94 C.R.2d 261 [in parents' civil action against county and sheriff's department arising from criminal investigation of their child's murder, trial judge erred in granting parents' discovery request for entire file of investigation; public interest in solving murder and bringing perpetrators to justice outweighed parents' interest in obtaining file, at least at time discovery was sought]; cf. Michael P. v. Superior Court (2001) 92 C.A.4th 1036, 1045, 1046, 113 C.R.2d 11 [where father in juvenile dependency proceeding sought forensic evidence compiled during investigation into death of his girlfriend's daughter, trial judge erred in denying disclosure request without first conducting in camera review; father's interest in having custody of his child was weightier than interest of parents in Orange case, in prosecuting civil damages action].

F. Privilege for Criminal History Records and Related Matters.

2. Statements in Connection With Deferred Entry of Judgment or Pretrial Diversion.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 265

[§ 265] Statements in Connection With Deferred Entry of Judgment or Pretrial Diversion.

Defendants charged with certain drug offenses are eligible for deferred entry of judgment programs of rehabilitation which, if successfully completed, would cause their arrests to be "deemed to have never occurred" (see P.C. 1000.4). (P.C. 1000 et seq.; see 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Pretrial Proceedings, §341 et seq.). A statement made by the defendant to a probation officer or drug treatment worker subsequent to the granting of deferred entry of judgment is not admissible in any action or proceeding, including a sentencing hearing. (P.C. 1000.1(c).)

Similar exclusionary language also appears in legislation governing the following pretrial diversion programs:

- (1) Persons charged with misdemeanors. (P.C. 1001.5.)
- (2) Persons charged with writing bad checks. (P.C. 1001.67.)
- (3) Parents and legal guardians charged with contributing to the delinquency of their minor child. (P.C. 1001.72(b).)
- (4) Mentally retarded persons charged with crimes. (P.C. 1001.24 et seq.)

3. Minor's Criminal or Juvenile Court Records.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 266

[§ 266] Minor's Criminal or Juvenile Court Records.

Various statutes have barred disclosure of criminal or juvenile court records of minors. (See P.C. 851.7, 1203.45; Welf.C. 781; 10 Summary (9th), Parent and Child, §502 et seq.)

In 1970, the Legislature relaxed this confidentiality for defamation actions or proceedings where good cause is shown; the judge may order the records unsealed and admitted into evidence. "The records shall be confidential and shall be available for inspection only by the court, jury, parties, counsel for the parties, and any other person who is authorized by the court to inspect them. Upon the judgment in the action or proceeding becoming final, the court shall order the records sealed." (P.C. 851.7(f); see similar language in P.C. 1203.45, and in Welf.C. 781.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XI. PRIVILEGE FOR OFFICIAL INFORMATION

F. Privilege for Criminal History Records and Related Matters.

4. Statements to Police About Alleged Rape.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 267

[§ 267] Statements to Police About Alleged Rape.

In Rider v. Superior Court (1988) 199 C.A.3d 278, 244 C.R. 770, the court held that a plaintiff in a defamation action who claimed that he was wrongfully accused of rape was entitled to the same discovery as a defendant accused of rape in a criminal action.

Plaintiffs, husband and wife employees of defendant F, were discharged, and shortly afterward F publicly accused plaintiff husband of raping F's 14-year-old daughter. Several months later the alleged victim made statements to the police regarding the crime. In this action by plaintiffs for defamation, they sought by subpoena duces tecum served on the police department to produce the investigating officer's notes of the conversations with the daughter. The trial judge, reviewing the record, in camera, denied the motion on the ground that production would violate the daughter's right of privacy. Held, mandamus issued to compel production.

(a) The police department, relying on the conditional privilege to refuse to disclose information if disclosure would be "against the public interest" (Ev.C. 1040(b)(2), supra, §247), contended that preserving the confidentiality of the statements was necessary to protect the privacy rights of the alleged rape victim. But the constitutional right of privacy (see 7 Summary (9th), Constitutional Law, §454 et seq.) is not absolute; and when it conflicts with the right to a fair trial the court must balance the right of civil litigants to discover relevant facts against the privacy interest. (199 C.A.3d 282.) In a number of cases the courts have held that the litigant's need for discovery prevailed over the competing interest in sexual privacy. (199 C.A.3d 283.)

(b) "We believe discovery available to a criminal defendant accused of rape provides authoritative guidance to discovery available to a plaintiff accused of rape who sues for defamation." And "it is clear the defendant in a rape prosecution is entitled to pretrial discovery of statements by the victim to the police and the prosecutor." (199 C.A.3d 283.)

(c) "We discern no difference in relevancy or good cause which would justify making the victim's statements to the police available in a criminal action but not in a defamation action. It is difficult to imagine any material more relevant to a defamation case based on false accusation of rape than the statements by the alleged victim to the police. Review of these statements is reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence." (199 C.A.3d 284.) Here it appears that truth is the only defense, and plaintiffs must anticipate that the daughter will testify at the trial and prepare for impeachment of her testimony. (199 C.A.3d 285.)

The court added that what would be disclosed is no more than what would have been revealed in open court if the prosecution had elected to pursue the prosecution the daughter invited by voluntarily making the charges to the police; and the investigating officer's notes showed that he had advised the daughter that she could expect to appear in court, that her appearance would be "newsworthy," and that a court appearance would result in an open discussion of her sexual behavior. (199 C.A.3d 286.)

The order compelling production was qualified by the protective condition that the information "shall not be used or disclosed by plaintiffs or their counsel for any purpose outside the confines of this litigation." (199 C.A.3d 287.)

XI. PRIVILEGE FOR OFFICIAL INFORMATION

F. Privilege for Criminal History Records and Related Matters.

5. Surveillance Location Privilege.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 268

[§ 268] Surveillance Location Privilege.

In People v. Montgomery (1988) 205 C.A.3d 1011, 252 C.R. 779 (supra, §254), the court held that one effect of Ev.C. 1040 (see supra, §246) was to establish, under appropriate circumstances, a surveillance location privilege, even though the officer using the location might have "acquired" the information from himself or herself. (205 C.A.3d 1019.) Like confidential informants (see infra, §306 et seq.), hidden observation posts are often useful law enforcement tools. Disclosure of the location will likely destroy its future value, threaten the safety of the officers using it, and discourage property owners from allowing the police to make such use of their property. In fact, such posts deserve even greater protection than that accorded to confidential informants because, unlike a revealed informant who can hide in California's predominantly urban environment, a person whose address has been revealed has no place to hide. (205 C.A.3d 1019.)

Later cases are to the same effect. (See Hines v. Superior Court (1988) 203 C.A.3d 1231, 1234, 251 C.R. 28, supra, §253; People v. Walker (1991) 230 C.A.3d 230, 236, 282 C.R. 12, supra, §253; In re Sergio M. (1993) 13 C.A.4th 809, 813, 16 C.R.2d 701 [following Montgomery]; and see 67 A.L.R.5th 149 [cases discussing police surveillance privilege]; on requirement of finding adverse to prosecution if surveillance location is material to defense, see supra, §252.)

XI. PRIVILEGE FOR OFFICIAL INFORMATION
G. Confidential Records of Licensing Board.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 269

[§ 269] Confidential Records of Licensing Board.

Administrative agencies which license and regulate business frequently seek and obtain information from persons who rely upon its confidentiality; and if the informant knew that his or her complaints or disclosures could be published and become the basis of a defamation suit the informant might be inhibited and the statutory purpose would be frustrated. The rule is the same as that applied to criminal law enforcement agencies (supra, §264 et seq.), and the privilege of nondisclosure exists.

In Markwell v. Sykes (1959) 173 C.A.2d 642, 645, 343 P.2d 769, the court, recognizing the privilege, held that it was waived by compliance with an erroneous order of the judge to testify instead of pursuing writ remedies to challenge the order. But this view was repudiated by a 1974 amendment to Ev.C. 919: disclosure under an erroneous but unchallenged order no longer waives the privilege. (See Ev.C. 919(b), supra, §94; 6 Pacific L. J. 434.)

XI. PRIVILEGE FOR OFFICIAL INFORMATION

H. Confidential Records of State Bar.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 270

[§ 270] Confidential Records of State Bar.

In Chronicle Publishing Co. v. Superior Court (1960) 54 C.2d 548, 7 C.R. 109, 354 P.2d 637, C, attorney at law, brought a libel suit against defendant newspaper, for publication of an article injuring him in his professional reputation. He alleged that he enjoyed a good reputation and had never been guilty of professional misconduct. Defendant denied these allegations for lack of information or belief. C served interrogatories and requested admissions concerning any facts on which the denial was based. Defendant then sought to take the deposition of the State Bar and its Secretary, on written interrogatories. The latter moved to limit the examination by excluding inquiry into information contained in the confidential files, and by affidavit showed that the public records revealed no discipline against C. The lower court granted the State Bar's motion. Held, mandamus issued to compel modification of the limiting order so as to require disclosure of nonprivileged information.

(a) Official information privilege applies. The State Bar, its Board of Governors and its Secretary may claim the privilege of communications made in official confidence when the public interest would suffer by disclosure. (54 C.2d 566.)

(b) What records are privileged. The State Bar procedure allows any kind of informal complaint to be made. (See 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §637.) Most turn out to be unfounded, and to allow their disclosure would tend both to discourage persons from making complaints and to expose attorneys to unwarranted injury to reputation. (54 C.2d 567.) Thus, the report of the National Conference of Bar Examiners on C's admission (given on express assurance of confidentiality), and complaints not resulting in Board action, were privileged. Although the Board had discretion to waive the privilege under State Bar Rules of Procedure, it refused to do so. (54 C.2d 570, 571.)

(c) What records are not privileged. Any Board action, even though not amounting to a recommendation of suspension or disbarment or other public discipline, is outside the privilege. Hence, defendant newspaper was entitled to know whether C received a private reproof, and, if so, upon what information it was based. "A private reproof is an official act of the board, as much as a public reproof. It means either that some charge brought against the member has been determined to be well founded, or that some conduct warranting reproof has been disclosed. ... An attorney who has so conducted himself as to merit a private reproof must expect that in a proper situation the facts upon which the reproof was based may be brought to light. Persons giving the information must realize that, just as when public disciplinary action follows, their information is subject to release, so it is when private disciplinary action is taken." (54 C.2d 574.)

Brotsky v. State Bar (1962) 57 C.2d 287, 302, 19 C.R. 153, 368 P.2d 697, is to the same effect.

XI. PRIVILEGE FOR OFFICIAL INFORMATION

I. Confidential Records of Social Service and General Assistance Programs.

1. Privileged Matters.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 271

[§ 271] Privileged Matters.

(1) Social Service Program Information. Except for disclosure to specified public agencies for certain official purposes, applications and records made or kept by any public officer or agency in connection with the administration of state public social services funded by the federal government "shall be confidential, and shall not be open to examination for any purpose not directly connected with the administration of that program, or any investigation, prosecution, or criminal or civil proceeding" conducted in connection with that administration. Disclosure of the identities of social service recipients is also prohibited. (Welf.C. 10850(a), (b).)

Welf.C. 10850 was enacted to comply with federal prerequisites to funding (Jonon v. Superior Court (1979) 93 C.A.3d 683, 694, 155 C.R. 822, infra, §272), and the disclosures that it forbids are within the absolute privilege of Ev.C. 1040(b)(1) (supra, §247). In Sinacore v. Superior Court (1978) 81 C.A.3d 223, 146 C.R. 302, defendants in a wrongful death action sought county welfare records relating to decedent, asserting relevancy to the issue of damages. The trial court granted discovery. Held, the records were absolutely privileged under Welf.C. 10850. (81 C.A.3d 225.)

(2) General Assistance Information. Subject to specified exceptions, counties must maintain the confidentiality of records relating to the provision of general assistance to indigents. (Welf.C. 17006.)

I. Confidential Records of Social Service and General Assistance Programs.

2. Clarifications and Distinctions.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 272

[§ 272] Clarifications and Distinctions.

(1) Where Arrest Warrant Issued. A program applicant's or recipient's name, address or physical whereabouts, telephone number, birthdate, Social Security number, and physical description may be disclosed if a warrant has been issued for the applicant's arrest for a felony or misdemeanor. (Welf.C. 10850.3 [social services programs]; Welf.C. 17006.5 [general assistance program].)

(2) Information Not Kept in Connection With Administration. In Jonon v. Superior Court (1979) 93 C.A.3d 683, 155 C.R. 822, a county social worker refused to testify on deposition concerning her telephone conversation with a decedent whose death from pesticides was the subject of a wrongful death action. Held, plaintiffs were entitled to compel her testimony regarding observations of the decedent's physical mannerisms during the phone call. Records made or kept in the administration of social services "include only the agency's files and the information contained in them" and do not include "observations of physical characteristics." (93 C.A.3d 691.) The statement in Welf.C. 10850(b) forbidding disclosure of "any confidential information pertaining to an applicant or recipient" was "intended to prohibit disclosure of only such information as was otherwise made confidential by other provisions of section 10850." (93 C.A.3d 692.)

(3) Disclosure in Connection With Administration. In child custody proceedings, disclosure of records of a public social service agency relating to the best interests of the child is directly connected with the administration of the social service and therefore disclosure is not prohibited by Welf.C. 10850. (See In re Jeannie Q. (1973) 32 C.A.3d 288, 305, 107 C.R. 646; In re Lynna B. (1979) 92 C.A.3d 682, 703, 155 C.R. 256.)

(4) Elderly or Disabled Clients in Emergency. "An authorized employee of a county social services department" may disclose the name and residential address of an elderly or disabled client to police, fire, or other emergency services personnel in the event of a public safety emergency necessitating the possible evacuation of the area in which the client lives. "[P]ublic safety emergencies include, but are not limited to, fires, earthquakes, gas leaks, bomb scares, and other natural or human-made occurrences that jeopardize the immediate physical safety of county residents." (Welf.C. 10850.9(a).) The Director of Social Services must seek any federal approval needed for implementation of this provision (Welf.C. 10850.9(b)), and implementation may take place only if the director executes a declaration stating that federal approval has been obtained (Welf.C. 10850.9(c)).

J. Confidentiality of Compulsory Vehicle Accident Reports.

1. Confidential Matters.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 273

[§ 273] Confidential Matters.

If a vehicle is involved in an accident resulting in personal injury or death, the driver (or the driver's agent, broker, or legal representative) must make a written report about the accident within 24 hours to the California Highway Patrol (CHP), or to the police department if the accident occurred within a city. (Veh.C. 20008.) These reports are for the confidential use of the CHP and the Department of Motor Vehicles (DMV) (Veh.C. 20012, 20014), and the reports may not be used as evidence in a civil or criminal trial arising out of the accident (Veh.C. 20013).

If a vehicle accident has resulted in property damage of $ 500 or bodily injury or death, a report also must be made to the Sacramento office of the DMV within 10 days (Veh.C. 16000(a)), and the report is subject to similar confidentiality requirements (Veh.C. 16005). (See generally 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2377; 84 A.L.R.2d 1261 [right to inspect motor vehicle records].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Veh.C. 16000(a) was amended in 2002 to raise the amount of property damage that triggers the reporting requirement to $ 750.

XI. PRIVILEGE FOR OFFICIAL INFORMATION

J. Confidentiality of Compulsory Vehicle Accident Reports.

2. Exceptions and Distinctions.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 274

[§ 274] Exceptions and Distinctions.

(1) Statutory Exceptions. Veh.C. 20012 (supra, §273) requires designated law enforcement agencies to disclose certain matters to interested persons, as follows:

(a) Matters To Be Disclosed. The entire contents of the report must be disclosed, including the names and addresses of persons involved or injured in, or witnesses to, the accident; the registration numbers and descriptions of vehicles involved; the date, time, and location of the accident; all diagrams; statements of the drivers involved, or the occupants injured, in the accident; and statements of all witnesses.

(b) Persons Entitled To Disclosure. Disclosure must be made "to any person who may have a proper interest therein." This includes the drivers involved in the accident, the guardian or conservator of a driver, the parent of a minor driver, the authorized representative of a driver, any person injured in the accident, the owner of a vehicle or property damaged in the accident, anyone who may incur civil liability due to the accident (including liability based on breach of warranty), and any attorney who declares under penalty of perjury that he or she represents any of these persons.

Veh.C. 16005 (supra, §273) authorizes similar disclosure of accident reports submitted under the Financial Responsibility Law.

(2) Officer's Right To Testify. An officer who made a report is not disqualified from testifying to facts covered by it. (See Dwelly v. McReynolds (1936) 6 C.2d 128, 131, 56 P.2d 1232; Stroud v. Hansen (1941) 48 C.A.2d 556, 560, 120 P.2d 102; Carroll v. Beavers (1954) 126 C.A.2d 828, 835, 273 P.2d 56; 46 A.L.R.4th 291 [admissibility of officer's testimony relating to motorist's admissions made in or for required accident report].)

(3) Contents as Past Recollection Recorded. In Sherrell v. Kelso (1981) 116 C.A.3d Supp. 22, 172 C.R. 667, plaintiff sued for damages sustained in an automobile intersection collision. Plaintiff's witness P, a passenger in plaintiff's vehicle, testified that defendant drove through a red light. Defendant then called a police officer whose report of the accident contained a statement of P inconsistent with her testimony. The report itself was inadmissible under Veh.C. 20013, but defendant laid a foundation for the officer to read portions of it as past recorded recollection, and the trial judge permitted him to do so. Held, the ruling was proper.

(a) The history of Veh.C. 20012 and 20013 shows that the sections do not now serve the original purpose of confidentiality. Although the prohibition against the report being used "as evidence" remains, the contents of the report are available "to litigants and their attorneys, and from there to insurance adjusters, witnesses, family and friends." (116

C.A.3d Supp. 30.) The only viable purpose of the prohibition is that the report, on a printed form with insignia and title indicating "official" character, might be given undue weight by a jury. Thus, the present legislative purpose of Veh.C. 20013 is only to exclude the document constituting the report, not its contents. (116 C.A.3d Supp. 31.)

(b) Use of the report to refresh the officer's recollection has been approved, and the same should be true of use by the officer as past recollection recorded. In addition to the safeguards provided by the foundation requirements of Ev.C. 1237 (see 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §182 et seq.), there is this one: "Under the doctrine of recollection refreshed, the officer is free to wander far astray from the previously recorded facts he deemed relevant at the time of the accident, while his memory was fresh. For instance, the officer could testify--now that his memory is refreshed--that there was, in fact, a confession of guilt by the driver, but he simply failed to write it down due to the press of other emergency matters. The fact that the officer's brain had subconsciously scrambled the facts of two somewhat similar accidents is difficult, if not impossible, to prove upon cross-examination, even by experienced trial counsel. On the other hand, when evidence is admitted under the doctrine of past recollection recorded, the witness is compelled to stick to the facts in the written document, that is, those facts the officer deemed relevant when his memory was fresh." ### XI. PRIVILEGE FOR OFFICIAL INFORMATION

J. Confidentiality of Compulsory Vehicle Accident Reports.

3. Reports and Data Generated.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 275

[§ 275] Reports and Data Generated.

In Davies v. Superior Court (1984) 36 C.3d 291, 204 C.R. 154, 682 P.2d 349, plaintiff suffered injuries in a single vehicle tractor-trailer accident on a state highway, and sued the state on the theory that the highway was in a defective and dangerous condition of which the state had notice. He sought discovery, by interrogatories and request for production of documents, of prior accidents at the location and the details concerning them, particularly those in the Department of Transportation's computerized accident data retrieval system (TASAS). The state, claiming privilege under Veh.C. 20012 and 20014 (supra, §273), refused to answer the interrogatories or produce the documents. Held, the data were subject to discovery.

(a) People v. Superior Court (Clark) (1976) 60 C.A.3d 352, 131 C.R. 476, Edgar v. Superior Court (1978) 84 C.A.3d 430, 148 C.R. 687, and California v. Superior Court (Thompson) (1980) 102 C.A.3d 25, 162 C.R. 78, held that accident reports are privileged and that TASAS data based on them were not discoverable. (36 C.3d 297, 298.) These cases are wrong and are disapproved. (36 C.3d 300.) Neither Veh.C. 20012 nor 20013 creates a privilege as the term is used in Ev.C. 911 et seq. Veh.C. 20012 and 20014 term accident reports "confidential," and Veh.C. 20013 prevents their introduction as evidence in a trial; but the exclusion from evidence is narrow, applying only to required reports (by a driver, passenger or witness). "Although termed a 'privilege' in some opinions, the confidentiality created by these statutes does not authorize the reporting party to control release of the reports or information contained therein. The State is authorized to disclose the 'entire contents' of the reports to the persons particularly described in section 20012 and to any other person having a 'proper interest' therein. The State, not the reporting party, determines who those persons may be. The statute does not create a privilege in the reporting party to refuse to be a witness or to disclose information about the accident, and it does not create a privilege to preclude discovery by a person having a 'proper interest' in the contents of the report. The express disclosure authorization of section 20012, and the limited exclusion from evidence created by section 20013, suggest that the information contained in accident reports is more accurately characterized as 'confidential' than as 'privileged.'" (36 C.3d 298.)

(c) The TASAS data, diagrams, and other information derived from accident reports can easily be made available without indication of the confidential matters--identity of the reporting parties and identifying information in the reports. And the statute neither states nor requires extension of that confidentiality to data generated from the reports.

Nor does public policy support denial of access to information which may reveal a defective condition of public property: "Discovery of a highway defect, and of the State's potential liability for damages caused thereby, serves the salutary purpose of encouraging remedial measures." (36 C.3d 300.) (See 84 A.L.R.4th 15 [discovery of traffic accident reports and derivative information].)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

J. Confidentiality of Compulsory Vehicle Accident Reports.

4. Discovery by Criminal Defendant.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 276

[§ 276] Discovery by Criminal Defendant.

In People v. Ansbros (1984) 153 C.A.3d 273, 200 C.R. 210, defendant driver was involved in a collision resulting in the death of a passenger in the other vehicle, and was convicted of vehicular manslaughter and driving under the influence of alcohol. He moved for a new trial on the ground of error in failing to determine admissibility of evidence of four other accidents at the same location, to establish the dangerous condition of the road as the cause of the accident. He had sought, by subpoena, to procure a Department of Public Works map and Highway Patrol reports, but was informed that they were privileged under Ev.C. 1040(b)(1) (supra, §247) and Veh.C. 20012 (supra, §273). Held, judgment of conviction reversed.

(a) The reports of accidents made by investigating officers are not privileged. The required reports by drivers and passengers under Veh.C. 20012 are privileged, but the state's claim of unconditional privilege is untenable: due process protects the defendant's right to present relevant exculpatory evidence, and using the state statute to prevent access to such evidence is a denial of due process. (153 C.A.3d 277.)

(b) The trial judge should examine the reports in camera to determine whether the prior accidents were similar; the judge must also segregate the required reports from the unprivileged accident reports of police agencies; and if the evidence is deemed relevant and the state claims privilege, the judge may then be required to instruct under Ev.C. 1042(a) (supra, §252). Accordingly, on a finding that the evidence is relevant, the motion for new trial must be granted. (153 C.A.3d 278.)

In California v. Superior Court (Hall) (1985) 37 C.3d 847, 210 C.R. 219, 693 P.2d 804, defendant Hall was charged with murder, vehicular manslaughter and drunk driving as a result of an automobile collision. She served a subpoena duces tecum on the Department of Transportation for accident reports of collisions from 1980 to 1983 at the location of the incident. Held, she had a "proper interest" under Veh.C. 20012 (supra, §274), and was entitled to disclosure.

(a) In Davies v. Superior Court (1984) 36 C.3d 291, 204 C.R. 154, 682 P.2d 349, supra, §275, the court did not reach the question whether a civil plaintiff, not a party to an accident, may have a "proper interest" in a report of it. Here, however, the interest is asserted by a person charged with crime, and such a person is entitled to the fullest possible discovery of information concerning the case. (37 C.3d 852, 855.) The evidence of other similar accidents may raise a reasonable doubt on the issue of implied malice, or of conscious indifference to the consequences. (37 C.3d 856.) Thus, she is entitled to the reports with the names and other identifying information deleted. (37 C.3d 851, 857.)

(b) She is also entitled to discovery of investigative reports of law enforcement officials, similarly edited to delete identifying information. Although Veh.C. 20014 (supra, §273) does not contain a disclosure provision, there is no indication of a legislative intent to provide a greater degree of confidentiality than that given by Veh.C. 20012. The case law holds that police reports are not confidential (see People v. Ansbro, supra), and the Legislature's failure to amend Veh.C. 20014 when it amended Veh.C. 20012 to expand disclosure to properly interested persons does not compel a contrary conclusion. (37 C.3d 857, 858.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XI. PRIVILEGE FOR OFFICIAL INFORMATION

L. California Public Records Act.

1. Nature and Purpose of Act.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 278

[§ 278] Nature and Purpose of Act.

(1) Enactment and Purpose of Act. The California Public Records Act (Govt.C. 6250 et seq.) supersedes former specific code provisions permitting inspection and copying of public records. "In enacting this chapter, the Legislature, mindful of the right of individuals to privacy, finds and declares that access to information concerning the conduct of the people's business is a fundamental and necessary right of every person in this state." (Govt.C. 6250; see Black Panther Party v. Kehoe (1974) 42 C.A.3d 645, 654, 117 C.R. 106 [act validly balances right to information and right of privacy]; American Federation of State, County & Mun. Employees v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1978) 80 C.A.3d 913, 914, 146 C.R. 42 [same]; Connell v. Superior Court (1997) 56 C.A.4th 601, 611, 65 C.R.2d 738 [use of phrase "every person in this state" in Govt.C. 6250 evinces intent to include both domestic and foreign corporations among those who may enforce Act]; 4 Golden Gate L. Rev. 210 [history of act and analysis of its exemptions].)

(2) FOIA As Interpretative Aid. The federal Freedom of Information Act (5 U.S.C., §552; infra, §302) may be used to help interpret the Public Records Act. (Uribe v. Howie (1971) 19 C.A.3d 194, 212, 96 C.R. 493 [relying on federal "investigatory files" exception to construe Govt.C. 6254(f), infra, §289 et seq.]; Braun v. Taft (1984) 154 C.A.3d 332, 342, 201 C.R. 654; South Coast Newspapers v. Oceanside (1984) 160 C.A.3d 261, 267, 206 C.R. 527.)

(3) Not Applicable in Discovery Proceedings. The Public Records Act does not affect the rights of litigants in judicial or administrative proceedings under the discovery statutes, including the right to discovery in criminal cases. (Govt.C. 6260.) Thus, information is not immune to discovery simply because it is exempted by Govt.C. 6254 (infra, §288 et seq.) from the disclosure requirements. (Shepherd v. Superior Court (1976) 17 C.3d 107, 123, 130 C.R. 257, 550 P.2d 161.)

(4) Purpose of Request Not Basis for Denial of Access. The purpose for which a public record is requested is not a proper basis for limiting access to it, if the record is otherwise subject to disclosure. (Govt.C. 6257.5.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Enactment and Purpose of Act. See 22 California Lawyer 42 (July 2002) [requesting documents under Public Records Act]; 53 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 909 [role of constitutional law and judicial review in mediating demands for public access to information].

(3) Not Applicable in Discovery Proceedings. See Marylander v. Superior Court (2000) 81 C.A.4th 1119, 1125, 97 C.R.2d 439 [in civil action in which plaintiff moved to compel production of memoranda from state agency to Governor's office, trial judge erred in analyzing motion under Govt.C. 6254(l) (text, §288) and common law deliberative process privilege (text, §303 et seq.) rather than official information privilege (Ev.C. 1040(b)(2); see text, §247)].

(4) Purpose of Request Not Basis for Denial of Access. A plaintiff who has filed suit against a public agency may, either directly or indirectly through a representative, file a request under the Public Records Act for the purpose of obtaining documents for use in the plaintiff's civil action, and the documents must be produced unless one or more of the Act's statutory exemptions apply. (Los Angeles v. Superior Court (Axelrad) (2000) 82 C.A.4th 819, 826, 98 C.R.2d 564 [member of law firm was not precluded from seeking records from county sheriff's department, even though records were to be used in action that firm was prosecuting on behalf of former county jail inmates claiming they were overdetained in county jail].)

(5) (New) Proposition 59. Proposition 59, approved by the voters in 2004, amended Cal. Const., Art. I, §3. Under the amended section, "[t]he people have the right of access to information concerning the conduct of the people's business, and, therefore, the meetings of public bodies and the writings of public officials and agencies shall be open to public scrutiny." (Cal. Const., Art. I, §3(b)(1).) "A statute, court rule, or other authority, including those in effect on the effective date of this subdivision, shall be broadly construed if it furthers the people's right of access, and narrowly construed if it limits the right of access." ### XI. PRIVILEGE FOR OFFICIAL INFORMATION

L. California Public Records Act.

2. Scope: Agencies and Officials Covered.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 279

[§ 279] Scope: Agencies and Officials Covered.

(1) State Agencies. Every state agency is covered by the Act, except those provided for by Cal. Const., Art. IV (the legislative article, excluding §20, the Fish and Game Commission), and Cal. Const., Art. VI (the judicial article). (Govt.C. 6252(a); see McClatchy Newspapers v. Superior Court (1988) 44 C.3d 1162, 1183, 245 C.R. 774, 751 P.2d 1329 [grand jury, as judicial entity, is exempt from Act]; McGuire v. Superior Court (1993) 12 C.A.4th 1685, 1687, 16 C.R.2d 726 [probation department files are exempt from inspection under Govt.C. 6252(a), but may be examined under P.C. 1203.10 (see 3 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Punishment, §504)]; 27 A.L.R.4th 742 [what constitutes agency subject to application of state freedom of information act].)

For state agencies governed by Cal. Const., Art. IV, an itemized statement of the agency's total expenditures and disbursement is open for inspection. (Govt.C. 6261.) Legislative expenses are to be reported under Govt.C. 9131, while other legislative records are subject to the reporting procedures of Govt.C. 9070 et seq. Reports by the Governor are provided for in Govt.C. 12022 and 12023.

(2) Local Agencies. The Act covers local public entities and private nonprofit entities that are legislative bodies of local agencies (see Govt.C. 54952(c), (d)). (Govt.C. 6252(b).)

(3) Persons. The Act governs every person, natural or artificial. (Govt.C. 6252(c).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) State Agencies. Govt.C. 6252(a), specifying which state agencies are covered by the Act, was relettered Govt.C. 6252(f) in 2004.

In California State University, Fresno Assn. v. Superior Court (2001) 90 C.A.4th 810, 108 C.R.2d 870, the issue was whether a university-affiliated nonprofit auxiliary corporation was a "state agency" that could be required to turn over to plaintiff newspaper a list of donors who had obtained licenses to use luxury suites in a new university arena in exchange for their donations. The trial court ordered disclosure, reasoning that the corporation was under the direct control of the university and was required to advance the university's interests in all its activities. Held, the order was improper. "In resolving this uncharted territory of legislative intent, we recognize the extent of the CPRA's coverage is a matter to be developed by the courts on a case-by-case basis." (90 C.A.4th 828.) Former Govt.C. 6252(a) (now Govt.C. 6252(f)) includes "other state body or agency" within the definition of "state agency." Although there is some ambiguity in this term, "we conclude a nongovernmental auxiliary organization is not a 'state agency' for purposes of the CPRA. The words 'state body' and 'state agency' simply do not include a nongovernmental organization." (90 C.A.4th 829.) "We are fully cognizant of the fact that our conclusion seems to be in direct conflict with the express purposes of the CPRA--'to safeguard the accountability of government to the public.' ... In many ways, the Association can be characterized as a 'state-controlled' corporation that should be subject to the CPRA. ... However, ... [t]he rewriting of a statute is a legislative, rather than a judicial function, a practice in which we will not engage." (90 C.A.4th 830.)

See Mack v. State Bar (2001) 92 C.A.4th 957, 962, 112 C.R.2d 341 [because State Bar is constitutional entity that serves as administrative arm of Supreme Court, Public Records Act "apparently" does not apply to it]; Orange County Employees Assn. v. Superior Court (2004) 120 C.A.4th 287, 298, 15 C.R.3d 201 [superior court records relating to reimbursement for travel expenses for judges and management employees of court were not subject to disclosure under Act, even though records were prepared by county; contract between court and county provided that records were court property].(2) Local Agencies. Govt.C. 6252(b), defining "local agency," was relettered Govt.C. 6252(a) in 2004.

L. California Public Records Act.

3. Scope: Records Covered.

a. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 280

[§ 280] In General.

"Public records" include "any writing containing information relating to the conduct of the public's business prepared, owned, used, or retained by any state or local agency regardless of physical form or characteristics." (Govt.C. 6252(e); see Cook v. Craig (1976) 55 C.A.3d 773, 781, 127 C.R. 712 [term should receive broad interpretation]; Vallejos v. California Highway Patrol (1979) 89 C.A.3d 781, 785, 152 C.R. 846 [same]; 27 A.L.R.4th 680 [what are "records" of agency which must be made available under state freedom of information act]; but see Oziel v. Superior Court (1990) 223 C.A.3d 1284, 1292, 273 C.R. 196 [videotape of execution of search warrant was not public record owned by state agency, because it was owned by court, which is not covered by Act; see supra, §279].)

For material in the custody of or maintained by the Governor's office, however, "public record" refers to a writing prepared on or after January 6, 1975. (Govt.C. 6252(e).) On leaving office, the Governor must transfer public records in his or her custody or control to the State Archives. The Governor may restrict public access to specified transferred records for (1) up to 25 or 50 years (depending on the type of record), or (2) during the Governor's lifetime, whichever is longer. (Govt.C. 6268.)

"Writing" is defined to cover every "means of recording," including tapes, films, magnetic or punched cards, etc. (Govt.C. 6252(f).)

Govt.C. 6252(f), as amended in 2002, defines "writing" as "any handwriting, typewriting, printing, photostating, photographing, photocopying, transmitting by electronic mail or facsimile," and any other means of recording on a tangible thing a communication or representation, "including letters, words, pictures, sounds, or symbols, or combinations thereof, and any record thereby created, regardless of the manner in which the record has been stored."

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XI. PRIVILEGE FOR OFFICIAL INFORMATION

L. California Public Records Act.

3. Scope: Records Covered.

b. Court Clerk's Rough Minutes.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 281

[§ 281] Court Clerk's Rough Minutes.

In Copley Press v. Superior Court (1992) 6 C.A.4th 106, 7 C.R.2d 841, petitioner Copley Press brought an action in the superior court naming the court and six sitting judges as respondents. The petition sought an order providing access to the minute books of the clerks, to determine which attorneys appeared before the judges over a period of time in which news stories in the local press dealt with gifts reported by certain judges from certain attorneys. The issue posed for the Court of Appeal was "whether informal notes prepared by the court clerk as a precursor to creation of the formal minutes of the court are public records to which the press may require access." (6 C.A.4th 110.) The presiding judge had ruled that the minute books were not official court records, hence, were not open to public view. Held, order reversed, and mandamus granted to compel the presiding judge to rehear petitioner's motion.

(a) Court records open to inspection. The Public Records Act contains a specific exclusion for records of state courts (Govt.C. 6252, supra, §279); but the fact that there is no specific statutory requirement for access to court documents does not permit exclusion of the public from the records. Estate of Hearst (1977) 67 C.A.3d 777, 136 C.R. 821, 12 Summary (9th), Wills and Probate, §335, held that, notwithstanding the statutory exception in the Public Records Act, such records are public records open to inspection. (6 C.A.4th 111, 112.)

(b) Clerk's rough minutes as court records. Two classes of documents are prepared in the course of a court's work.

(1) "The first class represents documentation which accurately and officially reflects the work of the court, such as its orders and judgments, its scheduling and administration of cases, its assignment of judicial officers and administrators. Included in such documentation, which we will call Category I documents, would be the official court minutes, all its written orders and dispositions, the official reports of oral proceedings, the master calendar. Also included in Category I of court documents would be the various documents filed in or received by the court, such as the pleadings and motions filed by the parties and the evidence admitted in court proceedings. All of these documents represent and reflect the official work of the court, in which the public and press have a justifiable interest." (6 C.A.4th 113.)

(2) "Before a judgment goes out there is usually a draft prepared and then edited. Jury instructions are written and rewritten. Informal notes are prepared by judges to assist them in conducting voir dire. Most judges keep personal notes of the testimony and argument brought to their court. Court reporters keep original notes, which are corrected and amplified before a final reporter's transcript is issued. If we look to the courts of appeal, we will find enormous quantities of initial drafts, memoranda, critical analyses of others' work, and all kinds of preliminary writings. All of this material, which we will call Category II writings, is created in the course of judicial work and for the purpose of carrying out judicial duties." (6 C.A.4th 114.)

(3) None of the materials in Category II should be subject to public inspection. Their use would often be detrimental to the user, for they are tentative, often wrong, and sometimes misleading. And, their use would in many cases severely hamper the users, for the judge's personal bench notes are constructed so as to remind the judge, in his or her personal fashion and not in a form digestible by the public, of the aspects of the case the judge thought important. (6 C.A.4th 114.)

(4) Certain kinds of documents, such as the clerk's rough minutes, are on the margin of this classification. "They are clearly not official records of the court in the sense that they constitute court action, or can be relied upon as reflecting court proceedings with complete accuracy. On the other hand, they do not partake of the discretionary and incomplete content that characterizes the judge's bench notes or the first drafts of various court documents." (6 C.A.4th 115.) The clerk is obligated to prepare a record of the events of the court's sessions. "This record, including the clerk's rough notes, involves the exercise of no significant discretion on the part of the clerk. ... The clerk's rough minutes are made not only for his benefit but for the use of the court, and very possibly for the benefit of parties and others interested in the litigation." (6 C.A.4th 115.)

"We therefore conclude that the clerk's initial or 'rough' minutes constitute a court record which should be available for public inspection. This written document is kept regularly by all clerks. It reflects ministerial action by the clerk. It is a useful document because it is the one repository of easy access which provides a continuous chronology of each court's daily activities. Further, unlike many of the writings we have described above, which may contain tentative or erroneous information or conclusions the release of which to the press would be detrimental to the judicial process, the clerk's minute book presumptively contains only accurate, descriptive and non-discretionary information." (6 C.A.4th 115.)

(c) Authority of presiding judge. The presiding judge, in denying the request for inspection, declared that he had no authority to direct the production of the minute books of other superior court judges. (6 C.A.4th 116.) However, he was the administrative leader of the court, and had general direction and supervision of the attaches of the court. "While the presiding judge may not (as he ruled) have the authority to require release to the press of the clerk's minutes of other departments of the superior court, he surely has the power to make at least a preliminary ruling as to the nature of records and whether they are subject to press inspection. We would assume that most of the judges of the superior court would honor the presiding judge's determination of press access to the clerk's minutes, even though from a strictly technical perspective they might be free to make a contrary determination as to their own court's minutes. We therefore find that the order rendered in this case is presumptively effective, notwithstanding any potential defect it may have, in terms of precluding press access to the clerk's minutes. The order should therefore be reversed." (6 C.A.4th 116.)

Accordingly, the writ of mandamus issued as follows: "The order of the presiding judge in this case is reversed, and he is directed to rehear the motion of petitioner and to make such ruling pertaining thereto as he conceives appropriate, in fulfilling his administrative duties as presiding judge, and in harmony with this decision. No further order or direction, as might pertain to the six named superior court judges, is at this time appropriate." (6 C.A.4th 117.)

3. Scope: Records Covered.

c. Records of State Board of Equalization.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 282

[§ 282] Records of State Board of Equalization.

In State Bd. of Equalization v. Superior Court (1992) 10 C.A.4th 1177, 13 C.R.2d 342, Associated Sales Tax Consultants sought to obtain documents showing the State Board of Equalization's practice in interpreting and applying certain sales and use tax regulations. The board denied the request, and Associated petitioned the superior court for declaratory relief and an order to disclose. The superior court granted the petition, and the board sought review in the court of appeal. Held, order affirmed.

(a) The records were public records, which would disclose the board's practices in applying its regulations to the cases coming before it. This is a matter of interest to the public: "The revelation of an agency's working law promotes its accountability to the public and the consistent, predictable and nonarbitrary application and enforcement of the law. ... This working law is found in the application of an agency's regulations to cases coming before it and in the opinions of its counsel and audit staff training materials which guide the Board's employees in the performance of their duties. It is in the application of a rule to the facts of a case that its meaning is frequently disclosed." (10 C.A.4th 1186.)

(b) The records are identifiable; the size of the request is not an objection, if the records can be located with reasonable effort. (10 C.A.4th 1186.)

(c) Confidential taxpayer information is segregable; hence the fact that the records may contain some confidential information does not justify withholding the entire document. (10 C.A.4th 1187, citing American Civil Liberties Union Foundation v. Deukmejian (1982) 32 C.3d 440, 186 C.R. 235, 651 P.2d 822.) Exemplars of excised records of similar documents the board has disclosed show that it is likely the excision will not destroy the utility of the documents. (10 C.A.4th 1188.)

(d) The burdens of production are not too onerous:

(1) Govt.C. 6255 (infra, §§295, 296) states that an agency may justify withholding if on the facts the public interest in not making the record public clearly outweighs the public interest served by disclosure. But the burden of showing that a request is too onerous lies with the board. (10 C.A.4th 1188.)

"Here, the public interest in disclosure is substantial, the manifest public interest in the avoidance of secret law and a correlative interest in the disclosure of an agency's working law. On the other side of the equation, the Board overstates the burden of segregating the exempt from the nonexempt material. As noted, the record contains exemplars of similar documents the Board has disclosed in the past with confidential information excised. They show that the primary deletions were the names of the taxpayers. Unlike in American Civil Liberties Union Foundation, supra, segregation here would not impose a burden on the Board to inquire from numerous outside sources whether information contained on the documents is confidential." (10 C.A.4th 1190.)

(2) The board complains of staff inconvenience and expense; but the trial court found that this burden is sufficiently alleviated by retaining outside counsel with expertise to perform the task at the expense of Associated. (10 C.A.4th 1190.)

(3) The board discounts the public interest because Associated intends to use the material for commercial purposes. But the Public Records Act does not differentiate among those who seek access to public information: "What is material is the public interest in disclosure, not the private interest of a requesting party." (10 C.A.4th 1191.)

(e) The board may be required to prepare a list. "We can conceive circumstances in which an indexing requirement could involve the exercise of policy discretion and improperly be used to manufacture novel policy determinations in the guise of seeking existing documents. That is not this case: The listing called for is ministerial; there is no practical distinction whether it is called a list or an index." (10 C.A.4th 1191.) And list preparation correlates with the requirement that records requests reasonably describe identifiable documents. "The identification requirement may not be used by a government agency as a method of withholding records, e.g., by refusing to provide a requesting party with the means by which he may reasonably describe an identifiable document." (10 C.A.4th 1192.)

The Legislature responded to State Board of Equalization v. Superior Court, supra, by enacting Govt.C. 15650 et seq., which require the board to adopt regulations that will facilitate maximum public access to the board's public records.

d. Miscellaneous Records.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 283

[§ 283] Miscellaneous Records.

(1) Air Pollution Data. The following air pollution data are expressly designated as public records:

(a) Information disclosing the air pollution that particular equipment will produce, required to be submitted to a state or local agency prior to its sale, operation or use. (Govt.C. 6254.7(a).)

(b) Pollution monitoring data. (Govt.C. 6254.7(b).)

(c) "Notwithstanding any other provision of law, all air pollution emission data, including those emission data which constitute trade secrets." (Govt.C. 6254.7(e).)

However, trade secrets used to calculate emission data are not public records. (Govt.C. 6254.7(d), (e); see Masonite Corp. v. Mendocino Air Quality Management Dist. (1996) 42 C.A.4th 436, 446, 49 C.R.2d 639 [emission factors are data used to calculate emission data, and therefore they qualify for protection as trade secrets under Govt.C. 6254.7(e) and implementing regulations].) Similarly, emission data used to calculate the costs of obtaining emissions offsets are not public records. (Govt.C. 6254.7(f).)

(2) Notices of Housing Code Violations. Notices that render a dwelling untenable under C.C. 1941.1 (see 4 Summary (9th), Real Property, §580), and records of action with respect to these notices, are public records. (Govt.C. 6254.7(c).)

(3) Public Employment Contracts. Employment contracts between a state or local agency and its officials or employees are public records and are not exempt under Govt.C. 6254 (infra, §288 et seq.) or Govt.C. 6255 (infra, §§295, 296). (Govt.C. 6254.8; see Braun v. Taft (1984) 154 C.A.3d 332, 346, 201 C.R. 654.)

(4) Disciplinary Records of Securities Broker-Dealers. Information reported to the North American Securities Administrators Association/National Association of Securities Dealers' Central Registration Depository and compiled as disciplinary records that are made available to the Department of Corporations through a computer system are public records. The department may disclose the information upon request under Corp.C. 25247. (Govt.C. 6254.12.)

(5) Distinction: Computer Software. Computer software (defined to include computer mapping systems, computer programs, and computer graphics systems) developed by a state or local agency is not itself a public record. However, the statute does not affect the public record status of information merely because it is stored in a computer. (Govt.C.

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

L. California Public Records Act.

4. Right To Inspect and Copy.

a. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 284

[§ 284] In General.

(1) Regulations and Guidelines for Inspection. Public records must be "open to inspection at all times during the office hours of the state or local agency and every person has a right to inspect any public record, except as hereafter provided." Any reasonably segregable portion of a record must be made available for inspection to anyone requesting the record after deletion of those portions that are exempted from disclosure by law. (Govt.C. 6253(a).)

Every public agency may adopt regulations stating the procedures for making its records available, and certain specified agencies must establish written guidelines for access to records. The guidelines must be posted conspicuously and free copies must be made available on request. (Govt.C. 6253.4.)

(2) Right To Obtain Copies. When a state or local agency receives a request for a copy of records and the request reasonably describes the records sought, the agency must "make the records promptly available to any person upon payment of fees covering direct costs of duplication, or a statutory fee if applicable." An exact copy, if requested, must be provided unless it is impracticable to do so. Computer data must be provided in a form to be determined by the agency. These requirements do not apply to public records that are exempted from disclosure by express provisions of law. (Govt.C. 6253(b)); see Govt.C. 6277 [impracticability of state agency providing electronic copy due to Y2K problem]; Govt.C. 26831 [county clerk may charge reasonable fee for copies of records]; Rosenthal v. Hansen (1973) 34 C.A.3d 754, 761, 110 C.R. 257 [construing predecessor statute; public agencies may impose reasonable restrictions on general requests for voluminous classes of documents, e.g., requiring specific request for copies of specific documents]; North County Parents Organization v. Department of Education (1994) 23 C.A.4th 144, 148, 28 C.R.2d 359 [construing predecessor statute; cost of duplication includes cost of running copy machine and "conceivably" also expense of person operating it, but does not include retrieval, inspection, and handling of file from which copy is extracted]; 86 A.L.R.4th 786 [right to receive information in particular medium or format].)

Within 10 days of receiving a request for a copy, the agency must determine whether the request is for "disclosable public records in the possession of the agency" and notify the person making the request of its determination and the supporting reasons. Under specified "unusual circumstances," the time limit may be extended by not more than 14 days. (Govt.C. 6253(c).)

An agency may not "obstruct the inspection or copying of public records" and may adopt requirements for itself that allow for faster, more efficient, or greater access than otherwise required. (Govt.C. 6253(d), (e).)

(3) Inspection of Records by Insurers. Insurers and their agents, while investigating suspected fraud, are entitled to access to all relevant public records required to be open for inspection under Govt.C. 6250 et seq. (Ins.C. 1871.1.)

(4) Sale or Other Furnishing Interfering With Public Access. An agency may not sell, exchange, furnish, or otherwise provide a public record subject to disclosure under the Act to a private entity in a manner preventing the agency from providing the record directly pursuant to the Act. However, this prohibition does not require an agency to use the State Printer to print public records, and does not prevent the destruction of records pursuant to law. (Govt.C. 6270(a); for limited exception applicable to contracts entered into by one county, see Govt.C. 6270(b).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Right To Obtain Copies. If an agency has information constituting an identifiable public record that is not exempt from disclosure, and the information is in an electronic format, the agency must make the information available in an electronic format to anyone requesting it. However, the agency is not required to release an electronic record in the electronic format in which it is held if doing so would jeopardize or compromise the security or integrity of the original record or of any proprietary software in which it is maintained. (Govt.C. 6253.9, added in 2000.) Notification of determination: Govt.C. 6253(c), as amended in 2001, additionally provides that if the agency determines that the requested records are disclosable, it must state the estimated date and time when the records will be made available.

(2a) (New) Assistance in Identifying Records. Where a request for inspection or for a copy is made, the agency must, "in order to assist the member of the public make a focused and effective request that reasonably describes an identifiable record or records," do all of the following, "to the extent reasonable under the circumstances": (a) assist the member of the public in identifying records and information that are responsive to the request or purpose of the request; (b) describe the information technology and physical location in which the records exist; (c) provide suggestions for overcoming any practical basis for denying access. These requirements are deemed to be satisfied if the agency "is unable to identify the requested information after making a reasonable effort to elicit additional clarifying information from the requester that will help identify the record or records." The requirements are in addition to any action required of the agency under Govt.C. 6253 (text, p. 556), and they do not apply if the agency (a) makes the requested records available under Govt.C. 6253; (b) determines that the request should be denied and bases its determination solely on an exemption listed in Govt.C. 6254 (text, §288); or (c) makes available an index of its records. (Govt.C. 6253.1, added in 2001.)

(2b) (New) Denial in Writing. Where a request for inspection or copies of public records is made in writing, and a determination is made to deny the request, in whole or in part, the denial must be in writing. (Govt.C. 6255(b), added in 2000.)

(3a) (New) Inspection by Public Entities and Public Officials. In Los Angeles Unified School Dist. v. Superior Court (2007) 151 C.A.4th 759, 60 C.R.3d 445, a city and its city attorney sought records from a school district relating to a school construction project. The district refused to produce the documents, and the trial judge issued an order compelling it to do so. Held, affirmed; both the city and the city attorney had standing to request the records.

(a) Under traditional rules of statutory construction, government entities must be considered "persons" within the meaning of Govt.C. 6253 unless to so include them would infringe upon sovereign governmental powers. The district is already required to produce records upon payment of a fee, and any additional indirect costs the district may incur in complying with an inspection request from a municipal corporation cannot be considered a significant infringement on its powers. (151 C.A.4th 770.) The ultimate purpose of the Act is to encourage full disclosure and openness in governmental affairs. Thus, one governmental entity should be willing to provide public records to another governmental entity. "Our conclusion that the City is a 'person' entitled to request documents from another governmental entity is the only rational and reasonable interpretation of the statute." (151 C.A.4th 771.)

(b) As to the city attorney, Govt.C. 6252.5, by specifying that an elected member or officer of an agency is entitled to access to records of that agency, might be read to limit the city attorney to access to city records. The next sentence of the statute, however, makes clear that no such limitation was intended: "Nothing in this section shall limit the ability of elected members or officers to access public records permitted by law in the administration of their duties." Further, "natural persons" are persons who may request records (Govt.C. 6252(c)), and the city attorney's official position does not extinguish his status as a natural person. (151 C.A.4th 774.)

b. Inspection of Hazardous Waste Records.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 285

[§ 285] Inspection of Hazardous Waste Records.

In response to a finding that the protection of public health and the environment require that the public's access to records "pertaining to hazardous waste management, information, and cleanup" be facilitated (Health & Saf.C. 25103), the 1986 Legislature added Health & Saf.C. 25152.5.

The statute (1) prohibits the Department of Health Services from limiting the hours during the normal working day or the number of working days during which public records may be inspected; (2) specifies time limits within which nonexempt records must be made available; (3) provides for payment of duplication and mailing costs by the party requesting the records; and (4) requires, in the event a request is denied, a writing specifying the reasons for the denial and disclosing the identity of each person responsible for the decision.

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XI. PRIVILEGE FOR OFFICIAL INFORMATION

L. California Public Records Act.

5. Proceedings To Enforce Rights.

a. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 286

[§ 286] In General.

(1) Injunctive, Declaratory, or Mandamus Relief. Any person may institute proceedings for injunctive, declaratory, or mandamus relief to enforce his or her right to inspect or copy a public record or class of public records, and the matter must be expeditiously heard. (Govt.C. 6258; see Wilder v. Superior Court (1998) 66 C.A.4th 77, 82, 84, 77 C.R.2d 629, 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Extraordinary Writs, Supp., §122 [woman struck by city operated trolley was entitled to use mandamus procedure to obtain public records relating to operation of trolley, even though she was potential plaintiff against city].) (On in camera examination of record where exemption claimed, see infra, §299; on distinguishable situation where governmental agency seeks declaratory relief to prevent disclosure, see infra, §287.)

(2) Costs and Attorneys' Fees. If the plaintiff prevails in litigation under this statute, the court must award court costs and reasonable attorneys' fees to the plaintiff. The costs and fees must be paid by the agency of which the public official is a member or employee, and do not become the official's personal liability. If the court finds that the plaintiff's case is clearly frivolous, it must award court costs and reasonable attorneys' fees to the public agency. (Govt.C. 6259(d); see Belth v. Garamendi (1991) 232 C.A.3d 896, 900, 283 C.R. 829 [Govt.C. 6259(d) is mandatory]; Braun v. Taft (1984) 154 C.A.3d 332, 348, 349, 201 C.R. 654 [fees properly denied where plaintiff acted for personal reasons rather than as member of public seeking withheld public information].)

A plaintiff prevails, within the meaning of the costs provision, if the action results in the defendant releasing a copy of a previously withheld document; an action results in the release of a previously withheld document if the lawsuit motivates the defendant to produce the document. (Rogers v. Superior Court (1993) 19 C.A.4th 469, 482, 23 C.R.2d 412; see Motorola Communication & Electronics v. Department of General Services (1997) 55 C.A.4th 1340, 1350, 1351, 64 C.R.2d 477 [plaintiff was not prevailing party entitled to costs and fees in mandamus proceeding, where there was substantial evidence that defendant made timely efforts to comply with plaintiff's request for documents and that litigation was not cause of defendant's ultimate disclosure]; Fontana Police Dept. v. Villegas-Banuelos (1999) 74 C.A.4th 1249, 1252, 88 C.R.2d 641 [prevailing party was entitled to fee, even though he had not initiated disclosure proceeding].)

(3) Petition by District Attorney. District attorneys may inspect or copy records not exempted by the Act. (Govt.C. 6263 et seq.; on exemptions, see infra, §288 et seq.) If a request to inspect or copy is not honored within 10 working days, the district attorney may petition an appropriate court, which may require permission to inspect or copy "unless the public interest or good cause in withholding such records clearly outweighs the public interest in disclosure." (Govt.C. 6264.) Disclosure to a district attorney under the statute "shall effect no change in the status of the records under any other provision of law." (Govt.C. 6265; see 11 Pacific L. J. 462.)

(4) Appeal. On appeal from a trial court's decision under the Act, the reviewing court must conduct an independent review of the trial court's statutory balancing analysis, upholding its factual findings if based on substantial evidence. (CBS v. Block (1986) 42 C.3d 646, 651, 230 C.R. 362, 725 P.2d 470, infra, §295.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Injunctive, Declaratory, or Mandamus Relief. Although any person may enforce the California Public Records Act, Govt.C. 6258 contemplates a declaratory relief action commenced only by an individual or entity seeking disclosure of public records. The statute provides neither explicit nor implicit authority for one person to enforce another's inspection rights. (San Lorenzo Valley Community Advocates for Responsible Education v. San Lorenzo Valley Unified School Dist. (2006) 139 C.A.4th 1356, 1415, 44 C.R.3d 128.)

See 13 A.L.R.6th 721 [recovery of punitive damages in actions under state freedom of information acts].

(2) Costs and Attorneys' Fees. See Los Angeles Times v. Alameda Corridor Trans. Authority (2001) 88 C.A.4th 1381, 1391, 107 C.R.2d 29 [newspaper was prevailing plaintiff, entitled to attorneys' fees, even though it obtained only one of two documents it sought from transportation authority, where the document was disclosed only because newspaper filed suit]; San Lorenzo Valley Community Advocates for Responsible Education v. San Lorenzo Valley Unified School Dist., supra, 139 C.A.4th 1421 [in action by community organization challenging school district's decision to close two schools, plaintiff's request for attorneys' fees under Govt.C. 6259 was properly denied; evidence supported trial judge's implied finding that action did not result in release of previously withheld public records].

L. California Public Records Act.

5. Proceedings To Enforce Rights.

b. Distinction: No Action by Governmental Entity.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 287

[§ 287] Distinction: No Action by Governmental Entity.

"In this appeal we confront the novel question whether a city may maintain an action for declaratory relief to determine its obligation to disclose the contents of a police report in response to a request by a local newspaper for disclosure under the California Public Records Act." (Santa Rosa v. Press Democrat (1986) 187 C.A.3d 1315, 1324, 232 C.R. 445.)

(a) The Act (CPRA) authorizes any person to bring an action to enforce the right to inspect or copy, but there is no provision for an action by the governmental agency or for any action to prevent disclosure. (187 C.A.3d 1320.)

(b) There is no implied right to bring an action on the theory of the federal "reverse Freedom of Information Act (FOIA)" action. The intricate problems of such actions under the FOIA have no relevance to the issue presented here: "The thrust of the reverse FOIA case, like that of the usual FOIA action, is to obtain judicial review of an agency decision. The parties neither cite nor has our independent search disclosed any case in which a court has agreed to undertake the decision making function in the first instance." (187 C.A.3d 1322.)

(c) "We recognize the dilemma in which the City finds itself. If it refuses to disclose the information, it faces the possibility of defending an action by the Press Democrat to enforce the CPRA. If it fails to justify the nondisclosure, it will be liable for court costs and attorney fees. ... Moreover, if voluntary disclosure results in an unwarranted invasion of privacy, it becomes exposed to a potential civil suit for damages. ... But we cannot agree that the solution to such dilemma is to substitute the court as the initial decision making body." (187 C.A.3d 1322.) To subject a person requesting information to a potential civil suit instituted by the government agency for the purpose of testing the legitimacy of the request would be contrary to the purpose of the CPRA, "and would effectively discourage requests for disclosure by a member of the public or representative surrogate." (187 C.A.3d 1323.)

(d) The declaratory relief procedure (C.C.P. 1060) is inappropriate. "[T]he City here claims that it is unable to balance the rights of the various parties and reach a decision whether to disclose. Somewhat inconsistently, it also argues that the verified complaint constitutes its 'determination and the reasons' whether to comply as required by section 6256. Yet, nowhere in the complaint or the briefs do we find any suggestion that The Press Democrat either has sought or intends to bring an action to compel disclosure of the information if its request is denied. The absence of such allegations manifests that no live controversy exists suitable for adjudication under Code of Civil Procedure section 1060." (187 C.A.3d 1323, referring to former Govt.C. 6256, now Govt.C. 6253; see supra, §284.) The fact that it is the agency itself that asks the court to preview its exercise of discretion does not call for a different conclusion: it would violate the doctrine of separation of powers if the court, in the guise of giving declaratory relief, made pronouncements in a field reserved to legislative or executive discretion. (187 C.A.3d 1324.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

In Filarsky v. Superior Court (2002) 28 C.4th 419, 121 C.R.2d 844, 49 P.3d 194, an attorney made a request under the California Public Records Act for disclosure of records relating to the city's hiring of a police captain. The city refused to disclose the records, and, before the attorney could initiate a proceeding under the Act, the city filed its own declaratory relief action under C.C.P. 1060. The trial judge determined that the city did not have to disclose the records. The Court of Appeal affirmed and further determined that the city acted properly in seeking declaratory relief. Held, reversed. Under these circumstances, Govt.C. 6258 and 6259 (text, §§286, 299) set forth the exclusive procedure for litigating the issue of a public agency's obligations to disclose records to a member of the public, and those provisions do not authorize an agency in possession of the records to seek a judicial determination regarding its disclosure duty. "Permitting a public agency to circumvent the established special statutory procedure by filing an ordinary declaratory relief action against a person who has not yet initiated litigation would eliminate statutory protections and incentives for members of the public in seeking disclosure of public records, require them to defend civil actions they otherwise might not have commenced, and discourage them from requesting records pursuant to the Act, thus frustrating the Legislature's purpose of furthering the fundamental right of every person in this state to have prompt access to information in the possession of public agencies." (28 C.4th 423.)

XI. PRIVILEGE FOR OFFICIAL INFORMATION

L. California Public Records Act.

6. Exemptions.

a. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 288

[§ 288] In General.

Govt.C. 6254 is the primary exemption statute, and contains an elaborate list of records not subject to the disclosure requirements:

(1) Preliminary Records. Preliminary drafts, notes, or interagency or intra-agency memoranda that are not retained by the public agency in the ordinary course of business. However, the public interest in withholding these records must clearly outweigh the public interest in disclosing them. (Govt.C. 6254(a); see Citizens for a Better Environment v. Department of Food & Agriculture (1985) 171 C.A.3d 704, 714, 217 C.R. 504 [no showing that writings would be customarily destroyed in ordinary course of business, hence no exemption].)

Superior Court* (1998) 62 C.A.4th 1496, 1503, 73 C.R.2d 777 [claim forms filed by plaintiffs in tort action against school district were subject to disclosure; while language of pending litigation exemption is ambiguous, related statute (Govt.C. 54956.9(b)(3)(C)) expressly acknowledges availability for inspection of claims forms filed under Tort Claims Act]; Fairley v. Superior Court (1998) 66 C.A.4th 1414, 1422, 78 C.R.2d 648 [following Hemet v. Superior Court (1995) 37 C.A.4th 1411, 44 C.R.2d 532, 5 Cal. Crim. ## CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

L. California Public Records Act.

6. Exemptions.

b. Records of Intelligence Information.

2. Clarifications and Distinctions.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 290

[§ 290] Clarifications and Distinctions.

The general rule of nondisclosure is not absolute. In South Coast Newspapers v. Oceanside (1984) 160 C.A.3d 261, 206 C.R. 527, a newspaper sought disclosure of a city police report of its investigation of a high school principal for allegedly failing to report an incident of child abuse. The city disclosed the information required by Govt.C. 6254(f)(2), but the newspaper contended that it was entitled to the entire report. The trial judge ruled that the general exemption of Govt.C. 6254(f) was applicable and that the report was thus exempt from disclosure regardless of its contents. Held, reversed and remanded for an in camera examination.

(a) Govt.C. 6254(f) must be construed in light of the similar provision in the federal Freedom of Information Act (infra, §302), and the amendments thereto, which permit disclosure under specified circumstances. (160 C.A.3d 268.)

(b) Accordingly, the newspaper is entitled to receive a copy of the report if the trial judge, after an in camera examination, makes the following determinations: "(1) [N]o confidential sources will be revealed as a result of the report's release; (2) disclosure will not interfere with enforcement proceedings; (3) no person will be deprived of a fair trial; (4) release of the report will not constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy; (5) secret police investigative techniques or procedures will not be revealed; or (6) the life or physical safety of law enforcement personnel will not be endangered." (160 C.A.3d 265.)

In Williams v. Superior Court (1993) 5 C.4th 337, 19 C.R.2d 882, 852 P.2d 377, a newspaper requested access to a county sheriff's records of disciplinary proceedings against two deputies. Despite the sheriff's objection that the records were exempt from disclosure under Govt.C. 6254(f), the trial judge ordered partial disclosure. The Court of Appeal vacated the trial judge's order, directing further review in camera and articulating two limitations on Govt.C. 6254(f) that do not appear on the face of the statute: (1) the exemption was limited by the criteria set forth in the Freedom of Information Act (5 U.S.C., §552), and (2) records remained exempt only as long as they continued to relate to a "pending" investigation. Held, the Court of Appeal correctly vacated the trial judge's order but erred in articulating the scope of the exemption.

(a) In drafting Govt.C. 6254(f), the Legislature expressly imposed several precise limitations on the confidentiality of law enforcement investigatory records. It was capable of articulating additional limitations if it intended to do so. Thus, contrary to the holding in South Coast Newspapers v. Oceanside, supra, the statute should not be interpreted as if it incorporated the FOIA criteria. (5 C.4th 351, 354.)

(b) While there may be policy reasons supporting a time limitation on the exemption, such a limitation cannot be reconciled with the statutory language and its history. "Once an investigation ... has come into being because there is a concrete and definite prospect of enforcement proceedings at that time, materials that relate to the investigation and, thus, properly belong in the file remain exempt subject to the terms of the statute." (5 C.4th 362.) (See 21 Pepperdine L. Rev. 979.)

In Rivero v. Superior Court (1997) 54 C.A.4th 1048, 63 C.R.2d 213, the court held that the district attorney's files from a closed investigation into the conduct of a public official were exempt from disclosure under Govt.C. 6254(f). The court noted that the suggestion in the Williams case that a time limitation on the exemption might be appropriate has not been followed by the Legislature. (54 C.A.4th 1059.)

Superior Court* (2002) 104 C.A.4th 169, 176, 128 C.R.2d 234 [post-investigative closing report by deputy district attorney, containing investigators' opinions, thoughts, and conclusions regarding potential criminal misconduct, was not subject to disclosure; following Williams v. Superior Court (1993) 5 C.4th 337, 19 C.R.2d 882, 852 P.2d 377, text, p. 566].

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 291

(2) Complaints or Requests for Assistance Received. In addition to the time, substance and location of all complaints or requests for assistance, and the response thereto, the information disclosed must include, to the extent it is recorded: the time, date, and location of occurrence; the time and date of the report; the name and age of the victim; the factual circumstances surrounding the crime or incident; and a general description of any injuries, property, or weapons involved. (Govt.C. 6254(f)(2); see South Coast Newspapers v. Oceanside (1984) 160 C.A.3d 261, 270, 206 C.R. 527 [Govt.C. 6254(f)(2) does not require formal, written complaint by citizen to police department; complaint internally generated within police department is sufficient].)

At the request of a victim of certain specified offenses, or at the request of a minor victim's parent or guardian, the victim's name may be withheld. Where a person is the victim of more than one crime, information disclosing that the person is a victim of a specified crime may be also be withheld by request. And, Govt.C. 6254(f)(2) is also subject to P.C. 841.5, prohibiting law enforcement officers from disclosing, to arrested persons or those who may be defendants in a criminal action, the address or telephone number of any victim or witness. (Govt.C. 6254(f)(2).)

(3) Distinction: Disclosure Restricted to Current Information. In Los Angeles v. Superior Court (Kusar) (1993) 18 C.A.4th 588, 22 C.R.2d 409, a legal secretary sought to compel the county under Govt.C. 6254(f)(1) and (f)(2) to generate and disclose recorded information regarding every person arrested for certain offenses by two specifically named deputy sheriffs over a 10-year period. The secretary's employer, an attorney, was representing the plaintiff in a civil action arising from the alleged use of excessive force by the two officers, and had already unsuccessfully sought the information in that action. The trial judge granted the disclosure order. Held, the broad disclosure required by the order was not authorized by the statute.

(a) The history of the 1982 legislation that amended Govt.C. 6254(f) to read as it does now demonstrates a legislative intent "only to continue the common law tradition of contemporaneous disclosure of individualized arrest information in order to prevent secret arrests and to mandate the continued disclosure of customary and basic law enforcement information to the press." (18 C.A.4th 598.)

(b) P.C. 832.5, 832.7, and 832.8 and Ev.C. 1043 et seq. (see 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §51 et seq.) impose restrictions on the disclosure of information from records of citizen complaints against police officers. Those procedures would be nullified if the same information could be obtained as a matter of right through the Public Records Act. Thus, the records to be disclosed under Govt.C. 6254(f)(1) and (f)(2) "are limited to current information and records of the matters described in the statute and which pertain to contemporaneous police activity." (18 C.A.4th 600, 601.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

L. California Public Records Act.

6. Exemptions.

c. Records Exempted by Federal or State Law.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 294

[§ 294] Records Exempted by Federal or State Law.

(1) In General. Records not subject to the Act's disclosure requirements include those that are exempt from disclosure under federal or state law, including, but not limited to, provisions of the Evidence Code relating to privilege. (Govt.C. 6254(k); see San Gabriel Tribune v. Superior Court (1983) 143 C.A.3d 762, 775, 192 C.R. 415 [financial data utilized by city in granting rate increase to waste disposal company was not privileged official information under Ev.C. 1040, and thus was not prohibited from disclosure by Govt.C. 6254(k)]; CBS v. Block (1986) 42 C.3d 646, 651, 230 C.R. 362, 725 P.2d 470, infra, §295 [rejection of claim of exemption under Govt.C. 6255, on ground that public interest favors disclosure, similarly requires rejection of claims of exemption under Govt.C. 6254(k) and Ev.C. 1040, supra, §246 et seq.]; Hemet v. Superior Court (1995) 37 C.A.4th 1411, 1420, 44 C.R.2d 532, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §53 [incorporation into this exemption of P.C. 832.7, providing for confidentiality and limited disclosure of peace officer personnel records]; Los Angeles v. Superior Court (Axelrad) (1996) 41 C.A.4th 1083, 1088, 1089, 49 C.R.2d 35 [rejection of claim of exemption for depositions generated in previous actions to which city was party; although Govt.C. 6254.5 (see infra, §301) states rule of nonwaiver for disclosures made through legal proceedings, that provision is keyed to pending litigation exemption, which lasts only until action is concluded].

In Roberts v. Palmdale (1993) 5 C.4th 363, 20 C.R.2d 330, 853 P.2d 496, plaintiff city taxpayer appealed to the city council concerning a parcel map approved by the planning commission. The city attorney prepared a confidential letter concerning the appeal and distributed copies to members of the council. After the council approved the map, the taxpayer demanded a copy of the letter. The council refused, and the trial judge denied the taxpayer's petition for a writ of administrative mandamus. Held, disclosure of the letter was not required.

(a) Although Govt.C. 6254(b) exempts from disclosure records pertaining to pending litigation, it does not operate to limit the scope of the attorney-client privilege to matters pertaining to pending litigation. (See supra, §288.) Govt.C. 6254(k) expressly exempts from disclosure matters privileged under the Evidence Code, and this includes the attorney-client privilege. Thus, a public entity may assert the privilege under the Public Records Act without alleging that the writing is relevant to pending litigation under Govt.C. 6254(b). (5 C.4th 373.)

(b) Govt.C. 54956.9, part of the Ralph M. Brown Act (see 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Administrative Proceedings, §15 et seq.), governs closed meetings of governing bodies regarding pending litigation and limits the attorney-client privilege for purposes of conducting closed meetings. However, the transmission of a letter to individual members of the governing body is not a meeting. The Brown Act and the Public Records Act "are readily harmonized if we adopt the usual meaning of the words 'meeting' and 'session': the attorney-client privilege applies to meetings with counsel only as provided by the Brown Act, while the attorney-client privilege is a rule of general applicability in the case of public records." (5 C.4th 379.) Because the Public Records Act did not require disclosure, and the Brown Act was inapplicable, the city council properly withheld the letter. (5 C.4th 381.) (See 22 Pepperdine L. Rev. 328; 25 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 265, 285.)

(2) Statutory List of Exemptions. The 1998 Legislature enacted Govt.C. 6275 et seq. "to assist members of the public and state and local agencies in identifying exemptions to the California Public Records Act. It is the intent of the Legislature that, after January 1, 1999, each addition or amendment to a statute that exempts any information contained in a public record from disclosure pursuant to subdivision (k) of Section 6254 shall be listed and described in this article." (Govt.C. 6275.) The extensive statutory list is contained in Govt.C. 6276.02 et seq.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. See State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Garamendi (2004) 32 C.4th 1029, 1047, 12 C.R.3d 343, 88 P.3d 71 [Ins.C. 1861.07, making community service statement submitted by insurer to insurance commissioner available for public inspection, does not incorporate exemption to disclosure created by Govt.C. 6254(k), and thus trade secret information included in statement is not exempt from disclosure].

In Copley Press v. Superior Court (2006) 39 C.4th 1272, 48 C.R.3d 183, 141 P.3d 288, plaintiff newspaper publisher sought disclosure of documents relating to a peace officer's administrative appeal of a disciplinary matter. When the county civil service commission denied the request, plaintiff filed a petition for writ of mandamus and a complaint for declaratory and injunctive relief. The trial court found in favor of the commission, but the Court of Appeal ordered release of the requested information, with some redactions. Held, judgment of the Court of Appeal reversed.

(a) Govt.C. 6254(k) creates an exemption for records that are otherwise protected from disclosure by state or federal law. P.C. 832.7 is one such law, providing that peace officer or custodial officer records "are confidential and shall not be disclosed in any criminal or civil proceeding except by discovery" under Ev.C. 1043, 1046. The Court of Appeal relied on Bradshaw v. Los Angeles (1990) 221 C.A.3d 908, 270 C.R. 711, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §53, which held that P.C. 832.7 applies only to criminal and civil proceedings. Bradshaw, however, interpreted the statutory language incorrectly. P.C. 832.7 sets forth a general rule of confidentiality, and then creates a limited exception for criminal and civil proceedings. (39 C.4th 1284, 1285.)

(b) The Court of Appeal also found the protections of P.C. 832.7 inapplicable because the commission records sought by plaintiff are not those of the officer's "employing agency" within the meaning of P.C. 832.8. It is true that the officer in question is not employed by the commission, but for the purpose of these statutes, the commission should be regarded as an arm of the employing agency and its records should be regarded as constituting a file maintained by the employer. (39 C.4th 1288.)

(c) The Court of Appeal specifically addressed the disclosure of the officer's identity, finding that it did not qualify for the confidentiality created by P.C. 832.7. New York Times Co. v. Superior Court (1997) 52 C.A.4th 97, 60 C.R.2d 410, did declare a broad rule of nonconfidentiality in this regard, but that rule is unsupported by either the statute's language or its legislative history. (39 C.4th 1298.)

(d) Finally, neither the common law nor constitutional principles support plaintiff's position. Any common law rule of disclosure has been displaced by a specific statute (P.C. 832.7). As to the constitutional arguments, Cal. Const., Art. I, §3(b)(3), specifically provides that the public's right of access does not trump the right of privacy as to "discovery or disclosure of information concerning the official performance or professional qualifications of a peace officer." (39 C.4th 1300.) Further, United States Supreme Court precedent confirms that there is no constitutional right to have access to particular government information. (39 C.4th 1302.) (3) (New) Termination of State Archives Exemption. Any provision of law that exempts an item in the State Archives from public disclosure ceases to apply to that item 75 years after the item was created, "irrespective of the origin of the item, the manner in which it was deposited with the State Archives, or any other condition or circumstance at the time the item was deposited." (Govt.C. 12237, added in 2004.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

L. California Public Records Act.

6. Exemptions.

d. Public Interest Exemption.

1. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 295

[§ 295] In General.

(1) Statement of Exemption. An agency unable to establish a specific exemption under Govt.C. 6254 et seq. (see supra, §288 et seq. and infra, §297) may nevertheless justify its withholding of the record by demonstrating that "on the facts of the particular case the public interest served by not making the record public clearly outweighs the public interest served by disclosure of the record." (Govt.C. 6255; see Govt.C. 6254.8, supra, §283 [public interest exemption does not apply to public employment contracts].)

In San Jose v. Superior Court (San Jose Mercury News) (1999) 74 C.A.4th 1008, 88 C.R.2d 552, the public interest exemption applied. A newspaper initiated writ proceedings under the Public Records Act seeking to compel a city to disclose the names, addresses, and telephone numbers of persons who had made complaints to the city about municipal airport noise. The trial judge ordered the city to disclose the information. Held, the order was erroneous; applying the Govt.C. 6255 balancing test, the public interest in the nondisclosure of the complainant's personal information clearly outweighed the public interest in disclosure.

(a) The complainants had a significant privacy interest in their names, addresses, and telephone numbers as well as in the fact that they had made a complaint to their government, and disclosure of this information would have had a chilling effect on future complaints. (74 C.A.4th 1023.)

(b) In contrast, the public interest in disclosure of personal information about airport noise complainants was minimal, because the city made available all the information it had concerning the complaints, except for the names, addresses, and telephone numbers of the complainants. (74 C.A.4th 1024.)

(c) The newspaper also had alternative means of contacting and interviewing the complainants. (74 C.A.4th 1024.)

Other cases have upheld the exemption and prohibited disclosure. (See Johnson v. Winter (1982) 127 C.A.3d 435, 439, 179 C.R. 585 [investigation file on applicant for special deputy status; trial judge was correct in prohibiting disclosure of matters given under explicit or implicit assurances of confidentiality, but incorrect in ruling that entire file was privileged]; Eskaton Monterey Hosp. v. Myers (1982) 134 C.A.3d 788, 791, 184 C.R. 840 [Medi-Cal audit manual for health care providers, which contains the Department of Health Services' strategy for audits, constitutes law enforcement, rather than administrative, materials and is exempt from disclosure].)

(2) Exemption Not Applicable. In CBS v. Block (1986) 42 C.3d 646, 230 C.R. 362, 725 P.2d 470, plaintiff CBS sought to inspect and copy applications for authorization to carry a concealed weapon submitted to defendant, County Sheriff of Los Angeles, and licenses issued by him pursuant to P.C. 12050 et seq. Defendant refused to release the records, CBS brought suit, and, after a hearing and an in camera review of the records, the trial judge ordered disclosure of most of the 35 then-existing licenses, with the licensee's home address deleted, but denied access to the applications. Held, reversed.

(a) Defendant's concern that release of the information would increase the licensees' vulnerability to attack is "conjectural at best." "A mere assertion of possible endangerment does not 'clearly outweigh' the public interest in access to these records." (42 C.3d 652.)

(b) Any information on the applications or licenses that indicate time and places when the licensee is vulnerable to attack may be deleted pursuant to former Govt.C. 6257 (now Govt.C. 6253), but the fact that some parts of a document may come within the public interest exemption does not justify withholding the entire document. (42 C.3d 652, 653.)

(c) The inchoate fear that some persons will violate the law rather than submit applications that will be disclosed is an insufficient reason to limit the people's right to know. (42 C.3d 653.)

(d) Disclosure of the information will not violate the licensees' constitutional right of privacy. The information sought was voluntarily given to the sheriff, and its disclosure would not inflict an immediate social stigma. It is doubtful that a licensee's desire for anonymity would outweigh the "fundamental and necessary" right of the public to examine the bases upon which such licenses are issued; but, if certain information supplied by individual applicants entails a substantial privacy interest, that information may be deleted. (42 C.3d 655.)

(e) The public interest in disclosure is particularly strong because the sheriff's discretion under the statute is unfettered, and, if the information sought is not disclosed, there is no method by which the people can judge whether the law is being applied fairly and impartially. (42 C.3d 655.)

(f) Further, legislative history undermines the licensees' claimed expectation of privacy. From 1957 to 1968, the licenses were open to public inspection pursuant to P.C. 12053, which was then amended to ensure that the records were subject to the newly enacted Public Records Act. Although it did so for many other type of records, the Legislature did not create an exemption, express or implied, for concealed weapons licenses. (42 C.3d 655.) (See Los Angeles v. Superior Court (Axelrad) (1996) 41 C.A.4th 1083, 1090, 1091, 49 C.R.2d 35 [depositions in no longer pending actions against city for excessive force in use of police dogs were properly ordered disclosed, as disclosure could either force city to change policy to comport with law or reassure public that current policy was lawful]; citing CBS case.)

Other cases are to the same effect. (See Black Panther Party v. Kehoe (1974) 42 C.A.3d 645, 657, 117 C.R. 106, infra, §300 [public interest in disclosure of practice of voluntary compliance by collection agencies does not outweigh public interest in encouraging complaints by provisional assurances of confidentiality]; American Federation of State, County & Mun. Employees v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1978) 80 C.A.3d 913, 914, 146 C.R. 42 [reversing order denying disclosure after balancing interests simultaneously under Govt.C. 6254(c), supra, §288, and public interest exemption of Govt.C. 6255]; San Gabriel Tribune v. Superior Court (1983) 143 C.A.3d 762, 780, 192 C.R. 415 [financial data to justify rate increase submitted by waste disposal company under its contract with city; public's need to know of contracts regulating services outweighed interests of both city (interest in not chilling information-gathering ability) and company (interest in protecting competitive advantage)]; Braun v. Taft (1984) 154 C.A.3d 332, 346, 201 C.R. 654 [disclosure of face sheet of firefighter's salary card not within exemption]; Register Div. of Freedom Newspapers v. Orange (1984) 158 C.A.3d 893, 908, 205 C.R. 92 [documents relating to county's settlement procedure in tort claims case not within exemption]; Connell v. Superior Court (1997) 56 C.A.4th 601, 612, 65 C.R.2d 738 [public interest in disclosure of warrants issued by State Controller to state vendors that were unpaid outweighed public interest in nondisclosure; security concerns were largely speculative, burden on Controller's office was not undue, and there was strong public interest in verifying that public revenues were managed properly]; Poway Unified School Dist. v. Superior Court (1998) 62 C.A.4th 1496, 1505, 1506, 73 C.R.2d 777 [where students filed government tort claims against school district arising out of brutal hazing incident involving sodomy, public interest in disclosure of claims forms outweighed interest served by withholding them from newspaper; one who files tort claim has no reasonable expectation of privacy in it, and newspaper had policy of protecting identity of sex crime victims and juvenile offenders].)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

L. California Public Records Act.

6. Exemptions.

d. Public Interest Exemption.

2. Executive or Deliberative Process Privilege.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 296

[§ 296] Executive or Deliberative Process Privilege.

In Times Mirror Co. v. Superior Court (1991) 53 C.3d 1325, 283 C.R. 893, 813 P.2d 240, a newspaper brought suit to obtain disclosure of the Governor's appointment schedules and calendars for the previous 5 years. The trial judge refused to permit disclosure. The Court of Appeal reversed and remanded for an in camera review by the trial judge, in order to segregate information in the records posing a legitimate security risk before disclosure. Held, judgment of the Court of Appeal reversed.

(a) The Court of Appeal correctly found that the Governor's appointment records were not exempt from disclosure under Govt.C. 6254(l), protecting "correspondence" to and from the Governor's office (see supra, §288). The correspondence exemption is confined to communications by letter. (53 C.3d 1337.) However, the records sought by plaintiff were protected from disclosure by the public interest exemption of Govt.C. 6255 (see supra, §295). (53 C.3d 1347.)

(b) The "deliberative process" or "executive" privilege, which has been explored at length in federal case law, supported the public interest in nondisclosure. "Disclosing the identity of persons with whom the Governor has met and consulted is the functional equivalent of revealing the substance or direction of the Governor's judgment and mental processes; such information would indicate which interests or individuals he deemed to be of significance with respect to critical issues of the moment. The intrusion into the deliberative process is patent." (53 C.3d 1343.) Further, compelled disclosure might discourage some from meeting with the Governor, devaluing or eliminating their viewpoints from consideration. (53 C.3d 1344.)

(c) The public interest of a democratic society in knowing how the Governor performs his or her duties was "clearly outweighed" by the public interest in nondisclosure of the appointment records. "The deliberative process privilege is grounded in the unromantic reality of politics; it rests on the understanding that if the public and the Governor were entitled to precisely the same information, neither would likely receive it. ... To disclose every private meeting or association of the Governor and expect the decision making process to function effectively is to deny human nature and contrary to common sense and experience." (53 C.3d 1345.)

(d) The trial judge's denial of the requested disclosure was further justified by the potential threat to the Governor's physical security. There was evidence that "an individual intent on doing harm to the Governor might be able to reconstruct the Governor's daily habits and patterns using outdated schedules." (53 C.3d 1347.)

More recent cases have followed the Times Mirror rule. (See Rogers v. Superior Court (1993) 19 C.A.4th 469, 479, 23 C.R.2d 412 [telephone numbers of persons with whom city council members spoke were exempt from disclosure under deliberative process privilege, as they would reveal "judgment and mental processes" of members]; Wilson v. Superior Court (1996) 51 C.A.4th 1136, 1143, 59 C.R.2d 537 [applications submitted to Governor for position on county board of supervisors were predecisional documents coming within deliberative process privilege; application forms solicited personal information, which would not be supplied if confidentiality were not respected]; California First Amendment Coalition v. Superior Court (1998) 67 C.A.4th 159, 169, 78 C.R.2d 847 [following Wilson]; and see 19 Pepperdine L. Rev. 736 [discussing Times Mirror].)

L. California Public Records Act.

6. Exemptions.

e. Miscellaneous Exemptions.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 297

[§ 297] Miscellaneous Exemptions.

Various other statutes provide disclosure exemptions for particular records. The following are the principal ones:

- (1) The address of the victim of domestic violence. (Govt.C. 6205 et seq.)
- (2) Information about persons paid by the state to provide in-home supportive services under Welf.C. 12300 et seq. or personal care services under Welf.C. 14132.95. [§ 298] Records Not Covered by Exemptions.

The disclosure exemptions contained in Govt.C. 6254 et seq. (see supra, §288 et seq.) do not apply to the following information:

(2) Air pollution data, housing code violations, and trade secrets. (Govt.C. 6254, 6254.7; see supra, §283.)

XI. PRIVILEGE FOR OFFICIAL INFORMATION

L. California Public Records Act.

7. In Camera Examination.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 299

[§ 299] In Camera Examination.

(1) Hearing. If permitted by Ev.C. 915(b) (disclosure of privileged information to judge; see supra, §88), a court must rule on an exemption claimed by the agency (see supra, §288 et seq.) after examining the record in camera, papers filed by the parties, "and such oral argument and additional evidence as the court may allow." (Govt.C. 6259(a).)

Since the in camera proceeding specified by Ev.C. 915(b) is permissive, an in camera examination of records under Govt.C. 6259 is discretionary. (See Johnson v. Winter (1982) 127 C.A.3d 435, 440, 179 C.R. 585 [in camera proceeding was required to determine whether employment application record contained nonexempt material]; Register Div. of Freedom Newspapers v. Orange (1984) 158 C.A.3d 893, 901, 205 C.R. 92 [with exception of sheriff's crime report and rough notes of risk management staff, documents relating to settlement between county and jailhouse inmate injured in jailhouse assault (medical records, investigation report, etc.) were properly ordered disclosed without in camera examination]; South Coast Newspapers v. Oceanside (1984) 160 C.A.3d 261, 270, 206 C.R. 527, supra, §290 [remanded for in camera examination of police report even though investigating officer's testimony strongly suggested that conditions for disclosure were satisfied].)

(2) Order. If the official's refusal to disclose is not justified, the judge must order the official to make the record public. However, if the refusal is justified, the judge must enter an order supporting the official's decision and return the record to the official without disclosing its content. (Govt.C. 6259(b).) A person who fails to obey an order may be cited for contempt. (Govt.C. 6259(c).)

(3) Review of Order. An order either directing disclosure or supporting the official's refusal to disclose is not a final judgment or order from which appeal may be taken, but is "immediately reviewable by petition to the appellate court for the issuance of an extraordinary writ." (Govt.C. 6259(c); see Powers v. Richmond (1995) 10 C.4th 85, 89, 112, 115, 40 C.R.2d 839, 893 P.2d 1160, 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Extraordinary Writs, §16 [noting that amended statute overrules Freedom Newspapers v. Superior Court (1986) 186 C.A.3d 1102, 231 C.R. 189, insofar as that case held that scope of review of Public Records Act decisions under writ of review was confined to jurisdictional issues]; Butt v. Richmond (1996) 44 C.A.4th 925, 931, 52 C.R.2d 232 [after superior court's denial of petition for writ of mandamus to compel government entity to allow inspection of public records, Govt.C. 6259(c) does not preclude appeal from portion of judgment ordering payment of attorney fees and imposing sanctions].)

A party must file the petition for review within 20 days after being served with written notice of entry of the order. For good cause, the trial judge may allow additional time to file, not to exceed 20 days. The allowable period is increased by 5 days if the notice is served by mail. A stay of an order or judgment will not be granted unless the party demonstrates that he or she "will otherwise sustain irreparable damage and probable success on the merits." (Govt.C. 6259(c).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(3) Review of Order. See Los Angeles Times v. Alameda Corridor Trans. Authority (2001) 88 C.A.4th 1381, 1385, 107 C.R.2d 29 [Govt.C. 6259 does not limit appellate review of attorney fee orders to review by extraordinary writ; following Butt v. Richmond (1996) 44 C.A.4th 925, 52 C.R.2d 232, text, p. 578].

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

L. California Public Records Act.

8. Agency's Voluntary Disclosure.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 300

[§ 300] Agency's Voluntary Disclosure.

(1) Proper Disclosure. The specific exemptions (supra, §288 et seq.) do not prevent an agency from "opening its records concerning the administration of the agency to public inspection," unless disclosure is otherwise prohibited by law. (Govt.C. 6254; see Younger v. Berkeley City Council (1975) 45 C.A.3d 825, 833, 119 C.R. 830 [Penal Code sections prohibited city police department's voluntary disclosure of arrest records].)

(2) Improper Selective Disclosure. Disclosure of documents to selected persons nullifies the exemption as to the public generally. In Black Panther Party v. Kehoe (1974) 42 C.A.3d 645, 117 C.R. 106, plaintiffs sought to inspect letters of complaint which had been sent by individuals to the State Department of Consumer Affairs and the Bureau of Collection and Investigative Services and which charged that licensed collection agencies had committed unethical or abusive practices. (Apparently plaintiffs wished to inform their primarily low-income membership of the collection agency practices.) The trial judge held the consumer complaints exempt from disclosure. Held, the judge should reconsider plaintiffs' demand in light of the agencies' existing disclosure practices (and the agencies should be given an opportunity to reappraise those practices).

(a) The consumer complaints are ordinarily exempt under Govt.C. 6254(f). (42 C.A.3d 650; see supra, §289 et seq.)

(b) There is, however, a valid special basis for disclosure--the public agency's policy of routinely disclosing complaints to the affected collection agencies. The trial judge's failure to make an appropriate finding on this issue is significant because "the practice of disclosing complaints to the affected licensees destroys the privilege of confidentiality otherwise permitted by section 6254, subdivision (f)." (42 C.A.3d 656.) While the agency has discretionary authority to override a statutory exemption and open its records to public inspection, it lacks authority to indulge in selective disclosure:

"The term public inspection necessarily implies general, nonselective disclosure. It implies that public officials may not favor one citizen with disclosures denied to another. When a record loses its exempt status and becomes available for public inspection, section 6253, subdivision (a), endows every citizen with a right to inspect it. By force of these provisions, records are completely public or completely confidential. The Public Records Act denies public officials any power to pick and choose the recipients of disclosure. When defendants elect to supply copies of complaints to collection agencies, the complaints become public records available for public inspection." (42 C.A.3d 656.)

(3) Division of Industrial Safety Records. Lab.C. 6322 imposes a misdemeanor penalty for disclosure of the Division's information that is classified as confidential under the Public Records Act. (Govt.C. 6250 et seq.; see

California v. Superior Court (Bourne) (1974) 43 C.A.3d 778, 783, 117 C.R. 726 [rejecting blanket claim of absolute privilege for Division records].)

XI. PRIVILEGE FOR OFFICIAL INFORMATION

L. California Public Records Act.

9. Waiver of Exemptions.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 301

[§ 301] Waiver of Exemptions.

"[W]henever a state or local agency discloses a public record which is otherwise exempt from this chapter, to any member of the public," the disclosure constitutes a waiver of the exemptions specified in Govt.C. 6254 (supra, §288), Govt.C. 6254.7 (supra, §283), and other similar provisions. (Govt.C. 6254.5; see Masonite Corp. v. Mendocino Air Quality Management Dist. (1996) 42 C.A.4th 436, 452, 49 C.R.2d 639 [inadvertent release of trade secret information by state environmental health hazard assessment office did not constitute waiver under Govt.C. 6254.5, as release by office employee was not within proper scope of employee's duties].)

Govt.C. 6254.5 does not apply, however, to any of the following:

(1) Disclosures made in discovery proceedings or under the Information Practices Act (C.C. 1798 et seq.; see 7 Summary (9th), Constitutional Law, §472). (Govt.C. 6254.5(a).)

(2) Disclosures made "through other legal proceedings or as otherwise required by law." (Govt.C. 6254.5(b).)

(3) Disclosures made within the scope of a statute limiting disclosure of specified writings to certain purposes. (Govt.C. 6254.5(c).)

(4) Disclosures not required by law "and prohibited by formal action of an elected legislative body of the local agency which retains the writings." (Govt.C. 6254.5(d).)

(5) Disclosures made to a governmental agency that agrees to treat the disclosed material as confidential. (Govt.C. 6254.5(e).)

(6) Records relating to a financial institution if the disclosure is made to the institution by the state agency responsible for regulating it. (Govt.C. 6254.5(f).)

(7) Records disclosed by the Department of Corrections to a person or corporation for the purpose of corrective action or to the extent necessary to obtain information for an investigation. (Govt.C. 6254.5(g).)

(8) Disclosures made by the Commissioner of Financial Institutions under Fin.C. 1909, 8009, or 18396. (Govt.C. 6254.5(h).)

(9) Records relating to persons subject to the jurisdiction of the Department of Managed Care, if the disclosures are made to the person who is the subject of the records for the purpose of corrective action, or to any other person as necessary to obtain information for an investigation. (Govt.C. 6254.5(i).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Disclosures made in discovery proceedings:

Cross-Reference: 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §604.

(5) Disclosures made to governmental agency that agrees to treat disclosed material as confidential: See Los Angeles v. Superior Court (Union of Amer. Physicians & Dentists) (2005) 130 C.A.4th 1099, 1107, 30 C.R.3d 708 [county board of supervisors did not waive exemption where it disclosed closed session minutes to district attorney under agreement that they would be kept confidential].

(9) Persons subject to jurisdiction of Department of Managed Care: Govt.C. 6254.5(i) was amended in 2000 to refer to the Department of Managed Health Care.

M. Federal Freedom of Information Act.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 302

[§ 302] Federal Freedom of Information Act.

(1) In General. The federal Freedom of Information Act (5 U.S.C., §552) requires public disclosure by federal agencies of records not expressly exempt, and empowers the federal courts to compel this disclosure. There are separate provisions for compelling disclosure of agency records containing personal information to the individuals concerned. (5 U.S.C., §552a; see 150 A.L.R. (2) Case Law. The cases discussing the nature of the system of disclosure and the enumerated exemptions are legion. (See Environmental Protection Agency v. Mink (1973) 410 U.S. 73, 93 S.Ct. 827, 35 L.Ed.2d 119 [description of statutory background and principal objectives]; *Department of Air Force v. ## A. President of United States.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 303

[§ 303] President of United States.

"A President and those who assist him must be free to explore alternatives in the process of shaping policies and making decisions and to do so in a way many would be unwilling to express except privately. These are the considerations justifying a presumptive privilege for presidential communications. The privilege is fundamental to the operation of government and inextricably rooted in the separation of powers under the Constitution." (United States v. Nixon (1974) 418 U.S. 683, 94 S.Ct. 3090, 3107, 41 L.Ed.2d 1039, 1064.)

In United States v. Nixon, the President challenged a subpoena which was served on him as a third party and required the production of tape recordings and documents dealing with conversations he had with his aides. He did not assert that military or diplomatic secrets were involved, but claimed an absolute privilege against disclosure of confidential communications. Held, the claim was too broad.

(a) "[W]hen the ground for asserting privilege as to subpoenaed materials sought for use in a criminal trial is based only on the generalized interest in confidentiality, it cannot prevail over the fundamental demands of due process of law in the fair administration of criminal justice. The generalized assertion of privilege must yield to the demonstrated, specific need for evidence in a pending criminal trial." (94 S.Ct. 3110, 41 L.Ed.2d 1066.) And neither the doctrine of separation of powers nor the need for confidentiality of high level communications, without more, can sustain an absolute presidential immunity from judicial process under all circumstances. "The President's need for complete candor and objectivity from advisers calls for great deference from the courts. However, when the privilege depends solely on the broad, undifferentiated claim of public interest in the confidentiality of such conversations, a confrontation with other values arises. Absent a claim of need to protect military, diplomatic or sensitive national security secrets, we find it difficult to accept the argument that even the very important interest in confidentiality of presidential communications is significantly diminished by production of such material for in camera inspection with all the protection that a district court will be obliged to provide." (94 S.Ct. 3107, 41 L.Ed.2d 1063.)

(b) The interest in preserving confidentiality is entitled to great respect, but "we cannot conclude that advisers will be moved to temper the candor of their remarks by the infrequent occasions of disclosure because of the possibility that such conversations will be called for in the context of a criminal prosecution." (94 S.Ct. 3109, 41 L.Ed.2d 1066.) "Without access to specific facts a criminal prosecution may be totally frustrated. The President's broad interest in confidentiality of communications will not be vitiated by disclosure of a limited number of conversations preliminarily shown to have some bearing on the pending criminal cases." (94 S.Ct. 3110, 41 L.Ed.2d 1066.) (See 87 Harv. L. Rev. 1557; 88 Harv. L. Rev. 13, 50 [executive privilege]; 88 Harv. L. Rev. 281 [book review]; 98 Harv. L. Rev. 1619; 9 Loyola L.A. L. ## CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XII. PRIVILEGE FOR ELECTED OFFICIALS AND THEIR AIDES

B. Members of Congress and Aides.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 304

[§ 304] Members of Congress and Aides.

The Speech or Debate Clause of the federal Constitution (Art. I, §6, Cl. 1) provides that "for any Speech or Debate in either House," senators and representatives "shall not be questioned in any other Place." (See 7 Summary (9th), Constitutional Law, §117.) In Gravel v. United States (1972) 408 U.S. 606, 92 S.Ct. 2614, 33 L.Ed.2d 583, a United States senator intervened in proceedings which arose from a grand jury investigation into the release and publication of classified materials on the Vietnam War (the Pentagon Papers). The senator sought to quash subpoenas on his assistant and on the director of a publishing firm, and also requested that the government specify the questions which would be directed to his assistant. Held, the senator, and therefore his aide, had only a limited privilege.

(a) The Speech or Debate Clause protects members against prosecutions that directly impinge upon or threaten the legislative process. Thus the senator is protected from questioning about events at the subcommittee meeting where the Pentagon Papers were introduced into the public record. (92 S.Ct. 2622, 33 L.Ed.2d 597.)

(b) The aides' work is so critical to the members' performance that they must be treated as the elected officials' alter egos. Hence, the things done by aides are privileged if they would be privileged when done by the member personally. (92 S.Ct. 2622, 2623, 33 L.Ed.2d 597.)

(c) But the Clause does not reach many services characteristically performed by aides for members, even though within the scope of their employment. "It likewise provides no protection for criminal conduct threatening the security of the person or property of others, whether performed at the direction of the Senator in preparation for or in execution of a legislative act or done without his knowledge or direction. Neither does it immunize Senator or aide from testifying at trials or grand jury proceedings involving third-party crimes where the questions do not require testimony about or impugn a legislative act." (92 S.Ct. 2625, 33 L.Ed.2d 600.)

(d) The senator's alleged arrangement with a private publisher to publish the Pentagon Papers was not protected by the Speech or Debate Clause. (92 S.Ct. 2625, 33 L.Ed.2d 601.) "The heart of the Clause is speech or debate in either House. Insofar as the Clause is construed to reach other matters, they must be an integral part of the deliberative and communicative process by which Members participate in committee and House proceedings with respect to the consideration and passage or rejection of proposed legislation or with respect to other matters which the Constitution places within the jurisdiction of either House." (92 S.Ct. 2627, 33 L.Ed.2d 602.) The privilege is extended beyond pure speech or debate only when necessary to prevent indirect impairment of the deliberations. (92 S.Ct. 2627, 33 L.Ed.2d 602.)

(e) The Clause does not confer a general exemption on members of Congress from liability or process in criminal cases. "Quite the contrary is true. While the Speech or Debate Clause recognizes speech, voting, and other legislative acts as exempt from liability that might otherwise attach, it does not privilege either Senator or aide to violate an otherwise valid criminal law in preparing for or implementing legislative acts. If republication of these classified papers would be a crime under an Act of Congress, it would not be entitled to immunity under the Speech or Debate Clause." (92 S.Ct. 2628, 33 L.Ed.2d 603.) (See 23 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 57 [congressional papers and judicial subpoenas]; 98 Harv. L. Rev. 1614.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XII. PRIVILEGE FOR ELECTED OFFICIALS AND THEIR AIDES
C. State and Local Officials.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 305

[§ 305] State and Local Officials.

Courts may not inquire into the motivation or mental processes of local or state legislators in enacting legislation; the subjective reasoning of individual legislators is privileged. (See Los Angeles v. Superior Court (Burroughs) (1975) 13 C.3d 721, 119 C.R. 631, 532 P.2d 495, 7 Summary (9th), Constitutional Law, §116; Times Mirror Co. v. Superior Court (1991) 53 C.3d 1325, 1347, 283 C.R. 893, 813 P.2d 240, supra, §296 [Governor's appointment records protected from disclosure by public interest exemption of Govt.C. 6255].)

However, in a federal prosecution of a state legislator, there is no legislative privilege comparable to that of a member of Congress under the Speech or Debate Clause. (United States v. Gillock (1980) 445 U.S. 360, 100 S.Ct. 1185, 1193, 63 L.Ed.2d 454, 460, 461, 462.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XIII. PRIVILEGE FOR IDENTITY OF INFORMER

A. Nature of Privilege.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 306

[§ 306] Nature of Privilege.

(1) Policy Basis. "It is clear that the public interest would suffer if the disclosure were compelled of the names of those citizens who inform public officers of violation of law and who assist such officers in the performance of their duty to apprehend law violators. A citizen who knows that the fact would be made public that he has disclosed such information to public officers may be loath to cooperate in the administration of justice by exercising his right and duty to make such disclosures because he would justifiably believe himself to be in danger of physical violence from those upon whom he had informed, as well as in danger of actions of slander and malicious prosecution." (People v. Gonzales (1955) 136 C.A.2d 437, 441, 288 P.2d 588.) This reasoning underlies the privilege against disclosure of the identity of an "informer" or "informant." (See 1 McCormick 5th, §111; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2374; Unif. Rules, Rule 509; People v. McShann (1958) 50 C.2d 802, 806, 330 P.2d 33; Priestly v. Superior Court (1958) 50 C.2d 812, 816, 330 P.2d 39; McCray v. Illinois (1967) 386 U.S. 300, 87 S.Ct. 1056, 1059, 18 L.Ed.2d 62, 67; C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Discovery §4.103; 98 Harv. L. Rev. 1596; 46 Cal. L. Rev. 466; 11 Hastings L. J. 54; 17 Hastings L. J. 99; 33 So. Cal. L. Rev. 344; 12 Stanf. L. Rev. 256; 76 A.L.R.2d 262 [accused's right to, and prosecution's privilege against, disclosure of identity of informer]; 86 A.L.R.4th 1024 [existence, nature, and application to medical professional disciplinary board of privilege against disclosure of identity of informer].)

(2) Former Law and Evidence Code. In California, the privilege was originally grounded on former C.C.P. 1881(5), the official information privilege (now Ev.C. 1040, supra, §246). Ev.C. 1041 states it as a separate privilege, but sets forth its scope and conditions in language almost identical to that of Ev.C. 1040. (See infra, §§307, 308.)

As will be seen, however, the privilege has lost most of its vitality under recent decisions requiring disclosure to protect the defendant's right to a fair trial or to test the validity of an arrest or search. (See infra, §310 et seq.)

(3) Constitutionality of Privilege. Neither due process nor the right of confrontation precludes the use by a state of the informer privilege. (McCray v. Illinois, supra, 87 S.Ct. 1063, 18 L.Ed.2d 71.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XIII. PRIVILEGE FOR IDENTITY OF INFORMER

B. Scope and Conditions.

1. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 307

[§ 307] In General.

The privilege is set forth in Ev.C. 1041 as follows:

(1) Public Entity's Right To Protect Informer's Identity. A public entity has a privilege "to refuse to disclose the identity of a person" who has "furnished information" purporting to disclose a violation of federal, state, or local law, and "to prevent another from disclosing such identity." (Ev.C. 1041(a).)

(2) Information Furnished in Confidence. The privilege applies only "if the information is furnished in confidence" to (a) a law enforcement officer, (b) a representative of an administrative agency charged with administration or enforcement of the law alleged to be violated, or (c) any person for the purpose of transmittal to either of the above. (Ev.C. 1041(b); see People v. Otte (1989) 214 C.A.3d 1522, 1530, 263 C.R. 393 [confidentiality requirement refers to informant's identity, not to information communicated, unless it would tend to disclose informant's identity]; People v. Seibel (1990) 219 C.A.3d 1279, 1288, 269 C.R. 313 [following People v. Otte]; People v. Hobbs (1994) 7 C.4th 948, 961, 962, 30 C.R.2d 651, 873 P.2d 1246 [citing "well-established" rule that communication itself comes within privilege if disclosure would tend to disclose identity of informer].)

In People v. Lanfrey (1988) 204 C.A.3d 491, 251 C.R. 189, the question was whether the term "informer," as used in Ev.C. 1041, applies only to persons who supply information to the police on an ongoing basis for compensation, or whether it also extends to nonparticipating eyewitnesses who gratuitously supply information on a onetime basis. Held, such witnesses are "informers," and their identity is protected if they request confidentiality. There is no requirement in Ev.C. 1041 that the information be furnished as part of an ongoing relationship or in exchange for some benefit. Because the privilege applies only when the information is furnished in confidence, most eyewitnesses who simply supply information upon being interviewed will not be within its scope. And, extending the privilege to cover information supplied in confidence on a onetime basis furthers the policy of aiding law enforcement efforts by encouraging communication from citizens. (204 C.A.3d 498.)

(3) Absolute and Conditional Privilege. The privilege is absolute if disclosure is forbidden by federal or California law; otherwise, it is conditional and calls for a weighing of the public interest in confidentiality against the necessity for disclosure in the interest of justice; but no privilege can be claimed if an authorized person has consented to disclosure in the proceeding. (Ev.C. 1041(a)(1), (a)(2), similar to Ev.C. 1040(b)(1), (b)(2), supra, §247; see infra, §309.)

(4) Invocation of Privilege. The privilege must be claimed by a person "authorized by the public entity to do so." (Ev.C. 1041(a).)

(5) Sanctions for Improper Invocation. The sanctions of dismissal or adverse finding of fact against the public entity claiming the privilege are the same as those imposed on the claim of the official information privilege in a criminal case. (Ev.C. 1042(a), supra, §252.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XIII. PRIVILEGE FOR IDENTITY OF INFORMER

B. Scope and Conditions.

2. Official Information Privilege Distinguished.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 308

[§ 308] Official Information Privilege Distinguished.

The informer privilege differs from the official information privilege in two significant respects:

(1) The public entity may refuse to disclose, and may prevent another from disclosing, the identity of an informer. (Ev.C. 1041(a), supra, §307.) However, "[t]here is no privilege under this section to prevent the informer from disclosing his identity." (Ev.C. 1041(c).)

(2) Under California's former law, which based the informer privilege on the official information statute, the privilege could have been regarded as covering the contents of the communication from the informer. (See People v. McShann (1958) 50 C.2d 802, 807, 330 P.2d 33.) The opposing view is that the contents are not covered unless they would reveal the informer's identity. (See Model C., Rule 230; Roviaro v. United States (1956) 353 U.S. 53, 77 S.Ct. 623, 627, 1 L.Ed.2d 639, 644; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2374, p. 765.) The language of Ev.C. 1041 is clearly limited to identity.

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XIII. PRIVILEGE FOR IDENTITY OF INFORMER C. Weighing Public Interest Against Necessity for Disclosure.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 309

[§ 309] Weighing Public Interest Against Necessity for Disclosure.

(1) General Rule. The Evidence Code did not change the rule of cases holding disclosure necessary for a fair trial. "In such cases, it is clear that the 'balance' is struck in favor of the defendant, and disclosure must be ordered upon pain of dismissal. Any other conclusion would be at variance with due process provisions of the state and federal Constitutions." (People v. Garcia (1967) 67 C.2d 830, 842, 64 C.R. 110, 434 P.2d 366, infra, §313.)

(2) Sufficient Showing of Necessity. The defendant seeking disclosure has the burden of showing that the informer would be a material witness on guilt and that nondisclosure would deprive the defendant of a fair trial. (People v. Garcia, supra, 67 C.2d 839; see Williams v. Superior Court (1974) 38 C.A.3d 412, 418, 112 C.R. 485 [describing the rule as "a 'two-pronged' test of which the fair trial element is the second prong"].)

However, the burden is met by showing a reasonable possibility that the informer could give evidence that might exonerate the defendant. (People v. Borunda (1974) 11 C.3d 523, 529, 113 C.R. 825, 522 P.2d 1, infra, §313.) The showing usually consists of a theory of defense based on evidence presented at the trial or declarations filed in support of the motion. (People v. Sewell (1970) 3 C.A.3d 1035, 1039, 83 C.R. 895; see People v. Long (1974) 42 C.A.3d 751, 755, 117 C.R. 200; People v. Tolliver (1975) 53 C.A.3d 1036, 1048, 125 C.R. 905 [disclosure order affirmed as supported by the evidence even though defendant failed to articulate a defense theory to the trial court; "specific articulation of a defense is not required"]; Williams v. Superior Court, supra, 38 C.A.3d 423 [the required showing is "as to the quality of the vantage point from which the informer viewed either the commission or the immediate antecedents of the alleged crime"].) (See also Price v. Superior Court (1970) 1 C.3d 836, 844, 83 C.R. 369, 463 P.2d 721 [requiring disclosure of informer who stated that he heard conversation by persons "known by him" to have been present at the crime]; People v. Hunt (1971) 4 C.3d 231, 238, 93 C.R. 197, 481 P.2d 205, infra, §313; Theodor v. Superior Court (1972) 8 C.3d 77, 87, 104 C.R. 226, 501 P.2d 234 [discrepancies in informer's description of defendant and account of narcotics purchases warranted disclosure]; People v. Long, supra, 42 C.A.3d 758 [nondisclosure of informer justified dismissing charge of possessing heroin for sale but not charge of simple possession; informer had described purchase at premises where officer found defendant in possession and under influence; defendant claimed he was customer, not seller]; People v. Tolliver, supra, 53 C.A.3d 1044 [police found defendant, codefendant, and narcotics on premises where informer said he had purchased heroin; informer's testimony would be material on whether narcotics were exclusively controlled by someone other than defendant]; 16 Santa Clara L. Rev. 674.)

(3) Insufficient Showing. The showing "requires more than speculation." (People v. Sewell, supra, 3 C.A.3d 1039 ["affidavit states the informer saw marijuana in the apartment 11 days before the search, not that he was a percipient witness to the particular possession of contraband disclosed by the search which resulted in the charge"].) (See also People v. Thomas (1970) 12 C.A.3d 1102, 1112, 91 C.R. 867 [magistrate not informed of defense theory; denial of disclosure sustained]; People v. Martin (1969) 2 C.A.3d 121, 127, 82 C.R. 414 [no showing of how cross-examination of informer might have helped defense; disclosure not required]; People v. Pacheco (1972) 27 C.A.3d 70, 81, 103 C.R. 583, infra, §322; People v. Acuna (1973) 35 C.A.3d 987, 989, 111 C.R. 878 [prosecution for heroin sale based entirely on discovery of balloons containing drug in defendant's pants pocket; disclosure not required because informer simply pointed finger of suspicion at defendant]; People v. Hardeman (1982) 137 C.A.3d 823, 828, 829, 831, 187 C.R. 296 [informer was nonparticipant, noneyewitness; no reasonable possibility that he could give evidence on issue of guilt]; People v. Otte (1989) 214 C.A.3d 1522, 1530, 263 C.R. 393 [no showing that informant, whose information was used to obtain search warrant leading to seizure of marijuana and related sales records, had material information as to guilt]; People v. Oppel (1990) 222 C.A.3d 1146, 1153, 272 C.R. 340 [defense counsel's affidavit made on information and belief was not evidence, hence, was insufficient evidentiary basis to support disclosure order]; In re Benny S. (1991) 230 C.A.3d 102, 109, 281 C.R. 1, infra, §313 [following Martin, Acuna, and Hardeman; informer held not a percipient or material witness to drug possession].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(3) Insufficient Showing. See People v. Luera (2001) 86 C.A.4th 513, 526, 103 C.R.2d 438 [in prosecution for possession of child pornography, defendant's suggestion that anonymous citizen informant might have been person who downloaded pornography onto defendant's computer amounted to "mere speculation"].

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XIII. PRIVILEGE FOR IDENTITY OF INFORMER

D. Exceptions Necessary for Fair Trial.

1. General Principles.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 310

[§ 310] General Principles.

"Where the disclosure of an informer's identity, or of the contents of his communication, is relevant and helpful to the defense of an accused, or is essential to a fair determination of a cause, the privilege must give way." (Roviaro v. United States (1956) 353 U.S. 53, 77 S.Ct. 623, 628, 1 L.Ed.2d 639, 645.) This approach has been consistently followed in both federal and state courts, and has resulted in a severe curtailment of the privilege. (See generally People v. Hobbs (1994) 7 C.4th 948, 958, 959, 30 C.R.2d 651, 873 P.2d 1246 [quoting Roviaro]; People v. Lawrence (1957) 149 C.A.2d 435, 449, 308 P.2d 821; People v. Castiel (1957) 153 C.A.2d 653, 656, 315 P.2d 79; People v. Tolliver (1975) 53 C.A.3d 1036, 1043, 125 C.R. 905; 1 McCormick 5th, §111; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2374; Unif. Rules, Rule 509(c)(2); Model C., Rule 230, Comment; 71 Harv. L. Rev. 111; 17 Hastings L. J. 99; 1955 A.S. 644; 76 A.L.R.2d 262 [accused's right to, and prosecution's privilege against, disclosure of identity of informer]; 33 Proof of Facts 2d 549 [establishing privilege]; infra, §311 et seq.) (On disclosure of informer-witness' true name and address, see Smith v. Illinois (1968) 390 U.S. 129, 88 S.Ct. 748, 19 L.Ed.2d 956, 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §283.)

In People v. Castiel, supra, the court, citing the Roviaro, Lawrence, and other federal and state cases on governmental privileges, explained the defendant's right to the testimony of the informer in terms of due process. (153 C.A.2d 657.) And, in rejecting the Attorney General's argument that there was direct testimony sufficient to establish guilt, the court said: "No one knows what the undisclosed informer, if produced, might testify. He might contradict or persuasively explain away the prosecution's evidence. It is the deprivation of the defendants of the opportunity of producing evidence which might result in their exoneration which constitutes the error in this case, and we cannot assume because the prosecution evidence may seem strong that the undisclosed evidence might not prove sufficient to overcome it in the minds of the jurors. To do so is to reason that in no case can a defendant suffer prejudice from the suppression of evidence which may be favorable to him if the prosecution has produced what seems to be a strong eyewitness case of the defendant's guilt." (153 C.A.2d 659.) (See also People v. Alvarez (1957) 154 C.A.2d 694, 697, 316 P.2d 1006 [following Roviaro and Lawrence cases]; People v. Cox (1957) 156 C.A.2d 472, 477, 319 P.2d 681; People v. Alvidrez (1958) 158 C.A.2d 299, 302, 322 P.2d 557.)

In *People v. XIII. PRIVILEGE FOR IDENTITY OF INFORMER

D. Exceptions Necessary for Fair Trial.

2. Participating Informer.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 311

[§ 311] Participating Informer.

"[W]hen an informant participates in the criminal act he is no longer simply an informer. He is a material witness to the criminal act, in fact, he is similar to a feigned accomplice." (People v. Lawrence (1957) 149 C.A.2d 435, 450, 308 P.2d 821.) The defendant is accordingly entitled to disclosure of the informant's identity. (See Roviaro v. United States (1956) 353 U.S. 53, 77 S.Ct. 623, 628, 1 L.Ed.2d 639, 645; People v. Lawrence (1957) 149 C.A.2d 435, 450, 308 P.2d 821; 46 Cal. L. Rev. 467; 11 Hastings L. J. 57; 71 Harv. L. Rev. 111; 33 Proof of Facts 2d 549 [need for disclosure of informant's identity].)

In the Roviaro case, supra, petitioner was charged with sale of narcotics to Doe, an unidentified informer, and illegal transportation of narcotics. The testimony of narcotics agents and police officers, who, by prearrangement with Doe, followed petitioner and Doe and observed the transaction, was seemingly conclusive of guilt. The conviction was reversed, however, for refusal to compel disclosure of Doe's name and address. On the sale count, the refusal was clearly unjustified because Doe was a participant in the illegal activity charged. On the transportation count, Doe was, apart from petitioner himself, his sole material witness; Doe had helped to set up the criminal occurrence, and his testimony might have disclosed an entrapment or have thrown doubt on petitioner's identity, the identity of the package of narcotics, or petitioner's knowledge of the contents of the package.

XIII. PRIVILEGE FOR IDENTITY OF INFORMER

D. Exceptions Necessary for Fair Trial.

3. Nonparticipating Material Witness.

a. Who Is Material Witness.

1. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 312

[§ 312] In General.

The court in People v. McShann (1958) 50 C.2d 802, 330 P.2d 33, observed that there is no privilege if disclosure of the identity of a nonparticipating informer is essential to a fair determination of the cause:

(a) "Disclosure is not limited to the informer who participates in the crime alleged. The information elicited from an informer may be 'relevant and helpful to the defense of the accused or essential to a fair determination of a cause' even though the informer was not a participant. For example, the testimony of an eyewitness-nonparticipant informer that would vindicate the innocence of the accused or lessen the risk of false testimony would obviously be relevant and helpful to the defense of the accused and essential to a fair determination of the cause." (50 C.2d 808.)

(b) Nor is disclosure limited to an informer eyewitness; it is enough that the informer is a material witness. A "mere" informer who points the finger, puts the wheels in motion, and plays no part in the criminal act need not be disclosed. "When it appears from the evidence, however, that the informer is also a material witness on the issue of guilt, his identity is relevant and may be helpful to the defendant. Nondisclosure would deprive him of a fair trial." (50 C.2d 808.) (See 12 Stanf. L. Rev. 256; 11 Hastings L. J. 59.)

D. Exceptions Necessary for Fair Trial.

3. Nonparticipating Material Witness.

a. Who Is Material Witness.

2. Illustrations.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 313

[§ 313] Illustrations.

In People v. Williams (1958) 51 C.2d 355, 333 P.2d 19, a police officer, working with an informer who introduced him to defendant, bought narcotics on the first occasion, then later bought them again by himself. Defendant claimed mistaken identification. Held, it was reversible error to allow the officer on cross-examination to refuse to disclose the identity of the informer. He saw the seller and was instrumental in bringing about the transaction. "As a witness at the trial he might have testified that defendant was not the seller of the narcotics, and such testimony would have been especially important to the defense in view of the fact that the officer was the sole witness for the prosecution and that, so far as appears from the record, he saw the culprit for only a few minutes, three months prior to defendant's indictment and arrest." (51 C.2d 359.)

As to the second sale, although the informer did not witness it, it was consummated in reliance on the prior one; if the informer contradicted the officer's identification of defendant as to the first sale this would be material evidence that he was also mistaken in connecting him with the second. (51 C.2d 360.) (See also People v. Durazo (1959) 52 C.2d 354, 356, 340 P.2d 594 [following Williams]; People v. Hammond (1960) 54 C.2d 846, 851, 9 C.R. 233, 357 P.2d 289, infra, §329; People v. Perez (1965) 62 C.2d 769, 773, 44 C.R. 326, 401 P.2d 934; 12 Stanf. L. Rev. 256; 33 So. Cal. L. Rev. 344.)

In Honore v. Superior Court (1969) 70 C.2d 162, 74 C.R. 233, 449 P.2d 169, a marijuana case, defendant was first taken into custody on an unrelated charge. Then a reliable informant told the police of defendant's prior dealings in methedrine. The informant later went to defendant's apartment and stated that he had seen methedrine and four persons there. The police obtained a search warrant, broke in and found defendant and others with marijuana in plain sight, but no methedrine. Defendant, charged with possession of marijuana, sought pretrial discovery of the informant. Held, mandamus granted to compel disclosure. Defendant was in custody when the informer saw other persons in her apartment, and it is possible that they brought the marijuana. Hence, the informer was a material witness on whom and what he saw in the apartment. (70 C.2d 169.)

In People v. Borunda (1974) 11 C.3d 523, 113 C.R. 825, 522 P.2d 1, defendant contended that disclosure of an informer's identity was necessary because the informer could give evidence about his dealings with the arresting officer immediately before the arrest, and thus could affect the conflict of credibility between the officer and defendant's sister on whether any heroin was actually recovered at the time of arrest, and because the informer might show that defendant's possession of the heroin was only momentary and transitory. The trial judge ordered disclosure. When the prosecution refused to comply, the judge dismissed the case. Held, order of dismissal affirmed. Even if defendant was alone in the bathroom, flushing the toilet, when he was apprehended, he could be found guilty only if the substance he was trying to flush away was in fact heroin. Depending on the informer's testimony, the jury might believe that the officer had recovered no heroin at the time of the arrest but, instead, had offered in evidence the heroin the officer had previously received from the informer. (11 C.3d 528.)

An extremely broad concept of material witness was invoked to extend the requirement of disclosure in People v. Garcia (1967) 67 C.2d 830, 64 C.R. 110, 434 P.2d 366. A search warrant was issued naming Frank, Joe and Rose, based on an affidavit partly relying on two unidentified informers. The police entered an apartment in which the three were found, and also found defendant, not named in the affidavit or warrant. Defendant, after proper warnings, said the narcotics were his. At the trial he denied everything. Before trial and at trial he sought disclosure of the informers. Held, refusal to disclose was reversible error.

(a) The informers were neither participants nor eyewitnesses, and the prosecution did not use their information as substantive evidence to prove defendant's guilt. But they could give direct evidence supporting defendant's position that he was a mere visitor at the apartment for the first time looking for a fix; e.g., the informers could have information as to the quantity of narcotics kept by Frank and Joe. (67 C.2d 839.)

(b) The burden of showing that the informer would be a material witness is met "when defendant demonstrates a reasonable possibility that the anonymous informant whose identity is sought could give evidence on the issue of guilt which might result in defendant's exoneration." (67 C.2d 840.) (See 56 Cal. L. Rev. 1689.)

In People v. Hunt (1971) 4 C.3d 231, 93 C.R. 197, 481 P.2d 205, the court relied on People v. Garcia, supra, in holding that disclosure of the informer's identity was required. "In Garcia, the officer's information was at least a day old; here about two hours. In Garcia, the informers merely stated that the suspects were selling narcotics from their apartment and did not locate or state that any narcotics were in the apartment; here the informer places the methedrine belonging to codefendant Hall as being in a brown valise, in which it was in fact found." (4 C.3d 240.) Most importantly, "the information given to the officer by the unidentified informer itself tends to exonerate defendant. If the informer testified, as he wrote to the officer, that Hall was the owner of the brown valise and owned the merchandise therein, his testimony would tend to exonerate defendant with respect to the claim of constructive ownership." (4 C.3d 240.)

In re Benny S. (1991) 230 C.A.3d 102, 281 C.R. 1, involved a minor's motion for disclosure of an informer. The minor was charged with possession of marijuana for sale after the informer told police that drugs were being dealt near two high schools from a specified vehicle. Held, the motion was properly denied. As to the possession of marijuana with which defendant was charged, the informer was neither a percipient nor a material witness. Had defendant been charged with the sales of marijuana witnessed by the informer, disclosure would have been required, because the informer was a percipient and material witness to that conduct. (230 C.A.3d 109.)

D. Exceptions Necessary for Fair Trial.

3. Nonparticipating Material Witness.

b. Disclosure at Trial.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 314

[§ 314] Disclosure at Trial.

The defendant may seek disclosure by pretrial discovery (see Honore v. Superior Court (1969) 70 C.2d 162, 74 C.R. 233, 449 P.2d 169, supra, §313), or at the trial. (See 33 Proof of Facts 2d 549 [need for disclosure of informant's identity]; supra, §312.)

The requirement of disclosure at the trial may be, in effect, a review and correction of an error in refusing pretrial discovery, and not merely an element of the right of cross-examination of prosecution witnesses. Thus, in People v. Montano (1966) 244 C.A.2d 555, 53 C.R. 145, the police, using a search warrant, found marijuana in defendant's home and garage. The warrant had been issued on an affidavit showing reliance on two reliable informers whose identities had not been put in issue as to probable cause for the search (see infra, §§325, 326). But defendant contended that the informers were probably A and R, users who had framed him; and he unsuccessfully sought pretrial disclosure by motion and by writ of prohibition. At the trial, on cross-examination of the officer, objections were sustained to his questions seeking the same disclosure. Held, conviction reversed.

The case was governed by the general principle that where disclosure is relevant and helpful to the defense or essential to a fair determination of the cause, the privilege must give way. (244 C.A.2d 561; see supra, §310 et seq.) It was immaterial that the trial judge thought defendant had concocted a false theory; the defendant does not have to show any reason for expecting favorable testimony from the informer. The conclusion that a defendant is entitled to disclosure when relevant, helpful, or essential to a fair trial is supported by those cases permitting disclosure even though the prosecution proved its case without mention of the informer; thus, disclosure of the informer's identity could not be justified as incident to cross-examination of the prosecution's witnesses. (244 C.A.2d 565.)

In People v. Singletary (1969) 276 C.A.2d 601, 81 C.R. 79, an informant told police lieutenant S that defendant was the sniper who had shot at a police car. With the consent of defendant's mother, another officer searched defendant's home and found a rifle which might have been used in the crime. Questioned by the searching officer, defendant confessed (but later recanted). At the preliminary examination, S was not a witness and the searching officer was not questioned about the informer's identity. At the trial, however, defendant subpoenaed lieutenant S to learn the informer's identity. In opposition, the prosecution presented an oral motion to quash, with the deputy district attorney stating that S would be unable to give any relevant testimony and that the only purpose of the subpoena was to place him on the stand to obtain the informer's identity. The judge ordered the subpoena quashed, and defendant was convicted. Held, reversed.

(a) While a pretrial motion is proper to compel disclosure of the informer's identity (see 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §43), it does not supplant trial discovery. Defendant was therefore entitled to use a subpoena at trial to determine whether the informer would be a material witness. It was an abuse of discretion to quash the subpoena because of defendant's failure to pursue available pretrial discovery. (276 C.A.2d 605.)

(b) The deputy district attorney personally stated that lieutenant S would be unable to give relevant testimony, and defendant made no showing that S would be able to do so. But defendant was not required to show what he wanted to find out through the subpoena. S was a preliminary witness to a possible material witness, the informer. "It is not necessary to lay the foundation before examining a foundational witness. Although defendant had the burden of demonstrating the informer would be a material witness on the issue of guilt ... , here he was deprived of even being allowed to begin an attempt to carry that burden. Defendant was prevented from questioning the one known foundational witness who could assist in determining whether the informer was a material witness." (276 C.A.2d 604.)

XIII. PRIVILEGE FOR IDENTITY OF INFORMER

D. Exceptions Necessary for Fair Trial.

3. Nonparticipating Material Witness.

c. Disclosure at Preliminary Hearing.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 315

[§ 315] Disclosure at Preliminary Hearing.

In Mitchell v. Superior Court (1958) 50 C.2d 827, 330 P.2d 48, the officers gave two informers marked and dusted bills, and escorted them to defendants' apartment where they made the purchase. When they emerged, the officers went in and arrested defendants, finding narcotics, some marked bills and fluorescent powder. At the preliminary hearing, the magistrate sustained objections to questions seeking names of the informers. Held, this was error. The same reasons which would have required disclosure at the trial (supra, §314) call for disclosure at the preliminary hearing. Defendants there may cross-examine and produce their own witnesses, and the exercise of such rights at a preliminary hearing may enable them to show that there is no reasonable cause to commit them and thus avoid the degradation and expense of a criminal trial. (50 C.2d 829.)

But prohibition was denied. There was other competent evidence to support the commitment, and disclosure was sought only to obtain information useful at the trial. Defendants were entitled to it, and, at the trial, could demand a continuance if necessary to enable them to locate and interview the informers. The magistrate might have obviated the delay of this future continuance by ruling correctly, but this was merely a procedural error and not a denial of a constitutional right. (50 C.2d 829.)

d. Disclosure in Probation Revocation Hearing.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 316

[§ 316] Disclosure in Probation Revocation Hearing.

There is some uncertainty, in a postconviction hearing on an application for a grant of probation, which does not involve the issue of guilt, as to whether the defendant may seek disclosure of the identity of an informer. But a probation revocation proceeding "is a guilt-determining process," governed by the standards applicable to termination of parole. These standards call for the right to discover the identity of a material witness informer. (Goodlow v. Superior Court (1980) 101 C.A.3d 969, 974, 162 C.R. 121.)

D. Exceptions Necessary for Fair Trial.

4. Informer Relied on for Arrest.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 317

[§ 317] Informer Relied on for Arrest.

An informer whose information is the essential basis of probable cause for an arrest and search (see 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, §173 et seq.) must be disclosed. (Roviaro v. United States (1956) 353 U.S. 53, 77 S.Ct. 623, 628, 1 L.Ed.2d 639, 645; Priestly v. Superior Court (1958) 50 C.2d 812, 819, 330 P.2d 39; see 71 Harv. L. Rev. 111; 47 Cal. L. Rev. 395; 11 Hastings L. J. 63; for exception where accused is parolee and search is conducted by parole supervisors, see People v. Hernandez (1964) 229 C.A.2d 143, 151, 40 C.R. 100; 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, §44; 17 Stanf. L. Rev. 514; on exception for informers who are not material witnesses, see infra, §327.)

In Priestly v. Superior Court, supra, informers told police that defendant had narcotics. The officers went to his apartment, arrested him without a warrant and searched the apartment, finding the drugs. At the preliminary hearing, defendant objected to the officer's testimony, demanded disclosure of the informers' identities and moved to strike the testimony. Thereafter, he moved to set aside the information on the ground that, because the only evidence of guilt was illegally obtained and incompetent, he was held without reasonable or probable cause. The motion was denied. Held, prohibition issued to restrain the trial:

"If testimony of communications from a confidential informer is necessary to establish the legality of a search, the defendant must be given a fair opportunity to rebut that testimony. He must therefore be permitted to ascertain the identity of the informer, since the legality of the officer's action depends upon the credibility of the information, not upon facts that he directly witnessed and upon which he could be cross-examined. If an officer were allowed to establish unimpeachably the lawfulness of a search merely by testifying that he received justifying information from a reliable person whose identity cannot be revealed, he would become the sole judge of what is probable cause to make the search. Such a holding would destroy the exclusionary rule. Only by requiring disclosure and giving the defendant an opportunity to present contrary or impeaching evidence as to the truth of the officer's testimony and the reasonableness of his reliance on the informer can the court make a fair determination of the issue." (50 C.2d 818.)

The court discounted the dire consequences predicted by opponents of the rule: "Such a requirement does not unreasonably discourage the free flow of information to law enforcement officers or otherwise impede law enforcement. Actually its effect is to compel independent investigations to verify information given by an informer or to uncover other facts that establish reasonable cause to make an arrest or search." (50 C.2d 818.) (See, somewhat critical of the case, 47 Cal. L. Rev. 395; supporting the case, 11 Hastings L. J. 63; and see, following the case, People v. Hammond (1960) 54 C.2d 846, 851, 9 C.R. 233, 357 P.2d 289, infra, §329.)

In People v. Robinson (1958) 166 C.A.2d 416, 333 P.2d 120, on a voir dire hearing on the issue of probable cause, the officer testified that he had known the informer for 3 years, that the latter had given him reliable information on three other occasions leading to arrests or convictions, and that he made the arrest in reliance on his information. On cross-examination, he refused to disclose the informer's identity or the names of the persons previously arrested. Held, conviction reversed. The only information on which the officer acted was that given by the informer; if the arrest was illegal, the subsequent search (without consent) was illegal and the evidence inadmissible. Hence, the theory of the Priestly case was applicable:

"The defendant had a right to learn the names of those previously arrested upon information given by the same informant, that he might ascertain if the officer was telling the truth or whether the officer used poor judgment in relying upon this particular informant. Certainly, had defendant, after learning the names, checked official records and found that these three persons had never actually been arrested or, if so, on a charge other than for narcotics offenses, the officer's credibility would have been irreparably shaken. Had a check revealed that the three had been arrested but not one had been held on preliminary hearing; or all or one or more had been released by police or their cases dismissed by the district attorney, this fact would surely have constituted a substantial showing that the officer exercised poor judgment in relying upon further information from the same informant which, of course, would go to the weight of the evidence." (166 C.A.2d 421.)

D. Exceptions Necessary for Fair Trial.

5. Procedure in Raising and Determining Issue.

a. Defendant's Request and Prosecution's Response.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 318

[§ 318] Defendant's Request and Prosecution's Response.

Three procedural rules have been developed to govern the challenge to the privilege:

(1) The request for disclosure of the informer or the objection to testimony given without such disclosure must be made in the trial court, or it is waived; it cannot be raised for the first time on appeal. (See Coy v. Superior Court (1959) 51 C.2d 471, 473, 334 P.2d 569; People v. Postell (1959) 170 C.A.2d 31, 33, 338 P.2d 454; Rugendorf v. United States (1964) 376 U.S. 528, 84 S.Ct. 825, 829, 11 L.Ed.2d 887, 892 [request made only in support of motion to suppress evidence because of allegedly defective search warrant].)

(2) The prosecution may elect to refuse disclosure and submit to the sanctions under Ev.C. 1042(a), i.e., striking of testimony, adverse finding or dismissal. (See People v. McShann (1958) 50 C.2d 802, 808, 330 P.2d 33; Priestly v. Superior Court (1958) 50 C.2d 812, 819, 330 P.2d 39; People v. Viramontes (1978) 85 C.A.3d 585, 593, 149 C.R. 607.)

(3) The prosecution fully complies with a proper request by disclosing the identity of the informer; it need not produce the informer as a witness so as to make the informer available for cross-examination by the defendant. (See People v. Render (1960) 181 C.A.2d 190, 195, 5 C.R. 236; Eleazer v. Superior Court (1970) 1 C.3d 847, 853, 83 C.R. 586, 464 P.2d 42, infra, §330; People v. Moran (1970) 1 C.3d 755, 761, 83 C.R. 411, 463 P.2d 763.)

In People v. Moran, supra, neither side called the go-between who had introduced defendant to a narcotics agent. Held, no error. Defendant knew the informer, knew what evidence would have been available through his testimony and could have called him. The failure to do so "supports an inference that his testimony would not be favorable to defendant." (1 C.3d 760.) As to the prosecution's not putting him on the stand, "[t]he People are not required to call any particular witness so long as the material evidence relating to the charge against defendant is produced in a manner according him a fair trial." (1 C.3d 761.)

If, during the hearing (see supra, §319), the privilege is claimed or a person refuses to answer a question on the ground that the answer would tend to disclose the informer's identity, the judge, on request of the prosecuting attorney, may hold an in camera hearing outside the presence of the defendant or defense counsel. At this hearing, the prosecution may offer evidence to aid the judge in determining the issue (see infra, §322). A reporter must be present, but the transcript and any physical evidence must be sealed, with access only by a court. (Ev.C. 1042(d); see People v. Levine (1984) 152 C.A.3d 1058, 1071, 199 C.R. 756 [in camera hearing on judge's own motion was proper where defendant had made motion for disclosure, and prosecution had invoked the privilege]; C.E.B., Jefferson, 2 California Evidence Benchbook 3d, §43.9.)

The provision in Ev.C. 1042(d) that the prosecution may offer "evidence" implies that Ev.C. 710 will be followed (every witness must take an oath or make an affirmation). Hence, an in camera hearing in which the informant testified, without being sworn, was defective. (People v. Gooch (1983) 139 C.A.3d 342, 345, 188 C.R. 673 [conviction reversed, with direction to trial court to conduct new hearing]; People v. Lee (1985) 164 C.A.3d 830, 840, 210 C.R. 799 [at second in camera hearing, it was error for judge to consider informant's unsworn testimony from first in camera hearing].)

D. Exceptions Necessary for Fair Trial.

5. Procedure in Raising and Determining Issue.

b. Hearing To Determine Issue.

2. In Camera Hearing.

bb. No Requirement That Informant Testify.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 321

[§ 321] No Requirement That Informant Testify.

Generally, there is no requirement that the informant testify at the in camera hearing. (See People v. Lee (1985) 164 C.A.3d 830, 840, 210 C.R. 799; People v. Alderrou (1987) 191 C.A.3d 1074, 1079, 236 C.R. 740; People v. Fried (1989) 214 C.A.3d 1309, 1313, 263 C.R. 237; People v. Dimitrov (1995) 33 C.A.4th 18, 29, 30, 39 C.R.2d 257.)

As the court in People v. Alderrou, supra, observed:

"Neither expressly nor by implication does Evidence Code section 1042, subdivision (d) require the confidential informant to be present or to testify at the in camera hearing. Instead, that section says at the in camera hearing 'the prosecution may offer evidence which would tend to disclose or which discloses the identity of the informant.' ... It says nothing about the type of evidence to be offered on these issues. Moreover, the language of this section contemplates the possibility the prosecution will introduce evidence of some kind which will only tend to disclose the informant's identity, not disclose it. If the confidential informant was always present and always testified then his identity would always be disclosed to the judge. But the Legislature clearly anticipated there would be situations where the informant's identity was not revealed to the judge but where others would supply information perhaps about his relationship to the defendant or to the criminal transaction or to the premises involved which, if known to the defendant, might only tend to suggest the informant's identity." (191 C.A.3d 1079.)

However, an exception was made in People v. Ruiz (1992) 9 C.A.4th 1485, 12 C.R.2d 234. Defendant was convicted of selling methamphetamine, after denial of his motion to disclose the identity of a confidential informant (CI) who had arranged the sale by defendant to deputy sheriff Ramos. The trial judge held an in camera hearing, and denied the motion to disclose. Defendant contended that, because this case was essentially a credibility contest between defendant and Ramos, the CI might be able to give exculpatory testimony. Held, judgment of conviction reversed for further in camera proceedings pursuant to Ev.C. 1042(d).

(a) That the CI witnessed the transaction does not necessarily require disclosure of the CI's identity; if the evidence presented at the in camera hearing established no reasonable possibility that the CI could give evidence favorable to defendant, nondisclosure would not deprive defendant of a fair trial. (9 C.A.4th 1488, citing People v. Lanfrey (1988) 204 C.A.3d 491, 251 C.R. 189, infra, §322, and People v. Alderrou, supra.)

(b) Here, however, defendant had established that the CI was an eyewitness to the alleged drug transaction, and officer Ramos' testimony was insufficient to demonstrate that the CI could not give material testimony tending to exonerate defendant. "The materiality of the CI's possible testimony cannot be determined by a peace officer's characterization of the eyewitness CI's knowledge of the incident and the CI's reliability and credibility." (9 C.A.4th 1489.)

XIII. PRIVILEGE FOR IDENTITY OF INFORMER

D. Exceptions Necessary for Fair Trial.

5. Procedure in Raising and Determining Issue.

b. Hearing To Determine Issue.

3. Test for Judge's Determination.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 322

[§ 322] Test for Judge's Determination.

The judge makes the determination on the basis of the evidence presented at both hearings, and must not order disclosure or impose the sanctions of striking testimony or dismissal of the proceeding, unless the judge concludes that "there is a reasonable possibility that nondisclosure might deprive the defendant of a fair trial." (Ev.C. 1042(d).)

Earlier cases had indicated that the defendant's showing could deal in speculation on how the informer's testimony could benefit defendant. Ev.C. 1042(d) changed the situation: "While the defendant may make out a prima facie case for disclosure ... , the court now has a method of determining whether the nondisclosure of the identity of the informer would deprive the defendant of a fair trial, which section 1042 expressly makes the test to be applied." (People v. Pacheco (1972) 27 C.A.3d 70, 80, 103 C.R. 583.) In Pacheco, it was clear that the informer's information would be of no help to defendant. And if a "bare possibility" of benefit were the test, and the informer's identity had to be disclosed under these circumstances, "then under no circumstances could an informant's identity be withheld. This would be the end of the informer system, which has been of great help to and regarded as a necessity for law enforcement and which has existed from the very beginning of police work." (27 C.A.3d 81.) The in camera hearing is therefore a constitutional means of protecting the privilege. (27 C.A.3d 81.)

In People v. McCarthy (1978) 79 C.A.3d 547, 144 C.R. 822, the informer gave in camera testimony that "was not in any way exculpatory but was very incriminatory." (79 C.A.3d 553.) Held, denial of disclosure affirmed. "[W]hen an in camera hearing has been held and the trial court has reasonably concluded, as in the instant case, that the informant does not have knowledge of facts that would tend to exculpate the defendant, disclosure of the identity of the informer is prohibited by Evidence Code section 1042, subdivision (d), since the public entity has invoked the privilege pursuant to section 1041." (79 C.A.3d 555.) (To same effect, see People v. Alderrou (1987) 191 C.A.3d 1074, 1078, 236 C.R. 740; People v. Fried (1989) 214 C.A.3d 1309, 1314, 263 C.R. 237; People v. Dimitrov (1995) 33 C.A.4th 18, 31, 39 C.R.2d 257.)

Although Price v. Superior Court (1970) 1 C.3d 836, 83 C.R. 369, 463 P.2d 721, and other California Supreme Court decisions contain dicta that an informer who was a nonparticipating eyewitness to the offense is necessarily a material witness, none of these decisions involved the in camera hearing required by Ev.C. 1042(d) (see supra, §320). The evidence adduced at such a hearing may establish that there is no reasonable possibility that even an eyewitness could provide any evidence on the issue of guilt. (See People v. Lanfrey (1988) 204 C.A.3d 491, 502, 251 C.R. 189 [no reasonable possibility that eyewitness-informer could support defendant's claim of self-defense].)

However, if the evidence taken in camera fails to eliminate the guesswork involved in speculating on what the informer's testimony would be, the defendant's demonstration of a "reasonable possibility that nondisclosure might deprive the defendant of a fair trial" is sufficient to require disclosure. In other words, Ev.C. 1042(d) requires that the pre-1969 "reasonable possibility" test "be applied to the combination of evidence produced in court and in camera." (People v. Coleman (1977) 72 C.A.3d 287, 298, 139 C.R. 908.)

XIII. PRIVILEGE FOR IDENTITY OF INFORMER

D. Exceptions Necessary for Fair Trial.

5. Procedure in Raising and Determining Issue.

c. Duty of Judge To Hold Hearing.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 323

[§ 323] Duty of Judge To Hold Hearing.

(1) On Request of Prosecutor. Ev.C. 1042(d) forbids refusal of the prosecutor's request for an in camera hearing before the court orders disclosure, striking of testimony, or dismissal based on the claim of privilege. (People v. Aguilera (1976) 61 C.A.3d 863, 868, 131 C.R. 603; People v. Reel (1979) 100 C.A.3d 415, 419, 161 C.R. 43 [defendant failed to show reasonable possibility that informer could give exculpatory evidence; even if such showing was assumed, denial of prosecutor's request for in camera hearing was reversible error].)

(2) Effect of Prosecutor's Failure To Make Timely Request. When no in camera hearing is requested and the case is dismissed for noncompliance with a disclosure order, the dismissal will be sustained if the defendant has made a prima facie showing of necessity for disclosure, even though an in camera hearing might have dispelled that necessity. The court in People v. Viramontes (1978) 85 C.A.3d 585, 149 C.R. 607, affirming such a dismissal, said: "The evidence supporting the materiality of the informant's testimony was not strong. The posture of the case in the trial court manifested those 'guessing game' qualities which often attend these determinations" (citing People v. Aguilera, supra, 61 C.A.3d 868). "However, the People had available to them appropriate procedures to eliminate such a guessing game. They could have requested the court to hold an in camera hearing." (85 C.A.3d 593.)

Even if the trial court denies disclosure, the prosecution may not get a second chance to request an in camera hearing if the defendant succeeds in obtaining a pretrial writ overturning the denial order. In Williams v. Superior Court (1974) 38 C.A.3d 412, 112 C.R. 485, the prosecutor did not request an in camera hearing when defendant moved to compel disclosure before the trial judge. After the motion was denied, defendant sought relief by mandamus. The prosecution contended that even if disclosure had been denied erroneously, the Court of Appeal should remand the matter to the trial court so that the prosecution could request the in camera hearing. Held, the prosecution had lost its opportunity. "Nothing in section 1042, subdivision (d), supports the Attorney General's premise that the People's right to request an in camera hearing arises only after the trial court has first found that a prima facie case for disclosure has been made by the defendant. Subdivision (d) expressly provides that the very purpose of the in camera hearing is 'to aid the court in its determination whether there is a reasonable possibility that nondisclosure might deprive the defendant of a fair trial.' Carried to its logical extreme, the Attorney General's contention would require the appellate court to entertain two successive mandate proceedings to test the denial of disclosure in cases such as this, if, upon remand, the trial court held an in camera hearing and adhered to its prior decision. Such a duplication of effort at both the trial and appellate levels cannot have been within the intent of the Legislature when it enacted subdivision (d)." (38 C.A.3d 425.) (But see Goodlow v. Superior Court (1980) 101 C.A.3d 969, 977, 162 C.R. 121, supra, §316, holding that the prosecution should be given further opportunity to request in camera hearing because applicability of the disclosure right in probation revocation proceedings was issue of first impression.)

When reversal of a conviction is based on failure to order disclosure, the necessity for which might have been clarified by an in camera hearing that was neither held nor requested, the prosecution will be given an opportunity to request such a hearing on remand. (People v. Blouin (1978) 80 C.A.3d 269, 288, 145 C.R. 701; People v. Ingram (1978) 87 C.A.3d 832, 151 C.R. 239.) "When the issue is resolved in favor of the People there is no necessity for an in camera hearing, and such a hearing could only be a waste of court time. Thus, under the circumstances here, we cannot say the People waived their right to request an in camera hearing by failing to make it in the trial court, and deem the Attorney General's request for an in camera hearing to be timely because the need therefor did not arise until this court ruled that a prima facie case for disclosure had been shown. To remand the cause for an in camera hearing will prevent that duplication of judicial time and effort at both the trial and appellate level condemned in Williams." (People v. Ingram, supra, 87 C.A.3d 842.)

XIII. PRIVILEGE FOR IDENTITY OF INFORMER

D. Exceptions Necessary for Fair Trial.

5. Procedure in Raising and Determining Issue.

d. Change of Circumstances After Denial.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 324

[§ 324] Change of Circumstances After Denial.

In People v. Allen (1980) 101 C.A.3d 285, 161 C.R. 568, defendant's conviction had been reversed for failure to order disclosure, with directions to give the prosecution an opportunity to request an in camera hearing. After remand, it appeared that the informer had died of gunshot wounds 12 days after the hearing of the disclosure motion and 11 months before the trial. Defendant was retried and convicted. Held, conviction reversed with directions to dismiss.

(a) Though the informer could not have been a trial witness, he could have given in camera testimony that might have required disclosure, resulting in either dismissal if the prosecution failed to comply or, if there were compliance, availability of additional evidence to defendant. Accordingly, it cannot be established that a fair trial was possible without disclosure. (101 C.A.3d 291.)

(b) The erroneous denial of disclosure did not preclude the prosecution's subsequently requesting an in camera hearing, but the prosecution, not defendant, bore the risk that changed circumstances would render the right of disclosure a nullity. (101 C.A.3d 292, relying on Harris v. Superior Court (1973) 35 C.A.3d 24, 27, 110 C.R. 400, infra, §331.) This "regrettable" result "could have been avoided had the prosecutor not urged a contention which clearly was foreclosed by the precedent authorities." (101 C.A.3d 294.)

XIII. PRIVILEGE FOR IDENTITY OF INFORMER

E. Where Disclosure Not Required.

1. Search Under Search Warrant.
- a. Judicial Rule of Nondisclosure.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 325

[§ 325] Judicial Rule of Nondisclosure.

A search warrant may issue on information furnished by a reliable informer not named in the affidavit. (See 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, §102.) The magistrate may, if he or she deems it necessary, inquire further into the matter and even seek to question the informer. But is the petitioner, in a proceeding to quash the warrant, entitled to disclosure? In other words, does the rule of Priestly v. Superior Court (1958) 50 C.2d 812, 330 P.2d 39, supra, §317, on search incidental to an arrest apply to search pursuant to a search warrant? In People v. Keener (1961) 55 C.2d 714, 12 C.R. 859, 361 P.2d 587, the court held that it did not. The Priestly rule was laid down because without disclosure probable cause for an arrest would be based solely on the police officer's determination. But where a search warrant is issued the magistrate makes the determination, and can require disclosure if he or she thinks it necessary:

"The requirement that an affidavit be presented to the magistrate and his control over the issuance of the warrant diminish the danger of illegal action, and it does not appear that there has been frequent abuse of the search warrant procedure. One of the purposes of the adoption of the exclusionary rule was to further the use of warrants, and it obviously is not desirable to place unnecessary burdens upon their use. The additional protection which would result from application of the Priestly rule in situations such as the one involved here would not offset the disadvantages of excluding probative evidence of crime and obstructing the flow of information to police. It follows from what we have said that where a search is made pursuant to a warrant valid on its face, the prosecution is not required to reveal the identity of the informer in order to establish the legality of the search and the admissibility of the evidence obtained as a result of it." (55 C.2d 723.) (See People v. Hobbs (1994) 7 C.4th 948, 959, 960, 30 C.R.2d 651, 873 P.2d 1246 [citing the text and quoting Keener].)

E. Where Disclosure Not Required.

1. Search Under Search Warrant.
- b. Codification of Rule.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 326

[§ 326] Codification of Rule.

(1) In General. Ev.C. 1042(b) codifies the holding of People v. Keener (1961) 55 C.2d 714, 12 C.R. 859, 361 P.2d 587, supra, §325, and extends it to all official information:

"[W]here a search is made pursuant to a warrant valid on its face, the public entity bringing a criminal proceeding is not required to reveal to the defendant official information or the identity of an informer in order to establish the legality of the search or the admissibility of any evidence obtained as a result of it." (See People v. Flannery (1985) 164 C.A.3d 1112, 1116, 1117, 210 C.R. 899; People v. Greenstreet (1990) 218 C.A.3d 1516, 1519, 267 C.R. 377 [under Ev.C. 1042(b), trial judge may delete information in affidavit identifying informant, but must base determination of probable cause to issue search warrant on unedited version].)

"Bringing a criminal proceeding," within the meaning of Ev.C. 1042(b), includes prearrest investigation. "Otherwise the prosecution might feel or be pressured to bring charges without adequate investigation, charges which might later be dismissed because there was insufficient evidence. Subjects of such investigations might be alerted and impede the investigation by tampering with or destroying evidence. The public interest is served when charges are brought only when the appropriate cause has been developed and established. The policy behind the privilege protecting confidential informants obtains whether or not charges have been pressed." Thus, although, under P.C. 1534, the documents associated with a search warrant are public documents 10 days after the warrant's execution (see 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, §122), such information may remain privileged if the search is used to further an ongoing investigation. (PSC Geothermal Services Co. v. Superior Court (1994) 25 C.A.4th 1697, 1714, 31 C.R.2d 213.)

(2) Distinction: Additional Proper Purpose. The general rule of nondisclosure may not apply if disclosure is sought for an additional proper purpose. In other words, the fact that an informer was relied upon for issuance of a search warrant does not impair the right to disclosure of the informer's identity on a showing of reasonable possibility that the informer could give evidence as to guilt. Disclosure is precluded if sought merely to attack the legality of the search. (Theodor v. Superior Court (1972) 8 C.3d 77, 88, 104 C.R. 226, 501 P.2d 234; see Price v. Superior Court (1970) 1 C.3d 836, 842, 83 C.R. 369, 463 P.2d 721.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XIII. PRIVILEGE FOR IDENTITY OF INFORMER

E. Where Disclosure Not Required.

2. Reasonable Cause To Arrest.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 327

[§ 327] Reasonable Cause To Arrest.

(1) Original Statute: Narcotic Offenses. Ev.C. 1042(c) created a special exception for arrests for narcotic offenses: Information from an informer was admissible on the issue of reasonable cause to make an arrest or search, if the judge or magistrate determined that the informer was reliable and that disclosure should not be required. Thus, the Priestly requirement of disclosure (supra, §317) became a discretionary determination by the judge to order or deny it. (See 17 Hastings L. J. 107.)

The constitutionality of this exception was established by the United States Supreme Court in McCray v. Illinois (1967) 386 U.S. 300, 87 S.Ct. 1056, 1059, 18 L.Ed.2d 62, 68. (See also Martin v. Superior Court (1967) 66 C.2d 257, 259, 57 C.R. 351, 424 P.2d 935 [McCray case controlling]; People v. Sanders (1967) 250 C.A.2d 123, 131, 58 C.R. 259.)

(2) Amended Statute: All Offenses. The 1969 Legislature amended Ev.C. 1042(c) to extend the judge's discretion to deny disclosure to all cases: "[I]n any preliminary hearing, criminal trial, or other criminal proceeding, any otherwise admissible evidence of information communicated to a peace officer by a confidential informant" is admissible, where the informer is not a material witness on guilt or innocence, without a requirement that his or her name or identity be disclosed, if the judge so rules.

Thus, the judge or magistrate "must either (1) compel disclosure of the informant's identity as required by Priestly, or (2) exercise his discretion based on evidence produced in open court that the informant is reliable and that disclosure is not required." (Parsley v. Superior Court (1973) 9 C.3d 934, 942, 109 C.R. 563, 513 P.2d 611 [judge failed to order informer's identity disclosed and also failed to exercise proper discretion as to reliability; writ of prohibition issued].)

Full cross-examination of prosecution witnesses on the issue of the informant's reliability is necessary for a proper exercise of the judge's discretion, and it also "appears to be a constitutional prerequisite to invoking the informant privilege." (Parsley v. Superior Court, supra, 9 C.3d 942.)

Because a witness to a crime is presumptively reliable in the absence of evidence to the contrary, a finding that an eyewitness-informant is reliable need not be supported by previous demonstration of reliability or subsequent corroboration. (People v. Lanfrey (1988) 204 C.A.3d 491, 506, 251 C.R. 189.)

In People v. Shipstead (1971) 19 C.A.3d 58, 72, 75, 96 C.R. 513, the court pointed out that the privilege may be asserted under Ev.C. 1042(c) where the information is received from "a reliable informant"; nondisclosure is unjustified where no evidence is offered to establish the informer's reliability.

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XIII. PRIVILEGE FOR IDENTITY OF INFORMER

E. Where Disclosure Not Required.

3. Reasonable Cause Shown Without Informer.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 328

[§ 328] Reasonable Cause Shown Without Informer.

The requirement of disclosure may sometimes be avoided by using the informer only as a lead to information independently verified. In this situation, reasonable cause may then be shown without using the information, and the informer's identity ceases to be material in a test of validity of the arrest. (See People v. Williams (1958) 51 C.2d 355, 359, 333 P.2d 19; People v. McMurray (1959) 171 C.A.2d 178, 183, 340 P.2d 335; People v. Hunt (1963) 216 C.A.2d 753, 756, 31 C.R. 221; People v. Martin (1969) 2 C.A.3d 121, 128, 82 C.R. 414 [informer "simply pointed the finger of suspicion" at defendant, who was arrested 3 days later]; People v. Lanfrey (1988) 204 C.A.3d 491, 507, 251 C.R. 189; Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1042; 33 Proof of Facts 2d 549 [need for disclosure of informant's identity].)

Thus, in People v. McMurray, supra, police officers for several years suspected defendant of being a dope peddler, from information given by several informers, by observation of defendant making apparent exchanges with addicts, and by a prior arrest attempt which was dropped when it appeared that the informer would have to be disclosed. On the night in question, an informer telephoned defendant to make arrangements for a buy. A group of officers staked out the area the informer designated, accosted defendant and identified themselves as police. Defendant ran and threw away an object which, being recovered, proved to be heroin. Held, the trial judge's refusal to compel disclosure was proper. The informer did not come to the scene; hence, he was not a participant or eyewitness (see supra, §§311 et seq.). And the informer's information was not necessary to establish reasonable cause, because the officers had sufficient evidence apart from the information and the telephone call. The court distinguished People v. McShann (1958) 50 C.2d 802, 330 P.2d 33, supra, §312, where the prosecution introduced the informer's phone call. Here, they did not make that mistake; the informer's phone call was brought out by defendant's cross-examination of a police officer on the stand. (171 C.A.2d 184.)

XIII. PRIVILEGE FOR IDENTITY OF INFORMER
 F. Disclosure Withheld Until Informer Unavailable.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 329

[§ 329] Disclosure Withheld Until Informer Unavailable.

The direct or indirect suppression of material evidence by the prosecution may constitute a denial of due process. (See 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §121.) This principle applies to nondisclosure of the identity of an informer: "Denial by the prosecution of an opportunity for the defendant to seek out the informer and to defend by these means, where the testimony of the informer would be material to the issues, is unfair and oppressive to the defendant, and deprives him of due process of law." (People v. Kiihoa (1960) 53 C.2d 748, 752, 3 C.R. 1, 349 P.2d 673.) But three situations must be carefully distinguished:

The prosecution conceded this by giving his name and last known whereabouts, but contended that it had no further obligation, and that no state action was involved in S's disappearance because the police did not actively procure or arrange his departure. Nevertheless, said the court, "the state sought to circumvent, if not to stultify, the reason for the rule requiring disclosure. The procedure resorted to in the instant case manifestly denied the defendant a fair trial just as effectively as if the informer had never been identified." (53 C.2d 753.)

(2) Where State Is Not at Fault. In People v. Hammond (1960) 54 C.2d 846, 9 C.R. 233, 357 P.2d 289, a narcotics case based on sales to an informer, defendant was denied the name of the informer at the preliminary hearing. Motions to set aside the informations were, on suggestion of counsel for defendant, continued by mutual consent from time to time, pending determination of leading cases then in the Supreme Court. When these cases were decided, the informations were dismissed, new complaints were filed, and a new preliminary hearing had. Then the prosecution disclosed the name of the informer plus the fact that he had since been killed in an auto accident. Defendant was held to answer, new informations were filed, and he was tried and found guilty. Held, affirmed. Proper disclosure was ultimately made; the delay was initiated by the defendant himself, and acquiesced in by him, and the death of the informer was a mere fortuitous incident of the delay. (54 C.2d 852.)

(3) Delayed Arrests During "Buy" Program. Where an arrest is delayed, not for the purpose of preventing the defendant from reaching an informer, but merely to preserve the anonymity of an undercover agent working on other cases, no fundamental unfairness to the defendant is involved. (See People v. Galvan (1962) 208 C.A.2d 443, 447, 25

C.R. 128; People v. Castedy (1961) 194 C.A.2d 763, 769, 15 C.R. 413; People v. Gilmore (1965) 239 C.A.2d 125, 128, 48 C.R. 449.)

The "buy" program is described, and its propriety affirmed, in People v. Gilmore, supra. Enforcement officers, working with a particular informer over a period of several months, make a large number of purchases. They then terminate the services of the informer, make the arrests and initiate the prosecutions. The informer, understandably, disappears. The contention has been made, on behalf of defendants, that the disclosure requirement should be implemented by a duty to keep a participating informer in custody or under surveillance for a reasonable time after arrests. The Gilmore case rejects this proposal, pointing out that the informer is essential in narcotics cases, and holding that the delayed arrest is a reasonable method of protecting him or her from harm. "The balance of interests requires that potential defendants be subjected to the risk of the informer disappearing, so long as the government does not affirmatively induce that disappearance." (239 C.A.2d 133.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

G. Duty To Locate Informer.

1. Eleazer Rule of Good Faith.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 330

[§ 330] Eleazer Rule of Good Faith.

In Eleazer v. Superior Court (1970) 1 C.3d 847, 83 C.R. 586, 464 P.2d 42, the court repudiated suggestions in earlier cases that the prosecution automatically fulfills its obligations when it reveals all it knows, even though the data is inadequate for locating an informer. If the informer is a material witness, the prosecution must demonstrate that it has attempted in good faith to locate him or her; the duty to disclose the identity of the informer cannot be evaded by deliberate failure to acquire information. (1 C.3d 849, 851; see footnote 5, disapproving a number of cases.)

(a) Extent of information to be given. The "identity" of a material witness must be disclosed, "not merely his name, but all pertinent information which might assist the defense's efforts to locate and produce him." (1 C.3d 851.) Although the prosecution need not call the informer as a witness, or even produce the informer, it cannot withhold information which might assist the defense in doing so. (1 C.3d 851.)

(b) Types of effort required. Once the informer had been shown to be a material witness (as at the preliminary hearing), and while he still remained in police employ, "the police or district attorney should have undertaken a good faith effort at least to obtain his address or to make some arrangement under which he could be successfully subpoenaed for trial; their failure to do so suggests a deliberate evasion of the defendant's right to a fair trial." (1 C.3d 853.) The efforts required will vary with the facts of the case. "If the informer has a regular abode and place of employment, simply obtaining his address and telephone number may suffice; if he is transient, or conceals his address, the law enforcement agency probably should make some arrangement for maintaining close communication with him." (1 C.3d 853, footnote 10.) One possible solution is for police to photograph and fingerprint their informers. (1 C.3d 852, footnote 7.)

(c) Burden on prosecution. Prosecution contentions, that a defendant should show that he or she cannot readily obtain the desired information through the defendant's own efforts before the People are required to initiate an investigation, put the cart before the horse. "The police will know whether the informer was a material witness before charges have been filed against the defendant; it is at this time that inquiries will probably be most fruitful. If investigation is necessary at a later date it is still better undertaken by the prosecution both because of its greater investigatory resources and its superior knowledge of, and contacts with, the informer." (1 C.3d 854.)

The Eleazer rule was applied in many later cases. (See People v. Goliday (1973) 8 C.3d 771, 781, 106 C.R. 113, 505 P.2d 537 [duty to furnish information is not limited to informers who were paid or who provided information regularly, but applies to "all material witness informants who served as active agents of the police"]; People v. Frohner (1976) 65 C.A.3d 94, 110, 135 C.R. 153 [when key informer, whom prosecution was dilatory about locating, was finally arrested during jury deliberations, it was prejudicial error to deny defendant's motion to reopen case so that informer could testify]; People v. Hernandez (1978) 84 C.A.3d 408, 410, 148 C.R. 567 [prosecution's Eleazer duty does not apply to victim-witness who was not informer; arrest here was based on police observation of the robbery]; People v. Rios (1977) 74 C.A.3d 833, 837, 141 C.R. 677 [refusal to disclose informer's home address was not error where defense counsel knew informer's name and telephone number and declined opportunities to interview and subpoena him]; Twiggs v. Superior Court (1983) 34 C.3d 360, 366, 194 C.R. 152, 667 P.2d 1165 [trial judge's order requiring prosecution to provide informant's last known address failed to satisfy Eleazer, where it was likely that informant could not be located on the basis of such information alone; trial judge must inquire into what efforts, if any, prosecution has made to maintain contact with informant].)

In Miller v. Superior Court (1979) 99 C.A.3d 381, 159 C.R. 456, an informer testified as key witness at the preliminary hearing, but the judge sustained an objection to the question of his home address. Defendant showed that the address was necessary to test veracity, and the prosecution failed to establish any cause for withholding it, conceding there was not sufficient indication of danger to the witness. Held, writ issued requiring dismissal under P.C. 995 for lack of probable cause supporting the information.

(a) Denial of the address impaired defendant's right of cross-examination. (99 C.A.3d 385, citing Alford v. United States (1931) 282 U.S. 687, 51 S.Ct. 218, 75 L.Ed. 624, 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §283; Alford v. Superior Court (1972) 29 C.A.3d 724, 105 C.R. 713, 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Pretrial Proceedings, §144.)

(b) The prosecution is not entitled to a second opportunity to disclose the address. In Eleazer, the prosecution was given a second chance to locate the informer only because its duty to do so was previously unclear. (99 C.A.3d 387.) (See Montez v. Superior Court (1992) 5 C.A.4th 763, 767, 768, 769, 7 C.R.2d 76 [discussing and distinguishing Miller and other cases involving similar facts].)

XIII. PRIVILEGE FOR IDENTITY OF INFORMER

G. Duty To Locate Informer.

2. Effect of Reversal of Conviction.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 331

[§ 331] Effect of Reversal of Conviction.

In Harris v. Superior Court (1973) 35 C.A.3d 24, 110 C.R. 400, the judge at defendant's first trial refused to order disclosure of an informer's name. Following defendant's conviction for possessing heroin, judgment was reversed on the ground that disclosure should have been made. As defendant's second trial was about to begin, the prosecution identified the informer but had no knowledge of his whereabouts. Defendant sought prohibition. Held, writ issued to compel dismissal. The prosecution's original refusal to disclose the informer's name, coupled with circumstances beyond defendant's control, deprived her of information essential to a fair trial. No showing short of actual disclosure of the informer's name and whereabouts could remedy the situation. "If the original trial without this information was unfair, a retrial sans same would be nothing but a replay of a constitutionally defective record. If any party must suffer the consequences of the prosecution's original decision to refuse disclosure of the identity of the informer in this case it must be the People and not the accused." (35 C.A.3d 27.)

XIII. PRIVILEGE FOR IDENTITY OF INFORMER

G. Duty To Locate Informer.

3. Distinction: Anonymous Informant.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 332

[§ 332] Distinction: Anonymous Informant.

In People v. Callen (1987) 194 C.A.3d 558, 239 C.R. 584, defendant was charged with robbery. His arrest came about as a result of an anonymous tip received by police on the Crimestoppers telephone hotline from an apparent percipient witness to the crime. Defendant moved for an order compelling disclosure of the identity of the informant; the police did not know who the informer was and the motion was denied. On appeal from the judgment of conviction, defendant contended that the police have a duty to determine and disclose to a defendant the identity of such an informant, and that they may not operate a program purposely designed to conceal the identity of an informant who was a percipient witness. Held, conviction affirmed; there is no such duty.

(a) The identity of an informant known to the police who is a percipient witness must be disclosed. (194 C.A.3d 561; see supra, §312.) But "[w]e are unaware of any decision holding the police have an affirmative obligation to determine the identity of an anonymous informant who provides information." (194 C.A.3d 561.) The cases dealing with suppression of evidence impose a duty of preservation of evidence favorable to the accused if the prosecution has gathered such evidence; they do not impose upon law enforcement agencies the requirement that they take any affirmative action to procure such evidence. (194 C.A.3d 561; see 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §132.)

(b) Defendant contended that the Crimestoppers program, which guarantees anonymity by not tracing incoming calls, results in suppression of evidence which might be helpful to the defense. This is unsound:

(1) Answering the telephone does not amount to a seizure of potentially material evidence which must then be preserved for the benefit of the defense. (194 C.A.3d 562.)

(2) "[I]t is sheer speculation that taping or tracing hotline calls will yield anything of benefit to criminal defendants. Informants who are determined to protect their anonymity may disguise their voices, call from public telephones, limit their calls to a duration too brief to trace, or even communicate with law enforcement by means not involving the telephone, for instance, by letter." (194 C.A.3d 562.)

(3) The burden placed on law enforcement would extend beyond simply taping or mechanically attempting to trace telephone calls: the police would have to try to keep the informant on the line, and if they traced the call the caller could still physically elude the police. (194 C.A.3d 562.)

(4) The investigatory burden would destroy programs such as Crimestoppers by removing the guarantee of anonymity. "It is the promise of anonymity which allays the fear of criminal retaliation which otherwise discourages citizen involvement in reporting crime. In turn, by guaranteeing anonymity Crimestoppers provides law enforcement with information it might never otherwise obtain. We are satisfied the benefits of a Crimestoppers-type program--citizen involvement in reporting crime and criminals--far outweigh any speculative benefits to the defense arising from imposing a duty on law enforcement to gather and preserve evidence of the identity of informants who wish to remain anonymous." (194 C.A.3d 563.)

(5) "The asserted need to tape and trace hotline calls to preserve a balance between prosecution and defense is surely the reddest of herrings." (194 C.A.3d 563.) Anonymous information often is passed to law enforcement officials in a manner that cannot be traced. "Thus, defendant's position must be that law enforcement officials should not be permitted to act upon anonymous information, however that information is received, unless the identity of the informant can somehow be uncovered, a proposition we find palpably unacceptable. There is no question but that anonymous information often provides a substantial part of the initial investigatory data relied upon by law enforcement agencies. A Crimestoppers-type program does no more than institutionalize the method by which anonymous information may be fed into the investigation pipeline." (194 C.A.3d 563.)

XIV. NEWSPERSON'S SHIELD LAW

A. Origin of Immunity.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 333

[§ 333] Origin of Immunity.

A California statute enacted in 1935 gave newsmen protection against compulsory disclosure of the sources of their information. This "shield law," established by statute in many states, has no common law background, is unavailable in the federal courts, is not recognized by the Model Code or the Uniform Rules of Evidence, and has been criticized in authoritative quarters. (See generally In re Howard (1955) 136 C.A.2d 816, 818, 289 P.2d 537 [privilege upheld against contention of waiver]; 1 McCormick 5th, §76.2; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2286; 11 *Stanf. L. The California Law Revision Commission proposed several limitations. All were rejected, however, and Ev.C. 1070 restated the provisions of former C.C.P. 1881(6). (See infra, §334 et seq.; and see generally Mitchell v. Superior Court (1984) 37 C.3d 268, 274, 208 C.R. 152, footnote 2, 690 P.2d 625, infra, §346 [approximately half the states have similar laws]; 18 *Hastings Const. L. In 1980, an amendment to Cal. Const., Art. I, §2 was adopted, repeating the language of Ev.C. 1070. (See *KSDO v. B. Nature and Scope of Immunity.

1. Persons Protected.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 334

[§ 334] Persons Protected.

The immunity may be claimed by the following persons:

(1) A publisher, editor, reporter, or other person currently or formerly connected with or employed by a newspaper, magazine, or other periodical publication, or by a press association or wire service. (Ev.C. 1070(a).)

(2) A radio or television news reporter or other person currently or formerly connected with or employed by a radio or television station. (Ev.C. 1070(b).)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XIV. NEWSPERSON'S SHIELD LAW

- B. Nature and Scope of Immunity.
  - 2. Matter Procured for Publication.
    - a. Statutory Provisions.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 335

[§ 335] Statutory Provisions.

The original statute referred to information that was actually published or used. As amended in 1971, it protects nondisclosure of the following (see 3 Pacific L. J. 420):

- (1) The source of information procured for publication in a newspaper, magazine, or other periodical publication (Ev.C. 1070(a)), or for news or news commentary purposes on radio or television (Ev.C. 1070(b)).
- (2) Unpublished information obtained or prepared in gathering, receiving, or processing information for communication to the public. (Ev.C. 1070(a), (b).)

"Unpublished information" includes "information not disseminated to the public by the person from whom disclosure is sought, whether or not related information has been disseminated and includes, but is not limited to, all notes, outtakes, photographs, tapes or other data of whatever sort not itself disseminated to the public through a medium of communication, whether or not published information based upon or related to such material has been disseminated." (Ev.C. 1070(c).) Thus, the disclosures protected against are no longer limited to sources or information leading to sources but encompass all information acquired by news gathering or processing activity. That construction furthers the legislative purpose of maintaining a free flow of information. (Hammarley v. Superior Court (1979) 89 C.A.3d 388, 396, 153 C.R. 608; Playboy Enterprises v. Superior Court (1984) 154 C.A.3d 14, 22, 201 C.R. 207, infra, §336; Delaney v. Superior Court (1990) 50 C.3d 785, 268 C.R. 753, 789 P.2d 934, infra, §§337, 347.)

The phrase "information for communication to the public" requires that the newsperson invoking the shield law be engaged in legitimate journalistic purposes, or have exercised judgmental discretion in those activities. (Delaney v. Superior Court, supra, 50 C.3d 798, footnote 8.) Thus, the court in Rancho Publications v. Superior Court (1999) 68 C.A.4th 1538, 81 C.R.2d 274, held that a newspaper that ran a series of anonymous advertisements critical of a hospital could not invoke the shield law to avoid disclosing the identity of the authors of those advertisements during discovery in the hospital's defamation suit against third parties. (68 C.A.4th 1542.) The Rancho court explained: "As far as we know, the Eagle was indifferent to the informational content of these advertisements and would have accepted them whether they sold used cars, promoted the painless removal of unwanted hair, or communicated absolutely nothing." (68 C.A.4th 1546.) However, the court further held that the nonstatutory, constitutional qualified privilege (infra, §345 et seq.) prevented disclosure, because it would chill public discourse on core political speech, and because the advertisements were not directly relevant to the defamation action. (68 C.A.4th 1550; following Mitchell v. Superior Court (1984) 37 C.3d 268, 208 C.R. 152, 690 P.2d 625, infra, §346, and Britt v. Superior Court (1978) 20 C.3d 844,

XIV. NEWSPERSON'S SHIELD LAW

B. Nature and Scope of Immunity.

2. Matter Procured for Publication.

b. Undisseminated Source Materials.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 336

[§ 336] Undisseminated Source Materials.

In Playboy Enterprises v. Superior Court (1984) 154 C.A.3d 14, 201 C.R. 207, plaintiffs C & C, a comedy team, sued G & R, their former business manager, for breach of contract and breach of fiduciary duty in persuading them to enter into an unfavorable production contract without disclosing defendant's conflicting interest in the production company. Kelly, a freelance reporter, had interviewed plaintiffs and written an article published in an issue of Playboy magazine. Defendants sought discovery from nonparty Playboy Enterprises of the notes, tapes and records of the interview which were used as source material for the article, and all documents relating to the research, writing or editing of the article. The lower court, on a showing by defendants that they were unable to locate and depose Kelly, granted the requested order for discovery. Held, mandamus granted, directing the lower court to vacate its order.

(a) Ev.C. 1070(c), protecting unpublished information (supra, §335), provides immunity to petitioner Playboy Enterprises. "The manifested legislative intent is to give broad protection to both information and source material so long as such matter has not been already disseminated by the person from whom disclosure is sought, even if related or derivative information has been disseminated by such publication." (154 C.A.3d 22.) "This broad construction safeguards source materials and facts in memory that were obtained on a 'not for attribution' or 'off the record' basis. It also relieves the trial courts of the tedious and dubiously useful task of sorting through source material to discover facts that have been otherwise disseminated and lifting such facts from the source material out of context." (154 C.A.3d 22.) Hence, the judge's order is not enforceable by contempt except to the extent that petitioner has previously disseminated to the public any of the materials. (154 C.A.3d 22.)

(b) Neither the statute nor the constitutional provision may be construed to make the protection inapplicable where unpublished information or materials could confirm or amplify the published information (here, the Playboy article). The statute provides unqualified protection "whether or not published information based upon or related to" the unpublished material has been disseminated; and published material that could be confirmed, amplified or discredited by undisseminated source material is "related to" or "based upon" the undisseminated material. (154 C.A.3d 23.)

(c) Civil litigants have no constitutional rights which overcome the protection.

(1) A criminal defendant's constitutional right to a fair trial, under the Sixth Amendment and comparable due process guarantees of the California Constitution, includes a right to discovery where there is a reasonable possibility that the evidence sought might exonerate the defendant. (154 C.A.3d 24, 25, citing Hammarley v. Superior Court (1979) 89 C.A.3d 388, 153 C.R. 608.)

(2) Defendants in a civil action have no similar right. KSDO v. Superior Court (1982) 136 C.A.3d 375, 186 C.R. 211, infra, §345, is distinguishable: "First, it involves a newsperson who is a party to the civil action wherein the discovery is sought. Second, as a direct consequence of the first distinction, the newsperson there relied only upon the indirect protection of the First Amendment to freedom from restraint in the news gathering process rather than the direct and specific protection from disclosure of confidential information afforded under article I, section 2 of the California Constitution." (154 C.A.3d 27.) The dictum in KSDO, that disclosure from a nonparty newsperson might be required, is unsound: "If every civil litigant who postulates that some information material to his case is contained within the undisseminated materials of a newsperson may compel that nonparty newsperson to present his information to the trial court for inspection, balancing of interests, and probable disclosure, the protection afforded newspersons would be greatly reduced, if not wholly vitiated." (154 C.A.3d 27.)

(3) "If the Legislature may overcome the general state interest in full civil discovery by enactment of specific statutory privileges limiting disclosure, it certainly has the authority to enact a statute expressly providing a similar protection against compelled disclosure of information by a newsperson. Accordingly, the force of the protection article I, section 2 affords is of no lesser import than the level of protection the Legislature confers by enactment of the privileges found in the Evidence Code." (154 C.A.3d 28.)

(d) Defendants are, however, entitled to reach and depose Kelly; and, having demonstrated unsuccessful diligent efforts to find him, they are entitled to an order compelling Playboy Enterprises to disclose his current address and telephone number. (154 C.A.3d 29.) (See 15 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 527 [newsgatherer's constitutional privilege].)

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 337

[§ 337] Nonconfidential Information.

In Delaney v. Superior Court (1990) 50 C.3d 785, 268 C.R. 753, 789 P.2d 934, the court decided the question whether the term "unpublished information" in the California newspaper's shield law (see supra, §335) includes a newspaper's nonconfidential, eyewitness observations of an occurrence in a public place.

(a) The language of Cal. Const., Art. I, §2(b) is clear and unambiguous: it refers to "any" unpublished information, regardless of whether it was obtained in confidence. (50 C.3d 798.) This interpretation is supported by the broad definition of "unpublished information," which contains no limitation to confidential information. (50 C.3d 799.) And Delaney's contention that observations are not "information" is unsound: "information" includes reception of knowledge by observation. (50 C.3d 800.)

(b) The legislative and constitutional history does not provide a basis for a contrary interpretation of the plain language. (50 C.3d 800.) Although the ballot argument repeatedly refers to confidentiality, the reasonable inference is that the proponents chose to emphasize what they perceived as the greatest need, and not to indicate that only confidential matters would be protected. (50 C.3d 802.)

(c) The issue is one of first impression for this court, but the Courts of Appeal have dealt with it in a number of cases, and the growing conflict led to a grant of review in several late cases. (50 C.3d 803.) "We disapprove of those Court of Appeal decisions that hold or suggest the shield law protects only confidential information." (50 C.3d 804.) (See 22 Pacific L. J. 1371 [Delaney]; 18 Pepperdine L. Rev. 655 [same]; 25 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 155 [same]; 60 A.L.R.5th 75 [existence of privilege as to nonconfidential news information]; on Delaney court's promulgation of balancing test to determine whether newspaper may be held in contempt for refusing to reveal unpublished information when called as witness in criminal proceeding, see infra, §347.)

XIV. NEWSPERSON'S SHIELD LAW

B. Nature and Scope of Immunity.

3. Immunity.

a. Protection From Contempt.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 338

[§ 338] Protection From Contempt.

(1) Immunity, Not Privilege. The protected person (see supra, §334) cannot be "adjudged in contempt by a judicial, legislative, administrative body, or any other body having the power to issue subpoenas, for refusing to disclose, in any proceeding as defined in Section 901, the source of his information." (Ev.C. 1070(a), (b); see 4 Pacific L. J. 387; on proceeding under Ev.C. 901, see supra, §65.)

Thus, the statute does not create a privilege to refuse to testify to the protected facts, but merely an immunity from being adjudged in contempt. Sanctions other than contempt can be imposed against a newsperson. (Mitchell v. Superior Court (1984) 37 C.3d 268, 274, 208 C.R. 152, 690 P.2d 625, infra, §346; Delaney v. Superior Court (1990) 50 C.3d 785, 797, footnote 6, 268 C.R. 753, 789 P.2d 934, supra, §337 and infra, §347; see infra, §340.)

(2) Absolute Immunity in Civil Case. In New York Times Co. v. Superior Court (1990) 51 C.3d 453, 273 C.R. 98, 796 P.2d 811, the court held that Mitchell (supra) and Delaney (supra) support the conclusion that the shield law provides an absolute, not a qualified immunity, from a contempt order in a civil case. (51 C.3d 462.)

However, the court also observed: "We do not foreclose the possibility that in a future case a civil litigant seeking discovery from a nonparty newsperson might have either a state or federal constitutional right that would have to be weighed against a claim of immunity under the shield law." (51 C.3d 462, footnote 11.) (See 18 Pepperdine L. Rev. 675.)

(3) Absolute Immunity From Demand by Prosecution in Criminal Case. In Miller v. Superior Court (1999) 21 C.4th 883, 89 C.R.2d 834, 986 P.2d 170, infra, §347, the court observed that although Delaney established that a criminal defendant's federal constitutional right to a fair trial may in some cases overcome a claim of immunity under the shield law (21 C.4th 891), the shield law affords absolute immunity from contempt where the demand for disclosure is made by the prosecution. The absoluteness of the immunity embodied in the shield law yields only to a conflicting federal constitutional right, and the prosecution's entitlement to due process in a criminal trial under Cal. Const., Art. I, §29 is not such a right. (21 C.4th 902.)

(4) Broad Scope of Immunity. Labeling the protection an immunity rather than a privilege does not indicate a legislative intent to construe it narrowly. "[W]e believe the Legislature in enacting Evidence Code section 1070 recognized the importance of maintaining a free flow of information and intended that the statute be given a broad rather than a narrow construction. Accordingly, absent any constitutional or other limitation on the exercise of the privilege ... , we believe it extends not only to the identity of the source but to the disclosure of any information, in whatever form, which may tend to reveal the source of the information, and, as in the case of the privilege against self-incrimination, the burden is upon the person claiming the privilege to show that the testimony may tend to lead to that source. Though the burden is on the person claiming the privilege, it is not a heavy one." (Rosato v. Superior Court (1975) 51 C.A.3d 190, 217, 124 C.R. 427, infra, §343; see 51 C.A.3d 216, footnote 17.)

XIV. NEWSPERSON'S SHIELD LAW

B. Nature and Scope of Immunity.

3. Immunity.

b. No Writ Review Before Contempt Judgment.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 339

[§ 339] No Writ Review Before Contempt Judgment.

In New York Times Co. v. Superior Court (1990) 51 C.3d 453, 273 C.R. 98, 796 P.2d 811, the court decided the case on the merits to avoid remanding to the trial court for entry of a contempt judgment. (51 C.3d 461.) But the opinion lays down a positive rule barring a premature petition for a writ.

(a) The shield law provides only an immunity from contempt, not a privilege; hence there is nothing from which to seek relief until a newsperson has been adjudged in contempt. (51 C.3d 458; see supra, §338.)

(b) Precontempt relief would also have undesirable practical effects. It would deprive the trial court of the opportunity to decide in the first instance whether the shield law applies; and it would also deprive the reviewing court of adequate factual records for making its determination that there was sufficient evidence to support a contempt adjudication. (51 C.3d 459.) Moreover, it would allow newsmen to avoid the responsibility of choosing between disclosing information or being held in contempt. (51 C.3d 460.)

(c) There is, however, a need to avoid unnecessary confinement of a newsmen who invokes the shield law. Hence a trial court should stay its contempt judgment to allow the newsmen sufficient time to seek writ relief if the trial court believes there is "any colorable argument the newsmen can make against the contempt adjudication." (51 C.3d 460.) And if the trial court declines to issue a stay, a reviewing court should do so pending its decision on the petition for a writ. (51 C.3d 460.)

One justice, concurring and dissenting, argued that review by writ should be available before a contempt adjudication. (51 C.3d 464 et seq.)

Later cases have applied the New York Times rule. (See People v. Sanchez (1995) 12 C.4th 1, 55, 47 C.R.2d 843, 906 P.2d 1129 [finding of prematurity in New York Times case was based on practical concern that precontempt relief would frustrate trial court's ability to determine whether immunity should apply in first instance; this reasoning does not foreclose claim of immunity in trial court by nonparty witness during cross-examination]; SCI-Sacramento v. Superior Court (1997) 54 C.A.4th 654, 663, 665, 62 C.R.2d 868 [television station was not entitled to writ review of ruling requiring it to disclose "outtakes" of videotaped interview with murder defendant, where station had not yet been found in contempt]; following New York Times and distinguishing Sanchez.)

3. Immunity.

c. Sanctions Other Than Contempt.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 340

[§ 340] Sanctions Other Than Contempt.

(1) Party to Civil Proceeding. A newsperson who is a party to a civil proceeding remains subject to all sanctions, other than contempt, that may be imposed for withholding information, including discovery sanctions and entry of judgment against the newsperson. (See Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1070; Mitchell v. Superior Court (1984) 37 C.3d 268, 274, 208 C.R. 152, 690 P.2d 625, infra, §346; Delaney v. Superior Court (1979) 89 C.A.3d 388, 153 C.R. 608]; KSDO v. Superior Court (1982) 136 C.A.3d 375, 379, 186 C.R. 211, infra, §345; *Playboy Enterprises v. (2) Nonparty to Civil Proceeding. In New York Times Co. v. Superior Court (1990) 51 C.3d 453, 273 C.R. 98, 796 P.2d 811, supra, §339, the court pointed out that the shield law does not preclude statutory sanctions other than contempt against a nonparty newsperson. C.C.P. 1992, which is the sole discovery sanction against nonparties, provides that a witness disobeying a subpoena is subject to a penalty of $ 500, plus actual damages recoverable in a civil action by the aggrieved party. The enactment of the shield law did not operate as a repeal of this section by implication in the case of disobedience by a newsperson. (51 C.3d 462, 463.) However, the monetary sanctions under C.C.P. 1992 are not large enough to make a civil action a practical remedy, and are therefore virtually ineffectual. (51 C.3d 464.) (See 18 Pepperdine L. Rev. 675.)

In Rosato v. Superior Court (1975) 51 C.A.3d 190, 124 C.R. 427, the court set forth the following limitations on the immunity:

XIV. NEWSPERSON'S SHIELD LAW

C. Limitations on Immunity.

2. Refusal To Testify.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 342

[§ 342] Refusal To Testify.

The statutory immunity does not justify refusal to testify (see supra, §338), and the claim of such a right, based on the First Amendment, was rejected in Branzburg v. Hayes (1972) 408 U.S. 665, 92 S.Ct. 2646, 33 L.Ed.2d 626. Several newsmen refused either to appear before a grand jury or to answer questions about news sources or information received in confidence. The Court examined and disposed of the constitutional and policy considerations as follows:

(a) Drying up of news sources. The newsmen asserted that to gather news it is often necessary to agree either not to identify the source of information published or to publish only part of the facts, or both, and that if a grand jury forces a newsman to reveal these confidences, the source in question and other confidential sources would be measurably deterred from furnishing publishable information. However, on the present record "we perceive no basis for holding that the public interest in law enforcement and in ensuring effective grand jury proceedings is insufficient to override the consequential, but uncertain, burden on news gathering which is said to result from insisting that reporters, like other citizens, respond to relevant questions put to them in the course of a valid grand jury investigation or criminal trial." (92 S.Ct. 2661, 33 L.Ed.2d 645.)

"The preference for anonymity of those confidential informants involved in actual criminal conduct is presumably a product of their desire to escape criminal prosecution, and this preference, while understandable, is hardly deserving of constitutional protection." (92 S.Ct. 2662, 33 L.Ed.2d 645.) As to informants not themselves engaged in criminal conduct but with information about other persons' illegal activity: "There is little before us indicating that informants whose interest in avoiding exposure is that it may threaten job security, personal safety, or peace of mind, would in fact, be in a worse position, or would think they would be, if they risked placing their trust in public officials as well as reporters. We doubt if the informer who prefers anonymity but is sincerely interested in furnishing evidence of crime will always or very often be deterred by the prospect of dealing with those public authorities characteristically charged with the duty to protect the public interest as well as his." (92 S.Ct. 2663, 33 L.Ed.2d 647.)

(b) Concealment of crime. Concealment of crime and agreements to do so are looked on with disfavor. "Such conduct deserves no encomium, and we decline now to afford it First Amendment protection by denigrating the duty of a citizen whether reporter or informer, to respond to grand jury subpoena and answer relevant questions put to him." (92 S.Ct. 2664, 33 L.Ed.2d 648.)

(c) Establishment of private system of informers. "Neither are we now convinced that a virtually impenetrable constitutional shield, beyond legislative or judicial control, should be forged to protect a private system of informers operated by the press to report on criminal conduct, a system that would be unaccountable to the public, would pose a threat to the citizen's justifiable expectations of privacy, and would equally protect well-intentioned informants and those who for pay or otherwise betray their trust to their employer or associates." (92 S.Ct. 2665, 33 L.Ed.2d 649.)

(d) Difficulty of defining "newsperson." "The administration of a constitutional newsman's privilege would present practical and conceptual difficulties of a high order. Sooner or later, it would be necessary to define those categories of newsmen who qualified for the privilege, a questionable procedure in light of the traditional doctrine that liberty of the press is the right of the lonely pamphleteer who uses carbon paper or a mimeograph just as much as of the large metropolitan publisher who utilizes the latest photocomposition methods. ... The informative function asserted by representatives of the organized press in the present cases is also performed by lecturers, political pollsters, novelists, academic researchers, and dramatists. Almost any author may quite accurately assert that he is contributing to the flow of information to the public, that he relies on confidential sources of information, and that these sources will be silenced if he is forced to make disclosures before a grand jury." (92 S.Ct. 2668, 33 L.Ed.2d 653.)

(e) No bars to state privileges. Although Congress may determine privileges on the federal level, state Legislatures are free within First Amendment limits to fashion their own standards and state courts cannot be barred by the United States Supreme Court from construing their own constitutions so as to recognize a newsperson's privilege, either qualified or absolute. (92 S.Ct. 2669, 33 L.Ed.2d 654.)

(f) Official harassment unjustified. News gathering does have First Amendment protections. "[G]rand jury investigations if instituted or conducted other than in good faith, would pose wholly different issues for resolution under the First Amendment. Official harassment of the press undertaken not for purposes of law enforcement but to disrupt a reporter's relationship with his news sources would have no justification. Grand juries are subject to judicial control and subpoenas to motions to quash. We do not expect courts will forget that grand juries must operate within the limits of the First Amendment as well as the Fifth." (92 S.Ct. 2670, 33 L.Ed.2d 655.)

Four justices dissented. (See 86 Harv. L. Rev. 137; 98 Harv. L. Rev. 1603; 10 Golden Gate L. Rev. 691 [effect of *Herbert v. ### XIV. NEWSPERSON'S SHIELD LAW

C. Limitations on Immunity.

3. Judicial Control of Court Proceedings.

a. Rule Prior to Constitutional Immunity Provision.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 343

[§ 343] Rule Prior to Constitutional Immunity Provision.

The newsperson's privilege is subject to the inherent power of the court to control its proceedings (see 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Courts, §177), and to exercise its contempt power (see 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §182). (Farr v. Superior Court (1971) 22 C.A.3d 60, 69, 99 C.R. 342; Rosato v. Superior Court (1975) 51 C.A.3d 190, 219, 124 C.R. 427.)

In the Farr case, supra, the trial judge presiding over a mass murder case prohibited all attorneys, court employees, attaches or witnesses from releasing for public dissemination the content or nature of any testimony that might be given at trial or any evidence the admissibility of which the court would have to determine. Petitioner, a newspaper reporter, obtained copies of a statement by a codefendant in which sensational details were given about the planned murder of several film celebrities. At the time he received the statement, petitioner was aware of the gag order; his sources, whom he identified only by classification, were two attorneys of record and a third person subject to the court order. After relying on Ev.C. 1070 to refuse to identify his sources by name, petitioner published material from the statement, much of which was later ruled inadmissible in evidence. At a hearing following a guilty verdict in the main case, the trial judge sought to determine whether the defendants' right to a fair trial had been jeopardized by a violation of the order restricting publicity. By this time, petitioner was no longer a newspaper reporter, having become a press secretary for the district attorney, but he refused to identify his sources beyond saying that two were attorneys of record and a third was subject to the order and possibly also an attorney of record. All six attorneys of record testified under oath, denying that they had furnished the statement to petitioner. The trial judge rejected petitioner's claims of privilege under Ev.C. 1070 and held him in direct contempt, subject to incarceration until he answered the questions. Held, the contempt judgment was valid.

Leaving open the question whether the statute covered former newsmen (22 C.A.3d 69), and pointing out that the trial judge had power to inquire into violations of the judge's order even though the case had reached the verdict stage (22 C.A.3d 66), the court declared that to construe the statute as granting immunity to petitioner would countenance an interference by the Legislature with an inherent power of the court.

"If Evidence Code section 1070 were to be applied to the matter at bench to immunize petitioner from liability, that application would violate the principle of separation of powers established by our Supreme Court. That application would severely impair the trial court's discharge of a constitutionally compelled duty to control its own officers. The trial court was enjoined by controlling precedent of the United States Supreme Court to take reasonable action to protect the defendants in the Manson case from the effects of prejudicial publicity. ... It performed its duty by issuing the order re publicity. By petitioner's own statement that order was violated by two attorneys of record, a list of six counsel in the case. Those attorneys were officers of respondent court. By petitioner's own statement the violations occurred because of his solicitation. Respondent court was both bound and empowered to explore the violations of its order by its own officers." (22 C.A.3d 70.)

In the Rosato case, supra, the court observed that despite what the Legislature enacts, the judiciary, as a separate and coequal branch of California's tripartite governmental structure, has an inherent power to control its own proceedings and officers. (51 C.A.3d 219.) But the necessity of determining which court officer has violated protective and seal orders may not totally emasculate the protection afforded to the press. "Consequently, we view the ... limitation on the otherwise absolute protection afforded by the shield law ... as being applicable only when the questions asked may tend to identify who, if anyone, among those subject to a court's order, may have violated it. The shield law still remains as a protection against the revelation of all sources other than court officers, and a reporter cannot be required to divulge information which would tend to reveal any source other than those court officers subject to the orders issued by the court." (51 C.A.3d 224.)

Implementing this balance requires a determination on a question by question basis. "To this end, within the rather narrow constrictions described above and even in the face of denials that court officers were involved, questions may continue to be asked if the answers may reveal that the source of the information was a court officer. Evidence Code section 1070 would not protect a refusal to answer this type of question. However, should a question be overbroad, i.e., it might tend to reveal that either a court official or a protected source was involved in the newsperson's obtaining of the information, the privilege under Evidence Code section 1070 would apply. Furthermore, a court is not entitled to ask questions directed toward discovering where the information did not come from (other than as they pertain to court officials) in order to narrow the field of inquiry vis-a-vis the protected sources. The court is only entitled to ask questions directed toward affirmatively determining if the information did come from court officers or attaches." (51 C.A.3d 225.)

To aid in the application of its "somewhat abstruse" articulation of the test for determining whether a question is proper, the court in Rosato included an Appendix to its opinion, setting forth each disputed question asked of the newsmen and commenting on whether the questions should have been answered. (51 C.A.3d 225, 242.) (See In re Farr (1974) 36 C.A.3d 577, 111 C.R. 649 [following Farr v. Superior Court, and denying habeas corpus relief sought by newsperson adjudged in contempt]; Hammarley v. Superior Court (1979) 89 C.A.3d 388, 400, 153 C.R. 608 [enforcement of subpoena requiring reporter to produce notes and recordings of interviews with important witness in murder prosecution was necessary to protect defendant's constitutional right to a fair trial]; 16 *Santa Clara L. ### XIV. NEWSPERSON'S SHIELD LAW

C. Limitations on Immunity.

3. Judicial Control of Court Proceedings.

b. Effect of Constitutional Immunity Provision.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 344

[§ 344] Effect of Constitutional Immunity Provision.

In re Willon (1996) 47 C.A.4th 1080, 55 C.R.2d 245, was a writ proceeding by a television news reporter and a television news director arising from a widely publicized capital murder case. The trial judge had closed some of the pretrial hearings and issued a protective order prohibiting court staff, participants, and witnesses from discussing what they observed at those proceedings. Additionally, shortly before jury selection was to begin, the judge issued an order prohibiting court officers, law enforcement officers and other public officials, and prospective witnesses from releasing any evidence that had not yet been ruled admissible, "as well as any comments about the evidence gathered, testimony already heard or expected, and the identity of prospective witnesses." (47 C.A.4th 1085.) On the first day of jury selection, petitioners revealed the following information during their evening news broadcast: (a) that defendant's confession would be used at trial; (b) details of the confession; (c) that there were no witnesses to two stops made by defendant after he kidnapped the murder victim; (d) that, during his confession, defendant was not asked whether he had sexually assaulted the victim; and (e) that the victim's body, when found, was so badly decomposed that it could not be ascertained whether she had been sexually assaulted. Finding that this information was encompassed within the protective order, the trial judge asked petitioners to reveal the source of their information. When they would not, the judge found them to be in direct contempt and ordered them imprisoned until they agreed to answer his questions. Held, judgments of contempt annulled; under the circumstances, the newperson's shield law protected petitioners from contempt.

(a) The trial judge's justification for the contempt orders was the need to protect defendant's fair trial right by preventing further prejudicial pretrial publicity. Similar steps were taken in two previous California cases: Farr v. Superior Court (1971) 22 C.A.3d 60, 99 C.R. 342, supra, §343, and Rosato v. Superior Court (1975) 51 C.A.3d 190, 124 C.R. 427, supra, §343. In each of those cases, the court relied on its duty to control court processes in order to protect a criminal defendant's rights. Both Farr and Rosato, however, were decided at a time when the shield law privilege resided only in the Evidence Code. Since that time, the voters have elevated the privilege to constitutional status. It can no longer be assumed that a source's violation of protective orders is, by itself, a sufficient basis to compel disclosure of protected information. Rather, a precise standard is needed for determining whether disclosure is necessary to avert an actual threat to the defendant's right to a fair trial. (47 C.A.4th 1096, 1097.)

(b) The appropriate standard is the "substantial probability" test. This test--already used to review judicial restrictions on public access to criminal proceedings--will protect the defendant's fair trial rights while recognizing the importance of the immunity conferred by Cal. Const., Art. I, §2(b). "Accordingly, where a violation of a protective or

'gag' order has already occurred, a court should determine the necessity of disclosure of the newsperson's source by addressing two principal considerations in light of all the relevant circumstances: (1) If the newsperson does not disclose the identity of the source, is there a substantial probability of future violations, or 'leaks,' that will impair the defendant's ability to obtain a fair trial? and (2) Are there reasonable alternatives to disclosure that will protect the interests asserted by both the newsperson and the defendant?" (47 C.A.4th 1099.)

(c) In the present case, there is no need to proceed to the second step of the inquiry, as all of the information at issue was already in the public domain, was of minimal significance, or was remediable by effective voir dire. "Thus, even assuming that petitioners obtained information for the newscasts from their source, we see no substantial or even reasonable probability that the source's violation would have influenced the entire jury pool. Since the record does not indicate that there is additional evidence that the court sought to withhold from the public pending jury selection, we have no basis for finding a substantial likelihood of any future violations of the protective order that would create impermissible juror bias." (47 C.A.4th 1102.)

One judge concurred in the judgment, stating that, in view of the unique facts likely to be involved in any similar cases, it was a mistake to attempt to create a "bright line test" for future application. (47 C.A.4th 1102, 1103.)

C.C.P. 1986.1, added in 2000, clarifies the rights of journalists under Cal. Const., Art. I, §2(b), as follows:

(1) No testimony or other evidence given by a journalist under subpoena in a civil or criminal proceeding is to be construed as a waiver of the constitutional immunity. (C.C.P. 1986.1(a).)

(2) "Because important constitutional rights of a third-party witness are adjudicated" when rights under the constitutional immunity provision are asserted, a journalist who is subpoenaed in a criminal or civil proceeding must, except in exigent circumstances, be given at least 5 days' notice that his or her appearance will be required. (C.C.P. 1986.1(b).)

(3) If, in a criminal proceeding, a journalist is held in contempt despite the constitutional immunity provision, the judge must set forth findings, in writing or on the record, stating why the information will be of material assistance to the party seeking the evidence, and why alternate sources of information are not sufficient to satisfy the defendant's fair trial right. ### XIV. NEWSPERSON'S SHIELD LAW

D. Constitutional Qualified Privilege.

1. First Amendment Basis.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 345

[§ 345] First Amendment Basis.

In KSDO v. Superior Court (1982) 136 C.A.3d 375, 186 C.R. 211, defendant Clark, county sheriff, initiated an investigation of the city police department, and published a report that plaintiff police officers were involved in drug trafficking. Defendant KSDO radio and news reporter Brown then broadcast a report of the investigation, and defendant newspaper published the report. Plaintiffs sued for libel and violation of civil rights, and took Brown's deposition. Brown revealed the sources of his information leading to the broadcast, and plaintiffs then sought production of Brown's notes and memoranda of conversations between Brown and certain named persons. Defendants opposed the motion on the ground that the notes and memoranda were privileged under Ev.C. 1070, Cal. Const., Art. I, §2, and the federal Constitution (First Amendment). The trial judge granted the motion. Held, mandamus issued to compel annulling of the order.

(a) No privilege under California shield law. "It does not create a privilege for newspeople, rather it provides an immunity from being adjudged in contempt. This rather basic distinction has been misstated and apparently misunderstood by members of the news media and our courts as well." (136 C.A.3d 379, reviewing the history of the legislation and quoting from the California Law Revision Commission Report and the Assembly Committee on Judiciary.) The constitutional amendment of 1980 (Proposition 5, amending Cal. Const., Art. I, §2) used the exact language of Ev.C. 1070. (136 C.A.3d 381.) The Constitution, therefore, did not provide a sweeping privilege against disclosure, but only an immunity from contempt. "Thus, although a judge cannot find a reporter in contempt for concealing sources he may strike whatever defenses the reporter might have offered in a libel action or even award a plaintiff a default judgment. The reporter cannot look to Section 1070 to bail him out of his trouble. All the statute grants is immunity from contempt. It is not a privilege such as is provided in the other 13 states with newsmen statutes." (136 C.A.3d 383, quoting 11 Santa Clara Lawyer 56, 58.)

(b) Privilege under First Amendment.

(1) It is generally agreed that unless there is a constitutionally protected right to gather news, the free flow of information to the public (the underlying reason for the free press guarantee) would be inhibited. However, as pointed out in Branzburg v. Hayes (1972) 408 U.S. 665, 92 S.Ct. 2646, 33 L.Ed.2d 626, supra, §342, and other cases, the claim of privilege should be determined by striking a proper balance between freedom of the press and the obligation of all citizens to give relevant testimony with respect to criminal conduct. These cases support "a qualified newsmen's privilege to safeguard confidential sources and materials where the privilege furthers the First Amendment interest of the free flow of information." (136 C.A.3d 385.) But in criminal cases the public interest in law enforcement creates a substantial public need for disclosure. (136 C.A.3d 385.)

(2) In civil cases where the public interest in requiring disclosure is less compelling, stronger First Amendment protection would apply. However, if there is probable cause to believe relevant or material evidence is in the possession of a newsperson witness, and there are no alternative sources for getting the information, and there is a compelling need that would otherwise allow a miscarriage of justice to result, the newsperson may be compelled to testify. (136 C.A.3d 385.)

(3) In libel suits such as this one, in which a newsperson is a party and may have vital information directly related to the plaintiff's claim, the courts have applied the "heart of the claim" test: "The truth or falsity of the material published is the essential issue in a libel case and therefore production of the reporter's notes for identification of his source can be essential to the plaintiff's successful prosecution. The reliability of the source or the accuracy of the notes is clearly called into focus. Where the plaintiff is a public figure, the need is especially great for the plaintiff there has to prove actual malice." (136 C.A.3d 386.)

(4) In the present case, the scales would normally be tipped in favor of required disclosure, but plaintiffs failed to show that the information they sought was unavailable from any other source or that the materials desired actually go to the heart of the claim. Brown revealed his sources, plaintiffs are free to test their reliability from such sources, and there was no showing that Brown's notes were necessary for that purpose. Hence, the First Amendment qualified privilege protects Brown and KSDO from having to reveal Brown's notes. (136 C.A.3d 386.)

XIV. NEWSPERSON'S SHIELD LAW

D. Constitutional Qualified Privilege.

2. Balancing Test for Civil Cases.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 346

[§ 346] Balancing Test for Civil Cases.

In Mitchell v. Superior Court (1984) 37 C.3d 268, 208 C.R. 152, 690 P.2d 625, plaintiff Synanon Church and Charles Dederich brought a libel action against Reader's Digest, David and Cathy Mitchell, David MacDonald, and Richard Ofshe. The Digest article containing alleged defamatory statements was written by staff writer MacDonald, and revealed as its sources the Mitchell newspaper account, Ofshe's research papers and conversations with Ofshe. Plaintiffs sought discovery from the Mitchells of all documents referring to Synanon or Dederich in the possession or control of defendants prior to publication of the article, in order to prove that the Mitchells selectively relied on some documentary evidence and ignored other evidence more favorable to Synanon. The Mitchells objected on the ground of constitutional freedom of the press, but the trial judge ordered production of the documents. Held, prohibition granted to prevent enforcement of the order to the extent that it required production of documents revealing confidential sources or information furnished by such sources.

(a) Existence of qualified privilege in civil case.

(1) California, by statute and constitutional provision, prohibits contempt proceedings against a newsperson for refusing to disclose the source of his or her information. "Since contempt is generally the only effective remedy against a nonparty witness, the California enactments grant such witnesses virtually absolute protection against compelled disclosure." (37 C.3d 274.) A party to civil litigation may, however, be subject to a variety of other sanctions, including entry of judgment against him or her. (37 C.3d 274; see supra, §340.)

(2) The Mitchells, as defendants in the Synanon suit, seek to avoid these other sanctions by asserting a privilege under the federal and state constitutional free press guarantees. A number of decisions have discussed the considerations favoring the newsperson's privilege and those favoring disclosure: "When called upon to weigh the fundamental values arguing both for and against compelled disclosure, the overwhelming majority of courts have concluded that the question of a reporter's privilege in civil cases must be decided on a case-by-case basis, with the trial court examining and balancing the asserted interests in light of the facts of the case before it. Thus, the courts conclude, there is neither an absolute duty to disclose nor an absolute privilege to withhold, but instead a qualified privilege against compelled disclosure which depends on the facts of each particular case." (37 C.3d 276.) KSDO v. Superior Court (1982) 136 C.A.3d 375, 186 C.R. 211 (supra, §345), came to the same conclusion.

(3) The courts properly distinguish civil and criminal cases: both the state's interest in law enforcement and the interest of the defendant in discovering exonerating evidence outweigh an interest asserted in ordinary civil litigation. (37 C.3d 278.)

(4) Synanon contends that the trial judge's power to issue protective orders against abuse of discovery makes recognition of a qualified reporter's privilege unnecessary. But discovery of confidential sources is not ordinary discovery, and judicial concern is not limited to cases of harassment or abusive tactics; even a narrowly drawn request "may impinge upon First Amendment considerations." (37 C.3d 279.)

(5) "We conclude that in a civil action a reporter, editor, or publisher has a qualified privilege to withhold disclosure of the identity of confidential sources and of unpublished information supplied by such sources." (37 C.3d 279.)

(b) Balancing test for civil cases. The scope of the privilege in each case will depend on weighing of a number of interrelated factors:

(1) Nature of the litigation and whether the reporter is a party: Disclosure is ordinarily appropriate in civil cases where the reporter is a party; where the reporter is a nonparty, the newsperson's shield law makes it impracticable to enforce disclosure even when other considerations argue in favor of it. "Thus the present case, a libel suit in which discovery is sought from a party defendant, is of the type suitable for requiring disclosure, depending upon the balancing of other relevant considerations." (37 C.3d 280.)

(2) The relevance of the information sought:

(a) "The majority view, which we adopt, is that mere relevance is insufficient to compel discovery; disclosure should be denied unless the information goes 'to the heart of the plaintiff's claim.' " (37 C.3d 280, quoting federal case.)

(b) The dispute here centers on the liability of a reporter who furnishes defamatory material but does not control the content of the ultimate publication. Under the law, an original defamer is liable for republication if the repetition was authorized or intended or was reasonably to be expected. (37 C.3d 281, citing Rest.2d, Torts §576; see 5 Summary (9th), Torts, §478.) Plaintiffs are suing for defamation in Reader's Digest, not for statements of the Mitchells, but the test is foreseeability, not exact reproduction: "If plaintiffs can show a sufficient causal link between the Mitchells and the Reader's Digest article, they can come within the rationale of the republication rule. The Mitchells would then be responsible for language in the article based on information furnished by them to the Reader's Digest." (37 C.3d 282.)

(c) Discovery of the Mitchells' sources and information derived therefrom may be essential to proving actual malice and thus goes to "the heart" of plaintiffs' claim. But plaintiffs sought much broader discovery: the Digest article contains many other statements critical of plaintiffs, and knowledge of such statements, while arguably relevant to the suit, "is not sufficiently essential to justify overriding the reporter's privilege." (37 C.3d 282.)

(3) Exhaustion of alternative sources of obtaining the information: Virtually all cases agree that compulsory disclosure of sources is a "last resort," permissible only when the party seeking disclosure has no other practical means of obtaining the information. (37 C.3d 282.) Here, plaintiffs made no showing of exhaustion of alternative sources, e.g., Ofshe and other persons mentioned in the article. "There may well be an irreducible core of information which cannot be discovered except through the Mitchells, but plaintiffs have not yet reduced their discovery to that core." (37 C.3d 282.)

(4) The importance of protecting confidentiality: "The investigation and revelation of hidden criminal or unethical conduct is one of the most important roles of the press in a free society--a role that may depend upon the ability of the press and the courts to protect sources who may justifiably fear exposure and possible retaliation. Thus when the information relates to matters of great public importance, and when the risk of harm to the source is a substantial one, the court may refuse to require disclosure even though the plaintiff has no other way of obtaining essential information." (37 C.3d 283.)

(5) A prima facie showing that alleged defamatory statements are false: To grant motions for compulsory disclosure without first inquiring into the substance of a libel allegation would emasculate the fundamental principles of

New York Times Co. v. Sullivan (1964) 376 U.S. 254, 84 S.Ct. 710, 11 L.Ed.2d 686 (see 5 Summary (9th), Torts, §534 et seq.; 7 Summary (9th), Constitutional Law, §302 et seq.). This requirement is closely related to the previous one: "There is a great public interest in the truthful revelation of wrongdoing, and in protecting the 'whistleblower' from retaliation; there is very little public interest in protecting the source of false accusations of wrongdoing. A showing of falsity is not a prerequisite to discovery, but it may be essential to tip the balance in favor of discovery." (37 C.3d 283.) Plaintiffs have not attempted to make such a prima facie showing. (37 C.3d 283.)

The court concludes that "the generality of plaintiffs' requests, the absence of a showing that alternative sources had been exhausted, and the absence of a prima facie showing of falsity strike the balance against discovery of the scope envisioned in the ruling below." (37 C.3d 284.) However, plaintiffs may file a new motion based upon a showing sufficient to overcome the qualified privilege. (37 C.3d 284, footnote 11.) Superior Court* (1998) 67 C.A.4th 1072, 1083, 79 C.R.2d 597 [in-depth discussion and application of Mitchell factors and qualified privilege in invasion of privacy case brought against multiple journalists]; *Rancho Publications v. ## XIV. NEWSPERSON'S SHIELD LAW

D. Constitutional Qualified Privilege.

3. Balancing Test for Criminal Cases.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 347

[§ 347] Balancing Test for Criminal Cases.

(1) Demand for Disclosure Made by Defendant. In Delaney v. Superior Court (1990) 50 C.3d 785, 268 C.R. 753, 789 P.2d 934, supra, §337, police officers of a task force on patrol observed Delaney seated on a bench with a plastic bag protruding from his shirt pocket. Suspecting that it contained narcotics, the officers inquired about its contents and also asked permission to check his jacket for weapons. Delaney allegedly consented to the search, and the officers seized a set of brass knuckles. Delaney was charged with the misdemeanor of possession of these weapons. He moved to suppress the evidence on the ground that he had not consented to the search of his jacket. The Los Angeles Times had published an article about the police task force, based upon the observations of two reporters who had accompanied the officers. At the suppression hearing, the prosecutor called the reporters to testify to the legality of the seizure, and their testimony established that each had been in a position to observe whether Delaney had consented to the search. But they refused to answer any questions relating to whether he had consented. Held, the need for the reporters' testimony outweighed their claim of immunity.

(a) Delaney's constitutional rights. "The incorporation of the shield law into the California Constitution cannot restrict a criminal defendant's federal constitutional right to a fair trial." (50 C.3d 805.) Thus it is necessary to determine the nature of the defendant's showing, and the proper test for accommodating the conflicting rights. (50 C.3d 806, 807.) The balancing test for civil cases set forth in Mitchell v. Superior Court (1984) 37 C.3d 268, 208 C.R. 152, 690 P.2d 625, supra, §346, is not entirely appropriate for a criminal case, which calls for consideration of different factors. (50 C.3d 807.)

(b) Threshold showing for balancing test.

(1) The reporters argued that Delaney must show that their testimony would go to the "heart of his case." (50 C.3d 808.) This is unsound; to overcome a prima facie showing by a newsperson that he or she is entitled to withhold information, the defendant need only show "a reasonable possibility the information will materially assist his defense." (50 C.3d 808.) "It would be impractical to require a trial court to attempt to divine whether the evidence sought would cause a jury to exonerate the defendant." (50 C.3d 808.)

(2) "To provide guidance to the trial courts, we believe it helpful to make clear how the threshold requirement must be applied in practice. First, the burden is on the criminal defendant to make the required showing. ... Second, the defendant's showing need not be detailed or specific, but it must rest on more than mere speculation. Third, the defendant need not show a reasonable possibility the information will lead to his exoneration. He need show only a reasonable possibility the information will materially assist his defense. ... [E]vidence may establish an 'imperfect defense,' a lesser included offense, a lesser related offense, or a lesser degree of the same crime; impeach the credibility of a prosecution witness; or, as in capital cases, establish mitigating circumstances relevant to the penalty determination." (50 C.3d 809.)

(c) Balancing test factors.

(1) Whether the unpublished information is confidential or sensitive: If the information is not confidential, the court should consider whether it is nevertheless sensitive, i.e., whether its disclosure would somehow unduly restrict the newsmen's access to future sources and information. (50 C.3d 810.)

(2) The interests sought to be protected by the shield law: If, as in this case, the criminal defendant seeking disclosure is the source of the information, it cannot be seriously argued that the source (defendant) will feel that his or her confidence has been breached. (50 C.3d 810.) And other circumstances may mitigate or eliminate the adverse consequences of disclosure. (50 C.3d 811.)

(3) The importance of the information to the criminal defendant: If the defendant shows that the evidence goes to "the heart" of his or her case, the balance will weigh more heavily in favor of disclosure than if the defendant simply met the threshold requirement. (50 C.3d 811.)

(4) Whether there is an alternative source for the unpublished information: In Mitchell, supra, the court stated that discovery should be denied unless the party seeking it has exhausted all alternative sources of obtaining the needed information. But the situation in this case is different from that in Mitchell: "Two witnesses to an act may--indeed, likely do--see it differently, and even though their perceptions are substantially the same, their recollection of the event may differ. Moreover, even if their testimony is substantively similar, one witness may have more credibility with a jury. Likewise, two witnesses may convince the jury of a fact where one witness by himself would not do so." (50 C.3d 812.)

"For all the foregoing reasons, we conclude that a universal and inflexible alternative-source requirement is inappropriate in a criminal proceeding. In considering whether the requirement is appropriate in a given case, the trial court should consider the type of information being sought (e.g., names of potential witnesses, documents, a reporter's eyewitness observations), the quality of the alternative source, and the practicality of obtaining the information from the alternative source. The trial court must also consider the other balancing factors set forth above: whether the information is confidential or sensitive, the interests sought to be protected by the shield law, and the importance of the information to the criminal defendant. In short, whether an alternative-source requirement applies will depend on the facts of each case." (50 C.3d 813; see footnote 29, disapproving of contrary suggestions in Hammarley v. Superior Court (1979) 89 C.A.3d 388, 153 C.R. 608, and Hallissy v. Superior Court (1988) 200 C.A.3d 1038, 248 C.R. 635.)

The relative importance of the factors will vary from case to case, and "[w]e decline to hold in the abstract that any factor or combination of factors must be determinative." (50 C.3d 813.)

(d) Application of balancing test in this case.

(1) Delaney met and surpassed the threshold showing. "It is an understatement to say, in the words of the test we adopt, that there is a reasonable possibility the reporters' testimony will assist Delaney in his defense. There is a substantial certainty that the reporters' testimony will materially affect the outcome of the criminal proceeding." (50 C.3d 814.)

(2) The balance weighs overwhelmingly in favor of requiring the reporters to testify. (a) The information was not confidential or sensitive. (b) The testimony would not impinge on the interests sought to be protected. (c) The importance of the information is obvious. (d) There was no meaningful alternative source: the only disinterested witnesses were the reporters. (50 C.3d 815.) (See 22 Pacific L. J. 1371 [Delaney]; 18 Pepperdine L. Rev. 655 [same]; 25 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 155 [same].)

One justice filed a lengthy concurring opinion disagreeing with the balancing test, and arguing that if invocation of the constitutional immunity deprives the defendant of information necessary to exercise his or her constitutional rights, the defendant is entitled to the information. (50 C.3d 817.)

Another justice, also concurring, disagreed with the "plain language" holding, arguing that the entire legislative history should be considered, and that the history supported the majority's conclusion. (50 C.3d 822.)

In People v. Cooper (1991) 53 C.3d 771, 281 C.R. 90, 809 P.2d 865, the trial judge in a capital murder prosecution granted a newspaper editor's motion to quash a subpoena duces tecum compelling production of an anonymous letter to the newspaper and the envelope it was mailed in, on the ground that they were protected by the California newsperson's shield law. The letter, written on sheriff's department stationery, criticized the murder investigation. A defense investigator had discovered the existence of the letter, which apparently was unpublished, during a telephone conversation with a reporter for the newspaper. Held, the motion was properly granted.

(a) "The discovery related merely to an anonymous letter to the editor on a subject about which the defense had full discovery. Even the author of the letter was satisfied that the police had correctly solved the crime. The defense investigator questioned everyone who might have written the letter (assuming it was genuine), and learned nothing." (53 C.3d 820.)

(b) "More significantly, the defense had full opportunity to examine under oath all relevant witnesses. The competency of the investigation, which was only tangentially related to the issue of guilt, was exhaustively explored. The denial of the discovery, even if error, could not have prejudiced defendant." (53 C.3d 820.) (See People v. Von Villas (1992) 10 C.A.4th 201, 232, 13 C.R.2d 62 [unpublished information acquired by writer before he entered into publication contract came within protection of shield law]; People v. Sanchez (1995) 12 C.4th 1, 56, 57, 47 C.R.2d 843, 906 P.2d 1129 [in murder trial, scope of reporter's testimony was properly limited to information he published concerning interviews with defendant; defendant failed to make threshold showing, required by Delaney, supra, that it was reasonably possible his unpublished statements were necessary to his defense].)

(2) Distinction: Demand for Disclosure Made by Prosecution. In Miller v. Superior Court (1999) 21 C.4th 883, 89 C.R.2d 834, 986 P.2d 170, the trial judge ordered a television news director to comply with a prosecution-requested order to produce unpublished parts of a videotaped interview conducted by the television station with a defendant charged with murder, and adjudged the director in contempt for failing to do so. Held, reversed; a newsperson's constitutional immunity under the shield law does not yield to the prosecution's constitutional right to due process in a criminal trial guaranteed under Cal. Const., Art. I, §29.

(a) As separate provisions of the state constitution, the shield law and Cal. Const., Art. I, §29 have equal dignity and thus must be harmonized, if possible; or, if there is a conflict, then the conflict must be resolved in some manner. However, the two constitutional provisions are not in conflict. The relationship between a prosecutorial right to obtain relevant evidence and the various evidentiary privileges and immunities of the press was not addressed in Proposition 115, of which Cal. Const., Art. I, §29 was a part. The closely related subject of the relationship between the right to admit relevant evidence and those evidentiary privileges and immunities was treated in an earlier initiative, Proposition 8, of which Cal. Const., Art. I, §28(d), the Truth-in-Evidence provision, was a part. That provision expressly exempted the shield law, as a preexisting constitutional right of the press. Implicit in the conclusion that the prosecution's right to truth in evidence did not affect the preexisting shield law was a determination that the shield law did not deny due process. Similarly, the prosecution's right to due process of law in Cal. Const., Art. I, §29 does not mean a right of access to evidence in contravention of previously existing evidentiary privileges and immunities, which include those given to the press. (21 C.4th 892.)

confidential or not. (21 C.4th 897.) We may not "convert an absolute into a qualified immunity merely because it is in accord with a particular conception of the proper balance between journalists' rights and prosecutor's prerogatives. Thus, the absoluteness of the immunity embodied in the shield law only yields to a conflicting federal or, perhaps, state constitutional right. As explained, there is no such conflicting right presented in this case." (21 C.4th 901.)

Ramos* (2004) 34 C.4th 494, 527, 21 C.R.3d 575, 101 P.3d 478 [in capital murder case in which reporter who had interviewed defendant in jail was called by prosecution, trial judge did not err in denying defendant's request to require reporter to produce his interview notes; threshold showing under Delaney was not made, as defendant did not attempt to show that notes revealed anything different from reporter's testimony]; People v. Vasco (2005) 131 C.A.4th 137, 155, 31 C.R.3d 643 [in murder prosecution, defendant's request to cross-examine reporter on unpublished information resulting from interview with defendant in jail was properly denied; defendant never claimed that reporter's account of interview was untruthful or inaccurate, and she failed to explain how additional information would have assisted her defense or differed from other mitigating evidence presented at trial; relying on Ramos and People v. Sanchez (1995) 12 C.4th 1, 47 C.R.2d 843, 906 P.2d 1129, text, p. 637]; C.C.P. 1986.1(c) (required findings where journalist is held in contempt in criminal proceeding), Supp., supra, §344.(2) Distinction: Demand for Disclosure Made by Prosecution. In Fost v. Superior Court (2000) 80 C.A.4th 724, 95 C.R.2d 620, a murder prosecution, defendant subpoenaed a journalist who had written news articles quoting a principal eyewitness in the case. The journalist testified for the defense about the published information and general journalistic practices. When, on cross-examination, the prosecution attempted to question him about the circumstances of his interviews with the eyewitness, in order to cast doubt on the accuracy of the statements attributed to her, he declined to answer on the basis of the shield law. The trial judge ordered him to answer, and, when he did not, adjudged him in contempt. Held, the contempt order was improper.

(a) Comparison with situation presented in Miller case. Miller v. Superior Court (1999) 21 C.4th 883, 89 C.R.2d 834, 986 P.2d 170, text, p. 637, determined that the prosecution does not have a due process right to evidence that may, in some circumstances, supersede the reporter's privilege under the shield law. The present case differs from Miller, however, because here the person from whom the unpublished information is sought was subpoenaed by defendant, not the prosecution, and the prosecution sought disclosure in the course of cross-examination designed to test the credibility of the journalist's testimony in defendant's favor. Thus, the prosecution is asserting that the right in question is defendant's confrontation right, which includes meaningful cross-examination, and the question is whether the prosecution can compel him to choose between asserting that right and showing that it transcends that of the journalist under the shield law, or forgoing the benefit of the journalist's testimony in his favor. (80 C.A.4th 732.)

(b) Rule where cross-examination right involved. "We hold that where, in a criminal trial, a defense witness protected under the shield law resists proper cross-examination on the basis of that law, the testimony of that witness on direct examination, though it did not consist of unpublished information protected by the shield law, may on an appropriate motion by the People be barred or stricken." (80 C.A.4th 732.) However, where the defendant can show that nondisclosure of the unpublished information would result in excluding direct testimony that would materially assist the defense, the defendant should be able to vindicate his federal constitutional right to a fair trial by making showings analogous to those required by Delaney v. Superior Court (1990) 50 C.3d 785, 268 C.R. 753, 789 P.2d 934, text, p. 634. "Such showings would oblige the court to compel the disclosure sought from a defense witness by the People, which would permit the defendant to present the favorable testimony of the witness that would otherwise have to be excluded." (80 C.A.4th 737.)

(c) Application to present case. Here, because there was never any judicial determination that, on balance, defendant's federal constitutional right superseded the journalist's state constitutional right, the contempt power could not properly be used to compel the journalist to disclose the unpublished information sought by the prosecution. "The situation was complicated by the fact that, inexplicably, the People failed to move to strike the testimony petitioner gave on direct examination as to [the eyewitness] after he refused to respond to cross-examination relating to her. Defendant, who received the testimony he wanted, therefore had no reason to show that his federal constitutional right to a fair trial transcended petitioner's right under the shield law; nor was petitioner provided any reason or opportunity to show the opposite." (80 C.A.4th 739.) (See People v. Vasco, supra, 131 C.A.4th 159 [discussing reverse situation, where defendant, rather than prosecutor, moves to exclude or strike reporter's testimony when reporter refuses to answer defendant's cross-examination questions, but declining to resolve question, as any conceivable error was harmless beyond reasonable doubt].)

XIV. NEWSPERSON'S SHIELD LAW
E. In Camera Review.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 348

[§ 348] In Camera Review.

(1) Requirement in Criminal Case. Although an in camera hearing is not required in every case, when a criminal defendant seeks confidential or sensitive information, the need for such a hearing is obvious. However, the trial judge has discretion to determine whether the claim of confidentiality or sensitivity is colorable; if the judge decides that it is, the judge must then receive the newsperson's testimony in camera. (Delaney v. Superior Court (1990) 50 C.3d 785, 814, 268 C.R. 753, 789 P.2d 934, supra, §§337, 347.)

(2) Effect of Submission of Material for In Camera Review. Where a party voluntarily submits for in camera review material assertedly protected by the shield law and expressly states that it does so without prejudice to its right, in case of an adverse ruling, to refuse to disclose the material and risk a judgment of contempt, there is no waiver of the law's protection. (SCI-Sacramento v. Superior Court (1997) 54 C.A.4th 654, 661, 662, 62 C.R.2d 868 [no waiver by television station as to "outtakes" from videotaped interview with murder defendant, even though station raised no objection to presence of defendant and his counsel during in camera review].)

XV. VOTER'S PRIVILEGE

A. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 349

[§ 349] In General.

Cal. Const., Art. II, §7 requires that "voting shall be secret." This is the basis for the privilege of a voter to refuse to disclose his or her vote, codified in Ev.C. 1050: "If he claims the privilege, a person has a privilege to refuse to disclose the tenor of his vote at a public election where the voting is by secret ballot." (See Unif. Rule 506 [similar]; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2214; C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Discovery §§4.110, 4.111.)

Two exceptions are stated in Ev.C. 1050:

(1) Where the voter voted illegally.

(2) Where the voter "previously made an unprivileged disclosure of the tenor of his vote."

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XVI. TRADE SECRET PRIVILEGE

A. Nature and Purpose.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 350

[§ 350] Nature and Purpose.

(1) In General. Ev.C. 1060 states a privilege not contained in California's former statutes, but generally recognized by case law: "[T]he owner of a trade secret has a privilege to refuse to disclose the secret, and to prevent another from disclosing it." (See Unif. Rule 507 [similar]; C.C.P. 2025(i) [protective order in discovery proceeding; see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §59 et seq.].) "This privilege is granted so that secret information essential to the continued operation of a business or industry may be afforded some measure of protection against unnecessary disclosure. Thus, the privilege prevents the use of the witness' duty to testify as the means for injuring an otherwise profitable business where more important interests will not be jeopardized." (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1060.) (See generally 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2212; C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Discovery §4.112 et seq.; 64 Harv. L. Rev. 337; 74 Harv. L. Rev. 1015; 17 A.L.R.2d 383; 62 A.L.R.2d 509 [in camera hearing or other procedure to safeguard against undue disclosure]; 14 Am.Jur. Trials 78, 89; for a full discussion of trade secrets, see 11 Summary (9th), Equity, §103 et seq.)

What constitutes a trade secret is a question of law, not of fact; on appeal, the reviewing court is not bound by the trial court's determination. (See Uribe v. Howie (1971) 19 C.A.3d 194, 207, 96 C.R. 493 [in holding that materials in pest control spray reports were not trade secrets, court relied on Govt.C. 6254.7(d), defining "trade secrets" for limited purpose of excluding certain air pollution control data from scope of "public records" under California Public Records Act, supra, §280 et seq.]; 27 A.L.R.4th 773.)

(2) Limitation. Ev.C. 1060 qualifies the privilege: It may be claimed if its allowance "will not tend to conceal fraud or otherwise work injustice." This vague limitation leaves a wide area of discretion to the court, but clearly disclosure may be necessary in cases involving the issue of unfair competition or use of dangerous materials. (Law Rev. Com. Comment to Ev.C. 1060; see Unif. Rules, Rule 507 [same]; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2212; Bridgestone/Firestone v. Superior Court (1992) 7 C.A.4th 1384, 1391, 9 C.R.2d 709, infra, §351; *State Farm Fire & Cas. Co. v. (3) Waiver. The privilege may be waived. (See Stadish v. Superior Court (1999) 71 C.A.4th 1130, 1140, 1144, 84 C.R.2d 350, infra, §352 [under former C.C.P. 2031(k) (now C.C.P. 2031(l)); see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §134], defendant waived privilege by failing to assert it in response to plaintiffs' requests for production of documents, but did not waive right to seek protective order (see infra, §352) restricting documents' dissemination].)

(3) Waiver. C.C.P. 2031(l) (failure to serve timely response to inspection demand) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2031.300 in 2004 without substantive change.

(4) (New) Effect of Refusal To Waive. See Steiny & Co. v. California Elec. Supply Co. (2000) 79 C.A.4th 285, 292, 93 C.R.2d 920 [where contractor sought indemnity from subcontractor for damages contractor was required to pay aircraft company, and contractor invoked trade secrets privilege, preventing subcontractor from examining basis of contractor's damages claim, contractor's damage evidence was properly excluded; when privileged information goes to heart of claim, fundamental fairness requires that it be disclosed for litigation to proceed]. West's Key Number Digest, Records k.59

XVI. TRADE SECRET PRIVILEGE

B. Procedure.

1. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 351

[§ 351] In General.

Ev.C. 1061 et seq. set forth the procedure for (1) asserting the privilege in a criminal proceeding (Ev.C. 1061, infra, §352); (2) excluding the public from criminal proceedings in which trade secrets might be disclosed (Ev.C. 1062, infra, §353); and (3) making requests to seal articles containing trade secrets (Ev.C. 1063, infra, §354). (See 22 Pacific L. J. 579.)

In Bridgestone/Firestone v. Superior Court (1992) 7 C.A.4th 1384, 9 C.R.2d 709, plaintiffs brought a wrongful death action against Bridgestone/Firestone, alleging that decedent was killed in an automobile accident caused by failure of a Firestone tire on the car she was driving. Plaintiffs served defendant with interrogatories seeking manufacturing specifications for the tire. The trial court found that the specifications, which correlate with formulas, constituted a trade secret, but ordered disclosure subject to a protective order. Held, mandamus issued to compel setting aside the order directing the company to disclose the secret formulas.

(a) The Law Revision Commission Comment on Ev.C. 1060 states that "the privilege exists under this section only if its application will not tend to conceal fraud or otherwise work injustice." (7 C.A.4th 1390; see supra, §350.) And allowance of the privilege may not be deemed to "work injustice" simply because it would protect information generally relevant to the subject matter or helpful in preparation of a case. The requesting party must make a clear showing that the documents are relevant to the issues involved in the litigation. (7 C.A.4th 1391.)

(b) "We therefore hold that the party claiming the privilege has the burden of establishing its existence. ... Thereafter, the party seeking discovery must make a prima facie, particularized showing that the information sought is relevant and necessary to the proof of, or defense against, a material element of one or more causes of action presented in the case, and that it is reasonable to conclude that the information sought is essential to a fair resolution of the lawsuit. It is then up to the holder of the privilege to demonstrate any claimed disadvantages of a protective order. Either party may propose or oppose less intrusive alternatives to disclosure of the trade secret, but the burden is upon the trade secret claimant to demonstrate that an alternative to disclosure will not be unduly burdensome to the opposing side and that it will maintain the same fair balance in the litigation that would have been achieved by disclosure." (7 C.A.4th 1393.)

(c) Here the declarations of the parties' experts establish that the formulas would be helpful in the analysis of the case and to the ability of plaintiffs' expert to render opinions. But nothing in the record demonstrates the necessity of the formula information to plaintiffs' ability to carry their burden of proof; hence they failed to make the necessary prima facie showing of need. (7 C.A.4th 1397.) (See Raymond Handling Concepts Corp. v. Superior Court (1995) 39 C.A.4th 584, 590, 45 C.R.2d 885, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §136 [approving protective order allowing disclosure of trade secret information to counsel for litigants in similar pending cases].)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XVI. TRADE SECRET PRIVILEGE

B. Procedure.

2. Protective Order.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 352

[§ 352] Protective Order.

(1) In General. Ev.C. 1061 establishes a procedure for obtaining a protective order whenever the owner of a trade secret wishes to assert his or her trade secret privilege (supra, §350) during a criminal proceeding.

The owner (or the prosecution with the owner's consent) must file a motion for the order (Ev.C. 1061(b)(1)) and, by a preponderance of the evidence, establish that issuance is proper (Ev.C. 1061(b)(3)). Upon finding that a trade secret may be disclosed during a criminal proceeding in the absence of a protective order and that issuance of such an order would not conceal a fraud or work an injustice, the judge must issue an order limiting the use and dissemination of the trade secret, including any article disclosing the secret. (Ev.C. 1061(b)(4).)

A ruling granting or denying the motion has no effect on any civil proceeding and is not to be construed as a determination that the alleged trade secret is or is not a trade secret. (Ev.C. 1061(c).)

Despite this statutory language apparently limiting application of Ev.C. 1061 to a criminal proceeding, the court in Stadish v. Superior Court (1999) 71 C.A.4th 1130, 84 C.R.2d 350, involving issuance of a protective order in a civil action, adopted a contrary construction: "Throughout these proceedings, the parties have conducted themselves as though section 1061 applies to this case. We conclude that the procedures called for in section 1061 have utility in a civil action in protecting the trade secret privilege provided in section 1060 and should be followed." (71 C.A.4th 1145.) (See also State Farm Fire & Cas. Co. v. Superior Court (1997) 54 C.A.4th 625, 650, 62 C.R.2d 834, supra, §156 [applying Ev.C. 1061 in civil case without discussing its applicability in noncriminal cases].)

(2) Effect. A protective order entered by a municipal court judge remains in effect in a superior court unless amended or vacated for good cause. (Ev.C. 1061(d).)

Ev.C. 1061 has prospective effect only, and hence does not invalidate previously entered protective orders. (Ev.C. 1061(e).)

(3) Affidavits. The motion must be accompanied by an affidavit, based on personal knowledge, listing the affiant's qualifications to give an opinion concerning the trade secret at issue, identifying without revealing the alleged trade secret and articles disclosing it, and presenting evidence that the secret qualifies as a trade secret under either C.C. 3426.1(d) (see 11 Summary (9th), Equity, §109) or P.C. 499c(a)(9) (see 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Property, §197). (Ev.C. 1061(b)(1); see Stadish v. Superior Court, supra, 71 C.A.4th 1145 [affidavits that were conclusory in nature were insufficient].)

Any party to the proceeding may oppose the motion by submitting affidavits based on the affiant's personal knowledge. The affidavits must be filed under seal, but given to the owner of the secret and to all parties. Neither the owner nor any party may disclose the affidavit to anyone other than counsel of record without court approval. (Ev.C. 1061(b)(2).)

(4) Hearing. The judge may rule on the motion without holding an evidentiary hearing. However, the judge has discretion to hold an in camera evidentiary hearing concerning disputed articles with only the owner of the secret, a representative of the prosecution, and the defendant and his or her counsel present. At such a hearing, the parties' examination of witnesses may not be used for discovery, but rather must be directed solely at determining whether the alleged trade secret qualifies for protection. (Ev.C. 1061(b)(3).)

In Stadish v. Superior Court, supra, a civil action, plaintiffs sought production of certain documents from defendant, and the trial judge granted defendant's request for a protective order under Ev.C. 1061. Held, the judge failed to follow proper procedures in granting the order, because he impermissibly delegated to the parties the responsibility of determining which items of discovery contained trade secrets. (71 C.A.4th 1144.) A party seeking the protective order must show by a preponderance of the evidence that its issuance is proper (Ev.C. 1061(b)(3), supra). Plaintiffs asserted that the documents were relevant to public health, and when that type of claim is made, the judge is required to determine its validity. If the judge were to decide that the documents sought to be protected were relevant to public health, the judge would be required to consider the public interest in determining whether good cause existed for a protective order. (71 C.A.4th 1145.) If the judge determined that the documents both contained trade secrets and were relevant to public health, the judge would then be required to balance the interests of the public, plaintiffs, and defendant, and reach a decision as to whether dissemination of the documents should be restricted. (71 C.A.4th 1146.)

(5) Content. The order may provide that (a) the trade secret may be disseminated only to the parties' counsel and to law enforcement or clerical officials; (b) the defendant may view the secret only in the presence of defense counsel or at counsel's office; (c) any party seeking to show the secret or any article containing it to a person not designated by the order must first obtain court approval; and (d) no articles disclosing the secret may be filed or otherwise made part of the record available to the public without court approval and prior notice to the owner. (Ev.C. 1061(b)(4); on additional requirements for obtaining approval to show the secret to persons not designated in the order, see Ev.C. 1061(b)(4)(C)(i), (b)(4)(C)(ii), (b)(4)(C)(iii).)

In addition, the judge may issue any other order deemed necessary to protect the integrity of the secret. (Ev.C. 1061(b)(4)(E).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Effect. Ev.C. 1061(d) was deleted in 2002 and Ev.C. 1061(e) was relettered Ev.C. 1061(d)(3) Affidavits.

XVI. TRADE SECRET PRIVILEGE

B. Procedure.

3. Exclusion of Public in Criminal Proceeding.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 353

[§ 353] Exclusion of Public in Criminal Proceeding.

(a) In General. Ev.C. 1062 permits the owner of a trade secret (or the prosecution with the owner's consent) to move to exclude the public from any portion of a criminal proceeding in which a trade secret may be disclosed. (Ev.C. 1062(a).) The motion must identify without revealing the trade secret that would be disclosed in the absence of closure. (Ev.C. 1062(b).)

The motion must be granted where the proponent of closure demonstrates a substantial probability that the secret would otherwise be disclosed during the proceeding, thereby causing serious harm to the owner, and where the judge finds that there is no overriding public interest in an open proceeding. However, no evidence may be excluded if it would conceal a fraud, work an injustice, or deprive the prosecution or the defendant of a fair trial. (Ev.C. 1062(a).)

A transcript of any closed proceeding, minus any information qualifying as a trade secret, must be made available to the public as soon as practicable. (Ev.C. 1062(e).)

Witnesses who are bound by a protective order entered under Ev.C. 1061 (supra, §352) may be allowed to remain in the courtroom during the closed portion of the proceedings. (Ev.C. 1062(f).)

(2) Hearing and Ruling. The showing of substantial probability of harm from disclosure must be made at an in camera hearing attended by only the owner of the secret, a representative of the prosecution, the defendant and defense counsel, and a reporter. Any transcription of the hearing, as well as any article presented therein containing the secret, must be sealed, and access thereto may be permitted only upon a showing of good cause. (Ev.C. 1062(b).)

In ruling on the motion, the judge may consider any testimony presented or affidavits filed. (Ev.C. 1062(b).) If the judge determines that exclusion of trade secret information from the public is appropriate, the judge must close only that portion of the proceeding necessary to prevent disclosure of the secret. However, before granting the motion, the judge must find and state for the record that the moving party has sustained his or her burden and that closure will deprive neither the prosecution nor the defendant of a fair trial. (Ev.C. 1062(c).)

(3) Extraordinary Relief. The owner of the secret, the prosecution, or the defendant may seek relief from a ruling granting or denying closure by petitioning for extraordinary relief. (Ev.C. 1062(d).)

XVI. TRADE SECRET PRIVILEGE

B. Procedure.

4. Request To Seal Articles.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 354

[§ 354] Request To Seal Articles.

(1) In General. Ev.C. 1063 establishes the procedure governing requests to seal articles containing trade secrets that are covered by a protective order (see supra, §352). (For definition of "article," see Ev.C. 1061(a)(2); P.C. 499c(a)(2).)

(2) Articles Reasonably Expected To Be Filed or Admitted into Evidence. Requests to seal these articles must comply with the following procedure:

(a) Not less than 10 court days before trial, and not less than 5 court days before any other criminal proceeding, the prosecution must file a list of all articles which it reasonably expects to file, or admit into evidence, under seal. This list must be made available to the public. (Ev.C. 1063(a)(1).)

(b) Before allowing the listed articles to be filed, admitted into evidence or in any way made part of the record otherwise open to the public, the judge must hold a hearing to consider any objections to the request to seal. (Ev.C. 1063(a)(2).)

(c) After hearing objections, the judge must conduct an in camera hearing before the owner of the trade secret contained in the articles, a representative of the prosecution, and the defendant and defense counsel to determine whether the prosecution has satisfied the constitutional standards governing public access to articles contained in judicial records. The judge may consider testimony presented or affidavits filed in any proceeding held in the action, as well as affidavits filed by the prosecution, defendant, and owner for consideration at the in camera hearing. The judge need not take testimony, but if the judge does, examination of witnesses may not be used for discovery, but must be directed solely toward determining whether sealing is appropriate. (Ev.C. 1063(a)(3).)

(d) If the judge finds that the constitutional standards have been satisfied, he or she must seal the articles if and when they are filed, admitted into evidence, or in any way made part of the record otherwise open to the public. The articles may not be unsealed without a court order based on a showing of good cause. (Ev.C. 1063(a)(4).)

(3) Other Articles Made Part of Record. Requests to seal these articles are governed by the following procedure:

(a) When the articles are filed, admitted into evidence, or in any way made part of the record in such a way as to be otherwise open to the public, the prosecution, defendant or owner may request that the articles be sealed. (Ev.C. 1063(b)(1).)

(b) The request may be made either by noticed motion or orally at the time the articles are made part of the record.

Oral requests must be followed within 24 hours by a written description of the request, including a list of the articles to be sealed. The motions and lists must be made available to the public. (Ev.C. 1063(b)(2).)

(c) The judge must promptly conduct such hearings as are required for requests to seal articles expected to be filed, and, pending the hearings, must seal the articles. If the request to seal is made orally, the judge may conduct the hearings when the articles are made part of the record, but must reconsider his or her ruling in light of any additional objections made within 2 court days after the written record of the request is made available to the public. (Ev.C. 1063(b)(3).)

(d) Any articles sealed may not be unsealed without a court order based on a showing of good cause. Failure to examine the court file for notice of a request to seal is not good cause to consider objections to sealing. (Ev.C. 1063(b)(4).)

[§ 355] Federal and State Constitutions.

(1) Nature and Purpose of Privilege. The Fifth Amendment to the Federal Constitution provides that "No person ... shall be compelled in any Criminal Case to be a witness against himself." Cal. Const., Art. I, §15 is practically identical. (For general discussions, see 1 McCormick 5th, §114 et seq.; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §§2251, 2252; Black v. State Bar (1972) 7 C.3d 676, 685, 103 C.R. 288, 499 P.2d 968, citing the text; United States v. Mandujano (1976) 425 U.S. 564, 96 S.Ct. 1768, 1771, 48 L.Ed.2d 212, 216 [infringement of grand jury witness' privilege does not excuse perjury, citing Bryson v. United States (1969) 396 U.S. 64, 90 S.Ct. 355, 24 L.Ed.2d 264, infra, §379]; C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Discovery §4.17 et seq.; 13 Cal. L. Rev. 259; 30 Cal. L. Rev. 547; 43 Cal L. Rev. 886; 53 Cal. L. Rev. 611; 78 Harv. L. Rev. 426; 7 Hastings L. J. 72; 17 Stanf. L. Rev. 327; 12 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 561; 1964 A.S. 376; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §80 et seq.; 21A Am.Jur.2d (1981 ed.), Criminal Law §701 et seq.; on privilege of accused serviceman under Uniform Code of Military Justice, see 10 U.S.C., §831(a).)

In its origin at common law, the privilege was aimed at the abuse of arbitrary inquisition without charge, and meant that one should not be compelled to accuse oneself. As subsequently developed and almost universally applied today, the privilege protects an accused, i.e., a person properly charged, from being required to testify against himself or herself, and a witness from being required to give testimony which might subject him or her to criminal liability. Thus, despite the narrow constitutional language, which did not create but merely confirmed the common law protections, there are two privileges:

(a) Defendant's (or accused's) privilege. The defendant in a criminal case need not testify at all. (See infra, §365 et seq.)

(b) Witness' privilege. A witness in any proceeding, civil, criminal, or administrative, need not answer any question that would tend to subject the witness to a criminal prosecution. (See infra, §446 et seq.)

(2) Scope of Privilege. The scope of the privilege is as follows:

(a) It protects natural persons, not corporations or unincorporated associations. (See infra, §451 et seq.)

(b) It protects against compulsory oral testimony and also against compulsory production of documents or personal property. (See 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2264; People v. Monreal (1997) 52 C.A.4th 670, 681, 60 C.R.2d 737 [relying on Minnesota v. Murphy (1984) 465 U.S. 420, 104 S.Ct. 1136, 79 L.Ed.2d 409], infra, §497 [statements made by defendant to probation officer after conviction and before sentencing were not compelled and thus could be used to establish nature of prior offense]; infra, §§384 et seq., 446 et seq.)

(c) It precludes any comment on or inference from its claim. (See infra, §432 et seq.)

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

A. General Principles.

1. Constitutional Basis.

b. Federal Constitution Applies to States.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 356

[§ 356] Federal Constitution Applies to States.

It was formerly held that the privilege was not an element of due process protected against state action by the Fourteenth Amendment. (Adamson v. California (1947) 332 U.S. 46, 67 S.Ct. 1672, 91 L.Ed. 1903.) In Malloy v. Hogan (1964) 378 U.S. 1, 84 S.Ct. 1489, 12 L.Ed.2d 653, infra, §466, the Adamson view was abandoned:

"The marked shift to the federal standard in state cases began with Lisenba v. California ... where the Court spoke of accused's 'free choice to admit, to deny, or to refuse to answer.' ... The shift reflects recognition that the American system of criminal prosecution is accusatorial, not inquisitorial, and that the Fifth Amendment privilege is its essential mainstay. ... Governments, state and federal, are thus constitutionally compelled to establish guilt by evidence independently and freely secured, and may not by coercion prove a charge against an accused out of his own mouth. Since the Fourteenth Amendment prohibits the States from inducing a person to confess through 'sympathy falsely aroused,' ... or other like inducement far short of 'compulsion by torture,' ... it follows a fortiori that it also forbids the States to resort to imprisonment, as here, to compel him to answer questions which might incriminate him. The Fourteenth Amendment secures against state invasion the same privilege that the Fifth Amendment guarantees against federal infringement--the right of a person to remain silent unless he chooses to speak in the unfettered exercise of his own will, and to suffer no penalty ... for such silence." (84 S.Ct. 1493, 12 L.Ed.2d 659.) (See Griffin v. California (1965) 380 U.S. 609, 85 S.Ct. 1229, 14 L.Ed.2d 106, infra, §433; 78 Harv. L. Rev. 224, 426; 38 So. Cal. L. Rev. 167; 12 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 561; 1964 A.S. 339, 376.)

Under Malloy, federal standards must be applied in determining the scope of the privilege. (See Zonver v. Superior Court (1969) 270 C.A.2d 613, 624, 76 C.R. 10.)

1. Constitutional Basis.

c. Evidence Code.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 357

[§ 357] Evidence Code.

The Evidence Code does not define the privilege or set forth its scope and exceptions; it merely recognizes its constitutional basis, and thus refers to the case law for the governing principles:

(1) Defendant's (or Accused's) Privilege. "To the extent that such privilege exists under the Constitution of the United States or the State of California, a defendant in a criminal case has a privilege not to be called as a witness and not to testify." (Ev.C. 930.)

(2) Witness' Privilege. "To the extent that such privilege exists under the Constitution of the United States or the State of California, a person has a privilege to refuse to disclose any matter that may tend to incriminate him." (Ev.C. 940.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

A. General Principles.

2. Policy of the Privileges.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 358

[§ 358] Policy of the Privileges.

The Comment to Model Code, Rule 201 expresses the feeling of some critics that the privilege arose out of conditions which no longer exist, and frequently operates to obstruct justice and protect the guilty: "If we assume the continuance of trial by an impartial jury before a competent judge in public, it is difficult to understand how an accused represented by competent counsel can be unfairly treated by being required to testify. He may need protection against police and prosecutor but he can hardly need protection against judge and jury whose action is subject to review by an appellate court." (See 1 McCormick 5th, §§115, 117; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2251; 13 So. Cal. L. Rev. 157; 7 Stanf. L. Rev. 424.)

But the overwhelming majority of courts and writers take the opposite view, and the decisions emphasize the stronghold which the privilege has established in the American judicial system:

Ullmann v. United States (1956) 350 U.S. 422, 76 S.Ct. 497, 500, 100 L.Ed. 511, 518: "Time has not shown that protection from the evils against which this safeguard was directed is needless or unwarranted. This constitutional protection must not be interpreted in a hostile or niggardly spirit. Too many ... view this privilege as a shelter for wrongdoers. They too readily assume that those who invoke it are either guilty of crime or commit perjury in claiming the privilege. ... No doubt the constitutional privilege may, on occasion, save a guilty man from his just deserts. It was aimed at a more far-reaching evil--a recurrence of the Inquisition and the Star Chamber, even if not in their stark brutality. Prevention of the greater evil was deemed of more importance than occurrence of the lesser evil."

Quinn v. United States (1955) 349 U.S. 155, 75 S.Ct. 668, 673, 99 L.Ed. 964, 972: "Coequally with our other constitutional guarantees, the Self-Incrimination Clause 'must be accorded liberal construction in favor of the right it was intended to secure.' Such liberal construction is particularly warranted in a prosecution of a witness for a refusal to answer, since the respect normally accorded the privilege is then buttressed by the presumption of innocence accorded a defendant in a criminal trial. To apply the privilege narrowly or begrudgingly--to treat it as an historical relic, at most merely to be tolerated--is to ignore its development and purpose."

Murphy v. Waterfront Com. (1964) 378 U.S. 52, 84 S.Ct. 1594, 1596, 12 L.Ed.2d 678, 681, infra, §469: "It reflects many of our fundamental values and most noble aspirations; our unwillingness to subject those suspected of crime to the cruel trilemma of self-accusation, perjury or contempt; our preference for an accusatorial rather than an inquisitorial system of criminal justice; our fear that self-incriminating statements will be elicited by inhumane treatment and abuses; our sense of fair play which dictates 'a fair state-individual balance by requiring the government to leave the individual alone until good cause is shown for disturbing him and by requiring the government in its contest with the individual to shoulder the entire load' ... ; our respect for the inviolability of the human personality and of the right of each individual 'to a private enclave where he may lead a private life,' ... our distrust of self-deprecatory statements; and our realization that the privilege, while sometimes 'a shelter to the guilty,' is often 'a protection to the innocent.' "

Many other opinions are to the same effect. (See Hoffman v. United States (1951) 341 U.S. 479, 71 S.Ct. 814, 818, 95 L.Ed. 1118, 1124; Grunewald v. United States (1957) 353 U.S. 391, 77 S.Ct. 963, 982, 1 L.Ed.2d 931, 952; Malloy v. Hogan (1964) 378 U.S. 1, 84 S.Ct. 1489, 1493, 12 L.Ed.2d 653, 659, supra, §356; Griffin v. California (1965) 380 U.S. 609, 85 S.Ct. 1229, 1231, 14 L.Ed.2d 106, 109, infra, §433; Tehan v. United States (1966) 382 U.S. 406, 86 S.Ct. 459, 464, 465, 15 L.Ed.2d 453, 458, 459; *Maness v. ## CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

A. General Principles.

3. Remedies for Denial.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 359

[§ 359] Remedies for Denial.

(1) Defendant's Privilege. The defendant's privilege against taking the stand in a criminal prosecution against him or her is rarely infringed. (But see infra, §365.) The most practical current problem is whether compelled evidence other than testimony is covered by the privilege, and the issue is generally reviewed on appeal from a judgment of conviction. (See infra, §384 et seq.)

(2) Witness' Privilege. The witness' privilege to refuse to answer incriminating questions, or to produce incriminating records, calls for a determination of legal and factual issues (see infra, §446 et seq.), and is a frequent source of challenge. If a judge erroneously denies the claim of privilege and orders a witness to answer on the stand or at a deposition or in response to interrogatories, or to produce documents or other things in answer to a subpoena duces tecum, or to obey an order of inspection, several remedies are available:

(a) Submit to an adjudication of contempt and review the contempt judgment by certiorari or habeas corpus.

(b) Review the discovery order on appeal from a final judgment in the action.

(c) Review the contempt order or discovery order by prohibition or mandamus. (For extended discussion of the use of the extraordinary writs in connection with discovery proceedings, in which most of the challenges occur, see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §242 et seq.)

(3) Federal Practice. In federal court trials, suppression of the evidence and its fruits is an adequate protection of the aggrieved defendant; dismissal of the indictment is unwarranted. (United States v. Blue (1966) 384 U.S. 251, 86 S.Ct. 1416, 1419, 16 L.Ed.2d 510, 514; see 80 Harv. L. Rev. 231.)

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

A. General Principles.

4. Effects of Claim.

a. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 360

[§ 360] In General.

The adverse evidentiary effects, embodied in the former rule permitting comment and inference, no longer obtain. (See infra, §432 et seq.) There remain, however, several possible extra-legal consequences:

(1) Discharge of a private employee (e.g., in the entertainment industry) who, by refusing to answer questions of a legislative committee, violates an agreement to do nothing to bring himself or herself into public disgrace. (See RKO Radio Pictures v. Jarrico (1954) 128 C.A.2d 172, 173, 274 P.2d 928; 29 So. Cal. L. Rev. 263.)

(2) Discharge of a public employee for refusing to answer questions concerning his or her employment. (See infra, §§361, 362.) However, no public employee may be discharged if, as an alternative to discharge, he or she is required to relinquish a constitutional right, e.g., the immunity given to one who is required to testify after a claim of privilege. (See infra, §361.)

(3) Deportation of an alien who, in a proceeding seeking suspension of a deportation order, refuses to answer questions concerning the alien's membership in the Communist Party. (See Kimm v. Rosenberg (1960) 363 U.S. 405, 80 S.Ct. 1139, 1441, 4 L.Ed.2d 1299, 1302.)

(4) Denial of recovery under a fire insurance policy for refusal to submit to examination concerning the loss in violation of a policy provision requiring such examination. (See Hickman v. London Assur. Corp. (1920) 184 C. 524, 195 P. 45, infra, §497.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

A. General Principles.

4. Effects of Claim.

b. Claim by Public Officer or Employee.

1. Federal Cases.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 361

[§ 361] Federal Cases.

The question whether a public employee can be discharged for refusal to testify in a criminal proceeding or investigation by a grand jury or legislative committee was the subject of exhaustive consideration in a number of Supreme Court decisions.

In Garrity v. New Jersey (1967) 385 U.S. 493, 87 S.Ct. 616, 17 L.Ed.2d 562, a New Jersey statute provided that a public officer who claimed the privilege and refused to testify on matters relating to his or her office, in any criminal proceeding where the public officer was a defendant or prosecution witness, or before a grand jury or other body having the right to inquire as to such matters, etc., should be removed from the office and thereafter be ineligible for public employment in the state. Appellants, police officers of certain boroughs, were called in an investigation of alleged fixing of traffic tickets, conducted by the Attorney General under order of the New Jersey Supreme Court. Each received full warning of his privilege and the effect, under the statute, of exercising it. All answered the questions asked. Then, in a subsequent prosecution for conspiracy to obstruct the administration of the traffic laws, some of their answers were admitted over the objection that they were coerced. Held, conviction reversed.

(a) No free choice. Appellants were forced to elect between self-incrimination and job forfeiture. This "is the antithesis of free choice to speak out or to remain silent." And, like the interrogation practices condemned in Miranda v. Arizona (1966) 384 U.S. 436, 86 S.Ct. 1602, 16 L.Ed.2d 694 (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §76 et seq.), it is likely to exert such pressure on the individual as to disable him or her from making a free and rational decision. (87 S.Ct. 618, 17 L.Ed.2d 565.)

(b) Holmes dictum rejected. Justice Holmes, in the celebrated Massachusetts case of McAuliffe v. New Bedford, said: "The petitioner may have a constitutional right to talk politics, but he has no constitutional right to be a policeman." This is not, however, the question involved here; the question here is "whether a State, contrary to the requirement of the Fourteenth Amendment, can use the threat of discharge to secure incriminatory evidence against an employee." (87 S.Ct. 620, 17 L.Ed.2d 567.) And "policemen, like teachers and lawyers, are not relegated to a watered-down version of constitutional rights." (87 S.Ct. 620, 17 L.Ed.2d 567.)

(c) Unconstitutional conditions. "There are rights of constitutional stature whose exercise a State may not condition by the exaction of a price. ... We now hold the protection of the individual under the Fourteenth Amendment prohibits use in subsequent criminal proceedings of confessions obtained under threat of removal from office, and that it extends to all, whether they are policemen or other members of our body politic." (87 S.Ct. 620, 17 L.Ed.2d 567.) (On the unconstitutional conditions doctrine, see 8 Summary (9th), Constitutional Law, §§702, 703.)

The Garrity holding was applied in Gardner v. Broderick (1968) 392 U.S. 273, 88 S.Ct. 1913, 20 L.Ed.2d 1082. Gardner, a New York City police officer, was called by the grand jury investigating corruption in the police department. He was advised that the jury proposed to examine him concerning performance of his official duties, and was asked to sign a waiver of immunity. He refused, and was discharged pursuant to a charter provision. In this action for reinstatement, the New York court denied relief. Held, reversed.

(a) The Garrity case did not involve the issue here; it only held that testimony actually given under compulsion could not be used in a subsequent prosecution. Spevack v. Klein (1967) 385 U.S. 511, 87 S.Ct. 625, 17 L.Ed.2d 574 (infra, §363), was also distinguishable; a lawyer is not an employee, but a policeman is, and therefore is responsible to the state or to no one. Thus, if Gardner had refused to answer questions directly relating to his duties, the self-incrimination privilege would not bar his dismissal. (88 S.Ct. 1915, 20 L.Ed.2d 1086.)

(b) Here, however, the discharge was not for refusal to answer but for refusal to waive a constitutional right--the immunity which he would be entitled to if required to testify after a claim of privilege. (88 S.Ct. 1916, 20 L.Ed.2d 1087.)

Uniformed Sanitation Men Assn. v. Commissioner of Sanitation (1968) 392 U.S. 280, 88 S.Ct. 1917, 20 L.Ed.2d 1089, followed Gardner. Employees of the New York City Department of Sanitation were under investigation for improper diversion of fees. Some claimed privilege and refused to testify before the Commissioner; others were summoned before the grand jury and refused to sign waivers of immunity. Held, their discharge was a violation of constitutional rights. These public employees had the benefit of the privilege against self-incrimination. They would, however, subject themselves to dismissal if they refused to account for performance of a public trust in a proceeding which did not involve coercion to relinquish constitutional rights. (88 S.Ct. 1920, 20 L.Ed.2d 1093.) (For analyses of Garrity, Gardner, and Uniformed Sanitation cases, see 82 Harv. L. Rev. 203.)

The Garrity, Gardner and Uniformed Sanitation trilogy was recognized as controlling in Lefkowitz v. Turley (1973) 414 U.S. 70, 94 S.Ct. 316, 324, 38 L.Ed.2d 274, 283, where two architects were summoned to testify before a grand jury investigating conspiracy, bribery and larceny charges. Under a New York statute, public contracts had to provide that if a contractor refused to waive immunity or to answer questions about his or her public contracts, the contractor's existing contracts might be cancelled and he or she would be disqualified from further transactions with the state for 5 years. Held, the privilege was applicable even though the issue arose in official inquiries into the job performance of a public contractor. The architects were called as witnesses (94 S.Ct. 322, 38 L.Ed.2d 281) and the waiver sought by the state under threat of a substantial economic sanction was not voluntary. There is no constitutional difference between "the threat of job loss to an employee of the State, and a threat of loss of contracts to a contractor." (94 S.Ct. 325, 38 L.Ed.2d 285.)

The court pointed out that the state may insist on such testimony only if it offers adequate immunity, making the testimony or its fruits inadmissible for use in criminal proceedings. (94 S.Ct. 325, 38 L.Ed.2d 285.)

Lefkowitz v. Cunningham (1977) 431 U.S. 801, 97 S.Ct. 2132, 53 L.Ed.2d 1, reaffirmed the conclusions reached in Gardner v. Broderick and Lefkowitz v. Turley, and applied the principles to a statutory penalty which had no substantial economic impact. Under a New York statute, C, an attorney, was divested of his state political party offices and barred for 5 years from holding any other party or public office. Held, "direct economic sanctions and imprisonment are not the only penalties capable of forcing the self-incrimination which the Amendment forbids." (97 S.Ct. 2136, 53 L.Ed.2d 8.) Again the court emphasized the state contempt power to compel testimony by granting proper "use immunity" (see infra, §478), thus retaining the opportunity to prosecute the witness on the basis of evidence derived from other sources. (97 S.Ct. 2137, 53 L.Ed.2d 9.)

2. California Cases.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 362

[§ 362] California Cases.

California and federal cases (see supra, §361) are in accord on the right to discharge or suspend for refusal to testify before a grand jury or legislative committee: Public employees are under an obligation to provide information concerning their fitness to hold office. (See Govt.C. 1028.1; Christal v. Police Com. (1939) 33 C.A.2d 564, 568, 92 P.2d 416; Steinmetz v. California State Bd. of Education (1955) 44 C.2d 816, 824, 285 P.2d 617; Board of Education v. Mass (1956) 47 C.2d 494, 498, 304 P.2d 1015; Szmciarz v. State Personnel Bd. (1978) 79 C.A.3d 904, 916, 145 C.R. 396; 28 Cal. L. Rev. 94; 43 Cal. L. Rev. 889; 64 Harv. L. Rev. 987; 1956 A.S. 51; 44 A.L.R.2d 789 [assertion of immunity as ground for removing or discharging public officer or employee].)

Also, a public employee who invokes the privilege, but then testifies under protest, may be disciplined on the basis of the information thereby provided. (Szmciarz v. State Personnel Bd., supra, 79 C.A.3d 917 [prison correctional officer suspended for 5 months after admitting under protest that he had possessed marijuana at home and had inadvertently brought three marijuana cigarettes into the prison].)

Holding a disciplinary hearing prior to trial of the criminal charge constituting the ground for dismissal does not violate the employee's privilege (by, in effect, forcing the employee to testify to avoid dismissal), because the employee's testimony at the hearing is inadmissible at the later prosecution. (Hankla v. Governing Bd. of Roseland School Dist. (1975) 46 C.A.3d 644, 652, 120 C.R. 827.)

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 363

[§ 363] Claim by Attorney.

It was formerly the rule that an attorney who refused to cooperate with an authorized judicial inquiry into unethical practices by claiming the privilege could be disbarred. (See Cohen v. Hurley (1961) 366 U.S. 117, 81 S.Ct. 954, 6 L.Ed.2d 156.) This rule was repudiated and the Cohen case was overruled by a 5-4 vote in Spevack v. Klein (1967) 385 U.S. 511, 87 S.Ct. 625, 17 L.Ed.2d 574. Petitioner, a member of the New York bar, was summoned in a judicial inquiry, and refused to produce financial records or to testify. Held, order of disbarment reversed.

(a) The four signers of the main or "plurality" opinion thought that the Cohen principle had been "seriously eroded" by Malloy v. Hogan (1964) 378 U.S. 1, 84 S.Ct. 1489, 12 L.Ed.2d 653, supra, §356, holding that no penalty can be imposed on a person who exercises the self-incrimination privilege. And "penalty," as pointed out in Griffin v. California (1965) 380 U.S. 609, 85 S.Ct. 1229, 14 L.Ed.2d 106, infra, §433, means any sanction which makes assertion of the privilege "costly," hence, includes the threat of disbarment. "We conclude that Cohen v. Hurley should be overruled, that the Self-Incrimination Clause of the Fifth Amendment has been absorbed in the Fourteenth, that it extends its protection to lawyers as well as to other individuals, and that it should not be watered down by imposing the dishonor of disbarment and the deprivation of a livelihood as a price for asserting it." (87 S.Ct. 627, 17 L.Ed.2d 577.)

(b) The fifth justice, concurring, drew a distinction between discharge of a public employee and disbarment of a lawyer who is not a public employee. (87 S.Ct. 630, 17 L.Ed.2d 580; see supra, §361.)

The four dissenters denounced the majority opinion in the strongest language:

(a) "This decision, made in the name of the Constitution, permits a lawyer suspected of professional misconduct to thwart direct official inquiry of him or her without fear of disciplinary action. What is done today will be disheartening and frustrating to courts and bar associations throughout the country in their efforts to maintain high standards at the bar." (87 S.Ct. 631, 17 L.Ed.2d 581.)

(b) The decision also means that such a person must be admitted to the bar or appointed to the bench. And it encourages lawyers "to think of their calling as imposing on them no higher standards of behavior than might be acceptable in the general market-place." (87 S.Ct. 631, 17 L.Ed.2d 581.)

(c) The states have long been held to have broad authority to devise requirements for admission and standards of practice for professions; and the New York rules, aimed at protecting the public from the abuses of malpractice, appropriately recognize that lawyers are officers of the court, performing a fundamental role in the administration of justice. (87 S.Ct. 633, 17 L.Ed.2d 583.)

(d) The plurality opinion's broad proposition "is entirely without support in the construction hitherto given to the privilege, and is directly inconsistent with a series of cases in which this Court has indicated the principles which are properly applicable here." (87 S.Ct. 633, 17 L.Ed.2d 583.) Thus, "so long as state authorities do not derive any imputation of guilt from a claim of the privilege, they may in the course of a bona fide assessment of an employee's fitness for public employment require that the employee disclose information reasonably related to his fitness, and may order his discharge if he declines." (87 S.Ct. 635, 17 L.Ed.2d 585.)

(e) The plurality opinion "does not pause either to acknowledge the previous handling of these issues or to explain why the privilege must now be supposed to forbid all consequences which may result from privileged silence." It creates "a novel and entirely unnecessary extension of the privilege" exceeding the needs of its purpose and seriously inhibiting the protection of other public interests. (87 S.Ct. 635, 17 L.Ed.2d 585.) (See 81 Harv. L. Rev. 200; 1967 A.S. 546, 555, 561; 30 A.L.R.4th 243 [attorney's privilege in disbarment or other disciplinary proceedings--post-Spevack cases]; Black v. State Bar (1972) 7 C.3d 676, 686, 103 C.R. 288, 499 P.2d 968, infra, §372 [attorney in disciplinary proceeding has only the witness privilege to refuse to answer particular questions].)

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

A. General Principles.

4. Effects of Claim.

d. Claim by Corporation Officer.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 364

[§ 364] Claim by Corporation Officer.

A peculiar problem received equivocal treatment in George Campbell Painting Corp. v. Reid (1968) 392 U.S. 286, 88 S.Ct. 1978, 20 L.Ed.2d 1094. A New York statute provided that a person or corporation contracting with the state must agree to cancellation without damages, and that a 5-year disqualification for future contracts will result, on (a) refusal to testify before a grand jury or (b) refusal to waive immunity against subsequent criminal prosecution. Appellant was a closely held family corporation. When an investigation of bid rigging was under way, Campbell, president and director, resigned his offices and divested himself of stock. When called before the grand jury he refused to sign the waiver. Accordingly, appellant's contracts were terminated and it was notified of its disqualification. Held, this was proper.

(a) The privilege against self-incrimination is personal, and cannot be claimed by a corporation. (88 S.Ct. 1980, 20 L.Ed.2d 1097; see infra, §451.)

(b) Because a corporation cannot avail itself of the privilege, it cannot assert invalidity of the penalty imposed for refusal of the individual (president) to waive. (88 S.Ct. 1980, 20 L.Ed.2d 1097.)

(c) The question of denial of due process rights by imposition of the penalty despite Campbell's resignation was not reached, in view of the New York court's finding that this was done solely to avoid the disqualification and should be disregarded. (88 S.Ct. 1980, 20 L.Ed.2d 1097.)

The dissent likens the statute to a bill of attainder: an individual violates a law, the family (here family corporation) is blacklisted. (88 S.Ct. 1980, 20 L.Ed.2d 1098.) (See 82 Harv. L. Rev. 210.)

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

1. General Principles.
  - a. Nature of Privilege.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 365

[§ 365] Nature of Privilege.

The common law disqualification of the accused as a witness on his or her own behalf has long been abolished. (See Ferguson v. Georgia (1961) 365 U.S. 570, 81 S.Ct. 756, 757, 5 L.Ed.2d 783, 784; 78 Harv. L. Rev. 433.) And former P.C. 1325.5, with its confusing statement that a defendant was a competent witness "at his own request, but not otherwise," was repealed on the adoption of the Evidence Code. But the federal and state Constitutions establish a privilege to refuse to be called or sworn as a witness for the prosecution. (See supra, §355 et seq.)

The same strong policy requires the court to make the privilege effective by advising the defendant of its existence whenever this appears to be necessary. Thus, in Killpatrick v. Superior Court (1957) 153 C.A.2d 146, 314 P.2d 164, a prosecution for contempt for failure to comply with an order for support of a former wife and children, the prosecutor called petitioner as a witness. The latter, unfamiliar with legal procedure and not represented by counsel, was questioned by both the prosecutor and judge with no advice as to the constitutional privilege to refuse to testify. Held, contempt judgment annulled; testimony under such circumstances was not a waiver of the privilege. Quoting from a New York case the court said: "When a defendant goes to trial upon a charge of a criminal nature without the benefit of counsel, it is the duty of the court to be alert to protect the defendant's rights. Good practice requires that any suggestion by the court that the defendant take the stand be coupled with advice as to his privilege against self-incrimination. The defendant may not be called to the stand in a criminal case unless he waives his privilege. He cannot be charged with a waiver of the privilege unless it appears that he was aware of its existence and its surrounding safeguards and voluntarily and intelligently elected to refrain from asserting it." (153 C.A.2d 149.) (See People v. Hines (1997) 15 C.4th 997, 1032, 64 C.R.2d 594, 938 P.2d 388 [trial counsel's mention in opening statement that defendant would testify did not deprive defendant of right not to testify, where defendant had previously told counsel of his willingness to testify]; 5 A.L.R.2d 1404 [use in subsequent prosecution of self-incriminating testimony given without invoking privilege].)

Such advice is unnecessary, however, where the defendant is represented by counsel. (See People v. Thomas (1974) 43 C.A.3d 862, 867, 118 C.R. 226, infra, §429.)

An attorney has standing to assert the privilege on the client's behalf. (See In re Marcario (1970) 2 C.3d 329, 330, 85 C.R. 135, 466 P.2d 679 [attorney properly refused to comply with trial judge's discovery order to disclose witnesses in murder trial].) But the privilege is personal, and cannot be claimed by others. (See People v. Jenkins (1973) 34 C.A.3d 893, 897, 110 C.R. 465 [after having pleaded guilty, codefendant who did not assert privilege was properly compelled to testify against remaining defendants]; 39 Hastings L. J. 927 [Erosion of the Fifth Amendment Through the Use of Defense Counsel as Witness].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Killpatrick v. Superior Court (1957) 153 C.A.2d 146, 314 P.2d 164, text, p. 657, was disapproved in People v. Barnum (2003) 29 C.4th 1210, 131 C.R.2d 499, 64 P.3d 788, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, Supp., §259. The general rule is that the trial court is not required to assist or advise a self-represented defendant on matters of law, evidence, or trial practice. There is no reason why the privilege against self-incrimination, alone among all the rights enjoyed by a self-represented defendant, mandates protection by the trial court. (29 C.4th 1222, 1223.) However, "[i]n any given case, the court remains free to provide such an advisement, so long as its words do not stray from neutrality toward favoring any one option over another." ### XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

1. General Principles.

b. Improper Procedural Restrictions.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 366

[§ 366] Improper Procedural Restrictions.

(1) Forcing Defendant To Claim Before Jury. In People v. Talle (1952) 111 C.A.2d 650, 245 P.2d 633, the prosecutor, at the opening of the trial, commented on "statements" concerning the "advantage" to the prosecution of being permitted to complete its case before defendant is allowed to offer his defense, and offered to "share that advantage" by calling defendant as "our witness." Defendant's counsel objected, the court advised defendant of his rights and asked if he wanted to take the stand, and defendant said that he did not. Held, reversible error. "This was a direct, deliberate and prejudicial impairment of appellant's fundamental and constitutional rights. The only purpose of this maneuver was, at the inception of the trial, to try to impair the presumption of innocence that clothes all accused until proven guilty, and to violate appellant's constitutional guarantee against self-incrimination. This error was aggravated and compounded when the district attorney, on the cross-examination of Talle, after he had taken the stand in his own defense, was permitted to ask Talle time and time again why he had refused to take the stand as the first witness when called, and why he had then insisted on invoking his constitutional rights. Over the vigorous and proper objections of defense counsel, Talle was compelled to answer these questions and was compelled to state that he had refused to then take the stand on the advice of his attorneys. It is a novel, and certainly unsound, principle of law that a defendant must justify and explain why he has taken advantage of his constitutional rights." (111 C.A.2d 662.) (See 1959 A.S. 642.)

(2) Forcing Defendant To Decide Prematurely. In Brooks v. Tennessee (1972) 406 U.S. 605, 92 S.Ct. 1891, 32 L.Ed.2d 358, defense counsel moved to delay defendant's proposed testimony until after other defense witnesses had testified. The trial judge denied the motion on the basis of a state statute which required a defendant who wished to take the stand to do so before calling other defense witnesses. After declining to testify, defendant was convicted of armed robbery and unlawful possession of a pistol. Held, judgment reversed.

(a) The statute was an impermissible restriction on defendant's privilege against self-incrimination, because he might not know at the close of the prosecution case whether his own testimony will be necessary or even helpful to his cause. (92 S.Ct. 1894, 32 L.Ed.2d 362.) "Pressuring the defendant to take the stand, by foreclosing later testimony if he refuses, is not a constitutionally permissible means of ensuring his honesty. It fails to take into account the very real and legitimate concerns that might motivate a defendant to exercise his right of silence. And it may compel even a wholly truthful defendant, who might otherwise decline to testify for legitimate reasons, to subject himself to impeachment and cross-examination at a time when the strength of his other evidence is not yet clear." (92 S.Ct. 1895, 32 L.Ed.2d 363.)

(b) The statute also infringed on defendant's due process rights. "Whether the defendant is to testify is an important tactical decision as well as a matter of constitutional right. By requiring the accused and his lawyer to make that choice without an opportunity to evaluate the actual worth of their evidence, the statute restricts the defense--particularly counsel--in the planning of its case. Furthermore, the penalty for not testifying first is to keep the defendant off the stand entirely, even though as a matter of professional judgment his lawyer might want to call him later in the trial. The accused is thereby deprived of the 'guiding hand of counsel' in the timing of this critical element of his defense." (92 S.Ct. 1895, 32 L.Ed.2d 364.)

The three dissenting justices said: "The only 'burden' cast on the defendant's choice to take the stand by the Tennessee procedure is the burden to make the choice at a given point in time. That the choice might in some cases be easier if made later is hardly a matter of constitutional dimension." (92 S.Ct. 1896, 32 L.Ed.2d 365.) (See 66 Cal. L. Rev. 935 [arguing inconsistency between Brooks and Williams v. Florida (1970) 399 U.S. 78, 90 S.Ct. 1893, 26 L.Ed.2d 446, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §29, upholding notice of alibi rule].)

Tennessee* (1972) 406 U.S. 605, 92 S.Ct. 1891, 32 L.Ed.2d 358, text, p. 659, where he initially ruled that defendant must testify first or not at all but later retreated from that directive and defense counsel ultimately chose not to call defendant].

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

2. What Is a Criminal Case Against Accused.

a. Criminal and Quasi-Criminal Proceedings.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 367

[§ 367] Criminal and Quasi-Criminal Proceedings.

The obvious application of the privilege is in the trial on a criminal charge against the accused. (See People v. Talle (1952) 111 C.A.2d 650, 662, 245 P.2d 633, supra, §366.) And, under the California practice of separate trials on guilt and sanity, a defendant who pleads "not guilty" and "not guilty by reason of insanity" cannot be compelled to testify in the second trial on the issue of sanity. (People v. Lamey (1930) 103 C.A. 66, 67, 283 P. 848; see People v. Flores (1976) 55 C.A.3d 118, 122, 127 C.R. 230 [because defendant in sanity phase is protected by self-incrimination clause, comment on defendant's silence is improper].)

But the concept is broader than that. "A criminal case is an action, suit, or cause instituted to punish an infraction of the criminal laws, and, with this object in view, it matters not in what form a statute may clothe it, it is still a criminal case, and the person charged therein is protected from being an enforced witness against himself by the aegis of the constitutions, national and state." (Thurston v. Clark (1895) 107 C. 285, 289, 40 P. 435 [proceeding to remove sheriff from office]; see Ex parte Clarke (1894) 103 C. 352, 354, 37 P. 230 [assignee in insolvency charged petitioner, adjudicated insolvent, with concealment of assets, and had him cited to appear in court for examination]; Boyd v. United States (1886) 116 U.S. 616, 6 S.Ct. 524, 29 L.Ed. 746 [forfeiture for violation of revenue law]; United States v. United States Coin & Currency (1971) 401 U.S. 715, 91 S.Ct. 1041, 1043, 28 L.Ed.2d 434, 437 [forfeiture proceedings are criminal for Fifth Amendment purposes].)

Although a contempt proceeding is generally termed "quasi-criminal," contempt is a misdemeanor (P.C. 166), and the proceeding is a criminal case within the protection of the privilege. It is immaterial that the acts constituting contempt arose out of a civil proceeding. (Ex parte Gould (1893) 99 C. 360, 361, 33 P. 1112; Brophy v. Industrial Acc. Com. (1941) 46 C.A.2d 278, 283, 115 P.2d 835; In re Ferguson (1954) 123 C.A.2d 799, 801, 268 P.2d 71; Killpatrick v. Superior Court (1957) 153 C.A.2d 146, 314 P.2d 164, supra, §365; In re Witherspoon (1984) 162 C.A.3d 1000, 1002, 209 C.R. 67.)

A mentally disordered offender proceeding has "overwhelming penal attributes," and the privilege against self-incrimination applies. (People v. Pretzer (1992) 9 C.A.4th 1078, 1085, 11 C.R.2d 860.)

[§ 368] In General.

Some proceedings that may have adverse effects equal to those of criminal or contempt proceedings, or are indirectly connected with criminal prosecutions, are nevertheless not within the classification of criminal cases. The defendant therefore may be called to the stand and compelled to testify; the defendant's only privilege is that of any witness to refuse to answer incriminating questions (infra, §446):

In United States v. Ward (1980) 448 U.S. 242, 100 S.Ct. 2636, 65 L.Ed.2d 742, a statute required persons in charge of ships or shore installations to report oil spills to the federal government, and provided that the reported information should not be used against such person in any criminal case except a prosecution for perjury or giving a false statement. An owner or operator of the source of a spill was made subject to civil penalties, the proceeds of which were to go into a fund for containing and removing spills. The operator of an oil rig duly reported a spill and was assessed a penalty, which the government sued to collect. The operator contended that use of his required report in imposing the penalty violated his privilege against self-incrimination. Held, use of the report was proper; the penalty was civil, and the proceeding in which it was imposed was not quasi-criminal. (100 S.Ct. 2644, 65 L.Ed.2d 753.)

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

2. What Is a Criminal Case Against Accused.

b. Noncriminal Judicial Proceedings.

2. Juvenile Court Hearings.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 369

[§ 369] Juvenile Court Hearings.

Juvenile court hearings on a charge of crime are not criminal trials, and it was formerly held that the minor could not refuse to testify, although the minor had the usual right to refuse to answer incriminating questions. (See In re Dargo (1947) 81 C.A.2d 205, 207, 183 P.2d 282; 13 So. Cal. L. Rev. 157.) But the rule today is that a minor charged with criminal conduct in juvenile court proceedings has the same privilege against self-incrimination as an adult defendant charged with crime. (See 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §39.)

In re Jessica B. (1989) 207 C.A.3d 504, 254 C.R. 883, applied the reasoning of Ramona R. v. Superior Court (1985) 37 C.3d 802, 210 C.R. 204, 693 P.2d 789, infra, §370, to a dependency proceeding in which a finding that the father's return to the home would endanger his child was based on his refusal to admit that he was an abusive parent and to undergo therapy for the problem. The father argued that being required to admit the abuse and seek treatment violated his privilege against self-incrimination. Held, there was no violation; any incriminating statements made at the hearing or during therapy would be inadmissible in a subsequent criminal trial.

(a) Former Welf.C. 355.1(d) (now Welf.C. 355.1(f)) makes the testimony of a parent in dependency proceedings inadmissible in any other proceeding. However, this statute does not adequately protect the father in this case, because any incriminating statements he made during treatment would not constitute "testimony" within the meaning of the statute. (207 C.A.3d 518.)

(b) Without immunity, the father is forced to choose between incriminating himself or having little chance of reunification with his child. And, as held in Ramona R., such a choice runs counter to the historic aversion to cruelty reflected in the privilege against self-incrimination. (207 C.A.3d 520.) Thus, the California Constitution requires use immunity not only for incriminating testimony given at the dependency proceeding, but also for such statements made during court-ordered therapy. In addition to preserving the privilege against self-incrimination, such immunity will facilitate the goal of protecting the best interests of the child. (207 C.A.3d 521.)

The court cautioned that the immunity would not bar the use of statements made to the therapist if the defendant puts such statements in issue by giving squarely inconsistent testimony at the criminal trial. (207 C.A.3d 521.)

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

2. What Is a Criminal Case Against Accused.

b. Noncriminal Judicial Proceedings.

3. Fitness Hearings.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 370

[§ 370] Fitness Hearings.

(1) General Rule: Privilege Available. The privilege is available in a fitness hearing. In Ramona R. v. Superior Court (1985) 37 C.3d 802, 210 C.R. 204, 693 P.2d 789, Ramona R., aged 17, was accused of murder, and the district attorney moved to have her tried as an adult (Welf.C. 707(a); see 10 Summary (9th), Parent and Child, §755 et seq.). At the fitness hearing, she refused to testify unless granted immunity from use at trial of any statements she made, and she was found unfit. Held, mandamus granted, directing the lower court to vacate its order and conduct a new fitness hearing.

(a) Before the adoption of Cal. Const., Art. I, §28(d), part of Proposition 8 (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §§8, 9), statements made to a probation officer and to a court in a fitness hearing could not be introduced as substantive evidence against the minor at trial. (37 C.3d 806, citing Bryan v. Superior Court (1972) 7 C.3d 575, 587, 102 C.R. 831, 498 P.2d 1079, and Sheila O. v. Superior Court (1981) 125 C.A.3d 812, 816, 178 C.R. 418, 10 Summary (9th), Parent and Child, §766.)

(b) The constitutional amendment, providing for admission of all relevant evidence, contains an express exception for existing statutory rules of evidence relating to "privilege." Ev.C. 940 does not determine the scope of the privilege against self-incrimination, which is governed by the federal and state Constitutions. People v. Coleman (1975) 13 C.3d 867, 889, 120 C.R. 384, 533 P.2d 1024, infra, §380, dealing with the similar problem of a probationer facing a hearing on revocation of probation prior to trial, holds that the privilege may be claimed; and this reasoning applies equally to a juvenile considering his or her options with respect to an interview with a probation officer, a fitness hearing, and a guilt-phase trial. (37 C.3d 807, 810.)

(c) There is a final reason why the California Constitution precludes proof, at a subsequent trial, of the statements to a probation officer or testimony at a fitness hearing: the adverse consequences are significant. (1) The certification of a juvenile offender to an adult court is the worst punishment the juvenile system is empowered to inflict; and here, because Ramona was bound over to the criminal court to face murder charges, she could face the penalty of life imprisonment. (37 C.3d 810.) (2) But even a finding of fitness is not such a "bonanza" for a minor; rehabilitation in the juvenile system may involve confinement for years. "Thus we hold that use immunity applies even when the minor has been found fit for treatment under the juvenile laws." (37 C.3d 811.)

criminal trial, may nevertheless be used to impeach a minor who chooses to testify. People v. Macias (1997) 16 C.4th 739, 66 C.R.2d 659, 941 P.2d 838, provided the answer. As the result of a high-speed chase ending in a collision and the striking of pedestrians, defendant was charged with six murders and operating a vehicle without a license. The prosecution sought to try him as an adult, and a probation officer interviewed him in the course of preparing a report for the fitness hearing. At the subsequent criminal trial, defendant gave an account of the chase and collision, and other circumstances relevant to the incident, substantially at variance with his account to the probation officer. The prosecution was allowed to impeach this testimony with the contradictory statements defendant had made to the probation officer. Held, this was proper.

(a) The rule of the Ramona R. case was not based on a belief that a minor's statements in the course of fitness evaluation are legislatively compelled. If it had been so based, the question regarding impeachment use of these statements could not have been left open. Rather, the rationale underlying the rule is that juveniles should be allowed to exercise their right to present mitigating evidence to probation officers without giving prosecutors in subsequent trials the unfair advantage of using their statements as substantive evidence of guilt. This rationale does not preclude the impeachment use of a minor's fitness evaluation statements when the minor voluntarily takes the stand and testifies inconsistently with them. (16 C.4th 752, 753, disagreeing with dictum in People v. May (1988) 44 C.3d 309, 243 C.R. 369, 748 P.2d 307, 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §319, giving contrary characterization of Ramona R. rationale.)

(b) In New Jersey v. Portash (1979) 440 U.S. 450, 99 S.Ct. 1292, 59 L.Ed.2d 501, the United States Supreme Court concluded that statements made before a grand jury under a grant of use immunity--statements which the court characterized as involuntary--could not be used in a subsequent criminal trial for any purpose. But this was "a unique and limited case, demonstrating the essence of coerced testimony in the 'classic Fifth Amendment' sense because a witness who had been given use immunity was later ordered to testify or face contempt sanctions." (16 C.4th 739.) Other federal cases have explicitly allowed the limited use for impeachment of otherwise protected statements elicited from defendants in a variety of circumstances, and the California Courts of Appeal have ratified the rule that a criminal defendant's self-incrimination privilege does not shield the defendant from impeachment with prior inconsistent statements when he or she chooses to testify at trial. "Consistent with these cases, our decision to grant substantive use immunity to statements that a juvenile defendant made in preparation for a ... fitness hearing, while allowing the use of inconsistent statements for impeachment, protects the juvenile's constitutional rights but refuses to condone or encourage perjury." (16 C.4th 756.) (See People v. Humiston (1993) 20 C.A.4th 460, 476, 24 C.R.2d 515 [statements made by defendant to retained psychologist in course of evaluation for fitness for juvenile treatment were properly admitted for impeachment at subsequent murder trial]; 111 Harv. L. Rev. 837 [Macias].)

3. Nonjudicial Proceedings.

a. Grand Jury or Legislative Investigation.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 371

[§ 371] Grand Jury or Legislative Investigation.

In re Lemon (1936) 15 C.A.2d 82, 59 P.2d 213, involved a grand jury investigation of alleged graft in the police department. Petitioner, a police captain, was summoned as a witness. He refused to testify, contending that he was a "prospective defendant." Held, he was guilty of contempt. As a witness, he could refuse to answer any incriminating questions that might be asked. But, because the grand jury proceeding is not a criminal prosecution, a witness therein is not a party defendant, and he could not refuse to be sworn or to answer proper, nonincriminating questions. (15 C.A.2d 84.) (See 1 McCormick 5th, §118; 10 So. Cal. L. Rev. 211; 70 Harv. L. The same rule applies to hearings by legislative investigating committees. (See infra, §502.)

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

3. Nonjudicial Proceedings.

b. Administrative Disciplinary Proceeding.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 372

[§ 372] Administrative Disciplinary Proceeding.

An administrative proceeding to revoke or suspend a professional license is not a criminal trial and the licensee cannot refuse to testify. The licensee's only privilege is that of a witness, to decline to answer incriminating questions. (See In re Vaughan (1922) 189 C. 491, 495, 209 P. 353 [disbarment]; West Coast Home Imp. Co. v. Contractors' State License Bd. (1945) 72 C.A.2d 287, 300, 164 P.2d 811 [contractor's license revocation].)

In Black v. State Bar (1972) 7 C.3d 676, 684, 103 C.R. 288, 499 P.2d 968, petitioner contended that the State Bar's calling him as a witness in a disciplinary proceeding violated his privilege against self-incrimination, and that he had the right to an admonition that he did not have to be sworn or testify and that his refusal could not be used against him. The State Bar insisted that petitioner had no privilege to refuse to be sworn but could decline to answer questions on the ground his answers would incriminate him. Held, he was properly sworn.

(a) Under the state privilege against self-incrimination, an attorney does not have complete immunity from testifying but may refuse to answer questions where the attorney's testimony would tend to incriminate him or her. (7 C.3d 686, citing the text.)

(b) Decisions of the United States Supreme Court (e.g., Spevack v. Klein (1967) 385 U.S. 511, 87 S.Ct. 625, 17 L.Ed.2d 574, supra, §363) do not require that an attorney disciplinary proceeding be considered a criminal matter for purposes of the federal constitutional privilege against self-incrimination. (7 C.3d 687.)

(c) By testifying without objection, petitioner waived his privilege. And the State Bar has no duty to give admonitions about the privilege to an attorney represented by counsel. (7 C.3d 688.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

3. Nonjudicial Proceedings.

c. Required Registration.

1. Gambling Activity.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 373

[§ 373] Gambling Activity.

It was formerly held that the federal statute requiring registration of persons engaged in the business of receiving wagers did not compel any confession of past illegal acts, and that the privilege did not apply to future acts that may or may not be committed. (United States v. Kahriger (1953) 345 U.S. 22, 73 S.Ct. 510, 97 L.Ed. 754; see 67 Harv. L. Rev. 166; 14 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 947.) "The fact that he may elect to pay the tax and make the prescribed disclosures required by the Act is a matter of his choice. There is nothing compulsory about it, and, consequently, there is nothing violative of the Fifth Amendment. If he does not pay the occupational tax, proceeds to accept wagers, and is prosecuted therefor, as in this case, he cannot be compelled to testify and may claim his privilege." (Lewis v. United States (1955) 348 U.S. 419, 75 S.Ct. 415, 418, 99 L.Ed. 475, 480.) But the Kahriger and Lewis cases were overruled in Marchetti v. United States (1968) 390 U.S. 39, 88 S.Ct. 697, 19 L.Ed.2d 889.

Petitioner, a gambler, was convicted of violation of the federal wagering tax statutes by wilful failure to pay the occupational tax, and wilful failure to register before engaging in the business. (See 26 U.S.C., §§4411, 4412.) Held, reversed.

(a) The fact that the activity is unlawful does not prevent its taxation; the issue is whether the methods used in the wagering tax statutes are consistent with the Fifth Amendment privilege. (88 S.Ct. 700, 19 L.Ed.2d 895.) And, because the information obtained thereby is readily available to assist efforts of state and federal authorities to enforce penalties, the obligation to register and pay the tax creates a real and appreciable hazard of self-incrimination. (88 S.Ct. 702, 19 L.Ed.2d 897.)

(b) The basis of the Lewis case was the theory that the gambler merely had the choice of giving up the constitutional privilege to commence wagering activities. This reasoning is no longer persuasive: the question is not whether he has a right to violate state law, but "whether, having done so, he may be compelled to give evidence against himself." (88 S.Ct. 704, 19 L.Ed.2d 899.) In other words, "[t]he constitutional privilege was intended to shield the guilty and imprudent as well as the innocent and foresighted." (88 S.Ct. 704, 19 L.Ed.2d 899.)

(c) Both Kahriger and Lewis held that the privilege offers protection only to past and present acts; hence, it is unavailable to registration and tax requirements which are prospective. This is unsound: substantial hazards of incrimination as to past or present acts may stem from the requirements. "History, to be sure, offers no ready illustrations of the privilege's application to prospective acts, but the occasions on which such claims might appropriately have been made must necessarily have been very infrequent." (88 S.Ct. 705, 19 L.Ed.2d 901.) The central standard for application of the real privilege is whether the hazard of incrimination is substantial and real; this principle does not permit the rigid chronological distinction. (88 S.Ct. 705, 19 L.Ed.2d 901.)

After expressly overruling the two cases (88 S.Ct. 706, 19 L.Ed.2d 901), the Court restated its conclusions as follows: The taxing statutes are constitutional, but "those who properly assert the constitutional privilege as to these provisions may not be criminally punished for failure to comply with their requirements" (88 S.Ct. 709, 19 L.Ed.2d 905). (See Grosso v. United States (1968) 390 U.S. 62, 88 S.Ct. 709, 713, 19 L.Ed.2d 906, 911, 912, [following Marchetti]; Leary v. United States (1969) 395 U.S. 6, 89 S.Ct. 1532, 1539, 23 L.Ed.2d 57, 76 [following Marchetti and holding that the former Marijuana Tax Act violated self-incrimination privilege]; 82 Harv. L. Rev. 196; 5 San Diego L. Rev. 390; 1968/69 A.S. 130.)

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

3. Nonjudicial Proceedings.

c. Required Registration.

2. Possession of Firearm.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 374

[§ 374] Possession of Firearm.

The doctrine of Marchetti v. United States (1968) 390 U.S. 39, 88 S.Ct. 697, 19 L.Ed.2d 889, supra, §373, was applied to the National Firearms Act in Haynes v. United States (1968) 390 U.S. 85, 88 S.Ct. 722, 19 L.Ed.2d 923. Petitioner was charged with knowing possession of a firearm, not registered, as required by the National Firearms Act. His claim of Fifth Amendment privilege was rejected, and he pleaded guilty. Held, conviction reversed. The requirements are directed toward persons inherently suspect of criminal activities, and registration involves a substantial hazard of prosecution. (But see Galvan v. Superior Court (1969) 70 C.2d 851, 866, 76 C.R. 642, 452 P.2d 930, 1 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Introduction to Crimes, §57 [local gun registration ordinance, applicable to all persons, valid].)

Following the Haynes decision, supra, Congress revised the National Firearms Act. In United States v. Freed (1971) 401 U.S. 601, 91 S.Ct. 1112, 1116, 28 L.Ed.2d 356, 360, the court held the amended act valid.

(a) Unlike the former statute, which taxed only weapons used principally by persons engaged in unlawful activities, the amended act covers all possessors of specified firearms (e.g., grenades), except for the federal government itself. Under the former statute, any possessor of an included weapon was compelled to register and disclose the fact of possession, "a provision which we held meant that a possessor must furnish potentially incriminating information which the Federal Government made available to state, local, and other federal officials." But under the amended act, only possessors who lawfully make, manufacture or import firearms can and must register them. While it is unlawful for any person to receive or possess an unregistered firearm, the transferee does not and cannot register. (91 S.Ct. 1115, 28 L.Ed.2d 359.)

(c) The transferor does the actual registering, though the application must be supported by the transferee's photograph and fingerprints.

"The transferor--not the transferee--makes any incriminating statements. True, the transferee, if he wants the firearm, must cooperate to the extent of supplying fingerprints and photograph. But the information he supplies makes him the lawful, not the unlawful possessor of the firearm." (91 S.Ct. 1116, 28 L.Ed.2d 360.) The claim that these procedures will incriminate the transferee in the future improperly "assumes the existence of a periphery of the Self-Incrimination Clause which protects a person against incrimination not only against past or present transgressions but which supplies insulation for a career of crime about to be launched." (91 S.Ct. 1117, 28 L.Ed.2d 361.)

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

3. Nonjudicial Proceedings.

c. Required Registration.

3. Criminal Subversive Activity.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 375

[§ 375] Criminal Subversive Activity.

In People v. McCormick (1951) 102 C.A.2d Supp. 954, 228 P.2d 349, the court held unconstitutional a county ordinance requiring members of Communist organizations to register as such with the sheriff. Compliance might constitute a virtual confession of violation of the Criminal Syndicalism Act, and would often furnish important facts for a prosecution under that Act. As to the scope of the constitutional guarantee, the court said: "The words ... mean that no person shall be compelled to make any statement, orally or in writing, anywhere or at any time, which may be made use of against him in any criminal prosecution, then pending or which might thereafter be brought against him. With almost complete unanimity the cases find in the words more than is literally there. The protection afforded includes but goes beyond the assurance to a defendant on trial in a criminal case that he will not be compelled to testify against himself. The protection intended applies even before the commencement of a criminal case and secures one who may reasonably be expected to be a defendant from furnishing ammunition to be used against him." (102 C.A.2d Supp. 957.) (See 9 Stanf. L. Rev. 375.)

The United States Supreme Court took the same position in Albertson v. Subversive Activities Control Bd. (1965) 382 U.S. 70, 86 S.Ct. 194, 15 L.Ed.2d 165. The Subversive Activities Control Board ordered the Communist Party of the United States to register with the Attorney General as a Communist-action organization. The Party failed, petitioner members failed, and they sought review of the subsequent orders that they register. Held, the orders were violative of the Fifth Amendment. The registration form required admission of membership in the Party, which could be used for prosecution under the Smith Act or the Subversive Activities Control Act. And such cases as Quinn v. United States (1955) 349 U.S. 155, 75 S.Ct. 668, 99 L.Ed.2d 964, infra, §502, holding that mere association with the Party presented a sufficient threat of prosecution to support a claim of the witness' privilege, were controlling: "[I]f the admission cannot be compelled in oral testimony, we do not see how compulsion in writing makes a difference for constitutional purposes." (86 S.Ct. 198, 15 L.Ed.2d 171.) (See 80 Harv. L. Rev. 207; 34 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 467 ["self-reporting schemes" and the Fifth Amendment since Albertson].)

[§ 376] Supervised Occupation.

In People v. Stuller (1970) 10 C.A.3d 582, 89 C.R. 158, defendant applied for a job as a bartender after he had become a suspect in various sex crimes. Because a local ordinance required bartenders to register with and be fingerprinted by the police, the authorities arranged for defendant to handwrite (rather than print) his application form and to give fingerprint specimens. Both the writing and the prints were compared with evidence found at the crime scenes. When the prints were seen to match, defendant was arrested. Held, no error; the job application was in no manner incriminating. "The giving of his name, age, residence, physical description, and last place of employment are the types and kinds of information commonly required by any prospective employer and did not furnish incriminating information relative to the criminal offenses under review, nor was such information used against him in such prosecution." ### XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

3. Nonjudicial Proceedings.

d. Required Disclosure of Identity.

1. Driver's Identity and Involvement in Accident.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 377

[§ 377] Driver's Identity and Involvement in Accident.

(1) Duty To Stop and Divulge Identity. In Byers v. Justice Court (1969) 71 C.2d 1039, 80 C.R. 553, 458 P.2d 465, the California Supreme Court interpreted decisions of the United States Supreme Court as requiring, in connection with Veh.C. 20002(a), that the privilege against self-incrimination be made applicable "when a driver of a motor vehicle involved in an accident is confronted with a statutory requirement to stop and divulge his identity and reasonably believes that compliance with the statute will result in self-incrimination." (71 C.2d 1039.) Rather than declare the reporting statute unconstitutional, however, the court imposed a use restriction on the required information; i.e., prosecuting authorities were forbidden to use the data divulged in compliance with Veh.C. 20002(a). (71 C.2d 1056.) (See 58 Cal. L. Rev. 988.)

In California v. Byers (1971) 402 U.S. 424, 91 S.Ct. 1535, 29 L.Ed.2d 9, the United States Supreme Court, by a plurality opinion, vacated the California court's judgment.

(a) Although the Vehicle Code defines some criminal offenses, the statute is essentially regulatory, not criminal. Veh.C. 20002(a) was intended to promote the satisfaction of civil liabilities arising from automobile accidents, and is directed at "all persons who drive automobiles in California." In contrast to registration statutes affecting a highly selective group inherently suspected of criminal activities, like gambling, this statute is directed to the public at large. "Driving an automobile, unlike gambling, is a lawful activity. Moreover, it is not a criminal offense under California law to be a driver 'involved in an accident.' An accident may be the fault of others; it may occur without any driver having been at fault. No empirical data is suggested in support of the conclusion that there is a relevant correlation between being a driver and criminal prosecution of drivers. So far as any available information instructs us, most accidents occur without creating criminal liability even if one or both of the drivers are guilty of negligence as a matter of tort law." (91 S.Ct. 1539, 29 L.Ed.2d 18.)

(b) Even if the reporting requirement were considered "incriminating" in the traditional sense, it is not "testimonial" in the Fifth Amendment sense. Compliance requires that the driver stop at the scene and give his or her name and address. "The act of stopping is no more testimonial--indeed less so in some respects--than requiring a person in custody to stand or walk in a police lineup, to speak prescribed words, to give samples of handwriting, fingerprints or blood. ... Disclosure of name and address is an essentially neutral act. Whatever the collateral consequences of disclosing name and address, the statutory purpose is to implement the state police power to regulate use of motor vehicles." (91 S.Ct. 1539, 29 L.Ed.2d 19.) This report of identity satisfies valid state needs, "always subject to the driver's right to assert a Fifth Amendment privilege concerning specific inquiries." (91 S.Ct. 1540, 29 L.Ed.2d 20.)

The concurring justice analyzed the noncriminal governmental purpose in securing the information, the necessity for self-reporting and the limited nature of the required disclosures, and concluded that the Fifth Amendment did not warrant imposition of a use restriction on the statutory information. (91 S.Ct. 1553, 29 L.Ed.2d 35.)

One of the minority justices said: "Apparently the plurality believes that a statute which required all robbers to stop and leave their names and addresses with their victims would not involve the compulsion of 'communicative or testimonial' evidence." (91 S.Ct. 1560, 29 L.Ed.2d 44.) (See 85 Harv. L. Rev. 269; Garner v. United States (1976) 424 U.S. 648, 96 S.Ct. 1178, 1186, footnote 16, 47 L.Ed.2d 370, 382 [California v. Byers holds "only that requiring certain basic disclosures fundamental to a neutral reporting scheme does not violate the privilege"].)

(2) Duty To Divulge Involvement in Accident If Not Reasonably Apparent. In People v. Kroncke (1999) 70 C.A.4th 1535, 83 C.R.2d 493, 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Public Peace and Welfare, §250, the court interpreted Veh.C. 20001 and 20003 as requiring a driver to disclose to police officers investigating a vehicular accident that he or she had been involved in the accident if that involvement is not reasonably apparent. (70 C.A.4th 1543.) Relying on California v. Byers, supra, the court further held that the duty did not implicate the driver's self-incrimination privilege. (70 C.A.4th 1545.)

[§ 378] Loiterer's Identity.

If the public safety demands identification, a person loitering without apparent reason must identify himself or herself and account for his or her presence if requested to do so by a peace officer; failure to do so amounts to disorderly conduct. (P.C. 647(e); see 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Public Peace and Welfare, §50.) In People v. Solomon (1973) 33 C.A.3d 429, 108 C.R. 867, the court held that the identification requirement did not violate the privilege against self-incrimination, but concluded that the "account for one's presence" requirement, in order to avoid impingement on the privilege, was operative only to the extent that it assisted in producing credible and reliable identification. (33 C.A.3d 435.)

In Kolender v. Lawson (1983) 461 U.S. 352, 103 S.Ct. 1855, 75 L.Ed.2d 903, 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Public Peace and Welfare, §50, the United States Supreme Court, after noting that People v. Solomon had construed P.C. 647(e) as requiring "credible and reliable" identification, held that the statute was unconstitutionally vague in failing to sufficiently describe how a suspect could satisfy this requirement. ### XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

3. Nonjudicial Proceedings.

e. False Statements in Required Reports.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 379

[§ 379] False Statements in Required Reports.

The constitutionality of a registration statute is irrelevant to the validity of a registrant's conviction for making a fraudulent statement to the federal government. (Bryson v. United States (1969) 396 U.S. 64, 90 S.Ct. 355, 358, 24 L.Ed.2d 264, 268.)

In the Bryson case, defendant had falsely denied affiliation with the Communist Party in an affidavit he filed with the National Labor Relations Board. Ten years after his conviction for doing so, he sought to set it aside by arguing that the government had no right to ask the questions which were falsely answered. Held, relief denied; a citizen has no privilege to fraudulently answer a question the government should not have asked. "Our legal system provides methods for challenging the Government's right to ask questions--lying is not one of them. A citizen may decline to answer the question, or answer it honestly, but he cannot with impunity knowingly and willfully answer with a falsehood." (90 S.Ct. 360, 24 L.Ed.2d 271.) The statutory basis for the agency's request for information provided enough jurisdiction to punish the fraudulent statements. (90 S.Ct. 359, 24 L.Ed.2d 270.)

In United States v. Knox (1969) 396 U.S. 77, 90 S.Ct. 363, 24 L.Ed.2d 275, defendant was charged with knowingly and wilfully understating the number of employees who were accepting wagers on his behalf. He contended that the Fifth Amendment barred punishment because the filings were not voluntary but were compelled by the Internal Revenue Code. If he had filed truthful and complete forms as required by federal law, he would have incriminated himself under Texas wagering laws; if he had filed no forms, he would have subjected himself to federal prosecution for that failure. He therefore chose to file a fraudulent form. Held, the Fifth Amendment gave him no privilege to lie. When defendant communicated false information, this was not testimonial compulsion. If under statutory pressure he committed a criminal act, he "may have a defense to this prosecution under the traditional doctrine that a person is not criminally responsible for an act committed under duress." (90 S.Ct. 367, 24 L.Ed.2d 280.) (See LaChance v. Erickson (1998) 522 U.S. 262, 118 S.Ct. 753, 756, 139 L.Ed.2d 695, 700 [federal employee being investigated for employment-related misconduct may additionally be punished for making false statements in course of investigation; citing Bryson]; 22 Stanf. L. Rev. 783 [suggesting that false statements, given under apparent compulsion, should be subject to privilege].)

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

3. Nonjudicial Proceedings.

f. Probation Revocation Hearing.

1. Limited Exclusionary Rule.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 380

[§ 380] Limited Exclusionary Rule.

Formerly, a probationer subject to probation revocation for conduct which also made the probationer liable to criminal prosecution faced a difficult testimonial choice. If the probationer's revocation hearing took place before his or her pending trial on criminal charges, the probationer's opportunity to be heard at the hearing (perhaps to offer mitigating circumstances) was minimized by fear that the testimony could later be used against the probationer in court. But if the probationer failed to testify at the hearing, the lack of explanation for his or her apparently criminal conduct could well lead to a revocation of probation. In People v. Coleman (1975) 13 C.3d 867, 120 C.R. 384, 533 P.2d 1024, the Supreme Court in a nonretroactive opinion resolved this dilemma, not on constitutional grounds but in the interests of justice and the exercise of its inherent supervisory powers over the trial courts. The court thought that the compelled election of self-accusation, perjury or injurious silence was unfair and opposed to the underlying policy of the self-incrimination privilege:

"We accordingly declare as a judicial rule of evidence that henceforth upon timely objection the testimony of a probationer at a probation revocation hearing held prior to the disposition of criminal charges arising out of the alleged violation of the conditions of his probation, and any evidence derived from such testimony, is inadmissible against the probationer during subsequent proceedings on the related criminal charges, save for purposes of impeachment or rebuttal where the probationer's revocation hearing testimony or evidence derived therefrom and his testimony on direct examination at the criminal proceeding are so clearly inconsistent as to warrant the trial court's admission of the revocation hearing testimony or its fruits in order to reveal to the trier of fact the probability that the probationer has committed perjury at either the trial or the revocation hearing." (13 C.3d 889.)

In the event that the probationer's testimony at the revocation hearing is offered, the following procedures are appropriate:

(a) Objections and notice. The defendant may object at the trial to prosecutorial use of revocation hearing testimony or its fruits. "[I]t is to be hoped that the prosecution will whenever practicable anticipate the probationer's objections, and that the probationer will cooperate in securing pretrial resolution of his objections. At the least, it is incumbent upon the prosecution to give sufficient notice to the probationer before seeking to introduce revocation hearing testimony to allow him to press his objections prior to any prejudicial exposure of the testimony to the jury. Both parties bear responsibility for having such objections resolved with a minimum of interruption to the normal course of trial." (13 C.3d 889.)

(b) Disguising source of testimony. The prosecution should present the revocation hearing testimony, if admitted, in a form that "disguises the nature of the legal proceeding in which the testimony was adduced, so that the jury--unless already otherwise so informed--remains unaware of the fact that the accused has previously been convicted of a crime." (13 C.3d 889, footnote 19.)

(c) Standards of admissibility. The evidentiary standards to determine admissibility are like those applicable to a claim that evidence has been gained through an illegal search or seizure, a coerced confession or some other illegal or improper official conduct, even though those standards are somewhat vague. (13 C.3d 890, footnote 20.)

(d) Respective evidentiary burdens. The probationer must meet the initial burden of producing evidence that the charges against him or her are related to the circumstances in issue at the probation revocation hearing. If this is established, the prosecution must either prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the hearing testimony is not so related, or establish that it is nevertheless admissible for impeachment or rebuttal purposes. When a probationer objects to the admission of evidence which the probationer contends is the fruit of his or her revocation hearing testimony, the probationer must meet the burden of producing evidence not only of a relationship between the probation revocation proceeding and the criminal charges against him or her, but also of a relationship between his or her revocation hearing testimony and the allegedly derivative evidence to which the probationer has objected. "Once these prima facie showings have been made, the objection must be sustained unless the prosecution either (1) proves by a preponderance of the evidence the lack of any relationship between the criminal charges and the issues in the revocation proceeding; (2) proves by a preponderance of the evidence the lack of any impermissible relationship between the testimony at the revocation proceeding and the evidence offered in the criminal proceeding; or (3) establishes that the evidence is nevertheless admissible for the limited purpose of impeachment or rebuttal." (13 C.3d 890.)

(e) False testimony by probationer. "At trial, as at his revocation hearing, a probationer who chooses to testify must testify truthfully, if he is to have the benefit of the exclusionary rule announced herein." (13 C.3d 893.) Besides being liable to impeachment if the probationer's testimony on direct examination contradicts his or her testimony at a revocation hearing, a probationer who testifies falsely in either proceeding runs a substantial risk of successful prosecution for perjury. (13 C.3d 893, footnote 21.) However, the mere fact that the probationer takes the stand at his or her trial does not open the door to prosecutorial use of his revocation hearing testimony. "The probationer may well have testified truthfully and incriminatingly at his revocation hearing, and yet testify truthfully and exculpatory at his trial by carefully avoiding contradiction of his revocation hearing testimony. In such an instance, the prosecution cannot seek on cross-examination to go beyond the scope of the probationer's direct testimony by asking him either to admit the truth of or perjurally to deny his admissions at the revocation hearing." (13 C.3d 893.)

(f) Rule limited to revocation hearing. The new exclusionary rule applies only to the formal, dispositive probation revocation hearing. (13 C.3d 894.) At a prerevocation hearing or a preliminary hearing on criminal charges which also serves as a prerevocation hearing or at an equivalent hearing, there is no dispositive action taken. Therefore, "neither the pressure on the probationer to make full disclosure of his conduct, nor the interest of the state in having him make such disclosure, is sufficiently compelling to warrant the procedural burden of applying the exclusionary rule to testimony of a probationer adduced at this early stage of the probation revocation process." (13 C.3d 896.)

(g) Order of proceeding. The most desirable method for handling problems of concurrent criminal and probation revocation proceedings may well be for revocation proceedings not even to be initiated until after disposition of the related criminal proceedings. But if a probationer desires to obtain a speedy resolution of his or her probation status notwithstanding related criminal liability, the probationer properly may offer to waive the benefit of the exclusionary rule if the court allows the probation revocation hearing to proceed in advance of disposition of the related criminal liability. (13 C.3d 896.) (See 64 Cal. L. Rev. 516; 9 Pacific L. J. 949 ["Catch-22": A Probationer's and Parolee's Choice Between the Right to be Heard and the Privilege Against Self-Incrimination].)

People v. Coleman was followed in People v. Jasper (1983) 33 C.3d 931, 191 C.R. 648, 663 P.2d 206. Although noting that whether a revocation hearing should be held before trial is within the trial judge's discretion, the court disapproved any "routine disregard" of Coleman's admonition that "the most desirable method" may be to hold revocation hearings after trial (see supra). (33 C.3d 935.) (See also People v. Johnson (1984) 159 C.A.3d 163, 167, 205 C.R. 427 [following Jasper and Coleman]; People v. Carter (1993) 19 C.A.4th 1236, 1248, 23 C.R.2d 888, infra, §445 [Coleman as creating constitutionally compelled kind of use immunity].)

3. Nonjudicial Proceedings.
  - f. Probation Revocation Hearing.
2. Rule Survives Proposition 8.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 381

[§ 381] Rule Survives Proposition 8.

In People v. Weaver (1985) 39 C.3d 654, 217 C.R. 245, 703 P.2d 1139, the court held that the limited exclusionary remedy of People v. Coleman (1975) 13 C.3d 867, 120 C.R. 384, 533 P.2d 1024, supra, §380, survived Proposition 8 (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §§8, 9).

In 1981, defendant, after pleading guilty to possession of a sawed-off shotgun, was placed on probation. In 1983, he was charged with possession of a weapon and held to answer. The district attorney then began probation revocation proceedings for the same conduct that was the basis for the criminal charge. Defendant moved for a continuance of the revocation hearing until after the trial on the charges, arguing that (a) prior to Coleman, a defendant had to choose between testifying at the hearing and jeopardizing the privilege against self-incrimination, or remaining silent and surrendering the due process right to present evidence on one's own behalf; (b) Coleman relieved a defendant from that dilemma by holding that his or her testimony at the hearing could not be used against him or her in a subsequent trial on the related charge except under limited circumstances for impeachment or rebuttal; but (c) the Coleman use immunity rule was nullified by Proposition 8; hence, (d) the Supreme Court must exercise its supervisory powers to grant probationers the right to continue the revocation hearing until after trial on the charges.

The trial judge denied the motion and revoked probation. Held, affirmed. The Coleman rule was reaffirmed in People v. Jasper (1983) 33 C.3d 931, 191 C.R. 648, 663 P.2d 206, a pre-Proposition 8 case, as affording adequate relief from the dilemma. And Ramona R. v. Superior Court (1985) 37 C.3d 802, 210 C.R. 204, 693 P.2d 789, supra, §370, held that the "privilege" exception in Proposition 8 applied to the use immunities derived from Coleman. In other words, Coleman's exclusionary rule could be deemed a "statutory" rule because the self-incrimination statute itself (Ev.C. 940) "merely adopts existing judicial decisions related to the privilege." (39 C.3d 659.) Because Coleman and its limited exclusionary remedy survived the adoption of Proposition 8, defendants would not be deprived of the benefits of that remedy in any future trial of the pending criminal charges, and defendants cannot attack revocation of their probation on that basis. (39 C.3d 660.) Three justices, agreeing that Coleman survived Proposition 8, nevertheless thought its remedy inadequate to protect probationers facing pretrial revocation proceedings. (39 C.3d 660.)

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

3. Nonjudicial Proceedings.

g. Psychiatric Examination on Competency.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 382

[§ 382] Psychiatric Examination on Competency.

In Tarantino v. Superior Court (1975) 48 C.A.3d 465, 122 C.R. 61, the judge, pursuant to P.C. 1367 et seq., appointed two psychiatrists to examine defendant to determine his competency to stand trial. Defendant refused to submit to psychiatric questioning in the absence of his attorney. Held, compelling a defendant to submit to such an examination does not violate the self-incrimination privilege.

(a) The purpose of the inquiry is to assure that one who is mentally unable to defend oneself not be tried upon a criminal charge. "This purpose is entirely unrelated to any element of guilt, and there is no indication of any legislative intent that any result of this inquiry into a wholly collateral matter be used in determining the issue of guilt. Moreover, the issue of present competency, once the trial court's doubt has been expressed, must be decided before any trial of the charged offense. Both humanitarian and practical considerations call for a judicially declared immunity." (48 C.A.3d 469.)

(b) Thus, neither the statements to the psychiatrists nor their fruits may be used at the trial, either under the plea of not guilty, or of not guilty by reason of insanity. "This immunity will be extended by the federal courts to use of such testimony or its fruits in any possible federal prosecution." (48 C.A.3d 470.)

(c) "We recognize that this immunity normally will require that the psychiatrists appointed for examination under section 1367 et seq. be other than those appointed for inquiry under section 1026." (48 C.A.3d 470.)

In People v. Harris (1987) 192 C.A.3d 943, 237 C.R. 747, the court approved Tarantino's view that the statements of the examining psychiatrists cannot be used at the trial: "Accordingly, we have no difficulty in requiring that in the event the prosecution wishes to rebut defense testimony concerning the defendant's mental capacity to commit an offense, the prosecution must conduct a psychiatric examination using psychiatrists or psychologists other than those who examined the defendant for the purposes of determining competency to stand trial." (192 C.A.3d 949.)

In People v. Haskett (1990) 52 C.3d 210, 276 C.R. 80, 801 P.2d 323, a capital murder case, the defense requested appointment of a psychiatrist to evaluate possible defenses. At the penalty phase of the trial, defendant called the doctor to testify on his behalf. On cross-examination, the doctor related admissions by defendant, without objection from the defense, and the testimony was repeated at defendant's second penalty trial, over his objection. On appeal, defendant claimed that his admissions should have been excluded because he had not been given Miranda warnings. Held, there was no violation of defendant's Fifth Amendment rights. Defendant failed to make a Miranda objection at either trial.

Further, Miranda rules apply only to custodial interrogation, not to questioning by a physician at the defense's request. Here, the doctor had correctly told defendant that nothing he revealed could be used against him without the consent of his attorney. (52 C.3d 243.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

"[A]n accused person cannot on the basis of the Fifth Amendment refuse to submit to a mental examination by a prosecution expert when properly ordered to do so in connection with a section 1368 hearing. The Fifth Amendment does not come into play in this situation because a judicially declared rule of immunity provides the necessary assurance that an accused will not be convicted of a crime by use of any information obtained at a court-compelled mental examination or the use of information obtained from that examination, or that his sentencing may be affected by such information or the fruits thereof. By allowing the prosecution to investigate facts crucial to the determination of competency without prejudice to the defendant, the rule of immunity also enhances the search for truth." (Baqleh v. Superior Court (2002) 100 C.A.4th 478, 502, 122 C.R.2d 673; on right to counsel in competency proceeding, see 5 Cal. Crim. #### B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

3. Nonjudicial Proceedings.

h. Psychiatric Examination on Insanity.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 383

[§ 383] Psychiatric Examination on Insanity.

In People v. Williams (1988) 197 C.A.3d 1320, 243 C.R. 480, defendant pleaded not guilty and not guilty by reason of insanity. Dr. G, a court-appointed psychiatrist, examined him pursuant to P.C. 1027, in order to testify in the sanity phase of a bifurcated trial. At the end of the guilt phase, the prosecutor was allowed to reopen, and Dr. G testified that defendant, in the course of the sanity examination, had confessed to the charged crimes. Held, this was reversible error.

(a) In re Spencer (1965) 63 C.2d 400, 46 C.R. 753, 406 P.2d 33, Tarantino v. Superior Court (1975) 48 C.A.3d 465, 122 C.R. 61, supra, §382, and People v. Arcega (1982) 32 C.3d 504, 186 C.R. 94, 651 P.2d 338, recognize that statements of a defendant to court-appointed psychiatrists may not be used in the trial of the issue of guilt. Tarantino and Arcega distinguish between competency and insanity examinations, because the purpose of the competency examination is unrelated to any element of guilt; hence Tarantino's immunity is broader than Spencer's, which exists only so long as defendant's mental state at the time of the crime is not in issue. In all other respects the rationale of Tarantino and Arcega applies equally to an insanity examination compelled by P.C. 1027. Because defendant did not put his mental state in issue at the guilt phase, the admission of Dr. G's testimony violated his constitutional privilege against self-incrimination. (197 C.A.3d 1324.)

(b) The judicially created privilege rules of Spencer and Arcega survived Proposition 8. (197 C.A.3d 1320.) And, as pointed out in Arcega, federal constitutional law compels the same result. (197 C.A.3d 1325, discussing Estelle v. Smith (1981) 451 U.S. 454, 101 S.Ct. 1866, 68 L.Ed.2d 359, and Buchanan v. Kentucky (1987) 483 U.S. 402, 107 S.Ct. 2906, 97 L.Ed.2d 336.)

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

4. Evidence Without Testimony or Compulsion.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 384

[§ 384] Evidence Without Testimony or Compulsion.

The privilege protects against testimonial compulsion; i.e., the defendant cannot be compelled to give oral testimony or produce documents or real evidence. Thus, if nontestimonial evidence is obtained from the defendant voluntarily or without compulsion, there is no violation of the privilege. (See People v. Trujillo (1948) 32 C.2d 105, 112, 194 P.2d 681 [quoting Wigmore]; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2263 et seq.; 28 A.L.R.2d 1115 [admissibility of fingerprints or palm prints]; 45 A.L.R.4th 1178 [admissibility of bare footprint evidence].)

Thus, in People v. Jones (1931) 112 C.A. 68, 71, 296 P. 317, where defendant left his fingerprints on a porch railing, their admission was held proper. In People v. Trujillo, supra, defendant's clothing was tested by an expert to match fibers with those of apparel on the victim's body, and no violation of the privilege was found. In People v. Salas (1936) 17 C.A.2d 75, 78, 61 P.2d 771, a trial for possession and transportation of morphine, there was no violation of privilege in permitting testimony of a narcotics inspector as to hypodermic needle scars on defendant's arm, where defendant had voluntarily submitted to a physical examination. (See 28 Cal. L. Rev. 391.) And in People v. Robarge (1953) 41 C.2d 628, 632, 262 P.2d 14, there was no violation where defendant, charged with robbery, was identified by a janitor at the police station after police placed dark glasses on him without any objection. (See also People v. Saldivar (1967) 249 C.A.2d 670, 672, 57 C.R. 731 [defendant, with needle marks on arm, on request of parole officer gave specimen of urine indicating presence of morphine]; 43 So. Cal. L. Rev. 597 [taking of physical evidence from suspect].)

In People v. Sanchez (1994) 24 C.A.4th 1012, 30 C.R.2d 111, a murder case, defendant's sisters found inculpatory writings by defendant. They turned them over to an attorney, who gave them to a public defender investigator, who in turn gave them to defendant's attorney. He placed them in a sealed envelope and delivered them to the court clerk. The prosecution learned of the writings independently, and acquired them when the trial judge granted the prosecution's motion to produce them. Held, affirmed. Defendant's privilege against self-incrimination was not violated when the trial judge gave the prosecution his writings. Although the writings were incriminating, personal to defendant, and communicative in nature, they were not obtained by compulsion. When "a defendant, without being compelled to do so, creates inculpatory writings and the government obtains them without compelling the defendant to authenticate or vouch for those writings, the Fifth Amendment is not violated." (24 C.A.4th 1024.)

A dissenting justice thought that the preliminary issue, whether defense counsel had a duty to disclose the writings, was not "cut and dried," and the majority should not have resolved it adversely to defendant without hearing argument from the parties. (24 C.A.4th 1032.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

5. Compulsion Without Testimony.

a. General Rule: Privilege Not Applicable.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 385

[§ 385] General Rule: Privilege Not Applicable.

Many authorities, starting from the assumption that the privilege protects only against compelled testimony, take the position that there is no violation where the testimonial process is not involved, even though the evidence involves some act or submission by the defendant and some degree of compulsion is employed in obtaining it. (See Model C., Rules 201(2) and Comment, 205; 1 McCormick 5th, §124; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2265; 1984 A.S. 351; 18 A.L.R.2d 796 [pretrial requirement that accused try on apparel as violating constitutional rights]; 25 A.L.R.2d 1407 [requiring submission to physical examination or test as violation of constitutional rights]; 3 A.L.R.4th 374 [requiring criminal defendant to exhibit self, perform physical act or participate in demonstration during trial].) (On compelled production of child, see infra, §386.)

This principle has been approved and applied in many federal and California cases. (See Doe v. United States (1988) 487 U.S. 201, 108 S.Ct. 2341, 2347, 101 L.Ed.2d 184, 197 [defendant, under investigation by grand jury for receipt of unreported income, compelled to execute forms authorizing disclosure of foreign bank records]; Pennsylvania v. Muniz (1990) 496 U.S. 582, 110 S.Ct. 2638, 2645, 110 L.Ed.2d 528, 545 [videotape of booking of drunk driving suspect, showing slurring of speech and other behavior indicating intoxication, properly admitted into evidence]; People v. Clark (1941) 18 C.2d 449, 460, 116 P.2d 56 [defendant compelled to stand and remove visor he was wearing so that identifying witnesses might have unobstructed view of his features]; People v. Eberhard (1952) 114 C.A.2d 133, 136, 249 P.2d 590 [defendant, narcotics suspect, taken to physician who examined his upper arm for puncture wounds]; People v. Haeussler (1953) 41 C.2d 252, 257, 260 P.2d 8 [citing out of state cases holding no violation in placing defendant's foot in footprint at scene of crime, in taking scrapings from beneath defendant's fingernails, in removing defendant's clothing for comparisons and tests, in taking fingerprints, etc.]; People v. Smith (1956) 142 C.A.2d 287, 293, 298 P.2d 540 [burglary suspect compelled to take off clothes while officers photographed scars on his body]; People v. Duroncelay (1957) 48 C.2d 766, 770, 312 P.2d 690; People v. Lopez (1963) 60 C.2d 223, 244, 32 C.R. 424, 384 P.2d 16 ["The privilege extends only to testimonial compulsion; requiring defendants to assume a certain pose for purposes of identification, or to speak for voice identification, is not within the privilege"]; People v. Smith (1970) 13 C.A.3d 897, 910, 91 C.R. 786 [defendant at police station refused to don jacket and cap found at scene of crime; prosecutor could introduce evidence of this refusal as indicating consciousness of guilt]; People v. Turner (1971) 22 C.A.3d 174, 180, 99 C.R. 186 [defendant properly asked to dress in scarf and sunglasses similar to those worn by woman photographed cashing forged check]; People v. Holt (1972) 28 C.A.3d 343, 350, 104 C.R. 572 [defendant properly asked to wear hat similar to one worn by armed robber, to stand and hold gun in left hand, and to repeat words uttered by robber]; People v. Traylor (1972) 23 C.A.3d 323, 332, 100 C.R. 116 [narcotics expert permitted to examine defendant out of court during prosecution's rebuttal to seek evidence of narcotics from condition of defendant's head, arms, hands and legs]; People v. Allen (1974) 41 C.A.3d 196, 202, 115 C.R. 839 ["The taking of a hair sample involves physical evidence rather than testimonial compulsion. The invasion of defendant's privacy is minor"]; People v. Superior Court (1992) 8 C.A.4th 1176, 1179, 10 C.R.2d 855.)

In contrast to the above cases, Goldsmith v. Superior Court (1984) 152 C.A.3d 76, 85, 199 C.R. 366, following a Massachusetts case, held that the compelled production of a firearm, allegedly used to commit charged offenses, is a testimonial communication protected by the privilege. And, Pennsylvania v. Muniz, supra, 110 S.Ct. 2649, 110 L.Ed.2d 550, held that defendant's response that he did not know the date of his sixth birthday was testimonial, because he had to either incriminate himself by admitting that he did not know or state the incorrect date.

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

5. Compulsion Without Testimony.

b. Compelled Production of Child.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 386

[§ 386] Compelled Production of Child.

In Baltimore City Dept. of Social Services v. Bouknight (1990) 493 U.S. 549, 110 S.Ct. 900, 107 L.Ed.2d 992, Maurice M., an abused child, was removed by court order from the custody of his mother, respondent Bouknight, and placed in shelter care. Later he was returned to Bouknight by an order containing extensive conditions of supervision. She violated the terms and concealed the child, and was held in civil contempt for failure to comply with an order to produce the child. She then claimed that the contempt order violated the Fifth Amendment guarantee against self-incrimination. Held, the privilege did not apply.

(a) Although a person may not claim the Amendment's protections based upon the incrimination that may result from the contents or nature of the thing demanded, Bouknight contended that the act of production would amount to testimony regarding her control over and possession of Maurice. (110 S.Ct. 905, 107 L.Ed.2d 1000.) But assuming that this limited testimonial assertion is sufficiently incriminating and sufficiently testimonial, she may not invoke the privilege to resist the production order because she assumed custodial duties and production is required as part of a noncriminal regulatory regime. (110 S.Ct. 905, 107 L.Ed.2d 1000.)

(b) The Court on several occasions has recognized that the privilege may not be invoked to resist compliance with a regulatory regime constructed to effect the state's public purposes unrelated to the enforcement of its criminal laws. (110 S.Ct. 905, 107 L.Ed.2d 1000, discussing Shapiro v. United States (1948) 335 U.S. 1, 68 S.Ct. 1375, 92 L.Ed. 1787, infra, §456, and California v. Byers (1971) 402 U.S. 424, 91 S.Ct. 1535, 29 L.Ed.2d 9, supra, §377.) This principle applies here: "Once Maurice was adjudicated a child in need of assistance, his care and safety became the particular object of the State's regulatory interests." (110 S.Ct. 907, 107 L.Ed.2d 1002.) (See 104 Harv. L. Rev. 178.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

5. Compulsion Without Testimony.

c. Handwriting Exemplars.

1. Legally Procured Exemplar.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 387

[§ 387] Legally Procured Exemplar.

In People v. Graves (1966) 64 C.2d 208, 49 C.R. 386, 411 P.2d 114, defendant was charged with forgery of checks. At a police inspector's request, before the accusatory stage had been reached, he gave handwriting exemplars. After his arrest and while in custody, he gave additional exemplars on request, without warning of his rights. In affirming the conviction, the court expressly refrained from deciding whether defendant could have refused to make the exemplars. (64 C.2d 211.)

The issue thus left open was decided in Gilbert v. California (1967) 388 U.S. 263, 87 S.Ct. 1951, 18 L.Ed.2d 1178. Although the conviction was reversed for lack of counsel at the lineup (see infra, §392), the court held as follows on the exemplars:

(a) There was no violation of the Sixth Amendment right to counsel, for taking an exemplar is not a "critical" stage of the criminal proceedings. An unrepresentative exemplar can be challenged by introduction of proper ones; hence, defendant has an opportunity for meaningful confrontation of the state's case and presentation of his own evidence. (87 S.Ct. 1953, 18 L.Ed.2d 1183.)

(b) There was no violation of the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination. "One's voice and handwriting are, of course, means of communication. It by no means follows, however, that every compulsion of an accused to use his voice or write compels a communication within the cover of the privilege. A mere handwriting exemplar, in contrast to the content of what is written, like the voice or body itself, is an identifying physical characteristic outside its protection." (87 S.Ct. 1953, 18 L.Ed.2d 1183.)

Other cases are to the same effect. (See People v. Villarino (1970) 7 C.A.3d 56, 66, 86 C.R. 338, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Documentary Evidence, §16; People v. Hess (1970) 10 C.A.3d 1071, 1076, 90 C.R. 268, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Documentary Evidence, §16; People v. Stuller (1970) 10 C.A.3d 582, 597, 89 C.R. 158 [exemplars obtained by trickery not used until after time police could have required defendant to furnish handwriting samples]; United States v. Mara (1973) 410 U.S. 19, 93 S.Ct. 774, 776, 35 L.Ed.2d 99, 103; United States v. Euge (1980) 444 U.S. 707, 100 S.Ct. 874, 878, 63 L.Ed.2d 141, 146; People v. Clark (1993) 5 C.4th 950, 1003, 22 C.R.2d 689, 857 P.2d 1099 [citing Gilbert]; People v. Tai (1995) 37 C.A.4th 990, 998, 44 C.R.2d 253 [citing Clark and Gilbert; admission of opinion evidence of defendant's efforts to disguise handwriting on exemplar does not implicate privilege against self-incrimination]; and see 1 McCormick 5th, §124; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2264; 43 A.L.R.3d 653 [propriety of requiring accused to give handwriting exemplar].)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

5. Compulsion Without Testimony.

c. Handwriting Exemplars.

2. Procurement After Illegal Arrest.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 388

[§ 388] Procurement After Illegal Arrest.

In People v. Sesslin (1968) 68 C.2d 418, 67 C.R. 409, 439 P.2d 321, an officer, acting pursuant to a constitutionally defective warrant, arrested defendant in his office on a charge of forgery of a check. The officer advised him of his rights, and also told him that he did not have to give handwriting exemplars. The officer then requested one, defendant gave it, and later at the police station wrote out more. He was convicted on evidence of a handwriting expert that the writing on the forged check and the exemplars was by the same person. Held, admission of this evidence was reversible error.

(a) The "fruit of the poisonous tree" doctrine (see 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, §22 et seq.) is applicable: An illegal arrest immediately preceding the procurement of the evidence renders that evidence inadmissible unless the connection with the illegal arrest has become so attenuated as to dissipate the taint. (68 C.2d 428.)

(b) Attenuation "requires at least an intervening independent act by the defendant or a third party which breaks the causal chain linking the illegality." (68 C.2d 428.) Consent by the defendant may produce the requisite degree of attenuation; but the trial judge made no finding that the prosecution had sustained its burden of showing that the consent was free, and not dictated by the implied assertion of authority. (68 C.2d 429.)

(c) The advice given defendant that he need not furnish exemplars was not required by the self-incrimination privilege (see Gilbert v. California (1967) 388 U.S. 263, 87 S.Ct. 1951, 18 L.Ed.2d 1178, supra, §387); did it, however, negative the inference of exploitation, and establish the factor of intervening free consent? No: the advice may be a factor in showing free will, but "it does not in isolation demonstrate as a matter of law the requisite attenuation." (68 C.2d 430.)

Three dissenting justices found this reasoning wholly unconvincing: "Unquestionably the waiver was knowingly made; the defendant was not a naive victim of police imposition. This case involves a knowledgeable defendant in the familiar, comfortable environment of his own business office." (68 C.2d 434.) And the unnecessary warnings clearly provided the intervening independent act; hence, the time element (shortly after illegal arrest) stressed by the majority is wholly irrelevant. (68 C.2d 435.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

5. Compulsion Without Testimony.

d. Voice Identification.

1. No Violation of Privilege.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 389

[§ 389] No Violation of Privilege.

In People v. Ellis (1966) 65 C.2d 529, 55 C.R. 385, 421 P.2d 393, defendant was charged with assault with intent to commit rape. The victim identified him in a lineup, and said she could identify his voice, but he refused to participate in a test. At the trial, police officers testified to his refusal. Held, compulsory voice identification is not a violation of the Fifth Amendment privilege, and comment thereon was permissible.

(a) Voice identification is real evidence. "In such a test the speaker is asked, not to communicate ideas or knowledge of facts, but to engage in the physiological processes necessary to produce a series of articulated sounds, the verbal meanings of which are unimportant. The sounds alone are elicited for identification purposes through characteristics such as pitch, tone, intonation, accent, and word stress. The speech patterns of individuals are distinctive physical characteristics that serve to identify them just as do other physical characteristics such as color of eyes, hair, and skin, physical build and fingerprints." (65 C.2d 533.) Voice identification testimony is "the very type of objective factual evidence, independent of information communicated by the accused, that the privilege encourages police to seek." (65 C.2d 534.)

(b) The privilege does not prohibit the state from demanding any assistance from the accused. "Criminal proceedings are replete with instances where at least passive cooperation of an accused may be constitutionally required." (65 C.2d 534.) "They include fingerprinting, photographing, or measuring of the subject, taking imprints of portions of a suspect's body, removal of or placing articles of clothing on the subject, and requiring the accused's presence at the trial itself." (65 C.2d 535, footnote 6.)

(c) There is no significant distinction between active and passive cooperation. Even "passive" cooperation is affirmative, e.g., in fingerprinting or photographing. (65 C.2d 535, footnote 6.)

(d) There is no invasion of the right of privacy by a voice test: No disclosure of thought or information is requested, and the voice itself, constantly exposed to public observation, is merely another identifying physical characteristic. (65 C.2d 535.)

The opinion concludes:

"It thus appears that an extension of the privilege to voice identification would serve none of the purposes of the privilege. It would only exclude evidence of considerable importance when visual identification is doubtful or impossible. The masked robber, the telephone extortionist, and the attacker in the night may all seek refuge behind an extension of the privilege that would do little to further the welfare of accused persons in general. Denial of access to a pertinent identifying trait can only weaken a system dedicated to the ascertainment of truth." (65 C.2d 535.)

The court further pointed out that the refusal of defendant to "display his voice" was not a testimonial communication, and could be shown, like other admissions, by conduct indicating consciousness of guilt--escape, false alibi, flight, suppression of evidence or failure to respond to accusatory statements when not in police custody. (65 C.2d 536.) (See 55 Cal. L. Rev. 1140.)

In United States v. Wade (1967) 388 U.S. 218, 87 S.Ct. 1926, 1930, 18 L.Ed.2d 1149, 1155, infra, §392, the defendant was also given a voice test during the lineup. The court, in a brief comment following the reasoning of Schmerber v. California (1966) 384 U.S. 757, 86 S.Ct. 1826, 16 L.Ed.2d 908, infra, §423, reached the same conclusion as in the Ellis case, i.e., that the defendant is required to use his or her voice merely as an identifying physical characteristic, not to utter statements of a testimonial nature. (See 33 San Diego L. Rev. 349 [presumption of innocence as limiting compelled voice exemplars]; 24 A.L.R.3d 1261 [propriety of requiring accused to demonstrate voice for purposes of identification].)

United States v. Dionisio (1973) 410 U.S. 1, 93 S.Ct. 764, 35 L.Ed.2d 67, involving a federal grand jury investigation of gambling, similarly held that there is no violation of either the Fourth Amendment or the Fifth Amendment in the use of voice recordings. (93 S.Ct. 768, 770, 35 L.Ed.2d 75, 78.)

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

5. Compulsion Without Testimony.

d. Voice Identification.

2. Warning and Precautions.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 390

[§ 390] Warning and Precautions.

(1) Warning Before Voice Test. In People v. Ellis (1966) 65 C.2d 529, 55 C.R. 385, 421 P.2d 393, supra, §389, the court qualified its holding as to admissibility of voice identification by a new refinement of the duty to advise the defendant of his or her rights. The police warned defendant that he had the right to remain silent. This is insufficient; to a layman, that would imply that defendant could refuse to speak at all, even for voice identification. In order to offer his refusal as an implied admission, they must advise defendant that the right to remain silent does not include the right to refuse to participate in such a test. (65 C.2d 539.)

The dissenting justices thought this was a mistaken notion: a defendant may not reasonably infer that he or she may remain mute for all purposes, for the defendant has to give his or her name, address, attorney's name, plea, etc. And they doubted whether peace officers could devise a comprehensive warning to meet the majority's insistence on the distinction between the kinds of refusal to speak. (See 55 Cal. L. Rev. 1140; 24 A.L.R.3d 1261, 1280 [propriety of requiring accused to demonstrate voice for purposes of identification].) (On defendant's refusal to participate in lineup as implied admission, see People v. Huston (1989) 210 C.A.3d 192, 216, 258 C.R. 393 [citing People v. Ellis, supra; infra, §395].)

(2) Precautions To Insure Fairness. The rule making lineup evidence inadmissible when it is unfair or suggestive (see infra, §398) applies to any pretrial identification procedure, including use of a "voice tape lineup" consisting of a number of voices including that of the defendant. In People v. Vallez (1978) 80 C.A.3d 46, 143 C.R. 914, the court found no unfairness, but made this observation: "The dangers inherent in a voice lineup dictate that special precautions be taken to insure fairness to the defendant when such a procedure is used. In creating the voice tape, efforts should be made to use a collection of voices which are similar in tone, pitch, volume and accent. Also, steps should be taken to insure uniform sound quality for all voices on the tape and uniform volume when the tape is played to witnesses. Passage of time seriously affects memory and a voice lineup should be conducted for witnesses as soon as practicable." (80 C.A.3d 55.) (See 55 A.L.R.5th 423 [propriety of voice lineup procedures].)

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

5. Compulsion Without Testimony.

e. Violation of Miranda Rule.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 391

[§ 391] Violation of Miranda Rule.

(1) Former Exclusionary Rule. The relationship of the Miranda rule (see 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §89 et seq.) to the privilege against self-incrimination was explored in People v. Rucker (1980) 26 C.3d 368, 162 C.R. 13, 605 P.2d 843. Defendant was charged with first degree murder and first degree robbery, based on killing during a robbery. His defense was diminished capacity due to intoxication from alcohol and drugs, making it impossible to form the necessary intent. The prosecution in rebuttal introduced evidence of two interviews with defendant by two police officers and a probation officer, conducted with inadequate Miranda warnings. The trial judge instructed the jury that the statements of defendant were not offered for their truth but only to show his mental processes. The jury returned a verdict of guilty. Held, reversed; the elements of compulsion and testimonial communications were established.

(a) "[T]he Miranda analysis is a refinement primarily of the compulsion aspect of the privilege. Where actual compulsion must be established under a traditional privilege analysis, Miranda holds that compulsion is assumed to exist in a custodial setting unless specified procedural safeguards are carefully followed." (26 C.3d 379.)

(b) Under the theory of the significant cases governing the issue of testimonial communication, defendant was asked to "communicate ideas or knowledge of facts"; the words were not prescribed for him; the verbal meanings of his utterances were essential to the purpose for which they were elicited; and, although they were not being used to prove the truth of what was said, the contents of the disclosures were relied on to establish their probative value. (26 C.3d 382.)

(2) Abrogation of Rule by Proposition 8. In People v. Hall (1988) 199 C.A.3d 914, 245 C.R. 458, on a trial involving assault with a deadly weapon, the prosecutor asked the arresting officer whether defendant initially refused to give his name and the officer replied that he did refuse. Defense counsel argued that his testimony was inadmissible under People v. Rucker, supra. Held, Proposition 8 abrogated the Rucker exclusionary rule.

(a) People v. May (1988) 44 C.3d 309, 243 C.R. 369, 748 P.2d 307, abrogating the rule of People v. Disbrow (1976) 16 C.3d 101, 127 C.R. 360, 545 P.2d 272, on use of a defendant's extrajudicial statements to impeach (see 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §319), is persuasive. (199 C.A.3d 920.)

(b) The Rucker rule is not federally compelled. (199 C.A.3d 921, discussing Rhode Island v. Innis (1980) 446 U.S. 291, 100 S.Ct. 1682, 64 L.Ed.2d 297, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §79.)

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

6. Lineup.

a. Wade-Gilbert Rule: Counsel's Presence Required.

1. Statement of Rule.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 392

[§ 392] Statement of Rule.

(1) In General. Identification of a suspected criminal at a police lineup is a result of compulsion without testimony and therefore not a violation of the privilege against self-incrimination. (See supra, §385.) But the issue of whether, and to what extent, the suspect is entitled to the presence of counsel, has been the subject of many decisions of the United States Supreme Court and California reviewing courts.

In United States v. Wade (1967) 388 U.S. 218, 87 S.Ct. 1926, 18 L.Ed.2d 1149, a federally insured Texas bank was robbed by a man with a small strip of tape on each side of his face, who then drove away with an accomplice. Defendant Wade and two others were charged with the crime, and counsel was appointed for Wade on his arrest. Fifteen days later, an F.B.I. agent, without notice to Wade's lawyer, conducted a lineup of Wade and five or six other prisoners, each wearing similar strips of tape, and each uttering words such as "put the money in the bag" (allegedly spoken by the robber). The two bank employees identified Wade as the robber. At the trial, they also identified him in the courtroom. Then Wade's attorney, eliciting the prior lineup identification on cross-examination, unsuccessfully moved to strike the courtroom identification. Held, conviction reversed.

(a) No violation of Fifth Amendment. "[C]ompelling the accused merely to exhibit his person for observation by a prosecution witness prior to trial involves no compulsion of the accused to give evidence having testimonial significance. It is compulsion of the accused to exhibit his physical characteristics, not compulsion to disclose any knowledge he might have. It is no different from compelling Schmerber to provide a blood sample or Holt to wear the blouse, and, as in those instances, is not within the cover of the privilege." (87 S.Ct. 1930, 18 L.Ed.2d 1154.)

(b) Sixth Amendment: General principles. The modern construction of the Bill of Rights takes into account today's law enforcement machinery, involving critical confrontations by the accused at pretrial proceedings; and the Sixth Amendment right to counsel applies to "critical" stages.

"In sum, the principle of Powell v. Alabama and succeeding cases requires that we scrutinize any pretrial confrontation of the accused to determine whether the presence of his counsel is necessary to preserve the defendant's basic right to a fair trial as affected by his right meaningfully to cross-examine the witnesses against him and to have effective assistance of counsel at the trial itself. It calls upon us to analyze whether potential substantial prejudice to defendant's rights inheres in the particular confrontation and the ability of counsel to help avoid that prejudice." (87 S.Ct. 1932, 18 L.Ed.2d 1157.)

The scientific analyses of fingerprints, blood samples or clothing are not critical stages, for knowledge of the techniques is available, and expert evidence and cross-examination of prosecution experts affords all necessary protection. But identification evidence has many dangers of mistake, and a witness who picks an accused out of a lineup is not likely to go back on his or her word at the trial; hence, the identification at lineup determines the issue for practical purposes at this point before the trial. And, as with secret interrogations, there is great difficulty afterwards in the defense determining just what took place at the lineup: improper motives where the victim of a crime is the witness, other improper activities, suggestive procedures in which only the suspect wears distinctive clothing, allowing the witness to see police bringing the accused to the lineup in custody, etc. (87 S.Ct. 1933, 1935, 18 L.Ed.2d 1158, 1160.)

(c) Sixth Amendment applies here. Where the conviction rests on "a courtroom identification in fact the fruit of a suspect pretrial identification which the accused is helpless to subject to effective scrutiny at trial," the accused is deprived of "that right of cross-examination which is an essential safeguard to his right to confront the witnesses against him." (87 S.Ct. 1936, 18 L.Ed.2d 1162.) There is grave potential for prejudice in the pretrial lineup, and the presence of counsel can often avert it; hence, the lineup is a critical stage of the prosecution at which the defendant is entitled to counsel, and both defendant and defense counsel should be notified of an impending lineup. (87 S.Ct. 1937, 18 L.Ed.2d 1162.) However, legislative or local police department regulations which eliminate the risks of abuse and unintentional suggestion "may also remove the basis for regarding the stage as 'critical.' " (87 S.Ct. 1938, 18 L.Ed.2d 1164.)

Wade was followed in Gilbert v. California (1967) 388 U.S. 263, 87 S.Ct. 1951, 1956, 18 L.Ed.2d 1178, 1187, reversing People v. Gilbert (1965) 63 C.2d 690, 47 C.R. 909, 408 P.2d 365, and remanding for a determination of whether the illegal lineup tainted the court identification, and, if so, whether the error was prejudicial. (See 1967 A.S. 174; 17 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 339 [analysis of key cases, plus examples of actual police regulations]; 5 U.S.F. L. Rev. 85 [erroneous lineup identification and its cure]; 29 Stanf. L. Rev. 989.)

(2) Rule Not Retroactive. The Wade-Gilbert rule was held nonretroactive in Stovall v. Denno (1967) 388 U.S. 293, 87 S.Ct. 1967, 1971, 1972, 18 L.Ed.2d 1199, 1205, 1206. (See also, to the same effect, People v. Feggans (1967) 67 C.2d 444, 448, 62 C.R. 419, 432 P.2d 21; People v. Caruso (1968) 68 C.2d 183, 184, 65 C.R. 336, 436 P.2d 336; People v. Thornton (1974) 11 C.3d 738, 761, 114 C.R. 467, 523 P.2d 267.)

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

6. Lineup.

a. Wade-Gilbert Rule: Counsel's Presence Required.

2. Appointed Counsel Sufficient.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 393

[§ 393] Appointed Counsel Sufficient.

United States v. Wade (1967) 388 U.S. 218, 87 S.Ct. 1926, 18 L.Ed.2d 1149, supra, §392, left open the question whether the defendant was entitled to counsel of his or her choice, or whether an appointed counsel would suffice. In People v. Wimberly (1992) 5 C.A.4th 773, 7 C.R.2d 152, appellant contended that, notwithstanding appointed counsel's presence at the lineup, appellant's constitutional right was violated by the failure of the police to advise him of his right to counsel of his choice. Held, appointed counsel's presence and representation of appellant at the lineup satisfied constitutional requirements. (5 C.A.4th 784.) In People v. Bustamante (1981) 30 C.3d 88, 177 C.R. 576, 634 P.2d 927, infra, §397, the court pointed out that defense counsel is present merely to silently observe and later recall his or her observations; and, "[g]iven this limited role, and the fact that a lineup may proceed in the absence of counsel under certain exigent circumstances ... , we find appointed counsel's attendance at the lineup on appellant's behalf consistent with constitutional requirements." (5 C.A.4th 786.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

6. Lineup.

a. Wade-Gilbert Rule: Counsel's Presence Required.

3. When Counsel Should Be Present.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 394

[§ 394] When Counsel Should Be Present.

(1) General Rule: Moment of Identification. In People v. Williams (1971) 3 C.3d 853, 92 C.R. 6, 478 P.2d 942, defendant's attorney was present during the viewing stage of a lineup but was excluded from a nearby room where the principal witness made his identification choice for sheriff's officers. Held, the exclusion was error. The Wade-Gilbert rules were adopted "to enable an accused to detect any unfairness in his confrontation with the witness, and to insure that he will be aware of any suggestion by law enforcement officers, intentional or unintentional, at the time the witness makes his identification." Therefore, defense counsel cannot be excluded from the moment of identification any more than defense counsel can be excluded from the lineup itself. (3 C.3d 856.) (See People v. Malich (1971) 15 C.A.3d 253, 261, 93 C.R. 87.)

(2) Distinctions. There is no requirement that defense counsel must be present whenever a prosecution witness is interrogated. (People v. Williams, supra, 3 C.3d 857.) (See also People v. McClellan (1969) 71 C.2d 793, 797, 80 C.R. 31, 457 P.2d 871 [prosecutor and witnesses properly reenacted crime in defendant's absence]; People v. Adair (1969) 2 C.A.3d 92, 96, 82 C.R. 460 [witness identified defendant from photographs; "The right to the assistance of counsel does not confer the privilege of insinuating him into the prosecutor's office at all important phases of trial preparation"]; People v. Carpenter (1999) 21 C.4th 1016, 1045, 90 C.R.2d 607, 988 P.2d 531 [even if witnesses made actual identifications after lineup and in counsel's absence, no error where interviews with them were tape-recorded].)

And defense counsel is not entitled to be present at a postlineup interview. In People v. Perkins (1986) 184 C.A.3d 583, 229 C.R. 219, M, a robbery victim, failed to identify defendant as the perpetrator after viewing him in a lineup. However, after the lineup and after defense counsel had left, M told the deputy who interviewed her that she recognized the defendant but was unable to identify him without first seeing whether he had a lightning bolt tattoo on his neck. When the deputy informed her that the man she recognized had such a tattoo, M replied that she would testify that the man was the robber. Held, the postlineup interview did not violate defendant's right to counsel. Defense counsel had not requested that he be present during any postlineup interviews, and M had already marked her lineup card indicating she was unable to identify defendant. At that point, the identification process had been completed, and defense counsel had no more right to be present at the interview than he would have had at any nonconfrontational identification by a victim. (184 C.A.3d 591, citing Williams and Adair.) (See People v. Mitcham (1992) 1 C.4th 1027, 1066, 5 C.R.2d 230, 824 P.2d 1277 [counsel not entitled to be present at postlineup interview when officer questioned witness as to why she had placed question mark on her lineup card next to defendant's number].)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

6. Lineup.

a. Wade-Gilbert Rule: Counsel's Presence Required.

4. Waiver and Objection.

aa. Waiver of Lineup Right to Counsel.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 395

[§ 395] Waiver of Lineup Right to Counsel.

(1) In General. Informing the defendant of the right to have counsel present at the lineup is insufficient to support a waiver of that right unless the defendant is also told that an attorney will be appointed if the defendant cannot afford one. (People v. Banks (1970) 2 C.3d 127, 134, 84 C.R. 367, 465 P.2d 263.) A Miranda warning during interrogation will not support waiver of lineup rights. (People v. Banks, supra, 2 C.3d 136.) (See People v. Evans (1971) 16 C.A.3d 510, 516, 94 C.R. 88 [construing admonition as sufficient under Banks].) But a defendant who knowingly waives his or her rights in writing cannot repudiate the waiver on the ground that the defendant was entitled to have advice of counsel as to the significance of executing the waiver. (People v. Wells (1971) 14 C.A.3d 348, 354, 92 C.R. 191.)

(2) In-Court Lineup After Rejecting Out-of-Court Arranged Lineup. In People v. Harmon (1989) 215 C.A.3d 552, 263 C.R. 623, defendant asked for and was provided a carefully arranged lineup, but defendant refused to participate. The prosecutor then arranged to have the alleged victim come to the courtroom, sit down, look at persons in and entering the courtroom, and, if he saw the robber, to so indicate. During 5 to 10 minutes of brief discussions between counsel and the trial judge, the victim sat by himself in the courtroom and saw about 15 people of various races including defendant's race. Then, with defendant's counsel present in the courtroom, the bailiff brought out defendant wearing civilian clothes, and the victim immediately identified him as the robber. Held, conviction affirmed. Having spurned the arranged lineup, defendant will not be heard to complain that the in-court lineup was tainted by suggestiveness or that his right to counsel was violated under the rule of People v. Williams (1971) 3 C.3d 853, 92 C.R. 6, 478 P.2d 942 (supra, §394). Moreover, the in-court lineup appears to have been less suggestive than the alternative of a one-person lineup with the victim in the witness box and defendant in the chair of the accused. (215 C.A.3d 569.)

(3) Refusal To Participate in Lineup. In People v. Johnson (1992) 3 C.4th 1183, 14 C.R.2d 702, 842 P.2d 1, defendant, who was in custody on suspicion of murder, refused an officer's order to leave his cell to participate in a lineup. In the meantime, the attorney appointed to represent defendant at the lineup was unable to speak to him because of an administrative difficulty in locating him. After a wait of several hours, the attorney was informed that defendant would not speak with her and refused to participate in the lineup. Detective Shipp, after speaking with the attorney regarding defendant's refusal, went to defendant's cell and advised him that he had no right to refuse to participate and that his refusal could be introduced against him at trial. Defendant continued to refuse, and the attorney left the jail without having talked to defendant. Held, admission of defendant's refusal to stand in the lineup was proper.

(a) Because appearance in a lineup is not protected by the privilege against self-incrimination, evidence of a defendant's refusal to participate is admissible at the defendant's trial. (3 C.4th 1222.)

(b) Defendant argued that because he had been given and asserted his Miranda rights, it was reasonable for him to conclude that he could refuse to participate in the lineup. Hence, his refusal to do so was not a reliable indication of consciousness of guilt and should have been excluded under Ev.C. 352. This reasoning is faulty. Miranda warnings advise a suspect that anything the suspect says may be used in evidence; they do not contradict an admonition that the suspect has no right to refuse to stand in a lineup. Hence, because defendant was warned of his right to refuse to participate and of the possibility that such a refusal could be used against him at trial, his refusal was not an unreliable indication of his consciousness of guilt. (3 C.4th 1223, footnote 9.)

(c) Defendant's argument that his refusal to participate should have been suppressed because he was denied his right to counsel during a critical stage of the prosecution is without merit. Neither People v. Bustamante (1981) 30 C.3d 88, 177 C.R. 576, 634 P.2d 927 (infra, §397), which held that the California Constitution affords a suspect a right to counsel at a preindictment lineup, nor People v. Houston (1986) 42 C.3d 595, 230 C.R. 141, 724 P.2d 1166, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §141, which held that the California Constitution requires that a suspect in custody be informed promptly of his or her counsel's arrival and be allowed to see the attorney before questioning begins, is applicable here: counsel was appointed for defendant in advance of the lineup, and he was not subjected to questioning. (3 C.4th 1222.) In any event, the exclusionary rules of both Bustamante and Houston were abrogated by Proposition 8. (3 C.4th 1223.)

(d) Defendant's conversation with detective Shipp, during which he expressed his refusal to stand in the lineup, was not custodial interrogation in violation of Miranda. Detective Shipp's statements to defendant were limited to conveying information about the proposed procedure and ascertaining whether defendant would participate. This neither required readvisement of rights nor amounted to interrogation. And the fact that defendant's responses may have inculpated him was merely incidental to his unprivileged refusal to cooperate in a nontestimonial procedure. (3 C.4th 1224.)

bb. Procedure for Objection.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 396

[§ 396] Procedure for Objection.

Ordinarily, an in-court identification which has been allegedly tainted by a pretrial viewing should be challenged by a motion to suppress or a timely objection when the identification is introduced in evidence. (People v. Martin (1970) 2 C.3d 822, 832, footnote 11, 87 C.R. 709, 471 P.2d 29, infra, §406 [despite lack of motion or objection, defendant's "continuing and vigorous efforts" at trial preserved issue on appeal]; see People v. Smith (1969) 273 C.A.2d 547, 552, 78 C.R. 405; People v. Stuller (1970) 10 C.A.3d 582, 597, 89 C.R. 158 [no objection by trial counsel, issue waived]; *People v. The trial court need not hold a hearing outside the presence of the jury to determine the admissibility of identification evidence. (Watkins v. Sowders (1981) 449 U.S. 341, 101 S.Ct. 654, 656, 66 L.Ed.2d 549, 552 [such a hearing may often be advisable but a per se rule (as in confession cases; see 1 Cal. ### XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

6. Lineup.

b. Preaccusatory Lineup.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 397

[§ 397] Preaccusatory Lineup.

(1) Federal Constitution: Wade-Gilbert Rule Inapplicable. In Kirby v. Illinois (1972) 406 U.S. 682, 92 S.Ct. 1877, 1883, 32 L.Ed.2d 411, 418, the United States Supreme Court held (in a plurality opinion) that counsel was required only at a "critical stage of the criminal prosecution," and that the "prosecution" does not commence until the initiation of adversary judicial criminal proceedings, "whether by way of formal charge, preliminary hearing, indictment, information, or arraignment." (See 86 Harv. L. Rev. 156.)

As the above quotation indicates, the usual phrasing of the issue in terms of "pre-indictment lineup" is inaccurate; the critical stage is not reached until a formal charge or accusation of some kind is made, but that need not be an indictment. Thus, the criminal prosecution commences at a statutory preliminary hearing to determine whether there is probable cause to bind the defendant over to the grand jury. (Moore v. Illinois (1977) 434 U.S. 220, 98 S.Ct. 458, 465, 54 L.Ed.2d 424, 432.)

(2) California Constitution: Abrogation of Wade-Gilbert Rule. Prior to the Kirby decision, supra, the California Supreme Court held, in People v. Fowler (1969) 1 C.3d 335, 342, 82 C.R. 363, 461 P.2d 643, that the Wade-Gilbert rule governed in preindictment lineups. After Kirby, a number of Court of Appeal decisions assumed that Fowler was no longer controlling, but in People v. Chojnacky (1973) 8 C.3d 759, 106 C.R. 106, 505 P.2d 530, a divided court failed to reach a conclusion on this issue.

In People v. Bustamante (1981) 30 C.3d 88, 177 C.R. 576, 634 P.2d 927, the court, recognizing Kirby's binding interpretation of the Federal Constitution, held that the right to counsel at a pre-accusatory lineup was included in the California Constitution's guarantee of "the assistance of counsel" (Art. I, §15).

However, the Bustamante exclusionary rule was abrogated by the enactment of Proposition 8 (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §§8, 9). (See People v. Johnson (1992) 3 C.4th 1183, 1223, 14 C.R.2d 702, 842 P.2d 1, supra, §395.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

6. Lineup.

c. Due Process in Lineup.

1. Unfair Lineup.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 398

[§ 398] Unfair Lineup.

Even where the requirement of counsel does not apply (see supra, §§395, 396), a lineup may be conducted in so unfair a manner as to amount to a denial of due process.

In People v. Caruso (1968) 68 C.2d 183, 65 C.R. 336, 436 P.2d 336, an armed robbery was committed. The two victims, a store manager and his employee, observed the profile of the driver of the car for about 5 seconds. Defendant was arrested as the driver; the accomplice with the gun was never found. At a police lineup, the victims identified defendant and he was convicted. Held, conviction reversed.

(a) The victims described the driver as big, with dark wavy hair and a dark complexion. In the lineup, defendant was of that description, and none of the other persons were. "We can only conclude that the lineup was 'unnecessarily suggestive and conducive to irreparable mistaken identification' ... , and we hold that its grossly unfair makeup deprived defendant of due process of law." (68 C.2d 187.)

(b) If defendant is retried, to overcome the effect of the taint of lineup on the in-court identification, the prosecution must on voir dire show by clear and convincing proof that the in-court identifications were based on observations at the scene: "They must totally eliminate from recollection all observations at the lineup. ... As suggested in Wade, this may be extremely difficult." (68 C.2d 190.) (See 56 Cal. L. Rev. 1699; People v. Hogan (1968) 264 C.A.2d 254, 260, 70 C.R. 448 [following Caruso; defendant Black lined up with men who were not].)

The Caruso case was cited by the United States Supreme Court in Foster v. California (1969) 394 U.S. 440, 89 S.Ct. 1127, 22 L.Ed.2d 402. Defendant was convicted of armed robbery, in part on the lineup identification of D, night manager of the office robbed. In the first lineup, defendant, a tall man, was placed with two short men, and was wearing a leather jacket similar to that worn by the robber. This left the victim uncertain, and a one-to-one confrontation of the victim and defendant was arranged, so they could speak. This also left the victim uncertain, and a second lineup was arranged, with five men, defendant being the only one who had appeared in the first. This produced a positive identification. Held, conviction reversed: "The pretrial confrontations clearly were so arranged as to make the resulting identifications virtually inevitable." (89 S.Ct. 1128, 22 L.Ed.2d 406.) (See 39 A.L.R.3d 487 [admissibility of evidence of lineup identification as affected by allegedly suggestive lineup procedures]; 24 A.L.R.4th 592 [propriety of requiring accused to alter, or to refrain from altering, physical or bodily appearance].)

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

6. Lineup.

c. Due Process in Lineup.

2. Properly Conducted Lineup.

aa. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 399

[§ 399] In General.

Most of the cases find the lineup fairly conducted. The following are illustrative:

People v. Beivelman (1968) 70 C.2d 60, 77, 73 C.R. 521, 447 P.2d 913 [five-man lineup; defendant only one whose undershirt was not visible at his throat and whose pants were light in color; no unfair focusing].

People v. Floyd (1970) 1 C.3d 694, 713, 83 C.R. 608, 464 P.2d 64 ["There was no need for the police to match the outfits of everyone in the lineup anymore than the police were required to match the physical proportions of the other men with scientific exactitude"].

People v. Smith (1969) 273 C.A.2d 547, 554, 78 C.R. 405 [reasonable spread of heights and weights, test of fairness was pragmatic].

People v. Hernandez (1970) 11 C.A.3d 481, 488, 89 C.R. 766 ["Mere proximity in time between the viewing of photographs and a lineup is not, in itself, evidence that the witness has been improperly primed to make a lineup identification"].

People v. Lawrence (1971) 4 C.3d 273, 280, 93 C.R. 204, 481 P.2d 212, infra, §410 [participants of comparable age and similar build; defendant only one in gold shirt and sweater, but each participant had distinctive clothing and defendant was not wearing clothing described by witness; no unfairness].

In re Terry (1971) 4 C.3d 911, 924, 95 C.R. 31, 484 P.2d 1375 [insufficient allegations about physical description of other men in lineup; no unnecessary suggestiveness shown].

People v. Malich (1971) 15 C.A.3d 253, 260, 93 C.R. 87 [five Caucasian women in lineup, none of whom bore facial resemblance to others or had extremely distinctive features; lineup did not place defendant in "a state of comparative physical uniqueness"].

People v. Tribble (1971) 4 C.3d 826, 833, 94 C.R. 613, 484 P.2d 589 [defendant contended lineup was unduly suggestive because he was noticeably trembling, but no showing that he was only person in that condition in lineup].

People v. Meneley (1972) 29 C.A.3d 41, 57, 105 C.R. 432 ["The advice that a suspect was in the lineup did not suggest to the identifying witness anything more than he would assume, and in no way suggested that defendant was the suspect rather than one of the other 9 members of the lineup"].

People v. Sequeira (1981) 126 C.A.3d 1, 16, 179 C.R. 249 [some participants were taller than defendant, but there is no requirement that defendant be surrounded by people nearly identical in appearance; defendant was allowed to pick the participants in the lineup from among jail inmates, to review them, and to select his spot in the lineup].

People v. Ochoa (1998) 19 C.4th 353, 411, 79 C.R.2d 408, 966 P.2d 442 [witness shown single photograph of defendant in profile following pretrial photographic lineup of six pictures; police providing further useful information in response to witness' request was not unduly suggestive, and police were not required to show photographs of profiles of other suspects].

In People v. McDaniels (1972) 25 C.A.3d 708, 102 C.R. 444, several witnesses told police that a man in a blue shirt had robbed a bar and raped a cocktail waitress. Three days after the crime, defendant, a black man, was placed in a lineup with four other black men who were dressed in civilian clothes. Defendant, however, was the only one wearing a blue shirt, which he had put on at his home when he was arrested. (Although the officer in charge of the lineup knew of the witnesses' statements, he did not so advise defendant.) Held, the several victim-witnesses had ample opportunity to observe defendant's facial and other physical characteristics during the commission of the crimes and made in-court identifications based on characteristics other than the blue shirt. The court added: "Under the circumstances, prudence suggests that the officer conducting the lineup should have advised the defendant not to wear a blue shirt. Prudence, however, is not a criterion." (25 C.A.3d 711.)

Gonzalez* (2006) 38 C.4th 932, 943, 944, 44 C.R.3d 237, 135 P.3d 649 [in capital murder trial, fact that defendant was only person in lineup who had tattoo on back of head did not render lineup suggestive; neither before nor after lineup did any witness suggest that tattoo might be relevant to identification, and it was only later, when some witnesses repudiated their identifications, that some said tattoo was significant]; People v. Cook (2007) 40 C.4th 1334, 1355, 58 C.R.3d 340, 157 P.3d 950 [lineup was not unduly suggestive, even though defendant was shortest of participants, where all participants were adult white males, relatively similar in body build, with no one obviously standing out in terms of height or weight].

2. Properly Conducted Lineup.

bb. Defendant's Suggestive Conduct.

[§ 400] Defendant's Suggestive Conduct.

In People v. Boyd (1990) 222 C.A.3d 541, 271 C.R. 738, a murder prosecution, the lineup participants, except for defendant, filed onto the stage in numerical order. Defendant came out after the others were already in their places and then hung his head, moved it back and forth, and continued to look at the floor for several seconds. He was then identified as one of the assailants. Held, there was no error. California decisions have not yet decided whether a defendant may challenge a lineup when the defendant's own conduct has caused the procedure to be suggestive, but courts in other jurisdictions have uniformly answered in the negative, and some California cases contain dicta indicating that it must be police conduct which causes the procedure to be suggestive. (222 C.A.3d 572, citing People v. Williams (1971) 3 C.3d 853, 92 C.R. 6, 478 P.2d 942, supra, §394, and People v. Peggese (1980) 102 C.A.3d 415, 162 C.R. 510.) "We agree with these decisions; a defendant may not base his claim of deprivation of due process in a lineup on his own behavior." (222 C.A.3d 575.) (See *People v. ## CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

6. Lineup.

d. Defendant's Right to Lineup.

1. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 401

[§ 401] In General.

(1) Statement of Rule. In Evans v. Superior Court (1974) 11 C.3d 617, 625, 114 C.R. 121, 522 P.2d 681, the court declared that an accused, in an appropriate case and on timely request, is entitled to a pretrial lineup.

Defendant filed a pretrial motion for a lineup, alleging that he was identified at the robbery scene by witnesses who saw only a limited view of his head and shoulders from the rear while he was sitting in a patrol car. He contended that the identification was faulty, that the witnesses, having committed themselves, would be reluctant to recede from their position even if they were in error, and that they would be inclined to continue identifying him merely because he was the accused, was black, would appear in jail denims and would be positioned at defense counsel's side. The trial judge was inclined to grant the motion, but thought he lacked authority to order the prosecution to conduct a lineup. Held, a judge or magistrate has discretion to grant such a motion.

(a) The question is whether, prior to the in-court receipt of evidence of identification, the accused may insist on using procedures to disclose the weakness of that evidence. A properly conducted lineup is a device by which the prosecution can discover which witnesses are able to identify the accused; but it may reveal that other witnesses, able to identify the real perpetrator of the crime, are unable to identify the accused as such criminal. Fairness requires that an accused be given a reciprocal right to discover and utilize evidence contrary to the prosecution's case. (11 C.3d 623.)

(b) Even though the prosecution had not conducted a lineup and had not acquired identification evidence, it cannot escape a responsibility to disclose by failure to acquire precise knowledge unavailable to the accused. Should defendant be denied discovery, the net effect would be the same as if existing evidence were intentionally suppressed (see 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §121 et seq.). (11 C.3d 625.)

(c) Whether eyewitness identification is a material issue and whether fundamental fairness requires a lineup are within the broad discretion of the magistrate or trial judge. "We do not hold, accordingly, that in every case where there has not been a pretrial lineup the accused may, on demand, compel the People to arrange for one. Rather, as in all due process determinations, the resolution here to be made is one which must be arrived at after consideration not only of the benefits to be derived by the accused and the reasonableness of his request but also after considering the burden to be imposed on the prosecution, the police, the court and the witnesses." (11 C.3d 625; see footnote 6, disapproving contrary view of three Court of Appeal cases.)

(d) The motion should normally be made as soon after arrest or arraignment as practicable, and a late motion may be denied unless good cause is shown for the delay. (11 C.3d 626.) (See 12 Cal. Western L. Rev. 614.)

More recent cases have followed the analysis set forth in Evans. (See People v. Baines (1981) 30 C.3d 143, 147, 177 C.R. 861, 635 P.2d 455 [defendant's motion too late]; People v. Underwood (1983) 139 C.A.3d 906, 914, 189 C.R. 105 [dismissal of complaint for failure to comply with order requiring lineup was abuse of discretion, where no consideration was given to burden such lineup would impose on prosecution]; People v. Williams (1997) 16 C.4th 153, 235, 66 C.R.2d 123, 940 P.2d 710 [in penalty phase of murder trial, trial judge did not abuse discretion in denying motion for lineup, where there was no reasonable likelihood of mistaken identification and defense counsel conceded that it "might not accomplish much"].)

(2) Effect of Rejecting Right. Because appearance in a lineup is not protected by the privilege against self-incrimination, evidence of a defendant's refusal to participate is admissible at the defendant's trial. (People v. Johnson (1992) 3 C.4th 1183, 1222, 14 C.R.2d 702, 842 P.2d 1, supra, §395.) And a defendant who refuses to participate in an out-of-court arranged lineup may not complain that an in-court lineup was tainted by suggestiveness or that his or her right to counsel was violated. (People v. Harmon (1989) 215 C.A.3d 552, 568, 263 C.R. 623, supra, §395.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Statement of Rule. See People v. Sullivan (2007) 151 C.A.4th 524, 560, 59 C.R.3d 876 [in robbery prosecution, trial judge did not abuse discretion in denying defendant's motion for pretrial lineup, where, in light of numerous witness identifications of defendant either in person or from properly conducted photo lineups, defendant failed to establish that there was reasonable likelihood of mistaken identification]. (2) Effect of Rejecting Right. See People v. Lewis (2004) 117 C.A.4th 246, 256, 12 C.R.3d 1 [prosecutor's questioning and argument concerning defendant's failure to request lineup did not constitute error under Griffin v. California (1965) 380 U.S. 609, 85 S.Ct. 1229, 14 L.Ed.2d 106, text, §433; following People v. Johnson (1992) 3 C.4th 1183, 14 C.R.2d 702, 842 P.2d 1, text, p. 700].

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

6. Lineup.

d. Defendant's Right to Lineup.

2. Right to Restricted Lineup.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 402

[§ 402] Right to Restricted Lineup.

In Garcia v. Superior Court (1991) 1 C.A.4th 979, 2 C.R.2d 707, defendant sought a protective order from the magistrate to limit the lineup to a "voice-only" lineup, on the ground that a physical lineup held prior to a voice lineup would be unduly suggestive. The magistrate, believing that such an order was beyond his authority, did not exercise his discretion, but concluded that the lineup should be held "and the Court will not dictate its manner." Defense counsel then advised defendant not to participate in the scheduled physical lineup, and it was not held. Defendant then petitioned for mandamus. Held, writ granted.

(a) Evans v. Superior Court (1974) 11 C.3d 617, 625, 114 C.R. 121, 522 P.2d 681, supra, §401, is determinative of the issue whether a magistrate or trial court may compel a "voice-only" lineup. (1 C.A.4th 984.) "Because the prosecution may compel defendant to participate in a voice lineup or use his refusal to cooperate as evidence against him ... , due process requires the defendant to be extended a reciprocal right to a voice lineup." This conclusion is supported by Proposition 115, adding Cal. Const., Art. I, §30(c), providing that "discovery in criminal cases shall be reciprocal in nature." (1 C.A.4th 986; see 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §30 et seq.)

(b) Under Evans, the defendant's right to compel a lineup arises only where eyewitness identification is shown to be a material issue and there exists a reasonable likelihood of a mistaken identification which a lineup would tend to resolve. Applying Evans to the facts of this case, the magistrate's discretion should be informed by consideration of the Evans criteria. (1 C.A.4th 988.)

(c) "We do not hold that, should the magistrate decide to compel a voice-only lineup, such a lineup must be conducted prior to any physical lineup conducted by the prosecution. Presumably, defendant's motion for a voice-only lineup contemplates a procedure where the victim would listen to disembodied voices, either reproduced by recording or delivered live by speakers physically concealed from the victim's view. Under this procedure, a physical lineup, whether conducted before or after a voice lineup, could have no impermissibly suggestive effect on any identification made in the voice lineup." (1 C.A.4th 989.)

3. Sanctions for Witness' Failure To Attend Lineup.

[§ 403] Sanctions for Witness' Failure To Attend Lineup.

In People v. Fernandez (1990) 219 C.A.3d 1379, 269 C.R. 116, two witnesses who failed to attend a pretrial lineup due to pregnancy were permitted to make in-court identifications of defendant. The trial judge denied defendant's motion to exclude the in-court identifications, but cautioned the jury that such identifications might be less reliable than if the witnesses had attended the lineup. Held, this was proper. Defendant was afforded his due process right to a pretrial lineup, but certain evidence was "lost" when the witnesses failed to attend. Because there was no indication of bad faith by the prosecution, no proof that the lost evidence would have aided defendant, and no need for strong punitive action to deter future police suppression of evidence, the trial judge's caution was an adequate remedy. (219 C.A.3d 1385, relying on People v. Zamora (1980) 28 C.3d 88, 167 C.R. 573, 615 P.2d 1361, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §62.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

7. Other Identification Methods.

a. In-the-Field Identification.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 404

[§ 404] In-the-Field Identification.

(1) Timely Identification Procedure. "Through good police work, good fortune, or a combination of the two, a criminal suspect may be apprehended so close in proximity to the time and place of the crime itself, the exigencies of the situation and over-riding public policy make it neither practical nor necessary to afford counsel for an in-the-field identification." Under these circumstances, the Wade-Gilbert rule of right to counsel does not apply. (People v. Colgain (1969) 276 C.A.2d 118, 125, 80 C.R. 659 [defendant involved in automobile accident while fleeing from liquor store robbery; victim identified him in handcuffs beside police car].)

The court in People v. Colgain, supra, added this comment:

"Timely in-the-field identification is a procedure which enhances the reliability of the identification. ... Where, as here, a serious crime has been committed, it is important to the public well-being that law enforcement officers know with speed and certainty the culprit has been apprehended. Once that fact has been ascertained, they may cease their efforts to catch the criminal--usually greatest and requiring most manpower immediately following the crime--and devote themselves to their other public duties. The general public in the area, although not directly involved, may have its apprehension put at rest by knowledge the perpetrator of the crime has been arrested and identified. Nor should we lose sight of the public interest in avoiding at this very early stage inconvenience and injustice to an innocent person if the use of the procedure results, as it frequently may, in the witness to the crime stating: 'This is not the man.' " (276 C.A.2d 126.)

Many other cases affirm the propriety of this method of timely identification. (See People v. Burns (1969) 270 C.A.2d 238, 244, 75 C.R. 688 [defendant apprehended by Highway Patrol after fleeing from gas station robbery; identified by victim while illuminated by police car headlights and spotlights]; People v. Anthony (1970) 7 C.A.3d 751, 763, 86 C.R. 767 [10 minutes after robbery, police brought defendant back to gas station in handcuffs for victim to identify]; People v. Rodriguez (1970) 10 C.A.3d 18, 27, 88 C.R. 789 [shortly after robbery, victim identified defendant in back seat of police car]; People v. Smith (1970) 13 C.A.3d 897, 909, 91 C.R. 786 [15 minutes after purse snatching, victim viewed defendant in patrol car and also identified discarded cap as worn by robber]; People v. Odom (1980) 108 C.A.3d 100, 110, 166 C.R. 283 [eyewitnesses to shooting by truck driver were taken several blocks to scene of his arrest and identified him 45 minutes after the shooting]; People v. Jones (1981) 126 C.A.3d 308, 316, 178 C.R. 818; People v. Dampier (1984) 159 C.A.3d 709, 713, 205 C.R. 728; People v. Rodriguez (1987) 196 C.A.3d 1041, 1049, 242 C.R. 386 [identification made 9 hours after shooting was timely, where it was conducted as soon as officers determined that defendant or his family was involved, located family, and transported witnesses to their location]; People v. Cowger (1988) 202 C.A.3d 1066, 1072, 249 C.R. 240 [attempted rape victim had ample opportunity to observe defendant, described him accurately, and identified him instantaneously less than 2 hours after crime].)

(2) Right To Transport Suspect for Identification. There are circumstances under which, without probable cause for an arrest, the police may be justified in transporting a suspect to another location for identification; e.g., where an assault victim is injured and physically unable to be taken promptly to view the suspect, or where it would be less of an intrusion on the suspect's rights to convey the suspect speedily a few blocks away to the crime scene rather than to unduly prolong the field detention. But ordinarily there are less intrusive and more reasonable alternatives (e.g., bringing the witness to the detention scene, or arranging for a subsequent confrontation); and in the absence of any exigency, transporting the suspect to the crime scene may be a violation of his or her constitutional rights. (See People v. Harris (1975) 15 C.3d 384, 390, 391, 124 C.R. 536, 540 P.2d 632; In re Lynette G. (1976) 54 C.A.3d 1087, 1093, 126 C.R. 898 [Harris test met; victim injured and could not be taken to view suspects]; In re Dung T. (1984) 160 C.A.3d 697, 712, 206 C.R. 772 [Harris test not met; car fitting description of one used in a robbery was stopped and its occupants taken to police station for lineup identification with no attempt to ascertain their identification or to bring victim to scene].)

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

7. Other Identification Methods.

b. In-Custody Identification.

1. Proper Method.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 405

[§ 405] Proper Method.

While the need for prompt in-the-field identification has been recognized as a valid limit on a suspect's rights (see supra, §404), the practice of having a "single showup," i.e., a one-to-one confrontation with the victim at a later time, presents special problems.

However, there is nothing inherently unfair in a single showup. (See Stovall v. Denno (1967) 388 U.S. 293, 87 S.Ct. 1967, 1972, 18 L.Ed.2d 1199, 1206 [seriously injured victim identified defendant while he was handcuffed to police officer in her hospital room; no error]; Neil v. Biggers (1972) 409 U.S. 188, 93 S.Ct. 375, 382, 34 L.Ed.2d 401, 411; Manson v. Brathwaite (1977) 432 U.S. 98, 97 S.Ct. 2243, 2253, 53 L.Ed.2d 140, 154; People v. Bauer (1969) 1 C.3d 368, 374, 82 C.R. 357, 461 P.2d 637 [victims individually chose photographs of defendant, then saw him through one-way glass at police station and identified him in each other's presence; no error]; People v. Irvin (1968) 264 C.A.2d 747, 755, 70 C.R. 892 [victim was "candid" about what he originally observed and what characteristics of defendants were similar; no error]; People v. Floyd (1970) 1 C.3d 694, 714, 83 C.R. 608, 464 P.2d 64 [sole ground for arrest was that defendant matched witness' description]; People v. Fortier (1970) 10 C.A.3d 760, 764, 89 C.R. 210 [defendant was charged with illegal narcotics transaction involving undercover officer; no error in allowing single showup because officer "knew what defendant looked like prior to seeing him in the police station"]; People v. Smith (1970) 13 C.A.3d 897, 909, 91 C.R. 786 [victim had made in-the-field identification, then received permission to see defendant again at police station]; People v. Hunt (1977) 19 C.3d 888, 893, 140 C.R. 651, 568 P.2d 376; People v. Martinez (1989) 207 C.A.3d 1204, 1219, 255 C.R. 691; People v. Johnson (1989) 210 C.A.3d 316, 323, 258 C.R. 347 [victim instantly identified defendant when he was brought to police station following arrest]; People v. Leung (1992) 5 C.A.4th 482, 497, 500, 7 C.R.2d 290 [court should look at totality of circumstances]; People v. Nguyen (1994) 23 C.A.4th 32, 39, 28 C.R.2d 140 [victim taken to apartment occupied by one of two suspects, where she was shown three men and identified both suspects; held not suggestive, as police did not encourage victim to identify suspects]; 39 A.L.R.3d 791 [factors affecting suggestibility].)

In Neil v. Biggers, supra, the showup occurred at the police station some 7 months after an alleged rape, and consisted of two detectives walking the suspect past the victim. At the victim's request, the police ordered the suspect to say, "[S]hut up or I'll kill you." Although the record was unclear on whether the victim had made her identification before or after the suspect had spoken, the victim testified that she knew him when she first laid eyes on him. Held, there was no violation of defendant's rights. Suggestive confrontations are disapproved because they increase the likelihood of misidentification. (93 S.Ct. 382, 34 L.Ed.2d 411.) The factors to be considered in evaluating the likelihood of misidentification include "the opportunity of the witness to view the criminal at the time of the crime, the witness' degree of attention, the accuracy of the witness' prior description of the criminal, the level of certainty demonstrated by the witness at the confrontation, and the length of time between the crime and the confrontation." (93 S.Ct. 382, 34 L.Ed.2d 411.) Here, the victim was no casual observer but rather the victim of a humiliating crime, had opportunity and adequate light to see her assailant, and gave the police a more than ordinarily thorough description of him. The 7-month lapse between the rape and the confrontation would be a "seriously negative" factor in most cases. But the victim made no previous identification at any showup, lineup or photographic showing. "Her record for reliability was thus a good one, as she had previously resisted whatever suggestiveness inheres in a showup." (93 S.Ct. 383, 34 L.Ed.2d 412.) (See 26 Stanf. L. Rev. 1097; and see Manson v. Brathwaite, supra, applying Biggers criteria and holding the prosecution evidence admissible.)

Nevertheless, the single showup is a critical stage of the criminal proceedings to which the right of assistance of counsel attaches. (People v. Martin (1970) 2 C.3d 822, 830, 87 C.R. 709, 471 P.2d 29, infra, §406.)

2. Improper Where No Compelling Reason.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 406

[§ 406] Improper Where No Compelling Reason.

The likelihood of prejudice in the one-to-one confrontation is so great that the police should not use it without a compelling reason. (In re Hill (1969) 71 C.2d 997, 1005, 80 C.R. 537, 458 P.2d 449 ["It would have been no hardship for the police to have assembled a number of prisoners and to have held a lineup in the usual manner, especially since petitioners were then being held in the Los Angeles County jail"]; People v. Bisogni (1971) 4 C.3d 582, 586, 94 C.R. 164, 483 P.2d 780 [there was "no emergency present" to require single showup]; People v. Martin (1970) 2 C.3d 822, 829, 87 C.R. 709, 471 P.2d 29.)

In People v. Martin, supra, a police officer's wife was the victim of a purse snatching and the only witness to the crime. Later that evening, she viewed defendant through a one-way mirror at the police station, where defendant was accompanied by a uniformed officer. Held, the identification procedure was improper. "Nothing has been shown which would indicate that a formal lineup with full constitutional protections was rendered impractical by the circumstances. Indeed, it appears that at least two persons of defendant's general physical characteristics were available for this purpose." (2 C.3d 829.) The dangers of suggestion were especially great. "Whereas in a lineup situation an identifying witness must at least choose among persons having some physical resemblance to one another, a one-to-one viewing requires only the assent of the witness. Moreover, the possibility of mistaken identification is further increased when, as here, the suspect is displayed to the witness in the company of a uniformed officer--the witness having viewed other subjects accompanied by non-uniformed persons." (2 C.3d 829.)

In People v. Fairley (1982) 135 C.A.3d 182, 185 C.R. 109, a robbery witness testified that he was told by the prosecution to come to the courtroom on the first day of trial and, if he saw anyone he recognized, to stand up and leave. The witness did so when defendant entered the courtroom, and in subsequent testimony identified defendant as the robber. Although the conviction was affirmed on other evidence, the court disapproved this procedure: "Showups of the type used by the prosecutor in this case ought to be discouraged, ... for the reason that they cannot be conducted within any reasonable limits of control. Given the fact that the witness knows the purpose for which he is in court, there are an unforeseeable number of circumstances which can arise in any open courtroom which would quickly indicate to any person of reasonable intelligence who the defendant is." (135 C.A.3d 187.)

In People v. Bisogni, supra, three persons--defendant, B, and Mrs. G--were suspected of having committed an armed robbery 6 months earlier. B had been killed in an unrelated crime, but defendant and Mrs. G were in custody when witnesses were brought to the police station to try identifying the robbers. After a fair lineup procedure in which they picked out defendant, the witnesses looked through a peephole to observe Mrs. G alone in a room. At least one viewer did not recognize Mrs. G, but the others spoke about her being the woman who had participated in the robbery. Following the identifications, Mrs. G apparently cooperated with the police. At defendant's trial, the witnesses identified Mrs. G, but defendant claimed that he and Mrs. G were together and that neither one was at the scene of the crime. Held, Mrs. G's identification was unfair, and defendant had standing to complain.

(a) The viewing of Mrs. G alone very much suggested that she was probably the female robber. There was no emergency requiring a single showup. Because the viewing occurred many months after the robbery, the witnesses' identifications could not have been based on recent memories of the criminals. (4 C.3d 586.)

(b) The reason for excluding evidence based on an unfairly conducted showup (unreliable) is equally applicable to identification of a coparticipant in a crime. "Accordingly, whenever the identity of a confederate is essential to prove the defendant's participation in a crime and when, as here, such evidence effectively destroys the defense offered by the defendant, he has standing to challenge the fairness of the identification procedures of the alleged coparticipant." (4 C.3d 586.)

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

7. Other Identification Methods.

c. Independent Origin of In-Court Identification.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 407

[§ 407] Independent Origin of In-Court Identification.

Even if a pretrial identification has been tainted, the prosecution should be allowed to establish by clear and convincing evidence that the in-court identifications were based on observations of the suspect other than the lineup. Among the factors to be considered are "the prior opportunity to observe the alleged criminal act, the existence of any discrepancy between any pre-lineup description and the defendant's actual description, any identification prior to lineup of another person, the identification by picture of the defendant prior to the lineup, failure to identify the defendant on a prior occasion, and the lapse of time between the alleged act and the lineup identification." (United States v. Wade (1967) 388 U.S. 218, 87 S.Ct. 1926, 1940, 18 L.Ed.2d 1149, 1165, supra, §392; see People v. Caruso (1968) 68 C.2d 183, 190, 65 C.R. 336, 436 P.2d 336, supra, §398; In re Hill (1969) 71 C.2d 997, 1006, 80 C.R. 537, 458 P.2d 449; People v. Fowler (1969) 1 C.3d 335, 350, 82 C.R. 363, 461 P.2d 643; People v. Banks (1970) 2 C.3d 127, 139, 84 C.R. 367, 465 P.2d 263; People v. Martin (1970) 2 C.3d 822, 833, 87 C.R. 709, 471 P.2d 29, supra, §406; People v. Bisogni (1971) 4 C.3d 582, 587, 94 C.R. 164, 483 P.2d 780, supra, §406; People v. Smith (1970) 4 C.A.3d 41, 47, 84 C.R. 229; People v. Williams (1973) 9 C.3d 24, 37, 106 C.R. 622, 506 P.2d 998; People v. Collins (1971) 20 C.A.3d 601, 604, 97 C.R. 821 [violation of then existing rule on assistance of counsel at preindictment lineup was harmless error; courtroom identifications were not tainted]; People v. Sanchez (1982) 131 C.A.3d 718, 731, 182 C.R. 671; People v. Arias (1996) 13 C.4th 92, 167, 51 C.R.2d 770, 913 P.2d 980 [at penalty phase of capital trial, in-court identification of defendant by victim of prior crime was sufficiently independent of any flaws in photo lineup procedure following prior crime, and of information volunteered to witness by process server, to go to jury].)

Thus, in People v. Martin, supra, a purse snatching case, the inquiry about independent identification should have included "(1) the lighting and opportunity for observation at the time of the offense; (2) the clear discrepancy between the description given by the victim after the offense and defendant's actual description; (3) the uncertainty manifested by the victim at the time of the pretrial confrontation and afterwards; and (4) the failure of the victim to identify defendant by photograph." (2 C.3d 833.) (See People v. Dominick (1986) 182 C.A.3d 1174, 1196, 227 C.R. 849 [assault victim's failure to positively identify defendant from videotaped lineup did not require exclusion of his in-court identification of defendant].)

In People v. Malich (1971) 15 C.A.3d 253, 93 C.R. 87, the court commented on the similarity between "independent source" and "harmless error" inquiries: "Both require a comparison of the various impressions and memories which produce the witness' ability to identify the accused. Both involve a comparative analysis of the witness' observations at the time of the crime, on any interim occasion thereafter and at the time of the illegal confrontation.

There is this difference: In inquiring into independent source, the trial court probes to ascertain whether these sources are so reliable and vivid as to preclude a causal connection between the tainted lineup and the courtroom identification. ... In the harmless error inquiry, the court assumes the tainted connection but asks whether the combination of admissible tokens of identity is so compelling that the tainted courtroom identification itself becomes surplus to the array of influences inducing the verdict." (15 C.A.3d 262.)

1. General Rule: Substantial Likelihood of Misidentification.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 408

[§ 408] General Rule: Substantial Likelihood of Misidentification.

The Wade-Gilbert rule (supra, §392) does not apply to pretrial photographic identifications of a suspect after his or her arrest. Convictions based on eyewitness identification at trial following a pretrial identification by photograph will be set aside only if the photographic identification procedure was so impermissibly suggestive as to give rise to a substantial likelihood of misidentification. (Simmons v. United States (1968) 390 U.S. 377, 88 S.Ct. 967, 971, 19 L.Ed.2d 1247, 1253; see People v. Lawrence (1971) 4 C.3d 273, 275, 93 C.R. 204, 481 P.2d 212; *People v. ### XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

7. Other Identification Methods.

d. Pretrial Photographic Identification.

2. Illustrations.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 409

[§ 409] Illustrations.

In People v. Wimberly (1992) 5 C.A.4th 773, 7 C.R.2d 152, the court rejected several challenges to the pretrial identification procedures.

(a) Defendant first complains that two of the victims identified him in a lineup 3 days after viewing photographs. But the use of photographs for identification prior to a lineup is not impermissibly suggestive. (5 C.A.4th 788, citing People v. Blair (1979) 25 C.3d 640, 159 C.R. 818, 602 P.2d 738.)

(b) Defendant next complains that the police included his picture in each of two sets of photographs that they showed one of the victims. But California and federal courts have rejected the argument that identification is impermissibly suggestive if the defendant is the only person appearing in both a display of photographs and a subsequent lineup. (5 C.A.4th 789.)

(c) Defendant next complains that the lineup was conducted only 90 minutes after a "jewelry lineup" during which one victim and the parents of another victim identified property. However, if it is permissible to hold a lineup shortly after a display of photographs, "a fortiori, it is permissible to hold a lineup shortly after a jewelry display, which does not involve the viewing of a defendant." (5 C.A.4th 789.)

(d) Finally, defendant complains that he and other participants in the lineup significantly differed physically. But courts have upheld identifications despite the existence of similar or greater disparities among participants. (5 C.A.4th 790.)

In People v. Johnson (1992) 3 C.4th 1183, 14 C.R.2d 702, 842 P.2d 1, a photo lineup was held on July 2, and Angela, although uncertain as to her identification, picked defendant's photograph from a six-photo lineup as the one most resembling the man who had shot her. On July 22, there was a second six-picture lineup, consisting of three of the photographs used in the July 2 lineup, two photographs of men not included in the earlier lineup, and a more recent photograph of defendant wearing prison clothes. As had been done before the earlier lineup, Angela was informed that she was not obligated to pick anyone. This time, Angela's identification of defendant was positive. Held, the procedure used was not unduly suggestive.

(a) Because all of the photographs were of black males, generally of the same age, complexion and build, and generally resembling each other, defendant's photograph did not stand out. Minor differences in both the facial hair of the participants and the background color and image size of the photographs did not make the lineup impermissibly suggestive. And the fact that defendant's photograph was in the bottom of two rows, and was with the other photographs used before, did not create two suggestive "subsets" of photographs. No matter where his or her photograph is placed, a defendant can argue that its position is suggestive. (3 C.4th 1217.)

(b) The use of three photographs from the earlier lineup did not reduce the July 22 lineup to the functional equivalent of a three-person array. Rather, it was a reasonable way to avoid suggesting that defendant was the only suspect. And it was not necessary to use new photographs of the other men, as had been done in defendant's case: Angela testified that she did not recognize the three photographs from the first lineup when they were shown to her during the second lineup. (3 C.4th 1217.)

(c) The fact that defendant was the only person depicted in jail clothing was not unduly suggestive because (1) there was no evidence that Angela knew what jail clothing looked like; (2) she indicated that she did not notice defendant's clothes when she selected his photograph; and (3) there were no identifying marks on defendant's clothing, i.e., he merely appeared to be wearing a gold shirt with a T-shirt underneath. (3 C.4th 1217.)

(d) Prior to the second photo lineup, Angela was told by an officer that a suspect named Willie Johnson (defendant) was in custody. Defendant argued that the procedure was therefore unfair because Angela must have assumed that she had selected Willie Johnson's photograph on July 2 and that he would also be in the July 22 lineup. This contention fails because Angela did not know Willie Johnson and had never seen him before the crime. Also, no names appeared on the photographs, and no one described Willie Johnson to her. Hence, knowing the name "Willie Johnson" and that he was in custody could not have assisted Angela in selecting defendant's photograph. Angela's more positive identification after the second lineup was probably due to the fact that a more recent photograph of defendant was used, rather than to her knowledge that Willie Johnson was in custody. (3 C.4th 1218.)

Cunningham* (2001) 25 C.4th 926, 990, 108 C.R.2d 291, 25 P.3d 519 [there was no substantial likelihood of misidentification, where defendant's photo was one of six in lineup, his photo was similar to other five, witness had had ample opportunity to observe defendant during crime, he was instructed that perpetrator was not necessarily included in lineup and that he had no obligation to identify anyone, and he readily identified defendant]; People v. Yeoman (2003) 31 C.4th 93, 124, 2 C.R.3d 186, 72 P.3d 1166 [photographic lineup procedures were not unduly suggestive, even though in both lineups defendant's photo occupied fourth position, where lineups were separated by a month and different photo of defendant was used in each]; People v. Carter (2005) 36 C.4th 1114, 1163, 32 C.R.3d 759, 117 P.3d 476 [photographic lineup, including defendant's semiglossy photo and five glossy Polaroid photos of police officers, was not unduly suggestive, where each subject was middle-aged or younger male with mustache and dark hair, wearing white or colored shirt; although defendant's shirt was orange, it did not necessarily look like "jail jumpsuit," and difference in quality of photos was less important than difference in appearance of persons depicted]; People v. Gonzalez (2006) 38 C.4th 932, 943, 44 C.R.3d 237, 135 P.3d 649 [in capital murder trial, photographic lineup that was basis for pretrial identifications of defendant was not unduly suggestive; nothing in defendant's clothing, his apparently droopy eye, or any discoloration in his photograph would have suggested that he should be selected]; People v. Carlos (2006) 138 C.A.4th 907, 912, 41 C.R.3d 873 [photographic lineup was unduly suggestive where array of six photos had defendant's picture located at bottom center, directly above his name and number, no other photos having any such identification].

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

7. Other Identification Methods.

d. Pretrial Photographic Identification.

3. Simulated Lineup.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 410

[§ 410] Simulated Lineup.

In People v. Lawrence (1971) 4 C.3d 273, 93 C.R. 204, 481 P.2d 212, defendant was arrested 2 hours after a kidnap victim had described her captor to the police. Defendant told the police that his attorney asked to be notified of any lineup procedures so he could attend them. Instead of a conventional lineup, however, the police set up a simulated five-man lineup which they photographed in the absence of defense counsel and the prospective witnesses. The victim was then shown the color photographs and told only that she should be sure to pick the right man. After looking at the pictures for 2 to 3 seconds, she pointed out defendant. Held, the identification was proper.

(a) Better police procedures could well have been employed by use of a true lineup with defense counsel and the witness present, because there was ample time and opportunity to do so. But the failure to take that action was not crucial. There is no distinction between identification from a simulated lineup and those from mug shots or other photographic displays. "Thus, if the police had cut up the photographs and shown the pictures of the participants individually Wade and Gilbert would have no conceivable application. We find no basis in logic to reach a different conclusion because pictures of five men standing in a line were shown." (4 C.3d 277.)

(b) The key issue is whether a photographic identification represents a confrontation between the accused and the witness. At corporeal exhibitions, where the suspect is exhibited in person, the authorities may require the suspect to move about, perform certain acts, don particular clothing or speak the words used during the commission of the offense. The witness thus observes the suspect in person, from a short distance, performing the very acts the criminal did in perpetrating the crime. "At photographic identification proceedings, however, the accused is not present and the witness observes only static poses of those pictured. When mug shots are used the witness is presented only with a collection of faces. Such a witness does not observe the suspect repeat actions or hear the accused speak. We conclude, therefore, that the showing of photographs of the accused to a witness is not a confrontation or exhibition as those words are used in Wade or Gilbert." (4 C.3d 278.)

(c) The possibility of unfairness does exist. But if the photographs are preserved and available at trial, defense counsel can use them in cross-examination of prosecution witnesses, or the judge may examine them to determine whether the display was fairly presented. (4 C.3d 278.)

Three justices dissented, contending that the photographs were taken with the conscious purpose of evading the Wade-Gilbert requirements.

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

7. Other Identification Methods.

d. Pretrial Photographic Identification.

4. Individual Photographs.

aa. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 411

[§ 411] In General.

The use of "mug shots," "rogue's gallery" photographs, identification photographs taken in prison, or other likenesses of a suspect has long been sanctioned as an appropriate means of identification. (See Simmons v. United States (1968) 390 U.S. 377, 88 S.Ct. 967, 971, 19 L.Ed.2d 1247, 1253; People v. Lawrence (1971) 4 C.3d 273, 279, 93 C.R. 204, 481 P.2d 212; 30 A.L.R.3d 908, supra, §410.)

In People v. Neal (1969) 271 C.A.2d 826, 77 C.R. 65, defendant robbed a finance company at gunpoint in the presence of employees. The pretrial identification procedure was as follows: (a) Shortly after the robbery, two employees were taken to the police station and shown hundreds of pictures in the file; they identified defendant. (b) The same day, defendant's picture was removed from the file and two other employees looked through it without identifying the robber. Then they were handed a small group of pictures of persons similar to defendant (a black man), and both, sitting separately, picked defendant. Held, the procedure was fair: there was no element of suggestion, and each eyewitness made an immediate identification. (271 C.A.2d 833.)

In People v. Pijal (1973) 33 C.A.3d 682, 109 C.R. 230, an undercover officer bought a restricted dangerous drug from defendant, whom he identified 1 week later from a series of mug shots. Defendant contended that the arbitrary delay of a week denied him his right to due process. Held, the claim is "obviously meritless." While the lapse of time between the alleged act and the identification may be a factor, additional circumstances have equal--or greater--weight, e.g., whether the photographic display was fair or rigged, whether the police made suggestive comments, whether the witness observed the defendant more than once, whether the encounter was a brief glimpse or of longer duration, whether the lighting conditions were adequate, or whether the witness had reason to recall the defendant's face. (33 C.A.3d 689.) "Since Moroschok saw appellant several times, picked him up during daylight hours, bargained with him face to face, and observed him sitting, standing, walking, bending and from every side and angle ... , the probability of mistaken identification should be ruled out as a matter of law." (33 C.A.3d 690.)

Other illustrative cases are People v. Smith (1968) 259 C.A.2d 814, 818, 66 C.R. 551; People v. Dewberry (1974) 40 C.A.3d 175, 178, 181, 114 C.R. 815 [officer showed about seven photographs to witness, two of which were of defendant; procedure was not unduly suggestive]; People v. James (1976) 56 C.A.3d 876, 885, 128 C.R. 733 [no unfairness even though numbers appeared on pictures of defendant and codefendant]; People v. Adams (1982) 137 C.A.3d 346, 352, 187 C.R. 505 [use of 3-year-old photograph of suspect showing him bearded with bandage on his forehead was not unduly suggestive, where all participants in photographic lineup had some type of facial hair and each photograph was presented with piece of paper across the forehead]; People v. Contreras (1983) 144 C.A.3d 749, 758, 192 C.R. 810 [50 to 60 photographs of members of particular gang were arranged in alphabetical order and examined by two victims in separate rooms, after being admonished to view photographs in unbiased manner; no unfairness]; People v. Sanders (1990) 51 C.3d 471, 508, 273 C.R. 537, 797 P.2d 561 [photo array was somewhat suggestive because only defendant's photo matched witness' description, but totality of circumstances did not show very substantial likelihood of irreparable misidentification]; People v. Phan (1993) 14 C.A.4th 1453, 1461, 18 C.R.2d 364 [police obtained five "social" photos of defendant and composed six-person photo lineup; procedure was necessary and not suggestive, and identification was reliable]; People v. Contreras (1993) 17 C.A.4th 813, 823, 21 C.R.2d 496 [single photo identification procedure was suggestive but there was no causal connection between it and witness' in-court identification of defendant].

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 412

[§ 412] Clarifications and Distinctions.

(1) Distinction: Inadmissible Criminal History. In People v. Cook (1967) 252 C.A.2d 25, 60 C.R. 133, defendant, charged with robbery and burglary and a prior federal conviction, admitted the prior; hence, under P.C. 1025, it could not be alluded to (3 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Punishment, §376). However, two eyewitnesses to the crime had picked his picture out of a police mug book, thus identifying him as the perpetrator. At the trial, a police officer testified to the fact of selection of the picture, and the trial judge admitted it in evidence. The picture, a typical mug shot, showed defendant's face and profile, with a printed legend giving the police department, the date, and defendant's name. Held, this was error. The "other crimes" rule permits proof of prior convictions for a relevant purpose, despite P.C. 1025, and the photograph, proving an extrajudicial identification, is admissible. (252 C.A.2d 28.) However, the unedited picture brought into evidence an indication of another offense of defendant. This was a declaration of a police photographer not available for cross-examination, hence, inadmissible hearsay. The prosecution should have, in some manner, deleted the objectionable parts. (252 C.A.2d 30.)

(2) Distinction: Rigged Photographs. In People v. Pedercine (1967) 256 C.A.2d 328, 63 C.R. 873, the defendant was adequately identified in the courtroom and by photographs shown to witnesses, and the conviction was affirmed on overwhelming evidence of guilt. But the court took occasion to denounce certain photographs used in an out-of-court identification which were not introduced by the prosecution--they came to light only when defendant's counsel offered them on cross-examination of one of the identifying witnesses. The photographs placed a masculine-appearing mug shot of defendant with extremely feminine women. The court thought this was just as bad as the unfair postindictment lineup condemned in the Wade-Gilbert cases (supra, §392 et seq.): "The same rationale prompts our declaration of a rule that a preindictment pretrial identification conducted with obvious unfairness possesses the same unreliability and must be similarly condemned." (256 C.A.2d 336.)

(3) Availability of Comparison Photographs. The fairness of a photographic identification procedure has been justified, at least in part, because the photographs used for comparative purposes are assumed to have been available to defense counsel for use in cross-examination. (See People v. Lawrence (1971) 4 C.3d 273, 278, 93 C.R. 204, 481 P.2d 212, supra, §410; People v. Adair (1969) 2 C.A.3d 92, 96, 82 C.R. 460 ["The photographs, with any shortcomings in their quality, lighting, exposure and the like, are available to examine"]; People v. Hawkins (1970) 7 C.A.3d 117, 121, 86 C.R. 428; People v. Dontanville (1970) 10 C.A.3d 783, 792, 89 C.R. 172 [suggesting that defendant could have subpenaed entire photographic file to demonstrate unfairness].)

But even if the comparison photographs are unavailable at trial, the identification procedure may be upheld. (See Simmons v. United States (1968) 390 U.S. 377, 88 S.Ct. 967, 973, 19 L.Ed.2d 1247, 1255 [preferable procedure would have been for government to label photographs and keep them available, but defense made inadequate pretrial efforts to produce pictures and did not explain their significance at trial]; People v. Bethea (1971) 18 C.A.3d 930, 937, 96 C.R. 229; People v. Dewberry (1974) 40 C.A.3d 175, 180, 114 C.R. 815.)

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

8. Evidence Obtained by Brutality.

a. Rochin Rule: Violation of Due Process.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 413

[§ 413] Rochin Rule: Violation of Due Process.

The Model Code, Rule 205, took the position that the privilege against self-incrimination does not apply to the "taking of samples of body fluids or substances for analysis." (See 20 So. Cal. L. Rev. 301; 22 So. Cal. L. Rev. 483; supra, §385 and infra, §422 et seq.) But a more fundamental protection against drastic methods was invoked in Rochin v. California (1952) 342 U.S. 165, 72 S.Ct. 205, 96 L.Ed. 183. When deputy sheriffs broke into defendant's home, he swallowed morphine capsules. After an unsuccessful attempt to force them from his mouth, the officers took him to a hospital, had his stomach pumped, and recovered them. His conviction of possession of morphine was affirmed in People v. Rochin (1950) 101 C.A.2d 140, 225 P.2d 1, but was reversed by the United States Supreme Court on the ground that use of the evidence obtained in this manner was a violation of federal due process: "[W]e are compelled to conclude that the proceedings by which this conviction was obtained do more than offend some fastidious squeamishness or private sentimentalism about combatting crime too energetically. It is conduct that shocks the conscience. Illegally breaking into the privacy of the petitioner, the struggle to open his mouth and remove what was there, the forcible extraction of his stomach's contents--this course of proceeding by agents of government to obtain evidence is bound to offend even hardened sensibilities. They are methods too close to the rack and the screw to permit of constitutional differentiation." (72 S.Ct. 209, 96 L.Ed. 190.)

In further explanation of the holding, the Court said: "To attempt in this case to distinguish what lawyers call 'real evidence' from verbal evidence is to ignore the reasons for excluding coerced confessions. Use of involuntary verbal confessions in State criminal trials is constitutionally obnoxious not only because of their unreliability. They are inadmissible under the Due Process Clause even though statements contained in them may be independently true. Coerced confessions offend the community's sense of fair play and decency. So here, to sanction the brutal conduct which naturally enough was condemned by the court whose judgment is before us, would be to afford brutality the cloak of law. Nothing would be more calculated to discredit law and thereby to brutalize the temper of a society." (72 S.Ct. 210, 96 L.Ed. 190.) (See 1 McCormick 5th, §164; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2184a; 40 Cal. L. Rev. 311; 66 Harv. L. Rev. 122; 71 Harv. L. Rev. 161; 79 Harv. L. Rev. 970; 5 Hastings L. J. 231; 25 So. Cal. L. Rev. 357; 4 Stanf. L. Rev. 591; 2 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 565; 1951 A.S. 840; 1953 A.S. 762; 25 A.L.R.2d 1407 [requiring submission to physical examination or test as violation of constitutional rights].)

Introduction of evidence violating the Rochin rule is not reversible error per se; as in other cases of illegally obtained evidence (except confessions; see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §89), the judgment will be affirmed if no prejudice is found. (People v. Parham (1963) 60 C.2d 378, 386, 33 C.R. 497, 384 P.2d 1001; People v. Cappellia (1989) 208 C.A.3d 1331, 1337, 256 C.R. 695, infra, §417; see 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, §384; 6 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Reversible Error, §26.)

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

8. Evidence Obtained by Brutality.

b. Brutal Body Examination.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 414

[§ 414] Brutal Body Examination.

The Rochin rule (supra, §413) has been applied to various forms of physical compulsion used to prevent accused narcotic offenders caught red-handed from swallowing the drug and destroying the evidence.

(1) Choke Hold. In People v. Martinez (1954) 130 C.A.2d 54, 278 P.2d 26, the officer placed a choke hold on defendant, forcing him to spit out the package. In reversing the conviction, the court observed that the question "is not how hard an officer may choke a suspect to obtain evidence but whether he may choke him at all" (130 C.A.2d 56), and declared that the Rochin case "should serve as a warning to all those who are tempted to use brutal force for the extraction of evidence from the person of an accused." (130 C.A.2d 58.) (See People v. Brinson (1961) 191 C.A.2d 253, 256, 12 C.R. 625 [officer choked defendant for a minute and a half]; People v. Sevilla (1961) 192 C.A.2d 570, 573, 13 C.R. 714 [officer testified "I wasn't choking but my arm was around pretty tight"; see vigorous dissent, 192 C.A.2d 578]; People v. Erikson (1962) 210 C.A.2d 177, 180, 26 C.R. 546 [officer testified "I was trying to keep his Adam's apple from moving," following which defendant coughed up the narcotic]; People v. Parham (1963) 60 C.2d 378, 384, 33 C.R. 497, 384 P.2d 1001 [officers held defendant by cheeks and hit him on back of neck with police club to compel him to spit out paper which he tried to chew up]; People v. Sanders (1969) 268 C.A.2d 802, 805, and footnote 1, 74 C.R. 350 [describing serious dangers of choking process, quoting textbook on judo]; People v. Trevino (1977) 72 C.A.3d 686, 690, 691, 140 C.R. 243; People v. Jones (1989) 209 C.A.3d 725, 730, 257 C.R. 500 [officer placed pressure below defendant's chin and above his throat while pushing on back of his neck]; but see People v. Lara (1980) 108 C.A.3d 237, 166 C.R. 475, infra, §417 [forcing defendant's head against his chest held proper method of preventing him from swallowing balloon containing heroin].)

(2) Emetic Solution. In Vasquez v. Superior Court (1962) 199 C.A.2d 61, 18 C.R. 140, police observed defendant swallowing a condom containing a white powder thought to be heroin. Defendant was brought to a hospital, handcuffed, and forcibly restrained by two police officers while a physician injected defendant's arm with apomorphine, allegedly to prevent the potentially fatal absorption of heroin into defendant's system. The injection caused nausea, vomiting, and extreme weakness for about 30 minutes, during which time defendant regurgitated the condom, found to contain five grams of heroin. There was testimony that without the injection, the condom might well have passed through defendant's digestive tract without ill effect. Held, the conduct of the police and physician "was brutal and shocking," and violated defendant's constitutional rights. (199 C.A.2d 66.) (See also People v. Bracamonte (1975) 15 C.3d 394, 404, 124 C.R. 528, 540 P.2d 624; People v. Rodriguez (1977) 71 C.A.3d 547, 550, 551, 557, 139 C.R. 509.)

8. Evidence Obtained by Brutality.

c. Other Evidence Brutally Obtained.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 415

[§ 415] Other Evidence Brutally Obtained.

People v. Matteson (1964) 61 C.2d 466, 39 C.R. 1, 393 P.2d 161, makes it clear that the Rochin rule (supra, §413) rests on its own due process foundation, and is not limited by the scope of the self-incrimination privilege. Defendant, having presented missing corporation checks with his indorsements, was arrested for forgery. Officer R interrogated him, and testified that defendant admitted the wrongful indorsements, and that Officer E took defendant out of the room and returned with a handwriting exemplar. Defendant testified that he had refused to make the exemplar until beaten and threatened by Officer E. A cellmate corroborated the beating testimony, and Officer E was not available at the trial. Held, conviction reversed for error in admitting the exemplar, which, under the uncontradicted evidence, was obtained by brutality. "It is irrelevant that a handwriting exemplar does not fall within the privilege against self-incrimination; the rule of the Rochin case is a rule of exclusion, and the fact that the evidence does not fall within other exclusionary rules does not save it." (61 C.2d 469.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

8. Evidence Obtained by Brutality.

d. Proper Procedures.

1. General Rule: Reasonable Body Examination.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 416

[§ 416] General Rule: Reasonable Body Examination.

Where no brutal or shocking force is used on the person of the accused, there is no violation of due process under the Rochin rule (supra, §413 et seq.). This leaves the case within the general rule that body examination, or the taking of body fluids or substances for analysis, in a reasonable manner although by compulsion, does not violate the privilege against self-incrimination. (See 4 Cal. Western L. Rev. 355; 9 Hastings L. J. 227; 1957 A.S. 561, 568; supra, §385 and infra, §422 et seq.)

Thus, in People v. Woods (1956) 139 C.A.2d 515, 517, 293 P.2d 901, a narcotics suspect was taken to a physician and required, over his protest, to submit to removal of a rubber finger stall of powdered drugs from his rectum. This medically approved method of rectal examination, involving little if any pain, was regarded as similar to a blood test (infra, §422 et seq.). (To the same effect, see People v. West (1985) 170 C.A.3d 326, 334, 335, 216 C.R. 195, infra, §419.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

8. Evidence Obtained by Brutality.

d. Proper Procedures.

2. Preventing Defendant From Swallowing Evidence.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 417

[§ 417] Preventing Defendant From Swallowing Evidence.

The most common situations are those in which the narcotics suspect attempts to conceal the drug in his or her mouth. Forcing the suspect (by choking) to spit it out violates the Rochin rule (supra, §413), but successfully inducing or ordering the suspect to do so does not. (People v. Smith (1958) 50 C.2d 149, 150, 323 P.2d 435; People v. Zamora (1958) 163 C.A.2d 400, 401, 329 P.2d 531; see 64 A.L.R.5th 741 [discussing state cases considering issue].)

People v. Sanchez (1961) 189 C.A.2d 720, 726, 11 C.R. 407, goes further, and finds no fault with physical prevention where there is no struggle or brutal force. The officer placed his hand on defendant's throat to keep him from swallowing, ordered him to spit out the narcotic, and defendant did. The court, accepting the trial judge's finding that there was no choking, held that the Rochin rule was not violated. (See also, holding that no brutality was shown, People v. Dickenson (1962) 210 C.A.2d 127, 137, 26 C.R. 601; People v. Tahtinen (1962) 210 C.A.2d 755, 759, 26 C.R. 864; People v. Cisneras (1963) 214 C.A.2d 62, 66, 29 C.R. 146; People v. Mora (1965) 238 C.A.2d 1, 3, 47 C.R. 338.)

In People v. Lara (1980) 108 C.A.3d 237, 166 C.R. 475, defendant repeatedly refused to open his mouth. The officer proceeded to hold defendant in a manner that rendered swallowing difficult without interfering with breathing, and also forced his finger into defendant's mouth with the warning, "if you bite my finger, I'm going to bust your head open." The officer was then able to capture the balloon with his finger. Held, the evidence was admissible. There was no excessive force, and the warning "did not require suppression of the evidence which the officers had a legal right and duty to recover, and which defendant neither had the right to possess nor to destroy." (108 C.A.3d 242.)

In People v. Cappellia (1989) 208 C.A.3d 1331, 256 C.R. 695, two police officers grabbed defendant by the neck to keep him from swallowing three bindles of heroin that he had been seen putting in his mouth. The three accidentally tumbled to the ground, and defendant, who fell face first, began bleeding from the nose and the mouth. After a violent struggle lasting nearly 2 minutes, during which defendant refused to spit out the bindles and bit an officer who attempted to remove them from his mouth, defendant was handcuffed and complied with a request that he open his mouth. An officer then removed two bindles that he found there. The trial judge denied defendant's motion to suppress, finding that there "was no carotid hold" and the police did not use excessive force in conducting the search. Defendant was convicted of offering to sell heroin. On appeal defendant contended that, although the trial judge found that the police did not choke him, preventing his Adam's apple from moving up and down was dangerous and was akin to the choke hold condemned in People v. Sanders (1969) 268 C.A.2d 802, 74 C.R. 350, hence was excessive force. Held, conviction affirmed.

(a) While People v. Dickenson, supra, found it constitutionally permissible to prevent the destruction of evidence by holding a defendant's Adam's apple to prevent swallowing, People v. Trevino (1977) 72 C.A.3d 686, 140 C.R. 243, hinted that it may be constitutionally unreasonable for the police to put their hands on a defendant's throat at all. (208 C.A.3d 1337.)

(b) Although courts often review police conduct under the "shock the conscience" standard of Rochin, modern United States Supreme Court decisions are grounded on whether the search was "reasonable" under the circumstances. "In determining if the conduct was reasonable, we must consider (1) whether there was probable cause to conduct the search, (2) whether the procedure used 'may threaten the safety or health of the person,' and (3) whether the search would damage the individual's sense of 'personal privacy and bodily integrity.' " (208 C.A.3d 1338.)

(c) Seeing defendant placing the narcotics in his mouth provided probable cause, and a search of the mouth is, like a blood test, a routine part of ordinary life that does not damage a person's sense of personal privacy and security. (208 C.A.3d 1338.)

(d) The procedure used by the police did not threaten defendant's health or safety. "Although defendant suffered a bloody nose during the incident, that fact is not dispositive since it is uncontroverted the injury was an accident which came about largely as a result of defendant's efforts to elude arrest and destroy the evidence. What is important here is that the trial court specifically found the police did not choke defendant. The court also found that the police, in placing their hands around defendant's throat, neither impaired defendant's breathing nor caused him to gasp, choke, or cry out in pain. We agree that the 'application of force to a person's throat is a dangerous and sensitive activity' and that it 'is the type of force that, more than any other, is likely to result in violent resistance' ... , but the application of such force is not, as Trevino suggests, per se unreasonable, excessive, or a threat to a defendant's health or safety. It may be difficult for the officer in the field to discern whether too much force is being used in a particular case, but 'it makes little sense to say that the minimal pressure necessary to prevent swallowing is excessive, particularly when it is considered that if the drugs are swallowed the defendant may be harmed by them and may have to submit to an even more disagreeable procedure for his own protection or for retrieval of the evidence.' " (208 C.A.3d 1338.)

(e) Permitting the police to use minimal force around the neck to prevent a defendant from destroying evidence by swallowing is in accord with federal authorities, authorities from other jurisdictions, and is consistent with Proposition 8 (see 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §303 et seq.). (208 C.A.3d 1339.)

[§ 418] Procedure Used To Safeguard Defendant's Health.

In People v. Jones (1971) 20 C.A.3d 201, 97 C.R. 492, a police officer saw defendant swallow a number of red capsules, believed to be sodium secobarbital, immediately after being arrested. Although defendant had not appeared intoxicated at the time of his arrest, he soon developed noticeable symptoms of intoxication, e.g., shallow breathing and difficulty with balance. The officer took defendant to a medical center for examination by a doctor to determine whether he had taken a dangerous overdose of drugs. At the center, without any suggestion or request by the officer, a doctor who was informed of the circumstances decided that defendant's stomach should be pumped. Defendant, handcuffed and strapped to a table, did not object. The fluid taken from the stomach was later shown to contain a significant percentage of barbituric acid derivatives. Held, the procedure was proper.

(a) Even though defendant's consent was not required, the doctor regarded his apparent cooperation as an indication of consent. "It is most reasonable to assume that appellant did not wish to commit suicide and that his cooperation was motivated by his desire to live." (20 C.A.3d 209.)

(b) There was substantial evidence that the medical procedure followed was necessary to save defendant's life, or that the doctor reasonably so believed. (20 C.A.3d 210.)

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

8. Evidence Obtained by Brutality.

d. Proper Procedures.

4. Search of Prison Inmate.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 419

[§ 419] Search of Prison Inmate.

In People v. West (1985) 170 C.A.3d 326, 216 C.R. 195, officers received information that marijuana was to be brought into the county honor farm. The medical staff conducted a body and cavity search of over 40 inmates returning from work furlough, and Dr. S felt a foreign object in defendant's rectum. Dr. S gave defendant the opportunity to expel it, but defendant refused, and Dr. W, using his fingers and a vaginal speculum, extracted a red balloon containing marijuana cigarettes. Held, conviction affirmed; the search was proper.

(a) Body cavity searches are a severe intrusion of a person's right to privacy, but internal security is a compelling governmental interest justifying restrictions on prison inmates' privacy. The United States Supreme Court, in Bell v. Wolfish (1979) 441 U.S. 520, 99 S.Ct. 1861, 1884, 60 L.Ed.2d 447, 482, held that such a search of a prisoner, properly conducted, was reasonable. (170 C.A.3d 332.)

(b) Applying the factors of reasonableness set forth in Bell, the search here was justifiable. "The actual search took place in a trailer instead of a hospital or a prison clinic; however, the search was performed by a licensed physician using acceptable medical procedures and methods. The rectal search, from evidence of the procedure used, was not unduly harsh or oppressive, nor particularly prolonged." (170 C.A.3d 332.)

(c) In Hudson v. Palmer (1984) 468 U.S. 517, 104 S.Ct. 3194, 3199, 82 L.Ed.2d 393, 400, the Court recognized the necessity of random searches in penal institutions. (170 C.A.3d 333.) Here, the inmates of the honor farm are away from the facility and unsupervised for a period of time every day, and whether the information concerns the bringing in of marijuana or a weapon, security risks exist. (170 C.A.3d 333.) "For these reasons, a body cavity search of minimum security prisoners can be justified. In the prison context, the government must show that a legitimate penological need necessitates the search, and that it cannot be satisfied by a more narrow means. ... In light of the information that was obtained, a different type of search not only would have been useless, but would not even have supplied the level of probable cause appellant is urging as necessary to conduct the search." (170 C.A.3d 334.)

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 420

[§ 420] Operation Performed on Victim.

In People v. Browning (1980) 108 C.A.3d 117, 166 C.R. 293, defendant was charged with murder and assault. He maintained that he had shot Killen, the assault victim, in self-defense with a .32 caliber pistol, and that Killen had accidentally killed the murder victim with a .22 caliber pistol. To establish that defense, defendant moved that Killen be required to undergo surgery to remove bullets from his body for ballistics examination. Held, the motion was properly denied.

(a) The case law has established the rule that an unreasonable body examination of the defendant is a violation of due process. (108 C.A.3d 122, citing the text.) "[S]imple considerations of common sense and fair play" call for protection of a witness' or victim's Fourth Amendment (unreasonable search) rights. (108 C.A.3d 122.) The decisions have usually ignored these rights of the victim: "[T]he practice has developed of ordering such minor unpleasanties as blood tests and vaginal examinations from victims of crime without any particular note having been made of the rights of these people to protest such bodily intrusions." (108 C.A.3d 123.) The proper view is that witnesses should have, "and we hold they do have," the same Fourth Amendment protection against governmental intrusion into their bodies that criminal defendants have. (108 C.A.3d 124.)

(b) This is not a case of prosecution suppression of evidence (see 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §121 et seq.); the bullets are in the possession of Killen, and the district attorney also wants them. Hence, in balancing the victim's Fourth Amendment protection and the defendant's right to a fair trial, the proper solution is not to dismiss the serious criminal charge but to permit the defendant to comment on the witness-victim's refusal to cooperate in the production of the evidence. (108 C.A.3d 125, 126.) (See 41 A.L.R.4th 60 [admissibility in criminal case of physical evidence obtained without consent by surgical removal from person's body].)

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

8. Evidence Obtained by Brutality.

e. Distinction: Surgery To Remove Physical Evidence.

2. Operation Performed on Accused.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 421

[§ 421] Operation Performed on Accused.

In Winston v. Lee (1985) 470 U.S. 753, 105 S.Ct. 1611, 84 L.Ed.2d 662, defendant was suspected of attempting to commit armed robbery. He was suffering from a gunshot wound in his left chest area, and told the police that he had been shot by two persons attempting to rob him. The actual victim of a robbery committed that same night identified defendant as "the man that shot me." The prosecution moved for an order compelling defendant to undergo surgery to remove the bullet, alleging that the bullet would provide evidence of defendant's guilt or innocence. The trial judge granted the motion, but the federal district court granted an injunction, and the Court of Appeals affirmed. Held, affirmed; the search would be unreasonable under the Fourth Amendment.

(a) Schmerber v. California (1966) 384 U.S. 757, 86 S.Ct. 1826, 16 L.Ed.2d 908, infra, §423, provides the appropriate framework of analysis of such a case: the reasonableness of surgical intrusions beneath the skin calls for weighing the individual's interests in privacy and security against society's interest in conducting the procedure. (105 S.Ct. 1616, 84 L.Ed.2d 669.) Significant factors are (1) the extent to which the procedure may threaten the safety or health of the person; (2) the extent of intrusion of his or her interests in personal privacy and bodily integrity; and (3) the community's interest in fairly and accurately determining guilt or innocence. (105 S.Ct. 1617, 1618, 84 L.Ed.2d 669, 670.)

(b) There was probable cause for the search and defendant had adequate procedural protections, but the controlling issues are (1) the extent of the intrusion, and (2) the state's need for the evidence. There were some risks in the procedure, and the state had other substantial evidence that defendant was the person who accosted the victim on the night of the robbery. (105 S.Ct. 1618, 1619, 84 L.Ed.2d 670, 671.) Thus, the search was unreasonable: "The medical risks of the operation, though apparently not extremely severe, are a subject of considerable dispute; the very uncertainty militates against finding the operation to be 'reasonable.' In addition, the intrusion on respondent's privacy interests entailed by the operation can only be characterized as severe. On the other hand, although the bullet may turn out to be useful to the Commonwealth in prosecuting respondent, the Commonwealth has failed to demonstrate a compelling need for it." (105 S.Ct. 1620, 84 L.Ed.2d 672.) (See 41 A.L.R.4th 60.)

9. Tests for Intoxication: In General.

a. Blood Test.

1. Early Decisions.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 422

[§ 422] Early Decisions.

In Breithaupt v. Abram (1957) 352 U.S. 432, 77 S.Ct. 408, 1 L.Ed.2d 448, a car driven by petitioner struck another car, killing three persons and injuring petitioner. While he was unconscious in a hospital, a blood sample was taken, which showed intoxication. This evidence was admitted at his trial for involuntary manslaughter, and he was convicted. Held, there was no violation of due process. The Court stressed the urgent social necessity of curbing the "increasing slaughter on our highways," and declared that the "slight" invasion of personal immunity by a blood test, employed as a matter of course by millions of persons, was justified by its deterrent effect on drunken driving. (77 S.Ct. 412, 1 L.Ed.2d 453.) Rochin v. California (1952) 342 U.S. 165, 72 S.Ct. 205, 96 L.Ed. 183, supra, §413, was distinguished, and the test restated as follows:

"Basically the distinction rests on the fact that there is nothing 'brutal' or 'offensive' in the taking of a sample of blood when done, as in this case, under the protective eye of a physician. To be sure, the driver here was unconscious when the blood was taken, but the absence of conscious consent, without more, does not necessarily render the taking a violation of a constitutional right; and certainly the test as administered here would not be considered offensive by even the most delicate. Furthermore, due process is not measured by the yardstick of personal reaction or the sphygmogram of the most sensitive person, but by that whole community sense of 'decency and fairness' that has been woven by common experience into the fabric of acceptable conduct. It is on this bedrock that this Court has established the concept of due process." (77 S.Ct. 410, 1 L.Ed.2d 451.) But the court added: "This is not to say that the indiscriminate taking of blood under different conditions, or by those not competent to do so may not amount to such 'brutality' as would come under the Rochin rule." (77 S.Ct. 411, 1 L.Ed.2d 452.) (See 71 Harv. L. Rev. 161.)

The same result was reached in California in People v. Haeussler (1953) 41 C.2d 252, 257, 260 P.2d 8 (decided before Breithaupt), and People v. Duroncelay (1957) 48 C.2d 766, 770, 312 P.2d 690 (decided after, and citing, Breithaupt). (See 41 Cal. L. Rev. 728; 18 Stanf. L. Rev. 243; 79 Harv. L. ## CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

9. Tests for Intoxication: In General.

a. Blood Test.

2. Schmerber Test: Medical Procedure Reasonably Performed.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 423

[§ 423] Schmerber Test: Medical Procedure Reasonably Performed.

In Schmerber v. California (1966) 384 U.S. 757, 86 S.Ct. 1826, 16 L.Ed.2d 908, petitioner was involved in an automobile accident. A police officer who arrived shortly afterwards smelled liquor on petitioner's breath, observed the condition of his eyes, and at the hospital within 2 hours later noticed similar symptoms. He was arrested at the hospital. Then, at the officer's direction, a doctor extracted a blood sample, notwithstanding petitioner's refusal, on advice of counsel, to consent. The blood test, showing intoxication, was admitted at his municipal court trial for misdemeanor drunk driving, and he was convicted. Held, affirmed; none of the constitutional challenges was sound.

(a) No violation of due process. This was settled in Breithaupt v. Abram (1957) 352 U.S. 432, 77 S.Ct. 408, 1 L.Ed.2d 448 (supra, §422): the medically acceptable withdrawal of blood does not violate the Rochin rule, whether the accused is unconscious or conscious. (86 S.Ct. 1830, 16 L.Ed.2d 914.)

(b) No violation of privilege against self-incrimination. The foundation of the privilege is in the demand that the Government produce evidence against the defendant by its own independent labors, but the privilege has never been given its fullest scope; its protection has been limited to evidence sought to be obtained from the mouth of the accused. (86 S.Ct. 1831, 16 L.Ed.2d 915.) The Court here added a qualification: "[W]e are not to be understood to agree with past applications in all instances." (86 S.Ct. 1832, 16 L.Ed.2d 916.)

(c) No violation of right to counsel. Because petitioner had no right to assert the Fifth Amendment privilege, he had no greater right by reason of his counsel's erroneous advice that he could assert it. (86 S.Ct. 1833, 16 L.Ed.2d 917.)

(d) No unlawful search and seizure. On this new point, the question was whether the intrusion was unjustified under the circumstances or was made in an improper manner. And the rule authorizing search as an incident to a lawful arrest has little application to search beyond the body's surface; there must be a clear indication that the desired evidence will be found. (86 S.Ct. 1835, 16 L.Ed.2d 919.) The test, however, was met here: (1) The officer could reasonably have believed that there was an emergency threatening destruction of evidence, for alcohol soon disappears from the blood. "Given these special facts," the attempt to secure evidence of blood-alcohol content was an appropriate incident to petitioner's arrest. (2) The test was of a proper type, and the method of performing it was reasonable; there might be a serious question, however, if it were performed by police at the station. (86 S.Ct. 1836, 16 L.Ed.2d 919.)

The court concluded that, on the facts of the present case, the minor intrusion under stringently limited conditions did not violate petitioner's constitutional rights. (86 S.Ct. 1836, 16 L.Ed.2d 920.) (See 14 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 680; 2 Cal. Western L. Rev. 1; 60 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1124; 25 Western State L. Rev. 43; People v. Fite (1968) 267 C.A.2d 685, 687, 73 C.R. 666 [administrative penalties under Veh.C. 13353 do not preclude taking of blood sample from unwilling driver]; People v. Ritchie (1982) 130 C.A.3d 455, 181 C.R. 773 [application of Schmerber to taking blood sample to test for drugs; because percentage of both drugs and alcohol in body begins to diminish shortly after consumption, exigent circumstances exist in each case for taking blood without consent]; Carleton v. Superior Court (1985) 170 C.A.3d 1182, 1187, 216 C.R. 890 [force used held not unreasonable; see dissent]; 72 A.L.R.3d 325 [blood sample from unconscious driver]; 14 A.L.R.4th 690 [admissibility of test results where blood taken despite defendant's objection or refusal to submit to test].) California* (1966) 384 U.S. 757, 86 S.Ct. 1826, 16 L.Ed.2d 908, text, p. 725, was met: circumstances required prompt testing, officer had reasonable cause to believe driver was intoxicated, and test was performed in medically approved manner]; *People v. ### XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

9. Tests for Intoxication: In General.

a. Blood Test.

3. Former Requirement of Lawful Arrest.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 424

[§ 424] Former Requirement of Lawful Arrest.

(1) Statement of Rule: Hawkins Case. In People v. Superior Court (Hawkins) (1972) 6 C.3d 757, 100 C.R. 281, 493 P.2d 1145, the California Supreme Court clarified conflicting Court of Appeal decisions by qualifying the rule of Schmerber v. California (1966) 384 U.S. 757, 86 S.Ct. 1826, 16 L.Ed.2d 908, supra, §423, as follows:

(a) "Schmerber's approval of the compulsory seizure of blood is clearly grounded on the premise that it is incidental to a lawful arrest." (6 C.3d 761.)

(b) In enacting Veh.C. 13353, "the Legislature took pains to condition its use upon a lawful arrest for driving under the influence of intoxicating liquor and upon the reasonable belief of the peace officer that the arrestee was in fact so driving." (6 C.3d 765.)

(2) Exceptions. Two exceptions were carved out of the Hawkins rule:

(a) Arrest impossible. The lack of a formal arrest incidental to the compulsory taking of blood may be excused due to exigent circumstances, i.e., those that pose a substantial threat to life, health, or property. (Carrington v. Superior Court (1973) 31 C.A.3d 635, 638, 107 C.R. 546 [citing illustrations of acts used to preserve life or property]; see 6 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 640.)

(b) Arrest made on other grounds. In People v. Bianco (1975) 55 C.A.3d Supp. 8, 127 C.R. 92, defendant was placed under citizen's arrest for battery and was taken into police custody. After police noticed an alcoholic odor and found that defendant could not pass a field sobriety test, the officers learned from witnesses that defendant had been driving immediately before the alleged battery. Based on that condition, the officers supposedly further arrested him for driving while under the influence of an intoxicant and required him to take a blood-alcohol test under Veh.C. 13353. Held, the results of the test were admissible. The drunk driving arrest was for a misdemeanor not committed in the officer's presence and therefore could not have justified the test. But defendant was already validly in custody for battery, and there was no need for a second arrest. (55 C.A.3d Supp. 10.)

[§ 425] Abrogation of Lawful Arrest Requirement.

In People v. Trotman (1989) 214 C.A.3d 430, 262 C.R. 640, a blood sample was taken without a warrant from an apparently intoxicated, but conscious, driver without a prior formal arrest. Held, an arrest was unnecessary. Although the trial judge correctly ruled that the case fell within the exigent circumstances doctrine of Carrington v. Superior Court (1973) 31 C.A.3d 635, 107 C.R. 546, supra, §424, the Truth-in-Evidence provision of Proposition 8 (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §§8, 9) abrogated the rule of People v. Superior Court (Hawkins) (1972) 6 C.3d 757, 100 C.R. 281, 493 P.2d 1145, supra, §424, and made reliance on exigent circumstances unnecessary. The Hawkins rule is contrary to the principles articulated in Schmerber v. California (1966) 384 U.S. 757, 86 S.Ct. 1826, 16 L.Ed.2d 908, supra, §423, and *Cupp v. (214 C.A.3d 438.) (See People v. Deltoro (1989) 214 C.A.3d 1417, 1422, 263 C.R. 305 [Trotman followed].)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

9. Tests for Intoxication: In General.

b. Other Tests.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 426

[§ 426] Other Tests.

(1) Breath Test. Various devices, e.g., the breathalyzer, intoximeter, drunkometer, and intoxilyzer, measure an individual's alcoholic retention by analyzing his or her breath. (See 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Demonstrative, Experimental, and Scientific Evidence, §865 et seq.) As with a blood test, but to a lesser degree, the arrested person is subjected to some physical or psychological inconvenience.

In People v. Sudduth (1966) 65 C.2d 543, 55 C.R. 393, 421 P.2d 401, defendant, stopped by officers, showed obvious signs of intoxication. After full warnings as to silence, the officer explained various intoxication tests on the scene, e.g., the physical test of walking a straight line. Defendant refused to take any. At the police station, after another explanation, he refused to take a breathalyzer test. At the trial, comment was made on his refusal. Held, conviction affirmed.

(a) A suspect has no constitutional right to refuse a test designed to produce physical evidence. And the physical and psychological disturbance to the individual in the breath test is apt to be significantly less than that involved in extracting a blood sample. "In a day when excessive loss of life and property is caused by inebriated drivers, an imperative need exists for a fair, efficient, and accurate system of detection, enforcement and, hence, prevention." (65 C.2d 546.)

(b) The comment was permissible, under People v. Ellis (1966) 65 C.2d 529, 55 C.R. 385, 421 P.2d 393, supra, §389. "A wrongful refusal to cooperate with law enforcement officers" does not qualify for the protection of the Griffin rule (infra, §433). "A refusal that might operate to suppress evidence of intoxication, which disappears rapidly with the passage of time ... , should not be encouraged as a device to escape prosecution." (65 C.2d 546.) (See 55 Cal. L. Rev. 1140.)

(2) Urine Test. The accused has no constitutional right to refuse to give a urine sample to determine either the alcoholic or drug content of his or her blood. (See People v. Sarkissian (1978) 81 C.A.3d 660, 663, 146 C.R. 508 [construing written consent requirement in Health & Saf.C. 11552 that accused give written consent to being tested applies to tests for addiction, not mere ingestion].)

(3) Field Sobriety Test. A field sobriety test consists of various exercises to test coordination and balance (walking heel to toe on a straight line, standing on one foot, etc.) and is usually administered to the suspect at the scene of the incident, after detention but prior to arrest. (See Whalen v. Municipal Court (1969) 274 C.A.2d 809, 810, 79 C.R. 523;

People v. Bennett (1983) 139 C.A.3d 767, 769, 189 C.R. 77.)

Because such a test is designed to elicit physical rather than testimonial evidence, it does not violate the privilege against self-incrimination. (Whalen v. Municipal Court, supra, 274 C.A.2d 812 [following Schmerber v. California (1966) 384 U.S. 757, 86 S.Ct. 1826, 16 L.Ed.2d 908, supra, §423].) And, because the test bears a reasonable relation to the state's interest in deterring drunk driving, it does not constitute an unreasonable search. (People v. Bennett, supra, 139 C.A.3d 771.) Also, as in the case of a chemical sobriety test, there is no violation of the Sixth Amendment in administering a field sobriety test in the absence of counsel. (Whalen v. Municipal Court, supra, 274 C.A.2d 812.)

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

10. Compulsory Driver's Test (Implied Consent Law).

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 427

[§ 427] Compulsory Driver's Test (Implied Consent Law).

(1) Nature of Statute. The Implied Consent Law (Veh.C. 23612 et seq., formerly Veh.C. 23157 et seq.) provides that a person who drives a motor vehicle is deemed to have given consent to chemical testing of his or her blood, breath, or urine for the purpose of determining blood alcohol or drug content, if lawfully arrested for any offense allegedly committed in violation of Veh.C. 23140, 23152, or 23153. (Veh.C. 23612(a)(1); on statutory requirements generally, see 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Public Peace and Welfare, §226 et seq.; on tests for intoxication, see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Demonstrative, Experimental, and Scientific Evidence, §48 et seq.; on drunk driving offense generally, see 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Public Peace and Welfare, §205 et seq.)

(2) Sanctions for Refusal To Take Test. A person who wilfully refuses to submit to, or fails to complete, a chemical test under Veh.C. 23612 is subject to certain sanctions simply by virtue of that refusal or failure to complete. Those sanctions include a fine, mandatory imprisonment, and the suspension or revocation of the person's driver's license. (Veh.C. 13353(a); see 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Public Peace and Welfare, §232 et seq.)

(3) Validity of Statute. In South Dakota v. Neville (1983) 459 U.S. 553, 103 S.Ct. 916, 74 L.Ed.2d 748, the court addressed a question left open in Schmerber v. California (1966) 384 U.S. 757, 86 S.Ct. 1826, 16 L.Ed.2d 908, supra, §423: whether the admission of evidence of a refusal to take a chemical sobriety test violates the privilege against self-incrimination. Held, because no compulsion is involved, there is no violation of the privilege. Under Schmerber, the state can legitimately compel the suspect to take the test. "Given, then, that the offer of taking a blood-alcohol test is clearly legitimate, the action becomes no less legitimate when the State offers a second option of refusing the test, with the attendant penalties for making that choice. Nor is this a case where the State has subtly coerced respondent into choosing the option it had no right to compel, rather than offering a true choice. To the contrary, the State wants respondent to choose to take the test, for the inference of intoxication arising from a positive blood-alcohol test is far stronger than that arising from a refusal to take the test." (103 S.Ct. 923, 74 L.Ed.2d 759.) (See 1984 A.S. 351; 1985 A.S. 248; 26 A.L.R.4th 1112; 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Public Peace and Welfare, §227.)

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

11. Waiver of Privilege by Testifying.

a. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 428

[§ 428] In General.

(1) Statement of General Rule. The defendant may waive the privilege by voluntarily taking the stand and testifying on his or her own behalf. If the defendant does, he or she may be cross-examined as to any matters about which he or she was examined in chief, and may be impeached by any of the methods, including proof of prior conviction of a felony. (See People v. Gallagher (1893) 100 C. 466, 475, 35 P. 80; People v. Soeder (1906) 150 C. 12, 20, 87 P. 1016; People v. Porter (1932) 123 C.A. 618, 621, 11 P.2d 894; People v. Withers (1946) 73 C.A.2d 58, 60, 165 P.2d 945; People v. De Georgio (1960) 185 C.A.2d 413, 421, 8 C.R. 295; People v. Ing (1967) 65 C.2d 603, 610, 55 C.R. 902, 422 P.2d 590, infra, §438; People v. Kadison (1966) 243 C.A.2d 162, 167, 52 C.R. 114; People v. Doebke (1969) 1 C.A.3d 931, 936, 81 C.R. 391 ["[W]hile a defendant who voluntarily takes the stand to testify is still protected by the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination, he must nevertheless answer all inquiries asked by the cross-examiner to refute or explain any reasonable or logical inference which may have arisen from his direct testimony"]; People v. Thomas (1974) 43 C.A.3d 862, 867, 118 C.R. 226 [restating general rule]; People v. Thornton (1974) 11 C.3d 738, 760, 114 C.R. 467, 523 P.2d 267; People v. James (1976) 56 C.A.3d 876, 888, 128 C.R. 733 [by taking stand, defendant waives privilege "but only to the extent that he may be cross-examined regarding any matter (1) to which he has testified expressly on direct examination, (2) to which he has testified impliedly on direct examination, and (3) that is relevant to impeach the defendant's credibility as a witness"]; People v. Fernandez (1990) 219 C.A.3d 1379, 1388, 269 C.R. 116 [despite objection of his counsel, defendant was entitled to waive the privilege to testify for his codefendant]; 1 McCormick 5th, §126; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2276, p. 459; 14 Stanf. L. Rev. 811; 81 Am.Jur.2d (1992 ed.), Witnesses §152 et seq.) (For a criticism of the waiver theory, see 13 Pacific L. J. 407; on limitation of cross-examination to scope of direct, see 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §233; on disclosure of part of conversation or transaction as waiver for the whole, see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §36; on impeachment, see 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §258 et seq.)

In the Kadison case, supra, defendant, charged with possession of marijuana, testified on direct examination that he was wholly unfamiliar with the nature of the cigarette handed to him by his codefendant. On cross-examination, he was asked whether he had smoked marijuana, and, after objection was overruled, said, "I stand on the Fifth Amendment." Held, his entire testimony was properly stricken.

The waiver rule was unsuccessfully challenged in People v. De Georgio, supra, a robbery and kidnaping case. Witnesses testified that defendant had been armed, and when defendant was on the stand he was asked about a prior felony conviction. His counsel contended that an affirmative answer would necessarily admit a violation of P.C. 12021

(possession of firearm by previously convicted felon). Held, the statutory rule permitting such impeachment applies despite the fact that it shows commission of another crime. "The defendant becomes just another witness when he takes the stand." (185 C.A.2d 421.) (On rule of exclusion of a prior conviction as unduly prejudicial, see 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §303 et seq.)

(2) Waiver as to Statements Previously Made in Juvenile Court Proceeding. The privilege against self-incrimination requires that a minor be provided with use immunity for making statements to a probation officer or for testifying at a juvenile court fitness hearing, but "waives the privilege against self-incrimination by testifying at trial inconsistently with statements made in the context of a juvenile court proceeding to the extent those statements are proper impeachment evidence." (People v. Humiston (1993) 20 C.A.4th 460, 476, 24 C.R.2d 515.)

(3) Waiver of Objection to Psychiatric Testimony on Competence. In People v. Stanfill (1986) 184 C.A.3d 577, 229 C.R. 215, defendant, who had been found competent to stand trial, testified that he had no recollection of the events that led to his arrest. In rebuttal, one of the psychiatrists who had examined defendant for the competency hearing was permitted to testify that in his opinion defendant had been aware of what he was doing. Held, the psychiatrist's testimony was properly admitted. Statements made by a defendant at a competency hearing are excluded to protect the defendant's privilege against self-incrimination. (See supra, §382.) However, by testifying, defendant waived the privilege with respect to his discussions with the psychiatrist regarding the incident. (184 C.A.3d 580.) (For criticism of Stanfill, see People v. Harris (1987) 192 C.A.3d 943, 949, 237 C.R. 747.)

(1) Statement of General Rule. Cf. People v. Kiney (2007) 151 C.A.4th 807, 814, 60 C.R.3d 168 [defendant's statements made during closing argument in course of representing himself could be used against him in retrial; permitting use of statements did not force defendant to choose between conflicting constitutional rights, as he could exercise self-representation right without incriminating himself; distinguishing Simmons v. United States (1968) 390 U.S. 377, 88 S.Ct. 967, 19 L.Ed.2d 1247, text, §431]; and see 81 Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Witnesses §149 et seq.; 1 McCormick 6th, §129.(3) Waiver of Objection to Psychiatric Testimony on Competence. In People v. Pokovich (2006) 39 C.4th 1240, 48 C.R.3d 158, 141 P.3d 267, the court disapproved People v. Stanfill (1986) 184 C.A.3d 577, 229 C.R. 215, text, p. 731, holding that the privilege against self-incrimination prohibits the prosecution from using impeachment statements a defendant has made during a court-ordered mental competency examination. "Having considered and weighed the competing interests, we conclude that the impairment of the mental competency evaluation process if impeachment is permitted outweighs the speculative risk to the truth-seeking function of the criminal trial if impeachment is denied." (39 C.4th 1253.)

(4) (New) Coerced Waiver. In People v. Cuccia (2002) 97 C.A.4th 785, 118 C.R.2d 668, a prosecution for securities violations and attempted grand theft, defendant's sixth witness was called but could not be located. Defendant had not yet decided whether he would testify and had planned to make that decision after all of his witnesses had testified. However, the trial judge gave defendant a choice: he could testify out of order or rest his case. He chose to testify and was convicted. Held, reversed. By testifying, defendant waived his self-incrimination privilege, but, because of the judge's threat, the waiver was coerced. (97 C.A.4th 791.) This error would not, by itself, have been cause for reversal, but the trial judge committed further error in denying defendant's request to testify on surrebuttal, and the cumulative effect of these errors was to deny defendant a fair trial. ## CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

11. Waiver of Privilege by Testifying.

b. Exceptions.

1. Uninformed Waiver.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 429

[§ 429] Uninformed Waiver.

No waiver results from testifying in excusable ignorance of the privilege. This qualification of the waiver rule is applied in cases where the defendant undertakes his or her defense in pro. per., and the trial judge fails to advise the defendant of his or her constitutional right not to testify. (See Killpatrick v. Superior Court (1957) 153 C.A.2d 146, 149, 314 P.2d 164, supra, §365; People v. Kramer (1964) 227 C.A.2d 199, 201, 38 C.R. 487; People v. Solomos (1978) 83 C.A.3d 945, 953, 148 C.R. 248; People v. Cervantes (1978) 87 C.A.3d 281, 288, 150 C.R. 819; 79 A.L.R.2d 643 [court's duty to inform unrepresented accused of right not to testify]; but see People v. Glaser (1965) 238 C.A.2d 819, 830, 48 C.R. 427 [failure of judge to advise defendant held not ground for collateral attack where defendant had knowledge of criminal procedure and no prejudice was shown].)

In People v. Barker (1965) 232 C.A.2d 178, 42 C.R. 651, infra, §498, a case dealing with the witness privilege, the court added a dictum on the defendant's privilege: "Where the defendant in a criminal case is about to take the witness stand, it is the duty of the court to make certain that the defendant is fully advised of his privilege." (232 C.A.2d 182.)

The court in People v. Thomas (1974) 43 C.A.3d 862, 118 C.R. 226, disagreed. Defendant had the benefit of counsel before voluntarily testifying on his own behalf, and the trial judge asked only whether defendant had discussed with counsel the consequences of taking the stand. This was considered to have not only met, but exceeded, the trial court's obligation. (43 C.A.3d 868.) "We conclude that the Barker statement was not intended to be as far reaching as it may appear on its face." (43 C.A.3d 868, footnote 4.)

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

11. Waiver of Privilege by Testifying.

b. Exceptions.

2. Testimony in Prior Proceeding.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 430

[§ 430] Testimony in Prior Proceeding.

A waiver is effective only in the proceeding in which the person testifies. Hence, the defendant does not waive the privilege at the trial by voluntarily testifying at the preliminary examination or before the grand jury. (See People v. Lopez (1980) 110 C.A.3d 1010, 1020, 168 C.R. 378, infra, §500, citing the text; 1 McCormick 5th, §126; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2276, p. 470; 8 So. Cal. L. Rev. 51; 5 Hastings L. J. 263; 1953 A.S. 761; 36 A.L.R.2d 1403 [right to claim privilege at criminal trial after testifying to same matter before grand jury].)

The prior testimony, however, may be received as an admission. (People v. Thourwald (1920) 46 C.A. 261, 267, 189 P. 124.)

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

11. Waiver of Privilege by Testifying.

b. Exceptions.

3. Testimony on Motion To Suppress.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 431

[§ 431] Testimony on Motion To Suppress.

In Simmons v. United States (1968) 390 U.S. 377, 88 S.Ct. 967, 19 L.Ed.2d 1247, two men robbed a federally insured savings and loan association. On possible consent of Mrs. M to a search of her house, F.B.I. agents found a suitcase belonging to G, containing a gun holster and some coin cards and bill wrappers from the robbery. G made a pretrial motion to suppress, and to establish standing he claimed ownership of the suitcase. The motion was denied. At the trial, G denied ownership of the incriminating suitcase and contents. In rebuttal his testimony at the suppression hearing was admitted against him. Held, reversible error.

(a) Under Jones v. United States (1960) 362 U.S. 257, 80 S.Ct. 725, 4 L.Ed.2d 697, 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, §34, a defendant may have to testify to establish standing to suppress. The defendant's testimony is thus an integral part of the Fourth Amendment claim. The dilemma faced by defendants is most extreme in possessory crimes (e.g., possession of narcotics), and Jones eliminated "that Hobson's choice." The present case raises the new question whether defendants charged with nonpossessory crimes (e.g., robbery) are also entitled to be relieved from this dilemma. (88 S.Ct. 975, 19 L.Ed.2d 1257.)

(b) The answer is the same: G was obliged either to give up his Fourth Amendment claim or waive his Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination; and it is intolerable that one constitutional right must be surrendered to assert another. "We therefore hold that when a defendant testifies in support of a motion to suppress evidence on Fourth Amendment grounds, his testimony may not thereafter be admitted against him at trial on the issue of guilt unless he makes no objection." (88 S.Ct. 976, 19 L.Ed.2d 1259.) (See People v. Drews (1989) 208 C.A.3d 1317, 1325, 256 C.R. 846 [Simmons held applicable to testimony on suppression motion during preliminary hearing]; but see People v. Clark (1993) 5 C.4th 950, 1007, 22 C.R.2d 689, 857 P.2d 1099 [Simmons not applicable where defendant called defense psychiatrist to testify at suppression hearing but could have called other mental experts instead]; 82 Harv. ## CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

12. No Comment or Inference.

a. Former Law Permitting Comment.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 432

[§ 432] Former Law Permitting Comment.

(1) Law Prior to 1934. Originally, California, like most states, did not allow comment on the exercise of the privilege by the defendant. (See 1 McCormick 5th, §126; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2272; 4 Hastings L. J. 63.)

(2) Constitutional Amendment of 1934. In 1934, former Cal. Const., Art. I, §13 was amended to state that "in any criminal case, whether the defendant testifies or not, his failure to explain or to deny by his testimony any evidence or facts in the case against him may be commented upon by the court and by counsel, and may be considered by the court or the jury."

The policy of this provision was endorsed, and its constitutionality was upheld against repeated attacks, in a number of decisions. (See People v. Albertson (1944) 23 C.2d 550, 584, 145 P.2d 7 [concurring opinion]; People v. Adamson (1946) 27 C.2d 478, 490, 165 P.2d 3; Adamson v. California (1947) 332 U.S. 46, 67 S.Ct. 1672, 91 L.Ed. 1903; People v. Richardson (1946) 74 C.A.2d 528, 533, 169 P.2d 44; People v. Greenberg (1946) 73 C.A.2d 675, 677, 167 P.2d 214; People v. Neely (1958) 163 C.A.2d 289, 314, 329 P.2d 357; People v. Modesto (1965) 62 C.2d 436, 447, 42 C.R. 417, 398 P.2d 753; People v. Curtis (1965) 232 C.A.2d 859, 864, 43 C.R. 286; 34 Cal. L. Rev. 764; 9 So. Cal. L. Rev. 410; 1959 A.S. 641.)

But the United States Supreme Court took a different view (see infra, §433), and the provision was repealed in 1974.

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

12. No Comment or Inference.

b. Griffin Rule: Comment Prohibited.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 433

[§ 433] Griffin Rule: Comment Prohibited.

In Griffin v. California (1965) 380 U.S. 609, 85 S.Ct. 1229, 14 L.Ed.2d 106, petitioner was convicted of murder, and a death sentence was imposed, in a trial in which he did not testify. (People v. Griffin (1963) 60 C.2d 182, 32 C.R. 24, 383 P.2d 432.) The jury was instructed in accordance with the constitutional provision (supra, §432) that it could take into consideration his failure to explain the evidence against him, and the prosecutor emphasized this failure in argument. Held, conviction reversed: under Malloy v. Hogan (1964) 378 U.S. 1, 84 S.Ct. 1489, 12 L.Ed.2d 653, supra, §356, federal standards govern; and the Fifth Amendment, binding on the states by reason of the Fourteenth Amendment (supra, §356), "forbids either comment by the prosecution on the accused's silence or instructions by the court that such silence is evidence of guilt." (85 S.Ct. 1233, 14 L.Ed.2d 110.) The brief opinion described such comment as a remnant of the inquisitorial system of criminal justice: "It is a penalty imposed by courts for exercising a constitutional privilege. It cuts down on the privilege by making its assertion costly." (85 S.Ct. 1233, 14 L.Ed.2d 109.)

The dissenters observed that the Model Code, Uniform Rules of Evidence and weight of scholarly opinion supported the California rule. (85 S.Ct. 1237, 14 L.Ed.2d 114.) (See 79 Harv. L. Rev. 92, 159; 53 Cal. L. Rev. 940; 61 Cal. L. Rev. 1422 [inference from failure to produce witness]; 18 Hastings L. J. 198; 39 So. Cal. L. Rev. 120; 9 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 603 [application of Griffin rule].)

If the Griffin rule had been applied retroactively to permit collateral attack on convictions long final, it would have had a catastrophic effect, for the California comment and inference practice was common. But both the California Supreme Court and the United States Supreme Court, following the analysis in Linkletter v. Walker (1965) 381 U.S. 618, 85 S.Ct. 1731, 14 L.Ed.2d 601 (on illegally obtained evidence; see 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, §32), held Griffin violations nonretroactive. (See In re Gaines (1965) 63 C.2d 234, 237, 45 C.R. 865, 404 P.2d 473 [pointing out that the error does not so pervade entire trial as to deny due process]; Tehan v. United States (1966) 382 U.S. 406, 86 S.Ct. 459, 467, 15 L.Ed.2d 453, 461 ["To require all of those States now to void the conviction of every person who did not testify at his trial would have an impact upon the administration of their criminal law so devastating as to need no elaboration"].)

The rule applies to the sanity phase of a trial as well as to the guilt phase. (People v. Flores (1976) 55 C.A.3d 118, 122, 127 C.R. 230.) The rule also applies in sentencing proceedings, after a defendant has pleaded guilty, for purposes of determining the severity of the defendant's punishment. (Mitchell v. United States (1999) 526 U.S. 314, 119 S.Ct. 1307, 1314, 143 L.Ed.2d 424, 437.) But it is inapplicable to proceedings before a prison disciplinary board, which involve the correctional process and are not criminal prosecutions. (See Baxter v. Palmigiano (1976) 425 U.S. 308, 96

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

12. No Comment or Inference.

c. Application of Griffin Rule.

1. Prosecutor's Comments.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 434

[§ 434] Prosecutor's Comments.

A number of cases have found a violation of the Griffin rule in prosecutors' comments that indirectly or inferentially call attention to the failure of the defendant to testify. (See People v. Crawford (1967) 253 C.A.2d 524, 534, 61 C.R. 472 [prosecutor, commenting on alibi defense, stressed point that at time defendant was taken into custody he had opportunity to give it and didn't; but error held not prejudicial]; People v. Giovannianni (1968) 260 C.A.2d 597, 605, 67 C.R. 303 ["of the several voices that we could hear in this case, one voice has been forever stilled"; and "there would be two people ... who could answer that, and one of them, of course, is dead"]; People v. Mendoza (1974) 37 C.A.3d 717, 726, 112 C.R. 565 [prosecutor made thinly veiled comment on defendant's failure to take stand in sex perversion case]; People v. Jaspal (1991) 234 C.A.3d 1446, 1453, 1455, 286 C.R. 337.)

In People v. Northern (1967) 256 C.A.2d 28, 30, 64 C.R. 15, the comment was: "Looking at this evidence which, incidentally, has not been refuted by the Defendant, there is no controverting evidence." The court held the comment direct and thus found it unnecessary to decide a point asserted by the defense: where the defendant is the only witness who could possibly contradict the prosecution's evidence, the mere statement that the prosecution's case is uncontradicted is an improper comment. (See People v. Vargas (1973) 9 C.3d 470, 474, 108 C.R. 15, 509 P.2d 959 [no "denial" from defense, according to prosecutor's argument; this was improper]; People v. Medina (1974) 41 C.A.3d 438, 457, 116 C.R. 133 [prosecutor argued that his case was "unrefuted"; this was improper]; 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §575; 14 A.L.R.3d 723 [comment or argument by court or counsel that prosecution evidence is uncontradicted as amounting to improper reference to accused's failure to testify].)

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

12. No Comment or Inference.

c. Application of Griffin Rule.

2. Jury Instructions.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 435

[§ 435] Jury Instructions.

Jury instructions may also amount to a violation of the Griffin rule, especially when combined with improper prosecution comments. (See People v. Summerfield (1968) 262 C.A.2d 626, 631, 69 C.R. 10 [former CALJIC instruction, since deleted, on defendant's failure to show that possession of stolen property was honestly acquired]; People v. Mendoza (1974) 37 C.A.3d 717, 726, 112 C.R. 565 [judge's instruction inadvertently compounded prosecutor's improper comment by implying that defendant's failure to testify could be considered as evidence to prove essential element of offense]; People v. Tealer (1975) 48 C.A.3d 598, 606, 122 C.R. 144, infra, §436 [trial judge improperly gave CALJIC (6th ed.), No. 2.62 (infra, §440) after defendant gave testimony limited only to his denial of having admitted crime to police; net effect of instruction and improper prosecution comment was that jury could infer guilt from silence].)

In People v. Diaz (1989) 208 C.A.3d 338, 255 C.R. 91, defendant was convicted of burglary. At trial, defendant did not testify, and the primary evidence was a videotape of him selling a stolen stereo to an undercover police officer. After defense counsel argued that defendant's taped statements indicated that he was a fence or a middleman rather than the thief, the prosecutor made comments that included the following: "Now, if we are to believe this gentleman is only a fence, we need to say where is it? Who testified that he was a fence? Who came in and said he was a fence? Who testified or what evidence do we have that says I'm a middleman? That I didn't steal this property and that someone else did." (208 C.A.3d 342.) After first giving CALJIC (6th ed.), No. 2.60 (infra, §439), the trial judge gave CALJIC (6th ed.), No. 2.61, but reversed its meaning by stating: "In deciding whether or not to testify, the Defendant may choose to rely on the state of the evidence and upon the failure, if any, of the People to prove beyond a reasonable doubt every essential element of the charge against him. The lack of testimony on the Defendant's part will supply a failure of proof by the People so as to support a finding against him on any such essential element." Correctly read, the second sentence of the instruction would have begun, "No lack of testimony." (208 C.A.3d 342.)

In reversing the conviction, the court pointed out that the prosecutor's comments were not tempered by an admonishment, and, while these comments may not have directly suggested that the jury should draw adverse inferences from defendant's failure to testify, the misstated instruction did so. The evidence against defendant was not overwhelming, and his taped statements did not preclude his being a fence or middleman; hence, the Griffin errors were not harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. (208 C.A.3d 343.)

One justice dissented, and, on denial of a petition for rehearing, argued that United States v. Robinson (1988) 485

U.S. 25, 108 S.Ct. 864, 99 L.Ed.2d 23 (infra, §441) required a finding that there was no Griffin error. (208 C.A.3d 351.)

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

12. No Comment or Inference.

c. Application of Griffin Rule.

3. Violation Following Defendant's Limited Testimony.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 436

[§ 436] Violation Following Defendant's Limited Testimony.

Griffin error may result from prosecution comments or trial court instructions that a defendant who took the stand for limited testimony failed to deny the facts of the case when the defendant had the opportunity to do so. Thus, in People v. Tealer (1975) 48 C.A.3d 598, 122 C.R. 144, defendant testified only to a denial that he had made an incriminating statement to a police officer. Cross-examination was limited to a single question on whether defendant had said anything to the officer. But in argument, the prosecutor commented that defendant had not explained away certain facts and had not denied the facts when he took the stand. The trial judge underscored the prosecutor's position by giving the CALJIC (6th ed.), No. 2.62 instruction (infra, §440) without stating what matters were within the scope of proper cross-examination which defendant had not explained or denied. Held, the argument and instructions constituted prejudicial error. A testifying defendant gives up self-incrimination rights only as to matters within the scope of relevant cross-examination. (48 C.A.3d 604; see 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §233.) Here, defendant's limited testimony was no more of an implied denial of the commission of the crime charged than was his previous not guilty plea. Accordingly, because he did not place in issue the truth of the alleged admission, the privilege against self-incrimination continued to prevent the prosecution from questioning him upon the case generally and in effect making him its own witness. (48 C.A.3d 606.)

4. Comment by Codefendant's Counsel.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 437

[§ 437] Comment by Codefendant's Counsel.

In People v. Haldeen (1968) 267 C.A.2d 478, 73 C.R. 102, H and D were jointly tried for possession of marijuana found in a car owned and driven by H in which D was a passenger. Defendants moved for separate trials on the ground that one might not testify and the other might comment on it. The motions were denied. D testified, denying possession. H did not testify. Counsel for D, in final argument, commented on H's failure and insinuated that this supported the conclusion that H rather than D was in possession. H's counsel moved for a mistrial; the judge instead admonished the jurors not to draw an inference. H was convicted and D was acquitted. The judge granted H's motion for new trial and the prosecution appealed. Held, affirmed; it is the fact of comment rather than its source which violates the privilege. (267 C.A.2d 481.) Answering the prosecution's contention that counsel for defendants deliberately adopted this technique to obtain separate trials, the court declared that the judge can warn counsel in advance of trial and deal with infractions as misconduct. (267 C.A.2d 483.) (See 1 A.L.R.3d 989 [comment on accused's failure to testify by counsel for codefendant]; 1963 A.S. 308; 1964 A.S. 379.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

12. No Comment or Inference.

c. Application of Griffin Rule.

5. Where Privilege Waived.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 438

[§ 438] Where Privilege Waived.

(1) In General. If the defendant waives the privilege by taking the stand, (a) the defendant may be cross-examined within the scope of his or her direct examination (see 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §§233, 236), and (b) the prosecution may comment, and the judge may instruct, on failure to deny or explain matters which could have been proved on cross-examination. (People v. Ing (1967) 65 C.2d 603, 55 C.R. 902, 422 P.2d 590.)

In the Ing case, defendant doctor was charged with rape of the prosecutrix by administering an intoxicating drug. He testified on his own behalf, but only as to the particular rape charged. The prosecution then introduced evidence of other similar rapes to show a common scheme or plan. In argument, the prosecution commented on his failure to deny or explain the other offenses, and the judge instructed the jurors on the permissible inferences therefrom. Held, under both federal and California authorities, this was not a violation of the constitutional privilege. "Since in the present case defendant on direct examination made a general denial of the offenses charged, cross-examination concerning the other offenses would have been proper." (65 C.2d 611.)

The Ing rule was applied to unusual facts in People v. Perez (1967) 65 C.2d 615, 55 C.R. 909, 422 P.2d 597. Defendant, charged with four counts of robbery, testified on Counts 1 and 2 but not on 3 and 4. The prosecution commented, and the trial judge instructed, on the adverse inference. Held, there was no violation of the Griffin rule. Defendant, by testifying, waived the privilege to the extent of permissible cross-examination; and cross-examination as to the robberies in Counts 3 and 4 would have been proper because they disclosed a common plan and would have been relevant to the charges in Counts 1 and 2. The distinguishable fact that these were not collateral offenses but were joined with the other charges was not significant; a contrary rule would mean that a defendant could withdraw from cross-examination before the reliability of his or her testimony had been explored. (65 C.2d 621.) (See People v. Thornton (1974) 11 C.3d 738, 760, 114 C.R. 467, 523 P.2d 267 [comment and adverse inference were proper following unsuccessful claim of privilege on cross-examination]; People v. Saddler (1979) 24 C.3d 671, 678, 679, 156 C.R. 871, 597 P.2d 130 [approving CALJIC (6th ed.), No. 2.62, infra, §440].)

(2) Waiver by Tender of Mental Condition. Where a defendant tenders his or her mental condition as an issue in the penalty phase of a murder trial, the defendant waives his or her constitutional rights to the extent necessary to permit proper psychiatric examination of that condition. Therefore, if the defendant refuses to answer questions during the examination, testimony by the examining psychiatrist as to that refusal is not improper. (People v. Carpenter (1997) 15 C.4th 312, 412, 63 C.R.2d 1, 935 P.2d 708.)

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

12. No Comment or Inference.

d. Instructions on Griffin Rule.

1. Defendant Not Testifying.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 439

[§ 439] Defendant Not Testifying.

CALJIC (6th ed.), No. 2.60 covers the situation where the defendant does not testify; the defendant is entitled to an instruction that no inference may be drawn from that fact. (See Carter v. Kentucky (1981) 450 U.S. 288, 101 S.Ct. 1112, 1119, 67 L.Ed.2d 241, 251; James v. Kentucky (1984) 466 U.S. 341, 104 S.Ct. 1830, 1835, 80 L.Ed.2d 346, 351 [request for "admonition" equivalent to request for instruction]; People v. Evans (1998) 62 C.A.4th 186, 196, 72 C.R.2d 543 [violation of Carter by failing to instruct, at defendant's request, that no inference may be drawn from exercise of right not to testify, is subject to harmless error analysis].) A problem arises, however, where the defendant does not request it.

(1) The judge is not required to give the instruction on his or her own motion. (See People v. Gardner (1969) 71 C.2d 843, 854, 79 C.R. 743, 457 P.2d 575; People v. Du Bose (1970) 10 C.A.3d 544, 547, 89 C.R. 134.)

(2) If the judge proposes to give the instruction on his or her own motion or on request of the prosecution, and the defendant objects, it is error to give it. (See People v. Molano (1967) 253 C.A.2d 841, 847, 61 C.R. 821; 18 A.L.R.3d 1335, 1338 [cases holding that instruction was improper].) (But see Lakeside v. Oregon (1978) 435 U.S. 333, 98 S.Ct. 1091, 1095, 55 L.Ed.2d 319, 326 [giving of instruction over objection is not violation of constitutional privilege against self-incrimination].)

(3) If the judge gives the instruction on his or her own motion and the defendant fails to object, may the defendant nevertheless urge error on appeal? The decisions do not furnish a clear rule. (See People v. Horrigan (1967) 253 C.A.2d 519, 522, 61 C.R. 403 [dictum that it would be error]; People v. Mason (1968) 259 C.A.2d 30, 40, 66 C.R. 601 [dictum that it is error when defendant "impliedly" objects]; People v. Cooper (1970) 10 C.A.3d 96, 104, 88 C.R. 919 [review of decisions; if error, harmless]; 18 A.L.R.3d 1335, 1339 [same].)

In People v. Mendoza (1987) 192 C.A.3d 667, 238 C.R. 1, the court, after reviewing prior cases including People v. Young (1978) 85 C.A.3d 594, 149 C.R. 524, and Lakeside v. Oregon, supra, found no error:

"In our opinion, Young and Lakeside are the better reasoned decisions on this question. While it must be acknowledged that the instructions here in issue may have the effect of highlighting the very fact they are intended to minimize--a theoretical problem with many salutary judicial admonitions required to be given--we simply are unpersuaded by appellant's argument. ... We find it difficult to believe that these instructions will so emphasize the defendant's silence that they will cause the jury to draw the precise inference they have been instructed to avoid." (192

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

12. No Comment or Inference.

d. Instructions on Griffin Rule.

2. Defendant Testifying.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 440

[§ 440] Defendant Testifying.

CALJIC (6th ed.), No. 2.62 covers the situation where the defendant testifies; the jury may be instructed on the permissible inference unfavorable to the defendant for failure to explain or deny incriminating evidence that the defendant could reasonably be expected to deny or explain. (See People v. Saddler (1979) 24 C.3d 671, 678, 156 C.R. 871, 597 P.2d 130.)

In People v. Haynes (1983) 148 C.A.3d 1117, 196 C.R. 450, defendant, charged with rape and other offenses on a 17-year-old schoolgirl, testified that she had consented to the acts, and in other respects, gave a version of the event in contradiction to hers. The trial judge, without objection, gave CALJIC (6th ed.), No. 2.62. On appeal, defendant contended that the giving of the instruction was prejudicial error because there was no prosecution evidence that he had failed to explain or deny. Held, conviction affirmed.

(a) In view of criticism of this instruction from commentators, it is unwise to give it without prior inquiry of the parties; and it should not be requested by either side unless there is a specific and significant defense omission that the prosecution wishes to stress or the defense wishes to mitigate. (148 C.A.3d 1119, 1120.)

(b) The prosecution's practice of routinely tendering the instruction permits the defense, by silently acquiescing, to generate a claim of error on appeal; and it forces the appellate court to search the record for instances of failure to deny. (148 C.A.3d 1120.) However, in the present case, the victim's report to the police and her testimony were unequivocal and not inherently improbable, and any theoretical error was harmless. (148 C.A.3d 1122.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

12. No Comment or Inference.

e. Comments Not Violative of Rule.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 441

[§ 441] Comments Not Violative of Rule.

Several far-fetched attempts to extend the Griffin rule have been rejected.

(1) The Griffin rule does not prohibit the prosecution from commenting on the state of the evidence or the defense's failure to introduce material evidence or call logical witnesses. (See People v. Bradford (1997) 15 C.4th 1229, 1339, 65 C.R.2d 145, 939 P.2d 259 [no error in murder prosecution; neither prosecutor's general comments as to lack of defense evidence or testimony, nor more particularized comments regarding stained mat found in defendant's vehicle, coroner's opinion, or absence of alibi for particular time period would have required defendant to take stand]; People v. Grant (1968) 268 C.A.2d 470, 475, 74 C.R. 111; People v. Burns (1969) 270 C.A.2d 238, 247, 75 C.R. 688; People v. Hardy (1969) 271 C.A.2d 322, 330, 76 C.R. 557 [reference to failure to produce alibi witness in rebuttal]; People v. Chandler (1971) 17 C.A.3d 798, 805, 95 C.R. 146 [rhetorical questions and comments suggesting that if defendant had not been at robbery scene he could have produced alibi evidence]; People v. Font (1995) 35 C.A.4th 50, 57, 41 C.R.2d 281 [where defendant's out-of-court statement was admitted as state of mind evidence for codefendants, prosecutor's comment, "We have no evidence with regards to any state of mind of any other defendant," was not improper].)

(2) There is no blanket rule that every direct reference by a prosecutor to the defendant's failure to testify violates Griffin. In United States v. Robinson (1988) 485 U.S. 25, 108 S.Ct. 864, 99 L.Ed.2d 23, defendant, on trial for mail fraud involving arson-related insurance claims, did not testify. In his closing argument, defense counsel charged that the Government had breached its duty to be "fair" by denying defendant the opportunity to explain his actions. The trial judge allowed the prosecutor to say, in his rebuttal summation, that defendant "could have taken the stand and explained it to you, anything he wanted to." The Court of Appeals concluded that this statement violated the Griffin rule. Held, reversed:

"The Court of Appeals and respondent apparently take the view that any 'direct' reference by the prosecutor to the failure of the defendant to testify violates the Fifth Amendment as construed in Griffin. We decline to give Griffin such a broad reading, because we think such a reading would be quite inconsistent with the Fifth Amendment, which protects against compulsory self-incrimination. The Griffin court addressed prosecutorial comment which baldly stated to the jury that the defendant must have known what the disputed facts were, but that he had refused to take the stand to deny or explain them. We think there is a considerable difference for the purposes of the privilege against compulsory self-incrimination between the sort of comments involved in Griffin and the comments involved in this case." (108 S.Ct. 868, 99 L.Ed.2d 31.)

(3) Disparagement of the defense case is proper. In People v. Bethea (1971) 18 C.A.3d 930, 96 C.R. 229, defendant was charged with armed robbery in Los Angeles on February 22nd. His wife testified that they had left California for Chicago on February 14th and that defendant could not have been in this state at the critical time. The prosecution, however, proved that defendant, on February 20th, had appeared in Los Angeles Municipal Court to answer a traffic charge. Defendant did not take the stand. In opening argument, the prosecutor commented, "So, ladies and gentlemen, basically what this case boils down to is that we have the prosecution's positive evidence that the defendant is guilty of robbery in the first degree, and we have the defense which has just been shot out of the water, zero. So you have the prosecution's case against nothing for the defense." Held, no error. "The remarks made by the prosecution go to the state of the evidence, which is entirely proper. ... There is absolutely no reference to the fact that defendant did not take the stand; nor is the remark susceptible of such interpretation by inference or innuendo." (18 C.A.3d 936.) (See also People v. Meneley (1972) 29 C.A.3d 41, 60, 105 C.R. 432 [prosecutor commented that evidence failed to establish that defendant did not commit crimes charged]; People v. Gaulden (1974) 36 C.A.3d 942, 954, 111 C.R. 803 [prosecutor properly argued that "There is no defense. There has not been one shred of evidence introduced in this trial indicating that Mr. Gaulden didn't commit the crime. Not one"]; People v. Roberts (1975) 51 C.A.3d 125, 135, 123 C.R. 893 ["Are there any conflicting witnesses as to what happened? ... I submit that the evidence is consistent in this case and there is no confliction"].)

(4) Reading the Miranda warnings in court is proper as part of the proof that they were given to the defendant before the defendant's statements were taken, i.e., the admonition that anything said may be used against the defendant is not by itself a comment on his or her failure to take the stand. (People v. Johnson (1969) 271 C.A.2d 616, 624, 76 C.R. 768 [although this preliminary fact proof could have been made out of jury's presence, defendant made no objection on this ground].)

(5) Admonishing the defendant not to interrupt, because the defendant waived the right to testify, is not a prohibited comment. In People v. Gomez (1967) 252 C.A.2d 844, 60 C.R. 881, defense counsel objected to the prosecutor's argument, and during the discussion with the judge defendant interrupted, saying, "He is telling lies." The judge then said, "I want to admonish the defendant that his opportunity to talk in this case has expired. He could have taken the stand and testified. He elected not to do so. Therefore, he must remain silent. He can tell his attorney what he wants to tell him." The judge later instructed on defendant's right to remain silent and cautioned against drawing any inference of guilt. Held: (a) These remarks to defendant did not violate the Griffin rule against comment to the jury. (b) The statement that defendant "could have taken the stand" might well have been omitted; but, considered in context, it was not a violation of the Griffin rule, or, if error, was not prejudicial. (252 C.A.2d 856.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Comment on state of evidence: See People v. Stewart (2004) 33 C.4th 425, 505, 506, 15 C.R.3d 656, 93 P.3d 271 [in capital murder trial, prosecutor's comments, first that defense counsel would fail to provide reasonable explanation of events consistent with defendant's innocence, and later that counsel had failed to do so, constituted permissible argument based on state of evidence]. (6) (New) Comment on defendant's opportunity to tailor testimony: The Griffin rule does not extend to the situation in which the defendant takes the stand as the last witness and the prosecutor comments on the defendant's opportunity to tailor his or her testimony to that which has already been heard. Once the decision to take the stand has been made, the defendant's credibility may be impeached and his or her testimony assailed like that of any other witness. (Portuondo v. Agard (2000) 529 U.S. 61, 120 S.Ct. 1119, 1125, 146 L.Ed.2d 47, 56.)

1. Harmless and Reversible Error.

[§ 442] Harmless and Reversible Error.

(1) Former Law: California Probability Test. The California Supreme Court originally held that our constitutional provision requiring a showing of prejudice from error applied to Griffin error. Thus, violation of the Griffin rule was not reversible error per se. (People v. Bostick (1965) 62 C.2d 820, 827, 44 C.R. 649, 402 P.2d 529, 6 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Reversible Error, §21; see also In re Gaines (1965) 63 C.2d 234, 237, 45 C.R. 865, 404 P.2d 473; People v. Luckman (1965) 235 C.A.2d 75, 79, 45 C.R. 41; People v. Butts (1965) 236 C.A.2d 817, 832, 46 C.R. 362; People v. Beghtel (1966) 239 C.A.2d 692, 694, 49 C.R. 235.) But where prejudice was shown, under the California probability test (see 6 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Reversible Error, §7), the conviction would be reversed. (See People v. Keller (1965) 234 C.A.2d 395, 399, 44 C.R. 432; People v. Steele (1965) 235 C.A.2d 798, 814, 45 C.R. 601; People v. Odom (1965) 236 C.A.2d 876, 881, 46 C.R. 453; People v. Davenport (1966) 240 C.A.2d 341, 347, 49 C.R. 575.)

(2) Chapman Test: Harmless Beyond Reasonable Doubt. Griffin error--like other violations of constitutional right--is now reversible unless the prosecution can prove beyond a reasonable doubt that it was harmless. (See Chapman v. California (1967) 386 U.S. 18, 87 S.Ct. 824, 828, 17 L.Ed.2d 705, 711; People v. Stout (1967) 66 C.2d 184, 198, 57 C.R. 152, 424 P.2d 704, infra, §443; Anderson v. Nelson (1968) 390 U.S. 523, 88 S.Ct. 1133, 1134, 20 L.Ed.2d 81, 83; 24 A.L.R.3d 1093, 1104; 6 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Reversible Error, §9 et seq.) (For examples of error held harmless, see People v. Giovannini (1968) 260 C.A.2d 597, 606, 67 C.R. 303; People v. Morse (1969) 70 C.2d 711, 730, 76 C.R. 391, 452 P.2d 607; *People v. ### XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

f. Effect of Griffin Error.

2. Error Invited.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 443

[§ 443] Error Invited.

Invited error is not a ground for reversal. (See 6 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Reversible Error, §31 et seq.) In People v. Hill (1967) 66 C.2d 536, 58 C.R. 340, 426 P.2d 908, defense counsel made much of the prosecutor's failure to examine codefendant S when he was on the stand for the limited purpose of testifying on voluntariness of a confession. The prosecutor answered by telling the jury that he couldn't ask questions outside the scope of that issue. Held, this was not improper, or at most harmless error; there was no suggestion of adverse inferences in violation of the Griffin rule. (66 C.2d 562.)

A more obvious justification for the prosecutor's statements in Hill would be that any hint at the use of the privilege was invited by the defense. But People v. Stout (1967) 66 C.2d 184, 57 C.R. 152, 424 P.2d 704, found violation of the Griffin rule reversible error, despite the invitation. Defendants were charged with a number of crimes, including alteration of serial numbers on a firearm. Defense counsel told the jury that he had advised defendants not to testify because the case against them would then only be circumstantial. The prosecutor in response stated that the case was not necessarily dependent on circumstantial evidence, and that certain defenses offered by defense counsel were his claims only, because defendants failed to testify in support of them.

This was clearly a legitimate answer to the defense argument. But the prosecutor went further, stating that by failing to testify defendants were subject to a permissible inference that they removed the identification marks on the gun, for if someone else had done it they could have so testified. Held, this was misconduct in violation of the Griffin rule, and, under the circumstances, reversible error. (66 C.2d 198.) Because failure to testify was deliberately introduced by the defense, and the doctrine of invited error would normally apply, the decision seems to suggest that prosecutors are not entitled to violate the Griffin rule just because defense counsel seeks to take adroit advantage of it. (See 24 A.L.R.3d 1093, 1120.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

13. No Proof of Prior Claim.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 444

[§ 444] No Proof of Prior Claim.

Sometimes a defendant claims the witness' privilege and refuses to testify before a grand jury, or claims the accused's privilege at a prior trial, and thereafter waives the privilege and testifies at the trial. May the defendant's prior claim of privilege be proved as an admission, or as impeachment? The law on this point has gone through several stages:

(1) Former Rule. In People v. Kynette (1940) 15 C.2d 731, 750, 104 P.2d 794, it was held that pertinent portions of the grand jury transcript could be introduced for the limited purpose of impeachment. This case was followed by several later decisions. (See, e.g., People v. Wayne (1953) 41 C.2d 814, 829, 264 P.2d 547; People v. Walsh (1956) 47 C.2d 36, 43, 301 P.2d 247.)

A strong contrary position was taken in Grunewald v. United States (1957) 353 U.S. 391, 77 S.Ct. 963, 983, 1 L.Ed.2d 931, 953: "[T]he Fifth Amendment claim was made before a grand jury where Halperin was a compelled, and not a voluntary, witness; where he was not represented by counsel; where he could summon no witnesses; and where he had no opportunity to cross-examine witnesses testifying against him. These factors are crucial in weighing whether a plea of the privilege is inconsistent with later exculpatory testimony on the same questions, for the nature of the tribunal which subjects the witness to questioning bears heavily on what inferences can be drawn from a plea of the Fifth Amendment." (See 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2273; 71 Harv. L. Rev. 109; 1957 A.S. 563.)

Where, however, the claim of privilege was made at a prior trial, the United States Supreme Court sustained its use for impeachment purposes. (See Raffel v. United States (1926) 271 U.S. 494, 46 S.Ct. 566, 567, 70 L.Ed. 1054, 1057; but see Stewart v. United States (1961) 366 U.S. 1, 81 S.Ct. 941, 6 L.Ed.2d 84 [improper where prior testimony was unintelligible and there was nothing to impeach].)

(2) Current Rule: No Implied Admission. The California cases on impeachment were reexamined in People v. Calhoun (1958) 50 C.2d 137, 146, 323 P.2d 427, and People v. Snyder (1958) 50 C.2d 190, 195, 324 P.2d 1. In the first case, the claim was before the grand jury; in the second, it was at a prior trial of an alleged coconspirator; in both, it was held reversible error to use the claim as an implied admission, i.e., as affirmative evidence of guilt. (See 11 Stanf. L. Rev. 559; 32 So. Cal. L. Rev. 307; 1960 A.S. 578.)

(3) Current Rule: No Impeachment. In People v. Sharer (1964) 61 C.2d 869, 40 C.R. 851, 395 P.2d 899, the prior claim was made before the grand jury, and the prosecutor, cross-examining defendant at the trial, was allowed to show it. Held, this was reversible error. Again reviewing the California decisions at length, the court declared that the Kynette and Walsh cases were wrongly decided and that their authority had been impaired by the Calhoun and Snyder cases.

The holding was that the use of the prior claim for impeachment is as improper as its use as an admission. (61 C.2d 876.) (For same rule in civil cases, see supra, §96.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

B. Privilege of Accused (Defendant in Criminal Case).

14. Grant of Use Immunity Constitutionally Compelled.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 445

[§ 445] Grant of Use Immunity Constitutionally Compelled.

In People v. Coleman (1975) 13 C.3d 867, 120 C.R. 384, 533 P.2d 1024, supra, §380, the Supreme Court ruled that the testimony of a probationer at a revocation hearing could not be admitted at a subsequent trial on charges based on the same conduct that prompted revocation. Although this holding was expressed in terms of a judicially devised exclusionary rule, "later cases have treated Coleman as creating a limited species of use immunity grounded in California's constitutional guarantee against self-incrimination." (People v. Carter (1993) 19 C.A.4th 1236, 1248, 23 C.R.2d 888.) Coleman immunity has been extended to a few other situations, most notably to a minor's testimony at a fitness hearing or statements to a probation officer. (Ramona R. v. Superior Court (1985) 37 C.3d 802, 807, 810, 210 C.R. 204, 693 P.2d 789, supra, §370; on immunity of witnesses generally, see infra, §470 et seq.)

In People v. Carter, supra, a murder defendant moved for immunity against use of his testimony regarding the circumstances of an untried murder. In his offer of proof, defendant indicated that, in addition to testimony regarding the circumstances of the charged murder, he would have testified that he was present at the untried murder and that he took the personal property of the victim of that murder. Thus he could not testify without risking self-incrimination in connection with the untried murder. The trial judge refused to grant him immunity. Held, this was proper.

(a) The Coleman rationale does not support extending immunity to protect a defendant in an ongoing trial who takes the stand to rebut admissible, other crimes evidence, and there is a possibility the testimony may be used against the defendant in a subsequent prosecution. The principal concern of the Coleman court was the danger of abuse by the state of its opportunity to coerce self-incriminatory testimony by scheduling the probation revocation hearing in advance of trial. The introduction of other crimes evidence does not provide the same opportunity for abuse. It was "unlikely that the prosecution's decision to proffer evidence of the Baro killing was made even in part on the expectation that defendant would be compelled to take the stand to explain it." (19 C.A.4th 1249.)

(b) Additional reasons militate against requiring immunity. In a criminal trial, the state must prove its case to a jury and establish guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. These procedural protections remove "the incentive to testify that was present in such cases as Coleman and Ramona R., in which the defendants faced serious potential consequences if they chose not to explain their actions to the trial judge." Moreover, because the defendant's testimony at the two proceedings in question is not likely to differ, the defendant's decision whether to rebut the other crimes evidence at the first proceeding is "a choice having more to do with a calculation of the likely effect of the testimony than with a dilemma posed by differing defense objectives at the two proceedings." (19 C.A.4th 1250.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

C. Privilege of Witness in Any Proceeding.

1. General Principles.
  - a. Proceeding and Witness.
2. Witness Alone Privileged.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 447

[§ 447] Witness Alone Privileged.

The privilege belongs to the witness, and cannot be claimed by a party not under examination. (See People v. Gonzales (1922) 56 C.A. 330, 331, 204 P. 1088; Robinson v. McAbee (1923) 64 C.A. 709, 713, 222 P. 871; People v. Bernal (1967) 254 C.A.2d 283, 294, 62 C.R. 96; People v. Chandler (1971) 17 C.A.3d 798, 803, 95 C.R. 146, infra, §448; People v. Williams (1970) 11 C.A.3d 1156, 1163, 90 C.R. 409; 1 McCormick 5th, §119; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2270.) However, if the witness' lawyer is clearly acting under authorization of his or her client, the lawyer may invoke the privilege on the witness' behalf. (See People v. Apodaca (1993) 16 C.A.4th 1706, 1715, 21 C.R.2d 14.)

The danger must be of incrimination of the witness himself or herself; the witness cannot invoke the privilege and refuse disclosure of facts which would incriminate only a third person. (Rogers v. United States (1951) 340 U.S. 367, 71 S.Ct. 438, 441, 95 L.Ed. 344, 348.)

This principle was applied on unusual facts in People v. Bernal, supra. Defendant Charles Bernal was charged with possession of marijuana found in a blue Thunderbird he owned. He called his brother Alex, who was in the county jail serving a term for sale of marijuana, as his witness. But H, Alex's attorney, appeared to protect Alex's interests. Defense counsel asked Alex if he had ever driven the blue Thunderbird before defendant's arrest, for the obvious purpose of suggesting that Alex, not defendant, possessed the marijuana involved. Alex answered "Yes," whereupon his attorney asked that the answer be stricken and advised the witness that it might tend to incriminate him. The answer was stricken, defense counsel asked it again, and Alex refused to answer on grounds of tendency to incriminate. Thereupon the judge struck all of his testimony and advised the jury to totally disregard it. On appeal, defendant contended that it was error to permit the witness to withdraw his answer and claim the privilege, because this prevented the jury from drawing an inference that the witness, rather than the defendant, was the possessor.

The court's answer was: "First, the defendant, as opposed to the witness, has no right which he may assert superior or even equal to that of the witness who exercises the privilege against self-incrimination; the defendant may call the witness; he cannot compromise the witness' testimonial sanctuary to his own uses by using it as a springboard from which to shift the indication of his own guilt. Second, the claim of privilege having no evidentiary value, it could have no relevance to the question of defendant's guilt or innocence." (254 C.A.2d 294.)

Defendant made an additional and even more novel contention: that the ruling denied him the compulsory process of witnesses, because the judge could have compelled the testimony of Alex by granting him immunity under P.C. 1324 (infra, §485 et seq.). The court's answer leaves the point in some uncertainty: (a) Defendant has no right to any particular testimony in derogation of a witness' privilege against self-incrimination; and (b) defendant did not request that the district attorney exercise the procedure under P.C. 1324; thus, he was not denied use of immunity power on his behalf. (254 C.A.2d 295.)

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

C. Privilege of Witness in Any Proceeding.

1. General Principles.

a. Proceeding and Witness.

3. When Privilege Should Be Claimed.

aa. Early Rule: In Jury's Presence.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 448

[§ 448] Early Rule: In Jury's Presence.

In People v. Chandler (1971) 17 C.A.3d 798, 95 C.R. 146, prospective witness M was a juvenile who had already been made a ward of the court as a result of his participation in the robbery for which defendant was being tried. At defendant's trial, M was brought into the courtroom and identified by the victim. The prosecution then indicated it would call M as a witness, but defense counsel objected, contending that M's Fifth and Sixth Amendment rights had been violated by an investigator from the district attorney's office and that M would refuse to testify if called. The trial judge, however, allowed the prosecutor to call M to the stand. After being sworn, M refused to answer questions, even when granted immunity. Held, the procedure in calling and questioning M was proper.

(a) Defendant had no standing to complain of any possible violation of the witness' Fifth and Sixth Amendment rights. (17 C.A.3d 803.) Furthermore, neither the trial court nor the prosecutor was obliged to accept defense counsel's prediction that M would not testify. (17 C.A.3d 803.)

(b) Defendant contended that the prosecution should not be permitted to force a witness to assert the privilege against self-incrimination in the presence of the jury, and implied that some form of pretestimonial hearing must be conducted to determine the witness' intention. But no such requirement is found in the Evidence Code. "To the contrary Evidence Code section 913 clearly envisions that the privilege will be claimed in the presence of the jury." (17 C.A.3d 804.) Moreover, it would be unrealistic and unwise to require any examination into a prospective claim of privilege, for witnesses often change their minds in relatively short periods of time. "It is always possible that a witness would, in a pre-testimonial hearing, indicate that he would testify and yet refuse to do so when actually questioned in the presence of the jury. Conversely, a witness might express an intention to claim the privilege and yet when actually questioned on the stand freely answer the questions." (17 C.A.3d 805.)

C. Privilege of Witness in Any Proceeding.

1. General Principles.

a. Proceeding and Witness.

3. When Privilege Should Be Claimed.

bb. Current Rule: Before Witness Takes Stand.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 449

[§ 449] Current Rule: Before Witness Takes Stand.

People v. Chandler (1971) 17 C.A.3d 798, 95 C.R. 146, supra, §448, was criticized and distinguished in People v. Johnson (1974) 39 C.A.3d 749, 114 C.R. 545, where the defense unsuccessfully sought to ask a witness questions, in the jury's presence, to which he would have invoked his self-incrimination privilege. Defendant was charged with murder for stabbing his victim to death in a parking lot brawl. The knife he used apparently was supplied by B, who initially was willing to testify as a defense witness. The trial judge, however, appointed counsel to safeguard B's interests and, outside the jury's presence, B asserted his privilege against self-incrimination as to receiving or giving the knife. Upholding the privilege, the judge ordered defense counsel to refrain from asking any questions in the jury's presence which would involve B in the possession, giving or receiving of the knife. Held, the ruling was proper.

(a) Chandler held that no pretestimonial hearing is required. "That holding, however, does not stand for the proposition that such a pretestimonial hearing may not be held in order to determine whether or not the witness is entitled to the privilege." (39 C.A.3d 758.)

(b) By dictum, Chandler conveyed the idea that the privilege against self-incrimination should be invoked in the jury's presence. However, Ev.C. 913 (see supra, §96) neither envisions nor specifies that this should be done; the privilege may validly be raised in a pretestimonial hearing before the court without any obligation to renew it before the jury. (39 C.A.3d 758, 759.) And, because the judge must determine whether the answer might incriminate the witness, it is the better practice to require exercise of the privilege outside the jury's presence. (39 C.A.3d 759.)

(c) Even though a witness may change his or her mind in a short time, the probability is almost nil when the pretestimonial hearing is conducted during the trial and is immediately followed by the procedure in front of the jury. To require a renewal of the invocation of the privilege would amount to a meaningless ritual, especially because the jury must not draw any inference from the witness' exercise of the privilege. (39 C.A.3d 760.)

The Johnson approach was followed in People v. Frierson (1991) 53 C.3d 730, 280 C.R. 440, 808 P.2d 1197. Defendant claimed at the penalty phase of a capital murder prosecution that a witness was the actual perpetrator of a prior murder that served to support a special circumstance allegation. The witness asserted his privilege against self-incrimination outside the presence of the jury. Defendant then requested that the witness be required to assert the privilege in front of the jury. Defendant's request was denied; nevertheless, when the witness testified before the jury, he asserted his privilege under defense questioning. Held, death sentence affirmed.

(a) Defendant's request was properly denied. "Allowing a witness to be put on the stand to have the witness exercise the privilege before the jury would only invite the jury to make an improper inference. ... Therefore, 'it is the better practice for the court to require the exercise of the privilege out of the presence of the jury.' " (53 C.3d 743, quoting Johnson.) "We have 'commend[ed]' the approach 'as a means by which to avoid the potentially prejudicial impact of the witness asserting the privilege before the jury.' " (53 C.3d 743, quoting People v. Ford (1988) 45 C.3d 431, 247 C.R. 121, 754 P.2d 168, supra, §97.)

(b) The trial court did not have a sua sponte duty to instruct the jury that the witness had invoked the privilege, that the court had determined outside the jury's presence that the witness was unable to discuss the prior murder, or that the jury could not draw any inferences from these circumstances. That instruction is required only at the request of a party who may be adversely affected because an unfavorable inference may be drawn by the jury. Here, defendant did not request the instruction. Moreover, "White's invocation of the privilege did not obviously prejudice defendant. Indeed, defense counsel himself caused White to assert the privilege in front of the jury. He undoubtedly hoped the jury would draw an impermissible inference--that White had something to hide, namely that he, not defendant, was guilty of shooting Green." (53 C.3d 744.) (See 19 A.L.R.4th 368 [propriety of calling witness involved in crime charged against defendant solely to extract claim of self-incrimination].)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

C. Privilege of Witness in Any Proceeding.

1. General Principles.
- a. Proceeding and Witness.
4. Claim by Civil Defendant.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 450

[§ 450] Claim by Civil Defendant.

In Alvarez v. Sanchez (1984) 158 C.A.3d 709, 204 C.R. 864, plaintiff filed a complaint for dissolution of partnership, and defendants filed a verified answer. Thereafter, a criminal complaint was filed against defendants charging them with violation of the securities laws and grand theft involving the same property and transactions as the civil suit. During a recess in the preliminary hearing of the criminal proceedings, the civil case came to trial, plaintiffs called defendants as adverse witnesses, and defendants invoked their Fifth Amendment privilege. The trial judge then granted plaintiffs' motion to strike the portions of the answer denying allegations of the complaint, plaintiffs' witnesses testified with no cross-examination permitted, and judgment was rendered for plaintiffs. Held, reversed. The harsh penalty of striking the answer and allowing the case to proceed as a default matter was a denial of defendants' fundamental right to a trial, imposing a civil forfeiture for a proper claim of privilege. (158 C.A.3d 712, 713, 714.)

In Pacers v. Superior Court (1984) 162 C.A.3d 686, 208 C.R. 743, Needham and others engaged in a fight with employees of Pacers, and were arrested. They sued Pacers and its employees for assault and battery, and the United States attorney maintained an "open file" for criminal assault and battery charges against these defendants. Plaintiffs took defendants' depositions, and defendants refused to answer questions unless given use and derivative use immunity. The superior court denied the request for immunity because of objection by the United States attorney, and issued an order prohibiting defendants from testifying at the trial on the subject matter of the suit. Held, mandamus granted to compel setting aside of the order.

(a) Defendants, facing possible criminal prosecution involving the same facts as the civil action, were entitled to invoke their Fifth Amendment privilege without the penalty imposed. (162 C.A.3d 689, 690.)

(b) The court should weigh the parties' competing interests with a view toward accommodating both, and the proper remedy is that established by federal practice: stay discovery in the civil action until disposition of the criminal matter. (162 C.A.3d 690.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Fuller v. Superior Court (2001) 87 C.A.4th 299, 309, 104 C.R.2d 525 [in action by plaintiff African-American shoppers alleging they were beaten by defendant security guards, denial of defendants' request to stay their depositions until expiration of applicable criminal statute of limitations was proper; criminal statute would not expire until 3 years from scheduled trial date and only a few months before expiration of 5-year period for bringing civil action to trial].

(New) Distinction: Where defendant is corporation: In Avant! Corp. v. Superior Court (2000) 79 C.A.4th 876, 94 C.R.2d 505, a civil action against defendant corporation for defamation and related causes of action, the trial judge denied defendant's request to stay the action, or at least stay discovery, until a related criminal action against it was concluded. Held, petition for mandamus relief denied. The defendants, claiming the privilege in Pacers v. Superior Court (1984) 162 C.A.3d 686, 208 C.R. 743, text, p. 752, were individuals, not a corporation, so the federal practice recommended in that case is inapplicable here. Corporations have no privilege against self-incrimination. (79 C.A.4th 883; see text, §451.) But even where the defendant is an individual, a stay of the proceedings is not constitutionally required; rather, a stay is permissible, and the trial judge's determination is subject to review for abuse of discretion. Where the defendant is a corporation, the federal practice is to give some weight to self-incrimination considerations (the effect on the rights of defendant's employees), and to weigh such additional factors as the plaintiff's interest in proceeding expeditiously, the burden placed on the defendant by the proceedings, the convenience of the court in managing its cases and efficiently using judicial resources, the interests of nonparties, and the interest of the public in the pending civil and criminal actions. Here, the factors weigh in favor of the trial judge's decision to deny the stay; there was no abuse of discretion. (79 C.A.4th 887, 888.)

Unlike the constitutional guarantee against unlawful search and seizure (see 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, §29), the self-incrimination privilege does not protect a corporation from compulsory disclosure of corporate records incriminating the corporation. The usual explanation is that the corporation is chartered by the state with special powers, and the state may examine corporate records to discover abuse of the powers. (See United States v. Bausch & Lomb Optical Co. (1944) 321 U.S. 707, 64 S.Ct. 805, 815, 88 L.Ed. 1024, 1037; *George Campbell Painting Corp. v. ## CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

C. Privilege of Witness in Any Proceeding.

1. General Principles.

b. Business Records of Corporation or Association.

2. Association or Partnership.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 452

[§ 452] Association or Partnership.

(1) Large Unincorporated Associations. In United States v. White (1944) 322 U.S. 694, 64 S.Ct. 1248, 88 L.Ed. 1542, the Court brought large unincorporated associations within the rule which denies the privilege to corporations. The holding was that an officer of an international labor union could not refuse to produce its records under a claim of the privilege. The test, said the Court, is whether "a particular type of organization has a character so impersonal in the scope of its membership and activities that it cannot be said to embody or represent the purely private or personal interests of its constituents, but rather to embody their common or group interests only. If so, the privilege cannot be invoked on behalf of the organization or its representatives in their official capacity." (64 S.Ct. 1251, 88 L.Ed. 1547.) (See 17 So. Cal. L. Rev. 322; 18 So. Cal. L. Rev. 157; 44 Cal. L. Rev. 408.)

(2) Partnership. In Bellis v. United States (1974) 417 U.S. 85, 94 S.Ct. 2179, 40 L.Ed.2d 678, the court explored the "outer limits" of United States v. White, supra, and concluded that the White rule was properly applied to the records of a small law partnership.

(a) "While small, the partnership here did have an established institutional identity independent of its individual partners. This was not an informal association or a temporary arrangement for the undertaking of a few projects of short-lived duration. Rather, the partnership represented a formal institutional arrangement organized for the continuing conduct of the firm's legal practice." (94 S.Ct. 2186, 40 L.Ed.2d 688.)

(b) Equally important, the partner who was attempting to assert his personal privilege against self-incrimination was holding the subpoenaed partnership records in a representative capacity. "The documents which petitioner has been ordered to produce are merely the financial books and records of the partnership. These reflect the receipts and disbursements of the entire firm, including income generated by and salaries paid to the employees of the firm, and the financial transactions of the other partners. Petitioner holds these records subject to the rights granted to the other partners by state partnership law. Petitioner has no direct ownership interest in the records; rather, under state law, they are partnership property, and petitioner's interest in partnership property is a derivative interest subject to significant limitations." (94 S.Ct. 2187, 40 L.Ed.2d 689.)

(c) The White opinion contained a suggestion that the test for determining whether the privilege applies depends on whether the organization has a character so impersonal in the scope of its membership and activities that it cannot be said to embody or represent the purely private or personal interests of its constituents, but rather to embody their common or group interests only. However, this formulation cannot be reduced to a simple proposition based solely upon the size of the organization. "Every State has now adopted laws permitting incorporation of professional associations, and increasing numbers of lawyers, doctors, and other professionals are choosing to conduct their business affairs in the corporate form rather than the more traditional partnership. Whether corporation or partnership, many of these firms will be independent entities whose financial records are held by a member of the firm in a representative capacity. In these circumstances, the applicability of the privilege should not turn on an insubstantial difference in the form of the business enterprise." (94 S.Ct. 2189, 40 L.Ed.2d 691.) (See 17 A.L.R.4th 1039 [right of partners to assert personal privilege against self-incrimination as to production of partnership books or records].)

C. Privilege of Witness in Any Proceeding.

1. General Principles.

c. Officer of Corporation or Association.

1. Officer in Representative Capacity.

bb. Illustrations.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 454

[§ 454] Illustrations.

In McPhaul v. United States (1960) 364 U.S. 372, 81 S.Ct. 138, 5 L.Ed.2d 136, petitioner was convicted of contempt for wilful failure to comply with a subpoena duces tecum of a subcommittee of the House Committee on Un-American Activities. The Committee was investigating the Civil Rights Congress, listed as subversive by the Attorney General, and had reason to believe petitioner was its executive secretary. The subpoena called for records of the organization, and at the opening of the hearings the Chairman publicly stated the purpose of the inquiry--to determine whether there had been Communist activity, and its extent, in a vital defense area. Petitioner refused to answer any question relating to possession of the records, solely on a claim of the Fifth Amendment privilege. At the trial he raised the defense that there was no evidence produced by the Government to show that the records called for were in existence, or in his possession or control. Held, conviction affirmed.

The Court recognized that a witness cannot be punished for failure to produce documents which the witness does not have unless he or she is responsible for their unavailability or is impeding justice by not explaining what happened to them. However, petitioner never claimed that the records were not in his possession or control, but only, belatedly, that the Government failed to show that he could have produced them. The Government's proof established a prima facie case of wilful failure, the burden shifted to him to present some evidence to explain or justify, and he elected to present no evidence; hence, there was no factual issue as to their existence or his ability to produce. If he had made some statement of reasons for inability to comply, the subcommittee might have taken other appropriate steps to obtain them. (81 S.Ct. 142, 143, 5 L.Ed.2d 142, 143.)

In Braswell v. United States (1988) 487 U.S. 99, 108 S.Ct. 2284, 101 L.Ed.2d 98, the question was "whether the custodian of corporate records may resist a subpoena for such records on the ground that the act of production would incriminate him."

Petitioner Braswell operated a business as the sole shareholder of two corporations. A federal grand jury issued a subpoena to him as president of the corporations, requiring him to produce their books and records. His motion to quash was based on the theory that his act of producing the documents has independent testimonial significance, which would incriminate him individually. The motion was denied. Held, affirmed.

(a) If petitioner had conducted his business as a sole proprietorship, he could have shown that his act of production would entail testimonial self-incrimination. (108 S.Ct. 2288, 101 L.Ed.2d 105, 106, citing United States v. Doe (1984) 465 U.S. 605, 104 S.Ct. 1237, 79 L.Ed.2d 552, infra, §459.) But a corporation has no Fifth Amendment privilege, and Wilson v. United States (1911) 221 U.S. 361, 31 S.Ct. 538, 55 L.Ed. 771, supra, §453, held that a corporate officer could not resist a demand for corporate records by invoking his personal privilege. (108 S.Ct. 2288, 2289, 101 L.Ed.2d 106.)

(b) The collective entity rule, expounded in these and other decisions, was not rendered obsolete by Fisher v. United States (1976) 425 U.S. 391, 96 S.Ct. 1569, 48 L.Ed.2d 39 (infra, §458). "The agency rationale undergirding the collective entity decisions, in which custodians asserted that production of entity records would incriminate them personally, survives. From Wilson forward, the Court has consistently recognized that the custodian of corporate or entity records holds those documents in a representative rather than a personal capacity. ... Under those circumstances, the custodian's act of production is not deemed a personal act, but rather an act of the corporation. Any claim of Fifth Amendment privilege asserted by the agent would be tantamount to a claim of privilege by the corporation--which of course possesses no such privilege." (108 S.Ct. 2291, 101 L.Ed.2d 109.)

(c) Curcio v. United States (1957) 354 U.S. 118, 77 S.Ct. 1145, 1 L.Ed.2d 1225, infra, §455, does not support petitioner's contention; the Court in that opinion made clear the line between oral testimony and other forms of incrimination, and pointed out that a custodian could not be compelled to condemn himself or herself by his or her own oral testimony. (108 S.Ct. 2293, 101 L.Ed.2d 112.)

(d) Recognizing a Fifth Amendment privilege on behalf of the custodians of records of collective entities would have a detrimental impact on the Government's efforts to prosecute "white-collar crime." "If custodians could assert a privilege, authorities would be stymied not only in their enforcement efforts against those individuals but also in their prosecutions of organizations." (108 S.Ct. 2294, 101 L.Ed.2d 113.)

(e) Certain consequences flow from the fact that the custodian's act of production is in his or her representative capacity, and is deemed one of the corporation: the Government may not make any evidentiary use of the individual act against the individual. "The Government has the right, however, to use the corporation's act of production against the custodian. The Government may offer testimony for example, from the process server who delivered the subpoena and from the individual who received the records--establishing that the corporation produced the records subpoenaed. The jury may draw from the corporation's act of production the conclusion that the records in question are authentic corporate records, which the corporation possessed, and which it produced in response to the subpoena. And if the defendant held a prominent position within the corporation that produced the records, the jury may, just as it would had someone else produced the documents, reasonably infer that he had possession of the documents or knowledge of their contents. Because the jury is not told that the defendant produced the records, any nexus between the defendant and the documents results solely from the corporation's act of production and other evidence in this case." (108 S.Ct. 2295, 101 L.Ed.2d 114, 115.) (See 16 Hastings Const. L. Q. 553 [Braswell].)

Four justices joined in a strong dissent. (See 102 Harv. L. Rev. 170 [critical of reasoning and result].)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

C. Privilege of Witness in Any Proceeding.

1. General Principles.

c. Officer of Corporation or Association.

2. Distinction: Officer's Personal Privilege.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 455

[§ 455] Distinction: Officer's Personal Privilege.

The officer can be compelled to produce books in his or her custody or control (see supra, §453), but the officer's personal privilege against oral testimony remains intact, and it is a violation of that privilege to compel the officer to testify to the location of corporate or association records which, if produced, might incriminate the officer.

Thus, in Curcio v. United States (1957) 354 U.S. 118, 77 S.Ct. 1145, 1 L.Ed.2d 1225, a federal grand jury investigating racketeering in unions summoned petitioner, secretary-treasurer of an alleged "phantom union," to appear and produce the union books. He appeared without the books and refused to answer questions as to their whereabouts. In view of his criminal record and other facts the Government conceded the tendency of the books to incriminate him. Held, his refusal was justified. The Government argued that records will be obtained more readily if the custodian is threatened with summary commitment for contempt for failing to testify as to their whereabouts, rather than with prosecution for disobedience of the subpoena to produce the records themselves. But the Court said: "The compulsory production of corporate or association records by their custodian is readily justifiable, even though the custodian protests against it for personal reasons, because he does not own the records and has no legally cognizable interest in them. However, forcing the custodian to testify orally as to the whereabouts of nonproduced records requires him to disclose the contents of his own mind. He might be compelled to convict himself out of his own mouth. That is contrary to the spirit and letter of the Fifth Amendment." (77 S.Ct. 1151, L.Ed.2d 1232.)

In United States v. Kordel (1970) 397 U.S. 1, 90 S.Ct. 763, 25 L.Ed.2d 1, the Food and Drug Administration sent out interrogatories during a civil action brought against a corporation for alleged misbranding of its interstate products. Before the interrogatories were answered, the FDA served notice of a contemplated criminal proceeding against the corporation and its officers, based on the same facts as the civil proceeding. In trying to avoid or delay their answers to the interrogatories, defendants relied on the "grave injustice" of allowing the government to proceed in companion criminal and civil cases. They expressly disavowed a self-incrimination privilege for the corporation and raised no such claim on behalf of the officers. When the trial judge rejected this argument and ordered the corporation to file answers, one officer did so over his signature. At the criminal trial which followed, these answers aided in the officers' convictions. Held, no error.

(a) The officer who provided the answers need not have done so. "Without question he could have invoked his Fifth Amendment privilege against compulsory self-incrimination." (90 S.Ct. 767, 25 L.Ed.2d 8.) The officer was not barred from asserting his privilege simply because the corporation had no privilege of its own. (90 S.Ct. 767, 25 L.Ed.2d 8.)

Service of the interrogatories, however, obliged the corporation to appoint an agent who could, without fear of self-incrimination, provide the requested information. A corporation cannot satisfy its discovery obligations simply by pointing to an agent about to invoke his or her constitutional privilege; that would permit a corporation to assert on its own behalf the personal privilege of its individual agents. (90 S.Ct. 767, 25 L.Ed.2d 8.)

(b) "We do not deal here with a case where the Government has brought a civil action solely to obtain evidence for its criminal prosecution or has failed to advise the defendant in its civil proceeding that it contemplates his criminal prosecution; nor a case where the defendant is without counsel or reasonably fears prejudice from adverse pretrial publicity or other unfair injury; nor with any other special circumstances that might suggest the unconstitutionality or even the impropriety of this criminal prosecution." (90 S.Ct. 769, 25 L.Ed.2d 10.)

The Court in Bellis v. United States (1974) 417 U.S. 85, 94 S.Ct. 2179, 40 L.Ed.2d 678, supra, §452, rejecting a law partner's claim of privilege for partnership records, indicated that the partner's privilege might apply if he "had been ordered to produce files containing work which he had personally performed on behalf of his clients" (94 S.Ct. 2188, 40 L.Ed.2d 689, footnote 9), or if the firm were "a small family partnership," or "there were some other pre-existing relationship of confidentiality among the partners" (94 S.Ct. 2189, 40 L.Ed.2d 691).

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

C. Privilege of Witness in Any Proceeding.

1. General Principles.

d. Required Records and Reports.

1. General Rule: No Privilege.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 456

[§ 456] General Rule: No Privilege.

Records and reports that are required by statute or regulation are not within the privilege. (See Model C., Rule 207; 1 McCormick 5th, §139; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2259c; 68 Harv. L. Rev. 340; 70 Harv. L. Rev. 1461; 9 Stanf. L. Rev. 375.)

The situations may be roughly classified as follows:

(1) Public Record in Custody of Public Official or Employee. Official public records are of course subject to compulsory production regardless of their tendency to incriminate an individual. (See 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2259c; 9 Stanf. L. Rev. 377.)

(2) Required Records and Reports of Dangerous Business or Activity. Dealers in narcotic drugs or liquor, or pawnbrokers who sometimes receive stolen property, may be required to file regular reports and keep records open to inspection by law enforcement officers. (See Model C., Rule 207, Comment; 1 McCormick 5th, §139; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2259c.)

Similarly, "hit-and-run" statutes require an automobile driver involved in an accident to report it. (See People v. Diller (1914) 24 C.A. 799, 801, 142 P. 797; California v. Byers (1971) 402 U.S. 424, 91 S.Ct. 1535, 29 L.Ed.2d 9, supra, §377; Model C., Rule 207, Comment; 1 McCormick 5th, §139.) And a driver may be required to report a traffic accident, as mandated by the Financial Responsibility Law (Veh.C. 16000 et seq.). (See Fahlgren v. Department of Motor Vehicles (1986) 186 C.A.3d 930, 936, 231 C.R. 229.)

(3) Required Records and Reports of Nondangerous Regulated Business or Activity. The nonprivileged required records doctrine appears to be applicable to the almost innumerable statutory regulations requiring the filing or disclosure of records to regulatory agencies. In Shapiro v. United States (1948) 335 U.S. 1, 68 S.Ct. 1375, 92 L.Ed. 1787, S was charged with violation of the Emergency Price Control Act. He claimed immunity under the former Compulsory Testimony Act (infra, §482) because of the prior production of his books and records under subpoena in an administrative hearing. Held, no immunity was gained by the production of these unprivileged records. "Congress required records to be kept as a means of enforcing the statute and did not intend to frustrate the use of those records for enforcement action by granting an immunity bonus to individuals compelled to disclose their required records to the Administrator." (68 S.Ct. 1379, 92 L.Ed. 1793.) (See Craib v. Bulmash (1989) 49 C.3d 475, 487, 489, 261 C.R. 686, 777

P.2d 1120 [discussing later federal cases and following Shapiro]; 19 So. Cal. L. Rev. 423; 22 So. Cal. L. Rev. 303; 9 Stanf. L. Rev. 379; 1967 A.S. 560 [criticizing theory of Shapiro].) (On inspection of bank records, see infra, §§460, 461.)

C. Privilege of Witness in Any Proceeding.

1. General Principles.

d. Required Records and Reports.

2. Distinction: Gambling Registration.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 457

[§ 457] Distinction: Gambling Registration.

The federal wagering tax statutes call for registration and furnishing of information of an incriminating nature. In Marchetti v. United States (1968) 390 U.S. 39, 88 S.Ct. 697, 19 L.Ed.2d 889, the Court held that the criminal sanction for wilful failure to register was violative of the Fifth Amendment privilege. (See supra, §373.) As to the Government's contention that the required records doctrine should apply, the court, distinguishing Shapiro v. United States (1948) 335 U.S. 1, 68 S.Ct. 1375, 92 L.Ed. 1787 (supra, §456), found the elements of the doctrine absent (88 S.Ct. 707, 19 L.Ed.2d 902, 903).

(a) Defendant was not required to keep customary records, but rather to provide information unrelated to any records he may have maintained for his wagering activities; and this is not significantly different from compelled oral testimony.

(b) The records in Shapiro had a "public" aspect (kept under Emergency Price Control Act); here, neither the Government's desire to obtain information nor formalizing of the demand in a statute makes the records "public."

(c) In Shapiro the records were required in an essentially noncriminal area; here, the requirement applied to a selective group inherently suspect of criminal activities. (See 5 San Diego L. Rev. 390; 82 Harv. L. Rev. 196; 86 Harv. L. Rev. 914 [identification of gambling as principal source of income in filing of income tax returns improperly used in prosecution for violation of gambling laws]; 24 Hastings L. J. 959 [same].)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

C. Privilege of Witness in Any Proceeding.

1. General Principles.

e. Personal Records.

1. Tax Records.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 458

[§ 458] Tax Records.

Although tax records may be privileged (see supra, §255 et seq.), when a taxpayer parts with possession by placing them in the hands of a tax preparer, the taxpayer loses the right to invoke the self-incrimination privilege to block a summons directed against the custodian of the material. The privilege cannot be asserted where there is no legitimate expectation of privacy and no government compulsion against the person of the accused. (Couch v. United States (1973) 409 U.S. 322, 93 S.Ct. 611, 616, 619, 34 L.Ed.2d 548, 554, 558.) The opinion adds, however, that "situations may well arise where constructive possession is so clear or the relinquishment of possession is so temporary and insignificant as to leave the personal compulsions upon the accused substantially intact." (93 S.Ct. 618, 34 L.Ed.2d 557.)

Fisher v. United States (1976) 425 U.S. 391, 96 S.Ct. 1569, 48 L.Ed.2d 39, involved two separate cases in which Internal Revenue agents interviewed taxpayers as part of an investigation into possible civil or criminal tax liability. Soon after the interviews, the taxpayers obtained from their respective accountants documents relating to the accountants' preparation of their tax returns. The taxpayers then transferred the documents to their respective attorneys, who had been retained to assist the taxpayers in connection with the investigation. On learning of the documents' whereabouts, the Internal Revenue Service served a summons on each attorney, directing production of the accountants' workpapers, retained copies of one taxpayer's tax returns, retained copies of reports and other correspondence between the accountant and the taxpayer, and the accountant's analyses of the taxpayers' income and expenses as copied by the accountant from the taxpayers' cancelled checks and deposit receipts. The attorneys declined to comply, and, when the Government brought enforcement actions, they raised the taxpayer's accountant-client privilege, the attorney-client privilege, and Fourth Amendment and Fifth Amendment rights. Held, enforcement orders were proper; the documents were not privileged either in the lawyers' hands or those of their clients.

(a) If a taxpayer would have been excused from turning over the accountant's papers had the taxpayer possessed them, the attorney to whom the papers were delivered for the obtaining of legal advice would also have been immune from subpoena. But it is not the taxpayer's Fifth Amendment privilege which would excuse the attorney from production. (96 S.Ct. 1573, 48 L.Ed.2d 47, citing Couch.) The taxpayer's privilege under the Fifth Amendment would not be violated here because enforcement against a lawyer would not "compel" the taxpayer to do anything--and certainly would not compel the taxpayer to be a "witness" against himself or herself. (96 S.Ct. 1573, 48 L.Ed.2d 47.) "This is true whether or not the Amendment would have barred a subpoena directing the taxpayer to produce the documents while they were in his hands." (96 S.Ct. 1574, 48 L.Ed.2d 48.) The fact that the attorneys were agents of the taxpayers does not change this result, nor was the taxpayer's constructive possession so clear or relinquishment of possession so temporary and insignificant as to leave the personal compulsion on the taxpayer substantially intact. "In this respect we see no difference between the delivery to the attorneys in these cases and delivery to the accountant in the Couch case. As was true in Couch, the documents sought were obtainable without personal compulsion on the accused." (96 S.Ct. 1574, 48 L.Ed.2d 48.)

(b) The taxpayer misconceives the nature of the Fifth Amendment when the taxpayer argues that the privilege should not be lost solely because he or she gave a document to his or her lawyer to obtain legal advice. "Here, the taxpayers retained any privilege they ever had not to be compelled to testify against themselves and not to be compelled themselves to produce private papers in their possession. This personal privilege was in no way decreased by the transfer. It is simply that by reason of the transfer of the documents to the attorneys, those papers may be subpoenaed without compulsion on the taxpayer. The protection of the Fifth Amendment is therefore not available." (96 S.Ct. 1574, 48 L.Ed.2d 48.)

(c) Not every invasion of privacy violates the self-incrimination privilege. "Within the limits imposed by the language of the Fifth Amendment, which we necessarily observe, the privilege truly serves privacy interests; but the Court has never on any ground, personal privacy included, applied the Fifth Amendment to prevent the otherwise proper acquisition or use of evidence which, in the Court's view, did not involve compelled testimonial self-incrimination of some sort." (96 S.Ct. 1575, 48 L.Ed.2d 49.) The constitutional provision which specifically mentions personal privacy is the Fourth Amendment.

(d) The proposition that the Fifth Amendment prevents compulsory production of incriminating documents stems from Boyd v. United States (1886) 116 U.S. 616, 6 S.Ct. 524, 29 L.Ed. 746. Even though later decisions have lessened Boyd's impact, the pronouncement that one may not be forced to produce one's private papers still appears as dictum in many cases. But to the extent that the pronouncement rests on the prohibition against seizure of "mere evidence," its foundations have been washed away. (See 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, §81.) "In consequence, the prohibition against forcing the production of private papers has long been a rule searching for a rationale consistent with the proscriptions of the Fifth Amendment against compelling a person to give 'testimony' that incriminates him." (96 S.Ct. 1580, 48 L.Ed.2d 55.)

(e) A subpoena requiring a taxpayer to produce an accountant's work papers in his or her possession involves substantial compulsion, but it does not compel oral testimony and would not ordinarily compel the taxpayer to repeat or affirm the truth of the contents of the documents. Thus, the Fifth Amendment would not be violated by the mere fact that the papers on their face might incriminate the taxpayer. "The accountants' work papers are not the taxpayer's. They were not prepared by him, and they contain no testimonial declarations by him. Furthermore, as far as this record demonstrates, the preparation of all of the papers sought in these cases was wholly voluntary, and they cannot be said to contain compelled testimonial evidence, either of the taxpayer or of anyone else. The taxpayer cannot avoid compliance with the subpoena merely by asserting that the item of evidence which he is required to produce contains incriminating writing, whether his own or that of someone else." (96 S.Ct. 1580, 48 L.Ed.2d 55.) The fact that a document was written by the person asserting the privilege is insufficient to trigger the privilege. (96 S.Ct. 1580, 48 L.Ed.2d 55, footnote 11.)

(f) Aside from the contents of the papers produced, the act of producing evidence in response to a subpoena nevertheless has communicative aspects of its own. Compliance with the subpoena tacitly concedes the existence of the papers demanded, their possession or control by the taxpayer, and the taxpayer's belief that the papers are those described in the subpoena. Yet whether these tacit averments are both "testimonial" and "incriminating" are questions not lending themselves to categorical answer. Here, "we are confident that however incriminating the contents of the accountant's work papers might be, the act of producing them--the only thing which the taxpayer is compelled to do--would not itself involve testimonial self-incrimination." (96 S.Ct. 1580, 48 L.Ed.2d 56.) The taxpayer's implicit admission of the existence and possession of the papers does not rise to the level of testimony under the Fifth Amendment, and the taxpayer's response to the subpoena would not authenticate the work papers. (96 S.Ct. 1580, 48 L.Ed.2d 56.) (See 27 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 343; 90 Harv. L. Rev. 76; 95 Harv. L. Rev. 683; 17 U.S.F. L. Rev. 333; 1984 A.S.

C. Privilege of Witness in Any Proceeding.

1. General Principles.

e. Personal Records.

2. Other Records Disclosing Criminal Acts.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 459

[§ 459] Other Records Disclosing Criminal Acts.

The approach in Fisher v. United States (1976) 425 U.S. 391, 96 S.Ct. 1569, 48 L.Ed.2d 39, supra, §458, was followed in Andresen v. Maryland (1976) 427 U.S. 463, 96 S.Ct. 2737, 49 L.Ed.2d 627, where state investigators, with probable cause to believe that petitioner had committed the crime of false pretenses, obtained search warrants for his office, and seized business records, including his own statements, which were incriminating. Held, there was no violation of the privilege. The statements of petitioner had been voluntarily committed to writing; the seizure was by law officers; and the records were authenticated at the trial by a handwriting expert. Thus, he was not required to aid in the discovery, production or authentication of incriminating evidence. (96 S.Ct. 2744, 2745, 49 L.Ed.2d 638, 637.)

In United States v. Doe (1984) 465 U.S. 605, 104 S.Ct. 1237, 79 L.Ed.2d 552, the defendant was the owner of several sole proprietorships. In an investigation of corruption in awarding county and municipal contracts, the grand jury served subpoenas on defendant demanding production of telephone records, bank accounts, and other business records of his companies. Held:

(a) Under the Fisher holding, the contents of the records were not privileged. "Respondent does not contend that he prepared the documents involuntarily or that the subpoena would force him to restate, repeat, or affirm the truth of their contents. The fact that the records are in respondent's possession is irrelevant to the determination of whether the creation of the records was compelled." (104 S.Ct. 1242, 79 L.Ed.2d 559.)

(b) The act of producing the records was, however, compelled, and therefore the privilege applied. "In Fisher, the Court explored the effect that the act of production would have on the taxpayer and determined that the act of production would have only minimal testimonial value and would not operate to incriminate the taxpayer. Unlike the Court in Fisher, we have the explicit finding of the District Court that the act of producing the documents would involve testimonial self-incrimination." (104 S.Ct. 1242, 79 L.Ed.2d 560.) Hence, the act could not be compelled without a statutory grant of use immunity. (104 S.Ct. 1245, 79 L.Ed.2d 563.)

A concurring justice added a brief statement "to make explicit what is implicit" in the first part of the opinion; i.e., that "the Fifth Amendment provides absolutely no protection for the contents of private papers of any kind." The notion that it did originated in Boyd v. United States (1886) 116 U.S. 616, 6 S.Ct. 524, 29 L.Ed. 746, but Fisher "sounded the death-knell for Boyd." (104 S.Ct. 1245, 79 L.Ed.2d 563.) (See 99 Harv. L. Rev. 640 [organizational papers and privilege against self-incrimination].)

bb. California Right to Financial Privacy Act.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 461

[§ 461] California Right to Financial Privacy Act.

(1) Enactment of Statute. In Burrows v. Superior Court (1974) 13 C.3d 238, 246, 118 C.R. 166, 529 P.2d 590, the California Supreme Court held that a bank customer's records were protected by the California constitutional right of privacy in Cal. Const., Art. I, §1. (See also Valley Bank of Nevada v. Superior Court (1975) 15 C.3d 652, 656, 125 C.R. 553, 542 P.2d 977.) The 1976 Legislature responded with the California Right to Financial Privacy Act, providing that evidence obtained in violation of the act is inadmissible. (Govt.C. 7460 et seq.; see 7 Summary (9th), Constitutional Law, §471.) (For the exception where the institution has reason to suspect that a crime has been or is being committed, see Govt.C. 7470(d) and 7471(c); People v. Nece (1984) 160 C.A.3d 285, 290, 291, 206 C.R. 552.)

(2) Effect of Proposition 8. In People v. Gibson (1987) 195 C.A.3d 841, 241 C.R. 126, a first degree murder case, defendant's bank records were admitted into evidence even though she had not been served with a copy of the subpoena, as required by Govt.C. 7476(a)(1). Defendant contended (a) that the issue of admissibility was decided by Govt.C. 7489, making any evidence obtained in violation of the Act inadmissible; and (b) that Govt.C. 7489, as an "existing statutory rule of evidence relating to privilege," survived Proposition 8 (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §§8, 9). Held, the records were admissible; Govt.C. 7489 was abrogated by Proposition 8, and the case is governed by federal law, which permits admissibility (see United States v. Miller (1976) 425 U.S. 435, 96 S.Ct. 1619, 48 L.Ed.2d 71).

"Statutory privileges were established to encourage unbridled open communications and disclosures. Based upon these considerations, the holder of such a privilege has an absolute right to refuse to disclose privileged information. The relationship between a bank and its customers, although deemed by Government Code section 7461 subdivision (c), to be confidential, is not privileged. Neither the bank nor the customer has an absolute right to prevent disclosure of financial information. Upon a proper showing, the financial institution must disclose information. The California right to the Financial Privacy Act establishes a statutory procedure for the disclosure of financial information. It does not create a statutory privilege." (195 C.A.3d 853, 854.)

    - b. Threat of Criminal or Quasi-Criminal Penalty.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 463

[§ 463] Threat of Criminal or Quasi-Criminal Penalty.

The answer of a witness will usually be deemed incriminating not only where it creates the danger of criminal prosecution, but also where it involves the danger of a penalty or forfeiture of a criminal or quasi-criminal nature. (See In re Leavitt (1959) 174 C.A.2d 535, 539, 345 P.2d 75, infra, §467 [danger of adjudication and punishment for contempt]; 1 McCormick 5th, §120; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §§2256, 2257; 70 Harv. L. Rev. 1464.)

On the other hand, there is no protection against disclosure of facts that might involve merely civil liability, economic loss (e.g., discharge from employment), or public disgrace. (See 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §§2223, 2254, 2255; 70 Harv. L. Rev. 1464; as to liability for punitive damages as basis for invoking the privilege, see 17 Stanf. L. ### XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

- C. Privilege of Witness in Any Proceeding.
- 2. What Constitutes Incriminating Evidence.
  - c. Direct and Indirect Incrimination.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 464

[§ 464] Direct and Indirect Incrimination.

(1) In General. There are two types of incriminating questions: one which calls for an answer which directly incriminates, and one which if answered would form "a link in the chain" of evidence of guilt and thus indirectly incriminate. (See In re Berman (1930) 105 C.A. 37, 44, 287 P. 125, infra, §496; In re Crow (1932) 126 C.A. 617, 619, 14 P.2d 918; In re Sales (1933) 134 C.A. 54, 60, 24 P.2d 916 [privilege available where admissions would "serve as incriminating facts tending to establish their guilt"]; People v. McCormick (1951) 102 C.A.2d Supp. 954, 959, 228 P.2d 349; People v. Bartges (1954) 126 C.A.2d 763, 770, 273 P.2d 49; People v. Lawrence (1959) 168 C.A.2d 510, 516, 336 P.2d 189 [danger of perjury charge in giving of former testimony]; Cohen v. Superior Court (1959) 173 C.A.2d 61, 68, 343 P.2d 286, infra, §467; In re Leavitt (1959) 174 C.A.2d 535, 538, 345 P.2d 75, infra, §467; Blau v. United States (1950) 340 U.S. 159, 71 S.Ct. 223, 224, 95 L.Ed. 170, 172; Hoffman v. United States (1951) 341 U.S. 479, 71 S.Ct. 814, 818, 95 L.Ed. 1118, 1124, infra, §466; 1 McCormick 5th, §133; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §§2260, 2261; 30 Cal. L. Rev. 552; 38 Cal. L. Rev. 924; 70 Harv. L. Rev. 1454; 1958 A.S. 674; 1959 A.S. 641.)

Thus, in People v. Bartges, supra, defendant and J were jointly indicted for grand theft (larceny by trick), and J obtained a severance. Defendant's counsel summoned J and asked questions concerning his meetings with defendant. Held, J's claim of privilege was properly sustained. The answers might show the presence of J with his codefendant when the latter was laying the foundation for his scheme, warranting a possible inference that J aided and abetted defendant in committing the crime. (126 C.A.2d 770.)

(2) Future Indirect Prosecution. The self-incrimination privilege may be available to a person concerned about a future indirect prosecution; however, in light of the procedural safeguards applicable where other crimes evidence is sought to be introduced to prove something more than mere criminal disposition to commit the crime charged, a witness' claim that his or her testimony might be used as other crimes evidence in a future prosecution is, without more, insufficient to show that the witness has been asked to incriminate himself or herself. (Blackburn v. Superior Court (1993) 21 C.A.4th 414, 429, 430, 27 C.R.2d 204.)

    - 1. Former Conservative Rule.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 465

[§ 465] Former Conservative Rule.

In Mason v. United States (1916) 244 U.S. 362, 37 S.Ct. 621, 61 L.Ed. 1198, M and H were questioned by a federal grand jury investigating a charge of gambling against six other men. They refused to answer questions whether they saw poker or other gambling games being played at tables in a place where they were sitting. Held, the claim of privilege was properly denied. The court, quoting liberally from a leading English case, declared that "the danger to be apprehended must be real and appreciable, with reference to the ordinary operation of law in the ordinary course of things,--not a danger of an imaginary and unsubstantial character, having reference to some extraordinary and barely possible contingency, so improbable that no reasonable man would suffer it to influence his conduct." (37 S.Ct. 622, 61 L.Ed. 1200.) (See also Rogers v. United States (1951) 340 U.S. 367, 71 S.Ct. 438, 442, 95 L.Ed. 344, 350; Coleman v. Galvin (1947) 78 C.A.2d 313, 321, 177 P.2d 606; 1 McCormick 5th, §122.)

In Coleman v. Galvin, supra, plaintiff had obtained a judgment which was only partially satisfied. On order of examination plaintiff asked the judgment debtor whether he was employed; whether he had a safe deposit box; whether he owned any war bonds; whether anyone owed him money; and whether he owned life insurance, real estate or money. The trial judge sustained objections to every question. Held, all questions were proper. The court pointed out that the judgment debtor in the present case was not being charged with having made fraudulent transfers, and that questions concerning his present ownership of property would not tend to indicate previous ownership or fraudulent concealment of property. 2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 466

[§ 466] Modern View: Federal Cases.

The United States Supreme Court has abandoned the test of "real," "substantial," and "probable" danger. The witness need not satisfy the court that criminal prosecution is likely and imminent; indeed, to do so might often disclose the privileged incriminating facts. It is enough that the witness shows a possible danger--even a hypothetical one; its improbability will not justify denial of the privilege.

The leading case setting forth this view is Hoffman v. United States (1951) 341 U.S. 479, 71 S.Ct. 814, 95 L.Ed. 1118. A federal grand jury, convened to investigate rackets, called petitioner, a known racketeer. He was questioned as to his occupation and his knowledge of the whereabouts of W, another alleged racketeer for whom the prosecutor was looking. Held, refusal to answer was privileged; the answers might have established contacts between petitioner and W during the period when W was eluding the grand jury, and thus petitioner could have sensed the peril of federal prosecution for obstruction or conspiracy. "[I]f the witness, upon interposing his claim, were required to prove the hazard in the sense in which a claim is usually required to be established in court, he would be compelled to surrender the very protection which the privilege is designed to guarantee. To sustain the privilege, it need only be evident from the implications of the question, in the setting in which it is asked, that a responsive answer to the question or an explanation of why it cannot be answered might be dangerous because injurious disclosure could result." (71 S.Ct. 818, 95 L.Ed. 1124.) (See 1 McCormick 5th, §133; 70 Harv. L. Rev. 1455; 4 Hastings L. J. 194; 1951 A.S. 845; 1956 A.S. 554; 1957 A.S. 562.) (On incriminating nature of questions concerning employment by, affiliation with, or knowledge of activities of, the Communist Party, see Blau v. United States (1950) 340 U.S. 159, 71 S.Ct. 223, 224, 95 L.Ed. 170, 172; 24 So. Cal. L. Rev. 110, 303; 2 Hastings L. J. 73; 38 Cal. L. Rev. 924; 1950 A.S. 809; infra, §502.)

In Malloy v. Hogan (1964) 378 U.S. 1, 84 S.Ct. 1489, 12 L.Ed.2d 653, petitioner, previously convicted in Connecticut of the misdemeanor of pool selling, was ordered to testify, 16 months later, before a court referee conducting an inquiry into gambling activities in the county. He was asked such questions as (a) for whom he worked at the time of his arrest, who furnished his counsel and bail and paid his fine, and (b) "did he know John Bergoti?" (84 S.Ct. 1496, 12 L.Ed.2d 662.) He was sentenced for contempt for refusal to answer. The Connecticut Supreme Court denied habeas corpus, holding that the double jeopardy and statute of limitations defenses would defeat any prosecution growing out of the first group, and that he had failed to explain how a revelation of his relationship with Bergoti would incriminate him. Held, reversed. Under the Hoffman test, the judge must be "perfectly clear" that the answer "cannot possibly" have a tendency to incriminate. (84 S.Ct. 1496, 12 L.Ed.2d 662.) Here:

(a) Petitioner might apprehend that if the person for whom he had worked were still engaged in unlawful activity, "disclosure of his name might furnish a link in a chain of evidence sufficient to connect the petitioner with a more recent crime for which he might still be prosecuted." (84 S.Ct. 1496, 12 L.Ed.2d 662.)

(b) The Bergoti question indicated that Bergoti was suspected of involvement in the subject of the investigation, and "[a]n affirmative answer to the question might well have either connected petitioner with a more recent crime, or at least have operated as a waiver of his privilege with reference to this relationship with a possible criminal." (84 S.Ct. 1497, 12 L.Ed.2d 663.) (See 78 Harv. L. Rev. 223.)

Reiner* (2001) 532 U.S. 17, 121 S.Ct. 1252, 1255, 149 L.Ed.2d 158, 162, 163 [in prosecution for involuntary manslaughter arising from death of infant, prosecution witness who had babysat victim could assert self-incrimination privilege despite her claim of innocence; because defense theory was that she, not defendant, was responsible for death, it was reasonable for her to fear that answers to possible questions might tend to incriminate her]; 1 McCormick 6th, §132.

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

- C. Privilege of Witness in Any Proceeding.
- 2. What Constitutes Incriminating Evidence.
- d. Reasonable Danger of Incrimination.
- 3. Modern View: California Cases.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 467

[§ 467] Modern View: California Cases.

In Cohen v. Superior Court (1959) 173 C.A.2d 61, 343 P.2d 286, the main action was by plaintiff B against defendant C for assault and battery. Seeking exemplary damages, plaintiff's counsel sought to question C as to his ownership of an expensive car and house, his employment of servants, the restaurant he attended, and his air travels, all designed to show wealth--relevant on the issue of exemplary damages (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §139). C claimed privilege and the trial judge sentenced him for contempt. Held, contempt judgment annulled. "The witness does not have to demonstrate conclusively that the answers to the questions will make him subject to prosecution nor need he demonstrate that he likely would be convicted." (173 C.A.2d 68.) Here, C was under investigation by Congressional and state legislative committees and by the Internal Revenue Service, and was widely and publicly known as an ex-convict, racketeer and gangster. Thus, as in Hoffman v. United States (1951) 341 U.S. 479, 71 S.Ct. 814, 95 L.Ed. 1118 (supra, §466), "the chase is one with a 'warm enough scent' to make the 'pursuit genuinely perilous' to the petitioner." (173 C.A.2d 69.)

In re Leavitt (1959) 174 C.A.2d 535, 538, 345 P.2d 75, involved the same kind of proceeding as in Coleman v. Galvin (1947) 78 C.A.2d 313, 177 P.2d 606, supra, §465, but with a distinguishable fact. Petitioner, defendant in a divorce action, was in default in alimony payments. His wife instituted a contempt proceeding and then an order of examination. In the latter proceeding, she sought to question him on his financial status and the source and extent of his income. Held, his claim of the privilege was proper. The questions related to the basic issue in the contempt proceeding--his ability to pay--and the answers could incriminate by subjecting him to possible adjudication of contempt.

The rule was restated in Prudhomme v. Superior Court (1970) 2 C.3d 320, 85 C.R. 129, 466 P.2d 673, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §28, as follows:

"An ordinary witness need not actually prove the existence of an incriminatory hazard as that would surrender the very protection which the privilege against self-incrimination was designed to guarantee. Instead, the privilege forbids compelled disclosures which could serve as a 'link in a chain' of evidence tending to establish guilt of a criminal offense; in ruling upon a claim of privilege, the trial court must find that it clearly appears from a consideration of all the circumstances in the case that an answer to the challenged question cannot possibly have a tendency to incriminate the witness." (2 C.3d 326; see also Zonver v. Superior Court (1969) 270 C.A.2d 613, 76 C.R. 10, supra, §356; People v. Traylor (1972) 23 C.A.3d 323, 330, 100 C.R. 116, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §151; People v. Maxwell (1979) 94

C.A.3d 562, 570, 156 C.R. 630; Smith v. Superior Court (1980) 110 C.A.3d 422, 425, 168 C.R. 24; Gonzales v. Superior Court (1980) 117 C.A.3d 57, 63, 178 C.R. 358.)

In Warford v. Medeiros (1984) 160 C.A.3d 1035, 207 C.R. 94, the court reviewed federal and state cases, discussed the Hoffman and Prudhomme cases (see supra), and came to the following conclusions:

(a) "The California and federal case law, which is not at all inconsistent, essentially stands for the proposition that, in situations such as that before us, assertion of the privilege in a civil proceeding cannot be sustained--that is, the court must conclude that an answer to the challenged question or production of a withheld document cannot possibly have a tendency to incriminate the person invoking the privilege--unless the person who invokes the privilege demonstrates that his or her fear of incrimination is reasonable and not advanced fancifully or merely imagined." (160 C.A.3d 1044.)

(b) The person claiming the privilege must object with specificity to the information sought; only where this is done will the trial court be able to make the particularized inquiry required of it. A blanket refusal to testify is unacceptable. (160 C.A.3d 1045.)

(c) An in camera hearing is within the trial court's discretion, but in any case, the court must clearly state for the record the basis for the conclusion whether the fear of incrimination is reasonably asserted and valid with respect to each question propounded or document sought to be discovered. (160 C.A.3d 1048.) (See Troy v. Superior Court (1986) 186 C.A.3d 1006, 1012, 231 C.R. 108, 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Enforcement of Judgment, §275 [judgment debtor proceeding; no criminal prosecution or investigation pending which might lead to prosecution].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

In re Marriage of Sachs (2002) 95 C.A.4th 1144, 1161, 116 C.R.2d 273, 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Enforcement of Judgment, Supp., §275, held that a wife at a judgment debtor examination of her former husband, who had accumulated considerable arrearages of child and spousal support, was entitled to a copy of the husband's tax returns and had the right to examine him about their contents to the extent allowed by Family C. 3552 (text, §259), notwithstanding his invocation of the self-incrimination privilege. The court suggested that In re Leavitt (1959) 174 C.A.2d 535, 345 P.2d 75, text, p. 770, would have been decided differently had Family C. 3552 then existed.

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

C. Privilege of Witness in Any Proceeding.

3. Possibility of Prosecution.

a. Prosecution Barred.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 468

[§ 468] Prosecution Barred.

The purpose of the privilege is not to prevent compulsory disclosure of criminal conduct but to protect against punishment. Thus, if the witness "has become for any reason permanently immune from punishment" for the crime, the answer will not incriminate the witness and the privilege cannot be claimed. (See Model C., Rule 202 and Comment; 1 McCormick 5th, §§142, 143; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2279; Ex parte Cohen (1894) 104 C. 524, 528, 38 P. 364.)

The principal situations are as follows:

(1) Prior Conviction, Acquittal, or Jeopardy. (See In re Critchlow (1938) 11 C.2d 751, 760, 81 P.2d 966 [acquittal]; People v. Varnum (1967) 66 C.2d 808, 813, 59 C.R. 108, 427 P.2d 772 [murder trial, prosecution called H, already convicted as accomplice in crime charged; properly ordered to answer questions]; Reina v. United States (1960) 364 U.S. 507, 81 S.Ct. 260, 5 L.Ed.2d 249, infra, §477 [suggesting that person already convicted of crime need not be offered immunity from prosecution for it as condition of compelled testimony]; Model C., Rule 202, Comment; 1 McCormick 5th, §§142, 143; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2279; 9 A.L.R.3d 990 [effect of plea of guilty or conviction].)

Where the prospective witness has pleaded guilty but has not yet been sentenced, the privilege remains. Thus, in People v. Kizzee (1979) 94 C.A.3d 927, 156 C.R. 784, C wrote a note to the trial judge stating that she would like to testify for defendant, but could not do so because she had made a guilty plea to a charge against her under an agreement not to give such testimony. Held, she was entitled to claim the privilege.

(a) Some cases have suggested that a guilty plea waives or erases the testimonial privilege; but the federal rule is unclear and California cases are not definitive. (94 C.A.3d 938.)

(b) Applying California's constitutional provision (Cal. Const., Art. I, §15), the reasoning of a New Jersey case is persuasive: an accused who pleads guilty does not lose the privilege until he or she has been sentenced, because until that time the accused may move to withdraw the plea. (94 C.A.3d 938.) "The wisdom of such a rule is particularly evident in a case ... where the plea was pursuant to a bargain which ... left several matters to the trial court's discretion." (94 C.A.3d 939.)

Similarly, a convicted defendant retains the privilege against self-incrimination as to subsequent proceedings against other defendants at least until the time the defendant no longer retains the right to file a timely notice of appeal. (People v. Fonseca (1995) 36 C.A.4th 631, 633, 634, 42 C.R.2d 525 [citing People v. Lopez (1980) 110 C.A.3d 1010, 168 C.R. 378, infra, §500]; People v. Lopez (1999) 71 C.A.4th 1550, 1554, 84 C.R.2d 655 [citing Fonseca].)

(2) Prosecution Barred by Statute of Limitations. (See Ex parte Cohen, supra, 104 C. 528; Peck's Liquors v. Superior Court (1963) 221 C.A.2d 772, 776, 34 C.R. 735 [dictum; 1-year statute had run on misdemeanor charge, but petitioners could still be prosecuted for conspiracy to commit the misdemeanor, a felony, with 3-year statute]; Model C., Rule 202, Comment; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2279; but see Blackburn v. Superior Court (1993) 21 C.A.4th 414, 428, 429, 27 C.R.2d 204 [father, deposed in civil action by daughter claiming he molested her, failed to show he had been asked to incriminate himself; if statute of limitations had run, he could not claim privilege, and counsel's statement that statute might have been tolled was insufficient explanation].)

(3) Accepted Pardon. (See 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2280.) However, because a pardon involves an implication of guilt, the witness need not accept it and may still assert the privilege. (Burdick v. United States (1915) 236 U.S. 79, 35 S.Ct. 267, 270, 59 L.Ed. 476, 481.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

C. Privilege of Witness in Any Proceeding.

3. Possibility of Prosecution.

b. Liability to Prosecution in Other Jurisdiction.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 469

[§ 469] Liability to Prosecution in Other Jurisdiction.

(1) Prosecution in Another State or Under Federal Law. It was formerly held that the privilege did not protect a witness against disclosures which might subject the witness to prosecution under the laws of another state. Hence, the claim would be denied in a federal court where the danger was only of prosecution under state law, and in a state court where the danger was only of prosecution in another state or under federal law; and testimony compelled by the state could be introduced in a federal prosecution. The historical and practical reasons for this rule are set forth in United States v. Murdock (1931) 284 U.S. 141, 52 S.Ct. 63, 76 L.Ed. 210, Feldman v. United States (1944) 322 U.S. 487, 64 S.Ct. 1082, 88 L.Ed. 1408, and Knapp v. Schweitzer (1958) 357 U.S. 371, 78 S.Ct. 1302, 2 L.Ed.2d 1393. The court in Knapp v. Schweitzer, supra, saw this danger in a contrary rule: "If a person may, through immunized self-disclosure before a law-enforcing agency of the State, facilitate to some extent his amenability to federal process, or vice versa, this too is a price to be paid for our federalism. Against it must be put what would be a greater price, that of sterilizing the power of both governments by not recognizing the autonomy of each within its proper sphere." (78 S.Ct. 1308, 2 L.Ed.2d 1401.) (For general discussions of rule, its scope, effect, and policy, see 1 McCormick 5th, §123; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2258; 66 Harv. L. Rev. 186; 68 Harv. L. Rev. 1074; 72 Harv. L. Rev. 179; 4 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 549; 5 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1; 5 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 557, 563; 6 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 452; 1954 A.S. 797; 1958 A.S. 671; 1959 A.S. 637.)

The rule was abrogated in Murphy v. Waterfront Com. (1964) 378 U.S. 52, 84 S.Ct. 1594, 12 L.Ed.2d 678. Petitioners were summoned to testify about a work stoppage in a hearing conducted by the Waterfront Commission of New York Harbor--a bistate body established under a compact between New York and New Jersey. They were granted immunity from prosecution under New York and New Jersey law, but refused to answer on the ground of possible incrimination under federal law. Held, judgments of contempt reversed.

(a) Policy. The policies underlying the privilege are defeated if a witness "can be whipsawed into incriminating himself" under both state and federal law even through the privilege is applicable to each. "This has become especially true in our age of 'cooperative federalism,' where the federal and state governments are waging a united front against many types of criminal activity." (84 S.Ct. 1597, 12 L.Ed.2d 683.)

(b) Precedent. "Our review of the pertinent cases in this Court and of their English antecedents reveals that Murdock did not adequately consider the relevant authorities and has been significantly weakened by subsequent decisions of this Court, and, further, that the legal premises underlying Feldman and Knapp have since been rejected." (84 S.Ct. 1598, 12 L.Ed.2d 683.)

(c) New rule. "We hold that the constitutional privilege against self-incrimination protects a state witness against incrimination under federal as well as state law and a federal witness against incrimination under state as well as federal law." (84 S.Ct. 1609, 12 L.Ed.2d 694.)

(d) Effect of new rule on existing state immunity laws. "[W]e hold the constitutional rule to be that a state witness may not be compelled to give testimony which may be incriminating under federal law unless the compelled testimony and its fruits cannot be used in any manner by federal officials in connection with a criminal prosecution against him. We conclude, moreover, that in order to implement this constitutional rule and accommodate the interests of the State and Federal Governments in investigating and prosecuting crime, the Federal Government must be prohibited from making any such use of compelled testimony and its fruits. This exclusionary rule, while permitting the States to secure information necessary for effective law enforcement, leaves the witness and the Federal Government in substantially the same position as if the witness had claimed his privilege in the absence of a state grant of immunity." (84 S.Ct. 1609, 1610, 12 L.Ed.2d 695.)

Thus, because the federal government cannot make use of petitioners' testimony in a federal prosecution, the danger of incrimination no longer exists, and petitioners should now be given an opportunity to answer the questions. (84 S.Ct. 1610, 12 L.Ed.2d 696.) (See 78 Harv. L. Rev. 223; 12 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 561.)

In Nelson v. Municipal Court (1972) 28 C.A.3d 889, 105 C.R. 46, suspected prostitutes refused to answer questions about a criminal defendant's alleged procuring activities. Even after being granted immunity under P.C. 1324 (infra, §489), they refused to testify on the ground that the answers might subject them to prosecution under federal law. Held, they were properly judged in contempt. Because the immunity granted was comparable to that given in the Murphy case, supra, the witnesses could be compelled to testify. (28 C.A.3d 892.) Although the state could not bind the federal government by statute, the United States Supreme Court in Malloy v. Hogan (1964) 378 U.S. 1, 84 S.Ct. 1489, 12 L.Ed.2d 653, supra, §§356, 466, concluded that the Fourteenth Amendment makes the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination binding on the states. Under the Murphy rule, the federal government is prohibited from making any use of the compelled testimony or its fruits in a criminal prosecution against the witness. Therefore, the grant of immunity under P.C. 1324 afforded them sufficient constitutional protection. (28 C.A.3d 894.)

(2) Prosecution in Foreign Country. The constitutional privilege against self-incrimination is concerned with prosecution by a sovereign that is itself bound by the privilege, i.e., the United States or one of its states. Thus, where a witness claims the privilege based on a fear of prosecution by a foreign nation, the witness can be compelled to testify. (United States v. Balsys (1998) 524 U.S. 666, 118 S.Ct. 2218, 2231, 141 L.Ed.2d 575, 595 [approving reasoning of Murdock, in this context, and disagreeing with analysis of historical precedent contained in Murphy, to extent it would require different result]; see 112 Harv. L. Rev. 172 [Balsys]; 45 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1201 [arguing that fear of foreign prosecution should be sufficient basis for invoking self-incrimination privilege].)

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 470

[§ 470] Nature of Immunity Statutes.

To overcome the obstacle of the self-incrimination privilege and make necessary evidence available and compellable, immunity statutes have been widely enacted, giving the witness, in effect, an advance pardon for a crime that might be disclosed by the witness' testimony. If the statute makes prosecution for the crime impossible, the constitutional requirement is satisfied (supra, §468) and the witness must testify. (See In re Critchlow (1938) 11 C.2d 751, 756, 81 P.2d 966; Ex parte Cohen (1894) 104 C. 524, 528, 38 P. 364; *People v. ## CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

C. Privilege of Witness in Any Proceeding.

4. Immunity of Witness.

a. General Principles.

2. Statutory Authority.

aa. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 471

[§ 471] In General.

It is generally recognized that immunity may be given only under express statutory (or constitutional) authority. (See In re Critchlow (1938) 11 C.2d 751, 756, 81 P.2d 966; Ex parte Cohen (1894) 104 C. 524, 528, 38 P. 364; 1 McCormick 5th, §§142, 143; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §§2281, 2282; 7 Hastings L. J. 75; 78 Cal. L. Rev. 755 [Jailhouse Informants and the Need for Judicial Use Immunity in Habeas Corpus Proceedings]; 4 A.L.R.4th 1221 [prosecutor's power to grant prosecution witness immunity from prosecution].)

The older type of statute usually deals with a specific offense or narrow class of offenses, and gives an automatic immunity to the witness who testifies, which, however, is sometimes constitutionally inadequate. (See infra, §477.) The modern type, exemplified by the revised California statute (infra, §485) and the Federal Immunity of Witnesses Act of 1970 (infra, §483), covers a broader field of crimes and penalties, makes the grant discretionary with the prosecution and court, and gives a constitutionally adequate immunity.

In People v. Superior Court (Kaufman) (1974) 12 C.3d 421, 115 C.R. 812, 525 P.2d 716, infra, §474, the court limited the holding of In re Critchlow, supra. "[T]here is nothing in Critchlow which requires that the legislative authorization be directed to specific as distinguished from general applications. At best, it stands for the proposition that when the Legislature has directed the limits of a grant of immunity, the courts must adhere to such limitations." (12 C.3d 426, footnote 4.) Earlier cases interpreted statutes which dealt only with specific grants of immunity. "In no instance was it necessary to consider whether a statute, purporting to vest broad general discretion in the trial court to accord immunity in a variety of circumstances, did effectively vest that court with discretion to make valid grants of immunity especially in instances when justice and social policies implicit in legislative enactment compel disclosure." (12 C.3d 427.) (See also People v. Brunner (1973) 32 C.A.3d 908, 915, 108 C.R. 501, infra, §488 [immunity granted through estoppel despite noncompliance with statute]; Tarantino v. Superior Court (1975) 48 C.A.3d 465, 469, 122 C.R. 61 [when defendant's mental competence to stand trial is in issue under P.C. 1367 et seq., immunity is reasonably implied from statute so judge may compel defendant to submit to examination by court-appointed psychiatrists].)

C. Privilege of Witness in Any Proceeding.

4. Immunity of Witness.

a. General Principles.

2. Statutory Authority.

bb. Judicial Use Immunity.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 472

[§ 472] Judicial Use Immunity.

In People v. Sutter (1982) 134 C.A.3d 806, 184 C.R. 829, defendant wanted to call as a witness his codefendant, who had pled guilty to a robbery charge. However, the codefendant stated that, if called, he would assert his privilege against self-incrimination because his testimony might implicate him in another robbery. On appeal, defendant argued that the trial judge erred in failing to grant the codefendant judicial (not statutory) use immunity under the court's general power to act in the interest of justice. Held, there was no error. Fifth Amendment due process does not require prosecutors or courts to obtain evidence protected by lawful privilege. And the Sixth Amendment right to compulsory process does not place on prosecutors or courts an affirmative obligation "to secure testimony from a defense witness by replacing the protection of the self-incrimination privilege with a grant of use immunity." (134 C.A.3d 816.)

In People v. Hunter (1989) 49 C.3d 957, 264 C.R. 367, 782 P.2d 608, the court recognized, in dicta, the hypothetical possibility that judicially conferred use immunity might be necessary to vindicate a criminal defendant's rights to compulsory process and fair trial, if the testimony which would be forthcoming would be exculpatory and essential to defendant's case. (49 C.3d 973, 974.) Here, however, the trial judge did not abuse his discretion by denying defendant's request where the testimony sought was at best cumulative. (49 C.3d 975.)

In People v. Cooke (1993) 16 C.A.4th 1361, 20 C.R.2d 506, a prosecution for attempted murder, a percipient witness, subpoenaed by the defense, invoked his privilege not to testify, and the district attorney declined to grant the witness transactional immunity. After the court heard in camera what the witness' testimony would be, it refused to grant judicial use immunity, concluding that the witness' testimony would be cumulative of other evidence. Held, refusal to grant judicial use immunity was not error.

(a) It is not within the court's power to grant statutory transactional immunity; a grant of immunity under P.C. 1324 (see infra, §485 et seq.) is strictly an executive function. (16 C.A.4th 1367; on 1996 amendment to P.C. 1324 authorizing prosecution to request transactional or use immunity, see infra, §489.)

(b) Although some courts have granted judicial use immunity to a defendant, allowing the defendant to testify on other issues relevant to his or her case and still retain protection against self-incrimination at trial, a grant of immunity to a third-party witness would put the prosecutor in an awkward position. "A district attorney who cross-examines a judicially immunized defense witness must narrow his or her questioning to avoid impeding the witness' prosecution, and even then will still face difficulties in proving that the evidence used against that witness was not obtained from or derived from earlier testimony." (16 C.A.4th 1370.)

(c) There is no due process requirement that judges order defense witness immunity whenever it seems fair to do so. The Fifth Amendment protects against overreaching by the prosecution, but it does not require the prosecution or courts to obtain evidence that is protected by a lawful privilege. "[N]o California Court of Appeal or Supreme Court case has ever granted such immunity to a defense witness, and we will not do so now. The relief which appellant here requests should be granted, if at all, by our state's high court." (16 C.A.4th 1371.)

A dissenting justice, relying on federal case law and the dicta in People v. Hunter, supra, argued that judicial use immunity must be granted where the immunity is properly sought in the trial court, the defense witness is available to testify, the proffered testimony is clearly exculpatory, the testimony is essential, and there is no strong countervailing governmental interest. (16 C.A.4th 1374, 1375.) (See People v. Martin (1983) 150 C.A.3d 148, 161, 197 C.R. 655 [following Sutter]; People v. Lucas (1995) 12 C.4th 415, 460, 48 C.R.2d 525, 907 P.2d 373 [characterizing trial judge's inherent authority to grant immunity to witness as "doubtful proposition," and finding defendant's offer of proof inadequate in any case]; 25 Hastings L. J. 435 [nonstatutory immunity]; 4 A.L.R.4th 617 [accused's right to have immunity from prosecution granted to defense witness].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

In People v. Stewart (2004) 33 C.4th 425, 15 C.R.3d 656, 93 P.3d 271, a capital murder case, the Supreme Court took the same approach, and reached the same result, as in People v. Hunter (1989) 49 C.3d 957, 264 C.R. 367, 782 P.2d 608, text, p. 777: The court assumed, without deciding, that trial judges have the inherent authority to order immunity for a witness the defendant wishes to call, but it concluded that the trial judge in this case did not abuse his discretion in failing to do so. Under one of the tests described in Hunter, the trial judge would have the authority to do so if the proffered testimony was both clearly exculpatory and essential, and there was no strong governmental interest countervailing against an immunity grant. Here, however, the witness in question had given police good reason to believe that he might have been involved in the crimes charged against defendant, and thus there was a strong governmental interest in not immunizing him. (33 C.4th 469.) Under the other Hunter test, a grant of immunity would be appropriate where the prosecution's treatment of the witness betrayed a deliberate intention of distorting the fact-finding process. Treatment of this sort can be shown where the prosecution relies heavily on the immunized testimony of a prosecution witness while denying immunity to a defense witness whose testimony would directly contradict that of the prosecution witness. Here, the prosecution consistently declined to grant immunity to defendant's potential witness, and, while it did grant immunity to two of its own witnesses, it did not rely heavily on their testimony. (33 C.4th 470, 471.)

[§ 473] Standing To Challenge Grant of Immunity.

In People v. Wisely (1990) 224 C.A.3d 939, 274 C.R. 291, defendant argued that the trial judge erred in granting witness T use immunity, because prior to 1996, only transactional immunity was authorized in California (infra, §489). Held, defendant lacked standing to argue that an immunized witness' testimony is the product of an improper grant of immunity. "The privilege against self-incrimination is personal to the person who invokes it and immunity affects only that person. Unless the immunity amounts to an improper coercion of the witness's testimony or demonstrably affects the nature of that testimony, the defendant has no interest in complaining." Here, there was neither claim nor showing that the grant of immunity adversely affected the veracity of T's testimony. (224 C.A.3d 944.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

C. Privilege of Witness in Any Proceeding.

4. Immunity of Witness.

b. Immunity in Civil Actions.

1. In General: Proceeding by People.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 474

[§ 474] In General: Proceeding by People.

Although immunity is usually sought in criminal proceedings, recent cases have made it clear that C.C.P. 2025(i) (see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §59 et seq.) gives a trial judge power to frame a protective order in civil discovery proceedings with the effect of a grant of immunity. (See 9 Hastings Const. L. Q. 351 [evolution of California's judicially created immunities in civil actions].)

In People v. Superior Court (Kaufman) (1974) 12 C.3d 421, 115 C.R. 812, 525 P.2d 716, the prosecution brought civil proceedings against multiple defendants, charging them with deceptive advertising and unfair competition. On deposition, all defendants refused to answer questions connecting them with activities germane to the alleged fraud, asserting that responses could lead to the production of evidence tending to incriminate them of criminal conduct and thus would violate their constitutional privileges against self-incrimination. The prosecution moved for a protective order limiting the use of the deposition to the pending civil action, which would have been an effective grant of immunity from criminal liability. The trial judge denied the motion on jurisdictional grounds. Held, writ issued, directing the trial court to fashion an adequate protective order and then compel the witness to respond on deposition and trial to all proper inquiries, including those which would tend to incriminate him except for the protective order.

(a) Former C.C.P. 2019(b)(1) (now C.C.P. 2025(i)) provides that the trial court may make any order which justice requires to protect a party or witness from annoyance, embarrassment or oppression. The statute has been held to authorize a protective order in civil proceedings to limit use of a deposition where the use might otherwise infringe a confidential privilege. (12 C.3d 426; see In re Lifschutz (1970) 2 C.3d 415, 437, 85 C.R. 829, 467 P.2d 557, supra, §224.) And Byers v. Justice Court (1969) 71 C.2d 1039, 1049, 80 C.R. 553, 458 P.2d 465 (vacated on other grounds), held that the state may require a person to disclose information otherwise privileged if, in place of the protection conferred by the privilege, other protection (e.g., use immunity), having the same scope and effect as the privilege, is substituted. (12 C.3d 428.) Following the Byers rationale, the protective order sought would further the legislative purpose and would not unduly hamper the prosecution of persons who should be subjected to criminal proceedings. (12 C.3d 428.)

(b) Defendant objected that, however broad the prospective effect of the protective order may be, he was still subject to penal sanctions in the present civil proceeding--$ 2,500 per violation. But the statutory penalties are not criminal in nature; e.g., they do not include the stigma of a criminal conviction or permit the alternative punishment of imprisonment. (12 C.3d 431.) Thus, the award of civil penalties does not expose defendant to criminal sanctions against which he is protected by the privilege against self-incrimination. (12 C.3d 433.) (See also People v. Superior Court (Taylor) (1975) 53 C.A.3d 996, 999, 126 C.R. 297; Gonzales v. Superior Court (1980) 117 C.A.3d 57, 69, 178 C.R. 358; 64 Cal. L. Rev. 554.)

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

C. Privilege of Witness in Any Proceeding.

4. Immunity of Witness.

b. Immunity in Civil Actions.

2. Action by Private Litigant.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 475

[§ 475] Action by Private Litigant.

In Daly v. Superior Court (1977) 19 C.3d 132, 137 C.R. 14, 560 P.2d 1193, a newspaper employees' strike resulted in the beating and murder of Daly, a management employee. Plaintiffs, his widow and children, brought an action against officers and employees of the union, seeking damages for wrongful death, battery and intentional infliction of emotional distress. On deposition, the union officials claimed the self-incrimination privilege, mainly on apprehension that answers would tend to prove guilt of the murder and federal crimes of conspiracy. Plaintiffs' motions for a protective order giving use immunity were denied; instead, the judge granted their alternative motion that two of the officials be precluded from testifying at trial unless they filed timely waivers of their privilege for purposes of discovery. Held, plaintiffs were entitled to a protective order, but only under specified conditions.

(a) Kaufman distinguished. In People v. Superior Court (Kaufman) (1974) 12 C.3d 421, 115 C.R. 812, 525 P.2d 716, supra, §§471, 474, the immunity sprang from a prosecutorial decision to implement the People's civil enforcement of the law even at the expense of burdens that the immunity order might impose on subsequent criminal proceedings; and the prosecuting attorneys retained complete control over the scope of immunity through the power to determine what questions would be asked. Here, private litigants ask that immunity be granted without any notice to or expression by any prosecuting agency. (19 C.3d 144, 145.)

(b) Petitioners entitled to protective order. A prosecutorial request is not a universal prerequisite to a judicial grant of immunity; prosecutorial interests are protected if the general condition of Kaufman is met: that the granting of immunity will not unduly hamper subsequent criminal prosecutions. (19 C.3d 146, 147.) If it is met, the legislative policies favoring civil discovery give civil litigants the right to inclusion of immunity in a protective order, under the following conditions:

First, prosecuting official's failure to object. A prosecuting attorney may be disinclined to make a request for immunity, but the absence of any unduly detrimental effect on future proceedings can be sufficiently established by that official's failure to object to granting of the order after adequate notice and opportunity to do so. (19 C.3d 148.)

Second, adequate notice to prosecuting official. To enable the prosecuting agency to make an informed judgment on whether to object, the notice must state the subject matter of the inquiries, so that the immunity order will provide the witness with a clear guide as to its coverage. (19 C.3d 148.)

Third, objection and declaration by prosecuting official. The trial judge may disregard objections that are not accompanied by a declaration that the prosecuting attorney is familiar with the notice and has reasonable grounds to believe that the proposed grant of immunity might unduly hamper the prosecution of a criminal proceeding. (19 C.3d 148.) But a proper objection and declaration must be treated as conclusively establishing the grounds of the objection; the prosecutor cannot be required to amplify or justify the declaration, and the judge cannot interfere with the prosecutor's discretion by undertaking to assess the nature or degree of the impact of the immunity grant. (19 C.3d 148.) If the litigant considers the objection unjustified, his or her remedy is to attempt to persuade the prosecutor to withdraw it; and it may also be possible to reframe the scope of the proposed immunity order or to postpone the examination of the witness. (19 C.3d 149.)

Fourth, notice to prosecuting agencies, state or federal, most likely to be interested. The criminal prosecutions which an immunity order must not unduly hamper extend beyond those instituted by the local district attorney; and, although it would be impracticable to require notice to every agency which might conceivably have jurisdiction to prosecute, it can be given to those most likely to be interested by giving notice to the district attorney of the county, the California Attorney General, and the United States Attorney for the district. Also, the trial judge has discretion to further require notice to other prosecuting officials, such as a city attorney or a prosecutor in another state. (19 C.3d 149.) (See Blackburn v. Superior Court (1993) 21 C.A.4th 414, 428, 429, 27 C.R.2d 204 [father, accused in civil action of molesting daughter, needed to inform district attorney why immunity for deposition testimony was required, because it appeared statute of limitations had run]; 66 Cal. L. Rev. 233.)

The Daly opinion's comment on the conclusive effect of a prosecutor's objection (19 C.3d 148) was dictum, for the prosecutor did not object. But in Philibosian v. Superior Court (1983) 149 C.A.3d 938, 941, 197 C.R. 208, the court pointed out that the comment was a considered declaration of a unanimous court, and "created a procedure with the intention that it be followed."

C. Privilege of Witness in Any Proceeding.

4. Immunity of Witness.

b. Immunity in Civil Actions.

3. Improper Grant to Some Defendants.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 476

[§ 476] Improper Grant to Some Defendants.

In Rysdale v. Superior Court (1978) 81 C.A.3d 280, 146 C.R. 633, a city brought an action against petitioners and other defendants to enjoin violation of the one-family residence provision of its zoning ordinance. When the city noticed depositions of three defendants, petitioners asserted their privilege on the ground that the ordinance made the conduct a misdemeanor. The city then obtained an order granting immunity to two of them. Held, the order was an abuse of discretion.

(a) If the prosecution by initiating civil proceedings were able to obtain compelled testimony to use in prosecution of any of the defendants, it would have obtained a significant advantage. And failure to condition the order to apply to all defendants would subject the nonwitness defendants to the detriment of having compelled testimony of their codefendants used against them. There would also be serious collateral consequences. The defendants could not present a joint defense with a single attorney; the nonwitness defendants would have to engage counsel free from any attorney relationship with the witnesses. (81 C.A.3d 289, 290.)

(b) Although accommodation of the oppression of defendants and the hampering effect on the prosecution is difficult, by granting a use and derivative use immunity applicable in any prosecution of any defendant, the city will be placed in a substantially more advantageous position than it would be without any immunity order. (81 C.A.3d 290.) Accordingly, if the city attorney requests it, such an order may be made. (81 C.A.3d 291.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

C. Privilege of Witness in Any Proceeding.

4. Immunity of Witness.

c. Immunity Coextensive With Privilege.

1. In General: Counselman Rule.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 477

[§ 477] In General: Counselman Rule.

(1) Statement of Rule. To operate as a removal of the privilege, the immunity statute must be coextensive with the privilege; i.e., whatever disclosure would be privileged must be protected by immunity from any prosecution resulting from the disclosure. This fundamental proposition was established in Counselman v. Hitchcock (1892) 142 U.S. 547, 12 S.Ct. 195, 35 L.Ed. 1110, where the statute merely provided that the testimony should not be used against the witness. The court pointed out that the information gained from the testimony might be used to obtain other evidence against the witness, so that the danger of criminal prosecution as a result of his or her testimony still remained. Thus, under the Counselman rule, an immunity statute is defective, and testimony cannot be compelled, unless the witness is granted immunity from prosecution for the offense. (See In re Critchlow (1938) 11 C.2d 751, 756, 81 P.2d 966 [immunity must, "in addition to eradicating the self-incriminating character of the testimony to be adduced, also exonerate the witness from prosecution for the offense thereby disclosed"]; 1 McCormick 5th, §§142, 143; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2283; 79 Harv. L. Rev. 429; 29 A.L.R.5th 1 [on adequacy of use or transactional immunity under state constitutional provision].)

(2) Clarifications and Distinctions. The immunity statute obviously can protect only against penal sanctions. And it is valid, and may be invoked to compel testimony, even though the witness may suffer public disgrace, loss of a job, or other such adverse effects. (Ullmann v. United States (1956) 350 U.S. 422, 76 S.Ct. 497, 502, 100 L.Ed. 511, 520; see 70 Harv. L. Rev. 1464.) (See also Piemonte v. United States (1961) 367 U.S. 556, 81 S.Ct. 1720, 1722, footnote 2, 6 L.Ed.2d 1028, 1031 [narcotics investigation by federal grand jury; fear of danger to life of witness and family no excuse for refusal to testify].)

Similarly, immunity is not a protection against attorney disciplinary proceedings. In Segretti v. State Bar (1976) 15 C.3d 878, 126 C.R. 793, 544 P.2d 929, S, an attorney involved in illegal election activities, testified before a United States Senate committee under court-ordered federal immunity. The testimony he gave was then used against him in State Bar disciplinary proceedings. Held, this was proper. "The purpose of disciplinary proceedings against attorneys is not to punish but rather to protect the court and public from the official ministrations of persons unfit to practice. ... Such a proceeding is not a criminal case for purposes of the Fifth Amendment privilege against self incrimination. ... Thus that privilege was not violated by the use at the instant proceedings of testimony given by Segretti under grants of immunity." (15 C.3d 886.) (See 62 A.L.R.3d 1145 [use in disbarment proceeding of immunized testimony given by attorney in criminal proceeding].)

An immunity statute need only protect the witness from future prosecutions. In Reina v. United States (1960) 364 U.S. 507, 81 S.Ct. 260, 5 L.Ed.2d 249, the witness was already serving a federal sentence for a narcotics offense and was no longer subject to federal prosecution; the statute gave him immunity from state prosecution; hence, he could not claim the privilege before a federal grand jury questioning him concerning the crime and persons involved with him. The court rejected his bold contention that he should not have been ordered to answer without first receiving a pardon for the unserved portion of his sentence. (81 S.Ct. 262, 5 L.Ed.2d 252.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

C. Privilege of Witness in Any Proceeding.

4. Immunity of Witness.

c. Immunity Coextensive With Privilege.

2. Use Immunity Sufficient.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 478

[§ 478] Use Immunity Sufficient.

"Use" immunity protects a witness only against the actual use of the compelled testimony and its fruits; "transactional" immunity protects against later prosecution related to matters about which the witness testified. In Kastigar v. United States (1972) 406 U.S. 441, 92 S.Ct. 1653, 32 L.Ed.2d 212, the court held that a federal statute's explicit proscription of the use in any criminal case of "testimony or other information compelled under the order (or any information directly or indirectly derived from such testimony or other information)" was consonant with Fifth Amendment standards.

(a) "We hold that such immunity from use and derivative use is coextensive with the scope of the privilege against self-incrimination, and therefore is sufficient to compel testimony over a claim of the privilege. While a grant of immunity must afford protection commensurate with that afforded by the privilege, it need not be broader. Transactional immunity, which accords full immunity from prosecution for the offense to which the compelled testimony relates, affords the witness considerably broader protection than does the Fifth Amendment privilege. The privilege has never been construed to mean that one who invokes it cannot subsequently be prosecuted. Its sole concern is to afford protection against being 'forced to give testimony leading to the infliction of 'penalties affixed to ... criminal acts.' ' Immunity from the use of compelled testimony, as well as evidence derived directly and indirectly therefrom, affords this protection. It prohibits the prosecutorial authorities from using the compelled testimony in any respect, and it therefore insures that the testimony cannot lead to the infliction of criminal penalties on the witness." (92 S.Ct. 1661, 32 L.Ed.2d 222.)

(b) Petitioners contended that the statutory scope of immunity was not coextensive with the scope of the privilege, and argued that Counselman v. Hitchcock (1892) 142 U.S. 547, 12 S.Ct. 195, 35 L.Ed. 1110, supra, §477, required a minimal grant of full transactional immunity. But the court pointed out that the use immunity legislation of 1970 was drafted to meet the conceptual basis of the Counselman decision, "namely, that immunity from the use of compelled testimony and evidence derived therefrom is coextensive with the scope of the privilege." (92 S.Ct. 1661, 32 L.Ed.2d 221.) What was defective with the statute construed by the Counselman court was its failure to prohibit the use against the immunized witness of evidence derived from the witness' compelled testimony. (92 S.Ct. 1661, 32 L.Ed.2d 222.) "The broad language in Counselman relied upon by petitioners was unnecessary to the Court's decision, and cannot be considered binding authority." (92 S.Ct. 1662, 32 L.Ed.2d 223.)

(c) By implication, Murphy v. Waterfront Com. (1964) 378 U.S. 52, 84 S.Ct. 1594, 12 L.Ed.2d 678, supra, §469, supports the view that use and derivative use immunity are sufficient to meet constitutional objections. "Since the privilege is fully applicable and its scope is the same whether invoked in a state or in a federal jurisdiction, the Murphy conclusion that a prohibition on use and derivative use secures a witness' Fifth Amendment privilege against infringement by the Federal Government demonstrates that immunity from use and derivative use is coextensive with the scope of the privilege." (92 S.Ct. 1664, 32 L.Ed.2d 225.)

(d) Despite arguments that compelled testimony will be used in subtle ways to the witness' disadvantage, the statute provides a sweeping proscription against any use, direct or indirect, of the testimony. This total prohibition provides a comprehensive safeguard which bars investigatory leads and the focusing of an investigation on the witness. (92 S.Ct. 1664, 32 L.Ed.2d 226.) Once a defendant demonstrates that he or she has testified under a grant of immunity, the prosecution must show that its evidence is not tainted and must establish that it had an independent legitimate source for the disputed evidence. "This burden of proof, which we reaffirm as appropriate, is not limited to a negation of taint; rather, it imposes on the prosecution the affirmative duty to prove that the evidence it proposes to use is derived from a legitimate source wholly independent of the compelled testimony." (92 S.Ct. 1665, 32 L.Ed.2d 226.) "One raising a claim under this statute need only show that he testified under a grant of immunity in order to shift to the government the heavy burden of proving that all of the evidence it proposes to use was derived from legitimate independent sources." (92 S.Ct. 1665, 32 L.Ed.2d 227.) This is analogous to cases where a coerced confession is involved. (92 S.Ct. 1665, 32 L.Ed.2d 227.)

Later cases are to the same effect. (See Zicarelli v. New Jersey State Com. of Investigation (1972) 406 U.S. 472, 92 S.Ct. 1670, 1674, 32 L.Ed.2d 234, 238 [state statute granting use and derivative use immunity only for "responsive" answers upheld; Kastigar controlling]; People v. Gwillim (1990) 223 C.A.3d 1254, 1272, 1274, 274 C.R. 415 [record established that district attorney's decision to prosecute police officer for sexual offenses and victim's decision to testify were based on sources independent of officer's immunized statement]; People v. Cooke (1993) 16 C.A.4th 1361, 1371, 20 C.R.2d 506, supra, §472 [trial court had no duty to grant judicial use immunity to third-party witness to vindicate defendant's due process rights]; and see 86 Harv. L. Rev. 181; 6 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 350; 46 So. Cal. L. Rev. 202 [suggesting that "half loaf" of use immunity is not enough constitutional protection]; 48 So. Cal. L. Rev. 92 [immunity in bankruptcy proceedings]; 1971/72 A.S. 59; 1973/74 A.S. 343; 29 A.L.R.5th 1 [use or transactional immunity].) (On 1996 amendment to P.C. 1324 authorizing prosecution to request transactional or use immunity, see infra, §489.)

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 479

[§ 479] Transactional Immunity.

Prior to 1996, P.C. 1324 granted only transactional immunity in California. (On 1996 amendment to P.C. 1324 authorizing prosecution to request transactional or use immunity, see infra, §489.) In People v. Lawrence (1972) 25 C.A.3d 498, 102 C.R. 16, defendant had been granted transactional immunity in the federal court to testify about F's drug smuggling operations. He contended that the immunity extended to the state trial in which he was convicted of conspiracy to murder H, who had double-crossed F in a smuggling venture. Held, the prosecution and conviction were proper.

(a) Defendant's testimony in the federal trial was limited to his association with F's organization between January and March 1968, and concerned only smuggling activities. "The conspiracy to murder Hudson was not known to the authorities at that time. No reference was ever made to Hudson's disappearance in the federal action. Defendant requested immunity only as to the killing of one 'Joe Cole,' and his participation in hauling two shipments of marijuana to San Francisco. The conspiracy to kill Hudson was clearly a separate transaction." (25 C.A.3d 509.)

(b) Defendant was compelled in the federal trial to testify that he used the alias "John Prescott." He therefore argued that the state could not ask any witness at his state trial whether he had used that alias. But the claim of use immunity protection also must fail because use immunity covers testimony that is substantially connected with the crime or that constitutes links in the chain of evidence against a defendant. (25 C.A.3d 509.) Although it was necessary here to establish that defendant used a particular alias during the conspiracy to murder Hudson, this was merely a matter of identification. "It is no more a link in the chain of evidence than if defendant had been asked what his name was. His use of an alias did not concern the crimes of conspiracy or smuggling in any substantial way." (25 C.A.3d 510.) The testimony did not alter the "position" between defendant and the government with respect to the state charge. (25 C.A.3d 510.)

[§ 480] Immunity Following Guilty Plea.

In People v. Stewart (1969) 1 C.A.3d 339, 81 C.R. 562, defendant pleaded guilty and was then granted immunity to compel him to testify against his codefendant. After he did so, he was sentenced to state prison. Held, this was proper; the punishment was not brought about by any evidence he produced at the trial. "Sentence was imposed solely by reason of his prior voluntary plea of guilty to the charge of robbery. Such a plea, of course, removed appellant from the protection against self-incrimination afforded by the Fifth Amendment ... and from the purview of section 1324 of the Penal Code insofar as it related to that particular offense. The plea of guilty was an admission of every element of the offense charged. ... Appellant was not subjected to any additional prosecution or penalty as the record reflects that the remaining three counts charged against him were properly dismissed by the court." (1 C.A.3d 343.) Defense counsel had indicated there was no legal cause why sentence should not have been imposed. "No one including the appellant was misled by the grant of immunity, no promises of any nature had been made, and there is no suggestion that he or his counsel entertained a belief that no punishment would be imposed for the offense of robbery of which appellant had been convicted by plea. The trial court retained jurisdiction to sentence appellant and did so after an appropriate hearing." (1 C.A.3d 343.)

4. Immunity of Witness.

c. Immunity Coextensive With Privilege.

5. Immunity Following Trial on Merits.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 481

[§ 481] Immunity Following Trial on Merits.

In re Tracy L. (1992) 10 C.A.4th 1454, 13 C.R.2d 593, involved a Welf.C. 602 petition charging Tracy with two counts of forcible rape. After the juvenile court had sustained the petition on both counts and sentenced Tracy to the Youth Authority, Tracy was called to testify at the trial of his two adult coparticipants. Although he had testified at the Welf.C. 602 proceeding, Tracy refused to testify at the coparticipants' trial until he was granted immunity under P.C. 1324. During the pendency of the appeal in the Welf.C. 602 proceeding, Tracy filed a habeas corpus petition, arguing that because he had been given immunity from further prosecution for the offenses which were on appeal, the appeal was moot and the Court of Appeal had jurisdiction only to remand with directions to dismiss the charges. Held, petition denied.

(a) P.C. 1324 is based on the federal Compulsory Testimony Act of 1893, which has been construed by the United States Supreme Court as granting immunity only from future prosecution. (10 C.A.4th 1464, citing Brown v. Walker (1896) 161 U.S. 591, 16 S.Ct. 644, 40 L.Ed. 819, Ullmann v. United States (1956) 350 U.S. 422, 76 S.Ct. 497, 100 L.Ed. 511, and Katz v. United States (1967) 389 U.S. 347, 88 S.Ct. 507, 19 L.Ed.2d 576, 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, §333.) Thus, it must be presumed that the Legislature intended to adopt this construction when it enacted P.C. 1324. (10 C.A.4th 1464.)

(b) The conclusion that P.C. 1324 grants immunity only from future prosecution is supported by its language granting immunity "for or on account of" any fact or act concerning which the witness was required to testify or produce evidence. Because "for or on account of" connotes a causal relationship, where no such relationship exists between the compelled testimony and the prosecution, penalty or forfeiture, P.C. 1324 does not apply. No such relationship exists here because Tracy was convicted by evidence adduced at his own trial, not by the testimony he was compelled to give at the coparticipants' trial. (10 C.A.4th 1465; for 1996 amendment of P.C. 1324 changing quoted language, see infra, §489.)

(c) People v. Stewart (1969) 1 C.A.3d 339, 81 C.R. 562, supra, §480, which held that a guilty plea waived the defendant's privilege against self-incrimination and rendered P.C. 1324 inapplicable, is persuasive here even though Tracy's conviction resulted from a trial rather than a guilty plea. In each case, the defendant's guilt was determined prior to the compelled testimony and on the basis of evidence totally independent of that testimony. (10 C.A.4th 1465.) By taking the stand in the Welf.C. 602 proceeding, Tracy waived his privilege against self-incrimination, and hence cannot now be allowed to invoke the P.C. 1324 immunity defense for testifying on the same matter in his coparticipants' trial for the same crimes. (10 C.A.4th 1465.)

(d) People v. Lopez (1980) 110 C.A.3d 1010, 168 C.R. 378, infra, §500, which held that a convicted defendant who appealed could not be compelled to testify at a codefendant's trial pending the appeal, is distinguishable. Because that decision never raised or discussed the issue whether the defendant could have been compelled to testify in exchange for P.C. 1324 immunity, it has no application here. (10 C.A.4th 1466.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

C. Privilege of Witness in Any Proceeding.

4. Immunity of Witness.

d. Federal Statutes.

2. Immunity of Witnesses Act.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 483

[§ 483] Immunity of Witnesses Act.

The former Compulsory Testimony Act of 1954 (supra, §482) was replaced by a new Immunity of Witnesses Act in 1970. (18 U.S.C., §6001 et seq.) The primary distinction between the two statutes is that the new Act substitutes use immunity for transactional immunity. The Act prohibits the use in any criminal case of compelled "testimony or other information ... (or any information directly or indirectly derived from such testimony or other information)." (18 U.S.C., §6002; see Kastigar v. United States (1972) 406 U.S. 441, 92 S.Ct. 1653, 32 L.Ed.2d 212, supra, §478 [holding use immunity coextensive with privilege against self-incrimination]; Pillsbury Co. v. Conboy (1983) 459 U.S. 248, 103 S.Ct. 608, 610, 74 L.Ed.2d 430, 435 [civil deposition testimony closely tracking prior immunized grand jury testimony is not, under 18 U.S.C., §6002, "information directly or indirectly derived" from the immunized testimony; hence, it is usable in a criminal case, and the deponent may assert his or her privilege against self-incrimination]; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2283; 1984 A.S. 367 [Pillsbury Co. v. Conboy].) (On refusal of immunized witness to testify as contempt, see United States v. Wilson (1975) 421 U.S. 309, 95 S.Ct. 1802, 44 L.Ed.2d 186.)

Other significant features of the Act, most of which closely parallel the former Act, are:

(1) It applies in a "proceeding before or ancillary to" either house of Congress or a Congressional committee, or a court, grand jury or agency of the United States. (18 U.S.C., §6002; see 45 Stanf. L. Rev. 229.)

(2) The witness must claim the privilege. (18 U.S.C., §6002; see 70 Harv. L. Rev. 113.)

(3) The immunity is given only when the testimony is compelled. (18 U.S.C., §6002; see 70 Harv. L. Rev. 114.)

(4) The immunity is not automatic; it is conferred on order of the court or agency after compliance with provisions specifying the parties who may request the order (e.g., United States Attorney, House or committee member), and those who must approve the request (e.g., Attorney General, majority of House, two-thirds of House committee). (18 U.S.C., §6003 et seq.)

(5) Before an order may be requested by a United States Attorney (in court and grand jury proceedings), or issued by an agency (in administrative proceedings), the Attorney or agency must find that the testimony is necessary to the public interest and that the individual has exercised, or is likely to exercise, his or her privilege against self-incrimination. (18 U.S.C., §§6003, 6004.)

(6) The immunized testimony may be used in a "prosecution for perjury, giving a false statement, or otherwise failing to comply with the order." (18 U.S.C., §6002; see United States v. Apfelbaum (1980) 445 U.S. 115, 100 S.Ct. 948, 955, 957, 63 L.Ed.2d 250, 260, 263; 10 Cal. Western L. Rev. 428.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

C. Privilege of Witness in Any Proceeding.

4. Immunity of Witness.

e. Specific California Statutes.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 484

[§ 484] Specific California Statutes.

Some of California's former specific immunity statutes were repealed in 1953 when the general section (P.C. 1324, infra, §485) was enacted. (On the former statutes, see In re Critchlow (1938) 11 C.2d 751, 756, 81 P.2d 966 [gaming law]; In re Williams (1932) 127 C.A. 424, 431, 16 P.2d 172 [same]; Ex parte Cohen (1894) 104 C. 524, 530, 38 P. 364 [purity of election law].)

Other specific immunity grants remain. For example, under Govt.C. 9410(a), a witness compelled to testify before the Legislature or a legislative committee cannot be held to answer criminally or be subject to a penalty or forfeiture "for any fact or act touching which he or she is required to testify." (See McLain v. Superior Court (1950) 99 C.A.2d 109, 117, 221 P.2d 300 [Senate Interim Committee on Social Welfare, investigating alleged bribery of assemblyman]; In re Connolly (1936) 16 C.A.2d 709, 712, 61 P.2d 490.) And immunity may be granted in a hearing before the corporation commissioner. (Corp.C. 25531(e); see People v. White (1932) 124 C.A. 548, 555, 12 P.2d 1078.) (On immunity in hearing before State Water Resources Board, see Water C. 1106.)

In People v. King (1967) 66 C.2d 633, 58 C.R. 571, 427 P.2d 171, the court, applying Ins.C. 12924, a typical specific statute, laid down three rules. K and H were officers of a corporation. The Insurance Commissioner conducted an investigation and was appointed conservator. Purporting to act under Ins.C. 1020, he obtained a court order directing defendants to bring their records and testify before him relating to the corporate affairs. K did not appear, H appeared and claimed privilege, contempt proceedings were instituted, and thereafter both defendants appeared before the commissioner and voluntarily gave testimony. This testimony was the basis of an indictment for conspiracy to commit grand theft. Held, order granting motion to set aside indictment affirmed; their testimony rendered them immune.

(a) Mistaken assertion of authority by an administrative officer does not nullify a statutory immunity. The state's position was that defendants were not compelled by subpoena issued under Ins.C. 12924, the immunity statute, but by court order under Ins.C. 1020. But Ins.C. 1020 contains no authority for compelling testimony; the only authority is in Ins.C. 12924. Hence, despite the unusual formal steps, in substance the commissioner exercised an authority given only by Ins.C. 12924, and this carried with it the immunity. (66 C.2d 637.)

(b) There was no need to make an express claim of the privilege. Unless a statute requires a claim, immunity results despite the failure to assert the privilege at the administrative hearing. (66 C.2d 642.) In re Connolly, supra, was distinguished as involving volunteered testimony, and People v. Eiseman (1926) 78 C.A. 223, 250, 248 P. 716, was disapproved on this point. (66 C.2d 643.)

(c) Prior similar testimony did not nullify the immunity. During the contempt proceedings, defendant H testified voluntarily to the same matters which were later testified to before the commissioner. If the commissioner had stopped at this point, no immunity would have resulted. But when the commissioner thereafter proceeded under Ins.C. 12924, that statute applied. "[A]nd if in proceeding the commissioner was not successful in obtaining information not already available to him, the immunity nevertheless attached as to all matters concerning which the commissioner did inquire. The grant of immunity does not turn on the product but rather the fact of the inquiry." (66 C.2d 644.)

The second holding of the King case, that there was no need to make an express claim of the privilege (see supra), was nullified as to proceedings under Ins.C. 12924 by a 1969 amendment. The witness may now get immunity only "after validly claiming his privilege against self-incrimination."

King was followed in Escamilla v. Superior Court (1969) 271 C.A.2d 730, 76 C.R. 704. Mrs. E and her husband worked for a market. Mrs. E was arrested and charged with grand theft from their employer, and Mr. E was then discharged. He applied for unemployment insurance, and the employer objected, asserting that he knew of his wife's thefts. In the hearing before a referee of the Unemployment Insurance Appeals Board, Mrs. E voluntarily appeared without subpoena and with her attorney. The husband's attorney called her to the stand, asked her incriminating questions about the thefts, and her attorney claimed the self-incrimination privilege. The referee, acting under Unemp.Ins.C. 1955, ordered her to answer, and she did. Thereafter she sought prohibition to restrain the superior court from proceeding with her criminal trial. Held, writ granted; she had received complete immunity from prosecution.

The prosecution contended that where a criminal action is pending in the superior court, a hearing officer for a state agency has no power to grant immunity to the accused, thereby in effect quashing the criminal charge. The court's answer was that the Legislature may delegate such power to a hearing officer to act either before or after filing of criminal charges, and that Unemp.Ins.C. 1955 does so. (271 C.A.2d 734.)

A strong dissenting opinion attacks the proceeding as a successful attempt to obtain an "immunity bath." The issue of the wife's theft was not involved in the husband's unemployment compensation claim; the two lawyers brought the privilege into play by asking irrelevant questions; Mrs. E was not forced to appear to testify, and the referee did not have the right to compel her to answer--that was for the court (Unemp.Ins.C. 1954); also, the district attorney agreed in open court not to use the admissions by Mrs. E at the hearing.

Testimony before Legislature: The portion of Govt.C. 9410(a) quoted in the text was amended in 2003 to read: "for any fact or act touching upon either testimony that he or she was so compelled to provide, or documents or other materials that he or she was so compelled to produce."

[§ 485] Nature and Scope.

P.C. 1324 establishes a broad power to grant immunity in "any felony proceeding or in any investigation or proceeding before a grand jury for any felony offense." In substance and procedure, the section is similar in many respects to the original federal act, but the revised federal act differs materially from the California statute. ##### 4. Immunity of Witness.

f. General California Statute.

2. Claim of Privilege.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 486

[§ 486] Claim of Privilege.

P.C. 1324 applies "if a person refuses to answer a question or produce evidence of any other kind on the ground that he or she may be incriminated thereby."

There is considerable uncertainty under some statutes as to whether the witness must claim the privilege. (See People v. White (1932) 124 C.A. 548, 555, 12 P.2d 1078 [Corp.C. 25354; claim of privilege necessary]; In re Connolly (1936) 16 C.A.2d 709, 712, 61 P.2d 490 [witness answered nonincriminatory questions without objection, then voluntarily offered incriminating evidence; no immunity]; McLain v. Superior Court (1950) 99 C.A.2d 109, 117, 221 P.2d 300 [under Govt.C. 9410, neither claim of privilege nor of immunity necessary]; 25 Cal. L. Rev. 622; 10 So. Cal. L. Rev. 344; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2282.) P.C. 1324 makes it clear that the privilege must be claimed so that the prosecutor will have notice and an opportunity to elect. (See In re Connolly, supra, 16 C.A.2d 717.)

It has also been held that a person who voluntarily testifies for the defendant in a criminal trial does not gain immunity from prosecution for disclosures which incriminate himself or herself. (In re Petraeus (1939) 12 C.2d 579, 582, 86 P.2d 343; see 13 So. Cal. L. Rev. 160.)

(1) Prosecutor's Request. The statute is invoked "if the district attorney of the county or any other prosecuting agency in writing requests the court, in and for that county, to order that person to answer the question or produce the evidence." (P.C. 1324; see In re Weber (1974) 11 C.3d 703, 719, 114 C.R. 429, 523 P.2d 229 [grant of immunity is properly conditioned on request of prosecutor because immunity is part of charging process, and it is for the prosecutor to decide what, if any, crime is to be charged]; People v. Traylor (1972) 23 C.A.3d 323, 332, 100 C.R. 116 [vesting power to request immunity solely in prosecutor does not deprive defendant of equal protection of the laws]; People v. DeFreitas (1983) 140 C.A.3d 835, 839, 189 C.R. 814 [applying Traylor reasoning to defendant's request for use immunity for his wife]; People v. Hunter (1989) 49 C.3d 957, 973, 264 C.R. 367, 782 P.2d 608, supra, §472 [defendant right to request immunity for defense witnesses]; 30 Stanf. L. Rev. 1211 [same]; 91 *Harv. L. (2) Hearing and Determination. A judge of the court then sets a time for hearing and issues an order to show cause.

"[T]he court shall order the question answered or the evidence produced unless it finds that to do so would be clearly contrary to the public interest, or could subject the witness to a criminal prosecution in another jurisdiction." (P.C. 1324.)

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 488

[§ 488] Effect of Noncompliance.

(1) Prosecutor Estopped From Arguing Noncompliance. Even though P.C. 1324 is not followed, the prosecution may be estopped from arguing that noncompliance bars a valid grant of immunity. In People v. Brunner (1973) 32 C.A.3d 908, 108 C.R. 501, defendant had been promised immunity for her testimony about a murder, but then gave evasive, inconsistent and contradictory testimony and statements during several related trials. Relying on the fact that the immunity grant did not follow statutory procedure, the prosecutor obtained her indictment for the murder about which she had been testifying. Held, the trial judge properly dismissed the indictment. "It would be anomalous to permit the People, represented by the district attorney, to argue that an earlier agreement entered into by the district attorney was void for lack of compliance with a statute of whose existence the district attorney must have been aware." (32 C.A.3d 915.) As to the prosecution claim that defendant had not fulfilled her part of the bargain, and therefore was not entitled to its benefits, the answer is that the prosecution did get the hoped for results through her testimony (some of which was introduced as prior inconsistent statements); "we conclude, albeit somewhat pragmatically, that enough of the bargain was kept to make it operative." (32 C.A.3d 916.)

(2) Prosecutor's Noncompliance Invalidates Grant of Immunity. In People v. Superior Court (Perry) (1989) 213 C.A.3d 536, 261 C.R. 665, the district attorney wrote attorneys for prospective grand jury witnesses that it had granted them "limited use immunity" in expectation of their forthcoming testimony. The attorney responded that his clients would assert their Fifth Amendment rights notwithstanding the prosecution's grant of immunity, and, at the scheduled grand jury hearing, they did so. The prosecution filed a motion to compel testimony in the superior court. The trial judge denied the motion, ruling that an order to compel testimony must be accompanied by a grant of transactional immunity as then provided in P.C. 1324. (On 1996 amendment authorizing prosecution to request transactional or use immunity, see infra, §489). Held, order affirmed.

(a) Although a district attorney is entitled to offer immunity outside P.C. 1324, such an offer is not enforceable until it has been accepted or relied upon. (213 C.A.3d 538, 540, citing Brunner.) The statement in People v. Superior Court (Crook) (1978) 83 C.A.3d 335, 147 C.R. 856, that a district attorney has inherent power to grant immunity without complying with P.C. 1324, is based on a misinterpretation of the facts and holding in People v. Label (1974) 43 C.A.3d 766, 119 C.R. 522, infra, §491. The trial judge in Label ordered the immunity, and the court held only that the prosecutor has the inherent authority to initiate a request. (213 C.A.3d 539.)

(b) Immunity is a creature of statute and its terms have been defined by the Legislature in P.C. 1324. Hence, the trial judge correctly ruled that an order to compel testimony must be accompanied by a grant of transactional immunity as then provided in P.C. 1324. (213 C.A.3d 540, 541, following People v. Campbell (1982) 137 C.A.3d 867, 187 C.R. 340, infra, §489.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

C. Privilege of Witness in Any Proceeding.

4. Immunity of Witness.

f. General California Statute.

4. Transactional or Use Immunity.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 489

[§ 489] Transactional or Use Immunity.

(1) Original Statute. As originally enacted, P.C. 1324 expressly granted only transactional immunity. In People v. Campbell (1982) 137 C.A.3d 867, 187 C.R. 340, a defendant charged with three narcotics offenses invoked his Fifth Amendment privilege when called as a witness in a felony assault case. The prosecution invoked P.C. 1324, and the trial judge's grant of immunity specified that defendant's testimony (which was related to the narcotics offenses) would not be used against him in any other prosecution. Defendant was later convicted of the narcotics offenses even though his immunized testimony was not used. Held, reversed; the version of P.C. 1324 then in effect was a transactional immunity statute, and it precludes prosecution for any offense related to the immunized testimony.

(a) Although use immunity was constitutionally sanctioned in Kastigar v. United States (1972) 406 U.S. 441, 92 S.Ct. 1653, 32 L.Ed.2d 212, supra, §478, and has been judicially granted in the absence of an express statutory immunity, the present felony case was governed by P.C. 1324. Thus, the trial judge had no authority to "judicially substitute the constitutionally permissible 'use' immunity for section 1324's express grant of transactional immunity." (137 C.A.3d 876.)

(b) "The Legislature has not acted, and need not act, to narrow the grant of immunity to present constitutional limits." (137 C.A.3d 876.) (See People v. Superior Court (Perry) (1989) 213 C.A.3d 536, 540, 261 C.R. 665, supra, §488.)

(2) 1996 Amendment. The Legislature ultimately decided to expand the scope of immunity authorized by P.C. 1324 and amended it in 1996 to make either transactional or use immunity available. The amended statute now states that "[a]fter complying, and if, but for this section, he or she would have been privileged to withhold the answer given or the evidence produced by him or her, no testimony or other information compelled under the order or any information directly or indirectly derived from the testimony or other information may be used against the witness in any criminal case." The following language was also added: "Nothing in this section shall prohibit the district attorney or any other prosecuting agency from requesting an order granting use immunity or transactional immunity to a witness compelled to give testimony or produce evidence." (See 28 Pacific L. J. 722.)

C. Privilege of Witness in Any Proceeding.

5. No Immunity From Perjury or Contempt.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 490

[§ 490] No Immunity From Perjury or Contempt.

The witness "may nevertheless be prosecuted or subjected to penalty or forfeiture for any perjury, false swearing or contempt committed in answering, or failing to answer, or in producing, or failing to produce, evidence in accordance with the order." (P.C. 1324.) In People v. Hathcock (1971) 17 C.A.3d 646, 95 C.R. 221, defendant was convicted of committing perjury at her ex-husband's second trial for murder. Prior to the first murder trial, defendant received a grant of immunity from prosecution for any offense arising from the murder. She then gave the district attorney a written statement implicating her former husband in the killing and testified as a witness for the prosecution, but that trial ended in a mistrial. At the second murder trial, defendant's testimony again implicated her ex-husband. When the prosecutor, apparently anticipating an attack on her credibility, asked if she had told the husband's attorney that he had not been involved, she answered yes. Questioned about whether she had told defense counsel the truth, she said, "Your Honor, I can't answer that question truthfully. May I--I'll have a perjury charge if I do." Ultimately, however, she testified on cross-examination that she knew her former husband had not committed the homicide. On redirect examination, she stated, "Because he wasn't there." Her perjury conviction was based on this last answer. The pivotal question on her appeal was this: if a witness has testified at a criminal trial after a grant of immunity, may she later assert the privilege against self-incrimination and refuse to answer a relevant question on the ground that the answer might tend to incriminate her for the crime of perjury committed at that very trial? Held, no; conviction affirmed:

"It is axiomatic that a person who has been called to testify as a witness at a trial, and who has sworn to tell the truth, is morally and legally bound to do so. It follows, by necessary implication, that a witness who testifies at a trial waives his privilege against self-incrimination as to any question which is thereafter asked to test the credulity of his testimony." (17 C.A.3d 649.) A contrary rule would lead to unconscionable results by interfering with a defendant's rights of confrontation and cross-examination. "Furthermore, a rule which would permit a witness who has been granted immunity under section 1324, and who has testified, to assert the privilege against self-incrimination in order to refuse to answer a question designed to test the credulity of his testimony would invite treachery as well as perjury." (17 C.A.3d 649.)

The court also pointed out that the issue was similar to that presented when a defendant in a criminal trial voluntarily testifies in his or her own defense. Though still protected by the Fifth Amendment, the defendant must nevertheless answer all cross-examination questions to explain, clarify, or refute any reasonable or logical inference arising from his or her testimony. (17 C.A.3d 649.) A witness who has derived the benefits of immunity and who has testified "must be prepared to answer relevant probative questions." (17 C.A.3d 650.)

6. Limited Grant of Immunity.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 491

[§ 491] Limited Grant of Immunity.

In People v. Label (1974) 43 C.A.3d 766, 119 C.R. 522, defendant was charged with having committed a drug offense on November 4, 1972. The chief prosecution witness, who had been arrested on November 6th, was given immunity for drug offenses for the period of November 3 to 6, 1972. As a result, she incriminated defendant on the key date but refused, on self-incrimination grounds, to testify about her own drug involvement at times other than the period protected by the immunity. Defendant contended that the limited immunity resulted in limited cross-examination, which deprived him of his full confrontation rights. Held, no error. "We are of the opinion that to require a prosecuting attorney to grant blanket immunity for any and all criminal acts as the price of testimony under section 1324 would completely frustrate the purpose of said section. We see no impropriety in limiting the immunity to designated crimes committed within a specified period of time. It follows that the immunized witness may not be compelled to testify as to possible criminal involvement at other times. As to such involvement, any witness stands in the same position as any other witness and a defendant's right to cross-examination is limited by Evidence Code section 940 and 787. Neither case authority, constitutional provision or statute cited by appellant supports the proposition that the salutary latitude of cross-examination rights granted to defendants in criminal cases licenses an inquiry into unimmunized crimes or diminishes Fifth Amendment privileges and other statutory protection accorded to all witnesses." (43 C.A.3d 774.) (See People v. Superior Court (Crook) (1978) 83 C.A.3d 335, 341, 147 C.R. 856 [grant of limited immunity, though not formalized pursuant to P.C. 1324, was within inherent power of prosecuting authority]; *People v. ### XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

C. Privilege of Witness in Any Proceeding.

4. Immunity of Witness.

f. General California Statute.

7. Conditional Immunity to Accomplice.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 492

[§ 492] Conditional Immunity to Accomplice.

In People v. Medina (1974) 41 C.A.3d 438, 116 C.R. 133, two teenage girls were murdered following a beach party. Three alleged accomplices of defendants were called as witnesses and ordered under P.C. 1324 to answer questions and produce evidence which was material, competent and relevant. Each order was based on the witness' signed waiver, stating that his or her refusal to testify was based on self-incrimination grounds, that the witness waived a show-cause order and a hearing, and that the witness consented to issuance of the order compelling testimony. The order provided that the witness would not be prosecuted or subject to penalty or forfeiture for anything he or she was required to answer or produce. But the immunity was conditional, i.e., that the witness not materially or substantially change the testimony from the tape-recorded statement already given to law enforcement officers, and not resort to silence, whether or not under order of contempt, and not feign lapse of memory affecting information given in the previously recorded statement. Otherwise, the immunity order was void and of no effect.

At the trial, defendants contended that each witness given conditional immunity was an accomplice liable to prosecution for the murders and that the threat contained in the conditional immunity orders denied defendants any effective cross-examination. Their objections were overruled. Held, defendants were deprived of their fundamental right to a fair trial. The immune witnesses were, on the evidence, aiders and abettors, and therefore principals, of any rape committed against the victims in the course of a felony-murder, and thus would have been equally guilty of the homicides. The effect of the conditional immunity was that each witness was placed by the court in a position of dire peril. "If his testimony 'materially or substantially' differed from the prior recorded statement he became liable to prosecution for first degree murder and, having disclosed his participation, stood little chance of escaping conviction." (41 C.A.3d 452.)

Many later cases have discussed the Medina decision. (See People v. Sepeda (1977) 66 C.A.3d 700, 705, 136 C.R. 119 [disapproving police arrangement to pay narcotics informant only if he testified in accordance with his statements to police, but affirming convictions because informant's testimony was amply corroborated; distinguishing Medina]; People v. Harpool (1984) 155 C.A.3d 877, 884, 202 C.R. 467 [agreement, unlike that in Medina, had only one condition; that witness tell the truth]; People v. Bittaker (1989) 48 C.3d 1046, 1094, 259 C.R. 630, 774 P.2d 659 [following Medina; disapproving plea bargain language purporting to give district attorney, and not court, discretion to determine whether codefendant testified truthfully, but finding no error and no risk codefendant would be induced to give false testimony]; People v. St. Joseph (1990) 226 C.A.3d 289, 299, 276 C.R. 498 [grant of immunity to witness for

C. Privilege of Witness in Any Proceeding.

4. Immunity of Witness.

g. Agreement for Immunity.

1. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 493

[§ 493] In General.

In People v. Brunner (1973) 32 C.A.3d 908, 108 C.R. 501, supra, §488, the court distinguished two situations:

(a) A witness who is not within the target area of the pending investigation or prosecution but who refuses to testify or to produce evidence on the ground of possible incrimination. In these instances, the grant of immunity follows a relatively straightforward course and may be effected by a relatively simple procedure because "the prosecution is primarily concerned with securing an answer and only secondarily concerned with the nature of the answer, either because only one answer is possible or because the sanction of a perjury prosecution furnishes a sufficient guaranty of the truth of the witness's answer." (32 C.A.3d 912.)

(b) A witness who is within the target area, typically when he or she is a party to a multiparty crime, but who has been less culpable than others who were involved and has evidence believed necessary for prosecution of the witness' fellow wrongdoers. Under these circumstances, the prosecutor may strike a bargain with the lesser offender to exchange immunity for testimony despite the dangers involved. The first danger comes from the treacherous witness who, after receiving immunity, does not testify in the manner the witness said he or she would or refuses to testify beyond a certain point. The other danger is that a witness may be so influenced by hopes and fears that he or she will promise to testify to anything desired by the prosecution to obtain a grant of immunity; by dangling the promised immunity, the prosecutor can put the words he wishes into the witness' mouth. (32 C.A.3d 914.)

"These twin dangers point up the desirability for court approval of immunity bargains with target-area witnesses. Properly used, section 1324 is broad enough to protect the prosecutor against double-dealing and enable him to make an enforceable agreement with the most duplicitous witness. Properly used, the section also protects the witness against prosecution pressure to color existing or create additional testimony in order to obtain previously promised immunity. The statute establishes a procedure under which the bargain between prosecutor and witness, each to perform certain acts in the future, can be made a matter of record so that dishonesty, equivocation, and misunderstanding may be minimized. In our view whenever target-area witnesses have been promised immunity in return for their promise to testify, the prosecutor's request for court approval should set out the terms of the agreement, the subject-matter of the testimony, the proceedings at which it will be given, the representations of the witness (or his counsel) as to the specific content of his testimony, and the promise of the witness to testify fully and truthfully in return for the promised grant of immunity. On court approval of the agreement immunity will be granted the witness after he has complied with the representations of the agreement." (32 C.A.3d 914.) The terms of the promise of immunity should appear clearly on the record and be supported by court order, thus enabling an impartial judicial officer to review the propriety of the bargain. (32 C.A.3d 914.)

The court recognized that promise of immunity in exchange for particular testimony leaves a witness vulnerable to the charge that his or her testimony has been bought. "Yet while these factors bear heavily on the weight to be given the witness's testimony, they do not impinge upon the validity of the bargain itself." (32 C.A.3d 915; but see People v. Medina (1974) 41 C.A.3d 438, 456, 116 C.R. 133, supra, §492 [statement in Brunner as to exchange of immunity for particular testimony was dictum and in no way sanctions condition requiring court testimony to coincide with previously given statements]; and see People v. Morris (1991) 53 C.3d 152, 192, 279 C.R. 720, 807 P.2d 949 [fact that attorney who negotiated immunity agreement for accomplice-witness shortly thereafter became District Attorney did not affect agreement's validity, absent evidence that attorney could have unfairly influenced defendant's trial]; 21 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 1 [informal immunity agreements made by prosecutors without going through steps mandated by statute]; 32 A.L.R.4th 990 [enforceability of agreement not to prosecute if accused would help in criminal investigation or would become witness against others].)

4. Immunity of Witness.

g. Agreement for Immunity.

2. Misdemeanor Proceeding.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 494

[§ 494] Misdemeanor Proceeding.

The usual statute, such as P.C. 1324 (supra, §485 et seq.), is designed to compel the witness to testify, gives the witness immunity if he or she complies, and subjects the witness to punishment for contempt if he or she refuses.

However, P.C. 1324.1 allows a witness to volunteer testimony in return for immunity as follows:

(1) Misdemeanor Proceeding. The section applies "[i]n any misdemeanor proceeding in any court."

(2) Written Agreement. After claiming privilege, the witness "may agree in writing" with the district attorney or city prosecutor "to testify voluntarily."

(3) Court Approval of Agreement. On written request of the prosecutor, the judge "shall approve" the agreement unless the judge "finds that to do so would be clearly contrary to the public interest."

The scope and limitations of the immunity are stated in terms similar to those in P.C. 1324, but the sanction for noncompliance is limited: Since there is no order compelling the witness to testify, a witness who refuses after agreeing merely loses the immunity; the witness may be prosecuted "in the same manner and to the same extent as he would be ... but for this section."

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

- C. Privilege of Witness in Any Proceeding.
- 5. Determination of Incriminating Character.
  - a. Burden of Proof.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 495

[§ 495] Burden of Proof.

If the question is one which is incriminatory on its face, no difficulty is presented in upholding the privilege. (See supra, §464.) But if the question does not clearly call for an incriminating answer, the witness has no unqualified right to assert the danger of incrimination and refuse to answer. The court must determine the danger of incrimination, and rule in favor of or against the privilege. (See Model C., Rule 204, Comment; 1 McCormick 5th, §133; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2271; supra, §466.)

Ev.C. 404 codifies this rule: "[T]he person claiming the privilege has the burden of showing that the proffered evidence might incriminate him." (See Cohen v. Superior Court (1959) 173 C.A.2d 61, 68, 343 P.2d 286; Rosato v. Superior Court (1975) 51 C.A.3d 190, 218, 124 C.R. 427, citing the text [comparing newsperson's claim of privilege with privilege against self-incrimination].) (For the test, see infra, §496.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

In Fisher v. Gibson (2001) 90 C.A.4th 275, 109 C.R.2d 145, the Department of Corporations filed an action against a company (PCO) that allegedly conducted a fraudulent investment scheme. A receiver was appointed for PCO, and the receiver sued defendant and his company, alleging that PCO had transferred to defendant funds supplied by the defrauded investors. The receiver moved for summary judgment or summary adjudication on causes of action seeking to set aside various payments to defendant by PCO. In arguing that the motion should be denied, stayed, or continued, defendant claimed that he could not present evidence on issues pertinent to the receiver's causes of action because he was the target of a continuing grand jury investigation and was therefore entitled to the protection of the self-incrimination privilege. In granting summary adjudication, the trial judge ruled that defendant had not demonstrated that he was the target of a criminal investigation, or that "facts essential to justify opposition may exist, but cannot, for reasons stated, then be presented" within the meaning of C.C.P. 437c(h) (see 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, §226). Held, affirmed. Defendant did not make a factual showing in opposition to the motion that he faced potential parallel criminal prosecution. Further, even if the threat of criminal prosecution could be assumed from the evidentiary showing made in support of the motion, or other documents in the court's file, that possibility standing alone could not suffice to require that the motion be continued. Under C.C.P. 437c(h), defendant was required to make a showing sufficient to allow the court to conclude that (1) "facts necessary to oppose the motion might exist" but (2) "could not then be presented because of the proper assertion of the privilege. Appellant made no evidentiary offer in that regard. Appellant's position, in essence, was that the plaintiff in a civil action could not obtain summary adjudication if the defendant simply asserted the privilege due to a potential parallel criminal proceeding. We find this position to be without merit." (90 C.A.4th 286, 287.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

- C. Privilege of Witness in Any Proceeding.
- 5. Determination of Incriminating Character.
  - b. Test.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 496

[§ 496] Test.

The earliest authoritative statement of the function of the judge in determining this issue was by Marshall, C.J., in the celebrated Burr case, in 1807, quoted in the California case of In re Berman (1930) 105 C.A. 37, 287 P. 125: "When a question is propounded, it belongs to the court to consider and to decide whether any direct answer to it can implicate the witness. If this be decided in the negative, then he may answer it without violating the privilege. ... If a direct answer may criminate himself, then he must be the sole judge what his answer would be. The court cannot participate with him in this judgment, because they cannot decide on the effect of his answer without knowing what it would be; and a disclosure of that fact to the judges would strip him of the privilege. ... It follows ... that if the question be of such a description that an answer to it may or may not criminate the witness, according to the purport of that answer, it must rest with himself, who alone can tell what it would be, to answer the question or not." (105 C.A. 44.)

Later decisions made it clear that the judge looks to all the surrounding circumstances, and has a measure of discretion, in reaching a conclusion. "[I]n substance it is agreed that the court must be satisfied from all the evidence and circumstances, and 'from the implications of the question, in the setting in which it is asked, that a responsive answer to the question or an explanation of why it cannot be answered might be dangerous because injurious exposure would result. ... ' If the court is so satisfied, the claim of the privilege will be accepted without requiring further disclosure." (United States v. Reynolds (1953) 345 U.S. 1, 73 S.Ct. 528, 533, 97 L.Ed. 727, 734, supra, §249; see Hoffman v. United States (1951) 341 U.S. 479, 71 S.Ct. 814, 818, 95 L.Ed. 1118, 1124, supra, §466; Cohen v. Superior Court (1959) 173 C.A.2d 61, 68, 343 P.2d 286, supra, §467.)

Ev.C. 404 states the rule as follows: The evidence is inadmissible unless "it clearly appears to the court" that it "cannot possibly have a tendency to incriminate." The Law Revision Commission Comment observes that the claimant should present information to show the danger of incrimination, but "is not required to produce evidence as such." The judge "must consider the matters disclosed in argument, the implications of the question, the setting in which it is asked, the applicable statute of limitations, and all other relevant factors."

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

C. Privilege of Witness in Any Proceeding.

6. Waiver of Privilege.

a. Waiver Before Trial.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 497

[§ 497] Waiver Before Trial.

The right to assert other privileges may be expressly waived by contract (see supra, §§68, 69), and the same is true of the witness privilege against self-incrimination. (See Hickman v. London Assur. Corp. (1920) 184 C. 524, 529, 195 P. 45 [fire insurance policy]; Fremont Indem. Co. v. Superior Court (1982) 137 C.A.3d 554, 187 C.R. 137 [same]; 1 McCormick 5th, §134; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2275; 43 Cal. L. Rev. 891; 64 Harv. L. Rev. 988; 65 Harv. L. Rev. 691; 70 Harv. L. Rev. 1460.) (On waiver of statutory immunity, see Regan v. New York (1955) 349 U.S. 58, 75 S.Ct. 585, 99 L.Ed. 883 [discussing New York statute, but holding validity of waiver irrelevant under the circumstances]; 43 Cal. L. Rev. 886, 892; 64 Harv. L. Rev. 987.)

In Fremont Indem. Co. v. Superior Court, supra, plaintiff sought to recover damages under a fire insurance policy, and the insurer, relying on a provision excluding recovery for arson caused losses, refused to pay. The insurer requested plaintiff's deposition but, having been charged with arson, he asserted his Fifth Amendment privilege. The trial judge granted plaintiff's motion for a protective order suspending the taking of the deposition until after the criminal matter had been decided. Held, the order was improper. "[T]he plaintiff's filing of an action to recover on fire insurance policy operated to waive his constitutional privilege against self-incrimination with reference to any factual issues, particularly as to the applicability of the arson exclusion, tendered by the complaint." (137 C.A.3d 560.) And, once waived, the privilege cannot be relied on even at the discovery stage of the trial. (137 C.A.3d 559.) (See Hartbrodt v. Burke (1996) 42 C.A.4th 168, 174, 175, 49 C.R.2d 562 [by bringing suit, plaintiff waived self-incrimination privilege as to tape recording of relevant conversation between him and defendant; following Fremont Indem. Co.].)

The contractual waiver of the privilege is not, however, specifically enforced by compelling testimony, but rather by denying rights under the contract. Thus, in Hickman v. London Assur. Corp., supra, plaintiff's fire insurance policy contained the usual assured's agreement to submit to examination under oath and to produce books and papers. After a fire loss, an information charging arson was filed against plaintiff, and he refused to answer questions or produce records unless the criminal charge was dismissed. Held, judgment for plaintiff reversed; the breach of condition precluded recovery on the policy.

In Minnesota v. Murphy (1984) 465 U.S. 420, 104 S.Ct. 1136, 79 L.Ed.2d 409, Murphy, on probation and required to meet regularly with his probation officer, made incriminating admissions in answers to questions put at a meeting. In the subsequent criminal prosecution, Murphy sought to suppress the statements on the ground that the officer should have warned him of his privilege before asking the questions. Held, the privilege was waived by voluntary statements without claiming the privilege.

(a) The general obligation to appear and answer questions truthfully did not convert Murphy's voluntary statements into compelled ones; he was in no better position than an ordinary witness at a trial, whose testimony is not compelled unless required to answer after a valid claim of the privilege. (104 S.Ct. 1142, 79 L.Ed.2d 419.) "Witnesses who failed to claim the privilege were once said to have 'waived' it, but we have recently abandoned this 'vague term,' ... and 'made clear that an individual may lose the benefit of the privilege without making a knowing and intelligent waiver.'" (104 S.Ct. 1142, 79 L.Ed.2d 419.)

(b) The contention that revocation of probation was threatened if he was untruthful, and that he was therefore compelled to give up his privilege, is unpersuasive. In the "penalty" cases, the state not only compelled an individual to appear and testify, but sought to induce the individual to forgo the Fifth Amendment privilege by threatening to impose economic or other sanctions. And if the state, either expressly or by implication, asserts that invocation of the privilege would lead to revocation of probation, these cases would apply. (104 S.Ct. 1146, 79 L.Ed.2d 424.) Here, however, Murphy's probation conditions merely required him to appear and give testimony about matters relevant to his probationary status; the state "did not attempt to take the extra, impermissible step." (104 S.Ct. 1147, 79 L.Ed.2d 425.) Thus, "[i]f Murphy did harbor a belief that his probation might be revoked for exercising the Fifth Amendment privilege, that belief would not have been reasonable." (104 S.Ct. 1148, 79 L.Ed.2d 426.) (See 13 Hastings Const. L. Q. 305 [Minnesota v. Murphy].)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

C. Privilege of Witness in Any Proceeding.

6. Waiver of Privilege.

b. Waiver at Trial or Hearing.

1. Testifying Without Objection.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 498

[§ 498] Testifying Without Objection.

(1) General Rule. A witness may waive the privilege by testifying fully without objection to any questions; i.e., a witness who desires the protection of the privilege must claim it. (United States v. Murdock (1931) 284 U.S. 141, 52 S.Ct. 63, 65, 76 L.Ed. 210, 213; Rogers v. United States (1951) 340 U.S. 367, 71 S.Ct. 438, 440, 95 L.Ed. 344, 348; People v. Finch (1963) 213 C.A.2d 752, 771, 29 C.R. 420; People v. Barker (1965) 232 C.A.2d 178, 181, 42 C.R. 651; see 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §§2268, 2276; 5 So. Cal. L. Rev. 244.)

(2) Right To Waive and Advice From Judge. People v. Barker, supra, deals with the novel point of the right to waive. Defendant B and his codefendant S were charged with robbery. When the case was nearly completed, S, represented by separate counsel, changed his plea to guilty. B then called S as a witness and asked whether B had been with him when he committed the robbery. He said "No," but the judge struck the answer, advising him that he could be charged with perjury and telling him to claim privilege. The witness declined to make the claim, and the judge, after urging him again, ruled that he should not testify. Held, this was reversible error as to B. The judge's refusal to allow the jury to consider direct testimony from a witness asserting positive knowledge of B's nonparticipation was clearly prejudicial. As to privilege, the court said:

"When it appears that a witness is about to incriminate himself, the court is fully justified in advising the witness of his privilege and of the possible consequences of his testimony." But the authorities do not suggest that it is proper to forbid the witness to answer if he or she is willing to do so. "There is no policy of the law which would prevent a perjurer from recanting his false testimony in time to aid another, even though this course exposes the witness to some risk of further prosecution. It is not inconceivable that a witness who had committed perjury would be willing to confess it and accept the consequences rather than to see an innocent friend convicted of a robbery which he did not commit." (232 C.A.2d 182.)

The duty to advise is reaffirmed in People v. Warren (1984) 161 C.A.3d 961, 972, 207 C.R. 912: "[W]hen a trial court has reason to believe that a witness may be charged with a crime arising out of events to which he might testify, it has a duty to insure that the witness is fully advised of his privilege against self-incrimination."

However, the cases holding that the judge has a duty to advise usually involve a defendant not represented by counsel and ignorant of the privilege. "Pretzer has not cited compelling authority requiring the trial judge to admonish a defendant concerning his right not to testify at trial when that defendant is represented by counsel." (People v. Pretzer (1992) 9 C.A.4th 1078, 1085, 11 C.R.2d 860 [adding that "Pretzer eagerly testified and his attorney may have acquiesced to his testifying"].) Other cases have also refused to impose such a duty. (See People v. Alcocer (1991) 230 C.A.3d 406, 410, 282 C.R. 5 [grand jury setting is not inherently coercive so as to require on-the-record advisement of self-incrimination privilege; testimony voluntarily given before grand jury was properly admitted in perjury prosecution]; People v. Berry (1991) 230 C.A.3d 1449, 1453, 281 C.R. 543 [at family court review hearing on modification of child support, judge was not required to advise father of self-incrimination privilege, because matter had no criminal overtones; father's perjury conviction affirmed].)

(3) Failure To Claim Privilege on Income Tax Return. Information revealed in the preparation and filing of a federal income tax return "is, for purposes of Fifth Amendment analysis, the testimony of a 'witness.' " Hence, where the defendant made incriminating disclosures on the return instead of claiming the privilege, he could not invoke the privilege when they were later introduced as evidence against him in a criminal prosecution. (Garner v. United States (1976) 424 U.S. 648, 96 S.Ct. 1178, 1183, 1188, 47 L.Ed.2d 370, 384.)

C. Privilege of Witness in Any Proceeding.

6. Waiver of Privilege.

b. Waiver at Trial or Hearing.

2. Partial Disclosure.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 499

[§ 499] Partial Disclosure.

There may also be an implied or constructive waiver from partial disclosure of incriminating facts. By voluntarily answering questions as to some of the facts of a transaction involving criminal conduct, the witness is held to have waived the privilege not only as to those, but as to all other facts connected with that transaction. (See Rogers v. United States (1951) 340 U.S. 367, 71 S.Ct. 438, 95 L.Ed. 344; Brown v. United States (1958) 356 U.S. 148, 78 S.Ct. 622, 2 L.Ed.2d 589; *People v. Rev. 930; 70 Harv. L. Rev. 1459; 92 Harv. L. Rev. 1752.)

In Rogers v. United States, supra, petitioner, testifying before a federal grand jury, admitted that she was treasurer of the Communist Party of Denver and formerly had custody of the party records, but then, claiming the privilege, refused to identify the person to whom she had given them. Held, the privilege was waived. The court quoted Wigmore ("If the two are related facts, parts of a whole fact forming a single relevant topic, then his waiver as to a part is a waiver as to the remaining parts"), and an early Michigan case: "[W]here a witness has voluntarily answered as to materially incriminating facts ... he cannot then stop short and refuse further explanation, but must disclose fully what he has attempted to relate." (71 S.Ct. 442, 95 L.Ed. 349.) (See 14 Stanf. L. Rev. 819; 51 Cal. L. Rev. 284.)

In Brown v. United States, supra, a denaturalization proceeding, petitioner, on direct examination in her defense, gave comprehensive testimony denying Communist associations or subversive activities, but on cross-examination, claimed privilege in refusing to answer the question whether she was or had been a Communist Party member. Held, contempt judgment affirmed. Petitioner's theory, that voluntary testimony constitutes a waiver only when it is itself incriminating (here, it was all favorable to her) was rejected, and the general rule governing a defendant's waiver in a criminal case was followed: If he elects to testify he is subject to cross-examination "on the matters he has himself put in dispute." (78 S.Ct. 627, 2 L.Ed.2d 597.) (See People v. Lucas (1995) 12 C.4th 415, 455, 48 C.R.2d 525, 907 P.2d 373 [trial judge did not err in refusing to require witnesses in murder trial to answer questions about their observation of defendant's activities; their testimony would have called forth cross-examination subjecting them to danger of self-incrimination, and having testified, they would no longer be able to claim privilege; citing Brown]; 72 Harv. L. Rev. 176; 48 Cal L. Rev. 123; 72 A.L.R.2d 830 [testifying in civil proceeding as waiver of privilege against self-incrimination].)

In Newson v. Oakland (1974) 37 C.A.3d 1050, 112 C.R. 890, plaintiff sought damages, including loss of income, as a result of injuries allegedly caused by defendant's having caused a dangerous street condition. On cross-examination, defense counsel asked plaintiff whether he had filed federal and state income returns, and his objection was overruled. Held, the ruling was proper. On the analogy of the patient-litigant exception (see supra, §204), plaintiff could not claim relief while refusing to testify about matters which could prevent his recovery. (37 C.A.3d 1056, quoting 4 A.L.R.3d 545 [dismissing action or striking testimony where party to civil action asserts privilege against self-incrimination as to pertinent question].)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

C. Privilege of Witness in Any Proceeding.

6. Waiver of Privilege.

b. Waiver at Trial or Hearing.

3. Privilege in Later Proceeding.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 500

[§ 500] Privilege in Later Proceeding.

A defendant's waiver is only effective for the particular proceeding in which it takes place (supra, §430), and the same limited effect is given the waiver by a witness. Hence, a defendant may claim the privilege at a criminal trial after waiving it in the preliminary examination or before the grand jury. (See Overend v. Superior Court (1900) 131 C. 280, 284, 63 P. 372 [prior waiver at preliminary examination]; In re Sales (1933) 134 C.A. 54, 61, 24 P.2d 916; 1 McCormick 5th, §134; 8 Wigmore (McNaughton Rev.) §2276; 8 So. Cal. L. Rev. 51; 5 Hastings L. J. 263; 1953 A.S. 761; 36 A.L.R.2d 1403 [right of witness to claim privilege against self-incrimination at criminal trial after testifying to same matter before grand jury].)

Waiver on a voir dire examination outside the presence of the jury to determine admissibility of evidence is similarly treated; i.e., it does not preclude a claim of privilege at the trial. (People v. Lawrence (1959) 168 C.A.2d 510, 517, 336 P.2d 189.)

The rule that a defendant does not waive the privilege by giving prior testimony is ordinarily applied in subsequent proceedings against the same defendant. In People v. Lopez (1980) 110 C.A.3d 1010, 168 C.R. 378, it was applied to a person who was a defendant in the former proceeding and a witness in the subsequent proceeding. T, after testifying on his own behalf, was convicted of murder and other offenses, and appealed. While his appeal was pending, he was called as a witness in the trial of his codefendant L, and he claimed the privilege. Held, the privilege was not waived by his prior testimony. If T's appeal resulted in a reversal of his conviction and a retrial, his testimony at L's trial could be introduced against him as an admission, and it is conceivable that such testimony could include evidence which had not been presented at his first trial. Because his testimony at L's trial could tend to incriminate him, he was entitled to assert his privilege. (110 C.A.3d 1021.)

c. Failure To Object to Interrogatories.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 501

[§ 501] Failure To Object to Interrogatories.

In Brown v. Superior Court (1986) 180 C.A.3d 701, 226 C.R. 10, plaintiff Brown sued defendants for assault and battery and conspiracy to murder. One defendant was facing criminal charges of attempted murder arising from the same incident. Plaintiff served written interrogatories, some of which required self-incrimination. Defendants did not answer or object within the 30-day period of C.C.P. 2030; sanctions were imposed, an additional 10-day period was granted by the judge, and defendants were again late in responding. Held, defendants' conduct was a waiver of the right to raise the privilege, and plaintiff was entitled to judgment by default. "Numerous cases have held that if an objection to interrogatories is not raised within the 30-day period, the objection is waived, absent good cause for relief from default. ... We see no basis for treating the privilege against self-incrimination differently." (180 C.A.3d 709.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

C.C.P. 2030 was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.010 et seq. in 2004. The 30-day period for responding to interrogatories is now stated in C.C.P. 2030.260.

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XVII. PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION

C. Privilege of Witness in Any Proceeding.

6. Waiver of Privilege.

d. Claim and Waiver at Legislative Investigation.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 502

[§ 502] Claim and Waiver at Legislative Investigation.

The United States Supreme Court has laid down a liberal rule of claim, and a strict test of waiver, for witnesses appearing before congressional investigating committees.

In Quinn v. United States (1955) 349 U.S. 155, 75 S.Ct. 668, 99 L.Ed. 964, petitioner, an officer of a labor union having alleged Communist members, was called before a subcommittee of the House Committee on Un-American Activities. The questions concerned his membership in the Communist Party, and were concededly incriminating. His refusal to answer was on "the First and Fifth Amendments" and also on grounds relied on by another witness. He was convicted of contempt of Congress under the statute (2 U.S.C., §192) making punishable the refusal to answer pertinent questions, the lower court holding that he had not properly raised the claim of privilege. Held, reversed. (See also Emspak v. United States (1955) 349 U.S. 190, 75 S.Ct. 687, 99 L.Ed. 997, and Bart v. United States (1955) 349 U.S. 219, 75 S.Ct. 712, 99 L.Ed. 1016, companion cases reaching same result; Slagle v. Ohio (1961) 366 U.S. 259, 81 S.Ct. 1076, 1080, 6 L.Ed.2d 277, 282 [state Un-American Activities Commission; Quinn and Bart cases followed]; Raley v. Ohio (1959) 360 U.S. 423, 79 S.Ct. 1257, 3 L.Ed.2d 1344 [state investigating commission; contempt convictions reversed where petitioners were induced to claim privilege without informing them of immunity statute]; cf. Hutcheson v. United States (1962) 369 U.S. 599, 82 S.Ct. 1005, 1010, 8 L.Ed.2d 137, 149 [express waiver upheld]; and see generally 69 Harv. L. Rev. 131; 70 Harv. L. Rev. 727, 1459; 51 Cal. L. Rev. 281; 1955 A.S. 72, 646; 1959 A.S. 643; 51 A.L.R.2d 1178 [sufficiency of claim of privilege].)

Three general rules emerge from these cases:

(1) The claim of privilege need not be formal or by any special combination of words. "If an objection to a question is made in any language that a committee may reasonably be expected to understand as an attempt to invoke the privilege, it must be respected both by the committee and by a court." If the committee deems the apparent claim equivocal, it may ask the witness to particularize his or her objection. (Quinn v. United States, supra, 75 S.Ct. 673, 99 L.Ed. 972.)

(2) Contempt of Congress under the statute requires criminal intent--a deliberate, intentional refusal to answer. Because the committee may either sustain or overrule the objection of the witness, mere refusal to answer is not contumacious unless the committee overrules the objection and directs the witness to answer. The committee need not use any particular form of words to indicate its ruling, so long as the witness is confronted with a clear-cut choice between answering or refusing on pain of contempt. (3) The privilege will not be deemed waived by a casual and equivocal statement. (*Emspak v. XVIII. SPECIAL PRIVACY STATUTES

A. Records of Medical Committees.

1. Medical or Medical-Dental Staff Committee.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 503

[§ 503] Medical or Medical-Dental Staff Committee.

"In-hospital medical or medical-dental staff committees of a licensed hospital may engage in research and medical or dental study for the purpose of reducing morbidity or mortality, and may make findings and recommendations relating to said purpose." (Ev.C. 1156.) The section then lays down two rules governing the use of "the written records of interviews, reports, statements, or memoranda of such in-hospital medical or medical-dental staff committees relating to such medical or dental studies":

(1) They are subject to discovery under C.C.P. 2016 et seq. (see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §5 et seq.) except that, pursuant to the physician-patient and psychotherapist-patient privileges, the patient's identity cannot be disclosed without his or her consent. (Ev.C. 1156(a), (b).)

(2) They are not admissible as evidence "in any action or before any administrative body, agency, or person." (Ev.C. 1156(a).)

However, admissibility of the original medical or dental records of a patient is not affected (Ev.C. 1156(c)), and the statute does not exclude evidence relevant in a criminal action (Ev.C. 1156(d)).

XVIII. SPECIAL PRIVACY STATUTES

A. Records of Medical Committees.

2. Medical or Psychiatric Quality Assurance Committee.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 504

[§ 504] Medical or Psychiatric Quality Assurance Committee.

A medical or psychiatric quality assurance committee established under Welf.C. 4070 and 5624 "may engage in research and medical or psychiatric study for the purpose of reducing morbidity or mortality, and may make findings and recommendations to the county and state relating to such purpose." (Ev.C. 1056.1(a).) The statute, nearly identical to Ev.C. 1156 governing medical and medical-dental staff committees (see supra, §503), also sets forth two rules governing the use of "the written records of interviews, reports, statements, or memoranda of such committees relating to such medical or psychiatric studies":

(1) They are subject to discovery under C.C.P. 2016 et seq. (see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §5 et seq.) except that, pursuant to the physician-patient and psychotherapist-patient privileges, the patient's identity cannot be disclosed without his or her consent. (Ev.C. 1156.1(a), (b).)

(2) They are not admissible as evidence "in any action or before any administrative body, agency, or person." (Ev.C. 1156.1(a).)

However, admissibility of the original medical or psychiatric records of a patient is not affected (Ev.C. 1156.1(c)), and the statute does not exclude evidence relevant in a criminal action (Ev.C. 1156.1(d)).

A. Records of Medical Committees.

3. Medical Evaluation or Review Committee.

a. Nature and Scope of Protection.

1. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 505

[§ 505] In General.

Ev.C. 1157 preserves the secrecy of the proceedings and records of peer review bodies and of organized committees of hospital or professional associations charged with evaluating and improving the quality of care rendered by specified health care professionals. (Ev.C. 1157(a).) With certain exceptions and distinctions (see infra, §509 et seq.), these proceedings and records are not subject to discovery (Ev.C. 1157(a)), and no person in attendance at a meeting of such a committee may be required to testify "as to what transpired at that meeting" (Ev.C. 1157(b)).

Many cases and commentaries have discussed the scope of the statute. (See Henry Mayo Newhall Memorial Hosp. v. Superior Court (1978) 81 C.A.3d 626, 635, 146 C.R. 542 [immunity not waived by providing privileged records in unrelated mandamus proceeding]; West Covina Hosp. v. Superior Court (Martinez) (1990) 224 C.A.3d 1446, 1454, 274 C.R. 712 [department-wide conferences held weekly to improve patient care were "committees" under Ev.C. 1157, despite lack of formal organizational indicia and participation of nonphysician hospital staff]; Cedars-Sinai Med. Center v. Superior Court (1993) 12 C.A.4th 579, 588, 16 C.R.2d 253 [identity of committee members is so intimately related to the evaluation itself as to fall within privilege]; C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Discovery §4.65 et seq.; 17 *Pacific L. (On Ev.C. 1157 as obstacle to establishing hospital's liability for doctor's negligence under decision in *Elam v. SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

In Fox v. Kramer (2000) 22 C.4th 531, 93 C.R.2d 497, 994 P.2d 343, plaintiff filed a malpractice action alleging that her colonoscopy was carried out negligently and against her wishes. Shortly before trial, she subpoenaed a draft preliminary report prepared by an investigator for the Department of Health Services concerning the incident. The investigator's conclusions in that report were based on hospital peer review committee records that he examined in the course of his official duties. The trial court excluded both the investigator's testimony and the report itself. The Court of Appeal affirmed, relying on the rule against evidence of subsequent remedial measures (Ev.C. 1151; see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §163). Held, affirmed, but not for the reasons given by the Court of Appeal. The committee records were immune from discovery under Ev.C. 1157(a). The investigator could review them only as part of his official, purely investigatory, inquiry. (22 C.4th 540, citing Arnett v. Dal Cielo (1996) 14 C.4th 4, 56 C.R.2d 706, 923 P.2d 1, text, §514.) Plaintiff could not accomplish indirectly what she was forbidden to do directly, i.e., obtain the equivalent of discovery of the contents of the committee records by subpoenaing the testimony or the report of the investigator who reviewed them. (22 C.4th 541.) Furthermore, the investigator's opinions were based on "official information" within the meaning of Ev.C. 1040 (text, §246), and, under the balancing test of that statute, the necessity of preserving the confidentiality of hospital peer review committee records, "which inures to the benefit of the general public by encouraging candid and uninhibited evaluations of physicians by their peers," greatly outweighs the necessity of disclosure in the interest of justice. (22 C.4th 542.) However, the Court of Appeal's determination that the records were inadmissible under Ev.C. 1151, as well as nondiscoverable under Ev.C. 1157, is incorrect. The Legislature is aware of the need to protect hospital peer review committee records, and in Ev.C. 1157 it created a limited privilege. The general rule against admissibility of subsequent remedial measures is inapplicable. (22 C.4th 548.)

See Los Angeles v. Superior Court (Gavira) (2006) 139 C.A.4th 8, 12, 42 C.R.3d 390 [peer review committee exemption applied to county jail mental health services division]. Elam v. College Park Hosp.:

XVIII. SPECIAL PRIVACY STATUTES

A. Records of Medical Committees.

3. Medical Evaluation or Review Committee.

a. Nature and Scope of Protection.

2. Hospital Staff Privileges.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 506

[§ 506] Hospital Staff Privileges.

Hinson v. Clairemont Community Hosp. (1990) 218 C.A.3d 1110, 267 C.R. 503, held that neither an application for staff privileges nor the fact that a doctor's privileges were denied, suspended or terminated prima facie falls within the scope of Ev.C. 1157.

(a) "An application for staff privileges is not included within Evidence Code section 1157 because the application is neither necessarily a 'proceeding' nor a 'record' of a committee; it is a document prepared and completed by an individual physician. As the Santa Rosa case explains, the mere fact information is placed in a medical staff committee's files does not render information immune from discovery." (218 C.A.3d 1128, citing Santa Rosa Memorial Hosp. v. Superior Court (1985) 174 C.A.3d 711, 220 C.R. 236, infra, §507.) This holding is not contrary to Snell v. Superior Court (1984) 158 C.A.3d 44, 204 C.R. 200, because there the personnel files in question were exclusively maintained by a peer review committee. (218 C.A.3d 1128.)

(b) "Nor do we believe the plain fact (as opposed to the underlying facts of the investigation and evaluation) of denial, suspension or termination of staff privileges is automatically immune from discovery under Evidence Code section 1157. It seems probable that the actual decision to deny, suspend or terminate a particular physician's privileges is an act of the hospital administration rather than that of a medical staff committee. ... Indeed, the record here shows the Clairemont Community Hospital Board of Governors approved, disapproved or conditioned staff appointments and reappointments." (218 C.A.3d 1128.)

Hinson was disapproved in Alexander v. Superior Court (1993) 5 C.4th 1218, 23 C.R.2d 397, 859 P.2d 96, a medical malpractice action in which plaintiffs sought discovery of defendant physicians' applications and reapplications for staff privileges at defendant hospital. The trial judge denied plaintiffs' motion to compel the hospital to disclose the documents. Held, the motion was properly denied.

(a) "Given the statutory and regulatory scheme, it is clear that applications for staff privileges are the province of the hospital's medical staff committee. ... Although a hospital's administrative governing body makes the ultimate decision about whether to grant or deny staff privileges, it does so based on the recommendation of its medical staff committee." (5 C.4th 1224.)

(b) Plaintiffs asserted that the privilege was inapplicable because the applications were not actually generated by the committee. However, "nothing in section 1157(a) limits the privilege to records that are generated by a medical staff committee, and nothing in the statute supports the suggestion that materials submitted to a committee for review are not protected 'records' of the committee." (5 C.4th 1225.) (See Joel v. Valley Surgical Center (1998) 68 C.A.4th 360, 371, 80 C.R.2d 247 [privilege extends to reporting suspension of staff privileges to Medical Board of California and to National Practitioner Data Bank]; 22 Pepperdine L. Rev. 263; on exception to statutory disclosure prohibition for person requesting hospital staff privileges, see Ev.C. 1157(c), infra, §§509, 510.)

XVIII. SPECIAL PRIVACY STATUTES

A. Records of Medical Committees.

3. Medical Evaluation or Review Committee.

a. Nature and Scope of Protection.

3. Multidisciplinary Infection Control Committee.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 507

[§ 507] Multidisciplinary Infection Control Committee.

In Santa Rosa Memorial Hosp. v. Superior Court (1985) 174 C.A.3d 711, 220 C.R. 236, plaintiff sued defendant hospital to recover for injuries suffered as a result of an infection she acquired while in the hospital, alleging both negligent treatment and negligent staff supervision. Plaintiff sought to compel answers to various questions propounded to V, a nurse epidemiologist and member of the Infection Control Committee at the hospital. The trial judge ruled that none of the disputed questions asked for the proceedings or records of the committee or for testimony "as to what transpired" at a meeting of that committee; and, if the questions could be deemed to seek such information, the immunity provided by Ev.C. 1157 did not apply because the infection control committee is not a "medical staff committee" within the meaning of the statute. Held, order vacated and matter remanded for further proceedings.

(a) The statutory language is not limited to medical staff committees composed solely, or primarily, of physicians. (174 C.A.3d 718, 719.) Nor is it limited to protecting only information pertaining to peer reviews by physicians. (174 C.A.3d 720.)

(b) Hospital administrators cannot evade their concurrent duty under Elam v. College Park Hosp. (1982) 132 C.A.3d 332, 183 C.R. 156, 6 Summary (9th), Torts, §1024, simply by purporting to have delegated that entire responsibility to medical staff committees: "Information developed or obtained by hospital administrators or others which does not derive from an investigation into the quality of care or the evaluation thereof by a medical staff committee, and which does not disclose the investigative and evaluative activities of such a committee, is not rendered immune from discovery under section 1157 merely because it is later placed in the possession of a medical staff committee or made known to committee members; and this may be so even if the information in question may be relevant in a general way to the investigative and evaluative functions of the committee." (174 C.A.3d 724; see infra, §512.)

(c) A hospital claiming privilege under Ev.C. 1157 bears the "burden of demonstrating why the information claimed to be immune should be deemed a record or proceeding of a medical staff committee." (174 C.A.3d 727.) Certain types of information are so clearly within the exclusive sphere of a protected medical staff committee that Ev.C. 1157 can be found applicable without extensive judicial inquiry. But when the information sought to be discovered relates to a matter that is not obviously within the sole purview of a protected committee, the burden of showing that it is protected cannot be sustained except upon particularized judicial inquiry. The trial judge granted the motion to compel answers without sufficient inquiry, and the record did not provide a factual basis for determining the application of Ev.C. 1157; hence, remand was required. (174 C.A.3d 728.)

(d) The only challenged question that explicitly solicited information regarding activities of the Infection Control Committee asked whether plaintiff's care had been reviewed by that committee. The hospital should be required to disclose whether plaintiff's care was reviewed by the committee, unless it can show that such review would not be undertaken as a matter of course and that disclosure of the fact of review would be prejudicial to an interest protected by Ev.C. 1157. "If the committee regularly reviews the care and treatment of all or of randomly selected patients, or if review is otherwise automatically undertaken (as, for example, upon request of the patient or his or her physician), the mere fact of committee review would not constitute a record or proceeding of that committee." (174 C.A.3d 729.)

(e) If the trial judge determines that the fact of review or nonreview of plaintiff's care and treatment by the Infection Control Committee is not immune from discovery and must be disclosed, and if Nurse V discloses that it has not been reviewed, the information sought by the remaining deposition questions would not appear to constitute records and proceedings of that committee and must also be disclosed. But if the fact of committee review is immune from discovery, or if it is disclosed that the committee has reviewed her care and treatment, the additional information is not necessarily immune from discovery; the trial judge must determine the extent to which V's responsibilities as nurse epidemiologist may be independent of her participation in activities of the Infection Control Committee. (174 C.A.3d 729.) (See Willits v. Superior Court (1993) 20 C.A.4th 90, 100, 101, 24 C.R.2d 348, infra, §508 [quoting Santa Rosa].)

4. Hospital Employee's Suit for Damages.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 508

[§ 508] Hospital Employee's Suit for Damages.

In Willits v. Superior Court (1993) 20 C.A.4th 90, 24 C.R.2d 348, a nurse who had suffered a needle stick while withdrawing blood from an AIDS patient and subsequently tested HIV-positive brought an action for damages against, among other defendants, the managing entity of the hospital where she worked. Her complaint asserted causes of action for negligence, products liability, and breach of express and implied warranties. Plaintiff sought discovery of documents relating to the needle stick incident; the AIDS patient; the purchase and use of the medical products involved in the accident; employee training and education regarding needle stick incidents; the occurrence, reporting, prevention, and treatment of such incidents; the employment, training, and supervision of plaintiff; rules, policies, and protocols applicable to plaintiff; and the corporate structure and management of the managing entity and the hospital and the relationship between the two. When defendant refused to produce most of the requested documents, the trial judge granted plaintiff's motion to compel, but stated that Ev.C. 1157 applied to medical staff committee activities and files, and precluded discovery of employee occupational safety or health reports by a hospital employee. The latter qualification caused plaintiff to seek relief in the Court of Appeal. Held, writ of mandamus issued.

(a) A hospital employee's suit for damages is within the ambit of the statute. Just as candor and frankness are essential for effective peer review and effective treatment and product review, so they are essential to the review of health and safety matters by hospital staff committees. "A few hospital employees must be denied discovery in order to protect the health of all health care workers and of the public as a whole." (20 C.A.4th 102, 103.)

(b) Elsewhere, as in former Health & Saf.C. 429.14 and 429.15 (now Health & Saf.C. 105325 and 105335), the Legislature has sought to protect health care personnel from occupational injuries and illnesses. "[T]hat goal is more readily achieved if hospital staff committees may candidly assess medical devices, and accidents involving such devices, under the mantle of confidentiality provided by section 1157." (20 C.A.4th 103.)

(c) Nevertheless, the holding in Santa Rosa Memorial Hosp. v. Superior Court (1985) 174 C.A.3d 711, 220 C.R. 236, supra, §507, precludes defendant from attempting to avoid discovery of materials related to its independent duties, such as those imposed by the Labor Code and the Health and Safety Code, by delegating those duties to committees or by placing relevant documents in committee files. Defendant has refused to produce documents that enjoy statutory protection and others that do not. As the trial judge granted plaintiff's motion without sufficiently inquiring into the relevant considerations, as reflected in its statement qualifying the granting of the motion, plaintiff is entitled to remand for further proceedings "under the helpful guidelines offered by the Santa Rosa Memorial Hospital court." (20 C.A.4th 104.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Health & Saf.C. 105335, which required the preparation of a report on the safety of medical devices, was repealed in 2004 as obsolete.

2. No Effect on Immunity From Disclosure in Malpractice Cases.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 510

[§ 510] No Effect on Immunity From Disclosure in Malpractice Cases.

In Matchett v. Superior Court (1974) 40 C.A.3d 623, 115 C.R. 317, the court rejected the contention that the exception under Ev.C. 1157(c) (person requesting hospital staff privileges; see supra, §509) eliminated the immunity in any suit charging a hospital with negligent selection or retention of a person who made such a request. The statutory immunity is aimed directly at malpractice actions; the exception was designed to set the immunity aside and to permit discovery in suits by doctors claiming wrongful or arbitrary exclusion from hospital staff privileges. (40 C.A.3d 629.)

In Roseville Community Hosp. v. Superior Court (1977) 70 C.A.3d 809, 139 C.R. 170, the court said: "We anticipated in Matchett that situations would arise in which doctors have been subjected to (allegedly) wrongful or arbitrary exclusions from hospital staff privileges. We indicated in Matchett, by way of dictum, that the exclusionary language in the statute was to all appearances designed to allow such doctors in such situations to obtain by discovery the necessary information to test the legality of their exclusion in a court action. ... We declare this statement of law is no longer dictum. Matchett, therefore, prophesied the exact issue we now face." (70 C.A.3d 814.)

In Roseville, plaintiff was a partnership of pathologists who worked under contract as a pathological service unit of the hospital. The hospital medical staff terminated the contract. Plaintiff sued for declaratory relief and damages and sought discovery of the records of the hospital staff committees. Held, the records were discoverable. In a technical sense, some of the pathologists may not have been "staff members" and, in a vicarious liability case, might not be considered employees of defendant. But the legislative purpose calls for a broader construction to meet such a need as that involved here: "the need to discover ... what charges were made when the termination of plaintiff was for the vague reason of 'no confidence.'" (70 C.A.3d 815.)

3. Applicability to Criminal Proceedings.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 511

[§ 511] Applicability to Criminal Proceedings.

Ev.C. 1157(e) (supra, §509) was construed in People v. Superior Court (Memorial Med. Center) (1991) 234 C.A.3d 363, 286 C.R. 478. After an extended analysis of the ambiguous language and legislative history, the court held that the statutory prohibitions of discovery and compelled testimony under Ev.C. 1157 did not apply to criminal actions.

(a) "We have found absolutely no evidence in the legislative history of the original bill to support the contention section 1157 was intended to apply to criminal actions. Without evidence, such an implication runs counter to the principle that 'privileges should be narrowly construed since they prevent the admission of relevant and otherwise admissible evidence and may obstruct the attainment of justice.' " (234 C.A.3d 377.)

(b) "We conclude the only likely interpretation of section 1157, subdivision (e) is that it is a statement of assurance by the Legislature that the mentioned amendments do not purport to stray from the original intent of section 1157, thus opening the door to its invalidation. If the amendments were read to exclude records of peer review committees from criminal discovery, the entire section would be susceptible of an attack claiming its unconstitutionality in view of article 1, section 28, subdivision (d), the Victim's Bill of Rights. Because we conclude the Legislature intended section 1157 to provide equal protection to the various medical groups under its umbrella, we hold section 1157 does not confer immunity against criminal discovery." (234 C.A.3d 381.)

(c) Even if the language of subdivision (e) is not facially ambiguous, the 1990 amendments require that the peer review committee records and proceedings be subject to discovery in a criminal action. (234 C.A.3d 382.)

(d) The special proceeding under P.C. 1524, seeking issuance of a search warrant for the records of a hospital peer review committee concerning a physician suspected of criminal negligence, is a "criminal action." (234 C.A.3d 387, 388.)

In Scripps Memorial Hosp. v. Superior Court (1995) 37 C.A.4th 1720, 44 C.R.2d 725, a hospital sought a writ of mandamus to prevent disclosure, to the prosecution, of records relating to a psychiatrist who had been called as an expert by a defendant charged with child molestation. The Court of Appeal granted relief, squarely disagreeing with the Memorial Med. Center court's holding that the prohibition on discovery is limited to civil actions. The Legislature expanded the classes of caregivers whose records are protected, by means of amendments in 1983 (dietitians and podiatrists), 1985 (psychologists), and 1990 (peer review bodies as defined in B. & P.C. 805). Ev.C. 1157(e), in its present form, provides that the 1983, 1985, and 1990 amendments do not exclude the discovery or use of relevant evidence in a criminal action. "[W]e find no ambiguity in the statute. On its face, subdivision (e) is expressly limited in application to the records of classes of caregivers added by amendment to section 1157 in 1983, 1985 or 1990. In our view, limiting discovery in criminal actions to records of groups added to the statute in 1983, 1985, or 1990 not only comports with the plain meaning of the words used but it is consistent with other provisions in the Evidence Code, the Right to Truth-in-Evidence paragraph and the legislative history." (37 C.A.4th 1727.)

[§ 512] Hospital Administration Files.

In Matchett v. Superior Court (1974) 40 C.A.3d 623, 115 C.R. 317, supra, §510, plaintiff alleged that while he was a patient in defendant hospital, he suffered injuries from defendant doctor's negligent treatment and from the hospital's negligence in admitting and retaining the doctor on its staff without adequate inquiry into or controls over his competence. Plaintiff sought discovery of the hospital's personnel or staff files and the files of several staff committees. Held, denial of discovery of the proceedings and records of the staff committees was proper (see supra, §509), but the immunity does not extend to the files of the hospital administration. "The trial court should have inquired into the existence of a hospital administration file concerning the doctor and, if such a file existed, should have permitted its inspection, excluding any portions which reflected the proceedings of staff committees conforming to the specifications of the immunity statute." (40 C.A.3d 628.) (See also *Saddleback Community Hosp. v. ## CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XVIII. SPECIAL PRIVACY STATUTES

A. Records of Medical Committees.

3. Medical Evaluation or Review Committee.

c. Distinctions.

2. Voluntary Testimony.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 513

[§ 513] Voluntary Testimony.

In West Covina Hosp. v. Superior Court (1986) 41 C.3d 846, 226 C.R. 132, 718 P.2d 119, plaintiff brought a malpractice action against a surgeon and defendant hospital which had granted surgical privileges and retained the surgeon on the medical staff. Plaintiff proposed to call Dr. A, a member of the medical staff committee which evaluated the surgeon, to testify about specific details of the evaluation. The trial judge, over defendant hospital's objections, ruled that Dr. A could testify voluntarily to the entire proceeding of the committee provided that patients' names were not disclosed. Held, the ruling was proper.

(a) Ev.C. 1157 is clear and unambiguous. It precludes pretrial discovery, and states that a member of the committee may not be "required" to testify: "A provision that a member of a hospital medical staff committee may not be 'required' to testify is not the same as either providing that he may not testify or that the hospital or committee shall have a privilege to preclude testimony." (41 C.3d 851.) This conclusion is also supported by the principle that privileges should be narrowly construed (see supra, §69). (41 C.3d 851.)

(b) The purpose of Ev.C. 1157 is to improve the quality of medical care by the use of peer review committees; and accomplishment of the purpose requires that doctors be recruited to serve on the committees. If they were subject to the burdens of discovery and involuntary testimony, many doctors might refuse to serve. "On the other hand, when a doctor volunteers to testify, he has concluded that he is willing to bear the time burdens; and the Legislature could properly conclude that exclusion of voluntary testimony was not necessary to encourage participation in the peer review program." (41 C.3d 852.)

(c) As the court pointed out in Matchett v. Superior Court (1974) 40 C.A.3d 623, 115 C.R. 317, supra, §§510, 512, the Legislature provided a measure of confidentiality so as to promote candor and objectivity, but by providing exceptions from the prohibitions it recognized competing concerns such as the interests of victims of medical malpractice. Extending the prohibition to voluntary testimony would further promote candor and frankness, but such an extension is not essential to accomplishment of the legislative purpose. "The Legislature has recognized in subdivisions (c), (d), and (e) that confidentiality must give way to the need for evidence in the specified circumstances. We have no reason to assume that the Legislature was not carefully balancing the need for confidentiality against the need for evidence in subdivision (b) of the section as well, and there is no justification for courts to strike a different balance." (41 C.3d 854.) (See 61 So. Cal. L. Rev. 183; 60 A.L.R.4th 1273 [right of voluntary disclosure of privileged proceedings of hospital medical review or doctor evaluation processes].)

Three justices joined in a strong dissent, asserting that the majority ignored both the purpose of the statute and the background of decisional law against which it was enacted. (41 C.3d 855.) They also asserted that the holding would have an adverse effect on the trial: C.C.P. 2037 et seq. establish a discovery mechanism for expert witnesses, to remove the element of surprise (see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §178 et seq.). "Yet the majority's holding which permits the voluntary testimony of a peer review committee member at trial--evidence which they admit is not discoverable pretrial--will bring about the very result which section 2037 et seq. intended to avoid. Ironically, in most cases, the victim of the surprise expert testimony will be the plaintiff." (41 C.3d 860.)

3. Administrative Subpena.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 514

[§ 514] Administrative Subpena.

In Arnett v. Dal Cielo (1996) 14 C.4th 4, 56 C.R.2d 706, 923 P.2d 1, the Medical Board of California undertook an investigation of an anesthesiologist after receiving a report by a confidential informant that the doctor was addicted to narcotics, and a board investigator served subpoenas duces tecum on the chief executive officer of the hospital where the doctor practiced. The subpoenas sought information from the doctor's application for staff privileges relating to his history of drug abuse; copies of complaints received by the hospital regarding the doctor; records of the hospital's medical executive committee concerning the doctor's drug use; documentation regarding the doctor's drug-related leave of absence, the terms of the hospital's restrictions on his practice, and his monitoring and re-entry agreement; and copies of the periodic reports required under the practice restrictions and re-entry agreement. The hospital refused to comply with the subpoenas, and the board filed a petition in the superior court for an order to enforce them. The trial judge granted the petition, and the Court of Appeal, using extrinsic aids to interpret Ev.C. 1157, affirmed. Held, the petition was properly granted.

Ev.C. 1157 affords the proceedings and records of hospital medical committee staffs and peer review bodies protection from "discovery." Although that term has a number of meanings in lay speech, it has a well-known legal meaning--"a formal exchange of evidentiary information between parties to a pending action." Where the words of a statute have a well established legal meaning, that is the meaning that the courts must apply. It was a mistake, therefore, for the Court of Appeal to resort to extrinsic aids such as legislative history, the purpose to be served, and public policy in determining which of several reasonable interpretations the Legislature intended. Because the legal meaning of discovery does not include a subpoena issued by an administrative agency for purely investigative purposes, Ev.C. 1157 provides the hospital no basis for resisting the board's subpoenas. ### XVIII. SPECIAL PRIVACY STATUTES B. Confidentiality of Medical Information Act. 1. Nature and Scope of Act.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 518

[§ 518] Nature and Scope of Act.

(1) In General. The Confidentiality of Medical Information Act (C.C. 56 et seq.) regulates the disclosure of identifiable information regarding the medical history, mental or physical condition, or treatment (C.C. 56.05(f)) of a patient (C.C. 56.05(g)) or enrollee or subscriber of a health care service plan by a provider of health care (C.C. 56.05(h), 56.06), a health care service plan (C.C. 56.05(d)), or a related contractor (C.C. 56.05(c)). (C.C. 56.10 et seq.)

The Act also regulates the use or disclosure of that information by an employer (C.C. 56.20 et seq.) or third-party administrator (C.C. 56.26); the use and disclosure by a health care service plan of genetic test results of an enrollee in the plan (C.C. 56.17); the use and disclosure of medical information about whether a patient is infected with or exposed to HIV (C.C. 56.31); and the release of information by a health care provider, health care service plan, or contractor of information specifically relating to a patient's participation in outpatient psychotherapy (C.C. 56.104). (On restriction of dissemination of medical information imposed by the California constitutional right of privacy (Cal. Const., Art. I, §1), see Board of Med. Quality Assur. v. Gherardini (1979) 93 C.A.3d 669, 156 C.R. 55, 7 Summary (9th), Constitutional Law, §464; on disclosure of medical records to law enforcement agencies, see P.C. 1543 et seq.)

(2) Authorization To Use or Disclose Information. With certain exceptions (C.C. 56.10(b), 56.10(c), 56.17(h), 56.20(c), 56.25, 56.26(a), 56.30, 56.31, 56.104(d)), use or disclosure of the medical information of a patient (or employee or plan enrollee) generally requires the patient's authorization. (C.C. 56.10(a), 56.10(d), 56.10(e), 56.17, 56.20(c), 56.20(d), 56.26(a), 56.31, 56.104.) This is accomplished by having the patient execute a detailed statutory form of authorization. (C.C. 56.11, 56.17(g), 56.21, 56.26(b), 56.104(a).) A patient may demand a copy of the authorization (C.C. 56.12, 56.17(g)(8), 56.22, 56.104(b)), and may impose limits and restrictions on the permission granted (C.C. 56.13, 56.14, 56.17(g), 56.23, 56.104(a)). An authorization may be cancelled or modified at any time; the cancellation or modification is effective upon receipt of notice by the health care provider (or employer, etc). (C.C. 56.15, 56.24.) And, confidentiality must be preserved when destroying or abandoning medical records. (C.C. 56.101.)

A patient making a demand for settlement or offer to compromise prior to service of a malpractice complaint must submit an authorization for the disclosure of medical information to those insuring, responsible for, or defending the defendant's liability. (C.C. 56.105.)

The Act does not affect disclosure to the patient (C.C. 56.28) or provisions of the Information Practices Act of 1977 (C.C. 1798 et seq.; see 7 Summary (9th), Constitutional Law, §472). (C.C. 56.29; for illustrations, see infra, §§519, 520.)

(3) Sanctions for Violations. Violations of the Act are misdemeanors (C.C. 56.36), and entitle the patient to recover compensatory damages, plus punitive damages up to $ 3,000, attorneys' fees up to $ 1,000, and litigation costs (C.C. 56.35). Separate sanctions apply to the improper disclosure of genetic test results by health care service plans. (See C.C. 55.17(b), (c), (d), (e), (f).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. See 87 Proof of Facts 3d 259 [confidentiality of medical and other treatment records].

Under C.C. 56.05(f), as amended in 2002, the Confidentiality of Medical Information Act also applies to medical information in the possession of pharmaceutical companies. (See C.C. 56.05(i), added in 2002 and relettered in 2003, defining "pharmaceutical company"; C.C. 56.102, added in 2002 [with specified exceptions, company may not require patient to waive confidentiality requirements].)

C.C. 56.05(f) was relettered C.C. 56.05(g) in 2003.

C.C. 56.05(g), defining "patient," was relettered C.C. 56.05(h) in 2003.

C.C. 56.05(h), defining "provider of health care," was relettered C.C. 56.05(i) in 2002 without substantive change and C.C. 56.05(j) in 2003. C.C. 56.17 (disclosure of genetic test results) was amended in 2000 to apply to plan applicants, as well as plan enrollees.

C.C. 56.265, added in 2000, prohibits any person or entity (or an affiliate of that person or entity) that "underwrites or sells annuity contracts or contracts insuring, guaranteeing, or indemnifying against loss, harm, damage, illness, disability, or death" from disclosing individually identifiable information about a customer's health or medical or genetic history to "any affiliated or nonaffiliated depository institution, or to any other affiliated or nonaffiliated third party" for use in the granting of credit.

Board of Med. Quality Assur. v. Gherardini:

Cross-Reference: 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §581.

(2) Authorization To Use or Disclose Information. C.C. 56.103, added in 2007, allows a health care provider to disclose medical information to a county social worker, a probation officer, or any other person who is legally authorized to have custody or care of a minor for purposes of coordinating health care services and medical treatment for the minor.

See Shaddox v. Bertani (2003) 110 C.A.4th 1406, 1414, 2 C.R.3d 808 [dentist's act of reporting to police officer's superiors his suspicions that officer had prescription drug problem came within exception of C.C. 56.10(c)(14) for disclosures "otherwise specifically authorized by law"; city charter provisions authorized reporting of, and acting upon, complaints of misconduct from public]; Colleen M. v. Fertility & Surgical Associates of Thousand Oaks (2005) 132 C.A.4th 1466, 1477, 1478, 34 C.R.3d 439 [where patient used her ex-fiance's credit card at fertility clinic, clinic's disclosure of medical information to ex-fiance' was authorized under C.C. 56.10(c)(2) (disclosure to person or entity responsible for paying for services), and its disclosure to ex-fiance's attorney was compelled under C.C. 56.10(b)(3) because ex-fiance' had brought suit against patient based on her exceeding scope of agreement concerning use of credit card].

Cross-Reference: 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §604.

(2a) (New) Exception for Disclosure to Family Members or Release of General Information. A health care provider, health care service plan, or contractor may, subject to specified restrictions, disclose to a family member, other relative, domestic partner, or close personal friend of the patient medical information that is directly relevant to that person's involvement in the patient's care or payment related to that care. (C.C. 56.1007, added in 2006.) In the case of disclosures not addressed by C.C. 56.1007, in the absence of a specific written request by the patient to the contrary, a general acute care hospital may release information concerning the patient's name, address, age, and sex; a general description of the reason for treatment; the general nature of the injury; the general condition of the patient; and any information that does not constitute medical information within the meaning of C.C. 56.05(c). (C.C. 56.16.) C.C. 56.16, which formerly applied to health care providers, and not just acute care hospitals, "represents a pragmatic solution to the problem faced by health care providers surrounded by concerned friends and family of a patient or members of the media when the patient is a public figure. In determining the statute's applicability, the question to be addressed is whether the provider gave out more information than one would expect to be disclosed to concerned friends or relatives inquiring about the condition of a loved one or to members of the media calling to find out the condition of a hospitalized public official or celebrity." (Garrett v. Young (2003) 109 C.A.4th 1393, 1407, 1 C.R.3d 134 [doctor did not violate Act by disclosing to patient's employer that patient was suffering from itching and stress and that she was not able to return to work at that time, even if this information may have led employer to believe patient was less ill than represented; although patient orally instructed doctor to give out no information to employer, this did not comply with statute's requirement of written directive].) Correction: Page 824, last line of section, "55.17" should be "56.17".

B. Confidentiality of Medical Information Act.

2. Illustrations.

a. Authorization for Disclosure Required.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 519

[§ 519] Authorization for Disclosure Required.

In Pettus v. Cole (1996) 49 C.A.4th 402, 57 C.R.2d 46, an employee who requested leave from work for stress-related disability was examined by two psychiatrists, who, without the employee's authorization, reported the examination results, including details of the employee's medical history and psychological profile, to the employee's supervisor. As a condition of continued employment, the employee was asked to enter an alcohol treatment program. When he refused, he was fired. He sued the employer and both psychiatrists, claiming violations of C.C. 56 et seq. and invasion of his constitutional right of privacy (Cal. Const., Art. I, §1; see 7 Summary (9th), Constitutional Law, §454 et seq.). In a bench trial, the trial judge granted the psychiatrists' motion for judgment at the close of plaintiff's case-in-chief and found for the employer following presentation of its case-in-chief. Held, reversed and remanded.

(a) Statutory claim against psychiatrists.

(1) Plaintiff was a "patient" within the meaning of C.C. 56 et seq., and the types of disclosure at issue in this case are governed by C.C. 56.10(c)(8)(B), which allows a health care provider to disclose to the employer information resulting from employment-related health care services conducted at the written request and expense of the employer. Disclosure is limited to information describing "functional limitations of the patient that may entitle the patient to leave from work for medical reasons or limit the patient's fitness to perform his or her present employment," and it may not include a "statement of medical cause." Contrary to the conclusion of the trial judge, an employer is not entitled to a full and complete report of the contents of the examination. The disclosures made by the two psychiatrists describing in detail plaintiff's hostility toward his employer and a coworker, his drinking habits and other details about his personal life, went well beyond a description of "functional limitations." (49 C.A.4th 430, 432.)

(2) C.C. 56.10(c)(8)(A) allows disclosure of information that is relevant to a "law suit, arbitration, grievance, or other claim or challenge" in which the employer and employee are parties and in which the employee has placed his or her medical history and mental or physical condition or treatment in issue. An in-house dispute over entitlement to medical leave does not come within this exception. And even if it did, C.C. 56.10(c)(8)(B) is more specific to the present facts than C.C. 56.10(c)(8)(A) and therefore must be deemed the governing provision. (49 C.A.4th 433, 434.)

(3) C.C. 56.10(c)(9) allows disclosure to a "sponsor, insurer, or administrator" of a plan or policy from which the employee is seeking benefits. This provision, too, is inapplicable. The psychiatrists made their disclosures directly to plaintiff's "second-line supervisor," who was not a sponsor, insurer, or administrator or "otherwise an appropriate recipient of the highly personal medical information contained in the psychiatrists' reports." (49 C.A.4th 435, 436.)

(4) The disclosures at issue do not come within the litigation privilege of C.C. 47(b)(2), because the process by which plaintiff requested disability leave was neither a judicial nor a quasi-judicial proceeding. The general privilege for communications between interested parties (C.C. 47(c)) is likewise inapplicable. By enacting C.C. 56.10(c)(8)(B), the Legislature provided a higher level of protection for the type of disclosure at issue, and this more specific provision must be read as a limitation on the general privilege of C.C. 47(c). (49 C.A.4th 436, 437.)

(b) Constitutional claim against psychiatrists.

(1) Plaintiff established all three elements of a prima facie showing of a constitutional violation. He had a legally cognizable interest in the details of his medical and psychiatric history. (49 C.A.4th 440.) He had a reasonable expectation of privacy in the information he conveyed to the psychiatrists. (49 C.A.4th 441.) And the psychiatrists' disclosures, which they must have known could prove highly embarrassing to plaintiff and disruptive of his relationship with his employer, constituted a serious interference with plaintiff's privacy rights. (49 C.A.4th 443.)

(2) Neither the employer's expectation that it would receive a full report, nor its "need" for details in order to evaluate plaintiff's request for leave justified the invasion of his privacy interest. The employer's expectation should have been altered by the enactment of C.C. 56.10(c)(8)(B), and its need would have been met by substantially less than was given. (49 C.A.4th 445, 446.) If plaintiff posed a threat to a coworker, as claimed by one defendant, then the warning required by Tarasoff v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1976) 17 C.3d 425, 131 C.R. 14, 551 P.2d 334, supra, §227, would have been appropriate. Neither of the psychiatrists claims that the reports they submitted constituted a Tarasoff warning. (49 C.A.4th 446, 447.)

(3) Some of the evidence presented by the employer after the psychiatrists' motion for judgment was granted, however, may ultimately defeat plaintiff's constitutional claim. In light of statements made by plaintiff to his supervisors before he consulted either psychiatrist, it may be found that, by voluntarily disclosing some of the sensitive information subsequently transmitted by the psychiatrists, he waived his constitutional privacy claim. Because the evidence conflicts on this point, a remand is necessary. (49 C.A.4th 448, 449.)

(c) Statutory claim against employer. C.C. 56.20 prohibits an employer from using or communicating medical information about an employee without first obtaining written authorization from the employee. The exception for lawsuits and other claims in which the employer and employee are both parties (C.C. 56.20(c)(2)) fails to benefit defendant employer for the same reasons the analogous exception in C.C. 56.10(c)(8)(A) failed to benefit the psychiatrists. The exception allowing disclosure "only for the purpose of administering and maintaining employee benefits plans ... and for determining eligibility for paid and unpaid leave from work for medical reasons" is also inapplicable, because trying to force an employee into an alcohol treatment program goes far beyond the permitted purposes. (49 C.A.4th 451.)

(d) Constitutional claim against employer.

(1) An employer's violation of the fundamental state constitutional right of privacy is actionable in a case such as this, whether or not, under the same facts, an action for wrongful termination in violation of public policy may lie. As in his case against the psychiatrists, plaintiff made a prima facie showing of a constitutional violation by the employer. In addition to a cognizable interest in maintaining the privacy of the detailed medical information he conveyed to the psychiatrists, he had an "autonomy privacy" interest in making "intimate personal decisions about an appropriate course of medical treatment for his disabling stress condition, without undue intrusion or interference from his employer." (49 C.A.4th 457.) Both of these interests were reasonable, and interference with them constituted "an egregious breach of the social norms underlying the privacy right." (49 C.A.4th 460, quoting Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 C.4th 1, 26 C.R.2d 834, 865 P.2d 633, 7 Summary (9th), Constitutional Law, Supp., §470B.)

(2) The employer failed to identify any countervailing interest sufficient to justify its interference. As to the intrusion into plaintiff's autonomy privacy interest, in particular, the employer's interest would need to be compelling.

However, requiring plaintiff to enroll in an inpatient alcohol treatment program was not only unconvincing, it was unnecessary and inappropriate to address the problems underlying his disability claim. In fact, none of the physicians the employer consulted recommended treatment of this type. Less intrusive alternatives were available, including granting plaintiff three months' disability leave, during which he could pursue appropriate treatment with his own physician, and then evaluating plaintiff again. "Having instead chosen to require Pettus to submit to an unwanted and unnecessary course of medical treatment as a condition of continued employment, ... Du Pont may be held to answer for violation of Pettus's autonomy privacy rights." (49 C.A.4th 461, 462.)

[§ 520] Authorization for Disclosure Not Required.

In Heller v. Norcal Mut. Ins. Co. (1994) 8 C.4th 30, 32 C.R.2d 200, 876 P.2d 999, plaintiff, who had instituted a medical malpractice action, brought a separate action against a physician, the physician's medical services organization, and the physician's insurer. Plaintiff alleged that the physician, who was not a party in the malpractice litigation, had disclosed plaintiff's confidential medical information to the insurer during the course of that litigation. Defendants demurred to plaintiff's cause of action for wrongful disclosure of medical records in violation of C.C. 56 et seq., and the trial judge sustained the demurrer. Held, this was proper. The ex parte contact between physician and insurer was contemplated by C.C. 56.10(c)(4), under which a health care provider may disclose medical information without patient authorization to parties that insure or are responsible for defending professional liability. The physician was an associate of the malpractice defendant and was at risk of malpractice exposure, and the insurer insured both physicians. Thus, "as a potential litigant in a malpractice action and a provider who 'may incur' malpractice liability, Yamaguchi was permitted to discuss with Norcal plaintiff's medical condition." (8 C.4th 39.)

XVIII. SPECIAL PRIVACY STATUTES

C. Insurance Information and Privacy Protection Act.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 521

[§ 521] Insurance Information and Privacy Protection Act.

The 1980 Legislature enacted the Insurance Information and Privacy Protection Act (Ins.C. 791 et seq.). Ins.C. 791 states:

"The purpose of this article is to establish standards for the collection, use and disclosure of information gathered in connection with insurance transactions by insurance institutions, agents or insurance-support organizations; to maintain a balance between the need for information by those conducting the business of insurance and the public's need for fairness in insurance information practices, including the need to minimize intrusiveness; to establish a regulatory mechanism to enable natural persons to ascertain what information is being or has been collected about them in connection with insurance transactions and to have access to such information for the purpose of verifying or disputing its accuracy; to limit the disclosure of information collected in connection with insurance transactions; and to enable insurance applicants and policyholders to obtain the reasons for any adverse underwriting decision."

The statute is based on the Insurance Information and Privacy Protection Model Act of the National Association of Insurance Commissioners. Its elaborate provisions prohibit pretext interviews (Ins.C. 791.02(u), 791.03), provide for notice to applicants and policyholders in connection with insurance transactions (Ins.C. 791.04), prescribe procedures for authorizing disclosure of personal or privileged information (Ins.C. 791.06, 791.07, 791.08, 791.13), establish a right on request to obtain a correction of recorded personal information (Ins.C. 791.09), require advice to an applicant or policyholder of the reasons for an adverse underwriting decision (Ins.C. 791.10), and restrict the bases on which such an adverse decision may rest (Ins.C. 791.12).

Extensive investigatory and regulatory powers are given to the insurance commissioner (Ins.C. 791.14 et seq.), fines and criminal penalties are specified (Ins.C. 791.19, 791.22), and civil actions for equitable relief or damages by persons whose rights are violated are authorized (Ins.C. 791.20, 791.21). (For detailed analysis and comment, see 12 Pacific L. J. 495; 13 Pacific L. J. 727; 17 Pacific L. J. 747.)

In Griffith v. State Farm Mut. Auto Ins. Co. (1991) 230 C.A.3d 59, 281 C.R. 165, the court held that insurance policy limits are "personal information" under Ins.C. 791.13 (supra), and are not discoverable before the filing of legal proceedings. (230 C.A.3d 69.) "We are mindful of the realities of personal injury litigation and the fact that many suits can be avoided with the cooperation of all concerned. ... [W]hen a quick exchange of information will settle a dispute, we encourage carriers to seek authorization from insureds which would enable the carrier to release the policy limits. However, until the Legislature specifically authorizes the disclosure of this information, and if the insured refuses to provide authorization for its release, a third party claimant does not have a right to know the policy limits prior to the filing of a formal proceeding." (230 C.A.3d 72.)

CHAPTER IX - Witnesses

XVIII. SPECIAL PRIVACY STATUTES

D. Tests and Research on AIDS.

1. Confidentiality Requirements.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 522

[§ 522] Confidentiality Requirements.

(1) Nondisclosure of Identity of Test Subjects. With certain exceptions (see infra, §523 et seq.), no person may be compelled in any proceeding to identify, or provide information which would identify, any person "who is the subject of a blood test to detect antibodies to the probable causative agent of AIDS." (Health & Saf.C. 120975.) Unauthorized disclosure may result in criminal or civil liability, or the imposition of civil penalties. (Health & Saf.C. 120980(a), (b), (c), (d).) (See 62 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1701 [AIDS: A Crisis in Confidentiality].)

In Irwin Memorial Blood Bank v. Superior Court (1991) 229 C.A.3d 151, 279 C.R. 911, the superior court issued a discovery order permitting anonymous written depositions of AIDS-infected donors in consolidated transfusion-related AIDS cases against a blood bank. The blood bank sought a writ of prohibition to prevent enforcement of the order. Held, writ granted. The order violated the prohibition against compelled disclosure of the identity of AIDS blood-testing subjects provided by former Health & Saf.C. 199.20 (now Health & Saf.C. 120975).

(a) Although the depositions were to be taken behind a screen at the blood bank, the donor would be seen and heard during the deposition by at least the referee and the reporter. (229 C.A.3d 157.)

(b) "More fundamentally, however, the production of the donor for deposition is itself an identification within the meaning of the statute. ... Until the time that the donor appears for deposition, the donor is a number unconnected to a person. Once the person is required to step forth, the connection between the number and the person is made. The donor has been identified. The extent to which that identification is made known to third parties will depend upon the care taken at the deposition but the identification in a civil proceeding has been made. This the statute prohibits." (229 C.A.3d 157.)

(2) Alternate Testing Sites. Designated counties may establish alternate testing sites, i.e., sites not involving the donation of blood. (Health & Saf.C. 120885, 120890.) The tests must be confidential "through use of a coded system with no linking of individual identity with the test request or results." The county may not ask for any information that could reveal the identity of test subjects. (Health & Saf.C. 120895(a).)

(3) Confidential Research Records. Unless authorized by the research subject (Health & Saf.C. 121080), research records may not be disclosed, discovered, or compelled to be produced, except in specified situations (see infra, §525). (Health & Saf.C. 121075, 121100.)

(4) Confidential Public Health Records. With certain exceptions (see infra, §526), state and local public health records relating to AIDS that contain "personally identifying information" may not be disclosed, discovered, or compelled to be produced in any proceeding. (Health & Saf.C. 121025.)

XVIII. SPECIAL PRIVACY STATUTES

D. Tests and Research on AIDS.

2. Exceptions.

a. Reporting Requirements.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 523

[§ 523] Reporting Requirements.

(1) Disclosure to State or Federal Authorities. There is no liability or criminal sanction for disclosure of an HIV test (defined in Health & Saf.C. 26) in accordance with any reporting requirement for a diagnosed case of AIDS by the State Department of Health Services or the Centers for Disease Control under the United States Public Health Service. (Health & Saf.C. 120980(i).)

(2) Disclosure by Physicians and Hospitals. Physicians and hospitals must report transfusion-associated AIDS cases and confirmed cases of AIDS carriers to the proper health authorities. (Health & Saf.C. 1603.1(c), (d).)

(3) Donor Deferral Register. The Department of Health Services must compile and distribute to blood banks and plasma centers a Donor Deferral Register of persons who test reactive for the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV). (Health & Saf.C. 1603.1(f).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Disclosure to State or Federal Authorities. Health & Saf.C. 120980(i) was amended in 2006 to change "case of AIDS" to "case of HIV infection, including AIDS," to change "Centers for Disease Control" to "Centers for Disease Control and Prevention," and to change the definitional reference for HIV test to Health & Saf.C. 120775(c).

(2) Disclosure by Physicians and Hospitals. Health & Saf.C. 1603.1 was extensively revised in 2003. Under new Health & Saf.C. 1603.1(c), a physician, hospital, or other health care provider must report all AIDS cases and HIV infections, including transfusion-associated cases or infections, to the local health officer. Under new Health & Saf.C. 1603.1(d), the local health officer, upon receiving a report about any transfusion-associated HIV or AIDS cases, must identify which blood bank or plasma center is the source of the infectious blood or blood components and must report this fact to the blood bank or plasma center. The blood bank or plasma center must then undertake an investigation to determine the donor source of the infectious blood or blood components. Under new Health & Saf.C. 1603.1(k), the local health officer may disclose to a blood bank or plasma center, on a confidential basis, whether blood or blood components previously transfused may have been donated by a person infected with HIV, "in order to implement the blood bank's or plasma center's program to notify a recipient of blood or blood components that might have transmitted HIV." The blood bank or plasma center may not disclose information that would identify a donor to which Health & Saf.C. 1603.1(k) applies and must destroy information communicated to it immediately after reviewing its records as necessary to implement the program.

(3) Donor Deferral Register. Health & Saf.C. 1603.1 was extensively revised in 2003, and the provisions relating to the Donor Deferral Register were deleted.

b. Disclosure to Correctional Facility Personnel.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 524

[§ 524] Disclosure to Correctional Facility Personnel.

(1) Adoption of Proposition 96. Health & Saf.C. 121070, adopted by the voters in 1988 as Proposition 96, provides that medical personnel who serve state or local, adult or juvenile, correctional or detention facilities, and who receive information that an inmate or minor has been exposed to or infected by the AIDS virus, or has an AIDS-related condition or any communicable disease, must communicate that information to the officer in charge of the facility housing the inmate or minor. (Health & Saf.C. 121070(a).)

(2) Information Subject to Disclosure. Information subject to disclosure includes laboratory tests, statements by the inmate or minor that he or she has or has been exposed to one of the diseases in question, or the results of a medical examination or test indicating infection or exposure. (Health & Saf.C. 121070(b).) The officer must notify all employees and volunteers serving the facility who have or may have contact with the inmate or minor, or with their bodily fluids. (Health & Saf.C. 121070(c).)

(3) Confidentiality Requirements. Personal identifying data must be kept confidential, and wilful, unauthorized disclosure is a misdemeanor. (Health & Saf.C. 121070(d), (e).)

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 525

[§ 525] Disclosure of Research Records.

The following exceptions apply to the prohibition against disclosure of identifying information about AIDS research subjects (see supra, §522):

(1) Permissive Disclosure. The records may be disclosed in the following situations:

(a) Records may be furnished to medical personnel in a bona fide medical emergency of a research subject and to the department to aid in an investigation relating to public health (see Health & Saf.C. 100325). (Health & Saf.C. 121090.)

(b) Records may be used to substantiate a criminal charge against, or to conduct an investigation of, a research subject upon court findings that there is a reasonable likelihood that the records will disclose material information or substantial evidence and that there is no other practicable way of obtaining such information or evidence. (Health & Saf.C. 121100(a).)

(2) Mandatory Disclosure. The records must be disclosed to the research subject, to his or her legal representative if the research subject is a minor, or to his or her personal representative if the research subject is deceased. (Health & Saf.C. 121095.)

The prohibition against disclosure of public health records relating to AIDS that contain identifying information (supra, §522) does not apply under certain circumstances:

(1) Written or Legal Authorization Required. The records may be disclosed as provided by law for public health purposes or pursuant to written authorization by the person who is the subject of the record or to that person's guardian or conservator. (Health & Saf.C. 121025(a), (b).)

XVIII. SPECIAL PRIVACY STATUTES

D. Tests and Research on AIDS.

2. Exceptions.

e. Other Exceptions.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Witnesses § 527

[§ 527] Other Exceptions.

The Legislature has enacted a number of additional exceptions permitting limited disclosure of information on AIDS cases:

(1) Test Performed on Cadaver. There is no civil or criminal liability for disclosing to public health authorities or tissue banks the results of tests performed on cadavers. (Health & Saf.C. 120980(h).)

(2) Disclosure by Physician. A physician who has ordered a test to detect infection by the probable causative agent of AIDS, and who obtains a positive result, is not civilly or criminally liable for disclosing that fact to the county health officer, or to a person reasonably believed to be the patient's spouse, sexual partner, or one with whom the patient has shared a hypodermic needle. However, the physician must not disclose any identifying information about the person believed to be infected. (Health & Saf.C. 121015.)

Prior to disclosure, the physician must (a) discuss the test results with the patient, (b) offer counseling, (c) attempt to obtain the patient's voluntary consent for notification of his or her contacts, and (d) inform the patient that the physician intends to notify the contacts. (Health & Saf.C. 121015(b).)

Health & Saf.C. 121015 is permissive on the part of the attending physician, who has no duty to notify anyone of the patient's positive test result. (Health & Saf.C. 121015(c).) (See 20 Pacific L. J. 652.)

(3) Disclosure by Blood Bank or Plasma Center. A blood bank or plasma center is not subject to civil or criminal liability for disclosing to a public health officer that a donor has tested positive for exposure to AIDS, where (a) reasonable efforts by the blood bank or plasma center to locate the donor have failed; and (b) disclosure is necessary to locate and notify the donor. (Health & Saf.C. 1603.3(g) [providing that information obtained from blood bank must be expunged by public health officer upon completion of efforts to locate and notify donor].) (On discovery of identity of blood donor, see 56 A.L.R.4th 755.)

(4) Disclosure by County Health Officer. The county health officer may alert the following persons concerning their exposure to AIDS: a person reasonably believed to be a spouse, sexual partner, or partner of shared needles of a person who has tested positive on a test to detect infection by the probable causative agent of AIDS. The officer must not disclose any identifying information about the individual believed to be infected, or the physician making the report. The county health officer must keep confidential the identities of the person contacted, as well as the identity and seropositivity status of the test subject, and must expunge all records regarding the test subject upon completion of his or her efforts to contact the exposed individuals. (Health & Saf.C. 121015(d), (e); see 20 Pacific L. J. 652.)

(5) Disclosure by Parent, Guardian, or Conservator. A parent, guardian, or conservator who has given consent for an AIDS test to be performed on one who is not competent to give consent may (a) receive the results of the test without written authorization; and (b) disclose the test results, or provide written authorization for the disclosure of test results, on behalf of the subject in accordance with Health & Saf.C. 120975, 120980 (supra, §522). (Health & Saf.C. 121020.)

(6) Disclosure of Blood Test Results. Disclosure of the results of a blood test to detect antibodies to the probable causative agent of AIDS may be made, without the test subject's written authorization, to the following persons (Health & Saf.C. 121010):

(a) The test subject, his or her legal representative, conservator, or any other person authorized to consent to the test.

(b) The test subject's health care provider.

(c) An agent or employee of the test subject's health care provider who provides direct patient care and treatment.

(d) A health care provider who procures, processes, distributes, or uses a human body part donated under the Uniform Anatomical Gift Act (see 4 Summary (9th), Personal Property, §6 et seq.).

(e) The designated officer of an emergency response employee, and from the designated officer to an emergency response employee.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Disclosure by Physician. Health & Saf.C. 121015 was amended in 2006 to refer to "local health officer" rather than "county health officer," and to make the exception regarding identifying information subject to the requirements of Health & Saf.C. 121022. Health & Saf.C. 121022, added in 2006, requires health care providers and laboratories to report cases of HIV infection to the local health officer using patient names, in order to "ensure knowledge of current trends in the HIV epidemic and to assure that California remains competitive for federal HIV and AIDS funding." (Health & Saf.C. 121022(a).) However, "reported cases of HIV infection shall not be disclosed, discoverable, or compelled to be produced in any civil, criminal, administrative, or other proceeding." (Health & Saf.C. 121022(d).)

Health & Saf.C. 121015(c) was amended to specify that the requirements of Health & Saf.C. 121022, supra, must be complied with, notwithstanding that physicians otherwise have no duty to notify.

(3) Disclosure by Blood Bank or Plasma Center. Health & Saf.C. 1603.3(g) was amended and relettered Health & Saf.C. 1603.3(f) in 2003. The amended statute refers to "a local health officer" rather than "a public health officer." (See also Health & Saf.C. 1603.1(k), Supp., supra, §523.)

(4) Disclosure by County Health Officer. Health & Saf.C. 121015(d) and 121015(e) were amended in 2006 to refer to "local health officer" instead of "county health officer." (6) Disclosure of Blood Test Results.

CHAPTER X - Discovery

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES

A. Purpose of Discovery.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 1

[§ 1] Purpose of Discovery.

Discovery procedures are based on the theory that a lawsuit should be a search for the truth, and not a game to be fought and won mainly by strategic moves and surprise tactics. To some extent these procedures, like pretrial conferences, modify the traditional adversary character of litigation. (See Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro v. Schectman (1997) 55 C.A.4th 1279, 1288, 64 C.R.2d 698; see generally 1 McCormick 5th, §3; 6 Wigmore (Chadbourn Rev.) §§1845 et seq., 1856 et seq.; 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §1.1; Cal. Civil Practice, 2 Procedure, §13:1; DeMeo, §1.02; 18 A.L.R.3d 922 [obtaining material for use in impeaching witnesses]; 23 Am.Jur.2d (1983 ed.), Depositions and Discovery §1 et seq.; 15 Am.Jur. Trials 373 [discovery and evaluation of medical records]; 22 Am.Jur. Trials 199 [discovery in product-related burn injury cases].)

The purposes of discovery are: "(1) to give greater assistance to the parties in ascertaining the truth and in checking and preventing perjury; (2) to provide an effective means of detecting and exposing false, fraudulent and sham claims and defenses; (3) to make available, in a simple, convenient and inexpensive way, facts which otherwise could not be proved except with great difficulty; (4) to educate the parties in advance of trial as to the real value of their claims and defenses, thereby encouraging settlements; (5) to expedite litigation; (6) to safeguard against surprise; (7) to prevent delay; (8) to simplify and narrow the issues; and (9) to expedite and facilitate both preparation and trial." (Greyhound Corp. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 C.2d 355, 376, 15 C.R. 90, 364 P.2d 266; see Emerson Elec. Co. v. Superior Court (1997) 16 C.4th 1101, 1107, 68 C.R.2d 883, 946 P.2d 841 [conclusions in Greyhound apply equally to Civil Discovery Act of 1986 (infra, §5)]; Schreiber v. Estate of Kiser (1999) 22 C.4th 31, 39, 91 C.R.2d 293, 989 P.2d 720, infra, §183 ["rather than encouraging gamesmanship, the Civil Discovery Act of 1986 places litigants on roughly equal footing"]; Unger v. Los Angeles Transit Lines (1960) 180 C.A.2d 172, 178, 4 C.R. 370, 5 C.R. 71 [elimination of "sporting theory" of litigation, which thrives on surprise]; Buffalo Arms v. Remler Co. (1960) 179 C.A.2d 700, 703, 4 C.R. 103, 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, §207 ["discovery statutes should make the summary judgment procedure more useful than it has been heretofore"]; Burke v. Superior Court (1969) 71 C.2d 276, 281, 78 C.R. 481, 455 P.2d 409, infra, §105 [testing pleadings by requiring disclosure of evidentiary facts and particular contentions].)

However, in seeking to eliminate surprise and take the "game" element out of trials, the Legislature did not intend to destroy the adversary system of litigation or to minimize the value of skillful advocacy. (Greyhound Corp. v. Superior Court, supra, 56 C.2d 376; Emerson Elec. Co. v. Superior Court, supra, 16 C.4th 1107.) And the court must supervise the procedures: "Without reasonable judicial control, the instruments of discovery are susceptible to abuse and may be utilized for purposes of delay, annoyance and harassment. If a reasonable control is exercised, the salutary purposes of discovery will be served, abuses will be prevented and undue interference with orderly procedures will be avoided." (Heffron v. Los Angeles Transit Lines (1959) 170 C.A.2d 709, 339 P.2d 567.) (On abuse of discovery procedures, see infra, §239 et seq.)

CHAPTER X - Discovery

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES B. Modern Discovery Procedures.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 2

[§ 2] Modern Discovery Procedures.

(1) Adoption of Procedures by Statute. Various forms of discovery, such as deposition of a party and inspection of papers, have long been recognized in nearly all jurisdictions. The practice was modernized by the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure in 1938, and many states either adopted or adapted these rules to form part of their own procedural law. California joined these states by legislation enacted in 1957. (See former C.C.P. 2016 et seq.; infra, §4; for comparisons of California and federal practice prior to 1957 statutes, see 42 Cal. L. Rev. 187, 829; 43 Cal. L. Rev. 97; 44 Cal. L. Rev. 909.) The 1957 discovery statutes were repealed and reenacted in 1986, effective July 1, 1987. (See infra, §5; for comparison of federal rules with California's Civil Discovery Act of 1986, see C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §2.125; on "myth" of federal civil discovery abuse, see 46 Stanf. L. Rev. 1393; on early disclosure requirements of F.R. Civ. P., Rule 26(a), see 46 Hastings L. J. 679; 28 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 1123; on "gatekeeping" function of F.R. Civ. P., Rule 11(b)(3), see 43 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1393 [allowing party to advance allegations that are likely to have evidentiary support after reasonable opportunity for further investigation or discovery]; see generally 68 Harv. L. Rev. 673; 74 Harv. L. Rev. 940, 942 [evolution of modern discovery]; 21 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1339 [discovery rules in United States Tax Court]; 23 Am.Jur.2d (1983 ed.), Depositions and Discovery §2; on interstate discovery, see 74 Harv. L. Rev. 1049.)

(2) Devices. The purposes of discovery are achieved through a number of devices, each with a distinct procedure, but in some respects, overlapping in function. Under C.C.P. 2019(a), any party may obtain discovery by one or more of the following methods:

- (a) Oral and written depositions. (See C.C.P. 2025 et seq.; infra, §29 et seq.)
- (b) Interrogatories to a party. (See C.C.P. 2030; infra, §87 et seq.)
- (c) Inspections of documents, things and places. (See C.C.P. 2031; infra, §118 et seq.)
- (d) Physical and mental examinations. (See C.C.P. 2032; infra, §140 et seq.)
- (e) Requests for admissions. (See C.C.P. 2033; infra, §157 et seq.)
- (f) Simultaneous exchanges of expert trial witness information. (See C.C.P. 2034; infra, §178 et seq.)

In 1994, the California Center for Judicial Education and Research issued a California Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Discovery. The first of a four volume set treating all aspects of civil procedure from the judge's point of view, the Discovery volume discusses modern discovery procedures, with citations to relevant California statutory and case law. The final chapter (§19.1 et seq.) concerns itself specifically with discovery in the municipal courts. (For listing of other C.J.E.R. publications, see 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Courts, §437.) (On discovery devices generally, see 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Chap. 1; 4 Am.Jur. Trials 1 [written interrogatories]; 4 Am.Jur. Trials 119 [oral depositions]; 4 Am.Jur. Trials 185 [requests for admissions]; 4 Am.Jur. Trials 223 [motions for production and inspection]; 51 Am.Jur. Trials 1, §§77-205 [initiating and responding to discovery]; on use of videotape, see infra, §67; for forms, see Cal. Civil Practice, 2 Procedure, Chap. 13; C.E.B., 2 Civil Lit. Forms, Chaps. 24-33; 8A Am.Jur. P.P. Forms (1996 ed.), Depositions and Discovery, Form 2 et seq.)

(3) Distinctions. Certain procedures for the production and introduction of evidence should be distinguished: The subpoena duces tecum is not, strictly speaking, a discovery device. A request for inspection is the normal procedure for discovery of the contents of papers and things; a subpoena duces tecum is mainly intended to have produced in court, for use at the trial, the relevant and material papers known or otherwise discovered. (See infra, §218.) The same is true of production of papers by a party or witness on the stand, by order of court during the trial. (See 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §150.)

The use of depositions at a trial is also to be distinguished: As a discovery device, the deposition may disclose information useful in handling the case although only a part or none of the deposition is introduced in evidence at the trial. And the statutes, while extremely liberal in stating the scope of inquiry on depositions, restrict their introduction at the trial to proper evidentiary purposes. (See 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §153 et seq.)

(4) Self-Help Not Authorized. Modern discovery presupposes that ownership of documents will remain with whoever holds title, while allowing access to the trier of fact and litigants in specifically delineated proceedings. Self-help is not authorized. "Any litigant or potential litigant who converts, interdicts or otherwise purloins documents in the pursuit of litigation outside the legal process does so without the general protections afforded by the laws of discovery and risks being found to have violated protected rights." (Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro v. Schectman (1997) 55 C.A.4th 1279, 1288, 1289, 64 C.R.2d 698 [trial judge properly ordered attorney and law firm representing plaintiff's current and former employees in employment law claims to return documents removed from plaintiff's offices without its consent].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Adoption of Procedures by Statute. See C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 4th, §1.3; 32 McGeorge L. Rev. 1051 [suggestions for new approaches and procedures]; 38 San Diego L. Rev. 875, 880 [amendment of F.R. Civ. P., Rule 26, relating to early disclosure].

(2) Devices. C.C.P. 2019(a), listing the authorized discovery methods, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2019.010 in 2004 without substantive change.

(a) Depositions: C.C.P. 2025 et seq. were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change. (b) Interrogatories: C.C.P. 2030 was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2030.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

(c) Inspections: C.C.P. 2031 was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2031.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

(d) Physical and mental examinations: C.C.P. 2032 was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2032.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

(e) Requests for admissions: C.C.P. 2033 was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2033.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

(f) Simultaneous exchanges of expert trial witness information: C.C.P. 2034 was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2034.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

CHAPTER X - Discovery

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES

C. Relation to Pretrial Conference.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 3

[§ 3] Relation to Pretrial Conference.

The pretrial conference, introduced in California by Superior Court rules in 1957, was generally regarded as an integral part of discovery. Although originally mandatory, it is now held at the parties' request or when ordered by the court and is called a "case management conference." (See C.R.C., Rule 212(a); 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §52 et seq.)

An action in which a case management conference is not held may be subject to a trial setting conference. (See C.R.C., Rule 217(a); 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §62 et seq.) Each party at the trial setting conference must be prepared to inform the court as to what discovery has been completed; what further discovery may be required; and when discovery can be completed. (C.R.C., Rule 219(b).)

Former C.R.C., Rule 210 contemplated completion of discovery before the pretrial conference; time limits on discovery are now keyed to the date set for trial. (See C.C.P. 2024, infra, §23.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

C.R.C., Rule 212(a) was relettered C.R.C., Rule 212(b), effective July 1, 2002, and was renumbered C.R.C., Rule 3.722 in 2006. As amended in 2002, the rule requires a case management conference "[i]n each case."

C.R.C., Rules 217(a) and 219(b) were repealed effective July 1, 2002. C.R.C., Rule 212(e), adopted effective July 1, 2002 and renumbered C.R.C., Rule 3.727 in 2006, covers the subjects that must be considered at a case management conference. It requires the parties to address, and the court to take appropriate action with respect to, whether discovery has been completed and, if not, the date by which it will be completed.

C.C.P. 2024, on the time for completion of discovery, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2024.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

CHAPTER X - Discovery

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES

D. Overview of California Discovery Statutes.

1. Former Statutes.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 4

[§ 4] Former Statutes.

(1) Defects of Law Before 1958. California's prior law was considered defective in the following respects:

(a) The statutory authorization for deposition of a party was broad enough to make it a discovery proceeding (see Ahern v. Superior Court (1952) 112 C.A.2d 27, 31, 245 P.2d 568), but there were strict limitations on the right to take the deposition of a witness. On the other hand, perpetuation proceedings allowing depositions before commencement of an action were relatively unlimited in scope, and were available for discovery purposes without adequate safeguards. (See MacLeod v. Superior Court (1952) 115 C.A.2d 180, 185, 251 P.2d 728.)

(b) The motion for inspection was authorized by statute, but the scope of inspection was subject to the same limitations as those governing the subpoena duces tecum, and was more restrictive than under the federal practice; its purpose was production of material evidence rather than discovery. (See Proctor & Gamble Mfg. Co. v. Superior Court (1954) 124 C.A.2d 157, 161, 268 P.2d 199.)

(c) The defendant's right to a physical examination of the plaintiff in a personal injury case was enforceable under the inherent powers of the court (Johnston v. Southern Pac. Co. (1907) 150 C. 535, 540, 89 P. 348), but there was no statutory coverage of the procedure of physical and mental examinations as in the federal rule.

(d) There were no provisions for interrogatories to adverse parties or requests for admissions.

(e) The sanctions for refusal to comply with discovery requests or orders were inadequate.

These defects were the subject of extensive critical comment. (See 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §1.3; 42 Cal. L. Rev. 187 [examinations and admissions]; 42 Cal. L. Rev. 829 [production of documents, inspections, subpoena duces tecum]; 43 Cal. L. Rev. 97 [sanctions]; 44 Cal. L. Rev. 909 [depositions and interrogatories].)

(2) 1957 Revision. The 1957 statutory revision, effective in 1958, was sponsored by the State Bar and the Judicial Council. The revision was designed to provide modern discovery procedures similar to those available under the federal rules. In most instances, the language of the federal rules was used without substantial change. Some provisions, however, were rejected or modified to meet the needs of California practice, and, in some important instances, the California law was left intact. (See generally Greyhound Corp. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 C.2d 355, 375, 15 C.R. 90, 364 P.2d 266; 45 Cal. L. Rev. 486.)

The 1957 statutes provided for liberal discovery after commencement of an action, and restricted discovery before that to cases in which a showing of necessity was made. The statutes included comprehensive provisions for physical and mental examinations, interrogatories to adverse parties, requests for admissions, and service of notices, motions, or orders on the party or the party's attorney. An elaborate set of sanctions to enforce discovery rights and protections against improper discovery were enacted. Most of the statutes governing subpoena duces tecum and ordinary subpoenas were not changed.

CHAPTER X - Discovery

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES

D. Overview of California Discovery Statutes.

2. Civil Discovery Act of 1986.

a. Enactment.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 5

[§ 5] Enactment.

(1) Study and Recommendation of Commission. A joint commission of the State Bar and the Judicial Council conducted an extensive review of California's civil discovery statutes and proposed a comprehensive revision, based in part on changes in the federal discovery rules that occurred since the 1957 statutory revision (supra, §4). The Reporter's Notes to the Commission, prepared by Professor James E. Hogan, can be found in 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C. The statutes proposed by the Commission, with some legislative changes, were enacted as the Civil Discovery Act of 1986 (C.C.P. 2016 et seq.), effective July 1, 1987. (See generally 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix A; C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Discovery §1.1 et seq.; 18 Pacific L. J. 500; 18 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 233.)

(m) Informal resolution of issues in dispute. C.C.P. 2025(n), requiring a meet and confer declaration to accompany a motion for a protective order, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.420 in 2004 without substantive change. (n) Modification of discovery procedures by agreement. C.C.P. 2021 was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2016.030 in 2004 without substantive change.

(3) (New) 2004 Revision. C.C.P. 2016 et seq. were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2016.010 et seq. in 2004, effective July 1, 2005. The changes were nonsubstantive (see Stats. 2005, Chap. 182, §61) and, for the most part, involved breaking up each section of the former Act into a series of shorter sections. Under C.C.P. 2016.010, the title of the Act became the "Civil Discovery Act." The changes are noted throughout this supplement. The following table, entitled "Disposition of Existing Law," was prepared by the Law Revision Commission to show where each provision of former C.C.P. 2016 et seq. ended up in the new Civil Discovery Act:

CHAPTER X - Discovery

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES

D. Overview of California Discovery Statutes.

2. Civil Discovery Act of 1986.
  - b. Proceedings Governed by Act.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 6

[§ 6] Proceedings Governed by Act.

(1) Broad Applicability. The Civil Discovery Act of 1986 applies to the trial of civil actions and special proceedings of a civil nature (C.C.P. 2016(b)(1) ["action" defined]; C.C.P. 2016(b)(2) ["court" defined]; C.C.P. 2016(b)(3) ["document" and "writing" defined]) with the following restrictions:

(a) The statutes apply to actions in municipal courts only to the extent provided by C.C.P. 94 and 95. (See 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Courts, §264.)

(b) The statutes apply to discovery in aid of enforcement of a money judgment only to the extent provided by C.C.P. 708.010 et seq. (interrogatories and inspection demands; 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Enforcement of Judgment, §§265, 266). (C.C.P. 2016(c); see Whitehouse v. Six Corp. (1995) 40 C.A.4th 527, 535, 536, 48 C.R.2d 600 [in third-party claim proceeding in which creditor raised defense of fraudulent transfer, third-party claimants were not deprived of due process despite limitation on opportunity for discovery imposed by C.C.P. 2016(c); by choosing inexpensive claim procedure, they waived discovery right].)

The procedure may also be invoked in administrative proceedings (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §75 et seq.), in judicial arbitration proceedings (C.R.C., Rule 1612; see 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, §548), and, to a limited extent, in conventional arbitration proceedings (see C.C.P. 1283.1; 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, §530). (See C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §2.6 et seq.; on use in eminent domain proceedings, see infra, §200 et seq.; on use in State Bar disciplinary proceedings, see Brotsky v. State Bar (1962) 57 C.2d 287, 301, 19 C.R. 153, 368 P.2d 697, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §75; on criminal discovery, see 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §27 et seq.)

(2) Action Must Be Pending. In Department of Fair Emp. & Housing v. Superior Court (1990) 225 C.A.3d 728, 275 C.R. 156, plaintiff department obtained a final judgment for injunctive relief requiring defendant employer to comply with a settlement agreement entered into in a sex discrimination case. Defendant failed to comply with the judgment, and, in order to determine whether to initiate contempt proceedings, plaintiff made a demand for inspection of documents regarding defendant's financial status. Held, discovery was not available. C.C.P. 2017(a) (infra, §9) permits discovery of any matter relevant to the subject matter of a pending action. Hence, "absent the initiation of a contempt proceeding to enforce the judgment, there is no action pending, which is the sine qua non of invoking the relief available under the Civil Discovery Act of 1986." (225 C.A.3d 732.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Broad Applicability. See Leake v. Superior Court (2001) 87 C.A.4th 675, 680, 104 C.R.2d 767, 3 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Punishment, Supp., §196A [proceeding under Sexually Violent Predators Act (Welf.C. 6600 et seq.; see 3 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Punishment, §193) is civil in nature, and thus Civil Discovery Act applies]; People v. Superior Court (Cheek) (2001) 94 C.A.4th 980, 987, 988, 114 C.R.2d 760, 3 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Punishment, Supp., §196A [same]; cf. Murillo v. Superior Court (2006) 143 C.A.4th 730, 740, 49 C.R.3d 511, 3 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Punishment, Supp., §196A [even though Civil Discovery Act applies in sexually violent predator proceedings, requests for admissions are not allowed; using them would violate defendant's due process rights to proof beyond reasonable doubt, jury, and unanimous verdict].

C.C.P. 2016(b)(1), defining "action," C.C.P. 2016(b)(2), defining "court," and C.C.P. 2016(b)(3), defining "document" and "writing," were repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2016.020(a), (b), and (c), respectively, without substantive change in 2004.

(a) Municipal courts: Because of the unification of the trial courts, municipal courts no longer exist, and C.C.P. 94 and 95 now concern discovery in limited civil cases. (See 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Courts, Supp., §262.)

Administrative and arbitration proceedings: C.R.C., Rule 1612 was renumbered C.R.C., Rule 3.822 in 2006.

See C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 4th, §1.4 et seq.

(1a) (New) Distinction: Provisions Not Exclusive. The Civil Discovery Act of 1986 does not provide an exclusive framework for dealing with evidence in a legal action. A party seeking to prevent the destruction of evidence is not precluded from seeking an injunction requiring that the evidence be preserved simply because the Act does not specifically authorize the trial court to issue an injunction of that type. (Dodge, Warren & Peters Ins. Services v. Riley (2003) 105 C.A.4th 1414, 1419, 130 C.R.2d 385, 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Provisional Remedies, Supp., §300 [in action for misappropriation of trade secrets, trial judge properly issued injunction prohibiting defendants from destroying or concealing any of their electronic storage media and requiring them to allow access by court-appointed expert].)

(2) Action Must Be Pending. C.C.P. 2017(a), permitting discovery of relevant matter, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2017.010 in 2004 without substantive change.

CHAPTER X - Discovery

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES

D. Overview of California Discovery Statutes.

2. Civil Discovery Act of 1986.

c. Construction of Statutes.

1. In General.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 7

[§ 7] In General.

(1) Construction as a Whole. The various discovery methods are interdependent and the discovery system should be integrated. Thus, the entire Civil Discovery Act of 1986 should be considered in interpreting any particular provision. (Greyhound Corp. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 C.2d 355, 375, 15 C.R. 90, 364 P.2d 266; on continuing validity of Greyhound decision after enactment of 1986 Act, see Reporter's Notes to C.C.P. 2017, in Hogan, 2 Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C; C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Discovery §§1.2, 1.5.)

(2) Liberal Construction. A number of decisions have declared a policy of liberal construction of the statutes in favor of discovery. (See Laddon v. Superior Court (1959) 167 C.A.2d 391, 395, 334 P.2d 638; Rolf Homes v. Superior Court (1960) 186 C.A.2d 876, 882, 9 C.R. 142; Norton v. Superior Court (1994) 24 C.A.4th 1750, 1761, 30 C.R.2d 217 ["better that error be made in favor of granting discovery of the undiscoverable rather than denying discovery" of vital information].) "For the guidance of the trial courts the proper rule is declared to be not only one of liberal interpretation, but one that also recognizes that disclosure is a matter of right unless statutory or public policy considerations clearly prohibit it. Even in those instances wherein the statute requires a showing of good cause, that showing must be liberally construed." (Greyhound Corp. v. Superior Court, supra, 56 C.2d 378; see also Emerson Elec. Co. v. Superior Court (1997) 16 C.4th 1101, 1107, 1108, 68 C.R.2d 883, 946 P.2d 841 [conclusions in Greyhound apply equally to 1986 Act]; Hauk v. Superior Court (1964) 61 C.2d 295, 299, 38 C.R. 345, 391 P.2d 825; Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Superior Court (1970) 2 C.3d 161, 173, 84 C.R. 718, 465 P.2d 854; California Accounts v. Superior Court (1975) 50 C.A.3d 483, 487, 123 C.R. 304 [under liberal precedents, time extension provisions of C.C.P. 1013 apply to discovery documents sent by mail]; Cedars-Sinai Med. Center v. Superior Court (1993) 12 C.A.4th 579, 584, 16 C.R.2d 253.)

CHAPTER X - Discovery

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES

D. Overview of California Discovery Statutes.

2. Civil Discovery Act of 1986.
  - c. Construction of Statutes.
2. Cases Construing Federal Rules.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 8

[§ 8] Cases Construing Federal Rules.

Federal cases are persuasive: The Civil Discovery Act of 1986 was intended to bring California law closer to the discovery provisions of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. (Emerson Elec. Co. v. Superior Court (1997) 16 C.4th 1101, 1108, 68 C.R.2d 883, 946 P.2d 841.) Because of the similarity of California and federal discovery law, federal decisions have historically been considered persuasive absent contrary California decisions. These decisions should be considered even more persuasive following the 1986 Act. (Liberty Mut. Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1992) 10 C.A.4th 1282, 1288, 13 C.R.2d 363; see C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Discovery §1.6.)

But federal cases are not controlling: Despite the practical identity of most of the California discovery statutes with the federal rules, other differing California procedural statutes may require a departure from the federal practice. (See BP Alaska Exploration v. Superior Court (1988) 199 C.A.3d 1240, 1249, 245 C.R. 682 [differences in discovery of attorney work product under F.R. Civ. P., Rule 26 and former C.C.P. 2016 (now C.C.P. 2018)]; Singer v. Superior Court (1960) 54 C.2d 318, 323, 5 C.R. 697, 353 P.2d 305, infra, §106 [California allows interrogatories seeking facts supporting defense].) And some changes of substance were made in the California statutes, which "either extended the situations wherein a particular form of discovery might be used, or extended the persons to whom it might be applied. The importance of those alterations is that almost without exception they were made for the express purpose of creating in California a system of discovery procedures less restrictive than those then employed in the federal courts." (Greyhound Corp. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 C.2d 355, 375, 15 C.R. 90, 364 P.2d 266.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

C.C.P. 2018 (work product rule) was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2018.010 et seq. in 2004 without substantive change.

CHAPTER X - Discovery

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES

E. Scope of Discovery.

1. Broad Scope.

a. Relevance to Subject Matter.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 9

[§ 9] Relevance to Subject Matter.

Unless otherwise limited by court order, a party may obtain discovery regarding any matter that is not privileged. The matter must be relevant to the subject matter of the pending action or to determining a motion in the action, and it must either be itself admissible in evidence or appear "reasonably calculated" to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. Discovery may relate to a claim or defense of any party. (C.C.P. 2017(a).) (See Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Superior Court (1970) 2 C.3d 161, 175, 84 C.R. 718, 465 P.2d 854 [party's concession in pleading of given issue does not necessarily narrow scope of discoverable information]; Norton v. Superior Court (1994) 24 C.A.4th 1750, 1760, 1761, 30 C.R.2d 217 [possibility that evidence otherwise admissible might be excluded at trial under Ev.C. 352 (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §17 et seq.) or some other evidentiary objection is not relevant consideration for purposes of ruling on discovery motion]; Lantz v. Superior Court (1994) 28 C.A.4th 1839, 1853, 1854, 34 C.R.2d 358 [when constitutional right of privacy is involved, party seeking discovery must do more than satisfy relevancy standard of C.C.P. 2017; it must demonstrate compelling need outweighing privacy rights when interests are balanced]; Gonzalez v. Superior Court (1995) 33 C.A.4th 1539, 1546, 39 C.R.2d 896 [even "fishing expeditions" are permissible in some cases]; Lipton v. Superior Court (1996) 48 C.A.4th 1599, 1614, 1617, 56 C.R.2d 341 [in attorney's bad faith action against malpractice insurer, insurer's loss reserves and reinsurance information could be relevant within meaning of C.C.P. 2017(a) because it could lead to discovery of admissible evidence, and thus in camera review was warranted]; Glenfed Dev. Corp. v. Superior Court (1997) 53 C.A.4th 1113, 1117, 1118, 62 C.R.2d 195 [in coverage dispute between insured and excess insurer, insurer's claims manual was discoverable because it was not privileged and was relevant to showing how insurer understood and intended to apply standard language in insured's policy, and might disclose identity of persons involved in claims handling process]; C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §2.2; C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Discovery §3.1 et seq.; 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Chap. 11; 15 A.L.R.3d 1446 [scope of physician's duty to make pretrial disclosures in medical malpractice action]; 20 A.L.R.3d 1430 [right to discover complaints for similar injuries by other users of allegedly defective product].)

"After extensive debate, the majority of the Commission opted to retain the definition of the scope of discovery in terms of relevance to the subject matter, instead [of] to the issues. ... The Commission ultimately concluded that, despite its alluring logic, a narrowing of the scope of discovery to the issues would generate its own set of abuses. The Commission feared that an 'issue' standard would produce a dramatic increase both in objections on relevance grounds, and in the need for trial court intervention to resolve these objections. The Commission felt that the abuse caused by discovery overbreadth could be better dealt with by spelling out, as it has done in subdivision (c), the trial court's discretion to narrow the initial broad scope of discovery on a case-by-case basis." (Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2017(a), in Hogan, 2 Cal. Civil Discovery, Appendix C; on court's discretion to limit scope of discovery, see C.C.P. 2017(c), infra, §241.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

C.C.P. 2017(a), on the requirement of relevance, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2017.010 in 2004 without substantive change.

See Stewart v. Colonial Western Agency (2001) 87 C.A.4th 1006, 1013, 1014, 105 C.R.2d 115 [in wrongful termination action, plaintiff's deposition questions to defendant's employee concerning interactions between defendant's chief executive officer and other employees were not objectionable; questions could lead to discovery of evidence useful to plaintiff in challenging defendant's contention that her termination was for good cause]; Kirkland v. Superior Court (2002) 95 C.A.4th 92, 97, 115 C.R.2d 279 [in action for fraud and related causes of action arising from defendant's connection with corporation that had fallen behind in royalty payments, trial judge properly ordered defendant to produce copies of documents from Securities and Exchange Commission proceedings in separate investigation of defendant; defendant's state of mind, as reflected in requested material, was relevant to claim that defendant helped improperly enhance corporation's financial appearance]; King City v. Community Bank of Cen. Calif. (2005) 131 C.A.4th 913, 934, 32 C.R.3d 384 [in action by city seeking return of funds on deposit in bank, trial judge erred in denying bank's motion for continuance to conduct discovery on ground that there was already sufficient evidence on question of ownership of funds; evidence already obtained showed that funds had passed through city general funds account, but further discovery could shed light on material issue of where funds came from]; Volkswagen of America v. Superior Court (2006) 139 C.A.4th 1481, 1490, 43 C.R.3d 732 [in asbestos exposure action against automobile manufacturer, trial judge erred in denying defendant's discovery of documents submitted to bankruptcy trusts by plaintiff's attorney in support of claims for compensation for asbestos-related injuries; even if documents were inadmissible as offers to compromise, they could lead to admissible evidence, and fact that some documents were signed by plaintiff's attorney rather than plaintiff did not affect their relevance]; C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 4th, §1.34 et seq.; Hogan, 2 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, Chap. 11; Reporter's Note to C.C.P. 2017(a), in Hogan, 2 Cal. Civil Discovery 2d, Appendix D.C.C.P. 2017(c), on the trial court's discretion to limit discovery, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2017.020(a) in 2004 without substantive change.

(New) Federal rule: F.R. Civ. P., Rule 26(b)(1), which formerly permitted discovery "regarding any matter, not privileged, which is relevant to the subject matter involved in the pending action," was narrowed by amendment in 2000. The amended rule permits discovery "regarding any matter, not privileged, that is relevant to the claim or defense of any party." However, for good cause shown, "the court may order discovery of any matter relevant to the subject matter involved in the action." (See 38 San Diego L. Rev. 875, 883.) West's Key Number Digest, Pretrial Procedure k.27 et seq.

A party may discover the existence and content of an insurance agreement under which the insurer may be liable to satisfy or reimburse payments made to satisfy any judgment entered in the action. The discovery may include the identity of the insurer, the nature and limits of the coverage, and whether coverage is disputed, but not the nature and substance of the dispute. "Information concerning the insurance agreement is not by reason of disclosure admissible in evidence at trial." (C.C.P. 2017(b), based on F.R. Civ. P., Rule 26(a).) (See *Irvington-Moore v. ## CHAPTER X - Discovery

E. Scope of Discovery.

2. Restrictions on Obtaining Information.

a. Privileges.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 12

[§ 12] Privileges.

A formidable barrier to liberal discovery practice is the invocation by the witness or adverse party of basic privileges against disclosure of communications, facts or records. (See generally 74 Harv. L. Rev. 1009.) The existence and effect of the privileges are recognized by C.C.P. 2017(a), which provides that discovery is available for relevant matter that is "not privileged." (See C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §2.43 et seq., Chap. 3; 2 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery, Chaps. 12, 13.)

The privileges have already been fully discussed in relation to both trial and discovery (see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §59 et seq.), and it will be sufficient here to cite significant cases dealing with the privileges most frequently invoked in discovery proceedings:

(1) Attorney-client. (See, upholding privilege, San Francisco v. Superior Court (1951) 37 C.2d 227, 236, 231 P.2d 26; Holm v. Superior Court (1954) 42 C.2d 500, 508, 267 P.2d 1025, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §§128, 130; Jessup v. Superior Court (1957) 151 C.A.2d 102, 107, 311 P.2d 177; Transamerica Title Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1987) 188 C.A.3d 1047, 1052, 233 C.R. 825, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §75 [no statutory or implied waiver of attorney-client privilege]; on work product rule, see C.C.P. 2018(b), 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §140; Brown v. Superior Court (1963) 218 C.A.2d 430, 443, 32 C.R. 527, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §141.)

(2) Official information. (See United States v. Reynolds (1953) 345 U.S. 1, 73 S.Ct. 528, 531, 97 L.Ed. 727, 732, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §249; Franchise Tax Bd. v. Superior Court (1950) 36 C.2d 538, 545, 225 P.2d 905; San Francisco v. Superior Court (1951) 38 C.2d 156, 163, 238 P.2d 581, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §262; Jessup v. Superior Court, supra; Chronicle Publishing Co. v. Superior Court (1960) 54 C.2d 548, 573, 574, 7 C.R. 109, 354 P.2d 637, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §270.)

(3) Self-incrimination. (See People v. Superior Court (Kaufman) (1974) 12 C.3d 421, 433, 115 C.R. 812, 525 P.2d 716, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §474; People v. Superior Court (Taylor) (1975) 53 C.A.3d 996, 999, 126 C.R. 297; Daly v. Superior Court (1977) 19 C.3d 132, 143, 137 C.R. 14, 560 P.2d 1193, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §475; Smith v. Superior Court (1980) 110 C.A.3d 422, 425, 168 C.R. 24.)

In Smith v. Superior Court, an action was brought against defendant S under the Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act. S was served with requests for admissions to establish paternity of the child. The admissions, if made, would give rise to the conclusive presumption of paternity (former Ev.C. 621, now Family C. 7540 and 7541), and the resulting judgment would be admissible as evidence of paternity in a criminal prosecution for wilful nonsupport under P.C. 270. Thus, it would serve as a link in a chain of evidence tending to establish guilt, and, in the absence of an offer of use immunity for past conduct, S could not be required to respond to the request. (110 C.A.3d 425.)

(4) Physician-patient privilege. (See Britt v. Superior Court (1978) 20 C.3d 844, 862, 143 C.R. 695, 574 P.2d 766 [plaintiffs who sought damages for diminution in property value, personal injuries, and emotional disturbance allegedly caused by operation of airport were not required to make unlimited disclosure of their lifetime medical histories; although plaintiffs could not withhold information about physical or mental conditions that they put in issue, they were entitled to retain confidentiality of all unrelated medical or psychotherapeutic treatment they may have undergone in past]; Allison v. Work. Comp. App. Bd. (1999) 72 C.A.4th 654, 659, 84 C.R.2d 915 [relying on Britt; employee who sought workers' compensation benefits for injury to wrist could not be compelled to answer deposition questions regarding her lifetime medical history; employee could assert physician-patient privilege with regard to questions going beyond nature of injury that employee brought before tribunal].)

(5) Constitutional right of privacy. (See Valley Bank of Nevada v. Superior Court (1975) 15 C.3d 652, 656, 125 C.R. 553, 542 P.2d 977; Britt v. Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1982) 31 C.3d 785, 183 C.R. 810, 647 P.2d 86, text, §124].)

(5) Constitutional right of privacy. In Save Open Space Santa Monica Mountains v. Superior Court (2000) 84 C.A.4th 235, 100 C.R.2d 725, an environmental organization, after prevailing in its action challenging two land divisions, sought attorneys' fees under the private attorney general statute (C.C.P. 1021.5; see 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Judgment, §225). In opposing the fee request, defendant county sought to discover the financial obligations and contributions of residents in the affected area insofar as they related to the organization's employment of attorneys in the case. The organization sought a protective order, which the trial judge granted in part. Held, order set aside.

(a) Effect of discovery on associational privacy. "[W]here, as here, the party opposing a section 1021.5 attorney fee award has produced evidence suggesting that a public interest organization is litigating an action primarily for the benefit of nonlitigants, the court should, in order to resolve the issue, allow the opposing party to conduct limited discovery. What kinds of discovery will be permissible is to be decided on a case-by-case basis. We caution, however, that before a trial court orders such discovery it must first determine whether the discovery ordered impermissibly infringes upon important associational privacy rights of third parties." (84 C.A.4th 250.)

(b) Balancing of privacy interests against state's interest in promoting truth. Here, the consequences of disclosure of donor information would not be profound. Disclosing, in increments and in camera, information concerning donations and, if necessary, the names of some of the donors, will not have an undue chilling effect on the willingness of concerned citizens to contribute funds to public interest organizations. The privacy interests of the donors and the environmental organization are strong, but the state's interest in promoting truth in litigation is particularly strong, and defendant has demonstrated a need for the discovery that would justify an invasion of the privacy interests involved. (84 C.A.4th 254, citing Britt v. Superior Court (1978) 20 C.3d 844, 143 C.R. 695, 574 P.2d 766, text, §113.)

(c) Intrusiveness of order. In her order, the trial judge ruled that defendant was entitled to learn the identity of the 10 largest donors and donors who reside in certain areas near the proposed land divisions, as well as the amounts contributed by each of these donors. This information could be disclosed only to persons who need it for the litigation and could be used only for the purpose of this litigation. The judge further ruled, for purposes of certain depositions and deposition subpoenas, that any question must be limited to the raising of funds and financing of the litigation. This order is too intrusive. The trial court should direct the organization to provide documents showing the total amount of money contained in the litigation fund and the amounts donated by each contributor. If the court finds that none of the contributions is significantly large, the inquiry should end. If one or more of the donations are substantial, however, the judge should request information concerning whether any of these large donors own or have an interest in any real property in the area. Only if this proves to be the case should the judge order that further information about the donors be provided, and this should be done with appropriate limitations on the persons who will receive the information and the purposes for which it may be used. (84 C.A.4th 255, 256.)

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES

E. Scope of Discovery.

2. Restrictions on Obtaining Information.

b. Party's Sexual History.

1. Plaintiffs.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 13

[§ 13] Plaintiffs.

In a civil action alleging sexual harassment, sexual assault or sexual battery, a party seeking discovery concerning the plaintiff's sexual conduct with individuals other than the alleged perpetrator is required to show good cause for the discovery, and that the matter sought to be discovered is relevant to the subject matter of the action and reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. The showing must be made at a noticed hearing and may not be made or considered ex parte. The motion must be accompanied by a declaration stating facts showing a good faith attempt at an informal resolution of each issue presented by the motion. (C.C.P. 2017(d); see Mendez v. Superior Court (1988) 206 C.A.3d 557, 564, 565, 568, 573, 253 C.R. 731; Barrenda L. v. Superior Court (1998) 65 C.A.4th 794, 802, 76 C.R.2d 727 [in action by minors against county and its employees arising from rape and assault suffered by plaintiffs in foster home, trial judge erred in ordering plaintiffs to answer deposition questions about their other sexual activity; there was no declaration from mental health professional that this evidence would be relevant and necessary to determination of plaintiffs' cause for emotional distress]; C.J.E.R., Judges Benchbook, Civil Proceedings: Discovery §4.133 et seq.)

In Knoettgen v. Superior Court (1990) 224 C.A.3d 11, 273 C.R. 636, a sexual harassment case, plaintiff was ordered to answer deposition questions regarding two sexual assaults she suffered as a child. Held, the order was improper.

(a) Defendant's contention that the protection afforded by C.C.P. 2017(d) does not apply to prior sexual assaults because they are not consensual activity conflicts with the legislative purpose of encouraging sexual harassment victims to come forward by ensuring that, absent extraordinary circumstances, they will not be required to disclose their sexual history. (224 C.A.3d 13.)

(b) Defendant's argument that information concerning the prior assaults was necessary to better understand plaintiff's adult perceptions, reactions and attitudes is not a sufficient good cause showing to justify the order to answer. If such a showing established good cause, this type of discovery would be automatically available in every case, and C.C.P. 2017(d) would be meaningless. (224 C.A.3d 14.)

(c) Even in the absence of C.C.P. 2017(d), defendant would not be entitled to the discovery sought here, because it is precisely the type that the Legislature has declared to be offensive, harassing, intimidating, unnecessary, and unjustifiable (infra, §59). (224 C.A.3d 15.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

C.C.P. 2017(d), on discovery concerning the plaintiff's sexual conduct with other individuals, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2017.220(a) in 2004 without substantive change.

CHAPTER X - Discovery

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES

E. Scope of Discovery.

2. Restrictions on Obtaining Information.

b. Party's Sexual History.

2. All Parties.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 14

[§ 14] All Parties.

In Boler v. Superior Court (1987) 201 C.A.3d 467, 247 C.R. 185, a workplace sexual harassment suit against a former employer, plaintiff obtained an order requiring defendant to answer deposition questions "relating to the extent and circumstances of his sexual relations, intimacies, flirtations and socializing, if any, with any employees, past or present ... including the identities of said employees." Held, order vacated.

(a) The order violates defendant's right to privacy.

(1) The constitutional right of sexual privacy, both within and without the marital relationship, is a fundamental liberty arising from both the United States and the California Constitutions. While this sexual privacy right is not absolute, compelled disclosure in court proceedings is only justified to serve the compelling state interest of facilitating truth in legal proceedings. Thus, the party seeking discovery must establish more than a merely rational relationship to some colorable state interest: Only the gravest abuses, endangering paramount interests, give occasion for permissible limitation on the right of privacy. An intrusion upon sexual privacy may only be permitted on the basis of practical necessity, and the compelled disclosure must be narrowly drawn to assure maximum protection of the constitutional interests at stake. (201 C.A.3d 473, 474.)

(2) Plaintiff's request is not justified by practical necessity, for there are less intrusive means by which plaintiff can accomplish her stated objective of being able to contact and interview other alleged victims. Plaintiff's counsel apparently admitted he knew of the women already, and, if so, he has the information from other means and cannot indulge in a sexual privacy intrusion; assuming the names are not known, all plaintiff has to do is obtain a list of all female employees during the pertinent time frame and contact them in person and ask them whether they had ever been sexually harassed by defendant. If they had, they will presumably say so; if they had a totally innocent sexual relationship with him, they may choose to respond in the negative and the parties' sexual privacy will be preserved. (201 C.A.3d 474.)

(3) The decision in Fults v. Superior Court (1979) 88 C.A.3d 899, 152 C.R. 210, 7 Summary (9th), Constitutional Law, §457, is a model for sexual privacy discovery, and demonstrates that the discovery sought by plaintiff is clearly overbroad and an impermissible intrusion on the rights of defendant and his companions: The order is not limited to the period of time during which plaintiff and defendant worked together, and it encompasses sexual conduct with unknown third parties, which conduct may very well have been voluntary and not instances of workplace harassment. (201

C.A.3d 474.) Further, the order is not narrowly tailored: It employs unfortunate, and in some cases anachronistic, terminology which results in an overly intrusive inquiry. "Indeed, the terminology--'flirtations,' 'intimacies,' and 'socializing'--encompasses completely innocent, nonsexual behavior, including simple conversations, casual gatherings, and harmless jocularity." (201 C.A.3d 474, 475.)

(b) A protective order is insufficient to validate the order. The fact that the trial judge ordered that the information obtained not be disclosed, and be filed under seal as confidential, does not cure the intrusion into the sexual privacy interests at stake. Such a protective order is only available after valid discovery has been ordered. The discovery ordered herein is not valid. (201 C.A.3d 475.) (On protective orders, see infra, §241.)

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES

E. Scope of Discovery.

2. Restrictions on Obtaining Information.

c. Trade Secrets.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 15

[§ 15] Trade Secrets.

(1) General Privilege. The owner of a trade secret has a privilege to refuse to disclose it, as long as nondisclosure does not conceal fraud or otherwise work injustice. (Ev.C. 1060, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §350; see Bridgestone/Firestone v. Superior Court (1992) 7 C.A.4th 1384, 1390, 9 C.R.2d 709, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §351 [party seeking discovery must show that information is relevant and necessary to prove or defend material element of case]; Raymond Handling Concepts Corp. v. Superior Court (1995) 39 C.A.4th 584, 590, 45 C.R.2d 885, infra, §136 [protective order governing dissemination of defendant's trade secret to counsel in other actions against defendant]; on protective order limiting disclosure of trade secret at deposition, see C.C.P. 2025(i)(13), infra, §60.)

(2) Misappropriation Action. In an action alleging the appropriation of a trade secret under C.C. 3426 et seq. (Uniform Trade Secrets Act, 11 Summary (9th), Equity, §107 et seq.), the trial court must preserve the secrecy of the alleged trade secret by reasonable means, including protective orders issued during discovery. (C.C. 3426.5.) The party alleging the misappropriation must, before commencing discovery relating to the trade secret, identify the secret with reasonable particularity, subject to appropriate orders under C.C. 3426.5. (C.C.P. 2019(d).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) General Privilege. C.C.P. 2025(i)(13), on protective orders to protect trade secrets, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2025.420(b)(13) in 2004 without substantive change.

(2) Misappropriation Action. C.C.P. 2019(d), on the identification of trade secrets in a misappropriation action, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2019.210 in 2004 without substantive change.

C.C.P. 2019.210 is not "cause of action" specific. Rather, it refers to any action alleging misappropriation of a trade secret. Thus, where one cause of action is brought under the Uniform Trade Secrets Act, but all causes of action hinge upon the factual allegation that the defendant misappropriated the plaintiff's trade secrets, C.C.P. 2019.210 applies to the entire action. Furthermore, the "reasonable particularity" required by C.C.P. 2019.210 "does not mean that the party alleging misappropriation has to define every minute detail of its claimed trade secret at the outset of the litigation. Nor does it require a discovery referee or trial court to conduct a miniature trial on the merits of a misappropriation claim before discovery may commence. Rather, it means that the plaintiff must make some showing that is reasonable, i.e., fair, proper, just and rational ... under all of the circumstances to identify its alleged trade secret in a manner that will allow the trial court to control the scope of subsequent discovery, protect all parties' proprietary information, and allow them a fair opportunity to prepare and present their best case or defense at a trial on the merits. ... The degree of 'particularity' that is 'reasonable' will differ, depending on the alleged trade secrets at issue in each case." (Advanced Modular Sputtering v. Superior Court (2005) 132 C.A.4th 826, 835, 836, 33 C.R.3d 901.)

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 16

[§ 16] In General.

A party's financial data is generally discoverable where it is relevant to a claim or defense in the action. (See C.C.P. 2017(a), supra, §9; Flora Crane Service v. Superior Court (1965) 234 C.A.2d 767, 779, 45 C.R. 79 [interrogatory asking "Itemize by nature and value all assets and all liabilities" was proper; theory of complaint was that corporation was alter ego, and question sought usual balance sheet information that might show undercapitalization or lack of assets, as grounds for disregard of corporate entity]; Columbia Broadcasting System v. Superior Court (1968) 263 C.A.2d 12, 22, 69 C.R. 348 [interrogatory asking for amount of profit realized by defendants from allegedly plagiarized telecast was proper; plaintiff was entitled to discover information directly relevant to damages even though issue of defendants' liability had not been determined and even though it would be difficult to ascertain profits of one episode]; Fuss v. Superior Court (1969) 273 C.A.2d 807, 817, footnote 2, 78 C.R. 583, infra, §101 [defendant entitled to detailed answers from his former attorneys to determine how they were supporting claims for compensation for services rendered; "[m]ost or all of that compilation must have been done prior to the filing of the complaint if the litigation was commenced in good faith"]; Rawnsley v. Superior Court (1986) 183 C.A.3d 86, 227 C.R. 806, infra, §17 [although C.C. 3295 limits discovery of defendant's financial status, documents fundamental to plaintiff's case are discoverable]; on discovery of party's net worth generally, see C.E.B., 1 Civil Discovery Practice 3d, §2.24 et seq.; 1 Hogan, Cal. Civil Discovery §11.9.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

C.C.P. 2017(a), referring to the discoverability of matters that are relevant to a claim or defense, was repealed and replaced by C.C.P. 2017.010 in 2004 without substantive change.

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES

E. Scope of Discovery.

2. Restrictions on Obtaining Information.

d. Financial Information.

2. Relevant to Punitive Damages Claim.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 17

[§ 17] Relevant to Punitive Damages Claim.

(1) Prima Facie Case of Liability. The court may, for good cause, grant a defendant a protective order requiring the plaintiff to produce evidence of a prima facie case of liability for punitive damages under C.C. 3294 before introducing evidence of (a) profits the defendant gained by virtue of his or her wrongful course of conduct, or (b) the defendant's financial condition. (See C.C. 3295(a); 11 Pacific L. J. 352; 17 California Lawyer 64 (January 1997) [obtaining evidence of defendant's wealth]; 32 A.L.R.4th 432 [necessity of determining or showing liability for punitive damages before discovery or reception of evidence of defendant's wealth].)

(2) Motion for Discovery. Pretrial discovery by the plaintiff with respect to the evidence of profits or financial condition of the defendant is prohibited, unless the court enters an order permitting it. The plaintiff must make a motion supported by appropriate affidavits, and a hearing will be held if the court deems it necessary. The court may "at any time" enter the order if it finds, on the basis of supporting and opposing affidavits, that the plaintiff has shown "a substantial probability" that the plaintiff will prevail on the punitive damages claim. The order is not to be considered a determination on the merits of the claim or a defense to it, and must not be given in evidence or referred to at the trial. (C.C. 3295(c); see Richards v. Superior Court (1978) 86 C.A.3d 265, 273, 150 C.R. 77 [defendant, on motion, is "presumptively entitled" to protective order that (a) information need be revealed only to counsel for discovering party or counsel's representative, and (b) information may be used only for purposes of action]; Cobb v. Superior Court (1979) 99 C.A.3d 543, 550, 551, 160 C.R. 561 [describing factors to be considered in determining scope of protective order]; Doak v. Superior Court (1968) 257 C.A.2d 825, 827, 65 C.R. 193 [assets of defendant in wrongful death action were not discoverable in deposition; assets were not relevant to claims or defenses and punitive damages were not available]; People v. Superior Court (Kardon) (1973) 35 C.A.3d 710, 712, 713, 111 C.R. 14 [judge has discretion to order answers to interrogatories about defendant's financial worth where defendant faced civil penalties for violations of false advertising and unfair business practices]; Martin v. Superior Court (1980) 110 C.A.3d 391, 394, 395, 167 C.R. 811 [order permitting plaintiffs access to financial information was improper; access should be limited to plaintiffs' counsel; following Richards]; GT v. Superior Court (1984) 151 C.A.3d 748, 755, 198 C.R. 892 ["counsel only" protective order, preventing party from viewing financial information may be necessary to prevent business competitor from obtaining trade secrets or other confidential information]; 54 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1141 [Pretrial Discovery of Net Worth in Punitive Damage Cases]; 56 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1115 [balancing competing discovery interest in context of attorney-client relationship]; 43 A.L.R.4th 121 [protective orders limiting dissemination of discovered financial information].)

(3) Exception: Identification of Documents and Witnesses. The plaintiff may, however, subpoena documents or witnesses to be available at the trial to prove profits or financial condition, and the defendant may be required to identify (a) documents in his or her possession that are relevant and admissible for that purpose, and (b) the witnesses employed by or related to the defendant who would be most competent to testify to those facts. (C.C. 3295(c).)

(4) Exclusion of Financial Information Until After Verdict. A claim for exemplary damages may not state the amount sought. (C.C. 3295(e).) In addition, upon application of the defendant, the court must preclude the admission of evidence of the defendant's profits or financial condition until after the trier of fact returns a verdict (a) awarding plaintiff actual damages, and (b) finding that defendant is guilty of malice, oppression or fraud in accordance with C.C. 3294. Evidence of profit and financial condition must be presented to the same trier of fact that found defendant guilty. (C.C. 3295(d).) (See Notrica v. State Comp. Ins. Fund (1999) 70 C.A.4th 911, 939, 83 C.R.2d 89 [C.C. 3295(d) did not mandate exclusion of evidence of defendant insurance fund's overall financial condition; evidence was relevant on issue of defendant's liability for failure to estimate reasonable claim reserve levels, and defendant had introduced evidence indicating that it was in financial difficulty prior to time that it changed its reserving guideline].)

(5) Applicability to Arbitration Proceedings. Unless the court enters an order permitting pretrial discovery under C.C. 3295(c), no party may require the production of evidence specified in C.C. 3295(a) in a judicial arbitration proceeding. (C.C.P. 1141.19.5.)

(6) Action Against Public Employee. A public entity may defend a public employee in an action against the employee for an injury arising out of an act or omission within the scope of the employee's employment. (Govt.C. 825, 5 Summary (9th), Torts, §266.) The public entity may, on a finding of certain facts, pay that part of a judgment awarding punitive damages. However, discovery and introduction of evidence of the public entity's assets is not permitted in an action in which it is alleged that a public employee is liable for punitive or exemplary damages. (Govt.C. 825(b).)

(7) Distinction: Information Related to Liability. In Rawnsley v. Superior Court (1986) 183 C.A.3d 86, 227 C.R. 806, plaintiff brought suit against four limited partnerships to which he belonged and individuals and corporations involved in them. Plaintiff alleged that defendants had siphoned profits from the limited partnerships and received excessive and misstated compensation for managing them. The trial court sustained defendant's objections to certain of plaintiff's requests for production of financial documents, apparently basing its ruling on C.C. 3295. Held, the ruling was an abuse of discretion.

C.C. 3295 was designed to protect against a specific type of discovery abuse, i.e., the use of an easily alleged claim for punitive damages to require a defendant to expend time and money compiling "a complex mass of information unrelated to the substantive claim involved in the lawsuit and relevant only to the subject matter of a measure of damages which may never be awarded." (183 C.A.3d 91, citing Richards v. Superior Court, supra.) Here, the documents sought were "fundamental" to plaintiff's ability to prove his allegations, and objections based on C.C. 3295 were without merit. (183 C.A.3d 91, 92.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Motion for Discovery. Before a court may enter an order permitting discovery of a defendant's financial condition under C.C. 3295(c), it must weigh the evidence submitted in favor of and in opposition to the motion for discovery, and make a finding that it is very likely that the plaintiff will prevail on his or her claim for punitive damages. The statutory term "substantial probability" refers to a strong likelihood and not just a reasonable probability. (Jabro v. Superior Court (2002) 95 C.A.4th 754, 758, 115 C.R.2d 843 [in action in which plaintiff alleged that one defendant yelled racial slurs at him and another defendant beat and seriously injured him, trial judge erred in ordering disclosure of defendants' financial condition under C.C. 3295(c) in belief that plaintiff's prima facie showing, which was found sufficient to withstand summary judgment, was also sufficient to justify disclosure]; see Hilton K. v. Greenbaum (2006) 144 C.A.4th 1406, 1412, 51 C.R.3d 295 [in action arising from minor's molestation at religious day school, summary judgment for defendants was not precluded by rulings in actions by other children at school granting their motions under C.C.

3295(c) to permit financial condition discovery; statute expressly states that order under it is not to be considered determination on merits and may not be given in evidence or referred to at trial].)(3a) (New) Order Following Determination of Liability. A trial court may, in its discretion, order a defendant to produce evidence of its financial condition following a determination of liability for punitive damages, even if the plaintiff has not previously conducted pretrial discovery of the defendant's financial records, subpoenaed documents or witnesses to be available at trial for the purpose of establishing the defendant's financial condition, or formally moved to bifurcate the issues of liability and award. C.C. 3295(c) allows the trial court, at any time, to enter an order permitting discovery of the defendant's profits or financial condition once the plaintiff has established that there is a substantial probability of prevailing on a punitive damages claim. "[T]hat subdivision clearly presupposes that such motion procedure is required where the plaintiff has not actually prevailed on his or her claim at trial. However, once there has been a determination of liability by the trier of fact based on an actual weighing of the credibility of witnesses, this kind of affidavit-and-hearing procedure is patently superfluous. So long as the trial court allows the defendant sufficient time, following a determination of liability, to collect his or her financial records for presentation on the issue of the amount of such damages to be awarded, there is nothing prejudicial or unfair about using such a process to try the issue of the amount of punitive damages. If anything, this method serves the purpose behind section 3295, to wit, to protect against premature disclosure of the defendant's financial condition." (Mike Davidov Co. v. Issod (2000) 78 C.A.4th 597, 609, 92 C.R.2d 897.)(6) Action Against Public Employee.

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES

- E. Scope of Discovery.
- 2. Restrictions on Obtaining Information.
  - d. Financial Information.
- 3. Third Party's Information.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 18

[§ 18] Third Party's Information.

(1) Discovery Restricted. In Harris v. Superior Court (1992) 3 C.A.4th 661, 4 C.R.2d 564, Mr. Smets entered into a marital settlement agreement with a promise to pay child support. Later, he moved into a house owned by Bonnie Harris. Janice Smets, Mr. Smets' former spouse, moved to increase the amount of child support, believing that her husband's housemate was helping him to pay living expenses, and that under In re Marriage of Tapia (1989) 211 C.A.3d 628, 259 C.R. 459 (11 Summary (9th), Husband and Wife, §226), the housemate's contributions could be considered in determining ability to pay. Janice Smets then served subpoenas duces tecum on Bonnie Harris, for the production of her wage statements and tax returns. Held, the subpoenas should have been quashed.

(a) Personal financial information comes within the zone of privacy protected by the California Constitution; but, on a showing of some compelling public interest, the right of privacy must give way. (3 C.A.4th 664.) A case involving child support necessarily involves the public interest, and the court must balance the right of privacy with the need for discovery. (3 C.A.4th 664, 665.) And the person seeking discovery of constitutionally protected material has the burden of making a threshold showing that the evidence sought is directly relevant to the claim or defense. (3 C.A.4th 665.)

(b) The issue in Tapia was not the consideration of the entire income of a nonmarital person, but the nonmarital cohabitant's contribution to Mr. Tapia's expenses; and the case does not hold that it is appropriate to serve a subpoena duces tecum on someone living with an ex-husband who pays child support. (3 C.A.4th 667.)

(c) "Under other facts, some discovery of a third party's financial records may be appropriate. An ex-husband, for example, upon moving in with a third party, is suddenly living in sumptuous surroundings, driving luxury cars and wearing expensive clothes. Depending upon what the discovery of the ex-husband reveals, discovery concerning financial contributions made by a third party to the ex-husband's living expenses may be appropriate." (3 C.A.4th 668.) However, even under these circumstances, the third party is presumptively entitled to a protective order that limits disclosure; i.e., the trial court must limit the scope of inquiry to the extent necessary to a fair resolution of the case. Hence, it must examine the financial information in chambers, and exclude from disclosure any information that does not meet this standard. (3 C.A.4th 668.)

(2) Discovery Possible Following In Camera Review. In Babcock v. Superior Court (1994) 29 C.A.4th 721, 35 C.R.2d 462, the hypothetical circumstances described in Harris, in which some discovery of the third party's financial records might be appropriate, were present. Plaintiff moved to compel production of bank and other financial documents concerning her former husband's nonmarital cohabitant, and to join the cohabitant in the dissolution proceedings on the ground that the husband had wrongfully diverted community funds to her. The trial judge granted the motion, ordering production of the cohabitant's loan documents and of every check of more than $ 1,000 deposited during a specified period. Held, writ of mandamus issued: an in camera inspection of the requested records should precede any discovery.

(a) The cohabitant did not waive her privacy rights in her personal financial records simply by living in the same house with plaintiff's former husband. Nevertheless, by showing that the cohabitant acquired an interest in a $ 341,000 home and a $ 30,000 car despite being unemployed, plaintiff adequately demonstrated a need to inquire into the source of the cohabitant's funds. (29 C.A.4th 726.)

(b) The trial judge declined the cohabitant's request for an in camera inspection because he did not have the time to sort through a confusing array of financial records. But the judge should not have to do this. "Counsel for a deponent wishing to protect the privacy interests of his or her client bears the burden of assisting the court to conduct an in camera hearing. ... We are confident that where there are legitimate privacy concerns about records that have no relevance to the action, conscientious counsel will draft a concise summary for signature by the client, or other relevant declarant, explaining, under penalty of perjury, the source and expenditure of funds. Under these circumstances, the trial court's burden should be relatively light." (29 C.A.4th 727, 728.)

(4th), Attorneys, Supp., §338 [in legal malpractice action in which plaintiff alleged that defendant attorneys failed to settle prior malpractice action against law firm for sufficient amount, trial court properly granted motion to compel law firm to provide financial information concerning its assets and net worth, where order was properly limited as to period covered, and where no information was sought concerning law firm's individual partners].

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES

E. Scope of Discovery.

2. Restrictions on Obtaining Information.

e. Psychotherapeutic Records.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 19

[§ 19] Psychotherapeutic Records.

In Davis v. Superior Court (1992) 7 C.A.4th 1008, 9 C.R.2d 331, the court held that "the mere act of filing a personal injury action asking for general damages for pain and suffering does not tender the plaintiff's mental condition so as to make discoverable postinjury psychotherapeutic records." (7 C.A.4th 1011.)

(a) "In determining whether one has waived the right of privacy by bringing suit, our Supreme Court has noted that although there may be an implicit partial waiver, the scope of such waiver must be narrowly, rather than expansively construed, so that plaintiffs will not be unduly deterred from instituting lawsuits by fear of exposure of private activities. ... An implicit waiver of a party's constitutional rights encompasses only discovery directly relevant to the plaintiff's claim and essential to the fair resolution of the lawsuit. ... There must be a compelling and opposing state interest justifying the discovery. ... Even when discovery of private information is found directly relevant to the issues of ongoing litigation, it will not be automatically allowed; there must then be a careful balancing of the compelling public need for discovery against the fundamental right of privacy. ... The scope of any disclosure must be narrowly circumscribed, drawn with narrow specificity, and must proceed by the least intrusive manner." (7 C.A.4th 1014.)

(b) Plaintiff filed "a garden-variety motor vehicle personal injury action," alleging general damages, loss of earning capacity, wage loss and other compensatory damages. She made no claim for mental and emotional distress except as to pain and suffering associated with the physical injuries suffered. (7 C.A.4th 1015.) Although no California case has been found presenting the same facts and issues presented here, it has generally been held that the filing of a personal injury action seeking damages for pain and suffering does not, ipso facto, place mental condition in issue. The cases that find direct relevance include specific averments or reasonable interpretations drawn from the pleadings which clearly place mental condition in issue. (7 C.A.4th 1017.)

2. Restrictions on Obtaining Information.

f. Settlement Information.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 20

[§ 20] Settlement Information.

In Home Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1996) 46 C.A.4th 1286, 54 C.R.2d 292, a corporate insured sued its primary and excess insurers for breach of contract and the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing for failing to cover various environmental claims asserted against the insured. Before trial began, all insurers except one excess insurer and two affiliated reinsurers settled with the insured, and the excess insurer requested information as to the settlement terms and amounts. The insured refused the request, and the trial judge, in response to the insurer's motion to compel, ruled that disclosure was required but only after the insurer's coverage obligation was determined. Held, this was error. The insurer had an undoubted right to discover the settlement amounts and to have those amounts allocated. By deferring disclosure, the trial judge elevated the insured's right to confidentiality of its settlements over the insurer's right to present a defense. The insured may have already been fully compensated as to some of the covered sites. (46 C.A.4th 1293.) "Before Home is required to defend itself against each and every claim placed in issue by ARCO, Home is entitled to discover which, if any, of those claims have been satisfied by ARCO's settlements with the other carriers and which of Home's policies are at issue. The trial court can make the determination whether and to what extent that can be done simply and efficiently only after Home has had an opportunity to review the settlement information and been given a chance to make its case for early allocation." (46 C.A.4th 1294.)

In Hinshaw, Winkler, Draa, Marsh & Still v. Superior Court (1996) 51 C.A.4th 233, 58 C.R.2d 791, plaintiffs, two doctors, dismissed their claims in a doctors' class action against the purchaser of a hospital. After the remaining class action plaintiffs entered into a confidential settlement agreement, the two doctors brought a malpractice action against the law firm that had represented both them and all the other class action plaintiffs. They sought discovery of information about the class action settlement, claiming that the amount of the settlement was relevant to proving damages in their malpractice action. The trial judge issued an order compelling discovery but directing that names of individual plaintiffs in the class action could be redacted to protect privacy and that documents protected by the attorney-client or work product privileges or subject to the right of privacy need not be produced. Held, the order was improper.

A private settlement agreement is entitled to at least as much privacy protection as a bank account or tax information, and therefore plaintiffs had the burden of showing more than the mere possibility that the material at issue could lead to relevant information; they were required to show a compelling and opposing state interest. (51 C.A.4th 239, 241.) Their arguments--that they could not explain how the settlement was germane to their malpractice claim without actually being able to see it, and that there was at least a probable relationship between what the settling doctors recovered and what plaintiffs lost--did not demonstrate so compelling a need for the information as to entitle them to invade the privacy protection afforded settlement agreements. Further, the redaction of the settling doctors' names would not adequately protect their privacy. "Our decision is influenced by the public policy favoring settlements, the parties' expressed desire for confidentiality, and the speculative nature of measuring plaintiffs' damages by these settlements." (51 C.A.4th 241, 242.)

CHAPTER X - Discovery

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES

E. Scope of Discovery.

3. Restrictions on Use of Information Obtained.
  - a. No First Amendment Right To Disseminate.

2 Witkin Cal. Evid. Discovery § 21

[§ 21] No First Amendment Right To Disseminate.

In Seattle Times Co. v. Rhinehart (1984) 467 U.S. 20, 104 S.Ct. 2199, 81 L.Ed.2d 17, Rhinehart, religious leader of Aquarian Foundation, a group of less than 1,000 members mainly living in the state of Washington, was the subject of a number of derogatory articles in defendant's newspaper, the Seattle Times. Rhinehart brought an action against the Times for damages for defamation and invasion of privacy, and defendant engaged in extensive discovery, seeking, among other matters, financial information on the affairs of Rhinehart, the identity of the foundation donors during the preceding 10 years, and a list of its members during that period. Plaintiff Rhinehart and the foundation moved for a protective order preventing dissemination of any information gained through discovery, asserting that defendant intended to use such information in future articles. The trial court issued the order, and defendant appealed, contending that it impaired their First Amendment rights. Held, order affirmed.

(a) "The critical question that this case presents is whether a litigant's freedom comprehends the right to disseminate information that he has obtained pursuant to a court order that both granted him access to that information and placed restraints on the way in which the information might be used." (104 S.Ct. 2207, 81 L.Ed.2d 26.) Because the rules authorizing discovery were adopted by the state Legislature, the processes thereunder are a matter of legislative grace: "A litigant has no First Amendment right of access to information made available only for purposes of trying his suit." (104 S.Ct. 2207, 81 L.Ed.2d 26.) Pretrial depositions and interrogatories are not public components of a civil trial, and much of the information obtained may be unrelated or only tangentially related to the underlying cause of action. (104 S.Ct. 2207, 2208, 81 L.Ed.2d 27.)

(b) A protective order prohibiting dissemination of discovered information "is not the kind of classic prior restraint that requires exacting First Amendment scrutiny." (104 S.Ct. 2208, 81 L.Ed.2d 27.) The party is prevented from disseminating only the information obtained through use of the discovery process; he or she may disseminate the identical information if it is gained through other means. "In sum, judicial limitations on a party's ability to disseminate information discovered in advance of trial implicates the First Amendment rights of the restricted party to a far lesser extent than would restraints on dissemination of information in a different context." (104 S.Ct. 2208, 81 L.Ed.2d 27.)

(c) The rule authorizing protective orders furthers a substantial governmental interest unrelated to the suppression of expression. Liberal pretrial discovery has a significant potential for abuse, not limited to matters of delay and expense; discovery may also seriously implicate privacy interests of litigants and third parties. There is an opportunity, therefore, for litigants to obtain--incidentally or purposefully--information that not only is irrelevant but could be damaging to reputation and privacy. The prevention of this abuse is sufficient justification for protective orders. (104

S.Ct. 2208, 2209, 81 L.Ed.2d 28.) And the Supreme Court of Washington, holding that the trial judge properly exercised his discretion, declared that compelled disclosure of membership and sources of financial support might result in "annoyance, embarrassment and even oppression." "We therefore hold that where, as in this case, a protective order is entered on a showing of good cause as required by Rule 26(c), is limited to the context of pretrial civil discovery, and does not restrict the dissemination of the information if gained from other sources, it does not offend the First Amendment." [§ 22] Return of Documents.

In Coalition Against Police Abuse v. Superior Court (1985) 170 C.A.3d 888, 216 C.R. 614, plaintiffs brought actions challenging the Los Angeles Police Department's use of undercover officers and agents to report on assertedly lawful political activity. In discovery proceedings, plaintiffs obtained huge quantities of documents, a large number of which were subject to protective orders imposing close restraints on copying and use and permitting limited dissemination. The actions ended in a consent decree, under which the rights of private individuals and groups and the law enforcement needs of the city of Los Angeles were accommodated by a statement of standards for proper police investigation and citizen access to nonprivileged information. The agreement, pursuant to which the decree was entered, expressly disclaimed any admission of liability, but provided for payment of $ 900,000 in settlement of plaintiffs' claims and $ 900,000 for their attorneys' fees.

Neither the agreement nor the decree made any provision for disposition of the discovered documents, and the city moved for the immediate return of those subject to protective orders. The trial court granted the motion by an order calling for inventory of the documents and placement in the custody of the court until 1991. Plaintiffs petitioned for mandamus, contending that they had constitutional and statutory rights to maintain and disseminate the discovered materials, and that they intended to use them for such purposes as monitoring future compliance with the consent decree, continuing investigations of the police department, and release of the materials to news media, journalists and writers for discussion and debate on the issue of police spying. Held, the return order, as modified, was proper.

(a) Under the holding of Seattle Times Co. v. Rhinehart (1984) 467 U.S. 20, 104 S.Ct. 2199, 81 L.Ed.2d 17, supra, §21, discovery proceedings are not public components of a civil trial, and restraints placed on discovered information are not violative of First Amendment rights; the government has a substantial interest in preventing abuse of discovery rights. (170 C.A.3d 900, 901.) And the return order does not prohibit the republication of information that has been made public by the terms of the protective orders or by the consent of the parties. (170 C.A.3d 902, 903.)

(b) The return order was a proper exercise of the trial court's discretion. Its purpose was to gather the discovered documents together in "custodia legis" where they will be available to the parties for several years. (170 C.A.3d 904.) "[W]e are not called upon to decide whether, as a general rule, materials discovered pursuant to protective orders must be released, destroyed or returned upon termination of a lawsuit." (170 C.A.3d 905.) The volume of material here made it impracticable to supervise use of the documents if they were to remain in possession of plaintiffs, and the return order protects plaintiffs' access to the materials as needed, as well as the privacy and other interests of the persons named therein. (170 C.A.3d 905.)

(c) The order should be modified to provide that (1) all original documents produced by defendants are to be returned to them; (2) plaintiffs may retain a copy of and disseminate all documents that were disclosed to the public before the date of the return order; (3) plaintiffs may have an observer present during the making of the inventory. (170 C.A.3d 906.)
